Mr. P. Mason: Well, Sir, that is asking me for an expression of opinion.

Seth Govind Das: May I know if fresh recruitment is going on?

Mr. P. Mason: Certainly.

Diwan Chaman Lall: Are discharges also going on?

Mr. P. Mason: Certainly.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Are these canteen facilities being provided specially for the lower paid sections of your defence forces?

Mr. P. Mason: No, Sir. They are provided for every one.

Diwan Chaman Lall: Is it a fact that experienced officers are being discharged and raw recruits are being taken in?

Mr. P. Mason: I am very doubtful whether that arises. I have explained that elsewhere also.

Diwan Chaman Lall: Is it a fact that experienced officers are being discharged on discharging officers?

Mr. P. Mason: The reason for that is, I should have thought, obvious. We have at present a very large strength indeed and what we are trying to get is a post-war army which will be considerably smaller and which has to be a balanced army as regards age and experience. Suppose we stop recruiting for two years completely and went on discharging. At the end of that two years, you would have no youngmen and no continuous flow coming forward and it is a steady flow that is required.

Diwan Chaman Lall: May I ask my Honourable friend whether it is not a fact that he has got the necessary nucleus already in the existing cadre of officers—in the army, Air force and Navy?

Mr. P. Mason: Yes, Sir. We have got an existing nucleus but it must be kept going by a steady flow.

Diwan Chaman Lall: Does the Honourable Member mean that he is going to discharge experienced officers and get in raw recruits?

Mr. P. Mason: Yes, Sir.

REDUCTION OF STRAIN OF MILITARY TRAFFIC ON RAILWAYS AND OF EXPENDITURE ON PROPAGANDA, ETC.

918. Mr. Manu Subedar: (a) What steps have been taken by the War Secretary to reduce the strain of military traffic on the Railways with a view to giving scope for civilian traffic which was denied during the war period?

(b) What steps are taken to reduce expenditure generally incurred and much increased during the war in such matters as propaganda, information officers, Press Advisers to various Commands, liaison officers, officers on special duty in connection with various branches, Army technicians and institutions for training, technicians in connection with the War Department, and generally all such new places, which were created since the beginning of the year 1939-40?

(c) Do Government propose to give some details of the measures taken, or proposed to be taken and of the amount of saving expected in the Defence figures through such measures?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) Government have constantly in view the necessity for reducing the strain of military traffic on the Railways in order to permit the restoration of normal civilian traffic. Rolling stock is progressively released as traffic decreases.

Military stores traffic has decreased very considerably since the end of hostilities and is now only a very small fraction of the total amount of goods traffic moving. Military personnel traffic has, however, only very gradually decreased since it reached its peak in the late summer of 1945. The main reasons for this are the heavy movements involved by Indian Army demobilisation and return of Indian troops from Europe and other theatres of operations, repatriation and release of British personnel, embarkation of occupational troops for the Far East. No material decrease can be expected during the next three months.

(b) The Honourable Member has touched on only a very few of the subjects which have come under review and I propose to answer him on a wider basis.

Before the conclusion of hostilities a list was in preparation of all activities which could be closed down as soon as hostilities ended. This was completed during the 2nd week of August 1945, and instructions were issued closing down the great majority of new works and calling for an immediate review of all existing establishments, works projects and stores projects. Reports are called for under these three headings periodically and are scrutinised at HQ by the officials of the Military Finance Department. The review is continuous and its success will be seen from my reply to part (c) of the question. The remaining expenditure is on units and these are being disbanded in succession under the demobilisation scheme.

(c) As Honourable Member will see from the Honourable the Finance Member's speech on the Budget, and the statements issued in connection therewith, military expenditure in India (taking the total of expenditure on account of the Government of India and on account of His Majesty's Government together) is reduced from very approximately Rs. 900 crores to approximately 800 crores. As to details; I can give details of any special questions in which the Honourable Member is interested, but I suggest that the most appropriate place is before the Standing Finance Committee.

Mr. Manu Subedar: In view of the importance of the subject, may I ask my Honourable friend to place the details of that report which, he said, was prepared in August 1945 as to what sort of saving could be effected? Is it not possible even at this stage with regard to military expenditure to set up a kind of a Committee, which I suggested at the time of the last Budget, of party leaders and others, an ad hoc Committee to go into this issue so as to help Government with the views of the public and to find out whether there is any justification for maintaining some expenditure to the extent Government wants it? Will not the Government consider the advisability of the appointment of an ad hoc Committee to go into this?

Mr. P. Mason: There are two points involved. The first is whether we can put that document, which is rather a lengthy one, before the House. I will certainly go into that matter, but I cannot tell you off-hand that I will be able to do so because there may be grounds of secrecy about certain elements. But I think I can probably put it on the table of the House.

Secondly, with regard to the appointment of an ad hoc Committee. We have already said that we would put all defence expenditure before the Standing Finance Committee. We have already agreed to consider policy of all kinds with the Defence Consultative Committee and I would shrink from the thought of a third Committee.

Mr. Manu Subedar: During the war period it has been the experience of the civil population that there has been an expansion of all kinds of services right and left. The natural position should be that whatever is expanded should be curtailed and that process should be expedited in order to save the burden on the people of this country. Therefore, I say that neither the Standing Finance Committee nor any of the other things mentioned by my Honourable friend would suffice, but a specific Committee should be appointed whose instructions would be to cut down all unnecessary army outlay. May I ask whether such a specific Committee could not be considered by the Government? I do not want my Honourable friend to make a statement just now, but will he put it to the Commander-in-Chief?

Mr. P. Mason: Certainly, Sir.

NON-PAYMENT OF ANNUAL PAYMENTS TO INDIA BY BURMA.

919. *Mr. Manu Subedar: (a) Will the Honourable the Finance Member please state how many annual payments due to India, as price for Burma's share of the joint assets at the time of the separation of Burma, has Burma not paid on account of the war?

(b) How much money has been spent by the Government of India on account of the Government of Burma since the fall of Burma till the return of that Government to Burma?

(c) Are any payments still being made on Burma account by the Government of India?

(d) In what manner, and when has the return of these sums been arranged for?

(e) Has the Reserve Bank of India incurred any liability in respect of Burma, or are there any Burma assets with the Reserve Bank of India?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: (a) Eight half-yearly payments of Rs. 112 lakhs each on account of the pre-separation debt of Burma have remained unpaid. Payments were suspended from 1942-43 owing to the occupation of Burma by the Japanese.

(b), (c) and (d). The sum advanced by the Government of India on account of the Burma Government since the fall of Burma amount to approximately Rs. 2½ crores to the end of the current year. This represents payments made in India on account of Burma pensioners. The amount will be recovered and the Burma Government will shortly be discussing with the Government of India the method of liquidating this unredeemed liability along with the repayment of their debt to India held in abeyance during the enemy occupation of Burma.

(e) No, Sir.

Mr. Manu Subedar: What steps will Government take and when in order to recover this amount and in what form and whether the food issue cannot be linked with this?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Yes, Sir, that is one of the things that is obviously engaging our attention. If they give us food, this amount would be treated as a set-off.

Mr. Manu Subedar: With regard to the other assets which may be in Burma will not my Honourable friend consider Burma Government's inability to pay the accumulated instalments? Will not my Honourable friend consider some other method of taking some other assets in Burma and thus removing this liability?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: No expediency will be left out.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will Government bring this matter before the Standing Finance Committee?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: No, Sir.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Why not?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Because we do not think it is an appropriate matter to be placed before them.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will Government at least consult them before they come to a final decision?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: I do not think so.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Will they place this matter before the House before they arrive at the final decision?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: The House will be informed.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Will they recover the money at all?

(No answer was given.)

REQUIREMENTS OF DEMONETIZATION ORDINANCE.

920. *Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable the Finance Member please state:

(a) if it is a fact that persons in possession of currency notes of Rs. 500 and over were required under the Demonetization Ordinance to fill up a form, and to state the reasons why they had these notes in their possession and why they had not kept their money in banks;

(b) the reasons for asking such questions;

(c) if Government regard it as their right to know why their own currency is used by their subjects; and

(d) if he is satisfied with the answers given to this question by the persons concerned?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: (a) Yes, Sir.

(b) In pursuance of the general objects of the Ordinance as explained in my answer to Starred Question No. 417, by Mr. Manu Subedar, on the 21st February 1946.

(c) Yes, in prevailing circumstances and to the extent prescribed in the relevant Ordinance.

(d) It is premature to express an opinion till all the declarations have been examined.

Shri Sri Prakasa: With reference to the Honourable Member's reply to part (c) of the question and in view of the fact that it would be against the law to refuse any notes that are regarded as current legal tender, is the Honourable Member satisfied that the asking of such a question was correct and right?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Yes, Sir.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Will the Honourable Member collect some of the replies which were given as to the reason why people carried these notes and will he print them in the form of a little pamphlet for the benefit of the Members of this House?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: I think it will be a very interesting document when I am in a position to do so.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I ask who has been placed in charge of looking into these various explanations that have been given from time to time?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: One or two cases have been brought to my notice for orders and that is all.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I ask what is the number of such explanations?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: There are a few cases which have been referred to the Central Government by the Reserve Bank, which is examining them. Only a few cases have been referred to me personally for orders.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Who is examining the rest?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: They are being examined from three points of view. The Reserve Bank is examining them; the Income-tax authorities are examining them; and they are being examined for the possibility of the money having been acquired illicitly.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: In case there is a disagreement on these matters, will the Honourable Member appoint an independent Tribunal consisting of independent and impartial men to judge these matters?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: No, Sir.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Why not?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Because Government has got to do its job without the help of outsiders.

Shri Sri Prakasa: May I know how many thousands of rupees the Honourable Member expects to spend on this examination?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: I cannot forecast that.

Mr. Manu Subedar: What is the total figure of unreturned notes and does the Honourable Member now regard that as a clear and definite advantage to the Treasury out of these measures?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: I want notice of the latest date. When I was asked to give the figure up to the approved date, I gave it as 129 crores.

Mr. Manu Subedar: May I ask whether the difference is now considered by Government as a definite and final gain or whether it is still considered as a suspense account and claims may be preferred against the balance that has not yet been paid up?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: The latter is certainly the case.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Does the Honourable Member realise the danger of losing all his credit when he demonetises his notes at this rate?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: I did not know that my credit was involved.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know what is the total amount for which claims have been preferred?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: I have just answered that question.

Sri N. V. Gadgil: Will the Honourable Member examine and scrutinise the declarations made by Indian States also?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Yes, Sir; most certainly.

PROVINCE OF PANTH PIPLODA

921. *Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable the Home Member please state:

(a) if it is a fact that the Province of Panth Piploda consists of only an area of 25 miles and a population of less than 5,000;

(b) if the total revenue of the Province is a little above Rs. 50,000, of which nearly Rs. 12,000 are required for the administration and the rest distributed among the proprietary Thakurs;

(c) the exact position of these proprietary Thakurs, and the understanding between these Thakurs and Government;

(d) the name of the present Chief Commissioner of the Province and the amount of salary and allowances that he gets;

(e) the reasons for continuing Panth Piploda as a separate Province; and

(f) if Government propose to consider the desirability of joining it with some other British Indian Province or with the surrounding and interspersing Indian States?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: (a) The area of Panth Piploda is 25.29 square miles and its population according to the 1941 census is 5,268.

(b) The total revenue in 1944-45 was Rs. 58,628. Rs. 28,200 was distributed amongst the Thakurs and the Khandekar Pandits, the balance being allotted for administrative purposes.

(c) Panth Piploda consists of 10½ villages distributed in five blocks held by five Thakurs. Each Thakur holds one block consisting of one or more villages. The territory was ceded to the East India Company by the Peshwa in the year 1817 along with all his territories and rights in Malwa, under article 14 of the treaty of Poona of that year. Although they hold no written authority or Sanad from Government the Thakurs or their descendants have been recognised as the proprietors of their respective villages.

(d) The Resident for Central India is also the Chief Commissioner for Panth Piploda. The present Chief Commissioner is the Honourable Lt.-Col. Campbell. He gets no extra salary or allowance for holding the post of Chief Commissioner.

(e) and (f). Panth Piploda was formed as a Chief Commissioner's Province with the object of providing a sound legal basis for a system of administration for that area. The future of Panth Piploda will presumably be considered in the course of the forthcoming constitutional discussions.

Shri Sri Prakasa: With reference to part (c), may I know under what circumstances this territory was taken from the Peshwa? Was it voluntarily ceded to the East India Company or was it forcibly taken from the Peshwa?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I do not know. Probably the Honourable Member knows more about the history and origin of this than I do.

DEATH SENTENCE ON NINE I. N. A. PRISONERS

922. Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the War Secretary please refer to his answer to starred question No. 41, on February 7, 1946, and state:

(a) the place or places where the nine prisoners sentenced to death were hanged and what was done with their remains;

(b) the place or places where the courts sat which sentenced them;

(c) the names of the defence counsel that were engaged by or for them; and

(d) if the charge of murder against them included any killing of men by them while engaged in actual warfare?

Mr. P. Mason: (a), (b) and (c). I would invite the attention of the Honourable Member to my reply on the 18th February, 1946, to Prof. N. G. Ranga's starred question No. 337.

(d) None was charged with murder.

Shri Sri Prakasa: With reference to part (a) may I know once more—I am not quite sure whether this part of the question was covered by the question under reference—what was done to the remains of the persons who were hanged?

Mr. P. Mason: That was not contained in that question, nor is it contained in this question.

Shri Sri Prakasa: If the Honourable Member will cast his eyes to part (a) of this question

Mr. P. Mason: I am sorry, Sir. I will supply the information after enquiry.

Shri Sri Prakasa: When the Honourable Member makes an enquiry, will he also remember the reply of the Honourable the Home Member to a similar question and make sure that those persons who according to custom should have been cremated were not actually buried?

Mr. P. Mason: I will make sure of the information.

Diwan Chaman Lall: May I ask whether these were all court martial cases?

Mr. P. Mason: Yes, Sir.

Diwan Chaman Lall: May I know whether he is prepared to lay the proceedings of these court martial cases on the table of the House?

Mr. P. Mason: No, Sir.

Diwan Chaman Lall: Is there any secrecy about the proceedings?

Mr. P. Mason: Yes, Sir. But this question does not arise out of the original question.

Diwan Chaman Lall: What is the secrecy that attaches to these proceedings?

have supplied a very full reply, and I must point out, Sir, that it is already 35 minutes since the question hour commenced and we are only through six questions.

Mr. Manu Subedar: I am sure Honourable Members are entitled to know the reasons from the Government as to why a particular information should be withheld from this House. What is the public policy behind this particular case?

Mr. P. Mason: I do not question the right of the House to get the information. I only wish to point out that this does not arise out of this question.

Mr. Manu Subedar: This question does arise. There is a class of information which is withheld from the Members of this House on very different grounds. I want to know whether in this case there is any such reason for withholding?

Mr. President: The Honourable Member stated "on grounds of secrecy".

Mr. P. Mason: I wish to take my stand on the ground that this question does not arise out of this question. I shall be very glad to discuss this question with my Honourable friends on some other occasion. But this does not arise out of this question. I think it is rather important in view of the fact that we have been only through six questions in 35 minutes.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: The question whether a supplementary question arises or not is to be decided by the Chair. It is open to the Government Member to say that this is all the information I have or it is open to him to plead "confidential" with respect to certain matters.

Mr. President: I believe just as the Opposition is entitled to make their submissions to the Chair, so also is the Government side entitled to make its submissions. Therefore, when the Honourable War Secretary said that it does not arise, it was not a reply to the question put to him, but a submission to the Chair.

I do not think this supplementary question arises directly from the question.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: If you decide like that, then we have no say.

Mr. Manu Subedar: If you refer to the question itself, part (b) says: "the place or places where the courts sat which sentenced them;" part (c) says "the names of the defence counsel that were engaged by or for them". Surely, the information that is asked for in these two parts relate to the proceedings of the Court martial. If the Government do not desire to give this information, we are at least entitled to know the reasons for the same.

Mr. President: The information sought for may be connected remotely but it does not arise directly from this question.

BAN ON PROCESSIONS IN DELHI

923. Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable the Home Member please state:

(a) if there is any order in force in Delhi prohibiting processions; if so, the terms of the order and what sort of processions are banned; and

(b) if he will consider the desirability of removing the ban?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: (a) I lay on the table a copy of the Chief Commissioner's notification No. F.5(59)/43-General, dated the 20th August, 1943, from which it will be seen that processions are prohibited unless they have been duly licensed under the Police Act or are of certain specified kinds.

NOTIFICATION

Delhi, dated the 20th August, 1943

No. F. 5 (59)/43-General.—In exercise of the powers conferred by sub-rule (1) of rule 56 of the Defence of India Rules the Chief Commissioner of Delhi, being satisfied that this measure is necessary for the purpose of securing the public safety and for the maintenance of public order, is pleased by this general order to prohibit the holding of or taking part in any public procession of ten or more persons within the jurisdiction of the Delhi Municipal Committee and the New Delhi Municipal Committee, the Delhi Civil Station, Notified Area and the Delhi Fort Notified Area:

Provided that nothing in this order shall be deemed to prohibit bona fide processions on the occasion of weddings or funerals or other domestic celebrations or shall apply to processions duly licensed by competent authority under sub-section (3) of section 30 of the Police Act 1896 or to any other customary procession for the holding of which the District Magistrate of Delhi may by order in writing have granted permission.

A. V. ASKWITH,
Chief Commissioner, Delhi.

Seth Govind Das: Are the Government aware that all the troubles we find in the country today are on account of this banning of processions and meetings?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: That is a matter of opinion and my opinion is strongly adverse to my Honourable friend's.

Shri Sri Prakasa: How many persons going together would form a procession according to this notification?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: Ten or more.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: If ten Honourable Members walk out of this House, would it come under procession?

Mr. President: Order, order; next question.

POLICY RE RETURN OF PRIVATE REQUISITIONED PROPERTY

924. Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: (a) Will the War Secretary be pleased to state if it was not the declared policy of Government that private property requisitioned for war purposes during the days of the war will be returned to the respective owners after the termination of the war?

(b) What led to the change of this policy, and what necessitated the issue of a fresh Ordinance in December, 1945, for acquisition of such property?

(c) Did Government requisition from the Ramjas College Society, Delhi, the buildings occupied by the Ramjas College and School and their hostels at Anandparbat in June 1942, and did they pay rent for some time? What led to a change in their policy, so as to decide to acquire the said buildings and the land attached thereto?

(d) Will Government be pleased to explain the special circumstances under which they want to acquire the said landed property which covers an area of about 1,700,000 sq. yards? Are they aware that some of these buildings were built with the help of public donations?

(e) Are Government aware that the Secretary of the Ramjas College Society has for some time been in correspondence with the authorities concerned protesting against the acquisition of the said property by Government? If so, what action has been taken by Government on such representation?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) Yes, Sir. It is the intention of the Government to hand back as quickly as possible private property requisitioned for war purposes. An exception will be made only in the following cases:

(i) Requisitioned property required for the needs of the post-war army will be acquired.

(ii) Where the cost of restoring property to its condition at the time of requisition would be excessive, the property will be acquired.

(iii) Where valuable assets have been created on requisitioned property these will normally be offered to the owner at a fair valuation at the time of release.

If the owner is unwilling to take them over the entire property may have to be acquired.

(b) There has been no change in policy. Ordinance No. XLV of 1945, was promulgated because the Government were advised that under the Defence of India Act and Rules as they then stood they had no power to acquire property in the circumstances referred to under points (ii) and (iv) in the reply to (a).

(c) In 1942 it was found necessary to take over the Ramjas College and School property for an urgent military requirement.

As private negotiations were not successful, the property was requisitioned in May 1945. The Army had meanwhile occupied the property and had added assets to the approximate value of Rs. 85 lakhs. Up to date a sum of Rs. 3,84,076 has been paid as compensatory interim payments to be set off against whatever compensation is ultimately paid. The nature and amount of the final compensation will depend on whether the building is handed back or acquired.

(d) The continued retention of the property is being considered. I believe that some of the College buildings have been built with the help of public donations, and I agree that this would be a strong argument for returning the property.

(e) Yes, Sir. The representations made by the Secretary of the Ramjas Society are being carefully considered along with other relevant factors.

Mr. Manu Subedar: As my Honourable friend has enunciated some very important general principles, may I know if Government will distinctly make a difference between the date of notice of acquisition and the date on which it is actually requisitioned, as during the interval the price basis has in some cases very seriously altered?

Mr. P. Mason: Certainly, Sir.

Shri Gowasjee Jehangir: May I know at what price these properties will be acquired? As the Land Acquisition Act does not apply, will it be the price on the date of requisition or the price on the date of acquisition?

Mr. P. Mason: I shall require notice of that question.

Mr. Manu Subedar: When Government requisitioned the properties they required them temporarily for their purposes; but they have now decided to acquire. It is a new decision and a fresh notice of acquisition will have to be given. Is not that what my Honourable friend implied in reply to my first question?

Mr. P. Mason: I shall require notice of it because that part of the question is not one that I have studied.

Mr. Manu Subedar: In the matter of all those people whose properties they have taken—farms, fields, lands and buildings—will they not consider the intermediate change of rise of prices which has come in or will they take steps which will be regarded as confiscatory?

Mr. P. Mason: I have explained that the matter will be considered.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: Will the final acquisition be under the Land Acquisition Act or under the D. I. Rules?

Mr. P. Mason: I take it that it will be under Ordinance 45 of 1945?

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: May I know how long Government will take to come to a decision with regard to this property?

Mr. P. Mason: I do not know, Sir.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Do not Government make any distinction between educational institutions like this and ordinary properties, in disposing of all these matters?

Mr. P. Mason: Yes, certainly. As I said before, I think the fact—if it is a fact—that the property was constructed largely by subscription is a very strong argument for returning it.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Will not all acquisitions expire with the expiry of the Act?

Mr. P. Mason: No, Sir; certainly not.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Will Government expedite their decision with regard to this matter because it concerns an educational institution?

Mr. P. Mason: Yes, we will, certainly.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Will Government come to this House for fresh powers when the old powers expire on 30th September?

Mr. P. Mason: That, Sir, is a question of hypothesis.

PAY AND QUALIFICATIONS OF MRS. KHIN ZAW OF ALL-INDIA RADIO.

925. *Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Information and Arts be pleased to state if it is a fact that Mrs. Khin Zaw is working in the Central News Organisation, All-India Radio, as an Officer-in-Charge of Broadcasting for Indians Overseas? If so, what are her qualifications and nationality; on what pay was she originally appointed; and what is her present pay?

(b) Is it a fact that she has been promoted in supersession of many qualified and senior Indian Officers in the News Organisation?

(c) What are the journalistic and other qualifications of Mrs. Khin Zaw for holding the present post?

(d) How was the selection of Mrs. Khin Zaw made? Was she selected by the Federal Public Service Commission or any other Selection Board?

(e) Is it also a fact that Mrs. Khin Zaw was originally appointed as a Reference Officer and towards the end of 1944 was appointed as News Editor in the English Political Warfare Section, under Lt.-Col. White House, but was removed only after a few days by Lt.-Col. White House on the ground of incompetence?

(f) Is it also a fact that instead of reverting her to her original post a new post of Private Secretary or Personal Assistant was created to provide her with a higher job?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: (a) to (f). My information on the points raised by Honourable Member is not yet complete. I will send him a reply shortly.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable Member be pleased to state what country mourns the absence of Mrs. Khin Zaw?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: I think it is Burma, Sir.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Is it not a fact that notice of this question was sent about a fortnight ago or even earlier?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: That is perfectly true but . . .

Mr. President: Order, order. Next question.

DEMAND OF SECURITY FROM SARASWATI PRESS, DELHI

926. *Shri Satya Narayan Sinha: (a) Is the Honourable the Home Member aware that the Chief Commissioner of Delhi has proscribed a book written in Hindi entitled Jai Hind, published by the Saraswati Pustak Mandir, Delhi, and printed at the Saraswati Press?

(b) Is the Honourable Member aware that Mr. R. C. Bharati son of Pandit Lokman Das, the Keeper of the Saraswati Press, has been asked to deposit a security of Rs. 1,000?

(c) Is the Honourable Member aware that the said book is a compilation of several newspaper cuttings?

(d) Why were not those articles in the newspapers concerned proscribed?

(e) Why was this book proscribed and security demanded?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: (a) and (b). Yes.

(c) and (d). I am prepared to accept the Honourable Member's assertion that the book is a compilation of newspaper articles. I do not know whether any action was taken in respect of the articles when they appeared in newspapers.

(e) The reasons are indicated in the orders of the Chief Commissioner of which a copy is placed in the Library.

Shri Satya Narayan Sinha: In view of the fact that more information than is contained in that book is available to the public at large, is there any justification for Government to proscribe this pamphlet?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: That is really a matter for the Chief Commissioner and for the court to whom an application can be made against his order. But I would point that a book is far more of a permanent record than a newspaper article.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know if from time to time the Honourable Member or his Department reviews orders regarding the banning of publication or proscribing of books?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: The orders are not those of the Central Government but of the Chief Commissioner.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: But the Chief Commissioner of Delhi is directly under the Central Government. Does not the Honourable Member review the orders passed by him?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: No, Sir, because under the Act the order is subject to appeal to the High Court.

DISBANDMENT OF W. V. S. (I).

927. *Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Will the War Secretary please state:

(a) if his attention has been drawn to the news item in the Hindustan Times of the 17th February, 1946, under the caption "WVS(I) not to be disbanded";

(b) the number of members in the WVS(I), giving the officers and others, separately, and also showing them under (i) Indians, (ii) Anglo-Indians, and (iii) Europeans;

(c) the total amount of money spent on this service during the war, and since the cessation of hostilities on the 15th August, 1945;

(d) the nature of duties performed by them, and whether such duties cannot equally efficiently be performed by male personnel, if not, why not; and

(e) whether he proposes to take early steps to repatriate all non-Indian personnel in this service out of India as soon as possible?

Mr. P. Mason: General.—Before answering the questions put by the Honourable Member in detail, I should like to clear up some misconceptions about the WVS(I).

The Womens' Voluntary Service (India) is, as its name implies, a voluntary organisation, and is not in the military sense a "service". Similar organisations exist in many other countries. It was originally intended to fill various needs and provide a means of contributing to the war effort for those women who by reason of family or other ties could not join a whole-time paid service.

The great majority of the members of this Body are unpaid, and work voluntarily. There are at present approximately 9,703 members, and of these 9,610 are voluntary unpaid workers. The organisation is in general on a provincial basis, but there is a small Headquarters at Delhi designed to co-ordinate the work.

The duties they perform are for the benefit of both British and Indian troops. I shall mention the more important of these in my answers to the detailed questions.

Detailed answers to questions.—(a) Yes, Sir.

(b) The number of members in the WVS(I) is 9,703. There are no officers. The figure showing the number of workers under the three headings are:

(i) Indian—1,926; (ii) Anglo-Indian—1,197; and (iii) European—6,389.

In addition there are 192 members belonging to other Allied Nations.

(c) Amounts spent on W.V.S. (I) are as under:

(1) During the War.—(i) During the greater part of the war, the W.V.S. (I) operated entirely as a Voluntary Body with no assistance financially from the Government of India.

(ii) In 1943 certain assistance was granted in kind, such as free travel when on duty, and free use of Government Road Transport. The total expense involved in this cannot be assessed.

(iii) In addition, grants were sanctioned to the W.V.S. (I) for office expenses and publicity and the like by the Government of India totalling Rs. 27,440.

The Home Department gave a grant of Rs. 1,800 for administrative expenses incurred in connection with work for evacuees from countries east of Asia.

(2) Since the end of hostilities.—The total amount spent since the cessation of hostilities is approximately Rs. 1,80,700 mainly on the allowances of whole-time workers.

The much higher expenditure after the war is due to the fact that the decision to obtain paid workers from England was taken as a result of the Munster Report but they did not actually arrive until hostilities were over. No more paid workers will be brought from England.

(d) The duties performed by members of the W.V.S. (I) during and since the War are too widespread and diverse for complete enumeration. The following are some of their activities:

(i) They serve in canteens both static and mobile, for both British and Indian troops.

(ii) They cut out and make up garments required for patients in hospitals and prepare bandages. They visit the sick, write letters for them and instruct in occupational therapy in both British and Indian hospitals.

(iii) They have worked in Military Offices as unpaid workers and have taken an active part in the collection of salvage and scrap.

(iv) They invite troops, particularly convalescent, to their houses for tea and entertainments, the cost being borne by the host.

(v) They organise garden parties for Indian and British troops.

(vi) They establish information bureaux in hill stations and leave centres and assist in the "Welcome Home" of Indian Troops from overseas.

(vii) They help with Indian forces family welfare and feed civilian destitutes.

Most of the above work could, by its very nature, not be performed as well by male people.

(e) The total of whole time workers recruited out of India at present number 84. These are under contract to serve 18 months in India, the contract being terminable at three months' notice. It is not proposed to terminate these contracts. The remainder of the W.V.S. (I), both locally enrolled paid workers who are very few and those not paid, who are not of Indian domicile are the wives and daughters of men employed in India.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: In view of the fact that the W. A. C. (I) organisation is being disbanded, may I know why the Honourable Member does not consider the advisability of disbanding this organisation also?

Mr. P. Mason: I do not think that the two are very much connected. One is paid and the other is not paid.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Though they have not been paid, may I know whether honorarium and other allowances have also not been paid to these persons?

Mr. P. Mason: They were to the extent which I have enumerated in my long answer to the question.

Mr. Leslie Gwilt: Does the Honourable Member agree that these women have done magnificent service, and the country has cause to be very deeply indebted to them?

Mr. P. Mason: I do, Sir.

Mr. Manu Subedar: In view of the fact that these ten thousand persons are receiving free travel and free petrol, not to speak of some other amenities which we do not know, will not Government now try to reduce this burden created by this organisation so as to reduce the pressure on the civil population?

Mr. P. Mason: I do not think that the amount of free travel accorded to ten thousand people will make a great deal of difference to the civilian population, and as my Honourable friend, Mr. Gwilt, has said, I think we ought all to be extremely grateful to the people who are prepared to work for nothing and have done magnificent work in the past.

Mr. Manu Subedar: It is not a question of gratitude. It is a question of relieving pressure on the civil population which has been entrenched during the period of the war, and I again say that however small the relief may be, will not Government now try to let the civil population get back their own?

Mr. P. Mason: I have already said that we are doing all we can to relieve the traffic of civil population, but I really do not think that ten thousand is going to make much difference in a population of 400 millions.

Shri Sri Prakasa: May I know if ever an embarrassing situation has arisen by a soldier dictating a love letter to a lady in this service meant for another lady?

Mr. P. Mason: I have no information on the subject. At any rate not as much information as my Honourable friend seems to have.

Sir Cowasjee Jehangir: Will the Honourable Member repeat the figures in respect of travelling? I believe he said Rs. 26,000 during all the years of the war.

Mr. P. Mason: Rs. 26,000 was for office expenditure—publicity, and things of that kind. What I said about travelling was that it was impossible to assess.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: What is the total quantity of petrol consumed by them?

Mr. P. Mason: I am afraid I shall require notice of that question.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: May I know if it is a fact that officers' wives are working in this organization and they are getting free supply of petrol which they are using?

Mr. P. Mason: I could not understand the question, Sir.

Mr. President: Order, order. Next question.

TRANSFER OF GOVERNMENT OF INDIA DEPARTMENTS FROM SIMLA TO DELHI.

928. *Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Will the Honourable the Home Member be pleased to state:

(a) if there is a proposal to bring down any of the staff relating to any of the Departments of the Government of India from Simla to Delhi;

(b) if so, which are the Departments, and how many persons are to be brought down to Delhi;

(c) when they were transferred from Delhi to Simla;

(d) whether Government have considered any complaints from the staff regarding the inconvenience of transfer on account of the education of their children and the approaching summer season; and

(e) whether Government have considered the question of their accommodation at Delhi; whether all of them will be provided with quarters?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: (a) Yes. It is proposed to bring down some staff in certain Departments.

(b) to (d). A statement showing the particulars is laid on the table.

(e) Yes. It is not possible for Government to provide residential accommodation for all Government servants in Delhi. But they have given certain travelling allowance and rent concessions to the staff who are required to move down from Simla.

Seth Govind Das: Does the Honourable Member realize that in spite of these allowances, these persons, who are returning from Simla, will not be able to build houses for themselves, and it is very difficult to get houses in Delhi?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: Yes, Sir. I am quite aware that there must be some temporary inconvenience.

Seth Govind Das: Are they going to get shelter under trees under these circumstances?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I don't think that will be necessary.

Mr. Manu Subedar: What effort has been made in order to bring into use of Government servants, all this accommodation which has been vacated by Americans and other officers and which I find locked and unoccupied? Why are not Government making an effort to accommodate their own servants in some of these?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: That does not directly relate to my Department, but I have no doubt that the Honourable Member in charge of the subject will require notice of that.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know from the Honourable Member if it is not a fact that these offices were transferred to Simla for want of accommodation in Delhi, and if it is so has additional accommodation been provided in Delhi before bringing down these offices?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: As far as possible, these people are accommodated in Delhi, but for the period during which it may not be possible to provide them with Government accommodation, quite generous concessions of various kinds, including continuance of their families in the accommodation provided for them in Simla, have been provided.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know if priorities in regard to accommodation are allowed to these people, who were transferred to Simla, after their return to Delhi?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I cannot answer that straightaway.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: As regards the educational facilities for their children, in as much as it is the middle of the year, has the Honourable Member considered the complaints made by many of these officers that the education of their children will be disturbed if they are transferred immediately, and is he prepared to consider the postponement of their transfer till after the educational year is over?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: If my Honourable friend will study the concessions that are being granted, I think he will see that whatever is possible has been done to meet the difficulties that would arise from the whole families immediately coming down to Delhi.

Seth Govind Das: Are these people satisfied with the concessions which have been offered?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: Some of them appear to be. We have had no complaints with regard to some of the Departments.

REDUCTION OF FOODGRAIN RATIONS FOR DEFENCE FORCES.

929. *Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will the War Secretary be pleased to state:

(a) if it is a fact, as stated by Mr. Sen, Secretary, Food Department, in his speech at the All India Newspaper Editor's Conference, Allahabad, that Troops in the Air Defence Forces are given foodgrains ration of 1½ lbs. per day;

(b) whether it exceeds by 50 per cent. of the ration allowed to our urban masses;

(c) whether even in those few rural areas in which rationing is introduced, the agricultural workers who have to put in at least as much physical exertion as the troops, are not allotted more than 1 lb. ration per day;

(d) if it is a fact that troops get supplementary rations of non-cereal food say, roots, vegetables, fruit, mutton, etc.; and

(e) in view of the Governor-General's appeal to everyone to economise on food consumption and the prevailing food scarcity all over India, whether Government propose to consider the advisability of exploring all possible opportunities to reduce the foodgrain consumption by the Defence Forces?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) The basic foodgrain ration of all Indian troops including Indian airmen is 24 oz. per man per day. In view, however, of the acute food shortage in the country, a cut of 2 oz. has been made with effect from 11th November 1945.

(b) No, Sir, not quite. The average civilian ration is 16.15 oz. and for troops 22 oz.

(c) Agricultural workers are not allowed more than 1 lb. of cereal ration per day.

(d) The scale of rations for troops is laid down on the advice of the military medical authorities and is intended to provide a balanced diet which includes meat, vegetables, potatoes, etc., in addition to cereals.

(e) We have already done so, Sir. In addition to a cut of 2 oz. in troops rations, orders are now under issue reducing daily grain rations of all animals of Defence Services by one lb. per head.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Even after this cut of 2 oz. out of the total of 24 oz. of foodgrains they would be left with 22 oz., that is 10 oz. more than the maximum that is being allowed to townsmen in our country or even to the agricultural worker. Why does the Government insist upon giving this excessive ration to the troops?

Mr. P. Mason: It may be 10 oz. more in certain parts of the country, but the figure I gave is 16.15 which is an average over the whole of India for the urban areas, I am told. With regard to the question of the reason, the numbers of troops compared to the total population of the country is small. I agree that everything that can be done to provide food should be done, but one has to balance that necessity against the importance of keeping the troops well and healthy and contented, and that is more important at present than keeping the remainder of the population contented because, Sir, they have dangerous weapons in their hands.

Mr. Manu Subedar: In view of the fact that there is a feeling that normally in armies all over the world there is a certain amount of waste, will not my Honourable friend take special steps in the present Session in order to see if there is any waste and to eliminate it?

Mr. P. Mason: Certainly, Sir. This is always going on and I will certainly ask it to be accelerated.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: In view of the fact that that a great majority of our present troops possess the minimum degree of patriotism, will the Government consider the advisability of consulting them whether they would be willing to accept a further cut?

Mr. P. Mason: I do not know who made the statement to which the Honourable Member refers. I do not think, however, there can be any question of asking them to accept such a suggestion. The machinery for obtaining such information will be far too complicated.

Mr. President: Order, order. The question hour is now over.

(b) WRITTEN ANSWERS

RADIO BROADCASTS IN KAUNADA LANGUAGE.

930. Shri D. P. Karmarkar: Will the Honourable Member for Information and Arts please state:

(a) whether any time is allotted for broadcasts in the Kaunada language from the All-India Radio, New Delhi;

(b) if not, whether Government propose to make arrangements for news and talks in the Kaunada language;

(c) the time allotted for broadcasts in the Kaunada language from the Madras and Bombay stations, and what steps are proposed to be taken to increase the said time; and

(d) whether Government are considering the question of erecting a Broadcasting Station specially for the Kaunada speaking areas?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: (a) No.

(b) No.

(c) The time allotted for Kaunada broadcasts from the Madras and Bombay Station of All-India Radio is as follows:

Madras—30 minutes per month for music,

Bombay—about 20 minutes per month for music and about 30 minutes per month for talks in the broadcasts for schools.

An increase in the time is under the consideration of the Government of India.

(d) Yes.

CONTINUATION OF MILITARY TRAINING CENTRES.

331. Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will the War Secretary be pleased to state:

(a) whether Government propose to continue their Military Training Centres, which were being run during the war at Dehra Dun, Mhow, Belgaum, Poona, Bangalore, if not, why not;

(b) if the answer to (a) be in the affirmative, how many students, per annum, they propose to take;

(c) whether it was a fact that a very large number of new officers, recruited since the beginning of the war, have distinguished themselves like Lt. Bhagat V.C. with not more than two years' training; and

(d) whether there are any proposals to turn out in a shorter period than had been the practice before the war, efficient officers from out of our new cadets?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) It is proposed to continue the Military Training Centres (or more correctly Officers' Training Schools) at Dehra Dun and Bangalore. Those at Belgaum and Mhow have now been disbanded because of the reduced size of the army. There never was an Officers' Training School at Poona.

(b) The total number of regular officers required within a year is approximately 450. Until the setting up of the National War Academy, cadets for the regular army are being trained at the Indian Military Academy, Dehra Dun, which has now reverted to its peace-time role.

Emergency Commissions are still being granted and the requirement of such officers depends upon the progressive reduction of the size of the army. These officers are being trained at the Officers' Training School, Bangalore.

(c) Yes Sir, a large number of new officers have distinguished themselves.

(d) The courses now being instituted at the Indian Military Academy, Dehra Dun, are starting on a one year duration progressively increasing to two years. It is not intended to shorten the training period for the post-war regular officer.

PSYCHIATRISTS IN BRITISH ARMY SERVICES SELECTION BOARDS.

932. Khan Bahadur Hafiz M. Ghazanfarulla: (a) Will the War Secretary be pleased to state if it is a fact that Psychiatrists are no longer employed in the British Army Services Selection Boards?

(b) Are Government aware that Psychiatrists are considered to be important members of the Indian Army Selection Boards?

(c) Will he please state why Psychiatrists are so necessary for Indian Army Services Selection Boards and why so much weight is attached to their opinion when the science of psychiatry is yet in experimental stage?

(d) Will he please give the number of psychiatrists attached to the Indian Army Service Selection Boards and state how many of them are fully trained and duly qualified as such; what their exact qualifications are and the place and period of training undergone?

(e) Is it a fact that Groups Testing Officers in the Indian Army Services Selection Boards are generally only Emergency Commissioned Officers?

(f) Is it a fact that a large number of Indian Emergency Commissioned Officers who proved their worth in action against the enemy and were highly reported of by their Commanding Officers have been rejected by the Indian Army Services Selection Boards. If so, why?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) Psychiatrists are used on War Office Selection Boards in England. They are not employed on War Office Selection Boards in India, because sufficient Psychiatrists, of the required experience and calibre, are not available at present, and the Boards are therefore at a considerable disadvantage.

(b) Yes Sir. Psychiatrists are important members of Indian Army Selection Boards, because it is not possible to administer and interpret Personality Tests, unless there is a Psychiatrist on the Board.

(c) Psychiatrists are necessary on Services Selection Boards to make possible scientific selection. Psychiatry is not in its experimental stage but has been developed in Europe, America and Russia for over 50 years.

(d) Nine. All of these are fully qualified psychiatrists with several years of psychiatric experience both of a civil and military nature. All have Diplomas in medicine being M.B., B.S. or M.B. and nearly all possess the Diploma of D.P.M. (Diploma of Psychiatry and Medicine). They have all received the requisite training at recognised institutions either in India or abroad.

(e) Yes, Sir. But all the Groups Testing Officers employed on services selection Boards are suitable for Regular Commissions and 18 out of the 32 employed have been accepted for Regular Commissioners. Of the other 14, six are debarred from applying for Regular Commissions for reasons of age or low medical category.

All Groups Testing Officers will be Regular Commissioned Officers eventually.

(f) No, Sir. The function of psychiatrists and Groups Testing Officers is to grade not to reject candidates. There are cases in which officers make gallant and efficient junior leaders, but would be quite unsuitable as senior officers, owing to age, lack of ability or instability.

AGE RESTRICTIONS FOR GRANT OF REGULAR COMMISSIONS TO EMERGENCY COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

933. *Khan Bahadur Hafiz M. Ghazanfarulla: (a) Will the War Secretary be pleased to state if it is a fact that a large number of Indian Emergency Commissioned Officers are being barred from applying for regular commissions only because they are above a certain age limit?

(b) Is it also a fact that there is reported to be a shortage of applicants from amongst Emergency Commissioned Officers for regular commissions?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) It is correct that a considerable number of Indian Emergency Commissioned Officers are debarred from applying for regular commissions because they are above certain age limits. This applies equally to British Emergency Commissioned Officers in regard to regular commissions in the British Army.

(b) Yes, Sir. There is at present a shortage of applicants of the required standards. Applications are still being received, however, at the rate of 130 a month and the situation is improving.

REGULAR COMMISSIONS IN THE ARMY.

934. *Khan Bahadur Hafiz M. Ghazanfarulla: Will the War Secretary please state:

(a) the number of applicants under 35 years of age who have been rendered ineligible to apply for regular commissions on account of the age limit, the total number of applicants for regular Commission and the total number so far accepted and rejected;

(b) if Government are aware that great dissatisfaction prevails among Indian Commissioned Officers many of whom have served for a number of years, or had received approved Military Education from Childhood, on account of extra-ordinary large rejections and age limit restrictions, and, if so, whether Government are prepared to remedy this state of affairs by reconsidering the case of rejected applicants and extending the age limit to 35; and

(c) if Government are aware that there is a strong feeling prevalent among Indian Emergency Commissioned Officers and the public at large that these large scale rejections and low age limits have been imposed so as to enable a large number of British Army personnel to be attached to the Indian Army?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) Approximately 4,000 Emergency Indian Commissioned Officers under 35 years of age are barred by the age limit from applying for regular commissions in the Indian Army. Up to the 25th February 1946 (the latest date for which figures are available) 2,593 combatant EICOs had applied for regular commissions and out of these 1,790 had been interviewed by Selection Boards and 105 granted regular commissions. The grading and interviewing of the rest is progressing. Up to the present no actual rejection has taken place.

(b) The age-limits prescribed, which happen to be the same as those laid down by the War Office for the British Army, have been carefully designed to assure the individual officer a reasonable career and, at the same time, to maintain the efficiency of the Army. If the age-limits and length of service of officers were to be ignored, blocks in promotion would be created necessitating "axing" of a proportion of officers in later years to clear the blocks. A plan is, however, now under consideration by which it is hoped to utilise the services of suitable officers who are too old for regular commissions, possibly by the award of short-term commissions.

(c) If this impression exists, Sir, it is quite wrong. Officers of the British Army will only be attached to the Indian Army if suitably qualified Indian officers are not available.

SEIZURE OF FIRE ARMS IN ASSAM.

935. *Sreejut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: Will the Honourable the Home Member be pleased to state:

(a) how many fire-arms were seized in the Province of Assam on the alleged ground that they would be kept in safe custody during the period of the war;

(b) how many of them have since been returned to the owners; and

(c) the reasons for not returning the rest?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: (a) Weapons called in for the reason given and requisitioned for arming police forces numbered 504.

(b) 244.

(c) Some of the weapons were acquired by the Government. Some required for use during operations on the Burma Frontier have not yet been returned by the military authorities but will be returned to the owners as and when they are returned and sorted out. In some cases the original owners no longer hold licences.

EXTERNMENT ORDER ON SRI BAID OMKARNATH SARMA OF DELHI

936. *Sreejut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: Will the Honourable the Home Member be pleased to state if it is a fact that Sri Baid Omkarnath Sarma has been recently served with an externment order directing him to leave Delhi within twenty-four hours? If so, why?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: No.

ASSAM I. N. A. PRISONERS.

937. *Sreejut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: (a) Will the War Secretary be pleased to state the number of I. N. A. prisoners belonging to Assam, who have been (i) executed, (ii) sentenced to transportation, (iii) imprisoned, or (iv) awaiting trial?

(b) What are the places in which they are at present detained or imprisoned?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) None, Sir.

(b) Ten persons from Assam are at the Holding and Enquiry Centre at Baraset while their cases are being investigated. From information so far available, none of these men is likely to be tried by Court Martial.

DEGRADING OF INCOME-TAX DEPARTMENT CLERKS IN SIND CIRCLE

938. *Seth Sukhdev: (a) Will the Honourable the Finance Member be pleased to state whether it is a fact that in the Sind Circle of the Income Tax Department certain clerks were degraded from the senior to the junior grade or reverted from higher grades during 1944-45?

(b) If so, was this ordered as a result of the test prescribed by the Income Tax Commissioner, Bombay, or on account of general inefficiency of the affected staff?

(c) If the degradation was not for inefficiency, is it proposed to restore them to the higher grades to which they are entitled permanently or in officiating capacities?

(d) Is it a fact that only one chance was allowed for the test referred to in (b) above?

(e) Is it also a fact that Inspectors and Assistant Inspectors of the Income Tax Department are allowed three chances for the Departmental Examination? If so, why is there discrimination in the case of clerical staff?

(f) Is it proposed to remove this discrimination?

Mr. B. C. A. Cook: (a) Yes; certain clerks who were officiating in the Upper Division were reverted to their substantive appointments in the Lower Division.

(b) This was ordered on account of the inefficiency of the clerks concerned, as corroborated by the results of a test conducted by the Commissioner.

(c) Does not arise in view of my reply to part (b).

(d) Yes; only one test has so far been held. The Commissioner is proposing to hold another test in May 1946 when the clerks concerned will get a second chance.

(e) and (f). Yes; Inspectors and Assistant Inspectors are allowed three chances. The examination for them is conducted annually by the Central Board of Revenue and there is strictly no parallel between this examination and the one held by the Commissioner of Income-tax. In the circumstances, in view of my reply to part (d) there is no question of any discrimination or its removal.

TEST PRESCRIBED FOR INCOME TAX DEPARTMENT CLERKS IN SIND CIRCLE.

939. *Seth Sukhdev: (a) Will the Honourable the Finance Member be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the test for clerical staff introduced by the Income Tax Commissioner, Bombay, for the Sind Circle provided for results being announced by groups A, B, C, and D?

(b) Was any syllabus prescribed for the said test before it was actually held? If so, when, and what it was?

(c) Is it a fact that certain clerks who appeared for the test in 1944-45 were placed in the B Group (Pass Class)?

(d) Is it also a fact that after three or four months a corrigendum was issued placing them in the C Group (Failure Class)? If so, why, and how did the mistake arise?

(e) Is it a fact, that clerks on medical leave were also summoned to appear for the test? If so, why?

(f) Do Government propose to direct a review of the results referred to in (d) and (e)?

Mr. B. C. A. Cook: (a) Yes.

(b) No detailed syllabus was prescribed; but the candidates were informed in advance that there would be three papers, one each in English, office procedure and simple arithmetic.

(c) Yes. The test was actually held in February 1944.

(d) A corrigendum was issued placing one of them in the 'C' Group. The mistake was due to an error in the addition of marks.

(e) The reply to the first part is in the negative. The second part does not arise.

(f) No.

EDUCATIONAL QUALIFICATIONS FOR RECRUITMENT OF CLERKS TO INCOME-TAX DEPARTMENT, BOMBAY

940. *Seth Sukhdev: (a) Will the Honourable the Finance Member be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the ministerial staff of the Income Tax Department are required to possess requisite educational qualifications for recruitment in service?

(b) Are they required to pass any Departmental Examination? If so, when, and what it is?

(c) Is it a fact that a Departmental Examination was held at Karachi in the year 1944-45 under orders of the Income Tax Commissioner, Bombay? If so, under what rule of the Income Tax Office Manual?

(d) Have such Departmental Examinations been held in any other Income Tax Circle? If so, where? If not, why this discrimination for the Bombay Circle staff only?

(e) Is it a fact that the Central Board of Revenue received a representation from the employees' Union? If so, how was the same disposed of?

(f) Do Government propose to cancel the Examination and its results with retrospective effect? If not, why not?

Mr. B. C. A. Cook: (a) Yes.

(b) The reply to the first part is in the negative. The second part does not arise.

(c) A simple written test was held by the Commissioner in February 1944 with a view to selecting clerks for promotion or for retention in the Upper Division in which they were officiating. There is no specific rule in the Income-tax Office Manual prescribing such tests.

(d) Yes; similar tests have been held in the Punjab and in Madras. The last part of the question does not arise.

(e) Yes; the Union was told that the Board saw no reason to interfere with the Commissioner's action.

(f) No; the examination serves the purpose for which it is intended.

COMMUNAL RATIO FOR RECRUITMENT TO PERMANENT COMMISSION IN R. I. N.

941. *Mr. Mohammad M. Killedar: (a) Will the War Secretary please state if it is a fact that a certain number of Emergency Commissioned Officers of the R.I.N.R. and R.I.N.V.R. will be given permanent Commissions in the R.I.N.?

(b) If the answer to (a) be in the affirmative, do Government propose to observe the communal ratio of the total number of the existing vacancies between Hindus, Muslims, Sikhs, Parsis and Anglo-Indians? If not, why not?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) Yes, Sir.

(b) No, Sir, because no account is taken of caste or creed in the selection of officers for the Royal Indian Navy.

INTERVIEW FOR PERMANENT COMMISSIONS IN R. I. N.

942. *Mr. Mohammad M. Killedar: Will the War Secretary please state:

(a) whether it is a fact that a selection board at Lonavla is interviewing Officers of R.I.N.R. and R.I.N.V.R. for permanent Commissions in the R.I.N.; and

(b) if the answer to (a) be in the affirmative, how many Officers have been recommended by that Board for permanent Commissions; and how many have been selected from them by the Naval Headquarters?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) Yes, Sir.

(b) The Selection Board grades officers in various categories; it does not make a recommendation. This grading is then compared with the officer's previous records and a selection is finally made on the basis both of the Board's grading and the previous records. The number selected upto date on the basis of these two factors is 45.

GRANT OF PERMANENT COMMISSIONS TO R. N. RATINGS

943. *Mr. Mohammad M. Killedar: (a) Will the War Secretary please state whether it is a fact that a large number of permanent commissioned vacancies in the R.I.N. have been filled up by R.N. Ratings and other non-commissioned Ranks?

(b) If the answer to (a) be in the affirmative, what are the reasons for giving preference to Non-Indian Non-commissioned Ranks, over Indian Emergency commissioned Officers?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) No, Sir. Before the recent war a few R. N. ratings were transferred to the R.I.N. as Warrant Officers and (in common with Indian Warrant Officers) have been promoted to commissioned rank. One only has been transferred since the beginning of the war and been so promoted.

(b) Does not arise.

DISCONTENT AMONG VICEROY'S COMMISSIONED OFFICERS AND OTHER RANKS FOR NON-OBSERVANCE OF RULES OF PROCEDURE BY COURTS MARTIAL

944. *Babu Ram Narayan Singh: (a) Has the attention of the War Secretary been drawn to the fact that the mandate contained in Rule of Procedure No. 48 has not been followed in the case of His Majesty's Indian Forces even when they are on "active service" and that the Courts Martial have failed to observe the law that "the court shall award one sentence in respect of all the offences of which the offender is found guilty" while non-judicial officers have added one or more sentences to the number of those already passed by Courts Martial?

(b) Will he please state the reasons for the facts referred to in (a) above with reference to War Department letter No. 59813/5/P.S.3(b)(ii), dated the 12th September, 1944, register No. 10436-A/W/6?

(c) Is he aware that great discontentment prevails among the Viceroy's Commissioned Officers, and Indian other ranks on account of the infliction of more than one sentence?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) and (b). Rule of Procedure 48 refers to the Army Act and has no application to the Indian Forces.

The corresponding Rule under the I.A.A. is I.A.A. Rule 54 (see also I.A.A. Rule 110 as to S. Cs. M.) which provides that the court shall award one sentence in respect of all the offences of which the accused is found guilty.

The provision that only one sentence shall be awarded does not prohibit the inclusion in such sentence of more than one punishment where appropriate and permissible (vide I.A.A. Sec. 47 and note 1 thereto).

War Department Memo. No. 59813/5/P.S.3(b) (ii), dated the 12th September, 1944, refers to the case of Jem. Rahmat Ullah Khan, who was tried by S.G.C.M. on 1st, 2nd and 3rd April, 1943, convicted of dishonestly misappropriating military stores, the property of the Crown and was sentenced to six months R. I. and dismissal from the service.

The combination of R. I. and dismissal in one sentence was perfectly legal.

(c) No, Sir.

DISCHARGE OF FUNCTIONS OF COURTS MARTIAL BY OTHER BODY

945. *Babu Ram Narayan Singh: (a) Has the attention of the War Secretary been drawn to the fact that the function: "forfeiture in the case of a person sentenced to dismissal from the service of all arrears of pay and allowance and other public money due to him at the time of such dismissal" assigned to Court Martial, vide Section 43(h)(iii), Indian Army Act, has in numerous cases been discharged by a body other than Court Martial and that the infliction of such sentences has not only been restricted to the case of a "person" but has also been extended to the case of an "officer"?

(b) Will he please state the statutory authority of the body other than Court Martial referred to in (a) with reference to Indian Army Order No. 816, dated the 26th October, 1920, and War Department letter No. 54796/A.G.14(c), dated the 7th September, 1943, register No. 11366/A-W/5?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) Yes, Sir, frequently, by the Honourable Member, but the position is not as stated by him. The function to which he refers is not assigned exclusively to a Court Martial as is clear from Section 50(2) of the Indian Army Act.

(b) Indian Army Order 816/1920 refers to a dismissal under Indian Army Act Section 13 which is an entirely distinct function from a dismissal by sentence of Court Martial under Indian Army Act Section 43 and the forfeiture mentioned in the letter referred to resulted from such dismissal under authority of Pension Regulations Part II, Rule 195.

POWER OF DISMISSAL OF A VICEROY'S COMMISSIONED OFFICER

946. *Babu Ram Narayan Singh: Will the War Secretary please state:

(a) whether any officer other than the Commander-in-Chief has power to dismiss, discharge or in any way remove from "active service" a Viceroy's Commissioned Officer; if so, the rule or law sanctioning the procedure;

(b) whether the officer so dismissed, discharged or in any way removed as referred to in (a) above gets any compensation or pension; and

(c) whether the Viceroy's Commissioned Officer when discharged with the remark: "Services no longer required" is allowed pension not of his Commissioned Rank but of non-Commissioned Rank.

Mr. P. Mason: (a) Only the Commander-in-Chief has power to dismiss a V.C.O. from the service [Indian Army Act Section 13(2)].

A V.C.O. may however be discharged by the authorities and in the circumstances shown in the statement placed on the table.

(b) A V.C.O. who is dismissed forfeits all claim to pension or gratuity in respect of all previous service.

A V.C.O. who is discharged from service is granted any pension or gratuity to which he may be entitled under Pension Regulations for the Army in India, Part II.

(c) A V.C.O. discharged on account of services no longer required is allowed the pension of a commissioned rank provided (i) the lowest substantive or war substantive rank held during the last three years of his service qualifying for pension was a commissioned rank, and (ii) his total service qualifying for pension was 15 years or more.

Statement

Cause of Discharge	Competent authority to authorise discharge
1 (i) (a) On completion of the period service or tenure specified in the Regulations for his rank or appointment or on reaching the age limit, whichever is earlier unless retained on the active list for a further specified period with the sanction of the Commander-in-Chief in India	Commanding Officer
(b) At his own request on transfer to the pension establishment	Ditto
(ii) Having been found medically unfit for further service	Commanding Officer
(iii) All other classes of discharge	(a) In the case of V. C. Os. granted direct commissions during the first 12 months service District or Divisional Commander or Major General administration army command (b) In any other case any officer not below the rank of Lieut. General appointed by the Commander-in-Chief in India in this behalf

COMPENSATION AND PENSIONS FOR DEATHS AND DISABILITIES ON ACTIVE SERVICE

947. *Babu Ram Narayan Singh: Will the War Secretary please state:

(a) whether Government in the case of deaths and disabilities sustained by the Indian forces on "active service", secure an opinion by medical experts in their pay, to the effect that the death or disability is not attributable to military service;

(b) whether compensations or pensions for deaths and disabilities have, in the first instance, been refused on the basis of the medical opinion referred to in (a) without hearing the affected party?

(c) whether the medical opinion is kept confidential; and

(d) whether appeals against this opinion have been disposed of by a non-judicial body without hearing the affected party?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) and (b). Individuals, who are disabled, are invariably examined initially by medical officers and later by medical boards, whose opinion is then considered by medical experts in the light of the accepted consensus of medical opinion with regard to the particular diseases for which the person may have been invalided. The recommendations of the medical experts are then for the decision of Government.

(c) If the claimant gives Notice of Appeal under the Pensions Appeal Tribunal Rules, 1945, he is informed of the reasons which led to the Government's decision.

(d) The decisions of Government are given under two sets of rules, namely (i) the old rules drawn up by the Government of India which were in force up to 16th August, 1943 and (ii) the new rules which primarily govern entitlement in respect of casualties arising during the war of 1939-45. In respect of the decisions given under the latter a claimant may lodge an appeal to a Pensions Appeal Tribunal and in this case he will have a full opportunity of bringing evidence and cross-examining any Government witness.

In considering an appeal submitted to the Government of India against a decision given under the old rules, Government gives the fullest weight to any points adduced by the petitioner in requesting reconsideration of Government's original decision, but there is no similar judicial procedure laid down.

WARS FOR R. N.

948. *Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: (a) Will the War Secretary please state if three cruisers have been ordered for the R.I.N. from the United Kingdom? If so, what is the cost of each of these cruisers?

(b) Who settled the price and selected the cruisers?

(c) How old are the cruisers, and of what type? If they do not belong to the latest type or types, why not?

(d) What is the need for purchasing these cruisers at this time, after the war is over? Is it in pursuance of any scheme or policy to expand the R.I.N.? If so, what is the proposed full capacity, and when is the target expected to be reached?

(e) Have any arrangements been made to obtain any warships belonging to Germany as part of reparations due to India? If so, how many, and of what type? If not, why not?

(f) Are Government aware that experiments are being made in America and the United Kingdom regarding the possibility of destroying war ships sailing on high seas by atomic bombs or atomic energy? If so, why is the Government of India hastening the purchase of these vessels while the course of future naval defences is still uncertain?

(g) Has the attention of Government been drawn to a leading article in the Hindu of the 22nd February?

(h) Do Government propose to suspend or keep the proposal in abeyance pending further light from the experiments proposed to be undertaken shortly?

Mr. P. Mason: The answer to parts (a), (b) and the first part of part (c) of the question were given in my answer to parts (a) and (b) of the Honourable Member's question No. 793, on the 8th March, 1946. They are modern ships though not of the latest type. No country in the world will be prepared to part with a cruiser of the very latest type built for herself. Further, the latest types are very expensive, and there will be big problems to be overcome in training crews for this advance. Nor are the latest types suitable for tropical waters. Ships of the class proposed are expected to have a further life of 12-15 years in the Royal Navy.

(d) It is proposed to provide the R.I.N. with three cruisers of suitably modern type in order that India may have a modern and effective fleet. It is intended for the present that the fleet shall consist of those three cruisers, and in addition sloops, corvettes, frigates, trawlers, fleet minesweepers, a survey ship, and a number of motor boats, and military landing craft. The total strength should be reached during 1948/49.

(e) No, Sir. As will be seen from the press the remains of the German fleet has been divided between U.S.A., U.S.S.R., and U.K. Those vessels would be most unsuitable for Indian waters because they are none of them fitted for tropical waters or long range, nor are they provided with armament or technical equipment of allied standards, and as is well known these vessels are being largely used for research and target purposes.

(f) Yes, Sir. There is no reason to suppose that the atomic bomb will make naval forces unnecessary in the future. Cruisers are being obtained because they are the most valuable form of reasonably priced Naval vessels, and are the smallest vessels capable of long sea voyages and full sea training. The wisdom of this is obvious from the keen competitive bidding, which is being made by other nations for the limited number of available British cruisers, particularly those which were most successful in action in the late war.

(g) Yes, Sir. I have answered all the points raised in the article.

(h) Although this matter has not been finally settled, the Government of India are anxious to acquire these three cruisers being of the most suitable type, and in view of the keen competition from other nations for these vessels they will lose the chance if they delay. Delay would also make it both difficult and very much more costly to equip the R.I.N. suitably.

PRICE OF SILVER AND GOLD

949. *Sjt. Seth Damodar Swroop: Will the Honourable the Finance Member be pleased to state the causes of the present abnormal rise in the silver and gold price?

(b) Is it a fact that Government have indirectly helped speculators to push up the silver and gold prices by some secret purchase through the Reserve Bank of India?

(c) Are Government intending to take any steps to check the abnormal rise in the silver and gold price? If none, why?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: (a) The prices of gold and silver at any one time depend on the result of supply and demand.

(b) No, Sir.

(c) The Government have the matter under continual review, but since the bullion market is a speculative and sensitive market, it would not be in the public interest to disclose in advance what action, if any, the Government contemplate taking.

RETRENCHMENT IN WAR DEPARTMENT AND G. H. Q.

950. *Mr. Ramayan Prasad: (a) Will the War Secretary please state if it is a fact that a reduction of staff is in progress in the War Department and the General Headquarters and that for the purpose of judging merits and efficiency the personnel have been classed under the following categories: "A"—Outstanding, "B"—Above average, "C"—High average, "D"—Average, and "E"—Unfit for employment?

(b) Is it a fact that there are a number of personnel on deputation from other Government offices, who though more efficient than the temporary clerks, employed in the War Department and the General Headquarters are being retrenched irrespective of their merits and efficiency?

(c) Is it a fact that under the rules a deputationist categorised "A" (i.e., Outstanding) is required to be retrenched before a temporary clerk who is categorised "E" (i.e., unfit for employment)?

(d) Are Government aware that the personnel on deputation, if reverted, will displace personnel officiating in their substantive posts, with the result that the former will suffer due to reduction in emoluments and the latter due to loss of employment?

(e) Is it a fact that the number of the personnel on deputation in the General Headquarters is slightly above hundred and that even if they are reverted outright there can be no material relief in view of the huge number to be retrenched?

(f) Do Government propose to consider the cases of the deputationists on their merits, and treat them on par with the temporary clerks?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) Yes Sir.

(b) There are a number of personnel on deputation from other offices some of whom are more efficient than some of the temporary personnel. It is however considered to be more fair to revert temporary personnel to their parent offices than to throw out of employment temporary personnel who are efficient. There is no question of keeping on temporary personnel who are inefficient.

(c) A person on deputation reverts to his parent office where his expectations are those he had on entering the service.

(d) This may be so, Sir, in some cases, but since the reduction in War Department will be greater than in some other Department, it seems fair to spread the discharge over a wide area so that only the most inefficient go.

(e) It is true that the number of personnel on deputation is not much over 100, but if these deputationists are retained, then the same number of temporary clerks would have to be retrenched.

(f) Deputationists as a class will revert before temporary clerks are retrenched but any special case will be considered on its merits.

QUALIFICATION OF CANDIDATES FOR 'HINDUSTANI' NEWS EDITORSHIP, AND OTHER POSTS

951. *Pandit Sri Krishna Dutt Paliwal: Will the Honourable Member for Information and Arts please state:

(a) the qualifications required of candidates for the posts of 'Hindustani' news editors, programme assistants, announcers, and other posts in the 'Hindustani' programme section;

(b) the test applied to find out a candidate's proficiency in writing and speaking 'Hindustani';

(c) the total number of the members of the Hindustani staff, and the number possessing degrees or diplomas in Hindi and Urdu and in both separately;

(d) how many of the degree or diploma holders in the 'Hindustani' staff had Hindi as their first language and how many had Urdu as their first language;

(e) whether any knowledge of Hindi is required of the members of the Hindustani staff whose first language was Urdu and vice versa, if so, of what standard;

(f) how this knowledge is ascertained; and

(g) the number of (i) permanent and (ii) temporary posts in the Hindustani programme section held by Hindi and Urdu middle pass persons respectively?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: The information is being collected and will be supplied to the Honourable Member in due course.

HOLIDAYS IN GOVERNMENT OF INDIA SECRETARIAT

952. *Sardar Mangal Singh: (a) Will the Honourable the Home Member please state whether it is a fact that five holidays have recently been added to the list of closed holidays sanctioned for the Central Government staff and that communal holidays have been reduced to four?

(b) Was the question of including Guru Govind Singh's birthday in the list of closed holidays considered?

(c) If the answer to (b) above is in the affirmative, will the Honourable Member please intimate the reasons leading to the rejection of the proposal?

(d) In view of the importance of this day to the Sikhs and a reduction in communal holidays, does the Honourable Member propose to reconsider the question and declare this day as a closed holiday?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: (a) The number of closed holidays added to the list is seven. The reply to the second part of the question is in the affirmative.

(b) to (d). It is difficult to adjust holidays to suit the convenience of various communities, but I am considering how this can be done with the least dislocation of work.

STAFF IN ALL-INDIA RADIO

953. *Choudhury Md. Abid Hussain: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Information and Arts please state the number of gazetted and non-gazetted staff in the All-India Radio (including all the Radio Stations)?

(b) What is the ratio of Muslim Gazetted and non-Gazetted Staff, and what are the numbers?

(c) What is the total number of Muslim Gazetted and non-Gazetted officers in the Press Information Bureau, and what is the ratio of Muslim Officers?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: (a) Gazetted—112; Non-Gazetted—988.

(b) First Part.—Gazetted—29 per cent; Non-Gazetted 27 per cent.

Second Part.—Gazetted—32; Non-Gazetted—268.

(c) First Part.—Gazetted—7 Non-Gazetted 75.

Second Part.—Gazetted—16 per cent; Non-Gazetted—31 per cent.

PROPAGANDA FOR CONGRESS PARTY IN INFORMATION FILMS OF INDIA

954. *Choudhury Md. Abid Hussain: (a) Has the attention of the Honourable Member for Information and Arts been drawn to the editorial in the Dawn, dated the 28th February, 1946, criticising the prominence and publicity given to the Congress by the Information Films of India?

(b) Why should a Government Department do propaganda for one political party in India?

(c) Are Government aware that in a recent News Parade featuring the visit of the British Parliamentary Delegation only Congress meetings and Congress leaders have been given publicity?

(d) Are Government aware that in the news parade featuring Simla talks, full glare of publicity has been given to the Congress Party only?

(e) What steps do Government propose to take to remedy the state of affairs which allows public money to be spent on the propaganda of one political party?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: (a) If the Honourable Member means the Indian News Parade, the answer is 'Yes'.

(b) The Indian News Parade is authorised to cover all items which may be of interest to the public. It's policy is not to single out any political party for publicity.

(c) Indian News Parade issues Nos. 152, 154 and 155 which featured the visit of the British Parliamentary Delegation contained pictures of the Delegation's meeting with a leader of the Muslim League as well as two leaders of the Congress Party.

(d) The Indian News Parade issue relating to the Simla Conference featured the leaders of all parties and not Congress only.

(e) Does not arise.

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

REWARD TO CERTAIN I. N. A. PERSONNEL REMAINING LOYAL

113. Choudhury Md. Abid Hussain: (a) In view of the fact that it has been said by Government spokesmen that I. N. A. men found guilty of brutality will be punished in the interest of those I. N. A. men who remained loyal to Government, will the War Secretary please state the number of such loyal persons, and how their services are to be rewarded?

(b) Are Government aware that even the services of some of these persons are to be dispensed with?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) On the assumption that the Honourable Member means men of the Indian Army who remained loyal to Government, the reply is that the total strength of the Indian Army at its peak was 2,053,000, of whom all but about 20,000 remained true to their oaths. The gratuities and terminal benefits, etc., admissible have been published in Government orders from time to time. The question of a special reward for P. O. W. who remained true to their allegiance has been considered, but it was decided that it was very hard to distinguish between a man who remained true in captivity and for example a man who fought right through the long campaign in Burma and who risked his life almost daily. A number of special cases of outstanding conduct while P. O. W. are being considered for the award of decorations and several have been announced. A further announcement may be expected in the near future.

(b) Yes, Sir, it is inevitable.

MACHINERY FOR PROPOSED RADIO STATION AT PATNA.

114. Choudhury Md. Abid Hussain: (a) In view of the statement made by the Information and Arts Member that Radio machinery meant for the proposed Patna Station of the All India Radio is under test in the United Kingdom, does he propose to take steps to expedite the arrival of the machinery in India and arrange shifting priority?

(b) Is there any radio machinery lying idle in the All India Radio? If so, could it not be installed in Patna, as this could cover the needs not only of Bihar but also of Orissa?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: (a) Yes.

(b) No.

PAYMENT OF PRICES OF CRUISERS FROM ACCUMULATED STERLING BALANCES.

115. Mr. Manu Subedar: (a) Will the Honourable the Finance Member please state whether his attention has been drawn to the following editorial remarks of the Hindu of Madras, dated the 22nd February, 1946:

"The new price of each of the cruisers is about one and a half million pounds—roughly two crores of rupees. Even if the price is substantially reduced the sum is likely to be a heavy charge on the assets of a country like India. . . . India is not anxious to acquire what may be expensive toys".?

(b) Are the payments in respect of these cruisers made to England from the accumulated sterling in London?

(c) What are the facts in the matter?

(d) Will this matter be brought before the Central Legislative Assembly? If so, when? If not, why not?

(e) What are the other purchases of like nature, which are being effected and in respect of which payments are being made from the accumulated sterling?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: (a) and (c). I would refer the Honourable Member to the reply given by the War Secretary to Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar's question No. 798, on the 8th March, 1946.

(b) Payment to H. M. G. will be made out of accumulated sterling in case the cruisers in question are purchased.

(d) I understand, Sir, that the matter will be laid before the Defence Consultative Committee.

(e) None at present.

CONVERSION OF INDIA'S CREDITS IN THE DOLLAR POOL BY BRITAIN FOR HER OWN USE

116. Mr. Manu Subedar: (a) Has the attention of the Honourable the Finance Member been drawn to the following remarks in the Hindu of Madras, dated the 22nd February, 1946:

"Have these credits (i.e., India's credits in the Dollar Pool) been absorbed by Britain by converting them for her own use against corresponding additions to the sterling balances part of which she now seeks to get adjusted?"

(b) What is the material, on the strength of which the Finance Secretary in the Council of State declared that dollars contributed to the Dollar Pool by India will be very small?

(c) Why is this material being withheld from the House?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: (a) Yes.

(b) and (c). I would invite the Honourable Member's attention to paragraph 29 of my Budget Speech.

NEED FOR ADDITIONAL RADIO TRANSMITTERS FOR BOMBAY

117. Mr. Manu Subedar: (a) Has the Honourable Member for Information and Arts seen the following extract from the Radio Times of India, dated February 16, 1946:

"Neglect of the legitimate claims of Bombay for more transmitters is reflected in the extremely slow rise of licences of the past few years. During 1940-45 (figures upto September, 1945 are available) Madras recorded the highest rise of 181 per cent. while Bombay could show only 66 per cent. The reasons are not far to seek. Alternative programmes were available for South India; two from Madras and Trichy, the third from ASIS, Delhi, the fourth from Mysore and the fifth from Travancore, not to mention those from Colombo and Hyderabad. Equally striking is the rise in the circles in the North-West. Both the circles, the Punjab and N.W. F. P. and Sind with Baluchistan record a high proportion of increase 158 and 147 per cent., respectively. The presence of troops in the areas was perhaps mainly responsible for the rise. But the way in which the Peshawar station was brought into being and the wide-range or alternative programmes available Lahore, Peshawar, Delhi, and Kabul were not less important contributory factors.

Claims of Bombay for more stations or additional transmitters are therefore pressing. Bombay can no longer be neglected. It has already suffered a lot. It is paying a far greater amount in licence fees than any other circle and it is also responsible for a considerable trade in radios and accessories."

(b) Have Government any plan for the introduction of additional broadcasting stations anywhere in the Bombay Province? If so, at what places?

(c) If it is not found feasible to instal additional stations at any other place in the Bombay Province, do Government propose to discontinue the English music broadcast from Bombay and give more varied programmes?

(d) Are Government aware that there are several languages in the Bombay Province, in contrast with other Provinces where there is one language? If so, what do Government propose to do in order to give varied programmes for the Bombay public, who are making the largest contribution to the revenues?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: (a) Yes.

(b) Government have under consideration a plan for the development of broadcasting in India which provides for the establishment of additional stations in the Provinces including Bombay. The exact localities have not yet been determined.

(c) No. These programmes fulfil the requirements of a large number of licence holders.

(d) As additional stations are opened programmes will become more varied.

SMALL CAUSES COURTS IN DELHI PROVINCE

118. Babu Ram Narayan Singh: Will the Honourable the Home Member please state:

(a) the number of Courts of Small Causes, established under Section 5 of the Provincial Small Cause Court Act (IX of 1887) within the Delhi Province;

(b) the place where they are situated or where they sit;

(c) the local limit of their jurisdiction; and

(d) the value of suits cognizable by them?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: (a) One.

(b) and (c). I invite the Honourable Member's attention to the reply which I gave to his starred question No. 220, on the 12th February 1946.

(d) Not exceeding Rs. 500.

FUTURE OF DEMOBED INDIAN PERSONNEL OF R. I. A. F.

119. Mr. Manu Subedar: (a) Is it a fact that the War Secretary intends to reduce the strength of the R. I. A. F. and to increase the men and personnel in the R. A. F.?

(b) Is it a fact that Government have decided to get Canadians, who are being demobilised, into the R. I. A. F., but have no scheme for reducing the demobilisation of the R. I. A. F. and for building up an Indian Air Force in India?

(c) Is it a fact that preparations have been made for the Indian men and officers being sent away, and that officers of like qualification are being engaged from Britishers, whose expense will be borne by the Indian revenues?

(d) What attempts have Government made, when, and with what results, to see that demobilised R. I. A. F. personnel and officers find engagement in civil aviation in India?

(e) Have Government published any statement of their policy on this subject, which will reassure Indian men and officers in the R. I. A. F.?

(f) Are Government solicitous for the welfare of men, who have given them good service? If so, what efforts are Government making with regard to the future of those whom they intend to demob?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) No, Sir. Government's intention is to reduce the R. I. A. F. down to the force necessary to maintain ten squadrons plus the necessary training and other ancillary units to provide a fully balanced force. Simultaneously, R. A. F. personnel in India are also being reduced, and on a much larger scale.

(b) The appointment of Canadians to the R. A. F. is a matter for His Majesty's Government. When announcing their intention to maintain a balanced force of ten R. I. A. F. squadrons post-war, Government emphasised that this was only an initial minimum strength and would be expanded as rapidly as conditions permit and as personnel particularly pilots become available. The main reduction now being undertaken is intended to reduce the R. I. A. F. element in the R. A. F. squadrons.

(c) No, Sir!

(d) and (e). Close liaison is maintained between Air Headquarters and the Director General, Civil Aviation, in respect of possible employment for R.I.A.F. personnel in civil aviation and information as to specific posts available is circularized. As already announced the policy of Government is to reserve 70 per cent. of permanent vacancies ordinarily filled by direct recruitment for candidates with War Service.

(f) Yes, Sir. Reports of the efforts being made by Government in regard to the future of the men to be demobilized have appeared in the Press on various occasions. I would also invite the Honourable Member's attention to a booklet 'Release and Resettlement' and the Progress Report for the period 18th July to 31st December, 1946, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. They give details of the Employment Exchange Organisation under the Labour Department and of a number of training schemes for settlement in peace-time jobs of demobilized soldiers. Provincial Governments also have schemes exclusively for the benefit of ex-servicemen.

PROPER STRENGTH OF R. I. A. F.

120. Mr. Manu Subedar: (a) Will the War Secretary please state the strength of the R. I. A. F. in squadrons and in men and officers as compared with pre-war, and how much reduction Government contemplate?

(b) What is the proper strength of the R. I. A. F.?

(c) Have Government estimated, or have they got any recommendation from any committee as to the proper strength of the R. I. A. F. for the defence of India, which they should maintain?

(d) Is it a fact that large expenditure has been incurred by India in training up the personnel of the R. I. A. F.? If so, why is it proposed that all this should now be lost and the men sent back in search of civil jobs, which they may not find?

(e) Is it a fact that in the process of contraction, it is the Indian officers, who are made to go, and not Britishers?

(f) Is it a fact that Britishers alone hold all the high ranks? If not, what is the percentage of Indians and Englishmen in the R. I. A. F. officers?

(g) Have Government represented to His Majesty's Government that the R. A. F. may be completely withdrawn from India and that the R. I. A. F. may be built up to a suitable size for the defence of India?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) and (b). The pre-war strength of the R. I. A. F. was one squadron, 22 officers and 264 other ranks. Its present strength is ten squadrons and in addition to their own squadrons, the R.I.A.F. also provide some personnel for work with the R. A. F. The total strength is 1,419 officers and 24,931 other ranks.

Government have already publicly announced their intention to maintain the Royal Indian Air Force after the war at an initial strength of not less than ten squadrons plus the necessary training and other ancillary units required to provide a fully balanced force. The R. I. A. F. however will not in future provide personnel for the R. A. F.

(c) Yes, Sir. To begin with, it will be necessary to supplement the R. I. A. F. by certain R. A. F. squadrons, who will be replaced as the R. I. A. F. expand.

(d) The Royal Indian Air Force was recruited on a voluntary basis and many of them want to be released. Personnel recruited during the war can claim their release when, by age and service group, they are eligible for demobilization. Their training, however, should be of value in civil life. There is no question of losing all that has been spent which has been of great value.

(e) and (f). These questions are based on a misconception. There are no British officers in the Royal Indian Air Force. As the expansion of the service is very recent, there are very few senior R. I. A. F. officers, and British officers have to be attached.

(g) It is, Sir, the ultimate aim that the R. I. A. F. should be built up to a suitable size for the defence of India and H. M. G. are aware of this.

WORKING HOURS IN DEFENCE HEADQUARTERS.

121. Sardar Mangal Singh: Will the War Secretary please state:

(a) whether it is a fact that the Defence Headquarters are observing, even after the cessation of hostilities, the same office hours as were adopted during the war;

(b) whether it is also a fact that no closed holidays are observed in the D. H. Qs.;

(c) whether Government are aware that strong resentment prevails among the staff of the D. H. Qs. and other allied Departments on account of longer office hours as compared to Civil Departments and the absence of closed holidays; and

(d) if the reply to (c) is in the affirmative, what steps are Government taking to remove this disparity between the Civil Departments and the D. H. Qs.?

Mr. P. Mason: (a), (b), (c) and (d). It is a fact that during the war Defence Headquarters worked longer hours than other Departments and observed no closed holidays. There were no free Saturday afternoons. For this they received no extra pay. On the termination of hostilities there was a reduction of work in some branches of the Headquarters but not by any means in all, and in fact in some Directorates work has increased. It was thought therefore preferable in the interest of the tax payer, to reduce personnel where possible and to keep the war-time office hours, except for the introduction of a free Saturday afternoon. These amount to slightly less than 40 hours a week. Although the work is still very heavy and there is much to be done, it has now been decided that with effect from 1st March Closed holidays will be observed, and with effect from 1st April office hours will be those observed by other Departments. In fact, however, if the work is to be finished, few officers will be able to work to these hours, and many clerks will also have to work outside office hours.

Mr. President: There are two small points to which I wish to invite the attention of the House. I do not want any further discussion on either 12 Noon of them. One is with reference to the answer, which the Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari gave to a question in which he said: "My information on the point raised by the Honourable Member is not yet complete. I shall send him a reply shortly." The proper procedure will be to place the reply on the table of the House. The House has been in possession of the question and the reply and the supply of further information should not be a private arrangement between an Honourable Member and the Government.

The other point is with reference to the vexed question of reaching all the questions during the question hour. I have had some suggestions which I shall place before the House and which I am now investigating. I am trying to come to some arrangement, with reference to what I have said previously. But I am just telling the House what is passing in my mind only to keep Members informed about the position. I am practically thinking audibly, and that is: Would it not be a better way, if not better at least one of the ways to be considered, that the question hour should be divided by the number of Members who put questions and each Member be allotted time according to his proportion?

Mr. Manu Subedar (Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau: Indian Commerce): We shall run into vulgar fractions!

Mr. President: I am just placing before the House what is passing through my mind, so that each Member will stand an opportunity of his question being reached. I find that there is a complaint from many quarters that questions are not reached. Well, it entirely depends on and as a matter of fact, it is more or less in the hands of Members. If less supplementaries are put, if questions are put straight without the background of preambles or reasons and all that, a lot of time could be saved. In addition to that I was just considering as to whether some such arrangement as to division of time could not be made whereby all Members will get equal opportunities of putting their questions. I do not wish to have the reaction of Members over this in the House. It is only an idea which was passing through in my mind and I thought it might be fair to put it to the House. We might discuss it outside the House.

Shri Sri Prakasa (Benares and Gorakhpur Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): The office may arrange the questions according to your suggestion.

Shri Satya Narayan Sinha (Darbhanga cum Saran: Non-Muhammadan): Why could not the answers be printed as suggested by you?

Mr. President: I have already been considering that and trying to see what is possible. But I find that a large number of questions are tabled for a particular day. One of the ways for the Members would be to see what number of questions are tabled and then adjust the dates.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Could not only two supplementaries be permitted to the Member who puts the question and one supplementary to somebody else, except in those cases where you think the subject is of wider importance?

Mr. President: Order, order. I said I do not want a discussion and we are drifting into a discussion.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmed (United Provinces Southern Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): Will you consider one point: The right of asking supplementaries should not be monopolised by a few individuals. It should be the privilege of others as well.

Mr. President: I am trying to see to that. But when I see no other persons wishing to put supplementaries I have to allow the few persons to put more questions. But the order I would prefer is that the Honourable Member who puts the question should have precedence of putting supplementary questions over all others. As I said once before, I am merely placing this before the House and instead of the control coming from the Chair, it should grow from within and that is the best way of adjustment. However, we will now proceed with the business of the day.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Let us have two hours for questions.

Mr. President: Even then the complaint will stand unless some method is devised.

GENERAL BUDGET—LIST OF DEMANDS—contd.

SECOND STAGE—contd.

DEMAND NO. 11—EXECUTIVE COUNCIL—contd.

(a) Irresponsibility, Inefficiency and Corruption in the Administration; (b) Administration of the Centrally Administered Areas; (c) Planning and Development Policy

Mr. President: Now we will resume discussion on the cut motion of Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai. Mr. Ghulam Bhik Nairang,

Syed Ghulam Bhik Nairang (East Punjab: Muhammadan): Yesterday when I just started my speech the knell of parting day was tolled and I had to wait till this morning. I was saying at the close of my very brief remarks yesterday that Centrally Administered Areas are several and the administration of each of them is peculiar to itself and therefore to offer any remarks about all of them impracticable within the time limit which is set to a speech by anyone who supports or opposes the motion. We know that the areas which are said to be Centrally Administered are the Provinces of Delhi, Ajmere-Merwara, the Andamans and Nicobar Islands, Baluchistan, and that tract bearing the most curious of all names, Panth Piploda of which we heard something in the course of the question hour today. The Central Government, Sir, has taken upon itself the administration of such far-flung pieces of land and naturally the administration of each has to be of a peculiar type, till we heard today that Panth Piploda is under an honorary Chief Commissioner. Anyhow, Sir, I do not propose to traverse the whole ground of the administration of the Centrally Administered Areas. I will take up one topic out of the many. That can illustrate the dissatisfaction which we all feel with the administration of Centrally Administered Areas. My Honourable friend, Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava, was good enough to tell us yesterday a good many things about the Province of Delhi and I want to just call attention to the circumstances which have prevailed for sixty years and more in Baluchistan. The subject of Baluchistan, Sir, came up for discussion in this House on several occasions even within the short time that I have been in the House. The last Assembly discussed a Resolution on the subject which I had myself the honour to move in 1939 during the Simla Session. The Resolution then moved was:

"That this Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council to take immediate steps for the purpose of establishing provincial autonomy in Baluchistan on the same footing as in other provinces."

The Resolution elicited from the Government spokesman a long apologia as to why no provincial autonomy could be conferred on Baluchistan. In 1941 again I returned to the subject by moving a cut motion during the Budget Session of the last Assembly and again reiterated all the grievances of the inhabitants of Baluchistan. There was a long debate again ending in smoke. In 1944 the Deputy Leader of my Party, Nawabzada Liaquat Ali Khan, moved a Resolution which appeared to have greater chances of bearing fruit. That Resolution was:

"That this Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council to appoint immediately a committee with a majority of elected members of the Central Legislature on it to recommend as to what steps should be taken to associate constitutionally the people of Baluchistan with the administration of the Province on lines similar to other Provinces of British India."

The wording of that Resolution showed that the demand for reforms to be inaugurated in Baluchistan had been very much diluted and we had come down to a demand for such reforms as might serve to associate the people of the Province with the administration. On that there was a full-dress debate which took all the non-official Resolution days. All parties participated in the debate. There was general agreement on all sides that such a step should be taken and a committee should be appointed and that at a very early date: in fact, the word in the Resolution was 'immediately' and the resolution was passed by the House. Of course, when I say that there was general agreement, I do not mean that the Government spokesman on that occasion very much encouraged the hope which we entertained of a committee being appointed nor do I forget the circumstance that a gentleman, who is not with us now (Nawab Major Sir Ahmed Nawaz Khan) and who used to support Government on all occasions, however unreasonable their attitude might have been, opposed the idea. All others supported the motion. There was attempt on the part of another Honourable Member, Mr. Lalchand Navalrai, to move an amendment but really even that did not mean opposition to the Resolution but to make it more specific on certain points. That amendment was negatived and the Resolution was carried.

It followed, therefore, that this House gave unmistakable expression to its considered opinion that whatever else might have been done or might not have been done, the time was ripe, at least, for the appointment of a committee of this House, on which the elected members of this House were to be in a majority to consider and report as to what changes in the administration of Baluchistan were necessary, so that the inhabitants of that Province might be associated with the administration. As far as I am aware, no such committee has ever come into existence and the resolution has been consigned to the waste-paper basket of the Government (which is a very big receptacle indeed). But the point for us is that it is really a great insult to this House that when this Honourable House, after such a detailed and full dress debate in which all sections of the non-official members of the House agreed and supported the resolution and the resolution was duly carried, Government did not pay the slightest heed to the resolution and did not take any steps to carry it out and we find Baluchistan where it was more than sixty years ago, when the British first took charge of that Province, under the variegated administrative machinery which applied differently to what was called British Baluchistan, what was called the Tribal Baluchistan, and what was called the Kalat State and Las Bela State. Such a conglomeration of different kinds of tracts, which makes up the sum total called Baluchistan, is administered according to notions of administration which are neither modern nor mediaeval but which I think can be described purely as a kind of military administration which should be regarded even in the present stage of constitutional development in India (although there is so much that remains to be done in the matter of the constitutional progress of India) and judging from the lines on which it has been carried on, as a blot on the fair name of British statesmanship and a standing insult to the honour of India. Therefore merely on the ground that Government has behaved with culpable disregard of the considered opinion of this House and has insulted this House, if for no other reason (of course there are many other reasons too) I would for this reason alone support the cut motion, even without considering other parts of the motion. This reason alone will suffice for me to support the motion.

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque (Commerce Member): Sir, yesterday my friend was referring to the fact that it was not possible for India to get capital goods and he attributed the responsibility to Government on the ground that steps were not taken in time to place orders for such capital goods abroad. I would only reply for the period during which I was in charge; from May 1943 till Sir Ardeshir Dalal took it over the planning was actually in charge of the respective Departments; and as the Member in charge of Industry I had the responsibility of looking to the question of planning for the industrial future of India. Let me say that I had just then come after a period of one year's stay in London, to take charge of this Department. What I could gather in London was that every country had been trying its level best to plan its future, especially those countries devastated by the enemy forces. I was therefore extremely anxious, knowing as I did at the time that steps were being taken to place orders even at that stage by some of the occupied countries, that India also should go ahead, and with a view to that I went round to all the important places of commerce and industry personally, spoke to the industry and trade organisations and thereafter about the end of the year we issued a circular to all the industries concerned that they should help us with a view to collating information that was necessary for Government in order to place some sort of order at the London end. My friend is well aware of the fact that the response to that circular, in which materials were asked from the industries, was extremely poor. It was indeed true that some of the textile industries did try to supply some information, but it was not complete; yet in those cases we tried to help them immediately. But barring that, in the bulk of industries the data and materials were not before Government. I do not say that in a spirit of complaint. Probably they had other views in the matter; probably they thought that the war would continue much longer and it was too premature; probably they did not themselves realise or understand the fullest implications of the future post-war world order. But I am merely stating it as a fact that it would have been almost impossible for any government, placed it is here, to place orders for capital goods in other countries, without knowing from the industries as to their actual needs, both for replacement as well as for expansion and new development. I must say—and here again I am giving only my personal opinion—that in other countries the trade, commerce and industrial organisations have played and do play a very large part in formulating their schemes for development, expansion and replacement; and I appeal to the Honourable Members to find out the extent to which the trade, commerce and industrial organisations here have taken up that task, at least at the time about which I was speaking.

The other thing we did was this. The development of industry in any country must not only depend on the extent of the capital goods available, but also on suitably trained technical personnel and a very large amount of industrial and scientific research is necessary before a country can embark upon a big programme. That part we did take up. As is well known we had proposals for the establishment of five national laboratories and also the appointment of a committee to plan the future of industrial and scientific research in this country, with a view to training up suitable technical personnel within the country. But in the matter of capital goods it is a fact that the industries themselves, at the time when we were very anxious that some sort of rough estimate should be made as to the total capital goods requirements of India, we could not get any response from the industries themselves. I am not in a position, placed as I am today, to complain; and therefore I will not certainly mention if in spite of their omissions they still complain today; I will leave my friend Sir Akbar Hydari to reply to as to what had been done thereafter. I am definitely of opinion that if in 1943 and even in 1944 the industries had responded to what the Government required of them in the matter of collating materials for the future expansion of industries in India, India would not have been in the present position today. What actually happened is that long before the war was finished, other countries were able to place their orders and we could not, because we had not the assistance from the industries. The post-war rehabilitation of industries of those countries wherefrom we will require our goods will take a little time, and it is not possible for a country like England to supply such capital goods as are needed for the expansion of Indian industries till the industries in the United Kingdom are placed on a normal peace time footing, and that takes a little time

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal (Presidency Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): On a point of information, will the Honourable Member be pleased to state what the Government of India themselves did for the collection of such materials which they expected the industries to supply but the industries did not?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: As regards that, I think my Honourable friend is new to the House but I can supply him with a detailed statement which was circulated to all the chamber organisations and all the industries throughout the country. My Honourable friend will realise that if India requires today textile development or the processing of foodstuffs, it would not be possible for any secretariat in the world to evolve a plan of that nature until either it is a Government in which industries are nationalised or in conditions of private enterprise, materials are supplied by the industries; under existing conditions, as industry is in the hands of private enterprise, it is private enterprise which must supply the necessary information before any such step can be taken

Mr. Vadilal Lalubhai (Ahmedabad Millowners Association: Indian Commerce): Can I ask one question at this stage? My Honourable friend referred to occupied countries. I would ask him how the U. S. S. R. did in their first five-year plan? They were as backward as India. The other thing he referred to was about machinery lists, that the industrialists did not supply except the textile industry. What did they do about new industries that were to be started? And how much did even the textile industry get? It is starving for want of machinery.

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: As regards the U. S. S. R. and what has been done there, I think that question could better be answered after the constitutional reform comes and my friends are in power.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: We will be able to do it.

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: I think that is not the reply; there are certain methods in which things can be done. I can also do it; the U. S. S. R. scrapped all private properties and they nationalised all the industries; and my friend himself will be the first person hit if I would have taken that step

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: If India benefits, the industrialists will be in it.

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: I have yet to see. I have had many lessons; I have known industries—as to how on the one hand on public platforms they cry for nationalisation, and on the other hand they have gone on accumulating their private profit as a result of war conditions. I know how at the cost of the people of this country high prices have been charged only to create profit for themselves. That part may be left over

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: The Government allowed it. What did the Government do to check it?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: As regards textile machinery we tried our best to get such machinery and replacements as were available even under war conditions. As regards future planning, all those who registered themselves before December 1945 automatically get an import license

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: But did they get the machinery?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: Whether they get the machinery or not, if they had given us those materials which they were prepared to give, by the end of 1944, the position would have been different.

Sri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar (Madras: Indian Commerce): Will the Honourable Member see that applications sent before the 31st December and which are still pending are sanctioned immediately? There are some cases like that?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: I do not think there is any case like that but if there is any case and if my friend will supply me with facts, I will certainly inquire into the matter.

As regards new industries, I hope it will be remembered that this question of new industries comes up with the question of planning of expansion. Unfortunately Sir Ardeshir Dalal is not here but Sir Akbar Hydari will be able to reply on that subject. I am only concerned with that part for which I was responsible at the time when I was in charge of the Department. I do not make any complaint of it but I felt that at that time when it would have been possible for me to do something for the industrial advantage of India. I could not do anything because my friend who is complaining today was not prepared to give the materials to us.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: My Honourable friend said that the Industries did not give him information. The textile industry did give him all the information.

Pandit Mukut Bihari Lal Bhargava (Ajmer-Merwara: General): Mr. President, this cut motion is intended to censure and condemn this bureaucratic Government which sits on the opposite benches for their callous indifference and culpable negligence towards the administration of what are known as the Centrally Administered Areas. Now, Sir, these Centrally Administered Areas are scattered tracts situated at a great distances from one another. One is in the extreme north, Baluchistan and another is in the extreme south, the province of Coorg. These tracts were carved out with the specific object of tightening the Imperialistic grip on the different parts of this country and my unfortunate province is the worst victim of this imperialistic policy. Historically Ajmer-Merwara is a province that has played a great part in different phases of Indian history from the time of Hindu rule up to the present day. Ajmer was the capital of the illustrious Prithvi Raj. Later it was the chief place of visit of all the great Pathan and Moghul emperors from Akbar onwards up to the eclipse of the Moghul Empire. Even in the British period, Ajmer-Merwara has been clutched by the Imperialists for the specific purpose, I assert, of maintaining their hold upon the surrounding Rajput Chiefs of Rajputana. It was in the year 1818 that Ajmer was conquered by the British and it was then attached to the then existing province of North-Western Provinces of Agra and Oudh now called the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh. Up till 1870 it remained attached to that province but subsequently the British Government in India who had by that time entered into various treaties with Rajput Chiefs was anxious to get a seat for maintaining its clutch on the Rajput Chiefs and then they separated and segregated this province from the North-Western Provinces of Agra and Oudh and called it a minor administration and handed it over to the Agent to the Governor-General for Rajputana States who then began to act as the ex-officio Chief Commissioner. From 1870 up to 1943 it was the Agent to the Governor General known as the Resident of the Rajputana States, under the Constitution Act of 1935. Who held the office of the Chief Commissioner and it is only in 1943 after much hue and cry and after great protest had been raised, that these two offices were separated but this separation of office has not ameliorated the lot of six lakhs of people who inhabit this part of the country.

Now, Sir, even now Ajmer is not an insignificant place. It occupies a very important place in the religious life of this country. Every year it is visited by thousand of Muslim pilgrims from different parts of the country to pay their homage at the shrine of Khwaja Mohmuddin Chisti. Ajmer has a picturesque and beautiful lake, called the Pushkar Lake which is mentioned in books like the Rig Veda which is the oldest book of the world. Every year it is visited by lakhs of Hindu pilgrims from each and every part of the country. Notwithstanding this, because of the Imperialist policy of this Government and because it was necessary to maintain its hold on the Rajput Chiefs, this province of Ajmer-Merwara which is a very small tract of 2,400 square miles with a population of six lakhs of people has been consistently neglected. Now, my friend on the left side, while discussing the fate of Baluchistan said that though this Assembly resolved that a non-official committee should be appointed to make certain recommendations, still no action has been taken on it. My assertion is that as early as 1921 an official inquiry committee known as the Ashworth Committee was appointed after the Government of India Act of 1919 came into force to consider the constitutional position of Ajmer-Merwara. What were the recommendations, that this Committee made. It definitely recommended that Ajmer-Merwara should be merged both administratively and judicially with the province of the United Provinces within a period of two years and till that is done, the recommendation of the Committee was that the autocratic Chief Commissioner must be associated with an advisory council consisting of a non-official majority. 25 years have passed and no action has been taken upon any of the recommendation of that committee. What is the present position of the Chief Commissioner? He is as autocratic as any of the old rulers of the Moghul times. Occupying as he does the palatial bungalow overlooking the picturesque lake of Ana Sagar with the marble baradari built by Emperor Shah Jehan, he is altogether unapproachable. He is in the same position as a great Maharaja or a Nawab and there is no public voice in the administration which is carried on at his sweet will and according to his whims and caprices. We come to the Deputy Commissioner, till 1943 designated as Commissioner. He is the virtual head of the administration and you will be pleased to find that his office is a curious muddle of portfolios. He is everything in the province. He is the Inspector General of Jails, he is the District Magistrate. He is the Registrar of Co-operative Societies. He is also the head of the Controlling and Rationing Department which has been recently set up. You can easily imagine, Sir, that a man who occupies so many offices can hardly do justice to any of them. The result is inefficiency and corruption every where. Then, Sir, my greatest misfortune is that all these key offices are held by outsiders, persons who are not acquainted with the local conditions and who have very little sympathy with the people. Their whole function is to permeate this province of Ajmer-Merwara with persons of their own choice and from their own province. Recently, in the emergency Departments of Control and Rationing, according to the official figures given to me a few days ago on the floor of the House, no less than 51 have been recruited from outside and the reason given is that local talents, are not available. I respectfully submit that it is absurd to say that. The average literacy in my province is higher than in any other province. It is 18.1 per cent. and in urban population it goes up to 25 per cent. notwithstanding the fact that nothing has been done by this Government to import rural education. This much with regard to administration.

Then, we proceed to public health. So far as the Public Health Department is concerned, it is unknown to Ajmer-Merwara. I know that in the present budget some money has been provided, but we have yet to see how it is utilised. As regards the hospitals, there is only one hospital, the Victoria Hospital, in Ajmer. The Central Government conceded years ago that it should be a first class hospital but still it is a second class hospital with inadequate medicine, inadequate appliances and doctors can have private practice. The staff is inadequate and accommodation is scarce. This is the condition of public health.

Coming to the water problem, which any sagacious administration could have tackled long ago, it is as yet unsolved. Every third year there is a famine in Ajmer-Merwara because there is an awful paucity of water and the rains are scarce. Government has never seriously tackled this problem. It could have been very well tackled if Government had the imagination and the sympathy to tackle it, because at a distance of 150 miles from Deoli, the extreme end of my province, there is a perennial source of water in the Chambal river. If the Government had invested just a few crores of rupees at one time on the scheme to irrigate this unfortunate province, its fate would have been quite different, and instead of a deficit province, it would have been a surplus province producing lots of foodgrains because the soil is very fertile and the difficulty is only that of water. I suggest and I respectfully bring it to the notice of those concerned that this problem must be confronted at an early date if you want to avoid a perpetual state of famine in my province. I have only to draw the attention of the Government to the miserable state of affairs in which the people of that unfortunate province are at present because they are confronted by these famine times. I am surprised to find that not a single pie has been provided for famine relief in the budget for 1946-47. The condition of the tenancy is miserable. The Istimrardars who are akin to the Talukadars in U. P. are exploiting the tenants and though the official Committees Dela Fogue and Irwin have been appointed from time to time and they have made their reports, these reports are kept in cold storage. We do not know what their contents are. Whenever we have asked for their contents we have been told that they are confidential records. I ask, why their contents have not been disclosed? The reason is clear. They were against the Istimrardars, whose vested interests Government is not inclined to ignore, and in the meanwhile the conditions of tenants, are growing more and more miserable. A man might have been cultivating the land for generations and yet he can be ejected without notice. I press upon the Government the desirability of having a tenancy legislation at as early a date as possible, which has been in contemplation for 15 years. Settlement has taken almost three years and no result is coming forth. And what is more distressing is that they are contemplating to increase the assessment by Rs. 40,000—24 per cent. in the Beawar Tahsil and 10 per cent. in the Ajmer Tahsil. This is absolutely unwarranted by the local conditions of the peasantry and tenancy legislation should be taken in hand at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. President: Sir John Thorne.

The Honourable Sir John Thorne (Home Member): Sir, I was not proposing to speak now. If there is any one else who wishes to speak before Lunch, I am prepared to wait until my Honourable friend has spoken.

Mr. President: I think it will be better if the Honourable Member speaks now. If he has any reply to make afterwards or if he feels that he should answer some point, I will give him another chance.

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: Very well, Sir. If I may say so, so far the debate on this cut motion has gone, it is being carried out with a rather blunt knife. Perhaps that is not the most suitable metaphor because the weapon seems to be more like a three-pronged fork or trisul; (a) is about the irresponsibility, inefficiency and corruption in the administration; (b) is the administration of the Centrally administered areas; and (c) is the planning and development policy. Well, Sir, that is rather omnibus and I am concerned only with parts. (a) and (b) of the motion. (a) itself is sub-divided into three subjects, another three-pronged fork. I have listened with some care—it is disadvantageous, if I may say so, that I should be speaking so early in the debate—I have listened with some care to see the grounds on which the Government are to be censured for irresponsibility, inefficiency and corruption. Of those, clearly the most important charge is that of corruption. On that, a great deal might be said and a great deal in the course of a session is said in scattered references to the subject. I shall say very little on the legislative and executive measures that have been taken to check corruption, but I would remind the House of what has been done in that way.

In 1948 an Ordinance was passed, I think it was Ordinance XXII of 1943, to set up a special Police Department or rather to put on a statutory basis the Police establishment which had been working since 1941, more especially in connection with the affairs of defence, supply and railways with a view to the more speedy detection and punishment of offences which may be lumped under the general head 'corruption'. Then, in the same connection an Ordinance was passed setting up special tribunals for the same purpose, the procedure was simplified, special rules of evidence were provided, all with the object of obtaining speedier trial and heavier punishments for offences of this kind. I believe that recently an Ordinance has been published which makes some part of that Ordinance in relation to special rules of evidence, part of the law of the land, applying throughout India, at any rate until there is other legislation to displace it. Then, Sir, there was another ordinance, for which I can claim some credit as a father, which had a very useful and desirable object of freezing ill gotten gains pending the hearing of the cases in order that they should not be tucked away somewhere, where at the end of the trial if it ended in conviction they would not be accessible. That is a brief summary of the steps taken by way of legislation and setting up of the establishments of police and judiciary to meet these very special needs. We are all agreed about the need. There is no doubt whatever that during the war corruption greatly increased. I believe if a survey were made of all the countries at war, and probably even of those that were not at war, it will be found that that phenomenon was general. Opportunities increased, temptations increased and I doubt whether any country has succeeded in keeping its administration as clean as it was before the war. I admit, it is public knowledge, that here in India we have had a great deal of corruption. But, Sir, none of us can feel that man can be made and kept good by legislation or even by increased police and judicial powers. There must be something else, there must be something more profound and fundamental in the community if corruption is to be stamped out. Now that the war is over, we may hope that those temptations and those opportunities will decrease and we shall not hear perhaps in the next few years of as many flagrant cases as have been brought to notice during the war. But there is, as I say, something more fundamental required. When I listened to my Honourable friends not only today, but when this matter came up on previous days, I wondered exactly who these government servants are who are regarded as a class, as so inefficient and corrupt. One would suppose, Sir, that people were born as government servants or if not born as government servants, brought up as government servants as some sort of special species or genus of the animal kingdom, something like elephants or tigers. Well, Sir, that is not so. The average government servant is some one very much like any of my Honourable friends here, he comes very much from the same level of society as many of us here, who are no doubt related to many government servants, and the government servant is just the product of the community.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: There may be a cadre of these.

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: But they are not endowed either at birth or during their bringing up with any special qualities

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: They are your creatures.

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: They have all the same qualities of the community from which they come. Well, Sir, that is one thing I want to say—that they are not a special class or caste or as my Honourable friend calls them, special cadre. They are in no way different from the material form which the great majority of the folk in India are made.

Then, Sir, there is another thing, and I will repeat what my Honourable colleague of the Food Department said yesterday, that corruption is a matter of give and take. If there were no bribe givers, there would be no bribe takers. That is a commonplace which had been said time and again. But here again, who are the bribe givers? Are they some special class, caste or cadre or are they the people who are thrown up by circumstances from all communities? They are not a special class. What is wanted is a much more lively and vivid sense in the community of the shamefulness, the shameful greed and the shameful dishonesty which is involved in the giving and taking of bribes. (Interruption). It is a great pity that the Honourable Member does not even get up to speak. I have not much time to deal with this subject, the first of the prongs with which I am concerned. Inefficiency—I might have said more about it, but I did not hear very much about this in the course of the debate.

I shall not keep the House long on the second subject which is the administration of centrally administered areas, those areas which are officially known as the Chief Commissioner's Provinces. My Honourable friend Syed Ghulam Bhik Nairang enumerated them just now. I think he omitted one for which I have a special affection, Coorg. Baluchistan is not my concern, and I dare say, if there is time, my colleague of the External Affairs Department will deal with it. Panth Piploda—we have heard those magic words this morning, and I am sorry that some of my Honourable friends opposite did not hear the debate which I think was amusing—they were on strike at the time, I think it was in 1939 at Simla.

Syed Ghulam Bhik Nairang (East Punjab: Muhammadan): I heard that debate.

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I very much enjoyed it. I think in these unhappy days, there is a good deal to be said for an area which gives us no trouble and which provides some of us with a little harmless amusement. Of the other areas, only two are represented here, Delhi and Ajmer-Merwara. I have listened with attention to what has been said, I am sorry that circumstances prevent the representative of Delhi from being here himself, but I have listened with attention to what has been said by the Pundit who deputised for him and the other Pundit who told us about Ajmer-Merwara. Well, Sir, I am rather a fraud on these occasions because I am not really officially concerned with the subjects which mostly interest my Honourable friends, that is to say, the provision for what are called the nation building activities in the Chief Commissioners' provinces. Each department of the Government of India is concerned with that part of the subject which falls within its ordinary scope. That may, I think, be a defect, I cannot help feeling it is a defect, I should myself hope that some arrangement may be found of rather closer co-ordination between the activities of the various departments in the Chief Commissioners' provinces than is possible under the present arrangement. However, there it is and I cannot answer for the public health facilities or irrigation facilities, subjects which have been referred to in these speeches. As regards Ajmer-Merwara I confess I do not know as I have not yet had time to visit it. But as regards Delhi I should have

I P. M. thought that the complaint that Delhi has been neglected has very little foundation. We are all aware of the great interest taken in the welfare of Delhi Province by Lord Linlithgow and we are acquainted with the zeal with which various measures were initiated by Sir Evan Jenkins, and I have no doubt they are still being carried on. But, as I say, I cannot answer for that side of the subject.

Then my Honourable friends complained of the constitutional footing of these two provinces,—here they are, ruled by autocrats, no democratic bodies, no advisory councils, even local boards dominated by if not official majorities by nominated majorities. That was certainly said of Delhi; I am not certain whether anything on the same theme was said about Ajmer-Merwara. What is the solution? I listened rather carefully for the views of my Honourable friends as to what should be done about it. The Pundit who spoke in regard to Delhi is in favour—if I understood him aright—of the formation of a large province which shall take in adjoining areas of the Punjab and the United Provinces. What the solution suggested by my other Pundit friend from Ajmer-Merwara was I did not quite gather. He referred to a Committee which reported in 1921; and so far as I could make out, the main recommendation of that Committee was that Ajmer-Merwara should be merged in the United Provinces. Sir, these are matters which I hope my Honourable friends will have an opportunity of urging before the constitution making body. It is not for me to say whether the Chief Commissioners' provinces will be represented on that body: I hope they will be, because there are problems and we are all conscious of them. The administrations of those small areas are bound to be somewhat top-heavy, they are bound to be somewhat extravagant by the ordinary principles which apply to larger areas like Governors' provinces. I do not know about Delhi and Ajmer-Merwara, but certainly with regard to another Chief Commissioner's province with which I have some acquaintance, namely Coorg, there is quite a strong feeling of local patriotism, so to speak. I have recently visited Coorg and I know that opinions there are almost as much divided as they were nearly twenty years ago when I served as Commissioner of that province. But whatever the prevailing opinion is there is quite a strong sense of local individuality and tradition. If Ajmer-Merwara were merged in the United Provinces something would be lost and something might be gained. After all it would be a very small corner of the United Provinces. And I should have thought that even in material matters, and certainly in the perhaps more important spiritual feeling of the people, something would be lost by their being merged in a much larger unit.

Sri T. V. Satakopachari (Tanjore cum Trichinopoly: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, after hearing the Honourable Home Member I think I should support the cut motion of my Honourable friend Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai, which seeks to censure Government on their irresponsibility, inefficiency and corruption in the administration. I should have thought that any Member of Government would have defended, if corruption exists in the department, on other grounds than those which have been put forward by the Honourable Home Member and some other Members of Government. Corruption has been admitted to exist in many of their departments. It is so glaring, so public, and such a notorious fact that they have been forced to admit it. Otherwise I am sure they would have tried all sorts of tortuous means to hide the fact and speak as if the administration is pure and straight. I do not really understand the comparison that is made between this country and other countries. It was said that there was as much corruption in this country as there was in any other country, it was war corruption and it was a consequence of the war, because several things had to be done which in well ordered times and in peace time would not be done, and so there was necessarily corruption. In the same breath the Honourable Member said that there was something fundamentally wrong with the community here to make corruption possible. I really do not understand him. The one thing that is fundamentally wrong is the existence of people like Sir John Thorne here, the existence of that kind of bureaucracy in this country, the existence of foreign domination. Here is a correct example of the proverb that power corrupts and absolute power corrupts absolutely; and because absolute power is vested in this executive it has corrupted every member absolutely. And that is what I find from their attitude and outlook.

The Honourable Sir John Thorne was several years ago in my own district of Tanjore. At that time the salt satyagraha was in progress and Mahatma Gandhi had marched to Dandi and Mr. C. Rajagopalachari had marched to Vedaranyam in my district. Sir John Thorne did not have any touch with the people of the country; he promulgated an order saying that any man who gave food to any of these persons that came marching with Mr. Rajagopalachari committed a great crime and would be liable to punishment under the Indian Penal Code. I happened to be in the management of the Bar Association and we looked into the legal side of it; and he got a communication from us that it was a wrong interpretation of the law. I expected that in the decades that have passed since then Sir John Thorne has gained some experience of this country, but perhaps he has receded further and further away from the people whom he is supposed to govern and to protect. I would go to the extent of saying that he is doing a disservice to his own country by irritating people with such remarks as this and losing this country and this empire and I believe several other countries which they want to dominate. Sir, corruption is there and if it is there and is not weeded out, then even the national Government would be accused of responsibility in the affair and they also may be unable to weed it out; in which case Government would be accused of inefficiency and incompetency. These things are to my mind inseparable: Inefficiency, incompetency and irresponsibility breed, in their turn, corruption. The man who is irresponsible and incompetent is bound to be corrupt, and where there is corruption there can be no efficiency. That is why we charge you with inefficiency and corruption. I find that the present Executive Council delights in being irresponsible. When I use the word 'irresponsible', I use it in all the three significances of the term: I mean irresponsibility as opposed to responsible Government, because the Executive Council, as it is constituted at present, is not responsible to the Legislature, and therefore it is not responsible to the people of this country. Secondly, irresponsible in the way in which it is unresponsive to public opinion—it does not care for the needs of the people; it does not care for the opinions of the people; it flouts the opinions of the leaders of the people; it flouts the legislatures of the people. Because it is unresponsive to public opinion, therefore it is irresponsible. Sir, I come to the logical extreme and say it is irresponsible in this respect: reckless, regardless of duty, regardless of consequences. The present Executive Councillors think that if they are able to carry on the administration anyhow, it will fulfil their purpose. Because they know they are irremovable, they take delight in such irresponsibility. If they have any conscience, if they have any sense of responsibility, if they have any regard for their duty, they would not wallow in it and stew in their juice as they are doing now. Sir, it is not only the political orators who make such charges against this Administration. Recently Dr. R. B. Pal, the Vice-Chancellor of the Calcutta University, in his Convocation Address two days ago, referring to the incidents as a result of students' demonstration and disturbances by students, said:

"The root of such tragic incidents seemed to be in the fact that those who were here entrusted with the task of maintaining peace and order were not troubled by any wholesome fear of public opinion. No storm of public indignation, however strong and weighty could in any way affect them."

In their indifference and in their complacency they think that nothing would touch them. That is the root cause of the evil; that is the cause of inefficiency in the administration; and that is the cause of corruption which cannot be eradicated. During the war there was corruption in other countries too, but they have adopted measures to eradicate this evil. It persists in this country because of the British administration and the British way of administration where people who are most rotten are employed in the various departments to run the Government. Here alone we can see this strange phenomenon of an executive, against whom daily the elected legislature passes motions of adjournment and censure, continuing to govern the country. We pass motions against them from day to day—motions of adjournment, Resolutions, and so on—but nothing is done. Their conscience does not seem to be troubled at all; we find them lolling about, yawning and discussing things with one another. What have they done in regard to the food and cloth situation? We have asked time and again that remunerative prices should be given to the cultivators. Have they done that? On the contrary, Mr. Sen would rise and say that it is the policy of Government not to encourage any high prices, etc. etc. And then, again, what is the situation in regard to political prisoners. They have bungled all through; I find the Executive Council is completely muddled up. In regard to the Indian National Army, the Victory celebrations, on-Indianization of administration branches of the Army, non-consultation and flouting of the opinion of this House in regard to the Bretton Woods affair, all these things show that irresponsibility even in the constitutional sense is rampant, and that is why inefficiency is given rise to. They become inefficient because they are not responsible to anyone; they are the stooges of the British Empire.

Mr. President: Order, order. The Honourable Member may resume his speech at 2-30. The House is adjourned now.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

[The Assembly re-assembled after lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock. Mr. President (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

Sri T. V. Satakopachari: How much more time have I got Sir?

Mr. President: The Honourable Member's time is five minutes more. He has spoken for ten minutes.

Sri T. V. Satakopachari: I feel, I wish, I had more minutes in which I could pack all the things I want to say and I wish I had the tongue of a Burke or a Sheridan to put the case clearly against corruption and how the present administration is responsible for it. The accusation against the public which one or the other Member of Government always brings forward when we talk of the inefficiency of this Government or the corruption in their ranks, is absolutely unfounded and wrong. These people do not know our country. I may just take the House back to history. When quite recently in the time of the Empire of Vijayanagar, Hiouen-Tsang from China and Pais and Nunez from the West, all foreigners, visited it, they spoke of our open market places with heaps of jewels, pearls and precious stones, with only boys to take care of them and to sell them to the people, the administration being so immensely pure, the people being so very honest and all that. That was the status of the Indian people in those years gone by. What is the present state now? You can callously sit back and accuse the people of being instruments accessible to bribery, jobbery and corruption. Who has produced that state of things? Isn't it these two centuries of British rule? I would remind the House that sometime ago when the English came here, and found a very rich empire, there was an enormous system of bribery and corruption introduced by them. The East India Company is responsible for all this here. Clive himself one of the expert technicians in this job was astonished and surprised at the amount of corruption that reigned supreme here when he came back to this country. Such is the state of things and this is the tradition that is being handed down. The arm of the law is long enough to put me into detention for being patriotic and trying to fight for my country's cause. The arm is strong enough to muzzle the press. It is strong enough to do so many wrong things. But if it pretends that it is not strong to put down corruption we can really put it down as a lie. (An Honourable Member: A white lie!) Yes, it is a white lie of the blackest thing that ever exists. So it is the lie of lies.

Sir Azizul Huque sometime ago spoke of the public being partly blamable for this state of affairs. What could a citizen do with all these Defence of India Rules, with all the officials armed with extraordinary powers. They can do what they like. An accusation is no easy job. You know how difficult it is to charge a man of bribery. But bribery and corruption exist. The Honourable the Home Member said that they have taken steps by passing some Ordinance in 1943 and in establishing an anti-corruption tribunal. I find in the demand for grants that instead of 16 officers they are increasing it to 21 officers and they are asking for nine months extra money. That is the state of the situation. Sometime ago Sir Archibald (I do not find him here) was Chairman of a Committee on the administration of Bengal. He found that corruption was rampant there. He suggested certain steps. Did this Government take those steps? He said that the penal laws should be stronger and the penalties should be heavier. Did they do these things? I would suggest that they take the people into confidence, that they take the non-officials into confidence, that they should establish tribunals consisting of them also and that they are encouraged to say the right things at the proper moment so that they can trace the cases.

Lastly, the Food Department was probably congratulating itself that its administration here at the Centre was pure and correct. I will first draw the attention of the House to an editorial in the "Hindustan Times" of last evening with the heading "Just a minute". Five hundred crawling American tractors had been ordered for our country in order to plough the waste lands in South India and the Deccan. There are millions of acres of waste lands which can be brought under the plough. You have to bring water and you have to tear up the soil. That is all. All the tractors from America would have done the job. Five hundred tractors were ordered: only two hundred have arrived. But you cannot use them. Do you know why? Because even if we had ordered the tractors from America, it appears that the accessories had to be supplied by Britain who would not let America supply the accessories, and our Government bowed low and said we will take accessories from you and not from America. And so these two hundred tractors are lying idle. Three hundred are still to come and we are nowhere. And the British people say they cannot supply accessories till September or so, and God alone knows when they can. I find this is what it states:

"It is not only the loss of the large quantity of foodgrains which the waste lands could have produced which is grievous. What is perhaps more galling is the prevailing short-sightedness and utter incompetence in high official quarters."

I charge this Government this Executive Council with incompetence, inefficiency amounting to imbecility. I charge the subordinates with corruption. Mr. Gwilt felt that he could not say anything in the Standing Finance Committee. Yes, we could not say many things in the Finance Committee. I want to take the privilege in this House and say this truth, that you are responsible for the corruption in your Department. You cannot shift the moral responsibility on them and escape Scot free.

Sir Azizul Huque also said that the capitalists did not want capital goods in this country because they were not sure when the war would end and whether they would be losing profits. I ask him, Sir, Why did you go to the capitalists. If you are really as you boast of yourself a strong Government maintaining law and order, if you want these industries to prosper, why did you not take the matter in your hands and get the capital goods into this country. I find in the memorandum and in the speech of the Honourable the Finance Member that it will not be possible to get capital goods, because the countries which have to supply the capital goods have to fulfil the requirements of their own country first. The home country has to be satisfied first. That was the argument advanced by the Honourable the Finance Member. The Honourable the Commerce Member said that other countries had placed their orders first and hence they got priority. We did not place our orders early and so we did not get the machinery. I do not know which is the truth. This is the state of things, Sir, and therefore I support the cut motion of my Honourable friend Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai and request that it be adopted by the House.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I rise to support the cut motion moved by my Honourable friend Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai. The scope of the motion is so wide that it covers the entire field of administration. The first item is the irresponsibility of this Government. This Government is constituted under the Act of 1919 and more than 25 years have passed. The world has changed and two wars have intervened between these two points of time but this Government has not changed. Thrones have been thrown out and Dukes have become cooks but Col. Blimps and Benthalls remain for ever! Sir, I know that when we charge them with irresponsibility it is not the constitutional aspect of irresponsibility that we mean, because if we were to emphasise that I know they will point out the Act under which they are in existence: nor do I charge them with a legal irresponsibility. What I submit is that they are morally irresponsible. It is not the Act so much but it is the spirit with it is worked that really counts. It is no mere platitude to say that whatever may be the letter of the law it is the spirit that ultimately determines the course that the people have to follow when they are under a particular regime. The main characteristic of this Government is that primarily it is a Police Government. It is a police state which is merely concerned with law and order and when it tries to be modern in the sense of doing some public service, every step that it takes is bound up with inefficiency corruption and incompetence.

As I said, the field that this cut motion covers is so wide that it is impossible to do it full justice. But a few departments may be selected for criticism.

The first duty of a modern state is protection. In this matter this country has suffered more than any other country for two reasons. One reason is that this country is not the master of its own foreign policy. Its foreign policy is dictated by England and England has no friend and India has no enemy. And yet it is this country that has suffered more in point of men, money and material than England herself. Some people may take exception to this. If you remember the stakes involved in this war, the stakes of England and the stakes of this country, I am sure you will agree that what I have said is absolutely correct. In the field of education, in the field of commerce, in the field of industry, whatever department one may take and if we apply the test of good government no man, howsoever partial he may be, will pronounce this Government as being up to standard. The Chinese philosopher, Confucius, was once asked by the King to define what was a good government and the philosopher replied, "If there is sufficiency of food and clothing, if there is sufficiency of protection and, if there is faith that justice will be done, then that is a good government." Take the first thing. Is there sufficiency of food? This is called the richest land, where rivers are everlastingly flowing, forests are ever green, the bowels of the earth are full of rich minerals. An English economist described this country as a rich country with a poor people and, I only add, a perverse Government.

Sir, in so far as food is concerned, whether in the matter of production, procurement or distribution, I cannot accuse this Government of efficiency at all. Even today when the country is faced with a terrible famine, cultivators are sowing money crops and no steps are being taken to prevent them from doing that either by offering a remunerative price for foodcrops or in other ways. In the matter of procurement, if one were to visit villages, where the levy system is in vogue, you hear of nothing but police soolum. Every petty village officer enters the house of the villager under the pretext of collecting the levy and leaves nothing to the poor agriculturist. It is all right for one of my friends from Bombay to say that the policy has worked very well in Bombay. I had no opportunity to contradict him then. His experience is confined only to Bombay. In the cities where labour predominates, where labour is organised, where you have half a dozen morning papers and half a dozen evening papers, they get the ear of the Government. People in the cities are more or less organised but in the countryside there is no organisation. Only last week I was touring in Nagar district which is a famine district. For three years out of five years there is famine in Nagar. The poverty there is absolute. One of the high English officials once stated to me that all that we talk about Indian poverty is not correct: it is only relative. I asked him to visit certain tracts in Nagar, in Sholapur and Poona districts and when he returned he agreed that, at any rate, in these tracts the poverty was absolute. A month and a half ago famine was declared in these areas but famine works have not begun. Prices of controlled articles have risen and people are migrating. I regret to say that parents are leaving their children behind because they cannot feed them. I was present in a gathering of thousands of peasants. I could see the indignation in their eyes. This is true everywhere. The atmosphere is tense and one word from any one of us would result in a situation which no government, howsoever strong, will be able to cope with. What is the policy with regard to distribution? A new department is created;—people who know nothing about the food have become rationing officers. They sit in their rooms and decide. They do not know the normal diet of the people: those who eat rice are asked to eat wheat and schools have been opened to teach them how to prepare cakes. That is with respect to food.

Take every other department, particularly where the control system obtains. A man who had nothing to do with a particular business is given a monopoly of that business. A man who cannot distinguish between a pillar and a post suddenly becomes a building contractor. A man who does not know how to deal with cotton—whether to weigh it or measure it—becomes 'A' license holder. A man who does not know about the trade suddenly gets a license, although the policy of the Government is not to disturb normal trade channels. Why is this done? Is it efficiency or corruption? The Honourable Home Member said that the government servants are not a special or privileged caste. He thereby hinted that the whole of the community was responsible for it. It hurt me. I want to say in all humility, that the corruption that we are witnessing today and in the course of the last six years, is so great that an old man of 80 told me at Nagar that in the course of his long life he had not seen a situation like this. How does it occur? A needy citizen and a greedy merchant are the two persons who are responsible for it. A man who wants to attend the funeral of his father or the marriage of his daughter or the sick bed of his friend must have a ticket, and he must pay. I have paid four annas more for a Bombay ticket. (An Honourable Member: You got off cheap!) and the greedy merchant in order to pocket his profit—I have no soft corner in my heart for him—but who is responsible for this? It is this very system of government. You cannot, like Viswamitra, disown this child and say "No, no; it is not mine; it is yours"; because you are inefficient, because you have created conditions in which one cannot get anything except through corruption, you cannot fasten the blame on the community.

Shri Sri Prakasa (Benares and Gorakhpur Division: Non-Muhammadian Rural): Viswamitra was caught: they are not!

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: I ask the Honourable the Home Member, has he no control over the government servants under him? Has he no standard of conduct for him? I will quote the words of an eminent English high official who said "the marks of an ideal public servant are integrity, industry and anonymity." So far as anonymity is concerned, they have opened the Public Information Department, the Publicity Department; and it was only through a mistake that a part of that department escaped yesterday: in fact that was the greatest culprit. However, so far as anonymity is concerned, I cannot accuse them of it. Every official is now calling a press conference, whether he is a Talati—Honourable the Finance Member says 'no' I will make an exception in his case—that only proves the rule—even from the Talati every official is becoming press conference-minded. As regards integrity less said the better. As regards industry there has been great increase in the number of officials and subordinates; and if an inquiry is instituted, I am sure you will find that the average official today works less than he used to do before the war started.

I go further. As regards the second test, sufficiency of protection, how many riots have taken place in the course of the last six months? It is no good telling us that the hooligans are responsible and you are not. Mahatma Gandhi has accused us and has stated that we cannot plead moral alibi. But at the same time the Government cannot plead moral alibi. If they are responsible for peace and order, then if one life is lost, if one citizen suffers, the blame primarily is on the head of the Government.

Then the third test which the Chinese philosopher laid down—whether there is sufficient justice done. As between man and man I may confess that some justice is done; but between the individual and the state, there is no justice. What would in other countries be termed as a high patriotic act would be high treason here. Imagine that Indians fighting for freedom, whether violently or non-violently, are rebels. It is like this: if a thief takes away my watch and I try to get it back, if I have the strength, by violence, and if not by persuasion, is that theft on my part? If my freedom is taken away by fraud or force and if I try to get it back, am I to be considered a rebel? This is a novel thing.

The Honourable Home Member said that the whole community is to be blamed. Am I to blame the whole of England for the misdeeds of you few? It would be wrong. I would have read history to no purpose if I were to say that. No community as such can be condemned. You cannot indict a whole nation. But that does not mean that I should not point out the moral responsibility of the individual; and that is exactly the purpose which has prompted me to participate in this debate. The British connection here has been a great tragedy. It has been bad while you ruled and lived. Now, when you are about to go, let it be said that your last act was good and noble. Sir, I support the motion.

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari (Member for Information and Arts and Planning and Development): Sir, I rise to answer that part of the cut motion which relates to planning and development policy. In his remarks the Mover confined himself to the alleged failure of the Government to procure for Indian industrialists the capital goods they wanted; and coming as he does from Ahmedabad, I imagine that his reference was more specially to the lack of capital equipment in the cotton textile industry. Sir, I would like to explain that in October 1943, before the establishment of the Planning and Development Department—a point to which my friend Sir Azizul Huque has referred, but I will give you a few further facts—a letter was addressed to all the appropriate chambers of commerce and industry, asking them as follows:

"I am therefore to request you in the interests of the industry to communicate to the Government of India without delay the industry's or your requirements of capital goods for delivery during a period of say two years after the end of the war for (a) replacement of worn out machinery and (b) normal development of the industry."

As Sir Azizul Huque, pointed out, the reply to this communication was not at all satisfactory except in the case of the textile industry. I am not blaming the various industries at that time for not having sent more extensive replies. We were then in a rather critical period of the war and the industries were fully engaged in churning out war orders and I do not blame them, for they could not sit down with their depleted staffs to work out plans of post-war reconstruction; but while I do not blame the industry, the blame should also not rest on Government. We gave them such a picture as we then could and asked them to provide the information. I am glad to say that so far as the cotton textile industry was concerned we had by that time constituted the Cotton Textile Control Board and through their help we were able to give the United Kingdom a rough idea of the capital goods which the industry might require. We gave fairly full details and the total bill came to 37 crores. I do not think therefore that Government could be blamed for not having taken as early action as they could in letting known the wants of our industrialists to the United Kingdom.

Then we come to the period of the starting of the Planning and Development Department under Sir Ardeshir Dalal. This was the picture he found—very little response from the industrialists as to what were their capital requirements—the only industry about which he was able to say anything was the textile industry. In order to get a move on, he did two things. He constituted about 26 panels. Under each panel various industries were grouped. These panels were composed of experts businessmen and so on. They were given definite targets as to what was necessary to be done. For example, in the case of Cotton textiles, the target was that the production had to be increased from 5 thousand million yards to seven thousand two hundred million yards. At the same time with the encouragement of His Excellency the present Viceroy we approached the great Indian industrialists and said to them—if you want to go to Europe and America to survey conditions there and look for possibilities for obtaining capital goods or machinery required for starting new industries we will give you the necessary facilities. That was in 1944. The industrialists did not go till some time in the middle of 1945. We also sent a delegation of Indian industrialists to Australia and the reason was that we felt that Australia was a country which in its industrial development had to overcome some of the difficulties which face our own country. So, we sent a different team of industrialists there. Though the war was still on and it was difficult to obtain passages, we also gave facilities for travel to the United Kingdom and to the United States to any serious minded industrialist who wanted to go and negotiate either for the purchase of machinery or for getting technical expert advice in respect of any new schemes which he had. Therefore I do not think that you can blame Government for not having taken as early steps as we possibly could to help Indian industry in the matter of the procurement of capital goods to the greatest extent. My Honourable friend has quoted the example of Russia but Russia in 1928, and India in the middle of a war in 1943-46, are two quite different propositions. Russia had no lack of experienced man power and they were at peace. We were at war and we did not have sufficient man power. Another important consideration is that Russia, when it started on its five year plans had a strong dictatorship which was able to make its will felt over all sections of the people. I do not think it is a correct analogy to compare Russia of 1928 and India during the last three years of war. I think, Sir, I have said enough on this point.

Now, on the general question of the policy of the Planning and Development Department, Sir Ardeshir Dalal soon after he left issued a statement which was widely published in the Press surveying what had been done under his leadership during the 18 months when he was in office. I think anybody who knew, as I know, the difficulties under which he worked will realise that he, assisted by the Departments of the Government of India and, if I may say so the Finance Department, did an extremely good piece of work. I am not going to take up the time of the House on it, because the whole thing is in print and I can let Honourable Members have a copy of Sir Ardeshir Dalal's statement as to what had been done during the 18 months that he was in office. (An Honourable Member: Why did he go out?) That point does not arise. I think, when you have read it, you will consider it a very creditable achievement.

I now take up the story after the time Sir Ardeshir Dalal left a few weeks ago and my own responsibility began. I found that a great number of the panels had reported or were on the point of reporting their conclusions. And the action we have taken is to hurry up the work, present the reports to Government and get the Government decisions on them. I hope that it may be possible to finish this work by the end of next month. I would remind the House that in answer to a question the other day or in answer to a speech of my Honourable friend Mr. Griffiths, I revealed that we were now taking action in the matter of fixing priorities as between the various schemes of development; so that the Central Departments as well as Provincial Governments would know how much money would be available from the Central for the various schemes under the different headings: Health, Agriculture and so on. I hope that this work will soon be concluded, so that when our successors come into office they will find, I hope, the plans going forward with the money earmarked for them. Of course, these will be five-year plans and all the money will not be given in the first year, so that our successors will, in consultation with the then Provincial Governments, be able to alter the decisions in this or that respect either from experience or because of changes in policy.

I do not think I need say much more. Please remember that the planning and development policy of this Government has been fashioned in concert with industrialists and public men. They are serving on most of our panels. It is not a policy evolved in parlours of the Secretariat, but it is something which has been fashioned by a man who is a great industrialist himself and in consultation with those available and best suited to advise in this connection. Sir, I have nothing more to say.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: May I, Sir, ask a question or two from the Honourable Member? I quite realise that Sir Akbar is in charge of this Department only for the last two months. In the second part of their report, the Re-Construction Committee have said that they have no data about their own Ordnance factories.

Mr. President: What is the question which the Honourable Member wants to ask?

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: The Honourable Member said that the industrialists did not give him the data and I was saying that he has not got the data of his own factories.

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: I can explain that in a minute, Sir. In the first place, I do not complain about the textile industry; I rather praised them. It is one of the three industries which really did give us the data. But on the point about ordnance factories, the reference in the report is to this. At the time the report was written, it was not known what would be the strength of the army in peace time. How much of the production of the ordnance factories would be necessary to continue making munitions of war? What ordnance factories, if any, could be set free for turning over to civil production and so on? That was the reference and not anything else. We had the technical data, but at the time when that report was written, we had no knowledge or at least we had no decisions as to what the strength of the army in peace time would be and therefore what would be the load from the army side on these ordnance factories.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Guntur cum Nellore: Non-Muhammadan Rural): How is it that no adequate care was taken to consult either the agricultural interests or the artisans, that is, cottage industry of the people? You suggested at the time of the Standing Finance Committee that a special panel should be constituted for cottage industries, but nothing has been done. I would like to have some information on that.

Mr. President: If it is within the province of the Honourable Member, he may give the information.

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi (Calcutta and Suburbs: Muhammadan Urban): I rise to a point of order, Sir. Is this within the rules of debate that after the speaker has uttered his utterance of the day, we can go on cross-examining him?

Mr. President: We do not cross-examine at all. If there is any cross-examination, it will be done outside this House. But if questions are asked to elicit information for the benefit of the House, I do not think there should be any serious objection to them.

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: Sir, data are being collected for the following cottage industries: paper making, calico printing, Gur marking, basket making, coir manufacture, metal industries, pottery, sericulture and silk-weaving, gold-thread industry, carpet making, cotton ginning, tobacco and tanning industries. It is very difficult these days to get together bodies of people for constituting all sorts of panels. As I said before, there are 26 panels already and the data for many of these cottage industries are being collected. Once the data are collected, the Government of the time can constitute a panel or a Committee to take steps to see how that particular cottage industry can be encouraged.

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: Mr. President, Sir, I will request you to extend to me your generosity because this cut motion is a bit of a jumble, where many problems have been mixed up together and it is difficult to concentrate on any single point connected with them. The word "irresponsibility" naturally leads one to imagine that the Honourable Mover had perhaps forgotten that the Government of the day is not a responsible government. Every action that comes from that quarter must have in it, if not full irresponsibility, at least a tinge of it, and, therefore, until we have changed it or until they have decided to change it themselves, we have got to be prepared to receive it with an element of irresponsibility attached to it. 'Inefficiency and corruption' are the other two aspects of the problem on which the Honourable Mover wishes to condemn the Government. We are all labouring under a terrible difficulty today. After six years of war in which things had to be done—never mind, whether the law permitted it or not—and the mentality which insisted that the war had to be won—law or no law—we cannot yet sit down in judgment and we cannot yet say, "You are wrong here and you are wrong there". The turn over from the war to a normal peace administration would be a difficult process and I think I will have to wait a bit longer to give that judgment until, if the prophecies that I hear are correct, we occupy those benches. We shall then try and enforce our own ideals of administration and of public affairs and then see whether we can improve things to our advantage. We should not forget that the sole objective of the successors of the East India Company in this country is profit. The methods of collecting the profits may have changed, but England is not here for our advantage. We are different and our interests are different from the interests of our rulers. It, therefore, appears to me to be a cry in the wilderness to expect the leopard to change its spots. The best thing the leopard can do, I hope it will be soon, is to go back home and leave things here alone. The third aspect is corruption. I have heard of it for many years past, but I entirely agree with the Honourable the Home Member when he says that there should be two parties to corruption. The word for corruption in the Bengali language, and particularly in Calcutta, is ghoos, and in one of my speeches, I had said that like mercy, the quality of ghoos is not strained; it blesseth him that takes and it blesseth him that gives. I entirely agree with him and as an Indian I feel ashamed to state that we the public have not established any higher standards, as regards the methods of corruption. By that I do not mean that the Indian habit is any different from any other in the world, but then there must be two sides to it. War has killed humanity, but war has killed morality also. The liaison between officials and the commercial world was something that made one's heart bleed. The money that passed from one side to the other was to be counted not in lakhs but sometimes in crores and the wastage which helped them to find new supplies added to the cost. Had the officials at the Centre not been obsessed with the idea of defeating Japan, they would perhaps have looked at this aspect of the matter also, but they did not care. They allowed things to go from bad to worse, and the result is that we shall have to suffer this burden whether in the shape of increased expenditure in India or Sterling Balances outside India, for generations to come. I feel that if the men in Delhi had been a bit more careful, corruption in their own services and corruption to which we as members of the public were party, could have been crushed.

As regards planning and development, we heard the Honourable Member in charge tell us many things and he gave us lists of things for which panels had been appointed. Sir, here I think we can take the Government of India to task in a firmer manner. You will remember, Sir, that the predecessor of our present Governor General changed three Honourable Members for the Food Department at a time when Bengal was suffering. I do not know why the Honourable Sir Ardeshir Dalal came into the Governor General's Council, and if he had come, he had no business to go away at a time when we needed his experience and his great knowledge of industries most. To change horse in midstream is dangerous and I am surprised that the Governor General allowed Sir Ardeshir Dalal to go away, and what is more surprising is that Sir Ardeshir Dalal thought it fit and wise to go away at a time when we needed his expert knowledge. I do not know how long the present Honourable Member will remain as Member in charge of this Department. If he goes away, then we shall have number 3, and when No. 3 goes away, we shall have perhaps, a change in the constitution. Very valuable time will have been lost and we shall be left behind. That, Sir, may explain the conspiracy between the capitalists of India and the capitalists of England and may I add that the remover of the Excess Profits Tax in this House has joined hands to allow the Indian capitalists to import English manufactured goods by giving them more money. The whole thing, as I look at it, and if I am wrong I should like to be corrected, is to let India remain where it is. These people can afford to die like flies. Let us see how much of our heavy goods and manufactured things can be sold, and let them buy what they can. We are here to manipulate Indian finances, and we shall see to it that we do not suffer.

Another thing of which he read in the list was cottage industries. We need not follow the lines of progress in post-war period as they have laid them down in America or Great Britain. Our conditions are different, and we have got to evolve a system of industries large or small or medium and to arrange things in such a way that we get the utmost advantage out of it. You will agree with me, Sir, that the English mind cannot go beyond a few miles of the sea coast, and the result is, Bombay and Ahmedabad on the one side, and Calcutta and the territory round about it are supposed to be the only industrialised areas. Agriculturists who cannot find enough to eat have to be given industries and in the map of distribution of industries they have left out large tracts and millions of people untouched by the industrial regeneration which they are thinking of. That, Sir, is not going to bring any good to the country. Industries have to be distributed in such a way that every section of the people and every area, wherever raw products are available, gets equal benefit.

Sir, I shall have finished in a minute more. The Honourable the Home Member said he had nothing to do with Baluchistan, if I understood him aright. He restricted his remarks to Delhi, Coorg and Ajmer-Merwara. But, Sir similar difficulties arose in connection with the Frontier Province, non-regulation areas as they were called, previously. I do not see why the people in Baluchistan should be relegated to the uncivilised sections of India. They are as educated, they are economically as good as any other sections of India. The Government of India should now consider whether Baluchistan should be raised to the status, say of Sind or the Frontier Province. Why should the people there suffer? He said to us that this matter may be taken up by the Constitution-Making Body. Yes, I admit that, but I am not one of those hopeful ones who think that by the pressing of an electric button by Lord Pethwick Lawrence or his two companions we are going to become an independent republic or a dominion overnight. A friend of mine was saying that the liquidation of commercial houses takes four and five years and in one case it took almost forty years; the liquidation of the British Empire in India may take longer. We may be able to control the destinies of some of the Departments here but whoever comes and sits there by May or June next or whoever sits there in May or June 1947, to him my request is that plans should be started immediately, and where injustices prevail they should be removed, whether by the present Government or those who succeed it. And therefore in spite of the jumble that I find in this motion I feel that there is room for considerable improvement even before we come into our own and Lord Pethwick Lawrence like a fairy godmother waves his wand and the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition becomes the Honourable Leader of the House.

Shri Sarat Chandra Bose (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, within the short space of a few minutes allowed to me it is quite impossible to deal with all the grounds on which this censure motion is based, and I shall not attempt to do so. I shall only take up the first ground and that is the irresponsibility of the Executive Council, their inefficiency and corruption in their administration. Sir, it is unnecessary to dilate at length on the inefficiency of the Executive Council or the corruption in their administration. What we find all over the country today—and we have been finding almost the same state of affairs since the year 1942—are scarcity of cloth, scarcity of food, deprivation of the ordinary necessities of life, inflation to an extent almost undreamt of, accumulation of sterling balances still further accumulating day after day, want of a proper planning and development policy, and in consequence of all these, untold misery throughout the length and breadth of the land; all these are sufficient to convict the Executive Council of inefficiency and their administration of corruption. The Honourable the Home Member earlier this afternoon practically admitted that there was corruption in the administration. He could not very well deny it, because the whole administration reeks of it; but he put forward some sort of excuse or justification by laying the responsibility on the communities inhabiting this country of ours.

Sir, the Honourable the Home Member has tossed the ball across the net to this side of the House, and I am confident I shall be able to return it with redoubled vigour. In reply to him I shall say, that the communities inhabiting this vast country of ours have a higher sense of honour, a better standard of honesty and rectitude, a nobler standard of public and private morality than what has been imported into this country by members of the ruling race.

I shall now come to the question of the irresponsibility of the Executive Council. I do not mean, and this side of the House does not mean, irresponsibility in the sense in which it was used by my Honourable friend Mr. Siddiqi. In using the word 'irresponsibility' we were not thinking of legal or constitutional irresponsibility; we were thinking of the irresponsibility of the Executive Council which has brought into being an even more irresponsible police raj in this country. We were thinking of the irresponsible police raj in this country which has established itself under the patronage and with the blessings of the Executive Council of the Government of India,—established itself by terror and is maintaining itself by terror. You walk along the highways and you find the myrmidons of the police and C. I. D. round the corner or following your footsteps; you sit in the privacy of your home and you find their eyes peeping through keyholes or through doors and windows. You sit confined in jails and detention camps and you find them eavesdropping in order to catch every word that is falling from your lips or from the lips of your companions. And it is this irresponsible police raj which exists and flourishes under the patronage of Honourable Members opposite which has set up in many places—more numerous than I can mention—dark dungeons and torture chambers, the worst of which are in the Delhi and Lahore forts, dark dungeons and torture chambers where men like Sardar Sardul Singh Caveeshar, Jai Prakash Narain, Ram Manohar Lohia, Lala Shankar Lal of Delhi, Dwijendra Nath Bose, Sisir Kumar Bose, Satya Ranjan Bakshi, Niranjana Singh Talib and hundreds of others were subjected to third degree methods day after day, week after week, month after month. That is what we mean when we use the words 'irresponsibility of the Executive Council'.

Sir, I have heard many Members sitting on Benches opposite talk during the last few weeks of the coming change of power. I am disposed at the moment to treat all that as loose, irresponsible talk. While they talk of the coming change of power, the recruitment to the I.C.S. and the I.P.S. goes on. Verily, verily, it is a coming change of power of a kind unknown in the history of any other country.

Now, Sir, this irresponsible police raj which, I repeat, has been flourishing under the patronage of Members on the Benches opposite,—has been spreading its tentacles over every Department of the administration. And to illustrate what I mean, I shall read to the House a recent letter written by one Major-General B. P. T. O'Brien, who signs himself as Director of Intelligence. The terms of the letter will satisfy you and the House that, whether it is the Naval Services, or the Army Services, or the Air Services or the Civil Services, the irresponsible and the irrepressible Police is there and must be there. This is what Major-General O'Brien says in a letter, the date of which is, I believe, the 18th of February 1946, if my copy is correct. Says the Gallant Major-General:

"It has been decided to introduce a common policy regarding verification and (when necessary) disciplinary procedure in the case of service personnel in the Naval, Army and Air Services in the India Command and for civilian employment therein, on whom the Police report that they have previously participated in subversive or anti-Government activities."

"An Indian known to have taken part in subversive or illegal anti-Government activities will normally be recommended for rejection provided that in the interval he has not given positive evidence of change of attitude. . . ."

[Shri Sarat Chandra Bose]

That means, evidence of a slave mentality. Now comes the Neo-Mosaic Law, if I may so describe it:

"If a report indicates that there is nothing known against the applicant himself, but he is closely related or connected with persons who have taken part in subversive or anti-Government activities, the case will be examined on merits. A recommendation for rejection would normally be made if there is reason to believe that the applicant has himself become tainted with the views of his relatives or close friends."

So the Police is omniscient; the Police is omnipresent; and the Police reports are sacrosanct. Now comes the next paragraph:

"Should an adverse report on a sailor or airman, (which terms include officers) be received after enlistment owing to faulty Police verification or other causes, the case will be judged on its merits. If his services are satisfactory, he is to be placed under special observation in accordance with the Security instructions in force in the Service concerned."

That, I hope satisfies the House that, apart from the normal rules of the Services, there are some Security instructions in force which are to be followed or, shall I say to be operated upon by the Police section of it. The paragraph proceeds:

"Should the man, while under observation, be found to be attempting to convert his comrades, form a cell or to be otherwise attempting activity to assist his party, disciplinary action is to be taken in the normal way and full details reported to the Security Staff of the man's Service immediately."

Now comes the fifth paragraph:

"When a person in Service employed is dismissed as the result of an adverse Police report or of subsequent political activities not because of incompetency or inefficiency, or irresponsibility for the matter of that, but because of an adverse police report—

"or of subsequent political activities, the following are to be informed by the man's Commanding Officer, as early as possible and at the latest on the day that the man is discharged or dismissed:

- (i) The Superintendent of Police of the individual's home district.
- (ii) The Superintendent of Police in whose district the individual's unit is located.
- (iii) In the case of Naval and Air Force personnel the Security Staffs at N. H. Q. and A. H. Q. respectively; in the case of Army personnel, H. Q. Command through such channels as they may direct. This conforms with the normal procedure on discharge of undesirables already laid down in G. H. Q. letter to H. Qs. Commands Number so and so dated so and so."

Sir, I started by saying that this irresponsible and irrepressible Police raj is one of the gifts to this country by Members of the Executive Council who sit opposite. That is not all. We have been told recently many a time by some Members on the Treasury Benches and also by one or two of their Secretaries sitting behind them that everything is being done for the release of I.N.A. officers and men and for the repatriation of I.N.A. officers and men, or I.N.A. civilian personnel in Burma. May I read to the House two letters in this connection copies of which have reached my hands? They are quite recent too: one is dated the 5th of February 1946, and the other is dated 12th February 1946. They will show that the irresponsibility of Members opposite and of their statements in this House have no limits whatever. The letter of the 5th of February 1946, which purports to be written by a gentleman who signs himself as General Officer Commanding-in-Chief, Eastern Command, and is written from Calcutta on the 5th of February last to the Chief of the General Staff, G.H.Q., New Delhi, is as follows:

"Subject :—I.N.A.—Lieut.-Col. A. C. Chatterjee, I.M.S.,

This H. Q. is concerned at the probable return to Bengal in the near future of Lt.-Col. A. C. Chatterjee, I.M.S. This officer had very considerable influence in this province, and apart from his official status as Director of Public Health in Bengal before the war and his personal contacts with leaders of political strife, was appointed by Subhas Bose as the Governor-Designate of the Liberated Countries. Had Bengal been invaded and captured, he would have been Governor of Bengal. This alone would give him, popular support second only to Subhas Chandra himself.

2. His return at this juncture would revive the excitement and enthusiasm in the I.N.A., which at present is showing a tendency to switch to other forms of political propaganda such as cloth shortage, famine, release of political prisoners and detenus and even defence of the Maharaja of Rewa.

3. It is understood that the Intelligence Branch (C.I.D.) Bengal.—of course, Intelligence Branches are supposed to have a monopoly of all intelligence—

"It is understood that the Intelligence Branch (C.I.D.) Bengal may petition the Government of Bengal to pass orders for the detention under Regulation III of Lt.-Col. Chatterjee on his release."

As the House is aware, Regulation III of 1918 has come in handy in the past and will also come in handy in the future in spite of the statements and utterances of Members opposite. They will say one thing here, and, of course, their Police and C.I.D., who thrive under their patronage, will do quite a different thing elsewhere.

"As it is not known what the reaction of the Government of Bengal will be to such a request the holding of this officer for two, or three months in military custody would tide over a difficult period, at the end of which it is hoped, the popularity of the I. N. A. will have been further reduced."

The fourth paragraph reads:

"It is suggested therefore that Lt.-Col. Chatterjee should be kept in military custody outside India or failing that in custody in India outside this Command for as long as possible and at any rate till at least one month after the provincial elections in Bengal. In Bengal these are being held at the end of March."

What becomes of the statement which has been made time and again on the floor of this House by Members opposite that in the case of those officers against whom no charge of atrocity or brutality is made or can be made, steps are being taken for their early release? This letter shows, Sir, quite clearly that the ground put forward is not that of fighting the British in another place, but because he is considered to be popular in this country and therefore Regulation III of 1918 must be applied to him.

Now, Sir, the last letter which I desire to place before the House is dated the 12th February, 1946. It is addressed by a gentleman who signs for Chief of the General Staff, from General Headquarters, India, New Delhi, to Headquarters, Allied Land Forces, SEA:

"Subject :—Screening of Indian Immigrants.

2. The Government of India's views on the principles governing the repatriation of Indian civilians were communicated to H.Q. SACSEA, last October. You have presumably received instructions accordingly from the latter.

3. Briefly, these views are that individuals reasonably suspected or confirmed to have collaborated with the enemy during the occupation would be better outside India for the present and should be given no official assistance to return; but their eventual return under their own arrangements will not be resisted except in the case of a few individuals."

Sir, we had responsible statements made on the floor of the House not very long ago that persons, against whom the only charge was of having collaborated with the enemy, would find no difficulty in obtaining their release within a short time. But this solemn document says that individuals reasonably suspected or confirmed to have collaborated with the enemy during the occupation would be better outside India.

"The latter's names are contained."

that is, the names of the few individuals whose return must be resisted by the Government of India.

Mr. P. Mason (Government of India: Nominated Official): Whom is this letter from?

Shri Sarat Chandra Bose: From Chief of the General Staff, General Headquarters, India, General Staff Branch, New Delhi, dated the 12th February 1946.

"The latter's names are contained in a 'short list' which is about to be sent to SACSEA by the Government of India. . . ."

I suppose that means Members opposite:

"in the Home Department with the request that their return should be impeded until further notice on grounds of internal security in India."

Not that their repatriation and release was to be accelerated but their repatriation was to be impeded under the instructions of the Home Department of the Government of India. (Honourable Members on Congress Benches: "Shame, shame"!).

"Non-suspects may return at any time, and there is no objection to their being repatriated under Government auspices.

4. Prior warning of the arrival of suspects, with all available information about their cases should be sent to the Provincial Governments concerned in India and to the Central Government.

5. It is presumed that the problem of Indian civilians wishing to return to India is being handled in accordance with these principles. . . . — and not in accordance with the principles laid down so honourably either by the Honourable the Home Member or by the War Secretary—

" and if so this answers para. 6(a) of No. 4 F. I. U.'s letter. Presumably, India will be informed of all persons on the 'short list' to whom facilities to retain to India are refused"

(At this stage Mr. P. Mason made attempts to interrupt).

I am not giving way as my time will be up.

"Presumably, India will be informed of all persons on the 'short list' to whom facilities to return to India are refused. Please note that all information and references on the subject of Indian civilian repatriation should be addressed to the Government of India in the Home Department. . . . — and Sir, the words that follow are important:

"(and also, if considered, desirable, to the Director, Intelligence Bureau, Home Department, Government of India), and not to G.H.Q."

That, I believe, is the officer who is responsible for the treatment of Government of India prisoners in the dark dungeons and torture cells in the Delhi Fort and in the Lahore Fort.

My time is almost up and I shall not allow myself to detain the House unnecessarily. I have placed before the House three documents which convict the Government, which is represented in this House by Members of the Executive Council, of irresponsibility—I shall not, Sir, use the word dishonesty. I believe I have satisfied the House that the record of Members opposite is dark. It cannot be darker. In those circumstances I submit, on behalf of the Opposition, that I am right in saying that we do not owe Members of the Executive Council one farthing out of our revenues. We do not owe them our confidence. I am not sure that we owe them even the common courtesies of life.

Shri Satya Narayan Sinha (Darbhanga cum Saran: Non-Muhammadan): I move that the question be now put.

Mr. P. Mason: May I ask Sir, when am I supposed to have said anything on the subject of repatriation of civilians from Malaya with which he has charged me?

Mr. President: I think when he said the War Secretary he meant the Commonwealth Relations Secretary.

Diwan Chaman Lal (West Punjab: Non-Muhammadan): The army Secretary mentioned about the release of members of the I.N.A.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the question be now put"

subject of course to any remarks that the Leader of the House may wish to make.

Shri Satya Narayan Sinha: The Leader of the House must remember that the time will be up.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the question be now put."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. P. J. Griffiths (Assam: European): If he so wishes is he not entitled to talk the motion out?

Mr. President: I think he is entitled to do so but I will point out a technical difficulty. The motion is by the Honourable the Finance Member and the only person who has the right of reply will be the Finance Member.

Some Honourable Members (on Treasury Benches): It is a cut motion.

Mr. P. J. Griffiths: Any Member in possession of the House is entitled to take his full fifteen minutes.

Mr. President: The only point is when there is a closure then the right of reply from the Member, if he has any, should be allowed. That is how I understand the rule. But as time is short, I will not argue or discuss the matter further. I will keep it open. But I believe that as the original motion, that is the demand, is by the Honourable the Finance Member, and a cut motion is treated as an amendment to that, the only Member who has a right of reply will technically be, to my mind, the Honourable the Finance Member.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands (Finance Member): Then I will have to answer for every Department of Government.

Mr. President: Therefore the House will take into consideration another factor. Three Members of Government were given time, and the name of the fourth Member never came to me. Had it come to me earlier, I would have given him time. But under the circumstances, it would be unfair to the Party which wants that the question be put that further time should be given.

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall (Leader of the House): Sir, I understood that your ruling at the beginning of the debate was—that the Honourable the Mover of the motion should have 20 minutes, other Members 15 minutes and that the final and principal speaker of the Government should have 20 minutes or more. But it may help matters if I say that I have no desire

4. P. M. to thwart my friends opposite of a vote and that I do not propose to take more than a few minutes of the time.

In the earlier part of this debate I mentally congratulated Government, and indeed the House, on the temperate nature of the debate and I almost felt that the House was beginning at last to appreciate the Treasury Benches, if only for the fact that instead of being a total cut it was only a cut this year of Rs. 100.

Sir, we have been accused throughout the debate, not with any conviction I think, of various things—of incompetence, of inefficiency, of imbecility and of having a corrupt administration. Sir, we are well used to debating terms of that nature from the Benches opposite but I should like to take this opportunity of referring to the speech of the Leader of the Opposition, who finished up his remarks by drawing attention to the record of the Government. Sir, I maintain that over the most critical years that India has ever faced the record of the Government is something to be proud of Prof. N. G. Ranga: A very shameful thing.

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: . . . and I am glad to have this opportunity, the last opportunity I shall have on a debate of this sort in this House, to pay tribute to my colleagues and particularly to my Indian colleagues on the front Bench. My friend opposite, the Leader of the Opposition, has accused this Government of creating a scarcity of cloth and of food. If he keeps his eyes open the Honourable Member would have known that the scarcity of cloth, of food and all such things is a worldwide scarcity, for which this Government can be no more blamed than the Government of any other country. He accuses this Government of accumulating sterling balances, but he ought to give credit to this Government for accumulating the balances, when most other governments have accumulated deficits. I should like to ask my friends Opposite what is the record of this Government and how does it compare with the record of others? Who won the war? Was it the Congress or the Treasury Benches?

Prof. N. G. Ranga: You lost the war.

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Who has carried the burden?

Prof. N. G. Ranga: We carried the burden.

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Who has carried the burden all throughout these most difficult years. (Interruptions). The Honourable Members opposite, Sir, are petulant . . . I had better not say more. I maintain, Sir, that this Government during the last four or five years have carried the burden of the most difficult times that India has ever faced. This Government, my Honourable Indian colleagues especially, have kept their courage throughout the darkest days and in 1942, and thereabouts they were extremely dark, with the Japanese threatening the country on one side and the Germans from the other. They stood firm and did the country well at a time when other people were stabbing the soldiers in the back and were prepared that the Hindustan of the future should be a Japanistan.

Then, Sir, it is this Government and its predecessors, and particularly my Indian colleagues who have made self-government possible, the self-government of India and but for what they have done and stood up to in the last few years, the future that we are all looking forward to would not have been possible.

It has been said, at times very frequently, that this Government lacks support. Throughout the war the men have come forward in all the hundreds of thousands that have been necessary to win this war. The simple soldiers have come from their villages trusting in the Government and its cause. The simple industrialist or the merchant has put up the funds necessary to win the war and has rushed forward to take the contracts which have been offered. This Government has throughout the war carried the confidence of the country sufficiently to enable it to take a prominent part in defeating the two most powerful enemies that have ever faced this world.

In the dark days I have been a tremendous admirer of my colleagues' stout heartedness. They have had to face criticism and insults of every kind from their own people and I know from personal experience how difficult it is to stand up against one's own people, when one believes a thing to be for the good of the country. But I am glad to take this opportunity to say that I consider that my colleagues on the front Benches—not only those who are here now but also some of those who have fallen by the wayside during the course of the war—have shown a very great degree of moral courage in the face not only of the enemy but also of criticism from parties in this country. At the present moment the Government is in a particularly difficult position trying to maintain an active administration, at a time when we are also doing our best to prepare the ground for handing over to another administration and I have never admired my colleagues more than in the difficult times which they are facing now. The Leader of the House, whose position I am occupying temporarily, is abroad, where he is building up an international reputation not only for himself but also for the country from which he has gone. He has placed India on the map, high in the comity of nations, and has given whosoever succeeds him an opportunity to follow in his shoes. All my colleagues here are laying the foundations of a government by others who will step into their shoes—a government which (if we are to believe my friends opposite) will be free from zoolum, free from incompetence, free from inefficiency and where, I gather, there will be no police!

An Honourable Member: What about corruption?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Yes, free from corruption too. No Government that has been in power as long as this Government has, exactly expects appreciation but The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: We expect some courtesy.

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: As my Honourable colleague suggests, we do expect some courtesy. We can take courage. The Right Honourable Winston Churchill saw the country, the Commonwealth and India through the war and saved it for civilisation and democracy. This front Bench has done its smaller share in seeing this country through the war and making it possible for self-government or independence to come to this country. But as, my Honourable friend Mr. Siddiqi said, if I understood him right, this is not the time to judge the record of the present Government; we should look at it in the future in a cooler light. I maintain that when the record of this Government is looked at in a cooler light in the light of history, it will be recorded—I am not speaking for myself and my British colleagues but of my Indian friends—that they served their country well in her hour of danger. No man can wish for a verdict better than that. I am confident that that will be the verdict and I would remind my Honourable friends opposite that they have yet to earn anything of that nature.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the demand under the head 'Executive Council' be reduced by Rs. 100."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: There are only four minutes left. I wonder if the Congress Party cares to move their next cut motion. The demand has been moved already. Mr. Jaffer.

Paucity of Muslims in Officers and Ministerial Grades of Departments, Non-appointment of Muslims in Key Posts and Retrenchment of Muslims where they are less than 25 per cent.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer (Bombay Southern Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I move:

"That the demand under the head 'Executive Council' be reduced by Rs. 100."

We are well aware of the fact that we have the G.R. of 1934, of the Home Department, fixing 25 per cent. quota as the minimum share of the Muslims in the central services. The idea of reservation was that the minimum percentage should be reserved for under-represented minority communities. Over and above this reservation, they were allowed to compete for non-reserved vacancies. But the actual position is that Muslims have not even got their minimum share in the central services in this quota. The other day, the Home Member replying to my question admitted on the floor of the House that the quota of representation of Muslims in the central services was 20.6 per cent. which is about 5 per cent. less than that fixed by the G.R.

[Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer.]

[At this stage Mr. President vacated the Chair which was then occupied by Mr. Deputy President (Sir Mohammad Yamin Khan)].

In spite of the fact that we are below the required quota of 25 per cent. in the matter of retrenchment Muslims are being retrenched where retrenchment is not called for. I maintain and I insist that the quota of Muslims wherever they are short of the required percentage of 25 per cent, should be maintained and Muslims who have been employed during the course of this war whether in temporary or permanent appointments should not be retrenched, unless and until their quota of 25 per cent is reached. The causes of this trouble are very obvious. All the key posts in various Departments are held by non-Muslims, with the result that Muslims do not get fair play and justice. I should like to ask the Honourable the Home Member and the Honourable Indian Members to whom the Leader of the House has just paid a tribute, to tell us how many Muslims today are occupying posts of Secretaries to the Government of India. I would also like to know how many of them are additional Secretaries. I am sure the Honourable the Home Member will enlighten us on that subject in his reply. Can it also be denied that Muslims of equal standing and capacity to those who are holding these posts are not available? I should also like to know what is the proportion of Muslim Joint Secretaries to others. As far as I know there is only one Muslim as Joint Secretary in the Government of India at present.

Let me now take the lower rungs of service. What is the proportion of Muslim Assistant Secretaries and Superintendents in the Central Government services? I hope I shall get a reply on this point also. I suggest and I feel very strongly that it is very necessary that a detailed statement showing the representation of various communities in various grades of service in each Department should be supplied to Members of this House at the beginning of every budget session, as is done in some of the Provinces in India. We shall then watch the progress or deterioration of representation of Muslims and the minorities in the Central Services. I should also like that clear instructions should be issued that in filling vacancies reserved for war service candidates and in new posts that are being created as a result of expansion, the deficiencies in Muslim representation should be made up. My contention is that in every grade of Government service Muslims must get their due representation in the filling up of reserved vacancies and in new posts the deficiencies in the past must be made up by giving them higher representation till such time as they have got their due share in all grades of the Central Services. I have some suggestions to make.

I suggest that in each Department of the Government of India an officer not below the rank of Deputy Secretary should be made personally responsible to ensure that each community gets its due share in all grades of posts, as laid down in the G.R. of 1934. I also suggest that one senior Muslim I.C.S. officer should be appointed in the Home Department to collect information from various Departments with a view to ensuring that Government orders regarding communal representation are carried out faithfully both in letter and in spirit. The other day I had a question tabled asking the Honourable the Home Member, in which I suggested that a Muslim officer should be appointed to look into the working of this G.R. in the Government of India. I am very sorry to say that the Home Member in his reply expressed his regret in not accepting my proposal.

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: No.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: You said 'no'.

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I said it was under my consideration.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: I stand corrected. I am glad to see that the matter was then under consideration. I hope today the Honourable the Home Member in his reply will tell us that he has acceded to our wishes and that he will see his way to appoint a Muslim officer to see whether the G.R. of 1934 was properly worked or not.

I should like to deal now briefly with the various Departments of the Government of India where we have some complaints to make. First, I should like to deal with the Department of Commonwealth Relations, in charge of which is Dr. Khare. I see my Honourable friend Mr. Banerjee smiling. The other day I had a question on this issue and my Honourable friend Mr. Banerjee informed us that the present Honourable Member in charge, Dr. Khare, during his period of office had appointed seven Indians as Agents General overseas. We know very well that today we have not got one Muslim as an Agent General. In supplementary questions I asked how many were appointed by the Honourable Dr. Khare himself during the time he has been member, and the reply was seven; the further reply was that not one was a Muslim. May I ask why no Muslim was appointed to such an appointment? Did the Honourable Member not find any suitable Muslim to go overseas and occupy a diplomatic position of this kind? In filling up important foreign posts which have a direct bearing on the prestige of India in foreign countries, Dr. Khare has filled all the appointments by Hindus, nay by his personal friends. I hope that the broadminded and patriotic Hindus, my friends on the right, will join us in censuring this unpatriotic act of nepotism committed by the Member in charge of the Commonwealth Relations Department. Surely he cannot claim that his province of C.P. alone has the monopoly of intellect and qualities of diplomacy which are essential qualifications for these posts. I want to ask the Members of the Executive Council who belong to the minority communities—I do not say that they do represent the minorities in this House—what they did, at any time, to protect the minority interests and whether they did anything to stop the highhanded and unpatriotic action of their colleague. It was with this very idea that I put a question the other day whether the Muslim Members protested against these appointments and my Honourable friend very conveniently evaded the issue by saying that the appointments were made by the Governor General in Council. Even today I want to know whether the Muslim Members of the Council protested to Dr. Khare when he was going ahead with his full programme of having Hindus for all these appointments.

Now, I take the Commerce Department. We want our proper share in appointments of Trade Commissioners overseas. At the moment I do know that we have some Muslims who have been sent as Trade Commissioners to Muslim countries. Not as a matter of favour, I say, because I do know that those Muslim countries would never have cared to have any non-Muslim in those countries. My contention is that Muslims should be sent to those countries in Europe and America where trade is in full swing. Some petty jobs in Afghanistan and other places are no doubt given to Muslims but I want that they should be sent to America and European countries. Secondly, I want that the proper share of Muslims should be given in trade conferences that are taking place from time to time and that will soon follow and also in the trade delegations which are being sent by the Commerce Department. I know that Sir Azizul Huque as Commerce Member is doing his best but whatever has been done is not enough and a lot remains yet to be done and I hope he will do the needful in that Department.

Now, I come to the Disposals Department. We are aware that this department is going to be a very important Department and will play an important part in the post-war period. It is a matter of great regret that of the four appointments of Regional Commissioners that have been made by Government, not one Muslim occupies a place. I hope that Government will reconsider the decision and see that at least we have our share in these appointments as well. In the posts of Director General, Deputy Directors General and Directors, I am sorry to say that we do not find any Muslim. There may be one or two, I am not sure but I hope that the Honourable Member in charge will enlighten us on that issue.

Now, I come to the Planning and Development Department. The key posts in this Department have all gone to Non-Muslims and the representation of Muslims is far below the required quota. The result is that Muslim interests are overlooked. In the new planning schemes of Government, Muslims are not getting their due share. In the matter of import of machinery and in the matter of the new industrial concerns that are being set up, the textile mills and the cement factories, I am sorry to say that the claims of Muslims have been overlooked. I know that Muslims are refused permit for starting cement factories. There have been applications from Muslim industrialists . . .

An Honourable Member: The applications of Muslims were turned down.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: They were not even looked at.

I now come to the Labour Department. Muslims in this Department and particularly in the Central P.W.D. are much below the 25 per cent. quota fixed by Government. The just claims of Muslims have been overlooked and instead non-Muslims have been appointed. My Honourable friend who will follow me will deal with this question at length and I maintain that the Central P.W.D. should be separated from the Labour Department and the portfolio should be given to another member. Leaving aside the question of Muslims in this Department who are below the quota laid down, the question greatly affects Muslim trade. In one instance I know of the Lodhi Road Colony, out of 54 crores worth contract, only six lakhs worth of contracts were given to Muslims. I am open to correction. I hope my Honourable friend will tell us what the true facts are if I am wrong. The trouble is that we have not got Muslims in most of the engineering posts and I maintain that not only in service but also in the contracts of the P.W.D. Muslims must get their due share.

Now, I come to the Supply Department. During the six years of existence of this department, up to the end of December 1945, about a dozen men have been appointed as Directors General, about three dozen men have been appointed as Deputy Directors General or Additional Directors General and hardly any Muslim worth his name is there. Similarly about a couple of hundred men have been appointed to the posts of Directors but we find very few are Muslims and we have not got our share. When we ask for figures as to how many are Muslims in particular departments, we are told that the quota of 25 per cent. is there but we are not told as to how many of them are chaprasis and chaukidars and in this, their figure is also included. We must have our share not only of the lower appointments but also of the top appointments. You must also consider the salaries drawn. If there are 12 jobs of one thousand rupees each, 8 of them must go to Muslims. Not that low paid jobs should go to Muslims and the higher paid posts to non-Muslims. Sir Homi Mody and Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar had issued orders to this effect and after that some improvement was made but I am sorry to say that when the Department was reorganised in the early part of this year, the position has reversed and it is going from bad to worse.

Now, I come to the Education Department. The Education Department is very much expanding and it is a matter of great regret that the claims of the Aligarh Muslim University which is directly under the Government of India are being overlooked and no attention has been paid to this University. Then there is Ajmer-Merwara which is a very important Muslim province on account of the shrines but attempts are being made not to have any Muslim officers in the officers' grade of the Education Department.

It has been brought to my notice by my Honourable friend Nawab Siddique Ali Khan, that the Muslims working in the Gun Carriage Factory at Jubbulpore and in the Ordnance Factories at Khamari and Katni are very shabbily treated. The quota before the war was much below 25 per cent. Today it is 6.7 per cent. and in the recent retrenchment they are the worst sufferers. Those who brought the great war to a successful termination are today wandering in the streets uncared of. The welfare officer who was very popular amongst all sections of the people was transferred to Calcutta in spite of requests from the people. Similarly is the case in the Central Ordnance Depot at Cawnpore and Delhi. I have figures in my possession which clearly show that the number of Muslims is very meagre. I invite the attention of the Honourable Member to this glaring instance.

I have dealt with the question of retrenchment. I feel very strongly and my Party feels very strongly on this issue, that the retrenchment that is going to take place in the Supply Department particularly, should be in a way that the quota of Muslims 25 per cent. is maintained. Of those who are employed in a temporary measure in the course of this war, most of the non-Muslims have been retained for no rhyme or reason. As our quota is already low, no retrenchment axe should be applied to the Muslims who were appointed as a temporary measure.

Sir, now I would like to deal with the condition of the Muslim staff in the Civil and Personal Inspectorate and General Stores Laboratory, Cawnpore, under the parent organisation of Controller General of Inspection, M.G.O. Branch, General Headquarters, India, where the position is pitiable. I have got figures from which I can show that they form a very negligible ratio and I trust that the Member in charge will look into this.

Then, I have something to say in regard to the question of the Central Excise Administration in the Central Excise Directorate, Allahabad. There the Muslims are being oppressed and their quota is much lower than fixed. Under some excuse or other, Muslims are being asked to get out and those who were even junior to them have been retained. I submit that here is a case which requires careful consideration and I hope the matter will be looked into.

With these words I move this cut motion and I hope I shall be supported, in view of our difficulties and in view of the way in which we have been treated, by my Honourable friends to my right.

Mr. Deputy President: Cut motion moved:

"That the demand under the head 'Executive Council' be reduced by Rs. 100."

Shri Sri Prakasa: Mr. Deputy President, constituted as I am, I must confess that I feel very unhappy whenever discussions of a communal or racial character take place in this House or anywhere outside. Still, I feel that I should add my voice to the voice of my Honourable friend who had just spoken and express my heart-felt sympathy with the point of view that my Honourable friend has taken. I feel that I am perhaps one of the few persons who can speak on a question like this without being misunderstood, and, therefore, I have taken my courage in my both hands to stand up and speak out my mind.

I have never made any calculation about the ratio of services held by my own community. I do not exactly know what my community, is, but I know that the large conglomeration of peoples called Hindus, are divided into about 4,000 castes and each is more or less confined to itself in matters of food and marriage. If I gave the name of my particular community, perhaps most Members will say they never heard about it. So, I think it had better remain unnamed; but I shall be glad of the day when no member of that community gets any service in this Government. I am one of those who think that no countrymen of ours should want to serve this Government. I always feel sorry when a particular countryman of mine wants to serve this Government; for Sir, we want to be rulers and not servants in our own country. We want to see the colour of the ruler and not the colour of the servants.

I am looking forward to the day when we shall have a democratic government, a government consisting of persons who enjoy the confidence of the electorate in general, and I also think that that democratic government, when it comes into existence, will have to seek the services of men from many countries outside India. We will have to man our services with men from many lands in order that we may improve our country in the various facets of its existence. But as things now stand, I feel that the great Muslim people should have a proportionate share in the administration of the land from top to bottom, and if they have any grievance, it should be redressed. I do not like a man with a grievance. Personally, I have no grievance against anyone. So, whenever I meet a man with a grievance, I feel that I should do my best to redress that grievance and make him as happy as myself. The Muslim people, so far as I can judge from the speeches they make in the House and from the questions they put to the Government, suffer from many disabilities. In any case, they labour under many disadvantages and they have a great grievance regarding their proportion in the services. Why not see that that grievance is removed and that what they want is given to them? I do not think any harm will be done to anyone if what they want is acceded to them.

Sir, since I heard my Honourable friend Mr. Siddiqi say the other day that most of the difficulties of the country will be solved if the services are properly divided among the various peoples that live in this country, I have from that they made up my mind that we must do all that we can in order that all the difficulties that we are faced with should be met and all the grievances removed. I am sure Mr. Siddiqi knew the mind of the people he represents in the country. And when he openly said in the House what no other person, I think, had said before, that the chief trouble was the improper distribution of the services among the various communities of the land, I think it is time that we sat down round a table and distributed the services in such a manner that there should be peace and plenty in the country. When I have heard that from my Honourable friend and when I have heard it mentioned in so many speeches and in so many questions in the House, I think it is time that we faced that problem boldly and squarely. And if our Muslim friends want a certain portion of the services, the same should be granted to them.

I think their demand is very moderate. Judging from the words in the brackets, I find that they want only 25 per cent. Why not more? Give them more services. If mere services would satisfy our friends, why not give them? Where is the harm in it? I cannot see any harm in giving services. What the Government is objecting to, I believe, is not that our people should be their servants but that our people should be the masters in their own country. In fact, the Government is being carried on with the help of our people. I have always been advocating in this House just the opposite of what my other friends have been advocating. I have always advocated the Europeanisation of all the services from top to bottom because, I think, it is up to the English people who rule this country to bring all their servants from their own country which will enable us to see in our country that even Englishmen can be sweepers, scavengers, boot-polishers, etc. We, in India, have an idea that nobody does these menial services in other countries and that Indians go abroad to do such services there also. Why should they have our service? Why should they get us to do anything for them? Why cannot they get their own people to do their work?

So long as the Government of India is British, so long the British people themselves should be in all the services. When we get Swaraj, we may have our own people in all the services; but as long as the services are in the hands of the British, all their servants should be British. What is the difference, I ask in all seriousness, between the English people and my own countrymen who sit on the other side of the House except that above their collars and beyond their sleeves heads and fingers come out with same pigment on the skin on some and none on others. Otherwise from neck to foot they seem alike to me. They are dressed alike. The answers they give to the questions we put and the speeches they make are also alike. Their attitude is also alike. I see no difference. I really wonder why any person wants to be a servant of this Government. The idea never struck me, I am always surprised when I find any of my countrymen wanting to serve this government; but if any of my countrymen wants to serve them, well, I have no objection, let them serve them. Why should I object to it.

While I fully sympathise with my Muslim friends and brothers in their desire for service, I should also like them to think of the danger that underlies their demand, lest they should be satisfied with service only and not demand the mastership of the country. We must not be merely satisfied with serving, we must also desire to rule. That is what I stand for, and that is what I would like the Muslims also to do. But I do not want to break any hearts. I know that in India people are divided into communities and I know that tradition also imposes on various communities the necessity for seeking service as an avenue for economic betterment. Our society itself is so constituted. There are many communities among the Hindus also who live by service, and if you deprive them of their service, they do not know what else to do. I only want that persons like myself, for instance, who have other avenues of employment—I am a sort of exploiter myself, who lives on unearned income, who is a landlord—that persons who are landlords and trader or have other means, should not want to be Government servants as well. Why should I have everything myself? Why should not other also have it? I know many Muslims in my Province, especially among the urban population who have to seek service. They have no other means of livelihood except service. I am always ashamed to see any person who has other means of livelihood going to compete with them and deprive them of their sources of income which is their only means of livelihood. This is the attitude that we should take, and we should see this problem from that angle. Those persons who have no other means of livelihood except service must not be deprived of their services, whether they are Hindus or Muslims. It does not matter what their community is. There are many communities among Hindus who live entirely by service, they should also get services. These communities who have other means of employment need not be anxious to have services. I know most Muslims have to depend on service. We must not deprive them of this. Otherwise, we are in for trouble. After the clear and unequivocal statement made by Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi, regarding the solution of our difficulties, it is up to not only the Government but also us of the Congress and all parties in the Assembly and outside, to see to it that their difficulties are properly tackled; that their grievances are properly redressed and that those who deserve service are not deprived of it. Sir, I support the motion.

Khan Bahadur Habibur Rahman (Tirhut Division: Muhammadan): Sir, I rise to support the cut motion so ably moved by my Honourable friend Mr. Ebrahim Haroon Jaffer, a worth son of a worthy father. He has ably dealt with all the Departments. I am glad my Honourable friend to my Right has given us encouragement as regards his Party's assistance in helping us to get our share. He was telling us to ask for a formal share. We have been asking them to give us a share, but it is my friend's Party that is not co-operating with us. It is a well known fact that according to the Home Department Resolution of 1934, 25 per cent. was the minimum fixed for Muslims in the appointments under Government. This minimum was interpreted as the maximum. Even this minimum was not obtained and various methods were adopted in keeping the Muslims back. It was maintained that this rule of 25 per cent. will not apply to promotions, which is not correct. This principle of percentage in promotion has been adopted in several provinces. They also say that places were not filled up, they were kept in abeyance and arrangements were made to carry on the work by giving chance to others. These arguments may have some force in the case of old Departments, but in the case of new Departments, which have recently been established, such as the Planning and Development Department, the Disposal Directorate, Information and Arts Department, there can be no justification for not recruiting 25 per cent. Muslims in all grades. Every attempt is made to avoid this order. In these four Departments, the Muslims are recruited in the lowest grade while the posts carrying higher emoluments have always been given to non-Muslims. Therefore, we press and I would ask the Honourable the Home Member to modify the Resolution that 25 per cent. should be fixed in every grade not only in recruitment but in promotions as well. Every grade is rather a vague expression, and I suggest that the salary bill of Muslims should be 25 per cent. in each Department.

The question of retrenchment is now engaging the attention of the Members of the Legislature and particularly of Muslims. We apprehend that this retrenchment will seriously affect the proportion of Muslims. We therefore propose that retrenchment should be made in a manner that 25 per cent. proportion of Muslims after retrenchment may be maintained but not only in number but in every grade. I suggest that the following methods be adopted for retrenchment. The persons who have been drawn from business commercial concerns may be sent back to their own work. The retired persons who were re-employed should also be retrenched in preference to younger men. It is remarkable that the persons who have been brought from other Departments on higher salaries in the Supply Department are now being reverted on lower salaries to their own departments, but this principle applies to Muslims only and non-Muslims were retained. Such differentiation is not desirable. Mr. Agarwal has been promoted and given charge of a Directorate. I wonder if the Honourable Member ever read the entries in his character roll. Complaints have been made repeatedly that the applications of Muslims are destroyed and competent Muslims are not called for interview by the ministerial staff of the Federal Public Service Commission under the influence of non-Muslims. This is a serious matter and the efficiency of the Federal Public Service Commission is being questioned, and it is a blot on their impartiality. I will give the names of these persons to the Chairman of the Federal Public Service Commission and to the Honourable the Home Member.

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: Names of whom?

Khan Bahadur Habibur Rahman: I will give in writing. I now come to the Mining Section. No Muslim has ever been appointed or placed in charge of coal mines either as Coal Manager or as Superintendent. Out of fifteen Coal Managers and Superintendents not a single Muslim has been taken in the past or at present. In the School of Mines at Dhanbad, as pointed out by Mr. Nauman last year, the Muslims are not admitted. Out of 45 students admitted last year only one was a Muslim. The Honourable Member said that the admission was in the hands of the Governing Body. The Governing Body reply that the fixation of seats is a question which concerns the Government of India.

Then I take the case of the Central P.W.D. a circular letter has already been issued to some Members of the Assembly showing cases of corruption. My Honourable friend Dr. Ambedkar may say that he has appointed a Muslim Chief Engineer but he has cut off his hands and legs. In the whole Department of the Labour Department there is not a single Muslim officer. The Central P.W.D. is expanding every day; the budget like the army budget is daily increasing. I do not know why this should be tacked on to the Labour Department; it should be separated forthwith. We have been pressing for the last two months that the post of Administrative Officer should be filled up by a Muslim according to our convention and a Muslim should be appointed to the vacant post of Superintending Engineer. But my Honourable friend the Honourable Member has been keeping one post vacant and asking the Chief Engineer to carry on, with a view that this appointment may be made after the adjournment of the Assembly. The number of officers is very small and the few Muslim officers here do not find their life worth living on account of the manner in which their work is cornered.

When we come to the lower officers, not a single Executive Engineer has been appointed. It is remarkable, and I would point out to the Honourable Member that he raised subordinates belonging to the scheduled caste to the post of Executive Engineers and ignored the claims of the Muslims. It has been pointed out that in the administrative side after the transfer of the Administrative Officer there is not a single Muslim in the administrative side as well. I warn the Honourable Member that there exists grave discontent among Muslim officers in the Central P.W.D., among the Muslim Members of the Legislature and among Muslims in general except in the Labour Department where there is no Muslim and this question of discontent does not arise.

The other day Sir Gurunath Bewoor assured the House that the personnel of the Civil Aviation Department is being Indianised. In this connection I may point out that the position of the Muslims is very deplorable. Out of a total strength of 66 officers only two are Muslims and they are Assistant Aerodrome Officers carrying a salary of Rs. 300 per month. Since the opening of the Civil Aviation Department in India no Muslim Administrative Officer has ever been appointed. As for the air services Muslims have no share whatsoever. Sir Frederick Tymms has a record in his character roll that he never gave any scholarship to a Muslim. The Honourable Member should give an assurance that the deficiency in the officers' cadre as well as in the ministerial establishment of Muslims in the Civil Aviation Directorate will be made up in the post-war schemes from the personnel shortly to be demobilised from the army. It is understood that a large number of Muslim Ground Engineers and pilots who have got enough technical knowledge and experience are or will be available for employment as aircraft inspectors and aerodrome officers.

As regards the Commonwealth Relations Department, the Honourable Member always believes in the old proverb that charity should begin at home; Mahrattas are the only Indians who are suitable for appointment in his Department. There is not only the question of Muslims but also of the depressed classes and caste Hindus.

From the very inception of the Supply Department Muslims were treated like untouchables and received step-motherly treatment. Let us come to facts. For a short period they had a Muslim Additional Secretary and after he left the Department this post was abolished, and early in 1945, a Muslim Joint Secretary was appointed and it is understood that at present they have no Muslim senior officers in headquarters and there is no intention of appointing a Muslim in key posts. The Supply Department has recently set up a new organisation, namely, disposals. Here too Muslim representation is very poor and key posts are mostly occupied by Europeans. It is understood that the Director General is shortly retiring and this post is being filled up by an I.C.S. who has no experience of stores or engineering. In the Provinces the post of Regional Deputy Commissioners who are responsible for disposal of stores are all held by non-Muslims, and it is understood that in a vacancy which is likely to occur in the near future it is proposed to appoint a non-Muslim. Early this year a new Director General of Supply was set up and since the appointment

[Khan Bahadur Habibur Rahman.]

While their non-Muslim compeers are being retained under some pretence or another. There are many instances where Muslim officers with good records of service have been reduced to lower ranks and their pay has been cut down indiscriminately, while in the case of non-Muslims there are officers whose pay has been increased in spite of drastic retrenchment. I have got the names with me but I do not like to mention them here; I shall communicate them to the Honourable Member. In spite of promises made by the previous three Supply Members and in spite of the fact that there were vacancies no Muslims have ever been appointed as Deputy Director General. It will be interesting to mention that a Muslim officer who was recently very fit for such a post has now been condemned by the new Director General. In spite of such a drastic retrenchment in the Supply Department outsiders have been imported, people who had left were recalled and pensioners are still continuing in service. Officers and other ranks were asked for by their permanent Departments but only the Muslims were spared and Hindus were retained.

I have already dealt with the question and the Supply Department is guilty. At this critical juncture when the future and life of loyal and trusted Government servants is at stake the Supply Department has handed over the administration of work in most of their organisations to non-Muslims and officers with little experience of administration. It is very unfortunate that the representatives of the Finance Department have more say in administrative matters than the regular Supply Department Secretariat, and the senior posts in the Supply Finance are occupied by non-Muslims and in many instances the uncalled for interference by Finance Department is used not on financial grounds, but on communal considerations. I specially invite the attention of the Finance Member and request him to instruct his representatives to confine themselves to their legitimate duties and do not give effect to their communal tendencies.

My woeful story is a long one and time does not permit me to give all the details. But before I finish my speech I would like to make some reference about the Agriculture Department. In this Department there is

S. P. M. not a single Muslim in the Main Secretariat in the officer's grade. Out of 12 Advisers, 3 first class officers, 2 Directors, 6 heads of Divisions, not a single one is Muslim. In the second-class Officers' grade out of 17, there are only 4 Muslims. In the Scientific and Technical side with a salary of Rs. 100 and upwards, out of 39 there are only 2 Muslims. In the lower Scientific Staff, out of 37 there are 9 Muslims. In the upper ministerial staff out of 10 there is only one officiating Muslim and the number is made up by lower ministerial staff where out of 35, 10 are Muslims.

In the Veterinary Section, the officers are all non-Muslims. Even in subordinate posts like Personal Assistants the Mussalmans have been replaced by non-Muslims, one of whom is not even a Matriculate. The Administration is also thoroughly bad and its officers have either left or are about to leave. I request the Government to look into the administration of the Indian Veterinary Research Institute, Izatnagar.

Nationalisation means equal advantages to all and these advantages should also be of equivalent value and if our just claims are not attended to, then my Honourable friend may tell me what is the other solution except that we demand Pakistan.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Thursday, the 14th March, 1946.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

Friday, 14th March, 1946

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. President (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

MEMBER SWORN:

Dr. Dharendra Mohan Sen, M.L.A. (Government of India: Nominated Official).

STARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

(a) ORAL ANSWERS

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY TIME TABLE.

955. *Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) if it is a fact that the East Indian Railway Time-Table in force from January 1, 1946, includes a 15 Up and 16 Down Benares Express between Benares and Howrah, but that the same have not yet been started; and

(b) when the Railway Administration expects to start these trains, and why they have been put in the Time-Table beforehand?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) Yes, but there is a note in the Time Table against the timings of these trains which reads: "Will be introduced from a date to be notified later".

(b) The re-introduction of these trains depends on the release of coaching stock by the military authorities, and as this is still an uncertain factor, no definite date can be indicated. These trains were included in the Time Table as at the time when it was being framed it was expected that the coaching stock position would improve sufficiently to permit of the running of these trains within a month or so of the issue of the Time Table, and their inclusion in the Time Table would be convenient for the public as it would save them the trouble of making enquiries at stations. The expectations have however not materialised.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Was it right in the opinion of the Honourable Member to give such false hopes and would it be possible for the railway administration to start these trains as early as possible?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: The first question is asking for an opinion. As regards the second part of the question, we shall endeavour to start all these trains as soon as the rolling stock position improves, and as I mentioned earlier, we shall begin to get back rolling stock and coaching stock from next month.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: May I ask whether the Honourable Member is expecting fresh stock from Europe, or is he having it constructed in India?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Two hundred broad-gauge underframes are being imported from Australia and 94 meter gauge underframes. Apart from that, no other coaching stock will be imported. But we are going to put bodies on those underframes as soon as possible and also we are calling into service any underframes that we have been able to erect together on the Indian railways for the purpose of building on them third-class bodies.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: What about engines?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: The engine position is fairly satisfactory.

PUBLICATION OF BIGGER TIME TABLES OF E. I. RAILWAY.

956. *Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) if the East Indian Railway used to issue a large Time-Table priced at six annas containing much useful and necessary information, besides a smaller one priced at two annas; and

(b) if they intend to re-start the publication of these bigger Time-Tables; if so, when?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) Yes, but the two anna edition was only introduced during the war.

(b) Yes, in April 1946 in addition to the two anna edition.

PUBLICATION OF TIME TABLES BEFORE CHANGING THE TIMINGS

957. *Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) if it is fact that new timings on the East Indian Railway came in force on January 1, 1946;

(b) if the Time-Table was not on sale till about three weeks thereafter;

(c) if avoidable inconvenience was not caused to the public; and

(d) if Government propose to impress on the Administration the extreme desirability of publishing their Time-Tables before changing the times of their trains?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) Yes.

(b) No. Copies of the Time Table were sent to the various sale depots as they came out of the press. The first supply was made on the 29th December, and by the 19th January some 13,400 copies had been placed on sale.

(c) Such inconvenience as may have been caused was unavoidable.

(d) The Railway Administration are fully alive to the necessity of issuing their Time Tables in good time, but it was clearly not in the public interest to defer introducing new services pending the production and distribution of time tables.

Shri Sri Prakasa: I am sorry I could not catch the date the Honourable Member gave when the first publication was made of these time-tables.

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: The 29th December.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Would the Honourable Member give an idea as to the stations on the East Indian Railway on which these time-tables were available, because at the Benares Cantonment Station there was none available till the end of January?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I think that is quite likely. The first issue was a small one. But I have not the information at which stations they were available.

EXAMINATION OF RAILWAY TICKETS AT THE BIDDING OF C. I. D. MEN.

958. *Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) if it is a fact that Ticket Collectors and Travelling Ticket Examiner's examine particular passenger's tickets and take down notes of the numbers of these at the bidding of the C.I.D. men;

(b) if such examination takes place of higher class passengers even at times when their tickets are usually not examined;

(c) if the Railway officials are bound to obey the behests of the C.I.D. men, if so, under what law; and

(d) if the C.I.D. men have to purchase platform tickets; if not, why an exception is made in their case?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) This is not a general practice, but there have been a few occasions when the staff agreed to the requests of C. I. D. men to examine particulars of tickets held by certain passengers.

(b) Does not arise.

(c) No.

(d) There is no uniform practice. On some Railways tickets are required to be purchased; on others free platform passes are issued on request from the District Police Authorities.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Why does the Honourable Member think that part (b) does not arise?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Out of the answer to part (a).

Shri Sri Prakasa: May I know, Sir, if the railway administration is compelled under any section of the law to allow its servants to examine tickets at the bidding of the C. I. D. men?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Not under any particular law: but there is close liaison between Government Departments.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Does the Honourable Member think it right that there should be this sort of liaison when the passengers whom he is taking on his railways are made to suffer like this?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I think that in the particular case that the Honourable has in mind the Staff were a little tactless.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Is 'tactless' the only word the Honourable Member can use.

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Yes, Sir, the only word!

MUSLIMS IN THE KARACHI PORT TRUST

959. *Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: Will the Honourable Member for War Transport please state:

(a) the number of Muslims in the service of the Karachi Port Trust under each grade on the 1st January, 1946, (i) permanent hands, (ii) on probation, and (iii) in vacancies created due to war;

(b) the number of Hindus in the service of the Karachi Port Trust under each grade on the 1st January, 1946, (i) permanent hands, (ii) on probation, and (iii) in vacancies created due to war; and

(c) what steps Government propose to take to improve the Muslim representation in the service of the Karachi Port Trust?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) and (b). Such information as could conveniently be collected within the time available has been obtained and a statement is laid on the table.

(c) The power to fill appointments under the Port Trust vests by law in the Port Trust Board and its Chairman except in the case of a small number of high posts. The policy followed by the Government of India in regard to direct recruitment has been more than once brought to the notice of Port Trusts with a suggestion that they should adopt a similar policy, as far as possible, in regard to their services. Government are prescribing a periodical return to watch progress in this respect but, except in the case of a few high posts, have no authority to issue binding instructions.

Statement showing the number of Muslims and Hindus in the service of the Karachi Port Trust on the 1st January 1946.

	Muslims.	Hindus.
(i) appointments carrying a maximum of Rs. 500 and above p. m. .	4	8
(ii) appointments carrying a maximum of less than Rs. 500 but not less than Rs. 100 p. m.	158	485
(iii) appointments carrying a maximum of less than Rs. 100 p. m. .	1304	1235

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: Is it not a fact that the Karachi Port Trust Board consists of one Muslim Member only in whose hands the appointments are?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: That may be so. But it does not follow that any injustice is done.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: Therefore I believe that injustice is being done as there are no Muslim appointments by the Board and consequently appointments should go to the Federal Public Service Commission.

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: The Karachi Port Trust passed the following resolution in 1942:

"At the express desire of the two Muslims Port Trustees the Board agrees that Government should be informed that, as the present Chairman is fully carrying out the policy enunciated by the Government of India in the Home Department Resolution No. 14/17-B/33, dated 4th July 1934, it is not necessary to frame rules of recruitment on a communal basis."

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: This resolution was passed when there were two Muslim members. Now there is only one.

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: If the Honourable Member would look at the paper which I have placed on the table, I think he will see there is no injustice.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: How long will the Government take to fully Indianise the Port Trust authorities?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: That does not arise.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Now that the war is over, why is the Honourable Member still called the War Transport Member?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: That question also does not arise.

REPORTS FROM U. N. O. DELGATION

960. Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will the Foreign Secretary be pleased to state:

(a) if Government have been receiving periodical reports from their delegation to the U.N.O. (London session); if so, on what questions that came up for discussion at the General Body and the Security Council of the U.N.O. they have received reports;

(b) whether Government will place on the table of the House a gist of that portion of their reports which are not particularly confidential; and

(c) when the report of the delegation about their work will be published?

Mr. H. Weightman: (a) Government have received reports from the Delegation on various subjects which came up before the General Assembly or in Committees, such as the creation of a Capital Fund, recruitment for the Secretariat and other U. N. O. posts, the election of Judges for the International Court and so on. No reports on matters laid before the Security Council have been received from the Delegation as the proceedings have been fully reported in the Press.

(b) No Sir. There seem little purpose in doing so since Press reports have so fully covered all proceedings.

(c) The report will be completed as soon as possible and copies will be laid on the table of the House.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Has our Indian Delegation brought to the notice of the U. N. O. or the Security Council the opinion of this House as expressed in the adjournment motion on South Africa?

Mr. H. Weightman: That question, I submit, Sir, does not arise out of this one which relates to the receiving of periodical reports from the Indian Delegation to the U.N.O.

Mr. President: I think it is a consequential question.

Mr. H. Weightman: If I may, I should like to reply to that question in connection with the next one.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Has the head of our delegation, Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar, pressed for a seat for India on the Security Council?

Mr. H. Weightman: No, Sir.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Why not, Sir?

Mr. H. Weightman: It was not thought opportune to do so at the time.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is it wrong for India—I am not asking for an opinion—is it not the duty of the Indian delegation to press for a seat for India on the Security Council in order to enable her to pull her full weight on the Security Council as well as on the U.N.O.?

Mr. H. Weightman: It is arguable that India's claim to seat on the Security Council will come better at the next election, by which time we hope India will have her own Government.

Seth Goward Das: Were any instructions in this respect given to Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar by the Government of India?

Mr. H. Weightman: General instructions were given to him.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Are we to understand that as a result of the informal negotiations as between the different delegations India's claim for a seat on the Security Council was not pressed in the light of an informal assurance given by other delegations that at the next election a seat would be assured to India?

Mr. H. Weightman: No, Sir.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: May I know if it was at the instance of the British Delegation that India's claim for a seat was not pressed?

Mr. H. Weightman: No, Sir.

Mr. Manu Subedar: May I know whether it is not a fact that in order to secure a place either for Canada or Australia India's claim was not pressed?

Mr. H. Weightman: No, Sir. That is not the case.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Was it not in order to avoid the semblance of the British Empire monopolising the vote of too many units in the Security Council that India's claims were not pressed for a seat?

Mr. H. Weightman: No, Sir.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Was there any formal or informal correspondence between the heads of the various delegations in regard to securing for India a place on the Security Council?

Mr. H. Weightman: The prospects were explored in the lobbies.

Diwan Chaman Lall: Why is the Honourable Member objecting then to the placing of the report on the table of the House?

Mr. H. Weightman: As I have said, the proceedings of the U.N.O. have been fully reported in the press.

Diwan Chaman Lall: Part (b) of the question says: "Whether the Government will place on the table of the House the gist of that portion of their reports which are not particularly confidential not the entire reports given by your representatives to you. Why will you not place that on the table of the House?"

Mr. H. Weightman: You will find in my reply to part (c) of the question that I have promised that the final report will be completed as soon as possible and copies will be laid on the table of the House.

Diwan Chaman Lall: May I know why should not the interim reports made on instructions given by the Government to their representatives be placed on the table of the House?

Mr. H. Weightman: There has been no formal interim report on that particular matter.

Diwan Chaman Lall: Am I to take it that no report so far has been made to the Government by their representatives?

Mr. H. Weightman: No, Sir. We have received reports.

Diwan Chaman Lall: Why then is the Honourable Member objecting to placing the reports on the table of the House.

Mr. H. Weightman: I have already replied to that question.

Diwan Chaman Lall: Is it because it would be inconvenient for the Government to place them on the table of the House?

Mr. H. Weightman: Not in the least.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: What is the position in England? Are such reports placed or not on the table in the British Parliament?

Mr. H. Weightman: I have not the faintest notion.

Mr. Manu Subedar: May I know if Government have anything to conceal in this matter, because India's claims were not pressed properly as against the claims of other members of the British Commonwealth? If not, why will they not make the reports available now that this House has expressed its desire?

Mr. H. Weightman: Government have nothing to conceal. I have already replied to the rest of the question.

Diwan Chaman Lall: Am I to take it that my Honourable friend has no objection to placing on the table of the House the Government's instructions to their delegates and the delegation's report to the Government of India?

Mr. H. Weightman: I am not prepared to place the Government of India's instructions to their delegates on the table of the House but I am prepared, as I have already stated, to place the report of the delegation when received on the table of the House.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: On a point of order, Sir. The Honourable Member says that he refuses to place the instructions to their delegates on the table of the House. He must give the grounds to support it. What are the grounds? Is there anything secret about it?

Mr. H. Weightman: The instructions of the Government of India to their delegation are confidential.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: In view of the fact that the Honourable Member is our prototype of the British Foreign Minister will he try to ascertain the practice that is followed in this case, especially in England, by the British Foreign Minister?

Mr. H. Weightman: Yes, I am prepared to do that.

ATTITUDE OF U. N. O. TOWARDS INDONESIAN AND LEBONESE FREEDOM STRUGGLE

961. *Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will the Honourable the Foreign Secretary be pleased to state:

(a) if Government have received any reports from their delegation to the U.N.O.;

(b) the attitude taken and the nature of the speeches made and notes given when the Indonesian, Greek and Lebanon questions came up for discussion in the Security Council and the General Body; and

(c) whether the Indian delegation made it clear to the other delegations either when the General Body or the Security Council was in session or privately, India's strong sympathies for Indonesians and Lebanese, in their struggle for freedom; if not, why not?

Mr. H. Weightman: (a) Yes.

(b) Does not arise as these questions came up for discussion before the Security Council of which India is not a member and not before the General Assembly.

(c) No, since the question of Indonesian and Lebanese independence was not substantially in issue before either Body.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: May I repeat my earlier question before I take up other supplementaries, whether the Indian Delegation brought to the notice of the U.N.O. General Assembly as well as the Security Council the feelings expressed by this House in passing the adjournment motion over the South African Legislation against Indians?

Mr. H. Weightman: I have answered that. It does not arise. The question of Indonesian and Lebanese independence was not substantially in issue before either the General Assembly or the Security Council.

Mr. M. R. Masani: Will the Honourable Member state whether the Indian delegation took any opportunity to express the strong sympathy of the Indian people for the Iranian people against Russian aggression?

Mr. H. Weightman: No, Sir.

Mr. M. R. Masani: Why not?

Mr. H. Weightman: I am not sure that that question has been before the Security Council either.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Is it not a fact that Ukraine which was not a member of the Security Council did raise this question and if that is so, why was only the representation of India's views by the so-called representatives of India not carried out?

Mr. H. Weightman: I take it that the Honourable Member is referring to the fact that the Ukrainian delegate raised the question of the presence of British troops in Indonesia. Is that correct?

Mr. President: I believe that is so.

Mr. H. Weightman: I understand that is provided under the Charter of the United Nations Organisation that any member—whether a member of the Security Council or not—can address a communication to the Chairman of the Security Council pointing out the existence, in his opinion, of a state of affairs which is dangerous to the peace of the world.

Mr. Manu Subedar: That is exactly the reason why I ask this. Since that particular method was open to us, why was India's representative—I must say 'so-called' in this case—not instructed, in view of the strong feelings in this House, to represent the views of India on the Indonesian and other questions, particularly on the Indonesian question which the Ukrainians had already raised?

Mr. H. Weightman: Sir, I wonder whether it would be of any value if I read parts of the letter of the Ukrainian delegate so that the House will understand that there was no question before the U.N.O., in any of its bodies, of Indonesian independence. The letter reads:

"As is known, in that country, (i.e., in Indonesia), during several months military actions directed against local populations have been waged, in which regular British forces as well as Japanese enemy armed forces are taking part. In the opinion of the Ukrainian Government the situation creates a state of threat to the maintenance of international peace and security, which is covered by Article 34 of the Charter."

Prof. N. G. Ranga: In view of the fact that this House passed an adjournment motion that I had already alluded to in regard to South Africa and in view also of the fact that the Government of India considered the matter and came recently to the conclusion as regards the advisability of imposing economic sections against South Africa why is it that the Indian delegation did not address any communication to the U.N.O. Security Council drawing their attention to the fact that this situation that is brewing in South Africa is likely to endanger the world's peace and amity?

Mr. H. Weightman: I shall require notice of this question about South Africa which, I submit, does not arise out of the question which has been tabled.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Sir, I take objection to this. On an earlier question (960) you were good enough to rule that it arose as a consequential supplementary. When I put that supplementary my Honourable friend said that he would prefer to answer it when we reached No. 961. Now when I have put that question he tries to evade it by saying that it does not arise out of this question.

Mr. H. Weightman: I am sorry; when the Honourable Member put his question before I did not hear him say 'South Africa'.

Mr. President: That explains it. Next question.

GRIEVANCES OF COMMERCIAL STAFF ON N. W. RAILWAY

962. *Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state whether Government have received any representation from the North Western Railway Line Commercial Staff?

(b) Is it a fact that they have to work for 60 hours a week, and further that they have been made to work for extra hours without any payment for overtime work?

(c) Is it also a fact that the pay of the Line Commercial Clerks (N.W.R.) starts from Rs. 30 and rises to Rs. 60 in about twelve years?

(d) Is it also a fact that the existing privileges regarding free passes and P.T.Os. are not fully and freely allowed to be availed of?

(e) What action, if any, do Government propose to take to redress their grievances?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) No, Sir.

(b) The Commercial Line staff have to work up to a limit of 60 hours a week or 84 hours a week according as they are classified as "Continuous" or "Essentially Intermittent" for the purposes of the Hours of Employment Regulations. When called upon to work beyond these limits, they are paid overtime as admissible under section 71-o(3) (b) of the Regulations.

(c) The lowest scales of pay for the Commercial Clerks were as given below:

(i) Rs. 33—3—60 (old)

(ii) Rs. 30—5—50—5/2—60 (revised)

(iii) Rs. 30—24—50—2—60 (revised and applicable to staff appointed from 1st October 1941 onwards).

It would take eight and twelve years respectively to reach the maximum of scales (ii) and (iii), but I may remind the Honourable Member that the minimum of these scales was increased by ten in April 1944 as a temporary measure.

(d) The reply is in the negative.

(e) No action is considered necessary.

RE-APPOINTMENT OF RETIRED SERVANTS ON RAILWAYS

963. *Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state how many retired Government servants have been re-appointed in the North Western, East Indian, and Great Indian Peninsula Railways?

(b) When do Government propose to dispense with their services?

(c) Is it a fact that some retired hands who are above 60 years of age have been re-appointed in the Survey and Construction Branch of the North Western Railway? If so, why?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) The number of retired railway servants who have been re-employed on the North Western, East Indian and G.I.P. Railways is 408, 551 and 220 respectively. The G.I.P. Railway figure does not include labourers and inferior staff.

(b) Government anticipate that, except in very exceptional cases, none of the retired railway servants who have been re-employed will be retained in service after the close of the year.

(c) Yes, owing to the urgency of the work and the fact that experienced hands with the requisite technical experience were not available, three persons have been re-appointed.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Am I to understand that the close of the year means the 31st March?

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Does that mean the 31st December 1946?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Yes, Sir.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: What is the nationality of these three men?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I have no information.

DEATH OF ONE R. ZAVIER IN POONA MAIL

†964. *Shri D. P. Karmarkar: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) whether it is a fact that on the 2nd December, 1945, at 7-30 p.m. a person named R. Xavier was found lying dead on the floor of a third class compartment when the up Poona mail from Bangalore side arrived at the Belgaum Station on the Madras and South Mahratta Railway;

(b) whether it is a fact that the compartment in which he was found had no light but that a bulb was fixed only after the passengers clamoured for it;

(c) whether it is a fact that his death was due to any accident caused by there being no light in the compartment;

(d) if not, what was found to be the cause of his death; and

(e) whether immediate arrangements are proposed to be made to light all carriages of the trains in the Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) Yes.

(b) I have not yet received information. The Railway Administration is being asked to make further enquiries and the result will be placed on the table of the House in due course.

(c) No.

(d) Heart failure.

(e) The M. and S. M., like all other railways, has experienced great difficulty in providing and maintaining adequate lighting arrangements in trains. Now that the supply of bulbs and other essentials is easier, a gradual improvement is anticipated.

†Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner being absent.

SCHEME FOR SETTING UP AN AIR BOARD

925. *Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will the Secretary for Posts and Air be pleased to state:

(a) if it is a fact that Government are thinking of setting up an Air Board or some such authority to scrutinize applications and issue licences for pilots, private aeroplane-owners, training centres, private commercial concerns interested in civil aviation, etc.; if so the details of that scheme;

(b) whether Government's consideration of the matter is over;

(c) whether an opportunity will be given to the Assembly to discuss the scheme;

(d) who is to appoint and who are to form the personnel of the Board; whether the personnel will be Indian or British; and

(e) whether Government propose to wait until the new constitution is formulated and a National Government is formed?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: (a) and (b). The rules for the licensing of air transport services published with the Posts and Air Department Notification No. 11-MA(1)/46, dated 23rd January, 1946, provide for the establishment of an Air Transport Licensing Board. A copy of the rules has been laid on the table of the House and is also available in the Library of the House. Rules 135 and 136 of these rules give details of the constitution and functions of the Board. The Government of India are taking steps to constitute this Board at an early date. The Air Transport Licensing Board is not concerned with the scrutiny of applications for or issue of Pilots' licences or similar other certificates. This work will be done, as hitherto, by the Director General of Civil Aviation in India and his officers duly authorised by him in this behalf, as laid down in the Indian Aircraft Rules.

(c) The Honourable Member is aware that the matter has been discussed in connection with the Budget Grants.

(d) The Government of India will appoint the Board in accordance with the rules already referred to. The Board has not yet been appointed.

(e) No, Sir, because Government do not desire to hold up the development of air services but it will always be open to Government in future to modify the rules if they so desire.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Has any member of this Board been appointed so far?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: No, Sir.

Mr. Manu Subedar: What about the reported appointment of the Chairman of this Board who has been imported from England?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: No Chairman has been appointed or imported, and I would like to assure the Honourable Member that no Chairman will be imported from outside.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: When these people are appointed are their appointments also terminable at short notice of two months or three months?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: No, Sir; the members are appointed for a period of years. That is laid down in the rules. But I can assure the Honourable Member, who apparently seems to think that we are going to import these people from outside, that that is not so.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Even if they are not imported from outside but happen to be Indians, why is it that the Government of India wish to anticipate the new constitution and the new Government to come by appointing these gentlemen for a period of years?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: It would be wrong to appoint any member just for one or two months. The work of the Board is concerned with the granting of licenses which involves considerable examination of the applications involved and the rules provide that the member should be appointed for a fixed period of years at the end of which the member will either retire or may be reappointed or some other member appointed. But I do not think we could stop the constituting of the Board unless the Honourable Member can give me a definite date by which the National Government is going to come.

Mr. K. O. Neogy: Is the Licensing Board going to be subordinate to the Government of India in the discharge of its duties and will its decisions be subject to appeal to the Government of India?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: The rules as they stand at present put the Licensing Board under the Department of Posts and Air, but no provision has been made for any appeal to the Government of India against the decision of the Licensing Board. It is a statutory Board and it will make its own decisions under the statutory authority. The question whether there should be an appeal tribunal or an air tribunal constituted for the purpose of providing for an appeal on specific questions is at present under consideration.

There have been suggestions made that such a tribunal may be an ad hoc tribunal constituted for any particular appeal or it may be a standing tribunal. That matter is under consideration but for the time being, I do not think there is any great hurry about it.

Mr. K. O. Neogy: Do I take it that in constituting this licensing board and placing it on the footing of a statutory authority, the Government was guided by the example of the statutory Railway authority as provided for in the present Government of India Act?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: No, Sir: I do not think we went on that particular line. We considered the problem of air transport by itself.

Mr. K. O. Neogy: The Honourable Member has referred to the statutory authority of the licensing board. Is the statutory authority going to be given to this Board under a specific legislation which is contemplated by the Government?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: No, Sir. The Assembly passed an amendment of the Indian Aircraft Act which gave power to Government to frame certain rules and rules have been framed under that section and the licensing board has been constituted under those rules. It is open to Government at any time to modify those rules and notify them and follow the procedure laid down in the Indian Aircraft Act.

Mr. K. O. Neogy: Do I take it that the Honourable Member's view is that under those rules it is possible to constitute a licensing board which would be wholly independent of the Government of India in regard to the discharge of its functions?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: We have prescribed the rules of the licensing board and laid down their functions and their powers and we expect the licensing board to act according to those rules. No provision has been made for an appeal from the decision of the licensing board to the Government of India. In fact no provision has been made for an appeal at all because it was felt that the board was constituted in such a manner that its decisions may be expected to be impartial and acceptable but suggestions were made to Government in the policy committee that there ought to be an appellate tribunal and Government have promised to examine this question of constituting a tribunal to which appeals could be made but as I said before, the question whether it should be a standing tribunal or an ad hoc tribunal will be considered.

Mr. K. O. Neogy: Do I take it that the Government of India have definitely come to the decision that the function and activities of the licensing board will be discharged independently of the Government of India. I want to know whether at least on that point the Government of India have come to a definite decision. The Honourable Member was talking about an appeal to another tribunal.

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: That is the present position. The rules provide for that for the time being.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: This is a definite decision and not liable to revision. That is what I wanted to know. Do I take it that so far as that point is concerned it is not open to revision as far as the present Government of India go?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: That is the present position but I mentioned that the question of constituting an Air Tribunal is under consideration.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Is the Honourable Member in a position to give this House an idea about the composition and functions of similar bodies in other parts of the world, particularly with reference to the control exercised by the Governments of those countries?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: In constituting the licencing board, in India, we tried to follow the Civil Aeronautics Board in the United States. In the United States, that Board consists of a certain number of members appointed by the President and they deal with all questions of what you might call permitting or licencing of air transport service both internal and external. The United Kingdom legislation provides for a licencing board but it has never been constituted and it seems no longer necessary in view of the policy of His Majesty's Government to have all air service operated by the State.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: May I know why the Government of India have decided that the air service in India will be done by companies and not by the State as in the case of the Indian Railways?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: I tried to state the policy of the Government the other day in this House but unfortunately I did not have time. The policy of the Government of India has been stated in a Press Communique. I have not got the text of it here but briefly speaking the policy is that generally air transport is to be operated by private enterprise but there is no bar to the State either taking a part in the capital of certain services or in operating any particular service entirely by the State.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: The Honourable Member is aware of the history of the Indian Railways. They started with the same idea and after 70 years' experience they found it was wrong and have taken it over as a State service. Why is the mistake of the Indian Railways being repeated?

Mr. M. A. F. Hirtzel: Will the Honourable Member say whether the States' representatives have accepted the jurisdiction of the licencing board on behalf of the Indian States?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: The matter is still under negotiation.

NON-SUPPLY OF BRASS SHEETS TO BRASS METAL WORKERS IN C. P.

955. Mr. P. B. Gole: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state:

(a) whether the Non-Ferrous Metals Officer received any communication from the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Central Provinces and Berar, bringing to the notice of the said officer, that Co-operative Associations of Brass Metal Workers in Nagpur, Bhandara, and Raipur Districts were not getting any quota of brass sheets, although these Societies consist of actual workers of brass vessels and pots;

(b) whether in consequence of the said communication any instructions were issued by the Department of Industries to the Metal Exchange Association, Bombay, to make any allotment to the said Co-operative Societies;

(c) whether any brass sheets were accordingly supplied to the said Societies;

(d) whether manufacturers in the Co-operative Societies at Nagpur, Bhandara and Raipur have not so far received any brass sheets, and whether all the workers in these Societies have to remain idle owing to the non-supply of brass sheets and consequentially have to starve?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: (a) Yes, Sir.

(b) Yes. The Metal Exchange Association, Bombay who handle the imported sheets was requested to arrange for supplies to the Societies in accordance with the general instructions issued to them by Government.

(c) It does not appear that any sheets were supplied.

(d) Government have no information. The general policy of Government is that normal trade channels should not be disturbed, but where there is reason to believe that any dealer is not keeping to his normal trade practice, Government are ready to take special steps to see that reasonable quantities reach manufacturers and workers.

Mr. P. B. Gole: May I know what are these ordinary channels of trade?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I have dealt with that in reply to the Honourable Member's next question.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Are not the co-operative societies also to be considered ordinary channels of trade?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: Hitherto, not for the purpose of receiving brass sheets.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will Government consider the recognition of these co-operative societies and thus helping the workers who have to work on this important metal to receive it at the earliest possible opportunity, without having to pay for middle men?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I am considering that very seriously, and will come to a decision after a meeting to be held on the 21st March in which all the interests will be represented.

Mr. P. B. Gole: Is the Honourable Member aware that the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, C.P. and Berar, wired that he is being handicapped on account of the non-supply of these sheets?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: But there is an overall scarcity of this metal.

Mr. P. B. Gole: Is it a fact that no reply was sent to the Registrar of Co-operative Societies in this connection?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: No, Sir.

Mr. P. B. Gole: Was any reply sent?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I cannot give the reply straightaway but the Registrar himself will be here for this meeting on the 21st of March when it is proposed to go thoroughly into the whole question.

Seth Govind Das: Was any reply sent to the Registrar? That was the question?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I think a reply was sent but I cannot give the exact date of it.

Mr. P. B. Gole: The Registrar, Co-operative Societies wired again that he has not even received the condescension of a reply from the Government of India to his wire.

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I believe that is correct. Inquiries were going on. That accounts for the delay in replying.

Seth Govind Das: How does the Honourable Member say that a reply was sent when he now says that no reply was sent to the telegram?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: The reply was probably sent after the telegram.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Is it not the policy of the Government of India to encourage cottage industries?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: Yes.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Is he not aware that the manufacturers and the co-operative societies have considerably suffered and the manufacturers have been thrown out of employment?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: That may be so.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Will Government take immediate steps to see that brass sheets are supplied to these societies through the Registrar, if necessary?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I hope to do so as soon as supplies are received. The whole question will be considered at the meeting to be held on the 21st of March.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Is it not a fact that a Conference of these manufacturers was held in Delhi and resolutions were passed in January last and were communicated to the Honourable Member's Department?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: Possibly there has been a Conference, but I have not seen the proceedings. They have not been sent to me.

Seth Govind Das: Has there been no distribution of these brass sheets to every province according to the condition of the industry which is prevailing there?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: Yes, Sir. The distribution has been according to the cottage manufacturers in each area.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Has the Honourable Member's Department given a monopoly to a few firms to import brass sheets in India?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: If the Honourable Member is referring to the manufacture of brass, certainly not. If he is considering the question of the importers, we have used the established importers.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Will the Honourable Member satisfy himself that the copies of the resolutions of the Conference held in Delhi were sent to his Department and that somebody is sitting on them because I have received a copy of them myself?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I cannot say, but I can assure the Honourable Member that if any copy was addressed to me, I should be expected to have received it by now.

Mr. P. B. Gole: Is it not a fact that these 30 tons of brass sheets were supplied to traders and dealers and not to manufacturers?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I think that question arises out of the Honourable Member's next question and not out of this.

SUPPLY OF BRASS SHEETS TO DEALERS IN PREFERENCE TO CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETIES OF BRASS METAL WORKERS

967. Mr. P. B. Gole: Will the Honourable the Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state:

(a) whether out of the quota of ninety tons of brass sheets allotted to the Central Provinces and Berar, thirty tons of brass sheets were supplied to the Bhandara Brass Metal Works Company, which are not manufacturers of brass vessels;

(b) why any quota is not being given to the Co-operative Societies of actual manufacturers, in spite of the recommendation of the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, and why any brass sheets are being supplied to dealers in brass vessels who reap enormous profits by selling brass utensils;

(c) whether Government will take immediate steps to supply these Co-operative Societies with brass sheets to enable them to earn their bread; and

(d) who were given the remaining sixty tons of brass sheets; on whose instructions any brass sheets were supplied to persons who are only dealers in brass utensils and not manufacturers?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: (a) First Part.—Yes.

Second Part.—The Bhandra Metal Works Company comprises both dealers and manufacturers.

(b) Government are considering the recommendation of the Registrar of Co-operative Societies. It is necessary to settle what would be a reasonable quantity to allocate to the Co-operative Societies and through what channels the brass sheets should be distributed to them.

(c) A meeting to discuss the issues has been convened for the 21st March 1946. The Registrar and representatives of the Metal Exchange Association, the Bhandra Metal Works Company and the Co-operative Societies, will be present.

(d) The remaining quantity was allocated to the C.P. and Berar Merchants Association against their quota of 8½ per cent of the receipts of the Metal Exchange Association. The distribution of brass sheets is made by the Metal Exchange Association in accordance with a scheme approved by the Central Government by which available supplies are distributed through normal trade channels in certain fixed proportions. Some dealers in brass utensils get them made by purchasing the sheets and handing them to workmen for fabrication. Such dealers would also receive supplies in accordance with normal practice.

Mr. P. B. Gole: May I bring to the notice of the Honourable Member the Order, dated the 6th October, 1945, in which the functions of dealers and manufacturers have been given?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I cannot recollect the terms of that at the moment.

Mr. P. B. Gole: Does not that order indicate that all these sheets should be supplied to the actual manufacturers and not to the dealers?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: This Company, as I have said, is a mixed company of dealers and manufacturers.

Mr. P. B. Gole: May I know whether it is not a fact that so far as trade channels are concerned, merchants and middlemen are making huge profits in dealing with these brass sheets?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: If they are making huge profits, I should be glad to have detailed information, because the profit allowed by Government is limited to five per cent.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Is the Honourable Member aware that the dealers organised themselves into a Society of Dealers and Manufacturers simply to get round the provisions of the Order?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: On that point my information is that this particular Metal Works Company was formed somewhere early in 1945, before the late Industries and Civil Supplies Department had formulated its policy.

Sir Mohammad Yamin Khan: May I ask if the Honourable Member has received complaints from the manufacturers of brass utensils from Moradabad to the effect that they are not getting their proper quota of these brass sheets and that they are being handicapped on account of the policy of the Government?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I have had complaints from Moradabad. As I have already said, there is at the moment an acute shortage of brass sheets.

Mr. Manu Subedar: May I ask whether Government will make a special effort to import larger quantities of brass sheets in order to supply the unsatisfied demand which exists all over the country?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: Yes, Sir. We have already made efforts, but we were rather disappointed about the quantity which we were to get from the Middle East, but we propose to renew our efforts.

Seth Govind Das: Is it not a fact that it is a complaint not only of one province but of the whole of India that these dealers are monopolising the whole quantity which is received and the real manufacturers are not receiving any quantity from them?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I cannot say how far the complaints from other parts of India, besides the Central Provinces, are true.

Sardar Mangal Singh: May I know if the Honourable Member has received any complaints from the Punjab?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: Yes, I have had a complaint from the Punjab.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Will Government make an effort to get surplus brass either in the form of scrap, ingots or sheets, which is reported to be available from Australia?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: Certainly, Sir.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Will the Government take early steps to see that these orders are not used to the disadvantage of manufacturers, particularly the village manufacturers?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: Certainly, Sir, and that is why I am having this meeting on the 21st March.

Mr. P. B. Gole: May I ask whether this Control Order, dated the 6th October, 1945, was issued by the Government of India for the benefit of manufacturers and not for the benefit of dealers?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: It was meant for the benefit of manufacturers.

Mr. P. B. Gole: Then why is it that these brass sheets are allotted to persons who are dealers and not manufacturers?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: There have been allegations and counter-allegations between the dealers and the manufacturers' societies. If I find that the dealers have not observed the rules laid down, I shall take drastic action to see that the manufacturers get what there is to give them.

Sri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar: Has the Government not received a similar complaint from Madras?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: So far as I am aware, I have had no complaint myself from Madras.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: What more evidence is required than the communication from the Registrar of Co-operative Societies that the work of these Co-operative Societies was being handicapped for want of brass sheets?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: The information that I would like to have from the Registrar of the Central Provinces is what quantity is required for each of these Societies.

Seth Govind Das: Is the Honourable Member now satisfied because Sardar Mangal Singh, Sir Mohammad Yamin Khan and another gentleman of our Party from Madras have all said that this is a universal complaint and will he now move in the matter and see that the manufacturers do receive their quota?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I entirely agree and am satisfied that the present position is unsatisfactory. I am anxious to remedy it and I wish to do all I can as soon as I have had this meeting on the 21st March.

DISMANTLED RAILWAY LINES IN U. P.

968. *Khan Bahadur Hafiz M. Ghazanfarulla: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state the names of Railway Lines which were dismantled during the war from United Provinces?

(b) What are the names of the Lines which are to be relaid, and when?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) The following railway lines in the United Provinces were dismantled during the war:

- (i) Dalmau-Daryapur;
 - (ii) Akbarpur-Tanda;
 - (iii) Bijnor-Chandpur Siau;
 - (iv) Auhadpur-Balamau;
 - (v) Cawnpore-Khairada;
 - (vi) Utraitia-Sultanpur-Zafarabad;
 - (vii) Unao-Madhoganj;
 - (viii) Barabanki-Burhwal (third rail only thus converting this mixed gauge to Metre Gauge); and
 - (ix) Burhwal-Bahramghat.
- (b) Of the above, it has already been decided to restore Cawnpore-Khairada and the restoration of the following lines is under investigation:
- (i) Bijnor-Chandpur Siau;
 - (ii) Unao-Madhoganj-Balamau; and
 - (iii) Utraitia-Sultanpur-Zafarabad.

The decision whether to restore these lines or not will depend on the results of the surveys now being carried out and until this decision is taken, it is not possible to say when the lines will be relaid.

Khan Bahadur Hafiz M. Ghazanfarulla: What about the Chandpur-Bijnor line?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: The restoration of that line is under investigation.

Maulana Zafar Ali Khan: Will the Honourable Member for Railways please lay on the table a comprehensive statement furnishing information about all the railway lines that were dismantled during the war?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I have done so on two occasions.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Will the Government give an assurance to this House that the resources of Government will not be spent on the construction of new lines, or strategic lines, but that they will be used to restore lines which were pulled down during the war?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: They will be used for all purposes.

Mr. Manu Subedar: I am sorry I am unable to understand the reply of the Honourable Member. May I ask whether Government will postpone construction of new lines, and in particular strategic lines, and whether Government will restore old lines which were dismantled?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: No, Sir.

Mr. Manu Subedar: May I know why the conveniences which were taken away during the war from the civil population should not be restored in the first instance and why should not this be given the first priority?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Because they are a financial burden on the country in most cases.

DISCRIMINATION IN THE GRANT OF UNIFIED SCALES OF PAY BETWEEN EMPLOYEES OF NASIK SECURITY PRESS AND NASIK ROAD POST OFFICE.

969. *Sardar N. G. Vinchoorkar: Will the Secretary for Posts and Air be pleased to state:

(a) whether Government are aware of the fact that the employees of the Security Printing Press at Nasik Road are allowed to draw pay in the Unified Scales of pay sanctioned for Government servants at Nasik and Nasik Road; and

(b) whether it is a fact that employees of the Nasik Road Post Office are not allowed to draw pay in the above stated Unified Scales, though the Security

Printing Press and the Nasik Road Post Office are in the same locality, which is midway between Nasik and Deolali; if so, the reasons for such discriminations?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: (a) Yes.

(b) It has recently been decided to extend the Unified Scale to employees of the Nasik Road Post Office.

GRIEVANCES DUE TO INTRODUCTION OF UNIFIED SCALES OF PAY

970. *Sardar N. G. Vinchoorkar: Is the Secretary for Posts and Air aware of the anomalous position of the clerks who joined service in 1935-36 as a result of the introduction of the unified scale since 1944? If so, do Government propose to redress their grievances by applying 'B' grade to them?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: The reply to the first part of the question is in the negative; the second part does not therefore arise.

OVER-TIME WORK IN THE POST OFFICES

971. *Sardar N. G. Vinchoorkar: Will the Secretary for Posts and Air be pleased to state:

(a) whether it is a fact that the time required according to the Time Test for doing a day's work in the Post Office exceeds the total number of hours of duty of all the staff; if so, what arrangements are made for the disposal of the work;

(b) whether it is a fact that an additional clerk is sanctioned for a Post office when the work hours exceed the total duty hours of the existing staff by more than four hours according to the Time Test; if so, when the work hours are less than four hours, whether it is a fact that the existing staff has to do overtime work; if not, whether any arrangements are made to complete the excess work, if so, whether the extra work is compensated by some allowance?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: (a) The time test which has been prescribed for determining the strength of the staff justified for a post office is not to be applied as a rigid mathematical formula. It provides margins and is to be treated as a general guide. Additional staff is sanctioned when the time required according to the time test exceeds the total number of hours of duty of the staff.

(b) The principles governing the employment of additional staff in post offices are explained in paragraphs 31 and 33 and in Appendix A2 of the Report on the Revision of Time Tests in the post office a copy of which is in the Library of the House. When the increase in work in an office does not justify the employment of an additional hand according to these principles, work can generally be managed by the existing staff without involving overtime.

Seth Govind Das: Is it not a fact that there is a general complaint in this Department that the staff of post offices have to do overtime work and they are not paid for it?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: I am answering that in the next question.

EMPLOYMENT OF ADDITIONAL STAFF IN POST OFFICES.

972. *Sardar N. G. Vinchoorkar: Will the Secretary for Posts and Air be pleased to state:

(a) whether it is a fact that additional staff was justified by Time-Test at some Post Offices but the same was not immediately employed for want of provision of funds; if so, whether the delay in employment of additional staff resulted in causing the existing staff of such offices to work beyond prescribed hours;

(b) whether the work done beyond prescribed hours owing to either inadequate staff or occasional abnormal rush of work by the Postal Staff is treated as overtime work and compensated for; if not, the reasons for paying no compensation; and

(c) if the answer to the latter part of (a) is in the affirmative, the rates of remuneration for overtime work for Post Offices?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: (a) The Honourable Member has not specified any particular instances. If he would do so, an enquiry will be made.

(b) Overtime is not a regular feature in the case of the postal staff. The work varies from day to day within certain limits. The question whether the staff should be compensated if they are required to work overtime on any particular occasion and if so how, is considered on the merits of each case.

(c) Does not arise.

SCRAPPING OF TEZPUR-BALIPARA RAILWAY

973. *Sreejut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) if it is a fact that the Tezpur Balipara Railway was condemned about seven years ago by an Inspector deputed by the Railway Board to examine the line from Rangapara North to the Tezpur Town;

(b) if it is a fact: (i) that compartments of this Railway have no doors, (ii) that the Railway lines passing through the town and thickly populated villages are not fenced, and (iii) that as a result of these frequent accidents take place; and

(c) whether Government propose to consider the desirability of scrapping this line and extending the Bengal and Assam Railway line from Rangapara North to the Tezpur Town in the near future?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) No.

(b) (i) Detailed information in regard to the types of carriages in use is not available.

(ii) according to available information the line is fenced only at stations.

(iii) Government are not aware of any accidents taking place as the result of the absence of fencing.

(c) Government have the option of acquiring the railway in 1952, and the suggestion will be fully considered before a decision is reached.

Sreejut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: With reference to parts (a) and (b) will the Government be pleased to enquire?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I have given all the available information. I have said that the line is fenced only at stations. What further information does the Honourable Member want? In reply to part (a) I have said that the railway was not condemned.

Sreejut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: In reply to the first part of (b), the Honourable Member said that detailed information was not available about the types of carriages. I asked whether the compartments have no doors.

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: In reply to part (b) (i) I said that detailed information in regard to the types of carriages in use is not available. The types of carriages are very old, some of them more than 45 years old. They have just been renovated. I do not know whether the Honourable Member really wants me to lay on the table a sketch of the carriages.

Mr. President: I believe the Honourable Member's point was about there being no doors.

Mr. Mann Subedar: Are there any carriages which have no doors?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: The Honourable Member says so.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: Open door policy.

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: This is a private railway company. I am perfectly aware that the rolling stock is old and that is one of the reasons why the Government have not acquired it at the price at which it has been offered.

Sreejuti Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: Is the Honourable Member aware that gunny bags are hanging in place of wooden doors?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I should not be surprised.

RAILWAY LINE BETWEEN RANGAPARA NOTRH AND NORTH LAKHIMPUR

974. *Sreejuti Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state if, in view of the fact, that there is no satisfactory communication between Tezpur and North Lakhimpur, steps are proposed to be taken for opening a Railway line between Rangapara North and North Lakhimpur?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: The construction of a railway line between Rangapara North and North Lakhimpur is not included in the post-war plan as it stands at present.

STOPPAGE OF TRAINS AT KAMAKHYA STATION

975. *Sreejuti Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state if it is a fact that up to 1935 a passenger train used to stop at the Kamakhya Station?

(b) Is it a fact that Hindu pilgrims to Kamakhya from all over India have been demanding the re-opening of this Station?

(c) Is it a fact that the shuttle train which has been recently running from Pandu to Gauhati also does not stop at the Kamakhya Station? If so, do Government propose to direct the stopping of at least this train at the Kamakhya station.

(d) Is it a fact that a pucca station building and a pucca platform are already provided at this station?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) Yes.

(b) Not so far as the Railway Administration are aware. They have however received one representation from Kamakhya and another from Gauhati.

(c) The answer to the first part is yes, and to the Second, no, because the normal traffic does not justify a stop at the station. At Mela times, however, when the volume of traffic warrants it, the Railway Administration propose to open the Station to passenger traffic as in pre-war years.

(d) The station building is pucca, and there is a low level platform.

Sreejuti Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: May I know what difficulty there is in stopping one of the shuttle trains at Kamakhya?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: The normal traffic there does not justify the stopping of the train. The expenses incurred in stopping are heavy.

Sreejuti Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: Is it a fact that recently a number of shuttle trains between Pandu and Gauhati has been introduced in order to compete with bus service? If so, can the Government not stop one of these shuttle trains at that station?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: The Honourable Member should take up the matter with the Local Advisory Council for Railways.

LOSS IN THE STATE RAILWAY COAL DEPARTMENT THROUGH FAULTY SUPERVISION

976. *Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please state if it is a fact that the Railway Board have commented that the Chief Mining Engineer, Railway Board, Mr. J. R. Harrison, has a tendency to give rates to the contractors?

(b) Who is the Raising and Haulage Contractor of Hetla Pit (Serampore Colliery)?

(c) Is it a fact that originally the contract was given as a Works Contract without calling for tenders? Who gave such contract, and was he authorised to do so?

(d) Are Government aware that twice during the last five years State Railways Coal Department had lost to the extent of about four lakhs of rupees through fraud in supply of timber or through faulty supervision and watch and ward of stores? What action was taken in the matter?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: (a) No, Sir.

(b) Mr. A. J. Chanchani.

(c) Yes, Sir. The contract was sanctioned by the C.M.E., Railway Board, who is the competent authority, on the recommendation of the Colliery Manager and Colliery Superintendent. The rates for the work were based on approved rates for similar work.

(d) No, Sir, no such loss has been incurred during the last five years.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Why were not tenders called for?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: Because I imagine the work was urgent and the rates quoted were at the sanctioned rates.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Is there no higher authority to investigate into the propriety or otherwise of these rates from time to time in the Central Government over the rates that are given by the Local Governments?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: They have to be justified to the Railway Board.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: How many such cases have arisen on account of the urgency of the work, where tenders were not called for but contracts were given straightaway?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I want notice.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: What was the urgency in this particular case?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I would have to enquire into it. I imagine, it was during the war when there was acute shortage of labour, contractors, and coal.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Does the Honourable Member enquire into cases where deviation is made in the matter of giving contracts where tenders are not called for?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: These cases are enquired into.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Has this particular case been enquired into?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I want notice.

PAYMENT OF DEARNESS ALLOWANCE TO THE EMPLOYEES OF CONTRACTORS OF STATE RAILWAY COLLIERIES

977. *Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please state the procedure by which payment of dearness allowance to the employees of contractors of the State Railway Collieries of Giridih and Bokaro is ensured by the Railway Board?

(b) Is it a fact that contractors working the quarries of the State Railway Collieries of Bokaro and Giridih are fully or partly misappropriating the dearness allowance which is meant for the workers under the contractors and which the Railway Board is paying out to the contractors?

(c) Is it a fact that this fact of misappropriation by contractors of dearness allowance meant for the workers has been brought to the notice of the Chief Mining Engineer, Railway Board, a number of times including the local management but no tangible action has been taken so far?

(d) If these corrupt practices by the contractors are true do Government propose to arrange payment of the dearness allowance to the contractors' employees departmentally?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: (a) Dearness Allowance to Contractors' labour is paid through the Contractors whose books and accounts are examined periodically by Colliery Managers and Colliery Superintendents to ensure that payment is actually made. The contractors' books are also examined by the Accounts Officers.

This payment is very carefully watched and scrutinised by the colliery management.

(b) No, Sir.

(c) Complaints have been received by the Chief Mining Engineer, Railway Board and the Colliery Superintendents but investigations by the Colliery Managements showed that the allegations were unfounded.

(d) The question does not arise.

Sri. M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: In view of the fact that allegations are made that monies sanctioned as dearness allowances are not paid by contractors straightaway to coolies, what is the objection of the Honourable Member to have these amounts paid to the coolies departmentally instead of handing over the same to the contractors and thereafter merely looking into their accounts whether correct entries are made or not? Why don't you disburse this departmentally?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: Because these complaints were found to be unfounded. It does not really pay the contractor to cheat his own labour, because it will be ruinous to him in the long run. There is no reason why more work should be taken on by the Government officials.

Diwan Chaman Lal: How did the Government come to the conclusion that these complaints were unfounded? What was the nature of the enquiry which the Government made?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: This is a matter of some years ago. I have not got details.

Diwan Chaman Lal: Is it not a fact that the workers were not consulted by those who made the enquiry?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I imagine they were consulted by the colliery management.

Diwan Chaman Lal: Does my Honourable friend merely imagine it or does he know?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: No; I do not know.

Diwan Chaman Lal: Will my Honourable friend then make an inquiry into the matter and find out what the nature of the inquiry was?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I am not prepared to go into a matter which is quite old and which was proved to be unfounded.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Is it not a fact that once these coolies, who are supplied by the contractors, expose the contractors, they will be dismissed by them and that they are at the mercy of the contractors?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: They cannot be dismissed.

Mr. President: The question hour is over.

(b) WRITTEN ANSWERS

MALPRACTICES IN THE SYSTEM OF GIVING CONTRACTS IN COAL FIELDS

978. *Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please state if it is a fact that for work in the quarries of the Serampore Colliery and Jatkuti Hills heading in Kurharbaree, bills have been paid to contractors for clearing overburden for which no actual or commensurate work has been done? Do Government propose to get the whole region resurveyed and see that such malpractices are stopped?

(b) In view of the malpractices which the system of giving out contracts in coalfields entail and in view of the recommendation of the Royal Commission on Labour on the subject, does the Honourable Member propose to see that the State Railways' Coal Department discontinue the practice of giving contracts in raising, haulage and loading of coal and do the entire work departmentally?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: (a) No, Sir, the contractors have been paid for clearing overburden on actual measurements done by colliery Surveyors, checked by colliery Managers, and countersigned by colliery Superintendents. The question of resurvey does not, therefore, arise.

(b) I do not admit that the present system entails malpractices. The question of departmental working versus contract working in railway collieries has several times been examined by Government, and it has always been concluded that the contract system is the better, as it ensures an adequate labour force giving an adequate output.

QUALIFICATIONS OF ELECTRICAL CHARGEMAN IN BOKARO

979. *Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please state who is the present Electrical Charge-man in Bokaro? What are his qualifications and when did he enter the service and on what pay? Is it a fact that he superseded many seniors to him? Is he in any way related to the Personal Assistant to the Chief Mining Engineer, Railway Board?

(b) What is the number of coal tub bodies supplied to the Giridih and Bokaro State Railway Collieries and at what cost per coal tub body? If the cost of manufacturing the coal tub body in Beniadih Railway Workshop is much cheaper, why was the contract given to a firm outside? Is the Personal Assistant to the Chief Mining Engineer, Railway Board, in any way connected with the firm? What is the name of the firm?

(c) What steps does the Honourable Member propose to take in view of the many instances of corruption and mal-practices in the Giridih and Bokaro State Railway Collieries for full-fledged enquiry, detection and punishment of those persons responsible for such mal-practices and which deprived the public revenues of crores of rupees?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: (a) Mr. S. C. Bannerji. He holds the qualifications required for an Electrical Chargeman. He entered service in 1934 on a pay of Rs. 50; he did not supersede any one; he is the son of the Personal Assistant to the Chief Mining Engineer, Railway Board.

(b) The number of coal tub bodies supplied is as follows:

Giridih—400 at Rs. 212 each;

Bokaro—106 at Rs. 235 each.

The Beniadih workshop was engaged to its full capacity on repair work at the time these coal tub bodies were required.

The tubs for Giridih Collieries were supplied by M/s. S. Dass & Brothers, and the tubs for Bokaro by M/s. Hardware Trading Co.

The personal Assistant to the Chief Mining Engineer, Railway Board, is not in any way connected with these firms.

(c) In view of the replies to parts (a) and (b) of the question, part (c) does not arise.

CONSTRUCTION OF OVERBRIDGE AT BACHHRAWAN STATION

980. *Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state whether he has received any complaint from the President of the Bachhrawan Congress Committee for the construction of an overbridge at the Bachhrawan Station; and if so, what action, if any, does he propose to take thereon?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Yes. The request for the construction of an overbridge at Bachhrawan has been passed on to the General Manager E. I. Railway who is the authority competent to deal with this matter.

SUBSTITUTION OF ADULTERATED GHEE FOR PURE GHEE FOR SUPPLY TO N. W. RAILWAY SERVANTS IN KASHMIR

981. *Seth Sukhdev: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) whether Government are aware that only pure ghee and no other kind of ghee is allowed to be sold in the Kashmir and Jammu State;

(b) whether it is a fact that pure ghee worth Rs. 2,000 was purchased for supply to the Railwaymen at concessional rates at stations in the Kashmir and Jammu State;

(c) whether it is a fact that the pure ghee was substituted by some one by vegetable or adulterated stuff;

(d) whether it is a fact that the State authorities reported the matter to the North Western Railway Administration; and

(e) whether Government propose to make a brief statement in regard to the incident, the result of any enquiry and the action taken?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) to (d). The reply is in the affirmative.

(e) The question is already under investigation.

SELECTION FOR POSTS ON NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY

982. *Seth Sukhdev: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) whether it is a fact that selections for posts on the North Western Railway are made in accordance with statutory rules contained in the State Railway Establishment Code;

(b) whether a selection for Food Inspectors on the Karachi Division of the North Western Railway was made early this year;

(c) whether it is a fact that certain candidates were selected in the order of merit; if so, whether the Honourable Member proposes to place a list of the selected candidates in the order of merit on the table of the House;

(d) whether it is a fact that the results of the selections were not announced and that the same were cancelled; if so, why;

(e) the rules on the subject of cancellation of results of selections once arrived at, and where they are published; and

(f) if no powers exist for the cancellation of selection results, whether it is proposed to direct the North Western Railway Administration to conform to the result of the first selection; if not, why not?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) to (f). I have called for information, which I will lay on the table of the House in due course, except that asked for in the latter portion of part (c) of the question, in regard to which I regret I do not consider that any public interest would be served by complying with the Honourable Member's request.

LOSS OF SUGAR AND WHEAT IN RATIONING DEPARTMENT AT MUGHALPURA

983. *Seth Sukhdev: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) whether it is a fact that stock verification of the Workshop Sub-Division of the Rationing Department at Mughalpura was made in June-July 1945;

(b) whether it is a fact that 2,000 maunds of sugar and 5,000 maunds of wheat were found short; if so whether the debit for their cost was raised and paid up;

(c) if no debit was raised, how the amount was adjusted;

(d) whether it is a fact that the Accounts Branch of the North Western Railway was unable to get any reply in regard to the adjustment of shortages; and

(e) the total amount of debit, and who was responsible for the loss?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) The stock-verification of the Workshop sub-division was carried out in May and June 1945.

(b) No.

(c) The value of quantities actually found short at the stock verification was written off except a few cases which are still under examination.

(d) Replies to queries in the stock sheets were received and action taken thereon. In certain cases, however, further objections were raised and these are still under correspondence.

(e) As the net shortage was within the permissible limit no debit has so far been raised and nobody has so far been held responsible for the loss.

CONSTRUCTION OF A PROPER CULVERT NEAR MAU JUNCTION RAILWAY STATION

984. *Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) if it is a fact that near the distant signal on the Aurihar side of the Mau Junction Railway Station on the Oudh Tirhut Railway, there is a Railway culvert over a stream;

(b) whether this is the only method of crossing from the Railway side to the other;

(c) whether the whole topography of the place was changed because of the high embankment of the Railway, causing water logging;

(d) whether many accidents resulting even in deaths have taken place while men walked across this culvert;

(e) if the Railway Administration propose to broaden the culvert and put balustrades to enable people to go across in safety; and

(f) if they propose to put up light there at nights pending the construction of a proper culvert?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) Yes.

(b) This is the only bridge in the vicinity of the station. The bed of the stream is dry for the greater part of the year and, during the short period when water flows the stream is believed to be fordable.

(c) No. Adequate waterway exists in the railway bank for drainage.

(d) No records of such accidents are available.

(e) The culvert has been provided for passing only railway traffic over the stream. The provision of facilities for the public to cross the stream would appear to be the responsibility of the civil authorities.

(f) No.

RESTORATION OF HARIANA EXPRESS RAILWAY SERVICE

985. *Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) where the shuttle train (Engine and Compartments combined) which used to run between Hissar and Delhi and was known as Haryana Express is at present;

(b) when the running of this train was discontinued, and for what reasons;

(c) if it is a fact that the said train was sent to some foreign country and that it has now been received back;

(d) if it is a fact that it took only four to five hours to reach Delhi from Hissar, whereas double the amount of time is required to perform this journey at present; and

(e) whether Government will be pleased to consider the advisability of restoring the service of the said train as soon as possible; if not, what objections or obstacles there exist to the resumption of the said service?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) and (c). The Hariana Express was run with an ordinary engine and coaches, and was not,—as the Honourable Member assumes,—a rail-coach service. The stock was not sent abroad for war purposes.

(b) Between Rewari and Hissar on the 22nd August, 1941, and between Rewari and Delhi on the 1st September, 1941. The service which was introduced in competition with the road, was discontinued in pursuance of the general policy of curtailing all but the most essential passenger services, in order to conserve Railway resources for the movement of vital war-time military and civil traffic.

(d) The Hariana Express took six hours between Hissar and Delhi. As there is now no through train between these places, the journey takes 11½ hours.

(e) The service cannot be re-introduced in the very near future owing to the general shortage of coaching stock. Railway Administrations are, however, alive to the necessity of restoring, as and when more coaching stock and power become available, all passenger services for which there is a justification in the volume of traffic offering. Nevertheless, I am bringing the Honourable Member's question to the notice of the B. B. and C. I. Railway Administration.

LIGHT RAILWAYS ON N. W. RAILWAY

986. *Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) the names of Light Railways which are connecting wayside towns to Railway Stations of the North Western Railway at present with less than twenty miles of distance;

(b) the number of times these Light Railways failed during the last six months to convey passengers to Main Railway Stations in time to enable them to catch the connecting trains on the North Western Railway; and

(c) the reasons for such failure in general?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) I am afraid I am not clear as to what light railways the Honourable Member has in mind: the only light Railway that fits his description is the Jagadhri Light Railway.

(b) and (c). In the absence of a definite indication of which light railways are meant, I have been unable to have the required information collected. In any case I doubt if the time and labour involved in its collection would be commensurate with the value of the results to be obtained.

SHORT SUPPLY OF BUILDING MATERIAL

987. *Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies kindly state:

(a) if Government are aware that on account of shortage of supply of coal and iron materials many school and hospital buildings and other works of charitable and philanthropic nature as well as private houses are awaiting construction in various parts of the country;

(b) if Government are aware that in certain parts of the Punjab pucca bricks are available at no less than four or five times of their pre-war prices and that iron girders are not available at all; and

(c) whether Government propose to take any steps to increase the supply of coal, iron girders, etc., in the mofussil areas of the Punjab with a view to enabling people to build schools, hospitals and private houses in the near future; if so, when?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: (a) Not specifically, but I am aware that building generally has been held up for lack of materials.

(b) I have no information.

(c) I invite the Honourable Member's attention to the answer given by the Honourable Member for Labour, to part (b) of Mr. Manu Subedar's question No. 469, on 25th February, 1946. Government attach great importance to acceleration of building and will do their best to make building materials available.

REDUCTION OF SURPLUS STAFF ON RAILWAYS

988. *Diwan Chaman Lall: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state whether in reducing surplus staff on Railways, it is proposed to invite voluntary resignations and premature retirements of staff by giving them some liberal terms?

(b) If the reply to (a) above be in the affirmative, will he please give particulars of the terms so offered?

(c) What steps have been taken by the Railway Board to action the instructions contained in the Labour Department's letter, dated the 20th July, 1945, on the principles of reduction of staff?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) The reply is in the negative.

(b) Does not arise.

(c) Railways have been directed to provide special facilities in regard to the grant of leave to staff by utilising surplus staff. Other measures are under constant consideration and appropriate steps will be taken when considered necessary. At present the policy is to absorb as many surplus staff as are possible in postwar reconstruction and other schemes, and to avoid as much as possible depriving railways of trained and experienced staff whose services would be indispensable in future railway operation and to the working out of the post-war development programme.

GRANT OF UNEARNED LEAVE TO RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

989. *Diwan Chaman Lall: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) whether it is a fact that the provisions of Rule 2121(c), Fundamental Rule 81(c), in regard to grant of leave to Railway employees in advance, are not usually put into operation;

(b) whether it is a fact that in cases in which leave not due has been enjoyed and wages drawn, it is subsequently cancelled and amount of wages recovered; if so, under what provision of the Payment of Wages Act, such deductions are made; and

(c) whether Government will consider the issue of instructions that in all cases in which reasonable prospects exist that the employee would earn leave enjoyed in advance it should not be refused; if not, the basis for exercise of discretion by officers to grant leave not due?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) Government are not aware of any complaints from employees on this question but the number of cases in which the question of grant of leave not due arises cannot be considerable.

(b) If the Honourable Member will specify the railway or railways where this has taken place and favour me with details of such cases, the matter will be enquired into further, and instructions will be issued if found necessary.

(c) The grant of leave 'not due' is, like the grant of other leave, subject to the exigencies of the service. The principles underlying the grant of leave not due are explained in rule 710(2) of the State Railway Establishment Code Volume I, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

VICTORY BONUSES TO RAILWAY MEN

990. *Diwan Chaman Lall: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state whether the Railway Board recommended the grant to Railwaymen of Victory Bonus equal to three months pay? When is the Bonus likely to be paid? If not, why not?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: The question of a victory bonus to railway employees has been considered in its relation to the general question of a similar bonus to all employees of Government, but it has been decided not to pursue the question further for reasons which are mainly economic and financial.

POSTS ABOVE RS. 500 IN CIVIL AVIATION DEPARTMENT.

991. *Mr. Manu Subedar: (a) Will the Secretary for Posts and Air please state how many places above Rs. 500 existed in the Civil Aviation Department at the time of the stoppage of hostilities with Germany? Who were the people occupying such places, and what were their qualifications?

(b) How many new places have since been created, or are proposed to be created, and in what manner are these places to be filled up?

(c) What efforts are being made to secure the services of every outstanding Indian, who has experience in the line?

(d) Is it by direct approaches or by advertisements, or do Government propose to use any other means?

(e) Why are these places being filled up with imported men without a chance being given to Indians?

(f) What steps, if any, do Government propose to take in order that in future at least these places should go to Indians?

Sir Gurnath Bewoor: (a) The information asked for is being collected and will be laid on the table of the House as soon as possible.

(b) A statement is laid on the table showing the posts, which have been or are proposed to be created during 1946-1947 in the new organisation of the Civil Aviation Department. Some of the posts are in replacement of certain existing posts. Recruitment to these posts will be made by selection, by advertisement and interview or by promotion of suitable existing officers of the Department.

(c) and (d). By advertisement and by circulation to officers in the Royal Indian Air Force and other defence services.

(e) It is not correct to say that the places are being filled up without a chance being given to Indians. Only in cases where suitable Indians with the requisite qualifications and experience are not available, have non-Indians been appointed.

(f) In view of my reply to parts (c), (d) and (e) this question does not arise.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT HELP BY THE AIR SERVICES OF INDIA, LTD.

992. *Mr. Manu Subedar: (a) Will the Secretary for Posts and Air please state whether any approach has been made by the Air Services of India, Limited, to Government for help or subsidy or facilities for purchasing plans or licence to run new routes? If so, what replies have Government given to this Company?

(b) Is it a fact that between 1937 and 1940 this Company was responsible for somewhere near eighty per cent. of traffic carried by air inside India? If so, what has led Government to leave this Company out of the scheme for subsidised and aided civil aviation by private enterprise in India?

Sir Gurnath Bewoor: (a) During the war the Air Services of India, Ltd., made repeated proposals that they should be employed to operate air services on behalf of the Government and they were informed that as they had no organisation it was impracticable to accede to their request during the war. No specific request for subsidy or financial assistance to the Company to operate air services in the post-war period has been received, and while the Government are in constant communication with the Company concerning the details of their plans, the question of a licence to operate air services does not arise until the date prescribed in the rules for the licensing of air transport services which is 1st October 1946. The company asked for and were given advice about the purchase of aircraft and have now purchased them.

(b) The answer to the first part of the question is in the negative.

As regards the second part, the company has not been left out. It is not yet organised for operation.

WANT OF WAGONS FOR CARRYING CLOTH TO BIHAR.

993. *Babu Ram Narayan Singh: Will the Honourable Member for Railways please state whether it is a fact that for want of wagons, the Bihar quota of cloth has, for months, been lying in the Ahmedabad Mills and not taken to its proper place for distribution and if so, why?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: No, Sir. The movement of the Bihar quota of cloth from Ahmedabad has been made regularly during recent months. The following are the figures of the number of bales despatched:

October 1945	8,895 bales
November 1945	6,967 "
December 1945	8,761 "
January 1946	6,784 "

In the first twelve days of February, 1946, 4,628 bales were despatched, and on the 15th February 1946, 1,298 bales were awaiting despatch.

NEW CONSTRUCTION OF RAILWAYS IN BIHAR

994. *Babu Ram Narayan Singh: Will the Honourable Member for Railways please state whether in the proposed new construction of Railways in Bihar, he is prepared to consult the Congress and other non-official organisations with regard to their alignments and if so, when and how?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: The present plan of new constructions has been formulated after full consultations with Provincial Governments. It has been assumed that the Provincial Governments have consulted public opinion.

If the Congress or other non-official organisations have any suggestions to make with regard to the alignments of the projects under investigations or in regard to the construction of new lines, they may be forwarded to the Railway Board where they will doubtless receive the most careful consideration.

IRREGULARITIES IN FOODGRAIN PURCHASES BY SENIOR FOOD CONTROL OFFICER, O. T. RAILWAY

995. *Mr. Muhammad Nauman: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Railways be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the Senior Food Control Officer of Oudh and Tirhut Railway is alleged to have indulged in all sorts of irregularities in connection with foodgrains purchase and its priority movements during the time he was in charge of the "Food Department" on Oudh and Tirhut Railway?

(b) Has the matter been entrusted to the enquiry by Police at Gorakhpur and has the report been furnished to the Oudh and Tirhut Administration or the Railway Board?

(c) Has it been found that he used to write private letters to the Regional Food Control Officer of Bihar to help individual merchants for securing permits in 1945 for Urad Dal from Naugachia Station (Oudh and Tirhut Railway) to Gorakhpur although this commodity was not required by the Railway Food Department of the Oudh and Tirhut Railway?

(d) How many appointments in the Oudh and Tirhut Railway Food Department were made by the present Senior Food Control Officer and what was the number of Muslims in these appointments?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) and (b). There is nothing to indicate that the allegation against the present senior Food Control Officer is correct. It is understood that certain vendors with whom purchase orders for Dal Urd were placed by the O. T. Railway Food Department brought 17,690 maunds of Urd and Dal Urd, as against 6,418 maunds required by the Railway Food Department, from certain stations in Bihar to the U. P. without the requisite permits, thereby infringing the embargo placed by the Bihar Government on the movement of foodgrains. The irregularity was reported by the railway administration to the Bihar Government and the matter is said to be under investigation by the Bihar Government.

(c) Government are informed that in one case the senior Food Control Officer recommended a vendor for a permit for 1,750 maunds of Dal Urd ex-Naugachia to Gorakhpur, but as the accepted tender was for a quality of Dal which was not available at Naugachia, the permit was stopped. In the meantime supply had been made from another source.

(d) The information is being collected and will be laid on the table of the House in due course.

PURCHASE OF SEVENTY THOUSAND PAIRS OF CHAPPALS BY O. T. RAILWAY SENIOR FOOD CONTROL OFFICER

996. *Mr. Muhammad Nauman: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Railways be pleased to state whether it is a fact that seventy thousand pairs of chappals were purchased by the Oudh and Tirhut Railway under orders of the Senior Food Control Officer?

(b) Were all these chappals required by the Oudh and Tirhut Railway and were they absorbed by the staff in the same year?

(c) Was any committee of enquiry set up to verify the requirements, source of supply and method of purchase during the regime of this Officer?

(d) If the reply to part (c) be in the affirmative, will the Honourable Member give the summary of the report and the action taken in the matter?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) No; only 13,375 pairs were purchased.

(b) The chappals were ordered by the officer concerned under a belief that they would be required for sale to the employees of the O. T. Railway. But the expectation did not materialise and 12,726 pairs are lying unsold.

(c) The reply is in the affirmative.

(d) Government have not so far received the report with the recommendations of the General Manager, O. T. Railway, who is examining the same.

PURCHASE OF ARHAR DAL FOR THE O. T. RAILWAY.

997. *Mr. Muhammad Nauman: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Railways be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the Senior Food Controller of Oudh and Tirhut Railway secured permit from Regional Food Control Officer Gorakhpur for nearly forty thousand maunds of Arhar Dal and that this quantity was despatched from Gorakhpur to Samastipur?

(b) Is it a fact that only five thousand maunds of Arhar Dal was required by the Oudh and Tirhut Railway Food Department at Samastipur and balance of thirty five thousand maunds was made over to merchants at Samastipur for selling the same in open market?

(c) Is the Honourable Member aware that the merchants earned a profit of over two and a half lakh of rupees as the difference in prices of the United Provinces and Bihar Arhar Dal was nearly six rupees per maund?

(d) Is it a fact that Accounts Department of the Oudh and Tirhut Railway has furnished full report to the Oudh and Tirhut Administration and to the Railway Board in these matters of irregularities?

(e) If reply to part (d) be in the affirmative, will the Honourable Member be pleased to state what action has been taken in this matter?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) Yes, except that the total quantity exported in the name of the Food Department during the period covered by the permits from different stations in the U. P. for certain stations in Bihar was 48,237 maunds.

(b) No, the quantity taken over by the O. T. Railway Food Department was 88,524 maunds.

(c) Government have no information.

(d) The Accounts Department of the Railway did not submit any report in this connection, as it was not at that time considered to be an Accounts matter and as it was understood that the Regional Food Control Officer, Gorakhpur, was making certain enquiries about the supplies made against the permits issued by him. The Railway Administration has however recently ordered a further enquiry.

(e) Does not arise.

RE-ORGANIZATION OF THE STORE DEPARTMENT OF O. T. RAILWAY.

998. *Mr. Muhammad Nauman: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Railways be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the Store Department of the Oudh and Tirhut Railway has been the subject of "Reorganisation" since about a year and that a new officer has been given the charge as "Controller of Stores"?

(b) What is the qualification of this newly appointed officer and what experience of "Store Department" he has?

(c) How many new appointments were made in the new "Re-organisation of the Store Department" and what is the number of Muslims?

(d) What improvements have been made in the Store Department since the "Re-organisation scheme" has been under the present Controller of Stores and what difference in the expenditure incurred on the department has been found?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) and (b). Yes, except that the officer concerned has not been newly appointed, but has been transferred from the Bengal Assam Railway in view of his 30 years' continuous experience of Stores Department work on Railways.

(c) Of the 150 new subordinate employees engaged in this connection, 86 are Muslims.

(d) The re-organization of the ex-Company's Stores administration with a view to introducing essential State Railway procedure and forms as required by the State Railway Stores Code, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House, is progressing satisfactorily. As regards the latter portion, it is too early yet to assess the financial results of the re-organization.

(c) When are these contracts due for renewal?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) I lay on the table a list of contractors for all types of catering and vending on the entire O. T. Railway.

(b) No. Out of the five contractors for Indian refreshment rooms, two are Muslims.

DISPOSAL OF STOCKS OF ARMY VEHICLES AND STORES.

1000. *Mr. E. O. Morris: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please state:

(a) when lists will be available from the Director General of Disposals, detailing the army vehicles and stores (U.S. and British), by types, in stock for disposal; and

(b) when the prices of the above will be known; also their condition and delivery points?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: (a) Catalogues of all surpluses will be issued monthly by the Director General of Disposals. It is expected that the first catalogue will be ready in April 1946.

(b) The price policy is under consideration but this will be settled before surpluses are available for disposal. The location of stores and their condition will be indicated in the catalogues.

INCREASED TRAVELLING ALLOWANCE AND OTHER RELIEF TO BLOCK MAINTAINERS ON N. W. RAILWAY.

1001. *Seth Sukhdev: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) whether it is a fact that travelling allowance admissible to the Railway employees has been increased on the North Western Railway; if so, the percentage of increase;

(b) whether any travelling allowance is paid to the Block Maintainers;

(c) if reply to (b) above be in the negative, what relief has been given to the Block Maintainers to compensate them for increased expenses during their tour on duty;

(d) if it is a fact that certain categories of staff not entitled to travelling allowance have been given some compensation towards travelling allowance; and

(d) Yes.

(e) if it is proposed to give a similar relief to the Block Maintainers; if not, why not?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) The reply to the first portion is in the affirmative. As regards the second portion, the increase in the travelling allowance admissible to non-gazetted employees is about 50 per cent.

(b), (c) and (e). The Honourable Member is referred to my reply to parts (b) and (e) of his Starred Question No. 844, asked on 12th March 1946.

(d) Yes.

PUBLICATION OF REPORTS OF ROGER AND GRADY MISSIONS

1002. *Seth Govind Das: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please state:

(a) whether and if so, when the Government of India propose to publish the reports of the Roger Mission and the Grady Mission; and

(b) whether Government propose to consider the question of publishing the same as early as possible, in view of the fact that the statistical and factual details would be of great assistance on the industrialists of the country?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: (a) and (b). With regard to the Grady Mission, I invite the Honourable Member's attention to the answer given on 27th February, 1946, to question 541.

Government will examine the question in relation to the Reports of the Roger Mission.

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

TRANSFER OF CERTAIN TIMBER TRANSPORT PRIORITIES AND PERMITS

122. Seth Govind Das: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state whether he is aware of the fact that the Timber Transport Advisory Committee at Nagpur issued timber transport priorities and permits in favour of a Forest Contractor of Seoni, District Chhindwara, Central Provinces and that the District Traffic Superintendent, Bengal and Nagpur Railway, Nainpur, transferred three of these in favour of a dealer of Delhi without any authority to do so and in spite of the instructions of the Chairman of the Timber Transport Advisory Committee, Nagpur?

(b) Is it not a fact that this matter was brought to the notice of the Chairman, Timber Transport Advisory Committee, the District Traffic Superintendent, Bengal and Nagpur Railway, Nainpur, and the anti-corruption department of the Government of India? Has any inquiry been made in the matter? If so, with what results?

(c) What steps do Government propose to take in the matter now?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall:- (a) The Honourable Member has not indicated the date of the occurrence, but it is assumed that he is referring to a transaction of May or June 1943, relating to the allotment of ten wagons for the transport of sawn timber from Seoni to New Delhi. The inquiry I have had made into the matter reveals that the District Traffic Superintendent, Nainpur, did not act in contravention of the instructions he had received from the Chairman of the Timber Transport Advisory Committee.

(b) As it was suspected that there was some irregularity somewhere, the matter was investigated by the Special Police Staff, War Department. The inquiry showed that no irregularity had been committed by the District Traffic Superintendent or his office.

(c) In view of the reply to (a) and (b) this does not arise.

PURCHASES OF TIMBER BY CENTRAL GOVERNMENT.

123. Seth Govind Das: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state whether the Central Government made purchases of timber through the Forest Department of the Government of Central Provinces and Berar?

(b) If so, is it a fact that the Supply Department instructed the said Government to charge a certain fixed percentage on rates fixed by the Supply Department and in spite of these instructions the purchasing authorities charged more than the scheduled percentage thereby making a profit of more than 20 per cent. permitted under the Defence of India Rules?

(c) Is it a fact that the purchasing authority at the same place and at the same time has made purchase at different rates for similar material and thus no uniform policy has been followed, resulting in favouritism? What steps do Government propose to take to remedy the injustice and inequality thus perpetrated and the financial loss suffered by the dealers who were unable to sell the material in open market due to complete control of transport of timber by Government?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: (a) Yes, Sir.

(b) No, Sir. The Supply Department purchased timber from the Government of C. P. and Berar at scheduled rates negotiated between the two Governments from time to time. No instructions were issued from the Supply Department to the C. P. and Berar Government laying down the prices at which the latter were to purchase timber from their contractors. The Supply Department were, however, aware that the C. P. and Berar Government were making purchases at prices below the scheduled rates paid by the Central Government. This difference was intended to cover the overhead charges of the C. P. Forest Department in connection with the purchase, production and handling of the timber, and not with the object of making profit.

(c) The rates paid by the Provincial authorities for timber bought by them were fixed under agreements drawn up between them and the suppliers. As conditions differed widely from division to division, the overhead charges were different in different localities, and the suppliers too offered varying terms, with the result that the margin of difference between the scheduled rates at which the Supply Department brought timber from the C. P. and Berar Government, and the rates agreed between the Provincial authorities and their suppliers, also varied.

As far as is known, no compulsion was brought to bear upon forest contractors, timber merchants and private forest owners to sell their timber at rates unacceptable to them, and in the case of those persons who did not wish to sell their timber, the rates to be paid to them were fixed under the agreements drawn up between the supplier and the territorial officer concerned.

The quantities of timber purchased by the C. P. and Berar Government from forest contractors, timber merchants and private owners in 1943-44 and 1944-45 represented only about 15 per cent. of the total quantities supplied by the C. P. and Berar Forest Department to the late Supply Department in each of these years, the remainder being produced by departmental agency from the Government Reserved Forests.

In view of the position as explained above, the latter part of question does not arise.

TRAVELLING ALLOWANCE TO G. I. P. RAILWAY EMPLOYEES.

124. Seth Sukhdev: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) whether it is a fact that no travelling allowance is allowed to employees on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway for work for a distance of more than five miles from their Headquarters Station;

(b) whether such a travelling allowance is refused on the plea that the distance by rail-cum-road is short of five miles;

(c) whether it is a fact that according to rule 208 of the Establishment Code, distance is to be calculated on an open line of a Railway; if not, what other instructions have been issued by the Railway Board on the subject; and

(d) if no instructions have so far been issued, whether it is proposed to clarify that the distance is to be on the open line of a Railway?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) to (d). I regret I am not quite clear what the Honourable Member means. In accordance with Rules 208 and 208 of the State Railway Establishment Code, Volume I, daily allowance is admissible to a railway servant, who is not in receipt of a permanent travelling allowance, for a journey on an open line of a railway, if he proceeds on tour beyond a radius of 5 miles from his headquarters, the distance being calculated from the railway station, provided the duration of his absence from headquarters is not less than 8 consecutive hours. These rules apply on the G. I. P. Railway.

SANCTIONED POSTS IN CERTAIN CATEGORIES OF RAILWAY STAFF

125. Seth Sukhdev: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) the total number of sanctioned posts in various grades of the following categories of staff on the North Western Railway, separately, for each Division on the 1st January, 1946—

- (i) Station and Assistant Station Masters,
- (ii) Signallers,
- (iii) Goods Clerks,
- (iv) Parcel Clerks,
- (v) Booking Clerks,
- (vi) Train Clerks,
- (vii) Electric and Carriage Clerks,
- (viii) Ticket Collectors,
- (ix) Guards, and
- (x) Train Examiners;

(b) the percentage of leave reserve sanctioned and actual percentage for each Division; and

(c) if the actual percentage is below the sanctioned percentage, what steps are being taken to fill up the posts; if none, why?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I have called for the information and will lay it on the table of the House in due course.

SELECTION OF RAILWAY FOOD INSPECTORS AT KARACHI

126. Seth Sukhdev: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) whether it is a fact that a selection for Food Inspectors was held at Karachi on the North Western Railway in January last;

(b) whether the results of the first selection were cancelled and a further selection held in February;

(c) whether it is a fact that in the first selection the first two places were secured by Hindus;

(d) whether it is a fact that in the second selection, the first place was secured by a Muslim;

(e) whether it is a fact that the first selection was cancelled by the Divisional Personnel Officer, North Western Railway with the approval of the Senior Assistant Personnel, North Western Railway Headquarters, Lahore;

(f) whether both these officers are Muslims; and

(g) what steps Government propose to take to ensure fairness and observance of rules of procedure in selections?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I have called for the information and will lay the same on the table of the House in due course.

DEPOSITS FROM CASH MEMO CLERKS AND MANAGERS OF RAILWAY GRAIN SHOPS AT MOGHALPURA

127. Diwan Ohaman Lall: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) the number of persons employed as Cash Memo Clerks and grain shop Managers, community-wise, in each Division of the North Western Railway including the Moghalpura Workshops;

(b) whether they are required to keep any deposit with the Railway;

(c) whether the condition of deposit applies to permanent employees also;

(d) whether it is a fact that in the Moghalpura Workshops, communal discrimination is observed in demanding and taking deposits; if so, why; and

(e) if the reply to the first portion of (d) above be in the negative, whether the Honourable Member please lay on the table of the House a statement showing the number of employees, community-wise, who have not yet given any deposit?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) Information regarding all the Divisions is not readily available and its collection would involve an expenditure of time and labour incommensurate with the results expected. The number of staff of the two categories employed in the Moghalpura Workshops' Grain shops is, however, given below, community-wise:

	Grainshop Managers.	Cash Memo Clerks
Muslims	5	28
Sikhs	1	2
Hindus	1	18

Government are informed that in addition to the above staff, 9 Registration Clerks, comprising 4 Muslims, 4 Hindus and 1 Sikh, are also utilised as Cash Memo Clerks when the pressure of work necessitates it.

(b) Yes, all Grainshop Managers, Cash Memo Clerks and Registration Clerks are required to deposit security with the railway.

(c) The reply is in the affirmative.

(d) No. The reply to the second portion does not arise.

(e) Government are informed that of such staff of the Moghalpura Workshops' Grain shops who are required to deposit security, there is no employee who is not complying with this rule.

PROVISION OF DEPARTMENTAL ENQUIRY AND CHARGE SHEET ON NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY

128. Diwan Ohaman Lall: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) whether rules provide for a departmental enquiry and charge sheet, in case it was proposed to remove an employee having continuous service of seven years or more;

(b) whether it is a fact that on the North Western Railway, the benefits referred to in part (a) above are denied to employees with seven years continuous service on the ground of their not having been confirmed; if so, why; and

(c) what general instructions the Railway Board have issued for the interpretation of the word 'continuous service'; if none, whether it is proposed to clarify that the use of the term continuous service in the Discipline and Appeal Rules for Railwaymen indicates total service put in continuously?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) The Honourable Member is referred to Rule 1709 of the State Railway Establishment Code, Volume I, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. This rule gives the correct position in this respect.

(b) No. The reply to the latter portion does not arise.

(c) No instructions have been issued as none are considered necessary.

REDUCTION IN WORKING HOURS OF NON-FACTORY RAILWAYMEN

129. Diwan Ohaman Lall: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) how many Railwaymen will be benefitted by the reduction in the working hours to 48 per week in the proposed amendment of the Indian Factories Act;

(b) whether it is proposed to reduce working hours of non-factory Railwaymen also; if so, when the necessary amending Bill will be brought forward; and

(c) if the reply to the first part of (b) above be in the negative, what steps Government propose to take to remove discrimination between Factory and non-factory workers in the matter of hours of work; if none, why?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) As the hours of work in workshops on railways normally do not exceed 48 hours per week, there will be no change in respect of working hours after the proposed amendment passes into law.

(b) The question of reducing the hours of work of staff not falling within the scope of the Indian Factories Act is being examined in consultation with railway administrations. As regards the latter portion of this part of the question necessary action to amend the Hours of Employment Regulations will be taken if, as a result of the examination referred to, it is decided to reduce the existing limits of hours of work of staff governed by these Regulations.

(c) Does not arise.

COMPENSATION TO BLOCK MAINTAINERS DUE TO INCREASED EXPENSES ON TOURING DUTY

130. Seth Sukhdev: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) whether it is a fact that an increase in allowances to running staff on a percentage basis has been made on the North Western Railway;

(b) whether any travelling allowance or some such compensation is allowed to the Block Maintainers on the North Western Railway, in view of increased expenses on touring duty; and

(c) if the reply to (b) above be in the negative, whether it is proposed to consider their case for some allowance?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) Yes.

(b) and (c). The Honourable Member is referred to my reply to parts (b) and (c) of his Starred Question No. 844 asked in the House on 12th March 1946.

TRANSFER OF E. I. RAILWAY CLAIMS OFFICE FROM BENARES TO CALCUTTA

131. Shri Satya Narayan Sinha: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state whether it is a fact that statistics of claims dealt with by class I Railways are maintained by the Railway Board? If so, how does the E. I. Railway stand in this regard?

(b) Is it a fact that the E. I. Railway Claims Office Section "D" was transferred to Calcutta from Benares some time in the year 1944 under the direct supervision of the Chief Commercial Manager? Will the Honourable Member lay a comparative statement of claims dealt with by this section and the average time taken during two years with the Claims statistics of the Benares Office?

(c) Is it a fact that the efficiency at the Benares Office (Claims) is greater than the sections working directly under the Chief Commercial Manager, E. I. Railway, Calcutta? If not, what is the fact?

(d) Will not the Honourable Member look into the advisability of allowing the Claims Sections of the E. I. Railway which deal with the claims pertaining to the Allahabad, Lucknow, Moradabad and Dinapore Divisions to remain at Benares in the best interest of the public and business circles of the United Provinces and Bihar? If not, why not?

(e) Will the Honourable Member postpone the transfer of the Claims Office from Benares to Calcutta for the present till food situation and housing conditions become easy in Bengal, and not force the transfer under the pretext of direct control by the Chief Commercial Manager?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) The Honourable Member is referred to paragraph 52, pages 33 and 34. Chapter IV of Vol. I of the Report by the Railway Board on Indian Railways for 1944-45 which is available in the Library of the House.

(b) Yes. One Section of the main Claims Office dealing with compensation claims regarding parcel consignments booked to Howrah and Calcutta stations and goods and parcel traffic booked to other stations on the Howrah Division was retransferred from Benares to Calcutta in August 1944 as this was found necessary in the interests of efficiency. The information asked for in the latter part of the question is not readily available. Figures are being compiled and will be laid on the table of the House in due course.

(c) The answer is in the negative. It will be incorrect to draw any comparison between the standard of work of the main Office and any of its branches. Results can only be judged as a whole.

(d) No, Sir. The Claims Office is an integral part of the Headquarters Commercial organisation and was temporarily shifted from Calcutta to Benares only as a measure of war emergency. It is not possible to give prior consideration to the interests of particular localities. The question of administrative efficiency must be considered from the point of view of the whole E. I. Railway, which involves correspondence in connection with claims matters over the whole of India.

(e) It is the intention to bring the claims office back to Calcutta as soon as accommodation is easily available. The food situation will also be taken into account, but it is believed that the position in this respect at Calcutta is not more acute than at Benares.

DISCONTINUING GRANTING OF CERTIFICATES BY GUARDS TO PERSONS UNABLE TO BUY TICKETS ON OUDH AND TIRHUT RAILWAY

132. Mr. B. B. Varma: Is the Honourable the Railway Member aware that the Administration of the Oudh and Tirhut Railway have prohibited the issue of certificates by Guards of trains to those passengers who happen to be unable to purchase their tickets before the arrival of trains? If so, does he propose to consider this demand, and restore the pre-war system?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Yes. As a result of the abnormal conditions created by the War the privilege has been withdrawn with a view to discouraging passengers travelling without tickets when trains are running overcrowded. The question of re-introducing this privilege will be considered as soon as conditions return to normality.

TRAVELLING TICKET EXAMINERS' FLYING SQUAD ON OUDH AND TIRHUT RAILWAY

133. Mr. B. B. Varma: Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state:

(a) the number of Travelling Ticket Examiners, with their scales of pay, who were taken in service in 1936 and in 1941 as Travelling Ticket Examiners' Flying Squad on the Oudh and Tirhut Railway; and

(b) if it is a fact that in making promotions and confirmations and granting increments in time-scales of pay, seniority in service was not taken into consideration while giving preference to juniors?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I regret I cannot undertake to examine whether the promotions and confirmation effected when the railway was under the Company management were made on the basis of seniority or otherwise.

WARNING TO RAILWAY STAFF AGAINST APPROACHING M. L. A.'S FOR REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES

134. Mr. B. B. Varma: Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state:

(a) if it is a fact that recently the Railway Board have directed Railway Administrations to warn the staff under them from approaching the Honourable Members of the Central Legislature for the redress of their grievances; if not, what the fact is;

(b) if the reply to (a) be in the affirmative, whether he proposes to place those directions on the table of the House; if not, why not; and

(c) the procedure prescribed by the Oudh and Tirhut Railway Administration under which their employees could have the redress of their grievances; if no procedure is prescribed, the reasons therefor?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) The Honourable Member is probably referring to the circular issued in September, 1945, asking railway administrations to remind the staff of (i) the undesirability from the point of view of discipline of approaching the Members of the Central Legislature with a view to having their individual grievances, which are rarely of public importance, made the subject matter of interpellations and (ii) the fact that disclosure to non-officials of information which has been obtained from official sources entails a breach of Rule 17 of the Government Servants' Conduct Rules.

(b) I lay on the table of the House a copy of the circular in question, together with a copy of the Home Department Office Memoranda referred to therein.

(c) Railway servants have the right of appeal to the competent authority through the proper channel and the rules on the subject are contained in Rules 1717 to 1727 of the State Railway Establishment Code, Volume I, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House

COPY OF THE HOME DEPARTMENT MEMO. No. 50/10/45-PUBLIC, DATED 15TH JUNE 1945 (WITH ENCLOSURE).

OFFICE MEMORANDUM.

SUBJECT:—Practice of the Secretariat establishment approaching members of the Legislature with a view to airing their grievances.

The undersigned is directed to refer to the Home Department Office Memorandum No. F.-369, dated the 8th June, 1922 (copy enclosed) on the subject noted above, and to say that several cases have recently been brought to notice in which Government servants employed in the Secretariat must have approached Members of the Central Legislature with a view to having their individual grievances made the subject matter of interpellations in the Chambers. Apart from the fact that such a conduct is highly undesirable from the point of view of office discipline, the procedure adopted usually entails, as stated in the Home Department Office Memorandum referred to above, a breach of rule 17 of the Government Servants' Conduct Rules.

2. It has been suggested that the recurrence of cases of this kind is to a large extent due to the fact that most of the new members of the Secretariat establishments are not made fully aware of the provision of rule 17 of and of the consequences which may follow a breach of the rule. It is therefore requested that the Finance Department/etc., may again bring to the notice of their staff the provisions of this rule and the warning conveyed in the Home Department Office Memo. No. F.-369, dated the 8th June, 1922. The substance of the present Office Memorandum may also be communicated to the offices subordinate to the Finance Department/etc. for information and necessary action.

COPY OF AN OFFICE MEMORANDUM No. F.-369, DATED THE 8TH JUNE 1922, FROM THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA, HOME DEPARTMENT, NEW DELHI, TO ALL DEPARTMENTS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA, ETC.

Cases have come to the notice of the Government of India in which members of the Secretariat establishments have approached Members of the Legislatures with a view to having their individual grievances made the subject of interpellations in the Chambers. Apart from the fact that the questions involved are rarely, if ever, of public importance, the practice usually entails the disclosure to non-official persons of information which has been obtained from official sources or has come into the possession of the members of the Secretariat in the course of his official duties; and any such disclosure is a breach of rule 17 of the Government Servants' Conduct Rules. The undersigned is therefore directed to request that the attention of the office establishment in the Foreign and Political/etc. Department may be drawn to the provisions of this rule and that they may be warned that any communication to a Member of the Legislature which involves an infringement thereof will be severely dealt with. It is further requested that the substance of this Memorandum may be communicated to the offices subordinate to the Foreign and Political/etc. Department if any, for information and necessary action.

COPY OF LETTER No. 876 E-22, DATED THE 20TH JUNE 1922, FROM THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY, RAILWAY BOARD, TO THE AGENT, N. W., E. B. AND O. & R. RAILWAYS, ETC.

Disclosure to non-official persons of information which has been obtained from official sources.

I am directed to state that cases have come to the notice of the Government of India in which Government servants have approached members of the Legislatures with a view to having their individual grievances made the subject of interpellations in the Chambers. Apart from the fact that the questions involved are rarely, if ever, of public importance, the practice usually entails the disclosure to non-official persons of information which has been obtained from official sources or has come into the possession of the Government Servant in the course of his official duties and any such disclosure is a breach of Rule 17 of the Government Servants' Conduct Rules. I am therefore to request that the attention of the staff generally under your control may be drawn to the provision of this rule and that they may be warned that any communication to a Member of the Legislatures which involves an infringement thereof will be severely dealt with.

INCONVENIENCE TO PUBLIC DUE TO SHORTAGE OF STAFF AT CERTAIN STATIONS ON OUDH AND TIRHUT RAILWAY

135. Mr. B. B. Varma: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state if he is aware that due to shortage of staff at the Markatiganj, Bettiah, Motihari, Muzaffarpur, Chapra, Mahendrughat and Dighaghat Stations on the Oudh and Tirhut Railway the Travelling public are put to great inconvenience during booking hours and purchasing of tickets?

(b) Does he propose to remove the inconvenience? If not, why not?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) The reply to the first part of the question is in the negative. The O. T. Railway Administration reports that it is not a fact that there is shortage of staff at the stations mentioned or that the travelling public are put to inconvenience during booking hours and purchasing of tickets. The latter part of the question does not arise.

(b) This does not arise.

HEARING APPEALS BY HEADS OF DEPARTMENTS ON OUDH AND TIRHUT RAILWAY

136. Mr. B. B. Varma: Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state:

(a) if it is a fact that the General Manager and other Heads of Departments on the Oudh and Tirhut Railway are the authorities to hear appeals against the orders of their subordinate officers, i.e., District Traffic Superintendent, etc., if not, what the fact is; and

(b) if it is a fact that on appointment of a subordinate officer to the post of the Head of a Department or General Manager he has to hear an appeal against his own orders passed as a subordinate officers; if so, how far it is permissible and admissible in administering justice?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) Detailed rules on the subject are contained in rule 1717; as amended by Correction Slip No. 11, of the State Railway Establishment Code, Volume I, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

(b) Yes, though cases of this nature are not frequent and Government have no reason to believe that officers referred to would hesitate to alter their own decision if fresh arguments brought forward in an appeal demand that course.

GROSS MISUSE OF TIMBER TRANSPORT PRIORITIES BY M. E. S. CONTRACTORS

137. Seth Govind Das: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state:

(a) whether he is aware of the fact that gross misuse of timber transport priorities, issued to the Military Engineering Service contractors has taken place during the war;

(b) whether he is aware that one such act was brought to the notice of high ranking officers of the Central Province T. T. A. C., Nagpur when in the month of March 1943, timber under transport for military works at Pullgaon by a M. E. S. was publicly sold at Nagpur by an M. E. S. contractor, at the railway timber siding, and that at the instance of the then Divisional Traffic Manager, Great Indian Peninsula Railway and the Personal Assistant of the C. C. F., Central Province and Berar, material belonging to an M. E. S. contractor of wagons 64867, 00862 and 00608 from Parthurna to Nagpur and from Ramakona to Nagpur was purchased by a test purchaser; and

(c) if it is a fact that an inquiry was made in the matter, and, if so, what the result of the inquiry was and why the matter was hushed up?

DEMAND No. 11—EXECUTIVE COUNCIL—contd.

Paucity of Muslims in Officers and Ministerial Grades of Departments; non-appointment of Muslims in Key Posts and retrenchment of Muslims where they are less than 25 per cent.—concl'd.

Mr. President: Discussion will now be resumed on the cut motion of Mr. Jaffer.

Sir Mohammad Yamin Khan (Agra Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I am very thankful to my friend Mr. Sri Prakasa for the very nice speech he made yesterday. If people like Mr. Sri Prakasa come forward to help in solving this very complicated problem in this country, I think matters can be easily solved. Men with broad views like Mr. Sri Prakasa are needed to handle this complicated problem which has been facing this House since 1922.

I remember in 1922 for the first time this matter came before this House, and after that it has been brought in year after year. Twenty-four years have passed since then. If Government had been serious in solving this problem, I think there would not have been a single member on the Muslim League Benches to get up and ask about the number of Muslims in service. I remember that for three years past no question of this kind was debated here simply because of the abnormal conditions prevailing in the country: on account of war conditions ventilation of this grievance was not sought. After several years this question has come up again and it would be the best solution if Government decides this matter once for all, so that we may never have this question again on the floor of this House. If the present Government really thinks they are abdicating and going to hand over charge to the other Government, it will be right and proper that they should not leave a legacy of this kind which has been witnessed year after year in this House—they must find out some kind of solution satisfying all sides and all parties.

I am very glad that some Honourable Members from the Congress Benches said yesterday that they were prepared to give even cent. per cent. seats to the Muslims. This was a very nice gesture, and if this kind of spirit is evinced they will find that the Muslims will not demand anything more than their rights.

I had this kind of problem before me in the committee which was sitting in London in 1933; and when I found that people could not come to any agreement in other places, we came, within ten minutes, to an agreement of this problem, which was supported unanimously; and it is recorded that it is the unanimous desire of the Hindu and Muslim Members of the legislature—we decided that within ten minutes. This matter can be decided easily, but unfortunately Government is not paying much attention to solve this problem.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras ceded Districts and Chittoor: Non-Muhammadan Rural): They do not want to.

Sir Mohammad Yamin Khan: When this question came up here in 1928 or 1929, one very revered and respected Hindu gentleman, Pandit Madan Malaviya said that the Muslims must get their quota. That was 18 years ago—in 1928 or 1929, I forget which year it was. Mr. Jinnah then said that it seemed to be the policy of the Government that they should keep the Muslims discontented and by this discontentment the Muslims should go on asking questions and blaming the Hindus, so that by these tactics they may go on keeping up the quarrel in this House, and thus continue the quarrel outside in the country also. Mr. Jinnah also said then that if the Government seriously wanted to stop these communal questions, the best way was to come to a solution. Now nearly 18 years have passed and I still find that this question is being debated and there is still discontent in the matter.

[Sir Mohammad Yamin Khan.]

My friend Mr. Jaffer gave figures about many Departments of the Government of India and Khan Bahadur Habibur Rahman also gave same figures of other Departments. They show that Government has not seriously attended to this problem and try to do away with it. It is time now that a policy is adopted which would bring about a permanent solution and not a half-hearted solution. In 1934 the Home Department passed a resolution. It was very good and I am thankful to two old friends who were here—one was the Home Member and the other the Home Secretary, Sir Harry Haig and Sir Maurice Hallett. They did a lot, but though they made a great advance the problem is still there. Where there is a quota fixed for new recruits, we find that in other ways the Muslims are thwarted in their proper desire to get promotion. There is no quota for the superior grades to which people are promoted from the lower grades. This means that half the number of jobs are filled through promotion and half through direct recruitment; if there are 80 jobs, 40 are reserved to be filled in through promotion and the remaining 40 through direct recruitment. Now the Mussalmans are entitled to 25 per cent. of jobs which are filled through direct recruitment, that is 10. But they do not get their share out of the quota reserved for promotion, with the result that instead of getting 20 out of 80, they actually get 10 out of 80, and that is the cause of heart-burning. This creates a bad atmosphere in this House. I want the Government to see that their instructions are carried out properly both in letter and in spirit.

I remember, Sir, in 1939, when the war broke out, and the Honourable Sir John Thorne was officiating as Home Member, a deputation called upon him and a representation was made to him by several Members of the Muslim League Party to the effect that a quota for Muslims should be reserved in the temporary posts which would be created due to the war. He gave an assurance that this would be done, but when the war progressed it was found that it was not practicable because people were required to take up jobs immediately and a sufficient number of Muslims was not coming forward. The Muslim Members realized that it would not be reasonable to insist on this to be followed invariably, and they told the then Home Member, Sir Reginald Maxwell, that they would be satisfied if an assurance was given that at the time of retrenchment this fact would be taken into consideration and the Mussalmans would be compensated for the loss which they had sustained at the time of recruitment, and that the Muslims would get their share among the staff who would be permanently retained after the war. Sir Reginald Maxwell could not commit himself to anything, but he said that that was a reasonable demand and it would be taken into consideration at the proper time. Now, Sir, is the proper time to rectify this position. If Mussalmans did not get the opportunity to fill their quota at the time of recruitment, now at least their number is enough to make up their 25 per cent. in the posts which will be permanently retained. I therefore say that as far as possible retrenchment in all the Departments should be done in such a manner that the percentage of Muslims, which in 1922 was 2½ and which after 22 years of clamouring has increased to 6, should be raised to 25 per cent. which they deserve. If in the permanent cadres the percentage of Muslims is low, then the temporary Muslims hands may not be retrenched until their quota is full. This can be done easily, and if this policy is adopted, I am sure this problem will be solved.

Sir, we do not like it to be said that Mussalmans are communalists and they talk about jobs. Nobody is happy to bring forward this question of jobs to this House, but what is to be done? There are hungry, needy people who want jobs; they deserve but they do not get jobs and naturally when they do not get their proper share in Government services they come to us. I quite agree with my Honourable friend, Mr. Sri Prakasa, that people should not be anxious to come in Government service and they should seek other employments. Several communities who have been in business and have Lawyers and are highly qualified in other respects and who can get other jobs, also try for Government jobs.

They should not do so. But there are certain other classes who have done nothing but Government service during the last two or three hundred years. They are being ousted; where should they go? It will take time for such people to take to business, and until then Government have to find a solution of this problem.

I personally think, Sir, that Government is not really serious to solve this question of maintaining proper communal ratio in Government services. I can give you an example. During the war many Departments have been created and thousands of people have been appointed. Although all these jobs are of a temporary nature, but still it is ridiculous to find that, for instance in the War Transport Department, out of 33 posts of officers' grade not a single one has been given to a Muslim. Can it be said that no Muslims were available or Muslims are not considered fit for these jobs? No. I find that people have been recruited from different walks of life—trade, business, engineering and so on—but not a single Mussalman has been taken in the War Transport Department. On the Roads side in the same Department out of 34 officers there is only one Muslim—one of the Assistant Secretaries. Out of 10 Superintendents there are 2 Muslims, and on the top of it people who have already put in their full service and have retired are re-employed and are being kept on still, and younger people are not given a chance. Why is it that the Mussalmans are deprived of their due share in the War Transport Department? It proves that Government are not making any serious attempt to see that their instructions are actually carried out in practice. What actually happens is this: If one man gets in, he tries to bring as many of his friends and relatives as he can at the cost of others. It is the duty of the Home Department to keep a watch on these things. They issue instructions but I wonder if they ever try and see that their instructions are complied with. The other day the Honourable the Home Member, in reply to a question, gave a big ratio of Muslims in certain Departments. On examination I found that that ratio included the chaprasis, the daftris, and so on. If he includes them in the total number in the whole Department, it is all right. But the question is how many Muslims are there in the Officers grade. Is there anybody in the Officer grade, say, in his own Department? Has he got a Muslim Additional Secretary, or Joint Secretary, or Deputy Secretary, or Under Secretary? Yesterday in reply to a question the Honourable the Labour Member said, 'There is the Chief Engineer'.

An Honourable Member: In name.

Sir Mohammad Yamin Khan: I know, but he is in the P. W. D. What about the Secretariat? How many Muslim officers are there? Has he got a Muslim Secretary, or Joint Secretary, or Deputy Secretary, or Under Secretary? Not a single one out of these. It is not difficult to find out how many there are. Just take up the telephone directory and go through the names of officers in the various Departments. I say that this is the time to create a good atmosphere in the country; let us create a brotherly feeling. Why should there be an animosity between the various communities? Why do you do thing in such a way that one people are forced to call bad names to others? Why not solve the problem in a proper way? I suggest, Sir, that if the Honourable the Home Member takes up this matter seriously and in his own hands, its solution will not be very difficult. Sir, I support the motion.

The Honourable Sir John Thorne (Home Member): I leave to my colleagues representing the other Departments to deal, so far as possible within the time limit, with the complaints which have been made. I admit that Sir Mohammad Yamin Khan has just added my Department to the list, but I will deal with that at a later stage. My main concern is with the Government of India Resolution of 1934 which has been quoted by most speakers today. May I remind the House what exactly the policy laid down, so far as Muslims are concerned, in the Resolution is. Paragraph 7 says:

[Sir John Thorne]

"In the Indian Civil Service and the Central and Subordinate services to which recruitment is made on an all-India basis, the following rules will be observed :

(1) 25 per cent. of all vacancies to be filled by direct recruitment of Indians will be reserved for Muslims. . . .

(2) When recruitment is made by open competition, if Muslims or the other minority communities obtain less than these percentages, these percentages will be secured to them by means of nomination. If, however, Muslims obtain more than their reserved percentage in open competition no reduction will be made in the percentage reserved for other minorities. While if the other minorities obtain more than their reserved percentage in open competition, no reduction will be made in the percentage reserved for Muslims."

I need not read the other parts of the Resolution but what I want to stress is that the undertaking given in that applies only to direct recruitment. In paragraph 6 we get a sentence: "They (i.e. the rules) relate only to direct recruitment and not to recruitment by promotion which will continue to be made as at present, solely on merit."

Well, I know, of course that my Muslim friends complain that at present promotions are not made solely on merit. But I cannot offer any undertaking that as a general statement of policy the Government of India will now go back on what is stated in this Resolution in regard to appointment by promotion. Now, Sir, what is the position which has after ten years or more resulted from the operation of this Resolution? I laid on the table the other day in response to a question of my Honourable friend, Mr. Jaffer, a statement which many in this House may not yet have read, which gave figures for the position, after ten years, that is from 1st January 1935 to the 1st January 1945. It shows the percentage increases during those ten years in various services, i.e., the Indian Civil Service, the Central services of various classes, the subordinate services and so on. Now the percentage increase for Muslims in all services taken together in those ten years is 2.55 per cent. In some services it is considerably higher. For instance in the Indian Civil Service it is over 5 per cent., in the Central Services, Class I and Class II it is between 3 and 4 per cent. But the figure for all services together is 2.55 per cent. The resulting position is that in all services together, the proportion of Muslims on the 1st January 1945 is 20.67 per cent. There again in various services there is some difference. In the Indian Civil Service it is over 20 per cent. In some other services it is as low as 15 and 16 per cent. Well, Sir, appended to that statement are a note or two which I think would be of use if I read to the House, because if I did not read them to the House I should have to say much of it out of my head.

"The increase of representation of the minority communities would probably have been more marked but for the war, (I know my Honourable friend, Sir Mohammad Yamin Khan has recognised that during the war a large number of new posts, requiring special and technical qualifications were created suddenly and it was not always possible to find suitable minority candidates on short notice and the attractions of military service reduced the numbers available for civil posts. The extent of the problem is indicated by the war-time recruitment to the subordinate services where the number of temporary posts increased from 4,519 on the 1st January 1939, to 46,720 on the 1st January 1945. All permanent recruitment to the Central Services was however stopped from June 1942, 70 per cent. of permanent vacancies being reserved for war service candidates and the remaining 30 per cent. for temporary employees under Government. Government have issued instructions that in filling the 70 per cent. reservation for war service candidates and the 30 per cent reservation for temporary men, the rules regarding communal representation should be strictly followed. Government have further directed that where retrenchment is necessary (and this was a point raised by several of my Muslim friends) the temporary staff should be so discharged that the composition of the persons retained is, as far as possible, in accordance with the communal ratios prescribed for recruitment."

Now, Sir, I do not quite follow what my Muslim friends want in regard to retrenchment. I should have thought, so far as I could understand their request that the order to which that note refers meets the demand, but if that is not so, if there is some loophole in this arrangement which they do not like. I shall be very glad to hear about it and see whether it can be stopped.

One thing I would point out is this it has been stated, I think, at times that in the flow of recruits to the armed forces and to all other forms of war service,—the definition covers quite a large field in that flow Muslims are represented in a considerably higher proportion than their proportion in the population. If that is so, then clearly they stand a better chance of recruitment in the 70 per cent. of posts which are now reserved for people with war service. The 25 per cent. for Muslims is not a maximum. It is a minimum as is clear from the portion of the rule that I read, and if the proportion of Muslims with war service is considerably higher than 25 per cent. then surely they stand a good chance of getting more than 25 per cent. of this 70 per cent. which has been reserved for people with war service.

Now, Sir, it is of course clear from what I have said that Muslims have not succeeded in getting 25 per cent. of the posts in Government service. I think that over on a superficial reading of the resolution of 1934 it could not be held that Government have guaranteed that Muslims shall get 25 per cent. There may be various causes (sometimes unavoidable causes) which will prevent that. But I quite sympathise with their feeling that 20 per cent. after ten years is hardly good enough; and it is our business, it is the business of the Home Department, to come to a conclusion as clear as possible as to the causes which have prevented Muslims from filling by this time a proportion certainly closer to the 25 per cent. which was fixed for direct recruitment. That applies specially to the higher services in the Central Services. In Class I the proportion of Muslims is 16.05 per cent. in Class II it is only 18.32 per cent. and in the superior railway service it is 15.21 per cent. And those figures, if I were a Muslim, would cause me some dissatisfaction.

What are the causes? The suggestion is that the principal cause is that the rules are not properly applied, they are not properly enforced and there are influences working against the Muslims in Government service which prevent them from getting their due proportion. As I have said, Sir, there are other possible causes and of course the main one is the possibility that there are not, especially for certain types of posts, enough suitable candidates from the Muslim community. These higher posts in particular are mostly filled in consultation with the Federal Public Service Commission, through the agency and control of the Federal Public Service Commission.

Now, Sir, I was sorry to hear a remark that fell from my friend, Mr. Habibur Rahman I think it was. I did not follow exactly what he said but it seemed to me that he was making a suggestion that the Federal Public Service Commission itself is not properly following the policy which has been laid down in this regard. I hope that suggestion was not made and that I misunderstood my Honourable friend's meaning.

Syed Ghulam Bhik Nairang (East Punjab: Muhammadan): He did not say so: he meant no reflection on the Federal Public Service Commission.

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I withdraw my supposition that he had said anything of the sort. He referred to the Commission but I accept my friend's assurance that there was no suggestion of a bias on the part of the Commission. I am very glad to hear that. I was going to say that the Federal Public Service Commission has proved and will continue to prove a very great safeguard not only for the cleanliness of the administration, cleanliness of appointments as a whole, but in particular a great safeguard of the rights of the minorities as laid down in the resolution of 1934.

I quite admit that the present arrangements which have been laid down by the Home Department for ensuring that the resolution shall be faithfully carried out are unsatisfactory. I have been looking into them lately, not for the purpose of meeting this cut motion but, shall I say, out of a fundamental desire to do my duty. I have been looking into them and I am not satisfied with them. We take an immense amount of pains. We give the other Departments of the Government of India a great deal of trouble and when it is all done we have not got, to my mind, a clear assurance as to the causes which still prevent not only Muslims but other communities for whom proportions had been reserved from reaching the figures stated in the resolution. We have prescribed returns: it is inevitable that returns should be prescribed. We have, if I may say so, great difficulty in getting from some of the Departments these returns properly and punctually filled up: in particular there are some attached offices which are habitual offenders in the matter of the submission of these returns. They are not punctually submitted and when they come they are imperfectly prepared and there has to be a great deal of passing to and fro before we are assured that the figures are correct. Even if we get what we have prescribed as returns, which should be received by the 1st April relating to the previous calendar year, even if we got those returns properly prepared, they would still, to my mind, not meet the need which exists. We should still be conducting only a post-mortem on appointments which are largely irrevocable at that stage instead of what I should like to see, a running check on appointments as they are made. I am not imputing to the Departments the motive which my Muslim friends impute to them, but I do feel that the duty of my own Department is not sufficiently fulfilled at present, because we have this mass of figures coming well after the event and we cannot be assured whether Muslims and members of the other communities had not received their proportion of appointments and whether the causes are fair and inevitable. I must of course make it clear that I am not concerned only with Muslims, I think I have made that clear. But I am now considering (I know my Honourable friends have not much respect for that phrase, more especially when a member of Government says that he is carefully considering or has carefully considered something, but it is an inevitable phrase) I am considering how we can improve that position. I should have liked to have something fairly definite to state to the House but I have not. It is a very difficult matter. It will mean a fairly elaborate machine. We cannot be content with just appointing a Muslim officer and handing the job over to him. Nor can we be content, as the mover suggested, with appointing a Muslim Deputy Secretary in each Department and requiring him to be personally responsible. Neither of those measures would meet the need which seems to exist and that is to have a running check, as appointments are made, on compliance with the terms of the resolution. I cannot go into more detail on that at the present moment but I do assure my friends, Muslims and others, that I mean business in regard to this. It is a matter on which I should like to consult the Standing Committee of the Home Department. If we have anything ready before the session ends that of course will be done. I am not sure whether that would be possible. I fear it may not be. We shall have to consult the Federal Public Service Commission over this, and it will not be easy to get hold of busy men whose headquarters, unfortunately, are not in Delhi. But if there is an opportunity which I can seize, without causing undue delay, or consulting the Standing Committee, I shall certainly do so; and I must repeat that I do feel that the present position is unsatisfactory, and it is my intention to do all I can to put it right.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar (Labour Member): Mr. President, it must be within the recollection of many Members of this House that many stones have been hurled at the Labour Department

Mawabzada Liaquat Ali Khan (Meerut Division: Muhamnadan Rural): Bricks, not stones

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: or bricks, during the last week which preceded this cut motion. It is only fair that I should rise in my seat to state how the position of Muslims stands in my Department. Yesterday I listened to a sort of running commentary by the two speakers who spoke on this cut motion; they gave some figures regarding the position of Muslim employees in the different Departments of the Government of India. As I listened to that commentary, I cannot help saying that, having the facts before me, I felt considerably proud that the Muslim employees under the Labour Department had certainly fared much better than the story that was revealed by the speakers with regard to other Departments of the Government of India. That this is no vain boast but that it is supported by facts is what I propose to do during the few minutes that I propose to occupy today. I have collected, and if I may say so, I have taken great pains in collecting figures regarding the percentage of the employees of the Government of India in the Labour Department, not only in the Labour section, but in the P. W. D. and in all other attached offices, figures which show what the position of the communities is, the position of the Muslims is as well as the position of the other minorities. But I quite realise that within the time that I have it would be quite impossible for me to lay out in completeness the position of these different communities, and therefore I propose today merely to give the figures of Muslims—not only the totals but also the percentages, so that the members of the Muslim League Party may know what exactly the position is.

I begin with the communal composition of the Labour Department secretariat; and in doing so I propose to give not merely the figures as they stand now, but to give the figures on a comparative basis. I think the comparative basis is very necessary and very essential. So far as I have been able to understand the working of this rule, I think I may say that it is somewhat like shooting at a target: a target has a bulls eye; it has an inner circle and it has an outer circle. The percentages are the bulls-eye, undoubtedly. But I do not think that it would at all be possible for any member of the Government of India, no matter what his personal predilections may be, that he can arrange the services under him in such a manner that he would always be able to hit the bulls eye. What I submit is that there should be an endeavour on the part of every member to see that no community as far as possible is pushed out of what is called the centre; and the question therefore that we have to consider in passing judgment upon the doings of any particular Department is to know whether the position of any particular class of employees in that Department has deteriorated or has bettered, and from that point of view I think a comparative statement is the proper way of studying this matter.

I have collected figures in all cases for 1939 and for 1946-March. I said that I will first present the figures with regard to the Labour Department secretariat. The gazetted posts in the year 1939 were 12 and the Muslim percentage was 8 per cent. In 1946, the total number of gazetted post is 80 and the Muslim proportion is 20 per cent. I will give the figures for the non-gazetted posts. In 1939 the total number of such posts was 75 and of that the Muslims had 23 per cent. In 1946 the total number of posts was 457; and the percentage of Muslims is 24.

Now I will come to that much-talked of C. P. W. D. I will give the figures for the gazetted posts. In 1939 the total number of gazetted posts in the C. P. W. D. was 43, of which the Muslims had 21 per cent. In 1946 the total number of posts was 181; and notwithstanding the difficulties to which my Honourable friend the Home Member referred in the matter of observing the communal proportions during the war emergency, the Muslims had 21.1 per cent. Now, this probably may not quite give enough comfort for the Mover of this cut motion; and I therefore propose to take the time of the House further to analyse the composition of the gazetted posts in the C. P. W. D. in the year 1946, taking the different grades for finding out the percentages. In Superintending engineers, the total posts are 14 and there is one Muslim—which gives 7 per cent. Of Executive Engineers there are 64, and the Muslim percentage is

[Dr. B. R. Ambedkar]

18 per cent. Electrical Engineers are 12, and the Muslim quota is 6-2/8 per cent. Assistant Executive Engineers—the quota for Muslims is 14 per cent. Temporary Engineers total 72 and the Muslim percentage is 32 per cent. While discussing the C. P. W. D. one of my Honourable friends—I forget which it was—mentioned the question of contracts of the Lodi Road

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer (Bombay Southern Division: Muhammadan Rural): Myself.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I think yourself. I forget exactly the figure mentioned by the Honourable Member Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: 5 crores.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: His complaint was that in the contracts for the Lodi Road works, the Muslim contractors got a very small percentage. I forget the exact figure.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: I referred to the Lodi Road Colony in particular and there are so many others in general.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: The Honourable Member made his speech towards the end of the day and it was impossible for me to get the necessary figures but the figures are these.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad (United Provinces Southern Division: Muhammadan Rural): There was no necessity for you to intervene at this stage. You could have waited for some time longer.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I am very much obliged to my Honourable friend for this advice but I thought it desirable to let the Muslim League have sufficient time for their other cut motions. That is the reason why I intervened. Otherwise it was really a general motion. I had no desire to intervene at all and there was no necessity to. It is only to allay the fears which some Members have about the Labour Department that I got up.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Very kind of you.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: The position with regard to the Lodi Road works was this. According to the information supplied to me by the Chief Engineer, the Muslims have got altogether contracts worth 10.5 lakhs of rupees, which is a figure much higher than the figure mentioned by my Honourable friend.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Out of?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: Out of three crores. My Honourable friend will also remember and take the fact into consideration that on these works the Executive Engineer was a Muslim?

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: What about the official pressure put on him not to give it to Muslims?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: My friend is making all sorts of allegations. I hope he has got sufficient evidence to back them up. Nobody has drawn my attention to them. If my friend will give me the facts, I will certainly make inquiries.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: I will give it to you on the floor of the House.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: The fact is that there is a Muslim Executive Engineer in charge of these works. The second fact is that an officer of the Central P.W.D. who is in charge of works, whether he is a Muslim or whether he is a Hindu, no matter what community he belongs to, he is bound by the Central P.W.D. Code. The Central P.W.D. Code requires that the contracts shall be given to a man whose tender is the lowest. I have made inquiries overnight and I have been informed by the Chief Engineer that there was no Muhammadan whose contract was the lowest who did not receive the contract.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: On a point of order.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I am not giving way. I have very little time.

Mr. President: Let the Honourable Member go on.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: These rules of the Central P.W.D. that the contract shall be given to the lowest bidder are subject to scrutiny from two different directions. One is the Auditor General and the second is the Public Accounts Committee. Both of them would require the departmental officer who broke this rule to give the necessary explanation as why he did so.

Syed Ghulam Bhik Nairang: That will be a post-mortem.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: It is a question whether the rules are observed or not.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: The rules can be changed?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: The Honourable Member knows more about it. He did a great deal of work in the Aligarh University. He ought to know something about the P.W.D. and doing the work of this kind. I cannot go into it now.

Let me take the Estate Office. In the Estate Office there are altogether 8 gazetted posts. Of them one is vacant. There the position is that there are six Hindus, one Scheduled Caste. There was one Muslim who recently was sent to his parent province. With regard to the non-gazetted posts, the total posts are 285. Of them the Muslims have 18.2 per cent.

Let me come to what are called the attached offices and I can only give the figures in a collective form—not item by item, which would take me very long. Here again the position in 1939 was this. There were altogether 64 posts. The Muslims had only 1.5 per cent. In 1946 the total posts were 155 and the Muslim percentage has risen from 1.5 per cent to 11.5 per cent. Let me take the non-gazetted posts in the attached offices. In 1936 the total number of posts were 2,238. The Muslims had 34 per cent. In 1946 the total number of non-gazetted posts had risen to 3,929 and the Muslim quota is 30 per cent.

Now, Sir, I will take the Geological Survey. As everybody in the House knows, the Geological Survey so far has been only a skeleton. It is during the war under the new projects of the Government of India relating to post-war development that we have taken up the work of the expansion of the Geological Survey. We recently made a beginning by the appointment of 13 permanent posts of Assistant Geologists. Now, I would like to tell my Honourable friend the real position so far as these appointments are concerned. We were naturally bound to fill these posts through the Federal Public Service Commission, which recommended altogether 40 names in order of merit. We had only to select 13. Out of the 13 there was only one Muslim whom we could select.

Nawabzada Liaquat Ali Khan: Out of 40 names.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: Yes. The names were given in order of merit and we had only 13 posts. Obviously we had to stop with the 13. If we had stopped with the 13, there was only one Muslim in that list of 13. As I said, these posts are technical posts and therefore we had to be very certain about the qualifications. If the Labour Department had stuck to their original proposition that they shall only take men recommended by the Federal Public Service Commission on a purely meritorious basis, they would have had only one Muslim Candidate but the Labour Department knowing that this would not be satisfactory from the point of view of the Muslims went down the list and picked 3 candidates who were far below 13 in order to make up their quota of 4 another thing we have done and which I know some people might regard as very improper is this. We found that in the office of the Director General of Geological Survey there were no Muslim officers. What did we do. We selected two Muslim students from the University represented by my Honourable friend Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad. . . .

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: The credit does not go to you.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: They were not geologists by their training. They had qualified themselves only in geography but notwithstanding this we selected two. We trained them so that they may be subsequently recruited to the office of the Geological Survey.

[Dr. B. R. Ambedkar]

Now, Sir, I come to the School of Mines. There were some questions in the last Assembly on that.

May I know, Sir, how much more time I have.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member can have 20 minutes. I am prepared to give him more time if necessary. He can go on till 1/15.

Shri Sri Prakasa (Benares and Gorakhpur Divisions: Non-Muhammadian Rural): You can take 25 per cent. of the time.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I do not wish to deal with this subject in that half philanthropic and half flippant manner that my friend has done.

Shri Sri Prakasa: I was not flippant at all.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: Coming to the School of Mines, the position is this. We have from 1937 restricted admissions to the School of Mines to 24; originally, there were about 50. It was discovered that there was not sufficient accommodation for such a large number of students and, therefore, it was restricted to 24. Now, the selection for the admission to the college is primarily provincial and not communal. Sixteen seats are allotted to the provinces and two to the Indian States. I had examined the figures up to 1937 and

I did not discover any single year in which there were not at least 2 Muslim students, who had sought admission to the School of Mines. I, therefore, did not think that any particular reservation was necessary to safeguard the interests of the Muslim students joining the School of Mines. However, when the matter was pressed by some Members of the Muslim League here, Members of the last Legislative Assembly, I did pass orders that two seats at least should be reserved for the Muslims in the Indian School of Mines.

Sir Mohammad Yamin Khan: Out of how many?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: Out of 24. Now, Sir, even here I would like to tell the House what steps the Labour Department have taken in order to see that the Muslims are able to realise the full quota which has been reserved for them; and I shall give the figures for this year. This year we have altogether admitted 48 students on the recommendation of the Governing Body. Out of these 48 students, there only one Muslim who had satisfied the qualifying test.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman (Patna and Chota Nagpur cum Orissa: Muhammadan): That is what I referred to you.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: But, Sir, in order to make good the reservation that was made, it was ordered that the fifty-ninth student, who was a Muslim, may be taken, over-riding the claims of practically 11 other boys.

Now, Sir, I will refer briefly to the various training schemes which have been sponsored by the Labour Department—some overseas—and to show that even here the Labour Department has not only been correct but has been very considerate. I will first refer to the training scheme sponsored by the Labour Department for the training of Assistant Geologists in the Melbourne University of Australia, as a part of the re-organisation of the Geological Survey. This took place in 1946. The total number of men that were selected was 9. Out of them, 5 were Hindus, 3 Muslims and 1 of other minorities. It will be seen that in this selection the Muslim proportion has been $33\frac{1}{3}$ per cent.

The second scheme sponsored by the Labour Department was to train men in commercial and administrative side of electricity. Electricity is going to play one of the greatest part in the reconstruction of India's economic and social life. Obviously, there must be people in India who are trained in the commercial and administrative side of it and we decided to train some men. Obviously, for a training of this sort, you could not take up raw boys from the University. You ought to have some men who have had some experience in this matter. We, therefore, decided to ask the Provincial Governments whether they would suggest names of some of their employees in their Electricity Department for being sent abroad. The selection, therefore, was not a selection made by the Labour Department or in the Government of India. The selection was entirely within the purview and charge of the Provincial Governments. The total number of men selected was 10. Out of them one was a Muslim. He was selected by the Hyderabad State. The other Provinces did not suggest the name of any Muslim. I do not know why. Probably because there were not any Muslims in their Electricity Department.

Khan Abdul Ghani Khan (North-West Frontier Province: General): In the Frontier Province there are about 90 per cent. Muslims in the Electricity Department.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I am sorry, but your Province did not recommend any Muslim name. You had better address a question in the Assembly of the Frontier Province.

I am coming now to three other schemes which were sponsored by the Labour Department for training abroad. One was the Bevin training scheme. The total number of boys who were sent was 787. Out of them, Muslims were 154, or 19 per cent. Then, we have in the Government of India a scheme for training Labour Officers for welfare purposes. These officers are not selected by the Labour Department; they are selected by the different Departments concerned. And here the position is this. Altogether 28 have, so far, been sent. Out of these 28, 18 are Muslims, which is a proportion of 79 per cent. Then, Sir, we have another scheme which is a scheme for giving higher technical training to the employees of private employers. The Government of India circularised private employers that in view of the necessity of improving technical efficiency of Indians if they desire to send any of their employees for training abroad, the Government of India in the Labour Department would do their best to secure opportunities for training in foreign countries. In this connection, so far, 6 men have been sent. Unfortunately, there was no Muslim amongst them, but that certainly is not the fault of the Labour Department, because they were not responsible for the training.

Now, Sir, another point which I would refer to is the recruitment of what are called Project Officers and Utilisation Officers under the Central Technical Power Board. We required 9 posts, one of a Utilisation Officer and 8 of what are called Project Officers. These appointments, again, had to be filled through the Federal Public Service Commission. Unfortunately, there was no Muslim among the 9 posts that were filled. In this connection, I would like to draw the attention of the Mover of the cut motion to the correspondence which the Labour Department had with the Federal Public Services Commission. We queried when we got the selection and found that there was not a single Muslim. I asked my Department to address a query to the Federal Public Service Commission as to why there was no Muslim in the names that they had suggested. The reply of the Federal Public Service Commission was this. It is interesting, I think, because it throws a different light on the subject. The Federal Public Service Commission said that, in response to their advertisement, altogether 240 applications were received. Out of that number, only 8 were Muslims, and out of these 8 Muslims, they invited 3 for interview. Out of three, they found not one suitable for the post. Well, Sir, this is in brief a record of the Labour Department in the matter of communal representation. I claim, Sir, that during the period that I have occupied this post, it can be fairly said that the position of Muslims, far from having deteriorated has considerably advanced. Sir, I do not claim anything more for the Department in which I hold charge. I should like to conclude just by making two observations. I have no idea how many Honourable Members of the Muslim League Party know what part I played in the issue of this communal Ratio Resolution. I think if any Member of the Muslim League Party was present when the Round Table Conference, was held in London, he would very well realise that among those who fought for securing these privileges to the minority communities, I claim that I have played a considerable part. It cannot therefore be said that I am out of sympathy with the demand of the Muslims or the demand of any other minority community. It is for this that I have fought, it is for this I have been fighting, and it is for this that I will fight.

The second proposition that I should like to make, if my Honourable Colleague, the Home Member would permit me to say so, is that the action which he promised the House that he will take in order to see that the Government of India will not be merely content with rearguard action on the various Departments making default in this matter but that he will take some substantial steps so that as and when appointments are made, proper check is applied at the time, the credit must go to me because it is I who wrote to him a letter that this state of affairs ought to be rectified. I do not want to say anything more.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: On a point of information, Sir. I want to know whether in the figures which he just now quoted, are the appointments in the resettlement also included?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: Yes, it is a consolidated section of the Labour Secretariat.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Including resettlement.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I have so many figures. I must say they are so interesting that if my Honourable friend wants, I am quite prepared to pass it on to him for his further study.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: Sir, I had no intention to speak on this debate, and in fact, our Party decided to withdraw the cut Motion after the speech of the Honourable the Home Member. But after the speech which has just been delivered by the Honourable Labour Member, it is very difficult to restrain myself without saying a few words. The first point that was raised was that it was not desirable that the department of services should be combined with the department of profit. That is, the Public Works Department must be separated from the Labour Department altogether. This was the point raised by my Honourable friend the Mover of the cut motion. That is the point which I wish to press. I thank the Honourable Dr. Ambedkar for the services which he claims to have done for the minority communities at the Round Table Conference and perhaps elsewhere also, but I think he will be able to do better service if this Department of Central Public Works is separated from the Labour Department.

At the beginning of this session we brought to the notice of the Honourable Member, myself and some of my Colleagues in the Muslim League Party drew the attention of the Government to the convention that whenever the Chief Administrative Officer was a non-Muslim, then his two Assistants should be Muslims and vice versa. At present the two Assistants are non-Muslims. One of them was a Muslim, Mr. Nasim, but he was shifted to some other Department. We urge upon the Honourable Member that he should follow the convention and appoint a Muslim in his place. We have been pressing this for the last two months, but no action has been taken. We apprehend that as soon as the Assembly session is over, he will quietly appoint some one other than a Muslim for this post. We have reasons to believe that actually some persons belonging to the Scheduled caste were approached to accept this post.

Mr. President: If the Honourable Member will take some time, we will now adjourn for Lunch.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: Yes, Sir.

Mr. President: The Assembly will now adjourn for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock, Mr. President (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: Sir, when we rose for Lunch I was making the point, which was also made by the Mover, that the two Departments of profit and service should be separated. There can never be any coordination between these two contradictories; it is done only here and in no other country. The sooner we separate them the better for the efficiency of both. Even in the Provinces you do not find these two combined.

My second point is that though any amount of figures may be quoted, it is not, as was pointed out by Khan Bahadur Habibur Rahman, only the percentage with which we are concerned but we should like to see the salary bills also and find out whether the higher posts are filled by non-Muslims and only the lower ones by Muslims. Pursuing the same point he said that out of thirteen Superintending Engineers there is only one Muslim. I approached the Honourable Dr. Ambedkar along with my Honourable friend Syed Ghulam Bhik Nairang and another friend and said that now that there is a vacancy and a suitable Muslim is available he should be appointed. But he has now started a new procedure, and that is to ask some one to carry on and that some one does not even hold a permanent post. You can carry on for some time but not indefinitely. What we wanted to draw his attention to is that in the higher posts also Muslim claims should be considered provided suitable men are available.

There is of course a great deal in what the Honourable Home Member said that Muslims should not be promoted out of place. But in making promotions they adopt two principles, namely, seniority and efficiency. In practice we find that only that principle is adopted which makes Muslims lower. Therefore we said that the senior man may be given the post and if he proved inefficient it may be given to the next man who may be efficient. But in this particular case when the senior man has been passed over some officer or the head of the Department should look into the matter personally and satisfy himself that he was really inefficient. That is all that we desire and nothing more.

The third thing we object to is that in addition to these two principles of seniority and efficiency Dr. Ambedkar has added a third one, namely, co-ordination of work. As the post was vacant he would not appoint any one and that in spite of our repeated requests. Persons who could be appointed to permanent posts will be Muslims because they are senior and efficient. We do not think it is fair that when the Assembly is on, the appointment should not be made in spite of our requests but that some one else should be quietly appointed when the Assembly is over, so that we may not move an adjournment motion and the interval between two sessions is long. That is not a fair method. I personally believe in discussing these matters privately outside the House without giving them any publicity. But if our requests are always refused the only thing to do is to give them publicity on the floor of the House. And it is with great reluctance that we adopt that course.

Then with regard to the Secretariat, there is an Assistant Secretary, a Deputy Secretary, a Joint Secretary and so on. All these people deal with the cases of Muslim officers. I do not like to speak about the Deputy Secretary because I spoke to the Premier of the Province to which he belongs and he said that he would like to have away from Bengal. I am sorry I have mentioned the name but still I do not wish to discuss personalities. But we have heard that he takes action even on anonymous letters provided the person concerned is a Muslim; otherwise he takes no action. Then, the Under-Secretary has been given three extensions; he is on the retired list and in these days when so many persons are available there is no need to give these extensions; and the same is about the Assistant Secretary.

So that out of four or five officers in the Labour Department one at least should be a Muslim, and many of the difficulties point out will disappear.

[Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad]

I regret the heated debate that followed the Home Member's speech but he took it on himself for nothing and drew our attention to many things which we had not thought of before. He clearly emphasised that we should not only look at the percentage but to the percentage in the different grades, which means looking into the salary bill of the whole Department.

Sir, I did not like to say very much on this because I think that the Members who are in charge of the Government of India represent the people of India as a whole and not one community only. They should look to the interests of everybody and there should be complete impartiality. That is what we claim. But, as was pointed out by Khan Bahadur Habibur Rahman, there is great discontent among the Muslims in the Central P. W. D. Some posts carry some profit because there is work going on; these are not given to Muslims, but it is only posts of a routine nature which carry no profits that are given to them. There is discontent among them because they do not get fair treatment and the result is that Muslim contractors also suffer because they do not get their fair share. The only remedy is that we should adopt the practice followed in the rest of the world and separate the Central P. W. D. from the Labour Department.

Mr. President: Does the Honourable the Finance Member wish to say anything?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands (Finance Member): No, Sir.

M. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: In view of the assurance given by the Honourable the Home Member and the sympathy expressed by him, I do not desire to press the motion, and I therefore ask for the leave of the House to withdraw it.

The motion was, by leave of the House, withdrawn.

DEMAND NO. 22—COMMERCE DEPARTMENT

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: I move:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 31,38,000 be granted to the Governor General-in-Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1947, in respect of 'Commerce Department'."

Mr. President: Motion moved:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 31,38,000 be granted to the Governor General-in-Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1947, in respect of 'Commerce Department'."

Unsatisfactory Position of Export of Hides and Skins involving enormous loss to India

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: Mr. President, Sir, I move:

"That the demand under the head 'Commerce Department' be reduced by Rs. 100."

Sir, I find it extremely difficult to discuss the question of the hides and skins trade in such a short time that I have at my disposal, i.e., 20 minutes. In my capacity as President of the Hides and Skins Traders Association of Calcutta, an organisation of over hundred years standing, I have been issuing statements to the Press from time to time. The last one which I issued was in February last in which I particularly drew the attention of the Honourable the Commerce Member to certain important aspects of this trade. I represented the Hide and Skins Trade of India at the meeting which was convened by the Supply Department on the 24th and 25th of October 1944 and that was also a critical stage for this trade as effort was being made to throttle down this trade by certain scheme of "monopoly buying by Government", and thanks to the genius and understanding of the then Honourable Member in charge, Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar who conceded to my point of view when I placed the case before the Conference on behalf of the entire hides and skins trade of the country—as all the other Hide and Skin Association of India who were invited to the Conference elected me as the only sole representative on their behalf for settling matters with Government. Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar was convinced and agreed to the point of view expressed by me in spite of contrary opinions given by the officials circle under the influence of Mr. Inskip of Cooper Allen &

Co. Now, Sir, again I find that the official agencies are trying to create a difficult position in the matter of export of hides and skins, and that official opinion is mostly obsessed by our friend, Mr. Inskip, the Government Adviser who is here, and Mr. Randell, the Director of Tanning and Footware, both of them belong to the section of the tanning industry run by foreign agency, foreign money, and foreign influence. I doubt very much whether the opinions that they give to Government could ever be in the interest of this country.

Let me now review the present position of the raw hides and goatskins trade. During the war, prices of all commodities increased nearly 400 per cent, with the exception of raw hides which did not register an increase of more than 50 per cent, if you calculate the average of 1939-45 the 6 years of war and this increase was due to the higher cost of labour and high price of salt required for curing and preserving raw hides in good condition. I would like to impress upon the House in this connection that although the rise was to an average of nearly 50 per cent, the real factors which were responsible for this increase were the cost of labour and the cost of salt. During the war the hide merchants and producers co-operated with the Government in keeping low level of prices to allow Government to make their purchases of finished leather, like shoes, at the pre-war levels, but by manipulations of traders in the footwear industry, this did not happen and prices of shoes, despite control, registered a rise of nearly 250 per cent, compared to the level of prices which prevailed in 1939. On some pretext or other shoe traders like "Battas" could convince the Supply Department that procurement was not possible unless higher rates were given to them and they were supported by our friends, Mr. Inskip, Mr. Rendell and his group.

During the war a new arrangement affected export adversely. 'Allied Shipping Pool' was established and a new scheme of buying through monopolist purchasing agencies was organized by U. K. and U. S. A. During the war and even now that the hostilities have terminated everywhere there methods were adopted to keep down the price of raw hides and goatskins in India. Regulations were formed by Government of India to restrict sales of raw and half-tanned Madras kips to the various branches of the combined "Raw material Purchasing Mission" of the United Kingdom and the United States of America. While it could be argued that for the duration of the existence of the "Allied Shipping Pool" the Government of India was forced to restrict the export of raw and half-tanned hides almost exclusively to the agencies of purchase created or controlled by this 'Allied Shipping Pool', which we understand has ceased to exist after the 2nd of March 1946, there can be no purpose other than allowing the exploitation of India by maintaining the regulation for the sale of raw and tanned cowhides, and goatskins at uneconomic prices to these monopolist organisation. As the question of securing freight for many other countries will not be a matter of any Allied Pool control any more, the Government of India must at once withdraw the regulation which is restricting the sale of raw hides and goatskins to this monopolistic purchasing agency of the United Kingdom and the United States of America. The House will be surprised to hear that Canada, France, and of all the countries, South Africa,—a country on which we would have marched with our army to conquer it if we had an independent status,—have been given a hand in the pie. White robbers have joined hands to rob Indian wealth and instead of one East India Company there are a quite a few East India Companies established to impoverish our resources. The ceiling price as enforced by the Allied Control is nothing short of loot and exploitation of Indian original producer of raw hides and skins at cheap and uneconomic prices. As soon as the regulations are withdrawn and free trade in raw hides and tanned kips is resumed, each country will have to pay economic prices to us for the supply of our raw hides and skins. The countries other than those in the Allied pool have got very little facilities and as they are not in this combine, they cannot have facilities for shipment to States like Turkey, the

[Mr. Muhammad Nauman]

Balkans, Greece and Palestine and other places, although they are prepared to pay for raw hides nearly three times the price that these Purchasing Missions can pay today. Speaking for my own firm we have cables and letters from clients in Greece and Turkey who are prepared to pay us 84d. per lb. for light raw cowhides whereas the U. K. Board would not give more than 18/19d. per lb. You can understand what the difference means. I demand, Sir, that immediately the regulations be withdrawn—and this view was also placed before the Honourable the Commerce Member when he called together a certain conference in last February the deliberations of which I hold in my possession, although I do feel that this conference was not at all representative as the Honourable Member in charge did not care to invite representatives from the stockist of raw hides and skins and producers of these raw materials and particularly the organisation to which I have referred the Hide and Skin Traders Association of Calcutta which has a standing of over 100 years and he is in the know of importance of this organisation in the trade. He did know of the great influence this organization commands as he himself belongs to Calcutta and Bengal. That is the position which I want to clarify and protest on his method of nomination to such conference, which become rather farce.

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque (Commerce Member): I do not know, but I did know of your office in Damzen Lane.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: But the organisations office is in 9, Maharam Swarnamoyee Road and the office of my firm "M. Jameel Ahmed & Sons", a firm of over fifty years standing is at 10, Damzen Lane—Calcutta.

I get support in this demand from even official representative in the conference that regulation of restrictions should be withdrawn.

Mr. President, now I come to the question of the peculiar position in the goatskin trade. The goatskin prices in 1939 were about 25d. per price C. I. F. Port of destination and the average of the depression years that is between 1929-39 works to 37d. each whereas this U. S. A. Board would not give us more than 22d. in 1945-46. And there you have to take into consideration the present factor of a higher cost of labour and salt, which actually means that they are paying nearly 18d. for the same commodity that they were paying 37d. on the average of the ten years calculation between 1929-39. That is the deplorable position which has been created by these "Monopolist" buying agencies of U. S. A. and U. K.

Now, as soon as this regulation is taken away I have no doubt that we would be able to get for our raw goatskins three or four times the prices that we are being quoted today by these Boards. Probably the Honourable the Commerce Member should know that the African skins of Mombassa are far inferior and are selling at 68d. each. The China goatskins which are still inferior are fetching 60d. a piece. To give their Government a right idea of the price position, Sir, I would say that in 1918-19 the average Indian goatskin, Mozaffarpur quality was fetching eighty pence per piece and at the same time Mombassas and Chinas Skins were fetching nearly fifty pence per piece. That would be the real position if we had a free hand in the trade and if the Government of India did not interfere to throttle down our business, all the foreign buyers will have to buy at our dictation.

There is a belief that the supply position is not very satisfactory and we have not enough hide for exports. Let me come to the supply position of raw hides and expose this plea of Government by their own figures. In the meeting of the Advisory Council of export in Bombay, in September 1945 Government agreed that the supply position had considerably increased and since September 1945 there is a further increase in the supply position. I will now refer to the Calcutta market position which is the chief emporium of Bengal, Bihar, Orissa and parts of the Central Provinces. In 1944 tanners and exporters purchased

1,32,558 pieces monthly, whereas the average in 1945 was 1,64,888 pieces and you will not be surprised to appreciate the fact that the monthly average of unsold stock in the market was nearly 58,800 in 1944 and nearly 84,350 in 1945. By this I mean that that 84,350 pieces cowhides was the monthly unsold stock carried from one month to the other. That is in one particular month we could not liquidate the entire stock which the Calcutta market had imported from moffasil agencies. What it showed was that the internal demand could not absorb the whole of the increased supply and this is the position, Sir, when prices have been kept down below the average as compared with any other commodity of this country.

India's capacity to consume her own resources of raw material in this class has been very limited. India has been one of the biggest exporters of raw hides and skins since over 150 years, I can prove to you that even 200 years ago, Surat and Calcutta used to be those ports from where we used to ship our raw hides to different countries and get much higher value for that that India could pay them. India in those days was self-sufficient in the matter of her own shoes requirements and India used to produce her own shoes through the system of cottage industries on a vast scale.

Now I come to the tanning industry. The most pertinent question here is whether the old and patent plea for safeguarding tanning industry should compel India to sell her raw hides at an uneconomic rate to tanners and in turn allow the East India Kip Tanners to either play in the hands of the present Purchasing Boards of the U. K. and the U. S. A. or allow them to earn all the profits in foreign trade and only pay Indian producer a pitiable uneconomic price. The House knows that we gave the tanning industry a chance to build up her capacity and for a number of years protective duties were levied on the export of raw hides and skins for this purpose and they had the advantage of the two big wars where these tanners had ample opportunities to develop their industry by scientific researches and by experience. If our tanners are not able to compete on world parity prices for purchase of raw hides and skins even with the advantages offered to them for near by 30 years they cannot live on the charity of 400 million people of India for all time to come and ignore the question of the producer's position and the consumer's cost. They deserve no support when they have proved so incompetent in their own act of developing tanning industry.

I will now give the figures. The total production of hides was on the average is 257 lakh pieces, i.e., 2 crores 57 lakhs out of which one crore and 13 lakhs hides were exported. Speaking for average of the Calcutta market exports, nearly 40 lakhs pieces hides were exported during 1938-39 out of which 5 lakhs pieces went to Madras and the balance to other parts of the world. The position I will try to show is that a competitive price we had built up a trade with all parts of the world including every country of Europe say—Norway, Sweden, Finland, France, etc. and all the important countries in the Middle-East like Palestine and others: all the important ports of the U. S. A. were the biggest buyers for our goatskins.

Now, Sir, the total position in Calcutta of arrivals has dwindled down to 10.5 lakhs in 1945 out of which 9.75 lakhs were sent to Madras as facilities for exports were blocked practically on all sides. Now compare this position as to that of 45 lakhs export average of Calcutta and if we export our cow hides at prices available today in Turkey, Egypt, Palestine, the Balkan States and other places which is nearly 34d. to 35d. per lb. for light qualities whereas our tanners can only afford to give us 16d. to 17d. per lb. and sell it to the present monopolist pool at dictated prices, we can bring our trade to old days in the export and continue the supply to tanneries in full.

I will tell the House one thing more. If the export is made free, prices of raw hides and skins will improve on competition. I want to give an idea of the personnel engaged in the raw hides and skins trade in Calcutta market alone.

[Mr. Muhammad Nauman]

The total membership in my organization of "Hides and Skins Merchants Association" is nearly 120 in Calcutta and with their agencies in the provinces concerned the number is nearly 25,000, and taking the average of six persons engaged in each agency, you will have over one lakh and sixty thousand of people engaged in this trade in one market of Calcutta. As regards the price, the most easy calculation is this: Out of a total of 257 lakh pieces of raw hides the average production of 10 years, if the weight is put at eight pounds average per piece, you will notice that 2,056 lakhs pounds will be the total weight. In tons 91,785 tons and if we sold at 34d. per pound instead of 16d. the value would be just double. This country will be losing to the tune of 50 crores of rupees if export of raw hides is restricted.

The most surprising factor is this. Mr. Inskip is a great advocate of the tanning industry and he referred to the development of tanning during the war. Still he has been one of those who has been opposing the indigenous tanners tooth and nail in conferences and elsewhere on all occasions. What I want to impress is this that in developing our tanning industry we have got to tell our tanners that they have got to compete with the world parity prices in the matter of their purchase of raw products of India and if there is any protection to be given we have got to develop this in a manner so that we may be

3 P.M. exporters of finished leather goods like shoes, suitcases, attachees, etc. There is no reason why any preference should be shown to the half-tanned and tanned skins exporters to those exporters who send them in raw condition when this country is to lose so heavily say about 50 crores of rupees to the Indian producer of Indian Raw Hides and Skins. I have not got much time to convince the Honourable the Commerce Member as to how the imports to Calcutta markets and other markets were affected by the depression in prices. Probably he knows that three fourth of the total production in the country is out of fallen hides. Unless those who go to collect them in the jungles and other parts get a remunerative price, which would enable them to make a living, they would not take the trouble of continuing this profession of collection of hides. Naturally it was pointed out by the merchants representative in the conference that the import to the Calcutta market slowed down as soon as the prices became un-remunerative for those who are engaged in this trade. I will convince the Honourable Member about the truth of this if he discussed it with me and as he promised me a few weeks ago. We cannot be guided by the opinion of these tanners whose self-interest would not allow them to do justice to the producer and stockists of Hides and Skins. The industry should be developed on proper lines so that the country could have a proper value for its production. When I say proper value I mean the value which hides and skins can fetch in the world on parity prices basis, prices which these commodities can fetch in world competition of raw products. It is no use saying that the conditions in this country would not allow tanners to pay a price which will be on world parity and therefore control the prices at the cost of the producers and stockists and again control the import of finished leather at the cost of the consumers for all times. That is something which is probably most obnoxious. We should develop our industry in a manner which would give a fillip to the entire production of the leather manufactured goods and unless the industry is able to benefit all sections we do not suppose they deserve any credit and can claim any particular preference which they have been asking for and which we gave them for many years in the past.

My last submission is that raw hides should be allowed to go through its normal channels and efforts should be made to restore this trade to their old conditions, so that the tanneries which depended on Indian stock would still depend on them and pay rates which world conditions demand of them. It will be noticed that all those commodities that we are importing from foreign markets are being paid 300 per cent. higher rates and there is no reason why our raw products should not be sold at the same rate of 300 per cent. over the pre-war levels. Tanners must get high prices for their own products and pay for raw product in same proportion.

With these few words, Sir, I move the motion.

Mr. President: Cut motion moved:

"That the demand under the head 'Commerce Department' be reduced by Rs. 100."

Mr. A. C. Inskip (United Provinces: European): Sir, this cut motion has been moved to consider the unsatisfactory position of export of hides and skins involving an enormous loss to India. (Interruption by Mr. Muhammad Nauman) I did not interrupt when my Honourable friend spoke and I hope he will show me the same courtesy. The position in regard to the export of skins is unsatisfactory and had the mover confined his motion to the question of goat and sheep skins I would have supported him. He has, however, included raw hides in the subject for discussion and for this reason I must join issue with him.

Sir, when viewed from the exporter's point of view the export of raw hides is unsatisfactory but far from involving this country in financial loss, the present position is bringing increased revenue to India and is providing a source of employment to many thousands. In putting forward this cut motion, if I may say so, without giving offence to my Honourable friends on my right, the Members on the Muslim League Benches are not doing justice, I contend, to the many thousands of their own community, who are engaged in the leather and tanning industries of this country. Does my Honourable friend appreciate that for every person engaged in the export of raw hides, there are no less than ten thousand, mostly of his own community who are engaged in the processing of those hides into leather and the fabrication of the leather into such articles as footwear and other leather goods. Is he also aware of the fact that the Indian tanning industry has expanded to such an extent during the war years that the industry is now able to process all the hides which are available in this country. I particularly mention hides and not skins.

Sir, even before the commencement of the recent war raw hide exports showed a considerable decline, while the export of tanned leather showed a corresponding increase. Let me quote from official government records in support of my statement. The trend of development before the present war can be judged, I think, by comparing the export figures of 1913-14 and those of 1938-39. Raw hide exports for the year 1913-14 amounted in the case of cow hides to 92.6 lakh pieces. In the year 1938-39 this figure was reduced to 46.1 lakh pieces.

Then, Sir, in regard to raw buffalo hides, the exports in the year 1913-14 amounted to 28.9 lakh pieces while that of 1938-39 was 6.2 lakh pieces.

Now, Sir, let me quote the export figures for tanned leather for the same periods. During the fiscal year 1913-14 the export of tanned cow hides totalled 29 lakh pieces but this increased to 48 lakh pieces in the year 1938-39. Similarly, in the case of chrome tanned cow hides, the volume of exports increased by no less than 28 times during the two periods I have mentioned. (Interruption by Mr. Muhammad Nauman). The Honourable Member says that I have selected those years which are convenient. I shall quote, if he wishes the figures for the other years regarding the export of buff hides. Here are the figures:

1913-14, 28.9 lakh pieces.

1918-19, 13.4 lakh pieces.

1923-24, 8.7 lakh pieces.

1928-29, 10.2 lakh pieces.

1933-34, 5.2 lakh pieces.

1938-39, 6.2 lakh pieces.

[Mr. A. C. Inskip]

I did not want to labour the House with all these figures but since my Honourable friend wanted them, I have given them.

This was the position before the recent war. But since then, the tanning industry has expanded to such an extent that despite what my Honourable friend has said just now, it is not able to secure its full requirements of raw materials, with the result that the majority of the tanneries in this country are now working to only 50 per cent. of their capacity.

Now, Sir, let me give the House as briefly as possible details of the industry's expansion during the war years. As early as 1940 the industry through its trade organisation willingly came forward to assist Government in meeting the enormous war demand for leather and leather goods. As the demand increased, new tanneries came into existence and extensions were undertaking in existing concerns. With the wholehearted co-operation of all concerned, war demands were met, although this necessitated the introduction of a very rigid control, involving as it did the abandonment of all civil trade and export markets. But let me quote the opening and closing sentences of a speech made by Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar when he addressed the quarterly conference of tanners in January 1945. He commenced his speech with these words:

"Yours is one of the earliest organisations which have met under the auspices of Government and which have tried to help the Government in its efforts to produce the required articles for war purposes. I think it was early in 1940 that your conference was first convened, convened when you expressed your willingness to come together and help the Government in the problems that then faced it. From that time onwards you have had regular and frequent conferences."

He finished his address on the same occasion with these words:

"I want to assure you that the Government is deeply grateful for all you have done during the last five years and they are very much concerned with the permanent and lasting benefit which this industry will give to the country as a whole."

Sir, by reason of its war effort the tanning and leather industries have a right to look to Government for assistance at this time. Indeed that assistance was actually promised by Government through the late Supply Member in January 1945. In the speech to which I have previously referred, Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar said:

"I realise that the Government of this country particularly has an obligation also. Having dislocated all your normal channels of trade and commerce and having put you on special purposes to meet the Government demands, I do not think it is right or fair that the Government as soon as its needs are over should turn and say 'Now, look after yourself.' I do not think we want to do that with reference to any industry, least of all that industry which has already helped us so much."

Now, let us look more closely into the position as it exists today. According to the latest trade statistics, the volume of hide production in this country amounts annually to some 12½ million cattle hides and just under 1½ million buffalo hides. Prices now paid by the tanning industry in this country for its raw supplies are far above world parity figures despite what my Honourable friend has said, and represent an advance of over 300 per cent. on pre-war levels; and in that connection I will refer my Honourable friend to the record of the trade meeting to which he himself has referred: a member of his own trade, the export trade, gave figures on that occasion which read something like this:

"In answer to a question by the Chairman Mr. Gresham stated that the history of the prices of raw hides was as follows: In 1938, just prior to the war, Rs. 8-15 to Rs. 5-8 per piece: in 1945, Rs. 16 to Rs. 17 per piece."

This is from an exporter. If as my Honourable friend states there are such huge surpluses of raw hides available in this country for export, and he accepts the fact that prices are governed by the law of supply and demand, then perhaps he will endeavour to explain why the present high level of prices obtains.

At the same time, he might also explain why the tanning industry—and here I include the cottage tanning industry—are unable to secure their full requirements even at present price levels.

No, Sir. The true facts are that, due to the present world shortage of leather, certain countries which were not large purchasers of Indian raw hides in pre-war years are now anxious to obtain their supplies of raw materials from us. This temporary export demand can only be met at the expense of the tanning industry in this country; and as the industry has now grown in strength, I submit that it should receive the first consideration of Government. The position in which we find ourselves now was correctly forecast by the late Supply Member when in the speech from which I have already quoted, he said:

"The tanning industry in this country has grown during the war. We used to export our hides and skins during the war. Owing to circumstances many of which were beyond our control and which have been brought about by the accident of war, we had to turn our attention to a phase of work which was not done on a very large scale except in the south, and we have proceeded very far indeed with it. It would be a great pity indeed if the progress that we have made during the war was in any way lost in the post-war period. You know it better than myself that this tanning industry which has been so much developed should continue to develop in the post-war period also. We hope that it will continue to flourish and grow in strength and take its rightful place as the exporter of manufactured goods and not as the exporter of raw hides."

Sir, with the tanning industry working to capacity, the leather it can produce would, I agree, be in excess of India's requirements, but with the existing world shortage the present is an opportune time to develop and expand our export markets for leather and leather goods. In this regard, Sir, I would urge on Government the necessity of adopting a more liberal policy in the matter of the export of these commodities. Many of the present export restrictions are relics of the war, and as some show preference towards certain sections of the industry at the expense of others, a general review of the position in the light of conditions as they exist today, is much overdue. Arising from the meeting which was convened by the Commerce Member on the 9th February last, to which we have had a reference from the Honourable Member, Government is now conversant with the views of all sections of the trade; and in replying to this debate I trust the Honourable Member in charge of Commerce will provide the House with details of the policy that Government propose to follow. Sir, I oppose the motion.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: Sir, I have no interest in the hides and skins trade or in any other trade, and I speak only from the economic point of view, I have as much interest in raw hides as I have in the half-tanned hides and skins produced in Madras, because I have got friends both in Madras and Calcutta who are interested in one or the other. This particular industry is very unfortunate—I do not know what sins they committed during the great war. Soon after the war, the first thing they did was to levy an export duty of 15 per cent. on hides and skins. This export duty was condemned by the Fiscal Commission; it was condemned by the Taxation Inquiry Committee, but still it was put on. In 1927 we had a debate on the floor of the House about the abolition of the duty and the House was divided between the Madras supporters on one side and the supporters of Bengal on the other and there was an equality of votes. I was not in the House then but the matter was decided by the casting vote of the Chair and he naturally gave his ruling in favour of the status quo. The duty remained as it was in 1937.

When I came up I raised this question again in 1931 and I said this: The value to India of this industry taken as a whole is about forty to fifty crores; it provides employment to large numbers of men and is a factor in the economic well being of millions of the depressed classes. There is scope for work in order to reduce the national waste.

Then I quoted from the report of the Hide Cess Committee and said:

The report also tells us that the larger percentage of exports consists of inferior grade hides from animals which have died a natural death, while the greater proportion of the hides of animals which have been slaughtered in slaughter houses is utilised by Indian tanners. Sir, we find that on account of this exchange policy of the Government, coupled with the export duty, which is really an insult to injury added, we find that the trade of the export of hides is going down very rapidly.

Now, my friend Mr. Inskip quoted figures and he said that the trade was flourishing in 1932. While advocating that this duty should be abolished, I quoted figures of the money received by means of the import duty and clearly showed that the law of diminishing returns was operating and then I pointed out at that time that in 1919-20 the money realised by export duty was 90,24,651 and year by year it has been falling down so much so that in the year 1930-31 it was reduced to 23,83,600 and to 12 lakhs in the following year. When the export duty of 5 per cent. has been falling down and the law of diminishing returns had begun to operate how on earth can you say that the export has been flourishing.

I took up the question again in the year 1934 and after a good deal of discussion the export duty was abolished. I had a great discussion with the then Commerce Member, Sir Joseph Bhore and I proved that it was on account of this export duty of 5 per cent. that the hides and skins trade, both tanned and raw, was really suffering. Sir James Grigg in the following year was satisfied by my arguments and he by the certification of the Government abolished the duty of 5 per cent. for the first time. Sir Cowasji Jehangir is not here. He could not understand why the Government should abolish the duty by means of certification by the Viceroy. The fact is that the case was genuine and real and Sir James Grigg did it. During the first great war, the trade suffered enormously and during the last year it suffered still further. The war does not suit this industry. And I do not know how much troubles are still in store for this industry.

I shall now put one or two simple questions to Mr. Inskip and any person who does not agree with me. Take the census of cows and buffaloes in India. It comes to 20 crores. The life of a buffalo is 7 years. So every year there must be a natural death of 3 crores. Exactly it comes to 275 lakhs. Out of this 3 crores India can only consume one crore. Where do the other 2 crores go? How are they consumed. If my friends stop the export altogether in order that our industry may be benefitted, then I entirely agree but they must show on the floor of the House that they have got facilities to tan the hides and skins in this country.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Guntur cum Nellore: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Let us create the facilities.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: Unless those facilities exist now, these hides and skins will go to waste. My friend is an economist. He cannot allow waste to go on. Now, I should like to tell my friend that the export of both tanned and raw hides is falling. Where has it gone. This really means that a large number of persons, specially the village chamars, who used to take the skins from the dead bodies of animals do not consider it worth while to take the skins. (An Honourable Member: It is wrong). Where does it go then? It is no use simply saying that I am wrong. You must be able to account for it satisfactorily. They have not gone outside, as the export has been stopped.

I shall now put two questions on which my whole case depends. I do not think any one engaged in the trade will support for a single moment the monopoly purchase system. I ask the Commerce Member whether it is not a fact that one organisation in London and one in the United States have got the sole right to purchase. Is this what you call freedom of trade? Why do you allow export only to these two countries and stop the export to other countries. This is absolutely not justifiable and I am sure that Professor Ranga as a champion of trade and industry will not support this.

Then as regards prices, the prices are not fixed by the market and by the local conditions but the purchasers have got the sole right to fix the price. They have got the right to fix any price they like and they have also got the monopoly of purchasing. I am not talking as a business man. I take my figures from the 'Economist'. Whenever the prices are going up of one article, then naturally the prices of all other articles go up in sympathy with each other. I have got the paper 'The Economist' before me and I have got there the index figures of all the articles. The index price of rice has gone up from 100 to 333; the index price of wheat has gone up from 100 to 372; the index price of coal has gone up from Rs. 100 to 287; but the index price of hides and skins has gone up from 100 to 128 only. So, 128 is the price which these foreign purchasers have fixed for the purchase of hides and skins.

I object to it on two principles. Firstly, there should be an open trade in hides and skins and we should be free to send them to any country we like; and, secondly, they should be sold at the economic price. And what we are getting now for hides and skins is not the economic price. When the purchasing power of the rupee has fallen to such a great extent in the case of rice, wheat and coal, it has not fallen to this extent in the case of hides and skins, so that the foreign people may be benefited by it. These are the two points which I would like to press.

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: May I ask the Honourable Member what he is reading from?

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: I thought I was reading from The Economist but it is The Capital I am reading from. But that does not matter because the figures of The Capital are just as good as those of The Economist except that they are a bit old.

The industry of hides and skins is rather unfortunate because the foreign markets are closed and shipping is not available. Government purchased all its military requirements at prices which were fixed by the purchasing authority. These are the difficulties under which this particular industry is suffering. In this particular case, they have really to consider the requirements of the villagers also, because unless you pay them an economic price, they will not undertake to take out the skin from the dead bodies. The price of meat, which used to be 6 annas a seer before the war, has gone up to Rs. 1-8-0.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: In Calcutta it is Rs. 3 per seer.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: It has gone up four times and therefore it is not worth while for these people to deal in hides and skins, to remove the skins from the dead bodies and then sell them. They do not get much from the skins and they have made up their loss by raising the price of meat. So, the price of other foodstuffs has gone up by 4 times, but the price of hides and skins has gone up only by about 42 per cent.

Mr. A. C. Inskip: It has gone up by about 4 times.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: The Honourable Member is thinking of the finished leather articles. Their price may have gone up by 4 times and that is also very unfair. The manufacturer of leather goods has raised the price four times, but he refuses to pay in the same proportion for the raw material from which he has manufactured his finished leather articles. If you charge the finished article a particular price, then economically it is correct and just that you should also raise the price of the raw material on which the manufacture of the finished article is based.

Mr. A. C. Inskip: May I point out to my Honourable friend that I made it clear in my speech that the price of raw hides had increased by no less than 400 per cent. He might be interested to know that the actual cost of the finished leather has increased only by 200 per cent. I think that answers his question.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: The question before me is this: whether I should believe Mr. Inskip or I should believe the Capital? The Capital says that the price of hides and skins has gone up by 128 only.

Mr. A. C. Inskip: It includes skins and there I agree with it.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: I am talking of hides and skins; my motion also relates to hides and skins and I am not separating them.

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: I would ask the Honourable Member to cease to be an economist but be a mathematician.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: The figures that I have given are for both hides and skins and my cut motion is also with regard to both. If my Honourable friend Mr. Inskip wants to produce leather goods and if he wants to buy hides and skins at a cheap price, then let him go to the open market. He should not use the influence of the Government and get the price fixed, nor should there be the Defence of India Rules which fix an uneconomic price, as is evident from the figures I have given. If they go into the open market and do not depend upon the Defence of India Rules and follow the legitimate principles of trade, I will have no objection; but this is not what they are doing. What right have you to force this particular trade to sell its stuff only to a particular firm in England and also in America? What right have you to say that they must sell it at the price which they fix?

In conclusion, I would like to say that this trade has suffered a lot. It is a trade which has been given about 50 crores of rupees and we cannot allow it to be dwindled by artificial methods of the Defence of India Rules. My friend says that whatever benefits and advantages they had been deriving during the war they should continue to have during the post-war period also. We strongly object to it. We allowed you to have enormous profits during the war, but after the war we want you to look after the people whose income is limited. You should not take advantage of the Defence of India Rules but you should follow the usual trade channels. Come to the open market and give us freedom to sell at any price we like and then we will have no objection.

Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava (Ambala Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I am not a leather merchant nor have I take any part in any such trade and I want to look at this question from the point of view of the common man living in the villages. I want to look at this question from the point of view of the cultivator.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: And also from the point of view of the village charmar.

Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava: Yes. The cattle belong to the cultivator and the charmar only takes the carcass and then prepares the hide. I join with Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad in his complaint that there should be no monopoly. I quite see his point. I also feel that the purchaser should not be allowed to fix a price for himself. I can see the ground of the charges. All the same, what I want and what I aim at is that instead of giving a fillip to the whole trade, the slaughter of cattle should be stopped altogether.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: And their deaths should also be stopped.

Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava: My point is that if there is an export and the cattle are being slaughtered for purposes of being exported, then this scandalous. In India, if you consider the figures, you will be pleased to see that production of hides in this country is 257.2 lakhs, import is 21 lakhs and the export in tanned hides is roughly 103.44 lakhs. India only uses in this manner 175 lakhs of pieces of raw hides for itself. The rest is exported. If you see how many hides are made from fallen animals and how many from slaughtered animals, you will see that about 66 lakhs of animals are slaughtered and 191.2 lakhs of hides are obtained from fallen cattle. It appears therefore that so far as internal needs of India are concerned, the hides from these fallen cattle are more than enough for general consumption of India. The hides of cattle which are slaughtered are exported. I want to submit that if in this country it is proved to the satisfaction of this House that the number of bullocks, and the number of cows are very small and the number is deteriorating every day, there is a case in which conditions should be so brought about that export is not encouraged. Now, Sir, if you kindly see the census of cattle so far as bullocks are concerned, we have got 4,39,34,150 including the States which possess 1,56,73,990, bullocks and the total is 5,96,08,140. Now, Sir, this is the number of bullocks over three years of age that is bullocks which grow food for us. The amount of cultivated land in this country is 36 crores 20 lakhs acres, including both British India and the States. If you kindly see the report of the Agricultural Commission, and consider also the figures given in Statement II of Mr. Burns' book, you will come to the conclusion that to cultivate 100 acres of land, you require ten pairs of bullocks. This is the estimate given in these two books and it is fairly accurate. Now, just finding what the number of bullocks in our country should be, I come to the conclusion that we require something like 7,24,00,000 bullocks—because 36 crores 20 lakhs of acres divided by five, gives this figure. We have got only 5,96,08,146 bullocks which means that we are in deficit of more than 125 lakhs of bullocks only to cultivate the land which is to be cultivated. It may be argued that camels and he-buffaloes also are used for the purpose of cultivation. Even considering the number of camels and he-buffaloes, it is quite clear that we are still in deficit as regards the number of bullocks required to cultivate all the lands. I do not want to go in detail. I submit that about 80 lakhs more of bullocks are required to cultivate the land which is already fit for cultivation. Some of my Honourable friends have no familiarity with village conditions. I very well know how this paucity of bullocks affect the villagers. I come from a district where there is great paucity of bullocks. You will be perhaps surprised to hear that after the last famine, even donkeys were used for ploughing, even cows were used and sometimes even men and women were used for ploughing. In a country like India where the supply of bullocks is not sufficient, it is suicidal to think of export of hides.

Now, again, Sir, if you kindly see the cultivable land of this country, it is about 25 crores of acres which require another five crores of bullocks, which means that in order to make the Grow More Food campaign a success, we require 5 crores, 80 lakhs of bullocks more, so that we may be able to cultivate just the cultivable lands. If you then see the present figures of cows and bullocks in this country, you will be surprised to know that in spite of what the Government of India tell us that they are doing in the matter of increase of cattle, actually the cattle are decreasing. In the Punjab, in 1895, there were 43,50,374 working bullocks, that is 20 bullocks per 100 acres. Now in 1944, the number of bullocks is 44 lakhs 5 thousand while acreage has increased which means that we in the Punjab have got only 14 bullocks for every 100 acres of cultivable land in 1944.

Khan Abdul Ghani Khan: The Punjab is one of the biggest provinces that export cattle to North West Frontier Province and other places. They cannot have it both ways.

Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava: It is true that from the Punjab, bullocks are also exported. Our difficulty is that there is no National Government in the Punjab. If there were a National Government, we won't allow a single cattle to go out of the Punjab. As a matter of fact these conditions are quite unknown to many people and the Government themselves do not care to improve these conditions and that is why the cattle are exported. I come from a district which has been very and is famous for its cattle wealth. The Punjab, which was also the richest province in cattle wealth has now become poor and we need 16 lakhs of bullocks more to cultivate our lands in 1944. If you see the number of cattle which existed in the Punjab in 1869, you will see that we had 38.6 cows and bullocks per 100 persons whereas in 1940-41, we had only 22.3 per cent. If you look at the figures in U.P. and Madras, you will find a similar tale. It appears from the Famine Enquiry Commission report page 177 that in U.P. the number of cows decreased 11 per cent. in 1944 and in Madras there is also a decrease. In such a state of affairs, how can you view with equanimity when export trade is asked to be encouraged. Now, Sir, leaving this matter aside, there is another aspect which must be considered before you come to any conclusion as to whether exporting conditions should be made more favourable to those who are engaged in the trade. The consideration which I want to place before you is that the children in India generally do not get the milk they require. It is well known that we want more milk for nourishing children, but how can you have more milk if you slaughter 66 lakhs of cattle for the purpose of export of hides only. I do not want to look at this matter from a religious point of view. I look at it only from an economic point of view. I submit that in the Punjab as well as in the whole of India, the children of Muslim peasants require more milk for their sustenance. They are not in the habit of taking animal food. If you see the report on marketing of hides, you will see on page 4 and 56 that in this country as a matter of fact except for some urban towns, the cattle are not slaughtered for the purpose of supply of beef. And this is true not only of the Hindus but also of the Muslims who do not want to slaughter their cattle for food. Therefore my submission is that in this country where according to Government's own report we want to increase the supply of milk by 300 per cent. we cannot say that the slaughter of cattle should not be stopped. The Government of India issued instructions some time ago and I know that there were certain Governments including the Punjab which did not stop the slaughter of cattle as advised by Government.

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: Sir, on a point of order, may I remind my Honourable friend that it is not an Agriculture demand but a Commerce Department demand?

Mr. President: I may invite the attention of the Honourable Member who raises the point of order, that the cut motion relates to the unsatisfactory position of export of hides, and the position is unsatisfactory, according to the argument, if the slaughter is permitted.

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: I am glad you have supplied the last answer.

Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava: Now, Sir, I just heard from Sir Zia Uddin that he was in favour of putting an embargo on exports if these hides were needed in the country. I will refer him to page 102 of the report on the marketing of hides which says that in this country out 175 lakhs of hides 12 lakhs are used as raw hides, and of the remaining 163 lakhs only half is used for chappals and country shoes. You will find that the number of hides is only just enough to supply the needs of one-fifth of the population of this country. If every person in India is to be furnished with a pair of shoes you will require many more heads, and the total supply will not be enough to cover the naked feet of all the people of the country.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: May I point out that the number is 275 and not 175?

Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava: My Honourable friend will excuse me if I tell him that the total production is 257.3 out of which about 103 lakhs are exported and the rest consumed in this country, i.e., about 175 lakhs (with the additions of 21 lakhs consumed). And we can give shoes only to one-fifth of the population of India. It is clear that even if all the hides are used in this country they would not be sufficient for the needs of all the people in India. Moreover, if you want that the hides should be used here, I submit that they must be entirely tanned here. The chamar and the butcher, with both of whom I have got sympathy for their not getting proper prices, will get much better prices. Why do you allow hides to go out? If you tan the leather here you will get much better prices. The poor chamar is an ignorant person and he is being exploited by the butcher and the merchant every day. The question is between the chamar and the ordinary man in the street who are interested in agriculture and production of food on one side and the leather merchant who wants to take advantage of them on the other. I have no antipathy against any leather merchant, but I do not want that these people should take advantage of their position and thrive at the expense of the poor people. Therefore so far as the interest of the poor chamar and the cultivator are concerned, all slaughter should be absolutely stopped at once. It may go on only for religious purposes. The people who want to take meat is very small and the country in general does not require the cattle to be slaughtered. To every Hindu and Muslim peasant his cattle are as dear as his children and people who know the conditions in the villages are aware that it is repugnant to them that this slaughter should be continued. Leaving aside this consideration.....

Khan Abdul Ghani Khan: Have you not heard of the tractor?

Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava: Yes, I will deal with that. We read in the papers yesterday that tractors will not come till September. But how many tractors will you bring in and how can you go on with the agriculture of this country with tractors? In the Punjab many people are small owners of land; can you conceive of any time in the near future when people will take to collective farming? I do not think it will be possible in the near future to use tractors for agricultural purposes.

Khan Abdul Ghani Khan: You can use them on holdings of 20 acres.

Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava: I wish my Honourable friend had the same experience as I have. I understand it is his intention that tractors should cultivate the land in the country that all the people will combine and distribute the produce. I do not think that is likely to happen. Perhaps for another fifty years we would not want tractors; we want bullocks and cows. The tractors will not give dung and urine to fertilise the soil. If you read the books on manure which are issued by the Government of India you will find that the best manure for the soil comes from the excreta of the cattle. We want therefore our cattle for fertility; they will give us food, raiment and every other thing.

I do not make these submissions from the point of view of religion. Perhaps in the N.W.F. Province there are not many animals and so the difficulty is not realised there. So far as Punjab and the rest of the country are concerned I am on solid ground when I ask for the stoppage of cattle slaughter and the total stoppage of raw hides being exported, what to speak of facilities for greater export. I have refrained from saying anything about skins of goats, etc., because I have not studied that question; but so far as hides are concerned, I am positive that in the best interests of the country it is imperative that our hides should never be allowed to be exported.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Sir, my Honourable friend Sir Zia Uddin said with an apology that he is not interested in this business. I have no hesitation in saying that I am interested in this business. You may be surprised with this mark on my forehead, that I can be interested in this business at all. Sir, I come from Madras and Madras consumes 90 per cent. of the skins and hides which are tanned in this country, and the lowest of the low are engaged in this business. We have seven lakhs of villages in this country and on an average three heads of cattle die every month in each village, and about 36 or 40 is the total number that a village has by way of fallen or slaughtered cattle. In all we have 257 lakhs of skins produced in this country per year, out of which 197.1 lakhs are dead animals, not slaughtered. Therefore this is a very important industry. I would have whole-heartedly supported the motion of my Honourable friend Mr. Nauman if he had not used the word "raw". Goats and skins and hides are produced in this country of the value of 50 crores of rupees a year. I find that by the monopoly that is practised by Government proper prices are not being given either for raw hides or for tanned hides. Whereas raw hides have been going down in exports, the prices and exports of tanned hides also have been going down. If we are interested in the tanning industry at least tanned hides must have a proper market elsewhere. To that extent I join with my Honourable friend in condemning the action of Government in securing a monopoly and fixing prices which are not in conflict with the prices that ought to be given to them and against the interests of producers in this country and all in favour of those persons who wanted to buy us out. To that extent I whole-heartedly support it. But, Sir, I disagree with him in this respect that I am in favour of not exporting any kind of hide or skin whether tanned or raw. Our country can consume the entire quantity. The fault lies with the Government. A number of years ago my Honourable friend, Sir James Grigg, who was then the Finance Member, allotted one crore of rupees for the improvement of village industries. A number of batches of persons were taught—chamars and others—in the art of tanning and they were despatched from Bombay and other Presidencies from village to village, but that scheme stopped after one year. Tanning is of three kinds: Hides and skins are tanned as a 4 P. M. cottage industry. There are such hides and skins which are tanned locally in each village and are used for the purposes of making chappals and other leather articles—that is going on to a large extent. It is a secondary occupation for chamars; they live on agriculture, and this is another occupation. This is not touched by Hindus. Mussalmans do not do the business of flaying but a number of them are engaged in the business of tanning in my part of the Presidency. Over five lakhs of men are engaged in this industry and three millions of harijans are also labourers in this industry, and therefore it will seriously affect them if raw produce is sent away to foreign countries. The tanning industry in my country would be seriously affected. That is why about 8 or 9 years ago when export duty placed upon the export of hides and skins was sought to be removed, my Honourable friend, Mr. Nauman, who wants export of raw hides and skins from this country,.....

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: Sir, just a word of personal explanation. What I said then, and have been saying all through, is that economic price should be given, i.e., tanners should be able to compete on the world parity prices; if the United Kingdom or Turkey is prepared to pay Rs. 10 for a certain class of hide, the tanners in India should also be prepared to give the same price so that there may not be any loss to the original producer.

[At this stage Mr. President vacated the Chair which was then occupied by Mr. Deputy President (Sir Mohamunad Yamin Khan).]

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: I am only sorry he is not on the Treasury Benches. Such kinds of answers I have received from the Treasury Benches when a measure of protection of industry in this country was brought before this House. They used to say how are you going to protect the consumers? For a number of years the industry is not going to stand on its own legs. Whether industry in a short period of time can stand on its own legs or not, the industry must be protected.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: For how long?

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Eternally. Where I am pulling this side, you are always pulling that side. It is unfortunate that in this country we have taken sides—some people have taken the side of producers and others have taken the side of manufacturers. They are not struggling with the British Government, but they are struggling against each other. My Honourable friend must have helped the tanning industry in some parts, but there is one big or small tanning industry in Cawnpore. He does not know in how many small factories, tanning is going on in my part of the Presidency. Instead of joining hands with me in forcing this Government to help those poor who are struggling for occupation, you are going against them. I am not putting it on religious grounds. Cattle must die sometimes; they are also slaughtered; I am not against people who eat them.....

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: You want to give the hides away for a song.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: My Honourable friend, Mr. Nauman, is possibly a rich man—I am not so rich—and I would like that all his property should be given away to the poor if it is a question of helping the poor in this country, giving one more morsel of food. The sooner he gives up asking for export of hides and skins, he will do a real service to this country. So long as they are not giving proper price for tanned hides, I agree in condemning the Government. My Honourable friend in charge of the Department certainly is sympathetic, but he is unable, in the midst of a number of others sitting alongside him, to do anything. I have no quarrel with any of the dark men sitting there, because they are small wheels in a huge machine, and they can only laugh.....

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: Say 'tanned men'!

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: I have not much to say; I only want to say that I am unable to give support from this side of the House and that I am not able to see eye to eye with Mr. Nauman.

So far as Sir Zia Uddin Ahmed is concerned, he has been misunderstood. I have understood him aright. A long time ago he was also against the export of raw hides and skins. He gave an illustration. He said, ladies in Western countries and in America are very anxious to have dove-like skin which is very soft and malleable and therefore they are not satisfied with the skin of animals born in the natural way. They would like to remove the uterus, kill the animal and remove it so that the skin if it is peeled out may be very soft. That is what happens in this country.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: I did not say that.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: You said so. I have got the reports here.

Lastly, so much tribute has been given to the Honourable Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar. He was a Member of this House, and his speeches have been recorded. When he was an ordinary member of this House and when the motion for removing export duty, came up before this Assembly as long ago as 1934, instead of Mr. Nauman there was some other Mr. Mazdoor and he was anxious to get this export duty removed, and Sir Ramaswami cried out 'no, no'. Therefore even then, so long ago, he voiced the feelings of Madras. We are opposed to export of raw hides, and therefore all of us agree that this industry should flourish and we condemn this Government in not having developed this industry as cottage industry and industry in factory both of finished and tanned articles. To that extent I agree, but in as much as it is not properly worded we are not able to vote in favour of this motion.

Sardar Sampuran Singh (West Punjab: Sikh): I have full sympathy with my Honourable friend, Mr. Ayyangar, from Madras. It is not only the problem of his province, but this cottage industry exists all over the country. The chamar in every village in the Punjab cures and tans hides in his own crude way, and they are used for making shoes for the villagers. I think we should develop this small industry to make good leather and eventually we should be able to tan all the skins and hides which we produce in this country. I do not agree with Dr. Sir Zia Uddin when he says that bullocks could be substituted by tractors. I shall welcome the day—(I am sorry I mean Khan Abdul Ghani Khan).

Khan Abdul Ghani Khan: I did not say substituted.

Sardar Sampuran Singh: I shall welcome the day when we can cultivate large areas by tractors but so far they have failed, and failed for the following reasons:

(a) We by use of tractors demolish the banks which we require for irrigation purposes.

(b) We need ordinary ploughs for inter-culture of cotton and other crops, which cannot be done by tractors, and if we keep bullocks we have to incur double expense.

[Sardar Sampuran Singh]

(c) As it was pointed out by Pandit Bhargava, we require cattle also for manure. That is an additional help in agriculture.

(d) The farm holdings are so small that unless with the interference of Government lands are consolidated and there is co-operative agriculture, till then, we cannot use tractors in this country successfully except by very big landlords and at great expense I think.

But I cannot agree with Pandit Bhargava that the number of bullocks in this country is small. His calculations are even wrong and based on wrong data because he thinks that we require a pair of bullocks for ten acres of land. At least it is not so in the Punjab. Ordinarily one pair of bullocks cultivates 14 to 15 acres of land.

Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava: In India where the average is 10.8 acres per pair whereas the acreage is only six or seven in Madras, Bombay and Bengal, etc. If you will kindly see statement II, p. 113 in Burns' Book.

Sardar Sampuran Singh: I am talking from practical knowledge. I am a farmer myself and I know. To our tenants we give 14 to 15 acres of land per pair of bullock but they always demand more land and it is with great pressure that we keep them within those limits. Besides it is a well known fact that the quality of cattle in our country has so much deteriorated and if we go on breeding out of them and increase the number of cattle in our country, I think we will be creating so many more parasites to eat the grain which we require for human beings. For that simple reason we have to reorganise this cattle question throughout the country. We have to reduce their number. That may be done by stopping breeding from inferior animals and by improving the breed. Unless we take some radical steps in that direction, I think we would be creating so many animals which I think we really do not require.

In the end, Sir, I have to say only one word. Tanning and curing is a great industry, which with one or two exceptions is practically ignored all over the country and this can be very much developed as a cottage industry where a few men in each village can make their living out of tanning the skins and hides which they get from their own village. For that reason also I would submit that if it is to be exported, let it be exported not in a raw form but in a manufactured form.

Chaudhri Sri Chand (Nominated Non-Official): Is it not a matter for regret and for surprise that in this Land of India which was proverbial for its streams of milk, milk is now being imported from other countries? I read, a few days ago, in the papers that 70,00,000 tons of milk would be imported into India. It has been discussed in this House that facilities may be provided to export hides to foreign countries. It would have been better if we had discussed to export milk to foreign countries and to import hides from those countries. At present, we, Indians, can neither get pure milk nor unmixed ghee. In cities skimmed milk, containing a large proportion of water, and, vegetable ghee in place of the genuine ghee are being used. This has bred dangerous diseases like tuberculosis which are daily on the increase. In villages, where in the absence of fruit and vegetables, people lived on milk and ghee these commodities have become so scarce that they cannot be had even for children.

India is an agricultural country. 70 per cent. of her people live in villages and depend on cultivation. Villagers, whether Hindus or Muslims, have no taste for meat-eating. They prefer milk to meat. They love their cattle more than their children. Leave aside eating them, they cannot bear to see them slaughtered. For Indians, cattle are essential for their milk, curd and ghee, etc. Pandit Thakar Das has told us the pace at which cattle are decreasing in India. If this pace is kept on we shall have no cattle left in India nor shall we have hides to export to other countries.

*The Honourable Member spoke in Urdu.

Population is increasing while cattle are decreasing. I am afraid that if the slaughter of cattle is not stopped the health of the villagers will deteriorate after a very short time.

In cities, cattle are slaughtered merely for their hides. Lacs of cattle from the District of Rohtak in the Punjab are carried to larger towns, such as, Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, Delhi, etc., etc., where their calves are forthwith slaughtered while they are allowed to live till they become dry and then slaughtered for their hides.

The export of hides and skins must be stopped otherwise the practice of slaughtering cattle will never end. Poor chamars used to live on the skins of dead animals. This has gradually been monopolized by capitalists in each town, who are greedy of money and export hides to other countries while poor villagers go about barefooted. Seventy per cent. of the people of India live on agriculture but owing to export of hides they kill bullocks. I am told that bullocks and calves are severely beaten before they are slaughtered. This is done to make the hide tougher and weightier. Sheep are killed in pregnancy for the skin of the unborn lamb because it is delicate and soft and fetches good price. Bullocks have decreased to such an extent that camels, cows, buffaloes and donkeys are yoked to the plough. The farmer knows that by ploughing with the help of these animals the yield from the field is greatly reduced because they cannot plough the soil deep enough to make it more productive. After the last famine men and women were yoked to the plough. Pandit Thakar Das has rightly said that the area of land under cultivation is larger than before and yet the number of bullocks has much decreased. Somebody suggested that we should follow the Americans and cultivate our land by means of tractors which will come to India from foreign countries by the month of September next. My learned friend seems to have no rural experience. In the Punjab a cultivator possesses, on an average, two acres of land. He is too poor to buy a tractor nor has he so much land as to need a tractor. The time is yet far off when tractors will be used for cultivating land in India. Bullocks are essential for the farmer. Cattle are most necessary for the health and economy of India. Sardar Sampuran Singh has suggested that the number of cattle may be decreased but their breed may be improved. I do not agree with him. The number of cattle is already insufficient in the country and an increase in their number is essential. The breed was not good at first but since the increase in price the cultivators have tried to improve the breed and we can now see cattle of the highest breed in our villages. Hence I am against his suggestion.

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: Sir, I will not try to preface my remarks by saying that I only propose to speak a few words as my friend Mr. Nauman said but concluded his speech after 20 minutes. My friend is suffering under a misconception and I personally tried to explain to him that we have been at considerable pains to find out as to what should be the future export position of hides and skins in this country. I can assure my friend, though I am not in the trade like my friend, that I am fully cognisant of the position of hides and skin export, so far as India's future postwar trade is concerned. There are a certain number of export articles for which India had been reputed in the past and if we have to maintain an export market for this country in future, these avenues should be explored to the utmost. Long before my friend even wrote to me his letter I took up this question myself. I will not say anything more on this. I felt that with the cessation of war the time has come when we should review the position. In fact I may tell him that by tabling this cut motion he has made my position more difficult than what it was. That is the very least I can say without disclosing some of the facts.

My friend has got a copy of the proceedings from which he read. He will find that on the 9th February the hide and skin conference was called. The Export Advisory Council was held sometime about the end of December or at the beginning of January. And even though I plead guilty that I did not invite the representatives of my friend's association, to it my only excuse was that in the matter of export the real interests concerned for the time being were not those who actually collected from the field or got from the middlemen, but the traders who export or the manufacturers who manufacture. I thought that I need not confuse the issue and in order to come to a conclusion as to what should be the future export line, people, who have been in the export trade and people who are in the manufacture should be invited to a conference. That was the line I took, it was not because I did not recognise the existence of my friend's association and I will try to show that I wanted to consult every possible interest in the country, apart from the question of the different Departments which are concerned in this matter. I shall read the names of those bodies which attended the conference, though there are a number who did not.

(1) Hides and Skins Shippers Association, Calcutta. (2) South India Tanners and Dealers Association, Ranipet. (3) Southern India Skin and Hide Merchants Association, Madras. (4) Karachi Hide and Skin Shippers Association. (5) Federation of Muslim Chambers of Commerce and Industry. (6) Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry. (7) Tanners Federation of India. (8) Associated Chambers of Commerce. (9) The Indian Merchants Chamber, Bombay. (10) The Buyers and Shippers Chamber, Karachi. (11) Hide and Skin Merchants Association, Amritsar. (12) Hides and Skin Merchants Association, Multan. (13) Amritsar Muslim Traders Association. (14) Hide Merchants and Suppliers Association, Lahore. (15) Goat and Sheep Skin Exporters, Delhi. (16) Leather Goods Manufacturers Association, Bombay. (17) Association of Indian Industries. (18) All-India Footwear Federation. (19) Bata Shoe Company. (20) Agra Shoe Manufacturers Association.

If after this long list, my friend Mr. Nauman comes to the House and says that this is not a representative conference, as his association was not convened, I think that he is doing wrong to those distinguished men who came to represent the various interests concerned. Sir, I only wanted to bring to your notice that long before this cut motion I had thought out this problem and I wanted to do my best in order to help the trade.

Let me here quote what I said in my opening speech on that occasion:

"The Chairman opened the discussion stating that the views expressed in the past by various interests regarding the supply position and export possibilities of hides, skins and leather goods were irreconcilable. This Conference was therefore called in order to reach agreed conclusions if possible regarding the future export position of these commodities. He added that the position of these articles was quite different at present from what it was before the war. Since 1929 there has been a tendency for increased tanning and finishing of leather goods in this country, apart from the fillip given to organised factories and cottage industries during the war period. It was the policy of the Government of India to develop wherever possible manufacture of indigenous articles in the country. The question therefore, before the conference was to ascertain what quantities of raw materials could be processed within the country and to what extent raw materials or manufactured goods could be exported."

I made my position quite clear, that I was anxious to find out or explore the possibility from those who were interested as to what is actually the consuming capacity of the country, what can be consumed in the near future and if there is any balance left, whether or not we should export that. I hope every section of the House will agree that that was the only sound position to take up. Unfortunately I have not had many facts or statistics. My friend has not given me any figures to answer any of these actual points which should determine the issue. My friend has not said anything as to what is the present consuming capacity of the tanning industry both in the factories as well as in the cottages. If my friend can give it, I can come to a conclusion tomorrow. My friend has not given any data on which I can estimate the present production of hides and skins in this country. Sir, having regard to these two factors I therefore wanted a little data. Unfortunately there are two interests each against the other and irreconcilable almost till the end I therefore immediately took steps to issue a long note about surveying the actual position today and I wanted from the different Departments concerned as to the actual facts and figures with reference to these three factors which I have referred to. I have not been able to get them. It was written in my own hand. If my friend can answer any of these points on the floor of the House or even tomorrow or within a week, I can assure him that I will be able to come to a decision immediately on this export policy. I said, for example that there has been a complaint in the country, that there has been a reduction in the cattle population of the country. We must know what is the cattle population today. What are the actual figures of the death rates within the last few years? What is the annual production of hides within the last few years? To what extent they are fallen hides and to what extent are they slaughtered? Are there any corresponding figures for any of these items during the recent war years and also corresponding figures for goats and sheep? We wanted also to know the extent of the expansion of the tanning industry in organised factories and also the nature of expansion in the village cottage industries including footwear industry. Only after knowing all these facts we can come to a decision. I hope my friend will not press this motion on the ground that simply because there was this export before irrespective of the consideration of the internal manufacturing capacity of this country, we should allow exports to be resumed. While I am in sympathy with the object of my friend, I cannot assure him straightaway as to what line we shall take. But I can give this assurance, that if I am satisfied reasonably that after allowing all that is necessary for internal manufacture in this industry at the present moment there is still a good or fair surplus or likelihood of such a surplus, I will certainly try my best to revise the present policy, by encouraging exports, because this wealth will return to the man who collects it; and if I can allow export to that extent, it will help his economic position. But I will be jeopardising the economic position if I allow an article to be exported which can be consumed within the country itself. That has been the policy of the Government of India and I stand by that policy. My Honourable friend has referred to certain prices. Sometimes it is dangerous for a mathematician to be an economist. My friend Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad is a distinguished mathematician, but he tried to play the role of an economist also. He gave certain figures and it was with great difficulty that I was able to get the facts: I found that whereas Mr. Inskip was referring to the price of hides in Calcutta, Sir Zia Uddin was referring to the prices of both hides and skins, together; and it is well known that whereas the price of hides has risen very high, the price of skins is comparatively on a lower level; and the combined figures naturally will react on one another

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: The motion refers to both.

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: But my figures referred to hides only, and Mr. Inskip also referred to hides only. Mr. Inskip's point was—and he was quoting from the same proceedings to which my friend Mr. Nauman referred—that according to those who wanted export to be encouraged, the figures in Calcutta were: in the year 1938, Rs. 3/15 to Rs. 5/8 a piece; and in 1945, the prices were Rs. 16 to Rs. 17; and the present ruling price was Rs. 16. Therefore it cannot be complained about the Calcutta price it is more than 400 per cent.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: May I interrupt? The particular class of hides he is referring to is different. Besides, the question I put is this, whether Indian hides are able to fetch higher prices through export or not. I am not by any chance going to say that we should not help our industries or that we are not prepared to co-operate with industries. At the same time what I wish to impress on the Honourable Member is that industries should not be allowed to pay Rs. 5 for an article which can be sold at Rs. 15 elsewhere.

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: I have understood my friend perfectly. At the same time I should think that it is not a sound economic proposition from the point of view of economic development of any country, that because you can get a rupee more outside, as against the local price which is 300 per cent more, you must send it outside, even when you are satisfied that the price you are getting is a fair economic price here. I think it will be wrong if our export policy is only governed by the price consideration. There are so many other considerations. The question of unemployment, the question of manufacturing in this country, the question of strategy and defence all these are factors on which the export policy has to be built up; and it is for that reason that as a part of the war effort, the sanctions of economic warfare were considered very important with a view to winning the war. Anyway, even supposing, that my friend is correct, I take it that there is no special virtue in the Dacca hide, except that it is dry salted. Others are not dry-salted, but treated in another manner; and if ordinary experience is any guide and if it is a fact that the Dacca price has gone from 3/15 to 17, (and my friend cannot contradict me unless he gives me the facts), I say that other prices must have followed the same parity. That is only reasonable, unless my friend can satisfy me that though the Dacca price by virtue of adding a little salt has increased so much, the prices of other articles have not increased. I do not know if that is his contention. As I said, I am anxiously waiting for figures. Unfortunately in my experience—and I plead this very humbly—we often talk of general propositions but unsubstantiated by facts which are necessary to come to a conclusion on such propositions. I am quite prepared to accept my friend's argument wholly that I should not be guided by the self-interest of tanners. I think he will also agree with me that the other side is also true, namely, that I should not be guided only by the advice of the exporters. In all conscience I must look to the development of the country as a whole; and it was with that view that I brought all these interests together in order that they may be reconciled in one place. My friend has seen their proceedings. In fact this matter still requires a considerable amount of reference to different Departments and different ports and different trade interests in a vast country like India, before you can come to a satisfactory solution. But I do hope that I shall be able to come to some conclusion within a week or two at the utmost.

I shall take only a few minutes more because I have to reply to all these points. As I said, I recognise the value of this hides and skins business. Our business was with almost every country in the world before, and I am anxious that this should also if possible be one of our exports; but if these goods can be manufactured in this country, the better; and if from the tanned leather, we can manufacture shoes and export them, it is still better. Therefore I must try to find out a reconciliation between all these interests before I can come to a conclusion.

I do not think I need answer the point because when Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad put a simple question to those who did not agree with him, I felt that it was a very complicated question. I do not think I need enter into the question of slaughters and bulls versus bullocks and tractors and all those factors which I consider wholly beside the point for a considered judgment on the export policy. Suffice it for me to say that I have been for the last two or three months trying to get the actual data on all these points, and I can assure the House that if I am satisfied that having regard to the needs of the country there is likelihood of a surplus of hides and skins in this country, I certainly would be the first to see that they are exported in order that India may get wealth from abroad. But simultaneously I should also try to do everything possible to help the manufacturers.

There is one point which I must say. As a matter of fact we have relaxed to a large extent in our export policy, and my friend knows well that we have relaxed a great deal in that direction and are permitting a certain number of things to go out in reasonable quantities.

As regards his offer for monopoly purchases, I think that is a matter which should be tackled by the Supply Department, because the price factor was controlled by the Supply Department, and that is wholly beyond the issue of the export policy; but for the information of my friend I can tell him that the Combined Raw Materials Resources Board at Washington, which was dealing with this, has been, I think, dissolved; and therefore the question of price-combination by the Governments of other countries does not arise in the present moment. Whether there is any trade cartel or not, I can assure him that India is not a participant in the trade cartel and I would certainly very carefully watch the situation before I enter into a negotiation with such an organisation which can control and monopolise the price, so far as India's export is concerned.

As regards the price, as I said, this is a point which is outside the scope of the Commerce Department and therefore I would not like to touch it. I think, Sir, that is all I have got to say. So far as Mr. Inskip is concerned, I want to make it quite clear that in so far as the interest of the internal manufacturer and the tanning industry is concerned, both in factories and within the country, we shall certainly watch before we think of doing anything which might jeopardise their position. Sir, I oppose the motion.

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi (Calcutta and Suburbs: Muhammadan Urban): I think the debate on this question has been side tracked by my friends on my left as well as by my friends on my right. I will leave the cow to take care of itself and I shall leave the milk of the cow for the children again to take care of itself. The problem here is that in order to help tanners the Honourable Member wishes to crush the trade in hides and skins and is stopping us from selling our goods to the best buyers. If Indian tanners want the hides and skins let them pay a price which other countries in the world are prepared to pay. I cannot understand how the Honourable Member for Commerce could come and tell us of his great theories about industrialisation and about the needs of the tanners when we know that the price of hides for export and even goat skins is not fixed by the seller or the buyer through negotiation but by other influences outside of them. The Honourable the Commerce Member ought to know the trick played about jute, about tea and certain other monopoly commodities in this country. My request to him is—leave us alone. If the man in New York or the man in London or the man in Hamburg, whenever he comes into the picture, wishes to purchase Indian hides and skins, let him pay the price which is fair. The Indian tanner, in competition, will benefit to the extent of the transportation and insurance charges. I cannot understand why the merchants of hides and skins should be punished because of the desire of the Honourable the Commerce Member to have more tanneries in India.

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: May I ask whether in deciding the export policy I must forget the tanneries altogether?

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: The tanneries should, in my humble judgment, take care of themselves, but I shall not be robbed and here I speak with some feeling, because you will understand me better; when I say, Barq girti hai to bechare Mussalmanon par. This is the one trade in which the Muslim has some standing. This is the one trade he has understood at least for a hundred years and certainly understands it today. Why hold him back? You sell other goods. You sell other things. Let the Indian tanner come into the market and pay me my price, not the price that New York or London or any of the big folk outside India fix.

Sir M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Does the Honourable Member know that the tanner is also a Mussalman?

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: The tanner may be a Mussalman or a Marwari. That does not matter. Even if he is a Muslim tanner, he has to pay the full price for the goods he purchases. These manipulations have led to heavy losses. I do not know when their great tanning programme will come into being. Until then I should not be punished. Increase your tanneries, increase your village tanneries also and cottage industries and all what you like and create a balancing between exports and imports in this country but until you are able to give us a definite plan, you must leave us alone. The Honourable the Commerce Member, according to his own confession, still wants the Honourable the Mover of this Cut, to supply him with figures. What is his great Department doing? I refuse to give him figures. Let him find them out and when he has done that and when he has distributed the hides and skins between the tanners and our great masters in New York and London, then I shall begin to think of another distribution of a higher percentage in India and a lower percentage outside. It is absolutely correct fact that certain combinations in London and New York bring such great pressure on us that we are unable to sell our hides and skins to Middle Eastern countries where we are liable to get higher prices. What happens is, they take away our goods at prices fixed by them and then they sell at a higher price to others. Would not the Commerce Member let me have that little margin between the two prices. That is what I am trying to impress upon him. It is all very well to talk of industrialization and so on. I hope it will come soon but until then do not crush us. Do not pulverise us and do not throw us back into poverty once more.

Mr. Deputy President: The question is:

"That the demand under the head 'Commerce Department' be reduced by Rs. 100."

The Assembly divided:

STARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

(a) ORAL ANSWERS

SLAUGHTER OF BUFFALO-CALVES BY MILITARY AUTHORITIES

1003. *Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will the Agriculture Secretary be pleased to state:

(a) if it is a fact that the Military authorities slaughter even buffalo-calves; if so, whether any record has been kept about their ages and numbers;

(b) whether any steps are taken to prevent such a slaughter;

(c) if it is also a fact that the Military authorities are prepared to send the buffalo-calves in their farm on the fourteenth day of their birth and have offered to give them away freely to anyone who wishes to look after them;

(d) whether Government are satisfied that the calves of fourteen days of age can live if separated from their mother-buffaloes and whether Government propose to represent to the Military authorities to send them at least when they are three months of age, so that the calves can be safely separated from their mother-buffaloes; and

(e) whether Government propose to get into touch with the existing Pinjrapoles and other organisations interested in cattle protection and development and invite their attention to the offer of the Military authorities to give them the buffalo calves freely and tell them at what Military farms and on what days in the week or month they can take charge of the calves?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: (a) As stated in the reply to Starred Question No. 424, of Pt. Thakur Das Bhargava, in those Provinces in which legislation prohibits the slaughter of female buffalo calves, no such calves are slaughtered, except a small proportion (considerably less than one per cent) which have to be destroyed on veterinary advice. In other provinces a percentage of such calves, depending on the demand for meat and the availability of feeding grains are slaughtered. A statement is laid on the table showing the number of female buffalo-calves slaughtered is three Military Farms, viz., Meerut, Agra and Muttra. No records as to numbers and ages of those slaughtered in other areas are kept, but a record of all calves given away free is maintained. A rough estimate shows that out of 1100 young stock produced each month some 750 are taken away and some 200 kept at the farm.

(b) Orders were issued in August 1945 to all Military Farms prohibiting the slaughter of calves, where the laws of a province do not permit slaughter.

(c) Female buffalo-calves are maintained at Government farms for 14 days and then given away free to those who are prepared to take them.

(d) Experts differ on the point but the military authorities consider that practical cattle breeders who are conversant in the art of weaning can rear young calves even when they are separated from their dams at the age of 14 days. They point out that the rearing of these calves for three months at farms comes to Rs. 150 each and do not consider it desirable to undertake this work.

(e) The Provincial Governments were informed about the free availability of such animals for rearing by cattle breeders. Wide publicity is also said to have been given to this by the Information Department. The Military Farms will have no objection to handing over the calves to Pinjrapoles and other organisations who may contact the nearest farms for obtaining these calves. They may be taken on any day of the week or month, except Sundays.

Statement showing the number of female buffalo-calves in three Military Farms, viz., Meerut, Agra and Muttra.

* Destroyed on veterinary certificate.

† The high percentage of deaths is due contagious abortion being prevalent in the herd to certified by veterinary officers.

‡ Six died at birth, eight died of stomach disorders and six destroyed on veterinary orders. The veterinary officers state that 14 deaths were probably due to dietetic errors which have since been rectified.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: In view of the fact that it is not always the expert cattle breeders who will be able to take these calves, will Government consider the advisability of reconsidering their earlier decision and increasing the age of these calves from 15 days to a longer period before they are given away to these Pinjrapoles or other organisations?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: The suggestion will be examined.

Mr. Manu Subedar: May I know whether there is only one-way traffic from the military to the Agriculture Department and that there is no traffic from the Agriculture Department to the military with regard to ideas? And in view of the great depletion of the cattle in India, could not the military be now persuaded by the Agricultural Department to take the extra trouble, to give the benefit of the doubt, and not get these calves, at least the she-calves, disposed of in 14 days and keep them for at least 30 days?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: That is exactly what I have said that we shall examine the matter in consultation with the military authorities and see if the period can be extended.

Mr. Manu Subedar: My question is this: Are the civilian members of this Government so powerless against the military that they could not enforce this very much required restriction with regard to the depletion of calves, at least the she-calves which will bear fruit?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: I do not quite catch the point.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Are the civilian members of this Government so powerless as against the military and are the military so impervious to ideas which will benefit this country, that they will not accept and adopt such a very requisite measure.

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: The military are already giving away animals at 14 days, free, and the only question is whether it should be done at 14 days or a month; the latter suggestion will be examined and if possible it will be done.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Why is it that the military farms do not keep statistics of all those calves that are being slaughtered and their sex? And also, are there many other military farms, and if so where are they, apart from the three that are mentioned?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: May I suggest that that inquiry may be addressed to the War Department?

Seth Govind Das: Does the Honourable Member know that with respect to clause (d) of the question, the experts may differ but in practice the calves which are sold or given by the military authorities at 14 days die and do not live to the extent of 99 per cent?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: Government have no information of that.

Seth Govind Das: Will the Government, if they have no information, collect the information in this respect, because the future action depends upon these statistics?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: It will be very difficult to collect information as to what happens to the animals after they are handed over to individual breeders.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Is it a fact that the dehydration factories started during the course of the war are being closed down?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: I do not think that arises.

Mr. Leslie Gwilt: May I ask the Honourable Member whether the provincial Governments have been approached with a view to rearing calves, as is done by the Bombay Government?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: Yes, Sir. The Provincial Governments have been informed both about the free availability of the animals and the need for taking them and rearing them themselves.

Mr. Leslie Gwilt: May I ask the Honourable Member how many Provincial Governments have taken advantage of this offer?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: I am afraid I have not got the information but I am quite prepared to collect it.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: What are the Provincial Governments which have not prohibited the slaughter of calves?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: There are two provinces: The N. W. F. P. and the Punjab.

EXPORT OF GOODS BY SEA FROM INDIA TO BURMA

1004. Mr. Manu Subedar: (a) Will the Honourable the Commerce Member please state if it is a fact that a large quantity of goods is being exported from India to Burma by sea since December 1945?

(b) If so, what is the total quantity that has been exported up to the last date for which figures are available?

(c) Is it a fact that these goods are purchased by the agency of the Government of Burma in India? If that is not so, which agency is purchasing these goods on behalf of the Government of Burma?

(d) Do Government intend to allow the normal channels of trade to export such goods to Burma in the future? If so, when? If not, why not?

(e) Are the goods thus exported required for the consumption of the civil population in Burma, or are they required for military purposes?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: (a) Exports of controlled goods representing urgent requirements of the Government of Burma and the civilian population for a limited period are permitted after having carefully "screened".

(b) A statement is laid on the table of the House.

(c) The goods are indented for by the Burma Supply Mission, but the purchases are made by the Supplying Department concerned of the Government of India.

(d) Yes, as early as possible. The matter has been taken up with the Government of Burma.

(e) The goods exported are for the rehabilitation of Burma and not for military purposes, and I may add that the value of the export in the month of December was only Rs. 1,10,624 and the value of all goods which were sent to Burma in January was Rs. 2,03,556.

Mr. Manu Subedar: May I know what steps the Government of India are taking in order to eliminate Burma Government purchase in India and in order to permit the normal trade channels?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: I have answered that. We have taken it up actively with the Government of Burma.

Mr. Manu Subedar: May I know why it is not suggested to the Burma Government to supply themselves through the normal trade channels; why is the Supply Department here making itself available and more particularly when the Finance Member told us yesterday that the monies owing by the Burma Government have accumulated to an alarming figure? May I know why this Government is permitting goods required by the civilian population of this country to go in this manner by Government purchase?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: My Honourable friend is assuming, as he always does, a very large number of things which is not a fact or does not arise out of the question. I have said that this began immediately after the cessation of hostilities and we have taken up the matter actively with the Government of Burma in regard to the resumption of normal trade channels.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: I take objection to the Honourable Member saying that my Honourable friend here always does assume things.

Mr. Manu Subedar: I am anxious to ascertain the facts. I do not want to make assumptions which are wrong but I do want to know whether the Government propose not merely about Burma but several other countries to permit Government missions to be established here for purchase. It is the same thing about Ceylon. This is a large issue of policy. I do not want to make assumptions but it is for my Honourable friend to assure this House that the Government of India will not permit this kind of thing to go on for ever.

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: If the Government of India was the only agent in a transaction which involves two parties, I would have immediately given that answer but otherwise our policy has been and remains - I do not know what it will be when my friend will come—to see that the normal trade channels are established as soon as possible.

Mr. K. O. Neogy: Is the Honourable Member in a position to state whether the goods so far purchased on behalf of the Government of Burma include any that may be in short supply in this country.

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: Only 40 yards of cotton canvas have been sent.

Mr. Manu Subedar: What steps are the Government taking to reorganise trade channels at least so far as food from Burma is concerned? Will Indian merchants be allowed to collect food from Burma against the goods which are going from here, when it is found to be a surplus in Burma?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: As I have said, this question has been actively taken up and recently a deputation of the merchants representing the various interests, including the rice trade, was sent to Burma to discuss the question.

Diwan Chaman Lal: May I know whether these are cash or credit transactions?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: I am not sure about it and cannot reply straight away. I will be able to collect the information from the Supply Department.

BASIC EDUCATION SOCIETY, WARDHA.

1005. Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will the Education Secretary be pleased to state:

(a) if Government have been following the activities of the Hindustani Talimi Sangh (Basic Education Society), Wardha, and have read their annual reports;

(b) whether they have noticed that a number of Provincial and State Governments are helping it and have begun to make experiments with the methods of teaching and running schools as advocated by that Society;

(c) whether it is a fact that the Government of India and their All-India Educational Advisory Council have approved the basic principles underlying the scheme of that Society;

(d) whether Government have taken any steps to experiment with that Society's methods of teaching with the craft as the main basis; if so, where and when;

(e) whether Government have started any schools at least in the Centrally Administrated Areas; and

(f) why Government do not start an All-India Training College and experimental centre to propagate the principles and economics of Basic Education?

Dr. D. M. Sen: (a) Yes, Sir.

(b) The Government of India have no information as to what help 'The Hindusthani Talimi Sangh' is receiving from Provincial Governments and Indian States. The Government of India are, however, aware that some Provincial Governments and Indian States are carrying out experiments in Basic Education on the lines adopted by the Central Advisory Board of Education, in 1940.

(c) The Government of India have generally accepted the principles underlying the Basic Education Scheme adopted by the Central Advisory Board of Education.

(d) and (e). The Government of India propose to start immediately to implement the Post-War Educational Development Scheme, prepared by the Central Advisory Board of Education. The attention of the Honourable Member is called to that report, particularly to the Chapter on Basic Education. The new schools, proposed, will incorporate the principles recommended in that report.

(f) The Government of India propose to establish colleges for training teachers for the Basic Schools that will be started to meet the requirements of the Centrally Administered Areas.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: In regard to the suggestion in part (f) about the starting of an All-India Training College and experimental centre, what is the answer?

Dr. D. M. Sen: We are starting colleges for the Centrally administered areas and as I have said in reply to (f) these training colleges will train teachers for basic schools.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will this College serve the interests of the whole of India or only the Centrally administered areas?

Dr. D. M. Sen: We are primarily concerned with the Centrally administered areas. I suppose if there are seats available, then other educational authorities might also be able to utilise them.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: May I suggest that this college should serve the needs of the whole of India and not only of the Centrally administered areas?

Dr. D. M. Sen: Education is a provincial subject and we cannot anticipate provincial needs. We do not know whether there will be a need for an All-India college. Provincial Governments are taking steps to train teachers on the lines recommended by the Central Advisory Board of Education but if there is any need which is not met by the requisite authorities, the Central Government will certainly consider it.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Will the Provincial Governments again enforce the singing of 'Bande Mataram' in the Muslim schools?

Prof. N. G. Ranga: What contact do the Government of India maintain between their department here and this particular society and other societies in the country.

Dr. D. M. Sen: The Government of India are utilising the Central Advisory Board of Education to contact the All-India educational and cultural agencies and as such the Central Advisory Board of Education collect annual and periodical reports from 'The Hindustani Talimi Sangh'; and incidentally there is one member of 'The Hindustani Talimi Sangh' who is also a member of the Central Advisory Board of Education.

SEPARATION OF HILL DISTRICTS FROM ASSAM PROVINCE.

1006. *Mr. G. B. Dani: (a) Will the Honourable the Leader of the House be pleased to state if it is a fact that Government are proposing to separate the Hill districts of the Assam Province from the Province? If so, why?

(b) Are Government aware of the fact that the separation of these Hill districts from the Assam Province will cause dissatisfaction in the Public of Assam and the rest of India?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) I would invite the attention of the Honourable Member to my reply to Mr. Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri's starred question No. 405, on the 20th February, 1946, to which I have nothing to add.

(b) Does not arise.

Sreejut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: Is it a fact that information is being collected by the local officers under instructions of Government, so that the matter may be considered in the Constituent Assembly and later on by the Parliament?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I am not aware whether information is being collected but no doubt it will be one of the subjects which will come before the Constituent Assembly.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Are Government aware of the fact that the All-India Excluded Areas and Tribal People's Association has repeatedly protested against any idea of separating these people from the self-governing areas of India?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I would refer the Honourable Member to my previous answer.

Sreejut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: Is it not a fact that His Excellency the Governor General of India paid a visit to Balipara frontier tract and that there the tribal people were assembled before him to express their opinion on this subject?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I am not aware of that.

Sreejut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: Is it not a fact that the Political Officer of Khasi and Jainta Hills was especially summoned to England so that facts may be ascertained from him with regard to those Hills and also with regard to Lushai Hills of which he was a Political Officer?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: If the Honourable Member will put down a question, I will endeavour to answer it.

Sreejut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: Has the Government seen the copy of the letter addressed by Mr. Small, the retired Director of Public Instruction, Assam, on this subject to the British Parliamentary Delegation?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: If the Honourable Member will put down a question, I will endeavour to answer it.

LATENT COLORATION OF VANASPATHI.

1007. *Mr. G. B. Dani: (a) Will the Food Secretary be pleased to state if Government are aware that the Vanaspathi Manufacturers' Association of India have recommended to the Food Department that the latent coloration of Vanaspathi should be enforced with a view to preventing its use for the adulteration of pure ghee?

(b) If so, has the Food Department considered this representative request?

(c) Is it a fact that the Food Department has licensed twenty-seven additional units for the manufacture of vanaspathi to raise the production without considering the possibility of the existing small units to expand their capacity without considerable addition to plant?

Mr. B. R. San: (a) Yes, the Association supported the proposal initiated by the Controller's Advisory Committee.

(b) Yes the test will be enforced after it has been finalised in respect of technical details.

(c) No. The prospect of expanding the existing factories was considered and the assistance given has resulted in the expansion of the capacity of factories existing in 1939 from 51,000 tons to 1,19,000 tons.

Diwan Chaman Lall: May I ask if it is not a fact that 27 additional units have been licensed?

Mr. B. R. Sen: 28, Sir.

Diwan Chaman Lall: May I ask whether any official of the Food Department, from the lowest to the highest, is in any way financially connected with the promotion of any of these units?

Mr. B. R. Sen: The answer is in the negative.

Diwan Chaman Lall: May I ask whether any relations of any of these officials, from the lowest to the highest, are connected with the promotion of any of these units?

Mr. B. R. Sen: Not to our knowledge.

Diwan Chaman Lall: Is my Honourable friend prepared to make an inquiry into this matter?

Mr. B. R. Sen: We are quite prepared to make inquiries.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will Government expedite the consideration and come to an early decision in regard to the colour that must be used by all Vanaspati products?

Mr. B. R. Sen: It is not a colour which is being added to the Vanaspati, but it is an oil which is a latent agent for detection of adulteration. In other words, it is not a colour but an agent which gives a colour re-action.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Have Government sufficient authority today to insist upon this colour being used, or a chemical being used, in order to enable the public to easily distinguish Vanaspati from Ghee so that there will not be any adulteration of Ghee by Vanaspati?

Mr. B. R. Sen: The proposal is that sesame oil should be incorporated in Vanaspati so that it may act as a latent agent for the detection of adulteration. This proposal is being examined by the Principal of the Hercourt Butler Institute in regard to its technical aspects. As soon as the technical examination is finished, we will take necessary action to give effect to the proposal.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Have Government made any progress with regard to the question as to whether the activities of some of the Vanaspati producers cannot be restrained in order to preserve groundnut, which would be good for human food and cotton seed which is wanted for cattle food?

Mr. B. R. Sen: The matter is under examination.

EMPLOYMENT OF UNEMPLOYED WOMEN IN COAL MINES.

1008. Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will the Honourable the Labour Member be pleased to state:

(a) whether any efforts are made and if so, what they are to provide alternate employment to those women who had been working in coal mines and who are unemployed since the 1st February;

(b) why Government allow employers to utilise the services of contractors to provide some work for some of those unemployed women;

(c) the wages paid to these women by Contractors; and

(d) why Government refuse to continue the grant to their families on the account of these women, of the additional half a seer of free rice, half a seer of free milk and concessions in purchasing rice and dal, in view of the fact that male members of their families are working in the mines?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: (a) Attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the answer given in reply to part (b) of starred question No. 466, on the 25th February, 1946;

(b) Contractors are employed for building, sand loading and unloading, brick making, etc., and some women excluded from the underground workings have been employed on these classes of work, which are always let on contract.

(c) The earnings of women so employed are between 10 to 12 annas a day excluding half a seer free rice and a bonus of two annas for each attendance.

(d) The additional ration concessions are only given to coalmine workers.

The concession regarding free supply of milk to women workers employed underground in coalmines was prescribed as a compensatory measure in connection with the removal of ban on their employment underground. Consequent on the reimposition of the ban from 1st February 1946, the concession has ceased to be in force from that date.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: In regard to the question of concession in purchasing rice and dal, why should it not be continued now in regard to those women who are now to work on the surface but who previously used to work underground?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: As I said in my reply, those privileges were given when they used to work underground. As soon as the ban has been re-imposed, there is no justification for giving them this compensatory allowance.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: The other day the Secretary to the Honourable Member was saying that some protective measures were being taken in order to protect the workers from the vagaries of these contractors. Are we to understand that those protective measures apply to these women also and they are being protected from being exploited?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I did not understand who said that.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: The Honourable Member's Secretary, Mr. Joshi, said that the contractors are being entertained here and through those contractors these women are being employed. Are we to understand that sufficient measures are being taken by Government to protect these women from being exploited by these contractors?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: All I can say is that if the Honourable Member will put down a specific question, I will get an answer.

Diwan Chaman Lall: Has the Government insisted on a fair wages clause in the contract?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: So far as my information goes, that clause has been inserted in the contracts.

Mr. Manu Subedar: What steps Government are taking generally to examine the problem that the contractor may be eliminated and the labour should work directly for the employer?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: That matter is under examination.

Diwan Chaman Lall: My question related to the fair wages clause being inserted in the contracts of these women workers?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: That has not been done so far; it may be considered.

CONSTRUCTION OF A DAM ACROSS THE LAXMANATRITHA RIVER

†1009. Shri D. P. Karmarkar: Will the Honourable the Labour Member be pleased to state:

†Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner being absent.

(a) whether the construction of a dam across the Laxmanatritha river in Coorg is contemplated, and whether the said project is being taken up in expectation of irrigation about 30,000 acres of land;

(b) whether the Mysore Government have raised objections to the said scheme;

(c) whether the Government of India have addressed in this matter by the Chief Commissioner of Coorg; and

(d) whether the Government of India have arrived at a decision in the matter; if so, what that decision is; if not, whether Government propose to arrive at an early decision to enable the Coorg Government to proceed with the speedy execution of the project?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: (a) Yes, but the project as prepared in 1942 was estimated to irrigate only about 3,000 acres.

(b) Information is not available; it is being called for.

(c) and (d). The project was examined but it was found to be wanting in certain technical aspects. The Chief Commissioner, Coorg, was asked to revise the project in the light of the technical advice and also to enquire of the neighbouring state whether they had any objection to its execution. The revised project has not so far been received from the Chief Commissioner, Coorg, though it is included in the five year post-war plan of the Coorg Administration.

CULTIVATION OF FALLOW LAND IN NORTH KANARA DISTRICT.

†1010. Shri D. P. Karmakar: Will the Agriculture Secretary be pleased to state:

(a) what measures have been taken to popularise the 'Grow More Food' campaign in the North Kanara District in the Bombay Province;

(b) whether there is a large area of cultivable fallow land remaining uncultivated; if so, what the area is;

(c) whether it is a fact that malaria is largely prevalent in the inland parts of the district, and whether on account of depopulation consequent on malaria and other epidemics considerable fertile land is remaining uncultivated;

(d) what measures Government propose to take to bring all the fallow lands in the district under cultivation and increase the food growing capacity of the district; and

(e) what financial assistance Government propose to make available for the purpose mentioned in (d)?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: (a) The following measures have been taken by the Government of Bombay in furtherance of the Grow More Food Campaign in the North Kanara District:—

(i) Interest free Tagai loans are advanced to the cultivators for the purchase of improved seeds.

(ii) Tagai loans are also advanced to the cultivators for the construction of wells and tanks. The loan is interest free in the first year and bears interest at the rate of 3½ per cent. per annum thereafter. 50 per cent. of the cost of these projects is given as subsidy.

(iii) Rent free leases are granted for a period of three years for bringing more land under cultivation.

(b) The area of fallow land lying uncultivated in the district is 107,462 acres and Government waste land 52,969 acres. Most of this area has been fallow for the last 50 years and is over grown with thick vegetation.

(c) Malaria is largely prevalent for five months of the year and the population has consistently dwindled in the above Ghat Talukas and scarcity of labour is acute. Disease and pests are also responsible for fallow.

†Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner being absent.

(d) A scheme of colonisation to bring larger areas under cultivation is under the active consideration of the Provincial Government. They propose to eradicate malaria by the extensive use of D.D.T. A malaria research station has recently been established and has already done good work. The use of D.D.T. will be extended.

(e) The question is under the consideration of the Provincial Government.

SURVEY OF SUB-SOIL WATER FOR IRRIGATION

1011. Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: (a) In view of the fact that there is a necessity to grow more food, what steps has the Agriculture Secretary taken to have the survey of sub-soil water which may be utilised for agricultural purposes?

(b) What are the possibilities of getting sub-soil water for irrigation purposes in various Provinces?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: (a) In 1944 a Central Sub-soil Water Section was set up under the Irrigation Adviser to advise provinces as regards suitable tracts for tubewell irrigation, to carry out trial borings and to collect and co-ordinate data regarding sub-soil water supplies. The Irrigation Adviser went to the United States of America to secure the necessary machinery part of which has already arrived. A training class in the use of these boring rigs is being organised at Dhanbad.

(b) The possibilities of getting adequate supplies of sub-soil water for irrigation purposes in the alluvial tracts particularly in the Indo-Gangetic plains are known and these are being developed according to the availability of machinery. In the non-alluvial tracts of India, sub-soil supplies of irrigation water have to be surveyed and this work will be undertaken as soon as the necessary preparations are completed and staff trained.

SHIPPING FACILITIES TO INDIANS BY MALAYAN GOVERNMENT

1012. Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will the Secretary for Commonwealth Relations be pleased to state:

(a) if he has seen the despatch in the Hindu of the 23rd January from its Special Correspondent in Singapore regarding the unfavourable attitude of the Malayan Government and its Military administration towards the demand of Indians, including workers for the provision of shipping facilities to return to India;

(b) if Government are aware that these Indian emigrants have suffered much during the war and after;

(c) if Government are aware that they were accustomed to pay periodical visits to India to see their relatives, be in the midst of their families and look after their properties, land, etc., at least once in three years;

(d) if Government are aware that today their plight is most unenviable owing to shortage of food, clothing, housing and medicines; and

(e) what special steps Government have taken or propose to take to provide adequate shipping facilities for enabling these unfortunate people to pay a visit to India and their relatives at the earliest opportunity?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: (a), (b), (c) and (d). Yes.

(e) The Government of India are making every endeavour to provide increased shipping to expedite repatriation of Indians from Malaya.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is there any possibility of these people not being allowed to come back to India, in the light of the revelations made by my Leader by reading those letters the other day, lest their presence in this country might be found to be politically difficult?

†Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner being absent.

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: I understand that the question refers to all kinds of Indians and not only to Indians accused or suspected of collaboration. As regards the first category of people, so far as Malaya is concerned, I think everybody is free to come back.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Then why is it that when these Indians wanted to come back to India, they were forced to remain in Singapore and the Home Department is reported to have informed the authorities there that if they were to be sent out to India, they would be forcibly resisted?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: It is not clear what class of Indians my Honourable friend is referring to.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: I am referring to the Indians in Malaya, who wanted to come back to this country, but their return was not considered desirable by the Home Department. Is it not a fact that when they were thinking of coming back to India, the Home Department is reported to have instructed the local authorities in Singapore that their entry into India would be resisted?

Mr. President: Perhaps the Honourable Member is unaware of the three letters quoted by the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: I have read them in the newspapers. But I think the Honourable Member should select a suitable occasion for addressing supplementary questions to the appropriate Department.

Shri Sarat Chandra Bose: Is it a fact that the British Military Administration in Malaya consists of British planters in khaki?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: I submit that that question does not arise.

Mr. President: I should think that this is connected, for this reason, that a particular class of Indians or a particular set of people, who are suspected of something, and whom the people in charge of the administration there do not want to be taken to India, are not given facilities for repatriation. That is the point. Am I correct in understanding it so?

Shri Sarat Chandra Bose: Yes. Look at clause (a) of the question.

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: Our information is that some of the members of the British Military Administration in Malaya are ex-planters.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Is it a fact that about 300 Indians were put on board a steamer at Bangkok in January last and Mr. Aney who happened to be present assured them that they would be taken direct to India, but that they were forcibly disembarked at Singapore and detained there? If so, are Government taking any steps to repatriate them?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: I want notice of that question.

Shri Sarat Chandra Bose: Is it a fact that the British Military Administration in Malaya which consists of British planters has been known to be notoriously anti-Indian and inimical to Indian interests in the past?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: I want notice of that question.

Mr. Manu Subedar: How many people have this Government succeeded in getting repatriated from there and what is the estimate in the next month of people whom they expect to repatriate here?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: I am afraid I have not got the information in my possession. I want notice.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: In view of the fact that there are some Malaya Indians who have returned from Malaya and are now in Delhi, will Government take advantage of their presence here and ascertain further facts with regard to the plight of our Indians there?

+Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner being absent.

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: Sir, the Government of India has a representative in Malaya and the recognised procedure is to obtain information from him, and we shall do so.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: It is an extraordinary position. Are we to understand that the Government of India are not prepared to receive representations from any Malay Indians who may happen to be here in Delhi and that they wish to depend only on their agent there in Malaya?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: That is a different question. We are quite prepared to receive representations. If I heard the Honourable Member aright, he suggested that we should obtain information from Malay Indians here?

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Why should they not?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: They may not have accurate information.

REMOVAL OF EUROPEAN REFUGEES FROM INDIA

1013. *Sri R. Venkatasubba Reddiar: Will the Secretary for Commonwealth Relations please state:

(a) the number of civilian non-Indian personnel and other displaced persons from countries in Europe or Asia who came to India as refugees up to January 1945;

(b) the number of such persons for whom houses and flats and other accommodation was requisitioned in Bombay city and suburbs;

(c) the number of houses or flats so reserved for accommodating such persons, and the amount of money spent on them so far;

(d) the number of such persons still in the Bombay city and suburbs and continuing in occupation of such accommodation; and

(e) whether he proposes to take early steps to remove all such persons from India to the continent of Europe or wherever they came from, if not, why not?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: (a) 12,000 approximately.

(b) About 3,000.

(c) Nine houses and flats. The total amount of money spent from 1941 to 1944 was Rs. 3,82,491/12/-.

(d) Nil. All hostels in Bombay meant for refugees have been closed down.

(e) Steps are already being taken to repatriate non-Indian evacuees, but in view of shipping difficulties some time must elapse before they can all leave this country.

Mr. Manu Subedar: May I know why it was found necessary to house 3,000 of them in Bombay City instead of their being spread all over the country, Bombay City being a strategic centre both for military, naval and other purposes?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: That was to reduce to the minimum the period of their stay here and to make it most convenient for them to return to their homes at short notice.

Shri Sarat Chandra Bose: Are there among the civilian non-Indian personnel and other displaced persons any South African?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: I have not got the information. I want notice of the question.

Mr. Manu Subedar: May I know why it was thought necessary to secure at public expense for these people some of the best accommodation in Bombay, and may I know why ten months after the war has ended, they are still occupying these places? Have Government taken any steps to restore these places to the civilian population?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: The expenses on this sort of accommodation are to be borne by the Government of the country to which the refugee belongs, so that the expenditure will not be debited to Indian exchequer. In reply to part (d) I have said that all hostels in Bombay have been closed down.

Sri V. C. Vellingri Gounder: What is the rate of maintenance charges paid daily for these evacuees?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: It varies. But generally the evacuees who have been in this country for several years are kept in camps. I am afraid I could not give the exact figures.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Are Government aware that some of these refugees and evacuees have added to the vice of the City of Bombay, some of them have indulged in black market activities and that they are not desirable social elements to be continued in this country?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: I dare say their activities are as human as those of any other people and we are doing our best to send them back to their countries as soon as possible.

RETIRED EUROPEAN I. C. S. OFFICERS EMPLOYED IN INDIAN STATES AND ZAMINDARIS

1014. Sri R. Venkatasubba Reddiar: Will the Honourable the Leader of the House please state:

(a) the names of superannuated European Indian Civil Service officers who are now employed in the various Indian States or in big zamindaris, and the states where they are employed;

(b) the pension which they draw from the Indian exchequer;

(c) the salaries they draw in the Indian States, etc.;

(d) whether the approval of the Government of India or the Governor General was taken for such appointments;

(e) whether there is any policy underlying the appointment of retired European service men in the Indian States; and

(f) whether there are any Europeans in the service of Indian States, who have served in India in services other than the I.C.S.; if so, their names and the States where they are now serving?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) As far as is known to the Central Government, the following superannuated European I. C. S. Officers are employed in the States:

(1) Sir George Boag in Cochin.

(2) Sir Alexander Tottenham in Pudukkottai.

(3) Sir Colin Garbett in Bhopal.

No information is available regarding superannuated European I. C. S. Officers employed in zamindaris, as employment in zamindaris is not subject to sanction by Government.

(b), (c) and (f). Information is being collected and will be placed on the table of the House in due course.

(d) Approval of the Central Government is not necessary but such appointments are subject to the consent of the Crown Representative who accorded sanction to the employment of the three officers previously mentioned.

(e) No.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is it not a fact that the Political Department has to approve the appointment of superannuated Civilians to Indian States?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Individuals other than I. C. S. Officers?

Diwan Chaman Lal: What is a superannuated Indian Civil service officer?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: The Honourable Member may put that question to the questioner.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Is it not a fact that the Crown Representative consults the Government of India before giving his consent to the appointment?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: No, Sir.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Is it a fact that a civilian can serve for 35 years and it is only after that he becomes superannuated and that there are at present in Government service persons who are superannuated and who are more than 65 years of age?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: If the Honourable Member will put down a question to the proper department, it will no doubt be answered.

Shri Satya Narayan Sinha: May I know which of the Members of the Governor-General's Executive Council are superannuated?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: We are all full of youthful energy.

MUSLIM ENGINEERS IN THE CENTRAL PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT

†1015. Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: (a) Will the Honourable the Labour Member please state if it is a fact that in the Central P.W.D. out of the thirteen Superintending Engineers there are only two Muslims, out of the sixty-four Executive Engineers only twelve are Muslims and out of the 310 Sub-Divisional Officers only 45 are Muslims?

(b) Did the Honourable Member make any attempt to see whether qualified Muslims are available for appointment with a view to make up the deficiency in the quota of 25 per cent?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: (a) The numbers are as follows, in respect of the Engineering and Electrical sides taken together:

	Total	Muslims
Superintending Engineers	15	1
Executive and Electrical Engineers	76	13
Sub-Divisional Officers	328	55

(b) All these posts are filled by promotion and the communal representation rules are not applicable to cases of promotion. The question of securing the 25 per cent. quota for Muslims in these appointments does not, therefore, arise.

CEYLON QUARANTINE REGULATIONS

1016. Mr. Vadilal Lalubhai: Will the Secretary for Commonwealth Relations please state:

(a) the Ceylon Quarantine Regulations affecting passengers travelling from India to Ceylon via the Mandapam Camp;

(b) if it is a fact that according to these regulations, passengers are not allowed to land at Talaimannar in Ceylon, unless they produce a health certificate from the Ceylon Quarantine Medical Officer at the Mandapam Camp;

(c) in view of the fact that the Mandapam Camp is situated on Indian soil, if it is not possible for the Government of India to arrange for the examination, and for giving of health certificates through an Indian Quarantine Medical Officer;

(d) if it is a fact that, while higher class passengers holding certificates of vaccination from the Health Officer or a recognised Medical Officer are allowed to proceed without any kind of detention at the above Camp, third class passengers even though in possession of similar certificates are detained for a number of days; and

(e) whether the Government of India propose to investigate all such cases of discrimination against third class passengers and see that facilities to the passengers are available on a uniform basis?

†Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner being absent.

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: (a) A statement placed on the table.

(b) Yes.

(c) Though situated in India, the Camp is owned, maintained and administered by the Ceylon Government. It would, therefore, be anomalous to seek to persuade the Ceylon Government to entrust this work to an Indian Quarantine Medical Officer.

(d) Yes; that is the prevailing practice. As first and second class passengers ordinarily live a more hygienic life and incur comparatively less risk of infection during the railway journey, the Medical Officer exercises his discretion in their favour.

(e) The matter is already under consideration.

Statement

A SUMMARY OF CEYLON QUARANTINE REGULATIONS AFFECTING PASSENGERS TRAVELLING FROM INDIA TO CEYLON VIA MANDAPAM (OR TUTICORIN).

(1) Passengers are not allowed to land at Talaimannar in Ceylon unless they produce a health certificate from the Ceylon Quarantine Medical Officer at Mandapam Camp.

(2) When the Indo-Ceylon Express halts at Mandapam (for 30 minutes) all 1st, 2nd and Inter Class passengers are examined by the Quarantine Medical Officer. A health certificate is issued to any passenger who satisfies the following conditions:—

(a) is healthy and has not been in contact with or exposed to infection from any case of plague, cholera or small pox;

(b) If the passenger—

(i) produces a certificate from a duly qualified medical practitioner of any country that the passenger has been vaccinated or revaccinated within the three years immediately preceding; or

(ii) bears scars of an attack of small-pox; or

(iii) subjects himself to vaccination; and

(c) if the passenger—

(i) holds a permit from the Chairman, Quarantine Committee, Colombo (permits are issued free of charge on application being made to the Chairman Quarantine Committee, through a resident of Ceylon); or

(ii) is about to embark on board a ship at Colombo, and produces proof of that fact to the satisfaction of the Medical officers; or

(iii) has satisfied the Medical Officer as to his usual place of residence in Ceylon and signed a declaration specifying such place of residence.

Provided that the Medical Officer may, before granting such health certificate, vaccinate any passenger who produces a certificate of vaccination referred to in clause (b) (i) or who bears scars of an attack of small-pox, in any case where the Medical Officer considers such vaccination to be desirable or necessary.

(3) Any passenger not provided with a quarantine permit or unable to satisfy the Medical Officer as to his place of residence in Ceylon, or fails to sign a declaration giving his place of residence in Ceylon, may at the discretion of the Medical Officer be granted a health certificate to land on making a cash deposit of Rs. 50 and giving a written undertaking to abide by the Quarantine Regulations while in Ceylon.

(4) Servants of 1st and 2nd class passengers may be passed at the discretion of the Medical Officer on the guarantee of their masters. Servants of those about to embark on ships at Colombo may be passed on the guarantee of their masters that they will report to the Assistant Port Health Officer for Immigration, Colombo, while in Colombo and will return to India immediately after their masters' departure.

(5) All other passengers will be required to undergo 5 clear days' quarantine at Mandapam Camp, at the end of which period they will be provided with a health pass which they should hand over to the Port Health Officer at Talaimannar and they would then be free to go where they like; but on the appearance of any illness within 10 days of arrival they should notify the nearest Government Medical Officer.

(6) Those holding permits but coming from infected areas may be detained at the discretion of the Medical Officer for disinfection, vaccination, and observation. Passengers are advised to arrive at the Camp by the morning Dhanushkodi Fast Passenger train so that they may undergo disinfection and vaccination if necessary and proceed to Ceylon the same day, if detention in Camp for observation is not found necessary.

(7) Conditions to be fulfilled by the passengers on arrival in Ceylon—Passengers on arrival in Ceylon have to report themselves to the Medical Officer of the district in which the passengers reside on the very day of arrival.

passengers reside on the very day of arrival, except on Sundays, and thereafter as directed by the said Officer, within their period of observation.

(8) 1st and 2nd class tourists who do not stay more than a week in Ceylon may, at the discretion of the Quarantine Medical Officer, be allowed to report to the Medical Officer of the place they visit on the day of arrival in Ceylon and to the Port Health Officer in Colombo, or to the Port Health Officer, Talaimannar, on departure from the Island. In the event of their falling sick during their stay such tourists should report forthwith to the nearest Government Medical Officer.

(9) The passing of passengers by the Medical authorities does not necessarily mean the free entry of these passengers to Ceylon as they still have to satisfy the Ceylon Police that they are not "destitutes".

Shri Sri Prakasa: With regard to part (c), are we to take it that the Ceylon Government functions on Indian soil so far as these camps are concerned and that they have full authority to do so?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: The camp was acquired by the Ceylon Government in the regular way and the Government of Madras entered into an agreement some years ago under which the Ceylon Government administer this camp. I may also state for the information of the House that this arrangement is of much greater advantage to the large number of Indian emigrants who have to proceed to Ceylon because as Honourable Members can easily imagine, that it reduces the risk of hardships and disabilities of the emigrants.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: In view of the fact that a large number of Indian workers move between India and Ceylon, often more than twice a year, will Government consider the advisability of seeing that those who have been previously vaccinated are not troubled again for vaccination every time they go to Ceylon?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: We will certainly consider the suggestion.

Shri Sri Prakasa: In view of the fact that third class passengers very often are far more healthy and hefty than the upper class passengers, who are usually anaemic—the Honourable Member apart—will the Honourable Member take steps towards removing this discrimination between First and Third class passengers?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: As I said, the practice is based on the presumption that Third class passengers are more liable to infection in the course of the railway journey. But I would also add that owing to their being detained there for a few days all such passengers are quite free to move about on their arrival in Ceylon; but First and Second class passengers who are not detained have to remain under medical surveillance for nearly 12 days on arrival in Ceylon. So on the whole we feel that the present practice is perhaps in the interest of the Third class passengers. But, as I stated in reply to part (e) of the question, the whole matter is under examination.

Seth Govind Das: Is the Honourable Member aware that in spite of being vaccinated and the certificates of vaccination being produced, the Third class passengers when they enter the ships have to uncover their bodies and show whether they have been vaccinated or not?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: I do not know.

Seth Govind Das: Will the Honourable Member make inquiries about this insulting behaviour towards the Third class passengers and see that it is not done?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: Inquiries will be made, Sir.

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: May I know if this arrangement is on an international basis or only on a Ceylon-India basis?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: Does the Honourable Member refer to arrangements for examination made in India?

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: I refer to anti-Indian arrangements for carrying diseases. I had to have four injections while going to America. When we go to Haj there is a quarantine in Kamaran and we have to stay there for 24 hours and longer. What I wanted to know was whether this was of the same type or something special to Indians regarding Ceylon.

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: No, Sir: I believe it is in accordance with recognised international practice.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Do the Ceylon Government insist on this sort of thing with regard to every other national going there?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: I think so, but I must admit that I have not examined that point specifically and would like to have notice.

Shri Sri Prakasa: In view of the Honourable Member's admission that passengers travelling Third class are more liable to infection, will the Honourable Member be pleased to make a representation to the railway authorities to improve their Third class carriages so that the risk of such infection may be eliminated?

(No reply was given.)

ALLOCATION OF EXPENDITURE FOR EMPLOYMENT AND RE-SETTLEMENT DIRECTORATE

1017. *Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Will the Honourable the Labour Member please state:

(a) the expenditure allocated for the Employment and Re-settlement Directorate, separately, as between the centre and regional centres;

(b) the strength of the staff at these different centres;

(c) the total number of ex-servicemen that have registered their names at these centres for employment; and

(d) for how many of these ex-servicemen suitable alternative employment has been found by the Directorate?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: (a) The question is not clear but presumably the Honourable Member wants to know the annual estimated expenditure on the Directional and Administrative staff of the Directorate-General of Resettlement and Employment during the year 1946-47. It is as follows:

Headquarter	Rs. 27,14,800
Regional Centres	Rs. 1,08,32,500
Total	Rs. 1,35,47,300

For details reference is invited to the Budget estimates for 1946-47. The expenditure on Regional and Sub-Regional Employment Exchanges will be shared between the Centre and Provinces in the proportion of 60 and 40 respectively.

(b) Detailed statements showing the number of posts sanctioned for the Central and Regional sections of the organisation and the number of posts filled so far are given at Appendix I to the Progress Report of the Directorate-General of Resettlement and Employment for the period 18th July to 31st December 1945, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

(c) The Employment Exchanges are responsible for the registration and placement of not only demobilised services personnel but also discharged war workers. The total number of persons registered at the Employment Exchanges and the Resettlement and Employment offices up to 31st December, 1945, was 50,658 out of which 29,925 were ex-Servicemen. It may be pointed out in this connection that the second phase of demobilisation started only on the 15th November, 1945. According to the forecast of Army Release nearly 15,00,000 persons will be demobilised up to end of March, 1947. It is difficult at this stage to estimate as how many out of these persons will require Resettlement and Employment assistance.

(d) The total number of persons placed in employment up to 31st December, 1945, by Employment Exchanges and Resettlement and Employment offices was 9,516. Out of these 2,841 were ex-servicemen.

IMPORT LICENCES FOR D. D. T. INSECTICIDE FROM UNITED STATES

1018. *Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Will the Honourable the Commerce Member please state:

(a) whether it is a fact that import licences and dollar exchange are not granted for the import of D.D.T. insecticide from the United States of America but imports are allowed only from the United Kingdom;

(b) whether he is aware that the price of D.D.T. as quoted by the United Kingdom suppliers is about three times the price quoted by the United States of America suppliers;

(c) whether he is aware that, as a result of the above, importers are obliged to import D.D.T. from the United Kingdom only at three times the price at which they could have obtained the same from the United States of America;

(d) whether he proposes to arrange to grant licences and dollar exchange for the import of D.D.T. from the United States of America which is the most effective insecticide and useful in removing the scourge of Malaria?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: (a) No, Sir. It was originally intended to obtain our requirements of D. D. T. insecticide from the United Kingdom. But when it became evident that supplies from that source were not coming forward sufficiently freely it was decided to grant licences for imports from the United States of America and Switzerland also.

(b) According to the available information, the United States of America price is lower than the United Kingdom price but the disparity is not to the extent indicated by the Honourable Member.

(c) Does not arise.

(d) Licences are already being granted for imports of limited quantities from the United States of America.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Does the Honourable Member mean to say that there are no instances in which licenses for getting it from the U. S. A. have been refused?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: Some must be refused because they are issued for limited quantities.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Will the Honourable Member see that this difference in prices is very great?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: If the Honourable Member will supply me with all the information as to the exact nature of this complaint I shall certainly look into the matter.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: May I know what the actual disparity in prices is?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: We have not got definite information to reply upon on the subject because the price of D. D. T. varies according to quality and the nature of the dilution. Whether there is exact counterpart of one with the other is a matter which can be explored after full inquiry as to the nature of the dilution and the quality of it, but we are told that roughly it varies between Rs.1/10 and Rs.2/3, depending on the quality and the nature.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Do I gather that in spite of the fact that the price is much cheaper in the U. S. A., just because purchases by India are to be confined to sterling areas sterling area licenses are freely given but U. S. A. licenses are restricted?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: Here again is an example of my Honourable friend assuming a thing.

Mr. Manu Subedar: I am seeking information.

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: We are trying to get D. D. T. insecticide. After all war has just been over and we have been trying to get supplies. It was not available in other countries. As soon as we came to know that it was available, we issued licences. I have said that the price of medical articles, as my Honourable friend will realize, always depends upon the quality.

Mr. Manu Subedar: The Honourable Member himself said in his previous reply that the number of licences given was limited and therefore some applications may have been refused. I want to know the reason why the number of licences given for import from the United States of America was restricted?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: Obviously because we will have to consider not merely this article, but thousands of other articles which have to be brought from America, and certainly the balance of trade between the two countries and the dollar position are also the factors which have to be considered.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: I have got cables in my hand showing that the prices of articles in the United Kingdom are more than three times those in the United States

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: Unfortunately that cable is not in my possession, and even if it were, I do not know the nature of the two medical articles unless they are medically examined and proved that the quality of both the articles is exactly the same.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: The American quality is 'highest concentration - prepared to specifications'

Mr. President: Next question.

SUPPLY OF RUSSIAN RICE FOR INDIA

1019. Prof. N. G. Ranga: (a) Will the Secretary for Food be pleased to state if it is a fact that Soviet Russia has had a good rice harvest this year?

(b) Whether Government has attempted to ascertain if Russia can spare any rice for us, and, if so, to what extent?

(c) Why do not Government attempt to send someone to Russia to negotiate for some supplies of rice from Russia in view of India's supplies of food products to Russia during the war and India's present dire need for food?

Mr. B. R. Sen: (a) Government have seen press report to the effect that Russia may prove to be a potential source of rice but have no information about the rice harvest this year.

(b) No, Sir.

(c) Sir A. Ramaswami Mudaliar, Government of India's representative on the United Nations Organisation has already made an appeal to all member nations including Russia to help India.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Have Government made any direct contact at all with Soviet Russia's Government in regard to this particular matter? If not, why not?

Mr. B. R. Sen: Any formal approach in this matter has to be made through His Majesty's Government.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will Government consider the advisability of taking advantage of that particular channel and making direct contact with Soviet Russia's Government in regard to this matter?

Mr. B. R. Sen: The Government of India have placed full information about the food position in India before His Majesty's Government, and if there is any possibility of getting anything from Russia, I have no doubt that His Majesty's Government will try and get it.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: This is another case of extraordinary sense of responsibility that this Government has been displaying.

Mr. President: Order, order. The Honourable Member will put his question, and ask for information.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: My point is this: It is not the primary responsibility of the British Government to make direct contacts in regard to India; but is it not the primary responsibility of the Government of India to take the initiative and approach the British Government in regard to this specific matter and ask them to make an approach to Soviet Russia's Government?

Mr. President: That question has been answered. The Honourable Member has already said that the procedure is to approach through His Majesty's Government, and the Government of India have placed all the facts before His Majesty's Government. What further question does the Honourable Member wish to ask?

Prof. N. G. Ranga: My submission is this: They have not stated that the British Government has been asked to approach the Soviet Russia Government with this particular request. They have only stated that they have placed all the facts before the British Government.

Mr. President: Has any specific request been made to the British Government with regard to this?

Mr. B. R. Sen: No specific request has been made. An appeal has been made by our representative on the United Nations Organisation to all countries and especially to Russia to help India.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: What objection have the Government of India today to make this specific request to the British Government in order to approach the Soviet Russia Government?

Mr. B. R. Sen: We have no objection whatever, but we think that the best course is for us to approach His Majesty's Government to find out where the surplus lies.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Whatever may be normal procedure in regard to communications with foreign Governments, having regard to the fact that His Excellency the Viceroy is moving heavens and earth and that a very special emergency has now arisen in this country over the food question, will not the Government of India, if necessary with the sanction of His Majesty's Government whose subordinate they are, now depute a man with full powers to talk directly with Russia over the issue and find out as to whether some surplus cannot be given to India?

Mr. B. R. Sen: In view of the opinion expressed in the House, I propose to bring this to the notice of His Majesty's Government for any special action that they can take.

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: Will the Honourable Member

Mr. President: Order, order. Next question.

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: I had rather an important question to ask.

ARREST AND DETENTION OF INDIAN MERCHANTS IN HONG KONG

1020. Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: (a) Will the Secretary for Commonwealth Relations be pleased to state: if it is a fact that some Indian merchants were arrested in Hong Kong by the Allied Occupation Forces when they took over Hong Kong from the Japanese?

(b) Is it also a fact that these Indian merchants are still being detained? If so, why?

(c) What is the number of merchants so detained?

(d) Is it a fact that Sardar Sampooran Singh Dhillon is one of the merchants now being kept under detention?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: (a) Yes.

(b) and (c). Five Indian merchants were arrested on suspicion of having adhered to or assisted the Japanese or been partly to activities prejudicial to the allied cause or of having committed offences against defence regulations or serious offences under the penal code. Of the two still in detention, one is charged with giving information about other Indians and taking part in the torture of Indians arrested by the Japanese. The other is detained as an informer.

(d) No.

Shri Sri Prakasa: May I know the exact difference between these merchants helping the Japanese when Japanese were in possession of that place and those of our country men in India who help the British who have occupied this country?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: Sir, it does not arise out of this question.

Diwan Chaman Lall: May I ask what specific charges have been made against these gentlemen and under what law? Whether they have been tried under Court Martial Regulations, under the Indian Army Act, or any other Regulations? What is the exact position, and may I know whether the Honourable Member is prepared to place all those charge sheets on the table of the House?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: I have given full details of the charges on which they have been arrested in my reply to parts (b) and (c) of the question, and I regret I have no further details to give now.

Diwan Chaman Lall: Does my Honourable friend realize that the details he has given are of the nature—serious charges covered by the Indian Penal Code—which may mean anything. I am asking my Honourable friend if he is not prepared to place on the table of the House the detailed charges that have been made against these men?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: I shall try to obtain the information.

Diwan Chaman Lall: How far has the matter proceeded?

Mr. President: Are they being tried?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: Two only are held in detention and, I believe, the trial is proceeding, but I shall try to obtain further information.

Diwan Chaman Lall: May I ask my Honourable friend why, when the question has been tabled and my Honourable friend comes before the House, has he not obtained all this information already?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: This is all the information that we have been able to obtain, Sir, as a result of the efforts we have made so far.

CONTRACT WORKS TO MUSLIMS AND NON-MUSLIMS BY CENTRAL P. W. D.

1021. *Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: Will the Honourable the Labour Member kindly place on the table of the House a comparative statement showing the amount of contract works given by tenders and by work orders, separately, to Muslim and Non-Muslim contractors in the Construction Division No. III, New Delhi 'A' Division, New Delhi 'B' Division, Provincial Division and Special Division No. I, of the Central Public Works Department in New Delhi, during the last three years by the present Executive Engineers, or by their predecessors?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: The information asked for is not readily available and the time and labour involved in collecting it would be incommensurate with the value of the result.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: May I know from the Honourable Member why is he not prepared to reveal this information. I have definite information that the contracts given to Mussalman in this Branch were very low.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: If my Honourable friend has the information, I do not know why he is troubling me.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: I am troubling the Honourable Member because our cause is being hit and Muslims are being ignored by the Honourable Member's Department, and I want to reveal that case on the floor of the House.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I have nothing to add to the reply I have given.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: Will the Honourable Member see his way to place this information on the table of the House at a later stage?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I cannot do it.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Has the Honourable Member lost his temper?

Mr. President: Order, order. Next question

SUBSIDY FOR SINKING AND REPAIRING OF WELLS

+1022. *Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will the Agriculture Secretary be pleased to state:

(a) if Government are prepared to subsidise the sinking and constructing or repairing of wells and tanks owned by peasants or groups of peasants in order to encourage them to increase the area under protected water supply; and

(b) whether Government are prepared to encourage Provincial Governments to follow the example of the Bombay Government which has decided to give a subsidy of Rs. 14 per every acre which is brought under protected irrigation through well or tank water?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: (a) Yes. The Government of India are already sharing with Provincial Governments the cost of subsidising the construction of and repairs to wells, tanks and other minor irrigation works up to a maximum of 50 per cent. of the cost of construction.

(b) Yes. The Provincial Governments have been requested to take steps on similar lines suited to their local conditions.

DESTRUCTION OF FOODGRAINS UNFIT FOR HUMAN CONSUMPTION

1023. *Mr. B. B. Varma: Will the Food Secretary be pleased to state:

(a) how many tons of foodgrains—rice, wheat, flour and pulses were destroyed during the years 1943, 1944 and 1945 in the centrally administered areas and Provinces particularly in Bihar;

(b) who is responsible for not protecting them from destruction before they were found unfit for human consumption and ultimately thrown away;

(c) how many tons were eaten by insects; and

(d) how many tons were destroyed by bad storage method?

Mr. B. R. Sen: (a) A statement giving the information, except in respect of Bengal, which has not yet been received, is laid on the table of the House.

(b) The damage in the case of imported wheat, received in bulk from overseas, was due to contact with salt water or due to natural heating while in ship-holds. The stocks of Nepal rice/paddy were damaged by rain while in the purchasing agent's custody.

(c) and (d). Losses by insect infestation and other causes cannot be calculated with any degree of accuracy.

Statement showing the quantities of rice, wheat, flour and pulses in the custody of the Government of India and in the Provinces destroyed during the year 1943-44 and 1945.

(b) WRITTEN ANSWERS

PROVISION OF A PUBLIC LIBRARY IN DELHI

1024. *Choudhury Md. Abid Hussain: (a) Will the Education Secretary please consider the desirability of providing at Government cost a public library in Delhi on the lines of the Imperial Library of Calcutta?

(b) How is it that Delhi, being an Imperial city, has no Imperial Library?

Dr. D. M. Sen: (a) and (b). The question of establishing a Central Library in New Delhi is at present engaging the attention of the Government of India.

FACILITIES FOR TRAINING WOMEN TEACHERS IN AJMER-MERWARA

1025. *Pandit Mukut Bihari Lal Bhargava: (a) Will the Education Secretary please state if Government are aware that the Women's Vernacular Teachers' Training School at Ajmer is not sufficient to cope with the growing demands for trained Women Teachers for Primary Girls' Schools in Ajmer-Merwara, and that there are no arrangements for training women teachers (Matriculates and Intermediates) for Middle Schools?

(b) If so, will Government consider the advisability of making necessary arrangements from July, 1946?

(c) If no such arrangements can be made, do Government propose to consider the advisability of converting the Government Central Girls' High School into a Training institute, particularly because the latter has only fifth to tenth classes and the number of pupils in those classes can be easily absorbed in the other three recognised High Schools and Intermediate Colleges, some of which have a very small number of pupils in the High School classes, and all are ready to take more pupils?

Dr. D. M. Sen: (a) and (b). No. The school is training a sufficient number of girls every year to meet the present needs of both primary and middle schools for girls. For additional needs of the post-war period, necessary provision is being made in the Development Scheme.

(c) Does not arise.

UN-QUALIFIED TEACHERS IN GOVERNMENT CENTRAL GIRLS HIGH SCHOOL, AJMER

1026. *Pandit Mukut Bihari Lal Bhargava: (a) Will the Education Secretary please state if Government are aware that most of the staff in the Government Central Girls' High School, Ajmer, do not possess the minimum qualifications laid down by the Board of High School and Inter Education, and are teaching subjects which according to the Board's rule they are not qualified to teach?

(b) If so, why were such unqualified teachers taken in, and what steps do Government propose to take in order to improve the present conditions?

Dr. D. M. Sen: (a) No, Sir. The staff all possess the prescribed qualifications.

(b) Does not arise.

COMPLAINTS AGAINST DISTRICT INSPECTOR OF SCHOOLS, AJMER-MERWARA

1027. *Pandit Mukut Bihari Lal Bhargava: (a) Will the Education Secretary please state if it is a fact that the post of the District Inspector of Schools, Ajmer-Merwara is borne on the cadre of the other gazetted appointments in the Education Department?

(b) Is it a fact that the present incumbent of the post has been holding this appointment for the last thirteen years?

(c) Are Government aware that a number of complaints of nepotism and favouritism have been received against him by the Local Government from many vernacular teachers? If so, what action has so far been taken on those complaints?

(d) Do Government propose to consider the advisability of transferring the present District Inspector of Schools to some other post on the cadre?

Dr. D. M. Sen: (a) Yes, Sir.

(b) Yes, Sir. This is the only post of Inspector borne on the cadre.

(c) No, Sir, but if the Honourable Member can supply me with information on this point, I shall be glad to take the matter up with the Local Administration.

(d) As the post of the District Inspector of Schools is the only Class II post on the inspectorate side, it has not been considered desirable to transfer the only experienced inspector available to a post on the teaching side

UNSTARRED QUESTION AND ANSWER

RESTRICTIONS ON DOMESTIC CONSUMPTION OF ELECTRICITY

138. Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will the Honourable the Labour Member be pleased to state:

(a) if Government have issued a press communique that restrictions regarding domestic consumption of electricity ought to be relaxed, in view of the end of the war;

(b) whether they are aware that the Government of Madras has not given any effect in the Madras city to their order; and

(c) what action Government propose to take to see that Provincial Governments implement their advice?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: (a) No. Provinces were, however, advised to sanction at their discretion new "domestic" connections to the extent of the monthly quota fixed for various supply undertakings and having regard to (i) the margin of generating plant available, (ii) the fuel position and (iii) the financial position of each undertaking.

(b) Government are aware that the Madras Government have not accepted this advice in regard to Madras City.

(c) Government do not consider it necessary to take any further action as their advice was conditional.

SHORT NOTICE QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

BAGHAULI TRAIN DISASTER

Shri Mohan Lal Saxena: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state what further information he has received in connection with Baghauli Train Disaster regarding—(i) the number of persons killed, (ii) the number of persons injured, and (iii) the total value of passengers' property damaged or lost?

(b) Is it a fact that the first relief train from Lucknow arrived after 11 A.M. about six hours after the accident—and returned to Lucknow at about 3-30 P.M.?

(c) Is it also a fact that the relief train did not have proper equipment and sufficient nurses for taking the seriously injured persons and that most of them were placed on bare third class berths? Is it not a fact that Lt.-Col. Hassan and other passengers were not provided with even water notwithstanding repeated requests therefor?

(d) What steps were taken to dig out and extricate the passengers from wreckage?

(e) Is it not a fact that, but for the efforts by stray passengers, no organised effort was made by the authorities to take them out?

(f) Is it not a fact that a troops special was standing at the station and departed only at about 9 A.M.? If so, why was their help not taken?

(g) Is it not a fact that Prof. Shatir of Meerut and many others were extricated about five hours after the accident? Is it not also a fact that his son aged 12 did not have any signs of injury and was found to have died of suffocation?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) The latest information which I hope when the lists are finally checked will prove to be maximum figures, is: Killed 48: Injured 75.

Of the injured 35 were admitted into hospital at Lucknow and Hardoi, two of the latter being subsequently transferred to hospital in Moradabad. The balance consists of those who left hospital for their homes after treatment and of those who received first aid at the site and proceeded to their destinations. I understand the 22 cases in King George's Hospital at Lucknow are progressing satisfactorily but 3 out of the 8 remaining at Hardoi Hospital were a few days ago still in a dangerous condition.

I have no information regarding the value of the property of passengers which has been damaged or lost, but the Railway are making special enquiries.

(b) An extemporised relief train arrived at Baghauli at 7-45 hours; the relief train from Rosa reached Baghauli at 10-12 hours and the relief train from Lucknow arrived also at 10-12 hours. The relief train from Lucknow was thus not the first to arrive at the scene of accident. A special train was formed which took the casualties to Lucknow and left Baghauli at 13-25 hours.

(c) The relief train from Lucknow was fully equipped medically. The District Medical Officer, three of his assistants and other medical staff accompanied this train, but there were no nurses. The carriages which were brought from Lucknow for the evacuation of casualties were two III class bogies, as they were the most readily available; the casualties were therefore sent to Lucknow in these carriages. The reply to the second part of the question is in the negative; my information is that tea was served to the injured under the instructions of the Chief Medical Officer who was attending to the casualties.

(d) Soon after the accident the Assistant Executive Engineer (Construction) who with some construction staff was encamped at Baghauli commenced rescue operations and about 7-40 the Train Examining Staff arrived from Balamau and assisted. About 8-20 the Executive Engineer from Hardoi, with a large gang of labourers, also joined in the rescue. Rescue operations were intensified with the arrival of relief trains and the extrication of the injured and dead was the first task to which all staff applied themselves.

(e) The reply is in the negative; but the Administration gratefully acknowledges the help received in the rescue operations from passengers, parties of whom were organised by public spirited persons amongst them, including Government officials.

(f) The answer to the first part is in the negative; the second part does not arise.

(g) I am satisfied that there was no delay in extricating passengers. It must be realised, however, that the extrication of the injured from under the debris of an accident of this kind must necessarily be a slow process as care must be taken to ensure that the persons concerned do not suffer further injuries while being taken out. A considerable time may indeed elapse in getting at persons who are trapped in the thick of the wreckage and whose extrication may not be physically possible until the debris is lifted by means of cranes. I have no information as to when Prof. Shatir was extricated. As regards the second part, I understand that the Surgeon in Charge, King George's Hospital, Lucknow, informed the General Manager, E. I. Railway, that the body of Mr. Shatir's son had no external signs of fatal injuries. I am not aware that suffocation was established as the cause of his death.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: May I know how many persons are still untraced?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: None, so far as I am aware.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: With reference to part (c) of the question, may I inform the Honourable Member that Col. Hassan himself told me that he was asking for water which was not supplied and he was told every time that he would be given water at Lucknow station?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: That is not my information. The injured in hospital were visited by the General Manager, the Chief Operating Superintendent and, I think, the Chief Medical Officer, and no complaints were registered. Therefore I think the Honourable Member's suggestion is probably unfounded.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Will the Honourable Member write to Col. Hassan and ascertain the facts?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I would point out that these questions concerning proper medical attention are the subject of specific enquiry by the Government Inspector of Railways.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Is it not a fact that Col. Hassan had come down to Delhi to attend some Government Committee meeting and he was on his way back and, if so, is it not the duty of the Government to ascertain from him what happened to him on his way back?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Government have to look after all passengers.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Will the Honourable Member also ask from Col. Hassan whether he was taken in a bare third class bogie in a wounded condition and not even blankets were placed on him?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: The carriages most readily available were third class carriages and those were put on the train. They were the only ones readily handy.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Am I to understand that there were no arrangements kept ready for such accidents?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: These were extra coaches. In view of the seriousness of the accident, the ordinary arrangements were not sufficient to deal with the large number of cases which was reported.

Mr. Manu Subedar: May I know whether the enquiry by the Senior Government Inspector which was to take place on the 8th and 9th is over, whether his report has been received and, if so, what is the finding as to the cause of the accident?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: That question should be addressed to the Posts and Air Department.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: With reference to part (g) of the question, will the Honourable Member ascertain from Prof. Shatir himself, who is in the Lucknow Medical College and whom I saw, whether he was calling for help for five hours, that his son was crying for help and that nobody came to their rescue till five or six hours later?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: As I have explained, he may have been in an inextricable position and it may not have been possible to remove him until the debris was lifted.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: When efforts were being made to extricate him is it not a fact that this gentleman was crying all the time and nearly four or five hours were wasted?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: No, Sir. If the Honourable Member will study the reply to part (d) of the question, he will see that there was an Assistant Executive Engineer on the spot who with some construction staff began rescue operations immediately and at 7-40 further Train Examining Staff arrived and at 8-20 the Executive Engineer from Hardoi with a large gang of labourers also joined in the rescue. It is possible that this particular gentleman was in an inextricable position.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Do I take it that the statement made by the Honourable Member is based upon a departmental enquiry on behalf of the Railway Administration, independently of the statutory enquiry that is taking place conducted by the Senior Government Inspector, and if that be so, will the Honourable Member be pleased to state which officer actually was engaged in making this departmental enquiry?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I have had a number of reports, from the two divisional superintendents who were present, from the Chief Medical Officer who was present from the start, and from the General Manager, and I had telephonic communications from the Chief Operating Superintendent. It is on those that my information is largely based.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Was it a kind of committee of these officials that went into all these facts or was it their disjointed reports that reached the Honourable Member?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: They were received at various stages: for instance, the Chief Medical Officer submitted his report—he was there actually on the train. He submitted one report of what his experience was. The divisional superintendents submitted reports at two different stages and so on.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: As the Honourable Member representing the Posts and Air Department is present in this House, may I know from him whether the report of the Inspector of Railways on this subject has been received as yet?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I think it is usual to address the questions to one Member; but there is a question down about the inquiry, to be reached in a few minutes.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: With reference to part (f), am I to understand that there was no special military train at Baghauli station that morning?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: That is quite incorrect. There were some soldiers in this train, but there was no special military train. On the third line there was a pilot train.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: May I inform the Honourable Member that while I was going back to Lucknow I met one of the male nurses on my way, who was travelling in the train, and I was informed that this military train starting from Phaphund a station in Bihar and bound for Ferozepur, was there at the station. I could not see the doctor—he was also going to Lucknow; and he told me this. I would like the Honourable Member to make inquiries again, whether there was a military special at that time standing at the Baghauli railway station when this accident took place.

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Yes; there was a train; it was a pilot train standing on the third line, but I am told that it was not a troop train.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: How many passengers were there in that pilot train?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I am not aware that there were any at all.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: May I know why help was not given by the soldiers who were in the train?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: There was a large number of passengers on the train itself, many of whom gave assistance; there was also a crowd of one or two thousand persons, bystanders, who crowded round to see what has happening and considerably impeded the operations of rescue. As far as I am aware there was no military train: the only military personnel present were certain passengers on the wrecked train.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Who were the passengers on the pilot train? Were they not persons travelling from Bihar to Ferozepur—more than a hundred soldiers, either discharged or going to be discharged, who were there and whose help could have been taken and was not taken?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I will read out my information from the Chief Medical Officer's Report:

"There were many I.O.R.'s. on the train but they were not conversant with first aid. They confined their energies to occasionally removing the injured from the wreckage, but when asked if they could render first aid, some said they did not know and others ignored the request. It must be remembered that from the very beginning the station was crowded with passengers and spectators, rendering the task of everyone very difficult."

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: I only wanted to know one thing; even if they could not render medical help, why were they not deputed to see that no property was removed. These soldiers were there and their help could have been taken and outsiders could have been prevented from coming and taking away or looting these passengers?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Those steps were taken by the local chaukidari police.

HELP BY RAILWAY AUTHORITIES TO RELATIONS OF THE KILLED IN DISPOSAL OF DEAD BODIES

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: (a) Has the Honourable the Railway Member ascertained what help, if any, was rendered by the Railway authorities to the relations of the killed in the disposal of dead bodies?

(b) Has he seen the statement of the Chairman, Lucknow Municipal Board, deprecating the callous attitude of the authorities in this respect, published in the Pioneer of the 6th March, 1946, (Lucknow edition)? If so, did he make any enquiries in the matter? If so, with what results?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) the arrangements for the disposal of the dead bodies were in the hands of the Railway Police. Both they and the railway staff afforded all the assistance possible to the relations of the killed when they were identified.

(b) I have not yet seen the statement referred to, but have sent for a copy.

I should add that I am satisfied that the authorities in charge handled the disaster with promptness and sympathy, but, as the investigation of this aspect of the case is a specific charge of the Government Inspector, I have no doubt that he will report on this matter as the result of his enquiry.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Am I to understand that the reports appearing in the Press in connection with the accident were not cut and placed before the Honourable Member?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Yes; I have received a large number of reports; but I do not happen to have received yet the report of the Lucknow edition of the Pioneer of that particular date.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: May I know whether in the disposal of the dead bodies of Muslims, the police authorities took the help of the local people there?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Yes; they apparently took the help of the local Muslim League; and in that connection there was an accident in that a Hindu body was mixed up with the Muslim bodies: subsequently that matter was rectified.

ENQUIRY INTO BAGHAULI TRAIN DISASTER

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: (a) Will the Secretary for Posts and Air please state if it is a fact that the Government enquiry into the Baghauli train disaster is being held by the Inspector of Railways?

(b) Is it also a fact that the representatives of the Press have not been allowed to be present at this enquiry? If so, why?

(c) Will Government consider the advisability of issuing instructions that Press representatives and other members of the public should be allowed to be present at the enquiry?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: (a) Yes.

(b) Yes. The Press is excluded from the enquiry because the evidence recorded by the Government Inspector of Railways is not taken on oath or affirmation; and on the evidence he records, he has to decide the cause of accident and judge the responsibility, if any, of Railway servants, etc., for the accident. As his conclusions might lead to prosecution in criminal courts, a public hearing of witnesses might prejudice the prosecution or defence in subsequent judicial proceedings.

(c) Government do not propose issuing instructions to the effect that Press representatives should be allowed to be present in the enquiry for the reasons, stated in reply to part (b). The public is, however, notified and individuals can come forward and give evidence.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Has the report been submitted already, and if not, when do Government expect that report and when will it be made public?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: I am expecting a report any day, but as I stated the other day that report would be a preliminary report, giving purely the facts ascertained. I have promised that I will make the report available to the Members of the House.

Mr. Manu Subedar: When shall we know the precise causes as far as they could be ascertained of this accident, so that we can press on Government the remedial measures to avoid such accidents in future?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: That report will be expedited as quickly as possible. The House will understand that the Inspector may have certain technical examinations to be done: the inspectors have orders to complete their inquiries as soon as possible.

Mr. K. O. Neogy: Do I take it that the enquiry by the inspector is of the nature of a confidential inquiry and that members of the public have no right to be present at such inquiries apart from those who may be in a position to give evidence bearing upon the accident?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: Yes; this question of admitting the public was carefully examined last year, and it was decided that in view of the subsequent judicial proceedings that may come, it was inadvisable that the statements of witnesses should be taken in the presence of the public or be made available to the Press. I may add that in the United Kingdom the same is the position. The inquiry by the Government Inspector is not open to the public.

Mr. K. O. Neogy: Is a full and verbatim report of the evidence tendered before the Inspector kept and is that sent to the Honourable Member's Department as part of the report?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: Yes, Sir.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Is it in the nature of a police inquiry or a magisterial inquiry?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: It is not a magisterial inquiry at all.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Then it is like a police inquiry which inquires into the incidents and compiles facts?

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Not even a police inquiry.

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: It is neither a police inquiry nor a magisterial inquiry. It is in the nature of a statutory inquiry into the causes of the accident.

Seth Govind Das: Then, what is the nature of the inquiry?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: It is of the nature of a railway inquiry.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Is it the same set of officials who will make the preliminary report who will also give the final report, giving the causes of the accident?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: Yes, Sir. It is the same Inspector who sends in a preliminary report first for the information of Government and then he makes his full report, which includes what he has stated in the preliminary report. The final report is the real report of the Inspector.

Mr. Manu Subedar: What is the usual interval between the preliminary and the final report?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: It depends on the nature of the inquiry. Sometimes the Inspector has to have investigations made but generally it is about two months. It varies very much. If it is a simple case, it is finished much quicker than otherwise.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: May I know if that report is final and the Chief Inspector or any other official would not examine it?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: The report is the report of the Inspector. It is submitted to Government through the Chief Government Inspector who forwards it with his remarks as to whether he agrees with the report or whether he has any comments to offer, in which case there is a further discussion between the Government Inspector and the Chief Government Inspector.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know if the object of the inquiry is to ascertain the cause of the accident and also to find out if the Railway Administration is liable to pay any compensation and if so how much?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: The latter is not the object of the inquiry.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Then is it confined purely to the cause of the accident?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: Yes, Sir.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: What about the relief rendered?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: That is part of the inquiry.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Is there any other inquiry, magisterial or otherwise?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: There is no bar to a magisterial inquiry being held, if the local district authorities desire to do so.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Will the statements made before the Inspector be recorded verbatim?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: Yes, Sir. They are recorded by the Inspector himself and they are I believe signed by the witnesses but I am not sure.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee: If the Provincial Government orders an inquiry, will the report of the Government Inspector be made available to the inquiring officer appointed by the Local Government?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: I am not sure of that. I think the magisterial inquiry is independent of the Government Inspector's inquiry.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee: Suppose the Provincial Government appointed a committee as in the case of the Bhita inquiry, where they appointed a judge to inquire into the causes of the accident. Suppose the Provincial Government establish a tribunal of that kind. Will the report of the Railway Inspector be made available to that tribunal?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: I think this is somewhat hypothetical. In any case I shall want notice.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Will the proceedings of the inquiry committee and the evidence recorded be available to the magisterial inquiry or any other inquiry that might be held?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: I shall have to inquire into the legal position. The magisterial inquiry can be held quite independently. The Government Inspector's report is ultimately published.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee: What is the exact value of the report if it is not made available to the magistrate?

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: It is only a white washing inquiry.

STRIKE IN INDIAN SIGNAL CORPS, JUBBULPORE

Seth Govind Das: Will the War Secretary kindly state:

(a) the number of people involved in the strike at Jubbulpore in the Indian Signal Corps;

(b) the number of persons under arrest;

(c) whether there was any firing ordered, and whether there was also a bayonet charge;

(d) the number of people wounded and the number of the people who died;

(e) the number of people who are likely to be court martialled;

(f) what sort of an enquiry is going to be held, and who will constitute the enquiry; and

(g) whether the Government of India will kindly consider the desirability of associating members of non-official public with this enquiry?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) The total number of people involved in the mutiny at Jubbulpore in the Indian Signal Corps was 1,716, of whom 950 were involved for one afternoon only and another 410 were only very slightly involved.

(b) The number of persons now under arrest is 55. The rest are all back at work.

(c) No firing was ordered, nor did any firing take place. There was no bayonet charge, and I should here explain, since there seems to be some misunderstanding of the term that a bayonet charge is something essentially offensive, not defensive. What did happen was that troops were ordered to arrest certain individuals from among the mutineers with whom they had to get at close quarters. In order to avoid firing, which would have caused much more serious injuries, bayonets were fixed. There was, as I have said, no charge, but some of the Signal Corps men attempted to overpower the troops and were wounded.

(d) 35 persons were wounded and were admitted to hospital, of whom 8 had bayonet wounds and the remainder had minor injuries from barbed wire or from contusions. Two persons were seriously injured. No one has died.

(e) It is difficult to make an estimate of the numbers likely to be Court Martialled. It is the intention to bring to trial only the Ring-leaders, and a preliminary examination of the evidence has placed between 20 and 30 men in this category, but it is the policy to reduce the number as much as possible, and the evidence is still being examined. The number actually brought to trial may be considerably less than this.

(f) and (g). Courts of Enquiry are in progress and Courts Martial may be held in due course. I do not think it would be advisable to associate non-officials with service enquiries of this nature.

Seth Govind Das: Is it a fact that before this strike the strikers placed certain demands before the authorities for consideration?

Mr. P. Mason: I think not.

Seth Govind Das: Did they make any representation on this subject to the authorities?

Mr. P. Mason: No, Sir. I think the first thing that happened was they refused duty.

Seth Govind Das: Does the Honourable Member know that the Deputy Commissioner of Jubbulpore, a European official himself, has issued a statement saying that these people demanded certain things from the military authorities.

Mr. P. Mason: I had a long letter from the Deputy Commissioner. My impression was—I have not got the letter with me—he did not make any such allegation.

Seth Govind Das: Did the Deputy Commissioner himself state that these soldiers who struck work were all along peaceful?

Mr. P. Mason: Their movements in the town were certainly peaceful.

Seth Govind Das: Why were these bayonet and other charges made on them?

Mr. P. Mason: I have already explained what a bayonet charge is and I would like to make that clear again because there seems to be some misunderstanding about it. What a bayonet charge means is that a number of men hold rifles with fixed bayonets in their hands and run in the direction of their enemy with the object of driving their bayonets into them. During the whole proceedings in the town of Jubbulpore there was no violence used, but later on when these men were back in barracks, it became necessary to divide the leaders from the others. As they refused to obey the orders, a guard was ordered to divide the leaders from the others. In order that there should be no need to fire, which would have caused much more serious injuries, the guard was told to fix bayonets. The men were then separated from the remainder of the troops in Jubbulpore who were continuing their duty, but those who had taken part in this demonstration at the time did try to overpower the guard and the guard had to use bayonets to defend themselves.

Seth Govind Das: The Honourable Member accepts that these soldiers were wounded. May I know if they were wounded on account of their own charge or on account of the charge made on them?

Mr. P. Mason: They attempted to overpower the guard and the guard used bayonets to prevent them.

Seth Govind Das: Was the guard or other officials wounded by these soldiers?

Mr. P. Mason: No, Sir, because they had no weapons.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: May I ask whether it is the policy of the Government not to associate non-official members with this service inquiry?

Mr. P. Mason: Yes, Sir.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: May I ask if the Honourable Member will consider the advisability of asking the Members of the Defence Consultative Committee to serve on this service inquiry?

Mr. P. Mason: No, Sir. In the first place, it would be wholly illegal. The service inquiry is held under the Indian Army Act and it will be quite illegal to associate non-official Members with it.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Why will it be illegal? Does he mean to say that he has no confidence in the Members of the Defence Consultative Committee?

Mr. P. Mason: I have every confidence in them in their proper place.

Seth Govind Das: Has the Honourable Member seen in today's Hindustan Times that one Jemadar Naidu and 29 others are under arrest in this respect?

Mr. P. Mason: I have already explained that there are 55 persons under arrest.

Seth Govind Das: Has the Honourable Member seen another item of the news that it is further gathered that about 500 service men are likely to be discharged from service by the end of this month? Are they going to be discharged because they took part in these strikes?

Mr. P. Mason: I cannot answer that. I think there will be at least that number to be discharged at Jubbulpore. I think it will be in accordance with the policy of continual reduction which my friends continually press us to follow.

Seth Govind Das: Will it be because these persons took part in this strike that they will be discharged or it will be done in the ordinary course?

Mr. P. Mason: I do not know which 500 persons the Honourable Member is referring to. Many thousands of persons will have to be discharged from Jubbulpore. There may be some dismissals by summary procedure.

Seth Govind Das: Will the Honourable Member take into consideration the demands which these strikers put before the authorities before they struck work and will he see that their reasonable demands are conceded to them, so that such instances may not occur in the future?

Mr. P. Mason: I do not think any demands were placed before the men refused to do their duty, but I can assure the Honourable Member that all reasonable demands are always considered. In fact, we have a Special Branch in General Head Quarters which deals exclusively and entirely with demands of this nature.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Will the ring leaders who will be tried be given the benefit of a counsel from outside?

Mr. P. Mason: Certainly, Sir, if they are tried. I am not even certain that there will be a court martial because the courts of inquiry are still proceeding, and it is not certain that a court martial will be necessary.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will the Defence Consultative Committee be consulted in regard to this matter as was done in the case of R.I.N. when the matter was placed before them?

Mr. P. Mason: This is a very different matter. The Defence Consultative Committee was consulted in connection with the R.I.N. with regard to the general policy and with regard to the setting up of a Commission of Inquiry. There is no question at present of setting up a Commission of Inquiry in this connection and the general policy with regard to this matter is, after all, in no way different from the other.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Until and unless the rank and file of the army behave or misbehave in the way they did in the case of R.I.N., Government will not take the co-operation of the public in satisfying the reasonable demands of the personnel?

Mr. P. Mason: We are always glad to satisfy the reasonable demands of the public.

Mr. President: Order, order. No more supplementary questions; the matter has been sufficiently discussed.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO STANDING COMMITTEE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS DEPARTMENT

Mr. H. Weightman (Secretary, External Affairs Department): Sir, I move: "That this Assembly do proceed to elect, in such manner as the Honourable the President may direct, eight non-official Members to serve on the Standing Committee to advise the External Affairs Department on subjects pertaining to British Baluchistan, the Tribal Areas and India's membership of the United Nations Organisation for the un-expired portion of the financial year 1945-46 and the financial year 1946-47."

Mr. President: Motion moved:

"That this Assembly do proceed to elect, in such manner as the Honourable the President may direct, eight non-official Members to serve on the Standing Committee to advise the External Affairs Department on subjects pertaining to British Baluchistan, the Tribal Areas and India's membership of the United Nations Organisation for the un-expired portion of the financial year 1945-46 and the financial year 1946-47."

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Guntur cum Nellore: Non-Muhammadian Rural): There is an amendment in the name of Mr. Satya Narayan Sinha. He did not expect this item to be reached just now. May I be permitted to move it on his behalf?

Mr. Manu Subedar (Indian Merchant's Chamber and Bureau: Indian Commerce): I understand the official side is willing to accept it.

Mr. H. Weightman: If it is moved, I will accept it.

Mr. President: In that case, I will permit the Honourable Member, Prof. Ranga, to move this amendment himself. I will not allow him to move it on behalf of Mr. Satya Narayan Sinha.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Sir, I move:

"That in the original motion for the word 'eight', the word 'ten' be substituted."

Mr. President: The question is:

"That in the original motion for the word 'eight', the word 'ten' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Sir, I would like to have a little more information about the exact scope of the work of this particular Committee. We are anxious that this Committee should not confine itself merely to the discussion of the tribal areas and the affairs connected with the tribal areas. Its work should be extended not only to the U.N.O. and its activities but also to the whole foreign policy of the Government in which India is interested. Sir, unless we take early steps to try to get as many of our Members as possible properly acquainted with the various International responsibilities into which this Government is getting our country, it will not be possible for this House to play its proper part in serving our country in regard to the foreign affairs. For a very long time this Government has relied too much upon the British Government for its foreign policy. So much so that, when the other day we wanted to know from the Honourable Member in charge of this Department whether he would explain whether the Indian delegate was a member of the Security Council of the U.N.O. or not, the Honourable Member had to display his ignorance because he himself did not think it necessary to keep himself up-to-date in his information in regard to these International affairs. A number of International responsibilities are being heaped upon this country. Wherever such institutions have cropped in, such as, Bretton Woods, Hot Springs and Philadelphia in the name of labour, we have been involved in them.

The world now seems to be in a very queer position. Mr. Churchill has already warned us that the world is in for the third World War. Even today the Hindustan Times has published a very ominous news that the British papers are very nervous about the general International situation of the world. The Times of London has itself stated that all these three great Powers, instead of trying to bring about some sort of world peace and harmony and also a settlement and conciliation amongst themselves, are trying to play power politics between themselves and all of them are competing with one another. In these circumstances, it is most necessary that the Legislative Assembly as well as this Government should try to come nearer to each other and put themselves in possession of the relevant facts that are necessary in order to make themselves competent to deal with the situation. Only yesterday, Sir, we had the ominous news that Russian troops were marching towards Tehran, but today we got the news that it was not towards Tehran that they were marching but that they were proceeding to Azerbaijan to strengthen their regiments there. Let us simply consider the prospect that there would be for India if Soviet Russia were to become our next door neighbour on that side of Baluchistan on the one side, and Chinese forces also becoming our next door neighbour on the other side, and Burma also becoming more and more unfriendly to India, thanks to the imperialistic policy pursued by the Britishers in Burma and treating the Indians there as tools.

Mr. President: Does the Honourable Member propose to review the whole world situation?

Prof. N. G. Ranga: In one sense, I have done it. I have a very good object in doing so, because this is the first occasion when this particular move is being made in this House that there should be a Standing Committee to advise the External Affairs Department, to deal with foreign affairs and foreign policy with which this Government has got to concern itself. I am extremely anxious that our Government should make this External Affairs a first class foreign affairs department and take this House into the fullest confidence so that the Government will be in a better position to deal with this matter and advise people in regard to various subjects, various international problems with which we are likely to be faced very soon. Therefore, I want the Honourable Member to give us an assurance that he is going to place all these things before this Committee.

Mr. H. Weightman: Sir, the motion which I have moved today.....

Mr. President: I have to remind the Honourable Member that today being Friday, the House will have to adjourn at Quarter to One of the Clock.

Mr. H. Weightman: I will be brief, Sir. The motion which I put before the House today is as a result of the discussions which I held with representatives of the main Parties in this House on the possibility of extending the functions of the External Affairs Department Standing Committee. As a result of these discussions, agreement was reached and action was taken to amend the Legislative Department Rules governing the constitution and procedure of Standing Committee. The motion which I have moved is in terms of that amendment which was made with the agreement and consent of the principal parties in this House. I cannot go further than I have done.

Nawabzada Liaquat Ali Khan (Meerut Division: Muhammadan Rural): As the Honourable Member referred to some agreement among the Parties, it is as well that I should point out that there was no mention of the United Nations Organisation and now that the Government have agreed to include the United Nations Organisation as well within the purview of this Committee, I do not see what objection the Government can have to the proposition that has been put forward. At that time it was only with regard to British Baluchistan and the Tribal areas. There was no mention of the United Nations Organisation and once you have included that, that means the whole field can be covered.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That this Assembly do proceed to elect, in such manner as the Honourable the President may direct, ten non-official Members to serve on the Standing Committee to advise the External Affairs Department on subjects pertaining to British Baluchistan, the Tribal Areas and India's membership of the United Nations Organisation for the un-expired portion of the financial year 1945-46 and the financial year 1946-47."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: I have to inform Honourable Members that for the purpose of election of members to the Standing Committee for the External Affairs Department, the Notice Office will be open to receive nominations upto 12 Noon on Wednesday, the 20th March, and that the election, if necessary, will be held on Friday, the 22nd March. The election, which will be conducted in accordance with the Regulations for holding of elections by means of the single transferable vote, will be held in the Assistant Secretary's room in the Council House, between the hours of 10-30 a.m. and 1 p.m.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Quarter Past Two of the Clock. Mr. President (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

INDIAN INCOME-TAX (AMENDMENT) BILL

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands (Finance Member): Sir, I move:

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Mr. K. C. Neogy, Mr. Manu Subedar, Mr. Vadilal Lalubhai, Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, Mr. B. P. Jhunjhunwala, Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon, Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi, Syed Ghulam Bhik Nairang, Mr. T. Chapman-Mortimer, Sir John Sheehy, and Mr. C. W. Ayers, with instructions to report by Wednesday, the 27th March, 1946, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

I do not think I need detain the House very long. Indeed, if the debate is confined to the scope of the Bill before the House, I do not think it will take the House very long to dispose of the motion. My brevity is four-fold. First of all, the Bill is very short; secondly, it is not only short but sweet, because it does nothing but confer concessions upon the taxpayers; thirdly, I think the notes on clauses adequately indicate the purpose of the amendment; and fourthly and lastly, as the Bill is going to be referred to a Select Committee, the House will have a further opportunity of debating it. I could, therefore, really sit down now, but, before resuming my seat, it might perhaps be of help if I laid emphasis on one or two of the points which require consideration. Honourable Members will remember that in my Budget speech I said that one of the objects of my financial proposals was to encourage Indian industry to rehabilitate and re-equip itself and make itself more efficient; and this Bill covers four means to that end. Firstly, it proposes a special initial depreciation allowance; secondly, it proposes to provide that money spent on research shall be regarded as deductible expenditure for income-tax purposes; thirdly, it extends and expands the scope of the obsolescence allowance at present allowed; and lastly, for the first time, it applies that obsolescence allowance to buildings. To take these things in turn.

As far as the question of depreciation allowance is concerned, the proposed special initial depreciation allowance on buildings will be 10 per cent. of the cost and, in the case of plant and machinery, 20 per cent. Three points have to be noted about this new initial depreciation allowance: First, it is in addition to the existing normal depreciation allowance that is to say, if a company at the moment is entitled to 10 per cent. depreciation allowance on its plant and machinery and if it is a company that is working double-shifts, it will under these proposals, get a total of no less than 35 per cent. depreciation allowance in the year concerned. Secondly, this special depreciation allowance will not be taken into account in determining the value of further depreciation. Thirdly, it will not reckon for excess profits tax.

The next one is research expenditure. Here again three points have to be noted. First of all, it covers both expenditure from revenue and expenditure from capital. It will apply not only to research expenditure incurred by an undertaking itself, but also will cover grants made by a company or a concern to recognized research institutions. Thirdly, by a provision, which you will find in the Finance Bill, this concession is going to be made retrospective, the result being that it will take effect just as if the abortive income-tax Bill last year had then been passed into law.

There is one other point to which I might draw the attention of the House in respect of this special allowance for research, and that is this: it will not be at the sole discretion of the Income-tax Officer to determine whether to allow expenditure as expenditure on research under the Act, but it will be subject, in case of a dispute, to a ruling by an independent prescribed authority. We have not yet determined who that prescribed authority will be, but it will probably be the Industrial and Scientific Research Department of the Government of India.

As far as the obsolescence allowance is concerned, it does four things: First of all, it extends it to buildings for the first time, and by buildings I mean not [Sir Archibald Rowlands] merely industrial buildings, but it will apply to all the buildings which come under section 10 of the income-tax Act, namely buildings like shops, offices, or hotels. The second thing it does is that it extends the allowance not only to assets that have been discarded, as no longer required, but to assets that have been destroyed or demolished. Thirdly, it curtails in favour of the assessee the present provision under which, if an assessee's sale proceeds of a discarded asset exceeded the written down value, then the whole excess can be treated as taxable profit. What is now proposed is that the amount to be treated as taxable for this purpose will be limited to the difference between the original value and the written down value. And, lastly, it proposes to treat as income money received from an insurance company in respect of an asset that has been destroyed in the same way as money received from the sale of a distributed asset. That is to say, the total amount of receipts from insurance companies that can be treated as taxable will be limited to the difference between the original value and the written down value of the asset concerned.

If you remember, there is one other thing I proposed in the Budget which is now covered by this Bill before the House, namely the stress which I laid on the importance of private buildings for the purpose of restoring to the maximum extent possible the economic activity which will necessarily diminish by the heavy drop in defence expenditure. Apart from the administrative measures that we hope to take by making available materials—steel, timber, cement, etc.—I propose two concessions in respect of buildings which are erected within the next two years. In respect of residential buildings, I propose a tax-free exemption for two years, and in respect of other buildings, buildings for the occupation of business, there will be an additional initial depreciation allowance of 5 per cent. Both these points are covered in clause 2 and clause 3 (a) (i) of the Bill. Apart from clause 5 which merely remedies a handicap suffered by trustees and receivers,—I have now covered the whole Bill.

Sir, I do not think I need say anything more except to recommend that the Bill be examined by the Select Committee.

Sir, I move.

Mr. President: Motion moved:

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Mr. K. C. Neogy, Mr. Manu Subedar, Mr. Vadilal Lalubhai, Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, Mr. B. P. Jhunjhunwala, Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon, Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi, Syed Ghulam Bhik Nairang, Mr. T. Chapman-Mortimer, Sir John Sheehy, and Mr. C. W. Ayers, with instructions to report by Wednesday, the 27th March, 1946, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

Mr. Manu Subedar (Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau: Indian Commerce): I shall gladly respond to the suggestion that the discussion of this Bill need not be long drawn up. A portion of this Bill has a history. As the House will remember, this Bill was introduced last year and because there was an obnoxious clause which Members on this side would not agree to, the previous Finance Member,—whom I had occasion then to compare, in sensitiveness, to a temperamental prima donna—in a huff withdrew it. And, I think the present Finance Member has to be congratulated for not only bringing in the Bill, but in bringing it in without that obnoxious clause. Since I have come to Delhi, many friends have so frequently asked me what I think of the present Finance Member. I think I might as well give the reply here. His predecessor was more or less a head-clerk type of person, ponderous, elephantine and slow, without initiative, but in the present Finance Member we find a very superior person. He is constantly saying that he would go away. Whether it is a threat or a promise that he will go away, I have not the slightest doubt that he will very deservedly rise in position wherever he goes. But if the United Kingdom can make use of him in some high position and keep him in this country on their behalf, I should be very glad. This is my opinion of the present Finance Member and to some extent it has been forced out because of the contrast between the present Bill and the previous one which was introduced.

Not only has the Finance Member restored those features of the last year's Bill which we all wanted, but he has introduced two or three good and desirable features. The small one, namely the injustice to persons deriving their income from trusts in clause 5 was overdue. It was wrong, in the first instance, that for some years people who derived their income from trusts and who had no other source of income were taxed at the maximum rate. Now the maximum rate itself has shifted and I am very glad that Government's conscience has now awoken and they find that it was wrong to tax small people deriving very small incomes at the maximum rate as they were doing.

On the other features I do not wish to dwell too long here. There are some points notwithstanding what the Finance Member said which want smoothening out which we shall doubtless attend to in the Select Committee. The wording of the Bill in clause 3 (c) (ii) and the two provisos there, namely, the second and the fourth, did not give us the impression which the Honourable the Finance Member gave in his speech, and I much rather rely on what he said just now, namely, that there is no intention to tax anything which will be in the nature of a capital receipt, namely the excess of sale proceeds over the written down value or the excess of proceeds of insurance companies' compensation, if and when such proceeds exceed the written down value or even the original value.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: The difference between the two.

Mr. Manu Subedar: The difference between the two is something which Government have allowed by way of depreciation during the previous years, and I entirely agree that in the interest of revenue such difference ought to be taxed by Government. But may I point out that insurance is generally taken out by industries not on the basis of what it has cost them, nor again on the basis of what it stands at their books at: but on the basis of at what price they can replace it. In short, what is the replacement value of a particular asset? Let me make it clear. A motor may cost Rs. 5,000 and which I may have used for six or seven years. It may stand in the book next to nothing or Rs. 500. But I would insure it for Rs. 7,500 and I doubt whether in these days I could replace it even for Rs. 7,500 in case the motor burns down. We thought the Government was trying to tax the difference between Rs. 7,500 and Rs. 500 and bring it in, in which case it would be a capital tax, and I am very happy that that is not the intention, though unfortunately the wording of the clause is a little obscure and we shall have to put it right in the Select Committee.

Then, Sir, with regard to scientific research. But before coming to that, on this very question on which I was closing, may I point out that in England according to my information, Mr. Ayers can correct me, these benefits which are now being given to us were given from 1942 and therefore British industries have enjoyed these benefits in the past. The matter has been delayed here and according to last year's Bill, it was retrospective for the accounting period 1943-44; this particular benefit of extra depreciation which is being given, which is only a single occasion on which the party will enjoy it. I do not see why this benefit should be confined to new buildings which may come into existence hereafter or new machinery to be put hereafter. What about those unfortunate persons who have during the last two years been able to put down buildings or to re-equip their plants at very heavy cost during the war. Surely it is not intended to deny to these persons the benefit which is being extended more particularly as in the United Kingdom the industries has had these benefits, now offered to us, for the last three years.

With regard to scientific research, the object is very good. We all agree with it. Our only complaint is why was it not done earlier? Will not the income-tax authorities, the Board of Revenue, confirm me when I say that over and over again industrialists who had spent money in these directions had been arguing with the income-tax officers to permit this as a legitimate and proper expense and that they were not permitted in this manner to deduct these expenses. They were told that it is not necessary for your business to do research. Sir, I do not wish to be cantankerous with regard to issues of the past, but I do feel that—and I am glad that the Government is throwing itself in line with civilized governments elsewhere in the matter of scientific research—just as they have improved matters in their attitude towards the assessee, in the scientific research expenditure, there are a few heads like charity towards which we have necessarily in this country to give something; you may say it is not necessary to maintain your business. You may think so. But it is practically a necessity for every business to maintain itself. You cannot, in the bazaar, when a good object comes round say that you cannot give anything. Still the income-tax authorities say this is not for the maintenance of your business. This is by way of illustration. The attitude of the income-tax authorities could be a little less wooden and a little more elastic and they could try to understand this at all events for limited amounts. But where they find that the particular privilege is being abused, then by all means let them do what they like for the safeguarding of the revenue position. But in all other cases let them be reasonable.

As regards scientific research, the position is that in other countries, research comes from three directions: one is the university research which is being done on a scale which is unknown to India; the other is research initiated by Government in institutions for general purposes, i.e., for general problems; and the third and the last is research directed towards the study of specific problems which a particular industry has in regard to the operations which it has to carry out. It is this last species of research which has hitherto been unknown in India. We find our industrial concerns have not only to import the process from outside, but the men who will tell them about the process, and we find they have again to import knowledge with regard to the adaptation of that process to Indian conditions, Indian climate and Indian raw material. In other words, for almost everything we have been hitherto woefully dependent on the outside and this is a position which no Government should have tolerated for long. I am very glad that this Government is now giving promise of specific encouragement, in the manner which is sought in this Bill, to scientific research, not of a general character, not merely in the air, not theoretical problems, but specifically directed towards problems which are in the way of industrial concerns who wish to achieve some definite result on the basis of given materials, on the basis of Indian conditions and on the basis of whatever is available here, and more particularly to adapt something which is done in another country and to adapt it in the cheapest possible way and not merely as a blind copy of what is done elsewhere.

There is a still more welcome feature in this Bill. It is the proposed encouragement to private buildings which is set out here. I do not think there is anything sacro sanct about these two dates—the 1st April, 1946, to 31st March, 1948. Buildings may be begun and completed during this period. But supposing some unfortunate person is unable to complete a building by 31st March, 1948. Do you wish to deprive him of all the 24 months benefit which you are offering to the others, or do you wish to give him the benefit of the balance of the period to which, in my opinion, he would be fairly and justly entitled? There are issues of this kind which we shall smoothen out in the Select Committee.

I want however to dwell just on one or two general principles contained behind these objects. The Honourable the Finance Member has admitted, and I am very happy to find myself in complete agreement with him that private enterprise is in a position to move quickly and to engage a much larger number of people in a short period of time and that this particular form of encouragement is seeking to do it. I cannot help contrasting, Sir, the proposals which Government have got with regard to the increase of employment in this country by means of State expenditure. Big plans have been made elsewhere for Provinces and in the Central Government. I understood from Sir Ardesir Dalal himself some months ago that some of the Provincial Governments had not prepared any plan, that he was after them, and after a month or two he got a plan from them. This is the kind of plan which has been adopted and this is the plan which my Honourable friend is giving in his Budget a very heavy subsidy. I do not wish to go into all that here but I do say, Sir, that it is private enterprise which for a given amount can achieve larger and quicker results so far as employment is concerned. And if my Honourable friend would study the contrast and would create facilities in other directions which I am presently mentioning, the results would more likely be satisfactory.

Now, Sir, it is good that those who will build during the next two years will be encouraged and there will be no income-tax for two years on their property. This temptation may or may not bear fruit. If it is not the object of this Government merely to say that they made a very good gesture, if it is their object to see that good results are secured, that buildings should go up on a large scale and should bring about the employment of a large number of people, then, Sir, many more things would have to be done.

At present the dilemma is this. A man will save so much on income-tax but it will cost him so much more to start building operations now. He will certainly consider whether it is worth his while to put the money now or wait for a year or two until prices come down. In other words the great danger to the fructification of the scheme which the Honourable the Finance Member has put forward is this. Unless prices of building material,—not only the mere availability which he mentioned (he said that he would make building material available in larger quantities as and when required)—are brought down and, at the same time if the transport required for building materials is not given priority, results achieved would not be satisfactory. Building is like cooking: if one of the ingredients is lacking you cannot have the cake. It therefore the transport is not provided and prices are not brought down the incentive sought to be given through this Bill may be lost. I do not say that this Government is not doing all this, because I have information that they are trying to attend to these aspects also.

Let me put another aspect to which rather incomplete attention has been given. This aspect is with regard to the continuation of the Rent Act. The Rent Act is a very good law but I would like to make one or two suggestions about it. The cost of repairing materials has gone up. Many properties have been in disrepair and if you wish the owner of a property generally to be smart about his business and to be enthusiastic, then you must create some facility and modify the provisions of the Rent Act applicable to a smaller extent so far as people owning residential properties are concerned but to a slightly bigger extent so far as business premises are concerned. The tenants of business premises were permitted to make large profits but the landlord is not permitted even to cover himself for the extra cost of repair. There is another provision by which a tenant can profiteer as much as he likes. A tenant can put up a couple of sticks and say that he is letting out furnished quarters! It may cost him Rs. 90 and he can let it out at Rs. 300. These are abuses. Not only that but the absurdity is that a tenant can put any other tenant behind him, including a prostitute in the midst of respectable families living all round and the landlord is unable to do anything. The Rent Act protects the prostitute!

There are other aspects too of the Rent Act which ought to be remedied but in particular I would mention the provision of the Rent Act as it applies to new buildings. Has the Honourable the Finance Member any idea how a new building, the building of which he is encouraging through the provisions of this

[Mr. Manu Subedar]

Bill, how that building will stand with regard to the fixing of rents when it is ready? I find that the Bombay Government have definitely put forward the plea that no permission will be given for a new building unless the builder agrees that when the building is ready, it would be made first available to the Government, if they want it or it should be made available for any tenants who are after it and the rent shall be fixed by the Rent Controller! The Rent Controller who was appointed under one of the Ordinances during the war is not even a permanent official. I think it is this kind of discouragement from other quarters which will counter-balance any encouragement which my friend may give in the form of the relaxation of income-tax under clause 2 of this Bill. And unless all these things are taken together and, studied together and unless the whole machinery is revised in regard to the reduction of prices of building materials, the transport of these materials, the relaxation of the provisions of the Rent Act, wherever they are found to be unsuitable, unless all this is done I feel that the good intentions of the Finance Member as embodied in this Bill will not fructify.

Sir, I support the motion.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Guntur cum Nellore: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I do not want to take much time but I wish to express my surprise at the manner in which the two Honourable Members who have spoken before me have managed to fall in love with each other without appearing to be doing so.

Sgt. N. V. Gadgil (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Two capitalists.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: I wish to warn the present Finance Member, that the praising is done by my Honourable friend while he is still in office and this of course is the usual practice of businessmen. Our party is not a party of businessmen. We represent different interests of which our nation is composed. It is all right for the Finance Member to give all these bouquets to these big businessmen. There was a time when we were in a little less embarrassing position when all the gentlemen used to be on the other side. We have no objection to the Honourable Member making a number of concessions as he has done in regard to earned incomes of all those people who are professionals. This is a reform which should have been made long ago. I am glad it has been made at last now. But in regard to various other things which my Honourable friend Mr. Manu Subedar and the Eastern Economist (both very able exponents of their points of view) have asked for, I only request the Select Committee to be very careful, because it is easy to go on asking for more and more and getting them out of this Government as it is in a mood to yield to these rich people. But who is going to fill the gap? This Budget is bad enough. The financial proposals that have been placed before us are very discouraging: they are one-sided. One interest, a very small and tiny interest, if it is looked at from a human point of view, has been given all the advantages. The great masses of our people have been given nothing at all. My friend Mr. Gadgil tells me that there are only 7 lakhs of these people.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras ceded Districts and Chittoor: Non-Muhammadan Rural): 7.73,192, to be exact.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Therefore I would like them to bear in mind the need of all these masses of people for relief from tax burdens. How can this relief be given unless these rich people are prepared to bear the tax burden. Their shoulders are broader and stronger and they ought to be prepared to bear these burdens.

Then, my Honourable friend gave a bouquet to himself and to his class by saying that the Finance Member had recognised the fact that private enterprise, which is very enterprising, will be able to build more of these houses and so on. But what is its record? Why should the Honourable the Finance Member come forward offering a 25 per cent subsidy to the building trade, if these capitalists are so enterprising. It only sows that this capitalistic enterprise cannot be carried on in this country unless this 25 per cent. subsidy is given. That is what it means.

Then there is the question of charitable funds. Wherever from do these gentlemen get all these funds, I want to know. The time has come when the Finance Member or someone else on that side should take the earliest opportunity to introduce legislation in order to control the collection and utilisation of these charitable funds. I know that every one of our beoparis—I do not wish to use any other name—collect these charity funds from our peasants whenever we sell anything. Even when we purchase anything we have got to pay: these gentlemen accumulate all these funds and afterwards call them Birla funds or Bajaj funds or Ispahani funds and all these great gentlemen with their names placarded start these great charitable funds, get all the kudos and they make our biggest and noblest people go to them in order to get some of these funds, and afterwards they prepare their way to heaven. That is the game these gentlemen have been playing point so, if you cannot touch these funds through income-tax and place them at the disposal of the general taxpayer and help them by development and social services, at least introduce some legislation as soon as you can.

On one other point I agree with my Honourable friend, Mr. Manu Subedar—I have already agreed with him in regard to earned incomes—and that is in regard to research. I want that our industrialists should spend as much money on industrial research as possible, and in this direction I do not want the tax-gatherer to trouble them very much. But at the same time I do not want them to become monopolists of the results of these researches. The state must keep an eye on this and they must have some control also. The state should also try to develop with the help of industrial research or whatever they have, and to plan out these various researches. When these gentlemen set apart a portion of their funds for industrial research, let them submit their schemes of various kinds and let the Government have a look at those schemes, and then relate them, one with the other, and say that such and such things are really necessary, and give them an opportunity to embark on these researches; but the results of these researches should not be made a monopoly. To the greatest extent possible, first preference should be given to that particular industrial concern which makes some discovery or whatever it is out of its industrial researches, but the public also must be given an advantage of it. I hope the Select Committee will keep in mind not only expansive ideas of the needs of the vested interests that my Honourable friend has, so rightly, placed from his own point of view, but also these and very many other persons that they ought to think of when they have to keep in mind the interests of the masses.

Sri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar (Madras: Indian Commerce): Mr. President, the two Members who spoke just now have demonstrated the necessity for a consolidating and amending Act on this question of income-tax. The present Bill is a very modest measure; it deals only with three small points; whereas questions of somewhat far-reaching importance have been raised, and they have to be dealt with by another Bill, if the Honourable Finance Member is going to bring one before his term is up. Anyway the Income-tax Act is a very old Act—it is an Act of 1922, and it requires to be gone into very completely again and re-enacted with such changes, either in terms of what Mr. Manu Subedar wants or in terms of what Mr. Ranga wants, as a separate measure.

I do not want to go into those questions. I will confine myself to the Bill before us. There are only three points referred to in the Bill. They are reliefs which have to be given and which are overdue to the industrialists for things for which they are entitled. One is the question of scientific research, about which I do not think there will be any difference of opinion. But the provision that is made in the Bill before us is defective in one way. At the present moment the industries which can individually take up research are very few. When a whole business is concerned, there are several industries, several companies, which can combine together and undertake research. For instance, the textile concerns all over the country have got their associations in different places. I consider that except in the case of very big capitalists and very big companies, the natural course of advancement will be for these associations of the same industry to undertake research for the benefit of all. For instance the millowners in different parts of the country may not take up industrial research separately. In that case each mill will have to make a contribution to the association. I fear that contribution is not covered by the provisions of this Bill. It no doubt says 'institution'—I do not know if the Honourable Finance Member means to bring such associations under the term 'institution'. Anyway it is absolutely necessary that it ought to be made clear that if research is undertaken by any association of the same business, then any contribution made to such association should also get the benefit. That is one point which I should like the Select Committee to bear in mind when they consider the Bill.

The second point to which I should like to make reference is the concession which is given with reference to buildings put up already, or to be put up hereafter and the plants installed or to be installed hereafter. The market prices have been very high during the last two or three years. The prices are going down. Take for instance building materials; during the last two or three years, the prices were very high. Now, already within the last few months there is a downward trend in the prices. What the Honourable Finance Member proposes is to give relief to such industries as will instal machinery or as will put up buildings hereafter. He wants to put that in class one. In class two he wants to place those cases in which buildings have been erected and machinery has been installed from the 1st of April, 1945. It is before this period that prices were high. Such of those industries as had to put up buildings or instal machinery before that time had to pay very heavily for those things. They had to put up those things and instal machinery, in most cases, on account of pressure that was there for producing more. The pressure was exercised both by the circumstances of the time as well as the pressure put on them by the Government for more production for war materials and thinks like that. Under these circumstances they have put up buildings and installed machinery at very great cost. So, I would very strongly urge that the period that ought to be taken into consideration in giving this concession should be ante-dated by at least three years: we ought to say, that all machinery erected and all buildings put up from the 1st April, 1942, should have this concession extended to them. That is only fair. As I said, if anything, the prices are going down. The relief that is wanted is more for those who have already put up these buildings and installed their machinery, rather than those who are going to do it hereafter.

I would also join Mr. Manu Subedar in saying that there is a risk. When industrialists undertake to put up new machinery and new buildings hereafter and if they are not able to complete before the end of March 1948, they should not be penalised. If they take more time, they ought also to get the concession. Otherwise there will be a lot of discontent. Machinery is very difficult to get and it is not known when we are going to get them. I know of a case in which orders were placed in 1940 and 1942 and the machinery has not yet come and where inquiries are made the manufacturers are not able to say when they will be able to send the machinery. (An Honourable Member: "You will have to wait till doomsday.") Hereafter if you give new orders no manufacturer is prepared to guarantee the delivery of the machinery within any particular time, apart from the cost involved. So far as the cost is concerned, the orders we have given just now come to something like $3\frac{1}{2}$ times the prices which they quoted before the war. Even after paying $3\frac{1}{2}$ times the pre-war price, we are not in a position to say whether we will get the machinery in time or at any particular time. Such being the case the restriction with regard to the time for putting up the buildings or installing the machinery should not be there. If anything is started within a particular time or if an order is given within a particular time, the concession should be given in such cases also.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: You get the allowance on machinery at any time, whenever it is delivered.

Sri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar: Not the higher amount you are proposing now?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Yes. Read the Bill.

Sri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar: That is a point which the Select Committee should look into. Now, that the Bill is going to a Select Committee I will ask the Select Committee to pay special attention to these two points I have mentioned and give relief.

Sir Cowasjee Jehangir (Nominated Non-Official): I am sure we are greatly relieved to hear the Finance Member describe this Bill as a Bill of concessions. It is to a great extent a Bill of concessions and concessions which were justly due but there is a clause in the Bill which has given rise to considerable apprehension and I only hope that this apprehension is wrong but I would like to draw the attention of the House to what the apprehension is. My friend Mr. Manu Subedar alluded to it. It is with regard to the clauses of obsolescence and it is clause 3 (a) (ii). The interpretation of the amendment is a question which the Select Committee will have to study with great care. The following words have been added to the old section: "such building", and the words "discarded or demolished or destroyed". Now, the insertion of the word 'destroyed' makes a very big change in the Act. So far as we understand the interpretation of this section it is as follows: If 15 or 20 years ago machinery cost 30 lakhs and it is today written down to 10 lakhs of rupees and if you have insured it for 25 lakhs and if the machinery is destroyed by fire, then according to my interpretation of this clause Government will allow 10 lakhs to go to capital and 15 lakhs will be taken to profits on which they will charge income-tax and Corporation-tax.

Sir John Sheehy (Government of India: Nominated Official): That is correct.

Sir Cowasjee Jehangir: Now that is my interpretation of this clause. I find that the British Act was amended in 1944 somewhat in a similar manner and concessions were given in that Act—very much the same as given to us today but so far as my reading of the 1944 British Act is concerned, the principle you are now trying to adopt was adopted only for assets acquired after the amendment of that Act. It applies to new machinery and new buildings and this principle did not apply to any of the old buildings or old machinery which had been brought into existence, say 15 years ago. As I understand the English Act, I see the logic of it and I would be prepared to concede the principle adopted in England in 1944, but I see great danger in adopting the principle suggested in this Bill if my interpretation is correct. I stand open to correction when depreciation was allowed and Government did not charge income-tax and Corporation-tax on those amounts from year to year till we come down to 1946 when the depreciated machinery was down in the company's books at 10 lakhs. I can understand when Government turn round and say that since they allowed a concession for a number of years and allowed the company to depreciate their machinery and if on account of fire the insurance company pays the full amount of the insured money, Government is entitled to its share of the income-tax and super-tax which it has let off for so many years. I admit that principle but the concession that was given was during a course of a number of years at a much lower rate of income-tax and super-tax. Income-tax and super-tax have gone on rising during these years and if the fire takes place, in 1947, Government will charge income-tax and super-tax at the highest rate possible. I think I have made the point perfectly clear.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: After all you have to pay tax on the income you got?

Sir Cowasjee Jehangir: Sometimes my friend's logic is rather complicated but if he would make himself more clear or tell me what his point is we can discuss it.

Now, with regard to the individual who has a building which has been depreciated from year to year, he gets off his income-tax and super-tax on small amounts. If it is burnt down and he gets his insurance money say, 15 lakhs of rupees, the Income-Tax Department will charge him 60 pies income-tax and the highest slab of super-tax, while the concession that he has received is at a very low rate of income-tax and slab of super-tax. I think that Government will secure a great deal by this amendment with regard to individuals. Government will practically take a large percentage of the moneys received from the Insurance Companies with regard to individuals. I think that point should be seriously considered by the Select Committee and I would urge that if the amended British Act is what I believe it to be, that principle should be adopted. It appears to me to be quite equitable.

These are the only remarks I have to make with regard to the Bill and that this clause of the Bill requires the serious consideration of the Select Committee. I will again thank the Honourable Member for having described this Bill as a Bill of concessions and I trust, when he looks into it in the Select Committee with his other colleagues, he will really make it a Bill of concessions.

Mr. T. Chapman-Mortimer (Nominated Non-Official): Mr. President, this Bill contains so much which is beneficial to industrial concerns that naturally, as a spokesman of such concerns, I appreciate all that has been given to us. I, therefore, endorse to a very large extent what my Honourable friend Mr. Manu Subedar said in regard to the beneficial nature of this Bill. At the same time, there are one or two questions to which I should like to draw attention at this stage, because they will undoubtedly cause a lot of talk in the Select Committee. But before I deal with these, there is one minor point of drafting to which I should like to draw the attention of the Honourable Sir John Sheehy; that is, at the end of clause 3. In the Statement of Objects and Reasons there is a reference to clause 3(b). I confess I searched for about 20 minutes before I was satisfied in my own mind as to what that reference was; but I came to the conclusion in the end, possibly rightly, possibly wrongly, that it referred to what is marked (c) at the very end of clause 3. If I am not correct, I should like the Honourable Sir John Sheehy, in replying to this debate, to tell us whether sub-clause (b) is really sub-clause (c).

Sir John Sheehy: It is sub-clause (c).

Mr. T. Chapman-Mortimer: That is the first minor point. As I am dealing with this particular clause, the second point that arises out of this is the precise interpretation of the words "Provided that in the case of a building previously the property of the assessee, etc." I do not suggest that the Honourable Member should reply to that now, but I would ask him to give it his very serious attention because the wording is not very clear; and in view of the importance of the sub-section, it is desirable that we should be quite clear in our minds as legislators what it means.

Then, with regard to the main clauses of the Bill themselves. I will deal first with clause 5. It is a small clause, but to poor people and to those who are less well-to-do it is very important. It is a clause which will relieve what has been an undoubted hardship to widows and children and we whole-heartedly support it.

Then, Sir, in clause 2 we have the first of a series of very important concessions to industrial concerns. I refer to the sub-clause which says: "and where the buildings have been newly erected, or the machinery or plant being new has been installed, after the 31st day of March, 1945". Now, Sir, I do not want to take the time of the House by going into that but I hope that either in his reply to this debate or at a later stage Sir John Sheehy will be able to explain in very clear terms precisely what is involved by that date. It has, for example, raised a doubt in my mind regarding the position of machinery which begin to be installed before the 31st day of March, 1945, but was completed perhaps six months later, and, similarly, at the other end, installed before the 1st day of April, 1946, and completed during the period 31st March, 1948. It is perhaps a small point, but it is important to all those who have got to administer the act, and in that matter naturally they will have to work very closely with his officers; otherwise in regard to the earlier part of sub-clause (a) of clause 3 we in this Group whole-heartedly support the Government and we welcome these proposals. As the Honourable the Finance Member has pointed out, these are additional and special terms and special conditions in relation to new plant and machinery in regard to depreciation. In that connection, again, I raise another important query. And that is the position of colliery plant and machinery, which is now subject to certain special depreciation rates; I should like to hear from the Government whether the depreciation rates now given, which are special, will be in addition to the new additional rates now proposed.

Then, Sir, I leave for the moment sub-clause (ii), which seeks to insert a new clause (vii), and pass on to the proposed concessions to scientific research. Every one in the country, who has at heart the welfare of industrial progress in this country, will whole-heartedly welcome these proposals of the Government. They are sound. They were introduced a year ago but for reasons over which we, in this Group, have had no control they were dropped. We regretted that at the time and we, therefore, take this opportunity of thanking the Honourable the Finance Member for making the concession, if I understood him correctly, retrospective to last year.

Then, lastly, I refer to the new proposed clause (vii), which will come in as a paragraph of section 10 of the Act. That new clause to sub-section (ii) of section 10 deals with obsolescence and has been dealt with already by several Honourable Members. I do not propose at this stage to go into details but should just like to raise again one or two queries. It has aroused doubt in some minds and hostility in others. As regards the doubts, I personally agree that we shall have to give it very careful consideration in the Select Committee, because we must bear in mind that so long as Government adheres to the policy of seeking to put an income-tax amendment through the Finance Bills, which can sometimes be better dealt with through other legislation, there will be hard cases. I hope the Honourable Member will be prepared to consider sympathetically hard cases if these are brought to light, and one of our task in the Select Committee will have to be to consider how these can be provided for. But in saying that I should like to make it also very clear that we, in this Group, fully appreciate why it is that the Government have brought in the fourth proviso, which is mentioned here. Knowing as I do some of the things which went on in Bengal in 1943, my only comment would be that I am surprised that Government have not brought in some similar proposal a long time ago. There have been concrete cases of people who have deliberately over-insured their property in order to get the full amount of concession which they would get by so doing, from the income-tax authorities. Having got all those benefits when prices were rising, apart from the result of their activities, they now seek that on the downward move of prices, they will get similar benefits, and therefore, I sympathise fully with the Government's reasons for bringing in proposals of this kind, though I earnestly hope that they will give very serious consideration to my earlier remarks regarding the hardship cases which will undoubtedly arise. With these observations, I support the reference to the Select Committee.

Mr. Vadilal Lalubhai (Ahmedabad Millowners' Association: Indian Commerce): I will not go into controversy here today, but I feel, the Income-tax Bill as proposed is not perfect as all Income-tax Bills are. They sometimes try to remove a lacuna here and there, they sometimes try to remove injustices here and there and sometimes the result is that they perpetrate some more injustices and they create some more lacunae. I would refer to the building activities. The Honourable the Finance Member has given some concessions, but the time limit allowed is so short, especially the starting of building activities is laid down as from 1st April. In these days when materials are not available, how is it possible to start buildings so quick. Plans have to be prepared, they have to be sent to the municipal corporations, contractors have to be contacted and it takes at least a few months to place orders. If the real benefit of this clause is to be given, the time limit, I feel, has to be raised. Regarding clause 8(ii)—Amendment of section 10 of the Income-Tax Act—although this provision, “provided that such amount is actually written off in the books of the assessee” has been in the Bill for the past so many years, yet, I feel that this provision ought to go because it is an injustice to those concerns which have been discarded or demolished and destroyed, and they are asked to write off immediately. The loss may be very heavy, actually the profits may be reasonable, and if they write off these losses immediately in that very year, then the balance sheet would show a loss and in that case, although they have made reasonable profit, that concern will not be able to declare a dividend. The concern may suffer. In the case of industries it is not compulsory to write off the depreciation allowances that have been allowed. It is customary to allow them to accumulate and the Income-Tax office and the assessee get together and consider and account for the depreciation allowance, and that depreciation allowance is not to be written off, but is being allowed. The same procedure, I feel ought to be laid down in this case also. I hope the Honourable the Finance Member would consider this point and the difficulties that he puts in the way of those concerns by laying down strictly that the amount must be actually written off and therefore this may be removed.

Regarding research allowances, I should congratulate the Honourable the Finance Member in bringing it up in this Session. Last year the same provisions were being brought, but his predecessor in a huff threw them away because the Finance Bill was thrown out and due to various other reasons. Without research no industry can prosper, no country can progress, and this research allowance ought to have been allowed for the last so many years, as was done in the case of U. K. and U. S. A., and also Germany. But this Government brought it very late and then too when they brought forward these provisions, they withdrew them. At that time a commission on scientific research was established under the Chairmanship of Sir Shanmukham Chetty, and that Commission went round the country, saw industries and industrial Associations and discussed with them and persuaded them to set apart certain funds for research. Many Associations agreed, some did lay out certain amounts, and when the Bill was brought in last year, some Associations actually collected and set apart those amounts, but to their surprise this Bill was withdrawn in the last Assembly. In U. K. the allowances have been made since 1942-43, and due to the persuasion of this Commission, the Government having agreed to do this, and having brought forward a Bill, I feel it would be quite proper that wherever such amounts have been set apart in any part of the country, those amounts should be allowed to be included in the relief so that scientific research may start at once.

As I said before, I find that in the whole Act certain lacunae and certain injustices are there and it is quite necessary, I feel that a committee of this kind should be appointed to go through the whole Act and put it in proper perspective compared to the various Income-tax Acts in other parts of the world. The provision about the difference between written down value, the depreciation, and the charging of higher amounts obtained from insurance has been brought about. The reason behind that is quite correct, but I fear some injustice may be perpetrated as my Honourable friend Sir Cowasjee Jehangir stated. The position would be this. If an industrial concern has written down a certain amount and that has been allowed by the Income-tax authorities, and when the prices of these machineries have gone up and he has to replace these machineries at a much higher price, then it would be unfair that the difference between written down value and the original cost is being charged by the income-tax authorities. I will just explain how this would happen. The correct way would be that if one is to pay very high price for replacement value, what should be done is that he should be allowed to reduce the cost from that high cost to the amount of difference between the written down value and the original cost, that is if an establishment has cost one crore and the difference between the written down value and the original cost is 25 lakhs, it should be taken for income-tax purposes that the value of his asset is not one crore, but the depreciation may start from 75 lakhs. In that way real justice would be done, otherwise there would be lot of complications and injustice to the industries concerned.

My Honourable friend Sir Cowasjee Jehangir referred to the present high rate of income-tax and the past low rates of income-tax and super-tax when depreciation allowances were given, and the position was that the Government allowed a certain amount as depreciation at the then rate of income-tax. Government cannot take back from the assessee any extra amount than they have actually allowed. If the provision as worded is kept as it is, Government have given three annas or two annas in the rupee, and they will be taking back not those two or three annas that Government have suffered in revenue but six annas in the case of companies and 12 or 14 annas in the case of individuals who own industries. That will be very unfair and unjust and actually some money will be taken away from the industrialists and from industries instead of giving them a fair deal. I hope this will be considered by the Finance Member and in the Select Committee we may be able to give a fair deal to both the Treasury and the industry.

Various allowances have been allowed from March, 1945. In other countries like the U. K. they have been allowed from April 1944, as I understand it, and as Government were thinking of allowing these allowances last year, so in this case retrospective effect should be given. The other point is about section 28-A. Although it is in the Finance Bill, I feel that the exemption of section 28-A which is sought to be allowed is not clear there and it ought to be rather in the Income-tax Amendment Bill when this may be brought about every year wherever exemptions are sought to be given rather than put and discussed in the Finance Bill. I feel that the proper sphere for such exemption is the Income-tax Act and not the Finance Bill.

There are various circulars being issued by the authorities here to the Income-tax Departments in the provinces whereby wherever there are any injustices found they are sought to be removed. The time has come when whatever is done by circular should be done by an amending Bill; and that is why I put forward the proposal to review afresh the sections of the Income-tax Bill. As regards exemption under section 28-A the rates to be charged for super-tax is 30 per cent of the profits or 5 per cent of the capital whichever is higher, but in case of private companies, in case of trading companies, in case of managing agency companies, this would create great hardship. Industries would certainly benefit if they accumulated reserves and they are not frittered away by giving dividends. That would be certainly good for industries but it would not apply to managing agency companies, because they are for managing the industrial concerns, and if they have to keep reserves I do not know what they are going to do with those reserves and the shareholders of those companies which are managing agency companies would suffer. The proviso about this is in the Finance Bill and I need not dilate upon it today because it is out of the sphere of the Income-tax Act Amendment Bill as it is today. But I wish the Finance Member keeps this point in view.

In conclusion I should like to bring in one more point, that income-tax and customs revenues or excise which fall upon the whole country are increased to a certain extent by the nefarious activities of the tax-evaders, and the Finance Member has not yet been able to find out ways and means to stop this tax-evasion. These tax-evaders are specially to be found in speculation businesses and if they are not caught and tax-evasion is not set right the effect would be that the honest tax-payer would have to pay higher sums because whatever is evaded goes out of the revenue and this revenue suffers and it has to be made up from honest traders and honest people who want to pay their income-tax dues honestly. That would be one of the most important things that the Finance Department ought to tackle. Sir, I have done.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Sir, I do not think there is much to reply to as most of the points are really Select Committee points. I was really helped by the unusual unanimity shown by the Congress Party Benches today; they seemed to speak with one voice, which is not very usual; and you will understand how difficult it is for a Finance Member, when he is trying to please everybody, to please one single body. However, we will do our best in Committee. I can assure my Honourable friends that the many questions of hardships they raised will be certainly sympathetically considered. I foresee some difficulty in going some of the way with Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai without doing irreparable damage to the revenue; but, as I said, most of the points raised were Select Committee points and the House will have an opportunity of considering them when we submit our report.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Mr. K. C. Neogy, Mr. Manu Subedar, Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai, Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, Mr. B. P. Jhunjhunwala, Seth Yusuf Abdooli Haroon, Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi, Syed Ghulam Bhik Nairang, Mr. T. Chapman-Mortimer, Sir John Sheehy, and Mr. C. W. Ayers, with instructions to report by Wednesday, the 27th March, 1946, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Tuesday, the 19th March, 1946.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: In view of the unsettled condition of the world, will Government collect the information asked for in part (d)?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: No, Sir.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Why do you not want to collect this information.

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: How can you find out the number of European licence-holders. That will mean an all-India inquiry. Licences change. A man sells his radio. A man hires it from somebody else.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Are we to understand that Government are absolutely indifferent as to the nationality of the licence-holder and also to the probable politics of that gentleman in case there is a war?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: The Government are entirely indifferent because anybody can buy a radio or hire a radio.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is it not a fact that the licences of a large number of Congress men were withdrawn in 1942?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: I have no knowledge of it, but I will find out.

Seth Govind Das: With reference to clause (d) of the question, the Honourable Member just mentioned a certain percentage of the English news and the broadcast in English, which is, I think, more than 20 per cent. Will the Honourable Member be pleased to state when the percentage of Englishmen in this country is so low, why such a large percentage of English broadcasting is allowed?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: My Honourable friend must be aware that quite a number of Indians do listen to broadcasts in the English language and quite a number also speak on the radio in English.

Seth Govind Das: Does the Honourable Member know that this percentage of Indian people who listen to English news and English broadcast is only because they are not getting enough Hindustani broadcast and other messages in Hindustani?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: That is a matter of opinion.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: With reference to part (c) of the question, may I know with what results?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: The result is stated in the Budget allotment.

REPRESENTATIONS AGAINST INCIDENCE AND OPERATION OF EXCISE DUTY ON TOBACCO.

1031. *Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (on behalf of Mr. Manu Subedar):

(a) Has the Honourable the Finance Member received representations complaining against the incidence and the operation of the excise duty on tobacco?

(b) What is the principal complaint in connection with this levy?

(c) What is the yield of this duty since it was levied, for the period for which the figures are available?

(d) On what class did Government expect this duty to fall, and has it really fallen on that class?

(e) Is it not a fact that the producer of tobacco is penalised, contrary to Government's expectations and assurances?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: (a) Yes.

(b) Complaints have been various as was inevitable in the early stages of a new and extensive measure of this kind, and no particular complaint has predominated.

(c) The yield is as follows:

1943-44—Rs. 9.65 lakhs.

1944-45—Rs. 17.28 lakhs.

1945-46—Rs. 17.35 lakhs.

(April-January)

(d) It is rarely possible to determine in advance the exact incidence of a particular tax. By and large, it was expected that this tax would fall on the consumer and this was borne out by the rise in price of the article after the imposition of the duty.

(e) No, Sir.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is it not a fact that Government have been apprised of the fact that with regard to part (d) of this question the tobacco growers are also being penalised?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: No, Sir, but every tax-payer claims that he cannot bear the tax.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: We have not been able to follow you at all. This is the easiest way of answering a question.

REPRESENTATIONS AGAINST INCIDENCE AND OPERATION OF EXCISE DUTY ON ARECA NUTS

1032. *Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (on behalf of Mr. Manu Subedar):

(a) Has the Honourable the Finance Member received representations complaining against the incidence and the operation of the excise duty on areca nuts?

(b) What is the principal complaint in connection with this levy?

(c) What is the yield of this duty since it was levied, for the period for which the figures are available?

(d) On what class did Government expect this duty to fall, and has it really fallen on that class?

(e) Is it not a fact that the producer of areca nuts is penalised, contrary to Government's expectations and assurances?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: (a) Yes, Sir.

(b) The chief complaint has been that the burden of the duty has fallen principally on the producer.

(c) The revenue so far realised from this excise is as follows:

1944-45—Rs. 1.32 lakhs.

1945-46—Rs. 1.51 lakhs.

(April-January).

(d) and (e). It is rarely possible to determine in advance the exact incidence of a particular tax. By and large, it was expected that the tax would fall on the consumer. But, owing to the poor bargaining position of the grower vis-a-vis the wholesaler and the expectations of large imports of foreign nuts, the probabilities that it would fall on the consumer have not been realised.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is it not also a fact that due to the carelessness or callousness of the Central Board of Revenue raw areca nut is being made to pay as per weight?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: No, Sir.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Has it been brought to the notice of the Honourable Member?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Allegations to that effect have been brought to the notice and the Department have satisfied themselves that the complaint was unfounded.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will the Honourable Member order an impartial inquiry into this matter?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: I do not know what he means by an impartial inquiry. I have never known my officers to carry out these inquiries improperly.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is it not a fact that a suit was filed by the growers themselves and the judgment was given against the Government?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: If the judgment has been delivered as stated, that is the end of it.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: The suit was on the specific issue that, contrary to the Act, duty was being collected on raw areca nuts instead of collecting it on cured areca nuts?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: I think there is a technical difficulty about the cured areca nuts.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: What steps are taken by Government to get over this technical difficulty and what answer is being given to the growers?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: As my Honourable friend knows, the Department is always willing to discuss, with the growers or with their very vocal representatives, any legitimate complaints that they may have.

Shri D. P. Karmarkar: In view of the fair admission by the Honourable the Finance Member in his Budget speech that the incidence of tax has fallen on the growers, may I know whether the Honourable Member is prepared to give some relief to the growers pending the setting up of a proper marketing arrangement to protect them?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: That is one of the matters I am chewing over.

Sri A. Karunakara Menon: In view of the fact that the Honourable Member has admitted in his Budget speech that the grower is unable to pass on the excise duty to consumers and also seeing that he is already paying a land tax, will the Honourable Member consider the advisability of abolishing the excise duty on betel nuts altogether?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: I have just answered that.

WORKING HOURS OF GENERAL HEADQUARTERS

1033. *Sri N. Narayanamurthy: Will the War Secretary be pleased to state:

(a) whether Government are aware of the inconvenience caused to the General Headquarters staff and their families as a result of the working hours of the General Headquarters being longer than those of the other Departments of the Government of India;

(b) whether the recent announcement fixing the working hours of all Civil Departments of the Secretariat from 10 A.M. to 5 P.M. will apply to the General Headquarters as well; and

(c) if the answer to (b) is in the negative, do Government propose to bring the General Headquarters also in line with the other Civil Departments of the Secretariat in the matter of working hours?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) Yes, Sir, Government are conscious of the inconvenience these longer hours of work and no closed holidays or free Saturday afternoons have caused to persons employed in Defence Headquarters. In fact I am very conscious of that myself. At the end of hostilities there was a reduction of work in some branches of the Headquarters but not by any means in all, and in fact in some Directorates work has increased. It was thought therefore preferable in the interest of the tax payer, to reduce personnel where possible and to keep the war-time office hours, except for the introduction of a free Saturday afternoon. These amount to slightly less than 40 hours a week.

(b) and (c). Although the work is still very heavy and there is much to be done, it has now been decided that with effect from 1st March closed holidays will be observed, and with effect from 1st April office hours will be those observed by other Departments. In fact, however, if the work is to be finished, few officers will be able to work to these hours and many clerks will also have to work outside office hours.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: In reply to part (a) of the question the Honourable Member has said that persons employed in Defence Headquarters have longer hours of work than those of other Departments. May I know how many hours on an average per day they work at present?

Mr. P. Mason: At present it works out on an average to slightly less than 40 hours, and from the 1st of April it will be slightly less than 35 hours.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: When does he propose extending this order to that Department also?

Mr. P. Mason: I have explained that we are coming into line with other Departments with effect from the 1st of April 1946.

SUSPICION AGAINST MR. D. W. FRASER DISCHARGED FROM ARMY

†1034. *Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: (a) Will the War Secretary please state whether the Government of India have ever entertained any suspicions against Mr. D. W. Fraser who was discharged from the Army (or his parents), that they had at any time been engaged in any activities whatsoever which they considered might be prejudicial to the safety or security of the State?

(b) If so, did these suspicions originate in India, or were they communicated to him through His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom?

(c) Has the Central Government ever entertained any suspicions of any kind against Mr. D. W. Fraser?

Mr. P. Mason: With your permission Sir, I will answer questions 1034 to 1038 together.

The man referred to in these questions was an Emergency Commissioned Officer of the rank of Lieutenant in the Scinde Horse. There has never been any suspicion of any kind against him nor was he ever subjected to surveillance while a serving soldier in the field. He first began to show signs of abnormality in March 1941, and became more and more mentally unstable, until he had to be placed on the sick list in P.A.I. Command in July 1943. His disease was diagnosed as Schizophrenia Paranoia by the Medical Board which examined him on the 23rd of that month. He was accordingly graded in medical category 'E' and returned to India where he arrived in the beginning of October that year. He was again medically boarded in Karachi on the 27th of that month. His medical category 'E' was confirmed but the diagnosis on this occasion was Obsessional Neurosis. The case was then reviewed by the Standing Medical Board at Poona who again confirmed the medical category as 'E' but changed the diagnosis to Schizophrenia Paranoia. I need only explain that Obsessional Neurosis may be said to be a mild form of Schizophrenia Paranoia, which is a disease of the mind that we laymen should call a persecution complex. As he had three times been graded in medical category 'E' he was not considered fit for military service. He was therefore relieved of military duties and asked to relinquish his Commission.

In questions 1034, 1035, 1036, and 1037 (a) to (d), the Honourable Member has asked me 26 separate questions, to every one of which the answer is either "No" or "Does not arise". With regard to 1037 (e) the answer is "Yes", he was discharged as suffering from a form of insanity. (f) Not exactly at variance; the difference is a matter of degree (g) There is no reason to suppose there was a mistake.

1038 (a) to (e). I do not think there would be any point in entering into discussion regarding the regulations with an officer suffering from this form of obsession.

(f) I venture to suggest, Sir, that this is a question which might well have been raised in the first place by a private letter to me; and I would have explained the position privately to the Honourable Member had I received the facts earlier.

SUSPICION AGAINST MR. D. W. FRASER DISCHARGED FROM ARMY.

†1035. *Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: (a) Will the War Secretary please state whether the Central Government ever made any request or issued any directive to the Provincial Government to take any action due to their suspicions?

†Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner being absent.

‡For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 1034.

- (b) Did the Provincial Government accede to their request and take action?
- (c) Did the action take the form of police surveillance?
- (d) If so, are the police continuing to watch and report his movements or take any other measures to harass and annoy Mr. D. W. Fraser?
- (e) Have the military authorities ever entertained any suspicions of any kind against Mr. D. W. Fraser during his service in the Army?
- (f) If so, what were the suspicions?
- (g) Was he treated as a 'suspect'?
- (h) Were military officers ever used in the guise of agents provocateurs in their dealings with Mr. D. W. Fraser?
- (i) Was he ever placed under special surveillance with his correspondence, conversation and all his movements subjected to that system of observation and report which is usually considered as being the monopoly of the German 'gestapo'?

INTERROGATION OF MR. D. W. FRASER BY ADMINISTERING SPECIAL DRUG.

- †1036. *Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: (a) Will the War Secretary please state if Government are aware that Mr. D. W. Fraser was sent to hospital at Baghdad in order that the authorities might have an opportunity of either confirming or disproving their suspicions?
- (b) Is it a fact that he was given a drug, known as the 'truth' drug, perhaps Penathol Z, for purposes of interrogation?
- (c) How many times was Mr. D. W. Fraser given this special drug and interrogated in this way?
- (d) Is it a fact that this drug has the effect of overpowering all resistance of the will and compelling a person to speak?
- (e) Was the interrogation of Mr. D. W. Fraser carried out in such a manner as to classify it as 'third degree'?
- (f) Was Mr. D. W. Fraser ever asked to confess whilst he was in hospital?
- (g) Is it a fact that Mr. D. W. Fraser was hypnotized or kept under hypnotic influence during his detention in hospital?
- (h) If so, what was the object?
- (i) How many times was he subjected to hypnosis?
- (j) Will the Honourable Member please state the method of inducing Hypnosis that was employed?

INTERROGATION OF MR. D. W. FRASER BY ADMINISTERING SPECIAL DRUG

- †1037. *Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: (a) Will the War Secretary please state whether any information was extracted from Mr. D. W. Fraser whilst he was in the hypnotic state?
- (b) Was Mr. D. W. Fraser ever psycho-analysed in hospital?
- (c) If so, will the Honourable Member please state the psycho-analytical method employed?
- (d) Did the authorities make a calculated use of terror in an attempt to break his spirit whilst in hospital?
- (e) Is it a fact that he was discharged from the military hospital, Poona, as suffering from the Army as suffering from a form of insanity?
- (f) Is there any variance with a diagnosis by a previous Medical Board?

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 1034.

(g) Does the Honourable Member think it possible that the Standing Medical Board at Poona might also have made a mistake?

TREATMENT GIVEN TO MR. D. W. FRASER IN HOSPITAL.

†1038. *Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: (a) Will the War Secretary please state whether he proposes to make available a detailed report of the treatment given to Mr. D. W. Fraser during the six months that he was detained in hospital including all the factors which led the Army Medical authorities to diagnose the case as one of 'Schizophrenia Paranoia'?

(b) Was there any collusion or connivance on the part of the military medical authorities in deliberately arriving at a diagnosis which they must have known was false?

(c) Is it a fact that Mr. D. W. Fraser soon after his return to Karachi from Poona, called at the office of the Assistant Director of Medical Services to inquire what the Regulations under which he was discharged might mean and that the then Assistant Director of Medical Services refused to give him any information?

(d) Is the Honourable Member aware that Mr. D. W. Fraser still does not know what is meant by those Regulations?

(e) Does he propose to ask the Director of Medical Services in India to furnish Mr. D. W. Fraser with a copy of the extracts from Regulations M. S. A. (i) 442 and Appendix 13?

(f) What further action, if any, has been taken or is contemplated with reference to Mr. D. W. Fraser since his invalidment from the Army by either the Civil, Military or Medical authorities?

EXPENDITURE ON PUBLICITY AND BROADCASTING

1039. *Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Will the Honourable Member for Information and Arts please state:

(a) the expenditure in various constituents of the Information and Arts Department in matters of publicity and broadcasting, etc., as between the English Section and Indian Languages Section, separately (i) in 1939 (ii) in 1942, and (iii) at present;

(b) the strength of the staff both officers and clerical as between the English Section and Indian Languages Section, separately (i) in 1939 (ii) in 1942, and (iii) at present;

(c) the expenditure allocated for (i) Research and Reference Division, (ii) the Field Publicity Organization, and (iii) Publications Division;

(d) the nature of the work that the Field Publicity Organization is doing; and

(e) if it is a fact that the Field Publicity Organization is carrying on anti-Indian propaganda?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: (a) I lay a statement on the table.

(b) It is not possible to divide the staff according to Indian and English Languages as most of it works jointly for both the languages.

(c) (i) Rs. 8,58,700; (ii) Rs. 27,11,600; (iii) Rs. 2,97,200.

This is the probable expenditure during 1945-46.

(d) and (e). I would refer the Honourable Member to my speech on the cut motion in respect of this grant on March 12th.

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 1034.

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: For some time he was.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: May I know if it is a fact that one or two officers, who are in charge of the Field Publicity Organisation, are now going about from Member to Member of the Legislative Assembly trying to persuade them to restore this grant again?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: I have no information.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will Government take steps to see that these gentlemen are not allowed to carry on this sort of propaganda?

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Not merely propaganda.

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: As servants of Government they have no business to go round making any sort of propaganda of this nature.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will the Honourable Member make enquiries whether they are carrying on such propaganda, or not?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: Certainly.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Does the Honourable Member propose giving effect to the cut motion that has already been passed so far as this Department is concerned?

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Has he already disbanded any portion of his Department?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: No, Sir.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: The Honourable Member said that the person in charge of the National War Front was for some time in charge of the Field Publicity Organization. Was he in charge of the Field Publicity Organisation for some time only, and he is not there now?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: As I said in my speech the National War Front was converted into the Field Publicity Organization and the officer in charge of the National War Front became in charge of the Field Publicity Organization.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: What are the qualifications of that man? May I know if he is a graduate at least, or is he well-versed in Economics or Rural Uplift work? What special qualifications that gentleman has?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: I have to mention his name because, I think, if I do Members opposite will know his qualifications. He is Mr. Rashid Ali Beg. He has good educational qualifications, was sheriff of Bombay and took a notable part in the city's municipal life.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Is it not a fact that he is not even a matriculate?

(No reply was given.)

Mr. President: Next question.

GRANT OF PRIORITIES FOR PASSAGES ABROAD

1041. Mr. Vadilal Lalubhai: Will the Honourable the Home Member please state:

- the present basis of granting priorities for passages abroad;
- whether Government are aware that there is favouritism practised in the granting of these passages;
- if it is a fact that Government grant priority passages without any discrimination between persons who propose to go abroad for a first-hand knowledge of industrial technique and others; and
- whether Government propose to give an assurance that priority will be given for such passages to such industrialists who propose to go abroad for a first-hand knowledge of industrial technique?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: (a) Passage priorities are granted in accordance with the schedule of priorities, a copy of which is placed on the table of the House.

(b) No.

(c) No; persons who wish to travel to the United Kingdom in order to obtain first-hand knowledge of industrial technique are eligible for priority III or priority V-e if so recommended by the Department concerned—either the Industries and Supplies Department or the Commerce Department.

(d) Does not arise.

Families of persons granted Key leave, whether by sea or air are entitled to sea passage on the same priority. Families can sail in advance if desired and if shipping is available.

Note viii.—Sea passages cannot be allotted to women who are more than 5 months pregnant.

Note iv.—Children's attendants must be of Non-Asiatic domicile.

General :—The chain of responsibility in the allotment of sea passage to the United Kingdom is as follows :—

The Civil Passage Controller allots priority. He formulates and presents shipping demands before the Sea Passages Board which is a joint civilian services organisation, and in relation to the shipping availability the basis of allocation is agreed. Detailed allocation to individual ships is finalised by War/Sea Transport and Deputy Civil Passage Controller, Bombay. The latter nominates individual civilian passengers from his waiting lists. Shipping Agents then issue directly or through Travel Agents embarkation orders and allot cabins/berths. Normally 10 days' embarkation notice is given to passengers.

Inquiries regarding the allotment of priority should be addressed to the Civil Passage Controller. All other inquiries should be addressed to Travel Agents, who by close liaison with Deputy Civil Passage Controller in Bombay are aware of your position on the waiting list. As your name progresses towards the head thereof, they can indicate in general terms when your embarkation orders are likely to be issued.

Applications for Air Passage ex-India (other than Key Leave) for business reasons should be made to the Civil Secretary, Air Priorities Board (India), New Delhi, through the Commerce Department or Department of Industries and Supplies. Others may apply direct.

Applications from the families of Service personnel should be made to Naval, Military or Air Force Headquarters.

If you find it necessary to postpone your date of sailing you are requested to inform the Deputy Civil Passage Controller, Bombay as early as possible. Last minute cancellations cause considerable inconvenience to substitutes who must frequently be offered berths at very short notice.

SCHEDULE OF PASSAGE PRIORITIES

Although the schedule of priorities for passage to the United Kingdom as published on 12th February 1945 remains substantially unaltered it has been found necessary in the light of experience to subdivide certain priorities and to add instructions to others.

Key Leave has been included in the schedule as Priority V (b) and the whole has been divided into two main Groups, viz., Group A—those for whom it is expected that accommodation will always be available each month and Group B—those who, until the shipping situation improves, must remain on the waiting list.

The amended schedule is given below :—

GROUP A.

PRIORITY I

Government servants on duty and non-official travelling on Government business or certified by Government to be travelling for a purpose essential to the war effort.

Applications under this category must be supported by a certificate from the Government Department concerned stating the latest months by which the applicant must leave India if the purpose of the journey is to be achieved.

Families cannot travel under this priority unless the head thereof is to be out of India for at least 8 months.

PRIORITY II

Persons on whose behalf it is certified by a Provincial Medical Board that early passage is essential to save life or reason.

PRIORITY III

Persons certified by Government to be travelling in the national interest or for furtherance of the war effort or persons travelling to join certified appointments in the United Kingdom.

Applications under this category will state the month in which the applicant must leave India if the purpose of the journey is to be achieved.

Families cannot travel under this priority unless the head thereof is to be out of India for at least 8 months.

Applications must be submitted through the Government Department concerned or the National Service Advisory Committee as the case may be.

PRIORITY IV

Persons on whose behalf it is certified by a Provincial Medical Board that early passage is essential to save permanent impairment of health.

This priority is divided as under :—

- (a) Those certified as most urgent.
- (b) Those certified as very urgent.
- (c) Those certified as normal.

PRIORITY V

(a) Government servants and their families recruited from the United Kingdom on contract guaranteeing repatriation whose contracts have expired or been terminated and who do not qualify for Priority I or III.

(b) Key Leave Officials and Non-officials and their accompanying families.

- (c) Compassionate cases (higher). Unaccompanied Key Leave families.
 (d) Retiring civilians (Official or Non-official) and their families who are recommended by Provincial Governments/National Service Advisory Committees for this priority.
 (e) Persons travelling on urgent business whose application is supported by a Government Department.

GROUP B.

PRIORITY VI

- (a) Children between 12 and 16 with their guardians going to the United Kingdom for education and who normally have secured vacancies in educational institutions.
 (b) Children between 8 and 12 with their guardians going to the United Kingdom for education.
 (c) Adults going to United Kingdom for higher education. Applications must be supported by proof on admission to a University, Technical Institution, etc.
 (d) Children between 6 and 8 with their guardians going to United Kingdom for education.
 (e) Compassionate cases who do not qualify for V (c).
 (See note IV.)

PRIORITY VII

Retiring civilians (Official or Non-Official) and their families who do not qualify for priority V (d).

PRIORITY VIII

Those applicants who do not qualify for a higher priority.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Is it a fact that many technicians have not been given priority passages?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: There are a great number of people of all classes who have not been given priorities high enough to get them away, but if technicians are eligible under either of the priorities I have mentioned they have a very good chance of getting a passage.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: What is the position of the Government scholarship holders who want to go abroad for technical training in the list of priorities?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I believe Sir, subject to correction, that a number of them get priority III, which is a very high priority.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Will the Honourable Member look into the matter if instances are brought to him?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: Certainly.

Mr. President: Next question.

DACOITIES COMMITTED IN AJMER-MERWARA

†1042. *Pandit Mukut Bihari Lal Bhargava: Will the Honourable the Home Member please state:

(a) how many dacoities have been committed in Ajmer-Merwara within the last two years, the names of the villages in which they were committed, and the loss of men and money occasioned in each case;

(b) how many such dacoities have been traced and the culprits brought to book;

(c) the strength of the Dacoity Forces maintained, the work so far done by them, and the amount of money expended on their maintenance;

(d) if any of the dacoities have thus far remained untraced, and the reasons therefore;

(e) pursuant to recent dacoities and on the failure of Government to effect their arrest, how many applications were received for grant of gun licences for self-defence; how many such applications were either refused or granted.

†Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner being absent.

(f) in the cases where the licences were refused, what are the reasons for the same; and

(g) whether Government propose to relax their policy for the issue of gun licences under the present circumstances of dacoities prevailing in Ajmer-Merwara; if not, why not?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: (a) Seven. A statement is laid on the table.

(b) No case has yet resulted in the conviction of the culprits. Five cases are still under investigation. In two of these, arrests have recently been made and arms and some stolen property recovered. It is hoped that they will end in conviction.

(c) No special dacoity forces were employed.

(d) The investigation of two dacoities [Nos. (1) and (2) shown in the statement] have been closed as untraced. In the first of these absconding sansis were strongly suspected but when arrested they were not identified by the complainant. In the second case a number of absconders some of whom have since been killed in encounters with the police, were strongly suspected to have been responsible. Investigation will be resumed should any of the suspected absconders be arrested.

(e) Six. Licences were granted to five applicants.

(f) Because the applicant did not satisfy the licensing authority that his possession of arms would further the purpose for which he made his application.

(g) The policy in this respect is already liberal and licences are freely granted to respectable and resourceful persons in villages, who can be trusted to use their arms in protection of their own and their neighbours' houses.

(b) Is it a fact that in connection with the disturbances of August, 1942, the Commander, Mhow Area, by his order No. 3189-S., dated the 7th September 1943, expelled Mr. Sri Ram Agar from, and has forbidden his entry into, Mhow?

(c) Is it a fact that this expulsion order has not so far been cancelled?

(d) In view of the altered political situation in the country, do Government now propose to take steps to cancel this order against Mr. Sri Ram Agar's entry into Mhow?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) Yes Sir; but he himself holds no immoveable property in Mhow Cantonment.

(b) Yes, Sir.

(c) and (d). The order has now been cancelled.

TEST FOR MINISTERIAL STAFF IN INCOME-TAX OFFICES IN SIND

1044. *Seth Sukhdev: (a) Will the Honourable the Finance Member be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the Income Tax Commissioner, Bombay, introduced a test for ministerial staff in Income Tax Offices in Sind?

(b) Is it a fact that clerks in the lower grade irrespective of age or service were required to appear for the test?

(c) Is the Honourable Member aware that under the Government of India Home Department Office Order No. 44-2-5-S. T. S.(s), dated the 21st June 1945, clerks below the age of twenty-five only may be required to appear for a test? If so, why were these orders ignored by the Income Tax Commissioner, Bombay?

(d) Is it a fact that papers in the test consisted of (i) English—Essay and Precis-writing, etc., (ii) Arithmetic, and (iii) Office routine procedure?

(e) If the reply to part (d) above be in the affirmative, why were the first two subjects included, since the employees satisfied the minimum educational qualifications?

(f) Do Government propose to afford relief to the affected staff by cancellation of the results of the tests so held? If not, why not?

Mr. B. O. A. Cook: (a) Yes.

(b) No; permanent Lower Division clerks officiating in the Upper Division only were so required. Other permanent clerks desirous of being considered for promotion were also permitted to sit.

(c) No such order would appear to have been issued by the Government of India, Home Department. The latter part of the question does not arise.

(d) Yes.

(e) As indicated in my reply to part (b) of the question, the test was held with a view to selecting clerks suitable for promotion or retention in the higher grade and a test in these subjects will give a good indication as to such suitability.

(f) No. The Honourable Member's attention is invited to my reply to part of his question No. 940, on the 13th March, 1946.

*Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner being absent.

CERTAIN POSTS FILLED BY MUSLIMS THROUGH FEDERAL PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION

†1045. *Nawab Siddique Ali Khan: (a) Will the Honourable the Home Member please state the total number of posts in Class I and II Services of the Government of India and other such posts that have been filled by the Muslims through the Federal Public Service Commission without a written competitive examination during the past one decade, and the qualifications of the persons selected for each such post as compared with those candidates that have not been selected by the Commission?

(b) Will Government kindly lay on the table a full and complete list of all the candidates that applied from time to time for all such posts with the qualifications against each name and a separate list of those selected for each of the vacancy that has been filled?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: (a) and (b). To compile this information would mean an immense amount of labour for the Federal Public Service Commission and I do not think the value of the results would justify my asking the Commission to undertake it.

MUSLIM REPRESENTATION IN CENTRAL GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS

†1046. *Nawab Siddique Ali Khan: (a) Will the Honourable the Finance Member please state the total number of officers in the Finance Department, Civil, Military, Supply, Food, etc., showing, separately, the number of Joint Secretaries, Deputy Secretaries, Under Secretaries, Assistant Secretaries, Superintendents, Financial Advisers, etc., and indicate clearly the number of Muslims in each cadre?

(b) How far and since when Government have been making efforts, if any, to send up the Muslim ratio to the statutory figure as required to be maintained by the Communal Award in the Constitution of India?

(c) What is the ratio of Muslims in the Ministerial Establishment of the Home, External Affairs, Political, Commerce and Finance Departments of the Government of India now, and how far does it fall short of the statutory minimum?

Mr. B. O. A. Cook: (a) A statement giving the required information is placed on the table of the house.

(b) As these posts are filled by promotion, the communal ratio rules do not apply; but I would assure the Honourable Member that every opportunity is taken of according adequate representation to minority communities in these grades.

(c) A statement giving the information as regards the Finance Department is placed on the table of the House. The percentage of Muslims in the Ministerial Establishment in the Finance Department and its Divisions as a whole is 22.83. As regards other Departments of the Government of India the question may be put to the Honourable the Home Member.

(d) The question regarding the Muslim Officers of the Government of India as a whole may kindly be put to the Honourable the Home Member. As regards the Finance Department, every endeavour is being made to make up the small deficiency in the recruitment of the Muslims to the Ministerial Establishment.

SECRET CIRCULAR RE TURNING OUT FROM ARMY POLITICALLY-MINDED INDIANS

†1047. *Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava: (a) Will the War Secretary kindly state if it is a fact that Doctor Major General O. Buen of the Indian Army or any other Army Officer has issued a secret circular with the object of turning out from the Army politically-minded or patriotic Indians or shadowing them while in the Army?

(b) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the front page of Taj, dated the 2nd March, 1946, where such a piece of news has appeared?

(c) Will Government kindly lay the circular, if any, on the table of the House?

(d) Are Government aware that the Army Officers consider political-mindedness or patriotism in an Indian to be a crime?

(e) Have any persons serving in the Army been penalised or turned out for being patriotic or for entertaining particular views on politics?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) The letter to which the Honourable Member presumably refers is a confidential document, the object of which is to exclude from the fighting services those subversive elements of the population which exist in every country. I do not agree, Sir, with the implication that the words "Subversive" and "patriotic" are synonymous.

(b) Yes, Sir.

(c) No, Sir. It does not appear to be necessary.

(d) No, Sir. The view of the Army to-day is that: "Every Indian worth the name is a nationalist". On the other hand service personnel are not permitted to take an active part in politics, nor to attempt to seduce their comrades from their duty. An extract from the Regulations on the subject is placed on the table.

(e) No, Sir.

No person subject to military law or any member of the nursing or women's service may, while serving in India or with the Armed Forces of the Crown in the field, issue an address to electors or in other manner publicly announce himself/herself or allow himself/herself to be publicly announced as a candidate or as a prospective candidate for election to any legislature, legislative assembly, municipality or other public body.

1048. *Choudhury Md. Abid Hussain: (a) Is the Honourable Member for Information and Arts aware of a letter under the heading "censorship" published on page 4 in the Dawn, dated the 28th February 1946?

(b) Is it a fact that only Congress Members of the Central Assembly, as alleged in the letter, were photographed and flashed on Cinema screens? If so, why?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: (a) Yes.

(b) No.

MUSLIM REPRESENTATION IN ACCOUNTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE, BIHAR

1049. *Choudhury Md. Abid Hussain: (a) Will the Honourable the Finance Member please state the ratio fixed for Muslims in the Office of the Accountant General, Bihar?

(b) Why was this ratio not revised after the separation of Orissa, when there was a consequential increase in the percentage of Muslim population in Bihar?

Mr. B. C. A. Cook: (a) The ratio fixed for Muslims in the Office of the Accountant General, Bihar is 10 per cent.

(b) After the separation of Orissa, the percentage of the Muslim population to the total population in Bihar increased from 11.3 to 12.9 only. As the increase was small, it was not considered necessary to make any change in the existing ratio.

REPEAL OF ARMS ACT

+1050. *Mr. Debendra Lal Khan: Will the Honourable the Home Member be pleased to state:

(a) Whether Government are aware of a long-standing demand by the public for the repeal of the Arms Act;

(b) the attitude of Government to such demand; and

(c) what steps Government propose to take for according increased facilities for the use of firearms by the adult population of the country?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: (a) The matter has from time to time been brought up in the Legislature but I am not aware that there is any great public interest in it.

(b) Government are not prepared to remove from the Statute Book all provisions for the regulation of arms and ammunition.

Mr. Sir.

+Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner being absent.

INDIANIZATION OF ARMY, NAVY AND AIR FORCES

1051. *Mr. Madan Dhari Singh: (a) What steps has the War Secretary taken to Indianise the Army, Navy and Air Forces?

(b) Do Government propose to give a time-limit by which the Army, Navy and Air Forces will be fully Indianised?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) I invite attention of the Honourable Member to press communiqué on the subject issued on the 22nd October 1945 a copy of which is laid on the table.

(b) The R.I.A.F. is a purely Indian Service. As regards the R.I.N. and the Indian Army, it is impossible at this stage to quote any definite date. The progress of nationalisation will depend on the number of young Indian cadets coming forward and the views of the Government of the future.

PUBLIC RELATIONS DIRECTORATE, GENERAL HEADQUARTERS, INDIA,
New Delhi, October 22, 1945.

PRESS COMMUNIQUE

New Delhi, Oct. 22—The Government of India have had under consideration for some time the policy to be followed in the future officering of the Royal Indian Navy, the Indian Army and the Royal Indian Air Force, and in agreement with His Majesty's Government have made the following decisions.

The grant of permanent commissions in the Royal Indian Navy and the Indian Army will, in future, be restricted to Indians and to other persons domiciled in India who are subjects of His Majesty's or of a Prince or Chief in India.

The recruitment of officers to the Royal Indian Air Force is already subject to this restriction. As a temporary expedient, however, and in order to meet immediate needs, it has been decided to offer 40 regular commissions to European officers of the R. I. N. Reserves. This will enable the R. I. N. to obtain officers of intermediate seniority with war experience a category to fill which, a sufficient number of Indian officers is not at present available.

It will be generally recognised that the three Indian Services will still require a quota of British officers until such time as there is an adequate supply of qualified Indian officers completely to fill all grades in the officer cadre. It has been decided therefore that British officers for service in the three Indian Services shall hereafter be obtained by secondment or attachment from the Royal Navy, the British Army and the Royal Air Force respectively for so long as may be found necessary.

The quota of seconded or attached British officers of the three Indian services will be systematically and progressively reduced as Indian officers become available.

Certain matters arising out of these decisions such as the duration of periods of secondment or attachment of British officers from British Services, and the terms and conditions under which such officers will serve are being examined by the Government of India in conjunction with His Majesty's Government.

These decisions do not affect the position of regular British Officers already holding permanent commissions in the Royal Indian Navy and the Indian Army.

AERODROMES CONSTRUCTED DURING THE WAR

1052. *Mr. Madan Dhari Singh: Will the War Secretary be pleased to state—

(a) the number of aerodromes constructed during the war; and

(b) the number of aerodromes to be maintained, and also their locations?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) 240.

(b) The number of airfields to be maintained post-war and their location has not yet been definitely decided.

RETIRING PENSION OF MEMBERS OF I. M. D. GRANTED EMERGENCY COMMISSIONS

1053. *Mr. Madan Dhari Singh: (a) Will the War Secretary please state the provision regarding retiring pension of those members of the I. M. D., who were granted emergency commission in the I. A. M. C.?

(b) What is the basis of computation of their retiring pension?

(c) Will it be the same as for Allied Branches of fighting services where people were commissioned from the ranks or like I. A. M. C. of the different section, viz., Ambulance Section, Nursing and Clerical Section?

(d) If the answer to (c) is in the negative, what are the grounds for the differential treatment?

(e) Is it a fact that I. M. D. of the Indian Cadre and I. M. D. of the British Cadre were amalgamated on the basis of the same pay, allowances, etc., and both the cadres were named as combined cadres (Special Medical Section)?

(f) Is there any difference of pay between the Indian Cadre and the British Cadre of the combined cadre holding the same length of services? If so, what are the grounds for the differential treatment?

(g) Is it a fact that this old I. M. D. (Special Medical Section) is going to be abolished in the Post-war Reorganisation Scheme of the Army Medical Department?

(h) What will be the pension rate of the Indian and Anglo-Indian Members of the same length of service?

Mr. P. Mason: (a), (b) and (c). The question of retiring pensions for members of the I.M.D. granted emergency commissions in the I.A.M.C. is being examined in detail, and until this matter is decided, it will not be possible to provide the information which the Honourable Member requires. It is hoped that a decision in the matter will be reached shortly.

(d) Does not arise.

(e) Yes, Sir.

(f) There is some difference between the pay of the two cadres at corresponding years of service which has arisen through the amalgamation of two different cadres with different terms of service and different qualifications before amalgamation.

(g) The future of the Army Medical Services is not yet decided.

(h) The matter is being considered as I have stated above. I may however add that Indian members may elect to draw pension under the British Cadre rules.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: In regard to part (c) how long will Government take to decide this question?

Mr. P. Mason: I am afraid I cannot see into the future.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Are Government considering this matter?

Mr. P. Mason: Yes, Sir.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: For how long have they been considering this?

Mr. P. Mason: Since the end of hostilities.

Sgt. N. V. Gadgil: Will it go on till the beginning of another war?

Mr. President: Next question.

PACT BETWEEN SIR REGINALD MAXWELL AND MR. P. C. JOSHI FOR ANTI-CONGRESS PROPAGANDA

1054. *Srijut Seth Damodar Swroop: (a) Will the Honourable the Home Member please state if it is a fact that some understanding was arrived at or some written or unwritten pact was made between the Ex-Home Member Sir Reginald Maxwell and Mr. P. C. Joshi to carry on anti-Congress propaganda for the sake of helping the war efforts?

(b) Is it also a fact that large sums of money were placed at the disposal of the Communist Party for this purpose? If so, what amount was so placed, and in what manner was it spent?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: (a) and (b). No.

Mr. M. R. Masani: Has the attention of the Honourable Member been drawn to a statement by S. S. Batliwalla given to the National Herald of February 22nd referring to the correspondence between Mr. P. C. Joshi and Sir Reginald Maxwell in their capacities respectively of General Secretary of the Communist Party and the Home Member of the Government of India, in the course of which Mr. Joshi offered to put at the disposal of the Government of India the services of his party for the war and showing that the various drives undertaken by the party were part of the understanding embodied in the correspondence?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I have glanced through the article.

Mr. M. R. Masani: Will the Honourable Member say whether the allegations made by Mr. Batliwalla are true and to what extent?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: Most of them are incorrect.

Mr. M. R. Masani: In that event will the Honourable Member publish the correspondence between Mr. P. C. Joshi and Sir Reginald Maxwell?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I cannot undertake to do that without the consent of the writers of the letters.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Which portions of the allegations were correct?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I do not remember the details of the articles.

Mr. M. R. Masani: Will the Honourable Member say whether it is correct as alleged by Mr. Batliwalla, that Mr. Joshi also maintained confidential contact with the Intelligence Department of the General Headquarters of the Army in India?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I cannot answer that. I am not responsible for the Intelligence Department of General Headquarters.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Who is responsible?

Mr. President: Order, order. Mr. Masani.

Mr. M. R. Masani: Is it correct as alleged by Mr. Batliwalla that part of this contact was devoted to the apprehension, with the support of Communist Party members, of people working underground in the 1942 movement and the agents of the Azad Hind Government in India?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I believe that is quite incorrect.

APPOINTMENT OF PRINCIPAL INFORMATION OFFICER

1055. *Choudhury Md. Abid Hussain: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Information and Arts please state the qualifications of the newly appointed Principal Information Officer for this post?

(b) Why was not the appointment made through the agency of the Federal Public Service Commission?

(c) Why has no Muslim been so far appointed substantively to this post?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: (a) Experience of over 30 years in journalism with news agencies and news papers.

(b) This post is exempt from the purview of the Federal Public Service Commission.

(c) This post is exempt from the scope of the orders regarding communal representation and appointments are made solely on the basis of personal suitability.

COMPOSITION OF THE PAY CODE COMMITTEE

1056. *Squadron Leader Sardar Surjit Singh Majithia: (a) Will the War Secretary kindly state the composition of the Pay Code Committee now sitting in India?

- (b) When was it formed?
 (c) How many times has it met since its formation?
 (d) What is the number of Indians on that Committee?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) The Post-War Pay Committee is composed of representatives of those Branches of Naval Headquarters, General Headquarters and Air Headquarters which deal with pay, allowances and pension problems and of the Military Finance Department, meeting under the Chairmanship of an officer of the War Department. The representatives of Naval Headquarters and Air Headquarters are part-time members only; the Chairman and the representatives of General Headquarters and Military Finance Department are full-time members.

(b) The constitution of the Committee was sanctioned with effect from the 26th January, 1946, but the first full meeting was held on the 5th February, 1946.

(c) The full-time members of the Committee meet every day and are joined by the representatives of Naval Headquarters and Air Headquarters as business requires.

(d) One of the three full-time members is an Indian. I must however explain that the work of the Committee is extremely complicated and highly technical and therefore purely official.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: What about the other sections of the Committee? How many of them are Indian?

Mr. P. Mason: I do not think either of them are. I am not quite sure.

Squadron Leader Sardar Surjit Singh Majithia: Could I get some information whether this Committee is considering the pay code of the Indian personnel also?

Mr. P. Mason: Yes, Sir. Of course it is.

Squadron Leader Sardar Surjit Singh Majithia: What have they done about it?

Mr. P. Mason: They are making enquiries and will eventually submit a report, which will be considered by the Government of India.

Squadron Leader Sardar Surjit Singh Majithia: When do the Government of India expect the report?

Mr. P. Mason: I think they will probably report sometime during this summer.

SPECIAL INDIAN AND COLONIAL ALLOWANCES TO BRITISHERS

1057. *Squadron Leader Sardar Surjit Singh Majithia: Will the War Secretary be pleased to state whether it is a fact that British officers serving in India get a special Indian Allowance in addition to the Colonial Allowance?

Mr. P. Mason: No, Sir. The existing rates of pay of British officers (both British and Indian Services) were fixed in 1925 on the basis of the U.K. rates of pay of rank, ration allowance, fuel and light allowance which were converted at the concessional rate of exchange of 1s. 4d. to the rupee. To these were added a servant allowance at Rs. 30 p. m. and an 'Indian Allowance' at varying rates according to rank. The object of the Indian allowance was to bring the pay calculated as above to a certain level considered sufficient for the maintenance of the British officer in India.

These rates are now admissible to I.C.O.s (See AII 282/45).

In addition to the rates referred to above Indian Service officers receive an 'Indian Army Allowance' which may be deemed to be an overseas allowance. The equivalent of the Indian Army allowance is paid to I.C.O.s when they are serving in India under the name of 'Expatriation Allowance' (See AII 282 of 1945).

The only British officers who received Colonial Allowance while in India are those temporarily detained. In this case they continue to draw their U.K. rates of pay which, of course, contain no Indian Allowance.

PARITY IN PAY OF BRITISH AND INDIAN OFFICERS IN INDIAN ARMY

1058. *Squadron Leader Sardar Surjit Singh Majithia: Will the War Secretary kindly state the difference in technical rates of pay between British and Indian Officers of the Indian Electrical and Mechanical Engineering Branch of the Indian Army?

Mr. P. Mason: I place on the table of the House a statement giving the required information. It will be observed that there is no difference in the rates of technical (corps) pay between the British officers commissioned in or posted to the I.E.M.E. after the 1st December 1942 and Indian officers after the 19th April 1943:

FAMILY ALLOWANCE TO INDIAN OTHER RANKS OF R. I. A. F.

1059. *Squadron Leader Sardar Surjit Singh Majithia: Will the War Secretary please state whether Indian other Ranks of the R. I. A. F. get any family allowance? If not, why not?

Mr. P. Mason: No, Sir. This question is being investigated by the special committee now considering the post-war pay code for India.

DISMISSALS OF V. C. O.'s ON ACTIVE SERVICE

1060. *Babu Ram Narayan Singh: (a) Will the War Secretary please refer to the words "Punishments may be inflicted in respect of offences committed by persons subject to this Act and convicted by Court Martial according to the scale following" occurring in Section 48 of the Indian Army Act and state whether he is aware of cases in which—

(i) punishments specified in the scale in (a) have been inflicted in the absence of a conviction by Court Martial,

(ii) punishments prescribed in the scale in (a) have been exceeded, not only by a sentence of Court Martial, but also by an order of an authority other than Court Martial,

(iii) punishments more than one specified in the scale in (a) have been inflicted by an order of a non-judicial body, and

(iv) appeals against the infliction of punishment in excess of the scale in (a) by an authority other than Court Martial have either been withheld or the punishment upheld as valid?

(b) If the reply to (a) be in the negative, will he please take the case of the Viceroy's Commissioned Officers mentioned in the India Army Order No. 816 of the 26th October, 1920, as instances and see that the decisions under which punishments were inflicted in 1920 and which are still in force are revised?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) I am not aware of any such cases.

(b) The V. C. O.'s mentioned in India Army Order No. 816 of 26th October, 1920, were dismissed from the service by order of the Commander-in-Chief under section 18 of the Indian Army Act and the connection between these cases and those referred to in (a) is not apparent to me.

Babu Ram Narayan Singh: Will the Honourable Member please state how convictions are awarded to Indian personnel in the army?

Mr. P. Mason: I am sorry I cannot follow the question.

Babu Ram Narayan Singh: There are certain acts according to which punishments are inflicted but in practice is it not a fact that punishments are inflicted on V. C. Os. and Indian soldiers even without the sanction of a court martial?

Mr. P. Mason: I am afraid I am unable to follow the question.

Mr. President: I think the Honourable Member's question is whether it is competent for any authority to award punishments without a court martial.

Mr. P. Mason: Yes, Sir. The Commander-in-Chief can under Sec. 18 of the Indian Army Act.

Babu Ram Narayan Singh: Is it not a fact that the Commander-in-Chief inflicts only minor punishments and not major punishments?

Mr. P. Mason: No, Sir. He can dismiss.

Babu Ram Narayan Singh: Can the Commander-in-Chief inflict major punishments?

Mr. P. Mason: He has powers of dismissal.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: In view of the fact that the Commander-in-Chief cannot be expected to know personally every one of these officers and other ranks, with whose help does he come to these judgments whether a particular officer or a member of other ranks should be punished and, if so, to what extent?

Mr. P. Mason: As in all other matters he listens to his advisers and then he forms an independent judgment.

Babu Ram Narayan Singh: Can the court martial give a man punishment of imprisonment as well as forfeiture of pay and allowances?

Mr. P. Mason: I had better have notice of that question. It is rather a technical point.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: May I know whether the Honourable Member will take into consideration if particular instances are brought to his notice?

Mr. P. Mason: Certainly, Sir.

DISCRIMINATION IN DIFFERENT CATEGORIES OF SOLDIERS AFFECTING THEIR PENSIONS

1061. *Babu Ram Narayan Singh: (a) Has the attention of the War Secretary been drawn to the fact that the maximum term for which an Indian soldier gets enrolled in the Army is fifteen years, while it is only twelve years in the case of a soldier of regular Forces, and both these aforesaid soldiers are re-engaged on the expiration of the aforesaid original terms of engagement, and while serving on re-engagement terms, if they are dismissed by Court Martial or otherwise, the former forfeits his pension earned in respect of the full term of his previous engagement of fifteen years, whereas the latter's previous term of engagement is not at all affected for the purpose of his pension?

(b) What are the reasons for the discrimination referred to in (a) with reference to his reply to starred question No. 641 of the 21st November, 1944?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) The Honourable Member presumably means 'British soldiers' when he refers to the 'Regular Forces'. British soldiers are enlisted for a period of 12 years with the prospect of re-engagement. Indian soldiers are normally enrolled for 15 years also with the prospect of re-engagement.

British soldiers discharged with ignominy forfeit all past service qualifying for pension or gratuity under the provisions of the Royal Warrant for Pay, 1940, Article 1104(d) read with Article 1105. The Army Council may relax these rules in deserving cases.

Indian soldiers dismissed from the service similarly forfeit all past service qualifying for pension or gratuity under Pension Regulations, Part II, Rule 195. The Government of India may relax this rule in deserving cases.

(b) There is, therefore, no discriminatory treatment between British and Indian soldiers in this respect.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is it a fact that in regard to this question of relaxation of punishments the British personnel in the army are more frequently shown this concession than is done in the case of Indians.

Mr. P. Mason: I should require notice of that question for an answer.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Since the Honourable Member has been given notice of that now, will he kindly look into it and place the answer later on the table?

Mr. P. Mason: If the question is put down I shall answer on the floor of the House, or lay the information on the table of the House. Or if the Honourable Member would rather have a reply privately, I shall be glad to give it to him without a question.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: I do not want private information.

STOPPAGES AND FORFEITURES OF PAY OF INDIAN OFFICERS AND SOLDIERS

1062. *Babu Ram Narayan Singh: (a) Will the War Secretary please refer to the Preamble to Pension Regulations for the Army in India, Part II, 1923, 1928 and 1940 Editions and state if, in embodying rules in these regulations relating to the stoppages of pay, non-effective pay and all other emoluments payable to an Indian officer or soldier, reference has been had to the Royal Commands:

(i) "We deem it expedient that like provisions shall extend to our Indian Empire wherein the provisions of the above Warrant as regards the full pay and allowances and other pecuniary benefits are not in force"; and

(ii) "We do hereby command that the pay, non-effective pay and all other emoluments payable under the Army Regulations, India, to an officer, soldier or other person shall be held liable to be stopped upon the general or special orders of the Governor-General of India in Council to meet any public claim that may be against him, any regimental debt that may be due from him or any regimental claim, which the Governor-General of India in Council may direct him to pay"?

(b) If the reply to (a) be in the affirmative, will he please state the reasons for stoppages and forfeitures as per Government's view expressed in reply to starred question No. 781 of the 6th March, 1945, which was placed on the table of the House on the 7th March, 1945?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) The terms of the Royal Warrant have been borne in mind in framing the Regulations.

(b) The reply to starred question No. 781 explained that ~~the~~ be withheld at the Royal pleasure. The Royal Warrant printed as ~~part of~~ the preamble to Pension Regulations for the Army in India, Part II, 1940, empowers the Governor General of India in Council to make certain stoppages in certain circumstances. But it in no way debars the Crown from making or authorising stoppages in other circumstances if the Crown sees fit.

HALAL MEAT FOR MUSLIMS IN R. I. N.

†1063. *Mr. Ali Asghar Khan: Will the War Secretary please state what arrangements exist in the Royal Indian Navy to ensure that Muslim Officers and other Ranks are provided with halal meat and are not served with non-halal meat?

Mr. P. Mason: Ratings.—All meat supplied for Ratings is Halal.

Officers can (i) Obtain Halal Meat on payment from Service sources, or (ii) purchase their requirements privately in the Market.

No case has been reported of any Muslim officer requiring Halal Meat and not being able to obtain it.

Mr. P. Mason: A statement is laid on the table, but it does not give the number of Muslims in each category of officer as this information is not available and I do not propose to collect it. The declared object of Government is, and has always been, to develop the R.I.A.F. as an Indian Service, recruited on an all-India basis and to eliminate as far as possible all communal differentiation within it as far as this can be done without offending the religious susceptibilities of any class. Statistics are not, therefore, maintained on a communal basis.

Mr. P. Mason: Yes, Sir: but we are in advance of the others.

Mr. President: Order, order. Next question.

MUSLIMS IN R. I. A. F.

1069. *Syed Ghulam Bhik Nairang: Will the War Secretary please state:

(iv) the G. H. Q. India in vacancies filled by the Air Force Officers; and

(b) the total strength as above in the manning, personnel and resettlement sections, respectively, of the above formations?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) and (b). A statement is laid on the table.

The number of Muslims in each category is not available and I do not propose to collect such information. The declared object of Government is, and has always been, to develop the R. I. A. F. as an Indian Service, recruited on an all-India basis and to eliminate as far as possible all communal differentiation within it. Statistics, therefore, are not maintained on a communal basis.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: May I know the reasons why the Honourable Member does not propose to collect the information? Will it involve time or trouble or money?

Mr. P. Mason: No. I explained—because we feel that the wider the basis and the less the differentiation that is accorded within the service, the better.

MUSLIMS IN R. I. A. F.

1070. *Syed Ghulam Bhik Nairang: Will the War Secretary please state the total number at present of Indian other ranks as on the 1st March, 1946, stating, separately, in each case the total number of Muslims, tradewise, in each trade of the Royal Indian Air Force, giving also the totals for all trades combined?

Mr. P. Mason: The total number of Indian other ranks in the Royal Indian Air Force on 15th February, 1946, was 22,832. The figures for the 1st of March are not yet available.

The number of Muslims, in each trade, is not readily available nor do I propose to collect this information. The declared object of Government is, and has always been, to develop the R.I.A.F. as an Indian Service, recruited on an All-India basis. But I have said all this before.

Jhatka MEAT SERVED IN INDIAN AIR FORCE OTHER RANKS' MESSES

1071. *Syed Ghulam Bhik Nairang: Will the War Secretary be pleased to state:

- (a) whether it is a fact that Indian Air Force other Ranks' messing is joint;
(b) what arrangements have been made to ensure that Muslims airmen are not given Jhatka;

(c) whether it is a fact that complaints recently arose at the Royal Air Force Station, Drigh Road, that Muslim I. O. R. were being served with Jhatka;

(d) whether it is a fact that the same complaint has arisen at a large number of other Air Force stations; and

(e) what steps are being taken to prevent a recurrence of the complaint?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) Yes, Sir.

(b) All meat for R. I. A. F. airmen is drawn from the R. I. A. S. C. who supply only halal meat to the R. I. A. F.

(c) No, Sir, and I deprecate a suggestion which might tend to rouse communal feeling in the forces.

(d) No, Sir.

(e) Does not arise.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Is it not a fact that the R. I. A. S. C. contractors supply both halal and jhatka meat in the same mess.

Mr. P. Mason: My information is that they do not, in the R. I. A. F.

MUSLIM REPRESENTATION IN CENTRAL EXCISE SERVICE UNDER CALCUTTA COLLECTORATE.

1073. Maulana Zafar Ali Khan: (a) Will the Honourable the Finance Member be pleased to state if he has seen the article headed "Jobbery, Nepotism and Co." which appeared in the Morning News, Calcutta, dated the 19th January, 1946, and the article headed "Persecution of Muslims" which appeared in the same paper, dated the 20th January, 1946?

(b) With reference to the points stressed in the first article referred to in (a) will the Honourable Member be pleased to state:

(i) the total number of Superintendents serving under the Calcutta Collectorate, and how many of them are Muslims;

(ii) the total number of Deputy Superintendents in the said Collectorate, and how many of them are Muslims

(iii) the total number of Inspectors in the said Collectorate, and how many of them are Muslims,

(iv) whether it is a fact that Muslim officers appointed during the period 1939 to 1943 have received no promotion while caste Hindu officers were promoted within six months or one year after their appointment,

(v) whether Government propose to institute an enquiry into the allegations contained in the said articles and to give Morning News an opportunity to substantiate the allegations by proving specific cases, and

(vi) what steps Government propose to take to ensure fair and adequate representation for Muslims in the various grades of the Central Excise service under the Calcutta Collectorate?

Mr. B. O. A. Cook: (a) Yes, Sir.

(b) (i) There are 41 Superintendents in the Calcutta Collectorate out of whom 8 are Muslims; but the Superintendents in the Calcutta, Allahabad and Delhi Collectorates form a single cadre and the true position is that out of 100 posts in the combined cadre 30 posts are held by Muslims.

(ii) and (iii). The required information has been called for and will be laid on the table of the House as soon as it is received.

(iv) It is not true that Muslim officers appointed in the Calcutta Collectorate during the period 1939-43 have not been promoted. On the contrary, no less than 18 officers appointed within this period have been promoted at least once and three of them have received two promotions.

(v) If any specific instance of discrimination against Muslims is brought to the notice of Government, they will certainly enquire into the matter.

(vi) I assure the Honourable Member that all possible steps accordant with the policy laid down in the 1934 Resolution are, and will be taken to ensure fair and adequate representation for Muslims in the Central Excise establishment, both in this and other Collectorates.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: On a point of order, Sir. The question has been addressed to the Honourable Finance Member and I find that though the Honourable Finance Member is present in the House, the question is being replied by the Secretary.

Mr. President: What is the point of order? He is the Secretary and therefore he should not reply?

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: When the Finance Member is present in the House and the question is addressed to him, I would like to have your ruling as to whether a reply by his Secretary is permissible.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member knows that so far as Bills are concerned the Member-in-Charge, so far as Government Members are concerned, means any member who is authorised. Similarly here too, the Finance Member would mean the Finance Member himself or any other person authorised by him to reply on his behalf.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: May I submit that the Honourable Finance Member is a Member of this House and while he is present in the House it has been the practice that the Member-in-Charge of the question always replies?

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Will it not act as a precedent to his other colleagues and they may import their secretaries into this House to reply?

Mr. President: I do not think it is a bad precedent. If anything, it is a good precedent—it would mean that more Government men are trained for the purposes of the business of this House; and it will be necessary to train them, if the business is to be attended to with efficiency. It is not possible for one man to carry all burdens; and just as in the recent discussion on the Budget and cut motions, though the Finance Member was present and moved the demands, the necessary explanations were given by the Members of the Departments concerned, similarly here also I see no objection.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Why not have all the secretaries on the Treasury Benches?

Mr. President: If they so choose, they can do so.

Shri D. P. Karmarkar: With the greatest respect to the observations you have made, may I suggest that Honourable Members in charge of the portfolios might, as a matter of courtesy to the House, answer these questions? It is not a question of a rule. If they are absent, then of course any one else on their behalf might reply; but when they are present I think they ought to reply, if only as a matter of courtesy, to questions that are addressed to them?

Mr. President: With due respect, I would differ from the Honourable Member. I do not think any considerations of courtesy really arise in a case like this. All that the Members want is information and the particular Member of the Government who has studied that particular subject and is competent to reply will be the best person to reply. That will be more courteous rather than that a person who has not studied the matter should get up and reply.

MUSLIM REPRESENTATION IN CENTRAL EXCISE DEPARTMENT

1074. Maulana Zafar Ali Khan: Will the Honourable the Finance Member be pleased to state:

(a) the total number of Collectors in the Central Excise Department and how many of them are Muslims;

BLACK FLAG DEMONSTRATIONS AT LUCKNOW BROADCASTING HOUSE

1075. *Maharajkumar Dr. Sir Vijaya Ananda: (a) Is the Honourable Member for Information and Arts aware of the black flag demonstrations made at the Lucknow Station of the All-India Radio?

(b) How many such demonstrations have so far taken place?

(c) What steps, if any, have been taken by him to meet the demands of the demonstrators?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: (a) Yes.

(b) Two.

(c) I understand that these demonstrations were against Hindi poets who had come to All-India Radio Lucknow to take part in the Kavi Sammelan broadcast by All-India Radio.

HINDI ITEMS BROADCAST BY ALL-INDIA RADIO

1076. *Maharajkumar Dr. Sir Vijaya Ananda: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Information and Arts please state who guides the policy of Hindi items broadcast by the All-India Radio under its Hindustani programmes at the Headquarters?

(b) What is his (i) designation, (ii) present salary, (iii) knowledge of the Hindi language and its literature, and (iv) standing in the Hindi literary world?

(c) In case there is no experienced Hindi scholar at the Headquarters of the All-India Radio, why is it so, and how is the work of guiding policy of Hindi items carried on? Who does this work in the absence of a Hindi scholar?

(d) How is this work to be carried on in the future?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: (a) and (b). The general policy of programmes broadcast by All-India Radio is guided by Director General, All-India Radio, assisted by other officers at Headquarters and subject to instructions issued by the Government of India from time to time.

As questions of general policy do not normally require an intimate knowledge of the various languages in which programmes are broadcast or of their literatures, appointments at headquarters are not made on a linguistic basis. The details of the programmes are entrusted to the Station Directors and to the programme staff at the stations.

(c) Does not arise.

(d) It is proposed to appoint a Standing Advisory Committee consisting of representatives of the Anjuman-e-Taraqqi-e-Urdu, the All-India Hindi Sahitya Sammelan and the Hindustani Prachar Sabha to advise Director General, All-India Radio on linguistic questions.

MOLESTATION OF GIRLS AT LUCKNOW BROADCASTING HOUSE

1077. *Maharajkumar Dr. Sir Vijaya Ananda: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Information and Arts please state if Government are aware of the incident which happened at the Lucknow Station of the All-India Radio in which it is said, as has appeared in the press, that some girls were molested by some intoxicated All-India Radio official and that these girls abandoned the programme and thereupon the gap had to be filled by the recorded music?

(b) Who was this official, and what action has been taken against him? Is he still working on the same post at the Lucknow Station?

(c) What steps, if any, have been taken by the authorities to check such recurrences in the future?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: (a) The Press Report referred to by the Honourable Member is incorrect. A full investigation has been held and it has been established that no official of All-India Radio was intoxicated and no girls were molested. The facts are that a woman artist, left her infant sister unattended at the studios. She was reprimanded by the Programme Executive. This was resented by the lady in question. The Station Director received an anonymous telephone call that the Programme Executive was drunk and the artist also complained to the Station Director. The former was not drunk and all that happened was that there was an unpleasant exchange of words between him and the artist.

(b) and (c). Do not arise.

NUMBER OF INDIAN SOLDIERS AND OFFICERS BEFORE AND AFTER WAR

1078. *Babu Ram Narayan Singh: Will the War Secretary please state:

(a) the number of Indian soldiers and officers in the Indian Army before the War which has just ended;

(b) the number of Indian soldiers and officers recruited during the last war,

(c) the number of Indian soldiers and officers who are to be demobilized; and

(d) the number of Indian soldiers and officers to be retained as the Standing Indian Army?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) The number of Indian Officers and soldiers (including non-combatants enrolled) in the Indian Army on the 1st October, 1939 was respectively 592 and 154,060.

(b) The number of Indian Officers and soldiers (including non-combatants enrolled) recruited during the period 3rd September, 1939 to 31st August, 1945, was 15,460 and 2,499,909 respectively.

(c) and (d). The total number of Indian officers and soldiers who are to be demobilized will depend on the size of the post-war Indian Army, which is still under consideration. As I have said before however it is anticipated that by the 1st of April next year, approximately 32,000 British Officers, 7,000 Indian Officers, 180,000 B. O. Rs., and 1,540,000 V. C. Os., I. O. Rs. and Enrolled Non-Combatants will have been demobilised.

Sardar Mangal Singh: What was the reply to part (d)?

Mr. P. Mason: I have replied to parts (c) and (d) together.

Babu Ram Narayan Singh: As regards part (c), the Honourable Member says the matter is under consideration, and under part (d), he gives certain numbers. May I take it that the number of those who are to be retained has been fixed, and the rest will be demobilised?

Mr. P. Mason: No. That would not be a correct assumption, if I understood the Honourable Member correctly. There has been a certain amount of wastage and a certain number of casualties; so that the figure to be retained will be considerably smaller than the difference between the total recruitment and the total demobilised.

Maulana Zafar Ali Khan: What are the conditions attached to the retention of Indian soldiers?

Mr. P. Mason: They continue to serve on the terms on which they were recruited.

Maulana Zafar Ali Khan: Some of them have been retained and others demobilised?

Mr. P. Mason: I have already pointed out that they continue to serve on the terms on which they have been recruited.

Sardar Mangal Singh: May I know if the report of the Indian Army Re-organisation Committee is available?

Mr. P. Mason: It is not available to the public, because it is really a Staff study. As I have already explained, the report was made to the Commander-in-Chief.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is any effort being made to officer the Indian army completely by Indians?

Mr. P. Mason: Does that arise?

Prof. N. G. Ranga: In view of the declared policy of the Government of India, as I understand it from the recent declaration of the Commander-in-Chief to completely Indianise the army, will Government consider the advisability of demobilising only that portion of the Indian officers' ranks who will be found to be surplus after completely Indianising the officer ranks of the Indian army?

Mr. P. Mason: May I draw your attention, Sir, to the rule which says that supplementary questions are intended to elucidate the facts given? I submit that this question goes beyond the terms of the original question.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: My questions arise out of the main question. May I seek your protection?

Mr. President: It is not a question of protection. The question appears to me to be this: "Whether in demobilising, they (Government) will proceed in such a manner that the British ranks will be demobilised before Indians are demobilised."

Mr. P. Mason: The demobilisation of the British army and the demobilisation of the Indian army proceed entirely separately. Both proceed on the same grounds, according to the age and service groups.

Seth Govind Das: In the interests of the country, will it not be proper that British officers should be demobilised?

Mr. President: That is a matter of opinion.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is this demobilisation, so far as the Indian officers are concerned, to be carried on even irrespective of the need for Indian officers of the Indian army, so that the Indian army may be completely officers by Indian officers?

Mr. P. Mason: I respectfully submit that the rule lays down that supplementary questions shall relate to the elucidation of the facts given and this question asks me a number of facts about Indian soldiers and their number. Another Honourable Member did put down questions for question which deal with this subject, but he does not present to put them. These questions seem to me to go beyond the terms of the original question. I respectfully submit that these do not arise out of the original question.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: My point is this. If they are thinking of officering the Indian army with Indian officers, then the demobilisation of Indian officers should be very much less. Therefore I want to know whether the Government will demobilise Indian officers only to the extent they are surplus.

Mr. P. Mason: I have no objection to answering these questions but I take my stand on this point of order. I respectfully submit that I have supplied the information asked for regarding the number of Indian soldiers and I cannot see how this question of Prof. Ranga elucidates the figures I have given.

Mr. President: When the Honourable Member gets the numbers he is entitled to know the reasons as to how the numbers are to be arrived at.

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: In that case, the Honourable Member should have asked for the reasons when he put the question.

Mr. President: The question was not clear.

Diwan Ohaman Lall: May I ask my Honourable friend whether it is the policy of Government to discharge Indian officers to such an extent that there will be no Indian officer left to take high command?

Mr. P. Mason: Certainly not, as the Honourable Member is well aware.

Diwan Ohaman Lall: The policy which my Honourable friend is pursuing will lead to that very result.

Mr. P. Mason: Certainly not.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: On what grounds are Indian officers being demobilised?

Mr. P. Mason: Is that in order, Sir?

Mr. President: That question does not arise.

(d) All the Indian soldiers who fought for the Germans have now been discovered and brought back to India except for about 250 who are still untraced; two of these have very recently been found and are now in England. 19,586 of the members of the Indian Army who joined the I. N. A. have been accounted for, of whom 16,839 have been brought to India.

(e) 4,462 of those 16,839 are still held in India; the remainder (12,377) have been released. Of the 2,745 men who have been brought back to India, having fought against their former comrades in Europe, 875 are still held and the remainder (1,870) have been released.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: How soon do the Government propose to release the 875 still in their custody?

Mr. P. Mason: I hope early in May.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: What about the others, about 4 thousand?

Mr. P. Mason: They will be released early in May or in the middle of May.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Are there still Indian officers and soldiers in occupied Europe?

Mr. P. Mason: If the Honourable Member means those who have fought against us and not those who are part of our army, there are 250 who are still untraced. Presumably most of these are dead but some may be still untraced in Europe.

(b) Battle casualty figures of Biharees are not available.

EXAMINATION HELD IN LAHORE FOR LADY HARDINGE MEDICAL COLLEGE STUDENTS

It has been ascertained from the authorities of the Punjab University that the examination of the students of the Lady Hardinge Medical College was held at Delhi in 1943 and 1944 as a result of the decision of the Syndicate of that University that for the duration of the war these students should be examined in Delhi. LICENCES FOR FISHING AT OKHLA

The issue of the licences is at the discretion of the Executive engineer who issues them to amateur anglers after satisfying himself of their bonafides, and a few professional fishermen. The same procedure was followed in 1943-44.

Some applications for annual licences from previous holders were refused in the succeeding year as it was considered necessary to reduce the number of licences in that year. There were no complaints against any of them and no intention of not recognising them as bonafide amateur anglers.

(c) In the beginning of the year, the U. P. Government were subsidising the sale of pure wheat on the ration. Subsequently they decided to stop this and to subsidise the sale of coarser grains instead. The discontinuance of the subsidy naturally led to an increase in the price of wheat.

(d) The U. P. Government suffered a net loss of Rs. 5,000 on wheat, over and above the cost of administration.

SHORT NOTICE QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

ADMISSIONS OF STUDENTS IN FOREIGN INSTITUTIONS

Sri R. Venkatasubba Reddiar: Will the Education Secretary be pleased to state:

(a) if his attention has been drawn to a message by the Free Press of India reported in the Free Press Journal dated the 9th March, 1946, entitled "Training in U. K. A Big Scandal";

(b) if it is a fact that as stated therein by a student from England that many Indian students were shoved into a third rate polytechnic school without regard to their qualifications;

(c) if it is a fact that the India Office were not informed of the qualifications and requirements of the students;

(d) the colleges or schools in United Kingdom into which Indian students have obtained admission, how many yet remain to be admitted and how many have been forced into institutions entirely unsuited to them;

(e) if any of them were admitted into Matriculation class of Cardiff when their qualifications were far higher than that class; and

(f) if the Government propose to reconsider their decision of sending further batches of students before proper arrangements are made for their studies in the United Kingdom?

Dr. Sir John Sargent: (a) Yes, Sir.

(b) No Sir. The majority of the scholars have been admitted to Universities. The Polytechnics selected for some are the leading ones in the country which provide courses of a type not available in Universities. A point to be borne in mind in regard to the scholars selected for certain subjects is that although they may have very good science degree of the ordinary kind their qualifications do not provide an adequate background for advanced studies in the special subjects for which they were selected. In the case of a number of subjects regarded as of great importance for India's post-war development the facilities in this country have hitherto been either non-existent or of an elementary character. Students of these must therefore begin more or less at the beginning. For some of these subjects, e.g., Plastics the best training is provided in Polytechnics which only offer Diploma courses. These are not familiar to and therefore not appreciated by some of our students who are inclined to consider a Doctorate or a Masters degree as always a better qualification than a Diploma. In a few cases genuine mistakes have been made which are now being rectified.

(c) Full information was in all cases furnished to the High Commissioner regarding the present attainments of the students and the subjects which they were to study abroad. The India Office are not concerned.

(d) A statement showing the institutions in the U. K. in which places have been secured for the Government sponsored students is placed on the table. Only 18 out of the 182 students sponsored by the Government of India now remain to be placed in educational institutions in the U. K. 143 students have secured admission and have already left. 15 have secured admission and will proceed shortly. Six Central Government scholars declined the scholarship. Out of the 151 students sponsored by the Provincial Governments and intended for the U. K., 112 have been placed in educational institutions and places have still to be secured for 39. No figures are yet available as to how many of these have been placed unsatisfactorily; but this matter is being looked into.

(e) So far as our records show, no student has been admitted to any institution in Cardiff.

(f) No Sir. The difficulties experienced last year were partly due to the fact that owing to unavoidable causes, the final selections could not be made till July when it was rather late for securing admissions to institutions abroad and partly to the fact that owing to passages difficulties some students did not arrive in time to take up reservations already secured and had to be fitted in elsewhere. This year, however, efforts are being made to complete the selections by the middle of April in order that there may be ample time in which to secure places.

Pandit Govind Malaviya: May I know the machinery and the authority which actually decides upon the particular institutions to which the students are to be admitted when they reach there?

Dr. Sir John Sargent: When the students appeared before the Central Selection Board, they were all asked—I myself was present all the time—whether they had any particular institution which they would like to go to. Where they had a definite preference, that was put down as the place selected. In other cases, the Technical Members of the Board discussed the matter with the students and if the students agreed, then the institution recommended was put down. Failing any particular desire on the part of the students or any recommendation by the Board, the question was referred to our Educational Liaison officers in U.K., and in U.S.A.

Pandit Govind Malaviya: Does it mean that the final decision in the matter rests with the Educational officer in U.K. or U.S.A., and if so, do the Government consider that it will meet with the needs of the situation much better that there should be a committee of two or three persons here in India who should decide upon each candidate's case with specific relation to the accommodation which is available there and the institution to which he should be sent.

Dr. Sir John Sargent: The difficulties as I explained, last year were these. When we embarked on this ambitious scheme, we did not overlook certain serious difficulties, but there was one problem which turned up afterwards and which very much complicated the position and that was the unexpectedly early termination of the War in the East. It not only added to the pressure on institutions, but also caused very serious transport and passage problems, which have meant in a number of cases that students who were ready to go have been held up in this country some for a few months and some are still here. Another result was that certain reservations which we had been able to procure in institutions abroad could not be kept open after a certain date owing to the fact that the institutions, having so many students clamouring for places, did not think it fair to keep these places reserved indefinitely in the hope of Indian students turning up sooner or later. In those cases, they have offered sympathetic consideration for places next year. I am afraid the machinery which my Honourable friend suggests would not have relieved us in that particular difficulty which we had last year. As I said, we hope this year with more time and much better machinery, to overcome these difficulties. There were some cases of bad placing, but the last report I have received from my Educational Liaison officer in U.K. states quite definitely that these have now been satisfactorily settled.

Sri. T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar: What arrangements have been made for sending those students selected last year and who are still waiting here for whatever reason they have not been sent till now?

Dr. Sir John Sargent: We have done two things. Where there is any probability that a student will have to wait probably until the opening of the next academic year, we have tried to arrange that he should continue his studies in some research institution in this country and I hope that will at any rate prevent the wasting of his time while waiting for passage. We hope of course that the passage position may improve at any moment, in which case we shall get more students away. With regard to the question of looking after them, we have made, I think, reasonably liberal arrangements for their maintenance until such time as they are able to go and take up their scholarships.

Seth Govind Das: May I know how much time of these students have been already wasted?

Dr. Sir John Sargent: I think it is inevitable that one or two months—and in some cases perhaps more—have been wasted, and for the reasons I have explained. I am afraid we could not help that, and we have done what we could to mitigate the effects of it.

Sri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar: Will those persons who were selected last year be given preference over those to be selected this year?

Dr. Sir John Sargent: Yes, I can safely say that.

Pandit Govind Malaviya: Notwithstanding the difficulties, will Government realise that instead of these students going to the United Kingdom merely for the purpose of going there, the object of these students being sent should be that they should receive certain instructions, and that therefore a proper machinery should be created to ensure that they go to the proper institution and get the proper training and they should themselves feel satisfied? Will Government consider that it may after all be better not to send them for the time being and detain them here rather than send them there to take admission into any institution, good, bad or indifferent?

Dr. Sir John Sargent: My Honourable friend is quite correct. It is our intention and it has been our intention that students should be sent to study a specific subject for which they have the necessary background and which subject will be of definite and known use in the postwar reconstruction plans. And I can assure my Honourable friend that we shall not spend money on sending students abroad either to waste their time or ours by not placing them in satisfactory institutions. I may inform him that the few cases which have come to our attention were cases of genuine mistake. And the mistakes have been quite curious in some cases. For instance, there have been mutilations in original telegrams, where students wanting to study Physiology were reported in London to be wanting to study Physics, etc. We have cleared up these things and I hope they will not occur again. But certainly it is our intention that as every student is selected for a specific technical subject—so far as we can possibly manage it—to see that that student studies that subject when he goes there and not some other subject.

Seth Govind Das: Are we to take it that before they are sent out from here proper arrangements for their admission to various institutions abroad will be made?

Dr. Sir John Sargent: Yes. But, as I have explained, owing to this delay in passage, some of the institutions in which we got admission had to say reluctantly that they could not keep them open any longer and therefore alternative arrangements had to be made in the United Kingdom for these students.

HUNGER STRIKE BY R.I.N. RATINGS IN MULUND CAMP

Mr. M. R. Masani: Will the War Secretary kindly state:

(a) Whether it is true that, as reported in the Free Press Journal of March 14, 300 R.I.N. ratings, segregated in the Mulund Camp as a result of action taken in connection with the incidents of last month, have been on hunger strike since the morning of March 12;

(b) whether this step has been taken by the ratings as a protest against the insufficiency of food and the insult and maltreatment by an officer to one of them who carried a message complaining of the inadequacy of the food supplied on the morning of March 12;

(c) whether the Flag Officer Commanding, Bombay, Rear Admiral Rattray and an Army Brigadier visited the Camp on the morning of March 13 and that, after listening to the complaints of the ratings, the Flag Officer Commanding told them that he would consider the matter and communicate his decision to them later; and

(d) whether the Government will take immediate steps to have matters put right at the Mulund Camp so as to enable the hunger strike to be terminated?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) and (b). At about 1 p.m. on Tuesday, the 12th March, a rating in Mulund camp complained to an officer that the food allotted to him for his mess was insufficient. The rating alleges that the officer then pushed him; the officer alleges that the rating first used insulting language to him and threatened him with a stick. Actually the report is that the officer says he told the man to go to the cookhouse and get some more food, and the man replied that he was asking his officer for food and he was not going to the cookhouse for that. The truth of that will come out in the inquiry. The officer has been removed from the camp, and a Board of Enquiry into the incident sat at 1400 on the 13th. Its report is awaited.

At the midday meal on the 12th (i.e., immediately after the incident first referred to), certain ratings refused their food, and started a general agitation for a hunger strike.

On the 13th, the bulk of the ratings at Mulund camp would not eat the rations provided for them; a small number, however, asked the officer-in-charge to be allowed to eat their food under protection, and rations were furnished to them, and protection given to enable them to eat.

On the evening of the 13th, about 100 ratings in the camp asked for protection as they were being intimidated into refusing their food. Protection was given by placing a special guard round their barracks.

Early in the morning of the 14th, about 40 of the ratings who were suspected of intimidating the rest were taken out of Mulund camp and moved temporarily to a hutted building some little distance away, under military guard. The 300 ratings then remaining in Mulund camp thereupon sat down to their breakfasts. While they were eating, an uproar arose in the hutted building, owing to a difference of opinion among the 40 extremists as to whether they too should resume eating. On this, 28 men in the Mulund camp started a further agitation, and only about 180 of the Mulund ratings ate their midday meal on the 14th. At supper-time, about 240 ate their meal.

In the evening of that day (the 14th), the original 40 extremists were removed to another camp at Kalyan, and the 28 who had started the agitation on the morning of the 14th were segregated at Mulund. All the ratings in the main Mulund camp and all those at Kalyan have eaten their normal meals since the morning of the 15th, and the 28 segregated ratings at Mulund have eaten their normal meals since the evening of the 15th.

(c) This is incorrect. At no stage has Rear Admiral Rattray visited the camp. The officer-in-charge of the camp, whose duty it was to do so, heard all complaints and representations which were put forward, and dealt with them in the normal Service manner.

(d) Does not arise.

Mr. M. Asaf Ali: Did the Honourable Member receive my telegram on the 12th about this very incident and did he take any steps in pursuance of what I suggested there?

Mr. P. Mason: Yes, Sir, I received the Honourable Member's telegram about the same time as I received the other Honourable Member's short notice question, and by that time it appeared that the matter was already in hand.

Mr. M. Asaf Ali: Is it a fact that, apart from the incident to which the Honourable Member has referred, the main grievance of these people in Mulund camp was insufficiency and unsatisfactory nature of the food that was being given?

Mr. P. Mason: No, Sir, that is not my information. My information is that apart from this one incident there was no general complaint. I have got the officer's story and I have got the man's story, and I do not know which is true. But according to the officer's story this man came with a degchee and said that he should be given more food in it. The officer asked him to go to the cookhouse and he said, "I am asking you for food, I am not going to the cookhouse."

Mr. M. Asaf Ali: Is the Honourable Member aware that the real complaint in Mulund camp was that Lieut. Singh who was the officer on duty on that day really behaved rather badly towards one of these ratings? The story that the Honourable Member has given here may be the account given by the officer against whom this complaint was lodged. I am not aware of one or the other and so I do not know which of the two stories is correct. But all that I am wanting to know is whether it has been brought to the knowledge of the authorities that the actual grievance was about the insufficiency and unsatisfactory nature of the food given to them, which led to some kind of complaint from one of the ratings to Lieut. Singh and he behaved rather badly towards this person, with the result that others joined in the protest. Have all these facts been brought to the notice of the authorities yet?

Mr. P. Mason: My information is not quite the same. As I have stated with regard to the particular incident about the officer, I think both sides have been fully represented; and my information is that there was no general complaint about the food. But I will have further inquiries made to make certain that that is so.

Mr. M. Asaf Ali: Will the Honourable Member take it from me that the complaint about food is general even now, not merely in Mulund camp but elsewhere too, and the sooner this is looked into the better?

(No reply was given)

Sir Cowasjee Jehangir: May I know whether this food is supplied by contract?

Mr. P. Mason: It is supplied by the R.I.A.S.C. in the same way as to other members of the armed forces.

Mr. M. Asaf Ali: Is it a fact that the food is being supplied by some department or other and this complaint about food has been going on for a long time, not for a day or two but for weeks and months together? The dal supplied has stones in it, and the rice is uneatable, and so on; and the same dal is supplied from day to day for weeks and months together. These stories go about and I see no reason why these complaints cannot be remedied straightaway.

Mr. P. Mason: Sir, I should like to answer that. I rather welcome the opportunity of answering that because, as I say, all the Armed Forces are supplied by the R.I.A.S.C. The rations are considerably more than those given to the civil population—rather less than 50 per cent. more—and Members on the other side of the House were suggesting to me the other day that they should be reduced. They are, as I say, already considerably in excess of those supplied to the civil population. In the case of the R.I.N. they are also rather in excess of those supplied to the Army. It is perfectly true that from time to time reports are received that the quality of dal, or the quality of rice, or sometimes the quality of atta, is not what it should be. . . .

Mr. M. Asaf Ali: Also it is badly cooked.

Mr. P. Mason: Cooking is another point. But when the quality of the actual stuff supplied is questioned, it is generally found that there is a good reason for that, and steps are taken to put it right, but it takes some time before the old stock is used up. For example, there was a general complaint, I know about the quality of atta some months ago. It transpired that that was due to the landing of large shipments of wheat in Calcutta as a result of which the great deal of hoarded wheat which had been kept against the rise of prices had been brought out and had weevils in it and as a result a good deal of not very good atta came into circulation. But I cannot suppose that in the present conditions of food any of my friends on the opposite side would suggest that we should throw that stuff away.

With regard to cooking, there is always a continuous improvement and the Army School of Cookery is putting through and training people as quickly as possible.

Mr. M. Asaf Ali: It is common knowledge in Bombay that about the time when these grievances were talked about no less than 150 sacks of the finest atta that you could imagine was being sold in the blackmarket and people were purchasing this. This atta had been supplied to the blackmarket by certain Army authorities—God alone knows who they were; contractors or somebody—but it was being sold in the blackmarket everybody knows it. When it is said that the stock ought not to be thrown away, I agree, but surely good stock which is held by the authorities should not be thrown into the blackmarket, and these people supplied the rotten stuff.

Mr. P. Mason: I entirely agree, but it has been my experience that matters of common knowledge do not in effect always prove to be correct.

Mr. M. B. Masani: In order to end such unpleasant incidents, will Government act on the spirit of their assurance against victimisation by introducing an Amnesty Bill in this Assembly?

Mr. P. Mason: There is no necessity for putting through an Amnesty Bill, but I don't think my friend will have any complaint when they examine our conclusions in this matter.

Mr. M. Asaf Ali: Since this matter has been raised, I would like to put one other question. I have heard a number of things about demobilization. The Selection Board that is now dealing with the question is not paying any attention to the fact that certain age rules, etc., are to be tackled first and a number of persons who are perfectly eligible for retention for permanent Commissions are being sacked. The main grievance, as far as I could judge, was that out of 2,500 officers only about 66 are likely to be retained, and all the others are being demobilized. This is apart from ratings. This was the real grievance which was in the background many months ago which went on maturing until the particular incident which brought about the strike; it was the last straw on the camel's back. To my mind the policy of demobilization in the R.I.N. needs to be overhauled completely in view of the fact that we would like to expand our Navy rather than contract it, and therefore the demobilization of these persons, who are really able to continue working at this amazing rate, is entirely wrong.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member may answer if he likes, but I am afraid it is outside the scope of the question.

(No reply was given.)

MOTIONS FOR ADJOURNMENT

INABILITY OF PEASANTS IN JUBBULPORE TO HARVEST THEIR WINTER FOOD GRAIN CROPS OWING TO RESTRICTIONS IMPOSED BY FOOD GRAIN CONTROL ORDER

Mr. President: I have received notice of an adjournment motion "to consider a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the inability of the peasants in Jubbulpore area to harvest their winter food grain crops caused by the working of the Food Grains Control Order which prohibits agricultural labourers from taking grains paid to them as wages in kind to their homes situated in villages, other than those where they work and also the inability of the peasants who own lands to pay adequate wages to local labourers in order to attract them away from biri factories." The notice is by the Honourable Members Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, Prof. Ranga, Mr. Venkatasubba Reddiar.

In the first place, it relates to two different matters.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Guntur cum Nellore: Non-Muhammadan Rural): In regard to the first question, I would like the Honourable Member to give any information that he has to the House because that is a sort of complaint which is generally prevailing. We got that news in the press.

Mr. President: I understand that, but as the motion stands it relates to two different matters. I take it the Honourable Member agrees that one part of it must be cut out.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras Ceded Districts and Chittoor: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Yes, Sir. The latter portion goes out.

Mr. President: The only portion that remains then is about the Jubbulpore area. How is the matter of sufficient importance? What does he mean by 'Jubbulpore area'?

Prof. N. G. Ranga: That is how we got the information. The news emanated from Jubbulpore. Specific information is given that so much area of land and crops thereon are lying there ready to be harvested, but there are no workers to harvest it, because workers are suffering under that particular difficulty.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Ripe but no reaper!

Seth Govind Das (Central Provinces Hindi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan): There are four Tehsils in Jubbulpore District—Jubbulpore, Pitan, Sinora, Murwara. In all these four Tehsils there is Rabi crops generally and the position there is that the crop is ripe for reaping. Until now the labourers were paid in kind. Now according to the new rules they are paid in cash. There are very few labourers in that district and labourers come there from Rewa and Narsinghpur, the adjoining two places. Because they are not getting anything in kind, they are not coming there, and, if these rules are not changed, I am afraid the Rabi crop will not be reaped and there will be a big famine in that area.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon (Sind: Muhammadan Rural): May I rise to a point of order. I submit it is for the Chair to decide the admissibility of this motion, the urgency of it, and whether it cannot form part of the general discussion on the Finance Bill, or whether it is so urgent that it should be admitted as an adjournment motion. It is for you to decide first before the Food Member answers.

Mr. President: That is why I put the question to the Honourable Member as to what he meant by the words 'Jubbulpore area'. I wanted to be clear. . . (Interruption by Seth Govind Das) Order, order. No interruptions. I wanted to be clear about the extent of the area. If the area is sufficiently large, then the matter would stand differently. If it really affects a very small area and it is a matter of administrative convenience, the matter will stand differently and need not be taken up on an adjournment motion. That is why I wanted to know from the Honourable Member what the facts were. I did not want to go into the merits.

Seth Govind Das: The area is sufficiently long.

Mr. President: Order, order. I have heard sufficient on the question of area.

Seth Govind Das: I wanted to say something about the population.

Mr. President: Order, order.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: I can understand my Honourable friend's anxiety because he comes from that place. I have given notice of the adjournment. When the harvest is ripe there is no reaper: this is the substance of the news in the "Hindustan Times" dated 16th March. We have sent our best men to load ships with grains for U.S.A. but here when the harvest is ripe there is no reaper. This is due to the orders passed by the Central Government and not by the Local Government. The persons who reap have no food. It is for the benefit of others they work. This is a large area. I am giving the symptom in a particular part of the country. Therefore, it is urgent. I do not want to censure the Government. I would like to know what the truth is. If the answer is not proper, then it is a case for censure.

Mr. President: What does the Food Secretary have to say?

Mr. B. B. Sen (Secretary Food Department): On receiving notice of this adjournment motion I sent a telegram to the Central Provinces Government and I got a reply this morning which I sent over to the Whip of the Opposition to see. I thought that after reading that reply they would not press this adjournment motion. That reply makes clear the circumstances in which a certain order under the Foodgrains Export Control Order, which has been in force in the Central Provinces for some time; bona fide travellers are allowed to take 2½ maunds of rice when they go out of the Province. But last week they amended that order and have laid down that bona fide travellers could take only ten seers of rice. This they have done in order to prevent smuggling. This particular incident had not come to the notice of the Central Provinces Government but as soon as they heard of this adjournment motion, they said they would institute enquiries and if they found any genuine hardships being caused they would re-examine the case. So there is no reason for the apprehension which is in the minds of the Members.

Pandit Govind Malaviya (Allahabad and Jhansi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): By what time will we get the information?

Mr. B. B. Sen: No crop will remain unharvested for this reason. As soon as this matter is investigated, necessary permits will be issued.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: I am satisfied. I do not press the motion.

Mr. President: Very well, the matter then ends. Sir Archibald Rowlands.

THE INDIAN FINANCE BILL

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands (Finance Member): Sir I move:
"That the Bill to give effect to the financial proposals of the Central Government for the year beginning on the 1st day of April 1946 be taken into consideration."

Mr. President: Motion moved:
"That the Bill to give effect to the financial proposals of the Central Government for the year beginning on the 1st day of April 1946 be taken into consideration."

Mr. President: I understand that all sections of the House have arrived at a general agreement on the question of the time-table for the Finance Bill and the Supplementary Grants, Railways as well as General. The time-table will be as under:

Commencing from Tuesday, that is today, the 19th instant, all stages of the Finance Bill will be completed by 5 P.M. on Thursday the 28th, and all questions then outstanding in regard to the Finance Bill will be put to the vote of the Assembly without any further discussion on any question.

The Railways and General Supplementary Demands will be taken up on the 29th instant and continued on Saturday the 30th instant, which will be a working day. The Assembly will similarly dispose of, on that day, all the outstanding Supplementary Demands by 5 P.M.

It is understood that if the consideration motion in respect of the Finance Bill is not finished before 5 P.M. on Tuesday, the 26th instant, the closure may be moved in respect of the consideration motion on Wednesday, the 27th March at the commencement of the Legislative business that day. If closure is moved and carried and subsequently the consideration motion is carried, the House will then proceed to consider the Finance Bill clause by clause.

During all these days, the question hour will ordinarily not be suspended, unless exigencies of the situation require the suspension on account of the time of the House being up by any adjournment motion.

It is further understood that while spokesmen of various parties and groups may have about forty-five minutes as time limit for speeches, the ordinary time limit will be twenty minutes for each speaker, but in any case not exceeding about thirty minutes.

I trust the arrangements being the result of agreement of all parties, Honourable Members will co-operate with the Chair in giving effect to it.

Mr. K. C. Neogy (Dacca Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Is it understood that the House must necessarily adjourn at 5 o'clock every day, because if my recollection serves me right, there had been occasions in the past when the House sat for longer hours for the purpose of disposing of such business.

Mr. President: I cannot say what was passing in the minds of the Honourable Members of the House, in preparing the time-table but at any rate, my impression has been that we do not sit beyond 5 P.M.

Shri Satya Narayan Sinha (Darbhanga cum Saran: Non-Muhammadan): Forty minutes of our time have been taken up. Cannot we sit so many minutes after 5 P.M.

Mr. President: We may sit if the House so desires. But the time that is taken up every day is entirely in the hands of the House. If there are lesser number of questions and points of order and so on, we shall be saving time. If short notice questions are also disposed of more quickly than what we have done today, we can save time.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer (Bombay Southern Division: Muhammadan Rural): This time should be cut from the Congress Party.

Mr. President: I am not concerned with the Congress, Muslim League or the Government. I am speaking for the whole House.

Nawabzada Liaquat Ali Khan (Meerut Division: Muhammadan Rural): He was saying that this half hour be taken from the Congress.

Mr. President: We shall see to that. If necessary, it may be done, for doing even justice between the parties. But that is a different matter.

Another aspect which I would like to point out to the Honourable Members is that sitting for longer hours does mean a lot of strain on the staff. If Honourable Members have certain points to make, they are entitled to speak them out. If they can help to relieve the staff of the trouble of overstrain of work, I shall be happy. It is not on their representation that I am saying something but the strain really becomes unbearable and I am saying this from my experience of some other House and not this House. It does really become a strain. But if necessary, we shall certainly sit, if the House agrees.

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall (Leader of the House): May I make the point that sitting late also means an intolerable strain upon the front bench and the Officials of Government who have to carry on the administration of the country after the House rises. I strongly object to sitting after 5 P.M.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee (Nominated Non-Official): I would like to submit. . .

Mr. President: Let us not take more time.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee: It has been suggested that except in the case of the people speaking on behalf of parties, the time limit should be twenty minutes. I do not know how that agreement was arrived at but in the case of unattached members, twenty minutes is far too small and if you would kindly, either on your own indulgence or by not looking at the time too meticulously give the unattached members time to speak for half an hour, it would be appreciated.

Mr. President: Perhaps the Honourable Member did not follow what I said. This is what I said: "It is further understood that while spokesmen of various parties and groups may have about forty-five minutes as time-limit for speeches, the ordinary time-limit will be twenty minutes for each speaker, but in any case, not exceeding about thirty minutes."

Therefore, if any Honourable Member is making out a point which has not been made before in the House, if he is not repeating what has been said, I may say that I shall make the best possible effort to give him more time. I cannot go beyond that.

Diwan Chaman Lall (West Punjab: Non-Muhammadan): He is an unattached Member.

Mr. President: Yes. There is another general agreement among Parties which has just come to my hands. The time apportioned is:

Congress Party—12 hours and 30 minutes, Muslim League Party—6 hours and 30 minutes, European Group—2 hours and 45 minutes, Unattached Members including Nominated non-official 2 hours and 30 minutes and Government Members 4 hours in all.

These are approximate time limits.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. O. Chatterjee: Sir, if the time allotted has been arrived at by the number in each party, the European Group which contains about ten members are given 2 hours and 45 minutes and the unattached Members who are at least 20 are given about the same time, which is rather unfair.

Mr. President: It would save time if we proceed with the business of the House now. If members will take care to see that they do not repeat what has been said by other members, the time allotted would be adequate.

Sardar Mangal Singh (East Punjab: Sikh): In allotting the time there should be some sense of proportion. The time allotted to the European Group should not be equal to the time allotted to the Unattached Members who number 20.

Mr. President: The time allotted is the maximum limit but it does not mean that that amount of time must necessarily be taken by each party. I shall see that other parties do save some of their time, so that the unattached members are able to get some extra time.

I have also to inform Honourable Members that on account of the continuance of the strike in the Government Press it will not be possible to get more copies of the Finance Bill printed. Honourable Members are, therefore, requested to preserve the copies of the Bill which have been placed on their tables today and to bring them to the Chamber for use during the progress of the Finance Bill.

Diwan Ohaman Lall: Sir, on behalf of my Party, the Indian National Congress as represented on the floor of this House, I rise to oppose the consideration of the Indian Finance Bill.

Sir, today we stand on the threshold of a new era. Whether we shall enter the mansion of the new age with the banners of peace flying or with the dust and noise of turmoil and the clamour of strife I cannot tell. But I can say this that during a quarter of a century of public life in this country I have never known the situation in India to assume so explosive an aspect as it has done today. No doubt we welcome the statement made by the British Prime Minister in this situation. I have known a Prime Minister or two in my time, Mr. President, and I can say quite frankly that this is the first occasion on which a British Prime Minister has spoken frankly and with realism. But it is not enough to have statements. Hope does not lie in statements. Hope lies in quick effective immediate and final action, if we are to weather the storm that hangs over us and if we are not to be found without shelter when the storm breaks.

It is, Mr. President, in this situation, tense as it is, that we have been considering the budget and let me say that this budget too marks the end of an era. It seems to me that the old order is ended not only for India but it has ended for the rest of the world. What was the old order? It was an order in which the foreign capitalist, as far as my country is concerned, was given the pick of the loot in exploiting this rich and noble land, while his Indian counterpart was left with the leavings. It was an order in which death, hunger, famine and disease stalked the land. It was an order in which the foreign capitalist earned his 90 per cent dividend while the miserable Indian worker obtained a very small modicum of the profits earned by the capitalist and lived on a starvation diet and was housed in tenements or huts which have been aptly described as "the ant-heaps of pestilence." It was an order in which my Honourable friends over there grouped themselves into a self-appointed but unlawful association for purposes of the preservation of law and order and in which association my Honourable friend, the Finance Member, was merely a tax-gatherer. It was an order which I hope with this budget is now ended but I have no doubt in my mind that if the order does not die an unhonoured death, we shall face such chaos and revolution in this country, as will shake the very foundations of peace, prosperity and security not only in India but throughout the East. It is in this light, Mr. President, that I would like to face the financial aspects of the Budget presented by my Honourable friend and it is in this light that those aspects must be lifted from the old morass into something new, from the sphere of muddle and hand-to-mouth existence to the sphere of conscious and determined planning, purposeful planning, in the interests of the people of India, the people of India conscious of their own power and determined to achieve their own freedom.

The emphasis in regard to this Budget has been laid on what has been stated to be post-war reconstruction, a phrase which I do not like, because it is a phrase that does not tell the truth. Post-war reconstruction is valid, if it can be established that there was any construction in the previous period, either ante-bellum or intra-bellum but there was no such construction. We have actually to start from scratch. Therefore it should mean not the reconstruction of a battered old tenement unable even to support its own walls but the building of a well conceived structure with dynamic ideas and on sure and secure foundations. In short it should mean national development, and national development I want my Honourable friends, to remember, is linked with the question of national freedom. You cannot in this country have national development with my Honourable friends sitting over there, sitting upon the dying body of this nation. You must have national freedom. Let me therefore, Mr. President, look at these problems from the point of view of this reconstruction of the nation with dynamic ideas.

It will be admitted, let me say quite frankly, by those who are well versed in these matters that the Budget has done something akin to what I may call streamlining, in that it has integrated the surcharges into taxation and it has made the structure certainly simpler. It has further done two other things. It has extended the principle of relief for earned income. Instead of 1/10 of the total income subject to a maximum of Rs. 2,000, relief hereafter will be 1/5 subject to a maximum of Rs. 4,000. It has done another thing. The corporation tax has been reduced by two annas. But while these things have been done and the structure simplified, my Honourable friend has done something which to my mind, looking at the interests of India, appears to be exceedingly objectionable. He has at one stroke removed the Excess Profits Tax and the cost to the nation by that action of his is about 75 crores of rupees. It has no doubt resulted in the market soaring, and no doubt it has given a fillip to the profits of those who were in a position to pay this Excess Profits Tax. But what about those poverty stricken masses for whose benefit this money might have been utilised? What about over a million people on the railways and 2,00,000 workers in the Posts and Telegraphs and the various centralised services for whose benefit this large sum could have been utilised and for whose relief this could have been spent?

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Guntur cum Nellore: Non-Muhammadan Rural): What about the peasants themselves?

Diwan Ohaman Lall: I am coming to the peasants as my Honourable friend has reminded. Do I take it that the rich were so indigent that they could not afford to part with this sum of 75 crores from this Excess Profits Tax? Already we have, as my Honourable friend has shown, a deficit of 44 crores. But that is not really the true picture. There is a sum of Rs. 26 crores, which is available to us in 1946-47 from the two War Risk Insurance funds which hereafter will not be available to us. So, when we are considering the deficit, we have to look upon it not merely as a deficit of 44 crores but a deficit of 70 crores. Add to this 70 crores this drop in the national income of 75 crores through the Excess Profits Tax being removed. I say to the Finance Member, what have you done? Here is a gap, a tremendous gap that you have to fill. How are you going to fill this gap

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: By reducing the defence expenditure.

Diwan Chaman Lall: My Honourable friend reminds me of the defence expenditure. Does not my Honourable friend know that pari passu with the decrease in defence expenditure there is going to be mounting expenditure in the matter of planning which you are going to pay out to the Provinces. At the present moment you have made provision for about 85 crores for financing this planning. Is my Honourable friend going to remain at that figure? Is he not going to extend his generous hand to the Provinces? What happens to them? I do agree that there may be some slight decrease in defence expenditure; but is my Honourable friend going to wait until that decrease takes place to fill in this yawning gap or is he leaving this problem for his successor? Let me ask him now if he is not going to do it and he had instruments to his hand, why did he not utilise those instruments which were in his hand? Is it a fact that the budget should be looked at more from the point of view of the things he has not said than from the point of view of the things that have been stated on the floor of the House? One of the most important things that have not been said is this: my Honourable friend has not shown to the nation how he could fill this gap, not only by reducing the defence expenditure but by some positive action. Let me ask him whether it is not a fact that the question of death duties has been investigated by my Honourable friend's Department. Is it not a fact that a special officer was deputed to go into the matter of death duties? Is it not a fact that this question of death duties was solved by the preparation of an actual measure which the Government intended to place on the floor of this House? What has happened to that measure?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: If the Honourable Member will wait two days he will have a copy of it on the table of the House.

Diwan Chaman Lall: My Honourable friend is bringing it in at the tail end of this session, with no intention whatever of getting the measure through this session, leaving this problem to be solved not by him but by his successor. It is not as if this idea has struck my Honourable friend just at the present moment. He knows perfectly well that it will not be available for the benefit of the nation at this stage

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: If the Honourable Members on the other side will accept the Bill without further argument, we will arrange to get it through this session.

Diwan Chaman Lall: It is a most improper proposition that we should accept a Bill without having seen the Bill and without finding out if it is an acceptable measure—we do not even know what the name of the Bill is going to be—I do not know whether the Finance Member is going to give it the name that I have given to it. I ask my Honourable friend whether he is aware that out of this measure alone—I dare say the official figures are different, but the economists are agreed that the national Government when it comes into power will be able to receive the sum of nearly Rs. 300 crores a year out of these death duties. Here was a source, which we shall certainly examine with due care. I ask my Honourable friend the Finance Member whether it is not a fact that one of his predecessors made a very important observation when he said that not sufficient attention had been paid to the question of state owning and state management of industry with a view to the augmentation of central revenues. This was not merely a random shot in the dark. It was a suggestion made with the purpose of implementing it. I ask my Honourable friend whether he has considered and if he has not, why he has not considered that suggestion? Should he have any qualms, should he have any hesitation in regard to this matter? Let me declare on the floor of the House on behalf of the Indian National Congress that we are wedded to the proposition of state ownership and state management of industry

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Socialism.

Diwan Chaman Lall: The time has gone by when my Honourable friends sitting over there can run industry for private benefit. (Interruption.) The time has gone by—and if the cap fits my Honourable friend he is welcome to it—when these resources can be handed over to the private individual when the need of the country is a dire one.

May I make a suggestion to my Honourable friend and may I ask him whether that suggestion has been considered? Is he aware that there are two very simple industries—the Food Member need not get nervous, Mr. President, I am not referring to his industries for the moment—but is my Honourable friend aware that there are two industries of a very simple character that could be nationalised and should have been by now nationalised? I refer to the match industry and I refer to the tobacco industry. Many countries in Europe for a long number of years after the last war went in for nationalisation and have been reaping a very rich harvest. Here the problem is a simple one. We draw from the tobacco excise duty something like 22 crores revenue. We draw about 6 crores from matches. But if you were to nationalise these industries, I will hazard the guess that the national revenues would gain something like 70 crores from tobacco and 30 crores from matches. That money is sorely needed for the amelioration of the condition of the peasants and kisans whom my Honourable friend Prof. Ranga represents. Why has it not been done? It has not been done because these two industries are not even Indian industries

Rao Bahadur N. Siva Raj (Nominated: Non-Official): Nationalise insurance.

Diwan Chaman Lall: Yes; my Honourable friend may rest assured that we shall actually nationalise him and insure him as well under the new scheme. The match industry is an industry which is completely under the control of a Swedish concern. The profits it makes do not even remain in this country.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir (Nominated: Non-Official): Not all; that is not correct.

Diwan Chaman Lall: My Honourable friend might be a shareholder and can bag some portion of its profits himself. Perfectly true. But is it or is it not a Swedish concern? Let my Honourable friend deny that. It is a Swedish concern; the combine is a Swedish combine. The tobacco industry is also practically a single monopoly of the Imperial Tobacco Company. Why has my Honourable friend not considered the nationalisation of these two industries? I suggest their nationalisation because in the future in the time that is coming immediately before us, it is necessary to husband every resource that we possess in order to put India on the path of prosperity. I concede that the step taken by my Honourable friend with reference to the high denomination currency ordinance has probably resulted in a windfall to the treasury of about 25 crores—I speak subject to correction. The Indian National Congress is determined to uproot the evil of bribery and corruption. Let my Honourable friend not run away with this fact that we are going to have a tender spot for any one, high or low. We desire to set in motion such machinery as will secure that in future there will be none of this bribery, none of this corruption but at the same time we should find some way or means, as my Honourable friend should have done, to discover the hundreds of crores that are lying there as tax evasion money. I daresay if suitable methods were adopted a matter of about 6 to 7 hundred crores would be available for my Honourable friend—another windfall which I make a present of to my Honourable friend. But for all this it is necessary that the tax collection department must be strengthened as the first step. I notice that the appropriation for this year for the tax collection department is one crore 30 lakhs as against one crore 27 lakhs last year. What is needed is a complete overhaul of the machinery for this purpose in order that no one who is guilty of evasion of taxation, to be utilised for the benefit of the people of this country, should be capable of getting away with it.

[Diwan Chaman Lall]

Now, Sir, let me come to the main problem of planning. This budget, as I have already stated, provides for 35 crores for the Provinces.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Plus 15.

Diwan Chaman Lall: Total 50 crores. I ask my Honourable friend what was the result of the unplanned expenditure of 7 hundred to 8 hundred crores a year on behalf of Indian and Allied Governments? Is it not a fact that though it was unplanned it was an emergency expenditure, the result was the stabilisation of wages? The result was more or less the high margin of return of primary produce. The result was the disappearance of unemployment. Now, I ask my Honourable friend if this expenditure is suddenly to cease, if the tap is going to be turned off immediately, how is he going to shape the economy which he has in view? How is he going to shape the entire system of taxation, of raising loans and his financial structure if he is going to turn off the tap suddenly in this manner? I do not want him to turn off the tap in this manner. Had there been an opportunity to consider this matter on the floor of the House, I daresay he would have got a consensus of opinion that pari passu with the decrease of this expenditure there should be mounting expenditure on development and I want to see, Mr. President, this mounting expenditure reaching its zenith within the next two or three years until we are in a position to spend no less than a thousand crores a year on planning and thus improve the fabric of our nation.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras Ceded Districts and Chittoor: Non-Muhammadian Rural): Start from the bottom.

Diwan Chaman Lall: When you start looking at it from the bottom as my Honourable friend wants, you have to look to the worker and the peasant. I want to suggest to my Honourable friend that all these sources of revenue should be tapped, by the institution of State owned and State managed factories, the taking over of monopolies and the collection of tax evasion money and other similar steps. I would ask him whether he could not give us a charter for the masses of this country. Where is the Beveridge plan for the masses of this country? Where is your plan to civilise every village, bringing to it and its inhabitants all the security and the amenities of civilised existence? Where do I find it in the Budget, in the plans of the Government, in the conception of the future which my Honourable friends have for this country? We must make an aggressive start. We must, as I said, keep on mounting this development expenditure until it reaches the peak figure which I have mentioned.

Of course some of this expenditure for development will not be productive expenditure, from the commercial point of view. It will be spent on education and health but I must confess that in reality there is no more productive expenditure than expenditure on these beneficent Departments, because they increase the tax paying capacity of those whom they benefit, because they raise the morale of the nation.

Let me, Mr. President, at this stage say a word or two about certain fetishes that people have in regard to this concept of planning. The old fetish was to balance the budget from year to year. The new concept is not that. The new concept is balance the budget over a certain number of years and that is the new concept so universally accepted and therefore there should be no difficulty for my Honourable friend in raising all the necessary loans that he wants for the purpose of the planning that we have in view. Again it is said, it was said in the past, that the more you borrow the more you are at the mercy of the lender. That situation has completely altered. You don't have to go to the lender. The lender comes to you. That is the change that has taken place in this country and in most countries but the essential condition is necessarily that you must have a Government in which the people have confidence, not a Government of a few despots sitting there, hand picked men who are today running the Government of this country, the most colossal despotism that has ever been known in history. Let us not forget that this war has proved that for a war which was a war of destruction it was easy enough for my Honourable friend to raise 800 crores a year in the way of loans and is it doubted, Mr. President that for purposes which are productive, which are constructive, which are going to benefit the nation there should be any difficulty in raising yearly loans to the extent of 300 to 500 crores.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: We are doing it.

Diwan Chaman Lall: All this money will supplement the revenue of the Central Government. Of this money, 50 crores that is to be handed over to the provinces will supplement the revenues of the provinces which must necessarily now take the same steps in the matter of nationalising industry and nationalising finance in their own particular areas.

Then, Mr. President, is the question linked with all this. Our resources have been mortgaged and are lying in London as a book entry. I refer to the question of the sterling balances. I want my British friends, not only the very few of them here on these benches, to realise that it is not we who exacted immediate payment but it is they who have been suggesting the partial repudiation of this loan. When the Indian National Congress 12 years ago suggested that we should go into the question of our foreign debt immediately there was a hue and cry raised because we wanted to examine whether the debt had been incurred for the purposes of India or not and it was said that there was an attempt made by the Indian National Congress to repudiate that debt. This charge came strangely from a country which having taken a loan from America repudiated, after the last war the entire loan that they had taken from America. My Honourable friend knows that a bitter controversy is raging and has been raging all over this country over this issue and I advise him to find a quick and final solution of this problem.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: What is the problem?

Diwan Chaman Lall: My Honourable friend has just awakened to the problem. The problem is the return of the sterling debt and it is a very serious problem. If my Honourable friend finds a quick solution of this problem, I am certain it will have a great psychological effect upon Indo-British relations. I have no reason to doubt that we have paid for this debt in hunger and starvation and with the blood of our people. But I am also certain that if a great leader, a generous-hearted leader, like Mahatma Gandhi were approached and all the facts placed before him, I am quite certain that he will deal with the matter in a most generous manner, but by postponing a decision and by behaving as if you were the creditors and not we, my Honourable friends are embittering the feelings in this country. Do not forget that when you were the creditors and we owed you money, you asked for guarantees and safeguards and got them. We are the creditors now five to six times over and we have not been given any guarantee or any safeguards.

It has been suggested that expropriation is one of the methods whereby a settlement could be arrived at of a portion of the sterling debt. I am quite certain that my Honourable friend's Fascist step children, the South Africans did not let my Honourable friends have credit without impounding their assets. I think it is a fact that when they wanted a similar state of affairs in South Africa, South Africa impounded British assets in that country. They were the Fascist children of my Honourable friend, but a large portion unfortunately of British assets here in India today have been liquidated. I think that man would be very bold who suggested that the Yules and the Sassoons and the Scottish jute owners and the Scottish and British tea-planters have assets in this country which are more than two hundred million sterling. As a gesture, of goodwill, why did not this Government expropriate those assets and pay the owners in sterling that is locked up in London? What was the justification for not taking this step? My Honourable friend should not forget that many shares of these concerns have been bought over by Indians.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Nobody knows.

Diwan Chaman Lall: I agree, nobody knows but it is worth while finding out, and whatever is left over should be handed over to us.

Then, Sir, I am amazed, indeed, at the irresponsible manner of this Government in dealing with the connected problem of retrenchment. Today, even before we have known what stupendous personnel would be needed when planning is stepped up and how many more men will be employed or will be necessary, blindly in the dark without any plan whatsoever my Honourable friends have started discharging men. Does not my Honourable friend realise the serious significance of this? The very basis of the budget, the very estimates of revenue the Government has made, the loan programme of the Government, all these things depend upon the maintenance and continuance of full employment. If unemployment grows with retrenchment, a fatal blow would have been struck at the national fabric, a fatal blow would have been struck at the national economy and I cannot understand why my Honourable friend is not prepared to spend a crore or two in keeping these extra hands until schemes are laid rather than by putting men on the market and creating unemployment, thereby, in the end, losing hundreds and crores of national money.

Mr. President: The House will now adjourn for Lunch and the Honourable Member may resume his speech after Lunch.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at half Past Two of the Clock, Mr. President (the Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar), in the Chair.

Diwan Chaman Lall: Sir, this is the over all picture that I have been painting with regard to this matter. I was saying in reference to retrenchment that it must not be confused with economy. Retrenchment does not mean the same thing as economy. If I may use a very homely simile, economy means getting sixteen annas in the rupee, whereas retrenchment means getting eight annas where you should be getting sixteen annas. I ask my Honourable friend to remember that if retrenchment leads on to unemployment, the very basis of the budget which he has presented, the loan programme that he has outlined, all the taxation proposals will all be jeopardised. All these depend, as he knows full well, upon the maintenance of full employment in the country. Any danger to that means danger to the economic fabric of the country. If unemployment grows, that danger grows. I submit to my Honourable friend that in the context of world conditions, and our entry into the new era of planning that we have in view this new era will itself be jeopardised if retrenchment continues leading on to unemployment. I say to my Honourable friend, suspend retrenchment, raise the standard of life of the working classes, create a charter for the masses, remember that the past belonged to the classes and that the future belongs to the masses. The past ethics of work give way to the ethics of planned leisure, leisure enough for 98 per cent, of our population, leisure not only to cultivate their patch of land but leisure to cultivate their minds and resources enough to enable them to do so. Sir the wealth of the country lies not in rupees, annas and pies, but in the man power of the country. Do not let us be penny wise and pound foolish. A predecessor of my Honourable friend on the floor of the House paraphrased that item by relating the story of a Jewish gentleman, who in order to save candle light went to bed early with the result that he had a large family. Let us not imitate the example of that Jewish gentleman. The international sky as well as the national sky are darkening with hovering clouds. We have been treated like helots in this land, we are treated worse than helots in the British Empire. Prejudice, racial arrogance, incompetence, inefficiency unequal treatment have nearly brought our armed forces to the verge of collapse. The hand of the imperialist today is a dead hand, unfortunately it is still gripping the wheel of our destiny. I say to my Honourable friends opposite, the time has come when you should quit and quit with grace. We are ready to welcome you as the servants of the people, but no longer, can we welcome you as the masters of this country. A stupendous revolution is now in the offing in India, indeed throughout the East. You can guide that revolution so that it may leave behind it not the story of suffering but peace and prosperity. We want leaders of world wide reputation, free leaders in a free land. The prophets of the past believed in the ethics of scarcity, the prophets of the future will believe in the ethics of plenty. Our friends over there believe in work for the few, unemployment for the many. We now have to find work for all, leisure for all, prosperity for all. Our friends believe in laissez faire, and the profit motive. We believe in the good of the common man. That is the new hope. You cannot give it to us. That is the new future, you cannot provide for us. That is the new idea we are looking forward to: the common man of India coming into his own. Let us both work towards that end, both nations, so that we may live in peace and friendship and let the unfriendly sword rest in its scabbard.

Mr. C. P. Lawson (Bengal: European): Mr. President, Sir, I listened with great interest and appreciation to the speech which has just fallen from my Honourable friend Diwan Chaman Lall. With him, Sir, I also feel a deep consciousness of the effect of the political situation on the Finance Bill that we are now discussing. The question of the revenues of the country is after all a matter of administration and it would be unwise, indeed absurd to pretend that that administration is not vitally affected by the general political situation. I am conscious too of the enormous effect of a nationalist spirit behind the administration of the country and I hope most sincerely that that nationalist spirit will pervade the administration and actuate it fully. But, Sir, while I appreciate the effect of politics on administration and in particular upon the Honourable the Finance Member's proposals, there is a spectre at our feast which will not be denied. That spectre will not be denied whatever your politics dictate. It is the spectre of famine. We on this side are by no means happy about the situation. We are told that we are facing a shortage of some six million tons of food grains which I calculate to be something like a year's food for 40 million people. In the face of that situation I cannot feel that there is at present being shown in any side of the House a proper appreciation of the seriousness of the situation. I feel, Sir, that the matter is still being considered as academic and almost as if it was a danger to come and not a present danger. We are being treated largely still to gestures, the gesture of Government hostels being told that they must have two pieces of bread with a meal, the gesture of private gardens being ploughed up for vegetables, the possibility of the vista being ploughed up, bad though the ground may be, to grow vegetables. Now, Sir, I in no way object to gestures but I like them to be linked to reality. I like, for instance, to think that what you are doing is either going to be an outstanding example which is going to bring something definite and substantial by its example or that it is a specific saving which is going to matter that is going to result. Otherwise I feel that we are still rather playing with the subject instead of doing something really vital and really effective. I am reminded of the story of the Chinese gentleman who was taken to lunch at a quick lunch place in New York. He was rushed here and there and given a quite substantial meal, and his host said to him afterwards, "There now, was not that magnificent? You had a four-course lunch and it was all concluded in ten minutes!" The Chinese gentleman replied, "Yes, I agree, but how now shall we more profitably spend the time that we have saved?" I feel rather the same way about these gestures to which we are at present being treated. If we have a definite cut in rations all-round I am very glad that it should be so; let us meet the emergency that way. But I am still wondering what will be the result of arbitrary gestures of this sort,—two bits of bread here, and so on. And at the same time I wonder what will happen to your various vegetables grown under private auspices unless there is some methodical method of marketing their produce. But what I am really after, Sir, is less gestures and more real stuff. We are up against an emergency and, as far as I can see, that emergency is being tackled very largely by the Agriculture Secretary Sir Pheroze Kharegat and by the Food

[Mr. C. P. Lawson]

Member when he is here or, when he is ill, by the Food Secretary Mr. Sen. I cannot help feeling that this is a matter which has got to be tackled not departmentally but by Government as a whole. I have been much impressed by the Finance Member's methods of dealing with black markets by his demonetisation ordinances, and the like. Now, Sir, it would be idle to pretend that there are no black markets in food, and I would hate to put a figure on the amount of food that may be underground. I do not know where it is; it may be underground in the villages, it may be in godowns, it may be in private houses. As I said on a previous occasion, if everybody in this country were to put aside a month's food, five million tons of grain would be taken from the market. I am going to suggest to Government that they should tackle this matter as a matter of first-class emergency upon which not merely the efforts of two departments shall be focussed but every department should focus its full attention and think out a plan to meet this situation. I am quite convinced that by taking the powers which they can take they can do a lot to deal with the whole situation as it stands. I am perfectly convinced that something can be done in the way of registration of stocks just as the Finance Member forced the registration of high denomination notes. I do not quite know how it is to be done—I am not in the administration—but I feel that something can and something should be done.

And, now, Sir, I am afraid, I must come back again to my old hobby-horse of fish. I will not pretend that either I or my party are in any way satisfied with the explanations that we have received. I am going to quote to you a relevant portion of Sir Pheroze Kharegat's speech, and I apologise to him in advance for what I fear will be perhaps a little bit of rough treatment. He said:

"A great deal has been said about fish, and here I would like to place before the House the difficulties that we have encountered. I too had thought in the beginning when we started that all we had to do was to go to the sea or to the rivers and catch the fish. They were just waiting there to be caught and brought in. We approached the fishermen; they turned round on us and said, 'Where are the boats?' So we started building boats for them. Having got the boats they said, 'Where are the nets?' We asked, 'Can you make them?' They said, 'Give us the twine'. And so we went to the mills and got them the type of twine that they required and supplied them. Then they said, 'We want hooks'. So we had hooks made in the country. They were used exactly for one day and the fishermen came back and said, 'Your hooks are of no use to us'."

Now, Sir, would anybody in the world take that account to indicate dynamic energy? (Several voices: "No.") I do not need to come to this House to be told that fishermen require boats and nets and hooks. I quote it because here you have an enormous inexhaustible source of supply. If we think that we are going to get six million tons of grain from abroad we are barking up the wrong tree; we will never get it or anything like it. So, for Heaven's sake, let us use to the greatest possible advantage such sources of food as are available to us. I refuse to believe that it is impossible, if necessary, to get from abroad trawlers and folks to go out into the sea with sufficient ice and ice machinery to bring the fish in. I refuse to believe that plans cannot be produced by folks even in this country who know the fishing industry and can bring the stuff in. The tanks can be stocked, the rivers can be fished and the seas can produce an infinity of food. I would like to know whether any scheme, for instance, of technical trawler fishermen's systems from abroad has been contemplated, if there is any difficulty of producing it in this country. Sir, we must not leave this question to the academic mind of what I may call the head of the Imperial Council of Agricultural Research. This is not a problem for him; it is a problem for a keen dynamic business type of mind which wants to get the stuff and wants to make it available to the people. It should not be left even to Provincial Governments. This Government have got powers if they like to take them and they can see that things are done. I do most earnestly hope that this matter will be taken up rather more dynamically than it is taken up now. We do not want gestures, we want big ideas and a big job done. Now, Sir, that deals largely with the matters that I wish to raise in respect of food. It has been debated before and so I do not want to waste too much time on it, but I raise it in this position in my speech because I feel it is one of the things which may turn the country upside down. If there is a bad famine, if forty million people in this country lose a year's food, God knows what the result may be.

And now Sir, I want to spend a very little time doing what for my Group is a most unusual thing, and that is to make a rather political utterance as it effects my community. The House is not used to hearing political utterances from this side of the House. Our reasons are of course that, to a large extent, there are problems which might be said to be hardly our business but equally it might be considered that this was due to the fact that we were not interested, or it might be thought that we preferred rather more quiet methods of negotiations, not in the public eye. Both of those suggestions would be incorrect. In the first place, we are most vitally interested and in the past twenty-five years in every step of the reforms we have combined to make those reforms a success. We have sat now together with our Indian friends in this House and in other Houses for a long time; we have made friendships that I hope will last longer perhaps than we shall. Sir, we shall go on co-operating in these reform steps; we shall combine in the next step, and we shall do all in our power to help in producing in this country what we consider to be a very important thing not merely for us, but for everybody, and that is stability. We in this Group are mainly concerned with commerce and industry and frequently we come under the lash of the other side on these grounds. Exploitation as far as I can see becomes largely a matter of colour. You may be an exploiter on the one hand or you may be a captain of industry developing the resources of the country on the other. But let me leave that point. The fact of the matter is that it is to our benefit and to everybody's benefit that there should be in this country a workable and a stable constitution, and that, Sir, is the aim that we have in mind and an end towards which we will do whatever we are permitted to do to help.

Now, Sir, in these discussions which are coming we shall play our part on that basis. We shall ask for no special concessions for ourselves as a community. We shall ask only for those forms of protection which will protect everybody without sufficient voice in the legislatures to protect themselves, or indeed those who have no voice at all. We shall ask only a fair field, and no favour, and we shall ask that there shall be no expropriation to deprive us of our livelihood in this country.

Sir, I hope most sincerely that we have seen the back now of the hatred and the bitterness that appeared in the press and on the platform at the end of the war. I hope that is a bad dream which is now behind us but I must mention it because people of my community have been attacked; people wearing European dress have been attacked for that reason alone. I cannot believe that that is the form of freedom for which this country is seeking, and I know that my friends opposite condemn it as much as I condemn it myself. But I must point to the result; the result of such happenings as have occurred cannot but make more difficult the unavoidable issues which will shortly come up for solution, issues which concern Great Britain and India. It is by that means that the atmosphere will be vitiated and indeed civil disorder on its own can do no more than put the clock back. I am hoping most sincerely that the moderate and wise utterances that have come from political leaders in respect of these disturbances will be most carefully headed and that the disorderly elements, who perhaps are seeking disorder for disorder's sake, may be kept in check by the nationalist leaders of the people themselves.

[Mr. C. P. Lawson]

Now, Sir, I have mentioned the possibility that it may be thought that we were working perhaps with one party, perhaps with His Majesty's Government privately, for special terms. I wish here also to lay that ghost for ever. It has been made perfectly clear by Sir Stafford Cripps that our possessions, indeed, our future in this country would not be made a constitutional prerequisite to a constitutional change. Also, Sir, it has been some times suggested that by allying ourselves with one or another party we might secure from that party certain guarantees of protection to ourselves in the future. I ask this House to acknowledge in all truth that we have never sought such alliances. We have sought stability wherever we have been represented and as long as the Government was stable and was just we have supported that type of Government. We have never asked for office and we have never asked for the loaves and fishes of office, but we have served in these legislatures, and I hope that we have served well. How long we shall go on serving is a matter for India to decide, but I hope that this House and the country will realize that our assistance is here for the asking if it is wanted.

Sir, we have sometimes been asked to interest ourselves in the partition issue in this country. We have not done so for obvious reasons, but when the time comes we shall do all we can to assist in the settlement of that issue too. I will content myself at the moment with saying this only that a solution will not lie in the complete and full achievement of the policy of any one party. It will come only by a mutual giving way on either side. Sir, that is all I am going to say about the partition issue that a complete realization will I think show us no path to solution but when the time comes, if we are able to do so, we shall do all we can to see that this issue is settled so that this country may realize a stable form of Government which is what we are out to produce if we can.

Now, Sir, as I have said before I do not know how much longer we shall be here to assist in the Legislatures of the country. We are not ashamed of the part we played in this country as traders and honest traders. We have opened up the resources of this country, we have supplied employment for the people and taxation to the State and I at any rate will never attempt to apologise for this part. We hope we shall be able to continue to serve this country in the future

Maulana Zafar Ali Khan (East Central Punjab: Muhammadan): Surely you are not going to quit India?

Mr. C. P. Lawson: as we have served it in the past. Sir, we are on the brink of big events. Today the Cabinet Mission leaves for India and events are crowding upon us at a speed with which is almost frightening. We can only hope that the corner which is ahead of us will be turned successfully and it is the most vital issue that confronts us. Around that corner there is a path to complete freedom in its best sense, a freedom of compromise and a freedom of progress. There is also round that corner another path to failure and chaos. I cannot do better, Sir, than conclude my speech with the earnest hope that the leaders of this country will be given wisdom to turn that corner and to take the path which will lead them to happiness and freedom and not to chaos.

Khan Bahadur Habibur Rahman (Tirhut Division: Muhammadan): Sir, this budget which the Finance Member thinks is a socialist budget is not a poor man's budget. It will benefit only the industrialists with whom the Government want to have an alliance for trade purposes. Now when the British Government has declared the self-liquidation of their power in India, the best they want is to keep their trade interests intact and this is reflected in the budget. Sir, I do not know if the Finance Member knows or has got the means to know the views of the man in the street. But I may tell him that the masses in general are hard hit with direct and indirect taxes. The statement at pages 65 and 66 of the Explanatory Memorandum on the budget exhibits the relief given to the income-tax payers. I would not mind if the relief given to the income-tax payer was upto the level of 18,000 or even 20,000. But when it is raised to the level of 60,000 and beyond, it is something which I cannot contemplate with happiness, especially when it is proposed to partly recoup this loss by raising the tax on betel-nuts. I may say here that this will fall mostly on the poor. The relief afforded to the poor people on kerosene oil is so small that instead of benefiting the consumers it will benefit the sellers and their agents. If, however, railway freight is reduced then this along with the reduction proposed could give some relief to the consumers. As it is in the villages, the people have to pay for one bottle of kerosene oil more often than not twice or thrice the control price. Therefore, the proposed relief on kerosene oil instead of benefiting the consumers would go to fill the pockets of the agents and the black-marketeers.

Now when the war is over, everybody had hoped that the prices on postcards and envelopes would be reduced. This would have been a welcome change and would have benefited the public in general and would have added more to the comforts of the poor especially.

Owing to a number of circumstances, there has been large migration of population and a very large number of the poor has been living away far from their families. They cannot write or hear from their families regularly because of the high price of postcards and envelopes.

Now that Rs. 93 lakhs have been sliced off from the Information Department, I hope the Government will use this saving for lightening the burden of taxes on the poor.

Mr. Krishna Chandra Sharma (Meerut Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): The budget has been discussed for a fairly long time and practically every item and every aspect of it has been debated on. Taken as a whole, it may be said to the credit of the present Finance Member that it is certainly an improvement over the pre-war budgets. It goes further than the pre-war method of static equilibrium but it falls short of that economic dynamism of social purposes necessary to meet the situation. It is not a bold and expansionist budget. Looking at the transition period, war has ended now eight or nine months back. The United Kingdom and the United States of America have done a great deal to provide employment to the demobilized soldiers, and to those people who were working in the war industries and they are meeting the situation bravely. But in India they have not only failed to meet the situation but they let more difficult problems to crop up and are facing now more critical situation. New problems are arising and Government incapable as they are do not seem to move at all. This is an alarming situation. Compare the performance of this Government with that of other countries. If honesty is necessary in the personal life of an individual it is much more necessary in matters of public administration. Therefore the honest course open to my friends on the other side is to quit the office and leave the job to those who can do better and meet the situation boldly. It is no use making pretences. They cannot do the job, they are incapable of doing it and it is no fault of theirs either. They are creatures of circumstances and hence cannot face boldly the facts as they are today. The other day my friend Sir Edward Benthall showered encomiums on his Indian colleagues. He called them loyal, courageous and complimented them for having won the war. But he failed to see what the Indian people on whose behalf they are said to have won the war thought of them. They may be loyal to you, not to us. They had had our copper but they went away to fill their pockets with gold. Do you think we can believe in them. Can anyone who has any brain think even for a moment that such men, in the history of any country, in any clime or at any stage in a nation's history, can meet the situation boldly. They are incapable of meeting the situation and their remaining any longer in office is a dishonesty, dishonesty to themselves and dishonesty to the country. Loyal they may be to you but they are guilty of treason to the people on whose behalf they are sitting there.

[Mr. Krishna Chandra Sharma]

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Leave it to history.

Mr. Krishna Chandra Sharma: Sir, the history has given its verdict and now the only course open to my friends, who the Honourable Member said were so loyal and courageous, the gentlemen who have won the war for him, is to quit office.

Two essentials arise for consideration. The first is the liberty of the individual. If you cannot ensure liberty for what are you here? In the life of a nation as in the life of an individual there comes a crucial moment and it is the decision at that time which makes or mars the future of either the individual or the nation. This was the time when war was declared on our behalf against the wishes of our people. Our men, our resources were called in aid to help a war which to our mind was meant for strengthening the chains of slavery. The Congress on behalf of the people of this land demanded a declaration about the aims and objects of that war. We were, frankly speaking, suspicious, as rightly we should be, of the intentions and motives of our rulers, because the only light for a mortal being is the lamp of experience. We fought the first Great War for them and sweet promises were made to us. What was the result? Jallianwala Bagh, murders, inhuman humiliations which India had never experienced in her whole history. Our children were made to crawl on their bellies in Amritsar. This was a wrong which India could not forget and no country could forget and we have not forgotten after so many years. With that experience we demanded a clear and unequivocal declaration of the aims of this war. "War was to be won" was the only answer. Instead of standing by our side, instead of playing an honourable part and adding their voice, however feeble it may be, they went straightaway to our rulers. They had had our copper and we had only copper but they wanted gold. They are now loyal people, they have won the war. This is the crux of the situation. We cannot willingly supply them the wherewithal to carry on the administration. The situation is difficult but only bold people can face it bravely. It is not a situation which the present members of Government can meet but the representatives of the people, the people who came at the call of the country, who bravely fought its battle, who gave it the stature, who brought this country to the place which she occupies today, it is they who can solve the problem. It is men with the sanction of the people, men with courage and popular support who can solve these difficult problems, not the people who change sides and weigh the copper and gold. Such men have never solved great problems in the history of the world. They will never do in the history of any nation, human nature being what it is. It is idle to think that this personnel will ever be able to do anything. They failed because they were bound to fail and they would ever fail. So the only course open to them, as I pointed out, is to quit office.

The people at a critical time react and take a stand. What did they do then? India had its own stand which was different from what the Englishman said. We would not have been a nation had we been silent. We would have had no place in history or in the world if we had remained silent after war had been declared on our behalf. We raised our voice and said to the world "What the Englishman says is not what we say. 'Our stand is different'." And for this, our friends, those loyal and courageous friends sent us to prison. They misrepresented us; they made huge false propaganda against us in foreign countries. But great as the issues were, and having strong feelings as the country had and the awakening we had, the country could not be silenced by sending a number of people to jail. Two years passed and the country rose in revolt. It was in revolt against what the Englishman was doing on behalf of the country against its will. The country rose in revolt and our friends, instead of having wiser counsel, embarked on an era of repression. What was the result? There was a reign of terror, feast of blood and orgy of loot, raging throughout the country, and India experienced things which probably no country in the world has ever experienced. Much is talked about German atrocities. But if you go to Ballia and Azamgarh these German atrocities pale into insignificance . . .

Mr. President: Will the Honourable Member come to the present administration and the Finance Bill?

Mr. Krishna Chandra Sharma: Very well, Sir. I am referring to these things merely to point out that the only course open to these gentlemen is to leave office here because they cannot inspire confidence in the people.

Mr. President: That point is already made.

Mr. Krishna Chandra Sharma: So my respectful submission is that they will not be able to inspire confidence in the people; and if they have no sanction behind them, they cannot meet the situation as it ought to be met.

Having said all this, I now come to the problem of food. As far back as 1942, there was a Food Production Conference and this conference recommended an increase in the area under food crops and fodder crops, by bringing new land, including fallow land, under cultivation, double cropping, diverting land from non-food crops to food crops and increase in the supply of water for irrigation by the improvement and extension of existing irrigation canals and the construction of additional wells, the extended use of manure and fertilisers resulting in increase in the supply of food yielded. This was in 1942. If they had the will and the courage they could have done a lot. It was known to them that Burma had gone out of their hands, and that the Bengal famine was a possibility. But they slept, they did not meet the situation; they did not take courage in their hands and they did not move. They made lame excuses as at page 12 of the report. The result was that 35 lakhs of our people died in the Bengal famine. Now, three years have passed, and the position is worse than it was before. There is a shortage of food, as my friend said, to the extent of about 6 million tons of grain. Import to that extent is an impossibility. You have to meet the situation from the resources at our command. I dare say a bold man who can inspire confidence in the people and has the courage to face the situation boldly can meet it. What is there? Such vast lands are there. In the U. P. and in Bihar and in Bengal; and even in Madras; the water level is not very deep. In U. P. I know that in the three days three people can dig a kutchra well and they can get irrigation for the crops. Of course you cannot have cereals in such a short time, but you can have substitute foods, you can have vegetables; you can have many other things that can reduce the quantity of cereals to half the necessary quantity for consumption; and with a systematic well organised propaganda it can be brought home to the people that it is not necessary that they should take so much of cereals; and with that propaganda and with that procurement of food, whatever is available by paying higher prices to the people who are expected to have some grain and selling it cheaper to the people, the situation can very well be met in no time. There are short term crops which can be grown in six weeks, in two months; but a bold move is required. I submit, Sir, this present Government is incapable of moving boldly and quickly. I therefore submit the only course open to them is to quit office; this is the only straight and honest course and men who have the courage and who have the confidence of the people and who have stood beside the nation—they only should take up the job and do the needful. Sir, I have done.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee: Mr. President, I feel that speaking on a day like this I labour under two serious handicaps. The first is that I am a nominated member and the longer one goes on this House, the more one feels what a terrible handicap that is. Sir, a nominated member is neither good fish nor fowl. If he supports Government and then pleads, as he often can, that he has done so because government were right or that His Majesty's Government must be carried on, then, he is made the object of ridicule both by Honourable friends opposite and in the press. If, on the other hand, he opposes Government and votes with the opposition, then in some quarters it is felt that he is not playing the game. After all he does owe a duty to his electorate or in this case to his nominators. That is my position. That is my first great handicap and my second great handicap, which, I think, is an even greater handicap is that I should have to represent here a religious minority, that I should have to speak in the name of 7 millions, or according to our computation 8 millions of people and be the only one here to speak for and watch the interests of those 7 or 8 millions of people spread all over India.

Sir, I have always refrained, as you may have noticed, from asking questions on anything which gives a communal tinge or asking questions about the interests of my own community in the public services of the land, but I feel that on an occasion like this it is up to me to state what their view point is. I do not think I should waste any time in trying to persuade you to believe whether I really represent the Indian Christian Community. I fully believe that I am voicing the majority opinion of my own community. I claim that I am an average member of my community, one of them, and thinking alike with the thinking part of my community, I feel that today we stand on the threshold of great events and I believe it would be of some use if I ask for your indulgence to give to the House and to you, Sir, a full expression of our point of view, of our hopes and fears in the new India which we hope is beginning. The question of minorities in this country or in any other country is one of the thorniest of problems which face Governments. It is also a position of the greatest difficulty and of serious handicap to minority communities themselves. In the very first place, I would like to say this, that so far as my community are concerned, humble or poor or weak or scattered though they may be, we have not the smallest desire to stand in the way of the progress of our nation. We welcome that progress and we are entirely at one with them and we have always been at one with them. Now, if I say anything about our own viewpoint, it is, as I say, unfortunately the viewpoint of a minority labelled under a religious label, a label which I very much deplore and which the majority of my community would also deplore in the field of politics and in matters of national importance. I am not referring at all to my Muslim brethren because they claim that they are a nation and therefore not a minority. Sir, I am a believer in self-determination. If a particular community wishes to be a separate nation, it is up to them and whatever I say does not apply to them in the least, I only wish to state our own position. As I have already stated, our position is that we wish to march with our country. We want to be and we have always felt that we are completely identified with the rest of the country. We ask for no safeguards, we ask for no special reservations either in education or in any other sphere of public life.

Now I come to the two or three main problems which face every community in this country. The first question is the representation of a minority on the new legislatures which are coming into being and which I trust will come into being very soon. We stand and we have always stood for joint electorates. We do not desire either nominations or reservations. We do not want that we should be given so many seats as Indian Christians. Nobody can realise more than I can during the several years that I have been here, the futility of trying to protect the interests of any community, if you separate them from the body politic. If one or two or even ten members were here, representing the interests of my community, what good would that do as compared to the good they would receive if they had the good will of the nation as a whole. That is the position which we take, that is the position which we have always taken and even now I hope that such position would be taken up in a united India namely that a man would be elected by a joint electorate. If it is not practicable, if that is pure idealism as most people here would say, then I would say let us make a beginning in that direction. Let us have reservation of seats for particular interests in elections to be held by joint electorates. May I ask my friends who will probably soon be here, whether they are prepared to begin with a panel which may be elected by the particular community concerned which seeks representation and from that panel the joint electorates should elect their representatives. That surely is not very much to ask but I hope the day will soon come when none of these reservations and none of these panels will be necessary.

Next I come to the question of representation in the services. So far as my community is concerned I wish to say most emphatically that we wish to stand on merit and merit alone as the test for entry into the public services of the country. I have urged it before and I urge it again here that the public services of this country should be selected from the best material available. As regards the Civil Service which may not be very highly thought of these days, I feel that even for the Civil Service when there was open competition we got far better men than we do now. I mean no disparagement to the men already here but that is the general opinion. As one who has spent all his life in education, I feel that there should always be a fair field and no favour. You may prescribe whatever test you like. You may add a number of marks for the assessment of character if you can so assess character. You may add marks for personality, if you can assess personality in a short interview. But let me say that so far as the public services of the country are concerned, they should be recruited as a result of open competition. That is what we ask. I have said before and I say again that very often appointments are given either because of a man's colour or because he belongs to a religious community and in proportion to the nuisance value of his religious community. We would like to have no reservation. We realise under what handicaps the minorities have to work. Take all the high offices of the State. Take the Municipal Chairmanship in Delhi which is nearest from the place. The Senior Vice-President and the Junior Vice-President hold office for three years and they have to be alternately a Hindu and a Muslim and nobody else can have a look in. In the same way take the high offices of this land. We have to admit that there is always a member of the majority community elected or appointed. I do not say that they are not able or they are not abler than members of minority communities like mine but it is a sad thing that a man should know that while being a national of a country the greatest offices in the land are denied to him because he does not belong to a particular faith. We may have a high or a low opinion of a person but the fact remains that the high offices in the land are closed to all except members of the majority communities. I am making no grievance of this. These are some of the handicaps which minorities have to suffer from, but I hope that a day will dawn when a man will be appointed to an office or elected to a legislature, without any regard to his religious denomination, or to the religion he professes. To have any other test in the field of politics or in the field of public services is entirely wrong, entirely incorrect and if that mentality does not disappear, minorities will always be a thorn in the side of the Government of the day and the nation.

Now, I ask for no safeguards. I believe a safeguard written down in a constitution is not worth the paper on which it is written down. The only safeguards which minorities can have, the only safeguards which are worth having are the good will, the trust and the confidence of the nation, and though I fully realise the truth of this I am going to speak on one point, in talking of safeguards, I wish to present to you a serious fear which is in the minds of some members of my community. That is, Sir, their fear that a time may come when their religious liberty, and by that I mean the liberty to profess their religion and to worship in the way that religion enjoins them to do, may become difficult. That is, Sir, what I should like to put to you, as one of our greatest fears and we hope that the nation will rise, and that those who will shortly be in power will rise to that height to ensure that no man in this country shall suffer or be prevented from exercising his religion in the way he has learnt to do and for performing the observances and rites and sacraments of his religion in the manner in which he has been taught and has been brought up. Sir, we have heard with great grief in some places of the burning of Churches. One in Calcutta, another of the burning of the Salvation Army home in Bombay. Not for a moment, do I ascribe these tragedies, these most unhappy things to any thinking man of any other majority community. Do I, Sir, ascribe it for a single moment to leaders of public opinion who have already condemned such things. But such tragic events which mob violence produces, create a sense of fear in the minds of minorities. These outrages which I referred to have been condemned by the President of the Indian National Congress, all honour to him. They have been condemned by Muslim leaders, all honour to them, but I would have liked, my people would have liked a wider condemnation. I would have very much liked to have seen a condemnation from the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition in the matter of the burning of the Church at Calcutta. It would have carried much greater force because he is an eminent and a leading citizen of Calcutta. Do I blame my Honourable friend Mr. Asaf Ali for these things. Not at all. Nobody has ever suspected him of any kind of any tinge of communal feeling. But I should have liked a public statement from him declaring that he emphatically condemned these acts. This is the only safeguard which we very much desire. I have tried to make the position of my community clear on important matters, in the matter of election to legislatures, in the matter of public service, in the matter of religious safeguards. It might be said that I have probably changed or that my community now realising who is going to get into power have begun to express views quite different or that we have altered overnight. At the risk of a personal reference I should like to read a few lines which appeared in a leading article dated so far back as 28th December 1928 in the Hindu of Madras. The Hindu was commenting on my presidential address which I delivered at the all-India Conference of Indian Christians held at Madras, the day before. This is what the Hindu says:

"It is only fair to say that while defending co-operation with the Commission, (that is the Simon Commission,) Mr. Chatterjee has emphatically endorsed and supported the wise and patriotic attitude of his Federation in setting himself against communal electorates and nominations. Mr. Chatterjee strikes the right note when he says, 'we fully realise that till such a time as religion or what goes by the name of religion continues to dominate Indian politics, the Indian Christians have little chance of securing any adequate representation through joint electorates either on the legislature or local bodies'. But in all humility we are prepared to face this handicap for a time. So far as our particular community is concerned, in response to a higher duty to the nation as a whole and in the full hope that if we are called upon to make a sacrifice it will not be in vain."

Now, Sir, when the Simon Commission came here, a number of important organisations and communities refused to co-operate with the commission. Sir, in our politics we are what are called responsivists, that is we believe in responsive co-operation. I was then a Member of this Assembly and I took a small delegation to the Simon Commission, to meet Sir John Simon and his colleagues. There again I want to show what our demands were, not in any words of mine but through the columns of the Hindustan Times. The Hindustan Times can never be suspected of any special partiality to myself. This is what the Hindustan Times wrote in a leading article on 29th November 1928 under the caption, "A study in contrasts". They said:

"A delightful study in contrasts is presented by the memorandum presented by the Anglo-Indian and Indian Christian communities to the Joint Free conference. . . . The Indian Christian memorandum is characterised by a breadth of vision, a nobility of outlook which deserves the unstinted praise of all patriotic Indians. It is a pleasure to see such an exhibition of moderation on the part of a minority community when most minorities are setting up such a plaintive howl for communal privileges and perquisites. The Indian Christians have adopted a truly patriotic attitude, and have said that whatever disabilities such a step may impose on them, they are quite prepared to scrap communal electorates and the pernicious principle of nomination. By their courageous stand on these two points, the Indian Christians have set a conspicuous example of self-sacrificing patriotism which has evoked a mead of praise from even Sir John Simon."

Now, Sir, I have tried to put before the House, before you and before my like one's own trumpet. My only object was to show that the opinions which I save today expressed were held by my community and by myself as their only representative in this Assembly so far back as 1928.

Now, Sir, I have tried to put before the House before you and before my Honourable friends opposite the position which my community desires to stand by. As I said earlier, we all believe in responsive co-operation, and I give him the fullest assurance that not only our co-operation, but also our steadfast loyalty and our best services are at the command of our nation, at the command of any Government which will be by law and constitution established in this country.

Finally, Sir, before I sit down, I should just like to say one word about the Finance Bill itself. What I desire to say refers to what I just now said namely that we believe in responsive co-operation. I believe that this is the highest ideal which any man or any community can adopt in political, national or even in religious matters, in other words that we should be prepared to co-operate with all men of good will. Wherever and whenever there is good will forthcoming we should not turn it down merely because we are sore over the past or because the past has left us an unhappy legacy. I plead, Sir, today not that my pleading has any great value. I am fully aware of my humble station in this House and in outside life, I do not presume to advise my Honourable friends opposite. Far be it from me to do that. But I would submit that we have a Finance Bill here on this occasion which to my mind is a very good improvement, in fact a transformation over former Finance Bills that I have seen here. Here is a Finance Member, I have got nothing to gain from him, but I do feel this that we have a Finance Member here who has not grown rich at the expense of India, he has not been here long enough to be called a sun dried bureaucrat. He has been here for a very short time. We also probably should not forget that his predecessor was getting Rs. 6,666-6-6 and the present Finance Member is getting Rs. 5,000 a month. We therefore cannot accuse him of wanting to make money out of India. He has never asked for dearness allowance, as far as I know. He pays income-tax as an honest citizen. I feel that when he comes to us extending his right hand of friendship, since he has been responsive to our criticism of his Bill and has done his utmost to bring it up to what popular opinion desires, since he has in all these matters taken popular element in the House into his confidence and has done his best, I feel, Sir, that it would be a sad thing if the Finance Bill were to be thrown out. It may be said by my Honourable friends opposite that it has become a custom for the last few years. I shall refer them to Tennyson and say that they should realise that one good custom corrupts the world. We have now entered into a new order of things let us change this custom on the threshold of new things.

An Honourable Member: From next year.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee: I think it should be this year. There is no time so good as the present and I think it would be fair and graceful that we should pass this Finance Bill because I believe it has been framed in the best interests of the largest number of people of this country, and that it is an honest effort on the part of my Honourable friend to solve the financial problems of India. I therefore support the Bill.

Hajee Chowdhury Muhammad Ismail Khan (Bakarganj cum Faridpur: Muhammadan Rural): Mr. President: I am no financier dabbling in high finance nor an industrialist interested in import and export quotas nor even an abstract economist, who can with incisive insight analyse and expose the implications of the Finance Bill and its effect on the economy of the country. I am a layman, a man in the street, and as such the outlook I can bring to bear on the financial proposals for the ensuing year are those of the average citizen, a very poor citizen, and how he reacts to them.

[Hajee Chowdhury Muhammad Ismail Khan]

[At this stage Mr. President vacated the Chair which was then occupied by Mr. Deputy President (Sir Muhammad Yamin Khan).]

Sir, a few days ago, over the Income-tax Bill, there was an exchange of bouquets as between the Honourable the Finance Member and a front bench Member of the Opposition. The latter was complimenting the other on his wisdom and foresight in giving a grant of 25 per cent. (half from the Central Government and the other half from the Provincial Government) to the encouragement of building activities. Though this concession was meant according to the speech of the Honourable the Finance Member "to enable suitable houses to be constructed for the poorer classes of workers who are not in a position to pay a full economic rent" a construction was brought to bear upon the proposal which would not enthuse very much the poorer classes for whose benefit the concession was intended. It was thought that the grant would encourage 'enterprising capital' to become more enterprising. Such a prospect is not very reassuring for the poor man, who knows too well that enterprising capital becomes very enterprising only where the returns involved are what it considers 'adequate' and profitable. I would therefore warn the Honourable the Finance Member that if this tendency is not checked the purpose of the grant which he has proposed would be defeated and the poorer classes would be left as helpless as they were.

Sir, I hail from a rural constituency of Bengal and as such my primary concern is the economic condition, welfare and amenities of the villager or the peasant. "India" the Honourable the Finance Member has said in the opening paragraphs of his budget speech "is still confronted with a whole array of dangerous and enduring enemies—poverty, squalor, ill-health, illiteracy, under-nourishment and under-employment and of these the most formidable is poverty." Yes, India's poverty is the keystone of the arch of misery under the shadow of which we live and breed. Has the Honourable Member's tax proposals done anything to alleviate the poor man's misery, though I know no Finance Member can wield the magic wand and eliminate poverty overnight. Looked at from this point of view I must express my keen disappointment. The villager's primary concern are his food, his clothes and a few other necessities like kerosene, cheap postcard, salt and last but not least, betel nut, the poor man's luxury. In regard to every one of these items his condition is as pathetic and unrelieved as it has always been. His food and clothes are daily problem, not so much due to lack of purchasing power as due to their unavailability. His postcard still costs him as much as before, though this House has been clamouring for its reduction for near two decades. His kerosene is as scarce as it has been during the war and its price has had an inconsiderable reduction, salt stands where it has always been and his betel nut, the least considerable luxury, is subject to an excise duty. Where, I ask, has the poor man had any consideration in the Honourable Member's Finance Bill? The higher income levels have had their relief in income-tax and in other ways but the poor man is the neglected and unconsidered under-dog that he has always been.

Let me now, Sir, turn to the subject, 'Food', which engrosses now all our attention to the exclusion of anything else. From all that we have heard from His Excellency the Viceroy, from all that is said by international statesmen and the press in and outside this country and from our daily experience too we understand that a scarcity and famine of unprecedented magnitude is staring the country in the face, before which the Bengal famine of 1942 would appear as mere picnic. One of the causes attributed, at any rate, to Indian famine, is the growth of population and the inadequate food-growing resources of the country. But may I ask the powers that be whether population has grown only in India and in no other part of the world? Has not Russia grown in population all these years (though of course there has been depletion due to war) and if so, how is that despite all the ravages and destruction of war she has an exportable surplus of foodgrains, in regard to which the other day we requested the Government to make representations to His Majesty's Government, so that India might get at least a moiety of it. Ours has been a sad tale of neglect, despite all the propaganda that has been made in regard to Grow More Food and the committees and conferences that have been held. As in politics so in every other sphere of this Government's administration the words "TOO LATE" are writ large on its activities. I only pray that the frantic last moment efforts that are being made to obtain foodgrains from abroad will bear fruition and the threatened disaster will yet be averted. But in the meantime Government's long term plans for the avoidance of similar catastrophies should be prosecuted with feverish vigour, for there is bound to be a continuously growing population in the country as in any other country and every time scarcity or famine is threatened to plead the growth of population as being the cause or to attribute it to the vagaries of the rains would betray a bankruptcy of foresight and wisdom and apathy towards the interest of the people on the part of the Government which would in time create a deluge that would sweep them root and branch. Cultivable land which is lying waste at present is not lacking in the country. Man power is not short in a country subject to chronic unemployment among the rural population. As to co-operation from the public on no other question has there been such absolute, unconditional and unanimous support from among all parties as on this question of food. Granting the honest will, an earnest drive, an uncorrupt and incorruptible administration of measures designed in this regard together with the unreserved and wholehearted co-operation that all parties are prepared to extend, I see no reason why India could not tide over the crisis with confidence.

Sir, closely connected with the problem of food is nutrition and health and India is the country most woefully deficient and neglected in either respects. It required a war to ginger up the authorities to appoint a Health Survey Committee under the Chairmanship of Sir Joseph Bhore, to invite experts from abroad and to produce a report suggesting measures for tackling a problem, in attention to which all these years has been eating into the vitals of the nation. The Bhore Committee report is an excellent report but however good a report might be its utility and success depend upon the working of it. It is to be earnestly hoped that both the Central and Provincial Governments will implement the proposals with vigour and see that nothing stands in the way of the early fruition of the results expected out of them.

Next only in importance to the problem of food is the cloth famine and in this matter, I believe, there is no part of the country which can be called a surplus area and another deficit area, though of course the scarcity varies in degree from place to place. My part of the country is perhaps the most afflicted in this matter and has been so for a very long time without even the proverbial silver lining to the cloud. I am aware that the grim spectre of the impending food famine has overshadowed this problem for the present but it is none the less urgent. In our helpless state in regard to food I learn that some of the countries from which we have to import foodgrains stipulate in return an export of cloth from this country at a time when the country can least afford to part with even a yard of cloth. Hunger added to nakedness is the cruellest fate that can befall a country. I hope Government is sparing no endeavour to increase the production of cloth by all means possible, whether through mill's or hand-looms and also are trying to import as much cloth as possible at least to tide over the present crisis. For long term plans in this connection import of capital machinery, and replacement of over-worked and aged machinery in the country are the primary needs and I hope Government is giving first priority to this matter.

Talking of industrial development, Sir, I would like to bring to the earnest consideration of Government one submission. As the House is aware many industries have developed in this country during the stress of war and lack of imports. There is a tremendous drive in England for the export of consumer goods to other countries, particularly to India and, in fact, export is a matter of life and death to the United Kingdom. In any import programme of this country care should be taken to see that only such articles are imported as would not prove deleterious to the interests of the nascent indigenous industries. The first duty of the Government should be the preservation, consolidation and stabilisation of those industries which are useful as much in peace as they were in war. Even in regard to the import of other consumer goods the country's long term industrial expansion programme must be kept in view and wherever possible import of capital goods should have priority and every effort should be made to see to the installation of capital machinery for the manufacture of consumer goods in India to make the country self-sufficient as early as possible, at least in regard to such articles as are necessary for the population's normal existence. This war has taught India, if anything, how helpless she is in regard to some of the essentials of human existence if imports from outside countries were cut off. Such a situation should not be allowed to occur on any future occasion and the country's preparation towards self-sufficiency should begin in right earnest immediately.

So far I have talked about subjects of all-India importance but before concluding let me touch on some of the problems peculiar to my own community. First in importance is of course the adequate representation of Muslims in the services. This, some Honourable Members may say, is a hardy annual. But it is bound to be a hardy annual until such time as the community is satisfied that they have had their legitimate and adequate share in the services of the country. The other day on the cut motion moved by my Party the Honourable the Home Member acknowledged that if he were a member of my community he would certainly feel dissatisfied with the rate of progress achieved so far in securing the proper representation of Muslims in the services. He therefore assured the House that he meant business this time and that he was trying to evolve a system of running check to see that the representation of minorities in the services does not suffer for avoidable or untenable reasons. I hope he would be able to announce his plan to the House before this session concludes, although at the time he was not sure that he would be in a position to do so. But the members of my party would feel reassured before they return to their homes that something worthwhile has been done by them during this session of the Assembly.

In this connection may I make bold to voice the grievance of my province, I mean the Muslims of Bengal. It is said to reflect that the Bengal Muslim's case has always gone by default in the services of the Central Government for what reason I cannot imagine. I do not know whether it is because Bengal is a far cry from Delhi or because she is less clamant than others. Bengal was the first to come into contact with English education, she was the first to have English colleges, she was the pioneer in all the services of the Government and in fact she has been the pioneer in all the forward movements of this country. Her Muslim boys are not whit inferior in education, aptitudes, attainments and skill to their brethren in any other province. But despite all his tradition, his history and attainments he seems to be the 'Harijan' in the Central Government service. Among the Muslim Executive Councillors at the Centre my friend the Honourable Sir Muhammad Azizul Huque is the first Bengalee Muslim to hold the post and perhaps he is there because Government could not get a Muslim nearer home. I am sure my Muslim friends from other provinces will support me in my plea on behalf of the Bengalee Muslim. It is a claim based on justice, and equity and well deserving of recognition at the hands of Government by virtue of our young men's education, intelligence and ability in all walks of life.

Another hardy annual, Sir, which is peculiarly the concern of my community is the Haj pilgrimage. This has been the subject of a full length speech by the Deputy Leader of my party last year and several questions both last year and this year. I understand that the number of pilgrims this time is going to be the largest for several years, perhaps because peace conditions have come and there is a little superfluous money available in the country. I do not wait to talk at length on this subject. Government is not unaware of the difficulties and grievances of the pilgrims. I earnestly hope that this year the Government will do their utmost to see that every facility in regard to shipping accommodation, embarkation, exchange and other conveniences are secured to them with foresight and sympathy. In addition I strongly urge that Haj Pilgrims should now be enabled to embark from the port of Calcutta.

This year, 1946, is said to be a momentous year which will be full of outstanding and epoch-making events. The deliberations of this House are carried on under the shadow of the Cabinet Mission that is shortly visiting India to settle, we hope, finally the problems that mean life and death to the millions of this country. It is not for me to express opinions on the great problems that are going to be discussed and solved. It is for my leader to give us the guidance and the lead. All that I can do as a humble follower is to pray that in the eventful weeks of discussion, negotiation and decisions that are to follow justice, wisdom, sagacity and statesmanship will inspire the deliberations conducted and the decisions arrived at.

Sri Bhagirathi Mahapatra (Outtack cum Puri: Non-Muhammadian): Sir, in connection with the proposals made in course of the budgetary provisions of the Central Government for the year 1946-47 I shall, with your indulgence and that of the House for this my first attempt to speak out, make the following observations:—

Sir, the Honourable the Finance Member refers to the transformation of International and domestic scenes through the utter destruction of the Fascist forces in the course of the last year—1945—after a protracted and worldwide conflagration of six long years. None would deny the change for better in other countries which are favoured with their own Governments and specially in Britain, where the end of the war witnessed the fall of the Churchillian Government at the first crush of the new thought-currents and the establishment of a Labour Government. But what is the change for better here? Is there any transformation in the domestic scene here? If any, the change is for worse and far worse than what it was when the war was on. True that during the war years, millions in our country knew only miseries, hunger and destitution, quite apart from the millions that met their ends through famine—man-made famine of 1943—and pestilences caused by the war and apart from those hundreds and thousands of Indians who gallantly sacrificed their lives in various theatres of war in the Near, Middle and Far East and on the Italian and German soils with no other results than prolongation of the slavery of India and her millions had to go through innumerable sufferings and hardships to no purpose. In spite of all fond hopes the termination of the war has not brought India her freedom so solemnly promised by the powers that still want to hold on. Other countries of the world which have been more or less affected by the war have settled down to occupy themselves in reconstruction and recuperation. They had neither to suffer from the pangs of hunger when the war was on nor when the war was over because they have their own national and responsible governments. But here in India after the war was over a famine hundred fold intense and acute, in comparison to that of 1943, stares us. Sir, this is the most burning problem that absorbs a common man's thought—this is the most vital problem—the food problem—which we will have to face with all its grimness and rigor.

Sir, let me briefly touch the various causes of food shortage—famine euphemistically and administratively called. The increase of our population at rapid strides has been regarded as the first of all other causes. Sir, true it is that the population of India has increased by 32 per cent. in half a century. But in Britain specially during the same period the increase is by 54 per cent, and in other countries generally the increase of population is far greater than that of

[Sri Bhagirathi Mahapatra]

India. Britain could check the soaring of prices of commodities and of food-stuff and the increase was only 25 per cent. whereas in India the increase of prices of necessary commodities was 3 to 4 hundred per cent. So there is no ground to infer that the increase in prices is due to increase in population. Experts like Kale, Mitchell and others hold that "there is every reason to believe that by making full use of her resources India could support a far larger population than at present".

Sir, India is still an agricultural country despite all tall talks of industrialisation and have got immense possibilities in the direction of expansion of agricultural field by well recognised methods of cultivation. But in the words of the Woodhead Commission:

"These can be developed only by the efforts of human beings—by the Government and the people of India."

"A great responsibility rests on the Governments and the Government servants of all grades in organising and stimulating the work of nation building. The duties of modern Government extend far beyond the maintenance of law and order; they include within their compass social and economic development in all its aspects."

But, Sir, to take into account what really happens, one must say that the much advertised Grow More Food Campaign has been carried on as a half-hearted and face-saving measure in which, in the words of the Woodhead Commission, "the results achieved by the Grow More Food Campaign during 1942-43 and 1943-44 have not been spectacular." A campaign for Grow More Food had been adopted by all other countries at the very start of the war, but in India it was started after the war was on for three years. The reason for all this is not far to seek and that is nothing but the stern fact that India is governed by an irresponsible, impersonal and consequently heartless and inefficient bureaucratic system, both in the Central and Provincial administration.

Sir, so far as the campaign for Grow More Food is concerned, there are some essential matters to deserve notice. The present land system should be revised and improved and the agricultural labour is to be encouraged to pronably devote their whole attention and energy to large scale production of foodgrains and foodcrops. The producer should always get the remunerative price for his produce. Material resources, say availability of land and of skilled agricultural labour are there, the State must take proper and adequate steps and effective measures in time to give them facilities and in no time India can be made self-sufficient in her food supply. But at present the State is apathetic in making plans and still more halting and ineffective in carrying them out. The people have no confidence either in their plans or in the method the State suggests. Thus a government enjoying the confidence of the people can only stimulate the process.

Next comes the baffling question of irrigation, manuring and availability of agricultural tools and implements. Irrigation is the most important part of the plan. Sir, if I refer to my own province which is widely known to be a place of chronic flood and famine, I can make bold to say that the problem of irrigation and consequent control of flood against annual damages to crops through inundation have not received the attention that it deserves either of the Central or of the Provincial Government. Lands covered by sand deposited on them through annual floods have been paying rents although they have been rendered unproductive for years. In this there is no uniform policy. I mean an All-India policy. Thousands of acres of land bordering the rivers of the "Mahanadi", "Bramhani" and "Baitarani" have become sandy and unproductive due to heavy floods year after year, but no effective remedy in the direction of controlling the floods and utilising the water in well-planned projects of irrigation has been adopted, though flood expert committees have been appointed by the Government of India since 1927. This is by way of illustration. It is well known that every province suffers from this havoc of constant and annual flood and overflow of water and droughts and consequent scarcity of water causing damage to agriculture and to any regular yield of crops. For this up till now nothing substantial has been done on an All-India basis.

The necessity of exporting foodgrains outside India, which had to be resorted to during the war years under the specious plea of provision of foodgrains to Far East and Middle East, does not now exist and it is now obligatory upon the Government to see that all-out sincere efforts are made to stop export of foodgrains from India for years to come. But it is futile to believe that this will be complied with unless the Government at the Centre changes its colour. Even before the war India was not self-sufficient in her requirements of foodgrains which had therefore to be imported to a small extent. During the war years there were shipping difficulties. Secondly the loss of imports from Burma caused by Japanese occupation of Burma had been also regarded as a direct cause of the Bengal famine and general food shortage. But these difficulties are now non-existent. To meet the present requirements of foodgrains for the Indian people, the Government have to seriously move for sufficient import of foodgrains from other countries. Requirements of foodgrains for the increase in defence services and of the influx of population on that score, which still continues, are also to be taken into account. Normally, India, should import one and a half million tons of foodgrains net every year in the terms of the Report of the Gregory Commission. According to present calculation of experts, the deficit of foodgrains in India stands to be near about two million tons. Therefore it is now imperative upon the Government to discontinue export and to facilitate imports of foodgrains.

Sir, here I may incidentally raise the question of national shipping industry. The absence of a national mercantile marine has also been felt during the Bengal famine of 1943, so fresh in our memory. The lack of proper and prompt shipping arrangements was then used to be regarded as a cause of delay in affording facilities for transportation and importation of foodgrains from abroad. Had India possessed a mercantile marine, Government of India could have easily stood up against a corporation like the U. K. C. C. which, supported by British vested interests, had monopolised the normal channels of trade usually controlled by Indians themselves. In connection with this important industry of shipbuilding, the Government of India, under instructions from "Home" made a definite declaration before the Council of State in April 1941 that they had no intention of encouraging shipbuilding industry even as a part of the war efforts. We have seen during the war years that America could build four ships a day, dominions of Australia and Canada developed their shipbuilding industries, but we were not encouraged by the powers that rule our destiny to build even one ship during these many years of war. The underlying reason is the helplessness of the Government of India which is always dominated by the Home Government. The then Commerce Member to the Government of India, Mr. N. R. Sircar said in this connection:

"One cannot help feeling that had adequate steps been taken to promote the development of an Indian mercantile marine and an Indian Navy our country would have been in a position to play a larger and more effective part in overcoming Axis aggression. . . ."

I hope the lessons of this war will not be lost upon us and that every effort will be made to help to develop Indian shipping and shipbuilding industry. One can very well conclude from this that the Government itself is utterly helpless and anti-national in character and is bound by the dictation of the Home Government anxious to safeguard the British vested interests in India.

Sir, due to corrupt and inefficient administration, the last world war of 1939-45 has been, so far as India is concerned the cause of enriching the rich and impoverishing the poor. Against one thousand and one ordinances and rules under the Defence of India Act, black-marketing and profiteering are openly indulged in and the present Government are not only incompetent and inefficient to check the anti-social activities but betray stolid indifference in dealing with their own men held to be widely participating in all such activities as bribery and corruption and thereby encouraging all anti-social elements in their nefarious methods. Controls and procurements are not effective. They lead to profiteering and all sorts of corruption and they help only those who have got enough and trouble those who do not have anything. The system of control that now prevails in so far as foodgrains are concerned can never succeed unless the popular co-operation is secured and unless the Government remain alert to check black methods aided and encouraged by the officials concerned and unless the outlook of the Government changes and the Government becomes a responsible government instead of a government not enjoying the confidence of the people at large.

The last but not the least important of the causes that have brought about this famine condition and a general food shortage in our country is the indiscriminate expansion of currency and the consequent inflation. The currency circulated rose abnormally. The figures show an increase of 1,000 crores in quantity between the 1st September 1939 and September 1945. It was 170 crores in September 1939 and it rose to 1,151 crores in September 1945. This produced its natural economic effect on the prices of the commodities and specially led to the high prices and unavailability of food stuffs.

Pethic Lawrence, the present Secretary of State for India, has opined in the course of a parliamentary debate "The main cause of the increase in price ~~and~~ inflation and for that inflation the Government of India and nobody else could be held responsible." The money increased in quantity and the volume of goods remains stationary thus leading to the fall in the value of the money and an abnormal rise in the prices of materials. Money became cheap and goods are dear. There is therefore a necessity for adopting methods for contraction of currency in such a way as will not harm the production. The steps may be gradual but needs to be taken. There is certainly no move on the part of the present Government in that direction.

Sir, with regard to the next important need of the people, let us briefly examine the Government's policy. During the first few years of the war there was rise in production of cloth by 20 per cent. The annual output before the war was 4,269 million yards and in the year 1941-42 the output went up to 4,493 million yards. But the civilian and military needs also increased abnormally. The stocks that had accumulated with Indian mills in pre-war days met the preliminary and immediate demands, but when the war continued, the cloth shortage came into existence towards the end of 1942 and onwards up till now.

In spite of bringing into being the Cotton Textile Advisory panel and other allied committees and introduction of "standard cloth" and rationing system, the Indian mills could not meet the demands of increasing population caused by the influx of large contingents of military personnel from abroad here and the same increase has been continuing up till now and consequently there is a terrible cloth shortage. At the time of the Bengal famine millions of semi-starved beggars roamed about in the open streets of Calcutta either semi-clothed or completely naked. In this matter also the present administration has miserably failed.

Sir, turning our attention to the direction of industries we find that India has not been made to take advantage of the war time exigencies, which other interested countries have been able to take. It is a fact that industries have been neglected in India for many generations. In the United Kingdom the annual per capita income from industries is about 600 out of the total per capita annual income of about 1,000, in the United States the corresponding figures are Rs. 830 out of Rs. 1,187. But here the income is only Rs. 65. The reason is not far to seek and it is this: that the Government of the country have never tried to encourage indigenous industries. During the war years a number of industrial missions from England and America visited India. The report of the Roger Mission was not shown to the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce. The Grady Mission from America demonstrated more frankness in their dealings with business people of the country but their report still remains unpublished.

But what the investigation carried on by these missions led to? So far as India is concerned, with all her natural resources, unlimited man-power, she remained where she was, simply due to her political dependency, while all the self-governing countries and dominions made incredible progress in their industries through the joint efforts of their governments and peoples. The Indian industrialists were helpless, they had high hopes of expansion of Indian industries during war, but their hopes were shattered and they were convinced that only a national government will be able to help them and help industries of all types—small or heavy—to thrive. India, the ancient land of civilisation, with all her natural wealth, men and material can restore to her large population of 400 millions a decent life above want, if resources of modern scientific methods are utilised in all departments, health, agriculture, industry and communications and that is not possible without a real national government and without wresting of real and effective political power from our foreign masters.

Sir, side by side with this grim spectre of starvation and nakedness, this want of food and cloth—the two barest necessities of life, there is the appalling darkness of illiteracy. One, in every three villages, has got a primary school and in every 100 square miles there is a middle school. In very few selected areas—e.g., some municipal or contiguous areas—one finds compulsory elementary education. Ten persons at the most in every hundred can read and write. This is the boon of over 150 years of British rule. So far as collegiate and higher education go, that has made the recipients forget the link with their own culture and genius and has made them so many blotting-sheets of western modes and ways of life.

After the war was over for over six months and in spite of a Labour Government at "home" and with all their advocacy of freedom for India, the same old policy of the Churchillian and pre-Churchillian days is being followed.

Mr. Deputy President: The Honourable Member must conclude. He has already had two minutes more.

Sri Bhagirathi Mahapatra: Just two more minutes, Sir. Our tried patriots like Jai Prakash Narayan, Lohia, Bakshi, Jaglal Choudhuri and Surendra Dwivedi are still behind the bars. The representatives of this Labour Government ruling over India have been insisting on putting the men and officers of the Indian National Army to trial in the name of law and discipline. Their crime was their love of this country and their attempt at throwing off the yoke of foreign domination and defending and protecting their people against the then Japanese aggression. These trials are being carried on for the last three months in spite of the countrywide strong and vocal opinion against these trials and for a general amnesty to the I.N.A. men and officers.

During the first Great War big hopes were aroused in the minds of the Indians by the August Declaration of 1917 which still forms the Preamble of the Government of India Act of 1935, vis., "the gradual development of self-governing institutions with a view to progressive realisation of responsible government in India." But after the treaty of Versailles India had been rewarded with the Rowlatt Act and all that followed in its wake. The needs of the Far East and of India were all forgotten; nor was any solution of the political and economic problem of the people made during the thirty years that passed. So far as political status is concerned, India stands where it stood in 1917. During the second Great War one recollects the faint-hearted and humiliating declaration of 1940 and of the much-vaunted Cripps Proposal of 1942 leading to a strong sense of desperation and nation-wide frustration which found its outlet in the unprecedented mass uprising of August 1942 and in the sacrifice and untold sufferings of millions of people. Only a foreign rule has retarded all national progress in India, despite the opportunities that were offered by war time exigencies. It is admitted that the entire social and economic structure of our country has received a terrible shock, which can only be undone by an intensive and extensive programme of rehabilitation. To achieve all this, we urgently require our own national government instead of this alien government, and complete freedom of India.

With these observations, I conclude my speech.

Babu Ram Narayan Singh (Chota Nagpur Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I get up to oppose the consideration of the Finance Bill. Before I begin my speech, I repeat the protest which is so repeatedly made in this House against the absence of Government members. Sir, the Finance Bill does not concern the Finance Member only. During its discussion of this Bill all Government activities throughout the country come under examination. Members will speak sometimes on this subject and sometimes on that and it is for the Government to reply to all those points. But if they are absent they cannot do it.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: The clerk is taking notes!

Babu Ram Narayan Singh: I think the other members and secretaries also should be present all along in the House when the discussion is going on.

Sir, in view of the coming events the tone and tenor of the speeches have been naturally tempered. When we find and hear that something great is going to happen in this country in the near future, it is difficult to talk as we used to talk about the Finance Bill. In today's morning paper I find that the Archbishop of Canterbury and 9 Bishops have issued an appeal to all classes of people in Britain for prayers for the success of the British Cabinet Mission to this country. I also wish them God-speed and I think all lovers of the country wish them God-speed; but they must remember one thing. If they are really sincere to make the country free, it is not difficult. They may leave the country any day. They will find no difficulty whatsoever in doing so. Whatever difficulties they point out, they must remember are their own creations. I take it as a fact that there are disunions and disunities in the country; but everybody knows and I think the Cabinet Mission in their heart of hearts also must be knowing that all these disunions and disunities are the creations of the British Government in this land. I therefore give a word of warning to the ministers coming that if they really want to free India they can do it easily and they should do it even at the risk of a probable civil war in this country

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon (Sind: Muhammadan Rural): Why do you not do it?

Babu Ram Narayan Singh: It is altogether foolish and unpatriotic to talk of civil war in this country after the British will go. But supposing if there be any Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: You forget that Mr. Patel said the same thing.

Babu Ram Narayan Singh: But if there be an any, I think it will be in the process of there being a permanent good to the country. I therefore repeat again the only course for the good of India is that the British should leave the country. The Finance Member has submitted the Finance Bill to this House for our consideration. I object to his very right and title to do so. All pundits of constitutional law and experts on political philosophy agree that existence of a government presupposes certain laws according to which any government can aim to have been established. This so-called government also claims to have been established by law. But the world knows that there is no such law in this and according to which this government has been established and in which law the will of the people has been expressed. According to all political jurisprudence law is defined as nothing else but the will of the people expressed in terms of law. As I have said before, there is no such thing in this country. Similarly, it can very well be said that there can be no government in this country. Let them be called anything, but not the government. In the absence of a government, the submission of a Finance Bill in the constitutional method by a Finance Member does not arise. It is better for him and this will be a practical thing, to withdraw the Bill. They are strong enough, they are powerful enough, they can realise any amount of money for their purposes from the people of this country. They have been looting the country, they have been extorting money from all classes of people in any manner they like. Then what is the use of this farce? As we find, this kind of government is something not only unlawful and illegal, but it is also unnatural. The result is miseries all over the country, misfortune all over the country. Everybody is suffering from the tyranny of this government. Only the other day Mr. Churchill said in his speech in America that it was the British people who first placed the government in their proper place as the servants of the people, and not their masters. Yes. This was done long ago in England, in the British isles. But what is happening here? What to speak of the people on the Treasury Benches, they are big people. In the mufassil what do we find? Even the lowest servants of government, even constables and police sub-inspectors consider themselves as the masters of the people. They never think in their mind that they are the servants of the people and that they should discharge their duty accordingly. They always think in terms of masters and nothing else. The result is that they cannot even arrange for the food and clothes for the people of the country. There has been a hue and cry all over the country that there is no food and no clothes. The Government ask for our co-operation. This also is a foolish talk. Why do they want co-operation. Is there any co-operation between a cattle and its owner possible. Government consider the people of this country as property belonging to them. They never consider the people as their equals or masters whom they have to serve. Co-operation is possible between equals who are working for a common object but here the Government want something quite different. There should be no talk of co-operation any more in this country. Either obey or be obeyed. There is no half way house. In my own province of Bihar the paddy crop has failed. There is a shortage of food everywhere. The import quota of the province has also not been received for the last three or four months. The result is that people are suffering from want of food. I have been receiving letters almost every day that such and such a place is in utter want of food but helpless as we are we cannot do anything and above all there is one thing, and that is the realisation of the National Savings Certificates which is going on. Can there be anything more inhuman than this. For that, I think Sir Archibald Rowlands, the Finance Member is directly responsible for the mischief which is being done there. People are starving. There is no food and no clothes and still the realisation of the national certificates is going on. In his speech the Honourable the Finance Member said that the purchasing power in the hands of the people had enormously increased and that the consuming public had been anxious to make effective use of its spending capacity. He said that in other words there were still pockets of inflationary forces which required to be closely watched and controlled. This is a wrong belief which is at the root of this trouble in the province. He feels that the purchasing power of the people has increased. I therefore say that at the helm of affairs in any country should be those who know the country perfectly well. My Honourable friend does not know the country. I am a Congress worker. I move from one place to another. Where is the purchasing power of the people. People are starving and suffering for want of clothes and the Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands says that the purchasing power of the people has increased. I asked him in private—please explain to me this and I request him again to explain to the House how he considers that the purchasing power has increased? I know during wars some people have got more money. Their purchasing power has increased no doubt. For instance war contractors have got more money and along with them Government officials who were connected with them also got money for they shared half the profit. Their purchasing power has increased. Along with them some labourers have got some money and their purchasing power may be said to have increased. Besides these people, it is possible that some cultivators who grow more than what is necessary may have got something which may have increased their purchasing power but their number is so small that it is negligible and it may not be counted. There are people who have not more corn in their houses but they need to purchase many other necessary things and hence they sell but it cannot be said that their purchasing power has increased. In the same way if we examine the question in detail, we shall find that a very small number of people may have got more money but the Finance Member said that the purchasing power of the people in general has increased and it has to be controlled. I think this is altogether wrong and it is rather dangerous. We know how money is realised from the people. They are asked to mortgage their land and to sell their land and their cattle and other belongings and thereby to pay to the Government by way of National Savings Certificates. In fact the money is extorted.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: I hope that is out of date. If you can give me recent examples, I will investigate them personally.

Babu Ram Narayan Singh: I am stating this as a fact. In my constituency of Chota Nagpur, in the area of Hazaribagh in the Chatar sub-division about six lakhs of money were realised by extortion.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Not in the last 12 months. It has been stopped now.

Babu Ram Narayan Singh: I am talking of the last year. People are suffering in all possible ways but the money is extorted from them and I think this has got to be stopped. When we think of the coming events, we feel pleased and proud but when we see all these things as to how the present Government is working, our heart is full of dismay and disappointments. This is not the way to help the people. Sir, I am an old member of the House.

Mr. Deputy President: The Honourable Member has only two minutes left.

Babu Ram Narayan Singh: Only ten minutes are left. I do not think any other Member would like to speak now.

Mr. Deputy President: If the Honourable Member takes any extra time, it will be debited to his party.

Babu Ram Narayan Singh: All right, Sir, I shall finish it now. As regards the Finance Bill I will only say that the principles of taxation ought to be direct. Tax people as much as you like but let people know what you tax them, why they pay, what amount they have to pay and so on. That is the principle of direct taxation. But indirect taxation is something like stealing. People do not know what is taken from them as tax. Take salt tax for instance. Salt tax is a blot on the British financial policy. By salt tax you tax every morsel of a beggar's food. This salt tax reminds me of a proverb:

Andher Nagri Chaupat Raja; Take ser Bhaji, take ser Khaja.

Chaotic town, idiot King, two pice per seer vegetables, two pice per seer sweets.

If the Honourable the Finance Member says that he is an expert in principles of taxation, I think, he is not. He does not know whom he should tax. So far as indirect taxation goes, only luxuries should be taxed. Tax motor car, tax many other things which are matters of luxury. But do not tax every morsel of the beggars food. It is inhuman. I request the House to make all possible attempts to remove this salt tax altogether and come to any terms possible with the Finance Member, we may even allow the Finance Bill to be passed, only let the salt tax go. I think the Finance Member will agree to this. With these words, I oppose the Finance Bill.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: Mr. Deputy President, this morning I listened with great admiration to the speech of my Honourable friend Diwan Chaman Lall, but I am sorry to say that he tried to ignore the Muslim League organisation. He tried to argue that the Congress was the only organisation which can deliver the goods.

Some Honourable Member: Did he say so, Sir? Question.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: I will explain presently, if only my Honourable friends have the patience. My Honourable friend Diwan Chaman Lall tried to force the hands of the Government and asked them to come to a settlement with the Congress, ignoring all other parties in India.

Some Honourable Members: No, no.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: Diwan Chaman Lall in his speech this morning said that the Congress was the only party which can afford to cross the floor and take the reins of Government.

Some Honourable Members: He never said that. You have misunderstood him.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: I listened to his speech carefully, with great attention.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Mis-statement of facts.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: No. The Congress party today in this House has decided to throw out the Finance Bill. Great publicity has been given to that in the Press and it was stated on the floor of the House that it was being thrown out because of political reasons. The Congress party has decided to do so because the Indian National Congress has decided so. It means that the Congress party in this House has given no consideration to the merits of the Finance Bill. As far as I am concerned, I may say it should be considered on its merits. I am not here to say what the attitude of the Muslim League party will be. I would request the Finance Member to see his way to understand the point of view of the Muslim League Party. After all this Government has got to be carried on. It may be that this Government is an interim Government for the period till my Honourable friends to my right who are anxious to cross the floor take the reins of office into their hands without coming to an understanding with any other party in India and who are now trying to force the hands of the British Government, with all the force at their command, but I am sure it will not be so easy for them to do so. May I then suggest to the Finance Member that this Government is to be carried on and if it is to be carried on, why not have the goodwill of those members of this House who try to put forward arguments, who try to put forward their ideas and suggestion before him.

As far as the Planning and Development Department is concerned, it was after 18 months struggle that 29 panels were created. When Sir Ardeshir Dalal took charge of that Department, the people in India felt confident that as a businessman he would do his utmost to see to the reconstruction and development of India. The men in the panels were nominated by the Government without consulting or approaching any organisations or industries which were interested. Some of the Members who were put on the panel do not even know the A, B, C of the Department or the industry in which they were serving. However, we have not seen the reports of these panels. They have not even been placed before the House. The Honourable the Member for Planning and Development who is new to his Department said the other day, please wait and then judge me. But he has not yet placed the report of any panel before the House for judgement. I feel that it is high time that the Members of the Assembly are taken into confidence. We should be told what steps the Government are going to take to carry on the plans which are being put forward through this Department. I notice that the Government are trying to lay down the location of all these industries. Textile mills, vegetable ghee plant—all these are being located without reference to the province and without reference to the different centres where these will be wanted, without deciding whether these will be suitable at those centres. This is altogether absurd. A businessman who has studied a particular area in which that industry should be located should be allowed to proceed normally. Even without giving him a definite data, whether raw material will be available, simply because a particular area has no textile mill or that it has no vegetable ghee plant, he should not be forced to open mills there. I must say that the Planning Member does not even know the programme and the policy which different Departments are going ahead with. He is today acting simply as a post office.

Mr. Deputy President: Order, order. The Honourable Member may continue his speech tomorrow.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Wednesday, the 20th March, 1946.

(c) if the system is likely to be introduced at an early date?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) Yes.

(b) Yes, with a view to discouraging travel.

(c) The question of the re-introduction of such tickets will be considered when conditions of passenger travel return to normal, but this is not likely to be at an early date.

1088. Sri E. Venkatasubba Reddiar: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state if it is a fact that repeated representations have been received for re-modelling the Cuddore N. and the passengers are exposed to severe sun and rain as platforms are not covered?

(d) Are Government aware that the first mentioned station is a District Headquarters station and the other has got the Headquarter of a Sub-Collector's Division?

(e) Are Government aware that the daily earnings at each of the above stations are near by one thousand rupees?

(f) Do Government propose to re-model the stations at an early date?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) and (f). The reply is in the affirmative. The remodelling of the two stations has been included in the post-war plan during 1947-48 and 1950-51 respectively.

(b) There is a rather out-of-date common waiting room for both men and women at these stations. The platforms are not covered. The provision of more waiting accommodation for 3rd class passengers, separate waiting rooms for upper class passengers to modern standards, and covered platforms will be considered when the remodelling plans for these stations are taken in hand.

(c), (d) and (e). Yes.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Have the Government planned to remove those defects and remodel all the stations on the South Indian Railway?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: That does not arise out of this question.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: It arises in this way. The Honourable Member said that the remodelling of these stations had been included in the post-war plan from such and such period to such and such period. To avoid similar questions that may come up, I would ask the Honourable Member to let the House know whether all such defects in various stations are covered by the post-war scheme?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: There is a general plan, but I should have to answer questions in respect of each station separately.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Has the scheme been prepared in consultation with the Railway Advisory Council or with the Standing Finance Committee?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: No, Sir.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Will that plan be placed before the House at any time for discussion as to what the needs are?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: No, Sir. It is a matter for the local Advisory Council.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Has it already been sent or is it going to be sent to the Local Advisory Council?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I could not tell you whether these particular stations have been discussed by the Local Advisory Council, but it is a local matter.

Sri R. Venkatasubba Reddiar: The Honourable Member said that it had been included in the post-war plan during 1947-48 and 1950-51. Will the Honourable Member expedite putting up those shade on platforms, if possible?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: There is a programme covering the whole line phased as in the case of these two stations.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Is it a complete five-years programme or is there going to be another programme for a later period?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: No, Sir. Railways have prepared a programme covering the whole Railway, but it cannot be done at once, and therefore it has been divided into different years.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: I want to know whether the period of time is divided into two periods covering five years each in which all the defects are to be removed?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: So far as I can recollect it is a five-year programme to begin with.

CONSTRUCTION OF RAILWAY LINE FROM JACOBABAD TO KASHMORE THROUGH UPPER SIND FRONTIER

1089. Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state:

(a) whether it is a fact that Government have sanctioned the construction of a broad gauge line from Jacobabad to Kashmore;

(b) whether it is a fact that Government or the North Western Railway have received a representation from the people of the upper Sind frontier that the Railway line from Jacobabad to Kashmore should go through from Thul to Khandhkot via Karampur and Jhounspur;

(c) Whether it is a fact that Government or the North Western Railway have received a representation from the people of the upper Sind frontier that the Railway line from Jacobabad to Kashmore should go through from Shikarpur or Habibkot to Khandhkot via Khanpur and Ghauspur;

(d) what action Government intend taking on the above representations; and

(e) whether Government propose to construct these lines as suggested in the representations; if not, why not?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) The conversion of the Jacobabad/Kashmore narrow gauge line to a broad gauge line is a project approved for investigation.

(b) and (c). Representations referred to by the Honourable Member have been received both by the North Western Railway and by the Railway Board.

(d) Suggestions of this nature would be considered during the investigations.

(e) Decisions could be taken only after the survey reports have been received and duly considered.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: May I know from the Honourable Member how long this survey will take because, I believe, it has already taken about seven months?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: The actual field work has not been started. I think it is a fairly long line, and I doubt if it could be finished in this surveying season.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: It is about 40 miles only.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: May I know whether the survey report will be placed before the Standing Finance Committee for consideration?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: The procedure is that all these projects are ultimately placed before the Standing Finance Committee.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know if it is a new line or is it in place of a narrow gauge line?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I refer the Honourable Member to my answer to part (a) of the question.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Is it a general scheme to convert all meter gauges into broad gauges so that there is a uniform standard for the whole of India?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: No, Sir.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Are individual cases taken up from time to time for the purposes of connecting two broad gauge lines?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Not necessarily. Each case is considered on its merits.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know what considerations have prevailed in deciding to convert this meter gauge line to a broad gauge line?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: The circumstances on the line including strategic requirements.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Have Government considered the financial implications and also the advisability of converting meter gauge lines into broad gauge lines?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Yes, Sir.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: How much has it been found to cost more if all meter gauge lines are to be converted into broad gauge lines?

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is referring to this particular line or generally?

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Generally.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: It is a general scheme.

Mr. President: It does not arise out of this question. Next question.

DISPOSAL OF UNITED STATES ARMED FORCES SURPLUS PROPERTY IN INDIA

1090. Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state if it is a fact that within six weeks of the publication by Government of the details of the agreement between the United States Foreign Liquidation Commission and the Government of India, there has been a radical alteration in the method of disposal of the United States Armed Forces surplus property in India?

(b) What were the reasons for the alteration in the method of disposal of this property?

(c) What is the gross value of the property, in question, in rupees?

(d) Is it a fact that the approximate amount of money that India is to pay to the United States of America is provisionally put at 500 million dollars that is £125 million sterling?

(e) How is it proposed to produce this colossal sum at this juncture having regard to other large financial commitments?

(f) Will Government be pleased to state some of the advantages to India arising from this agreement?

(g) Will there be more than one agency functioning for the sale of surplus goods and how long do Government consider it will take before both the Government of India's disposal organisation and general public are able to adjust themselves to this sudden change in the position regarding surplus stores in the country which involve enormous sums of money?

(h) To what extent will the Indian tax-payers be affected by this financial transaction?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Wagh: (a) and (b). Last September the United States Government authorities constituted a Mission to dispose of U. S. military surpluses in India, Burma and China. The principles on which surplus surpluses would be disposed of in India by the American Liquidation Authorities were agreed with the Government of India on 24th September last, and were announced in a Press Note. On 24th December last the U. S. Government agreed to sell to the Government of India all U. S. Government surplus property in India not already sold or offered for sale by their Foreign Liquidation Commission or withdrawn for military purpose. The reasons leading to this agreement were stated in a Press Release, dated 27th December, 1945, of which I lay a copy on the table.

Discussions as to the means of implementing this block take-over of U. S. military surpluses were carried on during January and February. The results of these discussions were stated in a Press Release, dated 28th February, of which I lay a copy on the table.

(c), (d), (e) and (h). A mission is shortly leaving for Washington to discuss these matters with representatives of the U. S. Government. Meanwhile comment on valuations is not possible, but the Honourable Member will appreciate that book values and residual values are two very different things.

(f) and (g). I would refer the Honourable Member to the reasons for the change set forth in the Press Releases, dated 27th December, 1945, and 28th February, 1946, referred to in replies to parts (a) and (b) of the question.

PRESS RELEASE

27th December 1945.

The U. S. Government has agreed to sell to the Government of India all U. S. Government Surplus Property in India which has not already been sold or offered for sale by the Foreign Liquidation Commission and which will not be withdrawn for military purposes. This agreement was reached on December 24, 1945, at a meeting in New Delhi of representatives of the two Governments.

Exempted from the agreement will be all property which is now in the process of being sold to private buyers, as well as property which may be required by UNRRA up to January 15, 1946. With these exceptions, the agreement covers all surplus property which the Foreign Liquidation Commission has been or will be authorised to sell. This means that the Government of India will take over a vast tonnage of United States property, possibly in excess of 600,000 long tons with a book value probably in excess of $500,000,000.

This figure does not, however, represent the actual sale price, which is to be agreed upon at a meeting in Washington D. C. in January or February 1946, at which representatives of the two Governments will settle questions arising from Lend-Lease, reciprocal and obligations, and other matters arising from the war.

The property will be turned over at dates to be agreed upon between the Commanding General, India Burma Theater, the Foreign Liquidation Commissioner and the Government of India. Dates of turnover will probably be determined by the progressive evacuation of depots now in the hands of United States Forces.

By the terms of this new agreement, the U. S. Government signalizes a fundamental change in its policy of selling surplus property. Heretofore, all sales have been made on the basis of priorities which were set up in the following order:—

1. U. S. Government Agencies and UNRRA.
2. Charitable, educational and religious institutions.
3. Agents or Representatives of American Manufacturers of branded articles.
4. Foreign Governments.
5. General Public.

The Foreign Liquidation Commission, India-Burma Theater has already sold a substantial quantity of surplus goods to these five groups. These sales will go through as planned. The rights of these buyers will be scrupulously protected. However, this system will be discontinued, and all property declared surplus in the future will be automatically taken over by the Government of India.

By means of this agreement the two Governments expect to attain the following objective:—

1. The evacuation of U. S. troops from India will be accelerated.

2. The Government of India will be able to exercise control over the distribution and use of all surplus articles. This will facilitate the necessary adjustment of Indian economy for the vast outflow of surplus materials.

3. Both Governments expect the agreement to further their joint aim of making these goods serve the general welfare of the Indian people.

4. Both Governments are confident that they have taken an important step in international co-operation and understanding.

Not to be broadcast or published before March 1, 1946.

PRESS NOTE

GOVERNMENT TAKE CUSTODY OF AMERICAN SURPLUSES

Conversations between the Government of India and the Foreign Liquidation Commission of the United States Government concerning the subsidiary agreements necessary to implement the block take-over of U. S. Army surpluses agreed upon on December 24, 1945, have reached a successful conclusion and the transfer of custody of these surpluses to the Government of India has begun.

As it is in the interest of both Governments, this transfer of custody will be pressed with the utmost speed in order to supply present demands and avoid excessive deterioration. Early completion of the transfer will ensure prompt beginning of sales to the public, movement of goods from Assam prior to the monsoon and the early withdrawal of U. S. troops from India.

While the conversations just completed were in progress, the exceptions agreed to under the 24th December block take-over have been utilised to satisfy the priority purchasers under the U. S. Surplus Property Act. Those U. S. citizens, firms, agencies, non-profit institutions, UNRRA, in India which may develop new requirements, will be free to purchase from the Government of India on exactly the same basis as Indian firms, institutions and the general public. The Directorate General of Disposals Organisation will be responsible for the movement of surpluses to areas where sales will take place and for the general control of disposal in accordance with the disposals policy of the Government of India. Prospective purchasers should note that none of this surplus property can be sold for the purpose of export to the United States or its possessions except on consignment to a person or firm in the United States for reconditioning for re-export. As agreed to on December 24, 1945, all aspects of the block take-over and the result of these subsequent conversations are subject to review when the representatives of India visit Washington to make final settlement of Lease-Lend, Reciprocal Aid, surplus property and other matters arising from the recent war. It is expected that the representatives of the Government of India will leave for Washington in the near future.

INDUSTRIES AND SUPPLIES DEPARTMENT;
New Delhi, February 28, 1946.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is there any effort being made to pay the United States of America from out of the sterling accumulations in England for these various things that the Government of India is taking over?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: No, Sir.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Why is it that the Government of India are not considering that possibility, in view of the fact that the total amount of money that is to be paid to the U. S. A. is likely to go up beyond 100 million pounds?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: The necessity of considering this question has not yet arisen.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will it be considered at the right moment?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I hope the necessity will never arise.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know whether there is any appeal against punishments meted out in particular cases or whether the person who took the disciplinary action is the final authority?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: That does not arise out of this question.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: It does, Sir. The question asks for the number of employees reduced from the higher to the lower grade or post as a disciplinary measure. If there is a large number of employees who have been degraded from the higher to lower posts, I would like to know whether the person who degrades them is the final authority.

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: The Honourable Member asked for certain figures and I have placed them on the table. If the Honourable Member will put down a question I shall be prepared to answer it.

(b) the reason for the change of name; and

(c) the exact significance of the word 'Tirhut' in the name of the Railway?

From the 1st November 1945 the name has been further changed to "Oudh Tirhut Railway".

(c) The word 'Tirhut' has reference to the former Government line known as "Tirhut Railway" which served a part of Bihar known as "Tirhut" and is now merged in the combined system of O. T. Railway.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: With reference to part (f) of the question, may I know if it is a very long statement? Otherwise we would like to know the various conditions of employment of Europeans and non-Asiatics.

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: It is a rather lengthy statement.

Seth Govind Das: Is it a fact that from the Jubbulpore Factory also certain complaints have come of racial discrimination?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: That does not arise.

Seth Govind Das: It does, because in part (g) it is asked whether it is a fact that Indians are only given subordinate positions in Ordnance Factories?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: For the information of the Honourable Member I should like to state that when pays were reduced in 1931, the pay of Europeans was not reduced, and therefore there exists discrimination in salary, and also in the matter of education allowances, but not in the case of war allowances. At that time the Ordnance Factories were under the charge of the War Department, and I am not aware of the circumstances which led to this discrimination. The question of abolishing this discrimination which exists in no other branch, at present, of the Industries and Supplies Department, is being sympathetically considered, and I think that orders will issue in the course of this year.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Are any efforts being made to increase the number of Indians in the superior positions in Ordnance Factories? In part (g) it is asked whether it is a fact that Indians are only given subordinate positions in Ordnance Factories. I want to know whether any efforts are being made to give superior positions to Indians.

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: Yes, Sir. It is not a fact that Indians are only given subordinate positions. The difficulty has been one of securing really good munition workers with the requisite qualifications. I am glad to say that Indians are holding an increasing number of the higher posts, and one is, in fact, the Superintendent of a very important Ordnance Factory.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: On what ground did the Additional Director General recommend the withdrawal of the recognition of the Association and why did he subsequently withdraw that recommendation?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: The Association addressed in terms which were not in consonance with the rules for the recognition of associations, and they subsequently explained that they meant no offence by this, and therefore the head of the Ordnance Factories withdrew his objection.

RETRENCHMENT OF EUROPEANS AND INDIANS IN ORDNANCE FACTORIES

1095. Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please state the number of non-gazetted officers Indian and Europeans, working in the Ordnance Factories in India and in the Cordite Factory, Aruvankadu, in particular?

(b) Are there any permanent gazetted officers in the Ordnance Factories, European and Indians, and what is the number of temporary officers?

(c) Are there any proposals for retrenchment of officers? If so, how many Europeans and how many Indians?

(d) How many of the existing factories are old and how many were established during the war? Of these how many will be closed now and how many switched on for production of civilian consumer goods or goods for Railway needs?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: (a) There are 2,065 non-gazetted officers in the Indian Ordnance Factories in India. Of these 1,386 are Indians, 162 Anglo-Indians and 567 are Europeans. The number of Indian, Anglo-Indian and European non-Gazetted officers in the Cordite Factory, Aruvankadu, is 33, 5 and 40 respectively.

(b) Yes, Sir, there are 61 permanent gazetted officers in the Indian Ordnance Factories, of whom 60 are Europeans. The number of temporary gazetted officers in the Factories is 257. I might add 87 are Indians and 170 are Europeans.

(c) Yes, Sir; retrenchment is in progress. Actual figures will be available when the retrenchment is complete.

(d) 10 Factories are old and 21 were established during the war. 15 are likely to be closed down. The remainder will be used for both military and civil requirements.

Seth Govind Das: With reference to part (c) of the question, is it a fact that as far as the Jubbulpore Ordnance Factory is concerned, there is no retrenchment amongst European officers and only Indian officers are being retrenched?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I have no information. That may refer to the permanent staff, but I do not think that will be the case with temporary staff.

Seth Govind Das: Is the Jubbulpore Ordnance Factory also going to be closed?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: No, Sir.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Of the 15 factories which are likely to be closed, how many are munition factories?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: Five.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Is there any clothing factory going to be closed?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: Yes, seven.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Will Government consider the advisability of not closing them and using them to meet the requirements of the civilian population?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: Yes, we are already doing that in respect of three factories which are not going to be closed down.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: How many persons will be retrenched by closing these factories?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I am afraid I must ask for notice of that question.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Of the remaining 10 factories how many are munition factories and how many produce consumer goods?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I might explain to the Honourable Member that all the factories to be retained, in fact all the factories now working, with the exception of only three, are engaged in both military and civil production.

Seth Govind Das: Is the Shahjahanpur Army Clothing Factory going to continue?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: Yes, Sir.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will every effort be made to keep in service as many Indians as possible before any of them are to be retrenched?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: Every effort will be made.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Will the Honourable Member lay later on on the table of the House a list of articles and consumer goods which have been produced in Ordnance Factories, so as to give an opportunity to the House to find out if any of them can be retained and make suggestions to that effect?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: The Honourable Member will give me a little time so that I can prepare a full catalogue of the articles that are being made in the Ordnance Factories. The Honourable Member will understand that the work is developing every day. So far, the chief things that have been manufactured are; tools and gauges, badly needed by various industries; textile machinery; road roller equipment; and a beginning has been made with agricultural machinery and house fittings.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Then why is the Honourable Member closing down these fifteen factories?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: We are only closing down factories which by their nature are only fitted for purely munitions work and no longer required.

GRIEVANCES OF INDIAN NATIONALS IN INDO-CHINA

1096. Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Will the Foreign Secretary please state:

(a) If Sjt. Aney and Mr. Dayal visited Indo-China to study the conditions of Indian nationals there;

(b) if the Indian nationals there submitted their grievances and requested for early relief;

(c) whether any report has been sent by M/s. Aney and Dayal to this Government suggesting measures to relieve distress;

(d) if so, whether Government propose to lay on the table the said report; and

(e) what steps, Government have taken to implement the recommendations; if none, why?

Mr. H. Weightman: The reply to parts (a), (b) and (c) of the question is in the affirmative.

(d) No, Sir. The report is a secret document addressed to the Government of India.

(e) The most important of Mr. Aney's recommendations are for the provision of facilities for travel between French Indo-China and India and for the remittance of funds. These matters have been dealt with in my replies to questions Nos. 440 and 441. Mr. Aney also recommended that the Government of India should consider the desirability of providing supplies of foodstuffs and other necessities for the use of Indians in French Indo-China. In view, however, of acute shortages in India and of transport difficulties, which would have involved great delay, it has been decided not to pursue this recommendation. His Majesty's representative at Saigon has, however, been asked to move the French authorities to issue "European style" rations to those Indians who live in European style. Mr. Aney also suggested consideration of the possibility of appointing an Indian Vice-Consul to the staff of His Majesty's Consulate General at Saigon, and this proposal is being examined.

Seth Govind Das: Is there no part of the report which is not confidential and which could be laid on the table of the House?

Mr. H. Weightman: It would be a little difficult to split it up. But what I would propose to do is, when we have completed action on Mr. Aney's report, to issue a press note summarising his recommendations and the action taken.

Seth Govind Das: By what date can we expect this press note? Will it be before the Assembly adjourns?

Mr. H. Weightman: It is a little difficult to guarantee that.

Seth Govind Das: Does the Honourable Member know that this statement may come too late, and we shall not be in a position to consider it or to put any question in this Session of the House, and then it would be too late for the next Session.

Mr. H. Weightman: That is true, but I think the Honourable Member can rely on me to follow up this matter to the best of my ability.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know what particular facilities have been given for the remittance from Indo-China of the funds which were frozen long ago?

Mr. H. Weightman: It has not yet been possible to provide full facilities but arrangements have been made, I think, I am right in saying, for small sums to be remitted from Indo-China by Indians resident there to their dependents in India.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: When does he expect to afford facilities for transmission for all the funds locked up there?

Mr. H. Weightman: That depends on the settlement of the unfreezing of the assets of the Bank of Indo-China.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Who are negotiating on behalf of India with French Indo-China for this purpose?

Mr. H. Weightman: The Commerce Department.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Is the Honourable Member prepared to give facilities to Muslim League leaders to visit Indo-China and Malaya on the same lines offered to Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru?

Mr. H. Weightman: I do not think that question arises from this.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will Government place before the External Affairs Committee of this House a summary of the reports submitted to them by Mr. Aney in regard to Indo-China?

Mr. H. Weightman: I am prepared to consider that suggestion.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: On what grounds are they held to be confidential?

(No answer.)

CONFIRMATION AND DISCHARGE OF EMPLOYEES ON INDIAN RAILWAYS

†1097. Diwan Chaman Lall: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) if it is a fact that committees have been set up on Indian Railways to select employees for confirmation;

(b) whether it is a fact that confirmations are usually made on the basis of seniority and good work as reported by the immediate officer of the employee;

†Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner being absent.

(c) whether it is a fact that confirmations were delayed for long owing to embargo on them, with effect from the 1st June 1942;

(d) whether confirmations are usually made through committees; if not, the reason for this innovation;

(e) if it is a fact that senior employees not selected are to be discharged to make room for ex-servicemen;

(f) whether the Honourable Member's attention has been drawn to a paragraph in the Murphy Court of Inquiry's (1932) Report to the effect that inefficient employees may only be combed out on the basis of departmental inquiry and not searched for when block retrenchment is to be made;

(g) whether the employees who were denied confirmation and finally discharged, will be given an opportunity of departmental inquiry; if not, why not; and

(h) whether Government propose to abandon the system of committees referred to in part (a); if not, why not?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) and (c). In pursuance of the policy of reserving 70 per cent. of permanent vacancies occurring since 1st June, 1942, for war service personnel after the war, persons appointed since that date were not allowed confirmation in permanent vacancies, having been warned at the time of appointment that they have no claim to permanent retention and would have to make way for ex-service men. Selection committees have been set up on railways to nominate from among such persons holding permanent vacancies in a temporary capacity those who should now be confirmed against vacancies, amounting to 30 per cent. of the total not reserved for war service candidates. Subject to the exclusion of persons not considered fit for retention, the criterion to be followed in making nominations is seniority.

(b) Yes.

(d) The reply to the first portion is in the negative. As regards the latter portion, the circumstances governing the appointment of the persons referred to in the reply to parts (a) and (c) above being different from those obtaining in normal times and as the persons concerned were definitely informed that they would have no claim to appointment in a permanent capacity, a further selection was considered necessary.

(e) This is not generally the case. The names of persons who are not successful in being confirmed against the 30 per cent. vacancies will be placed on a waiting list and they will have an opportunity of being confirmed against future permanent vacancies and will have preference in retention against temporary vacancies. Only if neither of these opportunities is available, will they have to be discharged when war service candidates join. The above does not refer to the small number of those not considered fit for permanent retention who will be discharged.

(f) Yes, but, as block retrenchment of persons holding permanent vacancies in a temporary capacity is not contemplated, the question does not arise.

(g) The reply is in the negative. As stated in my reply to parts (a) and (c) above, the employees concerned have no claim to permanent retention, while the Selection Boards insure that no injustice is done.

(h) No, in view of my replies to the preceding parts of this question.

REMOVAL FROM SERVICE OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES WITHOUT DEPARTMENTAL ENQUIRY

1098. Diwan Chaman Lall: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) whether it is a fact that a Railway employee charged with an offence meriting removal from service may demand a departmental enquiry to look into charges against him;

- (b) whether it is a fact that this provision of the rules is nullified by a proviso permitting the competent officer to dispense with such an enquiry if he so desires;
- (c) whether Government are aware that the Railway employees feel greatly agitated over this proviso in the rules;
- (d) whether Government propose to amend the rules doing away with this proviso; if not, why not; and
- (e) the special reasons for insertion of this proviso in the rules; and whether they still continue?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) and (b). A railway servant may ask to be heard in person but the discretion of holding a departmental enquiry or granting the railway servant a personal interview rests with the officer competent to pass the order of removal from service.

(c) Government are not aware of any general agitation in regard to this rule.

(d) No. Government do not feel that the elaborate procedure of a departmental enquiry is called for in every case, particularly in view of the alternate procedure provided in the rules.

(e) It is neither desirable nor administratively convenient to hold departmental enquiries except in cases of a very serious nature. The rule in question is still in force.

STOPPAGE OF OUTSIDE RECRUITMENT TILL ABSORPTION OF SURPLUS STAFF IN RAILWAYS

1099. *Diwan Chaman Lal: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) the number of employees in each category of subordinate service directly recruited after the 1st September, 1945, up to date on the North Western Railway;

(b) the justification for recruitment from outside, when there is said to be surplus staff on the Railways;

(c) whether it is a fact that certain posts in the Survey and Construction Branch of the North Western Railway, have been advertised through press; if so, whether the Honourable Member is aware that there has been sharp difference amongst officers on the principle of outside recruitment versus taking men already in service; if so, what action is being taken in the matter; and

(d) what general instructions Government propose to issue stopping direct recruitment till surplus staff is absorbed in the Railways; if none, why?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) I lay on the table a statement which gives the required information.

(b) Government are informed that the direct recruitment of staff from outside the railway was resorted to as a purely temporary arrangement pending recruitment of ex-service personnel, and that no surplus staff in these categories were available at the time of making such recruitment.

(c) The reply to the first portion is in the affirmative. As regards the second portion. Government are not aware that there have been any differences amongst the officers concerned on the point referred to. The reply to the concluding portion does not arise.

(d) Government do not consider it desirable to close entirely all avenues of employment in railway service to students passing out from schools and colleges in the post-war period and have, therefore, decided that 50 per cent. of the vacancies in subordinate categories should be available to candidates from the open market. As regards inferior and labour staff, instructions have already been issued to the effect that all vacancies should first be filled from surplus staff on the railway.

RECRUITMENT OF INDIAN OFFICERS AS AGAINST FOREIGNERS IN CIVIL AVIATION EXPANSION

1100. *Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Secretary for Posts and Air be pleased to state:

(a) the number of officers so far taken up in the Civil Aviation Directorate for Civil Aviation expansion;

(b) the method of recruitment of such officers and their qualifications, pay and prospects; and

(c) how many of such officers are Indians, and how many foreigners?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: (a), (b) and (c). The Honourable member is referred to the reply given by me on the 11th March, 1946, to unstarred question No. 96, put up by Mr. Krishna Chandra Sharma.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable Member say how many appointments started on Rs. 1,000 and more and how many of these are Indians?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: There are three officers under (a) and they all start on more than Rs. 1,000.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: How many of them are Indians?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: None.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: How many of them have been recruited through the Public Services Commission, if any?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: They were selected in England.

Seth Govind Das: Could not one Indian be searched for for such a post?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: No suitable Indians were available. There are other posts in which Indians have been or are being recruited.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable Member be pleased to state how these posts were advertised?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: In England the High Commissioner was requested to approach His Majesty's Government in the Air Ministry in the Civil Aviation Ministry and the Air Transport organisations in order to find suitable men.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Was there any advertisement in India?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: No, Sir.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Why not?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: Because such suitable men are not available in India.

Seth Govind Das: How were Government satisfied that such persons were not available in India?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: The Government of India in the Civil Aviation Department are aware of the people engaged in aviation matters.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Isn't it a fact that the Assistant of Sir Frederick Tymms, who was an Indian, had to resign his post recently as a protest because three Europeans were imported?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: I am not aware to whom the Honourable Member is referring. But there was one officer on contract, who on the expiry of his contract reverted to his civilian status.

Seth Govind Das: Did any Indian offer for this post in England?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: No, Sir.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know from the Honourable Member if those Europeans who were recruited, have been recruited on a permanent or contract basis?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: They are on contract.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: For what period?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: Two of them are on a five-year contract and one on a three-year contract.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Is it one of the terms of the contract that they should train a particular number of personnel in India?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: They are not for training. They are going to perform a definite job, and they are holding a particular post. The men who will be in the next grade will get the experience of the work and will in due course succeed them.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Why were they only given such a short term of five years and not ten years?

Mr. President: Order, order. Next question

PROPOSED AIR TRANSPORT LICENSING BOARD

1101. Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Secretary for Posts and Air be pleased to state:

(a) whether Government have set up an Air Transport Licensing Board, if not, when it is proposed to be set up;

(b) whether Government intend to include non-officials in such a Board, if so, the proportion of such non-officials, and the principle of selection of membership of the Board;

(c) the functions and nature of authority of such a Board; and

(d) whether Provinces are having representation on the Board?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: (a), (b) and (c). The Honourable Member is referred to the reply given by me to parts (a) and (d) of unstarred question No. 103, put by Mr. Krishna Chandra Sharma, on 11th March 1946.

(d) No, Sir.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: May I know what is the proposed qualification, technical or otherwise, for membership of the contemplated Board?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: There is no particular qualification, except in the case of two Members. The rules say that the Board shall consist of a Chairman appointed by the Central Government, who shall be a person who is or has been a Judge of the High Court in British India; the Director-General, who shall be the Deputy Chairman, and three Members appointed by the Central Government, one with special knowledge of aviation or air transport, another with special experience of financial matters, and the third appointed in consultation with the Crown Representative.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable Member state whether the Central Government has been in communication with the Provincial Governments over this question?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: No, Sir.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Why is the third appointment to be in consultation with the Crown Representative? Is it in order to give representation for the Indian States or not?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: Yes; that is so; you cannot run civil aviation in India in compartments: we want to get the Indian states to co-operate with us and come into the general arrangements, and in order to satisfy them it is provided that one person will be appointed to this Board in consultation with the Crown Representative.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is it not the function of the Chamber of Princes to represent the Indian States?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: The arrangement is that the Crown Representative will consult not only the Chamber of Princes but also the princes who are not members of the Chamber of Princes.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: The point is . . .

Mr. President: Order, order: next question.

RULES GOVERNING ISSUE OF PUBLIC TRANSPORT PILOT LICENCES

1102. *Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Secretary for Posts and Air be pleased to state:

- (a) the rules governing the issue of a public transport pilot licence;
- (b) the minimum solo flying hours required of an applicant for a pilot's licence in this country, and the corresponding figures in Australia, New Zealand, Canada, South Africa, and Great Britain; and
- (c) in the matter of application for pilot licences, whether Government take into consideration the flying hours put in or experience gained by the applicant while in other countries; if not, why not?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: (a) The Honourable Member is referred to sub-rule (3) of rule 41 of the Indian Aircraft Rules, 1937 a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

(b) The Honourable Member is referred to the reply given on the 11th March, 1946, to part (b) of unstarred question No. 91, by Mr. Krishna Chandra Sharma.

(c) The reply to the first part of the question is in the affirmative. The second part does not arise.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable Member be pleased to explain why the number of hours referred to in page 9 of Postwar Planning Careers in Civil Aviation is 200, whereas at page 8 of the same book it is mentioned as 300?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: I shall require notice of that. I have not got the book in question here. I do not know exactly in what reference the Honourable Member is making this statement. But there is a difference in the standards adopted by different countries for the purpose of giving a commercial public transport pilot's license.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: I am referring to page 9 of this book—a Government publication—Postwar Planning Careers in Civil Aviation. It is said that for a B pilot's license he will have to fly for 200 hours solo; but at page 8 of the same book it is said that the same pilots will have to undertake solo flying for 300 hours.

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: I shall want notice of that. I really cannot reply to that now.

CONSTRUCTION OF BATALA-BEAS SECTION OF N. W. RAILWAY

1103 *Seth Sukhdev: Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state:

- (a) if it is a fact that the Batala-Beas section of the North Western Railway was surveyed some years back and that the construction of the project was also decided upon;
- (b) if it is a fact that while the construction was going on and the line was completed upto Qadian, it was decided to abandon the project as the remaining portion between Qadian and Beas was not considered to be a paying proposition;
- (c) if Government are aware that some of the other abandoned projects on the North Western Railway and other Railways are being re-surveyed now with a view to investigating their traffic prospects; and
- (d) if the reply to (c) above is in the affirmative whether Government propose to order the re-investigation of the traffic prospects of the Qadian-Beas Section also? If not, why not?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) Yes.

(b) The portion beyond Qadian was abandoned due to financial stringency.

(c) Yes.

(d) The answer to the first part is in the negative. The plan for investigation of new lines in the Punjab has been evolved in full consultation with the Punjab Government and the line referred to is not included therein.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know how many miles have been already laid and at what cost on this section?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Two lines, one for each wheel.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Arising out of the answer to part (b), if it was decided upon—not two lines—but I want to know how many miles of line have been already laid on the track before it was abandoned?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I am afraid I have not got the mileage handy.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: If this was abandoned on account of financial stringency, is it going to be taken up in the post-war scheme?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: No; it is not proposed to build any more on this alignment.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: As I understand it, the Batala-Beas section of the North Western Railway was surveyed some years back and the construction of the project was also decided upon. Part (b) of the question says that while the construction was going on and the line was completed up to Qadian, it was decided to abandon the project as the remaining portion between Qadian and Beas was not considered to be a paying proposition. I understand the Honourable Member to say that it was abandoned not because it was not a paying proposition but on account of financial stringency. If it is already surveyed and so much money has been spent and some of the track has been laid, why should it not be continued as a post-war scheme?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: The question of this alignment as of all other projected alignments in the Punjab was fully discussed with the Provincial Government and they advised that this was not one of the projects which they particularly recommended for construction.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know if the provincial government was not consulted before the survey of this line was undertaken and the project proceeded with?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I presume they were consulted in 1928, when the first portion of the line was built. I do not say that this line will never be constructed, but it is not in the present plan.

NUMBER OF LOCOMOTIVES PURCHASED FROM OUTSIDE INDIA

1104. *Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava: Will the Honourable the Railway Member kindly state the number of locomotives purchased from outside India per year during the period from 1939 upto-date naming the country from which they were imported, the price paid and the quality and weight in tons of these locomotives; and if they were upto or below the standard, giving full details?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I lay on the table a statement showing the number of locomotives imported during the years 1939-40 to 1945-46, their approximate cost and weight.

The design and workmanship of the locomotives shown in the statement is considered satisfactory, but in the case of the Metre Gauge locomotives from U. S. A., and also some of the Broad Gauge locomotives from U. S. A., obsolescence is likely to become operative comparatively early. Allowance has been made for this factor in prices to be negotiated for such locomotives.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: May I ask if there is any possibility of manufacturing all these locomotives in India? Is he going to take any steps to encourage this industry for the manufacture of locomotives?

(c) Repurchased stock (originally supplied for overseas operations). Prices based on double depreciation for overseas service and present day replacement costs.

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Yes; that matter was fully debated in the course of the Railway Budget discussions and I think I gave a full exposition of what was actually being done now.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know . . .

Mr. President: Order, order: next question.

NUMBER OF WAGONS, AND COACHES, PURCHASED FROM OUTSIDE INDIA

1105. *Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava: Will the Honourable the Railway Member kindly state:

(a) the number of wagons, and coaches, if any, purchased from outside India per year from the year 1939 up-to-date giving the country from which they were imported, the price paid for them, and their quality if they were up to or below the standard; and

(b) the amount of money spent per year for Railway materials expecting locomotives and wagons imported from outside India from 1939 up-to-date naming the country of import?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) I lay on the table a statement showing the number of wagons and coaches imported during the years 1939-40 to 1945-46 with their approximate costs.

Except for the wagons imported ex U. S. A., all others are standard I. R. S. wagons. The U. S. A. wagons are non-standard and will need rebodding before they can compare with I. R. S. stock. This has been taken into consideration in arriving at the price at which the Railway Department are negotiating to take them over.

(b) The information asked for is not readily available and the time and labour involved in collecting it would not be commensurate with the value of the results.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Why are these U. S. A. wagons being imported, in view of the fact that they have to be reconditioned again in this country?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: They were imported as a war emergency; and as soon as V.-J. day came all outstanding orders on that account were cancelled.

Maulana Zafar Ali Khan: With reference to part (b), will the Honourable Member for War Transport please give the names of the countries from which these articles were imported?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: No. Part (b) covers a vast number of articles and I just could not undertake to collect full details of them. A great many of them came from the United Kingdom but a certain number came from America also, and I think Australia too.

Maulana Zafar Ali Khan: Is preference in the matter of importation given to Britain or to America?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: There was no question of preference during the war: we had to get them from where we could. I think the bulk of them came from Britain.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is it the policy of the Government now to manufacture all wagons in India alone now?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Yes; in the course of the Railway Budget I said that the capacity in India should be ample to provide for our future requirements.

CONTRACT FOR LORRY TRAFFIC FROM SIMLA TO KOTGARH

1106. *Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava: (a) Will the Honourable Member for War Transport kindly state if a contract for lorry traffic from Simla to Kotgarh has been given to some contractor or contractors?

(b) What are the rates for passengers and goods from Simla to Kotgarh?

(c) Is it a fact that inhabitants of these areas applied for the contract being given to them but their applications were rejected and that the contract was given to outsiders?

(d) Is it a fact that officials and subordinates of the States Agency are interested in these contractors?

(e) Is it a fact that applications quoting lower rates were ignored?

(f) Is it a fact that there is an acute feeling of resentment among the people on account of the contract being given at exorbitant rates to an outsider?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a), (c), (d), (e) and (f). The contract in question was given by an Indian State and I am not in a position to give any information regarding the arrangements made.

(b) Passenger rates are fifteen pies and ten pies per mile for first and second class passengers respectively between Simla and Theog, and one anna six pies and one anna per mile respectively between Theog and Kotgarh. Goods rates are seven pies per maund per mile between Simla and Theog and ten pies per maund per mile between Theog and Thanedar.

NUMBER OF FACTORIES TURNING OUT BRASS WORKS

1107. *Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies kindly state:

(a) the number of factories, Province-wise, in which the industry of melting brass scraps into brass ingots and rolling them into brass circlets was carried on during the last year; and

(b) the number of factories Province-wise, which had adequate arrangements for the suitable disposal of factory works from the industry?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: (a) Four; all in Bombay. One factory in Bengal also pigged fired brass cartridge cases but did not roll ingots into circlets.

(b) A statement is laid on the table.

TOTAL PRODUCTION IN YARDS OF COTTON BY INDIAN MILLS AND PROVINCIAL QUOTA

1108. *Mr. Muhammad Nauman: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state the total quantity of production in yards of cotton of all varieties and description by Indian Mills in India during the period from January to 31st December 1945?

(b) What was the quota given to different Provinces for the purposes of distribution either through rationing systems or otherwise, stating Province by Province and quantity in yards?

(c) Who fixed these quotas of Provinces, and what were the facts and circumstances which decided the fixing of these quantities?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: (a) The total quantity of cotton cloth of all varieties produced by Indian mills during 1945 was 4,654 million yards.

(b) The quotas allocated to each province during 1945 (including handloom cloth) were:

	Million yards
Bombay	522
Sind	66
U. P.	610
Bihar	382
Bengal	646
Assam	112
Orissa	167
C. P.	245
Punjab	692
N.-W. F. P.	117
Madras	637

These figures include cloth for consumption in certain states in the same zones as the Provinces in question.

(c) These quotas were fixed by the Government of India on the basis of the population and the estimated pre-war consumption of cloth in each province, in consultation with the Provincial Government.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: The Honourable Member forgot to mention Delhi and Ajmer in his reply?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: The Honourable Member has got a subsequent question on the subject.

Seth Govind Das: The population of the Central Provinces is more than that of Orissa and Assam. Why is it then that the cloth which is given to C. P. is less than that of Orissa?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I have explained that it is based on the pre-war consumption per head.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is it not a fact that the quota for the Madras Presidency in cotton mill cloth has been reduced and also the yarn that is supplied to the handlooms?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: The Honourable Member does not state since when he thinks it has been reduced.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Since the beginning of this year.

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I must ask for notice of that.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: What about last year—1945?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I do not think there was any reduction in the quota of mill made cloth except as from September when the Provincial Governments agreed to the allocations made to all the provinces.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Why is it that both the quota of mill made cloth as well as the quota of yarn for handlooms were reduced in the case of the Madras Presidency?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: In order to secure a fair allocation for all the provinces.

Khan Abdul Ghani Khan: Is it not a fact that the figures for the consumption of cloth in the N.-W. F. P. were supplied not by the N.-W. F. P. Government but by the Punjab from whom they used to take their cloth?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I must ask for notice.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know if in the case of Madras and Assam the quantity of handmade cloth was taken into account in fixing the quota?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: Yes, Sir.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know if the quantity of yarn that is supplied to those provinces has been considerably cut down and on account of that a revision has been made in the quantity of yardage that is supplied now?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: There was a small cut in the amount of yarn that is being consumed by Madras.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Is it not a fact that Madras is the second biggest province in the matter of handloom industries?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I believe that that is so.

Babu Ram Narayan Singh: Is it not a fact that the Bihar quota of cloth remaining in the Ahmedabad Mills could not be taken to their place of destination owing to shortage of wagons?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: In reply to an earlier question by the Honourable Member I have given details as to what stoppages occurred in railway movements.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Is it a fact that in Madras only 12 yards are allowed whereas in the Punjab and the N.-W. F. P. 18 yards are allowed and on account of the handloom production having gone down, will the Honourable Member try to revise the yardage that is allowed to Madras?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: That will be looked into.

Khan Abdul Ghani Khan: Not at the expense of the Frontier?

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Certainly.

DISTRIBUTION OF COTTON CLOTH THROUGH RATIONING SYSTEM IN DELHI PROVINCE

1109. Mr. Muhammad Nauman: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state the total quantity of cotton cloth in yards placed at the disposal of the Delhi Province for distribution through Rationing System in the Delhi Province and in the Delhi City (including New Delhi) in 1945?

(b) How many retail shops were appointed licencees for "Ration Shops", and were the Delhi Cloth Mills and Birla Mills also given licencees for "Ration Cotton Cloth sales"? If so, how many depots did they create, and how many shops were given to each Delhi Cloth Mills and Birla Mills, separately?

The Honourable A. A. Waugh: (a) The total quantity of cotton cloth allotted in 1945 to Delhi Province including Delhi city and New Delhi since the commencement of rationing was 1,18,53,000 yards (7,902 bales). Actually, the quantity received during this period as part of the Delhi quota was 1,08,54,000 Yards (7,232 bales), and 9,99,000 yards (666 bales) were obtained from stocks available locally.

(b) 198 retail shops including the retail depots of the Delhi Cloth Mills and the Birla Mills were authorised as ration shops. Nine of these shops belong to the Delhi Cloth Mills and seven to the Birla Mills. They did not create any new depots and only existing depots were recognised.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: May I know if these mills stocked products manufactured by their own mills? Is it a fact also that although they were sold within a radius of three miles they are still allowed 20 per cent. middlemen's profits?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: They were selling their own products. As to the rate of profits, I must ask for notice of the question.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: Is it not a fact that the ex-mill rate and the retail rate differ by 20 per cent. that the retail rate is 20 per cent. higher than the ex-mill rate and further that these two mills lie within a radius of three miles and are not entitled to more than 4 per cent. profit on ex-mill rate?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I must ask for notice.

DISTRIBUTION OF UN-RATIONED COTTON CLOTH IN DELHI PROVINCE

1110. Mr. Muhammad Nauman: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state what quantity in yards of cotton cloth was placed at the disposal of the Delhi Province for being sold as "Unrationed Cloth", and how their Director of Civil Supplies distributed the same, stating the quantity in yards given for sale to Hindu cloth merchants, the quantity in yards given to the Muslim cloth merchants and quantity in yards given to Mill depots of the Delhi Cloth Mills Limited?

(b) Is it a fact that cotton saris and dhoties which were given to be sold in ration shops of Delhi retail cloth merchants were being sold by the Delhi Cloth Mills at their depots as "Un-Rationed Cloth"?

(c) Is it a fact that, Muslim cloth merchants represented to the Director of Civil Supplies, Delhi, that they were given only such quantities for sale as would bring them Rupees twenty-two and annas four per month income and that the said Director has given no heed to the same, in spite of repeated representations?

(d) Is it a fact that in distribution of 'Un-rationed cotton cloth, the Director of Civil Supplies, Delhi, has given less than ten per cent. of the total quantity to the Muslim merchants in Delhi? If not, what is the fact?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: (a) No particular quantity of cloth was placed at the disposal of the Delhi Province for being sold as unrationed cloth. The Delhi Administration decided from time to time what varieties of cloth should be treated as unrationed. The Honourable Member has not specified the period for which the information is required, and I am therefore giving information for the period December 1945 to February 1946, during which period only was any appreciable amount of course cloth of the local mills issued as unrationed. From the reserves of such cloth available, allocations were made to dealers on the basis of actual business done by them on information obtained from a statement filled in by the dealers. These statements were not furnished by all the dealers, and in cases where the information was not available, and of petty dealers whose business was under 20 bales per year, an allocation was made at the rate of one bale per quarter. The distribution among Muslims and non-Muslims was as follows:

	Yards
Non-Muslims	11,25,000
Muslims	2,25,000

The Delhi Cloth Mills during the same period sold at their retail depots 436 bales (6,54,000 yards). This quantity was not "given" to them for sale, but was sold by them in accordance with their previous practice and with the permission of the Government of India.

(b) No.

(c) A representation, in which Rs. 22/8/- per month was mentioned as the income, was received by the Delhi administration from the Cloth and General Merchants Association on the 2nd of March, 1946. As the distribution of cloth was limited by the actual quantity available and this had to be distributed among numerous claimants, it was impossible to provide a larger quantity of cloth. 964, dealers received a quota of one bale per quarter only, and of these 800 were Muslims.

(d) No. As stated in answer to part (a), 150 bales were issued to Muslim dealers and 750 bales to Non-Muslims, making a percentage of 17.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: Does the Honourable Member know that the Muslim Merchants' Association referred to represented their case from May, 1945, to December 1945, and the matter was referred to by Statements in the Press? I saw the Chief Commissioner myself.

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: Yes, Sir, there has been a series of representations.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: How is it possible to say that this letter was received only on the 2nd March and how has the plea been made that they do not know the position of the Muslim merchants.

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I am referring to the representation received by the Central Government, not by the Delhi Administration.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: The Delhi administration was appraised of this fact from June onwards and in spite of that they have given only 2 lakhs yards out of a total of 18 lakhs yards.

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I submit that this is a statement not a question. I do not know what the facts are.

Babu Ram Narayan Singh: What is the total number of all cloth merchants before this control came into force?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I would have to collect that information.

CONTROL PRICES OF SILK CLOTH AND ARTIFICIAL SILK CLOTH MANUFACTURED IN INDIA

1111. Mr. Muhammad Nauman: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state if it is a fact that control prices of silk cloth and artificial silk cloth manufactured in India are nearly eight times higher than the prices prevailing in India in 1939 and 1940 for the same variety of silk and artificial silk cloths? If not what proportion they bear to prices ruling in 1939-1940 for the same class of cloth?

(b) Is it a fact that Murshidabad silk, Mysore silk and Kashmir silk of an average quality width 36 inches were being sold in India on an average of Rupees two and annas eight per yard in 1939 which has been controlled at the rate of Rs. 13 to Rs. 14 which are the present ruling prices?

(c) Is it a fact that heavy imitation China silk produced in India was being sold at Rupee one and annas eight in 1939 which has been controlled at Rs. 7-8-0 to Rs. 10-8-0 at the present time?

(d) Does the Honourable Member propose to explain the principle governing such controlled prices?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: (a) On an average, the present control prices of silk and artificial silk fabrics are about five times higher than the prices prevailing in India in 1939 and 1940.

(b) Yes, Sir. The average price ruling before control prices were fixed last July was about Rs. 18 a yard.

(c) The term "heavy imitation China Silk" is understood to mean artificial silk made in India. The pre-war price was about Rs. 2-8-0 per yard. The present price is about Rs. 12. Before Control was introduced, the Bazaar price was round about Rs. 18.

(d) The control prices are based on costs of production. By and large the ultimate basis for real silk is a price for cocoons bearing the same relation to the price in 1941 as the cost of living indices of 1945 and 1941. In the case of artificial silk it is the landed cost of yarn.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: Is the Honourable Member aware that his predecessor gave an assurance to this House that the peak prices of 1943 would be reduced by 50 per cent. immediately?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I am not aware of the statement referred to.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: Will he refer to the old debates?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I am quite prepared to do so.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: When were the prices of silk fixed last?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I shall endeavour to supply the information. I have not got it with me.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: May I know if the Honourable Member is prepared to look into the whole question again and see that the prices do not remain at five times, but that it is reduced to just twice the old rate, which is equitable?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I only wish there was no scarcity. If the scarcity of raw material would come down, I would be pleased to look into the whole question.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: The price of raw silk today as compared to the prices of 1938-39 are considerably higher?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: Yes, considerably higher.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: Where it should not be more than 200 per cent. it is now more than 500 per cent.

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I have not got figures. I think that the rise is higher than 200 per cent.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Are these prices reviewed from time to time in relation to the fall in the index prices of food stuffs?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I have not observed that the cost of living is coming down.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Is it a fact that since the price was fixed last time, that was a long time ago, the prices have not been reviewed at all?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: They are constantly under review; at the moment, the price of raw silk is far from satisfactory.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: When was it reviewed last?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I want notice.

RETURN OF ALL-INDIA VILLAGE INDUSTRIES RESEARCH CENTRE AT POONA

1112. Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state:

(a) if it is a fact that the All-India Village Industries Research Centre at Poona run by Mr. K. B. Joshi; under the direction of Mr. Vaikuntha Mehta, Managing Director of Provincial Co-operative Bank, was taken over by Government under the Defence of India Rules in 1942 and have not returned it to them ever since;

(b) if they had made drastic changes in the very fundamentals of the work of the Centre, abandoned all research work and have now decided to dismantle it;

(c) if they have seen Dr. J. C. Kumarappa's Condemnation of their policy in his article "Vandalism", published in the Gramodyoga Patrika of October 1945, Wardha;

(d) why Government have not proposed to hand over the buildings and machinery to the former management; and

(e) whether Government propose to consider the advisability of handling it over to the A. I. V. I. A. management at least now?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: The question will be answered by the Honourable the Home Member on the appropriate day.

ENQUIRY INTO THE NUMBER OF WORKERS EMPLOYED IN COTTAGE AND INDUSTRIAL CONCERNS

1113. Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state:

(a) in connection with his reply to Mr. Mohan Lal Saksena's Starred Question No. 460, dated the 22nd February, 1946 regarding the number of Industrial undertakings, whether Government will consider the advisability of holding an enquiry to ascertain the number of industrial concerns and workers employed therein, in which less than 20 workers are employed by Cottage or factory employers;

(b) whether Government are aware of the estimates made by the Textile Fact Finding Committee in regard to hand loom weavers employed in concerns with less than twenty workers;

(c) whether they have seen the estimates made by the Cottage Industrial Enquiries conducted by the Madras Government in 1928-29, and by the Kumarappa Enquiry Committee of the Central Provinces Government, in 1939;

(d) whether on the basis of the 1931 Census Reports (Industrial and other occupational Sections) any estimate has been made or is sought to be made about the approximate number of workers employed in Cottage and other industrial concerns, with less than 20 workers each;

(e) if it is a fact that the Royal Commission on Labour has deplored the absence of such Statistics and any effort to protect their interests; and

(f) in view of the industrial planning and development which are in the offing, whether Government propose to hold a rapid enquiry in co-operation with Provincial Governments into the real importance, numbers of concerns and workers employed in Cottage and other small industrial concerns?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: (a) Government are pursuing this question. The Labour Investigation Committee appointed in pursuance of Resolution No. L-4012, dated 12th February, 1944, has conducted enquiries in respect of the more important indigenous handicrafts and small scale industries.

(b) The report of the Fact Finding Committee makes no mention of estimates in respect of handloom weavers employed in concerns with less than twenty workers.

(c) No. These estimates are being called for.

(d) No, Sir. I would refer the Honourable Member to the reply given to part (a) above.

(e) Yes, Sir.

(f) Government will examine this.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: May we know some of the list of cottage industries which the Government are enquiring into?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I shall be pleased to give my Honourable friend information in detail.

Seth Govind Das: Do the Government propose to start spinning and weaving in the villages?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I have said that the Government are examining the question of what will be the most practical and effective scheme. I would welcome the opportunity of discussing this with the Standing Committee attached to my Department, with a view to shaping out an effective scheme.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Is it not a fact that the Government in this Department have got a statistical section, and if the answer is in the affirmative, will the Government consider the advisability of making the collection of these statistics one of its primary activities?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: I shall consider it.

CLASSIFICATION OF 'SELECTION POSTS' ON INDIAN RAILWAYS

1114. *Sri A. Karunakara Menon: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) the principles observed in the classification of 'Selection Posts' on the Indian Railways;

(b) if the Honourable Member is aware that the list of "Selection Posts" intimated to this House in reply to unstarred question No. 11 on the 6th February 1940, has been greatly enlarged since then on the North Western Railway, if so, why;

(c) whether it is proposed to lay down a pay limit on which the classification of Selection Posts is made in future; and

(d) if the reply to (c) above be in the affirmative, whether it is proposed to fix this pay-limit for posts carrying pay of over Rs. 200 per mensem on old scales; if not, what pay-limit do Government propose to fix?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) Generally speaking, selection posts include fairly senior posts and posts outside the cadre. The power to determine selection posts in non-gazetted cadres rests with General Managers any they can declare as a selection post any post to which promotions is made on the basis of selection in accordance with comparative merit and not seniority alone, vide rules 2(3) and 3 of the rules governing the promotion of subordinate staff as contained in Appendix II-A of the State Railway Establishment Code, Volume I, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

(b) The reply to the first portion is in the affirmative. The North Western Railway's list did not include certain posts which at the time were not treated by them as selection posts because they were filled by selected men in order of seniority. It was subsequently decided to treat the latter posts also as selection posts. Apart from this revision, additions to the list have been very few and were made as a result of the experience gained of the special abilities required of the incumbents of such posts.

(c) The reply is in the negative.

(d) Does not arise.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Are there any definite rules laying down which posts ought to be regarded as selection posts?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I have answered that in part (a).

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Is it not a fact that just with a view to avoid a person getting a particular post, the General Managers are usually in the habit of declaring that post a selection post?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: That is not done, Sir.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: It may or may not be done. What are the rules regulating the decision of certain posts to be selection posts or not? Are they merely left to the whims and fancies of the General Managers?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I think if the Honourable Member will study the Establishment Code which I have referred to, he will see that the rules are fairly satisfactory.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Has this practice been continued from the time of the company management or have the Government set down new rules just now?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: These are State railway rules.

SENIORITY RULES OF NON-GAZETTED SUBORDINATE STAFF ON INDIAN RAILWAYS

1115. *Sri A. Karunakara Menon: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) the general principles in determining seniority of the non-gazetted subordinate staff on the Indian Railways;

(b) if the Honourable Member is aware of the general complaints about frequent changes in seniority rules on the North Western Railway; and

(c) if it is proposed by the Railway Board to issue a general set of seniority rules for the Indian Railway; if not, why not?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) and (c). Rule 10 in Appendix II-A to the State Railway Establishment Code, Volume 1, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House, authorizes the General Managers to prescribe the necessary rules for the determination of seniority of non-gazetted staff. No uniform set of rules for the purpose of determining seniority can be framed which would be applicable to all groups, classes and grades alike on the different Railway systems in view of the divergent conditions prevailing.

(b) Government are informed that the Railway Administration is not aware of any general complaints in the matter.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: With reference to part (b), I should like to know if uniform rules are observed on all railways, and whether N. W. R. have been changing their rules from time to time?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I expect they have been.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Apart from the question of general principles, have there not been general complaints about frequent changes in seniority rules? What steps have Government taken to collect information on the point?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: After referring this question to the railway, I am informed that the railway administration is not aware of any such general complaints in the matter.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Apart from complaints, has it come to the notice of the railway administration that the rules are being changed from time to time?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I expect they have been.

'HOWRAH SYSTEM OF BOOKING' AT KARACHI BUNDER STATION

1116. *Sri A. Karunakara Menon: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state if he is aware that there was much mismanagement in the supply of wagons at the Karachi Bunder Station?

(b) Is he also aware that certain members of staff were shifted and new system known as 'Howrah System' was introduced?

(c) How long did the 'Howrah System of booking' work, and what was the total expenditure thereon?

(d) Is the Honourable Member aware that "Howrah system" was stopped in spite of adverse opinion from the commercial community, including the Karachi Chamber of Commerce?

(e) Is it also a fact that the same staff has been re-transferred to the Karachi Bunder?

(f) What step do Government propose to take to avoid recurrence of abuses referred to in part (a) above? If none why?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) No. Owing to the acute shortage of wagons resulting from conditions created by the War there were the same difficulties in supplying wagons at Karachi Bunder at many other stations. Government is not aware of any mismanagement in the supply of wagons at this station.

(b) Regarding the first part, information is being collected and will be placed on the table of the House in due course. With regard to the latter part of the question, the reply is in the affirmative.

(c) The "Howrah Scheme" was operated at Karachi Bunder from 22nd January, 1945, to 31st October, 1945. The information asked for in the latter part of the question is being collected and will be placed on the table of the House when received.

(d) and (e). Presumably the word "stopped" is a misprint for the word "started". The information is being collected and will be placed on the table of the House when received.

(f) This does not arise.

(B) WRITTEN ANSWERS

DIFFERENT RATES OF SPECIAL PAY FOR DEPUTATIONISTS IN RAILWAY BOARD

1117. *Pandit Mukut Bihari Lal Bhargava: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state if it is a fact that a special pay was sanctioned for those of the staff who are transferred to the Railway Board's Office on deputation mainly on the consideration that the duties and responsibilities of arduous nature are involved in the Railway Board's Office?

(b) Is it a fact that a higher rate of Rs. 50 per month as special pay has been sanctioned for those who are on deputation to the Railway Board's Office in New Delhi from stations outside Delhi and a lower rate of Rs. 30 per month is given to those who are taken locally?

(c) If the answer to (b) be in the affirmative why is this differential treatment meted out to the persons transferred from local offices, specially in view of the fact that both the categories of the persons are considered to be discharging duties of arduous nature and responsibility?

(d) Do Government propose to remove this discrimination by introducing uniform rates of special pay, viz., Rs. 50 with retrospective effect? If not, why not?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) A special pay is granted both in consideration of the arduous duties and heavier responsibilities attaching to posts in the Railway Board's office as well as on other considerations, such as additional expenditure entailed in the maintenance of double establishments, etc., which apply only to persons coming from outside Delhi.

(b) Yes.

(c) and (d). In view of the reply to part (a) above, Government do not propose to introduce a uniform rate of special pay.

PROTESTS BY INDIAN TRADE UNION ORGANISATIONS AGAINST EXECUTION OF REPUBLICANS IN SPAIN

1118. *Miss Maniben Kara: Will the Foreign Secretary be pleased to state: whether Government have received any representations from Indian trade union organisations protesting against the execution of ten Republicans in Spain by the Government of General Franco and asking their protests to be forwarded to the Spanish Government; what action Government have taken in the matter?

Mr. H. Weightman: Such a representation has been received from the Indian Federation of Labour. A reply has been sent that the Government of India do not conceive it to be their business to forward the protest to the Spanish Government, it being open to the Indian Federation of Labour to send a communication on the subject through the post if it wishes to do so.

TENDERS FOR WORK IN E. I. RAILWAY LOCO. RUNNING SHEDS

1119. *Mr. Madan Dhari Singh: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state the system of giving contract for the work of coal handling, engine and ash pit cleaning, cinders picking and labour supplying in the East Indian Railway Loco. Running Sheds?

(b) Who is the authority for accepting the tenders?

(c) What is the number of contractors who were given the work at Gaya, Moghulsarai and Jhajha from the year 1938 to the year 1945?

(d) Is it a fact that the accepted tenders for the work were not the lowest? If so, what are the reasons for the acceptance of higher tenders?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: The information is being obtained and will be laid on the table of the House in due course.

REVIVAL OF OLD INDIAN STORES DEPARTMENT

1120. *Mr. Manu Subedar: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please state what retrenchment was proposed in the Industries and Supplies Department from the peak and how much of it has been achieved already?

(b) What was the pay and allowance or the total establishment charge of the Department per month at the peak period, what is it now, what further reduction is aimed at, and when do Government expect to achieve it?

(c) What is the intention of Government in regard to the old Indian Stores Department, and is it intended to revive it in any form in the near future?

(d) Are all the stores purchase rules, as they existed before the war, still in force?

(e) Have Government restored the general practice in the matter of purchase in India and scrutiny of indents going outside India before such indents are made?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: (a) and (b). The information is not readily available. It is being collected, and will be laid on the table in due course.

(c) The I.S.D. has been incorporated in the DG (F. & S.), and it is not intended to revive it as a separate entity.

(d) Yes, Sir, except for deviations during wartime emergencies.

(e) The general practice in the matter of purchase in India continued during the war and I would invite attention to the reply I gave on the 8th February, 1946, to part (b) and latter part of part (c) of Starred question No. 102, asked by the Honourable Member. As regards scrutiny of indents, Government never scrutinized indents going outside India before such indents were made. They only scrutinized after these indents were sent to D.G., I.S.D., London. The Supply Department had, however, enough time to challenge any such indents before any purchases against such indents were actually made, and this continues to be the practice.

NUMBER OF LIAISON OFFICERS AND RELAXATION OF CONTROLS

1121. *Mr. Manu Subedar: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please state how many liaison officers still continue to function, and why?

(b) How many officers, who were working under the Director-General of Munitions production, still continue to function, and what is the work which they are now doing?

(c) How many controls have been relaxed, or are proposed to be relaxed in connection with (i) steel and (ii) non-ferrous metals?

(d) Do Government propose to continue the fixing of ceiling prices for the protection of the civil population in regard to (i) steel and (ii) non-ferrous metals?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: (a) There are three Liaison Officers for consumer goods and twelve Honorary Advisers. The former are employed for the administration of the Hoarding and Profiteering Prevention Ordinance and Consumer Goods Control Order. They look after imports of consumer goods made on Government account and still awaiting disposal, answer very numerous enquiries from the public, and see that consumer goods the distribution of which is still controlled are in fact despatched by importers as ordered. Their services will be terminated on 31st March, 1946, after which their functions on a reduced scale will be discharged by the Secretariat Delhi.

The Honorary Advisers advise on Jute Supplies, Rope, Wool, Tanning, Petroleum, Webbing, Hides, Cement, Rubber, Coffee, Cotton Textiles and Textile Machinery. They advise Government on problems connected with the industry concerned, and enable Government to keep in touch with the industry.

(b) 126. They are concerned with procurement of metal and engineering stores for railways, civil departments of Government and the Army. The D.G.M.P. as an organisation will shortly be closed down and amalgamated with the D.G.I. & S., leaving in Calcutta only a branch of the Purchase organisation for normal peace time work.

(c) The Iron and Steel Movement by road and rail Orders and the Cotton Baling Hoops (Control of Movement) Order have been cancelled. The Iron and Steel (Control of Production and Distribution) Order and the Iron and Steel Scrap Control Order still remain in force. The former is being modified with a view to abolish the licensing of steel from 1st April, 1946. There are three Control Orders on non-ferrous metal: (1) Non-ferrous metal (Control) Order, (2) Brass and Copper (Control) Order, (3) Aluminium Utensils (Control) Order.

(d) Yes Sir. The fixation of ceiling prices is to be continued for both steel and non-ferrous metals in order to prevent black market activities.

CONTROL AND SALE OF WOOLLEN GOODS IN INDIA BY GOVERNMENT

1122. *Mr. B. P. Jhunjhunwala: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please state whether the manufacture and sale of woollen goods in India is under the control of Government? If so, on what basis is the same regulated?

(b) Is it a fact that Government sell the Indian woollen goods at a price much higher than what it pays to the manufacturers? If so, what is the margin of profit, and how much profits have Government made over such scales since the control was enforced? To what fund is the money so earned credited; and how is it utilized?

(c) What is the quantity and value of woollen goods produced by the Indian woollen mills since the promulgation of the Control Ordinance? Were the Indian woollen mills working to their full capacity during this period? If not, why not?

(d) What is the quantity and value of foreign woollen goods imported into India during the corresponding period?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: (a) Yes, Sir, the manufacture and sale of woollen goods is under the control of Government. Goods for the civil market are purchased by Government, who pay the mills a margin of 12½ per cent. over their cost of production, and are sold to recognised dealers who retail them to the public at a fixed price. This price allows dealers a margin of 12½ per cent.

(b) Yes, Sir, it is correct that Government often but not always charge the dealer a slightly higher price than they have paid or expect to pay to the manufacturer. The reasons are firstly that Government initially fixed ceiling prices slightly on the high side to allow for a possible upward trend in costs of production, and secondly in the earlier stages retail prices were based on estimates of cost while payments to mills were based on costs of production worked out subsequently. In some cases, the price chargeable by Government to the dealer is lower than the price payable by Government to the manufacturer and these deficits are met from the surpluses accruing from other items. There is no fixed margin of profit, and it is not possible to give a figure of the surplus accruing to Government so far, because mills have been paid at provisional rates and it will be some time before the prices payable to them are finalised. If any surpluses remain when the control is wound up, Government will consider how to spend these and one way would be to spend them for the benefit of India's woollen industry.

(c) The quantity of woollen goods produced by Indian Woollen Mills since the promulgation of the Control Order is about 44.86 million lbs., and their value about 14.14 crores of rupees. Indian Woollen Mills were working to their full capacity during this period, except for occasional stoppages owing to lack of coal.

(d) The quantity of foreign woollen goods imported into India during this period was about 1,354,000 lbs., and their value was about 1.2 crores.

CONSUMPTION OF CLOTH IN N.-W. F. PROVINCE

1123. *Khan Abdul Ghani Khan: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state the consumption of cloth in the following areas of the North-West Frontier Province before the World War II: (i) Khyber Agency, (ii) Malakand Agency, (iii) Kurram Agency, (iv) Mahmand Agency, (v) Tochi Agency, and (vi) Waziristan Agency?

(b) What is the amount of cloth supplied to each of these Agencies now?

(c) What was the amount of cloth supplied before the last war to the North-West Frontier Province, and what is supplied now?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: (a) and (b). My Department has asked the N.-W. F. P. Government by telegram for this information, but the N.-W. F. P. Government have not yet replied.

(c) Before the war: On an average about 70,148 bales per annum.

At present: About 62,592 bales per annum.

APPLICABILITY OF GOVERNMENT RAILWAY RULES TO STAFF ON B. B. & C. I. RAILWAY SCHOOLS

1124. *Pandit Mukut Bihari Lal Bhargava: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state if it is a fact that according to the declared policy of the Railway Board, all teachers employed in Railway Schools on the East Indian Railway are Government servants and are allowed scales of pay in force in Provincial Government Schools of the Province in which they are situated?

(b) Is it a fact that the B., B. and C. I. Railway was taken over by the Government of India in 1942? If so, is it a fact that all employees of the now defunct B., B. and C. I. Railway Company became Government servants from that date?

(c) Have the Railway Board laid down a policy for the B., B. and C. I. Railway Schools different from the policy already in force for Railway Schools on other Government Railways? If so, on what grounds? If not, are the staff employed on the B., B. and C. I. Railway Schools governed by Government Railway Rules in the matter of leave, passes and P. T. Os. rent rules, scales of pay and other service matters? If not, why not?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) The reply to the first portion is in the affirmative and to the second in the negative.

(b) The reply is in the affirmative.

(c) The reply to the first portion is in the negative. The second portion does not arise. The reply to the third portion is in the affirmative except in regard to leave and scales of pay of ex-Company school staff. In accordance with the terms offered to non-gazetted staff of the ex-B., B. & C. I. Railway Company taken over by Government on and from the 1st January 1942, such staff are governed by the ex-Company's rules in these respects. The reply to the last portion does not arise.

SERVICE LIMIT FOR OFFICIALS TAKEN FROM CIRCLE OFFICES INTO P. & T.
DIRECTORATE

1125. *Mr. Ramayan Prasad: (a) Will the Secretary for Posts and Air be pleased to state if it is a fact that a limit of more than five and less than ten years' service has been prescribed for taking men from subordinate offices to Circle Offices of the Posts and Telegraphs Department for permanent appointments? If so, is it the intention of the said condition that the officials so taken should be of use for the maximum number of years in the latter office? If not, what is the intention?

(b) Is there no such service limit prescribed for taking officials from Circle Offices into the Posts and Telegraphs Directorate? If not why not?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: (a) The reply to the first part is in the affirmative and to the second part in the negative. As regards the third part, the intention in fixing the service limits is to import comparatively young officials who, at the same time, have had some years practical experience of post office work.

(b) There is a minimum service limit of three years but no maximum service limit for importing staff from Circle Offices to the Posts and Telegraphs Directorate. The intention in not prescribing the maximum limit is to improve the efficiency of the Posts and Telegraphs Directorate by obtaining the best available officials with considerable practical experience especially in the technical branches of the Department.

SERVICE LIMIT FOR OFFICIALS TAKEN FROM CIRCLE OFFICES INTO P. & T. DIRECTORATE

1126. *Mr. Ramayan Prasad: (a) Will the Secretary for Posts and Air please state if it is a fact that while drafting on deputation officials from subordinate offices to the Posts and Telegraph Directorate in the year 1941, a similar service limit of about ten years was prescribed. If so, what was the intention behind the prescription of this service limit?

(b) Is it a fact that some officials from amongst those drafted from subordinate offices to the Posts and Telegraphs Directorate have been recently selected for confirmation in the latter office? If so, what was the service put in by each such official on the date of his entry in the P. & T. Directorate?

(c) How many officials thus selected conform to the condition of service limit referred to in part (a) of the previous question and also to part (a) above?

(d) Are there no officials on deputation who fulfil the condition of service limit? If there are, why have they not been selected instead?

(e) Do Government propose to make the selection afresh, taking into consideration the condition of service referred to?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: (a) presumably, the Honourable Member is referring to the maximum limit of ten years service mentioned in part (a) of his previous question. If so, the reply is in the negative. The latter part does not arise.

(b) Yes. I lay a statement on the table.

(c) As will be seen from my reply to part (a), no maximum service limit was prescribed. Part (a) of the previous question which relates to recruitment to Circle offices does not apply in this case.

(d) Does not arise in view of my reply to part (a) of the question.

(e) This does not arise as the selections already made are in keeping with the existing orders.

1127. *Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please state:

(a) how long it is proposed to continue the present controls on the prices and movements of charcoal, wood and other fuel into Delhi;

(b) why all these controls cannot be abolished immediately or at least before the 1st April, 1946;

(c) the number of staff employed on working this control, and the cost incurred in its working during the financial year 1945-46, in the Delhi Province; and

(d) whether Government are aware that the controls are continued merely in the interests of the staff employed for the purpose?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: (a) to (d). Information is being collected from the Chief Commissioner of Delhi, and will be placed on the table of the House when it is received.

FACILITIES FOR INDIAN NATIONALS IN INDO-CHINA

1128. *Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Will the Foreign Secretary be pleased to state:

(a) all the arrangements made for the safety of properties of Indian Nationals in Indo-China, and all the facilities given to those persons to return to India;

(b) whether representation was made to the Government of India to that effect; and

(c) whether instructions were given to the British Representative in Indo-China to negotiate with the French authorities to secure all facilities in the interest of Indian Nationals since the occupation of the French Government is completed?

Mr. H. Weightman: With your permission, Sir, I propose to answer questions Nos. 1128 and 1129 together.

The Honourable Member is referred to the replies given by me on the 22nd February, 1946, to questions Nos. 440 and 441.

BANKING FACILITIES FOR INDIAN NATIONALS IN INDO-CHINA

†1129. *Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: (a) Will the Foreign Secretary be pleased to state:

(a) if it is a fact that the French authorities refused to allow Indian Nationals in Indo-China to send money to their families in India on account of the blockade imposed during the war by the Government of India; if so, whether the Government of India propose to cancel the blockade, take immediate steps to impress upon the French authorities to have exchange rates, and allow remittances to India in the interest of Indian Nationals and their families in India;

(b) whether there is any representation made by any individual and by the then Member of the Assembly, Mr. T. T. Krishnamachariar, on the above points and if any information is forthcoming whether the same will be placed on the table of the House for the information of the public; and

(c) all the arrangements made by the Government of India for securing priority in passage facilities for Indian Nationals stuck up in Indo-China to come to India and for persons in India owning properties there to go there to look after their property?

CREATION OF INDUSTRIAL STATISTICS DIRECTORATE AND QUALIFICATIONS OF ITS DIRECTOR

1130. *Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state when the Directorate of Industrial Statistics was created?

(b) What are the special qualifications of the present Director? Has he any academic qualifications in statistics or experience in any statistical branch in Government or elsewhere?

(c) Was the present incumbent drawing only Rs. 600 in another Department of Government, some four years back? What is his present salary?

(d) Was the post advertised and was the selection made by the Federal Public Service Commission? If not, why not?

(e) Why is not the Economic Adviser asked to look after the Industrial Statistics also? Why is a separate Department found necessary?

(f) Is it a fact that persons with qualifications in Economics are preferred to those with qualifications in Statistics? If so, why?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: (a) In April, 1945, the late Industries and Civil Supplies Department decided, with the concurrence of the Economic Adviser and the Finance Department, to set up an organization adequate to deal with the enforcement of the Industrial Statistics Act, 1942, and with the question of taking a Census of Industrial Production. The sanctioned posts include a Director, two Deputy Directors, two Assistant Directors and four Research Officers.

(b) The present Director, Dr. Kaul, holds the Ph.D. Degree of London University for work done with Prof. A. L. Bowley of the London School of Economics. He had, also, training in advanced Statistical methods in the Department of Applied Statistics, London University, under Prof. Karl Pearson. Dr. Kaul spent some 10 years teaching Economics and Statistics in the Universities of Rangoon, Allahabad, Aligarh and the Punjab. From 1937 to 1940 he was employed in the League of Nations at Geneva, where he dealt with Statistics from member nations in the preparation of international studies. On return to India he was appointed in the Commerce Department in 1941, and in the late Industries and Civil Supplies Department on its creation in 1943. After holding the posts of Under Secretary, Deputy Secretary, he was appointed Director of Industrial Statistics on 27th April, 1945.

†For answer to this question see answer to question No. 1128.

(c) On return to India, Dr. Kaul was first appointed in the scale of Rs. 800—50—1,000 in 1941. At Geneva he had been drawing the equivalent of Rs. 1,500. His present pay is Rs. 2,000.

(d) No, Sir. The post of Director has been sanctioned for a period of one year only. Under the rules Departments of the Government of India are competent to recruit candidates for such temporary appointments.

(e) The Department of Industries and Supplies is in charge of Industrial Statistics. There are obvious advantages in having the Department in charge of Industries dealing with industrial statistics through its own officers, and the scope of the work, which is largely 'pioneer' work, justifies the organization set up in the Department.

(f) For work of this kind good qualifications in both Economics and Statistics are necessary, together with considerable administrative experience.

CONTROL OF SILK YARN IN BENGAL

143. Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state:

- the various measures for control of silk yarn in Bengal;
- the purposes for which such measures were adopted;
- whether after the cessation of war there is any purpose for keeping alive these control orders;
- whether Government have in contemplation any measure for controlling silk woven texture; and
- the general policy for such control?

The Honourable Mr. A. A. Waugh: (a) The ceiling prices of silk yarn were fixed by the Central Government last June. These prices apply to Bengal as well as to other parts of India. I do not know whether the Bengal Government have taken any additional measures.

(b) The object is to try to ensure that the public can buy available supplies of silk at a reasonable price.

(c) India's consumption of silk before the war averaged about 4 million pounds a year. At present our silk production is barely 1½ million pounds a year, and imports are much lower than in the pre-war years. Supplies are therefore much less than demand and it is for this reason that Government have continued control.

(d) Control of prices of silk fabrics is in force. No new measure is contemplated.

(e) The general policy is to try to see that silk fabrics are sold at reasonable prices to consumers.

TRAVELLING ALLOWANCE TO N. W. AND G. I. P. RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

WHILE ON DUTY

144. Diwan Chaman Lal: Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state:

(a) whether it is a fact that no travelling allowance is paid to a Railway employee required to proceed on duty within a radius of five miles from his headquarters station;

(b) whether such a radius is calculated by (i) Rail or (ii) Rail-cum-road; in the latter case, the minimum and maximum distance which an employee may be required to cover by road; and

(c) whether any carriage hire is allowed to an employee for road journey referred to in part (b) above; if so, the scales on the North Western and Great Indian Peninsula Railways?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) Yes, except in certain circumstances as explained in reply to part (c).

(b) As regards the first portion, the radius of 5 miles is calculated by the shortest route, whether by rail or road or by rail-cum-road, from the railway station where the headquarters of a railway employee is located. The reply to the second portion does not arise.

(c) Yes, the actual cost of hiring a conveyance within the rates prescribed by the Municipality or Local Government concerned is admissible to railway servants required to travel on duty occasionally. Those required to travel frequently on duty within a radius of five miles are granted a motor car or motor cycle or conveyance or horse allowance in accordance with Rules 244 and 245 of the State Railway Establishment Code, Vol. I., a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

SELECTION OF FOOD INSPECTORS IN KARACHI DIVISION, N. W. RAILWAY

145. Seth Sukhdev: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

- (a) whether a selection for the Posts of Food Inspectors was held in January last in the Karachi Division of the North Western Railway;
- (b) whether it is a fact that the result of the selection was shelved on the ground that junior employees were allowed to compete;
- (c) whether it is a fact that the posts of Food Inspectors are temporary and that no employee is eligible for confirmation against them;
- (d) whether it is a fact that under the provisions of paragraph 6, Appendix II-A, of the Establishment Code, Volume I, proper employees were called for selection;
- (e) why then the selection results were cancelled;
- (f) what steps Government propose to take to ensure selections in accordance with rules; and
- (g) if it is proposed to revise the orders and allow selection results held in January to stand good?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I have called for the information and will place the same on the table of the House in due course.

STOPPAGE OF BENGAL NAGPUR RAILWAY DOWN BOMBAY MAIL AT GHATSILA

146. Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

- (a) why the Bengal Nagpur Railway Down Bombay Mail does not stop at Ghatsila, though the Up Bombay Mail does stop there;
- (b) whether, and if so, why an exception is made in respect of the men of the Indian Copper Corporation for whose benefit the said Down train stops there for some days in the month; and whether it is a fact that even when the said train so stops other passengers (including upper class) are not allowed to avail of the said train; if so, the reasons therefor;
- (c) whether he is aware that there is a large and pressing demand from the public for a short stoppage at the said station; and
- (d) the difficulties in the way of arranging for such stoppage?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) The Up Bombay Mail has for many years been scheduled to stop at Ghatsila as the traffic offering from Calcutta to this station justifies the stop. The Down Bombay Mail was not scheduled to halt at the station as in pre-war days it passed it at an inconvenient hour and there were alternative services at more convenient times.

(b) Yes, out-of-course halts, limited to a maximum of 4 a month, were agreed to as a special war-time concession in favour of officials of the Indian Copper Corporation, who had to maintain close liaison with Government officials in Calcutta in connection with important war production. With the termination of the war emergency, the Railway Administration are considering the discontinuance of the special dispensation. Information is not available in regard to the second part of this question. A copy however of this question and my reply is being sent to the General Manager for suitable action.

(c) The Railway Administration have not received any representations to indicate a large and pressing demand from the public in this direction.

(d) The Railway Administration propose in their forthcoming Time-table to reintroduce the second Howrah-Nagpur Passenger Trains Nos. 11 Dn. and 12 Up, and this will restore the train services serving Ghatsila to the pre-war level. As passengers will then have the choice of three convenient down trains at Ghatsila, there is no justification for stopping a long-distance mail train at the station, and thus adding to its over-all timing, particularly when the Administration are endeavouring in response to the public demand, to accelerate the mail timings.

TERMS OF REFERENCE OF DR. AHMED, OFFICER ON SPECIAL DUTY, RAILWAY BOARD

147. Sri A. Karunakara Menon: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) the terms of reference of Dr. Ahmed, Officer on Special Duty with the Railway Board and place on the table a copy of the questionnaire issued by him; and

(b) whether it is proposed to create posts of Director and Deputy Director of Medical Service with the Railway Board?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) Dr. Ahmed is a member, representing the Railway Medical Department, of the Housing Committee appointed by the Railway Board to look into the general question of the scale of accommodation to be provided for various classes of non-gazetted railway employees on the different Government Railways. In addition, he has been detailed to look into certain questions connected with post-war medical facilities on Railways. As regards the second portion of this part of the question, two questionnaires have been issued by Dr. Ahmed regarding the re-organization and development of medical services, but Government do not consider that any public interest will be served by placing copies on the table of the House.

(b) The question of creating a temporary post in the office of the Railway Board to accommodate a Railway Medical Officer is still under consideration.

RULES FOR FILLING OF SELECTION POSTS ON STATE-MANAGED RAILWAYS

148. Sri A. Karunakara Menon: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) whether it is a fact that rules for filling 'Selection Posts' have been framed by the Railway Board, if so, where are they incorporated; and

(b) whether it is proposed by the Railway Board to lay on the table of the House a list of 'Selection Posts' on each of the State-managed Railways; if not, why not?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) Yes, the Honourable Member is referred to the rules governing the promotion of subordinate staff contained in Appendix II-A of the State Railway Establishment Code, Volume I, (as amended by Correction Slip No. N. 566), a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

(b) Up-to-date information is being obtained from railways and will be laid on the table of the House in due course.

SHORT NOTICE QUESTION AND ANSWER

STATUS OF INDIANS AND CONSTITUTIONAL REFORMS IN MALAYA

Seth Govind Das: (a) Has the attention of the Secretary for Commonwealth Relations been drawn to the reports of the recent debates in the House of Commons on Constitutional Reforms in Malaya?

(b) What action have Government taken to safeguard the status, rights and privileges of the Indian population in Malaya under the proposed Constitution?

(c) Is any new Indian labour to be sent to Malaya? If so, what action have Government taken to ensure that proper working conditions and the quality of status with other residents in the country are secured for such Indian labour?

(d) What action have Government taken to safeguard the status, and rights of Indians other than labour proceedings to Malaya?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: (a) Yes.

(b) Under the proposed new constitution of Malayan Union, Indians are to be eligible for acquiring Malayan Union Citizenship by fulfilling certain residential conditions and they will not be debarred from acquiring that status on grounds of race or origin. No special action is, therefore, considered necessary at this stage; but the Government of India will continue to maintain a close watch on all developments.

(c) and (d). The Government of India would permit emigration of fresh Indian labour to Malaya only after an agreement has been arrived at between the Government of India and the Government in Malaya in respect of adequate wages and satisfactory working conditions for Indian labourers and of equality of status for Indians of all classes resident in Malaya with other residents.

Seth Govind Das: The Honourable Member said that citizenship rights for Indians in Malaya depend on residential qualifications. If Indians who are there now return to India and wish to go back on account of economic reasons, may I know if those citizenship rights will be given to them?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: I think so; that is how we interpret the announcement.

Seth Govind Das: Has the Honourable Member seen in today's Hindustan Times that the British Government has announced modifications of its plans for setting up the Malayan Union? May I know what those modifications are?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: I have seen the report but I cannot recall having seen any suggestion about modifying the proposals about Malayan citizenship.

Seth Govind Das: Has the Honourable Member seen in the same report the following:

"A more violent attack was launched by Communist William Gallagher who also levelled a charge that the people were being divided up and advocated giving equal rights to the Chinese, all Indians and Malaysians and giving them all opportunity to express themselves and to build up their country as responsible citizens and not as something to be played with by British administrators. He named as an arrogant presumption talking about the people of Malaya as inferior races."

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: I have seen that, but what is the question?

Seth Govind Das: The question is. Is it a fact that the British Government is playing with Indians and Chinese there and for a long time to come the condition of Indians in Malaya would be just the same as in South Africa or Kenya?

Mr. President: I think that is a question for the British Government to answer.

Seth Govind Das: My question is whether the British Government are introducing this legislation with a view to making the condition of Indians in the Malayan Union as precarious as in South Africa.

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: This is about the most liberal pronouncement made by His Majesty's Government with regard to the status of Indians in any overseas country within the Commonwealth.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: May I ask the Honourable Member whether he is prepared to give similar facilities to Muslim League leaders to visit Malaya as were given to Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: I do not suppose that question arises out of the original question.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: This is a question affecting Indians in Malaya; we want to send our representatives to look after the Muslims in Malaya.

Mr. M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know if these Indians in Malaya who are already settled there will automatically become domiciled citizens by virtue of the Act?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: Yes, provided they satisfy the conditions regarding residence as laid down in the White Paper.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know what the residential qualifications are?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: Roughly, ten years' residence in a period of 15 years or five years' residence plus a declaration of the person's intention to adopt Malayan domicile.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: With regard to persons who satisfy the first condition as given by the Honourable Member, will they also have to send a declaration or will they automatically become citizens of the country?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: I think, Sir, the declaration is not necessary.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will Government associate with themselves representatives of non-officials from the south, from where a great part of this labour population hails, before they come to an agreement in regard to labour emigration to Malaya?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: This House and the other House have elected a body of wise representatives who constitute our Standing Committee. And I can assure the Honourable Member that all these matters will be duly placed before that Committee.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will they be consulted before they come to an agreement at all?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: Departmental Standing Committees are intended to be consulted before any action of importance is taken.

Babu Ram Narayan Singh: Sir, with regard to these questions I have to make a submission. Some time ago a circular was issued that owing to press difficulties copies of questions will not be supplied to those Members who have no questions on the agenda for the day. Now that questions have, as I find, begun to be printed I request you to supply us with these copies.

Mr. President: I understand that Members are getting some copies. Is that so?

Mr. B. B. Varma: They are not supplied to Members who have no questions. We should also like to get copies.

Mr. President: The press difficulties have not been yet over. The arrangements are to have a limited number of copies printed and the old request to Honourable Members stands. If any Honourable Member wants a copy he can have it from the Notice Office. It may be that in distribution some Honourable Member may not have been supplied with a copy. He can have it from the Notice Office. The old request of mine still stands.

INDIAN FINANCE BILL—contd.

Mr. President: The House will now proceed with the further consideration of the Finance Bill.

Ahmed E. H. Jaffer (Bombay Southern Division: Muhammadan Rural): Can we continue the debate when neither the Finance Member nor the Finance Secretary are present in the House?

Mr. President: Yes.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon (Sind: Muhammadan Rural): Mr. President, Sir. I was referring to the Planning Department yesterday when my Honourable friend was not in the House. I would suggest that the Planning Department should be closed down because it has served no useful purpose. Every Department is planning by itself and is going ahead without any co-ordination. I happen to be a member of the Planning Committee and, as far as I know, the various Departments are not submitting their plans to this Department, and they are going ahead with their programmes without referring them to the Planning and Development Department. My Honourable friend on the right yesterday rightly pointed out that the Planning Department cannot be successful in its work unless they have got the confidence of the people. Sir Ardesbir Dalal himself had referred to this on many occasions, and we know fully well that his resignation came as a surprise to all of us here, but the Government did not tell the House the reasons for his resignation. No explicit statement has been made on this point and it is the right of this House to know the reasons of his resignation and also why this Department has not been able to co-ordinate the work properly. If the Department has failed, it is for lack of organization, lack of experienced men, and for lack of confidence of the commercial world.

Sir, the problem of shipping has also been a very acute one. During the war the British Government established here a branch of the British Ministry of Shipping which took over shipping from the shipping companies which existed in India at that time. I do not know whether this branch of the British Ministry of Shipping is still functioning and whether it has still got the same powers. Assurances have been given to us that attempts are being made to increase the mercantile marine, but so far the Government have not been successful in doing that. The trade of India, both import and export trade, is restricted through the bottleneck of shipping, and because of the subordinate position of this Government to His Majesty's Government in the matter of shipping. This is terribly unsatisfactory. The sterling balances are being accumulated and yet we cannot impress upon His Majesty's Government for the release of shipping. Although during the war we were told through the machinery of propaganda of the Information Department which is at their command that shipping and mercantile marine had increased to the double as compared to what we had before the war, yet we do not find any improvement in the situation. What has happened to this shipping? The Government of India's Agent in the United States has never paid any attention to this point. He has never taken the trouble to enquire where the surplus shipping of the United States and other Allies have disappeared. The Agent-General, as far as this House knows, has only one job to do, and that is to propagate against Indians and their interests, and to propagate in favour of the present Government and their ideals—what they stand for. May I request the present Government to make an enquiry into this matter, and let us know what amount of shipping can be made available to us immediately? The sterling balances on the V. J. Day stood at three-hundred crores and I suggest that the great need of India in the matter of shipping should be impressed upon His Majesty's Government for two reasons: Firstly, to prevent accumulation of sterling balances, and, secondly, to solve India's transport requirements. The transport problem has been extremely acute, and that is one of the reason why there is food shortage in this country. If shipping had been released at an early date, the problem which is facing this country today would not have been so acute as it is at present.

Coming to the question of sterling balances, they are compulsory savings of this country. I regret, Sir, that I was not present in the House when this question was debated, but I would like to stress that the Muslim League Party is as much interested as any other party in this country. It is the moral obligation of England to repay them. I have been hearing and reading about the scaling down of the sterling balances which is indeed offensive to this country. For one of the richest countries of the world to talk of scaling down the debt which she owes to a country which is the poorest is really offensive. I would like the Honourable the Finance Member to give a definite assurance that further accumulation of sterling in this country will be stopped immediately, or he should state definitely that further accumulations will amount to so much. We would like to know where we stand. This could have been avoided if export was allowed to us

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands (Finance Member): Exports increase the sterling balances.

Nawabzada Liaquat Ali Khan (Meerut Division: Muhammadan Rural): He means exports from England.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: I mean imports. My Honourable friend has been credited for talking of a delegation. I do not know whether there is any truth in it. A delegation should be sent from India to England, I am personally against such a move. My country being placed as a creditor country, we should expect a delegation from England to come to us and tell us as to what they want to do and what are their intentions. Our view is that the sum should be repaid by England from such resources as England has got including the mobilization of assets in India to which my Honourable friend, Diwan Chaman Lal referred to yesterday.

I would like to draw his attention to another fact that there are other assets than to what my friend referred. There are the tramways, the banks in India whose owners have no interest in this country but not only having good fat dividends in England, the "Times of India" and such like.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowland: Better take over the "Hindustan Times".

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: They should be made over to us immediately and this will amount not to 200 crores but to 400 crores of rupees.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras Ceded Districts and Chittoor: Non-Muhammadan Rural): The policy must be changed.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: My friend suggests to me that it should be handed over to the Muslim League Party which has no paper and I welcome the suggestion.

I would like the Finance Member to tell us what is the total volume of orders which are being negotiated by this country in England. The other day the Honourable the Finance Member replied to a question that about 30 crores of textile machinery was on order in the United Kingdom. Then there are locomotives and the wagons and the orders placed for railways by the Honourable the Transport Member. The Government of India Department for Agriculture are placing orders for irrigation machinery, for boring, for road-making and hydro-electric schemes, forests, posts and telegraphs and many other central activities are also placing orders in England. There is a large order being planned and placed by Provincial Governments. Then there are orders collected from India and placed in the United Kingdom for and on behalf of the Indian States, who also have large plans involving the importation of capital goods. All these amount to a very big sum. Has not the Finance Department looked into it and are they not able to tell us the total amount of these orders which have been placed? There are also current requirements like motor cars which are being negotiated for. I think that these orders run up into 400 to 500 crores of rupees. Am I right in this, and if the Government say that my figure is wrong, will they give us the correct figure or the approximate figure as to what these orders amount to? If India wants to buy all this from the United Kingdom, would it be a fair proposition to tell us that we cannot use our sterling balances which are frozen and that the payment of these balances will begin from 1951 at the rate of two per cent every year, and that in the meanwhile for all our immediate requirements during the next five years, we will have to find fresh money? Or we will have to export largely in order to pay for these orders? Is it a fair deal to India which the Honourable the Finance Member is offering? Why do His Majesty's Government leave us in suspense and why is not a fair deal being given to us? If there is a feeling in England that financial justice is to be given to India only when the Anglo-American Treaty is signed, I should say it is not at all fair to us. We are not responsible about what agreement or what arrangement they arrive at. But we are only interested to have our sterling balances back of a proportion of them back in the fresh orders which are being placed. If justice is not being done to us, then to the words of the Prime Minister, Attlee "to seek voluntarily to remain in the British Empire", I would only reply to him in such words but in a different sense according to the expression used by one of the members of the European Group the other day, namely, "that you will get as good as you give us". I am sure the Finance Member will, not, when he gets up to reply, say that I am leaving, and therefore The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: I will.

[Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon]

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: But the responsibility is yours. Till you keep your seat you owe that responsibility to the country. I know how irresponsible you have been.

Mr. President: Order, order. The Honourable Member is addressing the Chair!

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: I am very sorry. Irresponsible as the Government have been, still they owe a sense of responsibility to this country and they should before quitting their offices do something good for India and not divert whatever they have towards the other country to which they are going. While my Honourable friend, Diwan Chaman Lall, was speaking, the Honourable the Finance Member said that he is cutting down Defence expenditure. Defence expenditure amounts to Rs. 244 crores which cannot be regarded with complacency by any Member of this House. We do not want to be told that the officials have done everything to reduce this expenditure. They have not been able to do so. The Finance Department and my Honourable friend has very little control over the War Department. Mr. Mason with his iron fist will not allow him to reduce whatever he desires or wishes.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Rubbish.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: I hope that it will be rubbish. I hope that he will succeed in cutting down to the extent that the Standing Finance Committee proposed to him.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Guntur cum Nellore: Non-Muhammadian Rural): He failed!

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: I am sure that he will not say then that it was rubbish. There has been a great delay in demobilization of both Indian and British units. There is an expenditure of Rs. 3 crores on army entertainment. We want the army to be reduced and we want the entertainment charges to be reduced at a very early date, not simply on the floor of the House to be said that we will do it but it should be done and we want to see the results. We want that at least this Standing Finance Committee to go into the question and deal with it. They should be given a free hand and not be ruled by the War Department. I am sure, before quitting his office, if the Finance Member gives India this present of curtailing the Defence expenditure, I think he would have done a great service to India. Regarding the civil side I would remind him that this war taxation cannot be maintained without ruination to this country and the only sound method is to curtail expenditure. After the last war the Incheape Committee was brought into existence, because the then Finance Member failed to curtail expenditure during the war. I am sorry I have to bring to the notice of the Finance Member that he will not succeed, his Department will not allow him to retrench unless he has the backing of the members of this House. To have the backing of this House he should appoint a non-official committee to go into the details. It should be a committee with full powers to look into all the aspects of expenditure, and if you do that and if you give them a freehand, I am sure the Government will benefit and also the country, whose interest is dearer to us than to them. I hope the Honourable Member will at least go into this question of appointing a non-official committee and he will have the blessing of all sections of the House in retrenchment and in curtailing expenditure which is being incurred without any reason, just to provide jobs to some people in some Departments, people who come from a foreign country where they could not be employed. This should be done away immediately. I hope the Honourable Member will have the benefit of the advice on this question of the members of this House and when he leaves his office he will himself feel that he has done some justice to India during his term of office. I am sure Indian will then at least remember him with gratitude. I have done.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadian Rural): Sir, when I heard from the lips of the Finance Member the following words:

"Though our external foes have been overthrown, the world and particularly India, is still confronted by a whole array of dangerous and enduring enemies—poverty, squalor, ill-health, illiteracy, under-nourishment, under-employment—and of these the most formidable is poverty."

I thought that the British rule, through the Finance Member, was going to confess before its formal death. When I listened to these words, immediately similar words came to my mind which are contained in the Congress Pledge. When that pledge was framed by the Indian National Congress in the year 1929 there was a good deal of criticism to the effect that matters had been exaggerated. Sir, with your permission I will read the relevant portion:

"We believe that it is an inalienable right of the Indian people as of any other to have freedom and enjoy the fruits of their toil and have the necessities of life so that they may have full opportunities of growth. We believe also that if any Government deprives the people of these rights and oppresses them, the people have a further right to alter it or abolish it. The British Government in India has not only deprived the Indian people of their freedom but has based itself on the exploitation of the masses and has ruined India economically, politically, culturally and spiritually. We believe therefore that India must sever the British connection and attain purna swaraj or complete independence."

I think if any proof was needed as to whether what the pledge contains was absolutely true, it will be found in the speech of the Honourable the Finance Member. There is, however, a slight omission. He has stated "And of these the most formidable is poverty." I ask him what is the primary cause, who is the principal collaborator of these enemies?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: The British, of course!

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: The British Rule. Therefore, if he is sincere and I have no doubt that he is, he must join us in ending that rule.

Yesterday and a few days before that also, I heard everybody talking the language of leave-taking. Everybody wants to say that the British Rule is about to end. I just thought whether it was going to be a reality after all and suddenly I thought of referring to the history of the Indian National Congress. When its first session was held in Bombay in 1885, its resolutions were reviewed by the London Times on the 2nd January, 1886. This is what the paper said:

"The resolutions mean that we are to withdraw but if ever we have to withdraw we will not withdraw in favour of middle class lawyers and agitators but we will withdraw to strong arm and sharp weapons."

That was sixty years ago. If the present English Premier talks about peaceful transfer of power, I am quite willing to believe him for the time being. But the history of British rule in India is a history of promises made to the ear and broken to the heart and if some of us distrust them, the Honourable Finance Member and the community which he represents have to excuse us for that.

Now, Sir, I have often been told that the British Empire in India was founded in a fit of absent-mindedness and that they have always been muddling through. At any rate, they do not propose to leave this country in a fit of absent-mindedness. Not only that, but if you visit the North Block of the Secretariat, on the top of the main entrance you will find: "Liberty is not a boon: you have to earn it." That is a standing challenge and those who visit it or those who visit this Assembly may well remember whether after all the Britisher is prepared to part with power in the terms in which the British Premier Mr. Attlee referred to it the other day.

It is really a regretful phenomenon that all these things have happened—enduring poverty, squalor, ill-health, illiteracy, under-nourishment and underemployment. Why? How is it that so few have kept so many, so long toiling in slavery, ignorance and poverty? There is no parallel to this in history. How is it that these few but not faithful, these handful but not helpful, still continue to rule the many millions in India? I thought about it outside and inside the jail and I have come to the conclusion that we have not understood what a modern state is. A modern state is something which must be based on consent and not on coercion. Throughout these 150 years and even long before that we have been taught the virtues of obedience. I want to teach my people if I have that right, that the moment you understand the real foundation of the state to be your own consent, that moment you will be free. You must reject the doctrine of unqualified obedience. There are limits to it and I want to inform the Honourable Finance Member that the era of indiscriminate obedience is gone, that of resistance both to individuals and to law has come to stay. Nothing will be accepted on authority. Nothing on tradition. It will be considered on its merits, and if the Indian people have become wide awake today, it is because they have now understood, some of them at any rate, that no power, however great it may be, can rule or can dominate if the people have the determination and the irresistible will to oppose it.

[Sjt. N. V. Gadgil]

Now, coming to somewhat mundane affairs, the Honourable Finance Member has listed the enemies. After all, what is the object of the budget? After all it is not for things that we budget—it is for men; not for commodities, but for communities. There should be no restriction from that point of view; and in this connection I may respectfully bring to the notice of the Honourable Finance Member what Sir William Beveridge has laid down as the criterion of a good budget and the place it occupies in the financial arrangements of the country. According to him, the new budget must be drawn, not in terms of money available, for there is no limit to it, but in terms of human data of the men that must be employed, and the standard of productivity that must be aimed at. There are three rules. The first rule is absolute. It is better to employ people in digging holes and filling them up again than not to employ them at all. The second rule is hardly less absolute. The object of all human activity is not employment, but welfare, to raise the material standard of living, and to make opportunities for wider spiritual life. For these purposes the wise direction of outlay and so of employment, in the general interest of the community is only less important than adequacy of outlay as a whole. The third rule is this. The state in matters of finance is in a different position from any private citizen or association of private citizens; it is able to control money instead of being controlled by it. Many of the mistakes of the past have arisen through failure to make this fundamental distinction. Spending in excess of current income and borrowing have altogether different implications for the State than for private individuals

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: That is why I have got a deficit budget.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: Borrow as much as you like; there is no harm. Now, as I have said, the main function and I should say the only function of the budget is to provide for men; and if by your policy, general unemployment is the result, that is no tribute to your capacity to frame a right budget. In this country, there has been, as a result of the war, less unemployment; now that the war is over it is time we must exactly apportion and fix up what remedies we ought to take to solve this great problem. In this vast country, 67 per cent of the population are depending upon land, and it is an admitted fact that the land cannot provide adequately for every one of them—so on the basis of adequate remuneration or return.—I have worked up certain figures; and I also find that those are the figures which tally substantially with the figures given, not by an irresponsible agitator, but by a person belonging to the heaven-born service, Mr. Trilok Singh, I.C.S.—in his book 'Poverty and Social Change'.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: He is in the Finance Department.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: He has calculated that out of the rural population of 25.78 lakhs, 7,15,86,506—27.8 per cent. are surplus, in the sense that they cannot be required to make agriculture paying; and if you add to this the unemployment in the urban areas, and if you want to make provision, not for 1946 or 1947 but taking a fairly long term view—we must have a target for the total new employment we must find in the next fifteen years. We should name the figure of the order of 22 million workers, representing a population of 108 millions. In other words that target is 33 to 35 per cent. of the total population of British India, on the figures of the 1941 census.

Now, what are your plans to find employment? The Honourable Finance Member has said in his speech that the Government expenditure has decreased and is bound to decrease in course of time. There will be a great gap and that gap must be filled by private enterprise. Why? In order to enable the private enterprise to do so, he has reduced the excess profits tax

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Abolished.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: I am sorry—abolished. The word 'reduced' occurred to me because in the article written by the Statesman, it is suggested that the Finance Member should have reduced it instead of abolishing it totally. The excess profits tax brought in 75 crores of rupees. Why is it that he has abolished it altogether? The reason, I think, is that whatever may be his personal views, this Government is afraid to take a major decision whether it stands for state socialism or private enterprise

Prof. N. G. Ranga: It stands for private enterprise, that is true.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: The British people have taken the decision. They have decided in favour of socialism; and I do not think there will be anybody to reconsider it. But here in India, with the best opportunity offered—it is only in war time that the big capitalists agreed to control, because they know even under those circumstances they stand to gain, but once they have got the controls it was an easy job for the Government to introduce nationalisation in many fields of economic activity. I think my description which I gave to one of my friends about the Finance Member and which I want to repeat here, is more or less correct. He looks a middle-class man, his accent is socialist, but his action is capitalist. Whatever may be his personal opinions, I think this Government flies the same flag which the conservative party flew at the time of the general election, namely, private enterprise. Now, what does this private enterprise really mean? What has it meant during the war time, in point of food, in point of clothing, in point of housing? I will not say anything about food, because I have dealt with that subject while I was speaking on the cut motion with respect to the Executive Council. Prices of all other commodities have risen many times but the prices of agricultural products, especially the cereals, have not risen to the same tune.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Excuse me. That is entirely wrong.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: The Honourable Member is entirely ignorant.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: My facts will be more eloquent than words and Prof. Ranga will come in and explain them later. Then in the matter of clothing I understand that out of the 75 crores of E. P. T. 75 per cent. came from the textile industry. I understand that one of the mill owners in Ahmedabad has got a photo of a cheque for more than a crore of rupees which he gave to the Government by way of E. P. T., to show probably his loyalty and greatness. I only wish he has kept by the side of the same photo the pictures of the half naked and half starved persons in Bengal and in other parts of India. Even after paying the E. P. T. this and other industries have made still huge and abnormal profits; at whose cost? You control the prices. I know how the prices are controlled. Every time the industrialist got his way. Has he reduced the prices? Having given them this great relief, what does the Finance Member say? He only makes a request. He says:

"In my judgment the profit in certain sections of industry here are excessive and it would, I submit be in their own interest as well as in the interest of the country voluntarily to reduce their prices to the consumer."

[Sjt. N. V. Gadgil]

Will they reduce the prices? For three years, they won't reduce the prices.

Now, take other industries also. The rate of freight and passenger fares from Bombay to ports in the Konkan have risen by 6 to 7 times and the advice that this Government usually gets in the matter of fixing rates is always from those very persons who are interested in those particular industries. The E. P. T. was not paid by the mill owners from their pockets. It has come from the pockets of the poor. What have you done for the poor. Reduction in the duty on kerosene oil, so that they may burn their already dilapidated houses. In this connection I am reminded of what the then Finance Member did for the villages in 1935, not from very good motive. He budgetted one crore for the year 1935-36 but he would not budget it for the year 1937 because the elections went against his expectations. You have given all sorts of concessions for building activities in the city. I have no grievance because I know the overcrowding in Bombay—4.92 persons in one single room, 10' by 10'. Even in London with present difficulties the proportion is 1.7 or about that. I have no grievance about these concessions but without some control of rents these concessions will be worked in a manner which will not give any benefit to the poor. May I ask what you have done for the housing problem in the rural areas. During my election tours, I have visited villages after villages. I have visited them also on other occasions. Half the number of houses are down and dilapidated. They are without ceilings, without roofs. There has been no bombing, I know and yet the houses have gone down. What have you done? What provision have you made? You have got enough forests. Have you ever thought that you should provide timber and teak or other building material necessary for the building of houses in the rural areas free or at cheaper cost?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: We are making a start about it.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: Your principle of taxation, if there is any principle at all, is that you make the poor poorer and the rich richer. It reminds me of what the Bible says: 'Take from him that hath not and give unto him that hath'. Taxation in India, if it is carefully scrutinised, is such that every truth seeker can come to only one conclusion and it is this, that it distributes wealth in the most inequitable, invidious and unequal manner. To illustrate it in mathematical terms, if Rs. 100 is the income, then Rs. 33 go to one person, Rs. 33 to 33 persons and the remaining 34 to 66 persons. Has it ever occurred to the Finance Member that taxation is not merely a means to raise revenue. Taxes are a potential factor, they are a great weapon in securing equitable distribution of national income. I want to know what he has done in that respect.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Nothing.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: I will tell you.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: What have you done to remove poverty? It can only be removed by finding out full employment, by making the system of taxation more equitable, by planning expenditure in the most scientific manner. I find that the position as regards expenditure is the same today as it was some years ago. May I bring to the Honourable the Finance Member's notice the wise words of the Honourable Mr. Gokhale uttered before the Welby Commission in 1892:

"Everything depends in this matter on the nature of the purposes for which the increase has been incurred and the results produced by such outlay of public money. While increased expenditure in other countries under popular control has helped to bring increased strength and security to the nations and increased enlightenment and prosperity to the people, our continually increasing expenditure has under autocratic management, defective constitutional control and inherent defects of alien domination, only helped to bring about constantly increasing exploitation of our resources, has retarded our national progress, weakened our national defences and burdened us with undefined and indefinite financial liabilities. Compelled to meet the demands of a forward imperial frontier policy and the exigencies of conquest, imperial defence and constant borrowing for commercial enterprises, often undertaken in consequence of the pressure of English commercial classes, our Indian Government has little money to spare, with all its increase of taxation, for purposes of national education; and I add other nation building activities."

Even in the present budget, if we just analyse the figures of expenditure, to see how much has gone to the nation building expenditure and what its proportion is to the expenditure on non-nation building departments what do we find? Rs. 158.10 crores out of Rs. 355.71 crores are to be spent for nation-building departments. No one can call this progressive. It is the same sorry tale. The Finance Member said in his speech that these enemies have to be fought. His Excellency the Viceroy just stated as to how they are to be fought. Here are his words "From the task of Tomorrow"—No. 1. He says, "it is to lift the poor man from poverty to security, from ill-health to vigour, from ignorance to understanding". For that they are planning. But I do not know whether they are planning for prosperity or they are planning for further poverty. I am sorry I have to use this language, nobody regrets it more than I do, because I am of the opinion that words are more powerful than atom bombs. But truth requires it to be stated that today at any rate, whatever is being done is not done for the poorer classes. How do they live? A great Sanskrit poet has said "in the morning with a small mouth, in the evening with a small mouth, with body cramped and with the sun shining and supplying heat he had met hunger and cold." (Evan sitam Maya nitam ganu bhanu krushanubhi). That is an accurate description of Indian poverty. Not that you do not know it. You are just like Dhritarashtra. You know what is good, but you do not want to do it, you know what is bad, but you do not want to desist from it. There may be a fatality dogging your steps. It may not necessarily be a conscious thing or a conscious act, but all the same taking it objectively the description is correct. Now, Sir, we are told that British rule is going; as I said the other day, British connection has been a tragedy. The last act should be a noble act, what began in the equivocation of Lord Hastings and forgeries of Lord Clive should end in the execution of an honest document transferring freedom to the masses. What you should take back, may I again end this in the words of a great Sanskrit poet when he says what a man takes to the world and what he leaves behind. He leaves the wealth in the iron safe, he leaves the cattle in the shed, his wife inside the room and the relatives in the funeral ground, his body on the pyre. What follows him? Whatever good he has done follows him to the other world. If any precedent is necessary, I shall give it to the English officials here that when Mahatma Gandhi left South Africa, for good, you know he only took one pound per head and left whatever he has earned for the benefit of the South African people there. May I appeal to you in that strain, leave everything, leave your plantations here, do not talk about expropriation, leave your public utility concerns in which you have shares, give up your pensions, you have done enough harm, and let it be said that whatever he may have been when he lived, he died a noble death.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Sir, we are told by the Honourable the Finance Member, I hope it is correct, that this is his last budget.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: May I therefore pay him a personal tribute for being the most popular Finance Member India has ever had. I share with my Honourable friend Mr. Manu Subedar the hope he expressed that we may see him occupying a higher position in the United Kingdom. If we have more Englishmen of his type in India, I think the great anti-British feelings that exist in the country at present will soon disappear.

Speaking in this House eleven years ago, in March 1935 on the Finance Bill, I said then and I repeat it this morning that we the Muslims of India demand from the Government of India, the unclaimed interest lying with them in respect of deposits made by Muslims in the post office savings banks, government promissory notes and investments in various banks in India. We want this amount to be utilised for the cause of the advancement of Muslim education. Sir, this question has a long history behind it. It was in 1925 that my late father Sir Ebrahim Haroon Jaffer moved a Resolution in the Council of State when he demanded that this amount should be handed over to the Aligarh Muslim University. Speaking on that occasion the then Finance Secretary, Mr. MacWaters said that "the interest which would accrue on these deposits is roughly Rs. 10,000 a year. At the present time the amount lapses to Government". After that he also considered the question of administrative practicability of this Resolution. This is what he further says:

"As regards the second point, whether the proposal is administratively practicable, I think I can say without hesitation that so far as post office savings bank is concerned, there would be no difficulty."

I hope my Honourable friend Sir Gurusath Bewoor would also agree with that. Further he said:

"It will be possible to credit this interest to a separate account. With regard to cash certificates the position is much the same."

Sir, in 1925, it was decided that this question should be postponed for eliciting public opinion from Muslims. Then the Council of State was dissolved. After fresh elections again in 1927, the same Resolution was brought forward by my father and it was then adopted. Speaking on the same occasion, the then Finance Secretary, Mr. Brayne said:

"It has been estimated that at the outset unclaimed interest in the post office savings banks does not amount to more than Rs. 10,000. As regards Government securities, owing to the complexity of the system, it is impossible to say how much the amount is, but such investigations as have been made indicate an inconsiderable amount. Probably not more than Rs. 15,000 are involved in this discussion."

Again the question of consulting Muslim opinion was raised. Here he says:

"Government, as the Honourable Mover of the Resolution has stated made very full enquiries of the Local Governments and Muslim opinion throughout India. The majority of opinion is in favour of the proposal."

After that, the Resolution was finally adopted in 1927. Up to date we do not know what is the exact position. I feel that we are entitled to claim from the Government of India at the rate of Rs. 25,000 per year, according to the figures mentioned by the then Finance Secretary. I would not ask for compound interest. We shall be very happy indeed if the Honourable the Finance Member would give us that amount up-to-date and not only that, he would see this way to appoint a very sympathetic officer like Mr. Cook, the Joint Secretary of the Finance Department to go through the statement of accounts and see that we, the Muslims, get what is due to us in future years.

Now, Sir, coming to the question of welfare and well being of Indian troops in India, it is a matter of great regret that Indian soldiers families have no family hospitals for Indian troops in India, while the British troops have first class family hospitals for them. Similarly there are no schools for children of Indian soldiers. In every military cantonment in India we find first class schools run for children of British troops with very good arrangements for their transport in motor buses; but I am very sorry that nothing has been done for Indians and I do not find any provision in the defence estimates for expenditure on these items. It was only two days ago that I was discussing this question with the Welfare General Lt. General Sir Noel Beresford Pierse whom I have the good fortune to know for the last ten years. And knowing him as I do, I am certain that the interests of Indian soldiers are safe in his hands sympathetic general as he is. But he is helpless for want of funds. Whatever schools and hospitals are run today in the Indian regimental lines are entirely run out of funds donated by military officers themselves. I feel that some sort of arrangement should be made, and I think if the Finance Member strengthens the hands of Lt. General Sir Noel Beresford Pierse matters might improve.

When I come to the grievances of commercial concerns all over India. I have received several representations in this respect in regard to the question of outstanding dues against officers who served in the course of this war in the army, navy and air force. Many of them have been suddenly transferred in India and outside and their whereabouts are unknown. At the moment no army lists are available, and during the course of the war when inquiries were made of Army Headquarters the reply was that the information could not be disclosed. Now that the war is over I hope Government will appoint in every Area Command committee of adjustment under the Chairmanship of the Brigade Commander concerned to see that claims put forward by the commercial concerns are looked into and settled and the amounts recovered from the officers concerned whether they are in India or in England. I am sure that the General Headquarters in India and the War Office in England will co-operate in bringing to book these defaulters who have conveniently disappeared from this country under the plea of termination of the war.

The other day the Finance Member very kindly said that he was reducing three annas per gallon from the duty on petrol. In my budget speech the other day I referred to the question of the abolition of petrol rationing. I am afraid no attention was paid by the Finance Member in his reply the other day. So I repeat that it is no use reducing the petrol duty if you cannot make sufficient petrol available to the consumers. Now that the war is over and the situation has improved I feel that petrol rationing should disappear immediately, if possible by the end of April, so that from the next quarter we may have as much petrol available as we require. Secondly we want that cars should be manufactured in India, and every facility should be given to those concerns who are floating these companies for that purpose. Not only that, but the prices fixed for these cars should be such that they may be within easy reach of the middle class people. Today it is very difficult to buy a car and even if you want to buy a second-hand car you have to pay a good bit of money.

Now I come to the question of direct recruitment to the Imperial Police Service. Speaking about the Province of Bombay I very much regret to say that in the last 15 years not more than one Muslim has been recruited to this branch of the service. I forgot to bring this point specifically forward on the cut motion the other day but I hope that in future recruitment the claims of Muslims will not be overlooked and the quotas that we are short of now, will be made up.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: And it should be completely Indianised.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Certainly I want Indianisation first, but out of that I hope our quota of 25 per cent. will be given and the deficit made up.

Now I shall draw the attention of Government to the serious concern with which the present policy regarding salt is viewed by the Indian salt industry.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member may continue his speech after Lunch.

The Assembly adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock, Syed Ghulam Bhik Nairang (one of the Panel of Chairmen) in the Chair.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Sir, I now wish to draw the attention of the Government of India to the serious concern with which their present policy regarding salt is viewed by the Indian salt industry. I trust that the Honourable the Commerce Member will consider it necessary to tell the House of the steps he proposes to take to remove the legitimate apprehensions of this national enterprise, and to safeguard its position by removing foreign competition particularly from the Middle East countries. The apprehensions of the Indian salt industry are justified and their grievances need to be looked into immediately.

The Government of India favoured the establishment of a national salt industry as they have realized that it meant progressively lesser dependence of the country on foreign sources for an essential commodity like salt. Within a few years, the existence of the Indian Industry was threatened by foreign salt works from the Middle East ports viz., Port Said. As a result of many representations and a tariff enquiry, the Government of India enforced a policy of protection for the benefit of the Indian salt industry from 1931 and the protective duty was continued until the year 1938 when it was not renewed.

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: What document is it?

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: These are my notes. I am not reading any document.

On the lapse of the protection an impetus was given again to foreign salt works to send shipments of salt to Bengal in large quantities and Port Said particularly took advantage of the market to re-enter it.

The Salt Survey Committee, which Government of India had set up in 1931, had reported that India could be made self-sufficient with regard to its requirements of salt by expanding the potentialities of the existing salt works in the country. According to their estimate the West Coast Salt Works could increase their output from 2,20,000 tons to 4,95,000 tons per annum. The anticipations of this Committee have been fully justified as today their productive capacity, on a conservative basis, amounts to 4,70,000 tons. The West Coast Works are thus in a position to meet immediately 80 per cent. of the requirements of Bengal and its adjacent markets.

I regret to say that as a result of the war the position of imports of salt into Bengal altered radically to the detriment of the Indian industry. There was a considerable decline in imports from the West Coast ports, and a corresponding increase from foreign salt works, particularly Port Said which took away a large share of it. It may be pertinent to observe that a result of the war when other industries in India have made advance under Government encouragement, the Indian salt industry has had to put up a hard struggle to maintain its position and retain a fair share of the trade in Bengal. This can only be ascribed to the neglect of the Government of India to look after the interest of the Indian industry by permitting import from foreign sources under one pretext or another.

One of the main reasons for the dwindling of the imports from Indian salt works was the reduction in the number of ships placed at their disposal for salt traffic. For example, in 1939-40 while 70 ships carried salt from the West Coast Works to ports of Bengal, in 1943-44 they were reduced to only 11 ships. During past two years only two ships a month of about 12,000 tons capacity were being allotted to West Coast as against Bengal's requirement of 45,000 tons of salt per month. The Honourable the Commerce Member stated in his answer on the 28th February that during the war it was necessary to build up stocks as a precaution against salt famine, but the House would like to know from the Honourable the Commerce Member why it was necessary to curtail shipments from West Coast and starve the Indian salt works of their legitimate share of the Bengal market and at the same time build up stocks from Port Said and Red Sea ports. To talk of building up stocks of salt against famine by foreign imports is unconvincing when the Honourable the Commerce Member is aware that during the critical period of the war when the menace of Japanese submarines in the Bay of Bengal was serious, it was only the West Coast Salt works who were prepared to take the risk of navigation and ship salt to Bengal ports, and neither Aden nor the Middle East salt works would take the risk. The consequence of heavy salt shipments from foreign sources has not only resulted in a grossly overstocked position in Bengal, but has brought the Indian Salt Works almost to the point of closing down. At present there are between Karachi and Kathiawar nearly 17 salt works. The Honourable the Commerce Member said the other day that during the current six months Bengal will get 5 ships of salt from the West Coast and four from Aden. Can the Honourable the Commerce Member explain the necessity of providing four ships to Aden and giving to the 17 salt works on the West Coast only 5 ships in 6 months? Did he realize the implication of his policy and of the effect it has had on the salt works on the West Coast? The Honourable the Commerce Member must be aware that many lakhs of rupees have been invested in the Indian salt industry and the policy that the Government of India are following is likely to lead to the extinction of the industry unless the Government of India completely revise their policy.

I wish to draw the attention of the House to the answer which the Honourable the Commerce Member gave on the 28th February when he stated that the Government were not in a position in the present situation to discontinue imports of salt from foreign sources altogether. This House is entitled to know what is the 'present situation' and what are the reasons which prevent Government from stopping imports of salt from foreign sources other than Aden? The maintenance of a well established salt industry on the continent of India is vital to the national economy, because salt is basic commodity; it is necessary for the development of the chemical and agricultural industries. It is also important for vital national defence purposes. In view of this, we demand that Government should stop imports of salt into India from Red Sea and Port Said immediately or else they should adduce sound reasons for wishing to permit these imports.

I strongly urge the Government of India to examine the case of the Indian salt industry immediately as these issues are of great importance for the industry which is of national importance. The Members of the industry have taken a serious view of the present policy of the Government of India and have a right to expect that Government do take adequate and early steps to safeguard their interests. I sincerely trust the Honourable the Commerce Member, who has at heart the welfare and well being of the Indian industries, will take immediate steps to see that the grievances of the salt industry are looked into and justice is done to their cause.

Miss Maniben Kara (Nominated Non-Official): Mr. Chairman, I regret I cannot support the present Finance Bill. Being the representative of the poorer classes in this country I cannot possibly support this Bill which I think is an attempt at placating the upper classes. The present incompetent Government realizes that it is no more possible for them to continue to rule this country unless and until they make certain concessions to the upper classes. They are trying to be in the good books of the vested interests of this country. They have a lingering hope that by doing so perhaps they will be accepted as junior partners. If any one listened patiently to the speech by a member of the European Group, he could not help feeling that all that they want now is junior partnership in the exploitation of this country.

Mr. Geoffrey W. Tyson (Bengal: European): By Government or the European members?

Miss Maniben Kara: I am coming to that.

The present Finance Bill seems to me to be yet another example of the graceless acts of dying Imperialism. Sir, I have the proud privilege to belong to the Radical Democratic Party which, Sir, was the first and the only party in this country to visualise that as a result of this war the very foundations of imperialism would be shattered. The Radical Democratic Party was the first in this country

Prof. N. G. Ranga: No, no.

Miss Maniben Kara: to realise this situation which had arisen in the world.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: You are the hench-woman of the Government.

Miss Maniben Kara: The support which was given to the war was whole-hearted and purposeful. It was a bold and scientific step which was taken by the Radical Democratic Party of which I am proud to be a member.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: That is why you are here.

Miss Maniben Kara: I am not going to be disturbed by these interruptions. I am glad that the attitude which was adopted by a young and small party in support of this war stands vindicated.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: With Rs. 30,000!

Miss Maniben Kara: What about monies received by Harijan Fund, the Planning Committee etc. from various governments? Let us not start that controversy here because I have lots of things which I can say on the point. Today every party come forward and wants to have a share in the victory of the United Nations and the defeat of the Axis Powers. All the political parties, who opposed the war in those days are very anxious to reap the fruits of victory after the war is over. These people have overnight turned against the Japanese and are today rejoicing in the victory of the allied powers.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: You have calumniated us ruthlessly. Disgrace!

Miss Maniben Kara: The so-called rice soldiers of yesterday have become all of a sudden the proud assets of my friends on the other side, and they call them our Army, our Navy and our Air Force. The victory if it has been won, has been won because of the sweat and toil of the working classes, and the peasantry who are in the air force, the army and navy of this country. If any benefit as the result of this war can be claimed by any party, it should be that party alone which can claim to represent these people. In spite of the opposition of the National Congress, these are the people who fought the war and have won the war and have destroyed Fascism and they have prevented this country from going under the clutches of Japan.

Now, let us turn to the accumulation of the sterling balances. Who are claiming the sterling balances? Who owns them? The owners are not the people who opposed the war yesterday. The owners of the sterling balances are not the handful of industrialists of this country. The owners of the sterling balances are the poorer sections of the people who fought this war and on account of whom the war was won. The sterling balances should be utilised for the development of state-owned key industries. The sterling balances will have to be utilised for the development of agriculture. They will have to be utilised for relieving the burden of indebtedness on the peasantry. They will have to be utilised for developing and undertaking public works. These are the things for which the sterling balances can be legitimately utilised. The sterling balances are the property of the people of this country and I expect that the Finance Member will have something to give to the people who have helped him to win this war.

Now coming to the Finance Bill itself, I am sorry to say that it is a very disappointing affair. I am not one of those persons who believes that there should be no taxation. I believe in taxation and more taxation. Without taxation it is not possible to run the state in the interests of the people. Taxation there will have to be but the Government will have to be run in such a way as will ensure the prosperity and progress of the country. The present Government, Sir, up till now has been functioning not in the spirit of serving the people but in the spirit of policing the State. The days of policing are over. The Government have to act as if they were there to serve the cause of the people.

In order to do all these things, we shall have to have our revenues expanded. Because as I said before, so long as our country is living in a state of semi-starvation, so long as there is no purchasing power in the country, I cannot visualise how there will be industrialisation. I cannot imagine how the people can think of the industrialisation of this country when 90 per cent. of our population is perpetually living under semi-starvation conditions. Unless there is an internal market there can be no development of industry as the Finance Member visualises and there will not be any possibility of creating an internal market so long as the present economic and social structure remains the same. Under the present feudal system which exists in this country, is there any possibility of expanding industries. The countries that can be industrialised must first create a home market and in order to create a home market, you will have to lift the peasantry out of the out-moded structure of society where they are living under age old oppression. They are heavily indebted and have to work under primitive conditions. Unless our people are freed from such conditions, it is not a practical proposition to talk of industrialisation. These things will have to be done first and when I view the Finance Bill from this point of view I cannot help feeling that it has no underlying principles which will show any ray of hope to the starving millions.

I was very happy yesterday to listen to my friend in the European Group drawing the attention of the Finance Member to the coming famine and he has made certain valuable suggestions. But let me draw the attention of the Finance Member to the fact that it is not a matter of famine today or a famine tomorrow. India is perpetually underfed. Indians have always been a semi-starved people and so long as the Budget shows no underlying idea of helping these semi-starved people I as a representative of the common man of the country cannot support a budget of this kind. The Finance Member instead of showing any concern or sympathy for the conditions in which our Indian people are existing today, conditions of semi-human existence, nay sub-human existence, has shown great concern for the rich and has offered his helping hand to them by proposing the abolition of the Excess Profits Tax. I welcome the speech of my Honourable friend, Diwan Chaman Lall, who also thought that the abolition of the excess profits tax was not justified, that the money realised through the tax could be utilised for the betterment of the common man of the country. I take it that when views are expressed on the floor of this House by responsible members of the Congress Party, they are the views of the Party as a whole, and that the Congress Party is against the abolition of the Excess Profits Tax.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: That is the view of the Congress Party.

Miss Maniben Kara: I am very glad to get that assurance. If that is so, I would request the Honourable the Finance Member to take notice of the views expressed in this House and amend his Bill accordingly. At a time when the country was facing the danger of aggression from outside and starvation and hunger inside, these are the very classes who minted money at the cost of the poorer sections of society. These are the people who in any other country would have been treated as thieves, thugs and dacoits. They would have been imprisoned but in this country the Finance Member has extended a helping hand to them.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: He is dallying with them.

Miss Maniben Kara: When I stop to think why such a thing should have happened, why such a concern has been shown by the Honourable the Finance Member for such anti-social elements in society, who to my mind should be regarded as thugs and dacoits and enemies of the country, it seems to me that he is hoping that if these people are relieved of the Excess Profits Tax, perhaps they would develop industries, they would undertake public works which would eventually result in giving employment to people and raise their standard of living. I am sorry that the Honourable the Finance Member has not yet learnt a lesson from the war, if he still feels that there is a possibility of private enterprise being in a position to raise the standard of living of the people. I am sorry for him if he thinks so, even in these days when the capitalist system in all the countries has not only failed but led to a devastating war. Yet in spite of that if the Honourable the Finance Member wants to pin his hope on a handful of industrialists in the belief that if they are relieved of the Excess Profits Tax, perhaps they would develop their privately owned industries thus solving the problem of unemployment and raising the standard of life of the people I have no words to express what I think of the Honourable Member's credulity.

If as a result of the present Finance Bill the country has to face unemployment and famine, let me sound a note of warning that the present Government will have to be blamed for it. They will have to take the responsibility, if as a result of this Bill there is greater unemployment, starvation, death and disease in the country. The charge will be at the doors of the Government of the country. Does he not realise that in the present structure of society it is impossible, even with the best will on the part of the industrialists of this country, as long as the industries are in the hands of a few people, that the standard of living of the people can ever be raised?

Mr. Chairman: The Honourable Member's time is up.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowland: I will give five minutes of my time.

Miss Maniben Kara: Apart from death and estate duties other measures should have been taken for the benefit of the people. My friend Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad has given the vast sums accumulated by a few people during the war a proper name—Rupee Balances. May I ask why the rupee balances should not be made available for public purposes through appropriate taxation?

Mr. Chairman: The Honourable Member can have three minutes more.

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi (Calcutta and Suburbs: Muhammadan Urban): I think the Honourable the President said that ordinary members could have anything between 20 to 80 minutes.

Several Honourable Members: Only 20 minutes.

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: Therefore I submit that our Honourable speaker should be allowed to go on.

Miss Maniben Kara: I regret that the Honourable the Finance Member has adopted a very timid policy: instead of boldly taxing the richer sections of society, he has pinned his faith on them. In other words, he is trying to hand over, tied hand and foot, the Indian masses to the mercies of the upper classes. There are vast possibilities for development in our country in men and material. If this country is left in chaos and starvation by the present Government, it will not be because we are lacking in resources, in men and material, it will be simply because the Government lacked the courage to adopt a bold policy to reconstruct the entire society.

Lastly, I must say that in this bill I find the shadow of coming events.

The British Cabinet Mission is coming here for a political settlement. All the indications show that the reality of power will be in the hands of the few. People talk of freedom and of independence. But it will merely be a replacement of the white by the brown. We will have in this country the rule of the Indian upper classes in place of the rule of the British imperialism. I cannot feel enthusiastic about a political settlement of this nature, because to me that will not mean any improvement—it will only mean a continuation of slavery though under different masters; and change of masters does not mean, to me, freedom. But that does not mean that I am in the least enthusiastic about the present government, because I feel that the present Government, has acted as policemen and as tax-gatherers for the upper classes. They have not acted in any other capacity—they have acted as mere tools in the hands of the upper classes of this country; and I am afraid that the same will continue if my friends on the opposite benches move a little closer this side and occupy the treasury benches, which my friends on the treasury benches are now very anxious to quit. An understanding has been reached between the present occupiers and the would-be occupiers. That is why, during the discussion on the budget, even though I was not here, from what I could follow from the press reports, I felt that there was nothing but great appreciation for the Honourable the Finance Member and I am surprised that now the tone of the speeches has changed. The reason to me is very clear, because orders have come from the high command, the working committee of the Congress.

Mr. Chairman: The Honourable Speaker had better finish her speech now.

Miss Maniben Kara: That being the case, the Congress may throw out the Bill as a political stunt. I have no sympathy with the Bill because I have my fundamental differences with the underlying policies of the Bill. I should have expected from the Honourable the Finance Member that the first peace time budget should have been framed with the object of pooling the entire resources of the country in the public treasury and utilising them for the betterment of the common man of this country.

Sri N. Narayanamurthi (Ganjam cum Vizagapatam: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Mr. Chairman, encomiums have been showered on the Finance Member—encomium after encomium—for what is styled by interested people to be a departure from the old rut of budget making. He is credited for his skill and forensic abilities, for having made a departure from the old methods and for presenting what is thus advertised to be a liberal and sympathetic budget. But so far as our party is concerned, we have never joined in that encomium. From the very beginning, even from the day on which the budget was presented, our party has made it absolutely clear that the budget has given nothing for the poor man. If there is any party or established organisation in the whole of this country, which can take care of the interests of the common man, it is the Indian National Congress, and no other like it. Other mushroom parties and organisations cannot claim to be better guardians and better protectors of the rights and interests of the common man than the Indian National Congress itself which has got a glorious record of sixty years' fight for the people of this country, irrespective of class, caste or any other distinction among the people of this country. The independence for which the Indian National Congress is and has been fighting all along is for every man, every woman and every child and every class of people in this country. The Congress has all along proclaimed its ideal as to safeguard the interests and liberties of the entire nation, and not of any section of it. So either the Honourable lady member who has just spoken before me, or any other section of the House need not have any fear or doubt whatsoever that in the transitional stage, in case of any transference of power by amicable settlement, if by God's grace anything turns up and the interests of the country are placed in the hands of the Congress, I can assure every section, not only of this House, but every political party, and every man born in India and claiming this with any patriotism as his motherland, that the Congress will be the organisation that will make and work for the establishment of a cent per cent Swaraj for the people.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman (Patna and Chota Nagpur cum Orissa: Muhammadan): May I ask the Honourable Member what did the Congress ministries do in their own time? Have you got any record of that?

Sri N. Narayanamurthi: Coming to the Finance Bill, the Finance Member himself claims his budget to be a mark-time budget. Now, Sir, it is not a mark-time budget that the country expects of him at this stage. Immediately after the termination of one of the greatest world wars, India has a right to expect a peace time budget, a peace time budget of far reaching statesmanship and constructive proposals and plans for the emancipation of this country. Nothing of the kind is given in the budget. I do not doubt even for a moment the forensic abilities of the Finance Member. I do not grudge him the compliments that are being paid; but I refuse to join in them because he has not done anything for the common man, for the poor man, as has been pointed out by all the previous speakers that have spoken already on this subject.

The Hon'ble The Finance Member claims and perhaps expects cheap popularity by the abolition of the excess profits tax. That was not asked for by us; and just now the Honourable Lady member, speaking before me, has been asking what the attitude of the Congress is towards this. The Congress never asked for the protection of vested interests. Congress on the other hand has got its own definite views on these and other matters, relating to taxation. The Congress has never asked for the complete abolition of the Excess Profits Tax. On the other hand the Congress has all along been pressing for the utilisation of every pie available in the finances of the Government for the betterment of the country and the entire nation. If the Honourable the Finance Member is bidding for cheap popularity, it is because he is aware of the fact that his budget is only to mark time and that he will have no responsibility to shoulder in the near future. We are aware of the fact that even in England the excess profits tax has not been completely abolished. As has been said by several of the previous speakers, it would have been much better if he had planned directly a big nation-building programme and had utilised these monies for the benefit of the common man. But we cannot blame the Finance Member alone for this, because if the various Departments of the Government had their own definite programmes and plans for nation-building and had they pressed for the necessary money, perhaps the shape of the present budget would have been different. But we know how the present Government Departments are working. In England if they have conserved 50 per cent of the excess profits tax, it is because England is a self-governing country which knows its own post-war requirements and has got its own post-war plans. But here we are governed by a Government which neither knows the country nor even its own mind. Take, for instance, the case of the Information and Broadcasting Department, which has suffered a very drastic cut at our hands. We have cut the supplies to the extent of 98 lakhs. Does it mean that the entire body of elected members of this House who have voted for it do not know the importance and the imperative urgency of information and the need for a real kind of national propaganda. Not at all. The cut was intended to destroy the present cobweb of corruption, nepotism and jobbery that was going on in the name of Information and Broadcasting. We know how to organise our own department of information when the time for it comes. We shall have our own publicity and information departments in the provinces as well as in the Centre. My point is this. If these departments had their own constructive plans for nation-building and if they had come forward with their definite plans for progress and expansion, that cut would not have taken place.

Take again the instance of the refusal of the rail-road co-ordination plan. We are not opposed to the principle of the nationalisation of transport. In fact, the scheme that was brought and placed before us was not a real nationalisation of transport project. For that matter, they wanted to kill bus competition and get more money for the railways at the cost of the poor bus owners. If there had been a real nationalisation of transport and if the Government had come forward with a full fledged nationalisation programme, the Congress and every other progressive party in the country would have been the first to support it. For instance, along with the nationalisation of transport or "rail road co-ordination" as they called it, if the Government had brought forward a definite plan for a national automobile industry, the whole nation would have been glad. There are very many key industries which the Government themselves ought to take up in a post war period like this. They could have raised a huge loan if necessary. Did they not raise huge loans when they required money during war time. Just like that, if they had raised a huge loan the whole nation would have responded as gloriously as it has responded on previous occasions. The main charge against the Government is that it does not know its own mind. It has not got any comprehensive or clear cut or definite plans of nation building and that point has already been emphasized.

I was just now speaking of the drastic cut which we carried in the case of the Information and Arts Department. Simply because we passed the Broadcasting Department without any special cut, it should not be taken that we are satisfied with the working of the Broadcasting Department. We have a great deal to say against the working of the Broadcasting Department. It has not brought forward any definite proposals for expansion even though it is now nearly 7 or 8 years since the A. I. R. and other broadcasting institutions and the department was started in this country. Even all the provincial capitals are not as yet equipped with broadcasting stations. There is the case of Patna about which the other day the Honourable Member was being asked a question. The Provincial headquarters of Orissa, Cuttack or other provincial centres like Nagpur and Karachi have not got any broadcasting stations. As far back as 1936 or 1937 experts went and inspected and approved a spot at Rajahmundry in the Andhra Desa but none of these projects have materialised, even though 8 years have now elapsed.

[At this stage, Mr. Chairman (Syed Ghulam Bhik Nairang) vacated the Chair which was then occupied by Mr. Deputy President (Sir Muhammad Yamin Khan)].

Take again the question of encouraging the manufacture of receiving sets and supplying cheap radio sets to the people. There is nothing of such expansion in these budget proposals.

Let alone industrial planning even so far as political planning is concerned, the present budget does not forecast any good to this country. For instance, take the question of the reorganisation of the Provinces of India on a linguistic basis. This is a question at least 35 years old. The Andhra movement and several other movements such as the demand for the unification of the Karnataka have been on the anvil for over 40 years. Several Resolutions have been passed favouring that proposal. In the pre-Montagu Imperial Legislative Council also a Resolution was passed accepting the principle. The Montagu Report accepted the principle and subsequently the Madras Legislative Assembly passed a Resolution and very recently the Council of State also passed a Resolution agreeing to the principle of reorganisation of the entire provinces of India on a linguistic basis. The Indian National Congress has accepted the principle in effect and yet the Government does not seem to be aware of the consensus of opinion. The revision of the boundaries may be primarily a matter of the provinces concerned according to the present constitution but the general question of appointing a Boundary Commission for the whole of India and the reorganisation of the whole country on the language basis is essentially an all-India matter. The Government should have taken up the consideration of this question long ago. These reforms are long overdue and would have been taken in hand long ago if there had been a national government in existence in this country. Let me say in this connection that the demand for a separate Andhra Province or a Karnataka province is not based on any separatist or clannish or communal cry. The demand is based on the fundamental principle that if the Government of the country is to be a real Government of the people by the people for the people, then it should be in the hands of the people themselves. It is on this ground that we have been agitating so that we may be in a position to safeguard the interests of the common man. If there were linguistic provinces, and if the actual cultivators and the actual workers of the country had been able to participate in the administration of their own province, irrigation projects and things like that would not have been neglected in the manner in which they are being neglected by the present Government. In the present budget even with regard to irrigation schemes and hydro-electric projects much attention does not seem to have been paid. Being on the Standing Committee for Labour, I know that the Government of India this year are going to carry out four major projects of which the Mahanadi Project in which I am directly interested as coming for Orissa is one. As a matter of fact after a delay of about 20 years this is being undertaken. I know there are three other major projects, the 'Damodar Project,' the 'Sone Project' and a fourth project somewhere on the Indus. All these are long overdue ones which are being taken up now. There are very many of this nature which the Government should immediately undertake in all the provinces. Some of them may be primarily matters for the Provincial Governments to take up but the lead in matters of this kind must come from the Central Government especially in view of the grave food crisis facing the country, as well as in the interests of the agricultural development for which the Government have to start an All-India campaign. The sooner, therefore, the Government takes up these projects and carries them out, the better.

Let alone the nationalisation of industries. Take the question of the encouragement of private enterprise. The Honourable the Finance Member claims some credit for the abolition of the duty on raw material imports and machinery. But it may be noted that the Government is going to get more customs revenue from manufactured goods to be imported in the current year than during the war-period. What does it mean? It only means that they are going to dump this country with manufactured goods from other countries. Nothing has been done to develop our local industries. Unless that is done on an all India scale, with regard to nationalisation of industries as well as by way of encouragement of cottage industries in rural areas, nothing tangible can be effected in the economy of this country. Mere exemption of duty on imported raw materials will not help matters, even in this matter a great injustice has been done to the Film Industry of India. They propose to tax the entire quantity of raw film required on a linear foot basis at the rate of half anna per foot. Like the raw stock for any other industry, raw film is the raw product required for the film industry, which has a rightful claim for protection and encouragement at the hands of the government. As far back as 1929, there was a ~~Committee~~ Committee under the Chairmanship of the late Dewan Bahadur ~~Shri~~ Shri ~~Chandrasekhar~~ Chandrasekhar, which enquired into and recognised that raw film is as much raw material as any other and that Government should exempt it wholly from import duty. Even though 18 years have lapsed ever since and even though also subsequently in 1932 the same question was discussed on the floor of the House on the motion of Mr. Jadhav and the then Commerce Member Sir Joseph Bhore promised sympathetic consideration nothing was done and now instead of giving protection they are going to levy a tax of six pice per foot in the shape of import duty. This is a great hardship. I shall deal with this in detail when the House considers the Bill clause by clause.

Now, Sir, a word with regard to food problem. I need not speak at length as it has already been covered by the previous speakers on the subject. In an emergency like this, as was pointed out by my Honourable friend Mr. Lawson yesterday the food problem should not be left to be the concern of only one Department of the Government. The entire Government machinery should be set in motion and the Government should take extraordinary measures for encouraging agricultural production of the country as well as supply of food stuffs, distribution and procurement and everything connected with it. In that respect also there is no definite plan or programme envisaged or provided for in this budget. Of course the present Government is only biding its time. It is in a transitional stage. That is why the Honourable Finance Member does not seem to have made any provision for an all-round and comprehensive programme of reconstruction and therefore the present budget is wholly disappointing.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman (Patna and Chota Nagpur cum Orissa: Muhammadan): Sir, I do not want to comment on the taxation policy of Government, as I have already said what I felt about the budget proposals in my speech on the general discussion. I would confine my remarks on the present occasion to a particular Department, the Civil Supplies and Industries which has been concerned with the supply of the necessities of life only second to food. On 10th March 1945, speaking on the Cut Motion in this House I made my point of view very clear in the matter of marking of prices by this Department. It really remains a mystery to the common man as no body can understand the method and process of marking of prices on the cloth by this Department. We find that latha of inferior qualities are marked at higher rates compared to latha of superior quality. I understand this is probably due to the fact that a fixed rate of profit is allowed to all the mills and because certain mills have particular proficiency in producing certain kind of cloth, say, for instance, latha these mills can produce at fourteen annas a yard, whereas for others it costs nearly Rs. 1-2-0 a yard. This price ~~reflects~~ on the marking of prices on mill and ~~retailed~~ rates. As the element of competition has been taken away from these mills because of the Government rates being marked on them, I would only point out that this matter should be fully investigated into. This is what I said when speaking last year but I do not think the Department has done anything so far in their connection. The only concrete suggestion in this respect is that those mills which are efficient in producing a particular kind of cloth like latha, muslin, shirtings and so on, they should be asked to concentrate on the production of that particular quality and variety which they can produce at a cheaper rate and with better skill. To make myself more clear, I would say this that supposing a certain mill can produce latha at the cost of Rs. 0-14-0 a yard which is finer and of better quality than the other mills which can only produce at the cost of one rupee, then that particular mill which has its costing at 14 As. per yd. should be asked to concentrate on the production of that one type of cloth, that is latha. Other mills in the same way should be surveyed to see which other kind of cloth each can produce best in quality and cheaper in price. This is a concrete suggestion which I want to offer to the Department if they would care to pay heed to this. If they insist on flouting suggestion in this House, we can not help it in the present circumstances.

Now, I come to the position of Muslim traders. I am sorry the Honourable Mr. Waugh is not present here. I would like to refer him to his letter to me during last February in which he said that out of 816 licences issued, for the sale of woollen cloth, only 59 licences were issued to Muslims by his Department for the distribution of woollen cloth all over India. In his reply today to a question of mine, he said that in Delhi nearly 14 lakhs of yards are being sold as unrationed cloth out of which the share given to Muslim traders is nearly 2 lakhs 25 thousand yards. You will notice that the share of the Muslims is only 15 per cent. The figures for other provinces are not available to me, and the Civil Supplies Department has not been able to give same on the plea that the distribution was a provincial subject. I know Mr. Deputy President from my experience of Bihar Province that the condition of Muslim traders there is bad enough and in other provinces like U. P. the condition is also no better as my friend the Raja Sahab of Mahmoodabad tells me. Probably the position is that the share of Muslim merchants in the matter of supply of both rationed and unrationed cloth remains at 15 per cent. or less for which licenses have been issued up till now. As a specific question was put on the distribution in Delhi a concrete reply was given in regard to Delhi and I would particularly refer this, as a specimen. The Honourable Member of Government in his reply said that the question of the miserable plight of Delhi Muslim traders was not brought to the notice of the Government till so late as 2nd March 1946. Probably he refers to the letter which I wrote to him on this issue saying that only Rs. 22-4-0 per month was the earning of this Muslim merchants to whom this unrationed cloth has been given for distribution so far in Delhi.

I would now refer to the correspondence which my Deputy Leader Nawabzada Liaqat Ali Khan began with this Department and with the Chief Commissioner of Delhi as early as in June 1945. This correspondence was followed up by the correspondence I had with them in July, August and September. I saw the Chief Commissioner in this connection, and an assurance was given to me that the Muslim quota will be given due consideration. I have been insisting on 50 per cent quota to Muslim merchants which according to principle of population in Delhi was absolutely necessary but in actual practice, this percentage was only worked up to fifteen per cent. in the matter of un-rationed cloth for muslim cloth merchants. It is still in the region of prejudices. We notice that in the matter of un-rationed cloth, in spite of many statement that has been published, in spite of protest meetings held by the Muslims citizen of Delhi during last ten months, the share of the Muslims cloth merchant has only remained at less than 15 per cent. Still the Department claims to be ignorant of the subject which we have taken up so long. This is a position which requires very careful consideration. I refer to the position of the Muslim cloth merchants because although statements were issued and Dawn and many other Urdu dailies and weeklies were writing articles day in and day out, the plight of Muslims cloth traders continue to be miserable and we have not been able to improve things with all these efforts. That was because the men in charge in the Department were working with religious prejudices in their minds and attempts were made to keep everything in secret pool. I wrote a letter to Mr. Ramadhyani, the Director of Civil Supplies, Delhi, on the 19th February last and asked for certain information and detailed figures regarding the distribution of unrationed cloth to Muslims and non-Muslims Traders. His reply was evasive and ambiguous. He replied:

"Correspondence is not likely to allay your apprehensions. I am requesting Mr. Yar Khan to take an early opportunity of meeting and explaining your apprehensions."

He was shelving the position and not replying to my issues raised. He replied in 8 lines to my letter of nearly 150 lines. The reply given in the House today reveals the position to be even worse than what I suspected. That is how the Department has been behaving towards the Muslim cloth traders. Mr. Ramadhyani's representative promised in his letter never met me at all.

Sir, I will not refer to the question of Muslim proportion in services because this has been ably dealt with by other Honourable Members of my party a few days ago. I will only say with reference to the Finance Bill that although I do not know what the decision of my party will be, yet I certainly feel that, this is a rich man's budget and nothing has been done for the common man in this country. Unless some relief is given to the common man it is difficult to convince people that the Finance Member has shown any appreciation of the needs of this country. In this connection I feel that the duties on kerosene, salt, betel-nuts and such other things should be reduced to an extent that it may make an appreciable difference in the poor man's household. The post-card, for instance, may be made cheaper so as to give the poor man some relief. Every one writes at least 12 or 15 letters a year, and a saving of even four annas to a poor man would make a good deal of difference. I do not propose to give concrete suggestions here, as this may be done by my Leader or Deputy Leader later in the week.

With regard to our sterling balances I have already spoken at length during General discussion and will not deal with them any further at this stage. Sir, I have done.

Rai Bahadur Devendra Mohan Bhattacharya (Nominated Non-official): Sir, I could not take part in the general discussion on the budget. Hence my first words today shall be words of congratulations to the Honourable the Finance Member on his new approach to the solution of the difficult problems of India's finance during this difficult period of transition. I believe, Sir, you will agree with me if I say that the office of Finance Member has never been a soft job and often proved to be the grave of many reputations; but Sir Archibald Rowlands who assumed office only a year ago has chalked out a programme for India with commendable boldness and imagination indicating the shape of things to come in a regime under her natural leaders to which we are all looking forward.

I think, Sir, I would be guilty of no inconsistency if I begin by saying that the Finance Member has given a new orientation to the Indian fiscal policy having an eye to India's good only. Expansion of India's industry is one of the foremost planks in any scheme of peace-time rehabilitation and the abolition of the Excess Profits Tax is sure to give a fillip to the much needed industrial regeneration of India. This development of industry, if carried out, will not only make India self-sufficient so far as her daily needs are concerned but will absorb a good many people discharged from war-time services and will thereby help to solve the problem of unemployment that looms so large today.

Sir, men of moderate means find relief in the reduction of the rate of income-tax and the poor is benefited by reduction in the duty on kerosene.

As one hailing from Bengal I am thankful to the Honourable Finance Member for subvention of eight crores of rupees to Bengal to enable her to tide over her difficulties. But it is rather disappointing, Sir, that the Finance Member who has a soft corner for all has forgotten the case of a section of unfortunate people who derive their income from forests. They have been practically ignored and no relief has been extended to them. I speak from my experience in Bengal that the forest-owning people have made very valuable contributions to the economic, social and cultural development of Bengal, but they seem to have fallen on evil days. The Provincial Government of Bengal has initiated the agricultural income-tax on income derived from forests and the Indian Income-tax Department has recently discovered that the income from forests, although grown according to the usual processes of agriculture, is liable to taxation under the Indian Income-tax Act, and the result is that this income is being subjected to double taxation, once by the Provincial Government and again by the Central Government. May I tell the Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands, who modestly describes himself as a tax-gatherer-in-chief, that his followers in the lower ranks of the Department are anxious to go ahead of their chief and in their over-zealousness they want to prove themselves perhaps more loyal than the king himself. I may submit, Sir, that if forests are subjected to high rates of taxation of the Indian Income-tax Department, it would spell disaster for their future growth leading to their ultimate extinction. The forest owners will find no interest to look after the forests only for the benefit of the Government and the condition of forests will naturally deteriorate and no one need be surprised if forest areas are ultimately converted to arable lands or waste lands. The process of deforestation which has already commenced in fear of this high rate of taxation will have a baneful effect on the country's rainfall and will be a contributing factor in causing drought and thereby loss of agricultural produce. If the Government feels keen on the preservation of forests in the general well-being of the country, I think, Sir, it should come to the rescue of the forest owners by treating income derived from forests as purely agricultural and not to make this income liable to taxation under the Indian Income-tax Act.

Sir, I would like to say a few words more not in a spirit of criticism but a statement of genuine grievances which I hope the Honourable the Finance Member would kindly look into and see that the grievances are remedied.

Sir, lands, forests and houses were requisitioned by the Government during war for war purposes and the people did not object to it as all works relating to war should have first priority. At the time of requisition, Sir, District Officers assured the people that their claims for compensation would be sympathetically considered and that compensation would be paid at rates which would satisfy all concerned and actually, Sir, in cases in which compensation had been paid during the war, the rates of compensation were very fair and equitable. But at present, Sir, attempts are being made to pay as little as possible. Compensation is now probably being calculated at pre-war rates, although the prices of land and forests have now gone up by more than four or five times the pre-war rates. I know, Sir, one landlord whose forests measuring about 800 acres were requisitioned for construction of Airfields. Trees were cut down and uprooted, thus making the growth of forest in future impossible. The Land Acquisition Officer at the time prepared the schedule of compensation to be paid to him and he came to know unofficially that his compensation money would be about three lakhs of rupees. The amount, however, was not paid during the war on some pretext or other. But now the war having been over, the gentleman has been officially informed recently by a new Land Acquisition Officer that his total compensation money would come up to about a lakh and a quarter only. This difference in rates for payment of compensation money cannot be justified on any ground whatsoever and I find no reason why owners should not be paid at increased rates which prevail at the present moment, however high they may be.

Then, Sir, these people are faced with another difficulty. The Income-tax Officers are hovering round about these gentlemen and they will jump upon them and swallow a major portion of the compensation when the money will be actually paid. I know one gentleman, Sir, who will have to pay more than 80 per cent. of his compensation money to the Income-tax Department, and he will have very little left with him to make up the loss he has suffered from. This is really a great hardship and I would request the Honourable the Finance Member to see if he can make this kind of compensation money—money paid by way of compensation for properties requisitioned during war—income-tax free.

Sir, I would refer to one thing more and then I will finish. I find, Sir, that the rate of income-tax on unearned income is higher. I know many owners of unearned income who are very generous and make large annual donations which lead to the growth and foundation of many useful institutions in this land of ours from time to time. To bring some relief to this section of tax-payers, may I request the Honourable the Finance Member to see if he can find his way to place the amount of the unearned income donated for bona fide charitable purposes beyond the purview of the Indian Income-tax Act. I believe, Sir, this concession, if agreed to, will encourage the owners of unearned income to donate more in future for institutions which depend largely on public charity.

With these words, Sir, I support the Finance Bill.

Mr. P. B. Gole (Berar: Non-Muhammadan); Mr. Deputy President. I rise to oppose the passing of the Finance Bill moved by the Honourable the Finance Member.

Before I come to the actual provisions of the Finance Bill, I would like to make a few remarks regarding last year's conditions. The year 1945-46 can be said to be a memorable year from several points of view. The greatest war in the annals of history came to an end perhaps by the use of Atomic bomb; we do not know whether it could have ended otherwise. But it ushered in new problems and to use the words of the Honourable the Finance Member himself, it has created new enemies in the form of poverty, ill-health, squalor and other things, and we are asked to fight these. The Honourable the Finance Member said that he was going to quit office and the new incumbents will have to find ways and means to fight these enemies. He has shown the way in which this could be done and some provisions could be found in the Finance Bill by which these enemies could be fought.

I have tried to look at the Finance Bill from the test which the Finance Member himself has laid before us, and from his point of view if I were to look at this Bill then I may say that beyond reducing some tax on kerosene and beyond certain promises which in reply the Honourable the Finance Member gave regarding reduction in other taxes or indirect taxes, I have not been able to find in the Finance Bill any provision which will at least prepare the nation for fighting the enemies.

During this war there were several Commissions and several Committees held by the United Nations. We have got the U.N.R.R.A., we have got the U.N.O., we have got the Philadelphia Charter, and several others have been devised in order to make this world safe for peace as well as for happiness. And from this point of view the position of India so far as these UNRRA, UNOs and conferences are concerned, although India had been a party to these, I do not find that India has been recognized anywhere in any of these Conferences and Commissions. I draw the attention of the Honourable the Finance Member to what is called the Philadelphia Charter. There the motto that was laid: "Poverty anywhere constitutes a danger to prosperity everywhere." is a trite saying which will hold good everywhere. Therefore, if India is poor, and for the matter of that the poorest, of all the countries in the world, then this will constitute a danger to the peace of the world. That is an accepted saying, and in order to fight this there are certain aims which were laid before the Philadelphia conference. Seven points are mentioned in what is called the Philadelphia Charter and I shall try to examine the Finance Bill by placing before me these aims and objects to be achieved in order to have permanent peace in this world:

"1. Opportunity for useful and regular employment to all persons who want work at fair wages and returns and under reasonable conditions with provisions for the protection of health against injury in all occupations.

2. Raising standards of living to provide adequate nutrition, housing, medical care, health and education."

3. The establishment of a programme of standard of employment to prevent exploitation of workers whether employed or self-employed whose opportunities of higher wage employment are limited.

4. Provision for child welfare.

5. Provision for a regular flow of income for all whose employment is interrupted by sickness or injury, by old-age or lack of employment opportunity.

6. The recognition of the right of freedom of association and collective bargaining.

7. Provision of labour trading."

These are the aims laid down by what is called the Philadelphia Charter and let us examine this Finance Bill in the light of the aims put forward. I suppose India was a party to this Conference and I suppose when these aims are put forward they are equally applicable to India. Let us examine, Sir, from this point of view whether the Finance Bill of the Honourable Member comes up to this standard. In the course of his budget speech, the Finance Member said:

"Nor is it easy to do very much for the poor man in the field of indirect taxation. The main advantage which he will derive from my proposals will be from the schemes economic and social which will be financed by the yield of the taxes contributed by the richer sections of this community."

Excepting the reduction on the duty on kerosene, he leaves everything to be done, so far as relief of the poor is concerned and their uplift economically, to the schemes to be put forth, socially, economically and industrially. I have tried to see whether there is any provision in this Finance Bill for raising the standard of living to provide adequate nutrition, housing, medical care and education. Is there anything in the schemes whereby better nutrition could be given. My view of the whole Finance Bill is that beyond removing the excess profits tax, and perhaps filling the coffers of the already rich people, and giving some relief to the income-tax payer in the form of direct taxation, so far as those persons are concerned who are not able to pay any tax directly (and the majority of Indians are such who cannot afford to pay income-tax or pay indirect tax), the relief to these poor people (and the majority of Indians are poor) is practically nil. Let us see if India is to be left a poor country all its life. It was poor before the war. It has become poorer still. Then this will be a danger for the peace of the world. I need not, Sir, dilate upon this at great length, but I may point out to you, Sir, that today in the 'Hindustan Times' there is a report from America. There the question of giving a quota of wheat was raised in the United Food Board and Argentina, I am told, refused to give its quota. Mr. Ramamurti, one of the Indian Food Delegates who have gone to America, has issued a statement in America. I will only quote two or three sentences from that statement. Under the headlines ten millions will die and not easily, and with a large map showing the Indian famine areas, the article declares:

[Mr. P. B. Gole]

"In the famine of 1943 in Bengal, it was the poor people, the voiceless people who suffered. Now the people who face death belong to all ranks of the population, vocal and intelligent people. They will not die easily and if the food supplies fail, they will bring down the whole fabric and administration of life in India."

That is what Mr. Ramamurti, one of the Food Delegates who have gone to America has stated publicly and published it in the newspapers. Has it got any effect on this Food Board or upon the U.N.O. conference? Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar is one of the members of this U.N.O. committee. There also the question of food for India was raised. In fact the Food delegation is going with a begging bowl before these nations for food for India and they are receiving very scant courtesy at the hands of the U.N.O. and the Combined Food Board. Why is it so? We know that in winning the war India has played the greatest part. India has supplied men and money, has shed its blood, and India has been bled white and with all this India has been famished and today at this hour, all the food is being concentrated and those persons who are said to have suffered on account of war are being given food. I do not hear, for instance, in the whole world that the Germans are being famished or the Germans are dying of hunger. I do not hear that the Austrians are dying of hunger or the Italians. But I do here that Indians in millions are dying of hunger. Here Mr. Ramamurti says that ten millions of people, if food is not supplied in time, will die of hunger; and with all this United Food Board and the U.N.O. I am still not hopeful. The reason is obvious. These delegates have not the backing of the people. They are not recognised. They are an appendage to the British Government and it is the duty of the British Government really speaking to feed India at this juncture. And what is being done? We are asked to go with a begging bowl to America, to the U.N.O. and to U.N.R.R.A. Only last year India was made to contribute Rs. 8 crores to U.N.R.R.A. and this year also a provision was being made for a contribution of Rs. 4 crores. India has suffered in the war. India is asked to contribute Rs. 4 crores for rehabilitation for countries which have suffered in the war but you cannot get food even for India, not even recognition of food for India, and from this point of view I say, Sir, that really speaking, the Finance Member has not provided us with any means by which, our case can be influenced, nor our power felt, and that is the test really speaking by which we judge the Finance Bill. Therefore, the Congress Party is perfectly justified in throwing out the Finance Bill. When the question of action comes, India is thrown to the corner.

Now coming to certain details, I have got to remark about the way in which this planning is going on. The other day I put certain questions—unfortunately the Member for Supply is not here: But I will try to point out that the Central Provinces Government formed certain cooperative societies of actual manufacturers of brass utensils and it was expected that sheets of brass and copper would be supplied to them. That Government wrote a long letter to the Government of India, Supply Department, asking for the supply of brass sheets and pointed out that really speaking, in view of the control order passed by the Government of India, these brass sheets should be supplied to the actual manufacturers and not to the dealers who make a lot of profit. That was pointed out but that letter was suppressed. These workers went without any work. They could not get the sheets. The merchants got the sheets from the Government of India but they would not part with them. The Registrar co-operative societies sent an urgent wire, a distress wire, if I may say so, to the Supply Department saying that his position had become very awkward, that he encouraged the formation of new societies, that after the formation of these new societies, in pursuance of the orders passed by the Government they were bound to supply Brass sheets to these workers. In spite of that these merchants to whom these sheets had been supplied were suppressing them without giving them to the workers.

That telegram was not responded to. He sent another urgent wire to the Supply Department, (an I.C.S. gentleman,) and even that remained suppressed. Ultimately he became desperate. I asked the Member for Supplies the other day why it was not replied. He said that it was replied later on. That is also not correct. I know that these merchants themselves sent a circular round asking the other merchants in different Provinces to wait upon the Supply Member. They waited in deputation not on the Supply Member but on the Deputy Secretary and they allocated to themselves all the Brass sheets supplied. When I put to the Supply Member the question why in pursuance of the orders of the Government of India these sheets are not supplied to the actual workers but to the dealers, the answer given by the Honourable Member was that the ordinary trade channels were used. These trade channels have been discouraged by the order of the Government of India. Yet the answer to me was that the normal trade channels were resorted to and these trade channels consisted of middlemen and merchants who made a lot of profit. I have got a number of telegrams and a number of resolutions passed by different cooperative societies complaining that they are not getting Brass sheets at all and that is not the complaint of C. P. and Berar alone, it is a complaint from the U.P. and the Punjab also. I have got instances where Merchants withheld Brass sheets from co-operative workers. Why this discourtesy? You are talking of planning for cottage industries. The Registrar himself wired for it and after so much trouble why this discourtesy to the Registrar of a province? Is this way in which planning of cottage industries is to be encouraged by the Government of India? I heard the other day that actions speak louder than words. Here the actions of the Government are louder than the words of encouragement of cottage industry which they have proclaimed. I would submit that the way in which they are going to plan will remain planning only in name and will never come into action. That is what I am afraid of. My request to the Honourable Member is that he ought to look into this and remove the just grievances of the actual workers.

I would only touch on one more point before I sit down and that is about corruption. The other day I was surprised to hear the Honourable the Home Member saying "You offer bribes and therefore you should not blame the bribe-taker." Perhaps both are blameworthy because bribe is offered by us, he takes it. I do not think that is so. The Honourable Home Member forgets that almost every day during this war time there was a printing press which issued Ordinances after Ordinances. In fact I myself did not know whether I was committing a breach of any ordinance. It was very difficult to keep pace with the ordinances as they were issued one after another and how can the ignorant people be expected to know about them. If anybody commits a breach the law comes down upon him. The officer comes, the man wants to save himself from disgrace or jail and therefore he pays a bribe and thus gets rid of the officer. That is the state of things which everybody knows. The Honourable Member has got a C.I.D. at his disposal. They have all the means to find a political offender wherever he may be but they cannot find out a corrupt official who takes bribes. They have got tribunals which try persons for taking eight annas or five rupees but what about those high placed persons who take bribes of very large sums? I know one or two cases of high officials have been discovered in Bengal but how many persons are there who are highly placed and who are known to be taking bribes. What have you done with them? Judging from this point of view all their planning may mean nothing ultimately. The Finance Member says—and I take his word—that he is going but his action does not show that. Therefore we are justified in throwing out the Finance Bill.

Mr. Madandhari Singh (Bihar and Orissa: Landholders): Sir, at the very outset I congratulate the Honourable the Finance Member for presenting a Budget which has got good reception. I think this is the first budget which contains plans for development.

[Mr. Madanbhai Singh]

I welcome the Cabinet Mission that is coming to settle matters relating to our independence. I hope all the parties will join together to attain the independence of the country.

Before I discuss the Budget, I would like to appeal to the Finance Member regarding my Province, Behar. We get a very small quota from income-tax, revenue, whereas actually we should have a larger amount than what we are getting today. In Chota Nagpur Division there are large factories working but the companies are registered either in Bengal or in Bombay. Take the instance of Tata at Jamshedpur. The company is registered in Bombay, whereas it is actually functioning in the Chota Nagpur Division. The income of the company ought to be assessed in Behar but it is done in Bombay. It may be all right so far as the Central is concerned but as far as our province is concerned we are getting much less than what we should under this item. So I would request the Honourable Finance Member to amend the income-tax Act so that an income may be assessed in the place where it arises. The other thing I want to mention is about the policy of the All-India Radio regarding Hindi. At this time, I would like to assure my Muslim friends that I am not against Urdu—I like very much the ghazal songs. I only want that a fair and due place should be given to Hindi. Hindi is the language of almost the whole of north India; Hindi is the language which is spoken by the majority of the population residing in this country; and I think Hindi should be given its proper place and I appeal to the Honourable Member for Broadcasting to give full consideration to this point, that Hindi should get its proper place in the All-India Radio.

Again, Sir, we are having future planning in this budget. India is an agricultural country and the majority of the people are residing in the villages; and in my opinion the villages should get the first preference. The villages should all be connected by roads and there should be a net work of railway lines; there should be hospitals and public health centres in rural areas so that people can take advantage of these things. If we are to raise the standard of living of the people, we must do it so as to raise the standard of the people in the rural areas. All of us should try to ameliorate the condition of the people in the rural areas and give them all kinds of help—educational or medical and all the facilities for communications. I appeal to the House and especially to the members on the treasury benches to take up this part of planning at once and get the lot of the villagers improved.

One other matter also I would like to put before you—the problem of beggars. This is a very bad type of problem. There are three kinds of beggars. As regards the first kind, I would call them professional beggars, I think the Labour Department should take action at once and they should be forced to work and not to go on begging. The second class are the sick beggars. They should be sent to hospitals or homes where they can be cured. The third class is one about which I would appeal to members on this side and also on that side—they are the beggars who are unfit for work: they cannot work as they are blind or have no hands or have no legs. They should be given shelter. I would appeal to my honourable friends to consider this thing, that they should be provided with shelters.

With these remarks I would like to appeal to the Finance Member to consider the points raised by me.

Seth Govind Das (Central Provinces: Hindi Divisions: Non-Muhamadan): Sir, I also rise to oppose the consideration of the Finance Bill. This motion has been opposed from different points of view, and the grounds on which I oppose it are the conditions of our people abroad.

First of all I shall take South Africa. On the 4th February 1946, when I moved my adjournment motion in this respect the Honourable Secretary for Commonwealth Relations Department said that he did not know all the provisions of that Bill. But since then the main provisions of this Bill have come out in the press, and I want them to go on the record of this House—what the main provisions of this shameful Bill are:

"The Bill will enable properly designed townships to be established on land assigned by the Parliament for this purpose. Under the Transvaal Law of 1885, Asiatics may only own or occupy land in areas specially set aside for them in already established townships. To enable local authorities and private persons to make adequate provision for the housing of Asiatics in townships yet to be established, the Bill provides for the assignment of land outside the existing townships in which Indians may own and occupy property. The Bill also enables Parliament to assign other areas whether or not intended for townships for occupation by Asiatics. In addition to controlling permanently the acquisition and occupation of land in Transvaal and Natal, the Bill provides for Indian representation in Senate, Assembly and the Natal Provincial Council. Indians will be represented in the Senate by two Europeans one of whom will be elected by Transvaal and Natal Indians and the other nominated by the Governor General. In Assembly, Natal and Transvaal Indians will be represented by three Europeans."

Now, before the provisions of this Bill were published, there was a talk going on both in South Africa and in India that such a Bill was going to be introduced in the Union Parliament, and this is what has been said with respect to this Bill by the South African Indian Congress:

"The proposals of the Prime Minister to deal with the Indian question are totally unacceptable to the Indian community in that they constitute an attack upon human rights and human freedom of an unrepresented substantial minority in South Africa, and they moreover violate the high principles underlying the Atlantic and United Nations Charters on which their authors pin their implicit faith for the future peace of the world."

This charter was drafted by Field Marshal Smuts himself, who has brought this Bill. I know that the economic sanctions on South Africa have been applied—at least notice of the application of these economic sanctions has been given. But let me say that this is a very belated act of the Government of India, and it is not only a belated but a half hearted act. Without recalling the High Commissioner from South Africa, the application of economic sanctions does not mean that we have really broken our connection with that country. My Honourable friend Mr. R. N. Banerjee is there. May I ask him whether he has seen a report in yesterday's evening papers and this morning's papers that the South African Indians, especially the Natal Indians, are going to offer satyagraha. As far as this satyagraha is concerned, the Muslims of Natal will be with the Hindus. There is no question of the communal problem there. Under these circumstances if the High Commissioner is not recalled, will the Honourable Member assure this House that he will be the first satyagrahi in South Africa and will break that law. I cannot understand his remaining there but if he remains there and the satyagraha movement starts there, I would like the High Commissioner for India to offer satyagraha and to be one of the prisoners in the Natal prison. I want to know whether the Government is going to do that? If the Government is not going to do that, let the Government recall Mr. R. M. Deshmukh. He comes from my province, he was once a Congressman and a Congress minister also, I am sure that if instructions are given to him by the Government of India, he would be the first man to court arrest and break this shameful law. If that is not possible, I would again request the Government to see that he is recalled and that our relations with South Africa are broken once for all till this obnoxious law is removed from the statute book.

Now, Sir, I come to the question of East Africa. The question of the Highlands of Kenya is where it was. It is an old question. It is an old grievance and I am surprised that even after this war this question has not been solved. We who fought the Germans in this war and fought them in the last war cannot live on those Highlands but the Germans can. I cannot understand what this means.

Then, Sir, there is the question of the inter-territorial organisation of East Africa. Let me point out that as far as this question is concerned, I feel that is the thin end of the wedge of the plan of Field Marshal Smuts for pan-white association of the whole of East Africa with South Africa. It is said that the Indians in East Africa have supported this plan. I think this is because the representation which is going to be given to Indians in the Legislative Assembly of three territories of East Africa, Kenya, Tanganyika and Uganda will be equal to that of Europeans. I feel that this has tempted them to accept this. So far I have not seen any Resolution of the East African Indian Congress in this respect. I do not know whether the support that is said to have been received in favour of this inter-territorial organisation of East Africa by the Government of India is from the East African Congress or from certain individuals. I would like to see that support but as I have said I am at present opposed to this inter-territorial organisation in East Africa. There is one more reason why I am opposed to this. It is that the question of Indians in Tanganyika and Uganda is not so keen as it is in Kenya and Kenya being the most important territory of all these three territories, if Tanganyika and Uganda are put with Kenya, then this white discrimination affair will come in its acute form in Tanganyika and Uganda also. I do not want that the problem which is at present confined to Kenya alone should spread; both in Tanganyika and Uganda.

And then the question of emigration into these territories is still not solved. It is again and again said that restrictions against emigration are going to be removed but they have not been removed so far. When I moved my adjournment motion on East Africa on the 5th February 1946, I said that portfolios have been given to certain non-official Europeans in Kenya. Before this no portfolios were given to any non-official member of the Executive Council of Kenya and this had been done for the first time. May I know what this Government has done so far in this respect. It is now more than a month since the adjournment motion was discussed and I want to know whether non-official Indian members of the Executive Council of Kenya are going to get portfolios or not.

Now, I come to Malaya. This morning I asked certain short notice questions regarding the new legislation about constitutional forms which have been introduced in the House of Commons with respect to Malaya. Mr. Banerjee said that he is seeing that the interests of Indians there are well protected. That has been said by this Government with respect to South Africa, East Africa and with respect to every country where our people are living and we have seen that though these assurances were given their condition deteriorated more and more as time went on. I read this morning from the 'Hindustan Times', what a communist M. P. Mr. Gallacher said about the position of Indians in Malaya. It is going to become as precarious as it has become in South Africa and Kenya if the Government of India is not strong enough and do things in a half hearted manner as it has been doing. I should like to know from Mr. Banerjee whether he is going to take measures with full strength and not with half heartedness and see that the Indian interests are well protected. Even today the condition of Indians there is far from satisfactory. The food problem is there. It is reported that Indian women for want of cloth have to put on gunny bags in Malaya. I think nowhere in the world any human being is putting on gunny bags except in Malaya. (An Honourable Member: In jails also). I mean free people and this report that women have been wearing gunny bags has not been contradicted so far. The Indian National Congress wanted to send a medical mission under Dr. M. R. Cholkar. When Pandit Jawahar Lal Nehru recently flew to Malaya he saw Dr. Cholkar who said that they were ready to go but still the arrangements for their transport had not been made. Now everybody ought to know that these medical missions should get priority over everybody else and if the medical mission does not reach in proper time it is useless even to send it. Then there is the question of cases against Malayan Indians about collaboration with Japan. We do not know whether any actual collaboration with the Japanese took place or not. But even if there was, the world conditions were quite different at that time. Now the conditions have changed, the allies have become victorious and it is not, in my opinion, magnanimous on the part of the allies or the British Government or the Government of Malaya to proceed with these cases. I wish the Indian Government to represent to the Malayan Government that as far as these cases are concerned they should be withdrawn.

Sir, it is not only about East Africa, South Africa and Malaya that we hear complaints, but with respect to every country at some time on the other we hear that they are not as happy as they should be; and I say that it is on account of the imbecile attitude of the Government of India that our people abroad are in such great misery. That is Sir one ground on which I want to oppose this Finance Bill.

Now, I wish to say something about our internal affairs. The food question has been debated in this House and it is going to be debated again and again so long, as it is not solved. The prime necessity of every living being is food, and if it is repeated again and again, if arguments of the same kind are repeated again and again it should not surprise any one. There is a shortage of food and certain Provinces are called surplus provinces. As far as my Province is concerned, H. E. Sir Henry Twynam the Governor of the C.P. made a recent statement calling my province a surplus province. I know how this statement has been made. I am intimately connected with agriculture in my province and I know how every year these patwaris, Revenue inspectors, tahsildars and naib tahsildars go and get crops from the best fields of a village and make their average estimate according to the crop which they cut from the best fields. On these estimates there is going to be procurement in my province and not only in my province but in other provinces as well. It would be said that so much was the estimate of the crop, so much has been taken from the tenant and so much has been left with him for his food, his seed and for other agricultural expenses. I am afraid that because these estimates would be wrong estimates the grain which would be left with the tenants and the agriculturists would not be enough for these three things, viz., food seed, and agricultural expenses. The first need is always food and the grain which is left with him for sowing purposes and for agricultural purposes will be eaten up; and at the time of the next sowing there will not be enough seed for sowing as well as for agricultural expenses. The result will be that the famine which we find this year in spite of the Grow More Food campaign is going to continue next year and I do not know for how many years to come. And what I feel about my Province I think other Members here must be feeling about their Provinces. So I want to point out that if after all this things are left to popular ministers, they are not going to be responsible for a catastrophe; the whole responsibility for the disaster will be on the present Government. Mahatma Gandhi and the Congress Working Committee were absolutely right when they said that unless and until there is a change in the Central Government there is not going to be any real benefit to the agriculturist and the labourers and the poor people in the country. I feel that as far as the estimates of crops are concerned Government should be very careful.

Then comes the question of cloth because it is the second necessity of human beings. It is said that cloth is exported only to those countries from which we are going to get food materials. I have collected some figures about this export of cloth, and I want to know whether all those countries to which cloth is exported are going to send foodgrains to this country. For instance among these countries I find Aden, Bahrein, Egypt, Italian East Africa, Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, Rhodesia, Belgian Congo, Madagascar, Palestine and many other countries; I have only named those countries where the majority of this cloth goes. From the sea-borne trade reports I could not find that foodgrains have been imported into this country from the countries to which we send our cloth. This is the only argument that is generally advanced in favour of exporting our cloth, and I want to know whether we are going to get foodgrains from those countries to which we export our cloth.

The third necessity is medicine. Practically all parts of the country are affected with malaria and we know that the quinine supply has become very meagre. The Indian Medical Review said in this respect;

"The actual consumption in India according to the Public Health Commissioner has been remarkably steady at about 2 lakhs pounds per annum of which approximately 1 lakh and 10 thousand pounds are imported and 90 thousand pounds are produced in India. The present consumption is only a third of the lower estimate of India's requirements and 1.20 of larger estimates."

It is well known that if any one goes to a chemist and wants some quinine pills or quinine powder it is not available. When Sir, this is the condition of the most popular drug it may be taken for granted that India is starving as far as medicines are concerned.

These three are the prime necessities of civilised or uncivilised, whatever sort of life you may call it. As far as our education and sanitation and other nation-building departments are concerned, it is well known that they are starving, but in spite of that the huge military expense is there and the huge civil administration expense is there. The Honourable Finance Member himself admitted that even in England such high salaries are not paid as are paid here. And if there is reduction in taxes it is with regard to the Excess Profits Tax. Sir, I come from the same class, who generally pay this Excess Profits Tax, and I can say that if Excess Profits Tax had not have been abolished, or if, it had been reduced by 50 per cent, the people of my class would have welcomed it. They would have felt that real good has been done by the Honourable the Finance Member by abolishing the other taxes, by reducing the post card rate, by reducing the salt tax, by reducing the excise duty on matches or by reducing so many other things. If the people, of my class do not feel that, then, I, from the floor of this House, say, that this class is going to be ruined and it must be ruined. (Interruption). Sir, I am not an old man, I feel myself quite young, and therefore such vigorous words fall from my lips.

This is what Professor Hill said as regards development of this country:

"If a country is poor and undeveloped, let us spend more on research and not less. Let us aim at giving one per cent of our national budget, one per cent of the value of our industrial and agricultural production, one per cent of the loss due to ill-health, one per cent of the cost of our transport our houses, our water, our coal, even our broadcasting to research and in ten years we shall be getting back not one per cent. but 10, 20 or 200 per cent. in dividends."

Sir, we find that very very little is being done in this respect. His Excellency the Viceroy himself said, 'our great aim must be to plan for economic and social development so as to raise our standard of living and general welfare, we must lift the poor man of India from poverty to security, from ill-health to vigour, from ignorance to understanding and our rate of progress must no longer be at bullock carts standard, but at least at the pace of the handy and serviceable jeep'. Sir, we find that this is not being done. I know that the present Prime Minister Mr. Attlee made a declaration. I know, Sir, that the Cabinet delegation is coming. We have an open mind as far as this Cabinet Mission is concerned, but, Sir, unless something is done, I would regard these declarations as mere platitude. The Honourable the Finance Member said that as far as the British rule in India is concerned, it is going to end 'unhonoured, unwept and unsung.' Such a rule which has been so disastrous to this country, such a rule which made our condition so poor as the condition of people nowhere else is in the world, it will not be surprising if in the words of my Honourable friend the Finance Member this rule ends unwept, unhonoured and unsung.

*Chandhri Srichand (nominated non-official): Sir, If a member desires to speak in Urdu in the British Parliament or in English in the French House of Deputies he will not, in the first instance, be allowed to speak; if he does he will have to give reasons for his doing so. But, in India everything is different! Today, I had to request to speak in Hindustani in the biggest Assembly of the country. If Englishmen speak in English they have a reasonable plea: They can speak English well. Hindustani members whose mother-tongue is Hindustani can speak and understand that language well. Barring a few, all other members can speak Hindustani well, and yet some fairly-aged members, who cannot speak English well, in their desire to speak that language memorize like school-boys for nights speeches written by others in English. They give trouble to others to write speeches in English for them. When they can speak well in Urdu I don't understand when they try to speak in English standing foppishly in their seats. Why don't they simply speak in Hindustani? Some members whose memory on account of old age has lost its retentive power and cannot learn by rote, read out written speeches. Some of them read incorrectly while others get out of breath when reading and yet speak they must in English no matter how badly they face in their attempt. The reason is that big parties in the Assembly want to keep the villagers uninformed the proceedings of the Assembly by conducting them in English. If at the time of election a villager requests for a ticket; he is summarily deprived of his rights and told that he does not know English so he cannot get the ticket. The town capitalist does not allow the poor villager to become a member of the Assembly. That is the reason why I don't see on the benches before me any labourer, cultivator, Rajput, Jat, Ahir or Gujar. There are capitalists and merchants from Peshawar, Lahore, Delhi, Madras, Bombay, Lucknow and Karachi sitting as their representatives. The lessees of India love every thing Indian except its language and its grains.

They are raising a great hue and cry against the All-India Radio in connection with the use of Hindustani. Some say that All-India Radio do not use Hindi; some say that they do not use Urdu prose on the Radio; but when they themselves happen to speak they don't let a single Hindi or Urdu word come to their lips. For years together it has been dinned into my ears, that we should wear swadeshi. Every leader is clamouring from the pulpit and through the press that we should use swadeshi things. But, I have never heard a leader say that we should eat swadeshi food. If foreign clothes produce slavish mentality and entail financial loss to the country, does not foreign food produce slavish mentality and drive the cultivators and with them the country to insolvency? A few capitalist cloth mill owners spend, lacs of rupees to keep the propaganda going in favour of swadeshi cloths from the pulpit and the press. At one time they went even so far as to effect a boycott of foreign cloths; picketted the foreign cloth shops and burnt their stocks. But, nobody ever gave a thought to the state of cotton-producers as to how they suffered for want of export of their produce and consequent fall in its price.

I have never heard a leader say nor have I ever read in a paper that we should eat swadeshi food. And why should they say or write that! That would compel the town capitalists to buy cereals from the poor farmer at a higher rate. Capitalists give large monetary contributions to the leaders; the cultivators cannot do that. If 'eat swadeshi food' propaganda had been done in time, and the poor cultivators given a fair price for their products India would not have to face the time when Indians have to beg for food from England and America. It has never been attempted to ascertain how much cereals can India manage to yield. If fair prices are offered to the cultivator he can even now give large quantities of cereals besides producing a variety of other eatables. He can sell large quantities of wheat in the bazaar for the rich people. In a very short time he can produce melons, cucumbers, onions and many other vegetables. We are prepared to eat bajra and sell wheat to the rich which even now can be had in large quantities. At the present control rates the cultivator suffers loss in wheat. If Rs. 12 is spent in the production of wheat and Rs. 10 is realized by selling it, who will go in for its production? No cloth dealer can sell cloth at Re. 1 per yard when his cost price is Rs. 1-8-0 per yard. Such a business cannot last long. Similarly, if Rs. 10 per maund is fixed as the control price for wheat the farmer will have to stop producing it and India will ever have to face a famine.

*The Honourable Member spoke in Urdu.

In the matter of control the authorities, like all other matters, have tried to imitate England giving no thought to the fact that conditions in England and India are poles apart. In England the necessities of life of a labourer and a wealthy man are one and the same and their food is also about the same. In India conditions are quite different. Here the wealthy people eat meat, eggs, fruit, vegetables, dry fruit, cakes, pastry, coffee, tea and what not. They live to eat, while the poor eat to live. Middle class people in India eat meat, fruit, vegetables and wheat bread, still others eat meat, wheat bread and little vegetables. The poor eat bajra, jawar, Indian corn and phakkar while the poorest people live on scraps that fall from the tables of the rich. Still other poor people eat once every four days.

Now keep these conditions in view and imagine the Government desiring to give wheat to eat to all the people of India. India has never produced so much wheat as to supply the whole of its population with wheat bread. Owing to the control wheat is being sold at four seers per rupee while the gram is offered at three seers per rupee. Government is trying to sell sugar from the U. P. to the Punjab at Rs. 16 per maund while a few months ago gur from the Punjab was being sold in the Sonapat Mandi at Rs. 24 per maund. Even at present red-sugar produced in the Punjab is being sold at the rate of Rs. 21 per maund. Under these conditions you can imagine yourselves who would like to eat gur and red sugar instead of wheat and white sugar? The cause of present famine in India is largely due to the control besides lack of rain. If you desire to get rid of the scarcity of an article the simple way is to have its price controlled. The moment you do it the article disappears from the bazaar. The reason is the fear that the article would not be obtainable in the bazaar and so everyone tries to have it as much as he can. Those who have a stock of it, hide it and sell it in the black market. Thus the controlled article is sold at two rates: one forced rate under the control on which that article is naturally not obtainable—in the matter of cereals this rate is so low that it forbids their cultivation. This rate is for the authorities, their friends and for those wealthy people who have some influence with those authorities. The other rate is that on which that article is sold in the black market and this is the rate for the poor who get controlled articles at rates much higher than those prevalent in the black market. For instance, the controlled rate of white sugar is at present Rs. 16 per maund. If a villager desires to buy it at controlled rates he will have to get a certificate from the Patwari who will not give it until he gets at least a rupee for it, then he will have to approach the gardawar who will also charge a rupee for his attestation. He then goes to the Tehsildar or the supply officer where he has to go for days, spending at least 2 rupees in the town every day, before he gets his signature. Now comes the turn of the clerk who is naturally paid something before he parts with the permit for 5 seers of white sugar. Thus the villager has to spend Rs. 7 to get 5 seers of white sugar.

As I am given only 8 minutes to speak I stop although I have many things still to say.

Mr. T. Chapman-Mortimer (Nominated Non-Official): Mr. Deputy President, after listening to the very lucid account we just had of the practical working of controls, I propose to take the House back to the Finance Bill and discuss the various clauses of that Bill as best I can.

Taking clause 4 which seeks to reduce the duty of kerosene; the duty is to be reduced from 4/6 to 8/9 and in fact what the Honourable the Finance

INDIAN FINANCE BILL

Member has done is to eliminate the additional duty on that commodity so widely consumed by the poor. Then in clause 5 he takes further steps towards dealing with the general problem of the surcharge on customs. I was very glad to see in his speech that he considered that these surcharges required looking into and he shows what his general attitude is going to be by what he has done in this Bill. I am sure, Sir, he will agree that one of the most urgent problems for examination by the Committee which he is setting up is this very question of import duties that is to say I am talking here only of those imposed for revenue purposes, and not those imposed for protection purposes. These duties have grown up over a period of about 20 years. During periods of crisis they have been steadily increased and some of them today undoubtedly operate so as to hamper trade. For example, heavy duties on machinery, raw materials, and so on, are definitely a burden on the poorer classes. We, therefore, welcome what the Honourable the Finance Member seeks to do in clauses 5 and 6 of his Bill.

There are one or two more detailed points to which I should like to refer in connection with these two clauses. For example, he proposes in connection with films to change the present duty from an ad valorem duty to a specific duty. I am sure he is right in thinking that that will lead to administrative convenience and also, in the long run, it will operate more fairly, while from his point of view being incidentally better.

Then, with regard to duties on bullion, I am sure that every one will respect the reasons he has in mind in imposing these duties. But I should like to call his attention to the following words:—

"While the immediate effect of the new imposts was bearish, what would be the ultimate consequences? At first sight it might appear that the latter would be bullish to the extent that domestic prices would be higher than world prices by at least the amount of the impost. A moment's reflection, however, will show that the consideration underlying the levy of these imposts can have only a bearish effect."

Now, Sir, we in these benches support these duties.

Mr. Deputy President: Would the Honourable Member like to go on tomorrow?

Mr. Chapman-Mortimer: Yes, Sir, I would.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Thursday, the 21st March 1946.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

Thursday, 21st March, 1946.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. President (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

STARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

(a) ORAL ANSWERS

SALE BY GOVERNMENT OF INDIA OF EASTERN AND WESTERN HOUSES IN NEW DELHI

1131. *Seth Govind Das: Will the Honourable the Labour Member be pleased to state:

(a) Whether Government have noticed the news in the Hindustan Times of the 4th February, 1946, that the White Hall was putting pressure on the Government of India to purchase the Western House and the Eastern House on the Curzon Road and Asoka Road, respectively; if so, what reply, if any, has been given by the Government of India; and

(b) Whether the Government of India consider that the price obtained for the material would be only a fraction of the purchase price?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: (a) Yes. In this connection I would refer the Honourable Member to my answer to parts (a) and (b) of the Honourable Mr. Venkatasubba Reddiar's short notice question No. 23, of the 8th February, 1946.

(b) The purchase price has not yet been settled but the price of the materials on the demolition of the building will necessarily be very small as compared with the price of the building.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: In reply to part (a) the Honourable Member said 'yes'. Does that mean that pressure was brought to bear from Whitehall?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: No.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: What does the answer 'yes' to part (a) mean?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: It means that I have noticed the news in the Hindustan Times.

Mr. President: Next question.

THREATENED STRIKE BY EMPLOYEES OF JOINT WATER AND SEWAGE BOARD, DELHI

1132. *Seth Govind Das: (a) Will the Health Secretary please state whether it is a fact that the employees of the Joint Water and Sewage Board, Delhi, have threatened to strike if their demands are not met with?

(b) If such a strike takes place, are Government aware that the citizens of Delhi would be put to a great difficulty in regard to their water supply?

(c) What steps do Government propose to take to meet the situation?

Mr. S. H. Y. Oulsnam: (a) No.

(b) and (c). Do not arise. A body calling itself the Joint Water and Sewage Board Employees Union submitted a list of demands to the Board last month. The Board has the demands under consideration.

PARTICIPATION OF INDIA IN GETTING JAPANESE TEXTILE MACHINERY

1133. *Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Will the Honourable the Commerce Member please state:

(a) whether it is a fact that an International Textile Group is shortly visiting Japan for examining Japanese textile machinery and that India has been invited to nominate observers on the same;

(b) if so, whether it is a fact that the Government of India have accepted the invitation of the United States of America in this respect;

(c) if the reply to (b) is in the affirmative, why India should not be represented on this international body directly rather than as an observer;

(d) the exact role that these observers are expected to play as compared to the direct nominees of the said International Textile Group;

(e) in view of the non-availability of the British textile machinery in the immediate future for the Indian textile industry and as part of the reparations to which India is entitled by virtue of the leading part it played in the victory over Japan, whether the Government of India have made representations to the proper authorities that India should have a fairly large share of the available Japanese textile machinery;

(f) whether Government are aware that the Australian Government have already made a move to get this machinery in sufficiently large quantities, so that they can quadruple their textile production in a very short period; and

(g) what immediate action, if any, the Government of India propose to take in this matter?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: (a) and (b). The Government of the United States of America has sponsored the visit of a Textile Mission to Japan to report on the status of the Japanese Textile Industry, with special reference to its ability to assist in meeting the world-wide textile shortage, anticipated by the Combined Resources and Production Board in 1946. The Mission left Washington for Japan on the 15th January 1946. The Government of India were invited to nominate an observer to accompany the Mission and they have accepted the invitation.

(c) The Textile Mission to Japan is really an American, and not an international body, and the question of securing direct representation on it for India does not therefore arise.

(d) Observers accompanying the Mission will endeavour to secure that during the course of investigation, the special view points and requirements of their respective Governments are not overlooked. They will be free to report on facts of interest to their Governments and will not be expected to participate in the preparation of the official report.

(e) Yes, Sir.

(f) No, Sir.

(g) Government are in correspondence with the authorities concerned.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: May I ask what is the name of the gentleman whom Government has nominated as observer?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: As far as my information goes, it is Mr. Bharat Ram.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: May I ask whether spinning mills will also be included in this?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: We have got our Trade Commissioner there, who is observing the whole situation vis-a-vis the textile position; and there are others from whom we are taking advice on this point. It is not always possible to send a representative of each different interest, specially in view of the difficulties of transport to Japan.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: Will he make this report available to the Members of this House?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: I have not yet received the report. But if a suitable occasion arises and if I remain here, certainly I shall place it before the House.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: In view of the Indian textile machinery having been overworked, what steps is Government taking to get Japanese machinery, as the Australian Government is doing?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: We have been pressing our requirements and claims for certain parts of the textile machinery; but to what extent these machineries exist or to what extent they may be available and to what extent we may get our share as between the different countries, is a matter which is now being discussed between the different Governments.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Will Government put up a case that India's right to this machinery should be considered first in view of the fact that India helped to clothe the whole world, even undergoing cloth famine here?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: Yes; we have done our very best in this matter and we have placed our case even higher than my friend put it.

Seth Yusuf Abdoolah Haroon: Before nominating this observer, did the Honourable Member consult the textile industry?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: This is a matter really for the Industries Department. The Commerce Department in all these matters has to consult the different departments concerned, and the other department must have been consulted.

Seth Yusuf Abdoolah Haroon: May I ask the Honourable Member if he is prepared to inquire into this matter?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: If I am put a question as to what exactly my Honourable friend wants, I would certainly be delighted to give him an answer.

THREATENED STRIKE IN GOVERNMENT PRESS, ALIGARH

1134. *Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: (a) Will the Honourable the Labour Member be pleased to state if he is aware of a notice of strike given by the employees of the Government Press, Aligarh?

(b) Is it a fact that the employees are being paid Rs. 12, Rs. 14, and Rs. 15 per month?

(c) Is he also aware of their other grievances with regard to pay, amenities, working hours and supply of rations?

(d) What action has the Government of India taken or propose to take to meet the demands of the workers?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: (a) Yes.

(b) Yes, certain categories of employees.

(c) Yes.

(d) The grievances are receiving attention. Attention of the Honourable Member is invited in this connection to the reply given to the starred question No. 896, on the 12th March, 1946.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: With reference to part (b) of this question, how many hundreds of these workers are being paid only 12 or 14 or 15 rupees per month?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I am afraid I have not got the facts here.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is it one of the proposals of the Government to increase the salaries of these people who are so low paid?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: My Honourable friend knows that the Government has appointed a salaries commission which look into this case generally.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: Is the Honourable gentleman aware of the fact that the University of Aligarh pays a minimum salary of Rs. 30 per month to the low paid staff?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I congratulate my Honourable friend on that.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: It is no question of congratulation to me or condolence to you: this is the minimum standard for living: we cannot starve our own employees.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Why is it necessary for the Government to wait until that particular commission reports about the salaries in general of all employees and servants in the Government of India, before they can think of increasing these pitiful salaries of 12 and 14 and 15 rupees per month?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: The Government's intention is that they should have a general policy based on some uniform principle; and that policy cannot certainly be brought into execution unless the matter has been examined by a commission.

Seth Govind Das: By what date is the report of this Commission bring in?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I am unable to say but Government propose to expedite this matter.

Seth Govind Das: By that time these people will be starving. Does Government think that till then these people should go on getting this 12 or 14 or 15 rupees per month?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: The Government has no such intention.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Will Government consider the advisability of giving them some temporary relief until the recommendations are received?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: As I said, the grievances are receiving attention.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: How long will they take to decide?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: The matter is under active consideration.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Is it not a fact that press employees have gone on strike in other places?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: Yes; that is so but they are working elsewhere, I understand.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Will the Honourable Member see that temporary relief is granted before they are forced to resort to a strike?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: As I said, the matter is under active consideration.

Seth Govind Das: The Honourable Member does not say by what time the report will come and till then, should these people starve?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I cannot give any time limit.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Is it not a fact that the words "under active consideration" usually indicate that there is no time limit, as far as my Honourable friends are concerned?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I do not think so.

CEILING PRICES FOR FOODGRAINS

1135. Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will the Food Secretary please state:

(a) what steps are being taken to see that the present level of ceiling prices fixed for foodgrains are not below the level of remunerative and equitable prices;

(b) whether any Provincial Governments have represented that the present levels are inadequate;

(c) what proportion of the ceiling prices are actually being received by producers;

(d) what steps are being taken to ensure that producers get the maximum even under the ceiling prices; and

(e) what steps have been taken since the House passed the motion on the food situation on the 5th February, 1946, to ensure the payment of remunerative prices to the growers of different Provinces?

Mr. B. R. Sen: (a) and (e). The present foodgrain prices are considered to be fair both to the producer and the consumer. It is not considered advisable to raise prices during a period of acute scarcity.

(b) One Provincial Government represented that the present price levels were not economic compared with the prices in the neighbouring provinces.

(c) and (d). There are fixed producers prices in a number of provinces while in others the statutory prices are applicable to primary producing markets.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: My Honourable friend has not taken the trouble to give a proper answer to this question. In part (a) of the question, I have asked what steps are being taken to see that the present level of ceiling prices fixed for foodgrains are not below the level of remunerative and equitable prices; and in part (e) I have asked what steps have been taken since the House passed the motion on the food situation on the 5th February, 1946, to ensure the payment of remunerative prices to the growers of different provinces. My Honourable friend simply says that the Government consider that the existing prices are remunerative and therefore they need not take any steps. What I would like to know is whether they have reconsidered the whole position in the light of the Resolution passed by this House. What are their conclusions?

Mr. B. R. Sen: The Honourable Member has put another question and he will get the answer when I reply to that question.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: What is that particular province which has represented that the present price levels were not economic compared with the prices in the neighbouring provinces?

Mr. B. R. Sen: Bihar.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Several of the District Collectors in the Madras Presidency have asked for the raising of the prices prevailing there and yet the Madras Government and the Government of India have conspired not to raise them? What is the reply?

Mr. B. R. Sen: The Madras Government consider that the present prices are economic and they are not in favour of raising the prices.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: What about the Collectors' reports?

Mr. B. R. Sen: I would point out to the Honourable Member that the whole question of prices was gone into by the Famine Inquiry Commission and when replying to the cut motion I read out extracts from the report. The report says that the present level of prices which are about 240 per cent. above the pre-war levels should be the target for all provinces in India for bringing their prices down.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: With reference to part (c) of this question, what proportion of the ceiling prices are actually being received by producers. Has any inquiry been made? My information is that whereas Rs. 11 per bag of 166 lbs. was fixed as the ceiling price in the Madras Presidency, peasants were in receipt of only Rs. 9 to Rs. 10—never more than Rs. 10.

Mr. B. R. Sen: In certain provinces the prices were fixed ex-mill. In other provinces, the prices are those of primary markets. If in Madras the producers are getting something less than the ceiling prices that has already been taken into account in fixing the ceiling prices.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: The fact is that ceiling prices are fixed, putting a sort of ceiling to the prices that the peasants can ever receive from the market. But actually there is no definite price fixed, which is assured to the peasant. I want the Government to inquire into the fact whether actually peasants are receiving the ceiling prices which are considered to be reasonable by Government and if they are not in receipt of this ceiling price, what steps do Government propose in order to see that the reasonable price is actually received by the peasants and middlemen are not allowed to exploit the peasants?

Mr. B. R. Sen: There seems to be some misapprehension in the mind of the Honourable Member. Taking the case of Madras, the prices which the Madras Government pay are the ex-mill prices and naturally the prices which producers will get will be something less than that price.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: It cannot be

Mr. President: Next question.

FIXATION OF REMUNERATIVE PRICES OF FOODGRAINS.

1136. *Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will the Food Secretary be pleased to state:

(a) what action has been taken on the various items of the motion on the food situation passed by the House on the 5th February 1946, and

(b) whether Government propose to fix one fixed remunerative price, as the price for a season or a year as the case may be in place of the existing ceiling prices which are never reached by peasants in order to induce peasants to grow more foodgrains?

Mr. B. R. Sen: (a) The following action has been taken on the Motion adopted by the House at the end of the Food Debate:

(i) A telegram was sent to Sir Robert Hutchings in London to take up the question of India's independent representation on the Combined Food Board with the appropriate authorities.

(ii) A copy of the Resolution on the subject of procurement of foodgrains has been sent to all Provincial Governments and States for necessary action.

(iii) Subsidies are given to producers in respect of irrigation facilities, land improvement, distribution of manure, making of compost, multiplication and distribution of improved seeds, diverting areas from cotton to food crops and other similar measures designed to increase the production of foodgrains. Government do not consider it feasible to prohibit or restrict other cultivation of all crops other than foodgrains as that would mean the stoppage of the cultivation of tuberous crops, vegetables, fodder, etc. Steps have, however, been taken by a number of Provincial Governments to regulate the cultivation of non-food crops. Bengal regulates the acreage under Jute. Bombay have passed a Growth of Food Crops Act prescribing the maximum proportion of a holding that can be placed under non-food crops. Madras have placed restrictions on the cultivation of certain varieties of short staple cotton. Hyderabad has imposed a special tax on land put under cotton. Propaganda has been resorted to in other areas with the result that the cotton acreage has dropped from 24 million acres before the war to 15 million acres at present.

(b) Prices of foodgrains are normally fixed statutorily for the whole of the crop year at levels considered fair both to the producer and the consumer. A number of Provincial Governments have fixed producers prices as well. In certain Provinces where prices are not fixed statutorily, ceiling prices for Government procurement are adopted. These prices are fixed at levels closely related to the statutory prices prevailing in adjoining areas. Care is taken to keep the middleman's profit to the barest minimum.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is it not a fact that there is a difference of 2 to 3 Rs. between the ceiling prices fixed in Madras and the producer's price that is fixed in other Provinces and which peasants actually receive in the Punjab and the U.P.

Mr. B. R. Sen: That must be a difference between the prices which producers get and the prices which the mills get. That difference is accounted for by various factors which are well known to the Honourable Member.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Are we to understand that the mills are expected to get Rs. 2 to Rs. 3 per bag merely for the purpose of hulling rice and selling it?

Mr. B. R. Sen: We had a series of questions during the last Session on this subject. I think all the components of this difference were explained to the House. If the Honourable Member likes I can collect further information to explain as to how that difference is made up.

Seth Govind Das: At the time of procurement of grain the scale of price is one and when the seed is given to tenants as takavi loans, the scale of price is entirely different? Is it a fact?

Mr. B. R. Sen: That question does not arise.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: Will Government make no profit on foodgrains? Is that principle observed?

Mr. B. R. Sen: Yes, Sir, that is observed.

Babu Ram Narayan Singh: The Government of Bihar asked for authority from the Central Government to increase the price of foodgrains and it was turned down by the Central Government?

Mr. B. R. Sen: I have already replied to that question.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: With regard to part (b) here is a specific question. A proposal is made to fix one fixed remunerative price and see to it that the peasants actually get it. Why is it that the Government does not wish to take any definite steps to see that a definite price is fixed and peasants do get it? Why are they so accommodating to the factory owners and middlemen and various other people and why do they leave the peasants to their own wits?

Mr. B. R. Sen: That is a matter of administrative convenience. I am prepared to go into this question over again.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is the Honourable Member aware of the fact that news appears in the 'Hindu' of March 15th that the mirasdars of Tanjore had made a representation to Mr. Dixon who is his prototype in the Madras Presidency suggesting that all middlemen's profits should be cut out and that middlemen's services should not be made use of but that peasant organisations and associations should be made use of for distribution of paddy and Mr. Dixon says this

Mr. President: What is the question you are putting?

Prof. N. G. Ranga: My question is this. In view of the profits to middlemen, the peasants could not be expected to work with zeal. The peasants themselves offered to supply the grain to Government straight and yet Government interests have been interposing these middlemen. I ask what steps Government propose to take in order to eliminate the middlemen's profiteering and help both the producers and the consumers?

Mr. B. R. Sen: As I said I am going into the question over again. There are different methods followed by different provinces. Primarily it is a matter for the provincial governments to decide what procedure they should adopt in procurement.

Mr. President: Next question.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: How soon will the Government find it

Some Honourable Members (on Treasury Benches): Order, order.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Evidently Honourable Members on the Treasury Benches do not want any supplementary questions.

Mr. President: Order, order. Next question.

FOOD SUPPLY IN AJMER-MERWARA.

1137. *Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will the Food Secretary be pleased to state:

(a) the latest position of food supply in Ajmer-Merwara;

(b) what arrangements are being made to supply adequate quantities of foodgrains to this area; and

(c) the per capita ration of foodgrains that is actually made available to people in Towns and villages?

Mr. B. R. Sen: (a) and (b). The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the replies given by me to Starred Question Nos. 896 and 897, asked by Pandit Mukat Bihari Lal Bhargava, on the 12th March, 1946.

(c) The scale of cereal ration in the rationed areas of Ajmer-Merwara is 6 chhataks per adult per day and three chhataks per child per day. In addition, a supplementary ration of two chhataks is allowed to heavy manual workers.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Are Government satisfied that these rations are really enough to enable these people to carry on their work and live a healthy life?

Mr. B. R. Sen: I have replied to this question more than once. The Government must distribute the shortage in the country as evenly as possible and with the resources that we have got at present, we consider that it is not possible to give more than this ration.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will the Government consider the advisability of calling a conference of representatives of provincial governments, including that of Ajmer-Merwara at the earliest possible date and also the representatives of different interests concerned on this food question in order to devise a more satisfactory plan for facing this food famine?

Mr. B. R. Sen: No, Sir. We do not consider it advisable to call such a conference at this stage.

SURFACE WORK FOR WOMEN WORKERS IN COAL MINES.

1138. Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will the Honourable the Labour Member be pleased to state:

(a) how many of the twenty thousand women workers withdrawn from underground in coal mines have been provided with work on the surface;

(b) whether he will enquire how many of the women withdrawn from underground in the State Railway collieries have been fully employed on the surface on a permanent basis, and how many with six days employment in the week; and

(c) how many of these women have come to be employed by the Welfare Fund mentioned in answer to starred question No. 466, dated the 25th February, 1946 and how many by Provincial Governments?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: (a) exact figures are not available but approximately 50 per cent. of the women workers withdrawn from underground in coal mines have been provided with work on surface. Of the remaining 50 per cent. about half have gone to their villages while some of the remainder are sitting down at collieries because they are refusing contract work, e.g., coal loading.

(b) All women withdrawn from underground in the State Railways' Collieries have been fully employed on surface works on a permanent basis; 1060 women employed on six days per week basis.

(c) No women have yet been employed by the Welfare Fund but sites are being requisitioned for the establishment of vegetable gardens and farms in the Jharia and Raniganj Coalfields and after requisition it is intended that women excluded from underground works will be employed under Head "Malis" appointed by Welfare Fund. The number of women which will be employed by the Provincial Governments is not known at present.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: In regard to the women who are obliged to stay at home because they do not like to work under the terms of contract work, what steps do Government propose to take in order to help these women with some employment without the mediation of these contractors?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I cannot give an off hand answer.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Why do Government fail to provide work without the mediation of these contractors?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: This practice has been going on for a long time in State railway collieries.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is it not a fact that the Royal Commission on Labour reported very strongly against the system of contractors. Will the Honourable Member devise some system to control the vagaries of these contractors? Why do not Government take urgent steps to devise some other means of providing employment to these women?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I hope we shall be able to deal with that matter.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Will the Honourable Member consider the question of submitting this to the Coal Commission that is about to tour India?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I do not know that I can do so. I can bring the matter to the notice of the Department concerned.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Before I put my question No. 1139, I wish to raise a point of order. I find that the original question which I gave notice of has been substantially altered. I had asked for various figures. I find that the question has been recast completely. I seek the protection of Chair.

Mr. President: That is not the concern of the House.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: My question should be fully answered and it ought to have been printed in the way I gave notice.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is perhaps not aware that questions are amended by the Chair, and the protection he seeks is really protection against the Chair.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Very well, Sir Question No. 1139.

NUMBER OF STAFF IN RATIONING DEPARTMENTS OF CENTRALLY ADMINISTERED AREAS.

1139. Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Will the Food Secretary please state:

(a) the number of staff employed in Rationing Departments of the centrally administered areas;

(b) the expenses for the years 1944-45 and for the months of the year 1945-46 for which figures are available, for Rationing Departments, of the centrally administered areas; and

(c) the total population of the cities, towns and villages where rationing of foodgrains is enforced at present, and also during the periods stated in (b) above?

Mr. B. R. Sen: (a) and (b). A statement giving the information about the staff employed in Delhi and Ajmer Food Rationing Organizations is laid on the table of the House.

(c) In 1944-45 the number of rationed towns was 495 with a population of about 52 million people. The present number of rationed towns is 583 with a population of about 54 million people.

Statement showing the number of staff employed in the Delhi and Ajmer Food Rationing Organizations and the expenditure incurred thereon.

(a) Delhi—

During 1944-45—

Permanent Staff	808
Temporary Staff	700
	1,508

During 1945-46—

Permanent Staff	1,111
Temporary Staff	120
	1,231

Ajmer--

During 1944-45--

Permanent staff 330

Temporary staff 50

During 1945-46--

Permanent staff 336

(b) Expenses for the year--

	Delhi Rs.	Ajmer Rs.
1944-45	13,82,933	1,71,140
From 1st April 1945 to 31st January 1946.	12,05,874	2,61,339

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is it not a fact that a large quantity of these grains was spoiled in Ajmer town because of the inefficiency of rationing there?

Mr. B. R. Sen: That question does not arise.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: What steps are Government taking to see that the Rationing department works more efficiently in Ajmer?

Mr. B. R. Sen: That question does not arise.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: It is a question of efficiency.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Is it a fact that the expenditure on rationing staff is so great that there is a great difference between the price paid to growers and the price charged to consumers?

Mr. B. R. Sen: There is always a difference between these prices, but the difference is not very greatly influenced by the expenditure on rationing organisation. If I remember aright, in the case of Bombay presidency, the total expenditure is about one rupee per head a year, for the whole of the food administration in the province, I have not got calculations for these two areas, but the expenditure in these areas will be the same.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Is it not a fact that the difference between the two prices is very great?

Mr. B. R. Sen: In some cases the difference is great. For this reason that the food grains were secured at a particular price but when the price came down in the markets, the price in the rationing areas did not come down in the same way.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: The per capita income in the Bombay presidency is only Rs. 98 a year, and is it not wrong on the part of the Government to spend one rupee per capita on distribution of food alone, not to speak of the cost of food?

Mr. B. R. Sen: Somebody has got to bear the cost and under the present arrangement the consumer has to pay it.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Will the Government see that the difference between the two prices is reduced? Take for example, Bombay and Ahmedabad. The price of rice in Bombay is Rs. 10 a maund, whereas it is Rs. 14 a maund in Ahmedabad.

Mr. B. R. Sen: As the House is aware, the whole question of subsidy was referred to a committee last year and we are hoping to get the report of the committee very soon. They will have made certain recommendations.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will Government make a fresh examination to see whether it is possible to reduce the cost of distribution for instance in Bombay?

Mr. B. R. Sen: That matter is continuously under examination.

DESCRIPTIVE NOTES FOR PROTECTED ANCIENT MONUMENTS IN INDIA.

1140. Shri D. P. Karmarkar: Will the Education Secretary be pleased to state:

(a) the number of protected ancient monuments in India; and

(b) whether steps have been taken to place brief descriptive notes near those monuments for the benefit of visitors; if so, whether the notes are in the regional language in addition to English; if no, such arrangements are already made, whether Government propose to arrange for such descriptive notes also in the regional language of the province where the monuments is situate?

Sir John Sargent: (a) The number of ancient protected monuments in India is, at the moment, 2826.

(b) In many cases steps have already been taken to place brief descriptive notes on these monuments for the benefit of the visitors. In accordance with the policy laid down urgent steps are now being taken to provide adequate notices on all monuments throughout India both in English and in the regional language or languages. As a matter of fact a number of such notices have already been prepared but in view of the difficulty of producing metal plates at the present moment, temporary notices are in a number of cases being displayed on wood and board.

Shri D. P. Karmarkar: May I know whether these brief descriptive notes are in the regional languages?

Sir John Sargent: Yes, I have answered that they are also in the regional languages.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Is the Honourable Member aware that in Bijapur, the Muslim monuments have no inscription written in Urdu language? Will the Honourable Member consider the advisability of having the description written in Urdu also?

Sir John Sargent: Certainly. That is the policy which we are endeavouring at the moment to follow.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: It is not there at present.

COMPOSITION OF RESIDENTS AND POLITICAL AGENTS IN INDIAN STATES

1141. Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava: Will the Honourable the Leader of the House be pleased to state the number of Residents and political agents in the different Indian States on March 31st of the last three years, how many of them were Indians, and how many Europeans?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: The number of Residents and Political Agents in the different Indian States on March 31st of the last three years was:

12 Residents and 13 Political Agents on March 31st, 1943;

12 Residents and 12 Political Agents on March 31st, 1944; and

11 Residents and 13 Political Agents on March 31st, 1945.

All of the officers in these posts were Europeans on those dates. An Indian Officer has been holding the post of Political Agent from May 1945. Another held such a post for a short period in 1943 but had to be withdrawn for an important appointment elsewhere.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is it the policy of Government to keep all these posts securely in the hands of Europeans?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: No, Sir; I have explained that Indians have been appointed to these posts.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Why is it that a preponderating numbers of these offices are continuously filled by Europeans only?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: For historical reasons.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Can the Honourable Member give us any idea as to when we may see the political Department Indianised?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: No, Sir. I should want notice of that question.

Seth Govind Das: Is it because Indians are not trusted and therefore Europeans are kept in this Department?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: No, Sir.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is it or is it not the policy of Government to Indianise this Department and its various offices?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Yes, Sir. I have explained that an Indian is holding one post already.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: When do Government expect to reach full Indianisation, if at all?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I have already answered that question.

GRANT OF SUGAR FOR MARRIAGE PARTIES

1142. *Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava: Will the Food Secretary be pleased to state:

(a) if it is a fact that the Government of India issued instructions to various Provincial Governments in respect of grant of permits for a definite quantity of sugar for each marriage; and

(b) if so, whether any complaints were received from any Provincial Government in respect of inadequacy of such quantity and a consequent tendency towards fostering the growth of black markets in sugar?

Mr. B. B. Sen: (a) The Government of India have not issued any instructions specifying a definite quantity of sugar to be issued for each marriage. But in January 1945, with a view to bring about uniformity in the issue of rationed foodstuffs for social and religious occasions, the Provincial Governments were supplied with a schedule giving a suggestive basis of supplementary supplies.

(b) No, Sir.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Now when there is food shortage will these instructions also continue for the future?

Mr. B. B. Sen: We have issued instructions to Provincial and State Governments asking them to see that the consumption of foodstuffs on these occasions is reduced to the very minimum, not only in rationed areas but all over the rural areas.

BAN ON CONTRACTORS RELATED TO OFFICERS OF C. P. W. D.

1143. *Shri Satya Narayan Sinha: (a) Will the Honourable the Labour Member be pleased to state if it is a fact that in the Central Public Works Department, orders have been issued that contracts for works should not be awarded to any contractor who is a close relative of any officer employed in the Department?

(b) Is it a fact that near relatives include cousins, brothers-in-law, etc., and that officer includes for the purpose of this order Head Clerks, clerks, draftsmen, surveyors, etc.?

(c) Why was the order issued, and how many contractors have been put out of the list as a result of this order?

(d) Does any such rule exist in the working of Public Works Departments in provinces or other countries or in Departments like Military Engineering Service, Railways, Municipal or District Boards in India?

(e) Was the order issued under directions of the Government of India or by the Chief Engineer, Central P. W. D. on his own initiative?

(f) In view of the obvious hardship on persons being penalised for the sin of being related to others working in the Department, do Government propose to reconsider the order and withdraw it? If not, why not?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: (a) Yes.

(b) The term 'close relative' includes also first cousin and brother-in-law.

The term 'officer' does not include for the purpose of the order non-gazetted staff.

(c) The object was to ensure greater public confidence in the Central Public Works Department.

Names of 25 contractors have so far been removed from the approved list of Contractors. Cases of others are under consideration.

(d) Enquiries on this matter have not been made and the Government of India are not aware whether such rule exists in other Departments or Countries.

(e) By the direction of the Government of India.

(f) The matter is under the examination of Government.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: What about nephews who come under the nepotism? (No reply was given)

PROPOSED PUBLICATION GIVING HISTORIES OF TITLES AND HONOURS

†1144. *Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable the Leader of the House be pleased to state:

(a) if there is any publication which gives short histories of the various titles and honours that are awarded by His Majesty the King or His Excellency the Governor-General, to persons in India, the significance of the names under which these titles and honours are known; and

(b) if no such publications is available, whether Government will consider the desirability of bringing out a proper publication in this behalf?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) No.

(b) No.

CONTROL PRICE OF EGGS AND MILK IN DELHI

1145. *Mr. Madan Dhari Singh: Will the Food Secretary be pleased to state:

(a) if it is a fact that control price of eggs, in Delhi, has recently been reduced to Rs. 1/8/- per dozen;

(b) if it is also a fact that this reduction is partly due to the fact that most of the American have left the station; and

(c) if the reply to (b) be in the affirmative, whether, on the same ground, Government have considered the necessity of reducing the control price of milk; if not, why not?

Mr. B. B. Sen: (a) Yes, Sir.

(b) No.

(c) Does not arise.

COMPENSATION TO RESIDENTS OF WARD NO. 14, DELHI, GIVEN NOTICE UNDER TOWN IMPROVEMENT

1146. *Pandit Sri Krishna Dutt Paliwal: (a) Will the Health Secretary be pleased to state whether notices under sections 36 and 38 of the United Provinces Town Improvement Act, 1919, as extended to the Province of Delhi, have been served on the residents of Delhi, Ward No. 14? If so, on what date will the residents of that Ward be actually required to vacate their houses?

(b) In what Locality do Government propose to house the men of Ward No. 14 when they will vacate their houses?

(c) Do Government propose to consider the locality which is situated close to Ward No. 14? If not, why not?

(d) Will the residents of Ward No. 14 be given houses constructed by Government under the Poormen Housing Scheme?

†Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner being absent.

(e) What are the conditions under which poor men are given those Government houses?

(f) What compensation will be given to (i) the Zamindars who own the land, (ii) the owner of the house to whom the buildings belong, and (iii) the tenants who live in hired houses of that Ward, and in what form will it be given?

(g) Have Government paid any compensation to the Zamindars of Ward No. 14, Delhi? If so, on what date?

Mr. S. H. Y. Oulsnam: (a) Notices have been served under the Serai Purani Idgah and Ahata Kidara Schemes which fall within the limits of ward No. 14. Under the Serai Purani Idgah Scheme, residents will be required to vacate if their properties are acquired. Acquisition can take place only after the scheme is sanctioned under section 42 of the United Provinces Town Improvement Act, 1919, as extended to Delhi. The scheme has not yet been submitted to the Chief Commissioner for sanction. In respect of the second scheme, acquisition after sanction is nearly complete. A few properties remain to be acquired and a few have been acquired but not yet vacated.

(b) No decision has yet been taken in respect of the Serai Purani Idgah Scheme. As regards the Ahata Kidara Scheme a number of families have been rehoused in the Western Extension area and within the area of this scheme. All remaining families will be rehoused in other suitable localities.

(c) The possibility of rehousing in areas close to the area included in the Scheme will be considered.

(d) Yes. All those who are eligible for rehousing under the State subsidised scheme.

(e) The conditions under which persons shall be eligible for the benefits of the rehousing scheme are at present under consideration.

(f) Compensation is paid in all cases in cash in accordance with the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, 1919, as modified by the Schedule to the United Provinces Town Improvement Act, 1919, as extended to Delhi.

(g) The acquisition proceedings in respect of the Ahata Kidara Scheme commenced on the 22nd November, 1941, and compensation has been paid after that date according to the progress of the acquisition. The acquisition proceedings have not yet commenced in respect of the Serai Purani Idgah Scheme.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: With regard to clauses (f) and (g), will Government consider the advisability of giving alternative sites somewhere near Delhi to these Zamindars who own the land and whose land is taken away by Government now, if they wish it?

Mr. S. H. Y. Oulsnam: No, Sir, compensation is paid in cash.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Why should Government insist upon paying these people in cash when they are agriculturists and land which is their chief means of livelihood is taken away by Government? Why should not they be given alternative pieces of land?

Mr. S. H. Y. Oulsnam: Because alternative land is not available.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is it not a fact that in New Delhi there are still vast extents of land which are not occupied either for house sites or for cultivation purposes and could be allotted to these people?

Mr. S. H. Y. Oulsnam: No, Sir, I am not aware of that.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will Government make inquiries?

(No reply was given)

INSTRUCTIONS TO ELECTION RETURNING OFFICERS FOR BETTER TREATMENT FOR LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY MEMBERS.

†1147. Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable the Leader of the House be pleased to state:

(a) if it is a fact that Returning Officers for elections to the Legislative Assembly from general constituencies, are usually district magistrates;

†Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner being absent.

(b) if the position of candidates is the same as that of the litigants before district magistrates;

(c) if it is a fact that candidates and their agents at election time are treated by Returning Officers as mere litigants before district magistrates;

(d) if candidates and their agents have to keep standing while presenting their papers or their points of view before Returning Officers just as ordinary litigants, while Returning Officers are seated in their official magisterial chairs;

(e) if Government propose to consider the desirability of putting candidates for elections to the Legislative Assembly on a different footing;

(f) if Government propose to instruct Returning Officers to fulfil their various functions as such in a special room where the candidates and their agents and other persons authorised to be present, are all seated along with Returning Officers round a table;

(g) if it is not a fact that all the processes of election are fulfilled in open courts of magistrates, and that many persons who have other work in the court, happen to be present there; and

(h) if Government propose to issue detailed instructions on the subject to ensure proper arrangements before Returning Officers?

The Honourable Sir Asoka Roy: (a) No, Sir. There is no general constituency of which the Returning Officer is the District Magistrate as such and it is only in Madras and the United Provinces that the District Magistrate is the Returning Officer under the designation of Collector and District Officer respectively.

(b) I would not regard candidates as occupying the position of litigants.

(c) and (d). I am informed by the Government of the United Provinces that it has been the general practice in that Province to require candidates to stand while presenting their papers on their points of view before Returning Officers. I do not know what other modes of treatment the Honourable Member has in mind when he refers to the treatment of candidates as mere litigants.

(g) I am informed by the Government of the United Provinces that most District Officers perform their duties as Returning Officers in open court with other persons present. Their attention has been called to Regulation 8 of the Legislative Assembly (United Provinces) Electoral Regulations which entitles each candidate, the election agent of each candidate, one proposer and one seconder of each candidate and one other person duly authorised in writing by each candidate but no other person to attend at the time and place appointed for the scrutiny of nominations. A similar Regulation is in force in all other Provinces.

(e), (f) and (h). The Government of the United Provinces have intimated that the suggestions made in parts (e) and (f) of the question will require further consideration, but that prima facie they see no objection to instructing District Officers to hold the proceedings round a table in their retiring rooms if there is sufficient room. I do not propose to issue detailed instructions, but I will send copies of the Honourable Member's question and of my reply to all other Provincial Governments for such action as they may consider appropriate.

LEGISLATION OF HINDU CODE

†1148. Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable the Law Member be pleased to state:

(a) the stage which the preparation of the Hindu Code has reached so far; and

(b) if he intends to introduce any legislation on the lines suggested; if so, when?

†Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner being absent.

The Honourable Sir Asoka Roy: (a) A complete Hindu Code was prepared by the Hindu Law Committee and circulated by them for opinion in August, 1944.

(b) As indicated in my reply to Starred Question No. 438, asked on the 21st February, 1945, Government must await the Report of the Committee before considering what legislation, if any, should be introduced by them.

DRAFT OF PROPOSED ANGLO-INDIAN TREATY.

1149. *Mr. Manu Subedar: (a) Will the Honourable the Leader of the House please state the subjects included in the draft of the proposed Anglo-Indian Treaty?

(b) Who has made a draft of it?

(c) When will this be made available to the Members of this House for their consideration as a draft?

(d) Is the issue of commercial safeguards contained in sections 111 to 121 of the Government of India Act included amongst the subjects or topics covered by the proposed treaty?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a), (b), (c) and (d): As the Honourable Member is aware, in his broadcast of the 19th September, 1945, His Excellency the Viceroy stated that His Majesty's Government were proceeding to the consideration of the content of the treaty which would require to be concluded between Great Britain and India.

The question is now engaging the attention of officials both in India and in England. These discussions are still in a very preliminary stage, and I regret I am not in a position to make any statement on the subject at present.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will copies of the draft Treaty be supplied to the Leaders of the different Parties which will be meeting the Cabinet Mission?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I am unable to anticipate the procedure which will be followed in the discussions.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: My question has nothing to do with the procedure to be followed by the Cabinet Mission. In order to enable our own Indian leaders to deal with the Cabinet Mission in the interests of India, will Government consider the advisability of placing before them this draft Treaty?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I will take note of the Honourable Member's question, but I am not able to make any further statement on the subject.

LICENCES ISSUED FOR CERTAIN INDUSTRIAL PLANTS.

1150. *Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (on behalf of Mr. Manu Subedar):

(a) Will the Honourable the Commerce Member please state the total number of licences issued by the Commerce Department in respect of (i) complete plants for textile mills, (ii) complete plants for vegetable ghee manufacture, and (iii) complete plants for other industries, including sugar and cement?

(b) What is the total approximate value of the plants, for which licenses have been issued as above, and how much of this amount would go to the United Kingdom and how much to the United States of America and other hard currency areas?

(c) On what principles have these licences been issued, and on what basis generally have applications of those who have made them, been rejected?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: (a) and (b). I presume the Honourable Member is referring to the licences issued for complete plants under the Capital Goods Registration Scheme. I lay on the table a statement showing the total number of licences issued in respect of imports of complete plants for textiles, vegetable ghee, sugar and cement production and the total approximate value of the plants to be imported countrywise.

I am afraid that the time and labour involved in the preparation of a similar statement in respect of complete plants for all other industries will not be commensurate with the value of the results.

(c) The grant of licences for import of capital equipment depends on such factors as the source of supply, danger of overexpansion and the location of the proposed factory. Where a plan is complete, as in the case of cement, or very nearly complete as in the case of cotton textiles, production targets are fixed for different regions and individual schemes approved within these targets. In such cases, import licences are granted only to those whose schemes have been approved. Where plans have not yet reached an advanced stage, import licences are freely given subject only to currency considerations except where the schemes would obviously be contrary to the country's economic interests, for example, where it is proposed to establish a factory in an area in which there is already excessive concentration of industry.

Subject to the general principles stated above, licences for import from the sterling area are granted freely. Licences for import from non-sterling area are granted only if it is proved that the equipment required for a suitable substitute therefor could not be obtained from a sterling area within a reasonable time and at a reasonable price.

Statement showing the number of licences issued for imports of complete plants for Textiles, vegetable ghee, sugar and cement production and the total approximate values of the plants to be imported countrywise

Industry	Number of licences issued	Value in rupees					Total value (Rs.)
		United Kingdom	U. S. A.	Switzerland	France	Denmark
Textile mills	41	8,11,52,950	29,62,468	18,00,000	3,00,000		8,57,15,418
Vegetable Ghee	31	1,57,20,356	46,97,766				2,04,18,122
Sugar	6	1,57,44,026					1,57,44,026
Cement	9	95,08,818	28,27,666	20,000		53,73,233	1,77,44,817

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: With reference to part (b), it is rather important for us to know about our trade with other countries as this will help to solve the question of the sterling balances.

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: That is why we have been issuing, having regard to the sterling position as also the sterling reserve which we have in the issue of import licences.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Is the Muslim share of import of plants nil with reference to the cement machinery?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: I cannot answer that because we have to take the advice of the Planning and Industries Department as to what schemes are to be sanctioned and the Provincial Government's distribution of the quota allotted, and if there is any fault for non-distribution of non-licences in any region, the fault lies with the authorities that grant those licences.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is it because of the difficulties created by Government for licences for import that Indian industrialists and Government were not able to make full use of the 20 million dollars placed at the disposal of industrial development last year?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: No, Sir.

Mr. President: Next question.

ILL-TREATMENT OF INDIAN PASSENGERS TRAVELLING BY *M. S. Battery*1151. Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (on behalf of Mr. Manu Subedar):

(a) Has the attention of the Honourable the Commerce Member been drawn to a letter in the Blitz of the 2nd March, 1946, under the caption: "Upper berths for whites, lowest for blacks," written by a large number of Indian passengers travelling by "M. S. Battery", which left Glasgow for Bombay on February 2, 1946?

(b) Have Government ascertained the true facts with regard to the alleged ill-treatment of the Indian passengers and the deliberate discrimination against them in assigning berths?

(c) Have Government secured any explanation from the P. and O. Steamer Company's authorities for their strange behaviour?

(d) What steps have Government taken to prevent a recurrence of this kind of discrimination of, and ill-treatment and affront to the Indian passengers by other boats of this steamship company?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azisul Huque: (a) Yes, Sir.

(b) to (d). Government are making enquiries, and a reply will be laid on the table of the House in due course.

STOPPAGE OF EXPORT OF RICE

1152. Sreejut Rohini Kumar Choudhuri: (a) Will the Food Secretary be pleased to state if his attention has been drawn to the report made by the Bengal Provincial Congress Committee, published in the Bharat Jyoti in its issue of Sunday, the 24th February, to the effect that there has been scarcity of rice even in the surplus districts owing to heavy export in a clandestine manner at dead of night?

(b) Do Government propose to enquire if these reports are correct? If so, to what place has the rice been exported, and what steps are being taken to stop such exports?

Mr. B. R. Sen: (a) Yes.

(b) Inquiries were made from the Government of Bengal who have reported that there is strict cordoning of surplus districts and that they have no information of any heavy clandestine exports of rice from surplus districts.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable Member be pleased to state if instructions were given to the Bengal Government to contact the Bengal Provincial Congress Committee for getting such evidence as might be available?

Mr. B. R. Sen: No, Sir.

RECRUITMENT OF OUTSIDERS IN AJMER-MERWARA

1153. Pandit Mukut Bihari Lal Bhargava: (a) Will the Education Secretary be pleased to state if Government are aware that there is a strong all round resentment in the public of Ajmer-Merwara about the importing of outsiders in Government services of the Ajmer-Merwara Administration?

(b) Is it a fact that recently a representation was made by the Ajmer-Merwara Zamindar Sabha to the Secretary, Education Department, regarding the recruitment of local candidates to the vacancies in the Educational Administration of the Province? If so, what action has been taken thereon?

(c) Is it a fact that in spite of all this recently two important appointments in the Education Department for the posts of Superintendent and Deputy Superintendent have been made and the candidates selected are a Punjabi and a Bengali who do not understand even the language and dialect of the Province and have no claim in the administration of Ajmer-Merwara?

(d) Is it a fact that there were qualified and suitable local candidates available in Ajmer-Merwara for both these appointments, one of whom was a Principal of a Degree College already in first class Government service with considerable educational experience and the other a District Inspector of Schools with long administrative experience of the Ajmer-Merwara Education Department?

(e) Is it a fact that the newly selected candidates have superseded both the Ajmer-Merwara candidates in service? If so, how do Government propose to redress the wrong done to the Ajmer-Merwara candidates?

Sir John Sargent: (a) The Government of India have received representations in the matter from time to time.

(b) Yes, Sir, According to the existing rules, all gazetted posts are filled through the Federal Public Service Commission. The claims of local candidates are given due consideration in the recruitment for the local education service.

(c) The posts of the Superintendent and the Deputy Superintendent of Education cover Delhi, and Central India as well as Ajmer-Merwara. These appointments have been made on the recommendation of the Federal Public Service Commission. Both the officers belong to the Central Services and are familiar with the local languages and educational conditions in Ajmer-Merwara.

(d) Applications from the two officers referred to were duly considered by the Federal Public Service Commission, but neither of them was selected by the Commission.

(e) Does not arise.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Is the Honourable Member aware of the feelings of Muslims of Ajmer that Muslim officers in the Education Department are being removed from Ajmer?

Sir John Sargent: No, Sir.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Has the Honourable Member read my speech on the cut motion wherein I brought this complaint to the Honourable Member's notice? If so, has any action been taken after that?

Sir John Sargent: I am not aware that there was any removal of Muslim officers from Ajmer. I will make inquiries and let the Honourable Member know the result. As far as I am aware, there is no such intention.

VEGETABLE CULTIVATION IN DELHI PROVINCE

1154. Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Will the Agriculture Secretary please state:

(a) What steps if any, have been taken to bring all available land in the Province of Delhi under the cultivation of vegetables or other food crops since the cessation of hostilities against Japan;

(b) If any steps have been taken to bring under vegetable cultivation the vast spaces of land under grass or flowers throughout the Province and in Government-owned compounds and bungalows; if so, what additional quantity of vegetables is expected to come into the market during the coming summer months; and

(c) what steps, if any, are being taken by the Provincial Governments in this direction, and what results are expected?

Sir Pheroz Kharegat: (a) Schemes have been sanctioned for the immediate sinking of 500 pucca masonry wells on a subsidised basis and for the provision of 20 motor trucks to carry manure from Okhla and Badli to be distributed to growers both of food crops and vegetables on a subsidised basis.

About 1,000 tons of extra food may be expected from all the measures taken.

(b) Steps have been taken to bring under vegetable cultivation about half of the Central vista, i.e., some 60 acres and part of it has already been dug up for the purpose. Householders and occupants of bungalows have been asked to bring as large an area as practicable of their compounds under vegetables. Special staff has been appointed to go round to the houses and advise householders as to where vegetables, etc., should be planted of what types and when and for the supply of seeds, manures, etc. The limiting factor in most cases is water. It is not possible to estimate at present the additional quantity of vegetables that will be marketed from this area; it is expected that the house-holders will utilise the vegetables for their own consumption. The increased production if adequate water is available and all the arrangements made work according to plan may be estimated to be 500 tons.

(c) The Honourable Member may please see the replies given to Question No. 757, asked by Mr. B. P. Jhunjhunwala, on the 6th March, 1946.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is it not a fact that there are large expanse of unoccupied but cultivable land still available in the environs of New Delhi?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: Yes, Sir. There are large areas of land available, but there is not the water available owing to which vegetables cannot be grown.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will Government make available the necessary quantities of water and also give first preference for the allotment of this land to those people who are going to be evicted from their lands in Ward No. 14, as referred to in Question No. 1146?

Mr. President: This is a suggestion for action. The Honourable Member may ask for information.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: From whom?

Mr. President:if he has any to ask.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will Government consider the advisability of giving first preference to those people who are likely to be evicted from their own lands in Delhi—Ward No. 14—as a result of the operations of Town Improvement Act?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: The suggestion will be examined. I do not know exactly what may or may not be feasible, but the matter will be looked into.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: May I know if the Honourable Members of the Executive Council have started growing vegetables in their gardens?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Asif ul Huque: They have done that long before.

Mr. President: Next question.

COMPILATION OF UNWEIGHTED RETAIL PRICE INDEX NUMBER

1155. Shi H. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: (a) Will the Honourable the Labour Member be pleased to state the purpose behind the compilation of unweighted Retail Price Index Number by groups about industrial cities and town of this country published in the Indian Labour Gazette?

(b) Were the items and their qualities constituting the groups for which Retail Price Index Numbers are worked out ever made known to the public? If not, why not?

(c) Will the Honourable Member place before the House total number of items for each group of every centre for which Retail Price Index Numbers are being released by the Labour Department? In this connection, will he also state what the criterion was for fixing upon items, their qualities and numbers, on which these unweighted group index numbers are based?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: (a) The Government of India decided in 1942 to undertake a scheme for the compilation of cost of living index numbers on uniform lines. As the preparation of such index numbers was likely to take some time, it was felt that retail price data should be available as this might be of some value in wage disputes. Government, therefore, decided as an interim measure, after consultation with Provincial Governments to collect price data for certain selected centres in the country and to prepare index numbers based on such data.

(b) The items constituting the groups are not published. There is no particular reason except the desirability of limiting space in the Gazette.

(c) A statement regarding the number of items included in each group in the Retail Price Index number for each centre is placed on the table of the House. The main criteria adopted for deciding upon the list were the consumption habits of the class of the community concerned and the availability of reliable price data.

Statement showing the number of items included in the various groups for each centre for which retail price index numbers are being published in the Indian Labour Gazette.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Are figures being collected of the actual prices being paid by the working classes, or only the prices that are supposed to be scheduled to be paid in the retail shops?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I think if my Honourable friend waits there will be an answer to the next question by Mr. Ayyangar in which you will find the information about family budget.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: What information have Government collected and kept in their possession of the prices which are actually prevailing in the blackmarket in which alone the ordinary working class people in towns are able to purchase most of their necessities?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I do not think Government have any information on blackmarket prices.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will Government collect that information?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: That suggestion, I must say, does not commend itself to me.

Mr. President: Order, order. Next question.

REPORT ON FAMILY-BUDGET-ENQUIRIES

1156. Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: (a) Will the Honourable the Labour Member please state when he intends to publish reports on the Family-Budget-Enquiries which started nearly three years back?

(b) Will the Honourable Member place before the House the dates on which the first and the last Family-Budgets were collected in every centre where such enquiries were conducted and state why such an extraordinary period was chosen for the conduct of such enquiries?

(c) Are Government aware that the whole purpose and results of these enquiries have been most seriously vitiated by leaving out of account the factor of qualities of items consumed by the workers from the questionnaires of the Family Budget Enquiries altogether?

(d) Will the Honourable Member please state if an Experts Committee was appointed to ensure uniformity and correct procedure in such Family Budget Enquiries? If so, how many times did it meet? Is it a fact that sampling techniques and other important decisions on methods and principles of obtaining and Compiling data applied in these enquiries, were approved by the said Experts Committee either before or after their application? If not, why not?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: (a) Reports on the Family Budget Enquiries are expected to be completed and published by the end of September 1946.

(b) A statement containing the information required is placed on the Table of the House.

As cost of living index numbers constituted an essential basis for adjustment of dearness allowance, which was urgently required during the war period and as no reliable data in this respect were available, a beginning had to be made without waiting for conditions to return to normal.

(c) The answer is in the negative.

(d) An Experts' Committee was appointed to discuss methods of preparing cost of living indices. It met once and laid down general principles regarding the methods of investigation, which were generally followed.

ENQUIRIES ABOUT ADMINISTRATIVE INTELLIGENCE ROOM AND ITS DIRECTOR

1157. *Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: (a) Will the Honourable the Commerce Member be pleased to state the functions of the Administrative Intelligence Room, and the total cost of its maintenance and establishment per annum?

(b) Are any independent statistics prepared or researches made in this Administrative Intelligence Room? If so, of what nature?

(c) What are the qualifications of the Director, Major Homfray, for the office, and what are his general and special qualifications?

(d) Is he the son-in-law of the Governor of Burma, Sir Reginald Dorman Smith?

(e) Was the Administrative Intelligence Room sanctioned by the Standing Finance Committee? If not, why not?

(f) Were applications invited for the post of the Director, and was the Selection made by the Federal Public Service Commission? If not, why not?

(g) Is the recruitment of the staff done by the Federal Public Service Commission? If not, why not?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: (a) A copy* of the Interim Progress Report of the Administrative Intelligence Room for the period from 5th March to 5th November 1945, is laid on the table. The functions of the Administrative Intelligence Room are given in part I of the Report.

The total cost of the maintenance and establishment of the organization is Rs. 1½ lakhs per annum.

(b) Yes, Sir. A reference is invited to pages 2—4 and Part II of the Report.

(c) Major Homfray belongs to the Indian Army and has seen active service during the War. Before being appointed Director of the Administrative Intelligence Room, Major Homfray had acquainted himself fully with the working and set-up of the War Room of the General Headquarters, on the lines of which it was proposed to run the Administrative Intelligence Room. His services were originally lent for a period not exceeding six months to enable the new organization being set up. During this period he did valuable work and as it was considered necessary to provide for continuity of management, the Army authorities were requested to agree to his retention in the post of Director of the Administrative Intelligence Room for a period of another seven months.

(d) Yes, Sir. But as far as I understand the marriage took place seven months after the appointment was made.

(e) Yes, Sir; the latter part of the question does not arise.

(f) No, Sir; because the post of Director was originally sanctioned on a temporary basis for a short period only and the services of Major Homfray, who had full background knowledge of the working and general set-up of a similar organization, were readily available for a short period.

(g) No, Sir. Recruitment has so far been made on a purely temporary basis, as, pending the approval of the Standing Finance Committee, the future of the Administrative Intelligence Room was uncertain. In view of the fact that the establishment of the Room has been sanctioned for a period of five years, the question of recruitment to the posts in the organization will now be taken up.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: With regard to part (d) of the reply, is it not a fact that the appointment was made because he was found suitable and not because he happened to be the son-in-law of the Governor of Burma?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: I have said that Government does not set up an enquiry to find out who happens to be the son-in-law of whom. In this case the marriage took place seven months after the appointment was made.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: That is what I want to know.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: What was the qualification of the gentleman who appointed him?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: I do not know the qualifications of that man but he had an understanding of the problem and also to find out as to how to find a suitable officer to deal with that problem.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Who is that gentleman?

*Not printed in these debates. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.—
Ed. of Debates.

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: I want notice of that question.

NUMBER OF EVACUEES BROUGHT DOWN TO INDIA

1158. *Sri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar (on behalf of Sri V. O. Vellingiri Gounder): Will the Secretary for Commonwealth Relations be pleased to state:

(a) the total number of evacuees brought down to this country—British India and Indian States—since the beginning of the war;

(b) how many have been sent back so far;

(c) when the rest of them are going to be sent back;

(d) where the remaining persons are located;

(e) the reason for delaying them from being sent back;

(f) the amount of money so far spent to support them from the beginning up till now, year by year; and

(g) how this expenditure is being met?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: (a) The total number of evacuees in India is about four lakhs and six thousand. Of this, about 7,000 were sponsored by or through His Majesty's Government and the rest evacuated to India of themselves.

(b) and (d). About 20,000 evacuees have so far been repatriated to their former homes. Of the remaining, about 17,000 evacuees are maintained in camps, the rest being distributed in the various Provinces and States.

(c) and (e). Arrangements are being made, in consultation with His Majesty's Government and the Government of Burma, who are principally concerned, for the repatriation of evacuees to their former homes, as early as possible. The return of refugees will be gradual, owing to the acute shortage of shipping and to the abnormal economic conditions prevailing at present in the countries concerned, as a result of the devastation caused by the war.

(f) and (g). I lay on the table of the House a statement showing the amounts spent on Indian evacuees from 1941-42 onwards, for which alone the Government of India have accepted financial liability. The figures of expenditure on non-Indian evacuees are not readily available.

As regards the allocation of such expenditure, attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the statement referred to in my reply to Seth Govind Das' question No. 394, on the 20th February, 1946.

Statement showing the total expenditure incurred on Indian evacuees in connection with their reception, dispersal and maintenance in India

	Rs.
Actuals for 1941-42	8,34,181
Actuals for 1942-43	1,21,32,665
Actuals for 1943-44	2,93,23,918
Actuals for 1944-45	3,11,51,222
Revised estimates for 1945-46	3,02,31,600
Total	10,36,73,586

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: In view of the acute shortage in India, may I suggest to the Honourable Member the desirability of sending back these evacuees immediately so that they may not be an unnecessary drain on the limited foodstocks in India?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: I have replied to that in my reply to parts (c) and (e).

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: I want that they should be sent back immediately without the least delay.

Mr. Geoffrey W. Tyson: With reference to part (b) of the question and the answer which the Honourable Member gave, namely that the total number of evacuees so far sent back amount to 20,000, is he in a position to state what percentage of the 20,000 are non-Indian evacuees, and what percentage of available civilian shipping space is being used by these evacuees in returning to Europe?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: I am afraid the percentage of non-Indian evacuees is very small. These 20,000 mostly include people who have gone back to Burma. Some of them may be non-Indians, including a few British officers of the Burma Government. I am afraid I have no information about the percentage of shipping.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: In view of the serious food shortage in Southern Districts of Bombay Province, will Government consider the immediate closing down of the Polish Camp in Kolhapur where there are 5,000 Polish evacuees still there?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: Having accepted responsibility for them, we cannot now send them away without the consent and co-operation of His Majesty's Government, at whose instance we took charge of them. But I can assure the Honourable Member that we are doing our very best to ensure as speedy repatriation of these evacuees as may be practicable.

Mr. Geoffrey W. Tyson: Is it proposed to use any percentage of available civilian passages for the purpose of repatriating these 5,000 Poles at Kolhapur? The Honourable Member has stated that it is the intention of Government to repatriate them, as soon as possible. I am asking him if he could indicate whether that will have any bearing on the available civilian shipping space?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: I should not think so.

Maulana Zafar Ali Khan: How many Italian prisoners of war are there still in India? I am given to understand that there are 5,000 or more. Are they going to be sent back or not?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: Italian prisoners of war are not included in my figure of non-Indian evacuees.

Mr. Geoffrey W. Tyson: The Honourable Member says he does not know whether it is proposed to encroach on civilian shipping space. Will he undertake to make enquiries to ensure that it is not proposed to encroach on civilian shipping space?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: Certainly, Sir.

Seth Govind Das: Was it not a fact that the responsibility of these evacuees were taken by the Government of India when the war was going on?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: Which evacuees? The question is not clear. The responsibility of which class of evacuees?

Mr. President: Does the Honourable Member refer to the Polish evacuees?

Seth Govind Das: I am referring to evacuees who are non-Indian. Was the responsibility of these evacuees taken by the Government of India when the war was going on?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: We undertook to arrange for their maintenance and care in India but we have accepted no sort of financial responsibility for them. The expenditure incurred on their maintenance is debited to the governments of the countries concerned or to His Majesty's Government.

Seth Govind Das: The Honourable Member said that the Government of India have undertaken the responsibility of their stay here. The responsibility was undertaken during the war, when there was not so much food shortage. In view of the food shortage at present in the country will it not be proper now, in spite of the responsibility which the Government of India have taken for these evacuees, to send them back to their own country?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: I hope the Honourable Member will look at the humanitarian aspect of it. Having taken charge of them we certainly cannot throw them overboard. But, as I have said, we are doing our very best to have them repatriated as soon as practicable.

ALTERNATIVE EMPLOYMENT TO WOMEN PREVIOUSLY WORKING UNDERGROUND IN MINES

152. Miss Maniben Kara: Will the Honourable the Labour Member be pleased to state:

(a) how many women were employed underground in coal mines in India before the last day that the ban on the employment of women underground in mines was re-imposed;

(b) how many of the women mentioned in (a) have been given alternative employment since the imposition of the ban on women working underground;

(c) the nature of alternative employment provided to them;

(d) how their earnings in the new employment compare with their earnings while working underground;

(e) apart from wages what the other concessions are that they have lost as a result of ceasing to work underground; and

(f) what steps Government propose to take in order to compensate them for their loss of earnings and other concessions?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: (a) About 20,000.

(b) No exact figures are available but approximately 50 per cent. of the women mentioned in (a) have been given alternative employment since the re-imposition of ban. Of the remaining 50 per cent. about half have gone to their villages while some of the remainder are sitting down at collieries because they are refusing contract work e.g. coal loading;

(c) Loading of coal on surface, loading and unloading of sand and removing of overburden in quarries.

(d) The earnings of women so employed are from ten to twelve annas per day (excluding half seer free rice and bonus of two annas for each woman) as against twelve annas to fourteen annas per day paid to underground workers.

(e) Women so employed have lost the concession of free supply of milk which was granted only by reason of working underground.

(f) Attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the answer given in reply to part (b) of starred question No. 466 on the 25th February, 1946.

SUGGESTION re KEEPING OF HISTORY SHEETS AT EVERY HISTORICAL MONUMENT

153. Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will the Education Secretary be pleased to state:

(a) if he has seen the letter of Mr. S. S. Lall of Peshawar in the Hindustan Times of the 4th March, 1946, in the forum of letters to the Editor, suggesting that "History Sheets" should be kept at every historical monument;

(b) if it is a fact that no such plates are kept at any of the South Indian Historical monuments like Amaravati, Bhattiprolu, Nagarjunakonda, Jaggurpetta, Ghantasale, etc., and

(c) if Government will consider the advisability of adopting this suggestion?

Sir John Sargent: (a) Yes.

(b) and (c). Short historical notices are already affixed to a large number of ancient monuments in various parts of India including some in the South India. In accordance with the policy laid down urgent steps are now being taken to provide adequate notices on monuments throughout India both in English and in regional language or languages. A number of such notices has already been prepared and investigations have for some time been in progress as to the best ways and means of displaying them on monuments. In view of the difficulty of producing metal plates at the present moment, temporary notices are in a number of cases being displayed on wood or board.

SHORT NOTICE QUESTION AND ANSWER

Mr. M. R. Masani: Sir, I would like to state that this question was put last Friday: otherwise it would appear partly pointless.

RUSSIAN AGGRESSION AGAINST IRAN

Mr. M. R. Masani: Will the Foreign Secretary please state:

(a) whether Government are aware of the strong sympathy in this country for our Iranian neighbours and the indignation at the flagrant breach of its pledges to evacuate its troops from Iran on the part of the Russian Government and its attempts to destroy the integrity and independence of Iran; and

12 NOON

(b) whether the Government of India, as a member of the United Nations Organization, will take immediate steps to invite the attention of the Security Council of the United Nations Organization, which is due to meet on March 25, to the Russian aggression against the neighbouring country of Iran, which is a matter of grave concern to this country and to the peace of the world, and to urge the Security Council to devise sanctions to protect the integrity and independence of Iran?

Mr. H. Weightman: (a) Government are aware of the existence of the strong feelings of sympathy and indignation to which the Honourable Member refers.

(b) Government understand that an appeal has been made to the Security Council of the United Nations Organization by the Persian Government themselves.

Mr. M. R. Masani: Since India is unfortunately not represented in the Security Council, will the Government of India convey to the British Government the public opinion in this country that if small defenceless nations like Iran are to be left helpless against their powerful imperialist neighbours, the continued existence of the United Nations Organisation will become meaningless?

Mr. H. Weightman: Sir, Government have sensed feelings of urgency, alarm and indignation in all parts of this House and in the country generally and they have represented these feelings to the Government in the United Kingdom as a member of the Security Council.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Has the attention of the Government been drawn to an article of the Purposes and Principles of the Charter of the United Nations, which states that all members shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or the use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State and, if so, will Government take the earliest possible steps before the Security Council actually meets to make all the members of the Security Council aware of the great anxiety felt by India about what is happening in Persia in her relation with Soviet Russia and of the threat involved in the same to India's own territorial integrity on account of the international rivalries that are being carried on in Persia?

Mr. H. Weightman: Sir, I think the answer to that question is really implicit in what I have just said. India is not a member of the Security Council and is therefore not seized of this matter, unless of course the question comes before the General Assembly of which she is a member. Consequently, since the Government in the United Kingdom is a member of the Security Council, the Government of India have taken care to draw the attention of the Government in the United Kingdom to the feelings which I have mentioned in my reply to the last supplementary question.

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: Will the Honourable Member kindly inform the House whether the presence of Russian troops in North Persia was arranged at the Yalta Conference?

Mr. H. Weightman: I am not quite sure what the Honourable Member means. Is he inquiring whether an arrangement was made at Yalta that Russian troops should be brought into Persia? If so, the answer is 'No'.

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: I am suggesting that Russian troops are in Persia because the two other members of the Big Three had agreed to it. Is there any truth in this suspicion?

Mr. H. Weightman: None whatsoever.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Is the Government of India so helpless in the matter? Cannot something substantial be done instead of merely representing Indian feelings to His Majesty's Government?

Mr. President: Order, order.

HINDU MARRIED WOMEN'S RIGHT TO SEPARATE RESIDENCE AND MAINTENANCE BILL

PRESENTATION OF THE REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE

Dr. G. V. Deshmukh (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I present the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to give Hindu married women a right to separate residence and maintenance under certain circumstances.

Sir, I might mention for the information of the House that I have not been able to get the signature of Sardar Mangal Singh, because he is running a temperature of 104° or 105°. All other Members have signed the report.

THE HINDU MARRIAGE DISABILITIES REMOVAL BILL

Dr. G. V. Deshmukh (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, with your permission I beg to move:

"That the time appointed for the presentation of the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to remove legal disabilities under Hindu Law in respect of marriage between Hindus be extended up to Saturday, the 30th March, 1946."

Mr. President: Motion moved:

"That the time appointed for the presentation of the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to remove legal disabilities under Hindu Law in respect of marriage between Hindus be extended up to Saturday, the 30th March, 1946."

Sri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar (Madras: Indian Commerce): Will it not take the Bill up to the next session. There is only one day for non-official Bills before this session ends.

Dr. G. V. Deshmukh: That does not matter. It is only for the presentation of the Select Committee Report.

Mr. President: That cannot be helped. The question is:

"That the time appointed for the presentation of the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to remove legal disabilities under Hindu Law in respect of marriage between Hindus be extended up to Saturday, the 30th March, 1946."

The motion was adopted.

ESTATE DUTY BILL

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands (Finance Member): Sir, I move for leave to introduce a Bill to provide for the levy and collection of an estate duty in British India.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That leave be granted to introduce a Bill to provide for the levy and collection of an estate duty in British India."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

INDIAN FINANCE BILL—contd.

Mr. T. Chapman-Mortimer (Nominated Non-Official): Mr. President, when the House rose yesterday I was saying that we in this Group support the proposed new bullion duties. But, at the same time, I uttered a note of warning that the results might not be quite the same as the Honourable the Finance Member anticipates, unless he takes very good care and, I may add, very active steps, to see that what he intends is now destroyed and undermined by the activities of the same kind of people who nearly ruined the policy of his predecessor. Sir, I would ask him to remember three things. The first thing is that wealthy operators can move markets, especially the bullion market, even though Government may not desire these markets to move in that way. The second thing I would ask him to remember is that there is more than one bullion market now in this country: That state of affairs has arisen since about 1942. Thirdly I would ask him to remember what happened in 1919 and 1922 and what happened in 1942 and 1948. If he remembers these things, Sir, and then looks at certain things to which I shall refer now, I have no doubt that he will achieve the purpose he seeks to achieve by imposing these duties. Three things he must watch: firstly, 'changes in the rules or in the terms of contract of the bullion exchanges', and I may add the same remark applies also to other commodity exchanges. He should keep a very careful watch on any change or suspension of the rules. That does not apply only to the bullion market, though it applies to it more especially at the present time. The second thing he must watch is "market comments" in the press and the way in which markets are being guided by those who seek to make them move in any particular direction; bearing in mind that the greatest movements in markets can be brought about when you first give them a lever upwards before you attempt sending them down. Thirdly I would ask him to watch very particularly the silver market and those who operate therein. But since it is useless to make comments and observations without perhaps at the same time offering some suggested remedies, I suggest for what it is worth (1) the registration of dealers in these markets, (2) disclosure of the names of partners of firms and directors of companies operating in these markets, and (3) disclosure also of stocks of bullion. Finally, Sir, he should take very good care to see that no new company enters into these markets at the present time. That is related not merely to the operation of the markets, but it may undermine his purpose in another direction: namely to deprive his revenue officers, who sit behind him, of their legitimate and proper dues. Before I leave this question of bullion there is just one final observation I should like to make and that is that I noticed in one of the newspapers the comment that "one large operator seemed to be in the know and was buying heavily". I have not the least doubt that that statement is totally incorrect, because I cannot imagine any Honourable Member of Government would commit such a breach of official practice and behaviour as to disclose anything that the Honourable Member had in mind; but I draw it to his attention for another reason. That statement has been made in the press, and the purpose is either one of two things. One is to encourage the people that they should follow that operator because he has influence—thus discrediting the Government—and the other is to give the suggestion that perhaps that is the right line to take.

Now, Sir, having commented on bullion duties I pass to income-tax and super-tax. The House will have heard, and will in fact hear more in the next few days, of the suggestion that the present proposal contained in this Finance Bill operate purely for the advantage of the rich, or mainly for the advantage of the rich. Any one who looks at the table attached to the Explanatory Memorandum given to all Members of this House along with the Finance Bill will see what nonsense that is. The individuals who are in receipt of unearned income up to Rs. 18,000 will all benefit. Those who are in receipt of earned income up to a lakh will also benefit. In the case of unearned income over Rs. 21,000 and in the case of earned income over a lakh, the advantage will not be to the assessee but the other way round. Therefore I hope that those Honourable Members who tell us that this is a rich man's budget will be a little more guarded in what they have to say, and—before they repeat their observations elsewhere—take the trouble to study the statement set out in the Explanatory Memorandum.

Now, Sir, in connection with this question of income-tax I have seen a statement by Sir Padampat Singhanian in which he says that the rich get no relief. Then he goes on to talk about E.P.T., income-tax and super-tax. His contention is that during the war the Finance Member's predecessor deprived industry of as much as 93 per cent. of the income of companies. This is the kind of nonsense that we frequently hear from men who pose as leaders and captains of industry. They come along and tell us "You are merely politicians; you don't really understand these matters. We are telling you that we are mulcted to the extent of 93 per cent. of our profits." Well, Sir, that is nonsense. Every member of this House who has any idea at all of income-tax matters knows perfectly well that it is nonsense. The position in fact is that the individual shareholder pays the income-tax in so far as the income is distributed. The individual pays on the distributed income of the company, while the company pays income-tax on that portion of the income which is not distributed, plus, of course, the one anna super-tax payable on the total income.

Having said that, I turn to paragraph D of part II of the Schedule where the most important proposal in this Finance Bill is set out. There we find a scheme for a graded additional super-tax on companies. We on these Benches have given the matter very careful consideration during the last fortnight and we have now come to the conclusion that the Finance Member's proposals are correct, and that if he has to change these in any way, the whole scheme which he and his able officers have brought out will be undermined or perhaps even destroyed. I hope therefore that the House will support this proposal. It has been suggested in some quarters that it imposes an additional burden on industry. Now, Sir, I have for my personal satisfaction worked out a number of illustrative cases and I am satisfied that that is not so. My own conclusion in the matter is borne out by the remarks made in the speech of the Chairman of the Bengal Coal Company, which remarks indicate very clearly that in general, and subject naturally to the precise effect of the technical details, it should be possible for properly managed companies to maintain reasonable dividends.

Having said that, I think we can now attempt to assess the effect of the Bill in the light of the Honourable the Finance Member's intentions. He has set out his intentions very clearly in his speech, more particularly in para. 4 and para. 24. But before I discuss that I just want to refer for a moment to the Excess Profits Tax. It has been suggested that because the Honourable Finance Member has decided not to impose the Excess Profits Tax for the coming year, he has done something which is going to be of benefit to the rich and hurt the poor. Now, I cannot understand the line of argument that thinks like that for one moment. In fact, as I have already indicated, the rich man will pay more, as a result of this budget. On the other hand, industry will pay less and will thereby be able to build up the reserves which it needs, to enable it to buy new machinery and so forth. He has also had in mind very clearly another important aspect of this Finance Bill, namely, stability. We know perfectly well from what has been told us that very large sums of money which were spent in the past are not going to be spent this year; and in these circumstances, unless the Honourable Finance Member had taken off the Excess Profits Tax, the result would have been not good for the poor, as some people suggest, but utterly disastrous. In fact, I go so far as to say that there could have been made out a strong case for the removal of this tax a year ago. It is of course no use discussing the past; it was not done a year ago; it is being done now. There are Honourable Members who may say that it has not been done in the United Kingdom and why should we not follow their example of reduction of the tax, instead of taking it off altogether? Well, in the first place, the circumstances are not parallel in the two countries; Government in the United Kingdom reduced the Excess Profits Tax and did not take it off altogether because their last budget was brought in within a very few months of the termination of the war. When their next budget comes in, I have a very shrewd suspicion that their proposals will not be very different from the kind of proposals which my Honourable friend the Finance Member has introduced here. Those who think that by reducing the Excess Profits Tax they are helping the poor entirely overlook certain factors in the operation of the Excess Profits Tax which become increasingly effective and operative as the war expenditure of Government declines. If they will refer particularly to the first schedule rule 4, part (2), they will see special advantages given to banks and others. In other words, the Excess Profits Tax, if merely reduced, would have left in an advantageous position the very class of people—banks and investment companies—which has played so big a part in the inflationary trend in this country in recent years. I am very glad therefore that the Finance Member has courageously decided to do away with Excess Profits Tax altogether. When I say that of course, I fully recognise that the Excess Profits Tax Act itself must remain the law for a good many years to come, because otherwise the Government could not administer all the problems that are arising now and will arise in future out of this tax which was put on as a war measure.

Then we come directly, from his attitude towards the Excess Profits Tax, to his whole plan and purpose, which is to secure as great a degree of stability as is possible in a period when government expenditure is declining rapidly; and when if they were not very careful, the downward spiral would be even more disastrous than the upward spiral in 1942-43. Therefore his whole purpose in these tax measures which he has set before us is to secure as great a degree of stability as possible. Now, I do not say that he will achieve one hundred per cent. stability: he obviously cannot—no man possibly can do so but I believe, and we in this group unanimously believe, that his measures are the best that in the circumstances he can make having regard to the overriding question of stability.

The second thing he has set out to do—and it is very clear throughout the whole of the Finance Bill—is that he has sought to give minor relief to the poorest classes. I emphasise the word 'minor' because I am quite sure that the Honourable Finance Member will be the last to claim that merely because he has, for example, reduced the duty on kerosene oil he has done something wonderful for the poor. What he has done is, having regard to the circumstances, all that he could, in that and in other directions. As regards industry, he has not merely reduced taxation in the manner I have indicated, but he has also decided to give concessions in regard to machinery and so forth, all of which are very important if Indian industry is going to recover in these next few years, and if we are not going to see a repetition of the disasters of the years 1920 to 1924.

Another result that will arise directly from his proposals is that industrialists and traders will be encouraged to hold smaller stocks. There is evidence of that already in the speeches of various chairmen of industrial and trading companies. He is forcing them to disgorge stocks on which,—to be quite plain,—some of them had been sitting when they ought to have been releasing them for the public. That in its turn will mean not merely greater availability of supply but it should mean that prices of commodities that directly affect the masses will tend to go down—slowly, I hope, but I think they will tend to go in a downward direction, which is all to the good.

Then there is one aspect of the matter which is political perhaps rather than strictly financial, and that is the general question of the relationship between the Finance Member's proposals and the whole of the activities of Government. He has rightly stressed in one part of his speech that finance is merely a projection of the policy of Government into the sphere of rupees, annas and pies. That being so, I would earnestly urge him to remember this or to consider this: viz., that it is not always wise, and it is not always effective either, to try to seek by means of income-tax Bills, etc., objectives which can better be achieved by amending other commercial legislation of Government. I should like to give him an illustration to show what exactly I mean. He presented to the House yesterday a Banking Bill. In 1942, Mr. Nalini Ranjan Sarkar made one of his "better" contributions to the welfare of his people—he brought in a Bill to amend the Companies Act. I need not waste the time of the House by repeating it; but to sum it up, what he said was that any company calling itself a bank was a bank; and now, four years later, the Government have to bring in a Bill to define and control banks! A great deal of the trouble (and I say this advisedly having studied the position in Bengal very carefully) in Bengal in 1942 and 1943 and since, and a great deal of the trouble elsewhere in India is due directly and indirectly to that amendment of the Companies Act slipped in as an unimportant measure by Mr. Nalini Ranjan Sarkar; and I would therefore suggest that in matters of grave commercial concern and in matters touching on the law of merchants and traders, the Government should consider whether their present method of handling such legislation is as good as it may be. Sir, I support the Bill.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad (United Provinces: Southern Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, the question was raised whether this is a capitalist's budget or whether it is a poor man's budget. The very fact that this paper 'Commerce' is in favour of this budget shows clearly that it is not a poor man's budget. It is really a billionaire's budget.

The first thing I would refer to is the repeal of the Excess Profits Tax. Certainly when I heard the Finance Member's speech I was shocked when he said that this should be abolished altogether. I was expecting that he would give some relief this year, perhaps reduce it to half and abolish next year. It was not expected that it would be abolished entirely this year.

The second thing is that he did not give any relief to the poorer people in income-tax. We were expecting, as he has expressed repeatedly on the floor of the House that he is always for the poor people, that the income tax level will be raised from Rs. 1,500 to at least Rs. 2,000 and that the dearness allowance will be free of income-tax. These were the two reliefs which we were expecting for the benefit of the poor. Of course this would require a change in the Act and the change ought to have been provided for in the present Income Tax Act.

The next thing is about the duty on silver and gold. This also is a thing which requires careful consideration. I have been pressing in connection with the Bretton Woods Report and elsewhere that the selling and purchasing prices of gold should be fixed and brought on par. Abnormal difference in purchasing and selling prices is very unfair to the country. It unstabilises the whole commerce and demoralises the purchasing power of the rupee. If the purchase price is at Rs. 42 or 43 and the selling price is 100 and over, it means that the purchasing power of paper rupee is reduced from Rs. 100 to Rs. 43, this is very demoralising and I do not know whether the duty which he has imposed will stabilise the prices or it will have tendency in the reverse direction. Finance Member may have in his mind some ingenious method by means of which the price of gold may be stabilised. I agree with him. I know his views he is in favour of bringing the sale price and the purchasing price at par or bringing them within very narrow limits. There I entirely agree but whether leaving this duty will bring it at par is a thing which I could not visualise at the moment. This duty has created a good deal of gambling in the bullion market of Bombay. The Honourable Member must have got the figures. I only hear from hearsay. I have no opportunity to find out the facts. A good deal of gambling in bullion market occurred on the 27th and 28th of February. I happened to be in Bombay soon after and I was told that a number of people knew the budget proposals particularly about gold and silver a day before. I have no evidence. I only rely on what I heard from persons who carry on business in Bullion. I hope that the Finance Member will collect the facts of transactions on the 27th and 28th and investigate the matter. He may gather facts and convince himself that this duty was known when this gambling was going on. I have pressed repeatedly and I repeat again that these gambling houses ought to be abolished because unless we abolish these gambling houses, there cannot be any commercial stability in this country, any stabilisation of prices and the purchasing power of the rupee cannot be stabilised. The three gambling houses are the Stock Exchange, the Bullion Exchange and the cotton markets. Unless these three gambling houses are abolished, it is absolutely impossible to have scientific commercial transactions in this country, because these people engaged in this business spend so much of their energy and money in gambling that honest people can enter into the field. If my friend and the Commerce Member do want that commerce should proceed on scientific lines, and stabilised in the country there should be some kind of security and these three gambling houses should be abolished and exploitation should be stopped. I tabled a motion to this effect but unfortunately I have not succeeded in the ballot. In fact during the last 15 years I could not draw a single Resolution in my name by ballot. I had to move Resolutions tabled in other names. I am very unfortunate in this respect.

Now, the Honourable Member in the course of his speech referred to the appointment of a taxation committee. This thing is needed after the war, because we must now proceed on certain principles. If the principles are accepted, then naturally there will be no grievance in taxation because people will know what the taxation would be and the method that we are adopting now is that we are taking up a few articles here and there. My friend the Finance Member is not so speculative as his predecessors had been. The taxation was done in such a way that no regard was paid to the law of diminishing returns. There ought to be some scientific basis behind taxation. After the Great War things have changed enormously. The recommendations of the Taxation Committee were made 20 years ago and those peoples no longer hold good. We must reconsider the whole thing.

Along with the Taxation Committee, there ought to be a Fiscal Commission also. The recommendations made by the Fiscal Commission in 1921 and 1922 are no longer correct at the present moment. Things have enormously changed. Their theory of protection has proved to be impracticable. It has proved to be a source of income to the capitalists and a great discouragement and nuisance to the consumers and the poorer people. These capitalists are exploiting the poor people. Protection once given could not be removed on account of vested interest. Look into the protection given to sugar and other articles and we find that it has worked only for the benefit of the mill owners and not for the benefit of the consumers of the country. Capitalists did not consider it as a loan but their rights. These two things require special consideration.

There should also be a radical change in the Companies Act. It is out of date and the Law Member and the Commerce Member may by co-operation change the Companies Act in a radical manner. Piecemeal legislation will not serve the purpose. The views have enormously changed. No person will favour the enormous profits given to the shareholders. Labour has been ignored and it is the duty of those who represent labour to bring this forward. If we want the labour in this country to be contented, then the piecemeal legislation that we have been having is no good. It only gives temporary relief and those who get it soon forget all about it. The relief must proceed on a substantial basis. There are only two methods by which you can solve this question. You should not employ labour for the production of wealth for a few. This is the principle of Communists; or you have the German method of having labour as business partners. The profits should be divided in a certain proportion between the capitalists and the workmen. The ratio should be fixed, so many annas and pies in the rupee. Capitalists have got the right to demand a bank rate of interest and a little more on account of the risks. Labour should have a living wage and whatever profit is left should be divided in a certain proportion among all the persons. If labour is convinced that they are partners in the business, they will cheerfully work and earn the money, even if it comes to working 16 or 18 hours a day. If I am asked to work 16 or 18 hours a day for my own benefit, I will not hesitate but if I am asked to work 18 hours a day in order that the earning may go to somebody else, then I will always say that I should work only 56 hours a week or 48 hours a week or 36 hours a week and so on, coming down and down. The only solution is that these persons should be business partners and earn the fruit of their labour. If this principle is accepted, then all the legislation that you pass will be back number and they will be no longer required. I think this present Government or any Government of the future should adopt this bold step for the protection of labour.

Now, I come to the air service in this country. I am sorry the Honourable Secretary for Posts and Air is not present here, but I must say that he has completely failed to take lessons from the history of the development of Indian railways and learn something from the mistakes which the Indian railways have made, in this particular direction. The railways started with the same idea with which my Honourable friend Sir Gurunath Bewoor is now starting that you must begin with company management. That was the policy which the Railways laid down in 1854. All the time we continued this policy of company management till the Acworth Committee published its report in 1922. The opinion at that time was divided and the question of State control and State management of railways was decided by the casting vote of Mr. Acworth himself. He decided that we should take over the administration of Indian railways. The Government of India accepted that principle and now all the Indian railways have come under State management. By the experience of the past we have now come to the right conclusion, a conclusion which has been accepted by almost all the countries in the world that railways should be State managed. Similarly in the case of air, we have not come to the right conclusion. I do not know why we should adopt a retrograde step in the case of air service alone. This will have to be rectified soon. My friend Sir Gurunath Bewoor, did not benefit himself by the early mistakes of the Railway Department. The mistake has now been corrected. I ask why not adopt a similar policy and bring the air services under State management. As regards the through services which pass over India, we charge for the use of aerodrome and charge royalty on tickets purchased in this country on journey included or ended in this country. This is the principle which we ought to adopt. This is the principle which should be adopted by the future Government. It is unfortunate that company management is encouraged without the consent of the legislature. If these proposals for private air services were brought forward before the House, I am sure they would not be carried in this House, but all these were done by backdoor methods. Before I leave this Department of Sir Gurunath Bewoor, I must say one little thing and that is the encouragement given to capitalists like Tatas to make more and more profit, but in the case of the poor postal employees who are living under hard conditions, they have not even given sufficient relief. The subordinate are paid very low and this requires to be considered.

Now, a word about the Labour Department. Really the Labour Department is not interested in the welfare of labour. This attitude of theirs became exceedingly clear when we put questions about labour in P. W. D. workshops at Aligarh this morning. Last time I mentioned this and I mention it again that it is a mistake to tag P. W. D. to the Department of Labour. Department of Labour—is the department of service. P. W. Department is a Department of profit. No connection between the two. I hope even the present Government will realise their mistakes and will separate the two Departments. We also pointed out on the floor of the House the other day that the work in C. P. W. D. passes through the Secretariat of the Labour Department where the representation of minorities is nil. I pointed out several cases in which the Muslims are handicapped on account of absence of representation. I drew the attention about the Executive officer, I drew the attention about appointment of the Superintending Engineer, I drew their attention to the appointment of S. D. O's. I am sorry that this particular Department has nobody's confidence. No one likes the way in which money is squandered, the way in which culprits have been let off. I just draw attention to the two Committees which sat on this point, one is the Prior Committee. The other was appointed 20 years ago. They admit that this Department is not honest, that it is a corrupt Department, but those people who were corrupt had all gone away and therefore we cannot take any action against them. Very little has been done about the culprits.

Now, a word about the post war development. I am not satisfied with the post war development. We have not been taken into confidence. This question was never brought before the Assembly, this question was not brought before the Standing Finance Committee, and yet we are asked to vote large sums of money. We do not know why we should vote for them. We were not taken into confidence. We do not know what happens. Policy committees were appointed, and in these committees a majority of people were big businessmen. The Government of India had no control over the businessmen, while the businessmen control the Government of India. These businessmen made certain recommendations for their own benefit. We only provide money for their advantage. The interest of the poor people, the interest of the cottage industries, the interest of the consumers never taken into consideration. They are always overlooked in all our post war developments. I said before, and I repeat again, that whenever you plan any scheme of post war development, the first thing to be considered is how many persons could be employed and what relief could be given to poor people. This is the first point we ought to consider. But this has never been done. What is generally considered is the dividend which any undertaking will pay to the capitalists, that is the only question on which the issue is decided. If it does not pay good dividend it is said to be uneconomic even if it employs large number of workers. But they never consider the question of the number of employments. The cottage industries are left out altogether, because they don't give enough dividend to capitalists. For given capital it would employ very larger number of workers. Unfortunately in all these planning committees that we have formed, in not even a single one the interest of the consumer is considered. In not a single one have I seen the interest of the cottage industries is considered, in not a single one have I seen the interest of the poor people is taken into consideration. The capitalists really know only one thing in what particular manner enormous profits could be derived. They derived huge profits during the war, they want they should continue to derive more and more profits even after the war. That is the only principle on which all the recommendations of these planning committees are based. This is a policy which the legislature would not like to endorse either now or in future.

Now, Sir, a word with regard to trade in skins and hides. I said on the cut motion and I repeat again that this is a trade which has been most unfairly treated by the Government, and this is evident from the fact that the price index of this particular commodity is not in keeping with the price index of other commodities. It varies between 137 and 147 whereas price index of wheat is 378. There are two fundamental defects which Government should remove as early as possible. One is the present system of monopoly purchase, i.e., two business firms of U. K. and U. S. A. are the sole purchasers to the exclusion of others. Monopoly purchase may be justified in war time because all possible resources must be directed to the successful prosecution of the war, but there is no reason to continue it after the war. The second thing is that the purchasers should not fix the price; it should be fixed on an economical basis, and the price index shows that that has not been done. The question of hides and skins requires serious consideration. These defects should be removed as soon as possible. It applies not only to raw hides but also to half-tanned hides. Some leather firms use the position to their own advantage and make fat dividends even after the war and therefore they are advising Government in the wrong direction. The time has now come that mentality should change.

The monopoly of purchase about hides and skins also applies to tea. It is unfortunate that the British Government has the sole authority to purchase tea from India; they take the best tea to London and leave the poorer quality for us. I am fond of tea myself and I know how to convert poor tea by small process into good tea. But the price level of tea is 155 and of coffee is 508 which shows that the prices which they are given to tea cultivators are not economic prices.

Now I come to education. The country has accepted the recommendations of the Central Advisory Board of Education known as Sargent Report. But there are some lacunae therein and unless they are filled up the report will not be so popular. I do not refer to the financial aspect because these and many other proposals of post war development are in the same position. But if money is to be found, I hope it will be found for education first and also for health and agriculture. But with regard to the lacunae there are three of them; the first is about the mode of selection. At the age of 11 you have to select boys for high schools, other to remain in the ordinary board schools. The method of selection may work adversely in case of the depressed classes, who are not on a high level of mental equipment and culture. So that the educated people will be more educated and the less educated will further degenerate. That is a principle that I do not like; we should devise a principle by which we not only raise the intellectual classes but also the depressed classes who need education most. So here they have provided for the requirements of the better classes and not for the intellectually lower classes. The second lacuna is that we have not provided for religious instruction. In England and other places religious education has been accepted as a necessary part of general education; that principle should be adopted in India also where the people are certainly more religious than in the west.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee (Nominated Non-Official): Sir, does my Honourable friend recommend the provision of religious instruction at State expense or at the expense of the religious community concerned?

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: England has agreed to the principle of its being undertaken at State expense, and the same principle should be accepted in India.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee: Does my Honourable friend realise that this has been done by those religious institutions giving up a great deal of their freedom. They have now almost become State-managed institutions.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: I am talking of the system of compulsory education. Whenever there is compulsory education most of them will come under State management and religious instruction will be necessary.

Then with regard to teachers, they have not made adequate provision about their training. Another important thing is what should be done about transitional arrangements, how should the object be achieved stage by stage, in five years, ten years or longer period. It is very desirable that these lacunae should be filled up. These are defects on account of which it has not been very popular. I know the Central Advisory Board is at work on these points; I hope they will remove these defects.

I will next draw attention to the Grants Committee. I pressed the importance of this question about eight years ago. Whenever this question is raised about grants to universities directly under the control of the Government of India, they say they wait for the recommendations of the Grants Committee. Year before last I pressed this; we were asked to await the report of this Committee. Then 1944 passed away. In 1945 we were told that the Committee has met; that year also passed away. Now 1946 has come; the Grants Committee has been appointed but its report is not there. I do not know if the Finance Member has confidentially received anything; I have not heard anything about it. The Grants Committee never went even to the universities on which they are going to report.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. O. Chatterjee: Is the Honourable Member satisfied with the present Grants Committee or its terms of reference?

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffar (Bombay Southern Division; Muhammadan Rural): Does the Honourable Member belong to the Treasury Benches?

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: If this Grants Committee works in the same way as the Grants Committee in the United Kingdom it will be very useful. I recommended it in my book in 1929.

I will next deal with the controls. These controls may be all right in war time, when we need all the resources of the country for the successful prosecution of the war, but why should you continue them now?

An Honourable Member: The third world war is coming.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: Then we will have them again. Sir, it is certain that these controls raise the price-levels, and so when you remove them prices are sure to come down. That should be done quickly.

As regards corruption, some time ago the Standing Finance Committee had a special meeting to consider the question of corruption in the Supply Department; and it should now deal with the problem of corruption in the matter of all articles which are subject to control by the various Departments of Government. If the Honourable Member who has spoken about controls has referred to corruption. This question should now be tackled by the S. F. C.

Then I refer to co-ordination between road, rail, air and water. This co-ordination has not been set up. We are demanding grants for various services without having any scheme behind us. So I hope the Transport Member will look into the problem of co-ordination.

Then I come to death duties about which a Bill has been introduced. It will be bitterly opposed by Muslims as it is against Islamic law and it will be an interference with our religion. The moment a man dies his property is transferred to other people according to shariat and you have no right to deprive these people of a part of their share. The interference with religion will strongly be resented. We must have some kind of a good programme for roads. Unfortunately under the influence of Roorkee engineers we are now having instead of straight roads, roads in the shape of S. I have calculated that we have an extra length of half a furlong for every mile of road constructed by these Roorkee engineers. This means additional capital expenditure, additional travelling for the public, and further we will have to spend large sums of money—probably about ten crores—to correct the follies of Roorkee engineers. All the roads made by them are zigzag, in the shape of S. When I asked some of the engineers, the reply was 'we want to change the perspective; if we have straight roads, the perspective will not change', this argument may have force for pedestrians and users of bullock carts! They are great nuisance to motorists. Well, we have to correct the follies of Roorkee engineers.

Then I come to the Bhole Committee Report which has now been published. I hope that some action will now be taken to improve our health, and to give us more doctors, hospitals and more medical colleges.

Mr. K. O. Neogy (Dacca Division; Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, as my Honourable friend, Sir Zia Uddin, was speaking, Mr. Ahmed Jaffar made a speculative interjection as to whether we are not going to face a third war in the near future. I have a shrewd suspicion that my Honourable friend the Finance Member is really apprehensive that we may have to provide for a third war very soon. I do not see how I can explain otherwise his anxiety to extend the so-called Financial Settlement that determines the respective financial liabilities of the Government of India and His Majesty's Government in regard to defence expenditure. I cannot understand how he proposes to extend a settlement that was definitely intended to last during the war time, and devised a rough and ready method as a mere war expedient. My Honourable friend thinks that there is some confusion of thought and misunderstanding over this question. I very much think that my Honourable friend, in the extreme rush of his work, could not look up the debates that took place in this House in the past years over this controversy. My Honourable friend says that after all it is a single issue that is involved: The settlement proceeds to divide the responsibility of financing the war expenditure between two Governments on the basis, on the one hand, of what is India's liability, and, on the other, what is the liability of Great Britain. And he says, "after all, when you accept this formula it is only a question of a few accounting rules that have to operate for the purpose of working out the exact figures representing the liability of each party." Sir, the matter goes, I am afraid, very much further than that, and the objections that have been urged on behalf of the Opposition in past years are of a really fundamental character. Sir, under the financial settlement, the defence expenditure chargeable to Indian revenues is made up principally of three elements: First, a fixed annual sum representing the normal net effective costs of the Army in India under peace conditions, and a lump figure of thirty-six crores seventy-six lakhs and odd was adopted for the purpose of fixing this particular liability—there are no details available on the subject, but

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands (Finance Member): At Pre-war costs.

Mr. K. O. Neogy: I know this was worked out on the basis of pre-war costs, but at the present moment, it represents a lump sum adjustment between His Majesty's Government and the Government of India. The second item is a variable item which is added to this figure of thirty-six crores and odd, as representing the extra cost due to increase in prices. This year the figure stands at seventeen crores forty-five lakhs and ninety-four thousand. Now, Sir, we come to the third item: cost of such war measures as can be regarded as purely Indian liabilities by reason of their having been undertaken by India in her own interests, and the figure in the present year's budget under this stands at Rs. 1,79,81,89,000. There is, besides, a fourth item which is to be found under the head 'Defence Services—Noneffective', and is responsible for very nearly eleven crores of rupees this year. In addition to this there is the capital provision which I need not refer to in this context.

Apart from the simplicity in accounting, one merit, in fact the principal merit, that was claimed by my Honourable friend's predecessor on one occasion for this financial settlement was that it would limit India's financial liability in connection with the war to such measures as are within her financial capacity and are taken for the local defence of India. This basic assumption has never been accepted by the people of India. In no sense can it be said that the defence expenditure that has been fixed under the financial settlement is within the financial capacity of India. Sir, I call my Honourable friend himself to bear witness to the financial capacity of India, and I need not do anything more than refer him to his own words which describe the economic condition of India today: "Poverty, squalor, ill-health, illiteracy, under-nourishment, and under-employment". If these results have been achieved under a system of administration, which includes the administration of defence, can it be claimed by my Honourable friend that whatever amount India has been made to pay in the past on account of the defence services really is within her financial capacity as was claimed by my Honourable friend's predecessor? The financial settlement cannot be allowed to continue any longer. It has been allowed to continue sufficiently longer, because it was expected to operate during the period of the war, and any further continuance of it would be a continued wrong.

Now, I come to the question of the procedure for the allocation of the expenditure under this financial settlement. We have in the past protested against the facile assumption that no injustice is done in the process of the allocation of expenditure under this settlement. I very much hope that my Honourable friend will not repeat the old argument, namely, that it is the Commander-in-Chief who decides as regards whether the particular figure is needed for the defence of India. It is humanly impossible for the Commander-in-Chief to look into every item of expenditure. I take it that some subordinates of his, who are authorised to act in his name, has it in their power to decide whether any particular expenditure should be charged to Indian revenue or not. I further hope that my Honourable friend will not repeat the argument that we have in the Auditor-General a watch-dog of the financial interests of India. After all the limitations under which audit has to work are not unknown to us, and I do not like that the Auditor-General should be dragged into controversial politics over this matter.

We have demanded the appointment of a committee of this House to go into the defence expenditure and scrutinise all the various items and satisfy itself as regards the justice and equity of the settlement, as also the accuracy and the propriety of the methods of allocation. Sir, this demand of ours has not been accepted, though in the case of the British House of Commons a committee on National Expenditure was allowed to go into the details of war expenditure a few years back and we have a number of reports of that committee in the library of this House, indicating that even during the war the non-official members of the House of Commons were entitled to information of a detailed character which has been withheld from us on grounds of security. Reference perhaps will be made by my Honourable friend, if he agrees to reply to these points, to the fact that year after year we have the Public Accounts Committee reporting upon the financial settlement although in a very cursory manner. I have gone into all the reports of the Public Accounts Committee as also the Military Accounts Committee on which that committee bases its report on this particular subject. It is definitely clear that neither of these committees was allowed the chance of examining actual cases which might have arisen—I mean the border-line cases in which doubts might have arisen in the minds either of the military authorities or of the audit authorities. My Honourable friend, if he goes into those reports, will find that all that they say is that “on the basis of the statements made before us, we find that the procedure of allocation is working satisfactorily”. It does not go any further. They do not get that opportunity which we want for a committee of this House to examine the propriety of the various individual charges that are levied on India for the purpose of defence.

Now, Sir, there is another point which I should like to mention. The defence of India is certainly a subject in which we are all interested, and I maintain that it is the right and the duty of Indian soldiers to defend their motherland. It is also—it should be also,—their exclusive privilege to do so. But what do we find, during the war in particular and also as a matter of general practice? We have a number of white soldiers maintained during peace times, and their number was increased to a record figure as was testified boastfully on one occasion by Mr. Churchill. He said: “Well, we have to remember that never before in the history of India we had so many white soldiers as now.” Now, Sir, we do not need white soldiers to defend us, and if they are here it must be as a part of an imperial strategy or for reasons of a political character. And when we know that a British soldier costs several times what an Indian soldier costs, from the purely financial point of view, the financial liability for the defence of India in this matter should be measured in terms of Indian soldiers being maintained for the defence of India, and the difference between the costs of Indian soldiers and the British soldiers should in all conscience be borne by the British Exchequer.

Mr. President: The House will now adjourn.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly reassembled after Lunch at Half Past Two with Mr. Deputy President (Sir Mohammad Yamin Khan) in the Chair.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Sir I would just say a word on the subject of the financial settlement before I proceed to another subject. The Honourable Member in his speech wanted to emphasise that it was Whitehall and not Delhi that wanted to terminate the financial settlement at the end of the current financial year. I think I can claim to speak on behalf of this side of the House when I say that in taking this decision the Government acted contrary to public opinion in the country. The Government should have given this House a chance to reconsider the terms on which the defence expenditure should be shared between this country and Great Britain, and the Honourable Member has no justification in denying that opportunity to this House merely on the ground that it would have placed a very heavy burden on his staff. Administrative inconvenience is no excuse for ignoring a public demand of this character.

Sir, another relic of the war is the lend-lease arrangement, which is coming up for consideration in America in a few weeks time. The Honourable Member has announced the decision of the Government to depute certain officers to settle our lend-lease accounts with America. This is a very complicated question, and in the absence of full details I can only deal with a few broad points bearing on the subject.

Sir, lend-lease aid which was granted by America with effect from 1941 was not intended to be of the nature of a debit-credit arrangement. It was made definitely clear by the President of the United States in several statements of his that he made to the Congress, as also by Mr. Stettinus (Junior) in his book on Lend Lease, that it was a sort of co-operative effort, under which the United States' Administration were to help the other United Nations with all the materials that were needed for the purpose of the prosecution of the war, not in exchange for money or for goods necessarily, because I find that among the reciprocal assistance which the Government of the United States expected of countries that benefited by the lend-lease arrangement was even “information”, and it has been repeatedly stated by those in authority in the United States administration that Shri Satya Narayan Sinha (Darbhanga cum Saran: Non-Muhammiadan): Sir, on a point of order neither the Honourable the Finance Member nor anyone representing his department is in the House when such important issues are discussed.

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall (Leader of the House): I am taking notes, Sir, on his behalf.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: But then the agreements that were executed in pursuance of this policy, apart from ensuring mutual assistance, also committed the various governments who were parties to those agreements to certain economic policies that had to be followed in future—policies that were first of all adumbrated in the Atlantic Charter and reaffirmed in these documents. In the case of India there is no formal document of any kind. In the case of certain countries of the British Empire there were notes exchanged and no formal documents were executed; but a formal document does exist between the United Kingdom and the United States of America. It has been declared in this House on behalf of the Government that although there may not be any written instrument to indicate the conditions of the lend-lease arrangements and reverse lend-lease obligation undertaken by India, India is going to be treated exactly on the same footing as the United Kingdom in regard to the terms of the settlement. The justification which was put forward by Government for not having negotiated a formal agreement between India and the United States of America was that acceptance of the economic clauses in the preambles of those agreements might have had an embarrassing effect upon India in regard to the question of her future fiscal and economic policy.

[Mr. K. C. Neogy]

I have before me the relevant clause of the Mutual Aid Agreement, where those countries that entered into that agreement formally had to pledge themselves in favour of the elimination of all forms of discriminatory treatment in international commerce and reduction of tariffs and other trade barriers and, in general, the attainment of all the economic objectives set forth in the joint declaration which goes by the name of the Atlantic Charter. Now, Sir, although we have not subscribed to this particular form of declaration, it so happens that there is a formal agreement between India and Canada called the Indo-Canadian Mutual Aid Agreement dated November 1944. In one of the clauses of that agreement I find that there is more or less a substantial reproduction of the clause that I have already referred to in the other agreement, and India therefore stands committed to the following principle: Adoption of measures to promote employment, the production and consumption of goods (harmless in their own way), expansion of commerce through appropriate international agreements or commercial policy with the object of contributing to the attainment of the economic objectives set forth in the Atlantic Charter. On the one hand we are assured that we have not committed ourselves to any declaration of policy in regard to the economic future of India by not having entered into a formal agreement with the U. S. A., and on the other we find that we stand committed to the basic formula of the Atlantic Charter on which the subsequent agreements proceed. I should like to know whether the Atlantic Charter really provides a clue to our fiscal policy, the fiscal policy of India.

Sir Cowasjee Jehangir: (Nominated Non-Official): May I remind the Honourable Member that on several occasions in this House from Government Benches it was definitely stated that India was not bound with regard to that fiscal clause and an assurance was given from the Government Benches on more than one occasion in reply to the Honourable Member and myself?

Mr. K. C. Neogy: It was a vague assurance that was given. The present position is that India is a party to an agreement, one of the clauses of which I have read out and which referred to the Atlantic Charter.

Sir Cowasjee Jehangir: Did not the Honourable Member draw attention to it at that time, to which he received a satisfactory reply?

Mr. K. C. Neogy: I got a very evasive reply. I am referring to this fact, because the question of the settlement of the lend-lease accounts is coming up very soon and in that connection also this very issue is likely to arise, as I shall show presently.

I was referring to the Atlantic Charter and the relevant economic clause, which reads:

"Further the enjoyment by all states, great or small, victor or vanquished, of access on equal terms to the trade and to the raw materials of the world which are needed for their economic prosperity."

To this we definitely stand committed by virtue of the Indo-Canadian trade agreement. My excuse for referring to this aspect of the question at some length is that when the lend-lease and reciprocal aid accounts between the U. S. A. and the Government of the United Kingdom were settled, along with other financial proposals of the United Kingdom, it was stated that in arriving at this settlement both the Governments had taken full cognisance of the benefits already received by them in the defeat of their common enemies. So far so good. But then, what follows is very important. "They have also taken full cognisance of the general obligations assumed by them in Article 7 of the Mutual Aid Agreement of the 23rd February 1942", and the understandings agreed upon, that is to say with regard to commercial policy. So, it is not merely the reverse Lend-Lease aid that was given by the United Kingdom Government to the United States of America, that was taken into account for purposes of settlement of the bill, but it was also the consideration that the United Kingdom Government stands committed to the carrying out of the obligations contained in Article 7 of the Mutual Aid Agreement, from which I have already read out a portion. Now, Sir, I should like to know what instructions the Government of India are giving to their officers in regard to the settlement of this vexed question. In this connection I should like to say that on different occasions, in very solemn language the President definitely declined to consider Lend-Lease and Reverse Lend-Lease as being of the nature of a financial transaction at all. This is what the President said on one occasion:

"Lend-Lease and Reverse Lend-Lease are not a system of debits and credits. They involve neither gifts, nor loans, nor transfers of money. Lend-Lease and Reverse Lend-Lease are not two sides of a financial transaction. The system is a system of combined war policy."

On one occasion Mr. Churchill himself made a declaration that the Lend-Lease policy of the United States represented the most unsordid transactions in the history of the world. But this was not the opinion of that perfect accountant, Sir Jeremy Raisman, who year in and year out was making provision under a suspense head for the price of each article of Lend-Lease goods received in India on the basis of cash transactions, and last year he took the trouble of assuring this House that our assistance given by way of Reverse Lend-Lease is not going to exceed the assistance which we are likely to get from the United Kingdom by way of Lend-Lease.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: The United States.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: I beg your pardon. The United States of America. As a matter of fact there is a great deal of confusion, in regard to this matter.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Not on this side.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: I do not know whether the Honourable Member has been able to disentangle the very tangled accounts as between His Majesty's Government and the Government of India in regard to Lend-Lease aid.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Yes, Sir.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: I am very glad to hear that. But then, strict accounting is a thing which was never attempted even by the United Kingdom Government as being too complicated and too unpractical a task.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: I do not want to reply to that now, but I think the Honourable Member's assumption is completely wrong. It was at the express wish of the United States Government that an attempt was made on the part of the United Kingdom Government or India to evaluate in terms of money the services rendered on either side. If you look at the book you will see it contains my photograph.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: I was going to show it to the Honourable Member. This is what I find in Stettin's book:

"As Reverse Lend-Lease meant service as well as goods it is impossible to keep accounts." It is the opinion of Stettin who was in charge of Lend-Lease administration.

"For Reverse Lend-Lease, goods or services, in battle conditions, there has never been any account at all."

Do I take it that my friend has attempted to do what Stettin considered impossible?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Unfortunately the administration of the United States is like the administration in India, that is subject to a command called "Congress". And it was Congress who insisted upon the administration doing something that they had no intention at the beginning of doing.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: I go by the statements made by the President who, I take it, has the support of the Congress.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: He had to withdraw from his original position as a result of the pressure brought upon him by the Congress just as this Government takes notice and yields to the view of the Congress.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Let me then come to the treatment which Great Britain has received at the hands of the United States of America, because I am entitled to claim the same principle being adopted in the case of India for the settlement of Lend-Lease accounts.

[Mr. K. C. Neogy]

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Certainly.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: The total Lend-Lease aid from the United States to the United Kingdom was estimated at 20 billion dollars and Return Lend-Lease from the United Kingdom Government to the United States was of the order of 5 billion dollars. Now, how did the United States of America settle this account which left a debit balance of 15 billion dollars against Great Britain? From the information that is available to us it appears that the debit balance of 15 billion dollars had been settled by the payment of 650 million dollars only.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: May I interrupt the Honourable Member once again in the interests of the debates? There is a complete misconception. I know it was referred to by Mr. Manu Subedar. This 650 million dollars had no relation at all to the difference between the 20 billion dollars supplied by Lend-Lease and the 5 billion dollars supplied by the United Kingdom Government in respect of Reverse Lend-Lease. It had relation merely to the amount, the value, of the articles left over at the end of the war.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: I was going to say that.

Mr. Deputy President: The Honourable Member's time is up.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: I will just finish this. In paragraph 3 of the Joint Statement regarding settlement for Lend-Lease and Reciprocal Aid, the adjustment between the Governments of the U. S. A. and the U. K., I find this 650 million dollars mentioned in paragraph 8. I was coming to the point that of the 650 million dollars at which the net claims have been settled a sum of 118 million dollars, or one-fifth of the total, is in respect of supplies which were already in the pipe line when V. J. brought the Lend-Lease system to an end; and the remainder, 532 million dollars, has been reached by computing the net value of the supplies previously furnished under Lend-Lease and still consumed on V. J. Day.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: That is the point.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: I find my friend was unnecessarily impatient. I was going to place all the facts. It comes to this that in regard to articles supplied to the United Kingdom on Lend-Lease basis, those that had been used up to the V. J. Day were not charged for.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: That is right.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: My Honourable friend agrees with me entirely. Would my Honourable friend see to it that an equally generous settlement is arrived at in respect of India

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: As the Americans say, you bet.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: And that there may not be any commitment with regard to the future economic policy of India, and that no reference to that particular point is made in the course of any settlement? My fear is that there may be an attempt to introduce this rather extraneous element into any agreement that takes place in settlement of our accounts on the lines of what I find in the Joint Statement which was executed between the two Governments of U. K. and U. S. A. If my Honourable friend is in a position to give me that assurance.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Yes, unqualified and unrestricted.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: I should have liked to know from the Honourable Member as to what our economic policy is at the present moment. But I have no time—I should have liked to go into that question.

Khan Bahadur Hafiz M. Ghazanfarulla (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, when the budget for 1946-47 was presented to us, some of us thought that this budget had brought some improvements on the previous budgets; but when this Finance Bill came before us, we found no improvements at all. Taxes on postage, matches and salt and other things which affect the poor people are the same as before. Shortage of cloth is another difficulty which affects the poor people a great deal. I have seen in many houses of middle class that the ladies remain inside and cannot come out as they have not got sufficient cloth to cover themselves. I do not understand why the controls are not removed from the cloth now, when the mills are making enough cloth in this country. Why cloth is exported outside India when it is not sufficient for the people here, is not quite clear. There would have been some satisfaction if there had been provision in the budget to sell grain at a cheap price to the people who are poor; but nothing has been done. The ration of wheat which has been reduced to two chataks is not sufficient at all for keeping the health of the people in proper order.

The Government of India does not pay any regard for the preservation of the health of the poor people. Recently, about 2½ years ago, a committee called the Health Survey and Development Committee was formed, and the committee after about two years submitted a report; but we do not find any provision in the budget about any of their recommendations. Medical aid and pure water supply are necessities to keep the health of the poor man in India. But nothing is being done. There are about 1,400 towns in India, out of which only about 250 have got tested and piped water supply. After so many years of British rule, only about 4½ per cent of the population of India gets pure water supply, with the result that a lot of people in many places in the country die by using bad quality of water. The report says it will take about 35 years to give water supply to the 1,400 towns and other places in India. What is the good of such a report when nothing can be done immediately? I will suggest that the water supply throughout all the towns in India can be made available within ten years if they start water supply here like the water supplies in European and in England. Water supply is run by companies everywhere in the world. Why should we not adopt it here, so that pure water may be available to the people without any expenditure either on the part of the Government or of the municipal administration? The usual way of water supply starting in this country is that the municipalities construct their water works with the aid of the Government—about 50 per cent and the balance they provide; but as they never have sufficient money at their disposal, they are unable to make a start with the result that all these municipalities which should have water works in their areas are unable to start them. In the United Provinces several years ago, legislation was made which authorised the municipalities to grant licenses for waterworks, just on the lines of the electric supply companies. I see no reason why this is not done throughout the whole of India. The Central Government should make some legislation and ask the Provincial Governments to do it accordingly; and I am sure with the capital now available in India many companies will come forward who can take over these water works and run it with great efficiency. There is another feature of these water supply companies. There will be no taxes in the cities. At present where the supply of water is started in a municipality, they have to levy a tax called water tax; but with these companies, everybody in the towns will be free to use water according to his requirements without any tax, but will pay just as the electric supply bill is paid, that is, by measurement; and I am sure it will be much cheaper than what it is costing now. There are two companies already in the U.P. I think the water supply in those two places is ample and the charges are very moderate; and no responsibility is cast either on the municipality or the Government to make arrangements. They make their own arrangements. There was some little difficulty during the war in these two places on account of short supply of pumping machinery and other fittings, but now that the war is over, we hope the position of such companies if started in India will be quite safe.

I want to say a few words about the budget which is presented always to this House. The budget which consists of about 78 Departments and which is made by the heads of the different Departments in two or three months' time is brought before this House and discussed and passed within ten to fourteen days' time. I cannot understand how the members can go through this long budget in such a short period. I think it will be much better if every Department consults this House during the framing of the budget, so that expenditure may be curtailed and revised accordingly. I find a lot of departments are being created in Delhi, without any regard to the expenditure; because the Government knows that any extra expenditure may be met by levying taxes. I attended a meeting of the Standing Committee for Roads the other day and found that a sum of about Rs. 48,000 was provided for the employment of two mechanical engineers. I asked what the mechanical engineers are required for in roads. I got the reply that they were going to make arrangements for the purchase of road rollers. I find it a very strange thing that mechanical engineers are required to purchase road rollers and on a salary of about half a lakh of rupees a year. This is a great discredit to the P.W.D. engineers who use these road rollers. I think they were quite able up to this time to make purchases of these road rollers themselves. The specification for these road rollers is always given by the companies who supply them and I do not know what these mechanical engineers who have been appointed will do by their suggestions. About the Central P.W.D. I do not know what are the conditions in Delhi but I find outside Delhi in many sub-divisions and divisions advertisements for contracts are made just only in name and notice for small

3 P.M. works are put on the notice boards only a day or two before. I saw the other day an advertisement in the 'Hindustan Times' for a work of about half a lakh for which tenders were called by the Central P.W.D. at Dehra Dun for a work in Sitapur near Lucknow. The notice was published on the 14th, that will reach Lucknow or Sitapur on the 15th or 16th and the same date has been fixed for the tenders. How is this possible? Why this money is being wasted in advertisement, I do not understand. I have got another instance of a sub-division in Allahabad, of the Central P.W.D. who are supposed to send notices for publishing to other offices at Allahabad on the 31st October for calling for tenders for a small job on the 6th November. This tender notice goes to the office of the Executive Engineer of the Public Works Department who was supposed to put it on the notice board on the 6th November, the date of the tender. This is only cheating and showing favouritism to some contractors who are friendly with the Engineer in charge. I think these things must be corrected. Small contractors are being harassed every day by the Sub-Divisional Officers and others and no work is given to them. Now, the name of the contractor who made a report of this incident to the Executive Engineer has been struck off. I hope the Government will look into these things and make corrections. With these remarks, I resume my seat.

Mr. R. C. Morris (Madras European): Sir, in rising to support the Finance Bill, I wish to touch briefly on a few points which, to my mind, either require clarification or merit some observations. Sir, the office of the Examiner of Capital Issues was started as a war time measure, presumably to force investments in Government loans; as part of a fight against inflation; and for prohibiting the use of funds in the hands of the public for unproductive purposes. The control is now being continued as a peace time measure for other purposes, in connection with which we have had no clear statement by Government.

We have heard from the Finance Member of his proposal to set up a National Investment Board but in the meantime the Control of Capital Issues is putting a brake on the introduction of new projects and the mobilisation of capital for worth-while industrial undertakings. We realise that we are living in a partial socialistic State, but we feel we should have a clear Government statement of policy in this respect; for how long is this control to continue and for what reason is continuance still considered necessary?

Then, Sir, I must deplore the continued lack of publicity in connection with the disposals of surplus British and American Army stores. When are the lists of such stores to be published? My constituents are interested in stores such as agricultural tools, wire, piping, electrical equipment, medical supplies, clothing, garage equipment, rubber hose, Army Transport carts, belting, wireless equipment, Field telephones and hardware. No information has been forthcoming as to what quantities of these will be available to the public, prices, condition and delivery points. I think I am correct in saying that after the last war the Ordnance Department organised the sales and publicity of surplus army stores in a business like manner and dealt direct with the purchasing public. In another two or three months the monsoon rains will commence and I can imagine that this will not improve the condition of the vehicles parked at Chabua in Assam.

Then, Sir, I have received several complaints over the delay in dealing with applications for import licences, and provision of permits, by the Department of the Chief Controller of Imports. In two cases applicants were not favoured with their licences for three months, and then only when the matter was taken up in Delhi by myself in person. Such delays cause the greatest inconvenience, and often serious financial loss. In one case, the commodity applied for was available in India, but this did not prevent a delay of three months in the granting of the permit to the applicant.

Now, Sir, the total cut passed in the Demand, by the Department of Information and Broadcasting in respect of Films' Research and Reference, Field Publicity and Arts can only result in a curtailment of the present income received by St. Dunstons' (who do wonderful work for the blind in India) and other charitable institutions, whose activities have been publicised by the excellent films produced by the Department. Such films being home to the public, in a manner nothing else can, the good work of institutions that depend largely on public subscriptions for their income, and it is a matter for great regret that this form of publicity is now to be shut down.

Sir, in my maiden speech in this House on the food situation, I touched on the necessity of increasing the production of foodgrains in existing cultivated areas. I trust that the suggestion to have agricultural experimental stations in every taluk or tehsil will be carried out. In addition, seed from improved strains of cereal crops should be widely distributed. The training of a large number of suitable men to run such Government experimental stations should be commenced without delay, and the salaries offered should be such as to attract the right type of individuals. Both Madras and the South Indian States have done a lot of good work in producing improved types of cereals, but much more remains to be done.

Sir, I should like to know what is proposed to be done to speed up the delivery of inland air mails. The position is at present farcical in that letters posted by air in South India are taking as long as, and frequently longer than ordinary mail to be delivered in the North and vice versa. Why is this? Surely the reason can only be that the ground work of the postal Department in this respect is defective.

Then, Sir, we should like to know the scope and value of the Botanical and Zoological Surveys of India for which demands have been passed. I believe these Surveys were suspended during the war; but it is hoped that the valuable researches, which have contributed beneficially to the field of economic biology in its relation to agriculture, Forestry and Fisheries will now be continued. I understand, Sir, that the Royal Asiatic Society submitted proposals to Government regarding the development of these scientific surveys as part of a post war reconstruction policy, and we should like to learn what Government has decided about this matter. I believe the Royal Asiatic Society also recommended the establishment of a Central National Museum of Natural Sciences in Delhi, and it will be interesting to learn whether Government have arrived at any decision on this matter also.

I have mentioned, Sir, Scientific Research Work on Fish, and my Colleague, Mr. Lawson, in his speech on the 19th stressed the necessity of Government devoting proper attention to this very important side of food supply. Why is it that the supply of dried fish, which was, some years ago, available for all working classes, is now in such short supply? It is known that the Japanese working classes lived largely on fish. It is not necessary to wait until we have adequate cold storages in the country—let the Fisheries Department get down to it, and encourage the production of salted and sun dried fish, as was produced at very cheap rates in past years. Thousands of tons of this cheap food supply should be made available to the public—and the assistance of the Royal Indian Navy, and utilisation of all their suitable craft, should be made possible in order to achieve this. Sir, I support the Bill.

Mr. H. N. Banerjee (Secretary, Commonwealth Relations Department): Sir, I would not have got up to encroach on the valuable time of this House, but I was rather taken unawares after a late lunch yesterday when I was told by our vigilant Government Whip that my Honourable friend Seth Govind Das who unfortunately is not present here at the moment thought fit to use the Finance Bill as a stick to hit my Department with. I rather expected Sir, that particularly in view of the economic war on which we are about to embark, my Honourable friend would vote the sinews of war for our Honourable Finance Member without uttering a word. I say this, Sir, particularly because, thanks mainly to the energy and persistence of my Honourable friend, the subject of the interests of Indians overseas has been discussed quite threadbare at the present session of the House. I recall, Sir, that there have been two adjournment motions, and a longish preliminary discussion when the Honourable the President was pleased to allow on an adjournment motion which was subsequently disallowed and a very large number of questions including a good few short notice questions from my Honourable friend himself. I think, Sir, in the course of these discussions I have placed enough material before the House to enable the House to judge what exactly the present Government have been able to do for safeguarding the interests of Indians overseas. I think, Sir, I have made out very amply that the only effective weapon open to us, namely, strong protests and representations has been used by us, every time there has been any effort in any part of the Commonwealth to prejudice the position of Indians. I expected some appreciation of all that the Government have done, and account of which I have given the House in the course of these discussions. I do feel that the charge of imbecility is not justified. I should say, if I may, that it is most ungenerous, if not unfair. In dealing with the question of Indians overseas, Sir, it is perhaps not realised that these problems are very old. Indian immigration into overseas countries started nearly a century ago. We have a great deal of bad legacy to tackle. There is no magic wand with which we can evolve solutions of these problems overnight. Sir, it is easy enough to carry out implicitly and automatically the suggestions made by the public for improving the position of our countrymen abroad, but our countrymen often forget that these Indians are settled down irrevocably in those lands and the Government of the day whatever may be its composition is to bear a continuing obligation and responsibility for the welfare of these Indians. The Government must therefore weigh very carefully the implications of any measures advocated by the public. That, Sir, always means time. We have got to ascertain the possible repercussions of any retaliatory action taken by us on the local Indian community. That again,

Sir, takes time. My Honourable friend wanted to know whether we are delaying the recall of the High Commissioner with a view to enabling him to make a start in passive resistance. Talking merely as a historian and I hope these words would be noted, I feel that my Honourable friend could not have made much allowance for the sentiments of his countrymen in South Africa. He lost sight of the obvious historical fact that passive resistance was a South African Indian invention and therefore if our countrymen do have occasion to use that weapon, they would not look for my Honourable friend's guidance. Sir, I have said that so far we have always used betimes the weapons available to us. My Honourable friend has not suggested any other weapon which might be effective immediately and which is open to us to use. I said the other day that this is a matter in respect of which there is a great deal of unanimity between the Government of the country and the public; and if that is admitted I think it stands to reason that some discretion must be allowed to Government, dissatisfied as the House may be with its composition, to determine the nature and pace of further action to be taken in dealing with this matter. We have only wanted time; we have never said that the High Commissioner would not be recalled. We have taken, such measures as we thought were timely and we can assure the House that we shall take further measures. These measures will be taken to record our maximum protest against the action of the South African Government. I should like to know from the Honourable Member what other really effective measures he suggests. I think Government have done all that they could do in the circumstances of the case.

I will now deal with one or two points of detail to which the Honourable Member referred. There are three grievances of Indians in East Africa. I gave full details of these grievances and of the action taken by this Government for remedying them, in the course of the adjournment motion. My Honourable friend seemed to suggest that in dealing with the new proposal for the inter-territorial reorganisation of the East African colonies we had taken a line rather contrary to the views of the Indian community there. That is not a fact. We had taken care to ascertain the views of the Indian community and the line that we have taken is quite in keeping with the stand that they have taken. The Indian community generally approve of this measure in principle and have agreed to support it subject to reserving their right to have modifications made in details. Apart from that, my Honourable friend himself knows that the Indian community in East Africa is not so utterly helpless as elsewhere. There they have Legislative Councils, they have representation in the Legislative Councils, and even in the Executive Council of Kenya there is an Indian member. I may even inform the House that our countrymen in that part of the Commonwealth rather resent our seeking to spoon-feed them, and they have often told us that they are able to stand on their own legs and look after themselves and the mother country need not worry so much about their future. In any case we have done all we could. The fact that there has not been sufficient response to our representations does not show that there has been any lack of vigilance on our part. There is no permanent remedy against the evils flowing from the colour bar and there will be none until and unless international opinion finally and effectively penalises colour bar. Therefore, for a cent per cent, remedy of the grievances of our countrymen in areas where they are labouring under the evils of colour bar we will have to wait for the future. As for ourselves we are keeping all these grievances alive. We protest and make our representations and, as our recent action indicates, we will take firmer measures and we shall go on keeping these grievances alive until the time is reached when we shall perhaps be in a better position to make more effective protests or perhaps our protests and representations will carry much greater weight. Short of that we have done all we could and, if I may say so, even when the composition of this Government changes it will be found that there is nothing else to be done in the immediate future.

Sri A. Karunakara Menon (West Coast and Nilgiris: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, it is with some diffidence that I attempt to speak on the Finance Bill. Not only am I new to an adventure of this kind, but I have to confess that I am not a financier or even a good accountant. The appeal of the Finance Member to judge his budget proposals on their merits and not to be rejected on political grounds urged me to examine the extent to which this House had power to direct the expenditure of its national income for the benefit of this country. The total expenditure for 1946-47 is estimated to be 355.71 crores. Of this defence expenditure absorbs Rs. 248.77 crores and the Assembly has no control over this. Detailed civil estimates come to Rs. 111.94 crores. The disparity between the military and civil estimates is by itself sufficient to take away the breath of a patriotic Indian. Now taking the total civil estimate by itself, what do we find? I find that the votable expenditure comes to 68 crores and odd. A large percentage of this votable expenditure will be found to have been taken up by salaries, pay of establishments and other items. The grain left out of the chaff is very small. How can an Indian, a representative of the people, in such circumstances reject politics in judging the budget? The administrative structure as existing today is too expensive for the poverty-stricken population. The British interests are more cared for than the Indian interests. People have no share in the administration.

I am prepared to concede that the budget to some extent has tried to patronise the industrialists and attempted the expansion of Indian industries. But the poor agriculturist has been neglected. Beyond stating in the speech that preparatory works of various kinds have been put in hand (such as the establishment of a Central Electrical Board, an Irrigation and Waterways Board, etc.), no concrete steps to help the agricultural prosperity of the country have been outlined in the budget. Seventy-five per cent of the population of the country are dependent on agriculture. Still in the 150 years of British rule in India it has not been attempted to make India self-sufficient with regard to food and other primary products. The Government was interested only to secure exportable surplus of raw materials (like jute, cotton, groundnuts, etc.), and neglected the production of food. We are suffering the consequence of that policy, viz., the constant recurring famines which carry all the evils like poverty, squalor, ill-health and under-nourishment mentioned by the Finance Member in his budget speech. There is no use blaming the people for this state of affairs in the country today. Only the State with all its resources can utilise and plan the utilisation of all our agricultural resources. Government should have foreseen the famines and spent money on a lavish scales on irrigation, wells, tanks and also on manures. Given manure and water our people will produce food even on rocks. The Central Government should have taken the responsibility in the matter for measures to supply water and manure and not left it primarily as a matter for private enterprise. The primary charge on the Central Revenues should have been the claims of agriculture.

I do not know why the Government is afraid of launching a policy of nationalisation of land and agricultural production. Agricultural production has to be converted into a public utility service. At least it is high time to make some attempt in the line of collective and co-operative farms suited to the conditions of our country. Economic self-sufficiency should be our aim. Instead of leaving the main task to the provinces, the Central Government should have taken charge of a greater sphere of agricultural policy than it is doing today. Instead of feeling themselves satisfied with researches and the power to deal with animal and plant diseases, the Central Government ought to have widened its outlook and powers and dealt with the agricultural problems more directly than it is doing today. The Government has still to do a good deal for the people in matters like malaria, soil-erosion, land reclamation, forest conservation, etc. Now on account of war, forests have been denuded of their trees. Afforestation should be an important item to be taken up in the coming years in the interests of our country.

Food problem is, as all know, intimately connected with agriculture. Lack of food articles produces famine. Famine is intimately connected with pestilence and revolution, as links in a chain. Americans are eating 64 ccs. of various kinds of foods in America as against 12 ozs. in India by Indians. Now that the famine threatens the country, the Government and the people have begun to come closer together to combat it. But until the foreign Government is replaced by an Indian Government and identity between the people and Government is established, it is in vain to hope for the fullest results that we all like to achieve. I am familiar with and I am hearing from my friends at home about the manner in which the food administration is carried on in those parts. There is no desire on the part of either the Provincial or the district administrators to get out of the red-tapism to which they are slaves. Inefficiency and corruption are rampant everywhere. The middleman is allowed to exploit the people. District administrators know that these middlemen can make huge profits and therefore appoint these middlemen from among their favourites to procure food. They are reluctant to give the business of procurement and distribution to co-operative societies and other public agencies. The wholesale dealers are purchasing paddy at Rs. 1/5/- per para, a local measure, and they sell it at Rs. 1/13/-. The profit is exorbitant. Per para, on an average not more than four annas cost has to be incurred by the wholesale purchasers. Formerly per bag of rice, the profit obtained before ration was introduced was one anna. Now it is Rs. 1/4/-. Another complaint is about the wholesale removal of paddy from the villages where they are grown, and those villages being supplied with inferior and rotten paddy instead. This takes away all interest that cultivators have in growing paddy. The Government is also reluctant to take leading non-officials into their confidence. At this time of 'Grow More Food' campaign, the Government should supply seeds, manures, cattle and cattle-feed at reasonable prices even bearing the transport charges and a portion of the price themselves. The Government is unmindful of these matters because they are not the producers of food but are only procurers and distributors through their own agents. None of these difficulties will arise if production of food also is undertaken by the Government.

Now coming to another matter—betelnuts. This is a subject, Sir, which is creating a stir in my constituency, Malabar and South Canara, and that is due to the continuance of the excise duty on betelnuts. It is refreshing to find that the Finance Member has admitted that the grower has to bear the excise duty himself and is not able to transfer it on to the consumer. Once that position is granted, the abolition of the duty should follow. For the same grower ought not to be compelled to pay both land revenue and excise duty for the same agricultural produce. It is not correct to say that any reduction in the excise duty will not benefit the growers but will go to fill the pockets of the wholesale dealers. The persons that will be really benefited will be the growers and the consumers and not the wholesale dealers. The growers are extremely thankful to the Finance Member for the increase in the duty on the imported betelnuts. It will undoubtedly help in arresting the further drop in prices. But it is wrong to contend that the increase proposed with respect to import duty will be able to meet the high cost of production that the growers have to meet, leaving sufficient profit to pay the excise duty. It is satisfactory to note that the peculiar position of betelnut growers has been taken note of by the Finance Member with respect to their existing lack of marketing facilities and poor bargaining capacities. The best way to assure the growers will be placing the betelnuts on a basis similar to that of coconuts. An Indian Betelnut Committee Act should be passed for the improvement and development of the cultivation, marketing and utilization of betelnuts in India. The same machinery that is now working for the coconut interest could be entrusted to look after the betelnut interest also. This will give not only relief to the growers but enable them to secure a proper price for their produce. It is not unwillingness to pay but incapacity to pay, that stands in the way of the betelnuts growers paying this duty. Secure them proper price and they will not mind to pay the duty to the Government. Anyway, the present circumstances demand the abolition of the cess or at least suspension.

I do not want to deal at length with the vexatious and oppressive manner in which the excise rules are administered, because I am hopeful that the Honourable the Finance Member will eventually abolish the tax. Most of these growers are illiterate peasants, owing less than an acre. Then there is the injustice of excise duty being charged on fresh betelnuts at six annas per hundred with husks. This I know is not evidently intended by the Government, but still it is there and should be put an end to.

That is all that I have to say.

Captain Syed Abid Hussain (North-West Punjab: Muhammadan): Sir, as I stand in this House amidst this quiet and calm atmosphere, the grandeur and the splendour of the Assembly Hall gives me a feeling of contentment and satisfaction and I begin to feel as if I am living in a country which is very well off and perhaps full of contentment. But just as I peep outside, I find the picture of a totally different state of affairs, I see thousands of poor, naked, and destitutes crying for a cloth to cover and clamouring for bread to eat. Such is the real picture of the inhabitants of this sub-continent which is naturally gifted with boundless resources the parallel of which would be quite difficult to find in this world. This sub-continent which has become the fortune of millions abroad leaves her, or I should say is made to leave her, own sons and daughters starving and dying. For the wealth and riches of India there are countless sharers: some as rulers, some as sympathisers, some as advisers, some as traders, and some as mere friends. But when death takes its toll, then it is only the poor Indian who shares it. I would not have the least grudge even to the man-wrought Bengal famine taking the lives of millions of my countrymen if even a handful of foreigners had also sealed their fates with us.

Mr. T. C. Chapman-Mortimer: On a point of order. I do not want to interrupt but there is not a single member of the front bench in the House.

Mr. B. R. Sen (Secretary, Food Department): I am listening on behalf of the Food Department.

Mr. Deputy President: I think there ought to be some Member from the Finance Department. I suppose, Sir John Sheehy is watching on behalf of the Finance Department.

Captain Syed Abid Hussain: Perhaps they would prefer reading their criticism in the news-papers rather than listen to it in the House. So, we are alone to be the sufferers and that is the reason why 400 millions are yearning and crying for their independence. If we were masters of ourselves such calamities would not be met with such a cold indifference. Today we are faced with another famine more severe than the Bengal one. Things I believe have never been too easy since the Bengal famine but the Government has only been taking half-hearted steps in the direction of remedying the troubles. A twelfth-hour effort could not have produced results which would meet our requirements and the Honourable the Food Member's gesture of flying to America, and Europe, although we appreciate it, still, it does not satisfy us, in spite of the fact that we on our part have extended our wholehearted co-operation to it. As for the efforts on the part of the Governments both Central and Provincial to do all that was possible to mobilise their resources to produce the maximum of foodstuffs, I can very well say how that effort has been going on in my province of the Punjab. Thousands of acres of culturable land are lying waste which could be brought under cultivation because of the water also being available. Schemes had been contemplated to increase the percentage of the water supply on certain canals which owing to the War could not be carried out. The war has ended, the famine is there, but the schemes are still shelved by the Punjab Government, surely that is no gesture of an "all-out effort" to stop and avert that catastrophe with which India is being faced. The Punjab Government in the recent years had given some extra water supply shoots to the Agriculturists to grow more food. But recently, I hear that even that concession has been withdrawn. Will not that reflect adversely on the effort of the Government of India to avert this famine? No inducement whatsoever is offered to the grower for growing more food crops rather than what we call the money crops, which obviously fetch him more money and he is always inclined to grow these in preference to the food crops. It is the duty of the Government to come forward and create such circumstances that the grower becomes naturally inclined to grow more of those crops which would give us more foodstuffs. If the Government were to show complete indifference I am sure the grower would not by himself divert his attention to growing foodstuffs. In this connection Government could have very well given an inducement to the grower by curtailing the water rates or compensating him in some other suitable manner which could be very easily manipulated. This is the condition of indifference of the Government towards a country whose main occupation is Agriculture. The old system of agriculture continues. No modern methods are introduced. No machineries are brought in. No impetus is afforded by the Government to the Agriculturist to revolutionise the agricultural methods in the country. And we are allowed to carry on as we did 50 years ago. What have the Agricultural Department done to improve the standards of Indian agriculture? It is not the Agricultural Department alone, to be blamed. I feel that the Government in all its Departments always prefers status quo to any drastic measures of improvement. On my father's marriage two trains were running up and down between Malakwae and Shorekot Road thirty-six years ago and the Railway had not found it necessary, in spite of the public demand and the changed circumstances to add anything to its thirty-six years' old programme. This is just one small example out of the millions to show the way in which the Government continues to role on slowly without diverting its attention to take some quick, drastic and comprehensive steps to improve the conditions of the country. Unfortunately things are very peculiar in this country. With the beginning of the War, all progress came to a standstill. Every contemplated scheme was shelved and things began to deteriorate. Whenever any question was asked the pet reply of the Government was that owing to the war nothing could be done; The war emergency did not allow any progress to be made and so on. Now that the war has ended there will emerge various Resettlement problems, Postwar plans will crop up and so will come out the development schemes. All these of course will take so long that, by the time any material progress is made we will find ourselves again pushed into another war. What about the other countries I ask. What about Europe? How rapidly do they recover the lost ground and how quickly do they make progress? Why cannot India do the same?

Look at the Army of 2½ million men that was raised in this country during the war. Many of us were killed, many of us were wounded and many of us were taken prisoners. We fought for freedom, and we were asked to fight for liberty. We saved the British Empire. But what is the result? To be kept under the British autocratic rule and to be denied the liberty that we fought for? To be left without jobs, without money and without any land? The Government has done nothing to preserve land for the returning soldiers. On the other hand, government has been just throwing away lands. I know well of the Punjab. Under the guise of War effort land has been given to those agents of the Unionist Party who had done absolutely no War effort but had only acted as tools in the hands of Unionists in the recent elections. (Cries: Shame shame). For example most of the candidates contesting on Unionist tickets were helped with grants of a rectangle or two to compensate for their efforts in the election campaigns. I only wish that the Governor of the Punjab Sir Bertrand Glancy, had paid more attention to this primary job of his, rather than muddle himself in the party politics of the Punjab.

[Captain Syed Abid Hussain]

Mr. Deputy President: In this House the Honourable Member cannot criticise the Governors of Provinces.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: This Governor is not above party politics. He takes active interest.

Capt. Syed Abid Hussain: I close my speech with this sentence. The Government has unfortunately forgotten its real job. They are seen busy yet doing nothing—nothing that would solve our problems, nothing that would take us ahead, just as the Persian couplet says:

*"Khish-i-awwal chun nehad memâr Kaj.
Tâ Surayyâ mi rawad diwâr Kaj."*

The real trouble lies at the foundation, and when the fundamental stone is improperly laid sure the building could never stand erect.

Sreejut Rohini Kumar Choudhuri (Assam Valley: Non-Muhammadan): Mr. Deputy President, I come from a 'backward' province and so I would request you to exercise greater forbearance when you apply brakes to my speech, more forbearance than what is ordinarily shown to a maiden speech.

Coming though as I do from a backward province I was shocked to hear what my Honourable friend, the Secretary for Commonwealth Relations said just now. He seemed to be quite satisfied with what is being done by this Government so far as the Indians in South Africa are concerned. I really wondered if there could be even today an Indian gentleman who could speak in that strain, an Indian gentleman who has had a fair amount of education. Does he realise that if the economic sanctions had been applied last year to South Africa things would have been quite different from what are today? Even today in spite of the demand throughout the country for the recall of the High Commissioner for India in South Africa, he seems to justify the retention of that officer there. If the European members of the Treasury Benches really mean to quit India, my advice to this Honourable gentleman, the Secretary for Commonwealth Relations is that he should also accompany his confreres and go to the country where the service to which he belongs was born.

Sir, I belong to a backward province in the sense that the people of my province do not know how to exploit others. They are exploited and they submit to this exploitation meekly and they submit also to all the injustice which they receive from different quarters, the Government of India and elsewhere, very meekly. That is why I say that in these days such a province cannot but be called a backward province. Take for instance the Otto Neimeyer Award. From the province of Assam a huge amount is taken by the Government of India by a special excise duty on petrol but what do we get in return? We get only a comparatively small sum a mere pittance of 30 lakhs. There is nothing sacrosanct about that Neimeyer award. That province bore the brunt of the war and in spite of that the Government of India has not thought fit to increase the amount of the Award. That is a great injustice which would remain to the Credit of the Government of India for ever.

There is another very glaring piece of injustice. That is the treatment meted out to Assam so far as excise duty on betelnuts is concerned. Apart from the general question that this excise duty should have been done away with now, because it was a sort of war measure, now that the war is over there is absolutely no justification for levying the excise duty at all. During the war there was no income derived from the import duty on betelnuts from other countries. Now import has again begun to flow and the import duty is being levied and the Honourable the Finance Member says that he expects as much as a crore and a half from this import duty. After that, Sir, can anybody justify the Government of India for continuing that tax? It is also very well known that this is a sort of a direct tax on the agriculturists who already pay for occupation of their lands and for the yield of this particular crop by way of land revenue. It is generally the poor people, the poor and middle class people, who consume the betelnuts. Why have these poor people been subjected to this taxation? So far as the case of Assam goes, the position is still worse and still more unjustifiable. The tax was intended to be levied on cured betelnut only. In Assam the betelnut is never cured either for the purpose of consumption or for purposes of trade. That is a fact very well known. In reply to a question put by Mr. Jinaraja Hedge in the last session, I think on the 19th of March 1945, the Honourable the Finance Member's predecessor stated to this effect—He said that fresh betelnuts in the husk which were sold by the growers directly to the consumers and which had not undergone any sort of drying or water preservation are not chargeable to duty, and he added that curing involves either the process of drying or preservation in water. None of these processes are adopted so far as betelnuts in Assam are concerned. Sir, the poor and the middle class people consume a good quantity of betelnut. Mostly the betelnut grown in that Province is sold in the Province itself and there is very little export. Our people consume a good quantity of betelnut not only for their ordinary use but also on ceremonial occasions. The invitations to marriage and dinners have to be always sent—not in the ordinary way of sending an invitation letter but they have to be invited with at least about a dozen betelnuts and pan also has to be sent at the time of invitation. So, this tax has fallen heavily on the poor peasants in our country. Betelnuts are never grown in an extensive manner. They are to be found in the compounds of each peasant proprietor. They are not grown or cultivated for commercial purposes or for purposes of sale. It is only the surplus that is sent to the local markets. In spite of all this this tax has been levied. And, what is worse and what cannot be defended at all is this, that the tax is being levied in an arbitrary manner. Because the betelnuts there are not husked, it had been arbitrarily fixed that 100 betelnuts are equivalent to 3 lbs, that is that 100 betelnuts in husk are equivalent to 3 lbs. for which 6 annas is to be paid as the excise duty. But if these betelnuts were actually cured and weighed in would be found that the weight is only 1.5 lbs. So, the betelnut growers in Assam have got to pay three times what other taxpayers in other provinces of India where betelnut is used as supari, pay. Since there it is never used as supari they have to pay for their husks because the calculation has been made in that way, that hundred betelnuts with the husk is equivalent to 3 lbs. although the kernel, if weighed, will weigh only 1.5 lbs. So, a serious injustice has been done to Assam in the matter of the levy of the betelnut tax. The Honourable the Finance Member realises all this. He had admitted all this. But he says that he can make amends for all the injustice that he has done to the betelnut growers by giving out a dole of Rs. 3 lakhs for the purpose of helping them in the process of curing as well as in the process of marketing. I do not know about other Provinces, but those two concessions will not help Assam at all because the habit of curing or the habit of eating cured betelnut is not in vogue in that Province. As much as Rs. 3 to 4 lakhs are being levied from Assam on this head. If, instead of wasting money in the so-called process of curing of betelnuts or in helping to get a better market, if the Honourable the Finance Member exempt the Province of Assam entirely from payment of the betelnut tax in view of all these circumstances, then I think real relief would be given which the Province really deserves.

Mr. Deputy President: The Honourable Member has two minutes more.

Sreejut Rohini Kumar Choudhuri: I would draw the attention of the Government to the exploitation in our Province. We have by 'we' I mean the people of the Province of Assam—no great industry of our own. We have not got in that Province even one textile mill. We have not got there a sugar factory. We have not got there a jute mill, or even we have not got any hydro-electric scheme functioning on a large scale. We thought that with the advent of the new Government the process of nationalisation of these industries will be taken in hand and in that case the now backwardness in the Province will be converted into advantage. Honourable Members of this House may have heard of the tea industry in Assam. That tea industry is practically the monopoly of the Europeans. Honourable Members of this House may have heard of the oil fields of Assam. That again is owned by a Scotch Company. Honourable Members of this House may have heard of the coal mines in Assam. That is again held by Englishmen. The only Indian company, the Assam-Bengal Cement Company which made some profit during the war is also a company not belonging to the Province itself. In these circumstances what we should have expected a sympathetic Government to do was to introduce the process of nationalisation of these industries in Assam so that we could get some advantage. What do we actually find? Instead of doing that, because that would have involved a loss of income-tax to the Government of India, the Honourable the Finance Member has thought it more to the interest of the Government of India to allow grants and concessions to the business magnates to relieve them of the Excess Profits Tax and to encourage them to organize those business themselves in my Province. If those businesses are organised by business magnates belonging to places other than India or belonging to places other than Assam, the people of the Province will get very little out of them. The Honourable Finance Member thinks that by adopting this process, he will be encouraging business people to start business in different places which will give employment to our unemployed youths. . . .

[Sreejut Rohini Kumar Choudhuri]

Mr. Deputy President: The Honourable Member's time is up.

Sreejut Rohini Kumar Choudhuri: But experience has shown that this is entirely wrong. What employment do we get in the various tea gardens and in the oil fields and other business? The highest salary which our young men get there is a nominal maximum of Rs. 50 a month to a burra babu or Rs. 30 to a moharrar and the others who may be matriculates get about 20 or 25 rupees. This is the salary they get. As my time is up, I finish by asking the Honourable Finance Member to consider these two aspects at least—nationalisation of industries in the Province of Assam in those industries which have not been already started there, and the absolute exemption of the Province from the excise duty on betel nut.

Choudury Md. Abid Hussain (Bhagalpur Division: Muhammadan): Sir, the war has ended and now we are passing in peace time, but our budget has no colour of peace time as it has not relaxed the burdens which were placed on the larger section of the population—the poor. It has done something no doubt for the rich. The poor people of this country were awaiting for the days when the war will come to an end and bring to them happiness and prosperity. They were waiting in the hope that the days were coming when most of the burdens by which they helped in winning the war will be lightened, but their hopes were shattered when no measures were taken for the betterment of their conditions. No doubt, as shown in the Bill, there is a deficit of 44 crores of rupees and the Finance Member has tried to balance it. But in adopting the ways and means for balancing the budget, he has not taken into consideration the condition of the country and the capacity of the people to pay. He should have considered these points and also the fact whether the larger section of the people are able to pay any more. I am of the opinion that the taxes should be levied upon those people who are able to pay and relief should be given to those who deserve it; and these are the poor people who were hard hit when they are labouring hard to live. But what we see is that the Honourable Member has done just the opposite. He has stretched his helping hand to the rich people who never care for the poor.

The wealth of a country depends upon the power of production. Therefore it is desirable that we should increase this power of production and this power of production depends upon two important factors, education and health. Now, if you see the health side of the country, you will find that according to the Bhore Committee Report, the public health is at a very low level, and this is evidenced by the wide prevalence of diseases and the high rates of mortality. We find that the rate of mortality among infants and children under ten years and of women are greatest in this country; and if we go into details we will find that every year about 100 million people suffer from malaria and more than 2 millions die from this disease. The next dangerous disease is tuberculosis by which five lakhs of people die every year. Cholera, small-pox, plague, etc. also take a heavy toll from this country every year. The cause of deaths by these diseases are many. In villages the people are unable to live healthily. They live in an unhygienic way; and the sanitation is at a very low level in almost all the parts of the country. There is no easy availability of health protection in villages. There is inadequate nutrition and this reduces the vitality of the people who easily come under the clutches of these diseases. The food consumed by the poor is insufficient and mostly adulterated. Therefore the Government should take these points into consideration and improve the health and sanitary conditions in the country.

Not only this. There must be another consideration also. The need for aid in these matters is greater for the poor than for the rich. Rich people can afford to take care of themselves. But it is the duty of the Government to give all facilities and all possible help, medical and other, without charging the poor anything. The state funds should be used in the health services of the nation.

There is no doubt that there is lack of co-operation of the people in the maintenance of their own health; but no change is possible without a change in the economic and educational condition of the people. There is necessity for increase of doctors, nurses, and hospitals; but these cannot reform the country side unless effective measures are taken to raise the standard of life of the people and eradicate illiteracy throughout the country. Co-operation of the people is required, and it is not possible to secure this co-operation if the people cannot afford to buy health services and cannot appreciate the value of maintaining health.

Thus an improvement in agricultural methods is necessary to augment the income from land and also the provision of adequate educational facilities is necessary in order to appreciate the value of maintaining health. Education should be given to all and the next step is to raise the standard of living.

Now, I come to the next point. Though the war has ended, we find that there is a heavy sum provided in the budget on the defence side. If we are going to spend so much money on the defence side, I submit that Indians should get their share in the higher posts in the defence services. This is the time when Government should come forward and help Indians to become officers in the army and in other connected departments on the highest ranks. I have not heard till now that Indians who are working in the Army Department or the General Headquarters are less competent or less qualified in comparison with Europeans. Therefore the number of Indian officers should be increased and Government should do all in their power to shake off the blame that they are only for British and they are exploiting the Indians.

In Indianising the Departments Government should see that all the communities are well represented in those services and Muslims must be given 50 per cent. share as they form the bulk of the martial races.

Now, I come to the food problems of the country. The food condition is very acute now, but the Food Department has done nothing to improve the condition of the country. The Food department has no doubt sent a delegation to the foreign Countries for begging, but they have not thought to improve the condition in the country itself. They have not improved the methods of agriculture, though there are very valuable schemes on paper to improve agricultural methods by implementing scientific methods. There are schemes of improved seeds and manures etc. but they are not helping the agriculturists with those things. The agriculturists cannot buy the scientific implements, because they are poor and they do not get sufficient price for the products of the land by which they can buy. Sometimes they do not get so much which they spend for seed, for ploughing, for reaping etc.

[Choudury Md. Abid Hussain]

I now come to another point. Government has always thought about the irrigation of those lands where nature does not provide sufficient rains to produce foodgrains but the Government never cares about the drainage system of water where it is overflowed. In the Bihar province, the northern part of Bhagalpur Division is always washed away by the flood water of Kosi river. This Kosi river every year does very great harm to the lands which are good for the paddy crops. If the Government at the Centre takes control of the drainage system of the Kosi river, I think a great part of the food problem will be solved. The controlled water of this Kosi river can also be used for producing electricity which will be useful for the industry of the country.

Now, I come to the Industries and Supplies Department. Yesterday my friend Mr. Nauman referred to the maldistribution of cloth to the Muslim merchants all over India. On the question of scarcity of cloth I fail to understand why this condition should continue now when the Government Defence Department has released these mills for the supply of the civil population. I think the mills are exporting their products to the countries outside India and this should be absolutely prohibited. I would like to impress on Government that the cloth situation cannot be improved unless these mills are strictly forbidden to make export outside India.

Shri D. P. Karmarkar (Bombay Southern Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I rise to oppose the consideration of the Finance Bill. The Honourable the Finance Member in the speech which he made when he introduced his budget proposals said and hoped that this year the proposals would not be thrown out on political grounds. As one might discover easily there has been a special attempt this time made by the irresponsible executive of this country to defend itself before the eyes of the world.

His Excellency the Viceroy in the course of his address to this House also paid a compliment to them. He said:

"My much maligned colleagues have served India well and have had her true interests at heart."—(An Honourable Member on the Treasury Benches: Hear, hear.)—"I believe that any new Government is likely to adopt many of their ideas. They are all, without exception, ready and willing to hand over (I hope they will cheer this statement also) their responsibilities at the earliest moment to their successors to whom they will wish good fortune and godspeed in their difficult but vital task."

The Honourable the Leader of the House gave very special compliments in the course of a debate that took place some days ago to his colleagues and especially his Indian colleagues. It seems that the present executive council on the eve of its departure from office, is very anxious to feel that at last it has delivered the goods by the country. The position taken up by the party to which I have the honour and privilege to belong is that of throwing out the consideration of the Finance Bill. The House wants to make it clear to India and to the world that of the many things that could be said about the present executive, the prominent and the chief one is this, that the present executive rule of this country has never commanded and has ceased to command the confidence of the country. During the later years of its administration and especially during war times, the executive has thought fit, as I had occasion to remark in my earlier speech on the budget, to put forward before the world a lot of publicity regarding what it has done. Much has been said during the earlier stages of this debate about the deficiencies of the present system of Government and the budget itself. The Honourable the Finance Member does, not, in my humble opinion, need any elucidation regarding the broad defects in his own budget. The principal one is that it is an Imperialistic budget put forward for Imperialistic ends. Secondly, this budget has admittedly done very little for the poor. When I spoke earlier I was under a delusion that the budget had done some good for the richer classes of this country. I am very much indebted to the Honourable Member for having disillusioned me on that point also and now I stand convinced that whereas the Budget had done nothing for the poor man the Finance Member on his own admission has done nothing for the richer classes also. If the budget stood condemned partially earlier, it now stands condemned wholesale.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: What about the Middle classes?

Shri D. P. Karmarkar: There was a middle class once in this country, of which we were all proud but thanks to the administration which the Honourable the Finance Member represents that middle class has vanished and we now find that the rich are richer and the poor poorer and there happens to be no middle class in this country.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: To which class does the Honourable Member belong? Rich or poor?

Shri D. P. Karmarkar: I do not know exactly to which class I belong but there is a class in this House and outside which has taken up the task of fighting this administration and I have the privilege of belonging to that class.

To pursue the point I was about to make, the present executive of the country has forfeited the confidence of the country as a whole. When we say that, the other side feels impatient about it and feels that we are the aggressors and the people to be criticised. The Honourable the Finance Member in his reply to the earlier discussion said that many brickbats had been hurled at him. He said it metaphorically. He has the good luck of being the Finance Member of a country which is known and which is famous for its patience. If he were a Finance Member in some other country which was also as slave country, I am sure it would not be wordy brickbats but real brickbats that would have been hurled at him. Thanks to the nation and thanks to Mahatma Gandhi, the Honourable Member has had to face only wordy brickbats which he can face on a pleasant afternoon and which he can forget next morning as the occupant of the Treasury Benches of an irresponsible Government.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: The Honourable Member has thrown quite a number of brickbats.

Shri D. P. Karmarkar: Now, Sir, of course I must confess that I was one of the Members who threw one of those wordy brickbats against him. For once I want him to be serious, though he may not say so on the floor of the House. Mr. Attlee in his recent speech in the House of Commons has drawn our attention to the problems which confront us. In my opinion the most urgent and the most serious problem in India is that of the British rule. He referred to the minority problem, he referred to the States problem and latterly he mentioned the services problem too. He said:

"We are mindful too of the position of the services and of the men who have done great service to India. India should be sensible of the responsibility she has to those who have served her."

Then he makes another significant statement:

"Government which takes over the assets of the Government will also take over the liabilities. That again is a point to be dealt with later on."

One question that arose in my mind when I read the speech, when I came to examine the financial position, the political position, the moral position, and every possible position of the present executive, what do I find? What are the assets which they have created for us? The first asset of their rule for the last 150 years is they have impoverished my country as no other rule has done in any other part of the world. They have made us semistarved, a large population actually starving. On this point there came out during the course of the debate on another subject a very significant admission from the Benches opposite. While we were discussing about the reparations that were due from ex-enemy countries, we were given a short account of the speech made by a servant of this Government at a conference abroad: This is what Mr. H. V. R. Iyengar said:

"But I suggest that the conference should go behind these figures and consider what is the human sacrifice involved in this expenditure. India is one of the poorest countries in the world with an appallingly low standard of living. She has for generations been underfed, underclothed and underhoused. Whereas in economically advanced countries the war has meant that luxuries have had to be eliminated, in India it has meant that people who already were undernourished had still less to eat, and people already underclothed still less to wear. In other words while in the one case it was the sacrifice, relatively speaking of luxuries, in our case it has meant a sacrifice of the barest essentials of life."

Then again speaking about the deaths in the Bengal famine he said:

"But the lowest figure, which has been adopted recently by the official commission of inquiry appointed by the Government of India is 1½ millions".

But according to our estimates, this tragedy has cost us more than 3 millions. So, Sir, the Bengal famine is our next asset which the present executive has offered for the future generations of Indians. The next part of the asset lies in the people who are still to die. One would wonder at the incompetency of the Government which a fortnight earlier assessed food shortage at three million tons, raised this figure of 3 millions as if by a magic wand to six millions all at once. The Honourable gentlemen opposite are very responsible people, they have got a whole army of statisticians at their beck and call, and it is surprising that they should behave in such an irresponsible manner as not even to have correct figures about food shortage in the country when millions are likely to die due to direct cause of this food shortage. This is all about the food condition, which as I said is another asset of ours left by the British rule. An Honourable Member who preceded me drew pointed attention to the health conditions of this country. That is where we should find another asset of British rule. As my Honourable friend pointed out, more than 10 million men suffer from malaria, that is our next asset; about 2.5 million suffer from tuberculosis, a million men die from cholera, another million from small pox. That is our next asset which this irresponsible executive is handing over as a legacy to the new Government. That is not all. They have not been partial. They have been impartial to the people who live in India and who have got to live in India. Their rule has affected even our cattle position. There is great shortage of cattle and consequently of milk for our children. That is our next problem to be tackled. The live stock is in a state of semi-starvation. The Treasury Benches can satisfy themselves that here again they have been impartial, they have not only rendered human beings semi-starved, they have also rendered the cattle useless. Mr. Pepperall has summarised the cattle-problem. "Milk production is very low, human population is increasing, diseases take a great toll of lives of cattle".

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Does the Honourable Member mean that the executive is responsible for an increase of population of the country?

Shri D. P. Karmarkar: I do not know whether I should take the Honourable Member very seriously. He knows it possibly as a measure of experience, and possibly he has heard that increase of population is more consistent with the poverty of a country, because the richer the man, the less the number of children he has. The poorer the man, the larger the number of children he has. Owing to this fact, India's population has risen by leaps and bounds, but it has not increased its prosperity, as it has in England. In England there is less and less population because it is grabbing more and more of the fortunes of other countries in the world.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: The population also is going up. Shri D. P. Karmarkar: No wonder that 150 years of British rule is producing more and more children. We are proud of our children and I am sure our children would look after you if it comes to that. Now, Sir, what does the Report of Mr. Pepperall, the Milk Marketing Adviser to the Government of India say. According to this report we find that not only the human element in the country but also the cattle element has been neglected. That is our next asset left by the British rule. What shall I say of the legacy left as a result of the war which was ostensibly waged for our purposes, but really for their own benefit. On account of war, we have spent something like 1,650 crores over and above the pre-war expenditure, during these eight years. Then there are the sterling balances which represent the price of articles supplied by this country during the war to England. They are kind enough to say they will deal with it later on. Let us be content with this promise. They might as well pass an emergency ordinance and make these sterling balances vanish. If they had done so, nothing more would have been heard about it. The sterling balances are there. Our assets are there in the blood bank. But we are not able to realise anything. That is another legacy left to us as a result of this war. That is our next asset bequeathed to us by the rule of this irresponsible executive. These are observations which unhappily this executive is not able to appreciate. We feel very strongly that under the iron rule of this executive we are growing in slavery which has never been exemplified for its brutality, for its unkindliness, for its sacrilege against the wishes of the people of this country. I hardly find, Sir, a proper word in the English vocabulary which can really express our deep anguish and poignant feelings against the British rule in this country. That is a constitutional anomaly which exists here. We find the Treasury Benches, according to their own statement, responsible to a Government 6,000 miles away, they are subordinate branch of another Government. They say that this Government is not responsible to this section of the House, nor to that section, nor to any other section. We go on passing cut motions, we censure Government through Adjournment Motions, we throw out the Finance Bill.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Will you? Let us see.

Shri D. P. Karmarkar: We carried two cut motions. The cuts were not restored. That raised some hope in our mind. We hoped that at least when the demand for Executive Council was thrown out, the Honourable the Leader of the House would come forward before us and make a sporting offer saying, "now that you have passed this censure motion and refused supplies for the Executive Council, we shall go out, we shall make room for you. We shall make a recommendation to the Viceroy that even during this session, this executive will be replaced by another responsible to the House". In view of the fact that they have to go out tomorrow, if not today, in view of that, I expected the Honourable the Leader of the House to have set an example and told the Viceroy, "look here, we do want to vacate. We do not want to be sitting in an undemocratic manner on these benches when we really do not command the confidence of the majority of the people, when we definitely know we are not needed and have ceased to command any confidence of the country". But that is not to be. And not only that but when Mahatma Gandhi made a sporting offer that if the food situation was to be met one of the remedies that he would suggest was that the present irresponsible executive must walk out and another Executive Council responsible to the various parties in the House should come in, there was no response to it. There are of course offers of all kinds. We ourselves often make the same kind of offer. If after we have finished our dinner a guest comes at midnight—in these rigid ration days—and we know he has had no food for 48 hours, we just ask him, "Have you had your meals? Otherwise go and have your meals." That is not an offer at all. If they were sufficiently serious there were plenty of ways open to them. Even at this time of crisis, the like of which this country has not seen before, they are not going to relinquish. Many words are hurled across the House that this is their last budget; but there again we find in the speech of the Prime Minister that other things have got to be settled, minority questions have got to be settled, the States question has to be settled, the service question has to be settled, etc. Then we shall also hear that the commercial question will have to be settled,—questions which we know will not be settled so long as they have their feet on Indian soil. They make an offer of self-government. I am not here to spoil the atmosphere in the House and outside it; I am not competent to do that and I am not authorised by my party to make any statement here which would prejudice the present atmosphere. In view of the fact that for the time being sweet words and good words like those used by my Honourable friends opposite should be used, I will say, Amen; let this be the last budget and let this be the last speech of the Finance Member and let this be the last House of an India which is at present a slave and which is promised liberty in the future.

Now, Sir, coming to the budget itself, the Finance Member at one stage said that perhaps this budget has been psychologically defective. Now I wonder whether the budget was psychologically defective or the framer of the budget was himself psychologically defective. I do not mean any insult or offence, but he is born and bred in a system which does not know a slave nation's feelings. And when I examine the whole thing, I find that it does not care for the masses of the country nor, according to his own admission, for the classes of the country. It is not due to any psychological defect in the frame of the budget itself but it is a psychological defect of the system which he is representing.

When I was speaking last time on planning I did not have any inside information about the workings of the Department. Now on that same day we had a statement from a gentleman who is competent to speak better and with greater authority. I refer to Professor Vakil who after resigning from the Planning Department had the goodness to tell us why he left it. In an interview at Bombay he said, what we knew from the outset, that:

"The atmosphere for economic planning of the right type did not exist because the outlook of the bureaucracy had not yet changed. By training and habit most of the bureaucratic men were not suited for the work of planning and they were, as a rule, not willing to take expert economic advice when it was offered. They wanted to sit in judgment on things they did not understand. Unfortunately that comprehensive grasp of things which is essential for the success of planning and above all the necessary vision and determination to accomplish the task on national lines were lacking among those who were in charge of the work."

That has not come from an "irresponsible" Congressman but from a responsible economist whom the Government of India appointed for the Planning Department.

The last reason why we want to throw out the Finance Bill is this, that the British Government during the long course of 150 years has not yet shed its real character. The character that it has had during a century and a half is principally—and shorn of all pretence—a type of military occupation. We have got this House where elected Members are speaking and Honourable Members opposite are replying, and everything else goes on. But as emergencies show and as events also show this present executive has continued to have its true self. It is essentially intended for the military occupation of the country. I will not take this House to the days of the Mutiny, I shall not also refer to the Jallianwala Bagh, nor even to the 1942 days when every kind of force that could be used physically against Congressmen, against every man, woman or child who rose against this Government in 1942 was used. I will not refer to that, but I will just refer to the recent happenings in the country, the various mob demonstrations which unfortunately have taken a character which we on this side of the House do not approve. The events at Bombay and Calcutta and many other places have demonstrated beyond measure that the present administration has not at all lost its original character. I had tabled short notice question regarding the happenings in Bombay and one of the questions was whether it was a fact that innocent men, women and children had been killed during the firing in Bombay. The short notice question was not accepted by the War Secretary but a reply was given to me which I was authorised to make any use of, and I was told that:

"It is not true that only British troops were used. My reports are that the firing was very carefully controlled and was in accordance with the instructions which are that firing should, as far as possible, be directed at ringleaders."

What were the facts in Bombay? If the Leader of the House were to find out the real facts he would find just a measure of the tragedy which British rule represents in India, that a lot of women have been injured and a few children have been killed. And women and children were at no time in Bombay the ringleaders of the hostile demonstrations. My information is that not knowing the order of the military and the police, there was a party of ladies standing in front of a ration shop, and a squad of military came there and thought that it was an unlawful assembly; and the ladies were fired at and shot in cold blood. That is my information and I am open to correction by the other side. But the essential fact remains that the other side which represents the executive in this country has still retained not only its irresponsible character but its essential character as an army of occupation in this country. And it was very good of His Excellency the Governor General to have assured us, if assurance was necessary, that his much maligned colleagues were prepared to leave their places as soon as the new Government comes in. There is no other alternative. They will have to leave the country some day or the other; there is no mercy or courtesy shown to us that the present irresponsible executive are prepared to leave their benches. If they are not prepared to leave the time will soon come when they will find discretion the better part of valour and they will themselves be in a position to pursue the instruction which I understand was given in the critical days of 1942. The Honourable Leader of the House was once pleased to retort, "Who won the war? Did we win the war or did the Congress win the war?" My answer is that neither the Government nor the Congress won the war; it was the atom bomb. Their essential strength is of a kind that is humorously described in our remotest villages where they say that the one strategy that the British understand is the strategy of retreat. That is the strategy which they advised their own civil officers in 1942. That is the strategy which they will have to follow if with good grace and in good time they are not prepared to leave India. The country has been patient but even in a slave country there is a limit to patience.

Sir, I oppose the Finance Bill.

Sri T. V. Satakopachari (Tanjore cum Trichinopoly: Non-Muhammadian Rural): Sir, I really would not like to stand in the shoes of the Honourable Finance Member at the moment, and in spite of all my courage I am afraid it is very difficult for any one like me to do so. For the past two or three days my Honourable friend has been listening to various kinds of carping criticisms and still preserves a very genial attitude. (An Honourable Member: only outwardly). Not only outwardly, I am sure it is an inward buoying up that he has got. But he seems to me like a raw diamond; by the cuts that he receives, he improves his facets and becomes more and more valuable.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Becomes an asset!

Sri T. V. Satakopachari: Sir, I feel it is very difficult for any person to be a Member of an irresponsible Government,—in the sense of constitutionally irresponsible I mean,—it is difficult for any human being to be a nut or a bold in such a machinery and not feel embarrassed at every turn. But at the same time I feel, even with the limitations that such an irresponsible Government has, it is quite possible to frame a budget or at least to plan in a way as to improve the opportunities given to them. It is true that the Budget is framed with a sense of one who has got soon to leave the scene. I believe this has been the psychological background which has actuated my Honourable friend the Finance Member to look out for a few financial stunts here and there, to put in one or two palliative measures to please a portion of the rich and to try to look as if he has helped the poor—to make gestures here and gestures there, because he knows or probably he wants us to believe that he has no permanent interest in the matter. That I believe has been a drawback in the Budget and so it is that we see a budget which does not fulfil the expectations of a nation, a nation which is awaking. Whereas I agree with most of the things said on this by my Honourable friend, Mr. Karmarkar, I am afraid the psychological defect is not with the gentlemen opposite or with the great people to whom they belong, or even the system of administration. They are not a set of physical defects or psychological defects or mental defects. They have their heads rightly screwed on; they know their job. But at the same time the setting in which they are placed is so difficult I think that it will be a great achievement if really they produce a budget or a plan worthy of the consideration of the nation's representatives. I wished to preface my remarks over the Budget with these observations, because I feel that in the situation in which the Finance Member has been placed, it will be almost next to impossible to satisfy the demands or the aspirations of the nation. The nation's representatives ought to be there. When and where or how is a matter which is still hanging in the balance. If I say that the Budget is defective or, as a matter of fact, if I say that any particular matter or any work is not up to the mark I always feel this difficulty: whether I should say not only where it is defective or how it is defective, but also how the defect can be cured, how the particular work should be made better. But at the same time I feel, as Dr. Johnson has said, you may criticize a table even if you are not a carpenter and cannot make a table. So it is not necessary that I should be able to suggest how the defects can be cured. That is the refuge I have, and I shall take shelter behind it. That is why I say that I would not feel comfortable in the Chair of the Finance Member, but I do feel very comfortable sitting here or rather standing at a safe distance and criticizing him. As my Honourable friend, Mr. Karmarkar said, we are or we may be trained people in indulging in wordy warfare, but I am afraid they have got stronger answers to all these things. In some occasions I have faced some of those things in my place, and I hate getting used to facing them here.

It has been said by my Honourable friends on this side of the House that the budget makes the rich richer and the poor, poorer. Much has been said on the subject, but I wonder whether when it makes the rich richer, it really makes the Indian rich richer. There also I have my doubts. What I mean is this. It gives chances to the rich man as such to get richer—that portion of the rich men which belongs to Indians is not given the opportunity that it ought to be given, that is to say the Indian rich man is not made richer. That is what I feel about it. If the Indian rich man has to be made richer, then he should be given opportunities of industrialising the country, getting capital goods from outside, and of improving the standard of living of the people in this country. You know the Bombay Plan which was prepared by some of our industrialists. They represent the rich classes of this country, I believe.

The Honourable Sir Archibald: Indians.

Sri T. V. Satakopachari: Yes, Indians. I am concentrating my attention on Indians and my criticism is that the Budget which is said to make the rich richer, really makes the non-Indian richer, but not the Indian richer. And so I say that the Bombay Plan of Indian industrialists has not received any attention from the Finance Member and no help as such has been rendered to them. The gesture of doing away with the Excess Profits Tax is, I think, a mere gesture.

Of course as a psychological gesture we want such gestures to exist; but we don't want the E. P. T. to go; we want the Excess Profits Tax to remain, we don't want it to be abolished. Again abolishing the Excess Profits Tax alone is really not a great help to the rich people of India. If a portion of the sterling balances were made available either in kind or by multilateral transactions, that would certainly have kept them rich. But that is not the case. We are in a very nebulous stage.

Mr. Deputy President: Order, order. It is now 5 O'clock. The Honourable Member may continue his speech tomorrow.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Friday, the 22nd March, 1946.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

Friday, the 22nd March, 1946

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. President (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

MEMBER SWORN:

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts, C.I.E., I.C.S., M.L.A. (Government of India: Nominated Official).

Mr. President: Questions. Question No. 1159. Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar will put this question on behalf of Mr. Manu Subedar.

STARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

(a) ORAL ANSWERS

REPEAL OF EXCESS PROFITS TAX ORDINANCE AND CONTINUATION OF WAR LEVIES

1159. *Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (on behalf of Mr. Manu Subedar):

(a) What was the intention of the Honourable the Finance Member in the repeal of sections 3, 4 and 5 of the Excess Profits Tax Ordinance, 1943, and of the whole of the Excess Profits Tax (Amendment) Ordinance, 1944?

(b) Why did Government not publish a communique from the Finance Department for the guidance of joint stock enterprise in India and of investors who are primarily concerned?

(c) What are the intentions of Government with regard to the charging sections in the pre-existing laws relating to this levy?

(d) What is the financial justification for Government to retain old deposits and to seek for new deposits after the official closing of the war on the 1st of April, 1946?

(e) Have Government examined the effect of the continuation of war levies on the general economy of the country? If so, do they propose to lay on the table of the House a summarised report of such examination?

Mr. B. C. A. Cook: (a) Sections 3, 4, and 5 of the Excess Profits Tax Ordinance, 1943 and the whole of the Excess Profits Tax (Amendment) Ordinance, 1944, having served their purpose of amending the Excess Profits Tax Act, 1940, were superfluous and were repealed.

(b) In view of the clear exposition of the position in section 3(a) of Ordinance No. I of 1946, Government did not consider any communique necessary. It came to light, however, that mis-conceptions did exist and a Press Note was issued by the Central Board of Revenue on 30th January, 1946. In the result, it might have been better had a press note accompanied the Ordinance.

(c) The charging sections of the Excess Profits Tax Act, 1940, still remain in operation.

(d) The main object was to sterilise a substantial portion of the "hot money" created by an abnormally high level of industrial profits which was a perpetual potential source of mischief. That object still continues, as is evidenced by the speculative boom which was developing in Bombay just prior to the promulgation of the demonetisation Ordinance.

(e) I would refer the Honourable Member to the Budget Speech.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: On a point of order, Sir. I thought you ruled that if a Member was not present in the House, his question should be asked at the end.

Mr. President: I am sorry. I missed that point. I must thank the Honourable the Finance Member for pointing this out.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: As questions were few, I thought you altered the procedure.

Mr. President: I must admit my mistake.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Then I withdraw the question*.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Then the Government withdraws the answer.

COLLECTION UNDER EXCESS PROFITS TAX LEVY.

1160. Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (on behalf of Mr. Manu Subedar):

(a) Will the Honourable the Finance Member please state how much money was collected under the Excess Profits Tax levy (i) as tax payment, and (ii) as deposit for each financial period after the tax was levied?

(b) What is the estimated amount of arrears not so far collected?

(c) What is the reason for heavy arrears in the collection of income-tax, super-tax and Excess Profits Tax?

(d) How many officers have Government got in each Province for the collection of income-tax as compared with the number in 1938-39?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: (a) I lay on the table two statements (marked I and II) giving the information required.

(b) I take it that the Honourable Member desires to know the amount of excess profits tax that could have been collected if the pending assessments had also been completed. On a very rough computation the amount may be taken at about Rs. 49 crores on the 1st April, 1945. The deposits on this amount would be about Rs. 13 crores.

(c) Various reasons such as—

(1) increase in the number of assesseees,
(2) slow progress of assessment work due to the necessity for closer scrutiny of accounts and intensive investigation arising from the enormous rise in taxable income, black market transactions and wide-spread malpractices designed to conceal profits.

(3) until recently difficulties of war time communication with countries outside India (including the U. K.) and consequent delay in getting information regarding foreign business of assesseees,

(4) delay in the submission of returns of income by assesseees and the adjournments required by them,

(5) assessment of partners having to await completion of assessments of the various firms in which they have shares,

(6) cases kept pending until decisions on the points in issue have been given by the Appellate authorities and the High Courts, and

(7) shortage of assessing officers and other staff.

(d) I lay on the table a statement (marked III) showing the position. The total number of officers has increased from 263 in 1938-39 to 553 in 1945-46.

*These questions have, however, been printed serially in these Debates.—Ed. of D.

LEVY OF INCOME-TAX IN INDIAN STATES ACCORDING TO BRITISH INDIA SCALE 1161. *Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (on behalf of Mr. Manu Subedar):

(a) Will the Honourable the Finance Member please state in how many Indian States income-tax is levied on the same scale as in the British India? and in how many States it is levied in a modified form?

(b) What is the position of enterprises which are located in the Indian States, but managed from the British India?

(c) With how many States is there reciprocal arrangement for the avoidance of double taxation?

(d) Has there been any recent modification of this arrangement?

(e) Have Government lent the services of any officers from the Finance Department to any Indian States for setting up or for reorganizing such Indian State administrations?

Mr. B. C. A. Cook: (a) In eight Indian States income-tax (including surcharge) is levied on the same scale as in British India; and in 65 States on a scale different from and lower than that in British India.

(b) Where management in British India makes the enterprise resident in British India, the enterprise is precisely in the same position as an enterprise resident in British India; but whether resident or not there is no liability to tax in respect of any income accruing or arising within an Indian State, unless such income is received in or brought into British India or is assessable under section 42 of the Income-Tax Act.

(c) 49.

(d) Yes. The basis of relief which was 50:50 has been changed to a proportionate basis, that is each unit makes a refund proportionate to the rate of tax it levies, and the aggregate relief in British India under arrangements with the United Kingdom, Ceylon and other Indian States is restricted to one half of the British Indian rate of tax.

(e) Yes; a few officials of the Income-tax Departments have been lent to certain states for appointment in their income-tax administrations.

SERVICE CONDITIONS OF COUNTESS OF CARLISLE AND DISBANDMENT OF W. A. C. (I)

1162. *Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (on behalf of Mr. Manu Subedar):

(a) Will the War Secretary please state on what terms and conditions the Countess of Carlisle has come to this country, what the tenure of her office is, what her emolument is and when she is going back?

(b) Has the vacancy created by the resignation of Col. Miss Ranga Rao been filled, and by whom?

(c) In view of the disbandment of the WAC(I) recently announced, by what stages and in what manner will the services of the officers of the WAC(I) be dispensed with?

(d) What concrete plans have been drawn up for the resettlement of WAC(I) in civilian employment, and what percentage of civilian jobs has been set apart for them in the Central and Provincial Governments?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) The Countess of Carlisle was appointed in 1944 to the post of Director of the WAC(I) on the recommendation of H. M. G. who had been asked by the Government of India to secure the services of an experienced Auxiliary Territorial Service officer to assist in the reorganisation of the WAC(I). She was commissioned as a Senior Commander in 1938. Her appointment was to last as long as her services were required. She receives pay of Rs. 900 a month together with free accommodation and messing.

Her appointment will come to an end when the disbandment of the Corps has proceeded so far that the responsibilities of the Director are reduced.

(b) The vacancy created by the resignation of Miss Ranga Rao has not been filled.

(c) Officers of the WAC(I) will be released in order of their Age and Service Groups or in accordance with the length of their deferment if applicable. The rate of disbandment will be about 2 groups per month.

(d) Personnel of the Women's Service are entitled to and are being given resettlement facilities equally with male ranks.

Pre-release training schemes are already in operation for WAC(I) personnel mainly in Educational and domestic science subjects. A course to interest women in civil welfare work will open shortly.

There is at every Regional Employment Exchange a special women's section to deal with the resettlement of women and to maintain contact with organisations dealing in women's employment and welfare.

Ex-personnel of the women's Services are normally eligible for Government employment along with war service candidates. A certain number of vacancies have been reserved wholly for women particularly in the teaching and nursing professions. Government also anticipate being able to employ a number of Ex-service women in a clerical capacity.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: With reference to part (b) of his reply will the Honourable Member state why the vacancy created by the resignation of Miss Ranga Rao has not been filled up? Is it because Government are afraid that they will have to appoint an Indian who may be as critical as Miss Ranga Rao of Government's policy in this respect?

Mr. P. Mason: That is not the reason. There was no person available who seemed suitable for the job.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Will the Honourable Member please say in what way no Indian is suitable? What are the qualifications for this post? Does the Honourable Member mean that there is not available one Indian lady to succeed Miss Ranga Rao?

Mr. P. Mason: The qualifications are contained in my answer to a question, the number of which I cannot remember, sometime ago.

Shrimati Ammu Swaminadhan: The Countess of Carlisle was brought for organising the WAC(I). But they are going to disband the WAC(I). May I know for how long the Countess of Carlisle is to be kept on here?

Mr. P. Mason: She was brought here to organise the Corps, as I explained, in 1944, the reasons being that she had six years Commissioned experience with the Auxiliary Territorial Service and there was no one in India who had six years service or who could have had six years experience of a Women's Corps. As to how long she is going to remain, as I explained in answer to another question, until we can run the Corps with someone of a lower rank than her present rank of Chief Controller.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: What was her qualification before she gained that six years experience, except being a Countess?

Mr. P. Mason: Very considerable organising ability.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Who discovered those abilities, Sir?

Mr. P. Mason: The question should be addressed to His Majesty's Government.

Sri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar: May I know how long it will take for the complete disbandment of the Corps?

Mr. P. Mason: As I have repeatedly said, until April, 1947.

Sri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar: May I know in what stages it is going to be disbanded?

Mr. P. Mason: As I have repeatedly explained, by successive stages, and, as I explained just now, two groups per month.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Will the Honourable Member then consider the question of appointing a successor to Col. Miss Ranga Rao, if we are in a position to recommend a suitable Indian lady?

Mr. P. Mason: We might. But I think it is improbable as we are reducing in every direction.

ENQUIRY ABOUT RESIGNATIONS OF W. A. C. (I) PERSONNEL AND MEMBERS OF A. T. S.

1163. *Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (on behalf of Mr. Manu Subedar):

(a) Will the War Secretary please state whether several Indian officers and personnel of WAC(I) have resigned as a protest against colour prejudice and favouritism in the WAC(I), and why no enquiry has been instituted in the complaints made by them?

(b) If there have been departmental reports on the subject, will Government lay copies of such reports on the table of the House?

(c) How many Indian officers have resigned since the 1st September, 1945, and for what reasons?

(d) Why are the members of the Auxiliary Territorial Service coming out to India, how many of them have come, what ranks are they holding what are their emoluments, and when is it intended to send them back?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) As I have repeatedly stated, Yes, Sir; and as I have recently agreed this is one of the questions which will be discussed at the next meeting of the Defence Consultative Committee.

(b) There are no formal reports on this subject. The noting and decisions on the question are privileged.

(c) As I have repeatedly stated, the following Indian Officers have tendered their resignations from the WAC(I) on the grounds of alleged discrimination within the Corps:

J/Comd.	Henry	5th October.
2/Officer	Thomas	6th October.
J/Comd.	Shreenivassaa	6th October.
4/Officer	Bonner	23rd October.
J/Comd.	Wahid	5th December.

In addition, J/Comd. Wasi was permitted to resign her commission on marriage, in accordance with the general rule.

(d) As I have repeatedly explained, Members of the Auxiliary Territorial Service came to India as normal reinforcements, the auxiliaries replacing male British Other Ranks, and the Officers, who are all either staff or technically trained, either replacing male British officers or helping in the training of WAC(I). Details of the numbers, ranks and emoluments are laid on the table. There are none coming now; the total numbers never exceeded 51 officers and 121 auxiliaries, and they are going back as fast as they can be replaced.

FILLING UP OF PERMANENT COMMISSIONS BY INDIANS IN R. I. N.

1164. *Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: (a) Will the War Secretary please state whether it is a fact that His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has ordered that no more Europeans be recruited in the Royal Indian Navy?

(b) Is it a fact that sixty permanent Commissions are being offered to Indians?

(c) Is it a fact that forty permanent Commissions are being offered to Europeans?

(d) In view of the assurances given by Government, that Army is being Indianised, why do Government offer such a large number of permanent Commissions to Europeans?

(e) Are Government aware that competent Indian officers are available for permanent Commission, but they have been offered much less number of permanent Commissions than they are entitled to?

Mr. P. Mason: (a), (b), (c), (d) and (e). Since the post-war size of the R. I. N. has not yet been determined, Government are at present offering only a small number of permanent commissions; but as soon as the size is known it is hoped that it will be possible to offer more. The policy regarding Indianisation is that after the present batch of 106 permanent commissions, there will be no more permanent commissions for Europeans. In the 106 which are now being offered, however, there are 40 for British officers of the R. I. N. Reserves, i.e., temporary officers serving for the war period only. I understand that it is unlikely that all these will be filled. The remaining 66 are for Indians. The reason for including 40 for Europeans in the case of the Navy alone of the three Services, is because of the greater difficulty of obtaining seconded officers in required numbers from the Royal Navy than from the other British services; and the fact that there are not sufficient Indian officers available of the seniority required who are suitable and who have the particular qualifications.

I should explain that Naval officers are required to specialise to a very considerable extent, and this measure is meant to tide over the gap until the period when a steady flow of trained and qualified Indian officers in all branches is available.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Have any special steps been taken to give the necessary technical training to Indian officers so that they may be able to take up these positions now being offered to these 40 Englishmen within a year or two?

Mr. P. Mason: I am not quite sure what the Honourable Member means by special steps. Steps are continually being taken to that end.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: What do you mean by sufficient seniority? Do I take it that these Indians who have been recruited as Sub-Lieutenants will not be given the necessary technical training so that they may become Majors in order to hold these special jobs?

How do the Government expect ever to be able to replace these 40 Englishmen, if they are to follow the usual methods of promotion and recruitment?

Mr. P. Mason: They will replace them as soon as they acquire the necessary training and seniority.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: Am I to understand that out of 2,000 temporary commissioned officers, there are no one to replace these 40 Europeans?

Mr. P. Mason: The whole question is rather difficult and complicated because in the first place of the question of age, and in the second place of specialist branches. If you have an appointment of a Torpedo lieutenant, it is no good trying to fill it by a man who is a Communications Lieutenant Commander and it is for that reason that 40 only have been decided upon as necessary.

Mr. M. Asaf Ali: Is it a fact that there were about 2,500 officers who were offered commissions during the war, and all but 66 of these are now being demobilised? May I know what exactly the Honourable Member means by qualifications of seniority?

Are there or are there not among those who have been demobilised, officers who have got the necessary seniority which is being made the excuse in the case of these 40 posts which have been reserved for being filled up by Europeans?

Mr. P. Mason: This is rather a lengthy and complicated question. I should explain that in the first place there are a large number of officers who do not wish to remain in service and as far as possible, they are being released. Of the remainder quite a number are not really suitable for peace time commissions. There are also a number who would be suitable if they were of the ages which are required, and there are also others, who would be suitable if they happened to be in the branch in which the vacancy exists. Finally, as I have explained before, the figure 66 is only a beginning. I hope very much, that it may be very considerably increased in the near future.

Mr. M. Asaf Ali: As regards the first part of the answer, I should like to know why these officers do not want to remain in service? Have you tried to find out why these officers want to be released? Is it due to the fact that the conditions in the services are not suitable and if conditions were improved they would like to remain on?

Mr. P. Mason: I have not made any special enquiry on this question although it is one which is always being considered. I would answer the first part by saying that in the British services of course a very much higher percentage wish to be demobilised and to get away to peace time employment. I think it is not unfair to suppose that the very much smaller percentage of Indian officers who wish to go may wish to do so for the same reason.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: But with regard to those Indians who wish to go has any effort been made to offer them these posts and to ascertain whether they would like to accept them?

Mr. P. Mason: It is not a matter of posts; it is a matter of number of officers in a cadre.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is it not the case that these Indian officers who wish to be demobilised have not been offered these posts and therefore as a matter of discontent or protest they would like to leave the service?

Mr. P. Mason: No, Sir. We do not walk round offering each man a post and asking them whether they would like to have this or that post. We make an inquiry as to how many of them want to apply for permanent commissions and so many said they did not want them.

TRANSFER OF OFFICERS FROM BRITISH ROYAL NAVY AND INDIAN NAVY

1165. *Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: (a) Will the War Secretary please state whether it is a fact that services of 500 officers from the British Royal Navy are being asked for?

(b) Are Government aware that there are about 2,000 Indian officers in the Royal Indian Navy?

(c) Are Government aware that these Indian officers managed and ran the Indian Navy during the war as efficiently as the Royal Navy?

(d) If the answers to (a) to (c) are in the affirmative, why is it that 500 officers from the Royal British Navy are being transferred or their services are being lent to the Indian Navy?

(e) Are Government aware that the services of 500 officers are being asked only for the purpose of retaining the surplus officers of the Royal Navy and putting burden on the Indian exchequer?

Mr. P. Mason: (a), (b), (c), (d) and (e). The temporary loan of 270 (not 500) Commissioned officers and Warrant officers on secondment from the Royal Navy has been asked for, but it is not at all certain that the Admiralty will agree to provide them.

It is a fact that considerable numbers of British and Indian officers are being released from the R. I. N. Reserves. Those Indian officers who are suitable for permanent commissions, are qualified for a branch in which vacancies exist, and are of the required seniority and age will be offered regular commissions; but it is considered that the presence of a number of officers of the Royal Navy on temporary loan will for some time to come be of great value to the Service.

The total number of officers available and suitable falls short of the number required for the post-war Navy. Additions made through Cadet-entry which has been increased will take three to four years for full training. In the meantime, secondment offers the best solution for filling up temporary vacancies without prejudicing the Government of India's policy of progressive Indianisation.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: Is it because we have not got suitable officers to fill up these vacancies that officers are being asked for from the Royal Navy?

Mr. P. Mason: We are doing very much the same here as was done in the case of the Australian and Canadian Navy where they borrowed a large number of officers and ratings from the Royal Navy to begin with, when they first started expanding more rapidly after the last war. And later on in continuation of that process there was a continual exchange of officers between the two navies, which I hope will take place in this case too.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: I do not understand my Honourable friend. When we are releasing about 2,000 officers who are on emergency commissions, what is the special need now to have a loan of 200 officers from the Royal Navy?

Mr. P. Mason: For one thing, they are nearly all very young indeed. The Indian officers are nearly all of the same age,—between about 18 and 28.

Mr. Frank R. Anthony: Apart from the 200 that are being asked for, how many European officers have been already seconded for the R. I. N.?

Mr. P. Mason: A very small number, may be about 20.

Mr. Frank R. Anthony: How many permanent commissioned Indian officers are there in the R. I. N.?

Mr. P. Mason: I should require notice of that question.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: When, as the Honourable Member said, Indians could not be taken into these positions because they are not of the required age and seniority, why is it that Government wish to offer permanent commissions to Englishmen and thus prevent these Indians when they reach the required age and proficiency from getting these positions?

Mr. P. Mason: We would really have preferred secondment rather than offering permanent commissions. That is why we tried to get about 270 by secondment and 40 by permanent commissions. We would have preferred to get them by secondment and thus have no permanent commissions, which I understand is what the Honourable Member wants to avoid. But there are considerable difficulties in the naval service in the way of secondment. As I said, it is very doubtful whether the Admiralty will agree to secondment at all, and as regards the 40 whom we want to give permanent commissions I do not think we shall get all of them either.

COMMAND OF SHIPS TO INDIAN OFFICERS OF R. I. N.

1166. *Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: Will the War Secretary please state:

(a) how many Indian officers of the Royal Indian Navy are in command of ships;

(b) whether Government are aware that officers of the Royal Indian Naval Reserve are as well qualified as any British officer;

(c) if the answer to (b) is in the affirmative the reasons that the command of ships is not being given to the Indian officers;

(d) if Government are aware that officers of the Royal Indian Navy are also as well qualified as any British officer; and

(e) if so, why command of ships is not being given to them?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) 21 HMI Ships out of a total of 50 in commission on 1st March, 1946, are commanded by Indian officers.

(b) and (d). Yes, Sir.

(c) Indian officers are appointed to command HMI Ships when their rank and seniority qualify them to do so in exactly the same manner as British officers.

(e) Does not arise.

COMPOSITION AND OFFICERS' STRENGTH AT NAVAL HEADQUARTERS

1167. *Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: (a) Will the War Secretary please state the officers' strength at the Naval Headquarters?

(b) How many of them are Hindus, Muslims, Europeans and Anglo-Indians?

(c) What is the number of European officers holding staff jobs other than ciphers and other stooge jobs?

(d) What is the number of Indian officers holding staff jobs other than ciphers and other stooge jobs?

(e) How many Muslims occupy staff jobs other than ciphers and other stooge jobs?

(f) Are Government aware that the education of the average Indian officer is in comparison not less but rather more than his European contemporary?

(g) Is it a fact that thirty permanent Commissions are being offered to the Indian Naval Headquarters staff? If so, how many of them are Muslims and Hindus?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) 96.

(b) Hindus 15, Muslims 8, Europeans 50, Anglo-Indians 13, other Indian Communities 10.

(c), (d) and (e). There is no caste system among appointments, Sir, and none are officially scheduled as stooge jobs. I assume, however, that the Honourable Member refers by this term to posts in cyphers, as Secretaries, and posts to which staff pay is not attached, though I do not accept the implication that these posts do not provide a very valuable field for service. Excluding posts of this nature, the figures are Europeans 48, Indians 28, Muslims 4.

(f) That, Sir, is a matter of opinion.

(g) Certainly not, Sir. No permanent commissions are reserved for officers serving at Naval Headquarters.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: What is meant by these stooge jobs?

Mr. P. Mason: I have already explained that that is not a term which we use. It is a term that I can only attribute to the questioner.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Are there any Indians in the cypher section?

Mr. P. Mason: If the Honourable Member will take the trouble to subtract the figures that I gave in the one context from those I gave in the other, he will see that they are almost all Indians.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: With reference to parts (e) and (g) of the question, may I know why the percentage of Muslims in these two branches is so low?

Mr. P. Mason: I am afraid I do not know myself.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Will Government make inquiries?

Mr. P. Mason: No, Sir.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is it a fact that all the responsible posts in the cypher branch are held by Europeans?

Mr. P. Mason: The figures I have given suggest that the posts in cypher are almost entirely Indian.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Then what is the reason for keeping so many Europeans in these different sections? There are 50 in one and 48 in another.

Mr. P. Mason: I am afraid the Honourable Member misunderstood the whole point of his friend's question.

DEMobilIZATION OF R. I. N. AND PLAN FOR RESETTLEMENT

1168. *Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: (a) Will the War Secretary please state if it is a fact that demobilization of the Royal Indian Navy is slow?

(b) Are Government aware that a lot of inconvenience is being caused to the ratings and that they have complained about it?

(c) Are Government proposing any plan for resettlement of the Royal Indian Navy ratings and officers?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) That, Sir, is a matter of opinion. Demobilisation from the Royal Indian Navy on 1st February, 1946, was 31.3 per cent. of the numbers borne on 1st October, 1945. It is actually the highest percentage of any service.

(b) Just as everyone wants more pay, there are some in every service who want early release; but until the recent mutiny, this did not seem to be a general complaint in the R. I. N. In fact there have been some complaints that demobilisation was too rapid.

(c) Yes, Sir. Resettlement plans for ex-service men are on an inter-Service basis and officers and ratings of the R. I. N. are entitled to the same facilities as other services.

PROMOTION AND STRENGTH OF INDIAN AND EUROPEAN OFFICERS IN R. I. N.

†1169. *Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: Will the War Secretary please state:

(a) the strength of the Indian officers in the Royal Indian Navy;

(b) the strength of the European officers in the Royal Indian Navy;

(c) how many Indian officers have been promoted from Lieutenants to Lieutenant Commanders and above these ranks and their percentage in accordance with their number;

(d) how many European officers have been promoted from Lieutenants to Lieutenant Commanders and their percentage in accordance with their number; and

(e) the reasons for promoting less number of Indian officers?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) The strength of the Indian officers in the Royal Indian Navy on 1st March, 1946—1,246.

(b) The strength of the European officers in the Royal Indian Navy on 1st March, 1946—722.

(c) Total number of Indian officers of the rank of Lieut.-Commander and above—59.

Percentage of Indian Officers promoted to Lieut. Commander—4.72.

(d) Total number of European officers of the rank of Lieut. Commander and above—224.

Percentage of European officers promoted to Lieut. Commander—31.02.

(e) The reasons why fewer Indian officers have been promoted are as follows:

The rules for accelerated promotion to the rank of Acting Lieut. Commander require that an officer should have attained the age of 30 and have completed a minimum of two years' service in the rank of Lieutenant. The Commissions of most Indian officers date from 1942 or later, and the average age of the Indian officer has been considerably below that of the European. These two factors have precluded the consideration of the majority of Indian officers for accelerated promotion above the rank of Lieutenant.

PROPOSAL FOR ABOLITION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT FOR POLITICAL PRISONERS

1170. *Seth Govind Das: Will the Honourable the Home Member please state:

(a) whether Government are aware of the Uruguayan proposal before the U.N.O. pleading for mercy for even the hated Nazi criminals;

(b) whether Government are aware that there is a widely prevailing feeling in this country also that the capital punishment should be abolished; and

(c) whether Government would consider the proposal for the abolition of capital punishment at least for the political prisoners?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: (a) I have seen a press report of the proposal.

(b) I have reason to believe that opinion on the subject in India is divided.

(c) The Government of India do not think it wise to abolish capital punishment for any type of crime for which that punishment is now provided.

LINGAYAT BATTALION IN INDIAN ARMY

1171. *Shri D. P. Karmarkar: Will the War Secretary be please to state:

(a) whether there is a unit in the Indian Army known as the Lingayat Battalion;

(b) when the Battalion was constituted, and why it was so named;

(c) the number of Lingayats (i) officers and (ii) other personnel, in the said unit;

(d) the number of Non-Lingayats—(i) officers and (ii) other personnel, in the said battalion;

(e) the reason for including Non-Lingayats in the Lingayat Battalion;

(f) the number of Lingayats who are included in other units of the Indian Army;

(g) the reason why they are not also included in the Lingayat Battalion; and

(h) whether it is a fact that clothing supplied to the members of the said unit is inadequate?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) Yes, Sir.

(b) This Battalion was raised on the 1st August, 1943, and was called the 'Lingayat Battalion' because the Lingayat community provided 75 per cent. of the battalion. The class composition of the battalion was changed to 100 per cent Lingayats on the 30th January, 1945, the Mahratta element of the battalion being left to waste out.

(c) and (d). The Battalion has nine officers. No record by classes is maintained of officers, and there is no particular reason to suppose any of them are Lingayats. Combatant V.C.Os. and O.Rs. total 878 of whom 745 are Lingayats and 133 'Others' (mostly Mahrattas).

(e) Because Lingayats were unable to provide infantry soldiers with sufficient length of service and experience for the V.C.O. and N.C.O. ranks, nor could the community find and maintained 800 trained infantry soldiers of any rank until recruiting had improved.

(f) Approximately 1,400.

(g) Because, Sir, an Army does not consist entirely of infantry and no one class can insist that all its recruits shall go to infantry.

(h) No, Sir. The scale of clothing is the same as for other Indian troops.

Mr. President: Yes, Mr. Saksena?

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: I would like to put some questions.

Mr. President: Has the Honourable Member got the authority?

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: I have not the authority; but they are very important.

Mr. President: Can he not point out any one particular question?

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: They are questions Nos. 1172 and 1173.

Mr. President: I believe the gentlemen are released from Jail.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Not Dr. Ram Manohar Lohia.

Mr. President: Is Dr. Lohia still in detention?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: Yes, Sir.

Mr. President: I will permit question No. 1173.

COMPLAINTS BY SARDAR SARDUL SINGH KAVEESHAH re JAIL CONDITIONS.

1172. *Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable the Home Member be pleased to state if his attention has been drawn to the statements given to the press by Sardar Sardul Singh Kaveeshar after his release regarding conditions in the jail, and if he proposes to make enquiries into the nature of the complaints made and take steps to bring the guilty to book and to obviate the repetition of such incidents?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I have read an A. P. I. message in the Press which mentions conditions in the Lahore Fort. The statements are either untrue or greatly exaggerated. I do not propose to institute any special enquiry.

ALLEGATIONS BY DR. RAM MANOHAR LOHIA re HIS TREATMENT IN PUNJAB JAIL

1173. *Shri Mohan Lal Saksena (on behalf of Shri Sri Prakasa): Will the Honourable the Home Member be pleased to state, with reference to his answers to various questions in this behalf, whether he has made any further enquiries into the allegations made by Dr. Ram Manohar Lohia regarding the treatment meted out to him while he was in jail in the Punjab, and what steps Government have taken in that connection?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I have myself questioned Mr. Lohia about his allegations. They are of such a nature that they cannot be verified and I do not propose to take any further action upon them.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Are they psychological? Are the complaints made by him psychological so that they cannot be verified?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I am afraid I do not understand the question and I have doubts of the seriousness of it.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Are his complaints of the mind that it is not possible for the Honourable Member to verify them or that they are based on facts?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I do not quite understand what my Honourable friend is after. I have spoken on this before in this House both in answer to questions and on other occasions and I have explained that the allegations are from their nature and from the circumstances of the time such that, I quite admit, it is not possible for Dr. Lohia to produce proof or corroboration of them.

Seth Govind Das: Will the Honourable Member let the House know what those allegations are, because we do not know what they are?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: They have been in the press.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Did he verify those allegations while meeting Dr. Lohia?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I have explained that it is not possible to verify them.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: After all the allegations we read about were of such a nature that they were definite and they could have been enquired into. I do not know how the Honourable Member says they could not be verified.

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: From the circumstances of the incidents which were alleged by Dr. Ram Manohar Lohia.

Shri Sarat Chandra Bose: Were the allegations he made to the Honourable the Home Member the same as those that appeared in the press?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: Practically.

Shri Sarat Chandra Bose: Will the Honourable Member please state how long he was detained in the Lahore Fort?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I cannot answer that without notice.

Shri D. P. Karmarkar: May I ask whether one of the allegations was that Dr. Lohia was kept continuously awake and was not that a complaint which the Honourable the Home Member could have easily verified?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: It was alleged by Dr. Lohia that for a time he was deprived of sleep.

Shri Sarat Chandra Bose: What was his statement regarding his being subjected to third degree methods during his detention in the Lahore Fort?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: It was a long statement. The gist of it had appeared in the press and I cannot reproduce it from memory.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: May I know whether he made any enquiries from those in charge of Lohia's custody that he was kept awake for any length of time?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I did not follow the question.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: I want to know whether after the statement of Dr. Lohia that he was kept awake for some time, did he make enquiries from the officers concerned, in whose custody he was, whether it was true?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: Yes, Sir, I did on my visit to the Lahore Fort and I tried to get to the bottom of the allegation.

Shri D. P. Karmarkar: Has the Honourable Member any ground to believe that Dr. Lohia's statements are false?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I cannot give a specific answer to that. It is a matter of Dr. Lohia's word against the contradiction of his allegations by officers concerned, and I must leave it at that.

Mr. M. R. Masani: Was the complaint made to the Honourable Member by Dr. Lohia identical with the complaint I am going to read from Dr. Lohia's letter to Prof. Laski:

"I was ill-treated in one way or another for four months; I was kept awake day after day, night after night, the longest single stretch running into ten days and when I resisted the police in their efforts to make me stand, they wheeled me round on my manacled hands on the matted floor."

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: Yes, Sir, more or less. I do not think, if I may say so, that in my conversation with Dr. Lohia, he was quite so picturesque as the description of the occurrences given in the statement.

Shri Sarat Chandra Bose: May I now whether the allegations made were examined by the Honourable Member or by any subordinate of his?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I questioned the officers in the Lahore Fort who were responsible for interrogation. I do not remember that Dr. Lohia has specified any particular officer.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Did the Honourable Member consider the question of bringing the matter into court for enquiry?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I do not know how that can be done.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable Member be pleased to state whether the allegations constitute an offence under the criminal law?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: They would.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: In that case did the Honourable Member consider the question of bringing the matter before a magistrate or judge for an enquiry?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: No, Sir.

Shri Sarat Chandra Bose: Is the Honourable Member prepared to agree to the appointment of a Committee of this House to go into the allegations made by Dr. Lohia and by other prisoners in the Lahore Fort?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I cannot answer as regards the other prisoners in the Lahore Fort. But as regards Dr. Lohia, I think the appointment of any such Committee would be quite infructuous.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Then what is the remedy for a prisoner in the position of Dr. Lohia who has been treated like that? Beyond making a complaint to the authorities, what other remedy could he have?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: Well, Sir, Dr. Ram Manohar Lohia did approach the Lahore High Court. I cannot from memory say whether it was once or twice. But he did present an application to the Lahore High Court and was, if my recollection is correct, heard.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Is it not a fact that immediately after Dr. Lohia's application came before the Lahore High Court, he was transferred to the United Provinces?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I must ask for notice of that. I am not certain. I do not think so.

LARGE SCALE PURCHASE BY GOVERNMENT OF COPIES OF London Times.

+1174 Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable Member for Information and Arts be pleased to state:

(a) if it is a fact that a large number of copies of the London Times (Daily Air Mail Edition) is purchased by Government;

(b) if so, the purpose for which these are purchased and the manner in which they are disposed of;

(c) if copies are distributed free to various officers of the Government of India; and

(d) the amount of money that Government spends for the purpose?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: (a) Hundred and four copies of the London Times are purchased.

(b) They are purchased for the use of certain officers of the Government of India and the Provincial Governments?

(c) Yes.

(d) The estimated expenditure during 1946-47 is Rs. 8,000.

'QUIT DELHI' ORDER SERVED ON PANDIT OM PRAKASH VAID.

+1175. Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable the Home Member be pleased to state:

(a) if it is a fact that Pandit Om Prakash Vaid, a medical practitioner of Ayurveda, was served with a notice to quit Delhi on or about the 20th February, 1946;

(b) if it is a fact that he had settled in Delhi as a Medical practitioner and was taking no part in politics; and

(c) if he was summoned again and again to the Chandni Chowk Kotwali Police Station, interrogated by the C. I. D. and asked to give any undertaking; if so, the reason for all this procedure, and why he was externed from Delhi?

+Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner being absent.

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: (a) and (c). No.

(b) Yes.

CHARGE AGAINST CH. RATIRAM OF SINGHWA VILLAGE IN DELHI PROVINCE.

1176. *Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava: (a) Will the Honourable the Home Member kindly state if Ch. Ratiram of Singhwa Village in the Province of Delhi is an absconding accused charged in connection with the occurrences of August, 1942?

(b) Was he proclaimed as an offender?

(c) Are any warrants of arrest still pending against him? If so, will Government consider the desirability of cancelling the warrants against him, in view of such warrants having been cancelled in respect of many persons similarly circumstanced?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: (a) No.

(b) Yes.

(c) No. The case against him was withdrawn on the 19th September, 1945.

PROPOSAL TO ABOLISH IMPORT DUTY ON SPRAYING MACHINERY

1177. *Mr. R. C. Morris: Will the Honourable the Finance Member please state whether it is proposed to abolish import duty on Spraying Machinery for agriculture, including power sprayers, rams and pumps?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Under item 72(8) of the Indian Customs Tariff spraying machines are exempt from duty.

It is not proposed to abolish the import duty on rams and pumps as they are not exclusively used for agricultural purposes. The question of reduction of duty on certain imported plant and machinery is, however, receiving Government's attention as I indicated in paragraph 42 of my Budget speech.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Does not this reduction apply to that portion of the machinery which will be used for spraying purposes?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: I have already said that under the Indian Customs Tariff spraying machines are exempt from duty.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: I am asking in regard to other machines.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Which other machines?

Prof. N. G. Ranga: The Honourable Member is thinking of reducing duty on rams and pumps. I am only suggesting whether this reduction applies only to those portions of it which will be used for the spraying machinery or for any other purpose.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: I did not know that a ram was used for spraying. It is used for various purposes. As I have already indicated, I am considering the whole question.

Sri V. C. Vellingiri Gounder: As there is a great deal of demand for tractors and ploughing machinery, may I know if these machinery also is exempt from duty?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: As I have said, the whole question of reducing the tariff on machinery is at present under investigation by Government.

UTILISATION OF M. T. TRAINING UNITS FOR TRANSPORTING FOODSTUFFS.

1178. *Mr. R. C. Morris: Will the War Secretary please state if it is a fact that Army Transport in the Provinces including M. T. Training Units, will be utilised, on demand, for transporting grains and foodstuffs where local road transport is insufficient?

Mr. P. Mason: Yes, Sir. It is our policy to assist Provincial Governments as far as possible in the transport of essential foodstuffs to deficit areas in military transport. Instructions to this effect were sent out on March 8th.

JAIL FACILITIES FOR CAPTAINS ABDUR RASHID AND BURHANUDDIN.

79. *Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: (a) Will the War Secretary be pleased to state whether it is a fact that Capts. Abdur Rashid and Burhanuddin have kept in jails? If so, in which places?

(b) In what class have they been placed?

What form of labour, if any, are they required to do?

(c) What facilities are they allowed in respect of interviews, letters, reading, and newspapers?

P. Mason: (a) Both are in the Central Prison at Haripur in the North-West Frontier Province as I have already informed the Honourable Member's colleague on the bench behind him.

(c) and (d). Since they have been dismissed from the Indian Army, they are now ordinary convicted criminal prisoners so that these parts of the question are the concern of the Government of the North-West Frontier Province. I have enquired what the decision of the Provincial Government is in the matter.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Will they not be treated as political prisoners?

P. Mason: Certainly not.

M. N. G. Ranga: Is it not in the discretion of the Provincial Government how to treat them—whether as political prisoners or as ordinary prisoners?

P. Mason: No, Sir.

M. N. G. Ranga: Has not the Honourable Member just now said that they have been handed over to the Provincial Government? Now it is for the Provincial Government to decide in which class they should be placed and what form of labour they should be required to do.

P. Mason: Yes, Sir. But not to decide whether they are criminal or political prisoners.

Shri Govind Das: Have they been kept together, or separately?

P. Mason: I do not know, but I have no reason to suppose that they are kept together.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: In the North-West Frontier Province, there is a classification of prisoners. Will it be in the discretion of the Provincial Government to classify them or will it be in the discretion of the Central Government?

P. Mason: I have already answered that question of Prof. Ranga.

M. N. G. Ranga: Why should the Government of India come in the matter of the Provincial Government if they want to be liberal?

P. Mason: I thought that the Honourable Member was scolding us the other day because we did not take enough interest in them.

President: Next question.

M. N. G. Ranga: Sir, I want to reply to his observation. The other day I was anxious to support the Provincial Government when they were very liberal. When they want to be liberal, the Honourable Member comes in the way.

President: Next question.

TRANSPORTATION OF DEMOBILISED NON-INDIANS OWING TO SCARCITY OF CEREALS

80. *Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: With reference to the announcement in the Hindustan Times of the 2nd March, 1946, that the total decrease in the Indian Army amounts to 4,952 officers and 292,561 men up to the 31st January, 1946, will the War Secretary please state:

- (a) the number of Indian officers and men who have been thus demobilised;
- (b) the number of non-Indians, British and others who have been demobilised;
- (c) how many in category (b) are still in India awaiting transportation to the United Kingdom or elsewhere, and when it is expected that they will be taken out of India;
- (d) if the total mentioned above includes permanent personnel who would have retired in any case or only the temporary personnel taken on during the war;
- (e) if, in view of the scarcity of cereals in India, he proposes to take very early steps to send out as many non-Indian personnel as possible before the 1st April 1946, if not, why not; and
- (f) the number of personnel retained in the Indian Army who are neither British nor Indian, but who have been taken on during the war for technical or other reasons and who are still in service?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) On the 31st January, 1946, the approximate figures were: Indian officers—900.

V.C.O's, I.O.R.'s N.C.S.E.—267,000.

(b) Non-Indians demobilised in India—300.

Released or repatriated outside India—29,000.

(c) Numbers in category (b) held temporarily in India awaiting transportation elsewhere average 2,500 and remain for periods varying from three to twelve days.

(d) Over 95 per cent. of all releases and repatriations are of temporary personnel on engagements for the duration of the war. Regular Army Officers, and Other Ranks whose colour service has not expired are included only on medical or compassionate grounds.

(e) As I have already explained in reply to part (b) of the Honourable Member's question No. 525, on the 26th of last month, the number of non-Indian military personnel in India is a small and decreasing fraction of one per cent. of the population, and they are fed almost entirely from imported food-stuffs.

(f) Accurate and up-to-date information is not available but the number when last ascertained was 124.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: In view of the fact that only five per cent. of deficiency in food supply in Bengal had caused all that mischief as a result of which 35 lakhs of people have died, will Government reconsider their decision even though these troops form only one per cent. of our total population?

Mr. P. Mason: I am not quite sure what decision the Honourable Member is referring to.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is it not a fact that the Honourable Member had referred to the fact that these people form only one per cent. of the population and therefore they do not very much matter in India's national economy.

Mr. P. Mason: Yes, Sir.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: It is out of that that my supplementary question has arisen. I want an answer to that. Will Government reconsider their decision?

Mr. P. Mason: What decision?

Prof. N. G. Ranga: The decision to allow the status quo to remain.

Mr. P. Mason: I have a question for the next day when I am answering questions on the subject of the efforts which are being made by the Defence Services in general to relieve food situation, and I think I can answer that question then.

Sri V. C. Vellingiri Gounder: May I know if milk powder is going to be supplied to Madras by arrangement with the Military Department by a cut in army rations on account of the food difficulties?

Mr. President: How does it arise out of this question?

Sri V. C. Vellingiri Gounder: It arises out of part (e) of the question and has a bearing on the military rations.

Mr. President: I do not think it directly arises out of it.

CUT IN CEREAL RATION OF ARMED FORCES

1181. *Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Will the War Secretary please state:

(a) if his attention has been drawn to the news item in the Hindustan Times of the 2nd March, 1946, about the British proposal to cut the ration of armed forces in Great Britain with a view to providing more for mine labour and other labour; and if the facts stated therein are correct;

(b) whether there is any proposal in India to bring down the ration of the armed forces, in the matter of cereals at least, to the level of the civil rations, in view of the fact that the armed forces are given large rations of meat and milk and milk products; and

(c) if the answer to (b) is in the negative, will he kindly give the reasons in detail which preclude him from following such a course and for perpetuation of the difference in ration between the civil and military elements of the population?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) Yes, Sir.

(b) There is no intention at present of imposing a further cut in the ration of the armed forces. A cut of 4 oz of atta was imposed in November 1945, but this cut was found to be too drastic in view of the active life led by service men and 2 oz atta were consequently restored on the 24th December 1945. Cuts were also made in dhal, ghee and sugar and involved a total lowering of 480 calories in the day's ration. A corresponding cut was made in the rations of British troops in respect of bread, flour, butter, meat, oatmeal, tea and sugar.

(c) The reason for not further reducing the ration of the armed forces is that the men are engaged on active work and further it is essential to keep them happy and contented. I may point out for the Honourable Member's information that in Great Britain also the armed forces receive a higher ration than civilians for similar reasons.

Rations are calculated in part on calorific content which in turn is related to the calculated daily expenditure of energy which the military profession demands.

Seth Govind Das: In view of the fact that there is now no war going on and no such active work is involved, will the Honourable Member see that their ration is reduced to some extent at least?

Mr. P. Mason: I have already answered that by saying that there is no intention at present of imposing a further cut.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Out of what total or maximum calories of food has this 480 calories been cut?

Mr. P. Mason: I am afraid I cannot tell you.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: That is a very relevant omission. May I know what cut in calories has been imposed in the ration allowed to British army personnel?

Mr. P. Mason: I am afraid I cannot tell you that.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Why is it that that information has not been obtained, whereas he has been careful to obtain the other information for the House?

Mr. P. Mason: I am afraid it was pure laziness. But I will obtain the information and supply it to the Honourable Member.

COMMUNAL COMPOSITION OF STAFF IN CENTRAL REVENUE LABORATORY

†1182. Sardar Mangal Singh: (a) Will the Honourable the Finance Member please state, communitywise, the total number of junior and senior Chemists and other higher appointments existing in the Central Revenue Laboratory as it stood on the 1st January, 1946?

(b) To which Province does each one belong, and are any Sikhs employed therein? If so, how many, and in what capacity?

(c) Has there been any supersession of any Sikh in the Department? If so, when, by whom and under what circumstances?

(d) What is the total number of such temporary and permanent staff, and how many of them are Sikhs under each category?

(e) Does he propose to see that the claims of Sikhs are safeguarded in the temporary or permanent appointments and that no promotion without any serious handicap is allowed over the head of a Sikh?

Mr. B. C. A. Cook: (a) and (d). The establishment of the Central Revenues Control Laboratory includes four gazetted posts, namely Chief Chemist, two Chemical Examiners (Grade I) and one Assistant Chemical Examiner; and there are six non-gazetted posts of Chemical Assistants. On the 1st January, 1946, the gazetted posts were held by three Hindus and one Muslim and the non-gazetted posts by four Hindus and two Sikhs.

(b) Of the four gazetted officers two are from Mysore State, one from Madras and one from the United Provinces. Of the six non-gazetted officers, one is from Madras, one from Bengal, one from the Patiala State and three from the Punjab. As stated in the reply to parts (a) and (d), two Sikhs are employed as Chemical Assistants (Second Grade), one being permanent and the other temporary.

(c) No.

(e) In making appointments by direct recruitment the orders relating to communal representation are, and will continue to be, observed; appointments filled by promotion will continue to be based on merit.

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF INDIAN COMMANDING ROYAL ENGINEERS IN M. E. S.

†1183. Sardar Mangal Singh: With reference to the reply to starred question No. 1268 of the 22nd March, 1945, will the War Secretary please state what increase in the number of Indians in the grade of Commanding Royal Engineers has taken place up to the 1st March, 1946, and what attempts have been made to give more and more representation to the Indians in the cadre of Military Engineering Service of these ranks? If the number has since decreased, what are the reasons therefor?

Mr. P. Mason: On the 1st March 1946 four posts of the grade of Commander Royal Engineers (Lt.-Col.) in the M.E.S. in India were held by Indian Officers as against two such appointments held last March, i.e., 1945. In addition, six Indian officers hold equivalent posts in military formations.

Indian officers will continue to be given consideration for appointment to senior posts as and when they attain the requisite seniority and experience.

REPRESENTATION FROM CALCUTTA TEA MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION TO REDUCE EXCISE DUTY

1184. Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) Will the Honourable the Finance Member be pleased to state whether he has received a communication from the Calcutta Tea Merchants' Association inviting his attention to the present Excise duty at the rate of two annas on tea and suggesting its removal? If so, will the Honourable Member please place on the table a copy of the communication?

†Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner being absent.

(b) Has the representation made therein been given due consideration, and in case no action is proposed to be taken thereon, will he indicate his reasons for not acceding to the representation, point by point?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: (a) I regret I am not able to disclose the contents of the communication without the Association's permission, which it has not been possible to obtain within the time available.

(b) The representation has been given due consideration. A decision in a matter of this sort is a compound of various considerations and is not determined solely with reference to any particular individual point that arises.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Is the Honourable Member in a position to indicate what percentage this particular duty forms of the price of the cheaper brands of tea which are used by the poorer sections of the people?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: I have not worked out the percentage, but I can work it out for the Honourable Member if wanted.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Has not the Honourable Member received representations from the Tea Growers of Kangra Valley about the excessive inroad that this tea cess is making upon them?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: I have not quite caught the second part of the Honourable Member's question.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Whether the Honourable Member has received representations from the Kangra Valley Tea Growers Association complaining about the burden or the inroad which this particular duty is making into their ordinary income?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: I am not quite sure if the growers concerned are the constituents or friends of the Honourable Member. I have not seen any complaints: they have not come to me.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Will the Honourable Member undertake to give an answer to this question when he has received a reply from the Association agreeing to the communication being made public?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: I have already said that I am not prepared myself to give an answer point by point: it is pointless to do so.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is it a fact that they made a representation? In fact they made repeated representations to the Central Board of Revenue that they formed one third of the total tea growers of the country but produced only one per cent. of the tea produced in the country and urged that this excise duty should be reduced.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: No, Sir. It has not come to my personal notice. If the Honourable Member would like, I can call for the papers.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Is the Honourable Member prepared to give an answer to the points raised in the representation, covering the substance of those complaints?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: I am always reasonable, Sir.

APPLICANTS FOR SETTING UP CEMENT FACTORIES IN INDIA

1185. Mr. K. C. Neogy: Will the Honourable Member for Planning and Development please state:

(a) whether it is a fact that applications were invited in June, 1945, from persons desirous of setting up cement factories in India;

(b) the number of applications received by Government in this regard, from Indian and non-Indian parties separately; and

(c) whether Messrs. Bird and Co. have been allotted two cement plants for erection in the Punjab and in the Gangpur State, and whether there were any Indian applicants for undertaking cement production at these places, if so, the reasons why their applications were not granted?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: (a) Yes.

(b) 145 in all. It is not possible to say from the applications how many of them were from Indian and how many from non-Indian parties.

(c) On the recommendation of the Punjab Government, the Punjab Minerals Co. Ltd., Calcutta (Managing Agents, Bird & Co.) have been given permission to set up a cement factory in the Punjab with a capacity of one lakh tons. A cement factory of one lakh tons has also been allocated to the Gangpur State and the State has been asked to recommend the firm to whom permission should be given to start the factory. I may explain that the Government of India have decided that the choice of the party to be allowed to set up production must be left to the Provincial Government or the State as the case may be, although formal orders are passed by the Government of India. They confine themselves to allocating quotas of production within different Provinces and States.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Do I take it then that the Government of India merely carry out the recommendations of the Provincial Governments in this behalf, or do they give any independent consideration to the merits of each application?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: As I have explained on a previous occasion the Government of India have given discretion to the Provincial Governments to do the allocation within the quota themselves. But if any case of hardship or, shall we say, impropriety comes up (no such case has yet come up) we will of course inquire into it.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: With reference to part (b) of the question, may I ask whether it is difficult to find out how many Indians and Europeans are there among the 145 applications?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: It is apparent from my answer to clause (c). In the Punjab, Government has given permission to a firm called the "Punjab Minerals Co. Ltd." I challenge the Honourable Member to find out from the name of the company what particular nationality its members belong to. My reply was in answer to a specific question.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: May I know from the Honourable Member whether it is not the duty of the Government to find out before giving licenses who are the Directors of a company, whether they are Indians or Europeans? I know for certain that in the Planning Department when an application has been received Government writes to the company asking them the names of the Directors, how much capital is subscribed by Indians and how much by Europeans. Was it not easy for the Government to write and find out that information?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: May I know whether the Punjab Government should have found out or the Government of India?

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: Ultimately the license is being given by the Government of India.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Is the Honourable Member in a position to state the name of the firm that may be the managing agents of the company that he mentioned?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: I have mentioned it—Bird & Company.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Is the Honourable Member aware that not even one single Muslim Company has been given licence for starting a cement concern in India?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: I do not know.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Will the Honourable Member look into it and see that the Muslims get their share? May I say that not one Muslim concern has been given licence not only for starting a cement concern but even for importing the machinery.

(No answer was given.)

(b) WRITTEN ANSWERS

LONGER HOURS' DUTY OF PROGRAMME ASSISTANTS OF THE ALL-INDIA RADIO, NEW DELHI.

1186. *Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Information and Arts please state if it is a fact that at least once a week every Programme Assistant of the All-India Radio, New Delhi, has to be on duty at the Broadcasting House for six to seven hours in continuation of his office hours practically from 10 A.M. to midnight?

(b) Is it also a fact that the officer so placed in duty is expected to attend the office the next day again at 10 A.M.?

(c) Do Government propose to consider the desirability of taking steps to readjust duties in such a way as to eliminate the rigour and stress of such continuous duty and bring its action into line with the principles of International Labour Convention of work for eight hours a day?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: (a) Some programme staff has to be on transmission duty at the time of broadcasts which mainly take place outside office hours. But no one has to be on duty for six to seven hours in addition to the usual office hours.

(b) Yes.

(c) Additional staff is being recruited to give relief to the existing programme staff.

SHORT NOTICE QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

REMOVAL OF GURKHA TROOPS STATIONED AT DEHRA DUN

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Will the War Secretary be pleased to state:

(a) whether his attention has been drawn to news in the Hindustan Times, dated the 20th March 1946, regarding the removal of 300 Gurkha troops of the 2/9 Gurkha Rifles stationed at Dehra Dun;

(b) if the facts stated therein are correct; and

(c) the nature of the trouble and the causes that led to it?

Mr. P. Mason: (a) Yes Sir.

(b) No Sir. The facts are quite incorrect. None of the troops of the 9th Gurkha Rifles who were involved in the incident of March 14th have been sent to Wana.

(c) The trouble arose because it was reported that men who were proceeding to their homes on release from the Army were taking with them articles of kit to which they were not entitled. The Commanding Officer therefore ordered a kit inspection, and it was proved that the report was correct and that a number of men had concealed certain articles which they should not have had. In the course of this inspection, all officers, British and Gurkha, left the lines to attend a conference, and on their return when the check of kit began again, the men became excited and eventually completely undisciplined.

The total number of men involved was between 100 and 200, of whom 26 who were the leaders have been separated from the rest. A Court of Enquiry is proceeding and at present the only grievances alleged by the men appear to be:

(i) Discontent at the scale of clothing permitted to be taken on release.

(ii) The fact that their release train had been postponed for two days.

(iii) The kit inspection.

The situation is now completely in hand and I hope it will be possible to release the great majority of the men from the Army without further delay.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: What were the articles they were taking away that they were not entitled to take?

Mr. P. Mason: Extra boots and blankets.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Is it not a fact that it is the scarcity of cloth outside that was responsible for their taking these extra blankets, because they thought they would not be able to get supplies on going back to their homes?

Mr. P. Mason: I should think it very likely.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Will the Honourable Member, instead of punishing them, make inquiries and see that they are given more cloth and blankets than they are being given at present?

Mr. P. Mason: It is, I think, very difficult to reconcile the requests that I receive from the other side of the House in this respect: one minute I am told, for example, that we should reduce the rations of troops in order to make more available to the civil population, and the next minute I am scolded because the ration is inadequate and they ought to get more; and the same thing with cloth and with boots. If we give them more cloth and more boots, there is less for the civil population.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: The two can be reconciled in this way: that when these persons are discharged they go to civil life and they will then require cloth and blankets; and if they get from the existing stocks of the military, then to that extent the demand on the civil stocks here will be less.

Mr. P. Mason: But they already get a good deal more than the rest of the civil population because they are given both boots and blankets when they go out. In fact they wanted to take away double the quantity they were entitled to take.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Is it not a fact that perhaps their grievance was reasonable and they required only a little more?

Mr. P. Mason: No; it is not a fact. I did not say it was reasonable. I said possibly on account of the shortage they endeavoured to take a double ration so that they could give some to other people.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Will the Honourable Member place the question before the Defence Consultative Committee for consideration?

Mr. P. Mason: I cannot see that there would be any advantage.

HUNGER STRIKE BY DELHI POLICEMEN

Shri Satya Narayan Sinha: (a) Has the attention of the Honourable Home Member been drawn to the news that has appeared in the newspapers that 2,000 Delhi policemen are on hunger strike and that it is spreading to various police stations attached to the province of Delhi?

(b) Is it a fact that the twelve so-called ringleaders have been dismissed from the service?

(c) Will the Honourable Member be pleased to give detailed information to the House in regard to the said strike?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: Sir, with your permission and with the indulgence of the House I shall answer this by way of a statement. I have not had time or opportunity since I received this question to prepare a written answer.

I must first—while not wishing in any way to minimise the seriousness of this trouble or any trouble among the police forces—deplore the exaggeration in the account which has appeared in a section of the press. This can only be described as very greatly exaggerated, at any rate as regards the circumstances at the time when these articles were written. It is not a fact that “2,000 Delhi policemen were on hunger strike” yesterday. The circumstances up to yesterday evening are as briefly described in the press communique that was issued by the Deputy Commissioner, which I presume Members have read, and which it is not necessary for me to repeat. I should add in amplification of it that the number of men concerned was between 200 and 300. They were in the barracks in the police lines in Delhi; they behaved at some periods in a disorderly fashion. It was very difficult to ascertain their grievances. One grievance was understood to be the behaviour of a head constable, which has been mentioned in the press. As regards other grievances in regard to pay and the quality of rations, it was difficult, I understand, to get any connected account. However an inquiry was started; but the continuance of that inquiry was made impossible by the disorderly behaviour of the men in the lines.

That was the position yesterday evening. During the night, the Senior Superintendent of Police went round the stations, the thanas, but found everything very quiet: the men were on duty. About 20 per cent of the men in the thanas had refused to take their evening meal. He tried to get from them the reasons for this; they were not clear about that; they said that they had heard that the police in the lines were not taking their food and they were refraining from taking their evening meal in sympathy. No other grievances were stated by them. Then, early this morning, matters improved. About 150 of these men who had been disorderly yesterday were induced to come out on duty, and they started on a route-march; but two policemen came after them and interfered with them and induced them to give up their duty and go back into the lines. Those two men, who are distinct from the twelve men mentioned in the Press Communique to which I have referred, gave a great deal of trouble and it appeared that unless they were proceeded against the situation might even then become dangerous. I understand that they were arrested and they have been charged before the Additional District Magistrate and are now in remand.

The House will appreciate that there has been no opportunity for me to get a written report. What I am giving is the gist of what has reached me on the telephone. Rather later in the morning about 80 of these disorderly policemen broke out of the Lines and took up their station on the Tis Hazari maidan. Their police officers went to argue the matter out with them but the last I heard—and that was at about 10-15 this morning—was that these men in a disorderly fashion, some in uniform, some out of uniform, had set off from the Tis Hazari maidan towards the city. I have had no connected account of what has happened since. At one time it was expected that they were making for the Council Chamber, but I understand that they turned off at the Chandni Chowk to the Kotwali and there they were joined by other persons. Their numbers were increased by a considerable crowd of the type of disorderly people who are always ready to exploit disturbances and they went off again in a direction which I have not had an opportunity of ascertaining. If any Honourable Members have any precise information as to what has happened since, I shall of course welcome it. But I do deprecate believing in the rumours that are spreading about the premises.

That, I am afraid, is all that I can give the House as regards the facts, but I may be permitted to add that the Government and the Chief Commissioner and his officers do appreciate the gravity of anything which might be malled a mutiny in the police force. They do appreciate the need for dealing with it with the greatest possible restraint and tact and discretion. Perhaps I might make a suggestion to my Honourable friend opposite and to the Deputy Leader of the Muslim League Party. My suggestion is that, if they care to do so, they may with me meet the Chief Commissioner as soon as possible after Lunch. I will ask him to come to the Council House and we can then get the latest information. They are both residents of Delhi and their advice as to the manner in which the situation could be dealt with would be highly valuable.

Srijut Dharendra Kanta Lahiri Choudhury: Is it a fact that there has been shooting and the use of tear gas in connection with this incident?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I have given the House all the information I have. I have had no opportunity of getting reliable news since the sitting began.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: How is it that the House is in possession of more information than the Honourable the Home Member himself?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: Sir, the House may be in possession of information which perhaps has not been verified, as has that which I have given.

Shri D. P. Karmarkar: Is it a fact that the Delhi policemen are at present paid Rs. 22 as salary and Rs. 22 as allowance per month? If that is right, does the Honourable Member agree that it is absolutely insufficient in these days when the cost of living has risen so high?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I believe the information is more or less correct. The basic pay is, I think, Rs. 22 and the other items received by the ordinary constable here are Rs. 17 as dearness allowance and Rs. 5 as Delhi headquarter allowance. Whether that is adequate or not is, of course, a matter of opinion, but I certainly welcome any indication from my friends on the other side that they would be glad to see the pay of the police raised.

Shri D. P. Karmarkar: Is the Honourable Member aware of this news item:

"Following a conference of local officials in the Police lines, it was decided to put down the disaffection in the police force with a firm hand."

If these two items are correct, may I further ask the Honourable Member whether he realises that it is such firm action that is the source of more trouble than the original trouble itself.

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I cannot agree that firmness is not one of the qualities which have to be shown in a matter of this sort.

Mr. M. Asaf Ali: May I know if some of these grievances were already known to the administration and if so, why did they not take early steps to remedy these grievances? Surely my Honourable friend will agree with me that these troubles do not always arise suddenly. There must be something behind. What is the explanation?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: One grievance was specific. It was quite a recent one—the behaviour of a certain head constable; but I understand my Honourable friend to refer to grievances such as those given here about pay and rations. Subject to correction after I get more information, my present information is that those grievances have not been represented.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Is the Honourable Member in a position to contradict the information which we have received that tear gas has been used this morning in Delhi.

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I am not in a position to do so.

Shri Satya Narayan Sinha: Is it a fact that the number of hunger strikers today has gone over two thousand?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I cannot be precise about that. What I am certain is that the number when this article was prepared could not have been more than a few hundreds.

Shri Satya Narayan Sinha: Will the Honourable Member try to verify this fact?

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Am I to understand that the Honourable Member has already suggested that two spokesmen of these people who are on hungerstrike will also be present or will have an opportunity to be present at this conference which he has suggested?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I made no such suggestion.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Are we to understand that just as the Honourable Member is dependent for his information on the Chief Commissioner, the Deputy Leaders, whose meeting he has suggested, should be at the mercy of this gentleman for their information.

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: That is an unwarrantable interpretation of what I said.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Why does not the Honourable Member agree to my suggestion that the representatives of these people who are aggrieved should be enabled to be present at this conference to give the information on the spot and also to find out whether the information that will be supplied by the Chief Commissioner is correct or not?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I have not said whether I agree or disagree with the suggestion; but I don't think that it would be a profitable first step to take.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: It will certainly be a proper step.

Mr. M. Asaf Ali: Is it not a fact that at present more trouble is brewing in the City, that the military is in possession of practically all the main streets of the City, that a procession of these police strikers has been broken up in two or three places by the use of tear gas, and I am not sure that fire has not been opened up anywhere at all? But the trouble is brewing. It is perfectly clear that the whole City today is without police and it would continue to be so until the trouble dies down. What is the suggestion which the Honourable Member has to make to meet the situation? Merely meeting the Chief Commissioner will not clear up the issue. It is a very serious situation which has got to be dealt with immediately, in a manner which would restore peace to the City and forestall any further trouble.

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: The Honourable the Deputy Leader of the Opposition and I are in entire accord as to the end to be achieved. If he has any other suggestion to make as to how we can set about it, I should be only too glad to hear it.

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: Will the Honourable Member kindly inform the House whether this trouble in the Delhi police force has a political aspect to it?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I cannot answer that. I do not know.

Shri Mohan Lal Saxena: One of the suggestions made here on the floor of the House is that the Honourable Member should send for the representatives of the policemen and hear them. The Honourable Member himself informed the House that the procession was coming to the Council Chamber. I think it will be advisable to avoid that. It will be necessary that the representatives of these persons should be sent for and an opportunity should be given to them to put their case before the Home Member in the presence of the Deputy Leader of the opposition and the Deputy Leader of the Muslim League.

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: My doubt about that is that it is most undesirable that any action should be taken which would diminish the capacity of the Chief Commissioner, who is the executive authority of the Delhi Province, to deal with the situation, and if we are to have the parties discussing their business here in the Council Chamber I cannot but feel that that will not be conducive to an early settlement so far as it is possible for the responsible authorities to arrive at one.

Mr. T. Chapman-Mortimer: Would it not be better for the House to allow the Honourable the Home Member to ascertain the facts which he has undertaken to do and to leave the matter there? It seems to me quite a useless waste of time to discuss it now not knowing at all what the situation is. We must know the facts.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: I want to know whether the Honourable the Home Member considers the prestige of Government to be of more serious consequence than peace in the City.

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: No, Sir. But so far as upholding of the prestige of the executive officers is conducive to peace and good administration, I am a great believer in it.

Seth Govind Das: Are we to take it that it is not a question of settlement, but it is only a question of how to crush the strike, so that such troubles may not arise hereafter?

Mr. President: Order, order.

Nawabzada Liaquat Ali Khan: I want to ask. . .

Mr. President: I am making a suggestion and the Honourable Member may speak after I have finished. I think questions and answers are going beyond the proper scope of eliciting information. This becomes a sort of debate, argument and discussion. I may remind the House that we are now adjourning today at 12-45 P.M. on account of Friday prayers. There is another short notice question also coming up and it would be well if the matter came up for discussion after we re-assemble again at quarter past two.

Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I have also got an adjournment motion, on this very question.

Mr. President: I have got that also in view. Perhaps on that adjournment motion also, some discussion might take place. I am just throwing out a suggestion as to whether it would not be advisable, instead of taking up the time of the House in these discussions, to meet just outside in the Lobby or elsewhere and see whether it is possible to come to some arrangement and declare it at 2-15 P.M.? Otherwise these questions will go on and there is to be some limit to them. They have to be stopped somewhere. We have already taken up over this question nearly 15 minutes.

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: Do I understand that we will discuss the fate of the adjournment motion at 2-15 P.M.?

Mr. President: That is what I would like to do, if that is possible.

Nawabzada Liaquat Ali Khan: All that I wanted to ask was this. The Honourable Member has extended an invitation to me to meet the Chief Commissioner in his presence, together with the Deputy Leader of the Opposition. I would like to know what is the object of this meeting. If it is only to ascertain the facts, then I would suggest that he should ascertain facts and relate them to the House, after Lunch interval.

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: Well, Sir, as I said, the object was to ascertain facts and to hear any advice that my Honourable friends could offer. But if it is the feeling of my two friends and the House that we could best proceed by ascertaining further facts and consider them immediately after Lunch, then I have no objection.

Nawabzada Liaquat Ali Khan: It would not be possible for me at least, I do not know what my Honourable friend the Deputy Leader of the Congress Party thinks, to offer any advice unless we hear the other side of the story also.

Mr. M. Asaf Ali: May I say at once that I accept your suggestion, Sir, as far as the further questions are concerned. Let us in the meanwhile ask the Chief Commissioner to come over and perhaps we can meet here. I think I have some facts in my possession which may be useful for discussion at the time, but the main point is this, that there is a very serious situation developed on account of the fact that there is no police now acting anywhere. It is not merely a question of the City. According to my information the police has practically struck work in the rural areas. Nazibgarh is practically out of action. Nang'oi is also out of action. We do not know whether there are other places which are also out of action. At present they are on duty. But as soon as the news of the trouble goes there, I have not the slightest doubt that the Police there also will be paralysed. Does it mean that the City should be delivered over to the military in the meanwhile. It is a very serious situation. It is not merely a question of police and the whole thing has developed into a regular clash between the military and the police. The matter has got to be considered immediately. As regards my adjournment motion, it is not the same. I mean to condemn the maladministration of this Department in Delhi. In any case that is a different matter. But here we have got to deal with the situation which has really assumed exceedingly serious proportions. It would be a perfect farce to go on debating a question like this, while regular battle is proceeding elsewhere.

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I quite agree.

Mr. President: I have already made a suggestion about the matter. There are only fifteen minutes left for the House now to adjourn. I may now call the next short notice question. I believe it would be better if the representatives of various parties and the Honourable the Home Member meet immediately when we retire at 12-45 and come to some agreement or try to see if some agreement can be arrived at on this question, if possible, so that the situation may be saved.

DISALLOWANCE OF PANDIT JAWAHAR LAL NEHRU'S VISIT TO BURMA

Shri Satya Narayan Sinha: (a) Has the attention of the Secretary, Commonwealth Relations Department, been drawn to the news that has appeared in today's morning papers that the Burma Government has rejected the Indian Deputations' request to allow Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru to visit Burma on his way to India from Singapore?

(b) Will he be pleased to throw light on the subject?

(c) Will the Government of India intervene in the matter and ask the Government of Burma to allow Pandit Nehru to visit the country? If not, why not?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: (a) The reply is in the affirmative.

(b) and (c). In January last the Government of India informed the Government of Burma that Pandit Nehru desired to pay a visit to Burma. The Government of Burma were not in favour of the visit at the present juncture in view of the unsettled conditions in Burma. Government have no specific information about the latest request made by the Indian deputation. It is, however, understood that it will not be possible for Pandit Nehru to halt in Burma on his way back from his present tour in Malaya. It will therefore serve no useful purpose for the Government of India seeking to intervene for facilitating Pandit Nehru's visit to Burma on his way back this time.

Seth Govind Das: How is it that the unsettled conditions in Burma are responsible for Pandit Nehru not being allowed to go there? Is it not a fact that if he goes there the position would improve?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: I have never said that Pandit Nehru is not allowed to go to Burma. I have only said that the Burma Government were not in favour of the visit and I have indicated the reasons which they gave.

Seth Govind Das: Are those reasons correct according to the Government of India? If they do not think those grounds to be reasonable they should represent to the Burma Government that Pandit Nehru should be allowed to go there.

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: I do not think the Burma Government have any intention of permanently debarring Pandit Nehru from visiting Burma. But I hope the Honourable Member will appreciate that it would hardly be in keeping with the recognised canons of international courtesy to make an issue of this matter. All that the Burma Government said was that they were not in favour of Pandit Nehru visiting Burma at the present juncture. But, as I said, that related to a request made in January; and apart from the press report we have no information about the latest request made. And as Pandit Nehru is not likely to be able to halt in Burma this time I feel that it is no use pursuing it now.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Government of India ask the Burma Government not to obstruct Pandit Nehru from landing in Burma on his way back, if he has the time and intention to do so?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: The Government of Burma will not obstruct Pandit Nehru's landing in Burma.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will this Government make it clear to the Burma Government that Pandit Nehru should be given all facilities to go there if he wants to avail of them?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: I stated that it was understood that it would not be possible for Pandit Nehru to halt in Burma on his way back from Malaya.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Is it Pandit Nehru's own difficulty, or is it the difficulty of the Burma Government or the difficulty of the Government of India?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: I have personal knowledge of the fact that it will not be possible for him to halt in Burma on his way back from Malaya, for his own reasons; and I hope the Honourable Member will accept it.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Is this personal knowledge also the knowledge of the Government of India?

Mr. R. N. Banerjee: Yes, Sir. I prepared the programme of his visit to Malaya according to his desire.

Mr. President: As regards the adjournment motion, the further consideration of its admissibility will be taken up at 2-15 p.m. when we reassemble after Lunch.

INDIAN FINANCE BILL—contd.

Sri T. V. Satakopachari (Tanjore cum Trichinopoly: Non-Muhammadan Rural) Sir, from an exciting period I come back to the ordinary atmosphere of the House and the policeman's dinner or lack of it will not disturb our lunch. When the House rose last evening I was adverting to the fact that the sterling balances were left in a nebulous state. Apart from how much we will be getting—we do not know how much we will get—we do not even know when we will be getting them. The Finance Member also agrees there. With regard to the negotiations he says that:

"It is highly unlikely that they will be held until the United States Congress has ratified the U.S.A.-U.K. Loan Agreement."

Then in regard to capital goods he says:

"The main consideration will not be the availability of exchange but the final capacity of the two exporting countries to meet the commitments of a war-shattered world."

Which two main countries? Does it mean only one country or two?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands (Finance Member): Two countries.

Sri T. V. Satakopachari: But I believe you concentrate on one, because I do not think America is a war-shattered country. And then there would be no difficulty at all of capital goods to come from America if only Britain would not stand in the way. I do not want to comment more on this: I know as a matter of fact that machinery ordered from Skoda works at much less cost was stopped and the same machinery came from the U. K. at a much higher price. I refer to the machinery of sugar pans.

The other question which the Finance Member says is closely connected in the public mind with sterling balances is that of the Empire Dollar Pool. Not only closely connected but it is really a related question. It is a question of our capacity for exchange, and even the Finance Member tries to make it as equivalent to the sterling area or the sterling reserve system. It is not the same. There was a time when London was the hub of the financial world and the belle of Threadneedle Street was holding the world. But now she has turned an old beldame and the pivot has shifted to America, in spite of all that they say. I see my Honourable friend Mr. Chapman-Mortimer anxiously shaking his head.

Mr. T. Chapman-Mortimer (Nominated Non-Official): There is no anxiety at all.

Sri T. V. Satakopachari: The Empire Dollar Pool is only a sort of device for commercial relationships between the Empire, with England with a capital E, and America (An Honourable Member: Yes). Yes, so long as you are there it will be to your advantage. The whole fiscal policy is dictated by England's convenience and England's advantage which to my mind equates to India's inconvenience and disadvantage. Sir, my time is short and I am unable to compress multum in parvo, so I shall not refer to all these things. The Finance Member says we are under a misconception about the Empire Dollar Pool. But I must say that the Finance Member has himself given no right conception in his speech with regard to the Empire Dollar Pool. I am afraid he has no conception about it. If he has any we shall be glad to know what it is.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Read my speech again.

Sri T. V. Satakopachari: I have read it; it does not contain anything. There are two things I would like to refer to. The Finance Member says:

"Between September 1939 and March 1945 India earned hard currency assets to the amount of Rs. 364.33 crores, and India has utilized hard currency assets to the amount of Rs. 265.02 crores."

I wonder how he arrived at the latter figure. I find that import comes to Rs. 149.59 crores. How does he account for the balance of 115.43 crores?

Then I would like to refer to what he said about the existing pool assets:

"The most that could be claimed would be a pro rata share of the existing Pool assets. But even if the full amount could be established, it is much less than I hope and expect that we shall obtain by way of free exchange from the pending negotiations between India and the United Kingdom on the subject of sterling balances."

Why should we accept a pro rata share? I shall leave the question there. What I said about the fiscal policy of England dictating the fiscal policy of India is therefore correct.

I now refer to the political aspect of the question. Only yesterday we heard Mr. Banerjee, Secretary, Commonwealth Department, stating that whatever steps were considered necessary were taken by the Government with regard to the South African question. This House has been insisting on recalling the High Commissioner, but nothing has so far been done in regard to that. Even last year this House wanted the economic relationship to be severed. He did not do anything of the sort. He went on in his own way, and he now turns and says that all these are grave questions which are considered by the Government and the Government know best what to do. If really they had studied the psychological aspect of the matter apart from the economic aspect, they would easily have learnt that the recalling of the High Commissioner would have made a great mark. What is the Honourable Member doing? When he answers and says everything has been done, I am reminded of the Guru, a man who fed well but not too wisely, and could not find his shoe being unable to look below a plane parallel to the earth. So he asked his sisya (disciple) to search for his shoes. The Sishya had gone one better than his guru in the feast. The sishtya saw on a level 30 degrees above the plane of the earth! He replied he searched up to the stellar spheres and could not find the shoes. That is the wonderful way in which 'all that is possible has been done' by my Honourable friend on the opposite side.

Lastly, Sir, the political side is important because the denial of ways and means is the only way open to us to express our opinion. It is a difficult position for us, the tribunes of the people to do otherwise—One big fact there is—The utter immorality of 30 millions aliens holding down four-hundred millions of people. That one thing alone is ample justification for throwing out this Finance Bill and saying we find no ways and means for you. That is the one thing we can do, and I invite the House to do it.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Quarter Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly reassembled after Lunch at Quarter Past Two of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT.

MALADMINISTRATION OF DELHI POLICE DEPARTMENT RESULTING IN STRIKE BY A LARGE NUMBER OF POLICEMEN

Mr. President: Does the Honourable Member wish to ask for leave to adjourn the House?

Mr. M. Asaf Ali (Delhi: General): Sir, I do.

Mr. President: This is a notice of adjournment from Mr. M. Asaf Ali who wishes to discuss an urgent matter of public importance, namely;

"the situation created in Delhi by the maladministration of the Police Department, resulting in a strike by a large number of police men as reported in the press today."

Has the Honourable the Home Member to say anything?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne (Home Member): I understood that you wished me to give the House the latest information that reached me through official sources at this hour, and if that is your wish I shall be glad to do so.

I am glad to say that the position has very considerably improved and I am glad to say also that rumours that were flying about the House this morning have turned out to be very much exaggerated. The eighty odd persons to whom I referred this morning—they might be called the hard core of the disorder (they were 86 actually)—they were intercepted in Faiz Bazar this morning at, I think, about 11 o'clock. Four tear smoke bombs or missiles of some sort were thrown, mainly I think, in order to get those who had gone into houses in the neighbourhood, to come out, and they were all taken into custody. No one received injuries. There was no bayonet charge. There was no use of the bayonet at all and still less is it true or substantiated that there was any firing. Four tear gas missiles were thrown and the men were picked up without further interference, and.....

Khan Bahadur Hafiz M. Ghazanfarulla (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): Was tear gas used?

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: Yes. Four missiles were used. That was the position in Faiz Bazar.

In the Police Lines I understand that a parade was held about 12/30 and this was attended by practically all the men in the lines. The men were told what had happened to these eighty-six policemen and were told in suitable terms that discipline had to be maintained. They took these instructions quite well. There was no disturbance of any kind and the parade broke off with every sign of their coming to a better disposition. How many were absent from that parade on roll call I am not quite certain but I am told that practically

All the men who were in the lines were there, and since the parade was held a number who were not then on the premises have returned and in effect have shown repentance by asking that they should be considered to have attended the parade.

From the rural areas of Delhi no information has been received of any trouble whatsoever. As regards the men at the police stations, there is no refusal of duty. Some of the men refused to take their morning ration. It is not a hunger strike, I am told. Actually those who will not take the Government ration are taking other food; and quite a number of the men are taking the Government rations, and there is no refusal of duty on the part of any of them.

Well, Sir, I think that is all there is to tell. My latest news was of ten minutes ago and that contains nothing in addition to what I have told the House and in effect the trouble for the moment, and I hope not only for the moment, is over.

I do not know, Sir, if you want me to say anything about the admission of the adjournment motion. I have nothing to urge strictly on the point of admissibility. I think it would be pedantic for me to do so. But I must say this about this motion, that I should regard further discussion of the matter today as unlikely to assist the process of pacification shall I say, which is now well advanced. I should be much disappointed with my friends on the other side of the House if they insist on its admission.

Sir Mohammad Yamin Khan (Agra Division: Muhammadan Rural): May I ask if it is a fact that a police force was coming just now, about five or six minutes ago, in a procession and the military stopped them on the way? Has he received any information, because I received a telephone message just now.

The Honourable Sir John Thorne: I was in communication with the Chief Commissioner on the telephone up to ten minutes past two and he had no news of anything of the sort. I would suggest that any rumours need to be verified before they are repeated.

Mr. President: May I know what the Honourable the Mover of the motion has to say after what the Honourable the Home Member has said just now?

Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I understand that the Home Member feels that the motion is in order and that he would like the discussion to be postponed. That appears to me to be his desire. I am more or less in the hand of the Deputy Leader of the League Party and I should also refer to the Leader of the European Group. If it is the general desire of others that it should be postponed till Monday, then it is a different matter. Otherwise, I would rather discuss the matter straight away.

Nawabzada Liaquat Ali Khan (Meerut Division: Muhammadan Rural): What is your desire?

Mr. P. J. Griffiths (Assam: European): I would strongly support the suggestion of postponement. I agree that there may be need for an early discussion on the police administration in Delhi, but in the public interest, I suggest that the discussion should not proceed today, but the debate should be held over for two or three days. I support that suggestion.

Nawabzada Liaquat Ali Khan: I want to know what is the desire of the Honourable the Mover himself.

Mr. M. Asaf Ali: The questions I have to raise are not likely to interfere with the process of pacification which the Honourable the Home Member has in view, because I am covering a much wider field. This is only a symptom. I want to deal with the disease itself and I hope in dealing with the disease I won't be in any way teasing the symptoms which have appeared now. But at the same time, as I say, I am entirely in the hands of the other parties, who, I hope, will be casting their votes with us in so far as the general situation is concerned as well as in respect of the specific matter with which I am dealing now.

[Mr. M. Asaf Ali.]

Once again I should like to know what the feeling of the Deputy Leader of the League Party is.

Nawabzada Liaquat Ali Khan: It is rather unusual that the mover of a motion himself is not quite sure in his mind about its urgency.

Mr. M. Asaf Ali: He is perfectly sure.

Nawabzada Liaquat Ali Khan: In that case I do not know why he wants the opinion of this section of the House. If the matter is urgent and if the Honourable the Mover feels that it should be discussed today, then I do not see any reason why it should not be discussed. It seems to me that the Honourable Member is lukewarm himself and wants to put the blame on others.

Mr. M. Asaf Ali: Not a bit so.

Nawabzada Liaquat Ali Khan: Instead of taking the responsibility himself. As regards the question of voting, it will depend on the merits of the case and I am afraid I cannot say what the decision of my party would be, unless we have heard the whole case that may be put forward by the Honourable the Mover and the Government reply to it.

Mr. M. Asaf Ali: Then I think I had better have it this afternoon.

Mr. P. J. Griffiths: May I make another appeal to the Honourable the Deputy Leader of the Muslim League Party. The mover of the motion is quite ready to proceed with the motion but, in deference to the wishes of this side of the House he is prepared to agree to postpone the motion till Monday. I regret that the approach of the mover should have been received in a somewhat narrow spirit by the Deputy Leader of the Muslim League Party and I suggest that the generosity of the Opposition should be accepted and the discussion postponed till Monday.

Mr. President: The matter should be taken in a spirit of give and take.

Nawabzada Liaquat Ali Khan: It was not taken in a narrow sense: it was taken in the correct sense.

Mr. President: As I feel the pulse of the House, I may be permitted to take the onus of postponing the discussion on myself. If, Honourable Member are not prepared to agree, I would admit the motion, and would fix the discussion of the motion for Monday at 4 p.m.

Sir Mohammad Yamin Khan: Instead of Monday let the motion be taken up after the Finance Bill is finished.

Mr. President: The essence of urgency will then be taken out of it.

INDIAN FINANCE BILL—contd.

Mr. M. R. Masani (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadian Urban): Sir, may I crave your indulgence to use the microphone over there. I hope the Honourable the Finance Member will not mind being hoist with his own microphone, if I take the liberty of borrowing it!

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Imitation is the sincerest form of flattery.

Mr. M. R. Masani: It is rather an inconvenient form of flattery on the part of my throat!

The Finance Bill which is before us and the policies which underlie it remind me of an old Chinese proverb: "If you are planning for one year, plant grain; if you are planning for ten years, plant trees; and if you are planning for a hundred years, plant men". I think my Honourable friend the Finance Member had this choice before him in framing the taxation proposals that he has presented to this House. He stated in his opening speech that fiscal policy is one of the means to achieve national policy and the choice before him in giving effect to that axiom was to consider for what range of period he should plan in this budget. My quarrel with his proposals, Sir, is that he has conceived the period wrongly. In my opinion this budget should have been an attempt to lay down the lines of transition from war to peace economy. In other words, it should have been a short range approach. What I think the Finance Member has done is to make a rather long range approach, in other words, instead of planting grain or corn, he has planted trees which will take many many years to grow, and he has done it at a time when the needs of the case demanded the stuff of life, something on which the people could live.

What, Sir, is the situation with which the Honourable the Finance Member and this House are faced? We have, on the one hand, a terrific diminution in governmental expenditure. I think the figures roughly are a decrease of 150 crores of rupees in Indian war expenditure and of 450 crores of rupees in British war expenditure in this country. This terrific decrease of 600 crores of rupees of public expenditure is bound to have its repercussions on the quantum of employment in this country. Employment in our country will vary with the expenditure incurred within our borders. It will vary in the same way with the amount of public expenditure, and unemployment will vary conversely. It has been estimated that, apart from a million and a half people who will be demobilised from the armed services, the total number of people who will be thrown out of employment as a result of the contraction of public expenditure will be anything between 3 and 5 million men, not counting their dependents.

Now, how, Sir, do the budget proposals meet this situation? It is sought partly to meet this crisis, this threat of mass unemployment, by expenditure on capital projects and Central Government grants to Provinces to the tune of 120 crores as against a fall of 600 crores. Even this 120 crores is problematic, because many of the schemes on which this amount is to be devoted are far from ripe for putting into operation and I do not think my Honourable friend will disagree with me if I say that they are not likely in the twelve months to come to absorb more than Rs. 100 crores. That leaves a net expenditure of Rs. 500 crores uncovered, and we have to face the consequences, if these proposals go through, of meeting the terrific shock to our economic fabric which this net drop of Rs. 500 crores will mean. Assuming that our average national per capita income is, in terms of the depreciated rupee, twice what it was at the beginning of this war, that is about Rs. 120, instead of Rs. 65 per annum, it would mean the total income of no less than 1/10th of our entire population. Forty million people earning Rs. 120 per year would be able to absorb that expenditure. The amount of unemployment, therefore, that we shall face as a result of these changes will be to the tune of 1/10th of our entire national income.

This is the prospect, and the proposals of my Honourable friend seek to meet this grim prospect in three ways. First, through the construction of factories and houses; secondly, by the expansion of large scale industries, and thirdly, though ameliorative schemes put into operation in the provinces. So far as building operations are concerned, they will account for only 25 crores. So far as industrial expansion is concerned, my Honourable friend has given many incentives to industry to undertake the burden. He has completely removed the Excess Profits Tax. He has reduced the import duties on machinery and on raw materials needed by industry. He has held out the assistance of an Industrial Finance Corporation. These are no doubt valuable contributions, and they are valuable over a long term of years. But, Sir, I make bold to say, without being excessively pessimistic, that they will have very little bearing on the immediate situation so far as the next year or two are concerned. The appeal to the profit motive is all very well, but it is not enough. It is not enough in the absence of certain other ingredients. The incentive of profit which the Honourable Member has held out to industry, however welcome it might be, is not going to operate immediately, for the simple reason that machinery is available neither in this country nor from abroad at this stage. In the absence of equipment into which to convert those resources, industry will not and cannot respond, with all the will in the world, to the offer which my Honourable Friend has made.

Secondly, the absorptive capacity of our country is itself low in terms of machinery and plant, as stated by the Honourable Member himself, and these facts are going to render fairly useless the concessions which my Honourable Friend has made to large-scale industry in this country. What it will do will be to add to the reserves of these industries, no doubt to bear fruit in future. It will bring very little added production or absorption of unemployment which is going to be caused in the next year or two. Therefore, the only hope lies in the ameliorative schemes of public spending which the Provinces might undertake.

I would like to indicate here what I think is the nature of the schemes which are called for by the present situation. I suggest, Sir, that the first criterion which should be borne in mind by the Central and Provincial Governments is that of providing for the urgent necessities of the people—food and clothing and other necessary wants. The second criterion should be that the labour and materials needed for these industries should be locally available. We should not have to wait for the import of specialised equipment or machinery. In other words, it is to the development of cottage industries that the largest measure of attention needs to be turned. It is notorious that only through the development of hand-loom weaving can the cloth shortage be met. But handloom weaving is not of much use unless there is yarn available, and that can only come if hand-spinning is proportionately encouraged. That is why hand-loom weaving and hand-spinning should be in the fore-front of the programme in the coming year. There are other industries which can also meet the basic needs of the people. This is an unprecedented opportunity when a big campaign can be launched throughout the country for the development of handicrafts and small industries. There is a vacuum to be filled up owing to the cessation to a large extent of production and imports. That vacuum, for some time to come, can only be filled up if our cottage industries are revived and a terrific incentive given to them in the coming months. That will also provide fuller employment and give the small man in this country his proper place in the fight against poverty, destitution and hunger.

If I am asked how this ambitious programme of a mass revival of cottage industries throughout the country can be financed, I would answer that there is no lack of funds. There was no need for my Honourable Friend, if he agrees with that sentiment, to have reduced taxation at all or to the extent that he has done. The reduction of income-tax, beneficial as it may be to the middle classes, has an aspect which is anti-national. That aspect is that the money that is left in the pockets of the urban middle classes today is likely to go to the purchase of imported products.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Guntur cum Nellore: Non-Muhammadian Rural): And to black markets.

Mr. M. R. Masani: In other words I suggest that the relief in income-tax is going to act as a subsidy on imports from the United Kingdom and other countries. I would like the Honourable Member, if that is not sound, to deny it.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: It is rubbish.

Mr. M. R. Masani: If it is rubbish, I will repeat it and I would ask the Honourable Member to deny it by argument and not by expletives.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: You support your statement by arguments.

Mr. M. R. Masani: I support this argument by saying that the increased purchasing power in the hands of the middle classes in the cities will to a large extent go towards the purchase of consumers' goods which it is intended to import into this country. I want that that extra purchasing power to go to the purchase of hand-made products coming from our rural industries. This is a clear-cut ideological difference and it is no good denying a proposition which has to be faced and either accepted or controverted and given up. I suggest that, if instead of abolishing the Excess Profits Tax altogether, it had been reduced to 50 or 60 per cent, as in the United Kingdom, the cause of social justice would have been better served by what remained being devoted to making for cheaper public utilities and freer social services. This country needs medical relief. It needs education. It needs cheaper public utilities of every kind, particularly transport and communications. And those are the public services for which I am afraid this Budget has not done very much.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: All the money they can spend—every penny of it.

Mr. M. R. Masani: That, Sir, is an offer which would have been better made if definite allocations had been made for the coming months. Take for example the case of the Posts and Telegraphs. I believe there is a profit of Rs. 11 crores accruing from this Department. I am glad that the whole of it will not go into General Revenues this year, but only 75 per cent. Even that, I think, is unwarranted. If this huge profit is there, it should be converted into relief for those who use that service, through a cheaper post-card and other ways of sending the money back to their pockets, which would be very much more democratic, very much more a measure of social justice, than to take it into the General Revenues.

Sir Cowasjee Jehangir (Nominated Non-Official): It would increase the deficit.

Mr. M. R. Masani: Sir, I am not concerned with that at the moment. The relief in direct taxation and the complete abolition of the E.P.T. was not justified. I am arguing on the basis of a smaller reduction of direct taxation, which would have left the Honourable the Finance Member and the Government with larger funds. I am suggesting that a part of these could have been given to certain positive purposes. I was mentioning the Posts and Telegraphs. The practice of making big profits out of the service compares badly with, shall we say, the position in the United States of America.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Or the United Kingdom.

Mr. M. R. Masani: In the United Kingdom it is more complicated. It makes profits on postage and subsidised telegrams. But so far as the United States are concerned, they subsidise their postal services to the extent of Rs. 6 crores per year. We draw Rs. 7 or 8 crores out of our postal services this year; the United States spends Rs. 4 crores in postal services for the benefit of the small man who uses the posts and the telegraphs. The result is that while the American citizen uses his posts and telegraphs freely, in this country they are beyond the reach of large numbers of people. The United States have a population only a fourth of our own and yet we find that the United States have a yearly turnover of 29,000 million letters. We have a yearly turnover of 1,575 million letters. The United States use 218 million telegrams in a year. We use 28 million telegrams—with a population four times that of the United States!

Therefore, Sir, my concrete suggestion to the Honourable Member would be even now to consider, either by altering the taxation proposals or by leaving if he thinks fit, a larger uncovered deficit, subsidies to the Provinces so that those who cannot find the purchasing power to buy their ration of food may find it possible to do so. I suggest that an offer be made to the Provinces—not a vague offer but a concrete offer with an allocation of so many crores of rupees—that to any Province which puts its hand into its pocket and helps those sections of its population who have not got the purchasing power at present to buy their three-fourths pound ration, the Central Government will make a pro rata grant. I suggest that this is in the spirit of the statement made by the Finance Member in his opening speech, and that if that concrete offer is made, it will encourage the Provincial governments to go in for food subsidies for the production and distribution of food; and it will make it possible for public opinion in the Provinces to force their hands and to put pressure on the Provincial Governments and say: "Here is a grant made by the Central Government which we can draw upon if you from your Provincial revenues find a corresponding amount to put in for the purpose of food subsidies."

That, Sir, is the way I see these finance proposals. I do feel that, without intending it, my Honourable Friend the Finance Member has not carried out those axioms of social justice and equitable distribution to which he referred in his opening statement.

I think the relief to industry, welcome as it may be, is not going to and cannot, play the part which is expected of it in the near future and that if the Honourable Member had planted grain instead of planting trees, the sufferings of the people of this country in the coming twelve months would have been mitigated to a much larger extent.

That brings me to an entirely different aspect of the budget before us—I refer to the defence estimates. The defence estimates this year—I speak subject to correction in case my arithmetic has taken me astray—account for 80 per cent of the revenues derived from taxation, roughly 80 per cent of the tax revenue. This compares very unfavourably with the average of 50 or 55 per cent that the defence services used to take away from our productive profession of any other people, whether the German or the Japanese people. We budget—it is a peace time budget, a budget on which we are embarking at a time when the United Nations Organisation is supposed to guarantee us peace and security for many many generations to come. In terms of the poverty of our people, I suggest it is an insufferable burden, and it is a burden which is thoroughly unproductive: it does not give any return to the people of this country—it is a purely precautionary measure. There is one particular item of that expenditure which I think is repugnant to the feelings of the people of this country—I refer to the provision of financing the Indian occupation troops in Japan. I cannot too strongly protest against that measure. The people of this country do not want any lot or part in the humiliation or repression of any other people, whether the German or the Japanese people. We have no quarrel with them. Now that their war lords have been overthrown, we want those peoples to be left free to build up their own life without let or hindrance from Indian or other troops parading in the streets of Tokyo. The policy of thus stirring up hatred for our country is one which is bad for our country and for the future of international relationships.

Early in the general debate on the budget certain references were made to menaces which exist on certain parts of our frontiers. The Deputy Leader of my party referred to these and asked for the means with which such a menace can be met, and the Honourable the War Secretary confirmed those dangers. I would like in a few minutes to amplify and supplement what was said on that point. I think it is overlooked that purely military defence is useless against the kind of menace and the kind of danger that might possibly threaten the Indian frontiers. It cannot be overlooked that totalitarian states wage ideological warfare: their real power lies not so much in armed force as in the power of certain ideas that are brought into play as an aid to their foreign policy. If today a certain power on our northwest frontier, if today Russia, follows the old policy of expansion, it does not do so with the obsolete weapons of the Czar. It does so with new ideas and through the exploitation of certain very genuine emotions and sentiments; and no amount of militarisation, no extra guns or aircraft, can guard this country against such a menace if the political basis of the State in this country, if the psychology of the people of this country is not right. Today it does not need any stating that the entire country is seething with unrest. People have seen the British Government in full retreat on the international field. You sacrificed one ally in Poland; you have almost sacrificed another friend in Iran; and people are very doubtful whether you will stand by Turkey when the turn of that country comes. That being the position, a mood of defeatism arises, and a happy breeding ground for totalitarian ideas is to be found in this country. Only this morning it was, I think, that I read an excerpt from the New Times in Moscow which, referring to "Feasting in the midst of plague" in India, blames the British "colonisers" for the food crisis in India, according to Moscow Radio:

"Despite the crisis", says the paper "the British authorities arranged a victory festival in Delhi. The Indian public are more incensed by the festivities for the reason that the strange theory is being advanced again that the Indian people are themselves to blame for their disturbances."

The New Times quoted the British publicist, Wickham Steed, as saying that the population of India has a tendency to grow faster than its means of subsistence. It added:

"The Indian people will continue to adhere to the opinion that after all it would be better to be masters in their own country, which possesses abundant resources and enriches colonisers who keep its economy at a low level of development for their own selfish ends."

Now, it cannot be denied that this is also the view that a very large and overwhelming majority of the people in this country hold; and there is a danger that such honest sentiments may be fomented for the militarist ends of other countries. In other words, the situation in India today is, as an earlier speaker put it, an invitation or a temptation to aggress.

There are two ways in which this danger and the need for our defence can be met. One way was expounded by Mr. Winston Churchill the other day. He referred to the desirability and the need for a union of English speaking peoples or races to maintain the peace of the world, to act as the world's policeman. The Americans and the British between them were to be the law-abiding forces who would keep the "lesser breeds without the law" in check and make them behave themselves. I suggest that that is a policy that will not do. We have had evidence now that distinguished scientists are to be found in the United Kingdom and in Canada who, without any financial reward, are prepared to betray the secrets of their country to a foreign power. Why have they done it?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Quislings.

Mr. M. R. Masani: They are not quislings—they are misguided intellectuals.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: I know them.

Mr. M. R. Masani: I do not know them and I have no sympathy with them; but I do not think they are quislings. They are eminent scientists who, through misunderstanding of what the Soviet Union stands for, prefer loyalty to that country to loyalty to their own. If that is the position among these ruling races, these free countries of England and Canada, one can imagine what the average reaction in this country would be. I have no hesitation in saying that illusions about the progressive and socialist character of the Russian Government are immensely wide-spread in this country; and to further the illusion and to spread it, you have an organised 'Fifth Column' functioning freely and openly in this country . . .

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Encouraged by this Government!

Mr. M. R. Masani: Encouraged by this Government and perhaps subsidised by this Government in the past years. That is the position; and if Mr. Churchill, or any Honourable members here who may feel like him, believe that, while remaining a subject community, this country can be mobilised in a war for the defence of the British empire against any enemy, however pernicious or heinous he may be, then I say with all respect that they are living in a fool's paradise. Even the United States of America will not support them in such a policy. I shall quote from an American paper which says:

"Mr. Churchill proposes an alliance, half-slave and half-free, with the British Empire representing slavery."

And it goes on to say—

"The United States is confronted today by a terrible dilemma. Are we to join with Britain in another crusade knowing the selfish ends for which Britain wages these wars? Or are we to allow Russian tyranny to spread unchecked, with all menace to free institutions everywhere that Russia today presents?"

That, Sir, is the dilemma of a free and independent country like America. India's dilemma, I am afraid, will be easier to solve, and therefore I would suggest that this Government will have to devise an alternative policy to that laid down by Mr. Winston Churchill.

That alternative policy would be not to accept another war as inevitable, but to remove the causes of a future war, to remove the incitements to an alliance with totalitarianism, to stop India and other subject countries of the East from being a happy breeding ground for totalitarian ideas. That way, in other words, is to liquidate your Empire. That is the only way in which you can prevent World War III from being put on the agenda in the next few years. That alternative solution has been indicated more than once recently by Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru who has referred to the part that a free India could play in a congeries of free Asiatic powers. If the colonies in Asia were liberated along with India, then it will be possible for peace loving countries like China and India to rally the smaller countries of the East to such effect that you can then hope to fight totalitarian menace without having to wage a world war for the purpose. You would so isolate this militarist state that it could not burst out, surrounded as it would be by happy and free, liberty-loving peoples.

But, Sir, that is not the policy that we find operating here. It is true that the British Foreign Secretary, Mr. Ernest Bevin, has been trying to carry out a courageous foreign policy in so far as the Western countries are concerned, but he has his Achilles' heel. He tries to rally the democrats in France, Holland, Belgium and the countries of Europe, but we do not find democrats being rallied either in Indonesia or in this country. Hongkong is being held against the rights of the Chinese people. The people in Indonesia, far from being supported and rallied to democracy, are being thwarted in the maintenance of their freedom, and in India you have democratic socialists like Jai Prakash Narain and Ram Manohar Lohia not only not being released, but the infliction of physical indignities on them not being remedied and not being investigated with any seriousness. I do not mind saying that after the British Parliamentary Delegation visited Jai Prakash Narain and Dr. Lohia in Agra prison, I had a talk with a member of the Delegation and he told me that he had the highest regard for these prisoners. They had expressed their good will for the British Labour Government and they wanted the experiment in Democratic Socialism to succeed both in England and in the world as a whole. These representatives of the British Labour Party in Parliament, after seeing these two people, came to the conclusion that if they had been socialists in this country they would have behaved exactly as Jai Prakash Narain and Lohia had done. And yet, Sir, the paradox exists that under a social democratic government which rallies socialists and democrats throughout the Western part of this globe, in this country and in Asia generally the application of that policy is not even being attempted.

It is an axiom, Sir, that if you want to go to equity, you must go with clean hands. The trouble with British foreign policy is that it cannot face

Russia with clean hands. When they talk about Poland, India is brought up. When they talk about Iran, Indonesia can be thrown in their face. I shall be told that the Cabinet Mission is coming out precisely to put those matters right, and that I am banging against an open door. I am glad that this Mission consists of socialists. I am glad that in the announcement which was made by Lord Pethick Lawrence, a reference was made to the desirability of something being done in India in the interest not only of India and of Britain but of world peace, and I hope that the professions that have been made will be translated into practice.

If I may end by giving an analogy from the last century, Britain has today lost its material supremacy and its military predominance. I would invite the British Socialist and Labour Government to try to reassert that supremacy in the moral sphere. That is the only way in which a democratic

3 P.M. Britain can have an important part to play in the world of the future. It was a British Foreign Secretary in the last century, Canning, I think it was, who said he had "called a new world into existence to redress the balance of the old." I would suggest to the British Labour Government, before it is too late, to bring in a new world—the world of a free India and a free Asia—to redress the balance that they have lost in the West.

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari (Member for Planning and Development): I wish to make a few observations about the Planning and Development Department. During these days of oratorical festival, I had hoped to escape the need for making a speech but my Honourable friend Mr. Yusuf Abdoola Haroon approached me as the Assembly was closing the other day and said he was going to attack the Planning and Development Department and had various very cogent things to say and that I should be in my seat. As a good servant of this House, I was in my seat when the Honourable Member spoke and took copious notes; but Sir, although the Honourable Member has the face of a cherub he has the perceptions of a tank and like the tank he blundered from one inaccuracy into another as I shall presently hope to show in regard to the working of my Department.

His first criticism was about the panels, about the 26 or 29 panels constituted to make plans for the different industries. He said that in their constitution there was no approach made to organisations or industries interested. That is a completely inaccurate statement, call it, a terminological inexactitude if you like. Every panel has been constituted after a good deal of consultation by Sir Ardeshir Dalal who himself has an unrivalled knowledge of Indian industries. They were appointed by him. You have got to look only to the constitution of any of these panels to see that they are composed of men who at some sacrifice to their ordinary avocations attended them and have done a very good job of work. I thought it was no good just saying that they had done a good job of work. I thought I should try and get the facts about one of the more important panels, facts about its constitution and its work and I have got them here. I will tell the House about the Steel panel which is one of the more important panels. The steel panel is composed of the following five people: Sir Pdamji Ginwala of Scob, Sir J. J. Gandhi of Tatas, Mr. Bashir, Representative of the Re-rollers, Mr. Hain of Braithwaites and Mr. Frank Parr, late Steel Commissioner of the Government of India. During the period April to September last, the following action was taken by this panel. Questionnaires were issued to all the primary and secondary producers in the country, to all Provincial Governments and States, 140 re-rolling mills in the country, 52 European and Indian Chambers of Commerce, all the refractory manufacturers, and structural engineering firms, wagon building firms, shipbuilding and ship repairing firms, to all Central Government Departments who had post war schemes in which iron and steel could be used. Some of the re-rolling mills in Bombay and Calcutta were visited, the Mysore Iron and Steel Works in South India, and the representatives of the Government of Madras were examined regarding their post war plans. Since the return of the two Members from abroad, the panel has held

[Sir Akbar Hydari.]

23 meetings, visited the works of the Tata Iron and Steel company, the Mysore Iron and Steel works and others too numerous for me to mention. On 20th February, this year, it met representatives of provincial and Indian State Governments and their industries committees and discussed the provisional recommendation of the panel. During this month, it is proposed to hold further meetings before finalising the report which it is expected will be submitted to the Government before the end of this month.

What I have said about Steel applies for most of the other panels so that I do not think that the Planning and Development Department can be accused either of not having constituted these panels or of working them without the assistance of those best suited to advise. The speaker who followed him, my Honourable friend, the gallant and learned Lieut.-Colonel Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad lamented the preponderance of business interests and deplored the absence of any regard for the consumer. Apart from the fact that that again is not correct, it shows the complete absence of co-ordination in the policy in this matter which has been put forward in behalf of the Muslim League party.

Now, Sir, as an example of the interest displayed by the Government of India with regard to consumers' interests, I would draw attention to the communique issued when we passed orders on the cement industry. It was thought that one way of protecting the consumers against excessive prices was to prevent a monopoly developing in the industry and several licenses have therefore been deliberately given to interests other than A.C.C. and Dalmia. I do not think I need labour this point any longer, of course, except to say this that if we, in India, want industrialisation, the consumer like any other citizen will have to pay for it. You cannot industrialise a country without the taxpayer to some extent paying for such industrialisation.

Mr. T. Chapman-Mortimer: Question.

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: You do not know.

Mr. P. J. Griffiths (Assam: European): You have other methods.

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: Look at Australia. All I wish to say is that there should be a mean drawn between how far you should protect the consumer and how far you should assist industry.

The second point which my Honourable friend raised was that they are not fully informed of the activities of the Planning and Development Department. I cannot help that. We have issued any amount of communiques and Press Notes and they have all been appearing in newspapers. I do not know whether the Honourable Member reads them. Any number of documents emanate from my Department and copies of the same are all placed in the library of the House. For example, last year, Sir Ardeshir Dalal issued a statement of Government industrial policy. Most of the queries which the Honourable Member raised are answered in this book. This is in the library of the House. I really cannot help it if Honourable Members make allegations without first ascertaining facts.

The next point of objection which he raised was about the location of industries. He said that the location of industries had been decided upon without reference to provinces. Now, Sir, that again is a complete terminological inexactitude. If Honourable Members had read this pamphlet, "Statement of Government Industrial Policy" which was issued before the panels began to work, they would have seen in Paragraph 15 the following statement:

"The Government of India proposes without delay to enter into discussions with Provinces and with the Indian States in the light of the policy stated above and are confident that it will be possible to evolve a machinery which will enable an agreed policy to be implemented in practice in a spirit of friendly co-operation on the part of all parties concerned."

That policy is being followed at the present moment in the industries in respect of which orders have been passed about the creation of additional capacity, so that, I do not know really why the Honourable Member made that particular statement.

Then, Sir, another statement which he made was that these decisions were taken without deciding whether the location would be suitable at these centres. This is altogether absurd. I may tell the Honourable Member that there have been three industries in which matters have come to a point when orders could be passed; of these one is cement. Does my Honourable friend really think that we have given permission for the erection of additional factories without making enquiries as to what are the most suitable places for their location. I can assure you, Sir, that that is not the case.

The other one is cotton textile. There the Government were advised by the representatives of the industry. Is it likely that they would put up a plant for the location of so many thousand spindles here and so many spindles there without taking into consideration coal, water supply and other facilities. I do not want to take up much of the time of the House, and without going into details, I can assure my Honourable friend that if at any time, he wishes to have information as to the reasons for the location of this or that cement factory, or this or that cotton textile mill, I shall be very happy to provide him with such information.

I have omitted one point. He wanted that the reports of panels should be placed in the library of the House. As soon as we have done with them, I certainly do so, though judging from the lack of knowledge of the activities of the Department, I do not think that mere putting copies of panel reports in the library of the House will increase the knowledge of the Honourable Member to any great extent.

Mr. K. O. Neogy (Dacca Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, If I may interrupt the Honourable Member, is it a fact that at least in one case a panel has not met although it was appointed more than a year ago, and the Chairmanship is practically going a-begging still?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: Yes, Sir; it is the panel on paints and oils.

Mr. T. Chapman-Mortimer: Is the Honourable Member aware that in this House we asked his predecessor to give us these publications and let us know what was going on in these various planning committees and so on, and it was refused?

An Honourable Member: Because we would not understand them.

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: I did not say the Honourable Members do not understand them; all that I say is that they do not read them. My Honourable friend Mr. Neogy has spotted a weak chink in my armour; but he knows perfectly well the reasons why the prospective Chairman of the Paints and Oils panel has not taken charge of his work. I do not think this is a proper place to discuss the reasons for that.

My Honourable friend from the deserts of Sind said that a businessman should be allowed "to proceed normally" and there should be no interruption in the free play of his wishes. I think that Honourable gentlemen opposite know what happened to the country before controls were started when businessmen were allowed to act normally. I do not think that there would be any large body of support in this House in favour of the view that when the public fisc is to be charged with the expenses of increased industrialisation the State should have no hand in regulating and restraining the normality of business methods. But the policy of Government in this matter as regards control was again stated by my predecessor Sir Ardeshir Dalal in paragraph 14 of this document whose perusal I would commend to the House.

"In a planned economy" (and I imagine the country needs a planned economy) "it is impossible to do without controls. Government consider that such controls should be the very minimum required. They propose that apart from licensing, controls should be undertaken to achieve the following objects"—

[Sir Akbar Hydari]

And I should like to read the first of these objects which I think will commend itself to the House.

"To secure a balanced investment in industry agriculture and the social services. It will be necessary after the war" (this was written while the war was on) "to ensure that the available capital resources are utilised on a balanced plan of agricultural, industrial and other development and that inside the field of industrial development a balance is kept between manufacture of capital and consumer goods. Agricultural development will be undertaken wholly under the auspices of the State. That is because the bulk of the holders of land are poor and cannot themselves finance, at any rate initially, improvements such as contour bunding and irrigation by lift pumps. In many cases it will be possible to recover the cost ultimately," etc.

I need not go through all the objects. So that it is no use my Honourable friend urging that the businessman should be allowed to proceed normally; because if this country wants a planned economy there must be control in the interests of the very consumer for whom Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad spoke with such eloquence the other day.

Then, Sir, he fired off another charge that there was no co-ordination between the Planning and Development Department and other Departments of the Government of India; that in fact the Planning and Development Department did not see the plans of the other Departments who acted as they thought fit. I am afraid that again it is completely and utterly incorrect. The appointment of Sir Ardeshir Dalal marked a change of policy on the part of the Government of India.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Did his resignation also mark another change of policy?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: I am coming to that and I will explain. Before his appointment and the constitution of this Department it was felt that reconstruction (as it was then called) could best be carried out by each of the executive departments of State, whether it was War Transport or Posts and Air or anything else. And those Departments got going with their plans. Then it was felt, in view of the general interest shown in the country in favour of having some coordinated plan of development, that that could best be achieved by having at the centre a minister who would draw the threads together and present Government from time to time with the different sections of the plan. And that is what Sir Ardeshir Dalal set himself to do. Ever since his appointment no plan of a Government Department has been sanctioned without it having been first discussed with the Planning and Development Department and later by a Committee of the Executive Council which was at one time called the Reconstruction Committee of Council and which is now called the Co-ordination Committee of Council, of which the Planning and Development Member is the Vice-President and on which on most occasions His Excellency the Viceroy himself presides. So there is no question of lack of co-ordination in so far as the different units of the Government of India are concerned. But then my Honourable friend might have said, "What about the provincial plans, their five-year plans?" The fact is that every Province has submitted its provincial five-year plan covering the whole gamut of provincial activity,—agriculture, health, irrigation, and all the numerous activities,—to the Central Government in the Planning and Development Department. Some of the Provinces have finalised their plans, with others the plans are still provisional. The intention of Government, as I think I announced in answer to a query the other day, is that before many weeks have passed they would consider the amount of money which should be granted to the Provinces for the specific purposes which the Central Government approve in their several five-year plans; and in doing that to allot, according to our judgment, priorities as between the different objectives,—health, agriculture, irrigation works, and so on.

One of my Honourable friends opposite pleaded for particular emphasis being given to rural uplift. Of course there is no question that if these plans materialise,—as I hope with the aid of money which the Centre is going to give them they will materialise—the principal beneficiary will be the rural population because the greater portion of our population is in the villages and not in the towns. So that there again—to come back to my point—in so far as the provinces are concerned there is no lack of co-ordination as between the Centre and them.

I will just come to a point raised by Dr. Sir Zia Uddin before dealing with Sir Ardeshir Dalal's resignation. What Dr. Sir Zia Uddin said was that Government in their planning have only seen to the profits which an industrialist would get, that means to say that we were interested only in those industries which are likely to yield good dividends. In this connection I would like to read out again from the same document what the Government's view is:

"Government attach particular importance to the development of those industries which constitute the foundation of modern industrial life, such as the iron and steel industry, the heavy engineering industries, the machine tool industry, the heavy chemical industry, and so on. But while the development of these industries must take high priority, it must form part of a balanced plan in which due place is given to consumption goods industries."

And in the same report a list of twenty industries, which Government call 'basic', has been given which we consider important and should be established in this country. If private capital is not available for the establishment of such industries, Government have expressed their intention that they will come in with state assistance. I have only to recall to the House the answer I gave to a question the other day in which I announced the coming of a Mission from the United Kingdom to advise us in the matter of the establishment of an aircraft industry in this country. I do not think that there is any reason for the charge that we have only gone in our planning for the safe and profit-making industries and not for what is necessary for the country as a whole.

Sir, the question of Sir Ardeshir Dalal's resignation has been repeatedly mentioned in this House in order to make every one's flesh creep, and also connected with it has been the resignation of Dr. Vakil, and it has been implied that the reasons for both the resignations were not dissimilar. That, Sir, again is entirely incorrect. Sir Ardeshir Dalal, with whom I was associated almost from the very day that he joined office here, resigned for personal reasons. There were no other reasons, but personal reasons.

An Honourable Member: What were those personal reasons?

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: Now I ask you, you have yourself seen the statement of what was done under his charge by the Department, you have yourself seen the statement which he issued to the press and to which wide publicity was given. It was a remarkable achievement for the eighteen months that he was in charge of the Department. Do you feel that a man who had struggled, as he did, for 18 months and was bringing what he had done to fruition, was likely to throw that away and not see the fruits of his work. That is not psychologically correct. There were no other reasons but reasons which he himself gave which were personal. Dr. Vakil resigned for completely dissimilar reasons and if you wish for further information, you will get a chance when I reply to a question in the House on his resignation. I do not think I need say very much more.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena (Lucknow Division: Non-Muhammadan): What about Dr. Vakil's statement?

Mr. President: Order, order. Honourable Member's time need not be taken up now by other matters.

The Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari: If you will permit me two or three minutes more, I would like to end up on a note of appeal. About twenty-five years ago when I was still a very young man I happened to attend a function in honour of the late Lord Sinha. At that function a great friend of India, Mr. Montague, said, "I look forward to the day when Indians shall walk the highways of their own land conscious that they are the masters of its destinies". Sir, we are on the eve of being able to do that after twenty-five years. Now, I ask, Sir, whether the sort of statements made, wild statements, statements which are not based on facts,—whether such statements should be made by legislators who will soon be members of a sovereign legislation? I think not, Sir.

[Sir Akbar Hydari]

Mr. Geoffrey W. Tyson (Bengal: European): Mr. President, Sir. I do not know whether my Honourable friend Mr. Masani after listening to the Honourable Sir Akbar Hydari feels any better as a Socialist, but the affect it has on me is to make me all the more firm believer in the virtues of private enterprise.

The subject of controls was dealt with by the Honourable the Finance Member in his speech introducing the Budget and I will, with your permission, quote one or two lines of what he then said:

"The House will appreciate that the sudden termination of active hostilities did not end the difficulties and abnormalities of the country's economy which the war brought into being. In discharge of its responsibility for the economic health of the country, the Government has of necessity had to maintain the system of controls, both economic and financial, which was developed during the war, but although some of the controls have come to stay, since you cannot have a planned economy without some controls, the remainder are being, and will continue to be, withdrawn as soon as they have ceased to serve the purpose for which they were designed. Indeed, some 150 control measures have already been so withdrawn."

I will confine what I have to say about Government controls to their impact upon trade, commerce and industry. When Sir Akbar Hydari just now was talking about controls for the purposes of developing irrigation works and bunding and so on, I can assure him that we have no dispute on that matter. I am certain that you cannot build a bund without some form of control, and we do not need to be intellectually convinced of that. Many of us, who watched the operations of Government during the war years, have come reluctantly but definitely to the conclusion that certain vested interests seems to have grown up in the last five or six years in the maintenance of controls. It is not a mere coincidence, but this vested interest appears to have developed along with the growth of a new war time bureaucracy, which is the inevitable result of vastly swollen departments of Government which have come into being since 1939. Many of those departments, all of them, I presume, were in greater or less degree necessary and it is not my desire to belittle the achievements of the temporary civil servant whose services were necessary for the successful prosecution of the war—indeed for a brief and unhappy period I was one myself—but I do feel that the emphasis today should be on the restoration of peace conditions and not on the perpetuation of wartime liabilities. I am not going to suggest that the only way to get rid of controls would be to sack the controllers, but it is an idea that Government might bear in mind as a last resort. In this matter of controls, I fear the new bureaucracy is displaying the usual excessive zeal of the convert, and that the glorious army of controllers, which is largely composed of the new bureaucracy, has come to believe in controls for their own sake. It is one of things which I think must justly be said for another generation of civil servants, of whom the Finance Member and the Member for Planning and Development are distinguished representatives, that their faith in such devices of Government as controls is tempered, shall we say, by experience and by failure. Now it is good news to learn from the Finance Member that 150 controls have disappeared; but it would have been more satisfactory if we could have been told that it was 150 out of a total of so many hundreds. It is rather like telling a man going into business that he can have ten per cent. of the profits when you know perfectly well the profit is nothing and that ten per cent. will still amount to nothing. 150 controls out of how many hundreds or thousands?

and Mr. P. J. Griffiths: Countless!

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: 150 millions!

Mr. Geoffrey W. Tyson: Perhaps he will enlighten us when he comes to reply to the debate. If it is 150 out of 150 millions, we shall have to press this matter even more strongly.

Now, Sir, it is not merely that our controls and temporary bureaucrats, like mother-in-laws have become stock jokes. But more seriously the plain fact is that during the last six years the whole situation and method of Government in this country has been altered by the accretion of hundreds of controls upon hundreds of controls. In the next few weeks an attempt is going to be made to devise a new constitution for India in supersession of the 1919 Act, and what I believe is called the 1935 Act as amended by Schedule IX. We on these benches, I believe everybody in this House, wish these attempts the greatest and the speediest possible measure of success. But in point of fact, neither of the Acts, neither 1919 or 1935, today, as a result of this elaborate network of Government by executive action, is recognisable in its original form. Anybody who thinks that some future step is going to have reference to 1939, if taken now, is really sadly mistaken. It is not so. The 1946 constitution of India is government by edict over a very large field of our activities, and I am quite certain that whatever the limitations of the 1919 and 1935 Acts, that was not the intention of their framers. They have in fact changed the whole face of the administration of the country in a way which was never contemplated either by the people who gave or the people who accepted those constitutions. Well, Sir, having railed in this fashion against control, let me say frankly that nobody in these benches believes in an undiluted regime of laissez faire in which everything is going to be free for all. But I want to suggest quite seriously to Government that in whatever way their constitutional future may develop, in whatever way they choose now to set the economic course of the country, they should undertake a re-examination of the whole of their policy of controls in the light of the new and urgent economic tasks and the social ambitions of the peace. We would like to see this and we regard it with as much approval as we approve of the Finance Member's proposals for a taxation enquiry committee, or quite as much as we approve of his proposals for an examination of the wages structure. We believe that an overhaul and an examination, and a rigorous and ruthless inspection of the system of 50 million controls is quite as urgent as any of these things. It is quite as imperative that it should be undertaken with as little delay as possible. The whole underlying tone of the Finance Member's budget emphasises the great importance which he attaches on the setting of economic and industrial forces in motion, which will counterbalance the deflationary factors that are emerging with the end of the war; and on that matter I find myself, for different reasons may be, in entire agreement with the very fluent exposition of that aspect of the subject which was given by Mr. Masani a few minutes ago. I think the Finance Member's own budget proposals do keep this objective steadily in mind. But I suggest, Sir, that the time has come when the economic departments of Government, not merely the Finance Department, should investigate their control policy along two main lines which I will delineate. I do not, nor do any of my colleagues, advocate the indiscriminate abolition of controls, for the continuation of some of them is indisputably necessary in the circumstances in which the country finds itself today. Nobody for a single moment would suggest that the controls affecting the procurement and distribution of food could be removed. But I do suggest most sincerely that the economic departments of Government should ask themselves two leading questions, the first of which I would say is this: How far are existing controls standing between a manufacturer and an access to his raw materials. And secondly: How far are existing controls standing between a manufacturer and his markets? A few weeks ago a proprietor of a medium sized concern—in fact a small Indian manufacturer in Calcutta—came to see me, and I would ask the House to remember that speaking on behalf of the Congress Party, Mr. Masani attached considerable importance to the encouragement of small and cottage industries. This manufacturer came to see me, and pointed out that during the war he had been able, with war orders to employ 2,500 semi-skilled Indian workmen. At the moment when he came to see me, he had been obliged to discharge his labour force down to the figure of 300. He assured me, and I have no reason to disbelieve him, that he had sufficient orders to go on at the old tempo for at least twelve or fifteen months. And he also assured me that there was the necessary raw materials in India and available for him to carry on his work at the highest possible capacity. But for four months he had been arguing with Controllers in Calcutta and in Delhi to obtain certain essential raw materials. Since I came here at the beginning of this session his position has improved, and he has since told me that he was employing 900 men. I suggest quite seriously to the Finance Member that that is an example of the forces which, if properly treated, can be made to play their part in the conditions he is seeking to create against the deflationary effect of the sudden withdrawal of Indian and Allied military expenditure in this country. I suggest two main lines of enquiry. He should see how far the controls are standing between the manufacturer and what he wants, the raw materials, in order to produce the finished goods: and secondly, he should see how far their controls are standing between them and the market which the manufacturers want to reach. I believe that if the Government pursue these two main lines of enquiry I am sure that they will find that many departmental edicts and regulations are far from serving any real purpose and are merely stultifying the country's changeover from a war to peace-time economy and standing in the way of the broad objects which, on the whole, this peace time budget seeks to achieve. All Governments, I think even the Government of India, must realise that however well intentioned their plans may be, they are still (in spite of Sir Akbar Hydari's communiques, brochures, leaflets and what not, to which he referred this afternoon) very far from clear to trade and industry, whom the Finance Member is calling upon to make a big, if not the chief contribution to the solution of the economic difficulties which lie ahead of him.

My colleague, Mr. Morris, made a brief reference yesterday to the subject of capital control and that, Sir, is the only control which I will refer to by name individually in the few more moments that I intend to speak, and in doing so I should like to say how very efficiently and expeditiously the work of the control has been carried out by that bureaucrat, that civil servant of the old school, I mean Sir Alan Llyod.

The Government's attitude, I suggest, towards investment policy is vague and indeterminate and, I say without offence, is typical of their approach to many sectors of the economic field. When he introduced his budget the Honourable the Finance Member said:

"Another matter which is under the consideration of my Department is that of the planning of investment, both public and private.....Investigation is required to determine whether a national investment board should be set up for this purpose and if so, how it should be constituted and on what lines it should work."

These are pleasant words, but what trade and industry really want to know is how soon and on what lines the investment policy is finally to be shaped. I can assure the Honourable the Finance Member, if any assurance from me is necessary, that there is plenty of money waiting for investment in worthwhile projects. It does not seem to me that there is the slightest use in appealing to industry in this country to play its part in building a new Heaven and a new Earth for the Planning Department and then hamstringing industry with unnecessary controls deriving from half-backed, socialist aspirations and theory. The time has come for a clear declaration of intentions in the financial and economic field for the present and for the future, which will dispose of the doubts and the hesitations which five years of control and 18 months of postwar planning have engendered in the minds of both professional advocates of industry like myself and of the public at large.

Sir, I support the Finance Member's motion.

Sri E. Venkatasubba Reddiar (South Arcot cum Chingleput: Non-Muhammadan Rura'): Sir, when I look at the copy of the Demands for Grants which has been supplied I am mystified. I was a member of a Provincial Assembly where we used to get these demands for grants with detailed information in books of foolscap size but here I find of the many demands for grants the major portion is occupied by the item Other Charges. We do not know what those Other Charges are. I shall refer to some of the items under Demand No. 15, which relates to the Department of Information and Broadcasting which has become so very famous due to my friend Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar.

There are two items under this grant to which I would particularly draw the attention of the Honourable the Finance Member. Under sub-heading E. 'Other Charges' come to Rs. 7,14,800 and the total demand under that item is Rs. 14,10,500. And then under 'G' the total demand is Rs. 33,45,000 of which 'Other Charges' come to Rs. 23,22,900. Then there are three heads—'Demand No. 59, Miscellaneous Departments', 'Demand No. 66, Miscellaneous' and 'Demand No. 67, Miscellaneous Adjustments between Central and Provincial Governments'. We do not know what these are. I would like to have more detailed information from the Finance Member when he presents these demands for grant later or he could amplify them in his reply.

This Finance Bill is prepared in such a way that it mystifies us all. Clause 5 is as follows:

"Continuation of, and enhancement of, additional duties of customs imposed by section 6, Act XII of 1942—The additional duties of customs on certain goods chargeable with a duty of customs under the First Schedule to the Indian Tariff Act, 1934 (XXXII of 1934) or under the said Schedule read with any notification of the Central Government for the time being in force, imposed up to the 31st day of March 1943 by section 6 of the Indian Finance Act, 1942, and continued, subject to certain modifications, up to the 31st day of March 1946, by section 4 of the Indian Finance Act, 1945, as amended by section 4 of this Act, shall continue to be levied and collected as provided in the said section 6 up to the 31st day of March 1947 subject to the aforesaid modifications and to the further modifications contained in sub-section (2)."

All this is bewildering. I do not know what is meant by all this. If we want to understand it, we will have to refer to a number of previous Acts and other references. But that is not sufficient. We have to recast those sections, leave blanks to be filled later and then find out what it means. Would it not be better to simplify this matter and say straightaway what it means, how much he is going to cut down under the head year after year? Copies are not readily available in the library when we go there. There are only one or two copies at a time and those are taken away by some of the Members and some of them return and some do not. They are not available to us for reference. How are we to know what all this means? Clause 7 states "In the First Schedule to the Central Excises and Salt Act (1944) in Item No. 4 for the word "fifteen" the word "twelve" shall be substituted". I searched in vain in the 1944 Excise and Salt Act for this reference. My friend told me that it referred to the Finance Act of 1944 which was passed a little earlier and then I was able to find out the reference from it and give an amendment.

[At this stage Mr. President vacated the Chair, which was then occupied by Mr. Deputy President (Sir Mohammad Yamin Khan)]. It is in this way, Sir, that these budgets are prepared by this Government and thrown on us to be read in a day or two and we are asked to criticize those budget proposals.

Coming to the Budget proposals, Sir, I would have liked, though he said that he was not in a position to reduce the tax and give relief to the poor, if he had made a reduction or abolition of the Salt Tax. Salt is used by the whole of the population. There is nobody who does not use salt. So also betelnuts. Instead of having an excise duty on betelnuts I would have liked if he had reduced or abolished the excise duty on betelnuts. The rural people may go without one meal, but they would never go without betelnuts. The Honourable Member said that he is reducing the kerosene duty by 9 pies per gallon. What does it amount to? A gallon is six bottles. The relief is 1½ pies per bottle. What is supplied in the rural parts is really half a bottle for six months or even one year to each person in the village.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: If the relief means so little, I am quite prepared to put it back.

Sri R. Venkatasubba Reddiar: We are supposed to live in some taluk headquarters. We get one bottle per month. What is the relief given under this? I want to bring to the notice of my Honourable friend that it is no relief at all.

In passing I would like to make a reference about the Dollar Pool. The way it came into existence, I believe, has not been properly explained. On account of the war the Dollar Pool came into existence to aid Britain to purchase all that she wanted from others by converting all the sterling currency into dollar currency. All the sterling currency countries are asked to join the Dollar Pool. Some conditions seem to have been imposed—that is how I understand it—which prevented other countries from drawing from that Pool. I have heard of a story concerning two persons. One said to the other “You bring rice, I get chaff. Let us mix the two together and we will divide what is available there”. It is just like that. Britain brought chaff, which means nothing, and others were asked to get rice, and it was divided. In fact it was not even divided. It was taken away for her use and if others wanted to make use of that Fund, they were to fulfil certain conditions. We have been given 20 million dollars some years back. You have not been able to utilise that because of the conditions with which it has been given. And we are told now “You cannot claim the whole of it but only a portion”. We do not know what portion has been drawn and what portion has been contributed by Great Britain to that Pool. I do not know whether—to use the Honourable the Finance Member's own words—“India will have to look at this Dollar Pool and other balances which are held by foreign countries . . . by casting a longing and lingering look behind”. I do not know whether India will have to cast a longing and lingering look behind to get, or never to get, at these Pools and resources

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: That phrase refers to the Excess Profits Tax and not to the Dollar Pool at all.

Sri R. Venkatasubba Reddiar: I know that the reference was to the Excess Profits Tax. But I use your language that India will have “to cast longing and lingering looks” to get her share. I think the Honourable Member has understood me. I am quoting his own words.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: But out of context.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras Ceded District and Chettor: Non-Mohammadan Rural): The phraseology is so good that he is using it for some other purpose.

Sri R. Venkatasubba Reddiar: The Finance Member, I think, is not without ideas. He has very good ideas. But either he has no mind to put his ideas into execution or has not been permitted to do so. He says that he has a lot of plans for giving relief to the rural parts. The schemes will improve roads, minor irrigation, anti-erosion measures, agricultural and forest development and public health measures such as anti-malarial measures, water supply and drainage schemes—all these are useful measures which will help the rural masses of the country, the entire population of the country. But what provision has he made for them?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: May I just explain? Rs. 50 crores of this Budget is for these very purposes.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: He is coming to that. He says it is inadequate.

Sri R. Venkatasubba Reddiar: About Rs. 600 crores of money was being circulated in this country and is now being withdrawn and is not to be spent in the coming years. What is this 50 crore? It is a drop in the ocean. Who will benefit by it? If you refer to the income-tax statistics you will find that the people who pay tax under property are only a lakh and fifty-nine thousand and odd. That is the number of people who pay property tax and my Honourable friend proposes to give relief to those and to a few who have sufficient money at their command and who could benefit by investing that money properly. There is money and the Government is going to raise loans to the extent of Rs. 300 crores. I ask why not the Finance Member spend that money on schemes which would rehabilitate the villages, which would raise the standard of the masses in the villages and not of the income-tax payer and the people of the town. I would suggest to him that he gives more money for rural development and cottage industries.

Then, Sir, I would turn to the Honourable Member sitting right behind him. We have addressed a number of questions in this House and have made representations about the position of the ryots and the price that is given to the producer. What is the result? He comes with a readily typed answer and says “This has been considered by the Department and the Provincial officials. The Provincial Commissioner says that this cannot be revised.” He says it will be to the disadvantage of the producer, the Government and the consumer. Has he any logic behind him? Has he any evidence or reason to give? He has been repeating his answer day after day. I think a machine would have done it better because there has been no variation in his answer. He says that the result of inquiries made have not convinced him of the desirability of revising the prices. We do not ask for an enhanced price—we want only a remunerative price. At the risk of repeating the same thing, I shall give him facts and figures.

According to the latest reports, the outturn from an acre of land today is about 12 maunds of paddy or 9 mds. of rice. What is the cost of cultivation? I can say that from personal knowledge. I will read it out item by item and I crave the indulgence of the House.

	Rs.	A.	P.
Seed bed preparation	2	0	0
Seeds	5	6	0
Preparation of land,	10	0	0
Removing seedlings, and transplantation	6	0	0
Manure (4½ bags at Rs. 9-4-0 a bag) at controlled rates	41	10	0
(though we are not able to get at these controlled rates)
(Irrigation charges if it is dry land comes to about 35 to 40 rupees)
Harvesting charges	10	0	0
Land revenue	Rs. 7 to Rs. 10

The total comes to over Rs. 84. The average yield is 12 maunds and the price got is Rs. 5 per maund. The selling price is fixed at Rs. 5-8 but in our province they take away 8 annas for commission, for gunnies, for stitching charges, for conveyance charges; so that at the most we get Rs. 60 per acre for paddy and Rs. 15 for hay or straw. Thus the loss is about Rs. 8 per acre. I do not know if my Honourable friend has got any figures to dispute this statement. We have worked out our figures and our opinion is that he has not been given any figures.

Mr. Deputy President: The Honourable Member's time is up.

Sri R. Venkatasubba Reddiar: I am coming to an end. I will quote from ‘The Hindu’, where the Director of Agriculture Madras has stated as follows:

“Experiments had shown that a ton of groundnut oil cake put on the soil would yield an equal amount of paddy.”

In other words, if you put one ton of oilcake, it would yield one ton of paddy. The cost of one ton of paddy is Rs. 135, and the cost of one ton of oilcake is

[Sri R. Venkatasubba Reddiar]

Rs. 129. Add to this the other charges and the remuneration. And when I ask my Honourable friend to give something more by way of price or subsidy he refuses. When I ask for more cereals to the man working there on the field he says that "We are not able to give him anything. We have to divide or distribute what he has." That man has no money. May I ask if my Honourable friends over there will divide their bank balances so as to distribute the money among those people who have not got any money? Then what right have these people to take away from him what he has produced by toiling in the sun and in the rain? Here are our friends sitting in winter with heaters in front of them, and in summer with the fans going above: they do not know what sun is, or what cold is, or what summer or winter is.

Again, what is it we are given? People who are accustomed to eat rice are given millets and wheat of the worst sort, which create all sorts of digestive diseases. If I give my friend opposite a little ragi or maize from my province, would he be able to take it? Does he know how to prepare it or how to digest it? I see my friend nodding his head: he will not be able to do it. What is the meaning, then, of making these people eat wheat, when they do not know how to prepare it or how to eat it or to digest these things?

Mr. Deputy President: Will the Honourable Member now conclude his remarks?

Sri R. Venkatasubba Reddiar: Two minute more, Sir, with your indulgence.

Mr. Deputy President: The Honourable Member has already exceeded by five minutes.

Sri R. Venkatasubba Reddiar: Then he says that the consumers' interests have to be looked to. I do not dispute that the consumers interests have to be looked to; but every man—the retailer—who is supplied with paddy worth Rs. 65 has made a profit of 20 to 25 rupees. I asked about this several times but the Honourable Member does not seem to pay any heed to it; he has not paid the least attention to it. I say, why not this Government subsidise the crop? Take it from the producer by paying a higher price, bear the expenses departmentally, and give it to the consumer at the same rates. They have done it in other provinces; they have done it by subsidy to Bengal when food grains were deteriorating owing to bad storage for one year. They paid a subsidy to them; and now they have offered to pay a subsidy for sinking wells. The offer will cost several crores; and what is the offer? It is only on paper; they want them to sink wells at a time when it is not possible to sink wells; the time is so short; you cannot get bricks, you cannot get men. If all these crores which they now propose to waste on these items are given for raising the price of food grains, I think sufficient food grains will be raised in this land itself, without having to go to any foreign land and begging America as Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar and Sir Ramamurthi from my province are doing.

One or two suggestions about the Agricultural Department. The Agricultural Department has advertised

Mr. Deputy President: The Honourable Member must conclude.

Sri R. Venkatasubba Reddiar: Only one minute more, Sir. This Department is supplying seeds which do not germinate. It has been advertised a lot: they have started a Grow More Food campaign; one man is placed in charge of this supply of seeds and manure and he has to go round the taluk; these men are the demonstrators they have to go and advise people and also to store seeds. For the past two years it is my experience that seeds purchased from this Department have never germinated. With these observations, I oppose the Finance Bill.

Sardar N. G. Vinchoorkar (Gujrat and Deccan Sardars and Inamdars: Landholders): Sir, this is the first budget of the Central Government that I have been privileged to attend but I must confess that I have not fully understood the mysteries of the figures or the intricacies of sums running into crores and the technique of the Budget.

Honourable Members: More loudly, please.

Mr. Deputy President: The Honourable Member can come to the front bench and speak.

Sardar N. G. Vinchoorkar: However I take into account the fact that the Honourable Finance Member had to frame his budget, the first budget of its kind, when the war is over, and when this is what may be called the transition period; and I think we should give him due credit for having framed this budget under these rather not very normal circumstances. However, if you think of the items under taxation, one fails to see any relief in the taxation which is indirect and which on the average an ordinary person has to pay during the daily role of his life. Added to that I find he has to pay now an increased duty on tobacco and betel-nut

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: No; not tobacco at all.

Sardar N. G. Vinchoorkar: I am sorry, not tobacco; but betel-nut. It can hardly be said that tobacco and betel-nut can be called luxuries in the poor man's daily life. The relief that is given under kerosene and petrol cannot be fully taken advantage of so long as those commodities are not available in plenty and they are under control. Now, I come to the next item—the biggest in figures, namely the Defence Budget. I find that the defence budget figures are not very low, though the war is over. Perhaps as the war has abruptly come to an end, I feel, that the Honourable the Finance Member cannot easily, adjust and lower the army budget to a figure which we would all wish for. However though the figure is very heavy, the test, will lie in the relief to be given, that we hope to realise, in the interests, of the demobilised soldiers and officers. I feel this demobilisation will be a matter of great importance in which both the Government and the people should interest themselves more. As it is, we are in a delicate position. We do not know what the Reorganisation Defence Committee's report is. That is more or less a departmental report and so we cannot know what the size of the standing army hereafter will be. However even in a self-governing India, defence will have to be maintained at a high standard of efficiency. Taking into consideration the key position of India even under self-government, we cannot ignore the defence services and these men have to be kept at a very efficient standard even though it may cost more. In this connection I would suggest this absorption into defence services of the Emergency Commission Officers as well as the V. C. Os. and other ranks, who are now threatened with the prospect of demobilisation. I believe that a country of the size of India can easily absorb all these men. They have shown great valour and have added to the name and fame of our country on the battlefronts. They are men who have got unique experience. They have seen different parts of the world. They should be considered an asset of the country and we should put them to the best use we can, instead of throwing them away on demobilisation. I do not know what the schemes of the Government are but I expect that it is their duty to take care and provide for their settling in life well. Imagine the condition, if such a large number of people having valuable asset and experience have to be thrown out instead of their being made available out of use to the Government or the people. I am sure that will be a tragedy that we will be sorry for and wish to avoid. In this connection I would like to draw attention to an article by Sir D. Devadoss about 'the colonisation of demobilised soldiers' that has appeared in the February issue of the Journal of the Diwan Chand Political Information Bureau. I think Government can take a leaf out of it and if they themselves cannot run any such organisation by which they can look after the demobilised soldiers they should allow such organisations as the Ramakrishna Mission to do that work and give them liberal subsidy. Any way am interested in seeing that the demobilised soldiers and the officers are absorbed as far as possible in the permanent Indian defence services and if not, in the alternative, they should be better looked after and put in a position where they will be of good service to the country.

[Sardar N. G. Vinchoorkar]

I think in all these matters His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief can establish a convention and take the Defence Consultative Committee more into his confidence and let them have a say in the policy regarding the permanent strength of the Indian Defence Services. I read in today's papers about some schemes he has in view, given out in the course of his interview given to the Press. Though all that is good, there is still much to be done. Though we have full faith in the good intentions of H. E. the Commander-in-Chief, I feel that the progress of Indianisation is not all that we would wish for and I would wish that there should be a big drive at Indianisation of the key positions in the defence services. I am sure Indians will justify their appointments in these Positions.

From the Defence I will turn to the subject of post war planning. We have heard so much of post-war planning. The reports of the different committees are far too many for one to remember. I however take interest in matters which are in the interest of the rural development, as compared with urban development. I feel that so far more attention has been given to matters relating to urban life, but I believe that if urban and rural life were brought nearer each other in the matter of development, it would be in the best interests of India. So far as the post-war planning is concerned, I would like to satisfy myself as to how far they improve the conditions of life in rural India. In this connection I happened to read in today's Hindustan Times what the Honourable the Member for Agriculture said in the other House. He said that for the task of providing seeds, manure and water even for the already irrigated lands a great deal of leadership and drive was needed. He further said that such leadership has so far not been forthcoming as men of light and learning were deserting the villages and settling down in towns. Now, that is a complaint which I would like to make to him and I would suggest that he should find a solution for the same rather than join us in this complaint. He is in a position to give effect to these post-war plans which will be in the better interests of rural India as compared with urban India. I would like him to attend to the needs of the agriculturists and such other problems as will improve his lot and will improve the countryside. If you take the agriculturists' average needs, they are in the direction of cattle, seed, manure, implements, marketing facilities; and all these post-war plans, when they are brought into effect should be subjected to the test under these heads one could say that these plans are successful only if they succeed in improving the condition of the agriculturists in rural India and thus bring it nearer to the urban India and remove the disparity which we now unhappily see so much.

I should like the new ideas about post-war plans to be fitted into in harmony with India's past heritage and traditions. I do not think that everything entirely Western or modern should be tried in India as an experiment. We should not ignore the good points in the old traditions. It is only a happy mixture of the two that will be in the best interest of our countryside.

There are so many other points which I cannot deal with in the course of the short time at my disposal, but we should have to concentrate on crop planning and fixation of minimum prices for agricultural commodities. Without that and without improving the whole agricultural programme, I do not think we can escape the famine and the food scarcity which unhappily we have at our doors. Whatever may be the measures that we adopt in the matter of meeting the food scarcity now, I am afraid they may not be in time or sufficient to fight the famine that is staring us in the face. In this connection I would to pay a tribute to the services of the Indian delegation headed by the Honourable Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar. It will be a sad commentary if they fail in their efforts especially when the war record of India was being appreciated so much by all till now.

Now, in the matter of food scarcity, the two points which we have to concentrate on are procurement and distribution. When one thinks of procurement, we have to consider what will satisfy our agriculturists before one goes to him and asks for his grain. After all the agriculturist, unless he is a contented man, cannot be persuaded to give willingly what is with him. It is very difficult to bring these modern ideas of rationing and all that to the doors of an agriculturist or to convince him. First you will have to see that he is satisfied as to his daily wants so far as his family, his crops and cattle are concerned and then only you can induce him to part with the surplus. In that case we have to consider what his necessities are, and how to improve his lot and then only one can hope to persuade him to sell to Government what is surplus in kind with him. Then as regards distribution, though with the best of intentions and scientific record available for use, yet in practice, there are many loopholes which make one discontented. It is here that you expect special care especially when one has to see that nothing is wasted. We must make full use of whatever is available to us. On the other hand there are so many different and funny experiences one comes across in matters of distribution. For instance, as was said by my Honourable friend who spoke before me, distribution does not show that there is any plan or that there is any consideration as to the conditions of the masses for whom the distribution is meant. Sometimes it often happens that wrong grain is supplied to a particular tract, when they can, without much trouble give that tract what is their suitable food. Then, in the matter of preservation also, I do not think that science has been utilised to the required standard. We come across many cases where the grain, that was procured and stored, has been spoiled and wasted because nobody was careful enough to put scientific knowledge into practice and to preserve the grain. Then, one often comes across cases where prices vary just on the score that cartage or transport through a particular tract cost more money. I do not think that basic prices vary very much. But all this difference is explained on the ground that transport arrangements were not easy or there was an emergency and so the cost was added over and above the fixed prices. I think all these matters can be easily rectified with more care, consideration and proper planning. After all in the first few years, one could say that this was a new problem to India, but now after one or two years experience, I do not think the officials of the Government should allow complaints to grow in these matters which they can easily attend to and correct. I am very glad the Army is fully co-operating in these matters. I find that in places which are now military stations the army transport vehicles go about here and there so often. Now they can very easily undertake the transport of food stuffs and thus help in lowering the transport costs considerably. Similarly if the army can practice a little more economy in the matter of their daily rations and also give us relief, if they are self sufficient, in matters of vegetables and other provisions, I think that will also be such a great help. It was rather encouraging to read that the military department are fully co-operating with us. I trust that whatever experience we get in the course of meeting this present food crisis will be made use of in making some permanent arrangements and laying down policies in the best interests of the agriculturists and we should then no more have to face such famine conditions. Sir, I have done.

MR. P. K. SALVE (Nagpur Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, at this far end of the day, I have got to explain my views on this budget. By this time, I believe that the Honourable the Finance Member has been able to discover the two wrong economic principles which have been followed in making up budget so far, even including the present one. That has been the policy of the British Government for many decades and I must say with regret that the Honourable the Finance Member has not been able to get rid of it. That wrong policy first of all is what I call the blood-sucking economic policy, the policy of tiger, as it is called. Sir, under the Government Industrial survey of C. P. and Berar the average income of the villager is about one rupee per month. From the tax gathered from such persons in rural areas we are paying thousands and thousands to Honourable Members sitting on the Treasury Benches, sitting on nice cushions like Sir Lancelots and Sir Bedeveres and all those different knights of old in all their glory. As against that, I can only point my finger at the poor villager whose salary is one rupee a month, that is the average. It is possible that there are several people who get below this average. People who do not get one square meal a day. Out of the blood of these poor people, out of their monies, these big salaries are given. Now, Sir, that has been the blood-sucking economy. I shall be able to show from this budget that that economy has been persisted in and the blood of India is being sucked through these budgets.

Now, Sir, I remember a story, a very old story. At this time of day, perhaps with the sufferance of the House, I may tell that story. There was a Nawab who became fond of shooting, and he wanted to shoot a tiger. Accidentally there was a tiger that began to visit his village and he was destroying the cattle of the village, so that the Nawab Sahib was told that that was a good opportunity of killing the tiger. But the Nawab Sahib did not know tiger shooting before. Therefore the people who looked after him put the Nawab Sahib inside a thatched hut and made holes in it to shoot at the tiger. An old Gond who was a shikari was put as his companion. He was also put inside the thatched hut and the hut was closed on all sides. A goat was tied as the prey for the tiger. What happened was that the tiger came and jumped on the goat. Then the Gond said, 'Nawab Sahib, there is the tiger, shoot it'. The Nawab Sahib instead of shooting at the tiger jumped on the Gond and asked him where is the tiger and the Gond shouted, there is the tiger, there is the tiger, but the tiger was not shot by the Nawab Sahib. That is what is happening in this country. The moral of the story is this: that the poor Indian taxpayer is being caught by the neck and you ride on him and you ask him, where is the tiger. There is the tiger all round, but you do not want to shoot it. You do not want to take steps to take the blood of the tiger, because you have allowed the tiger to take the blood of the poor goat. That is the policy of the economics you have been pursuing all these years. The poor taxpayer has been paying all these years and out of that you are paying thousands and thousands of rupees to these officers. Can you do it? Is it not savagery? Is it not brutal to expect the poor to pay taxes and you go on sucking their blood, only to pay high salaries to these officers? That is one principle of economics which I beg to lay before the House.

There is another, and that is very subtle. That is what is called predatory economics, the economics of the monkey. Predatory economics is very subtle and you cannot easily detect it. When you are not aware of it, when you are taking your meal and taking a nap a monkey comes into your garden and sees the fine oranges and the beautiful apples; he looks at them and he starts devastating the garden. He starts eating them and he starts harvesting where he sowed not. That is the principle of predatory economics and that is what has been practised in this country. I know a certain authentic story of what happened in our Balaghat district regarding the discovery of certain manganese mines there. There was a geological survey set on foot by the Government of India and the members of this survey were Europeans. They came as experts and they said they came to serve the country. They went on camels and elephants into the thick jungles of Balaghat and found that there were rich deposits of manganese ore in that forest. After having found that they went to England and there they gave their report to the people before the Government of India had any report. A company was at once formed in England, formed to carry away our raw material, the manganese ore, from this country to a foreign land. before any one in India knew about it and before any wealthy Indian could put his money into it. There a company was formed and even Government granted mining concessions to that company without anybody in India knowing it. They take away our raw materials and call it private enterprise. I should like to know whether this is not predatory economics, the economics of the monkey who takes away your oranges where he has no right to do so. This is predatory economics,—taking away our raw cotton, our raw iron and our raw manganese without allowing us to make the finished article on the spot. When that is the economics which has been introduced in this country these budgets are of no value to us. My submission is that in order to have a satisfactory budget in this country the person who makes the budget should be in practical touch with the people; he should know their real needs and requirements, and then only can a proper budget be framed.

Now, Sir, I call this budget an orthodox traditional budget. It is an orthodox traditional budget in the sense that you consider the revenue that you will get and you estimate your expenditure according to your revenue. At the present day this sort of budget is worthless and should never be made. If you make a budget merely for meeting the cost of the administration, that is not going to help us today. The budget that will help us will be one which shows what money you can lay out for the people, what you can lay out on industries, what you can give the people for helping their industries and commerce. That is more important than expenditure on the administration. This annual balancing of the budget from year to year—revenue against expenditure and expenditure against revenue—is out of date. You will have to take into consideration a long-range programme and a short-range programme, or a programme that will cover the entire life of the people. The entire life of the people has got to be considered. Today in every Indian family there are graduates and M.A.'s. and LL.B.'s., and every parent today is nervous as to what is going to happen to them. I ask the Treasury Benches if they have made any scheme by which these people are going to be employed in future. Sir, I will read a passage from this American magazine 'FORTUNE' which says, about returned soldiers that their future lies in the future of United States Economy. It says:

"It is estimated that there will be about four million unemployed in the winter of 1945-46. But, if most economists are right, next spring or next autumn or next year (mark the word 'next'), will see the United States industry whirling through a paradise (or in the way of purgatory), of automobiles, refrigerators, pre-fabricated houses and perambulators. There will be plenty of jobs, wages will be high, taxes will be lower, displaced war workers will settle down to work and so will discharged soldiers, sailors and marines."

That is what they are expecting in America. Can this budget claim to put us on a par with America or anywhere near about it? Those Americans are speaking of paradise and purgatory. We have had hell all this time and the hell will probably continue. We are still without jobs. I should like to draw the attention of the House to one very important feature and that is, the return of those people who are coming back from the army, officers and men. I find that the budget cannot cope with that. These men are, according to calculations, about nine million. From the army we shall have 2 million, from the auxiliary services about 5.5 million, industries 1 million and administrative services .5 million, i.e., 9 million in all. These nine million breadwinners with about three or four dependents each will constitute 36 million people, which is about a fourth of the population of India. When these people return what schemes have Government got for them? What will happen without a scheme is that people holding jobs in services will be replaced by returned servicemen and that will lead to more and more unemployment. So far as the budget is concerned, I said that it was orthodox and traditional, I say that it is timid. There is no breadth of vision, there is no courage in making it. I will remind the House that the Bombay Planning Committee made plans for industrialising the country and estimated an expenditure of 1,400 crores of rupees in order to get double the income that is obtained today. And the Radical Democratic Party put down the figure at 1,600 crores. My submission is that today in India 50 crores or even a hundred crores are no use at all. You have got to be brave; you have got to be courageous. I want you to borrow money, borrow in order that the people may be benefited. The one theme that you should have in making a budget is this: welfare of the people; uplift of the people. That is the ideal; that is the goal which you should have before you. That we don't find in this Budget. Are the people going to be raised from their misery, and from their bad health? No. It is no use saying that we have reduced the Excess Profits Tax; it is no use saying that we have made certain allowances for building and that will enable people to get work. This is visionary. They should take up housing scheme; they should feed the millions of people of India; they should clothe them; they should house them. It is a stupendous work, and I do not know how this Budget is going to do all that.

If I may be permitted to say, this Budget has not taken into account the higher plane from which a budget has got to be looked at. It must be looked at from the highest spiritual plane. There may be an animal plane; there may be a human plane, but there is a spiritual plane from which you have got to look at the budget. That spiritual plane is the development of the people, the progress of the people, the uplift of the people from their low conditions, from their misery, and if it costs money, and even if it costs you blood, give it. But let your work be such that the people may be lifted from their miserable condition. This budget is not going to do it. I remember the story of David in the cave of Adullam. David was fighting the Philistines and was very thirsty and he longed for water of the well of Bethlehem. Perhaps my Christian friends know the story well. He was at war with the Philistines who had camped between him and Bethlehem and he wanted water very badly. Three men of valour broke through the enemy camp risking their lives and brought him water. David took that pot of water, but did not drink it. He poured it out and said 'May God forbid it me that I should do this. Shall I drink the blood of those men that have put their lives in jeopardy to bring this?' Now, Sir, looking at it from the animal plane this pot of water is a pot of water and nothing else. We have a higher plane from which we can look at it and from that plane we will consider it an excellent thing to quench thirst by such water. But from the spiritual eye it is no longer two parts of hydrogen and one part of oxygen but it is red human blood. My submission is that the British Government in India has put the lives of many people—poor villagers and masses of this country—in jeopardy, and they are taking their blood to quench their imperial thirst. If we look at it as so much blood from the spiritual plane, then my submission is that this Budget should have been prepared on absolutely different basis. This Budget should have been more for the rural areas,—more supplies of medicines, doctors, nurses; they should have provided more facilities for training medical students. If you go through the Bhole Committee Report, we find that there is much to be done and nothing has been done.

Finally, I say that the Budget is very unsatisfactory. It has not satisfied us and we are today in the same hopeless and miserable condition as we were before the war or during the war.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Sir, I never wanted to speak so early or speak at all, but I do not want this discussion to be cut short.

Sir, I shall generally review the situation in the world, and how a financing programme here should be chalked out. First of all, it is very easy to discuss the Finance Bill as it stands, and condemn the Finance Member for having brought a Bill of this kind. The world situation has to be taken into account.

Sir, I am not feeling quite well and though I am anxious to speak I shall not speak.

Sir Cowasjee Jehangir: May I point out, Sir, that the Honourable Member is a very senior Member of the House and he might be allowed to speak on Monday.

Mr. Deputy President: That will be decided on Monday; it cannot be decided today.

Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava (Ambala Division: Non-Muhammadan): Dealing with the Budget the first point that a man from the countryside would like to see in it is whether the Budget has been so made as to suit his needs. I want to examine this Budget not from the point of view of industrialists, not even from the point of view of the cultivator, not even from the point of view of the trader, but I want to look at the Budget from the point of view of the poorest in the land—a member of the landless depressed class. Now, Sir, the first thing that I am going to bring to your notice in this Budget is that the poorest in the land—a member of the depressed class—stands in the same position in which he stood, say, thirty years ago. I was in this House from 1927-30, and then I put some questions to the Members in charge about their position, and after sixteen years when I come to the House again I find that a member of the depressed class stands exactly in the same position as he stood then.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer (Bombay Southern Division: Muhammadan Rural): What about Dr. Ambedkar?

Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava: I have nothing to say about Dr. Ambedkar or anybody else. Why should Dr. Ambedkar be brought in. You have as much right to speak on their behalf as Dr. Ambedkar, or anybody else.

Now, Sir, I beg you to consider this budget from his standpoint. A member of the depressed class has no right to acquire land. In Delhi Province—in the Capital of India—if a member of the depressed class wanted to buy land, he cannot do so under the laws enacted by this Government. I want to know whether there is a law like this in any part of the world that the poorest man in the land cannot buy land? The poorest man in the country has no right to buy land. If they want to erect a pacca house, they have no right to do so.

Sir Cowasjee Jehangir: Where?

Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava: In Delhi, in Bombay, in this blessed country India! According to the provisions of the Land Alienation Act a member of the Depressed Class is not able to buy land of any agriculturist. If you go to any village—there are seven lakhs of villages—you will find the position of the chamar is that he cannot buy land. He cannot erect a pucca house. If you go to any of the houses belonging to these chamars and bhangis you will find no furniture in them. Their houses are kutchas. There is one small room and many people living in it. If you will enquire about other necessary matters you will come by such information about him that you will feel that he is not living a life which is expected to be lived by any citizen in India. Now, Sir, if you want to know his yearly income, then you will be pleased to find, as has been just pointed out by my friends, that in some places he is getting one rupee a month. But even judging from what is the average income of an Indian, you will see that the average means that the men at the bottom get much less than what the average is. If Rs. 60/65 is the average income of the Indian, it is quite clear that men at the bottom are getting less than Rs. 5 a month. Now I want to ask my friends, if anybody can live on Rs. 5 a month when the rates of grain etc. are so dear as they are? Sir, I have got much experience of the famine conditions as I come from a district in the Punjab where famine is prevalent every fourth or fifth year. I have seen people living on two pice or three pice a day. Will it be believed by any Honourable Member in this House that an Indian can live on two or three pice a day? But this is a fact. I have seen persons getting two annas and three pies as wages and eight or nine people dependent on him living on that two annas and three pies. This is the spectacle which any person in this House would shudder at but this spectacle is true. It is a true picture of the rural life of that part of the Punjab from which I come. Now, Sir, we have been hearing in this House of large plans of spending Rs. 900 crores. For whose advantage? These big plans of industry, agriculture and all that, for whose benefit? The man in the village street of whom the Finance Member spoke in his budget does not know of them and will not be able to avail himself of them. The Finance Member was eloquent on reducing the tax...

[Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava]

kerosene. May I inform him that out of the seven lakhs of villages in India, at least four lakhs of them do not have any light at all at night. If the Honourable Member has seen any village, and if he has not seen any, I can take him to any village, where at night no kerosene at all is used not because they are not fond of light, but because they are too poor to pay for it. For whose benefit is this reduction of duty on kerosene? A bottle of kerosene oil is not obtainable in cities even and not even available to students and lawyers. Now the Honourable the Finance Member says that this is the consolation in his Budget for a poor man. I would submit, that speaking truly speaking on matters of fact, this is not even an eye-wash. Nobody can be deceived by it. If you say to a villager that the duty on kerosene is reduced, he will laugh and say, 'What has the Finance Member done? He is quite blind to the conditions obtaining in the country.'

Mr. Deputy President: The Honourable Member may continue on Monday. The House stands adjourned till Eleven O'clock on Monday.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Monday, the 25th March, 1946.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

STARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

(a) ORAL ANSWERS

STOPPING OF SALE OF RAILWAY TICKETS FOR CERTAIN STATIONS

1187. *Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state:

- If it is a fact that Provincial Governments have been issuing orders stopping the sale of tickets to particular stations for particular periods of time;
- the law under which they acted, and if the Railway Administration was bound to obey those orders;
- if Booking Clerks did not refuse tickets even when such orders were not in force saying that there were such orders; and
- if Government propose to ask all Railway Administrations to hang up notices outside their Booking Offices showing the dates on which the issue of tickets to particular stations was stopped?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) No. Provincial Governments have issued Prohibitory Orders disallowing travel by rail of pilgrims to certain important melas and fairs. These orders do not restrict travel by rail of any person who is not a pilgrim and is proceeding on his normal affairs.

(b) Prohibitory Orders are issued under the powers conferred on Provincial Governments under Clause (a), Section (1) of Rule 85-B of the Defence of India Rules, and Railway Administrations are bound to obey these orders.

(c) I understand that no such cases have come to the notice of Railway Administrations.

(d) I am informed that majority of railways already follow this practice and other railways will be asked to do the same.

Shri Sri Prakasa: With reference to the Honourable Member's reply to part (a) of the question, may I know how he expects booking clerks and other railway officials to distinguish a pilgrim from a non-pilgrim when one asks for a ticket at the railway station?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: It is not easy but in certain circumstances to ensure people travelling it is possible for them to get an authority from a district magistrate.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Is the Honourable Member sure that there was no hanky-panky in this business?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: One cannot be sure of that but the railway authorities do their best to see that justice is done.

Shri Sri Prakasa: The railway authorities did not do their best in such matters and they did stop bona fide passengers and very often facilitated pilgrims to travel. I am surprised that the Honourable Member is not aware of such cases.

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: If any definite evidence is produced I shall be very glad to take action.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Is it not strange that when a complaint of this kind is made the Honourable Member and his colleagues come out and ask for specific complaints and when there are complaints against us without any specific instances being adduced, we are shut up in one day?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: It is not at all strange. Obviously the Railway Administration cannot take action on general complaints but if specific complaints are made they will certainly look into them.

Shri Sri Prakasa: At what stage will these specific complaints be made? Will it be before or after the train has left?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Either.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable Member kindly tell me if there is any moral or legal objection to the railway administration following the suggestion contained in part (d) of the question?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I have already said that the majority of railways already follow this practice and other railways will be asked to do the same.

Shri Sri Prakasa: May I know whether the Honourable Member is aware that at none of the booking offices which I have dealt with—and I have dealt with quite a lot of them—have I seen any such notice; and tickets have been refused even to me.

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Perhaps that particular railway has not followed the practice.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable Member kindly enquire whether on the E. I. and O. T. railway stations,—the two railways that honour my town by serving it—this practice is being followed and if any notice was hung at the Benares Cantonment Railway station, for example?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: All railways have been asked to do it. I will however endeavour to see that they pay particular attention to the stations which my Honourable friend habitually uses.

ENHANCED MILEAGE FOR BREAKING JOURNEY ON RAILWAYS

1188. Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state:

(a) if it is a fact that no break of journey is now permitted on Railways till at least 250 miles have actually been travelled, while formerly passengers could break journey if they held tickets for 100 miles and over, for one day every 100 miles even before travelling the first 100 miles; and

(b) if Government propose to ask the Railway Administrations to re-introduce the old system?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) Yes.

(b) No. The facility granted for breaking journey is a concession which is not allowed in many other countries. Consideration at one time was given to cancelling this concession altogether but it was later decided to retain it with an increased distance limit to reduce the opportunity for fraud. It is not considered that the revised rulings will cause any serious hardship to the travelling public.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable Member kindly explain why is it now that he insists on a person travelling 250 miles before he can break his journey, even if he holds a ticket for more than 250 miles.

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: The reason for the alteration, which has been made after considerable discussion, was that large scale misuse of the privilege was reported by certain police authorities.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: How is it that the Honourable Member discovered this mistake after 80 years' experience?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: It was introduced in 1887

Shri Sri Prakasa: 1856!

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I think the answer is that large scale misuse was reported by certain police authorities.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: What does the Honourable Member mean by "large scale misuse"? Does he mean that a man gets down at a station and goes to some other station than the station mentioned in the ticket and makes use of the ticket for the purpose?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I mean that a large number of people were misusing the privilege.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: How can they misuse it? A ticket is valid from a particular station to another station. A passenger can get down at an intermediate station after a certain stage of his journey. How can he possibly misuse the ticket?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: One of the rules in connection with breaking of journeys is that the ticket is supposed to be endorsed at the station where the journey is broken. There are practical difficulties in securing this endorsement in all cases and that was one of the reasons why it was not possible to see that it was not misused.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Does it mean that passengers have complained that these railway officers were not prepared to endorse their tickets and therefore they wanted this privilege being withdrawn?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: No, Sir. A passenger who wishes to misuse his ticket does not complain.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Is the Honourable Member assured that there are no misuse whatsoever now?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: The misuse is likely to be less under the new rules.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Is it not a fact that ordinarily no endorsement is made when a passenger breaks his journey and he is allowed to go out of the exit on showing his long journey ticket?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: That is exactly the reason why it has been introduced.

Shri Sri Prakasa: But does not the same process exist even now?

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: The misuse was during the war. Now that the war is over why cannot the Honourable Member revert to the old system?

(No answer was given.)

Mr. President: Next question.

LOWERING OF RATES FOR POST CARDS, LETTERS AND TELEGRAMS

1189. Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Secretary for Posts and Air please state:

(a) if Government propose to lower the rates for post cards, letters and telegrams in the near future; if so, when; and if not, why not; and

(b) the income of the Department during the financial year 1944-45, and the expected income during the financial year 1945-46?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: (a) So far as postal rates are concerned, I would refer the Honourable Member to the Finance Bill now under discussion in this House. Government do not propose to reduce the rates for telegrams at present as the traffic is already heavy and the existing channels cannot handle more traffic with speed and efficiency.

(b) The actual income of the P. & T. Department during 1944-45 was 29 crores 38 lakhs and 48 thousand. The revised estimated income during 1945-46 is 32 crores 84 lakhs.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: With reference to the Honourable Member's reply to part (a) of the question, does he mean that because the traffic is heavy he cannot reduce the charges on telegrams? On the contrary that should be the reason why he should reduce the charges?

Shri Sri Prakasa: In view of the enormous profits made by my Honourable friend, will he not reconsider his decision regarding the reduction of the rates of telegrams and also in view of the fact that ordinary telegrams nowadays travel at the same rate as postcards, will he not reconsider his decision?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: The reason I gave for not reducing the rates for telegrams for the present was that the traffic is already heavy and any increase in traffic would increase the delay about which my friend has complained.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Will not the increased income enable the Honourable Member to cope with the increased traffic?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: It is not merely a question of staff at either end but is necessary to provide extra channels and when the various channels taken by the military authorities have been released, we may be in a position to handle more traffic much better. We are more anxious to give a proper telegraph service than merely reducing the rate, thus increasing the traffic and thereby increasing also the dissatisfaction on the part of the public.

Seth Govind Das: What about the postcards and letters?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: I have referred to the Finance Bill in my reply: there are various amendments coming, and I will deal with the matter when the amendments are moved.

PUBLICATION OF LIST OF POST OFFICES IN EVERY POSTAL DISTRICT

1190. Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Secretary for Posts and Air please state:

- if Government publish any book containing a list of post offices in every postal district;
- if the same is not on sale; and
- if they will consider the desirability of putting this also on sale for public convenience?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: (a) There is no such territorial unit as a "postal district". The P. & T. Guide includes a section containing the names of every post office in India. Against the name of every post office, the revenue district in which it is situated and the Head Post Office in whose jurisdiction it comes are indicated.

- The P. & T. Guide is on sale.
- Does not arise.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable Member really look into the publications of his Department? If he did, I am sure he will find a publication that gives the names of the post offices, district-wise; and this particular book is not on sale. I have seen this myself; will the Honourable Member put that book on sale also, like the Post Office Guide he refers to?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: This is not the first time that the Honourable Member has asked this question, and I have replied to it. There is such a book: it is not meant for public use: it is used by the post offices for sorting. The book gives a list of account head offices whose jurisdiction extends over more than one revenue district sometimes and sometimes they include various Indian states; and therefore the object which the Honourable Member has in view, namely, to get a list which will give the names of all post offices in a revenue district would not be gained. That particular publication is intended to facilitate the sorting of articles by post offices and by the railway mail sorting office.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable Member kindly put that section of the book he refers to on sale, which gives the names of the post offices arranged according to postal districts? If he will permit me, I will explain. There is a post office in the district of Jaunpur called Bazar Arsia; the men who live there always call it Arsia Bazar. I searched the postal guide for the name, when my letters sent there miscarried; but could find no Arsia Bazar. Then I consulted the postmaster of this Council House, he found out the name for me as Bazar Arsia and then my letters addressed to the new name, were duly delivered. All the other letters got lost. I want that particular publication to be on sale, so that we may not get confused between Arsia Bazar and Bazar Arsia.

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: I am quite prepared to consider the matter. At present I am afraid the shortage of paper and the difficulty of printing may delay the making of this book available, but we have no objection to make it available provided the public understand that it is not by revenue districts.

RUNNING OF CERTAIN IMPORTANT TRAINS ON O. T. RAILWAY

1191. Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state:

(a) if the more important trains between Barauni and Sonapore on the Oudh and Tirhut Railway, run via Samastipur and Muzaffarpur and not by the main line;

(b) if there is no special rush between Barauni and Sonapore by these trains; and

(c) if Government propose to suggest to the Administration concerned either to put on extra carriages between these two stations or take these trains by the main line and provide new trains for the loop?

Will the Honourable Member permit me to correct a small mistake in the question? In part (b) of the question occur the words: "no special rush". The word 'no' should not be there. It is not a mistake of the office, but a mistake which occurred in my typed question itself. The word 'no' is an obvious mistake.

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) I understand from the current time-table that this is so.

(b) Government have no detailed information about the conditions prevailing locally.

(c) This is a matter to be represented to the Railway Administration through the Local Advisory Committee. I am, however, bringing this question and my reply to the notice of the General Manager, O. T. Railway.

Shri Sri Prakasa: In view of the fact that even if the Honourable Member has no information, I have information from my personal experience, and my representation to the General Manager received no response at all, not even an acknowledgement of my letter, will the Honourable Member kindly see to it that this section is properly provided for?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Yes; I will refer the matter to the General Manager and I will draw the attention of the General Manager to the misprint in the Honourable Member's question.

FARES ON AIR ROUTES CHARGED BY CIVIL COMPANIES

1192. Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: Will the Secretary for Posts and Air please state:

(a) the air routes in India which are being operated now by civil companies and the names of the civil companies;

(b) whether he will lay on the table a statement of the fares on these routes;

(c) whether these fares are controlled by Government; and

(d) how these fares are calculated?

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: May I know from the Honourable Member, in view of the war being over and the fares having been brought down in America, whether he will consider bringing down the fares in India also for civil aviation?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: The matter will be considered by the licensing board. These are only temporary arrangements made until the licensing board fixes the rates.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: With regard to part (c), may I ask who settles these fares, the Government or the licensing board?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: The licensing board.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: Has the Licensing board come into existence?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: Not yet; they will be coming into existence.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Then what is the present position? Who controls these rates? Has the Government no voice at all in settling these fares at present?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: Yes; these rates have now been fixed by the Government in consultation with the operators.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: Will the Honourable Member consider reducing these fares to first class fares or at least to air conditioned first class fares?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: I will take note of that.

PLAN FOR POST-WAR AVIATION

1193. *Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: Will the Secretary for Posts and Air please state:

(a) whether Government have prepared any plan for post-war aviation; if so, why these plans have not been circulated to the Members of this House; and

(b) whether it is a fact that Government are contemplating to start two companies for operation on international air routes; if so, when these companies will come into force?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: (a) The reply to the first part is in the affirmative; copies of all the plans have been placed in the Library of the House.

(b) The Government of India's plans for the operation of air services from India to countries abroad, envisage the setting up of two corporations for this purpose. These plans are however still under examination and it will be some time before any decisions are taken.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: In regard to these two corporations, which are contemplated, do the Government of India, according to their plans, contemplate to have a dominating voice in their management and also share capital?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: I have not got the book here, but the plans as at present contemplated include Government taking a share, but not a dominating share.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: May I know whether the private companies in existence in India at present will not be allowed to operate on these external air routes?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: It will be a new company altogether.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: I want to know whether the existing companies will not be allowed to operate on these external air routes?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: I find it difficult to give a reply to that. All I can say is that the plans, as at present framed, contemplate the formation of a new company in which various people can take shares; Government can take a certain share, and shipping companies and various other transport companies and the public can all take shares. It is not the intention to give the operation to any one of the existing companies; it will be a new company altogether.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: May I submit that my question is that the existing companies were making plans for working external air routes and will they be allowed to operate these external air routes or not? I want an answer—yes or no.

An Honourable Member: Both.

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: The matter will be for the licensing board to decide. I am afraid I cannot give an answer.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: May I take it from the Honourable Member that for the present the Government does not contemplate any licenses to any of these private companies to operate on these air routes?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: No; not until the licensing board has been formed.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: Am I to understand that the British Overseas Airways will have a monopoly of these air routes to India from the United Kingdom?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: No; certainly not. We are going to have an agreement with the British Government for operating only on the basis that India will have an equal right to operate from India to the United Kingdom.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: In view of the fact that the Honourable Member cannot explain the problem as a whole in answer to a question, will he make a statement about the policy of the Government so that we may visualise what the Government propose to do?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: Certainly; I hope to do so today.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Will the licensing board carry out the assurances given by Government on the floor of this House, or will they overlook it as usual?

(No answer was given.)

CONSULTATION OF LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY re CIVIL AVIATION POLICY AND PROGRAMME

1194. *Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: Will the Secretary for Posts and Air please state:

(a) whether, in view of the importance of civil aviation, Government are prepared to place before this Honourable House the policy and programme which is being adopted for this country;

(b) whether Government propose to consult this House before launching or committing themselves to any scheme of civil aviation and take the verdict of this House; and

(c) whether it is a fact that the Government of the United Kingdom gave an opportunity to the House of Parliament with regard to the civil aviation programme and policy; if so, why the Government of India have delayed in bringing this matter before the House?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: (a) and (b). Copies of the plans of the Government of India for the development of Civil Aviation in India have been placed in the Library of the House. I lay on the table a copy of the Press Communique, dated the 24th May, 1945, which states the general policy of Government in this matter. The rules relating to the licensing of air transport have been laid on the table of the House and the plans and policy of Government have been presented to the Standing Finance Committee and the Standing Advisory Committee and discussed by them. The Honourable Member is also aware that the matter was discussed in this House on the Budget grant.

(c) Two White Papers on Civil Aviation were prepared by the Ministry of Civil Aviation in U. K. and presented to Parliament. As regards the second part of the question, the Honourable Member is referred to my reply to parts (a) and (b) of the question.

PRESS COMMUNIQUE

POST-WAR PLAN FOR CIVIL AVIATION

DEVELOPMENT THROUGH PRIVATE ENTERPRISE

Government to take financial interest in selected cases: Establishment of Air Transport Licensing Board.

In November, 1944, the Government of India published the Second Report of the Reconstruction Committee of Council on Reconstruction Planning. The general policy of Government regarding civil aviation and the plans prepared for a system of trunk air services in India were indicated in the Report. The services planned provide for the operation of daily air services on a series of trunk routes radiating from the air ports of entry and exit at the Karachi and Calcutta, supplemented by routes radiating from the Capital at Delhi and from Bombay and Madras. The total mileage of the air routes planned exceeds 11,000 and the air services will be operated with aircraft of from 12 to 20 passenger capacity and will carry both mails and freight in addition. This broad plan, which had been accepted by the Policy Committee on Posts and Aviation, has now been approved by Government. It should be understood that this is a plan for the initial post-war period only and it is not the intention that there should be no further planning for either external air services or for additional internal air services. In fact, planning for the external air services of India is now in hand. Government are also confident that stimulated by the existence of internal trunk air services, there will undoubtedly come into existence, as a result of local or private initiative, a considerable number of feeder air services to serviceable needs.

Plans have also been prepared and approved for the construction of the necessary aerodromes and connected buildings and for the organisation of the air routes. Plans are under preparation—and it is hoped to a complete them soon—for the necessary work organisation the telecommunications organisation, the headquarters organisation and the training institutions necessary to implement their air transport plan.

The Report of the Reconstruction Committee of Council referred to above stated that no decision had been taken as to the agency by which the air services of India will be established and operated. This question had been referred to the Policy Committee on which Provincial Governments, Indian States and prominent Commercial Bodies were represented and its views were obtained. In the Budget Session of the Assembly, Government were pressed to announce their decision of this important issue. After careful consideration of all aspects of the question, Government have now arrived at a decision, and they consider it desirable to announce this decision in order to clear up any uncertainty in the public mind so that plans of development by private enterprise may not be impeded.

The Policy of the Government of India is generally to promote the development and operation of air transport services, internal and external, by a limited number of sound and reliable private commercial organisations with their own capital and operated under normal commercial principles. In selected cases, Government will take a financial interest, but not a controlling interest, in the Companies operating the air services and appoint a Director on the Board. This policy does not, however, rule out the operation, by the State itself, of any air transport service or services in particular cases and such operation may be by the Central Government, a Provincial Government or the Government of an Indian State.

The operation of all air transport services will be subject to licences granted by a Licensing Board constituted under the authority of Government, and without such a licence no air transport service can be operated. Legal powers for this purpose have already been taken by Government by an amendment of the Indian Aircraft Act and it is hoped shortly to publish the Licensing Rules framed under the powers conferred by the Act. The object of Licensing is to ensure the safety and reliability of services, to eliminate uneconomic competition, to prevent the exploitation of the public, to conserve and utilise the national resources and effort for the optimum benefit of the country and to promote the development and expansion of air services on right lines and in the right direction. In fact, the object is to secure Order in the Air. All licensed operating Companies will be placed under an obligation to admit, in any of their training schemes, members of all communities and the admission of such trainees will, subject to suitable candidates being available, be in accordance with the prescribed communal proportions. Operating Companies may be granted State assistance in specific cases, but such assistance will be entirely at the discretion of Government and on conditions to be laid down in each case. A complete scheme for this purpose will be drawn up in due course but it will be based on a system of target operating costs (which will not include a return on capital invested) and target revenue designed to regard the efficient operator who reduces costs and increases revenue by commercial enterprise and development of traffic.

The Government of India have entered into discussion with the Indian States in the light of the policy stated above and are confident that it will be possible to secure an agreement which will enable the policy to be implemented in practice in a spirit of friendly co-operation so as to secure a rapid and orderly development of air transport services—internal and external—for the benefit of India and its people as a whole.

POSTS AND AIR DEPARTMENT:

New Delhi, May 24, 1945.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: Is the Honourable Member aware that in the House of Commons a day was allotted for the discussion of aviation and the verdict of the House was obtained as regards the policy of Aviation? In view of the importance of the subject, will the Honourable Member consider the desirability of obtaining the verdict of the House regarding the future policy of aviation?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: I hope to deal with this matter this morning on the debate on the Finance Bill.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: I want that a separate day should be allotted for the discussion of aviation and the opinion of Members of the House should be sought regarding the future aviation plans and policy of the Government. We do not want to hear the Honourable Member's views. We want to place our views before Government for their guidance.

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: I think Honourable Members had an opportunity on the cut motion on the Budget when dealing with the Civil Aviation Department and in connection with the Finance Bill. I am not in a position to say whether a separate day can be allotted.

Diwan Chaman Lall: Is Government prepared to allot a day for the discussion of this very important subject? Is Government prepared to wait until the discussion has taken place on the floor of the House, before committing this country to a new policy?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: I am not in a position to answer that question at all.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will Government consider the advisability of not rushing with their plans for the establishment of these corporations and licencing board before they give an opportunity to this House as well as to the committee on Civil Aviation to discuss this matter with Government in full?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: I think, Sir, the House has had an opportunity.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: In reply to a question by Diwan Chaman Lall, the Honourable Member said that he was not in a position to answer that question. Part (b) of my question specifically asks whether Government propose to consult this House before launching or committing themselves to any scheme of civil aviation. Why is he not in a position to answer that?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: The matter has been placed before the House. The licencing rules have been placed before the House for more than 30 days.

Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I should like to put a very simple question to the Honourable Member. He has now sensed the feeling of the House. Both the Congress and the League desire that a separate day should be allotted for discussing the whole question. After all the question of civil aviation is a very big problem as far as this country is concerned. The future development of civil aviation is a very big problem and I do not see why the Honourable Member is not prepared to say 'Yes, I shall ask for a separate day and the House will have the fullest opportunity of discussing the whole question.' I do not see any difficulty about it.

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: In that connection I understand—I am not very well informed of the details—that it was placed before a committee of this House and discussed.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Not the question of Corporation.

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I was under the impression that they had agreed to the general policy. I was also under the impression that there have been discussions on this subject on the cut motion. The difficulty is that we are at the end of the Session now, we have a very heavy programme of Legislation before the House, and it will be extremely difficult to allot a day. It would have been easier if this matter had been brought up at an earlier stage.

Mr. M. Asaf Ali: Where is the difficulty? It is only one more day added to the time table. On the present programme it appears that the House will continue to work till the 12th April. Why cannot we have another day?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I think it is likely that the Legislative programme will extend beyond the 12th already. We shall have to give consideration to the matter. I appreciate the feelings of the parties but I should like to assure the House that the Legislative programme is extremely heavy. If we could get through that programme of Legislation quickly, then we would certainly give careful consideration to this subject.

Diwan Chaman Lall: Although the programme is heavy, this question is a very important one.

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I quite appreciate that. I was pointing out the difficulty at this late stage of the Session.

Diwan Chaman Lall: Is my Honourable friend going to consider this matter and let the House know what decision Government have arrived at?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I have already explained that the programme of Legislation is very heavy. It is not all before the House yet. When we see what progress is made in the Legislation, we shall be able to say whether time will be found to squeeze in this item.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: This matter was placed before the Standing Committee for Posts and Air. While I was speaking on the cut motion regarding the policy of Government, the Honourable Secretary gave an assurance on the floor of the House that the minutes of the Standing Committee will be prepared and circulated to the Members of the House. This has not been done. What we have received is a printed copy in a nutshell putting in those paragraphs which suit the Government. The minutes do not give the full proceedings of the Standing Committee. We demand from the Government that the entire proceedings should be printed and circulated so that the House may know what is the view of the non-official members of the Standing Committee. I request you, Sir, to demand from the Honourable Member an explanation as to why he failed to print the entire proceedings of the Standing Committee. Why is this nutshell only circulated? This is not a case of paper economy.

Mr. President: The matter is now drifting into another province. Next question.

PAYMENT TO COOLIES FOR HANDLING OF PARCELS AT HOWRAH STATION

1195. Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state whether it is a fact that a sum of Rs. 15,000 per month is paid for the coolies for the handling of parcels at the Howrah Station and that this entire amount is kept by the contractor without paying a pie to the coolies? If so, why?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: A sum of Rs. 1,150 per month (not Rs. 15,000 per month as stated in the question) is being paid by the East Indian Railway to the Cooly Contractor at Howrah Station for handling of parcels at Howrah Station. I expect to receive shortly a copy of the actual agreement and will lay on the table a reply to the second portion of the question as soon as my information is complete.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Is it not a fact that these porters have to work for the railways free at all stations and very often they leave the luggage of bona fide passengers in order to work for the railways themselves?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: No, Sir. That is not my information.

Shri Sri Prakasa: That is my information and experience.

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: At Howrah station, I understand that the arrangement is that unloading and loading of brake vans, luggage vans and parcel vans is done by the coolies between the trains and while they are not paid for that, they are exempted from paying any licence fee which is sometimes imposed by the railways, but I have not got full information. I shall look into the agreement. This matter has been raised in this House on several occasions before. I propose to look into the whole question and try to get greater uniformity in the procedure of the railways.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: Is it not a fact that the contractors do not pay anything at all to the porters and pocket the entire amount themselves, as repeatedly mentioned on the floor of the House? This is only a small portion of the contractors' income. There are so many other sources of income that it is worth while for any Member of the Assembly, including Government Members, to become coolie contractors at Howrah.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Will Government consider the advisability of introducing the system prevalent on the railways of other countries, of paying the porters themselves?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Yes, Sir. I will look into the whole question. It has been looked into on numerous occasions in the past. It has not been found to be the best system for the conditions in India but as I have said, I shall look into the whole question.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Are we to understand that the measures which the Honourable Member's colleagues, the Labour Member is supposed to take in order to check vagaries of contractors will apply to this particular matter also?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: That question should be addressed to the Labour Member.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: In view of the fact that the Honourable Member himself has said that he wanted to devote some attention to this particular matter and that he has not been able to do so, will he now take an early occasion to study this matter personally and carefully and see that these grievances are redressed?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I have already answered that question.

CLARIFICATION OF RULES FOR DEMOTING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

1196. *Diwan Chaman Lal: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) whether all promotion on the North Western Railway are generally made in an officiating capacity;

(b) whether it is a fact that when an employee is desired to be punished by reduction to a lower grade, he is given no opportunity for explanation under Rule 1712 of the Establishment Code;

(c) the provision in the Establishment Code under which discrimination is made between confirmed and officiating employees, when it is proposed to reduce a man to the lower grade as a disciplinary measure; and

(d) whether Government propose to clarify the Rules to permit a chance of explanation under Rule 1712 to all employees who are to be reduced to lower grades; if not, why not?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) Since vacancies of a permanent nature in higher posts are few and far between while temporary or officiating vacancies are of frequent occurrence, it follows that promotion to a higher post is almost invariably made, in the first instance, in an officiating capacity.

(b) No, but if he is only officiating and his reversion is not being ordered as a penalty for a specific offence, no explanation is called for.

(c) There is no discrimination where the reduction is to the lower grade as a disciplinary measure. Reversion as the outcome of adverse reports on work and fitness for confirmation, does not constitute reduction as a disciplinary measure.

(d) No clarification of the rules is considered necessary as they already provide for an explanation being called for in a case of reduction as a disciplinary measure.

EXPENDITURE FOR ENFORCING CONTROL ORDERS OF CENTRAL GOVERNMENT

1197. *Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please state the number of staff employed at the Centre for enforcing Control Orders issued by Government, and the expenses for enforcing those Orders, for the years 1939 to 1945 separately for each year?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: During the war as many as 84 Control Orders were issued by the Industries and Civil Supplies Department and by the Supply Department of the Central Government alone. The collection of the information desired by the Honourable Member would involve an outlay of labour, time and expense out of proportion to the results to be achieved. Government have no information as to the extent and cost of Control Orders issued by Provincial Governments. If there is any particular Control in the Department of Industries and Supplies on which the Honourable Member would like to have this information, I shall examine the possibility of collecting it.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Is it a fact that crores of money are spent on these controls and when compared to that expenditure incurred on controls, the labour, time and expense involved in the collection of this information would be worth having and in view of this, will the Honourable Member collect the information asked for in the question?

Mr. Geoffrey W. Tyson: Is the Honourable Member aware that as recently as Friday last the Honourable the Finance Member gave as his opinion that there were more than one million controls in force at the moment?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: I have no knowledge of how the Honourable the Finance Member reaches his calculation.

Mr. Geoffrey W. Tyson: As the figure involved is a very large one and as it affects the taxpayers to their detriment, and as the number of controls are very large, will he reconsider his decision regarding the outlay of labour, time and expense and collect this information as it will be worth having?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: Not all controls are wholtime controls. Quite a number were done by people who were also doing something else. To arrive at the figure of expense would probably involve an estimate of the amount and value of the proportion of time devoted in different degrees by different people running these controls. Controls were meant in order to control something, because it would help for control to be done.

Mr. Geoffrey W. Tyson: Will the Honourable Member consider the desirability of appointing controller to enumerate these controls?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: If the Honourable Member is serious, we are prepared to consider it.

Shri Mohan Lal Sakseena: How much does the cloth control cost?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: I want notice.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Why should the Government grudge the expenses involved in collecting this information? Do they suspect it would be against their interest?

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Will the Honourable Member collect these figures and give us later on?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: I cannot really promise that. As I explained in answer to the question, it would be really a big job. If the Honourable Member would put down a question as regards some particular control in which he is interested, then I would see what we can do to meet his wishes.

Shri Sri Prakasa: What do Government spend in controlling the length of the skirts of ladies in Delhi?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: So far as I know, nothing.

SCHEME FOR NEW LINE FROM TANDO MOHAMMAD KHAN TO BADLIN ON N. W. RAILWAY

1198. *Seth Yusuf Abdoolah Haroon: Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state whether it is a fact that the North Western Railway have sanctioned a Railway line from Tando Mohammad Khan to Badlin via Bulri, Jhok, Bathoro, Sujawal and Jati? If not, is any such scheme under consideration?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: No. The North Western Railway are carrying out the survey of a Railway line from Tando Mohammed Khan to Moghalbin.

WITHDRAWAL OF CONTROLS OF LUXURY GOODS

1199. *Seth Sukhdev: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please state:

(a) whether there is at present any price or distribution control on the sale of luxury goods, e.g., silk, art silk, etc., and the particulars thereof, if any,

(b) if the reply to (a) is in the affirmative, the reasons for the continuation of these controls; and

(c) in view of the fact that these articles are consumed by a small portion of society, viz., the richer classes, whether Government will consider the advisability of withdrawing these controls?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: (a) The price and distribution of silk and art silk goods are controlled. If the Honourable Member wishes, I shall give him copies of the relevant notifications, which came out last summer in the Gazette of India.

(b) Government do not think that silk goods in general can be called 'luxury' articles. Many types of silk and artificial silk goods are used by the middle classes; for example, for sarees and sari borders. Government's reason for continuing the controls is their desire to ensure that such supplies as there are will be made available to the consuming public at reasonable prices.

(c) Government have under consideration the withdrawal of control over silk.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: Is the Honourable Member aware of general complaints that silks are not available and the reason is that they are controlled?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: It is correct to say that this particular control has been subject to a good deal of criticism in the sense that this commodity seems to be peculiarly susceptible to disappearing and that is why I have answered that the Government have under consideration the withdrawal of control over silk.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: Is it not a fact that when these things are controlled they become the monopoly of only a privileged few to enjoy them and purchase them from the black market?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: It is the object of control not to have any article scarce. Before control comes in, it is only the privileged people who can pay the price and purchase it.

Seth Govind Das: Is it a fact that as soon as anything is controlled, it goes out of the market?

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Is the Honourable Member aware that many mills which deal in artificial silks have closed down because of want of raw materials and that is why there is black market in these goods?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: I think the first step in the whole process is scarcity which the Honourable Member himself recognises. It is the actual shortage of a material which is greatly in demand that brings about these unfortunate consequences, and the object of these controls is to remove these unfortunate consequences at least to some extent.

IMPORT OF SULPHURIC ACID AND CAUSTIC SODA MANUFACTURING PLANTS FROM U. S. A.

1200. Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please state:

(a) how many sulphuric acid and caustic soda, manufacturing plants were imported into India after 1941 from the U. S. A. under lease lend;

(b) the names of the concerns to whom these plants were supplied, and the basis, thereof;

(c) at what price these plants were supplied to the concern;

(d) whether any individuals or representative bodies of chemical manufacturers in the country were consulted with regard to the distribution of these plants; if not, why not;

(e) if it is a fact that these plants have been supplied to concerns other than those already in the chemical industry; if so, why;

(f) if it is a fact that Government have distributed some of these plants to some textile mills and starch factories and other factories not in the trade;

(g) if so, whether Government are aware that textile mills and starch factories possessing these up-to-date plants will be in a better competitive position vis-a-vis those in the same industries, and that these factories will compete unfairly with the already established chemical factories, textile mills, starch factories and others per se; and

(h) whether Government propose to take steps to protect the interests of the concerns referred to in (g) above who are thus placed in an inferior competitive position due to the discriminating treatment to which they are subjected and how?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: (a) No plants were imported under Lease/Lend. Four Sulphuric Acid Plants have been imported by Government for industry from U.S.A. on cash purchase. Negotiations are still going on about three Caustic Soda/Chlorine Plants which are to be imported through commercial channels.

(b) The plants have been allotted to the following concerns:

Sulphuric Acid Plants.—(1) M/S Bararee Coke Co. Ltd., Kasunda (Behar), (2) M/S H. Mumtaz & Co. Calcutta, (3) M/S Delhi Cloth & General Mills Ltd., Delhi, (4) M/S Anil Starch Products Ltd., Ahmedabad.

Caustic Soda Plants.—(1) M/S Delhi Cloth & General Mills Ltd. Delhi, (2) M/S H. Mumtaz & Co. Calcutta, (3) M/S Ahmedabad Manufacturing and Calico Printing Works, Ahmedabad.

The following factors were taken into consideration in making the allotment of these plants:

(1) The plants should be located where there is a shortage.

(2) The firm to which a plant is allocated should have experience in the production of chemicals.

(3) The firm should be a user of these chemicals, so that it can survive difficult times after the war.

(4) The firm should be financially strong enough to be able: (i) to invest the amount required for the purchase of the plants, and (ii) to invest after the war, because competition will necessitate additions to make the production of these chemicals an economic proposition.

(5) In view of the shortage of Muslim-owned chemical plants, at least one plant should be allotted to a Muslim concern.

(c) The F. A. S. price of the Sulphuric Acid plants is $47,020 each. The ultimate price to the allottees has not yet been determined.

As to caustic soda/chlorine plants, the prices are still being negotiated, but the approximate F.A.S. price is estimated at $400,000 each.

(d) Yes, Sir. The allotment was made by the Government of India, Department of Industries and Civil Supplies, which appointed an inter-departmental committee. The committee was guided by the considerations stated in reply to part (b) of this question. The need for consulting non-official individuals did not arise.

(e) The allottees, except M/S Anil Starch Products Ltd. and Ahmedabad Manufacturing and Calico Printing Co. Ltd., are all producers of chemicals. The two concerns just named are big consumers of chemicals.

(f) Yes, Sir. The allottees of two plants also possess textile mills, while one has a starch factory. These allottees are manufacturers or large consumers of these chemicals.

(g) and (h). The considerations in allotting these plants have been stated in replies to (b), (e) and (f) of the question. Government do not agree that there will be unfair competition, nor is it their policy to protect vested interests to the exclusion of new enterprises.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: The Honourable Member mentioned Messrs. Anil Starch Products Ltd., Ahmedabad, as one of the allottees of sulphuric acid plants. Is he aware that there is a sulphuric acid manufacturing company near about Ahmedabad and it was not consulted although the factory was there?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: As I have said, individual firms were not consulted. The allocation was done by an inter-departmental committee, taking into consideration the general principles I have given at some length.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Is the Honourable Member aware that a sulphuric acid plant can produce about five tons a day and Anil Starch Products, Ltd., can consume only five tons per year? Is that what is called consumption?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: My answer did not suggest a complete consumption, as it were, of the product. It was merely that the takers should be consumers of these products, not necessarily that they should be in a position to take the entire production.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Is it a small difference between five tons a day and five tons a year?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: As stated, it is a large difference, but I would like to go into these figures a bit more.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Does the Honourable Member not feel that the other starch factories will be affected by unfair competition by allotting this plant to the starch factory?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: I do not think so. We have dealt with that in the answer to the question already.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: Are bye-products in the manufacture of caustic soda utilised in the manufacture of sulphuric acid and vice-versa? If not, why are these plants given to the same firms in some cases?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: That point about consumption of bye-products of caustic soda is a very important one, and that was one of the reasons that guided the allocation of these particular plants, namely, that they should be in an area where the product and the bye-products can be consumed.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: If there is going to be any unfair competition what action do Government propose to take?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: The Honourable Member is assuming unfair competition; we do not.

AGREEMENT WITH JODHPUR STATE FOR MANAGEMENT OF JODHPUR RAILWAY

1201. Sri A. Karunakara Menon: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) the nature of agreement with the Jodhpur State for management of the British portion of the Jodhpur Railway;

(b) when, and how the agreement can be terminated or reviewed; and

(c) whether Government intend to work themselves the British portion of the Jodhpur Railway; if not, why not?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the brief particulars of the agreement as given on pages 120-121 of the History of Indian Railways as corrected up to 31st March, 1941, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

(b) The agreement, subject to any modifications that may be mutually agreed to, can be terminated by the giving of not less than twelve calendar months previous notice by either party.

(c) No. The arrangement whereby this small section of metre gauge line is worked as part of the Jodhpur system, is both economical and convenient from the operational point of view.

LOCAL ADVISORY COMMITTEES FOR CLASS I RAILWAYS IN INDIA

1202. Sri A. Karunakara Menon: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) which Class I Railways in India have no Local Advisory Committees; and

(b) whether the Railway Board have issued any instructions to such Railways to have Advisory Committees; if so, with what result; if not, why not?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) The Jodhpur State Railway and the Bikaner State Railway.

(b) A copy of the constitution proposed for formation of Local Advisory Committees on the State-owned Railways was sent in 1922 to the then Joint Jodhpur-Bikaner Railway for information. The Jodhpur Railway Administration do not consider that there is any justification for formation of such a Committee on that Railway. As regards the Bikaner State Railway, I understand the matter is at present under the consideration of His Highness' Government.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: How is it that while all other railways have found it necessary as well as advisable to have their own advisory councils, this railway alone has been allowed the luxury of not having this advisory council?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: That is a matter for the State administration to decide.

ALLEGED CORRUPTION OF RAILWAY STATION MASTER OF HODAL, G. I. P. RAILWAY

1203. Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member kindly state if Government are aware that the general public of the Hodal town (a Railway Station on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway) including a large number of shopkeepers, have preferred a complaint about the corruption of Railway Station Master of Hodal stating that high Railway officials have extorted about three lakhs of rupees by way of bribery through the said Station Master and that entries relating to the payment of bribery exist in the books of the shopkeepers?

(b) Has any inquiry been held into the conduct of the said Station Master? If not, do Government propose to consider the desirability of holding an independent inquiry into the matter?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) and (b). Government have received a representation from the merchants served by Hodal Town Railway Station and the matter is under investigation.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: With regard to the last paragraph of part (a) will the Honourable Member refer the matter to Khan Bahadur Qurban Ali to whom such cases are referred and who has been appointed by the Government of India?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Yes, Sir. I understand that the matter has been referred to that branch.

CONSTRUCTION OF A RAILWAY LINE FROM QADIAN TO PATTI OR KASUR via BEAS IN PUNJAB

1204. Sardar Mangal Singh: (a) With reference to the reply to starred question No. 18 of the 8th February, 1945, will the Honourable the Railway Member please state if post-war plans for the extension of Railways in the Punjab have since been finalised by the North Western Railway authorities or the Railway Board? If so, is it proposed to construct a Railway Line from Qadian to Patti or Kasur via Beas? If so when would it be constructed?

(b) Does he propose to consider the desirability of providing Railway facilities between Beas and Kasur or Patti? If not, what are the reasons?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) The answer to the 1st part of the question is in the affirmative. No line from Qadian to Patti or Kasur is included at present in the list approved for investigation.

(b) The desirability has been considered in consultation with the Provincial Government and it has been decided not to include this project in the approved list at present.

RATIO OF SIKHS TO TOTAL APPOINTMENTS IN RAILWAY BOARD

1205. *Sardar Mangal Singh: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state the total number of each of the temporary, officiating and permanent appointments made in the grade of Assistants, Clerks and Stenographers in the Railway Board since January, 1944, and how many Sikhs were appointed in each category?

(b) Has the number of appointments of Sikhs in each category been according to their due share and representation? If so, how?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: Appointments to non-gazetted vacancies in the Board's office are not made by direct recruitment only but also by transfer from Railway Offices. Communal considerations do not enter into the matter of transfers. Further the Sikh community is not entitled to any separate reservation but shares in the reservation of 8.8 per cent for 'Other minority communities' which include Anglo Indians, Sikhs, Indian Christians and Parsis. I lay on the table of the House a statement showing the number of vacancies filled by direct recruitment during 1944 which shows that the recruitment of Sikhs in the office was satisfactory. A similar statement for 1945 is not yet ready. I may, however, add that the number of posts held by the members of the Sikh community on date is, Assistants—ten Clerks—eleven and Stenographers—three—which gives percentages of 4.9, 4.5 and 5 respectively of the total number of posts of each category.

Statement showing the number of vacancies filled by direct recruitment in the Railway Department (Railway Board) during the period 1st January, 1944, to 31st December, 1944.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Is the Honourable Member aware that the quota of Muslims in these branches is much below the 25 per cent. quota reserved for Muslims?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: If the Honourable Member will put down a question, I will answer it.

Mr. President: It does not arise out of this.

INSPECTION OF ORDNANCE FACTORIES BY NON-OFFICIALS TO GET TECHNICAL EQUIPMENT AND PERSONNEL

†1206. Mr. K. C. Neogy: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state:

(a) whether Government have surveyed and reviewed, the war-time activities and post-war programme of Ordnance Factories in all their aspects;

(b) whether they have appointed any Special Committee for the purpose; if so, whether any non-officials, including representatives of engineering and ancillary industries, were associated with such an enquiry;

(c) whether Government propose to give necessary facilities for Indian industrialists and manufacturers to visit and inspect such Ordnance Factories with a view to obtaining available technical equipment and personnel from these factories, for the development of Indian industries; and

(d) whether it is a fact that these factories will revert to the War Department and Master General of Ordnance after the 1st April, 1946, and that they would be open after that period for inspection or visit by Indian industrialists interested in their output or technical processes for adaptation and use for civil purposes?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: (a) Yes.

(b) The review was undertaken by a Departmental Committee, and no non-official was appointed to it as it is not usual to include non-officials in Departmental Committees.

(c) Yes; as soon as it is clear which factories can be released.

(d) Some Ordnance Factories will revert to War Department from the 1st April, 1947, and that Department will as far as possible have no objection to the visit of the interested industrialists to the Factories.

ROAD ROLLERS INDENTED FROM U. S. A.

†1207. Mr. K. C. Neogy: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state:

(a) the total demand for road rollers in India according to Government's estimates;

(b) whether it is a fact that they have placed orders for about 1,000 road rollers from the United Kingdom; and

(c) whether Government have invited tenders within the country for only twenty-four road rollers (twelve steam and twelve diesel); if so, the reasons for the wide difference between the number of the units to be imported and those to be ordered within the country?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: (a) 2,500 road rollers are urgently required for delivery before the middle of 1948.

(b) The D. G., I. S. D., London, was asked to place orders for 891 road rollers but so far he has only been able to place orders for 250.

(c) Yes Sir. Road rollers are not at present manufactured in India. This order was an experimental one intended to encourage those who have some facilities to go into production.

India's immediate requirements of road rollers cannot be met except by import.

† Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner being absent.

VISIT OF ROAD ROLLER MISSION TO INDIA.

†1208. Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state whether a Road Roller Mission has arrived in India and been touring about the country? If so, what is its composition and purpose?

(b) Has the Mission submitted its Report to Government? If so, what are the recommendations of this Mission?

(c) Will the Report of the Mission be published and placed on the table of this House? Do Government intend to consult Indian Industrialists and manufacturers in regard to this Report and discuss with them the whole question of manufacture of Road Rollers within the country at an early date?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: (a) Yes, Sir. The following were the members:

(1) Mr. George Bryden Leader.

(2) Mr. Edward Burgess Member.

(3) Mr. C. J. Ritchie Member.

(4) Mr. E. R. Howlett Member.

The Mission was asked to advise Government on the capacity available in the Ordnance Factories for the manufacture of Road Rollers or components as well as for their assembly.

(b) Yes, Sir. Its recommendations are that while the steam boiler and the diesel oil engine part of the Road Rollers must be imported the rest of the components can be manufactured partly in the Ordnance Factories and partly in the other Engineering concerns, and then assembled in India.

(c) Government do not consider that any useful purpose will be served by such publication. They are already consulting Indian industrialists and manufacturers.

ROAD ROLLERS AVAILABLE FROM MILITARY AUTHORITIES AND U. S. A. SURPLUS PROPERTY DISPOSAL BOARD.

†1209. Mr. K. C. Neogy: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state the total number of Road Rollers made available from (i) the military authorities, and (ii) the United States of America Surplus Property Disposal Board?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: Our own military authorities have not yet declared any surplus to us. The take-over from Americans is at present in progress and I am sorry I cannot say exactly how many road rollers will be forthcoming from that source. So far as I can see at present however about 50 of all types may become available.

SUPPLY OF WAGONS FOR LOADING OF TIMBER FROM JHELM.

1210. Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava: (a) Will the Honourable Member for War Transport kindly state if it is a fact that the North Western Railway Administration has placed restrictions on the loading of timber from Jhelum and that no wagons have been supplied for the last two months to the merchants for the transport of timber?

(b) Is it a fact that huge stocks of timber worth more than a crore have accumulated at Jhelum?

(c) Are Government aware that the non-supply of Wagons has resulted in a great loss to the merchants and inconvenience and uneasiness to the general public?

(d) When do Government propose to relax these restrictions and give a free supply of wagons to the merchants of Jhelum?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) No restrictions have been placed on the loading of timber at Jhelum. Between the 21st January, 1946, and the 19th March, 1946, 442 wagons were loaded with timber at Jhelum.

(b) Large stocks of timber are normally held in the timber yards at Jhelum. Government has no information concerning their present quantity and value.

(c) and (d). It is reported that on the 19th March, 1946, 139 wagon-loads of timber were awaiting despatch at Jhelum. As many wagons as possible are being supplied for the loading of timber at Jhelum consistently with the responsibility of Government for seeing that priority is given to the movement of more essential commodities.

† Answer to this question laid on the table the questioner being absent.

Diwan Chaman Lal: Is my Honourable friend absolutely well aware of this fact that no restrictions were placed?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: That is so.

Diwan Chaman Lal: Will my Honourable friend make a further enquiry and find out whether the information supplied to him is correct?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I will, Sir. But it would help if the Honourable Member would state what he knows about this affair.

Diwan Chaman Lal: There was a restriction during that period.

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: I will certainly look into that.

RELIEF AGAINST BRASS AND COPPER CONTROL ORDER, 1945

1211. Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state if it is a fact that the Brass and Copper Control Order, 1945, was promulgated after the termination of the War? If so, what were the reasons therefor?

(b) Is he aware of the difficulties which the small manufacturers of hand made utensils are experiencing? If so, what action if any, does he propose to take to give relief to them?

(c) Did he receive a copy of the Resolutions passed by the Conference of the All-India Metal Merchants held in Delhi on the 5th and 6th January, 1946? If so, what action, if any, has been taken thereon?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: (a) Yes, Sir, but it was issued in supersession of the Brass Utensils (Control) Order, 1944, previously in force. Under the revised Control Order, Government, have also fixed ceiling prices of Brass and Copper sheets, Ingots and Scrap. This was done to combat black marketing in raw material. The ceilings were fixed in consultation with the industry.

(b) The root difficulty is the metal being in very short supply. Every effort is being made to arrange for larger supplies from abroad and to increase releases to the manufacturers of utensils.

(c) Yes, Sir. The main tenor of those resolutions was that the control should be abolished. Government do not consider that the removal of the control at present would either increase supply which as I remarked in the answer to (b) is the root of the difficulty, or lead to more even distribution.

Shri Sri Prakasa: In view of the fact that the Supply Member had promised a conference between himself and the industry, could the Honourable Member give us an idea of the result of that conference?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: Yes, Sir. It was held on the 21st and a variety of people were present, and the question whether supplies could be made direct to workers who had formed themselves into co-operative societies was the main subject of that conference. Most unfortunately the Registrar of Co-operative Societies of the Province from which most of the literature as it were had come was not able to be present, but we have wired to him asking him the actual number of workers in these societies, and on certain other points, such as, for example, whether the societies would restrict sale only to members of the societies. You can see the relevance of that point—I hope I am not making a speech, Sir. There was an effort made there to get to some agreement between people who hitherto handled the imports and these associations, but without success, and the intention is that after we have got the replies from the Registrars of Co-operative Societies we will consider actually fixing an allocation ourselves.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Why has monopoly been given to only fourteen or fifteen persons throughout the country in the matter of importing brass sheets from outside?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: These were the people who had long been in this business, and were competent to handle its distribution.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Is the Honourable Member satisfied that the present system works better than the status quo ante?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: I think it is undoubtedly the case that there are several features about these things that are not satisfactory. It is certainly not satisfactory. In this particular material we are still quite a long way from normal peace time conditions, and that is the root of the difficulty. It is a very difficult thing and I quite agree with the Honourable Member that it is rather unsatisfactory business altogether, but we are struggling to make it a little more satisfactory.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: What precaution has the Honourable Member taken to see that the normal trade channels are not disturbed?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: The channels we have used were precisely chosen to represent the normal trade channels.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: In view of the fact that utensils are not available in the bazar at controlled prices, will the Honourable Member see that the control is removed so that utensils may be obtained at least?

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: Although there is no food available!

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: I think you can take it that from one point of view we will be very glad to get rid of these controls because they give headaches to many more people than manufacturers, but I do not think I can answer off hand in that way. As I have said, it is particularly difficult and it is one in which a lot of interests are involved, some of them of quite recent origin. It is really a matter to some extent of this industry being in a process of quite rapid development and the problem which is really before us is to tune this process in with this Control which we have to keep going because of scarcity.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable Member remove the monopoly and see how it works? That is the whole trouble.

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: I do not think there is any question of monopoly.

ALLOCATION OF CLOTH ON POPULATION BASIS AND CREATION OF RESERVE AND NOMINATED DEALERS.

1212. Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state if he is aware that in the allocation of cloth to a particular locality on population basis no regard is paid to the proportion between its rural and urban population with the result that at places where the urban population far exceeds the rural population shortage is felt about fine cloth, while coarse cloth is found in abundance, and vice versa? Do Government propose to remedy this defect by allocation of fine and coarse cloth according to the proportion of rural and urban population of the locality?

(b) Are Government aware that the cloth trade has been more adversely affected by the creation of a new class of dealers known as Reserve and Nominated dealers?

(c) Are Government aware that this new class of dealers has practically monopolised the trade and the old dealers are starving practically?

(d) Did Government receive any representation of the consumers or traders to the effects that they don't want cheap mill retail shops in their locality? If so, will Government place it on the table of the House? If not, what objection have Government got in allowing new shops being opened by the Mills wherever necessary?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: (a) The responsibility of the Central Government is to see that each Province gets its proper quota of fine and coarse cloth. The Central Government leaves to Provincial Governments full discretion as to how they should distribute their fine and coarse cloth within their own territory.

(b) The Honourable Member is I take it referring to the appointment by Provincial Governments of agents to buy the monthly provincial quota of cloth from mill centres. The Central Government leaves the selection of such agents to the discretion of Provincial Governments. Clearly Provincial Governments can only nominate a limited number.

(c) No, Sir.

(d) No such representation has been received by the Central Government. As regards the last sentence of this part of the question, I invite the Honourable Member's attention to parts (b) and (c) of the Honourable Mr. Waugh's reply to his Question No. 458, asked on the 22nd February, 1946.

LARGE STOCK OF CLOTH BALES LYING UNBOOKED WITH MILLS

1213. *Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: (a) Is the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies aware that large stocks of cloth bales are lying unbooked for months together with the mills to the inconvenience of the mills, cloth merchants and the general public?

(b) What harm do Government anticipate in placing cloth in higher class in respect of priority than is assigned to it at present?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: (a) No, Sir.

(b) I would refer the Honourable Member to the Honourable Mr. Waugh's reply to part (a) of Question No. 457, asked on the 22nd February, 1946. Cloth is classified above normal civil and military traffic, though below traffic of greater urgency, but it can be moved to Class II when circumstances demand it. To move it to a higher class even in normal circumstances would hold up more pressing movements and defeat the purpose of the priority list.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Are any expeditious steps being taken to rush cloth in the famine stricken areas of Madras Presidency?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: That very point is being examined.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: How long will it take to examine the question?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: I think as a result of suggestions made by the Honourable Member.

Mr. President: The question hour is over.

(b) WRITTEN ANSWERS

EXPORT AND SHORTAGE OF FINE CLOTH

1214. *Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please state if it is a fact that under rationalisation scheme the Mills were obliged to increase their production by ten per cent by a reduction in picks or adoption of coarser counts?

(b) Does this reduction in picks or adoption of coarser counts not mean a deterioration in the qualities of the cloth produced?

(c) Is it not a fact that this will lead to a greater import of finer cloths?

(d) If Government think that there is a shortage of cloth production specially of the fine quality in India, why are they encouraging export of cloth to foreign countries?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: (a) The aim of the rationalisation scheme was an increase in production of about ten per cent by means of a reduction in picks and a restriction in the number of counts a mill is permitted to produce. It is not strictly correct that mills were obliged to adopt coarser counts.

(b) Yes, Sir, to some extent.

(c) No, Sir. The Government of India sent a telegram in October last to the Secretary of State for India informing him of these restrictions and asking that His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom should permit export to India of only such fine varieties of cloth as would not in any case, even if there were no restrictions, have been manufactured in India.

(d) It is hardly correct to say that Government encourages export of cloth. The quantity of cloth that Government is allowing to be exported this year is about 1/15th of India's total cloth production. Export of cloth of 48's counts and above is prohibited, and that of 36's to 47's is severely restricted. Many factors enter into the present trading position and shortages have a way of reacting on each other. Up to a point therefore cloth like food may have to be looked at on a global basis. The answer to the second query in this part of the question is therefore in the negative.

EXPORT OF MILL CLOTH.

1215. *Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies give the yardage figures of Mill cloth exported to foreign countries from India in 1944 and 1945?

(b) What was India's total production of Mill cloth in yardage prior to War and in 1944 and 1945? How much cloth India used to import prior to War? What was the yardage of Government purchases prior to War and in 1945 as well?

(c) How are Government now intending to meet the acute shortage of cloth in the country.

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: (a) The total quantities of cloth, mill-made and handloom, exported to foreign countries from India in 1944 and 1945 were 484 and 464 million yards respectively. Separate statistics regarding the exports of mill-made cloth are not available.

(b) The total production of mill cloth in India in pre-war years was on an average about 4,000 million yards; during 1944 and 1945 it was 4,815 and 4,654 million yards respectively. Pre-war imports of cloth averaged 667 million yards. Figures of Government purchases in pre-war years are not available. In 1945 Government bought 575 million yards for Defence purposes.

(c) Last year the quota for exports was 300 million yards in each half year. This year the quota for the current six months has been cut down to 250 million yards, and in the second six months of this year it will probably be cut down still further. Again, the Defence quota for 1946 is 250 million yards as against the offtake of 575 million yards in 1945. But Government appreciate that the only satisfactory remedy for the cloth shortage is to increase production in India. Government's plan for expansion involves the import of about three million spindles. I am bound to say however that it will probably be a couple of years or so before the import of new machinery begins to increase production.

INCONVENIENCE TO PASSENGERS AT BOOKING OFFICE, AMBALA CITY.

1216. *Syed Ghulam Bhik Nairang: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased so state:

(a) whether it is a fact that the Booking Office at the Ambala City Railway Station is notified as open all the twenty-four hours every day;

(b) whether it is a fact that there have been complaints that in practice the said Booking Office opens only a few minutes before the arrival of a train and the consequent rush of passengers to the Booking Office window is a source of great inconvenience to the passengers, especially women, children, and weak persons;

(c) whether it is a fact that grievances of the travelling public mentioned in (b) above were brought to the notice of the Divisional Superintendent, Delhi and the District Traffic Superintendent, Saharanpur, by the Secretary District Bar Association, Ambala, by letters, dated the 2nd November, 1945, 3rd January, 1946, and 29th January, 1946, on which no action was taken; and

(d) considering that Ambala City is the head quarters of the district where all the courts, civil, criminal, and revenue, except that of the Commissioner are located and is also a large commercial centre to which people from far and near travel by rail, what action has been or is proposed to be taken to remove the grievances of the travelling public above referred to?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) Yes, Sir.

(b) and (c). The only complaint that has been received was from the Secretary, Bar Association, Ambala City, who complained that the Booking Office was not kept open for twenty-four hours, but opened only immediately before the arrival of the train. Enquiries were made and it was found that the allegations made in the complaint were not correct. Tickets are issued promptly and expeditiously throughout the twenty-four hours.

(d) This does not arise.

CONFISCATION OF MR. UTTAM CHAND'S PROPERTY BY AFGHAN GOVERNMENT FOR SHELTERING SGT. SUBHAS CHANDRA BOSE.

1217. *Sri S. T. Adityan: Will the Foreign Secretary be pleased to state:

(a) whether Government are aware that the Government of Afghanistan in or about 1943 confiscated and sold by auction the properties of one Mr. Uttam Chand, trader in Kabul, who was supposed to have sheltered Sgt. Subhas Chandra Bose;

(b) whether Government are aware that the said Uttam Chand was arrested and deported into India by the Afghan Government;

(c) whether Government are aware that the said Uttam Chand complained to the Government of India about the action of the Afghan Government;

(d) what action, if any, has been taken by the Government of India to get back the properties of the said Uttam Chand or their just value from the Afghan Government, and with what result; and

(e) what action, if any, has been taken by the Government of India to get the said Uttam Chand re-established in Kabul or to get him reparations for the loss of his trade?

Mr. H. Weightman: (a) and (b). Uttam Chand was arrested and deported from Afghanistan in May/June 1942. The Government of India understand that before his departure his property in Kabul was locked and sealed in his presence by the Afghan authorities. Later certain persons nominated by Uttam Chand as his agents in Kabul for the disposal of his property declined to act for him, and the Afghan Government accordingly sold it by auction. The sale proceeds, after deducting certain amounts due by Uttam Chand to the Afghan Government were credited to Uttam Chand's account in the Bank of Afghanistan in Kabul.

(c) and (d). Uttam Chand was provided with detailed statement of account relating to the sale of his property. He raised objections in respect of certain items. These were passed on to the Afghan Government for consideration through His Majesty's Legation in Kabul and a reply from the Afghan Government is still awaited.

(e) None.

REPRESENTATION FROM PRESIDENT, METAL MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION, C. P. AND BERAR.

1218. *Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state if he has received any representation from the President, Metal Manufacturers' Association, Central Provinces and Berar, dated the March 1st, 1946?

(b) What action, if any, has he taken thereon?

(c) Is it not the policy of the Government of India to assist the Metal Manufacturers by supplying them with raw materials directly instead of through middlemen?

(d) If not, why have not steps been taken to supply the Manufacturers Co-operative Societies in the Central Provinces and Berar with their require-

(e) Are Government aware of the great set back which the work of these Co-operative Societies has suffered because of the non-supply of raw materials?

(f) Is it also a fact that representation in this connection was made by the Director, Co-operative Societies, Central Provinces as well? If so, what action was taken thereon?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: (a) Yes, Sir.

(b) Thakur Piare Lal Singh the signatory of the representation in question was informed with reference to another communication on the subject that the Government's decision in the matter would be communicated to him after discussions with the representatives of the Bombay Metal Exchange and the Co-operative Societies which are now proceeding.

(c) and (d). Government's policy has been not to interfere with normal trade channels and practices except to the extent necessary to protect other interests. During pre-war days metal manufacturers obtained their raw material through numerous middlemen, and so long as these middlemen do not abuse their position Government cannot in fairness cut them out. In view however of complaints made by the various Co-operative Societies of C. P. and Berar, the question of making direct allotments to them is engaging the serious attention of Government.

(e) Government have received representations to this effect and are examining the question in detail. All the Societies came into existence only very recently, and therefore cannot be said to have been deprived of any advantages they had previously.

(f) Yes, Sir. The matter was referred to the Metal Exchange Association who are the distributing agents for that area but as they raised objections to the direct allotment of metal to the Co-operative Societies, Government decided to discuss the question before changing the prevailing system of distribution. The Registrar of Co-operative Societies was told of this. He has not been able to attend the recent discussions and this has involved some delay.

SPECIAL PAY FOR DEPUTATIONISTS TRANSFERRED TO RAILWAY BOARD

1219. *Maulana Zafar Ali Khan: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state if it is a fact that junior clerks transferred to the office of the Railway Board from Railways as temporary Assistants are drawing Rs. 50/- each per month as special or deputation allowance over and above their pay and dearness allowance?

(b) Is the deputation allowance referred to in (a) above being paid to the staff transferred to the War Transport, Home and Finance Departments of the Government of India?

(c) If the reply to (b) above be in the negative, what is the reason for paying that allowance to the staff transferred to the Railway Board's office, and why cannot that staff be fixed in the Railway Board's scales of pay?

(d) Is it a fact that the Railway Board have distributed their permanent staff into Noting and Routine segments in accordance with the orders of the Home Department?

(e) Is it a fact that although the permanent staff borne on the Noting segment were awaiting promotions, junior clerks transferred from Railways were provided as temporary Assistants in the Railway Board's office? If so, why?

(f) Is it a fact that the staff brought on deputation to the Railway Board's office will be sent back to their parent offices where they hold liens, at the time of retrenchment whenever it takes place? If not, why not?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) Since 24th September, 1942, staff transferred from Railways to the Railway Board's office have been paid either the pay fixed, under the normal rules, in the Board's office scales, or the Railway scales of pay for which they are eligible from time to time plus special pay of Rs. 30 for staff recruited from offices in Delhi and Rs. 50 for staff recruited from offices other than Delhi, whichever is higher.

(b) The reply is in the negative so far as the Finance and Home Departments are concerned. The War Transport Department have granted rates of pay according to the merits of each case.

(c) In order to avoid as far as possible a serious diminution in efficiency, it was essential to obtain trained staff in large numbers from the Railways and fixation in the Railway Board's scales of pay did not offer the requisite incentive for staff to volunteer for transfer.

(d) Yes.

(e) Yes, in a few cases where the permanent staff could not either be spared for administrative reasons or were not suitable for the new work having had no previous experience of it.

(f) Yes, but it is possible that some suitable men may be absorbed in any increased establishment which the Railway Board have to maintain in the post war period.

UNAUTHORISED USE OF SALOONS BY RAILWAY OFFICIALS ON O. T. RAILWAY.

1220. *Shri Satya Narayan Sinha: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state if it is a fact that one Mr. Watson, Loco. Officer at Izatnagar, in the Oudh Tirhut Railway placed his Saloon at the disposal of one Mr. F. Barker an officer of the Bengal and Assam Railway for his private journey from Bareilly to Lucknow?

(b) Is it a fact that the said officer had neither a Pass nor tickets for the journey from Bareilly to Lucknow?

(c) Is it a fact that on the matter being detected, the General Manager of the Bengal and Assam Railway, who is an European, requested the General Manager of the Oudh and Tirhut Railway to issue a special pass, just to save him, and that the latter complied with the request?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) Yes.

(b) Mr. Barker had a pass for his journey from Bareilly to Howrah via Lucknow, but this was available over the E. I. Railway route.

(c) On his return to Calcutta Mr. Barker immediately reported to the General Manager, B. A. Railway that he had travelled between Bareilly and Lucknow by the O. T. Railway route instead of by the E. I. Railway route authorised on his pass. The General Manager, B. A. Railway, communicated the fact to the General Manager, O. T. Railway, who issued a pass to cover the journey made by Mr. Barker on the O. T. Railway.

CING OF AN INDIAN AS MANAGER, O. T. RAILWAY, IN LEAVE VACANCY.

1221. *Shri Satya Narayan Sinha: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state whether it is a fact that the General Manager of the Oudh and Tirhut Railway is going on long leave. If so, who is going to be sent as a General Manager in his place?

(b) Does he propose to consider the question of an Indian being put as a General Manager on the said Railway? If not, why not?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) The General Manager is proceeding on six months' leave from some time in April. As regards the second part, the appointment of his successor is still under consideration.

(b) Government cannot undertake to make selections for such appointments on the basis of race or community.

DISCUSSION AT U. N. O. ASSEMBLY OF ANTI-INDIAN LEGISLATION BY SOUTH AFRICAN GOVERNMENT.

1222. *Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will the Foreign Secretary be pleased to state whether the Indian Delegation to the U.N.O. brought to the notice of the U.N.O. Assembly or the Security Council by a special memorandum or informal discussions, the threat of discriminatory legislation held out by the South African Government against the Indians? If not, why not, especially in view of the adjournment motion passed by the Legislative Assembly on the 4th February, 1946, taking a very serious view of the threatened discriminatory anti-Indian legislation introduced into the South African Parliament?

Mr. H. Weightman: This question will be answered by the Secretary, Commonwealth Relations Department.

DEFECTIVE DISTRIBUTION OF TEXTILE VARIETIES

1223. *Choudhury Md. Abid Hussain: (a) With reference to the reply to starred question No. 683, dated the 5th March, 1946, will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state if it is a fact that the Textile Commissioner, Bombay, fixes the different varieties and quantities of each variety of goods granted to each whole-saler nominated by the Provincial Government?

(b) Is he aware that the Purchase Authority granted by the Textile Commissioner, Bombay, is presented to Distribution Committees established at different centres of manufacture, whose work is to register the varieties and quantities of different goods?

(c) Is it a fact that the Commission Agent of the provincial buyer has to purchase the varieties according to the specification of the Distribution Committee?

(d) Is it a fact that if the provincial buyer finds something unsuitable and does not want to purchase it he will have to forego that much of allotment, thus reducing the quantity of goods coming over to the province at the time for purchase of goods allotted is very short?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: (a) The Textile Commissioner merely fixes the percentages of cloth for each Province in three broad categories, namely, superfine at 4.4 per cent fine at 10 per cent and coarse at 85.6 per cent.

(b) There are Committees only at Bombay and Ahmedabad.

(c) No, Sir; a provincial buyer has the option of buying any varieties of cloth so long as the quantities fall within the percentages mentioned in reply to part (a) of the question.

(d) No, Sir.

REPATRIATION OF INDIANS FROM SIAM AND SHANGHAI

1224. *Shrimati Ammu Swaminadhan: Will the Foreign Secretary be pleased to state:

(a) if he has received representations from Indians resident in Siam, Shanghai and other eastern countries desiring to come back to India; and

(b) if Government are making any arrangements to repatriate them?

Mr. H. Weightman: (a) The Government are aware that many Indians resident in Far Eastern countries are anxious to return to India.

(b) I would refer the Honourable Member to paragraph 2 of the reply given by me on the 8th February, 1946, to question No. 133.

DETENTION OF MR. NANAK CHAND BY CHINESE AT SHANGHAI

1225. *Shrimati Ammu Swaminadhan: Will the Foreign Secretary be pleased to state:

(a) if he is aware that Mr. Nanak Chand was arrested by the Chinese at Shanghai on or about December 3, 1945, and that he is being kept in detention without trial; and

(b) if Government know the reasons for such detention; and if any steps are being taken to get him released and brought back to India?

Mr. H. Weightman: (a) Yes.

(b) According to the Government of India's information Mr. Nanak Chand was arrested on a charge of alleged collaboration with the enemy and is detained in the Shanghai Jail, pending investigation of the charges against him. A report is cited from the Indian Attache at Shanghai who has already represented to the local Chinese authorities the need either to release him or to bring him to trial without delay.

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

OVERCROWDING IN TRAINS ON BAREILLY-ALIGARH LINE.

154. Sjt. Seth Damodar Swaroop: (a) Is the Honourable the Railway Member aware:

(i) that on the Bareilly-Aligarh line of the East Indian Railway only two trains are run—morning and evening;

(ii) that only one Inter Class compartment is attached in these trains; and

(iii) that because of lack of necessary travelling facilities in the Third Class more passengers travel now a days in the Inter Class than before and that the Inter Class compartment in these trains is crowded to suffocation every day?

(b) Does the Honourable Member propose to see that at least two more Inter Class compartments are attached to these trains?

The Honourable Sir Edward Benthall: (a) (i) Yes.

(ii) No. The normal inter class accommodation provided on these trains is two compartments of which one is reserved for ladies.

(iii) The increase in inter Class travel is due to a variety of factors, such as improved purchasing power, and not necessarily to the lack of adequate facilities in the third class. The statement that the inter class compartments on these trains are crowded to suffocation every day is not borne out by the annual census taken by the Railway Administration, which showed that on an average the occupation was 97 per cent. of the marked seating capacity.

(b) No, as an increase in inter class accommodation would have to be met by a corresponding decrease in the third class accommodation, much to the detriment of third class passengers. The Railway Administration, however, propose to introduce an additional train each way on this section in the near future, and it is hoped that this measure will provide the needed relief.

REDUCTION IN STAFF DUE TO WITHDRAWAL OF CONTROLS

155. Mr. Vadilal Lalubhai: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please state with reference to his remarks in the Budget speech regarding the withdrawal of 150 controls:

(a) the number of staff employed in connection with (i) controls that are withdrawn, and (ii) controls that are still in force from 1939 onwards, year by year;

(b) the total expenditure incurred on account of—(i) controls that are withdrawn, and (ii) controls that are still in force from 1939 onwards, year by year; and

(c) (i) the number of staff discharged so far, and (ii) the reduction in total expenditure owing to withdrawal of the said controls?

Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts: (a) to (c). The Honourable Member is referred to my reply to starred question No. 1197 answered to-day.

Shri Satya Narayan Sinha (Darbhanga cum Saran: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I move:

"That in the original motion for the word 'two' the word 'five' be substituted."

Mr. President: Amendment moved:

"That in the original motion for the word 'two' the word 'five' be substituted."

Sir John Sargent (Secretary, Education Department): On a previous occasion when this amendment was moved I expressed the willingness of Government to accept it but you, Sir, pointed out that in view of the fact that the official notification authorising the constitution of this body provided for two members to be elected by this House, it would not be in order for the House to appoint five unless and until the notification had been amended and I undertook to provide for the necessary amendment of the notification. This has now been done and the constitution provides for the election of five members of this House on the All-India Council and we are also prepared to accept the amendment.

Mr. President: So I shall put the amendment to the House. The question is:

"That in the original motion for the word 'two' the word 'five' be substituted."

The motion was adopted:

Mr. President: I shall now put to the House the motion as amended: The question is:

I may say here that here also, in anticipation of the wishes of the House that the previous representation of two might be increased to five, we have amended the official constitution of this body.

"That the members of the Assembly do proceed to elect, in such manner as the Honourable the President may direct, five persons from among their own numbers to be members of the Advisory Board of Archaeology in India constituted by the Government of India."

The same amendment has been made in the constitution of this body as in the previous case with which I have just dealt.

The President: The question is:

"That the members of the Assembly do proceed to elect, in such manner as the Honourable the President may direct, five persons from among their own numbers to be members of the Advisory Board of Archaeology in India constituted by the Government of India."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: I have to inform Honourable Members that the following dates have been fixed for receiving nominations and holding elections, if necessary, in connection with the following Committees, namely:—

(1) Khan Bahadur Sharbat Khan, (2) Colonel Kumar Shri Himmatsinhji, (3) Mr. P. J. Griffiths, (4) Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava, (5) Khan Abdul Ghani Khan, (6) Seth Sukhdev, (7) Mr. M. Asaf Ali, (8) Prof. N. G. Ranga, (9) Maulana Zafar Ali Khan, and (10) Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi.

THE INDIAN FINANCE BILL—contd.

Mr. President: We shall now proceed with the consideration of the Finance Bill.

Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava (Ambala Division: Non-Muhammadan): I was considering the effect of the reduction of duty on kerosene, from the point of view of the poor man of this country. This is the only positive advantage which the Finance Member has spoken of in his Finance Bill which according to him will benefit the poor man. Now, Sir, in regard to ~~the kerosene~~, I submitted that kerosene was not being used to a very great extent by the poor classes of this country. If you will kindly see the extent of benefit to be conferred you will certainly agree with me. Now a gallon consists of six bottles and the reduction of price may be to the extent of nine pies per gallon. One bottle per month is the amount of supply which is allowed to a family in urban towns. As regards the rural areas, I do not think that one bottle per every six months even is supplied to a family. Therefore it follows that this advantage is of a very illusory nature and is almost airy in conception and reality. There is no other advantage which this Finance Bill seeks to confer on the poor man and an advantage of a negative kind has been proposed by the Finance Member. He says that "there are two other things which I am doing for the poor man, one negative and one positive. As to the first I do not think that any of my proposals will add to the cost of his essential purchases." I doubt it very much, Sir, if the essential purchases of the poor man will remain unaffected by the proposals in the budget. Thus, Sir, so far as these positive and negative advantages are concerned, there is nothing which can give solace to the poor man. So far as the direct taxes are concerned, the Finance Member has admitted that he is unable to decrease any of the taxes, for the simple reason that according to his estimate there is no direct taxation so far as the poor man is concerned, but this is not correct.

Now, Sir, if you will consider the necessities of the poor man you will come to the conclusion that he is in a very sorry plight. His necessities are water, food, salt, cloth, house and his cattle. I will take up all these things in the order in which I have stated.

First of all, let us consider the question of his water supply. The poor man who lives in the villages generally takes his water not from a pucca well but from a pond, which is usually insanitary. If you will see the Health Report of the Bhore Committee you will observe that many diseases result on account of the use of this pond water. In many places the poor man has to bring drinking water from places four or five koses away. The whole day is taken in the process of bringing a pitcher of drinking water. Besides the water is quite brackish and unfit for human consumption and cattle and human beings die on account of the water being unhealthy.

As regards food, a study of the same report which I have already referred to would show that the food supply of the poor people is quite unhealthy and insufficient. At the same time, generally speaking, it may be taken as correct that the poor man takes nothing but cereals. He does not get any milk, nor fruits, vegetables, meat or eggs as in other countries. His sole diet is cereals and salt. If you consider the milk consumption in India the average consumption is 6.6 oz., whereas in other countries, in England for example, the consumption is about seven times as much.

As regards cereals I have to submit for your consideration one aspect of the case which to my mind is the most important, which should be considered by the House. Usually the poor man requires two pounds per day. It is now proposed to cut down his ration to a much smaller quantity. I wonder how the poor man will subsist if his ration is cut down so much. It is easy for a man to fast for a day, or a week or even a month but if the daily ration is cut down to the extent of 50 per cent. for a long period the result will be that these poor people, who cannot generally resist disease nor enjoy good health, will be further weakened and the physical deterioration that will set in will be a source of great anxiety to the State and the people at large. At the same time I cannot view with equanimity the measures taken for the purpose of procurement in the Punjab. I feel that if the procurement is continued in the way in which it has been stated in this House and people are not allowed to keep their rations on the basis of 2 lbs. a day even, the result will be riots. If these poor people consumed anything else also and the ration was proportionately cut down I could understand the justification but to cut down the ration of people who eat nothing but cereals would be tyranny indeed. I submit for the consideration of the Government that this is a very serious matter and Government should see that the poor man's supply of food is not curtailed to the extent proposed.

The other necessity of the poor man is his salt. In regard to this I am extremely sorry to find that the Finance Member has not taken a realistic view. In his opinion if the salt tax is removed no great benefit will be conferred on the people. He considers it to be more a question of sentiment than a question which really affects the poor man. As a matter of fact I think that this Government is unable to appreciate to the full extent the poor man's feeling in regard to the salt tax. This question has exercised the minds of publicists from Dadhabhoy Naoroji to Mahatma Gandhi. They have all pleaded for the abolition of the salt tax. I do not agree with the Finance Member when he says that the future Finance Member will also keep this tax. I think the first thing that he will do will be to give relief to the poor man by abolishing the salt tax. In this connection I would refer you, Sir, to the letter which Mahatma Gandhi wrote to Lord Irwin at the time of the salt satyagraha: He said:

"Even the salt he must use to live is so taxed as to make the burden fall heaviest on him, if only because of the heartless impartiality of its incidence. The tax shows itself still more burdensome on the poor man when it is remembered that salt is the one thing he must eat more than the rich man, both individually and collectively."

Further on in another letter he said:

"I regard this tax to be the most iniquitous of all from the poor man's standpoint. As the independence movement is essential for the poorest in the land, the beginning will be made with this evil. The wonder is that we have submitted to the cruel monopoly for so long."

I do not want to take more of the time of the House regarding the salt tax, because it is likely when the clauses are being considered we may have much to say upon it.

Now I come to the poor man's cloth. The only clothes a poor man uses are one kamri and one dhoty and I do not think he gets them cheaper now than before, nor is he likely to get them cheaper either this year or in the future.

As regards housing, the Honourable the Finance Member has said that the building programme will be proceeded with and that it would give employment to the poor people. He has gone further and sought to give relief to the tax-payer by exempting the income from new houses from tax in the two coming years. I feel that the advantages sought to be conferred are quite illusory. There is no cement, no timber, no girders, and no bricks available. The value of bricks is about seven times their pre-war price. The other materials are also not available. Unless and until the Finance Member makes all these materials available in the country there can be no housing programme possible.

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands (Finance Member): There are 30 crores of bricks for sale in Delhi.

Pundit Thakur Das Bhargava: Can these Delhi bricks be transported to the rural areas? Are there any pucca houses in the rural areas? If there is cement or brick in Delhi how will it help the other parts of India? If you want to give a concession make it real. It is quite easy to give the concession orally but unless the necessary building material is made available in all parts of the country. Such concession is of no practical value.

There is one particular complaint of the poor people which I want to bring to the notice of the House and that is about Begar. This begar system, or compulsory work without payment is a feature of which every government or government should be ashamed. Begar is still taken in the rural areas. There is a section in the Penal Code, relating to it, vis., section 372, but no case has ever been chalaaned under this section. Petty village officials, a patwari, Thanedar, Lambardar or other officials, whenever they go to the villages, take compulsory labour from poor people. This practice is still going on and steps should be taken to stop this practice.

As time is very short, I shall now deal with what can be done for the poor man in regard to both direct as well as indirect taxation. The first point I would suggest is that the disability be taken away from members of depressed classes and they may be included in the category of members of the agricultural classes so that they may be able to purchase land from agriculturists and other people. The second point I would urge is that they should be allowed to erect houses—pucca houses—and dig wells when these people consider the same to be feasible. At present the poor people cannot dig a well for their water because they cannot find the land. There again, Sir, begar should be stopped. In my humble opinion, as a sort of relief in direct taxation, the land revenue of all lands less than five beghas should not be charged from the poor people at all. This is the sort of relief that can be given. And then, salt tax should be abolished. Cheap shops for grain should be opened at least in famine days. The poor man, landless labourer or tenant at mill is both a producer and a consumer—a purchasing consumer. When he produces grain, he has to part with them, because he is not economically strong enough, at rates which are not profitable to him. And when he has to buy his food in the market he has to pay a good price. Relief should be brought to him by provision of cheap grain shops for at least the period of famine.

As regards industrialisation I would prefer that the factories should be so arranged and that we get factories on the lines of the Japanese system so that the poor man, when he is free, from agricultural pursuits, may be able to go and find employment there. I would submit that the fees for grazing his cattle should not be charged. These are small things which can be done by the Government to relieve the poor man if they have got imagination and sympathy.

As regards services and education, for them, the House fully knows that he is the most illiterate among the classes living in India. Many questions are asked about Muslims, Sikhs and other persons, but nobody takes care to see that the members of the depressed classes are given their due share of services. So far as these classes are concerned I would submit that they should be given the first preference and priority and for at least five years all the posts which can be held by these poor people should be given to them ignoring the claims of all other communities. Unless and until these people come up to the proper standard, swaraj will have no meaning in India. When I visualize that the expenditure of Rs. 600 crores will be contracted in the coming year and famine days are in prospect, I do feel that the future is very gloomy for the poor people. In fact, when I look to the proposed industrialisation of the country which is expected to bring relief to the poor man, I am reminded of the Persian proverb which says:

"The Tyrag Az Iraq Awards Showed"
"Mar Guzeeda Murda Dawad"

That is, by the time the antidote is brought from Iraq, the snake-bitten person may die. By the time that you get industrialisation the poor man shall die. How is this industrialisation to take place. We are told by the Honourable the Finance Member that the machines are not available and the technical skill is not available, and so it will take a very long time. I would only submit that so far as the poor man is concerned, efforts should be made to relieve him in the manner I have indicated as soon as possible.

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque (Commerce Member): There are only three points which have emerged out of the discussions to which I have to reply: the first about our salt policy, the second about shipping and the third about hide and skin.

[Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque.]

Now, Sir, as regards salt, it has been suggested—in fact I was a bit worried as to whether the speaker who was referring to it really meant or not that not only Port Said but also Aden salt should be altogether prohibited. I was not quite clear what he meant. But I should make this position known to the House that the Aden manufacturers are all Indian manufacturers. They are not manufacturers who have come from other parts of the world but they are men who have gone there from India.

Mr. M. R. Masani (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Not all, but only partly.

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: Mostly. Very little of outside men are there. This Aden salt for many many years had the main market in Bengal. They were very hard hit during the war. In fact, if there was any one who was most hard hit in that part during the war, it was the Aden manufacturers and the Aden workers.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer (Bombay Southern Division: Muhammadan Rural): They made a lot of money.

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: I do not know. And I do not know whether I should not include some one else also within such category. I should say that they were very hard hit, and owing to difficult shipping position they had practically no supply of ships. We have therefore allotted four ships to Aden. That is so far as Aden is concerned. So far as the Port Said salt position was concerned, the situation developed in a manner which was utterly beyond our control. I think my friends sometimes completely forget past history. If they remember even an iota of historical facts they will remember that there was a terrible salt famine in Bengal in 1942 and 1943, and in a very large part round about. At that time we were desperately trying to get salt from anywhere—Port Said, Aden, and West Coast. Sir, unfortunately due to circumstances over which we had no control whatsoever, shipping was not available to the extent that it could otherwise be available to get salt from either Aden or from the West Coast. At the same time a very large number of military ships were available—it was necessary that they should have some ballast—and they were prepared to take any quantity of Port Said salt as ballast for their ships. Having regard to the salt famine in Bengal and round about, we thought it absolutely essential that that salt should be filled in as ballast in those ships. That is why these ships had the salt brought from Port Said which relieved the salt situation in India.

Khan Abdul Ghani Khan (North-West Frontier Province: General): Why was no attempt made to get salt from the Frontier Province?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: It would have been possible if the Frontier had some rivers which could carry salt to Bengal. But unfortunately the transport position is such that I cannot knock my head against the hard-hearted Frontier gentleman who just now spoke.

Sir, throughout 1945, the policy of the Government of Bengal, as also of the Food Department of the Government of India, was that at any cost there should be no recurrence of another salt famine. At that time nobody could see as to when the Japanese war would end, and by every report it was understood that the shipping position would be more and more difficult in later months of the year. Much against our own wish the Government of Bengal suggested very emphatically and strongly that they should build up a stock of salt. Not only did they do that. They suggested that so long as salt was available, any quantity should be brought to Bengal from Port Said if salt was available there and if ships could be found which would take salt as their ballast. In fact it was due to their suggestion, much against our own personal wish in the matter, that 85,000 tons of salt came from Port Said in the first half, and another 85,000 tons in the second half of 1945. That was an insurance against future difficulties in Bengal. Every insurance does not work in the way it is intended. As events turned out, the position was that the war with Japan was over. Having done all we could, we came to the other extreme. Bengal had got so much salt by that time that they were not prepared to take any more salt. That was the circumstance that was facing us in 1946. And the House will know that we have for the time being—at least for the next six months—stopped altogether any salt coming from Port Said to India. We have at present nine ships, some of which will touch Aden and we have allowed four ships to Aden for the next six months and five ships to West Coast ports. That is the exact reason why we have allotted the ships as between Aden and the West Coast. We are quite anxious to develop West Coast; but I should like members to remember that in this matter of salt it is a question of personal wish or liking. There are people in certain areas of India who would like to consume a certain type and we cannot stop them, because we do not export or prevent people from bringing it; we have to give permission for the time being. So far as the West Coast is concerned, I can quite understand that they have expanded rapidly during the war and they can now serve a large part of India; and in giving these five ships, their case was carefully considered and I can assure Honourable Members of this House that the claims of the West Coast ports for salt transport from West Coast to other ports in India are being very carefully looked into; but the immediate arrangement is only a temporary make-shift arrangement and a short term policy and the whole question will have to be reviewed as soon as the Bengal position eases itself, and it is possible to get more salt into Bengal . . .

M. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Will five ships suffice? Why not increase ships for 17 West Coast Salt Works and reduce out of 4 ships allotted for Aden?

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: We have to consider not merely the bringing of the salt, but also ships which might be available to touch these ports. I hope my friend will also remember that the West Coast has the rest of India to supply—in fact my friend's own district in Bombay, and Madras coast and the Frontier province—you cannot possibly expect that all ships which will go to Bengal must all be given to the West Coast or Aden; but in any case I am quite prepared to have the matter considered, subject to the fact that whether I will be here or somebody else is a matter over which I have no control for the time being.

As regards the shipping position, it is this: we have been for some time trying our best to make it known to H.M.G. that in so far as India is concerned we should get first preference in any shipping acquisition from the United Kingdom; and we have been successful to the extent that we have been assured that in the matter of new shipping India will have first preference. We have succeeded there. And in so far as shipping from the United States is concerned, the position is not quite clear to us. First of all, the United States legislation about ships which will be sold by the United States to non-United States bodies is not yet quite clear. Some companies have tried their best to getting shipping from the United States and Canada and they found that it will be ultimately better for them from the point of view of financial stability and other matters to get ships from the United Kingdom rather than from the United States. Having regard to this position, we cannot proceed further in the matter. As regards the question of future policy, we have appointed a committee some time before; and I may say this policy committee was presided over by Sir C. P. Ramaswami Iyer and the members of the committee were Mr. Neogy, Mr. Master, Sir Halim Ghuznavi and Mr. Radcliffe; and that committee a few weeks ago has sent a preliminary report of their recommendations. We are considering the matter; but I think it will be realised that the future of shipping is ultimately dependant upon the extent to which India can get a share of the world's trade of the future. It is no use developing and having ships, unless you are able to get a certain amount of freight and goods and passenger traffic, which is now taken by other ships of the world; and that question of adjustment is a matter which has yet to be settled before the shipping policy can be further developed. In any case I can assure Honourable Members that we have taken every possible step to ensure the interests of India, and we have made our views clear to H.M.G. Our representatives in trade and other representatives who have gone there are carefully watching the situation. We will take the earliest opportunity which will be offered to us.

As regards hides and skins, references were made to it. I can only say generally that having regard to the economic sanctions which will be imposed against South Africa very soon, and against the import of wattle bark, and also having regard to the world situation today, we are quite prepared to allow free export of hides and skins as soon as possible, and then to watch the situation for a few months as to what extent it may or may not really affect the position in India. We do not want to lose control over it. If we find that at any stage the Indian tanners are not able to get enough material within the country, we will have to step in and intervene, because while we are quite anxious that the interests of hides and skins merchants should not suffer, at the same time Indian development of manufacturing in this country should not also suffer. Our impression is that having regard to the new factor that has come in, namely, the likely stoppage of the import of wattle bark, the volume of hide and skin will possibly be much more than India can absorb for the time being; that is our estimate for the present.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad (United Provinces Southern Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): Raw hides and skins trade should not be destroyed.

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: In any case I have supplied an argument which was not supplied by my friends the other day; we have decided to take our courage in both hands, and allow this thing to go abroad, subject to this over-riding factor that if at any stage we find that the Indian manufacturer is in any way hard hit by the export of a quantity which should not be exported or that he is not having enough materials for his manufacture, we must step in.

Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: But something else may happen in the meantime!

The Honourable Dr. Sir M. Azizul Huque: No one can say what may happen from time to time; but we have to guard against any eventuality; whether that eventuality is to be faced by me or by yourself, I do not know. But I think I will be guilty ultimately if I did not take all steps with a view to guarantee against that.

That is all I have got to say and I hope Honourable Members will realise that we are trying to do all we can in the matter of salt and of hides and skins.

Sir Mohammad Yamin Khan (Agra Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir. I do not want to repeat what has been stated already by a number of speakers here. I shall simply mention one or two things as I wish to give my support on these vital questions, to which I shall make a reference.

As far as Excess Profits Tax is concerned, I would support Honourable members who have spoken already, that it should not have been abolished but should have existed this year, because the circumstances prevalent in the country are such that it was not quite wise to abolish this tax. As long as we find that people are benefiting by the excessive prices which are prevailing in the country, on account of the war, and are making abnormal profits, which they would not have done otherwise, it is only right that they should be taxed. I have been a believer always in one principle, and I want to press it again, as I did in the past, that there should be a minimum income which should not be taxed at all

Sir Cowasjee Jehangir (Nominated Non-official): May I ask one question? When the Honourable Member said that those who made profits in the war should be made to pay, does he include those owners of land who have made great profits due to the war?

Sir Mohammad Yamin Khan: If the Honourable Member comes in that category, I think he should be made to pay. There should be a minimum, which the Government has put down now at Rs. 1,500; formerly the exemption was up to Rs. 2,000. Now Rs. 2,000 pre-war are equal to about Rs. 8,000 at least of the present day. People who used to get the work done for Rs. 2,000 cannot get the same work done for less than Rs. 8,000 now because prices have gone up four times but the Honourable Member has come down from Rs. 2,000 to 1,500 and this lowering of scale for exemption in the case of people with unearned income is very hard. I do not agree that there should be any distinction between earned and unearned income if it goes up to a certain limit which can give bare living conditions. If a man is getting Rs. 2,000 now, this means he is getting really Rs. 500 of the pre-war time. A man who is earning a pension or a widow who has been left some property and who depends upon that income to educate the children should not be taxed. They come under the category of unearned income. At the same time I am a believer in this—that people should not be allowed to accumulate lot of wealth, earn and keep to themselves beyond a certain limit. There should be prescribed a limit for the people to retain that money. If a limit whatever it may be, it may be the salary of an Executive Councillor or it may be something more—I do not mind it if you put it at a lakh of rupees—whatever it is, beyond it nobody should be allowed to keep to himself the amount of income to accumulate. That money must go to the State. I do not want to take his capital away either in his life time or when he dies. He leaves it to the children and each will be entitled to the maximum income. One man enjoys huge profits and accumulates wealth. He stops many other people from making profits or going into business because he wants to crush the small workers by his wealth, by ousting them in his own manner and I think that the State must get all the money which a man earns beyond that limit. This will be conducive to very healthy conditions in this country and it will distribute the wealth properly and the people who are very poor will not suffer on account of the excessively wealthy people hoarding wealth. They should be given some relief in preference to those who can afford to pay.

I do not want to touch on questions relating to kerosene oil and betel nuts because they have been dealt with and I hope that the Honourable Member has learnt by now that there is a general desire against these two things, first of all against any taxation on betel nuts. He knows very well that the duty on kerosene should be substantially reduced in order to provide the poor people with more and cheap oil.

Unfortunately I do not find here any gentleman concerned with the Education Department. I had given due notice to the Government that I am going to refer to that Department but if the Honourable member only wants to read my speech and not take any note and not reply, I do not mind. But I must bring to the notice of the House the step-motherly treatment which the Aligarh University is receiving. I am the elected representative of the University in this House and I want to speak on their behalf and on behalf of my constituents. Being a member of the Executive Council and of the Court of the University, I can speak with authority and knowledge as a member of those bodies. The treatment which the Government has always meted out to the Aligarh Muslim University has been step-motherly. This huge file in my hand which is circulated to me had been sent to the Government. This involved lot of labour and has given good information on which the Government could act. The Muslim University is not a university meant for one community only, in spite of its name. It is open to all communities and students of non-Muslim communities get the same facilities as the Muslim community students. There is no distinction made and no preference is given to a Muslim student as such. A Hindu or a Christian can come in and have the same advantages as a Muslim student. The University depends entirely on the Government grant and the subscriptions which they can get from private people to meet the needs of education. I find that the Delhi University, of the Court of which I have also the honour to be a member, gets much better treatment from the Government, while the Aligarh University is ignored. I know there is a powerful gentleman who is the Vice-Chancellor of the Delhi University and he can get whatever he wants. Though the Vice-Chancellor of the Aligarh University is no less powerful, he is less powerful so far as the Government is concerned. He cannot get what he wants. The Delhi University has got power, because of the two John brothers who carried the Delhi University Bill debate in this House. Unfortunately one of them has left the House and has gone. They ignored all the feelings of the Muslims and the divisions took place on every clause. They sent the Muslim League Party to the Lobby at least a hundred times on one small Bill. We were only 12 or 14 people fighting against great odds and those people who were fighting on the side of the Delhi University Bill were afterwards convinced that they were fighting for the wrong side. That treatment is still kept up so far as the Aligarh University is concerned. It is a matter of disgrace that no Muslim student of U.P. got any admission into any of the Medical colleges. If he goes to Lahore, they say, 'you are not a Punjabi', if he goes to Lucknow, the rules are made in such a way that out of 40 applicants in a year, only one has been admitted. This opened the eyes of the Muslim public and they collected 60 lakhs for opening a Medical College.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee (Nominated Non-official): I may inform my Honourable friend that so far as the Agra University is concerned, they are welcome.

Sir Mohammad Yamin Khan: But actually how many have been admitted? I can tell my Honourable friend that the rules are so interpreted that practically no Muslim student gets admission. He ought to be ashamed of that.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee: We are only administering the rules framed by U.P. Government.

Sir Mohammad Yamin Khan: What does that mean? Government means the Vice-Chancellor and that is the Honourable Member himself. I can say that no Muslim boy can easily be admitted into the Agra College. Students are rejected on the most flimsy grounds. My Honourable friend advocated the other day that students should be admitted on merits. I know how this question or merit is manipulated. What he considers merits may be otherwise from my point of view.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee: May I point out that admission to the Agra Medical College is not in my hands and admission is regulated by communal quota determined by the U. P. Government and not by the Vice-Chancellor.

Sir Mohammad Yamin Khan: The Honourable Member may be all right and may be sympathetic as far as he is concerned. I can inform the House that I recommended brilliant students—B.Sc., and M.Sc.—for admission to Lucknow Medical College and none was admitted. I fought for them without any results. During the last six or seven years only three or four students were admitted into the Lucknow Medical College, though the college is maintained from taxes paid by the public. The doors of the college are closed against Muslims, the rules are made in such a way that Muslims do not get admission and the Education Department sits tight over this. No notice is given of our grievances. Even when we come for grants, after collecting our own subscriptions to educate our young boys, even then the Government shuts the door on us. That is my grievance against the Education Department against their unsympathetic attitude towards boys from Aligarh. I take strong exception to the treatment given to our boys. We drew up a five year plan and put it before the Government, but no reply was received. I challenge any Member of the Government whether he has read all the materials placed in this file about the Aligarh University scheme. I am glad to see my Honourable friend Sir John Sargent coming to the House. This is the way in which we are treated and yet the Government want our support for the Finance Bill. Is that the proper way of seeking our help? They must be careful, they must show proper treatment towards us. We are honest people, if you respect us, we will respect you not once, but three times. On the other hand, if you slight us once, we will slight you thrice. That is how I look at it. I want to know that out of this five year's programme how much money has been sanctioned to the University? The teachers are getting ridiculous salary. It is a disgrace to find highly educated people, with doctorate qualification of European Universities, getting only a salary of Rs. 125. How can any one live on Rs. 125 a month. The Government have taken no notice of the high prices, four or five times in the whole country. Even to the menial servants, the Government is paying twice or thrice of what they used to get and in the case of these teachers, they cannot have even one full meal a day on their present salary. The Education Department ought to be ashamed of their indifference in these matters. The Education Department should wake up and discharge their responsibilities in educating the people of this country. Education must be the first and primary concern of the Government of India. If proper education is not given to the people, the result will be complete ignorance in the country. We will have illiterate people, as they are now. I hope the Honourable Member concerned will take notice of this and will give proper facilities and proper grants to Universities. There are only three Universities which are the concern of the Central Government—the Benares University, the Aligarh University and the Delhi University. These are the three Universities which are dependent on the Government of India for grants. They are not the concern of the Local Governments. In Aligarh University we get boys from the whole of India and also from abroad. It is the duty of the Government to see that the Aligarh University is equipped properly so that it can impart education in all branches, technical etc. There is no use of turning out graduates or undergraduates who are fit only to be employed as clerks in the Government of India. The University must produce efficient technicians. Where is the technical college which can take up this work? I have no time to go into details. The Honourable Member must visit the University. The other day the Labour Member said that on account of lack of education, they closed the doors, they closed the technical classes in the Aligarh University. I wrote a letter to the Honourable Member in charge of the Labour Department to keep the classes open, but he refused. This is the way in which we are treated and then the Government gets up and asks our co-operation without giving us any response. But where is the response?

The response does not come from the Government side.

Before I conclude, I wish to refer to rationing in Delhi and other areas. I have got a newspaper cutting sent to me by the people in Delhi. This shows the hopeless condition in which rationing is conducted here. I think those of us, Members of the Legislative Assembly who come to Delhi ought to be allowed to bring our own rations from the Provinces. And we should receive no rations in Delhi. This shows that 27,000 bags of rice were condemned as unfit for human consumption because they had been allowed to rot and later by some hook or crook methods they were repurchased and mixed up with good rice and given as our rations. No wonder if diseases break out. If this goes on in Delhi at least we who come from outside should be allowed to bring our own rations. I do not know how far it is true—I cannot vouch for the truth of this—but it has appeared in the press; and if it is wrong the Deputy Commissioner and Chief Commissioner can take notice of it, and if it is right they must rectify it and see that things which are unfit for human consumption are not offered as rations. These back-door methods must not exist.

Sir, I will not take any more time, though I have still some other points to make, and I will conclude.

Pandit Govind Malaviya (Allahabad and Jhansi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, we have opposed the motion that the Finance Bill be taken into consideration. Before I come to the main reasons which have prompted us to do so, I should like to point out briefly what the general masses of people in this country would have liked to see in the budget that has been presented to us. Besides that, the budget fails to tackle the crying needs of this country. Then, finally come the other considerations—political considerations—which preclude us from taking any other course but to refuse to take this Bill into consideration. The items in the budget which we would have liked to see abolished or modified are many. There is the salt tax, there are the postal rates, there are the duties on kerosene, on tobacco, on betelnuts, on bullion and on silver, and there is the income-tax in the lower stages, where the Finance Member who is laughing, does not seem to have remembered the fact that the price-index in the country has gone up by three hundred per cent, and that still the lower limit up to which he leaves the poor people's income untaxed has remained practically the same. But, Sir, all these points have been covered by my other Honourable friends. Much, therefore, though I should have liked to go into each one of them I shall content myself with the fact that they have already been touched upon and that our viewpoint on them has been brought before the House.

Sir, the other feature, namely, the omissions in the budget are even more important. The very crying needs of the country have not been provided for. Practically every sphere of our national life needed careful fostering and help. Nothing has been done there. Let us take them one by one.

First we will take education. Education has its own importance in the life of any people. After nearly two hundred years of British rule in India, the percentage of literacy according to the Sargent report is not more than 14.6. Possibly, that is a liberal figure; but even taking it as correct, is it not a matter of shame for any Government responsible for the administration of any country that there should be 86 per cent, of its population which should not be able to read even the elementary alphabets? But, I take the fact that it is so, and then I ask why the Finance Member has not considered this matter of sufficient importance to make a provision in his budget to fight this curse of illiteracy. I do not find any provision about this. Then there are the other sections of Education. There is basic education, there is primary education, there is secondary education, there are high schools, there are intermediate colleges, there are the universities and then above all there is Research. What provision have you made for all these? In England—I again take the figure from the Sargent report—the expenditure for education per head of the population, before the war was Rs. 35-2-0; in India it appears to be not more than two and a half annas per head taking an average of all the provinces also.

Sir Cowasjee Jehangir: Is the Honourable Member talking of the Government of India or the Provincial Governments?

Pandit Govind Malaviya: I am glad my friend the Honourable the gallant Knight has raised that question. We know that education as such is a subject for the provinces to deal with. But we also know that there is an Education Department here at the centre and there is large-scale planning and development, and that the scheme of education propounded by the Advisory Board of Education and put forward by the Government of India is part and parcel of this reconstruction scheme. We also know that there is nothing in the Act of 1935 or in the Act of 1919 to preclude the Government of India from making such provision as they think fit in their budget for education over and above what the provinces may do. The provinces, Sir, may be doing what they ought to do, or they may not be doing what they ought to do. Today we are here to discuss and to consider what the Government of India propose to do in this Budget. Therefore, to come back to the point which I was dealing with notwithstanding our present ridiculously low figure of about 2½ annas, per capita expenditure over education practically no provision has been made in this Budget for any one of these important stages of education.

Sir, the Sargent Report has mentioned the expenditure which will be involved in working its scheme. It has put down ten crores annual expenditure as the figure which is likely to be reached after five years, and after forty years, if I am not mistaken, it has put down the figure of 812 crores as the annual expenditure. Has the Honourable the Finance Member able to make provision for even a humble beginning in that direction?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Yes, Sir. Read the Budget.

Pandit Govind Malaviya: I should be very happy to be corrected, instructed, and helped. But I have read the provisions that have been made there, and I shall soon come to them, or at any rate to some of them and we shall then see if that is what can satisfy the needs of the people.

Then, Sir, there is Research. Higher Research is the foundation for progress and advance. No country can develop or make any progress in any direction without the aid of higher research. We have a small Board of Industrial and Scientific Research which is doing good work, but even that has a very limited scope and then higher pure research, research in the realm of pure science which would lift the standard of education in the country, is nowhere to be found.

Sir, it is true that the Budget makes a provision of 2½ lakhs of rupees for opening a separate college for scheduled castes in Bombay. I am amazed at that provision. I do not know why it should have been made. Not one of us in this country, not one among the Hindus, would be found unwilling to provide not only the two-and-a-half lakhs but much more for the purpose of providing the utmost facility to our scheduled caste brothers and sisters for receiving the very best and highest education possible. The Hindus have during the last two decades done whatever was possible and desirable, and should have liked to do even much more and will continue to do much more for the amelioration, and for the uplift of that submerged section of their community, but, Sir, I ask is this provision of 2½ lakhs made to sow another seed of poison in the body politic of this country.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras ceded Districts and Chittor: Non-Muhammadan Rural): A separate college for scheduled castes.

Pandit Govind Malaviya: Who does not know the unfortunate day when the command performance of the Agha Khan deputation asked for separate electorates? I am not in the least desirous of hurting anybody's feelings, but, Sir, on account of that pernicious seed having been sown two brothers, who had lived in this country in amity and good-will for centuries, have been made to fly at each other's throat and the wind which was then sown has resulted in a whirlwind. Sir, is it sought to create another similar division in the body politic of this country? Have those 2½ lakhs been provided for this purpose? I hope, Sir, that the Government will not be misled. The depressed classes have realized and appreciated what the Congress and the Hindus have been doing for them. Look at the last elections. A challenge was thrown by my Honourable friend, the depressed class Member of the Viceroys' Executive Council, saying that in the elections they would win every seat. Have they been able to do so?

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: What about the primary elections?

Pandit Govind Malaviya: Primary elections also have their own story to tell. If you will take the total number of seats in which those primary elections were held, and if you will work out the percentage. . . .

The Honourable Sir Archibald Rowlands: Give me the figures.

Pandit Govind Malaviya: I have not got them here, but I shall be very glad to go into them with the Honourable the Finance Member.

Mr. President: Order, order. The point may be pursued after Lunch. But before the House adjourns, the Honourable the Law Member will present his report.

THE TRANSFER OF PROPERTY AND SUCCESSION (AMENDMENT) (BILL)

PRESENTATION OF THE REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE

The Honourable Sir Asoka Roy (Law Member): Sir, I present the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill further to amend the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, the Hindu Disposition of Property Act, 1916, and the Indian Succession Act, 1925.

Mr. President: The House will now adjourn till 2-30 P.M.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock, Mr. President (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

INDIAN FINANCE BILL—contd.

Mr. President: I may remind Honourable Members that we are having an adjournment motion to-day at 4 o'clock, unless it is withdrawn. But I do not know about it. There are a large number of speakers to be put through. So will Honourable Members curtail their remarks as much as possible?

Pandit Govind Malaviya: Sir, resuming where I was before we adjourned, I hope, Sir, the Government will see the mischief that is sure to arise as a result of the cutting up of Hindu society into smaller parcels. I hope the provision which has been made for a separate college at Bombay for our Scheduled Caste brethren will not be persisted in and that, instead, not only that amount of Rs. 2½ lakhs but much more will be set apart and utilised for the purpose of helping men and women from that community to have the benefits of the highest and the best education possible in the country.

Sir, what you have said just now regarding the shortness of the time at our disposal, I beg to submit, is rather a difficult thing, because, I understood that during discussion on the Finance Bill people always had the opportunity to speak and to express their viewpoints without any restriction and in as full a manner as they thought necessary; but, Sir, having said that much, I will submit to the remarks that you have been pleased to make. I will therefore only just touch in passing some of the other points which I wish to raise.

I will start with food. It is a terrible problem which is staring this country in the face. The Government have cried themselves hoarse during the past few months in making the world believe that we are now on the brink of extinction. But, Sir, I ask, what does this budget do in that connection? Why did not they make it an item of priority No. 1 and provide for the funds to subsidize the sale of foodgrains in this country at a lower price, so that the poor man may be able somehow to keep body and soul together. Sir, I have not the time here to go into detailed figures. I have a recollection that the great and noble erudite Servant of India, Pandit Hriday Nath Kunzru, mentioned the figure last year that at least 40 per cent. of the people of this country were unable to purchase foodgrains for themselves at the prices which the Government had fixed. I say, Sir, it is an unpardonable omission that nothing has been done in that direction. I should have liked to go deeper into this food question and to show how by their own action and lethargy and incompetence this Government has created more panic in this matter than there should have been and has made a mess of this food problem, and how a National Government could still tackle this problem successfully and well. But, Sir, as there is no time I shall leave it at what I have said and shall move on to other things, after just referring to one point in that connection. We have read in the newspapers that foodgrains which will be sent to India will mean a further cut down in the rations in Germany and Japan. I want to put it down on record on behalf of the people of this country, Sir, that we do not wish to make the people of any other country starve for us. We should like to have imports, but only from surplus areas. We should like to increase our foodgrain production. We should like to do all that may be possible. But we would not like it at all that Germany or Japan or any other country in the world should be made to starve and their diet, which is already a semi-starvation diet, should be reduced further in order that we may have the needed extra foodgrains. I shall leave it there.

The next point that I wish to refer to, Sir, is public health. We have read only this morning in the papers of the stupendous scheme which England is putting through its Parliament for maintaining the health of the people in England. Nobody, it is said, will have to pay for a doctor or treatment there unless he wants to. We know what the financial condition of England today is and yet if England can do so and can contemplate an expenditure of staggering figures, why should not the Finance Member, in spite of the very valuable report which the Bhore Committee has submitted, make a start in that direction. I shall again leave the matter there.

I shall next come to social security. I have got here before me the Beveridge Plan as it has been enforced in England. At what a staggering cost they are providing social security to their people, as is said, "from the cradle to the grave". Fifty-four per cent. of the cost of that scheme at present, and eventually sixty-five per cent. of it, are going to be met out of public revenues. I know we cannot afford to have anything like that here at the moment, but cannot we make some move in that direction, Sir? But I must pass on.

My esteemed and Honourable elder friend, Mr. Neogy, has already, in his own inimitable way, referred to the various economic and monetary and financial problems which deeply affect us. If I had the time I too should have liked to go into some of them. There is, Sir, the 1/8 rupee ratio which you know, was forced upon this country in the teeth of almost the unanimous opposition of every elected member of this Assembly but which is still continued. We have, Sir, the new unnecessary decimal currency bill which has been introduced in this House sometime ago. There are the questions of the setting up of industries and of planning and development. I should have liked to go into all that. But there is no time. I shall therefore, Sir, content myself by saying that we are in a most difficult position, sitting here as representatives of the country, to decide as to what to think of this budget which has been praised so much. There is, Sir, the Broadcasting Department, which in spite of the huge cut of 98 lakhs which has been made by this House has still a vast sum voted for it. Sir, that Department is jeopardising the entire cultural well being of this country. I wish to refer to the policy of Hindustani which the All-India Radio has been following, and I speak, Sir, not only on behalf of those who are devotees of Hindi, but if you will permit me, Sir, on behalf of those of my brethren also who are devotees of Urdu. My submission is, Sir, that the All-India Radio is ruining, is cutting at the root both of Hindi and Urdu literature and language in this country. This Hindustani which they are now putting forward is neither one nor the other, and so far as Hindi, Sir, is concerned, it is the most outrageous thing conceivable. I have here before me a circular which that Department issued and which my Honourable friend, Pandit Balkrishna Sharma read during the course of his presidential address to the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan in Delhi the other day. It was a circular letter of the Director General of Broadcasting to all Station Directors Memorandum PZ 1/43 from Controller of Broadcasting to S. D., All-India Radio, Delhi, Lahore, Lucknow, Peshawar and Calcutta. It reads:

[Pandit Govind Malaviya]

"In Hindustani announcements from your station 'Majlis' and not 'Sabha' should be used for transmission.

There was a discussion with Honourable Member yesterday and it was decided as follows:

For Isthmus use 'Khaqna' and 'Abnai' in place of 'Jalghati' and 'Thalghati'."

It says that for 'welcome' 'Istaqbal' should be used and 'swagat' should be discontinued. It orders that the words 'Gyan', 'Vidyarthi', 'Deshbakt', 'Arthik' should be replaced by 'Ilm', 'Talib-ilm', 'Muhabbe-Watan', 'Iqtsadi' and bans the use of the words, 'Asha', 'Adar', and 'Krodh', and so on and so forth. I have not the time to read the whole of it but that clearly indicates the policy which the All-India Radio has been following, and which has been condemned by every single person, who values Hindi and wishes it well. As I said, it is not a question of Urdu versus Hindi. I want that Urdu should be developed to the fullest extent possible. I shall gladly vote for everything which may be needed to see Urdu literature, which is such a fine literature, in which we have such fine poets and scholars, developed more and more, as it has developed during the past. But, similarly, we want Hindi to develop on its own line and not be ruined by this sort of admixture Hindustani, which is nothing except high flown Arabicised Urdu. I am prepared that there should be a fixed time every day for the broadcasts in Urdu and separate fixed time everyday for the broadcasts in Hindi, so that neither of the two languages may have any complaint and neither of them may suffer in purity. It is essential for the cultural well-being of our people. Then there is the spiritual aspect of the peoples' life which is being ruined. I wish I had time to go into that but I cannot do so.

Sir, these are the various aspects of the budget which do not encourage us to vote for the Finance Bill. Sir, it has not been my intention to rake up the past of British rule in India: I am concerned with the present. The question may be asked by the Finance Member if all this has to be done, how is the expenditure to be met? My reply is very simple. India has never felt that she could afford the huge military expenditure which she has had to face in the past and which she is facing now. We can very materially cut down that expenditure and meet the expenses required for these nation-building activities. I am not saying that we should have no army, though I cannot but say that the only hope for the future of this world lies in its following the teachings of that greatest of modern teachers, Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi—his sublime and infallible doctrine of non-violence, for solving its troubles. But while we believe in that non-violence we are prepared to agree that we have to have a machinery for the defence of the country. Assuming that, I still ask, where is the need of our having to spend this proportionately much higher cost of expenditure over British units, over British troops in India? I have not the time to go into the figures but Government members have given us the proportionately excessive sums we have to spend over these British units as compared with what we may have to spend on Indian units. That will be one source of saving.

May I know, Sir, how much time I have now?

Mr. President: The Honourable Member has taken already 29 minutes and he has one more minute.

Pandit Govind Malaviya: I shall crave your indulgence for two or three more minutes.

Mr. President: I do not mind if the time is debited to the account of his party.

Pandit Govind Malaviya: When we have done that, there is yet another way. We are about 400 millions in this country. Taking the need of our defence forces even at the present war time level which I believe is about 2½ millions; what is 2½ millions to 400 millions. It is only about half a per cent.

I submit that if there was a national government in the country with the slightest hold over the people, one single appeal by the Government would bring to our army centres 2½ million men within the space of 24 hours. That should be sufficient to meet any emergency. We therefore need not maintain an army at this strength. Further, we should also have a reserve national militia. We can give military training to our boys in colleges during a certain stage of their life and keep them as a reserve second line of defence to be called up when needed. That could very substantially reduce the number of our standing army. We can do all that and meet the expenditure on nation building activities. And if there were still any need, we can always raise loans for such useful purposes. Has not England, battered and pauperised by the war, gone about borrowing here and there and every where to meet the national needs?

These are the needs which should have been thought of in framing the budget. But as I said, Sir, the question of merits or demerits is not very relevant. Even if we leave all this aside, there is the supervening political consideration, the greatest of all considerations, which leaves to an honourable man no course but to say that he cannot possibly vote for this bill being taken into consideration.

The Honourable the Finance Member, Sir Archibald Rowlands has undoubtedly, I am happy to say, made a new approach in presenting his budget to the House. I am happy to say that the responsive reply he made to the general discussion on the budget on the first two days was a new and welcome experience for this country. I do wish to give him my need of praise which is due to him; but that cannot change the course of duty that is clear for us. The budget has been prepared by a Government over which we have no control. An outside body foisted upon us has made this budget. We have no means of knowing its detailed provisions. We have no means of knowing how the expenditure is to be made in detail and we do not know as to how it will affect the country in the long run. The budget may be good or bad but we have had no hand in its making. How can we take the moral responsibility of voting for it. Sir, we cannot vote for a Finance Bill so long as we have not the control over the framing of it. We are the representatives of the people who pay the taxes and provide the revenues and yet we are debarred from knowing how the money will be expended. In these circumstances we cannot have any other course but to say that we reject the motion for the consideration of this Bill.

We have, Sir, our pledge of Independence. If I had the time I would read it before this House. We take that pledge on the 26th January year after year. So long as that pledge stands, so long as we are not independent, so long as we have not got in this country a Government of the people of this country we cannot vote for the Finance Bill.

Sir, we are aware of the changed circumstances which exist today. We are aware that next door sits the British Cabinet Mission which has come to settle up with India. We are very happy about it and on behalf of the people of this country we wish to extend our welcome to them and wish them Godspeed in their work. We pray to God to vouchsafe to them and to us all the wisdom and the sagacity, the humility and the earnestness, the far sight and the determination to successfully conclude the final and unreserved transference of the governance of India to the people of this country. Subject, Sir, to that overall condition of independence, we shall be quite willing to go to the utmost length possible to see that a peaceful and happy solution, unanimous and acceptable to all sections, is reached round the table. But unless that happens, and unless independence, complete national independence, is established in this country, there is no other course for us but to refuse to vote for a Finance Bill which an alien and unwanted Government has presented before us.

Sir, I have done. Twenty-two years ago, on the 17th of March 1924, standing in this very House and representing that very constituency which I have the honour to represent here today, my revered father Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya for the first time, moved the rejection of the Finance Bill which was then brought before it. He did it, Sir, in utter political disillusionment and disgust. Since then we have gone on doing it year after year. We have gone on following that course. It is a tragedy that though twenty-two years have gone and though the fiercest war known to history has come and gone and millions of lives have been lost, as it was said, for liberty and democracy, that I, his son, should still stand here today to make that same old cry in the wilderness that we should still reject this year's Finance Bill. I hope, Sir, those British Ministers sitting next door today, who are in charge of things will look to this now. England has had the reputation of doing things too late. We are sitting on the brink of a precipice. A time-bomb more powerful than probably all the atom bombs combined, seems to have been set going. The sands of time are running out. It is probably already too late. We are face to face with a terrible catastrophe in the shape of a world-wide rising in the East. I hope and pray, Sir, that those three top Cabinet Ministers of England who are here will yet be guided by the Divine Providence to rise equal to the occasion, to place India in that position of complete national sovereignty and independence from where she alone can remove the fuse in that time bomb, and by throwing it into the seas, can still save the world and lead it to peace and tranquillity, to mutual goodwill and international co-operation. Sir, I oppose the motion that the Bill to give effect to the financial proposals of His Majesty's Government in India should be taken into consideration.

Sir Gurunath Bewoor (Secretary, Posts and Air Department): During the course of the debate on the Finance Bill, references have been made to the Posts and Telegraphs Department and the Civil Aviation Department. My friend, Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad has referred to the policy relating to air transport services. I am sorry I was not in the House when he spoke but I have had the advantage of obtaining a transcript of his speech dealing with this matter. My friend, Mr. Masani, referred to the Posts and Telegraphs Department, and Mr. Nauman advocated the reduction of the post card rates. As regards the questions relating to the Posts and Telegraphs Department, I hope to have an opportunity of dealing with the matter during the consideration stage of the Bill in connection with the amendments that are to be moved. In the limited time available to me, therefore, I will confine my remarks to the question of policy regarding air transport services.

This matter was also raised during the course of the debate on the Cut Motion moved by my friend, Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal. Owing to want of time I was then unable fully to deal with the matter on the occasion.

Before the war, India had generally followed the policy of developing air transport services by private enterprise. This development was, however, only to a limited extent. It is unnecessary to go deeply into the question as to why the development was slow and limited. The principal reason was the inadequacy of the funds available for the development of civil aviation in India, and like some other countries, India did not adopt the policy of heavy subsidisation of air services. What little progress had been made by the time war broke out, was held up due to the conditions created by the war, which resulted in difficulty in procuring transport aircraft and spares for existing aircraft. All manpower and all resources had to be devoted to the war effort. When Government undertook the preparation of plans for the postwar development of civil aviation in India, the question as to the agency to be adopted for the operation of the services was examined with great attention and in great detail. The first question was whether Government should assume sole responsibility for and a complete monopoly of all air services. This after consideration, was rejected as being an impossible position to take, since it would mean that no individual could fly even in his own plane piloted by himself for his own purposes. The question was then considered whether the operation of air transport services, that is to say, services operated for the purpose of effecting public transport of passengers and of goods and of mails should be the monopoly of the State, leaving private flying for business or pleasure to be operated by private persons. The plan prepared by the Department examined two possible methods of operation (1) State operation, and (2) operation by private enterprise. State operation could be by a Department of Government subject to normal financial and other controls or by a Department of Government invested with autonomous powers of financial and other control, or by a statutory autonomous monopoly corporation with capital and other finance provided from public funds or partially or wholly by the issue of interest bearing stock guaranteed by the State. If operation was to be by private enterprise, there were two alternatives (1) by a single monopolistic commercial organisation with its own capital operating under normal commercial principles of risk of loss and prospect of profit, or (2) by a limited number of companies duly licensed in this behalf. There are certain advantages as well as disadvantages in having a State monopolistic organisation as well as in operation by either a monopolistic private enterprise or by a number of private enterprises. Views have been urged that complete nationalisation means serfdom; that nationalisation means bureaucracy and bureaucracy means stagnation. I do not wish, however, to deal with this matter on an academic or theoretical basis. In our postwar plan, we detailed the different possible systems of agency for air transport and placed the matter before the Policy Committee. This Committee consisted of representatives of Departments of the Central Government, representatives of all Provincial Governments, representatives of Indian States, and a number of prominent non-officials representing persons interested in air transport. This Committee was generally of opinion that air transport services in India should be developed by private enterprise. Government themselves in arriving at a conclusion on this matter applied the following test "What method would promote the most rapid and orderly development of civil aviation in India in the conditions envisaged at the end of the war". Government as well as public opinion was anxious to see that India developed her air transport services as rapidly as possible in order to promote industrial, commercial and social development within the country, to enable India to take her proper place in international aviation and to build up a second line of reserve for India's air force. The test applied, therefore, was, as I have said, what would promote the most rapid and orderly development of air transport services in India.

If the State was to undertake the operation of all air transport services in India and to prohibit the operation of such services by any private enterprise, Government would have to undertake a very great task indeed for which considerable money and manpower would be needed. It was felt that in the event of State monopoly, the rate of development would be slowed down due to limitation of capital and recurring expenditure, and development would be subject to the fluctuating conditions of Government Finance. There would be many departments with plans for development clamouring for funds, and as air service is still regarded in some quarters as a luxury service, it was likely that civil aviation would receive a low position in the order of priority for provision of funds. Air transport is still a comparatively new service. It is developing and changing very fast. Flexibility in management and imagination in development are essential. It was not quite certain that State ownership and management would provide such flexibility and such imagination.

3 P. M. Financial and other controls are liable to be either too strict and thus prevent development, or too loose and thus promote extravagance. In a newly developing service, only the best staff must be employed and the inefficient and semi-efficient should be ruthlessly expelled. This is not always possible under State management with its strict rules for fixation of wages and conditions of employment. Government were aware that private enterprise was ready and indeed anxious to come forward with men and all the money needed and to take reasonable risks. With private enterprise, development can proceed simultaneously all over India, whereas under a monopolistic State management, services would have to be arranged in order of priority for development. India, as I have said before, had not developed civil aviation before the war and her air force had only developed during the war. It did not have therefore the necessary trained and experienced personnel and it would have had to borrow considerable personnel from outside. This would be much more difficult under a monopolistic State management than under private management. At the same time, Government recognised that there might be cases where for the development of essential services State ownership and management was the only possible method. There may also be cases in which it may be necessary for Government to take a financial interest in a private enterprise either with a view to assist that enterprise or with a view to control from within the enterprise. After considering all aspects, the policy which Government adopted was announced in May 1945. This policy was as follows:—

"The policy of the Government of India is generally to promote the development and operation of air transport services, internal and external, by a limited number of sound and reliable private commercial organisations with their own capital and operated under normal commercial principles. In selected cases, Government will take a financial interest, but not a controlling interest, in the companies operating the air services and appoint a director on the board. This policy does not, however, rule out the operation by the State itself of any air transport service or services in particular cases and such operation may be by the Central Government, a Provincial Government or the Government of an Indian State."

Government were aware that a different policy had been adopted in the United Kingdom and in Canada, but they felt that the conditions in India were such that such a policy would not be suitable and would not achieve the object which they had in view, namely, the rapid development of civil aviation in India.

The decision of Government to promote the development of air transport by private enterprise does not mean that it would be unrestricted and unregulated. Government felt that control was far more important than ownership or management, the control being in the public and in the national interests. With a view to securing such power, Government brought in a Bill in the February session of the Assembly in 1944. Under this Bill, the Governor General in Council was given power to make rules "for the regulation of air transport services and the prohibition of the use of aircraft in such services except under the authority and in accordance with a licence authorising the establishment of services." This Bill was passed by both Houses of the Legislature and became law in March 1944. Rules have accordingly been made for the establishment of a Licensing Board. Its powers and functions have been defined and the conditions under which licences will be granted have been detailed. These rules were first published with a view to obtain public criticism, were modified as a result of criticisms received, and were finally published on the 23rd January 1946. They were laid on the table of both Houses in accordance with section 5(3) of the Indian Aircraft Act and have remained for the statutory period of one month. The object of licensing is to ensure the safety and reliability of service, to eliminate uneconomic competition, to prevent exploitation of the public, to conserve and utilise the national resources and effort for the optimum benefit of the country and to promote the development and expansion of air services on orderly lines. I need not go into the details of the rules, but I would point out that the licence which is issued will provide, among others, for the following matters, namely, the places at which an aircraft may or shall land for traffic or other purposes, the conditions (weather) in which the service may be operated, the aircraft to be used, the observance of a schedule of air services approved from time to time by the Board and the maximum and minimum fares and freight rates to be charged to passengers and consignors of goods and mails. I would like to make clear here that the licence to be given would not be for an unlimited period. The rules provide that the licence shall be valid for such period not exceeding ten years as may be fixed by the Board. It is clear therefore that there is no fear of creating an unlimited vested interest. Sir, I think it is open for me to contend that when this House passed the Bill which gave power to the Governor General in Council to make rules for the regulation of air transport services and the prohibition of the use of aircraft in such services except under the authority and in accordance with a licence authorising the establishment of the service, the House accepted in principle the operation of services by private enterprise. If all air transport services were to be operated by the State as a monopoly, there is no need for any Licensing Board, because Government do not need to grant licenses to themselves. But I do not stand on this ground. Government's contention is that the method they have adopted is the one to promote rapid and orderly development of civil aviation in India and that a State monopoly at the present time would slow down the development and probably lead to stagnation. I do not say that this should be the policy for ever. Conditions may change, but Government's contention is that this is the best policy in the existing conditions. In this connection the House will be interested if I were to read the following quotation of views relating to control of industry:

"For this purpose it will be necessary to plan and co-ordinate social advance in all its many fields, to prevent the concentration of wealth and power in the hands of individuals and groups, to prevent vested interests inimical to society from growing, and to have social control of the mineral resources, means of transport and the principal methods of production and distribution in land, industry and in other departments of national activity, so that free India may develop into a co-operative commonwealth."

The State must, therefore, own or control key and basic industries and services, mineral resources, railways, waterways, shipping and other means of public transport."

Mr. T. Chapman-Mortimer (Nominated Non-Official): Where is this quotation from?

Sir Gurunath Bewoor: This is from the election manifesto issued by the Congress, and Government's policy does not seem to be in any way contrary to the policy advocated in the above quotation. As I have said before, Government feel in this matter that control is more important than either ownership or management, so long as that control is exercised in the public interest, leaving at the same time free scope for initiative and progress to private enterprise. We anticipate that private enterprise in India will show real enterprise and we feel that this policy would be in the best interests of the country. My friend, Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad, has referred to the case of the railways. He apparently feels that the railways under State ownership and management are more progressive and more attentive to public needs than under company management. If one were to believe half of what is said in this House in connection with the debate on the railway budget or in connection with questions asked, this would hardly appear to be the case. I do not, however, wish to go into that matter. I cannot say what the policy of future governments may be. I believe my friend Dr. Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad will agree with me that the policy which Government have now adopted is the best under the present conditions and in the conditions which we can anticipate in the near future and if it is so, Government are content, without going into the further question as to whether if at all or when air transport services in India should be completely nationalised.

Mr. Frank R. Anthony (Nominated Non-Official): In the few minutes at my disposal, I propose to make a plea on behalf of the smaller minorities in India, more particularly on behalf of the Anglo Indian community in view of the momentous discussions which are now going on. There may be a tendency at a time like this, when the two main protagonists, the two huge communities in India, to occupy and to monopolise completely the political arena. And I would appeal to them and to those responsible for conducting the discussions not completely to overlook the rights of the smaller minorities in India.

Speaking for my small but important community, let me make it very clear that we heartily endorse the sentiments expressed by Pandit Malaviya. We hope, more than that we pray, that these discussions will result in India being given her rightful place among the comity of free and great nations. We, the smaller minorities, do not seek privileges or preferential treatment but we do say that we should have certain specific rights and that it would be conducive to the health and happiness and above all to the progress of the body politic in India to satisfy, as far as is reasonable, the small but important sections in India.

Sir, on previous occasions I have given to the House briefly something about the history of my community. The time at my disposal now is too short to indulge in detail although it is a history which has not been, for very definite reasons, either chronicled or publicised: it is a history of which any very large community could be justly proud. But there has been and there continues to be, unfortunately, in certain sections of the peoples of India certain misunderstanding of the position and history of my community. It is felt in certain sections that we are a community which has been given privileges and preferential treatment but to those who know our history this is entirely different from the truth. It is not known—and I say this in no spirit of rancour or bitterness—that perhaps my community has been discriminated against more than any other community in India. Since the time in 1808 when Lord Valencia reported to the East India Company that the increasing wealth and number of Anglo Indians constituted a menace to British supremacy in India and that they must be crushed, the community has been exposed to a chilling round of the most bitter disabilities. We have not received privileges. We have received a few crumbs but certainly no preferential treatment. It is we who in the past have conferred certain definite privileges on the administration. In spite of our comparative smallness in number, we have in periods of crisis maintained the stability of this administration. But for our services we have never received even partial recognition and certainly no gratitude. And it is against this continuing policy of discrimination that I wish to make an emphatic protest. It is not so definite or obvious as in the days of Valencia but it is as real if more insidious today.

For instance, my community is today, a community half a million strong. But if you look at the official census figures of 1941, you will see that we have been listed there as 140,422. What is the reason for this official estimate of a community which at a conservative estimate is half a million strong? It is the result of a deliberate official policy of emasculating my community. In 1931, 15 years ago, the Census Commissioner said that the Anglo-Indians were at least 200,000 strong. 15 years since then, suddenly, a community which was accepted by him as being a virile and particularly fertile community has instead of increasing been reduced by 30 to 40 per cent. (An Honourable Member: Go in for early marriages). The truth is that Anglo Indians are being encouraged deliberately to practise renegadism. Anglo Indians are being encouraged to return themselves on the European electoral rolls. I have no quarrel with my European friends at all. I wish them well and I do hope that they will play a great part in the future of India. But I wish to point out that this renegadism has resulted in swelling the numbers of Europeans and bringing them inflated representation in the different provincial legislatures. I have an equal grievance against the European Association. They deliberately encourage people whom they do know not to be Europeans to join the European Association. It is their avowed policy.

Mr. O. P. Lawson (Bengal European): Will the Honourable Member quote chapter and verse in support of his statement and prove that it is true?

Mr. Frank R. Anthony: I will give you one instance. I will refer to the Punjab. According to the official census figure of 1941 there were at least 6,700 Anglo Indians of whom about 5,000 are adult literates and should be on the electoral rolls. Instead of this, you find 503. And of this number 800 appear also on the European electoral rolls.

Mr. O. P. Lawson: Who did it?

Mr. Frank R. Anthony: You did it. You encouraged people during the war.

An Honourable Member: Address the Chair.

Mr. Frank R. Anthony: I was addressing the European Group, through you, Sir. The administration has encouraged this deliberately, I am sorry to say, during the war. I protested over and over again to the military authorities that their recruiting officers deliberately encouraged and even compelled Anglo-Indians to register themselves as Europeans. I cited case after case. When a boy would go to a recruiting officer and say 'I am an Anglo-Indian' the recruiting officer would say 'Go back. Think over it and come back tomorrow and enrol yourself as a European'. He went back and the next day he was recruited as a European. I say you have deliberately emasculated the community. You do it in order to inflate your electoral rolls in order to get inflated representation in the legislature.

Mr. O. P. Lawson: That is nonsense.

Mr. Frank R. Anthony: It is absolutely true. You have done it over and over again and it is part of your official policy. There is no use of trying to resist my arguments by saying that this is nonsense. I can quote chapter and verse in support of my statement.

Mr. P. J. Griffiths (Assam European): On a point of information.....
