ASSEMBLY (LEGISLATIVE)

Volume VI—1948

CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY OF INDIA (LEGISLATIVE) DEBATES

(PART II—PROCEEDINGS OTHER THAN QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS)

Monday, 9th August, 1948

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at New Delhi, at a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock, being the first day of the Third Session of the Constituent Assembly of India (Legislative), pursuant to sub-section (2) (a) of Section 19 of the Government of India Act, 1935, as adapted by the India (Provisional Constitution) Orders, 1947. Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) was in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS
(See Part I)

11-45 A.M.

DEATH OF MR. DAMBER SINGH GURUNG

Mr. Speaker: Before we proceed further, I have to refer to the sad demise of one of our colleagues in this Assembly, Mr. Damber Singh Gurung. He was the only Gurkha member of this Assembly and the part he played in the battle for Indian independence is well known. I request the House to stand in silence to respect the memory of the deceased.

Mr. Speaker: About the adjournment motion, it is not going to be moved, I understand.

Shri H. V. Kamath (C. P. and Berar: General): I do not propose to move it.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S ASSENT TO BILLS

Mr. Speaker: The Secretary will lay on the table of the House a statement showing the Bills which were passed by the Dominion Legislature—Constituent Assembly of India (Legislative)—during the Budget Session 1948 and which have been assented to by His Excellency the Governor General.

Secretary of the Assembly: Sir, I lay on the table a statement showing the Bills which were passed by the Dominion Legislature—Constituent Assembly of India (Legislative)—during the Budget Session 1948 and which have been assented to by His Excellency the Governor General.

PAPERS LAID ON THE TABLE

REPORT OF INDIA DELEGATION TO FIFTH SESSION OF ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL OF UNITED NATIONS

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru (Prime Minister and Minister for External Affairs and Commonwealth Relations): Sir, I beg to lay on the table the Report† of the India Delegation to the Fifth Session of the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations, 1947.

†Not printed in the day's Debates. Copies placed in the Library of the House.—Ed. of D.

PAPERS LAID ON THE TABLE

SUMMARY OF WORK DONE BY GEOLOGICAL SURVEY OF INDIA DURING PAST FIVE YEARS

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil (Minister for Works, Mines and Power): Sir, I beg to lay on the table the Summary† of the Work done by the Geological Survey of India during the past five years.

WHITE PAPER ON STERLING BALANCES NEGOTIATIONS

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty (Minister for Finance): Sir, I lay on the table the White Paper† containing the documents relating to the recent Sterling Balances Negotiations with the United Kingdom.

I might inform honourable members that it is my intention to move on the 12th instant for a supplementary vote for the payment of the amount involved in these negotiations, and it is the intention of the Government that a discussion on the negotiations should take place in connection with that vote.

An Honourable Member: Will it be circulated to us?

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: The documents are printed and will be circulated to all honourable members.

ALLOTMENT OF A DAY FOR DISCUSSION ON HYDERABAD AND KASHMIR

Shri H. V. Kamath (C. P. and Berar: General): Before we proceed further, may I request the Leader of the House to allot a day for discussion of Hyderabad and Kashmir, in camera if need be?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru (Prime Minister and Leader of the House): The Government are willing to accede to the wishes of the House; but it is not clear to me what the House will have to discuss for a full day on Kashmir and a full day on Hyderabad. If I may suggest, at some later stage in the session, certainly if the general policy governing these matters is to be discussed, we shall give some time for it. The desire to allot a day to each question separately shows that they are considered separately mentally. That is a wrong way of approach.

Shri H. V. Kamath: One full day for both.

Mr. Speaker: Whatever it is, the matter will be taken into consideration.

ELECTION TO STANDING COMMITTEE FOR MINISTRY OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru (Prime Minister and Minister for External Affairs and Commonwealth Relations): Sir, I beg to move:

"That this Assembly do proceed to elect, in such manner as the Honourable the Speaker may direct, one member to serve until the end of the financial year 1948-49 on the Standing Committee to advise on subjects concerning the Ministry of External Affairs and Commonwealth Relations, vice Diwan Chaman Lall, who has resigned from the Assembly."

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That this Assembly do proceed to elect, in such manner as the Honourable the Speaker may direct, one member to serve until the end of the financial year 1948-49 on the Standing Committee to advise on subjects concerning the Ministry of External Affairs and Commonwealth Relations, vice Diwan Chaman Lall, who has resigned from the Assembly."

The motion was adopted.

†Not printed in the day's Debate. Copies placed in the Library of the House.—Ed. of D.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR OFFICERS (OATHS AND FEES) BILL

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru (Prime Minister and Minister for External Affairs and Commonwealth Relations): Sir, I beg to introduce the Bill to provide for the administration of oaths by diplomatic and consular officers and to prescribe the fees leviable in respect of certain of their official duties.

Sir, as a natural consequence of the independence of India, our consular officers have to perform these duties. There is nothing controversial about it and I trust that it will be passed when the time comes without any difficulty.

Mr. Speaker: Next Bill, further to amend the Indian Merchant Shipping Act.

An Honourable Member: You have not put the motion, Sir.

Mr. Speaker: The Bill has been published in the Gazette. This is not a motion for leave to introduce; it is introduction of the Bill.

INDIAN MERCHANT SHIPPING (AMENDMENT) BILL

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru (Prime Minister and Minister for External Affairs and Commonwealth Relations): Sir, I beg to introduce the Bill further to amend the Indian Merchant Shipping Act, 1923.

The House will be surprised that any Bill dealing with Indian Merchant Shipping should be introduced by me and not by the Honourable Minister for Commerce. As a matter of fact, this deals with Haj Pilgrimage for which I am supposed to be personally responsible. Up till now, there was a clause in this Act requiring a certificate of vaccination every three years. Now, it is proposed to increase that period to five years, according to certain international sanitary conventions. So, the whole Bill consists of an amendment that five years be substituted for three years in a particular clause.

CENSUS BILL

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel (Minister for Home, Information and Broadcasting and the States): Sir, I beg to introduce the Bill to provide for certain matters in connection with the taking of census.

CONTINUANCE OF LEGAL PROCEEDINGS BILL

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar (Minister for Law): There seems to be some mistake in the agenda papers. I have to ask for the leave of the House first and then introduce the Bills.

Secretary of the Assembly: There is no mistake in the list of business. These Bills were published in the Gazette under Rule 18 of the Constituent Assembly (Legislative) Rules and as such no motions for leave to introduce the Bills are necessary.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I see.

Sir, I beg to introduce the Bill to provide for the continuance of certain legal proceedings by or against the Secretary of State.

INDIAN MATRIMONIAL CAUSES (WAR MARRIAGES) BILL

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar (Minister for Law): Sir, I beg to introduce the Bill to confer upon Courts temporary jurisdiction in certain matrimonial causes.

INDIAN REGISTRATION (AMENDMENT) BILL

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar (Minister for Law): Sir, I beg to introduce the Bill further to amend the Indian Registration Act, 1908.

DISPLACED PERSONS (INSTITUTION OF SUITS) BILL

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar (Minister for Law): Sir, I move for leave to introduce a Bill to make certain special provisions for the institution of suits by displaced persons.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That leave be granted to introduce a Bill to make certain special provisions for the institution of suits by displaced persons."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

TAXATION ON INCOME (INVESTIGATION COMMISSION) (SECOND AMENDMENT) BILL

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty (Minister for Finance): Sir, I move for leave to introduce a Bill further to amend the Taxation on Income (Investigation Commission) Act, 1947.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That leave be granted to introduce a Bill further to amend the Taxation on Income (Investigation Commission) Act, 1947."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

RESERVE BANK (TRANSFER TO PUBLIC OWNERSHIP) BILL

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty (Minister for Finance): Sir, I move for leave to introduce a Bill to bring the share capital of the Reserve Bank of India into public ownership and to make consequential amendments in the Reserve Bank of India Act, 1934.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That leave be granted to introduce a Bill to bring the share capital of the Reserve Bank of India into public ownership and to make consequential amendments in the Reserve Bank of India Act, 1934."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

GANDHI NATIONAL MEMORIAL FUND DONATIONS (COMPANIES) BILL

The Honourable Shri K. O. Neogy (Minister for Commerce): Sir, I move for leave to introduce a Bill to enable companies to make donations to the Gandhi National Memorial Fund.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That leave be granted to introduce a Bill to enable companies to make donations to the Gandhi National Memorial Fund."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Shri K. O. Neogy: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

ESTATE DUTY BILL

PRESENTATION OF PRELIMINARY REPORT OF SELECT COMMITTEE

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty (Minister for Finance): Sir, I beg to present the Preliminary Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to provide for the levy and collection of an estate duty in the provinces of India.

EXTENTION OF TIME FOR PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF SELECT COMMITTEE

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty (Minister for Finance): In presenting the above Report I also beg to move:

"That the time appointed for the presentation of the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to provide for the levy and collection of an estate duty in the provinces of India, be extended upto the last day of the first week of the next Budget Session of the Assembly."

The Interim Report of the Committee that I have just now presented to the House will contain the reasons for my moving the motion that the date granted for the presentation of the report be extended up to the last day of the first week of the next Budget Session of the Assembly.

When the Select Committee started consideration of the measure it was found that some of the anticipations that were entertained regarding this measure had not been fulfilled. Honourable members might remember that on the discussion of my motion for the reference of this Bill to the Select Committee, various honourable members referred to the difficulties in the application of the provisions of the Estate Duty in the context of the Mitakshara Law of Inheritance prevailing in certain parts of India. Government expected that the Hindu Code Bill introduced by the Honourable the Law Minister, if adopted by this House, would solve one of the main difficulties encountered in the applications of an estate duty to a joint undivided Hindu family. When the Select Committee met we found that the Hindu Code Bill had not yet been adopted by this House and it was felt that after knowing the fate of this Hindu Code Amendment Bill, the Select Committee would be in a better position as to what exactly should be the provisions relating to the applications of an Estate Duty to an undivided Hindu family. Apart from this, it was brought to my notice that this Bill does not apply to agricultural land which is within the jurisdiction of the Provincial Governments. If an Estate Duty is to be applied to properties excluding agricultural land, it will create a great deal of anomaly, if not a great deal of hardship. There is one other factor also to be taken into consideration. As the Constitution stands at present, the provisions of the Estate Duty Bill will not be applicable to Indian States. A possible consequence of this might be the flow of capital from the Provinces of India to the Indian States. That would be a very undesirable feature. It has therefore been decided that the Government should immediately address the Provincial Governments with a view to getting their consent to enable the Central Government to bring within the purview of this Bill all agricultural land situated in the provinces. It is also my intention to move the Ministry of States to persuade as many of the States as possible to take the necessary steps so as to enable the application of this Bill to properties situated in Indian States also.

For these reasons the Select Committee thought that it would be advisable to postpone the detailed consideration of the Bill and ask for the permission of the House for a postponement of the date for the presentation of the final report. It might be urged that all these considerations to which I have made reference are not new factors that have cropped up, but must have been in the minds of Government even when I moved the motion for reference of this measure to the Select Committee. I must certainly confess that these factors were in my mind but I thought when I introduced this measure in this House that we should keep alive in the country the interest in a measure like the Estates Duty Bill, and for that purpose I thought the quickest way of achieving our objective would be to introduce a measure of this kind in the Legislature and simultaneously take the necessary steps to get the concurrence of the Provinces and also to persuade the States to come into line with us. I am sure the House will agree with me that a measure of this kind has very far-reaching implications and we should not hurry up with such a measure. I therefore suggest, Sir, that the House might agree to the motion for postponement of the date for the final presentation of the report of the Select Committee.

Mr. Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the time appointed for the presentation of the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to provide for the levy and collection of an estate duty in the provinces of India, be extended upto the last day of the first week of the next Budget Session of the Assembly."

Shri B. Shiva Rao (Madras: General): Sir, one is under a certain handicap in not having the Interim Report placed on the table of the House by the Honourable the Finance Minister, but the reasons that he has urged for postponing further consideration of the Bill to the next Session do not seem to me to be particularly convincing. If you look at the Estate Duties Bill as placed before the Select Committee, you will find that there is only one reference to the Mitakshara school in that Bill and this is in Clause 6. I will read to the House the clause to which I have just referred:

"Interests ceasing on death.—Property in which the deceased or any other person had an interest ceasing on the deceased's death shall be deemed to pass on his death to the extent to which a benefit accrues or arises by the cesser of such interest,— including, in particular, a coparcenary interest in the joint family property of a Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara school of law, but exclusive of property in which the deceased or other person had an interest only as holder of an office or recipient of the benefits of a charity or as a corporation sole."

The words "... including, in particular, a coparcenary interest in the joint family property of a Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara school of law" which occur in Clause 6 are strictly speaking redundant, because property passing by survivorship is covered by the preceding general words of the clause. The words which I have repeated before the House can easily be omitted, in which case the Estate Duties Bill would be quite independent of the Hindu Law Code and even if they are retained for the present, I think all that would be necessary is to omit them if and when the Mitakshara school is replaced by the Dayabagha.

There is no other reference to the Mitakshara school in the body of the Bill. There is a reference to it in the note on clause 30 on page 27. In that note one of the items suggested for exemption is interest in ancestral property passing on the death of a minor coparcener in a Mitakshara joint family who has a male ascendant living. It will be noticed that the exemption is to be made by a notification under clause 30 after the Bill is passed. Therefore, if at the time the Bill is passed the Mitakshara school is still in existence, the proposed exemption could be made if and when the school is abolished by subsequent legislation. Then the exemption can be withdrawn and therefore it seems to me that so far as the present Bill is concerned, it is immaterial whether the Mitakshara school is or is not in existence.

The Finance Minister also referred to two other considerations which seem to be operative so far as he and the members of the Select Committee are concerned. I do not know whether he is confident of securing the consent of the Provinces and the States by the time the Select Committee is convened, again. I cannot help expressing the fear that if this course is adopted, the Bill will be postponed, not to the next Session of the Assembly, but indefinitely.

Shri K. Santhanam (Madras: General): It is certainly regrettable that the Bill should have been postponed but there was no alternative. I am not particularly impressed by the reasons given by the Honourable the Finance Minister but one conclusive fact which weighed with the Select Committee was that the Finance Ministry was not ready for the consideration of the Bill. It had to be ready but somehow for some reason or other it was not ready and unless it was ready there was no purpose in proceeding with the Bill.

Mr. Shiva Rao pointed out the implications about the Hindu joint family. The mere exclusion of that clause will not solve the problem, because so long as the joint Hindu family is there the problem will be there too but it was a matter to be considered by the Select Committee. I do not think any consideration by an outside body will solve the matter in any particular manner. It is essential that this measure should be passed at an early date so as to supplement the finances of the provincial governments and I earnestly hope that there will not be any occasion to come before this House for a further postponement.

Secondly, in a federal system this difficulty about the position of the provincial units will always be there for one reason or another. This was so in the Income-tax legislation. Agricultural land is not subject to income-tax yet I think the Central Government has succeeded very well in establishing a system of income-tax and proceeding with it. And there is also a further consideration viz., that agricultural land, whatever you may do, will be a separate category. For instance, there will have to be fragmentation of holdings. Therefore, even if agricultural land is brought within the purview of the central legislature, so far as fragmentation is concerned the provincial legislatures will have to be given power to supersede all succession laws. Similarly in the matter of alienation. Absentee landlordism will have to be abolished. That will require prevention of succession to absentee landlords. Therefore in either case this problem of agricultural land will remain as a problem, whatever constitutional arrangements may be made. So we must take the situation as it is and solve all problems as best we can and not try to complicate them further by adducing one thing or another as reason for postponing the measure. The Estates Duty stands more or less, so far as constitutional and other considerations are concerned, on a par with income-tax and all the limitations which are there in the income-tax act must be accepted by the legislature in the Estate Duty Bill also. Therefore I plead that early steps should be taken to have the measure considered and the Bill placed before this House.

Mr. B. K. Sidhva (C. P. and Berar: General): Sir, I am not satisfied with the arguments advanced by the Honourable the Finance Minister for a long postponement of this Bill. The points that he has raised, as he admitted himself, were already before the House when he introduced the Bill. When the Select Committee met on the 2nd of this month it was surprising that the Honourable Minister was not prepared to proceed with the Bill. If the provisions of the Bill had not been studied or thoroughly looked into by him or his Ministry I must say that it does no credit to his ministry. Four months have passed since this Bill was introduced and this was a sufficient period for the ministry to put themselves in communication with the provincial governments in regard to the requirements that they wanted to be fulfilled. But for four months the ministry did nothing of the kind and members of the Committee are called here only to waste public money and go home.

As far as the agricultural question is concerned my friend Mr. Santhanam has dealt with it very ably. I do not want to dilate on this point. This question will always remain there and similarly the question of the Hindu Code as well. I understand (I am speaking subject to correction) that part of the question has been discussed by the Select Committee and the report is going to be presented to the House. Whatever it may be, even if the report is not going to be presented in this House, today we are taxing the Hindu joint family under the Income-Tax Act and if there are some contentious matters in this Bill it is for that purpose that it was sent to the Select Committee. All the points which the Honourable Minister has brought out may have been placed before the Select Committee. The Select Committee was meant for that purpose. All these four points that he has raised could have been brought before the Select Committee and the members should have been given an opportunity to discuss and give their opinions. Somehow for the reason best known to himself there was no programme to proceed with the Bill. Of course he had the support of the majority of the members of the Select Committee. I do not dispute that. I am a member of the Committee and I am the only

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Therefore, more than the honourable not been presented. I signed it this morning at 10-45 A.M. It would be only fair that this report should have been in the hands of the members and they would have studied it and given their views on the matter. It is really regrettable that this Bill which was introduced two years ago met with a similar fate. Again it was brought and we are asked to postpone it. I could have understood a postponement at the end of this session. If the Finance Minister wanted a clarification of the Hindu Code by that time he would have known it and the period could have been extended up to the end of this month. Why go up to the end of the next Budget session? We might meet again in October or November. I do not know whether we will be able to finish all the business before us in this session. We might have to meet again in October or November. Why is this long adjournment wanted? If the Finance Minister had these points before him he should not have introduced the Bill. It looks very bad. I do not mind a little postponement. This Bill was welcomed on all sides of the House. I therefore feel that it is not proper that the Government have not studied the Bill, the Finance Ministry has not studied the Bill, it should be postponed indefinitely. In the Select Committee we would have been given an opportunity to study and discuss this matter and then after fair deliberations the Select Committee report could have been brought before this House. Although this is a majority report I was the single member who dissented. I think it my duty to bring this matter to the notice of the House, because it is most improper that this Bill has been held over and the Select Committee has not been given an opportunity to consider the Bill and present a very acceptable report in this House. No doubt there are many points. There is a point about the Succession Act. That is also a matter for consideration. All these points were before the Select Committee for consideration. Today we are in the month of April. I am telling you that we will be again in the month of March next. I do not know whether on that occasion we shall be able to submit a report. I therefore feel that whatever my single voice may be I should protest against this kind of postponement.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Madras: General): Mr. Speaker, Sir, I am afraid that the Finance Ministry has put a very poor show indeed in this matter. My honourable friend has said that he has not proceeded with the presentation of this Bill, not because he himself and his Ministry were not completely prepared with all the material, but because he wanted to keep the interest in this Bill. That is extraordinary because the interest in this Bill has been nearly five years old. Nearly five years ago when Sir James Grigg was here he put a poser to the Opposition at that time; we were all in the Opposition then and we accepted his challenge and asked him to introduce the Bill i

20 CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY OF INDIA (LEGISLATIVE) [9TH AUGUST 1948]

[Prof. N. G. Ranga] he had the Bill up his sleeve. But for reasons best known to himself he did not proceed with that. Ever since, this problem has been before the public. The people knew that this thing was in the offing and that the Finance Ministry would be expected to introduce it at any time that might be considered convenient. Later on Sir Archibald Rowlands came forward with a Bill. That too met with the same fate. He did not give us any reasons. Then Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan introduced it, I think. He said he was going to impose this duty. We all welcomed it in that Budget session. But nothing has happened. Then came this Bill from Mr. Shammukham Chettiar. What is the elementary duty of a Department, a Ministry, in a case like this? What is it that they had done earlier when a similar Bill of equal importance, like the Insurance Act (Amendment) Bill, was brought before this House? Even before the Bill was actually introduced here, conferences were held with the concerned interests; opinions were obtained from various companies as well as from the Provincial Governments; and then, fortified with all these things, the Government framed their Bill, came forward and placed it before this House, and thereafter it had taken its own due course. Similar procedure was taken in the case of the Indian Companies Act (Amendment) Bill. Then why is it that the Finance Ministry has not taken similar steps in regard to this? That is the first question.

Secondly, even after this Bill had been introduced in this House, what is it that had prevented the Finance Minister from calling these two conferences—may be at one and the same time—the conference with the Provincial Ministers and also the conference with the concerned Ministers of the Indian States and asking their views, ask for their co-operation, obtain their co-operation and go forward to the Select Committee with their definite proposals?

Shri B. Das (Orissa: General): It is not so easy.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: My honourable friend Mr. B. Das says it is not so easy in view of the fact that the Committee on which he had been a Member had not met—the Economy Committee. It was not easy for that Committee also to meet and transact work for several months. I do not wish to say anything about other Ministries at this juncture, but this Finance Ministry does not evidently seem to be taking its own tasks and responsibilities. That is what it appears to me.

Thirdly, I wish the Finance Minister had not given the reasons he has given for this postponement. Instead, if he had contented himself with the reasons—I do not know what the reasons are—that the Select Committee is supposed to have given for this postponement, it might have been better. He has mentioned the Hindu Code. How long it is going to take to be passed in this House? We know it has had a chequered career for a number of years. It is going to come from the Select Committee—we do not know whether it is going to come during this session. Anyhow, the Honourable Minister is not in charge of it. It is hanging on in suspended animation. Then, are we to understand that because of that the consideration of this Bill should be postponed?

Secondly, there is the question of the Indian States. Is it going to be such a simple thing after all? First of all he has to make them agree to this. Secondly there is the question of settlement with them as regards the sharing of the proceeds that would be collected in the States—whether all the proceeds should be handed over to them or a portion taken for Central revenues here and a portion given over to them. All these things have got to be thrashed out. Is he quite sure that his almanac will hold good there? We do not know.

Thirdly, there are the provinces themselves. I quite agree with him in regard to one thing. That is that the Indian Provinces are to be taken hand in hand with the Central Government in regard to Estate Duties on landed properties so that the incidence would be uniform on all kinds of properties. But could not the desired agreement have been achieved during the last four months? There is one relevant answer to this and that is that the Honourable Minister could not be in this country and had to be abroad. I quite see the difficulty. But what was his Ministry doing? That is what I wish to know. Does it mean that when the Minister is not here it would not be possible for him to leave instructions to his own Department and that there are not good enough or big enough officers in his Department to be able to call for a conference with Provincial Ministers and try to come to a provisional agreement at least and prepare the ground for the Honourable Minister to take the strings up? Evidently nothing has been done. I do not know whether the Honourable Minister had the authority of the Select Committee for the speech he has made and the reasons he has given. I do not know whether the reasons he has given are the reasons which the Select Committee have themselves given in their report. I owe an apology to the House. I am a Member of the Select Committee and I am very sorry I could not attend that Select Committee meeting. Therefore I hope the House will accept my unconditional apology for not having discharged my duty. At the same time it is up to the Finance Ministry also to make a clean breast of the matter and say "We have not done our duty; we have failed to do it".

Lastly, there is this additional danger. We have been dangling this before the public, "Oh, we are not a capitalist government or organization; we are really for the people; we are going to take these capitalists in hand and are going to deal with them as they deserve and see that some of these war-time made fortunes are disgorged to the extent that is possible by this Bill." What is it we find?—a kind of a prospect where there does not seem much chance of this Bill ever coming up before this House in the next few months, may be one, two or three years. And in the meanwhile, as we know our own people here, there will be any amount of efforts made by a number of ingenious people, aided by more ingenious lawyers and others to divide and sub-divide their profits, so that it might not be possible for my honourable friend the Finance Minister to collect half as much as he should have been able to, if only his Ministry had gone on with this Bill as expeditiously as could have been expected. Sir, I express my deep regret at the way these things have taken a turn.

Shri B. Das: Sir, I was a little wonder-struck at the speeches made by the last two socialist minded friends. Why my honourable friend Mr. Sidhva, who is now worshipping socialism in this country, is in such hurry I was not impressed. My friend Prof. Ranga's reasons I could not understand. He wanted that Government should have hustled this measure in the Honourable Minister's absence in U.S.A.—although my honourable friend failed to attend the Select Committee of which he was a member.

I welcome this motion. Unless the Governments in the Provinces and here have had time to examine their own position it is not possible to proceed further with this Bill. My honourable friend Prof. Ranga has already pointed out that this had a British start, that England wanted to take all the money that our capitalists and zamindars had in those times. Somehow they could not catch. Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan wanted to catch a portion of it—he could not do it.

But where are those estates which my honourable friend Mr. Shammukham Chetty will catch two or three years hence? The Estate Duty Bill affects only the rich people of whom there are two classes: one the industrialists, the other the zamindars. By their conspiracy the Labour Ministers of the Government of India and the Provincial Governments are creating a situation by which in a year or two there will be no industries left, [Shri B. Das.] much less thrive in a prosperous condition. So, there will be no industrialist who will pay the duty. As for the zamindars, the Revenue Ministers of all the Provincial Governments have conspired; they want to take up all the zamindaris, and I understand the Honourable the Finance Minister has agreed to give them loans for the purpose. I do not know where the Provincial Governments would find money to pay interest on those loans as purchase price of those zamindaris.

If the monied class, the zamindars and the industrialists are eliminated from this vast sub-continent, then what purpose will be served by the Estate Duty Bill? We would never get a thing examined in the proper atmosphere. It was always examined with the British arrogance which, of course, had the support of my honourable friend Prof. Ranga. At that time he thought that all monied men in India, all industrialists, zamindars, and capitalists, were devils, and he wanted to ally with the British, and would have liked the Britishers to exploit the wealthy class. But today, in spite of the great change, he wants the rich to be exploited, but there will be nothing left to be exploited by the Minister of Finance.

Sir, for these reasons I welcome the motion that the Bill be further investigated. I am sorry my friend on my left, Prof. Ranga, passed the remark that the Government did not investigate. The Finance Department being a part of the old Finance Department, how and why should it investigate, when it has found honourable members, and members of the reputation of my friend Prof. Ranga, supporting it for the last five years from the moment Sir James Grigg brought the Bill on the floor of the House and whispered to my friend Prof. Ranga in the Lobby of the House?

Sir, my honourable friend the Finance Minister may legislate, and this House may pass the Estate Duty Bill into an Act. But there will be nobody to pay those taxes. There will be no property left. As for that particular point whether the agricultural property should come under the purview of the Centre or whether it would be under the purview of the Provinces, that is another matter; the Provincial Ministers should hold conferences to decide it; it is not a matter for the Select Committee to decide. I have been alarmed at the way the Labour Minister of the Government of India has been legislating and putting heavy burdens on the Provincial Governments. I do not want the Finance Minister to lay further burdens on the Provincial Governments and at the same time touch on the autonomy of the Provincial Governments. Therefore, Sir, I like this motion. I do hope that sufficient enquiry will be made, not from the socialistic point of view as my friend Prof. Ranga or Mr. Sidhva would like, or from the capitalists' point of view, because in this House there is not a single man who is an industrialist who can say that he will pay three years hence Estate Duty as the Bill designs.

Sir, this is the situation. Let us examine it fully. Let the country examine it. And I hope the Finance Minister will also consult the various Chambers of Commerce—I believe they have been consulted—and also the Trade Union Congresses and Kisan—Mazdur Associations, of which my honourable friend Prof. Ranga is the President and leader, so that all views could be collated.

An Honourable Member: Kisans have no estates!

Shri B. Das: But kisans want what little I possess!

Therefore, I welcome the measure and I hope that nothing should be done in a hurry.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saxena (U.P.: General): Sir, I do not know whether the disapproval by many members of this House of this motion will induce the Honourable Minister to withdraw it, but still I do think I must do my duty and tell him that the motion should not have been made here.

Probably the reasons he has given do not convince him also, but he has to give some reasons. I feel these are not the real reasons, but I suppose the fact is that the Honourable Minister is not prepared to proceed with the Bill. What will it cost our Provincial Governments if the Bill were postponed for another six months? I think if this Bill is passed soon enough our Provincial Governments will be able to get crores of rupees which will be used for national development which is so urgent. From that point of view I think we must bring home to the Honourable Minister that he must see that the Bill is passed and placed on the Statute Book without a moment's delay. It should not be made contingent on the passing of the Hindu Code Bill or any other Bill. As many friends have pointed out methods like income-tax, methods can be devised for the realisation of this tax, but time is the essence of the situation and the Provincial Governments should be given the right to collect the duty forthwith so that they may proceed to finance their development schemes with the money which they get. I thought that the money was urgently required and that the Finance Minister would be only too eager to grasp at any source of income that was pointed out to him. But here we find our Minister who has thrown away this chance of getting plenty of money and filling his exchequer. I feel that if we adopt this motion, the charge levelled against us that ours is a capitalist Government will be strengthened. I therefore hope that the Honourable Minister will sense the feeling in the House that it does not wish that this motion for postponement of the Bill should be passed. He may take some time, but the House is anxious to see that this Bill should be passed at once otherwise it will mean the loss of several crores of rupees which will be very useful to the Provinces for their work of development. I therefore earnestly desire that the Honourable Minister should withdraw this motion.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): Sir, I was not a little surprised when some Members said that the Honourable the Finance Minister gave certain reasons which do not find a place in the Committee's Interim Report that he presented. Word for word even the very expressions that have been used by the Honourable the Finance Minister here in supporting the motion for keeping this matter to lie over till the next Session, have been borrowed from the Select Committee's Report. Every argument that has been advanced by him finds a place here. I am not a protagonist of his, as he too well had occasion to say that I was going out of the way and quarreling with him. Therefore, I do not hold any brief for the Honourable Minister. My only interest in this is that I also was a Member of the Select Committee; Mr. Santhanam was a Member of the Select Committee, and both of us and some others have signed this Report. I shall read it.....

Shri M. Tirumala Rao (Madras: General): Is the rest of the House not to know the contents of the Select Committee's Report while the Members of the Select Committee quote before the House

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member knows that the Report is presented to the House and he is reading from it.

Shri M. Tirumala Rao: It is not circulated.

Mr. Speaker: That is another matter. It is open to every Member to have a loan of it for the time being.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Sir, I am aware that my friend is a high parliamentarian, but after the presentation of the Committee's Report there is nothing secret about it. As I got it from the Secretary, he could also have taken it from him, and if he wants debate on this important matter adjourned, he could have moved the Speaker to ask it to lie over particularly in view of the fact that the Honourable the Finance Minister will be prepared to have the Report circulated. Therefore, it is not quite a good reason to be given against this motion.

The points raised are two or three. Before I come to them, I think there is ample justification for making this lie over. For, who are we trying to catch? After all, we want to levy this duty to ensure equality between man and man. That is one of the chief objects of the Estate Duty. It is certainly a taxation measure, but it is also intended for the purpose of removing inequalities of birth. For instance, one man inherits an estate worth Rs. 10 lakhs or one crore. Another man inherits a small estate. The one man may be very intelligent and the other man may be a dullard; all the same, he inherits a very large property which has been handed down by his father. It is to give the same start and to remove all inequalities in the social structure that this and other similar taxation measures are introduced. Income-tax is not only a tax but it is intended to adjust social and economic inequalities. That is a much greater and much more important aspect than the few chips that are sought to be raised by its levy or by this tax.

There is one other point which the honourable members in this House must note. This is not a taxation measure intended to enrich the coffers of the Central Government. It only goes to the various Provinces.

An Honourable Member: That is of greater importance.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Therefore, more than the Honourable member and I, the Provinces must be interested in this measure. Under the present Government of India Act, the Provinces can always apply to the Centre whenever there is a measure of taxation or a piece of legislation which affects the Provinces. They can certainly send in an application and ask the Department here concerned to take up that measure and pilot it on their behalf. No such thing has yet been done. Not only do they not seem to be anxious.....

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: Who?

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: The Provinces. Where is the proof that the Provinces are anxious about it? You and I are not the representatives of the Provinces here exclusively. Each Province has got its own legislature. There are popular Ministries there. Are we absolutely representatives of the entire continent of India of 30 millions? I do admit that we have a sense of responsibility, but the urge must come from the Provinces, because this measure is going to strengthen their sinews. That is number one.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: Has the honourable member forgotten that we have been elected by the members of the Provincial Legislatures and we have, therefore, to safeguard their interests?

Shri K. Santhanam: May I point out that we here are the people to vote sums for the Provincial expenditure?

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: But my honourable friend knows only too well that we are only collection agents for this purpose as in various other matters also. After all, who are the persons that enjoy? Certainly, the ass that bears the gold does not enjoy it: We are only collection agents.

An Honourable Member: Who is the ass?

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: I am the ass; I have no objection. Let us not import emotion. As one is a socialist, the other is a Rowlands. Rowlands was very much interested in the welfare of India. He was a socialist of socialists. He wanted to throw this country along with others into the Bay of Bengal. I would not take a leaf out of that. The reason why I stand up is I am a poor man. I have got consideration for a poor man. This measure is not going to affect my estate at all. But if a European starts some measure, however good it may be, I would only take it with a pinch of salt. On that ground alone, I would ask him to put it off for some time.

Now, let me go to the agricultural land. I will read out that portion of the Select Committee's Report which is common to all of us. My honourable friend Mr. Sidhva has also signed the Report.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: I have of course signed, but was the honourable member present at the meeting?

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Well, I signed the Report and I stand by what I signed; my friend does not. (Interruption). Let us not carry on conversations across the table. I am entitled to speak and convince my friend.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: I have of course signed, but was the honourable member he has not read it fully.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: I have read it fully. It is in a corner and understandable to nobody except himself.

Now, I will read out the relevant portion:

"We have given anxious consideration to the proposal of the Finance Minister. We realize that to a very large extent the points raised by him were present to the mind of the members of the Legislature when it passed the motion to refer the Bill to the Select Committee and therefore cannot be said to raise questions which are new. Nevertheless the Committee with the exception of Mr. Sidhva felt that the arguments advanced by the Honourable the Finance Minister in support of his proposition that the consideration of the Bill by the Select Committee be postponed are weighty and should be allowed."

I do not know if the word "weighty" allows of superlative or comparative. It is sufficiently strong in itself. That is the considered opinion of all members except my honourable friend Mr. Sidhva.

Now, let me come to the merits. My friend Mr. Santhanam said, it is a lame excuse to say that this does not affect agricultural property. With great respect to him, I would say this, that the comparison of income-tax and this does not fit in. It is true that agricultural land is not liable to Central income-tax, but more than this income-tax every inch of land in this country is taxed to the hilt. If income-tax is imposed on agricultural land also, poor agriculturalists who own ten cents or one acre or one and a half acres will be free from taxation. They will all be free from taxation. But the land tax is a taxation measure much more onerous than any measure which has been conceived of. A man who owns ten cents has to pay out of proportion to his income, while a man getting Rs. 2,000 by salary or income or property other than agricultural land is now exempt from taxation. Under these circumstances, there is no analogy between the one and the other. It is true that it ought to be brought in line with the rest, but the exact reason is that till now income-tax legislation has also been dealt with at the Centre and every inch of land is liable to taxation somewhere or the other. What about death duty? If we pass legislation here exempting agricultural property, is death duty recovered in any form or shape by way of revenue or otherwise in any part of any of the Provinces in this country? No. There is no correspondence. Whereas agricultural land is exempt from central income-tax it is liable to some tax or revenue which is more than this. There is no correspondence here. I am repeating this argument for this reason. Let us take a person who has got a lakh of rupees he has earned. His property is not agricultural property. Another man has invested all his property in agricultural land. We will assume he has 5 or 10 lakhs. The one man will be exempt from taxation, the death duty, the measure which we want to introduce, which we want to hurry through. So far as the other man is concerned, his one lakh of rupees will be reduced to fifty thousand or even less. He may have a dozen children. Therefore, there is inequality of income; inequality of estate and difference in start, which is one of the main objects of this Bill to adjust. If I am a socialist, I must urge that there should be equalisation of property, so that no one man or group may have a start in life over the other man. But here the very object is frustrated. I do not know how my friends are bringing in the analogy of income-tax. It is absolutely different. It does not suit the position under the Estates Duty Act.

Now, let me come to my honourable friend Mr. Shiva Rao. He thinks of Clause 6 as it affects only the Joint Hindu Mitakshara family. It is like removing the key stone and asking the arch to stand. What is the community other than the Hindu Mitakshara except in a corner of Bengal? Still we are groups of family everywhere. Even the Marumakkathayam law retains the qualities of the Joint family in some form or other. This is like putting a piece of salt in a pot of milk. I have no objection. Mr. Shiva Rao may do so. Let him do so. The whole thing will curdle. Where it was the Joint Hindu family before, we are by side-tracking and by another round-about method trying to destroy that family. Let us have a vote of this House whether our structure should be destroyed or not. I do not disagree that there are friends here who have absolute contempt for Hindus, contempt for Hindu law, contempt for Hindu culture. I do know that some people have become so Anglicized, they have contempt for everything Indian. They think they were born of scratch and we have to just once again re-impose all our institutions from the West. A motor car which has become useless and obsolete in the West becomes the starter of a new engine in India. Likewise, absolute individualism—father does not care for the son; the son does not maintain the father. If such an institution is brought into this country I have got very grave objections. I have very serious objections to the disruption of the Joint Hindu family. It may be with great respect to those who have introduced revisions in Hindu Code, but I will have my say and I will try to the best of my ability to oppose the passing of that measure or whatever other such measures might come up. So far as marriage, there may be need for interference here and there but not with respect to the Joint Hindu family. It is an institution which has served. It is an institution which takes the place of social security in this country.

Shrimati Renuka Ray (West Bengal: General): May I raise a point of order? Can we have a discussion of the Hindu Code before the Select Committee has sat?

Mr. Speaker: I was just thinking of reminding the honourable member that he is going beyond the scope of the present discussion.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: I will come back to the scope. If I have erred on marriage, I will come back to property.

Now, Sir, I was only addressing myself to the importance of clause 6. Mr. Shiva Rao said that the Joint Hindu Family is after all only one class and is not going to affect the very structure of this Bill. Clause 5 says what is the property which can be taxed.

Shri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar (Madras: General): Are we discussing the merits of the Bill or whether further time should be allowed to the Select Committee if further time is not given it should be superseded by some other Select Committee or this House should take charge of the Bill by itself? That is the question that has to be decided.

Mr. Speaker: The proposition before the House is simple. One of the reasons given by the Honourable the Finance Minister was that the question f the structure of Hindu family under the Mitakshara is an important point or which they want some time to consider. It is from that point of view that the honourable member, I believe, is trying to point out the importance of the social structure and therefore the necessity for longer time of course, he should not go into further details and that is why I said, he was going beyond the scope.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: I was pointing out to clause 5 as to what the property is. Are we to be satisfied that the Honourable the Finance Minister is not a socialist? So far as this matter is concerned, I humbly submit to the members of this House that we should not do anything hastily. One of my friends said: "Why, war profits will escape"? War profits won't escape until the man is alive. Why should you expect these people will die immediately? Let them live for and multiply their profits also; let them live happily, acquire more wealth, so that by the time the Estate Duty comes into operation we will have large chunks of gold from them. I heartily support this motion for the Select Committee being given further time to consider this matter till the next session of the Assembly.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: The Honourable Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar stated that he signed the report. May I ask him whether he placed all these views before the Select Committee?

Mr. Speaker: That point is irrelevant.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: Mr. Speaker, the motion that I have placed before the House is only recommendation of the Select Committee and not a motion for which I am solely responsible, but I am glad that my honourable friend Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar brought out this point. The Select Committee was charged with the duty of presenting a report to this House within a specified time. The Select Committee has presented an interim report in which they have recommended that the House should be requested to grant more time and I have simply translated that recommendation into the form of a definite motion. But I do not want to shirk my responsibility in persuading the Select Committee to accept such a decision. I pointed out to the Select Committee the reasons that should weigh with them in coming before the House and making a request for the grant of further time and the Select Committee saw the force underlying my arguments and they accepted my recommendation. Some charge has been made more or less in an indirect manner that it is probably my intention by means of these dilatory tactics to postpone indefinitely the passing of this measure into law. If Honourable Members who have any such suspicion will take the trouble of understanding the genesis of this measure, they will find it is a totally unjustifiable suspicion. This Bill was introduced some time back in the old Legislative Assembly and after the constitutional changes the Bill lapsed. There was no Bill before this House. If I had the slightest intention of obstructing the passage of such a measure, the course open to me was very simple. I should simply have desisted from introducing this Bill before this House. But I felt, Sir, that a measure of this kind to bring about a more equitable distribution of wealth in this country is eminently desirable. At the same time when I read the provisions of the Bill as was drafted, I realized it was defective in many respects. But I felt that the best way of expediting the passage of this Bill is not to indefinitely take time to reconsider all these defects, but to bring it before the House and to ask my Ministry simultaneously to study the various implications of the measure in the light of the criticisms expressed in this House and in the Select Committee, and in the face of this attitude, I would leave it to the House to decide whether I was actuated with the intention of stifling this measure or was actuated with a motive of doing my best to expedite the passage of this measure.

My honourable friend, Professor Ranga levelled certain accusations against the efficiency of the Ministry of Finance. Sir, I have only to say this. As Minister in charge of that Department, I would welcome any criticism levelled against me. I, as a responsible minister am prepared to take all the consequences of the working of the Ministry of Finance, but I will not tolerate any such unjustifiable criticism against the officers of my Ministry.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: As a matter of personal explanation, I had no officer of his Department in my mind at all. When I was criticising his Ministry, I was criticising him and the whole of the Ministry for which he is responsible.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: I am glad that the honourable member has elucidated the point. I take the fullest responsibility for any delay that might have occurred in the examination of this Bill. The officers of my Ministry have discharged their task and their responsibility in the most satisfactory manner.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: It is your opinion and we have another opinion.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: And if any delay is caused, I take the fullest responsibility for that delay. I have given very valid explanations which I am glad to say the Select Committee conceded when I pleaded for the postponement of the consideration of this measure.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the time appointed for the presentation of the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to provide for the levy and collection of an estate duty in the provinces of India, be extended upto the last day of the first week of the next Budget Session of the Assembly."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: There are only five minutes left. Now the Honourable Minister may move his motion and then we may adjourn.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: Sir, I want a little longer time to move the Bill.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock, Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

FACTORIES BILL

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF SELECT COMMITTEE

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram (Minister for Labour): Sir, I beg to present the report of the Select Committee on the Bill to consolidate and amend the law regulating labour in factories.

BANKING COMPANIES BILL

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty (Minister for Finance): Mr. Speaker, I move:

"That the Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to banking companies, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Dr. B. Pattabhi Sitaramayya, Shri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar, Shri Arun Chandra Guha, Shri Prabhu Dayal Himatsingka, Shri Bikramlal Sondhi, Prof. K. T. Shah, Srijut Kuladhar Chaliha, Mr. Hossain Imam, Shri T. T. Krishnamachari, Shri T. Channiah, Shrimati G. Durgabai, Dr. Dharam Prakash, Shri U. Srinivasa Mallayya, Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, Shri Jaspal Roy Kapoor and the Mover, with instructions to report on or before the 18th August, 1948 and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

Sir, honourable members might remember that towards the end of January 1948, I moved a motion for withdrawing the Bill to regulate Banking in India. In moving that motion I explained what my intention was. I then said that it was purely with a view to facilitate discussion in this House. When I adopted the course of withdrawing the Bill that was then before the House, I intended to move for the introduction of a Bill consolidating all the amendments made by the Select Committee and a few consequential amendments necessitated by a change in the constitution. The Bill before the House now is really a Bill that has consolidated for the sake of convenience the report of the Select Committee which examined the measure in very great detail. I have also taken this opportunity to incorporate certain special amendments due to the changes in the constitution and also certain amendments of a verbal nature, and one amendment based on the report of the minority of that Select Committee.

Banking law in this country has formed part of the general company law. It was felt for a very long time that a separate Banking law was necessary to regulate Banking. The object of the Indian Companies Act is primarily to protect the interests of the stock-holders whereas the object of a Banking legislation must be primarily intended to protect the interests of the depositors and the public. The fundamental conception underlying the company law is therefore different from the conception underlying banking legislation, and the need for such legislation, as I said, has been felt in this country for a very long time.

The Central Banking Enquiry Committee which conducted a very detailed and elaborate enquiry on the question of banking during the years 1929-1931 made some very elaborate recommendations for the enactment of the banking law of this country. I happened to be a member of that Commission and it is therefore a matter of pleasure to me that I should have this opportunity of piloting this measure through this House and give effect to some of the main recommendations of that Commission. No immediate action was taken on the recommendations of the Banking Commission. In 1938, however, certain recommendations of the Banking Commission were incorporated in the Indian Companies Act. There the matter rested. In 1938, a banking crisis occurred in South India and the attention of the public was once again concentrated on the need for a comprehensive banking legislation. The Government of the day, in 1940, drafted a Bill and circulated it for eliciting public opinion; but on account of the preoccupations connected with the war, no further steps were taken. During 1942 and 1944, certain interim measures were passed to remedy some of the defects in the capital structure and management of banks. Beyond this, the fundamental points arising out of banking legislation were not touched. It was in 1944 that a comprehensive Banking Bill was introduced in the Central Legislature. Unfortunately, soon after that, in 1945, the legislature was dissolved and the Bill lapsed.

In March 1946 a new Bill based on the opinions received so far was introduced and referred to a Select Committee of the Legislature. This Select Committee gave an opportunity to experts and various interests concerned to represent their views, and after a very close and detailed scrutiny of all the clauses, the Select Committee finally submitted its report.

The present Bill, as I have stated, is merely a consolidation of the recommendations of the Select Committee. Ordinarily the old Bill, with the report of the Select Committee, would have been taken up for consideration of this House and there would have been no need to refer the matter again to another Select Committee. But as I indicated also in my speech, such a procedure would have been very cumbersome, because on every clause a motion would have to be made embodying the amendments made by the Select Committee, and these amendments being one of substance, it would have been very difficult for the Honourable Members of this House to understand the full implications of a clause or the amendments proposed by the Select Committee. I am sure that under these circumstances the House will agree with me that the procedure that I have adopted will be more welcome to the House and more convenient from the point of view of an intelligent consideration of the measure.

In consolidating the amendments of the Select Committee into a comprehensive measure I also took the opportunity of introducing certain amendments necessitated by a change in the Constitution that occurred in the meantime. For example, in the old Bill and in the report of the Select Committee the phrase "British India" occurs. In place of that we have substituted "Provinces of India." In consultation with the Reserve Bank, we have also made certain amendments more of a drafting nature intended to improve the drafting of the Bill, and as I indicated earlier I have also included a clause incorporating one of the recommendations of the Minority of the Select Committee placing a limitation on the dividends that might be paid by banks constituted after a certain date.

It is not necessary for me, Mr. Speaker, at this stage to go into any great detailed exposition of the various clauses of the Bill. The Bill is a very comprehensive measure. It attempts the primary task of defining what a banking company is. Until now we have no legal definition of the words "banking company".

I remember that when this problem was considered by the Banking Enquiry Commission various difficulties were encountered in devising an accurate and suitable definition of the phraseology. I am reminded of the saying of a gentleman who used to say that the difference between a moneylender and a banker is that while a moneylender lends his own money a banker lends other people's money. That popular conception however is very nearly a fair expression of what banking practice is, but that would not serve a legal definition. The Select Committee has to my mind given what might be regarded as a very fair working definition of what a banking concern is. The Bill contains provisions for improving the standards of management and to prevent the inter-locking of banking directors which has been almost a curse in banking system in our country, and to which might be traced many of the frauds and malpractices committed by banks. Elaborate provisions have been made to ensure a suitable capital structure. We have also made provisions for effective and adequate inspection of banks by the Reserve Bank and we have also taken this opportunity of enlarging the powers and the functions of the Reserve Bank in relation to the banking system of the country, so that the Central Bank might be in a position not merely to give effective help but to offer sound advice at the appropriate moment. I have also taken this opportunity to incorporate a clause under which the banks situated in Indian States, which have acceded to the Union, will also come under the general banking structure of our country. The banks which are situated in Indian States and which are outside our jurisdiction have been a fruitful source, not merely for the refuge of black-market money but for the perpetration of many of the evils connected with tax evasion, and one of the greatest handicaps of our income-tax administration has been our inability to trace an account to the Indian banks situated in the Indian States, and I am confident that with the incorporation of this clause in the new measure that loophole will once and for all be closed for malpractices.

These, Mr. Speaker, are the main features of the Banking Bill. I have suggested that the Select Committee should report on or before 18th August, only nine days hence. It may be considered that this is too much of a hurry, but as I said the work of this Select Committee will be comparatively simple because a previous Select Committee has gone into very great details in examining the provisions of the legislation and sufficient opportunity was given both to the public and to the experts to represent all their points of view.

With all these facts before them, it would be possible for the Select Committee to conclude its deliberations quickly and to present its report before the 18th August as I contemplate. I am particular that this measure should be placed on the Statute Book at the earliest possible moment, and with that end in view I would very much like that this measure should be passed during the current session of the House. Banking legislation is long overdue and I hope the House will appreciate the need for the legislation and the urgency of the matter.

Mr. Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to banking companies, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Dr. B. Pattabhi Sitaramayya, Shri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar, Shri Arun Chandra Guha, Shri Prabhu Dayal Himatsingka, Shri Bikramlal Sondhi, Prof. K. T. Shah, Srijit Kuladhar Chaliha, Mr. Hossain Imam, Shri T. T. Krishnamachari, Shri T. Channiah, Shrimati G. Durgabai, Dr. Dharam Prakash, Shri U. Srinivasa Mallayya, Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, Shri Jaspat Roy Kapoor and the Mover, with instructions to report on or before the 18th August, 1948 and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the committee shall be five."

Shri B. Das (Orissa: General): Sir, this is the third Banking Bill that I have the privilege of seeing introduced in this House. I opposed the last two Banking Bills with all the vehemence that I had in my command. Now that we are a free nation and the Reserve Bank to which I was very much opposed under the British regime is going to be a nationalised bank I wholeheartedly support the measure, which my honourable friend Shri Shanmukham Chetty has just now tabled. There was the suspicion in the past that the Reserve Bank being an instrument of the Bank of England wanted this Banking Bill introduced in India, so that it completely controlled banking in India, so that the money of India was placed at the disposal of the Bank of England. In 1939 by the mere amendment of Section 126A of Government of India Act, 1935, England did the worst thing possible. She took away completely the money, men and resources of India and exploited them to the full extent possible, thus making the Reserve Bank of India a cat's paw of the Bank of England and the British Raj. That sort of nightmare will not occur in future. The Reserve Bank is our own bank now. Any prejudice that we had in the past, any criticism that I have levelled on the floor of this House time without number that the Reserve Bank did not function as the national bank of India that charge I hope will not be levelled again at the Reserve Bank. When my friend will discuss the measure for nationalisation of the Reserve Bank later on he will say that it will function not only as a banker's bank but also as the taxpayer's bank, as the people's bank and will function in the interest of the people of India.

For one thing I wish to thank my friend the Finance Minister. He has rung the death knell of the sahuikars; his friends the Nattukottai Chetties of Madras used to command large private banking and private resources.....

An Honourable Member: He is not a Nattukottai Chetty.

Shri B. Das: Anyway he bears a similar name. Now that the Government is our own, we want all banking to be controlled by this Banking Act. It will cause hardship to many but the provincial governments have already passed a Moneylenders' Act, in every province and thereby they have controlled private moneylenders and sahuikars to a certain extent. My friend is now going to give the finishing touch to wipe off this institution, under which at the moment the nation groans.

I have to make only one suggestion to the draft. Last time I was not a member of the House and when I gave evidence before the Select Committee I was pleading the cause of the small banks. But nowhere do I find either the Finance Minister or his advisers in the Reserve Bank or the Finance Department suggesting how the circulation of money is to be increased in the country through the banks. In that I consider the Government of India and the provincial governments as the biggest culprits. They should not pay their salaries in cash. They should introduce cheques, not alone through the Imperial Bank or the Reserve Bank but through all Banks. The Imperial Bank will shortly be nationalised. My honourable friend has promised us that a Bill will come in the near future. If the Government is to control scheduled banks, through the Reserve Bank let all Government money, provincial government money as well as the Central Government money, be deposited in every bank that is on the list of the Reserve Bank and let the Government of India and the provincial governments pay their salary bills in cheques on various small banks and large banks. There will then be larger circulation of money. One often finds that it is the Government employees who do not encourage banking principles in the country. They go and patronise their former master's bank, the Imperial Bank. They do not go to other national banks. I hope my honourable friend who understands the mass mentality in the countryside will see that Government has accounts in every bank which will be in the list of the Reserve Bank and to which will be allowed inspection and control of the Reserve Bank, so that large amounts of money which lie hoarded in the Imperial Bank at present (in spite of its becoming a national bank in the future) will circulate through all the banks in the countryside and through co-operative banks, which at present is not the case. I appeal to my honourable friends in the Select Committee to pay attention to this aspect of the matter and to introduce a clause in the Bill so that the Government of India and the Reserve Bank will be forced to have a certain amount of money in every bank that will come under the jurisdiction of this Act and thereby money circulation will be increased and much more human benefit will accrue. With these few remarks I support the motion.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva (C. P. and Berar: General): Sir, I welcome this Bill for reasons. It safeguards the interest of the depositors. The interest of the depositors is the main feature of a bank. Before the Reserve Bank was established, in earlier days we know that many mushroom banks came into existence with the result that a large number of depositors suffered due to failure of banks. Even after the establishment of the Reserve Bank I feel that the depositors' interests are not very secure. We know of two instances where even scheduled banks, which have to comply with the provisions of the Reserve Bank Act have come to grief. Neither the Reserve Bank has been helpful to these banks nor have those banks been able to safeguard the interest of the depositors, with the result that the depositors have lost their hard-earned money. I remember two banks which were asked to suspend acceptance of deposits from the public by the Reserve Bank on account of their improper management. That was good in a way. I shall mention the name of one bank, which was the Jwala Bank. The Reserve Bank asked them to stop payment. Rightly so if it was in the interest of the depositors. But the Reserve Bank was not helpful in the protection of the rights of the depositors with the result that this bank has been bragging that after this fiat was issued by the Reserve Bank they have been able to give 80 per cent. of their money. That is incorrect. This bank gave only 75 per cent. in some cases and 50 per cent. in some other cases but they are taking receipts for 100 per cent. from the depositors. I know of small depositors and public funds which have lost their money. The Reserve Bank which was meant to protect the interest of the depositors has not come to their rescue. So I find in the provisions of this Bill many clauses which strengthen the constitution further of the Reserve Bank. I welcome the Bill from that point of view, viz., the depositors' interests must be safeguarded fully. The depositors are not big people. The big people do not deposit money, they draw money. It is the small people who with their small savings are the largest contributors to banks, to the extent of crores of rupees. They save from their earning and keep the money in the banks under the impression that the Government is at the back of them. They consider the Reserve Bank as a Government bank. They feel that scheduled banks are now under Government protection and therefore they can deposit their money in scheduled banks as they offer higher interests. The poor depositors who are small people depend on the interest from their deposits for their maintenance also. Therefore they deposit their money in this manner. Some of these banks have simply been a failure as far as the interests of the small depositors are concerned.

Mention was made by my friend Mr. B. Das of small banking companies. I do not attach any weight to small banking companies. There should be substantial banking companies who should really have a thorough knowledge of banking and who could, when they accept money from the public—which is a trust with them—return pie to pie with interest. If small companies cannot manage successfully, they should not be allowed to start—leave alone the question of winding them up. There is a loophole even in this Bill and I hope the Select Committee will see to the strengthening of the Reserve Bank to such an extent that it could keep a vigilant eye on them. Today it cannot keep such a vigilant eye. It does, I admit but it has not got sufficient powers. Scheduled banks are supposed to be gilt-edged banks, but they are not so; they are speculating in shares. In my opinion that should be prevented. It is with the public money that they are speculating and I do not see any reason why speculation by these banks should not be stopped. Provision should be made to that effect. A bank can give loans, it can earn money from giving loans to persons, to industrialists, to any small man if they feel justified, and earn from the interest. They give $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. and they charge 4 or 5 per cent. interest. I think their earning is quite all right. Why should they speculate? One of the reasons for the fall of the Jwala Bank from my experience is the speculation in shares, to a very great extent.

I do not know what is meant by small banking companies. There are some businessmen who call themselves also bankers. They have got some money—a few lakhs of rupees. They call themselves bankers and the poor public go and deposit their money with them under the temptation of receiving more per cent. of interest. There should be a safeguard by which these bankers—let them call themselves bankers if they so choose—should be precluded from accepting any deposit from the public. There should be no temptations, and temptations are always there now because people, generally pensioners, and retired persons invest their money in the hope of getting more interest in the small banks as they consider them to be good banks. Banks like the Imperial Bank, Central Bank or the United Commercial Bank or the Bank of India offer low interest, they give $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. So these other banks are an inducement to them and they go and invest their money there. They should be stopped from taking money from the depositors.

In regard to Directors I would like to have a provision. I think I made mention of it once before. We have introduced this provision in Co-operative banks. There the Directors used to borrow money for their own purpose. A clause was therefore inserted prohibiting them from borrowing any money. I do feel that the time has come when it should be prescribed by law that no Director can draw money in his own name or in the name of his near or far relative. It may be said that I am going too far. I may be going too far. I have the interests of the poor people who keep their deposits in the banks and I know how much they have suffered. They have lost their savings. They have realized ten, fifteen or sometimes 20 per cent. If the Directors want to serve the public they should be content with their fee. They get Rs. 50 when they attend a meeting—sometimes Rs. 100. They get all other expenses. As such I see no reason why they should be allowed to borrow money from the banks. I am told sometimes that they do not vote at the meeting at such times. I do not attach any importance to that because the Director remains mum there at the time when his own personal question comes up, but he indirectly influences the other Directors and these Directors vote for the payment of these amounts. From this point of view I would like to have a provision in the manner I have suggested.

I also feel that one Director should not be interested in any other bank. I have seen a Director interested in half a dozen banks. I have seen in Bombay, —he attends the Directors' meeting at one place for seven minutes, pockets the Rs. 50 cheque, goes to the other bank, attends that meeting for seven minutes and thus within half an hour he gets about Rs. 400, paying little attention to the affairs of the banks. I know of a person who was interested in twenty-seven concerns—I won't mention the name. But I would submit that this practice should be stopped because the Directors will then have no time to devote to the interests of the depositors and the general interests of the public. I would request the Honourable Minister to bear in mind this aspect of the question. The general interests of the depositor should be at the heart of all the banks. That could only be done when, as I have already stated, speculation by these banks is stopped. At the same time the Reserve Bank should keep a vigilant eye.

Even today in some of the good banks also I have seen that there has been a rush on account of some false rumour by certain interested persons. That is not hearsay but a fact. The best of the banks have been maligned by some interested persons. A rush has been made on the bank with the result that it could not meet the demands, and the Reserve Bank has not been able to come to its rescue at the nick of the moment. There is, on the other hand, a provision for the Reserve Bank to come to its rescue. It should have done so under the present Reserve Bank Act. Where the Reserve Bank is satisfied that the bank is run on business-like principles it should come to its rescue if there is a rush. People become panicky and if you or I invest money, we also at times become panicky; we would put in our withdrawals and draw the money with the result that the bank cannot cope with the demand. If the Reserve Bank or the Imperial Bank does not come to its rescue it will have to close its doors. Some of those banks in the past I know have paid back sixteen annas in the rupee to the depositors. Such banks should be fully protected.

These are some of the loopholes in the present Act and they will have to be amended. I support the Bill and I do desire and expect that the Honourable the Finance Minister will kindly see to it that the interests of the depositors, irrespective of any consideration, are fully borne in mind, and that a scheduled bank is such a bank where the depositor will have no kind of doubt when he deposits his money. To that extent the banks must be strengthened and the Reserve Bank should keep a proper eye on the day to day working of such banks. With these few words I support the provisions of this Bill.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri (Assam: General): Mr. Speaker, Sir, my honourable friend the Mover of this Bill has tried to make a distinction between a moneylender and a bank. He has said that a moneylender is one who advances money out of his own resources; he has also defined a bank as an institution which lends money which belongs to other persons. Sir, that is quite true. He has, however, failed to observe the distinction between a gentleman borrower and a trading borrower. The gentleman borrower is being simply extinguished by this sort of banking legislation. A gentleman borrower is one whose debts are fully realised, and a trading borrower is one who gets free advances from the bank either till it closes or till it goes into liquidation.

Now, the gentleman borrower also includes the ordinary agriculturist borrower. They have been simply thrown out of their gear on account of these banking institutions. You might think of co-operative banking. I have seen a number of co-operative banks in our rural areas most of which have gone to ruin; most of them have failed to satisfy the requirements of the poorer classes. It is only the richer classes who go to Commercial Bank who have liquid securities; they get the advantage out of this kind of a bank. The people who are not known to the bankers, who had generally got some assistance from the money-lenders, they are now in great difficulty. The more you are trying to protect this class of people, the more difficulties they have to encounter, with the result that we have to fall back upon the banking institutions.

I am very glad that for the first time in the history of banking bills, we have today been able to secure a representation in the Select Committee. I consider that to be very important because Assam is in an undeveloped condition so far as banking is concerned. It is quite right for you now to come forward with very tightening measures. A large number of outside banks had their branches in Assam and large amounts of local money were deposited in those branches. Most of them, I should say, had either closed their doors or gone into liquidation, with the result that the people of Assam now like to have their own banks. If the money which they deposit now in local banks is lost to them, it is lost to them in their own Province; it is their own people to whom they can go and whom they can chastise and criticise if they find that they have misused their money. But when the banks come from outside the Province and when they liquidate they have no practical remedy. So people have become very shy of keeping money in banks other than their own. At this time this legislation comes—and a hint of it was also given in the previous session—with all its restrictive clauses in order to prevent growth of undeveloped banks.

You say on the one hand that unless you have sufficient capital your bank will not be allowed to go on after two years. At the same time when people come to you for issue of capital you say, "We will not grant any more issue of capital". I am telling you from my own personal experience. The banks have not been allowed capital issue because on account of paucity of capital they could not give a proper account of themselves. Now, having refused them capital issues, you say under clause 12, "As you have not got so much capital you shall not be allowed to continue to do business". Sir, I think there should be some exemption in respect of banks which are established in undeveloped areas by indigenous people.

Secondly, you come to the opening of branches. That is a question to which I have referred previously also in another banking bill. In the smaller Provinces they have started banks and they want to have branches at least in their own Province—not to think of having branches outside the Province, they must have at least in their own Province. Then clause 22 comes in and says, "No, you cannot establish branches without the permission of the Reserve Bank."

Then these new banks which have been started in the Provinces—by "new" I include those established about twenty years ago—have not been able to come on the Schedule of the Reserve Bank because they have not been able in some cases to secure a sufficient amount of shares; though it is quite true, they have not been able to sell a sufficient number of shares and their capital is somewhat limited. But would you give them facilities to secure sufficient capital in those cases? Will you give them permission to sell more shares so that they may come under the Schedule or that they may have the requisite capital for purposes of expanding their business not only among people of the Province but also outside.

These are the exemptions which I should claim in favour of Provinces which have not got banking yet developed. But when I bring to the notice of the House questions like these, invariably it is considered to be provincial or parochial. But I should submit that when a Province is found to have been very dreadfully cheated by the branches of banks which had come from outside the Province and when the Province itself wants to develop its banking line, due facilities ought to be given to them. Therefore I would submit that the strict clauses like clause 12 or clause 20 or 22 should be somewhat modified in application in respect of those banking concerns.

Now, on account of the failure of so many banks in the country it has become very difficult to carry on the existing banks which have been found wanting in meeting the demands of the constituents. But there has been a general feeling in the country that there should be more Scheduled Banks. Unless there are more Scheduled Banks, the people do not like to invest money in other Banks, and when you think of investing in Scheduled Banks you find that most of these are from outside the Province. Would you not, Sir, in such a case help a bank of the Province itself if it can give you sufficient amount of capital, if it can show that it can really sell so many shares? Why are you so unwilling to give it the necessary permission to sell the shares or otherwise increase their capital? It will be said that it is a matter which is left entirely to the Reserve Bank. My experience of the Reserve Bank activities in this direction has been very unhappy; I have found that in most cases when you go out for any special consideration or any privilege in respect of a particular bank from the Reserve Bank, it is very difficult to get it, and the Government of India itself, with whom I think the final decision rests, do not care to interfere in a decision which is made by the Reserve Bank.

Therefore, I will most humbly request the Members of the Select Committee to take this aspect of banking into their consideration, particularly with regard to the Provinces where indigenous banking has not been developed. If this legislation stands in the way of development of indigenous banks, the people naturally would like to think that it is better they have no banks; it would be better that they go back to the original system of borrowing money from the moneylender who, although he charges a very high rate of interest, at least would come to the rescue of the people in real distress.

They would not demand liquid security which is almost impossible for ordinary labourers or small traders to furnish. Therefore, I would submit that all facilities should be given for development of indigenous banks because indigenous banks, at least in a province, know their own constituents and they can be expected to be more sympathetic and more reasonable than the banks which come and establish business in a different province. I am not saying that those banks which are established in a different province and have branches in another province should be discouraged. I do not mean to say anything of the kind, but I would say that there should be room open for the backward provinces to develop in banking business.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Madras: General): Sir, I am generally in agreement with the main principles underlying this Bill, but at the same time, I must confess my disappointment that no effort has yet been made to make a serious study of the possibility of nationalising the banking industry in this country. I think it is high time that the Honourable the Finance Minister should try to get necessary studies made and, if possible, a scheme also worked up, so that it might be possible within a short time to nationalise if not the whole of our banking industry, at least some of the most important sections of it. This morning when I heard from the Honourable the Finance Minister that he was introducing the Bill to bring the Reserve Bank of India under public ownership, I was a little disappointed because I was under the impression that along with the Reserve Bank of India at the same time and through the same Bill he would be trying to propose a similar procedure to be adopted for the Imperial Bank of India also. But that somehow that did not happen and I do not know when and how soon the Honourable the Finance Minister would be coming forward before this House with a Bill for the nationalisation of the Imperial Bank of India also. Secondly, there are these Exchange Banks, most of which are yet not in the hands of Indians, anyhow not under the predominant control of Indians. Some special steps have to be taken to bring these Exchange Banks at least under State control and State management at the earliest possible moment.

And yet there are certain very welcome features in this measure to which I wish to express my own personal approval. The Honourable the Finance Minister was good enough to accept the recommendation made by a "minority", as he called it, that there should be some limitation placed on dividends. I am glad he has accepted that suggestion. Along with it, I do hope that the Select Committee would also try to put some limitation on the salary that would be paid by the various banks in our country.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari (Madras: General): Top salary is limited.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: I am glad. Then, there is the total percentage of expenditure that is to be incurred on establishment. It has to be examined whether any limitation can possibly be placed on that also. Thirdly, Sir, I am glad that the Reserve Bank is proposed to be given power to control, inspect, supervise and advise these various Banks. Now that the Reserve Bank is going to be nationalised, it is good that such powers are being given to this apex Bank, because that is one of the measures by which we can possibly try to safeguard the interests not only of the investors but also the general public who have to be served by these Banks.

When I speak about the public, I naturally have to consider the relationship between these ordinary banks and the co-operative banks in our country. I am not quite satisfied with the present conditions prevailing in our country. Too often, the Imperial Bank does not help the co-operative banks. Nor do the scheduled banks go out of their way to render any sort of assistance to the co-operative banks. These banks consider the co-operative banks as their rivals and try to discourage co-operative banking and when the Reserve Bank of India Bill was before the previous Assembly efforts were made by various members of the House and assurances were given by the then Finance Minister that every possible care would be taken to give special assistance to co-operative banking so that rural credit would be augmented by the assistance given by the Reserve Bank of India. But in actual practice, assistance that the Reserve Bank of India has been able to give till now has amounted to practically nil or to very little indeed, and it could not in any way satisfactorily help rural credit in our country. Therefore, some special steps will have to be taken by the Select Committee in order to see that this Bill would make it possible for the future banking in this country to assist cooperative banking and also never to thwart the progress of co-operative banking.

Lastly, Sir, there is this problem to which attention has been drawn just now by my honourable friend from Assam, namely, the interest of local banks versus Inter-statal or inter-Provincial Banks. If you concede the point that banks do come to have a key position in our national economy, then you necessarily have to admit that inter-statal banks would come to be much more powerful than the local banks. It might be possible for the local public to control the local banks but it would be impossible for them to control these inter-statal banks. Therefore, what with provincial autonomy and the autonomy that the various Indian States would be enjoying in this regard, it would be better, I think, on the whole to encourage these local banks and bring them under the direct control of the Reserve Bank instead of encouraging these inter-statal banks and thus make them a sort of a State within a State and indeed a bigger State than the Provincial Governments or the Indian State Governments. It is for these reasons that I wish to extend my support more for the local banks than for these inter-statal banks. It might be contended that the inter-statal banks would be able to command bigger financial resources, greater managerial skill and stability. Therefore, it would be possible for the investing public also to have greater confidence in them and place their funds there in larger quantities with the result that these inter-statal banks would be able to help these bigger industries on a larger scale. Sir, I have been contending for a long time that private enterprise ought not to be specially encouraged by the State and as far as it is possible, it is the State's duty to try to take under its own management directly or indirectly as many sectors of our economic structure as possible.

Under those circumstances I think it would be indeed better that inter-statal banks should not stop but encourage because such banks with such huge resources would indeed make it impossible for the State to control them and they might be able, if they so desire to thwart any future effort that the State might be making to take under its own control the various sectors of our economic life. We have seen it Sir, that in England banking came to be controlled by 5 or 6 apex banks. Those banks became so powerful that they were able to distinguish between one industry and another, between one set of companies and another and in that way discriminating in favour of certain groups of capitalists as against another group of capitalists, and indeed they had even gone to the extent of thwarting the very efforts of the State to develop certain sectors of economic life. We should guard ourselves against the development of such a position in our country. Therefore, if really we were to take into consideration the larger interests of the country and also the future interests of the country it would indeed be better not to encourage these inter-statal banks first of all. Secondly we must hasten with our schemes to nationalise the whole of this banking industry so that all those people who have some small funds to invest would be enabled not to put their money in these banks for the benefit of certain small section of capitalists alone, but to place their funds at the disposal of the State banks or the co-operative banks and see that their credit goes to fertilize the social development of the country as a whole.

On one point I would seek enlightenment, Sir. It is quite possible that my Honourable friend the Finance Minister might say that he would give that information at a later stage when this morning's bill comes up for consideration, but I think it would indeed be helpful to this debate if he were good enough to tell us what he meant by the word "public". Did he mean by that "State" or did he mean by that "anybody and everybody as a sort of general public from whom shares could be invited"?

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: By public ownership I mean "state ownership".

Prof. N. G. Ranga: I am glad he has given that assurance and I have nothing more to say at this stage on this Bill. I commend this Bill to the attention and support of this House.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena (U. P.: General): I felt glad when the Honourable the Finance Minister told us that he is incorporating in this Bill the recommendations of the Banking Commission as well as some of the points contained in the Minority Report thereon. I thought he would have incorporated in this Bill at least one of the main recommendations of the Minority Report about the most important need of the country. The rural population get credit at very high rates and sometimes for want of credit they suffer heavy losses. As stated in the Minority Report the co-operative movement has not yet enabled us to supplant bankers. It has only been able to supplement it. The Commission itself estimated that the rural population was indebted to the extent of 876 crores of rupees and since then, I think, the amount has increased and not decreased. This Bill so far as it goes is good in itself but it does not go far enough to provide for the main need of our country, that is, banking facilities to the crores of population who live in the villages. It is only intended to see that the banks in cities do not fail, that the depositors' money is properly safeguarded and that the Government looks after the affairs of the banks, so that they do not crash. It is all good, but we wanted a more comprehensive Bill. If the Honourable Minister has got another Bill up his sleeves to meet that most important need of the country, I will be only too glad. I hope he will tell us something in his reply what he proposes to do about that. The Minority Report of the Indian Central Banking Enquiry Committee have said:

"The co-operative movement would appear to be supplementing the finance provided to the rural districts by the money-lender rather than supplanting him.

Under existing rules, all requirements of members are not met, leaving, as in the Punjab, 40 to 60 per cent. of them in debt to the money-lender."

What is needed is that the Banking Bill should be able to provide some credit facilities to these people. In fact they have not got those kinds of assets which people in the city have and so we will have to treat as assets things such as land, grain and other similar things. But something must be done immediately to see that the rural areas get credit at a reasonable interest and at the proper time so that they may not get into the clutches of money-lenders and pathans to whom they pay the whole of their produce and income. Another defect of this Bill is that it does not provide for the nationalisation of Banks. Though the Reserve Bank is going to be nationalised yet I feel that it is high time that all the Banks were nationalised. The preamble to Bank of England Act says:

"An Act to bring the capital stock of the Bank of England into public ownership and bring the Bank under public control, to make provision with respect to the relations between the Treasury, the Bank of England and other banks and for purposes connected with the matters aforesaid....."

From this I find that all banks in England will now be more or less public-owned. I wish that this Bill were more wide in scope and that other banks were also brought under the closer control of the Reserve Bank than has been done at present in this Bill. The Reserve Bank Bill, in fact, is very important in itself, but I do not think it will meet the full demands of our banking needs. I hope the Select Committee will take into consideration all these points and will make it a better Bill when it comes back before us. I do not wish to take up more time of the House at this stage but I hope the Select Committee will take into consideration the needs of the country and make the Bill more comprehensive and sufficient to meet the country's needs.

Shri Satyanarayan Sinha (Bihar: General): The question be now put.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the question be put."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: I do not think I have anything more to say to what I have already said in the introductory observations. I have no doubt the Select Committee will take into consideration the various points that have been raised.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to banking companies, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Dr. B. Pattabhi Sitaramayya, Shri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiyar, Shri Arun Chandra Guha, Shri Prabhudayal Himatsingka, Shri Bikramlal Sondhi, Prof. K. T. Shah, Sriji Kuladhar Chaliha, Mr. Hossain Imam, Shri T. T. Krishnamachari, Shri T. Channiah, Shrimati G. Durgabai, Dr. Dharam Prakash, Shri U. Srinivasa Mallayya, Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, Shri Jaspal Roy Kapoor and the Mover, with instructions to report on or before the 18th August, 1948 and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

The motion was adopted.

ELECTRICITY (SUPPLY) (BILL)

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil (Minister for Works, Mines and Power): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill to provide for the rationalisation of the production and supply of electricity, and generally for taking measures conducive to the electrical development of the Provinces of India, as reported by the Select Committee, be taken into consideration."

Sir, when I moved for the reference of this Bill to the Select Committee I said that this was a big and complicated measure. As reported by the Select Committee, the House will find that in certain respects important amendments have been effected by the Select Committee. The Select Committee made its report nearly four months ago. So, it would be only fair, Sir, that I should give as briefly as possible an account of what the original Bill was, and what were the important amendments effected by the Select Committee and an overall picture of the Bill as it is now, for the consideration of this House.

Sir, the electricity supply industry is at present, governed by an Act passed in the year 1910 and during the present decade the inadequacy of this legislation has become increasingly clear. The Government were not unaware of this position, and in spite of the difficulties of the war period, a considerable amount of time was devoted by a section of the then Labour Department for the preparation of a Bill which would bring the electricity supply legislation in India in line with or even ahead of that which had been adopted and which had proved successful in other parts of the world. After a prolonged study, it was decided in 1945 that the needs of the country would be best met by the constitution in the provinces of autonomous or quasi autonomous statutory boards with adequate powers to effect rationalisation of electricity supply throughout the State. In arriving at this decision, the Government did not overlook the recommendation of the Power and Fuel Committee of the National Planning Committee which was set up in 1940 under the Chairmanship of the Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru. One of the resolutions passed by this Committee stated that in order to implement the national policy on Power, it will be necessary to create Provincial Electricity Boards and a Central Electricity Board. The Committee also considered that it will be advantageous if the State were ultimately to own and operate the industry: but it did not advocate this as an immediate policy.

Bearing these things in mind, a critical examination was made of the trend of legislation and the events associated with this industry both in the United Kingdom and the United States of America. An Expert was also called. In the United Kingdom, a Central Electricity Board had been set up with a view to effecting substantial economies in the generation of electricity. This body has proved to be a remarkable success in achieving the object for which it was constituted. It was thought, therefore, that the provincial Electricity Board, which was proposed to be set up under the provisions of the new Bill, might well be equipped with powers in some respects similar to those which had been vested in the Central Electricity Board in the United Kingdom. In consequence, it was decided to ask the British Government to make available certain technicians and an expert. He was made available. Although the then existing legislation in the United Kingdom proved to be valuable as a basis for those sections of the Bill relating to the constitution of the Provincial electricity board, there was another aspect which had received scant attention in the United Kingdom, namely, the regulation of rate. A scrutiny of the conditions in the electricity supply industry in England left no doubt in the minds of those engaged in drafting this Bill that some form of rate regulation was not only justifiable, but was indeed urgently required. It was realised that the conditions in the licence granted to an undertaker under the provisions of the Electricity Act of 1910 were of practically no value in protecting the consumer from excessive charges. The need for some form of financial control was even admitted by the industry itself. Accordingly, after a study of the rate regulation practised in America, a set of principles governing the supply of electricity were drafted and appended to the Bill in the form of schedules. Sanction was received for the introduction of this Bill and this Bill was first introduced in 1946 Budget Session and it was by an executive order, circulated for eliciting public opinion. As the House is aware of the political conditions that followed after the Budget Session of 1946, nothing was done with respect to this Bill till in the month of June 1947 when a Conference was called at Simla which was attended by representatives of the electricity supply industry as well as representatives of other interests, including a representative of this Assembly. In that Conference, certain understandings were arrived at. However, as I stated, owing to the constitutional changes, the Bill automatically dropped and it was again introduced in the year 1947 and was referred to the Select Committee.

The Select Committee met in the month of January, first and later on in March of this year. As this Bill was a unique measure in one sense, as it was very complicated, the Government thought it best to give every opportunity to the industrialists concerned. The Select Committee allowed representatives of the Federation of the Electricity undertakings to represent their case, they heard Mr. Manu Subedar, they heard representatives of the Tata Hydro-Electric concerns. I should say that the amendments effected by the Select Committee have gone to a considerable extent to meet the view points both of the industrialists as well as the viewpoints of those who stand for socialism.

The Select Committee, as I said, has made its report four months ago. The object of this Bill has been stated in the preamble as rationalisation of the production and supply of electricity and to secure the development of this industry in this country. The main features in the original draft I want to refer, so that the House may well appreciate the changes that have been made with respect to this important matter. It has been mentioned that a principal feature of the original Bill was the legalising of the constitution of statutory electricity supply boards by the provincial Governments and in consequence, the laying down of a uniform system for the operation of such Boards. It would be noted however that the original Bill was permissive and not mandatory in its provisions relating to the constitution of these Boards by the provincial Government. Provision was also made for the constitution of an advisory body. It was intended that these advisory bodies should advise the board on any matter which the provincial Government thought necessary and on any question which the Board thought fit to refer to them. It was also realised that adequate powers and finances should be provided for the provincial Boards to enable them to fulfil the primary object of the proposed legislation, which were:

- (1) to co-ordinate and stimulate electrical development by technical methods conducive to progressive reduction in the cost of generating electricity;
- (2) to effect a form of financial control over the commercially owned undertakings whereby the investor could be assured of an adequate return, and the industry of adequate capital, and the consumer a rate bearing a definite relation to the cost of the service.

It was evident to give effect to such a programme, fairly adequate powers would have to be provided and adequate freedom of action granted. The original Bill entrusted the Board with many powers, certain of which would enable it to do these things: to erect its own generating station and main transmission lines, to designate certain commercially owned power stations as controlled stations and to extend such stations, for which purpose a loan might, where desirable, be granted to the licensee; to purchase under certain circumstances, generating stations or main transmission lines owned by a licensee on terms which provided reasonable compensation; and to exercise control over the finances of the licensees with a view to effecting appropriate rate regulation.

It should be noted that while the Bill provided the Board with a very substantial measure of control over a licensee's policy and practice in regard to generation and transmission of electricity, it did not attempt to remove his source of revenue, namely, the distribution of electricity to his consumers. The Sixth Schedule to the Bill however endeavoured to ensure that the latter should not be exploited. It is important to emphasize that the powers of acquisition vested in the Board have been provided and are intended for use only in so far as their application would further the rationalization of electric supply. It is very definitely not the intention of this proposed legislation to stimulate indiscriminatory acquisition but it is essential that the Board should be empowered to acquire certain existing assets in the furtherance of its policy.

Speaking very generally, Sir, after its constitution the Board would formulate a scheme for the province, which scheme would provide for the erection of its own generating stations, together with the employment of certain existing stations which latter it would nominate as control stations. The scheme would in all probability provide for the linking of these stations by means of extra-high tension transmission lines, so as to form a provincial grid. Initially, therefore, the Board would not acquire these controlled stations and would not nominally do so until they had been so expanded by the Board for the purposes of the grid that the proportion of the capacity of the station which the licensee required for his own consumers was considerably less than half the total capacity of the station. Even in these circumstances the Board would not necessarily elect to purchase. On the other hand, the implementation of the Board's scheme would mean that certain of the smaller existing generating stations would no longer be necessary due to the mass production of electricity by the Board's stations and its controlled stations. These smaller generating stations would be normally unable to produce electricity at the low cost at which the Board's stations would generate so that from time to time such stations would be closed down and receive their supplies of electricity in bulk from the Board.

It may be mentioned also that when proposals similar to this were first put forward in the United Kingdom considerable apprehension was felt by the operators of generating stations and they demanded and received eventually a guarantee that the cost of the supply given by the Board could not exceed the cost at which they were then generating or would have generated had they increased the capacity of their stations to deal with the new demands.

On the face of it, the demand for such a guarantee appears to be not unreasonable until the implications are carefully considered. Then it is realized that in every instance where such a guarantee is given, it is necessary for purposes of costing that hypothetical generating stations be set up and operated. As a result, the complications which this procedure involved were so great that in some instances a period of three years elapsed before the undertaker's final accounts for a given year could be completed.

A similar mistake should not be repeated in India and for that reason the trading provisions of the Bill are somewhat complicated but they are equitable and they avoid the immeasurable difficulties associated with the above guarantee.

It was not however intended that the Schedules governing the trading provisions should be employed in every circumstance but that they should rather form a background for negotiation. Section 47 of the new Bill gives a Board wide powers to negotiate with licensees on any basis it deems fit, subject only to the provision that undue preference will not be given. Very considerable thought was given in formulating the Schedules to the Bill and any attempt at simplification would only result in inequities to one or the other parties.

Brief mention has been made to the original draft of the Sixth Schedule. It was stressed that a careful study had been made of rate regulation practice in America and elsewhere; but it must be emphasised that the Schedule does not approach in form or in substance American Public Utility Legislation. The Sixth Schedule is, indeed, an entirely new departure and aims at achieving rate regulation by means of legislation rather than through Regulatory Commissions, as is the American method. The principles have aroused considerable interest both here and abroad. The original draft was circulated to all interested parties throughout the country and two well known firms of Chartered Accountants were employed to report upon them. Although many modifications have been made to the draft the fundamental idea behind it has found general acceptance. This idea may be described as the formulation of a Charter to the consumer giving an assurance that the charges for the service will bear a definite relation to the true cost of that service. It has frequently been asked why some simple formula limiting dividends was not employed. The answer is that any such formula to be effective could not be simple. Furthermore, the consumer is not interested in the share capital of the undertaking serving him but rather in the assets provided by that capital and it is only on the basis of those assets that a really effective method of control can be devised.

[Shri N. V. Gadgil]

I now come to some of the amendments effected by the Select Committee. With respect to these, I have six important points which I will briefly summarise.

The first is a new provision. In the original Bill the Central Authority was called the Central Technical Power Board. The Select Committee thought that inasmuch as considerable powers were not given to the Provincial Boards, it was in the fitness of things that there must be a strong Central Authority. The principal amendment recommended by the Select Committee to the Bill is a proposal to constitute a body to be known as the Central Electricity Authority. This proposal is in line with the original suggestion mooted by the sub-Committee of the National Planning Committee which as already mentioned, recommended that in addition to constitution of Provincial Electricity Boards, there should be set up a Central Electricity Board. The original Bill made provision for the employment of a Central Body known as the Central Technical Power Board to undertake certain functions on behalf of the Centre. But this body was a temporary one and the functions assigned to it were extremely limited. The Select Committee felt that a Central organisation should be constituted which could not only carry out the functions assigned to the Central Technical Power Board but also undertake in addition certain other duties. Of these duties, one of the most important is the requirement that the new body should act as an arbitral authority on technical questions arising between a Board and a licensee where provision has been made in the revised legislation for the authority so to act. This new provision will undoubtedly be welcomed by many licensees due to the fact that arbitration by the Authority may reasonably be anticipated to involve the parties in any dispute in much less expenditure, both of time and money, than is the case where all such questions arising out of this Act are referred to arbitration under the Arbitration Act of 1940. Also, since it is proposed that the Authority should be a technical judiciary of a highly specialised nature, it would be more likely to effect just and equitable settlements than any other tribunal.

Now with respect to the Provincial Board and the Regional Advisory Council. The Regional Advisory Council was good but the Select Committee came to the conclusion that it would be better to call it Provincial Electricity Council and to invest it with some greater power. The Select Committee were of the opinion that the original Bill did not provide adequate control over the activities of the Provincial Boards and considered that an Advisory Body should be set up to which the Board should refer major questions of policy for discussion and review. It accordingly suggested that a new advisory body be constituted and called the Provincial Electricity Council. This 4 P.M. would be a permanent provincial body consisting of the members of the Board and nominees of the Provincial government selected after consultation with the representatives of certain specified outside interests.

Then the second important amendment was with respect to the constitution of the Board. The Select Committee recommend that it should be mandatory on Provincial Governments to set up Provincial Electricity Boards within a specified period after the enactment of the Bill.

The House will find that this recommendation has been dissented from by one of the members of the Select Committee. Obviously there is some force in the argument with which the gentleman has differed from the majority conclusion in this respect. But I can assure him that the amendment is so worded that where any province can so recommend and convince the Central Government that any extension of time would be justified that extension would be granted.

The third important amendment is with respect to central taxation. It was considered that Boards should not be exempted from central taxation. His decision is in line with the amendment made to the Damodar Valley Bill in this respect. There has been some difference of opinion with respect to this but if our economy is to proceed on the lines of giving sphere after sphere to autonomous bodies working under the control of Government or working with the Government as both owner and manager, and if we do not tax these autonomous corporations, then nothing will be left for Government. It is possible that there may be some difference of opinion but so far as I am able to see whatever is taken by the Central Government by way of income-tax is returned to the provinces in a certain proportion. In the final analysis it does not make any great change but there is a definite advantage in having these autonomous commercial bodies subject to central taxation, viz., there is a greater possibility that they will work with greater efficiency and more in compliance with commercial principles of management.

The fourth important amendment effected by the Select Committee is with respect to the Depreciation Reserve. The interest rate has been reduced by the Select Committee from 4½ per cent. per annum to 3 per cent. This amendment has been made since it was considered that the interest rate should be more closely allied to the rate at which Boards would be likely to borrow. This is perfectly reasonable.

The fifth important amendment was, under the provisions of the original Bill the Provincial Government was precluded from granting any concession unless the Board itself recommended to it that it would be inexpedient for the Board to develop or use the water power concerned itself. The Select Committee has effected a revision giving initiative to the Provincial Government in deciding as to whether or not a Board is able to use or develop such water power. It was considered that the original Bill provided the Board with unnecessarily wide powers in this respect, so that the charge that the Board may not do itself or would not allow anybody to do is now no longer valid.

The sixth important amendment is with respect to arbitration. Reference has already been made to the constitution of the Central Electricity Authority and to its powers in regard to arbitration under this Bill.

The seventh amendment deals with the first Schedule. As I said this Bill is divided mainly in two parts. One is the sections and the other 8 schedules. Now with respect to the first schedule paragraph 21 of the original Bill referred only to the purchase by the Board of a generating station. The paragraph has been revised by the Select Committee to include the undertaking, where under paragraph 19 notice has been served on a licensee by the Board of its intention to acquire the station and the licensee elects that the Board should purchase his entire undertaking. Where such election is made by a licensee, it is specified that purchase would be effected on the basis of depreciated cost in accordance with the provisions of the Fourth Schedule and not on the basis specified in the licence. This is with respect to what is known as "severance". A part of the concern is satisfactorily acquired and the part that is left is for all purposes useless or cannot be run with profit or can be run at a loss only. In such circumstances it is open to the licensee to insist that the whole thing should be purchased and when it comes up for purchase then it will be purchased at a price on principles not specified in the licence but on the principle of the depreciated cost.

In addition to the consequential amendments necessitated by the Select Committee's modifications in respect of the purchase of undertakings, an amendment has also been made whereby compensation, in the event of purchase, should be determined by the Board after taking into account the fact that a portion only of the undertaking may be acquired. This I have already referred to.

[Shri N. V. Gadgil]

The main schedule in the whole Act is Schedule 6. It lays down the principles of the electricity supply finance. As stated, one of the objects of the Bill is to effect a definite relationship between the rate and the cost of service. For this purpose it is necessary to determine what is the capital base. After taking all relevant factors into consideration and after taking into consideration the representations made and the viewpoints expressed by the various representatives of the industry concerned, the Select Committee has made this recommendation. The Select Committee has made this recommendation. The Select Committee adhered to the view that any distinction it was decided that in arriving at the capital base of an undertaking the amount of debenture and preference share capital should not be deducted. A further important amendment permits the inclusion in the Capital Base of that portion of the accrued depreciation fund which a licensee can show, to the satisfaction of the provincial government cannot be invested in his undertaking. Other amendments to the capital base have been made but are minor in character.

With regard to depreciation the Select Committee have recommended a number of important amendments under this heading as follows:

(a) Plant lives: It is now suggested that in those instances where a licensee considers that he has so maintained his plant that its useful life is substantially in excess of that prescribed, he may apply to the Provincial Government for a suitable variation. This amendment reduces the rigidity of the original provision which might have resulted in hardship in some cases, which were pointed out to the Select Committee by some of the representatives of the industry concerned.

Under the Advisory Board's draft, until arrears of depreciation were fully written off, dividends payable were restricted to 3 per cent. The Select Committee now recommends that arrears may be equated over the remainder of the prescribed lives of the assets and, that if the annual instalments in respect of such arrears are provided for, there need be no such restriction on dividends paid.

One important recommendation in this connection has been made by the Select Committee. The Advisory Board's draft made it mandatory on licensees to employ compound interest method of depreciation accounting. The Select Committee felt, however, that where licensees had been employing the straight-line method in the past, it would be reasonable to permit such licensees to continue to employ the latter method and so avoid the complications which a changeover would entail.

Another principle which is incorporated in this is the standard rate. The Select Committee has after careful consideration rejected the recommendations of the Advisory Board and has reverted to a form of standard rate even simpler than that appearing in the original draft of the Schedule. The suggested rate of 5 per cent. happens to be identical with the one recommended by the Federal Power Commission in the U.S.A. for American electricity supply undertakings.

Clear Profit has also been defined and some change has been made in the original draft. The original draft of the Schedule recommended that the Standard Rate should be subject to tax and this principle was endorsed by the Advisory Board. The Select Committee, however, recommends that income-tax should be treated as an item of expenditure, which is the normal practice in this country under the Income-tax procedure. In revising the Standard Rate the Select Committee took this factor into account.

[At this stage Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair, which was then occupied by Shri K. Santhanam (one of the Panel of Chairmen)].

The Select Committee has made certain amendments to provide for a reasonable margin of error on the part of a licensee in the adjustment of his rates. As the House must have seen this measure is a very complicated measure. So it is possible that some error may creep in. And experts make more mistakes than laymen. The Select Committee has therefore provided for a reasonable margin of error on the part of a licensee in the adjustment of his rates.

Under the new provisions he cannot benefit from any excess of Clear Profit over Reasonable Return, if this excess should amount to more than a specified percentage of the Reasonable Return.

Another principle which is embodied in Schedule VI and which has been amended by the Select Committee relates to the Managing Agents' Commission. Under the original draft, Managing Agents' Commission was to be computed on the "net profits" of the undertaking as defined in the Indian Companies Act. The Advisory Board, however, preferred that the computation should be made on "clear profit" as defined in the Bill. The Select Committee, however, has reverted to "net profit" but has accepted the Advisory Board's recommendations in regard to percentages. As a result, Managing Agents will be entitled to earn rather more than would have been the case under the provisions suggested by the Advisory Board. But the increase is not considerable.

Now, as I stated in the beginning I will give a brief overall picture of the Bill. Apart from the proposed constitution of a Central Body to be known as the Central Electricity Authority and the recommendation that Provincial Electricity Councils should be set up, the main body of the Bill itself still remains fundamentally unchanged. The most important new feature is undoubtedly that whereby it is now mandatory on Provincial Governments to set up a Board within a specified period unless the Central Government otherwise directs. The trading provisions have been altered only in minor detail and the outstanding features of the revised Bill—apart from the Sixth and Seventh Schedules—may, therefore, said to be almost identical with those which appeared in the original draft. The main purpose of the Bill also, namely, the legalising of the constitution of Provincial Electricity Boards and all that the setting up of these Boards would entail, remains as heretofore.

It will be realised that distances in India obviously rule out the possibility of a nation-wide Grid system, such as is already in existence in many small countries abroad. For this reason Provincial Boards were recommended in order that a manageable area of territory could be controlled by a body which would be free from the procedural complications of the day-to-day administration of Government Departments. The modern trend in utility legislation, whether concerned with electricity, harbours or transportation, etc., is veering towards the Statutory Board idea, that is, quasi state-ownership rather than departmental administration. This is happening because there would appear to be little prospect of public ownership matching the efficiency of private enterprise unless the agency responsible can be left largely autonomous in respect of its own technical, administrative and financial affairs. Accordingly, wide powers have been asked for these Boards and these powers must not be unduly curtailed if success is to be achieved. While private enterprise voices the claim that it is more efficient than Government ownership, it cannot maintain that its record in this country in regard to rural electrical development is impressive. This is understandable because rural electrification must be subsidised in one form or another. In totalitarian countries the question has been treated as one of strategic importance in the same manner as military highways and the cost has been spread over the entire nation. In an advanced capitalist country like the U.S.A., it has been achieved to a certain extent due to the high average income of the rural community, but even so, large subsidies in the form of low-interest loans have been provided by the Government. In the Province of Ontario, Canada, a subsidy as high as 50 per cent. has been advanced towards the cost of non-remunerative rural lines.

Provincial Electricity Boards, however, will not suffer from the "shareholder handicap" associated with undertakings operated by private enterprise and will accordingly be able to take a much longer view. It is confidently anticipated therefore that rural electrification will make rapid strides during the decade immediately following the construction of these Boards and probably no other single factor is of greater consequence to the standard of life of the rural community than is this.

While the main body of the Bill has been subjected to few alterations, the financial section, namely the Sixth and Seventh Schedules have been modified considerably from time to time. It will be appreciated that, unlike the rest of the Bill, no legal precedent is in existence to act as a guide and accordingly the greatest care has had to be exercised to ensure that in the quest for both equity and uniformity no undue hardship would ensue to any individual licensee.

The final draft of the Sixth Schedule while apparently differing from the original draft still retains the same fundamental structure the objects of which were, and still are, to relate charges for electricity to the cost of the product, to ensure adequate capital for development at reasonable rates and to enforce a scale of plant depreciation and thereby safeguard the assets of the undertaking.

Only the method of achieving these ends has been altered—not the ends themselves. The principal feature is still the Capital (Base—or Block). This Block represents the depreciated cost of the assets employed in affording service to the consumer and is used for ascertaining the reward to which the shareholder is legally entitled. The shareholder cannot therefore earn a return on capital provided by him unless the capital has been devoted to the provision of assets for service to the consumer. Nor can the shareholder benefit from "profiteering" on the part of the licensee because his reward is limited to the amount represented by applying a fixed annual percentage to the Capital Base. If excess profits are made, these are not given to the shareholder but returned to the consumer.

The above describes in brief the main features and functions of the Sixth Schedule. It will be noted that the main Bill makes provision for the enforcement of the Sixth Schedule in all Provinces immediately on the enactment of the Bill irrespective as to whether a Board is constituted in the Province or not.

In conclusion it may be stated that the Bill offers all the advantages of nationalization without the main disadvantage, namely, the very heavy financial outlay required by the State. The provisions of the Bill will also enable acquisition on behalf of the State to be selective in that Boards will tend to acquire only up-to-date plant—old and obsolete stations being gradually shut down without requiring any outlay.

The State therefore will exercise its powers of acquisition only as and when public interest so dictates, whereas nationalization would necessitate the purchase of all assets irrespective of their condition and service value. It is thought that advantages of this arrangement at the present time when capital is needed for so many other projects of national importance need hardly be stressed; and that the results will fully justify the confidence of the House in this Bill.

This is the overall picture. *

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to say anything more. I find from the Order Paper innumerable amendments, as usual tabled by my honourable friend Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad. If he is able to convince me that some of them are really necessary to bring out the real intention of the Bill I will accept them. I do hope that he will cooperate with me in saving the time of the House to the greatest possible extent.

Mr. Chairman: Motion moved:

"That the Bill to provide for the rationalisation of the production and supply of electricity, and generally for taking measures conducive to the electrical development of the Provinces of India, as reported by the Select Committee, be taken into consideration."

Shri B. Das (Orissa: General): Sir, I congratulate the Honourable Minister for Works, Mines and Power on his very elucidating speech whereby he has defined the Government attitude about nationalisation, the Government attitude about acquisition of industry, and also the Government attitude in regard to the electrical industry. When my honourable friend made that statement about nationalisation which involves heavy commitments of finance, the exponents of nationalisation in this House—my honourable friends Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar and Prof. Ranga—were so busy in whisperings that they did not appreciate the wise decision that Government have taken and over which they have carried on a historic battle since last November.

Sir, last November I had not the opportunity to address this House on this Bill because I unfortunately went into the Select Committee. My honourable friends who sit in the front bench. Prof. Ranga and Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, started the bug-bear of nationalization. The Assembly met for the first time after freedom was won and my friends saw that was the proper occasion for them to think of nationalization even by expropriation when that was not the question. The draft Bill which I and you—we were all Members of the Select Committee, including Mr. Ayyangar—prepared suggested what was a proper course. Sir, that historic struggle went on. The Select Committee which at one time we thought would meet for a month, went on for months and over the vexed questions of nationalization by expropriation. Thank God, in the end rationalism won and we drafted a unanimous Bill barring one minute of dissent, over which my friends from Madras have legitimate reasons: and I am glad the Honourable Minister has assured today that even Madras will be given facilities as I won in that Select Committee for Orissa and Assam.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Madras: General): We have nationalized electricity in Madras.

Shri B. Das: You have? I am very glad to hear from my honourable friend Prof. Ranga that he has nationalized it. I hope thereby he has achieved the welfare of the people and increased the national income of the people—not of the classes but of the masses!

Prof. N. G. Ranga: We have done it fifteen years ago.

Shri B. Das: Sir, it was unfortunate from my friends' view points that this Bill was not a nationalized Bill, but it is a national Bill. It was unfortunate that the whole past history was repeated, the political history of India where members differed so much in political conception and outlook and fought the battle of nationalization on this particular Bill where those words ought not to have been uttered.

Already my honourable friend the Minister has told us that Provinces will be given facilities to develop. Sir, the Chairman, the Honourable Dr. Ambedkar, is not here. He came to the rescue of a poor man like me and said that a Province like Orissa with a total capacity of electric power at about 3,000 K. W., need not start an Electricity Board, with three or four people with salaries running to Rs. 3,000 or 4,000, and the necessary paraphernalia. But I do hope that what was at that time thought to be a concession to the Provinces of Orissa and Assam, will also be extended to Madras and the Province of Madras will have special treatment from the hands of the Government of India as Madras has got definite grievances against the Government of India and even against this Bill

Sir, I am glad that the bug-bear of socialism that all industries should be nationalized and that then those industries would not pay any income-tax, is lying buried a thousand fathoms deep. The Government decision that industries, barring the Railways and the Posts & Telegraphs, when they become nationalized will pay income-tax just as any private industry is very welcome. Otherwise Professor Ranga will not be able even to criticise that Ministry for by that time it will have passed through bankruptcy if his advice is accepted.

I am a little bit alarmed;—not at the framing of this Bill, this Bill I whole-heartedly endorse, but at the way that since we attained freedom on 15th August, the number of Government advisers have increased in the shape of Technical Boards, Scientific Boards and Electricity Boards. A time will come when the Cabinet will have difficulty to fight with all these Boards that they have created, and all their experts; these experts see near their nose, they do not see any distance; they want everything to be scientifically designed. But who is to foot the Bill? It is the tax-payer; it is Professor Ranga's multitudes of kisans and mazdoors. We will have to foot the bill. By that time all of us will be reduced to kisans and mazdoors! And how to meet that huge expenditure with the various plans inspired by Government experts, call them electricity experts, technical experts or scientific experts, which they are bringing forward? I warn this House, I warn my honourable colleagues here that they must keep a strict eye on the Government so that the Government is not swamped under this huge avalanche of expert Boards and technical Boards costing more than the Government themselves!

It pleased me very much that my honourable friend Mr. Gadgil quoted the instance of Canada and said that Canada has been giving subsidies for rural development of electricity. I believe that is an indication—that is why I remarked that Professor Ranga did not listen to it—of the Government of India that they will give subsidy to Provinces to develop rural electricity all over. Of course my friend the Minister did not make it positive but he quoted and he says that is the intention. I hope he will clarify it and when the Bill goes successfully through, he will make it clear that it is the Government's intention to finance the Provincial Governments for subsidizing rural electricity development.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: The Mysore Government as well as the Madras Government are doing it. They are charging specially low rates for electricity used for agriculture.

Shri B. Das: I always take my cap off—I have no hat now—to the Madras Government for their beneficent government and beneficent ideas. And Mysore is always forward in methods of development. I hope the Government of India will copy all that. Unfortunately, no Madras expert is fit enough to be in the C.W.I.N.C.; that is a thing which I ask my Madras friends to examine: why is it that engineers from Mysore and Madras are not to be found in the C.W.I.N.C. and other places? When it is an all-India show why are they not there? (Interruption). I do hope, Sir, that we should learn to weigh and measure the ideas of experts. (Interruption).

Mr. Chairman: I suggest the honourable member should keep to the Bill and not talk about general questions.

Shri B. Das: Very well, Sir. I do hope that when my friends on the left wish to bring in any nationalisation measure, they would bring a whole-hearted nationalisation measure.

Shri H. V. Kamath (C. P. and Berar: General): Is this not a nationalisation measure?

Shri B. Das: This is a national measure, not a nationalisation measure. So, Sir, I am glad that everything has ended happily and I hope my friendship with Mr. Ayyangar and Prof. Ranga will be further strengthened in future. With these few remarks I support the Bill.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): Sir, I never did expect that my friend Mr. Das would wait to cement our friendship until the Electricity Bill came. We have been friends, but by his speech he has disturbed our friendship a little. I never wanted to participate in the discussion, but after what he has said, I think it is necessary that the Assembly should fully realise what it is that we are passing. He is hallooing before he is out of the woods. We do want electricity. Power is one of the most important factors in the modern world for industrialisation. In our country, hitherto the only Act that was governing the setting up of various Corporations for generating and distributing electricity was a Central Act passed in 1912. In some cases, the Provincial Governments themselves took charge of the production of electricity and its distribution. For instance, in Madras 90 per cent. of the production is carried on by the Government itself from water power and distribution is also undertaken by the Government in most cases. In the other cases, in the whole of India small Corporations licensed for a number of years with power to renew or power to cancel have been established under that Act. Those Corporations were given an area of operation. Both generation and distribution were entrusted to them. Government had the control to the small extent of regulating the maximum price that they could charge per unit from the consumer. But what these Corporations did was to take away the cream of income from the public and not contribute even a little or a farthing to the expansion of power to rural areas. Corporations were easily established in towns and in towns for lighting and other purposes they were charging at the rate of 4 annas per unit whereas under the terms of licence they were obliged to supply power for agricultural and industrial purposes at the rate of 9 pies per unit. Therefore, these Corporations always concentrated their efforts only in cities where on account of lighting they would get the largest portion of income, but they tried least to get into the villages and giving power to lift up water from wells and so on.

Now, so far as the Madras Government is concerned they took up both generation and distribution in their own hands. The Bombay Government, however, wanted to establish a Corporation under which a number of generating stations would be set up wherever there was none (within an area of operation of a generating station). Some other stations which are already generating, if their generation is not economical, might be taken and may be made as controlled stations. Thus, they wanted to take electric power to the very door of agriculturists. Large volume of opposition came up from vested interests. They wanted that no such Corporations should be established; there ought to be no control over them and even if a Corporation should be established for establishing generating stations the power should be given in their hands and they would distribute; no distribution should be undertaken by any of these Corporations. They fought a hard battle, not in one place not in the plains but in hills also. It was a hard fight and I am sorry that we had to succumb to some extent. We did not go the whole hog. At last this Bill was sought to be introduced a long time ago but was held up from being passed by the Assembly. The Bombay Government would not have come up here at all.

Electric supply is purely a provincial subject under the existing constitution but the incorporation of private companies or corporations is a Central subject. It is only to avoid this technical difficulty that they approached the Centre with a scheme for having an autonomous corporation under which a number of generating stations could be established. This was moved by the Bombay Government and on that move this Bill has been introduced.

Now, Sir, I am not in favour of applying this Bill compulsorily to all Provinces. Take, for instance, Madras. Wherever the Government has not by itself undertaken the generation of electricity and distribution, it should be open to the Provincial Governments to establish Corporations, but there is no meaning in establishing an autonomous Corporation when already 90 per cent. of the power is being generated by the Government and the proceeds are going to the Government. I certainly have to condemn that clause in the Bill which makes it obligatory on even those Governments which have already started and are running very well. I am proud to say that the Madras Presidency scheme of generation and distribution is working exceedingly well. It is a model for others to copy. My friend from Orissa who is a beginner in this matter need not be jealous of our progress.

Shri B. Das: I thought I paid you a compliment.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: It was a left-handed compliment. There is no wonder that we have made enormous progress not only in this direction, but many other directions. What I am submitting is this that here in Clause 1 you have the provision:

"This section and sections 3, 4, 57, 58 and 77 and the Sixth Schedule and the Table appended to the Seventh Schedule of this Act shall come into force at once.

The remaining provisions of this Act shall come into force in a Province on such date, not later than two years from the coming into operation of the sections, Schedule and Table mentioned in sub-section (3) as the Provincial Government may by notification in the Official Gazette appoint."

The original Bill did not impose an obligation on the Provincial Governments. My complaint is that it should be open to the Provincial Government to apply or not to apply any provision which insists or which directs the establishment of autonomous Corporations. There is no need for a Corporation in Madras. They are doing it exceedingly well. Somehow, the Central Government thought that various things ought to be done only with the aid of Corporations. For instance, the Damodar Valley Corporation. Damodar Valley Corporation is after all a child, which has not begun to crawl and to make that as an example for the rest of the country to follow is not proper, especially in a case like Madras where the Government is able to manage it by itself. It is from electricity that the slender resources of the Madras Government are being supplemented. In another matter also, they have set up a model for the rest of the country. They have taken up the Transport Services and are trying to build it up. These are the various ways in which I would advise other Provincial Governments to copy Madras, so that when they embark on some commercial enterprises they can replenish and find sufficient money for starting various nation-building services. In my own part of the country, Madras Presidency, they have introduced Prohibition and that takes away a large portion of the revenues—to the extent of Rs. 16 crores. Under these circumstances, in a matter where the Government itself is carrying on this business of producing and supplying electricity without any complaint and is expanding with all its resources, what is the meaning of compelling that province to start an autonomous Corporation? After all, who are those persons? Three are to be appointed by Government on full-time and four are to be part-time. I do not see much difference. Even in a Province which feels helpless except through autonomous Corporation of this kind, there ought to be no compulsion.

I have now tabled an amendment and I am sure my honourable friend will agree with me and accept this amendment.

My friend Mr. Das may also, in so far as a province is able to help itself, not object. Let him not be afraid of the word 'nationalisation'. Let him use any word, but after all it is not as if we are out to leave nothing for the rich man in this country. Every institution in this country, whether already in existence or which comes into existence, the only test for its need or our support for that institution is how far it conduces to the benefit of the common masses. All institutions, whether a bank, an industrial concern or any other concern depends ultimately upon the consumer's support. He is the paymaster. He is the employer of employers. All the others are employees. Therefore, it is wrong to condemn it even in cases where nationalisation or State ownership has proved successful. It is such supporters or advocates of private enterprise who are spoiling the cause of private enterprise also.

I admit this is a compromise in so far as the Provincial Government wants the help of an Indian Corporation, wants private enterprise to go on on account of slackness of its sinews that it will not be immediately able to take up these enormous works throughout the length and breadth of the province. There is room for private enterprise; there is room for the establishment of corporations; there is room for the State itself directly undertaking these enterprises and after all nationalisation is not such a bug-bear. In our country we have not got highly industrialized men. We have seen that after the Finance Minister came here, a lot of concessions have been given. We were prepared to tax ourselves to the hilt; still our industrialists have not progressed; no new industries have been started and they do not allow the Government to start the industry. That is an unfortunate position. Under these circumstances I believe if our friends persist like this, the only solution for all our evils is 'an out and out nationalisation'. Therefore, let us not quarrel with that. There is room for all enterprises, national, through corporation and through private enterprise. Let there be cut-throat competition amongst them. This Bill, I am glad to say effects a kind of co-ordination between the several activities. It does not do away with private enterprise. In the various conferences a lot of indulgence was given to a number of these magnates who were in charge of electric supply; they would neither allow progress nor would allow public enterprise to progress.

Take for instance the city of Bombay. Tatas are supplying power. There is another company which is supplying power for the ordinary household purposes; Tatas has been given an over-riding power to supply within the area of the license over a particular bulk. They are enjoying all these concessions. But when Government agrees to supply power in Ahmedabad for a particular quantity the private proprietor says: "No, no. The Government shall not have any truck with us. I would rather allow the present person who is enjoying the benefit and the Government ought not to come in." Why should there be difference between the rich man and the poor man in this country? The rich men should feel that this is his own Government. It is disgusting to see these people going about saying as if the whole world only lives for these rich men. Let them come from the seventh storey to the third storey. Let the poor man be raised from a hovel. I would humbly beseech my honourable friend, Mr. B. Das to change his colour and change his coat as early as he can. Both of us are neither capitalists nor poor fellows, but he takes up the cause of the capitalists. Therefore, I would humbly request him not to overstrain in this matter. We have yielded to you and my honourable friend Mr. Das will have to compromise lest this Bill should be torpedoed. I shall be extremely glad if you will allow some national enterprise to live so that they may progress. Let three horses run side by side, private enterprise, work through a Corporation, and state enterprise. Let us wait and see which one will prove ultimately beneficial to the public, let there be a kind of healthy co-operation and healthy competition. I appeal to my honourable friend Mr. Gadgil to agree to my amendment which I and Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari have together tabled, to impose this obligation of establishing a Corporation. Corporation is a child of yesterday; somebody put it into the minds of some of our friends in the Cabinet and they immediately jumped at the word 'Corporation'. If individuals are available for corporation, they can be easily available for State. I am not able to see why one set of persons cannot work in the other. The question of service must appeal to their sense of loyalty and patriotism and to contribute all their might to the growth of the nation and its wealth. With that exception, I would support the earlier portion, the first introductory chapter.

I have got some observations to make in respect of the imposition of income-tax over the profits of any such enterprise. I am afraid this is a retrograde step. All the magnates from Bombay, the electric supplying Corporations, all were insistent on one thing: They said: "Do not make a difference between private enterprise and public enterprise". In public enterprise there is a sense of security for employees and they are not niggardly and they cater more to serve the country. Any public utility service must primarily address itself to the service aspect of its activity. In a private enterprise the man who is in charge of that enterprise will be more anxious about the profit and that motive will actuate him. Therefore, what they wanted was to make it impossible for public enterprise to thrive; they wanted to impose income-tax upon the profits of this corporation so that with their small establishment, small over-head charges and small pay to their employees and no provident fund for the employees, they can save a lot of money; living in a small room they carry on the business and make crores of rupees. They expect also a corporation with its over-head charges to reduce the charges and come to the same level. Insidiously they put this clause so that no corporation can work successfully and the next day they can say: "This is the way public enterprise has gone to the wall." I am really surprised that the Central Government should be anxious to impose income-tax upon these. My Honourable friend's explanation is that what is given by one hand is taken away by the other and that under the Government of India Act the income-tax is shared between the Centre and the Provinces, but after all it is shared.

In my part, I do not know what the Hindi name for this is, we call it 'Avul'—fried rice. One boy suggested to the other: "You bring fried rice; I will bring husk; we will mix them up and both of us will eat." Why do you tax profits in a particular area, an enterprise which is carried out by the Government successfully and bring it to the pool of the Central Government?"

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri (Assam: General): Does the honourable member refer to Chera or muri?

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Although we come from East or West, North or South, our sentiments are the same and our stories are the same.

I am glad my honourable friend Mr. Chaudhuri now feels that there is no difference between a Madras and an Assamese and it does not matter: the secretariat does not consist of Assamese officers; therefore I am as much a representative of Assam as he is a representative of Madras. After all this is a novel experiment that is being made. Instead of the Central Government giving subsidies, they are trying to impose a curb upon the activities of the provincial Government.

The third point is, how far is this Bill going to carry electricity to the very doors of the agriculturists. That must be the main object of the Bill. It is not with a view to make the rich man richer, or to make the ordinary lamps, the mercury lamps or the incandescent lights that this institution should come into existence. My friend Mr. B. Das says, all right, you give a subsidy from the Centre. This money also comes from the tax payer. There is another argument for nationalisation. It takes a long lead to distribute power in the village; but in the cities there is not much lead from one house to another and the Corporation goes on earning. In Ahmedabad or Bombay, whatever profit is earned, if it is in the hands of the Government or a corporation, the earnings will be distributed over rural areas. After all, it may not be economic to take a long distance lead in the villages and erect long transmission lines. To induce the agriculturists you have to reduce the charges also. My friend does not appreciate the difficulty. This corporation with its limitations will have to take up only the supply of electricity in the rural areas and I may assure you that it is not going to work at a profit. The existing corporations in Ahmedabad and Bombay, the Nixons and Tatas have got vested interests; they will walk away with all the cream and leave the dross to us. Why should the rich man walk away with all the profits and throw the burden on the Government. I am not at the moment addressing myself to nationalisation. If it is good, let us not hesitate to nationalise it; but if private enterprise is better, let us go in for it.

I was in the Conference along with Mr. Manu Subedar.

An Honourable Member: Which conference?

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: At the Simla Conference. We had already prepared a Bill. They wanted to give opportunities to all interests to make representations. They came in a huge body and physically they would have thrown us out of Simla. What they said was, leave all our enterprises to ourselves; do not interfere with us. They even went to the length of saying, you shall not even sell small articles which are necessary accessories. It is their conviction that the whole country exists for these gentlemen. They said, the moment the State even for its own purposes starts to deal in accessories, to that extent their reserves have been encroached. This mentality ought to go. It appears some friends think as though we are all wedded lock stock and barrel to these gentlemen, to make the rich people richer. The sooner we get rid of such an unhealthy state of affairs, the better would it be in our own interests. I am sorry that those persons who are in charge of the administration are not putting their heart and soul into this matter; otherwise, we should have nationalised all industries by now. The old bureaucratic system is still there and it does not allow to do things nor would it itself do.

An Honourable Member: The Minister has to hear this.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: The Minister will hear.

As regards the other portion of the chapter, the chapter on profits, we wanted to rationalise, that is wherever there are private enterprises, we wanted them not to charge exorbitant rates and we wanted to control them. We suggested that the managing agents should not receive more than a certain remuneration. With respect to capital, we fixed the capital and wanted to allow a certain rate upon the capital at charge. The rate was fixed at 2 per cent. over the loan rate, that is the redemption rate of the Government of India loans. They used to get 5 per cent. We sent for the balance sheets and the profit and loss accounts of the various companies and you will be surprised to know that these companies had made a profit of 22 per cent. upon their share capital. Unfortunately, all the papers are in their hands, the whole platform is in their hands, and they go about saying that they are the injured persons. The poor man goes to the wall and the deep sea. We have decided that a flat rate may be given in the initial stages; as we go on gathering experience. I am sure that rate may be reduced if they are found to make excessive profits.

There is another point. This Bill makes a provision that wherever available, water power shall be the exclusive property of the State. I ask my friends whether this is not a reasonable thing. They wanted to have some share in water power also and said, before you make a survey, you must tell us. This kind of claim they put forward before the Select Committee and at the Conference. I am taking some time of the House for the purpose of drawing the attention of the honourable members to every one of the items. It may be, we have private enterprise along with public enterprise. In the initial stages, public enterprise may not be able to supply power as cheaply as private enterprise. If today, the Bombay or the Ahmedabad Corporation wants to compete with a public corporation, they have got enormous resources and they can afford to throw the other out of the field altogether. What we can do is we should restrict the quantum of dividend that they are entitled to get.

There is one other consideration. Electricity unlike other industries is a monopoly. Within the area of operation, it works under a licence and others are excluded. There is absolutely nothing like competition within the same area. When we fixed the particular rate, they said these rates were low; we said you get these rates willy-nilly, and there is no competition. Further this is public utility service and we cannot afford to pay enormously to keep these private enterprises going on.

Therefore, I commend this Bill, though not whole-heartedly; this is the best that we can do in the circumstances. I only wanted a modification that wherever a province has been generating electricity and carrying on the work departmentally, it ought not to be interfered with, and no corporation should be forced upon that province against its will. When the Bill comes up for discussion clause by clause, I will make my submission. I support the motion for the consideration of the Bill.

Mr. Chairman: The House stands adjourned till 10-45 A.M. tomorrow.

The Assembly then adjourned till a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock on Tuesday, the 10th August, 1948.

WHITE PAPER ON HYDERABAD

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel (Minister for Home, Information and Broadcasting and the States): With your permission, Sir, I lay before the House a White Paper* on Hyderabad.

Honourable members will have followed in the Press the course of the long and protracted negotiations between the Government of India and the Nizam's Government. They are already aware of the terms on which negotiations were based; and they also know why these negotiations were unsuccessful. To understand the problem of Hyderabad however it is necessary not only to have a knowledge of the events as they took place from day to day, but also correctly to appraise the background against which the negotiations were conducted. In the White Paper which I have placed before the House therefore, an attempt has been made to present in their proper setting all the various problems, geographical, historical, economic and others, that govern the situation. All material not strictly necessary for this purpose has been excluded and the appendices comprise essential documents only. There has been a considerable amount of correspondence between the Nizam's Government and the Government of India on the various issues, and it is intended to publish this correspondence separately very soon.

The Paper before you will make it clear that the Government of India have done everything in their power to reach a friendly and amicable settlement. Indeed, in their anxiety to secure goodwill and avoid all cause of bitterness, Government were willing to make concessions to the Nizam which they would have found it difficult to justify to Rulers of other Indian States who have so readily acceded to the Indian Union. It causes me great regret that all our friendliness and desire for goodwill have been frustrated by the negative attitude of the Nizam and his Government. It must be a source of profound concern to all of us that those in control of affairs in Hyderabad should have found it necessary to shape their policies more and more to suit the wishes of a bellicose and rabidly communal organisation which shrinks from no crime to maintain its ascendancy in the State.

The failure of Sir Mirza Ismail's recent efforts undertaken at the instance of the Nizam is another proof of the utterly unhelpful and hostile attitude of the Nizam and his Government and of their determined opposition to all proposals for a friendly settlement. In a recent statement, Mir Laik Ali, the Prime Minister of Hyderabad has presaged a five year period of turmoil throughout the length and breadth of India. One would normally ignore wishful thinking of this kind and I am referring to it here merely because this statement shows the line of thought that is animating those who guide the destinies of Hyderabad at the moment. Mir Laik Ali's hopes will be completely falsified, but one cannot stress too often the vital need for eliminating the communal virus from the body politic; and I therefore take this opportunity to appeal, with all the earnestness I am capable of, to all sections of the country not to be led away by propaganda of this kind but to stand solidly by the Government.

*Printed as Appendix to the day's Debates—Ed. of D.

[Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel]

Sir, the attitude of Government is clear and definite. An independent Hyderabad pursuing its own policies is a standing threat to the progress and prosperity, indeed to the very existence of the Indian Union. Accession and responsible Government are the only solution—accession which will bring Hyderabad within the ambit of all-India policy on the essential subjects of Defence, External Affairs and Communications, and which at the same time preserves the internal autonomy of the State in other matters. There can be no compromise about this, for compromise will mean suicide.

Meanwhile, the internal situation inside Hyderabad is rapidly deteriorating and the depredations of the Razakars on our borders is taxing our patience increasingly. I may not attempt to put any gloss on the seriousness of the situation. It is causing Government a very great deal of anxiety. But honourable members may rest assured that we are watching the situation very carefully and that we are well prepared to meet all possible eventualities. I would have liked to tell the House something more definite, but I am sure the House will appreciate that it would be unwise to disclose our policy and plan in advance. I can only ask the House to trust us and assure honourable members that we shall not be found wanting.

Shri H. V. Kamath (C.P. and Berar: General): May I request the Speaker to make arrangements for the early distribution of the White Paper to the members?

Mr. Speaker: They will be distributed tonight.

Mr. Tajamul Husain (Bihar: Muslim). Will the Government.....

Mr. Speaker: No questions on the Statement.

Mr. Tajamul Husain: I only want to raise a point. Will the Government consider the desirability of having a debate on a day on this secretly in the House?

Mr. Speaker: That point was disposed of yesterday.

ELECTION TO CENTRAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE OF NATIONAL CADET CORPS

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh (Minister for Defence): Sir, I move:

"That this Assembly do proceed to elect, in such manner as the Honourable the Speaker may direct, two members to serve on the Central Advisory Committee of the National Cadet Corps in accordance with Section 12 of the National Cadet Corps Act, 1948."

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That this Assembly do proceed to elect, in such manner as the Honourable the Speaker may direct, two members to serve on the Central Advisory Committee of the National Cadet Corps in accordance with Section 12 of the National Cadet Corps Act, 1948."

The motion was adopted.

ELECTION TO CENTRAL COMMITTEE OF TUBERCULOSIS ASSOCIATION OF INDIA

The Honourable Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee (Minister for Industry and Supply): Sir, I beg to move:

"That this Assembly do proceed to elect, in such manner as the Honourable the Speaker may direct, two persons from among their numbers to sit on the Central Committee of the Tuberculosis Association of India."

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That this Assembly do proceed to elect, in such manner as the Honourable the Speaker may direct, two persons from among their numbers to sit on the Central Committee of the Tuberculosis Association of India."

The motion was adopted.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari (Madras: General): May I ask the Honourable Minister what the Industry and Supply Ministry has to do with the Tuberculosis Association?

The Honourable Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee: I have moved this on behalf of the Honourable Minister for Health.

Mr. Speaker: I have to inform honourable members that the following dates have been fixed for receiving nominations and holding elections, if necessary, in connection with the following Committees, namely:

	Date for Nomination	Date for election
Central Advisory Committee of the National Cadet Corps.	12-8-48.	16-8-48.
Central Committee of the Tuber- culosis Association of India.

The nominations for these Committees will be received in the Notice Office upto 12 Noon on the date mentioned for the purpose. The elections, which will be conducted by means of the single transferable vote, will be held in the Assistant Secretary's Room (No. 21) in the Council House between the hours 10-30 A.M. and 1 P.M.

ELECTRICITY (SUPPLY) BILL—contd.

Mr. Speaker: We may now proceed with the legislative business, further consideration of the motion moved by the Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil yesterday, namely:

That the Bill to provide for the rationalisation of the production and supply of electricity and generally for taking measures conducive to the electrical development of the Provinces of India, as reported by the Select Committee, be taken into consideration.

Shri K. Santhanam (Madras: General): Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege of serving on the Select Committee on this Bill, and I have no doubt that from the point of view of the future of India, this is one of the most important and constructive Bills that have been introduced in this legislature. It is also a very difficult and complicated Bill, especially in the schedules. The Select Committee went through every clause with great trouble and have tried to put them in a manner conducive to the progress of electrification in this country.

Sir, I regret that the actual contents of the Bill have been to some extent misrepresented by the two speakers before me.

[Shri K. Santhanam]

My honourable friend Mr. Das contended that this Bill had nothing to do with nationalisation and said something about its being a national Bill, while Mr. Ayyangar contended that somehow the question of nationalisation had been compromised by this Bill. I do not think that either statement is correct. I will try to summarise the principles of this Bill as briefly as possible. The first principle adopted in this Bill is that all future electricity undertakings should be undertaken by the State, and it is only where the State for any reason is either unable or unwilling to take it up that it may give it to private industry and on such conditions as it likes, with a proviso that it may be resumed by the State whenever it likes. The second principle of the Bill is that all the existing electricity undertakings may be immediately controlled and when they are not working satisfactorily they can be purchased by the boards to be set up. The third principle is that to the extent that private enterprise is allowed to run electricity undertakings they shall run them on the principle of public utilities and not as private undertakings.

These are the three fundamental principles adopted so far as electrification is concerned and I suggest that it is not possible for any State to go further in the attempt to nationalise any industry. These are the essential basic principles which have to be adopted when we want to nationalise any industry, specially with the limited resources at our disposal. It was suggested that the setting up of a board somehow detracted from the principle of nationalisation. The provisions of the Bill show that the board is to consist of not less than three and not more than seven members appointed by the provincial Government and all members of the board shall be full-time members. This will be as much a national authority as a High Court or a civil court or any organ of the provincial Government. There is to be no representation of any kind of private interests. And all the members will not only be appointed by the provincial Government; the board as a body shall be subject to the directions of the provincial Government in all matters of policy. Sir, I suggest that under this constitution it is an absolutely national board and I do not think any further step is to be taken for nationalisation. I do not think it is correct to say that departmental management of industry is a better form of nationalisation than management under a separate authority. What are the British Government doing? They have set up a separate Coal Board, they have put up a separate transport authority, they have set up separate Electricity Commissioners. Then again even in America when they wanted to start a national undertaking they established a Tennessee Valley Authority. These democratic Governments knew what nationalisation meant; they knew that these industrial undertakings should not be left to the vagaries of ministerial changes. Ministries may change, and changing Ministers may have changing policies; but the day to day administration of industrial undertakings should be continuous and should not be disturbed by political considerations. It is on that sound principle that nationalisation in this country should proceed and unless that principle is adopted in this country all talk of nationalisation will be moonshine. Industries will be started by one ministry and as soon as the ministry is changed it will be scrapped by another ministry. I think it is a very unsound principle to take up industries and nationalise them and run them as departmental concerns. Therefore it is in the interest of nationalisation of electricity that this Bill has been conceived and the Select Committee has tried to adopt it only from that standpoint.

Then, Sir, it may be asked why the Bill did not start with a complete taking over of all the private interests. Those who have studied the facts about electrification in this country tell us that we are not even infants in the matter of electrification. The per capita consumption of electricity in India is only 10.5 units, and the corresponding figures are 806 for the United Kingdom and 1540 for the U.S.A.

An Honourable Member. is it per annum?

Shri K. Santhanam: I am not sure about that but I think it is so.

The U.S.S.R. has 300 units. Therefore our electrification is only 1½ per cent. of that of Britain which has very few waterfalls and where the entire electricity is to be produced from coal.

Of this very little electricity that is produced here 44 per cent. of the entire power and 46 per cent. of the entire production is confined to the big urban areas like Calcutta, Bombay and Madras. The entire country is a virgin field for electrification and as such I think it will be an absurd proceeding to put all the capital that our provincial Governments can manage to get into the old undertakings. Was it not a proper policy to see that the old undertakings are run on our terms, on terms of a public utility, and then divert all capital that we can lay hold of towards starting new concerns and developing new electricity? And wherever the old concerns come into conflict with the new policy of any provincial board the provincial board is given absolute power to stop those generating stations and, where necessary, to take over and purchase those generating stations. Therefore the powers of these boards are more or less absolute so far as the electrification of the province is concerned.

Then, Sir, it was suggested that by pleading in the Select Committee and shedding crocodile tears the private interests had got unduly favourable terms. I do not think that is a correct statement at all. The Select Committee was very sympathetic but it did not yield a single inch on any material point. What have the private interests got? They have got 5 per cent. on the effective capital sunk in the industry. It is not all capital; we have tried to exclude all bogus capital—it is only the actual assets and the reserves which have been invested, and it is only when they prove that they could not have possibly invested a certain part of the reserves of the undertaking that it is added to the capital. Otherwise only the actual plant and machinery and the working capital are to be taken. And even of the plant and machinery it is only the depreciated value; and to this is to be added up that part of depreciation which is again re-invested.

Therefore I think this 5 per cent. margin is a margin to which we should insist that the Boards should work up. So we thought it reasonable that this margin must be allowed in order to let private enterprise function on a reasonable scale. If owing to miscalculations any private electricity undertaking charges higher costs and makes good profits, it has been suggested that all those profits should be utilised for reducing the cost in the next revision and they should be funded. Only in certain circumstances, if the error is not more than 30 per cent. then what has been allowed is that 7½ per cent. may be permitted and the rest will be impounded.

Therefore, I suggest that this Bill is a Bill for nationalization of electricity and on that basis deserves the whole-hearted support of this House.

Then I may say a few words about the amendment given by my friends, Shri Ananthasayanam Ayyangar and Shri T. T. Krishnamachari about making the Board obligatory for all provinces.

Shri Ayyangar made one constitutional mistake, which he does not usually do. He said that this was only for the purpose of incorporation that the Central Legislature was asked to bring this Bill. Electricity is one of the Concurrent Subjects and it is a matter in which the Legislature has got full jurisdiction to pass the legislation. Just as we provided in the employees' State Insurance Bill that that Bill shall prevail over the whole of India, it is also necessary that we should do so because unless the electrical development of the country is on a strong basis, many parts of the country will be left out altogether. My friends have been obsessed by what they thought were the interests and rights of the Province of Madras. I claim that I am as much interested in the future electrification of Madras as my friends, and even for Madras, the provisions made will contribute to greater electrification than if things are managed as at present. It is true that under the Department, State electrification has proceeded to a considerable extent in Madras, but in actual quantity it has not been very much. It is 100,000 KW. If you look at the new schemes like the Damodar Valley and Kosi Schemes, you will find that the amount of electricity to be produced in each of them is four and ten times as much. Therefore, there is no use of exaggerating the achievement of the Government of Madras. Now and then one Minister after another has tried to dabble with it, but if such a Board had been established in Madras 25 years ago, it would not be 100,000 KW but it would have been 1 million KW that would have been produced for Madras. Therefore, if the Madras Government sets up this new Board, which will have no other political or other distractions but will concentrate on expanding the electric services of the Province, I am sure the rate of progress in the province will be greater than it has been in the last 25 years. If we give an option to every province, what will happen? Many provinces will neither start the Board nor take to electrification themselves. They will be left as they are. As it is there are provinces which have no electrification at all. In Orissa, for instance, there is no public installed generating capacity. Similarly in Bihar, the total capacity is only 27,450 KW, less than what they have in any single city in Europe or America. Sir, whole provinces are now left undeveloped and we do not want to give the right to provinces to sleep over it again for another generation. We want that every province should take steps, and if a Board is established, that Board will have to give an account year after year, e.g., what work it does, why it did not expand and so forth. And there will be competition between provinces and a healthy rivalry. Why should Madras have 100,000 KW and Bihar only 25,000 KW? Each Legislature instead of being distracted over ministerial factions, will insist that its Board should function properly. It is for that purpose that this Board has been set up and the whole value of the Bill will be destroyed if my friend's amendment is adopted and the Provincial Governments are left alone. In the matter of food, education and the distribution of cloth, where under the Constitution the Provincial Governments have the power, they come to the Centre and say: Why don't you help? Why don't you control? Why don't you regulate? They want orders from the Centre. But in a matter which is under the concurrent list and is to be developed on a national basis, unless you have some kind of a common system in all the provinces it will not be possible to have a proper electricity system. We may have to establish common joint councils in provinces for two neighbouring areas. For all such circumstances, unless you have a uniform system of administration, no development will be possible. So I suggest that this Bill as it has emerged in a wholly nationalization Bill. As such it deserves to be adopted as a whole and it should not be mutilated.

Shri H. V. Kamath (C.P. and Berar: General): We are living today in the transition from the electric age to the atomic age. But unfortunately as the advent of the electric age coincided with the advent of slavery in our country, we have not been able to reap the full benefits of electricity in our country. To-day, Sir, I do not propose to go into the vexed question of rationalization or nationalization, but I believe that all of us are agreed, as rational beings, that electricity, just like any other power, must be utilised for the benefit of the whole nation: and the whole nation, Sir, at least in India, lives in its hundreds of thousands of villages and to my mind the value of this scheme will be judged by its utility to the poor—the common man: the rural man.

How far will he be benefited by this Electricity Act? The one country in the world today from which we can take some lesson in this particular regard, apart from its politics, is Russia. Russia soon after the consummation of its revolution in 1922 achieved the electrical development of practically the entire country is less than 10 years. And Lenin once when he was asked what Communism meant—because Lenin aimed at the establishment of Communism in Russia—to bring the point home to his questioner said: Communism is Soviet plus electrification. It was partly in jest but partly in earnest too. The point he wanted to make out was the importance of electrification in the present day.

When I am on this subject, I would also like to say that Mahatma Gandhi himself was all in favour of electrification. I myself once had a little talk with him about charkhas being driven by electric power and he said if the poorest man, the lowliest and the lost gets electricity in his own home to run the charkha, then he for one would have no objection to the electrification of India. But he was particular to stress this point that if electrification meant benefiting only the rich and urban classes, then he for one would not be in favour of the scheme. But in so far as the rural people, the villager today, who is today practically a beast of burden in our country, could get the benefit of the electrical scheme, then he would favour such a scheme in our country.

Sir, it is in the fitness of things that this should be so; this electric energy is ubiquitous. It was not something invented by a particular man. It has been there in the world, in the universe, in the atmosphere since the beginning of time and it was only harnessed by certain discoverers who found that this power could be utilised for doing the work and labour of mankind and inasmuch as this power is ubiquitous, since it pervades the universe, so also I want that this power should reach every nook and corner of the world. We here are working for India and we want that it must reach every nook and corner of India and be available to every villager in India.

My friend Mr. Santhanam referred to the departmental running of the electricity schemes. The argument that he put forth was that when a new Government comes into being it is liable to change its entire policy and accordingly the department will also function in a new orientation. But this same argument applies to the boards or other extra-departmental authorities that might be constituted by the Government of India or the provincial Governments. When a new Government comes in and lays down a new policy the board will only carry out that policy. As Mr. Santhanam himself said the Board so constituted will carry out the policy of the Government and the Government will have the final say in laying down the policy for these boards. This argument therefore that he put forth as regards departmental running versus extra-departmental management does not, to my mind, hold water and if as in Madras the departmental functioning and management have been efficient, as my other friends from Madras have said, I do not see why that system should be interfered with at present. However, as regards nationalisation we have got to bear another aspect of the thing in mind and that is that nationalisation depends upon how far the nation has been integrated, how far the nation has constituted itself into a strong State. If the State which represents the nation is itself inefficient or weak, then all efforts at nationalisation are bound to fail: but if the state is integrated and strong then every one of us will go all out for nationalisation. In our own country we have the railways as the major nationalised industry. But, as was pointed out on former occasions in this House, unfortunately our railways have not been functioning as efficiently as we would wish them to and at times they have acted as a damper on our further efforts at nationalisation. So when we plead for an all out effort at nationalisation I for one would say that at the same time we must see that the State has a strong and efficient machinery to carry out and implement whatever nationalisation schemes might be put into operation.

[Shri H. V. Kamath]

Lastly, there is one point which I wanted to stress and I would repeat it, viz., that unless the poorest villager benefits by the Electricity Bill it might as well go on the scrapheap. Today the world has entered the age of atomic energy and we as a backward nation have got to leap and skip over so many stages. But it has been the experience of history that when a backward country goes forward it learns from the experiences of other countries, from their failures and their successes and it is always likely to skip over so many stages in its evolution. Let us therefore take our lessons from other countries in the world who have already advanced far enough on the road to electrification. Let us learn from them how far they have been able to succeed and through what schemes they have been able to bring this great all pervasive power to every nook and corner of their country and within the reach of the poorest rural citizen.

I would only end by saying that we wish all success to the scheme and I hope that within the next few years we would be able to electrify not merely literally but also metaphorically all our towns and villages, to the benefit of our urban as well as our rural compatriots and we would be able to run our industries more neatly, efficiently and comfortably with the aid of electricity in town as well as country, and that it will contribute to the progress, wealth and happiness of India.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena (U.P.: General): Sir, I have very carefully listened to the elaborate elucidation on the Bill by the Honourable Minister and I thank him for having improved the Bill so much in the Select Committee. But I cannot help saying that the main features of the Bill still remain as they were and as he himself admitted they have not been changed. New electrical enterprises will not be all nationalised. My friend Mr. Santhanam just now gave a very eloquent description of this Bill when he said that it was really a nationalisation Bill and he said that henceforth all new undertakings will be public undertakings and only in cases where the Government feels that it cannot take up an undertaking it shall give it to some private licensee. I think it is just there where there is a snag.

The other day our Prime Minister announced the industrial policy of the Government and while he said that for ten years we shall not take over any old undertakings, yet he assured us that new undertakings in the key industries shall be State enterprises. I therefore think that this power which is given under Sections 38 and 39 should not be given and all new undertakings should be state enterprises. The argument advanced by the Prime Minister was that we could not squander our resources on taking over the old concerns. I do not agree with that view. My feeling is that we should take over the key industries at least immediately and for two reasons. First of all the argument that we shall have to squander money is fallacious. We are taking over the zamindari system in U.P. It will cost us several crores of rupees but we have so scheduled the payment that it can go on for a period of 30 years. We can pay off the costs and in the meanwhile probably earn more than what we pay by the abolition of zamindari. Again, we know that England has nationalised its electricity, coal and some other industries. In their Electricity Act they have provided for compensation to present manufacturers. I do not think England today is abounding in wealth. She has to keep her life going today with the help of America and yet although the country is in such bad days she has taken over the key industries. I think India is much more solvent than England and she can afford to take over these concerns and pay compensation to the owners of the companies by spreading it over a number of years, during which the income from nationalisation will be higher than the amount of compensation that will be paid. There are some very interesting sections in the British Electricity Act in this connection and I think I may read at least one of them to show how they have arranged for compensation to companies. In section 25 they say:

"25.—(1) Every composite company shall be entitled to be paid by the Central Authority, by way of compensation for the vesting in that Authority or in any other Electricity Board of property and rights of the company, and in lieu of any other compensation in respect of that vesting, an amount calculated as follows:—

- (a) the aggregate value of all the securities of the company shall be ascertained in accordance with sub-sections (2) to (9) of section twenty of this Act, subject to the modification that for the references in sub-sections (6) and (7) to the stockholders' representative there shall be substituted references to the company;
- (b) there shall be ascertained the proportion which the average net revenue earned by the electricity undertaking in respect of the last three complete financial years before the tenth day of January, nineteen hundred and forty-seven, bears to the average net revenue earned in respect of those years by the company's undertaking as a whole;"

That means they calculate the average income for the last three years. I think some such device could be made here also and the companies can be given an amount equal to their net average annual income of three years. It is not something which could not be done in our country when England, which is not in a very prosperous condition today, can do it. The reason for my saying so is this. My experience of the sugar industry has been such that I feel that the capitalists, whenever they get an opportunity, will try to get money and will not care for national interests. Recently we have seen in the cloth trade also the same phenomenon in the soaring prices of cloth, and all appeals to patriotism failed and the consumers have been hit very hard. We cannot therefore trust that such key industries will be able to fulfil the demands of our national development schemes under the control of these capitalists.

When the Bill was first introduced my honourable friend Mr. Patil referred to the difficulty in getting personnel for running these industrial schemes. He referred to his own case, of the Bombay Corporation. I personally think that if we adopt the methods of the industry we can get the same personnel which these companies are able to employ. The personnel is there whether we employ them or a company employs them. And I am sure if Government employs them they will be much happier under Government and will work with more devotion than they would do elsewhere. So I do not think that argument has got much validity.

I think that the special plea of my honourable friend Mr. Santhanam that this Bill provides for a nationalised industry is not correct. In many places where the vested interests are powerful they will take over the electrification schemes and the Board will say that it is much better that these experienced industrialists should carry them out because they have the experience, personnel, money and all that. I therefore think that the clauses 38 and 39 as they stand at present are very dangerous.

Leaving this question of nationalisation I now come to the Bill itself. I think that the task before us is stupendous. The other day the Honourable Minister told us how low is our consumption of electricity. Even that is confined to three or four cities. If we look to the development of electricity in other countries we would be surprised to find how much they could do in four or five years' time. In fact in Russia, to which my honourable friend Mr. Kamath just referred, the development of electrical power from 1932 to 1937 was from 1340 crores of kilowatts hours to 3800 crores of kilowatts hours. That means in five years time they could develop electricity to this extent. I want to know if our Minister is sure that with this Bill he will be able to develop our resources to that extent. I have carefully analysed the Bill and I find that the Central Authority is not clothed with any real powers. What power has been given has been given practically to the Boards. The Central Authority shall only plan and recommend. I think that this is a fatal defect in the Bill. If we want to develop electricity all over the country according to a comprehensive national plan, it can only be done by Central initiative. Of course we must secure the fullest co-operation of the provincial Governments and fully harness the resources of the provinces. The Central Authority must be clothed with full powers to use all its resources and all its influence to make the provincial Boards function with the necessary speed and energy. I think the provinces are not so rich as to be able to invest all the money required for big schemes. And I do not find any provisions in this Bill for subventions from the Centre to the Provincial Boards. I have tabled some amendments suggesting that the Central Authority should be the final sanctioning authority for all big electrification schemes, so that there may be all round development according to a comprehensive national plan for the production and supply of electricity and all provincial schemes may fit into it. As the Bill at present stands, the Central Authority can only give its recommendations about some provincial schemes and it is left to the provincial Boards and ultimately to the provincial Governments to accept or reject the recommendations. I think it is not proper. The Central Authority must be the sanctioning authority for all big schemes. If there is any scheme which does not fit in with the national plan, it must be rejected. If the Central Authority thinks that the scheme cannot be taken up by the province for lack of money, it must finance it and supply technical personnel etc. In this Bill you have not made the Central Authority strong enough to carry out a comprehensive national plan for development of electrical energy and power.

I tried to compare the powers of the Central Authority here with those in England also. The Central Authority, I find, is much more powerful there and it is the Authority which is the moving power and which can make the regional boards function. I think this is a defect in our Bill and it should be removed. The Central Authority should be made all powerful and given power to help the Boards financially. I think the provinces will not grudge this. We will then be able to carry out the plan, which will be coming before us, for the industrial planning and development of our country.

In regard to the penal clause I was surprised to find that there is a fine of Rs. 500 only if any licensee violates any of the provisions of this Act. This is something ridiculous. They can violate the conditions and make crores of rupees of profit and just pay Rs. 500 only! This provision must be changed. They must be given at least one year's imprisonment in the beginning, and if the offence is repeated the punishment must be severer. And the fine must be equal to the amount of profit which they make by their breaking the law.

On the question of taxation, yesterday also a friend said that taxation of nationalised industries is not proper. I join him and I would like to say that when we are starting an industry which will try to cater for the welfare of the millions of villagers—as my friend Mr. Kamath reminded us, Mahatma Gandhi was in favour of every hut having electrical power to run its spinning wheel—then certainly this cannot be done by taxing this Authority in the very beginning. The Central Authority or the Board, whosoever runs this machine, will not make any profits. It will really try to give the benefit to the country and you cannot judge its success by taxing it in the manner of a company which runs for profit. I therefore think that this handicap at the very outset will kill this undertaking. The capitalists will then come forward and say “you have tried nationalisation and failed”. I think that like the railways we should nationalise electricity. I am also opposed to the transfer of funds from the Railway Fund to the General Revenues. I think that all the income derived by this undertaking should be spent on the undertaking itself with a view to develop it to the maximum extent until it can be said to be completely developed when we can take away the income for the State. But we are just beginning and before we have even begun we should not say “it shall be taxed, it shall pay super-tax and all that”. I think the provision must be revised. It must be allowed to develop with the best wishes of us all and the Honourable Minister should see that whatever expense is involved in it we must be prepared to spend.

As my friend Mr. Kamath reminded us, Lenin had said, Communism meant Soviet plus Electricity. I agree. If we have full development of electric power, then certainly we will be able to provide work and employment to all, and people will be happy and there will be none who will equal us in the world.

We are in population the greatest nation. But we have no petroleum stocks and we have no other power. So we will have to depend on water power and electric power. We must be able to do everything to develop this water power and electric power, and for that reason we must not put limits on the development of this venture by imposing income-tax and super-tax and all that on it.

These are some points which I wish to present for the consideration of the Honourable Minister. I hope he will accept these essential amendments so that the Central Authority will become strong enough to give the energy and drive, and initiative and directive, which he personifies in himself, to all the provinces.

The provinces have been allowed two years within which to fall in line with this Bill. In five years Russia could multiply her electricity production by three times. I think if the provinces take two years to fall in line it would be too big a period; within six months every province must fall in line and if it does not the Central Authority and the Honourable Minister must make it do so, so that in four or five years we may be able to make at least similar progress as the other countries have made.

Sir, with these remarks I support the motion.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari (Madras: General): I have risen to correct some misapprehensions that might be formed by members of this House as a result of the speech of my honourable friend on my right. In a Bill of this nature, it was essentially as a compromise that it emerged from the Select Committee. It is quite open for one member to feel that this is the last word on the subject. It is equally open for another member to say that it is a very halting measure. But what I want the House to understand is that the Select Committee, charged as it was to produce a workable Bill, has compromised with the powerful interests to the extent that it was absolutely necessary, and it would be wrong and untrue to say that we have not compromised. We did give a lot of opportunity to the vested interests to represent their case. We tried to meet them so that we could carry them with us instead of provoking an opposition from those vested interests. And if I agreed to such a compromise, I agreed because it was necessary in the best interests of the country as things are today. My own feeling was that placed as we are, placed as this Government is today, it is not in a position to brush aside vested interests completely and take over the entire problem of not only generation but also distribution of electricity and also pay the compensation that is necessary. It has therefore been necessary not merely to give them certain concessions, but also give them certain valuable concessions in the matter of compensation to be afforded to existing electrical undertaking which are taken over.

[Shri T. T. Krishnamachari]

Sir, I agree with Mr. Santhanam that it is the first step and a fairly big step in the direction of State control of generation of electricity and also control in regard to its distribution. I will not say it is the last word on the subject. We do not ask for the gratitude of the people that we have done something very big or that it is actually nationalization as understood by various people. There was much that Mr. Santhanam said in regard to the working of nationalized concerns by means of Boards, with which I am in agreement. There I think we have blazed the trail for future nationalization. These things will be done by Boards and not by Departments. At the same time I cannot claim that it is perfect or complete nationalization, or anything which by a stroke of the pen could be turned into nationalization of electricity industry, because there is this difference which I would like the House to understand. In the province of Madras—my own Province—95 per cent. of the generation is in the hands of the State and the State is now moving very rapidly towards control of distribution as well. Very possibly, as soon as this measure becomes law and is on the Statute Book, the provincial Government will enact a measure to enable them to take over the distribution of electricity in areas where it is now in the hands of private people.

I would also say this is contradiction to what my friend on my right has said, that in Madras the progress has been fairly rapid considering the conditions under which work was started; the mere fact of the existence of a Board would not have made any difference whatever to the pace of the province. Actually I remember that for one of the major hydro-electric works started—the Mettur Project—Government had to canvass for industries to be started by the side of the project so that the power could be consumed. Of course the war and the rise in the standard of living, and the requirements of the people in electric current, have made a very big change in the capacity consumed, and it might be that today the total amount of electricity generated in Madras is not adequate to meet the need, or even meet half the demand of the people of Madras. But as conditions were prior to the war, the existence of a Board would not have made the slightest difference. And I am very proud to say in this House that the Department of Electricity in Madras is as good as any Board can possibly be, and the change that will be effected so far as the Madras portion of the structure is concerned would be practically a change in nomenclature rather than a change in either the personnel or in the management. We are in a position of advantage, and I therefore believe firmly that if it is possible to create conditions similar to what obtain in Madras all over India, nationalization would be a very easy matter.

But we did find in the course of our talks with the vested interests in the Select Committee that the position is not on all fours with what exists in Madras. There are powerful vested interests in one or two places which it would be unwise for us to displace now. Take the Tata interests; it would be very unwise straightaway to displace it. It would be much better to get a corporation of that nature with its semi-impersonal character to help us in going ahead with our programme of developing electricity rather than tell them, "We are going to take you over", and find ourselves faced with all the difficulty that would ensue in regard to management and personnel. I do not think, Sir, that it is quite right to say that the Central Government is not faced with problems in regard to getting adequate personnel. They will find that problem a very serious one when they have to man this Central Authority; it is so difficult to get adequate personnel in this country and if our friends do not want to get foreign personnel, it would be all the more difficult. So, what my friend Mr. Patil said at the time this Bill was referred to the Select Committee happens to be a fact and a fact which would prove more in actual practice when we find that we cannot get adequate men to meet our needs.

With regard to my honourable friend Mr. Santhanam's criticism in regard to an amendment proposed by my friend Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar and myself, I shall deal with it at the appropriate occasion. But I have to say one or two words about the remarks that fell from my friend Professor Shibban Lal Saksena. I do not say that I disagree with what he said—I say I do agree. I also agree to the charge that this Bill is not as good as it ought to be, as we all want it to be, and also the conditions under which we have to work. He raised one particular point in regard to compensation. I am familiar with literature on this subject and have particularly read the measure in the United Kingdom which has nationalized electricity. The question of compensation as he says must be based on the net income. Yes, the people in the United Kingdom have agreed to the compensation being based on the net income, because the net income is something very big and the compensation will consequently be very big. In our country the net income is not quite so large and naturally our vested interests would not like to base compensation on the net income. It is merely a question of the vested interests in U.K. agreeing because it was to their advantage and here our vested interests do not agree because it is not to their advantage. It is not that the people in England have scored any point over their vested interests and we have failed to score a similar point. It is merely a question of the two sets of things, the two sets of facts being different in the two countries. So I do not think he could praise the Labour Government in the U.K. for paying a lesser compensation than what we seek to by means of this Bill. Actually, Sir, my experience has been that the scale of compensation set by the Labour Government in Britain in regard to all industries which they are nationalising will make it impossible for a poor country like India to follow suit. The compensation they are paying is very high and my honourable friend will find that if at any time we nationalise an institution like the Imperial Bank and we follow the terms that have been conceded to the Bank of England, we shall find ourselves probably a loser in the bargain. So the analogy is not on all fours with conditions that exist in this country.

The second point which my honourable friend made was: he was dissatisfied with the provisions of Sections 38 and 39. The two Sections relate to the provision of new generating stations and operation of Board's generating stations. If we legislate for all time and say that a Board should not use any private undertaking for the purpose of running a generating station, even if it be uneconomical for the Board to run that station itself, well, it would be that the Board will have to employ high grade technical personnel and spend money on an uneconomical project. What Sections 38 and 39 really do is to empower the Board where a particular station is uneconomical to use local material, resources, talent and technical capacity available and it is merely an enabling provision rather than a mandatory provision. My honourable friend Prof. Shibbanlal Saksena who is a student of legislation—a very keen student and whose diligence I sometimes envy—has made just a little slip in trying to understand the provisions of Sections 38 and 39. The real operative Section is 44.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: What is the guarantee that it will not be misused?

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: The guarantee that it will not be misused is Prof. Saksena's continuing to be in the Central Legislature. That is the real thing. Actually, my honourable friend will understand that there could be no legislative guarantee against anything being misused and it is only that if we have good popular Government it would not be misused. But an enabling provision is necessary as any businessman will understand that if it is possible to get a thing done by contract or by somebody else and it is very cheap at that, there is no use trying to do it yourself and putting the tax-payer to a lot of loss, except the fact that you get the notional satisfaction that this is a nationalised concern.

Now, the operative Section in relation to this particular thing is Section 44. Section 44 more or less lays an embargo on any new generating stations being in charge of private individuals. The State has to take over the new generating stations except in so far as the stations visualised in Sections 38 and 39 are concerned. So you find that in regard to one particular fact, namely, generation of electricity, more or less all new concerns will be undertaken by the Provincial Boards.

One other matter which the Professor made which I also see is due probably to a slip because he has not thought out the problem in all its aspects is the power that has been conceded to the Central Electricity Authority. He would like the Central Electricity Authority to have mandatory power to see that these Provincial Boards do this or that and to get every scheme scrutinised. But there is the constitutional aspect of it to which I would like to draw my honourable friend's attention. The provisions of this Bill as they are today are just on the margin because though electricity happens to be a concurrent part the Central Government cannot create authorities which can act in an executive capacity in the various Provinces. That distinction is there. So in regard to clothing the Central Electricity Authority with certain powers you have really to try to see that we do not offend the provisions of the Government of India Act and probably some future Acts which may take its place. So if my honourable friend in the constitution that is going to be framed sees that electricity is no longer a concurrent part, surely we can clothe the Central Electricity Authority with all the powers that are necessary, but as it is, the constitutional hurdle has to be climbed and we have tried to be even clever to give the Central Electricity Authority that amount of power which won't actually bring it into clash with provincial autonomy.

The second factor is the actual physical factor. I had a talk with people in my Province in regard to vesting this Central Electricity Authority with greater power in regard to its duties vis-a-vis the minor Provinces or the backward provinces. Actually people in Madras resent the amount of power given to the Central Electricity Authority for a very valid reason, because they are progressive. The amount of money that they want to spend without previous consultation with the Central Electricity Authority is sometimes very big and they will be held up in the carrying out of bigger projects when they have to refer to the Central Electricity Authority, unless it is going to be an Authority which is absolutely alive to all the needs of the situation and is able to transmit telegraphically its concurrence or otherwise of a particular project. So you find that there is a physical problem of control being exercised from Delhi which will impede rapid progress in an industry which all of us want to see progress very rapidly. That aspect of it I would like to urge on Prof. Shibbanlal Saksena. I myself am a person who feels that the Central Electricity Authority must be a powerful one, so that it can put a check on anything that the Boards might do which is not correct and also help the backward provinces to get a move on but as the constitutional position is one and the position of the provinces who are progressive is another factor which stand in the way: so we have to compromise on this and the Central Electricity which we have now created has been given powers which happens to be a compromise which will probably, in practice, be found to be a workable compromise.

Sir, one other matter which my honourable friend Prof. Saksena mentioned was in regard to penalty. Penalty in a thing like this is just a token penalty. Actually the Board and the Provincial Government and the Central Government are not without resources to bring to heel any licensee who is going to be refractory and who will not fall in line with the requirements of the Board. This is not the only Act by which they are going to control it. There is the Indian Electricity Act. Still nobody today can really afford to run counter to the wishes of the Provincial Government and the Central Government because you can stop fuel, you can stop many other amenities if they do not fall in line. So it is merely a question of punishment of individuals. It may be that such individuals will say, "Oh, the Company does it and the Company will bear the brunt of my mistakes. So why should I worry?" It is to bring those who are responsible to heel that this penalty clause has been introduced and actually the vested interests did sort of tug at it and they said the penalty is rather severe.

I would like to say this finally, that we are still inundated with a lot of communications from various people, but I should say that the communications are not what they used to be. They are not able to find many clauses in this Bill from the point of view of vested interests to which they can take exception. It is just toning down, which I think is a tangible proof that the Bill is not quite so bad as it is pictured to be so far as the vested interests are concerned. And in regard to the interests of the tax-payer and the State I have already said that there are limitations. The limitations are obvious. We are conscious of the limitations and we have agreed to this measure in the full responsibility that this is not a measure which means complete nationalisation and we have necessarily to admit a compromise in view of the fact that the development of the various provinces in this country is not more or less even and we have to bear in mind the resources and the help that we need from private enterprise perhaps in the present set-up when we have left a private sector in the industry to help to improve the position so far as electricity is concerned.

Sir, in regard to the other two matters on which I probably agree with Mr. Ayyangar, I shall speak at the appropriate time, but otherwise I think the Bill is a good compromise and the House will have no objection to passing it with such minor amendments as may be necessary.

Shri S. V. Krishnamurthy Rao (Mysore State): This Bill is to be supported only as a compromise between private enterprise and complete nationalization. I cannot agree with the Honourable Mr. Santhanam that production and electricity cannot be run successfully as a state department. In fact, honourable Mr. Krishnamachari has spoken about Madras. Coming to Mysore I wish to say how Mysore Government has been able to run this Department to the benefit of the State. Beginning in 1902 it had only an installation for production of 10,000 H.P. and within the course of 40 years Mysore is now producing 93,000 H.P. and if the Mahatma Gandhi Jog Electrical Works are completely developed, we will be able not only to meet the needs of the entire state, but also supply electricity to the neighbouring districts of Madras and Bombay Presidencies. In fact Mysore has been supplying power to Tungbhabdra Project in the Madras Presidency and negotiations are going on to supply about 10,000 H.P. to the neighbouring districts of Bombay Presidency. The entire personnel is manned by Mysoreans and the entire profits of the department go to the coffers of the State. Nearly one tenth of the income of the State, more than a crore of rupees, is the income that the State gets from the electrical department. The industrial progress of Mysore I may assert is mainly due to the progressive policy that the Government of Mysore has followed in the complete nationalization and a distribution of electricity in the State. Today 223 towns and villages are electrified and we have got a plan to start about 30 distribution centres from where all the villages within a radius of 50 miles will be electrified. Electricity is being supplied below cost to some of the industries and electricity is being supplied to agriculturists at 6 pies per unit.

[Shri S. V. Krishnamurthy Rao]

The industrial progress of Mysore has been mainly due to the progressive policy pursued by the Government of Mysore. Sir, it is the agreed policy of the Congress also that all public utility concerns, especially production of power should be run by the Government. We need not go to England or any other country to get an example. Here is a small unit of 29,000 square miles—Mysore State—which has followed this policy to a successful conclusion and very shortly most of the towns and villages there will be electrified; we have large schemes of industrialisation and I hope this measure which is before the Parliament, as a compromise admittedly, as my friend Mr. Krishnamachari said, between complete nationalization and private capital, will be a step for the complete nationalization of the production of electricity.

It is only from that view I have to support this Bill.

Mr. Speaker: I think we might begin at 2-30 now.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock, Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

Shri Ajit Prasad Jain (U.P.: General): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I have not been able to give sufficient thought to an important measure of this kind that it deserves. Nevertheless, the speeches that I have heard in this House and a cursory perusal of the Bill shows that the Bill does not deserve the condemnation that has been made by some members of the House. It is true that electricity is a special kind of enterprise; it partakes of the nature of a monopoly and it is capable of standardisation to an extent which many industries are not. Therefore, it has been found possible to run electrical enterprises by the State much more efficiently than other industries which require individual judgment and change of decisions from time to time. Moreover, it is a key industry upon which the industrialisation of the country depends and there is a good case for making electricity an out and out State concern. The Bill falls short in that respect. It does not touch the existing enterprises. It also leaves scope for private enterprise in some cases in the future. The speeches that have been made in this House show that the criticisms fall under three heads, namely, first, that this Bill leaves the present electrical enterprises intact, secondly that the Central Electrical Authority proposed to be set up by this Bill is a weak body. It will not be responsible for the execution of the schemes undertaken and lastly that the Bill still leaves scope for the Provincial Boards to allow private enterprise to start or undertake the management of new generating stations. The honourable member from Mysore has criticised the scheme on the ground that in Mysore electricity is being run as a State Department. It has run very successfully. It has gone to a large number of towns and that Mysore hopes to extend Electricity almost to every conceivable place where it is required.

No doubt, experiments in Russia have shown that electricity and electrical concerns can be run as efficiently by the State as by private enterprise. But the experience of democratic countries has shown us that it is a better method of working to create autonomous Boards. This is exactly what this Bill contemplates. There is a difference between our State and Russia. Russia is as much a political State as an economic State. It is true that in British India, some of the big electrical concerns, for instance, the Hydro-electric in the U.P. is being run by the State, yet it must be admitted that our State is a mere infant in managing commercial enterprises. Further the principles governing a commercial enterprise are very different from the principles which govern a State department. Management through State department leads to regimentation, to bureaucratisation and if we set up a separate Board for the management of electrical concerns, there will be continuity of policy which will always be wanting if this electrical enterprise is run by a State department. In America for the development of the Tennessee Valley, they have set up a Tennessee Valley Authority which has been vested with full powers. Therefore I welcome the provision for setting up a Central Electrical Authority and Provincial Boards.

Another feature of the Bill which has given rise to a certain amount of criticism by my friend Mr. Shibban Lal Saksena is that the Central authority will be only a co-ordinating and guiding authority in matters of policy. It will not be responsible for the actual conduct of the electrical schemes. To him it appears to be a defect; to me it appears to be a great virtue of this scheme. It is impossible to govern the whole of India in economic matters from Delhi. Over-concentration in politics is a bad thing; over-concentration in economic matters is worse. Any attempt to control the different enterprises from Delhi will, I am afraid, meet with disaster. The Bill has, therefore, very rightly entrusted the work of executing the schemes and the actual conduct of the electrical enterprises to the provincial boards. I would go a little further and submit that we should not stop at the provincial boards, but strong, independent and autonomous bodies should be set up for the areas which come under the scheme. We should try to establish something like what the Americans call 'grass-root' democracy in our economics that is, the conduct of the business and the decision of day to day matter must be entrusted to the local bodies, to the men on the spot, who can understand the difficulties and can conduct the business. The higher authorities should be concerned more or less with measures of policy, co-ordination, control and supervision. This Bill has, therefore, the virtue of having taken that principle into account. The Central authority for the whole of India will only be a co-ordinating and guiding authority. I hope the Ministry will entrust the actual execution to regional boards or local authorities for each of the schemes. The Bill has made provision for local Boards; but their powers and working have been left to the rule making power. I only hope that in putting the provisions of this Bill into operation, the Ministry will keep in mind that there should not be over-concentration.

Professor Shibban Lal Saksena has again criticised this Bill on the ground that it leaves scope for future enterprises to be established and managed by private persons. He has referred to clauses 36 and 37; but the cumulative effect of those two clauses and clause 44 is that in an area for which a scheme has been prepared no new generating station will be allowed to be established by private persons. The provincial board will ordinarily set up its own generating station, but if for one reason or another it finds that it is not in the public interest to set up its own generating plant, it may either permit a licence to set up a plant and run it or it may hand over the management of a plant set up by the Board. I do hope that this authority will not ordinarily be exercised and all new generating plants will be set up and managed by the Provincial Boards themselves. Regarding existing enterprises which are in any area for which a scheme is prepared, the generating stations will come under what is known as a controlled scheme. As a result quite drastic powers will be vested in the provincial board to guide and control these stations, even to ask them to conduct their business in a particular manner or increase or replace the plans. The Bill also restricts the profits of the private enterprises during such period as they continue to be run by private hands. It also makes a provision for compulsory depreciation fund, so that the latest equipment and machinery may be substituted for old and inefficient plants. It shows a lack of faith on our part that because we are not going in for out and out nationalisation today, we shall not go in for it when conditions are matured. Statistics have been quoted in this House to show that the per capita consumption of electricity in our country is near about 10 units whereas in America it is 1500 units and in the U.S.S.R. it is 300 units. It would be foolish for us to spare or to neglect any of the sources, whether private or public, which may go to increase the production and consumption of electricity in our country. We need it for industrial development and we cannot afford to neglect any of our resources. Therefore, Sir, I accept it as a compromise to begin with that whatever capital and whatever skill and resources may be available to the State should in the first instance be utilised for electrical development. Later on if sufficient public resources are available to us, we can acquire any and every private enterprise that may be running at the time. There is nothing to debar us from doing that. During the interim period when private enterprises are allowed to be run there must be a rigid control on them. More depends on how things are done than on how they are written on paper. The control over private enterprise must be rigid and any private enterprise which shows the least dereliction or contravention of any of the rules or bye-laws or any of the provisions of law should be drastically dealt with. It worked in that spirit I hope this measure will lead to a quick electrification and thereby to a speedy industrialization of the country. I welcome this measure and I hope it will be worked in a manner which will make it possible for us to eliminate private enterprise at the earliest possible moment and make electricity a concern owned by the public, managed by the public and run for the public.

An Honourable Member: The question may now be put.

Mr. Speaker: The question is;

"That the question be now put."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil (Minister for Works, Mines and Power): Sir, I am extremely obliged to the honourable members who have participated in this discussion. Most of the points covered by them were anticipated by me in my speech and sufficiently answered. I do not think any detailed reply is necessary and in order to save the time of the House I will make no further speech.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill to provide for the rationalisation of the production and supply of electricity, and generally for taking measures conducive to the electrical development of the Provinces of India, as reported by the Select Committee, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: Before we proceed to take up the amendments, I wish to invite the attention of Mr. Naziruddin Ahmed to the convention which we sought to establish last time that so far as punctuation or grammatical construction or small and capital letters are concerned, we shall invite the attention of the Draftsman and it will not be necessary to move these as amendments here. In the matter of punctuation, many of them would perhaps be even called printer's mistakes. Therefore, I do not propose to call upon the honourable member to move these amendments. A list of these has already gone to the official draftsman but the honourable member also may supply a list of those amendments to which he wishes to invite his attention, and we will therefore proceed to the other amendments now.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): Sir, before you take up those other amendments I wish to say a few words with regard to amendment No. 1 which deals with the marginal notes. I shall not move it but only make some comments to show how dangerous the tendency is to show the marginal notes as parts of the section.

Mr. Speaker: So far as I am concerned and this House is concerned, we have always held the view that marginal notes do not form part of the section. Of course, as I said on a previous occasion, a different view is taken in Bombay. But I stick to my view that these marginal notes do not form part of the section.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I agree with that point of view but my objection is that they are printed as part of the section. That is leading to anomalous situation which I was going to point out. I submit instead of these being printed at the beginning of the sections, they should be relegated to the margin. I agree that they are not part of the section. But they are being printed as such and they are leading to misunderstanding. There are some people who take these things as part of the section, and they are trying to interpret sections with the help of these marginal notes. My point is that it is a question of printing device. They should have been removed from the region of the section into the margin.

It was said this was due to the exigencies of the war. There was some economy of paper and that was responsible for this. But the war has ceased and before another world-war starts, we should resume our normal practice. I submit this should be remembered in connection with this Bill by the Department.

I may point out that this tendency of printing marginal notes as part of the section appears also in some of the latest printed Acts. In the Evidence Act which has been printed, in Section 32, the marginal note relates to eight clauses. But they have been separated and put as part of different clauses, and it is leading to a large number of printing errors, and it has a tendency of being regarded as part of the section. This dangerous tendency I was resisting. So I hope some direction will be given to the Departments to see that in future these are printed apart from the section. I was rather respectfully enforcing your own ruling.

Mr. Speaker: The Honourable Minister, under whom also comes 'Printing' has heard the honourable member's comments. I am told that this is done for facility of printing and that there are some difficulties about printing machines. It is correct to say that a marginal note should be in the margin and nowhere else.

Shri K. Santhanam: That is the case. As a matter of fact a part of the page will be lost.

Dr. B. Pattabhi Sitaramayya (Madras: General): It is not a question of a page being lost but the printing will be more difficult.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I move:

"That part (1) of clause 2 of the Bill be omitted and the subsequent parts be re-numbered accordingly."

[Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad.]

Part (1) of clause 2 relates to the definition of the word "Authority". In fact the definition says that "Authority" means the Central Electricity Authority which is set up under clause 3. I beg to submit that the word "Authority" is not a very happy or a suitable word to imply this complex idea. The economies effected are no real economies and the word "Authority" does not indicate the thing clearly. There has been the use of the word "Board". The word "Board" is a well understood expression, but the word "Authority" is not so well understood. In fact, we should rather say the "Central Authority" or the "Electricity Authority" or the "Central Electricity Authority" as a whole. I beg to submit that the use of the word "Authority" in some of the places stands just like in vacuo and creates an impression of a gap or emptiness. I do not think the word sounds well. My submission is that the whole expression Central Authority or Central Electricity Authority or Electricity Authority should be used. That would be more tolerable to the ear. So I have suggested alternative amendments in suitable places, that where the word "Authority" occurs, the words Central Authority or Electricity Authority be used. Whatever may be the actual expression which may be used in the text, it should be indicated in those places, and if that is so, the definition of the word "Authority" is needless. But if at any rate my suggestion is accepted either in whole or in part, it will serve the purpose. So this definition is not necessary.

Mr. Speaker: That will dispose of No. 8 and a number of other amendments also. At any rate, No. 8 is practically the same.

Amendment moved:

"That part (1) of clause 2 of the Bill be omitted and the subsequent parts be re-numbered accordingly."

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I cannot accept it.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: In that case I beg leave to withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: Has the honourable member the permission of the House to withdraw?

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Shri K. Santhanam: Sir I move:

"That in part (2) of clause 2 of the Bill, for the figure '3', the figure '5' be substituted."
It is a mere printing error.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in part (2) of clause 2 of the Bill, for the figure '3', the figure '5' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I move:

"That in part (4) of clause 2 of the Bill, for the word 'generation', the word 'generating' be substituted."

I think it is either a printing or a clerical error.

The text says: "'controlled station' means a generation station". The author means, probably, generating station. In the next sub-section the words "generating station" occur twice and this is so in other places. This is what is intended. So I submit that this should be accepted.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I accept it.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in part (4) of clause 2 of the Bill, for the word 'generation', the word 'generating' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I move:

"That in part (5) of clause 2 of the Bill, the words 'in any case', be omitted."

The words seem to be absolutely redundant. The text says;

".....dams and other hydraulic works, but does not in any case include any sub-station."

If we say 'does not include a sub-station' it means it does not include in any case a sub-station. If we take away words in any case the remaining words are sufficiently explicit and the addition of the words will weaken the section rather than strengthen it. The words are absolutely unnecessary without them the clause is sufficiently explicit, strong and clear.

Dr. B. Pattabhi Sitaramayya: Not merely unnecessary but mischievous because it means that the significance of the provision expressed is wider than the terms enumerated there.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: That is why I cannot accept it.

Dr. B. Pattabhi Sitaramayya: It is a matter of English.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I do not accept it.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in part (5) of clause 2 of the Bill, the words 'in any case', be omitted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Speaker: I find that there are many supplementary lists of amendments and it is just possible that I might miss calling some of the amend.
3 P.M. ments. I would ask honourable members to be alert so far as their amendments are concerned.

I was considering why we should not call marginal notes as headlines instead of marginal notes. Headlines do not form part of the statute. That would obviate the printing difficulties and would also satisfy Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: In that case something should be said in the General Clauses Act. A marginal note is sufficiently well known. We do not improve the situation by merely changing the name to "headlines".

Sir, I beg to move:

"That in part (6) of clause 2 of the Bill, for the words 'but the provisions of section 26 of this Act notwithstanding', the words 'but notwithstanding the provisions of section 26', be substituted."

The original text is written in a poetic style in blank verse! It is far better and simpler, more logical and consistent with actual practice to say "notwithstanding the provisions of section 26". It is the universal expression. In the circumstances I submit that we should observe some amount of uniformity in the matter of draftsmanship.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I cannot accept the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in part (6) of clause 2 of the Bill, for the words 'but the provisions of section 26 of this Act notwithstanding', the words 'but notwithstanding the provisions of section 26', be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment No. 14 is a matter of singular and plural and the draftsman will consider it. It is not a substantial amendment.

The question is:

"That clause 2, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 2, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 3 of the Bill, the words 'prescribe or' be omitted."

The word "prescribe" has been defined in part (9) of clause 2. "Prescribed" means prescribed by a rule made under section 17. In clause 78 rule-making power is given to the Provincial Government. So "prescribed" according to the definition means prescribed by the Provincial Government under clause 78. Under clause 3 the Central Electricity is being set up by the Central Government and therefore the word "prescribed" unless it is specifically defined applies to rules made by or orders of the Central Government. Clause 3 has been introduced or probably redrafted in the Select Committee and so the word "prescribe" came in without its implication being sufficiently realised by the draftsman. The text says "as the Central Government may prescribe or direct". If we remove these words the sentence will be all right. It will read "as the Central Government may direct". These words are not only unnecessary but are totally inapplicable in the context. In these circumstances I submit the words should be removed or the text should be rearranged. If these words are removed the text will be all right.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: Sir, I cannot accept the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 3 of the Bill, the words 'prescribe or' be omitted."
The motion was negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 3 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 3 was added to the Bill.

Clause 4 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I move:

"That in sub-clause (4) of clause 5 of the Bill, for the words 'or other', the words 'or any other', be substituted."

It is only a drafting improvement.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: Sir, I do not accept the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (4) of clause 5 of the Bill, for the words 'or other', the words 'or any other', be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That in sub-clause (4) of clause 5 of the Bill, for the word 'utility', the words 'utility concern' be substituted."

The word 'utility' as it has been used here, is used in the sense of public utility concern. It certainly means other public utility concern or organisation or undertaking. The word 'utility' is used in the adjectival sense without any corresponding noun. So 'public utility concern or business or undertaking' should be there. I have suggested 'concern' just to initiate a discussion on the conservation of the text. Without any such word the text remains incomplete.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I do not accept the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (4) of clause 5 of the Bill, for the word 'utility', the words 'utility concern' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That in sub-clause (6) of clause 5 of the Bill, for the words 'A person shall be disqualified from being appointed', the following be substituted:

"No person shall be eligible for being appointed."

The text is rather indirect. It says "A person shall be disqualified from being appointed". This is not the way in which these things are expressed. If a mandatory section is to be introduced, it should be "No person shall be eligible for being appointed". It is more direct and more in conformity with the usual practice. I therefore suggest this as a drafting improvement.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I do not accept it.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (6) of clause 5 of the Bill, for the words 'A person shall be disqualified from being appointed', the following be substituted:

"No person shall be eligible for being appointed."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That in sub-clause (6) of clause 5 of the Bill, for the words 'being a member' the words 'remaining a member' be substituted."

This is a disqualifying passage. It disqualifies a man from being a member. But the words "remaining a member" would be a continuous bar—not only in his being elected but in his remaining a member. This is the more comprehensive word and therefore this should be accepted because this is what is implied in the text.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I am not accepting it.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (6) of clause 5 of the Bill, for the words 'being a member' the words 'remaining a member' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I shall move the alternative amendment. I have suggested two alternatives; at least one should be accepted. I move:

"That in sub-clause (6) of clause 5 of the Bill, for the words 'being a member', the words 'continuing as a member' be substituted."

That is what the sense indicates.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I do not accept it.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (6) of clause 5 of the Bill, for the words 'being a member', the words 'continuing as a member' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

श्री गोकुलभाई दौलतराम भट्ट : सभापति जी, मेरी तरमीम यह है :

"That in sub-clause (6) of clause 5 of the Bill, the words 'or within the twelve months last preceding has been', be omitted."

[श्री गोकुलभाई दौलतराम भट्ट]

रह सकते हैं यह थोड़ी विचित्र सी बात मालूम होती है। मैं मानता हूँ कि जब कई पावन्दियाँ इस बिल में लगाई गयी, और उन पावन्दियों में यह सब चीज़ आगयी है कि अगर डायरेक्टली (directly) या इन्डायरेक्टली (indirectly) उसका कोई भी सम्बन्ध है तो वह इस बोर्ड में नहीं रह सकते हैं तब बेचारे धारा सभा में बैठे हुए आदमी चाहे वह छः महीने पहले बैठे हों, नौ महीने पहले बैठे हों, ग्यारह महीने साढ़े उनतीस दिन तक बैठे हों, वह इस में नहीं रह सकते हैं। इस प्रकार की पावन्दी रखने का मतलब यह हो जाता है कि हम धारा सभाओं के सदस्यों के बारे में कुछ हिकारत से देखते हैं। हम यह समझते हैं कि धारा सभा के सदस्य ऐसी चीज़ है, जो गवर्नमेंट खरीद सकती है, या धारा सभा के सदस्य और कोई रीति से लाभ उठाने वाले हैं। मैं मानता हूँ कि इस से उनकी इज्जत बहुत नहीं रहती है। इस असम्बन्धी में जहाँ कि हम बैठे हैं, हम धारा सभा के सदस्य हो कर बैठे हैं, वहाँ मैं मानता हूँ, इस तरह की धारा इस में नहीं आनी चाहिये, कतई नहीं आनी चाहिये। यह हमारा एक प्रकार से अपमान होता है। दूसरी बात मैंने बतला दी है। जो चीज़ पेश करना चाहता हूँ, जिस चीज़ को रखना चाहता हूँ वह यह है कि जो कोई एक आदमी किसी को पीछे से तंग करे, या कोई अपना स्वार्थ सिद्ध करे इस लिये पावन्दी होनी चाहिये। वह कई धाराओं से, धारा नौ या दस से लगा सकते हैं। तब मैं मंत्री महाशय से विनती करूँगा कि यह इस क्लॉज में से हटा दिया जाय जिस से इसकी शोभा बढ़ जाय और हम लोगों की भी इज्जत हो।

(English translation of the above speech)

Shri Gokulbhai Daulatram Bhatt (Eastern Rajputana States): Sir, I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (6) of clause 5 of the Bill, the words 'or within the twelve months last preceding has been', be omitted."

My object in moving this amendment is that I fail to understand the necessity for making this provision in the Bill, as it embodies many such clauses which preclude a person who has any direct or indirect interest in a concern from being appointed a member of the Central Electric Authority or the Provincial Electricity Board. It looks somewhat strange that those who have been members of the Provincial or Central Legislatures within the twelve months last preceding should be disqualified from being appointed as members of the Board, but if they were members twelve months before, then their appointment can be made. I find that many restrictions have been imposed in this Bill which inter alia debar a member from being appointed to the Board if he has any direct interest. As a corollary to this, those who have been members of the Legislatures during the last 6 months, 9 months and even 11 months - and 29½ days cannot be appointed to the Board. The provision of such restrictions obviously implies that we bring into contempt members of the Legislatures. We have the notion that either the members of the Legislature can be bought by the Government or they are likely to reap benefit in some other manner. I believe this does not add to their dignity in this House where all of us are sitting as members. I, therefore, emphasize that such a provision should not be made at all.

Another thing which I would like to say is that provision should also be made to cover such cases where a person may either indirectly harass another or manipulate to achieve his own selfish aims. This can be done under Clauses 9 and 10. I would, therefore, request the Honourable Minister that these disqualifying words should be omitted from the clause. This would not only make the clause look dignified but will maintain our prestige.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in sub-clause (6) of clause 5 of the Bill, the words 'or within the twelve months last preceding has been' be omitted."

Dr. B. Pattabhi Sitaramayya: We shall be obliged, Mr. Speaker, if the Mover of the Bill would kindly tell us what he means. Does he say that 'having been a member' means 'is not still a member'? 'Has been' means 'is still'. 'Is still' is covered by 'being'. You are unnecessarily introducing a period of twelve months there. Therefore it ought to be omitted. I hope I have made myself clear.

आनरेबल श्री एन० वी० गाडगिल : मैं इस तरफ़ीम को स्वीकार नहीं करता हूँ और उसकी वजह यह है। ऐसा हो सकता है कि जब एपायन्टमेंट (appointment) का सवाल आजाता है तब फौरन आदमी इस्तीफा दे देगा और फिर एपायन्ट (appoint) हो जायगा। इसके रखने से ऐसा नहीं हो सकता। और चूँकि यह ठीक रहे और इसकी इन्टेग्रिटी (integrity) रहे और बिल्कुल अच्छा मामला रहे, इस लिये मैं इस सुझाव को नहीं मानता हूँ।

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I do not accept this amendment, for the reason that when the question of an appointment arises, a person will resign forthwith and then get himself appointed. The existing provision words would prevent this. In the interests of the integrity, efficiency and smooth working of the Board, I do not accept this amendment.

Dr. B. Pattabhi Sitaramayya: Then it must be "had been" and not "has been".

Shri K. Santhanam: "Has been" means "was and is not".

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: "Has been" means continuing.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: For the words "has been" I am prepared to accept "was" if the honourable member moves such an amendment.

Shri K. Santhanam: I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (6) of clause 5 of the Bill for the words 'has been' the word 'was' be substituted."

Mr. Speaker: Before I put that amendment to the House, we will dispose of Mr. Bhatt's amendment.

श्री गोकुलभाई दौलतराम भट्ट : मंत्री महाशय ने जो खुलासा दिया है, वह खुलासा वास्तव में बहुत संतोषकारक तो नहीं मालूम होता है तो भी मैं यह मानता हूँ कि वे ज्यादा तजुर्वेकार हैं और इस लिये मैं अपना संशोधन वापिस लेता हूँ।

Shri Gokulbhai Daulatram Bhatt: Although the explanations given by the Honourable Minister who has vast experience do not appear to be quite satisfactory, yet I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Has the honourable member leave of the House to withdraw his amendment?

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (6) of clause 5 of the Bill for the words 'has been' the word 'was' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

श्री गोकुलभाई दौलतराम भट्ट : सभापति जी, मेरी तरफीय यह है :

"That in sub-clause (6) of clause 5 of the Bill, the words 'or any local authority' be added at the end."

वहाँ मैंने सेंट्रल (Central) या प्राविन्शियल (Provincial) लेजिस्लेचर के बाद लोकल एथारिटी (Local authority) यह शब्द रखे हैं क्योंकि धारा १० में लोकल एथारिटी (Local authority) का सदस्य होना अयोग्यता मानी गई है। यहाँ भी वह चीज़ आनी चाहिये।

Shri Gokulbhai Daulatram Bhatt: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (6) of clause 5 of the Bill, the words 'or any local authority' be added at the end."

I have inserted these words after the words "Central or of any Provincial Legislature", because in Clause 10, membership of a local authority has been treated as a disqualification. Similar provision should, therefore, also be made here.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I am prepared to accept it.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (6) of clause 5 of the Bill, the words 'or any local authority', be added at the end."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (7) of clause 5 of the Bill, for the word 'merely', the word 'only' be substituted."

Sir, the text says:

"No act done by the Board shall be called in question on the ground merely of the existence of....."

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: Sir, I accept it. I will accept this "only"!

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (7) of clause 5 of the Bill, for the word 'merely', the word 'only' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (7) of clause 5 of the Bill, for the words 'or any defect', the words 'or of any defect' be substituted."

Sir, this is only a drafting change.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I do not accept it.

Mr. Speaker: Acceptance or rejection does not make much difference. Need I put it to the House?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: No, Sir.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 5, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 5, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 6 of the Bill, the word 'following' be omitted."

Sir, the text says, "subject to the following provisions of this section". This is at the commencement of the clause. I submit that whatever remains of the clause, apart from this passage, certainly constitute "following" provisions. If we say, "subject to the provisions of this section" it certainly means subject to the following provision, that is, the whole Section. Therefore, there is no point in saying, "subject to the following provisions of this section". It is never said in any other context.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: Sir, I accept this.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 6 of the Bill, the word 'following' be omitted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 6 of the Bill, after the words 'provisions of this section', the following words be inserted:

"the Governments of two contiguous Provinces may, after they have issued notifications under sub-section (4) of section 1, instead of forming separate Boards under section 5, enter into an agreement to provide a joint Provincial Electricity Board to exercise the functions of a Board for both the participating Provinces, or."

Sir, the text merely says that when one Province forms a Board a contiguous Province may accept that Board as the Board for the latter Province. But it may be that it would be more convenient for two contiguous Governments to form a joint Board. In fact, the advantage in this would be that the Members from both the provinces would be on the Board. Instead of accepting a Board formed by one Government it would be more convenient to form a Board jointly by the two Governments. The text does not have this arrangement. The present arrangement is less convenient and might be difficult to both the Governments.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: Sir, I do not accept it.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 6 of the Bill, after the words 'provisions of this section', the following words be inserted:

"the Governments of two contiguous Provinces may, after they have issued notifications under sub-section (4) of section 1, instead of forming separate Boards under section 5, enter into an agreement to provide a joint Provincial Electricity Board to exercise the functions of a Board for both the participating Provinces, or."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I beg to move:

"That in part (a) of sub-clause (3) of clause 6 of the Bill, the word 'Provincial' be omitted."

Sir, here "Governments" means Provincial Governments. The word "Provincial" is absolutely unnecessary. When we speak of a participating Government in the context, it is the Government of a Province and not the Centre at all; the Centre comes into the picture only under Clause 3 in constituting the Central Electrical Authority. In the present context and in the rest of the Bill the Governments are all Provincial. So this is unnecessary and it is for this reason that I ask for the deletion of this.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in part (a) of sub-clause (3) of clause 6 of the Bill, the word 'Provincial' be omitted."

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I am not accepting it.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg leave of the House to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Has the honourable member leave of the House to withdraw? The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 6, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 6, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Clauses 7 and 8 were added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 9 of the Bill, for the words 'or any fuel', occurring in line six, the words 'or of any fuel' be substituted."

This is only a drafting change.

Mr. Speaker: Is this necessary?

Shri K. Santhanam: I think it is a wrong amendment, because the word "supplying" qualifies fuel also.

Mr. Speaker: So I need not put it to the House.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 9 of the Bill, for the words 'if he, under any will or by succession or gift becomes entitled for his own benefit to any such interest', the following be substituted:

'if he becomes entitled for his own benefit to any such interest under any will or by succession or gift'."

I beg to submit that the original text is a little roundabout and somewhat poetic. Mine is only a re-arrangement of the words but it will improve and strengthen the text. It is simple and on the orthodox line.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 9 of the Bill, for the words 'if he, under any will or by succession or gift becomes entitled for his own benefit to any such interest', the following be substituted:

'if he becomes entitled for his own benefit to any such interest under any will or by succession or gift'."

The motion was negatived

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 9 of the Bill, for the words 'he shall sell the same within three months after becoming so entitled thereto', the following be substituted:

'he shall, in the case of a will or succession, sell the same within three months after he obtains probate of the will or a succession certificate in respect of the succession, as the case may be, and, in other cases within three months after becoming entitled thereto'."

Sir, the original text is that if a member of the Board is entitled to certain shares or interests in properties in which he should not have interest, then he should sell it within three months but three months might be too short in some cases. If a man obtains it by a will, then in order to be able to sell, he must first of all obtain a probate. That may take six months or a year or more. In case of succession, a man cannot sell unless he takes out the succession certificate. In these circumstances, in these two cases where the preliminary formalities or requisites may take some time, it should be three months after the obtaining of the probate or the succession certificate. In other cases, it may be three months after he becomes entitled thereto. I have only interposed the time taken for the necessary formalities in obtaining the probate or the succession certificate. I submit therefore that this amendment is absolutely necessary and it would remove the gap.

Mr. Speaker: Unless I am committing a mistake, I think a probate or a succession certificate does not give title to property, but the expression "entitled" is there clear enough. So there seems to be some apparent conflict in the amendment itself. Would the honourable member consider his position?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I am entirely in the hands of the House.

Mr. Speaker: That means I should put the amendment to the House and the House may reject it.

The question is:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 9 of the Bill, for the words 'he shall sell the same within three months after becoming so entitled thereto', the following be substituted:

'he shall, in the case of a will or succession, sell the same within three months after he obtains probate of the will or a succession certificate in respect of the succession, as the case may be, and, in other cases within three months after becoming entitled thereto'."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Speaker: I will now put Clause 9 to vote. The question is:

"That clause 9 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 9 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That for part (a) of clause 10 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

'(a) in the opinion of the Board is a lunatic or has become of unsound mind; or'."

Sir, the text will create some difficulties and will land the Board into some legal troubles. It says that a member ceases to have office if he is found to be a lunatic or becomes of unsound mind. Who is to find a man to be a lunatic? I think, Sir, almost every man has some amount of lunacy. If a man is sufficiently angered he discloses this mentality. So I submit it is a question of personal opinion. The Board may say that a man is a lunatic but he says "I am not a lunatic" then who is to decide the issue? So I have placed the matter entirely in the discretion of the Board. If it is not intended that the matter should be thrashed out in a court of law and it will come to the Federal Court and take several years, the best way to deal with the situation is to give the Board the power. So, I have said: "in the opinion of the Board is a lunatic or has become of unsound mind." It absolutely removes the question from the jurisdiction of the Court.

Shri H. V. Kamath (C. P. and Berar: General): I submit, Sir, the Board should not be invested with absolute discretion in the matter of determining lunacy. I would suggest that the amendment should be recast to read: "if he is found to be lunatic by a competent authority".

Mr. Speaker: That also would seem to be unnecessary because clause (b) says "is adjudged insolvent". That means adjudged by competent authority. Although this is not specifically mentioned in regard to (a), it applies to (a) by implication. "Adjudged" is the expression used.

Shri H. V. Kamath: Who is to adjudge?

An Honourable Member: Naturally the court.

Mr Naziruddin Ahmad: I think the amendment of Mr. Kamath would make it absolutely clear.

Mr. Speaker: I think the Provincial Government will decide. In any case, the Board will not sit as a medical Board.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Already there are I see doubts in the House.

Mr. Speaker: What does the member want? Shall I put his amendment to the House?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Mr. Kamath's would be better.

Mr. Speaker: But he has not submitted any amendment.

Shri H. V. Kamath: I merely suggested.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, he has suggested but I am not permitting it. There is no notice of it. So I will put Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad's amendment to the House.

The question is:

"That for part (a) of clause 10 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

'(a) in the opinion of the Board is a lunatic or has become of unsound mind; or'."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 10 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 10 was added to the Bill.

Clauses 11 to 14 were added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in clause 15 of the Bill, for the words 'as may be required', the words 'as the Board may consider necessary' be substituted."

Here again a similar situation arises in which the Board may have to decide something. The text says that the Board may appoint a Secretary and such other officers and servants as may be required. I beg to submit that it leads to some doubt as to in whose opinion it may be required. "As may be required" is an abstract expression. Is it "as may be required" by the Court or other authority or as the Board may require? In these circumstances I have said the combined effect of the amendment would be the Board may appoint a secretary and such other officers as the Board may consider necessary or as it may consider necessary.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I do not require any change.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in clause 15 of the Bill, for the words 'as may be required', the words 'as the Board may consider necessary' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 15 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 15 was added to the Bill.

Clauses 16 and 17 were added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in clause 18 of the Bill,—

(i) before the word 'Subject', the brackets and figure (1) be inserted;

(ii) the word 'and' occurring in line six, be omitted; and

(iii) before the word 'without' occurring in line six, the brackets and figure '(2)' be inserted."

Sir, the amendment provides that the clause be divided into two parts. Usually a clause like this is always divided into two sub-clauses (1) and (2), but the clause has been drafted to be one. The first part of the clause says:

"Subject to the provisions of this Act, the Board shall be charged with the general duty of promoting the co-ordinated development of the generation, supply and distribution of electricity within the province in the most efficient and economical manner, with particular reference to such development in areas not for the time being served or adequately served by any licensee."

I submit up to this it is one complete subject and it should be the subject-matter of one sub-clause. Then the second part which I wish to separate is this: "Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing sections it shall be the duty of the Board" to do certain things. In rule-making powers the general power is given in sub-clause (1). Then it is said that without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing provisions, the Board will have the following powers and so on. This is the usual way for separating the two and I have merely attempted to divide the clause into sub-clause (1) and sub-clause (2) in the orthodox style. This amendment may be accepted for drafting reasons.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I do not accept.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in clause 18 of the Bill,—

(i) before the word 'Subject', the brackets and figure '(1)' be inserted;

(ii) the word 'and' occurring in line six, be omitted; and

(iii) before the word 'without' occurring in line six, the brackets and figure '(2)' be inserted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in part (a) of clause 18 of the Bill, for the words 'carry out when sanctioned schemes under Chapter V', the following be substituted:

'carry out schemes when sanctioned under Chapter V'."

I beg to submit that the original text is more poetically expressed than prosaically expressed as it should have been. It says "carry out when sanctioned schemes under Chapter V". I say "carry out schemes when sanctioned under Chapter V". This is simpler and therefore better.

Shri K. Santhanam: That may be accepted.

Mr. Speaker: He is prepared to accept the amendment with the following words: "carry out schemes sanctioned under Chapter V". This is an improvement on an improvement.

The question is:

"That in part (a) of clause 18 of the Bill, for the words 'carry out when sanctioned schemes under Chapter V', the following be substituted:

'carry out schemes sanctioned under Chapter V'."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 18, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 18, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest one another way. It will be better for the honourable member if he goes through with the Honourable the Minister in charge of the Bill, his various amendments, so that he may move only those as are acceptable and drop out the others, unless the honourable member thinks, if the amendment is not accepted, that it is of such importance that it must be put to the House. That will save us time and energy also.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: The Honourable Minister is a very busy man and his time is more valuable than mine. I am practically a legal vagabond, but it will not suit the Honourable the Minister.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure it will suit him; it will be saving the time of the House and from that point of view I am making this suggestion.

Shri H. V. Kamath: By your leave, Sir, the amendment which is accepted does not convey the intention of the clause. It will mean, if accepted, "will prepare and carry out schemes sanctioned under Chapter V"; the last phrase will qualify preparing also.

Mr. Speaker: That will be arguing on a matter which was settled in the House. If it is so very inconvenient, an amending Bill may be brought.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 19 of the Bill, for the words 'competent to supply', the words 'competent for the Board to supply' be substituted."

The words, for the Board, are to my mind, necessary.

Mr. Speaker: I may point out a difficulty to the honourable member. When such drafting or verbal amendments are considered in the House, one is unwilling to accept them unless one considers them as essential. Because it is a matter of drafting, merely at the sight of the thing, it would be difficult to understand its implications. The change ostensibly may be verbal; but still it may affect the draft of the Bill. If an amendment is accepted, if it is good it is well and good; otherwise, there is some mischief. If a good amendment is rejected because of this nervousness as to whether that would fit in with the draft, even then, the legislation does not come out as best as it should. It is from that point of view, apart from the point of view of saving the time of the House, that I suggested that such amendments should be carefully gone through by the member proposing the amendment with the Honourable Minister. We shall thereby be really improving the Bill, avoiding pitfalls and saving the time of the House. That is how I feel about it; it is not merely the idea of saving time.

May I know which of the amendments are acceptable to the Minister?

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I am not accepting any of these verbal amendments.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Let them be moved and rejected, Sir.

Mr. Speaker: Then, I shall put them to the House.

The question is:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 19 of the Bill, for the words 'competent to supply' the words 'competent for the Board to supply' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 19 of the Bill, for the words 'the provisions of his licence notwithstanding', the words 'notwithstanding the provisions of his licence' be substituted."

Sir, this is open to objection on the same ground. I am treading on orthodox lines; these are new lines of draftsmanship with which we have never been familiar.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 19 of the Bill, for the words 'the provisions of his licence notwithstanding', the words 'notwithstanding the provisions of his licence' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (3) of clause 19 of the Bill, for the word 'licence' the words 'or the terms of his licence' be substituted."

Sir, the amendment makes it more explicit.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (3) of clause 19 of the Bill, for the word 'licence' the words 'or the terms of his licence' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 19 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 19 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 20 of the Bill, for the words 'in accordance with any regulations', the words 'subject to any regulations' be substituted."

Sir, the context shows that the expression should be used in this way: that the Board shall act with a certain amount of freedom subject to the provisions of any regulations. That is why I have attempted to express it in this way.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I am not accepting the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 20 of the Bill, for the words 'in accordance with any regulations', the words 'subject to any regulations' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 20 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 20 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in clause 21 of the Bill, for the words 'as are necessary', the words 'as the Board may think necessary' be substituted."

This amendment gives the discretion to the Board rather than leaving it to be decided by any arbitration or court.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: Not accepted.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in clause 21 of the Bill, for the words 'as are necessary', the words 'as the Board may think necessary' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in the Proviso to clause 21 of the Bill, for all the words occurring after the words 'under a licence' to the end, the following be substituted:

"the Board shall give the licensee notice to show cause why the Board shall not take such measures and shall give the licensee an opportunity of being heard thereon and shall, before taking the proposed measures, consider the cause shown by him, if any."

Sir, the text is rather involved and is not very clear. That is why I have attempted to re-arrange the expression and put it this way.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I do not accept the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in the Proviso to clause 21 of the Bill, for all the words occurring after the words 'under a licence' to the end, the following be substituted:

'the Board shall give the licensee notice to show cause why the Board shall not take such measures and shall give the licensee an opportunity of being heard thereon and shall, before taking the proposed measures, consider the cause shown by him, if any'."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 21 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 21 was added to the Bill.

Clause 22 was added to the Bill.

[At this stage Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair, which was then occupied by Shri K. Santhanam (one of the panel of Chairmen)].

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 23 of the Bill, for the words 'make loans', the words 'grant loans' be substituted."

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I accept the amendment.

Shri H. V. Kamath: I oppose the amendment. If accepted, it will read "grant loans or advances". Usually, it is 'grant loans or make advances'.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: 'Grant loans or advances' is perfectly correct.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 23 of the Bill, for the words 'make loans', the words 'grant loans' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I move:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 23 of the Bill,—

(i) for the word 'expand', the word 'extend' be substituted; and

(ii) for the word 'expansion' wherever it occurs the word 'extension' be substituted."

The clause speaks of expansion, but there is a lot of difference between expansion and extension. Expansion means that something is made by inflation to appear bigger than what it is, as a small rubber balloon is made to expand when one blows into it. But extension means going beyond the limits of the business and increasing or strengthening it. So in my view "extend" and "extension" would be more appropriate than "expand" and "expansion".

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: Sir, I do not accept it.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 23 of the Bill,—

(i) for the word 'expand', the word 'extend' be substituted; and

(ii) for the word 'expansion' wherever it occurs the word 'extension' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That clause 23, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 23, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: Sir, I move:

"That for clause 24 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

'24. Power to Board to contribute to certain association.—The Board may, subject to any regulations made in this behalf,—

- (1) pay such subscriptions as it thinks fit to any association for the promotion of the common interests of persons engaged in the generation, distribution and supply of electricity and the members of which consist mainly of such persons;
- (2) contribute such sums as it thinks fit to the funds of any recognised society the object of which is to foster the development and use of electricity or promotion of knowledge and research in respect of electricity or electrical appliances."

The need for this amendment is that the clause as it now stands is somewhat obscure and the amendment clarifies the position.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: Sir, I accept it.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That for clause 24 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

'24. Power to Board to contribute to certain association.—The Board may, subject to any regulations made in this behalf,—

- (1) pay such subscriptions as it thinks fit to any association for the promotion of the common interests of persons engaged in the generation, distribution and supply of electricity and the members of which consist mainly of such persons;
- (2) contribute such sums as it thinks fit to the funds of any recognised society the object of which is to foster the development and use of electricity or promotion of knowledge and research in respect of electricity or electrical appliances."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That clause 24, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: Sir, I move:

"That in clause 25 of the Bill, for the words 'subject to the prior approval of the Provincial Government', the words 'subject to such conditions as may be prescribed' be substituted."

These words "subject to the prior approval of the Provincial Government" were inserted by the Select Committee; but on further reflection it seems that there will be a lot of complications if the Provincial Governments have to be consulted at every stage. On the other hand the feeling is that if rules are made in regard to the regulation of the appointment of Consulting Engineers by the Provincial Government the situation will be adequately met. That is why this amendment is moved.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: Sir, I accept the amendment.

Shri H. V. Kamath: Sir, I oppose this on the ground that after all the conditions to be prescribed would be prescribed by the Provincial Government, and there is no harm in going to the Provincial Government for approval to the appointment of Engineers under this Act.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That in clause 25 of the Bill, for the words 'subject to the prior approval of the Provincial Government', the words 'subject to such conditions as may be prescribed' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That clause 25, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 25, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Clauses 26, 27 and 28 were added to the Bill.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: Sir, I move:

"That in sub-clause (3) of clause 29 of the Bill,—

- (i) for the words 'Central Technical Power Board' the word 'Authority' be substituted; and
- (ii) for the words 'that Board' the words 'the Authority' be substituted."

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: Sir, I accept this.

Shri H. V. Kamath: Sir, what is the importance or significance of this amendment?

Mr. Chairman: It is consequential on the setting up of the Central Electricity Authority; it was an oversight of the Select Committee.

The question is:

"That in sub-clause (3) of clause 29 of the Bill,—

- (i) for the words 'Central Technical Power Board' the word 'Authority' be substituted; and
- (ii) for the words 'that Board' the words 'the Authority' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: I have an amendment to move to this Clause. It is on the typed list.

Mr. Chairman: When was the notice given?

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: It was given this morning.

Mr. Chairman: Then, I cannot give you permission to move it.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: Can I speak on the Clause itself?

Mr. Chairman: Yes, you can speak.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: I had pointed out earlier that the Authority had not been given sufficient powers to discharge its duties. At present it is a kind of recommending Authority only. I want that the Authority should have the power to sanction schemes. I also want that all schemes which cost more than rupees five lakhs should be submitted to it for sanction before they are carried out.

This morning my friend Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari pointed out certain sections of the Government of India Act. The present Act which we are passing is an Act for a new and free India and the Government of India Act should not stand as shackles on our feet. This Authority should have the power to take the initiative and give a drive to its schemes. I hope that when the new Constitution is passed we will take into account all these difficulties. All planning for key industries should be in the hands of Parliament at the Centre and I do not think that Parliament and the Provincial Legislatures will be fighting with each other in these matters. I am sure that with the Honourable Mr. Gadgil here as Minister in Charge in the Parliament at the Centre, Madras and any other provinces will be only too eager to co-operate with him. I, therefore, hope that he will accept my amendment even though it has not been formally moved, and see that the Central Authority is clothed with more power. If you refer to the British Act, you will find that there the entire power is given to the Central Authority. Here I find that all the power is given to the Regional Boards. I think this is a very big lacuna which should be removed. I hope the point I have raised will be considered by the Honourable Minister and though my amendment cannot be formally moved, I hope he will accept its substance.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: In this connection there is one instance which has come to my knowledge. The Madras Government had sanctioned the purchase of two portable generators for the City of Madras. Actually they had to have a Cabinet meeting very hastily and had the project sanctioned because the seller's market was only open for a week.

So if it happens that in a major scheme you have to refer to the Central Technical Authority before you place the order, you can take it that you will not be able to get the goods. As a matter of fact the two generators cost Rs. 96 lakhs but their cost would have gone up in the region of Rs. 150 lakhs if there was delay. The former cost stood at Rs. 25 lakhs though that had been raised to Rs. 50 lakhs by the Select Committee. Such a procedure will merely put a shackle in regard to the development of major provinces and I feel that there is no substance in the suggestion made by my friend, the Professor.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That clause 29, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 29, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Clauses 30 to 36 were added to the Bill.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): Sir, I move:

"That in part (a) of sub-clause (1) of clause 37 of the Bill, after the words 'station or', occurring in the last line, the words 'undertaking or' be inserted."

I believe it is a slip, an omission, and it is to bring it in line with the isolated portion.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I accept it.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That in part (a) of sub-clause (1) of clause 37 of the Bill, after the words 'station or', occurring in the last line, the words 'undertaking or' be inserted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I move:

"That in part (b) of sub-clause (1) of clause 37 of the Bill, for the words 'average of the Reserve Bank rates between the said dates', the words 'the Reserve Bank rates for the said days' be substituted."

In calculating interest it has been provided that between the date of the lending and the date of repayment, the average of the Reserve Bank rate should be the basis and one per cent. over it should be charged. — But it would be difficult to calculate between two dates what would be the average Bank rate. It would be simpler to charge the Bank rates for particular dates which are known and one per cent. above it. In fact, if the Reserve Bank rate is two per cent. for a few days and three per cent. for the rest of the days, the effect would be that the charge for this loan would be three per cent. for the earlier days and four per cent. for the later days, instead of calculating the average of those days, which would depend upon a large number of uncertain factors. In fact the rates prevailing on particular dates should be taken into account in finding out the average. Even then the matter would not be a simple affair. Instead of that we should charge for particular days the Reserve Bank rate for those days plus one per cent. more. This would be simpler and easier.

Mr. Chairman: May I point out that if there are 100 days you would have to calculate separate interest.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: In finding out the average rate one has to go through the same procedure.

Mr. Chairman: The rate is taken as the average and then they calculate it. However, if the member wants I will put it to the House.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I do not accept it.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That in part (b) of sub-clause (1) of clause 37 of the Bill, for the words 'average of the Reserve Bank rates between the said dates', the words 'the Reserve Bank rates for the said days' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That clause 37, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 37, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: Sir, I have an amendment.

Mr. Chairman: I am afraid I cannot allow amendments at this stage unless they are purely verbal. No substantial amendments can be allowed without proper notice.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: Sir, I have drawn the attention of the House this morning to clauses 38 and 39. I have suggested that all the words beginning with the words "but the Board may" to the end be omitted. This morning my friend Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari said that we would be there in the Constituent Assembly to prevent an abuse of these clauses. When we ourselves give this power after full debate and deliberation to the Board, we cannot complain later on if it is abused. The clause as it runs at present says:

"but the Board may with the sanction of the Provincial Government, make arrangements with any licensee or other person for its operation, if in the opinion of the Board it is desirable to do so."

If we are honest and sincere that in future no new industrial establishment should be privately owned, then this part must be removed. In fact I wonder how after the announcement of the industrial policy by the Honourable the Prime Minister that no new undertakings or industries shall be privately owned we could allow this. My suspicion is based on experience. This is what will happen. Wherever vested interests are strong they will persuade the Board to say that it is not very feasible for the Government to undertake the work in which these vested interests are interested. They will say that they have got the experts, the necessary capital and a big plant ready at hand and that they would undertake the work. The result would be that after sometime they will control the entire electrical industry and the Government will not be able to own the industry. Besides unproductive enterprises will be taken up by nobody, unless the State takes them up. Other interests will not do it. What I suggest is that this part of the clauses should be removed. It must be said in this Bill that the new enterprises shall be taken over by the Board and none of them shall be given to the private capitalists. This will at least show that at any rate in this industry we mean that no private enterprise should come in. In fact we sometimes forget that we are living in times when nations are moving at a very fast speed. Everybody is trying to multiply production of electrical energy and power double-fold and treble-fold and yet we are going on at this slow pace. I do not know when we will be able to catch up with them. Unless we realise this and try to develop our potential strength in the near future we will not be able to stand up in this world. At least in the matter of electricity, it is all important that the Centre must plan, co-ordinate and take the initiative. There must be no scope for private enterprise in this field and all electrical development of the country must be done by the State in a manner that the whole country might develop to the maximum all its power resources and might become the equal of any other country in the world in this matter.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Madras: General): I suppose when you say Government you include the Provincial Governments also?

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: Yes. What I want is that the Central Government and the Provincial Governments must co-operate and work hand in hand and develop the industry. There must be some amendment to these clauses so that the Board may not have the power to pass on schemes to private enterprise. This will be injurious and I hope this amendment will be accepted.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That clauses 38 and 39 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 38 and 39 were added to the Bill.

Clause 40 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I move:

"That for sub-clause (1) of clause 41 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

"(1) Where the Board considers it necessary to use any transmission lines of a licensee for any of its purposes, it may, on payment to the licensee of charges calculated in accordance with the provisions of the Fifth Schedule, use such lines to the extent to which the capacity of such lines is or hereafter remains in excess of the requirements of the licensee for the transmission of electricity."

It is only a rearrangement of the different expressions used in different parts into what I consider to be a logical manner. The original sub-clause read:

"Where the Board considers it necessary to use for any of its purposes any transmission lines or main transmission lines of a licensee, the Board shall have power to use such lines to the extent to which the capacity thereof is or thereafter remains surplus to the requirements of the licensee for the transmission of electricity, on payment of charges calculated in accordance with the provisions of the Fifth Schedule."

The weakness in this to my mind is that the words "for any of its purposes" have been misplaced and the last part of the sub-clause "on payment of charges calculated in accordance with the provisions of the fifth schedule" has also been misplaced. If you read this amendment carefully it will be found that it has been rearranged in its natural sequence and would read better as suggested by me. It is with this idea that I have submitted my amendment.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: Sir, I do not accept the amendment.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That for sub-clause (1) of clause 41 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

"(1) Where the Board considers it necessary to use any transmission lines of a licensee for any of its purposes, it may, on payment to the licensee of charges calculated in accordance with the provisions of the Fifth Schedule, use such lines to the extent to which the capacity of such lines is or hereafter remains in excess of the requirements of the licensee for the transmission of electricity."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 41 of the Bill, for the words 'surplus to', the words 'in excess of' be substituted."

The context says "the capacity thereof is or thereafter remains surplus to the requirements of the licensee". The words "surplus to" seem to be inappropriate.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: How does it seem inappropriate?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: To my mind it appears so. It is the mind of a single man. "Surplus to" may be appropriate in any other context but not in this.

Mr. Chairman: Amendment moved:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 41 of the Bill, for the words 'surplus to', the word 'in excess of' be substituted."

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: Sir, I do not accept the amendment.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I wish to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. Chairman: Has the honourable member the permission of the House to withdraw his amendment?

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 41 of the Bill, for the word 'agreed', the words 'agreed upon' be substituted."

I think this amendment would be accepted by the Honourable Minister. This expression appears not only in this sub-clause but also in other places, especially in clause 43.

Mr. Chairman: There is also the expression "upon such terms" in the sub-clause. The word 'upon' is already there. Unless the honourable member removes it the word 'upon' will occur twice.

Shri H. V. Kamath: It must be "agreed to".

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I should then like to have it as "agreed to".

Mr. Chairman: Even in that case unless you remove the word "upon" in the existing sub-clause it will not read properly. You may have to say ".....for such time and such terms as may be agreed to" or "agreed upon".

Shri H. V. Kamath: It has got a different meaning there. "The Board may.....use.....upon such terms as may be agreed to". That is perfect English.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: The same expression appears in clause 43, sub-clause (2), line 2. There the wording is "agreed upon" and the word "upon" was introduced by an amendment in the Select Committee. The Select Committee accepted the word "upon" as a necessary part of "agreement". It also appears in sub-clause (1) of clause 43, and it should be "agreed upon". In the present context, however, the words "agreed to" would be better. I would quite accept the suggestion of Mr. Kamath and would say that the words should be "agreed to" rather than "agreed upon". That amendment would just fit in with the context.

The Chairman: Amendment moved:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 41 of the Bill, for the word 'agreed', the words 'agreed to' be substituted."

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I am not accepting it. Let the clause remain as it is.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 41 of the Bill, for the word 'agreed', the words 'agreed to' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That clause 41 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 41 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That for clause 42 of the Bill, the following clause be substituted:

"42. Where provision in such behalf is made in a sanctioned scheme for the placing of any wires, poles, wall-brackets, stays, apparatus and appliances for the transmission and distribution of electricity, or for the transmission of telegraphic or telephonic communications necessary for the proper co-ordination of the works of the Board, the Board shall, notwithstanding anything contained in sections 12 to 16 and 18 and 19 of the Indian Electricity Act, 1910 (IX of 1910), but without prejudice to the requirements of section 17 of that Act, have all the powers which the telegraph authority possesses under Part III of the Indian Telegraph Act, 1885 (XIII of 1885) with regard to a telegraph, established or maintained by the Government or to be so established or maintained."

I beg to submit that this is a rearrangement of the words of the section. There are so many clauses and sub-clauses with exceptions and 'buts' in a most confusing order. If the amendment is accepted the different conditions are placed therein in a proper order.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I do not accept it.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That for clause 42 of the Bill, the following clause be substituted:

"42. Where provision in such behalf is made in a sanctioned scheme for the placing of any wires, poles, wall-brackets, stays, apparatus and appliances for the transmission and distribution of electricity, or for the transmission of telegraphic or telephonic communications necessary for the proper co-ordination of the works of the Board, the Board shall, notwithstanding anything contained in sections 12 to 16 and 18 and 19 of the Indian Electricity Act, 1910 (IX of 1910), but without prejudice to the requirements of section 17 of that Act, have all the powers which the telegraph authority possesses under Part III of the Indian Telegraph Act, 1885 (XIII of 1885) with regard to a telegraph established or maintained by the Government or to be so established or maintained."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That clause 42 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 42 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That for sub-clause (1) of clause 43 of the Bill, the following sub-clause be substituted:

"(1) The Board may enter into an agreement with any person producing electricity within the Province, on such terms as may be agreed upon, for the purchase by the Board of any surplus electricity which that person may be able to dispose of."

It is only a rearrangement of the words.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I do not accept it.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That for sub-clause (1) of clause 43 of the Bill, the following sub-clause be substituted:

"(1) The Board may enter into an agreement with any person producing electricity within the Province, on such terms as may be agreed upon, for the purchase by the Board of any surplus electricity which that person may be able to dispose of."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 43 of the Bill, for the word 'arrangements' the words 'an agreement' be substituted."

The text says that the Board may enter into arrangements with either Government or any person etc. The word 'agreement' would be better.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: 'Arrangement' is different from 'agreement'. Arrangement is by agreement.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: 'Arrangement' is a loose expression, but 'agreement' is a precise expression meaning a proposal, acceptance and contract which is enforceable in law. Arrangement deals with smaller matters.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I do not accept it.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 43 of the Bill, for the word 'arrangements' the words 'an agreement' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 43 of the Bill, for the word 'agreed', the words 'agreed upon' be substituted."

Mr. Chairman: Here the word 'on' is there in the sub-clause. That is the real difficulty.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Then it may be 'agreed to'.

Mr. Chairman: But it has been rejected before.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: That was in a different context.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I oppose the amendment.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 43 of the Bill, for the word 'agreed', the words 'agreed upon' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That clause 43 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 43 was added to the Bill.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 44 of the Bill, after the word 'Government', the following be inserted:

'or any Corporation created by legislation enacted by the Central Legislature'."

Mr. Chairman: Amendment moved:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 44 of the Bill, after the word 'Government', the following be inserted:

'or any Corporation created by legislation enacted by the Central Legislature'."

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I am going to accept it.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Sir, I know the Honourable Minister in charge of this Bill will accept it. But I want him to consider if I may add the words "Provincial Government" also. The object is this.....

Mr. Chairman: A Corporation cannot be set up by a Provincial Government according to the Constitution.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: The object of the Section is this:

"Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force or in any licence but subject to the provisions of this Act, it shall not be lawful for a licensee, or any other person not being the Central Government except with the previous consent in writing of the Board, to establish or acquire a new generating station or to extend or replace any major unit of plant or works pertaining to the generation of electricity in a generating station."

It is not for the purpose of establishing a Corporation. This clause as it stands prohibits all but the Central Government from establishing any generating station except with the consent of the Board. My amendment which has been accepted by the Honourable Minister implies that this right to establish, without the permission of the Board, any generating station is given not only to the Central Government but to any Corporation established by law by the Central Legislature.

I want to add further the right of the Provincial Government also to establish a generating station whenever it is necessary, without seeking the consent of the Board. My friend Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari told me that there is another provision here which always enables the Provincial Government to give directions; but I am not able to find it. When any Board is constituted, thereafter even the Government will have to be at the mercy of the Board. We very often put questions here as to what has been done with the grant to the Industrial or Technical Research Board and then they say it is an autonomous body. The very parent which creates a body subsequently becomes a slave to that body! If somebody is taken and put into jail, the Home Department says, "We are absolutely helpless; you go to the Provincial Government"! Let us not create a ghost and become a prey to that ghost; this is something like Bhasmasura. So far as the Central Government is concerned we were anxious to give power to the Board to establish power stations. We wanted to enlarge the scope for any corporation established. (Interpretations).....

My friend the Minister I suppose accepts the addition of the words "or a Provincial Government".

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I am not accepting the addition.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: But let me explain.....

Mr. Chairman: The honourable member has moved his original amendment.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: You cannot accept my statement in part and reject it in part; it is accepted as a whole or rejected as a whole.

Mr. Chairman: But the amendment seeking to add the words "or a Provincial Government" is not on the Order Paper. He will have to give notice; unless the Government Member and others accepted it he cannot move an amendment which is not on the Order Paper.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: My only point is, why should they plug their ears even before they understand the rationale of it?

Mr. Chairman: That is between you.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: On a point of order, Sir, my honourable friend, if I understand him aright, has only started with a sort of an explanation asking for permission from the Minister in charge of this Bill.

Mr. Chairman: I know that, but the amendment has been moved.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Sir, may I ask this on a point of order? When a person moves an amendment, you allow him to move the amendment and make a speech also. While he is interrupted by another member he sits in his seat. Then is it the right of the Chair to.....

Mr. Chairman: The honourable member had sat down.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: I was rising on a point of order.

Mr. Chairman: All right, then I will give you an opportunity of speaking further, but I do not allow you to amend the amendment.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: That is all right.

Mr. Chairman: You are free to speak. Whether I shall put the amendment or not, I shall decide.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: I am requesting the leave of the House to allow this to stand over so that I may discuss this matter with my friend and then bring it before the House. I am trying to make a very reasonable suggestion and a request to the House. Why should it not consider it? You know it restricts even a Provincial Government like Madras which has started the electricity undertakings and distribution even long before this Act can come into force. I want that in such cases provision should be made to exempt the Provincial Governments from the Provisions of this Act. This amendment is in consonance with my speech on the motion for consideration of this Bill. Now inadvertently those words have escaped notice and therefore I want to convince my friend if possible so that we may take a decision if we can. The House will agree with me that it is not as if I am introducing a novel thing. I spoke yesterday and took nearly one hour of the time of this Honourable House and tried to say that this kind of compromise is a half-way house between State and private enterprise. State enterprise is there in Madras. These are experiments going on—one is a child and the other is grown up. Take these three and find out which is suitable for our country. I do not mean to say that straightaway you must start nationalizing with this industry, nor do I say that it must be given over to private enterprise.

These are all experiments and one experiment has already thrived so far as Madras is concerned. Under these circumstances it is not as if I am trying any novel arrangements just for the time being. It is rather unfortunate that while we are trying to clothe the Central Government with power over the head of a Board which we are creating, Provinces are not given power to establish Boards as autonomous bodies for the purpose of establishing generating stations etc. carrying power to the very doors of the villagers. We are creating a Central Board; we are creating an exception in the case of the Central Government; the Central Government can, without the consent of that Board and over the head of the Board, establish wherever it likes a generating station; in emergency it will have power to do so. But this amendment which the honourable Mover has accepted introduces one other institution also. That is that not only is power given at present to the Central Government to override the powers of the Board but by this amendment which I have moved and which has been accepted, power is given to any corporation established by the Central Legislature. Corporation does not have the same status and representative character as the Central Government, which is based upon the vote of this House. Therefore for a lesser entity we are giving the power. Why should I place the Provincial Government in a worse position than even a Corporation established by the Central Government? For instance, the Damodar Valley Corporation—can it pretend to be much bigger than the Bihar Government when it is established? You are denying the Bihar Government the right to establish generating stations whereas you are trying to confer on the Damodar Valley Corporation the right to establish a generating station without consulting this Board. How on earth does my honourable friend feel that the amendment that I have moved is improper or otherwise not acceptable? It may be that he may not accept it, but I crave the leave of the House to keep this over and if it comes to that I will divide upon this matter and I appeal to you, honourable members of this House. This is a very important matter and I am not going to yield. If the honourable member consents to let it stand over well and good. There are so many other provisions; so many other schedules which have to be considered. Therefore I crave leave to allow this amendment to stand over till tomorrow or the next day on which this will come up. If permission is not granted, I shall make my few more submissions on this and then appeal to the House to vote for this amendment.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: May I submit that this is a reasonable prayer that the motion do stand over till the Honourable Minister is in a position to consider the matter. It involves a very large question of principle and nothing will be lost by its standing over. Therefore, the request should be allowed.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I am prepared to accept the suggestion made by the honourable member that this clause may stand over till day after tomorrow. Meanwhile, other clauses may be taken up.

Mr. Chairman: Then we shall go on to Clause 45.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 45 of the Bill, for the word 'stations' occurring in line one, the word 'station' be substituted."

I am well aware that the plural includes the singular and vice versa, but in choosing the singular or the plural the context must be respected and in this context the singular is indicated.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I accept it, Sir.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 45 of the Bill, for the word 'stations' occurring in line one, the word 'station' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That clause 45, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 45, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (5) of clause 46 of the Bill, for the words 'the price which would have been payable for any equivalent portion', the following be substituted:

'the average price which would have been payable'."

The amendment is very reasonable. I expect the House will kindly accept it.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (5) of clause 46 of the Bill, for the words 'the price which would have been payable for any equivalent portion', the following be substituted:

'the average price which would have been payable'."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That clause 46, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 46, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Clauses 47 to 52 were added to the Bill.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: Sir, I beg to move:

"That for sub-clause (2) of clause 53 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

'(2) The Board and any licensee shall each have a right of access at all times to his own property on, in, over and under the property of the other'."

Sir, this is merely clarifying the present position.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That for sub-clause (2) of clause 53 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

'(2) The Board and any licensee shall each have a right of access at all times to his own property on, in, over and under the property of the other'."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That clause 53, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 53, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in clause 54 of the Bill, for the word 'agreed', the words 'agreed upon' be substituted."

Sir, for my authority I shall refer the House to sub-clause (2) of Clause 43 where the words "agreed upon" has been specially introduced. "Upon" has been specially introduced in the Select Committee by way of an amendment. So this mode of draftsmanship is an agreed thing with regard to the Select Committee. If this amendment is not accepted, then of course when the appropriate time comes, I shall move for the deletion of the word "upon" which has already been inserted by the Select Committee.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I do not accept, Sir.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That in clause 54 of the Bill, for the word 'agreed', the words 'agreed upon' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

The Chairman: The question is:

"That clause 54 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 54 was added to the Bill.

Clauses 55 and 56 were added to the Bill.

The Assembly then adjourned till a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock on Wednesday the 11th August, 1948.

WHITE PAPER ON HYDERABAD

INTRODUCTION

Government of India's approach to problem of States.—The approach of the Government of India to the problem of Hyderabad has been governed by their general policy towards the Indian States. India is not a mere geographical expression but an economic and political entity. The States are an integral part of India. The economic and political unity of India was maintained till the lapse of Paramountcy by the Crown, which operating through the Political Officers, provided the nexus between the Indian States and the Central and Provincial Governments. The pivot of this arrangement was the Viceroy, who represented to the Indian States the suzerainty of the British Crown, while at the same time, he was, in relation to British India, the head of the Government. The Indian Independence Act relieved the States from all their obligations to the Crown and in consequence India's unity was seriously threatened with disintegration. The Government of India sought to avert this grave threat by negotiating constitutional relationship with the Indian States on the basis of their accession to the Dominion of India on the three subjects of defence, foreign affairs and communications. This was no emotional approach nor any expansionist policy, nor power politics. Highly practical reasons of geography, all-compelling defence and internal security requirements and other equally strong considerations rendered India's organic unification imperative. The following quotation from Sir Reginald Coupland shows very clearly how vital this unity is to the very existence of the Dominion of India:—

"An India deprived of the States would have lost all coherence. For they form a great cruciform barrier separating all four quarters of the country. If no more than the Central Indian States and Hyderabad and Mysore were excluded from the Union, the United Provinces would be almost completely cut off from Bombay, and Bombay completely from Sind. The strategic and economic implications are obvious enough. The practicability of Pakistan must be admitted, but the more the separation of the States from British India is considered, the more impracticable it seems. India could live if its Moslem limbs in the North-West and North-East were amputated, but could it live without its heart?"

Accession of States.—The Rulers of Indian States realised that it was better for both the Provinces and the States "to make laws sitting together as friends than to make treaties as aliens", and they acceded to the Dominion of India before the lapse of paramountcy and also executed Standstill Agreements. The Nizam dreamt of independence and procrastinated.

Policy of integration and democratisation.—The accession of the States to the Dominion of India was the first phase of the Government of India's policy to fit the States into the constitutional structure of India. The second phase was their consolidation into viable and sizeable units and their democratisation. This policy was based on their recognition of the patent fact that if the States were to find an honourable and lasting place in free and democratic India, their politics must be readjusted on the basis of the supremacy of popular interests. The sincerity of purpose with which the Government of India have pursued this policy is borne out by the fact that within a period of less than a year the inner and external set up of the States has been completely revolutionised and constitutions based upon the principle of full transfer of power to the people are operating in the States and the newly formed Unions of States. The Rulers were quick to appreciate the change and accepted the Government of India's policy of integration and democratisation. The Nizam alone refused to march with the times.

Hyderabad brochure.—In a brochure recently issued by the Nizam's Government it is stated:—"The Nizam feels bound to maintain individual entity of Hyderabad with its special problems, history and traditions."

It further states:

"Among the 600 Indian States Hyderabad was the largest and its Ruler, the Nizam of Hyderabad and Berar, held a unique and pre-eminent position. The Nizam's dominions are larger than the United Kingdom and about the half the size of France. His subjects number seventeen millions, more than twice the population of any other Indian State and more than Canada, Australia and any other Dominion outside the Indian sub-continent. Hyderabad has its own Government, its own civil service, its own modern army, its own police, university, railways and industries. Its finances are organised on modern lines with a budget and what is in these days abnormal, the budget is surplus."

Then follows the astounding assertion "Hyderabad, in fact, is a country and is organised as a country."

Hyderabad's so called special problems.—What are Hyderabad's special problems? The main problem would seem to be the perpetuation of Hyderabad's feudal structure. The other problems apparently relate to the mechanics, which include the organisation of militant elements of the minority population to thwart the legitimate aspirations of the people; preparations for an armed conflict, etc.

Hyderabad's History.—The history of Hyderabad is in itself an effective answer to the Nizam's pretensions to independence. Nor are the traditions of Hyderabad such as to admit of being invoked with any measure of pride or satisfaction. Hyderabad historically belongs to that category of the States which were founded by the agents of foreign invaders and is, therefore, relatively of a later origin compared to several other ancient historic States. A special feature of the history of Hyderabad has been that not only did it never enjoy independence but it also never established a legitimate claim to it by making any sacrifices in the cause of independence. The Rulers of Hyderabad were never able to maintain themselves without foreign protection. Even while under the vassalage of the Moghul Emperor the State first came under the military protectorate of the French and later of the British. Yet another feature of the history of Hyderabad has been the readiness of its Rulers to transfer their allegiance to the stronger power. Lastly, an important characteristic of the history of Hyderabad has been the full impact of the paramountcy of the British Crown not only in external affairs of the State but also in respect of its internal affairs.

Hyderabad under paramountcy.—The major part of the history of Hyderabad is linked with British rule in India. During this period, in all the essentials of the feudal system in India, the Nizam stood in the same category as other chiefs. The Paramount Power operated as a standing check on misrule in Hyderabad. The Resident's intervention in State affairs had been practically continuous since 1800 and the Paramount Power intervened more frequently and decisively in Hyderabad than in any other major State. The honorific title of 'Faithful Ally' was of little moment when compared with the historical fact of the position actually accorded to the Nizam by the Paramount Power. The treaty position of the Nizam in respect of non-intervention in internal matters was no better than that of a group of States which included even some 13 gun-salute States. The British Government interposed from time to time its authority in Hyderabad, in the military affairs, in the revenue administration, in the selection and appointment of Ministers and maintaining them in office, in introducing reforms and in reorganisation of the finances; in compelling the Nizam to control his sons and to regulate their education installing the Nizams and investing them with full powers. The British authority was also repeatedly asserted to induce in the Nizam's mind a conception of his position more in accord with history, precedent and with his own interests. Finally, Lord Reading in his letter dated 23rd March, 1926, gave a public burial to the Nizam's claim to revolve in an orbit of his own.

Untenable claim on the basis of ordinary attributes of administrative units.—Geographically, Hyderabad is not the largest, but the second largest State. Numerically, it can claim to be the most populous Indian State, but considering the fact that the civil liberties and rights of the vast majority are ruthlessly curbed and circumscribed, the State would seem to consist politically of its fascist minority alone. Politically Hyderabad is a land of stagnant backwaters and ranks as the most backward among the Indian States as they exist to-day.

The Hyderabad State has no doubt its Government, civil service, police force, budget and industries. Most of the 600 units that were known as States at the lapse of paramountcy, had these attributes of separate administrative entities. Some had Governments, progressive in character such as those of the neighbouring States in the South; others less mediaeval or more compared to that of Hyderabad. All these States have rapidly moved with the times and have now a democratic set up. Hyderabad alone has a Government totally unrepresentative of the majority of the people.

A mere glance at the relative ratio of the minority and majority population in services should be sufficient to condemn the basic structure of the Civil Service of the Hyderabad State. Hyderabad maintains a farcical system of recruitment, which assigns privileged position to certain sections and is based on unmasked favouritism and nepotism. The budget of the Hyderabad State again is a standing condemnation of the system which allows an autocrat to appropriate vast sums from the public exchequer for his personal comforts and idiosyncracies.

Hyderabad has no doubt an army. A number of other States also maintain armed forces with most creditable martial traditions behind them. The forces of the States have a definite place in the over-all defence structure of India. Under their engagements with the British Hyderabad was not entitled to keep an army larger than that of important States such as Gwalior. However, the Hyderabad forces have of late been clandestinely expanded to back the Nizam's bid for power.

The Hyderabad State has a currency. So have several others. This currency has survived only because it is linked with Indian currency at a fixed rate of exchange.

The Hyderabad State has a postal system of its own. Fourteen other States were entitled to maintain a separate postal system. Of these, five known as Convention States including the State of Chamba, which has since been integrated in the Himachal Pradesh, had superior postal rights, in that the mail bearing its over-printed stamps was carried by the postal department of the Government of India all over the country.

A number of States likewise have their own railways, telephone and telegraph lines. The States of Mysore, Travancore and Rajputana have their own universities.

Mask of communal unity.—These ordinary attributes of an administrative unit which Hyderabad retains in common with other States make out no case for Independence. The overriding consideration, the Hyderabad brochure boldly asserts, that weighed with the Nizam in choosing independence, was his desire to maintain Hyderabad's traditions of unity and friendship between all classes of the population which would have been imperilled by his accession to India. It needs some courage to make such a statement on behalf of the Ruler of a State in which the minority monopolises all rights and privileges and the majority has no civil liberties and lives in a State of utter serfdom.

Implications of the lapse of paramountcy.—The Nizam and his apologists have made much of the argument that in the circumstances attending the British Government's declaration of the lapse of paramountcy, it was open to the Nizam to remain independent. This is divorcing the British Government's declaration from its context. The British Government's policy and intentions regarding the lapse of paramountcy are clearly indicated in the Memorandum dated 12th May, 1946, in regard to States Treaties and Paramountcy, which specifically stated that the void created by the lapse of paramountcy will have to be filled either by the States entering into federal relationship with the successor Government or Governments in British India or failing this, entering into particular political arrangements with it or them. These particular arrangements which were to be the only alternative to federal relationship, could not but be in the nature of paramountcy or subordinate association of the States with the successor Governments. The Cabinet Mission's Statement dated 16th May, 1946, also while recognising the principle that paramountcy was not to be transferred to the new Government presupposed the willing co-operation of the States and the plan had as its integral part the accession of the States to the Dominion of India in respect of the three subjects of defence, foreign affairs and communications. Although the Cabinet Mission's plan was superseded by the British Government's Statement of 3rd June, 1947, it undoubtedly embodied their considered policy as regards the position of the States under the future polity of India.

Future of people not governed by legalistic claims of doubtful validity.—The future of political communities and States is not governed by such declarations. An issue like this involving the defence of India, the integrity of her territory, the peace and security of the country and above all the common interests of the State of Hyderabad as well as India could not be allowed to be solved by mere legalistic claims of doubtful validity. The lives of millions of people cannot be trifled with on the dubious ground that one individual claims to acquire such a right through processes affecting paramountcy, which the British themselves claimed to derive not from any treaty or declaration but from the fact of their being the dominant power in India. Whatever the legal implications of the lapse of paramountcy may be, the British declaration of policy did not apply to the Nizam alone; it applied to all the six hundred States. The Nizam alone chose to make himself the sole heir to the rights flowing from this declaration.

The Standstill Agreement.—The Government of India invited the Nizam to accede to India as they believed, accession would give Hyderabad a place of honour and dignity in India's constitutional structure. They had at no time any doubt that linked as Hyderabad is with India the establishment of an organic relationship between the two by the accession of the State on the three subjects would prove to be the only solution of the problem of the Hyderabad State. The Nizam's Government asked for a period of two months for further consideration which was granted, and Lord Mountbatten was entrusted with the task of conducting further negotiations. On 29th November, 1947, the Government of India entered into a Standstill Agreement with the Nizam without the accession of the State to the Dominion of India. This was an exceptional arrangement to which the Government of India had not agreed in the case of any other State. In the case of the Hyderabad State they acquiesced in such an arrangement to accommodate the viewpoint that the Nizam's Government had to overcome some internal difficulties. The Government of India hoped that the agreement would bring Hyderabad closer to India and they believed that given an atmosphere of friendship and cordiality, it would be possible for the Nizam to come to the only right and appropriate decision, namely accession to India. It was also felt that the maintenance for a limited period of the status quo between the Government of India and the Nizam on the lines on which his relationship was regulated with the Crown Representative minus paramountcy would promote this end. The events that have followed have belied the Government of India's expectations and they have only proved that concessions to intransigence and dictatorial tendencies solve no problems; the unsolved problems come home to roost.

Government of India's gesture of goodwill.—The Government of India spared no effort to implement the agreement in the spirit in which it was concluded. They had agreed as a part of this agreement to withdraw their troops stationed in the Cantonment of Secunderabad. They carried out that very important part of the bargain. It was a very important part because the Government of India troops staying in Secunderabad dominated Hyderabad in a military way. Nothing could have been easier than to maintain these forces in the heart of the State and thus control the situation in the State. Yet in their desire to make the agreement a success the Government of India withdrew their troops from Hyderabad. What has been the response of the Nizam's Government to this gesture of goodwill?

Nizam's Government's disappointing response.—While trying to extract the maximum advantage from the agreement and the respite that it gave them to assert the independence of Hyderabad, they have acted in violation of the agreement from the very moment of its conclusion. Even while the agreement was being negotiated they were engaged in a major breach of it in the form of negotiating an advance of a loan to the Pakistan Government. Other serious breaches of the agreement have been made in respect of external affairs, communications and other matters of common concern. As regards matters relating to defence, they repudiated in terms and defied in action their obligations under the Indian State Forces Scheme of 1939, a basic agreement saved by the Standstill Agreement. Under this scheme the Crown—now by virtue of the Standstill Agreement the Government of India—has the power to regulate the strength and the classification of the units of the State forces. They unauthorisedly increased their army, started manufacturing arms and ammunition; purchased war materials and smuggled them into the State; threw out a network of agents throughout India to smuggle arms, ammunition and military equipment from the Indian Provinces.

Preparations for an armed conflict have been going on at high speed. For some months past Hyderabad has been a war camp. Gun-running is being carried on by land and by air. Of the means adopted the recent flight of Mr. Sydney Cotton from Karachi to Hyderabad across the Indian territory in open violation of the Indian regulations may be cited as an instance. A network of hostile propaganda machinery has been organised by the Nizam and his Government both in India and abroad to malign the Government of India.

The most alarming feature of recent developments in Hyderabad which is seriously straining the goodwill and the friendly intentions of the Government of India towards Hyderabad, has been the rapid growth of the Ittehad-ul-Muslimeen and its semi-militarised organisation of the Razakars with the active and sustained support of the Nizam and his Government. The Ittehad and the Razakars have embarked upon a virulent anti-Indian campaign, and are indulging in most provocative anti-Indian activities. In many parts of the State, their savage atrocities culminating in a large number of incidents have brought about a virtual collapse of law and order. The contiguous districts of the three Indian Provinces, Bombay, Madras, Central Provinces and Berar, have been raided again and again. The agents of the Razakars have formed centres in many of the Indian Provinces and States and have been responsible for creating communal tension. These activities of the Razakars carried on under the inspiration and support of the Nizam and his Government have been a grave menace to the public tranquillity of India. In the course of protracted negotiations the Government of India repeatedly drew the attention of the Nizam's Government to the desirability of their taking effective measures for stopping the border raids, disbanding the Razakars and thereby creating a situation in which the tension which was mounting high in the whole country would subside, but the Nizam's Government have persisted in their refusal to cooperate.

Profession of friendship belied by actions.—The Nizam and his Government have been ostentatiously professing a desire to keep friendly relations with India and to enter into a permanent association with her. Inside the velvet glove of these professions stands, however, the mailed fist of the ranting and raving leader of the Razakars who threatens to march to Delhi to fly the Asafn flag over the Red Fort. The extent to which his hold on the Nizam has been consolidated is evident from the fact that he could stop by show of physical force the Chhattari delegation from proceeding to Delhi to conclude an agreement; he could also secure the resignation of Chhattari Ministry and put into office a Ministry of his choice.

Mr. Razvi's bullying tactics.—Under Mr. Razvi's influence the fascist technique is in full swing in Hyderabad. Thus for instance until recently the Nizam's Government were most vehement in their denouncement of the Communists; in fact, the raison d'être of the Razakar movement was sought in their role as saviours of the State from the Communist menace. Now the Nizam's pro-Ittehad Government have lifted the five year old ban on the Communists and efforts are being made for an Ittehad-Communist alliance to make common cause against India. The Nizam's Government are pressing into service against India all elements communal, feudal and communist. All that is anti-democratic or anti-Indian is grist to the Ittehad mill.

Rejection of responsible government and plebiscite proposals.—The approach of the Nizam and his Government to the basic issues involved lends no support to their professions of a desire to enter into a permanent association with India. During the negotiations conducted in recent months, the Nizam's Government rejected the suggestion made by the Governor-General on behalf of the Government of India for Hyderabad's accession to the Indian Dominion. They also rejected another suggestion made by the Government of India for the establishment of responsible Government as they apprehended that this would also lead to accession. The Government of India had offered as early as August 1947 facilities to enable the Nizam to test the will of the people by sending British officers to conduct a referendum on the issue of accession but the offer was declined by the Nizam. In a cryptic reply to the Governor-General he asserted that "the problems of the constitutional position of Hyderabad are such that the question of referendum does not arise". It was again suggested on behalf of the Government of India in April 1948 that there should be a plebiscite and that some arrangements should be made for carrying on administration in the State which would ensure a fair and impartial plebiscite. The Government of India persistently emphasized their basic policy that in such matters the will of the people must be the determining factor. The proposal was, however, rejected by Mir Laik Ali, who expressed himself against a plebiscite on the amazing ground that the announcement of the intention to hold a plebiscite will result in the deterioration of the law and order situation in the State. The recent effusive declarations of the Nizam in favour of plebiscite have to be viewed against this background; these declarations conveniently shelve the fundamental issue that a plebiscite in Hyderabad has no meaning so long as a Government hostile to the popular interests is in power and enables the Razakar terrorists to hold a vast majority of population to ransom.

Last phase of negotiations.—Mir Laik Ali suggested that instead of an Instrument of Accession there should be an Instrument of Association. The Government of India agreed for the time being not to press their demand for accession but to enter into an agreement on the basis of the application of the legislation of the Government of India to Hyderabad in respect of the three subjects of defence, foreign affairs and communications. The principle of overriding legislation by the Government of India was first accepted by Mir Laik Ali but was subsequently repudiated. The Government of India in order to meet the wishes of the Nizam deleted the provision and also accepted another important amendment in respect of the provisions relating to the Constituent Assembly. Several other amendments proposed by the Nizam's Government were also agreed to by the Government of India in the interest of peace and in their anxiety to reach a settlement. While the Government of India had thought that the agreement had been finalised by his delegation, the Nizam again declined to accept it until some other points including the principle of freedom of trade and economic and fiscal arrangements were accepted. This could not be accepted by the Government of India as it repudiated the whole basis on which the agreement was sought to be negotiated. The Nizam also made the allegation, which was subsequently withdrawn, that some alterations had been made in the draft without the knowledge of Mir Laik Ali.

Immediate advantage guide to negotiations.—The manner in which the Nizam's Government have conducted these negotiations prove it beyond doubt that no principle but immediate advantage had been the guide to these negotiations. It is a long story of repeated journeys of the Prime Minister and other Ministers and Advisers of the Hyderabad Government to Delhi and back. They came and went back more than once with provisional agreements, which were subsequently repudiated.

Government of India's effort to accommodate.—In spite of the fact that public opinion in India has been most critical of the Government of India's policy towards Hyderabad, in their anxiety to avert the consequences of a conflict they went to the farthest limit, consistent with the fundamentals governing the issues involved, to accommodate the Nizam's Government. They are now convinced that it will serve no purpose to hold any further negotiations with the Nizam's Government until there is a change on their part in regard to the basis of their approach to the problem. Every move of the Nizam's Government has the avowed intent of emphasising the sovereignty and independence of Hyderabad. This repudiates the very basis of the Standstill Agreement, which required that status quo (including the position of Hyderabad as a State in association with India and having no external status) should be maintained.

Hyderabad's independence threat to India's security.—India cannot accept Hyderabad's claim to independence as an independent Hyderabad will be a grave threat to the defence, internal security and economy of India. An independent State completely landlocked within the heart of another is an unheard of proposition. To compare Hyderabad to Switzerland or Austria, on the ground that they are landlocked and have no access to sea, is to turn one's back to elementary history and geography. Switzerland and Austria have common frontiers with more than one State and their politics and economy have accordingly developed on a different basis. If all the Provinces of India were independent States and one of the three Provinces bordering Hyderabad questioned the right of this State to independence on the ground that it was landlocked, the analogy of Switzerland and Austria would hold good. As it is, however, the distinctive and decisive feature of Hyderabad's geographical set-up is that if it makes with a foreign State any defence, economic or other arrangements, which are prejudicial to India's interests, it cannot implement such arrangements without violating India's sovereignty over her own territories. An analogy nearer the mark will be provided if the State of Colorado asserted independence against the U.S.A. and the country of Worcester or Warwick against Great Britain. Even more perverse is the astounding statement that India's demand for Hyderabad's accession is comparable to Canada's demand for the incorporation of Newfoundland, a separate island State, having no geographical link with Canada.

With a vast majority of its population eager to throw off the age-long tyranny of personal rule Hyderabad will be an easy prey to any foreign power. It is protected from external aggression by India and is virtually an Indian protectorate. The Government of India cannot allow the Nizam and his Government to abuse this position and to develop Hyderabad into a base for foreign anti-Indian influence, or vested interests in complete repudiation of the elementary obligations to India inherent in Hyderabad's geographical set-up.

Grave dangers of Hyderabad's policy.—The grave dangers to which an independent Hyderabad would expose India are already beginning to manifest themselves. The Nizam's Government are not only engaging themselves in foreign contacts prejudicial to India's interests but are also disrupting India's economy by trying to divorce the economy of this State from that of India and linking it with other countries. The Ittehad and the Razakars constitute a serious threat to the peace and tranquility of India. Their activities threaten to provoke retaliation from those in India, who sympathise with the unhappy lot of the majority population in Hyderabad. By their constant efforts to appeal to the communal instincts of the Muslim minority in India, the Razakars are trying to subvert the loyalty of the Indian Muslims to the Dominion.

Conflict between democracy and fascism.—The Government of India stand for a democratic and secular India and for an India in which each citizen has freedom to pursue his own religion and has equal rights and opportunities and obligations as the other. India aims at a polity where there would be freedom of opportunities for all, freedom from soul-cramping communalism and the opportunity to grow and to serve oneself while serving others. India has paid the supreme price of the martyrdom of the Nation's Father in her pursuit of that great ideal.

Hyderabad of today, on the other hand, is not only a stronghold of mediaeval feudalism but also a plague spot of militant fascism and communal fanaticism. The political structure of Hyderabad is the very antithesis of democracy; the Razakar ideology, which dominates Hyderabad, is automatically and irrevocably against popular freedom and democratic concepts.

The frontiers of India cannot be insulated against the seepage of the poison which permeates Hyderabad of today. In the same country democracy and militant fascism cannot function in separate compartments. Either one or the other must prevail; either one or the other must go under.

CHAPTER I

HISTORICAL RETROSPECT

The history of Hyderabad is singularly devoid of any distinguishing features which constitute the venerable traditions of a State or a nation. Historically, Hyderabad falls in the category of the States which were founded by the officials of the foreign invaders and consolidated during the emergence of the British power. Neither, therefore, in its origin nor in its achievements does it compare favourably with the historic States like Udaipur, which had established themselves before the main waves of foreign invasions and whose history enshrines glorious deeds of chivalry and sacrifices in the cause of freedom or personal honour. The history of Hyderabad has been one of unprincipled opportunism, abortive quest for power and inglorious and uninterrupted dependence.

Establishment of Ruling house by Asaf Jah; continued allegiance to Delhi.

The ruling house of Hyderabad was established by Asaf Jah, an officer of the Moghul Emperor, in 1713. Though the Moghul empire was disintegrating, Asaf Jah never renounced his allegiance to Delhi though he ceased making remittances of treasure on the ground that all the financial resources of the country were required to protect it from the Mahrattas. His successors also continued to owe allegiance to Delhi as long as the Moghul Emperor retained his titular sovereignty. Even as late as 1829 Nasir-ud-Dowlah obtained confirmation of his succession from the Emperor and his application was accompanied by a nazar of 101 gold mohars and a pearl necklace. The connection with Delhi was further maintained by a superscription on the Hyderabad coinage indicating its subordination to the Delhi Emperor. This superscription was continued till 1858 when the British Crown assumed responsibility for the administration of India.

The first Nizam was engaged in a perpetual struggle with the Mahrattas who succeeded in establishing a paramount influence at Delhi, one result of which was that they secured Chauth or the one-fourth of the revenue of the Deccan by an Imperial rescript. Asaf Jah died in 1749.

Nizam's under foreign protectorate.—After Asaf Jah's death, no Ruler of Hyderabad has been able to maintain himself without foreign military aid. The Nizam was always an easy prey to the neighbouring powers and invariably sought shelter under foreign military protectorate. His alliance was governed by the exigencies of times and was transferred from one power to the other with amazing frequency.

The Nizam under French Protectorate.—Two of Asaf Jah's sons after his death fought a minor war of succession. Three years later one of his sons, Salabat Jah with the help of Dupleix, who was then founding a strong French empire in the South, established himself as the Nizam. A keen contest was then going on between the French and the English for the supremacy of South India. The Nizam first threw in his lot with Dupleix who, assisted by Bussey, was then winning brilliant victories against the East India Company. Bussey continued to reside at the Nizam's court protecting him from the Mahrattas in return for the four Northern Circars districts.

Treaty with the British.—In 1759 following the outbreak of war between the French and the British the Circars were seized by a British force and British possession of this territory was confirmed by a Sanad from Delhi in 1765. This led to an invasion of the Carnatic by Nizam Ali, who had ousted his brother in 1762. The Hyderabad forces were repulsed by a British Division and peace was finally concluded by the treaty of 1766, by which the Nizam placed himself under British military protectorate. He was accorded protection against the Mahrattas in the West and against Hyder Ali of Mysore, who had in the meantime emerged as a strong power in the South.

Nizam's bid for independence.—In the following year the Nizam in search of independence broke his treaty with the British and allied himself with Hyder Ali. A united attack was made by the joint forces of Hyder Ali and the Nizam on the British. The attempt failed and by the Treaty of Masulipatam of 1768 the British again succeeded in attaching the Nizam to themselves by imposing a military protectorate over him. From 1778 a British Resident and a subsidiary force were planted in Hyderabad. Despite the new agreement the Nizam in 1779 endeavoured to organise a coalition, to which Hyder Ali of Mysore was invited, with the Mahratta Chieftains to invade the Circars. This plan again failed and a King's officer was deputed to the Nizam's court to keep him loyal and to maintain his precarious existence against the Mahrattas.

Disastrous battle of Kurda.—A few years later the Mahrattas revived their claim to Chauth against the Nizam. By reason of their treaty with the Peshwa, the British Government declined to interfere. This was followed by the disastrous battle of Kurda in which the Nizam's forces were defeated and the Nizam was compelled to agree to a humiliating position by which he lost large tracts of territory including most of Berar and in addition was called upon to pay a heavy indemnity as well as arrears of Chauth.

The Nizam under British Protectorate.—This was followed by the Nizam again veering round to the French orbit but in 1798 Wellesley finally got the Nizam to get rid of the French force which was in his pay and to accept an increase in the British subsidiary force at Hyderabad. A year later the power of Tipoo, Hyder Ali's son, was finally broken and his well-governed territories were dismembered, a part of which was given to the Nizam by British goodwill. The rapid deterioration under the Nizam's gross misrule of the lot of the prosperous people whom the British thus handed over to him, has been described by John Malcolm, an eye-witness, as follows:—

“The different quotas to be paid by each inhabitant had been fixed; and every species of torture was then being inflicted to enforce them. Men and women, poor and rich were suffering promiscuously. Some had heavy muskets fastened to their ears; some large stones upon their breasts; whilst others had their fingers pinched with hot pincers; their cries of agony and declarations of inability to pay appear only to whet the appetite of their tormentors.”

In the following year the Nizam ceded to the British a part of his territory in order to buy military protection and the strength of the subsidiary force was raised. The area ceded to the British consisted of the whole of the acquisitions from Mysore in the wars of 1790 and 1799. In other words, he purchased military protection from the British with the spoils of war secured through the successes of the British arms.

In 1803 Nizam Ali died and was succeeded by his son Secunder Jah. The same year war broke out with the Mahrattas, the Scindia and Holkar. The Nizam's Government not only failed to implement their part of the obligations in the war but were also guilty of unfriendly acts towards the British. As a result of this behaviour the Governor-General insisted on the Nizam signing an additional article to the treaty agreeing to the admission of British troops into his fortresses. At the close of the war, despite the Nizam's failure to fulfil his obligations, he received from Scindia and the Raja of Nagpur a greater part of Berar lost in the Kurdla campaign of 1795.

The advantages gained by the Nizam by his subsidiary alliance with the British were stressed by Lord Wellesley in a despatch in 1799. The Governor-General sternly commanded the Nizam to be awakened to “a just sense of extensive advantages” his connection with the British had brought him. “His enemies had been destroyed at little expense to him,” added the Governor-General “from a weak decaying and despised State he has recovered substantial strength.....and resumed a respectable posture among the Princes of India”.

Existence of the State owing to British connection.—The rest of the history of Hyderabad is no more than the perpetuation of its existence under the British protection and repeated interposition of the British authority to save the State from gross misrule. The following extract from an important memorandum of 1926 from the then British Resident at Hyderabad clearly states the extent to which Hyderabad owed its very existence to the British connection for over a century and a half and shows how the British viewed the problem of Hyderabad:—

“There can be no doubt that it (Hyderabad) owes its very existence to the British connection. The Asafia Family had not taken strong root in the Deccan in 1800; in point of fact, it may be said that it has never ceased to be foreign. Without the British, it must have relied on the handful of Muslims domiciled in the State; a forlorn hope against Maratha resurgence. Left entirely to himself it is doubtful if the present Nizam would be able to maintain himself for any length of time.

Three strong currents of political activity converge on Hyderabad; the Maratha, the Andhra and the Kanara movements. The object of these movements is to build up again the old provinces where the various peoples predominated; and their success would mean the disappearance of Hyderabad. Already a subtle campaign of propaganda is going on from the three directions indicated. Good government is the only antidote to this poison, and it must be regretfully observed that the Nizam's attitude for the past five years leaves but a faint hope that he would, if he realised his dreams of unchecked absolutism consider the welfare of his people in the least degree.

The limitations on internal sovereignty which Paramountcy implies have been shown to exist as fully developed in the case of Hyderabad as elsewhere. The present Ruler desires to revert to the position existing before, in 1798, his ancestor made over to the British the military control of his territories. Such a reversion is impossible so long as he enjoys military protection. Without such protection, a Hindu insurrection would soon sweep away Muslim rule unless the British Government allowed the Nizam to recruit mercenaries and to import the latest military arms and equipment from outside. Would the co-religionists of the Hindus in the State, in Bombay, Madras, and the Central Provinces stand quietly by and see their compatriots massacred? The British Government would unquestionably be involved. It is in fact impossible, treaty or no treaty, to allow an unfettered despotism to be set up in Hyderabad.

This in brief is Hyderabad's history; the Nizam and his enterprising advisers wish to forge it into an instrument of independence.

CHAPTER II

PARAMOUNTCY AND THE POLITICAL STATUS OF THE NIZAM

From what has been stated in the foregoing chapter it is clear that the main part of the history of Hyderabad is closely linked with the advent and consolidation of the British power in India. The so-called pre-eminent position that the Nizam claims for himself could have no historical sanction behind it other than the status that the British accorded to him. The political status of the Nizam under the paramountcy of the British Crown has therefore an important bearing on the Nizam's claim to preferential treatment relative to other States and may be examined in some detail.

Paramountcy Independent of Treaty Engagements.—The theory of Paramountcy had not been elaborated when the Treaty of 1800 was concluded with the then Nizam. As in the case of the treaties with several other States such as Gwalior, Jammu and Kashmir, Baroda, Indore, Bhopal, the Rajputana States, Orchha and the Phulkian States of the Punjab, the treaty of 1800 did not involve surrender of internal sovereignty. However, the Nizams at that time had no claims to sovereign power and were feudatories of Delhi. Their allegiance to Delhi continued till 1858 when the British succeeded in name to the sovereignty and authority of the Moghuls, which they had in actual fact enjoyed since the downfall of the Peshwa in 1818. The political supremacy and paramountcy of the British were inherent in the arrangement that imposed a military protectorate on the Nizam. The most important implication of military protectorate is the political subordination of the protected State to the protecting power. Another implication of such a protectorate which the British urged was the right of the protecting power to ensure a reasonably good government in the protected State. The British as the Paramount Power, therefore, claimed prerogative rights of intervention in Hyderabad as in other States independent of treaty engagements.

Intervention in Hyderabad's Internal Affairs.—This right was repeatedly asserted and exercised by the Paramount Power in respect of the Hyderabad State in complete repudiation of the Nizam's claim to internal independence. The following may be cited as instances of the interposition of such authority:—

(a) In 1835 the Nizam was informed under the orders of the Directors that the British Government could not remain indifferent spectators of disorder and misrule and unless these evils were remedied, it would be necessary to urge him to change his Minister and adopt such other measures as the case might require.

(b) In 1867 after a ministerial crisis the Governor-General informed the Nizam that disorder in Hyderabad might compel his Government to interpose its authority in a manner highly distasteful to the Nizam.

(c) In 1897 the financial collapse in Hyderabad compelled the Government of India to submit to the Secretary of State proposals for very drastic interference and the Secretary of State in approving their proposals said that beyond doubt the depletions of a State's finances would, if not otherwise checked, be a valid reason for authoritative interference and control.

(d) In October 1911, a few months after the accession of the present Nizam, he was warned by Lord Hardinge that "he was on his trial for two years; at the end of which it would be just as easy for the Government of India to appoint a Council of Regency as now".

(e) In 1919, the Nizam was twice warned by Lord Chelmsford, the first time in a letter and the second time in personal interview that the Government of India claimed the right to intervene in cases of misrule. In his letter Lord Chelmsford spoke of intervention by 'friendly advice', but in conversation with the Nizam he spoke more frankly. He said:

"It has always been clearly laid down that I cannot tolerate misrule and results such as I have indicated to you are to my mind clear evidence of personal misrule. It would be impossible for the Government of India to give their support to any Ruler, who permitted the continuance of such a state of things as I have indicated".

It was thus established beyond doubt that while the Paramount Power had full and exclusive control over all external affairs of the Hyderabad State, even in internal affairs the sovereignty of the Nizam was over-borne and limited by the Paramount Power's prerogative of intervention. Apart from the general limitations on internal sovereignty which applied to Hyderabad in common with other States in matters relating to jurisdiction over European British subjects, installations, external loans, telegraphs and telephones, post-offices, railways, manufacture of arms and ammunition, opium, salt, etc., reference may be made to the following specific instances in which the Government of India or the Resident interfered in the internal affairs of Hyderabad in the interests of the State and its people, for the improvement of the administration or the restoration of law and order.

(i) Appointment and removal of Ministers

During the last century and a half of British rule, the Paramount Power offered advice on these matters so frequently that the right to intervene had been recognised both by the present Nizam and by his predecessors. Intervention was made more or less decisively in regard to the appointment of Mir Alam, Raja Chandu Lal, Salar-i-Jung, Salar Jung II, Vikar-ul-mulk, Sir Krishna Pershad, Sir Ali Imam, Sir Akbar Hydari and in numerous other cases. The late Nizam admitted to the Resident that it was a tradition in his family that the Minister should be appointed with the consent of the British Government and the present Nizam in his memorandum of 28th July, 1918, stated that as regards the appointment of a Minister he had to consult the Resident and obtain the consent of the Government of India. This tradition was rigidly followed right up to the lapse of paramountcy and was a special feature of the Crown's relations with the State which claims for itself a pre-eminent position. No other major State suffered from such perpetual disability in the matter of the appointment of its own Ministers.

(ii) Removal of undesirables

There are several cases in which the Paramount Power effectively intervened to rid the Nizam of undesirable influences. Undesirables thus removed included Mahipat Ram (1806-7), Sarwar Jung (1897), Akbar Ali (1900), Lal Khan (1914) and Abdullah Khan (1918).

(iii) Constitutional Reforms

The Paramount Power was consulted in regard to all constitutional changes. Thus for instance, the late Nizam obtained the Viceroy's approval to the creation of a Council of State and in 1893 the Qanuncha (rules regarding the constitution of Government) was drawn up in consultation with the Resident and the Government of India.

(iv) Financial reforms

In 1899 at Lord Curzon's suggestion the Nizam agreed to limit his demands on the State treasury for personal expenses to 50 lakhs per annum. About the same time, on the advice of the Government, Mr. Casson Walker was appointed Financial Adviser. The Nizam promised to give him all necessary authority but failed to carry out his promise with the result that Lord Curzon again intervened in March 1902.

(v) Miscellaneous

In 1862 a Sanad was given to the Nizam by which the British Government bound themselves to uphold any adoption by the Nizam which might be legitimate according to Mahomedan Law. Other matters on which the Paramount Power intervened included the education and upbringing of the Nizam's children. The following extract from the speech of the late Nizam at his Investiture Durbar bears out the practice that had come to be established:—

"I shall ever endeavour in all matters that concern the prospects and prosperity of the State to consult the wishes of Your Excellency and of the Government of which Your Excellency is the honoured head. I am sure that in doing so I shall be consulting the best interests of myself and my subjects."

Lord Reading's Famous Letter.—Finally, Lord Reading in his famous letter dated 27th March 1926, clearly asserted the supremacy of the Paramount Power over the States including Hyderabad and refused to treat as its equal any State, whatever the language in the treaties, and specified the rights which pertain to the Paramount Power as a corollary to this supremacy. Responsibility for the defence and internal security of the country, according to Lord Reading, also gave the Paramount Power the right of intervention in the internal affairs of the State (Appendix I).

Nizam's status no better than that of other Princes.—It is obvious that the status of the Nizam under paramountcy was no better than that of other States and his position was anything but of pre-eminence. Neither in practice nor in principle did the Paramount Power ever concede any special position to the Nizam. On the contrary, by the interposition of its authority in Hyderabad more repeatedly and effectively than in other States, and by negating all claims of Hyderabad to preferential treatment in various authoritative announcements the British did every thing that was possible to disabuse the Nizam's mind of his perverse and erroneous notions.

Hyderabad's Political and Economic unity with India.—As a result of the all-pervading and unifying influence of the Paramount Power Hyderabad came to be administered as an integral part of India in all essential matters of all-India concern such as external affairs, broad economic policies, defence arrangements and other similar matters. Indian army stationed in Hyderabad was maintained not merely for the benefit of the State but for the security of the whole of South India. Under diverse agreements and arrangements, one of the last and most important of which was the Indian State Forces Scheme of 1939, the Government of India exercised the right among others to increase, decrease or reorganise the Nizam's army; to arm and equip it and secure internal peace and tranquillity. Under these arrangements the Hyderabad State was precluded like other States from importing into Hyderabad weapons of precision and ammunition and the manufacture of such weapons and ammunition except under licences which would only be granted under the dictates of the Government of India. The Hyderabad State was likewise under the obligation to cooperate with the Government of India by promoting everything that the Paramount Power determined to be necessary for the efficient discharge of its duty to protect the State; the State was also under the obligation to cooperate by abstaining from every course of action that may be dangerous to the general security of India. The Paramount Power was also entitled to secure what was necessary for strategical purposes in regard to roads, railways, posts, telephones and telegraphs, and wireless, cantonments, passage of troops and the supply of arms and ammunition.

In the field of external affairs the Hyderabad State had no international status and the State territory and the State subjects were in the same position as British territory and British subjects. The State could not negotiate or communicate with any foreign State. The arterial communications connecting the North of India to the South like the postal, telegraph and telephonic systems and the railways and airways were all led through Hyderabad by the Government of India and the policies in relation thereto were also framed and enforced by them. Several other agreements closely linking Hyderabad to India were also entered into or evolved by custom, usage or acquiescence.

By the Government of India Act, 1935, the powers exercised by the Political Department of the Government of India under the Act of 1919 were to be exercised by the Crown Representative; the person holding this office also held the office of the Governor-General. In consequence in matters of common concern the Crown Representative ensured full cooperation of the Nizam as the Ruler of a dependent protected State. In substance and in fact Hyderabad remained under the British rule an integral part of, and subordinate to, the political system established by the British in India.

CHAPTER III

HYDERABAD—A PART OF INDIA

Geographical Unity.—Sir William Barton in his book 'Princes of India' stated; "Flung almost completely across the Indian peninsula, the great State of Hyderabad holds a strategic position of the first importance both from the political and from the military point of view. In an emergency it could practically isolate the South from the North. The country is a series of vast rolling uplands with an average elevation of 1,200 feet above sea-level. Two of the mightiest rivers of the Deccan, the Godavari and the Krishna, traverse part of the State". Hyderabad is the second largest State in India. Its frontier of over 2,600 miles touches the three Indian Provinces of Bombay, Central Provinces and Berar and Madras. The extent of Hyderabad is about 2/3rd of the Province of Madras, a little more than that of Bombay and a little less than that of the Province of C. P. and Berar. Its population is less than that of each of the three adjoining Provinces and is about 1/3rd of the largest of these, namely, Madras. No natural barriers separate the border areas of Hyderabad from the contiguous areas of India. Hyderabad is entirely dependent upon India for its railways, and postal, telegraphic and telephonic and air communications. Landlocked, it has no access to the outer world except through India.

Cultural Unity.—The population of Hyderabad, numbering 16½ million, is completely homogeneous with the population of the surrounding Indian Provinces. It consists of 86½ per cent Hindus, 12½ per cent Muslims and 1 per cent Christians and others. The population falls into three linguistic groups, the Telugu-speaking (over 7 million), the Marathi-speaking (over 4 million) and the Kanarese-speaking (over 2 million). These groups, socially and culturally form part of the corresponding larger language groups speaking respectively Telugu, Marathi and Kanarese, which inhabit the contiguous provinces of Madras, Bombay and Central Provinces and Berar. Ethnically the people of Hyderabad are the same as those in the surrounding Provinces.

Economic Dependence.—Economically Hyderabad has never been an independent entity, but has always been an integral part of India. The periods of prosperity or scarcity in India have been reflected in favourable or adverse reactions on the economic life of Hyderabad.

During the food crisis, India recognised and fulfilled its responsibility to feed the people of Hyderabad. Although Hyderabad is normally self-sufficient in food-grains, it passed through a period of severe scarcity in the year 1946-47 and large allotments of food-grains were made by the Government of India, Hyderabad being treated on an equal basis with other States and Provinces.

Hyderabad is surplus in cotton, but its production of cloth and yarn is very low, and more than 75 per cent of its requirements of cloth and yarn are met by imports from India. In the matter of allotment of cloth and yarn also, the Government of India treated Hyderabad on a par with the Provinces and States in India.

Hyderabad depends upon India for supplies of such essential commodities as salt, gur (unrefined sugar), fruits and vegetables, wheat and rice to a large extent, iron and steel, chemicals and medicines, tea and tobacco, and other raw materials for industries, and manufactured products. Besides all imports into Hyderabad of foreign goods like petrol, diesel oil and other fuel and lubricating oils, kerosene, machinery and plant, machine tools and spare parts and several other raw materials and products essential for the maintenance and development of industries pass through Indian ports and system of communications.

Hyderabad is surplus in pulses, cotton, groundnut, linseed, castorseed, coal and cement, and to a certain extent in manufactured paper; but Hyderabad depends for their disposal on India as the latter is the only customer for almost all these commodities, except oilseeds, which partially enjoy a foreign market. But these are also exported through India. Hyderabad has never had any direct or 'in bond' trade with foreign countries, nor is this feasible in view of the closely interlinked economy of Hyderabad and India. As India treats Hyderabad fairly and justly in the allotments of foodgrains, cloth and yarn and other essential commodities like steel, petrol and kerosene etc., India has similarly a justifiable right in the surpluses of Hyderabad in pulses, cotton, oilseeds, coal, cement, paper etc. India has, however, other vast resources of these commodities and is in no way dependent upon Hyderabad, whereas Hyderabad is entirely dependent on India for its essential needs.

Popular Aspirations.—The people of Hyderabad have been influenced by the same political ideologies and aspirations and collective impulses as those in the rest of India. When diarchy was established in British India by the Government of India Act 1919 there was agitation for representative institutions in Hyderabad. When the Khilafat movement brought about Hindu-Muslim unity in India, it had an exuberant expression in the Khilafat agitation in Hyderabad. When the Round Table Conferences were at work in 1930-1932 the people of the State started a movement for responsible government. When the Government of India Act 1935 was passed, "The Nizam's subjects League" was founded to secure the establishment of responsible government in Hyderabad. When about 1937 the movement for democratic institutions took root in other Indian States, the Hyderabad State Congress was formed with the object of "attaining responsible government under the aegis of H.E.H. the Nizam by peaceful and legitimate means". When India was on the threshold of freedom an overwhelming majority of its subjects, like subjects of the States, wanted Hyderabad to accede to the Indian Dominion and to participate in the Constituent Assembly of India.

Currency and Foreign Exchange.—Nominally Hyderabad has a separate currency, but it has been always linked with Indian currency at a fixed rate of exchange. The State has never followed an independent currency policy of its own; nor is this possible, because if Hyderabad were to break its currency link with the Indian rupee, the price and wages structure in Hyderabad would collapse. Further the paper currency of Hyderabad is not backed by any bullion reserve, but by Indian rupees and securities. The volume of currency in circulation in Hyderabad is only 3 to 4 per cent. of the currency in circulation in India. The trade balance of Hyderabad was only slightly favourable in the past, and in fact for the last two years Hyderabad is undergoing a period of unfavourable trade balance. Indian currency flowed freely through Hyderabad both for purposes of trade, and also for several internal transactions. Only recently have the Nizam's Government attempted to stop the free use of Indian currency in Hyderabad by promulgating an Ordinance. This has adversely affected the currency position of Hyderabad and has resulted in exodus of capital and sale of Hyderabad securities. This policy, together with the wasteful and extravagant expenditure of the Nizam's Government has been responsible for the shrinkage in the investments and foreign resources of Hyderabad at a rapid pace, so much so that the Nizam's Government had to sell Indian securities held by them to the extent of over 20 crores in the last few months and, but for the intervention of the Government of India to stop the sale of these securities the external resources of Hyderabad would have soon come to an end and the process would have jeopardised the future development of industries and the reconstruction of Hyderabad's economy.

Banking.—In banking too, Hyderabad is entirely dependent on India. Almost all banks functioning in Hyderabad are branches of Indian banks and are scheduled with the Reserve Bank of India. So are the branches of the Hyderabad State Bank in India. Before the formation of the Hyderabad State Bank, a few years back, the whole of Government and other banking transactions of Hyderabad were put through by the Imperial Bank of India. Even now the business of the Hyderabad State Bank is closely linked with and dependent upon the Imperial Bank of India and the Reserve Bank of India, in respect of banking operations, remittances, holding of balances, foreign-exchange dealings etc.

The economic dependence of Hyderabad on India is more marked because of the absolute dependence of Hyderabad's communications on India. Hyderabad has nominally a separate railway, and postal system, but it cannot function except as a part of the all-India railway and the Post and Telegraph system.

CHAPTER IV

PRESENT SET UP IN HYDERABAD

(i) Political Structure

Mediaeval and reactionary.—The political structure of Hyderabad is mediaeval and reactionary. At its apex is the Nizam who receives Privy Purse of Rs. 50 lakhs a year, in addition to other miscellaneous allowances and his annual revenue of Rs. 3 crores from his personal jagirs called Sarf-i-Khas and a vast hoard estimated at several hundred crores amassed by means to which the head of a State can have recourse only under a feudal system. Besides, his two sons and the members of his family receive large sums for their maintenance and upkeep. Till lately his absolutism was subject only to the control of the British Resident. The present Nizam is credited with the belief that he is the heir of the Moghul Emperors and with the ambition of attaining unrestricted personal sovereignty. He has, therefore, discountenanced every idea of modern political progress and has succeeded in concentrating all power in himself.

In 1914, he took over the administration without the assistance of a Minister. Four years later, under the pressure of the British Government, an Executive Council was constituted to assist him in the administration; but the Nizam continued to have things his own way. He is reported to have interfered with details of administration, including even minor appointments, so that from time to time British Residents had to intervene to support the authority of the Ministers against him. The Nizam naturally resented this control and when the British declared their intention to withdraw paramountcy he felt that the day of his complete autocracy had dawned.

The Nizam has a vast crowd of courtiers and a net-work of spies which penetrate every sphere of public life. To quote Sir William Barton: "Intrigue is in the air at Hyderabad—a vigorous survival from Moghul, and still earlier, times. It is with some people almost a pastime. Often the methods are clumsy and easily seen through; on the other hand, there is frequently a delicacy of touch, a finesse worthy of the trained and cultured brain behind it, the whole constituting a drama very interesting to watch as when it unfolds."

Reactionary Constitution.—Till recently Hyderabad had a Legislative Council consisting of 20 members of whom only four were elected, the rest being ex-officio or nominated members. Its functions were purely advisory. For several decades all attempts to introduce a representative element in the Legislature was frustrated mainly by the influence of the Nizam. In 1937 the Jayangar Committee was appointed to make proposals for an expanded and more representative Legislature with a mandate that it should be mainly on a functional, not territorial, basis. The Committee recommended a Legislative Assembly of 70 members exclusive of the President and the members of the Executive Council who were to be ex-officio members. Out of 70, thirty-three were to be elected and the remaining thirty-seven were to be nominated. The membership was so adjusted to give the privileged sections a majority. The recommendations of the Committee, in spite of the fact that they were not very regressive, were not put in force till 1946. In that year the Hyderabad Legislative Assembly consisting of ex-officio, nominated, appointed and elected members was constituted. The members of the Executive Council, all nominated by the Nizam, were to be ex-officio members of the Assembly, but the President of the Executive Council, who is styled the Prime Minister, is not a member of the Legislative Assembly. Exclusive of the ex-officio members the Legislative Assembly consists of 122 members of whom 76 are elected, the next being nominated directly or indirectly by the Nizam. Elections to the Legislative Assembly are on the functional basis. Among the elected members, majority and minority communities are equal in number, on the whole, the minority community has a majority of 10 over the majority community in a House of 132, and are therefore in a permanent majority.

Elections boycotted.—The constituencies and the method of voting were so manipulated that a candidate without official support would find it difficult to succeed. In view of the reactionary nature of the composition of the Assembly and the method of elections to it the Hyderabad State Congress boycotted the elections.

Under this farcical constitution the Nizam's rule, untempered by the intervention of the British Resident, is absolute in character.

(ii) Administrative set-up

For administrative purposes the State is divided into 4 Subas (Divisions) each under a Commissioner. These four Subas are further divided into 16 districts. Each district is in its turn divided into Taluqas totalling over 100. The number of villages in the State is 22,500. The Khalsa lands occupy 58·5 per cent. of the total area and the rest is the Sarf-i-Khas (Jagirs, etc., belonging to the Ruler). The Jagirs in the State comprise an area of 12,000 square miles and the Jagirdars enjoy judicial and administrative powers. Tenant ownership is conspicuous by its absence. Where it does not belong to the Nizam as his personal property, land is held under a feudal Zamindari system. Absentee landlordism, an army of landless labourers, rackrenting, serfdom, forced labour and countless inhuman and corrupt practices are the features of agrarian life. Industry is in the hands of a few capitalists, who, with easily bought official connivance, treat labour with little consideration.

The facade of the prosperous looking towns of Hyderabad and Secunderabad with very good roads and buildings serves to screen the appalling poverty of the vast majority of the people, who live in a condition of utter misery and serfdom.

(iii) Services Personnel

The officialdom is traditionally corrupt and seldom kind or sympathetic to the masses. Recruitment to services is not on merits. The representation of the communities in the services is in inverse proportion to their numbers. The representation of the majority population in the key services, namely the Army, the high executive services, is negligible. The minority dominates all departments as will be seen from the table below:—

Departments	Muslims	Hindus	Others	Total
1. Secretaries	10	1	1	12
2. Additional Secretaries	2	1	1	4
3. Joint Secretaries	3	..	...	3
4. Deputy Secretaries	9	3	...	12
5. Assistant Secretaries	55	3	...	63
6. Head of Departments	40	6	1	47
7. Subedars	4	...	...	4
8. Collectors	14	2	...	16
9. Revenue Board	2	...	...	2
10. Sub-Collectors	50	19	2	71
11. Tehsildars	75	40	4	119
12. High Court Judges	8	5	...	13
13. Magistrates and Munsifs	147	33	...	180
14. Police (D.S.P., A.S.P. & Circle Inspectors) 73	12	6	...	91
15. Education Officers	237	65	27	329
16. Supply Officers	25	7	1	33
TOTAL	754	202	43	999
Percentage	75%	20%	5%	100%

The police and the military are a virtual monopoly of the elements helpful to the Nizam in crushing the political awakening in the State. The army and Police have recently been increased and there has been considerable recruitment from outside the State.

Inequitous Taxation System.—The financial structure of Hyderabad is feudal. The taxation system is inequitous, the revenues being derived mainly from Land Revenue, Excise and Customs. The incidence of taxation thus falls almost entirely on the poorer classes, there having been no taxes on income until very recently. The expenditure of the State is also top-heavy. A substantial portion of the present expenditure goes in payments to the Nizam, his family and on Mansabs and other grants of a personal or feudal nature. The following extract from a dispatch of 1926 from the Resident at Hyderabad makes an interesting reference to the feudal practices for extorting money:—

“It may be noted that the mean and sordid practice of making forced sales of worthless articles at fabulous prices to litigants, nobles, officials and others still goes on. Even people in a position like Sir Afsar-ul-Mulk have to submit to this indignity.”

Uncontrolled Expenditure.—There is no proper control over Government expenditure in Hyderabad State as the budget is not subject to the sanction even of the predominantly nominated legislative assembly. The Government have over-riding powers to sanction amounts in excess of the budgeted figure during the course of the year. Administrative, financial and even audit control over expenditure is necessarily ineffective as vast amounts are kept as secret funds for which no accounts are rendered.

Costly Military Preparations and Propaganda.—A large proportion of the State revenue is spent on army, police and generally for military preparations. The Razakar organisation is also financed by the Hyderabad Government in the guise of expenditure on the so called refugees. Publicity and propaganda are another source of heavy drain on the State's finances. Several thousands of pounds have been spent abroad not only for publicity purposes but also for the smuggling of arms, ammunition, wireless equipment and other articles necessary for military preparations. Large sums of money have been paid to certain foreigners for rendering service to Hyderabad in negotiating for the purchase of or provision of special facilities at Goa, for the creation of an air force for Hyderabad and other similar purposes.

CHAPTER V

THE STANDSTILL AGREEMENT

The growth of political consciousness.—The Ittehad-ul-Muslimeen, otherwise called the Ittehad, was founded in 1926 by the Director of the State Ecclesiastical Department under the inspiration of the Nizam. Its real purpose was to organise the aggressive elements in the minority community to buttress the Nizam's feudal rule. After the promulgation of the Government of India Act, 1935, the wave of political consciousness throughout India spread to Hyderabad. As a result the “Nizam's Subjects' League” was formed by one Nizam Jung with the object of securing responsible government for Hyderabad. As a counterblast the Ittehad introduced an additional item in its creed: “The Ruler's person and Crown is the symbol of the political sovereignty of Muslims and Muslim culture”. The Nizam's Subjects' League yielded no results. In 1937 the Nizam appointed the Ayyangar Reforms Committee “to report on suitable alternatives for the more effective association of the different interests in the State with the Government”. This was found unsatisfactory both by leading Hindus and Muslims and the Hyderabad Peoples' Convention was formed under the Chairmanship of Mr. Abdul Hassan Sayed Ali.

Hyderabad State Congress: First Satyagraha.—In July 1938 the Hyderabad State Congress was founded, with the object of attaining ‘responsible government under the aegis of His Exalted Highness the Nizam by peaceful and legitimate means and with the motive of national unity’. Its membership included both Hindus and Muslims. The State Congress was, however, banned on October 24, 1938, when members of the Committee were arrested and sentenced. Satyagraha (civil disobedience movement) followed and about 400 Congressmen were sent to jail.

State Congress: the second Satyagraha.—Endless negotiations were conducted in order to induce the Nizam's Government to lift the ban on the State Congress. In the meantime it had been affiliated to the All India State Peoples' Conference, then presided over by Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru. As the ban on the State Congress was not lifted, it started another civil disobedience movement. Meanwhile an understanding had been reached between some of the leaders of the Congress and the President of the Ittehad, Mr. Abdul Hassan Sayed Ali, for a common programme of political advancement. Mr. Ali, however, had to pay the price for this understanding, and Mr. Kasim Razvi, an obscure lawyer from a district town, notorious only for his rabid communalistic attitude, was elected President in his place with the approval of the Nizam. Negotiations with the Congress were dropped.

The State Congress Ban lifted.—The State Congress started another campaign of Satyagraha. During the brief tenure of Sir Mirza Ismail as Prime Minister of Hyderabad, the ban on the State Congress was lifted. Provincial Conferences were incorporated into the Congress which emerged as the most powerful political organisation in the State. During all this time the strictest restrictions on civil liberties were imposed on all democratic and popular movements while the Ittehad was left free to carry on its most aggressive fascist and communal activities.

Pre-August Situation.—Early in 1947 the situation in India was pregnant with changes. The British had decided to quit; India was to be divided; the States were to be relieved of their obligations to the British Crown and vice versa. The Political Department of the Crown Representative was busy winding up Residencies in Indian States.

The Nizam by his firman dated 26th June 1947 declared his resolve not to participate in the Constituent Assembly and not to join the Union. He also declared that the removal of British Paramountcy entitled him to declare his independence. The Ittehad, under the Presidentship of Mr. Kasim Razvi, also declared itself against accession to India, responsible Government, or share in public life on the basis of population. The Razakars, a quasi-military organisation, was founded in support of these aims and their demonstrations in favour of an independent Hyderabad came to be staged with increasing frequency. The Nizam's Government banned the flying of the flag of the Indian Union in the State. Thus the Nizam and the Ittehad were ranged not only against the State Congress but also against the Indian Union.

Negotiations for accession.—Under pressure from reactionary elements the Nizam had secured the resignation of Sir Mirza Ismail from the office of Prime Minister as his desire to enter into friendly relations with the Indian Dominion did not appeal to the Nizam who then appointed the Nawab of Chhattari as Prime Minister. In July, when the Government of India was negotiating with Rulers of all Indian States, a delegation consisting of the Nawab of Chhattari, Sir Walter Monckton, Sir Sultan Ahmed and Nawab Ali Yavar Jung came to Delhi on behalf of the Nizam to negotiate with the Government of India. By 15th August 1947, no agreement however had been reached. At the request of the Nizam, the Government of India gave him an extension of two months within which to find an amicable settlement. Negotiations were later resumed by the Chhattari Delegation sent by the Nizam with H. E. the Governor-General, Lord Mountbatten, with the concurrence of the Dominion Cabinet. In the course of the discussions it was represented by the Chhattari Delegation that in view of the premier position of Hyderabad, its association with the Indian Dominion should be different from that of the other Indian States. Representations were also made by the delegation that if a Standstill Agreement for one year was accepted by the Government of India, a happier atmosphere would be created in Hyderabad in which terms of a more permanent association could be successfully negotiated.

Standstill Agreement.—As a result of the negotiations conducted by the Chhattari Delegation a draft agreement was finalised on 18th October 1947. On 27th when the delegation was to fly back to Delhi after obtaining the signature of the Nizam on the agreement, the house where the members of the delegation resided was surrounded by the Razakars, apparently the police being in full co-operation with them and they were prevented by show of physical force from leaving for Delhi. The Nizam called in Mr. Kasim Razvi on 28th October, for consultation. The old Delegation was dissolved under pressure from the Ittehad and a new one appointed; it included Nawab Moin Nawaz Jung and Mr. Abdur Rahim, the two members of the old Executive Council who had voted against the Standstill Agreement. The Nawab of Chhattari resigned on 1st November 1947. The new Delegation attempted to secure from the Government of India some changes in the draft Standstill Agreement, but failed. The leading advisers of the Nizam, however, impressed upon him the advisability of a temporary agreement in order to get 'a full and comparative peace during which, as we have often said, we can see how the two Dominions get along and how far we can prepare ourselves for a more genuine display of independence later on'.

This motive, as is now clear from subsequent developments, influenced the Nizam and the ruling group around him to accept the Standstill Agreement as it stood, but without any intention of fulfilling it. The Standstill Agreement was ultimately signed on 29th November 1947. (Appendix II).

CHAPTER VI

NEGOTIATIONS WITH INDIA

About this time the Nizam set up a new Ministry under the advice of Ittehad leaders, pledged to carry out its policy. Mr. Laik Ali, a leading industrialist of Hyderabad, was appointed Prime Minister.

Thus the Standstill Agreement which the Government of India negotiated with the Chhattari Delegation and accepted in a spirit of friendliness with every intention to implement it, was left to be worked by the Ittehad Ministry which was determined not to implement it in the spirit in which it was concluded.

Withdrawal of the Indian Army from Hyderabad.—The Government of India began to implement the Standstill Agreement in the spirit in which it was concluded by ordering the withdrawal of the Indian Army stationed in Hyderabad State. Though they knew that by so doing they would remove the most powerful sanction which they had to secure the implementation of the Standstill Agreement by the Nizam's Government, they did not hesitate to fulfil their part of the agreement. They did so however, in the expectation that the Nizam's Government would play their part honourably. Little did the Government of India suspect at the time that the Nizam and his advisers conceived the Standstill Agreement only as a ruse to gain time and to secure the elimination of the Indian Army which was a serious obstacle to the operation of their plans. Hyderabad's motives in seeking the Standstill Agreement, since revealed, provide the background for subsequent developments.

Negotiations for Implementing the Standstill Agreement.—Negotiations first opened on 22nd January, 1948 by Mir Laik Ali with Mr. K. M. Munshi, India's Agent-General at Hyderabad, for implementing the Standstill Agreement. Mir Laik Ali pressed for an early fulfilment by Government of India of the assurances contained in the Collateral Letters by:—

- (a) removing the Indian Army stationed at Bolarum as quickly as possible;
- (b) allowing free flow to Hyderabad of goods of every description, including military equipment, which the Nizam's Government had purchased on a large scale in India;
- (c) supplying arms and ammunition for its army;
- (d) transferring to them the control of postal, telegraph and telephonic communications which pass through Hyderabad connecting South India with North India.

On the other hand, on the question of implementing the obligations of the Nizam's Government, they adopted a very unhelpful attitude; thus for instance they totally repudiated their obligations under the States Forces Scheme of 1939 which was the basic agreement in relation to Defence saved by the Standstill Agreement, and declined to accept the appointment of a States Military Adviser, declaring that the whole scheme had lapsed. They also committed breaches of the Standstill agreement by negotiating an agreement with the Pakistan Government for advancing a loan of Rs. 20 crores and by promulgating an Ordinance banning Indian currency in Hyderabad.

March Conference at Delhi.—In the month of March a Hyderabad Delegation, consisting of Mir Laik Ali, Sir Walter Monckton and Nawab Moin Nawaz Jung, came to Delhi to discuss the possibility of coming to a permanent arrangement with the Government of India. It was suggested by His Excellency the Governor-General on 4th March 1948, that the Razakars' Organisation, being a danger to security, should be banned; but no assurance in that direction was forthcoming. Mir Laik Ali, however, left New Delhi after giving an assurance that, in order to create the proper atmosphere for negotiating a permanent settlement, he would immediately set up a more representative Ministry in Hyderabad. On his return to Hyderabad Mir Laik Ali formally announced that he was going to convene a Round Table Conference of party leaders. The President of the Ittehad, Mr. Kasim Razvi, who has been always working in close collaboration with him, promptly announced that he would not take part in any such conferences. No steps were taken by the Nizam's Government to release Swami Ramanand Tirtha, the President of the State Congress, then in jail. Nothing further was done to implement the assurance that he had given to the Government of India.

Immediate supply of arms demanded.—Thereafter, Mir Laik Ali recommenced negotiations with Mr. K. M. Munshi, in the course of which it was found that the only anxiety of the Nizam's Government was to secure from the Government of India an immediate supply of modern arms and equipment for 25,000 troops and 35,000 police and a free flow of army disposals and military stores which the Nizam's Government had purchased in large quantities all over India. At the end of the discussions Mir Laik Ali informed India's Agent-General that they would not like to proceed to Delhi unless the States Ministry was favourably disposed towards the proposals which they had made in the course of the discussions with the Agent-General.

Government of India's Demands.—In the meantime border incidents had assumed grave proportions and the Razakars had been very active. The Government of India came to the conclusion that the first essential for resuming fresh negotiations was that the Nizam's Government should take appropriate action to put an end to the conditions of insecurity and disorder in the State and on its borders caused by the activities of the Razakars. Accordingly the Government of India addressed a communication, to the Prime Minister of Hyderabad dated March 23, 1948, pointing out the breaches of the Standstill Agreement committed by the Nizam's Government and asking them to take immediate action to ban the Ittehad-ul-Muslimeen and the Razakars.

Nizam's Government's Reply.—On April 5, 1948, Mir Laik Ali addressed a reply to the Hon'ble Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru. In the course of the reply the Nizam's Government made countercharges against the Government of India and tried to justify the acts which constituted the charges made against them. In particular the Nizam's Government persisted in their refusal, (a) to be bound by the Indian State Forces Scheme of 1939 which was, as mentioned, the basic agreement relating to Defence saved by the Standstill Agreement, and (b) to consider the question of disbanding the Razakars.

Mir Laik Ali's Assurances not carried out.—Following the letter Mir Laik Ali came to Delhi and saw the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister of India. The position was made clear by the Prime Minister of India and accepted by Mir Laik Ali that in order to ease the tension prevailing in Hyderabad and to pave the way for further discussions the Razakars should be brought under control and, as a first step, their processions, public meetings, demonstrations and speeches should be banned; the leaders and members of the State Congress should be released; and a new and representative interim Government should be immediately formed. However no effective action was taken by the Nizam's Government to fulfil these conditions.

Government of India's terms.—In the meantime the activities of Razakars were mounting in intensity and violence. The Government of India felt that the forbearance, which they had been showing in the face of openly provocative activities was being taken as a sign of weakness. On May 15, 1948, therefore, they called upon the Nizam's Government by a letter, among other things, to declare illegal and disband the Razakars' Organisation. The Nizam's Government did not comply with this demand. In order to prevent the incursions of the Razakars into the Indian territory, Indian troops had to be stationed on Indian borders.

Agreement in place of Accession agreed to.—The last phase of the negotiations in May and June 1948 is illustrative of the intentions and the policy of the Nizam as regards his State's permanent association with the Dominion of India. At a conference on 26th May, Mir Laik Ali agreed to the principle that the legislation by the Government of India in respect of the three subjects (Defence, External Affairs and Communications) should automatically apply to Hyderabad, should the Nizam's Government fail to pass corresponding legislation. After his return to Hyderabad, however, Mir Laik Ali, on 30th May, wrote to say that he wished to modify the statement that he had agreed to the principle of overriding legislation. In reply to this it was pointed out that he had categorically and unequivocally agreed to the principle of overriding legislation by the Government of India. On 6th June Mir Laik Ali returned to Delhi with Sir Walter Monckton to continue the negotiations. Draft heads of agreement and a draft firman were prepared. (Appendix III). The Delegation thereafter left for Hyderabad with the drafts for obtaining full powers to come to an agreement. Sir Walter Monckton returned to Delhi on June 12, and reported that the Nizam and his Executive Council approved of the two drafts with the exception of the following two main points (some others being subsidiary):

- (a) over-riding legislation by the Government of India; and
- (b) the composition of the Constituent Assembly.

In order to meet the Nizam's wishes and those of his Government, the Government of India modified the provision relating to over-riding legislation and omitted any reference to the composition of the Constituent Assembly.

The original Draft Firman contained a provision that the Hindus and Muslims should have an equality of seats in the interim government. The Government of India, however, objected to any reference to parity in connection with the interim government and suggested an alternative provision to the effect that the interim government would be formed in consultation with the major political parties. On this being agreed upon, Sir Walter Monckton invited Mir Laik Ali to come to Delhi with plenipotentiary powers to settle outstanding points.

More Concessions sought and made.—The Hyderabad Delegation accordingly arrived on June 14, when Sir Walter Monckton pointed out to Mir Laik Ali the alteration which the Government of India wanted to make. The same day the Hyderabad Delegation pressed for amendment of the drafts in their favour in the following respects:—

- (i) permission for Hyderabad to maintain, apart from a regular army of 20,000 and the ceremonial and household guards, an additional irregular Force of 8,000 men;
- (ii) a modification of the clause for the disbandment of the Razakars by a qualification that the process would take three months, although rallies, parades and demonstrations would cease forthwith; and
- (iii) the State of emergency was to be qualified by the inclusion of the words "under Section 102 of the Government of India Act, 1935".

The Government of India, in the interests of peace and in their anxiety to reach a settlement, agreed to all these amendments without exception.

A new point raised by Mir Laik Ali.—A point was raised at this stage by Mir Laik Ali in connection with economic and fiscal freedom for Hyderabad and the Governor-General suggested that the Prime Minister of India should address a letter undertaking that the Government of India would examine the question.

Yet another point raised by Mir Laik Ali.—On 15th June Mir Laik Ali raised a further point that an arbitration clause should be inserted. As arbitration was not appropriate in respect of some of the points covered by the Agreement, the Government of India did not agree to the suggestion. And when Mir Laik Ali left for Hyderabad on 15th June, it was made clear to him that no further amendments would be entertained by the Government of India.

Allegation and its withdrawal.—On 16th June, the Nizam sent a telegram refusing to accept the agreement unless the fresh points suggested by him were accepted. In the telegram the Nizam also alleged that some of the amendments to the draft had been made on the copies of the firman towards the end of the meeting the previous day and that Mir Laik Ali did not discover them until his return to Hyderabad. On 17th June, Sir Walter Monckton went to see the Nizam with a note from His Excellency the Governor-General in reply to the points raised by the Nizam. His Excellency pointed out that the allegation that some alterations had been made without the knowledge of Mir Laik Ali was not true, that they had been made known to Sir Walter Monckton on the morning of Monday, 15th June, and explained by him to Mir Laik Ali the same day. His Excellency further pointed out that the amendments so made did not make any material alterations and that the position in regard thereto had been accepted by Mir Laik Ali. The attitude of the Government of India with regard to Hyderabad's claim for freedom in respect of economic and trade matters was again explained. By his telegram dated 17th June the Nizam withdrew the allegation that the changes in one of the two drafts had not been made known to his representative until the last moment. He, however, reiterated his objection to the omission of the principle of freedom in trade and economic and fiscal matters and the principle of arbitration. An additional objection was raised by the Nizam for the first time regarding the stationing of troops in Hyderabad in an emergency. A provision had been made in the heads of agreement to the effect that the Government of India would not station their armed forces inside Hyderabad State except in an emergency. Subsequently at the Nizam's Government's suggestion it was agreed that such an emergency should be defined by the inclusion of the words "under Section 102 of the Government of India Act, 1935". This was also repudiated by the Nizam. The Government of India naturally could not accept terms which repudiated the whole basis on which negotiations had proceeded so far.

Lord Mountbatten's last effort :—

On 18th June, three days before he left India, Lord Mountbatten sent a long private and unofficial telegram to the Nizam finally appealing to the latter to accept the draft agreement drawn up by India after long and protracted talks with Hyderabad's representatives.

Lord Mountbatten stated that he was anxious beyond words for the peace and prosperity of the whole of South India.

The Nizam replied regretting that he was unable to change the unanimous decision already taken by his Council.

The extraordinary points chosen by the Council, which was the creation of the Nizam and was responsible to no one but him, to advise the rejection of the provisional agreement are illustrative of their negative attitude.

The first and the most serious point on which the Council advised the Nizam to break off negotiations with all the human misery which such action is bound to entail, was in connection with the addition of the words "on a basis which I shall consider later" in sub-para. 1 of Paragraph II of the draft Firman, (Appendix III) which provided for the introduction of responsible government in Hyderabad and the establishment of a Constituent Assembly early in 1949. The Government of India were absolutely at a loss to understand by what process the Council could come to the decision that this was a breaking point. The fact that the basis of the Constituent Assembly was going to be decided at a later date was inherent in the omission of the mention of that basis in the Firman. To call this a material alteration was nothing short of ridiculous.

The second point raised by the Nizam's Council related to an alteration in the wording of sub-para. II of the Firman, so as to provide for the setting up of the interim Government in consultation with the leaders of the major political parties. This was an elastic and unexceptionable substitute for the wholly unjustifiable provision for parity between the majority (86½ per cent) and minority (12½ per cent) communities. In any case it could hardly be seriously suggested that any such change of wording could amount to a reason sufficient to justify the breaking of negotiations.

The third point on which the Council based their recommendations for the rejection of the terms was the demand for freedom in trade, economic and fiscal matters. The importance attached to this point by the Hyderabad Government was not disclosed to the Governor-General up to the morning of Tuesday, 15th June. Until then this matter had been covered by a footnote. The Government of India undertook to consider Hyderabad's request sympathetically.

The fourth point which the Council put forward as a reason for breaking off the negotiations concerned the absence of a provision regarding arbitration. It was made clear on behalf of the Government of India that the arbitration provision in the Standstill Agreement would continue to be in force for all the existing arrangements and agreements covered by it. The decision to break off negotiations because an arbitration clause was not included in the heads of agreement appeared to ignore that:—

- (i) an arbitration clause was in any event inappropriate to some of the provisions of the agreement as the Hyderabad Delegation had admitted;
- (ii) arbitration was in general an unsatisfactory alternative to goodwill as a means of ensuring the proper implementation of agreements of this kind.

It was inconceivable that a settlement which had taken so much effort to reach would be rejected for the amazing reasons put forward by the Nizam's Council. The Government of India could draw from it no other conclusion than that the Council's reasons were a disingenuous subterfuge to avoid the honest admission that they were unwilling to undertake the other steps for which the agreement provided including, for instance, the disbandment of the Razakars.

CHAPTER VII

RAZAKARS: A MENACE TO SECURITY

The Razakars as Instrument of the Nizam.—Since July 1947, the Ittehad, under the Nizam's inspiration, has been converted into a shock brigade for creating conditions in which the much-coveted theocratic and totalitarian State may come into existence. With this end in view a quasi-military organization known as the Razakars, has been built up. Militarist demonstrations are a part of their daily routine; and military training is being imparted to them in Hyderabad and Secunderabad. A Razakar, on enrolment, pledges his life to the Ittehad, to Hyderabad and to his Leader and vows "to fight to the last to maintain the supremacy of the Muslim Power in the Deccan". The headquarters of the Razakars are in Hyderabad City, but its ramifications cover the whole of the State. Seventy thousand men, women and children have undergone training; 1,50,000 members are on the rolls, and recruitment is going on briskly to reach the target figure of five lakhs of Razakars.

Activities of the Razakars.—The activities of the Razakars may be classified as follows:—

- (a) Staging frequent demonstrations all over the State.
- (b) Terrorising individuals connected with movements which seek the accession of Hyderabad to the Dominion of India or the introduction of responsible government in the State.
- (c) Organising border raids into the Indian Dominion territory.
- (d) Inflicting reprisals, with or without the Police or the Military, on villages or individuals suspected of being pro-State Congress or obstructive to the Razakars.
- (e) Taking upon themselves the duties of Customs Officers in searching the luggage and belongings of railway and road passengers.

- (f) Preventing unofficial investigations by agencies or individuals into the internal situation in Hyderabad.
- (g) Overawing the public by staging marches of uniformed volunteers with spears, swords, or muzzle-loaders on cycles, in buses and lorries, by firing empty shots into the air.
- (h) Infiltrating into Indian Dominion territory in order to carry on espionage work; to smuggle arms and ammunition into the State; to recruit volunteers from Dominion territory for the Army, the Police and other services and to create disaffection among the Muslims of India and to rouse them against the Government of India; and to carry on a Jihad (religious war).

Transport.—The Razakars possess several 3-ton lorries, dozens of Jeeps and one-ton lorries, in addition to the transport which they command freely over the Nizam's State Railway, and road transport services from willing or unwilling private owners. In spite of severe restrictions of petrol supplies to the civil population the Razakars have always had liberal supplies of petrol from the Nizam's Government.

Arms.—They are fully armed and not only do they have a large number of looted and locally manufactured guns but also some modern weapons.

Publicity.—The Ittehad runs one English daily, 7 Urdu dailies and 6 Urdu weeklies. In the Nizam's Radio they have another powerful instrument of propaganda, always at their service. These organs, day after day, attack the Indian Dominion and the leaders of India.

Special training is given to Razakars in espionage and propaganda and selected Razakars are given training to masquerade as Brahmins and priests.

Finances.—The organization which spends not less than 10 to 30 thousand rupees a day is maintained by direct contributions forcibly recovered from the villages or merchants, by levies etc. collected by Government on exports and by donations and shares of profits from persons who have advanced in their careers through Party influence. Most of the gold and silver looted by the Razakars from the helpless people also goes to the Party Funds. The Ittehad is also in receipt of very large sums for the maintenance of the so-called refugees.

Anti-Indian Propaganda.—The Razakars have not been reticent about their objectives. Their pronouncements are characterised neither by responsibility nor sobriety. The Dominion of India and its Government and leaders are the targets of their repeated virulent attacks by the publicity organs of the Razakars. The following two extracts are illustrative of their objectives and the offensive and incendiary nature of their utterances:—

"Hyderabad will shortly recover the ceded districts and the day is not far off when the waves of the bay of Bengal will be washing the feet of our sovereign who will be called not only the Nizam of Hyderabad and Berar but also of the Northern Circars."

"We are re-writing the map of India by bringing together a union of Jumna and Musi. We are the grandsons of Mohd. Gazni and the sons of Babar. When determined we shall fly the Asafjahi flag over the Red Fort (in Delhi)."

Threat to communal peace in India.—Another serious aspect of the Razakar activities, in which they have the support of the Nizam's Government, has been the two-fold threat to communal peace and amity in India. In their endeavour to convert the minority into a majority in the State, they are engaged in inducing the Muslims from India to emigrate to Hyderabad and to terrorise and force the majority population to migrate to India. To achieve this objective they send out agents all over India to induce Muslims to leave their homes in India and come and settle down at Hyderabad. These are not strictly refugees, for the conditions in the Indian Provinces do not warrant such emigration. Muslims from other Provinces, mis-called refugees, are however, drawn by the lure of money and employment or by propaganda for Jihad against the Indian Dominion. Elaborate arrangements are made for these purposes; large finances are placed at the disposal of the agents touring throughout India. There are Razakar centres in various parts of India which act as recruiting agencies and rallying points of anti-Indian elements fomenting communal hatred.

These invitees incited by the Razakars have been one of the main factors in disturbing the law and order in the State. Many instances have been reported of the so-called refugees harassing people, unlawfully extorting money, breaking into houses, occupying them and committing robbery.

Collapse of Law and Order in the State.—The internal conditions of Hyderabad State have become a scandal and the majority population has to suffer terrorism of the worst type. There is wide-spread panic and disorder throughout the State. Life in the villages has become so insecure that thousands of persons have fled to the Indian Provinces for safety. A number of villages have been burnt down in several places. Hundreds of persons have been killed, wounded or beaten. Villagers have also come down to Hyderabad City or Secunderabad for refuge. Razakars are seen daily leaving Hyderabad in trucks openly shouting slogans and returning with plenty of loot. The majority population throughout the State has been systematically disarmed. Large tracts of cultivable land are lying fallow, as the villagers have deserted their homes.

The Nizam's Government and the Razakars put innumerable difficulties in the way of independent investigations into the actual state of affairs in the State. Yet the atrocities of the Razakars have been attested by many independent observers of standing. Ministers have gone on tours to the affected villages and testified to the prevailing conditions. Photographs of burning houses have been obtained. Mr. J. V. Joshi, who was until recently a Minister in the Hyderabad Government and has resigned has stated in his letter of resignation that complete terror prevails in some districts which he visited (Appendix IV). He describes scenes of devastation, people being killed and their eyes taken out, women raped and large number of houses burnt down. The statement that this Minister of the Hyderabad Government has made is a final condemnation of the gangsterism that has overtaken the State.

Hyderabad City is the centre of the Ittehad and the G.H.Q. of Razakars. The power of Razakars is demonstrated night and day by drills and parades in uniform, by armed rallies, by public processions on foot, on cycles and in trucks. Razakars take the law into their own hands on the slightest provocation. On such occasions the police never appear on the scene, but even if they do, they prefer to be silent spectators.

In the districts, far away from the gaze of press correspondents, Razakars have staged their reprisals. In Bidar district, for example they have devastated 129 villages, burnt about 1,000 houses, looted property worth crores, killed 70 to 100 men and women and committed rape on about 50 women. Eye-witnesses and victims and unofficial enquiry committees have testified to the woeful conditions prevailing in the District. The Nizam's Government have naively denied all these allegations.

The incident at Gorta, enquired into by an unofficial enquiry committee which visited the scene, may be cited as a typical example, as it throws light on the gruesome fate which overtook it. This village with all its inmates, both human and animal, was burnt down to a heap of ashes on May 10, 1948. Even the details of the tragedy were not forthcoming till a small enquiry committee had visited the ruined village. Except for a lonely male and three wailing old women there was absolutely no trace of life in the village when the Committee visited it. The stench of decomposing corpses filled the air. Many half-burnt human corpses and a number of skeletons were lying about. The Committee was led to believe that about 200 persons were burnt to death in the village.

Warangal District.—The Warangal district is another centre of Razakar atrocities. Lakhs of inhabitants of this district have been forced to seek refuge in the neighbouring Province of Madras. Four separate investigations were made by different sets of people, all of which tally in all material particulars.

The same story, with more or less variation, has come from other districts. In all districts of Hyderabad the Razakar rule prevails, often supported by police and the military, and in all cases connived at by them. No Razakar has been known so far to have been brought to book for any atrocity, however violent and unlawful. As a result of the unchecked terrorism of the Razakars a large number of people are migrating from the State to the territories of the Indian Dominion.

CHAPTER VIII

BORDER INCIDENTS

The disorder and insecurity in the State created by the terrorist activities of the Razakars have for the past several months disturbed the peace and security of the surrounding districts of Bombay, Madras and the Central Provinces and Berar. There is no natural boundary, except in a few places, between the villages of Hyderabad and those of the Indian Provinces. There are a very large number of Indian enclaves in Hyderabad territory, varying from a solitary village to a whole Taluka. This has made it easy for the raiders from Hyderabad State to adopt hit-and-run tactics and on several occasions, to cut off road communication with the enclaves. Moreover, owing to the contiguity of India and Hyderabad, the atrocities committed in the villages on the Hyderabad side of the border have their repercussions on the Indian side. In most of the raids the raiders are accompanied by the Nizam's Police and/or military. A very large number of instances can be cited, of the loss of life and property resulting from these raids. In several cases, Indian Police Officers have been carried away to Hyderabad territory or have been either shot or confined in jails. (Appendix V).

The raids, which began in order to terrorise those border villages which offended the Razakars and the State under the leadership of the Hyderabad State Congress, have now become a perpetual feature disturbing the peace and security of all the three Provinces.

Without going into details of the incidents, some principal characteristics of these raids may be summarised—

Firstly, the raiders are composed partly of Razakars and partly of what may be described as 'official agents of the Nizam's Government', e.g., Arabs in the State Service, armed Sepoys from the State Forces, etc.

Secondly, the incursions into the Dominion territory were ostensibly in search of "undesirable characters" alleged to have taken shelter in the Dominion territory. For example, on 4th December 1947, the State Military personnel camping at Nelugal on the Bombay border entered the limits of Kanmanhal in Dharwar District of the Bombay Province and took away three villagers to their base in State territory. Again, on 24th December 1947, about 30 sepoys from the State forces, entered Ainapur in the Bijapur district of the Bombay Province, threatened the Police Patil at the point of the bayonet and unlawfully searched his house for certain Congress workers said to have fled from Hyderabad.

Thirdly, the motive for these raids was in most cases extortion of money. In these raids, even villagers from the Hyderabad side joined with guns, swords and lathis. Men with means are carried away and released only on payment of ransom.

Fourthly, taking advantage of the contiguity of the borders and the necessity of having to pass through State territory in having access to the Indian enclaves, the Nizam's Customs Officers, Police and Military, the Razakars and even pro-Razakar villagers search and harass Indian citizens in transit through State territory. In most of the cases, in the course of the search, property was looted or ransom extracted.

Fifthly, raids are being organised in order to cause panic among the villagers within the Indian borders. Cases are known of Arabs in the State service entering Dominion territory, shouting slogans, brandishing swords, chasing and abusing villagers, and molesting women.

These characteristics only relate to incidents of a serious nature. Besides there have been innumerable instances of cattle-lifting, assault on and harassment of Indian subjects, robbery in Dominion territory by small bands of Razakars, of the State Police or the Military operating from their camps in the State territory close to the border. The operations are also in most cases organised and premeditated. Of late, on the Bombay side, the object has not been, as in the earlier period merely to cause harassment, extort money, and create panic: it is systematically to destroy the life and property of the border villagers by shooting at random and by setting fire to houses and stacks of hay and corn, and by driving away herds of sheep, goats and other milch animals.

Nanaj Incident.—A typical example of the campaign of violence indulged in by the Razakars is provided by the recent attack on a party of Indian troops near the Hyderabad village of Nanaj. The Indian military convoy was taken by surprise and had to suffer some casualties but the attack was repulsed with the arrival of the remaining portion of the convoy. The attack was entirely unprovoked and there was unmistakable evidence that preparations for attack and defence were being made in the village by digging huge trenches and loop-holing houses. The villagers, who ran away from Nanaj the previous evening, on their return, testified how a party of about 50 Razakars, Police and Pathans occupied the village fully armed with the intention of attacking the Indian Army units which were known to be proceeding that way on the routine duty of exchanging patrols. After the first attack which took place late in the evening of July 24, 1948, the Razakars made two more attacks but were driven away easily. On July 26, 1948, Lt.-Col. Weston, a senior British officer of the Hyderabad State Forces, visited the scene of incident and after enquiries confirmed the Indian Army version of the incident. (Appendix VI).

CHAPTER IX

PLEBISCITE AND BLOCKADE CRY

Dictatorships attribute to those, who do not fall in line with them, motives and intentions that do not exist. It helps to win friends at home and abroad to find a scapegoat for the evils of megalomania and self-regarding policies. The propaganda agents of the Nizam, whose personal ambition and obstinate absolutism are dragging his State towards a disaster, are trying to depict him in the role of the proverbial innocent and peaceful lamb. An aggressive wolf is necessary to complete the set-up and the Government of India come in handy for the purpose.

The main planks of the malicious propaganda that is being conducted against the Government of India are:—

Firstly, that the Government of India insisted on unconditional surrender of Hyderabad's sovereignty even without ascertaining the wishes of the people of the State by a free plebiscite.

Secondly, that Hyderabad has been put under an economic blockade which is depriving the State of essential commodities, drugs, chemicals, etc.

Government of India's suggestion for an impartial plebiscite.—The plebiscite cry is the latest addition to Hyderabad's propaganda armoury. It is a glaring instance of the Goebbels technique of harping on a big lie in the hope that some ignorant folk would swallow it. The suggestion to hold a plebiscite to decide the issue of Hyderabad's accession was made as early as 27th August, 1947, by the Governor-General of India in his telegram of the same date to the Nizam; the relevant part of this telegram reads as follows:—

"Should it be impossible to carry on negotiations without delay, my Government would not be prepared to consider any solution other than your signing the Instrument of Accession in the same way as all other States similarly situate have now done but they would be prepared to offer facilities to enable you to test the will of the people by sending British Officers to conduct a referendum on this issue in the same way as was recently arranged in the N.W.F.P."

This telegram was based on the Hon'ble Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel's letter to Lord Mountbatten, dated 24th August, 1947, in which it was stated:—

"If, however, the Nizam's Government are still unable to decide their course in the only right direction in which it lies, His Exalted Highness must agree to submit the issue to the judgment of his people and abide by the decision. We on our side will be content to accept whatever might be the result of such a referendum."

The offer of the Government of India was made in all earnestness; its categorical rejection by the Nizam is typical of his and his Government's negative attitude. In his telegraphic reply to the Governor-General of India he made the astounding assertion "I should also like to point out that the problems of the constitutional position of Hyderabad are such that the question of referendum does not arise."

The spirit behind this telegram has been the keynote of the Nizam's approach to the question of accession, establishment of responsible government and plebiscite. It has been the Government of India's policy that in all matters affecting their future the will of the people should prevail. The suggestion to hold plebiscite was, therefore, again repeated to Mir Laik Ali by the Secretary, Ministry of States on 17th April, 1948. The suggestion was summarily rejected by him. He expressed himself against plebiscite as he thought that the announcement to hold a plebiscite will adversely affect the law and order situation in the State. The proposal was repeated on behalf of the Government of India from time to time but evoked no response from the Nizam's Government. Now we see the miracle of the Nizam—who has all his life thwarted the legitimate aspirations of his people—turning a champion of their right of self-determination. The reason for this change of front is provided by the course of negotiations which shows that the game of the Ittehad-dominated Nizam's Government has been to gain time and to extract concessions up to a point which would frustrate the very purpose for which association between India and Hyderabad was sought.

Plebiscite without suitable interim arrangements a farce.—The Nizam's offer of plebiscite, which now comes with a beat of drum, is dis-ingenuous since it is made with no intention to ascertain the real views of the people in a peaceful atmosphere and in an impartial manner. Hyderabad's right of self-determination in the present set up, in which a vast majority of the people are treated as hostages, means no more than a licence to the militant sections of the minority to exterminate the majority population. When, therefore, the Nizam and his Government complain against the so-called denial of self-determination, they mean in fact that a small clique of unscrupulous fanatics should have unfettered power to dominate the masses. The Nizam's Government wish to hold a plebiscite under the conditions in which a small militant group controls the destinies of the people and the Razakars are left free to terrorise the people into submission. Plebiscite without an interim government representative of and satisfactory to the majority population in Hyderabad will only be a fraud on the people.

Nizam rejects the proposal.—The proposals for a plebiscite on the issue of accession and interim arrangements formed a part of the Government of India's latest offer to the Nizam which was negotiated with his Prime Minister, but was rejected by the Nizam from Hyderabad. This fact should be enough to give a quietus to the baseless allegation that the Government of India denied the people of Hyderabad the right of self-determination.

No economic blockade.—As regards the allegation of economic blockade it may be stated that no embargo has been placed on the export to Hyderabad of any of the necessities of life, such as foodstuffs, salt, chlorine and medical supplies. As a matter of fact, the Nizam's Government have been trying to build a reserve of these articles to last for about two years and by extensive purchasing and unlawful smuggling reserve stocks are being built up. Whenever special permission has been asked for from the Governments of the surrounding Provinces, permits have always been given for quantities in the light of normal requirements in the past. The Provincial Governments have refused to permit the exports only when they had strong reasons to suspect that the articles were not for normal use but had been acquired in India by unfair means and are being consigned on false description. Commodities such as food, salt and chlorine, are freely flowing into Hyderabad. The facts in respect of these supplies are as follows:—

Food.—A fixed import quota of 20,000 tons of foodgrains has been allotted for Hyderabad for the year 1948 on the same principles as apply to other Provinces and States in India. Of this quantity, 14,338 or more than half the year's requirements have already been despatched to Hyderabad in the period January to June, 1948.

Medicines.—There is no ban on the export of medicines and medical stores to Hyderabad. Medical stores usually go to Hyderabad from Bombay and Calcutta. No separate statistics have hitherto been kept of each kind of drug going from these two markets to each Province or State. Supplies, however, from these two cities have continued to Hyderabad. In fact, there have been such heavy purchases by agents of Hyderabad from these markets recently, in addition to large-scale smuggling, that it has been necessary to regulate their exports so as not to disturb the supply position in Bombay and Calcutta. Even so, there has been no restriction on the normal quantities required by Hyderabad.

In the second week of June, one firm alone wanted to export Rs. 15 lakhs worth of medical stores to Hyderabad from Bombay. They were allowed to export one wagon load valued between two and three lakhs of rupees. Figures of normal monthly requirements of medicines and medical stores have since been worked out in consultation with trade associations and supplies to Hyderabad upto these limits are being allowed.

During the three months—April to June—Madras exported 178 maunds of medical stores to Hyderabad, West Bengal for the same period 14½ maunds and C. P. & Berar 51 cases; ampules, vaccines, tubes etc., of medicines weighing 900 lbs were exported by the Bengal Chemical and Pharmaceutical Co., Ltd.

Chlorine.—In consultation with experts and the Imperial Chemical Industries Ltd. a monthly quota has been fixed for supply to Hyderabad. From Bombay city alone, 1868 pounds of chlorine have recently been exported to Hyderabad. Not a single application for the supply of chlorine to Hyderabad has so far been rejected.

Salt.—There has been no restriction whatever on the movement of salt to Hyderabad. In respect of salt as well as medicines and other commodities some difficulty has been experienced in the matter of transport. This difficulty is not peculiar to movement to Hyderabad but general to all parts of the country. In May 1948, when difficulties of transport of salt were pointed out, special arrangements were made and 190 wagons of salt were despatched from Bombay to Hyderabad early in June. During the period April to June, 251,000 maunds of salt were despatched to Hyderabad from Madras and Central Provinces and Berar.

The above facts will make it clear that the allegation that the Government of India are starving Hyderabad of essential commodities like foodgrains, medicines, etc., is without foundation. Indeed the Government of India could not adopt such a course as it would only bring misery and hardship to the vast Hindu population and poor Muslims of Hyderabad and would cause no discomfort to the Nizam and his self-seeking advisers.

A factor that has adversely affected transport facilities in respect of the commodities consigned for Hyderabad has been the reduction in Hyderabad's train services. This has been necessitated by the frequent armed attacks of the Razakars on the trains running through Hyderabad territory. No train now runs across Hyderabad borders without an armed escort, which has to be provided by the Indian forces. If the free movement of wagons has been hampered by this development the terrorism of the Razakars and the inability or the unwillingness of the Nizam's Government to stop the repeated train hold-ups are responsible for it.

CHAPTER X

THE CHOICE FOR THE NIZAM

The foregoing chapters make it abundantly clear that Hyderabad is an integral part of India and that the Nizam's pretensions to independence rest on no foundation other than his own ambition for unchecked absolutism in which he is supported by the Razakar terrorists and a handful of India's enemies. Neither the basic compulsions of geography nor the history and traditions of the State lend any support to these pretensions.

Hyderabad under British Rule, a part of feudal system.—For a period of over 150 years Hyderabad was a part of the feudal system in India and stood precisely in the same category as the other Indian States. The British never recognised its claim to any preferential treatment. If anything, the exercise of paramountcy in relation to Hyderabad was characterised by greater rigour than in the case of other States.

No coherence without States.—Whatever political and legal rights flowed to the States from the lapse of paramountcy were common to all of them. If all the States had elected to declare independence on the basis of the Nizam's logic of unfettered freedom of choice, the independence of India would have proved still-born. In the words of Sir Reginald Coupland such an India "would have lost all coherence". Inevitably, an India with hundreds of independent States would have lapsed into a chaotic condition. Such an India would have proved only a menace to world peace. This threat to India's integrity was averted by the Rulers' acceptance of the organic unity of their States with India on a federal basis.

Claim to independence untenable.—The fundamentals governing the Government of India's approach to the problem of States apply as strongly to Hyderabad as to other States. If anything, the Nizam's case for independence is even weaker than that of several other States because firstly Hyderabad has never enjoyed independence; secondly unlike several maritime and border States it is completely enclosed within the Indian territories; and thirdly an overwhelming majority of the people are strongly opposed to the Nizam's claim. The Government of India accordingly invited in all friendliness and with the best of intentions the Nizam also to an honourable partnership with India on federal basis.

Difference of approach.—During the protracted negotiations that followed, the Government of India examined in a spirit of the utmost accommodation the various proposals made by the Nizam's Government with a view to finding a formula which would meet the wishes of the Nizam's Government without subverting the basic policy of the Government of India. They made a departure from their general policy in accepting from the Nizam's Government a Standstill Agreement without accession of the State to the Dominion of India. The barren course of these negotiations has convinced the Government of India that the basis of approach of the Nizam's Government to the problem is directly opposed to that of the Government of India, in that, whereas the latter hoped that the Standstill Agreement and other arrangements would lead to the only solution of the Hyderabad issue, namely its accession, the Nizam and his Advisers wished to make every move an instrument for the assertion of Hyderabad's independence and a ruse to cram more power into the Nizam's repressive machine.

Dangers inherent in Hyderabad's independence.—Independence of Hyderabad is incompatible with India's independence; the two are mutually exclusive. The dangers inherent in the assertion of Hyderabad's independence are already beginning to manifest themselves in all their grave potentialities. In his misguided quest for unchecked absolutism, the Nizam is converting Hyderabad into a potential foreign base. With the help of a very small group of the militant section of the minority and his personal wealth he seeks firstly to suppress all democratic movements in the State, and secondly to develop an independent theocratic fascist State in the heart of India which, with its military force and allied irregulars dominated by the militant section of the minority community, is intended to form a base for subverting the loyalty of the Muslims in India to the Indian Dominion.

In order to achieve these objectives the Nizam has his instruments in the Ittehad-dominated Ministry, the Razakars and the Ittehad security services. The Ittehad has declared itself against responsible Government. This militant organisation is out to perpetuate the Nizam's feudal rule against the tide of times by methods reminiscent of Hitler's Germany. In India, on the other hand, democracy has been firmly established and all over, in the Provinces as well as the States, the people are enjoying full freedom. This conflict has its natural repercussions on the 300 millions Indians who must resent the ruthless suppression of the political aspirations of their compatriots in Hyderabad.

The second problem created by the policy of the Nizam's Government is equally serious. The Razakars' atrocities are directed against the majority population in the State and they naturally arouse great indignation in India. The determined effort of the Razakars to arouse communal tension constitutes a grave threat to communal peace in India. In spite of the repeated denunciation of the Razakars' activities by prominent Muslims including some of the Muslim Leaguers, a large number of the secret agents of the Razakars are touring all over the country contacting Muslim leaders, inviting Muslims from Indian Provinces to migrate to Hyderabad, and establishing hostile centres in all Provinces, all of which create communal tension in several parts of India. Today the Razakars propaganda and activities are potentially the most dangerous factor in the communal situation.

The growing communist activity in the Razakar-infested Hyderabad is yet another menace to India's peace and security. In the first instance feudal Hyderabad with its glaring maddening disparity between the privileged position of the handful at the top and the appalling poverty of the vast population provides a prolific source of communism. Until recently communism developed in Hyderabad and the bordering Indian Dominion areas as an antithesis of the Razakar movement, and clashes between the Razakars and the communists were a frequent occurrence. Of late, however, the Razakars have sought an alliance with the communists in their crusade against India and democracy. This has greatly contributed to the rapid growth of communism in Hyderabad and the State is indeed now a hot-bed of communism.

Defence responsibility.—In the crisis through which India is passing at present the supreme responsibility of the Government of India is to defend her borders and to maintain internal peace. In its own interests it should be Hyderabad's direct concern not to do anything that would impair India's capacity to defend it. If Hyderabad's frontiers are intact, it is only because Hyderabad enjoys the protection of India. On the due and prompt discharge by India of her responsibility in respect of defence rests not merely the existence of India but also the maintenance of peace in Asia so essential to world peace.

In discharging this responsibility the Government of India have to strain every nerve. Friendship with Pakistan has been maintained in spite of grave provocations. Vigorous measures have been taken to restore communal peace and order. Powerful disruptive elements and quasi-military organisations have been suppressed. The policy pursued by Hyderabad Government is a serious obstacle in the way of the Government of India's discharging this important responsibility.

Accession and democratisation the only solution.—All this clearly indicates that there is only one way of resolving the Indo-Hyderabad political deadlock, namely, the State's accession to India and the democratisation of its administration. Any other make-shift arrangements made with the Nizam's Government, who cannot be depended upon for implementing them in the right spirit, must be a brittle affair which will crack at the first stress. To adopt such a course is to submit to blackmail; it will be a breach of faith with the other Indian States and a betrayal of the interests of the millions of the people of Hyderabad.

Paramountcy independent of treaty engagements.—Hyderabad's claim to independence is mainly based on the lapse of paramountcy of the British Crown. Paramountcy was not derived from any treaty engagements but was claimed independently of them. It was contended by the British that paramountcy rested "on a moral obligation inherent in our protectorate". Of the responsibilities it implied, the gravest, it was claimed, was the duty of preserving peace and good order throughout India.

Sovereignty vests in people.—Paramountcy had two important aspects. The British as the paramount power in India were responsible for the defence and general security of the country as a whole. They claimed all the rights necessary to discharge this responsibility. Linked with these rights was also the right to intervene in the personal and dynastic affairs of the Ruler and the internal affairs of the State. In so far as the paramountcy related to intervention in the internal administration of the States, the Government of India have no intention of exercising it. They are, however, firmly of the view that whatever sovereign rights reverted to the States on the lapse of paramountcy, they vest in the people and conditions must be created in every State for a free and unfettered exercise of these rights.

Fundamentals governing paramountcy.—As regards the operation of paramountcy in relation to essential matters affecting the well-being of the country such as defence and security, although paramountcy has lapsed, the fundamentals on which it rested still remain.

The basic feature of the whole arrangement was not that the British possessed paramountcy rights and were, therefore, paramount, but that they were paramount and therefore had paramountcy rights. It is inherent in the geographical set up of Hyderabad that it is a protectorate. If the Government of India assume the responsibility of protecting Hyderabad against external aggression, as they must, they must also have the right to ensure that Hyderabad does not impair India's defence arrangements and also does not develop into a threat to India's peace and security. The British very rightly held the view "the unity of Indian empire would be imperilled if orgies of misrule could be enacted unchecked under British military protection". The essential defence and security requirements of the country and geographical compulsions have not ceased to be operative with the end of the British rule in India. If anything, they have become more imperative.

The Government of India cannot afford to be helpless spectators of orgies of misrule in Hyderabad. If the law and order situation there, which already shows signs of collapse, further deteriorates and thereby imperils peace and good order in India, the Government of India would unquestionably be involved.

In the age of bullock-cart, when small States could live in isolation and feudalism could flourish, Hyderabad was either a satrapy or a military protectorate under the dominant power in India. Not only it has had no status in external affairs but even its internal sovereignty was over-borne and limited by the overriding British authority.

In the age of aeroplane, when feudalism and petty sovereignties are an anachronism, the Government of India as the dominant power in India responsible for the defence and general security of the country cannot be expected to admit the Nizam's claim to independence; more so when it has no sanction of the will of the people behind it and comes only from the Nizam—whose "attitude", to quote from the British Resident at Hyderabad in 1926, "leaves but a faint hope that he would, if he realises his dreams of unchecked absolutism, consider the welfare of his people in the least degree"—and the handful at the peak of his feudal pyramid.

APPENDIX I

Letter from the Viceroy and Governor-General of India to His Exalted Highness the Nizam of Hyderabad, dated Delhi, the 27th March, 1926

Your Exalted Highness,

Your Exalted Highness's letter of 20th September, 1925, which has already been acknowledged, raises questions of importance, and I have, therefore taken time to consider my reply.

I do not propose to follow Your Exalted Highness into a discussion of the historical details of the case. As I informed you in my previous letter, your representations have been carefully examined, and there is nothing in what you now say which appears to affect the conclusions arrived at by me and my Government and by the Secretary of State. Your Exalted Highness's reply is not in all respects a correct presentation of the position as stated in my letter of 11th March last, but I am glad to observe that in your latest communication you disclaim any intention of casting imputations on my distinguished predecessor, the late Marquis Curzon.

I shall devote the remainder of this letter to the claim made by Your Exalted Highness in the second and third paragraphs of your letter and to your request for the appointment of a commission.

2. In the paragraphs which I have mentioned you state and develop the position that in respect of the internal affairs of Hyderabad, you, as Ruler of the Hyderabad State, stand on the same footing as the British Government in India in respect of the internal affairs of British India. Lest I should be thought to overstate your claims, I quote Your Exalted Highness's own words: "Save and except matters relating to foreign powers and policies, the Nizams of Hyderabad, have been independent in the internal affairs of their State just as much as the British Government in British India. With the reservation mentioned by me, the two parties have on all occasions acted with complete freedom and independence in all inter-Governmental questions that naturally arise from time to time between neighbours. Now, the Berar question is not and cannot be covered by that reservation. No foreign power or policy is concerned or involved in its examination, and thus the subject comes to be a controversy between the two Governments that stand on the same place without any limitations of subordination of one to the other."

3. These words would seem to indicate a misconception of Your Exalted Highness's relations to the Paramount Power, which it is incumbent on me as His Imperial Majesty's representative to remove, since my silence on such a subject now might hereafter be interpreted as acquiescence in the propositions which you have enunciated.

4. The Sovereignty of the British Crown is supreme in India, and therefore no Ruler of an Indian State can justifiably claim to negotiate with the British Government on an equal footing. Its supremacy is not based only upon treaties and engagements, but exists independency of them and, quite apart from its prerogative in matters relating to foreign powers and policies, it is the right and duty of the British Government, while scrupulously respecting all treaties and engagements with the Indian States, to preserve peace and good order throughout India. The consequences that follow are so well known, and so clearly apply no less to Your Exalted Highness than to other Rulers, that it seems hardly necessary to point them out. But if illustrations are necessary, I would remind Your Exalted Highness that the Ruler of Hyderabad along with other Rulers received in 1862 a Sanad declaratory of the British Government's desire for the perpetuation of his House and Government, subject to continued loyalty to the Crown: that no succession in the Masnad of Hyderabad is valid unless it is recognised by His Majesty the King-Emperor: and that the British Government is the only arbiter in cases of disputed succession.

5. The right of the British Government to intervene in the internal affairs of Indian States is another instance of the consequences necessarily involved in the supremacy of the British Crown. The British Government have indeed shown again and again that they have no desire to exercise this right without grave reason. But the internal no less than the external security which the Ruling Princes enjoy is due ultimately to the protecting power of the British Government, and where Imperial interests are concerned, or the general welfare of the people of a State is seriously and grievously affected by the action of its Government, it is with the Paramount Power that the ultimate responsibility of taking remedial action, if necessary, must lie. The varying degrees of internal sovereignty which the Rulers enjoy are all subject to the due exercise by the Paramount Power of this responsibility. Other illustrations could be added no less inconsistent than the foregoing with the suggestion that, except in matters relating to foreign powers and policies, the Government of Your Exalted Highness and the British Government stand on a plane of equality. But I do not think I need pursue the subject further. I will merely add that the title "Faithful Ally" which Your Exalted Highness enjoys has not the effect of putting Your Government in a category separate from that of other States under paramountcy of the British Crown.

6. In pursuance of your present conception of the relations between Hyderabad and the paramount power, you further urged that I have misdescribed the conclusion at which His Majesty's Government have arrived as a "decision," and that the doctrine of res judicata has been misapplied to matters in controversy between Hyderabad and the Government of India.

7. I regret that I cannot accept Your Exalted Highness's view that the orders of the Secretary of State on your representation do not amount to a decision. It is the right and privilege of the Paramount Power to decide all disputes that may arise between States, or between one of the States and itself, and even though a court of Arbitration may be appointed, in certain cases, its function is merely to offer independent advice to the Government of India, with whom the decision rests. I need not remind you that this position has been accepted by the general body of Indian Rulers as a result of their deliberations on paragraph 208 of the Montagu-Chelmsford Report. As regards the use of the term res judicata, I am, of course, aware that the Government of India is not, like a Civil Court, precluded from taking cognizance of a matter which has already formed the subject of a decision, but the legal principle, of res judicata is based on sound practical considerations, and it is obviously undesirable that a matter which has once been decided should form the subject of repeated controversies between the same parties.

8. I now pass on to consider your request for the appointment of a Commission to enquire into the Berar case and submit a report. As Your Exalted Highness is aware, the Government of India not long ago made definite provision for the appointment of a Court of Arbitration in cases where a State is dissatisfied with a ruling given by the Government of India. If, however, you will refer to the document embodying the new arrangement, you will find that there is no provision for the appointment of a Court of Arbitration in any case which has been decided by His Majesty's Government, and I cannot conceive that a case like the present one, where a long controversy has been terminated by an agreement executed after full consideration and couched in terms which are free from ambiguity, would be a suitable one for submission to arbitrations.

9. In accordance with Your Exalted Highness's request your present letter has been submitted to His Majesty's Secretary of State, and this letter of mine in reply carries with it his authority as well as that of the Government of India.

Yours sincerely,
(Sd.) READING.

APPENDIX II

STANDSTILL AGREEMENT

Agreement made this Twenty-ninth day of November Nineteen Hundred and Forty-seven between the Dominion of India and the Nizam of Hyderabad and Berar.

WHEREAS it is the aim and policy of the Dominion of India and the Nizam of Hyderabad and Berar to work together in close association and amity for the mutual benefit of both, but a final agreement as to the form and nature of the relationship between them has not yet been reached;

AND WHEREAS it is to the advantage of both parties that existing agreements and administrative arrangements in matters of common concern should, pending such final agreement as aforesaid, be continued:

Now, THEREFORE, it is hereby agreed as follows:—

Article 1.—Until new agreements in this behalf are made, all agreements and administrative arrangements as to the matter of common concern, including External Affairs, Defence and Communications, which were existing between the Crown and the Nizam immediately before the 15th August 1947 shall, in so far as may be appropriate, continue as between the Dominion of India (or any part thereof) and the Nizam.

Nothing herein contained shall impose any obligation or confer any right on the Dominion

- (i) to send troops to assist the Nizam in the maintenance of internal order, or
- (ii) to station troops in Hyderabad territory except in time of war and with the consent of the Nizam which will not be unreasonably withheld, any troops so stationed to be withdrawn from Hyderabad territory within 6 months of the termination of hostilities.

Article 2.—The Government of India and the Nizam agree for the better execution of the purposes of this Agreement to appoint Agents in Hyderabad and Delhi respectively, and to give every facility to them for the discharge of their functions.

Article 3.—(i) Nothing herein contained shall include or introduce paramountcy functions or create any paramountcy relationship.

(ii) Nothing herein contained and nothing done in pursuance hereof shall be deemed to create in favour of either party and right continuing after the date of termination of this agreement, and nothing herein contained and nothing done in pursuance hereof shall be deemed to derogate from any right which, but for this agreement, would have been exercisable by either party to it after the date of termination hereof.

Article 4.—Any dispute arising out of this agreement or out of agreements or arrangements hereby continued shall be referred to the arbitration of two arbitrators, one appointed by each of the parties, and an umpire appointed by those arbitrators.

Article 5.—This Agreement shall come into force at once and shall remain in force for a period of one year.

In confirmation whereof the Governor-General of India and the Nizam of Hyderabad and Berar have appended their signatures.

MIR OSMAN ALI KHAN,

Nizam of Hyderabad and Berar.

MOUNTBATTEN OF BURMA,

Governor-General of India.

COPY OF A LETTER FROM HIS EXALTED HIGHNESS THE NIZAM TO HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL, DATED NOVEMBER 29, 1947.

I regret that we have not been able to reach a final agreement as to the eventual nature of the association between Hyderabad and the Dominion of India. As Your Excellency knows, I have not been prepared to contemplate accession to either Dominion, but short of this, I have been ready to negotiate with your Government upon any other basis. I am now enclosing a Standstill Agreement which I am prepared to execute if Your Excellency's Government are also prepared to sign it. It is a disappointment to me that after such protracted negotiations we are unable to do more for the present than carry on existing arrangements subject to such changes as the departure of paramountcy imposes. On the other hand it is essential to put an end to the present state of uncertainty and the fact that the Agreement now to be executed is to endure for a year means that both Governments will be able to turn their attention more fully to the problems of administration without constant preoccupation with the question of our constitutional relationship. To that question we shall eventually have to return, but I am confident that, if during the next year our association in accordance with the terms of the Standstill Agreement is marked by goodwill on both sides, we shall be more likely at the end of that period to reach a satisfactory agreement as to the nature of our long-term association. I regard this Standstill Agreement accordingly as founded upon the principle of good neighbourliness and I am sure that Your Excellency and your Government will approach it in the same spirit. By executing this Standstill Agreement I am in no way permanently prejudicing my rights as an independent sovereign, but I am of course conscious that I am in some important respects suspending the exercise of certain of these rights during the currency of the agreement.

2. It is plain that an Agreement in this general form will necessitate a good deal of adjustment in regard to particular arrangements. In this connection I learn that your Government is prepared as soon as possible to negotiate with mine arrangements for the posts, telegraphs and telephones within Hyderabad to be worked as a Hyderabad system in harmony with the Dominion system. There are, in addition, problems about the Hyderabad Forces, both in regard the troops and their equipment, which our Governments will need to discuss in the light of the fact that on the 15th August 1947, the Hyderabad forces and Police available for the maintenance of internal order could no longer rely upon the backing of the troops stationed in and near the State by the Paramount Power. This question has already been discussed with the Military Adviser-in-Chief and with his successor and I have no doubt that Your Excellency's Government will have no objection to making any necessary adjustments in these respects and indeed in other cases of the same character (having their origin in the exercise of paramountcy functions), which are already apparent or which may come to light in giving effect to the general provision contained in Article I of the Standstill Agreement. So far as arms and equipment are concerned, I understand Your Excellency's Government are ready and willing to provide Hyderabad with the necessary requirements of its Forces and Police. It is only if for any reason the Dominion Government cannot supply such requirements within a reasonable time that I shall approach other sources of supply, and then only after previous intimation to your Government.

3. There is also the question which has been much discussed between my Delegation and the representatives of your Government about diplomatic and trade representatives for Hyderabad abroad. I am prepared to execute the Agreement on the understanding that the Government of the Dominion will take no objection to the maintenance of the Hyderabad Agent-General in United Kingdom or to the appointment of similar representatives in any other country. I shall be prepared to arrange for the complete co-ordination of the work of those representatives with the diplomatic and commercial representatives of the Dominion of India in such countries and to inform you in advance of any representatives whom I may decide to appoint. I am confident that Your Excellency's Government will be equally ready to co-operate with mine in regard to the import and export trade of Hyderabad.

4. There are several matters which have been outstanding between us for some time and which I should like to see cleared out of the way as soon as the agreement comes into force:—

- (I) No Paramountcy functions remain to be exercised nor was the Hyderabad Residency retained except as a house for the British Resident when there was one in the past. In these circumstances I should be glad if your Government would now hand it over to Hyderabad. Suitable arrangements can be immediately made about the Treasury and your Treasury Officials.
- (II) It is urgently necessary that arms, equipment and, in particular, ammunition should be immediately made available to Hyderabad. We have had no supplies since July and the shortage is interfering with the training of the Hyderabad Army.
- (III) In the same way there has been difficulty in securing the importation of "soft" vehicles for the use of the Army and, in the special circumstances of Hyderabad you will appreciate the importance of mobility having regard to the areas to be covered.
- (IV) I understand that the last of the Dominion troops stationed in Hyderabad will be removed in the course of the next month and I shall be glad of confirmation on this matter.
- (V) The transfer to Hyderabad of all jurisdiction within the State was agreed in principle before the 15th August 1947 and was largely effected before that date and has continued since. There are however, some points still outstanding in this regard in relation to Police jurisdiction on part of the Railways which run through the State. I assume that such jurisdiction will be immediately restored to Hyderabad.

5. It is of course manifest that my rights in regard to such matters as currency, coinage and postal rights are in no way impaired by the Standstill Agreement, but I should be glad if Your Excellency would give me an express assurance that the rights to which I have just referred continue undiminished.

6. I shall like to take this opportunity of suggesting that, in relation to passports, the Dominion of India should agree, as a matter of convenience in a question which is becoming urgent, to the Chief Secretary of my Government or some other appropriate officer issuing passports to Hyderabad subjects which would be countersigned by the Dominion.

7. I am sure that in entering into this Agreement both our Governments intend to do all they can to prevent and discourage subversive movements and propaganda in the territory of the other.

8. I know well Your Excellency's interests in all steps taken to abate communal antagonism. It may therefore be of interest to you to know that, in conformity with earlier declarations on my part, I propose to issue a Firman in the immediate future expressing my firm resolve to protect the lives, right and interests of all my subjects, alike, irrespective of caste or creed.

COPY OF LETTER FROM HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL TO HIS EXALTED HIGHNESS THE NIZAM, DATED THE 29TH NOVEMBER 1947.

I acknowledge with thanks the receipt of Your Exalted Highness's letter dated 29th November and the Agreement. While my Government and I note that Your Exalted Highness has no intention of acceding to Pakistan, we very much regret that you should have been unable to execute an Instrument of Accession with India. Both my Minister for States in his Statement of the 5th July and I myself in my speech of the 25th July to the representatives of the States have made it clear that it is the earnest desire of the Government of India to maintain the sovereignty of the States and to work with them as full partners in the administration of the three subjects proposed for accession. My Government cordially reciprocate your hope that, given goodwill on both sides the working of the standstill agreement will provide a basis for a satisfactory long term solution. Placed as Hyderabad is, its interests are inextricably bound up with those of India; and my Government hope that before the present agreement expires it will be possible for Hyderabad to accede to the Dominion of India.

2. My Government will be prepared to discuss with your representative as soon as possible the question of handing over the posts, telegraphs and telephones; and also the future strength and equipment of the Hyderabad Forces.

As regards the supply of arms and equipment, the Dominion Government will be able to supply your legitimate requirements.

3. My Government have no objection to your maintaining an Agent-General in London and appointing similar representatives elsewhere, if necessary. In this connection they are very glad to have your assurance, to which you will appreciate that the Government of India attach great importance, that the activities of such representatives will be fully co-ordinated with those of the representatives of the Dominion of India and will be confined to matters properly relating to trade and commerce.

The Government of India are certainly prepared to co-operate with Hyderabad fully in regard to its import and export trade.

4 As regards the points raised in paragraph 4 of your letter, my Government have authorised me to say as follows:—

- (1) My Government gladly agree that the Residency buildings at Hyderabad will be returned to your Government as soon as alternative accommodation promised by you is made available for our Treasury and officials employed there.

- (2) My Government will take the necessary action in regard to the early supply of arms and ammunition for which an indent has been received from your Government.

- (3) My Government will help your Government in securing the vehicles that they require.

- (4) It is the definite intention of my Government that the troops at present stationed inside Hyderabad territory should be progressively withdrawn according to an agreed programme and that the withdrawal should be completed by the end of February 1948 at the latest.

- (5) On the points remaining to be settled regarding the retrocession of jurisdiction, these can be discussed with my Government by your representative as soon as he is appointed.

5. I am authorised to assure Your Exalted Highness that your rights in regard to currency, coinage and postal matters will in no way be impaired by the standstill agreement.

6. My Government will take up the question of passports mentioned in paragraph 6 of your letter. They are fully prepared to assist you in this respect.

7. With reference to paras. 7 and 8 of your letter, the Government of India desire to assure Your Exalted Highness that it is their earnest desire to promote communal harmony and to maintain peace and security, and they will co-operate wholeheartedly with you to that end.

8. I enclose the agreement duly signed by me.

AGREEMENT WITH HYDERABAD

SARDAR PATEL'S STATEMENT IN THE ASSEMBLY

New Delhi, November 29, 1947.

With your permission, Sir, I should like to make a statement on the result of the negotiations with the Hyderabad Government on the future relationship between that State and the Government of India. The House will recall that I stated on the floor of this House that this was the last phase of these negotiations. I am happy to say that an agreement has been reached and I lay on the table of the House a copy of the Agreement, signed this morning as well as a copy of the Collateral letters exchanged between H. E. H. and H. E. the Governor-General.

As the House is aware, it was in July last that we initiated negotiations with the States for their accession to the Dominion of India, which due to the spirit of co-operation evinced by the Rulers resulted in the accession before the 15th August of all States except Hyderabad, Kashmir and Junagadh. We had negotiations with representatives of His Exalted Highness the Nizam also at the same time. I do not wish to take the House through the many phases of the negotiations. I need only say that when 15th August came no agreement could be reached. At the same time, His Exalted Highness the Nizam was anxious not to break off negotiations and accordingly at his request we decided to give him an extension of two months within which to finalise his attitude. When the negotiations were resumed, His Excellency the Governor-General, with the concurrence of the Cabinet, undertook to continue them on our behalf. He had several meetings with the Delegations sent by His Exalted Highness and about a month ago a complete agreement had resulted but owing to Developments of which the House is aware the old Delegation resigned and a new one was sent by His Exalted Highness the Nizam in its place. During the negotiations with the new Delegation we adhered to be stand we had already taken up and finally the agreement which we have now succeeded in obtaining from the present Delegation is exactly the same as we had negotiated with the old one

Under this settlement, all agreements and administrative arrangements on matters of common concern which formerly existed between the Crown Representative and the Hyderabad State, except the Paramountcy functions, are to be continued as between the Government of India and the Hyderabad State for a period of one year. These agreements and arrangements cover a wide variety of matters including the three subjects on which accession of all the States has been accepted, viz., Defence, External Affairs and Communications.

I know that Hon'ble Members would have been much more gratified if as a result of these talks His Exalted Highness had found it possible for the State of Hyderabad permanently to accede to the Indian Dominion. Such an accession would have been in accord not only with our cherished desire but also with the interests of both the Indian Dominion and the Hyderabad State. We, however, fully appreciated the internal difficulties in the State and consistent with our policy to secure agreement, not by coercion, but as far as possible with the maximum degree of goodwill on both sides and with due regard to the overall position in India, we felt that an agreement of this nature, even for a limited period, would have considerable advantages over the absence of any agreement whatsoever. The period of one year would enable both of us to forge closer relations and would it is hoped, pave the way for a permanent accession.

The settlement makes it clear that Hyderabad does not propose to accede to Pakistan. This, if I may say so, is only right, for placed as Hyderabad is, its destiny is inextricably bound up with that of India.

I fully realise that Hon'ble Members of this House as well as the public outside have been considerably concerned over the happenings in the State in recent months. Now that accord has been reached, I am sure it will have a wholesome effect on the existing situation and will exercise a beneficial influence in the relations between the two communities, both in the State and outside. We can thus put these happenings back in the past and look forward to a relationship in which amity and cordiality will prevail. An atmosphere will thus be created which will enable people who have left the State to return to their homes. I am also certain that as this settlement is intended to serve as the basis of friendly and cordial relations it will be worked in that spirit. We on our part will do our best to secure this end.

I would also like to refer briefly to the fact that proposals for constitutional reforms are now engaging the attention of His Exalted Highness. On this as well as on the question of final accession, I hope he will readily agree that in the ultimate analysis it is the will of the people that should guide his judgment. There are unmistakable signs in several other States of the triumph of this principle and I feel certain that His Exalted Highness will, as becomes a Ruler of his pre-eminent position, set an example which others can follow.

Finally, I am sure the House would like me to place on record our sense of appreciation of all that His Excellency the Governor-General has done in bringing about such a happy conclusion to the prolonged negotiations.

APPENDIX III HEADS OF AGREEMENT

1. General.—The Nizam's Government agree that they will, on the request of the Government of India, pass legislation similar to the legislation of the Government of India on any matter enumerated in the schedule attached.

2. If the Nizam's Government fails to pass the required legislation with due despatch, the Nizam himself will forthwith pass the necessary ordinance under his own powers.

3. Defence.—The Dominion Government agree to fix the strength of the Hyderabad Army at a figure not exceeding an overall strength of 20,000. The provisions of the Indian State Forces scheme of 1939 will apply mutatis mutandis to these Forces and the Government of India undertake to supply arms, ammunition and equipment on the scales and conditions laid down in the Scheme. The Government of India will have the right of periodical inspection and the Nizam's Government will also give all facilities in regard to such inspection and furnish such information and returns as they may be requested to do by the Government of India from time to time.

4. The Nizam's Government agree to limit their irregular forces to 8,000 in addition to ceremonial and household guards. The Hyderabad Government agree that all other formations of a military character shall be disbanded. Progressive steps will be taken for the disbandment of the Razakars within three months; rallies, parades, demonstrations and speeches by Razakars will cease forthwith.

5. It is agreed that the Government of India will not station their armed forces inside Hyderabad State; but, if in an emergency the Government of India wish to station their Forces inside the State for the period of a state of emergency declared in India by the Government of India under Section 102 of the Government of India Act, 1935, this will be agreed to by the Hyderabad Government. In such an event it is further agreed that the Government of India will be willing to pay to Hyderabad nominal compensation for the occupation of buildings in the State and for other services.

6. If, in any emergency as above, Indian Army units are stationed in the Hyderabad State they will be subject to the appropriate Dominion law governing the armed forces of the Dominion.

7. External Relations.—It is agreed that Hyderabad's external relations with any foreign country shall be conducted by the Government of India. Hyderabad will, however, have freedom to establish trade agencies in order to build up commercial, fiscal and economic relations with other countries; but these agencies will work under the general supervision of, and in the closest co-operation with, the Government of India. Hyderabad will not have any political relations with any country.

8. Continuance of existing agreements and arrangements.—Subject to the above paragraphs, the existing agreements and administrative arrangements in regard to matters of common concern shall continue and will be given effect to by both sides. The said agreements and arrangements shall not cease to have effect on 29th November, 1948, as was provided in Article V of the Standstill Agreement of 29th November, 1947.

On behalf of the Government of India.

On behalf of the Government of Hyderabad.

SCHEDULE

A. Defence.

1. Any armed forces raised or maintained by Hyderabad, whether within or without the State.

2. Naval, military and air force works.
3. Arms; fire-arms; ammunition.
4. Explosives.

B. External Affairs.

1. External affairs; the implementing of treaties and agreements with other countries; extradition.
2. Admission into, and emigration and expulsion from, Hyderabad, including in relation thereto the regulation of the movements in Hyderabad of persons who are not Hyderabad subjects.
3. Naturalisation.

C. Communications.

1. Posts and telegraphs, including telephones, wireless, broadcasting, and other like forms of communication.
2. Railways of the Government of India in the State; the regulation of the Nizam's State Railways in respect of safety, maximum and minimum rates and fares, station and service terminal charges, interchange of traffic and the responsibility of railway administrations as carriers of goods and passengers; the regulation of other railways in the State in respect of safety and the responsibility of the administrations of such railways as carriers of goods and passengers.
3. Aircraft and air navigation; regulation and organisation of air traffic and aerodromes; provisions for the safety of aircraft; carriage of passengers and goods by air.

FIRMAN

1. After protracted discussions between my Government and the Government of India, I am now in a position to announce the lines of my policy. I am most anxious to put an end to the uncertainties which prevail as to the nature of the relationship between Hyderabad and the Dominion of India. The views of the Dominion of India have been made clear to me and mine are well known to them. I have now decided to consult the will of my people upon the question whether Hyderabad should accede to India. I shall, therefore, take a plebiscite in Hyderabad on the basis of adult franchise. In order to ensure that the plebiscite is fairly conducted, I shall arrange for it to be held under the supervision of some impartial and independent body. I shall accept the result of the plebiscite whatever it may be.

2. But I am satisfied that more is required than the holding of a plebiscite, in order to restore confidence and tranquillity. I have, therefore, decided to instruct my Government to proceed in accordance with the following principles. In doing so, they will appreciate that the re-establishment of good-will between India and Hyderabad is the object of my policy and is of greater importance than the terms of any agreement which may be reached between India and Hyderabad in accordance with these principles.

- (i) It is my intention to introduce responsible Government in Hyderabad and to that end to establish a Constituent Assembly early in 1949.
- (ii) In the meantime, there should be a reconstitution of my Government as a result of which a new Interim Government will be formed, in consultation with the leaders of the major political parties.

- (iii) My Government has been able to reach agreement with the Government of India on the nature of the interim relationship between Hyderabad and India pending the holding of the plebiscite. This agreement, which involves some modification of the existing Standstill Agreement, has been embodied in a separate document signed by my Prime Minister.

APPENDIX IV

MR. J. V. JOSHI'S LETTER TO THE PRIME MINISTER OF HYDERABAD

My dear Mir Laik Ali,

During my recent tour of Jalna, Aurangabad, Parbhani and Nanded districts numberless incidents of woe caused by the bad elements in Razakars were dinned in my ears repeatedly by victims as well as respectable persons whose integrity I can safely vouchsafe. I am therefore pained to recount below some of the glaring atrocities for your information, I am also convinced from the statements made to me and my personal scrutiny, that the police and the military who are paid from the public revenue to maintain law and order and to protect the lives and properties of the people of the State pay little heed to curb the ever-growing atrocities of life, property, honour or liberty for the peace loving Hindus in these places nor are the latter given even the least assistance by the local authorities to stop the menace. On the other hand, Hindus notwithstanding their possession of licences for firearms are deprived of their weapons by the police even without acknowledgement. Instances are also not lacking where the police joined the Razakars in their depredations of loot, arson, murder, rape and molestation of womenfolk. As a result most of the people have in their despair sought shelter outside the State.

To be brief, let me plainly say that if no firm action is taken by the Government at once to put an end to these terrorist activities, it is as much as the Government has abdicated its powers.

In the Cabinet meeting you protested against my delivering certain speeches in Aurangabad District, particularly the following:—

“There is no denying the fact that some mischievous elements who have entered the Razakars for their selfish ends, have gone out of control and discipline and are taking undue advantage of the situation. I shall not accept the plea that Hindus, congressites or communists are committing these atrocities in the guise of Razakars. It is better we realise our mistakes before it is too late, and try to rectify them. The fears of Hindus are not illfounded, it is these incidents and actions that have shaken the confidence of your Hindu brothers. Mere assurances shall no longer serve”,

In my Parbhani speech I said as follows:—

“I am loyal, and loyalty demands recognising facts to remedy them before it is too late. Hindus are afraid of the Muslims. They have lost confidence and are leaving their homes. They are today sore. The suspicion is due to the events of loot, arson, and murders that are happening in the country today. At Pathri Hindus are looted and are afraid of their lives. At Sailu, the property of Hindus is being given over to Muslims. Wherever I have gone, in these districts, I have come across sad and pitiable

Hindu faces, who come to me with pitiable tales either of loss of their lives, property or fear of their lives. Rape and rapine seem to have become common. My Muslim brothers, you have a noble tradition of tolerance—remove this outside plague that has come in. I regret that my Razakar brothers cannot also escape the blame. Self seeking and mischievous elements that have entered the organisation are exploiting for their selfish interests. They seem to have gone out of control. Razakars mean servants of and defenders of the weak and innocent.

Expunge this rot and live upto the noble ideals set for you by your revered leader."

In the course of my speech at Nanded I have said:—

"The Hindus are afraid and are leaving their homes and running away, their misgivings do not seem to be illfounded. Much that has happened in the country has shaken their confidence. Wherever I have gone, whether Sailu, Manwath, Jintur or any other place, complaints poured in of Hindu houses given over to Muslims, their lands forcibly occupied. Worse is the fate in Pathri, where the people are afraid of their lives and honour. Villages are burnt, fields lie deserted. What I have seen in Loha shocks me, the wholesale loot of entire Hindu Monda, gruesome murder of three Hindus, arson, and rape of women have become intolerable. My Muslim brothers, I beg of you to act and act quickly to weed out mischievous elements which are acting in their selfish interest and to cleanse the Razakar movement of these communal virus."

"You hold ninety per cent. of services, police, military and civil. You my Muslim brothers have a vast militant organisation of Razakars. You possess arms. The Hindus are weak, and helpless. They do not possess arms, where they have, even when licensed, they are dispossessed. They have none to look to. Mere words shall not do. Excuses in defence shall not convince. You have to bring back confidence by your deeds by living upto the noble ideals of our great and wise beloved Ruler, and the Asafia kings that of Unity and Peace."

I joined the Government in the hope that I would be able to do some service to bring about communal harmony and progress in the State. On account of my great respect for Kasim Razvi, I continued to believe you and him that the complaints against Razakars were all false, but I have seen things for myself. A complete reign of terror prevails in Parbhani and Nanded districts. I have seen in Loha, a scene of devastation, which brought tears to my eyes—Brahmins were killed, and their eyes were taken out. Women had been raped, houses had been burnt down in large numbers. My heart wrung in anguish.

I threw in my lot with the present Ministry in the hope of being useful to both the communities, but I am convinced that I am duped. I could never imagine that under your Government this would be the condition of the village after village. People came to me, as a Hindu Minister, and told their woeful stories. I cried. I have spent sleepless nights after I saw this sight. Under the circumstances I cannot continue to lend my name to a Government which is powerless to prevent these heart-rending atrocities which I have seen with my own eyes, and hence I submit my resignation herewith.

Yours truly,

(Sd.) J. V. Joshi,

23rd July 1948.

DETAILS OF ATROCITIES

District : Aurangabad

Village or Town of incident.
Aurangabad . . .	Two Hindus were brutally murdered by Muslims, immediately after my leaving Aurangabad. The Police who took the persons in custody were also threatened. The Subedar Saheb was ultimately forced to release them.
Bidkan . . .	While returning from Pattan to Aurangabad, on my way, at Bidkan, I caught red handed Razakars who were exhorting money from wayfarers.

District Jalna

Jalna . . .	A Hindu watch repairer was shot at blank range by a Pathan, injuring the former seriously. This was without provocation. His condition is serious. Two other persons of the shop have also been reported to be injured. Passengers are being harassed every day and the house of one poor Telanga looted, and the womenfolk molested.
Ambad . . .	Arson and loot committed by the Arabs often in the village.
Jalna . . .	House of Baba Marwadi Sukhapuriwala was looted by Goondas amongst whom were Baba Chaus, Hasan Chaus and Idroos Chaus.

District Parbhani.

Athon . . .	The house and fodder belonging to Kapurchand Kachrual were set fire to and he is not allowed to cultivate his lands. They demand repayment of loans from the poor cultivators, as if they had been given loans.
Sailu . . .	The lives of Rama Pahelwan and Pathar Pahelwan who were looked to for protection by the villagers were plotted against and the two had therefore to leave the place.
Sailu . . .	Sait Gokuldas being one of the victims of Razakars has decided to leave the place.
Kalamnuri . . .	Hindus of Shivala and Kalamnuri forced to leave their homes due to loot by Razakars.
Pathri . . .	Hindus forced and threatened to leave the village by Razakars with the connivance of the Police Inspector, and their houses and property taken possession of by them.
Babalgaoon and Limbagaon.	Abduction of women, forcible possession of lands and property, looting and robbery have become too common here. The local police demand large sums of money for giving protection to the Hindus.
Hatval (Partur Tq.)	Entire property of Achutrao Hatwal robbed.
Sailu . . .	The House belonging to Pusaram Sait Marwari, has been handed over to Muslims who would not allow his servants to remove the grains given from even the other houses. Similar illegal occupation of the houses of Shankarlal Asaram Loya and Mallappa Eshwarappa has been resorted to lately.
Kokar-Jowla, Babalgaoon and Potola, Sarola, Gopegaon of Pathri Taluqa.	Large scale looting has become common in these villages.
Patoda . . .	The lands, houses and property of Govind Laxman Divruju of Patoda village have been looted and his father thrown into the river and beaten.
Hadgaon . . .	All Hindu houses in the village have been looted and the people are in great panic, as the culprits from whom certain properties were recovered have since been released on bail.

- Usod (Jintur Tq.) . Entire property of Hiralal Somani was looted and his house burnt down. He was burnt alive and his family members and children murdered.
- Pangra, Kalamuuri Marwari looted and some people killed by Razakars.
and Ojhar,
(Nanded District)
- Manwath . . . Ramkishen Rambaksh was robbed to the extent of Rs. 11,000 by three Muslims on his way to Jalna.
- Kakar Jowla (Pathri Marwaris Pannalal, Madanlal and Goverdhan robbed of Rs. 50,000 Tq.) by Razakars.
- Manwath . . . Corrugated sheets were taken away from the house when Baboo, s/o Laxman could not pay Rs. 500 demanded by a Rohilla. His life was also threatened by the Rohilla. Similar demands for fabulous amounts are daily occurring by a number of goondas in these parts.
- Sarola Tq. Manwath . Gold bangles of one Badrinarayan were robbed and also his lands taken possession of by two Muslims.
- Borgaon . . . Poor weavers of the village are threatened to pay money at the point of swords.
- Pathri . . . A cart full of Kirana goods belonging to Shankarlal was looted in day light by Razakars.
- Thar, Pathri Taluq . On the 14th and 15th two houses of a Marwadi and a Brahmin were looted by breaking open the locks as the owners had left the place on coming to know in time the planned attack of the Razakars.
- Rampuri, Pathri Taluq Rs. 1,000 has been demanded from Madanlal Kachrulal and Gopulal Bankatlal failing which the Razakars have threatened to loot the village.
- Pathri, Pathri Taluq . Devsi Valji was threatened with death and asked to execute a bond for Rs. 6,000 but he escaped from the place apprehending danger to his life.
- Bhisegaon, (Palm Tq.) Pointing a sword at the neck of his son, Shivilal, s/o Bachulal was demanded Rs. 1,000 which was paid, to the Razakars. They took away the firearms in the house and looted it after harassing the women-folk.
- Pimpri, Parbhani Tq. Property worth about Rs. 4,000 was looted by the Razakars. The Taluqdar who was given prior intimation about the attack did little to prevent it.
- Shari, Mirgapur, Similar attacks by Razakars were made against these villages also.
Pangra, Katneshwar.
- Degaon . . . Three persons of whom Mr. Kharkar was one, were shot dead.
- Hingoli . . . Pujari of the temple was brutally murdered.
- Khujda . . . The police on duty to watch a bridge nearby raided the village and shot down three persons for their having declined to send some women.
- Oundha (Nagnath) . A bomb was thrown on the people assembled for the jatra and five killed as a result of firing.
- Gunda . . . The village was looted and burnt with revongo by the Razakars and some people killed because they had resisted the Razakars from raiding the village previous day.
- Talni, Pangra, Vakodi These villages were the victims of similar incendiarism.
of Kalmnuri Taluqa, and Bamni of Jintur Taluq.
- Jhari . . . Fifty acres of land cattle and property belonging to Shamrao Bhavrao Deshmukh were taken possession of by three Muslims.

- Jalavpur (Jintur Tq.) . Same was the case with Dhangar's property by Rahimkhan Rohilla.
- Jintur . . . Villagers are harassed by the Muslim Gundas and property of Devidas Rao and Sadashivrao were looted and houses and gardens were damaged and burnt.
- Dhaiphal, Jintur Tq. . Almost all the houses were looted and burnt.
- Manwath . . . Lands owned by Sham Rao Bapu Rao are damaged and forcibly occupied by Dhers. Similarly those of Murlidhar Abaji are subjected to similar interference.
- Kodagaon . . . Mohanlal s/o Purushotam is prevented from cultivating his land by a Muslim. His house and shop were broken open and looted to the extent of Rs. 15,000.
- Katneshwar . . . House of Maruti Rao looted and property worth Rs. 25,000 taken away by the Razakars.
- Nanded District*
- Mudkhed. . . Twelve persons were murdered near the Police station. One Chandru was killed and thrown in the jungle.
- Nanded. . . Hindu ladies are treated most indecently by the customs authorities during their search while Muslims are allowed freely.
- Kapsi . . . As a revenge against the resistance offered by the Patel of the village, the Razakars raped and molested several women and looted and burnt the village.
- Tamsi . . . Except three houses out of 150, the rest were given away to the Refugees.
- Kalali . . . 72 people were killed by the Razakars after besieging the Deshmukh's house for 84 Hrs.
- Hadgaon . . . 75 per cent of the villagers have left the place out of fear and their houses handed over to the refugees. The house of Gangaram was looted during his absence and his two guns taken away. While there were only about 50 Muslims houses here now nearly (500) houses are in occupation of the Muslims and similarly lands belonging to Hindus are also usurped by the Muslims.
- Chorparwa. . . Patel of the village was called for by the Police and shot dead. Most of the fields lie waste.
- Himayatnagar. . . More than 200 Hindu houses are given over to Muslims.
- Keni . . . The Razakars looted the entire village.
- Nerli . . . The lands of Mr. Digambar Rao s/o Dhondopanth were forcibly taken over and cultivated by the Razakars.
- Kamlej. . . Twenty persons were shot dead.
- Jamli . . . A number of houses were burnt, and one Prabhurao was killed.
- Loha. . . There was a dastardly attack on the village for three days continuously and still it was not prevented by the local authorities who are responsible for law and order. Chamanrao was tied to a wooden pillar and tortured, his eyes pierced and then he was shot dead. Panditrao was also killed. The whole village was burnt and looted. Waman Bhadkamkar received a spear injury and his house looted. Narayan Madiwala's wife was raped by 7 persons in the presence of her relatives.

MR. J. V. JOSHI'S LETTER OF RESIGNATION

My dear Mir Laik Ali,

I hope you will please forgive me if I take this opportunity to explain you the real urge of my inner voice.

You are fully aware that my main aim of life and burning desire is to dedicate myself to work to achieve communal peace and communal harmony. I am a very strong believer in communal unity. I sincerely believe that if a country desires to live in peace and prosperity, and achieve that healthy independence in its true and real form, unadulterated sincere communal peace and harmony is not only most essential but pre-requisite to that end. It was with this desire that I joined the present cabinet.

During the tenure of my office, as you are well aware, in my tours in the districts, I have struggled and struggled hard with all the sincerity of my heart, for that noble cause of achieving and maintaining peace between all communities.

You are aware, that I was continuously offering my most humble services to that effect. It was my misfortune that I could not play that useful role, which I was so anxious to perform. Unfortunately the negotiations with the Government of India seem to have ended for the time being. Everything seems to be in turmoil. Apart from the merits and results of the negotiations with the Government of India, I had always insisted that some sort of internal settlement was absolutely essential. If nothing more, at least the maintenance of law and order to ensure internal peace and harmony, under no circumstances ought to have been overlooked. We can never face both external as well as internal stalemate. I will always wish that internal peace is preserved at all costs to maintain law and order.

It is my misfortune to point out that today I find almost the entire Dominion of our Great Hyderabad in a very disturbed state. Nowhere in the State that idol of peace and harmony is visible amongst the major communities. Internal peace is disturbed. Morale of the people has gone down. Mutual suspicion has ensnared both the communities. During my tours, wherever and whenever I have gone, I have sadly found the lamentable picture of distrust and sorrow. Every Hindu is panic stricken. This panic has to a very great extent not been illfounded. Unfortunately I have noticed every Hindu complaining of inhuman atrocities, arson, murder and loot perpetrated by Goonda elements. Even innocent Hindu women are reported to have been molested. These Goonda elements, in my sincere opinion, have entirely gone out of the control of Government.

As I consider myself the disciple of peace and communal harmony, I consider it to be my foremost duty to satisfy the dictates of my conscience to go amongst the masses and strive with heart and soul to cultivate that noble spirit of communal brotherhood. I think it is my foremost duty to sacrifice even my high post in the Government for this purpose.

During these hard days, social service can be the only factor which can bring about brotherhood, peace and prosperity to our country. When I say I am most loyal to Hyderabad and my beloved ruler, it would become only a pretention, if I failed to act upto that principle. Only he is loyal to the king and country who strives his utmost to attain that communal peace, which is sadly shaken at present in Hyderabad. To this end, I want to devote my entire energy and even at the cost of my life if necessary. I think, therefore that my place is amongst the masses and not in the Government chair.

"WAR" seems to be on the lips of every Muslim brother. But may I know against whom are these preparations of war? Our Hyderabad is surrounded on all sides by the Indian Union. There are hard and fast geographical and historical relations between our Hyderabad and the Indian Union. Almost every Hyderabad, be he a Hindu or a Muslim, has his social and economic relations in the Union of India, which are and shall ever be inseparable. There will be total destruction of the entire structure of peace and prosperity for both, God forbid, if the Government of Hyderabad and the Government of India have to adopt the course of armed conflict. I under no circumstances, wish to be a party to such a disaster. I will fight to the last to attain the noble goal of communal peace and brotherhood, which I am convinced can only bring happiness to our country. I always love peace. I pray almighty God to give us all the strength and wisdom to see clearly our correct path and to fight the battle of humanity.

I have personally very high regards for your capacity and noble ideals. I assure his Most Exalted Highness of my loyalty. I pray for his long life and prosperity. I request and hope that I will be excused by His Exalted Highness and your goodself, who have all this time proved to be my sympathisers and well wishers. I have no other alternative left but to request you to permit me to tender my resignation of office of Minister which I hold at present in the Government. I shall thank you to relieve me of my office and request my beloved Ruler to accept my resignation, as early as possible. God bless the Nizam and my beloved country Hyderabad.

Yours truly,

(Sd.) J. V. JOSHI,

H. E. Mir Laik Ali,

Prime Minister, Hyderabad-Deccan.

STATEMENT BY MR. G. RAMACHARI, DATED THE 22ND
FEBRUARY 1948

My main object in joining the Interim Government was to pave the way for an early settlement between the Government and the people, as represented by the Hyderabad State Congress, which I have served for the past ten years in one capacity or another. I lost no time in opening the subject, in fact I did press the matter for some definite settlement. But I was, I confess, sorely disappointed by the indifferent and evasive manner in which this most important and urgent matter was dealt with by the Government. They would not put their finger on the wound.

Meanwhile, the situation in the countryside continued to deteriorate rapidly. There has been no security of life or property in the State for those who will not practically be slaves. Forces of violence and goondaism were let loose. Arson, loot and murder formed the normal events of the day. Armed men rode round the country spilling death wherever they went. Village after village was burnt down; several villages were abandoned out of sheer fright. Even in the jail the hand of the goonda was at work.

EVIL FORCES ACTIVE

The Majlis Ittehad-ul-Muslemin has openly taken to a policy of militarism preaching fire and sword. A do-or-die Jihad has been proclaimed against every one who opposed the Majlis goal of the establishment of an Islamic State. As if this is not enough, their leader goes on proclaiming that Hyderabad is to be the home of the four crores of Muslims of the Indian Union. His fascist mind does not think of the people who have created this beautiful country with their affection and toil out of mediaeval darkness.

It is this state of affairs that I could not tolerate. I insisted that we ruthlessly suppress all these forces before we could think of any reform or change. Otherwise we had no right to continue as a Government. A Government which cannot offer security and peace to its people had no right to call itself so.

The Majlis Ittehad-ul-Muslemin having accepted the responsibility of office would, I thought, change its time and work for a peaceful settlement of all matters of contention. Two months have now gone by but the expected has not happened. The Majlis has grown more rabid than ever. It now declares that the Majlis and not the Nizam, is our ruler. Their leader indulges in sabre-rattling every day and preaches hatred and war. This goes on unchecked while loyal subjects who desire that the Hyderabad administration should be modernized and secularized get beaten and pushed behind the bars.

All this requires an iron hand and a temperament of steel to deal with. No one else but the Nizam can do this. A little delay will mean further complication and untold misery to the millions. My resignation is an expression of a deep frustration and an emphatic protest; it is also a poignant request to our beloved ruler to come to the aid of the suffering subjects of his in this hour of peril.

Details of the incident

(ii) On the 17th January 1948, at about 6 P.M., Channappa Madiwalappa Kori, Sharnappa Irappa Balabatti, Imamsa Maktumsab Tangadagi, Maktumsab Imamsab Tangadagi, Manasya Halleppa and Nagappa Ningappa Shirsagi, villagers of Honmalli, Singi Taluq, were working in a field belonging to one Dastagirsa Darga in the village of Kulgeri in the State, when they found about 40 men belonging to the Nizam's Military including some goondas, advancing towards them. They fled but were soon overpowered by the Military and taken to a Darga situated about 2 to 3 furlongs from Honmalli village, and beaten with a view to obtaining information regarding the activities of the State Congress. To intimidate them, the Military fired two shots in the air. At about 8 P.M., Imamsa Maktumsab Tangadagi and his son Maktumsa Imamsa Tangadagi were released, but the remaining 4 persons were detained till midnight. On the intervention of Dastagirsa Durga, they were later released.

(iii) On the 13th January 1948, Bandu Kashinath Deshmukh, Tatyasa China Bhavar and Asman Asraji of Sulki village, Taluq Shevgaon, District Ahmednagar, were searched by the Hyderabad State Customs sepoys at Mahar-Takli in the Taluq of Paithan, District Aurangabad. Of these men, Bandu Kashinath Deshmukh was tied and detained whereas the remaining two escaped and fled to Suklu.

(iv) On the 1st February 1948, some goondas assisted by the State Police raided the village of Tadwal, Sholapur District, shot dead one person and looted some others. When the Sub-Inspector of Pangri arrived on the scene, with his men, the State Police opened fire on them. The raiders visited the village in two buses belonging to the Nizam's State Railway.

9. No. 125-S/48, dated 7-3-48.

On the morning of the 2nd March 1948 about 60 men of the Nizam's Police fired on the Bombay Government Armed Police party of 9 men stationed at Halkori (Gajendragad Police Station) without any provocation and also on villagers. The Bombay Police party exchanged firing till all their ammunition exhausted. In the result, three of the Bombay Policemen were shot dead by the Nizam's Police and their bodies were removed to unknown places.

10. No. 427-P/F 108 (3)/48, dated 10-3-48.

(i) On 15th February 1948, while the Tahsildar of Ashti (Nizam's State), camped in the village of Loni, with a party of about 10 Sepoys, in connection with the collection of land revenue, 4 of the Sepoys chased the villagers into the adjoining Union village of Mandve in the Ahmednagar Taluka. While returning from Mandve village, the Sepoys caught hold of one Kesu, a Mahar of that village, and dragged him to the threshing floors of Manaji Krishnaji Nimse and Khashaba Rabaji Nimse, whence they too were forcibly carried away to Loni. Before reaching the village of Loni, one of the Sepoys hit Kesu with a stone who thereupon fell on the ground bleeding profusely. Manaji and Khashaba were taken to Loni and released in the evening. Hardly had they entered the limits of Mandve when they were fired upon by the Sepoys. Khashaba was killed on the spot while his companion Manaji was seriously injured.

(ii) On the 11th February 1948, 16 men belonging to H. E. H. the Nizam's Police trespassed into the village of Turk Pimpri in the Sholapur District and forcibly carried away (i) Abdul Ambir of Pimpri, (ii) Bhagwant Keshav Patil of Jamgaon and (iii) Bapurao Tulsiram Chavan of Jamgaon.

Details of the incident

(ii) On the 10th April 1948, at about 4-30 P.M., a party of about 300 armed men from Osmanabad District trespassed into the limits of Kaudgaon village and fired indiscriminately for about 3 hours, using machine guns and rifles. The Union Police stationed in this village repulsed the attack.

12. No. 1470-P/F. 108(3)/48, dated 19-5-48.

At about 7-30 A.M. on the 3rd April 1948, three Hyderabad State Police Constables (two in uniform and one in plain clothes) trespassed into the limits of Byadgihal village in Sindgi Taluq, Bijapur District, stopped a bullock cart transporting oil-seeds from the State to the Union territory and forced the cartmen, Ningappa and his brother Sharnappa, to unyoke the bulls. On receipt of this news, the residents of Byadgihal village came out in a body to the spot when the State Police Constables released the cartmen, while the plain clothesman, whose name is reported to be Davalsab Mujavar crossed over into the State border. On seeing their colleague bringing in a party of 10 or 12 State Army personnel to their aid the two Constables fired on the villagers, injuring one Kalyanappa Gangappa Asangihal in the wrist. Meanwhile, the Bombay Province Armed Police on patrol duty arrived at the scene and chased the two Constables into the State territory. The State Military party who had meanwhile taken up positions on the other side of the border then opened fire on them. The exchange of fire lasted for an hour.

13. No. 1816-P/F. 108(3)/48, dated 24-5-48.

(i) At about 2 P.M. on the 3rd April 1948, some Arabs, presumed to be freshly recruited into the State Police, armed with muzzle loading guns, looted 4 carts carrying grocery articles from Dudhani to Hadalgi on the border near Hadalgi and Nimbali.

(ii) On the 12th April 1948, an armed Police party from Wagholi in State territory, trespassed into the fields within the limits of Yedsi in Barsi Taluq and ordered some residents of the State who had come to attend the weekly fair in Yedsi and were resting in the fields, to return to their homes and assaulted some of them. The owner of the field, Vishwanath Nilu Deshmukh and his two servants, Daji Hari Deshmukh and Govind Genu Deshmukh, who were working in the fields at the time, were ordered to load the bundles belonging to the State Police, and when they refused to do so they were also assaulted. The bundles were then carted away to the State border and on the way, one of the bulls which was weak and slow was left behind and another belonging to one Anna Bajirao of Yedsi was yoked instead. Meanwhile the Union Police stationed in Yedsi arrived on the scene and retrieved the bundles and the bull.

(iii) On the 26th April 1948, some 60 to 70 residents of Dehkri village in State (where arson and murder was alleged to have been committed on large scale) took refuge in Alijapur village in Sholapur District. On the 27th April, at about 8 A.M. fire was opened on the Hindu locality of Alijapur from across the border by some persons (presumably State Military or Police) armed with powerful and long range weapons. As a result, 4 villagers, Laxman Narayan Vanve, Devidas Ramchandra Chandani, Sada Tulshiram Mahar and Hari Ramchand Ghuge, were killed and 4 others, Ramchandra Ghuge, Bhanudas Yesu Vanve, Yeshwant Ramchandra and Sarubai, w/o Narayan Vanve, received injuries. 30 houses and 5 stacks of kadbis were burnt by the raiders.

14. No. 1816-P/F. 108(3)/48, dated 24-5-48.

On 14th April 1948, at about 12 noon, the villagers of Sarola in Osmanabad District, close to Kajale in Sholapur District, came to Kajale for shelter as their village was looted by goondas consisting of Razakars, Deendars and Arabs from the State. At 1 P.M. a band of Razakars, State Military and Police personnel came near Kajale and opened fire. The police party belonging to Kajale with 20 to 30 villagers armed with sticks went out to repulse the attack, with the result one Police constable was shot dead by the goondas who were in over-whelming numbers. Fire was opened by the goondas from 3 sides and the villagers and the Police party began to retreat. While retreating, one more Police constable and 6 villagers were shot down. The dead bodies of the two Constables and 4 villagers were taken away by the Razakars in a truck along with the arms and ammunition belonging to the Police. Besides, 4 more villagers of Kajale were injured in the attack and were admitted for treatment in the Barsi dispensary.

15. No. 1705-P/F. 108(3)/48, dated 7-6-48.	On the 8th May 1948, 20 cartmen and 6 other villagers (including a woman), all residents of Mangrul, an Union enclave village in the State, while proceeding to Sholapur were detained by the State Police and taken to Tamalwadnaka and their 20 carts containing foodstuffs like jaggery, groundnut, jowar, wheat and groundnut oil were seized. The District Superintendent of Police, Sholapur, deputed on the 10th May 1948 his Deputy Superintendent of Police to enquire into the matter. The Deputy Superintendent proceeded on the same day to Tamalwadi in a police lorry with a party of police constables and, as he neared the naka, signalled his approach to the State Police party stationed there in a manner which they could easily recognise. However, when the lorry was about 150 yards away from the naka, the State Police opened fire and continued to do so despite the Sholapur Police signalling and shouting to stop the firing. As there was no hope of contacting the State Police, the Deputy Superintendent was forced to return to Sholapur.
16. No. 5016-P/F. 108(3)/48, dated 5-6-48.	(i) On the 1st May 1948, the Police Sub-Inspector at Kanapur Customs naka (in Tuljapur taluq, Osmanabad district) detained a lorry belonging to Mr. B. L. Karadi, an excise contractor of Sholapur while engaged in transporting toddy from Arali, an Union enclave village in State territory, to Sholapur, and removed the lorry and the driver to Osmanabad. (ii) On the 13th May 1948, another lorry belonging to the same contractor (Mr. B. L. Karadi) of Sholapur was detained in similar circumstances and taken to Osmanabad. As a result of these unlawful detentions, the contractor has suffered a loss of about Rs. 28,000.
17. No. F. 5013-PF. 108(3)/48, dated 11-6-48.	(i) On the 21st May 1948, one Bhagwan Appa Bhore of Upale, an Union enclave in State territory, who was passing by the Customs naka at Alani, was detained and assaulted by the Police and the Razakars stationed in the Naka. (ii) On the 21st May 1948, 2 she-buffaloes valued at Rs. 300 belonging to one Mahdeo Shirmurti were forcibly taken away by the Razakars stationed in the Customs naka at Dhoki, while they were grazing in the fields of Tadvale village in Barsi Taluq. (iii) On the 23rd May 1948, one Indravahan Ratnaji Gire of Mard (Sholapur Taluq) and his mother Manjulabai, who were passing the Customs naka at Nanaj, were detained and assaulted by the Police and Razakars stationed in the naka and relieved of Rs. 20.
18. No. 5101-P/F. 108(3)/48, dated 15-6-48.	(i) One Mr. Gopal Shankar Karanur of Kasegaon, Sholapur District who visited Tamalwadi in State territory on the 2nd May 1948 to make enquiries regarding the availability of kerosene oil, was laid hold of by the Razakars, belaboured and taken to the Police Station where the Police Sub-Inspector threatened him with death if he did not reveal the real object of his visit to Tamalwadi. The Razakars then tied the hands and feet of Mr. Karanur, carried him some distance away from the Police Station on the road to Ule village, shot him through the hands and brought him back to the Police Station, where he was detained till the next morning. On the morning of the 3rd May, he was again threatened by the Police Sub-Inspector and Razakars, and taken to a house in Tamalwadi from where he escaped after bribing the Razakars with his wrist watch. On reaching Gangewadi in Kasegaon Taluq, he met an armed party of the Bombay Police who sent him to the Civil Hospital at Sholapur for treatment of the injuries inflicted on him by Razakars.

H. the Nizam's State Police visited the village of Mulugumadi in Tiruvur Taluq (Kistna District), and kidnapped 18 persons, some of whom are reported to be women. As they left the village, they fired shots in the air with a view to threaten the villagers.
13. No. 584-P/F. 108 (2)/48, dated 24-3-48. (i) On the 2nd March 1948, the State Military visited the village of Kottapalli in Kistna District and carried away six farm servants of the Karnam of that village to Bhimavaram, where they were interrogated and eventually released. (ii) On the 5th March 1948, one Vangavati Venkataratnam of Siripuram village (Kistna District) was detained by the Kodada Police and beaten with a view to elicit information regarding the whereabouts of certain State Congressmen and Communists. Not having secured any useful information from him they released him on the 6th March. (iii) On the 6th March 1948, one Kumarakunta Saidulu, a merchant of Munagala, was detained by the Kodada Police and assaulted by the Jemadar with a view to eliciting information regarding certain Congressmen and Communists who were suspected to be taking shelter in the Union villages. (iv) On the 14th March, 1948, at about 2 P.M., Sri B. B. Subba Rao, Sub-Inspector, Hospet Town Station and Swamidoss, Police Constable No. 1245, were arrested by the State Police at Kopbal, which they visited in connection with the examination of certain witnesses involved in a criminal case. Notwithstanding the fact that they were in uniform at the time and their remonstrances that they were concerned with merely the examination of certain witnesses, the Sub-Inspector, Kopbal, chose to arrest them and later produced them before the Asst. Superintendent of Police, Kopbal, who ordered their release, after administering a warning that they should not in future enter the State without previous permission.
4. No. 681-P/F. 108 (2)/48, dated 30-3-48. On the 7th February and again on the 21st February 1948, the State Police and Military stationed at Kodada unlawfully intercepted certain prisoners while being escorted by the Madras Police from Munagala to Jaggayyapet and forcibly took them away.
15. No. 716-P/F. 108 (2)/48, dated 3-4-48. At about 10:30 A.M. on the 23rd March 1948, Reddiboyina Narasimham and 6 other residents of Guntur District, proceeded in a ferry from Govindapuram, situated on the banks of the river Kistna, on a visit to Chinthirala Village in the Hyderabad State, and that as soon as the boat reached the other side of the river, they came upon a party consisting of 10 men belonging to the State Reserve Police and 40 to 50 goondas. Out of fright, Narasimham and others jumped into the river with a view to swim back to the Madras border, whereupon the State Police fired some shots at them. All of them, except Narasimham, reached the shore safely. The body of Narasimham, who is suspected to have died as a result of the firing, was washed ashore within the limits of Chinthirala Village on the morning of the 25th March, when the villagers buried it under the orders of the State Tahsildar at Raghunathpalle.
16. No. 108 (2)-P/48, dated 6-4-48. At about 3 P.M. on the 26th of March 1948, while one Ramulu of Thatakulagudem hamlet, Zeelugumilli village of Polavaram Taluk, was grazing his sheep in a field, two men belonging to the State Military accompanied by 20 goondas, trespassed into the field and carried away 10 sheep worth about Rs. 150. Ramulu protested, whereupon one of the Military men jabbed at his back with the butt end of his gun. Ramulu fell down and the 2 military men followed by the goondas retreated into the State territory towards Aswarapet.

17. No. 1001-P/F. 108 (2)/48, dated 22-4-48. (i) On the 7th March 1948, when the special Deputy Superintendent of Police Kanchikacharla, and the Refugee Deputy Tahsildar, Nandigama, were proceeding to Lingagiri, their jeeps were held up by the Hyderabad State Police at Huzurnagar. The two officers protested against this action of the State Police and were allowed to proceed after some delay.
- (ii) On the 15th March 1948, when Mr. Mohammed Ismail, Branch Postmaster, Komarabanda Village, Munagala Pargana, was returning from Jaggayyapet where he had proceeded on official duty, he was detained by the Hyderabad State Police at Kodada and searched. Due to the intervention of the Postal Inspector he was released on bail the next morning. Mr. Ismail states that a pamphlet containing prejudicial literature was foisted on him by the State Police.
- (iii) On the evening of the 8th April 1948, Madras Special Police Constable No. 3686, while travelling in a bus from Jaggayyapet to Munagala, was detained by the State Police at Kodada, interrogated about the strength of the Police and the armament position at Munagala, and released the next morning.
18. No. 847-P/F. 108 (2)/48, dated 22-4-48. On the 23rd March 1948, at about noon, a party of five constables of the State Reserve Police trespassed into the Union territory within the limits of Budavada village, Kistna District, lay hold of seven villagers out here hunting in the fields, tied down their hands and forcibly marched them to a place two furlongs away, where another party of 25 constables headed by a Tahsildar and a Tobacco Excise Inspector was stationed. The villagers were interrogated here regarding the whereabouts of certain Congressmen and Communists of the State and subsequently released. The villagers were assaulted with sticks while being marched from the fields to the place of interrogation.
19. No. 1245 P/F. 108 (2)/48, dated 1-5-48. In November 1947, one Kanteti Muttayya of Nidamanur, Bezvada Taluq, when he visited Khammammett for purchasing maize and green gram seeds, was taken into custody as soon as he detained at Khammammett Railway Station and detained in the Nizamabad Central Jail.
20. No. 1436-P/F. 108 (2)/48, dated 8-5-48. At about 1 P.M. on the 21st April 1948, a party of armed Arabs from Huzurnagar in the State, trespassed into the Indian Union territory within the limits of Lakkavaram village in Lingagiri Pargana and carried away by force some buffaloes grazing in the fields. The Arabs, who were given an unsuccessful chase by the Madras Reserve Police and the villagers of Lakkavaram, fired three shots in the direction of their pursuers. The State Officials at Huzurnagar to whom the matter was reported, evaded taking any steps for the return of the cattle, but the Arabs released the cattle after extorting Rs. 400 from the owners.
21. No. 1461-P/F. 108 (2)/48, dated 10-5-48. On the evening of 15th April 1948, when a party of nine pilgrims including 3 women from Velangi village, Ramchandrapur Taluq, East Godavari District, arrived at Borgampahad en route to Bhadrachallam, they were stopped by some State Military personnel, interrogated and searched. As it was nightfall by the time the search was completed, the Military personnel entrusted the pilgrims to a non-descript individual aged about 38 years, to provide them shelter for the night. This person led the party to a solitary building in the village and during the night threatening the pilgrims with a dagger forcibly carried away one of the women, raped her and relieved her of her earrings and Rs. 85 in cash. At day break, he led the party to the river Godavari and warned them that if they complained about the molestation they would be shot. The pilgrims crossed the river and reached Bhadrachalam where they narrated the incident to the local people.

APPENDIX VI

REPORT ON ENQUIRES AT NANAJ ON MONDAY 26th JULY 1948

After meeting Brigadiers BHATIA and GURBACHAN SINGH at TANDALWADI at about 0900 hours today I proceeded with them to SHOLAPUR where we visited the C.C.S. and spoke to 5 wounded soldiers of the Indian Union. Two were seriously wounded and all were suffering from multiple gun shot wounds which could only have been caused by L.M.Gs, STENS & RIFLE.

From questioning them it was learned that they were in the leading lorry of a convoy which was proceeding to BARSII with rations for the coy there, and which was fired upon at NANAJ village on the morning of 24th JULY 1948.

During questioning, two of the wounded, one Havildar and Naik stated that they heard an order to 'Fire' given by someone at the 'WHITE HOUSE' (A).

We then proceeded to NANAJ village where we were met by Lt.-Col. PRITHI PAL SINGH. This officer was proceeding to BARSII on 24th JULY with the convoy when it was attacked.

As the leading lorry reached a point just N of the culvert at the S. end of the village burst of fire was opened up from the first white building E of the road A. This building is approx. twenty yards from the road. Further fire came from the next building N (B) and another house W of the road (C). As a result of the opening burst of fire 5 soldiers were killed and 5 wounded. Lt.-Col. PRITHI PAL SINGH assures me the firing was intense—particularly from the white house.

These three houses have all been 'built up' in as much that each has an earthen sanger on its roof—each with loopholes, as one expects to see in the N.-W.F.P. districts.

Inspected the white house and there are a great number of 303 empty cases still on the roof.

At the SHOLAPUR end of the village is a chain road stop. Lt.-Col. PRITHI PAL SINGH wishes to emphasise that at the time, in question, this chain was down—offering free passage through the village.

The leading vehicle was riddled with bullets and Col. PRITHI PAL SINGH'S jeep was hit, as were some other vehicles.

A pitched battle then ensued and the troops of the convoy eventually took possession of and occupied the village at 1345 hours of that day. They had no further casualties, but 20 of the party who opened up the attack were killed. Of these seven were definitely Pathans, the remainder were of local origin but all were armed and some had steel helmets.

I was shown the body of a dead man who was killed during an attack on the troops in the village at about 2200 hours on 25/7. He was dressed in normal civil clothing and was armed with a 303 rifle when killed.

All throughout 25th, groups of armed men hovered around the village at a distance of about 1200 yards. These were observed through binoculars and the naked eye. Several were identified as Pathans from their dress and appearance.

I was shown a number of rifles of all types including 303s and 410 muskets, several steel helmets—one of which had POLICE printed on it, several police belts and one sarfi-i-khas police belt. A Jemadar's uniform of the N.D.P. and two sam browne belts—and one box 410 ammunition-ball and a broken Sten Gun butt.

With Brig. BHATIA and Lt.-Col. PRITHI PAL SINGH I visited the Grain Store in the centre of the village—the store was intact, and stocked full with sacks of grain. This store was inspected at my suggestion, as I had heard some had been taken away.

The village patel, police patel and customs patel were not present at this moment, neither could we find any person suitable for questioning. Lt.-Col. PRITHI PAL SINGH informs me that the village and police patel were available earlier this morning.

I saw two injured villagers, one woman and a child being treated by the unit Regimental Medical Officer (irrespective of religious, creeds).

Brig. BHATIA is of the opinion that this was a prepared ambush, but whether it was intended for troops or civilians busses it is not possible to say. The troops, however, were sikhs and wearing Olive Green.

CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY OF INDIA (LEGISLATIVE) DEBATES

(PART II – PROCEEDING OTHER THAN QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS)

Wednesday, 11th August, 1948.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at a quarter to Eleven of the Clock, Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Malankar) in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

(See Part I)

11.45.A.M

RESOLUTION RE-ABOLITION OF ENTRIES OF CASTE AND RELIGION, ETC., FROM GOVERNMENT REGISTERS, FORMS AND RECORDS.

Mr. Speaker: The House will now proceed with the further discussion of the following Resolution moved by Shri R. R. Diwakar on Tuesday, the 17th February, 1948 and not concluded on that date:

"This Assembly is of opinion that for any purposes connected with the State or its services, the Government of India shall not recognise any caste, sub-caste, sect or religion and that in future it shall abolish the mention or entry of caste, sub-caste, sect or religion in any forms supplied by Government or in any records or registers kept by Government."

The last speaker on the subject was Dr. Panjabrao Deshmukh.

Dr. P. S. Deshmukh (C.P. and Berar: General): Sir, I had already pointed out in the portion of my speech delivered on the 17th of February that this Resolution was a little premature and the remedy suggested was not liked by a very large section of the people. I had also pointed out that however abhorrent the existence of caste may be, it is a fact of the Hindu society, and unless we advance educationally and make further progress from the point of view of the better organization of the Hindu society, a proposal like this was likely to be misunderstood and misconstrued. It has got to be realized that even up to date, the Hindu Law which is in force is based on a caste system. The adoptions, the marriages and so many provisions of law have to take full cognizance of the existence of the caste system and however keen we may be to see that the caste distinctions go out of our life, and that caste quarrels and disputes are eliminated, this is not the way in which it would be possible to do it.

At the present time as we all know, Sir, the progress of the Hindu society is very much one-sided. The education as well as wealth is concentrated in the hands of a very small minority castes. Fortunately or unfortunately these minorities and these castes and communities can be easily specified, and when such a proposal emanates and especially when we find that the real sponsors of this idea belong to these exploiting small castes, there is a natural feeling of suspicion in the minds of the so-called majority communities, which are backward, which are living in rural areas, which have had no share—not at all an adequate share—of education in the country nor of any amenities of life in the whole length and breadth of India.

So, Sir, although I agree with the principle behind the Resolution, I had suggested that this is not the proper time at which such a Resolution should be pressed. I had also wanted that the Government should not make a precipitate declaration of their policy however welcome the principle behind it may be. And the announcement that was made by Government, I am prepared to call it most unfortunate because that does make people to believe that it is the intention of Government that the advanced shall remain advanced and the backward shall remain where they are. There has got to be some helping hand given to the rural people of the backward castes and communities and unless that is done, unless we are, on a somewhat equal basis, till then free competition should not come in. You cannot expect a village boy whose life is surrounded by everything adverse to education to compete on equal terms with one who has every facility at his command in spite of the fact that a village boy is not in any way inferior either in brains or character to a boy living in a town. We are not on any footing of equality—not even seeming equality. I think, Sir, merely to pronounce that everything should go by merit, that there is no need of any help to anybody who suffers from handicaps, within whose reach we have not been able to carry education, would not be a good thing and you cannot expect it to be approved by the whole people.

So I suggest that although we approve of the good intention and the aim behind the Resolution, there should be every effort made to remove the handicaps and to help those persons who are backward. I can mention the innumerable handicaps suffered by the rural areas from an instance from my own life. In the third primary standard, Sir, I had to waste one year even after having passed the third standard examination because the fourth class was not till then opened in my own village. It is impossible to ask a boy coming from rural areas to compete and expect that he shall stand first-class first. It is impossible for him to compete with anybody who had colleges and universities next-door to him. How can he, Sir, compete on the basis of share equality. All these things have got to be taken into consideration. I do not mean that there should be any proportionate representation or any reservations—that is not my idea. But there is a very large group of people, there are millions of people, who are suffering from this handicap and if we go in a precipitate manner it is likely that their interest will suffer. Only the other day I heard an instance of the Bombay Government having recruited, out of 42 sub-judges, 38 persons belonging to a very small minority community; two were Christians and the remaining two I am told were Muslims. These are things which are facts. We cannot be blind to facts. In the Central Provinces as well as in Bombay the majority of people feel despondent, feel desperate, that their interests are not being protected, that those who are in authority are merely interested in their relatives and their own people whose caste they know without being included in the applications. Those things they are doing almost every day, and this is the reason, Sir, why the majority of the people, the rural people especially, view all such attempts which are clothed in very good language, which make a show of being on a very high level, with suspicion. All these things create suspicion in the minds of the people and any premature pronouncement by the Government and any commitment on this subject would be disastrous and would be disliked by a large section of the people.

I would much rather that if such a suggestion is to emanate, it should be examined in all its bearings much more carefully than has been done or is likely to be done. And while a Resolution like this is before the House I would rather suggest, if there is room for compromise, that the whole question of how to eliminate castes and sub-castes and racial and communal feelings should be investigated and a proper remedy put forward. Unless some such thing is done we are likely to believe that simply because some people happen to occupy high places at the present day they are trying to exploit the position to the utmost of their ability under one name—or the other.

RESOLUTION Re ABOLITION OF ENTRIES OF CASTE AND RELIGION, ETC., , FROM 167

This is a good principle as I have said several times; but it is prematurely brought forward. And if this Resolution is accepted in any shape or form by this Government it will create considerable dissatisfaction in the country, which ought to be the concern of the Government to avoid.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel (Minister for Home, Information and Broadcasting and the States): Sir, with the general principle underlying the Resolution, there is a good deal of sympathy and the Government would like to go towards the fulfilment of the object of the Resolution as far as possible. But at the same time it must be remembered that long-established habits are not easily wiped off by either passing a Resolution or forcing the pace against the will of ignorant, vast masses of humanity. The Members of this House must be aware of what we have done in the Constituent Assembly. We have not been able to wipe out reservations either for the Anglo-Indians or the Christians or Muslims or Sikhs. Although we are trying as far as possible to remove these major distinctions of community from our Legislatures, we are not able to ignore these facts. So also we have to reckon with the existing state of things which have continued for centuries. Therefore, while it is true that since August 15th there can be only one nationality in Free India which covers all the castes and communities and there should be no distinction on the basis of religion also, we cannot ignore the fact that in spite of our attempt to provide in the constitution and our efforts both in the Provinces and in the Centre to wipe out the curse of 'untouchability' nobody will say that we have succeeded. We have to make tremendous efforts. Therefore, I would urge the Mover of the Resolution not to force the pace, because the object of the Mover can be served only by educating the people and by taking them with us as well as by allowing the forces of democracy or the impact of democracy to work. We have had not one election after the 15th of August and we have not had the constitution also passed. We will have to make a tremendous effort in this direction and we are anxious to go as far as possible. On behalf of Government I am prepared to say that we are ready to examine this case further and to appoint a Committee to go into the whole question and see how far we can take action in this matter without creating a confusion in the country or a conflict or an explosion. It is not so easy as is supposed to be. It is a good thing to do, but we must not force the pace too much. That is all I can say on behalf of the Government and I hope the Mover of the Resolution will be satisfied by the attitude that Government has taken that a committee may be appointed to examine the whole thing and Government would as far as possible give effect to the recommendations of the Committee.

Shri R. R. Diwakar (Bombay: General): Mr. Speaker, Sir, in view of the fact that the Government has accepted the objective and in view of the fact that some people unfortunately look upon the Resolution with some kind of suspicion, I would say that what the Resolution wanted to do was merely to retrace the steps which the British Government had taken to encourage caste consciousness, caste organisations and caste conflicts. It was the deliberate attempt of the British Government since 1923 especially to encourage all these tendencies in the body politic of the Indian nation. If we do not realise this fact, then of course I think we are looking at this question from a very wrong point of view. Therefore, the Resolution really pointed out that any encouragement that is being or has been given by the Government in its records or in application forms etc. ought to stop. That was the only object. In fact, very recently, in applications from refugees for loans caste had to be mentioned. Even in railway risk note forms caste has to be mentioned. . . .

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. The honourable member is making a regular speech.

Shri R. R. Diwakar: I would like to explain.

Mr. Speaker: It need not be done at length.

Shri R. R. Diwakar: So, that was the intention of this Resolution and nothing more, but as I say, in view of the fact that the Government is going into the matter—and I am sure that the National Government would do its best to see that a very strong and consolidated body politic emerges in this country—I beg leave of the House to withdraw my Resolution.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member wishes to have leave of the House to withdraw his Resolution.

The Resolution was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE MEASURES TO CHECK RISING PRICES OF NECESSARY COMMODITIES

Mr. Speaker: The next Resolution is Seth Damodar Swarup's. But I find that he is not there and Pandit Govind Malaviya has been given authority on his behalf.

Incidentally, honourable members must know that there is a time-limit prescribed. The ordinary time-limit is 15 minutes, but in view of the fact that a very large number of honourable members wish to speak, the Mover may take 15 minutes and others will take about 10 minutes.

Pandit Govind Malaviya (U.P.: General): Sir, I was under the impression that under the Rules the Mover is entitled to 30 minutes, but I shall confine myself to 15 minutes.

Mr. Speaker: I will just verify.

Pandit Govind Malaviya: It is all right. Your ruling is perfectly enough for me.

Mr. Speaker: It is not a ruling. I said from memory. I will just look up. Yes, it is thirty minutes; the honourable member is right.

Pandit Govind Malaviya: But I shall try to confine my speech to 15 minutes or so.

Sir, it is in a spirit of grave anxiety and concern that I rise to move:

"This Assembly views with grave concern the continuing rise in the prices of the necessary commodities of life in the country, and is of opinion that the Government should forthwith appoint a Commission to visit the different provinces and to report within three months upon the causes of such abnormal rise and to suggest measures for effectively bringing down immediately these soaring prices of all necessities, specially of food grains, eatables and cloth."

It is no exaggeration to say, Sir, that the people of India are groaning under the weight of these high prices. The misery and suffering which prevail in the land are simply indescribable. Only a few days ago the latest review of the movement of foodgrain and other commodity prices was published and it showed a still further rise in all the five groups mentioned in it. Cereals have reached the unprecedented figure of 448.2 as against the 100 of August 1939; pulses had another rise of 11 per cent., and reached 421.2; textiles rose by another 6.8 per cent. and reached 417; under other groups like food articles, industrial raw materials, semi-manufactured goods; manufactured articles and miscellaneous, there was an all-round rise. Besides that, we know from our daily experience that the prices of articles required for every day life have become impossible. It is not merely the articles which are given in that list, but every little thing, every article of daily need and requirement, is well beyond the reach of the average man in India today. Ghee is selling at about 2½ chataks to a Rupee; wheat is selling about 22 chataks to a Rupee; sugar is a rupee a seer; vegetables are selling anywhere between a Rupee to two Rupees a seer; potatoes are selling at a Rupee and a half a seer; meat, fish, poultry and eggs are in the same condition; even salt, Sir against the tax on which our revered late Mahatmaji led such a campaign, even that salt, Sir, today is not available for less than 4 annas a seer. Sometimes people have been known to have had to pay a Rupee for a seer of it. Milk which is the foundation-stone of national health, milk which is the sustenance of children and of expecting and nursing mothers, that milk, Sir, is not available in this country in a pure form for anything less than a Rupee a seer or so. That is how things stand. Similarly, Sir, there are numerous other articles. Cloth has become a luxury. Parents and housewives, even when in distress about cloth, do not dare to think of purchasing it. If any child, a little school boy of the family, is to be shod, one needs at least about ten Rupees to get an ordinary pair of shoes; his books, his pencil, his pencil-cutter, everything has assumed proportions in prices which are well beyond the reach of an ordinary average family; accommodation, transport, day to day ordinary cost of services, everything that is essential to enable a person to live have reached prices which are all but impossible. Mahatmaji once talked of Himalayan blunders; he was big like the Himalayas to cover them up. I wonder what we shall do about these Himalayan prices, Sir, under the weight of which life in the country seems to be crushed.

Sir, it is a very difficult situation that we are faced with. Society can be divided into four sections, 2 upper and 2 lower. The upper sections do not very much matter, Sir, because somehow or the other—I shall not go into it—whatever be the cost of things, they can somehow carry on. But the middle class and the poorer people are finding it utterly impossible to carry on as things are. I know, Sir, that the Government is doing its very best to meet the situation. I know from personal contact, Sir, that every Minister is doing all that is humanly possible to meet this situation. Nothing is being left undone by them, but, Sir, what is wanted is results. The effort is there, but unless the results are achieved, things will simply not do.

Sir, our immediate future prospects also do not seem to be very bright. The excessive rains which we have had during the past one month, almost all over north India, have largely destroyed the seed-grains which had been sown in the fields. The Kharif crop, therefore, is almost gone. There is a saying in Hindi: "Mahangi men ata geela". I don't know how the situation will stand at the end of a few months.

Sir, everybody feels happy that the Government have decided to tackle that octopus of inflation. But, Sir, it seems to me that the government's great difficulty is that on the one side, its mental tendencies and ideological outlook are socialistic which wants to do whatever may be possible in one particular direction, and on the other hand it has got, Sir, to work under the sheer force of circumstances about it; and I dare say, Sir that if Acharya Narendra Deo or Shri Jai Prakash Narain were there in spite of their empty criticisms, they could have done nothing else. The difficulty, therefore, Sir, is that on the other hand, the government tied down on all sides by the force of existing circumstances, has to function through the old old order, bureaucratic, capitalistic, ponderous and unimaginative. Sir, as I said, we want results. We want that the Government should be able to adopt some method or some way by which we may be able to bring down these prices. I do not wish to rush with suggestions, Sir, in that matter. It is for the Government to devise the way.

May be, Sir, that (i) the scheme propounded by Acharya Vinoba Bhave for realization of Government revenues in kind as a temporary measure may prove effective; or, may be, Sir, that (ii) a determined and effective method of subsidised low prices of some of the main necessities of life may help the situation. We know, Sir, that in England and other countries throughout the war even when they were in the gravest of difficulties, the prices of necessary commodities of life in most instances were kept down almost at the pre-war level by subsidies from the State. Milk throughout the war was sold in England at 5d. to the quart. Sir, may be that by that method we can bring down the prices of grains and cloth and thereby seriously affect the entire price structure in the country.

May be, Sir, that (iii)—, I say this without the least desire in any way to criticise or apportion blame anywhere, but we know that almost all the ills and difficulties that we suffer from today are due to the present difficulty of railway transport. May be, Sir, that if we could hand over the complete railway organisation and administration into the hands of a body created ad hoc for the purpose for the time being; if we could completely re-orientalise the railway administration, we may be able to get over that terrible bottle-neck where every thing seems to be stuck up today.

Or Sir, may be, that (iv) as a temporary measure, to meet the danger and crisis that we are faced with, the handing over of this entire problem into the hands of the big industrialists and capitalists of the country so that they might treble the production which we have today, may do the needful. On the contrary, Sir, may be that (v) a complete taking over by the government of all the production units of the country for the purpose of creating within them the necessary congenial atmosphere for much increased productivity will be necessary to meet this serious menace. Whatever it may be, the Government must take immediate action in this direction. No Government, Sir howsoever good it may be, no Government, howsoever patriotic it may be, no Government, Sir, howsoever adored it may be by its people, can hope to live if its people die of hunger and want. The Government that we have in this country today is our own. No better team, no better Government, no better set of people could be found to carry on the heavy responsibility that lies on their shoulders. Sir, the eyes of the famished children, the ill-fed youth and the semi-starved mothers of this land are raised towards them. The immediate urgency, Sir, is to devise ways by which the present day impossible prices will be brought down and the people will be enabled to get what is absolutely essential to enable them to live. If we can achieve that, Sir, we shall not only have solved our great problem, but we shall have made a success of the independence that we have so dearly won for our country.

I understand, Sir, that our great Prime Minister has probably an idea that these Commissions only delay things. None will be happier than myself if some method is found to accelerate things and to achieve results quicker than three months which is the time within which this Commission is, in this resolution, asked to report. What we want is result. What we want is that the high prices and the inflation which prevail in this country should be effectively checked. It is not difficult to see who profits by them; it is not difficult to see who reaps the benefit out of them. We should find some way or the other by which we should be able to make it possible for the middle class man in this country to procure from day to day with the means at his disposal, what is essential to enable him to keep his body and soul together. If we do that much, Sir, we shall have solved the biggest problem not only of this country.

RESOLUTION Re MEASURES TO CHECK RISING PRICES OF NECESSARY COMMODITIES 171

but probably of this age and the whole of mankind will thank this Government for it.

I commend this resolution for the acceptance of this House.

Mr. Speaker: Resolution moved:

"This Assembly views with grave concern the continuing rise in the prices of the necessary commodities of life in the country, and is of opinion that the Government should forthwith appoint a Commission to visit the different provinces and to report within three months upon the causes of such abnormal rise and to suggest measures for effectively bringing down immediately these soaring prices of all necessities, specially of food grains, eatables and cloth."

I find there are some amendments to the resolution. I do not know whether the honourable members wish to move them.

सेठ गोविन्द दास : सभापति जी, मैं इस प्रस्ताव का समर्थन करता हूँ। प्रस्तावक महोदय ने कोई कारण स्पष्ट शब्दों में उपस्थित नहीं कि कि जिनकी वजह से चीजों का भाव इस तरह से बढ़ रहा है और न उनमें ने हमारे सामने उन उपर्यों को रखा है जिनसे चीजों के भाव घटाये जा सकते हैं।

Seth Govind Das (C.P. and Berar: General): Mr. Speaker, Sir, I support this Resolution. The Mover has neither elucidated any causes for the continuing abnormal rise in the prices of commodities, nor has he placed before us any measures which may be adopted to bring down these soaring prices.

Mr. Z. H. Lari (U.P.: Muslim): On a point of order, Sir, I have tabled some amendments to the resolution. I thought the first mover is moving his amendment. I should be given an opportunity to move my amendments.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. There is no point of order in this. I made a special reference to this. I said I do not know whether honourable members wish to move them. Nobody got up.

Mr. Z. H. Lari: I stood up. I thought this gentleman was going to move the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member perhaps did not know the member and that is how the mistake has arisen.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava (East Punjab: General): I thought Mr. Lari would move his amendments first. So I did not rise up.

Mr. Speaker: I will give the honourable member an opportunity after this gentleman finishes speaking.

सेठ गोविन्द दास : मैं यह कह रहा था कि प्रस्तावक महोदय ने स्पष्ट रूप से न तो उन कारणों को रखा जिनसे चीजों के भाव बढ़ रहे हैं और न उन उपायों को रखा कि जिनसे हम इस सम्बन्ध में कुछ कर सकते हैं। दोनों बातें बहुत कठिन हैं, यह मैं जानता हूँ, और दोनों में विशेषज्ञों की राय जरूरी है यह भी मैं मानता हूँ। परन्तु चीजों के भाव बढ़ने के कारण क्या हैं उन कारणों को मैं संक्षेप से रखना चाहूंगा। मेरी दृष्टि से पहला कारण चीजों के भाव बढ़ने का यह है कि हमारी उत्पत्ति कम होती जा रही है और इस उत्पत्ति की कमी का कारण मुख्यतः हड़तालें हैं जहां हड़तालें नहीं होतीं वहां भी जो लोग काम करते हैं, मेरा मतलब मजदूरों से है, उनके

[सैठ गोविन्द दास]

मनों में स्फूर्ति का अभाव है। जितना काम उन्हें ईमानदारी के साथ करना चाहिये उतना वे नहीं करते। दूसरा कारण मेरी दृष्टि से व्यापारियों का स्वार्थ है और उसमें इस समय कुछ दूर तक हमारे किसान भी शामिल हो गये हैं। किसान जितना अनाज उत्पन्न करते हैं और व्यापारी जितना माल अपने कारखानों में बनवाते हैं न तो उनमें से किसान जल्दी से अपना अनाज और दूसरी वस्तुयें बाजार में भेजते हैं और न व्यापारी जो कि चीजों को अपने कारखानों में बनवाते हैं उन्हें भेजते हैं। इस माल का आगे भाव बढ़ेगा, और बढ़ेगा, और बढ़ेगा, इस आशा पर उसे रोक रखा जाता है। तीसरा कारण मेरी दृष्टि से भाव बढ़ने का यह है कि कंट्रोल के सम्बन्ध में सरकार की नीति विलकुल स्पष्ट नहीं है। लोगों को सदा आशंका रहती है कि किसी भी वस्तु कंट्रोल की नीति को फिर काम में लाया जा सकता है और इस आशंका के कारण जनता चीजों को खरीदने में दौड़ लगाती है। जितनी चीजों की उसे आवश्यकता होती है उससे अधिक चीजें खरीदती है। उनको वह जमा कर रखती है, इस भय के कारण कि सम्भव है कि आगे चल कर जब उसको आवश्यकता हो तब वे चीजें न मिलें, या सरकार की नीति में ही, जहां तक कि कंट्रोल का सम्बन्ध है वहां तक परिवर्तन हो जाय। चौथा कारण यह है कि वैगनों (wagons) के न मिलने से माल के आवागमन में बड़ी रुकावट होती है। मेरी दृष्टि से यदि हम विशेषज्ञों को अलग रखें तो व्यापक रूप से ये कारण हैं जिनकी वजह से चीजों के भाव बढ़ रहे हैं।

तब प्रश्न यह उठता है कि भावों को नीचे लाने के लिये हमें क्या करना चाहिये। स्वभावतः सब से पहले जो चीज हमारे सामने आ जाती है वह यह है कि फिर से कंट्रोल किया जाय। फिर से कंट्रोल करने से वस्तुस्थिति कहां तक सुधरेगी इस सम्बन्ध में स्पष्ट रूप से कुछ कह देना बड़ी कठिन बात है। कंट्रोल का अब तक हम को जो तजुर्बा रहा है उससे यह स्पष्ट हो गया है कि कंट्रोल के कारण चोर बाजार और कंट्रोल के कारण रिश्वत खोरी यह चीजें बराबर बढ़ती हैं और इसीलिये पूज्य महात्माजी ने यह कहा था कि कंट्रोल की नीति को हमें समाप्त कर देना चाहिये। अभी भी जिन चीजों पर कंट्रोल है उनकी ओर यदि हम दृष्टिपात करें तो हमें वस्तुस्थिति का थोड़ा बहुत ज्ञान और अन्दाजा हो सकता है। मैं एक ही चीज का दृष्टान्त दूंगा, पेट्रोल का। पेट्रोल पर कंट्रोल है। हम यह जानते हैं कि इस देश में लड़ाई की आशंका है हमको यह भी मालूम है कि देश की रक्षा के लिये सरकार का जो पेट्रोल का कंट्रोल है वह विलकुल उचित है। पर इतना होने पर भी शायद इस देश का कोई शहर ही नहीं, पर कस्बा और जहां पर यह पेट्रोल के पम्प लगे रहते हैं उनमें से कोई भी स्थान ऐसा नहीं होगा कि जहां चोर बाजार में ऊंचे भाव देने पर पेट्रोल न मिलता हो। तो हमने देखा कि जहां तक कि पेट्रोल का सम्बन्ध है, जो पेट्रोल देश की रक्षा के लिए आवश्यक है उस सम्बन्ध में भी यह दशा है। मेरा तो यह मत है कि यदि इस समय की ऊंची कीमतों को देखकर हमें कंट्रोल

करना ही आवश्यक जान पड़े तो फिर वह कंट्रोल पूरा होना चाहिये। अधूरे कंट्रोल से काम नहीं चलेगा। वह केवल नगरों में हो, यह नहीं बल्कि वह गांव तक जाना चाहिये और जहां तक कि मनुष्य के जीवन के लिये जिन् दो प्रधान आवश्यकताओं का सम्बन्ध है एक अनाज और दूसरा कपड़ा, उसका तो फिर पूरा पूरा कंट्रोल हो जाना चाहिये। जितना अनाज का उत्पादन होता है वह सब का सब सरकार ले ले। जितना कपड़ा बनाया जाता है वह सब का सब सरकार ले ले और इनके वितरण की व्यवस्था भी सरकार करे।

या तो इस तरीके का कंट्रोल हो। और अगर इस तरीके का कंट्रोल सम्भव नहीं है तो फिर मैं कहूंगा कि कंट्रोल की नीति के सम्बन्ध में कोई आशंका जनता के मन में नहीं रहने देनी चाहिए और यह स्पष्ट हो जाना चाहिए कि कोई कंट्रोल होने वाला नहीं है। तब सवाल उठता है कि यदि कंट्रोल नहीं होता तो हमें क्या करना चाहिए। इस सम्बन्ध में जैसा मैंने कहा है मैं विशेषज्ञ तो नहीं हूँ लेकिन इधर उधर घूमने का मुझे बहुत अवसर मिलता है और जिन बातों को मैंने देखा है उनके आधार पर मैं कुछ कहना चाहता हूँ। हमारा जनता के साथ जो सम्पर्क स्वतन्त्रता मिलने के पहले था वह दिनों दिन कम होता जा रहा है। मैं यह मानता हूँ कि हमारे देश की जनता चाहे अपढ़ हो पर जहां तक स्वाभाविक ज्ञान का सम्बन्ध है वहां हमारी जनता अज्ञानी नहीं है। साथ ही वह देशभक्त जनता है उस जनता में किसान भी आजाते हैं उस जनता में मजदूर भी आजाते हैं, उस जनता में सारे वर्ग और सारे फिरके आजाते हैं। और मैं तो यह मानता हूँ कि बिना शस्त्रों के एरोप्लेनों (aeroplanes) के, तोपखाने के, रिसाले के, और पैदल के जनता के साथ सम्पर्क रखने के कारण हम स्वराज्य प्राप्त कर सके हैं। मैं इस बात को नहीं मानता कि केवल अंतर्राष्ट्रीय परिस्थिति से हमें स्वराज्य प्राप्त हुआ है। अगर पूज्य महात्माजी ने हमें इतना सजग नहीं कर दिया होता, यदि राष्ट्रीय भावनाएँ हमारी जनता में भर न दी होतीं तो इस अन्तर्राष्ट्रीय परिस्थिति में हमें और अधिक पीसा जाता। मैं यह मानता हूँ कि हमें जो स्वराज्य प्राप्त हुआ है, वह जनता के सम्पर्क से प्राप्त हुआ है। उसी प्रकार यदि हम जनता से सच्चा सम्पर्क फिर से स्थापित कर सकें तो मेरा यह मत है कि हम वर्तमान परिस्थिति को काबू में ला सकते हैं। जैसा मैंने अभी आपसे कहा है कि मजदूर के हृदय में सरकार के प्रति वह श्रद्धा और विश्वास नहीं है। हम उन्हें समझाएँ कि यदि हड़ताल से उनकी थोड़ी सी वेतन वृद्धि होती है तो भी एक ओर तो उनकी वेतन वृद्धि होती है, दूसरी ओर उत्पादन की कमी के कारण चीजों का भाव बढ़ता है। अगर पूरा हिसाब लगा कर देखा जाय तो स्पष्ट मालूम हो जायगा कि वेतन वृद्धि से उनको जितना लाभ नहीं होता, उससे कहीं अधिक हानि उनको उत्पादन की कमी से होती

[सैठ गोविन्द दास]

है; जो चीजों का भाव बढ़ता है उन चीजों को अधिक दाम देकर खरीदने में। उसी प्रकार हम व्यापारियों को समझावें। व्यापारी किसी समय बड़े देशभक्त रहे हैं लेकिन मुझे यह कहते हुए बड़ा खेद होता है कि इस समय उनकी देशभक्ति स्वार्थ भक्ति में परिणत होगयी है। यदि हम मजदूरों को समझा सकें, यदि हम व्यापारियों को समझा सकें, यदि हम जनता को समझा सकें तो मुझे विश्वास है कि हम इस परिस्थिति पर काबू पा सकते हैं। हमारे कहने से लोग लाखों की तादाद में जेलों में गये हैं, फांसी पर चढ़े हैं लाठियों और गोलियों के शिकार हुये हैं। यदि हम उनको कहें कि इस समय देश के ऊपर, आपकी राष्ट्रीय सरकार के ऊपर आपत्ति है और उस आपत्ति का निवारण तभी हो सकता है जब सब लो मिलकर उसका निवारण करें, तो मेरा यह विश्वास है कि बिना कंट्रोल लगाये भी हम इस समय की परिस्थिति को सुधार सकते हैं। मुझे कुछ बातें और कहनी थीं, लेकिन मेरे पास समय नहीं है। इसलिये मैं अन्त में सिर्फ इतना ही कहना चाहता हूँ कि इस विषय पर विशेषज्ञों की राय लेकर सरकार को कुछ न कुछ बहुत जल्द करना चाहिये। मुझे इन कमीशनों पर और इन कमेटियों पर बहुत कम विश्वास है। इसका कारण यह है कि २५ वर्षों तक लगातार इस असेम्बली में रहते हुये मैंने बहुत सी कमेटियाँ और कमीशन पिटली विदेशी सरकार के समय में देखे हैं। मैं नहीं चाहता कि राष्ट्रीय सरकार इन कमीशनों और कमेटियों के जाल में फंसे। सरकार के पास विशेषज्ञ हैं, उन विशेषज्ञों की राय लेकर सरकार को इस सम्बन्ध में तुरन्त कुछ न कुछ करना चाहिये। मुझे इस बात का विश्वास है कि यदि इस सम्बन्ध में ठीक ढंग से कुछ किया गया तो बिना कंट्रोल के हम इस आपत्ति को दूर कर सकेंगे।

Seth Govind Das: I was just saying that the Mover has neither clearly stated the reasons responsible for this rise in prices of commodities nor has he suggested any means by which we can tackle this situation. I realize that both the issues are very complicated. I do admit that we must elicit the opinion of experts on both these points. But I would like to narrate briefly the various causes for the rise in prices. According to my view-point there are four reasons for this. Firstly, the production is falling down and this is mainly due to the strikes. Where there are no strikes, there the workers—I mean the labourers—lack in speed. They do not put in that amount of work which they ought to do honestly. Secondly, the sordid motives of our businessmen and to some extent of our peasants also who have joined hands with them in this respect is also responsible. Neither the peasants nor the businessmen send to the market their entire produce foodgrains and other commodities, and the articles manufactured in their factories respectively. They hoard these goods in the expectation that the prices of their goods will rise further and further. Thirdly, the Government has not got a clear-cut policy regarding the imposition of control. People always apprehend that any time the controls may be re-imposed. This apprehension leads to a run amongst the masses to purchase the goods and they thus buy more than what they actually require. They hoard them as they fear lest these may not be available at later date when they are really in need, or the Government may change its policy of control. Fourthly, lack of wagons results in transport bottle-neck. According to my reading, even if we leave out the experts, these are the obvious reasons responsible for the rising prices.

Then the question arises as to what steps should we take to bring down the rise in prices. Naturally the first thing which strikes us is that we should re-impose the control. Apparently it seems very difficult to say how far the re-imposition of control will ease the situation. As a result of the experience we have had till recently on the working of control, it has become quite evident that this system gives rise to black-market and corruption. These evils flourish under its regime. Therefore, the revered Mahatma Gandhi had observed that we should wind up the control system. Even now if we look towards the controlled articles, we can form some idea about the real state of affairs. I will quote the instance of only one article, say petrol. Petrol is controlled. All of us know that clouds of war are looming large on the horizon of the country. We also realize that the control which the Government have imposed on this commodity is fully justified in the interests of the country's defence. Notwithstanding all this, there will not perhaps be a single place either in the cities or towns in this country where these petrol pumps are installed that petrol is not available in black-market on payment of high prices. So we have seen that such a state of affairs exists even in the case of petrol which is so vital for the country's defence. I am, therefore, of the opinion that if on account of these present-day soaring prices, it is considered expedient to introduce control, then there should be a complete control. Partial control will not serve the purpose. That should not be enforced only in towns but in villages also, and so far, as the two main necessities of life are concerned viz., cloth and food; these should be completely controlled. The Government should procure the entire produce of foodgrains, and also acquire the total quantity of cloth that is manufactured and itself arrange for their distribution. Either the control should be imposed in this manner or if it is not possible to introduce such a control, then I would say that we should remove all sorts of apprehensions from the minds of the masses and tell them plainly that no control is likely to be enforced. Then the question arises as to what should we do if there is no control. I have already given suggestions in this respect though I am not an expert. But I have had many opportunities to move about and would like to say something on the basis of my experience and knowledge so gained. The contact which we have had made with the masses before the achievement of freedom is becoming lesser day by day. I admit that our masses may be illiterate, but so far as common sense is concerned, they are not ignorant. In fact they are patriotic in their outlook. These masses comprise of peasants, labourers, and all classes and communities. And above all, I feel that we have been able to achieve independence merely by keeping close contact with the masses and without the help of arms, aeroplanes, artillery and infantry corps. I do not believe that we got independence as a result of international political changes. Had the respected Mahatma Gandhi not awakened us to such an extent and inspired national consciousness in the masses, we would have been further crippled and crushed by the impact of international situation? I do admit that the independence which we have achieved is due to the result of our contact with our masses. I am, therefore, of the opinion that if we are able to re-establish the same old contact with the masses in the real sense we can cope with the present difficulties. Just as I have told you the labourers do not cherish in their hearts the same faith and confidence in the Government. We should make them understand that if on the one hand by resorting to strikes, they are able to secure a small increase in their wages, on the other, loss in production results in the rise of prices of commodities. From an analysis of all the factors, it would be evident that they lose more by the fall in production than what they gain by an increase in wages, because they have to purchase their goods on the payment of high prices. Similarly, we should explain to the businessmen. For some time past the businessmen had been first-rate patriots. But it deeply pains me to have to say that at present their patriotic creed has been transformed into that of selfishness. If we are able to impress upon the labourers, merchants and the masses, I am sure, we can control this situation. Lacs of people courted imprisonment in our footsteps and have gone to the gallows, became victims of lathi-charges and had bullets. If we tell them that at this juncture the country and the national Government are in the grip of severe difficulties which can only be removed if every one makes a concerted attempt in this direction. I am sure, by doing so we can remedy the present state of affairs even without resorting to control. I wanted to say something more but have no time. Therefore to sum up, I would like to say this much only that the Government should take immediate action in this respect after consulting the experts. I have very little faith in these Commissions and Committees. This is due to the reason that during the last 25 years' of my membership of this Assembly, I have had occasions to come in touch with many such committees and commissions set up during the time of the alien Government. I do not wish that the National Government should be caught in the net of such committees and commissions. The Government have got experts and after obtaining their advice, it should forthwith proceed in the matter. I am fully confident that if something is done in the right direction, we will be able to tide over the present difficulties without the imposition of control.

پلڈت تھاکر داس بھارگو: جناب ماننہ سپیکر صاحب! میں جناب کی اجازت سے

یہ amendment پیش کرنا چاہتا ہوں -

"That in the Resolution for all the words occurring after the word 'should' the following be substituted:

'adopt immediate and suitable measures to stop the rise and bring down the prices to a reasonable level'."

اس amendment کے پیش کرنے سے میری مراد یہ ہے کہ گورنمنٹ کے ہاتھ اس

موقعہ پر کسی خاص تجویز کے ساتھ نہ باندھے جائیں۔ یہ amendment ایک طرح سے

اس کمیشن کی تقرری کے جو تین ماہ تک سارے دیش میں ایک خردبین لیبر پورے

اور سب جگہوں کے واقعات کو اچھی طرح سے جانچ کر کے تجویز کرے کہ جو واقعات

زیادتی قیمت، کساد بازاری کے دیش میں رونما ہو رہے ہیں ان کو کس طرح سے

تھیک کیا جائے۔ اس amendment کی رو سے گورنمنٹ کو کمیشن مقرر کرنے کی

ضرورت نہیں ہے۔ گورنمنٹ کو اختیار ہے کہ اپنے experts کی رائے کے مطابق اور تجربہ

کے بنا پر اور ان کمیٹیوں کے ذریعہ جو کہ گورنمنٹ نے پہلے ہی سے مقرر کی ہیں دیش

کی اس مصیبت کو حل کرے۔ لیکن اگر گورنمنٹ کسی ایسے کمیشن یا کمیٹی کو مقرر

کرنا ضروری سمجھے تو بھی اس amendment کے منظور ہونے سے گورنمنٹ کو ایسا کرنے کا

اختیار ہوگا غرضیکہ گورنمنٹ کو یہ حق حاصل ہوگا کہ وہ کمیشن مقرر کرے یا نہ کرے۔

ان الفاظ کے substitute کرنے سے کمیشن کی تقرری include بھی ہو سکتی ہے اور exclude بھی ہو سکتی ہے۔ اور گورنمنٹ اس کمیشن کی تقرری کے بغیر ہی اس معاملہ

جناب والا! یہ جو آج کے دن بڑی سخت سسپہ دیش میں ہے۔ اس کے متعلق 10 over اس ہاؤس کی توجہ دلائی ہے۔ ان سب باتوں کو میں دھرانہ نہیں چاہتا ہوں میرا جائزہ ہوں کہ دیش کے اندر بہت سی چیزوں کی جتنی ضرورت ہے اس سے وہ کم ہر لیکن میں یہ ماننے کے لئے تیار نہیں ہوں کہ یہ soaring prices اس کسی کی وجہ سے وجود میں آئے ہیں۔ سوال یہ ہے کہ کیا دیش میں ان چیزوں کی کوئی خاص کمی واقع ہوئی ہو جس کی وجہ سے prices اتنے بڑھ گئے ہیں۔ میں احمد آباد کے متعلق یہ عرض کروں گا کہ وہاں پر بہت سا کپڑا پروا ہوا ہے۔ اور وہاں کے کارخاندار اس بات کے بے حد خواہشمند ہیں کہ دیش کے اندر ان کا کپڑا چلا جائے۔ لیکن وہ کپڑا دیش کے اندر نہیں پہنچتا ہے۔ ابھی کچھ دن ہوئے میں نے دہلی کے جیل اور ایسٹ پنجاب کے جیلوں کو دیکھا۔ اور اگر کوئی ممبر صاحب دوزخ کا نمونہ دیکھنا چاہیں تو وہ ان جیلوں کو دیکھ لیں کہ وہاں پر قیدی نگئے ہیں اور انکی لنگوٹیاں بھی پھٹ گئی ہیں۔ اور وہ ویسے ہی وہاں پر پھرتے ہیں۔ یہ اس وجہ سے نہیں کہ گورنمنٹ انکے کپڑے کے لئے روپیہ خرچ نہیں کرنا چاہتی ہے اور نہ ہی اسکی یہ وجہ ہے کہ جیل کے افسران انکو نکلا رکھنا چاہتے ہیں۔ یہ صرف اس وجہ سے ہے کہ transport کی سہولیتیں نہیں ہیں۔ گورنمنٹ نے اور جیل department نے یہ حکم دے دیا ہے کہ انکے لئے کپڑا خریدا جائے۔ لیکن کپڑا یہاں آ ہی نہیں سکتا ہے۔ ایک طرف احمد آباد کے کارخانہ دار چاہتے ہیں کہ انکے کپڑا دیش میں چلا جائے اور دوسری طرف لوگ نگئے پھرتے ہیں۔ اسلئے میں نہایت ادب سے عرض کرتا ہوں کہ ان soaring prices کی وجہ یہ نہیں ہے کہ production میں کمی ہے۔ بلکہ اس حالت کے وجوہات کسی کے علاوہ اور بھی ہیں۔

شاید میرے ساتھ اس اسمبلی کے ممبر صاحبان اتفاق نہیں کریں گے مگر میں یہ عرض کروں گا کہ grain production کے متعلق جو کچھ figures ہم کو گورنمنٹ دیتی ہے وہ درست نہیں ہیں۔ اس دیش کے اندر اسکی production کی کمی نہیں ہے بلکہ کافی production ہوتی ہے۔ اور وہ production ہمارے لئے کافی ہے۔ دیکھنا یہ ہے کہ یہ جو تکلیف ہمارے دیش میں آئے دن پیش آ رہی ہے اسکی کیا وجوہات ہیں ہر ایک آدمی یہی assume کرتا ہے۔ کہ یہاں پر اناج کی کمی ہے۔ اسلئے prices بڑھ جاتے ہیں۔ اصلیت یہ ہے کہ اناج پیدا کرنے والوں کو واجب قیمت دینے و consumer کو مناسب قیمت پر اناج ملنے کے لئے قیمتوں کو reasonable level پر لانا نہایت ضروری ہے۔ جن حالات کی بنا پر یہ prices اٹھ بڑھ جاتے ہیں ان کے متعلق میں ایک مثال پیش کروں گا اس برس ضلع حصار میں 2½ کروڑ من چلا پیدا ہوا اور یہ 2½ روز من چلا غالباً سارے ہندوستان کے لئے کافی تھا حصار میں اسکی قیمت پانچ یا ساڑھے پانچ روپیہ فی من کاشتکار کو ملی

لیکن بلکال اور مدراس میں بیس یا بائیس روپیہ قیمت تھی - حالانکہ حصار میں انا چٹا پیدا ہوا تھا لیکن پھر بھی دیس میں اسی کی کمی پوری نہ ہو سکی - اسکی وجہ یہ ہے کہ اسکو دوسرے علاقوں میں لے جانے کے لئے ٹھیک انتظام نہیں تھا - اس ٹھیک انتظام اور پکی پالیسی نہ ہونے کی وجہ سے دیس میں یہ تکلیف ہوتی ہے - ایک طرف producers اپنی چیز کو دیگر علاقوں میں نہیں بیچ سکتے اور نہ ٹھیک قیمت وصول کر سکتے ہیں اور دوسری طرف ضرورت والوں کو مناسب قیمت پر چیزیں میسر نہیں ہوتی ہیں - ضرورت اس امر کی ہے کہ حکومت نے جو کمیٹیاں اب سے پہلے اس بارے میں بنائی ہیں اسکے سفارشوں پر اور جو پالیسی مقرر کی گئی ہے - اُسپر پکی طرح سے عمل پیرا ہو کر اس کام کو ٹھیک کر دیا جائے - روزمرہ بدلتے ہوئی پالیسی ہماری بربادی و نقصان کا باعث ہے -

میں نے کچھ دن ہوئے فیروز پور کے علاقہ میں جو کچھ حالت لوگوں کی دیکھی و سنی وہ نہایت افسوس ناک ہے آپ لوگوں نے اخباروں میں بھی پڑھا ہوگا - کہ وہاں پر ایک نوجوان نے کہانا نہ مانے لگی وجہ سے خود کشی کر لی - میں ایک ایسے علاقہ سے تعلق رکھتا ہوں جہاں پر آج کا قحط عموماً رہتا ہے اور وہ علاقہ قحطزدہ رہتا ہے - لیکن وہاں پر بھی آج کے دن وہاں پر لوگوں کی مصیبتیں بمقابلہ پہلے کے کئی درجہ بڑھ گئی ہیں - اور انکی حالت نہایت ناگفتہ بہ ہے اسلئے میں اس کمیشن کے مقرر ہونے کے حق میں نہیں ہوں جو کہ تین مہینے دیس کا دورہ کر کے پھو تجاویز پیش کر دے اور تب اس مصیبت سے بچنے کا علاج سوچا جائے اور اس پر عمل کیا جاوے ورنہ ایسی حالت ہوگی جیسا کسی نے کہا ہے

تا تریاق از لیراق آورد شود
مار گزیدہ مردہ بود

جن تین مہینوں میں یہ کمیشن دورہ کریگا اس میں خرچہ بھی بہت آگیا اور اتنی دیر لوگوں کو بے حد تکالیف کا سامنا کرنا پڑیگا - اور یہ نہیں معلوم کہ ان تین ماہ میں کیا کچھ ہوگا - گورنمنٹ اس معاملہ سے بے خبر نہیں ہے - انکو ہو ایک بات کا پورا پتہ ہے - ہر ایک پراونس میں ایک ایک منسٹر food اس کام پر ہے اور یہاں پر ہمارے گورنمنٹ میں شری جیرام داس دولترام اسکو deal کرتے ہیں اور ہم ہر روز radio پر سنتے ہیں کہ وہ کانفرنسیں اور کمیٹیاں اس بارے میں بلاتے رہتے ہیں - تو اس سے بھی یہ پتہ چلتا ہے کہ گورنمنٹ کو اس بارے میں سب کچھ معلوم ہے - اسلئے اس معاملہ میں کسی کمیشن کی ضرورت نہیں ہے وچو ہات موجودہ تکالیف سبکو معلوم ہیں سیدھی بات تو یہ ہے اور وہ یہ ہے کہ گورنمنٹ کی جو بھی پالیسی ہو اس پر زور سے و مضبوطی سے عمل کرنے کی ضرورت ہے - یا تو گورنمنٹ پورا کنٹرول

پیداوار اور تقسیم پر حاصل کرے اور اس پالیسی پر عمل کرے یا قیمتوں کو ایک دفعہ مقرر کر دے وہ prices جو کہ ضرورت سے زیادہ بڑھ گئے ہوں انکو ایک reasonable level پر لائے مثلاً فلہ کپڑا وغیرہ - ان کی قیمتوں کو نہ ہی زیادہ high ہونا چاہیے اور نہ ہی زیادہ low - اسلئے reasonable قیمتوں کو مقرر کر دیا جائے تاکہ ان اشیا کو پیدا کرنے کا incentive کمزور نہ ہونے پائے حکومت کو چاہیے کہ وہ ان چیزوں کو خود خریدے اور دیس کے اندر مختلف جگہوں پر دوکان کھولے اور لوگوں کو مقررہ قیمت پر یہ چیزیں مہیا کر دے - دیس میں اگر producers hoarding اور profiteering کرتے ہیں تو اُسکی وجہ کنٹرول ہے اسلئے یا تو پورا control کیا جاوے ورنہ کنٹرول کے سوال کو چھوڑ دینا ہی بہتر ہے - جس چیز کی اصلی ضرورت ہے وہ یہ ہے کہ گورنمنٹ کو چاہیے کہ وہ ایک مستقل پالیسی اختیار کرے اُسپر پوری طرح سے مضبوطی سے عمل کرے اگر گورنمنٹ partial control کریگی تو اس سے یہ soaring prices کنٹرول نہیں ہو سکتے ہیں - اسلئے میں نہایت ادب سے عرض کرونگا کہ ضرورت اس وقت مستقل مزاجی سے عمل کی ہے اس بارے میں مزید تحقیقات کی ضرورت نہیں ہے اور نہ ہی کسی کمیشن نے مقرر کرنے کی ضرورت ہے - بلکہ ضرورت اس بات کی ہے کہ ایک پکی پالیسی اختیار کی جائے اور اسپر عمل درآمد کیا جائے - اور ان کمیٹیوں سے جو کہ گورنمنٹ نے پہلے سے ہی بنائی ہے مدد لینی چاہیے - یہ جو تین مہینے کا عرصہ ہے یہ نہایت غیر مناسب ہے اور اس عرصہ میں حالات کا پتہ نہیں کہ کیسے دھینگے - اسوقت فوری action کی ضرورت ہے - اسلئے میرے خیال میں اس کمیشن کو مقرر کرنا نقصان دہ ہی ہوگا - فائدہ مند نہیں ہو سکتا - اسلئے حکومت کو چاہیے کہ وہ ایک پالیسی مقرر کرے اُسپر زور کے ساتھ عمل کرے اور hesitation, vacillation, کے پالیسی کو ترک کر دے

(English translation of the above speech).

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: Mr. Speaker, with your permission, Sir, I beg to move the following amendment:

"That in the Resolution for all the words occurring after the word 'should' the following be substituted:

'adopt immediate and suitable measures to stop the rise and bring down the prices to a reasonable level'."

My object in moving this amendment is that the hands of the Government should not be tied down to any specific proposal at the moment. This amendment aims to oppose the appointment of a Commission which is to go round the whole country and conduct a survey with a microscope and siftingly enquire into the conditions prevailing in the different parts and suggest measures to be adopted for counteracting the present state of affairs arising out of the soaring prices and scarcity of essential commodities. According to this amendment, there is hardly any necessity for the Government to appoint the Commission. The Government is fully competent to relieve the country of the throes of bad times through which it is passing by invoking the assistance of its own experts, the committees it has already constituted and above all by its experience. But if it is considered expedient to appoint such a Commission or Committee, it will have the right to do so even after this amendment is accepted. In any case it would rest with the Government either to appoint the Commission or not. By substitution of these words the appointment of the Commission can be included as well as excluded, and Government can tackle this problem without it. Sir, the Mover has drawn attention of the House towards this important problem which is at present facing the country. I do not want to repeat all these things. I know that the production of many articles in the country is far less than the demand. But I am not prepared to admit that these soaring prices are due to shortage. The crux of the problem is whether there has been an appreciable fall in the production of these commodities in the country which has resulted in high prices. I will mention the case of Ahmedabad where huge stock of cloth is lying and the mill-owners are very much anxious that this should be sent out to all parts of the country, but it does not reach the proper quarters. Only recently I happened to visit the jails in the East Punjab and Delhi. If any honourable member wants to see a picture of a veritable hell, he should visit these jails. The prisoners are living in a naked state and roam about in tattered loin cloths. This is not due to the reason that Government does not want to spend money for providing them with cloth nor that the Officers of the Jail like to keep them in a naked state. It is due only to lack of transport facilities. The Government and the Jail Department have issued orders that cloth should be purchased for them. But the cloth cannot be moved to the place. On the one side, the Ahmedabad mill-owners want that their cloth should be sent throughout the country and on the other people are moving about in a naked state. Therefore, I would respectfully submit that the reasons for these soaring prices cannot be attributed to shortage in production only but there are other factors apart from this. Perhaps many members of this House will not agree with me, but I would submit that the figures regarding production of foodgrains which the Government usually supplies are not correct. There is no fall in production of grains in this country but on the contrary there is adequate production, which can cope with our requirements. We have to find out what are the causes which are responsible for the day-to-day troubles arising in this country? Everybody assumes that there is a shortage of foodgrains here and for this reason only prices rise. It is really very essential that the prices of foodgrains are brought to a reasonable level in order to ensure proper return to the peasants and their supply to the consumers at a fair price. I will just quote an example which will illustrate the causes leading to the steep rise in the prices. During this year, 2½ crores of maunds of grams were produced in the Hissar district, and this quantity is probably quite sufficient for the entire country. The producer in this place was paid a price at Rs. 5 or 5/8/- per maund. But the price in the Provinces of Bengal and Madras ranged between Rs. 20 and 22. Although such a huge quantity of gram was produced in Hissar, yet it could not meet the deficit of this commodity in the country. This is due to the reason that there are no proper arrangements for its transport to other parts of the country. For lack of proper arrangements and firm policy the country has to face such difficulties. On the one hand the producers cannot supply their goods to other parts of the country, and secure fair prices and on the other those who are in need cannot get them on reasonable prices. It is high time that the Government takes steps to remedy this state of affairs by firmly acting upon the recommendations of the Committees already set up by it and pursuing with determination the policy which had been laid down. Everybody change in our policy is harmful and likely to lead us to ruination.

I will just narrate to you the pitiable condition of the people living in the Ferozepur District, which I happened to notice recently. You might have read in the newspapers also that a youngman who could not get food to eat committed suicide. I come from a place which is generally short of foodgrains and is generally famine-stricken, but the people there are experiencing far more difficulties at the present time than they used to do in the past. Their condition is deplorable. Therefore I do not favour the appointment of this Commission which may submit its proposals after touring the country for three months, and then only we will think of the remedy. Otherwise the position would be as described—which means that by the time the antidote is brought from Iraq, the snake-bitten person might die. Three month's tour to be undertaken by the Commission will involve heavy expenditure and during this period people will have to face innumerable hardships. Moreover, it is not known what might happen during these three months. The Government is not ignorant about this matter and is in full touch with the trend of events. Every Province has got a Food Minister. Here in our Government, the Honourable Shri Jairamdas Daulatram deals with matters connected with food. Everyday we listen on the Radio that he is convening conferences and setting up committees. From this it follows, that the Government is fully aware to the situation and there is hardly any necessity for appointing a Commission. Everybody is aware of the causes for the present-day difficulties. To be frank, I would say that it is quite imperative that the Government should vigorously and firmly pursue its policy—whatever it may be. Either the Government should impose complete control over the production and distribution and act upon such a policy or fix the prices once for all and bring to a reasonable level those prices which have risen abnormally, such as for food and cloth. The prices for these commodities should neither be very high nor low. Therefore, reasonable prices should be fixed so that the incentive to produce may not be weakened. The Government should themselves procure the commodities and open shops in different parts of the country and supply them to the public at fixed prices. If the producers in this country indulge in hoarding and profiteering, this is on account of the existence of control. Therefore, either complete control should be enforced or it would be better to abandon the idea of control altogether. What is actually required is that the Government should adopt a firm policy and enforce it strictly and resolutely. If the Government maintains a partial control, then these soaring prices cannot be controlled. Therefore, I would very respectfully submit that a contingency has arisen at present when it should act firmly and resolutely. There is neither any necessity for instituting a further enquiry into this matter nor for the appointment of a Commission. All that is needed is to formulate a definite policy and to act upon it. We should elicit the help of those Committees which the Government has already set up. This period of 3 months is quite disproportionate and it is not known what shape the events might take during this time. Immediate action is called for at the moment. Therefore, in my opinion the appointment of the Commission will prove harmful rather than useful. Thus I would urge the Government to lay down a specific policy and firmly adhere to it. It should abandon the policy of hesitation and vacillation.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That for all the words occurring after the word 'should' the following be substituted: 'adopt immediate and suitable measures to stop the rise and bring down the prices to a reasonable level'."

Pandit Govind Malaviya: Is it open to me to accept that amendment now?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Pandit Govind Malaviya: Because, as the mover of the amendment explained.....

Mr. Speaker: Let there be an opportunity to other members to express their views. The honourable member may then be in a better position to express his acceptance or rejection.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): May I make one suggestion? The substance of Resolution No. 3 is practically the same. I would submit that our friends may move their amendments but this resolution may also be moved and both the resolutions may be taken together for purposes of discussion.

Mr. Speaker: I will allow the amendments to be moved at this stage. The third resolution of course seems to be almost identical except that it appears to be more restrictive in its terms and I am also doubtful whether that resolution will not be barred by this resolution being discussed and passed.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Whereas Resolution No. 2 is comprehensive, Resolution No. 3 addresses itself to particular sections of the community which are poor and the Mover wants that some concessions should be shown to them. I would therefore submit that he may also be allowed to move his resolution, so that there may be a general discussion on both the resolutions and the Government may reply as to what they are proposing to do.

Mr. Speaker: I doubt whether it can come in as an amendment. An amendment in this case will be that for the original Resolution, this Resolution is substituted.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Resolution No. 3 may be moved as an independent Resolution.

Mr. Speaker: I will consider the matter during the Lunch recess. To me it appears a difficult thing to allow both of them simultaneously, though the one is covered by the other. I see no particular point in the third resolution being moved. The gentleman who has tabled the resolution will have ample opportunity of speaking on this. The importance would be only on the question of voting.

Mr. Z. H. Lari: Sir, I move:

"That in the Resolution,—

- (i) the words 'to visit the different provinces and' be omitted;
- (ii) for the words 'three months', the words 'forty-five days' be substituted; and
- (iii) the words 'and that the Governments concerned should accept the report and implement it without any delay', be added at the end."

Mr. Speaker, the resolution before the House relates to a matter which is very grave: not only is it grave but it requires immediate solution. The mover has given figures to show the difference in prices between August 1939 and those prevailing at present. I would prefer to concentrate the attention of the House on the increase that has taken place during the last 12 months and specially after the recent policy announced in December 1947.

The index figures for April 1947 for food articles stood at 279, while at present after 12 months it is 391. The figure for all commodities in April 1947 was 289 and now it is 389. What is more glaring is that wheat in December 1947 was available at Rs. 13 per maund in U.P. and now it can be had only at prices ranging between Rs. 24 and 30. According to the recent pronouncement of the Honourable the Premier of the United Provinces price of cloth has increased by 400 per cent. during the last six months. Now the question is why is it that during the last six months the prices have risen so high. With all my respect and admiration for the Government here and in the provinces I am constrained to say that the rise in prices is primarily due to the action or inaction of the Governments in power both in the Centre and in the provinces and with your permission I would elucidate this point.

Has there been any shortage of Commodities? The reply can only be in the negative. Only the other day Pandit Govind Vallabh Pant said: "Our trouble today is not due to any failure of crops or fall in production. The last Kharif was not below the average and the Rabi, if anything, was better." As regards cloth production, according to the recent statement of the Honourable Minister for Industries and Supply, it has increased. In 1947 it was 3,850 million yards and this year during the first six months it was 2,130 million yards. The sugar acreage has increased by about 10 per cent. It follows that something else is responsible for this increase in prices and my humble submission is that the first thing which laid the basis of the rise in prices were the steps taken by the Government primarily the governments of the United Provinces and Bihar with the concurrence of the Central Government. I mean the so-called Sugar Deal of 1947. What was the position on the 7th December when the decontrol was announced? The price of sugar on that date stood at Rs. 21/5 per maund. Dr. Rajendra Prasad, the then Food Minister, while speaking in the Assembly said:

"It is now for the Government to release the sugar and purchase at whatever price it likes and it proposes to take the bulk of the purchase. They (meaning the mill-owners) have come forward with a proposal to keep down the prices of sugar and there has been an arrangement that the prices cannot be allowed to go beyond what they would have been if control had continued."

What was the result. By one stroke of the pen a few days later the price of Rs. 21 and some annas was raised to Rs. 35 and some annas. That paved the way for the increase in prices. Anrita Bazar Patrika was really correct when it said that sugar deal had sabotaged the policy of decontrol and now even the Prime Minister of U.P. had to admit that these increases had not only whittled down the area of wheat but has made the cultivator withhold the crop in his own possession. Therefore I say that the beginning in the rise was made by the Governments concerned, primarily the governments of the United Provinces and Bihar and I regret to say the Central Government stepped in to share in the profits realised thereby showed the way, and set the tone. They sowed the seed and now we have to reap the crop.

The second thing followed decontrol of cloth in January. A measure was introduced in this House by the Honourable Minister for Industries and Supply and on that occasion he was pleased to say:

"As you know our part of the scheme is that in future every piece of cloth should bear the ex-mill price and also the retail price stamped, so that in future we may be able to know at any time whether....."

— Then further on he said: "I shall take such steps as will make it impossible for the mills to function." That was the assurance given on the floor of this House. Immediately after that there was, what should I say profiteering by Government? They said to the millowners "Well you can sell your cloth 35% over and above the stamped price, provided you give all this to me." The result was that cloth which was selling at 100% more than the stamped price by the end of March 1948, shot up in price and according to the Bulletin of the Ministry of Industries and Supply the position was that in U.P. superfine cloth was selling at 100 to 300 per cent. above the marked prices. fine between 80 to 150 per cent. and coarse between 50 to 100 per cent. above the stamped price. That was the position according to the bulletin issued by the Government at the end of March 1948. And what does the Government do? Instead of taking measures against the millowners, the Government on the 24th April 1948 even abolished the system of stamping prices. What was the result? When the Government knew, and the public knew, by the end of March 1948 that the prices of cloth, in spite of stamping, had gone so high, was it not then necessary to take measures to control rather than remove that very small check which indicated to the public—and to the Government also—what was the rise in prices? This was the second sin of commission made by the Central Government. It only further strengthens the belief that so long as you can fill the pockets of the Central Government and the Provincial Governments, you can proceed on with the rise in prices with impunity.

184 CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY OF INDIA (LEGISLATIVE) [11TH AUGUST 1948]

What are additional reasons for further soaring of prices? You will find that it is primarily due to hoarding or smuggling. In his statement the Honourable Minister for Industry and Supply said that the Premier of East Punjab had told him that out of 60,000 bales, sent to East Punjab only 10,000 bales had been made available to the public. And the figure he gave today of the seizure of cloth in the process of smuggling was that its price came to Rs. 1 lakh. Now realize what is the proportion between the actual seizure and the actual smuggling: it means ineffective steps adopted to prevent smuggling. And who is responsible, if not the Government and the Government alone?

Only the other day, on 31st July, the Honourable Pandit Pant, Premier of U.P., said that it is held that the producer is holding his crop. He does not say "I also believe it". But everybody knows it. Now, may I know whether any searches were made for these foodgrains? Has anybody been prosecuted for this? I know of my own Province where hundreds of houses were searched for a broken spear but not to recover the foodgrain which is the life-breath for the teeming millions who are dying for want of foodstuffs.

Inflation is another factor responsible for the rise in prices. Have any steps been taken by the Government to meet this evil which covers everything else? No policy can succeed unless attempts are made either to decrease or to absolutely remove the excess purchasing power in the country. The other day I read in the press that the Government is considering the matter and I saw a cartoon in Shankar's magazine that they have now discovered that there is something like inflation. Somebody thought that it was a big animal; some thought it a dream; but now Government has realized it. But then that realization remains in the minds of the Honourable Members and there is no tangible evidence of any attempt to meet the evil.

Take the cloth policy which has been announced: that appeal which has always failed with the traders is to be found throughout that statement. The question was how to reduce the price immediately. The scheme says that for four months the cloth which is in the possession of wholesalers and retailers is enough. But the question was how to make that cloth available at reasonable price. It says "We will rely on the human sentiments of the traders". What a hope and what a lucid interval at that time to say that even after the experience of twelve months you can expect that the cloth which was sufficient for four months will be made available. Anybody going now to the shops will find that the cloth shops are empty. Even in execution of elementary order, I read in the press, there has been laxity. Bombay received the order to freeze cloth stocks with mills earlier than Calcutta, to Nagpur it came on 3rd August and godowns were sealed in Calcutta some days later. What is the amount of cloth that must have gone out and entered the black-market to suck the people whose dire need is cloth. On the whole the result comes, to this that the rising prices are due in the first place to profiteering tendencies of the Government; in the second place indifference to check smuggling and detect hoarding; and thirdly failure to formulate any policy to check inflation. About the same time, namely, November 1947, Russia also adopted the same policy—they de-rationed commodities.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member may continue his speech after Lunch.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock, Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Narayan) in the Chair.

Mr. Z. H. Lari: Mr. Speaker, Sir, just when the House rose for Lunch, I was going to refer to the relative position in Russia following de-rationing there. Before I take this up, I would like to make a few submissions pertaining matters which have already been referred to.

I mentioned that there has been hoarding on a large scale. I know of my own Province where at the main market place of Hapur the arrivals are now 500 maunds per day while in normal times they used to be between 5,000 and 10,000 maunds per day. It is practically admitted by the report of the Director of Economics and Statistics for June where he says at page 3: "...the arrivals are comparatively low in U.P. and East Punjab...". Recently, the Ministry there announced what they called a "New Food Policy". Of course there was that wordy warning to hoarders, but I have yet to find any step taken to translate that warning into reality.

There is another factor which has contributed to the rise in prices, and which has already been mentioned, namely the transport difficulties. It is not that the Government is not aware of it. In the Bulletin which I have referred to, it is mentioned definitely in the "Remarks" column that so far as U.P. is concerned "Transport facilities from outside production centres are very poor". The result is that not only are there transport difficulties, but corruption has increased. I can say from sources very close to me that where the freight is Rs. 60 you have to pay Rs. 200 per wagon before you can get a wagon. Now, whence is this money to come? The trader has to recompense himself for this payment and the result is again an addition to the increment.

Now, about the same time in 1947 Russia de-rationed. But what did she do? That country made a distinction between de-rationing on the one hand and price fixation on the other. Coupled with that they also raised the value of the money. The result has been that during the last six months they have reduced the general prices twice and the country and the people there have been able to save in terms of money 57 million roubles. You can appreciate the value of it when you see that the entire taxes in Russia—income-tax as well as agricultural tax—comes to 31 million roubles. That is to say, within six months the population there, by virtue of fixation of price had saved so much amount which exceeds the annual income of the Government there. Why? It may be that Stalin, the originator of that policy is still there while here the Father of the Nation, under pressure of whose opinion de-rationing and de-control came in, perhaps is not here. May be that, but the fundamental thing is that the Government instead of controlling the prices left it to the industrialists to fix prices.

Only recently when the Honourable Minister for Supply made a statement in regard to the cloth policy, he said that the Tariff Board had made certain recommendations about prices and that Government is going to fix prices. But the significant words are "In fixing prices we shall take the recommendations of the Board into view to a certain extent". I am surprised at this. Why this rider? The Tariff Board devoted sufficient time to determine the proper prices and when the Report came the Government spokesman said, "I will take into consideration this Report to a certain extent".

Now the result of all these factors, taken as a whole, has been that the prices have gone up from month to month, from week to week and even from day to day. When a friend of mine said that the Commission cannot go about moving for months, he said a sensible thing. There is no necessity for the Commission to go about in different Provinces. The remedy is known; the disease is there. The only question is to fix the policy and to apply it with determination.

Now, what is the way out? The Government has got so many engagements, it has got so many preoccupations—Kashmir and Hyderabad are engaging their attention. Then what is the remedy? After all the population cannot wait for long. The only remedy is: Appoint a Food Commission with full powers—not that they should make recommendations which will again go to the Secretariat and remain on the files for months and months, possibly some of them may be accepted and some rejected and then even enforcement may take time. Therefore the Mover was perfectly right when he said that there should be a Commission. But remedy must come as early as possible. There is no question of unearthing such reasons as are not known; this matter has been before the country and the world for months. I feel that if a Commission fully empowered to enquire into the causes responsible for the rise in prices, with full powers to recommend what should be the policy, is appointed and that Commission concentrates itself on that problem and makes recommendations and the Government is prepared to accept those recommendations, I think a way out of the present impasse may be found. China is a standing reminder.

There is a limit to everything! Human patience has also got limits. The sacrifices made by the Government in the cause of Independence created a fund of sympathy for them, but I think they have overdrawn over it. But for the problems of Hyderabad and Kashmir, there would have been at least sentimental uprising against the Government. (An Honourable Member: "Question"). Let the Government wake up, give up their lethargy. Let them rise and strike. Strike at what? Strike at the profiteering tendency in the Governments concerned; Strike at the hoarders, at all anti-social elements and last but not the least strike at the corrupt and the corruptor. That is the way to save the country. Otherwise we may go the same way as China is going. With these words I move the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in the Resolution,—

- (i) the words 'to visit the different provinces and' be omitted;
- (ii) for the words 'three months', the words 'forty-five days' be substituted; and
- (iii) the words 'and that the Governments concerned should accept the report and implement it without any delay', be added at the end."

Shri K. Santhanam (Madras: General): Mr. Speaker, Sir, I agree entirely with all the previous speakers regarding the seriousness of the situation. The rise in prices is certainly unprecedented; the hardship inflicted on the masses is certainly undeniable; and no one will deny that prompt measures are required. Therefore, the real issues before the House are: What are the causes of this inflationary rise of prices and what are the measures which the Government of India can adopt?

Before I deal with these two issues I would like to utter a word of warning. Economic events are powerfully influenced by human factors. If in our enthusiasm to find remedies we exaggerate the situation, we ourselves become a cause of its further deterioration.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Madras: General): Quite right.

Shri K. Santhanam: Sir, as I have said the situation is serious, but I would like to point out that there is nothing very desperate, there is nothing very tragic, about it. The rise in prices of our country is, taking 1939 as 100—food articles range between 350 and 400; industrial raw materials from 300 and 450; semi-manufactures 250 to 350 and manufactured articles about 350—400.

RESOLUTION RE MEASURES TO CHECK RISING PRICES OF NECESSARY COMMODITIES

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Cereals have gone up to 451.

Shri K. Santhanam: My figures are from the report of the Economic Adviser's Office dated the 10th July 1948.

So I think it is a fairly recent one.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Mine is dated the 12th June, 1948.

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram (Minister for Food): Cereals may be 451. But food articles include not only cereals but other food articles like salt, tea and many other things.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: But it was only 357 in May 1948 according to the Reserve Bank of India. One can go on quoting these things.

Shri K. Santhanam: In the world commodity survey which is given in Eastern Economist of August 6, the movement of prices throughout the world is described. For wheat it is 305 pre-war price; for fats and oils it is 400; for sugar it is 375; for cotton it is 362 to 430 and so on. Therefore, the inflationary rise in our country is not very much greater than the average rise in the whole world. I do not say that as a matter of consolation. I only point out that we need not be very tragic; we need not indulge in undue lamentations.

Then, Sir, what are the factors contributing to this rise? I divide them into three classes. There are factors of production; factors of distribution and thirdly monetary factors, which are contributing to this inflation. Of course, greater stress is laid on the factors of production. There is no doubt that the ultimate remedy is increased production, but unfortunately many of the factors of production are intractable. You can solve them only slowly. Time is required. For instance, there is a lot of talk about capital equipment, but we are not able to produce capital equipment and those who produce them have got too many clients and we have to wait for our turn. So it is no use, for immediate effect, to count on large-scale shipments of capital goods from other countries.

But there are some factors which we ought to effect. Something has been said about labour. I do feel that labour should be given a fair deal in the coming negotiations about profit sharing; at the same time, a great nation-wide attempt should be made to impress upon labour how they should, in the interests of the masses, in the interests of the vast millions of agriculturists, step up production in all manner of ways. This is one of the factors which is capable of immediate improvement.

Of course, there is the question of efficiency. The labour efficiency has gone down a great deal. It was said that in the Railway Workshops, it had gone down by as much as 50 per cent. I therefore think that no efforts should be spared to increase this efficiency. It is only by improvement of labour attendance and labour efficiency that we can hope to increase production to any appreciable extent in the near future.

Sir, the factor of distribution has not been properly attended to. I think the greatest contributor to this rise is the breakdown in distribution. Of course, nowadays it is the fashion to say one day that by control we can do everything and another day that by de-control we can do everything. I think both these attitudes are not correct, because control means organisation of distribution throughout the country. What a big country we have, we forget. With five hundred thousand villages, we have to organise distribution, according to licence according to official orders. We have to re-order the entire distribution machinery if we want control. If it is de-control, it is organised on the basis of profit-making throughout the country. Therefore, any attempt to disrupt distribution machinery is likely to lead to disastrous consequences.

[Shri K. Santhanam]

Whether it is control or de-control, it is the re-adjustment of distribution machinery which takes many months and probably some years. It is because we are playing with one policy after another that all this confusion has arisen. If the Government thought that we must have control and stuck to it, we would not have been in this position. If after taking the measure of de-control they had decided upon it and had left all the free channels open and stuck to de-control, we would not be in this position. It is because of the doubt, it is because of the confusion in the minds of the Governments that we are largely in this position. Therefore, whether one likes control or de-control, it is not a matter of importance. What I want to impress upon the Government is that if they decide upon the policy of control, let them, here and now declare that they are going to stick to it, whether it is three years, four years or five years, until they have solved all the problems of corruption and all the other administrative problems and put the machinery in order. If people think that after imposing control now, Dr. Syama Prasad is going to reverse it within the next six months I think that whatever he might do, all his efforts would be in vain. Therefore, let us, as a nation, as a body, pull our weight together and then we are likely to succeed. Either way we are likely to succeed. If we stick neither to control nor to de-control, we will be falling between two stools and we will be nowhere.

Thirdly, Sir, there are the monetary factors. I think this also has not been given proper attention and this is one of those factors which can be immediately tackled by the Government. One thing the Finance Minister has done and to which we must all pay tribute is that he has sat tight and has not allowed any increase in the note issue. He has put a ceiling on the rise in monetary prices and has decided that there should be no more increase in the note issue. But unfortunately, owing to the division of the country, much of the Indian currency which was circulating in Pakistan has come to us and therefore it has caused a further de facto increase so far as India is concerned. I suggest that the Finance Minister should take immediate steps to withdraw this amount of money, that is to say, if one-sixth of India has gone out, then at least one-sixth of the note circulation should be withdrawn and he should take all the measures that are possible. One measure which I think is possible and immediately practicable is that he should insist on compulsory saving. Of course, voluntary saving is much superior. He has given time to the people to come forward with voluntary savings; but owing to many reasons, owing to some lack of confidence, owing to general public distrust, people want to cling to the cash that they have got in their hands and if scores of families hoard up each fifty rupees, you know what a big amount it comes to. Therefore, immediately Government should undertake measures of compulsory saving. Now higher wages for labour and higher salaries for the poor distressed middle classes are right, but by doing justice to them, we are only increasing the inflationary factors. They do not save the money; they do not put it in the bank and they are willing to pay higher prices. Therefore, at the risk of some unpopularity, some criticism, the Government should not offer bonuses and increased dearness allowances especially for those above a certain minimum for the next three or five years, because depression is coming very soon. At that time we will require a lot of purchasing power to meet that depression. Therefore it is time to force people, if necessary, to save and then be ready to meet the depression when it comes. I think these are the measures which the Government should adopt. I do not see any purpose in a Commission. We have had the Food-grains Enquiry Committee with all the reports; we have had a series of conferences with Ministers of Industries. To spend any more time on Commissions will be a sheer waste. Finally, it is the Government who will have to decide. They know they have all the information at their disposal, so that in any policy they adopt they will have to meet with difficulties, with all kinds of criticism. They will have to decide, take a final decision and stick to it. Therefore, no more time should be wasted; they should decide and they should stick to their decision for the next three or five years and take all the consequences. Even if they make mistakes, it is better they show grit and determination rather than become wavering and change their policy every two or three months.

Begum Aizaz Rasul (U.P.: Muslim): The motion before the House deals with a subject which has been engaging the attention of the people of this country for a long time and I am glad that an opportunity has been afforded by the moving of such a resolution on the floor of this House in order that this matter may be discussed. I need not go into details because there is no one here who does not realize the seriousness of the position. The speeches that have been made on the subject today have amply brought before this House the condition of affairs. Mr. Lari has very ably put before the House the reasons that have gone to contribute towards the abnormal rise of prices. Therefore, it is no use wasting time in lamentations or in telling the members of this House that the situation is bad. The only thing to do is to revise ways and means to improve the conditions and to relieve the millions of people of this country from the great hardships that they are experiencing, especially for the last one year or so.

[At this stage Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair which was then occupied by Shri K. Santhanam (one of the Panel of Chairmen).]

Sir, mention is often made of the poorer classes and it is said that they are groaning under these high prices, but at the same time, it should not be forgotten that the so called rich classes are also finding it extremely difficult to make both ends meet. I, as a woman holding the purse-strings of a household can from my own personal experience say that it has become well nigh impossible for me to make both ends meet as far as the expenses are concerned. It is however, not only that prices are high; commodities are sometimes unattainable and this necessitates one to go to the black market. Sir, I am one of those people who have never encouraged the black market in order to get the necessities of life, but I ask the Honourable House to consider that thousands of people are doing it not because they want to but because they are obliged to out of sheer necessity and although it is anti-social, one cannot help it. De-control has taken place in this country and we have been seeing things going from bad to worse. As I said, it is no use lamenting over what has happened, but in every walk of life, not only the necessities of life, but in everything prices have gone up so high that it is absolutely impossible for the people to live. Only a few days ago I received a notice from the school where my children are being educated that their fees have gone up by 25 per cent. Sir, education, food, clothing, servants, everything is getting more and more difficult every day. And I think that it is high time that some sort of measures were devised in order to meet the situation and to improve these chaotic conditions.

There is a basic factor which I would like to bring to the notice of the House, for the scarcity of wheat; upto recently the people in the rural areas did not eat wheat. It is commonly known that the ordinary tenant in the U.P. lived on jowar and chena and did not eat the high class wheat that was left for the consumption of the cities and towns. It is also known that during the last years of the war, these people benefited so much by the great rise in prices that it was easy enough for a tenant to pay his rents by selling a very small quantity of his wheat at the beginning and by retaining the remaining amount not only for his and his family's consumption, but also in order to get a high price later on. I am absolutely of the opinion that as long as the price of wheat does not go down, the prices of other commodities will remain high and therefore the main thing that the Government should consider at this moment is how to increase production of wheat and how to get wheat from the cultivators, who are hoarding it in order to get a very good price later on, because whereas before, the tenant had to pay his rents by selling the wheat coming from the fields, now it is not necessary for him to do so, and therefore he hoards until the very last moment when he can get the highest price that he wants for it and therefore, ways and means have to be devised in order to get as much wheat as possible after leaving a sufficient quantity for the consumption of the cultivator.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Why leave that also?

Begum Aizaz Rasul: No. Why should we get it? I am not against it. I do not grudge the people of the rural areas eating wheat but the consequential increased demand must be met with somehow. It is also a fact that the tenants have benefited so much by the inflation, by the rise of prices during these last few years of war that they are now in a position not to sell the wheat in the open market. They are black marketing . . .

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Certainly not.

Begum Aizaz Rasul: I stand to correction, but that is my personal experience and I know that, I can say this for my province that every tenant today, if his house is searched, will have so much wheat that even if a sufficient quantity is left for his family's consumption, there would be quite enough that can be released and brought into the open market to be sold to the consumers. He is not doing this; he is hoarding it, he is keeping it till the last moment in order to get the highest price.

Pandit Govind Malaviya: The procurement figures for U.P. were very good.

Mr. Chairman: I would suggest that the speaker should be allowed to continue the speech uninterrupted.

Begum Aizaz Rasul: The honourable Mover has pointed out that the figures of procurement are very good. I do not think it is quite true, because, I have been a member of the Civil Supplies Committee and I know that

3 P.M. whereas compared with other provinces, the figures in U.P. were good, they were not as good as they ought to have been. The United Provinces, as every one knows, is a surplus province, has been a surplus province for wheat and yet what do we find? It has been necessary for the Government of that province to import wheat from other provinces and even then they have not been able to meet the requirements of the people. As was quoted by the honourable Mover himself, wheat today is selling in the market at 1 seer 4 chhataks for a rupee. Now, Sir, is this a tolerable state of affairs? I hold to my opinion that as long as the price of wheat does not go down, the other necessities of life will certainly go on becoming more expensive and unobtainable as they are doing today. Therefore, the whole crux of the thing is that the production of wheat must go up and that necessary steps should be taken to see that as much wheat as can be procured should be brought to the open market. I will not waste more time of the House, because, as I have said, most of the points have been made out and there is nothing that the honourable members of this Honourable House do not know as regards the conditions in the country. Things must and should improve but we go round in a vicious circle—the bottleneck of transport is always in the forefront, then labour, then other things and that I feel that democracy in this respect has failed and we need a dictator who will be able to sweep away all these difficulties and give to the people their daily needs in food and clothing. It is a sad and indeed a tragic thing that Mahatma Gandhi, the father of the nation, should have been taken away from us. While far from being a dictator, he wielded such an influence even in the economic field that if he had been alive, on account of his steady influence and his judgment and foresight, the country would have been saved the great hardships that it is undergoing at the present moment. He knew that the country was rampant with corruption, bribery, black marketing and all the other evils of a social system that have unfortunately been increasing day by day in this country in the last few years. Unfortunately we have lost in him a leader of great capacity and therefore, it is now up to the Government to devise ways and means in order to do what is best for the country. In my opinion, Sir, a Commission that will tour the provinces will hardly do any good. A Commission, given absolute powers to do what in its opinion is right to relieve the conditions that are prevalent at present, to report as soon as possible, with a full promise from the Government that its findings will be given effect to immediately so as to improve the conditions and end this state of affairs is the best thing that is needed under the present conditions.

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: (Prime Minister and Leader of the House): Sir, some of my colleagues of the Government, will, I understand, speak on this resolution if they have the opportunity and the time, and deal with the various departments and the different aspects of the nation's economy with which they are most concerned. At this stage, however, I wish to put before the House a few considerations, and the reactions of the Government generally to this resolution that has been placed before the House.

I am glad that this resolution has come up or rather that this subject has come up before this House. It helps in some way. It might have been better if this subject had been discussed at some later stage during this session; at any rate from the Government's point of view, it would have been more convenient and Government might have been able to give a more positive lead to this House or a more positive assurance to this House as to what they were going to do about it. Nevertheless, the subject is of such vital significance that the more this House considers it the better. Now, I look upon this debate, if I may respectfully say so, not as one in which any, what I might call, final directions are given, but rather one in which the House tells us and tells itself, the various approaches to the question and how one might tackle it, so that we may keep the various facts of the problem before us and be in a better position to come to final conclusions.

The resolution in so far as it calls attention to a certain state of the country is obvious. It is not necessary for any member of the House to remind the Government or any one else that the economic conditions in the country are bad, due to inflation, due to rise in prices and due to hundred and one things. What is necessary is to find out how to check this, how to overcome and how to conquer this; that is the problem. In the resolution itself a suggestion is made that a commission may be appointed. If the House so wants it, the Government is prepared to appoint a commission. But, I must confess that I do not see the value of such a commission and I entirely agree with my honourable friend Bhargava when he said earlier in the day that Commissions have normally been appointed in the past to sabotage anything or to postpone decisions and not to meet any difficulty. I do not think that a commission going round the country could possibly give us more facts or figures than we have or that we can possess. The House knows that periodically the Government have been in touch with the provincial Governments, their Premiers and their Ministers for Food, Industries and the like. They have often complained that they are summoned to Delhi so often and that their work in their provinces suffers. It is a just complaint. Nevertheless, it is very important that we should confer with each other and act co-operatively and jointly and these conferences have a great importance. Therefore, there is nothing really in the nature of facts that we can get by going round the country. That would immediately afford an excuse not only to the Central Government, but to the provincial Governments also to say that the commission is considering this problem, let us wait and see what they say, and they will do nothing. While they wait and do nothing, events do not stop; events are marching ahead and it is no good shutting our eyes to that fact. We need not be alarmists; but conditions have been deteriorating. A thing like inflation if it gets loose completely, goes ahead at a headlong pace. This is no time for commissions and committees.

As I said, I do not propose at this moment to indicate with any preciseness what measures Government are likely to take. I would listen to the criticisms and the suggestions of the members of the House and then give thought to them, all of us together jointly and then place such proposals as we have formally before the House at a later stage for them to consider. The House knows that recently we have changed our policy in regard to textiles and for all practical purposes control on textiles has been introduced. We are watching that situation carefully and I have no doubt that, if it is necessary, we shall impose even stricter control there or anywhere else—now while the policy of Government in these matters has to be carefully considered, even in regard to that policy two or perhaps more fundamental matters arise. One is, trying to improve the situation as it is by such measures as appear to us feasible and proper; the other is, trying to seek for the causes of this economic distemper rather more deeply and trying to meet them. That is a bigger problem perhaps and that is ultimately the right approach. But at the moment of some crisis or various kinds of crisis it becomes sometimes a little difficult to go too deep down and upset a certain set-up because at the moment one suffers from it, whatever the ultimate advantages from it might be. However, there is that deeper approach and what I may call a somewhat more superficial approach,—may be one has to strike a balance between the two. Now whatever policy Government might adopt, one thing seems to me exceedingly important and that is the machinery which helps us in adopting that policy. The fact of the matter is that we live in the matter of adopting policies from hand to mouth. Many of us are eminent and able men with very definite and clear ideas on the subject; I am not challenging that fact but I am talking about Government machinery for the moment. An Honourable Member criticised us by saying that we are still following the old bureaucracy, and the rest. I do not agree with him in that. Of course the old bureaucracy is there as the old opposition is there in different garbs, and the old everything is there; we are all old now in our several ways. But it is no good blaming that bureaucracy; some of them are good, some of them are bad and some of them are indifferent. Some of them are experts in particular departments and no Government can be carried on administratively or otherwise without the experts' help even if the experts sometimes go wrong. And I think it is rather ungenerous and unkind always to raise our voice and cast a burden on the administrative personnel or the experts that may be there to advise Government; and certainly I do not wish to shelter myself behind anybody else's fault. But when I talked about machinery, and specially the economic machinery, I was thinking of something rather different. In olden times I believe the general economic policy in India was really not determined in India at all; it was determined in Whitehall or in the city of London or wherever else it might have been determined; it was only given effect to here and minor changes here and there might perhaps have been allowed. It was not necessary, therefore, for any extensive or intensive machinery to develop here which might help in the formulation of policy. Now we are far too much accustomed to talk in rather vague terms of high policies, whether it is a capitalistic policy or socialistic or communistic or any other policy. They have a certain value because they represent a certain approach to fundamental problems. Nevertheless when any Government has to adopt any policy that policy cannot be adopted by passing a vague resolution about socialism; that is not a policy, it is an approach to a policy. Now when we have to have detailed policies we cannot talk in vague terms. And as soon as you get away from vague terms you must have data, you must have statistics, you must know exactly what is happening and where and how. And what is more, you have to watch the changing data, the results of a particular policy from day to day, so that you can remedy an error or take another step whenever you feel like that. Now in most countries, whether they are socialistic like Russia or capitalistic like the U.S.A. or England or something half-way between the two, you will find an elaborate machinery for gathering data, for finding out and advising Government, apart from the normal statistical machinery which we have not got here to any large extent. Government have to have special advisers and economic experts, Councils, Boards, etc., which are in day to day touch with everything that is happening, produce data and statistics, consider the problem as a whole and advise Government or the special Minister under whom they work. Now what do we do here? We have able economists here, we have able people in various departments, we have able Ministers and the rest; but as we function, each person is specially concerned with his own department, that is, his own Ministry. For instance, there is our Minister for Industry and Supply; he has got a tremendous job on his shoulders; he has to work terrifically hard in the day to day routine work and the determination of policy here and there; but necessarily his outlook is largely confined to the problems that come before his Ministry. So also with other Ministries, whether it is Food or Finance or anything else. Now it is no one's particular job to think of the whole economic picture of the whole of India, partly because nobody has the time to do so and partly because it is nobody's special job to do it. That I consider to be a very serious lacuna in our administrative and other apparatus. It should be the job not only of a Minister but of a group of advisers to think specially and almost exclusively of the economic picture of all India as a whole, balancing it, understanding the effect of one thing over another and then advise on that basis. Today the advice we get would be good advice from competent economists even if it is for the whole of India; but probably they may not have enough data because we cannot have all the data. But normally we get split-up advice, if I may say so. Of course it is possible for heads of various Ministries and departments to meet together and consider a question; and that is normally what they do. Nevertheless even when they meet they meet in a hurried moment for half an hour or so; some problem comes up before them and they apply their minds for that half-hour to that problem and give their opinion and go away and find out something else. It is not as if any of them had applied his unencumbered mind to the subject and brought out topics and proposals which Government or the Assembly or anybody else might consider. So I think one of the essential things we have to do is to frame some policy from day to day, we have to do something to meet the immediate menace. But what I consider more important at the present moment and for the future is to set up a machinery so that proper policies can be framed. That machinery may consist—we have come to no decisions but these are only ideas—of a Minister for Economic and Social Affairs, but the Minister can do precious little unless he has got that background of information and advice by experts. He should have a few competent men who will concentrate on those problems from an All-India point of view and advise with statistics behind them. Now obviously such a Minister would rather tend to overlap with other Ministries which deal with economic matters. That would be unfortunate and that might sometimes create friction and delay. The more I think of it the more I feel that such a Minister of Economic Affairs should have no administrative or executive functions. His special job should be, without any such functions, to consider these problems with the help of his advisers, to confer with each individual Minister in regard to his problem so as to co-ordinate the activities to a Central policy; but the responsibility for the Ministry will remain on the particular Minister in charge of it and it will not be that of the Economic Minister. If I may say so, he should only confer occasionally so as to keep in touch and co-ordinate but he should not have any executive authority.

Now, I am just thinking aloud and not putting forward any scheme or proposal before the House, because I am terribly anxious, as every member of this House must be, that something should be done to meet this rising menace in this country. We have many very grave problems before us; as the House knows, we are carrying on a bit of a war in a part of the country. In spite of this, I think the biggest problem for us, and the most vital problem is this economic problem, because that ultimately lies at the root of the problem. If our roots get weak, then all the branches, leaves and flowers dry up. Therefore, I can assure the House that so far as we are concerned, we attach the highest importance to it and I am not afraid of confessing to this House that my mind in regard to what steps we should take has been far from clear and I have sought guidance from others and I should continue to seek guidance from others in this House. Therefore I welcome this resolution because I thought the Government would get some guidance from the members of this House which would enable them to think aright. Within the course of the next few days—within a week I think—we are likely to meet certain representatives of various groups of economic interests: some representatives of labour: some representatives of industry: other representatives, experts: some economists and the like.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: What about the peasants? Do they not come anywhere in the picture?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: I was not aware of the fact that the peasants were a leisured class! I mentioned labour.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: But they are separate from industrial labour.

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: Well, they are certainly peasants!

Prof. N. G. Ranga: They are so big that they escape notice and they get nowhere!

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: So we do wish to consult and confer with important interests and who can forget the peasants of India, so long as Mr. Ranga is here to represent them.

So that is all I venture to place before the House for the present, and I should like to seek the indulgence of the House not to be more precise on the part of Government as to what we are going to do, except that we hope in the course of this Session we shall put forward more precise proposals before.

Shri Khandubhai K. Desai (Bombay: General): Mr. Speaker, This House is very glad that an opportunity has been given to us to discuss this question. Today, the inflation is practically ruining the country at every stage. I had an occasion about two months back to draw the attention of the Government to the rising spiral of prices and I stated in that context that the grant of belated and sporadic monetary increases to the wage-earners and salaried employees is not appreciated by them. You, Sir, while you were speaking on this issue stated that there was a rise to the extent of about 250 per cent. But I think that that is not the proper way to look at this question. If we look to the index figures we will find that the cloth index in the first week of July was 452: for cereals 468: for pulses 443: sugar 450 and vegetable oils 547. These are the articles with which the common man is concerned and as such, I think that during the last year of the policy of de-control which the Government had followed the index has gone up in essential commodities by about 150. In 1947 the index was roundabout 300. Therefore, Sir, unless steps are immediately taken to bring down the prices to a level which the common man will be able to pay, I think we are heading towards economic collapse. It is agreed on all sides in this House that the situation is serious. The disease is deteriorating every day and we have got our doctor, the Honourable the Finance Minister, and I think that he with his monetary experience of a generation will be able to save the position, if he so wills it.

It has been stated in season and out of season that the problem before the country is more production. I agree, Sir, that the problem before the country is more production. But looking to the conditions obtaining in the country as practical people, we must decide whether in the near future—within a year or two—are we going to get increased production? My answer to that is, no. Capital goods are very difficult to obtain. Even for manufactured products, you must get capital goods according to the sterling settlement which has been arrived at in England and it will take time before they arrive. It will easily take two years before you will be able to take out even one unit of production from the capital goods which would have to be erected here in this country.

In regard to agricultural products, let us understand that there is a limit to production. All the irrigation projects, all the projects that we have got in view to increase the food products as well as the raw materials will easily take five to seven years before we will get the desired increased production. Therefore, the Government must come out and boldly take the people into confidence and say: Here is our economy. It is not wise to rely upon some potential production that may turn up after five to seven years. The country must reconcile with the scarcity economy and not talk in terms of the economy of the plenty: that is the position before us. Therefore, my suggestion is that taking into consideration the consumption side which is there, the production side, which as I have already stated, is not capable of being increased to an extent which will absorb the surplus purchasing power that we have got in the country. Therefore my suggestion is that the purchasing power which is there in the country in the form of about Rs. 1,200 crores of paper currency and about Rs. 2,400 crores in Government securities, loans, bonds, etc.; and about Rs. 1,200 crores in the form of deposits in banks, making a total of Rs. 4,800 crores—this large amount lying with rich persons for operation are unnecessary and therefore a substantial portion of it according to need, should be frozen for a period of 5 years because, it is this amount which is playing havoc with our markets. Otherwise, there should have been no reason why the prices of foodstuffs should have gone up to such an extent in U.P. which is admittedly a surplus province. After the de-control prices were coming down but after a month or two the prices, we found, began to shoot up. I personally feel that it is the speculators who have got more money in their pocket to play with the market, who have raised the prices and therefore in my opinion the best remedy that I can suggest is to withdraw this purchasing power—this power of the purse which indulges in speculation—by freezing it to the extent that the Finance Minister thinks proper. It is this credit which the rich people have got either in the banks or in government securities that is responsible. After all even securities are also liquid money. At the same time it must also be understood that our agricultural classes, whose cause is so ably represented by Prof. Ranga, have also got their purchasing power, which has been released owing to their indebtedness being wiped out more or less during the last 3 or 4 years and owing to the land revenue which they are paying in money. So in terms of commodities they are paying less than what they used to pay before. Of course nobody grudges them that but even that purchasing power also requires to be curtailed. This purchasing power which is there among the masses and the rural classes particularly can certainly be absorbed if we have got consumption goods. We have to consider whether the standard of living of the peasant has gone up. The standard of living has not gone up. Money does not give them a higher standard of living. It is commodities and services which will raise their standard of living and as I have said we have come to the conclusion that as far as production of essential commodities is concerned it is limited. We have to supply them the commodities which they require in order to increase their standard of living. Under the circumstances that purchasing power also should be curtailed, if possible, by a sort of deferred payment. That purchasing power can be curtailed till such time when they will be able to get consumer goods. Therefore I would very earnestly request the Finance Minister to give more thought to this particular aspect of the problem and forget for the time being the old, classical and orthodox methods of dealing with the problem of prices and inflation.

I understood the Honourable the Prime Minister to say that any step taken piecemeal is not going to solve our problem. The whole question has to be looked at in an integrated way. The Honourable Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee has announced the textile policy of the Government and unless this policy is integrated with their policy on the question of cotton and their policy in regard to other raw materials used in the production of cloth and at the same time unless that policy is correlated to the food problem, in my opinion, it is not going to have the desired results. Therefore I welcome the suggestion that the Honourable the Prime Minister has made that there must be a Ministry of Economic Affairs, which will not only tender advice from time to time to the Government of India but will also direct the provincial governments to follow an integrated policy so far as economic affairs of this country are concerned.

There was one small point which has been made by some of the members and it is almost a cruel criticism of the railways. It has become a sort of fashion to say that everything is bad because the railways are not working properly. May I ask if other ministries are working properly? Give a dog a bad name and hang it seems to be the fashion. Food prices are higher because the railways are not working properly, cotton prices are higher because the railways are not working properly, textiles are more costly because the railways are not working properly. I know the railway administration has deteriorated along with the deterioration in other sectors of our industry and economic life. So what may happen is that if we put the whole blame on one department it means that the other departments will not try to improve their portion of the job which they should do. That is the position. Particularly in this respect I would welcome the policy which the Prime Minister has enunciated that there must be a Ministry of Economic Affairs which will find out where the railways failed, where the Ministry for Industries and Supply failed, where the Food Ministry failed, etc. I think that is the best way in which you can evolve an integrated economy in this country. Unless the disease is tackled immediately I think we are in for trouble. Therefore, I do not approve of the suggestion made in the resolution that a Commission be appointed. What is there for, a Commission to investigate? Everybody knows what are the causes. The question is whether our Government which is guided by the Finance Minister in this matter is going to take immediate steps here and now and not wait even for a month. During the last one year the rupee that was worth about 5 annas has gone down to 3½ annas and if steps are not taken immediately it will come down to two annas. Therefore the problem is urgent. The disease is sapping every day our very lifeblood and so immediate steps should be taken by the Government in order to allay the anxieties and the worries that are more or less exercising the mind of all the workers in the country.

The Honourable Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee (Minister for Industry and Supply): Sir, if I intervene at this stage my reason for doing so is that frequent references have been made in the course of the debate to several items which come within the purview of my ministry. It is obvious that the question that is being discussed cannot be looked upon in an isolated fashion. We have to take an overall view of the existing condition in the country and also to explore how we have to attack the problem from all sides. At the same time occasions do arise when Government cannot sit idle and allow things to drift and have to take certain decisive action regarding special items. That is the reason why we decided a few weeks ago to reimpose control with regard to the textile industry.

I am not going to deal with the general questions which are indeed serious. The Finance Minister will deal with the special question relating to inflation but I wish just to place a few observations regarding the experience which Government have had with regard to the working of the de-control policy on textiles.

We decided to introduce a de-control policy in January last. There was a demand from various sections of the House itself, as also a demand which was voiced from many sections of the public, that after a few years of control policy Government should adopt a de-control policy with regard to certain special commodities. When we started this policy of de-control the position really was not very unsatisfactory—we had in the country about 100,000 bales of cloth which was due to be sent to Pakistan, but which Pakistan was unable to take for reasons which I need not enter into here.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru (U.P.: General): How many hundred thousand bales have you now in reserve?

The Honourable Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee: About 300,000 bales.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Yet you have to re-introduce control?

The Honourable Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee: If my honourable friend will hold himself a little in patience I shall explain the reason why we have to do so. It appeared that there was increased production. Production had gone down in 1946 and 47 and, on account of various factors which came into operation, production came up considerably in 1948, though not to the 1939 level. But taking into account the fact that workers were working for eight hours a day instead of nine hours previously, production was satisfactory. There is very often a confusion in the minds of members and also the public that even during the regime of de-control Government should take effective steps to control the prices. I would like to tell the House that that is a demand which cannot possibly be met by any government. Either you have de-control or you have control. If you have a policy of de-control, naturally you must allow the forces of demand and supply to play and then watch how things may develop.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: There was also a demand that all the mills should be taken over and run by Government.

The Honourable Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee: If we take over the mills and run them that is a policy of control.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: That will be more effective control.

The Honourable Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee: Let us first of all make up our minds whether a policy of de-control has to continue or a policy of control has to come. I would beg of the members of the House to consider whether they want de-control and thereby allow economic forces to play or whether they want the Government to come into the field and introduce effective control, may be hundred per cent.—from production right up to distribution in respect of all essential commodities.

When we introduce the policy of de-control, prices went up. We had the stamping of prices. There was an agreement—a gentlemen's understanding—that these price structures will be observed in practice. But of course it did not depend on the mills alone. It depended on the trade also, and it did not depend on one section of the trade only, because the middlemen who came to function between the millowner and the consumer were numerous. The increase of prices was the result of certain steps which were taken by the industry, as also by different sections of the trade. The result was the consumers suffered. During the period January to April there was the stamping of prices. But actually those prices were not being observed. The result was that Government lost even with regard to income-tax, because the books of account only showed the stamped prices and they had no reference whatsoever to the increased prices at which cloth was being openly sold.

You, Sir, speaking a short while ago rightly pointed out that Government cannot change its policy overnight, and once having introduced a policy of de-control it was certainly up to the Government to allow the policy of de-control to have its full part to play. A chance was given to the industry and to the trade. I am not here to blame all sections of industry or the trade, but I can assert without fear of any contradiction that the Government and the people of the country have been very heavily let down by some sections of the industry and trade so far as textile was concerned. The fact remains that production went up and yet prices were not reduced. Prices were not reasonable; prices were not fair. You may ask why the Government did not take action previously. The chief difficulty of the Government was that if Government had to take any action, it must bear some relationship to reasonable prices which Government had to fix. For that purpose Government ordered an enquiry to be made by the Tariff Board. And within a week of the receipt of the report of the Tariff Board Government decided on its policy and also took action without any unreasonable delay whatsoever. The policy which we have now introduced is control. As the Prime Minister pointed out, the situation is being watched, and if it is so necessary we shall have to stiffen this control. But I can say this, that we have taken effective steps for the purpose of securing the entire production of mill-made cloth. The mills have been told that the entire production will be placed at the disposal of Government and will be sold at prices which will be fixed by Government. Therefore, unless there is any leakage, unless production goes down, or production goes out from behind the scenes—against which also proper steps are being taken by Government—we get the entire mill production in our hands.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: May I enquire whether cloth is going to be rationed? If not, how is price control going to be made effective?

The Honourable Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee: Cloth will have to be rationed, if necessary. So far as distribution is concerned, we have left it to the Provinces. If I can very briefly explain what the scheme is, we have taken charge of the entire mill production of cloth. Now this cloth is being priced according to the schedule fixed by us. It will not be allowed to move to the Provinces except through agencies for whose integrity the Provincial Governments will have to be responsible. It will therefore be known that so much quantity of cloth goes to a particular Province. How that cloth will be distributed will be a matter to be decided by the Provincial Government itself. Here it may be possible for the Provincial Government to license existing traders and to secure the distribution of some portion of the cloth through them or, if the Provincial Government feels that it has an organisation strong and efficient enough to be able to distribute the entire requirements of the Province through its own shops, it is open to the Provincial Government to do so. At any rate we have now evolved a policy which, if properly worked out, will enable Government to have the cloth reach the hands of the consumers at reasonable prices.

The question was raised by Mr. Lari "what about the interim period? Why is it that the traders have been given the privilege and the opportunity of selling the cloth which is now with them through their own agencies?" Nearly about four months stocks of cloth are floating about in the country. Mind you, it is all unstamped cloth. You cannot possibly recover and stamp them, because they have been distributed through hundreds and thousands of dealers through out the country. With regard to that also, we have decided that although Government will not ordinarily interfere with normal trade agencies, if Government finds that there is any attempt to hoard these stocks or to sell these stocks of cloth at prices which Government considers to be unreasonable, then Government will be entitled to freeze and confiscate these stocks and compel their sale at fair prices. In fact, such steps have already been taken. When I was in Calcutta a week ago the West Bengal Government had frozen the entire stocks which were with the wholesale dealers. Although at one stage it was stated that only about 8,000 bales of cloth were available it was later discovered that nearly 20 thousand bales were available. The same step has been taken by the U.P. Government and Bombay Government also.

Shri Biswanath Das (Orissa: General): May I know whether Government is giving enough latitude and freedom to the Provincial Governments in the matter of distribution of these commodities?

The Honourable Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee: We are giving full liberty to the Provincial Governments to arrange for the distribution in such manner as they consider fit and proper.

Shri Biswanath Das: My information from the Government of Orissa is....

Mr. Chairman: I think no argument can be permitted. Let the Honourable Minister be permitted to pursue his speech.

The Honourable Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee: I may assure the honourable member that the policy that we have now formulated gives complete authority to the Provincial Governments to prepare their own scheme for distribution. If it trusts particular traders who prove to be dishonest, the responsibility for that will rest with the Provincial Government. If it feels that it has a machinery efficient enough to distribute the entire cloth within the Province through its own agencies, it is open for it to do so. That viewpoint was communicated to the Premier of Orissa also.

Shri Biswanath Das: I was referring not only to cloth but to other commodities as well, like iron and steel etc.

The Honourable Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee: I am talking of textiles in respect of which Government has taken a definite and decisive policy.

Legislation is shortly going to be passed. Necessary orders have been drafted. I can anticipate the decision of the Government and announce that certain forms of punishment are also being provided for. At present offenders can be fined or imprisoned. We are going to change the law to make it incumbent on every court not only to impose fines but also to send the offender to jail for every offence that he commits.

Of course much will depend on the co-operation that we receive from the public. We had some reference to the smuggling that has taken place. It is no use our merely blaming the bureaucratic machinery. How did it take place?—because the ordinary people also came into it. Thousands and thousands of bales of cloth went to Pakistan, because there are lots of people who thought they could just make some money out of the existing difficulty which was facing the country. Now, for that purpose it is essential that public opinion should also be properly regulated and educated. We have made an appeal to the Provincial Governments that they should contact popular leaders in the country and obtain their help for the purpose of explaining the new policy of Government. And if there are any offenders among the officials, there should be no hesitation on the part of the public to bring the case to the notice of the Government for necessary action. A special Enforcement Branch is being attached to my Ministry and I have been fortunate enough in securing the services of a most competent police official, Mr. Jaitly coming from the United Provinces, whom the Premier of the United Provinces has been good enough to place at the disposal of the Central Government. He has taken over charge from today and I have left it to him to organise in consultation with the Provincial Governments the machinery for enforcement of the new textile policy of the Government of India. I can give this assurance to the House on behalf of Government that Government is determined to see that the new textile policy is given full effect to. There is no question of our backing out of it. We have taken a decisive step and whatever happens we shall go ahead, of course with the full co-operation of the public.

A question was raised about the undue profits which were made by the industry and the trade during the decontrol period. Now that is a question which is yet under consideration of Government. It is not possible for me to say what the final decision will be. But let not any Member of this House or any member of the public or even an industrialist go away with the impression that Government is going to sit idle even over that aspect of the matter. Some steps will have to be taken for the purpose of recovering some at least of the undue profits, the illegitimate profits, which were made by the industry during a period when it was expected that they and the trade would be able to stand up and face the crisis which had come before the country.

Sir, this is only with regard to one particular item.

With regard to the other matters which come within the purview of my Ministry like iron and steel, paper, and so forth, I need not go into the details but it is a matter of deep regret and anxiety that in 1947 production had gone down with respect to every one of these items. In 1948 there have been some signs of improvement. I admit that the control policy also has certain defects. There is black-marketing. There are allegations made about the work done by the officers. But there again if we get co-operation from the public, if certain cases are brought to our notice, I see no reason why Government will hesitate to take action.

I have appointed special committees with regard to the major industries like coal; for iron and steel I appointed it last week. I have appointed a non-official gentleman as the Chairman of the Committee and all representatives from the different indentors and consumers are on the Committee. The policy of the Government will be placed before that Committee for scrutiny or examination at least twice a month and any criticism which may come through such a channel to the Government will naturally deserve the most serious consideration.

Shri Mahavir Tyagi (U. P.: General): Have you done anything for cement also?

The Honourable Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee: With regard to cement also what I have done is this. We are making Provincial allotments. There is no control with regard to cement; prices are fixed by virtue of a "gentlemen's agreement" between the producers and the Government of India and certain quotas are sent to each Province. Whenever a particular quota goes to a Province it is open to that Province to pass an order to fix the price and have complete control over the distribution. That power I have given to the Provinces and in some Provinces they have enacted special legislation and have taken over the responsibility for distribution. What I have felt is this: in a vast country like ours it is impossible for the Central Government, sitting in Delhi, to make itself responsible for actual distribution throughout the country. The only agency which we can trust will be our Provincial Governments and we have delegated many of our powers to the Provincial Governments and authorised them to pass laws for the purpose of fixing prices and also imposing such measures of control as may be deemed necessary for purposes of those particular areas.

Seth Govind Das: Is the Honourable Minister aware that in certain cement factories cement has accumulated and there are no wagons available to export it to other places? This is so especially in my Province of C.P.

The Honourable Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee: I was coming to the question of transport. The position has been difficult, no doubt. Dr. Matthai has been doing his best to improve the position, but this is a matter which is perhaps even beyond Dr. Matthai. There are certain matters which have arisen which cannot be just overcome, if we try to overcome them, in a day or two; certain long term measures have to be taken and have been taken. A suggestion was made that with regard to textiles, the difficulty in movement was responsible for the high prices. That is not so; more cloth moved to Provinces during the last six months than it ever did during the last two years, and yet the prices went up because there was a collusion between certain sections of the industry and the trade. But so far as transport is concerned we have tried to regulate and rationalize movement as far as possible. I admit that even today we are not producing all that we can produce because of bottlenecks which have been created on account of transport difficulties. But these are matters which, as I said at the beginning will have to be examined from an overall point of view and not treated individually.

I can give this assurance to the House that so far as the major items coming within my purview are concerned, I shall be prepared to discuss with any Member of the House or any Committee thereof, and if any constructive suggestions are made for the purpose of making an improvement even on a short term basis, I shall be only too glad to confer with them and see what we can possibly do. But it is no use our appointing a Commission. We know what are the facts; we know what the causes of the disease are. We know what the bottlenecks are. We have now to put our heads together and evolve a general plan which may go to improve the situation in the shortest possible time, so as to save the country from a grave economic crisis.

Shri M. Tirumala Rao (Madras: General): Are Government satisfied that the penal powers they have got just now are sufficient to punish these black-marketeers effectively?

The Honourable Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee: It is not a question of power alone, it is a question of finding out the culprits and putting them in jail.

Shri M. Tirumala Rao: But once you have found them out, have you got the powers?

The Honourable Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee: We have got those powers.

Mr. Chairman: Before I call upon the next speaker, I want to ascertain the wishes of the House regarding the course of the debate on this Resolution. It is certainly a most important Resolution and many speakers are anxious to speak. Therefore there are two suggestions which have been made. One is to increase the duration of this evening session by one hour, and the other is to carry over the debate to the next Non-Official Day.

Several Honourable Members: Carry it over to the next Non-Official Day

Mr. Chairman: So we carry it over.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Sir, may I make one request to you and to the Leader of the House, instead of allowing this debate to stand over to a distant date? On previous occasions, as the Honourable Leader and other Ministers will remember, special days were allotted to discuss the food problem, the industrial policy, and so on. The subject of the present Resolution also is one which is agitating the minds of the people all over the country. It will be a consolation to them to hear that the Ministry is applying itself, and the Legislature and the Government are applying themselves, whole-heartedly to this matter and taking steps. Tomorrow is an official day. My request to the Leader of the House is this that he may kindly consent to allow this Resolution to go over tomorrow as a special case and let us finish it. Half a day tomorrow might be more than enough. Let us finish it tomorrow instead of allowing it to stand over to a distant date and allowing speculations of all sorts to come in. As you know there are two sets of opinions. Rumours may go about, some people may go panicky. The situation may worsen if a long time is taken to consider it and then it may not be under control. Therefore I would request that the discussion on the Resolution be finished tomorrow.

4 P. M. I would personally not mind sitting till 6 o'clock if the House is willing; otherwise, let it stand over till tomorrow if the Honourable the Leader of the House agrees, and we may have one hour in the morning, or half a day.

An Honourable Member: Only one hour? why not the whole of tomorrow?

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Yes, why not the whole of tomorrow? Or we can discuss it as long as it takes. In any case, it will be finished by tomorrow. I am only waiting to see what the reaction of the Honourable the Prime Minister is.

Mr. Chairman: I may inform the House that it is not in my power to agree to carry it over to tomorrow. I will have to get the consent of the Speaker. Subject to that, I would like to know the wishes of the House.

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: I fail to understand entirely my honourable friend's talk about carrying it over to tomorrow or postponing it later creating "panic". What exactly does he mean by "panic"? Does he mean that if it is not carried over till tomorrow there will be panic and if it is, there will be no panic? My mind is completely unable to understand what he has been driving at. Government is prepared to give not one day but every day to the consideration of this subject if it needs, but I just don't see how the continuation of this debate on another day or its non-continuation prevents any panic or accentuates any panic. It has nothing to do with panic. So let us put that aside.

Now, I quite agree this subject has got to be debated more. It can be debated, if you like, tomorrow or a week later or thereabouts just as you may decide. I think personally that it will be far better to debate it some time later rather than tomorrow, and if necessary later on Government will certainly give an official day for the purpose reserving the right as to which particular day should be fixed.

Some Honourable Members: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: I take it that the House is agreeable.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Mr. Chairman, Sir, I am glad to have had the assurances that my honourable friend Mr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee has given us just now, but I wish to confess that I am not quite satisfied with the stand taken by the Government because if only the Government had not trusted to the so-called "good sense" of the industrialists and their "gentlemen's agreement" with these industrialists, surely, the position would have been much better so far as the textiles front is concerned. It is going the wrong way to tell the people who are themselves interested in cheating the public to behave themselves and putting them on the back and telling them, "Oh, you gentlemen, you are very great people. Even if any one out of twenty of you were to dissent, we are going to yield, so that we will go to the public as a sort of unanimous group." And, Sir, this is exactly what my honourable friend the Minister and his Ministry have done in the last nine months and that is my reason, Sir, for not being able to agree with my honourable friend and his Ministry.

Apart from that, there was the other positive suggestion also. We made that suggestion even at the time when we asked for the de-control of cloth. We wanted one of two things to be done by the Government: Either de-control the whole thing and let the public take their own chance, or take charge of the whole of the textile production. At that time, if I remember aright, my honourable friend had assured the House that if the worst came to the worst he would certainly take courage in both his hands and take over the whole management and production of the textile industry. What does he do today? He comes back again with the same empty assurances that later on, if these steps do not succeed, he would not mind taking stricter steps. I am rather afraid, Sir, that these steps that he proposes to take today are likely to be again circumvented by these very ingenious gentlemen. There are certain sections of these textile industrialists who come to the Textile Advisory Committee meetings, who would not agree that they are doing anything wrong but at the same time as they look so wonderfully innocent and honest they are allowed to carry on the most nefarious trade going on in this country and till now the Government has not been able to come to grips with these gentlemen. The only way I can possibly think of in which the Government can come to grips with these people is simply by taking charge of their mills and running them themselves.

Sir, my honourable friend Mr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee has himself admitted that production was looking up, therefore it is not the fault of the workers at all. I cannot agree with my honourable friend here, Mr. Lari, who said that the general good will of the people is all going from behind the National Government and if these Kashmir and Hyderabad crises are only solved, there would be anybody behind this Government. It is not so. The industrial worker are behind this National Government, Sir. Only just now, an hour back, I got the information that the so-called Token General Strike that was arranged in Bombay by the Communist and Socialist Parties has broken down and almost all the workers have gone to the mills. What does this show, Sir? It shows that the workers are behind the Government. Who are not behind this Government?—The capitalists are not behind this Government. The industrialists are not behind this Government. For some reason which is not known to me, our Government has till now not shown sufficient strength in coming to grips with these gentlemen, in bringing them to book and making them behave themselves towards the public.

Then, Sir, coming to a practical suggestion in regard to textiles, I wish to suggest that so far as the Provincial Governments are concerned I am glad so much liberty is being given to them in regard to the distribution; at the same time I want the Central Government to give them advice to see that as much of this distribution as possible is entrusted to the cooperative societies and also to the weavers' societies, so that there would be much less opportunity for any sort of blackmarketing in the Provinces than there had been in the past.

Coming to the next point, some friends rather in a grudging fashion had been complaining that the peasants are very prosperous. I wish they would only read day before yesterday's Hindu of Madras where it was stated that the Madras Government officials themselves were complaining very bitterly against the Government of India, because manures, fertilisers, iron, seeds and various other things that the peasants are badly in need of have not been supplied to the Madras Government so that they could supply them in turn to our peasants. Peasants have been obliged to pay through their nose for all these things. Has anybody taken note of these things? They say that all the facts are before the Government. Do we know whether the peasants have got their pockets full of money or whether if we go to the villages and search the pockets of the officers we would find their pockets are full of money. If we actually do that, we shall be staggered by the actuality of things.

Then, Sir, I wish support one suggestion which you yourself had made earlier, and that is that there should be a certain amount of compulsory saving. Now, if that is so, so far as professionals are concerned it can be easily enforced. So far as the peasants are concerned, I wish to make this offer. Just as the U.P. Government had done in the case of sugar cane prices some time ago, let instructions be given to all the Provincial Governments that when prices are being paid by any mill owner or anybody else to any peasant, whether it is 5 per cent. or 4 per cent. or whatever it is, a certain percentage of the sale price of the grain ought to be kept back by the Reserve Bank and it may be made available to peasants when the depression which you warned about is likely to come. I am sure the peasants would be only too glad to agree to this, provided you know how to put it before them. But if you go and tell them that they are all hoarders how can you expect them to accept such a law and my honourable friend Malaviyaji had himself corrected that lady's wrong assertion and said that procurement in U.P. is as good as last year, if not better what she said was that there was hoarding and it was wrong. What is happening is, the peasant eats a little more because he has a little more grain. If he does that, are you to grudge him? If the peasant has got the grain, he is prepared to place it at the disposal of the Government provided you are prepared to pay him a reasonable price. What is the price that you are paying him? Let us go to Madras. Last year this time there was terrific fear of widespread starvation. But what happened? Did starvation take place after de-control has been brought in? Why is it that starvation was not there? Why is there no widespread cry either from the Government or from the public that there is going to be any mass starvation?

That is so because the grain is there and the grain is being placed in the market by the peasants themselves.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari (Madras: General): At what price?

Prof. N. G. Ranga: I am going to tell my honourable friend; he is very keen in getting dearness allowance for the postmen and also for all the professional classes. Sir, we wanted Rs. 13 last year per bag and the Government of Madras did give it. The Madras Government did not find it necessary to use coercive measures. With Rs. 15 all the grain is coming into the market. In fact the complaint is that several of the peasants had already placed in the market their grain at Rs. 12 and it is the merchants like my honourable friend Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari I suppose who have got these hoards, and who evade in income-tax and super-tax.

With regard to banking credit which you yourself have touched, I wish to make one point. We find that last year there was much less of inflation, that is less currency than there is today. Therefore there is greater reason why there should be less of this banking currency. According to Mr. Deshmukh, the Governor of the Reserve Bank, there was as much of banking currency this year as there was last year and a little more according to him—500 crores and more. Why should it have been allowed? I find fault with my honourable friend the Finance Minister.

An Honourable Member: It did not go up.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Because there is no warrant for it at all. I do not want to congratulate him because he is not going to allow anything more than so much of inflation, or new note circulation. I have got facts and figures to prove that there has been much greater circulation during the last 10 or 12 months and there is no justification for it. I am inclined to find fault with the Finance Department itself and its head. The Honourable Minister is very jealous about his Department and therefore I find fault with Mr. R. K. Shanmukham Chetty himself.

Then I am in agreement with those two points made in the morning in regard to sugar and textiles, about which we have made a mess last year. We should not have allowed the traders to run away with the booty. At least now, we should take care not to allow them to do so. The Honourable Dr. Mookerjee said just now that they are going to devise some methods by which they are going to catch hold of them. I am not quite so sure of his prospect of success. He tried his best to follow these people according to the advice of the Honourable the Finance Minister to run after them and pour the profits back again into the exchequer. When we came to that kind of ethics, what we felt was we could not do anything at all. I am rather afraid unless he is very careful he would again come to have this cold feet.

I wish to suggest, Sir, that if we are to have a sort of control at all we must put a ceiling on wages and salaries and also we should establish cheap price shops for the sale of not only foodgrains but also fuel, kerosene, clothing and sugar. Unless we take up these things in a comprehensive manner I do not think really we can come to grips with the economic situation.

I cannot really congratulate myself on the proposal that is made by the Finance Minister that there is going to be an Economic Advisor Ministry. What is this Ministry if it is not going to have an administrative power, if it is not going to have any power at all over any of these gentlemen and particularly my honourable friend Mr. Matthai, who is the biggest bottle-neck in the country which everybody can possibly see. Then what is the earthly use this gentleman going about and knocking at every department and at every minister's door as a sort of adviser and afterwards expecting him to say: "I am not able to deliver the goods because of inflation". That is no good, Sir.

I am very much opposed to any idea of deflation. I agree with Mr. Deshmukh when he said that if we are to have any kind of change it is disinflation and not deflation. Deflation is going to be a much greater curse than inflation. We have had experience indeed of deflation for over 6 or 7 years in this country and our Government and our people did not know how to get out of it. If it had not been for the war we would not have got out of that deflation and unfortunately instead of coming into steady economic conditions we have got into this typhoid fever of inflation. Therefore, let us not go back to another fever, not inflation, but the other one whose name I do not quite just now remember. Therefore, Sir, what I suggest is that let us come to grips with this big question which has gained a stronghold over our industries, which has gained a hold through our distributive industries also and then it will be possible for you to make a beginning in bringing about this disinflation.

Shrimati Dakshayani Velayudhan (Madras: General): On a point of information I should like to know whether Prof. Ranga opposing the industrial policy of the Government. I know that he was supporting the policy of the Government in the previous session.

Mr. Chairman: The honourable member's speech is there and it is for the members to find out what it conveys.

Prof. K. T. Shah (Bihar: General): My task has become a little more difficult after the intervention of two of the Honourable Ministers, one declaring a policy he would pursue after consultation, and the other outlining some of the steps that have been taken and may yet be taken for dealing with this problem. At the same time it has also become a little more clear so far, at any rate as to the line of future action which may be expected. It is more difficult in this sense for individual speakers to address the House at this stage, since perhaps some of the courses that the Government may follow may have been prejudged and may have yet to be tried hereafter.

Knowing this difficulty, however, I venture to place some ideas before this House on the very difficult subject, and complicated at that. There can be, of course, no doubt of sympathy and agreement with the general spirit of the resolution and even the substance of the resolution and the amendments proposed. I also cannot dispute the figures that have been laid out here, except perhaps to point out that these figures relate only to published prices which are not perhaps always actually paid prices; and consequently the prices paid by the consumer are not always the prices received by the producer. The benefit of rising prices, if any, has not gone at all, in my opinion to the producer.

Pandit Govind Malaviya: At all!

Prof. K. T. Shah: I would be a little more conservative in this instance at least and say "not wholly". The point, however that I am making, Sir, is that: given the machinery of distribution, given the machinery of the social system as it is, the primary producer does not really benefit to anything like the extent that the consumer has ground to complain. The debate in this house, as I have watched it so far, seems to have been almost entirely from the standpoint of the consumers' complaint. Being a consumer myself, also, I cannot say that I disagree with it. But I would like the House to realise that rising prices by themselves are not necessarily an evil. Rising prices if they are accompanied by increasing production, flourishing industry and improved standard of life, then they must be welcome. In fact there have been cases when the most powerful of States have deliberately increased prices by artificial inflation to avoid the evils of depression. Rising prices are a curse, rising prices are a ground for complaint because of the mal-distribution of the wealth, because of the inability of the producer, whether of the primary materials or of the secondary, to get the full benefit or at least part of the benefit of these rising prices.

If I raise my voice in support of this motion, it is solely because the root of the mischief is the unwholesome, unjust distribution of wealth in this country. It has been my calculation made several years ago, but I think substantially the situation has remained the same that something like 300 families in the country—and giving each of these families perhaps 100 members—30,000 people or one per cent. of the population of this country—monopolise something like 10 per cent. of the wealth of the country. Ten per cent. perhaps as measured by the Income-tax figures and those who evade Income-tax monopolise another 25 per cent. The so-called middle classes, with perhaps incomes between the taxable limit of exemption and the next higher step take about 35 per cent. The masses of the people do not get even the average or even half of the average of the so-called wealth of the country. Under these circumstances, rising prices must be complained of because the distributive system is so unfair and unjust.

These being the premises, the next point, to which I would address myself is that the resolution deals with the causes and the remedies. Sir, the causes may be temporary, some passing evils, such as had been mentioned from several quarters of the House, such as we all know, for instance, shortage of materials for intensifying production, shortage of capital goods, shortage of supplies in the world markets, difficulties of transport, difficulties in the matter of distribution as you were good enough to say, break-down of the distributive system, decline in production because of civil disturbances and so on. These are temporary factors which do not touch the root of the evil. My heart went out to the Honourable the Prime Minister when he said that it is at the root that we have to deal with this matter and not with the superficial, ephemeral causes. We deal with those difficulties which are there at the moment and which we hope will answer to the steps one of the Ministers said are being adopted. But, if I may say so, the root mischief is the system of distribution of wealth.

A short time ago, one slogan was repeated almost ad nauseum in the press and on the platform "produce or perish". I felt like issuing a re-edited version of it,—produce and perish. That is—to say, the producer will produce for the benefit of the person who takes the surplus value, the producer will produce for the benefit of the capitalist employer, for the benefit of those who loot the public by charging higher prices and who loot the Government by evading taxes, who demand protection for their industries, but who would also shout that no controls should be placed on them to check their nefarious operations. If the workers are to be called upon to produce for them, if the working classes are to be called upon to improve their efficiency, for those people who do not improve their machinery or morals, then I feel that the slogan, produce or perish will have no meaning for the working classes. The working classes—I include both peasants and the workers in factories—will have no incentive to produce so long as you do not strike at the root of the situation wherein lies the entire mischief, so long as you do not assure the minimum standard of living that any citizen in a decently civilized community is entitled to claim. Ours is a case in which the average standard of living is the poorest in the world, is the lowest which is hardly sufficient to keep the body and soul together. I am prepared to show to this House that the actual consumption in terms of calories, the actual consumption in terms of the average square meal is hardly enough to go for one meal for a day for an individual in this country. For that working population to be called upon to produce or perish is a mockery unless and until you change the basic situation and alter the fundamental distribution of the wealth of the country. At the present time, as I said before, one per cent. or less than one per cent. takes something like one-third of the wealth of the country while the rest of the population are left to starve on half of the average.

Similarly, the difficulties in transport, and the difficulties in the distributive system are all, in my opinion, temporary evils or temporary defects which can be and would be easily remedied if only we were determined enough to do so. You were good enough to say that ours is a large country. In that respect, I would also add that ours is a large population. If you want to deal with the situation, there will be no lack of men to do so. What is lacking is the drive, the imagination and a determined policy to deal with the situation. Somebody said, if you want to have control, have it in full and universally. I whole heartedly agree with him. Control or any such remedy would be of no effect if you go about in a half-hearted manner. Today you try it on distribution, tomorrow on production and the day after on regulating the hours, and the other day on putting some control on consumable stores. That would not do. In the civilised society of the type we are living, there is no such thing as freedom of enterprise, or for the matter of that, individual freedom. A civilised human being, by the very nature of the civilisation, must submit to control and discipline and regulation of all kinds. He has to live in a civilised society in which the lives of others are as sacred as his own. He cannot act according to his own will and the State is there to see that rules are made, discipline is imposed and controls are put in so that everybody gets a square deal. These controls are imposed by us, by our own choice, by our free votes; but we must have them if we wish to live in a civilised community. I for one have been holding this view from my cradle to the pyre. The system that needs to be corrected is the system of distribution. Where you should apply the axe in my opinion is not merely in controlling the prices, or inflation, not merely in calling upon a gentlemen's agreement assuming they are gentlemen to agree to certain conditions and then come to the House and say that they have badly let us down. Why should you think they would keep their word? No matter what promises they make or what assurances they give, I have never had in my life any trust or belief in that class and therefore I feel that those who trust that class of people would only invite miserable failure. Even now, I submit, it is not too late, if you see that the circumstances call for drastic remedies. You must deal drastically with those who have been proved to have misbehaved. Then you will find not only will the evils stop, not only will the complaints which we have every cause to make end, what is more, the inherent potential possibilities of this country will develop in a very rapid and very democratic manner, in a manner which will astound those people who have given no thought to them. I claim, I say it in all humility, to have made some study of these matters. Recently I have edited and brought out a series of reports of the National Planning Committee, which have taken the view that the Honourable the Prime Minister was pleased to place before this House, namely, to have an overall picture of every facet in the national economy. Viewing from that point of view, and not confining myself only to one aspect of the question, I am bound to tell you that unless and until radical remedies are taken for these radical evils, the solution will only be a passing one, if it is a solution at all and you will not be saved of the necessity to make confessions of the type that they have miserably let us down. Let me be the Cassandra and tell you that they will always let you down if you put your faith in false gods.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Sir, I have listened with interest to the speech of my honourable friend Dr. Mookerjee as also of the Honourable the Prime Minister. Our lady friend Begum Rasul said that the circumstances of the country require a dictator to handle the situation. The Honourable the Prime Minister said that some Minister with a portfolio but without any executive power should be appointed. In between the two I would suggest that the Prime Minister himself may take charge of this portfolio and give up for a year the other portfolios in his charge. My impression is that unless a super-Minister is there with power to drive the other Ministers and the whole Ministry to supply our deficiencies in food and clothing, nothing good will come out. I do not want just one other Minister to stand before the other Ministers with folded hands and ask them for favours as if it is his own business. I know in many departments a Minister had to feel helpless before other Ministers and there is nothing like co-ordination. Before the 15th August, 1947, as soon as the Prime Minister took charge we heard that for a short time in the day the Prime Minister used to call the various Ministers to his office or somewhere in the Secretariat at 4 o'clock, to take note of whatever passed every day, and for some time we heard that all was well. Thereafter this kind of co-ordination seems to have got more and more lax. I do not wish to enter into details, but the test of the pudding is in the eating and we find that there is no co-ordination. Is it for the first time that the Prime Minister has come to realise that a Ministry for Economic Affairs is necessary? He himself has presided over the National Planning Committee. Now in human affairs the first thing to be done is that even if a building has to be constructed it is the original mason who has to think out what kind of building he has to construct before he puts up one brick over another. Planning is essentially necessary and a programme has to be chalked out. Policies have been there. The other day Government through the Honourable Minister of Industry and Supply came out with a policy regarding the industrialisation of the country; they chalked out certain industries as State industries, others as joint industries to be run by both the State and private enterprise and others run exclusively as private industries. May I know what has been done in that direction? I heard the long speech of Dr. Mookerjee today; he dilated more on the ways of distribution than on increased production. Has he opened any new mills in this country for producing greater quantities of cloth? Nothing has been done, even after the last Industries Conference. Either the State itself should have done so or induced other people to do it. The huge delegation that went to England with such a huge paraphernalia should not have come to any financial agreement but to a commercial or trade agreement. They should have arranged to get goods from foreign countries. To make a transfer from one account to another account in the Bank of England is no good, and all our efforts have been wasted. What is it that our delegation that went to England to liquidate the sterling balances has done in terms of goods? Nothing tangible has been done and no effort seems to have been made in that direction. The British Government instead of saying that they would allow 160 million could easily have allowed the whole of the thousand millions in our account, because it is all done on paper and means nothing. Sir Stafford Cripps was there; if they had only given one look at him and drawn inspiration from him that would have been enough. Where is that enthusiasm and that drive?

An Honourable Member: Exporting moral credit also.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Yes, without any imports. What I say is this. Where is the Minister here in charge of any portfolio who says at the week-end on the radio or in the press or on the platform that he congratulates people on their efforts in the way of increased production? That has got to be done if we want to live a decent life in the world. I am not at all over-ambitious and do not want to capture other markets as Sir Stafford Cripps wants to do. He wants to retain the old external trade; our own markets are enough for us. Are we satisfying our own needs? I must appeal to every Minister; whoever takes a responsible position must feel his position. I will refer to the question of food; I am not making any personal aspersion against any Minister but surely it is a matter for consideration. The one country which started the war and had to defend itself has set its house in order in a very short time. It is just like a ball; the harder you hit it the higher it goes. Likewise England has come to its feet. We have not suffered much by the war but we are in the same old abyss; it is like the dog that bites some other man and then itself dies. We were not heart and soul in the war but we have been hit much more than the others. In the matter of food its production has gone down in every province and in every item. There were some questions to be answered today by the Food Minister and the Minister for Industry and Supply; we did not reach them and the answers were laid on the table. In regard to Madras, for instance, there is a statement showing the production of the principal food grains and the increase during 1945 to 1948, the basic period being 1939. The normal average in Madras in 1936-39 is 72 lakh tons; then it came down in 1945-46 to 59 lakh tons, then increased to 70 lakh tons and again came down to 58 lakh tons. Today we are deficient by 20 per cent. Likewise the original all-India total was 43 million tons, then it came down to 41, then to 40 and 35 and now we are deficient by 3 million tons. Therefore so far as food is concerned, what steps have been taken? The Grow More Food campaign is more a window-dressing than anything else. Where are we growing? In the Governor General's bungalow or in the house-tops? It is a matter for explanation from any Minister. The other day I moved a Resolution for the appointment of a Famine Commission to take charge of the less developed areas to which money should be given by the Centre as well as the provinces, so that they may watch constantly what progress has been made. What has been done about that? There are other figures here which show that we are importing all sorts of grains at a cost of 108 crores of rupees per year. What grain used to be thrown into the sea by other countries as useless is now being eaten in this country; only next to death by starvation we will eat anything that is called a cereal. We are importing to the tune of 108 crores; but what has been done—may I know—in the way of subsidising agriculture in order to produce more food in this country? My honourable friend Prof. Ranga always says we must give more to the Kisan; we always give little and we are always too late. We never appease. We never satisfy those persons who are in want. Let us give something more. That is what I would ask the Minister to address himself to.

As regards implements, there are iron and steel. Until agriculture improves, they should be made available only for agricultural purpose. Let all the other activities be suspended, except defence industries, where iron and steel might be necessary.

How is it that people were able to produce cereals and other things in 1939? How is that the production of cereals has gone down? Because they were not fetching the same price as sugar cane. In my own district, a number of paddy fields were converted into sugar cane. They produced so much that when jaggery prices fell down they also collapsed. A kind of crop planning is necessary. For the tea and coffee that is exported to foreign countries, we are anxious to have a plan. It is because the foreigners give us a drive. Have we not a drive for ourselves? Why should we not insist that we should stand on our own feet, having now come to our own? A man having land should be permitted to cultivate it according to a plan. Those are the ways in which we could address ourselves with respect to food.

With regard to cloth, some more mills must be brought into existence.

Then I come to the Honourable the Finance Minister. He has not been able to sponge off the profits which have gone into the pockets of so many persons and we have given him sufficient time to endear himself to the industrialists of this country. It is nearly a year. He kissed them. He gave them various other things. But all these embraces have been one-sided. He has not been able to induce them to produce more. We ignored our convictions and still we supported him. But we have so much of inflation that the common man is going to the wall. I read the speech of the Governor of the Reserve Bank. He says banks are advancing on non-industrial purposes and not producing consumers' goods. Then why are you merely looking on? Rs. 500 odd crores have been thrown into the market. That is his confession. Here is a cutting from the press. This is clear that the Reserve Bank has not taken steps to reduce inflation. On the other hand, it is printing as of old more and more notes and sending them into the banks. Even these savings certificates have not proved effective.

What is the next step? Why not try in the other direction? Let a number of people come and subscribe to these loans. Let us give more interest. But objections may be raised by the industries thus. If Government is paying so much interest to subscribers and draws off money, what are we industrialists to do? The answer is that the Government tried to help the industrialists by starting a cheap money policy, so that not all money may be drawn by Government but that the money may be available for industrialists. They assembled some motor parts from England and called it "The Hindustan Times".

Oh! I am sorry. I mean "The Hindustan Ten". I know of ancient times that when an Indian will purchase a company, for the goodwill of an English name he will forego all his property. So the same game is being continued in "The Hindustan Ten".

The industrialists have failed. Let us not look to them. The time has come when the State must come forward and say that this is the industry that I will take and pursue. If the choice is between the welfare of the industrialist and the community, I will choose the community. All of us, 300 millions and more, are not here to be merely satisfied by a handful of these people? They are definitely dictating policy. All right, let them support us and then try to take a large percentage for its management.

I was surprised—possibly I did not hear my honourable friend the mover, properly,—but if I heard him correctly, I am exceedingly sorry for the suggestion that he gave. Do you know what it is? He says place your industries in charge of the industrialists. Bring all the industries together appoint all industrialists into a council and place all the industries in their charge. I am glad he has not advised us to give away the management of the Government so that once and for all we shall be ruled by them lock, stock and barrel.

Pandit Govind Malaviya: As an alternative to the Government not taking up the whole thing in its own hands.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: It is an alternative of dropping ourselves into the sea. What is this alternative? To place the entire industry into the hands of a few?

Pandit Govind Malaviya: Without either of the two, we will be as vague and lost as we are at this moment.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: If it is for such a solution I would not have subscribed to the resolution. Under those circumstances, I am sorry that none of these gentlemen have taken their work seriously except for one or two. I do not want to be invidious. It requires a super-Minister to be in charge of this.

What is the need of my quarrelling with Mr. Lari. Very often persons who oppose us speak the truth. We have to recognise it much sooner than we do. We cannot merely play to emotions and then say we are doing this. We cannot warm ourselves on paper fire. Likewise, if we go on with these speeches, can we fill our stomachs? Therefore I appeal with all earnestness that they should put more energy into themselves and see to it that such a debate need not come up here again and our country will be overflowing with milk and honey; otherwise I would request them to get out.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: I would like to speak on it at a later occasion.

Shri K. Hanumanthaiya (Mysore State): I would make a similar request as my friend Pandit Kunzru.

Mr. Chairman: If the Honourable Member declines he loses his opportunity.

Shri K. Hanumanthaiya: The consideration shown to Pandit Kunzru should be shown to me also. If the Chair declines, however, I do not worry!

Mr. Chairman: I am afraid you will have to lose it.

Shri K. Hanumanthaiya: I am afraid I do not regret it!

श्री गोकुलभाई दौलतराम भट्ट: सभापति जी, मैं दिन के आखिरी भाग में इस विषय पर बोलने के लिए खड़ा हुआ हूँ। मैं अभी न तो सरमायेदारों के विषय में बात करना चाहता हूँ और न दूसरी जनता के विषय में बात करना चाहता हूँ। अभी यह कहा गया है कि सरकार बहुत कोशिश कर रही है पर परिणाम जैसा होना चाहिए वैसा नहीं हो रहा है। और हम लोग

(श्री गोकुल भाई दोलत राम भट्ट)

तो अनासक्ति योग वाले हैं हमने इसकी चिन्ता नहीं की कि कैसा हो रहा है और कैसा नहीं हो रहा है। लेकिन अब हमें मालूम होने लगा है कि हमने जो नीति अस्तित्व की वह ऐसी रही है कि करना या नहीं करना, थोड़ा सा करना या बहुत करना, इसके बीच में हम यहां वहां भटकते रहे और उस नीति के परिणाम स्वरूप आज यह हालत हो गयी है। अब हमें चिल्लाना पड़ता है। अफसोस जाहिर करना पड़ता है और हमारी हुकूमत के मिनिस्टर्स को भी कुछ सोचना पड़ता है और वह भी कुछ ज्यादा दिमाग लगाकर सोचने लगे हैं और हमें कुछ आश्वासन दे रहे हैं कि हम यह करेंगे, वह करेंगे। एक तरफ हम यह कहते हैं कि जिनके ऊपर हमने आधार रखा था उन सरमायेदारों ने जैसा हमने चाहा था वैसा हमारा साथ नहीं दिया है। कुछ अंशों में वह बात ठीक है। इसमें दो रायें नहीं हो सकतीं कि जैसी हम अपेक्षा करते थे वैसी हमारी उम्मीद पूरी नहीं हुई। इसमें तो कोई शक नहीं है। लेकिन इसके साथ साथ मैं यह भी कहना चाहता हूं कि जो लोग जनता में काम करने वाले हैं और जो यहां बैठे हुए हैं उन्होंने अपने जीवन को कितना ऊंचा उठाया है और जनता के और दूसरों के सामने क्या आदर्श रखा है। मैं मामूली सी मिसाल दू तो ठीक होगा क्योंकि मैं आपके सामने लम्बी लम्बी बातें करने में और तरह तरह के आंकड़े आपके सामने रखने में ज्यादा समय नहीं लेना चाहता यद्यपि मैं ऐसे आंकड़े दे सकता हूं कि उत्पत्ति बढ़ी है या घटी है। उत्पत्ति कुछ बढ़ी है मगर हमारे मिल वालों ने कपड़े की उत्पत्ति छिपा रखी है। कम से कम दस परसेंट उत्पत्ति तो ऐसी है जो कि हमें मालूम नहीं कि हुई या नहीं और जो कि उन्होंने छिपा रखी है। कहने वाले कहते हैं कि ज्यादा लूम (Looms) चलते रहे मगर उन्होंने उनको बिगड़ा हुआ दिखाया और इस तरह उत्पत्ति कम दिखलायी। लेकिन सचमुच उत्पत्ति बढ़ने में कोई शंका नहीं है।

अनाज की उत्पत्ति बढ़ी या नहीं यह कहना मुश्किल हो जाता है। कहीं-कहीं अनाज कम हुआ है इसमें कोई शंका नहीं लेकिन पता लगा है कि कल तार आया है कि बीकानेर में हजारों मन गेहूं, हजारों मन जौ और लाखों मन चना सड़ रहा है, बारिश में भीग रहा है और बदबू मार रहा है। इस तरह की स्थिति है। वहां के व्यापारी और वहां के किसान चाहते हैं कि उसे कोई ले परन्तु कोई लेने वाला नहीं। या तो कोई लेने वाला नहीं निकलता है या हमारी रेखवे की सामर्थ्य नहीं है कि वह उस माल को ला सके। हमारे किसान चिल्लाते हैं कि हम माल देने को तैयार हैं हमको कीमत दीजिये। अगर वह ब्लैक मारकेट करने लगे तो उनको बहुत

ज्यादा कीमत मिल जाय। लेकिन जब वह सही तरीके से माल देना चाहते हैं तो आप नहीं लेते और जब वह चोरी करके बेचते हैं तो उनको ज्यादा कीमत मिल जाती है। तो इस चीज का भी हमें विचार करना चाहिए। जो किसान चीज उत्पन्न करता है अगर उसके पास कुछ ज्यादा पैसे भी चले जायें तो कोई हर्ज नहीं। हम ब्लैक मारकेटियर को बीच में रखकर उसे ज्यादा पैसा दें यह ठीक है या यह ठीक है कि हम किसान से कहें हम तुमको १५ रुपया या १८ रुपया देंगे। पर उस समय तो हम उसे ५ या ६ या ७ रुपया देकर उस चीज का दाम २० रुपया लेना चाहते हैं। तो हमारी नीति इस प्रकार की होनी चाहिए कि जहां जो चीज है उसे हम अपने हाथ में ले लें और उसका वितरण इस प्रकार से करें कि वह जनता में सही तौर से पहुंच सके।

जब कंट्रोल था उस समय भी और जब उसके निकालने की बात हुई उस समय भी मैंने कहा था कि कंट्रोल के रखने से हमारा जीवन नीचे गिर गया है। आज मैं फिर कहता हूं कि हमने कोई तरक्की नहीं की है। हम अपने प्रयत्नों की तरफ नहीं देखते, हम अपने रीति रिवाज की तरफ नहीं देखते कि हमने अपने जीवन को कितना नीचा गिरा दिया है। हम कहते हैं कि हम ब्लैक मारकेट नहीं करते लेकिन ब्लैक मारकेट करने वाले की मोटर में बैठने में हमें कोई हिचकिचाहट नहीं होती यद्यपि वह दस दस रुपया गैलन का दाम देकर पेट्रोल खरीदता है। यह छोटी सी बात नहीं है। मैं यह कहना चाहता हूं कि आज हिन्दुस्तान में हमारा नैतिक जीवन बहुत गिर गया है और हमारा बहुत नैतिक अधःपतन हो गया है। उसकी तरफ हम देखते नहीं। हम बड़े बड़े अर्थशास्त्रियों की तरह विचार करते हैं कि कौनसी तरकीब लगावें जिससे सरमायेदारों को अपने नियंत्रण में रखें। हम अपने ऊपर नियंत्रण नहीं करते हैं। हम यह नहीं सोचते कि जो जनता एक बार भोजन कर रही है उसके मुकाबले में हम कितना उपभोग करते हैं, हम कितना अनाज खराब कर रहे हैं। जिन लोगों के पास पैसे हैं उनके लिए मैं यह सुझाव रखना चाहता हूं कि वह एक मर्तबा अनाज इस्तेमाल करें और दूसरी मर्तबा साग भाजी फलहार पर ही रहें कि जिससे हमारे अनाज का बचाव हो।

कपड़े के लिए आप कहते हैं कि १२ गज मिलेगा या २४ गज मिलेगा। अभी बम्बई में सप्लाइ मिनिस्टर देसाई ने कहा है कि अब २४ गज कपड़ा मिलेगा। हम लोग अधीर तो हैं ही क्योंकि हम समझते हैं कि यह मिलने वाला नहीं है। कल फलों हुक्म निकाल दिया जायगा और परसों तीसरा हुक्म निकाल दिया जायगा। हमें किसी चीज पर विश्वास नहीं है। इसलिए जब

से २४ गज का हुक्म हुआ है दस रुपये की धोती १५ और १७ रुपये में बिकने लगी और इस तरह काला बाजार ज्यादा होने लगा। तो मैं यह कह रहा था कि अगर हम समझते हैं कि २४ गज कपड़े में काम चल सकता है तो हम लोगों को भी जो कि नेता कहलाने वाले हैं २४ गज में काम चलाना चाहिए। मगर उनके घर में जाकर देखिये अलमारियां भरी पड़ी हैं। अपने रिश्तेदारों के लिए वह ब्या ब्या कर रहे हैं। अगर इन चीजों का हम ख्याल करें तो हमें मालूम हो जायगा कि जब हम इतने गिरे हैं तो हमारी जनता क्यों न गिरे। हम अपने को और अपने रिश्तेदारों को आगे बढ़ाने के लिए किसी न किसी तरह से बढ़ावा दे रहे हैं। हम समझते हैं कि हमारे भाई ही देशद्रोही हैं। हम जानते हैं कि अगर रुपया मिलने की बात हो तो हमारे भाई पाकिस्तान तो ब्या हमारे किसी भी दुश्मन को चीज देने के लिए तैयार हैं। उनको तो रुपया चाहिये।

इस प्रकार हमारा यह नैतिक जीवन गिरा हुआ है। इसको उठाने के लिये हमें सोचना होगा। हम में जो लोग बोलने वाले हैं जो लोग काम करने वाले हैं उन लोगों को अपने जीवन को उठाना है और उन्हें अपने जीवन को उठाने के लिये कोई न कोई तरकीब सोचनी होगी और उसके बाद हमें आशा करनी चाहिये कि सरकार भी उस पर सोचे।

यह बात ठीक है कि सरकार के पास काम बहुत है और सरकार से आशा भी हम बहुत करते हैं कि मजदूरों के लिये यह करो, फ़लों के लिये यह करो, यह योजना बनाओ वह योजना बनाओ, रियासत के मामले को बढ़ाना है, हैदराबाद के लिये भी इन्तजाम करना है। उनके सामने एक चीज तो नहीं है। लेकिन फिर भी मैं यह मानता हूँ कि यह बहुत ही बड़ा और ज़रूरी सवाल है। कपड़े का और खुराक का जो सवाल है वह इतना बड़ा सवाल है कि उस पर दो दिन बहस करें तो भी ब्या होने वाला है। आखिर हम बहस करके चले जावेंगे और काम उन्हीं पर छोड़ जावेंगे जो कि काम करने वाले हैं। उन्हीं मंत्रियों के ऊपर छोड़ जावेंगे जो कि काम करने वाले हैं। लेकिन हम बहस करके छोड़ जाय इतना ही नहीं करना चाहिये। मैं जो बहस में हिस्सा ले रहा हूँ उसका मतलब यह नहीं है कि हम लोग कमेटी में आ जाय, या कोई इकानामी कमिशन (Economy Commission) बने उसमें आ जाय। मैं तो कहता हूँ कि हमें जनता के जीवन को उठाना है, हमें नैतिकता के जीवन को उठाना है। और इस लिये ज़रूरी है कि हम जो कपड़े वगैरह का इस्तेमाल करें वह सही करें। इस तरह जनता समझ सकती है कि यह लोग जिस रीति से चल रहे हैं उसी रीति से हमको भी चलना चाहिये। इस प्रकार हमें चलना है जिससे यह जो ब्लैक मार्केटिंग और हा हा है वह कम हो जाय।

इतना कह कर मैं समाप्त करता हूँ क्योंकि अब समय भी हो गया है। मेरे जो विचार थे वह मैंने आपके सामने रख दिये हैं।

Shri Gokulbhai Daulatram Bhatt (Eastern Rajputana States Group): Mr. Chairman, Sir, I rise to speak on this subject this evening. At the moment I do not either want to take up the cause of capitalists or the others. It has just now been stated that Government is doing its utmost but the results are not quite upto the expectations. We have been taking quite a detached view and did not show any anxiety over the trend of events. But now we have come to realise that the policy which we had adopted was that of indecision, and as a result of which such a state of affairs exists today. Now we have to shout and regret and our Ministers have also got to think over this. They have also begun to exert their brains and are giving us some sort of assurance that they would do this or that. On the one hand we say that the capitalists on whom we depended had not co-operated with us to the extent we had anticipated. This is true in many respects. There cannot be two opinions on this that our hopes have not been fulfilled. There is no doubt about it. But along with this, I would like to know how far those of us who are public workers and sitting here have elevated their lives in the estimation of the public and what are the ideals placed by them before others? It would be quite in order if I quote a small example, because I do not want to take more time by giving lengthy discourses or placing various kinds of statistics before you, although I can furnish such statistics which would tend to show the increase or decrease in production. The production has been increased a bit, but our mill-owners have concealed this increased cloth production. At least we are not aware of 10 per cent. of such production if it did actually exist or not and which they have hidden. It has generally been said that more looms are working, but they have shown these as out of order and in this manner they have manipulated to show less production. But infact there is no doubt in the increase in production.

It becomes somewhat difficult to say whether there was actually an increase in the production of foodgrains or not. There is no doubt that at certain places the production of foodgrains had been small, but I am told that a telegram was received yesterday that thousands of maunds of wheat, barley and grams are rotting, putrefying and soaking in rain in Bikaner. Such is the state of affairs. The traders and peasants of that place want that somebody should purchase it, but there is none to buy. Either there is no buyer or our Railway has no capacity to transport it. Our agriculturists are clamouring that they are prepared to sell their goods provided they are paid a fair price. If they resort to black-market, then they are able to secure very high prices. But if they want to sell these in a proper way, then you do not buy, and when they sell in black-market, they manage to get more value. We should also, therefore, look to this aspect. There is no harm if a little more money goes into the hands of an agriculturist who is after all the producer. Which of the two courses is right? Should we pay more money through the agency of a black-marketer or tell him directly that we would pay him at Rs. 15 or Rs. 18. But at that time we want to procure these goods by paying him at Rs. 5, Rs. 6, or Rs. 7 and on our part sell at the rate of Rs. 20. Our policy should, therefore, be to procure from each and every place whatever is available and distribute it in such a manner that it reaches the masses equitably.

During the time when control was in force and later as well when the policy of de-control was under consideration, I had pointed out that the existence of control had demoralized us. Today I again say that we have not made any progress. We do not look to our ideals, customs and traditions that how [Shri Gokulbhai Daulatram Bhatt] far we have been morally depraved. We assert that we do not indulge in black-market, but we hardly feel any hesitation in sitting in the motor-car of a black-marketer although he purchases petrol at Rs. 10 per gallon. This is not a petty thing. I would like to say that our moral life in India has considerably degenerated and we have succumbed to moral bankruptcy. We do not look to this aspect. Like great economists we think over the ways and means to bring capitalists under our control. We do not exercise any self-control. We do not look to those people who get food only once a day and make a comparison between them and the quantity of food we consume and waste. I would like to put this suggestion for being acted upon by those who are rich and exhort them to take cereals only once in a day and use vegetables and fruits subsequently, and thus economise in cereals.

In regard to cloth you say that either 12 or 24 yards will be given. Only recently, Mr. Desai, Minister for Civil Supplies, Bombay Government, stated that 24 yards of cloth would now be issued. We people are quite impatient, because we apprehend that this would not be available as revised orders would be issued tomorrow and again the day after. We have got no faith in anything. Since the orders for the sale of 24 yards of cloth were issued, a dhoti costing Rs. 10 is being sold at a price of Rs. 15 and Rs. 17, and this gave a fillip to black-marketing. What I meant to say was that in case we think that 24 yards cloth can serve the purpose, then we people—the so-called leaders—should also confine our requirements within this limit. But if you go to their houses, you will undoubtedly find that their almirahs are full. How are they helping their relations? If we take a stock of all these things, then only we can visualize the extent to which we have been degraded and as a sequence to this why should not our masses also be demoralized? In some way or the other we are aggrandizing our own interests and encouraging those of our relations. We know fully well that our brethren are traitors, and they are preparing to sell goods to any of our enemies—what to say of Pakistan—when the question of making money is involved. In this way our moral life has degenerated. We shall have to think over how to raise it. Many of us who are workers shall have to devise some measure to raise the moral calibre of our lives, and after this we should expect the Government also to consider this. This is true that the Government is busy with too many problems, but we expect it to do many a things, viz., to do this for the labourers or that for others, to formulate this or that plan, to look after the affairs of the states and tackle the Hyderabad situation. They have not one thing before them. But even then I feel that it is a colossal and vital issue. The problem of food and cloth is so vast that even if we discuss it for two days, we cannot solve this. After discussion we will go and leave the things to be done by the Ministers who are responsible for the matter. But we should not confine our role to mere discussion. I do not mean that our names should be included in the Committee or be appointed to any Economy Committee which may be set up. I would emphasize that we have got to ameliorate the standard of living of our masses and raise their moral. To achieve this, it is very essential that we should make the right use of cloth etc. In this way the masses can very well realize the course of action and follow in our footsteps. We have to explore avenues to root out the evil of black-market that is prevalent at present.

With these words, I would close, as my time is over here and I have placed my views before you.

The Assembly then adjourned till a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock on Thursday, the 12th August, 1948.

HINDU CODE

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF SELECT COMMITTEE

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar (Minister of Law): Sir, I beg to present the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to amend and codify certain Branches of the Hindu Law.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru (U. P.: General): May I enquire when this Report of the Select Committee will come into the consideration of the House?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I cannot say. That will depend upon the nature of the Government business.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Is there any assurance that it will be discussed during this Session?

GANDHI NATIONAL MEMORIAL FUND DONATIONS COMPANIES BILL 219

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: It should be so in the ordinary course.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Will it be or not? Is the course now ordinary or extraordinary?

GANDHI NATIONAL MEMORIAL FUND DONATIONS (COMPANIES)

BILL

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy (Minister for Commerce): Sir, I move:

"That the Bill to enable companies to make donations to the Gandhi National Memorial Fund, be taken into consideration."

This Bill is the result of a request made by the Industrial Committee of the Gandhi Memorial Fund as transmitted to us by the President of the Indian National Congress, that certain handicaps that stand in the way of companies making donations to the fund should be removed by legislation. The Committee mentioned the analogy of a legislation that was undertaken in 1940 to facilitate the making of donations to the war funds.

In drafting the Bill, we have closely followed the model of the Act of 1940, and I leave therefore very little to add to what is contained in the statement of objects and reasons. It is entirely an enabling measure. If in any particular instance the vast majority of the shareholders of a company intend that a donation should be made on behalf of the company to this fund, no legal disability should stand in the way of that desire of theirs being carried out. This is the sole object of the Bill.

Mr. Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the Bill to enable companies to make donations to the Gandhi National Memorial Fund, be taken into consideration."

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava (East Punjab: General): Sir, the Mover of the Bill has just pointed out that he has introduced this measure with a view to offer facilities to certain companies who are not competent to give their donations on account of the absence of any provision to that effect in the Memorandum of Association of those companies. This desire is very laudable and I congratulate the Honourable the Minister in charge of this Bill for introducing such a measure.

All that I wish to submit in this regard is that his desire, however laudable, will not be given effect to if even a small minority of persons who do not desire that a donation be given raise objections in that regard. He has himself stated that it is an enabling measure. In my humble opinion it is a restrictive measure also. The word "special" resolution in clause 2 put such a restriction on the right of the majority of the shareholders that the minority will have practically the right to rule the majority in the matter of giving donations to the Gandhi National Memorial Fund. When the company expresses its will by way of resolution it either passes an ordinary resolution, or an extraordinary resolution or a special resolution. Section 81 of the Companies Act runs thus:

"A resolution shall be an extraordinary resolution when it has been passed by a majority of not less than three-fourths of such members entitled to vote as are present in person or by proxy (where proxies are allowed) at a general meeting of which notice specifying the intention to propose the resolution as an extraordinary resolution has been duly given."

This is about the extraordinary resolution. But this Section further speaks of a special resolution. According to para. 2 of section 81—

"A resolution shall be a special resolution when it has been passed by such a majority as is required for the passing of an extraordinary resolution and at a general meeting of which not less than twenty-one days' notice specifying the intention to propose the resolution as a special resolution has been duly given."

Other provisions follow.

[Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava]

All that I beg to point out is that unless three-fourths of the members vote for this resolution being passed, it cannot be passed as a special or extraordinary resolution. What I maintain is that if one-fourth of the members do not agree to the donation being made, they would by their votes make the wishes of three fourths of the majority infructuous. Thus one fourth of the shareholders will be able to veto the wishes of the rest three fourths. It is illogical that one fourth of the shareholders may overrule the wishes of three fourths and more than half may not be able to overrule the wishes of less than half. It is a democratic principle that the majority should have the right to pass any resolution that it likes and my submission is that in regard to this Bill also we should delete the word "special" and enable the majority of the shareholders to give as much donation as they like. This disabling provision will practically arm those reactionary persons who do not want to give any donations. In a measure of this importance we should stick to the ordinary rule of the majority over-riding the minority and we should not place a restriction of this sort in a measure of this kind. The word "special" should be taken away. Further I beg to propose that the meeting of the Directors should also be allowed to give donations on behalf of the company. If the Board of Directors is not willing to give a donation then the final word must remain with the meeting of the shareholders. The word "special" would take away the right of the majority to pass a resolution of this kind—a right which is theirs in every democratic body in respect of all kinds of resolutions. I do not see why there should be a special restriction of this nature in regard to this measure. I therefore submit that this aspect of the case may be considered and when the final motion is made for the passing of the Bill this amendment may be carried out.

Shri Prabhu Dayal Himatsingka (West Bengal: General): Mr. Speaker, I have sent in an amendment that for the word "special" the word "ordinary" be substituted. That will serve the purpose of my honourable friend.

Mr. Speaker: We are not considering any amendments now. The question before the House is as to whether the Bill should be taken into consideration or not. The honourable member may speak on the general motion.

Shri Prabhu Dayal Himatsingka: Sir, the Bill is necessary, because in the Memorandum and Articles of Association of various companies there is no power to make donations and unless those companies which do not provide in their memoranda to give to charities are enabled by this Bill, they cannot make donations, even if all the shareholders and Directors desire to do so. Therefore we must pass some such legislation like this and in that connection I submit that it ought to be by an ordinary resolution.

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy: Sir, I should like to say a few words in reply to my honourable friends. I have already pointed out that this Bill is the result of a request from the Industrial Committee of the Gandhi Memorial Fund. I have got the printed proceedings of a meeting held by that Committee on the 8th July, 1948, and the request made by that Committee was specifically to the effect that a law on the lines of the legislation that was passed in 1940 in connection with the war donations should be passed, to facilitate the making of donations to the Gandhi Memorial Fund. As I have already said we have closely followed the wording of the Act of 1940 in drafting this measure. As regards the points which my honourable friends have raised, I do not think that the fears which they have in view at all weighed with the industrialists who composed that particular committee. I should not like to read all the names. There were 26 of them present, including some very prominent captains of industry, Indian as well as European. I am afraid I am not in a position to relax the procedure beyond what I propose to do in this Bill. It is true that a special resolution would be needed, which certainly requires a somewhat protracted procedure to be followed. But it has to be remembered that if the memorandum of a company does not contain as one of its objects the making of such donations, it is not open even to the High Court to enable an amendment to be made in that memorandum in order to make payments of donations to such funds legal. Therefore I submit that what I am proposing on the present occasion goes far enough and I am not in a position to agree to further relaxation of the law as proposed by my honourable friends.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill to enable companies to make donations to the Gandhi National Memorial Fund, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: Sir, I want to move my amendments.

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy: Sir, I have to take exception to the moving of the honourable member's amendments, at such short notice. I was not aware of them till about half an hour ago.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: Sir, I got the papers of the Assembly only this morning. I did not get the papers for the 9th, 10th and 11th and as soon as the papers came to me this morning I gave notice of my amendments. The rules provide that the members of the Assembly should be provided with the papers in time. I submit, Sir, that as a special case permission should be granted to me to move the amendments.

Mr. Speaker: As regards the supply of the Assembly papers, there seems to have been an unfortunate slip on the part of the honourable member in that he did not keep the office informed of his address in the interim period, with the result that the notices went to some other address while he was moving about. That is what has happened.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: So far as I am concerned I am occupying a Government M.L.A. Bungalow in New Delhi for the last one year and my address is known to the Assembly office. The papers could have been sent to me at least yesterday night, so that in the night I could have read them but I did not get them in time.

Mr. Speaker: Anyway, fortunately or unfortunately, the office was not in possession of the information as to whether the honourable member was present in Delhi or not.

In addition to what the Honourable Minister has said about the desirability of having a special resolution, though it is not the function of the Chair to explain, honourable members will realise that this legislation seeks to give authority to the company to do something beyond its original memorandum. Therefore, practically, it is giving them some power under which they can act, as if they were going to change the memorandum of the constitution of the company for that purpose and hence a special resolution is necessary. To make donations to such funds is not the ordinary business of a company and if the company wants to do something which is not within the scope of the ordinary business of a company, it is but fair that some kind of special majority should agree if that donation is to be made. A mere majority will not protect the rights of every shareholder. A shareholder is entitled to see that the funds of the company are applied to no purpose other than the purposes for which the company was floated. This seems to me a very sound reason. If all depends upon the honourable member whether or not to move his amendments. Personally, I am not inclined to give him permission on the ground that he has asked for. If at all I grant it, it is only on account of the nervousness, on my part, that holding the view that the amendment is uncalled for I am, perhaps, taking advantage of a technicality and refusing permission. That will be the only ground upon which I am prepared to consider the question of permission for the amendment, if he is still keen, without promising that I will allow it.

I take it that the honourable member does not desire to move his amendment.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): Sir, there is a spelling mistake in clause 2. The word "authorise" is spelt with a "z", whereas the usual practice is to spell it with an "s".

Mr. Speaker: One cannot be sure of the printer doing the needful when the Bill is printed again. The question is:

"That clause 2 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 2 was added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and the Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy: I move:

"That the Bill be passed."

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill be passed."

The motion was adopted.

ELECTRICITY (SUPPLY) BILL—contd.

Mr. Speaker: We will now proceed with the further consideration of the Bill to provide for the rationalisation of the production and supply of electricity, and generally for taking measures conducive to the electrical development of the Provinces of India, as reported by the Select Committee.

We were debating clause 44. Amendment No. 95 in the Consolidated List had been moved, and has already been put before the House.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil (Minister for Works, Mines, and Power): I am accepting it as it is.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 44 of the Bill, after the word 'Government', the following be inserted:

'or any Corporation created by legislation enacted by the Central Legislature'."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): I beg to move:

"That the Proviso to sub-clause (1) of clause 44 of the Bill be omitted."

I make this amendment not because I am convinced that the Proviso is unnecessary but the proviso is so unintelligible to me. It is difficult to say what the proviso really intends to achieve and what it has succeeded in achieving. In order to find the scope of the Proviso we should for a moment go to the main clause. I should draw the attention of the House to one or two important portions. It begins with "Notwithstanding" something; later on there is a passage "but subject to" something; still later on there is a negative "it shall not be lawful" and then again "except with the previous consent". There are so many anti-theses already sufficiently confusing. Then the beginning of the Proviso is like this: "Provided that such consent shall not, except in relation to" something, and "unless" something is done. I respectfully defy any lawyer to explain the meaning of this.

Shri B. Das (Orissa: General): Is it a parliamentary expression?

Mr. Speaker: Let him proceed. —

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I mean that I will ask any lawyer to explain the meaning. I do not mean any disrespect to the House. I beg to submit that I could not understand the meaning and the real effect of the proviso. I only want to draw the attention of the House to the anomalous state of affairs. I would ask the Honourable Minister to explain the meaning, and if it is sufficiently clear to him and to others I shall then be only too glad to withdraw my amendment. But the wording should be carefully and clearly drafted. I tried my best to understand it but I failed.

Shri K. Santhanam (Madras: General): Sir, I fully sympathise with the honourable member. But the Bill is a very complicated Bill. It is not the drafting, the subject is certainly a difficult one and it will take some time to understand it. But the draft itself is quite accurate. It brings out the intentions of the framers of the Bill and the Select Committee scrutinized it very carefully. So far as the Proviso is concerned I do not think there is any difficulty in understanding it. The Proviso only makes it certain that the Board shall not refuse consent to a new generating station unless it can itself supply the required electricity. That is the purpose. Of course it is to be under various conditions. All the conditions have to be put in by words like "Unless" or "notwithstanding" or by some such words. Otherwise it will be too wide or too narrow. The whole purpose has to be exactly and precisely defined. I therefore think so long as the Honourable Member does not have any objection on a matter of substance or principle, that he ought to allow it to stand as it is.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I would ask whether it was not possible to simplify it. Everything is capable of simplification. It is not enough that the draftsman understands it. Certainly it is intelligible to him. The question is whether a man in the street will be able to understand it.

Mr. Speaker: After listening to the Honourable Member, does he wish to press his amendment?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I do not press it.

Shri K. Santhanam: Sir, I move:

"That in the Proviso to sub-clause (1) of clause 44 of the Bill, for the words 'equivalent to that required by him,' wherever they occur, the words 'sufficient for his requirements' be substituted."

This amendment is only intended to give the Board discretion to discuss with the applicant as to the actual quantity which will be sufficient for his requirements.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I accept it.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in the Proviso to sub-clause (1) of clause 44 of the Bill, for the words 'equivalent to that required by him,' wherever they occur, the words 'sufficient for his requirements' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move.

"That for sub-clause (2) of clause 44 of the Bill, the following be substituted :

"(2) The applicant shall state in his application such particulars of the station, plant or works in respect of which it is made as the Board may reasonably require, and when consent has been given by the Board to the application, the applicant shall not without further consent of the Board make any material variation to the particulars given."

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That for sub-clause (2) of clause 44 of the Bill, the following be substituted :

"(2) The applicant shall state in his application such particulars of the station, plant or works in respect of which it is made as the Board may reasonably require, and when consent has been given by the Board to the application, the applicant shall not without further consent of the Board make any material variation to the particulars given."

Shri H. V. Kamath (C. P. and Berar: General): I support the amendment because in my judgment the construction of the clause as it stands is extremely clumsy and that proposed by my friend is more direct and simple. I hope the Honourable Minister will not stand on prestige, and on that ground reject the amendment.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I do not accept it.

Mr. Speaker: Then I will have to put it to the House.

The question is:

"That for sub-clause (2) of clause 44 of the Bill, the following be substituted :

"(2) The applicant shall state in his application such particulars of the station, plant or works in respect of which it is made as the Board may reasonably require, and when consent has been given by the Board to the application, the applicant shall not without further consent of the Board make any material variation to the particulars given."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 44, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 44, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Clauses 45 to 56 were added to the Bill.

Shri K. Santhanam: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in part (c) of sub-clause (2) of clause 57 of the Bill, for the word, brackets and letter 'clause (c)', the word, brackets and letter 'clause (b)' be substituted."

Sir, this is purely to correct a mistake in printing.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in part (c) of sub-clause (2) of clause 57 of the Bill, for the word, brackets and letter 'clause (c)' the word, brackets and letter 'clause (b)' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Shri K. Santhanam: I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 57 of the Bill, the words 'After the issue of the notification under sub-section (3) of section 1,' be omitted."

Sir, this also is purely a drafting correction.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 57 of the Bill, the words 'After the issue of the notification under sub-section (3) of section 1,' be omitted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 57 of the Bill, for the words beginning with the words 'shall be deemed' and ending with the words 'year of account,' the following be substituted :

'shall, from the date of commencement of the licensee's next succeeding year of account, be deemed to be incorporated in the licence of every licensee, not being a local authority'."

This is only a drafting correction of a certain portion of the text.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I do not accept it.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 57 of the Bill, for the words beginning with the words 'shall be deemed' and ending with the words 'year of account,' the following be substituted :

'shall, from the date of commencement of the licensee's next succeeding year of account, be deemed to be incorporated in the licence of every licensee, not being a local authority'."

The motion was negatived.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: Sir, I am prepared to accept his amendment No. 20 on Supp. List No. 2.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Yes, Sir. Amendments Nos. 20, 21, 22, 25 and 28 deal with the same subject. They can be attended to by the draftsman. I move amendment No. 23. I beg to move:

"That in part (b) of sub-clause (2) of clause 57 of the Bill, for the words 'earning clear profits', the words 'earning a clear profit' be substituted."

Sir, "profit" is a singular idea. Though it might consist of a large number of incomes minus expenditure, the total result is singular, not plural. In fact, the singular is indicated in the text. There may be cases where there may be profits for different years and different periods, but for a particular accounting period there is only one profit, if there is any. That is why the singular is preferred.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I do not accept it. It is not profitable either!

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in part (b) of sub-clause (2) of clause 57 of the Bill, for the words 'earning clear profits', the words 'earning a clear profit' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Shri K. Santhanam: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in part (b) of sub-clause (2) of clause 57 of the Bill, for the words 'if the efficiency of operation and management and the potentialities of the undertaking of the licensee so permit', the following be substituted :

'if the potentialities of the undertaking of the licensee, with efficient operation and management, so permit'."

Obviously, it will clarify the idea behind the sub-clause

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: Sir, I accept it.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in part (b) of sub-clause (2) of clause 57 of the Bill, for the words 'if the efficiency of operation and management and the potentialities of the undertaking of the licensee so permit', the following be substituted :

'if the potentialities of the undertaking of the licensee, with efficient operation and management, so permit'."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad has, I believe, certain amendments. Does he wish to move them?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I simply wish to draw the attention of the draftsman to amendment No. 24 in supplementary list No. 2. For reference, I wish to invite attention to Section 3, item 37(a) of the General Clauses Act. That gives the text. The first word should also begin with a capital letter.

Mr. Speaker: So that disposes of that amendment. Now, the question is:

"That clause 57, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 57, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in clause 58 of the Bill, for the words 'being a local authority' where they occur for the first time, the words 'which is a local authority' be substituted."

The participle is indefinite and is always a bad thing. A more specific thing is the present tense. So "which is a local authority" is more specific.

Mr. Speaker: What difference does it make, whether we say "being a local authority" or "which is a local authority"? It makes no difference at all.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari (Madras: General): Actually if it is an individual, the amendment will not fit in.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I do not press it. I shall go on to my next amendment.

Sir, I beg to move:

"That in clause 58 of the Bill, for the words 'his licensed undertaking' the words 'its licensed undertakings' be substituted."

The objection is to the word "his". It applies to local authority. It is treated as if it is masculine gender. I think it is neutral gender. Therefore, it should be "its".

Shri K. Santhanam: The word in respect of which "his" is used is the word "licensee".

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Then I do not press.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 58 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 58 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That for clause 59 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

"59. General principles for Board's finance.—The Board shall credit to its account the subventions from the Provincial Government, if any, and shall so carry on its operations under this Act as not to incur any loss in the working:

Provided that if any loss actually results in carrying on its operations in any year, the amounts due for meeting the operating, maintenance and management expenses may, to the extent of the loss, with the sanction of the Provincial Government, be paid out of the capital."

This is a re-arrangement of an otherwise imperfectly expressed clause. A more comparison between the two will show that the amendment is shorter, simpler and more direct.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I do not accept.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That for clause 59 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

"59. General principles for Board's finance.—The Board shall credit to its account the subventions from the Provincial Government, if any, and shall so carry on its operations under this Act as not to incur any loss in the working:

Provided that if any loss actually results in carrying on its operations in any year, the amounts due for meeting the operating, maintenance and management expenses may, to the extent of the loss, with the sanction of the Provincial Government, be paid out of the capital."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 59 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 59 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That for sub-clause (2) of clause 60 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

"(2) The Provincial Government shall, within two months after the first constitution of the Board, declare what expenditure was incurred by it before the issue of the notification under sub-section (4) of section 1 on capital account in connection with the purposes of the Act; and such amount shall be deemed to be a loan advanced by the Provincial Government to the Board under section 64 on the date of the said notification; and all assets acquired by such expenditure and all assets and profits which may have accrued therefrom shall, as from the date of the notification, thereupon vest in the Board."

Sir, I beg to submit that the sub-clause in the Bill is round about and indirect. The amendment is simple and precise.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I do not agree.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That for sub-clause (2) of clause 60 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

"(2) The Provincial Government shall, within two months after the first constitution of the Board, declare what expenditure was incurred by it before the issue of the notification under sub-section (4) of section 1 on capital account in connection with the purposes of the Act; and such amount shall be deemed to be a loan advanced by the Provincial Government to the Board under section 64 on the date of the said notification; and all assets acquired by such expenditure and all assets and profits which may have accrued therefrom shall, as from the date of the notification, thereupon vest in the Board."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 60 of the Bill, for the word 'declaration', the word 'notification' be substituted."

That word appears in last but one line and again three lines earlier, the word "notification" appears. Of course there is a declaration in the notification, but instead of the word "declaration" reference should be specifically to the notification whatever it may contain. That is why I have suggested a change of the word "declaration" to "notification".

Shri K. Santhanam: The declaration has to be made before the notification. If we put the notification, it will create confusion.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I do not agree.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I do not press.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 60 of the Bill, after the words 'such expenditure', the words 'and all assets and profits which may have accrued therefrom' be inserted."

These words do not appear in the text but perhaps they are called for in the context.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 60 of the Bill, after the words 'such expenditure', the words 'and all assets and profits which may have accrued therefrom' be inserted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 60 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 60 was added to the Bill.

Clauses 61 and 62 were added to the Bill.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena (U.P.: General): Sir, I beg to move:

"That in clause 63 of the Bill, the following be added at the end:

"where the scheme is of a vital character and essential to complete the all out national plan of development of power and electrical energy, the Provincial Government may approach the Authority to grant to the Board sufficient funds to enable it to complete the scheme."

I have while making a speech on the Bill said that this Bill did not give sufficient power to the authority to carry out the work with drive and initiative. I also point out power has not been taken by the authority to get sufficient funds. I think it is most necessary that provinces which are not rich enough to carry out big schemes should be given sufficient funds, and this is essential for the development of a scheme of an all out national plan. I think the Honourable Minister will accept this and will take power to carry out his all out plan which may soon come to fruition.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I cannot accept it. The technical body is not a financing agency.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in clause 63 of the Bill, the following be added at the end:

"where the scheme is of a vital character and essential to complete the all out national plan of development of power and electrical energy, the Provincial Government may approach the Authority to grant to the Board sufficient funds to enable it to complete the scheme."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 63 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 63 was added to the Bill.

Clauses 64 to 75 were added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (3) of clause 76 of the Bill, for the word 'Section', the word 'Act' be substituted."

Sir, the sub-clause says, "Subject to the provisions of this section, the provisions of the Arbitration Act, (X of 1940) shall apply to arbitrations under this Act." I have tried to put it subject to the provisions of this Act, which is more comprehensive. If we say, subject to the provisions of this section only, then it ignores the other possible sections which may affect it.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: The position may be explained. This is the section for arbitration and only the provisions of this section are excluded. The amendment would exclude the other sections of the Act.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Then, I do not press this amendment.

Sir, I beg to move:

"That after sub-clause (5) of clause 76 of the Bill, the following new sub-clause be inserted and the subsequent clause be re-numbered accordingly:

"(6) If the arbitrators appointed under clause (b) of sub-section (2) are unable to agree on any matter, the same shall be referred to the Authority, whose decisions thereon shall be final and conclusive."

Sir, I understand that there will be two arbitrators appointed to deal with the subject. It is obvious that the two arbitrators may not agree on a particular matter and an impasse will be reached. The amendment will remove the difficulty.

Mr. Speaker: If I am not mistaken, provision for all these is made in the Arbitration Act. If the Arbitration Act is followed, all these difficulties will not arise.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I am not quite clear at the moment about what they would follow. Supposing the two arbitrators differ, we should have a clear picture of what should be done in that case. The Arbitration Act may contain something of which I have no clear idea now. We should have a clear picture of what should happen in case the two arbitrators differ. There should be a third man who should be the umpire. There is on the one hand the Board, and on the other hand the licensee and on the other hand the umpire. The Authority which is the Central Authority would be the most impartial authority and this, in my opinion, would obviously be the better one. In these circumstances, I should submit that the matter should be clarified and should not be left to some possible provisions of the Arbitration Act.

Shri K. Santhanam: I merely wanted to point out that the Arbitration Act makes a specific provision for this contingency. In certain cases, the High Court is there. The Electricity Authority is an official body. Here, we are dealing with provincial Boards and licensees. In certain matters they were willing to accept the final arbitration of the Electricity Authority and in other others they wanted to have the normal arbitration procedure.

Mr. Speaker: I can point out to the honourable member that sub-clause (3) says that the provisions of the Arbitration Act, X of 1940 shall apply to the arbitrations under this Act. The Arbitration Act is a Code or body of provisions which makes provisions for all kinds of difficulties and contingencies in arbitration proceedings. One of the provisions is that in case the two arbitrators differ, the matter goes to an umpire, or it goes to the Court. That is what is provided in the Arbitration Act.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava (East Punjab: General): Sir, sub-clause (6) speaks of an umpire and the position is clear.

Mr. Speaker: Sub-clause (6) makes the position clear.

Shri Prabhu Dayal Himatsingka (West Bengal: General): That sub-clause shows that there is provision for an umpire. The Arbitration Act is clear and it provides for a reference to an umpire agreed upon by the parties and if they do not agree, they may go to the court, which will appoint an umpire.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Courts are the things which we are going to avoid.

Mr. Speaker: Appointment of an arbitrator is not going to the court on the merits of the case. Whatever that may be, the point which he has in view will not be served by the amendment. The position seems to be clarified by the clause as it stands.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I do not press the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 76 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 76 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 77 of the Bill, for all the words beginning with the words 'If any licensee or other person' and ending with the words and figures 'of section 75', the following be substituted:

"If any licensee or other person upon whom any direction, order or requirement is made under section 55 or under clause (c) of sub-section (2) of section 57 or under section 58 or under sub-section (3) of section 75, fails without reasonable excuse to comply with or give effect to the direction, order or requirement'."

Sir, This is only a re-arrangement of the words.

Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I am not accepting the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 77 of the Bill, for all the words beginning with the words 'If any licensee or other person' and ending with the words and figures 'of section 75', the following be substituted:

"If any licensee or other person upon whom any direction, order or requirement is made under section 55 or under clause (c) of sub-section (2) of section 57 or under section 58 or under sub-section (3) of section 75, fails without reasonable excuse to comply with or give effect to the direction, order or requirement'."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I move:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 77 of the Bill, for the words 'this section' the word, figure and brackets 'sub-section (1)' be substituted."

Clause 77 has three sub-clauses of which the first only creates offences. Sub-clause (2) provides exception in case of particular persons; sub-clause (3) deals with the jurisdiction of the court. Therefore as the offence is entirely confined to sub-clause (1), I think it would be more specific to use the words "sub-section (1)" in sub-clause (2) instead of the words "this section".

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: Sir, I do not accept it.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 77 of the Bill, for the words 'this section', the word, figure and brackets 'sub-section (1)' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: Sir, I move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 77 of the Bill, for the words 'punishable with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees', the following be substituted:

'punishable with imprisonment which may extend to one year and fine.'"

In this clause the penalty provided for infringement of the Act is a fine of Rs. 500 and thereafter Rs. 50 for every day the offence is continued. Clause 77(1) refers to clause (c) of clause 57(2) under which the provincial Government gives an order that the licensee shall fix a particular rate for electricity. If he does not obey and charges a higher price and thus makes a profit of thousands of rupees per day his only punishment is a fine of Rs. 500 and then Rs. 50 per day so long as the offence continues. I think the licensee will find it much better to continue the offence and pay Rs. 50 a day, which will mean nothing to him as he would be making such huge profits. I think this provision should be modified and licensees must not be allowed to transgress the law. Therefore the minimum punishment must be imprisonment for one year and a fine which should extend to the amount of profit that he makes. Although the Honourable Minister seems to be dead set against all amendments I hope he will accept this amendment. Otherwise there will be many infringements and no one will care for the Act.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: Sir, I do not accept it. The greatest punishment that can be inflicted is revoking or cancelling the license and an additional punishment of more than what is provided in the clause is not necessary. I oppose it.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 77 of the Bill, for the words 'punishable with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees', the following be substituted:

'punishable with imprisonment which may extend to one year and fine.'"

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 77 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 77 was added to the Bill.

DEMANDS FOR SUPPLEMENTARY GRANTS 1948-49.

DEMAND No. 99A—CAPITAL OUTLAY ON STERLING PENSIONS

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty (Minister for Finance):
Sir, I move:

"That a supplementary sum not exceeding Rs. 2,16,27,18,000 be granted to the Governor General to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending 31st March, 1949, in respect of 'Capital Outlay on Sterling Pensions'."

[Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty]

May I move the second motion also?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

DEMAND No. 101—DEFENCE CAPITAL OUTLAY

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: Sir, I move:

"That a supplementary sum not exceeding Rs. 65,33,33,000 be granted to the Governor General to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending 31st March, 1949, in respect of 'Defence Capital Outlay'."

The two supplementary demands that I am now placing before this House arise out of the result of the recent agreement that was concluded with the British Government regarding the sterling balances. In presenting the White Paper to the House the other day, I mentioned that Government would be prepared for a discussion on the terms of the agreement when I moved the supplementary votes, and I take it that with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I might be permitted, in moving these motions, to give a brief account of these negotiations and the agreement that we arrived at.

The whole question of sterling balances has been before the country for quite a long time and honourable members generally familiar with the outstanding problems arising out of the accumulation of these balances in London. I do not think it is necessary for me to go into great detail about the genesis of these sterling balances. For the convenience of the debate, it would however be helpful to refresh the minds of honourable members if I recapitulate very briefly the genesis of the sterling balances.

These balances were accumulated in England during the war time. Even before the war, the Government of India and the Reserve Bank later on, held some balances in London as a part of the currency reserve of the country. Just before the war these balances stood approximately at £64 millions or Rs. 83 crores. During the war period these balances accumulated to an enormous extent. This accumulation was brought about not merely by the surplus exports that were sent out of the country but as a result of the peculiar manner in which the then Government of India financed the supply of stores and other equipment to the British Government and to the Governments of the Allied Nations. India, as honourable members will remember, was a great base of supply—supply not merely of raw materials but of semi-manufactured and also of manufactured goods. Over and above the expenditure incurred by the Government of India directly on our own account in prosecution of the war, we supplied vast quantities of raw materials and manufactured goods for the British Government and the Allied Nations. Normally, the financing of these projects and supplies would have been made by the British Government and other Governments, finding the rupee finance either by raising rupee loans in India or by some arrangement with the Government of India. This normal procedure was not resorted to. On the other hand, a section of the Reserve Bank of India Act was utilised for this purpose. The Reserve Bank of India under the Act was under an obligation to supply the rupees against a tender of sterling in London. This obligation of the Reserve Bank was invoked for the purpose of financing these operations. The British Government and the Allied Governments placed at the disposal of the Reserve Bank of India sterling in London in payment of these purchases. As against this sterling the Reserve Bank printed notes and this rupee finance thus created was utilised for the payment of those who supplied these materials.

It would therefore be observed that the sterling balance, as I have repeatedly stated, is not a war debt given by the Government of India to the British Government but merely a currency reserve which the Reserve Bank of India holds as deposit in the Bank of England and also in the form of various British Government securities both long-term and short-term.

I have also frankly expressed my opinion that this method of financing the supplies to the British and Allied Governments was really an abuse of the provisions of the Reserve Bank of India Act. Unfortunately, in the subordinate political status of our country during that period, the voice of public opinion was not heard and we had no remedy against this. The result has been that at the end of the war we find a very large accumulation of this balance, which, as I said, represents the property, the assets of the Reserve Bank of India, both in the issue and in the banking departments of that Bank. The Government of India really do not come into the picture. The Government of the United Kingdom does not come into the picture. Normally it would be perfectly open to the Reserve Bank of India to issue cheques on the Bank of England for the payment of sterling as against rupees that might be tendered to the Reserve Bank of India in this country. In view, however, of the difficult economic situation of England, which is a common feature in the economy of the postwar world, by mutual agreement we have imposed a voluntary limitation on our power to withdraw these balances. In other words, we have refrained voluntarily from exercising the power of drawing on these balances in any manner that we liked. The pace and the method of the withdrawal formed the subject of negotiations between the two governments and honourable members might remember that during the last one year we concluded two agreements, under which the rate of withdrawal and the amount of withdrawal were specified for two half-yearly periods. The last agreement terminated on the 30th June and we had to examine the question of entering into further negotiations for the purpose of future withdrawals.

We realised, as a result of the experience of the 12 preceding months, that the practice of having half-yearly settlements was very inconvenient and under that arrangement it was not possible for the Government of India to go ahead confidently with any plan of industrial or agricultural development in this country. At the same time we realised that it would not be wise in our own interest to press for a long term settlement of the sterling balance question with the British Government. Taking all factors into consideration we came to the conclusion that we must come to some arrangement, under which we must know at least for a period of three years what amount would be available to us for our developmental purposes. We therefore had in view a settlement to cover a period of three years, during which period it will be determined what will be the maximum amount of sterling that we might utilise.

On the 25th June, 1948, the total sterling balance standing to the credit of the Reserve Bank of India was £1,152 million or Rs. 1,536 crores. When Government decided to send a delegation to London to settle the arrangement for the next three years, it was also thought that we must avail ourselves of this opportunity to settle some of the other outstanding problems.

When the war terminated it was found that the British Government had in India an enormous quantity of war material. They had also built at their own cost various air fields, training centres and other installations. In April 1947 the then Government of India took over the entire war assets of the British Government left in this country. The actual price to be paid for these was left for future negotiation. The Delegation was therefore instructed to settle with the United Kingdom Government the price to be paid for these installations and stores.

There was one other problem which the Delegation was asked to tackle and, if possible, to settle. The Government of India have to remit every year to England large sums of money to pay the pensions of persons who had served in the civil and military departments of the Government of India and who have now retired. Every year we had to find exchange resources to meet this obligation. It was thought that if suitable terms could be secured we might capitalise the whole liability for pensions. The three problems with which the Delegation was therefore charged were the capitalisation of the pensions, the payment for the stores and installations and the settlement for the release of the sterling balance for the next three years. I shall first take up the question of pensions.

As honourable members would have seen in the White Paper we have paid a lump sum of £147½ million to the British Government as a capitalised payment to enable us to meet these pensionary charges of the then Central Government of India. We have also paid them £20½ million as capitalised value of the pensions which are payable by the provincial governments which are now in the Indian Union. We are not responsible for the pensions payable by the provincial Governments which are now in Pakistan and it was open to the Pakistan Government to settle this matter with the British Government. We thought it necessary to come to some settlement regarding these pensions by the payment of a capitalised amount, because though this was a joint liability between the Indian and the Pakistan Governments under the Partition arrangements, the Government of India had undertaken the full responsibility for the payment and to recover the share of Pakistan from time to time. If we had not made this capitalisation arrangement, what would have resulted is that from year to year we would have had to find from our own exchange resources the wherewithal to pay this joint liability. If, on the other hand, we could succeed in coming to some settlement with the British Government, we could pay the capitalised amount from the common pool of the sterling balance before dividing that balance between the Government of India and the Government of Pakistan. For this practical reason it was agreed both by the Pakistan Government and by ourselves that we should strive to come to a settlement with the British Government on this point. £147½ million which represents the capitalised value approximately of the pensionary liability of the two Governments will be found from the joint pool of the sterling belonging to the two Governments. The balance of £20½ million which we have agreed to pay in lieu of the pensionary liability of the provinces in the Indian Union will come from our share of the sterling balance. Under the Agreement that we have made, in return for this capitalised amount the British Government will make available to us a tapering annuity extending over a period of 60 years. The amounts that the British Government are bound to place at our disposal for this purpose will be found on page 48 of the White Paper. It will be found there that in 1948-49 they are to give us £6,300,000; in 1949-50 6,223,000; and it goes on reducing like that till at last in the year 2007-08—that means, 60 years hence—the amount that they will have to pay will be only £72. This annuity will be placed at our disposal by the British Government every year. If we find that in a particular year the actual disbursements to be made exceed the annuity paid for that year, then we will find the excess. If, on the other hand, it is found that the annuity is in excess of the actual payment during a particular year we will appropriate that excess. Even though we have capitalised the pensionary liability in a sort of limited sense we have not divested ourselves of our responsibility to our pensioners. I was rather surprised, Sir, when I read in certain newspaper articles that the Delegation must have once and for all got rid of this pensionary liability in return for the payment of a capital amount. This is exactly the thing that Sir Stafford Cripps wanted, which we resisted. Until almost the last moment the Chancellor of the Exchequer pressed upon us the advisability of completely transferring our liabilities to the British Government so far as pensioners were concerned, in return for a lump sum payment. We resisted that demand and we maintained that we must keep the responsibility ourselves. And we had very good reasons for doing so. For one thing, to ask us to pay a capitalised amount and transfer the responsibility to the British Government means want of confidence in our integrity, in our desire to pay our pensioners the pension that they have earned. We were not prepared to accept that position.

Shri Mahavir Tyagi (U. P.: General): It means you acted on sentimental grounds.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: The honourable member will have a full opportunity of expressing his views. Again it must be remembered that pensions are payable to pensioners only during good conduct. I am sure every member of this House will agree with me when I say that we must retain the power of telling any of the pensioners later on that we will not pay them their pension because they have not proved by their conduct their loyalty to the country which they served. Sir, for these two very good reasons we thought that it would not be in the interests of our country to transfer the entire responsibility to the British Government.

As Minister for Finance I had one other very valid and solid reason which is not sentimental. Today we do not charge income-tax on these pensions. These pensions are paid free of income-tax, because under the Act that prevailed until recently we were precluded from levying income-tax on these pensions. Now we have amended the Act, taking power to levy income-tax if at any time we thought fit to do so. I put it to the House whether this is not a solid reason which should outweigh any sentimental reason to the contrary. I do not know what the position might be hereafter regarding taxation of these pensions in respect of income-tax. But if we decide at any time to charge income-tax against these pension payments, we have agreed with the British Government that we will give notice to the British Government and come to some arrangement with them under which unnecessary and needless inconvenience may not be caused to individual pensioners. This undertaking only means this that under that arrangement the British Government will pay us in lump the tax due to us and make any arrangements they like with the pensioners. But our legal right of levying any income-tax has been preserved under this arrangement.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Madras: General): What about the international agreement to avoid double taxation?

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: Even after avoiding double taxation we will get a substantial amount as contribution from the British Government.

Shri K. Santhanam (Madras: General): May I ask whether these annuities will be subject to British income-tax?

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: It is almost a staggering question. But in these days one should not be staggered at this. I would not be surprised if Winston Churchill later on forwards that claim. But I am hoping that a hundred Winston Churchills cannot argue that the repayment of a debt is also liable to income-tax by the debtor who repays it. I am sure that such a question will not be raised.

I have given three very good reasons why we refused, in spite of the persistence of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, to agree to the proposition that we should transfer the entire pensionary liability to the British Government. Under the arrangement that we have now made the administrative arrangements will be continued as they are at present, which means that our High Commissioner in London will be disbursing the civil pensions and the Commonwealth Relations Office of the British Government in London will be administering the payment of the military pensions. This standstill agreement is to remain in force for three years and before the conclusion of that period it will be open to us to come to some new arrangements. Whatever arrangements might be come to in the future, whoever might be responsible for future negotiations on this subject, I sincerely hope that the right that we have over the pensioners will be retained by us and not transferred.

So much for the capitalisation of the sterling pensions. I will now come to the question of the payment for the stores and installations. These stores and installations cover a vast multitude of articles running into thousands and tens of thousands. The British Government themselves have no account about these stores and installations. Some months before we went to London our officers were asked to estimate the approximate value of all these stores and installations. It will not be possible for me, nor is it necessary, to describe in detail the method that they adopted in making a valuation of all these stores and installations. Our experts and our Accounts officers estimated that the book value of these will be approximately Rs. 500 crores, or about £375 millions. On a previous occasion when there was a British mission here in this country, headed by Sir Wilfred Edie, some negotiations took place between the officials of the two Governments. At that time the British delegation wanted a round and lump sum payment of £200 millions for these stores. We were not prepared to pay so much. After a great deal of hard bargaining between ourselves and Pakistan representatives on the one hand and the British representatives on the other we finally agreed to pay £100 million as a lump sum for all these stores and installations. I consider that the payment of £100 million for installations and stores worth approximately £375 millions is certainly a very good bargain. In fact, one feature that I might mention to the House is that the British representatives were very much impressed by the very thorough manner in which our officials had prepared statistics relating to the book value of all these stores and installations. They were so much impressed with the facts, the figures and the formulae that we suggested that finally they agreed to the figure of £100 million.

Shri Ajit Prasad Jain (U. P.: General): How do you arrive at this figure?

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: As a matter of fact we made very detailed calculations as to how much percentage of the original value of the various categories of stores and installations we can pay, and the actual value that we have paid will vary from 6 per cent. of the book value to 50 per cent. of the book value. On an average it works out to about 3 P. M. 27 per cent. of the book value. I am satisfied, Sir, that it is a very fair bargain, in fact quite a good bargain, so far as ourselves and Pakistan are concerned.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva (C.P. and Berar: General): May I know whether these stores include serviceable goods imported during the war, and also aerodromes constructed during war?

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: I said that these stores and installations include everything that was the property of the British Government that was left here. But in deciding what we should give, we have taken into consideration these factors: for example, for certain types of stores and certain types of installations we have refused to pay anything because they are not of any value to us at all; therefore, that fact was kept in mind very much. Unfortunately, it is not possible, Sir, in the course of a debate on the floor of the House to give full details of how the book value was arrived at or how we arrived at what we considered to be a fair valuation that we might offer to them on the various categories of stores.

Now, this payment of £100 million again comes from the common pool of sterling between us and Pakistan. The total value of the assets physically in Pakistan would be approximately worth about Rs. 8 crores. But under the partition arrangements we are bound to supply them various categories of stores. It is not possible now to estimate very accurately how much Pakistan would be bound to pay to us on this account. But our rough estimate of what Pakistan would owe us on this account is approximately Rs. 25 crores, and this amount Pakistan will pay us in the form of sterling. So, out of the amount of £100 million, or Rs. 133 and odd crores, that we have paid to the British Government, Rs. 25 crores approximately will be recovered from the Government of Pakistan.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): How?

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: They are bound to pay us in sterling and in the agreement that I concluded with the Pakistan Government at Karachi before we left for England, we have detailed the manner and the time at which all these payments have to be made to us by Pakistan. The arrangement that was made at Karachi on these points will be found in the arrangement that was made at Karachi on these points will be found in the text of that agreement which is included in the White Paper.

That concluded the payment for pensions and the payment for stores.

What remained was an arrangement for the release of sterling for the next three years. This proved to be a very difficult matter. The British Government took the view that the release of sterling must necessarily depend on the capacity of England to export to us unrequited exports, which means exports which are not paid for by current imports. We found that at the time that we were conducting these negotiations, we had already to our credit in No. 1 Account about £80 million, and it was agreed after further prolonged negotiation that the British Government will release to us a further sum of £80 million during the next three years, making available to us altogether £160 million. This £160 million no doubt includes a working balance of £30 million but it has been clearly understood during the negotiations that the working balance is not supposed to be a deadweight stone but is intended to be used if it is wanted and that we are at liberty to use the working balance. It has also been arranged that the transfer to No. 1 Account will not be rigid but will be somewhat flexible and that it will be open to us to ask for a larger transfer than £40 million during any particular year if we found that there was really need for it.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: And it depends on their capacity also.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: I will come to that.

While the problem of the amount of sterling to be released for the next three years proved difficult enough, the problem of the multilateral convertibility of a part of this sterling proved to be even more difficult. Some portion of the sterling we should be at liberty to use in any country that we like, and for that purpose there must be multilateral convertibility attached to it. The Chancellor of the Exchequer presented to us his side of the case and showed us how the gold and dollar reserves of the sterling area was at a dangerously low minimum, how they have to depend upon the Marshall Aid for them to carry on for the next twelve months, and that under these circumstances they would not be in a position to give any portion of this sterling as multilaterally convertible. We however appreciated that it would not be reasonable to ask for a three-year settlement regarding the multilateral convertibility. In the changing economic conditions of the world it would not have been wise on our part to press for such an understanding, nor would it have been possible for the United Kingdom Government to agree to any figure for three years. We therefore agreed at the very outset that any provision for multilateral convertibility will be only for the first twelve months, multilateral convertibility for the succeeding two years to be settled by future negotiations. It was officially agreed that out of the sterling released £15 million or approximately sixty million dollars would be available to us in hard currencies if we chose during the twelve months.

In addition to this straightforward release of £15 million, it has also been agreed that in our trade with Japan we would be entitled to convert £3½ million of our exportable surplus into dollars or any other hard currency. The provision for multilateral convertibility should therefore be assumed to be £18½ million.

In addition to these two arrangements we have also made certain other arrangements under which the scope of multilateral convertibility for us is very much wider than what may be represented by the figure of £18½ million. The British Government have agreed to make available to us within the sterling area, or in return for sterling payment, certain essential goods like cotton, non-ferrous metals, petrol, oil and lubricants.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: You have stated that they have not agreed.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: You don't believe what I say but believe.....

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: The document is here.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: I supplement that document and I make the statement on the floor of the House and I take the fullest responsibility for it. We have made an arrangement, I repeat, under which the British Government will help us to meet our requirements of these commodities either in the sterling area or in return for sterling payment. Until now we have been paying for our petrol and oil supplies in the form of sterling and recently we have been asked by the oil companies to pay for a certain portion of these supplies in dollars and this was specifically brought to the notice of the Chancellor of the Exchequer and he has definitely undertaken that we will not be called upon to make payments in dollars for the supplies of oils and petrol made to us.

It has also been arranged that with a view to enable us to get the best out of all these Agreements we will set up a machinery which will be in constant consultation with a corresponding machinery to be set up by the British Government, so that in the matter of making available to us capital goods during the next three years we might not meet with any insurmountable difficulties.

My honourable friend Mr. Ranga very rightly drew the attention of the House to the fact whether any assurance has been obtained regarding the supply of goods in return for sterling. Well, it is not possible to secure a very definite and unequivocal understanding on such a point. After all, the release of this sterling has no meaning unless it is translated in terms of goods. Whether the sterling that has been released to us will be thus utilised depends not merely on the capacity of the British manufacturer to supply to us capital goods but our readiness and our capacity to absorb these goods. It has been pointed out that in the previous twelve months, out of £83 million that have been released we were able to use only £3 million. Now, what does that indicate? It indicates that we have not utilised to the fullest possible extent or anywhere near even a reasonable extent the amount of sterling that has been made available.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: But whose fault was it?

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: "Whose fault is it?" is a question to be asked, and the echo says "Whose fault is it?"

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Government's.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: No doubt, it is difficult to obtain capital goods, but let us be frank with ourselves. Let us not hide our own defects and our own shortcomings. In my discussions with certain business interests in London it was pointed out to me that there are a number of cases in which inquiries were made for the supply of capital goods and machinery by Indian businessmen, that the British manufacturers were ready to supply, and yet the orders did not materialise. And whose fault is it? It is our fault. It is a fault not merely of our private individual industrialists, but partly of the Government as well. There is no use of shirking this fact.

But in condemning the Government, I would ask the House to remember certain extenuating circumstances. We were beginning during these twelve months this experiment of having a limited quantity of sterling released to us. We were told that unless we utilised our foreign exchange resources very carefully we would be landed in serious difficulty regarding foreign exchange. The logical corollary of this position is that we have to put more stringent limits on our imports. Our import licences were strengthened. They were made very rigid and even where import licences were granted during this period, naturally it takes time for orders to materialise. During this period of twelve months, orders for machinery, for instance, capital goods or consumer goods even to the extent of £10 million may have been placed but all those goods might not have been delivered during that period of twelve months. But in any case the fact remains that the Government did not have a clear cut plan of industrial development to utilise all these releases of sterling. (Prof. N. G. Ranga: "Hear, hear"). We are very much alive to this shortcoming and we are hoping that we would learn a lesson from this. Private enterprise has been very shy.

Seth Govind Das (C.P. and Berar: General): It is shy even now.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: Companies that were floated have not attracted sufficient share capital.

Seth Govind Das: None at all.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: In fact, certain companies which were floated with the participation of the Central Government and certain provincial Governments have not met with better success. Under these circumstances, it is for this House and for the Government to make their mind once and for all whether they would create those circumstances which will foster private enterprise or whether Government, notwithstanding what private enterprise may or may not do, will go ahead with their own programme of capital development in India.

Seth Govind Das: That is what Government ought to do without caring for private industrialists.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: Have you not done so by passing the Industrial Resolution the other day?

Prof. N. G. Ranga: A Resolution passed four months ago!

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: If my honourable friend reads that Industrial Resolution by which I stand, he will find that we have thrown up a very large sector of industry for private enterprise. There is no getting away from that fact, but the fact remains that in spite of our throwing that large sector of industry to private enterprise, private capital has not been forthcoming.

Seth Govind Das: It is the blame of the industrialists. We must not care for it.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: You may not care for it but here is the phenomenon, for which you have to find a remedy and I am hoping that in our examination of the present economic crisis we will devise some effective means to put an end to this state of affairs.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: May I ask one bit of information, whether my honourable friend had been consulted or had agreed to the speech made by the Commerce Minister the other day at the Exporters' Conference and whether he agreed with the Resolutions passed by that Conference where it was stated that export should be encouraged and import should be discouraged?

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy (Minister of Commerce): Import should be discouraged—I never said anything of the kind. We were concerned in the Export Advisory Committee with only the export trade of the country. I said nothing about imports on that occasion.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: I am prepared to give a carte blanche to my colleague Mr. Neogy and abide by whatever policy he follows. I have read that statement of his about export policy and I certainly agree with what he has said. He has stated that we must increase our exports to the extent we increase our exports we extend our capacity for purchasing capital goods from abroad and it is up to us to create those conditions under which we would actually purchase those goods from abroad.

Seth Govind Das: I would like to ask the Honourable the Finance Minister one question. The private industry is not forthcoming and we have seen it for so many months. Under those circumstances, are we still going to care for them, or without caring for them we shall go on with our industrial planning and our development?

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: Exactly. I do not think, Sir, that this is the appropriate occasion to have a debate on that particular point, but that will be one of the most vital points that we will have to consider when we discuss the whole question of the economic condition of the country at present. (Interruption).

I was talking, Sir, about the multilateral convertibility and I mentioned the amount of £15 million straightforward release and £3½ million available in our surplus with Japan, the benefit that we get in payments for sterling for certain commodities and I must also mention the fact that we have now got the benefit of paying in sterling for our purchases from certain other countries in Europe and America. For example, we can pay in sterling hereafter to Switzerland; we can pay in sterling to Czechoslovakia; in fact, except Belgium and Portugal, practically the whole of the European continent becomes for us a soft currency area. Some countries of the Western hemisphere also have come soft currency areas, which only goes to show that the area in which we can purchase has been widened and if we do not make use of it to the fullest extent we have nobody to blame but ourselves.

Seth Govind Das: That depends upon our own Government.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: Before I gave my assent to the final authority regarding the release of the further £80 million I had serious doubts in my mind whether this would be sufficient to meet our needs for the next three years.

Finally I agreed because I came to the conclusion that this was the best that we could do under the circumstances. In fact whether we would be in a position to use the whole of this 160 million pounds or whether we would find a need for more will ultimately depend upon our capacity to absorb capital goods. In fact with a view to a better realization or to more effective utilization of our foreign exchange resources, we have also recently relaxed our import very considerably. I have always taken the view that we should not fritter away our foreign exchange resources on merely consumer goods, but faced with the problem of inflation and the scarcity of consumer goods, I think, Sir, it is on the whole to our advantage to allow some consumer goods to come into this country, so that we might not merely utilise the balances released, but that we might decrease the inflationary pressure on our economy.

This in substance is the agreement that we have concluded. I have been asked whether I have taken any undertaking from the British Government that the question of scaling down will not be re-opened. I stated at the Press Conference that the ghost of sterling balances has now been laid. The very next day some interesting statement was made in the House of Commons. The redoubtable Winston Churchill made a statement.

Dr. B. Pattabhi Sitaramayya (Madras: General): Sir Stafford Cripps was the cause for it. The culprit is Cripps.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: The answer given by Sir Stafford Cripps is for a question put by Mr. Winston Churchill, which is in this form.

"I suppose the Right Honourable and Learned Gentleman would I suppose agree that at the close of war we would still owe India approximately 1,200 million sterling as a result of our defending her from invasion and conquest by Japan. It had always been kept open as I think he will agree that we should have the right to put in a counter-claim for the immense services which we rendered in saving those 400 million people from being ravaged, pillaged and slaughtered as they would otherwise to a large extent have been."

And the answer of Sir Stafford Cripps was:

"I have already said that any arrangement that we have made does not in any way prejudice the eventual settlement. Everything is open on both sides."

Sir, I want the House to judge whether my statement in the Press Conference is warranted or not and I am prepared to produce documentary evidence in support of what I said.

[Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty.]

The answer of Sir Stafford Cripps is it a question relating to Defence expenditure. The British Government under the leadership of the redoubtable Mr. Winston Churchill was supposed to have saved us from great disaster and therefore he says he had always kept that question open. The allocation of Defence expenditure between the British Government and the Government of India was decided by a financial settlement made some years back and in the midst of the war, the British Government made a formal proposal to the then Government of India that there should be a revision of that arrangement, and Sir Jeremy Raisman said on the floor of the Legislative Assembly in those days that the Government of India has completely turned down any such proposal and that the financial arrangement then made holds good. That is one point that I want you to remember and therefore the statement of Mr. Winston Churchill that it has always been kept open is not correct. Mr. Churchill tried to open it and twice the door was banged against him, and yet he does not seem to realize it. But I have got more substantial facts than that. The answer relates, as I said, to the question of any future claim that the British Government might make with regard to our bearing an additional burden in Defence. I would refer honourable members to a letter on page 62 of the white paper, a letter written by Sir Henry Wilson Smith to Mr. A. K. Chanda. Now this letter contains the terms of the final settlement of the amount between the British Government and ourselves. Far from giving up any of the balance that we hold while we had 1.152 million pounds there standing, we in London presented another bill for 55 million pounds as Defence expenditure owed to us by the British Government. It was certified by our Auditor General and under the terms of the financial settlement the British Government was to pay us 55 million pounds. I ask the honourable House to remember this if in a debt settlement there is any question of the creditor being called upon to give up a part of the debt would the debtor during such a settlement pay some more money to the creditor? Yet they paid them on that occasion 55 million pounds and not merely that. In paying that 55 million pounds this is what has been put on record.

"The demand mentioned above will be in full and final settlement between the Government of the United Kingdom on the one hand and the Government of India and Pakistan on the other of all matters arising out of the operation of the defence expenditure except in respect of the adjustment of the terminal benefits."

This is a small detail under which they still owe us a little more money.

I would ask the House to read this paragraph and tell me whether they agree with my conclusion that this paragraph if it has got any meaning at all has got only this meaning that so far as the expenditure relating to the Defence of India is concerned, the matter has been completely settled and the payment of that 55 million pounds is the last and final settlement on this side.

An Honourable Member: Did you have the confirmation asked for?

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: This is a letter written by Sir Henry Wilson Smith which has been confirmed by Mr. Chanda in the following letter.

An Honourable Member: May I ask if the Honourable the Finance Minister asked Sir Stafford Cripps to give an explanation on that?

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: Why should I ask him to explain when my case is so strong.

Dr. B. Pattabhi Sitaramayya: Let us be conscious of our strength.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: I wish we were more conscious of our strength.

Dr. B. Pattabhi Sitaramayya: It is better to be conscious of our enemies' strength.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: If in a future occasion this question is re-opened, it will then be for the Indian negotiator to throw this at the face of Cripps or Winston Churchill or whoever it may be. We are all familiar with the language used by Mr. Winston Churchill, especially with reference to India. He talks about his having saved us from pillage and slaughter by the Japanese. Well, if Mr. Churchill put such a query, I have an answer for him and I would tell him but for the help that India rendered in the prosecution of this war, not only would England be a dependency of Germany but that Mr. Winston Churchill would be kept a captive in Berlin today. I think Hitler would have had enough sense of humour not to hang Mr. Winston Churchill. Why should you be worried about that? Let us be conscious of our strength and I have no doubt in my mind—not an iota of doubt—that so far as the settlement of the War burden is concerned, the last word has been said and in fact some small amount is still due by the British Government under the terminal charges referred to in that paragraph.

Sir, I am afraid I have taken a fairly long time and I expect that the honourable members will have their own points of view. With these words, Sir, I commend my two motions to the House.

Shri Ajit Prasad Jain: May I ask a question, Sir?

Mr. Speaker: After I put the motions formally to the House.

Motions moved:

"That a supplementary sum not exceeding Rs. 2,16,27,18,000 be granted to the Governor General to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending 31st March, 1949, in respect of 'Capital Outlay on Sterling Pensions'."

"That a supplementary sum not exceeding Rs. 65,33,33,000 be granted to the Governor General to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending 31st March, 1949, in respect of 'Defence Capital Outlay'."

The subject is very important. I should like to settle the procedure in which we shall take up the amendments to these motions and the discussion. I think there should be a general discussion on both, including the amendments. Will that suit the convenience of the House?

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: If I may suggest, the amendments raise some of these main points that I have raised. In a general discussion those points are bound to be covered. If at the end of the discussion any honourable member wants to press his amendment to vote, it may be done. That may be a more convenient procedure.

Mr. Speaker: In any case, the amendments will have to be formally moved. My idea is, the amendments may be formally moved. If at the end of the debate, they think that they need not be put to the vote of the House and they would like to withdraw, they may be withdrawn. It all comes to the same thing as the Finance Minister has suggested. I would suggest that the honourable members may just move their amendments, reserving their speeches.

Shri B. Das (Orissa: General): I feel that after a general discussion if the honourable members who have tabled the amendments want to move them, they may move.

Mr. Speaker: That would be giving practically a double chance to speak. Instead of that, if the point are minor, they will not press the amendments to the vote. The amendments may be moved and the speeches may be deferred.

[Mr. Speaker]

Along with the main proposition, the amendments should also be discussed. The discussion will be common. I do not think we can have any closure for such a motion as that.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: Sir, I would like to know, after the amendment is moved, what will be the procedure. The Finance Minister has already taken one hour and there is only one hour left. This is a very important matter. To give one hour for discussion of this is not sufficient. I want to know whether we would be given the privilege of discussing this matter at a later stage also.

Mr. Speaker: Personally, I think, looking to the importance of the matter and the interest which all of us have in this matter, there should be a full and free discussion without any restriction. I am entirely in the hands of the House in this respect.

Some Honourable Members: We want more time.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: We are bound to make this payment on the 14th. If this can be disposed of before tomorrow evening I have no objection.

Mr. Speaker: That means, we go beyond five o'clock today. We adjourn and then take up the matter tomorrow. Let us fix up some time for closure by agreement. The subject is so vast that we can go on discussing it for days together.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: We may finish by five O'clock tomorrow.

Shri K. Santhanam: Tomorrow afternoon may be reserved for this debate. We have got a heavy agenda.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: This is the largest asset outside India that we possess. Therefore, the other small Bills can stand over.

Mr. Speaker: I think the best course would be this. When we are discussing 216 crores and 65 crores, the House is entitled to have its own views expressed. We do not mind one day's extension of the sittings. We will carry on till five O'clock. At 5 P.M. tomorrow the discussions will come to an end. The guillotine will be applied at 4-30 P.M. and the Finance Minister will be given half an hour to reply. I will make one request to the members. The subject is capable of being discussed by individual members from various points of view. They will remember that as they are anxious to put forward their views, others are also equally anxious. They will impose a self-denying ordinance and speak only as much as is necessary and not repeat arguments or try to reply to individual remarks or arguments either of the Finance Minister or any other member.

Shri K. Santhanam: Is there a time limit for these speeches?

Mr. Speaker: It is left to the Chair. I do not propose to put a time limit. A time limit is imposed in a general discussion when cut motions are being moved, just for facilitating voting.

Shri K. Santhanam: In a general discussion, there is a time limit usually.

Mr. Speaker: I do not propose to put any. Even in a general discussion, the Chair can extend the time limit, except in the case of an adjournment motion. Therefore, I would suggest that there should be a self-denying ordinance and each member will not take more than about 20 or 30 minutes so that time may be left for other members.

Shri Ajit Prasad Jain: Sir, I wanted to put a question.

Mr. Speaker: Let the amendments be moved first. At any rate, what is the question?

Shri Ajit Prasad Jain: The question is this: At this rate, how long will it take for the Government to repatriate all the sterling balances?

Mr. Speaker: That is a question of calculation. He can raise it during the course of the debate. In his reply, the Finance Minister will answer, if he has an answer and if he thinks it fit to answer.

Mr. Z. H. Lari (U.P.: Muslim): Sir, I believe I will be given an opportunity to make my submissions afterwards.

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Failure of Government to Secure Protection against Scaling down of Sterling Balances.

Mr. Z. H. Lari: Sir, I move:

"That the demand for a supplementary grant of a sum not exceeding Rs. 2,16,27,18,000 in respect of 'Capital Outlay on Sterling Pensions' be reduced by Rs. 100."

Mr. Speaker: Cut motion moved:

"That the demand for a supplementary grant of a sum not exceeding Rs. 2,16,27,18,000 in respect of 'Capital Outlay on Sterling Pensions' be reduced by Rs. 100."

Propriety of Payment and Defence Stores Policy of Government.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena (U.P.: General): Sir, I move:

"That the demand for a supplementary grant of a sum not exceeding Rs. 65,33,33,000 in respect of 'Defence Capital Outlay' be reduced by Rs. 100."

Mr. Speaker: Cut motion moved:

"That the demand for a supplementary grant of a sum not exceeding Rs. 65,33,33,000 in respect of 'Defence Capital Outlay' be reduced by Rs. 100."

Mr. Z. H. Lari: Sir, the House is aware that in the beginning of 1947 there was no sort of restriction on the powers of the Government of India to utilise the sterling balances. It was as a result of financial agreement between America and the Government of England that the necessity arose for restricting this use of sterling. One of the conditions of that financial agreement between the United States of America and the Government of England was that the balances should be scaled down to a extent. The terms, in so far as they are relevant for the purposes of discussion in this House are mentioned at page 2 of this white paper relating to sterling balances. It reads thus:

"That agreement also provided that the United Kingdom Government would negotiate with the holders of accumulating balances with the object of arriving at arrangements whereby a portion of these balances would be immediately released, a portion released in instalments over a period of years beginning from 1951."

—(and what is important is this)—

"and a further portion adjusted as a contribution to the settlement of war and post-war indebtedness and recognition of the benefits which the countries concerned might be expected to gain from such a settlement."

The Honourable the Finance Minister when giving the press statement himself realised and said that in pursuance of that Agreement there has been a clamour in England for scaling down even the sterling balances of India, and I will quote his words at page 68 of this book:

"It is necessary to restate this obvious proposition for removing the misunderstanding that still seems to persist in certain quarters which have periodically agitated over the scaling down of the sterling balances on the ground of their being a war debt."

That was the position when these negotiations were taking place. In the same statement he said that as Sir Stafford Cripps did not raise the question of scaling down therefore it must be presumed that the ghost of these sterling balances being scaled down had been finally laid. Now going back to the Agreement that was first entered into—because that is the principal Agreement that was entered into last year—what was the nature of that Agreement? It was a temporary arrangement for release of sterling. At page 11 of this book you find this:

"Being desirous of making a temporary arrangement for dealing with the sterling balances of India."

Therefore the main and principal Agreement which was entered into between the Government of India and the British Government on 14th August 1947 was not a final settlement of sterling balances but only a temporary arrangement for dealing with the sterling balances of India. To make the matter sure Sir Stafford Cripps wrote a letter which is to be found at page 19 where he says:

"It is understood on the part of His Majesty's Government that the Agreement is of an interim nature to cover the period up to the end of the present calendar year, and that it is without prejudice to any subsequent discussion regarding India's sterling balances."

Therefore that principal Agreement was subject to this letter dated the 14th August 1947. When the matter came up for consideration again in February what is the Agreement that is arrived at? You will find it on page 27.

[At this stage Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair which was then occupied by Shri K. Santhanam (one of the Panel of Chairmen).]

Really the effect of the subsequent Agreement was simply to extend the period of that principal Agreement and nothing more. It was not a fresh Agreement but a mere extension of that principal Agreement which was arrived at on 14th August. The words are these:

"As a result of consultations provided for in Article XI of the Agreement between the Government of the United Kingdom and the Government of India, the following arrangements have been agreed upon between our two Governments for the extension of the principal Agreement."

The result is that this extension is again really subject to the letter written by Sir Stafford Cripps and agreed to by the representatives of the Government of India.

Now we come to the last Agreement which is at present under discussion. If you look at the phraseology of that Agreement which is on page 40, it says this:

"The following arrangements have been agreed upon between our two Governments for the extension of the principal Agreement."

So the result is that what holds ground is the Agreement which was arrived at between the two Governments in August 1947 and that Agreement is to be read in the light of the letter written by Sir Stafford Cripps on behalf of the British Government on August 14. Now what is the effect? What the total amount of sterling will be which the British Government is going to release in favour of India has not yet been determined except to the extent that the debt is there, the amount due is there. As the Finance Minister said, it is not really a debt, it is really a fund with the Bank of England.

Apart from that, what has happened in the meantime to show that that agitation which was continuing in England, that obligation which England took upon itself under the financial arrangement between the United States of America and herself to scale down the balances have come to an end? That is the question. I will read some questions by Mr. Churchill in the House of Commons and the replies:

"Question (by Mr. Churchill): Have we, in what has now been concluded, kept open until 1951 the full freedom of reviewing this question—the main question—of what is called the sterling balances which is an euphemism for British debts? Is that position open and can it be raised and examined de novo in the year 1951?"

Answer (by Sir Stafford Cripps): I have already said that any arrangement we have been able to make does not in any way prejudice the eventual settlement.

Question: Even the fundamental issue of paying off the services rendered to India against the aid which was given in the war?

Answer: Any claim which the British Government wishes to put forward is open."

Therefore, so far as the reply of Sir Stafford Cripps is concerned, it is very clear and definite. We may condemn Mr. Churchill but we are concerned with the statement of Sir Stafford Cripps; we are concerned with the policy of the British Government. Has the Finance Minister thereafter taken any steps to see that the interpretation that he has put is really the correct interpretation? Moreover what stood in the way of our Delegation not getting a clause inserted that this question of release is not subject to any obligation on the part of the British Government to scale it down? Why could they not make it beyond controversy?

We had bargaining points in the nature of three things: firstly, the payment for assets; secondly the payment of pensions; thirdly, and this still exists, the assets of British Citizens in India. So far as the first two are concerned, we have already come to a final conclusion. The position now is that that matter of eventual payment has not been settled and meanwhile we have lost our bargaining power to a great extent. That is the reason why, I submit, that so far as this Agreement is concerned, there has been a failure on the part of the Delegation to have a clear assurance that in future there will be no question of scaling down these sterling.

Coming to the other point: Every one is aware that economic conditions in Europe, if not in chaos, are at least uncertain. Nobody can foresee what course the economic position is going to take. But any reasonable man, any prudent man, can contemplate the possibility of depreciation of currencies in Western and Central Europe. If that happens, is not it possible, Sir, that England may devalue sterling in order to set off the transaction between herself and the other Governments? Now the British Government has come forward to get time. She pleaded that we should not utilise our sterling for the time being and that we should wait for years and years but had our delegation prudence enough and foresight enough to say: Well, we are prepared to wait but what guarantee is there that this entire sterling holding may not be devaluated in terms of gold?

My friend has mentioned that during the first twelve months India utilised only £3 millions. How is it? And why? The Honourable the Finance Minister said that private enterprise is shy and in spite of definite enquiries and readiness of producers in England they did not place orders. Now what is the extent of that? The question now is: Was it not the duty of the Government in the face of the failure of private enterprise to formulate a policy of nationalization and proceed on with her own plan of industrialization and economic reconstruction? Because if we do not utilise the sterling and if we [Mr. Z. H. Lari] cannot get capital goods, then as the Honourable the Finance Minister admitted, release of sterling is meaningless. Now unless there be a willingness on the part of the British Government to provide capital goods, this release even to the extent of £ 80 millions, which would come to us during the next two years, becomes useless. I do not find any definite undertaking on the part of the British Government to supply the needed capital goods. The Honourable the Finance Minister said it is very difficult to get a definite undertaking on such a point. But could not the delegation demand that we are meeting your wishes to a great extent. We are not going to utilise sterling for years and years: but that small sterling which you are going to release has got no significance to our country unless it is translated into capital goods. I have gone through this book and I do not find there was any definite mention of this problem, nor was there any definite promise by the British Government to supply capital goods.

Now we come to the actual arrangements themselves. The first is payment for assets in India. It is very difficult to say whether the payment is excessive or not. We do not know the method of calculation. But there is one thing of principle. Did not the British leave such assets like aerodrome and installations in so many other countries? Did they get any compensation for them? Did Egypt pay? Did Eritrea pay? Did Palestine pay? Did other countries pay? Was it necessary for the Government at this stage, without settling its own problems, namely that of the full payment and whether there should be no scaling down, or not to pay the amount? In the first place the principle of payment is itself open to doubt. But supposing that the Government could and should pay. My submission would be that such assets, which in the nature of things could not possibly be removed and which in the eyes of the British could have no monetary value, at least they should not have been paid for. But as the Honourable the Finance Minister has said in this debate it is not possible to give details, we are in the dark and we cannot say if proper payments have been made.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Why should they have to pay you if you are going to pay for their assets here? They can also repeat your claims! You cannot confiscate their claims.

Mr. Z. H. Lari: I am not pleading for confiscation. If we confiscate the assets of British citizens in India then the British Government can say that you have confiscated and we are going to pay in the same coin. But here they had assets and they used India for the sake of protecting England and not merely to protect India! It was in the interest of England to make India into a battleground not in the sense of an actual battle but in the sense of a forward base. Therefore, you are not morally bound to account for such expenditure which were made and incurred by the British Government in order to protect her own liberty and her own independence. As such this principle is itself open to doubt. Assuming again, that we had to pay for it. This should have been used as a bargaining counter with them. We should have settled this only when they had agreed to release by such and such a time the entire sterling. But without having any agreement on that point, we conceded their demand.

Take the question of pensions. No doubt, I concede that in view of the obligation that had been undertaken by the Government payment had to be made. The only question that arises is that you have capitalised. You have ensured full and complete payment of pensions to the pensioners in England. Now there is no possibility of going back over it whatever the British Government may say and do and your attitude in future will be immaterial. No doubt the position is this: that they are now in a stronger position so far as payment of pensions is concerned. Merely saying that they are responsible to us and we can withhold pensions if they do not behave properly is futile. That is the stand taken by the Honourable the Finance Minister. My objection is not that you keep the responsibility for payment of pensions to yourselves, because when we have to pay the pensions, the responsibility is ours. But you have made a final payment of all the pensions that will accrue for payment during the next 60 years and by conceding to them these demands, you have thereby given up your bargaining power and what is now left with us is simply the assets of British citizens in India, which possibly cannot be ex-appropriated, and which will be open to the objection lodged by my friend, Prof. Ranga when he said: How can you do that? Therefore this agreement has failed on two grounds: firstly, it has failed to protect the country against possible scaling down of sterling: secondly, by coming to a final agreement with regard to payment for pensions and assets, it has lost the bargaining power that it had.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: Sir, I have very carefully heard the oration of our Finance Minister. I wish I could be restrained but am constrained to say that our Delegation has bartered away our future. In fact they have proceeded in a manner which seemed to give the impression that they were beggars who had gone there to beg.

The Honourable the Finance Minister said at the very outset that this money was not a war debt or payment of war expenditure: it was the cost of goods supplied. Even though thirty-five lakhs of our men died of famine in Bengal, yet we fed the American troops and everybody else. This is the money which represents the total amount of all our export surplus and the payment received for other conveniences which we gave to the British and Americans here. If the British had not been so unscrupulous and had not taken advantage most unfairly of the Reserve Bank of India Act, the whole money would have been here in our coffers. The full gold equivalent of our present sterling balances would have been here in our treasury in Delhi. But by virtue of the political domination that they had over us they took the gold there. Our delegation should have gone there and said that this gold should come back to Delhi. But we go there and say "Give us so much which is convertible and so much which is inconvertible". I think we proceeded in an entirely wrong manner. If we say that this is our money there is no question of scaling down. The British have even now got enough assets here which we can confiscate. There are at least 1,200 crore rupees worth of their shares in India and they dare not say that they will not pay, when we have got the power to expropriate their assets. So the argument that they can scale down our sterling debts has no meaning. I am afraid we are ourselves scaling down our balances. Out of our total sterling balances they have deducted 500 crore rupees as their debts. How in 1931 Mahatma Gandhi got a sub-committee the congress to investigate the debts. It was found that instead of India indebted to Britain, really Britain owed 2,000 crores to India. We have presented that account to the British Government and so we have scaled down our debts. Nobody else can dare to scale them down, take course within the next three years the British sell away their share at we away their money. I therefore think that it is one of the great errors that we have committed in not providing in the Agreement that all the money against British earn here shall not go to England, but that it will be used to reduce our sterling balance account number 2. That is an omission which has gone there as beggars. The Finance Minister and the Delegation have said that this is our money and we want it back urgently. We have said that money shall bear the nominal interest which the other side gives. If we had our money we could have invested it in our own industry. The last 150 years. As somebody has said our Finance Minister

British case than the Indian case. He felt more for the difficulties of the British people than for our own needs. Is India so rich that it can be starved at the altar of the Dollar needs of England? I think these things should never have come into consideration.

Shri B. Das: I should like to know the name of the party who said that?

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: If you read this paper you will find it. The Finance Minister has himself said that the British had only 500 crores in the Dollar pool and therefore they could not give us more than £15 million for convertibility. I think it was the Finance Minister himself who said it. We should have cared for our own interest. Before we became free there was the Bombay and the Birla Plan. All these plans had counted upon these sterling balances. The Birla Plan and the People's Plan had both estimated a total amount of sterling balances worth 1,000 crores, which they thought could be utilised for purchasing capital goods. But nothing has been in this direction and all the plans will probably have to wait for a number of years. This proposal for the funding of the pensions and the payment for the stores out of our sterling balances should be rejected. You say we are paying about 200 crores for pensions. What I want to know is whether the payment of British pensions was the first charge on this our hard-earned money. If we had 200 crores of rupees what would be the interest upon it? It would probably be much more than the amount due for payment of pensions annually. We should have maintained our accounts with England and said that we shall pay the pensioners annually according to their behaviour. Then we could have 200 crores for our own investments. If we want today 200 crores as debt from England, will she give us the debt for financing our development plans? We have really given away this 200 crores because we thought that probably we will not get our full money which is tied up in sterling balances. Similarly with regard to the stores we have been very generous. We are paying 27 per cent. of the book value. I do not think that the Americans sold their surplus stores here and got even half that amount. I think that the problem has been so badly handled and the agreement arrived at has been so much in the interest of England and against us that I think our whole future has been bartered away so far as these sterling balances are concerned.

The Finance Minister said that out of 83 million sterling at our credit in account No. 1, we drew only 3 millions. We have been crying hoarse since the beginning of this Parliament that we must have a plan and try to fulfil that plan. You have not done it and now you come and tell us that we have not utilised this money. Who is responsible? I say the Government is responsible. Unless you make a plan and go ahead with it all the money will be lying waste. If you leave it to the capitalists they will always try to bargain. They will not get more and more concessions and better terms. The sterling balances are our money. If we do not get our money we shall confiscate all the assets of the British we have got here. I have seen from the very beginning we are making more and more concessions to the British. If we had the money we can do it into any currency. Only twenty crores we can now convert into rupees. If I do not know how our Delegation agreed to this. It was a betrayal of the country and I think we cannot accept this agreement.

Suppose the motion, and support the cut I have moved.

Renuka Ray (West Bengal: General): Mr. Chairman, Sir, before I offer my remarks that I want to, I should first like to say that I do not think the realization of the very practical difficulties—genuine and real difficulties—must have faced the Sterling Balances Delegation to the United Kingdom. Unlike my honourable friend Professor Shibban Lal Saksena, I believe often it is the creditor nation that stands at a disadvantage when the debtor nation is such a strong and powerful nation as the U.K. At the same time, Sir, I should say that although there are certain points on which the Sterling Balances Committee have been fairly successful, there are other issues which I feel could have been tackled more successfully.

In the first place the amount of multilaterally convertible currency that they have been able to obtain is totally inadequate. I wish that the Honourable the Finance Minister had had the grace to acknowledge this instead of making an excuse. I think it would have been better for him to have said straight out "we have failed to do it in spite of our best efforts" than to make all other excuses, because it is indeed an excuse to say "we went to negotiate about sterling balances, but because of the other considerations such as that we may not be able to spend the multilaterally convertible currency we think that we have obtained enough". That sort of complacency, that kind of attitude, I think, is not warrantable on the part of a national government.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Have you not borrowed from the Monetary Bank?

Shrimati Renuka Ray: First of all I should like to point out that it is an admitted fact that U. K. cannot supply the machinery and the equipment that we need for our national development schemes, nor can they be supplied by those other sterling areas or areas which have now become sterling areas. We have to go to U.S.A. and to dollar countries for our requirements. To say that we cannot spend the money made available to us is therefore merely an excuse. It is the Government that controls and husbands our resources and it is up to the Government to see that we do utilize our dollar reserves to the best of our ability. The fact that we need machinery and equipment on a wide spread scale cannot be gainsaid. Whether through private enterprise or through national industries in whatever way possible, production and more production, today, is our watchword. If that is so, how can we at the same time say that we cannot utilize our dollar reserves? Therefore I would humbly submit to the Honourable the Finance Minister that I can well understand if he said that it was not possible for us under all the different circumstances to have obtained any more dollars, any more multilaterally convertible currency. But to put forward such an indefensible excuse is not the right thing to do.

There is another point which I would like to make. I think that we should have utilized some of the sterling balances against the Productive British assets in the country. I should like to make my position very clear. I do not mean that every British asset in the country should immediately be taken over by us. But such assets as coal mines, plantations and others which even according to the acknowledged policy of this Government should be nationalised—and the reason put forward for not nationalising all these at once is our meagre resources today—at least could have been taken. Such assets of the British Government at least could have been set aside against our sterling balances. I would like the Honourable the Finance Minister to enlighten us whether he at all explored this possibility because from the White Paper we find that it has not been done. I do feel that this was a method that could have yielded good results and it would have brought about the nationalisation of coal mines and other assets of that type which ought to be nationalised. The reason that we have not the resources to nationalise would not then come in the way.

I do think that the Honourable the Finance Minister and the Sterling Balances Committee showed a great deal of foresight in coming to an agreement with Pakistan whereby both Pakistan and India were in a better position to negotiate in London.

[Shrimati Renuka Ray]

I think that the tapering annuity scheme which has been criticized by the honourable Mr. Lari is a good scheme on the whole. I would like the Honourable the Finance Minister to realize once again that it is not in the spirit of carping criticism that I have spoken. It is painful for us to do so; we do not wish to criticize our national government. We are forced to do so because we feel that these are things of momentous importance, on which the country will be let down if they are not done the right way. It is for this reason that I have placed these points before him. I do hope that the Finance Minister will heed them in the future if he has not done so in the past.

Prof. K. T. Shah (Bihar: General): Mr. Chairman, Sir, I approach this question with great hesitation, not only because of the complexity and numerousness of the issues involved, but also because of the general atmosphere under which this point has to be discussed and disposed of by us. I hope the Honourable the Finance Minister himself realizes, and I trust the House realizes it still more, that an amount like Rs. 300 crores is to be disposed of in perhaps three or four hours discussion, and that, too, by the gracious indulgence of the Chair. Lest I may be misunderstood on this point, I would like it to be explicit that here is a question which has been waiting for all these six or seven or ten years; and I for one am unable to see the propriety, the necessity, the justice of bringing it up and of asking the House to deal with it, so to say, in a supplementary demand motion on which, under the Rules of the House, only certain courses can be adopted, and the scrutiny on which cannot possibly be very thorough. That however is a misfortune which I trust will attract the attention of the House, not only in connection with this particular matter, but also in connection with the entire procedure under which large issues of this character are to be disposed of by this House, which has now got the fullest powers, a very much larger number of members more anxious to take part in these discussions, and therefore to do justice not only to themselves but also to the issues and the interests of the country involved.

Leaving that matter aside I should like also to offer some general remarks before I proceed in particulars. The entire agreement or arrangement, viewed as one single, concrete, composite whole, needs searching scrutiny. As I see this Agreement, it reveals an approach which, I feel, is not quite in the interests of this country. I was told on a very good authority that the Delegation went there more as negotiators than as advocates. I am afraid that it was a viewpoint which I could not wholeheartedly endorse; I hold that the negotiator too, if he proceeds to negotiate on behalf of somebody, has some duty towards the principal on whose behalf he negotiates. But I see no justification for the negotiator to assume, as it were, the rôle, either of the arbitrator, or of the advocate of the other side. I hope the Members of the Delegation will forgive me if I say that throughout, the spirit of the correspondence and the Agreement reveals a desire much more to see the difficulties of Britain than the interests of India. The difficulties of Britain:—that they have no exportable surplus, that their ability is limited, that we have not utilized the amount released to us and therefore they would not release more, that they had their own complications and the Marshall Aid difficulties, this, that and the other—are far more prominently put forward than the needs and requirements, the demands and necessities of this country and its progressive economy.

I feel, Sir, that that was a fundamentally wrong approach with which to start this business. That is why I am not content merely by saying that we must cut this demand by Rs. 100 or Rs. 1,000 or Rs. 1 lakh. I personally would suggest that we must reject the demand in toto so that it might come before us once again in a more chastened, more reasonable, and, may I say, more patriotic frame of mind. Sir, the approach being fundamentally vicious, naturally everything that is stated in this agreement, in the document presented to us, wears an air as though we were on the defensive, as though we were trying to get advantage. Having surrendered our precious goods and services over the seven years when the war was going on and England's very existence was at stake, we are now told, after the war is over, that this was incurred—I am not saying that it was told by our Delegation, please don't misunderstand me—but we are told that it was incurred to save India from invasion, to save her from slaughter, to save her from anarchy. But, Sir, it is a patent fact that the war was not of our seeking, it was not of our making, and if I may remind the House, it was not for our benefit. It was one in which the people of India never agreed to participate or to encourage. That being so, I do not see any reason why we should be told that this is part and parcel of a general defence against invasion or the violation of our liberties, for which we must be very considerate.

I am perfectly aware that the Honourable the Finance Minister has told us more than once, and it is patent in the documents placed before us, that this is not part of the war debt, this is not part of any inter-governmental debt; that it is a debt between the Bank of England and us, owed by the Bank of England so to say to the Reserve Bank of India. I will take him at his word, but I would like to ask also, if it is so, what prevents the Reserve Bank from writing a cheque and asking that the money be repaid? Why all the trouble of these negotiations? Why all the interference of the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Minister of Finance? Why all the trouble that our Delegation takes and goes there after every six months, or year after year, to open up the question, go into details, plead before them, beg before them, and find it our own fault that we are not ready to utilize what they were graciously pleased to place at our disposal? The point there for me is very important that in this connection those who negotiate on our behalf, those who go to settle this matter if the House rejects this grant, those who hereafter take up the matter, will see to it that the principal—I would say the only party that is to be considered in the matter is the interests of this country now and hereafter. There is no other consideration which at least will weigh with me, and therefore I will be thoroughly disqualified for taking charge of any such negotiation.

Coming to details, as regards this very great fuss made about the ghost of scaling down having been laid, I for one cannot agree. Not only is the ghost of scaling down not dead, but the spirit of Ottawa walks right through and through the whole arrangement and the whole body of this demon still remains open; in fact it is alive and kicking. I might tell you why; because actually scaling down has happened. The total amount presented by the Finance Minister and his honourable colleagues—I don't mean to say that the Finance Minister also is not honourable, the Honourable the Finance Minister and his honourable colleagues—and placed before us is Rs. 1,547 crores. The value of it, in terms of the goods and services we gave, is hardly half or less. Even if you count from 1941 or 1942 since the entry of Japan in war, the present price level, the present value of money, is half the value that it was then. Today, I think, in terms of the 1939 price level, the pound sterling is hardly worth five shillings, and the rupee being tied to it perhaps the rupee is proportionately less valuable. So, the goods and services which we actually parted with, which we have given, and in connection with which or on account of which this balance has accumulated, were at least twice as valuable as the amount which we are now told is an outstanding account. Sir, I ask you, if this is not scaling down? If it is not, what can be scaling down I fail to understand.

A second argument. Sir, before 1st September, 1939, there was outstanding, as the document before us says, on our account in England, something like £48 million representing about Rs. 64 crores. Rs. 64 crores of 1939, according to the price level figures read out yesterday in this House, would be Rs. 250 crores today, if not more. Why was not this kept separate? Why was this left out? This was a matter purely, simply, entirely, exclusively connected with currency matters. It had nothing to do with the accumulations arising out of the transactions during the war which His Majesty's Government was obliged to make in India. His Majesty's Government asked India to supply goods which they were too poor to pay for. They asked us to accept their I.O.U.s. and now they ask the "I.O.U." is not written down in any document, so to say. This is a transaction between the Reserve Bank and the Bank of England and therefore you can deal with it as you like.

254 CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY OF INDIA (LEGISLATIVE) [12TH AUGUST 1948]

Perhaps I am exaggerating, Sir, but I feel that in this matter to anybody who comes and tells us that the ghost of scaling down has been finally laid to rest or unrest, apart altogether from the belief in the day of reckoning, I would say that here and now there are items which can be pointed out, which even this House in all its generosity will be willing to consider very liberally, to show that the total amount due to this country has been substantially reduced. And even so, Sir, I fail to see whether anywhere the total is accepted as the amount due to this country from Great Britain without any further talk of scaling down. As I see, it is an agreement for only three years as far as the sterling is concerned, and for one year only so far as multilateral convertibility is concerned. How can we say that hereafter also not only that the question may not be raised of the total, but that further depreciation may not take place in the value of the pound sterling so that still further scaling down may take place without we being technically entitled to say that it will be a scaling down? For my part, Sir, speaking in all sincerity and earnestness, I feel that this is an attempt to draw wool upon the eyes of the House or of the Indian people. There is a factual, definite, irrevocable scaling down which, if you agree to this arrangement, if you accept this demand, you will be parties to. And the generations of India yet unborn will curse you for having agreed to an arrangement like this. You are bartering away the interest, and goodness knows for how many years or how many generations, the accumulated resources of this country, accumulated during very hard times, with very great difficulty. For what? I cannot see anything as the Honourable the Finance Minister says. I ask: For what? And the echo answers, "For what"? There is no answer.

The third point in connection with the scaling down that I would say is that there is no question of any definite acceptance of this thing as the actual amount now due or that it will be paid without any question of reduction or a suggestion for curtailment. There is also no clear understanding, as far as I can see, that the obligation will now be secure and permanently assured to us by tangible assets, if not by the mere documentary agreement of this kind. We have in this country very good assets of the Britishers and we have not taken any care to see that if the British Government or for the matter of that, if the Bank of England fail to discharge these obligations in the full value in which they have been incurred, then we at least have something to fall back upon and so we shall see to it that we are not completely robbed as we had been in the past. Now at least that we have our own Government, now at least that we claim to be a sovereign nation by ourselves, I do not see why the Ministers of that sovereign nation should not demand all possible guarantees, should not demand all possible assets and should not even think of those which are before them, under their own jurisdiction, so that if the worst comes to the worst, we shall at least save, we shall at least salvage, a fraction if not the whole of the damage done to this country by our connection in the past with the British nation. I have in my heart, Sir, let me assure you, not a particle of animosity against the British people. I wish them well although I quite know that they do not stand in need of good wishes from me, but lest I should be misunderstood I declare that I realise fully their difficulties and I entirely agree that, if those difficulties could, in the interests of world peace, be solved by mutual co-operation I shall certainly not stand in the way, but I do not hesitate also to say at the same time, in the same breath and in the same place that while considering the difficulties of the world and its dislocation, while considering the particular hardship of Britain, I am also entitled to consider that of my own people, of my own country and therefore of the unborn generations of this country. So I am not guilty of any sin or any lapse of ethical rectitude.

Sir, the next point—coming still further to details—is the valuation of British assets in this country. We were told, and I was very glad, that the skill and the dexterity and the hard working capacity of our officials who valued these things received encomiums, compliments or congratulations and were accepted without demur by the British opposite number of those officers. I have nothing but praise for them, but I for one would question at the same time: The valuation was made on what? The valuation was made either according to the then recorded book values such as they had or according to the replacement costs such as they might or it may be perhaps according to their utility to India. Was the last factor, however, considered? I was told, when I raised this question that this is not a correct attitude: was it because England could not utilise any part of these materials or was it because by taking away all this surplus stores or materials she would have had to pay more freight than derive any utility therefrom that she sold this surplus to us—when I raised this question no answer came. Is this not a point of view for us when we are negotiating a settlement, when we are making a bargain, to enquire also what will be the benefit to us or the cost to the other side in depriving us of it? There are many items—I am told that there are as many as 150,000 items—which are probably utterly useless. Most of these are perhaps getting out of date. Certainly, as regards armaments and vehicles or instruments of war, they are getting out of date. They are every day getting obsolete and therefore it is a very good bargain for England that those items could be unloaded on us and she can go on making new, more up-to-date, sturdier or more efficient instruments for her international complications. We, Sir, have accepted a policy by which we are not going to be entangled in the international complications of Europe or Britain or her allies outside this country. We, Sir, have accepted a policy of peaceful living for ourselves and letting others also live in peace. For us, it might be suggested that there is no need for such things. Or, if we needed them, why not we also get them more up-to-date, more efficient and more suited to conditions in this country than have those for instance we are not acquiring or will have acquired under this Agreement. We are told that we have paid only 27 per cent for this. I ask you: Even 27 per cent is it worth to us 10 per cent? If 27 per cent is not equal in value to 10 per cent then I say it is a very bad bargain whatever the book value might say and if this 27 per cent would not be realised by England even to the extent of 5 per cent, then she would have had to blow up the landing craft, the tank or the cruiser or the gun boat, whatever constitutes this wretched surplus stores of the British in India. She would have had to expend some more powder and some more labour on this. Thus to us at any rate it is a very costly bargain and that is all that I can say with regard to compliments, if any, expected on this.

Next, I would not say anything with regard to the matter of pensions as that may be regarded as political and I do not wish to introduce that matter in this connection. I accept the right to pay the pensions ourselves and the opportunity to charge these pensions with the income-tax which was long withheld from the Government of India, which you all can understand. That is a credit if I may say so for the authors of this Agreement. But making every allowance, and perhaps an exaggerated allowance for this rosy side of the picture, I am afraid when you come to the next item you see nothing of kind repeated and that is in connection with, for instance, the releases. There the Finance Minister was good enough to use arguments and suggest analogies and induce considerations with not one of which I am able to agree. It is my misfortune perhaps that he is much more practical and I am after all an idealistic or theoretical Professor or ex-Professor, but be that as it may, I feel that I owe it to this House to place before it my considered opinion upon the value of these releases and the arguments that were used for us to swallow as our delegation seems to have swallowed. We are told, Sir, that we were not able to utilise the releases which were made in the past. The Finance Minister is generous enough to take the blame unto ourselves and perhaps his Government is responsible for not having made proper plans for utilising whatever little thing we were able to obtain from our accumulated balances. Granted. But I want to ask the House this question, Sir. Is it any business of the debtor to say whether we can or cannot utilise what is due to us? His is the right to pay and ours is the right to demand. As to how we utilise it, is our look-out. Sir, in my opinion, it is none of his look-out whether we can or whether we cannot utilise these things. There are a number of difficulties why we cannot utilise them just now. It is now only that we may in a moment of self-abnegation be willing to say that it is our fault that we have not made our schemes earlier or that private enterprise is shy and we are therefore at their mercy and cannot secure our dues properly. But even granted all that, why are we not free to get what we can and build up reserves elsewhere where we shall not be threatened with the inability of our debtor to make this payment as and when and how and where we want. This is a point which apparently the Honourable the Finance Minister and his honourable colleagues do not seem to have given full weight to as far as I can see. It is a fact that unfortunately for reasons which were outside our control perhaps, not all that we can demand could be obtained in time, because it is well known that the world shortage prevails everywhere and particularly so in capital goods. The one great country producing the utmost abundance of capital goods is said to have on its book two years' orders for its own consumption and may not be able to supply us even if we have plenty of good money to give to them and demand what you want. As far as Britain is concerned, as far as I can read the figures, I do not at all see the likelihood, the very possibility of England being able in the next ten years, I am tempted to say next thirty years, to have a definite surplus of exports over imports. She has a continuing deficit of her trade, the exports being half or less than her imports. Her Anglo-American loan was utilised much quicker than her best economists and statesmen had estimated, showing therefore the deep gulf that prevails which is not bridgeable by these methods, and I see no reason to believe that hereafter England would be able in a short time to create or produce a surplus which she can then export and pay for these obligations due on her. The British Government have done quite well to see that the average man or the average worker in England gets a square meal and is also duly protected in what is called the social security measures. England is also not reducing very much her armaments, because there are complications from which she cannot escape and England has her industry crippled by the prevailing deficit not only of raw materials and of food supply but also from labour troubles. Given the fact that the so-called old pre-war invisible exports of England are all destroyed, given the fact that those fleets of the countries of the world which used to be contributing to the making of those invisible exports in the past are developing their own services of shipping, England will not have the chance ever to regain the lost position, even if it had not got formidable rivals in the shape of the United States or Russia. Given all these things I for one cannot share the optimism with which the Honourable the Finance Minister and his honourable colleagues were approaching this matter and believing and hoping that after three years they may be getting a better treatment from England. It is absolutely necessary, Sir, if not out of consideration for England, at least out of consideration for our own people that we should get this matter settled once for all; otherwise we would stand nowhere. My honourable friend Prof. Saksena mentioned those various plans that had been made which would come to fruition only on the strength of these balances. I certainly have been very guilty in this matter in as much as in several works in the past two years I have taken for granted that we shall have to rely, if not wholly, at least the wherewithal with which to make the plans successful. Sir, there is apparently no indication for the plan being made successful if we are to depend upon the resources that are locked up in our Sterling balances. We have our own needs, that is to say the most imperative need of food resources and we have also to make provision for imports of essential requirements of life, which we cannot produce for reasons that are known to us, in sufficient and adequate quantities for ourselves. Are we going to forego our own immediate and essential needs, because Britain is unable to provide us or provide herself with a surplus? A suggestion was made that Britain might export consumer goods to this country. I ask you to consider the gravity of a suggestion like that. If Britain is going to export to this country and we are going to receive what are called consumer goods, are you prepared to say that the industries which you have built up at so much sacrifice at such high tariff duties should go to the wall? I shall not even in my dreams support a capitalist industry if I can help it, but I cannot but admit that this country has built up some industries after terrible sacrifices, paid through the nose by the consumer and are you going to say: "Let them export to this country freely, so that we may receive some part of our debts"? What then are those industries which employ so much labour, which have been built up at so much cost and which have such a future? Are we going to negative them completely? I ask those who make this suggestion to think over this matter in all its bearings and then consider whether it is worth while even to advance it as a mere academic argument. I trust that those who made it did not make it seriously and in the ultimate analysis the future of our plans for industrialization should not be jeopardized and should not be ship-wrecked. Sir, I said a moment ago that we have in this country plenty of resources we could very well do all this and not lose much of the balances accumulated by our sacrifices in the past. I refer, Sir, to the British assets in this country belonging to British subjects—I mean British European subjects—and these amount to a very large sum, exactly how much I cannot say. The latest figures that I had are, for no fault of mine, available only up to 1940 or so and then at least the situation was that the total share capital of companies working in India and registered outside India having capital in pounds sterling was something like 750 million pounds paid up and 150 million pounds on debentures. There are 900 millions without counting depreciation that has taken place in the interval. Is it not sufficient assets for us to provide for our own stock for the balances, now accumulated there and which England, we are told, is not in a position to meet at once?

Another thing which is not a new suggestion but which has been made from the housetops by every economist in the past five years is that if England needs so much and she has so many friends and well-wishers and champions in this country, why should she not float a loan in this country and why make a hotch-pot of our resources and thus add to the inflation in this country in this unlimited manner? Why should she not have floated a loan in this country? If her admirers and champions come forward and supported her the loan would have been a success. The point, however, is that after the first World war and up to 1941 the American Congress insisted upon cash payment. "Cash and carry" was the way she transacted. We, of course, are more generous than the Americans. We have received so much money through the backing of the British Government in the past and we are so much obliged to them that we are not expected to have these mercenary considerations of "cash and carry". We are prepared to wait; we are prepared to give them credit; we are bound by solemn negotiations and we do not mind even if this amount is scaled down. That being the situation, Britain naturally did not float any loan in this country.

Next even if she would not float a loan in this country would she not guarantee a loan that we can float in the United States or elsewhere? I am sure that with our own productive capacity, I for one believe that we have ample credit of our own for any commercial country to loan us money without all the bogies that are being trotted out for frightening private enterprise. I am not a believer in bogies. We have got real assets, namely in so far as it is real, the credit of the United Kingdom in the 7 or 800 million pounds which still remain to us, by which we can secure any loan in the event of our not being able to discharge. Here is the haven which we have built in the Bank of England which can very well have recourse to paying our loan to whosoever lends. Have they ever tried to think of this alternative? It is no use getting tied up to the Sterling area and there is small chance of its being beneficial to us. Sterling is no longer Sterling, at least in the honest sense of the term. Sterling is not worth 4 annas in the rupee and if you compare it with gold, it is not worth 2 annas in the rupee. How long, I ask, will you continue to have this blind faith in the honesty and credibility of people who have betrayed you time and again? How long are you going to trust the honesty and fair dealing of those people who have bled this country and who have now taken away from you the accumulated surplus of this country as they have done perhaps to the extent of 1,000 crores? I ask you how long are you going to wait and see? I was one of the members of the Select Committee appointed by the Indian National Congress 18 years ago which was to investigate into the foreign obligations of this country at that time. I can tell you, by a study extending over 150 years, that England has ruined this country, has taken away our wealth, taken away our very industries by the ruthless policy she has followed in the days of the East India Company and even in the days of the benign Queen Victoria and her descendants, so that today this country is unable to produce the very elements of the new industries and the new articles of consumption which have come before us. We are not able even today to build our railways; we are not in a position to make our own telephones, telegraph machinery and our own essentials in many other directions, with which I do not wish to encumber this speech. All this we owe to the policy of the English, who have kept us like the milch cow, though unable to yield, but still could be squeezed as much as they can. An English economist who was a Professor in this country, enunciated in so many words the doctrine that the taxable capacity of the people is the limit of their squeezability. That is the word which has been used by the Professor in his treatise on public finance. The point is, with all these experience before us, with all the resources which we can still command, with all the assets which we can still claim, why should we not have taken this precaution, I fail to understand, and I am unable to see anything in this matter which would meet with an approval from me.

One last word, and I have finished: that is with regard to the bogey that private enterprise is being frightened. I am glad it is being frightened. I am glad that the Government and the patrons of private enterprise in Government realise that private enterprise is no relation of this country. Therefore, I say that if this statement is true that private enterprise is frightened, it is not a cause for getting frightened; it is a cause for rejoicing. The sooner they quit the field, the better for us. That is my attitude. In any case, I am not prepared to go to the moneyed mammons of this country in sack cloth and ashes and say the Lord's prayer: give us our daily bread, forget our criticisms in this House and outside, may your will be done in the continuing house and in Banks as it is and I was going to say in Government, but I do not.

ELECTIONS TO CENTRAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE OF NATIONAL CADET CORPS AND CENTRAL COMMITTEE OF TUBERCULOSIS ASSOCIATION OF INDIA.

Mr. Speaker: I have to inform the Assembly that up to the time fixed for receiving nominations for the Central Advisory Committee of the National Cadet Corps and Central Committee of the Tuberculosis Association of India, two nominations in the case of each of these Committees were received. As the number of candidates is equal to the number of vacancies in each of the two Committees, I declare the following members to be duly elected:—

Central Advisory Committee of the National Cadet Corps.—(1) Shri K. Hanumanthaiya and (2) Shri Mahavir Tyagi.

Central Committee of the Tuberculosis Association of India.—(1) Shri T. Siddalingaiya and (2) Mr. E. John Philipposse.

MINES AND MINERALS (REGULATION AND DEVELOPMENT) BILL

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil (Minister for Works, Mines and Power): Sir, I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill to provide for the regulation of mines and oilfields and for the development of minerals.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Madras: General): Some time ago the Government of India had announced their policy and stated that mines are on the list of those industries which should be nationalised immediately, and I am rather surprised that just as they had done in the case of the Electricity Bill, they have come forward with some sort of a thing and ask for the regulation of mines and oilfields, thus preventing anyhow for some years to come any chance of nationalising the mines. I think the House deserves an explanation.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member will note that the present motion is merely one for leave for introduction, a formal sort of thing on which ordinarily there is no objection or no discussion, though, of course, both are permissible but in practice we do not do so. I put the motion to the House.

The question is:

"That leave be granted to introduce a Bill to provide for the regulation of mines and oilfields and for the development of minerals."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

INCOME-TAX AND THE BUSINESS PROFITS TAX (AMENDMENT) BILL

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF SELECT COMMITTEE

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty (Minister for Finance): Sir, I beg to present the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill further to amend the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, and the Business Profits Tax Act, 1947.

DEMANDS FOR SUPPLEMENTARY GRANTS—1948-49—concl'd.

DEMAND No. 99A—CAPITAL OUTLAY ON STERLING PENSIONS—concl'd.

Failure of Government to secure Protection against scaling down of Sterling Balances—concl'd.

DEMAND No. 101—DEFENCE CAPITAL OUTLAY—concl'd.

Propriety of Payment and Defence Stores Policy of Government—concl'd.

Mr. Speaker: We now proceed with the discussion on the Demands for Supplementary Grants for 1948-49. The discussion had not ended yesterday.

Dr. P. S. Deshmukh (C.P. and Berar: General): Mr. Speaker, Sir we are all very much thankful to you, Sir, for having allotted sufficient time for the discussion of this very important subject. We have already had yesterday as many as 4 speeches. The first was by my honourable friend Mr. Lari, who criticised the whole arrangement, and he was also followed by equally critical honourable members like Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena and Prof. K. T. Shah. Prof. Saksena, Sir, almost told us that we were overtaken by a deluge, that everything was lost, that for generations to come we were undone, and there was, according to him no hope of resurrection. Prof. K. T. Shah, Sir, as we know has always been feeling very strongly on the subject, and if the House will recollect the speech that he made on the same subject some months back, it was quite clear that he was very much apprehensive of scaling down of our Sterling Balances. His previous speech was followed yesterday by a declaration that what had happened was highly disappointing and that India's interests had been irrevocably injured. All these speakers, Sir, took a view which was bordering on the alarmist and there are many members of the House also who share this feeling. I for one, Sir, think that the position is not as bad as has been reflected in the speeches made by these members and that it is possible to take a somewhat more constructive view of the whole matter. One thing I agree with what came from Prof. K. T. Shah and that is, that in my opinion, there is adequate ground to feel that the approach of our Delegation towards the subject was not altogether satisfactory. Prof. K. T. Shah was quite correct in stating that while we were very sympathetic, very considerate towards the difficulties of the British Government, we should not have forgotten the bad times through which we ourselves were passing. We ourselves are faced with food shortage, with our industries producing less and less, with increased poverty of our people, with inflation and so many other factors which are contributing to greater and greater unhappiness of the people. In fact, a lot of people quite correctly ask whether the Independence that we have got has really contributed to the intrinsic happiness of the people. We are suffering in so many different ways and all this suffering of the people should have weighed with the Delegation so as to press the British Government and to say: "Of course your difficulties are great, but our difficulties are greater; we are a nation who have emerged into Independence newly; we are in a somewhat precarious condition", and our difficulties should have been made to weigh with the British Government far more than has been the case. That is a line of thought, Sir, with which I am in the fullest agreement, and while we should and we might show any sympathies and consideration for the difficulties of Sir Stafford Cripps and his Government, we ought not to forget that our condition was far more precarious and from that point of view it should have been possible for our Delegation to get at least some better terms than we have secured. The Honourable Minister had to admit, Sir, our failure in not being able to utilize the Sterling Balances that were available last year. It will convince nobody in the House to say that some other part of the Government has erred and it is no consolation to anybody; the mistake is there that we have not been able to utilize the Sterling Balances that were available and if we continue in the same manner, we will be throwing opportunities that were available to us. We could ask the Finance Minister as to what persuaded him to tie down the interests of India for such a length of time as 60 years. If we look to the schedule given in the white paper, we will see, Sir, that the payments are going to be made for as long a period as 60 years.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty (Minister for Finance): That is purely an actuarial calculation. There is no tying down of the Government of India. It is a calculation of the probable year when the last pensioner will die.

Dr. P. S. Deshmukh: I am prepared to correct myself, Sir, that we have not been tied for so long, but I would like to know for what length of time we are going to be dependent upon the British Government to recover all the Sterling Balances that they owe us. As every one of us knows for the present we are asked to be content only with 18½ million pounds. May I ask Sir, at this rate, how many years it is going to take us to realize all that Britain owes us? Is there any estimate that has been framed? Has it been placed before the House as to how many years it is going to take so as to receive back all the payments that Britain is expected to make?

There is also another point which I would like to place before the House. Since the accumulated balances come to such a high figure as 1536 crores, when we know that we are deficient in so many things, we have yet to have even a semblance of a navy, we have not got an air force at our command, I should like to ask whether it was not possible to put this to the British Government in a direct way. We all know, that in spite of the war losses the British Navy continues to be the largest in the world even today. The British people and the British Government are not also deficient in the manufacture or possession of aeroplanes. There are many other articles, many other capital goods which could have been made available to us for our utilisation within a shorter period than appears to have been contemplated by the delegation. Sir, in my view, it is quite correct to complain that we have not pressed our point of view as earnestly as we should and if we have really pressed it all that we wanted to press, we have not at any rate succeeded to the extent this House would have liked. After all, the world situation, as everybody knows, is grave. We do not know what may happen within a period of six months hence. So, when an agreement or arrangement that is placed before us is so strikingly indefinite as not to be able to disclose when we would be really getting all that we have sacrificed for—because, what is owed to us by the British Government was not what we could have easily spared—the accumulation of sterling balances was at the cost of the happiness of the people of India and is money which India could ill-afford to let lie with the British Government, as has been now disclosed at a rate of interest which is abnormally low—the House is certainly entitled to complain against the delegation and to say that India has not been well treated by Britain, nor have you secured, although there may be difficulties of which we may be conscious, terms with which we could feel absolutely satisfied. I think, Sir, that line of criticism is entirely justifiable. I would like to ask the Finance Minister whether the same situation that arose last year, namely our inability to take advantage of even the sterling balances that are made available to us, to be repeated and whether he has not planned and placed before the British Government other adequate means of securing within the shortest possible period the sterling balances due from Great Britain. I would also ask him whether it was not possible to ask them to part with some of their ships, aeroplanes and machinery which they may be probably utilising at the present moment but of which India stands in greater need of. I would also like him to state whether it was not possible for the delegation to obtain some goods at once so that we could be satisfied that a substantial amount out of this huge sum of sterling balances was immediately made available to us.

So far as the pensions affair is concerned, I think the delegation does deserve our compliments that they did not allow themselves to be persuaded to pay the whole capitalised value in a lump sum. There is the question of our having to wait for a number of years and therefore it is probably wise that we should not pay up anything that is owed by us to Great Britain in the shape of pensions, all at once. That may be a very sound argument to consider; but at the same time, since the interest that we are getting is so low, and since the total capitalised amount would come to 224 crores and the yearly annuities to 9 crores and 67 lakhs, the interest would probably work out to something like about 4 per cent. I would like to suggest whether, 12 Noon in these circumstances, we may not take steps to pay the whole sum not in one lump, but as early as possible. I do not know if my mathematics is correct. According to the figures before me, it appears that the capitalised amount of the pensions is 224 crores and the annuities in the beginning years are between 9 and 10 crores and later 8 and 9 crores and less. Under these circumstances, since the interest that we get varies between 75 to 8 per cent., only this may be a point for consideration. All the same, the fact that the delegation did not agree to reduce the sterling balances by a big sum of 224 crores is probably a matter of credit to them.

I think, Sir, the delegation, although it has not satisfied us, has tried its best. But, I must say I would have personally preferred India obtaining immediately by way of capital goods and certain articles which would have gone to contribute to the greater progress of India; for instance, agricultural implements, and as I have already stated, ships for strengthening our navy and planes for our air force. We also badly need machinery for the manufacture of automobiles and locomotives. I would like to ask the Finance Minister whether it was not possible for Great Britain to give us a portion of these articles and whether they have agreed to give us any definite number of these articles within the next few years. Because, there is also another fear in our minds, namely, even in spite of the agreement, even in spite of the fact that certain sterling balances are made available to us, whether we may not probably be faced with the same situation with which we were faced last year, namely our incapacity to utilise the sterling balances. We are of course conscious that we cannot purchase everything that is available. At the same time, I think that with the Government that we have got, it should be possible to make a definite plan of the articles and other things we want which will contribute to the greater happiness of the people and which would enable India to produce more and more manufactured goods.

Shri K. Hanumanthaiya (Mysore State): Sir, when I read the able Press Statement of the Finance Minister, of the 15th inst. regarding laying down the ghost of scaling down, most of us believed it to be a fact. I fail to see why we in this House should help Mr. Churchill by admitting that there is no scaling down. It is not wise that we should try to prop up the ghost which has been laid. There is what is called waiver and estoppel. There have been negotiations three times so far as sterling balances are concerned and the British Government has not chosen to raise this question of scaling down on any of these occasions. Why they should raise this question on the fourth occasion, it passes my comprehension. If they did so, we could easily say, you have not raised this question of scaling down on the last three occasions, you have waived or you are stopped from raising it again.

There is also this thing. Whatever may be said of British character; here is a point that we have to compliment. Whatever Government there is, whether Conservative or Labour, they do not make changes in the agreements or treaties that they arrive at with other countries; they maintain what is called the sanctity of agreement and treaty so far as other countries are concerned. And I do not suppose the Conservative party headed by Mr. Churchill, if it comes to power in 1951, will be able to raise the point again of scaling down these balances. (An Honourable Member: 'Question'. Another Honourable Member: 'Churchill is up to anything'.) Even if he does that we have a far better case for scaling up our sterling balances. These sterling balances were arrived at not at market rates but at controlled prices. I know personally that the Government of India purchased from Mysore large quantities of silk for making parachutes and purchased them at a price which was far lower than the market price; and the excess quantity of silk was auctioned by the Mysore Government and fetched two or three times the price at which the Government of India bought it. So there are facts and figures to show that the sterling balances can easily be scaled up from the point of view of justice and fair play. This is an argument which is always open to us. And what the British Chancellor of the Exchequer said by way of reply to Mr. Churchill is not such a demand as that. He merely says, "If you want to argue you can argue at any time." That is an evasive reply and not one which encourages Mr. Churchill or asks him to raise this question of scaling down again and again.

[Shri K. Hanumanthaiya]

Then, Sir, various suggestions have been made that this delegation should have secured this concession and that concession. No one disagrees with these suggestions; but I cannot conceive, knowing the personnel of the delegation as we do, that these points were not present in their mind and they did not press them before the British Chancellor of the Exchequer. The leader of the delegation—I may again remind the House—was the first man in India who brought this question of sterling balances before the public; that he would not be conversant with the various problems connected with it and would be forgetful of our interests is a point that none of us can entertain even by way of doubt. Besides, there were other members—businessmen and politicians—who know very well about the problems connected with the sterling balances. If they have not been able to secure better concessions it is not because they did not advance them but because the situation is such. It is a question of a debtor pleading inability to pay and we had to make the best of a bad situation, and I am sure they did make the best of a bad situation. The only point the Finance Minister did not touch upon in his press statement and in his speech yesterday was as to why he did not press for purchasing at least some of the British assets in India. In my speech during the last budget session I made a suggestion that with the sterling balances we could at least purchase the Kolar goldfields. There is need for multilateral convertibility of currency and if we have a gold stock that is the best remedy in this direction. I understand the annual production of gold in the Mysore gold mines is about 4 or 5 crores of rupees. If we had gold every year of this value our position in regard to capital goods and various other requirements would be very much advantageous. The delegation—in my view—could have pressed for purchasing, if not the whole, at least part of the British assets in India. I hope the leader of the delegation will be able to give an explanation about this because it is a point which needs their attention and answer.

Then at the end of the White Paper there is a sentence:

"Out of this about 200 million or Rs. 267 crores may be considered as normal currency reserve."

At the beginning of the White Paper there is another pregnant sentence:

"A section of the Reserve Bank Act which imposes on the Bank the obligation to buy sterling offered to an unlimited extent was utilised for financing this surplus."

That is, the sterling balance accumulated as a result of that. I think we need not leave in London by way of currency security such a large sum as £200 million. May be there was a time when sterling was really sterling and therefore whatever sum we had deposited in England carried its worth and it was to that extent a good backing for our currency. But now the times have changed and sterling does not now occupy the position which it did many years ago and the dollar has taken its place. Such being the case, why should we deposit such a huge amount as 267 crores with the Bank of England as currency reserve passes my comprehension. It may be that the leader of the delegation has a very good explanation for it, and if it is a good explanation we are going to accept it.

There is again this. It might be argued that so far as our currency is concerned we must tack it on either to the sterling or to the dollar and therefore this question of currency reserve arises. After the establishment of the United Nations Organisation we know that what is called the International Monetary Fund Organisation has come into existence. The purpose served by the United States dollar or the Bank of England sterling is now being served by the International Monetary Fund. Whatever amount we have got we can still deposit in this Fund, or even without deposits the International Monetary Fund Organisation has undertaken to maintain to the best possible extent the equilibrium between countries in currency matters. In view of these two factors it is absolutely unnecessary for us to have such a large reserve in the Bank of England.

Thirdly, Prof. Shah yesterday very ably made out that it is not wise or profitable on our part to tack on our rupee to the sterling now. I am in agreement with that view.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: After the International Monetary Fund was established and we have become members of that Fund we have pegged the rupee to gold and not to sterling. Today the rupee is pegged to gold.

Shri K. Hanumanthaiya: I stand corrected. But still the fact remains that we need not maintain such a large reserve in the Bank of England, specially as it was disclosed some time ago that the rate of interest is very low.

Shri B. Das (Orissa: General): I am not very happy at the tone of criticism that my four Socialist friends in this House have levelled at the work of the Delegation in the affairs of the sterling balances.

Some Honourable Members: Which are the Socialist speeches?

Shri B. Das: I refer to the speeches delivered by those socialist minded members. At any rate, I do not want to know them!

An Honourable Member: Now comes a capitalist speech!

Shri B. Das: The question before the House is not to belittle the work of the delegation but to appraise the situation in which they were placed and to see whether they have done their best under the circumstances. My verdict is that they have done the very best possible.

They were handicapped as we are handicapped. It is a pity that my delegation went as representatives of a semi-baked Dominion and not as a full independent country. It is a pity that although the objective resolution declared independence some ten months ago, the real independence is not yet in sight and we find that more and more the Government of India is getting enmeshed in Dominion Status. Why should the Ministry, sitting there as our chosen representatives, always think in terms of a Dominion and in terms of subordination to England. That is the cause of their failure in not bringing back what we wanted, somewhat in terms as my Socialist friends are thinking.

An Honourable Member: Hear, hear! for the Socialists!

Shri B. Das: The Cabinet here and outside the House have not thought of the Indo-British Trade Agreement in the light of whether it will be between a Dominion and U.K. or whether it will be between an Indian sovereign State and U.K. Until that point is settled, the charges that are levelled by my esteemed friend, Prof. K. T. Shah, is of no value and account.

Sitting here I have levelled serious charges against the British Raj. I have opposed it tooth and nail and I still detest it. I abhor it for the position into which we are reduced today and I bring it as a warning to my Cabinet friends there. But I cannot level the same charges, the same criticism to my delegation who went there and did their best under the circumstances!

[Shri B. Das]

When we discussed this very question of sterling balances in the last session, my honourable friend, Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar and I raised the issue whether the sterling balance was 1,600 million or was it to be 4,000 million. Well the Finance Minister having inherited the legacies of the previous Finance Ministers and the Commitments of the Government of India, has to carry on the Government as he found it. It is not for him to question whether 1,600 million sterling was the sterling balance or whether it should have been 4,000 millions. But today we are suffering from inflation, from loss of credit and we cannot build up our industries nor can we develop them. This is due to the perfidious policy of the Albion and to its policy of loot.

Today I am in that mood that I must be thankful for small mercies until such time we empower the Cabinet to pass the Constitution in the other Place so that we can enter into negotiations over the Indo-British Trade Agreement as equals and not as subordinates, a position in which my honourable friend, Mr. Chetty finds himself today. He has tried to talk as equals. But what is the use of talking as equal when England has the upper hand!

The two subjects that we are discussing today are pensions capitalization fund and purchase of War Surplus Stores. I appreciate the adroitness with which my friend, Mr. Chetty described the situation. But, Sir, sitting here my mind goes back to 1931-32 and 1935 when every Britisher who sat there to serve India and grew fat on our salaries but under the 1935 Act they declined to trust India until all the pensionary charges were funded and India paid them in lump sum to England. But today the situation has changed. We have a credit balance. We could afford to throw away and capitalise Rs. 275 crores and we did it. For that I do not feel proud. But I am humiliated, as everyone of us is humiliated here and outside in the country that England in keeping in line with the old "steel frame" Government she established in 1932, has in 1948 got her pound of flesh from India.

Well, I do not want to question counting on the issue whether India will get back a few hundred thousand pounds in return from the British Government, but for the next sixty years my grandson will be regretting that we came to this arrangement and that England with a loaded pistol extracted this from us. My honourable friend the Finance Minister expressed gratification that we had money and we gave it to England. The financial practice in this country has been to pay every year the pensionary charges from the revenue of the year. Now the present generations had deposited so many hundreds of millions. And for what? To give this kind of relief?

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: No, Sir. That will not happen. What has been arranged is only an advanced provision for exchange. That will not relieve the subsequent budgets of the Government of India from the obligation of paying the rupees every year for the payment of pensions.

Shri B. Das: I would very much like him to elucidate that point a little more. We are not going to pay any more and debit our revenue. The taxpayer is not going to pay any more than 5 to 6 million pensionary charges.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: The taxpayer will have to pay every year the rupee equivalent of the pensions as he has been doing all these years. Suppose next year the pensionary charges come to Rs. 8 crores. You will still find in the next budget a debit of Rs. 8 crores in the expenditure side as a charge for pensions. What will happen is instead of our having to find the exchange for that out of our current earnings by exports, we have secured from the British Government an advance payment of exchange for the next six millions.

Shri B. Das: Are we not to get back a credit of £ 6 million?

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: Suppose, for instance, next year Rs. 10 lakhs is the pension charge, then we will have to pay to the Reserve Bank Rs. 10 lakhs. The Reserve Bank in its turn will get automatically from the Bank of England without any further payment in sterling that 6 or 7 million mentioned there. Therefore the British Government is bound to pay us every year the amount mentioned in that.

Shri B. Das: I will leave that to another occasion. However, I am not satisfied. I thought my generation has paid through sweat and blood.

My honourable friend is transferring the question from the political plane to a purely financial level. Ireland did not pay any pensionary charges after the Black and Tan methods adopted by Britain. Ireland repudiated all pensionary charges to the British rulers. Here my honourable friend wants us to believe that it is a purely financial transaction but the stigma remains that England has got the money. I can believe that my honourable friend the Finance Minister after 60 years is not going to get that deposit. Why should every year the taxpayer pay the 8 crores I do not understand.

As regards the purchase of the British stores I do not level any charge against the Delegation that the prices paid are high. I join in the complements paid to the Finance Department and their Accounts Officers. I am not bothered as to how much they have paid, more or less. But I want the Finance Minister to explain to us whether we have got the right type of British stores that were available to us at the end of the war. There were rumours of the treachery of the British military officials and some of them were based on truth, that they handed over the best of tanks and aeroplanes to Hyderabad and Pakistan. During the transition stage while the Partition Committee was sitting and separation was taking place the best of British surplus stores went to Pakistan. All this treachery has been there and in view of this can we say that we have got a good bargain, that we have got the right type of machinery, aeroplanes and tanks and other war implements? The Honourable the Finance Minister knows that one hundred and twenty tanks were declared as scrap by the British military officials in June 1947 and the head of the British Government in India Lord Mountbatten allowed it to be declared as scrap and sold to Hyderabad. Those one hundred and twenty tanks were absolutely new tanks and they went into the hands of Hyderabad. If Hyderabad is today restless it is perhaps due to the treachery of those British Military officials that were in India before August the 15th, 1947.

I would like to urge on the Government, while I accept this motion, that they should not go with begging bowls every year and ask a delegation at the Finance Minister's level to negotiate a settlement. My honourable friend Mr. Shanmukham Chetty was the first minister of the Cabinet that went to England to negotiate at a certain level with the British Government. I do hope that the Finance Minister will enlighten us as to what are their ideas about the Indo-British agreement, whether it will be on the level of equality of sovereignty or not. This we do not find anywhere. Various speeches are made by the Ministers but they always keep silent over this. I hope before the Honourable the Finance Minister addresses again on the issue of the sterling balances that question will be settled. The whole point will have to be clarified in the Indo-British trade agreement. Our Finance Minister and his Delegation might have been entertained well in Britain and on that my friend Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari will be able to tell us. But I would ask my honourable friend the Finance Minister to tell us whether with the nationalisation of the Reserve Bank we will have to continue the policy of keeping our currency reserve with the U.K. or the Bank of England. That arrangement was between a master and a servant. The Reserve Bank was the servant of the Bank of England. It is high time that our Finance Minister should examine that aspect and that will have to be discussed when the Reserve Bank Nationalisation Bill comes before the House. The moment that problem is solved whether our currency reserve should be in India or in the U.K., all other questions will also be resolved. Sir, with these remarks I support the motion.

Dr. B. Pattabhi Sitaramayya (Madras: General): Sir, when this White Paper was circulated to us I opened the first page and read the first sentence. I take it that this contained all the arguments that should support the deal that has been entered into. The first sentence reads:

"India has always held sterling in the United Kingdom as part of its currency."

That sentence might have been omitted. The next sentence reads:

"Under the Reserve Bank of India Act, not less than twofifths of the total assets of the Bank etc."

That is quite right but the first sentence was not right. I do not know why that sentence was added or incorporated. Apparently it was meant to create an atmosphere for the perpetuation of India's balances in securities of a British character. They try to show that India has always had its currency balances in British securities. The Paper Currency Act was enacted in 1861. From then on until 1905 all the paper currency reserves were in Indian securities and only in 1905 for the first time it was allowed to have British securities to the tune of about four crores and thereafter in 1911 it rose to eleven crores or thereabouts. From that time the war years began and during that period all canons of currency and coinage went by the board and gradually the reserves became completely transferred and transformed into British securities. Therefore it is wrong to say that India has always held her currency reserves in British sterling. If that is meant to prop up an argument for leaving some of these things still in the possession of the British Government, that will fail. However that be, that is only an academic point; it does not really touch the problem on hand.

The problem on hand is, to begin with, the temporary settlement on two previous occasions and the last settlement two months back by a deputation from India going to England. Who is England? The debtor. And who is India? The creditor. Have you heard of a creditor going to the doors of the debtor in order to settle his dues? I have not heard. No Chettiars should do it; no baniya would do it. It is a wrong end to begin with. After all the debtor must come to the creditor. At best they may sit round a table and settle affairs. Therefore we had no sihana bala, the local strength; the strength of being on one's own ground, we lost when we went there. What was the reason that took us there?—the lingering longing for perfidious Albion, the desire to go and settle our accounts with our 'masters'. I am afraid there is some vestige of the old world conditions under which we felt the inferiority complex. I should have certainly refused to go to England in order to settle the constitutional problem. That was why we welcomed Cripps here when he came in 1942, and the Cabinet Mission in 1946. It would have been quite all right if the final settlement had taken place here. No doubt the preliminary investigation party came here and talked over matters. But we lost a good deal when we went to London.

Having gone there we had to settle the matter. And how do you settle the debt?

सौ में साठ आधा गया नट, दम् देता हूँ, दस दिलाता हूँ, दस की क्या बात छोड़ो मियाँ ।

A man owes another Rs. 100. The debtor starts by saying "Well, of course I owe you Rs. 100. But I am going to pay only Rs. 60. From out of Rs. 60 that is legitimately due to you, half has gone as rebate. Therefore Rs. 30 is gone and only Rs. 30 remains there. I will give you ten. I will ask some other fellow to pay you Rs. 10. As for the rest, only Rs. 10 remains. Why don't you leave it? That is nothing". That is the basis on which this Agreement has been made, so far as I can see.

Of course there is the old Sanskrit saying:

“ पुस्तकं वनिता वित्तं परहस्तं गतं गतं अथैव पुनरायात् जीर्णं च भ्रष्टाच खण्डसः । ”

That is also true. It means that a book, a girl and money gone into others' hands are gone for ever; and even if you should get them back, the book comes torn, the girl comes fallen and the money comes in bits. It went in bulk—as 1158 millions against which we get 133 crores of residual or rejected war material here, 224 crores of pensions of capitalised payment—not capital but capitalised payment and 213 crores to be made available till 1951 June. What about the rest, we shall see. That is the position that we are now reduced to.

Now let us examine each of these things. What about the defence material? The war material is subject to sales through the Department of Disposals and all over India you will find every day every weekly paper, every daily, every monthly full of Disposals advertisements. I now understand, having come here—previously I did not understand it—that it is a source of tremendous profits to business adventurers. Things costing Rs. 1-4 a tin have been parted with for one anna six pies each tin. Some lakhs of rupees worth of such tinned food, tinned milk, canned fruit all these I have seen, and heard of and I know that lakh of rupees have been made as profits on them. Will the Honourable the Finance Minister tell me what is the ratio between the price secured in the Disposals and the cost price in the books? I do not think it will be more than 1 to 10. But here you have made a certain payment. It is a very handsome payment, made in a lump sum, without any bargain, and without any difficulty for the salesman because he simply has to say "The goods are yours; pay me Rs. 133 crores". I think a more handsome bargain for the Englishman for all the refuse that remained over could not have been made. Perhaps it would have been better to take half a dozen cruisers. I do not know whether the latest cruiser that has come to India, "Delhi", newly designated, has been paid for from out of this sterling balance. I should think that it has been. I do not know exactly what price has been paid for it. So far no statement has been made about it, nor have I seen any reference to that in this. A few tanks, some war materials, a few cruisers would perhaps have been useful.

Fortunately for the English they have left this country not in a state of peace but in a state of war. They have created all the necessary conditions for an internal commotion and an external invasion. We have been subjected to both, the moment they pretend to have left this country. They have left the country by the front door but entered it by the back door. They have created all kinds of difficulties. Their "Machiavelian dissimulation, their profound hypocrisy and perfidy" are historical facts. Therefore there is no question about it and this is not the occasion for me to descant upon the way in which we have been cheated during the past one year—there have been documents concealed from our knowledge and other documents with partial representation. We know how we were committed to decisions and how they have behaved.

When I deal with my creditor I take his character into consideration. When I was dealing with the khaddar business on behalf of the All India Spinners' Association, whenever I settled a bargain the late Seth Jammalal

[Dr. B. Pattabhi Sitaramayya]

Bajaj used to ask me "where is the cash?" It is not a question of my agreeing to certain terms or a settlement in the court or a reference to arbitration. "If you say Rs. 5,000 is to be paid to us, put Rs. 2,500 in my hand and I shall be satisfied"—because 5,000, agreed to in arbitration and a court is absolutely worthless. The decree is not worth scraping your tongue with. That is the position.

What is the actual money that we are getting? It would have been far better to have done with this business once and for all by a final settlement than to keep it hanging on. However that be, the English people are adepts in the art of making you lick the elbow for the honey that is on the palm, and then having allowed you to lick it they won't allow you to digest it, and if they find that you digest it they won't allow you to assimilate it. Their whole history has been like that. If they stage a quarrel between Churchill and Cripps it is the usual way in which merchants quarrel when we go to them for a donation. I have always seen that when I go to a gentleman for donation because Rajen Babu or Mahatma Gandhi was coming, the moment he saw me he would know what I am about and the father and the son would begin a quarrel. The father abuses the son. The son refused to cremate the father's corpse when he dies. For half an hour the quarrel lasts and we are paralysed. In the night the son comes to you and gives you Rs. 25. This is the drama that is staged in order to whittle down the payment. Whatever the Englishman does—and he does it of a set purpose and with a motive—there is no doubt about it he does it deliberately. Is this quarrel between Churchill and Cripps a sincere quarrel? Absolutely nothing of the kind. They must keep on staging the drama so as to make it appear that they are enemies so that innocent simpletons that we are we may be overpowered by this play of acrimoniousness on one man's part and the conciliatoriness on the other man's part. Never believe it. No. After all, what is the previous character of the English people that we should allow them to continue to be debtors? In 1930, on 21st and 22nd September, when Mahatma Gandhi was in the steamer, on his way to the 2nd R.T.C., the Bank of England closed its doors. When the Bank of England closed its doors they called it a holiday. When we close our doors we become insolvent: They took a three-day holiday, went off the Gold Standard at once and then changed the Government into a National Government! And they had just £90 million worth of gold in the coffers of the Bank of England, that is Rs. 135 crores. They owed 90 crores to America and 45 crores to France—and not a grain of gold to spare on that day! That was the insolvent condition. And while France immediately said "I stop payments" to America, England made one or two payments and then England also stopped.

1,600 million dollars was the money that was owing to America from England after World War I. That was why America was so cautious this time: "My friend, this time Cash and Carry"—paisa lao, cheez le jao. Then they said, when 'Cash and Carry' was exhausted, when all the securities of Britain in America were pawned, then they said, 'Lend and Lease'.

Had we not got the British securities here? We have got £750 million worth of them—about Rs. 1,200 crores. We have received a total of Rs. 133 crores for war materials, 224 crores for pensions, and 213 crores promised before 1951; that makes it Rs. 570 crores. There is still a balance due to us of about 900 or 1,000 crores. That can easily be adjusted with the British securities here. Let us tell them, "You want us to be a Dominion, you want to have friendly relations with us, you want to send goods to us, you can't live without increasing your exports by 50 per cent". You say you have to maintain a higher standard of life. My dear fellow, you have been carrying this on at the expense of India where we have no standard at all. Well, you can have some standard of life provided you adjust the things correctly".

It might have been up to our Delegation to break off the negotiations and come back and take instructions for a second occasion. There is no hurry. After all, this matter is not going to be settled in a day. And what is the position? Our accredited representative has gone there; a delegation has helped the Finance Member. He has entered into a deal. Either we have to repudiate the bargain he has entered into and thus bring a virtual vote of censure upon the Government of the day, or we have to accept it as an accomplished fact, a fait accompli and quietly abide by it. Besides these two alternatives is there a third alternative? And is that the position in which a democratic Legislature should be placed on this matter? Therefore, I say this debate is infructuous, it is academic, it is a schoolboys' debate, it is a debate of orators, of demagogues to display their oratory, and nothing is going to happen out of it, because we are perforce obliged to support what you have done. The question is whether we are doing it out of the compulsion of circumstances or whether we are doing it out of the abundance of our conviction of the facts. The latter we are not doing—the former we cannot help doing.

That is the position in which the Government of the day have placed the Legislature, and that is not a very enviable position. Any way, so far as the pensions are concerned I think it has been a fair adjustment. It would have been a much better thing if we could have negotiated one per cent interest upon our securities there, and they may have allowed the interest as a set off to the pensions. £1,100 million could easily bear £11 million annually at one per cent, and this £11 million is roughly the amount that we have to pay, that is to say 9.6 million. If that be the case it would have been a nice adjustment, but of course I know the difficulties of adjustment. We have entered into many bargains, we have failed on many occasions; but we cannot always guarantee success in all these matters.

A casual observation was made as if to say, "Well, why are you not satisfied with the 230 crores that I have got for you, you have not ordered capital goods for the money?" But I say, why not buy capital goods? Why do you blame the capitalists why not purchase the machinery which you need for your plans, yourself from England in order to recover the monies due from that country? Has the Government no responsibility in the matter? You have published your industrial policy. You have had your election manifestoes. Have you not said somewhat pompously that all the key industries will be nationalized? Have you not clarified it and then divided all the industries into different categories some of which can continue where they are and others will not be allowed to continue as private concerns? What have the Government been doing for the last one year if they have not hatched any plans for securing machinery for manufacturing turbines, boilers and for making electric and other goods, dynamos, batteries and transformers and a thousand and one things which you ought to have made? What power have I got? I have got a mind, a desire, an ambition, a plan, an expert, but nothing else; I have to approach the capital goods and machinery through Government."

I am glad the Finance Minister casually let fall a remark which I suppose is not a confidential one, that he has instructed the Controller of Capital Issues not to put a spoke in the way of any company being formed which requires machinery. It is a very happy augury. I hope people will avail themselves of it. But you see you cannot compel the people, the very people who are fighting shy of capital on account of our declaration of policy, and then taunt them saying, "You have not imported machinery". How can they? After all they are selfish people; a well-to-do man is a selfish man—a capitalist after all is not quite an unselfish man, and the Finance Minister more leans towards that side than this side considering his financial position, therefore, naturally the capitalist would not do anything which does not pay; and members of his ilk also do the same. Therefore, I say it behoves the Government to work out a scheme by means of which it will be possible at least to avail themselves of this Rs. 213 crores worth of machinery.

I have already stated that our position is the most unenviable one, that our vote is bound to go in support of the Government of the day, that it is not voluntarily given, that it is not cheerfully given, but that it is wrung out on account of the compulsion of the circumstances.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari (Madras: General): Mr. Speaker, Sir, I feel obliged to speak having been a member of the delegation that went along with the Finance Minister. At the outset I would like to say that I am not asking the House or its Members for congratulations for what we have done. It has not been a very pleasant job and I do not feel that we have scored any outstanding success. So, we are not asking for any congratulations. If my friends in this House would like to condemn me for having been a member of the delegation and for not having done what in their view I ought to have done, well, I am quite prepared to accept the condemnation so long as that condemnation is reasonably based on facts, and the circumstances under which we were working. But if we are going to be condemned merely because somebody has got a bee in his bonnet, somebody is not prepared to take into account the existing circumstances and insists on living in a world which is fifteen years old, somebody really thinks that this is a forum in which he ought to say what he ought to have said against the British Government five or six years back, well, Sir, I say that he is not right and I am entitled to give a proper explanation of my conduct as a member of the delegation.

I feel that my honourable friend the Finance Minister will categorically say at the end of this debate that he was not very pleased himself with the results obtained.

I would like to refer to the remark of my honourable friend Dr. Pattabhi Sitaramayya. He said that it was unseemly that the creditor should go to the debtor. But I heard, even as a boy, that when somebody comes and sits outside one's house, people say, "Why are you sitting there like a creditor"? It seems to be the practice that always the creditor goes to the house of the debtor. I am not saying anything in praise of the acumen of my leader the Finance Member when I say that he said openly in London, "I wish the position were otherwise; I wish my country were a debtor country and that Sir Stafford Cripps came to us in Delhi to ask me to settle the debts". We were not proud of the fact that we had to go to London—if my honourable friend Mr. Shibbanlal Saksena's statement was made in all seriousness—to beg for releases. We did not beg. I would like to tell him that we went to London as proud citizens of an independent country, prepared to demand what is fair and reasonable, having in view all the circumstances of the case and if it happened that what was offered entirely unfair we were quite prepared to come back.

Sir, there is one point which the Honourable Doctor Pattabhi brought out, namely, that this is a matter of Hobson's choice for the members of the Congress Party in this House, that either they have to vote for this demand or express a lack of confidence in the Government. I do not think, Sir, I am betraying any secret when I say that the Delegation had at various stages intimated to the Cabinet in India all the circumstances of the case as it stood before them and we had the privilege of obtaining its views thereon. It is not as if the Finance Minister will unilaterally take responsibility for disposing of hundreds of crores of money of the people of this country; nor could I, at any rate, as a member of this House and being responsible to my fellow-members of this House, permit without a note of dissent any such bartering away of our rights without some kind of sanction, without some kind of approval, of the real rulers of this country. Sir, if that position is recognised, the other things more or less fall into their proper perspective.

Criticisms have been made—quite a number of them. The first criticism had been made by a gentleman who I see is not in the House. Mr. Lari is a member of the Opposition. We in this House and the Press and the galleries have often mentioned that legislative work suffers because there is no opposition. After Mr. Lari's speech yesterday, nobody in this country can say that the Congress Government is functioning without an opposition (Mr. Naziruddin Ahmed: "There is no real opposition".) because that speech of Mr. Lari was an opposition speech. His speech was such as to lay emphasis on what Mr. Churchill claimed. His speech was such as to decry the efforts of the Government of India. His speech was such as not to represent correctly what was the real position. If that did not reveal the existence of an opposition determined to oppose, I do not know what it is.

Sir, Mr. Lari attempted to show that the whole arrangement was temporary and he based his arguments on a letter which he misquoted. It is really a letter from Sir Wilfrid Eady to our Finance Secretary and not a letter from Sir Stafford Cripps, in which the words "interim releases" have been used. True. Certain arrangement was come to some time in August 1947 and all subsequent arrangements have been built thereon. Nobody claims that this is a permanent arrangement for releases that we have got. We have only got an arrangement for three years and nothing more. To that extent, this is an interim arrangement; it is not a permanent arrangement. But from that interim arrangement, he sought to build up a case that the whole question was an interim settlement notwithstanding the fact that the Honourable the Finance Minister had categorically said that so far as the Government of India is concerned the accounts are closed.

Sir, I can quite understand Mr. Lari saying that Mr. Churchill is right: that the accounts could be re-opened and it could be scaled down later on. It is Mr. Lari's duty to put the worst construction on anything we do. But the fact remains that it cannot be scaled down as the position is today. I admit that any debtor is in the position of saying at some time or other that he could not pay. Any amount of assurances that we get from Sir Stafford Cripps or the entire Labour Party will not safeguard us against the possibility of England saying some time that "we are not able to pay the debt". Then, the question really is: Are we covered against such a contingency? That is all we have to look to. Friends here have asked: Did we, did the Finance Minister, ask for a categorical assurance that there would not be any scaling down? Why should we? I think if the proposal had been put up by any member of the Delegation or it had been supported by the Finance Minister, I would have opposed it with all the strength that I could command. Why should we, placed as we are in this country with about Rs. 700, 800, 900 or a 1,000 crores may be, of British assets—why should we say that we want an assurance from U.K. that she would not make any attempt to scale down the debt due by her? If she attempts it, we will take over the British assets in this country in settlement of what is due to us. That is our security for the proper behaviour of our debtor in regard to the payment of the entire debt that is due to us, payment which by agreement will perhaps be spread over a period of years. So, I think, Sir, that if the Finance Minister refuses to recognise a unilateral statement on the part of Sir Stafford Cripps that the question is open—and such a statement could not be made by him with any authority unless the matter has been put up to us and he had obtained our concurrence—if the Finance Minister now says "I refuse to take notice", I think it is perfectly correct and every Indian who has got the interests of this country at heart should say the Finance Minister is correct. We are not going to permit any scaling down. If any attempt is made, we have enough resources in our hands to more or less off-set an attempt on the part of Britain to scale down her dues to this country. That is why, Sir, in an opportunity that I had of speaking through the medium of the A.I.R. after we returned, I said the time has come when we in India, at any rate, should no longer talk about insecurity of our assets in Britain; the time has come when we should no longer recognise even any talk of scaling down. Mr. Churchill may say what he likes. Anybody may say that he likes. We have enough securities in our possession or at any rate, very nearly enough, to cover us against any contingency and we are not going to take notice of any such suggestion made by an opposition leader in the House of Commons or even of a faint approval in the shape of an answer which would beat the Delphic oracle by Sir Stafford Cripps.

Mr. Speaker: If he is going to take more time, I suggest the honourable member may continue after Lunch.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock, Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: Mr. Speaker, Sir, when the House adjourned for Lunch I was dealing with the question put by members of this House whether it is right to say that the ghost of scaling down has been finally laid. I was saying, Sir, that so far as we are concerned, it is so; so far the documents in our possession help to confirm that belief and we have enough documents, and lastly so far as security is concerned, we have adequate security in our hands to see that any possible threat by any future British Government of trying to interfere with our Sterling Balances can be effectively met. Sir, I think that ought to allay any fears that our politicians, economists and businessmen have in this country. But about the future Sterling assets—this takes me, Sir, to the other subject, namely the position of British assets in this country. It has been suggested, Sir, that we should have made some agreement with the British Government so that the assets of British citizens in this country could be liquidated and adjusted against our Sterling dues. Sir, in the past, as a member of the Opposition in this House I have often times pressed for liquidation of certain of the British assets in this country, so that the amount of our Sterling assets be appreciably diminished. The position today happens to be that by development of the various transactions that we have concluded there has been a certain amount of diminution and also because of the fact that we have to part with a certain amount of sterling to Pakistan, there will be a further diminution in our Sterling assets. So much so, the estimate made by the Finance Minister in his Press Conference talk that we shall have about 800 million pounds in England is very nearly correct. And things being what they are, the question one has to ask is “Do you want a diminution of this amount by forcible acquisition of British assets in this country”? The honourable Mrs. Ray suggested yesterday that we might take over the coal mines belonging to British interests in this country and nationalize them; we might take over tea plantations belonging to British interests and nationalize them. Sir, there is nothing to prevent the Indian Government nationalizing the coal mines and in that process the coal mines belonging to British subjects will also come into our hands. What will then happen is that the payment that we will have to make to the British subjects in England will go from the blocked sterling. My honourable friend Mr. Shibban Lal Saksena has some doubts about this matter and I could, in order to allay any doubts that exist in the minds of honourable members of this House, quote from any document, not a letter written by our Government to the British Government but quote from a document produced by the Bank of England. The Bank of England’s report for the year ended 29th February 1948 has a paragraph in regard to India; this report also makes mention of the financial agreement made in August 1947 and of the further agreement made on 15th February 1948. It says, finally: “It is agreed that the net movement on Capital account between India and the rest of the Sterling area should be compensated through the Number 2 account.” If the House wants a categorical proof that any sale of British assets in this country will be compensated through Number 2 account, here it is. The document produced is not by any of us, but by the Bank of England. I think that is sufficient satisfaction for us to feel that if British assets are sold in this country either to the Government or to somebody else, the sale proceeds will go to diminish the amount of money standing to our credit in the Number 2 account namely, the blocked account. I have to tell Mrs. Ray that if it happens that the Indian Government decides to nationalize the coal mines, the value of the coal mines belonging to British interests will go to diminish the sterling assets that we possess. I would like to say this. One might ask: “Why, not take all the British assets all at once and reduce our sterling balances?” It would in my view be an extremely unwise step. Of course, if one holds the same view as my honourable friend Prof. K. T. Shah, it might be the proper thing to do; but some of us happen to feel that now we are an independent country with complete charge of our own destinies and foreign trade happens to be an integral part of our activities and we, therefore want to keep on foreign exchange resources without liquidating the foreign exchange that we possess and buying assets of doubtful value, unless it becomes absolutely necessary. I will again put it to Prof. Shah to whom shall we hand over the working of these assets; are we going to nationalize these and take over the administration. Departmentally, will you hand it over to these bureaucrats who will probably not manage it efficiently or shall we hand it over to capitalists in whom Prof. Shah has no confidence and in whom I possess a confidence which is only a degree less than Prof. Shah’s confidence. I would rather if the British interests are operating these assets and operating it decently and under Government control and obeying Governmental regulations. Let them operate these till such time as we decide to take over of all coal mines and all tea plantations whether they be British-owned or Indian-owned. (Shrimati Renuka Ray: ‘In the meantime sterling may depreciate’.) I am coming to that point. So I feel that it is worthwhile keeping our foreign exchange resources and also keeping the initiative that we have.

Secondly, I do not know if we are going to get enough help from our own capitalists in this country by starting the various industries that we have in view. I would rather that our capitalists or the Government start all the industries necessary. But it is a fact that we do not have enough capital in our hands for all the projects we have on hand as for all the industries that are necessary to be started in our country. Certain portion of capital will still have to come from abroad either in the shape of capital goods or in the form of investments. At the present moment bringing in of any capital from the sterling area is difficult because of the physical problem of transfer of money as that will only go up to swell up our blocked balance. A time will come when probably we might be able to get over this difficulty when the required foreign capital is readily available.

Sir, I would like, even though it is a digression, to mention that some businessmen in England, to whom I had to explain our Industrial policy, felt that India is a fairly safe country for investment. It may be that you want them, or you may want America or some other country to help us, but there is no point in frightening all of them by saying that we are freezing all the foreign assets of a country without any provocation. Actually nobody would have any grouse against us for nationalizing all our coal mines and in the process of taking over the coal mines belonging to the British people.

[Shri T. T. Krishnamachari]

As it is, it may not be quite wise for us to frighten them by declaring, we are going to liquidate British assets in this country. I do not agree with those people who say that India can have a completely self-sufficient economy. I do view with a considerable amount of pride that we have in our hands an export trade of the value of 500 crores which is a very valuable lever in any international arrangements between this country and foreign countries. I do not think it is really worthwhile to labour on this idea of liquidating foreign assets in this country any more, now that we know that we can take them over whenever we wanted to do so, and the Government has got enough power and this legislature or its successor can enact adequate legislation to take them over, except for the fact that if we unduly discriminate against any foreign nation, we may not get foreign help when we want.

My honourable friend Mrs. Ray reminded me of the doubts about the safety of our sterling. Incidentally, my honourable friend Professor Shah said that our sterling assets have been devalued already several times over. I would like to draw the attention of my honourable friend to this though I would not like this to be quoted against India by England at a later day. (Prof. N. G. Ranga: 'It will be'.) The position is this. So far as England is concerned, the rise in prices of industrial raw materials during the years 1938 to 1948 has been roughly a little less than 100 per cent. I am quoting the figures from the U. K. Board of Trade Journal. They start the figures at 100 in 1930. It was somewhere about plus 30 in 1938 and in 1948 it was plus 238, just about 100 per cent more. So far as we are concerned, the position in the matter of industrial raw materials and manufactured articles was somewhere about 100 in 1939 and it has gone up to somewhere about 366. These figures have no validity. You may have a different set of figures for different products. The general index in regard to wholesale prices is about 366 in May 1948, 442 for industrial raw materials, 317 for some manufactured articles and 350 for some manufactured articles. It may be that if we had supplied them raw materials or manufactured articles as against which they owe us sterling, we might not have made a bad bargain out of that.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Madras: General): It is not a fact that our raw materials were priced much lower? They themselves admitted that.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: I am not entirely unaware that a certain portion of the raw materials that we supplied were at controlled prices. I have often along with my honourable friend Prof. Ranga protested against the supply at these controlled prices. By and large, that only probably represents about 300 crores of Rupees as against which we have repatriated 400 crores in liquidating the debt we paid U. K. I do not want to provide U. K. people with arguments against us. I am only saying that there is the other side of the question also to be considered.

The other factor is, what will happen if the sterling is devalued. Probably, if we are still linked to sterling, we will also have to devalue the Rupee. There is perhaps greater justification for devaluing the Rupee than their devaluing the sterling. The contingency is not likely to arise now for this reason. England happens to be one of the few countries in the world where prices have not risen materially in comparison with other countries. The prices in England are very much lower than what they are in countries like U.S.A. in comparison with the prices that ruled in 1939. So much so, a leading authority on currency like Prof. Hawtrey had written to the press during the time when we were staying there, urging that the British Government should over-value the pound, or at any rate, go back to the rate of exchange between the dollar and the pound that existed prior to 1940. The tendency now seems to be the other way about. The prices in England so long as they are maintained seem to provide no justification for devaluation. Because, they are a deficit country and they have to go to America for purchases and devaluation will only affect them adversely. As things are today, devaluation does not seem to be a major fear so far as we are concerned. If you leave your foreign assets with any foreign country England or the United States of America, that kind of fear is always there. I think, for the time being, that need not unduly perturb us.

The next question with which I would like to deal, is the question of payment for military stores. Some friends asked for break up of this figure of 100 crores Rupees: My honourable friend Dr. Pattabhi Sitaramayya suggested that merely because it is a round sum of 100 crores, in settlement of the whole thing, quite a large portion of that has been in the shape of free gift. I am afraid it is not so. I felt at the time of the settlement that there will be the danger either way: of people in England saying that their Government had accepted an ad hoc amount and the people in India saying that we have paid an ad hoc amount. The one guarantee that we have not done a thing of this nature is this: the final adjustment of accounts between Pakistan and India will entail a meticulous break up of this 100 crores without which we cannot get from Pakistan an acknowledgement of their debt due to us in this regard. The break up happens to be this: 15.48 millions or 20.64 crores for installations; unit equipment, that is equipment left with the Units of the Indian Army which was supplied by England in the past 4.73 crores; stores retained 61.2 crores, surplus stores 37.71 crores; odds and ends like things left over by the SEAC 5.13 crores, which makes up a total of 123.33 crores. Actual figures have been gone into with a great amount of detailed scrutiny and if there has been any adding up, let me tell you that the adding up has been more in the item relating to SEAC stores than in any thing else.

Shri K. Santhanam (Madras: General): It is the settlement value and not the estimated value?

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: This is the settlement value. My honourable friends ask, what are these installations worth. It is a long history, which I think probably the Finance Minister will explain if the House wants. But some of us here like Prof. Ranga and Shri Ananthasayanam Ayyangar who have been in this House before, knew all about the question of the military assets of U. K. in India. There are various assets which are joint assets of the two Governments; there are certain assets in which by arrangement with the British Government, India paid for one half of the value and Britain provided one half and ultimately when the war was over, it became India's property. These are certain assets which are equipment for the purpose of improving the industrial capacity on account of Britain. The Government have gone into the whole thing carefully. Of course, any estimate is an ad hoc estimate. I can tell you so far as the book value of the installations is concerned, it is 123 crores and odd and what has been paid actually is only 17 crores. You may ask whether these have just no value. In fact, it does not happen to be so. There is quite a lot of pucca structure for which payment has been in the region of 25 to 30 per cent. of the original book value. These structures are still occupied by us and made use of. These aerodromes which are now being used by the civil aviation companies all come into that category. The buildings are categorised pucca buildings; they will probably last for 15 or 20 years. They are being made use of and we have only paid a value of about 30 per cent and for these and for the kutchha structures about 6 per cent.

[Shri T. T. Krishnamachari]

In regard to stores I think the best case that has been made for this settlement was made by Dr. Pattabhi Sitaramayya. He said that the disposal of stores by our Government in the market was made for just a song. Actually the stores are sold at a price fixed by the department. The prices fixed by us in regard to the payment in England has been on that basis. A tin of preserved eatables was sold for just about $1\frac{1}{2}$ or 2 annas; and if our black-marketeers made money on that, somebody benefited in India, no one in England did. Actually it happens that so far as disposal stores are concerned the value was an extremely conservative one and they accepted it. We did not try to pull wool over their eyes, we tried to be very fair and we had to tell them that we had to guard the interests of the Indian exchequer and take no risks. My own feeling is, as a person who has gone closely into it along with the officers of our delegation, that it is not a bad job. I will not say it is a bargain; we did not try to cheat them of what was due to them but we did guard ourselves against possible loss and we have amply guarded ourselves; though it happened that some of our friends on the Pakistan side who were with us did probably tell the people there that India was trying to drive a hard bargain. We were very fair and, incidentally, you can take it that we have been honourable.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva (C. P. and Berar: General): May I know how much out of the 100 crores is likely to be realised by us?

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: The stores that will be sold will be about 37 crores, the rest will be more or less what we will use. In any case I am sure that if Mr. Sidhva wants it the Finance Minister will ask the department to give him all the details. I think I have rather been treading on dangerous ground in talking about military stores and I will not go deeper. But I can assure this House that while we have not tried to cheat Britain into any transaction which is unfavourable to her we have amply guarded ourselves against any possible contingency of a loss. And I think therefore, the criticism made against the settlement in this regard is extremely unfair. There has been a large volume of criticism in the press particularly by my friend Mr. Mannu Subedar; but that is a type of criticism which is now just beside the mark, and the criticism of people like my honourable friend Mr. Mannu Subedar has always been more or less the same thing. He said that all the money realised from the sale of British capital assets in this country has gone to extinguish our current account. It has not been so. I have demonstrated very clearly that the net capital transfer has always gone to the blocked account. Similarly, so far as stores are concerned, the criticism is really off the mark.

One word about the settlement in regard to pensions. In this House it would have been observed that there has been a wide divergence of opinion in regard to the settlement of pensions. Some people felt that what was done was the best method of settling, some people felt that we should have made an outright settlement straightaway and given U.K. a fixed amount and got rid of the whole business of paying pensions thereby finishing it off lock, stock and barrel. In fact I will not be revealing any secret when I say that there was difference of opinion even in the delegation on this matter. Personally I felt that we had better get rid of this responsibility once for all and be done with it, so that we will not have to maintain a staff to pay these pensions and we will not have any annuities and any annual adjustments to make in our budget which perplex my honourable friend Mr. Das. But the majority of the delegates thought otherwise and the Government of India supported their view. There is much to be said on both sides. The point in favour of this type of pension settlement has been urged by the Finance Minister. One or two additional points I should like to mention. If we were to settle the whole thing lock, stock and barrel at one time there would have to be a very meticulous examination on an actuarial basis of the probabilities of life, and it would probably have provided a basis for disagreement between us and the U.K. The other factor which my honourable friend the Finance Minister did not mention yesterday was this that the bulk of our pensioners in the U.K. happen to be military men. It is possible that they may seek service against India some time later. So long as they are our pensioners we have them in our hand and we can always control them and tell them that if they fight against India their pensions will not be paid. That was urged as a consideration in favour of this arrangement. But the present arrangement absolves us completely from all speculation. Of course it runs to 45 years—a major portion of it—and for 15 years thereafter. I agree it is a long time but it is not a long time in the expectation of human life as things are because people are living up to 80 or 85 years. There is no obligation cast upon me to explain it but I can say, as the Finance Minister explained, the sterling in England stood to the credit of the Reserve Bank and this amount paid towards these tapering will in future stand to the credit of the India Government. It is for the purpose of effecting that transfer and paying the Reserve Bank that this particular supplementary demand has been brought before the House. So that the Government of India will pay the Reserve Bank the rupee equivalent either in cash out of its balance or in ad hoc securities as the case may be. And the adjustment will have to be made on this basis. This money once it has been paid goes to swell our debt or reduce our cash balances or both. For the future either the Government of India could create a fund into which the amount expended on pensions annually could be paid and the total debt amortised; or alternatively the amount of pensions paid annually will be shown against our assets in the U.K. namely these sterling annuities and the consequent reduction in our rupee expenditure in the budget will not be given any special mention. Our assets however will be shown in the budget. Two hundred and seventeen crores of rupees in sterling will have to be shown to the credit of the Government of India; it might be shown against any debt that the Government of India incurs on this account in which case as I said before there will be a transfer annually which will show a diminution of these assets by making a corresponding debit in the budget. It is not a very complicated thing once we realise that hitherto sterling has been in the possession of the Reserve Bank of India and this particular amount as sterling goes on as credit to the Government of India and the Government of India has to pay something in return to the Reserve Bank; when the actual annual payment is adjusted it will bring down to sterling assets standing in the name of the Government of India by the same amount as the amount of pensions charged to the Government of India's account. It is pretty simple if put down on a piece of paper and shown as debits and credits.

The next most important point is the question of releases of sterling from the blocked account and the multilateral convertibility that we have retained. As I have prefaced my remarks at the outset, I am not satisfied with the quantum of the releases, but at the same time it is undoubtedly true that if we had spent whatever stood to our credit before the negotiations began and had only a working balance of 30 million pounds which was envisaged in August 1947 agreement, we might have got a little more from the U.K. U.K.'s position was merely this that U.K. can only afford a specified amount over and about the exports that we make to England every year to be sent out to that country. That figure was estimated by Sir Stafford Cripps, it may be right or wrong. They said, "We can only afford to pay so much over and above what you export to us every year", and naturally the amount that is standing to our credit would diminish the amount that we have got. But while it is not my duty to explain an obvious default on the part of the Government of India,

[Shri T. T. Krishnamachari]

I should like to mention this in extenuation of what happened, namely, that in the first half-year, that is the half-year ending the 31st December 1947, India did consume 27 million pounds out of the amount released; and if that pace had been maintained in the first half of 1948, we would have had a much less amount to our credit in the No. 1 account. But what happened in the second half-year? I suppose there were various considerations like the change of Commerce Ministers, the department being rather afraid that we might overdraw from out of our net account and then there is always this fear of our food demands which makes it impossible for any Government department to estimate with any accuracy what we will have to import and lastly the fact that we were not having proper data in regard to our own experts.....

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: There is no co-ordination.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: That is true; we have no co-ordination. And if any Minister of Government wants justification there is ample justification, because after the 15th August there were fewer officers, we had no proper Secretariat, our files were in disorder, and we had all the trouble in Delhi which paralysed the work of Government. We know it but we could throw all the blame on the Government. But what happened was that in the next half year 3 P. M. we pumped in 24 millions more pounds in our current account. Our exports rose. Having spent 27 millions in the first half year and pumped 24 millions in the second half, we spent in the net result only 3 millions over the entire period of one year. If as Prof. Shah says we cannot import consumer goods, well, naturally that will be the position.

With regard to the import of capital goods, it is not my responsibility. But I will have to say something on that particular question later on.

So that was one of the factors that worked against us and I must say that I was not particularly happy about it. But you must realize that in this quantum of sterling of 213 crores for three years we will not be exporting the amount due for the payment of pensions. That will bring down the exports needed to offset our imports by another 6 million pounds per year.

Anyway, there it is and it is for you to judge whether it is right or wrong. I may say that I stood out to the end and I had the support of the Honourable the Finance Minister, because both of us felt that we will have to stand the test of criticism in this House. That is a fact which I bore in mind and my honourable friend did bear in mind equally well right through the negotiations, viz., that a delegate who was a Member of this House and a person who is a Minister of Government will have to answer to this Legislature. In fact our responsibility to this Legislature was never lost sight of though the other Members of the delegation were not in the same position. We had this thought uppermost in our minds. If we had not agreed to this amount we had no alternative but to break with U. K. As I said before, the decision taken was made with the full knowledge of the Government of India and their concurrence. It cannot be said that we were not prepared for a break. The Members of the delegation were quite prepared for such a contingency and we had our facts and figures ready for the purpose. If there was to be a break, we were quite prepared to take the next necessary step. I will ask the honourable members of the House to look into the criticisms of the press and of various business organizations. They will see that there is quite a volume of opinion in favour of the settlement which says that what has been achieved is reasonable. After all in a matter like this it is very difficult to judge with any precision and if the honourable members of the House feel that the delegates have failed—well that must be accepted.

On the matter of multi-lateral convertibility my honourable friend, Mrs. Renuka Ray had some criticism to offer. Personally, as between the total amount of releases and the quantum of multi-lateral convertible currency we have obtained, I personally think we have done well in regard to the latter and have obtained a fair quantity of multi-lateral currency and I would ask the House to total up the various items mentioned by my friend the Finance Minister that would go up to a fairly considerable amount and form nearly three-quarters of the amount of surplus releases we have acquired. We are covered against the amount of our deficit in 1947 to Sweden and Switzerland which amounts can be paid in sterling. By this arrangement we can get all European countries, except Belgium, Portugal and the Anglo-American zone of Germany accept sterling from us. So far as Belgium is concerned it is good for us to have things as they are because we have an export surplus with this country.

That concludes what I have had to tell the House in explanation of what the delegation did, a duty cast on me because of the fact that I was associated with this delegation. Finally I would like to urge this. I was myself one of those who in the past in this House, times without number, spoke on the sterling balances. Many others also did. We have always belittled the fact that we would ultimately get any sterling from U.K. Others have said that this is a nest egg from which we can draw upon to meet the demands of all our post-war recovery plans. There was exaggeration on both sides. We have now settled the issue more or less, so far as we are concerned. And after the division of Pakistan the amount that will stand to our credit will be less than 800 million pounds. We have enough security for that amount and we shall spend a substantial quantity out of that 800 millions in the next three years. I would urge the members of this House after the discussion is over just to forget all about it. It is not worthwhile going on harping on the sterling balances and fritting away our energies which should be directed into more fruitful channels.

I agree with the honourable members in this House that we must compel the Government here and now to make adequate arrangements to utilise this 160 millions properly. The secretariat of the Delegation had prepared a list of commodities that we shall require for Government use only for a period of five years and it actually staggered the U.K. officials when the list was presented to them. But if we concentrate even on what the Government could absorb for their various hydro-electric projects, for improvements in various directions, and plan our needs we can utilise this amount. But it would be necessary that we have an adequate and strong organisation in London for this purpose. Let me tell the House that I personally feel that we must have a very good organisation in Europe for purchases, for locating what is available, for getting the best prices, for seeing that those orders are progressed. And as things are with London becoming more or less, again, so far as currency is concerned, the centre of activity in Europe, there is no better place than London for the location of such an organization. I would ask my honourable friends to help in compelling the Government to create a first-class organisation either in London or somewhere else in Europe because there is very little chance of getting anything from America for some time to come. There seems to be an enormous amount of possibility of obtaining the bulk of our requirements in Europe and let us make use of it and let us not after 2½ years say: We have still a considerable portion of this amount left unspent.

I will be failing in my duty if as a non-official member of the delegation I do not mention one fact. My honourable friend, the Finance Minister spoke of the work of the secretariat of the delegation in regard to assessing the value of the market stocks. I had the pleasure of staying in the same premises as the members of the secretariat of our Delegation. They were drawn by and large from the Finance Department and the Commerce Department and there were two officers from the Reserve Bank of India. I must say that I felt very proud that we had in them persons who were more than a match for their counterparts on the other side. There is no more fitting tribute to India's ability to govern itself than the fact that when India was bereft of the services of all those people who ruled her in the past, whose rule was supposed to be necessary for us, we were able to take a delegation from India composed entirely of Indians who were able to uphold the credit of India and India's secretariat. I think it is a matter of personal pride to me that I was associated with these gentlemen whose names it would be invidious to single out for praise. I do hope that the House will realise that we need not feel ashamed of our secretariat, for they would distinguish themselves wherever we might send them.....

Shri H. V. Kamath (C. P. and Berar: General): Mutual admiration, I suppose!

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: It may be that my honourable friend Mr. Kamath being no longer a member of that service has a very natural psychological antipathy towards these people. But these gentlemen did not all come from the I.C.S. They were drawn from other services as well, some of them were also drawn from the Reserve Bank. However, I shall not labour the point. I do feel as a non-official member of the Delegation I must mention the enormous amount of work that the secretariat staff put in and the credit they brought to this country thereby. I hope the House will pass this supplementary demand and the country will rest content with the fact that our sterling assets or such as is left out of it is safe. The money is secure and it would remain so notwithstanding anything that Mr. Churchill might say or anything that Sir Stafford Cripps might say to mollify Mr. Churchill.

Pandit Lakshmi Kanta Mahtta (West Bengal: General): Will there be another supplementary demand in favour of the staff?

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: Sir, while I do not share the views on all the points.....

Mr. Speaker: I might inform the House that in view of the fact that there is a large number of honourable members who wish to speak I would restrict the time limit to 15 minutes now, because at 4.30 the Finance Minister will wind up the debate.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: Sir, while I do not share the views expressed by my honourable friend the last speaker on all the points, I am glad that he has confessed the failure of the Delegation on certain matters. On the other hand, let me tell you that yesterday while the Honourable the Finance Minister moved the Demand to discuss the sterling balance question he made a very poor show. He rightly stated that our money is quite safe in the Bank of England, viz., Rs. 1,536 crores. As we all know when a depositor deposits his money in a scheduled bank or a guaranteed bank he can draw cheques as he likes, whenever he likes and to whatever extent he likes to the amount that he has in the deposit. If the money is in fixed deposit then there is a certain period during which the interest is to be paid by the bank and he withdraws at the expiry of that agreed period. So one cannot safely state that to that extent our money is safe in the Bank of England. I am referring particularly to the interest which it has been stated would be paid at .78 per cent. I am very sorry that in that respect our delegation had put a sorry figure. America is charging 2.2 per cent from Britain today and America is charging 3 per cent. to all other countries. Naturally I fail to understand why our Delegation was generous enough to accept .78 per cent. This has brought a loss of 500 crores to us if you distribute the money over 50 years. It brings in Rs. 10 crores loss towards interest every year. I want to put the question to the Delegation whether they feel themselves happy over this transaction, when they very well knew that America was charging quite a different rate to Great Britain, why should we have been so generous to tell Britain that we would be content with .78 per cent. On the other hand we have a grievance. You should have stated that that money is our own money which we can draw whenever we like and to whatever extent we like but we have been prevented from doing so, because of your peculiar economic situation and to that extent we are prepared to help you. Certainly I fail to understand why we should not have stated that and forcibly asked them to pay a legitimate rate of interest. I want an explanation from my honourable friend Mr. Krishnamachari who was a non-official member of the Delegation. I can understand the Government member bringing in many excuses but as a non-official member I am asking my friend what explanation he is going to offer.

As regards installations and stores about which many members have pertinently put questions, my friend Mr. Krishnamachari has not satisfied me in the least. He said "What are those installations? Aerodromes?". Does he refer to the city aerodromes? I do not refer to them but those over which crores of rupees have been spent during the war aerodromes built in the villages of the interior in the various parts of the country. I have personally travelled in motor cars in the interior of villages and there are many such small aerodromes, which will go up to 400, which were built for war purposes. I am not prepared to accept even for argument's sake.....

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: If it can prevent further argument of the honourable member I might say for his information that all the aerodromes that we have abandoned we have excluded from the valuation and we have not paid anything.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: I would like to know which are those installations which have been abandoned?

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: I will ask my officers to give you the details.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: I would like it to be placed on the table of the House during this session. Only a fortnight ago I was touring a stretch of 145 miles in a car in the U.P. and Banaras district.....

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: How did you get the petrol?

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: I was on an official tour. I would like you to be very careful before making such a remark. I do not purchase petrol like you in the black market. I was travelling on an official tour a stretch of 146 miles and I came across four aerodromes in the interior. They were the homes of vultures and foxes. The bricks and the buildings were worth nothing, everything were dilapidated. I would like my honourable friend to see whether any part of them will be ever serviceable or worth one pice.

Coming to the stores near this very city in the Delhi Cantonment in the last March session I went with some of my colleagues to the M.E.S. The stores are unserviceable. Thousands of packages are lying unpacked as they were received from America or Britain or elsewhere. They have not been opened but condemned as unserviceable and out of date. I asked the officer in charge "What are you going to do?" He said they are of no use and have to be reshipped. I would ask my friend Mr. Krishnamachari to go and see them. It is only six miles away from here. Let him go and see and let us know what is the value of this. If these are to be sent back what would it cost in the shape of shipping, freight and cartage. Otherwise they will have to be thrown into the sea. When we see with our own eyes these things how can we say that this 133 crores which you have made as a present will be returnable to the State. That is my difficulty. It may be that some stores may be valuable lying at some place but stores seen by me have been condemned as unserviceable. Motor trucks, vehicle parts in thousands have been imported and they are absolutely unserviceable. You may have counted all that. Place the whole list on the table and if I find the bargain is profitable we shall give you credit that for 500 crores you have paid 133 crores and thereby saved 376 crores to the State. Take the credit where it is due: otherwise from what I have seen I may say that this money is wasted.....

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): What will you do?

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: I am mentioning it as we see it.

About the release the Honourable the Finance Minister stated yesterday that the fact remained that we must admit that it is the fault of ours by not purchasing the capital goods which were voluntarily offered by Britain. I do not know what kind of goods were offered to us, whether they were capital goods like textile manufacturing machinery, or electric manufacturing machinery or tool-making machinery. He merely stated it and blamed the industrialists and after that he came upon this House blaming the members. May I remind him of the industrial policy, decided in this House only last session and he says he stands by that. We really stand by it. I want to know what has he done. During these four months why did he not purchase these capital goods on behalf of the Government and brought them to India. If need be we could have nationalised them and started our production. Why did he fail in that? He was part and parcel of the Government. He could have told his colleagues and the Prime Minister "This is the position. We must buy these articles. If we don't buy them we are not going to get more money for this purpose". No explanation has been given for that. He merely says that he stands by that resolution. The House stands by that resolution whole heartedly and yet the industrialists want to non-cooperate with us. They don't want to share in the capital—they don't want to subscribe in the loans which may be raised by Government for the reasons best known to themselves and also to the Honourable the Finance Minister. I do not know why they are backing out after this industrial policy has actually been laid down which I consider beneficial to them also.

I consider the Pakistan Agreement is to an extent better than the Agreement that they have entered into with India. In the Pakistan Agreement they have got more amount for release. Their agreement is subject to reconsideration at the end of this year, and the British Government have promised to consider the question of release of sterling and dollar balances at the end of this year. There are many things I would like to point out which nobody—neither Mr. Krishnamachari nor the Finance Minister has stated—as to how Pakistan has fared in this Agreement. Let him say in his answer and refute my statement that Pakistan has not fared better than ourselves.

He told us yesterday that as far as certain capital goods were concerned the Government have been promised cotton, metals and plywood and petrol, oil and lubricants. I questioned him that it was not quite correct to state that the British Government have promised us that they would supply us all these articles. I will, for his benefit, read from page 58 of the White Paper. It is letter written by Sir S. Cripps to the Finance Minister on the 9th of July from which it would be seen that while they have promised the supply of cotton, non-ferrous metal and plywood, as far as petrol, oil and lubricants—which are more important for us—are concerned, point is doubtful. This is what he says:

"I write to assure you that the Government of the United Kingdom appreciates your problem and will do its best to help."

It is help and no promise. Then he says:

"Representatives of our Supply departments and your officers have already discussed the ways in which the United Kingdom can assist as regards India's requirements of non-ferrous metals, cotton and plywood, to which commodities you drew my special attention."

Whereas in the preamble to the Honourable Minister's statement he has combined all the oil and other articles, stating that all these have been promised, what does the next paragraph say? It says:

"You also expressed anxiety at the possibility that India might have to pay more dollars for her imports of petrol, oil, and lubricants in the event of an increase in the proportion of petrol, oil and lubricants supplied from dollar sources as compared with previous years. I am advised that this is most unlikely, but should such a situation develop my Government will be glad to enter into discussions with yours with a view of finding a solution."

There, in the first paragraph they state they will 'help'. In the second paragraph it is stated 'they will enter into a discussion' with us. Is that a promise, I would like to know from the Honourable the Finance Minister. When he stated yesterday that they have definitely promised us these things and when I questioned him, he says "you don't believe me and you believe them". That was his argument when he was answering my point while I referred to this matter. I would really have quoted the figures to satisfy the House to what extent India has been unfairly helped by this delegation, and to some extent we have been let down, whether innocently or carelessly I do not want to say. But the fact remains that our delegation have been very lenient to the British Government; they have shown a soft corner for them in their heart, at the expense and cost of India. I do not know whether my friend, and particularly my friend Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari—deserves credit and a vote of confidence or congratulation. As far as the Minister is concerned it is a different matter, but my friend, who was the non-officials' mouthpiece, laid stress on this time out of number. I want to ask him under the circumstances "Do you want congratulation from us, whom you represented, when I fail to see after reading and re-reading as to what is the immediate relief that India has really achieved?" It is nothing. If this release money is to be really utilised later on by the Government they must revise their import policy. The import policy is at present very defective. You have no co-ordination with various departments. You did not see that you had so much money with you and still Commerce Department refused grant of licences. People wanted to import goods, they were clamouring for the grant of licences but you would not give them. You favoured somebody with lakhs of rupees. The others you did not. The result was that so much money was left unspent and the money has now been accumulated. I do not know what is going to happen to this unspent money. Sir, when you have rung the bell I must obey you and therefore I sit down, but I would have preferred to satisfy him further from his own books and all other figures from the Pakistan Government which I have that they have certainly fared worse than Pakistan.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: The reference to sterling balances has almost become a hardy annual. On two previous occasions we had discussions on them besides discussions during the budget debate, and this is the third time. I thought it would be the last time when we would have to discuss the sterling balances issue. I, along with many others in the Standing Finance Committee, wanted that there should be a final settlement of this issue once and for all now. That does not mean that England should pay away all the thousand one hundred and odd million pounds straightway into our hands. It may take time. It may pay some amount immediately and it may take some time to pay the rest. We saw no advantage in going there again and again and standing before their doors and getting pittances from time to time.

So far as these thousands one hundred and odd millions of pounds are concerned, the Honourable Minister said that this is the property of the Reserve Bank of India. No. It is not the property of the Reserve Bank. They issued merely notes and have agreed to pay on demand—"I promise to pay to whosoever is in possession of the notes, so much and so much rupees". Therefore the backing for all the currency that has been issued is these thousand one hundred and odd million pounds. It belongs to the toiling millions of this country. It belongs to every man who sacrificed his all during all these five years, underfed his wife and children, himself starved, went naked and supplied the foreign country. It was thus squeezed out from the country. What I am sorry for is that this White Paper that has been placed before us and the various speeches that the Honourable Minister has been making are more in consonance or keeping with what Sir Stafford Cripps should have said that what we should have said. I thought we had one advocate who would certainly place before the world and the United Kingdom our difficulties. I thought Mr. Chetty, being a baniya, would be certainly anxious to wrench out from them as much as possible considering the difficulties we have had and the way in which the money was squeezed from the toiling millions of this country. Before War England was a rich country. It was one of the richest countries. Though her exports were small her imports were large on account of the invisible exports she was able to maintain. It is due to that she is thriving with all the force at her command. During the war she did not suffer because she laid an upper limit on wages; rationed articles. Their Health Report stated that during the period of the war, with less eating than they were eating before, their percentage of deaths decreased except those that went under the shell directly. Their health improved. Today, shortly after the cessation of war, like a ball they have jumped once again upon their feet. They are going to place themselves on their feet very soon and I am glad to learn from my honourable friend Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari that our debtor country is certainly sound. To that extent I am extremely glad—for that information, if not for anything else that has transpired immediately. If it is sound, one day we may get back what we have there, provided they are going to give.

Now, Sir, that is the present position. How are we? We are one of the largest countries in the world, with perennial rivers, with a stable mother earth unlike Japan and other places—we have no Vesuvius of any kind,—with equitable temperature, and lots of labour. Everything is there in the shop, but in the mouth of the son-in-law Saturn sits for ever; the son-in-law would not get anything in the mother-in-law's house; though there may be plenty available the son-in-law would not be fed. That is the position in which we are placed. There is an ordinary proverb in our parts like that—I don't know if there is one like that anywhere else.

Day before yesterday I had occasion, in a fit of enthusiasm, to quarrel with our Government, which unfortunately some of our news papers wanted to take too much advantage of, and then say, "There seems to be a rift in the lute". If I criticize our Government it is for the better improvement of our Government. I have stood by the leaders of our Party who have worked for the freedom. (An Honourable Member: 'Not an apology?') It is not a question of apology but I would like to warn persons outside.

In a huge machinery, here and there there may be a nut or bolt which may be loose. With all earnestness I am appealing to my Government not to be indifferent to it lest a hundred years hence the whole machinery may crack. It is not as if immediately the machinery is cracking, or the pilot is bad or the foreman is useless and has to be dismissed. I find some of the news papers are anxious to take advantage of my words. I am sure that they are keen to bring about a split in our camp. I do stand by the Ministers, by the Leader and the Deputy Leader of our Party in whose hands the country is safe; for a long time to come we may not be able to displace them. But speaking out what I feel, I say that so far as the management of a particular wheel has got out of order, we have to see whether greasing is necessary and whether if necessary a wheel has to be displaced here and there; so that the machinery may be set on the road properly in the interests of the larger machinery some adjustments may have to be made by themselves or elsewhere.

Now, Sir, so far as the present subject is concerned, I am not satisfied with the manner in which it has been done. The very approach is wrong. The approach—you will read from this paper—is, "How much can they give"? It is not, "How much do you want"? That is the way the question has been approached and that is the main limit that has been set upon the negotiations. "How much do you want? How much can you digest"? If somebody has my money with him and I ask for it, he says, "Are you going to celebrate your daughter's marriage? Or are you sending your son to America? Otherwise keep quiet, I don't pay". As if I have to go to him from time to time and beg to him placing my entire budget before him saying, "This is my budget; I have placed it before you. Therefore kindly release some portion". I am entitled to ask for it here and now and ask him to pay it with various loans etc. "You have the Marshall Plan, everybody in the world is going to make you richer, but never has any consideration to the poorer countries in Asia. Therefore, you give it."

That is not the approach, instead the approach is, "How much am I able to digest"? That kind of an approach is wrong. Assuming that you knew how much you are able to digest, I am really surprised as to why you travelled all these 6,000 miles to a foreign country to say that we were not able to digest even the £ 80 million granted to us. One of these conditions should be there: "Irrespective of my capacity to digest, I want my money because it is my money. Transfer it to my account, I will do what I can". What is the guarantee that they can pay tomorrow? Already Mr. Churchill and others of his like are creating trouble; three years later they may not pay at all. Therefore, say, "Here and now transfer it to my account".

That is the approach. That is exactly why we said in the Standing Finance Committee that you take some more people. On a former occasion I told my honourable friend the Finance Minister on the floor of this House that in the previous six months' arrangement he did not, according to me, fare well. Then I suggested that he must take stout men with him. He said, though not stout bodies he will take stout hearts. I am surprised that he has not stood by it. We have two stout hearts in the Standing Finance Committee..... (Interruption) I am not one, Sir, because I am stout body. We did have two stout hearts.

Sir, I have been a vakil practising for a very long time. Never does a client agree to enter into a compromise without always saying that he would consult his younger brother; possibly he will never pay a single pie to his younger brother, but in the matter of compromise he will say, "I will consult my younger brother". In the matter of negotiation he must have taken some younger brother with him; Prof. Ranga who would kick right through and some intractables he must have taken with him. Suppose at any time it breaks, what will happen? We assume the threat is made, what does it break? How will it affect us? £1,100 million were due to us on the day the Honourable the Finance Minister took the aeroplane and went to England. It is all the other side that has gained and have not gained.

[Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar]

So far as the military stores are concerned their book value is 500 crores. My honourable friend Mr. Sidhva said so many things. But I am not one who would say that; because it is not possible for them to remove all the aerodromes, therefore, I ought not to deny a fair price so long as I use the aerodromes. Of course we ought not to pay a pie for those left behind unserviceable. If anything is to be paid let it be paid. The only question is whether the 500 crores is correct. The Finance Minister said that his office has looked into that matter. We have no time to look into it meticulously and I am sure the office would have looked into it. £ 100 million is a big figure and unless somebody goes round and investigates these articles it is impossible to assess it.

Therefore, accepting the £ 100 million which they are going to set off for the surplus stores left behind by the British Government here, the total due is reduced from £ 1,100 million to 1,000 million.

We have to pay them pensions. What we in the Standing Finance Committee advised them was that they are not going to give it away. £ 1,000 million at the rate of one per cent per annum gives by way of interest £ 10 million. We have to pay pensions, both provincial and central, of over £ 7 million a year. Why not pay off from the interest that we earn? Why do you liquidate the capital? Why do you convert the pensions to 224 crores and then pay it off? I was not able to understand the explanation on this subject. The Finance Minister was addressing himself constantly to a talk in the Press that he must have commuted these and once for all paid. Between commutation and converting it into a number of annuities there may be a difference. Possibly he may be right. If it has to be judged from the point of view of commutation this may be a better arrangement. But there is still a better arrangement which was suggested to him by the Standing Finance Committee. What is the hurry? In the blocked account today even if Rs. 300 crores odd go away we have still £ 700 million odd and the interest on this at .75 per cent will yield £5½ millions. Those millions are our property and they can go in reduction of these pensions. Under these circumstances I am not prepared to agree to this commutation or purchase of annuities. It is unnecessary. What has really happened is this; the Finance Minister does not possibly understand the implication in the purchase of annuities. For sixty years he has given instalments; he has agreed to purchase annuities in instalments over a period of sixty years. He is prepared to take it instalments, that is sixty years, which the Finance Minister has given to the other side. Now, Sir, I am not agreeable to this course.

Then two other concrete suggestions were made. Nearly a £ 100 million out of this 1,000 million were the property of this country even before the war started. Therefore so far as this 100 million is concerned, at that time they were multilaterally convertible. We were entitled to recover them in gold. So we suggested that so far as these are concerned, we should insist on their being paid by gold or by dollars and their being treated separately from the rest. That has not been done in these negotiations.

Then, so far as the balances are concerned, we divided the entire thing into four parts. We suggested that 25 per cent might be insisted upon for payment either in gold or in dollars or being made multilaterally convertible. This ought to be a final arrangement.

Regarding 25 per cent of the balance, capital goods must be given to us. I am not a little surprised at the manner in which some explanation has been given as to why capital goods have not been purchased or indented for. I have got figures here. In the year 1947 import licences applications were 2,200 to the value of Rs. 53 crores, of which 1,554 applications were accepted and licences granted to the value of Rs. 41 crores. There is no good blaming our people here. Not many have been rejected. Only 185 licences were not issued and even those are under consideration. Now, there are three bottlenecks. Either the applications were not granted by the Commerce Department or the Reserve Bank did not give any exchange, or at that end they were not prepared to part with capital goods. What I suspect is that they are not parting with the capital goods. So instead of a financial agreement with this country, it must have been a commercial agreement with Great Britain. What is the good of merely getting anything on paper from one account in the Bank of England to another account? Hitherto it had stood in the name of X; now it stands in the name of Y. What is the use of this if it is not going to be translated into capital goods we need? Sir Stafford Cripps is not going to give a farthing; nothing by way of gold, bullion, dollar or anything. Under these circumstances, it is idle, it is unnecessarily wasting time as if we are going to get the 1,000 million. What ought to have been done is to have found out what they are going to supply. They are not supplying. That is my feeling. They are not supplying at the other end. Our friends went with a host of Secretaries and Under Secretaries for the purpose of getting something, but evidently they have not been able to cut much ice there. They are not able to show to us anything. It only reminds me of what a person in my country side who is called a Punganoor man did. He went to his house and told his younger brother. "On the way a Pathan came. He asked me to wear a load on my head. I said 'No.' He said, 'You must'. So I carried it. Was I afraid?" Then he proceeded, "He asked me to carry it. I refused to carry it. He said 'You must carry it'. So I carried it. Was I afraid?" And then, he said: "The Pathan was walking swiftly and I lagged behind. I could not follow him. He said 'Walk briskly'. I walked. Was I afraid?" And finally, he said: "The Pathan asked me to take the load to his village and place it there and I did it. Was I afraid?" This is the way in which both the Honourable Minister and the friends that we sent from here have tried to defend this matter. I am not trying to pooh-pooh. This is an important matter. I am only trying to put the humorous side of it, so that one may not lose sight of it.

So far as capital goods are concerned, I am not asking him to re-write what has been done. If it is still possible, I ask him so far as the pensions are concerned, to say that we do not want these annuities. Let us grant only 100 millions now, that is so far as the surplus stores are concerned. Regarding the annuities, there is nothing wrong; there is no breach of faith with the British Government; we are not going to get any profit out of it and we have not refuted our liability to pay the pensions. All that we say is that even with the limited rate of interest of .78 or .75 per cent, we are going to get—although I dare say a more reasonable interest could be expected—even this interest at .78 or .75 per cent, on 1,000 million gives about 7.5 millions which are quite enough to wipe out the pensions that accrue from day to day.

Shri K. Santhanam: But do you want also our balances to be there for sixty years?

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: No. My friend thinks that a man will go on as if he is going to be a Markandeya. Whoever is going to live for sixty years? So the amount on pensions will go on decreasing. I do not think anybody will live as long as that and I would suggest to anybody who wants to live long to go to my friend Mr. Santhanam and take his blessings.

[Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar]

So that is my point as far as capital goods are concerned. We can do that even now if the Honourable Minister does not think.....

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: I have done exactly that thing. I will explain.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: I am always anxious to be shown that I am in the wrong.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: No, you are right and I have tried to do what you consider to be right.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: If that is so, I will pass on. Another thing that I must mention is that my exuberance I said the machine does not seem to be working, but my Honourable friend seems to support me and to have come over to this side. He says who is responsible? He is the Finance Minister. Why did he not drive the others? As a matter of fact, what I see is that there was drive so far as other Departments are concerned. But nothing seems to have come out. The Finance Minister went all the way. He had books. He had figures. He could have negotiated in terms of goods. No 1, 2, 3. This is what England should do. But what happened is this. It happens with every debtor. The debtor says: "I have purchased from this shop. So do not go to that shop. Go to the other shop." He will purchase from the other shop with his current earnings and will not be able to pay the other shop. Similarly, England wants as much advantage as she can from us. Therefore, you must have placed insistence upon them that they should give us priority. Now they are giving priority for all capital goods to X, Y, Z. We have priority 4th. Why could we not have the first priority in capital goods? What is the arrangement that has been made for this 160 million at least? What is the guarantee that you are going to use it? My hon'ble friend Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari says "Establish another concern there and then go on."—Well, a High Commissioner, a Low Commissioner, all kinds of Commissioners there are. What is the present position? Under those circumstances, it is wrong to have obtained a financial agreement. All that I am submitting is that it is necessary that these gentlemen must have addressed themselves to these considerations and entered into not a Financial Agreement but a commercial agreement.

The third point is we suggested that 25 per cent of this we should be enabled to float a loan in America and the British Government may guarantee the loan. Let them pay in various instalments. We have not got dollars. The British Government advised us gently "Go and borrow from the International Monetary Fund." Are we in need of this advice? The debtor refuses to pay and then says there is the other creditor whom you may approach. Still, we have borrowed to the tune of 52 million dollars from the International Monetary Fund. We have an adverse balance of trade with America. My friend Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari says, "You are not going to get anything from America." Now which man will not be willing to sell if we have got the money and offer the money? Today prices are high everywhere and our prices are also high. Under these circumstances, we gave the advice that 25 per cent may be got by way of dollars for a loan.

Lastly, Sir, we advised also that 25 per cent. may be utilised for the purchase of coal mines and others. This advice was given by the Standing Finance Committee to our friends. We are yet to hear why this practically unanimous Resolution was turned down. We still believe that if they had adopted it, we would have fared better in the negotiations.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time is up.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: If I have said anything and taken more time it is to say that one safeguard may have been obtained. After all, we have not lost much. Still there are two-thirds of the money that is due. If it is still there, it is open to the Finance Minister to consider this proposition that he may once again consider the question as to whether we should now give away 200 and odd millions for the purpose of creating tapering annuities for a long period. If he withdraws that supplementary grant and presses only for 100 millions certainly we need not have any hesitation, even otherwise, if he has entered into an agreement we will certainly stand by him.

Dr. B. V. Keskar (U.P.: General): Mr. Speaker, during the course of this debate, we have had all sorts of views expressed about the sterling balances and what our Delegation, which went to England, should or should not have done. There were two opposite points of view expressed here. On the one hand, some of our colleagues here—and amongst them some very distinguished economists have very violently criticised the Finance Minister for the agreement that he has concluded in England, the very basis of the agreement has been criticised. Well, on the other hand other honourable members have hastened to his rescue; they have even given him certificates about his competence and his ideas about sterling balance. I have no doubt about his competence. You all know it and he is conscious of it and we all know the work that he is doing. I do not think that he is in need of any certificate from us.

I fear, Sir, that during all this debate, we have not tried to tackle the problem. I am afraid most of our honourable friends here have not tried to tackle the fundamental point. On the other hand they are trying to make an unassailable case for India which is good. Supposing that we made an unassailable case for India and we got it passed to our own satisfaction, to the satisfaction of the Indian members, to the satisfaction of the people at large. Well, what then? Where do we go from there? We would not go any further, by having said something to our own satisfaction in this House, in getting the sterling balances settled.

I therefore submit, Sir, that this is a practical question; this is a political question; this is not an economic question; this is not a question of scaling down of the sterling balances which England owes to India and all that it implies. We are all unanimous and I quite agree with my honourable friend Prof. Shah that England does owe to India this huge sum, but the problem is how are we going to make England pay this amount? In all this debate I have heard only one practical suggestion made by my honourable friend Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena, and it is that we should confiscate the British capital invested in India. I again say, Sir, that no other practical suggestion has been put forward.

With regard to his suggestion, I would submit that it is possible, as Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari was saying; personally I think that it is theoretically possible; it is practically not so possible. It is easy to say that we will confiscate all the foreign capital in India; we can do it, no doubt, but we have to be ready for all the consequences. Are you in a position to realize from England this amount today or in a number of years? There is an amendment standing in the name of my honourable friend Mr. Lari that no guarantee has been taken for not scaling down of the sterling balances in the future. Well, Sir, I would submit that whatever assurances that the Finance Minister may give here, I personally think that it is not possible for anybody to guarantee anything with regard to the future of the sterling balances. I think it is always dangerous to predict very long and very far in politics and especially when such big sums are involved. Personally I think that we are probably not going to get any enormous amount whatever of the sterling balances, though the Finance Minister has assured us that the balances are not going to be scaled down. It is, Sir, a question of the capacity of England to pay. I know, Sir, that it would be too hard for England to pay us.

Prof. H. G. Ranga: Willingness of America to allow her to pay.

Dr. B. V. Keskar: It is not only the willingness of America to allow England to pay, but it is also the capacity of England to pay. No doubt, we would be very glad if England pays us; personally I would be very glad, but we know that it is not in human nature. Well, in those conditions what are you going to do? Do you think by simply maintaining here that England ought to pay the sterling balances, we are going to make her pay? You are not going to do anything of the kind. Let us be practical and let us be realists and from this point of view I do consider that some sort of settlement had to be arrived at.

[At this stage Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair, which was then occupied by Shrimati Ammu Swaminadhan (one of the Panel of Chairmen).]

It is quite possible that the settlement that the Honourable the Finance Minister and the Delegation that went to England, arrived at was not probably the best possible settlement. It is also possible that another Finance Minister, more dynamic and with greater power of persuasion might have persuaded the British Government to give us a few more millions. I agree it is possible—I am not going into the details, but I do maintain that either you had to come to a settlement or you had to throw overboard the whole sterling balances. I am not going to mince matters and I think that whatever you might put in theory, in practice you cannot ask any country however big to pay such a huge amount as my honourable friend Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar just said: "Put it in our accounts this 1,500 million pounds".

Well, Sir, I would very much like it, but I do not think that it is practically possible, and if tomorrow England refused to put it what are we going to do? It all boils down to this that in theory it is very well and we can agree with Prof. Shah, but for me the question is: who is going to implement it? Who is going to bell the cat? I think, Sir, it is this practical point that we have to keep in view and from this point of view, I do think that the Delegation that went there did some good work. I would not agree with it in every detail; there are many details in which I disagree. Many of the points have been stressed by other friends who spoke before me. As Dr. Pattabhi Sitaramayya was good enough to say this was a kind of academic debate, but our having a fling at the Finance Minister and throwing blame on him and the Government policy is a very bad thing. Supposing we had been in the delegation, what we would have done? We could have broken there, come back and sat at home; we would have put the sterling balances into cold storage for ever. (An Honourable Member: 'Not at all'.) I would submit to my friends, Sir, that theoretical criticism apart, let us come down to brass tacks and accept that we had to come to a settlement and it is possible that whatever little defects of detail there might have been, we should accept it, that some good work has been done. Many things about the work done by the Delegation I would personally have criticised. They have been already put forward by other honourable members and I would not like to waste the time of the House. I find that most of our friends have been stressing the obligation of England to pay and have taken this opportunity of abusing it; I would like to abuse England, but I think we have done it so much that there is no point in doing it over and over again. (Mr. R. K. Sidhva: 'What is your practical point?'). My point is that we have to come to a settlement, some such settlement, whatever the details might be. I might disagree in the details with the Finance Minister, but a settlement of this kind had to be made and we have to accept it.

Shri Ajit Prasad Jain (U. P.: General): The motion of the Honourable the Finance Minister and the two amendments, one moved by Mr. Lari and the other by Professor Shibban Lal Saxena raise two fundamental questions: Whether the settlement entered into by the Honourable the Finance Minister regarding the sterling balances, that is purchasing stores and installations for a total amount of 100 million pounds, the funding of the pensions at a value of 166 million pounds, the settlement of the Defence Expenditure Plan at 55 million pounds, and the release of the sterling balances, a part of it in the form of hard currency, is a good deal or it is one which does not deserve the approval of the House? The second question is whether the question of scaling down of the sterling balances has been settled once for all or it is still left open?

My honourable friend Mr. Lari referred to the White Paper in extenso. But, unfortunately, some of the other speakers who said that the question of scaling down of the balances was still open to U.K., did not refer to any authoritative document. They expressed a kind of a priori opinion which does not carry much weight. In fact, Mr. Lari exhibited what one might call the pre-fifteenth-August mentality. His whole argument was that what the Chancellor of the Exchequer in U.K. or Mr. Churchill said is good and what the Honourable the Finance Minister says does not carry any weight. That is the old mentality that the Chancellor of the Exchequer could overrule the Finance Minister of India. The whole question is one of interpretation. The letters and the documents relating to the settlement are all published. I would refer you to page 2 of the White Paper that deals with the first stage, when the question of sterling balances came up for the first time in February 1947. There is a list of questions that came up for discussion. In this list, we do not find that the question of scaling down was raised. The next stage arrives when the basic agreement of 14th July was entered into between the representatives of India and the United Kingdom. Article 4 of that agreement is very important. That article lays down certain claims which England made against India. Those claims are classified in paragraph 2. They relate to the value of the military stores and equipment, settlement of matters outstanding under the Defence Expenditure plans, the question of the release of sterling balances and the funding of the pensions. It is quite clear that there is no mention whatsoever of the question of scaling down. The next stage in February 1948 divides the sterling account into two parts: Pakistan has a separate account and India has a separate account. Even then, no question of scaling down is raised. During the course of the present negotiations, no question of scaling down was raised. Therefore, the Honourable the Finance Minister is perfectly correct when he says that the question of scaling down was never raised. No creditor ever goes to the debtor and says: do you want a scaling down of your debt? England never raised this question; it was not for the Finance Minister of India to say to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, do you want its scaling down? That would have been a foolish thing. The whole question before the Delegation was at what figure the sterling balances should be fixed. As the agreement of the 14th of August will show, tentatively, the value of the sterling balances was fixed at 1160 million pounds, but it was subject to certain adjustments. The question of adjustments was before the Delegation, and the Delegation has struck a final balance, which is acceptable to both the parties. How does the question of scaling down, therefore, remain alive? Why should we care for what Churchill asks and Sir Stafford Cripps replies? I was glad to hear a stout 'No' from the Finance Minister, when a suggestion was made to ask for clarification from the Chancellor of Exchequer. We stand on absolutely firm grounds.

Coming to the details of the settlement the first question was about the value of the stores and installations. A good deal has been said in this House and outside about the value of the stores. We have been told that they have been over-valued. During the speech of the Finance Minister, I asked a question as to the basis on which this value was fixed. Unfortunately, I could not get any definite reply from him. Mr. Krishnamachari has given us some figures; but they do not take us very far either. I have seen some of the assets left by the Britishers in India. We have got an aerodrome and quite a number of barracks and other buildings and installations left in that part of the country from where I come, namely, the Meerut Division. My own idea is that some of these installations left by the British are of no value; they are not even worth the cost of transportation. There are hundreds and thousands of barracks which used to accommodate soldiers, over which crores of Rupees have been spent and which are lying in an absolutely dilapidated condition and which will hardly be of any use. It is not possible for us to correctly assess whether this estimate of 100 million pounds is correct or not. It consists of a variety of items. All that we can say is that it is an ad hoc amount, about which it is difficult to say whether the stores and equipment and installations that we have received are worth the amount or not. May be that they are not; but we can well leave it to the experts who have calculated the value.

The other question is about the capitalisation of pensions. I can well understand an absolute capitalisation which absolves us of all responsibility for payments in future. I can understand the position where we are responsible for the payment of pensions until they are exhausted. But this kind of intermediate arrangement whereby the responsibility for payment remains ours, but at the same time, we have locked up not less than 166 million pounds in the hands of the British, without deriving any corresponding advantage, I cannot understand. This amount could have been invested in our account; we could have opened a third account, which would earn interest. We would have absolute domination over this money. Under the present arrangement, however, our responsibility for the payment of pensions remains intact. The Honourable the Finance Minister has advanced three reasons for doing it. He says that it would have shown lack of faith on our part if we had absolved ourselves of responsibility to pay pensions. I submit that this is only a sentimental reason. We were not going to absolve ourselves of this responsibility for nothing. We were going to make a block payment and fix the responsibility upon another person. Another reason which he gave was that these pensions are payable during good conduct. If pensions were to be capitalised, it could have been laid down as one of the conditions that in case any of the recipients of the pension did an act in a manner which would entail the forfeiture of his pension, that amount would be refunded to us. We could continue to be judge of good conduct. The third reason given was that India may impose income-tax. In the agreement, it could have been provided that in case these pensions are subjected to income-tax, the amount of income-tax would be payable to India by the British Exchequer by making deductions at the source from the amounts of the pension. To my mind it appears that we have without deriving any corresponding advantage blocked up a very huge amount of 166 million sterling. In fact in a way it ties us to England for a very long period.

The question about the rate of interest has been raised. The Finance Minister said that the rate of interest on the sterling investment varies between .75 and .8 per cent. That is too low a rate of interest. Mr. Sidhva has pointed out that U.S.A. is charging 2.2 per cent. What is the position in India? In last October a loan of 40 crores was floated at a rate of 2 3/4 per cent and that did not attract sufficient cash subscription. We invest our resources at a rate of interest of .75 to .8 per cent. while we are floating our loans at 2 3/4 per cent; that is not a very wise thing to do.

The question of release of sterling during the next three years is another question which has been controversial. We failed to utilise the balance released last year. The more important question for us is to utilise the money at our disposal. Regarding that portion about 18½ million sterling which would be available to us for expenditure in hard currency areas, the first letters that were exchanged between the Indian Delegation and the representatives of the United Kingdom say that this amount will be in addition to any amount that we may draw from amounts from the International Monetary Fund. This part of the agreement has been confined only to one year. We all know that India during the last several years has been importing large amounts of grain; and at a time when we want to launch upon big industrial programme, we should have taken more of multilateral convertible money. I am afraid, as the Finance Minister himself admitted, that the amount available may not prove sufficient.

A suggestion was made by Prof. Shah that we could have repatriated sterling balances by acquiring the investments of the Britishers in India. I do not agree with that suggestion. That would mean that we would have converted the sterling balances into fixed productive assets that we already possess in India. We would not have added one iota to our productive capacity and would have locked up this amount. In my opinion their mobile resources should be utilized in setting up new schemes and enterprises. There is one more point that I should like to emphasise and that relates to Article VIII of the Agreement of 14th August 1947 which has been extended by this Agreement. Paragraph 3 of Article VIII says: "Notwithstanding anything in this article the two Governments shall not restrict transfers of capital from India to the United Kingdom representing—

(a) remittances of savings belonging to persons of United Kingdom origin leaving India in order to take up permanent residence in the United Kingdom; and

(b) the voluntary repatriation of investments by persons regarded as resident in the United Kingdom for purposes of exchange control in the United Kingdom".

It means that any resident of the United Kingdom who has been living in India and has made some savings or a person who has made investments here can encash his savings and investments and take them to England. This leaves an unfettered power in the hands of Britishers who want to leave India. I have no objection to their taking away their money, but it should have been made automatically payable out of the sterling balances. Under the arrangement laid down in the previous clause part of these amounts will be offset against our current earnings of sterling. I do not think this is a desirable thing.

I submit that this Agreement has many loopholes, but as it has been already concluded we are left with no alternative but to accept it.

Pandit Lakshmi Kanta Maitra: Madam, this is going to be the last of the series of discussions on this highly important subject of sterling exchanges for a period of at least three years from this date. It is hardly necessary for me to convey to the Finance Minister and to the members of his Delegation that we appreciate the very arduous task that they had undertaken on behalf of this country to effect an amicable settlement in regard to the sterling balances. We are also deeply grateful to him for the vehemence and insistence with which he resisted the claims and counter-claims which have come forth from time to time that India was morally bound to pay a more substantial amount as a set-off for the security she had purchased during the war. While we say all this and express our appreciation of the task that he undertook which was both difficult and the Delegation that was going abroad would have some inaugural conference convey to him the reactions of the different sections of the House to the settlement that has been arrived at. We realise that it is not within our competence to ratify it or to reject it; we are simply to express our opinion as to how we look at this deal from the point of view of the larger economy of the country. When such a delicate undertaking was going to be taken up we naturally expected—at least I naturally expected—that the Finance Minister and the delegation that was going abroad would have some inaugural conference here in Delhi or consultations with financial experts and commercial interests and then go prepared for the problems that were to be discussed there. From the speeches that I have heard so far I do not know that any such advisory board or council of experts was called prior to their departure from here. It will probably be argued that such a conference could not in all probability anticipate the various points of view that would be placed before it, and therefore the work of such an advisory expert board would have been more or less guesswork. I do not share that view. Any serious student of economics in this country who has been studying this question of sterling balances could well anticipate the points that were likely to be raised. For instance, my honourable friend the Finance Minister has categorically stated that the ghost of scaling down these balances has been finally laid. Where is the justification for that statement? He comes to that conclusion because of the reticence and perhaps studied silence of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. He must have construed from that silence that for all time to come this question of scaling down had been given the go-by. Today, I read in the newspapers reports to the effect that the Honourable the Finance Minister is said to have had enough documentary evidence in his possession to prove here and now that this was the case. I would invite him in his reply to come forward with all that evidence.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: I read the letter yesterday!

Pandit Lakshmi Kanta Maitra: If that is all the document which the Honourable the Finance Minister has on the point which he today read in reply to a supplementary question, then I am not in the least happy. For myself, I would not be satisfied with anything short of a categorical declaration from the British Chancellor of the Exchequer, that for all time to come, this question was not going to be raised. (Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi: 'Would that be binding on the successors?') Whether binding or not, such a statement should have been forthcoming. On the other hand, immediately after the negotiations were ended, Mr. Winston Churchill raised an outcry in reply to which the Chancellor of the Exchequer had to say that the matter was open on both sides. I can quite imagine that, God forbid, if Mr. Churchill were to come to power again in three years' time with his Conservative gang, he will see to it that the scaling down business was pursued with compound interest. (Shri K. Hanumanthaiya: 'He cannot'!) You may say he cannot. But if you had that declaration from the British Government the position would have been different.

Coming to the three main issues arising out of this, the question of the stores, fittings, fixtures and installations, which have been satisfactorily accounted for in the opinion of the Delegation, has been considered here and views have been expressed about them. My honourable friend, Mr. Sidhva, whom I do not find in his seat, was perfectly right in saying that most of the stores were out of date, unserviceable and not fit for use. On the floor of this House on several occasions, I have put questions to the Honourable the had been imported into this country immediately before the cessation of the war and which had been unpacked, had to be sent away, destroyed or put up for disposal. If the Honourable the Finance Minister thinks that he has been able to score a point there. I have nothing to say, because he represents the Indian Government and we must accept his statement at its face-value.

But with regard to the pensionary charges and the capitalization of the pension fund, I am surprised that Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari, defending it with all the vigour that he was capable of, said that it was a most perfect deal. We on this side of the House do not take that view. We do not think that this was really a satisfactory part of the deal. These balances have been in England all this time. Nothing by way of security was demanded and they could have been freely drawn upon from time to time as need arose. There was even the alternative of a lump-sum payment which had certain advantages notwithstanding the fact that income-tax could not straightaway be deducted from them. But that possibility should have been explored.

But what is still more vital is the question of releases. In the course of the next three years they are going to release only 80 millions. Now try to look at the picture as it emerges. Straight off you wipe out a huge block of sterling on account of your pension capitalization fund. That means that it reduces the volume of your reserves and substantially so, quite apart from whatever advantage you may have. We in this country have always looked upon this sterling balances as the very life-blood of the nation. It represents not only the goods and services rendered by the masses during the war, but it represents in abounding measure the sweat, and toil and tears which this country spent in abundance to acquire them. Therefore, it is only natural that Indians should be very sore over its settlement and if one honourable member here and another honourable member there expresses dissatisfaction, the Finance Minister ought not to be put away. This is very vital. We have all built our hopes for the future economic reconstruction of the country on the sterling balances. Therefore, we think that the quantum of release agreed upon will be grossly inadequate. My friend the Finance Minister and Mr. Krishnamachari said that six previous months' experience in this respect was not very encouraging. We could not utilise it to the full. But there is a variety of factors leading to this state of affairs and the Honourable Minister is also responsible in a large measure for that failure. If we could not consume that in the course of six months, is that any argument that he could not do it in the next three years? Could you not visualise that if we were not able to have our blue-prints ready for industrial development, the money would be withheld and the sterling balances would not be available to us? Now, if in the course of three years we cannot spend £200 million do you think there is any chance for this country to make any headway either in industrialization or in economic reconstruction? I do not see any future for it.

Then take the multi-lateral convertibility. Only 15 millions out of this is going to be available for that purpose. We feel that India should try to get her capital goods in the best market, wherever available, and if necessary we shall have to go to America for them: and £15 million sterling in my opinion is too small an amount. Moreover, you will find that nowhere in the report on these negotiations is there any indication that any interest was demanded. Great Britain was made to pay interest to America, though America was her most potent and powerful ally. But could we not claim straightaway from the British Government that since so many hundreds of pounds sterling were with them India was entitled to have some form of interest? I strongly feel that this should have been done and we are sorry that this was not done. This does not necessarily mean that we condemn our honourable friend the Finance Minister for what he has not been able to achieve. But I do feel that with his best intentions, with all his sincerity of purpose he has ultimately been out-witted by Sir Stafford Cripps and it is a misfortune that he could not come out better in this deal.

Whatever it may be, the deal as it is should be implemented in the proper way and in the proper spirit. Let not Great Britain come forward again and tell us that because you could not utilise the releases we had made on your behalf during the last three years, we are not going to release any further sterling for you. This is a queer sort of argument that a debtor advances to a creditor! The debtor seems to insist that the creditor should satisfy the debtor that he has spent the money in a certain way. This is not the way of a commercial or financial deal. Therefore we want the Government of India to be particularly careful to see that further tricks on India are not played by the Britisher. We have had enough of it and we must make them understand that he will not tolerate any more of them. As it is we have no other choice but to give our approval to the agreement today but we give that approval with a feeling of disappointment and despondency in our minds.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: Madam, on the whole I listened to the debate for the last two days with great pleasure. Having been in active public life for over a quarter of a century, I have not been in the least perturbed by some of the adverse criticisms levelled against the agreement on the floor of this House. Some of the criticisms were really actuated by the motive to create difficulties for the Government and to condemn whatever Government did. Mr. Lari's criticism was pronouncedly of that type. Some criticism was based upon a difference in the ideology and the whole approach to the problem. Prof. Saksena and Prof. Shah are representatives of that type. The rest of the criticism was really due to a genuine apprehension on the part of honourable members to see that the interests of India were safeguarded and their apprehension was really enhanced, leading sometimes to some confusion of thought, on account of a misunderstanding of the highly technical implications associated with this problem. I do not therefore resent any criticism at all.

Many honourable members started their criticisms with the observation that the Members of the Delegation were more influenced by the difficulties of England and were not fully alive to the sacrifices made by India in the past or to her needs in the present and in the future. I do not know wherefrom they got this impression. My honourable friend Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar drew my attention to the fact that I ought to have represented to the Chancellor of the British Exchequer that these balances were built on the sacrifice of millions of human being inhabiting this vast continent and suggested that we are entitled to some sort of compensation for the sacrifices that we made during the war period. How does my honourable friend know that I did not make that representation. Surely in presenting the White Paper I never thought it necessary to advance all the arguments that I advanced in my negotiations with the representatives of the British Government. It is not appropriate to give any detailed exposition of the course of an international negotiation. But I do not think that I will be violating any rules of international propriety when I say that in the very first plenary session between the Delegations I made it perfectly plain to the British representatives that they were responsible for the policy which resulted in the building up of these sterling balances, that these balances were built literally on the sacrifice and the blood of the Indian people and we had every right to demand that they should be repaid without demur. I may assure my honourable friend Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar and the other members of the House that it never occurred to our mind to over-emphasise the difficulties or needs of the British economy, though as negotiators involved in a highly technical matter we were bound to pay some consideration to that aspect of the question also. But the supreme consideration that was present in my mind and in the minds of my colleagues of the Delegation and all the officials that I took with me was the supreme need of India in the present and in the future. I had the fortune of having as colleagues on the Delegation men of undoubted integrity and patriotism, men of great capacity, men who understood the full implications of a highly technical problem of this kind and even to suggest that such members of a delegation ignored the interests of India will be doing very great injustice to our own countrymen. I wish to take this opportunity of expressing my own personal thanks and the thanks of the Government of India for the magnificent services rendered by all those members of the Delegation.

My honourable friend Prof. K. T. Shah referred to the question of the depreciation of the sterling and in an almost gloating manner he announced to the House that a de facto depreciation has already taken place, because the value of the pound today in terms of its purchasing power is not the same as it was when we supplied the goods. Yes, he is perfectly justified. But, Madam, depreciation and decay are irretrievably associated with all matters. Nothing that is born in the world, whether it is currency or professors of economics can escape it. Currencies depreciate and even professors decay and whether it is a depreciated currency or a decayed professor we have to accept them at their face-value!

My honourable friend Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar asked me whether we made any attempt to obtain the insertion of a gold clause like the one that the Argentina Government obtained. Yes, we tried our best but we did not succeed. It is no wonder that we failed. Argentina was clever enough, shrewd enough to insert the clause, when the original loans were granted but at the time when these balances accumulated we were not the masters of our destiny. I am sure that if there was a national government during the period of the war that Government would never have accepted the position of the accumulation of these large balances without a safeguard against depreciation. But there the facts are and having been landed in this position, not by our own action, the next best thing that we could do was to see that that very sterling in which so much of our fortune was invested did not depreciate. Madam, it is a curious phenomenon in this world that very often the creditor has to take care so as to see that the debtor does not become insolvent. In fact it is a very common feature in every country in the world that when a man who has borrowed large sums of money from a bank is unable to pay, and threatens to close his business, the bank cajoles him and proposes that further advances will be made to him. As creditors of England it is to our interest, as it is to the interest of all the creditors of England, to see that the sterling does not depreciate and it was in fact one of the vital factors that we had to keep in mind in the course of these negotiations.

My honourable friend Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari gave the other side of the picture as it were, that is the depreciation of the rupee as compared with the depreciation of the sterling during the last seven years. Though it is foolish to prophesy in this quick-changing world, my own feeling is that with all the tremendous efforts put forth by the Britishers their economy will recover very soon. When that economy recovers to anything like normality, not merely will there be no depreciation of sterling, but the chance of our recovering every pound of that sterling balance would become brighter. After all, the very self-interest of England would indicate that she must put forth every effort that she is capable of to restore the position of the sterling as a sovereign currency in the international economic world. England, I am confident, will fight, and fight very hard to get that position restored. When that position is restored, not merely is our balance safe in England, but our balance becomes also automatically multilaterally convertible.

I shall now go on to a few observations regarding pensions and stores. I tried my best to elucidate the points raised by certain honourable members. My honourable friend Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar suggested that the wiser course would have been to accept an interest of approximately 1 per cent. on our balance and out of the proceeds of that interest to pay the annual charges relating to pensions. He was right in assuming that the interest will approximately be sufficient to pay the pensions. What he wanted to emphasize was that we should have the benefit of the accruing interest year by year. Under this Agreement we have completely secured it. My honourable friend will find that both for the Central pensions and for the pensions of the Provinces within the Indian Union we have agreed to pay 168 million pounds. If he adds up the figures of the two tables given in the White Paper he will find that in the course of sixty years, in return for the 168 million pounds that we have paid today, England would have paid £198½ million. That 30½ million pounds represents the interest that we are getting on the capitalised payment.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: What I was submitting was not that we should earn on these 168 million pounds. I know the Honourable the Finance Minister has taken care to see that this interest is carried over and distributed so that ultimately our country gets £198 million as against £168 million that we have invested. As regards the balance in the blocked account there is interest accruing and from time to time and we may be drawing off. Instead of taking it away as current income of the Reserve Bank we might pay it off in the pensions so that the entire balance may stand as it is.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: While it will be seen that in the scheme of capitalisation of pensions we have secured full advantage based on 1 per cent. basis, we are also earning interest on the remaining sum—0.7 or 0.8 per cent. I think the difference is instead of earning 1 per cent. on the whole we are earning 1 per cent. only for a portion of the sterling balances. We could not succeed in getting more than 0.8 per cent. interest for the rest. But the interest will accrue in our favour. Therefore we do not lose the benefit of it.

This particular method of payment by paying off a capitalised sum became necessary in our interest because, as I tried to explain in my opening speech, if we did not do this, then the entire responsibility for finding the exchange year after year will fall on the Indian Government and the Pakistan Government will go scotfree in that respect. By making this arrangement the 148½ million pounds which has to be paid as a capital sum against the liability of the Central Government for pensions will be taken from the common pool of sterling before it is actually divided between the Governments of India and Pakistan. That is not merely a substantial advantage, but it was very necessary in our own interest to get this done.

Pandit Lakshmi Kanta Maitra: You hope to realize your share from Pakistan?

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: That has all been done in the Partition arrangement, and we need not go into that now. As a matter of fact I would like honourable members to realize that from the point of view of the actual money earned or even the convenience of payment, there is really not much difference between the final arrangement that I have made and the alternative of adopting Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar's suggestion and paying these pensions year after year. The one fundamental consideration was the need for separating the sterling balances between ourselves and Pakistan.

My honourable friend Mr. B. Das was somewhat confused about the liability that we have placed on the Indian tax-payer in making this arrangement. He thought that I have saddled the present generation with a liability which will be spread over for the next sixty years. Well, nothing of that sort has been done. This is purely a technical arrangement which will have to be made now with the Reserve Bank. We have agreed to pay £168 million now to the British Government out of our sterling balances. The rupee equivalent of it is 216 crores and odd. What we will do is this. We will have now to instruct the Reserve Bank to give to the Bank of England on behalf of the British Government this £168 million. To enable the Reserve Bank to do that we have to give to the Reserve Bank Rs. 216 crores worth of notes—Currency notes. Obviously we have not got all that cash. Therefore what we will do now—and what we propose to do is we will create ad hoc rupee securities of the Government of India to the extent of Rs. 216 crores.

An Honourable Member: Treasury Bills?

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: It is ad hoc Government of India securities—I.O.U.s. These will be given to the Reserve Bank. As against this ad hoc Government of India security of Rs. 216 crores the Reserve Bank will release to the British Government, through the Bank of England, the equivalent in sterling. After this transaction takes place, if you compare the Weekly Statement of the Reserve Bank with the previous week you will find that so far as Rs. 216 crores is represented, instead of sterling securities to that amount you will find Government of India securities to that amount. So no burden has been placed upon anybody. But the question arises "well, it is all very nice; instead of finding Rs. 216 crores of hard cash you simply write an I.O.U.s and give it to the Reserve Bank and against that you draw sterling securities worth Rs. 216 crores. You have now undertaken a debt to the Reserve Bank. How are you going to discharge it?" What will be done is, year after year, as the pensions become due and as our Budget has to be debited, suppose it is Rs. 10 crores for 1949-50, in 1949-50 we will hand over Rs. 10 crores to the Reserve Bank in cash and withdraw Rs. 10 crores worth of securities. If no other arrangement is made in the mean time, in sixty years automatically this debt of Rs. 216 crores will be wiped out. This is under the assumption that no other arrangement is considered feasible in the meantime. But suppose in the meantime we find that we are in a position to successfully raise loans in the market then it is quite possible that we might decide that as against the securities issued in the market we will tender them to the Reserve Bank and withdraw these ad hoc securities from the Reserve Bank.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: What will be the interest on the I.O.U.s?

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: That will be a technical matter which will be decided. The rate of interest will be the rate appropriate to the rate prevailing at the time.

Pandit Govind Malaviya (U.P.: General): What happens if England and India go to war against each other?

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: I do not see how it arises here.

Pandit Govind Malaviya: Yes, we lose Sterling Balances all right. But you are taking this loan from the Reserve Bank to pay this sum. We will lose the Sterling Balances as well as this additional huge sum.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: We are responsible for that.

Pandit Govind Malaviya: So, that is additional burdened responsibility.

Mr. Chairman: Let the Honourable Minister go on.

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: So, that is the technical operation involved in this pensions scheme, and no liability is placed upon this generation, which really ought to be spread over sixty years.

Now, coming to the stores and fixed assets, if honourable members will study the figures in detail, I have no doubt in my mind that they would be convinced that the bargain, to say the least, is fair to both sides if not positively on the side of India. Now we have paid Rs. 133 crores for assets and stores which are estimated to be Rs. 500 crores. The break-up of the 133 crores is somewhat like this:

	Rs.
Surplus stores	37.71	crores
Fixed assets	20.64	„
Stores retained for the use of the Defence Department by the Army	65.12	„
Unit equipment that is equipment that remained with the Army	4.73	„
Miscellaneous S.E.A.C. items	5.13	„

Out of the 133 crores that we have now paid to the British Government, we would recover from Pakistan in the form of sterling approximately Rs. 25 crores. In other words, so far as we are concerned we have paid only Rs. 108 crores and the House must satisfy itself whether we have got really tangible assets which are worth Rs. 108 crores. I will give a few facts and figures in this context.

Shri K. Santhanam: Do the 500 crores include the value of stores in Pakistan also?

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: Yes, it is the total. Some honourable members especially expressed somewhat sceptic views regarding the valuation of surplus stores. They think that we have probably paid for junk. The total amount that we have paid for surplus stores is Rs. 37 crores most of which is really in Indian territory. Out of this, up to 31st March, 1948 we have already realised Rs. 18 crores by the sale of these surpluses. But for the embargo that the Industries Department put upon further sales, we would have realised very much more. In the course of the current year we expected to realise about Rs. 20 crores. In other words by the end of this year we would have realised Rs. 38 crores which is exactly what we paid to the British Government for the stores. While it is not possible to predict accurately how much we will ultimately realise, the expectation of my officers is that on the whole we will realise not less than Rs. 50 crores in the sale of these surplus stores. In other words, in this transaction relating to surplus stores we are really making a profit of Rs. 13 crores. Now, if we realise 50 crores by way of the surplus stores then the value of the stores retained by us becomes Rs. 43 crores and what we have paid for the assets is only 18 crores.

My honourable friend Mr. Sidhva was very anxious to know whether we have paid for all the abandoned aerodromes, for instance. My honourable friend will be interested to know that the original book value of these fixed assets is 120 crores; for assets on which nearly Rs. 120 crores was spent, we have paid Rs. 18 crores and I would leave it to the honourable members to judge whether the bargain is not really in the interests of India.

But, Madam, apart from any question of bargain, there is one other factor which I refrained from mentioning, but since there was so much criticism on the floor of the House, I am bound to mention this. Let me tell this House that but for the existence of all these stores that we took over from the British Government on the 1st of April, 1947, we would not have had the where-withal in the matter of equipment and armament and munitions to engage in the Kashmir operations. It came to us in a very handy manner. Therefore, please don't be under the impression that we have paid money for worthless stuff. We have not only acquired stuff which has stood us in great stead at a time of great crisis and need, the very acquisition of all these stores at such a time was in itself of value and the value that we have put upon it, the money that we have paid for it, is to say the least, fair to both the countries.

I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that I have given explanation of most of the points that were raised in the course of the debate.

Pandit Lakshmi Kanta Maitra: What about the £200 million reserve?

The Honourable Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty: So far as that observation that probably in any case we would retain £200 million as currency reserve, I would ask honourable members not to take that statement literally. In fact, it is more or less an obiter dictum. We are bound to retain, at any rate, our currency authority is bound to retain, foreign exchanges in various countries of the world. Until now we were tied down to keep our foreign balances only in sterling and honourable members will find in the Amending Bill that we have now introduced for the purpose of nationalizing the Reserve Bank, I have taken away that restriction. In fact our instruction to the Reserve Bank will be now to build up dollar and other currency balances. So, if the valuation of our foreign trade is to be kept up uninterruptedly, and if we are not to be caught napping when any question of an adverse balance of payment arises, it is necessary in the modern economic set up that the currency authority of any country must retain ample foreign exchange resources to meet any balances that may arise. And it is in that connection that we made more or less an obiter dicta that probably we might have to retain £200 million in the form of sterling. It is quite possible that later on we may decide that we will not retain more than £100 million or not anything at all. This is merely an obiter dictum indicating the fact that in an actual position of the sterling balances that will be ultimately left, and which will have to be liquidated, you must bear all these factors in mind.

The sterling balances, after making all these payments and after paying the share of Pakistan, will be approximately £800 million. Now out of the £800 million if we are wise, prudent, energetic and vigilant, we would spend £160 million in the next three years which reduces the balance again to £640 million. Assuming that you decide that £100 million is necessary as a currency reserve, the ultimate balance is £540 million.

So, when the picture is seen from this angle you find there is nothing to be alarmed about the size of the sterling balances, and even this is now perfectly secure.

Honourable members referred to the British assets in India. We do not exactly know what the value of the British assets here is. The Reserve Bank is at present engaged in a detailed and scientific study about the valuation of all the British assets. Probably within the next six months or so the actual figures will be available. Whatever might be the results, I feel that the British assets will be not less than £500 or 600 millions so that our sterling balance is completely covered. If any number of Churchills arise in the future and threaten us we have got the security and the remedy in our own hands—we need not go to negotiate with Mr. Churchill, but we can straightaway confiscate the assets of the British people here if such a contingency arises. Therefore, the House might feel now perfectly confident that the sterling balance is safe, notwithstanding all the Churchills of England and that for some time at any rate we may take leave of the sterling balances and think of other subjects.

Mr. Chairman: May I ask the honourable members who have moved their cut motions whether they wish to press their motions?

Mr. Z. H. Lari (U.P.: Muslim): I beg to withdraw my cut motion.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena (U.P.: General): I beg to withdraw my cut motions.

Mr. Chairman: Have the honourable members leave of the House to withdraw their cut motions?

The cut motions were, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That a supplementary sum not exceeding Rs. 2,16,27,18,000 be granted to the Governor General to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending 31st March, 1949, in respect of 'Capital Outlay on Sterling Pensions'."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That a supplementary sum not exceeding Rs. 65,33,33,000 be granted to the Governor General to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending 31st March, 1949, in respect of 'Defence Capital Outlay'."

The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned till a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock on Monday the 16th August, 1948.

CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY OF INDIA (LEGISLATIVE) DEBATS

(PART II—PROCEEDINGS OTHER THAN QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS)

Monday, 16th August, 1948.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock, Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

(See Part I)

11-45 A. M.

RESOLUTION RE: INDIAN PARLIAMENTARY GROUP OF INTER-PARLIAMENTARY UNION

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru (Prime Minister and Leader of the House): Sir, I beg to move the following Resolution:

"This Assembly is of opinion that the Honourable the Speaker be pleased to take steps to form an Indian Parliamentary Group of the Inter-Parliamentary Union in conformity with the aims and objects of the said Union."

This Inter-Parliamentary Union was formed some sixty years ago for the purpose of promoting international arbitration and peace. The Union is an association of parliamentary groups constituted within the various national parliaments set up on democratic lines. A group may be formed in each parliament from amongst the Members of the national Parliament of the Country. There is no particular formality connected with the creation of an Inter-Parliamentary Group and its admission to the Union. A group constitutes itself and announces its membership. The Union is a Federation of National Groups. Each Group within a Parliament draws up its own rules of association and fixes the amount of actual contribution of its members. In its internal working each Group is autonomous, subject of course to the limitation that it conducts its work in conformity with the aims of the Union to which it is affiliated.

The aims of the Union are as follows:

- (a) to promote personal contacts between Member of the World's Parliaments;
- (b) to work for the establishment and development of democratic institutions and the advancement of the work of peace and international co-operation;
- (c) to study and seek solutions for all questions of an international character suitable for settlement by parliamentary action;
- (d) to make suggestions for the development of parliamentary institutions.

There is an Inter-Parliamentary Council on which each Group is represented by two delegates. The Executive Committee of five members supervises the work of the Inter-Parliamentary Bureau, and it is located at Geneva.

This question arises immediately now because a meeting of this Inter-Parliamentary Union will be held fairly soon. An invitation for this has been received by the Honourable the Speaker for this House to send its delegates to the meeting. You, Sir, were good enough to consult me about it and I expressed the view of Government that we would welcome our association with this Union, and that if this House is sending some representatives it will be in the fitness of things if the Honourable the Speaker chose those representatives, and not the Government.

I propose therefore that by this Resolution we may empower the Speaker to associate this Assembly with this Union.

Mr. Speaker: Resolution moved:

"This Assembly is of opinion that the Honourable the Speaker be pleased to take steps to form an Indian Parliamentary Group of the Inter-Parliamentary Union in conformity with the aims and objects of the said Union."

Shri H. V. Kamath (C.P. and Berar: General): Mr. Speaker, Sir, the aim of this Inter-Parliamentary Union as defined in Article 1 of the Statutes in the brochure supplied by the Assembly Office, is very laudable indeed. The genesis of this Union appears to have been at a preliminary meeting organised in Paris in 1888 by a Member of the British Parliament and a Deputy of the French Chamber. Nobody will gainsay today that the need for this Union and the work of such a Union is supremely great. We have all been working for peace, praying for peace, and striving for peace all these years, but peace is not yet in sight. Statesmen and diplomats however—I do not mean India's Statesmen and diplomats—but most of the world's statesmen and diplomats—have made peace a matter of war. When there is war we talk of peace; soon after war we talk of peace. But a few years after peace we again talk of war. That is the position today. Therefore we all agree that we should take steps to associate our country, India, which has stood for peace through ages, with this Union so that we may be able to take active steps in furtherance of this idea of world peace, world co-operation and world brotherhood.

But I would like a little clarification and a little more information on the points that have arisen in connection with the Resolution that has just been moved by the Leader of the House. Here, in this brochure, in Article 1 of the Statutes, the aim is said to be "to promote personal contacts between Members of Parliament"; further on it goes on to say that there will be "a universal organisation of nations". But if we turn round to the last page of the little pamphlet attached to the brochure we find that among the countries represented, or which are going to be represented, at this conference in Rome next month, the South Asian countries do not figure at all, and Russia which is one of the Great Powers of the world is also not in the picture. Among the Asian countries that will be represented at Rome I find only 5 names—Iraq, Iran, Syria, Lebanon and that semi-Asian country, namely Egypt—I won't call it Asian; it is partly Asian and partly African and that is why I said semi-Asian. Apart from these five countries there is no other Asian country which has been represented, or is going to be represented at this Conference. We would like some information as to whether our neighbouring Asian countries which have just emerged, after the last World War, from the darkness of slavery into the sunlight of freedom will have a place at the forthcoming Conference. Because, if at all any nations will pull their weight in the cause of peace, I believe, and I am convinced, that it is only the Asian countries which will do so, and ultimately achieve peace in the world. There is nothing in this pamphlet which throws any light on this point.

Then this brochure goes on to say (page 3) that "all Parliaments are invited to take part in the work of the Union". I do not know if you, Sir, as Speaker of this House or the Leader of the House knows today whether all the countries of the world have been invited or not; because there is a little snag in it and we find it at the bottom of page 3. It says "All Parliaments", it will be seen, are invited to take part in the work of the Union. But Article 1 adds, in the same sentence, that the work of international peace and co-operation between nations is to be established and developed on democratic lines. The words "democracy" and "democratic" have been much abused and mis-used in the past. Who will judge which country is democratic, and which is not; which Parliament is democratic and which is not? After all, political theorists today are not agreed on this, whether Britain and America are democratic or not—they are said to be pluto-democracies or capitalist democracies. After all, what is democracy nobody clearly knows. Even in the Constituent Assembly, during the last session, the Honourable the Leader of the House, when speaking on an amendment as regards the Objectives Resolution, said that it is all very well to say that it will be a democratic Republic, but what kind of democracy will it be? These were his own words. I would therefore like to know what is meant by the snag in this that the peace and co-operation between nations is to be established and developed on democratic lines. Whether Russia is democratic or not who will judge? Who will judge whether Britain is democratic or not and whether America is democratic or not? Is it Rome and the Rome Group that is going to decide what is democracy and what is not,—the group which will send invitations to the various countries of the world.

Then I would like to invite the attention of the Leader of the House to a report which appeared in the papers the other day. I do not know how far it is authentic, how far the news emanated from official sources. That report said that India is going to send some observers to this Conference. The point arises here, whether it will be delegates or observers that are going to be sent. If it is observers the question is what part they will take at all. Will they be mute spectators? What is the part they will play in this Conference at Rome? If it is delegates, it is more important. What is the mandate they will carry from this House? After all, they are going as representatives of this Parliament and not as Government's representatives. And if they go as delegates it is in the fitness of things that they should carry a mandate from this House, from the Indian Parliament, and not from any Government source. Therefore we are concerned with this question whether our country, India and our Parliament, will be represented by delegates or by observers. It is a moot point.

We find from this brochure that only one Group may be formed in each Parliament. Later on when we turn to the small leaflet attached to it we find that Groups have been allotted voting strength in the Inter-Parliamentary Conference at Rome. There are three categories—(a), (b) and (c). Category (a) says that each Group, irrespective of its strength, shall have a minimum of five votes, whether it is a country consisting of one million people or 400 million people. Category (b) says that Groups belonging to countries of less than one million inhabitants shall be entitled to one extra vote; those belonging to countries of 1 to 3 million, 2 votes and so on; and those belonging to countries of 350 million population will be entitled to 23 extra votes. The other category is the last one: groups consisting of at least 50 per cent. of the Members of the Lower House of Parliament shall be entitled to one extra vote, and so on and so forth.

Now, according to this strength, India is entitled to at least 28 votes; under category 'C' the relative strength of the Group will be decided by you but a minimum of 28 votes is absolutely certain for India, if we choose to follow this table appended in the Schedule. We do not know in what way it is going to be constituted. I hope—of course I cannot request the Leader of the House because it is a matter, Sir, entirely in your hands—but I hope you will be pleased to give attention to this Schedule contained in the leaflet appended to this brochure.

Then there arises the question of a mandate from this House because I said that our Group represents us, represents our Parliament, and not the Government. It is made clear here in this very brochure that:

"It will thus be seen that the Union is an organisation which offers unique opportunities for full and all-round discussion of outstanding international problems by men holding responsible political positions in their own countries."

[Shri H. V. Kamath]

I come to the important point now:

"Not being official delegates of their Governments, they may express their own views freely, and it often happens that members of the same Group hold different views on a particular question. But such free and frank discussion, Inter-Parliamentary meetings are able to prepare the ground unofficially for international measures and decisions to be taken by the respective states....."

So, Sir, I for one would request you if it would be possible to allow this House, to permit this Parliament of ours, to express its views on the Agenda that will be brought up before the Conference in Rome in September—the Agenda is given in the leaflet appended to the brochure—so that Members of this House can express their view on the important matters that will come up before the Conference. There it is stated the Agenda will be—

1. Election of the President and Committee of the Conference.
2. General debate on the Report of the Secretary-General.
3. Principles of international morality.
4. Protection of mothers and children.
5. Present position with regard to non-self-governing territories.
6. Regional economic solidarity and regional economic agreement.

Items 7 and 8 are relatively unimportant.

But, Sir, the most important item of the Agenda is, to my mind, item 3—'Principles of international morality', which to India and to Indian delegates should assume top priority because India has always believed that peace will come only through co-operation, through international work based on the eternal principles of morality and spirituality. The other day the Leader of the House in a message to America, I believe, said it is not so much economic or political co-operation that is needed today, but a change in the psychology of the peoples. I would go a step further and say that what we need is a psychic re-orientation of the entire humanity and we need today a spiritual approach to the problems of international peace and international co-operation. Therefore, Sir, I would request you, if we can manage it within the time allotted to this Session, that we have a brief discussion on the various items on the Agenda so that our delegates, if they are delegates—if they are observers I have nothing to say, they will sit there and will silently see and come away,—but if they are to be delegates the picture changes, the entire face of the situation changes and they will be asked to take part—will be in a position to take decisions in regard to the important resolutions before them. As a matter of fact, later on at page 4 of the leaflet it is stated:

"In this connection the Inter-Parliamentary Council makes an earnest appeal to the national groups to send complete delegations qualified to take decisions...."

Not merely just to observe and come away or merely to make some speeches and come away, but to take decisions in regard to the important resolutions which will be submitted to them, in the full knowledge of their responsibility towards the Union and towards their respective Parliaments. There is nothing about the Governments here; the Governments' view does not count, and the delegates will be guided by the views, by the opinions, by the mandates that might be given to them by this House.

Lastly, there is another little point which has arisen in connection with this Resolution, and that is the financial commitment, the financial commitment of this country towards the Union. As soon as they appear in the Conference the delegates will have to make their country's position known with regard to its financial obligation towards the Union. On page 5 of the brochure we find:

"Though unofficial, the Union has a regular connection with the Governments in so far as it is supported financially by grants from the different states. This practice was introduced in 1909 by Great Britain. Several Governments also pay the travelling expenses of the members who attend Conferences or meetings of the Inter-Parliamentary Council. On joining the Union, Groups are expected to take steps forthwith to obtain grants towards the central funds of the Union. These are fixed by an agreed 'Scale of Contributions'."

RESOLUTION RE INDIAN PARLIAMENTARY GROUP OF INTER-PARLIAMENTARY UNION 315

What is an agreed scale? We do not know at present, but we hope our country is not committed more than is commensurate with the part which she will play in this Union. It has happened in the United Nations Organisation that we are bearing financial burdens incommensurate with the part that we play in that Organisation or with India's strength in the U.N.O. Secretariat. So I would request you, as the matter is entirely in your hands, to consider these points, give your earnest attention to these matters, before we send our delegates or observers.

Then, Sir, one last word, and I have done. I suggest that our delegates—if they go to attend this conference—should function as an independent unit, a completely independent unit. Though we are still not out of the British Commonwealth, I believe, Sir, that in international affairs we shall not be tied to the apron strings of Britain or of America, or for that matter any other country in the world. When we sign a document, in Biblical parlance "Let it not be the hand of Esau and the voice of Jacob".

When we sign, let it be the hand of India and the voice of India; let it not be the hand of India and the voice of America or of Britain. I hope our delegates will toe an independent line, a line independent of any bias in favour of America or England, or against any other State, and will function as Indians of a free and independent India. If at all the idea of 'One World' has to be materialized, 'One World' has to come to fruition, it is only India that can bring it about, because long before Wendell Willkie spoke of it, long before other statesmen spoke of 'One World', our sages, our seers, chanted it. Thousands of years ago, our sages declared 'सर्वे खल्विदं ब्रह्म' (Sarvam Khalvidam Brahman). All this, not merely this world, but the whole Universe is Brahman, and there is nothing else. There is nothing in this Universe apart from Brahman. I hope and pray, Sir, that our Group will play such a vital part in the activities and work of this Union; that the time will not be far distant when this Union will evolve, will blossom forth into a Super-Parliament of Man, the Federation of the World; when, Sir, this Parliament will represent the machinery, the nucleus of a World Government which our Leader of the House and our other statesmen who have been stung to the quick by the devastation of modern war, are aspiring after. May that World Government come to pass and may the ancient saying embodied in our scriptures that वसुधैवकुटुम्बकम् (Vasudhaiva kutumbakam): The World is a family may that come to pass,—is my earnest prayer. And my request to you, Sir, is to see that such steps are taken that our delegates will in course of time, play their part in the accomplishment of this noble ideal.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras; General): Sir, I only wanted to say a word. My friend Mr. Kamath was extremely surprised as to what form of democracy we want. We do want that kind of democracy where the hero of the War, Churchill, was thrown overboard immediately the war was over. We have to learn a lesson from the British democracy. They did not merely idolise him. On the other side there is Russia. I felt that my friend was idolising Russia.

Shri H. V. Kamath: No, Sir. I do not idolise Russia. I am sorry my honourable friend has misunderstood me.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Well Sir, I only wanted to say one word. In Russia, is it possible after the end of that war, to throw out the person in charge of the Administration? That democracy was exercised in Great Britain and therefore, that is the kind of democracy that we want, so far as democracy is concerned.

[Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar]

I do want also the delegates who go from here not to make any statement or commit so far as our future political programme is concerned. I find, Sir, from the morning papers a statement by Sir B. N. Rau who has been sent as a delegate to the International-Court of Justice to sit there or to discuss, that India would not leave the British Commonwealth of Nations. I would say that while this matter is on the anvil we ought not to commit ourselves. No delegate who goes as an official delegate either sent by you or otherwise should make statements or commit India in those matters. This is one other international institution where we can sit together and evolve common forms and also benefit in the matter of procedure, so that democracy might be established and the rule of the law may prevail all over the world. I wish all success to this institution and I hope that under your guidance a proper group will be formed.

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: Sir, this debate has attained higher levels than I anticipated. My proposition was a fairly simple one. This Inter-Parliamentary Union is not, by any means, something that might develop into One World or One Universe. It is a body which has no executive authority. It is a body which does not want to consider any big controversial issues which the United Nations or the Security Council do.

Shri H. V. Kamath: I never said that it would itself develop into one World or one Universe.

Mr. Speaker: Let there be no interference.

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: Well, Sir, as I say, it is not an organisation which will concern itself with psychic matters either. It is an organisation chiefly meant to promote intercourse between parliamentarians all over the world. It is a public forum to discuss parliamentary matters without committing anybody—either any Government or even any individual—and in the world today it is important that people should know each other; that legislators in various Parliaments should profit by each other's experience and by each other's failure. Therefore, from that point of view, it is desirable that we should go there and take part in that public forum.

There has been talk of democracy etc.—a very complicated subject, which it is not easy to answer in a phrase this way or that way, even in the way that my honourable friend Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar answered it. We need not, therefore, go into that question. So far as this organisation is concerned, it is open, as far as I know, to every country. Even now, it has within its ranks legislators from countries of varying types of Government. It has certainly from the legislatures of Western Europe; it has from the legislatures of Eastern Europe also. I do not think that U.S.S.R. is there, although representatives from the U.S.S.R. have also come in touch with this organisation; but some of the other Eastern European countries are represented on it. So far as Asian countries are concerned, Mr. Kamath is perfectly right in saying that at the present moment we are not adequately represented, but that is, I think, due to various factors. Some of them have only recently come into the international scene like Burma like the Philippines, like Ceylon. I believe both Burma and the Philippines have expressed their willingness to join. Japan was of course in this organisation till this war when various things happened which terminated its connection. At the present moment, as the House knows, Japan is in a peculiar position. Thus there is no question of any country being kept out—Asian, European or any other. It is an inclusive organisation and it wants to include any country that wants to come in except possibly—I cannot say—that there may be some exceptional cases, but none of that kind has been brought to my notice.

Therefore, I do not think while I put this Resolution to the House, that it should understand anything much more than what it says. I say this because Mr. Kamath's speech might, I feel, delude the House into imagining that they are deciding some very high matter of principle or policy or that they are going to an organisation which will make a vast difference to the world. It is a useful organisation which we should encourage which should help us in promoting international contacts, but no important question in the world is going to be decided there or is being considered there at present. The other organisations will do that.

Mr. Kamath suggested that this House should consider various matters that are coming up. This is entirely for you to decide. The various matters that are coming up are important; nevertheless, they are not, normally speaking, of political importance. The care of infants is highly important but on this political parties do not differ, and it is for you, Sir, to consider these problems—certainly—or, it may be that some members of this House interested might consider the Draft Resolution, but in any event, the representatives of this House will go there and I do not think in matters of this kind the House should give specific mandates on issues of this kind. They can discuss and they can generally say what they feel and leave a certain measure of freedom, because as I said, it is not a highly political matter. It is not a matter which will lead to executive action and the House should not attach too much importance to a particular activity, which probably would not be quite correct.

Mr. Speaker: Before I put the motion to the House, I will just point out one fact. I find Russia's name mentioned as one of the countries in which the Inter-Parliamentary Group had been affiliated to the Union.

Shri H. V. Kamath: That is an old one before the Revolution.

Mr. Speaker: Whatever it is, Russia was there. Then Mr. Kamath referred to our present representatives being called "Observers". Although they have been called Observers, in substance they act as Delegates. The reason for their being called observers is that till we have the authority of this House to form a group, it was not possible or desirable on our part to send a delegation, a full-fledged delegation. That is why the word "Observers" as suggested by the Conveners of the Conference was used while accepting the invitation.

As regards the contribution, I understand that it will come to about Rs. 14,769 a year.

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: It will be much less, but the maximum is about Rs. 14,769; it is open to us to determine a smaller figure in consultation.

Mr. Speaker: It may be much less; it depends upon us.

The question is:

"This Assembly is of opinion that the Honourable the Speaker be pleased to take steps to form an Indian Parliamentary Group of the Inter-Parliamentary Union in conformity with the aims and objects of the said Union."

The motion was adopted.

Dr. P. S. Deshmukh (C.P. and Berar: General): On a point of information, may I know if the names* that have already appeared in the newspapers have any authority behind them?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

*Dr. B. V. Keskar and Shri R. R. Diwakar.

DURGAH KHAWAJA SAHEB (AMENDMENT) BILL

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel (Minister for Home, Information and Broadcasting and the States): Sir, I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill further to amend the Durgah Khawaja Sahab Act, 1936.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That leave be granted to introduce a Bill further to amend the Durgah Khawaja Sahab Act, 1936."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

INDIAN ARMY (AMENDMENT) BILL

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh (Minister for Defence): Sir, I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill further to amend the Indian Army Act, 1911.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That leave be granted to introduce a Bill further to amend the Indian Army Act, 1911."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

COAL MINES PROVIDENT FUND AND BONUS SCHEMES BILL

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil (Minister for Works, Mines and Power): Sir, I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill to make provision for the framing of a Provident Fund Scheme and a Bonus Scheme for persons employed in coal mines.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That leave be granted to introduce a Bill to make provision for the framing of a Provident Fund Scheme and a Bonus Scheme for persons employed in coal mines."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

INDIAN TELEGRAPH (AMENDMENT) BILL

The Honourable Mr. Rafi Ahmad Kidwai (Minister for Communications): Sir, I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill to amend the Indian Telegraph Act, 1885.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That leave be granted to introduce a Bill to amend the Indian Telegraph Act, 1885."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Mr. Rafi Ahmad Kidwai: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

CENSUS OF REFUGEES BILL

The Honourable Shri Mohan Lal Saksena (Minister of State for Relief and Rehabilitation): Sir, I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill to provide for the taking of a census of refugees.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That leave be granted to introduce a Bill to provide for the taking of a census of refugees."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

ELECTRICITY (SUPPLY) BILL—Concl'd.

Mr. Speaker: The House will now proceed with further consideration of the Bill to provide for the rationalisation of the production and supply of electricity, and generally for taking measures conducive to the electrical development of the Provinces of India as reported by the Select Committee.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): I do not propose to move amendment No. 82 as it has already been covered. I simply beg to draw attention to the unsatisfactory state of sub-clause (2) of clause 78. In fact, this is a power given to the Government to frame rules. They are not complete or they have not taken into account all the places or all the passages where the power has been given. The list is very incomplete. If the list is at all to be given, it must be complete. If no list is given, there will be no confusion, because the draftsman of the rules can read the Act in various places and frame the rules. But if no such thing is done, if some of the places are mentioned in the rule-making powers and others are not mentioned, there is the risk of confusion. I think the ordinary procedure for the draftsman should be to make out a meticulously full and complete list of all the rule-making powers in the body of the Act and then to incorporate them serially by giving reference to the sections. In that way alone you can make the list complete. With these observations, Sir, I do not wish to press or rather move amendment No. 83.

Mr. Speaker: Then there is no other amendment.

The question is:

"That clause 78 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 78 was added to the Bill.

Shri B. L. Sondhi (East Punjab: General): I have to draw the attention of the Honourable Minister regarding the representation received from the East Punjab Government in connection with its Hydro Electric Scheme which is already paying about ten lakhs a year. I think special concessions should be given as the Punjab Government shall be losing a lot of money on account of taxation. I want to know what has happened to the representation.

Mr. Speaker: How does the question arise during the consideration of this clause and at this stage? If he has to make a statement in respect of any other request, it may be done at the proper time. I do not think it is a proper time in the midst of the passage of a Bill, to make a statement, unless this has some relevancy to the clause under consideration.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil (Minister for Works, Mines and Power): I shall reply to this particular query after seeing if anybody wants to make a speech on this particular clause.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 79 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 79 was added to the Bill.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari (Madras: General): Sir, I move:

"That for clause 80 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

"80. Exemption of Board from Central taxation.—Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force, the Board shall be exempt from liability to pay any tax on income, corporation tax or any other like tax levied by the Central Government."

[Shri T. T. Krishnamachari]

Sir, this is nothing new; I do not claim any originality for this. This is exactly the clause that was clause 78 in the Bill before it went to the Select Committee. That clause 78 has been deleted and the present clause 80 has been put in the place of it. Any member of the House who reads clause 80 will find that exactly the opposite is the intention of this clause. Whereas clause 78 wants exemption for these Boards from all taxes levied by the Central Government, this clause 80 says that these Boards will be liable for the taxes and it goes on adding a further clause to say that the Provincial Government shall not be entitled to any refund of any such taxes paid by the Board.

One point which is a matter of convention of the House, at any rate, it used to be in the days past, that no member of the House raised any question whether any particular portion of a Bill is ultra vires. I do not know if that convention really obtains in the case of an amendment made by the Select Committee, which is ultra vires. At the time of the introduction of a Bill, nobody takes any objection to any portion of the Bill which may be ultra vires. It has to be decided elsewhere. My own feeling is that the Select Committee has gone far beyond its powers in making this change, a change which is obviously ultra vires of the constitution. I would like to mention this aspect of the matter although I am not going to raise the specific issue. I would like to invite the attention of the members of this House to section 155 of the Government of India Act. Section 155 is paramount until the new Constitution Act comes into force, and that section does not find a counterpart in it. It happens that when a bill as introduced in the House is perfectly in order, the Select Committee cannot arrogate to itself powers to make any provision which is exactly ultra vires of the constitution under which we are acting. This runs, as I have said in my minute of dissent, which I think some honourable members have read and several provincial Governments have also seen, exactly counter to section 155 of the Government of India Act.

Apart from that, there is another aspect of the problem. That is a provincial problem so far as I am concerned. The Madras Government gets a fair amount of revenue out of this and it is a progressively rising revenue. The figure is now about 45 lakhs and it is going up every year. It works to about eight per cent. on the capital invested. The creation of the Board will not affect the provincial Governments' revenues if the clause was as clause 78 as it was originally introduced. The surplus revenues of the Board will go to the provincial Government and the provincial Government will treat it as part of its general revenues. The position will be more or less as it is today. But what this particular section seeks to do is that before the money passes to the provincial Government, a companies tax of five annas plus two that is seven annas in the Rupee will be taken away. My honourable friend, the Mover of the Bill is going to say that the position is not altered very much because out of this Income-tax the Provincial Governments get a contribution. That is so; but the pool is made up by the various Provincial Governments contributing and the Provincial Governments get back a portion. That will not be on all fours with the position as it is today; the Provincial Government is now taking over what is its legitimate revenue, what it had been getting all along. This, I think, is a round about way of achieving a purpose which is not only unconstitutional, but is highly immoral. I have received a communication from the Minister in charge of Electricity from my province, supporting my minute of dissent and asking me to urge on the House and on the Government to retain the clause as it was before it was altered by the Select Committee. What my honourable friend Mr. Sondhi seeks to tell the House is that there is a similar complaint emanating from the East Punjab Government. My own feeling is this. I have no doubt that the Honourable Members of Government who rule the destinies of the people are very wise people. They must have very good reasons for introducing a provision running counter to popular opinion, running counter to the Provincial Governments' opinion and also running counter to the constitution under which we are functioning. I would suggest to my honourable friend to tell his colleagues that it would be eminently unwise at this stage to provoke the Provincial Governments in a matter which they feel is their own province. The whole question of allocation of revenues will be considered in all its aspects by the constitution making authority. It is perfectly open to the constitution making authority to say that all provincial Government undertakings will be taxed or not taxed. My honourable friend is also going to say in regard to another amendment which I would move later on that he is going to give as much time as is reasonable to the Provincial Governments to form the Boards or not to form the Boards for four years according to him. When he is so generous, I do not see why he should not extend his generosity to this matter where it will also be wisdom, and allow me to persuade the House to accept this amendment and ask him to waive any objection which he may have. I think acceptance of this amendment will be an act of wisdom. Of course, if my honourable friend refuses to accept this, as a loyal member of the party, I know what to do. But I think it is extremely unwise both from the constitutional, legalistic as well as the extremely practical point of view for the Government to adopt an attitude of complete indifference to provincial opinion and to the opinion of such members of this House who feel strongly on this.

Shri H. V. Kamath (C.P. and Berar: General): On a point of order, Sir, can the loyalty of a member to his party.....

Mr. Speaker: Order, order; let me first put the Amendment to House.

Amendment moved:

"That for clause 80 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

"80. Exemption of Board from Central taxation.—Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force, the Board shall be exempt from liability to pay any tax on income, corporation tax or any other like tax levied by the Central Government."

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I wish to speak on this amendment; but before doing so, I should ask the honourable member to explain once again how this is ultra vires of this legislature. I have not been able to follow his argument.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: I am afraid I am not entitled to make a second speech.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: That is only by way of clearing the point.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member need not worry about it. In the first place, he did not raise the point. He has merely stated the point and abstained from raising it. The point is not before the House at all.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to support this amendment. There has been a tendency, I submit with all respect, a dangerous tendency on the part of the Central Government of killing all provincial activities before they could stand on their legs. There were two brothers who wanted to open a business and they agreed that they should not eat out of the capital, but spend only out of the profit. But, before they began the business, they tried to calculate the first month's profit, they anticipated a very decent profit during the first month and they thought they should eat up this portion which to them on safe calculation was clear profit. In this way, they went on and the business went into liquidation. These infant institutions should be encouraged in every possible way and they should be allowed to stand on their legs. These are highly beneficial to the public and a large number of small industries will be induced to stand on their feet. If the Central Government takes a large slice out of the profits, the effect would be that the cost of running these institutions would be high. And that would affect the income of the consumer. If the Central Government foregoes this claim of income-tax there would be an enormous benefit to a large number of people, one of them being that local institutions like factories and other types of business which depend upon these institutions would be able to work more economically and show more profits. And in the long run the consumers would give the Central Government their share of income-tax. It is an accepted principle that income-tax is not a tax on the board itself but on its constituents; a tax on a company is a tax on the shareholders and every shareholder is entitled to a rebate on account of the personal factor in the tax. If we tax a board at all we should also provide for personal rebates to the consumers. But as circumstances stand no such rebate could be given and there would be many consumers whose income would not reach the taxable limit. If you tax these institutions at the source the effect would be that it would leave many consumers whose income is below the taxable limit absolutely without any remedy whatever. They cannot get a rebate or exemption. Unless one is prepared to give facilities for exemption in suitable cases it is not right to tax them at the source. From all these circumstances I submit that the Central Government should forego its claim to income-tax; it would enable industrial concerns to grow more easily and contribute to their prosperity. The effect would be reflected in greater receipts in income-tax from the consumers. Sir, I support the amendment.

Shri K. Santhanam (Madras: General): Sir, I will deal with one or two matters that have been brought forward. On the question of ultra vires I do not think there is any such issue at all, because these boards are separate legal entities and not Provincial Governments and so section 155 of the Government of India Act would not apply; it is not absolutely identical with the Provincial Governments. The fact that my honourable friend has to bring in a positive clause and is not content with the mere deletion of clause 80 shows that it is intra vires because he knows that if the clause is merely dropped this Board would be liable for taxation. I would have liked Government not to have provided this clause at all. If they had kept quiet the Board would automatically come under Corporations and would be taxable.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: Sir, on matter of explanation. The honourable member is taking advantage of something that I told him this morning. What happens is that if there is no specific mention in the body of the Bill the Board would be taxed as an association of persons but would not be liable to taxation as a company, which means that it might have to pay not 7 annas but 15½ annas in the rupee.

Shri K. Santhanam: My friend may have told me something but he knows that it is intra vires and he was not entitled to bring before the House an argument which he knew was not correct. As to the province I will point out that all the moneys invested in the province become loans from the provincial Government to these electricity Boards and the interest on that capital will be treated as expenditure before calculating the profit. Therefore the province would be entitled to put in interest of the six or nine per cent., whatever they may say, and then lend it to the Board, and the Central Government will be entitled to its tax only when it comes in the form of profits. Therefore the Provincial Government's interests are in practice safeguarded though in theory they are to a certain extent infringed by this clause 80.

As to sub-clause (2) it is only to avoid any ambiguity about this taxation. In order to avoid ambiguity it is very essential. It is only to make things absolutely clear that sub-clause (2) has been put in.

Shri Prabhu Dayal Himatsingka (West Bengal: General): Sir, I also beg to oppose this amendment. This involves a question of principle and if we exempt the Board from taxation it will lead to inefficiency. Moreover, as my honourable friend Mr. Santhanam said, section 155 of the Government of India Act does not seem to apply here. Here we have passed a clause which provides that the Board may be for more than one province and the proviso to section 155 makes it clear that when a Board or persons.....

Mr. Speaker: I think we need not go into that question at all. That point seems to be very clear and, as I said when Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad addressed the House, the point was not raised by the honourable member. Even if it is raised, it will be only a hypothetical ruling or statement from the Chair. I do not wish to uphold anything as ultra vires, because I do not like that a Bill or a clause should be killed by any ruling of the Chair. If really it is ultra vires, there will be ample chance of contesting it in a proper court of law. Therefore the point need not be argued.

Shri Prabhu Dayal Himatsingka: The Select Committee considered this question and with the exception of my honourable friend Mr. Krishnamachari every one else has agreed to clause 80. Therefore I support the clause as it stands.

Shri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar (Madras: General): Sir, I support the amendment. Whatever may be the view with reference to Government—Central or Provincial—it is not fair to the consumer that this tax should be levied on the Board. It may be that the tax is levied and collected and the Provincial Government will be enabled to get it back when the income-tax or corporation tax is distributed among the provinces; but to the extent the tax is levied and collected the consumer's price of electricity will be raised. It is only when you charge to the consumer a much greater price that a portion of it goes to the Central Government.

Shri K. Santhanam: They may not make a profit; they may reduce and work at a loss.

Shri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar: It cannot be that the Provincial Government will so work things that they will work at a loss and throw a burden on the Central Government and itself incur a loss. The local Government wants to make some money and one of their sources now and hereafter will be from transactions like this. They will have to take up enterprises and earn more profits and so add to their exchequer for the benefit of the people. That means that they are to earn not five rupees but ten rupees to make five rupees for their exchequer, and the consumer will thus be charged ten rupees instead of five rupees. To that extent it is the consumer who is made to pay.

Another thing is this. One of the arguments that may be advanced with reference to the levying of the tax will be that this is a competitive commodity with reference to which no one wants to place private enterprise at a disadvantage. In the case of this electricity which is going to be a monopoly of the State it cannot be considered in that light at all. I do not see why the consumer's price should be raised to make a profit for the Central exchequer and giving it back to the province, thereby doing great damage to the consumer. It is in that light that I oppose the clause and support the amendment.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): Both my friends—Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari and Mr. Chettiar have missed the bus. I was also a party to this amendment. But this is sister to another amendment which we tabled but it was not argued with such vehemence as this is sought to be supported, though the House turned it down! It is true that under the Government of India Act if a Provincial Government starts an undertaking or trading concern, it must limit its operations to the limits of that province. It is not liable to Central income-tax. So far as Madras is concerned, it produces 99 per cent. of the electricity obtainable in the province as a Government department and therefore all the profits go to it. Under the existing law, such profits are not liable to income-tax under section 155 of the Government of India Act. But even now, Madras has within a period of two years to instal a Board and hereafter they cannot carry on the business of electricity supply departmentally. Every Board has to be compulsorily started there and once a Board is established it is an autonomous body under the provisions of this Act. According to section 12 there is no authority or warrant in the Government of India Act, as it stands now to exempt any such Board from Central taxation. Once we have accepted the principle, the appointment of ultra vires. It is open to the House to exempt any of these Boards from Central taxation. Once we have accepted the principle, the appointment of the Board must also be accepted. I do not want to sell away the cow and then catch hold of the string tied round its neck. The main cow disappears and is taken away from my hands. The policy of the Central Government is that if in future various undertakings are started by the State they are to be run departmentally though it may not be run as efficiently as when placed in the hands of a corporate body. But a statutory organization like a Board is to be established so as to keep the undertaking away from political influence. When we have accepted this principle, it is not right that the Centre should be deprived of the means of its continuance by exempting this Corporation. There are various other Corporations. I believe the Damodar Valley Corporation is also liable to this tax. This is a middle step between state-ownership and private ownership. They will take charge of Corporations sponsored by the State. So we may visualise a state when private enterprise will disappear, when all the undertakings may be taken over by the State in the form of these Corporations. The State must get on. It must either take the share of the profits or contribute from the share of the profits by way of taxation. Let us work this for some time. The power is in our hands to scrap this if it does not work. Therefore when we have accepted one amendment.....

[Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar]

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: The other amendment has not even been moved.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Then that is still worse. I am sure my friend is not going to move it, nor will he have the support of this House. Under these circumstances, there is no use pursuing that amendment which also stands in my name. I think we have changed over. I now recommend to the House not to accept this amendment.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: There are three clear positions: the first is to exempt these Boards from income-tax altogether; the second is to have a positive provision under which income-tax would be levied on the income of the Board; the third is to leave the thing as it is, neither accepting the amendment moved by Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari nor allowing section 80 as it is on the Statute Book.

Having given my best consideration, I am inclined to think that the clause as it is in the best interests. I do not want to repeat the arguments I referred to in my speech two days ago. But one point, it is only fair, I should bring to the notice of this House and it is this. In certain provinces, if this particular clause comes into operation immediately some hardship is bound to occur, and I may refer to the case of East Punjab. Today they are expecting round about rupees ten lakhs by way of profit on their electricity undertaking and if this provision comes into operation immediately, they will have to part with Rs. 5 lakhs under the provision of section 80. At the same time I want to bring to the notice of the House that Clause 80 is not going to be brought into operation immediately. What is provided for in sub-clause 4 of clause 1 is:

"Provided that the Central Government may as respects any Province extend the said period of two years and in such event the remaining provisions of the Act shall come into force in that Province on such date, not later than the extended period, as the Provincial Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, appoint."

Initially, there is a period of two years and if any province makes out a case for further extension in point of time, I have not the least doubt that the Central Government will always come to its help. After this assurance, I do not think there is any further need to reply to the arguments that have been urged. I would request the honourable member to withdraw his amendment.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: In obedience to the request of the Honourable Minister, I have pleasure in withdrawing the amendment though I am not convinced by the arguments he has advanced. I however, ask leave of the House to withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: Has the honourable member the leave of the House to withdraw?

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 80 stand part of the Bill"

The motion was adopted.

Clause 80 was added to the Bill.

Clauses 81 to 83 were added to the Bill.

Shri K. Santhanam: Sir, I move:

"That in Part I of the First Schedule to the Bill, in the second proviso to sub-paragraph (2) of paragraph I, the words 'loans other than' be omitted."

This refers to the last line of the proviso. If the words "loans other than" are deleted, it will read: "capital of the licensee and the loans advanced by the Board under this sub-paragraph". It was considered necessary to bring in the other loans into the scope of this proviso.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: Sir, I accept it.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in Part I of the First Schedule to the Bill, in the second proviso to sub-paragraph (2) of paragraph I, the words 'loans other than' be omitted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I move:

"That in Part I of the First Schedule to the Bill, in paragraph III, for the words 'agreed between', the words 'agreed upon between' be substituted."

It is only a drafting amendment. The point has been covered already by a passage which appears in clause 32 sub-clause (2). In that clause there is the passage "agreed upon". This word "upon" has been inserted specially by the Select Committee. Taking that as an authority I submit that in order to obtain some amount of uniformity this also should be brought into the same line. It is only a drafting amendment.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: I do not think there is any meaning in the amendment. The clause is all right as it is.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: Sir, I do not accept the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in Part I of the First Schedule to the Bill, in paragraph III, for the words 'agreed between', the words 'agreed upon between' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Shri K. Santhanam: Sir, I move:

"That in Part II of the First Schedule to the Bill, in paragraph XI, for all the words beginning with the words 'The licensee shall' and ending with the words 'in that month', the following be substituted:

"Of the kilowatt-hours purchased by the licensee from the Board in each month, a number of kilowatt-hours not exceeding the number which bears the same proportion to the total number purchased as the scheduled effective capacity for the month bears to the maximum demand of the licensee on the Board in that month shall be purchased at a price determined under paragraph XIII; the balance being purchased at a price determined under paragraph XIV."

It is a technical amendment. The present wording does not bring out the objective very clearly and so this is intended to clarify the whole position.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in Part II of the First Schedule to the Bill in paragraph XI, for all the words beginning with the words 'The licensee shall' and ending with the words 'in that month', the following be substituted:

"Of the kilowatt-hours purchased by the licensee from the Board in each month, a number of kilowatt-hours not exceeding the number which bears the same proportion to the total number purchased as the scheduled effective capacity for the month bears to the maximum demand of the licensee on the Board in that month shall be purchased at a price determined under paragraph XIII; the balance being purchased at a price determined under paragraph XIV."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the First Schedule, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

The First Schedule, as amended, was added to the Bill.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

*The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half past Two of the Clock,
Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.*

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Second Schedule and the Third Schedule stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

The Second Schedule and the Third Schedule were added to the Bill.

Shri K. Santhanam: Sir, I move:

"That in part (b) of paragraph III of the Fourth Schedule to the Bill, for the words and figures 'paragraphs VIII and XVII', the words and figures 'paragraph VI' be substituted."

This is a purely drafting amendment.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I accept it.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in part (b) of paragraph III of the Fourth Schedule to the Bill, for the words and figures 'paragraphs VIII and XVII', the words and figures 'paragraph VI' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Fourth Schedule, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

The Fourth Schedule, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Shri K. Santhanam: Sir, I move:

"That in part (f) of paragraph I of the Fifth Schedule to the Bill, for the words 'scale set out in the Seventh Schedule', the words and figures 'provisions of paragraph VI of the Sixth Schedule' be substituted."

This is a similar drafting amendment.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in part (f) of paragraph I of the Fifth Schedule to the Bill, for the words 'scale set out in the Seventh Schedule', the words and figures 'provisions of paragraph VI of the Sixth Schedule' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Fifth Schedule, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

The Fifth Schedule, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Shri K. Santhanam: Sir, I move:

"That in sub-paragraph (1) of paragraph IV of the Sixth Schedule to the Bill, for the words 'appropriation only to that extent shall be made', the following be substituted:

'no appropriation shall be made which would have the effect of increasing the reserve beyond the said maximum'."

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I accept it.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-paragraph (1) of paragraph IV of the Sixth Schedule to the Bill, for the words 'appropriation only to that extent shall be made', the following be substituted:

'no appropriation shall be made which would have the effect of increasing the reserve beyond the said maximum'."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: Then there are a number of amendments by Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I shall explain. I may not move many of them. Numbers 90 to 102, all standing in my name, are only of a formal nature. It is not necessary for me to move them because the Draftsman can take charge of them. Most of them occur in page 39 of the Bill under 'Definitions'. The definitions as a whole consist of one sentence with different sub-divisions. But at many places, at the beginning of sentences, capital letters have been used, and most of these amendments are directed to correct them. And there are some punctuation mistakes. I hope these will be rectified by the Draftsman. They need not therefore be formally moved.

Shri K. Santhanam: Sir, I move:

(i) "That in sub-paragraph (1) of paragraph XV of the Sixth Schedule to the Bill, after the word 'Board', the words 'or where no Board is constituted, the Provincial Government', be inserted."

(ii) "That in sub-paragraph (2) of paragraph XV of the Sixth Schedule to the Bill, after the word 'Board', the words 'or the Provincial Government, as the case may be', be inserted."

Both are the same. In certain parts of the Section, where the Board is not constituted the Provincial Government has to act. It is only to provide for these cases that this amendment is necessary.

Mr. Speaker: The question is: ?

(i) "That in sub-paragraph (1) of paragraph XV of the Sixth Schedule to the Bill, after the word 'Board', the words 'or where no Board is constituted, the Provincial Government', be inserted."

(ii) "That in sub-paragraph (2) of paragraph XV of the Sixth Schedule to the Bill, after the word 'Board', the words 'or the Provincial Government, as the case may be', be inserted."

The motion was adopted.

Shri K. Santhanam: Sir, I move:

"That in part (2)(b)(ix) of paragraph XVII of the Sixth Schedule to the Bill, the word 'hereafter' be omitted."

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in part (2)(b)(ix) of paragraph XVII of the Sixth Schedule to the Bill, the word 'hereafter' be omitted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Sixth Schedule, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

The Sixth Schedule, as amended, was added to the Bill.

The Seventh Schedule was added to the Bill.

Shri K. Santhanam: Sir, I move:

"That in part (f) of paragraph I of the Eighth Schedule to the Bill, for the words 'scale set out in the Seventh Schedule', the words and figures 'provisions of paragraph VI of the Sixth Schedule' be substituted."

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in part (f) of paragraph I of the Eighth Schedule to the Bill, for the words 'scale set out in the Seventh Schedule', the words and figures 'provisions of paragraph VI of the Sixth Schedule' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Shri K. Santhanam: Sir, I move:

"That in part (a) of paragraph II of the Eighth Schedule to the Bill, after the word 'Board', occurring in line three, the following be inserted:

'plus one-half of one per centum per annum'."

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in part (a) of paragraph II of the Eighth Schedule to the Bill, after the word 'Board', occurring in line three, the following be inserted:

'plus one-half of one per centum per annum'."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Eighth Schedule, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

The Eighth Schedule, as amended, was added to the Bill.

The Ninth Schedule was added to the Bill.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: Sir, I beg to move:

"That for sub-clauses (3) and (4) of clause 1 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

(3) This section shall come into force at once, but the remaining provisions of this Act shall come into force in a Province only if the Provincial Government, by notification in the official Gazette so directs and from such date as may be specified in the said notification."

Sir, this again is just a re-introduction of a clause as it was before the Bill emerged from the Select Committee. The Select Committee here has made a very substantial change and I had indicated my disapproval of the action taken by the Select Committee in my dissenting minute.

The difference between the position as it was when the Bill went to the Select Committee and when it emerged, is merely this. There was an option for the Province concerned to follow the scheme set out in this Bill as it was before the Bill went to the Select Committee. Now, subject to a period of grace that is allowed in sub-clause (4), the Provinces are compelled to come into the scheme. I am sure my honourable friend the Mover will tell me that we have given two years straightaway for the Provinces to come in and that he has powers to extend it by another two years which he shall exercise in the case of deserving Provinces. I have no doubt he will exercise that discretion very generously. But that, Sir, is not the crux of the problem. The problem really is that there is a certain amount of independence due to the Province in a matter like electricity which is a Concurrent Subject. The Province has got to do the whole thing; the Central Government cannot by any stretch of imagination give directions to the Provinces as to this, that and something else. Once they contemplate doing it, the Act will become ultra vires.

So, what is now sought to be done is to exercise that non-existing power of compulsion, that power of giving executive direction, in a different way, in a round about way which I think is neither fair to the Central Government nor to the Provinces concerned. I agree that in any measure like this a certain amount of uniformity is necessary, but are the Central Government in a position to exercise that uniformity if the Province rebels against it? Surely, the Central Government must be aware of the fact that there are so many ways and means by which the Province can get out of the conditions of this particular Bill when it becomes an Act, if it so chooses. You can always lead a horse to water but you cannot make it drink. What my honourable friend Mr. Gadgil seeks to do is to make the horse drink the water; I am afraid clever and experienced as he is, he will not be able to do it.

Sir, the Bill itself leaves a fair amount of loophole to the Province if it does not want to fall in line. Actually there are certain provisions in this Bill which it would probably be beneficial to the Province to take advantage of. If it does not want to do it, what is there to prevent the Province in merely publishing it in the Gazette and then satisfying the statutory conditions and not acting according to it?

There is another matter. The objective of the Central Government may be defeated in half a dozen ways. One way as my honourable friend Mr. Santhanam suggested was that the Province can levy an interest of 12 per cent. on the monies advanced to the Board, and the whole scheme will be a failure because the Board, as my friend Mr. Ramalingam Chettiar put it, will have to sell electricity at such a price that the objective of the Bill will be defeated.

Again, the Provinces have got the power of levying sales-tax; a Province can levy a sales-tax on electrical energy either at the consumption level or at the distribution level in which case the price of electricity will be put up. So, there will be no uniformity with regard to development in all Provinces and again the purpose of this Bill will be nullified.

So I feel that though the Central Government, like a big brother with a big club, can wield it—and the legislative club is always in their possession—they will not be serving the main purposes of the Bill by wielding that club fairly openly. I am sure my honourable friend Mr. Gadgil possesses enough powers of persuasion, he has got enough money at his disposal which he would dole out to these provinces by means of subventions to make them come into the scheme willingly, rather than enact this particular provision in the Bill and thereby make a fundamental change in the set up of this Bill.

[Shri T. T. Krishnamachari]

Again, Sir, there is the other question of an objection on moral grounds. My honourable friend mentioned at the early stages of the discussion of this Bill that the Provincial Governments have been consulted. May I ask him if he consulted the Provincial Governments after having introduced this radical change in the set-up of the Bill? I do not think he has done it. I think it is therefore not quite proper for him, after having consulted the Provincial Governments up to a particular stage and got them committed to a scheme, to radically change the scheme and say, well, I have the Legislature at my disposal and I shall get any legislature passed.

Sir, I feel that the change effected by the Select Committee is a change that is not dictated by wisdom and a change which would only make the provinces render this particular measure over which the House has spent such a long time, over which members of the Select Committee have spent such a long time and in which the honourable member himself has taken so much interest, into more or less a dead letter. Sir, I warn the Government against using the club even though they can possibly use it. I do hope that it is not too late for wisdom to dawn and my honourable friend will be able to change his mind and accept my humble proposal.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That for sub-clauses (3) and (4) of clause 1 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

'(3) This section shall come into force at once, but the remaining provisions of this Act shall come into force in a Province only if the Provincial Government, by notification in the official Gazette so directs and from such date as may be specified in the said notification'."

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I have with a considerable amount of hesitation to oppose this amendment. My objection is based on a simple ground that it will perpetuate the distinction between one province and the rest of India. In fact, we have just passed a provision relating to taxation. We have decided to tax the Boards, but if we allow any province not to form a Board but to run the business on its own account as a State-owned business, then that business will escape taxation. That would be perpetuating a distinction between one province and another. I beg to submit that all the provinces should be put on the same basis. I would have supported my honourable friend's amendment if there would not have been this invidious distinction. I submit, Sir, that the big club which he has referred to is the big club really which is embedded in the tax proposal. That is a club with which the Honourable Minister can always break the heads of all institutions and prevent them from raising their heads. For these reasons I oppose this amendment.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: Sir, I am unable to accept this amendment. As a matter of fact, the question is not of the Madras's needs; the question really is whether this particular industry and its development should be mainly through a Government Department or through an autonomous Statutory Board. After taking all factors into consideration, Government have decided that this is the best. In order to accommodate the view point which has been pressed now and which was also pressed in the Select Committee by my honourable friend Mr. Krishnamachari, I have made enough provision in the proviso of this Section. In the light of that it is not necessary, I think, even for him to press for this amendment. I have not attempted in any way to use the legislative stick—big or small—at all. What I have always sought is hearty co-operation from every province and from every member of the House. If the desire is that this industry should be put on a solid basis, that development should be quick and in a scientific and methodic manner, then there must be some agency which can carry out this policy. Mere enunciation of policy—however good that policy may be—is no use. The organisational set up must be appropriate and I think that the set up contemplated in this Bill is the best under the circumstances. I would therefore ask the House to reject the amendment.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Just one word, Sir. I am also a party to this amendment and I beg to submit that the question is that we wanted as in Madras the State to take up this concern. Madras has taken it over. We believe that the State will do it better than any corporate body set up under the aegis of the State. Every province may take it up. The reason so far as Madras is concerned is this. They have introduced prohibition. Pre-prohibition they were getting about 16 crores for their general revenues which they have now lost, but electricity gives them all the profits and in addition they have also started road transport services departmentally. These two are expected to give them some substantial finances. Now, the profits from electricity will be taken away by the Board, although of course a balance of the profits will go to the Provincial Government. But the Board will be a completely autonomous body and we do not know what it might do. The Provincial Government may not be able to exercise full power over it. Take the Railways for instance. Under the Government of India Act 1935 they provided for a Federal Railway Authority. We oppose this existing railway system which is directly managed by a Minister of State in a Department. Under the Act of 1935 they wanted to create a Federal Railway Authority vesting all the Railways under that Authority and taking it away from the purview of this House. All these Corporations which form separate entities have no chance of their Administrations being subjected to debate in this House. If it is a Department, it is easy. Judged from any point of view the idea of a Corporation does not seem to be more appropriate. Option may be given to those provinces where the electric production and supply is being run by the State itself. However, my honourable friend the Minister thought that two years are being allowed within which they can make certain experiments and if the experiments fail they can come back. Under that assurance, I was prepared to withdraw this amendment and I appeal to my friend because it is a joint amendment and I am entitled to 50 per cent. of it. Let us see if the experiment succeeds and if it does not, under your kind guidance we can introduce another Bill and revoke it.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: Although my responsibility is only 50 per cent., I would beg leave of the House to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Has the honourable member leave of the House to withdraw his amendment?

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: The other amendments of Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad need not be put to the House. As regards Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena's, he is not there. So, the question is:

"That clause 1 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and the Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill, as amended, be passed."

I do not want to make a long speech, but I would be failing in my duty if I do not express my debt of gratitude to the House. I am deeply thankful to those members who have made speeches and also to those who have not. I am also grateful to those members who moved the amendments and to those who did not, and also those who moved and withdrew them.

[Shri N. V. Gadgil]

Sir, the beginnings of this Bill were some time in 1942. In the course of the last six years, the Bill has gone from stage to stage and today the Bill is about to be put on the Statute Book. As I said, the Bill was so big and complicated, so technical in character, that although I am familiar with it for nearly a year, I do not claim that I will stand the cross-examination of anybody who really knows about it. Yet, all the same this is an effort which is consistent with the industrial policy that has been adopted by this House. It is not claimed by the Government that this will satisfy those who stand for socialism and State ownership and control all at once. At the same time this will not satisfy those capitalists who will not move an inch, although the needs of the time are pressing and urgent. Obviously this is a compromise between the two extreme views. That it is an experiment in mixed economy is undoubtedly true and let us hope that as all mixed things give very healthy results, this Bill will also result in the healthy development of this industry. What is sought by this Bill is rationalisation in the supply and distribution of electric energy and a plan of development, the object of which is, as I said when I first made a motion for the reference to Select Committee that every village in this country should have electricity and every house a radio, and I have no doubt that in the course of next ten years when the boards start functioning and the great river schemes will have materialised, that objective will have been completely realized. And when this is done, some of us who will be still there either outside or here will have the satisfaction that in these few years we have done what the country expected.

Mr. Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the Bill, as amended, be passed."

Shri K. Santhanam: Mr. Speaker, Sir, I do not want to take the time of the House except to say a few words. Some of my friends, especially Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar spoke of the possible failure of the experiment and of having to go back on the experiment. I do not conceive that this Bill is an experiment at all. It is in my opinion the only pattern on which India can go towards socialism. Sir, for the last 20 years I have been a passionate advocate of a peaceful evolution towards a socialistic society and I see in this Bill as in the other Damodar Valley Corporation Bill and the State Employees Insurance Bill the first steps towards that evolution. Sir in a socialist society if mere departmental management takes up all economic life, there can be nothing but inefficiency, corruption and ultimately complete breakdown. A handful of people calling themselves ministers cannot be expected to deal with vast departments dealing with the production, distribution and consumption of wealth. We want large centres of initiative, of resource and of people who will have day to day touch and who will have the authority to deal with problems as and when they arise. If every problem dealing with every department of our economic life is to be referred to one set of people either in the provinces or the Centre, then there will be congestion at those centres. Each centre has to delegate this responsibility to competent persons who will be responsible to that centre; it is only by that method that a socialist re-organisation of society can be achieved. I did not indulge in exaggeration when in the opening speech, I said, I conceive it as an effective measure of nationalization of electric power. Sir, I think this is the beginning of all nationalization and if these boards act, if the Provincial Governments and the Central Government act in accordance with the principle of this Bill, then, I am sure within ten or fifteen years' time the entire production and distribution of electricity will be in the hands of public authorities, all of whom are appointed and are responsible to the responsible ministries either at the Centre or the Provinces. I believe that this is a really effective nationalization measure and in that spirit, I heartily support this motion for passing this Bill and I tender my hearty congratulations to the Minister for successfully piloting this Bill.

Sir, as he himself said many of the clauses of the Bill are a headache to any one who tries to understand it and just as he said, I do not think I shall pass an examination on the Bill, especially in the schedules, but I may assure this House that even these technical clauses, we patiently tried to understand and at least we forced the experts to correct wherever they were not very clear and wherever they were ambiguous. So, I am sure the House may feel satisfied that nothing has been left undone to make it as good as we can make it at this time and in the light of actual experience, if it is found that there are defects, they will, be remedied in due course. Meanwhile, I do not like that any impression should go abroad that this is a temporary experiment. I would like the people of India to believe that this is the pattern in which all other industries especially the nationalised industries will have to be managed and that there is no other way. Sir, I support the motion.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Mr. Speaker, Sir, on behalf of all persons who took part in the discussions, as also on behalf of all others of the House, I congratulate the Honourable Minister for getting through this Bill. This will certainly mark a landmark in the history of industry and agriculture in this country. Hitherto electricity was confined for lighting and other purposes and to some extent to industry in the urban areas. Electricity was not extended to rural areas. The cream of profits were taken away by the industrialists or by persons or private agencies who introduced by way of corporations generation of electricity and distribution of electricity etc. They were charging high profits per unit and they were unwilling to extend it to rural areas for agricultural purposes. They also give large supplies to industry at low rates and that is why agriculture has not progressed as well as we should expect; nor industry has progressed; they were only anxious to take all the advantages of the monopoly, but not take the liability of expanding it to the rural areas. That was the object with which the Bill was conceived and the Bill has been passed. Certainly as a first measure a Corporation will be very useful. In all those provinces where they have undertaken generation and supply of electricity this will certainly be useful, but in other places where as in Madras and other places where the State itself has been supplying electricity and that very well without any complaint, doing it cheaply and earning the profits also for the State, I do not see how this is the last step in nationalization and that is a retrograde step. My own feeling is that nationalization as I conceive it is that the State must take charge of every industry directly and all property must belong to the State. Today this property does not vest in the State. Under these circumstances, if we should have credit for having ushered a new era of socialism and nationalism, certainly I am one with my honourable friend, Mr. Santhanam for taking all the credit. Let us take this as a first step and this must lead on to the other step. So far as Madras is concerned, the State itself has undertaken without any murmur, without any difficulty or complaint, and if the object of the State is to expand and to carry electricity to the very doors, that experiment is being tried and successfully also. In the other provinces this experiment has not yet been tried. Therefore, as a first measure, it must be tried. This is certainly a step in the right direction, next only to the state managing departmentally. This is no property of the State; it is as well managed by the State as any other; it is not a proper corporation at all. In that I agree with my friend. If any traducers should be there and quarrel with us for not having nationalized, I will certainly agree with my honourable friend and all others who are responsible for this Bill and say that we have nationalised this industry and that every step taken by these boards will be controlled subject to the supervision of the state. My conception of a State is this: The State instead of being a policing authority, the entire industry must be run by the State. Other activities are only subordinate. Formerly, when the British Government came here, they appointed collectors mainly for the purpose of gathering tax; welfare of the people, growth of property and wealth of the country was not their main concern. Now that we have attained independence, the whole thing must be reversed; the main object of the State must be to make this country more and more wealthy, industrially, agriculturally. Economically, its standards must be lifted up. Then, taxes will flow naturally. Tax collecting, policing and defending against foreign aggression these are only subordinate activities. What is the good of saving us against foreign aggression if we are starved. Hereafter, the Minister in charge of agriculture and industry must have the foremost place in the Government, both in the Centre and in the provinces. After all, freedom should be for improving the economic activity and wealth of the nation. It is not strange if a Minister is directly, through his subordinates, kept in charge of the administration of an Electric Supply Corporation. How many persons are in charge of a Board: three to five. They are appointed by the State. Under the Minister, he has got a Secretary, Deputy Secretary and three or four assistants to help him. How is this worse than a Board constituted for that very purpose. The legal entity is no doubt different. Let us not, in our enthusiasm to embrace the new child which has not yet come into existence, which has not yet begun to crawl, be too much in favour of it. This is after all an experiment. The other experiment will be tried, of taking over electricity directly.

As regards the working of this corporation, I would try to guard against one or two difficulties. Private enterprise is on the wall; it is watching as to how this experiment works. As a matter of fact, they insisted upon income tax being imposed on this corporation. They were very vociferous about it. They insisted that private industry and this Corporation should have an equal start so that they may reduce their overhead charges, pay their labour well, pay attention to their accommodation, they may show that this service is deficient and ultimately twit the Government and say, scrap this Board and give it to the industry. In this way, they insisted on imposing liabilities on this corporation. No doubt, the Centre would like to clutch at the prospect of getting more Income tax. I may also say that in the yearly Finance Bills, a difference can be made in favour of the corporation. Whereas on other industries, you impose the heaviest tax, tax at the maximum rate, less than the maximum rate may be imposed on the profits of this corporation, and the various other statutory corporations. Let us not yield to the temptation of trying to make them absolutely commercial concerns; it is a public-utility service also. The way in which it caters to the needs of the public must be placed in the forefront, before any consideration of earning money alone. Therefore, these corporations must be established and worked with a view to cater to the needs of the public.

Once again, I must congratulate the Honourable Minister for having pushed through this Bill with all his good humour and his enthusiasm for work.

श्री गोपीकृष्ण विजयवर्गिया : श्रीमान् अध्यक्ष महोदय, मैं इस बिल के बीचमें बोला नहीं हूँ लेकिन आखिर में दो शब्द कहना चाहता हूँ। मेरा ख्याल है कि जो हमने बहुत से असूल ले डाउन (lay down) किये हैं, और कम से कम देश में यह ख्याल है कि मुख्य इंडस्ट्रीज (industries) को नेशनलाइज (nationalize) होना चाहिये, खास करके जो एसेन्शियल इंडस्ट्रीज (essential industries) हैं उनको तो होना ही चाहिये। मेरा यह ख्याल था कि कम से कम इलेक्ट्रिक इंडस्ट्रीज (electric industries) पूरी तरहसे नेशनलाइज (nationalize) होनी चाहिये। यह हम लोगों के लिये एक मौका था कम से कम एक नमूने की तरह ही काम करके

बतला देते की जिससे हम नेशनलाइजेशन (nationalisation) की शुरुवात कर सकते। मेरा तो यह पूरा यकीन है और विश्वास है, कि कम से कम यदि और इंडस्ट्री (industries) नहीं तो इलेक्ट्रिसिटी (electricity) पूरी तरह से नेशनलाइज (nationalize) होनी चाहिये। इसलिए "मैं पूरे संतोष है" ऐसा नहीं कह सकता। इसको हाफ हार्टेड कमप्रोमाइज (half-hearted compromise) के तौर पर हम लोग यहाँ पेश कर रहे हैं। जो लोग कहते हैं कि बिजली वगैरह डिपार्टमेंटल (departmental) ढंगसे नहीं चलाई जा सकती, और इसतरह से वह प्राइवेट एन्टरप्राइज (private enterprise) ही सारा रखना चाहते हैं, मेरे ख्यालसे वह प्राइवेट एन्टरप्राइज (private enterprise) अच्छा नहीं होता क्योंकि कुछ मामलों में तो हमको नेशनलाइजेशन (nationalisation) की शुरुवात करनी ही पड़ेगी, और यह जरूरी है, कम से कम इलेक्ट्रिसिटी का मामला तो ऐसा है जो फुल्ली नेशनलाइज (fully nationalize) होना चाहिये। मुमकिन है कि इस तरह से हम जो कमप्रोमाइज ऐक्ट (compromise act) यहाँ पेश कर रहे हैं, जो हाफ हार्टेड मेज़र (half hearted measure) है, वह सक्सेसफुल (successful) न हो सके और फिर सारी बुराई गवर्नमेंट के ऊपर आये। अभी गवर्नमेंट पूरी तरह से डिटरमिन्ड (determined) नहीं है। मैं चाहता हूँ कि हमारी सेन्ट्रल गवर्नमेंट (central government) पूरी तरह से यह तय करें, कि जहाँ तक हो सकता है हम नेशनलाइजेशन की पौलिसी (nationalisation policy) ही अमल में लायें। जबतक बिल्कुल यह पौलिसी (policy) नहीं बरती जायेगी तब तक सिर्फ़ ऐक्ट पास करने से कामयाबी नहीं हो सकेगी। जो लोग कहते हैं (this is a full fledged nationalisation Act) दरअसल ऐसा नहीं है। नेशनलाइजेशन (nationalisation) की इसमें गुंजाइश होते हुए भी जबतक गवर्नमेंट की पौलिसी पूरी तरह से नेशनलाइजेशन (nationalisation) करने की नहीं होगी तब तक नेशनलाइजेशन (nationalisation) अपने आप नहीं आयेगा। अभी तो बहुत सी दिक्कतें हैं, हमको मशीनें और दूसरी चीजों को पाने में मुश्किलता का सामना करना पड़ता है। अभी तक जो मिक्स्ड इकोनोमी (mixed economy) की तजवीजें हो रही हैं और आगे बढ़ रही हैं और बहुत से रिजोल्यूशन और ऐक्ट (resolution and act) पास कर रहे हैं यह सब (unplanned economy) है फिर भी यह कानून एक एक्सपेरिमेंटल (experimental) है और इसकी जरूरत थी। इस चीज के लिये मैं मंत्री महोदय साहब को बधाई देता हूँ। लेकिन मैं यह पूरी आशा करता हूँ गवर्नमेंट (government) सब चीजों का पूरा नेशनलाइजेशन करने की तजवीज को अमल में लायेगी।

Shri Gopikrishna Vijayavargiya (Gwalior State): Mr. Speaker, Sir, I have not spoken during the course of discussion on this Bill, but I want to say a few words in the closing stage. I think we have laid down many principles, and at least there is a strong feeling for nationalization of key industries in the country, especially for essential industries. I was of the opinion that electric industry at least should have been completely nationalized. This Bill afforded us an opportunity to create a precedent for future nationalization. I am, therefore, fully confident and believe that electricity should at least be completely nationalized even though other industries may not be nationalized. Therefore, I cannot say that I am fully satisfied. This is a half-hearted compromise. People say that Electric enterprises cannot be run by Government departments and advocate private enterprise. In my opinion private enterprise is not desirable because in some cases we will have to begin nationalization and it is very essential that Electricity should at least be nationalized. It is just possible that a compromise Bill which we are considering here—being only a half-hearted measure—will not be successful, and as a result the entire blame will be attributed to the Government. The Government is not fully determined as yet. I would like the Central Government to decide finally that as far as possible we should implement the policy of nationalization. Unless and until this policy is persuaded in toto, no useful purpose would be served by merely passing legislation. This is not really a full fledged nationalization Act just as some people say. Although it contains provisions for nationalization, yet so long as the Government does not launch upon a policy of complete nationalization, this cannot materialize. There are still so many difficulties which we have to encounter in purchasing machinery and other goods. Uptil now all those plans of mixed economy that are being developed and many Acts and Resolutions which we are passing are unplanned economy. Even then this Act is only an experiment which was needed. For this, I congratulate the Honourable Minister. I have a fervent hope that the Government will soon implement its policy of nationalization of all such industries.

चौधरी रनवीरसिंह : अध्यक्ष महोदय, मैं इस प्रस्ताव का समर्थन करता हूँ और किसानों की तरफ से मंत्री महोदय के प्रति कृतज्ञता प्रगट करना चाहता हूँ। उन की सेवा में दो तीन नमू निवेदन करना चाहता हूँ। एक तो यह है कि आमतौर से ऐसी कारपोरेशन के अन्दर जो सामर्थ्यशाली लोग हैं और जिनके हाथ में प्रेस होता है और जो वोकल (vocal) होते हैं उनके फायदों का ज्यादा अच्छा ध्यान रखा जाता है। अतः मैं उनसे यह अपील करूंगा कि वे विशेषतः देहाती भाइयों का जिनके पास न तो प्रेस है और न जिनकी आवाज ही है उनके फायदों का अच्छी तरह से ध्यान रखें।

वाले राजी नहीं होंगे लागू नहीं करेंगे। मैं समझता हूँ और यह विश्वास रखता हूँ कि मंत्री महोदय ने जो विश्वास दिलाया है वह उसके ऊपर आरुढ़ रहेंगे। दूसरा एक और खतरा है जैसा कि मेरे कई दोस्तों ने इस बिल पर जब बहस हो रही थी अपने खयालात का इजहार किया कि प्रान्त अपने फायदों की रक्षा इस तरह कर सकते हैं कि वह पूंजी पर इन्ट्रस्ट या ध्याज ज्यादा लगा दें। इस तरह से एक संघर्ष पैदा हो जायेगा और प्रान्त और सेंटर (centre) में जो संघर्ष का खतरा है उसको बचाने की कोशिश करें।

अभी मेरे लायक दोस्त श्री अनन्थासायानम आयंगर ने मद्रास का केस (case) प्लीड (plead) किया। मद्रास के अन्दर बड़े बड़े वक्ता हैं हमेशा इस असेम्बली के अन्दर मद्रास का ही बोलवाला रखते हैं। मद्रास तो एक बहुत आगे बढ़ा हुआ सूबा है। ईस्ट पंजाब के रिप्रेजेन्टेटिव (representative) आमतौर से इस सभा के अन्दर शान्त और चुप रहते हैं। उनके फायदे के बारे में उनसे अपील करूंगा कि वह उनका ध्यान रखें। ईस्ट पंजाब के अन्दर भांखरा डैम (dam) की स्कीम है और भी स्कीमें हैं। और इस समय भी प्रान्त को मण्डी हाईड्रो इलेक्ट्रिक से १० लाख रुपये की प्रतिवर्ष आय होती है। और ईस्ट पंजाब की जो स्कीम होगी उसमें देहातियों का बहुत ज्यादा लाभ होगा। इसलिये मैं मंत्री महोदय से यह पुरजोर अपील करता हूँ कि वह इस सूबे का खास तौर से ख्याल रखें। जैसा मैंने मद्रास के बारे में बताया, वह तो एक अच्छा सूबा है, पढ़े लिखे और बोलनेवालों का सूबा है। उसका अगर थोड़ा कम ध्यान भी रखें तो कोई हर्ज नहीं, मगर ईस्ट पंजाब का ध्यान जरूर रखें क्योंकि ईस्ट पंजाब मद्रास के मुकाबले में एक छोटा सूबा है और मैं समझता हूँ वहां मद्रास से ज्यादा काम हो रहा है।

मद्रास के लिए प्राहिबिशन (prohibition) स्वीकार किया गया है। मैं ईस्ट पंजाब के बारे में भी आपका ध्यान आकर्षित करना चाहता हूँ कि वहां की सरकार ने अक्टूबर के महीने से विशेषतः मेरे जिले रोहतक में, जो कि देहली के पड़ोस का जिला है, प्राहिबिशन (prohibition) जारी करने का इरादा किया है। ईस्ट पंजाब यों ही घाटे का सूबा है और इस तरह की स्कीमें चलाने से उसे और भी घाटा होगा। अतः पंजाब को आर्थिक सहायता की आवश्यकता है।

दूसरी एक बात मैं और कहना चाहता हूँ और वह यह है कि किसानों की आवाज अगर कहीं थोड़ी बहुत सुनाई देती है या उसका असर है तो वह सिर्फ ईस्ट पंजाब के ही सूबे के अंदर। तो इस सूबे के बारे में आप विशेष तौर से ध्यान रखें। मैं आपसे यह अपील करूंगा कि इसमें कोई शक नहीं है कि हमने क्लॉज ८० (clause 80) पास कर दी है, मगर प्रथम तो आप उसको पंजाब के लिये लागू ही न करें और अगर

[चौधरी रनबीरसिंह]

लागू करें तो उसी हालत में जब कि पंजाब की फाइनेन्शियल पोजीशन (financial position) बहुत स्टेबिल (stable) हो जाय। अपील करते हुए और यह विश्वास रखते हुए कि मंत्री महोदय ईस्ट पंजाब को अपने ध्यान से नहीं जाने देंगे, मैं अपना भाषण समाप्त करता हूँ।

(English translation of the above speech)

Ch. Ranbir Singh (East Punjab: General): Mr. Speaker, Sir, I support this Bill and would like to express gratitude to the Honourable Minister on behalf of the agricultural community and respectfully submit two or three points for his consideration. Firstly, it has been generally noticed that in such Corporations more attention is paid in looking after the interests of the wealthy and influential persons who control the press and are vocal. Therefore, I would appeal to him to particularly safeguard the interests of the rural population who have neither any Press nor are vocal.

Secondly, I would say something in regard to East Punjab which is still a newly born Province hardly an year old. And just as the Honourable Minister stated this morning, it has to lose Rs. 5 lacs annually by the levy of income tax, and that amount will have to be made good by the Central Government. East Punjab is a deficit Province and it cannot meet its expenditure. The Honourable Minister also gave an assurance today that the provisions of Clause 80 will not be brought into operation without the consent of the Provincial Government. I believe and am confident that he will stick to this. Another thing of which we are afraid is that just as many of my friends pointed out during the course of discussion on this Bill, that the Provinces can safeguard their interests by charging more interest on their capital. This will lead to a conflict and efforts should therefore be made to eliminate the possibility of such a clash between the interests of the Central and Provincial Governments.

Just now my honourable friend Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar has pleaded the case of Madras. Madras has many renowned speakers, who have always dominated this Assembly. Madras is already a much advanced Province. The representatives of East Punjab in this House are generally silent. I would appeal to them to look after their interests. East Punjab is having the Bhakra Dam and other projects, and even at present Mandi Hydro Electric is yielding a profit of Rs. 10 lacs per annum.

The East Punjab schemes are likely to prove much more beneficial to the rural population. Therefore, I will earnestly appeal to the Honourable Minister to give special consideration to this Province. Just as I have stated in respect of Madras, which is an advanced Province—its people are educated and good speakers. There is no harm if you pay relatively less attention to that province, because East Punjab is a very small province in comparison to Madras and I think more work is being done there than the latter.

Prohibition was enforced in Madras. I would also like to draw your attention to East Punjab. The Government of that Province have decided to introduce prohibition from the month of October more particularly in the Rohtak District from where I come and which is adjacent to Delhi. East Punjab is already a deficit province and it will have to sustain a further setback by the implementation of such schemes. Therefore, this Province is in urgent need of financial assistance.

Another thing which I want to say is that East Punjab is the only province where the peasants have got some effective voice. Therefore, you should be particularly careful towards this Province. There is no doubt that we have passed Clause 80, but I would appeal to you not to enforce the provisions thereof in East Punjab in the first instance, which should be done only when the financial position of the province is fairly stabilized. With this submission and in the hope that the Honourable Minister will not ignore East Punjab, I conclude.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I support this motion. I am in general agreement with the principle of the Bill which goes midway between the two extremes of nationalisation and private ownership. I submit that it is a very difficult thing for Government to jump all at once into business without sufficient experience. Government departments are run by rules and practices, references and notes flying backwards and forwards. They are not particularly suited to function as business concerns though they may become so with experience.

The second reason for opposing State ownership all at once is that our country has not sufficient experience of industries. I therefore submit that the course that has been adopted in the Bill is a wise one and should be given a good start and a good and fair trial.

Apart from these points of substance which have been ably referred to, I have a few remarks to make in regard to the form in which Bills are generally couched. I think form is as much important as substance because after all we have to interpret these Bills on the wording and the form in which they are put. I had a number of amendments of which some were accepted by the Honourable Minister while others were of a more or less formal character which were not formally moved. By a convention established here mere formal amendments which will be taken care of by the Draftsman have not been moved. But there are large numbers of clerical errors; punctuation mistakes, capital letters in the middle of a sentence, and other mistakes of a like nature are not rare. In recent legislative measures I have noticed a tendency to write "Official" with a small 'o' in the words "Official Gazette", as if it is not one expression but "official" is only an adjective of the noun "Gazette". But it is one expression. If while writing "Connaught Place" we spell "Connaught" with a small 'c' or write "Federal Court" with a small 'f' the mistake would be of the same kind. "Official Gazette" is one expression and if we need a sample it is given in the General Clauses Act. This kind of mistake in Bills should be prevented.

Then a large number of amendments were not accepted by the Honourable Minister; I do not blame him or the House because they were not such as could be discussed here, nor can we blame the Select Committee. These are responsibilities of the Draftsman. It is the right of the House and the duty of the Honourable Minister to insist on a better standard of drafting. Otherwise it creates difficulties for members who have to go through these Bills carefully without being sufficiently paid for it. In fact it takes nights and days to go through them and find out these errors. This has been going on for a long time and now the draftsmanship should improve. With these few words I heartily support the motion.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Madras: General): Sir, I do not know why my honourable friend Mr. Santhanam quarrels with the idea that this should be treated as an experiment. Personally I think there are ways and ways of public management. Even the earliest joint stock companies used to be known as public companies. We do not want it; we want to improve upon it. Therefore at one time socialists in the beginning and later on everybody began to think of State ownership and direct management as being the best possible public concern.

Recently in England experiments have been made with such public corporations as are now sought to be established. This is the second time that this House is dealing with a proposition like this. Recently we established the Damodar Valley Corporation, and now we are establishing another one. We have yet to see how these corporations are going to function, to what extent they will be able to give satisfaction to the people and make this business a success. Therefore in that spirit and to that extent it certainly is an experiment.

Then there is the other experiment also that has been made in various places, that is, the older kind of State enterprise. In Madras, as has been said, and in Mysore the other experiment has been made and it has proved to be a success. No one has come forward and said that it has not proved a success or does not give satisfaction to those consumers who had to use electricity. But at the same time we do know that if we are to extend that kind of ownership and management to various other spheres of activity, even to the other provinces under the aegis of the Central Government, there are grave doubts whether it would be equally a success, whether it would be useful to the people and whether it would give sufficient satisfaction to everyone. Therefore this experiment is now being started. I have no objection to this. It is not even a middle course. But there is one difficulty. Whether you have direct State management of the whole thing in this Legislature at the Centre, the Provincial Legislatures have direct control over the Ministry and through the Ministry over the management of that particular concern. But when you come to establish these public corporations, the control that the Legislature can possibly exercise can only become very distant, very much limited, almost diluted. It is there that there is a certain amount of danger. How can we get over this particular difficulty.

Sir, Mahatma Gandhi has raised one objection to the Western conception of Socialism. This Socialism laid too much stress on centralization. So Mahatma Gandhi wanted decentralization. Now decentralization does not mean that the State should go on establishing a number of these ad hoc committees and boards or corporations, and hand over responsibility to them and say to the public: Do not tackle me for anything done right or wrong by this corporation or board. I cannot be held responsible. I have handed over all responsibility and authority to them. Therefore you cannot question me in regard to administration and management of it. You cannot even tackle me or pass a vote of no-confidence.

Now, that is where shirking of responsibility comes in. If a Minister really wishes to dodge the Legislature and legislative control and at the same time have complete control over an industry like this, the best he can think of doing is to establish a committee, a corporation or a board like this. That is where the sting lies.

How are we to get over this difficulty? There is one way, and I am glad it has been anticipated and provision has been made in that direction, namely, to associate the public at as many centres as possible—the interested public—with the organisation that is being set up. I am glad to find, Sir, that there are two organisations to be set up in the provinces—one a committee and the other an advisory council. I think there is to be an advisory council at the Centre also. If it is not, then I hope that very soon Government will come forward to make good that omission and provide for the constitution and functioning of an advisory council at the Centre also. So far as the province is concerned, I am satisfied with the provision now made because all those who will be using electricity in their respective sphere—industrialists, municipal consumers, agriculturists, ordinary tradesmen and businessmen—will be provided with sufficient representation on the advisory council as well as on the Committee, and to that extent we can expect the local public to make their voice heard at the proper centre and in that way not only decentralization, but also a democratic control, a democratic contact and supervision over the activities of the Committee that has to be set up is ensured, and that ought to satisfy all those who are really keen on seeing that our public ownership and public organizations are organized in such a way that the public are brought into direct contact with these organizations and also entrusted with sufficient power and influence over them.

But so far as the Centre is concerned, I am anxious that a similar advisory council should be set up. Unfortunately, there is no provision made here for this but I suppose nothing will prevent my honourable friend, the Minister in charge, to constitute a council like that and then provide it with certain powers to start with, and afterwards come forward with an amending Bill in order to give them also certain statutory powers. Once such Councils are established, I personally feel this sort of mechanism ought to give us, even as an experiment, much better satisfaction than any joint stock company.

Then if it is compared to a direct State-owned management, how will it bear comparison? There is one difficulty. If it were to be merely direct State ownership there is the danger of the personal predilections of a Minister coming in and interfering with the efficiency of the service that has to be rendered. There is also the danger of some of our own legislators trying to interfere where they need not have to interfere and where they ought not to interfere. Such interference also has to be guarded against as much as too much authoritarianism from experts themselves. Secondly, we know the physical limitations of any Minister or Deputy Minister. We find it now through the experience of other countries, that Ministers as we find them today are not really capable of giving as much attention, thought and consideration to all the details of administration that are needed if we are to ensure efficient management of any State or industry. It is for that reason that this idea of a public corporation has been developed. If in England with all their experience in popular government they have found it necessary to resort to this means, I think we cannot be doing wrong in trying to make a similar experiment in this country also. And what is more, our Ministers have got to undertake more and more responsibility in this country in order to make our State a social State, a State that will not be content, as my honourable friend, Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar has put it, with police functions only, but will be willing to attend to all the growing social needs of our population,—and a vast population it is—and to develop our own economic resources.

In these circumstances, keeping in mind these physical limitations, I think it is on the whole wise for our Ministers not to leave our enterprise entirely at the mercy of private enterprise: not to take upon themselves this, too ambitious task of managing all these industries directly through the State, but to rely more and more upon these public corporations, provided they are willing to take into co-operation not only these local advisory councils as suggested here, but also one thing more, that is to take into co-operation the Provincial Governments and the Municipal authorities at various stages and thus strengthen their control over these industries. Sir, I hope the Honourable the Minister in charge of this Bill will take into consideration the suggestions that I have made and will also try to invoke the aid, even to a greater extent than proposed here, not only of the Provincial Governments but also Municipal authorities.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I am thankful to honourable members for their appreciation of what little I have done. It would be wrong on my part if I were to accept it and annex the whole appreciation for myself exclusively. I have a silent partner in this and that is the band of silent officers who have worked in the secretariat here and in Simla. But for their efforts and hearty co-operation, it would not have been possible to draft the Bill or see it through those various stages. I must appreciate their services and I should like the House to express their appreciation for their services too.

[Shri N. V. Gadgil]

I have nothing more to say. I only want assure my honourable friend Mr. Chaudhuri that more than 80 per cent. of the population of this country live in rural areas and so no Government can justify its claim to be fair unless it is keen on doing something in the interest of this 80 per cent. of the population.

It is not strictly in compliance with parliamentary etiquette to reply in detail on the third reading to the various points that have been raised and I am rather very strict about these matters. I do not want to reply in detail. I once more thank honourable members for their appreciative remarks.

Mr. Speaker : The question is:

"That the Bill, as amended, be passed."

The motion was adopted.

MINES AND MINERALS (REGULATION AND DEVELOPMENT) BILL

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil (Minister for Works, Mines and Power): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill to provide for the regulation of mines and oilfields and for the development of minerals, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of The Honourable Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee, Shri K. Santhanam, Shri Biswanath Das, Babu Ramnarayan Singh, Shri B. P. Jhunjhunwala, Pandit Lakshmi Kanta Maitra, Shri Surendra Mohan Ghose, Shri Yudhishthir Mishra, Professor Nibaran Chandra Laskar, Syed Muhammad Sa'adulla, Mr. R. K. Sidhva, Shri Jaspat Roy Kapoor, Shri S. Nijalingappa, Shri M. Tirumala Rao, Shri V. C. Kesava Rao, R. B. Lala Raj Kanwar, and The Mover, with instructions to report on or before the 25th August, 1948, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

[At this stage Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair, which was then occupied by Shri K. Santhanam, (one of the Panel of Chairmen.)]

Mr. Chairman, this Bill as its title shows is meant for the purpose of the regulation of mines and oilfields and for the development of minerals.

Shri H. V. Kamath (C. P. and Berar: General): Sir, may I know if the motion has been put to the House?

Mr. Chairman : The Honourable Minister has not moved the motion yet. He is speaking on the motion and after he has finished it will be put to the House.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil : The necessity for this Bill has been accepted long since. During the war time it was found that it was absolutely necessary to have central control over certain minerals, which were then called strategic minerals. Immediately after the war this question of regulation of minerals assumed great importance as it was appreciated that minerals are a wasting asset and no geological process or fertilisers can add anything to them. Once they are taken out of the earth and used up they are lost and in this respect they differ from other commodities like foodgrains, etc. If this fact is appreciated it becomes all the more necessary that what one day may become scarce should be regulated. Steps should be taken that nothing should be wasted. Care should be taken that the utmost use is made of what is available.

In this connection there is some belief prevalent in this country that India is extremely rich in all kinds of minerals. To some extent this belief is justified. But to say that India is rich and self-sufficient in all those minerals which are either useful for industrial purposes or for strategic purposes is not consistent with the facts.

If we can classify the minerals according to their availability which has been ascertained so far, they may be classified as follows:—

Minerals of which our exportable surplus can dominate the world market. That would be one category.

Minerals of which our exportable surplus forms an important factor.

Minerals in which India may be considered self-sustaining for present needs and those of the immediate future.

Minerals for which India has to depend largely or entirely on foreign imports.

Now in the first category the House will be interested to know that there are only three minerals—Iron ore, titanium ore and mica. It is no doubt true that we have enough supply in the sense that at present they not only meet our local needs but we are even in the position of exporting these in such a manner as to dominate the world market in these minerals. With respect to this category it should be our desire that taking into consideration the needs of this country in all other fields, this should supply us with a sort of bargaining power in the world market, so that whatever we want for the purpose of our industrial expansion should be made available by a resort to methods which are approved and are consistent with commercial practice and morality.

As regard category 2, the House will be interested to know that some of these ores are manganese, bauxite, magnesite, refractory minerals, natural abrasives, steatite, silica, gypsum, monumental granites, monazite, corundum and cement materials. We have some exportable surplus and this is an important factor and can be utilised for the same purpose for which minerals in the first category can be utilised.

The third category consists of coal, aluminium ore, gold, chrome ore, building stones, marble, slate, industrial clays, limestone and dolomite, mineral pigments, sodium salts and alkalies, nitrates, phosphates and so on. In the matter of these minerals there is no doubt that our present needs are satisfied and they are quite enough. When I say our present needs and also the needs in the immediate future it clearly means that if we want to expand those industries in which these minerals form the major commodity we must necessarily have more regulation in the matter of these minerals.

Then there is the category 4 in which, as I said, we have to depend largely on foreign imports. It would be a revelation probably to some members of the House to know that nearly 50 per cent. of India's imports are of goods manufactured out of minerals as raw materials which are sent away from this country. So here is a big possibility of making proper use of these minerals in the manufacturing process in this country and of thus securing industrial expansion and also a rich market for the manufactured articles abroad. If it is completely appreciated that these minerals are necessary not only to keep the present state of industries but also if we want our country to expand industrially more and more, it becomes, as I said, a question of how best we can regulate, how best we can conserve and how best we can make the best use of these. This aspect of the question has been gone into by various committees, official as well as non-official. In the National Planning Committee this point has been sufficiently stressed, and it has been laid down that so far as the key minerals are concerned they must be under some central control, that they must be properly conserved and utilised to the best possible extent. The same emphasis has been laid on this aspect of the question by the Policy Committee that was appointed in the year 1946. What I want to urge is this that I am introducing, and asking this House to consider, this Bill not a minute earlier than what is absolutely incumbent on us if we want to proceed and progress more rapidly towards industrialisation. If we go into the history of how our mineral wealth has been so far exploited, it is a very sorry tale to tell. There has been no proper conservation; there has not even been any scientific and methodical exploitation of certain minerals, and in the case of some we are only getting a price which is so little in comparison with the price which the manufactured article out of that gets. This is not the occasion when I can take mineral after mineral and give a comparison between the prices of the raw material and the manufactured product. It is enough to say, as I said, that here is a field in which we can move with great success. The Coalfields Committee also recommended that the time has come when these things must be managed by some Central organisation. And the Central organisation that has been suggested by the Coalfields Committee is a Ministry for Power and Fuel. But the point has been sufficiently made out that there must be some Central control and regulation. If the minerals are such as are absolutely necessary for our industrial purposes and for strategic purposes, this is not a matter which can be left entirely to the discretion of the Provincial Governments. Two years ago when the Government of India decided to formulate a policy in the matter of minerals, certain proposals were framed and they were sent to the various Provinces for their respective consideration. The views of the Provinces were ascertained and it was found that the Provinces had nothing to say about the desirability of having some Central organisation, but they wanted to restrict the functions of the Central organisation to advice and direction. In the present context of circumstances that is not enough. And when this House has passed the Resolution on Industrial Policy on the 6th of April 1948 it is obvious that minerals cannot now be left entirely to be managed by the Provincial Governments. Mineral oils are put in category No. 1 which according to the statement is a category in which the State must own and control. As regards other minerals they are in category 2 where it is expected that there would be complete and effective control as regards production, conservation and utilisation. The House is probably aware that so far as the supply of petroleum is concerned, the production that is available from this country hardly meets more than 7 per cent. of its requirements. And I may let the House know that at present the exploratory permits granted to just a few companies extend only to 29,000 square miles and no more. As regards prospecting lands they do not go beyond 2,339 sq. miles. As regards actual mining leases it is just 48 square miles. That is the position. It does not mean that there are no sources available, but as the House is aware, prospecting of oil is not a very easy business and it has an element of speculation, and probably years go by and crores are spent before even a drop of oil is seen. (Prof. N. G. Ranga: 'Why not Government take it over and run it?') The policy of the Government as enunciated in the Industrial Policy Resolution, is that mineral oils must be owned and controlled by the Government. But in the statement it has been laid down that if for any reason it is not possible for the Government to do it then under certain suitable conditions private enterprise may be allowed. I have been expecting in the course of the last twelve months private enterprise to come and take up this job. But it is a matter of regret that nobody comes. If anybody comes he wants an assurance that if at all he succeeds after spending so much he must have the fruits of his labour for a fairly long period. So the dilemma is that the Government has not got the technical personnel, has not got enough capital immediately to invest in this which undoubtedly contains an element of speculation, as I said. At the same time we are not yet so practical as to allow private enterprise and one fine morning take over the thing when it is ripe.

However, the fact remains that this is the position so far as mineral oils are concerned. What is expected is that in order to carry out even the policy of public ownership and control in the matter of minerals you must have some organisation, some regulation and that is exactly the purpose of this Bill. The House will find from the Bill itself that provision is made under clause 5 to make rules with respect to mining leases, with respect to the manner in which these leases are to be executed, the time and other conditions on which the leases may be granted.

Then in clause 6 power is to be taken to make the rules as respects mineral development. That contemplates conservation—even the prohibition of exploitation of certain mines or certain minerals, and also utilization according to a plan.

Then the third question remains about the existing leases. In respect of existing leases, the House will find that sub-clause 7 contemplates modification and changes in the terms and conditions of existing leases. All these alterations and modifications are to be made with a view to implement the national policy with respect to minerals.

These three clauses are the main clauses which so far as this Bill is concerned are to be borne in mind.

Another important fact which I must bring to the notice of this House is that these rules would be framed by the Central Government, and the Central Government in this respect will function through mainly the Bureau of Mines which has already been set up and which will be the agency to give directions, to look after reserves and to secure uniformity. The rules will be laid on the table of this House, but in certain matters the rules will require the approval of this House before they become operative. That is so with respect to compensation—

"The principles on which, the manner in which and the authority by which the said compensation shall be determined....."

The fact is that very keen and critical views are entertained by some of the members of this House. They range from cutting the vested interests with a shilling, that is from one extreme to the other extreme in which he is not on any given adequate and fair compensation but something more by way of consolation. So, whatever the principles which the Central Government will decide, those principles will be embodied in the rules and those rules will be laid on the table of this House and they will not be operative unless they are approved by this House, because it is a question of rupees, annas and pies. What those principles are will largely depend upon what colour the Government of the day takes ultimately. If it is blue something will happen, if it is pink something else will happen, if it is red I need not say what will happen. So, the thing that really counts has not been foreclosed and I cannot be accused that I have been either favourable to the capitalists or that I have been favourable to the other side. I have kept myself in such a position that I shall be guided by the wishes of the House in those matters.

These are the main provisions of this Bill. I do hope that if there are any suggestions that the honourable members of this House may offer in the course of the discussion on this particular motion, they will undoubtedly be taken into consideration by the Select Committee. But the urgency of putting this Bill on the Statute Book cannot be too much emphasized. Already in the various Provinces Bills either are introduced or have been passed, in connection with land. The Zamindari Bill has already been passed in Bihar; I understand a similar Bill has considerably progressed so far as Madras is concerned. If Madras follows one policy with respect to existing leases or future leases and if Bihar follows another, I think such differences and departures from the National Policy that has been accepted by this House are certainly not welcome and before the mischief becomes great or assumes a somewhat dangerous proportion it is absolutely necessary that Central legislation should have been passed. Under the present Constitution if the Central legislation comes into conflict with any Province, to the extent to which the Provincial legislation is repugnant with the provisions of the Central legislation it will be disregarded by the court. Although under the present Constitution the subject matter of this Bill is in the Concurrent List, we have done our best to see that the maximum of uniformity, a fair measure of control and direction are secured.

I do not want to take more of the time of this House and would request the House to agree to this motion.

Mr. Chairman: Motion moved:

"That the Bill to provide for the regulation of mines and oilfields and for the development of minerals, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of (1) The Honourable Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee, (2) Shri K. Santhanam, (3) Shri Biswanath Das, (4) Babu Ramnarayan Singh, (5) Shri B. P. Jhunjhunwala, (6) Pandit Lakshmi Kanta Maitra, (7) Shri Surendra Mohan Ghose, (8) Shri Yudhishtir Mishra, (9) Professor Nibaran Chandra Laskar, (10) Syed Muhammad Sa'adulla, (11) Mr. R. K. Sidhva, (12) Shri Jaspat Roy Kapoor, (13) Shri S. Nijalingappa, (14) Shri M. Tirumala Rao, (15) Shri V. C. Kesava Rao, (16) R. B. Lala Raj Kanwar, and (17) The Mover, with instructions to report on or before the 25th August, 1948, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

Dr. P. S. Deshmukh (C. P. and Berar: General): Mr. Chairman, Sir, I am glad the criticism of the minerals policy of the Government that we had in this House has had some influence on the Government and as a first step—I am not prepared to call it anything more than a first step—the Government has come forward with this legislation.

Sir, we were glad to notice that the Government accepted the correctness of all the criticism that we made some time ago. In the speech to which we have just heard, the Government admitted that the regulation of mines and the control of the minerals was in an unsatisfactory condition and that for the sake of uniformity as well as a fair amount of control, this legislation has been proposed. The only pity is that the Government has not as yet been able to disclose a definite plan or policy so far as the exploitation and utilization of the minerals is concerned. This Bill is more or less innocuous. It is a Bill which gives to the Government power to frame rules. What the nature of those rules will be it is absolutely impossible to judge either from the provisions of the clauses entered in this draft Bill or from the speech of the Honourable Minister. Indeed, he said in so many words that he does not want to assume any colour; he left it to the imagination of the members of the House as to what will happen if he were to assume a particular colour—if it were red, blue or black. From this reference of his to colours, may I infer, Sir, that he and his Government are absolutely colourless? I think that is where our dissatisfaction comes in. It is better to assume some colour than to have no colour at all, and even if the Government were to go red that would be far more preferable than to have a colourless Government and to have this sort of a Bill which is not likely by itself to lead us anywhere. As I have suggested, it would have been far better that the Honourable Minister had been able to place before the House the precise steps which the Government of India were prepared to take in the exploitation of the mines and the better utilisation of the minerals. He admitted that our mining was not properly done, that in good many cases we had invaluable minerals and yet the nation was not deriving all the profit that it should make. But how does he intend to make up the losses or improve the situation? That is certainly not clear from his speech or from the Bill itself. So I think I am correct in saying that we have as yet only an intention of the Government before us, that they have now, at long last, decided to intervene in the case of the minerals and the mines but nothing very much beyond that. Had we been given some details and had we been informed as to how the Government proposes to proceed the House would have been in a better position to judge. It is not sufficient to admit that certain things are going wrong. It is also not sufficient for us to know that the Government has realised that things are going wrong and that it has decided to correct them. But we must know when, at what stage and how the Government proposes to rectify the mistakes and thus contribute materially to the progress of the country. This unfortunately, Sir, neither the Minister's speech nor the Bill that is before me is able to give us.

Apart from the fact, Sir, that there is no indication of a definite plan as to how these things are going to be worked out, we are very anxious to see that everything and anything that the Government wants to do should be based on a concrete plan—a concrete plan which will be placed before the House, which the House will have adequate opportunity of discussing. In most cases Sir, the Government has no plans. But where they have they are so unsatisfactory that they contribute merely to worsen what exists. So in this particular case, I think I voice the feeling of many members when I say that it would have been better for the Minister to have provided us with some inkling as to the steps which the Government of India are going to take for the regulation of the mines and the minerals.

I do not wish to take much time of the House. As I said, there is very little on which we can offer any comment, because there is very little in a concrete shape in the Bill itself. But I think there is much to be said so far as even drafting is concerned. I just cursorily glanced through the Bill and I am sure my friend Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad will have to take a lot of pains to correct the Bill. We have this clause 2. I am afraid I am unable to make any sense out of it. The heading is: "Declaration as to expediency of control by Central Government" and the wording of the clause is as follows:

"It is hereby declared that it is expedient in the public interest that the Central Government should take under its control the regulation of mines and oilfields and the development of minerals to the extent hereinafter provided."

I do not see the propriety of having this as a clause. It should have been properly speaking embodied either in the Preamble or, more properly, it may have formed part of the Statement of Objects and Reasons. I do not think there is any purpose, or any meaning in the inclusion of this clause, as a clause. It does not provide for anything.

Mr. Chairman: May I point out to the honourable member that this is necessary in order to take it to Schedule I under item 33 in the Government of India Act? It is only when there is such a declaration that the Government becomes empowered to deal with this subject.

Shri Prabhu Dayal Himatasingka (West Bengal: General): Information, Mr. Chairman. In regard to clause 7 where to be taken to make rules for modification of existing that will be framed affect the leases granted by the P

Mr. Chairman: That is a thing to be addressed when the turn comes, the honourable member may coming of

Dr. P. S. Deshmukh: It is quite natural that my honourable friend should commit a mistake, because you Sir always come to the rescue of the Honourable Minister and even where in the Chair Sir, you are trying to do the same. You have already answered on behalf of the Minister, but I must still say that in spite of the explanation, I remain unconvinced. I have not seen such a clause in any other enactment simply because it is one of the subjects which belongs to the concurrent list of legislation. I think the clause, at least as it stands, is absolutely meaningless.

Coming to the subject proper, Sir, although we are glad that some steps are going to be taken in this direction I would suggest that at least in the Select Committee the entire nature of the Bill may be improved as far as it lies in the power of the Select Committee and that we should really have a more concrete scheme of exploiting the minerals and rectifying the mistakes that have been committed in the past or the mistakes that persist even at the present moment. I am glad the Bill has been brought forward. I congratulate the Minister on it, but he must make it more useful and put it in a more acceptable form.

Shri Ajit Prasad Jain (U.P.: General): I am afraid, Sir, I cannot congratulate the Minister on bringing this measure. Not that I do not want to give him the power to control and regulate the mines and oilfields, but the manner in which he wants to seek the powers is very objectionable. The war has left a bad legacy. There has been an increasing tendency on the part of the executive to encroach upon the rights of the legislature and this Bill is a typical example of that. The Honourable Minister said in his speech that there were only three operative clauses in the Bill, namely, clauses 5, 6 and 7. Clause 5 gives power to the Government to make rules as respects mining leases. Clause 6 gives power to make rules as respects mineral development. Clause 7 gives power to make rules for modification of existing leases. In fact, the Bill contains nothing to which we can give our consent or in which we can concur. All that the Bill requires of us is to give the powers of making rules to the Government. As such, I do not see what objects will be served by referring this Bill to a Select Committee. What this House can concur in or assent to is concrete proposals but in this Bill we do not find any concrete proposals.

Sir, the climax is reached in clause 8 where it is said:—

"The Central Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, direct that any power exercisable under this Act shall be exercised, subject to such conditions, if any, as may be specified therein by such officer or authority as may be specified in the direction."

By virtue of clauses 5, 6 and 7 Government have taken the power to make rules and under clause 8 Government can delegate the power of making rules to such officer or authority as it may nominate. I hope, Sir, that this will not be done, but anyway clause 8 as it stands does give that power to Government.

Clause 9 deals with penalties. Of course, the limit of the penalties is laid down there, but what will be the offences for which these penalties could be inflicted, we do not know. Those offences will be created by rules.

At the top of it is clause 10 which says that all rules made under any of the provisions of this Act shall be laid before the Central Legislature, as soon as may be, after they are made. The assent of the legislature will not be sought for those rules; they will be simply laid before the legislature and the legislature will have no say. There is one rule regarding compensation. This is referred to in clause 7, sub-clause 2, paragraph (c) which refers to rules for determining compensation. Those rules will have to receive the consent of this House before they become operative. The Honourable Minister has only a short time before, steered a very complicated and comprehensive measure in the shape of the Electricity Control Bill to which the House gave its consent. I do not think that the detailed provisions for controlling and regulating mines and oilfields would be more complicated than the Bill which the Honourable Minister has just steered in the House so successfully. What the Honourable Minister wants to do by the rule-making power should have been done by definite and appropriate clauses in this Bill. All those clauses should have come before the House, so that we may know what exactly it is that we have given our consent to, what exactly is the concrete scheme for regulating mines and oilfields. We should not be asked to vote merely in a vacuum.

I would very humbly suggest to the Honourable Minister to withdraw this Bill and bring a detailed measure before this House, so that the proper thing may be done by the proper authority. The legislative functions may be exercised by the legislature and not by the executive. If my suggestion is unacceptable, I hope the Minister will at least accept an alternative, that is all the rules that are made under clause 5 or clause 6 or clause 7 should be placed before this House and before they come into operation the consent of the House should be taken. That will save the Honourable Minister from all the technicalities and procedure which have to be undergone in case of an enactment. It will be a simple procedure, but all the same this House which is the proper legislative authority will have an opportunity of expressing its views, of proposing any amendment that it considers proper and altering the rules. The Honourable Minister also said that this item is on the concurrent list. I should have expected that the Honourable Minister will consult the Provincial Government in regard to the detailed provisions of the Bill.

Mr. Chairman: If I may correct the honourable member, it is not in the concurrent list; it is in the provincial list, but the Central Legislature has been given the power to transfer it to the Central list by a declaration.

Shri Ajit Prasad Jain: Then, Sir, it comes to the concurrent list because a declaration has been made.

Mr. Chairman: It comes to the Federal List.

Shri Ajit Prasad Jain: It comes to the same thing. The Honourable Minister said that the provisions of this Bill would overrule the provisions of Provincial Acts which are contrary to any provision of this Bill. That is the correct position, but what are we doing? We are not passing any definite and concrete law in this Legislature which will overrule the provincial laws but the provincial laws passed by the Provincial Legislative Assembly in a legal manner will be overruled by the executive rules framed by the ministry. That I do not think, Sir, would be a very happy position. Before I sit down, I would once again repeat to the Honourable Minister to honour the procedure and principles which should ordinarily govern Parliaments and democratic institutions. He should come out with another Bill with detailed provisions regarding the control and the manner in which he wants to exercise it.

Shri M. Tirumala Rao (Madras: General): Mr. Chairman, Sir, soon after my friend the Honourable Minister Mr. Gadgil has gathered laurels at the hands of the House for his Electricity Bill, I least expected that he would come with this ineffective measure that would detract from those honours. This measure, Sir, on the very face of it is not calculated to achieve the purpose for which it is intended, namely, to provide for the regulation of mines and oilfields and for the development of minerals. I think, Sir, the development of minerals cannot be effectively guaranteed or brought about by merely regulating the regulation of mines and oilfields. I was one of the members, Sir, at a conference invited by his predecessor, Mr. Bhabha, in the early beginning of 1947 when all the mining and mineral interests in the country were invited to chalk out a plan for effectively exploiting this country. The Britishers by our good fortune have neglected to exploit the earth below to the extent to which they have done on the surface; fortunately we are left with what remain under the bowels of the earth to be exploited further, but the greatest weakness in the development of the mineral wealth of this country is want of proper geological survey. Even after the advent of the popular Government, I do not think that effective steps have been taken to have a proper and wholesale survey of the mineral wealth of this country. Every time we asked for this measure, we are trotted out the old excuse that we are lacking in personnel, but we are not aware of what effective steps have been taken to create the personnel from our universities by the talent that is available in this country. All the reports that are available and which Sir Cyril Fox left give us information regarding the potential wealth of this country. Now the Government cannot tinker with this problem any longer by these half-hearted measures. It is a problem wherein nationalisation must act effectively, because the mineral wealth of the country is intimately connected with the defence industry of our country. If all the articles that are required for our defence could not be got from our own country in times of danger and crisis, we have to depend on foreign countries and if they would range on the opposite side, on the enemy's side, it will be impossible for us to get the raw material. Sir, therefore, what I suggest is this. There is no use merely tinkering with the few clauses of this Bill affecting to control the superficial management of this industry. The bottle-neck of our country is the fuel oil and iron. We will have to make effective survey for oil, if we want to keep not merely the defence industry but also every other limb of our industrial activities which can be kept under proper gear. Every industrialist, every big commercial magnate gives us the reason for the present depression in production the bottle-neck of transport and our transport entirely depends on oil and fuel which is a foreign product and which has to be imported entirely from outside. For some time we have been depending on Burma for oil and with the loss of Burma from the Indian Government, we are completely rendered helpless and dependent on foreign products. Sir, it is up to the Government and the Minister in charge of this Department to see where we can strike oil and get as much out of it, to strike oil wherever it is available, even if it costs a good deal to obtain it.

[Shri M. Tirumala Rao]

With regard to iron too, that is an important item of our industry on which depend the entire subsidiary industries, and really the very economic and food problem of the nation. I am glad that the Madras Government has been trying to do something with regard to finding out new iron ores in the south and working them out. There is no use of depending for your coal on private enterprise. We know what havoc the coal producers have played during the last critical times of the war. I can tell you one foreign company has practically cornered the management of local fields and the distribution of coal because the particular man had the advantage of controlling transport in Government. Unless all the coal was dumped in the particular dump of that company and from there distributed to all the ends of the country, the private producers were helpless. Therefore, I would submit we should not tinker with the problem with a half-hearted measure where you would control the licensees. I know so many Indian businessmen, who manage to get a licence from the provincial Government, go about auctioning it to foreigners. There are concrete examples of this in my province. A certain individual invested Rs. 60,000 and manages to scrap a few samples and get a licence and bargains the thing for three lakhs or four lakhs. These things should not be allowed. You are well aware that I. C. I. has taken a long lease of a mineral area in the Punjab for some time, with exclusive rights of exploitation. Of course, we will take advantage of the technical assistance and also capital under our own conditions if possible from abroad. But, you cannot make this industry a slave of foreign exploiters and foreign capitalists. I therefore urge upon my honourable friend Mr. Gadgil to view it from a larger view point and live up to the reputation which he has just earned in the Electricity Bill, and bring a more comprehensive measure than merely to provide for some rules which may be used to harass some of those producers. I do not think there will be concrete results from this measure. As it has come before the House, we have to support it with what amendments may be necessary. This will have to be looked into in the Select Committee. I would urge upon him to bring in a more comprehensive measure whereby the mineral wealth of our country is completely utilised in the best interests of the country and ease the present industrial situation wherein fuel and iron are the chief bottlenecks.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Madras: General): Mr. Chairman, Sir, I am in favour of this Bill. But as I have already said even when it was being introduced for the first time, I want something much more than this. Several honourable members have already said that. I hope the Honourable Minister will keep that in mind, try to get busy in preparing an additional Bill and get it ready if possible for introduction even during this Session.

So far as this Bill goes, it has got to be passed immediately. I have no doubt whatsoever about it. If any one reads these clauses 6 and 7, he will be convinced how poor must be our provincial as well as the Central Governments in the matter of their own power to regulate and control the mineral resources of this country. That they should have found it necessary to come before this House to ask for these very elementary powers with which the State should have clothed itself long long ago, shows how in this country, anyhow, the past regime had neglected the proper regulation and protection of the mineral resources and had neglected its duty to safeguard the proper exploitation of our mineral resources. It also brings out one other point. Although our provincial Governments have been clothed with these powers, they have not taken care to pass the necessary legislation and to protect and regulate our mineral resources. It is all the more reason why the Central Government should at least now have come forward with this Bill asking for these powers in the hope that in the near future it may be able to take the necessary action in this direction.

Several honourable members have asked the Government why it is not stated what exactly are the powers that it wants, in regard to which it wants to make these regulations and in what directions it wishes to make these regulations and so on. What we ought to do is to clothe this Government with this minimum of power and afterwards expect it to look into the whole matter and come forward with more positive proposals, one honourable member wondered whether all these rules that are sought to be passed under this Act would be placed on the table of this House at all. I would request him to look at Rule 11.....

Shri Ajit Prasad Jain: I never said that they will not be placed on the table; I said that they will not require our assent.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: They would be placed on the table of the House as everybody knows, once any set of rules are placed on the table of the House, it is open to any of the members to ask the leave of the House to proceed with the discussion of those rules, if he finds any of them to be objectionable. It is never too late; it is provided in the standing orders. A certain period of time is given within which it is open to a member to take the House into his confidence.

I am in entire agreement with what my honourable friends have said when they complained about the inactivity of this Government. What is it that has prevented this Government to invest, sink if necessary and risk four or five crores of Rupees in order to discover any mineral oils in this country? Why should my honourable friend have given this one year to the private capitalists and begged them to invest their money in this? When they have failed, he expresses his regret. On the other hand, I would have expected him to have expressed his happiness that private enterprise has failed in this direction and has left plenty of scope for the State to develop the mineral oils. Does he not know the experience of Mexico where mineral oils were allowed to be exploited by the Americans and the British? When later on the Mexican revolutionary leaders wanted to nationalise it, any amount of trouble was created by them and the Government was not allowed to function for several months and the Government was almost made bankrupt. Does he want our Government also to be faced with a similar contingency, having allowed our own mineral oil resources to be exploited either by Indian enterprise or Indian plus foreign enterprise? Therefore, I would make this suggestion very seriously that the Government should even now come forward before this House, as soon as it may be, with a proposal to ask for four or five crores to be risked in this particular venture. Let them go into it; if they can possibly tap it, well and good; if they cannot, it is money well worth spent and lost also, because, if we were to have another war, what would be our fate? Should we not think of that? Should we not sink as much money as is necessary in order to ensure ourselves against a similar miserable plight that India has had to suffer from during the last war? Sir, it is well known that petrol in America is selling at 13 or 14 annas a gallon, whereas it sells here, I do not know how it is selling in Delhi, it is selling at Rs. 2-4-6 here. It is nearly three times as much as it is in America. Why should it be so? Because, the Americans and the British between themselves have a kind of monopoly over the entire extraction, refinement and supply of petrol. In these circumstances is it not in our own interest to take this risk? Therefore I want Government to move in this direction as expeditiously as it possibly can.

Then, Sir, coming to this Bill itself, there is one particular provision to which I take very strong objection, and that is clause 12. This Government wants to give to itself power to exempt any concern, any mining authority or any one from any obligation to respect any of the rules that it might make under clause 6. This is an absurd clause. Why do you want to take these powers here and then give it yourself again to exempt any authority from compliance with any one of these provisions here? And not one, all of them too. It reads thus:

"The Central Government may authorise in any case the granting of any mining lease or the working of any mine on terms and conditions different from those laid down in the rules made under sections 6 and 7, or exempt any mine from all or any of the provisions of this Act or of any rules made thereunder."

I do not think the Honourable Minister has really bestowed any kind of thought at all to this case; if he had done so he would not have agreed to this and would certainly have scrapped it and brought this Bill up without this clause.

Then there is another clause, clause 8. My honourable friend Mr. Rao wondered why this power of delegation has been taken by Government. Then the Honourable Minister was saying that he wanted to give this delegated authority to the provincial Government. If he meant only the provincial Government and nothing else—and indeed in the Statement of Objects and Reasons he has stated that he was thinking of Coal Commission also—he should have stated it clearly in so many words. Otherwise it would mean that it would be open to the Central Government or the Honourable Minister to authorise any one of his own officers either at the top or anywhere else to exercise any of these powers. That we are certainly interested in guarding ourselves against. You should make it perfectly clear here to which particular recognisable authority you wish to delegate your powers. If it is the provincial Government say so, if it is the Coal Commission or any other similar Commission that may be established under statute, say so; but do not make it as vague as you have made it here.

Lastly, I wish to express my regret that till now our national Government has not come forward with any piece of legislation to propose the nationalisation of mining. I wish to remind my honourable friend the Minister that there were two Coal Commissions which had gone into this matter, and they came to the conclusion that our coal resources are being scandalously neglected or wasted; and in order to prevent that, they suggested that coal mining should be nationalised. Government have not come forward with any proposal. The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: That is not true? One Commission did recommend it by a majority, though of course there was a minority to make it convenient for my honourable friend to provide an argument. But nevertheless there was a recommendation; and, what is more, my honourable friend was also with me when we were all in the opposition and we were demanding in the name of our own Congress Party the nationalisation of our coal mines. And yet he has not come forward with any such proposal till now. I want him to think about it seriously; I want him to come forward with such a proposal at the earliest possible moment. I know that today on the railways some of the best kinds of our coal are being burnt, whereas ordinary coal of the lowest possible quality would do the job and would be quite useful. Why is it being wasted? Because there is no authority to regulate the proper utilisation of our coal. Therefore I do trust that my honourable friend will soon give his best thought to it and will come forward with the necessary legislative proposals for the nationalisation of our coal mining industry.

The Honourable Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee (Minister for Industry and Supply): Sir, I desire to say a few words at this stage regarding the scope of the Bill a portion of which affects my Ministry as well. In fact the Bill has been drafted by the Ministry of Works, Mines and Power in consultation with my Ministry. I quite appreciate the motives which have prompted several of the members who have spoken today urging the immediate necessity of taking adequate steps for the purpose of fully utilising our mineral resources; but I shall ask them to consider what the principal object of this Bill is. It is true that this Bill does not aim at solving those very important and essential matters which must be solved as quickly as possible for the purpose of increasing a portion of our vital national wealth and also for meeting any emergency which may arise in the coming years. One difficulty which we have felt is with regard to the powers which the Central Government now has, to regulate the administration of mines and mineral rights. As has already been explained by my honourable friend, the Minister for Works, Mines and Power, the provincial Governments have these powers today. It is essential as a first step that the Central Government must get these powers so that a centrally regulated and directed policy may be formulated with the least possible delay. What the Bill does today is only to provide the fulfilment of the first step and nothing more. But much more yet remains to be done and will have to be done,—may be in the form of a Bill, may be in the form of Governmental policy. All matters will not come up before the legislature; they will have to be done by executive orders in accordance with the national policy which has already been approved by the House. But this is the first essential step that we have to take, if we do not want to fritter away whatever valuable resources we possess today. The Central Government must take over the power. In fact a difficulty was raised by the Ministry of Law—and quite naturally—with regard to the powers which the present Parliament can exercise in relation to the existing Constitution Act. It was pointed out that the powers proposed to be taken by Government must come within the four walls of the provisions of the existing Act. That is the reason why such a modest proposal has come before the House, not that the Honourable Minister for Works, Mines and Power or myself do not realise the need for taking more drastic steps; but we cannot do so under the existing Act. The utmost that we could do has been provided in the Bill now before the House. For the rest we must wait until the new Constitution Act is suitably enacted.

With regard to the question of nationalisation, I would submit that that is not a matter which really arises on this Bill. The industrial policy has been laid down. Take my honourable friend Prof. Ranga's point about the nationalisation of coal. Rightly or wrongly this legislature has decided, in accordance with the statement of industrial policy which I placed before the House in April last that you will give ten years' time to the coal mining industries and then later on you will take up the question of nationalisation. But meanwhile it is proposed that the Central Government will have ample rights to regulate the proper working of these mines.

One important question has arisen today, so far as the administration of coal mines is concerned; it is a matter which comes under my Ministry. Now we have decided that we shall wait for ten years. During this period of ten years it may be quite possible that the mining interests may be jeopardised; the mines may not be worked properly, they may be overworked, the people who are in charge of the mines may not be anxious to carry out the policy which may be consistent with the welfare of India as a whole. Surely the Government of India is not going to sit idle and watch the mining rights being destroyed or their value minimised. Therefore we want to take the power even during this period of ten years. We shall have the power to give directives what particular mining operations should take place in accordance with what the Government of India consider to be desirable and necessary; and if it so happens that there are cases where our directives are not followed, power must be taken to meet the situation, even to take over those mines and work them ourselves. But we are prepared to give ten years' time to all the existing interests, and if they fall in line with Government policy they will have nothing to be afraid of. Therefore the essential thing here is that the Government of India must be clothed with power to regulate in accordance with Central policy. It is not a question of private interests alone. It is a question of conflicting policies of the Provincial Governments. We have administrative or legislative Acts passed or done by the Provincial Governments. Each province wants to look at matters from its own provincial point of view. We should not permit that to continue. The Government of India must step in and with the powers it may now get, it must see that it lays down quickly a Centrally administered policy.

With regard to coal, a Coal Commission is to be appointed. We are discussing how to bring it into existence. We want that a special authority should be created under the Government of India, to whom we shall hand over the task of re-orientating the policy during the next 10 years and also formulating a policy which you can give effect to after 10 years. We have been advised that it will not be necessary to come before the Legislature and pass an Act for that purpose. The Government of India has sufficient power to appoint a Commission and give to it adequate powers for the purpose of carrying on the administration during the interim period. I am hoping that in the course of the next few weeks we will be able to make an announcement. The House should give its full support to the Bill as proposed by the Minister in charge of Works, Mines and Power and accept it as the first step which must be approved by the legislature so that the Government may go forward and give effect to the policy already approved by the House.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil: I do not want to take up much time of the House. I want to make it clear that the industrial policy was laid down and was accepted by this House on the 6th April, 1948. I believe, Sir, that every member of this House, and more particularly my honourable friend, Dr. Deshmukh, was completely aware of it. That policy clearly lays down that the State must play a progressively active role in the development of industry, and from that point of view it divided the entire industrial field into three categories. In the first category mineral oils are included and that sphere will not only be controlled but owned by the State. I do not think there is any doubt about that policy. So also other minerals are to be controlled. They are included in category 2. So there is no question that there has been a complete absence of policy on the part of Government with respect to this.

As regards the criticisms of my honourable friend, Mr. Tirumala Rao, I find from the proceedings of the conference to which he made reference that the conference came to certain conclusions and one was that there must be central legislation to co-ordinate and secure more uniformity in the matter of mining leases and other matters. That conference also decided that the mineral policy should be laid down in terms of the memorandum of Dr. Wadia, the Mining Adviser with the Government of India. That lays down the following objectives:

- (a) Attainment of mineral and metal self-sufficiency as far as possible;
- (b) Bringing under central control minerals of strategic and national defence importance;
- (c) Regulation, amounting to stoppage of export of some key minerals, such as manganese, chromite, ilmenite sillimanite, beryl, rare earths, etc., without a compensatory return or barter of minerals and metals in which the country is deficient;
- (d) Encouragement of local manufacture, especially of non-ferrous metals and products now imported from abroad, e.g., aluminium, various ferro-alloys, alloy-steels and alloy-metals, heavy chemicals, mica goods, titanium paints, etc.;
- (d) A better adjustment of mineral tariff in the levying of export and import duties and fixing of quotas;
- (e) Revision of mineral taxation, royalty and lease laws; and lastly,
- (f) A progressive change-over to State-ownership, where economically feasible, of the coal, petroleum and basic metals mines.

That is exactly what is embodied in substance in the policy laid down and accepted by the House on the 6th April. Surely, it cannot be expected that every detail of every mineral should be embodied in a small Bill, the character and scope of which has been precisely defined by my honourable friend, Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee. A little more careful study of the provisions of this Bill will convince any fair minded observer that what has been the mineral policy as accepted has been sought to be implemented under these rules.

Now an objection has been raised by my honourable friend that this is something novel about doing everything by rules. Probably he is not aware of the modern legislative practice. Well, rules have got to be made and when they extend into a hundred, three hundred and even four hundred, you do not expect any House of Representatives to consider in detail all those four hundred rules and regulations. It has now been accepted that a fair measure of legislative power has got to be delegated to the Executive of the day, if you believe it capable of doing the right thing. And more particularly, when executive is a responsible Executive. It only takes the colour that the House has, as the majority of the Members of the House invests the Government with the colour that it has got, whether blue, pink, or red, or something else. So the accusation really comes home to the honourable member himself. My whole point is that this delegated legislation is an accepted matter in modern times. I have taken particular precautions in so far as the principles of compensation are concerned to see that I do not merely by my executive order decide them, because that is really a matter which touches the purse of the taxpayer, and from that point of view I have incorporated a clause under which it will be necessary that those principles when embodied in the rules must be accepted by the House before they become operative. I have tried to be very fair as I have already stated, and with regard to the other suggestions which have been made with respect to some of these clauses, I have no doubt that the Select Committee will take them into consideration.

[Shri N. V. Gadgil]

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That the Bill to provide for the regulation of mines and oilfields and for the development of minerals, be referred to Select Committee consisting of The Honourable Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee, Shri K. Santhanam, Shri Biswanath Das, Babu Ramnarayan Singh, Shri B. P. Jhunjhunwala, Pandit Lakshmi Kanta Maitra, Shri Surendra Mohan Ghose, Shri Yudhishtir Mishra, Professor Nibaran Chandra Laskar, Syed Muhammad Sa'adulla, Mr. R. K. Sidhva, Shri Jaspal Roy Kapoor, Shri S. Nijalingappa, Shri M. Tirumala Rao, Shri V. C. Kesava Rao, R. B. Lala Raj Kanwar, and The Mover, with instructions to report on or before the 25th August, 1948, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned till a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock on Tuesday, the 17th August 1948.

STATEMENT BY SHRI R. K. SHANMUKHAM CHETTY ON HIS RESIGNATION AS MINISTER FOR FINANCE

Shri R. K. Shanmukham Chetty (Madras: General): Sir, with your permission I should like to make a brief statement about the circumstances that led to my resignation of my office. Even though the matter is explained to some extent in the letters that were published this morning, it is a parliamentary privilege for a Minister who resigns to explain to Parliament the reasons for his action. I must thank you, Sir, for according me this privilege and I may assure you at the very outset that I will not abuse the consideration that you have shown to me by making any reference to any matter that might involve any controversy at all.

The circumstances arose out of certain actions of mine connected with the Income-Tax Investigation Commission. The Act for constituting this Commission was passed as early as April, 1947. On account of the preoccupations of the then Government with the partition and the 15th August, no action was taken under that Act. After the new Government assumed office on the 15th August we took steps to constitute the Commission, and accordingly the Commission was constituted early in December. In the meantime it was felt that the Act of 1947 was not adequate to enable the Commission to function effectively. Therefore an amending Bill was prepared to be placed before the legislature in due course. In the Act of 1947 the last date for reference of cases to the Commission was prescribed as 31st December 1947, after that date Government did not have the power to refer any cases at all. It was brought to my notice that even though we have got an amending Bill on the anvil we cannot act on the assumption that that amending Bill will be passed by the Legislature. If, for instance, the amending Bill had been thrown out by the Legislature and we failed to take any action under the old Act we would have lost the power of referring cases to the Commission and the whole work of the Commission would have become null and void. Under the Act we are charged with the responsibility of referring to the Commission only those cases in which we ourselves are satisfied that there is a prima facie case. Unfortunately there was no time to examine all the cases in detail to decide which of the cases involved in the various reports showed really a prima facie case. Under these circumstances, with a view to save limitation as it were, I ordered that all the cases about whom Income-Tax Officers had reported should be referred to the Commission before 31st December; and my intention has been always that later on I should examine these cases and then withdraw if I found it necessary in cases which did not disclose a prima facie case for reference, because it was my duty not to refer any cases to the Commission unless I was satisfied on examination that there was a prima facie case. Later on the amending Bill was introduced and in the meantime after reference of the cases to the Commission somewhere towards the last week of December I began to examine some of the cases, and I found that some of these in my opinion did not show any prima facie case at all. So in accordance with my original intention I gave instructions to the Central Board of Revenue to withdraw certain groups of cases. In the letter that I have written to the Prime Minister a very serious error has unfortunately crept in. I asked some one on my behalf to find out for me when the amending Bill was introduced in the legislature and I was told it was the 1st March, whereas according to my decision my instructions for the withdrawal of the cases were given on the 19th February. Subsequently this morning to my utter amazement I found that the Bill was introduced in the Assembly on the 10th February but that the reference motion to the Select Committee was made on 1st March. This is a very grievous error which I ought not to have committed. It was my duty to have verified the dates, and I therefore apologise to the Honourable the Prime Minister for the grievous error contained in my letter.

There is one other reference in that letter which I think on further consideration absolutely inappropriate on my part, to have introduced. I stated in that letter that whether in the light of the passage of the amending Bill through the Select Committee my original order of withdrawal should have been kept in abeyance did not occur to me or my advisers. I now find that I should not have made any reference to my advisers at all because at an early stage, as early as in January when I discussed this matter with my advisers, they drew my attention to the proposal that we ourselves were incorporating to the effect that cases can be withdrawn only with the consent of the Commission. But it is on my responsibility that I took the view that the object of that amendment was entirely different. The object contemplated by that amendment according to me was that after the cases were once referred, no pressure should be brought to bear on any Minister to withdraw for extraneous reasons. But in this particular case—in these groups of cases—since I thought that we had not even a chance of examining whether there was a prima facie case, I understood that it was not necessary to ask for the consent of the Commission in such cases. Therefore my advisers are not responsible for this decision. On the other hand they did their duty in pointing out to me the need for that consideration. I therefore must take the fullest responsibility on my own shoulders and not try to shove it on any of my advisers who have always during the past one year discharged their duties most conscientiously and honestly.

These are the circumstances relating to these withdrawals. This matter was raised and subsequently in consultation with the Honourable the Prime Minister, the whole procedure was set right by our referring the cases again to the Commission and asking for their consent for the withdrawals. Even though that has been done, my conduct in the original order of withdrawal has created a suspicion about my bona fides. It would naturally create a suspicion in any man who reads the circumstances. So I put it to the Honourable the Prime Minister whether he, at any rate, had any doubts about my honesty or bona fides, and he was good enough and generous enough to repeat on more than one occasion that he was thoroughly satisfied with my honesty and bona fides. But Sir, notwithstanding this assurance from the Honourable the Prime Minister, I felt that in the context of the new independence that our country has obtained, in the context of the parliamentary institution which we have begun to work, we must set absolutely the highest standards of integrity in public life: not even the second-rate of standards would be sufficient for us. It must be absolutely the first-rate. Even though a Minister's conduct and bona fides may be justified by argument, yet, if, in the minds of our people who may not understand these technicalities, there is a room even for suspicion, such a Minister ought not to continue in office, and it is under these circumstances, and because I felt like that, that I requested the Honourable the Prime Minister to relieve me of my office: and he has relieved me of my office today.

STATEMENT BY SHRI R. K. SHANMUKHAM CHETTY ON HIS RESIGNATION AS MINISTER FOR FINANCE 359

That is all the statement that I have to make and I wish to take this opportunity of thanking every section of the House for the courtesy and the co-operation that I have received from their hands during the past 12 months of my office. There have, no doubt, been differences amongst us and criticisms have been levelled against me. But criticisms and differences are the very salt of political life. I have never taken them with malice and I hope that I have not shown any malice towards any honourable member of this House.

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru (Prime Minister and Leader of the House): Sir, after the full and very frank statement by my honourable friend and colleague, there is very little that I need say in this matter. In various ways this question has been before us and the Government for some time. Ultimately, in so far as those references to the Tribunal were concerned, we came to certain decisions, which the House knows and which were in full conformity with the amending Act and the wishes of this House. So there is little that need be said about that particular matter. That is over.

But it was pointed out to me only a very few days ago—about four or five days ago—that many of these steps were taken at a time when this House was 12 Noon actually considering, or the Select Committee was considering this amending Bill: and it seemed to me that no such step should have been taken without the knowledge and consent of the House or the Select Committee at that time. I have no doubt myself that there was no question of mala fides in the matter, apart from any other reason, if I may say so, because any attempt to take such step could not possibly be kept secret from the House for long. It had to come to the knowledge of the House, the Government and others. So I was convinced of that. But the question did arise in my mind that whether a thing was done carelessly or not it was an error, and a grave error, and an error of this kind is bound to create suspicion in the public mind, and an error of this kind is not a thing which normally should be passed over. Probably the same chain of thought occurred to my honourable friend and he wrote to me the letter that has already been published, offering his resignation. Normally speaking, I would have hesitated a great deal in accepting that resignation, partly because, firstly, I felt that what had happened was an error of judgment—however serious—nevertheless it was an error: secondly, because Government has profitted a great deal by his ability and by his hard work in the very responsible office that he held: thirdly, that in this very session there are certain important measures which he was going to pilot. There is the Nationalization of the Reserve Bank measure: there is the Banking Bill. These are highly important measures and it will not be easy for a new comer to handle them. Nevertheless, in spite of all these considerations, it seemed to me that the very first consideration that I should have—and that I was sure this House would like me to have—was that when any kind of a mistake or error of this kind was committed, we should accept the consequences of that error and try to remedy that in the way we have tried to do so.

We, this House, and even more so the Government live, and ought to live, in the full blaze of publicity. There should be nothing hidden. There are many secrets that the Government have to deal with, of course, and we shall have secrets of that kind, but otherwise our activities must be completely public, open to public questioning and open to public condemnation. No democratic system can function otherwise satisfactorily. Therefore, when anything occurs that is open to public criticism of this kind, we must frankly face the issue and not try to slur over it or gloss over it.

I should like to congratulate the honourable member on the way he has faced this issue, bravely and frankly, and accepted the fact that he had made a serious error at that time, and has in consequence offered his resignation. I replied to him in the terms which members of the House might have already read, and I have nothing more to add to those terms. It was not technically for me to accept his resignation, because appointments and acceptances of resignations are the business of the Governor General. But I recommended to the Governor General to accept his resignation and I have received from him in writing that he has accepted it.

Now, may I just add one or two words more. As I said in my letter of reply to Mr. Shanmukham Chetty I requested him to hand over charge for the present temporarily to my colleague, Mr. Neogy, the Minister for Commerce. Mr. Neogy, when I requested him to take over charge, was singularly reluctant to do so, partly of course, because he is heavily worked, and it was at my earnest request that he consented to carry on till more permanent arrangements could be made. I think, if I may say so with all respect, that this question, unfortunate as it is, and much as we regret its outcome, resulting in the resignation of a respected and valued colleague, may I say this incident reflects credit in the ultimate analysis on my colleague and on this House.

ELECTIONS TO EMPLOYEES' STATE INSURANCE CORPORATION, COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC ACCOUNTS AND STANDING FINANCE COMMITTEE

Mr. Speaker: I have to inform the Assembly that upto the time fixed for receiving nominations for the Employees' State Insurance Corporation, Committee on Public Accounts and Standing Finance Committee, two nominations in the case of the first and one nomination in the case of each of the second and third were received. As the number of candidates is equal to the number of vacancies in each of these Committees, I declare the following members to be duly elected:

I. Employees' State Insurance Corporation.—(1) Shri Ajit Prasad Jain and (2) Shri Khandubhai K. Desai.

II. Committee on Public Accounts.—Acharya Jugal Kishore.

III. Standing Finance Committee.—Shri B. P. Jhunjhunwala.

CENTRAL SILK BOARD (BILL)

The Honourable Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee (Minister for Industry and Supply): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill to provide for the development under Central control of the raw silk industry and for that purpose to establish the Central Silk Board, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Shri K. Hanumanthaiya, Shri Brajeshwar Prasad, Shri H. V. Kamath, Begum Aizaz Rasul, Shri O. V. Alagesan, Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena, Shri Mihir Lal Chattopadhyaya, Shri A. K. Menon, Shri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar, Dr. P. S. Deshmukh, Mr. R. K. Sidhva, Ch. Ranbir Singh, Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri, Shri B. A. Khimji, and the Mover, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

Sir, I need not say much in commending this motion to the House. This Bill provides for the constitution of a Board representing all interests, regional and otherwise for the promotion of measures for the development of the silk industry in India. The sericultural industry in India, which is an important national asset and occupies a large place in the economy of the states of Kashmir and Mysore and the provinces of Madras and West Bengal comprises of two well defined sections. The first is the production of raw cocoons and the second is the reeling of raw silk from these cocoons and the utilisation of their byproducts. The first of these items is one of the more important cottage industries in the country which offers subsidiary occupation to more than half a million families. From time immemorial the silk industry has contributed much to our country's rural economy. Till recently it was in a flourishing condition and it has been estimated that at one time the annual export of raw silk exceeded £2 million. However, early in this century the position changed and it became necessary to protect the industry from competition from Italy and Japan, particularly the latter country. There have been two Tariff Board enquiries regarding the silk industry in India, the first in 1933 and the second in 1938. A third enquiry will shortly be instituted.

The industry assumed a new importance, particularly on the processing side with the entry of Japan into the second World War. The demand for silk for the manufacture of man-dropping parachutes called for a large expansion of silk manufacture in India, particularly as regards the processing of cocoons. Under this wartime drive the filature basins in the country expanded more than fourfold between 1942 and 1946 and the area under mulberry increased about three times. The achievement of the new parachute silk industry in India during the war period was indeed remarkable. Over 3 million yards of silk fabric satisfying severe international standards required for parachute production were made available to the army and were produced in this country. Thousands of Indian-made man-dropping silk parachutes were used in the farflung theatres of war and must have contributed greatly to its success.

The silk industry was rightly considered important enough for the appointment of a special enquiry committee to make recommendations to the Government of India for its development in the postwar era. The Panel made various recommendations for improvement in quality and increase in production. The Panel recommended that a Central Silk Board should be set up so as to bring together the experience and knowledge of all interests in the various silk-producing parts of the country. A conference of representatives of States, Provinces and other interests was called recently and after discussion with them we decided to take steps for the formation of a Central Silk Board. The experience that we have had with various boards dealing with products like cotton, lac, coffee and rubber shows that such a Board can be of great value to the industry on the one hand and of great assistance to the Government on the other in the formulation of government policy. The Bill which is before the House is based on the unanimous recommendations of this conference. It provides for a Board which will comprise of representatives of the Central Government and the governments of the Provinces and States, which either produce or consume silk and also of representatives of processing industries like the spun silk industry, the twisting industry and the weaving industry. The Board will be largely autonomous in nature subject to the over-riding authority of the Central Government.

Although the matter is more or less non-controversial I thought it might be advisable to refer it to a Select Committee, get its report and place it before the House in the course of this session.

Several suggestions have been made to me regarding some additions to the Board which we have constituted, particularly to include representatives of the Agricultural Ministry. Those proposals may be considered by the Select Committee.

There is one matter in connection with the work of the Board which might be taken into consideration and that is with regard to finance. We had about 400,000 lbs. of silk from Japan some time ago. It has been decided that this quantity of silk should be sold on Government account through the provincial governments of those areas where silk is mostly produced. It is our hope that we may be able to get by the sale of this silk about 20 or 25 lakhs of rupees. Government will make a profit of this amount and it has been decided that this will be placed at the disposal of the new Silk Board, so that its schemes for development of research and other such far-reaching proposals may be quickly given effect to. In addition to that, the Board will have an income from the cess and Government will have to consider how it will be able to place at the disposal of the Board such other funds which may be required for specific purposes.

With these words, Sir, I commend my motion to the acceptance of the House.

Mr. Speaker: The motion does not mention the date by which the Report has to be made by the Select Committee.

The Honourable Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee: May I say 'within a week'?

Mr. Speaker: Just as it suits the convenience of the Honourable Minister and the House. I do not think under the Rules it is necessary.

The Honourable Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee: Then we may leave it as it is.

Mr. Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the Bill to provide for the development under Central control of the raw silk industry and for that purpose to establish the Central Silk Board, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Shri K. Hanumanthaiya, Shri Brajeshwar Prasad, Shri H. V. Kamath, Begum Aizaz Rasul, Shri O. V. Alagesan, Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena, Shri Mihir Lal Chattopadhyaya, Shri A. K. Menon, Shri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar, Dr. P. S. Deshmukh, Mr. R. K. Sidhva, Ch. Ranbir Singh, Sriji Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri, Shri B. A. Khimji, and the Mover, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

Srijut Kuladhar Chaliha (Assam: General): Sir, the Bill is not so harmless or so innocuous as it appears. It applies to all the Provinces of India. It also contains a declaration that the development of the raw silk industry will be brought under the control of the Central Government. I find from the Definitions that it is difficult to know whether cottage industries where no machinery is used will be free from trouble or not. The definition of what is 'manufacture' is also not given at all, and this will lead in future to further interference with the cottage industry, the more so in a place like Assam where every householder reels silk. The imposition of a cess will interfere practically with every householder in Assam. The best course for the Government would have been not to levy a cess on raw silk. Probably the Minister for Supply hardly knows that out of 75 lakhs of people about 10 lakhs of families in Assam produce and spin silk. If we are going to levy a cess on every householder who produces about half a lb. or a quarter lb. the interference from the Excise Department will be so much that there will hardly be any woman or child who will be safe from the interference of the Excise staff whom they know only very well. I think there ought to be a certain limit of production and they ought to have said that the limit of production for purposes of the levy should be not less than 10 maunds or so. If the cess is going to be levied it should be on that quantity alone. As it is, under clause 9, the position of raw silk reelers would be very difficult and there will hardly be any room for persons to continue the work unless the limit is fixed. I think the Honourable Minister would be trespassing into the rights of men and women and every householder in Assam by this sort of legislation. As I find from the functions of the Board, they will have to give statistics, and if it is wrong then there would be some further trouble again.

Then there is another point, namely that if a wrong assessment is made, he or she has to go to the District Magistrate from 50 miles or more for an appeal. It is rather a very difficult process and this arrangement will only give us further trouble; practically it will interfere with the personal liberties of all people.

Then there is another matter. The constitution of the Board is so made that we have very little voice in it in spite of the fact that we are interested in a mass scale there—and every family is interested. Our representation on the Board is only one Member, whereas our interest is almost universal and we ought to have been given more representation on it. The oversight cannot be simply due to inexperience or inability to appreciate facts. I think it has not been properly understood at all as to what part we play in producing silk in our part of the country.

We find under the definitions that clause (j) (iii) includes muga and eri. In other parts of the country there are certain castes who only reel and spin silk. But in our Province there is no such exclusion. Every family, whether one is a Brahman or comes from the lowest of the low castes, can spin and reel muga and silk. As such, my submission is that they ought to have excluded certain varieties and certain quantities from the operation of this Act.

I think in spite of all that has been said it will affect for a long time the small cottage industry. On the contrary it should have been subsidised by the Government rather than that a cess should be imposed upon it. If we compare lac, tea, jute and other industries with this we would be making a great mistake. Those are industries of the capitalists. This is an industry of the smallest of the small people and I therefore think that the imposition of a cess will be a great burden on the very poor people—the poorest of the poor.

I feel that this Bill has many defects and it should be thoroughly examined by people whose representations should have been received beforehand and after that, I think, this should have been placed before the House. I do not think the Assam Government has been consulted at all in this matter and it has not been taken into consideration as to what will be the incidence of this Bill on the poor people. With these remarks I submit that the Minister in charge may go through these objections and see that no cess is levied at least for twenty years before there is a proper development of the silk industry in this country. The industry is mainly confined to cottages. Of course, people who manufacture on a large scale may be exceptions. As I said before, they may levy a cess on 10 or 20 maunds of production. Otherwise it will be unjust and cruel to levy any cess whatever on the people who produce this silk muga, tassar and other things on a very small scale. I trust the Honourable Minister will take this into consideration and give more representation to the Province of Assam and also have proper representations in other matters.

Mr. Speaker: I should like to invite the attention of the Honourable Minister to the point about time-limit. I find that this Bill has already been published in the Gazette and so it does not matter, so far as this motion goes if the time within which the report is to be submitted is not mentioned. Otherwise there would have been a difficulty.

Shri S. Nijalingappa (Bombay: General): Sir, it is with mixed feelings that we have to look at this Bill. To the extent that a Board will be set up to encourage the industry it is welcome. (But the way in which production is sought to be controlled is likely to create monopolies, cartels and syndicates. The most offending part of the Bill is the one relating to the levy of cess on reeled silk. I do not know whether the Honourable Minister is aware that this reeling process is purely a cottage industry.

Coming from Mysore I know, as he himself admitted it, that thousands of families are dependent upon this industry. The agriculturist grows the mulberry, prepares cocoons out of the silk worms which he purchases, and then reels in his own home. Thousands of homes produce silk by spinning on the charkha. If this cess is to be levied and the agriculturist is expected to give his returns and then these fees and all that, I am sure it will frighten him away from the process of reeling at all. If it may give an analogy, it is like taxing the man who spins and produces yarn, so much so production of silk yarn as such is discouraged and people who have already been starting some centralised industries in this behalf are encouraged, and that our own National Government should do it is certainly not a compliment. Instead of encouraging the cottage industries, the result will be that capitalist industries will be started and will be encouraged.

On two counts this levying of a cess has to be discouraged. In the first place, the industry itself—the process of reeling—will suffer. As a cottage industry it will be adversely affected. In the second place, you cannot expect those poor, illiterate people to prepare those lists; then they have to go to courts of law and all that which again will frighten them. Therefore on both these counts the levying of this cess is very undesirable.

The Select Committee will also have to consider in what way this industry as it exists today will have assistance on a cottage basis without at the same time encouraging centralized industry. Thousands of families can be made to depend on this industry provided silk coming from outside is prevented; except to the extent that it is absolutely necessary, import of silk has to be prevented. If it is at all to be imported, a deterrent duty will have to be levied on it and the funds, if any, used to augment the funds of this Board to encourage the industry, to see to its technical development. The agriculturist knows what quality is and how it is paying.

At the same time I will have to point out that now the rates are fast falling. During the war years many people took to cultivation of mulberry and they earned something. Now the prices are falling and many agriculturists have uprooted mulberry plants and taken to other cultivation. But, Sir, the way in which the subject is approached in the Bill is certainly not satisfactory and I very earnestly hope that the Minister and the Select Committee will see to it that this cess is not levied and no sort of returns are expected from these poor people.

With these observations I wish the Select Committee will go into this thoroughly.

Dr. B. Pattabhi Sitaramayya (Madras: General): My excuse, Sir, for rising on this occasion is that the subject relates to an aspect of industrial life which I really cherish namely cottage industries, and secondly, as a cottage industry silk reeling is not merely an industry of hand-weaving but also of hand-spinning. You know the partiality we have for hand-spinning.

So far as it relates to hand-spinning and so far as it relates to the protection of the hand-spinners and the reelers, my friend has already anticipated all that I might have said, but to me the point of concern is one of constitutional interest. It is generally believed—I think I am right in saying—that when a Bill is referred to a Select Committee the principle of the Bill is accepted. What is the principle of the Bill here? This Bill rests upon three beams: the formation of a Board, the contribution by Government, and the levying of a cess. If these three are considered, the cardinal principles of the Bill, then the point arises as to whether it is open to the Select Committee to deal with any or all of these points and knock them out. We want the cess to be knocked out (Hear, hear). And unless the Minister in charge of this Bill gives us an assurance that it will be competent for the Select Committee to make such a recommendation if they are so advised, I do not wish to run the risk of its being said that any proposal made by the Select Committee runs counter to the principle of the Bill which has been accepted when the Select Committee is appointed. It is in that view, Sir, that I present my thoughts to the House.

Sir, I really wonder why of all people the Minister in charge of Industry and Supply has thought of this particular method of replenishing the coffers of the Government for spending a little dole upon the poor reelers of Assam and Bangalore and Surat and such other places. After all, you know that every industry relating to handspinning is faced by a formidable competition with imported yarn. From China, Japan, France and other places silk is imported and largely the industry is weaving. In that respect it is analogous to the cotton industry where the yarn is either mill-made or imported, and only hand-weaving is done. Even so, hand-weaving is embarrassed. But if the spinning which we want to lay emphasis upon and which we wish to revive as one of the dying or dead industries—whether that spinning is of wool or cotton or silk—if that is to be discouraged and discounted in this manner, then woe be to that industry. Moreover, it is not so much the money that is collected, as the harassment by officers and the processes of travel and worry that are involved in securing remedies against any undue exercise of the law that really frighten us. I therefore hope that the Honourable Minister will reassure the House that it is open to the Select Committee to make any vital change in this Bill. If that assurance is given the passage of this Bill will be facilitated.

Shri S. V. Krishnamurthy Rao (Mysore State): Mr. Speaker, Sir, nobody can dispute the objects of the Bill, but the methods by which these objects are sought to be achieved under this Bill are certainly objectionable. The most objectionable features of this Bill are: firstly, the imposition of the cess, secondly, the penalties that have been imposed for infringement of the provisions of the Bill, and thirdly, the position that has been given to Mysore in the formation of the Board.

In this connection, I would like to place before the House certain facts and figures against the imposition of the cess. It is admitted that 18 lbs. of cocoons produce one lb. of silk. One pound of cocoons is being sold at Rs. 1/4/-. That would bring the cost of 18 lbs. of cocoons to Rs. 22/8/-. The cost of reeling is Rs. 8 per pound of silk which would bring the total to Rs. 30/8/-. The profit of the reeler is only Rs. 2 per pound. So one pound of raw silk has to be sold in the Indian market at Rs. 33 under the present conditions if he has to make a profit of barely two rupees.

What is the cess which my honourable friend the Minister for Industry and Supply proposes to impose on raw silk. The least that he can impose is one rupee per pound of silk; that would take away 50 per cent. of the profits that the reeler is going to make. I submit that this excise duty will be the last straw on the camel's back; instead of promoting the industry I submit it is going to kill the industry. So, this excise duty has to be abolished.

Now, I do admit that in these days nothing can be given for nothing. Is there a way out? I submit there is a way out if only we can grapple with half a dozen importers either in Bombay or in Calcutta. I am going to give figures for that also. Now, silk consumption in India is computed to be 10 million lbs. and the present production of Indian raw silk is about 2 million lbs. So if we have to meet the needs of the silk consumption we have to import 8 million lbs. I find that about 1½ million lbs. of raw silk and about 6 million lbs. of silk cloth are imported. Now, the silk which we got from Japan was distributed as we were informed by the Industries Minister to the provinces to be sold at rates which they thought fit. Certainly, it helped the Indian raw silk reeler and the raw silk industry, but the silk that is imported from Italy is being sold at Rs. 15 per lb. in Bombay and if imported silk is to be sold at Rs. 15 per lb. how is the Indian raw silk industry going to compete with the imported silk? My submission therefore is that the price of imported silk must be controlled and in this view I am supported by the Report of the Raw Silk Industries Panel that was appointed by the Government of India. On page 23, this is what they say:

"This Panel are therefore of opinion that no matter at what price the silk is acquired by the Government of India, it should only be released in the Indian market at the prevailing prices of Indian silk."

Now, if only our Government makes up its mind to control the price of this imported silk, there will be no need to impose an additional excise duty and place the raw silk reeler at the mercy of the excise officials, but on the other hand, we will be earning crores of rupees. Suppose, instead of Rs. 15 we sold the imported silk at Rs. 25, that will bring in an additional Rs. 8 crores and the Indian raw silk industry can be given a bonus of about one or two crores of rupees so that they may sell their silk also at Rs. 25. It will give the Indian reeler a profit; it will give him an assurance that the Government is behind him and he can with courage and confidence develop his industry. For this purpose, the Government may appoint a Corporation in which the present import dealers may be given a share. The Indian Government may have 51 per cent. of the shares under its control and the management of this Corporation may be in the hands of the Government of India. Thus, if they can only control the price of imported silk it will give added impetus to the development of the raw silk industry in India. This is my suggestion in the alternative for the abolition of the excise duty as contemplated under Section 9.

Coming to the penalties, this is what they say under clause 14 (c):

"He shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to one year or with fine which may extend to Rs. 1,000 or with both."

My submission is in a legislation of this kind where the persons affected are mostly rural folk—unintelligent and illiterate—, this penalty is very heavy and I am supported in this view by the Government of Mysore also. My suggestion is that the penalty should be reduced only to fine and not imprisonment. I would be glad if a nominal penalty only is imposed.

Next, Sir, about the position that is given to Mysore in this Board. Under clause (c) the Mysore Government is given three members to be nominated by the Government of Mysore, one of whom shall be a representative of filature interests and one shall be a representative of Sericulture interests. My submission is that the allotment of only three seats to Mysore is very unjust. I am going to give some facts and figures regarding that also. The acreage under mulberry in Mysore is 82,000 acres. Each acre produces about 15 to 20 lbs. of raw silk and it gives employment to nearly 2 lakhs of families in Mysore. The Mysore Government have also, during the war, made very great strides in the development of the raw silk industry. In Mysore during the year 1938-39 only 21,187 acres were under mulberry cultivation. In 1945-46, 78,000 acres were under mulberry cultivation. Whereas in Madras in 1938-39 only 5,720 acres were under mulberry cultivation; in 1945-46, 18,026 acres. In Bengal there was no acreage at all under mulberry cultivation in 1938-39, but in 1939-40 there were 8,893 acres and in 1945-46 there 15,516 acres were under mulberry cultivation. As regards the number of filature basins, in 1939-40 there were 150 filature basins in Mysore and in 1944-45 there were 1,437 filature basins. In Bengal, in 1939-40 there were 100 basins and in 1944-45 1,735 basins. In Madras there were 150 filature basins in 1939-40 and in 1944-45 there were 576 basins. In Jammu there were 155 basins in 1939-40 and in 1944-45 also there were only 155 filature basins. In the same way, in Kashmir there were in 1939-40 736 filature basins and in 1944-45 also there were only the same number. Further, the only spun silk factory in India is today in Mysore, at Channarayana, with three thousand spindles and it is going to be increased by another three thousand spindles. Its production is 1,20,000 lbs. of spun silk and it is utilising 60,00,000 lbs. of silk waste out of a total of about 700 or 8,00 thousand lbs. of silk waste, that is to say, about 80 to 90 per cent. of the silk waste produced in India. Out of a total acreage of 1,30,000 acres of mulberry cultivation, more than 82,000 acres are in Mysore and the State is now spending Rs. 16 lakhs over this industry. In addition, we have established modern silk filatures and there is a Spun Silk Mill which is the only one of its kind in India. Also there is a Silk Conditioning and Testing House on international standards. Besides, there is a well equipped Government Silk Weaving Factory for producing high class silk fabrics. For invigorating foreign races of univoltines and bivoltines, two hill stations in K. R. Hills and Biligiri Rangan Hills have already been started. Silk Worm Diseases Control Act has been passed in 1943. There is a proposal to start a Research Station at a cost of Rs. 11 lakhs for capital and Rs. 2.45 lakhs for recurring expenditure. That scheme is under the consideration of the Mysore Government. A regular Sericultural Training Institute for giving training to young men is also being started in Mysore. With so much of interests in this raw silk industry, my submission is that only three seats in a Board which consists of 17 members is very inadequate for Mysore. Today it produces 60 per cent. of the entire raw silk that is produced in India. My respectful submission to this House is that Mysore should get at least five seats on this Board and at least one out of the five that has been reserved for nomination by the Central Government should go to Mysore. It won't give proportionate representation and I do not demand it also, but at least it will give adequate representation consistent with the interests that Mysore has got in this raw silk industry.

In the body of the Bill also certain amendments have to be made and one of the most important things is regarding the definition of "raw silk" in (j) where in item (v) spun silk is included. My respectful submission is that spun silk cannot be raw silk, because spun silk is only a by-product of the silk industry. It is out of silk waste that spun silk is woven whereas raw silk is a continuous thread. Therefore, the definition will have to be changed. There are a few other points also, which I would hand over to my friend Mr. Hanumanthaiya who is a member of the Select Committee and when the Bill emerges from the Select Committee I do hope that this excise duty will be removed and proper amendments made and a proper place given to Mysore. If the clause imposing the excise duty cannot be removed, my submission is that as suggested by Dr. Pattabhi, the Bill should be withdrawn and a fresh Bill with proper provisions should be brought before the House.

With these few remarks, Sir, I resume my seat.

Shri Vi S. Sarwate (Indore State): Sir, I wish to have certain clarifications. As regards the extent, I find from section 1 part 2 that the Bill extends to the provinces of India. I would want to know whether this includes the States. From the constitution of the Board it seems that since it includes the States, the extension of this legislature must also be extending to the States. If so, that part must be made quite clear. If the States are included, certain legal difficulties may arise, because in the cases of unions recently established they have the freedom of taxation. This means that the board will not be in a position, legally speaking to impose the cess which is contemplated in section 9. This would mean that either the cess cannot be imposed or that the Bill would have to be amended to that extent. I would further point out that the wording in section 9 is "raw silk produced in India" whereas the extension is only to the provinces. This would mean that the terminology adopted in section 9 is not consistent with that adopted in section 1. I only want this point to be brought to the notice of the House, so that necessary clarifications may be made in the Select Committee.

The Honourable Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee: The question be now put.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the question be now put."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee: Sir, the main criticism which has been made is with regard to the imposition of the cess. Honourable members will see that clause 9 as drafted lays down that Government may levy the cess and fix the rate on the recommendation of the Board. This matter was discussed at the conference which I had convened some time ago and there was a difference of opinion. I quite appreciate that it will not be desirable to levy a cess at least on that section of the industry which is now functioning on cottage industry basis. I am quite prepared, Sir, to have this matter discussed when the Select Committee will meet and I am sure we shall be able to modify this particular clause in such a way which will protect the legitimate interests of the Charkha and other sections of cottage industry.

So far as the question of the composition of the Board is concerned, demand has been made with very cogent reasons by Mysore that it should be given larger representation. I quite realize Sir, that Mysore produces a large portion of the silk which is now in use in India and for that reason Mysore gets the largest number of representatives—three—larger than any other province in India. If similar demand is made by other provinces like Bihar, with regard to the composition of coal committees or steel committees, on the ground that a large percentage of members of such Committees should go to that province which produces the bulk of the commodity, we might be lauded in difficulty. But here also, I should be quite prepared to discuss the matter and I should like to keep an open mind on the question of representatives of the different interests in the Select Committee. My only request is that we should not make the Board too unwieldy; it must be a business-like board; it might meet three or four times a year, so that in the first formative period we may be able to lay down a policy which will meet the requirements of all interests.

So far as the general question is concerned, the position is, we are producing about 20 lakhs pounds now in India and we are importing about 10 lakhs. Now the price of silk in India is roughly about Rs. 30 per pound and the average price of imported silk is about Rs. 15 per pound. One suggestion has been made that we should have some sort of control over imported silk and artificially raise the Indian price. There are certain limitations beyond which it is not possible for any Government to go; it will not be possible for the silk industry in India to progress by this sort of artificial imposition of very high prices on imported silk which may come to this country. We shall have to think of other means of protecting the silk industry, of seeing that it grows in larger quantities and also that its quality may improve. It is now for the purpose of enabling Government to take suitable action in all these matters that this Bill is being brought forward. And Government will not hesitate to take such reasonable steps as may be required for the purpose of protecting the legitimate interests of silk industry in India.

There was a question that the last speaker asked as to whether this would apply, when passed, to the States. The constitutional position is that this legislature is not in a position to legislate for the States. The States concerned will have to pass corresponding legislative measures as soon as this Bill is passed into law by us. I know there will be no hesitation on the part of, at least, those states to come in line with us like Mysore which expect help and co-operation from the Government of India. This is purely a constitutional aspect and has been borne in mind in framing the Bill.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill to provide for the development under Central control of the raw silk industry and for that purpose to establish the Central Silk Board, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Shri K. Hanumanthaiya, Shri Brajeshwar Prasad, Shri H. V. Kamath, Begum Aizaz Rasul, Shri O. V. Alagesan, Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena, Shri Mihir Lal Chattopadhyaya, Shri A. K. Menon, Shri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar, Dr. P. S. Deshmukh, Mr. R. K. Sidhva, Ch. Raubir Singh, Sriji Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri, Shri B. A. Khimji, and the Mover, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

The motion was adopted.

BOMBAY, CALCUTTA, AND MADRAS PORT TRUSTS (CONSTITUTION) (AMENDMENT) BILL

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai (Minister for Railways and Transport): Sir, I move:

"That the Bill to amend the constitutions of the Port Trusts of the major ports of Bombay, Calcutta and Madras, be taken into consideration."

The matter to which this Bill relates is the constitution of Port Trusts of major ports. There are various matters relating to Port Trusts other than the constitution of these bodies which this House at some time would have to consider. That matter is now under the consideration of Government, and I hope at a subsequent stage it will come before the House. At present we are concerned with the question of increased representation for Indian commercial interests on these bodies. As the result of constitutional and political changes and as the result of variation in the relative importance of these interests since the present Acts came into force, Government have come to the conclusion that it is necessary immediately to take up the question of providing increased representation of Indian commercial interests. This is the primary purpose of this Bill. But we have taken advantage of the introduction of this Bill also to provide for more representation of labour interests than we have been able to do so far, which in the present labour situation in the country is a matter of great practical importance. We have taken advantage of the introduction of the Bill also for providing a little more uniformity as between one part and another in the representation of Government interests. As regards the major purpose of this Bill namely increased representation of commercial interests, the House will observe that we are not embodying any definite proposals in the Bill itself. What we propose to do is that the House should entrust Government with power from time to time by notification to provide for adequate representation of Indian commercial interests. That would be a flexible arrangement. From a practical point of view it is a more satisfactory arrangement. The House will find that in the schedule we have provided that the bodies to be represented, and the quantum of representation to be given to these bodies are all matters which would be dealt with by notification from time to time by Government. The matter is a simple one and I commend the Bill for the consideration of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the Bill to amend the constitutions of the Port Trusts of the major ports of Bombay, Calcutta and Madras, be taken into consideration."

Mr. R. K. Sidhva (C.P. and Berar: General): Mr. Speaker, Sir, you will remember that in the first session of this Parliament, namely in the month of November, I moved three Bills for the amendment of the Bombay, Madras and Calcutta Port Trusts Act. After the introduction of these Bills, we have not yet seen the light of these Bills being discussed. That is generally the fate of non-official Bills. I do not know when I will have the opportunity of presenting these Bills for first reading. I am, therefore, glad, Sir, that the Honourable Minister has considered this matter urgent and important and brought the Bill himself so that it has made it easy for me to see that these amendments to the constitutions at least, which are of an urgent nature, will be given effect to. In my Bills, of course, I have touched many other points, as the Honourable Minister himself has stated that the Act requires a thorough overhauling. I will not therefore go into the matter in detail because I am satisfied with the assurance given by him that he is going to bring in amendments of a comprehensive nature for the modification of many of the important sections. For instance, Sir, the Port Trust meetings are always held in camera, with the result, that the important matters that are discussed there are unknown to the public and the members therefore become irresponsible, knowing that their conduct is not being criticised either by the press or by the public. From my experience, I can say that they act in many respects irresponsibly in many matters. Therefore, it is high time that the Honourable Minister will give at least to this matter immediate consideration, and move an amendment that all meetings should be open to the public and the press.

There is another anomaly. Of course that is a very simple one which the Honourable Minister could have corrected in this Bill, that is, with regard to the designation of the members. The members of the Bombay and Madras Port Trusts are called Trustees; but the members of the Calcutta Port Trust are known as Commissioners. There should be uniformity in this matter. I would have preferred that all the members should be called Port Trustees or Commissioners whichever he thinks best. Port Trustees is the general expression used in many of the major ports.

Mr. Speaker: If he is going to the next point, I think it is time to adjourn for lunch. By the way, does he propose to move his amendment for referring this Bill to a Select Committee?

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: No, Sir. I would not press for that.

Mr. Speaker: Professor Shibban Lal Saksena is not here. These two amendments fall through. Discussion on consideration motion may continue at 2.30 P.M.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock, Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: Sir, I was saying that many amendments require to be made in this Act and the Honourable Minister has stated that he is already considering the question of bringing in a comprehensive Bill with the necessary amendments. The present Act was passed sometime in 1879 and there are questions of wharfage, pilotage and demurrage which affect merchants greatly and they have from time to time made representations to the Port Trusts; but nothing tangible has come out of it, in one of the Port Trust matter it was suggested that unless the provisions of the Act are amended nothing could be done in that direction. I therefore suggest that no time should be lost in bringing in a Bill after scrutiny of all the provisions of the Act so that it may fit in with present conditions.

Now coming to the present Bill, while the Act now in force gives the right to commercial bodies to elect representatives themselves—and the names of such bodies are mentioned in the Act itself,—the present Bill deprives those bodies of that right. Although it is stated that the remaining seats shall be filled from commercial interests it is left absolutely to Government to select these commercial representatives as they deem fit. In these progressive days I feel that we should give the right of election to these commercial bodies who should be named in the Bill as they are named in the present Act. It is only proper that this House should be given an opportunity to know what bodies are going to get representation. Today there are many bodies which have been existing for the last half a century, and one does not know what is going to happen to them. On the other hand I feel that while power has been vested in Government—many mushroom associations will be started for the purpose of getting representation. It has been our experience in the past that when the thing is left vague and open new associations with all sorts of credentials are started and they use all their influence to get representation and their names are recognised. From that point of view I would prefer that the legislature should be given power to name the bodies. There are many new commercial bodies which require representation and I see no reason why the legislature should be deprived of the right of discussing the names of the bodies who they think deserve to be represented; I do not know what explanation the Honourable Minister has to offer for taking away that right.

Then turning to page 2 you find from the Schedule that while the Bombay Municipal Corporation now enjoys two seats it is proposed to give them one only. The representatives in the Corporation represent the people of the city and of the province and the Corporation has much to do with these ports. So I do not understand why one seat is sought to be taken away from this body. I suggest—of course it will be discussed on the amendments—that there should be uniformity for all the Corporations of Bombay, Calcutta and Madras, which should be given three seats each or at least two. The present Act gives two seats in Bombay and one each in Madras and Calcutta. I suggest uniformity of representation on all these three bodies for their respective Corporations.

Then, I am glad that one additional seat has been given to labour organisations. At present labour has one seat but that also depends on the whims of Government, and a conflict was going on in certain ports as to whether this labour representative had or had not been properly chosen. I know in certain ports a capitalist was chosen in the name of labour and there was a great deal of agitation on this matter. I am glad that to that extent this Bill makes an improvement.

Then I find that in place of nine nominated members in Bombay there are to be 11 nominated members. So the nominated seats are increased and the elected seats reduced. It may be argued that today it is our Government and there should be no distinction between election and nomination. I do not share that view. Although it is our own Government the people should have a greater right to choose their own representatives. Government may have their own representatives certainly, but not to the extent the present Bill seeks to give them. In place of one military representative the present Bill provides for two, one from the Royal Indian Navy and one from Defence. I do not grudge that but I do not want the elected seats to be reduced. I rather want them to be increased so that the views and grievances of trade and commerce, of the general public and the passengers should be represented. The General Managers of the B.B. and C.I. and G.I.P. Railways are ex-officio members, but the passengers also have a great deal to do with these steamers. All these coastal lines carry passengers; they have ventilated heaps of grievances which have a lot to do with the Port Trusts, but these have not been redressed. If the General Managers go on behalf of Government, there are recognised Associations on behalf of passengers. For instance, the Passenger Traffic and Relief Association of Bombay is an old recognised Association which should be given representation so that they can express the voice and views of the travelling public. The travelling public brings a large revenue to the steamship companies and these companies have much to do with the Port Trusts and I feel that they also should be given representation by election.

Then Sir, in Bombay, the Export and Import Associations—I mean the merchants representing the export and import trade—contribute something like Rs. 3½ crores to the Port Trust and they are not given representation. They have been representing that they are directly responsible for the working of the Port Trust and they have been giving it very large revenue. It may be argued that commercial interests include Export and Import interests. There are also the textile people, the coal interests and so many other people that come into it. But the export and import interests have so much to do with it, yet they have no voice in its constitution. It would have been better if each member from each Port placed his views and that the Honourable Minister after considering their views had given his decision in this House. That would have been a more equitable way of dealing with the issue rather than that the Honourable Minister should have taken the power to himself and restricted those representations.

Therefore, from that point of view this is a retrograde measure. With all seriousness I must say that it is not a progressive measure. He has cut down the present existing number of seats of the elected members and increased the number of nominated seats. It is now left to the House to decide whether it feels that the power should vest in the Government only. I would request them to consider very seriously the reactions of this viewpoint when it comes up before Government.

Then there is the Andhra Chamber of Commerce in Madras. Recently by an amendment one seat was given to them. It is an important Chamber of Commerce but probably because it is in Andhra, it must have been neglected. Originally it was given to the Madras Chamber of Commerce. Then the Andhra Chamber of Commerce represented and 10 years ago they were given one seat. Later on they represented for two seats. I have seen the correspondence. The Port Authorities agreed that when the next amendment is made, they would be given two seats.

I do not know what their fate is to be. But that is the view I am placing before this House, especially when we know from experience that these are the bodies that really require proper representation.

Now the Honourable Minister may sit, or he may take someone into confidence and discuss the matter and then come to a decision. Of course, I know that the Madras view is always predominant in this House. I do not doubt that Andhra will get their views heard knowing as I do the position in this House so far as South India is concerned. With all that I would have preferred that this matter should have been given consideration.

Then I do feel about the Howrah Municipality. It is very much interconnected with the Calcutta Corporation and Mr. Chatterjee has moved an amendment to that effect. I do not know what the Honourable Minister feels about it. He could make out a case why these bodies require representation. It is not because they are municipalities or such and such an Association but because they place their arguments forcibly, strongly and as they are entitled to. We have the experience of the Montford Reforms. When Montagu came to India and he wanted to see many Associations for the purpose of representation, mushroom Associations started and thousands went to him and claimed representation. That is the danger that I apprehend even in our own free country. The Honourable Minister cannot prevent too many new associations from tomorrow onwards coming into being and they will bring all sorts of influence from outside. Why should the Minister take upon himself to appoint certain bodies or persons, though he might even consult his Standing Committee or someone else? Instead of being so restrictive, why should he not come before the entire House. After all, we could express our views. We could understand what were his objects. Today, I do not know what are his objects for taking away this right.

If it is not a new innovation that I am suggesting. The right exists at present and it is being taken away. Unless he has a very strong argument against it. I am not prepared to accept that proposition, namely, restricting it to Government because it is our popular Government, assuming that they will do justice, it is not proper to let things remain as they are. If that was the proposition we were to accept, then much of the business before this Legislature should not come before the House. It might go to the Minister, and he might, considering he is a popular Minister at most consult the Standing Committee of his Ministry and pass the laws. But we know that that would never be accepted by any democratic Parliament.

Then I was suggesting, particularly, if the Honourable Minister will kindly accept this proposition, that all the Port Trust meetings should be kept open. If this comes from the Government there will be no objection to its being accepted. I am very keen on this, because I know many things happen in camera—most undesirable things: members feel that the proceedings are not published and they are not given publicity, therefore they act irresponsibly.

A Port Trust is a local body just as a municipality or corporation the Honourable Minister knows that. Up to 15 years ago the Port Trust was a provincial subject. Subjects relating to Port Trusts never came before the Central Legislature. But when the British Parliament introduced provincial autonomy they felt that the members might capture seats and the European interests will not be safeguarded and kept intact. Parliament therefore made a change and transferred this subject from the province to the Centre. That is the genesis of this Act. From the very commencement of the enactment of this Act up to 15 years ago, it was a provincial subject. I therefore feel that this being a local body should be treated on a par with the other local bodies. If the Corporation of Bombay, or Calcutta, or Madras can be a public body in all its doings, and all its business be open to members of the public, I see no reason why the Port Trust proceedings should not be kept open to the public. It may be argued that there may be technical matters and secret matters like in times of war or in case of movements of ships which they would not like to disclose to the public. In such event there is a proviso in the Act whereby a Chairman can delegate to himself powers which were vested in the Board. The last war is a proof of that. In the last war certain provisions of the Act gave certain powers to the Trustees. The Chairman under instruction from the Government of India took those powers to himself and deprived those Trustees of those powers on the ground that they were defence measures and secrecy necessitated that such powers vest in the Chairman. To that extent I am prepared to accept it. There are many other remedies for the purpose of keeping secret the movements in the Ports and therefore, Sir, I see no reason why the meetings should not be thrown open to the public, at least for the press.

Then, Sir, I also feel that the Chairman who is now a nominated member does not fit in with the present condition. The present Bill says that the Chairman should be nominated. The Honourable Minister has also provided in the schedule that he should be nominated. My own view is that at present the Chairman is an administrative officer as well as the head of the Board. That has created many times bitterness between the Chairman and the port trustees.

[Mr. R. K. Sidhva]

I contend that there should be a highly paid chief executive officer whose business should be to look after the administration and the executive work only. He shall merely attend the meetings but shall have no vote. He can participate just as we know it is the case in other institutions. He shall not preside but he might take part in the proceedings and he shall not have the right to vote. I should have expected that change as a result of the change in the constitution which is being made. I hope the Honourable Minister will consider this. Again it may not be said that now we are a free democratic government where nomination or election makes no difference. That argument can never be accepted if it were to come on those lines.

There is only one more point and that is as regards the Deputy Chairman. In some port trusts there is a vice chairman and in some there is none. I would suggest that there should be uniformity. There should be a deputy or vice Chairman in each Port Trusts, so that during the absence of the Chairman there may not be election of a temporary chairman to work in the place of the chairman. Although one Act provides for it I do not see any reason why there should not be an elected vice chairman for all the port trusts.

Having said all this I certainly welcome the measure to the extent it goes.

[At this stage Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair, which was then occupied by Shri K. Santhanam (one of the Panel of Chairmen).]

It does not go as far as I wanted. I do not know what is behind the mind of the Honourable Minister when he says that he will himself select the commercial bodies. There are Chambers of Commerce.....

Mr. Chairman: The honourable member has referred to this point more than once.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: No, Sir, I am referring to European Chambers of Commerce. I have not at all referred to these chambers of commerce—the Bombay Chamber of Commerce, the Madras Chamber of Commerce and the Bengal Chamber of Commerce. Though the name is Chamber of Commerce and ordinarily its constitution does not restrict to one community, viz., the Europeans, it is well known that they have a big majority of European members. There are of course half a dozen or a dozen Indian members but I have never seen an Indian being returned by these European Chambers of Commerce to any Port Trust so far, although there are Indian members in them. Therefore I do not know what is the view of the Honourable Minister in view of the changed conditions. This will also have to be borne in mind. If the Bill had gone to the Select Committee or the House had been given an opportunity they would have discussed, given their opinions, understood the Honourable Minister's view point and probably they would have agreed to what he said and the matter could have been very amicably and satisfactorily settled. With these words, Sir, I commend this Bill to the acceptance of the House with the modifications I have suggested.

Shri Prabhu Dayal Himatsingka (West Bengal: General): Mr. Chairman, I whole heartedly support the scheme of the present Bill and I will make certain observations with reference to the Calcutta Port Trust. The Bill as framed gives certain elasticity to the bodies which will be entitled to elect their representatives to the different Port Trusts. At the present moment under the present Act in Bombay, Madras and Calcutta certain bodies which are entirely bodies of European commercial interests have the largest number of representatives. In Bengal there are 7 members from two associations—the Bengal Chamber of Commerce and the Calcutta Trades Association, which are exclusively European—in which there are practically no Indian members. They have the majority of representatives but Indian commercial interests have only four representatives. In the present scheme of the Act certain bodies have been mentioned and some will be notified from time to time in the Act itself.

That certainly gives room for bodies which go out of action and which do not represent commercial interests perhaps at a future date still having representation but this scheme as in the present Bill whereby Government has been given power from time to time by notification to specify the commercial interests or local bodies which will be entitled to elect members, certainly gives wide elasticity to Government to select such of the commercial bodies which actually represent commercial interests at a particular moment when the notifications are issued. That will certainly obviate the necessity of the Government having to bring forward amending Bills when certain bodies cease to represent active commercial interests. In that respect definitely it is an improvement by keeping it in this form and therefore I do not agree with my honourable friend Mr. Sidhva when he wants certain bodies to be mentioned by name.

So far as the Calcutta Port Trust is concerned I would suggest that the Howrah Municipality should be given at least one representative, either the Chairman ex-officio or the municipality should be entitled to elect one member. As you know, on one side is Calcutta and on the other side of the river is the Howrah Municipality which extends throughout the length of Calcutta and the Port Commissioners also have extensive properties which ought to be subject to certain taxes of the Howrah Municipality. At the present moment the Howrah municipality has no representation though it is vitally interested in the Calcutta Port Trust. Therefore I would request the Honourable Minister to take into consideration whether or not they should give at least one member to the Howrah Municipality by way of election.

The present provision will also remove any mushroom associations which might crop up. After all we must trust our own government. If we are to have the same mentality as before and make a distinction between the Government and the public I think that will not be the proper spirit, at least for some time, unless we feel that the Government is going far from public opinion. Therefore I wholeheartedly support the ex-officio members named, and make this suggestion that the Howrah Municipality should be given one representative and before the words "commercial interests" I would suggest that the word "Indian" should be added. So long the European commercial interests monopolised this and certainly it is time (An Honourable Member: "What about the exclusion of communal commercial interests?") When it will be elastic and Government will have the power to name the commercial bodies which will be entitled to elect members, certainly it will be for the Government to decide as to what policy they are going to follow. If the Government think that no communal bodies should be given representation it would be open to them to exclude the Muslim Chamber of Commerce, and such other chambers of commerce which are exclusively communal. That will be open to the Government and when there is that power I am certain that Government will exercise it with discretion.

Shri S. K. Patil (Bombay: General): Sir, I rise to make a few observations on this Bill. It is not a day too soon that this piece of legislation is coming before the Legislature. For many years there has been a clamour, almost a persistent clamour, that important commercial interests were very inadequately represented on these Port Trusts. I have got personal experience so far as the Bombay Port Trust is concerned and we have been clamouring for the last many years that the Act should be mended. But as the Bill has now come before this House, it is for the first time that we are trying that adequate representation should be given to Indian commercial interests. It is not true that only the Indian commercial interests have to be represented. As the Statement of Objects and Reasons makes it abundantly clear increased representation is to be given to Indian commercial interests but if it is to be suggested by that that any other interest is not to be recognised at all, then naturally we could have that word "Indian" also removed from that. When the words "commercial interests" are used I take it that, because of that the power has been retained by the Government to make allocation of these seats as they like considering the respective representative character of those commercial interests. But I take it that the Indian commercial interests are going to have a preponderant voice so far as the constitution of these Port Trust Boards is concerned.

My honourable friend Mr. Sidhva has come out with the usual argument which we have advanced in this Legislature and other Legislatures time and again that there are so many seats which are going to be filled by nomination. I may just illustrate the point by taking the case of my own Port Trust, the Port Trust of Bombay. There two seats have been given to Defence Services, two to representatives of labour chosen by the Central Government—they are labour seats—one to a representative of the Mercantile Marine, then there is the Collector of Customs, the General Manager of the G. I. P. Railway, the General Manager of the B. B. and C. I. Railway, one representative chosen by the Provincial Government and the Municipal Commissioner for the City of Bombay. If you see the scheme of the old Act many of these nominated seats were there before. There is one difference between the old set-up of things and the new set-up of things. In the old set-up a nominated member had to carry out the behests of a government which was not a popular government or a representative government. I am not putting a premium on nomination, but the House must learn that in the new set-up, although this kind of distinction will still be there—no doubt an elected member will always remain an elected member and a nominated member will always remain a nominated member—it does not really become so very obnoxious as it used to be in the old set-up of things. So I am not at all worried that there are ten nominated seats in the Port Trust of Bombay, possibly eleven in the Port Trust of Calcutta and a corresponding number in the Port Trust of Madras. I am merely pointing out to my honourable friend that in the changed circumstances these things are essential. Whether there should have been more elected seats is a different matter. But so far as these ten nominated seats have been given to these particular officers or organisations it is in the fitness of things.

So far as elected interests are concerned, I am in agreement with my honourable friend Mr. Sidhva. As regards the Bombay Port Trust only one seat has been given to the Bombay Municipal Corporation and the allocation of seats representing commercial interests has been entirely left to the Central Government. I think it is a very cautious step that the Honourable Minister for Transport has taken. Now it is very easy to name the commercial interests—and this Legislature has a right to name them and to allocate the seats after naming them. No doubt it sounds very well. But my honourable friend knows that there are ever so many commercial interests—some long established ones. But it would not be proper that you name a few and do not name the others. It becomes a very dangerous proposition to do. So far as Bombay is concerned, there is the old established institution—the Indian Chamber of Commerce which is the oldest institution and by far the best institution that this country has got of that standard. Now, it could easily have been named. You cannot name one or two and not name the others. There are other institutions. There is the Maharashtra Chamber of Commerce, a new institution that is trying to compete with the Indian Merchants' Chamber. There is a Muslim Chamber of Commerce—another new institution. There are other associations—both European and Indian. And some of these commercial institutions are still in formation. It is not that they are very old and established and their membership is continuous. If that were so it would have been a different proposition altogether. Therefore, with regard to the other seats that have been left to the commercial interests I am absolutely certain that the allocation of these seats should be made according to the importance of the particular bodies. But surely, as has been pointed out by some honourable member here, although not in a speech but by an interruption that communal institutions have not got to be recognized. Here comes the question of communal interests, namely, that the Muslim Chamber of Commerce has made its claim. The Maharashtra Chamber of Commerce is not a communal body but can be called a provincial body. But there is a body called the Indian Merchants' Chamber which is all-inclusive. Its membership is open to everyone, to Hindus, Muslims, to peoples belonging to various geographical territories and provinces. Why not these bodies merge into the Indian Merchants' Chamber so that it shall be the only body representative of the commercial interests of the City of Bombay? In fact it is so and therefore the Honourable Minister in charge of this Bill has really very cautiously provided that these seats should be reallocated according as the Government thinks fit. For, these Acts are not amended year after year. It is after many years that it has come for amendment. Some of these institutions are mushroom institutions. They are there now and may not be there after five years. Therefore it has been rightly provided by the Government to reallocate these seats from time to time according to the interests of these Indian merchant elements.

BOMBAY, CALCUTTA AND MADRAS PORT TRUSTS (CONSTITUTION) (AMENDMENT) 377

Coming to another aspect of the case, namely, that some of the public bodies should have been given more representation, there surely I join hands with my friend Mr. Sidhva and I plead particularly for the Municipal Corporation of the City of Bombay. Under the old Act, for the last many years we have been enjoying one nominated seat. That means, the executive head of our Municipal Corporation is a member of the Port Trust. And there were two elected seats to the Municipal Corporation. In fact we were hoping that in the new set-up of things the Municipal Corporation, representing as it does a population of three and a half millions should come in for an increased representation rather than the reduction of a seat in its representation. That fact was pointed out to the Honourable Minister in charge of the Bill very recently—about a month back. The Bombay Municipal Corporation by a unanimous vote has passed a resolution requesting the Minister in charge that the reallocated representation should remain as it was, namely, two elected seats and that our nominated representation should also be increased by adding one more seat, namely, that along with the Bombay Municipal Commissioner there should be the Special Engineer or the City Engineer of the Bombay Municipality. I shall explain the position. Along with their normal duties there are other responsibilities and duties for the Port Trust which this House must take note of. So far as the Bombay Port Trust is concerned, there are large properties and lands which are to be administered by the Bombay Port Trust. It is not merely the work connected with the marine but it is actually duties of the type which the municipality performs which have got to be performed by this Port Trust. The Port Trust in Bombay is in possession of vast lands. They were given in those good old days and they are still held by them and they have not been requisitioned. They are held by the Port Trust. There are hundreds of houses on the properties of the Port Trust. They are not necessarily used by the Port Trust but they are used for commercial and residential purposes. Therefore this is a small municipality as it were within a large municipality. Although in regard to municipal law the jurisdiction of the Bombay Municipal Corporation holds good, in many other respects, they being the owner—and it is not an individual owning a property but it is a local body owning the property and owning as large a property as the Bombay Port Trust holds—there are many questions in which the Bombay Municipality is very vitally concerned. Therefore we thought that along with the Municipal Commissioner there should be the City Engineer who is the proper authority really so far as engineering problems are concerned. Luckily the Bombay Municipality has got a City Engineer who has not only a national but an international reputation so far as marine engineering is concerned. Although he is not a member of the Port Trust he is often consulted by them. Along with his other responsibilities as City Engineer he has a thorough knowledge of marine engineering as well. Therefore it would have been in the fitness of things if instead of one nominated seat which is now given to the Commissioner of the Bombay Municipality as the executive head of that body two had been given, namely, one to the Commissioner of the Corporation and the other to the City Engineer of that Municipality.

So far as elected representation is concerned, our original quota of two should be restored instead of the reduction of one seat. I am told and it is true from the scheme—I could find it after reading the Bill—that the Honourable Minister in charge of the Bill wants to introduce a kind of uniformity in all these things. I am one with him so far as that particular argument is concerned. But so far as the old Acts were concerned the membership in the various ports differed. As it is, here also, the Bombay Port Trust has been given 24 seats, Calcutta 21 and Madras 20. Of course there is nothing like uniformity in that because some cities are more developed so far as port trust activities are concerned while others are not. But so far as representation is concerned an attempt is made that there should be as much uniformity in all these things as possible. If that is the argument I could quite grant that he cannot give something to the City of Bombay which is denied to Madras and Calcutta.

Therefore, I would humbly request this to the Honourable Minister in charge, in connection with the claim of Bombay. This claim is not for the nominated seat, but if he were really generous enough to give us along with the seat for the Commissioner a seat for the City Engineer also, it would be really in the fitness of things because it would be in the interests of the Port Trust itself, more than in the interests of the Corporation, because he is an officer who looks after these interests even now without being a member. If it is not possible, because if a seat is given to the City Engineer of the Bombay Municipality, possibly on the same analogy a seat would have to be given to the Madras and Calcutta Corporations also,—I have no quarrel with him just now. He may think of it and bear these things in mind when the Bill comes up for another amendment in future.

My request is that so far as the elected representation is concerned it would be a grave injustice that a local body of the eminence and type of the Bombay Municipal Corporation should be deprived of a right which it has enjoyed for so many years. Our quota of two should be restored and with that object in view I have moved certain amendments.

So far as the claim of the Howrah Municipality as put forward by the honourable member who just preceded me, is concerned, I think it is also equally correct. I think it would serve the purpose of uniformity also, because if the Bombay Municipality gets two seats as it always had, I see no reason why the Calcutta Municipality and the Howrah Municipality should not have. Howrah is separated by river and I think the Howrah Municipality has more to do with the Port Trust than the Calcutta Municipality. If they are two and we are two, I think we are not taking away from the great principle of uniformity.

Therefore, I beg of him that this very reasonable request that I am making should be accepted and when he comes in for amending the Act again—not immediately—all these other things, namely, the nomination of the Engineers, etc., should be taken in hand.

With these words I indeed welcome this Bill.

Srijut Kuladhar Chaliha (Assam: General): Sir, I hardly find any difference between the old and the new regimes. It seems to me that the Government of Assam is forgotten. (An Honourable Member: "Have you got a Port Trust in Assam?") I shall come to it, whether we have a Port Trust or not.

I say about 40 per cent. of India's total consumption of petrol is supplied to India and it passes through Calcutta Port. About 400 million lbs. of tea is exported from Assam and passes out of the Calcutta Port. Yet, unfortunately like the old habit of not giving us any representation, the present Government has also forgotten us entirely.

There is one representative of the Provincial Government, chosen by the Provincial Government, and that means, of course, West Bengal. He has absolutely forgotten that the entire machinery for the two thousand factories in Assam passes through the Calcutta Port. Yet, this Government which is a popular Government has forgotten very definitely our claims. We have got an Indian Tea Association there. (Shri Suresh Chandra Majumdar: "Is it your point that a part of petrol produced in Assam passes through the Calcutta Port?") A great part of it. It is we that supply to India 40 per cent. of petrol and almost 400 million lbs. of tea—85 per cent. of tea we produce passes through Calcutta. Machinery for about two thousand factories passes through Calcutta Port upwards. Well, I thought Mr. Maitra will have some consideration for us. He forgot; he was very anxious to represent Howrah Municipality and forgot the entire Province of Assam, though of course he has a lot of business there.

In fairness and justice to our Province you ought to have given at least one representation to the Province of Assam. There is the Indian Tea Association which you can leave because it is a European body. But there is an Assam Valley Tea Association which ought to get representation in this body. Otherwise you will be doing us injustice; it is a sheer injustice to forget us because the entire products of Assam like tea, and petrol and the entire machinery required, pass through, at least most of it passes through Calcutta Port.

I submit that to forget Assam in your Bill is rather an omission which can hardly be excusable. Yet these small Bills are so dangerous; if you read them you find that every time and in every place Assam is forgotten, and more so by the Minister for Railways—of course, forget the Railways, I won't say anything about them here. I hope from this time onwards he will not forget Assam. It is rather unfortunate that we are not vocal. We do not know how to talk; our gift of the gab is very small. That is the reason why people from Madras get a better share and people from Bengal still better. We have neither the voice, nor the strength, nor the aspiration. That is why we are forgotten. I hope the Honourable Minister will see that there is one member from Assam; one member from the tea industry should be represented; otherwise there will be great injustice to our Province.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari (Madras: General): Mr. Chairman, Sir, it seems to me that the Honourable the Minister for Railways has provided a lucky dip from out of which every member of the House wants to take his own share. Actually, things are not quite so easy as all that. I quite agree with some of the speakers who spoke before me that the arrangement of representation of the various interests in the Port Trusts has to be reconsidered. From that point of view, I welcome the measure. But at the same time the emphasis on the quantum of representation for various sectional interests and various bodies seems to me to be rather misplaced. In a body like the Port Trust it is undoubtedly necessary that various sectional interests should be represented so that their claims could be heard, their grievances redressed, and it can always be done by any special interest or any large interest having one member equally as well as it could be done if that body or interest has two or three members. So, it is not so much as having two representatives or three representatives for a particular interest as to have one active member to represent that particular interest. If, as is sought to be done in this measure, representation for various commercial and other bodies is widened, I think it is only fair that a large number of interests should be represented rather than have two or three representatives for any particular body unless it be that that body is a composite body having to represent varied and sectional interests. But I think the emphasis, in my view, is rather misplaced and I do hope that when the Honourable Minister arranges the representation of bodies mentioned in the schedule, he will arrange it in such a manner that a number of interests will be represented and no one of them will have more than a single representative.

The second factor that I would like to mention is this,—confined to experience of Madras, perhaps the Bombay Port Trust and the Calcutta Port Trust behave differently,—I have found that commercial interests who want to get in the Port Trust are very anxious for getting elected. It involves often the expenditure of a lot of money; there is a lot rivalry and a lot of canvassing. Ultimately when they get elected they do not attend the meetings of the Board. Something must be done to ensure that they attend the meetings of the Board. Another thing that should be done is that the fees that are paid for attendance at this Board should be something not very attractive. Now I think it is about Rs. 32 and in some cases perhaps a little more. I see that since honourable members of the House have been very active and taken all the Port Trust Acts from the Library, I found only the Madras Act and there the question of fees is left to the particular Provincial Government to decide. I am sure the same power vests in the Minister of the Central Government. If the fee that is to be paid is a nominal fee, just as a taxi fare or something like that, the race for getting a seat on the Port Trust Board will not be so keen and only such of those who are interested to serve their particular interests or their particular community would be eager to come in.

Another fact which I think the Honourable Minister had better note is that patronage for the Port Trust Members as such had better be reduced to the minimum. That, again, is another fact which induces these people to seek the membership of these Port Trusts. If their work is confined to the actual day to day administration of the Port Trusts and to dictating of policies and deciding of questions as and when they arise and they have no hand in the question of appointing their friends or relatives or other people to various jobs, well, then the genuine worker would find a place in these institutions.

Sir, I have noted with considerable care the large number of arguments marshalled by my friend Mr. Sidhva in favour of enumerating in the body of this measure the representation for these various bodies. I find so far as the Madras Port Trust Act is concerned, that there has been a modification in the type of representation in 1941. I am quite aware that some of us were partly responsible for carrying on an intense agitation in the period preceding this particular amendment. Now, we find that that is out of date and that is why I feel that the particular method which the Honourable Minister has chosen of leaving to the government to determine what are the bodies that ought to be represented is perhaps the wisest possible thing in the circumstances.

A friend mentioned a few minutes back that some of these bodies which will now get representation, will arrive at a stage later on when they do not deserve that representation. Several rival bodies come in existence which take away a portion of the importance of the bodies to which representation has been given. Actually, this is a matter which has got to be very carefully considered. A periodical revision say, once in three years, would perhaps ensure that the bodies that are represented in these Port Trust Boards are really live bodies having definite interests and having members who could contribute to the better working of the Board

One matter about which the Chairman and I had given notice of an amendment, namely, the question of keeping the Europeans out, I have on further consideration found that it would be as unwise to define the racial composition of the Board by confining it to Indians which was intended to counter existing of the Board by confining it to Indians which was intended to counter existing representation on racial lines such as "European" and "Muslim"—which has now got a racial significance—representation. It would perhaps be best, Sir, that the Government do not recognise the racial composition of any particular body and if any particular body allows members to be admitted only on racial or religious grounds and has anything to indicate that it is of a racial character, it would be wise for the Government to deny them all representation. A European Chamber of Commerce as such will have no place, but a Chamber of Commerce which represents particular sectional interests—tea or jute or coffee or any other thing, or hides and skins—they may be granted representation even if it happens that a particular community has got a large share in the business belonging to that particular Chamber. I think it would be a very wholesome principle for the Government to make it clear that they would not recognise racial or communal composition of these Chambers of Commerce and it is with that view in my mind that I do not propose to move my amendment which calls for restriction of representation in these bodies to Indians. I do hope the Honourable Minister would be able to give us an assurance on all these points that I have raised. Otherwise, I feel that the Bill as it is at present drafted is adequate and would undoubtedly serve the purpose for some years to come and when the next amendment is moved, perhaps three or four or five years hence, suitable changes can be made to suit the conditions which then obtain.

Sir, I support the motion.

The Honourable Dr. John Mathai: Sir, my honourable friend Mr. Sidhva has raised a number of points which he said ought to be taken into consideration in determining the scope and framework of this Bill. Most of the points that he has raised are covered by a suggestion with which I introduced this Bill for consideration this morning. All these important matters are matters which necessarily would come up for consideration when we take up a comprehensive re-examination of the constitution and functions of Port Trusts. I will take into account the suggestions which my honourable friend Mr. Sidhva has made.

A question which apparently has given a considerable amount of anxiety to my honourable friend is the fact that the nomination of the bodies to be represented on Port Trusts and the quantum of representation to be given to such bodies have been left in the Bill to be determined by notification; in other words, have been left to be determined at the discretion of the Ministry concerned. The real reason for doing that has been emphasised sufficiently by honourable members who took part in the discussion and I have very little to add to what they have already said on that point. I think it is important in determining the bodies to be represented that there should be a certain amount of elasticity. The fact of the matter is that there are all kinds of bodies being set up from time to time and it is, I think, unwise as many members have pointed out to give too rigid a form to the provisions on this point in the legislation. At the same time, I have considerable sympathy with Mr. Sidhva in the apprehension that he entertains that if the matter is left solely and exclusively in the hands of the executive for the time being, however responsible that executive may be to the legislature, there is a possibility of that discretion being abused. I am well aware of that danger. What I propose to do before issuing any notification is to place the proposals made by the Ministry before the Standing Committee of the Legislature and it is only with the approval of the Standing Committee that I would have the notification issued and I can tell the House that if a matter of this kind is placed before the Standing Committee appointed by this House for the Ministry of Transport—and that Standing Committee is representative of every section of opinion in the House—there would not be much danger of the Minister abusing his powers. I am prepared to go further. In order to keep the House in touch with arrangements made in this matter, I am prepared to see that as soon as a notification is approved and issued it will be placed on the table of the House so that the House knows from time to time how this question of representation is being handled by the Ministry concerned. But in view of the great importance of retaining a certain degree of elasticity, I would beg the House not to interfere with the provision in the Bill.

As regards the proportion of representation given to elective interests, it would appear that the nominated representatives are in some cases in a majority, but it must be remembered that the representatives of labour are included in the list of nominated representatives. My idea is in regard to the nomination of labour representatives to act strictly in consultation with registered trade unions representing every section of Port Trust Labour. My honourable friend Mr. Saksena in an amendment, of which he has given notice, has asked that these representatives should be elected by Port Trust employees. If he had been here and moved that amendment, I would not have accepted it, because there are various sections of labour concerned with the Port Trust who are not employed by the Port Trust and it is very important that those schemes of labour also should have a voice in determining their representation. Therefore, it seems to me that the fairest way of determining the representation of labour is for Government to nominate these representatives in consultation with all those registered trade unions which represent labour concerned with the Port Trust whether employed by the Port Trust or not. If labour representatives are taken into account, you will find that the elective representatives would be in a majority. But I am prepared to go further than that. In several amendments which are now before the House there are proposals that the number of elective representatives should be increased. I propose to give favourable consideration on behalf of Government to a number of these amendments and if these amendments are accepted by the House, with these including the labour representatives, there would be a considerable majority of elective representatives.

There have been references made to the representation of municipal corporation. As my honourable friend Mr. S. K. Patil pointed out, the real reason why we decided to reduce the number of members in the Municipal Corporation of Bombay, is that we wanted to have uniformity as between one port trust and another. But I recognise the objections that he has raised against our proposal. When the amendments of which honourable members have given notice, come up for consideration, the general line that I propose to take is this. I think as far as Madras is concerned, in view of its size in relation, the extent to Bombay and Calcutta, Madras, stands in a class apart. But Bombay and Calcutta have important municipalities which would require to be treated on a somewhat different footing. What I propose to do is precisely what my honourable friend, Mr. Patil suggested. I propose to accept the amendment of which notice has been given by my honourable friend Mr. Chattopadhyay. I propose that there should be a representative of the Howrah Municipality in the Calcutta Port Trust. I do that for this reason that Calcutta is different from the other parts in India in that; it is a river port and a river is concerned with both sides of it and therefore, both municipal areas should be taken into account. In the matter of fixing the representation, we should include the municipalities on both sides of the river. I propose therefore to accept that amendment. Then on the analogy of Calcutta which then would have two municipal representatives, I propose to agree to the amendment of which Mr. Patil has given notice that Bombay should also have two representatives.

Then the question, Sir, of the representation of sectional interests was raised by several honourable speakers. The point is this: It is not merely Chambers of Commerce and recognised commercial associations that ought to be represented but also sectional interests, for example, import trade, export trade, shipping and other interests, should be represented. If we tried to give representation to every sectional interest which puts forward a claim, you will get Port Trusts which would be extremely unwieldy for the sort or purpose for which Port Trusts exist. They are not deliberative or legislative bodies; in the main they are executive bodies and it is necessary therefore, that their numbers should be brought within manageable limits from the executive point of view. What I propose to do regarding sectional interests is this: I am going to ask all commercial bodies which would be represented on these Port Trusts to give me a panel of the sectional interests which they would like to be represented. I would suggest that in sending their representatives to the Port Trusts the number prescribed should be distributed among certain sectional interests contained in the panel for a particular term. When one term is over and another term begins, I would suggest to them that other interests who are on the panel should then come in for representation. That would be a matter for mutual arrangement between us and these commercial bodies.

Sir, the question of the inclusion of non-national interests on the Port Trusts has been raised. I am entirely in agreement with what my honourable friend, Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari said. I am inclined to agree with him that in the stage of political development that we have reached at present, it is not worth while giving all this attention to the question of racial composition on bodies of this kind. It does however raise an important issue with which the House and the country may be faced some day and that issue would be this: How far does the country want non-national corporations, interests or persons to be represented on statutory bodies set up in the country? It raises a fundamental issue. Personally, I would rather wait and see how the future constitution of the country will be determined before introducing any provision involving the exclusion of non-national interests. But from a practical point of view, what is important is that the undue amount of influence which these interests have exercised so far in the administration of Port Trusts ought to go. I will see that under the power which this Bill will confer upon me, Indian commercial interests are given the representation that their importance entitles them to.

I think, Sir, I have covered most of the points that have been raised in the course of the discussion. My honourable friend Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari raised the question of patronage in the hands of trustees, the question of fees and matters of that kind. They are really matters which would have to be considered when a more comprehensive provision of the Port Trust Act is under consideration.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That the Bill to amend the constitutions of the Port Trusts of the major ports of Bombay, Calcutta and Madras, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

384 CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY OF INDIA (LEGISLATIVE) [17TH AUGUST 1948]

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That clause 2 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 2 was added to the Bill.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: In view of the Bill not going to the Select Committee and as the Honourable Minister has given an assurance, I do not propose to move any amendments to clause 3.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): Sir, I move:

"That for clause 3 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

3. Notwithstanding anything contained in any of the enactments mentioned in column 3 of the Schedule to this Act, as they stand before this Act comes into force,—

(a) the first appointments and elections to be made or held under the said enactments as they shall stand after this Act comes into force, shall be made or held, as the case may be, at any time after the passing of this Act, and before this Act comes into force as if this Act was in force at the time; and

(b) the term of office of the Trustees and the Commissioners functioning as such immediately before this Act comes into force shall expire, and the Trustees and Commissioners appointed or elected under clause (a) shall assume office, on the date when this Act comes into force."

Sir, this is a little more than a drafting amendment. The House will be pleased to consider the various points involved in this clause. Under the existing Act, the Act which is sought to be amended, there are Trustees and Commissioners at present functioning. But for these amendments, they would have continued for some time, till there is the next appointment or the next election. It is sought by this Bill to terminate the functions of those Trustees and Commissioners and substitute the newly elected Trustees and Commissioners on a different basis under the present Bill. That is, the new election will take place and the old Trustees and Commissioners will cease to function on a certain date.

In this connection, two dates have got to be remembered. One is that on which the Act is passed and the Bill becomes an Act. It becomes law when it receives the assent of His Excellency the Governor General. That is the date when this Bill becomes an Act. There is another date. Under sub-clause (2) of clause 1, the Act will come into force on a date which is notified by the Government in the Official Gazette. Now, what is proposed in this clause is that the old Trustees and Commissioners would cease to function on the date the Act comes into force. Meanwhile, in anticipation, elections of Trustees and Commissioners will be held under the new Act before it comes into force. There is a little seeming anomaly that elections are held and appointments made under an Act which has yet not come into force. On account of certain defects of drafting in clause (1), the present amendment has been suggested by me. We see that the Act comes into force on the date which is notified for that purpose. But the Act in part really comes into force long before that, because the new elections are to be held under the new Act even before it comes into force. Sub-clause (2) of clause 1 should have been worded somewhat in this way: "Generally the Act will come into force on such date as the Government notifies in this behalf; but for the purpose of the first election under the new amended Act it should be deemed to come into operation on the date it becomes an Act". That has not been done with regard to sub-clause (2), and therefore necessary adjustments have got to be made in clause 3.

So far as clause 3 is concerned, it runs thus:

"The appointments and elections to be made or held under any of the enactments mentioned in the Schedule, as amended hereby may be made or held at any time after the passing of this Act and before this Act comes into force, but the Trustees or Commissioners, as the case may be, so appointed and elected shall not assume office until this Act comes into force, and on the coming into force of this Act, the term of office of the Trustees or Commissioners, as the case may be, then holding office, shall expire."

I beg to submit that the underlying idea has not been fully developed and there are expressions which are very unhappy and give a misleading impression. The House will be pleased to see that on the date when the Act really comes into force, we must have, ready at hand, a body of persons, Trustees or Commissioners already duly elected and appointed. The appointments must be made before, and in anticipation of, the Act coming into force. The clause in the Bill says that elections may be held under the new Act. I beg to submit, it should be, elections shall be held. The word "may" seems to give an option. Suppose the Bill comes into operation on the 1st of November, but on account of the word "may", the new elections may not be held before the 1st of November, and we shall find ourselves in an anomalous position. By virtue of clause 3, the old Trustees or Commissioners will cease to function on that date. Therefore, by virtue of the word "may", elections not having been held, it being optional, there will be no Trustees or Commissioners to take care of these Port Trusts on the particular date. It is therefore necessary that the word "shall" should be introduced so that elections shall be held before the date on which the Act comes into force. That is one effect of the amendment.

The other point is this. So far as the old Acts are concerned, they would run in due course till the next elections would be held. By virtue of the proposed Act which has yet to come into being, we have to hold elections in anticipation. It must therefore be provided that these elections must be held "notwithstanding the provisions of the existing Act". It is for these reasons that I have tried to introduce these words in the amendment.

The first part of the amendment is, that "notwithstanding anything contained in any of the enactments mentioned in column 3", which are going to be amended. In fact, these enactments would stand in the way of a further election before the new Act comes into force. Therefore, it must be provided that "notwithstanding" these enactments, there should be an anticipated election. Part (a) of the clause in the amendment is that the first appointments and elections to be made or held under the said enactments as they shall stand after this Act comes into force.....Though they will be held before the Act comes into force, the first elections will have to be held in anticipation of the Act coming into force. Therefore, the words, "first appointments and elections" seem to be absolutely essential. With regard to the second part of the amendment, (b), it is merely provided that Trustees and the Commissioners who are functioning at present should function till that date. On that date, the Trustees and Commissioners appointed and elected under clause (a) in anticipation should take charge. In these circumstances, I beg to submit that there are some points which have not been provided for in the clause in the Bill: namely, option is given by the use of the word "may" to hold elections or not. I have submitted that there should be no choice, because, they will be facing a gap on the date when the Act comes into force, and therefore, the word, "shall" is absolutely necessary. Then, we must guard ourselves against elections being made under the existing Act.

These are the main reasons for this amendment. I hope the House will consider these points and accept the amendment or something equivalent to it. I have suggested the points and it is not absolutely essential that the amendment as it is should be accepted as a whole. But, the points should be considered and if they are acceptable, then, a suitable draft may be adopted, or the draft as it is may be accepted with or without modifications as the Honourable Minister or the House may choose.

With these few words, I suggest that this amendment be accepted.

Mr. Chairman: Amendment moved:

"That for clause 3 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

3. Notwithstanding anything contained in any of the enactments mentioned in column 3 of the Schedule to this Act, as they stand before this Act comes into force,—

- (a) the first appointments and elections to be made or held under the said enactments as they shall stand after this Act comes into force, shall be made or held, as the case may be, at any time after the passing of this Act, and before this Act comes into force as if this Act was in force at the time; and
- (b) the term of office of the Trustees and the Commissioners functioning as such immediately before this Act comes into force shall expire, and the Trustees and Commissioners appointed or elected under clause (a) shall assume office, on the date when this Act comes into force."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Sir, I appreciate my honourable friend's enthusiasm over small matters of this kind; but having given some consideration to this amendment I am bound to say that it is one which serves no purpose at all. I have had this examined by our legal advisers and they are of the view that the formula adopted in the Bill is clearer and more straightforward and is more appropriate for the practical purpose for which it is meant. I may also point out that the formula adopted in the Bill is based word for word on existing provisions in certain Port Trust Acts and they have been found quite workable over a period of years. I do not think there is any reason to apprehend that the present provision will be unworkable and I ask the House to reject the amendment.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That for clause 3 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

3. Notwithstanding anything contained in any of the enactments mentioned in column 3 of the Schedule to this Act, as they stand before this Act comes into force,—

- (a) the first appointments and elections to be made or held under the said enactments as they shall stand after this Act comes into force, shall be made or held, as the case may be, at any time after the passing of this Act, and before Act comes into force as if this Act was in force at the time; and
- (b) the term of office of the Trustees and the Commissioners functioning as such immediately before this Act comes into force shall expire, and the Trustees and Commissioners appointed or elected under clause (a) shall assume office, on the date when this Act comes into force."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That clause 3 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 3 was added to the Bill.

Shri S. K. Patil: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in the Schedule to the Bill, in column 4, in sub-section (1) of the proposed section 5 of the Bombay Port Trust Act, 1879, for the word 'twenty-four' the word 'twenty-five' be substituted."

As I have explained, of my three amendments one is the main amendment and the two other amendments are consequential. If one seat is added to the number of elected members from the Bombay Municipal Corporation the total number of elected members would be raised by one and instead of twenty-four there will be twenty-five members. I shall not say much on this because I understand the Honourable Minister is accepting this amendment.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Sir, I accept this amendment.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That in the Schedule to the Bill, in column 4, in sub-section (1) of the proposed section 5 of the Bombay Port Trust Act, 1879, for the word 'twenty-four' the word 'twenty-five' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Shri S. K. Patil: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in the Schedule to the Bill, in column 4, in sub-section (1) of the proposed section 5 of the Bombay Port Trust Act, 1879, for the word 'thirteen' the word 'fourteen' be substituted."

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That in the Schedule to the Bill, in column 4, in sub-section (1) of the proposed section 5 of the Bombay Port Trust Act, 1879, for the word 'thirteen' the word 'fourteen' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: Sir, I desire to move my amendment but not in the form in which it stands. While the rest of the section may remain as it stands I only want that in the proposed section 5(2)(b) the words "only those" should be inserted before the word "persons".

Mr. Chairman: That is only one item in a big amendment which seeks to substitute a section for the whole of the proposed section 5. The honourable member cannot now take a single clause out of his amendment and move it.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: In my original notice that I sent in to the office I only said that the words "only those" should be inserted before the word "persons". But the office has put in the whole section, which is not my fault. When I protested they said this is the proper form.
4 P. M. You may call for the original and see it.

Mr. Chairman: I will take it up later.

Shri S. K. Patil: Sir, I move:

"That in the Schedule to the Bill, in column 4, in the proposed sub-section (1) of section 6 of the Bombay Port Trust Act, 1879, for the word 'one', occurring in line one, the word 'two' be substituted."

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That in the Schedule to the Bill, in column 4, in the proposed sub-section (1) of section 6 of the Bombay Port Trust Act, 1879, for the word 'one', occurring in line one, the word 'two' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: Sir, I move:

"That in the Schedule to the Bill, in column 4, in the proposed section 5 of the Calcutta Port Act, 1890, for the word 'twenty-one', the word 'twenty-four' be substituted."

There is no need to explain the purport of this amendment as the Honourable Minister has agreed himself to raise the figure.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That in the Schedule to the Bill, in column 4, in the proposed section 5 of the Calcutta Port Act, 1890, for the word 'twenty-one', the word 'twenty-four' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: Sir, I move:

"That in the Schedule to the Bill, in column 4, in part (xi) of the proposed section 5 of the Calcutta Port Act, 1890, for the word 'ten', the word 'thirteen' be substituted."

In the previous amendment I moved, I asked for the figure to be raised to "twenty-four" and here I have made a consequential change and increased ten to "thirteen".

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I have accepted Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari's amendment that the total should be increased to 24 and I am also accepting his amendment that the number of elected representatives should be 13 instead of 10. I propose also to accept Mr. Chattopadhyay's amendment that the Howrah Municipality should be given a representative. The sum total will be that you will have 13 elected representatives and out of this 13 one would be a representative of Howrah. The total would remain at 24.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That in the Schedule to the Bill, in column 4, in part (xi) of the proposed section 5 of the Calcutta Port Act, 1890, for the word 'ten', the word 'thirteen' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: Sir, I move:

"That in the Schedule to the Bill, in column 4, in the proposed sub-section (1) of section 6 of the Calcutta Port Act, 1890, for the word 'ten' the word 'thirteen' be substituted."

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That in the Schedule to the Bill, in column 4, in the proposed sub-section (1) of section 6 of the Calcutta Port Act, 1890, for the word 'ten' the word 'thirteen' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Shri Mihir Lal Chattopadhyay (West Bengal: General): Sir, I move:

"That in the Schedule to the Bill, in column 4, in the proposed sub-section (1) of section 6 of the Calcutta Port Act, 1890, after the word 'Calcutta', the following be inserted:

'one shall be elected by the Howrah Municipality'."

This has been accepted by the Honourable Minister and therefore I need not speak on it in detail. Some members have anticipated this amendment and have put forth forcible arguments in its favour. I am therefore thankful to the Honourable Minister that he has been pleased to accept it.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That in the Schedule to the Bill, in column 4, in the proposed sub-section (1) of section 6 of the Calcutta Port Act, 1890, after the word 'Calcutta', the following be inserted:

'one shall be elected by the Howrah Municipality'."

The motion was adopted.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: May I have your permission to move amendments 10 and 11 together in an amended form.

Mr. Chairman: Yes.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: Sir, I move:

"That in the Schedule to the Bill, in column 4,—

(i) in the proposed amendment to section 7 of the Madras Port Trust Act, 1905, for the word 'twenty', the word 'twenty-one' be substituted; and

(ii) in the proposed section 8 of the Madras Port Trust Act, 1905,—

(a) in part (i) of sub-section (1), for the word 'ten' the word 'eleven' be substituted; and

(b) in sub-section (2), for the word 'ten' the word 'eleven' be substituted."

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That in the Schedule to the Bill, in column 4,—

(i) in the proposed amendment to section 7 of the Madras Port Trust Act, 1905, for the word 'twenty', the word 'twenty-one' be substituted; and

(ii) in the proposed section 8 of the Madras Port Trust Act, 1905,—

(a) in part (i) of sub-section (1), for the word 'ten' the word 'eleven' be substituted; and

(b) in sub-section (2), for the word 'ten' the word 'eleven' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I move:

"That in the Schedule to the Bill, in column 4, in the proposed sub-section (1) of section 6 of the Bombay Port Trust Act, 1879, the figure '6' be omitted."

The amendment at page 2 of the Bill relates to sub-section (1) of Section 6. Therefore the figure "6" at the commencement is unnecessary. We are going to substitute sub-section (1) by another sub-section (1) and therefore this figure '6' is out of place.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I accept it.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That in the Schedule to the Bill, in column 4, in the proposed sub-section (1) of section 6 of the Bombay Port Trust Act, 1879, the figure '6' be omitted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I move:

"That in the Schedule to the Bill, in column 4, in the proposed sub-section (1) of section 6 of the Bombay Port Trust Act, 1879, after the word 'notification' where it occurs for the first time, the words 'in the Official Gazette', be inserted."

The passage where the amendment is sought to be introduced is that "the Government may from time to time by notification specify". I submit that the notification must be in the Official Gazette. That is the usual way for publishing notifications in connection with Acts. As the sub-clause stands, there may be notifications which may not be in the Official Gazette. That is why I want to specify it.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Sir, I accept it.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That in the Schedule to the Bill, in column 4, in the proposed sub-section (1) of section 6 of the Bombay Port Trust Act, 1879, after the word 'notification' where it occurs for the first time, the words 'in the Official Gazette', be inserted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I move:

"That in the Schedule to the Bill, in column 4, in the proposed sub-section (1) of section 6 of the Calcutta Port Act, 1890, the figure '6' be omitted."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Sir, I accept it.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That in the Schedule to the Bill, in column 4, in the proposed sub-section (1) of section 6 of the Calcutta Port Act, 1890, the figure '5' be omitted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I move:

(i) "That in the Schedule to the Bill, in column 4, in the proposed sub-section (1) of section 6 of the Calcutta Port Act, 1890, after the word 'notification', where it occurs for the first time, the words 'in the Official Gazette' be inserted."

(ii) "That in the Schedule to the Bill, in column 4, in sub-section (2) of the proposed section 8 of the Madras Port Trust Act, 1905, after the word 'notification', where it occurs for the first time, the words 'in the Official Gazette' be inserted."

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

(i) "That in the Schedule to the Bill, in column 4, in the proposed sub-section (1) of section 6 of the Calcutta Port Act, 1890, after the word 'notification', where it occurs for the first time, the words 'in the Official Gazette' be inserted."

(ii) "That in the Schedule to the Bill, in column 4, in sub-section (2) of the proposed section 8 of the Madras Port Trust Act, 1905, after the word 'notification', where it occurs for the first time, the words 'in the Official Gazette' be inserted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That the Schedule, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

The Schedule, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and the Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Sir, I move:

"That the Bill, as amended, be passed."

Mr. Chairman: Motion moved:

"That the Bill, as amended, be passed."

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: Sir, after having made my observations at the first reading, I am glad that the Honourable Minister has given us an assurance on the matter of selecting the various local bodies and interests for the purpose of constituting the various boards of the Port Trust.

I would request you, Sir, to draw the attention of the Honourable the Speaker to the fact that his office has actually bungled in not putting my amendment in the shape and manner in which I sent it to them. I had no other alternative but to submit to what you have said and could not move the amendment that was given notice of originally. I would request you to tell the Honourable the Speaker to find out whose mistake it was and why they have put in the amendment in the manner they liked. We expect the office to assist the members and improve things if they are not properly put in.....

Mr. Chairman: The honourable member knows that these amendments have been in his hands for the last four or five days and if there has been any slip he might easily have pointed it out to the office and had it corrected.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: I pointed out to the office and they said that this was on the contrary better than in the manner in which I put it. I have been repeatedly telling you that I put the words exactly as I have sent. They have put in the whole paragraph and this has prevented me from moving the amendment. Whatever that may be.....

Mr. Chairman: I have got a copy of the actual amendment sent by the honourable member. I think he can take it up with the Speaker privately but I do not think that the office has done any injustice to the honourable member.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: I am very clear as to what I said. I have got a copy. I do not want to stress that point further.

What I want to state now is this. Referring to the proposed section 5(2)(b) which states: "two representatives of labour chosen by the Central Government after consultation with the registered trade unions; if any, composed of persons employed in the port". I wanted the words "only those" to be added for this reason. As the Honourable Minister rightly stated in answer to one of the members the unions in the port are not labourers employed by the Port Trust only. There are stevedors and dubashes who employ labour. Their interests also should be safeguarded. From my experience I have seen in the past in one of the Port Trusts that a labourer who was employed in a factory was brought in when the question of the representation was being discussed for a seat in the Port Trust. To pass a resolution in the Port Trust a large number of them were brought there to make up the majority for a particular candidate to be recommended to the Central Government for being represented on their Port Trust Board. I, therefore, wanted that only those labourers who are actually employed in the Port Trust areas shall be allowed representation, and I am very glad that the Honourable Minister has stated that he will bear in mind that not only the Port Trust labour unions but the interests of the unions of labourers who work in the port employed by the stevedors and dubashes are also to be considered. From that point of view while I admit that election is preferable to nomination, in this matter I know the labour unions are so many and there are various interests involved that it would not be good to give them the elected franchise just now and therefore the proposition that has now been passed is perfectly all right. The word "only" not having been now inserted due to the difficulty, I hope the Honourable Minister will bear in mind that only those actually working in the Port Trust areas shall be considered for their representation and none else.

It was stated by one of the honourable members, I think it was Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari, that the members on the Port Trust Board do not take interest. (Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: "I said that about Madras.") It may be in Madras but in all the Port Trusts the fees are definitely fixed by the Port Trustees. In the Bombay Act there is a definite clause that no member shall leave the meeting until the proceedings are terminated. In the other Acts there is a lacuna. It is left to the Central Government to fix the fees. The Bombay Act says that every trustee other than the Chairman attending a meeting at which there is a quorum and business is conducted shall be entitled to a fee of Rs. 30 and it definitely lays down that no trustee shall be entitled to the payment unless he remains till the end of the proceedings. I have seen a similar provision in Karachi Port Trust Act where no member can leave the meeting before the proceedings are completed. I would therefore tell the Honourable Minister that when he brings in the new comprehensive Bill he may kindly see that this kind of clause is inserted that no member can attend a meeting for two minutes, take the cheque, put it in his pocket and go home. It was for this reason that this provision was made in this Act.

[Mr. R. K. Sidhva]

I do not want to go to other matters about the nominated seats referred to by my honourable friend Mr. Patil. I never minimized the importance of nomination under the existing circumstances. Probably he was not present throughout my speech. He probably caught the last bit of my speech and he said that I was opposed to it. If I was opposed to it I would not have recommended all the seats which the Honourable Minister has stated. I did so because I know these interests are absolutely necessary now from the Government point of view. But I do feel also that the elected number should be increased. If you do not make any distinction between the nominated member, even under the existing circumstances, and the elected member, I do not know what my friend Mr. Patil means. In regard to the one elected seat from the Corporation, why did he not allow it also to be left to the Honourable Minister and why was he anxious that it should be increased to two seats and embodied in this Act? He knew very well. If he felt that there was no distinction between the nominated seats and the elected seats he could have equally left all the seats to be filled by Government and they could have done what they thought best. Even under the existing circumstances, while we realize the difference between nomination by the previous government and that by the present government, still I believe that the elected members who are absolutely responsible to their bodies are quite distinct from the nominated members who are the nominees of the Government of the present day who may be with us, there is no doubt. But there is a certain distinction. I would therefore appeal to the Honourable Minister—now the number has been increased though not to the satisfaction that I would have desired—that in the elected number that we have now sanctioned he may kindly see that all the necessary interests are fully provided for and that their interests are fully safeguarded.

Shri S. K. Patil: Just one word of explanation. My honourable friend has asked why I did not leave it to the Honourable Minister and why I moved an amendment here. The amendment had to be moved because the Honourable Minister has mentioned in the elected list that one seat shall be elected by the Corporation. Had he not mentioned it and kept all the fourteen seats to be filled by the Central Government I would have certainly appealed to his good sense. The amendment became necessary because it had been specifically stated in the Bill itself.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That the Bill, as amended, be passed."

The motion was adopted.

INDIAN RAILWAYS (SECOND AMENDMENT) BILL

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai (Minister for Railways and Transport): I move:

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Railways Act, 1890 (Second Amendment), be taken into consideration."

This Bill refers to two matters. One is the constitution and organisation of a Railway Rates Tribunal and the other is the question of setting up Claims Commissioners for dealing with claims arising out of accidents to trains.

With regard to the first of these matters, the Railway Rates Tribunal, I made a reference to this matter in the speech I made on the Interim Railway Budget last November. And I said it was the intention of Government that there should be an independent judicial body with mandatory and not merely advisory jurisdiction to deal with questions arising in respect of freight rates. At that time my hope was that the necessary arrangements would be completed by April 1948. But various difficulties have come in the way and our legal advisers also said that a statutory authority of this kind could not be set up except by legislation. It has therefore been necessary to adopt the relatively slow process of legislation in regard to this matter instead of an executive process which at an earlier stage I had intended to adopt. As regards the composition of the Tribunal which we are proposing, it is to consist of three members, all of whom would be persons with judicial experience or qualifications and they would be assisted in their investigations by assessors who would partly represent people of experience in trade and industry and partly people of experience in railway administration and finance. It is our intention that where questions of important principle or policy are involved in any matter that comes before a Tribunal, the investigation should be done by a full bench of the Tribunal. But where it is a routine matter dealing more or less with day to day matters, the investigation could be left to a single judge, assisted again by assessors, both having industrial and commercial experience, and railway experience.

The scope of the matters which would be considered by the Tribunal may be briefly summarized as follows: The complaints that they would be authorized to investigate would be complaints relating to undue preference or to unreasonable rates. If any rate is charged which implies undue preference or is considered by the interests concerned unreasonable, then it would be a legitimate complaint to go before the Tribunal for investigation. We are providing in the Bill that no increase in existing class rates, schedule rates or terminal rates should be introduced by the Railway Administration themselves. Questions of increases in the matter of these rates would be determined only by the Tribunal subject to the provision that the Tribunal cannot examine these matters relating to increases unless they have been initiated by the Central Government. The one important class of railway rates which would be left outside the scope of the Tribunal is rates relating to passenger and coaching traffic, unless of course these matters are specifically referred to the Tribunal by the Central Government. These roughly are the proposals regarding the composition and functions of this Tribunal. There is no appeal from their decision. As I said, their decision would be final.

The other matter with which the Bill deals is the setting up of Claims Commissioners. As I told the House the other day in answer to a question, I have been seriously perturbed at the delay that takes place in the settlement and disposal of claims arising out of accidents to passengers. And in view of the accidents that have recently taken place on some of our Railways, it has occurred to me that it was time that the House considered speeding up the procedure by means of which claims could be disposed of in respect of accidents. The proposal briefly is that we should set up Commissioners specifically for the purpose of dealing with these claims. The Claims Commissioners would adopt a summary procedure, I take it somewhat on the lines of the Small Causes Courts. There is also a provision that if in any case the disposal of these claims takes an undue amount of time, it would be open to a Claims Commissioner to make an interim payment up to 50 per cent. of the amount claimed.

These, Sir, briefly are the main matters for the House to consider in respect of this Bill. Several honourable members have proposed that the matters which this Bill covers are matters of sufficient importance to be considered by a Select Committee before it is accepted for consideration by the House. On thinking it over, I think there is a great deal of force in the suggestion that this matter should first be considered by a Select Committee. I want, therefore to say—it would probably save time if I said so at this stage—that I am prepared to accept the motion for referring this motion to a Select Committee, provided the Committee is instructed to send up its report at a very early date.

Mr. Chairman: Motion moved:

“That the Bill further to amend the Indian Railways Act, 1890 (Second Amendment), be taken into consideration.”

I understand there is a motion for reference to Select Committee.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): Sir, I beg to move:

“That the Bill be referred to a Select Committee consisting of The Honourable Dr. John Matthai, Shri K. Santhanam, Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena, Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru, Shri Moturi Satyanarayana, Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava, Shri S. K. Patil, Shri Biswanath Das, Dr. Bakshi Tek Chand, Dr. V. Subramaniam, Prof. N. G. Ranga, and the Mover, with instructions to report on or before the 24th August, 1948, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five.”

Sir, I do not want to take up the time of the House except to refer to one or two matters and show the importance of establishing this Rates Tribunal.

Sir, the Acworth Committee, as early as 1920-21, recommended in paragraph 156 of its report the constitution of such a Tribunal. They say,—

“We have discussed with very many witnesses, representing not only the Indian public, but the railway companies, what the authority to control rates should be. We have found a unanimous readiness on both sides to accept the constitution of a new Tribunal, practically identical with that recommended for the same duties by the Rates Advisory Committee constituted under the English Ministry of Transport Act, 1910, and accepted as satisfactory both by the railway companies and by representative organisations of the traders in England. We recommend the establishment of a Rates Tribunal.....”

But they recommended that as regards the composition of the Tribunal there may be three members with the following qualification: “.....an experienced lawyer as chairman.....”, that is copied in the present Bill, but as regards the two lay members they suggested that:

“.....One of them may represent the railways and the other the commercial interests, with power, in any case deemed of sufficient importance, to add two additional members, one on each side.”

Those qualifications have not been prescribed here and I do not find that they are expected to be even members who practise the profession of law or versed in law. No qualifications have been set out so far as they are concerned. There are two panels which are expected to be brought into existence—one to be nominated by the Railway Board and the other by the various interests and industries. They are to act as assessors in the matter of fixing what the proportion of rates and fares are in an advisory capacity. Therefore it is proper that the Select Committee will impose certain qualifications instead of leaving it nebulously.

Mr. Chairman: May I point out to the honourable member that clause 34(2) says that both the chairman and member must be qualified for appointment as a High Court judge?

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Yes, I am sorry. It requires a lawyer to be a member of the Tribunal. But though I am a lawyer myself, I do not want all lawyers to sit there. I want a judge of a high rank or with legal experience, but the other two must be persons who know the business. The other day I thought I had known much of income-tax law. Generally I had some cases here and there and I had read the income-tax law from the beginning to end; it came up for amendment three or four times on the floor of this House; we read it and forget afterwards. I cannot pretend the same knowledge of it as one who practises it constantly. Likewise persons who know must be associated. It is not purely an academic matter to be decided between one section and another section. We want persons who know the trade. Hitherto there are nearly 22,000 rates and fares. On these rates, on the availability of wagons and on their transport, depends the growth of our industry. These persons must know the bottle-necks; how it will seriously affect what kind of industry; how quickly the material could be transported from one place to another; when goods are taken from one place to another, how quickly to return the empties. These are factors to be taken into consideration and only persons who know the business must be there to assist the judge who holds the scales between them. I would still think that in the Select Committee a modification may be made not accepting all these people as lawyers. Experience either as railwaymen or as industrialists ought not to be ignored.

As regards rates, so far as increases above the present level are concerned, it is only on reference by the authority asking for an increase that an increase could be done. I find from a casual reading of the Bill that it does not seem open to the Tribunal to reduce the fares in any particular case. They are not allowed the power to reduce any fares or rates. They can say, “This class of fares does not suit a particular kind of commodity”, or they can fix from station to station rates in a particular case. That also must be taken into consideration by the Select Committee.

Then as regards the method prescribed for disposing of compensation cases expeditiously by the appointment of Commissioners, this is also a step in the right direction. Compensation is being paid to the tune of two to three crores a year. That is a waste and a damage. The cases are not disposed of properly and in case of accidents it is necessary that compensation must be given as early as possible. Therefore, that is also right.

The various clauses that have been introduced are not of course absolutely carefully worded and some of them are capable of improvement. I am sure the Select Committee will take all this into consideration and prepare a Bill which is more suited and which will improve the condition of Railways and give an impetus to the very languishing industries in our country.

Mr. Chairman: Amendment moved:—

“That the Bill be referred to a Select Committee consisting of The Honourable Dr. John Matthai, Shri K. Santhanam, Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena, Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru, Shri Moturi Satyanarayana, Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava, Shri S. K. Patil, Shri Biswanath Das, Dr. Bakshi Tek Chand, Dr. V. Subramaniam, Prof. N. G. Ranga, and the Mover, with instructions to report on or before the 24th August, 1948, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five.”

Dr. P. S. Deshmukh (C. P. and Berar: General): Sir, I am very happy that the amendment has been accepted by the Honourable Minister and the Bill is going to be referred to a Select Committee. It is also very satisfactory that the demand of the House has been met at so early a date and a Bill of this nature is coming forward for the constitution of a Tribunal the need for which had been long felt and often emphasised by the members of this House.

Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, Sir, who spoke before me dwelt on the composition of this Tribunal. I have only one point to make and that is that in all the provisions proposed for the formation and constitution of the Tribunal, there is a very glaring omission. While the All-India Federation of Chambers of Trade and Commerce are to frame one Panel and the Railways another, I do not find the mainstay of India, namely, the grower and the producer, figuring anywhere. It is absolutely undeniable that their interests are more vitally concerned in this transaction of transport of goods than anybody else's. After all, the trade prospers and merchants live only on the exploitation of the grower and the producer. But while a Panel of 60 persons is proposed to be formed by the Federation of Chambers of Trade and Industry, the case of the growers and the producers has gone by default. After all, trade and industry is not always at one with the producers and their interests are not always common or identical. In fact they are often divergent. I would therefore suggest to the members of the Select Committee that they should plead on behalf of the millions of people who produce, whose interests are very vitally affected and with whom it is a matter of life and death in many instances. For instance, I have bothered the Honourable Minister many times in regard to the availability of wagons for onion, oranges, vegetables and other things. There is also the question of rates which may be charged in which the growers and producers must have a say. So not only are the commercial people interested but there are also the vital interests of the growers which ought to be considered and looked into. I hope suitable provision will be made by which some representation would be given to these millions of people on whose products and productivity the whole of India lives and prospers.

चौधरी रनवीर सिंह: अध्यक्ष महोदय मैं डाक्टर देशमुख के सुझाव से मुत्तफिक हूं। पिछली मर्तबा हमारी एग्रीकल्चर स्टैंडिंग कमेटी (Agriculture Standing Committee) में डाक्टर साहिब ने बताया था कि एक तरफ तो यहां दिल्ली में आरेंजेज (oranges) बिल्कुल नहीं मिलती दूसरी तरफ नागपुर में आठ रुपये में एक वैगन (wagon) आरेंजेज (oranges) नीलाम कर दी थी क्योंकि भेजने के लिये वैगन नहीं मिले और वह सड़ गई और तबाह हो गई। पिछले सेशन (session) में मैंने कई दफा मंत्री महोदय से गुड़ के बारे में प्रार्थना की। यू० पी० और पंजाब के कुछ हिस्से में जो कि गुड़ पैदा करता है गुड़ की कीमत चार और छः रुपये तक गरी। इसको मुकाबले में बम्बई में ५० और ४० रुपये तक गुड़ की कीमत बढ़ी। इसी तरह चन्द दिन हुए गोकुलभाई भट्ट ने आपसे यह बात कही थी कि बीकानेर के अन्दर चने सड़ रहे हैं। बीकानेर तो दूर है, हिसार के अन्दर चने का भाव एग्रीकल्चरिस्ट (Agriculturist) को सिर्फ छः रुपये की मन मिलता है, लेकिन आप बद्रास में चले जाइये वहां चना आपको २० रुपये में भी नहीं मिलता। इसी तरह जो और चीजें किसान पैदा करता है उनकी उसको ठीक कीमत इसलिये नहीं मिलती क्योंकि ट्रांसपोर्ट (Transport) की डिफिकल्टीज (difficulties) हैं। और ऐसी हालत में जब कि यह सरकार अपने को किसानों की और प्रोलेटेरियट (proletariate) की सरकार कहती है, किसानों का, पैदा करने वालों का कोई नुमायन्दा ऐसे ट्रीब्यूनल (Tribunal) में न होना, मैं समझता हूं उनके साथ अन्याय होगा। और मैं मंत्री महोदय से पुरजोर अपील करता हूं कि हविस अन्याय को दूर करने की कोशिश करें।

(English translation of the above speech)

Ch. Ranbir Singh (East Punjab: General): Mr. Chairman, Sir, I support the suggestions made by Dr. Deshmukh. In the last meeting of the Standing Committee for the Ministry of Agriculture, the Doctor told us that on the one hand oranges were not available in Delhi and on the other a wagon of oranges was auctioned in Nagpur for Rs. 8, because wagons for transport were not available and there oranges were rotting. During the last session on many occasions, I drew the attention of the Honourable Minister to 'Gur'. In certain parts of U.P. and East Punjab which produce 'Gur', the price of this commodity fell down to Rs. 4 and Rs. 6; and whereas in Bombay it rose upto Rs. 40 and 50. The other day Shri Gokulbhai Bhatt mentioned that grams were rotting in Bikaner. Bikaner is a distant place. Even in Hissar, the agriculturist is paid for the gram at Rs. 6 per maund; but if you go to Madras, you cannot get gram even at Rs. 20 per maund. Thus the agriculturist is unable to secure reasonable price for the other commodities product by him because of transport difficulties. Under such circumstances I feel that this Government which acclaims to be the Government for the agriculturists and the proletariat, would be perpetrating injustice on the agriculturists and the producers by ignoring the appointment of their representative on such a Tribunal. I would, therefore, strongly appeal to the Honourable Minister that he should take steps to remove this injustice.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): Sir, I welcome the principles of this Bill as well as the motion for reference to Select Committee. There are two principles involved in the Bill. One is the creation of Rates Tribunal and the other is the Tribunal to deal with accidents. Both these are great improvements and I am glad they have been accepted by the Government in view of the wishes expressed in the House.

As the Bill is going to the Select Committee, I have to make some suggestions for consideration. Certain sections of the original Act, namely, 26 to 40, were repealed by the Adaptation of India Order, 1937. There was therefore a gap from 26 to 40. They related to certain traffic facilities. Now, Sir, certain other sections of the Act, namely, 41 to 45 relate to other subjects, but it is proposed in the Bill that they should be re-numbered as 26 to 33 just to fill the gap once occupied by other provisions. As the clauses deal with entirely different subjects, it is not proper to re-number the sections to fill up places occupied by other entirely different sections not analogous to those of the present. In these circumstances, the Select Committee should be pleased to consider whether the sections which are proposed to be re-numbered as other sections are really analogous to them or whether they deal with entirely different subjects. In fact, in amending an Act it is not the usual practice to fill up gaps by entirely different sections. That will lead to considerable confusion and those who have to make a study without adequate knowledge may fall into the error that they may consider certain sections which are removed to a different place by a kind of interpolation as if they were originally there. I submit this is a consideration which the Select Committee should keep in mind. When an Act is entirely recast it is of course the custom to re-number the sections serially, but when amendments are made to an existing Act, it is not the custom. This is all I have to suggest for the consideration of the Select Committee.

Shri Prabhudayal Himatsingka (West Bengal: General): Mr. Chairman, Sir, I support the Bill in so far as it tries to provide machinery for expeditious decision of rates and for payment of compensation. But, Sir, at the present moment there is another important question to which I would like to invite the attention of the Honourable Minister. In cases of loss of goods and partial loss of consignments from one station to another, the consignees put forward claims, and I can say from my own personal knowledge that those claims are not being attended to in time and in many cases no response is received from the Department. As a result, you will be surprised that whereas 10 suits used to be instituted before 1947 against the Secretary of State as was then necessary, you will find at least 200 suits at the present moment.

The number of suits against the Government must have increased in the present instance to the extent of twenty times and that is a matter which should receive the serious attention of the Honourable Minister, because that means so much loss of money for payment to the parties who succeed in their litigation. In most cases as soon as a suit is filed, the Railways try to compromise the case. I do not see any reason, Sir, why some method should not be found and if possible incorporated in the Bill whereby such claims also may be expeditiously dealt with and where the claim is correct some method provided for making adjustments. The number of suits will indicate how these things have been dealt with and how Government is being mulcted with costs.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru (U.P.: General): Mr. Chairman, the Bill before us deals with a very important subject. Some of the points which require examination have been mentioned by other speakers. I shall draw the attention of the House to some clauses which in my opinion are of a vital character. The Honourable the Transport Minister in a speech which was of exemplary brevity considering the importance of the subject explained the constitution of the Tribunal. I should not therefore deal with that point now. I shall ask the House to consider clauses 41 and 42 which broadly speaking deal with the matters which come before the Railway Rates Tribunal and the powers of the Tribunal and it would be found on a reference to clause 41 that complaints can be brought before the Tribunal for almost with regard either to matters where it is alleged that undue preference is being shown to any trade or any body or in respect of rates which are regarded as unreasonable, because they are too heavy or because unjustifiable conditions are attached. The Tribunal can also hear complaints regarding the refusal of the railway authorities to quote a new station to station rate or to grant an alternative owner's risk rate. You will thus see, Sir, that there is nothing relating to rates which cannot come before the Rates Tribunal. This Tribunal will have the power on the application of the Central Government to increase the level of the class rates. We have to consider two important things. One is that there is nothing relating to the rating system which is outside the Tribunal's purview and the other is that no increase can be made in the rates without the sanction of the Tribunal. I am not certain, but it seems to me that the Railway Board or the Transport Ministry will have the power to decrease the class rates. If I am mistaken on that point, I am sure that the Honourable the Transport Minister will correct me.

I should like to draw the attention of the House to clause 46 also, which deals with alterations and cancellation of station to station rate. It is clear from this that except in regard to station rate quoted by a railway administration in pursuance of the Tribunal's decision it will have the power to alter the station to station rate as it considers fit. I have drawn the attention of the House to these matters in order to show how comprehensive the powers of the Tribunal will be. The question therefore arises whether it is desirable that such large powers should be made over to a Tribunal, however competent it may be. Government have great responsibilities to perform. They may be compelled because of reasons beyond their control to find new sources of revenue. What are the new sources which they can look forward? They can either raise the goods rates or roughly speaking the passenger fares. The passenger fares and the charges made for other coaching traffic generally will not be under the control of the Tribunal. Questions relating to these matters can be referred to the Tribunal by the Central Government, but the Tribunal can have no initiative in this matter and no complaints can be brought before the Tribunal which relate to these matters. In the first place when Government are in search of more money, it is quite possible that finding that one road is blocked, they may seek the easier method of raising passenger fares and coaching charges in order to solve their difficulties.

Again, Sir, Government may be compelled to increase the railway earnings in a number of ways, including the reclassification of goods rates because of the increase in the wages of labour or the Adjudicator's award or for certain other reasons. Is it right that in a matter of such vast importance they should part with all control; the responsibilities will be theirs; the obligation to fulfill them will be theirs; but the power to carry out their responsibilities will not be theirs; they will have to depend on the sanction of an outside body in order to increase the rates to the extent to which the burdens which the railway have to shoulder might render necessary. Now it may be said here, Sir, that as a Tribunal will consist of men with legal qualifications—I mean qualified to be Judges of a High Court—there is no reason why we should shrink even in important matters, even in matters of vital importance to the railways from abiding by their decision.

Mr. Chairman: Will the honourable member take more time?

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: I will require more time.

Mr. Chairman: In that case he may continue his speech tomorrow.

The Assembly then adjourned till a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock on Wednesday the 18th August, 1948.

BANKING COMPANIES BILL

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF SELECT COMMITTEE

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy (Minister for Finance and Commerce): May I make a formal motion? I beg to move:

"That the time appointed for the presentation of the report of the Select Committee on the Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to banking companies be extended up to Wednesday, the 25th of August 1948."

I understand two meetings of the Select Committee were held but further meetings could not be held due to circumstances of which we are aware. I therefore hope that the House will grant this extension of time.

Mr. Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the time appointed for the presentation of the report of the Select Committee on the Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to banking companies be extended up to Wednesday, the 25th of August 1948."

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): In this connection, Sir, I would like to make a suggestion to the House and to the Government also. Many of us who are members of the various Select Committees have been feeling that the time at our disposal is very short and we have not been able to do any justice. As a matter of fact, various Committees overlap. Therefore, many of the members of the Committee on the Banking Bill thought in consultation with the Chairman himself that Saturday and Sunday may be left free. There should be no work on Saturdays at all.

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy: There is no work even now on Saturday,

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: In addition, Friday also may be allowed free, so that on Fridays and Saturdays the Select Committees may have their sittings and expedite the work.

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy: No, no.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: This is the suggestion that was made and it is a suggestion well worth considering, because without the Select Committee going into the matter, no work can be done; Bills cannot be placed before the Assembly and the work of the Assembly cannot be done. So this is as good work outside the Assembly as it is inside the Assembly for its purposes.

Shri H. V. Kamath (C. P. and Berar: General): May I submit, Sir, that it is not a wholesome practice to have many members—or at least some members—common to many Committees and that this should be dispensed with as far as possible, because then the work overlaps, Committee meetings clash and it is difficult for two or three meetings to be held at the same time with some common members to have to attend all of them. That is the real difficulty.

Mr. Speaker: The suggestion, I think, comes to this, that the House should not sit on Fridays and Saturdays. (Mr. R. K. Sidhva: "No, Sir.") That is what the suggestion of Mr. Ayyangar comes to. Of course, personally, I would be guided by the wishes of the House, but I was just going to make the remarks which Mr. Kamath has made. It is for the House to consider as to whether they should have such a large number of members on each Select Committee. I think the number is 13, 14 or sometimes even 15, although the quorum is only five. While, therefore, for effective work the minimum number of members is fixed at five, I do not see why the number of members of the Select Committee should be as much as 15 and in some cases up to 20.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Madras: General): It is not that which causes delay. It is the Chairman.

Mr. Speaker: Whatever it be, if it is possible to reduce that number and to see that the same members are not repeated in the Committees, I believe we shall be able to do the work more economically, but it is for the House to decide. I shall be entirely in the hands of the House. My own reaction, however, was that the better remedy would be to reduce the number and not to have overlapping names.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: But the real difficulty, Sir, is that the Chairman is the same. The Law Minister is the ex officio Chairman of all the Committees and he finds it difficult.

Mr. Speaker: But the Law Minister is not always busy in the House and the meetings of the Committee can as well be conducted outside, even within the hours in which the House is sitting, if a few members only are members of the Committee.

Shri H. V. Kamath: But, Sir, the Chairman, the Law Minister, does not always attend personally. He sends deputies.

Dr. B. Pattabhi Sitaramayya (Madras: General): The object of fixing the strength of the Committee at 15 is to enable five people to come. You cannot have a tumbler of water from a well which contains only a tumbler, but you can get a tumbler of water from a well which contains a bucket full. Similarly, you cannot get five people out of a Committee of five or six. Therefore, it is that 15 members are fixed and generally we find that only seven or eight attend the meeting at the maximum.

Mr. Speaker: That is hardly doing credit to the members concerned who are on the Select Committee. However, that is a different matter. I was considering the other aspect, namely, that if we were not to sit even for one day, are we not enforcing idleness on a large number of members of this Assembly for one whole day in the week? That point should also be considered. I quite agree that the work of the Select Committee should be done properly and efficiently and if it is done properly and efficiently the time of the House would be saved; but at the same time, this is also an aspect which strikes me as very important. However, we need not discuss it at this stage. The members may discuss and whatever their views are, if there is a general unanimity of opinion, I shall be entirely in the hands of the House.

The question is:

"That the time appointed for the presentation of the report of the Select Committee on the Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to banking companies be extended up to Wednesday, the 25th of August 1948."

The motion was adopted.

CANTONMENTS (AMENDMENT) BILL

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh (Minister for Defence): Sir, I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill further to amend the Cantonments Act, 1924.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That leave be granted to introduce a Bill further to amend the Cantonments Act, 1924."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

INDIAN RAILWAYS (SECOND AMENDMENT) BILL—concl'd.

Mr. Speaker: We shall now proceed with the further consideration of the following motion moved yesterday by the Honourable Dr. John Matthai, namely,

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Railways Act, 1890 (Second Amendment), be taken into consideration."

Pandit Kunzru. He was speaking yesterday.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru (U. P.: General): Mr. Speaker, I dealt yesterday with the functions and powers of the Rates Tribunal and showed how wide the powers of the Tribunal were. I pointed out that the power of the Government would be confined practically to the reduction of the rates, and while the responsibilities of the Government might increase considerably in the future they would have to depend for the funds required on the permission of the Rates Tribunal at least in so far as the increase in the rates goes. I then went on to say that finding that they could not meet their obligations by increasing the rates they might be tempted to increase the passenger fares and coaching charges. I then dealt with the undesirability of divesting the Government completely of all power of increasing the rates in any case, however heavy their commitments might be.

Sir, I can understand the anxiety of my honourable friend the Minister of Transport to assure trade and industry that the Railways do not want to impose any unnecessary burden on them. There the complaint in the past has been that the rates tribunal was advisory and it therefore rested with the Government whether its recommendations were to be given effect to or not. The Government even reserved to themselves the power of not referring a complaint to the advisory rates tribunal. It seems to me that it is necessary in view of the past history of this question and the dissatisfaction that exists in business circles to create a statutory body which will be able to deal authoritatively with such complaints as businessmen may have to make with regard to the terms laid down by the railway for the carriage of goods. But the question is whether the Precise powers proposed to be conferred on the rates tribunal in the Bill should be vested in it.

Sir, the Railway Department is not the only department whose policy is affecting the businessmen in this country; there are other departments whose actions, if not singly, at least taken in the aggregate affect businessmen more, I mean Finance, Industry and Commerce Departments. I am not aware, Sir, that any of these Departments has appointed a tribunal whose business it is to decide whether the measures proposed by the Government are sound or not. Take for instance, the Finance Department. There is an Income-tax Tribunal. But this tribunal does not decide whether the Income-tax rates are to be raised or not. It decides that certain cases falling under the Income-tax law and its judgments can be appealed against in certain cases. The decisions of the rates tribunal will be final and it will enjoy much greater power than the Income-tax Tribunal does in the field of Income-tax and no Finance Minister would ask any income-tax tribunal to say whether the scheme proposed by or the enhancements which it considered proper would be such as would be equitable in the circumstances concerned and would not impose an undue burden either on private individuals or on trade and industry.

Take again, Sir, the policy of the Government with regard to the development of industries. There too the decision of the Government is not subject to the approval of any outside body. I do not therefore see any reason why 12 No Government should in the case of rates alone part with all the power and make the rates tribunal the final arbiter in the matter. I have already said, Sir, that there ought to be a statutory body to deal with the complaints of businessmen, but I think that the Government should in an appropriate way reserve to themselves the power of seeing that they derive sufficient revenue to meet their obligations. Sir, there is a body known as the Transport Tribunal in England, which is vested with all the powers which Government propose to confer on the rates tribunals in this country, but there is one very important difference between the view taken of the latter to which I have referred in the two countries. The powers of the Transport Tribunal in England are very comprehensive, but they are subject to an over-riding provision which is contained in section 85 of the British Transport Act, 1947, which came into force only on the 1st January 1948. The section, Sir, reads as follows:

"Neither the Commission, that is the British Transport Commission nor the Transport Tribunal shall do anything in the exercise of their respective powers as respects charges and the submission, confirmation and alteration of charges, which in their opinion will prevent the Commission from discharging the Commission's general duty to secure that their revenue is not less than sufficient for making provision for the meeting of charges properly chargeable to revenue taking one year with another or which in their opinion will prevent the Commission from giving effect to any direction of the Minister under any provision of this Act."

That is the British Transport Act. The extract which I have just quoted shows that the British Government in appointing the Transport Tribunal took good care to see that they had the power to fulfil their over-riding responsibilities and they accordingly, broadly speaking, made it incumbent not merely on the Transport Commission, but also on the Transport Tribunal to bear in mind the instructions given to the Commission by the Transport Minister and the need of securing the revenues required to meet such charges as are likely to be debitable against the railway revenues. It may be said here that as the tribunal will consist of qualified and able men, we need have no fear with regard to their judgment and if in any case, they come to an adverse decision, we should rather revise our own views than try to force them on the tribunal. The matter is not quite so simple as this. When the Government propose, owing to the increased or increasing responsibilities to raise the rates as a whole, that is, raise not any particular class rate in relation to other class rates or the rate on a commodity, but the rates as a whole, the Commission, so far as I can judge, might call upon the Government to show that the railway administration is being carried on with due diligence and care, and if they are not satisfied on this point, they might refuse to give effect to the proposal of the Government. It is undoubtedly desirable that there should be some authority which will have the power of reviewing the administration of the railways. But, should it be this House or the Rates Tribunal? I submit, Sir, that it is the duty and privilege of this House to consider how any Government department is discharging the functions entrusted to it, and to call it to book if in its opinion, the department concerned is found to have failed in the discharge of its duties. So long as there is a democratic legislature, it seems to me, that it is, to put it mildly, undesirable to make any Committee or Commission the judge of the efficiency or the economy of the railway administration. The matter, Sir, is a very important one and I think that it will receive the attention of the Select Committee.

Before I sit down, I should like to refer to one other matter, which, in my opinion, needs to be considered more carefully than apparently it has so far been. Under clause 41 (c) complaints can be laid before the Rates Tribunal relating to the levy of unreasonable charges including terminal charges. Sir, terminal charges, which were of varying amounts in the past, are to be standardised. The Government, I understand, have re-classified the rates. Classification is based on a continuous mileage. In other words, it is telescopic. It is going to be put into force from the 1st of October 1948. One of the results of this new classification would be to standardise the terminal charges. So long as the charges are varying, it would have been possible to fix a relation between the charges levied and the services rendered by the railways. But, as soon as these charges are standardised, there will obviously cease to be a direct relation between the charges and the services rendered by the railways. Section 46 of the Indian Railways Act, 1890, which is going to be repealed laid down how disputes regarding the unreasonableness of terminal charges might be decided. As I have already said, that section is going to be repealed. In spite of the standardisation of the terminal charges, the Tribunal has been allowed to decide whether they are reasonable or not. Under section 46 as it was, the charges were to be related to the services. This correspondence cannot as I have already said, exist in the future. I do not therefore see why section 41 (c) should contain any reference to the terminal charges. I am prepared to grant, Sir, that I have not fully understood the purpose of the Transport Ministry in having drafted this section 41 (c) in its present form. I shall therefore listen with great interest to what my honourable friend the Transport Minister may have to say on this point, should he condescend to deal with it now. But the matter requires attention not merely in the opinion of an uninstructed man like myself, but also in the opinion of men who have been connected all their life with railway administration.

There are other points too to which the attention of the House may be called; but I do not think it is necessary for me to say more in order to point out how important the matters are and how necessary it is therefore that a Select Committee should be appointed to scrutinise the Bill.

With these words, I support the motion of my honourable friend Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar for the appointment of a Select Committee, which, I understand, has already been accepted by the Honourable the Transport Minister.

Shri K. Santhanam (Madras: General): Sir, I would not have intervened in this debate had not two major questions of policy been raised. The previous speaker has certainly raised a most fundamental issue. Is a tribunal of the type contemplated in the Bill a proper or desirable medium for settling large issues of policy? I think it is a right question that he has raised and to a large extent I agree with him. It is the business of the Ministry, helped by the scrutiny of this legislature, to frame all issues of policy. A tribunal can come in only to scrutinise the administration of that policy and to ensure that it is fairly administered among the various interests concerned. Therefore I agree with him that clause 42 as has been drafted in this Bill is rather too wide. I agree with him that the general power to increase class rates as a whole should be vested in the Ministry, that if the Ministry raises one class rate leaving others alone it should be a proper subject to come before the Tribunal. There are so many rates, station rates and other rates, that it is obviously impossible for any Ministry to deal with them and the matter has to be left to the several administrations. And when a matter is to be left to several administrative authorities it is but right that an independent tribunal should be there to say whether these changes are made impartially or discriminatively. Therefore I think some limitation of clause 42 is needed and I am sure it will be scrutinised by the Select Committee.

The other point to which I should like to refer is the composition of this tribunal. I may inform the House that the Railway Board originally put forward a composition somewhat similar to that indicated by my honourable friend Mr. Ayyangar. But the Standing Finance Committee after great consideration turned that proposal down and advocated the present proposal. The original proposal was that the tribunal should consist of one judge, one member representing railway interests and one member representing commercial interests. In the opinion of the Standing Finance Committee for Railways this was considered undesirable because the final decision should be taken by disinterested persons and not persons who are habitually or traditionally more or less committed to any particular view. Another very important reason which weighed with the Standing Finance Committee was that in a composition of that type all the three members will have to be present at all cases, whether the complaints are about major questions of policy or about minor details. We thought that in the case of minor details each member of the tribunal should be able to sit as a separate bench and dispose of the cases. Therefore for all minor points there will be three courts while for major questions of policy the whole bench will sit as a full bench and decide. Again, if the representative of commercial or railway interests were ill or absent the entire work will be held up. It was also felt that in the case of commercial interests they vary enormously. A man acquainted with the jute trade may not be a competent person to advise on matters relating to the textile or other trade. Therefore the Standing Finance Committee thought that to provide a wide panel of railway interests as well as commercial interests and to associate suitable members from this panel for each case according to the necessities of that particular case is a much better procedure, leaving the final decision to people who have been trained to arrive at decisions after a dispassionate consideration of all relevant factors. There should be assessors technically competent to deal with all the facts of the case and to advise the judges as to how they should be appreciated. But for coming to a final decision I suggest that it is only the trained judge who can come to it without any prepossessions, who can go only on the evidence before him and come to a proper judgment. For all these reasons it was considered by the Standing Finance Committee that a tribunal consisting only of judges duly assisted by competent advisers will be a proper medium and the most effective way of dealing with complaints.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): Is there any provision in this Bill that in place of the tribunal sitting as a whole consisting of all the three members, it is open to any member to act on behalf of the tribunal and have a sitting?

Shri K. Santhanam: There is a provision. I think the tribunal will sit together and decide which are major questions of policy and which are minor questions. When once they assort these cases they will divide into three benches on minor questions and decide them.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: I do not find any provision here for any one of them sitting as a separate bench; all three must sit together.

Shri K. Santhanam: Clause 43 contains that provision. All these clauses will of course go for scrutiny to the Select Committee. But the provision is there. For these reasons the Standing Finance Committee decided that a tribunal of the type contemplated in the Bill should be set up; all other matters will go for the scrutiny of the Select Committee, and I need not take up any more time of the House. It is certainly necessary that this should go to Select Committee, and I support the motion.

Shri B. Das (Orissa: General): Sir, it is gratifying that very shortly we will have a rates tribunal. The past history of our agitation about a rates tribunal is as old as the Acworth Committee. We have been clamouring for a rates tribunal and they had a Rates Advisory Committee which functioned indifferently throughout and perhaps it has lapsed. I am not very much enamoured of the lawyer element presiding over every tribunal that this House will create. On another occasion when the Income-Tax Tribunal was under discussion I pointed out that there should be no lawyer or High Court Judge on that tribunal. It is our misfortune—but ten or twelve years hence the House will not have a preponderating influence of legal talents—that the respect which the British Raj brought to the people for justice gave India nothing, but they maintained a balance of justice. And the educated people of our country, being all lawyers, began to trot out before the public that justice can be delivered only by a High Court Judge or one who is fit to be a High Court Judge. What does the ordinary lawyer know about the rates structure of the railways? What can he do? The main function of the Rates Tribunal is in section 42 where it will fix the rates structure of this country. So why should there be a High Court judge? My lawyer friend, Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad does not agree. But I voice the opinion of those who are not lawyers and who feel that we are as honest and as judicial minded and as fair-minded as the honourable lawyer friend thinks he can be! This loyal worship of the High Court judges should be dropped in future legislation brought before this House.

I am glad that my honourable friend, Mr. Ayyangar had moved for reference of the Bill to Select Committee and that my honourable friend, Dr. Matthai accepted it. I do not know who are the members of the Select Committee. I do hope the House is seeing to it that as business men they think of the benefit to the country and not merely creating tribunals for benefit of one or two High Court judges and for the benefit of the lawyer elements who are bound to appear on one side or the other and waste Government money and also the taxpayer's money.

As regards the appointment of High Court judges I do warn the Government that they should be very careful in future. High Courts are being multiplied with the creation of new provinces and the merging of States into so many provinces and there will be so many more High Court judges. But have they got the necessary acumen, knowledge, and understanding to know the functions of a Rates Tribunal? So Government should be very careful in future when it chooses the types of High Court judges that will sit on a tribunal like the Rates Tribunal.

[Shri B. Das.]

As for lawyers appearing before the Rates Tribunal in commercial cases I would suggest no lawyers should be allowed to appear because the assessors are there to advise and even act. As it is in the draft Bill, it does not leave the assessors any power of finality. This is an old prejudice of the Colonial Government that is dead now in India. It always wanted arbitrary powers to judge us. I would like the assessors to be given a little more definite power so that the Judges are influenced thereby, and if the assessors are there the lawyer element should be debarred so that that element may not waste public time and money in appearing before the Rates Tribunal.

The Rates Tribunal does not start with the blessings of fortune. It starts in the unfortunate position that the members thereof will find that they have got a heavy flat rate to contend with in the rates structure of India, be it for passenger rates or goods rates. There was a time when the former Government developed telescopic rates not to help Indian trade, commerce and industry, but to help British imported goods and British industry situated outside India. I pity the members of the Rates Tribunal, whoever they may be because they will find themselves in that economic position that compelled my honourable friend, the Railway Minister to raise the rates to the highest permissible maxima that he could be permitted. As my friend Mr. Santhanam has said, it is of course for the House to set the future policy of the Rates structure of India. At the same time the Rates Tribunal should be allowed a certain freedom which will be defined in the rules that the Government of India in the Railway Ministry should draft so that they could examine whether before the next Railway Budget is introduced, the rates are for the benefit of commerce and industry in India and not for the benefit of foreign trade.

I now deal with that aspect of the Bill that touches on Claims Commissioners. I do hope they will not be mere ornaments but that they will do what is contemplated of them to do. It is hoped that they will soon settle claims due to railway accidents and that they will do so sympathetically and in the national spirit. In the past our experiences have been very bad. In the past those unfortunate deads have been spirited away to the boilers in the railway factories.

I am talking of the past. It has nothing to do with my honourable and esteemed friend, Dr. Matthai. I am talking of the past that he has inherited. The dead or half injured in a Railway accident have been burnt in railway engines and in railway workshops' boilers. Their names have not been traced and thousands have become orphans and widows. The dependants are starving still because a foreign Government denied them those compensations that they should have got. I hope lawyers will not preponderate there too! The Claims Commissioners will establish justice with humanity and will settle up such claims so that no harassed dependants suffer as they have suffered under the Britishers in the past.

With these few observations, I support the motion for reference to Select Committee.

Mr. Frank Anthony (C.P. and Berar: General): It is only a little while ago that I began to study this Bill and my first impression, particularly with regard to the proposal for Claims Commissioners, was not a happy one. In spite of what my friend, Mr. Das has just had to say about lawyers and the unnecessary waste of time in the proceedings and the harassment to claimants, I feel that this provision has the potentialities of a great deal of mischief. Obviously under the proposed provisions these Claims Commissioners will be appointed by the Central Government. They will be nothing if they will not be executive officers! As such they will dance inevitably to the tune of the Executive.

I feel, Sir, that in an independent India this provision is an unhealthy and retrograde step. The settlement of claims for personal injury for example, are claims which must be adjudicated upon by a judicial body. We are seeking today definitely to separate executive from judicial functions. In that alone, this particular provision, I submit, is retrograde, because judicial functions are now being sought to be placed within the competence of executive, and perhaps junior executive officers. Even the potential mischief of this provision could be limited if section 82(h) relating to appeal and revision was altered. On the other hand the provision with regard to interim payments, if it is decided to keep Commissioners, is salutary, because where widows are involved, they may need money and if there is some interim settlement, it may be of help. I may be inclined to accept this provision for Claims Commissioners provided this provision with regard to appeal and revision is done away with. I am not at all satisfied with this provision which gives an aggrieved person the right of appeal only to the Central Government. The Central Government in this place presumably will be represented by the Railway Minister, and my own experience of the Central Railway administration is a most unhappy one. I am afraid the railway administration is nurtured in the tradition of putting its rubber stamp on anything. If a Claims Commissioner arbitrarily, or because he thinks he ought to find favour, gives a decision, I fear that the Railway Minister, because he thinks that the Claims Commissioner is one of his own men, will endorse his decision.

In this particular instance I do not know how it can be managed, whether the appeal or the revision can still lie to one of the regular courts. If that is done, any possibility of mischief, in the fact that these commissioners are executive officers, can be largely limited. Sir, that is all I have to say.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai (Minister for Railways and Transport): Sir, most of the matters which have been raised in the course of the discussion are matters which I think might appropriately be left over for consideration by the Select Committee to whom this Bill is being referred. But certain matters of a fundamental character have been raised, to which I would like to make a brief reference before the Bill is remitted to the Select Committee.

The most important point which has been raised in the course of the discussion is the point which my honourable friend Pandit Kunzru raised and that is whether the Bill is not conferring upon the tribunal powers in excess of what they should be given consistently with the public interest. This is a point which has given me a great deal of anxiety. On a review of all the considerations bearing upon this problem I ultimately decided that, at any rate, in the Bill which I place before the House I would give the tribunal the final voice in the determination of the extent to which freight rates should be increased, and divest myself of any power in regard to that matter, except for such influence as I can bring to bear upon that tribunal through a proper presentation of my case on behalf of the Ministry of Railways. It is a matter on which it is reasonable to expect that there would be wide differences of opinion. I decided to take this step because as a student of railway rates policy and administration in the past and as a result of my own experience as Minister in charge of Railways I have come to the conclusion that the railways have a good deal to gain and possibly little to lose if they could in matters affecting the increase of freight rates secure the support of some authority, which would be accepted as a disinterested authority in this matter.

My honourable friend Pandit Kunzru raised the perfectly legitimate point "Would you do this with regard to proposals which may be put forward by the

[Dr. John Matthai].

Finance Minister in the matter of taxation, would you do it in regard to proposals of a similar kind which may be put forward by other Ministries of the Government?" It is a legitimate point to raise. My reply to that question is that there is all the difference in the world between the railways as a department of the Government and other departments. The fact of the matter is that the railways are a business concern, from whatever point of view you look at it and the question which the House has to consider is this. When you determine the prices which a business concern engaged in an essential form of public utility service and placed in a monopolistic position is going to charge, is it right that Government as the sovereign body in the country acting in the capacity of manager should have the final voice in its determination? The way I look at it—and I am perfectly willing to listen to the other side of the case when it is presented in the Select Committee—is this. Here is a big nationalised concern whose activities affect every aspect of the national economy. We raise our freight rates we lower our freight rates and every increase and every reduction are bound to have its repercussions on the national economy. Now is it altogether right, is it in the public interest that I should reserve to myself the final authority in regard to that matter? As I try to visualise the situation as it will arise when the Tribunal is seized of a particular matter referred to it and the way in which it will function, it would be somewhat as follows: If it is a really competent body composed of people who have been in the habit of weighing evidence and coming to disinterested conclusions, in matters that come before it for consideration it would have to take two essential factors into account. One is, what is going to be the reaction of these particular proposals upon the national economy, upon trade, industry and agriculture. That would be one consideration which they would in the nature of things have to take into account. The other consideration is: Would this particular business concern run by Government be able to maintain its solvency, if the proposal put forward by them was not accepted? I cannot imagine that a Tribunal of the kind that we are setting up would not take into account both these considerations in arriving at a settlement of the issues placed before it. I have every confidence that as far as the railway's case is concerned, if I put up a proposal for an increase in freight rates I can convince a competent body of that kind. If I fail—I am looking at it purely as a business proposition—if I am unable to satisfy a Tribunal of that kind I would come back and re-examine my proposals. When I say the Tribunal has to take into account whether its decision will affect the solvency of the railways, what I mean by solvency is, they would have to consider whether without an increase in freight rates the railways would be able to meet their working expenses, their overhead charges, their interest charges, their depreciation and a reasonable allocation to reserve. If the Tribunal applies its mind to this question, as it inevitably must, because it is very relevant to the whole issue, and if they come to the decision that the proposal that I have made is not essential for that purpose, then it seems to me, as a responsible Minister it is my duty to re-examine the basis on which I made my original proposals.

It occurred to me as I was listening to my honourable friend Pandit Kunzru that what was troubling him, especially in view of the analogy which he drew between the railways and other departments of Government, was not the financial solvency of the railways as a business concern but whether, if Government decided that the railways should be used in a particular emergency for a contribution to the general revenues of the country, in the interests of public finance that might not be a consideration which the Tribunal would take into account.

It is a perfectly legitimate question to consider. But it raises, as the House will realise, an issue of very great importance. It is ultimately for this House to decide what line to take with regard to a matter of such fundamental importance. As I say, I keep an open mind on that question, and I am prepared to have the matter examined over again by the Select Committee. My own reaction to the whole problem is this. Suppose without an increase in the freight rates, that is to say, on the basis of the existing freight rates, I am able to meet my working expenses, overhead charges, interest charges, depreciation and a reasonable allocation of reserve—and over and above that, as a result perhaps of increase in the quantum of traffic what I receive is more than the interests of the railways require—then it would be a legitimate thing for the House to demand that a certain portion of it should be allocated to general revenues. But if on the existing rates you are not able to provide for a contribution to general revenues, then is it right to consider an increase in freight rates in order to make that contribution possible? It raises the fundamental issue, namely, are you going to regard a nationalised transport industry as a legitimate source of revenue for general purposes? That is the question with which we shall be faced. I do not want on behalf of Government to commit myself on this question because the House will have opportunities at one time or another to consider it. The position in countries where nationalisation has been adopted on a large scale such as Russia is that in fixing the prices of products manufactured by such industries they make a certain addition as a contribution to general revenues. Probably we shall be faced with that situation ourselves. If we are to adopt nationalisation on a large scale, the question whether we shall get all the revenue we want from private enterprise is a problem which is bound to face us. It is a legitimate thing for nationalised industries to fix prices at a level which would not merely cover their normal expenditure but would provide a contribution to revenues. But the question arises, whether, there are not certain categories of industries—essential public utilities—which shall be left out when charges are made simply for the purpose of adding to general revenues. Would you be justified in raising school fees in state schools in order that, that may render the revenue position of government better? Would you do that in regard to hospitals? Now, in regard to railway service, is there any fundamental distinction between it and other essential public utility services? As far as I can see, for a long time to come, in view of the great need for industrialisation in this country, it is in the public interest that the rates we charge for railway transport should be kept at as low a level as possible, consistently with the financial solvency of the railways. That is entirely a personal view. But as I say, I am prepared to keep an open mind on this question. If the Select Committee and the House consider that we ought to proceed on other lines, if they think that Government should be invested with larger powers in these matters I shall have no objection, in fact it would make my path easier. What I have done is to choose the path of greater resistance. I had a particular reason for doing so, apart from the general considerations to which I have referred. It is easy for an organisation like the Indian railways, brought up under traditions which have not altogether been of a wholesome character to solve its financial difficulties by increasing freight rates rather than, by enforcing economies. It would therefore have a restraining influence upon the railway organisation to be committed to this position that they cannot increase freight rates unless their proposals are accepted by an independent judicial body.

My honourable friend referred to the question of terminal charges. That is rather a minor matter and I should be prepared to explain to him the position when the matter comes up before the Select Committee.

[Dr. John Matthai]

Another important matter of a fundamental character was raised regarding the composition of the Tribunal. As my honourable friend Mr. Santhanam pointed out in the original proposal that was placed before the Standing Finance Committee our idea was that the Tribunal should be composed of a person of judicial or legal experience as Chairman with two members representing railway experience and business experience respectively. But the Standing Finance Committee held strongly that the composition of the Tribunal should be on the lines indicated here. Personally I was impressed with the arguments advanced by the Standing Finance Committee and in the end I decided to accept the recommendation of the Standing Finance Committee, and I took the responsibility of asking the Cabinet to accept it. It is in that form it has come here and I cannot improve on the arguments which my honourable friend Mr. Santhanam has already advanced in favour of this proposal.

There is one more point to which I would like to refer before I sit down. I think it was my honourable friend Mr. Himatsingka who said yesterday that if we were going to adopt a procedure for expediting the disposal of claims arising from accidents we might also consider the question of expediting the disposal of claims arising in respect of goods. Well, there is a fundamental difference between the two. The claims which arise in regard to theft or loss of goods are based on the assumption that the Railways' responsibility is the responsibility of a bailee. The railway incurs liability only if it is shown that the railway has failed to exercise the sort of reasonable care which a person of ordinary prudence would be expected to exercise. That is a matter which would require careful investigation. A procedure of this kind would be unworkable as far as goods claims are concerned. If you have to decide whether the railways have exercised reasonable care or not, you would not be able to do so without further examination.

My reply to the point raised by my honourable friend Mr. Frank Anthony is also that if you are going to take claims arising from accidents to court their disposal would take a longer time than they do now. My anxiety has been, considering the large number of cases that I have come across recently, that there must be some kind of procedure by which it would be possible to settle the claims of people whose needs are very great, particularly of those who have lost the bread-winners of the family, in the shortest possible time.

Mr. Speaker: I shall put the amendment to the House.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: There is a slight alteration to my amendment. With your permission and with the leave of the House I would like to add the name of Dr. Punjabrao Deshmukh in the list of members of the Select Committee. As you may remember, he said yesterday that agricultural interests should be represented. I have consulted the Honourable Minister about it and I understand he has no objection.

Mr. Speaker: That name has to be added?

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Yes, Sir.

Mr. Speaker: That makes the number thirteen!

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Suggest another name!

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: For another name I would suggest that of Chaudhari Ranbir Singh.

Dr. B. Pattabhi Sitaramayya (Madras: General): A secular State believing in the inauspiciousness of thirteen?

Mr. Speaker: I have no objection to these names. Has the Honourable Minister any objection?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I have no objection.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill be referred to a Select Committee consisting of The Honourable Dr. John Matthai, Shri K. Santhanam, Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena, Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru, Shri Moturi Satyanarayana, Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava, Shri S. K. Patil, Shri Biswanath Das, Dr. Bakshi Tek Chand, Dr. V. Subramaniam, Prof. N. G. Ranga, Dr. P. S. Deshmukh, Ch. Ranbir Singh, and the Mover, with instructions to report on or before the 24th August, 1948, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: Before we adjourn, I have to state that a request has been made to me—and I understand it is supported substantially by the House—that the House may not sit tomorrow as it is the day for Raksha Bandhan. In deference to the wishes of the House, I accept it and the House shall not sit tomorrow.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock, Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

CONTINUANCE OF LEGAL PROCEEDINGS BILL

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar (Minister for Law): Sir, I move:

"That the Bill to provide for the continuance of certain legal proceedings by or against the Secretary of State, be taken into consideration."

I think it would be desirable in order to enable the House to know exactly why this measure has been brought forth to detail to the House as briefly as may be possible the circumstances that are lying behind this Bill. As the House is aware, before the 15th August 1947 there existed an entity or a legal corporation called "The Secretary of State" which was by law entitled to sue in respect of any right or liability arising out of what was known as "The Government of India". On the 15th August 1947, that entity came to an end or rather, was brought to an end by the Indian Independence Act. The Indian Independence Act, however, recognised that while the entity known as "The Secretary of State" was brought to an end, and had to be brought to an end, there were certain proceedings which were pending in courts of law in the name of the Secretary of State in Council and consequently, the Independence Act, Section 15, sub-clause (2), gave power to the Governor-General to provide by order that these suits and proceedings shall be continued in the name of some other entity. Accordingly, the Governor-General issued an order under the provisions of the Indian Independence Act making provisions for the continuance of the proceedings that were then pending against the Secretary of State. The order is known as the Indian Independence (Rights, Property and Liabilities) Order, 1947, and was issued on the 14th of August 1947. Article 12(3) of that order made provision specifically for the continuance of the legal proceedings. Unfortunately, in the hurry of the moment, what happened was that this Article 12(3) only provided for the continuance of those suits where the suits involved the liability of undivided India or a part thereof. It failed to make any provision with respect to the right which the Secretary of State may have to continue proceedings against any party against which the right was claimed. It is to meet this defect in the Act that the present Bill has been brought forth. It is said that there are some suits pending in courts in India where what is involved is not the liability of the Secretary of State but the right. One such case is mentioned in the Statement of Objects and Reasons. It is pending in Bihar. But the Government of India has also been told that there are some other similar cases where a question of right as distinguished from liability is involved. In order to meet this difficulty, the Government of India had already issued an Ordinance on the 20th May 1948 to make provision for the continuance of the proceedings in which the rights of the Secretary of State were involved and what this Bill does is to convert the Ordinance into law. I do not think any further explanation is necessary. As Honourable Members will see, this is a very simple measure, a necessary one, and I believe, non-contentious. I commend this measure to the House.

[Dr. B. R. Ambedkar]

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill to provide for the continuance of certain legal proceedings by or against the Secretary of State, be taken into consideration."

Shri Prabhu Dayal Himatsingka (West Bengal: General): Mr. Speaker, I have one point to make about this Bill, Sir.

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid the honourable member is a bit too late. I have put the motion to the House.

Shri Prabhu Dayal Himatsingka: I did not know that you were putting it to the vote. Just for the consideration of the Honourable Minister I wish to make one point.

Mr. Speaker: I think the honourable member may raise that question when we come to the clause by clause stage.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: Clause by clause discussion now. What particular clause did the honourable member refer to?

Shri Prabhu Dayal Himatsingka: Clause 3, Sir.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, I propose to put all the Clauses together as there are no amendments.

Shri Prabhu Dayal Himatsingka: Shall I make my submission and then it will be for the Honourable Minister to see? We find from the statement made by the Honourable Minister that this Bill is being introduced to provide for the continuation of certain rights that might be subsisting in the Secretary of State and for which suits may be pending in certain courts. So far as the liabilities of the Secretary of State are concerned, that has been provided for in the Indian Independence (Rights, Property and Liabilities) Order, 1947, but this Bill is intended to deal with rights only. Therefore, I cannot follow why in clause 3(b) (ii) it is said:

"(ii) if the right in question was that of the former Province of Bengal or the Punjab, be continued by or against the Province of West Bengal or East Punjab, as the case may be;"

If it is a question of right, there cannot be a proceeding against the Province of Bengal. It must be by the Province of Bengal. The word "against" can only be possible if there is a question of liability of the province, and so far as the Independence Act is concerned, it has been provided therein, as far as I know,—I have not got it here—that in the case of liabilities of undivided Bengal they have been cast on East Bengal (Pakistan) because that is the major portion and the liabilities for the Punjab have been cast on West Punjab. Therefore, "against" West Bengal or "against" East Punjab should not be there, because it is only a case of providing for certain rights of the Secretary of State. That is my only submission in this connection.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I have not quite followed.

Shri Prabhu Dayal Himatsingka: The position is this. There cannot be a suit against a province in connection with certain rights that the Government had. It can only be a suit by the province or by the Government.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): With regard to clause 3, last line and one word before, "be continued by or against that province" should, I submit, be brought out separately. The introduction begins at the beginning of the clause "Any legal proceedings, which immediately before the appointed day..." As it is printed, it seems to be appertaining to part (iii) of sub-clause (b) only. Therefore in order to obviate all misunderstanding at the time of printing this should be separated and printed so as to show that it governs all the sub-clauses.

Mr. Speaker: That seems to be the position even now. I have not followed. That may be done at the time of printing.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): As I understand my honourable friend in the Statement of Objects and Reasons both rights and liabilities are referred to, but here the right alone is referred. So liability may be added. That is all that is necessary. I am reading the Statement of Objects and Reasons: "Section 15(2) of the Indian Independence Act, 1947, provides inter alia that any legal proceedings by or against the Secretary of State in respect of any right or liability of the undivided India or any part thereof,....." I think by some inadvertence the word "liability" is not used here whereas in clause 3(b), it is said: "were in respect of any right of India or any part of India, shall.....". So, if we add the words "or liability" after the word "right" wherever it occurs, that will satisfy the needs.

Shrimati G. Durgabai (Madras: General): If only the word "right" is mentioned, the word "against" may be deleted.

Mr. Speaker: What part is he referring to?

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: I am referring to Section 3, clause (b) which reads as follows: "Any legal proceedings which immediately before the appointed day,—(b) were in respect of any right of India or any part of India, shall, (i) if the right in question was that of the Governor General in Council, be continued by or against the Dominion of India;". If there is a right in the Dominion of India there is no suit against the Dominion of India; it is a liability. Therefore "be" is all right. If a suit by the Dominion of India is by virtue of a right, a suit against the Dominion of India is by virtue of a liability. Now this will be clear on a reference to line 3 in the Statement of Objects and Reasons where both rights and liabilities are contemplated. If there is a right of suit it will be by the Dominion of India and if there is a liability it will be against the Dominion of India. Therefore in clause 3(b), in parts (i), (ii) and (iii), after the word "right" the words "or liability" may be added.

Mr. Speaker: I am not very clear about that. It seems there is some confusion. The honourable member will refer to the Statement of Objects and Reasons where the words "right or liability" occur in line 3, before statement as to the locus in the provisions of the Indian Independence (Rights, Property and Liabilities) Order. But, later on, at page 2 it is stated: "This Article does not cover proceedings in respect of any right of the undivided

[Mr. Speaker.]

India". So far as liabilities are concerned, the matter is covered. Looking to the Statement of Objects and Reasons this particular Bill, appears to have been brought only for the purposes of curing this defect in respect of rights of the undivided India and if that is taken into consideration, the language does not seem to go against that purpose. I do not know what the object of the draftsman was.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I think the word as it stands is perfectly right. As I stated we are dealing only with "right". The question of liability has already been provided for. Now, why the word "right" is there? Why it should be there will be clear if my honourable friends will bear in mind two points. We are dealing with legal proceedings. We are not dealing with suits only, which means that legal proceedings may also include an appeal. Suppose for instance, there is a suit disposed of. The Secretary of State wants an appeal to be made or filed. This appeal may be based upon some right which he may claim. Secondly even if a suit is filed against the Secretary of State, the defence of the Secretary of State may involve a right, which vests in him. Therefore my submission is that the word "right" is there and ought to be there.

Mr. Speaker: That seems to be the correct position. The point seems to be that even in respect of rights, there may be proceedings against the Secretary of State. Then, it need not necessarily be "by". There is one other point which I believe Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad has made out and that will be borne in mind at the time of printing. It is a question more or less of printing.

Shri K. Santhanam (Madras: General): Sir, with reference to "liability", the suit can be continued, against the Secretary of State or the Government of India and no Bill is needed to continue those legal proceedings. It is where legal proceedings cannot be instituted or continued because of the right of the Government of India that the operation of the present Bill comes in. Therefore, I do not think the defence is quite convincing.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member goes to the root of the whole thing. This Bill is merely for the purposes of procedure. I think the "right" is there not for the purpose of establishing the right. If the right is there, then the difficulty arises about enforcing that right through legal proceedings. Therefore, the Bill becomes a necessity. The other point will be one for the printer and we shall invite attention to that point later on.

The question is:

"That clauses 2 to 5 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 2 to 5 were added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and the Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: Sir, I move:

"That the Bill be passed."

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill be passed."

The motion was adopted.

DISPLACED PERSONS (INSTITUTION OF SUITS) BILL

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar (Minister for Law): Sir, I move:

"That the Bill to make certain special provisions for the institution of suits by displaced persons, be taken into consideration."

Sir the Government of India some time ago received various representations from persons interested in what are called evacuees, who have come out from Pakistan to India, to the effect that they find it extremely difficult to have their claims adjudicated by courts in India. Now, there are several cases which have to be considered in giving relief to these evacuees. Obviously, there are two cases which one can think of. One is a case where the cause of action has arisen in Pakistan, the plaintiff has come over to India and the defendant is still in Pakistan. Then, we have a second case, namely, that as before, the cause of action has arisen in Pakistan, the plaintiff has come over to India, and the defendant is residing in India. The Department considered whether it was possible to bring forth any measure in order to give relief to the plaintiffs who are evacuees in both those cases.

It is obvious that unless certain conditions are satisfied, it is not possible to give relief to an evacuee plaintiff who has come over to India, but the defendant against whom he has a claim is in Pakistan. The reason why it is not possible to give relief in a case like this is because it would be almost impossible to execute a judgment or decree given by our courts against a defendant who was not present before the court and who is a resident of Pakistan. Unless and until the Government of India and the Government of Pakistan agree to issue notifications under section 44-A of the Civil procedure Code, agreeing mutually that the decrees given by the courts of one dominion will be executed by the other dominion, such a decree would be a fruitless thing and of no value.

The case which I said is of the second type stands on a different footing. Because, on the assumption that the defendant against whom the plaintiff wants to sue is a resident of India, it would be perfectly possible for the Government of India by law to make a provision that such a plaintiff may be entitled to sue because the defendant is within the territory of India, subject to the jurisdiction of the courts of India, and can therefore be made to accept the decree passed by the court. The Bill, as introduced, makes provision for the second case. Its requirements are that the plaintiff must be a displaced person, the defendant must not be a displaced person, but the defendant must be a resident in India. The purpose why this is done is because, it is represented that the evacuees who are staying in India today, on account of their poverty and their pecuniary condition cannot proceed from the place where they are staying to the place where the defendant is staying and sue him there as required by the Civil Procedure Code. In order to grant relief to the plaintiff, the Bill provides that the plaintiff, contrary to the provisions of Section 20 of the Civil Procedure Code, may file a suit against the defendant who is residing in India, in the place where the plaintiff resides. That is all that the Bill as it stands does. The Bill also makes certain amendments in the law of limitation.

It has been suggested by members of the legislature who are acquainted with the conditions of the evacuees, that there are certain other cases, which also require to be provided. I have examined those cases and I feel that there is sufficient justification for introducing certain amendments to meet these cases. I shall do so when you will take the Bill clause by clause. For the moment, this is the purpose of the Bill namely to permit the evacuee plaintiffs to file suits, contrary to the provisions of section 20 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in the place where they reside and not in the place where the defendants reside.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill to make certain special provisions for the institution of suits by displaced persons, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 2 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 2 was added to the Bill.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: With your permission, Sir, I move the following amendment:

"That for clause 3 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

3. Institution of suits by displaced persons.—(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in section 20 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 (V of 1908) or in any other law relating to the local limits of the jurisdiction of Courts or in any agreement to the contrary, a displaced person may institute a suit in a court within whose jurisdiction he or the defendant or any of the defendants, where there are more than one, actually and voluntarily resides, or carries on business, or personally works for gain if—

- (i) the defendant, or where there are more than one, each of the defendants, actually and voluntarily resides, or carries on business, or personally works for gain in India, and is not a displaced person;
- (ii) the cause of action wholly or in part arises or has arisen, in a place now situate within the territories of Pakistan;
- (iii) the court in which the suit is instituted is otherwise competent to try it; and
- (iv) the suit does not relate to immovable property.

(2) Any suit instituted by a displaced person after the 15th day of August 1947, which if this Act had come into force on that day, would have been validly instituted in pursuance of sub-section (1) of this section shall, unless such suit has been finally disposed of before the commencement of this Act, be deemed to have been validly instituted and be disposed of accordingly."

Sir, the new amendment deals with two cases, which have been brought to my notice. The first is that in certain cases where the cause of action would arise in Pakistan, an agreement had been made, or is usually made, between the plaintiff and the defendant that the suit shall be filed in Lahore or in some court now situated within the Dominion of Pakistan. It is obvious that if such an agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant were to continue to have the effect which it would have if there had not been partition, it is quite clear that it would not be possible for a displaced person to file a suit against a defendant, although according to the main provisions of the Bill, the defendant is residing in India and is not a displaced person. Therefore I think it is desirable that the provision of such an agreement should be nullified in order that the plaintiff should obtain the benefit of the law which we are now making.

The second thing is this. It is rather surprising but I am told it is a fact that although there was no such provision in any part of the Civil Procedure Code some displaced persons who had come to India had filed suits against defendants in India although those suits were contrary to the provisions of section 20 of the Civil Procedure Code. It is said this was no doubt done in ignorance, but that ignorance should now be condoned and the Act should be given retrospective effect so that suits filed before the passing of this Act should also be deemed to have been validly filed. Our intention being to give as ample relief to displaced persons as we possibly can and in view of the introduction of these two new provisions in the amending clause that I am submitting to the House I hope the House will not find any difficulty in accepting this new clause.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That for clause 3 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

3. Institution of suits by displaced persons.—(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in section 20 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 (V of 1908) or in any other law relating to the local limits of the jurisdiction of Courts or in any agreement to the contrary, a displaced person may institute a suit in a court within whose jurisdiction he or the defendant or any of the defendants, where there are more than one, actually and voluntarily resides, or carries on business, or personally works for gain if—

- (i) the defendant, or where there are more than one, each of the defendants, actually and voluntarily resides, or carries on business, or personally works for gain in India, and is not a displaced person;
- (ii) the cause of action wholly or in part arises or has arisen, in a place now situate within the territories of Pakistan;
- (iii) the court in which the suit is instituted is otherwise competent to try it; and
- (iv) the suit does not relate to immovable property.

(2) Any suit instituted by a displaced person after the 15th day of August 1947, which if this Act had come into force on that day, would have been validly instituted in pursuance of sub-section (1) of this section shall, unless such suit has been finally disposed of before the commencement of this Act, be deemed to have been validly instituted and be disposed of accordingly."

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): Sir, the right that is conferred in this Bill is an exceptional right. Normally when a suit is to be filed it is not left to the choice of the plaintiff to file it wherever he likes. It depends on two considerations: (a) where the defendant resides, and (b) where the cause of action wholly or in part arises. Neither of these two conditions may be satisfied by a plaintiff who is a refugee. If the cause of action has arisen in Pakistan he cannot go and file a suit there. As for the defendant's place of residence it may be anywhere right down to Cape Comorin and he will have to run about and find the place. Therefore it is an enabling measure and I am sure its operation will be only for a temporary period. I do not, however, find any limitation of time or period during which this will be in operation. I realise that some latitude should be given to persons who have come away from Pakistan to enable them to file suits wherever they are. They may be transferred, they may be settled in Madras or West Bengal. The cause of action may have arisen elsewhere in Pakistan and a suit may be filed against a resident of Bihar in a Bengal court. But how long is this to be allowed? Should it be indefinitely or as long as the cause of action lasts? Supposing there is a period of ten years; he may file a suit in ten years. Why should he wait and not seek the place where the defendant resides and then proceed against him? The Honourable Minister has to satisfy us that unlimited time should be provided. We can give this privilege only according to circumstances for a short period of time, i.e., one or two years as the case may be.

Secondly, this Bill consists of two portions: first, the forum or place where the suit is filed; that is covered by clause 3. Secondly, even if he was not able to file a suit within the prescribed time, time is allowed notwithstanding Limitation Act, section 3, to cover the intermediate period. There are many such provisions in the Limitation Act where by fraud a man has been kept away from the knowledge of the fraud of the defendant. These are exceptional circumstances. This I agree is an exceptional circumstance where such limitation ought not to be strictly enforced against a plaintiff on account of the adverse circumstances in which he had to flee from his place. But even with respect to that there must be a limitation in point of time.

[Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar]

No doubt power may be given to the court to find out whether there is sufficient justification or not about the period. But if the Honourable Minister feels that this is too vague a concession which sometimes is likely to be abused, a limit of time has to be imposed,—a year or two within which everything must settle down.

Sir, I am extremely glad that the Honourable Minister has thought it proper to bring this Bill which is a very necessary measure to help the refugees for whom various other steps are being taken by Government.

Shrimati G. Durgabai (Madras: General): Sir, with regard to the point about limitation it is clear from clause 4 that the normal period of limitation is in operation, and only in exceptional cases is that period waived. "When the plaintiff satisfies the Court that he was unable to institute the suit within such period owing to causes connected with his being a displaced person"—it is only then that he is given some kind of relief. Otherwise, as I read the clause, the normal period of limitation is to be followed.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): Sir, I find that my amendments in list No. 1 have been incorporated in this amendment. With regard to this I have two suggestions to make. The word "Court" has been spelt in two places with small letters. Somehow or other the Law Ministry has a poor idea of Courts and want to belittle their importance. I think in the Civil Procedure and Criminal Procedure Codes and other Acts the word "Court" always begins with a capital letter. I think it is rather a slip of the pen.

I would suggest that one word should be introduced in part (i) of sub-clause (1) for "the defendant, or where there are more than one" I should say "..... more than one defendant". That should make the sense complete. Otherwise there would be a gap. As it is, it is intelligible, but it is the custom to fill up such gaps and not to leave them as if it is in correspondence between one friend to another.

These are the two suggestions I have to make. This is by way of amendment because this has been circulated here. I therefore, beg to move:

"That in the proposed amendment to clause 3, in part (i) of sub-clause (1) after the words 'more than one', the word 'defendant' be inserted."

That is the short notice amendment which I beg to move.

Mr. Speaker: It does not appear to be strictly necessary.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: That is a matter for the House to consider.

Mr. Speaker: I may remind the honourable member that, that expression also occurs in the preamble part of the clause. There also the same amendment will be necessary. Is he then particular that I should put it to the House?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I would ask the Honourable Minister to consider it.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Then I do not press it.

Mr. Speaker: There are a couple of points on which I believe some clarification is necessary. Perhaps the position is not clear to me.

In part (i) sub-clause (1) of the amendment it is provided that ".....where there are more than one, each of the defendants, actually and voluntarily resides.....", then only he can file a suit. In the main clause it is enough if any one of the defendants resides in India.

From the opening part of sub-clause (1) the idea seems to be that—

".....a displaced person may institute a suit in a court within whose jurisdiction he or the defendant or any of the defendants, where there are more than one, actually and voluntarily resides, or carries on business, or personally works for gain.....".

But in part (i) thereof in the proposed amendment, the word used is "each".

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: In the revised list, it is "any".

Mr. Speaker: So I put it as "any" and not as "each".

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: It has been taken verbatim from Section 20 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The word "each" is all right.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the honourable member did not follow my difficulty. But that has now been cleared by the Law Minister. When I put the amendment, I shall use the word "any" instead of "each".

I now go to sub-clause (2) of the proposed clause 3 which says:

".....unless such suit has been finally disposed of....."

What happens if a suit is decided before this Act comes into force and the period of limitation for appeal has not expired? The person against whom a case is decided may or may not have filed an appeal.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: This does include an appeal.

Mr. Speaker: Then what is the meaning of the words "finally disposed of"?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: It has resulted in a decree, or order, or dismissal.

Mr. Speaker: My point was that a final disposal of a suit may be in an appeal, and therefore the word "finally" created a difficulty in my mind.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: Well, if that is so, Government has no objection if "suit" includes "appeal".

Mr. Speaker: But the "suit" would include an "appeal", and it is desirable that even at the appeal stage, it should not be contended that the suit was not properly instituted. Will this section cover that contingency?

The difficulty I was feeling was that a suit is disposed of by the first Court and an appeal is not filed actually before the date this Act begins: then what will be the position if the person wants to file an appeal within the period of limitation but after the Act comes into force.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: A suit does not include an appeal under the Civil Procedure Code. Execution no doubt has been held to be a continuity. So far as a suit is concerned it must be filed within the period under the Limitation Act. Of course, there is a provision to say that 'I was prevented by a certain cause'. Now, so far as "each" is concerned, does your copy say "each" or "any"?

Mr. Speaker: That has been disposed of. I am referring to sub-clause (2).

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: I am coming back to part (i) with your permission, because you are trying to change "each" to "any". "each" is used in the Civil Procedure Code as at present, and "each of the defendants" is the expression used in respect of which no controversy has arisen. There is no need to correct "each" to "any". My submission is that it is unnecessary.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I think Mr. Ayyangar has forgotten that there is a proviso which says that a suit may be filed with the permission of the Court. We are dispensing with the permission of the Court. That is why the word "any" is necessary.

Mr. Speaker: Let us be clear. I could not understand the implication of the word "finally", unless the implication was that an appeal is a continuation of a suit.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: Provided an appeal is filed! A suit, ordinarily, according to the definition in the Civil Procedure Code, does not include an appeal. Therefore once a suit is dismissed or decreed, it is a final disposal of the suit.

Mr. Speaker: Even when an appeal is filed! It would perhaps be that an appeal would be barred; if the appeal was not filed before this Act came into force. That was my difficulty, as the words in the clause are "unless such suit has been finally disposed of before the commencement of this Act..." There is the right of appeal. It has not been actually exercised by the filing of the appeal.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: But the period is there!

Mr. Speaker: What happens to such a suit? Is my difficulty clear to the Honourable Minister?

Shri K. Santhanam: The appeal will be barred as it is!

Mr. Speaker: That is how it appears to me. In other cases it will not be. The appeal will include the suit in this particular section.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I think, Sir, the difficulty that you have pointed out can be resolved by adding an explanation to sub-clause (2) in some such words as the following: "A suit shall not be deemed to have been finally disposed of if the period prescribed for an appeal from any decision on the suit has not expired before the commencement of this Act."

Mr. Speaker: I was just thinking in a different way. If the words "unless such suit has been finally disposed of before the commencement of this Act" are deleted, the effect will be the same without having an explanation. The matter would then refer to the original institution of suits. The right of appeal would be there. Whatever it may be, if the Honourable Minister thinks that the position is clear, we might proceed or we might postpone the consideration of the Bill to another day.

Dr. Bakhshi Tek Chand (East Punjab: General): I think the suggestion made from the Chair is the proper solution and should be adopted. There may be three possible cases, first, if the suit has been decided by the first court and the period of appeal has expired and no appeal could be filed, the suit has been finally disposed of and there is an end of the matter. Then there is the second class of cases in which a suit has been decided by the trial court and an appeal has been filed within the period of limitation. The appeal is pending and the matter is again sub judice. Therefore we cannot say that the suit has been finally disposed of. The third and intermediate class of cases is where the suit has been disposed of by the trial court and the period of limitation has not yet expired on the date on which the Act comes into force. What is to be done in such a case? In that case if we allow these words to remain a great deal of difficulty would arise and various interpretations may be put by different courts. If you omit these words then that class of cases would be saved. My submission is that the words "unless such suit has been finally disposed of before the commencement of this Act" should be deleted.

Mr. Speaker: The matter requires some consideration and if the honourable member is agreeable I am prepared to put off this matter till day after tomorrow.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: The suggestion which you, Sir, have been pleased to make is good enough. After all there is no question of principle involved. We are interested to see that these persons get the utmost benefit out of this. That is the point. That purpose would be served by dropping the words as suggested by you.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: What will happen if the words "unless such suit has been finally disposed of before the commencement of this Act" are removed? There are two classes of cases, one pending and the other disposed of. With respect of the disposed of suits would they not like to take advantage of this provision? If on account of a suit having been filed later without the help of this Act the suit is dismissed, could the person not request that the suit must be restored or reviewed? If the suit is pending the man can take advantage of this provision. You are giving retrospective effect. A suit has been disposed of in the sense that it ended in an appeal or dismissal. If it is a case of dismissal would it be possible for a person to come up and say let me get back to the original position?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Otherwise there will be no relief.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: A judge may on account of excess of work dispose of a case until the Act is passed, in which case the person concerned is saved. There may be the case of another judge who disposed of a suit quickly by dismissing it, in which case the man goes to the wall. They are all displaced persons on account of various calamities. Why do you create a difference between one person and another. Give relief to all those persons who have suffered. There will be no harm if this matter is postponed till day after tomorrow: meanwhile we can come to an agreement.

Dr. Bakhshi Tek Chand: I do not think there will be many cases of the type which Mr. Ayyangar has in view. Most of the suits are still pending and if there are any suits which have been disposed of during the period they will fall under one or other of the categories which I mentioned. All those cases will be met. What actually happened in Pakistan and India in the partition was that up till February all suits against persons who were displaced were under departmental orders issued by the High Courts of Lahore and East Punjab kept pending until the end of February 1948. After February if any suit has been dismissed in most cases an appeal has been filed. The best thing would be to omit these words. I do not think any hardship will actually arise in any case. It is a measure which applies to a limited class of cases.

Mr. Speaker: It is now purely in the hands of the Honourable the Law Minister.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I agree with Dr. Bakhshi Tek Chand that it will not cause any difficulty.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: The dropping of this will leave out a class of persons who will be equally aggrieved. After the period of limitation and without the advantage of any extension of limitation his suit is dismissed. He is entitled equally to our sympathy. The man who takes care to come quickly to court, loses whereas the man who is tardy enough to wait till this Act is passed, gets our protection. If we proceed on any principle, the man who has instituted a suit earlier, and whose suit has been dismissed on the ground of limitation, is also equally entitled to our sympathy. If the suit is dismissed he should get all the benefits that we are extending to the man whose suit is still pending. That class of persons should not be excluded but should rather be included. The draft should be changed suitably. The exclusion of the words suggested would save a certain class of persons, but the other class of persons mentioned by my honourable friend Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar should also be included in the benefit and there is no reason why the question of hardship should not in their case be taken into consideration.

[Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad]

After all, these persons are displaced persons. They are helpless and the law tries to help them. The fact that it is on account of miscalculation of timing that he has lost his case should not make him lose our sympathy.

Mr. Speaker: Shall we postpone the matter?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I do not mind.

Mr. Speaker: Though the arguments of the two honourable members who just spoke do not appeal to me, there is no harm in postponing further discussion on this. Let us postpone consideration of the whole Bill rather than this particular clause. This matter will stand adjourned till day after tomorrow as the House is not meeting tomorrow. In the meanwhile, this aspect may be considered and proper amendments may be moved, if at all they are deemed to be necessary.

INDIAN REGISTRATION (AMENDMENT) BILL

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar (Minister for Law): Sir, I move:

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Registration Act, 1908, be taken into consideration."

Sir, this Bill makes two changes in the Indian Registration Act. One is to amend Section 88 and the other is to amend Section 17. Section 88 exempts certain government officials from appearing before the Registrar of Documents to admit the execution of their signatures on the documents. The section as it stands, specifies certain officers by their designations. It does not exempt other officers, nor does it give general powers to Government to notify which officers may be exempted. It is felt that besides giving general exemption to certain officers they should also be given a general power to exempt such officers as they think fit. This amendment is primarily brought on the ground that the attendance of officers before the Registrar for the purpose of admitting their signature causes certain amount of inconvenience to the officers which inconvenience could be easily avoided. That is the purpose of section 88.

The amendment to Section 17 refers to a different matter altogether. As the honourable House will remember, Section 17 of the Registration Act specifies certain documents which are compulsorily registrable. They must be registered. Otherwise they have no effect, nor can they be admitted in evidence in a court of law. In making certain documents compulsorily registrable, sub-section (2) of section 17 exempts certain documents from the operation of section 17. A vesting order passed by the Government under the Charitable Endowments Act of 1890 is not included in the exempted documents which are specified in sub-section (2) of section 17. It is felt that this order, vesting the property belonging to a charitable endowment, on the application of the trustees administering that trust, in the treasurer appointed under the Charitable Endowments Act ought really to be exempted, because strictly speaking it is not a document which creates any right in property or anything of the kind. Therefore such a document ought to be exempted.

The question whether an order passed by the Provincial Government under the Charitable Endowments Act, 1890, vesting the property in the treasurer is a document which falls within the purview of sub-clause (b) of clause (1) of section 17, has been a matter of controversy. There has been a difference of opinion. This difference of opinion arose as early as 1912 in a case in Bombay. As a measure of caution there, this document was treated as one which was compulsorily registrable. All the same, many people have felt that this document should not be treated as a document which is compulsorily registrable. It is to give effect to this opinion that this Bill seeks to amend Section 17 and the amendment specifically mentions the vesting order passed by a Provincial Government under the Charitable Endowments Act as one of the documents which are exempted under sub-section (2) of section 17.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Registration Act, 1908, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: We shall now take the Bill clause by clause.

The question is:

"That clauses 2 to 4 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 2 to 4 were added to the Bill.

Mr. Speaker: With regard to clause 5 I find a number of amendments by Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad. I take it that the attention of the Draftsman is to be invited. Is there any substantial one which he wishes to move?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): Yes. With regard to list No. 1, the attention of the draftsman is to be invited to amendment No. 2. With regard to amendments 1 to 3 in list No. 2 they relate to the same thing in different places. I shall move the other three amendments. Sir, I beg to move:

(i) "That in clause 5 of the Bill, in part (a) of sub-section (1) of the proposed section 88 of the Indian Registration Act, 1908, for the word 'Government', the words 'the Provincial Government' be substituted;"

(ii) "That in clause 5 of the Bill, in sub-section (2) of the proposed section 88 of the Indian Registration Act, 1908, for the word 'Government', the words 'the Provincial Government' be substituted;" and

(iii) That in clause 5 of the Bill, in sub-section (3) of the proposed section 88 of the Indian Registration Act, 1908, for the word 'Government', wherever it occurs, the words 'the Provincial Government' be substituted."

Sir, the clause deals with Provincial Governments and I think that it should be made absolutely clear. There is one passage in this clause where the Provincial Government is mentioned, namely Section 88, sub-section (1), part (d), at the end—"in that behalf by the Provincial Government". The words "Provincial Government" have been used in this context. So I believe that the officers of the Provincial Governments alone are considered. If we do not use the words "Provincial Government" and if we leave it as any officer of the Government, the result would be that officers of all Governments, Provincial and Central, would be meant whereas the Central Government is not at all contemplated in the amendment.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): The Central Government is not a Government—is it?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: The Central Government is certainly a Government. But here in the context we are concerned with the Provincial Governments only. That is absolutely clear from the purpose of the amendment. In fact, the Punjab Government made a representation that their officers should be exempt from appearance at the registration office. If the Central Government is also meant, then of course the word "Provincial" would be unnecessary. But there is the difficulty that in sub-section (1) at the end of part (d), the words "Provincial Government" have been used. This indicates that we are concerned only with the Provincial Government. If the Central Government is also to be included, then the words "Provincial Government" which are already in the text should be deleted, or if these words are to be retained, suitable consequential amendments should also be made in the four places suggested in my amendments.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: The word "Government" includes both Central and Provincial Governments. It is the intention that it should include both.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Then, Sir, may I ask one question? There is the expression "Provincial Government". Should that be deleted?

Mr. Speaker: No. The honourable member does not seem to have followed the scheme of the legislation. The Provincial Governments are being given definite power to exempt persons they like, by a notification to that effect in the Official Gazette. That seems to be the position where the words "Provincial Government" are used.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: Yes, Sir.

Mr. Speaker: So, I think the honourable member does not wish to press his amendments?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: All right, Sir. I do not wish to press my amendments.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 5 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 5 was added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and the Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: Sir, I move:

"That the Bill be passed."

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill be passed."

The motion was adopted.

INDIAN MATRIMONIAL CAUSES (WAR MARRIAGES) BILL

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar (Minister for Law): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill to confer upon Courts temporary jurisdiction in certain matrimonial causes, be taken into consideration."

Sir, this is a very small measure. It deals with the cases of Indian women professing the Christian religion who happened to marry foreigners who came to India during the period of the war, and whose husbands have since departed or left India and have practically no intention of returning to this country. This conduct on the part of the husbands is obviously tantamount to what is called desertion which entitles the Indian women who married them to divorce. Unfortunately, however, owing to the provisions contained in the Indian Divorce Act, it is not possible for our Courts in India to grant them divorce although the cause of action is present. The reason is that according to the provisions contained in the Indian Divorce Act, it is necessary that both parties to the marriage must have been domiciled in India at the time when the petition for divorce is filed. Obviously, that condition cannot be fulfilled in these cases. Consequently this Bill seeks to change that rule and to provide that notwithstanding the fact that the husband is not domiciled in India, the woman who has married him shall be entitled to obtain a decree of divorce in the Indian Courts. This is limited for a short period. I may say that this Bill is a mere replica of an Act passed in Great Britain for similar purposes, and I do not think it raises any controversial question at all.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): Under definitions, in clause 2 (c) the period is limited.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: Yes. And the marriage must have taken place within that period.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill to confer upon Courts temporary jurisdiction in certain matrimonial causes, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Shri K. Santhanam (Madras: General): Sir, even today suppose a Christian lady marries somebody who comes here as a tourist and goes away, what is the remedy? She will be in the same position as ladies who married during the war. So, I want to know why special legislation is necessary.

Shri K. Hanumanthaiya (Mysore State): I want to know another point. Sir, how many such ladies are there who have been put to this difficulty?

Mr. Speaker: I think that those questions do not really arise out of this Bill at all. There may be one or there may be a million.

I will take the Bill clause by clause. I find our friend Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad has given notice of some amendments.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): Sir, I am too late. Or rather, the Bill has been taken up too early rather unexpectedly.

Mr. Speaker: No, it is there on the agenda, and in the circumstances I shall be going against what I have declared very often here that unless the House is substantially agreed to, I would not permit an amendment not received in time. So there is no question of any amendments being moved now.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I shall make one or two suggestions for the acceptance of the House.

Mr. Speaker: I shall put the clauses to the House and then the honourable member may make suggestions without referring to his amendments. We will take up clauses 2 to 7.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I wish to draw the attention of the House to Clause 4. In line 3 of Clause 4, there is the passage, "any proceedings for divorce or for nullity of marriage". Should it not be, "for 'the' nullity of marriage"? I am not very clear about it myself; I ask the House and the Honourable Minister to consider it. The same passage appears once again in the Proviso to Clause 4.

In telegraphic correspondence or in friendly correspondence such sort of expression is very much to be tolerated but in a legislative enactment I think the word 'the' is called for. But it is a matter for the House to consider.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: I have got one or two doubts. You will see that in Clause 2(b), "marriage" includes a purported marriage which was void ab initio, and 'husband' and 'wife' shall be construed accordingly. If there is no marriage, why should there be a divorce? They are not husband and wife in law, though if an American came here and married during this period some girl who unwittingly entered into a marriage alliance with him and became his wife, because she is a domicile and our own national, we must relieve her. But there is no question of his coming here, and even if she were to marry without a divorce, he is not going to charge her with defamation. No doubt, to give her a legal divorce this legislation is quite necessary. But why should we help, and what is the difficulty with respect to a case where really there is no marriage, there is no husband and wife. They must have just gone to a cinema and talked leisurely. So there is really no marriage. Further, I do not find a similar definition in the Divorce Act. This is a new definition. I do not know what class of people the Honourable Minister intends to relieve by this definition of marriage.

Then, as regards clause 6, is it reciprocal? There may be many persons from England who might have likewise taken away some girls unwittingly and what about their difficulty? Therefore, are we having a similar measure in England? I would like a reciprocal measure, provided they are showing similar concessions to our people there. Otherwise, let us not be too generous in these matters.

These are the two points on which I would like to have some elucidation.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: With regard to the second point, namely, whether the provision contained in clause 6 of the Bill is reciprocal to anything done by the English law, my answer is in the affirmative. In fact, this Bill merely follows the recent Act passed by the British Parliament conferring similar powers. They have also given recognition to divorce and nullities that may be decreed by our courts of law.

With regard to the question of the definition of marriage in clause 2(b), the point is this, that where a marriage is void or voidable, it cannot be treated to have been finally dissolved unless there is a decree of the court. Decree of nullity means that the marriage was really void but the court must pronounce upon it as being void, the reason being that marriage creates status and a status cannot be dissolved automatically by parties voluntarily and of their own act. Divorce means that the marriage is valid, but that certain circumstances have supervened, which entitles one party to obtain release from the marital bond by which it was bound to the other party. Therefore, it is for that reason that we have included this: "purported marriage which was void....." For legal purposes it is a marriage unless it has been dissolved by a court. That is the difference between a decree of nullity and a decree of divorce.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: How does it not, then, find a place in the Indian Divorce Act, which is the Main Act and this is supposed to be supplementary to it. This definition of marriage is not there.

Mr. Speaker: One can imagine the object. I do not know what the Honourable Minister has in view, but I may just put it to the honourable member: There is a "purported" marriage. The husband is somewhere else. No other person will be willing to marry that woman unless she gets a decree from the court. She has to go to court even in the case of a "purported" marriage and I believe such cases do require consideration. That is what I imagine is the object. I do not know.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: indicated assent.

Mr. Speaker: So, the question is:

"That clauses 2 to 7 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 2 to 7 were added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and the Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: Sir, I move:

"That the Bill be passed."

Mr. Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the Bill be passed."

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Sir, I only want to say one word. I am only submitting to my honourable lady member friends here—they have always been under the impression that I am one of the conservatives in India—I want to tell them that I wholeheartedly support this measure which is intended to help such women who have unwittingly entered into marriage alliances.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill be passed."

The motion was adopted.

CENSUS BILL

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel (Minister for Home, Information and Broadcasting and the States): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill to provide for certain matters in connection with the taking of census, be taken into consideration."

As the House is aware, census has, up to now, been a periodical operation and at the end of every ten years a Census Act is passed to enable census to be taken in a particular year. This is an attempt to put a small piece of legislation on the Statute Book as a permanent measure.

There was a time when census was apt to be regarded as a mere formality yielding certain statistics—not very accurately prepared, obtained indifferently but tabulated very carefully. Now, this kind of census has caused immense injury on occasions when very important constitutional changes take place. As the House is aware, in the last constitutional changes we had to rely upon this census which was very imperfectly prepared. Even portions of India were partitioned, relying on the census which was very inaccurate. Experience has shown that occasions arise very often when we have to rely upon census figures, which, if not accurately prepared, lead to a result other than what is desired. As the world is progressing towards a scientific appreciation of an important operation of this nature, we think it is necessary to have a proper census prepared and for that purpose we should not rely upon periodical enumeration or operation of this nature, but we should have some kind of permanent process of enumeration and checks and counter-checks introduced, by which a correct census—a more or less accurate census—may be prepared and kept ready. For this purpose this is an attempt to put in a permanent piece of legislation on the Statute Book.

There is also another aspect of the census, which is very important. It is obvious that the census operation must largely centre round the house list. It is proposed to prepare the house lists in advance of the main census operation. The provinces have agreed to cooperate in this business. It is intended to keep these house lists up to date, so that except for the floating population there will be an estimate of population annually available to us. At present we base such annual estimates on the figures of the vital statistics which on account of their imperfections are not a safe guide. For the maintenance of these house lists alone, it would be necessary to have permanent legislation and I have explained to the House why we consider this permanent legislation necessary.

Now, in all essentials this legislation follows the previous pattern. As stated in the Statement of Objects and Reasons, the only material change is in the enhancement of the penalty or fine, in the making of an abetment of census offence punishable and in the provisions relating to the tampering of records and making it compulsory for persons nominated as Census Officers to serve in the capacity directed. As regards the first point, experience indicates that the penalty hitherto prescribed has not been sufficiently deterrent.

As regards the first point the Superintendents of Census operations are unanimous that the punishment is not as deterrent as it ought be. We also hope that such enhanced punishment would check sectional and communal rivalries which have come to light in the last few census operations. That rivalry was due to political considerations, but it may be that occasions may arise in future where inflated figures may be given by one group or the other and for that a sufficient check is found to be necessary.

The second point, namely the provisions relating to abetment needs no elaborate justification. As regards the third point, hitherto offences have been confined to the enumeration side. We propose to extend it to the other sides of the census operation also. We also want to make it obligatory on a person nominated as Census Officer to serve in that capacity. Experience has indicated that this provision is also necessary for the efficiency and orderly progress of the census operation.

Sir, I hope I have given sufficient indication of the justification of this measure and I now move.

Mr. Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the Bill to provide for certain matters in connection with the taking of census be taken into consideration."

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): Mr. Speaker, Sir, I want the scope of this Bill to be extended to States also. It must be an All India census. By special instrument of accession they can accede and give the power to the Central Government to take the census. That will steer clear of some of the difficulties. Though some communities are not able to multiply as quickly as other communities, the census is taken advantage of for bringing into existence a large number of children. That is unfortunately what happened in Bengal and other places some time ago. Very great care is necessary in this respect. All loop-holes must be avoided so that no minority community may get a larger number of seats. Of course the majority community is already there in divided India. All those who try to increase their number by merely census operations should be punished.

Hitherto census has been taken every ten years and an Act is passed. I welcome this measure, in that it is a permanent measure in the Statute Book instead of being for small periods of time or for smaller areas of operation. That is of vital importance. This measure was suggested long ago by some of the Census Officers who were in charge of the census operation. I am glad, Sir, that the Honourable Minister has chosen to bring forward this wholesome measure in this session. During the time of ancient kings census of cattle in different villages in Jamabhandi time and all similar census were being taken and collected. Provision may also be made on a rough and ready basis and directions may be given to have census during the interval and a final census once in ten years as has taken place hitherto. I welcome this measure; there are no controversial things here and the language has been carefully drafted except here and there, which may require some modifications. I support the motion for the consideration of the House.

[At this state Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair, which was then occupied by Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava one of the Panel of Chairmen].

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That the Bill to provide for certain matters in connection with the taking of census, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: Sir, I move:

"That after clause 1 of the Bill, the following new clause be inserted:

'1A. Interpretation.—In this Act, all references to the Provinces of India shall be construed as including reference to the Acceding States to which this Act for the time being extends, and in relation to any such Acceding State, all references to the Provincial Government shall be construed as references to the Government of that Acceding State.'

Shri K. Santhanam (Madras: General): Sir, I think the wording is a little defective; there should be a positive provision that it applies to the Acceding States.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: That will come later.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That after clause 1 of the Bill, the following new clause be inserted:

'1A. Interpretation.—In this Act, all references to the Provinces of India shall be construed as including reference to the Acceding States to which this Act for the time being extends, and in relation to any such Acceding State, all references to the Provincial Government shall be construed as references to the Government of that Acceding State.'

The motion was adopted.

New Clause 1A was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): There is only one amendment in clause 2; I do not wish to move it, but the draftsman's attention should be drawn.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: Sir, I move:

"That in clause 2 of the Bill, for the words 'in all or any of the Provinces or in any parts thereof', the following be substituted:

'in the whole or any part of the territories to which this Act extends'."

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That in clause 2 of the Bill, for the words 'in all or any of the Provinces or in any parts thereof', the following be substituted:

'in the whole or any part of the territories to which this Act extends'."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That clause 2, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 2, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Shri M. Thirumala Rao (Madras: General): In giving the main purpose for introducing this Bill, the Honourable Minister has given us the very defective nature of the census operations that are being carried out in India and how we have recently suffered on account of the defect in our census operations. Sir, we know that the Department has retained the services of Mr. M. W. M. Yeatts, I.C.S., who was supposed to be an expert in census operations for a long time. What I want, Sir, is that we should have a permanent Department of statisticians to see that accurate figures of the population, growth and decline is maintained in the records of the Government of India.

[Shri M. Thirumala Rao]

We must see that if Mr. Yeatts is an expert which he is claimed to be, he must train certain officers and statisticians and people who are well versed in this work. We know how in 1941 public bodies boycotted the census and for what cause, is well known. The Census should not be a periodical operation only; but it should be a regular operation from year to year, noting down how the trend of population is getting on in this country, with regard to its economic and public health and other activities. This is intimately connected with the development of the nation and what progress the country is making under the various progressive schemes that a national Government is expected to undertake. I therefore suggest that a department of statistics for the census should be maintained, with an expert at the head of the department, and with an army of officers that would be able effectively to deal with the large population of our country. I have to make this suggestion in connection with this clause.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: Sir, the post of the Census Commissioner has been specially created for this purpose. Mr. Yeatts the present Census Commissioner is an expert; he was going; we have kept him here. In all important posts requiring special knowledge or expert knowledge, we make it a condition that an officer, who is not an Indian, should, during the period of his stay, train an Indian officer so as to enable him to take his place when he goes. All these arrangements have been made.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That clauses 3 to 5 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 3 to 5 were added to the Bill.

Shri K. Santhanam: Sir, I move:

"That after part (b) of clause 6 of the Bill, the following new part be inserted:

'(c) all officers and members of staff of any factory, firm or establishment'."

Sir, the purpose of my amendment is obvious. It seeks to extend the scope of the Bill to people who could be enrolled for the purpose of the census operations.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: I have no objection to add this.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That after part (b) of clause 6 of the Bill, the following new part be inserted:

'(c) all officers and members of staff of any factory, firm or establishment'."

The motion was adopted.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Sir, I believe some consequential changes may be necessary in the later portion of the clause. In this case, the words, in respect of persons in the factory, firm or establishment will have to be added. These persons are called upon to give such assistance as shall be specified in the order towards the taking of census of the persons who are at the time on the lands of such owners, occupiers, tenure-holders and assignees, or in such factories or establishments. Possibly, this would follow as a consequence.

Mr. Chairman: Some consequential changes seem to be necessary.

Shri K. Santhanam: Here, I am referring to the members. These people will be summoned. In remote villages, the owners and occupiers of lands, tenure-holders and others are summoned. Here, as individuals, these people will be called upon.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: For what purpose? The manager is asked to give information about those persons who are employed in the factory. As it stands, the clause runs:

"(a) all owners and occupiers of land, tenure-holders, and farmers and assignees, etc."

The land owner is asked about the persons who are on the lands of the land owner. So far as the District Boards and Municipal Boards are concerned, the duty is imposed on them to give information in regard to persons in their employ. Now, we add a new category, factory, firm or establishment. There is no corresponding provision for that in the later operative portion. Both the categories of land owners and members of District and Municipal boards are repeated here. The new category does not find a corresponding place in the last portion, which is the operative portion.

Shri K. Santhanam: How is the second category repeated? It is only to give such assistance.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: For the areas for which local authorities are established. Therefore, both the clauses are once again referred to in the operative portion. You have added a third category in the earlier portion and omitted to bring them again in the latter portion. If you can kindly pass it over. I shall suggest a suitable amendment.

Mr. Chairman: Consistently with what you have added, we should have something like: "in the premises of such factory, firm or establishment."

Shri K. Santhanam: The word "occupiers" will also cover factories and establishments.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: That would mean census of all persons on the lands as occupiers. You must add the word "factory or other establishment."

Mr. Chairman: I would suggest that the words "in the premises of such factory, firm or establishment" may be added after the word "assignees".

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Shall I move it formally, Sir. I beg to move; Sir, with your leave:

"That in clause 6 of the Bill after the word 'assignees' occurring in line twelve the words 'or in the premises of factories, firms and other establishments' be inserted."

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That in clause 6 of the Bill after the word 'assignees' occurring in line twelve the words 'or in the premises of factories, firms and other establishments' be inserted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Chairman: The question is

"That clause 6, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 6, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Shri M. Thirumala Rao: Sir, I have a few remarks with regard to this clause. I think the proviso is not very helpful to the purpose of the Bill. The proviso reads:

"Provided that no person shall be bound to state the name of any female member of his household, and no woman shall be bound to state the name of her husband....."

I think a stage has come when we should dispense with this kind of superstition when a woman will not be willing to utter the name of her husband or a husband will not be willing to utter the name of the wife. There is also the danger of the purdah system coming into this; a large number of people may be kept in purdah and then it may be said that they cannot be seen and identified. But the enumerator has to take down certain names of people who are inside the purdah. That sort of evasion or mischief has to be effectively dealt with in this Bill and there is no provision for that. This proviso will not allow an accurate enumeration to be made and I suggest that it may be deleted.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Sir, I am sorry I have to differ from my honourable friend. I do not know if this census is another social reform measure. (An Honourable Member: 'It is.') No, it has come into existence for a different statistical purpose altogether. There is a custom of refusing to give the wife's or husband's name. But still there are others from whom these names can be got. I am sure the Honourable Minister with his vigilance will surely appoint a number of lady enumerators and census officers who will get into the households and before whom there will be absolutely no purdah. If the husband or wife refuses to utter the names, there are other people like sons or sisters and a number of people who will give these names. Let us not in a round-about manner try to do away with purdah but bring in a definite measure for that purpose if necessary.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I submit that in one sense the proviso is unnecessary. In fact women come to court and they are required to state their husband's name. The usual device is that some one mentions a name and asks the woman whether that is her husband's name and she answers in the affirmative. That is how things have been managed for a long time. But perhaps the Draftsman thinks that some overzealous officer may command a woman to give her husband's name. This is a safeguard against that; and there are penalty clauses under which if any one refuses or fails to answer questions he will be punishable under the law. So in order to prevent an unjust prosecution this proviso has been added.

Dr. B. Pattabhi Sitaramayya (Madras: General): Sir, I am afraid there is a misunderstanding. "No 'person' shall be bound to state the name of any female member of his household". The word 'person' here is supposed to mean a male person. You may sympathise with a man if he does not give the name of his wife but why should he not give his mother's name and his sister's name and his niece's name? This is meaningless and the clause must go. If you sympathise with the prevailing practice or custom, only the latter portion may remain and the former portion may be limited only to husband and wife. I remember a case which was narrated to me from East Bengal. There was some census and a man gave the names of 27 members. When the police went there and he was compelled to produce ration cards he could produce only four cards. The mistakes are there but how are you going to cover them. If you do not allow a person to mention the name of any woman in the household how are you going to get the names at all?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: Sir, this clause only provides a safeguard, as my honourable friend there stated, against a penalty which ought not to be imposed when a woman refuses to give the name of her husband or the husband refuses to give the name of the wife, as according to custom it may be forbidden. Also there are some people who would not disclose the name of the female members of the house, but other people in the family would give their names. These are people who are prevented by custom from taking the name of their son's wife. This clause provides a safeguard against penalty in such cases. But this clause is to be read with the fact that the census operators will work this with common sense and will not find any difficulty in ascertaining the names. They will ascertain the names from neighbours, if not from the house itself, but the object of this is to prevent an unduly harsh imposition of the penalty. Therefore I think the clause should be retained.

Shri Basanta Kumar Das (West Bengal: General): Sir, I beg to move:

"That after the existing proviso to sub-clause (2) of clause 7 of the Bill, the following new proviso be added:

'Provided further that no person shall be bound to state the name of the caste to which he or she belongs'."

In Bengal during the 1941 census there was a large number of people who refrained from mentioning their castes and only mentioned their religion. I think there should not be any compulsion in this matter and no penalty should be imposed if a person does not like to mention his caste. Sir, I move.

Mr. Chairman: Amendment moved:

"That after the existing proviso to sub-clause (2) of clause 7 of the Bill, the following new proviso be added:

'Provided further that no person shall be bound to state the name of the caste to which he or she belongs'."

Dr. P. S. Deshmukh (C. P. and Berar: General): Sir, I rise to oppose this amendment because it is thoroughly unconstitutional. We are going to have a constitution and unless we radically change it we are not going to do away with the reservation that has been given to the scheduled castes. These castes are definitely enumerated in the Schedule. If it is not possible for the Census Officer to know the caste of a particular person the population of the scheduled castes will remain unascertained and it will thus cause much harm to their interests as well as lead to confusion among the rest of the people.

Secondly, as has been now pointed out by Government, this is not the sort of thing that is going to help us very much. Though we are anxious that caste should disappear it cannot be done by rules or regulations or by such means as these. So I suggest that the amendment should be withdrawn. Nor do I agree that the caste disputes and caste distinctions were the work of the British Government; that is an incorrect, and unfounded if not a mischievous suggestion. These distinctions were deliberately created for the oppression and exploitation of the masses who were by design to be kept perpetually ignorant and disputes arose and revolts took place because of the unbearable tyranny of a small highly educated section of the people. There are incontrovertible and glaring facts and figures to show the unjust and unfair way in which these people behaved, which alone have accentuated these caste distinctions, and not the propaganda of the British Government. It should be known that in an advanced place like Poona a member of the backward community was not allowed to start a school for girls of backward communities and he was stoned when he tried to do it. We have also the instance of the Madras High Court declaring Shivaji a Sudra. In my own province 3 per cent. of the people whose population is 5 lakhs have as many as 415 gazetted posts while the scheduled castes who number 30 lakhs have only 3. The Malis are 12 lakhs in population but have only 5 and Marathas and Kuabis numbering 20 lakhs have 12 posts only. If such state of affairs still exists I claim Sir that it is too early to expect that people will agree to the abolition of caste only on paper. After having exploited the people in the name of caste these very people now wish to continue their exploitation in the name of no-caste. Census operations are very important and for all people they serve as an excellent index to ascertain the progress they have made from time to time. If India is to progress, the progress must be all sided. It should be incumbent upon us to see that every section of the Indian population shares the advancement and only then we shall be able to claim that India has advanced. There is no doubt that the advancement of India is lop-sided and those at the top are exploiting the situation. That is why complaints are made against all Congress Governments in the provinces; and so long as this situation is not remedied, we are guilty of permitting things which are neither just nor fair. There is therefore no point in my friend's amendment and I hope he will withdraw it.

Shri Suresh Chandra Majumdar (West Bengal: General): Would you deny the freedom not to mention any caste to one who did not believe in the caste system?

Mr. Chairman: Order, order.

Shrimati G. Durgabai (Madras: General): Sir, I stand to support the honourable mover of this amendment. I was simply surprised to find the previous speaker supporting and encouraging this caste system. The House is aware that we are going to have a secular State. We have many a time declared and announced that we are going to build such a state, where religion, caste or creed will have no place.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: Also sex!

Shrimati G. Durgabai: Therefore it is really surprising to find that the honourable member is pleading for retaining this caste which has really created much mischief in the past, and if retained is going to create still more. Therefore I heartily support the honourable the mover of this amendment and I urge that the amendment may be accepted by the Honourable the Minister in charge of the Bill.

Shrimati Renuka Ray (West Bengal: General): Listening to my honourable friend, Dr. Deshmukh, I was simply shocked at the argument that he advanced in favour of retaining the caste system. He has given examples of how badly different people belonging to the Scheduled Castes have been treated, and yet his one thought was to perpetuate the system as long as possible. I strongly support this amendment.

I think the time has come that not only this amendment should go through, but I do not think there is any reason why anyone should mention his caste at all in the census report. We have often said, and particularly a Government, which represents the Congress, has always held that it does not believe in any of these distinctions between castes. If we now bring a column for enumerating caste into the census, then we perpetuate such differences. If there are people who are backward, certainly we shall make arrangements for them, and I think that my honourable friend, Dr. Deshmukh, knows that that can be done in other ways than by perpetuating this caste system in our census or otherwise. If anyone is backward, whatever be his caste or community, it is for us to see to it that he gets the requisite education and training so that he can be a citizen on an equal basis with all others. So there is no reason to retain this caste distinction in the census and I hope the Honourable the Home Minister will at least accept this amendment, which is in itself but a half measure.

Sardar Hukam Singh (East Punjab: Sikh): I also rise to support this amendment and I make special reference to the Sikh community. They believe in no caste. As soon as a Sikh is baptized, he loses any caste that he may have had previous to that. If you stick to the present law as proposed to be passed, there will be a very large number of Sikhs who will refuse to give their caste and then you will have prosecutions in large numbers. So I appeal to the House to adopt this amendment.

Shri Mahavir Tyagi (U. P.: General): I rise to support this amendment. In fact it is too mild. It only says that the State will not force a person to mention his caste, which means that the State does not want the population to be caste conscious as the British made us so far. I do not say that this caste system was initially started by the British. It existed. But the mischief the British Government did was that they made us caste conscious every time.

Whenever a man had to be identified, caste was an essential part of the identification, as if we could not be located or distinguished without caste. In every other country there is no caste system and there people are recognised by giving their names, their father's name, their profession and other such particulars. Here we have been given to understand that caste forms the first part of our identity. In fact the amendment should have been that the caste column from the census registers should have been taken out altogether. That would have been a better thing. Caste does not help us in any way in a census. It is really the will of this House that caste must go for ever but this amendment is a very mild amendment. Suppose there is an individual with scruples like myself or others who do not want to give out their castes. Well, according to this Bill one will be forced to say that he belongs to such and such a caste. So, it is only that pressure that the amendment has attempted to lift. Therefore, I submit that this amendment is very innocent. In fact it should have gone further. I support this amendment and wish that the whole House—as I know the whole House is of this view—will support it and pass it.

One word more, if you do not mind Sir!

My friend raised one objection, which was to some extent relevant and also it had some weight behind it, namely, that the Scheduled Caste people would especially suffer. Well, a solution can be found out for them. They can mention themselves as belonging to the Scheduled Castes. Let them not go into greater details of castes, sub-castes and deputy sub-castes! We can do away with that difficulty by making a column whether one belongs to a Scheduled Caste or otherwise.

Dr. P. S. Deshmukh: May I answer that point?

Mr. Chairman: There is no right of answer.

Shri Satis Chandra Samanta (West Bengal: General): I wholeheartedly support the amendment. My friend, Dr. Deshmukh has opposed it but I think at heart he supports it. During the last session he supported inter-caste marriage and he gave as an example that he himself had married a lady who did not belong to his caste. He at heart supports the amendment. But the difficulty he is facing is that if every one writes Hindu what will be the fate of the scheduled castes. The amendment which has been moved has given an opportunity for this also. The scheduled caste people may write that they are scheduled caste Hindus and other Hindus who do not belong to any caste system they might write simply Hindus. Then the opposition of my honourable friend will be resolved. Sir, I wholeheartedly support the amendment.

Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi (Madras: General): Sir, I rise to support the amendment. The amendment only seeks to discourage the perpetuation of the caste system. If somebody refuses to mention his caste according to the present Bill he is liable to be punished. All that the amendment seeks to do is this: People who do not believe in the perpetuation of the caste system should be permitted to say that they have no caste. Incidentally I might mention that Mahatma Gandhi wrote two articles years ago entitled, "Caste must go" and his dream was that there must be a 'casteless and classless society'. He expressed his dream in two inimitable words—"casteless and classless". All that the amendment seeks to do is to perpetuate that idea that we shall not be caste-conscious so that there may be the ultimate realisation of the object of Mahatma Gandhi, 'a casteless and classless society'. Therefore let us not be obliged to say to which caste we belonged. As a matter of interest I might mention that those people who do not want to give their caste in South India have started a great movement. More than 35,000 people in South India have signed that they shall not mention their caste. I can say that they are prepared even to face all the penalties for refusing to mention their caste. It is a great movement. Caste-consciousness like communalism is another kind of poison. Everywhere we have these caste associations for purposes of election. There is the All-India Reddy Sangham, the All-India Nadar Sangham, etc. This is another kind of communalism. This is a simple amendment which I hope the Honourable the Home Minister will accept.

Shrimati Ammu Swaminadhan (Madras: General): Sir, I also rise to support the amendment. I would like to say that the amendment does not go far enough. I feel that there should be a rule that caste should not be mentioned anywhere in India on any paper that we sign and I hope that the time will not be long before a law is brought about that anyone who has the name of caste after his or her name should be made to remove that particular part which indicates caste. As long as we keep up these caste names and as long as we speak about caste in the House, and elsewhere the caste distinctions will remain. The only way to forget it and to have a casteless society is to forget all about caste and we can do that only if we do away with the names which indicate a person's caste. I hope the Honourable the Home Minister will think about this also and later on bring in some kind of law which will make us all use only our names and nothing to indicate which community or caste we belong to. Sir I heartily welcome the amendment moved by my honourable friend and I hope the Honourable the Home Minister will allow it to go through.

Shri Upendra Nath Barman (West Bengal: General): Mr. Chairman, I do not oppose the amendment that has been tabled but in view of the trend of the discussions and the expression of opinions I think it my duty to make a few observations regarding this census affair. Nobody would be more happy than the scheduled castes or other backward communities about this elimination of castes but for the fact that there are causes that lead them to ask for reservations, facilities for education and other facilities for the amelioration of their condition. I welcome the day when my honourable friends will take positive steps to eliminate this caste system and this blot on our society. But so long as they do not move in the right direction they should not think that by eliminating caste from the census they are doing everything. The other castes cannot take it in that light. My humble submission is that nobody should be forced to disclose his caste against his will but at the same time I would ask the Government to look into the fundamentals that have been adopted by the draft constitution. So long as there are reservations, allotment of seats and Government itself thinks it necessary that certain facilities should be given to certain communities to ameliorate their condition, this census operation must be as scientific and accurate as possible. Otherwise it would be meaningless and will have no value. With these observations I support the amendment but again ask the Government to see to it that their promises in the draft constitution are not negated, by left hand method.

Shri H. V. Kamath (C. P. and Berar: General): Sir, I would like to say a few words.

Mr. Chairman: I think the House has had sufficient discussion on the amendment.

Shri Satya Narayan Sinha (Bihar: General): Sir, the question be put.

Mr. Chairman: I shall put it to the House.

The question is:

"That the question be put."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: Sir, I wish to say a few words with regard to this amendment. I have a good deal of sympathy for the sentiments expressed by the mover as well as those who spoke in support of this amendment. But I am afraid that if the amendment is passed it will defeat the purpose for which the mover as well as the supporters of the amendment have taken so much pains. In the amendment they have mentioned the word "caste" and thereby given legal recognition to the existence of caste in India; therefore instead of abolishing castes they recognise that there are castes in India. What they want to do is to abolish all caste and that purpose is not served by this amendment.

The amendment is a permissive measure which says that no man shall be compelled to mention his caste. That purpose can be served by a rule or instruction that a man who refuses to give his caste may not be prosecuted or punished. As regards the wider object for which the mover has moved his amendment, although I have considerable sympathy for the sentiments expressed by the supporters of the amendment, I would suggest that no reforms of this nature can be brought about by back-door methods. Let us have a resolution on that subject and have it debated in a full House. The other day my friend Mr. Diwakar brought in a resolution more or less embodying this principle and the House accepted my suggestion that the Government will appoint a committee to consider this question and see how far we can give effect to this sentiment. In the Bill which I have introduced there is no place for caste, creed or anything of the kind. By the amendment you introduce the caste in the Bill and you thereby defeat the purpose of the amendment. Therefore I suggest that this question, if it is to be decided as you desire, should be discussed on a separate Resolution as a question of policy for the abolition of caste. If the House accepts the policy then the officer in charge of the census will not take down that point at all. It is therefore not necessary to have this amendment at all which defeats the very purpose it has in view.

Mr. Chairman: Does the honourable the mover of the amendment desire that his amendment should be put to the House?

Shri Basanta Kumar Das: May I know if anybody who does not disclose his caste will be penalised?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: If you do not want a recognition of the caste it is better to have it discussed by a separate Resolution.

Shri Basanta Kumar Das: I was asking whether anyone who does not disclose his caste will be penalised. He should not be penalised if he does not disclose it.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: This can be done by means of instructions.

Mr. Chairman: In view of the discussion does the mover of the amendment wish to press his amendment?

Shri Basanta Kumar Das: I would like to withdraw it.

Shri Mahavir Tyagi: On a point of information, will the Honourable the Deputy Prime Minister be pleased to convey to the House his intention that he would do away with the column of "Caste" in the Rules?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: If you pass a Resolution for the abolition of caste, so far as the Government are concerned they will issue the necessary instructions.

Mr. Chairman: Has the honourable member the leave of the House to withdraw his amendment?

Some Honourable Members: No.

Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi: On a point of order, Sir. The leave has to be unanimous. When leave is asked for withdrawing a motion, the leave has to be unanimous. When there is even one dissentient voice the motion has to be put to the House.

Mr. Chairman: If you so desire I shall put the amendment to vote.

The question is:

"That after the existing proviso to sub-clause (2) of clause 7 of the Bill, the following new proviso be added:

'Provided further that no person shall be bound to state the name of the caste to which he or she belongs'."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That clause 7 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 7 was added to the Bill.

Clauses 8 and 9 were added to the Bill.

Shri K. Santhanam: I beg to move:

"That to sub-clause (1) of clause 10 of the Bill, the following be added at the end:

'and in case of a conviction under part (b) or (c) shall also be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to six months'."

Sir, clause (b) says:

"any census-officer who intentionally puts any offensive or improper question or knowingly makes any false return or without the previous sanction of the Central Government or the Provincial Government, discloses any information which he has received by means of, or for the purposes of, a census return";

and then clause (c) says:

"any sorter, compiler or other member of the census staff who removes, secretes, damages or destroys any census document or deals with any census document in a manner likely to falsify or impair the tabulations of census results."

These are grave offences by officials and a prosecution is to be taken only with the previous sanction of the Provincial Government or of an authority authorised by the Provincial Government in this behalf. The punishment prescribed is not sufficient. I have increased it by adding imprisonment for six months. This is necessary in view of the grave nature of the offences.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: I have no objection to accept the amendment.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That to sub-clause (1) of clause 10 of the Bill, the following be added at the end:

'and in case of a conviction under part (b) or (c) shall also be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to six months'."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That clause 10, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 10, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Mr. Nazimuddin Ahmad: I beg to move:

"That for clause 11 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

'11. No court shall take cognizance of any offence under this Act except with the previous sanction of the Provincial Government or of an authority empowered in this behalf by the Provincial Government'."

Sir, this is the usual way in which this provision is expressed in the Criminal Procedure Code and in other Acts. The original clause which is sought to be amended, says:

"No prosecution under this Act shall be instituted except with the previous sanction of the Provincial Government or of an authority authorised in this behalf by the Provincial Government."

It says that no prosecution shall be 'instituted' etc. But, suppose somebody institutes a prosecution. What will happen? The amendment says that "no Court shall take cognizance of any offence under this Act except with the previous sanction of the Provincial Government etc." So, even if there is no sanction, the Court is prevented from taking cognizance of it.

I find in another Bill which is also pending before this House the same draftsmanship has been accepted. It is to be found in the Coal Mines Provident Fund and Bonus Schemes Bill, 1948. A similar provision is to be found there, namely "No Court shall take cognizance of any offence punishable under any such scheme except on a report in writing" and so forth. This is the way in which it is expressed in the Criminal Procedure Code, in Section 195 and in other Sections. The question is just one of form. If you prevent the Court from taking cognizance of it, any complaint filed or not would be innocuous. If you say "don't file a complaint" it does not go far enough. The method of expression I have suggested is covered by very high authority.

Mr. Chairman: Amendment moved:

"That for clause 11 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

'11. No court shall take cognizance of any offence under this Act except with the previous sanction of the Provincial Government or of an authority empowered in this behalf by the Provincial Government'."

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: I think the expression used here in clause 11 is much wider than the restricted amendment that is proposed by my friend. He wants the expression that "no court shall take cognizance of an offence etc." because that is the expression used in the Criminal Procedure Code. I do not think the expressions used in the Criminal Procedure Code are the final word on the subject. The world is progressing and it is better to widen the scope of this clause. In the one case as soon as an application is presented, if it is not accompanied by a sanction it goes to the waste paper basket. In the other case the court takes the application but asks the applicant to bring the sanction, or proceeds with the application and disposes it of and says that it is open to bring sanction next time. But here the court rejects the application if it is not accompanied by proper sanction. There is no point in accepting this amendment.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That for clause 11 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

'11. No court shall take cognizance of any offence under this Act except with the previous sanction of the Provincial Government or of an authority empowered in this behalf by the Provincial Government'."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That clause 11 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 11 was added to the Bill.

Clauses 12 to 17 were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: I move:

"That clause 1A be renumbered as clause 2 and clauses 2 to 17 be renumbered as clauses to 18 and necessary consequential changes be made in the Bill."

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That clause 1A be renumbered as clause 2 and clauses 2 to 17 be renumbered as clauses 3 to 18 and necessary consequential changes be made in the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: I move:

"That to sub-clause (2) of clause 1 of the Bill, the following be added at the end:
'and also to any Acceding State for which the Central Legislature has for the time being the power to make laws as respects Census'."

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That to sub-clause (2) of clause 1 of the Bill, the following be added at the end:
'and also to any Acceding State for which the Central Legislature has for the time being the power to make laws as respects Census'."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That clause 1, as amended stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 1, as amended, was added to the Bill.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: I move:

"That in the Preamble to the Bill, after the word 'Provinces', the words 'and Acceding States' be inserted."

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That in the Preamble to the Bill, after the word 'Provinces', the words 'and Acceding States' be inserted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That the Preamble, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

The Preamble, as amended, was added to the Bill.

The Title was added to the Bill.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill, as amended, be passed."

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That the Bill, as amended, be passed."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Chairman: The House stands adjourned till 10-45 A.M. on Friday, the 20th August 1948.

The Assembly then adjourned till a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock, on Friday, the 20th August 1948.

CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY OF INDIA (LEGISLATIVE) DEBATES

IMPERIAL LIBRARY (CHANGE OF NAME) BILL

آنریبل مولانا ابوالکلام آزاد : جناب - میں تحریک کرتا ہوں کہ ایک بل پیش کرنے کی اجازت دی جائے جسکا مطلب یہ ہے کہ ایمپیریل لائبریری کا نام بدلا جائے۔
یہ لائبریری ۱۹۰۳ء میں گورنمنٹ آف انڈیا کے ایک رزلوشن کے ذریعہ کلکتہ میں قائم ہوئی تھی اور اُس وقت سے اس کا نام ایمپیریل لائبریری چلا آتا ہے اب ملک میں جو پالیٹیکل (political) اور کانستیتوشنل (constitutional) تبدیلیاں ہوئی ہیں اُسے دیکھتے ہوئے خیال کیا گیا کہ یہ ٹھیک نہیں ہوگا کہ کسی نیشنلسٹ (nationalist) اسٹیتوشن (institution) کے نام میں ایمپیریل (Imperial) کا لفظ رکھا جائے۔ اُس لئے یہ بل پیش کیا گیا ہے۔ تاکہ آئندہ اُس کا نام نیشنل (national) لائبریری (library) رکھا جائے۔

(English translation of the above speech)

The Honourable Maulana Abul Kalam Azad (Minister for Education): Sir, I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill to change the name of the Imperial Library.

[Maulana Abul Kalam Azad]

This Library was established in Calcutta in the year 1908 in pursuance of a Resolution of the Government of India and since that time it is called as Imperial Library. In view of the recent political and constitutional changes in the country, it was considered that it would not be appropriate to associate the word "Imperial" with any national institution. Therefore, this Bill has been presented so that in future it should be called as "National Library".

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That leave be granted to introduce a Bill to change the name of the Imperial Library."

The motion was adopted.

آنریبل مولانا ابوالکلام آزاد : جناب میں پیش کرتا ہوں۔

The Honourable Maulana Abul Kalam Azad: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

INDIAN COTTON CESS (AMENDMENT) BILL

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram (Minister for Food and Agriculture): Sir, I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill further to amend the Indian Cotton Cess Act, 1923.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That leave be granted to introduce a Bill further to amend the Indian Cotton Cess Act, 1923."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

DISPLACED PERSONS (INSTITUTION OF SUITS) BILL.—Contd.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar (Minister for Law): Sir, you were good enough on the last occasion when the Bill was before the House to allow it to stand over in order to give me an opportunity to consider some of the criticisms that were levelled against the Bill as it was placed before the House last time. I have since taken into consideration the various points that were made by honourable members in the course of the debate and I think it would be desirable to introduce some new amendments in order to meet those criticisms and to withdraw the amendment to clause 3 which I moved on the 18th August.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Honourable Minister leave of the House to withdraw the amendment?

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: With your permission, Sir, I propose to move my first amendment, copies of which I believe have been handed over to you and the members of the House. Sir, I move:

"That after clause 1 of the Bill, the following new clause be inserted and the subsequent clauses be renumbered accordingly:

"(2) Duration.—This Act shall remain in force for a period of three years only, but upon the expiry of the said period section 6 of the General Clauses Act, 1897 (X of 1897) shall apply as if this Act had been then repealed by a Central Act."

Last time my honourable friend Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar raised an important point, namely that this privilege which the Bill was going to accord to displaced persons in the matter of bringing suits had no limitation fixed to it. I think that is a point of substance, although I should like to mention the fact that this question was considered in the Department and we felt some difficulty in the matter of fixing an actual time limit as to when this privilege should be withdrawn. After all it was felt that the privilege was being granted to a displaced person by reason of the circumstances in which he found himself on his coming into India. It was very difficult to fix a precise moment of time when it could be said that the circumstances which justified this privilege had vanished. A displaced person would be deprived of the privilege granted by this Bill only on his being rehabilitated in this part of the country. It is very difficult to say when he is going to be rehabilitated. Hence we did not think it right to put any time limit. However, it seems that it would be desirable to fix a time limit and to make it as wide as possible. Consequently it was decided that a three years' time limit would be reasonable. Therefore we have introduced this amendment fixing the time limit of three years, which is quite clear from the first part of the amendment.

The second part of the amendment which refers to Section 6 of the General Clauses Act may not be quite intelligible to the members of the House. All that it means is that when the three years' period lapses if any suit or any appeal is pending on that date it shall continue to be dealt with in accordance with the law and shall not lapse by reason of the fact that the period has lapsed. That is the reason why this amendment is moved and I hope the House will find no difficulty in accepting it.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That after clause 1 of the Bill, the following new clause be inserted and the subsequent clauses be renumbered accordingly:

"(2) Duration.—This Act shall remain in force for a period of three years only, but upon the expiry of the said period section 6 of the General Clauses Act, 1897 (X of 1897) shall apply as if this Act had been then repealed by a Central Act."

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): I think I am satisfied that this change made by the amendment will meet the situation. It is true that the period of limitation may not be extended. Three years is a long enough time and a refugee will be able to settle down to some occupation, trace the defendant and recover his money. I am glad the Honourable the Law Minister has been generous and at the same time not to keep the sword of Damocles hanging over the heads of those defendants who will have to discharge their liabilities. As regards the reference to the General Clauses Act, after the period is over ipso facto it must be terminated, subject of course to not disturbing those rights which are already vested.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): Sir, I support the amendment but I desire that the word "only" should be deleted, as it is redundant. The passage "This Act shall remain in force for a period of three years" without the word "only" means three years only and not more than three years. The word "only" does not serve any purpose. It was probably meant for coaxing the House to accepting the amendment but that is not necessary. If we say that the Act remains in force for a period of three years, it cannot extend beyond three years and if we at all think that it should be extended there is nothing to prevent the House from extending it by an amendment. So the word "only" does not serve any useful purpose. This word was used in another Bill and the House accepted the deletion of the word as being redundant. I submit that this is not a serious thing but only a drafting matter. It should therefore be considered by the House and by the Honourable Minister and he should, I think, agree to delete the word.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: Sir, I am not accepting the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: I shall put the amendment to the House.

The question is:

"That after clause 1 of the Bill, the following new clause be inserted and the subsequent clauses be renumbered accordingly:

(2) Duration.—This Act shall remain in force for a period of three years only, but upon the expiry of the said period section 6 of the General Clauses Act, 1897 (X of 1897) shall apply as if this Act had been then repealed by a Central Act."

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I shall move my amendment to this.

Mr. Speaker: I think it is too late. I had put it to the House first, and then he had a chance of speaking. I have now put it finally.

The motion was adopted.

New clause 2 was added to the Bill.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I beg to move:

"That for clause 3 of the Bill (renumbered as clause 4), the following be substituted.

4. Institution of suits by displaced persons.—Notwithstanding anything contained in section 20 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 (V of 1908) or in any other law relating to the local limits of the jurisdiction of Courts or in any agreement to the contrary, a displaced person may institute a suit in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction he or the defendant or any of the defendants, where there are more than one, actually and voluntarily resides, or carries on business, or personally works for gain, if—

- (i) the defendant, or where there are more than one, each of the defendants, actually and voluntarily resides or carries on business, or personally works for gain in India and is not a displaced person;
- (ii) the cause of action, wholly or in part, arises or has arisen in a place now situate within the territories of Pakistan;
- (iii) the Court in which the suit is instituted is otherwise competent to try it; and
- (iv) the suit does not relate to immovable property."

Mr. Speaker: Here also I notice the word "each".

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: It is quite all right, Sir.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That for clause 3 of the Bill (renumbered as clause 4), the following be substituted:

4. Institution of suits by displaced persons.—Notwithstanding anything contained in section 20 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 (V of 1908) or in any other law relating to the local limits of the jurisdiction of Courts or in any agreement to the contrary, a displaced person may institute a suit in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction he or the defendant or any of the defendants, where there are more than one, actually and voluntarily resides, or carries on business, or personally works for gain, if—

- (i) the defendant, or where there are more than one, each of the defendants, actually and voluntarily resides or carries on business, or personally works for gain in India and is not a displaced person;
- (ii) the cause of action, wholly or in part, arises or has arisen in a place now situate within the territories of Pakistan;
- (iii) the Court in which the suit is instituted is otherwise competent to try it; and
- (iv) the suit does not relate to immovable property."

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move a short notice amendment to this. May I do so?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I move:

"That in the proposed amendment by the Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar to clause 3 (renumbered as clause 4),—

- (a) after the words 'or any of the defendants, where there are more than one', the words 'at the time of the commencement of the suit' be inserted; and
- (b) in part (i) after the words 'each of the defendants', the words 'at the time of the commencement of the suit' be inserted."

In the main part of this proposed new section it is a condition that the defendants, one or more, should actually and voluntarily reside or carry on business or personally work for gain. My amendment seeks to confine it to the time of the institution of the suit. My purpose is to make it a condition at the time of institution, that is, the defendant or the defendants should actually and voluntarily reside or carry on business or personally work for gain at the time of the commencement of the suit. The validity of a suit depends upon the circumstances prevailing at the time of its institution. Suppose the defendant or the defendants subsequently leave the place the area of the local jurisdiction of the court, and remain in India but in another jurisdiction. Should the suit, which was properly instituted, become invalid? As the clause stands at present, it makes the condition that he must actually or voluntarily reside or carry on business or personally work for gain. That is a continuing condition apparently.

As my ground for moving this amendment I have section 20 of the Code of Civil Procedure which was referred to the other day by my friend Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar. It is in clause (b) of section 20. I shall read that "...any of the defendants, where there are more than one, at the time of the commencement of the suit, actually or voluntarily resides or carries on business or personally works for gain". The passage has been taken bodily from the Civil Procedure Code. But the words "at the time of the commencement of the suit" which I consider to be vital have been omitted perhaps by oversight.

In the amendment I want to insert it in line 7. The passage would stand amended like this: "where there are more than one, at the time of the commencement of the suit, actually and voluntarily resides or carries on business or personally works for gain".

The other amendment in part (i) is of a similar character. I submit that this condition is necessary because it may effect the very legality of the suit. All that is necessary is that at the time of the institution of the suit this residential or business or occupational condition should be satisfied. Later on, if there is any movement of the parties from that area to another area, although within India, the legality of the suit might be in doubt. In view of the fact that there are these words in the Civil Procedure Code from which the passage has been apparently taken, the elimination of these words might be regarded as having been done with a purpose, namely that this condition of residence or of carrying on of business etc., is a continuous condition so long as the suit is pending. In order to remove that doubt I think this amendment should be accepted.

Then I have one or two comments to make on the general amendment. There is a passage "notwithstanding anything contained in Section 20 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 (V of 1908)" and then there is this passage "or in any other law relating to the local limits of the jurisdiction of Courts or in any agreement to the contrary". I submit that the Civil Procedure Code is exhaustive with regard to the law relating to the local limits of the jurisdiction of a court.

[Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad]

Then with regard to agreements, I think that agreement does not oust the jurisdiction of a court. If two persons, A and B, who subsequently become plaintiff and defendant, agree that no suit shall be instituted in Delhi, but provided according to some law prevailing the court of Delhi has jurisdiction to entertain the suit, should the court be deprived of that jurisdiction on account of that agreement? I submit, if I am right—I am not quite certain—if I am right, then the words, “or in any agreement to the contrary” should be deleted because contract to the contrary cannot deprive the jurisdiction of a court.

With regard to “any other law relating to local limits of the jurisdiction of courts”, I am rather doubtful if there are any other laws which really affect the jurisdiction of a Court apart from the relevant Sections in the Civil Procedure Code—Section 15 and the following Sections. The Civil Procedure Code exhausts all the conditions of jurisdiction of a Court.

With regard to Section 20 it relates to other suits, that is suits other than those relating to immovable property, but we are not dealing with immovable property. In these circumstances I ask the Honourable Minister to consider the insertion of the condition “at the time of the commencement of the suit” in the two places indicated. He should also explain the need for the words, “or in any other law relating to the local limits of the jurisdiction of courts”, and the other condition, “or in any agreement to the contrary”. The need for this should be explained.

With these few words I submit that the amendments should be accepted.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment to amendment moved:

“That in the proposed amendment by the Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar to clause 3 (renumbered as clause 4),—

- (a) after the words ‘or any of the defendants, where there are more than one’, the words ‘at the time of the commencement of the suit’ be inserted; and
- (b) in part (i) after the words ‘each of the defendants’, the words ‘at the time of the commencement of the suit’ be inserted.”

Does the honourable member move any amendment for the deletion of those words?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: No, Sir. I merely ask for clarification.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: With regard to the actual amendment proposed by my friend, I hold the view that those words are unnecessary. However, if he thinks that the absence of the words create any doubt with regard to the jurisdiction of the court, I have no objection to accepting the addition of the words he has suggested in his amendment.

With regard to the other two points raised by my honourable friend, on the one relating to local limits of the jurisdiction of the courts, my submission is that there may be very many other laws which also deal with the jurisdiction of the courts.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Matrimonial cases, guardians’ cases etc.,

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: A matrimonial case is one.

Secondly, I come from Bombay; I am more familiar about the legislation there. For instance, I know there is an Act there to deal with the relief to agriculturists; there the local limits of the courts are defined, they are quite different from the provisions contained in the Civil Procedure Code. Similarly, there might be cases in other Provinces. These words have, therefore, been introduced by way of caution on the supposition that there might be other laws describing the jurisdiction of the courts. No harm is done if these words are introduced in order to prevent any fault remaining in the Bill by reason of such omission of these words.

With regard to the other question raised by my friend as to why the words, “in any agreement to the contrary” are introduced. The position is this: I entirely agree with him—that is my own personal view, however,—that parties by agreement cannot oust the jurisdiction of the court. If the court has the jurisdiction, the parties cannot by agreement say that the suit shall not be brought within the jurisdiction of the court. But I am told that the Lahore High Court has held the following view in a Full Bench case arising out of what are called “Insurance policies”, where a clause like the one I am reading now exists:

“In the event of any claim arising in respect of properties hereby insured, the same shall be settled and paid in Lahore and the entire cause of action shall also be deemed to arise in Lahore, and further that all legal proceedings in respect of any such claim shall be instituted in a competent Court in the City of Lahore only.”

When this clause in the insurance policies came in for interpretation before the Lahore High Court, a Full Bench of the Lahore High Court decided that such an agreement is valid and is binding and the suits must be brought in Lahore. It is an order to abrogate the binding force of this clause and also to nullify the effects of the judgment given by the Lahore High Court and to enable the displaced person to take full advantage of the privilege that we are giving, that these words have been introduced namely, “notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary”. I hope this explanation satisfies my friend.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I am fully satisfied.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Sir, I want to say a word on this. The amendment suggested by my honourable friend Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad does not fit in and seems to be inconsistent with the amendment that has been put forward by the Honourable Dr. Ambedkar.

Let us take part (i) of sub-clause (1) of proposed amendment. It says,—“(i) the defendant, or where there are more than one, each of the defendants, actually and voluntarily resides or carries on business, or personally works for gain in India and is not a displaced person;”

The privilege is given to the plaintiff in such a case to file a suit not according to Section 20 of the Civil Procedure Code, but either where the cause of action arises or where the defendant resides. Under this part (i) the defendant or each of the defendants must reside only in India; it is immaterial whether he resides in a particular place or in the local limits or jurisdiction of any court. Of course this would not authorise a suit being filed by one who is not a resident of India and is not a displaced person; if he is not a displaced person the defendant must not be a displaced person himself. Therefore, to say, “at the time when the suit is filed”, seems to be absolutely not within the object of the framers of this amendment. If the defendant is not a displaced person but is a permanent resident of India it is immaterial where he resides and you can file the suit anywhere the plaintiff likes. That is the object. So, what is the meaning of saying, “at the time when the suit is filed”? All that is required is that he must be resident anywhere in India. Therefore, Sir, with very great respect I submit that the honourable member’s suggestion in sub-clause (i) does not fit in.

As regards the main clause 4, I would say that the words, “the defendant or any of the defendants, where there are more than one,” might not be necessary. This gives the plaintiff merely the privilege to file a suit where he likes. The object of my honourable friend in including the words, “defendant or any other defendants, where there is more than one,” is this. Under the existing provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, Section 20, if you have to file a suit and there are more than one defendants, you can file it in a particular place, where the other defendants do not reside, only with the consent of the court. He wants to do away with that consent. Therefore, he has included those words also.

[Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar]

In either case, I do not think it is necessary that the addition of the words should be made. The amendment as tabled by my honourable friend meets the situation and is proper.

Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi (Madras: General): Sir, there is one aspect of the matter and that is this. This gives a privilege to the displaced person who is the plaintiff. Cases might occur where after the institution of the suit the plaintiff might go to some other jurisdiction of the court, and therefore in such cases the defendant might very well at a later stage, say that the plaintiff is not now residing there and therefore he has no right of action. Therefore, "at the time of institution of the suit" must qualify the plaintiff also. Whereas ordinarily, under the Civil Procedure Code, the right of action only arises when one or most of the defendants are in some local jurisdiction. Cases might arise where after the institution of the suit the plaintiff might go somewhere else and then the defendant might very well say, "Now the case has to be transferred to some other court". This is just possible. Therefore, the words, "at the time of institution of the suit" must qualify the plaintiff also, so much so that at the time of the institution of the suit, if the plaintiff or any defendant is in the local jurisdiction of any court, then the suit is well instituted.

I support the amendment from that aspect.

Mr. Speaker: I was just considering whether a change of residence of a defendant after the launching of a suit will effect the validity of the suit properly instituted in the beginning.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: No, Sir. He is a permanent resident of India.

Mr. Speaker: That is the whole point.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: It has been held, Sir, you will remember that even a suit for injunction for removing of a building can go on even if the building is removed.

Mr. Speaker: I do not know. I will leave it to the lawyers. I know the words there, "at the time of the commencement of the suit" are taken from the Civil Procedure Code, but I am entirely in the hands of the lawyers in the House. I have ceased to practise for twelve years and am not in touch with the law. So I leave it to the lawyers in this House. Anyhow, that is just, by the way. What is the wish of the Honourable the Law Minister in this matter?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: As I said, these words are unnecessary whereas my honourable friend has a passion to put all these technical amendments. I thought I might once in my life gratify his wishes.

Mr. Speaker: He was suggesting the insertion of the words at two places.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: That would not affect.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Second place is unnecessary. We might put it in the first place only.

Mr. Speaker: He is satisfied with having it at one place only. That is a further compromise. Well, then, I will put the first.

The question is:

"That in the proposed amendment by the Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar to clause 3 (renumbered as clause 4), after the words 'or any of the defendants, where there are more than one' the words 'at the time of the commencement of the suit' be inserted".

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: I now put to the House the amended amendment. The question is:

"That for clause 3 of the Bill (renumbered as clause 4), the following be substituted:

"4. Institution of suits by displaced persons.—Notwithstanding anything contained in section 20 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 (V of 1908) or in any other law relating to the local limits of the jurisdiction of Courts or in any agreement to the contrary, a displaced person may institute a suit in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction he or the defendant or any of the defendants, where there are more than one, at the time of the commencement of the suit, actually and voluntarily resides, or carries on business, or personally works for gain, if—

- (i) the defendant, or where there are more than one, each of the defendants, actually and voluntarily resides or carries on business, or personally works for gain in India and is not a displaced person;
- (ii) the cause of action, wholly or in part, arises or has arisen in a place now situate within the territories of Pakistan;
- (iii) the Court in which the suit is instituted is otherwise competent to try it; and
- (iv) the suit does not relate to immovable property."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: Sir, I move:

"That after clause 3 of the Bill (renumbered as clause 4), the following new clauses be inserted and the subsequent clauses be renumbered accordingly:

"5. Validation of certain pending suits.—Any suit instituted by a displaced person after the 15th day of August, 1947, which if this Act had come into force on that day would have been validly instituted in pursuance of section 4 shall, if pending at the commencement of this Act, be deemed to have been validly instituted and be disposed of accordingly.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this section a suit pending at the commencement of this Act includes a suit in respect of which an appeal lies or is pending at the commencement of this Act.

6. Restoration of certain dismissed suits.—Where any suit instituted by a displaced person after the 15th day of August, 1947, and before the commencement of this Act, which if this Act had come into force on that day would have been validly instituted in pursuance of section 4, had been dismissed solely on the ground that it had not been validly instituted, the Court shall, on application made within one month from the commencement of this Act, make an order setting aside the decree and shall proceed with the suit.

7. Restoration of suit where appeal dismissed.—Where, in any appeal arising from a suit instituted by a displaced person after the 15th day of August, 1947, and before the commencement of this Act, a decree has been passed dismissing such appeal solely on the ground that it had not been validly instituted and the institution of such suit would have been valid if section 4 had come into force on the aforesaid date, the Appellate Court shall, on application made to it within one month from the commencement of this Act, make an order setting aside its decree and remand the case to the Court of first instance for trial."

Now, Sir, this amendment makes provision for three cases. Clause 5 deals with a case where a case is pending; clause 6 deals with a case where the suit is dismissed and clause 7 deals with a case where appeal is dismissed. The House will thus see that all possible cases have been dealt with by these three new clauses, so that no displaced person, by reason of the fact that this Act had not retrospective effect on the date on which he filed his suit, will find himself in difficulty so as not to realise the benefit of this Act.

Shri K. Santhanam (Madras: General): What if the suit had been instituted before and only the appeal was filed later?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: The point is this. It has been represented to me, although I find it difficult to believe, that certain displaced persons, notwithstanding the fact that Section 20 of the Civil Procedure Code does not permit them to file a suit within the jurisdiction of the court within which they reside, have nonetheless filed such a suit. If these suits were filed before the commencement of this Act, those suits would be dismissed for want of jurisdiction. In order to give them relief we said that even if the suit is dismissed it shall be restored. If the appeal is dismissed, then again the suit also should be restored, so that it merely gives retrospective effect to all those cases where the displaced person, out of pure mistake of law, had filed suit before the commencement of this Act.

Shrimati G. Durgabai (Madras: General): May I know whether a fresh suit can be instituted again?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: No.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That after clause 3 of the Bill (renumbered as clause 4), the following new clauses be inserted and the subsequent clauses be renumbered accordingly:

5. Validation of certain pending suits.—Any suit instituted by a displaced person after the 15th day of August, 1947, which if this Act had come into force on that day would have been validly instituted in pursuance of section 4 shall, if pending at the commencement of this Act, be deemed to have been validly instituted and be disposed of accordingly.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this section a suit pending at the commencement of this Act includes a suit in respect of which an appeal lies or is pending at the commencement of this Act.

6. Restoration of certain dismissed suits.—Where any suit instituted by a displaced person after the 15th day of August, 1947, and before the commencement of this Act, which if this Act had come into force on that day would have been validly instituted in pursuance of section 4, had been dismissed solely on the ground that it had not been validly instituted, the Court shall, on application made within one month from the commencement of this Act, make an order setting aside the decree and shall proceed with the suit.

7. Restoration of suit where appeal dismissed.—Where, in any appeal arising from a suit instituted by a displaced person after the 15th day of August, 1947, and before the commencement of this Act, a decree has been passed dismissing such appeal solely on the ground that it had not been validly instituted and the institution of such suit would have been valid if section 4 had come into force on the aforesaid date, the Appellate Court shall, on application made to it within one month from the commencement of this Act, make an order setting aside its decree and remand the case to the Court of first instance for trial."

Shri K. Santhanam: I think it would be better if we bring the words occurring in section 4 into line with the wording of section 6 as newly drafted.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Mr. Speaker, I have got one doubt. In this amendment you have put new clauses 5, 6 and 7 together. In the fourth line of clause 6, it is stated "dismissed solely on the ground that it had not been validly instituted". So far as the preamble is concerned, my fear is it may not touch the validity of the institution. Here what the amendment seems to mean is validly instituted not in the place where it ought to have been instituted under section 20 of the Civil Procedure Code. We have said on the ground that it had been validly instituted and we will assume for some reason other than one of legal jurisdiction, but for this Act the suit has been dismissed. Even then it is not validly instituted as the wording stands. If before the commencement of this Act a suit was instituted in a place which was a wrong place under the law as it then stood under section 20 of the Civil Procedure Code, if that suit should have been dismissed, it could be restored within a period of years. "Validly instituted" may mean various other grounds on which the suit might have been dismissed. Therefore the words "for one of legal or territorial jurisdiction" must be used here. A suit has been dismissed solely on the ground that it had not been instituted within the legal limits and it has been dismissed on the ground that the Court had no pecuniary or legal jurisdiction.

Then comes the question of making an order, setting aside the decree or order. It need not merely be a decree. There may be cases where the suit has been dismissed by an order. Under the law there is no jurisdiction and a man files a suit and does not pursue it.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I have some comments to make on the proposed new section 7. In line 3, the following passage occurs: "A decree has been passed dismissing such appeal". This presupposes that the original suit which was instituted by the plaintiff was dismissed and the appeal was by the plaintiff and such an appeal was dismissed solely on the ground that it was not validly instituted. But it may mean that the plaintiff institutes the case and his suit was decreed and the defendant may have instituted an appeal. Then the dismissal of such an appeal means that the plaintiff's suit is decreed. I beg to submit that the following amendment should be accepted:

"For the words 'such appeal' in line 3 of the proposed new section 7 the words 'this suit' should be substituted."

The result of this would be that a decree has been passed dismissing such a suit and a decree by the Appellate Court has been passed dismissing such a suit solely on the ground that it has not been validly instituted. I think it would be that in the appeal the suit may be dismissed either by decree of the appeal or dismissing the appeal; it depends on who is the appellant. If the plaintiff wins, the suit is decreed. If the defendant appeals, the decreeing of the appeal means that the suit is dismissed or by a decree in appeal which follows the order a suit may be dismissed or a suit may be decreed. I beg to submit, Sir, the dismissal of the suit on the ground that it had not been validly instituted is the key, the test and therefore dismissing of the appeal should not be the test. The dismissing of the suit should be the test. The suit may be dismissed by a decree allowing the appeal or dismissing the appeal as the case may be. Therefore, for these two words, "such appeal", the words "the suit" should be substituted. I would respectfully ask the Honourable Minister to consider the thing and decide.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: With regard to the point raised by my honourable friend, Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, it is quite true that a suit may be dismissed for various other reasons; but in the context I am quite satisfied that the words validly instituted cannot refer to anything except the jurisdiction of the court and therefore, I am not prepared to disturb that wording.

With regard to the point raised by my honourable friend Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad, I am sure he will realise that the words he proposes are most unsuitable. Because, in an appellate court, what the appellate court does is to dismiss the appeal; it does not dismiss the suit. Therefore, the wording is all right.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: It also decrees or dismisses the suit.

Mr. Speaker: The word 'decree' may remain without the addition of the word 'order'. I was just considering whether the word 'suit' should not be there for the word 'appeal'. Even the appellate decree will be for the dismissal of the suit originally instituted. It seems to be a little confusing: "dismissing such appeal solely on the ground that it has not been validly instituted", what does that 'it' represent?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I am prepared to concede that the word 'it' should be substituted by the word 'suit'.

Mr. Speaker: If 'it' is replaced by the word 'suit', his objective is achieved.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I am prepared for it.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: That would be better. Sir, I beg to move.

"That in the amendment moved by the Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar, in the proposed clause 7, for the word 'it' where it occurs for the first time, the words 'the suit' be substituted."

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I accept it.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in the amendment moved by the Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar, in the proposed clause 7, for the word 'it' where it occurs for the first time, the words 'the suit' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Shri Krishna Chandra Sharma (U.P.: General): Sir, I would like to make a suggestion. In the last line instead of the word 'case' the word 'suit' may be substituted, and instead of the word 'trial', the word 'disposal' may be substituted.

Mr. Speaker: It comes to the same thing.

Shri Krishna Chandra Sharma: No; it is different.

Mr. Speaker: I think in the place of the word 'case', the word 'suit' may be substituted.

Shri Krishna Chandra Sharma: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in the amendment moved by the Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar, in the proposed clause 7, for the word 'case', the word 'suit' be substituted; and for the word 'trial' the word 'disposal' be substituted."

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in the amendment moved by the Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar, in the proposed clause 7, for the word 'case', the word 'suit' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Shri Krishna Chandra Sharma: I am not particular about the other amendment.

Mr. Speaker: I am putting to the House the amended amendment.

The question is:

"That after clause 3 of the Bill (renumbered as clause 4), the following new clauses be inserted and the subsequent clauses be renumbered accordingly:

5. Validation of certain pending suits.—Any suit instituted by a displaced person after the 15th day of August, 1947, which if this Act had come into force on that day would have been validly instituted in pursuance of section 4 shall, if pending at the commencement of this Act, be deemed to have been validly instituted and be disposed of accordingly.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this section a suit pending at the commencement of this Act includes a suit in respect of which an appeal lies or is pending at the commencement of this Act.

6. Restoration of certain dismissed suits.—Where any suit instituted by a displaced person after the 15th day of August, 1947, and before the commencement of this Act, which if this Act had come into force on that day would have been validly instituted in pursuance of section 4, had been dismissed solely on the ground that it had not been validly instituted, the Court shall, on application made within one month from the commencement of this Act, make an order setting aside the decree and shall proceed with the suit.

7. Restoration of suit where appeal dismissed.—Where, in any appeal arising from a suit instituted by a displaced person after the 15th day of August, 1947, and before the commencement of this Act, a decree has been passed dismissing such appeal solely on the ground that the suit had not been validly instituted and the institution of such suit would have been valid if section 4 had come into force on the aforesaid date, the Appellate Court shall, on application made to it within one month from the commencement of this Act, make an order setting aside its decree and remand the suit to the Court of first instance for trial."

The motion was adopted.

New Clauses 5, 6 and 7 were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I move:

"That in clause 4 of the Bill (renumbered as clause 8), for the words and figure 'section 3 of this Act', the words and figure 'section 4 of this Act', be substituted."

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in clause 4 of the Bill (renumbered as clause 8), for the words and figure 'section 3 of this Act', the words and figure 'section 4 of this Act', be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 4 (renumbered as clause 8), as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 4 (renumbered as clause 8) was added to the Bill.

Clause 5 (renumbered as clause 9) was added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and the Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I move:

"That the Bill, as amended, be passed."

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill, as amended, be passed."

The motion was adopted.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR OFFICERS (OATHS AND FEES) BILL.

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru (Prime Minister and Minister for External Affairs and Commonwealth Relations): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill to provide for the administration of oaths by diplomatic and consular officers and to prescribe the fees leviable in respect of certain of their official duties, be taken into consideration."

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill to provide for the administration of oaths by diplomatic and consular officers and to prescribe the fees leviable in respect of certain of their official duties, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: We will take the Bill clause by clause.

The question is:

"That clauses 2 and 3 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 2 and 3 were added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): Sir, I move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 4 of the Bill, after the word 'Act', the words 'or contravenes the provisions of sub-section (3) of section 6', be inserted."

Clause 4 provides punishment for false oath or affidavit but clause 6(3) declares that a diplomatic or consular officer shall not take any reward or payment except as may be provided in rules made in this behalf. That is to say, Government are entitled to make rules under clause 6(3) prescribing the fees, and nothing is to be taken beyond the prescribed rate. There is no provision making it an offence for a diplomatic or consular officer to take anything in excess of the prescribed amount, and so an offending officer escapes without any liability. No doubt he commits the offence of misappropriation or of illegal gratification under Sec. 161 of the Indian Penal Code, but as the offence will take place outside the jurisdiction of Indian Courts he cannot be tried here.

456 CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY OF INDIA (LEGISLATIVE) [20TH AUGUST 1948]

[Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad]

But if we make it a punishable offence under this Bill it will be triable in any Indian Court if he is arrested here or is found within the local limits of the jurisdiction of any court in India. Therefore there is a lacuna that a diplomatic or consular officer who takes more than the prescribed fees escapes without any penalty and cannot be tried. But if the amendment that I propose is accepted he may be tried here if he is found within the local limits of the jurisdiction of an Indian Court. My amendment would make it an offence and although it is committed outside the jurisdiction of an Indian Court he will be liable to be tried by an Indian Court and cannot escape scot-free. Sir, I move.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 4 of the Bill, after the word 'Act', the words 'or contravenes the provisions of sub-section (3) of section 6', be inserted."

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): Sir, I beg to oppose this amendment. Clause 4 is a penalty clause which prescribes punishments for offences committed against this law. Then clause 6(3) prescribes that a diplomatic or consular officer shall not take any fee or reward in excess of those prescribed, and my honourable friend wants to make the contravention of clause 6(3) a penal offence under clause 4. Clause 4 is intended to deal with people who swear false oaths or affidavits and is not intended to apply to officers at all. If a consular or diplomatic officer takes fees which he should not take he will be withdrawn and in various other ways he will be punished; it need not necessarily be punishment in a court of law. Personally I think even sub-clause (3) of clause 6 was unnecessary; it will be illegal gratification under the Indian Penal Code and no special provision need have been made.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: It is not triable here because the offence is committed outside India.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Apart from that it is not necessary because of the high position that our diplomatic and consular officers hold in foreign countries. Anyway by way of caution and to ensure integrity and freedom from corruption clause 6(3) may be retained; but having regard to their dignity and high position I oppose this proposed amendment.

Mr. Hossain Imam (Bihar: Muslim): Sir, I am afraid my honourable friend who spoke last missed two other things. He has concentrated on fees but there are rewards for or on account of an act or thing. If you prescribe a thing it is necessary that you should have some kind of punishment for violating it. It is no good saying, "Thou shalt not do this". This "Thou shalt not" has always proved ineffective; it is only fear of punishment that prevents him from violating it. I do not say that diplomatic or consular officers who will be hand-picked men will do these things. Therefore you may do away with this provision; but if you have it you must also have some kind of punishment. The entire criminal law is based on this that for an offence there must be a punishment. And, as was pointed out, our criminal law is ineffective in crimes committed outside the territorial jurisdiction of India, unless a validating law is passed as was done in the case of displaced persons. Therefore, as I said, I do not mind if clause 6(3) is removed because persons of that high status are not likely to commit this offence; but if it is retained it follows as a corollary that some provision like the present amendment of Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad should be made.

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: Sir, I am unable to accept this amendment for reasons that my honourable friend Mr. Ayyangar mentioned. This should be looked upon as nothing more than a rule and an indication, not as a kind of crime for which punishment has not been provided as the honourable member said. It is a clear indication that something should not be done.

and it would be wrong to mix it up with a specific punishment for false oaths, etc.

If such a thing occurs these persons will be dealt with effectively by the Government, and there is just a chance if you specifically say that they should be proceeded against in a law court for this, some people may try to embarrass them and in many ways, quite needlessly and without the slightest justification. I do not think it helps at all. If they have done wrong there are hundreds of ways of punishing them and much more effectively than by tacking it on to the other section.

So, I submit that this amendment should not be accepted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I do not press this amendment, but I should ask for a reconsideration of sub-clause (3) of clause 6. When that comes it is unnecessary.

Mr. Speaker: We shall discuss that when we come to that clause.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: But I shall agree to the removal of sub-clause (3) of clause 6.

Mr. Speaker: This mixture of ideas arises because of some dubious marginal note in this section. The marginal notes say: "Punishment of offences under this Act." This is not a special offence under this Act and it would perhaps be better if head note says "punishment for certain offences." So the honourable member does not press for his amendment?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I would ask leave of the House to withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: Has the honourable member leave of the House to withdraw? The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 4 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 4 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I move:

"That in clause 5 of the Bill, for the words 'in any Province of India in which', the words 'by a Court in India within the limits of whose jurisdiction' be substituted."

Clause 5 of the Bill reads:

"Any offence under this Act may be inquired into, dealt with, tried and punished in any Province of India in which the person charged with the offence was apprehended or is in custody"

So, the provision is to this effect that if any offender is apprehended in any province, or is found in custody in any province, he may be tried in that province, but the unit of jurisdictions of our Courts is not the Province but rather the Sessions Divisions, or rather the Districts. It is mostly Districts, but it may be that a Sessions Division may consist of more than one District. So I would like to make the position clear by this amendment. If the amendment is accepted, the section would read like this:

"Any offence under this Act may be inquired into, dealt with, tried and punished by a Court in India within the limits of whose jurisdiction the person charged with the offence was apprehended or is in custody"

In fact a man has to be tried by a Court and there is no Court which exercises jurisdiction over the whole province except the High Court. Normally a Court which will try is the Court of a Magistrate. That is to be found at the end of the Criminal Procedure Code. So it is the Magistrate's jurisdiction which must be the starting point and therefore a Provincial area would be wider than a Magistrate's jurisdiction. It is under these circumstances I should make it legally come under the control of a Court in India within the limits or jurisdiction of which the man was arrested or found in. It is simply removing the test as the 'Provincial area' by a provision to the limits and 'jurisdiction of a Court' in India. That should be the test under the Criminal Procedure Code under which he should be tried. This is a formal amendment and should be accepted.

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid the honourable member has ignored the point that the previous words of the amendment do not fit in with the subsequent words. that point?

" may be inquired into, dealt with, tried and punished "

Surely it will not be the business of a Court to inquire into an offence! Suppose the case is tried by a Court of Sessions, will it be the Sessions Court which will enquire into that offence? It will be a police enquiry.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: The investigation is a police investigation.

Mr. Speaker: The previous words are: "may be inquired into, dealt with, tried and punished....." Therefore his words do not fit in. Will he consider that point?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: The point may be reconsidered.

Mr. Speaker: Therefore he does not press it.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I press my point, but not the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: So I need not put it to the House.

Amendment No. 9 follows the same line as No. 8. The honourable member is not moving it.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: No.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 5 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 5 was added to the Bill.

Shri S. V. Krishnamurthy Rao (Mysore State): With regard to my amendment No. 11 in list 2, may I know from the Leader of the House whether the object will not be served by issuing instructions to the Ambassadors and Consular officers at the time of their appointment, because I feel that we need not doubt the integrity of such officers.

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: It is not a question of doubting their integrity but clarifying their position. It is more formally and precisely done here. It is better to be done here. I do not see any confusion or harm by putting this in here.

Shri S. V. Krishnamurthy Rao: I do not propose to move.

Mr. Speaker: Does Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad wish to say anything on this?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: No.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 6 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 6 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Hossain Imam: I presume that all these rules will be published in the Gazette. There is no provision for it here. Perhaps, we may have an assurance from the Honourable the Leader of the House. That is the usual practice.

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: There are many types of rules—major rules, minor rules and subsidiary rules. But normally, rules are published and will be published.

Mr. Speaker: I think, under the General Clauses Act there is some such rule.

The question is:

"That clauses 7 and 8 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 7 and 8 were added to the Bill.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 1 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and the Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: Sir, I move:

"That the Bill be passed."

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill be passed."

The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock, Mr. Speaker (the Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

INDIAN MERCHANT SHIPPING (AMENDMENT) BILL

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru (Prime Minister and Minister for External Affairs and Commonwealth Relations): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Merchant Shipping Act, 1923, be taken into consideration."

Sir, this Bill consists of one single section, a very short and simple affair. Pilgrims proceeding to the Hejaz are required to produce certificates of vaccination against smallpox before boarding pilgrim ships. Till now this certificate had a period of validity of five years. Now the International Sanitary Conventions, 1914 reduced this period of validity of such certificates to three years. So we have to make new forms for this purpose and this requires an amendment of this Act, which had laid down five years. The Bill is a very simple one meant to substitute three years for five years.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Merchant Shipping Act, 1923, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: There are no amendments. I shall take clauses 1 and 2 together.

The question is:

"That clauses 1 and 2 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 1 and 2 were added to the Bill.

The Title and the Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: Sir I move:

"That the Bill be passed."

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill be passed."

The motion was adopted.

DURGAH KHAWAJA SAHEB (AMENDMENT) BILL

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel (Minister for Home, Information and Broadcasting and the States): Sir, I move:

"That the Bill further to amend the Durgah Khawaja Saheb Act, 1936, be taken into consideration."

The amending Bill has got a limited objective and I hope, therefore, that the Bill will not be the subject of any controversy in this House. The object of the Bill, as has been made clear in the Statement of Objects and Reasons, is to terminate the membership of certain members of the Durgah Committee who on account of the Partition of the country have gone to Pakistan and the continuance of their membership is neither desirable nor possible.

In justification of this position, I should like to give, in brief, a history of this institution. The shrine at Ajmer is one of the oldest and venerated places of Muslim pilgrimage in this country and attracts persons from distant places, even outside India. A considerable amount of landed property was gifted to the officials of the shrine by the Mughal Emperors and by Daulat Rao Scindia in the early part of the 19th century. The total revenue of the jagir is now estimated at about Rs. 1,50,000 per annum. In addition to it large amounts are received annually in the form of donations and thank-offerings from pilgrims and devotees. The spiritual head of the shrine is the Sajjadanashin, while its temporal affairs are looked after by a Mutwalli. In 1936, an Act was passed for the better administration of the Durgah, but was subsequently amended in 1938. The amended Act is now in force. Under this Act, a Managing Committee was constituted consisting of 2 ex-officio members, viz., the Sajjadanashin and the Mutwalli, 18 members elected by various Muslim constituencies, e.g., the Khadim community of Ajmer, M.L.As of Central and Provincial Legislatures and other Muslims of Ajmer, one nominated by the Nizam and four Sajjadanashins of Chishti shrines coopted by the other members.

Unfortunately for the administration of the shrine and its funds, the Committee has been rent with factions and a certain amount of litigation for some time. The Partition of India has brought the whole problem to a head. The Sajjadanashin left Ajmer in September 1947 after having mortgaged some of his jagir and raised considerable sums of money in other ways including the sale of his household effects and gold and silver ornaments. He is now in Pakistan from where he is reported to be indulging in activities disloyal to this country. The Chief Commissioner has withdrawn his jagir from him under the Ajmer Land and Revenue Regulations and has taken in hand the selection of his successor. Seven out of the nine local members of the Committee who, in effect conducted the affairs of the Durgah have migrated to Pakistan following the example of the old Sajjadanashin. As a result the administration of the Durgah came to a complete deadlock; only two of the members of the Committee and the Mutwalli were left and their right to manage the finances of the Durgah was not admitted by the bank.

In the meantime, the annual Urs at the Durgah was to take place in May and it became a matter of immediate necessity to have an active and lawfully constituted Committee in action as soon as possible. We accordingly promulgated an Ordinance on the 11th of May to amend Durgah Khawaja Sahib Act of 1936. By virtue of this Ordinance members elected from Sind, N.W.F.P., East Bengal and West Punjab lost their membership. We provided that three members would be coopted by other members of the Committee from among persons residing in any of the acceding States or in the State of Hyderabad.

The Ordinance would expire in November this year and it is therefore, necessary to replace it by an Act. Recently we have received very disquieting reports from the local administration in regard to the administration of the shrine. It is our intention to go rather closely into the many allegations of mismanagement and maladministration which are being made and to evolve suitable preventive measures and provide for efficient administration of the shrine, but the subject is one which requires careful consideration, and in view of the variety of interests involved it has not been possible to devise proposals for a permanent machinery to administer the affairs of the Durgah. For the present, therefore, we are doing nothing more than to make changes in the constitution of the Committee necessary on account of partition. The only change from the Ordinance which we have made is to eliminate the nominee of the Nizam and instead we have provided that the three members to be coopted would represent the acceding States and the State of Hyderabad. This, I think, is more in accord with the present position as well as the principle of eliminating altogether any Government nominee on this Committee. In the meantime, we shall look into the question of improving the affairs of the shrine and, if necessary, we shall approach this House for any further amendments of the Act that may be necessary later in the light of our examination of the whole position. Sir, I move.

Mr. Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the Bill further to amend the Durgah Khawaja Saheb Act, 1936, be taken into consideration."

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): Sir, I rise to support the motion. This is a shrine in which the Muslims are very much interested and in which it is well known that some other communities are also interested. The present Bill is of a routine character and not at all controversial. It is a direct consequence of the partition of India and I believe the object of the Bill is to make consequential changes and such additions and alterations as have arisen out of certain political circumstances. But I submit that when further amendments are made, the wishes of some Muslim members who are more interested than others in this matter should also be considered. So far as the present Bill is concerned I have already submitted that I fully accept the measure.

Mr. Speaker: I believe there is nothing further to be said.

The question is:

"That the Bill further to amend the Durgah Khawaja Saheb Act, 1936, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: We shall now take the Bill clause by clause. There is no amendment

Shri H. V. Kamath (C. P. and Berar: General): On a minor point of clarification, is it better to spell the word 'Durgah' as Durgah or as Dargah?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I submit, Sir, that the present spelling is in order. The original Act which this Bill tries to amend, spells it as 'Durgah'. The present amendment must be in conformity with the original Act.

Mr. Speaker: In any case, there is no fear of any mistake of identity about it.

The question is:

"That clauses 1, 2 and 3 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 1, 2 and 3 were added to the Bill.

The Title and the Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: Sir, I move:

"That the Bill be passed."

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill be passed."

The motion was adopted.

INDIAN ARMY (AMENDMENT) BILL

Mr. Speaker: I do not find any of the other Honourable Ministers in the House. What is the procedure to be followed?

Some Honourable Members: We might go home.

Mr. Speaker: I sent for the Honourable the Defence Minister immediately I saw the next item of business in the list. But it seems he is not available. I can suggest the course that though the Honourable the Home Minister is not conversant with the points about the next motion, he can as well move it. The next motion is that the Bill further to amend the Indian Army Act, 1911, be taken into consideration.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): But there are amendments.

Mr. Speaker: If the Honourable the Home Minister makes the motion, the honourable members who wish to speak on it may do so. Does nobody wish to speak?

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): I shall speak:

Mr. Speaker: The Honourable the Home Minister may move item No. 14 on the list.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel (Minister for Home, Information and Broadcasting and the States): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Army Act, 1911, be taken into consideration."

Mr. Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Army Act, 1911, be taken into consideration."

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Sir, it might look strange that I should rise to speak on this subject. If conscription should be introduced in this country I may not be fit to be conscripted because I am beyond the period. Therefore it evokes laughter from my friend in this House when I try to speak on the Army Bill. But I am interested and I can contribute a number of people to defend the country the freedom of which we have achieved after so much sacrifice. Hereafter it is for us to consolidate our country and to see to it that it is defended properly. I welcome this measure.

The object of the Bill is this. There are forces in every acceding State and there are forces belonging to the Army in India. When joint action is necessary, who is to be in charge of the command of the forces? Hitherto it has been done by agreement between the States on the one side and the Government of India on the other side. That was on a temporary basis. Whenever they engaged themselves on a particular conflict or a particular engagement inside or outside the country, they agreed that for the time being, for the nonce, the person who is to be in charge of the forces should take charge of the command. This Bill seeks to place such agreements on a permanent footing without ad hoc agreements being brought into existence from time to time. It seeks to regulate the relations between the forces of Acceding States and Indian land forces, when acting together. The expression in the Bill is:

"When any of the forces of an Acceding State are acting with, or are attached to, any body of His Majesty's Indian Land Forces, whether within or outside the State, then all the provisions of this Act shall apply to such forces and the members thereof as if they formed part of that body of His Majesty's Indian Land Forces."

Similar things we have heard of even during the last war when the forces of Great Britain and the forces of France had to work together. I am only citing it for the sake of analogy. When allies have to join together and fight the enemy, there cannot be two commanders. Then both of them will spoil the broth. It is therefore necessary to place one of them in supreme command and the rest of the forces have to work under him. That is a very well known feature. For joint action one has to take the lead. The position with respect to the forces of the Acceding States and the Indian Forces is the same.

Some friend outside the House asked why the Naval forces are not included and brought within the scope of the Bill. I am not aware if any Acceding State has got any navy attached to it. If any huge navy is brought into existence by any Acceding State we will have to bring about coordination between the Royal Indian Navy and the other navy. As such there is no other navy and the Royal Indian Navy guards the entire ocean and guards the Acceding States as so. The Bill is therefore limited to the Land Forces raised and maintained by the Government of India on the one side and raised and maintained by the Acceding States on the other. For the purpose of joint action it is the Government of India that will appoint a person who will take charge of the supreme command and the existing forces will work under his guidance. That is the object of this Bill.

Then there are consequential amendments. In clause (2) of section 7 after the word "means" the words "a person of Indian nationality holding his majesty's commission in His Majesty's Indian Land Forces or" are to be inserted. That is, he must be a person of Indian nationality. Hitherto whosoever in charge could command and the object of this amendment is that a person belonging to Indian nationality alone should be in charge of the Forces.

This is a progressive piece of legislation and I would only ask the Honourable the Defence Minister with his very careful conduct of the defence of this country to see to it that we come by our own. This is an essential service and therefore we must not continue to be perpetually under the tutelage of foreigners.

I have absolutely nothing to say against the Commander-in-Chief who might maintain our Forces or train them properly for action. But that must only be for a limited period and steps must be taken to see that the defence of the country is entirely in the hands of our own men, whether they are taken out from acceding States or from the Indian Provinces.

[Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar]

Now, Sir, I am glad that the Honourable the Defence Minister has come back to take charge of his Bill.

Dr. B. V. Keskar (U.P.: General): Sir, I rise to support this Bill, but I consider that this Bill only tries to rectify certain inconsistencies existing at present, and certain inconveniences to which the Indian Army is put when the forces of acceding States are asked to join hands with the Indian Army. I submit that this is not sufficient. The Bill does not go far enough and I consider it necessary that very soon we should consider ways and means to see that the forces of Indian States are permanently assimilated and absorbed into the Indian Army. For the moment, this Bill applies only when they are asked to join, for example for certain purposes of war, the Indian Army. Then they are treated as part of the Indian Army. But otherwise they are autonomous; after the war they go back to their own State, the Indian Army has no more command over them and they also do not participate in the Indian Army.

This Bill is, no doubt, satisfactory as a make-shift arrangement, but it is necessary for us to see that the forces of the Indian States are permanently absorbed as viable units in the Indian Army itself. Otherwise, I consider that money is wasted because we know that some of the States forces are, from the point of view of equipment and efficiency, not at par with the Indian Army. If we absorb them into the Indian Army, we will see that they are as efficient and as well-equipped as other units of the Indian Army. No doubt, as the Honourable the Minister for States had once stated in reply to a question, keeping the States forces intact, though Defence is a matter which under the Instrument of Accession has been taken up by the Centre, is good for us because the States themselves pay for the expenses on their forces. I have no objection to the arrangement provided the efficiency of these armies is equal to ours, and at the same time they are, in equipment, in efficiency and organisation, at par with the units of our Army.

So, with the hope that very soon the Honourable the Minister for Defence will find out ways and means of bringing this into realization, I support the Bill.

Shri Mahavir Tyagi (U.P.: General): Sir, I must first congratulate our Honourable the Defence Minister that he is just in time; in his absence the Honourable the Home Minister was keeping the front quite warm. I must also congratulate the Whip who has brought him in time.

Sir, the Bill is quite good because it is a beginning to amalgamate the States forces with our Central Forces. But then there are one or two points which I would like the Honourable the Defence Minister to consider. The verbal objections I would not raise just now.

There is one point which strikes me and it is that the standard of the army which the States have been keeping till now with their limited resources, is not quite up to the mark. As far as I know, their pay is too small and sometimes people who do not deserve high offices have been given high ranks and offices. For instance, there is a State—I have just forgotten the name—a small State, on the border of which there are two or three small rivers. There is a military officer who controls the four or five small ferry boats pulled by men, and that honourable officer of the army is known as either the “commander-in-Chief of the Naval Forces” or the “Admiral of the Forces”. So, their ranks are sometimes too bombastic. Therefore, it would be a great clash if you give them a smaller name—those people will feel demoralised. And if you give the same names, it will be difficult for our seasoned Generals and Admirals to pay respects as they would in the case of those very ranks in our Army. So, it will be quite a serious job to adjust their ranks and arrange that those men in the State armies were quite hand in hand with men of our Army. But then if an adjustment is to take place as is provided in this Bill, we have also to keep in view the respective pay they receive. Now it is not logical to use an army of a State along with your own Army, taking the same job and accepting the same sacrifice from them, and not paying them equivalent pay. So the question the consideration of which has been omitted from this Bill is that they must also draw equivalent pay. A soldier of the State army must draw as much pay as a private or soldier of your Army; so should the Lieutenants and other Commissioned officers. If they are to go on drawing their own pay, work and co-operation will not be quite ideal and complete. So, my suggestion is that the Honourable the Defence Minister must also consider the proposal whether he can introduce in this very Bill a sub-clause saying that all such officers, sub-commissioned officers or other ranks of the armies of the States, will draw the same pay as men holding equivalent contemporary ranks in your Army. (Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: ‘They do’.) I beg to differ. The soldiers of the armies in the States do not draw as much pay and allowances and rations as the people in our Army do. Anyway, if they do, that is very good. My friend Mr. Hirday Nath Kunzru knows better about the Army and his word may be taken as an authority. If they do, then the objection will fall. But the Honourable Minister may just decide and see whether his policy is to see that those people are paid the same pay.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru (U.P.: General): When they serve with the Indian Army, all these things are observed.

Shri Mahavir Tyagi: Surely if these things are observed while the States forces serve with the Indian Army, then there was no need for this Bill at all. The Bill is to regulate how things are observed. Anyway, if they are given the same pay, I do not want to bother this House with my amendments or suggestions, but then the Honourable Minister has to say on the floor of the House that they draw the same pay.

Again, there are certain other changes which are called for. For instance there is a rank in this Bill known as the “Viceroy’s Commissioned Officer.” I would say that the Viceroy is no more and so the word “Viceroy’s” may be taken out of it: the Viceroy does not exist. Since the Viceroy does not exist, it may be “Governor-General’s Commissioned Officer” or something like that.

With these few observations I hope the Honourable Minister will go through this Bill as successfully as the Home Minister was carrying on in his absence.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Madras: General): Mr. Speaker, Sir, so far as the limited object of this Bill is concerned, there cannot be very much disagreement. But what I want to know, and what the country wants to know, is: how long are we to have these so-called State Forces? There was a time when there might have been some need for these Forces because there was no responsible government in the States and any moment, it was feared by the then British Government, the people might rise against their own Princes; therefore, the Princes should be allowed to keep their Forces. It is also true as a result of past history that these Princes—many of them—used to have may be much bigger forces, and therefore they thought it was a sort of great concession they were making to the Paramount Power by agreeing to get on with only smaller Forces and so on. But now I do not find that there is such a great need for separate State Forces in all these various States. Sometime ago, the Honourable Minister for States, Sardarji, assured us that the Central Government had power to supervise over the equipment, the numbers—I do not know activities—of these States Forces and he had a Special Officer for that purpose and he sent him round also and we were told that he was going to Hyderabad also. But we have known in recent weeks how difficult it has been for the Central Government to really control the various activities of this Army, its equipment, its training, its strength and various other details so far as Hyderabad is concerned. We do not want a similar situation ever to arise in regard to any other State. Under these circumstances I personally feel that the Central Government would do well to take the earliest possible steps to put an end to these State Forces and relieve these Maharajas and their Governments and their Dewans and their Ministries from this responsibility of having to maintain separate State Forces and leave the whole of the responsibility of keeping the Forces to the Central Government itself.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: It is one of the subjects where they have acceded.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Yes, especially as Defence is one of the subjects in regard to which all the States have acceded, I do sincerely hope that it would be possible for our very strong Minister of States to put an end to this institution of separate State Forces stationed in various places and then to think of settling this particular necessity of adjusting their various ranks, pay etc. as compared to our own Forces.

Babu Ramnarayan Singh (Bihar: General): Sir, more than a year has passed since we are free. I expected a comprehensive measure to regulate the Indian Army. In order to govern the Indian Army there are very few laws and regulations. After the British have gone, the British Army Act by which partly this Indian Army was governed is no more. I think therefore that the Honourable Minister should have brought a comprehensive measure to regulate and govern the Indian Army.

Sir, I take this opportunity to draw the attention of the Honourable Minister to the manner in which the Department is administered. I have known something of this. As I said, Sir, there are very few laws governing the Indian Army, but so far as the Administration is concerned, it appears that everything is done only according to the orders of somebody. In everything you will find nothing but only high-handedness and arbitrariness

Shri B. L. Sondhi (East Punjab: General): You want orders of nobody?

Babu Ramnarayan Singh: Orders I want, but orders ought to be given according to certain law. For instance, according to the Indian Army Act, the punishment of Indian soldiers and officers

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid that discussion will be out of the scope of the present discussion. The honourable member must confine himself to the scope of the Bill.

Babu Ramnarayan Singh: I thank you Sir. I entirely agree that I should make no reference to that. But as I said, a comprehensive measure is urgently required to regulate the Indian Army and besides that, good administration is also necessary in the Department. I say it is more necessary. I shall finish in a minute or two.

Mr. Speaker: He may come to the Bill.

The Honourable Mr. Rafi Ahmad Kidwai: He has nothing to say on the Bill.

Babu Ramnarayan Singh: According to the Indian Army Act, the Commander-in-Chief alone or people authorised by him can give only minor punishment, but in the present Administration we find that even major punishments are given

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid the honourable member is proceeding to irrelevancy.

Babu Ramnarayan Singh: I will not proceed further, but a comprehensive measure is necessary to regulate the Indian Army and to put the administration of the Department on a sound basis. A very comprehensive measure is necessary and I hope the Army Minister will bring such a measure.

Shri K. Santhanam (Madras: General): I have just one observation to make. In the new clause 6A it is said:

"When any of the Forces of an acceding State are acting with or, or are attached to, any body of His Majesty's Indian Land Forces, whether within or outside the State."

This Act should be applicable even when the Forces of a State are acting under instructions of the Government of India without any association with other Indian Forces. When they are going outside India, they should be available and so I suggest to the Honourable the Defence Minister that the words "going outside the State or . . ." must be added to make it more comprehensive and to cover all possible cases. For instance, if the Jodhpur Forces are asked to go to Jaisalmer to protect them, they should come under this Act, whether they are acting with other Indian Forces or not. As it is, the provision is not sufficiently comprehensive. I suggest he may consider this point.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh (Minister for Defence): Sir, I apologise to the House for being late when this Bill was taken up.

Babu Ramnarayan Singh: For the last time.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: This is a very simple measure and the criticism that has been made by honourable members seems to be a bit outside the scope of this Bill. The present Bill, the House will remember, is to replace the Ordinance that was enforced a few months ago. According to that Ordinance the King's Commissioned Indian Officers were not subject to Indian Army Act. The object of this Bill is to bring the King's Commissioned Officer under the Indian Army Act. King's Commissioned Officers were subject to British Army Act and after the 15th of August they were brought under the Indian Army Act by an Ordinance and the present Bill will bring all the King's Commissioned Officers under the Indian Army Act.

As regards the States Forces, I am afraid the criticism of Mr. Tyagi is based on some misunderstanding. The present object of the Bill is that all the States Forces which are with the Indian Union will be under the Indian Army Act. Where they are working or employed in a certain State or a Union of States, it does not make any difference. As soon as they come under or they work according to the instructions of the Indian Union, then they are under our control and it does not matter whether they are in a State or in Indian Union territory. So the defect that has been pointed out by Mr. Santhanam is really covered in this Section. Now, take the case of some of the State Forces which are at present employed in Kashmir. They are under the Indian Army Act and similarly, if those Forces are sent to some other State under the instructions of the Government of India, they will be subject to Indian Army Act and they will be under the orders of the Government of India.

Shri K. Santhanam: Then why do you want this Bill?

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: The object of this Bill is that the State Forces when they are within their respective States—for instance, the State Forces of Jodhpur within Jodhpur State: they are under that States Union—they are not under our control. In that Union they are entirely under the control of that Union, subject of course to the over-all supervision of the Indian Union, because as you know Defence is one of the three subjects in respect of which the States have acceded.

Shri K. Santhanam: The question is whether they are under the Indian Army Act. If they are under the Indian Army Act, then this Bill is useless.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: In their own State, at present they are not and I am afraid, Sir, that it will not be possible to bring them under the Army Act in their State at present. This subject is being discussed separately. Now for the training of the State forces, the scale of pay of the State forces, etc. it is a subject which is being dealt with separately. A Committee is going into this matter and I hope they will be able to suggest something by which we will be able to bring the training of the State forces and the scale of pay of State forces on the same level as the Indian forces.

It was also suggested, Sir, that the State forces should be amalgamated with the Indian Army. I am afraid, this is rather a ticklish question and I would not like to raise this at this stage. As I have already pointed out this matter is being dealt with separately and several meetings have been held and I hope that the Committee will be able to suggest some way out of this difficulty, but I can assure the House that it is the intention of the Government of India to bring about the training of the State forces, the standard of pay, etc. on the same level as that of the Indian Army.

Another criticism was made, Sir, about the removal of the word 'Viceroy'. That has already been done. Perhaps the honourable member did not notice this change that instead of this 'Viceroy's commissioned officers' the officers are now known as 'junior commissioned officers', (J.C.Os). That is all that I have got to say in connection with the Bill.

The other comprehensive Bill, that is, the revision of the Indian Army Act as a whole is quite a different subject and I am afraid, it is not possible to bring that Bill before this House for some time to come. In view of the changes that have taken place since the 15th August and the entirely new structure, the Army Act will have to be carefully revised and unless it has been carefully revised, it is not possible to bring that Bill before the House, but I am sure that when it has been thoroughly enquired into and suitable changes have been made, the Indian Army Act will be put before the House and the House will have the fullest opportunity to discuss and make any suggestions they may like.

Mr. Hossain Imam (Bihar: Muslim): In view of the statement of the Honourable the Defence Minister that the Viceroy's Commissioned Officers has been changed to that of Junior Commissioned Officers, would it not be better to change the word 'Viceroy's' into 'junior' in the present Bill? If the change has already been made, it is anomalous to have a provision in the Act mentioning the categories that does not exist.

Mr. Speaker: We shall see to that.

The question is:

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Army Act, 1911, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in clause 2 of the Bill, in the proposed section 6A, for the word 'are' wherever it occurs in line three, the word 'is' be substituted."

Sir, this is more than a mere drafting change. I think, Sir, in the interests of grammar, this is absolutely necessary. The House will be pleased to consider the structure of the sentences. It runs: "when any of the forces of an acceding State are acting with, or are attached to, any body of His Majesty's Indian Land Forces". The word "any" makes it a singular number and therefore the corresponding verb should be singular.

Mr. Speaker: Is "any" always a singular?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: There are exceptions in the case of Government. We say, "The Government are considering" but this is to invest the Government with some dignity, but we say "This Assembly is of opinion" and not "This Assembly are of opinion."

Mr. Speaker: I am referring to the word "any".

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: The word "any" implies the singular. All the forces means any force, of several forces. There are several forces and the context talks of any of the forces that is any force. When you speak of any force, the verb should be singular, unless we want to invest the forces with some amount of dignity, as we do in the case of Government or in the case of an editor or in the case of royalty. As we are not prepared to give the same amount of royal dignity to this Assembly, we say: "This Assembly is of the opinion" and we cannot say "Any of the forces . . . are acting with, or are attached to . . ."

Then again in the Army there should be some uniformity. They do not differ from each other but act as one body. So considered from that point of view also the singular is indicated. Sometimes we say, "the committee are of opinion". That is possible, but only from one point of view and that is when it is taken singly each member and separately. Then of course, we say "are", but when we take the Committee or Government as a single body without the plural significance, then they act as one and the singular verb is also to be used. That is the common acceptance of the situation. I submit, Sir, this change is necessitated by questions of grammar.

Mr. Speaker: I do not know whether the Honourable Minister accepts this.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: The present language is quite all right.

Mr. Speaker: "Any one of the boys" or "any of the boys?" That is the same thing.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I am absolutely clear on the point that it is singular.

Mr. Speaker: But the other view is also there. The question is:

"That in clause 2 of the Bill, in the proposed section 6A for the word 'are' wherever it occurs in line three, the word 'is' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The second amendment seems perhaps to follow the wording of the original Act.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: I do not accept that amendment.

Mr. Speaker: It has to be followed consistently. Is the objection clear to the honourable member?

This is an amending legislation and therefore the phraseology to be used in this particular clause has to be the same as the phraseology in the original Act and therefore the phrase "His Majesty's Indian Land Forces" has to be here also. This answers also the objection of Mr. Hossain Imam.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: After the 15th of August it would be wrong to say "His Majesty's Indian Land Forces". The fact that the Indian Army Act has not been amended in this respect is no ground for perpetuating a mistake. It is today an anachronism to say that the "Indian Forces" are "His Majesty's forces." The fact that it is so in the original Act is no reason why we should again commit the same mistake, provided it is a mistake, I think. We should accept the amendment and try to give retrospective effect to the Act itself.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: I do not accept the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think it is necessary to put the amendment to vote. The Honourable Minister will bear it in mind when he brings the comprehensive legislation.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: In that case, I should move the amendment.

Sir, I beg to move:

"That in clause 2 of the Bill, in the proposed section 6A, for the words 'His Majesty's Indian Land Forces', wherever they occur, the words 'The Indian Land Forces', be substituted."

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in clause 2 of the Bill, in the proposed section 6A, for the words 'His Majesty's Indian Land Forces', wherever they occur, the words 'The Indian Land Forces', be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Shri Mahavir Tyagi: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in clause 2 of the Bill, in the proposed section 6A, after the words 'Acceding State', occurring in line 2, the words 'or of a Union of Acceding States' be inserted."

Sir, this amendment is a very simple one. My meaning in moving this amendment is, while you take into account the forces of the acceding States, many of the States having amalgamated together, those forces have now become the forces of the Union instead of one particular State. Therefore we may have the following words: "When any of the forces of an Acceding State or a Union of Acceding States." I want to add the words "or a Union of Acceding States" so that the forces, now not belonging to the particular State which has acceded, but the forces belonging to the Union, may also come under the Act.

Mr. Speaker: Is not a union of States, a State? A Union itself is a State.

Shri Mahavir Tyagi: If that is your interpretation, I do not want to move it.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: A Union of States does not really make much of a difference. My difficulty in accepting this amendment is that the whole question has to be taken together. There are certain States where the Union has not yet been recognised. As the Honourable the Speaker has pointed out, a Union of States is also a State. Really this amendment does not serve any useful purpose. I would request the honourable member not to press it.

Mr. Speaker: I need not put it to the House. About the other amendment, I am afraid, that is out of order, in the sense that it is beyond the scope of the present Bill.

Shri Mahavir Tyagi: Then, it goes out.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 2 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 2 was added to the Bill.

Clause 3 was added to the Bill.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: Sir, I move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 4 of the Bill, for the words, 'His Majesty's Indian Land Forces', the words 'His Majesty's Land Forces' be substituted."

Sir, this was left out by mistake, and the Law Ministry pointed out this at the last minute. Therefore, I have moved this amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 4 of the Bill, for the words 'His Majesty's Indian Land Forces', the words 'His Majesty's Land Forces' be substituted."

I should like to know how the position stands with reference to the clause which we have just adopted. There also we have used the expression "His Majesty's Indian Land Forces." There also a similar expression will have to be used.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I ask, Sir, if the removal of the word 'Indian' will mean the Empire British forces? Why not after independence, restrict it to the Indian Land forces and why should we make the acceding States also submit. I thought slavery had disappeared. Why should we put the yoke over the heads of the acceding States also. They have also got independence; we have also got independence. Let us not get back to the British Land Forces. We say, Royal Indian Navy; we say Royal Indian Air Force. Why should we say in the case of the Land Forces alone British Land Forces? I am unable to understand this correctly. After the so called independence we have got, so far as this is concerned, we are putting our neck round the halter. I am far from it.

Shri K. Santhanam: I oppose the amendment. I think it is wholly inappropriate because it will extend the scope of this Bill to include all the British Forces wherever situate. We are now bringing a Bill to bring certain State Forces under the Indian Army Act. There is no purpose in removing the word 'Indian' in the first clause or in the later clauses.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I also oppose the amendment, because, by adopting it we would be denationalising ourselves. The expression would read as His Majesty's Land Forces and we want to remove the word 'Indian'. (Interruption). This is a very objectionable thing. The result would be, as an honourable member has suggested, we would become Anglo Indian Forces.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: Sir, the amendment, as I have already said, has been suggested by the Law Ministry, on account of an omission made in the original Bill. The correct position is something like this. The definition of a K.C.I.O. is one who holds His Majesty's Commission in His Majesty's Land Forces. Any one holding a Commission in His Majesty's Indian Land Forces would be called an I.C.O., Indian Commissioned Officer. If clause 4 sub-clause (1) of the Bill is allowed to stand as it is, a K.C.I.O. will not come under this Bill at all. The very purpose for which this Bill is brought forward will be defeated. A K.C.I.O. will not come under the Indian Army Act. That is why this amendment has been necessitated.

Mr. Speaker: I have not followed the argument. If the word 'Indian' is to be deleted from clause 4, should it be retained in clause 6A which has just been added?

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: I think it should be corrected wherever it occurs.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: It occurs in four places.

Mr. Speaker: There is yet a third reading of the Bill.

Shri K. Santhanam: In any case, the word 'Indian' has to be in the first part.

Mr. Speaker: That is what I wanted to know.

The question is:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 4 of the Bill, for the words, 'His Majesty's Indian Land Forces', the words 'His Majesty's Land Forces' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 4, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 4 as amended, was added to the Bill.

Clause 5 was added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and the Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill, as amended, be passed."

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill, as amended, be passed."

The motion was adopted.

INDIAN TELEGRAPH (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Honourable Mr. Rafi Ahmad Kidwai: (Minister for Communications). Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill to amend the Indian Telegraph Act, 1885, be taken into consideration."

Sir, the scope of the Bill has been explained in the Statement of Objects and Reasons. It is to extend the application of the Telegraph Act to the acceding States. As communications is one of the subjects which all the States will have to accede to the Union, it is proposed to amend the different Acts in the Communications Department to make them applicable to the acceding States, and to the whole of India instead of the existing provinces. Sir, I move.

Mr. Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the Bill to amend the Indian Telegraph Act, 1885, be taken into consideration."

Dr. B. V. Keskar (U.P.: General): Sir, I welcome the Bill, but we were under the impression that the acceding Indian States had already surrendered their communications to the guidance of the Central Government. We were all under a misapprehension and we find that we still have need to amend the Act to give us power in the matter of telegraphs and other relevant matters. I submit that with regard to other communications, with regard to ports, with regard to civil aviation

The Honourable Mr. Rafi Ahmad Kidwai: All that was done in the last session.

Dr. B. V. Keskar: I submit that with regard to Posts the matter is not very clear.

The Honourable Mr. Rafi Ahmad Kidwai: Already the necessary amending Bills have been brought before the House.

Dr. B. V. Keskar: Sir, I hope that, as it is written in the Instrument of Accession, all the communications would be effectively in the hands of the Central Government as soon as possible. Sir, I welcome the Bill.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill to amend the Indian Telegraph Act, 1885, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 2 and 3 were added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): Sir, I beg to move:

"That in clause 4 of the Bill, in part (b) of the proposed section 35, for the word 'construed', the words 'deemed to include' be substituted."

I submit this will follow from the contest. Sir, I move.

The Honourable Mr. Rafi Ahmad Kidwai: Sir, I am not a grammarian and so it is difficult for me to understand the distinction between what is contained in the Bill and what is now proposed. But the advice of my legal advisers is that the language of the Bill is more suitable than the words proposed in the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Need I put the amendment to the House?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: No, Sir.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 4 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 4 was added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and the Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Mr. Rafi Ahmad Kidwai: Sir, I move:

"That the Bill be passed."

Mr. Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the Bill be passed."

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): Sir, I want one doubt to be cleared about Hyderabad State and whether it would apply to that State. It is not an acceding State but there is a Standstill Agreement. So far as telegraphs and Communications are concerned, the Standstill Agreement keeps them going in those very terms which were in force before 15th August, 1947. Does this apply there also?

The Honourable Mr. Rafi Ahmad Kidwai: The honourable member must have noticed that instead of the word "provinces" we have substituted the word "India". So it applies all over the country without any exception.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Madras: General): Sir, in the light of the Honourable Minister's reply I wish to express my dissatisfaction at the manner in which the Hyderabad State was allowed to be in possession of its own telegraphs and post offices. I wish the Government of India had taken sufficient steps to take charge of that side of administration also when they were concluding this Standstill Agreement.

The Honourable Mr. Rafi Ahmad Kidwai: Every State possesses post offices and telegraph offices besides our own offices in that State. That was the position in Hyderabad and that is the position in several States. That position continues and we have got post offices and telegraph offices. The State also has its post offices. The Standstill Agreement merely extends the arrangement that existed before and we have not surrendered any of our offices in the State.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill be passed."

The motion was adopted.

COAL MINES PROVIDENT FUND AND BONUS SCHEMES BILL

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram (Minister for Labour): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill to make provision for the framing of a Provident Fund Scheme and a Bonus Scheme for persons employed in coal mines, be taken into consideration."

As stated in the Statement of Objects and Reasons, this Bill is primarily meant to put on the statute-book an Ordinance which was issued in April last. In 1946 the condition in the coal mines was very disturbing and we had a series of disputes between employers and employees. Coal being the basic industry on which existing industries mostly depend and on which also depends the future industrial development of the country, Government were very anxious to stabilise the labour forces in the coalfields. With that end in view we appointed in 1947 a conciliation board. The board gave an award which was accepted unanimously by the employers and the workers. We then proceeded to give effect to the recommendations of that award. One of the items recommended in that award was the introduction of provident funds for the coal miners. It also recommended that a bonus linked with attendance and production should be paid to the employees. The employers agreed to pay the bonus as well as to create a provident fund for the coal miners. In order to have legal sanction to this agreement we issued an Ordinance and under that Ordinance we have already formulated a bonus scheme which is working. We have also under our examination a provident fund scheme which will be soon issued. The bonus is being regularly paid to the employees there, and we have also asked the employers to deduct the amount of the provident fund contributions from the bonus of the qualified workers. We have also asked the employers to contribute their share of the provident fund. It will amount approximately to one anna in a rupee of the basic earning of the employees and the employers will also contribute an equal amount. The very important features of the provident fund scheme are that it is being experimented in an industry where the workers are not organised. It is easier to introduce any provident fund scheme in a factory where regular registers of workers are maintained.

But those who have any knowledge of the working conditions in the coal mines, will agree with me that a vast majority of the employees in the coal mines are casual workers. At intervals they return to their native homes where they are engaged in harvesting or other works connected with agriculture. It is only for short periods in the year that they go to the coalfields in order to supplement their income from agriculture by what they can earn in the coalfields. So the employers have taken the view that it is a tough job to introduce such a provident fund scheme for casual workers. But all the same, in spite of all these difficulties, we are determined to make it a success because on the success of this scheme depends the introduction of provident funds for the workers in this country in various unorganised industries.

Sir, I do not want to make any long speech. This Bill is a simple one but it has great potentialities and I hope the House will unanimously accept my motion.

Mr. Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the Bill to make provision for the framing of a Provident Fund Scheme and a Bonus Scheme for persons employed in coal mines, be taken into consideration."

Mr. R. K. Sidhva (C. P. and Berar: General): Sir, this Bill as the Honourable Minister has stated is the result of the Ordinance promulgated by him last April, and I congratulate him for having promulgated an Ordinance to establish a provident fund for the workers in coal mines. This Bill, Sir, although restricted to a particular class of workers, I heartily welcome. Whatever small measures, which are really overdue to the workers, are brought by this Government, will be really welcomed not only by the House but by the workers outside who are working in industries and other spheres.

It was also suggested, Sir, that the State forces should be amalgamated by Shri K. Santhanam (one of the panel of Chairmen).]

Sir, the provident fund is really a necessity and it is considered overdue for that class of people, who after their hard work of 25 to 30 years, could lay aside some amount in their old age for the maintenance of themselves and their families. That is an established fact. But unfortunately employers in India in their own interests have not realized this so far. The result is that differences and bitterness between the employers and employees have increased. A great deal of tension could have been avoided if the employers had arisen to the occasion in establishing in every industrial and other concerns a provident fund, and thereby cementing the differences which at present exist between the employers and employees. For their mutual trust and confidence, Sir, I do feel that the employers even now should realise that they themselves should introduce this scheme and that they should not allow the Government to bring in a measure whereby they would be forced to introduce such a scheme: whereas if it were introduced by themselves, it would be more welcome than if the scheme were forced upon them by Government. But we cannot help it. If the employers are so unreasonable, then the Government have to intervene and we are very glad that we have an Honourable Minister who, today, realizes the interests of the workers and who has at heart their real interest and all the time he is alert to see what the employees actually need. I would have rather wished that he had brought forward a Bill of a comprehensive nature, giving provident fund to every employee—people engaged in house-building, quarry workers and workers in very many other industries. But he has told us that this is an experimental measure. I do not see why the provident fund scheme should be still experimented with. It is absolutely essential if industry is to progress. Industrialists must be told how necessary it is for the good of the country and for themselves as well, that all these potential measures without loss of time should be introduced.

In the last Assembly Session I introduced a Bill for the establishment and grant of provident fund to all classes of workers by their employers. This Bill, makes provision for all the workers. Today, there are casual workers, as I stated, in docks, wharves, jetties, and tramways. They have no provident funds and they are the employees of the essential services. Although Government have come to the aid of the employers in declaring certain of these services as essential, yet no provision has been made for provident fund, although they belong to the essential services. As such when any employee gets an appointment elsewhere, on a higher salary he is precluded from applying because under the Essential Services Act there is a clause that they will be penalized if they leave their present employers without the latter's consent. Bearing in mind this factor, I hope the Honourable Minister, as he is always ready to help the workers, will kindly bring in the provident fund scheme at least for the jetty and dock labourers, who are really large in numbers, so that they may get the same facility as we are today providing to the coal mine workers.

My Bill, as I stated, definitely mentions what kind the provident fund would be. Here in this Bill the Honourable Minister has introduced a scheme whereby there will be a Board of Trustees who will function for the purpose of this provident fund and the bonus scheme. The Bill does not mention what the employers will contribute but he was good enough to say in reply to a question from me that the employees contribution would be one anna per rupee, which is the quota also that the employers would contribute. Generally in most of the companies, the employers give in some instances double, and in some one and a half, the share of the contribution of the employees. I do feel that the employers ought to be generous in view of the large profits they make and give a larger share than what the employees give. I do feel that there should have been a proviso that such and such amounts should be contributed by employers and employees. That would have given us an opportunity to move our amendments. But unfortunately the Honourable Minister has devised a new method, which of course may be beneficial, or it may not be so! I would have really preferred that the amounts should have been mentioned in the Schedule to this Bill.

I do not know whether the Board which shall be formed will also see that on these contributions interest also will be given to the employees. Under the

[Mr. R. K. Sidhva]

Provident Fund Act all this money has to be kept absolutely separate and the interest accrued should be due to the employees. In some provident funds there is a proviso for compound interest. I do not know what is the idea as far as the interest is concerned for this class of coal mine workers, whether the trustees in their agreement or whatever the memorandum may be called would mention the interest as well as the contribution of the employers and the employees. I would like to be more enlightened on this. If the scheme has not yet been finalised I would suggest to the Honourable Minister to see that the employers' contribution is more, if not double or $1\frac{1}{2}$, it should be at least somewhat more than what the employees give. That will be a really generous attitude on the part of the employers or industrialists. I am intentionally using the word "generous", although I consider it their duty to contribute and satisfy the workers who today bring in larger revenues and profits to these industrialists.

Having said all this, I certainly again congratulate the Honourable the Labour Minister for always being alert and in every session of the Assembly bringing in one or other kind of legislation for the benefit of the labourers and workers. I am very happy and I am sure a large section of the House is also happy and the workers will always remember him, because whereas in the previous assemblies these workers were absolutely neglected there is in this Free India today a Minister who does not forget the labourers and he brings in some measure or the other in every session.

Shrimati Renuka Ray (West Bengal: General): Sir, I rise to support this measure, which as the Honourable Minister told us, seeks to ratify an Ordinance which has already come into being. Speaking on this Bill I am reminded of other days, of a time when a different government was in power. Some of us who are still here today, such as my honourable friend Prof. Ranga, will remember that in spite of every effort on our part it was impossible to make the Government understand the vital need for bringing in amenities for the mine workers. The whole subject came under the public eye and the attention of the predecessor of this Assembly was drawn to this subject at the time when the question of the withdrawal of the permission for women working in mines was done without the consent of the people of this country. In spite of every effort that we made at that time for amenities to coal mine labour it was very difficult to get a start with and when it did come it came very slowly. At that time it would have been impossible to suggest a scheme of provident fund or a bonus scheme, for much less that we asked for was denied. As soon as this measure goes through this House perhaps in a few hours it will be placed on the statute book and this shows the tremendous changes that have taken place.

My honourable friend who preceded me referred to the fact that the Labour Minister has brought some very good pieces of legislation for workers. I wholeheartedly endorse it. I would say more. It is not merely bringing of laws on to the statute book that will help us, but it is the implementation of such schemes that is most important and I would say that the Labour Minister has shown that he has a very practical insight. He not only plans and has legislation passed but he realises the very great need to see that these plans are executed properly. To a very large extent the execution of such plans depends on the co-operation not only between the provinces and the Centre but also co-operation between the employer and labour. So when my honourable friend Mr. Sidhva says "Why don't you make it more precise, get the employer to subscribe more and ask him to be more generous" I feel that this is idealistic. What the Honourable the Labour Minister is trying to do is that if we can get this done we will get as much as we can possibly do for the present. This is the first time that a provident fund is being established for labour, which is really casual labour. As we all know labour in mines is not permanent in the sense that the mines does no work right through the year. For this reason it is very much more difficult to bring in any kind of provident fund scheme and work it properly than in any other type of labour. So to a large extent it must be experimental in the beginning. Sir, I support the Bill as it is and I do not agree with my honourable friend that we can do anything more about it at the moment.

In regard to the other suggestion that we should have such schemes in all other types of labour I agree with Mr. Sidhva. But here also it is not merely the passing of legislation that matters but its implementation. It is perhaps better to go a little slow in passing legislation, so that we can get these things implemented when the legislation has been passed. It would be no earthly use if we had a whole heap of legislation enacted and put on the statute book and when it came to putting them into operation we found that we could not go ahead with them. My praise for the Honourable the Labour Minister is more on this aspect that he realises the realities and difficulties and in spite of it he goes ahead with legislation. He is not just an idealist. I do not have any quarrel with idealism: I believe in it. But in regard to these matters one must have a practical attitude: otherwise one cannot go ahead. Sir, I support this measure. I am sure there cannot be a single member in this House who does not support it and I do congratulate the Honourable the Labour Minister for the manner in which he has gone on with labour legislation.

Dr. P. S. Deshmukh (C.P. and Berar: General): Sir, there cannot be two opinions with regard to either the desirability of this legislation or the fact that the Labour Minister has been looking after the interests of labour in India to the best of his ability and to the largest extent possible. The honourable speaker who preceded me seemed to differ from the points raised by my honourable friend Mr. Sidhva. I for one am more in agreement with my honourable friend Mr. Sidhva. The first point I would like to make is that the Bill appears to follow more or less wholly the terms of the Ordinance. I wonder if it was so practically impossible to alter the terms of the Ordinance and to have brought before the House a legislation different in character from the one we have before us. For instance, I would like to ask whether it was not possible to say that every worker in a coal mine shall by the very fact that he works in a coal mine get a provident fund and a specific bonus, and whether it was not possible specifically to provide in the Act itself that he should get it ipso facto without its being made dependent on the fact that Government will frame a scheme notify about it. Then the rates will be published and made applicable. I would also like to know whether it was not possible. When we are going to place on the statute book a permanent legislation, to make it compulsory in the case especially of the mine workers. When we work such a scheme of compulsory provident fund and bonus in respect of the mine workers, then probably in a year or two it might have been possible for us to extend the same benefits, as my honourable friend Mr. Sidhva has so earnestly suggested, to the Port Trust Workers and others. If it is possible I would like the same benefit to be given to Port Trust and similar workers as a matter of course. If it is possible to alter the terms of the enactment I would like it to be made absolutely compulsory for every employer that he shall pay to every mine worker a specific provident fund and bonus. A mine worker would thus get a provident fund ipso facto as well as bonus and it would not be necessary for the Government to interfere at every stage or to frame a scheme or to lay down any varying rates.

Sir, it has been pointed out by the honourable speaker who just sat down that there will be many practical difficulties. I should think it will be far easier to work out this sort of scheme because then I do not think any Inspectors even will be necessary. Every employee will be entitled to get it and he who does not get it will be entitled to demand it. In that case I think that the appointment of Inspectors and all provisions which are consequential would be unnecessary. The labour welfare officers who are already employed may be able to look after this matter and see that the provident fund benefit and bonus are given.

There is another point where I am in the fullest agreement with my honourable friend Mr. Sidhva and that is that the employers ought to pay something more than the contribution that the employees would make. We have Sir, the instance of teachers working in private institutions. The teacher pays about half an anna in the rupee, the private management pays half an anna and the Government pays one anna. So, for every half an anna that a teacher contributes from his own funds, the total provident fund he gets comes to about 2 annas. In the present case his contribution is likely to be 50 per cent. The point has been kept rather vague, but the idea of Government in all probability is that the employer will not contribute anything very much more than what the employee does. I would press upon the Government that the contribution of the employer should be double that of the employee. Otherwise the whole sum would be trivial and insignificant, and I do not know whether it will be worth while giving him this insignificant amount. It will be half his own sacrifice and he will be getting just one anna in the rupee. The trivialness of the amount may also make the whole effort not worth while. I would like to press this point of view upon the Honourable Minister.

If the two points that I have made are likely to appeal to the Honourable Minister I would like to make a third point and that is to suggest that this Bill may be referred to a Select-Committee to thrash out these two points, and if it is possible to amend this Bill and bring in this very Bill in a different shape which will contribute automatically to the welfare of coalminers.

Mr. Chairman: Has the honourable member tabled a motion to this effect?

Dr. P. S. Deshmukh: I have not.

Mr. Chairman: Then it is a suggestion which cannot be operative now.

Dr. P. S. Deshmukh: The Honourable Minister could withdraw the Bill and bring in a new Bill. That course is open to him.

These are the two points I wish to make and if the step I have suggested were to be taken by the Honourable Minister we would be saving much of the time of the House and we would be conferring a real and a lasting benefit upon the employees. I know the Honourable Minister has the benefit of the labourers really at heart. Probably it was due to pressure of work that these two points escaped his attention. I therefore think he might do well to consider my suggestions for making the Bill still more effective and take the steps I have suggested.

Mr. Hossain Imam (Bihar: Muslim): While welcoming this measure I wish to sound two notes of warning. Firstly, I find a tendency that we get skeleton laws passed in the Constituent Assembly and the details are left to be filled by the executive which deprives this House of the right and utility of furnishing suggestions and making the law more complete, more useful and more comprehensive. I agree that there is a world of difference between a foreign government and a national government whom we can trust. But after all is said and done let us realize that the trust which we impose is not a trust on the Minister alone; it is a trust on the permanent executive who are there. Are they as much conversant with the condition of the people, living as they do in the seclusion of the secretariat, as the members of this House who have everyday to come in contact with the people and know where the shoe pinches? I therefore suggest that in future we should have more comprehensive measures, giving a smaller amount of rule-making power to the executive than we are doing in this measure. The whole of this Bill is just an enabling one and we have not got any concrete thing to build the house on.

Secondly, I wish to sound another note of warning, namely, that we have been during the past concentrating on ameliorating the condition of the labour without trying to improve his outturn. As is perhaps known, India is among the last in the raising per man per hour of coal. The best results are obtained by Russia; the second by U.S.A.; and England is fairly high up in the list of the efficiency of coal miners. The Indian coal miner is the worst. And the greatest reason for that is his absenteeism, his laziness and his want of—if you will excuse my saying so—the urge to earn more. May I mention that the condition of the labourer is that as soon as he gets some work in the village he leaves the coalfield, no matter however high he is paid, because he feels he has got his own work to do in the village, his own lands to cultivate. He is absent for three to four months. What I suggest is that in making the rules for this Provident Fund you can so arrange things that it will be more advantageous to the labourer to remain a constant labourer rather than be a periodical one. Today you have got experts in every walk of life. Mining also requires men who know their job and who have the power to do it. I agree that the conditions of the mines are such that it is conducive to the health of the miners for them to absent themselves at times for short spells, but not for long spells. I therefore suggest in framing the rules for the Provident Fund, care should be taken to give the coal mine worker an inducement to be a more regular worker, and in the bonus scheme we should take care that he should improve his work, that he should become more expert and raise more coal than he has been doing. I have to make these suggestions in general terms because the Bill does not provide for them. I know amendments could be moved, but I am perfectly confident that the Honourable Minister and his Secretary are so wide awake and so keen to help labour that when the final scheme is framed I hope all these things will be taken into consideration and our labour will improve and will be a better labour.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Madras: General): Mr. Chairman, Sir, if Ordinances are to be welcomed at all at any time, they are welcome specially for a purpose like this. Generally they are obnoxious to me and I am sure they are obnoxious to this House, but this is one Government, anyhow in the history of our own country, that has resorted to Ordinances in order to improve the conditions of our labour, and that I consider to be a great feather in the cap of my honourable friend Mr. Jagjivan Ram.

Sir, my honourable friend Mr. Hossain Imam was rather critical of labour in our country, and especially mine labour. I wish to tell him that if their output is so low it cannot be their own fault. The conditions of employment provided by the employers are themselves to a very great extent responsible for it.

Mr. Hossain Imam: I come from that part of the country where coal is mined.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Yes, I know. But my honourable friend ought to know that the conditions of employment and the implements they are provided with are not half as good as they are in England or in other countries of the West. Under those circumstances you cannot very well expect our miners to show as good an output as the workers in other countries.

Secondly, Sir, he has accused them of being lazy. Why are they lazy? Is it simply because they want to be lazy? They are not lazy in their villages, they are not known to be lazy people in their own hill tracts. They become lazy here because they are not having enough to eat and enough of other comforts. Therefore, their lassitude, indeed their tiresomeness, is now general mistaken for laziness and then they are being branded as being lazy, and paid less also and accused in the manner in which my honourable friend has accused them.

Then there is this question of absence of incentive to earn more. This is an old, old argument trotted out by capitalists in the past, but I am surprised how my honourable friend who has evinced a great interest in labour has come to mouth this argument. It is an extraordinary argument. I do not think even these hill people, these Adibasis, are indifferent to any incentive to earn more. If that is so, then there would not have been these strikes, there would not have been this increasing absenteeism itself, there would not have been this unwillingness to go and work at the mines, there would not have been any necessity for this Board of Conciliation to suggest that emergent steps should be taken by Government in order to institute these two schemes of provident fund and bonus. It is because they were not being paid enough and they wanted to earn more and they could not get enough of earnings from these employers, that these people began to refuse work and for that reason all these schemes have had to be produced. Therefore, it shows that they do certainly have an incentive to earn more.

Then there is the third complaint, that is the complaint of absenteeism. Why is it there? I do not think, first of all, that the anxiety of these workers to go back to their own villages and cultivate their own fields and enjoy the rural atmosphere in their villages for a few months in any year is at all wrong. It is good; otherwise what would be the fate of these people if they are to be condemned to live at the pit-heads throughout the year under the conditions that prevail there—the dearth, the filth, the dust, the lack of proper housing accommodation, bathing accommodation and various other facilities that these workers much need—men, women and their children—and even educational facilities. Under these circumstances, I think it is very wise indeed on their part to be thinking of going back to their own villages, may be for a couple of months to replenish their health and also to look to their own fields, and come back to the mines.

Indeed, one of the results that this scheme is intended to yield is to minimise this absenteeism, to induce workers not to remain a day longer than necessary in their villages, to come back again so that they will become entitled to more and more of this bonus, more and more of this provident fund.

I wish to say that this indeed is a revolutionary measure. Take England, is there a scheme for provident fund for casual workers there? I have not come across any till now. In America or in the other countries of the West it has not been instituted till now. In this country this is being instituted today. As our honourable lady Mrs. Renuka Ray has said, we have been asking for a thing like this and we could not get it. This is really a sort of a leap in the dark because we do not know how it is going to work. Certainly it is an experiment, but if an experiment is going to be made in the social sphere then it is well worth making this experiment because if it succeeds then we will extend it to more than fifty million workers in this country. For instance, you have got your agricultural workers—not the day to day workers, you have got the workers employed on monthly contracts and workers employed on annual contracts; those people have till now not been provided with any provident fund. They have got to be provided with this scheme. Then it has got to be extended also to the day to day agricultural workers, too.

My honourable friend, the Minister in charge has told me that it is not necessary that a worker should stick to any one particular mine. It is enough so long as he works as a miner; it does not matter if he moves from one mine to another. All that he has got to do is to take a discharge certificate from one mine owner and go to another and get it notified there in the other register that he has been admitted. That is enough for him, and everywhere he will be provided the necessary facilities for provident fund as well as bonus. Therefore, all that the worker has got to do is to be loyal to that particular industry, that is the coal-mining industry. So long as he does that he is assured of these two facilities.

Similarly, if the same facilities were to be extended to agricultural workers also, or even to textile workers, dockyard workers and the jetty workers and the ordinary transport workers in our towns, and so on, you would then find that the object that my honourable friend Mr. Hussain Imam has, that is to induce more and more workers to stick to their work and thus become specialists, and therefore increase their skill and so on, would soon be achieved through similar schemes than through any other imaginable method. Therefore, I have no hesitation whatsoever in calling this a revolutionary measure and an excellent experiment and I do wish it every possible success.

Shri Khandubhai K. Desai (Bombay: General): While I, Sir, accord my full and wholehearted support to the Bill before this House, I would like to make a few observations. The condition of the mine workers was the worst in this country among the industrial workers and their condition being the worst, it created during the last few years a very serious situation in the country, because if coal production does not come up to the expected level other industries will suffer. Under these circumstances I believe it right that the Government thought that something requires to be done in order to satisfy the miners and to keep them on the mines with a view to have more production. Therefore, it is a matter of real satisfaction that the lowest rung in the ladder as far as workers are concerned, has been for the first time considered and their conditions sought to be improved. I am quite sure that the Honourable the Labour Minister, if he had more time at his disposal, would have brought a really comprehensive measure which might be applied to the employees working in other established industries in this country. I think that the Bill before this House is not the last word, but as a matter of fact, it is the first word in this piece of legislation. I do not look upon this Bill, as some of my friends have said, as an experimental measure. It is not an experimental measure. It is the first step towards something which ought to have permanent character in this country (Prof. N. G. Ranga: 'Hear, hear') and we, Sir, as far as provident fund and pension is concerned, cannot afford even to think of the failure of either a provident fund scheme or a pension fund scheme. It has to come in and I think it may be that this is just probing what we can do (Prof. N. G. Ranga: 'Say a glimpse into the future'), but not with a view to experiment. It is with a view to take further steps not in the remote future but in the immediate future. If this Bill can be applied and is going to be applied to the coalmines, there is no reason why such a Bill cannot be made applicable to four or five established industries in the country like, cotton, jute, plantations, docks and others. I also feel, Sir, that though the scope of this Bill is very limited in its extent, it gives us an idea as to what can be done for the employees working in the industries.

Sir, something was said about absenteeism of the workers, about their low efficiency and about their laziness. Let us look at this question from a different angle. Have these people up to now been treated as responsible citizens of this country? Of course, every one will at once admit that they have not been treated as responsible citizens of this country. They have had no self-respect; they have had no voice either in the administration of the industry or in the administration of the Government. Now that, under the new set-up, they have got adult franchise, it is they who are practically the rulers along with all other adult population of this country. The provident fund scheme does give them a sort of self-respect, a sort of security. Assuming for the sake of argument that most of the Secretariat employees today working in the Government, municipality or such other institutions and who are called, "white collar employees", are deprived of the provident fund schemes which they are enjoying, are also deprived of all the pension schemes which they are enjoying, will they work as efficiently as they work today? The question of provident fund or pension is as much in the interests of the employees who are working as it is in the interests of the nation, and therefore, Sir, I hope this Bill is, as I said, the first word in such legislation and not the last word, and at the earliest opportunity,—and the earliest opportunity that I visualise is the Budget Session—so in the Budget Session I hope the Honourable the Labour Minister will bring in a comprehensive Bill wherein not only the outline of a scheme but a full scheme which can be made applicable to all the industries will come before this House.

With these words, I wholeheartedly support this first word in such legislation.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: Sir, I had no intention of giving any comprehensive reply to the debate, but a few questions have been raised which demand a reply from me. Complaint has been made that such measures encourage absenteeism and reduce efficiency, whereby production suffers. This is an idea, Sir, which has been created by the employers in this country in order to condemn the working class. If one were to analyse, one will find that the workers in India are not less efficient than workers in other countries. As regards the coal industry I may inform the House that the employers experimented with imported labour from England and Canada and they found that the Indian miner was more efficient than others. (Some Honourable Members: 'Hear, hear'). Some friends here compare the production per man hour. It is very easy to compare the figures of production, but I would ask those friends to compare the figures of earnings as well. If a miner in England produces one-quarter of a ton and if a miner in Jharia or Dhanbad produces one-eighth of a ton naturally one will say that the production of the Indian miner is 50 per cent of the English miner or that the efficiency of the Indian miner is less than that of the English miner, but if one were to know that the wages of the English miner is four times that of the Indian miner, one will come to the conclusion that the Indian miner produces double what the English miner produces and thereby the efficiency of the Indian worker is hundred per cent. more than the English worker. This is a very simple fact, Sir, but it has always been ignored because the employers, having all the possible vehicles of propaganda under their control, have created a fog by which the realities have been screened.

As regards production, it has been a cry that production is suffering. Is only the labourer responsible for the fall in production? Are there not so many other factors which contribute to increased production? Have we been able to remove all the defects by which production is suffering? If production is suffering, we cannot throw the entire blame on the working class. So far as my experience goes, Sir, after the Industrial Truce Resolution I can say with some pride that the working class has responded very manfully and very courageously to our call, and if we have been deceived and disillusioned, we have been disillusioned by a large section of the employers. Production in textile industry has increased. Today production in coal industry has increased and I am faced with a large number of retrenchments and dismissals in the coalfields because there has been overproduction in the sense that there are no transport facilities and raising has to be stopped. If production suffers on that account, that is no fault of the worker. So we cannot say today that production is suffering on account of the workers. Our machineries in factories have grown old; we have not been able to repair and replace them for the last eight or ten years. Have not all these factors contributed to a decrease in production? The cost of living is soaring very high. Only this morning I was examining how many strikes were declared due to non-implementation of Awards recommending increase in dearness allowance and I was surprised to find, Sir, that most of the strikes were due to this factor or due to demand for increase in dearness allowance. Most of the stoppages of work were due to this reason and considerable mandays were lost. So when we stand up and blame the workers for a fall in production, we should also look to the other factors which contribute to a decrease in production. And if we are to examine that we will not blindly blame the workers alone.

As regards absenteeism, when last year, we were insisting for increasing the wages of the coal miners, the same plea of absenteeism was urged by the employers that if the earnings of the workers were increased, there will be a tendency on their part not to work for more days in a week than they were working before. But the employers have been disillusioned. The attendance has increased. We took particular care to link bonus with production and attendance, and I may inform the House, Sir, that we are going to link this Provident Fund with attendance as well.

My honourable friend, Mr. Sidhva was anxious that Provident Fund should be introduced for all industries and that the employers should voluntarily do this in their concerns. Mr. Sidhva during the last session introduced a Bill to that effect. I do not agree with that view. I do not want individual employers to institute provident funds for their employees alone. I want provident fund on an industry basis or on a regional basis. If the provident fund is on an industry basis, as it is proposed today here, the workers stand to gain. Today the employers are decidedly in a better position than the workers and if the provident fund is only for a single unit of an industry and if the worker is discharged or dismissed from that factory, he loses the benefit of a provident fund. But here even if a worker is discharged from one colliery and if he gets employment in another colliery, his provident fund is not forfeited. His name exists on the register of the provident fund. The only difference is that the employer's share of the contribution will be realized from the new employer, but the worker will all along remain on the register and he will have the benefit of the provident fund. And, therefore, I will request my honourable friend, Mr. Sidhva to revise his idea and he should always insist that the provident fund should be either on industry-wise basis or region-wise it should not be factory-wise.

Another point has been raised and that is, that the employer's share should have been greater than the employee's share. Sir, as I said in the very beginning, this scheme is based on an award of the Conciliation Board, which was voluntarily agreed to between the employers and the employees and one of the terms of that agreement was, that compulsory contributory provident fund will be instituted in the coalfields, the contribution of the employers and the employees being equal. It does not look dignified on our part to alter the terms of that agreement. It is to give effect to an agreement and therefore the contribution from the employers and the employees will be equal.

As regards introducing or instituting provident fund in other industries, we stand committed to that. There is no shirking that responsibility. If our country has not reached a stage where we can think of old age pension in the near future, this is the least that we can do at this stage and we have to do it. And when I said, Sir, that this is an experimental measure, I did not mean that a provident fund is an experimental measure. What I mean to say is that we have to gain experience of its working before we introduce it in other industries; not that I mean to say that if this experiment fails, the future of provident fund in this country is doomed; that is very far from my conception. I have been working on this scheme for the last six months. I know what difficulties we have to face. Dr. P. S. Deshmukh suggested that all the employees in the coal fields should have been brought on the register and this scheme should have been introduced to all of them. Had he some idea of the working of the coal fields, he would not have said that. The worker goes to a coal field, works for a few weeks, finds the work un-congenial and returns to his village and will never go to the coal fields again for his whole life. Do you propose that his name should be registered, that all the formalities of instituting a provident fund on his behalf should be done with no benefit to him and a lot of botheration to the employer and to the staff that we maintain there? No. You cannot compare the workers in the coal fields to the workers in the factories and therefore, we have not brought a comprehensive measure before the House, because we have to prepare a scheme in consultation with the employers and the labourers there. For the last six months we have been formulating one thing and revising it again in consultation with the workers, their leaders, their unions and the employers and it is after these processes that we have been able to devise something by now.

As regards interest and things like that, I would draw the attention of my honourable friend, Mr. Sidhva to page 3 of the Bill, item 8 of the schedule. Of course, the workers will get interest; they will get compound interest the money that we will get, we will certainly invest somewhere where the money can earn; we will not allow the money to lie idle. It is, of course, a simple thing.

This, as I said, Sir, is a very simple bill, but I visualise it has great potentialities, in the sense that it is for the first time not only in this country, as far as my information goes, throughout the world, that a provident fund has been instituted for casual works. I wish to say a word about dock workers. My honourable friend, Mr. Sidhva is aware that last year we passed a Bill for the de-casualization of the Dock workers and the Act contains a provision that a scheme will be formulated for the welfare of the workers. That scheme may very well contain a provision of provident fund for the dock-workers. But quite apart from that, I may assure the House, Sir, that we are very anxious to institute provident fund for workers in various industries. It may not be possible to bring that Bill in the budget session because, as my honourable friend, Mr. Khandubhai Desai knows, our hands are already full for the budget session. He knows that we have already certain measures which the Government proposes to introduce in the Budget session and it may not be possible to bring that measure in the Budget session. But, it will not take a long time. Before a measure is brought before this House, it takes, as you are very well aware, a good deal of time of our staff to prepare that Bill. It is not simply the drafting of the Bill; before that, we have to work out the details and so many other things. I may not promise that I will bring the Bill in the Budget session. But, we are anxious that we should try to institute provident fund for other industries as well. I hope the House will accept the Bill.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That the Bill to make provision for the framing of a Provident Fund Scheme and a Bonus Scheme for persons employed in coal mines, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): Sir, I beg to move:

"That in part (b) of clause 2 of the Bill, for the words 'below ground', the words 'below the ground' be substituted."

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: I do not accept it.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I do not press, Sir.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That clause 2 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 2 was added to the Bill.

Clauses 3 to 9 were added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 10 of the Bill, for the word 'jurisdiction', the words 'functions and powers' be substituted."

Sir, the text of the Bill says that the Central Government may define their jurisdiction. In fact, functions and powers would be more proper. Jurisdiction is more abstract. Functions and powers are more understandable and are concrete, it seems.

Mr. Chairman: I think the honourable member is under a misapprehension. His defines which Inspector will have jurisdiction over which mine.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: If that is the idea of jurisdiction, I am not pressing this amendment.

Sir, I beg to move:

"That in part (c) of sub-clause (2) of clause 10 of the Bill, for the words 'cause to believe', the words 'grounds for believing' be substituted."

Sir, this seems to be more appropriate.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: I do not accept it.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That in part (c) of sub-clause (2) of clause 10 of the Bill, for the words 'cause to believe', the words 'grounds for believing' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That clause 10 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 10 was added to the Bill.

Clauses 11 and 12 were added to the Bill.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: Sir, I want a clarification from the Honourable Minister as regards the scheme which he desires to propagate. If he would kindly enlighten us and give some of the details of the scheme, the House would be grateful.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: I have already given outlines of the scheme. I cannot give the details at this stage. They are being formulated in consultation with the industry and the workers.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That the First and the Second Schedules stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

The First and the Second Schedules were added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and the Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: Sir, I move:

"That the Bill be passed."

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That the Bill be passed."

The motion was adopted.

FACTORIES BILL

Mr. Chairman: Next motion: The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram:

Mr. R. K. Sidhva (C.P. and Berar: General): Sir, the next Bill may be taken on Monday. That is a big Bill.

Mr. Chairman: It may be started now and continued on Monday I do not think it is right to lose Assembly's time. I would suggest to the Honourable Minister to proceed with the motion.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram (Minister for Labour): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill to consolidate and amend the law regulating labour in factories, as reported by the Select Committee, be taken into consideration."

Sir, in moving that the Factories Bill, 1948, as amended by the Select Committee be taken into consideration, I may be permitted to place before the House the salient features of the Bill and the more important changes sought to be made in the Factories Act, 1934.

The House will, no doubt, recall what I mentioned in the statement of Objects and Reasons, that compared to the provisions of the Bill submitted to the House, the Act of 1934 was not only limited in scope, but left many essential and vital matters to the rule making powers of Provincial Governments. This defect has been remedied in the Bill, and all minimum requirements, particularly in respect of health, safety and welfare in regard to which uniformity is most essential have been provided for in the Act itself. The rules framed by Provincial Governments will hereafter be confined to their legitimate role of making provision for the less important and incidental and procedural matters. The Bill differs from the 1934 Act in another important respect also and that is as regards the responsibility for deciding whether the requirements of the Act have been complied with by an occupier or not. The 1934 Act leaves far too much to the discretion of Inspectors, which in view of the specialised and hazardous nature of many processes, they are not able to discharge effectively. The Bill contains detailed provisions which will lift this burden off their shoulders. One of the main principles sought to be emphasised by the new provisions is that an occupier who takes upon himself the responsibility for a manufacturing process must also bear the responsibility for ensuring that it is carried on with due regard to the safety, health and welfare of the workers. He can no longer excuse himself from responsibility for defects by shifting it on to Inspectors. The scope of the Factories Act has considerably been enlarged and the distinction between perennial and seasonal factories done away with. A further important provision relates to the compulsory registration and licensing of factories. The previous permission in writing of the Provincial Government or the Chief Inspector is required for the construction and extension of any factory and plans and specifications have to be submitted and scrutinised before such permission is given.

I may remind the House that this comprehensive amendment of the Factories Act of which I have mentioned only a few salient features has received the very careful consideration not only of Government but of the Standing Labour Committee and the Indian Labour Conference, both of which are tripartite bodies fully representative of employers and labour. While agreeing generally with the lines on which the Act was sought to be amended the employers' representatives were opposed to certain details such as the extension of the scope of the term "factory", the elimination of the distinction between seasonal and perennial factories, the pre-licensing of factories, the making of compulsory provision for the maintenance of canteens and the making of provision for accommodation for the storage of clothes and seating facilities. The workers' representatives disagreed with the employers' representatives on most of these points. They expressed satisfaction at the comprehensive nature of the amendments proposed by Government but were anxious that Government should be responsible for the treatment of sick workers and their maintenance during illness—matters which have since been taken care of by the Employees' State Insurance Act. They were also of the opinion that three kinds of factory Inspectors, viz., technical, medical and welfare, should be appointed and that children below the age of 15 should not be employed in factories. All these and a large number of opinions received from experts as well as the public were taken into consideration by the Select Committee.

As honourable members will see from the amended Bill placed before the House, the Select Committee made a number of important changes which have added materially to the usefulness of this important enactment. The new Act will be applied to all States acceding to the Centre in respect of labour legislation. The provision of a minimum standard of 500 cubic feet of space per worker in case of new factories, effective arrangements for the supply of wholesome drinking water and the provision of lunch rooms are some of the amenities which the Select Committee thought should be provided to add to the physical comforts of workers. The daily and quarterly limits of overtime have been fixed and the extent of the annual leave with wages has been raised from 10 days per year to one day for every 20 days of work in the case of an adult and to one day for every 15 days of work in the case of a child. Workshops belonging to Federal Railways have been exempted from the provisions of Chapter VIII in view of the fact that the leave rules of Federal Railways are more liberal than the provisions contained in the Bill.

I do not propose to take more of the time of the House with a detailed account of the measures placed before them. It is my earnest hope that the House will find the new Act a distinct improvement on the old. It may not come up to the expectation of all in some respects while some may consider that we are going too fast; but on a balance of the various considerations the House—let me hope—will find the measure appropriate to the spirit of the times. Legislative measures such as this have constantly to be kept under review so that weaknesses may be detected and improvements effected. This will be our constant endeavour. I now commend this Bill as amended by the Select Committee, to the favourable consideration of the House.

Mr. Chairman: Motion moved:

"That the Bill to consolidate and amend the law regulating labour in factories, as reported by the Select Committee, be taken into consideration."

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: Sir, we just now passed a measure on which the Honourable Minister was applauded from all sides of the House. With regard to this Bill I have to congratulate the Honourable Minister and also the members of the Select Committee because certain important suggestions made while the Select Committee motion was under discussion have been borne in mind and incorporated.

As the Honourable Minister just said, the Bill has come out of the Select Committee with some important beneficial measures which relate particularly to the removal of perennial and casual labour and providing better ventilation, which is the real grievance of the workers today in many industries. Particularly in old buildings where the textile industry is carried on in Bombay and Ahmedabad there is hardly any ventilation. The Select Committee have considered this point and have made a provision that ventilation shall be provided in the various factories. I do not know whether this provision will be applicable to the existing buildings or only to the new ones. If it applies only to future buildings I suggest that compulsion should be applied to old buildings also; otherwise the object will be nullified.

Mr. Chairman: The honourable member will see that such a provision is there in clause 16(2).

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: Thank you, Sir.

Then the Select Committee have made provision for a lunch room. I know that in several industrial concerns there are no arrangements for workers to take their meals. In commercial concerns there are lunch rooms and tiffin rooms where during the lunch-hour interval the clerks and others take their meals. I am glad that this facility has now been provided for industrial workers who require it all the more.

Mr. Chairman: The honourable member can continue his speech on Monday next.

The Assembly then adjourned till a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock on Monday the 23rd August, 1948.

CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY OF INDIA (LEGISLATIVE) DEBATES (PART II — PROCEEDINGS OTHER THAN QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS)

Governor General of India.

BOMBAY PUBLIC SECURITY MEASURES (DELHI AMENDMENT) BILL

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel (Minister for Home, Information and Broadcasting and the States): Sir, I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill to amend the Bombay Public Security Measures Act, 1947, as extended to the Province of Delhi.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That leave be granted to introduce a Bill to amend the Bombay Public Security Measures Act, 1947, as extended to the Province of Delhi."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

TERRITORIAL ARMY BILL

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh (Minister for Defence): Sir, I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill to provide for the constitution of a Territorial Army for India.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That leave be granted to introduce a Bill to provide for the constitution of a Territorial Army for India."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

PAYMENT OF TAXES (TRANSFER OF PROPERTY) BILL

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy (Minister for Finance and Commerce): Sir, I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill to make provision for the payment of taxes before transfers of property are recognised in certain cases.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That leave be granted to introduce a Bill to make provision for the payment of taxes before transfers of property are recognised in certain cases."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

FACTORIES BILL —contd.

Mr. Speaker: The House shall now proceed with the further consideration of the following motion moved by the Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram on the 20th August, 1948, namely:

"That the Bill to consolidate and amend the law regulating labour in factories as reported by the Select Committee, be taken into consideration."

Mr. R. K. Sidhva (C. P. and Berar: General): Sir, last Friday evening, I was making reference to this Bill which has emerged from the Select Committee. The Select Committee has made certain important improvements which are really welcome and I think it is necessary for me to mention them, because it would be unfair on my part to mention only those clauses where improvements have not been effected and not those where the Select Committee and the Honourable Minister have taken pains to see that necessary improvements have been made. For instance, Sir, it has been now laid down that in the factories sufficient ventilation should be provided in the interests of the health of the workers. They have even been obliged to mention that the sky-lights and glass windows are to be cleaned periodically and that the bulbs also should be cleaned. You can understand from this, Sir, that in the past factory owners neglected even these minor matters and the Honourable Minister had to go that length into minor matters and prescribe that the windows, the lights and the bulbs should be cleaned. I only wanted to point out the mentality of the industrialists in this respect and their failure has compelled the Government to make legislation of this sort.

There is another improvement: in the matter of the reasonable temperature in the factory rooms. In some factories, the humidity is so intolerable that the workers get exhausted within a very short period of working. Here also, the Bill has provided a certain minimum humidity that is required for the benefit of the workers. Then, again, as regards the movement of the workers in the factories, in a large number of factories that I have seen, sufficient moving space is not allowed, with the result that there have been accidents. Here also, the Bill has made an improvement and specified particular areas for the purpose of the movement of the workers.

Then, there is provision for a lunch room. At present the workers, during the recess hours, wander about, from street to street and pavements, and eat wherever they can get a little shelter under a tree or in the sunshine. Here, the Bill provides that a proper type of lunch room should be provided so that during the recess, the workers can have their meals at ease. They have also taken pains to see that the workers do not take their meals during working hours. You can see, Sir, that while giving facilities to the workers for providing a lunch room, it has also been suggested that the workers should not take their meals during the working hours and cut down production to that extent. The reasonableness of the Select Committee and the Government is proved by their action, that they are not partial only to the workers.

They have also placed a limit on the over-time work. Formerly, there was no limit on over-time work, and the workers, poor as they are, were induced to work as long as they could, so that they can earn more. The poor workers did not realise its effect on their health. Therefore, a particular limit of time has been fixed up to which extent over-time can be allowed to the workers. While the workers may suffer to that extent monetarily, their health is secured. That is also a very welcome feature of this Bill. I also notice, Sir, that a leave of one day for every 20 days has been granted to the workers under this Bill.

Sir, in the last session, while amending the Factories Act of 1934, provision had been made for the establishment of canteens for the workers. The present Select Committee has improved it by suggesting that workers' representatives should be in the canteen. It has been a clamour of the workers for many years that they have no voice in such matters where they are absolutely interested. The Select Committee have borne that in mind and stated that workers' representatives will be maintained in the canteen. I only desire that the Honourable Minister, while making the rules, should see that the majority of the workers are represented on these canteens, because, the canteens are meant for the benefit of the workers, all the consumers goods are available there, particularly eatable goods, and there is no reason why the representation of the workers should not be predominant.

Having made these observations as far as the beneficial provisions are concerned, I may now make some observations on certain points where I feel that the Bill has not gone ahead of the requirements of the workers. Clause 18 provides for drinking water. That clause already existed. The improvement effected in this Bill is that no drinking water point should be within 20 feet of the urinal or latrine, so that the bad odour may not interfere with the health of the workers. But, I consider the proximity very near; I would have gone as far as 50 feet. Twenty feet is a very short space. Even granting that 20 feet has been allowed, provision has been made that the Chief Inspector can exempt if he thinks that this distance is not necessary. I feel that the Select Committee have made an error. After having made an improvement, they have themselves tried to undo the good thing they have done. Why should the Chief Inspector be given power to exempt that any of the drinking points could be within 20 feet?

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram (Minister for Labour): The Flush system.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: I can say in Delhi and Bombay the flush system latrines are as stinking as open latrines, because there is no proper sweeping and no supervision. Even the flush system requires a certain amount of supervision. The flush only carries away a strata from the pan; it does not keep it free from bad odour. A sanitary principle is that phenyle should be put in every day. I know there are certain municipalities that put in phenyle three times a day in public latrines worked by underground flush system. I feel that the Honourable Minister should consider this, and the power which has been vested in the Chief Inspector should be removed.

Then clause 19 provides that there should be a sufficient number of latrines. This is very vague; five may be considered sufficient by one and fifty by another. The municipal laws provide specific seats for public latrines; and in factories for every ten or fifteen there should be one seat. If there are only ten seats for a thousand workers it cannot surely be enough. Who is to determine what is sufficient? If it is intended really to benefit the workers a specific number of seats for latrines must be provided.

Then in clause 27 there is a proviso regarding the employment of women and children in cotton ginning factories where there are pressing factories also. It is well known that these cotton openers are very injurious to health because of the great quantities of dust that come out; and the Select Committee has suggested that wherever there is a cotton pressing factory and an opener there should be a partition right up to the height of the roof. This is all right, but here again there is a proviso that if the Chief Inspector feels that the height of the partition wall should be lower than the roof it should be allowed. I do not see why there should be this exemption. When the thing is bad and the Select Committee thinks that it should be up to the roof, I feel that there should be no exemption.

Mr. Speaker: I will draw the honourable member's attention to the fact that at the consideration stage he should deal with the general principles of the Bill. If he wishes to deal with the merits of individual clauses now, I do not know what he may have to say when the clauses are put to the House.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: He will not speak on the clauses!

Mr. Speaker: Discussion of the merits of clauses can be done when the individual clauses are taken up.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: There are 137 clauses in the Bill and I cannot deal with even half or a quarter of them. But there are some which relate to a specific principle.

Mr. Speaker: It is not a question of the number of clauses the honourable member wishes to take up but the principle on which the discussion should proceed. He should therefore, address himself to the merits of the Bill as a whole, and he may reserve his remarks as regards the merits or demerits of individual clauses, till the clauses are put to the House. He may point out certain defects—that is another matter—but he should not go into details.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: I will bear your suggestion in mind and not mention the number of the clauses.

There is provision for an ambulance room, but in view of the frequent accidents that take place in factories I feel that an ambulance car is also necessary.

With regard to the general provisions of the Bill, there are many good provisions but they have to be implemented and the Honourable Minister should take good care to see to their implementation by the provincial Governments. Of the 137 clauses in the Bill there are more than half on which these provincial Governments have to make laws. Labour being a concurrent subject naturally the provinces have been asked to make laws. It is important to see that they make proper rules and provide for supervision to see that these rules are duly observed. I am glad the Honourable Minister has taken power to control the provincial Governments in this respect and to see that rules are framed in conformity with this law. The 1934 Act, for example, contained provisions in regard to cleanliness but still there is a repetition of that in this Bill, which shows that the Provincial Governments took no steps to implement those provisions. I find that the clauses about cleanliness, sanitation, safety, etc., which were in the 1934 Act and also in the 1947 Act have been put in here with slight improvements. That shows that the Honourable Minister is satisfied that the provincial Governments have not implemented those provisions. I therefore feel that the strictest measures should be taken by the Centre to see that the Inspectors and the supervising agency properly carry out the provisions of these clauses. I find that the provincial inspection is very poor and the number of inspectors is very meagre. Arising out of the Tripartite Labour Conference in 1943 the Government of India appointed a Committee in 1944 which said that the enforcement of labour laws has not been up to the mark and the strength of the inspectors is "miserably small". That shows that in spite of the best intentions of the Central Government the workers have got no relief and there is consequently dissatisfaction and strikes. This is what they say:

"In the Factories Act, 1934 factory inspection in provinces has been entrusted to provincial authorities. The Labour Investigation Committee appointed by the Government of India early in 1944 in pursuance of a Resolution passed by the Tripartite Labour Conference in September 1943 admitted in their main report published in 1946 that the enforcement of labour laws has not been up to the mark, the standards of inspection in most provinces are poor and even the strength of the inspectorate is miserably small."

No greater proof is needed. These clauses are quite good on paper but they are of no use if they are not honestly worked out by the provincial authorities. I do not know what the Central Government will do; they have realised the importance of the matter and taken power to themselves.

I understand that under the Labour Ministry there is a department of the Chief Adviser for Factories. The duty of the Chief Adviser is, I believe, to render all kinds of assistance to industrialists and to workers for the purpose of erection of new buildings and to appeal to owners to have their building plans passed by the authorities and also to see that some of the beneficial measures are faithfully carried out. If such a department exists, I would welcome it though it may be very costly, but I would like to know from the Honourable Minister what this new department has been doing for the purpose for which it has been established.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: It is not a new department!

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: Well, I would like to know the history of it. If it is an old department, then it is a discredit to the Labour Ministry that such a department, which may be costing a large amount of money to the Exchequer, has not been able to do anything even in the Centre, whereas specific work has been provided to this department. We know of gun factories, cotton factories and pressing factories where this department has not compelled the owners to have their plants passed. This department which has been set up to awaken provincial governments in this matter has done nothing in that respect. I know of factories started in 1937 without any plan being submitted for the approval of the provincial government. When the Honourable Minister says that it is an old department, then I am sorry that it does not do any credit to it because it has failed in the discharge of its duties.

[Mr. R. K. Sidhva.]

In this connection I would like to quote rather extensively from the "Indian Labour Code" page 11 from the paragraph headed "Factory Reforms in India", because the subject is of importance and relates to the Honourable Minister himself directly. The paragraph reads:

"Measures to bring the working conditions of factory labour in India up to the standards prevailing in the leading industrial countries of the world are being up by a special organisation set up by the Government of India under the Chief Adviser, Factories. This organisation will offer advice to the Central Government, Provincial Governments, States and employers on conditions necessary to ensure the safety and health of the workers and will be available for consultation for all matters relating to design and lay-out of factories and on the standards of housing, factory construction, conditions of work, health and safety and precautions, control of dust, etc. It organises training courses for factory inspectors and others interested in the administration of the Factories Act and thus functions as a centre of technical information and advice and as a venue for discussion among factory inspectors."

I was stating that the calibre of inspectors is very poor. They merely act as an executive authority. In combination with industrialists they just make a report but do not see to the grievances of the workers. That is my personal experience. I did not know that our Government of India had a department where Factory Inspectors were trained. I want to know how many have been trained and how many have been sent to the Provinces for this purpose and if they have been trained and Factory Inspectors are existing in several provinces, then I say that their training has not been to our satisfaction nor to the satisfaction of the Honourable Minister himself. Has there been any check on their training? What sort of training have they been getting? I maintain that it must be a social training. They must have aptitude to serve the labourers and workers. Unless you have picked men with two or three years of social service, I do not think these Inspectors will be able to serve the workers in the manner in which the Government and we desire. Therefore, I do not mind the existence of a department like this, which may cost the Exchequer a certain amount of money, though I do not know what that amount is. But what I do mind is that the work turned out by this agency is according to the standards contemplated and as it has been stated in the paragraph that I have just quoted.

Therefore the Honourable Minister should look into this matter, and as he himself has the welfare of the workers at heart he should kindly see that not only he brings in measures in this House but that he sees that they are implemented. I am sure, Sir, we have got a number of good provisions, even in the 1934 Act, but the fact remains that they were not properly followed. If they were followed there would not have been this bitterness today between the employers and employees and the Government. At times, too, industrial strikes have also taken place. If such an agency were widely made known to the workers, I can assure you that the bona fide labour leaders would guide the workers along the right path and they would realize that for their benefit the Government of India have a special department. And now that the Provincial Governments have been asked to see that their welfare work is carried out satisfactorily, there will be, though I will not say, absolute mitigation, but, a considerable lessening in the number of strikes and the amount of trouble that now exists. From that point of view, I would like the Honourable Minister to give more attention to this department as well as wider publicity and to see that the proper type of Inspectors are trained. As I have stated, the whole structure of this Act depends upon the Inspectors, the Chief Inspector and the number of Inspectors, and I also agree with what is stated in the report that we have a very small number of Inspectors, considering the very large number of industrial factories at present, leaving aside the new ones that have come into existence. Even for the old factories, there is not a sufficient number of Inspectors who could devote enough time and go into these clauses and see whether these factories are implementing the law or not. Mere exhibition of notices in industrial workshops and factories that these are the tiffin hours, these are the working hours and these are the facilities, will not help. I know what kind of mischief is done by the employers in spite of the exhibition of these notices required by law. They act quite differently to what they exhibit in the factories. I have a very wide experience of the Shop Assistants Act where the hours of work have been fixed. The notice is in each shop but the shopkeeper takes from the assistants a larger number of working hours than actually he is authorised to do. And no Inspector, although this has been brought to their notice, has taken any serious notice of the matter.

So the Government should realise what is the cause of this labour trouble in this country. It is because the good provisions of the Act are not adhered to. I can quote you chapters after chapters in the 1934 Act. Some of the clauses are mere repetitions of this Act. But we are going to repeal those Acts and therefore they have to be introduced into this as a comprehensive Act. Sufficient laws have been made but sufficient material for the implementing of these clauses is not there. I hope the Honourable Minister will keep this in his mind. I can tell him honestly that this is the general feeling of the workers. They do feel that the officials are not sincere to them whenever a question of their interest is brought before the officials.

I will not go into the Industrial Disputes Act, I am just now confining myself to the health, safety and other beneficial measures which are provided in this Act and the bare necessities which are long outstanding and overdue. Some of them are there even now. The Inspectors and the controlling agencies have not even tried to see that they are substantially fulfilled.

Sir, this Bill removes the distinction between seasonal and perennial labour. That was a long-standing complaint of the workers. That was done with even before by the Honourable the Labour Minister and it is being introduced in this Bill also. But railway labourers are exempted from the operation of this Act for the reason, it is mentioned, that the railway workers enjoy better benefits than mentioned in this Act. I differ from that. I have experience that in start the adjoining area there is a municipal administration, where there are factories and there is underground drainage system but only a few yards away where there are railway workers, although the underground drainage system exists nearby the railway area is not connected with it and the old type latrine system continues and the workers are denied the benefit of the underground drainage system. The sweeping is defective. The railways give contracts for sweeping and the removal of the night soil and you can understand what kind of work the contractor will turn out, a man who is not responsible to the civil authorities. The railways are a central subject and the railway employees are our employees and because of that they should not be governed by this Act does not do credit to us. On the other hand, we should see that they are treated better, so that they may be held up as models to others, so that private employees might be treated likewise.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: I referred only to running sheds, not to factories.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: You have mentioned in your speech they are better off. I am not making an argument haphazardly or generally. I have given the specific instance of the drainage system. If the Honourable Minister wants, I can quote a number of other instances. I would suggest that the sweeping, drainage and other facilities should be entrusted to the municipality and the railways should pay them their charges. In some places the railways entrust the work to municipalities. In most of the places they think that departmentally they will do better work. There have been instances where the municipalities had to make complaints to the railways that their sanitation not being satisfactory mosquitoes were breeding and spreading to the neighbouring areas and were likely to affect the health of their areas and therefore they must see that mosquitoes are prevented from breeding. These are instances.....

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: Let the Railway Minister come.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: I would request the Honourable the Labour Minister to convey to the Railway Minister if he so chooses. There is a provision in the Bill to draw the attention of the railway. I feel that this Bill should be applied to the railway employees also. What acts have we got for railway employees which are more beneficial to them? This is a government law, it is not a private law and it is government servants who will be benefitted, and who will be treated better. Why do you treat them separately? If it is argued that they get better amenities, then you are giving less facilities to other labourers, although I deny it. Granting for argument's sake that you do give better facilities, then you stand open to the charge that you give better facilities to your own men. The factory labourer should be treated equally. This type of iniquitous method of the foreign government, viz., treating our employees or labourers differently should be done away with. These are our laws and they must all come within our law.

There are other items which I would like to talk about but I would leave to the speakers who follow me. Let them discuss minutely the provisions of this Bill and bring its defective side to the notice of the Government. They might put before him the bright side also and I have done that as well and I hope I will not be charged that I have not mentioned the bright side. I have mentioned it in my preliminary remarks. At the same time it is my duty to point out what I feel, namely that the measures are inadequate.

Quotation often helps the Honourable Minister more than mere arguments. I was referring to the Geneva Industrial Labour Conference. (Prof. N. G. Banga. "What date?") 1938. What is said in 1938 holds good today. I wish that the recommendations of 1938 had been implemented. I would have given applauses to the Government but my regret is that 1938 conditions are existing today. While welcoming some of the provisions of the Bill I hope that the Honourable Minister will bear in mind the general remarks that I have made as far as inspection and implementary are concerned. Particularly I lay stress on that subject and I repeat that unless he takes strong measures on that matter, these clauses will remain on paper only and the disputes and bitterness that exist will be difficult to remove.

Shrimati G. Durgabai (Madras: General): Mr. Speaker, Sir, I am really very happy that I am given an opportunity to congratulate the Honourable the Labour Minister who has brought forward again a measure which in my opinion and also in the opinion of the House is a charter of rights guaranteed to the workers working in factories and other work-houses. Indian labour has certainly ample reason to be proud of our Labour Minister in whom they have truly found a champion of their rights and a protector of their interests.

The House is aware that the Bill is designed to secure to the workers the advantages of citizenship, a clean and healthy place where they are to work, a guarantee of leisure during their toil and an adequate enjoyment of the fruits of their labour. Let us hope that with these guarantees the worker, who is the backbone of our industry, would be able to realize his personality and put forth his best to the prosperity and progress of our country. Let us also hope that the discretionary powers given to the Provincial Governments do not tend to water-down the guarantees laid down in this Bill but to enable them to see that their scope is enlarged to make the worker a responsible partner in industry. The worker puts forth, as I have already stated, his might and contributes his best to the progress of the industry only when he is made to realize his personality and also made to feel that he has got an existence of his own. I must state here my experience. I was simply shocked to see the pockets and the person of the workers being searched when they come out of the factory as soon as the whistle blew. This sight is really abhorring. No individual who thinks that he has a personality of his own can ever put up with such practices. I wonder why anybody should think that these workers are prone to carry away a tool in their pockets and that they are thieves. The pockets of storemen and clerks working in the same factory, who are practically drawing less than the skilled labourers, are not touched. Perhaps this is due to the difference between 'wages' and 'salaries'. I feel that unless such practices are stopped no amount of paper rights and law-making would achieve our purpose. Everybody would admit that this practice destroys the personality of the worker and also humiliates him. Therefore we must take note of it and see that wherever these practices are prevalent they are stopped. I do not mind even if such a practice is made an offence and also penalised.

I have not got much to say on this measure because I am in general agreement with all the provisions of this Bill. I really welcome this Bill as it has emerged out of the Select Committee. But one or two things on which I should like to make a few observations are these. One is about the provisions relating to the hours of work regarding women. I am inclined to agree with Mr. Santhanam and his friends who have put a dissenting minute and I do not really want to speak much on this point because when the authors of the dissenting minute speak they would enlarge the point. I agree with them that the hours of work for women, especially the hours between 10 p.m. and 5 a.m. are really not conducive to them. May be that it will be another opportunity to get a second shift and all that, and the absence of that may not induce them to put more of their energy in the work and earn more. But I feel that work between these hours is really not conducive to their interests and it is likely to abuse their powers. As I have already stated, I leave this point to be explained by the authors of the dissenting minute.

I have another observation to make and that is with regard to leisure. Instead of providing for long intervals of rest for every five hours why not reduce the time? That is, instead of giving one hour or half an hour for every five hours would it not be better if we provide for this interval for rest every two hours and thus reduce the time of that interval for rest to fifteen minutes. In this regard the Baroda model factory have put forward some suggestions which the House is aware of—at least those who have read those suggestions. Therefore I am not going to speak elaborately on that point. They have provided for certain intervals for rest which may very well be adopted by us. Of course it might be said that already it is the Provincial Government's jurisdiction to make some such rules wherever they find it convenient—in the factories where they find it necessary to provide for such things. But a directive or a recommendation may also be made by the Central Government in the scope of their general power to make such recommendations to the Provincial Governments.

Sir, I have done and I do not wish to say anything more because as I have already said I am in general agreement with all the provisions of this Bill and I welcome this Bill.

Shri H. V. Kamath (C.P. and Berar: General): Mr. Speaker, Sir, I welcome this measure as a big step forward. It is a happy augury for the future that in the second year of our freedom our Legislature is going to enact a measure of this kind and scope. The other day the Honourable Minister, in moving the Bill for the acceptance of the House, told us that the very fact that the vested interests such as the representatives of employers opposed many of the provisions of this Bill goes to show that the measure is a very big step forward in labour legislation. He told us in his speech that at the Tripartite conference which was convened by Government, the representatives of the employers were opposed to certain details such as the extension of the scope of the term 'factory', the elimination of the distinction between 'seasonal' and 'perennial' factories, the pre-licensing of factories, the making of compulsory provision for the maintenance of canteens, the making of provision for sitting facilities, etc. On the other hand the workers welcomed many of the provisions—the Bill in almost its entirety. It is a significant fact that even the All India Trade Union Congress did not formulate any serious objections to the Bill when it was circulated for public opinion. After that the Select Committee has made many more changes in the measure as it has been brought before the House today, and I feel I voice the sentiments and the opinions and the views of this House when I say that the changes made by the Select Committee and embodied in this Bill represent a great measure of progress in labour legislation. Time was when our factories and our factory owners, the employers, used to concentrate more on the production of goods, and the good of those who produced these goods in an abundant measure for the employers' benefit, was relegated to the background. Apart from the fact that maldistribution of wealth creates discontent in every society it is also a patent fact that the conditions under which labourers work in factories is a very potent source of industrial discontent and industrial unrest.

Sir, till a few years ago our country was not very far different, or very much better, than what Britain was in the first half of the last century. Labour conditions—hours of labour and working conditions—were so bad inside factories and outside factories that even poets took up cudgels, took up their pens in favour of labour and against capitalist employers. Not merely statesmen, not merely socialist agitators, but even poets like Shelley wrote exhorting labourers not to work for such employers. Shelley said:

"Wherefore weave with toil and care
The rich robes your tyrants wear", because, Sir, the conditions were so bad, so inhuman that the labourers inside factories were looked upon and treated worse than even cattle and the conditions told upon their health and upon their life. The workers had no joy in their labour, and when work ceases to produce joy, to inspire joy in the worker or the labourer, that work is almost a crime towards the individual and also a crime towards society. Mahatma Gandhi was never tired of stressing this aspect of work,—creative work where the worker takes a joy in his labour, where the worker feels that work is as attractive to him as any activity, say even play outside the factory. We must create conditions for such kind of work, such creative, joyful work, for our labourers who produce the wealth of our country.

Till a few years ago, our employers and our labourers—the owners and the workers in factories—were in opposite camps and almost every factory was a house divided against itself. While the workers had to tighten their belts, the owners had almost always to loosen their belts, because while the pockets of the owners bulged with profits, almost ill-gotten gains I would say, the labourers starved and there was nothing for them to put in their pockets. The conditions under which they worked—men as well as women—left no room for them to enjoy their life—not merely inside the factory but even at home after their day's labour, because they went home so tired and so fagged out. Conditions inside the factories were most insanitary, ventilation was bad and there were no measures for the health, safety and welfare of workers, and when they went home they had no leisure and not even any capacity to spend their leisure usefully inside their homes.

I would like to touch upon one or two points which have been made out by previous speakers. As regards most of the points that have been raised by my friend Mr. Sidhva, I am sure the Honourable Minister is quite competent to take charge of these matters and he will reply to him suitably. But there is one point which Mr. Sidhva made out as regards urinals and latrines. If he turns to Section 19 of the Bill, my honourable friend will see that under sub-clause (1) parts (d) and (e), it is said:

"(d) all such accommodation shall be maintained in a clean and sanitary condition at all times;

(e) sweepers shall be employed whose primary duty it would be to keep clean latrines, urinals and washing places."

Further on, in sub-section (2) of the same section, part (c) lays down that—

"(c) without prejudice to the provisions of clauses (d) and (e) of sub-section (1), the floors, portions of the walls and blocks so laid or finished and the sanitary pans of latrines and urinals shall be thoroughly washed and cleaned at least once in every seven days with suitable detergents or disinfectants or with both."

Mr. Sidhva raised a pertinent point about disinfectants and phenyle and other substances but if he had read this portion of the Bill very carefully I feel he would not have stressed this point to the same extent as he did.

My honourable friend Shrimati Durgabai raised the other point about the employment of women. I think she has slightly misunderstood the minute of dissent, if I may say so, that has been recorded by my honourable friends Mr. Santhanam, Mr. Khandubhai Desai and Mr. Gokulbhai Bhatt. If you turn to Section 66 of the Bill, there the proviso to sub-section (1) reads thus:

"Provided that the Provincial Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, in respect of any class or description of factories, vary the limits laid down in clause (b), so that no such variation shall authorise the employment of any woman between the hours of 10 P.M. and 5 A.M."

Mr. Santhanam's minute of dissent refers to this proviso and he wants this proviso to be deleted, that is to say, the emphasis of Mr. Santhanam's minute of dissent is on the employment of women between 7 P.M. and 10 P.M. and also between 5 A.M. and 6 A.M. and not between 10 P.M. and 5 A.M. which the Bill specifically does away with. I wonder how my friend Shrimati Durgabai thought fit to stress this point in her speech. I am afraid she has not read the Bill very carefully. The Select Committee included one of the distinguished women members of this House and I believe she is not opposed to this proviso as it stands, and I have no ambition no desire to be more feminist than a woman. I feel that when a woman member, an enlightened woman member, of this House has no opposition to this measure, I see no reason why we men should step in where women do not want to tread.

Then, Sir, my friend Mr. Sidhva raised a very important point about implementation of the Act. Many Governments—I would not say our Government in particular, but many Governments all over the world—have come into discredit because their Acts have remained mere dead letters, and many wholesome and salutary measures that were enacted were never implemented either due to the callousness or indifference of the officials or due to the non-co-operation of those for whom they were meant. But here in this Bill, as Mr. Sidhva pointed out, we have made provision for penalties in either cases. We have laid stress on the obligation of the workers inside the factories and also on the duties of the employers with regard to the amenities to be provided for workers inside the factories. I only hope that these penalties which have been laid down in the 10th Chapter of this Bill will be strictly enforced, because we find, especially after the attainment of our freedom in August last, a tendency to see that many of the measures do not work in the spirit in which they were intended to work. I will quote just one or two instances—perhaps very ordinary occurrences. If we keep our eyes and ears open when we walk about Delhi or New Delhi today, you will see many things happening which we, all of us, if we have the requisite social sense and social responsibility, would not let them happen. Only a couple of days ago, I had gone to the Qutub Minar and there I found very prominently displayed the boards "Keep off the grass", but on one fairly big grassy lawn I saw a whole cricket team with all their implements and paraphernalia playing a cricket match, and I am sorry to say that there was a very prominent Government official also, who was quietly watching the whole tamasha. I went to one of the Chowkidars and said, "What is all this? You have got the board 'Keep off the grass' and there you have got a whole cricket team with children and urchins and everybody squatting on the grass and one or two Government officials also thrown in. Why don't you tell them to clear out?" It is a very sad thing that we encourage such things ourselves. Most of them were educated persons. I would not have minded children playing there, but educated persons with the board "Keep off the grass" before them were playing there. I told the Chowkidar and he went and told them. But he was told: No, no.

हम कुछ नहीं कर रहे हैं खाली खड़े हैं"। But he said : "मैं देख रहा हूँ कि आप लोग घास में खेल रहे हैं"। They replied : "नहीं, हम तो ऐसे ही खड़े हैं और देख रहे हैं"। The Chowkidar came back and said : "मानते ही नहीं साहब"। "मानते ही नहीं"।

If that is the spirit in which we are going to work our freedom, I say, God help India.

I would also in this connection stress the importance of Government officials too working the Act in the spirit in which it is intended and where vested interests are concerned, especially where employers are concerned, where owners are concerned, I hope they will deal with them with as much severity, as cruelty and as much harshness as they would ordinarily do in the case of a labourer inside the factory. That is the spirit which we need today to galvanise our social life, our industrial life and our national life in all its various phases. Without that co-operation on the part of the people, without that wholehearted devotion to duty on the part of the officials, our freedom will be empty. If measures are worked without indifference weakness and callousness, I am sure they will go a long way; otherwise even this measure is likely to remain a dead letter so far as a good bit of it is concerned.

I personally wanted certain more facilities and amenities provided to workers. I think we can take a leaf out of the U.S.S.R. especially in this particular sphere of factory labour legislation. I have myself seen some of the Russian factories before the second World War. I have also seen some factories in England and some factories in Germany. I was impressed with factories in Russia on account of the farthest extent to which they have gone in providing facilities and amenities and conveniences to workers inside factories. One thing which I wanted to be incorporated in this measure was as regards creches. I think in this connection we have to refer to clause...

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: Do not worry about the clause. Go on.

Shri H. V. Kamath: My honourable friend the Labour Minister says I need not bother about creches but I hope you, Sir, and the House will pardon me for referring to this matter.

The clause is 48. In clause 48, sub-clause (3) there is a provision that Provincial Government may make rules. In part (b) of that sub-clause there is a provision requiring "the provision in factories to which this section applies of additional facilities for the care of children belonging to women workers, including suitable provision of facilities for washing and changing their clothing." I wanted just an additional item to be introduced and that was because children are concerned here—children below the age of 6—I thought it would be useful and it would be appreciated by mothers and children, if the children were provided with small toys for play. It is provided in almost all Russian factories. Not merely are there conveniences and amenities for washing and changing of clothing—in big Russian factories they have a radio playing, and where there are no radios, they give gramophones—but a good number of toys of various types and descriptions are provided for children to play with. After all, children cannot sit still there. If there are amenities for washing and changing clothing, that is so far as mothers are concerned. Mothers will do that bit of the work, but what about the children? When they are left alone, and there is just a little water and just their clothes, I suppose they will feel bored stiff. They will get into other kinds of mischief. When we want to prevent them from other kinds of mischief and want to guide them on the right lines, we must provide toys and picture books. That will go a long way towards educating our children right from the beginning, from their early childhood. That is one item which I wanted to be added and I hope the Honourable the Labour Minister will consider this when he enlarges the scope of this Bill as we move forward in our freedom, for after all as he has said this is only the first step.

Then, Sir, I wanted another thing and that is a provision which would enable the workers to ventilate their grievances right on the spot instead of waiting for the official red tape and the proper channel and what not. This again is a feature which I found in many of the factories in the U.S.S.R. I refer to what they call in Russian—well, I don't remember the Russian—the nearest English word would be the "Wall newspaper". Here is a concise description of what the "Wall newspaper" is like. I would read it as it is:

"A powerful weapon of criticism is the wall Newspaper, in which the workers as a whole represent their views on the current events or the local issues. Inside the factory the wall newspaper hangs on the wall like a glorified Notice Board, but a glorified Notice Board with articles and other piece of news and complaints written by all members of the factory organisation."

It might of course be only the trade union workers or the members of the workers' representatives, but that sort of thing ought to be encouraged in our factories. I quite recognise the danger inherent in it, because it may well be said that our workers are not well educated, not well trained, they have no responsibility, they are sometimes inclined to be irresponsible and so on, but while we are going to encourage trade unionism on the right lines I see no reason why this sort of ventilation of grievances right inside the factory should be discouraged, especially as it would go a long way towards cementing co-operation between employers and employees in the ultimate analysis. Of course, in the beginning it might be abused, but when they find that if they make good use of it it will mean that their grievances would be redressed on the spot without delay, the labourers themselves would be very careful in using this "Wall Newspaper" and they will not tend to abuse the facility extended to them.

[Shri H. V. Kamath]

There is another feature which I would like to have seen introduced. Our workers are after all poor. India, is well-known for her abysmal poverty, and though our workers are, of course, better off today than they were some 20 years ago, yet certainly it cannot be gainsaid that our workers, on the whole, compared to Western standards, or at least many of the countries in Europe or America or Australia, are comparatively worse off so far as their economic condition is concerned. I want that the employers or the factory owners in every factory should provide the labourers with working clothes, especially in big factories where the employers are known to make phenomenal profits. They could easily afford to get sets of working clothes to the labourers so that they could save their own clothing for home wear. Otherwise, what happens is, that the workman goes to the factory in the same clothes—his home wear—and naturally the clothes do not last very long. Considering the present scarcity of cloth,—and I hope that this won't last very long; we have taken very stringent measures and let us all pray that our Government may succeed in providing enough cloth to the poorest man in our country, but certainly, we are not prophets, and we cannot say how long this scarcity will last,—we should satisfy our labourers by providing them with working clothes, for use only inside the factory, so that they could go to the factory, doff their clothes, don their factory apparel, and when they come home in the evening, change their clothes again and put on their home clothing. And if this reform was introduced, I would insist also on a dressing room inside the factory. In some of the factories in the West where working clothes are provided for the workers, there are dressing rooms also inside the factories.

It was Professor Pigou of Cambridge, who in one of his famous addresses asked his audience: "What is the beginning of economic science?" He remarked: "'Wonder' said Carlyle 'was the beginning of prayer', but it is not wonder, but rather the social enthusiasm, that revolts from the sordidness of mean streets and the joylessness of withered lives, that is the beginning of economic science."

I hope, Sir, that we in our newly born freedom, we will generate, we will create sufficient social enthusiasm, social responsibility, social sense in ourselves and in our neighbours so that India will again rise to her heights of old, and every one in India will have life and have it more abundantly, so that Mahatma Gandhi's dream of Rama Rajya may become a living reality at no distant date.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock, Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

Mr. Hossain Imam (Bihar: Muslim): Sir, I welcome this measure as an important piece of legislation which was much needed. I had hoped that it will provide for certain deficiencies in our factory laws; but I regret that some of them have not yet been made up. I refer to the particular point which I have been urging before also that facilities for training labour to become better workers are singularly lacking. No provision is made in the welfare section for the compulsory provision of Technological institutes or evening classes for the labourer to learn to work and become a better worker.

Secondly, no provision is made for the education of children. Provision of primary school for the labourers' children where a large number of workers are employed is a necessary one, a provision which many of the bigger companies like the Tatas have already provided themselves, without any prompting from the Ministry.

I also regret that, as usual, many of the powers have been left to the executive to be prescribed by rules. For instance, in the matter of provision of medical attendance, the power has been left to the provincial Government to lay down the manner in which and the scale at which this provision will be made. I welcome, Sir, the provision in the Bill that the Central Government will have the power to issue directives to the provincial Governments on any matter arising out of this legislation. While upholding the glory of provincial autonomy, it goes without saying that in order to have uniformity and a high standard of work, it is necessary that the Centre must retain the power of issuing directives in cases where it is necessary.

The provisions made in the Welfare sections are good and much in advance of the existing conditions. So far they are very welcome; but in order that there may be uniformity, it is necessary that certain regulations, not in the form of regulations, but in the shape of directives should be prepared by the Ministry of Health and Ministry of Labour jointly to lay down a kind of plan on which the provincial Governments should work. I believe, Sir, that with the present day increase of industrialisation in India, it is necessary that labour should get a fair deal and get the highest amount of amenity which it is in the power and within the competence of the Government to give. But, at the same time, it is necessary that labour should also realise that it owes a duty not only to the capital, but also to the general public that it must work wholeheartedly and with full vigour. In this particular piece of legislation, no provision has been made in order to induce this feeling in labour. As I said in the beginning, the provision of technological institutes in the bigger factories would help a great deal in increasing the efficiency of labour.

Last time I spoke I had drawn attention to the fact that Indian labour in the mines was not efficient. Some honourable members retorted that they were quite good and the fault was that of capital. I have just refreshed my memory, and from the statistical reports on coal, I find that efficiency has fallen. The raising power in 1942 was 203 tons per person per annum, whereas in 1943 it went down to 179 tons per annum per person. Whereas Rajputana gives a per person figure extraction of 293 tons, Bihar which produces the largest amount of coal if India gives only 104.63. I just mention these things in order to draw attention to the fact that it is not by pampering labour that you can improve the standard of living and increase the national wealth of India, but it is by increasing the efficiency of labour that both labour and the country will be better off. If capital is not providing them with modern tools, the power rests with the Government to order capital to provide them with better implements. It is no excuse to say that the failing is that of capital. I say either if capital fails or if labour fails, both are failing the nation and the nation as the supreme body can demand that both must do their best and give the best result that can be obtained. I welcome this measure.

Shri Ajit Prasad Jain (U.P.: General): Mr. Speaker, I join with other honourable members of this House in congratulating the Honourable Minister for bringing this nice piece of legislation. The whole problem has been approached in a generous spirit and all reasonable suggestions for the welfare of labour or for bettering its lot have been accepted. The Select Committee has been actuated by the same motive and has improved the Bill in many respects. To enumerate only a few improvements made by the Select Committee,—printing presses and shipbuilding industries have been included within the definition of "manufacturing process". In the original Bill only 350 cubic feet of space was provided for each labourer and now it has been raised to 500, which is 100 more than what is provided in England; and that is very necessary on account of climatic condition. Other important changes relate to the clarification of the provisions for the payment of overtime charges in which all the allowances will be included, and the liberalisation of the leave rules. The Select Committee has amended the definition of "worker" and has included clerks and managerial establishment within the purview of this law. Up till now clerks and managerial staff were governed by the Shop Assistants and Commercial Establishments Acts of the different provinces. So far as the change goes I think it is an improvement, but this Bill nowhere says that in future the different laws passed by the provincial Governments, ordinarily known as Shop Assistants and Commercial Establishments Acts, will not be applicable to the factories. It may be that as a result of the application of these two Acts there might arise complaints and conflicts with regard to the hours of work, to the leave rules and other concessions. I think a specific provision should have been made to the effect that the Shop Assistants and Commercial Establishments Acts will not be applicable to the clerical and managerial staff of the factories to which this law applies.

I have submitted that the whole approach to this problem has been a very healthy and generous one, and therefore if I proceed to offer some suggestions it is not in a spirit of hostile criticism or of denunciation but with the idea of being helpful. One very striking feature of this Bill is the over-anxiety to provide for exemptions. In the Statement of Objects and Reasons it was stated that in the existing Act too many rule-making powers were left to the provincial Governments. Some of them exercised those powers properly and others did not, with the result that the working of the existing Act did not prove satisfactory. That has been changed and now one uniform set of laws has been made for the whole country. But there are numerous sections in which provincial Governments have been given the power to make exemptions. I quite realise that the principles governing rule-making powers are different from those governing exemptions. Even then I feel that too many exemptions have been provided in this Bill. I will illustrate that by referring to some provisions of this Bill. I will draw attention to clause 56 which begins with these words:

"Save with the permission of the Provincial Government and subject to such conditions as it may impose, either generally or in the case of any particular factory."

This clause 56 gives powers to the Provincial Government to exempt a factory from the application of its provisions.

Now we come to clause 64 (2) which lays down a similar provision:

"The Provincial Government may make rules in respect of adult workers in factories providing for the exemption, to such extent and subject to such conditions as may be prescribed."

Among the different items following section 56 is everywhere included. But the thing does not end there. Sub-clause (2) of clause 65 again confers these powers upon the Provincial Government:

"The Provincial Government or, subject to the control of the Provincial Government, the Chief Inspector, may by written order exempt . . . any or all of the adult workers in any factory or group or class or description of factories from any or all of the provisions of sections 51, 52, 54 and 56."

I think that the thing has been overdone and the same provision has been repeated thrice. A careful study of these three clauses will show that there might be even conflicting conclusions and effects resulting from these three clauses. In this connection I might also draw attention to clause 29(2) (b) which lays down:

"The Provincial Government may make rules in respect of any lifting machinery or class or description of lifting machinery in factories—

(b) exempting from compliance with all or any of the requirements of this section, where in its opinion such compliance is unnecessary or impracticable."

A perusal of the main provisions of clause 29 will show that it lays down certain minimum standards for ensuring the safety of workers. For instance, it says that cranes and other lifting machinery must be of good construction and sound material and properly maintained; that no machinery shall be overloaded; also that:

"While any person is employed or working on or near the wheel-track of a travelling crane in any place where he would be liable to be struck by the crane, effective measures shall be taken to ensure that the crane does not approach within twenty feet of that place."

I have carefully perused this clause and I see no reason why the very sound principles which have been laid down in this clause should not be made compulsory for every factory. They are the very minimum standards which are necessary for safeguarding the workers from accident and injury, and no exemption should be provided.

I will not take the time of the House by giving many more examples. I may, however, refer to sub-clause (6) of clause 36 which also gives the power of exemption to Provincial Governments. This clause deals with precautions against dangerous fumes. Sub-clauses (2) and (3) refer to certain very necessary and fundamental matters to save workers from injury. I do not see any reason why an exemption should be provided here. I can well understand that the power of Government to prescribe suitable breathing apparatus, reviving apparatus, belts and ropes and other things may be relaxed in the case of some factories but the exemption that has been provided is far too liberal. I wish greater care had been taken in providing these exemptions and I do hope that the Honourable Minister, as he proceeds with the Bill, clause by clause, will either accept the amendments tabled or will himself bring forward amendments whereby these exemptions may be brought within reasonable limits.

Another very great defect which I find in this Bill is that it has not made a fair deal to women. Only a short while ago, the Honourable Mrs. Durgabai complained that clause 66 of the Bill provided for an exemption whereby a Provincial Government could permit the employment of women between the hours of 10 p.m. and 5 a.m. In fact, she stated the proposition a little too broadly. The main clause of the Bill limits the hours of working in case of women from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. The Provincial Government has, however, been given the power to relax these hours but the relaxation will not entitle the Provincial Government to make women work from 10 p.m. to 5 a.m. The only exception is in the case of the fish industry and fish canning. Even that exception in my opinion should not have been provided. Women have to look after children. There might be mixed labour in a factory where fish curing and fish canning is carried on, and taking every factor into account, the duties of women towards their family-folk and children and the question of morality, I think that whatever other methods for fish curing or fish canning may be adopted, and whatever other type of labour may be employed, no woman should be employed for any industrial work between the hours of 10 p.m. and 5 a.m. and the exemption provided in the sub-section should be deleted.

[At this stage Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair, which was then occupied by Mr. Hossain Imam (one of the Panel of Chairmen).]

Shri H. V. Kamath: On a point of clarification, I might say that this exemption was embodied because of the habits of the fish which man cannot cure. Fish are caught in the evening or late at night.

Shri Ajit Prasad Jain: If man cannot cure those habits, surely it is not for woman to cure them. Fish can be canned and cured either by men or by women. At night employ men labour and in the day employ women labour. There is no objection to that.

[Shri Ajit Prasad Jain.]

The Bill is defective in the respect that it makes no special provision for women. For instance, there is a clause in this Bill—Clause 34—which relates to the lifting of weights. It lays down that no one will lift a weight which is heavier than he can actually carry without injury to his health. But it does not prohibit the employment of pregnant women. Besides, there may be some female workers between the ages of 14 and 18. Then there will be the male children and adolescents. Weight-lifting is very strenuous and particularly for pregnant women; for females who are not adults and for young children this is not a proper type of labour. I wish an exemption could have been made, prohibiting the employment of these categories of workers in weight lifting.

All over the Continent of Europe and in advanced countries, women and young persons have been prohibited from carrying on certain kinds of strenuous and dangerous works. Some of these have been defined as—“(a) Work at a furnace where the reduction or treatment of zinc or lead ores is carried on:

(b) The manipulation, treatment or reduction of ashes containing lead, or the desilverising of lead:

(c) The manufacture of any oxide, carbonate, sulphate, chromate, acetate, nitrate or silicate of lead:

(d) Mixing or pasting in connection with the manufacture or repair of electric accumulators:

(e) The cleaning of work-rooms where any one of the processes aforesaid are carried on.”

There is no provision in the Bill that women and young persons should not be allowed to work in such processes. I wish that a prohibition should have been provided.

There is one other provision in this Bill which might create a lot of difficulties in its working. It relates to the owners of the premises. The Bill ordinarily makes the occupier or the manager of the factory responsible for carrying on the provisions of the Bill, and the occupier or the Manager can be penalised for a breach or violation of any of these provisions. Section 93 deals with owners and it says that where in the same premises, or in the same building, or in the same room, there are more than one factories working, the manager or occupier of the factories shall not be responsible but the owners of the premises. I have not been able to appreciate the principle underlying this clause. Once the owner has let out the premises to an industrialist he retains no dominion or control over those premises. What I think should have been provided in the Act is that either the occupier or manager of one of those factories, or the occupiers or managers of a number of those factories, or of all the factories should have been made jointly and severally responsible for all these works, because it may not have been possible to find out which of those managers or occupiers was actually responsible for any breach or violation. The Bill lays down certain saving clauses in the case of managers and occupiers. If a worker has been responsible for the breach of any of the provisions, the occupier or manager can bring forward that worker and save himself. But that privilege has not been extended to the owner.

Section 93 will show that far too extensive responsibilities have been laid on the owner which he can never discharge. An owner has been made responsible for any breach of rules regarding the carrying of weight. If the Provincial Government lays down that an adult worker shall carry only so much weight, a woman shall carry so much weight, an adolescent shall carry so much weight and a child shall carry so much weight, and there is a breach of the order in a premises building or room where there are more than one factory, it is not the manager or the occupier who will be responsible but the owner. I think that is very unfair. Surely the owner has no control over the workers.

Clause 35, relates to the protection of the eyes. How can you expect the owner of a building to make sufficient provision for the protection of the eyes of the worker?

I will not take the House through all these clauses. Perhaps it is enough for me to show by illustrations to what absurd length the responsibility of the owner has been extended—a responsibility which he can never discharge. I suggest that this particular clause of the Bill should be looked into once again and properly amended.

I have said many things in praise of the Bill but in places I find that the drafting has left quite a number of lacunas, things unprovided for, P.M. which should have been provided. For instance, clause 100 relates to firms and associations and lays down that all or any one of the partners of a firm or association will be responsible for certain acts in violation of the provisions of this Bill. That is perfectly sound. There is, however, a proviso according to which a firm or association can nominate one of its members for doing work and if there is a violation that particular member will be responsible for the violation. This Bill has now been extended to the acceding States. Under the Government of India Act a province means one of the provinces enumerated under the Government of India Act and not an acceding State. It should have been specifically provided that a reference to a province will include also an acceding state. The result of the existing provision is that while in a Province a firm or association has a right to nominate one of its partners or members to perform the duties of occupier or manager and to bear the responsibilities for violation a partnership or association in an Acceding State has no such right. I know that this omission will be made up.

Mr. Chairman: I hope the honourable member has given some amendments on these lines.

Shri Ajit Prasad Jain: Yes, Sir. I have given some amendments. These are some of the features to which I wanted to make reference. But before I conclude I must say a few words in support of what my friend Mr. Sidhva said. It is all very well to lay down good laws. We all feel flattered when we enact advanced laws but laws by themselves are nothing unless they are implemented. My own experience of the working of the present Act has been that whatever good features it possessed, and it did possess many good features, in practice they were not implemented. In many of the districts there is no Labour Inspectors. There is a sort of omnibus Inspectors in the shape of the Collector of the district. The present Bill makes all Collectors Factory Inspectors. But we all know that Collectors are overburdened with other things. They are more concerned with problems of law and order. A collector is something like what we have in jails, a tasla, in which one can drink water or which one can use for purposes of eating or as a pillow to sleep on or something to fight with. That is the type of official a collector is. He does almost anything and every thing but does very few things well. Labour is a specialised problem. To leave the question of inspection to a collector would be something very improper.

It might be flung at my face that the collector is only one of the inspectors and that the power has been given to the provincial government to appoint other inspectors. That is true but we are apt to be complaisant. Once the Provincial Governments find that they have a factory inspector in the shape of a collector they may not be so vigilant or careful to appoint factory inspectors, who are specialised persons. In fact this provision for appointing collectors as factory inspectors has a little history behind it. When the first Factory Act was passed on behalf of the factory management it was represented that they must have a comfortable sort of person, a compromising sort of person and it was at their request that the collector was made a universal factory inspector. I think in working this law factory inspectors must be appointed for each and every area and may I suggest that the Central Government should retain to itself the power of direction, so that wherever a provincial government does not perform its functions properly the Central Government might force its hands to act properly. We all know that the provinces in India are in different stages of industrial advancement. Certain backward provinces are not up to the mark. They are not in a position to compete with other provinces which are more advanced. They might show laxity in the observance of the provisions of this law. It is therefore all the more necessary to provide for central direction of the executive measures, just as we have found it necessary to provide for central legislation.

Shri K. Santhanam (Madras: General): May I point out that clause 113 provides exactly for this contingency?

Shri Ajit Prasad Jain: Yes, Sir. I stand corrected. But I wish that a liberal use of this power should be made. At this stage it is unnecessary for me to refer to all the various provisions of this Bill. In fact there are many things which I would like to say but there will be other stages of the Bill when I shall have opportunity of having my say. Once more I would congratulate the Honourable Minister for Labour for bringing this very advanced piece of legislation for the welfare of the workers.

श्री गोकुल भाई दौलतराम भट्ट : माननीय सभापति जी, मजदूरों के सम्बन्ध में हमारे नेता क्या कर रहे हैं और हम कहां जा रहे हैं, इस विषय में हमारे माननीय मंत्री जी ने काफी प्रकाश डाला है। १९३४ के फैक्टरीज ऐक्ट में किस तरह से विकास होता रहा, यह अभी बतलाने की जरूरत नहीं है, क्योंकि १९३४ के फैक्टरीज ऐक्ट और उसके बाद सन् ४४, ४५, ४६ और ४७ में जो परिवर्तन हुये और आज हमारे सामने जो बिल आ रहा है उसको देखते हुये किसी को भी यह पता लगेगा कि हमने बहुत कुछ आगे कदम बढ़ाया है। यह बात ठीक है कि अगर एक कानून मुकम्मिल बनाना हो तो उसको कई दिन तक, कई महीनों तक, कई साल तक पड़े रहने दिया जाय और बारबार लोगों के सामने उसको ओपीनियन (opinion) के लिये भेजते रहें और अगर उसके बाद भी हम कानून को बनायें तो भी हमारे मेम्बर मित्र हस्तमंजी सिधवा जैसे को इससे पूरा सन्तोष होगा या नहीं, इसमें मुझे बड़ी शंका है। वैसे तो कोई चीज हम ऐसी नहीं बना सकते जिसके विषय में हम कुछ न कुछ न्यूनता न देखने पायें। जो चीज हमारे मंत्री महाशय ने हमारे सामने रखी और छानबीन समिति जिसकी छानबीन कर चुकी है तब भी हम फिर दुबारा उसकी छानबीन कर रहे हैं। कई संशोधन आ रहे हैं। खुद हमारे मंत्री महाशय भी संशोधन ला रहे हैं और जो उस छानबीन समिति में—सिलेक्ट कमेटी में—थे उनमें से भी कई लोग संशोधन ला रहे हैं। इसके माने यह है कि यह प्रगतिशील चीज है। यह कोई ऐसी चीज नहीं है कि एक रोड़ा या ईंट वहां रख दी वह ईंट हम वहां से सरका नहीं सकत। हम तो ऐसे जमाने में रह रहे हैं जब कि हमारी दृष्टि जितनी जितनी व्यापक होती जाती है, उतना उतना हमारा कदम भी आगे बढ़ता जाता है। वैसे इस भवन में देखिये, जब हमें यहां बैठने की मुसीबत हुई तो हमारे भवन को और विस्तृत करने के लिय बड़ा बनाने के लिय थोड़ा बहुत सुधार भी हुआ। वह ठीक हुआ या गलत आ, वह तो दूसरी बात है। लेकिन हमें भवन बड़ा मालूम होता है। इसी तरह से कानून का भी यही रिवाज है और १९३४ से १९४८ का यह जो कानून है उसमें किस प्रकार की तरक्की हमने की है, वह मैं दोहराना नहीं चाहता हूं। कई मित्रों ने इसके लिये हमारे माननीय मंत्री महाशय को अभिनन्दन दिया है। लेकिन मुझे खुशी इस बात की है कि

पिछले ६, ७, ८ महीने में मंत्री महाशय ने मजदूरों के मुतालिक जो कुछ काम किया है वह काफी तो नहीं लेकिन कुछ अंशों में सन्तोष देने वाली चीज है और उसमें अभी थोड़ा दिन पहले ही वह बोनस (bonus) का जो सवाल आया—बोनस का जो बिल आया वह इतना अच्छा बिल था उसके लिय हर तरह से मैं मानता हूं कि मंत्री महाशय को अभिनन्दन हमने दिया। उससे भी हम आगे बढ़कर कहें कि यह फैक्टरीज बिल (Factories Bill) जो है वह भी कोई मामूली चीज नहीं बन रही है। जब बिल हमारे सामने से गुजर करके एक्ट बन जायगा उन दिनों के दरमियान इसमें कई ऐसी तबदीलियां जरूर होंगी जिससे जो हमारे असन्तुष्ट मेम्बर हैं उनको भी थोड़ा बहुत सन्तोष होगा, इसमें मुझे कोई शक नहीं है।

इन मजदूर कानूनों के मुतालिक एक दृष्टि यह रही है कि जो आदमी उत्पादन करता है उसका जीवन सुखमय होना चाहिये। आज तो यहां कारखानों की बात है, फैक्टरीज (Factories) की बात है लेकिन मैं तो यह आगे बढ़कर कहने वाला हूं कि वह जमाना जरूर आने वाला है, चाहे चन्द साल के बाद आये, चाहे चन्द महीनों के बाद आये, लेकिन एक जमाना वह जरूर आनेवाला है जब कि न सिर्फ हम फैक्टरीज ऐक्ट बनाकर बैठ रहेंगे, लेकिन हम वर्कमैनस ऐक्ट (Workmen's Act) बनाकर बैठेंगे, या लेबरर्स ऐक्ट (Labourer's Act) बनाकर बैठेंगे। किसी भी क्षेत्र में चाहे वह कारखाने में हों, चाहे वह खेतों पर हों, चाहे कहीं भी हों, चाहे घर पर हों जो मजदूर जो आदमी काम कर रहे हैं, छोटी तनखाह पाने वाले काम कर रहे हैं उसका जो हक रहता है चार्टर आफ राइट्स (Charter of Rights) वह चीज हमें लानी है। मैं यह जरूर मानता हूं कि आज जिस तरह से हम तरक्की कर रहे हैं, जिस तरह से हम आज कानून बनाने में आगे बढ़ रहे हैं उसको देखते हुए उस गति को देखते हुए मैं मानता हूं कि हमारे मंत्री महाशय वैसे चीज हमारे सामने कभी न कभी पेश करेंगे जोकि सारे हिन्दुस्तान के मजदूरों के लिये एक ऐसी चीज होगी वह उनका एक हक पत्र चार्टर आफ राइट्स (Charter of Rights) होगा। मैं जरूर इस बिल का स्वागत करता हूं और उनका अभिनन्दन करता हूं और मैं यह कहना चाहता हूं कि हमारी दृष्टि इन कानूनों से बदलती रहती है। जो काम करने वाले हैं, उनकी दृष्टि भी बदलने के लिये यह कानून बनाये जाते हैं। वैसे तो अगर सब एम्प्लायर (employer) अपने आप ही जो काम करने वाले हैं उनको सब सहूलियतें देने लग जायें तो कानूनों की जरूरत नहीं रहती। लेकिन हम जानते हैं कि इस प्रकार की दृष्टि होती नहीं है और वह दृष्टि जहां तक हममें आती नहीं है वहां तक हमें कानून के जरिये ही उन बातों को समाज के सामने रखना पड़ता है। मजदूरों की रक्षा के लिये उनके हितों की रक्षा के लिये हमें यह चीज लानी पड़ती है। नहीं तो कोई यह कहे जब कि इस बिल में बतलाया गया है कि जो पावर (Power) से चलने वाले कारखाने हैं वहां अगर पिछले १२ महीने में १० आदमियों ने काम किया हो तो उस कारखाने में यह नियम तुरन्त लागू होगा। वैसे पावर (power) से न चलने वाली जो जगहें हैं, कारखाने हैं वहां २० आदमी हों या जितने भी हों, पिछले बारह महीने में काम करते होंगे तो उनको यह नियम लागू करना पड़ेगा। सम्भव है कि हम ज्यादा सहूलियत कानूनों के बगैर लोगों को देते हैं। और जो कारखानेदार हैं वह भी ज्यादा समझदार होते जाते हैं। अगर यह लड़कों की बात आगई है तो चौदह साल के लड़कों की बात हो तो तेरह साल के लड़कों को नहीं रखेंगे। उनको हम सहायता देंगे और एक यूनियन बनायेंगे। वह लड़के कहेंगे कि हमने जो यह चौदह साल की मर्यादा रखी है उसको घटाकर तेरह साल कर

[श्री गोकुल भाई दौलतराम भट्ट]

दिया जाय। तो इस प्रकार से यह जो मालिक हैं मिल के कारखानेदार हैं उन लोगों को यह जान लेना चाहिये कि इस बिल की जो मन्शा है, इसका जो आशय है, वह आशय यह नहीं है कि कारखानेदारों को हम नुकसान पहुंचाना चाहते हैं। लेकिन हम यह जरूर चाहते हैं कि इसमें जो काम करने वाले हैं, वह खुशी से काम करें, आनन्द से काम करें, इज्जत से काम करें और काम करके घर जब जायें तब उनको यह लगे कि हमने काम किया, रोटी पाई और हमारी जिन्दगी हमने खुश बनाई। ऐसे बिलों की यही मन्शा होती है। इस बिल में हम देखें तो इंग्लैंड का जो सन् ३७ का बिल है उससे कई दरजे यह बिल आगे जा रहा है। मैं उसकी कोई समालोचना नहीं करना चाहता हूं, या तो उसकी तुलना नहीं करता हूं उसमें ज्यादा समय लेने की जरूरत नहीं है। लेकिन मैंने यहां दो चीजें देखी हैं वहां मैं कह सकता हूं कि हमारा यह जो बिल बना है वह बिल उनसे कई हिस्सों में हम आगे जा रहे हैं और यह खुशी की बात है। इसलिये मैं अभिनन्दन कर रहा था। बिल की मन्शा यह है कि जो उत्पादन करता है उसका जीवन आनन्द से गुजरना चाहिये और उसका संसार सुखमय होना चाहिये। उस दिन भाई कै० टी० शाह ने कहा था कि प्रोड्यूस और पैरिश (Produce and parish) इस बिल में तो यह बात है कि प्रोड्यूस प्रोक्योर एण्ड प्रोस्पर (produce, procure and prosper)। या बिल का जो सारांश में अगर कह दूं तो यह बात आ जाती है कि प्रोड्यूस, प्रोफिट एण्ड प्रोस्पर (Produce, profit and prosper)। इस दृष्टि से यह बिल यहां रखा गया है और हर एक चीज को हम देखें तब यह भी उससे कुछ बढ़ता हुआ सा मालूम होता है कि जो जो पाबन्दियां हम कारखानेदारों पर लगा रहे हैं, इस तरह की कई पाबन्दियां, कई ओब्लिगेशन (obligation) हम वर्कर्स (workers) के ऊपर भी लगा रहे हैं। वर्कर्स (workers) को भी उसमें से छूट नहीं देते। वर्कर्स के भी आज ओब्लिगेशन (obligation) है जो काम कर रहे हैं वह साधनों से कर रहे हैं, जिन यंत्रों पर कर रहे हैं उस यंत्र का इस रीति से इन्तेमाल करना चाहिये, कैसी रीति से रहना चाहिये, हर चीज उसमें शामिल की गई है और वह एक सौ ग्यारहवीं धारा है उसमें वह ओब्लिगेशन (obligations) की बात है। इसके सिवा प्रान्तीय सरकार जो जो नियम इस बिल की सुसंगति में रहकर बनायेंगे, उन नियमों का पालन हमारे काम करने वालों को—वर्कर्स को—भी करना पड़ेगा। तो दोनों तरफ से हमारे आदमियों के दोनों समाज के हिस्सों में कई पाबन्दियां भी लगी हैं तो उसके साथसाथ दोनों को फायदा पहुंचाने की बात है। सम्भव है कि कारखानेदार यह चिन्तायेंगे कि कई चीजें ऐसी आ रही हैं कि हम बहुत कुछ जबरन करवा रहे हैं। जैसा कि कोई कहें कि अभी हमारे पुराने कारखाने हैं उसमें ५०० क्यूबिक फुट (Cubic ft.) की जगह कहां से देना सम्भव है। यह कहें लेकिन उसमें भी यह बात रखी गई है कि जिस प्रान्त में वह चीज उसमें से कोई ढिलाई करने की है वह नहीं कर सकेंगे। क्योंकि हमने एक सिद्धान्त मान लिया है कि एक आदमी के लिये इतनी जगह तो जरूरी है। अगर वह कारखाने में इतने आदमी नहीं रख सकते हैं तो वहां कम आदमी काम करेंगे। दूसरे कारखाने बनाना उनको लाजिम होगा। ऐसी ऐसी बातें तो जरूर हमने यहां पाबन्दी के तौर पर रिसट्रिक्शनस् (restrictions) के तौर पर लगा दी हैं। लेकिन दूसरी पाबन्दियों को हमने प्रान्तीय सरकारों के ऊपर छोड़ दिया है। इस बिल की मन्शा को ध्यान में रखकर वह ऐसे नियम बनायें जिन नियमों से इस बिल को हानि नहीं पहुंचे। यह प्रान्तीय सरकारों को हमें अधिकार देना ही पड़ता है और वही हमने दिया है। हर एक प्रान्त की अलग अलग परिस्थिति

होती है और हर एक प्रान्त को चाहिये कि वह अपने वहां के उद्योगों को आगे बढ़ाने के लिये छोटे और बड़े उद्योगों को आगे बढ़ाने के लिये अपनी परिस्थिति के मुताबिक वह नियम बनायें, जैसा हमारे भाई अजीतप्रसाद ने कहा कि हम माडेल रूलस् (model rules) बना लेते हैं लेकिन उस पर अमल नहीं होता है। मैं समझता हूं कि हमारे सूबे सब ऐसे लायक हैं और ऐसे वह बुद्धिमान हैं और वह लोग भी इस आशय को ध्यान में रखकर आगे बढ़ रहे हैं। तब हमें इतमीनान रखना चाहिये कि हमारे सूबों की सरकार जो नियम बनायेगी वह नियम ऐसे होंगे, इसके प्रतिकूल नहीं होंगे। इसमें छूट रखी गई है खास तौर से मजदूरों की जिन्दगी सुखमय होनी चाहिये और वह दब नहीं जानी चाहिये। मैंने एक मतभेद में यह बतलाया है और वह आप लोगों को मंजूर होगा, यह मालूम नहीं है। हमारी सेलक्ट कमेटी ने तो उसको मंजूर नहीं किया। लेकिन एक तौर से मैं यह मतभेदों को भूल जाना चाहता हूं। १० और २० की बात एकसी रखी जानी चाहिये। सम्भव है आज हमारे मंत्री महाशय कहें कि भाई आप थोड़ा सा रुक जायें। थोड़ा सा धीरे चलिए। पहले ५० था, अब २० तक ले आये हैं। पावर फैक्टरीज में वहां दस तक लाये हैं। चार महीने के बाद या एक साल के बाद हम घटा देंगे। लेकिन हमने यह सोचा कि सब कारखाने एक सरीखे ही रखने चाहियें। इसमें कोई बड़ी दिक्कत नहीं आयेगी।

कुछ तो ऐसा होता है कि सुनारों के वहां क छोटे से कमरे के अन्दर १५ आदमी काम करते हैं और वह ऐसी मामूली जगह में बैठे आभूषण बनाते हैं लेकिन वहां इतनी कम जगह होती है कि वह लोग यह कहते हैं कि यह कानून कारखाने वालों और फैक्टरी वालों के लिये लागू होता है हमारे यहां इसी तरह से चलता रहेगा। तो ऐसी कई जगह हैं कि जहां पर यह सब चीजें लागू होनी चाहिये। क्योंकि हमारी मन्शा यह है कि काम करने वाले आदमी जिन्दा दिल रहें। इस चीज के लिये जैसा कि अभी कहा गया है कि वह अलग नोट में लिखा गया है तो और आप इसे ठीक समझें और खास तौर से मैं माननीय मंत्री जी से कहता हूं कि मैं उस वक्त हाजिर नहीं था लेकिन मैं जरूर कहना चाहता हूं कि मेरा कथन एक जरूरी चीज है। अंग्रेजी का मुझे इतना ज्ञान नहीं है कि अभी हमारे कामत साहब ने कह दिया कि क्लॉज ६६ में जो प्रोवाइजो (Proviso) है उसमें यह लिखा गया है कि रात को १० बजे से लेकर सुबह ५ बजे तक कोई स्त्री को काम में रखने की पाबन्दी है हमारी बहिनें जो संसार की प्राणाधार हैं उनका जीवन ऐसा रहना चाहिये कि वह उन घंटों पर कहीं भी न जायें। मजदूरी करने न जायें और वह आराम से रह सकें और अपनी तन्दुरुस्ती को ठीक रख सकें। तो सरकार का यह कर्तव्य हो जाता है कि वह इन चीजों को देखे कि उनकी तन्दुरुस्ती खराब न होने पावे। इसलिये यह चीज रखने की जरूरत है। अगर हो सके तो इस चीज को आप लोग मंजूर कीजिये।

Shri H. V. Kamath: On a point of correction, Sir. The clause lays down definitely that no power should be given to Government to employ women between 10 p.m. and 5 a.m.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: Yes, their note of dissent is wrong.

श्री गोकुल भाई दौलतराम भट्ट : एक सवाल यह था कि हमने वर्कर्स (workers) के लिये काम के कई घंटे रखे थे अब वह ८ घंटे तक पहुँचा है और वह चीज़ ऐसी बनी है कि हम अब सारी दुनिया के नक्शे में आगे बढ़ रहे हैं। तो यह बिल इस प्रकार से यहां पेश हुआ है। और इस बिल में जो बातें रखी गई हैं वह इतनी अच्छी और ज़रूरी बातें हैं कि उसका हम ज़रूर स्वागत करते हैं।

बच्चों के लिये और बालिगों के लिये एक मर्यादा रखी गई है १४ साल की है। क्योंकि हमारा विधान जो बन रहा है उस विधान में किसी भी आदमी को जिसकी उमर १४ साल की नहीं है उसको फ़ैक्टरी में और कारखाने में न लगाया जाये इस तरह की बात है। इसके साथ साथ मैं यह भी कहता हूँ कि हमारी सभी प्रान्तीय सरकारों और मरकजी सरकार के ऊपर यह ज़िम्मेदारी आ जाती है कि हमारे १४ साल के जो बालक हैं उनको शिक्षा देने का भी प्रबन्ध किया जाना चाहिये नहीं तो वे विचारे अपढ़ रह जायेंगे और उनकी ज़िन्दगी बरबाद होती रहेगी। इसलिये मैं आशा करता हूँ कि इस तरह का कोई ज़रूर प्रबन्ध होना चाहिये जिस से १४ साल के बच्चों की पढ़ाई का बन्दोबस्त हो सके जिससे वह अपने घर के लिये कुछ आमदनी कर सकें। अपनी नई तालीम के जरिये वे कुछ कर सकें और इस तरह से उपयोगी बन जायें।

शायद इसमें एक चीज़ ऐसी आई है कि कारखाने वाले यह कहेंगे कि देखो आप लोगों के हाथ में सत्ता आई। अभी आप लोग जेलों में बैठे थे और जेलों को महल मानकर बैठे थे और हमें भी ऐसा अनुभव कराना चाहते हो। पहिले तो कोई कानून भंग होता या कोई धारा भंग होती तो हम उनको जुर्माना कर देते। रुपया उनका जमा हो जाता है क्योंकि वह तो लाखों और हजारों रुपया कमाते हैं। १० हजार रुपया जुर्माना किया जाय या लाख रुपया किया जाय तो वह दूसरे दरवाजे से आ जावेगा इसमें कोई रंज नहीं। यह तो हाथ का मेल है। लेकिन उससे सुधार नहीं हुआ। वे ऐसा कोई गुनाह हो उसकी परवाह नहीं करते थे मानो कोई उनको दरकार ही इस बात की नहीं है। यह सोचा गया कि जेल में चले जायें वहां तो कुछ देखें। परन्तु आज की जेलों में कई सुविधायें मिलने लग गई हैं। एक कमरा मिल जायेगा, खाना भी घर से आने के लिये इजाज़त मिल जायेगी। बीड़ी पीने को मिल जायेगी। गरमियों में बाहर सोने की इजाज़त मिल जायेगी। थोड़ा सा काम भी करना पड़ेगा कुछ तकलीफ़ उठानी पड़ेगी। सफ़ेद टोपी हो या काली टोपी हो—कोई भी हो जल की सज़ा का होना सख्ती है लेकिन वह ज़रूरी है। तो भी ठीक है कि हम उनको सुधारने में कुछ आगे बढ़ सकेंगे। मैं मानता हूँ कि इस बिल से हम हमारी राष्ट्र संपत्ति जो कि मजदूर है उसकी क्षति नहीं पहुँचायेंगे। मैं मानता हूँ कि इस बिल से हमें लाभ होगा और वह हमारे लिये फायदेमन्द होगा।

इतना कहते हुए मैं इस बिल का स्वागत करता हूँ और मैं आशा करता हूँ कि इस में जो कुछ कमी रह गई है उसको पूरा करने में हम समर्थ होंगे।

(English translation of the above speech).

Shri Gokulbhai Daulatram Bhatt (Eastern Rajputana States Group):
Mr. Chairman, Sir, the Honourable Minister has thrown sufficient light on the extent and trend of the activities of our leaders directed towards the benefit of the workers. It is hardly necessary for me to trace the course of developments made in the Factories Act since 1934. It would be quite evident from a review of the changes made in the Factories Act, 1934, and subsequently during the years 1944-47, and the Bill which is before us to-day that we have advanced a good deal. It is true that if some perfect legislation is to be enacted, it should take some time, months and even years and it should repeatedly be circulated amongst the public for eliciting their opinion. Even after going through all this process, we frame legislation, I doubt very much if my honourable friend Mr. Sidhva will at all be satisfied. Normally we cannot pass any measure which is entirely free from defect. Within a short space of time the Honourable Minister brought up this measure. Though it has now been brought before us after having been scrutinized by the Select Committee, yet we are subjecting it to further scrutiny. A number of amendments have been proposed. The Honourable Minister himself is proposing amendments. Many of the honourable members who were on the Select Committee are also moving amendments. From this it follows that this is a progressive measure. It is not like a brickbat or a brick which if placed at one place cannot be shifted. We are living in such times when we are moving forward according to the extent of our vision. Take the instance of this House. When we felt some inconvenience in the seating arrangements, certain modifications were carried out to make it larger and more spacious. Whether it has been satisfactory or not is a secondary point, but we find the House comparatively larger. Similar is the process of law-making. I do not want to recapitulate the trend of progress which we have made by the enactment of this law from 1934 to 1945. Many of my honourable friends have congratulated the Honourable Minister in this connection. But it is a matter of great gratification to me that though the work done by the Honourable Minister for the amelioration of the condition of workers during the last few months is not quite adequate, yet it affords satisfaction to a certain degree. Recently he introduced a Bill regulating the grant of Bonus which I admit was a wholesome measure and for that we complimented the Honourable Minister. If we go a step further we may say that the Factories Bill which is on the anvil is not an ordinary measure. By the time that this Bill becomes an Act, many changes will have been made in it, which would undoubtedly afford some satisfaction to many of the honourable members who feel dissatisfied. One of the idea underlying the framing of such labour legislation has been that the man who produces should have a comfortable living. To-day we are talking of factories but I venture to say that that time is not far off—it may take few years or even months to come—but that time must come—when we will not content ourselves merely by the framing of the Factories Act, but will pass a Workmen's Act or Labourers' Act; in whatever sphere they may be employed—may be in the factories, fields or anywhere, or even in their homes. We have to bring forth the 'Charter of Rights' to safeguard the rights of these persons who are labourers and getting small wages. I am fully conscious of the manner in which we are advancing to-day in the framing of legislation. I am confident that keeping in view the rapid pace at which we are moving, our Honourable Minister will sooner or later bring forth such a measure which would be the 'Charter of Rights' for all the workers in India. I will surely welcome this Bill and congratulate the Honourable Minister. I would like to say that these Acts help in changing our outlook. These laws are also framed for changing the vision of the workers. Ordinarily there would hardly be any need to resort to legislation if all the employers suo motu give every sort of facility to the workers. But we know that this is lacking, and so long as we are unable to inculcate that faculty in our minds, we will have to place all these measures before the society by means of legislation. We have to bring forth these measures for the protection of workers and their rights. Lest somebody might say that when it has been laid down in this Bill that if ten workers were working in the factories using power during the preceding 12 months, the Act shall soon be made applicable to them. Ordinarily this Act will be made applicable to the factories not using power wherein twenty or more workers were working during the preceding twelve months. It may be that we offer more facilities to the workers even without legislation. The factory-owners are also becoming wiser. They will say that if the question of employment of children aged fourteen is raised, we will not employ those who are thirteen years old. We will help them and form a union. These children will then represent that the age-limit of fourteen which has been prescribed by us should be reduced to thirteen. Such type of factory-owners should realize what is the object of this Bill? It does not seek to harm them. But we would surely emphasize that the workers should be allowed to work with a happy heart and honourably, so that when they return home in the evening after the day's toil, they should feel that they have worked, earned their livelihood and made their life a happy one. Such is the object underlying these Bills. If we look through this Bill we will find that it bypasses a similar Bill passed in England in 1937, to a considerable extent. Neither do I want to indulge in any sort of criticism thereof nor draw out a comparison between the two because it is no use wasting time in this way. Since I have seen both the measures, I can say that our present Bill is far more a progressive measure than that and it is a matter of great pleasure. Therefore, I was congratulating the Honourable Minister. The Bill seeks to help the producer to lead a happy and harmonious life. The other day my honourable friend Prof. K. T. Shah had observed "Produce or perish". This Bill aims at 'Produce, procure and prosper'. Or if I give the substance of the Bill, it would be 'Produce, profit and prosper'. With this object in view this Bill has been brought over here, and if we look at it from all aspects, it would be quite evident that the workers are also being subjected to the same sort of restrictions and obligations as we have imposed on the factory-owners. We are not exempting the workers from the operation thereof. Those workers who are working on the machines and using appliances have also got some obligations today, viz., they should be fully conversant with the method of handling the machinery, and the maintenance thereof. All such things have been incorporated in Clause 111 which deals with 'Obligations of workers'. Besides this, our workers shall have to observe the rules which the Provincial Governments may prescribe under this Act. Many restrictions have thus been imposed from both the sides on the two sections of the community, and this has been done for their mutual benefit. It is just possible that some factory-owners might clamour that we are thrusting some measures on them and forcing them to do a lot. Just as some people will say how is it possible to provide 500 cubic ft. of space in the existing factories? But that too provides that no exemption in this respect can be granted by any Provincial Government even though it may desire to do so, because we have agreed in principle that so much space is required for every worker. If the factory-owners cannot accommodate so many workers in the factory, then their number shall have to be reduced. It would be obligatory for them to set up new factories. Such like things we have prescribed in this Bill in the form of restrictions. But we have left to the Provincial Governments to impose other restrictions. They should frame such rules as may be in consonance with the spirit of this Bill. We shall have to vest this authority in the Provincial Governments and this is what we have done. The conditions vary in each Province. It, therefore, rests with each Province to frame rules according to its local conditions for the development of industries both small and large. Just as my honourable friend Mr. Jain has pointed out that we frame model rules but these are not acted upon. I feel that our Provinces are all wide-awake and discreet and they are also marching ahead with this aim in view. Therefore, we should be rest assured that the rules which would be framed by the Provincial Governments would be in accordance with this Bill and not in contravention thereof. The exemption which has been provided for in this Bill especially that relating to the welfare of the workers should not be suppressed. I have pointed out this thing in one of my minutes of dissent but I am not aware whether you will accept that or not. Our Select Committee has not approved of that. But for the present I will ignore this note of dissent. There should be no distinction between the number 10 and 20. It is likely that to-day the Honourable Minister might ask us to wait and pause a little. Previously it was 50 and now it has been brought down to 20 and in the case of power factories it has been fixed at 10. This will be reduced after the lapse of four months or say a year. But we thought that all the factories should be brought on the same level. There will not be any appreciable difficulty in doing this.

[Shri Gokulbhai Daulatram Bhatt]

It sometime so happens that 15 workers have to work in a small shop of a goldsmith and in such a congested place, they manufacture ornaments. But the space there being so short those people can say that this Act is applicable to the factory-owners only. We will carry on like this. So is there any place where all these provisions shall be made applicable, because our aim is that the worker may live a happy life. It has just been stated that this has been brought up in a separate note. But if you believe me, Sir, I may say that I was not present at that time, and I would particularly request the Honourable Minister that my note of dissent is an important one. My knowledge of English is not so vast. Just now my honourable friend Mr. Kamath stated that the Proviso to Clause 60 does not authorize the employment of any women between the hours of 10 p.m. and 5 a.m. Our sisters who are the mainstay of the mankind should not be allowed to go anywhere during these hours. They should not go out for seeking employment, but may have rest and thus maintain their health. Thus it becomes the duty of the Government to see that by doing so they do not lose their health. Therefore, I thought it necessary to place this note. If possible, you may, Sir, kindly accept this.

Shri H. V. Kamath: On a point of correction, Sir. The clause lays down definitely that no power should be given to Government to employ women between 10 p.m. and 5 a.m.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: Yes, their note of dissent is wrong.

Shri Gokulbhai Daulatram Bhatt: Another point was that we had fixed a certain number of working hours for the workers which has now been reduced to eight, and in this way we are giving a lead to the world. Therefore, we must welcome this Bill which is a wholesome measure. An age-limit of 14 has been prescribed for 'children' and 'adolescents', because our constitution which is being framed prohibits the employment of any such person, who has not attained the age of fourteen years, in any factory. In addition to this, I would also say that the onus to make arrangements for the education of all children aged 14 years devolves on the Provincial Governments and the Central Government. Otherwise they will remain illiterate and their life will be ruined. Therefore, I hope that some sort of arrangements should be made for imparting education to all children of fourteen years of age to enable them to earn their livelihood. They may be able to do something with the help of their new education and thus become useful.

Perhaps there is something like this in it that the factory-owners might say that you people have got power—recently you were in the jails and were living there as if in palaces—and you want us also to feel like this. Previously if there was any breach of any law or section thereof, a fine was imposed on them—they deposited the amounts because they earn thousands and lacs of rupees. If they are fined rupees ten thousands or a lac, they will arrange to make good this amount through the back-door and do not at all feel the pinch. Money is a passing-phase for them. But this did not produce any salutary effect. They were not all afraid of committing any such offence. As a matter of fact they have no respect for the law. They thought of going to the jail and seeing the things for themselves. But many facilities have been made available in the present-day jails—a room will be provided—permission to obtain food from home will also be granted—Biri for smoking can be had—permission to sleep outside during the summer months will be given—a small amount of labour will have to be put in and some hardship to be undergone. May one be donning a white or black cap, though sentence of imprisonment is harsh, yet it is necessary.

Even then it is true that we may be able to make some headway in reforming them. I take it that this Bill will not prove harmful to the interest of the workers—who form our national wealth. I realize that this will stand in good stead and be beneficial to our interests.

With these words, I welcome this Bill and hope that we will be able to remove whatever defects remain in this Bill.

Shri K. Santhanam: Mr. Chairman, Sir, this is largely a non-controversial Bill and I do not want to take the time of the House for more than a few minutes. On two points I and two of my colleagues in the Select Committee have appended a Minute of Dissent. One is that we object to the distinction between the factories with power and the factories without power. It is not only where workers are engaged in factories with power that they want protection. I believe that it is in those factories where people are working without power that workers are more sweated than in factories with power. Where there is cashew-nut making, where there is coir-making, where there is beedy-making, I know that workers are literally done to death and many returns have shown us that they become victims of tuberculosis and other diseases. I do not see any justification whatsoever why where more than 10 workers are gathered together and there is an employer, the Government should not have some means of ascertaining what the conditions are, what wages are being paid, how many workers are being employed and all other particulars.

There is another more fundamental reason for our Minute of Dissent in this respect. There are two purposes of this Factories Bill. One is to ensure reasonable treatment for workers; the other is to give the nation a real, factual picture as to how many workers are employed, in what industries and what is their productive capacity. The statistical aspect of the Factories Bill is perhaps more important today than even the regulating aspect of it. We are thinking of planning our national economy. We want to build up cottage industries; we want to build up medium industries; we want to build up big industries and unless we have got a real picture of what is going on in the so-called "cottage industries", how can we build them up? We certainly do not want to build up cottage industries on the basis of sweating and that is what this exemption amounts to. Few cottage industries have as many as 20 workers. Therefore, this provision means that almost all the cottage industries will be outside the purview of this Bill and there will be no machinery to gather facts. I know there is a clause which enables the Provincial Governments to extend the powers under this Bill even to those factories, but unless we have got information from all the parts of India, unless we can have it in a uniform method, we cannot derive any enlightenment as to the overall position from what may be done in one province or two. Therefore, I suggest that it is not even now too late for the Labour Minister to take away this unreasonable and wholly unnecessary distinction. Of course, I understand that he has done it more for administrative than for any other reasons, but I do not think there will be any insuperable administrative difficulties. As one of my honourable friends pointed out, the whole Bill is a Bill of exemptions rather than of regulations. It is open to the Provincial Government to exempt anybody from almost any provision of this Act. Therefore, in the case of cottage industries, it will be open to the Provincial Governments to exempt them from all the provisions which are onerous, which cannot be reasonably satisfied by small concerns, but they will have the framework, they will have the statistics, they will have the minimum machinery, for regulating them whenever conditions deteriorate to such an extent as to require official attention.

The second point is in relation to clause 66 regarding the employment of women. I regret that in our Minute of Dissent an error has crept in. It should have been, not between 10 P.M. and 5 A.M., but between 5 A.M. and 10 P.M. What the Bill has done is that ordinarily women can be employed between 6 A.M. and 7 P.M.; the proviso gives power to the Provincial Governments to extend this period up to 10 P.M. It is for this extension of three hours at night that we object, because what will be the result of extending it from 7 P.M. to 10 P.M.? Women will leave the factories at 10 P.M. They may live three miles, four miles away from their homes. They will have to return to their homes between 10 P.M. and 11 P.M. I say in the present conditions any such relaxation will be a great evil. We know how thousands of women have been abducted in a country where people are still, in spite of our boasted civilisation, of a mentality in which women are not sufficiently respected. We should not therefore allow any relaxation which is likely to lead to possible abuses. Of course, the Labour Minister will say that we are taking away the employment of the women and therefore we are intensifying their poverty.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: I say, make them bold.

Shri K. Santhanam: Yes, I know. First make them bold and then relax. Not today, before you have educated them, before you have given them facilities, before you have rid them of the shackles of the murdah, which even today in Northern India, in Bihar and U.P. still continues, before you have given them rights of property. You cannot expect them to be bold all in twenty four hours. That is not a feasible process. Besides, I think it will lead to the utter destruction of home life. If these provisions were there today, I would not have objected, if women today go to work after 7 P.M., but today they do not and cannot go to work after 7 P.M. Therefore, this is a new provision, newly introduced. I understand that there is a possibility of double shift in jute and some other industries, but I would resist that temptation. After all, there is no shortage of manpower in this country; there is a surplus of manpower. Most of our women, by tradition and by choice are going to be housewives. We do not want to destroy their role as housewives in order to provide employment for a few women in second shift. I do not think I yield to anyone in my desire for the emancipation of women and for ensuring their equality, but this equality must be real and factual, not merely theoretical. If you are going to destroy their homes and leave them to all kinds of abuses by this relaxation, then, I say you are not doing any good to women; you are doing a great deal of harm. I hope therefore that the Honourable Minister will revise his views and accept our amendment in this respect. Sir, one great improvement made by the Select Committee is regarding the leave with wages. The original Bill provided for ten days. Now it has provided 15 days for a regular worker. It has combined greater leave with greater regularity of work. It has given a sort of bonus for regular attendance. Many capitalists have been saying, "Associate all privileges to workers with greater work". We have done exactly that and I hope no one of them will begin to criticise saying that we are now giving five days more of leave with wages. These five days they will have to earn, because only if they work for three hundred days in a year they will be given these fifteen days; otherwise, it will be only at the rate of one day for twenty days. Of course, children get a little more—one for fifteen days. I think this is one of the most wholesome provisions and in the course of the next few years, I hope our factories will increase in efficiency, so that in due time even ordinary factory workers will be able to get the leave which is now available to the so-called middle class workers or clerical workers or "white-collar" workers in the Government, namely, one month's full leave and 15 days casual leave. That is the ideal to which we should work. Probably, it is premature to think of it today, but if our democratic Governments work properly and if the workers respond to the call of the Government to increase production and efficiency, I am sure it should not be impossible to achieve this ideal within at least the next ten years. I hope that day will come. Before I sit down, I congratulate, like all my friends, the Labour Minister for this very important Bill.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena (U.P.: General): At the very beginning I must state that this Bill is one of the most important Bills which we have so far passed in this House. Probably it is not generally realized that by this Act we are making the life of about 30 lakhs of workers far better and far happier than it has been so far. The important change in this Bill is in respect of the hours of work. So far 54 hours per week was the prescribed minimum and this Bill will now bring it to 48 hours and when we consider that about 40 lakhs of workers will benefit by this, it becomes a very important Bill. If those factories which have not come within the purview of the factory legislation so far and which will now come within its purview, then the number may be even larger so that ultimately it will affect about 50 lakhs of workers. The introduction of this Bill will be regarded as a red letter day in the history of labour legislation in India.

If I still make some observations which are critical of some of the provisions, of this Bill, I hope my honourable friend, the Labour Minister will take them as suggestions for improvement and not in a spirit of criticism. I recently had the occasion to be at Bombay in the meeting of the General Council of the All India Trade Union Congress. My honourable friend, Mr. Kamath said that even the All-India Trade Union Congress had nothing to say against this Bill, but I can tell him as one of the Vice Presidents thereof that the A.I.T.U.C. welcomes this Bill and the criticism I am making have the full support of that body also. Sir, probably it is not realized how we have gradually reached this stage in the labour legislation in India. It was in 1863 that the first power factory was installed in Bombay and by 1875 there were about a score of factories in the country. It were not Indian labourers who clamoured for better conditions, but the Britishers who were competing with our factories who raised their selfish voice for human conditions of labour in India. So it was through their agitation that the Factories Act was first brought on the Statute Book in India in the year 1881. But it must be realised that the British people fought for this measure for having their own trade to flourish and prosper in India and not for sympathy with labour. But the humanitarian view was not altogether absent. The following paragraph from Mr. Rajani Kanta Das's "Factory Legislation in India" depicts these motives correctly:

"The problem of legislation for Indian factories was soon taken up in the House of Lords by the Earl of Shaftsbury, the wellknown philanthropist and undaunted champion of factory legislation for over forty years. On July 30, 1875, Lord Shaftsbury drew the attention of their lordships to Mr. Redgrave's remark on Indian textile industry, noted above, and described how rapidly it was growing. Pointing out the necessity of regulating labour in factories, he urged that factory labourers in India be saved while the industry was still young, from the difficulties and complications to which British Labourers had been subjected in the past. 'There is also a Commercial view to this question,' continued Lord Shaftsbury, 'we must bear in mind that India has raw material and cheap labour; if we allow the manufacturers there to work their operatives for 16 or 17 hours and put them under no restrictions, we are giving them a very unfair advantage over the manufacturers of our own country, and we might be undersold even in Manchester itself by manufactured goods imported from the East.'

So their fight for limiting the hours of work to 17 hours a day was not inspired by sympathy for the lot of the poor labouring people alone, but the chief reason was that their own goods would not have been sold here. The very first Factory Act of 1881 was a very simple one, in which provisions were made about the number of workers in a factory to whom the Act could apply—the limit was fixed above hundred. Then the Indian employers were using children for work and in this way they were producing cheaper goods and they therefore placed the limit of 9 years of age as the age below which children could not be employed. It is really a scandalous that at that time 9 years was supposed to be the proper age limit, which means that children of 9 were made to work for more than 9 hours a day. Between 1881 and 1948 the progress in labour legislation can be measured by the Act which we are now discussing. It is not a sudden jump. The first amended Factory Act was passed in 1881, another revised Factory Act in 1911 and the third amended Factory Act in 1922 and the fourth Factory Act in 1934 and this is the fifth and final Factory Act we are passing. I think our Honourable Minister, by the passing of this Bill, will have placed one of the most important Action the Statute Book in his time, and labour in this country will surely always remember him with gratefulness. While I compliment the Honourable Minister on having been so prompt in bringing this measure, I must tell him that the bill needs to be improved much more. We are now a free country and therefore we must not look back on days from which we have emerged, but we must now try to fall in line with the most progressive nations in the world. We are now providing for 48 hours a week, while in America they have only 40 hours a week and in Russia it is even lower. Therefore I have suggested that even if we cannot reduce our weekly hours of work so low just now, we should try to bring down our hours of work to at least 8 hours each week day with a halfday on Saturday. The total will then come to 44 hours a week. But 40 hours a week should be the minimum objective which we should aim at when we bring the next amendment to the Bill. The Honourable Minister has fixed the daily hours of child labour at 4½ hours daily but he has not said anything about the weekly limit. I think it should be fixed at 24 hours per week, so that no children may generally be required to work for more than four hours per day or more than 6 days in the week. I think these reduced hours of work are the most important part of this Bill and in this matter, I hope the Honourable Minister will try to overtake the great advanced countries of the world.

Now, Sir, I come to the sphere to which this Bill applies, that is, the manufacturing processes and the allied trades and industries covered by this Bill. I am glad that the scope of this Bill has been widened and it will now become more comprehensive. But I still feel that there are some very important trades and industries to which the Bill will not apply and to which it should apply. In fact when I compared this Bill with the British Act, I find that provisions of some very important sections of that Act have been left out from this Bill and I have suggested certain amendments to bring the Bill in line with the British Act. I particularly want that the Bill should be applied to dock workers also. I would suggest that the portion of the British Act applicable to dock-workers should be included in this Bill. I have suggested that among the various sub-clauses of Section 2 of this Bill, the loading and unloading of cargo of ships should also be included as a manufacturing process.

I have also put down painting and polishing as some of the other manufacturing processes. There are some factories where these are being carried out and they should be brought under this Act.

Sir, more important is my suggestion that the Honourable Minister should improve the definition of the word 'worker'. In the previous Act, the definition did not include a person solely employed in a clerical capacity or in a place where no manufacturing process was carried on. On account of this omission, many workers were not given the benefits of the labour regulations. In our province, the United Provinces, in the sugar industry, the Labour Committees appointed under orders of Government had to make special provisions to be able to give the benefits to these workers also. I wish that the definition should be made to include this class of persons also, the clerical staff, the menial staff, etc. It may be said that by implication they are included; I would suggest that this should be explicitly mentioned. I have brought in an amendment so that all workers in the field are also included.

Sir, there is an important defect in this Bill, in that it will not apply to the railway workers in running sheds in future. Mr. Sidhva said something on this point and the Honourable Labour Minister was heard to say, 'go to the Railway Minister.' The Railway Minister would say, 'so far as labour is concerned, you have to go to the Labour Minister.' Between the Labour Minister and the Railway Minister, these workers will probably go to hell. I want to say to the Honourable Labour Minister that this Act should include the railway workers, especially workers in the workshops and running sheds. In fact in the Railway Act, it is provided that the railway servants whose employment is continuous shall not be employed for more than 60 hours a week. We have provided for a 48 hours' week in this Bill. I do not think the Honourable Labour Minister will be justified in leaving the workers in the Railways to such a fate. Taking the spread over into account, the total comes to 84 hours a week in the railways. I would therefore request the Honourable Minister to see that this Act which is more progressive applies also to the railway workers.

Sir, I take very strong exception to section 5 of the Act. Section 5 gives the power to the Government to suspend the entire Act in an emergency. In a slave country that power could have been justified. Now that we are free, I do not think we should give such powers to the executive. The Governments already have the power of promulgating ordinances in the case of an emergency. To give the power to the provincial Government to exempt by notification any factory from all or any of the provisions of this Act in any emergency is something far too wide. The power has not been given to the Central Government, but to the provincial Government. I would suggest that this power must be withdrawn and this section should go. Whenever there is an emergency, the Government should call the legislature to have an amending Bill passed. Such powers are not to be found in the enactments of free countries. I do not know whether in England and America, such powers were given to the executive even during war. They are the legacies of our slavery and they must go.

I would like to draw attention to one other important matter about the disposal of wastes and effluents in some of the factories. I am glad that in this Act, for the first time, the factories have been asked to make effective arrangements for the disposal of wastes and effluents. I have seen rivers in the villages being spoiled on account of the drains flowing from the factories. I have seen cattle die and men suffer from diseases on account of this. I say that the factories should be made responsible to see that before the water is discharged from the factory, it should be purified and the factories should also be made responsible for any damages caused to the people who suffer on account of the neglect of the factories. I think provision should be made to this end in the Bill.

A word about the spread over. Here we have provided for 10½ hours. In a climate like that of our country, I think it is rather a severe strain. I would suggest that 10 hours should be the maximum spread over.

Another provision to which I object is about the leave rules contained in sections 79 to 84 of this Act. After having provided for leave, it is said that the factory manager can make a plan to regulate the leave and that he shall consult the workers in this matter. How the workers are to be consulted is not mentioned. Section 79 (4) runs as follows:

"If, for the purpose of ensuring the continuity of work in a factory, the occupier or manager of the factory, in agreement with the Works Committee of the factory constituted under section 3 of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947 (XIV of 1947) or a similar committee constituted under any other Act, or if there is no such Works Committee or a similar committee in the factory, the occupier or the manager of the factory in agreement with the representatives of the workers therein chosen in the prescribed manner, may lodge with the Chief Inspector a scheme in writing whereby the leave allowable under this section may be regulated."

The question is how the leave will be regulated. It is said that the manager will consult the Works Committees. In the Works Committees, the workers and the management will be equally represented and the Chairman also will be one of the management. The labourers will not have a free discussion of the matter in such a meeting. I think the scheme prepared should be subjected to the labourers' free discussion and free vote. This could only be done in their Trade Union meeting. I would suggest that in the place of Works Committees, the recognised Trade Union should be substituted. I would like to remind the Honourable Minister that it is now nearly one year since we passed the Trade Unions Act in which provision was made for the Government to make rules: I am sorry to say that though ten months have passed, the rules have not yet been made with the result that manufacturers and industrialists have taken advantage of this. If the rules had been made, in every factory there would have been a recognised trade union, and with their co-operation, much could be done and industrial peace could be secured. Therefore, in sub-sections 4 and 5, for the Works Committees, the recognised Trade Union should be substituted. Then alone, there will be free expression of opinion on the part of the workers.

Then I come to child labour. I was surprised that although 15 years is the age up to which one is a child, still after 14 he is allowed to work though up to 15 he is called a child. I think a person should be forbidden 4 P.M. to work up till the age of 15, in which case we could have done without the whole section relating to child labour. The age at which a man should start work is 15: in England, of course it is 14 but there the climate is different. Here children should not be made to work before they are 15. And if, as the definition says, a child is a person less than 15 years of age, I think we should say that no one who is less than 15 should be allowed to work. If we do that a large number of clauses dealing with child labour would go away. But as it is, I suggest that there should be many more limitations on the employment of this child labour. My friend Shri Ajit Prasad Jain mentioned some. In the British Act there is a whole chapter which makes exemptions as regards the employment of women and children; they are not allowed to work in lead industry and in industries where white phosphate is used. I think we should also place these restrictions on child labour and female labour. The British Act is a good model which we could copy in this respect.

Then as regards leave, my honourable friend Mr. Santhanam said that everyone should get one month's privilege leave and 15 days' casual leave. I heartily endorse that. Although I do not think we can immediately reach that stage, we can still make the rules more liberal, and instead of one day's leave for twenty days work in the case of an adult it may be made one day for every fifteen days' work, and instead of one day's leave for every fifteen days in the case of a child it may be made one day for every ten days' work. In this way I think we can make some approach towards the ideals mentioned by my honourable friend Mr. Santhanam. I think the leave rules are not liberal. In the English Act, I find they have prescribed Christmas, Good Friday and all bank holidays to be holidays for the workers also. That is more progressive than our Bill and now when we are a free country I think we should try to fall in line with other free countries.

Then one important provision of this Bill is clause 101 under which the occupier or manager of a factory can produce some scapegoats and escape liability. If he commits some faults there is a penalty prescribed; but if he can produce a scapegoat who will take the liability on himself he will be punished and the occupier or manager will go scot-free. This is something which is unfair and should not be allowed and this clause should be properly amended.

My honourable friends Mr. Sidhva and Mr. Jain both said that the most important part of the Bill should be the provisions for its implementation. I am glad that clause 113 gives the Central Government power to take the initiative; but I do not think that will be enough until the Honourable Minister uses his personal influence and gives that drive and initiative which is necessary if the measure is to be put into effect. Unfortunately the delay in making rules under the previous Act has been deplorable. I hope this will not happen in future and that rules under this measure will have been made before three months are over. I feel that this measure will be very useful for industrial peace in this country. In fact today there is inflation, industrial unrest and strikes where peace should prevail. If this measure is implemented in the spirit in which it has been conceived it will go a long way towards achieving industrial peace which we all want. Sir, I support the Bill.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Madras: General): Sir, I am very glad that my honourable friend Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena has given such detailed consideration to this Bill; but I wish to assure him that after all it is not quite right for him to be so pessimistic about the possibilities of this Bill.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: I am not pessimistic.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: And this Bill is not so backward either.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: I did not say that either.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: It is not even so unsatisfactory as he has given us to understand.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: I said nothing like that.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: He said nothing that I have so far suggested but I am afraid he has given that impression to this House, that it is neither such a progressive Bill nor such a satisfactory one. That at least is unfortunately the impression which has been created in my mind. Sir, I congratulate the Select Committee as well as the Labour Minister on having produced this report. I have given very careful consideration not only to this Bill but also to the Act which it seeks to supersede; and for a number of years we have been asking for many of the reforms which have come to be incorporated in this Bill. We asked the previous Government—but in vain—to extend the scope of factory legislation to that large number of small industrial concerns where less than 20 workers are employed and who are being treated very shabbily indeed. Now comes a measure to give these people also the benefit of protection of this particular Bill; and factory inspection and many more new innovations have come to be introduced in this Bill, not the least of which is the creche about which my honourable friend Mr. Kamath was so very enthusiastic after having seen it in Russia. One friend from behind me was asking me this morning whether after all when there would be a creche it would be reasonable for one to expect that there would be a few dolls, in spite of having a provision that every creche should be equipped with dolls. That is how this scepticism occurs in regard to any proposals that may be coming from my honourable friend and the limits to which scepticism can possibly go; and I think it is very unreasonable scepticism. But I do agree with my honourable friend Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena when he demurred to the provisions giving emergency powers to the various authorities. I have no objection to emergency powers being given; indeed in these days emergency powers are inevitable and they have to be placed in the hands of some authority or other. But what is found lacking in this is that whereas in the International Labour Conference every effort is being made to insist upon prior consultation with the corresponding organisations of employers and employees before these emergency powers come to be exercised by the authority concerned, we do not find any such thing here. And I do hope that my honourable friend the Labour Minister will take early steps—not necessarily legislative—to give administrative directions to the authorities concerned in order to help them to consult the corresponding organisations of workers and employers before they try to give effect to these emergency powers.

Then my honourable friend Prof. Saksena took exception to the Works Committees in regard to leave. I think he should have hailed this provision that an employer should have to consult the Works Committees when he comes forward with any proposal for offering leave and regulating how and when the leave is to be made use of by the workers, and so on. But what possible objection can he have to these Works Committees except that on these Works Committees the managerial staff also might come to be represented whereas on the trade unions only the workers would be represented? Which would be more democratic, which would be more satisfactory and conducive to industrial peace? To make the employer depend for his consultations only with the workers, or to depend on the consultation with the managerial staff and workers also? I prefer the second solution. That is why I support the provision in this Bill.

I am also very glad that this Bill seeks to make good one very big omission indeed in the earlier dispensation. In the earlier days, the Central Government did not have any direct responsibility to ensure that the Factories Act could be and would be fully and satisfactorily enforced. Now for the last thirty years every one who has made a study of labour conditions has been making one big complaint in regard to this particular matter, viz., that although this Factories Act was on the Statute Book it was not being enforced because the Provincial Governments were not so much interested. Therefore, I am glad that the Central Government has today taken the necessary power to give necessary directions from time to time to Provincial Governments in order to see that this particular Bill, when it becomes an Act, is properly and satisfactorily enforced. But more than that, there is even a bigger guarantee that the workers' interests will be safeguarded, that the provisions of this Act will be put in force in the democratic legislatures that we have in our various provinces and also in the growing labour movement. What organized labour in this country ought to look for is not so much for the Acts on the Statute Book but for their own organized strength and capacity to enforce their own will and to see that proper protection is offered to it by the Provincial Legislatures. And what are these Provincial Legislatures. If this House can consider itself democratic, I can assure you that the Provincial Legislatures can claim themselves to be just as democratic as this House, if not more democratic. Indeed the Provincial Legislatures are responsible to their own constituencies, whereas this House depends for its franchise on these Provincial Legislatures in regard to which Prof. Saksena seems to be so sceptical. Therefore, it is indeed very good and wise to leave this particular matter to organized labour on the one side and democratic Legislatures and Cabinets in the Provinces, and I do hope that the fears expressed by Mr. Sidhva in regard to the possible failure of our Government to enforce this particular legislation would come to be falsified by the future history of our country.

I shall comment on one thing more, and that is in regard to inspection. Till now Government have been dependent on their own Factory Inspectors. I have suggested several times before that they should make certain experiments for invoking the aid of village panchayets in villages and municipal councils in towns, and ask those people to do a bit of factory inspection and bring to the notice of the Government, much more quickly than is now possible by Factory Inspectors, any discrepancy in this particular Act of any misbehaviour on the part of employers.

I have one more word to say in regard to the punishment provided in this. I am inclined to agree with Prof. Saksena that it might be possible for some of these managers to make scape-goats of some of their proteges and then try to escape for any misbehaviour of their own. I think something ought to be done in order to avoid this trouble. Secondly, Sir, I am indeed glad that not only fines, but also imprisonment are provided for any misbehaviour on the part of employers. I am also glad that a lower fine is prescribed for workers than what is prescribed for employers. But at the same time I am not satisfied that the workers are sought to be protected from the Courts as well as from the employers for any sort of misbehaviour on their own part. Well, I think further consideration will have to be given by Government in order to see that the workers' interests are better protected than is sought to be protected according to this Bill, so far as my present reading of it suggests to me.

I am very glad anyhow, that there is a section in this Bill, called Section 111 regarding the obligations of workers. I am glad it is there. Workers have to satisfy or carry out their own obligations just as carefully and scrupulously as the employers. Workers, unfortunately, of course, till now, have complained that it has been a one-sided affair: that they had been expected to carry out their obligations, whereas employers were let off "scot-free" to a very great extent. Nevertheless, it is high time now for the workers to realize and remember their obligations and discharge their own obligations as scrupulously as they have been doing, if not more carefully, even while they insist that the employers should carry out their obligations cast upon them in this Act.

Lastly, I am very glad that this experiment is being made to extend the scope of this Bill to a very large number of industrial workers indeed in this country. I am also glad that all those workers, not directly employed by the so-called employer—but who anyhow are slaves of his and come under his influence in an indirect manner—are also being given protection under this Bill to administer this Act.

Under the circumstances, it is going to be a very difficult thing indeed. If there were 7 or 8 million people who had been brought under the protection of the earlier Bill, I am sure, Sir, more than 20 million workers will come to be protected by this Bill when it becomes an Act. Therefore to try and safeguard the interests, according to the provisions of this Act, of 13 more millions of workers is going to be a colossal affair and it is going to cast a very great responsibility on the Provincial Governments and the Central Government. I do feel that it is a very courageous step for the Honourable the Minister to have taken and he needs our good wishes and he needs the good wishes and support of all well-intentioned employers on the one side and of patriotic workers on the other.

Shrimati Renuka Ray (West Bengal: General): It had not been my intention to take part at this stage of the debate, as I am a member of the Select Committee. But certain points have been brought up about which I feel compelled to speak.

In the first place, this Bill is a measure which is long overdue. It is a measure whereby the Act of 1934 has been improved upon in a way so that it can be implemented and worked. It goes without saying that the 1934 Act in many ways was a dead letter. Apart from the other improvements that have come in, I think the most important part of this measure is that it has made that Act of 1934 workable.

Sir, my honourable friend Shrimati Durgabai said that the measure is a charter of rights. Now, I am very enthusiastic about this measure, but at the same time I do not think it can conceivably be called a charter of rights for the labourers. One may say that it is a part of a charter of rights that will have to be drawn up, but it cannot be a charter of rights because it merely lays down the provisions in regard to working conditions and not conditions of living, which is undoubtedly the most important part of a charter of rights for the labourers.

Together with the Workmen's State Insurance Act, I think this measure is a first step towards achieving this, and I feel that if the Honourable the Labour Minister has a chance, he will bring in, in a not too distant future, a real charter of rights for the working classes in this country.

Now, Sir, I would like to refer to the speech of my honourable friend Mr. Santhanam. I must say that the first part of his note of dissent has a good deal of my sympathy. I do feel that it would have been better if we had included those factories where power is not used under this measure. But in regard to the second part of his note of dissent I want to point out that it would be totally unjustifiable to bring in this provision, whereby women should be entirely prevented from working even up to 10 o'clock. We have to consider this from all points of view. Anything that is really injurious to women's health or home of course must be left out and we should not make any such provision in the Factory Act or anywhere else whereby women have to work under conditions which would be really injurious to her health or to her home. It was for this reason that I moved an adjournment motion in the central assembly in the old days against the withdrawal of the ban on women working underground in mines, because I felt that this was entirely and wholly a wrong measure. But at the same time I do feel that we have to be careful in these things. In the first place if we put bans and restrictions on women working in various ways, we are likely to eliminate women workers as labourers altogether. For instance if we do not allow women in some factories to work up to 10 p.m. it may be that shifts being arranged as they are, they would just be deprived of working in such occupations altogether. Will their working up to 10 p.m. be so very detrimental to their home life? I do not think so. First of all these women who work go together to the factories and come back together. I do not think there are cases of abduction.....

Shrimati Dakshayani Velayudhan (Madras: General): Do they live in the same home so that they can go and come back at the same time?

Shrimati Renuka Ray: They usually stay in the same locality. I think that this exemption will apply only in certain specific industries such as jute mills, where they go together and come back together. Their homes are very near each other. I do not think cases of abduction have occurred. We have had a good deal of abduction in this country in the recent past but I do not think there have been many cases in regard to women labourers. Although women in this country are not yet able to look after themselves, a sorry situation which one has to admit, yet women labourers—I am proud to say—are at least a section of our countrywomen who are able to look after themselves much better than others. It would be very unjust on our part that because there are other women who are still suffering from complexes and who have not been given facilities whereby they could look after themselves and hence are unable or unskilled to do certain jobs, we should prevent these other women workers from getting economic justice. It will mean that we deprive them of their means of honest livelihood which will have repercussions of an injurious nature on their family life and homes. For that is what it will mean. I am very much against this note of dissent and I hope that the Honourable the Labour Minister will not accept any amendment on this score.

There is just one other point on which I want to say a few words. My honourable friend Mr. Shibbanlal Saksena spoke about Railways being exempted from the Factories Act. That is not correct. They are not exempted from this Bill. What has been done by the Select Committee is that the railway running sheds have been exempted, because it so happens that their leave rules happen to be better than the leave rules under this Bill. Where any kind of labour has better treatment than the minimum conditions laid down under this Bill I do not think it would be to their detriment that they are exempted from the provisions of this Bill. I think this matter should be cleared up and it should be understood that the railways as such are not exempted.

I do not want to make a long speech. I feel that this measure is an extremely good one. Of course it has defects. My honourable friend Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad will find many grammatical errors and defects in this Bill to which he can bring amendments. Again I do feel that in the light of experience many real defects are also likely to come out which we cannot foresee today. These will have to be rectified later after this Bill has been passed and worked for sometime.

My honourable friend Mr. Sidhva made a long speech about the implementation of this Act. I have always thought that the implementation of an Act is far more important than just enacting it. I think the Honourable the Labour Minister is very much alive to this aspect of the case and I am sure that he will do his very best to see to it that the Act is implemented. As some honourable friends have said today the provincial governments cannot be looked upon in the same way as provincial governments in the past and we do hope that they too will be equally interested as the Honourable the Labour Minister is in seeing that this Factories Act, which though not a charter of rights for the working classes will be an important part of such a charter when it is enacted, is implemented properly.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: Mr. Chairman, one finds it very difficult to give a reply to such a large number of criticisms, more so when those criticisms are not made in a spirit of opposition but in an appreciative and congratulatory spirit and also to demand something more for bettering the condition of the working classes. From one section of industrialists in this country and from a few members of this House there has been a complaint that I was going rather too fast in the matter of labour legislation and it leads me sometimes to think whether I am really going too fast. But today after hearing the speeches of the honourable members in this House I feel that I am not going fast enough. In spite of those honourable friends in this House who have sometimes been complaining that the pace and the speed with which I am bringing in labour laws will retard the progress of industrialisation in this country, it has been my own personal feeling that I was not going too fast, because it is inherent in what we have inherited as a legacy from the past government that the pattern of Government that we are working under does not lead us to go fast. This feeling of mine has been confirmed by the honourable members of this House.

Sometimes it has also been complained that some of the measures that I was bringing forward were of a revolutionary nature, that they will scare away capital and will retard the progress of industry in this country. I think that that apprehension also has been falsified because a democratic government cannot claim to be a democratic government if it does not happen to be the barometer of the feeling in the society. Today I find that my measures do not generally represent the feeling of the society because from the speeches of honourable members here I find that the Bill that has been brought by the Government is not up to the expectations of the honourable members here. That means that it is not up to the standard of the social consciousness that has been aroused after the attainment of independence in this country. Therefore it is a very gratifying feature for me to find that the complaint against me of a certain section of the industrialists and a few honourable members of this House as well is totally untenable.

I now come to the various suggestions that have been made with a view to improve the Bill. I can classify the various speeches made into three categories: one which has been simply to congratulate me, to appreciate the measure and to appreciate the solicitude of the Government in improving the condition of the working classes. To that part I have nothing to say except acknowledging them with thanks. The second part is of such suggestions as have arisen out of a misconception of the provisions of the Bill, or due to the want of a thorough grasp of the provisions made in this Bill. Notices of a large number of amendments have been given. I have given my serious thought to these amendments, and I find that a very large number of the amendments are due to the fact that the honourable members have not bestowed that amount of thought and consideration on the provisions of the Bill as they ought to have given to them. Had they given that much of thought to the various provisions of the Bill they would not have come forward with these notices of amendments.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): There was no time to read the provisions of the Bill.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: Had they also given their thought to the various aspects of the provisions of the Bill I think many members who have said so many things would have saved a lot of the time of this House. I will not take the time of the House on these suggestions as well. I may just say that many of the suggestions that have been made, either in the course of speeches or those which are sought to be made in this Bill by amendments, are already covered by the provisions contained in the Bill, for example, Sir, I may refer to the point that was raised by my honourable friend Prof. Saksena, whom I do not find in his seat, to include certain manufacturing processes. I am afraid he has not carefully gone through the provision as given in the Bill. Had he done that he would not have raised those points. Similarly there are so many instances that I can quote. So I will not examine the points, made either through the speeches or sought to be made through amendments, in respect of provisions which are already covered.

Then two or three serious criticisms have been made. One is that the present Government, and more so the unfortunate soul which is sometimes called the champion of labour and sometimes the enemy of industrialisation, has been pampering labour. I may assure you, Mr. Chairman, that I am one who believes that right and responsibility go together. I am one who believes that there cannot be a right without a responsibility and anybody who craves for rights and shirks responsibility is not a true citizen of the country. So anybody who thinks that I pamper labour, I am afraid, has not been able to appreciate my policy. I want that the working classes in this country must be treated as citizens of the country. They must have every human right. At the same time I also want that every citizen should realize his responsibility—the working classes included. But you cannot expect only responsibilities. It has been an unfortunate factor in this country that we have been given to expecting only responsibilities from the working classes. When I want some rights for them, those who have been given to the habit of taking work from them without giving them the reward, feel that something revolutionary was being sought to be done. That is the whole crux of the situation. I have not made it a secret that I regard workers as an indispensable part and partner in any industry. I have said it so many times. I want to repeat it once more, not because I do not want industrialisation in this country, not because I do not want to protect the industrialists and the employers so long as we are working in the present economic pattern of the country, but because I feel this is the only step which can save the industrialists for some time to come. That is my genuine desire. With such a stupendous fall in production, with such a shortage of consumer goods, I know that it will be foolishness on our part to transform the existing economic system overnight. Therefore we have to protect and preserve the private industries for some time to come. But I know that no amount of appeal, no amount of request—not only from the Government but also from the leaders who count in the country—is going to help the situation unless we do something concrete for the toiling, starving and neglected working classes. Whatever step I propose to take is with that end in view. It is with a view not only to help the working classes but with a view to help the industrialists as well. I have sometimes told my industrialist friends in confidence—and I do not mind repeating it here as well—that if they do not change their outlook, if they do not regard that the workers are also as good human beings as the employers, they will be hastening their own ruination. If today I am forcing something which may appear unpalatable to the employers I may assure them I am doing those things primarily in their interests, because I want to save them in the interests of the nation for some years.

This Factories Bill, Sir, seeks to give some rights to the workers, but at the same time it does not deprive them or bereave them from their responsibilities. If one will look to the provisions of this Bill—I do not want to examine it clause by clause as some of my friends have done, though I can do it I think it is not appropriate at this stage—one will see that we have thrown responsibilities on the workers as well. In every measure that I am bringing, I am seeking to make the workers realise that they have a responsibility, they have their duties not only to themselves, not only to their employers but to the country and the community as a whole.

Some of my friends have said that this Bill is a revolutionary one. Others have said it is a charter of rights for the working classes. I wish, Sir, it were so. I do not think there is anything revolutionary in it; though there are some provisions which seek to uplift the workers from the very downward position to which they have been relegated from so many years past. I do not think those things to be revolutionary. To call a man a man, to call a citizen a citizen, I do not think is any revolution. And what does it seek to do? What it seeks to do is that if a worker falls ill he requires the services of a doctor as much as an employer requires, a worker if he meets with some accident deserves some first-aid as you or I or anybody else deserves. I do not think it is a revolutionary idea if one were to provide some first-aid, some amenities for the workers, as we do for others. It is not a revolutionary idea if one were to ask that if an employer were to employ a lady he will have to make provisions so that the child of that lady is looked after so long as she is engaged in the factory, and there is nothing like revolution if one were to expect that some provision will be made to give some milk, some refreshment, some playing space for those children.

The one thing that may be very revolutionary is that the employers will have to employ welfare officers to look after their workers in factories. The employers may feel—and I have received some protests from certain quarters and certain sections of the employers—but I do not think there is the least germ of revolution in that because that provision also I have made in the interests of employers. I have been telling my employer friends to look to their counterparts in other countries like America and the United Kingdom, which have the same type of economy as we have—I will not invite them to look to that of Russia, that is a red rag with them. Let them see what amount of money employers in America and in Great Britain were spending on propaganda to educate their workers. I have been asking my employer friends here what amount they are spending for the education of their workers—not education in the general sense but education in the sense that if you are doing really something beneficial for your workers those very facts should be brought to their notice. That even is not brought to their notice. Well, disputes and troubles arise sometimes on trivial and trifling matters; had those things been settled as soon as they started, I think much of the bigger troubles could have been avoided. But there is no agency and there is no contact between the employer and the worker. So, this provision of welfare officers I presume should be a living contact between the employers and their employees, and that will be in the interests of the employers.

So, personally I do not find anything revolutionary in this measure.

Then, Sir, I come to the criticisms. One of the very important criticism of this Bill is that much power of exemption has been given to the Provincial Governments. I agree and accept that. Though there has been a definite improvement in this Bill over the old Act in the matter that we have made a statutory provision in the Bill itself for many things which in the old Act were to be done by rules framed by the Provincial Governments, still very many things have been left in this Bill which are to be prescribed by rules by the Provincial Governments. We have also made very many provisions by which the Provincial Governments or the Chief Inspectors of Factories of the Provincial Governments have been authorised to make exemptions of factories or a class of factories from all or any of the provisions under the various sections of this Bill. But I feel, Sir, that it is necessary that becomes necessary from the very fact that this Legislature is the Legislature of a Federal Government. We cannot afford to shut our eyes to this fact that we are legislating here for a field over which I have no executive authority. And, Sir, I may not expect that the very small staff that I have got in this section will know the various details that are required to be included in these rules. In a huge country like this where conditions differ so diametrically from one part to the other, it is not possible here to frame such detailed rules in the Act itself. Therefore, we had to give these powers to the Provincial Governments.

Then I come to the question of the power of exemptions. Sometimes power of exemption is necessary. I do not want to examine the various clauses, but if one were to examine them one will find that when we are making changes, introducing new measures and making them applicable to the existing factories as well, it will not be wise or desirable for us to expect that all the existing factories will conform to the various provisions that we are laying down in this Act. In the cases of many of the existing factories, their machineries and accessories will have to be rejected because they cannot conform to the new provisions made under this Act. Therefore, exemptions in many cases have become necessary and indispensable, so that we may not have, as soon as this Act is passed, to ask a number of factories in this country to close down. That will not be a wise thing, from the larger national point of view, more so at a time when production is suffering. So, howsoever I wish that all the factories in this country should conform to the new standards, having some responsibility as an administrator, I cannot shut my eyes to these bare facts.

Then, there is another fact. Apart from all these considerations, does it not imply some mistrust of our Provincial Governments when we say: Why so much power of exemption is being given to the Provinces?

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: Because they have not acted fairly in the past.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: Mr. Sidhva has been very well replied by Prof. Ranga.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: They cancel each other!

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: I think they neutralised each other, but I would like to request my honourable friends in this House to remember that the Provincial Governments, their ministries and their legislatures, are as much responsible there as we here claim to be and if we are giving them these powers, I think there is no reason to think that they will not be utilised properly.

Then the other question is about implementation. Mr. Sidhva was very much emphatic that the Provincial Governments have not been as alive to the implementation of this measure as they ought to have been. I know, Sir, that there are various difficulties. On previous occasions, I have given out some of the difficulties which force the Provincial Governments not to engage as large a staff as is necessary for the full implementation of the provisions of this measure, but it is gratifying to note that since I took charge of this responsibility, I have been periodically calling conferences of the provincial Labour Ministers and also calling periodical conferences of the Chief Inspectors of Factories of the Provincial Governments, and as a result of these conferences and as a result of our insistence on the Provincial Governments to increase their Factories inspectorate staff, I am glad to inform the House that today the number of Inspectors in the provinces which, two years back, was only 62, is today 86. Some of my friends will at once say that in such a vast country like ours only 86 Inspectors are not sufficient. Well, I am told that the number of factories in this country so far covered under the Factories Act is something like 13,000. So by rule of three, every Inspector is in charge of or supposed to be in charge of something like 150 factories. That is not a very low standard, I may inform the House. That is supposed to be a very reasonable and a very good standard—to have one Inspector per 150 factories,—so that today we cannot say that we have not sufficient inspectorate staff. But as we widen the scope of the factories Act, the number of factories will increase tremendously.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: It will be three times more.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: But while I agree with my honourable friend Mr. Sidhva that the number of inspecting staff will have to be greatly increased, we cannot expect the Provincial Governments to increase their staff simply by criticism, simply by saying they are incapable and so on.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: Then, what should I do?

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: You have to use persuasion. You have to remember that they are as anxious to go ahead with this work as we are. So I personally feel that the response to my request to the Provincial Governments has been very encouraging. During the last two years they have appointed twenty-four new Inspectors and that is not a small figure.

Babu Ramnarayan Singh (Bihar: General): What about Bihar?

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: I have not got the figures for the different provinces ready at hand, but I feel that Bihar is not lagging behind in this respect. Bihar has also made some new appointments, but I wish my honourable friend from Bihar is in better possession of facts about Bihar than I am.

Then, Sir, there have been some questions about more amenities for the workers. One thing we should not forget is that this is after all a Factories Bill. By "Factories Bill" it is implied that we are proposing to regulate the employment conditions, health and safety of the workers inside the factory. We should not confuse it with the welfare measures for the workers outside the factory. If we keep these two factors separate, many of the questions that have been raised in regard to adult education, visual instruction, primary schools etc. would not have been raised here. Those things are very necessary. They are crying needs of the time. We will, either I as a Labour Minister, or the Government as a whole, here in the Centre or in the Provinces, will have to take concrete steps for educating our adults, for educating our children and other similar things. But that work does not fall within the purview of the Factories Act. I think if we were to include the question of primary education etc. in this Bill, the people outside would ridicule not merely my Ministry but this Legislature also. While therefore those provisions are necessary they are not within the jurisdiction of the Factories Bill. We purposely kept the various age-limits in this Bill so that when we have education scheme for the country, when we feel that all children of such and such age will have to be put in the schools, we have provided that from the creches they will go to the schools.

Then, you Sir, raised the question about the training of workers. That, also, I am afraid, does not fall within the purview of the Factories Bill. We are, however, examining that question separately, as it has a very important place in the national economy. At a time when we are so short not only of production but also of man-power—and here perhaps some of my friends may think that when we have such a huge resource of surplus manpower it looks paradoxical to say that we are short of manpower—but all the same, Sir, the fact remains that we are very short of man-power and therefore, we will have to train our people and I am examining that question. We 5 P. M. have also taken that question separately with the employers in various industries in order not only, that the workers may be in a better position to earn something more but also that we can solve our shortage of manpower and technical personnel. We will have to make adequate provision for training the workers with a view to upgrading them. That question we are examining separately and I am thankful to you, Sir, that you pointed it out here. My time is over, Sir and I shall say a few words about one or two things

Some Honourable Members: Tomorrow?

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: I will rather have it finished in five minutes now.

About women, Sir, I think the objection of Mr. Santhanam has been neutralized by Mrs. Renuka Ray. But I would like to say one thing. I have given serious consideration to this question. But I do not want to confuse the issue by raising questions like abduction, purdah, illiteracy and things like that which he has raised. These are not the ladies who remain in purdah. The question of purdah does not arise here. Those who are in purdah can afford to live in purdah, but those who are on the point of starvation they have to go to the mills and earn their livelihood. We cannot judge their standard from the standard of the middle class people. We will have to judge it from the standard of those people who have no means of livelihood.

Shrimati Dakshayani Velayudhan: I should like to know whether the international law allows women to work in factories between 7 and 10 P.M.?

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: It does and it is in conformity with the international law, but I am not judging it from the international point of view, Sir. Sometimes we have to judge things on the merit of our national requirements and the requirements of our own society. We cannot judge everything from the standard of America, Russia or the United Kingdom. There are so many things in our society which are not to be found in other countries.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: America proposes that women should work till 12 o'clock.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: And then to confuse these issues about illiteracy and literacy. Are you really proposing that you are not going to allow illiterate women after 10 P.M.? If you do not allow these women to work, they may have to face starvation. I can appreciate your anxiety for social standards and morality if before making this note of dissent you have brought a resolution that no lady after 10 P.M. is allowed to go and walk in the clubs, on the roads in the towns and the bazaars. For luxury everybody and anybody can go out but for necessity you want to prevent them. Their necessity is greater.

Shrimati G. Durgabai: They go in the cars. Why not?

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: Then, Sir, about abduction. I wish my honourable friend could have studied the statistics about abductions and then he would have found whether these working-class ladies have been abducted or those in pardah have been abducted. He could have ascertained who are the ladies who are abducted most, not those who go in the mills and work, not those who stand on their legs and who earn their livelihood, but those who are confined in pardah. Even on principle as much as on necessity, I feel this provision is very much necessary. I have personally seen the females of those poorer classes who have no mainstay, no land, no supporter; they will have to beg or starve if they are not allowed to work and they may not get work if they are not in a position to work for the second shift as well and this provision has been made with a view to enable them, those who as a necessity have to work, that they may work for the second shift also. This will be applicable only in those factories which are working the second shift. So in order to provide those ladies who have no means of livelihood and who may be forced to work the second shift may be in a position to earn their livelihood and also to maintain their small children that this provision has been made. It has been said that it was not in the existing Act; it might not have been, but when I feel that a thing is necessary, there is no bar in introducing a new provision. The fact that this provision is not in the existing Act, is not an argument against introducing it in a new Bill. I feel it is a very necessary provision. I have given my very anxious thought to this question, but at the same time I have seen their pitiable condition and I have come to the conclusion that this provision is very necessary in the interests of those women workers. With these words, I hope the House will accept my motion for consideration.

Mr. Chairman: I think honourable members will have an opportunity when the details are being discussed of having reply to all the questions.

The question is:

"That the Bill to consolidate and amend the law regulating labour in factories, as reported by the Select Committee be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned till a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock on Tuesday the 24th August, 1948.

CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY OF INDIA (LEGISLATIVE) DEBATES

(PART II—PROCEEDINGS OTHER THAN QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS)

Tuesday, 24th August, 1948

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock, Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

(See Part I)

11-45 A.M.

FACTORIES BILL—contd.

Mr. Speaker: The House will now proceed with the further consideration of the Bill to consolidate and amend the law regulating labour in factories, as reported by the Select Committee. The consideration motion was passed by the House yesterday and we proceed today with the clause by clause reading of the Bill. I find there are amendments by Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): Yes, Sir. I have two amendments and I shall move them together as they relate to the same matter.

I beg to move:

"That in parts (e) and (f) of clause 2 of the Bill, for the word 'beginning', the word 'commencing' be substituted."

The clause in the Bill says: "'day' means a period of twenty-four hours beginning at midnight". This is in part (e). (f) also says the same thing. "Week" means a period of seven days beginning at midnight on Saturday night etc. I want to substitute the word "commencing" for the word "beginning". First of all, the word "beginning" is an informal word. The word "commencing" is a formal word and a precise one. It is given out in Webster's Dictionary of Synonyms, which is a standard authority on these matters that the word "beginning" has relation to an event, but the word "commencing" is related to a point of time. We may say that the proceedings of this House begin with the arrival of the Speaker, but it will be proper to say that the proceedings of the House commence at Quarter to Eleven. We are here concerned with a point of time and "commencing" would be a more proper word. I do not say that "beginning" would be absolutely wrong, but the word "commencing" is more appropriate.

In this connection, I should also like to make a suggestion, if it is acceptable to the Honourable Minister, namely, that the week should rather begin after the week-end, that is, after the midnight of Sunday. A week to begin after the midnight of Saturday would not be very proper. This is only a suggestion. For the present, I move only for the changing of the word "beginning" into "commencing".

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in parts (e) and (f) of clause 2 of the Bill, for the word 'beginning', the word 'commencing' be substituted."

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram (Minister for Labour): Sir, I do not claim to be a grammarian as my friend claims to be, but both the words "commence" and "begin" have the same meaning and the word "begin" is simpler than the word "commence". So I would go in for the simpler word and I have also been advised by the Draftsman that "begin" is quite appropriate here. I had requested my friend Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad to help the Draftsman in all these matters and he has helped him to a very great extent. That is why this time honourable members do not see such a large number of amendments from my friend, but I am sorry I cannot accept this amendment.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that only such of the amendments as are not accepted by the Draftsman appear on the Order Paper.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Yes, Sir.

Mr. Speaker: If that is so, the honourable member may leave them alone, unless he is very particular.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I am not very particular about these amendments. What happened was that the Honourable Minister was kind enough to ask me to point out some of the amendments to the Draftsman instead of troubling the House over them, and I was enabled to make a large number of suggestions. I am grateful to the Honourable Minister and also to his Draftsman for accepting a large number of suggestions. It is for this reason that they do not appear on the Order Paper. Yesterday, the honourable lady member, Mrs. Renuka Ray, rather lamented the absence of a large number of amendments which the House normally expects from me. The reason was as I have explained. However, in spite of all my industry, I missed a few more points and that is why they appear even now on the Order Paper. But so far as the Honourable Minister is concerned, he has been extremely fair in considering the amendments. So, if he does not accept these two particular amendments, I shall not press them.

Mr. Speaker: Then, I take it the honourable member wishes to withdraw.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Yes, Sir. I beg leave of the House to withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: Has the honourable member leave of the House to withdraw his amendment?

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: Then there are amendments by Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena in List No. 5, amendments Nos. 1 to 5.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena (U.P.: General): Sir, I beg to move:

"That in part (k) (i) of clause 2 of the Bill, after the word 'packing', the words 'painting and polishing' be inserted."

I will also move the second amendment just now as it relates to the same sub-clause. I beg to move:

"That after part (k) (v) of clause 2 of the Bill, the following new part (k) (vi) be added;

"(vi) loading cargo on or unloading cargo from vessels or ships;"

Sir, by my first amendment I have only tried to extend the meaning of the words "manufacturing process". As I said yesterday, some industries had been left out and they could be easily included in this Bill by adding "painting and polishing" here.

By my second amendment—which is more important—I have tried to add "loading or unloading of cargo from ships". In fact, the British Factories Act has got several sections for dock workers, because according to that Act, dock workers are also entitled to the same amenities. In fact, I would like to draw the attention of the Honourable Minister to Section 105 of the British Act by which they have extended the provisions of the Factory Act to dock workers. We know that there are about a lakh of these people in this country and if a Section like Section 105 of the British Act could be added to this Bill, it would be much better, but I think even if we add this new sub-section (vi) in clause 2 (k), the purpose would be served. The provisions in Section 105 of the British Act run as follows:

"The provisions of this Act hereinafter in this sub-section mentioned shall apply to every dock, wharf or quay (including any warehouse belonging to the owners, trustees or conservators of the dock, wharf or quay and any line or siding used in connection with and for purposes of the dock, wharf or quay and not forming part of a railway or tramway) and every other warehouse (not forming part of a factory) in or for the purpose of which mechanical power is used, as if it were a factory; and as if the person having the actual use or occupation of it or of any premises within it or forming part of it were the occupier of a factory....."

Then there are certain other sub-sections; and in regard to the loading and unloading of cargo, the section says:

"The provisions of this Act mentioned in paragraph (a).....shall apply to the processes of loading, unloading or coaling of any ship in any dock, harbour or canal..... and to all machinery or plant used in those processes, as if the processes were carried on in a factory and the machinery, or plant were machinery or plant in a factory and the person who carries on those processes were the occupier of a factory."

That means that all the docks and wharves and quays are covered by these provisions in the British Act. So what I say is that the large numbers of dock workers in India should also be given the benefit of this Act. Recently, we had a Dock Worker's Act which is intended to remedy the present casual nature of dock labour, but the condition of the dock workers is very bad and if we only add this simple clause, all the benefits of this Act would be extended to them. They are engaged in a work which is of paramount importance to the country, and if their conditions of service are not improved, and they are dissatisfied, nation's commerce will suffer. I, therefore, earnestly plead for extending this Act to them.

Mr. Speaker: I was just considering, before I put the amendments, whether the first amendment is not covered by the words "ornamenting, finishing" etc. which are already in the section.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: It is covered. I was also just going to point out that it is covered by the words "ornamenting and otherwise treating" which are already in the Section.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: Then, I do not press that amendment.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: In regard to the second amendment also, I may explain, so that the honourable member may be induced to withdraw it. Loading and unloading of cargo is covered by the Dock Labourers' Regulations and therefore we did not include that thing here.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: But there is nothing for them in this Bill here.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: Not in this Bill but in the other Act.

Mr. Speaker: The Honourable Minister says loading and unloading is covered by the regulations for the dock labourers. His contention is that they have therefore, not included it here.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: Are the same amenities provided there and have they the force of a statute?

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: Their safety and other things are provided there, but not all those things which are provided here in the Factories Act. The point about loading and unloading does not come in the manufacturing process and that is not a factory.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That after part (k) (v) of clause 2 of the Bill, the following new part (k) (vi) be added;

'(vi) loading cargo on or unloading cargo from vessels or ships.'"

The motion was negatived.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: Sir, I move:

"That in part (l) of clause 2 of the Bill, the following be added at the end;

'including every person employed in or on behalf of a factory as menial, clerical, supervisory or other staff.'"

Sir, the definition of "worker" formerly had a tail in which it was mentioned that the clerical staff is not included in the definition of "worker". This tail has now been dropped. I consider this is an improvement, but this matter is of vital importance and these words should therefore be specifically mentioned here. There is obviously no harm in mentioning them. It was with this same purpose in view that the words in the tail of the former definition were omitted. I think by using these words, we will be able to make our purpose more explicit and avoid much litigation. I hope the Honourable Minister will accept the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in part (l) of clause 2 of the Bill, the following be added at the end;

'including every person employed in or on behalf of a factory as menial, clerical, supervisory or other staff.'"

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: I have every sympathy with the mover of the amendment, but I do not accept it, not because I am opposed to it, but because it is superfluous. It is covered here in the definition as given in the Bill. Everybody who is connected with any of the works incidental to or connected with the manufacturing process is a worker. So I find this amendment superfluous and not necessary.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: In view of the assurance of the Honourable Minister that they are included, I beg leave of the House to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Has the honourable member leave of the House to withdraw his amendment?

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in part (m) (ii) of clause 2 of the Bill, for the word 'twenty', the word 'fifteen' be substituted."

Sir, our friend, Mr. Santhanam and two other friends in the Select Committee have given their note of dissent stating that this part (ii) should not be there and that all factories whether they use power or not should be covered by this Act. I have every sympathy with them, but I do think that there should be maintained separate statistics of factories which are using power or which are not using power. If the Honourable Minister is keen on having that differentiation let him have it, but there should be brought under this Act a larger number of factories, and therefore I have suggested that the word "fifteen". I hope as a compromise the Honourable Minister will accept the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in part (m) (ii) of clause 2 of the Bill, for the word 'twenty', the word 'fifteen' be substituted."

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: Sir, I do not accept this amendment, not because I do not want to bring all the factories in this country within the purview of this Act, but because it will not be administratively possible at this stage and there is no meaning in putting a thing on the statute book which will not be enforced in the near future. Moreover if the Provincial Government find that they are in a position to enforce the provisions of this Bill to every factory, they have got the power to extend the scope of this Bill and apply it to the other factories as well. Therefore I do not accept the amendment.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: If the Honourable Minister is not agreeable, I beg leave of the House to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Has the honourable member leave of the House to withdraw his amendment?

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: Sir, I move:

"That in part (m) of clause 2 of the Bill, the words 'or a railway running shed', occurring at the end, be omitted."

Sir, this is an important amendment and I wish the Honourable Minister could see his way to accept it. In fact, it was not in the old Act and it is an innovation in this Bill. I don't think that the Honourable Minister wants to make the lot of people in the railway running sheds worse than what it was before. As I pointed out yesterday from a quotation from the Railway Act, I find that they are putting in 60 hours work and the spreadover is 84 hours. I think the running staff is the most important staff in the Railways. Unless we give the drivers, the firemen, the engine-cleaners and all these people the amenities provided for in this Act, I think we cannot run the railway service efficiently. I therefore hope that the Honourable Minister will not have it said about this Bill that it has also injured a large number of workers who have so far enjoyed the benefits of the Factory Act. I hope, Sir, he will accept the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in part (m) of clause 2 of the Bill the words 'or a railway running shed', occurring at the end, be omitted."

Shri K. Santhanam (Madras: General): This point came for an exhaustive enquiry at the Select Committee meeting and it was found that it was to the advantage of the workers themselves that the clause should remain as it is. There was some difficulty in distinguishing between workers within the running shed who were treated as factory workers and others who work outside the running shed and were treated as non-factory workers and there was a great deal of confusion. Also under the Railway rules the people we exempt from this Factory Act get many more privileges and therefore it is considered desirable that this running shed should not be treated like a factory for the good of the workers themselves.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: I cannot think of any advantages to which they are entitled by being excluded from this Act.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: I think, Sir, this amendment has been put by my honourable friend out of some misconception. He has raised the question of drivers and guards. I do not see how we can mix up these drivers and guards with the railway running sheds. It is not meant for drivers, firemen and guards. These running sheds are not as a matter of fact factories; they are not even repair shops; they are places where these engines are cleaned or minor repairs done. The anomaly arose because those who are working in these sheds are treated as if they were employed in a factory and those working outside are treated as if they are not factory workers; and that anomaly was created among the same category of staff themselves. In order to do away with that anomaly and in view of the fact that these running sheds are from the nature of their work not factories, it was brought to our notice by the Railway Board that it would be advisable to exempt these running sheds from the purview of the Factories Act. As regards other amenities, as pointed out by Mr. Santhanam they are better placed in the matter of leave rules and other things. As regards hours of work, for railway workers as pointed out by Prof. Saksena, they are for the running staff. Those also are going to be revised in view of the award given by Justice Rajadhyaksha which will soon come into force. So all these points do not arise and my honourable friend is labouring under a misconception; I hope he will withdraw the amendment.

[Shri Jagjivan Ram]

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: I would have found great pleasure in withdrawing it but as I am myself fully acquainted with many running sheds all over the country

Mr. Speaker: There can be no reply to the argument. The honourable member has to make up his mind whether he withdraws it or wishes it to be put to vote.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: I desire to press it.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in part (m) of clause 2 of the Bill, the words 'or a railway running shed' occurring at the end, be omitted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Nasiruddin Ahmad: Sir, I move:

"That in part (n) of clause 2 of the Bill, for the words 'and where the said affairs are entrusted to a managing agent, such agent shall be deemed to be the occupier of the factory', the following be substituted:

'and includes, where the affairs of the factory are entrusted to a managing agent, such managing agent;'"

This relates to the definition of the word "occupier". It says: "'occupier' of a factory means the person who has ultimate control over the affairs of the factory." Then there is a long passage: "and where the said affairs are entrusted to a managing agent, such agent shall be deemed to be the occupier of the factory." These words are condensed in the amendment.

The amendment merely substitutes for the last words "shall be deemed to be the occupier of the factory" the word "includes". The definition relates to an occupier and if we say it includes a managing agent all these words "shall be deemed to be the occupier of the factory" would be unnecessary. If we say that the occupier includes the managing agent if he is in charge, that is quite enough to express the idea and it economises so many words. Sir, I move.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: Sir, it is not only a question of drafting but changes the meaning also to some extent. Under the clause the managing agent if he is in charge will be the occupier, whereas the amendment would make the person who is in ultimate control as well as the managing agent occupiers of the same factory. So it is not merely an improvement of language but also changes the meaning. I cannot accept it.

Mr. Nasiruddin Ahmad: The same risk is there also in the clause as it stands.

Mr. Speaker: No, it is not so. The amendment would make it apply to both; that is not the idea.

Mr. Nasiruddin Ahmad: Then I do not press it.

Mr. Speaker: Then I need not put it to the House.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva (C. P. and Berar General): Sir, I beg to move:

"That after part (o) of clause 2 of the Bill, the following new part be inserted:

'(oo) 'Chief Inspector' and 'Inspector' mean persons who have served for about three years in any recognised social institute.'"

In view of the Inspector's duties this is very important. The Honourable Minister stated that even in the Adviser's department there is training of inspectors. I should like to know what training is given there. If the Inspectors are trained there I will press for this amendment.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: Sir, I am not accepting this amendment.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: Then I do not press it.

Mr. Speaker: Then I will not put it to the House.

Shri Ajit Prasad Jain (U. P.: General): Sir, I move:

"That in part (q) of clause 2 of the Bill, the following be added at the end:

'and all references to a province shall be construed as references to an Acceding State'."

I said something about this yesterday and I desire to say a few words on it now. This amendment really relates to clause 100 of the Bill which says that in case of firms and associations all the partners of the firm or members of the association shall be responsible for any breach or violation of the provisions of law. To this there is a proviso to the effect that it will be open to the partners of the firm or the members of the association to nominate one of their partners or members, and that person alone shall be liable for any breach or violation of the law. But that proviso lays down a rider that such member should be residing within the provinces of India. Now the word 'province' has a special meaning under the Government of India Act and means one of the provinces mentioned therein. This Bill has now been extended to the Acceding States. And if this amendment is not accepted it will mean that in the case of a firm or association which carries on business in an Acceding State the partners or members, who will all be ordinarily residing in an Acceding State, shall not be entitled to nominate a partner or member who alone will be responsible for violations or breaches of the law. I think for provinces and States there must be one law and my amendment would remove the anomaly that now exists in the Bill. I hope it will be accepted. Sir, I move.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in part (q) of clause 2 of the Bill, the following be added at the end:

'and all references to a province shall be construed as references also to an Acceding State'."

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: I think it should read as "references also to an Acceding State." I am prepared to accept in this form.

Mr. Speaker: Has the honourable member any objection to adding the word "also"

Shri Ajit Prasad Jain: No, Sir.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in part (q) of clause 2 of the Bill, the following be added at the end:

'and all references to a Provinces shall be construed as references also to an Acceding State'."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 2, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 2, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Mr. Nasiruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Proviso to Clause 3 of the Bill be omitted."

[Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad]

Sir, the main part of clause 3 is to this effect: "In this Act, references to time of day are references to Indian Standard time, being five and a half hours ahead of Greenwich Mean Time." Then there is the proviso that the Indian Standard Time may be abandoned in certain cases and other times may be allowed to be observed. I submit, Sir, that by allowing this latitude, nothing would be gained. In fact, no principle will be affected if we all observe the same Standard Time. There will be uniformity. No vested rights or caste prejudices of any kind which the people value so much will be safeguarded by adding this proviso. On the other hand, in the interest of uniformity of time, I submit the proviso should be deleted. No hardship will be caused thereby to anybody.

Mr. Speaker: I think the honourable member knows that this is an amendment which need not be proceeded with and that he will not, as usual, press this.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: If the Honourable Minister does not accept it. . .

Mr. Speaker: It must be obvious. There is a difference of twenty minutes between the Bombay time and the Calcutta time. If a uniform time is adopted, the Calcutta workers will be put to a great hardship.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: The amount of time will be the same; only the starting point will be different. It is only in astronomical or other scientific observations that the exact local time is very important. If in the Posts and Telegraphs and the Railways the same Standard Time which is current from Bombay to Assam without causing the least disturbance, I think there will be no difficulty in accepting this amendment and deleting this proviso. It will cause difficulty only in the case of nautical and astronomical observatories; we are not here dealing with any such thing.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: What about the Calcutta local time?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Calcutta time is an anomaly against which there has been a serious outcry. I beg to submit that in the Railways, Post Offices and in Offices throughout India, the Standard Time is maintained and no hardship is caused. There was a gentleman who was a lawyer, and he wanted to catch a train. He had to add 24 minutes to the local time, which was then known as the Jubulpore time. He was always late and always missed the train. So, this time he began to arrange for his departure from three days before the journey. First of all, he added 24 minutes to the local time and committed to memory the exact time. Unconsciously, forgetting that he had already added the time, he again added 24 minutes and when he went to the platform, it was empty. He thought the train was late and that he had come too early. After some time, he was informed that the train had left. In these circumstances, no advantage will accrue to any one by allowing this difference in the timings; in fact, it would be always dangerous to allow two timings in the same place.

Shri K. Santhanam: In U.K., they have got the Summer Time and Double Summer Time.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: In Post Offices and in Telegraph Offices, we have got the Standard Time. The All-India Radio also observes the Standard time, and everybody has accepted these timings. Conversion of one time into another is an irksome and risky affair. It is for this purpose that I want to make it uniform.

Shri H. V. Kamath (C. P. and Berar: General): The metropolis of the province from which my honourable friend himself hails, which is one of the biggest industrial centres in our country, is notorious for its persistent observance of local time.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Nowadays that has changed.

Mr. Speaker: Do I put it to the House?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That the Proviso to Clause 3 of the Bill be omitted."

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: I do not accept the amendment. Apart from the times that may be prevailing in places like Calcutta and Bombay, it becomes sometimes necessary to alter the Standard Time and apply the local times in certain industries in certain seasons of the year. In other countries also they have the Summer Time and the Double Summer Time and think like that. It is at present existing in our country also. It is not going to cause any difficulty to anybody if local times are applied. Therefore, I do not accept the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Proviso to Clause 3 of the Bill be omitted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

That Clause 3 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 3 was added to the Bill.

Shri Ajit Prasad Jain: Sir, I do not propose to move the amendment; but I would like to take this opportunity to make a few observations about this clause 4, if I may be permitted to do so.

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Shri Ajit Prasad Jain: Sir, Clause 4 provides that the provincial Government shall have the power to declare that a factory which in fact consists of different departments or branches should be treated as so many different factories. In the British Act, there is also a counter part of this provision and the Chief Inspector there has been given the power to treat more than one factories as one factory. I think that is a very wholesome provision that the Chief Inspector of the Provincial Government should have the power to treat either a number of factories as one, if they are one, or treat one factory as a number of factories, if they are different factories. That does not necessarily mean that the Provincial Government will un-necessarily group a number of factories into one; but if any effort is made by the Factory owners to circumvent the provisions of law, then, the Provincial Government may act so that the true intention of the Act may be carried out. I hope that in working out the provisions of this Bill, this point will be kept in view.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 4 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 4 was added to the Bill.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: Sir, there is some misprint here. The amendment which I have tabled gives two alternatives. The first alternative is that clause 5 of the Bill be omitted and if it is not acceptable, then, in the alternative, I have suggested three amendments.

Mr. Speaker: That may not be in order.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: I know my honourable friend the Minister is not going to accept any of these amendments. I only want to make my position clear in regard to this clause.

Mr. Speaker: The procedure which I would suggest is this: let us first dispose of the amendments; if he has to say anything substantially against the clause, then he may address the House about the clause.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: All the four amendments are one connected whole. They are put forward only in the alternative.

Mr. Speaker: Which amendment does he propose to move?

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: I have suggested that either clause 5 of the Bill be omitted, or, if that is not acceptable, then in clause 5 of the Bill, after the words "provincial Government", the following words be inserted, namely:—"with the consent of the Legislative Assembly expressed through a resolution."; that in clause 5 of the Bill, the words "all or" occurring in line three be omitted, and that in the Proviso to clause 5 of the Bill, the words "at a time" be omitted. I had also pointed out yesterday that in a free India we should not give to the Executive power of over-riding the wishes of the Legislature. Here we are passing this Act after prolonged discussions and we should not give power to any executive authority to say that an emergency has arisen and so this Act must remain in abeyance. I think the Government has enough powers to meet emergencies, and Acts passed with great labour by this sovereign Assembly should not be put at naught by mere executive orders. I want this power to be taken away, but Government may have power in times of emergency to call a meeting of the Assembly. At present they also have powers to issue an Ordinance. It should never happen that the workers in a factory are without any Code to regulate their conditions of service. I think that England and America, although they went through the great war, still did not annul their labour legislations. What they did was that they tried to have their Parliament or Congress to meet and to frame laws to meet any emergency. If we put in this provision here, it may be later used vindictively by another Government not properly disposed towards labour. I am not prepared to give this power to any Government to set at naught the will of this sovereign Assembly. I think it is an undemocratic provision and it should not be included in an Act passed by this Assembly. I hope the Honourable Minister will see that this anomaly is removed from the Act. He already has all the powers to meet emergencies and to give a Government the power to transcend all law will be most unwise. I wish this to be a really democratic Bill and I do not want it to be said that any Government has powers to sit at naught legislation passed by this House.

Mr. Speaker: The position then comes to this. As I stated to him his amendment No. 7 for the deletion of the entire clause, will be out of order. He can of course vote against the clause.

Then there are three other amendments—Nos. 8, 9 and 10, which he wishes to move as alternatives to the deletion of the clause.

I shall put them to the House one by one. Amendment No. 9 goes out because the deletion of the words "all or" is not going to make any difference. The clause reads:

"In any case of public emergency the Provincial Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, exempt any factory or class or description of factories from all or any of the provisions of this Act."

Really there is no substantial change. But if he is particular, I will put Nos. 8 and 10.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: I would like to know what the Honourable the Minister has to say. I think he may agree with me.

Mr. Speaker: Very well.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: I have nothing much to say. These powers of exemption are being given to the Provincial Governments in case of public emergency. We are widening the scope of the Factories Bill. My friend is aware in case of an emergency, like a war, a very large number of small factories spring up in connection with war supplies and it may not be desirable and wise on the part of the Government to enforce the provisions of this Act to a very large number of factories that may be existing or may exist, as a war emergency.

Now as that amendment is, if this emergency provision is to be used, it should be with the express approval of the Legislature. Well, it is for the House to decide whether, in case of an emergency, it will be possible to convene a meeting of the Legislature and to have a resolution passed to this effect, seeking the approval of the House to the exemption of the factories from the provisions of this Act. I do not think it is advisable to have this provision that the prior approval of the Legislature will have to be taken. It might be that in case of an emergency it will not be possible to convene a meeting of the Legislature at all and the members themselves may not be in a position to attend the meeting. So I do not think it is necessary to have that provision and I cannot agree to the deletion of this provision. It is very necessary.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: In place of "Provincial Government" will he be prepared to have "Central Government"?

Mr. Speaker: That is a new suggestion. But is the honourable member particular that I should put the amendment to the vote of the House?

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: If he does not agree I will withdraw it.

Mr. Speaker: There is no question of withdrawal. He is not going to move the amendments. So that disposes of all the amendments to this clause except that of Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I am not moving.

Mr. Speaker: In that case I shall put the Clause to the vote of the House. The question is:

"That Clause 5 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 5 was added to the Bill.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: Sir, I move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 6 of the Bill, for the word 'may', the word 'shall' be substituted."

The idea is that the Provincial Government 'shall' have to make rules requiring all these provisions which are provided in this Act. Therefore, I move.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 6 of the Bill, for the word 'may', the word 'shall' be substituted."

Shri Prabhu Dayal Himatsingka (West Bengal: General): I do not see why the Honourable Minister should ask for this change to be made in clause 6. This Factories Bill makes compulsory provision for health, safety and other conveniences and amenities for labour, this section seeks to lay down certain additional conditions which if the Provincial Government shall so desire they may lay down, viz., approval of particular places as sites for a factory or otherwise. There is nothing as regards conveniences for labour or anything else. So far as the big towns are concerned, there are municipal laws which have to be followed by applicants for the erection of factories and they have to apply for sanction to the different municipal corporations. So far as the other municipal towns in the provinces are concerned, there also the municipal laws require it. But if certain factories have to be erected in villages, where there is neither a municipality nor anything else, this question of a selection of a site or finding a site, does not arise. You will find that this Factories Bill has been made very extensive in view of the definition of the word 'factory' and it has been made applicable to a number of occupations carried out by more than 20 persons. If site plans have to be filed and specifications have to be filed and the same made compulsory, the expenses will be very much increased. Any expenditure we add to the erection of a factory, or the manufacture of any particular thing, has to be paid for by the consumers. It is not the factory owners alone who have to pay. They certainly realize every pice they spend from the consumers. Therefore the Honourable Minister should consider the advisability of the change of the word 'may' into 'shall' and I am sure that when he will consider it carefully he will not press his amendment.

Shri K. Santhanam: I support the objection taken by the previous member. There is not only the question of plans but also provisions requiring registration and licenses for factories. If you alter 'may' into 'shall' it will mean every kind of factory, including weaving factories, etc. will have to be licensed. I do not think it is the intention of the framers of the Bill or the Government that such things should be forced on the Provincial Government for every class of factory. This Bill can be extended to the smallest concerns with five or six people and so in view of those facts, I do not think it is desirable that the Provincial Government should be compelled to make rules on every one of these items. They may make rules on one, two or three items according to the necessities of the case.

Shri H. V. Kamath: I think, Sir, the word 'may' wherever it is necessary will carry the force of 'shall', and the amendment is not quite necessary.

Shri Gopikrishna Vijayavargiya (Gwalior State): Sir, I feel that this amendment is necessary, because I know in my place in Central India the Birlas have acquired a very large amount of land and factories will grow on them very gradually. Nobody will know how they will construct them. Specifications and plans are therefore very much necessary, as the Government must know what they are and, so the rules must be framed.

Shri Ajit Prasad Jain: Sir, I am afraid I cannot agree with the contention of Mr. Santhanam. Section 6 begins with: "The Provincial Government may make rules". This 'may' is proposed to be changed into 'shall'. Further the clause says:

"requiring the previous permission in writing of the Provincial Government or the Chief Inspector to be obtained for the site on which the factory is to be situated for the construction or extension of any factory or class or description of factories."

This section by itself empowers the provincial government to frame rules with respect to any class or description of factories. After the change of the word "may" into "shall" it will still be open to the provincial government to lay down that certain classes of factories may not have to take the permission. This change will not make it compulsory for the provincial government to lay down rules in respect of all factories. The rules may be confined to certain classes or descriptions of factories and the reasons given by Mr. Santhanam in support of the objection does not hold good.

Shri K. Santhanam: Will the honourable member please see that part (a) refers only to the site and in regard to parts (b), (c) and (d) there is no such option.

Shri Ajit Prasad Jain: Yes, I have seen them. Paragraph (b) refers to such permission and if (a) goes (b) also goes. Similarly (c) refers to such plans and specifications and if (b) goes (c) also goes. Thus (a), (b) and (c) all go together. They all apply or do not apply. Part (c) is on a different footing. But it also provides that the requirements of registration may be in respect of any class or description of factories. (d) does not come under the omnibus objection, because certain very small factories may be left out of the requirements of registration by the provincial administration. I submit that it should be made compulsory for the provincial government to lay down the rules. May be the provincial government may choose to exempt certain class of factories but the laying down of the rules must be compulsory and as such I support the amendment of the Honourable Minister.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: Sir, I also think that the amendment of the Honourable Minister is necessary and I do not agree with my friend Mr. Santhanam. I think that this is really intended to enable the Government to keep statistics of all the factories which spring up and also to see that they do spring up according to a national plan of development. Government will then know where such factories are being established. The provincial governments shall themselves take into consideration the objections raised by my friends and make such rules which will exempt such factories in regard to which it will be cumbersome to file such particulars. We should trust the provincial government in that respect. They will themselves make rules which will enable industry to grow and the Government at the Centre will have an overall picture of the development and they will know whether the development is according to their plan, so that they may be able to tell us when necessary how much the country has progressed and how far their plans are being achieved. I think this is a very important amendment. The word 'may' should be changed into 'shall'.

श्री गोकुल भाई दौलतराम भट्ट : माननीय सभापति जी, प्रान्तीय सरकार नियम "बनाये"

या उन्हें बनाना चाहिये इसके मुताल्लिक बात चल रही है। मैं मानता हूँ कि हर एक प्रान्त में म्युनिसिपैलिटियाँ, कारपोरेशन वगैरह होते हैं और उनके भी अलग अलग नियम रहते हैं कि कहां कारखाने होने चाहियें, बड़े कारखाने कहां चल सकते हैं, छोटे कहां होने चाहियें। इसके मुताल्लिक भी उनके नियम होते हैं। तो यहां हमने जो दो बातों के मुताल्लिक कहा है कि प्रान्तीय सरकारों को नियम बनाना चाहिये। इस प्रकार का जो संशोधन अभी आ रहा है उसमें इतनी कड़ी पाबन्दी आ जाती है कि प्रान्तीय सरकार इस प्रकार से करेगी तो हर एक छोटे और बड़े कारखाने को कोई न कोई बाधा आयेगी कि वह कुछ नहीं कर सकेंगे। हर जगह एक लोकल अथोरिटी (Local authority) होती है, फिर प्राविन्शियल अथोरिटी (Provincial authority) आ जाती है। इस प्रकार से यह दिक्कत पैदा होगी। इससे मैं चाहता हूँ कि जो शब्द 'may' पहले से इसमें रखा है, वह ही मुनासिब है और इतना ही काफी है और वहीं तक हमें जाना चाहिये, क्योंकि कई जगह हमारे माननीय मन्त्री महाशय कहते हैं कि इससे ऐडमिनिस्ट्रेटिव (administrative) दिक्कत पैदा होती है। और यहां पर ऐसी दिक्कत जरूर पैदा होने वाली है। जब दस, पन्द्रह का सवाल आ गया वहां ऐडमिनिस्ट्रेशन (administration) का सवाल आ गया। मैं मानता हूँ कि व्यवहार में उससे ज्यादा दिक्कत हो जायेगी। 'shall' रखने से हम उनकी मुसीबत बढ़ाने वाले हैं, घटायेगे नहीं। इससे मैं चाहता हूँ कि 'may' ही रखा जाये और 'shall' न रखा जाये।

(English translation of the above speech).

Shri Gokulbhai Daulatram Bhatt (Eastern Rajputana States Group): Sir, the matter under discussion is that the Provincial Government 'may' or 'shall' make the rules. I know that in each and every Province there are municipalities, Corporations etc. which have got separate rules of their own in regard to the location of factories and the places where small or large factories should be installed. They have framed their bye-laws concerning all such matters. Here we have referred to things about the rule-making powers of the Provincial Government. The amendment which is coming before us imposes some irksome restrictions which if observed in this manner by the Provincial Government will affect all the large and small factories and they will not be able to do anything. Everywhere there is a local authority and over that comes the Provincial authority. In this way, this dual control by the two authorities will create difficulties. Therefore, I would stress that the existing word 'may' is quite appropriate and adequate and we should not go beyond that, because at many places the Honourable Minister has stated that it will create administrative difficulties. Here there is bound to be such a difficulty. When the question of ten or fifteen arises, that will involve the administration. I feel that in actual practice it will create a great difficulty. By the substitution of the word 'shall' we are going to add their difficulty rather than removing it. Therefore, I would like that the word 'may' be not substituted by 'shall'.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to submit that the word 'may' will be sufficient to serve the purpose. There is a suspicion in the debate that Provincial Governments where necessary will not make rules, unless we introduce the word 'shall'. I submit that wherever rule-making power is given it is always the custom to use the word 'may' instead of 'shall'. As Mr. Kamath has said in many cases the word 'may' has the import of 'shall', though I do not agree with that view so far as the present Bill is concerned. There is no reason to suppose that where rules are necessary the Provincial Governments will not make them. After all they are democratic institutions and they will march with the times. As examples I submit that the word 'may' has been used in other places also. In clause 64 at page 21, line 1, it is said "The Provincial Government may make rules". In clause 76, line 1, it says "The Provincial Government may make rules". Again in clause 83 it is "The Provincial Government may prescribe". I submit that the word 'shall' is not called for. It is always prudent to leave the Provincial Government to determine what rules are to be made. If we use the word 'shall', as Mr. Santhanam has pointed out, the Provincial Governments will be bound to make rules, providing for all the things as are indicated in the clause. This may lead to hardship or anomalies in different cases. It is far better to leave to the Provincial Governments full discretion as to the matter in which rules are to be made, the manner in which they should be made and the extent to which they should go. By using the word 'shall' we shall probably rob the Provincial Governments of all discretion in the matter. In these circumstances I beg to submit that the change of the word 'may' to 'shall' is not called for and need not be pressed. The word 'may' is used in various other Acts and Bills in the same manner as it appears in the present text.

Shri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar (Madras: General): Sir, on a point not necessarily of order but of procedure, I wish to point out that the report of the Select Committee has been presented by the Honourable Minister. It therefore puts people in a delicate position when he himself moves amendments to what he has placed before the House. I do not know whether as a point of order or as a point of procedure because of the delicate position thereby created, you may not rule that such amendments may, if necessary, be moved by somebody else on behalf of the Government or otherwise. But the Minister himself proposing an amendment puts people in a very delicate position and it makes things very awkward when there is an opposition.

Mr. Speaker: In form it will be better if somebody else moved the amendment; but in substance it is not going to make a difference because the awkwardness will still be there if the Minister supports that amendment. Technically speaking, it can be said that all the clauses are put from the Chair and therefore any person can move an amendment, including the Minister. That seems to be the technical position. But it would look better if somebody else moved it—not that a Minister is debarred from moving it.

What is the Honourable Minister's say about the present amendment?

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: I personally thought that this change was necessary, but in view of the wishes of the House I will not insist on my amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Honourable Minister leave of the House to withdraw his amendment?

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: I move:

"That after part (d) of sub-clause (1) of clause 6 of the Bill, the following new part be added:

'(e) requiring that no licence shall be granted or renewed unless the notice specified in section 7 has been given.'"

This is a formal amendment requiring that the requirement of giving notice by the occupier under section 7 is fulfilled before a licence is granted or renewed.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That after part (d) of sub-clause (1) of clause 6 of the Bill, the following new part be added:

'(e) requiring that no licence shall be granted or renewed unless the notice specified in section 7 has been given.'"

The motion was adopted.

Dr. V. Subramaniam (Madras: General): Sir, I will not move the amendment but will say a few words. Before giving the permission the Inspector will have to fulfil several formalities—he will have to inspect the site, he will have to scrutinize the plans and do so many other things. It will take a long time for him to go round and inspect all the sites. From the information given by the Honourable Minister there will be 150 to 200 factories and he will have to do his normal work and also inspect the sites and study the plans to see whether they are up to the standards and have the requisite safety and other margins. All this will take a long time. And by chance even a clerk can delay the communication for three months. According to the provision contained in the existing clause it is enough if the industrialist takes the opportunity of applying for permission: he just waits for three months and he automatically gets the permission. I consider that the period of three months is not sufficient. I have therefore made it six months in my amendment. If the Honourable Minister wills he may take it, otherwise I am not moving the amendment.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: I will not accept it.

Mr. Speaker: Then there is the amendment by Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: In view of the acceptance of the amendment of Mr. Ajit Prasad Jain I am not moving it.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 6, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 6 was added to the Bill.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: I move:

"That in part (b) of sub-clause (1) of clause 7 of the Bill, after the word 'name', the words 'and address' be inserted."

It is simply to have the name and address.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in part (b) of sub-clause (1) of clause 7 of the Bill, after the word 'name', the words 'and address' be inserted."

Shri Prabhu Dayal Himatsingka: That is not necessary because of the definition of the word "occupier" in sub-clause (n) of clause 2. It says that 'occupier' means the person who has ultimate control over the affairs of the factory. The address and everything is there. It is not therefore necessary. But if the Honourable Minister wants to have it in addition here also, that is a different matter.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: I want to have it here also.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in part (b) of sub-clause (1) of clause 7 of the Bill, after the word 'name', the words 'and address' be inserted."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: I move:

"That for part (d) of sub-clause (1) of clause 7 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

(d) the nature of the manufacturing process—

(i) carried on in the factory during the last twelve months in the case of factories in existence on the date of the commencement of this Act, and

(ii) to be carried on in the factory during the next twelve months in the case of all factories;"

This provision has become necessary in view of the fact that we want some industrial statistics. Under the Industrial Statistics Act employers are required to submit certain statistics. In order to save duplication of work of the employers, in consultation with the Ministry of Industry and Supply we thought that if we make this provision in this Act we will get these statistics and the work of the employers will also be lightened.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That for part (d) of sub-clause (1) of clause 7 of the Bill, the following be substituted

(d) the nature of the manufacturing process—

(i) carried on in the factory during the last twelve months in the case of factories in existence on the date of the commencement of this Act, and

(ii) to be carried on in the factory during the next twelve months in the case of all factories;"

Shri K. Santhanam: There can be no objection to the amendment, but the wording is not quite happy. Suppose an existing factory has been carrying on one process for twelve months and carries on another process for the next twelve months. It has to give statistics as to what it carried on for the previous twelve months and not what it is going to carry on. In the case of existing factories if it is necessary they should give not only the process carried on for the last twelve months but also what they propose to carry on for the next twelve months.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: That is covered by (ii) which says "to be carried on in the factory during the next twelve months in the case of all factories".

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Madras: General): I would like to have one clarification. Does this preclude any factory in the next year in continuing the process of its own work?

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: No, not at all.

Mr. Speaker: It is only a necessary ingredient of the notice to be given—he has to give notice of occupation and it is in connection with that notice that he has to state these facts.

The question is:

"That for part (d) of sub-clause (1) of clause 7 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

(d) the nature of the manufacturing process—

(i) carried on in the factory during the last twelve months in the case of factories in existence on the date of the commencement of this Act, and

(ii) to be carried on in the factory during the next twelve months in the case of all factories;"

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: Sir, I move:

"That after part (g) of sub-clause (1) of clause 7 of the Bill, the following new part (h) be inserted and the existing part (h) be re-lettered as part (i):

(h) the average number of workers per day employed during the last twelve months in the case of a factory in existence on the date of the commencement of this Act;"

Sir, this amendment also is for statistical purposes.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That after part (g) of sub-clause (1) of clause 7 of the Bill, the following new part (h) be inserted and the existing part (h) be re-lettered as part (i):

(h) the average number of workers per day employed during the last twelve months in the case of a factory in existence on the date of the commencement of this Act;"

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 7, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 7, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Shrimati Dakshayani Velayudhan (Madras: General): Sir, I understand that the Honourable Minister is not prepared to accept the amendment, so I do not propose to move my amendment, but I want to speak on the clause.

Mr. Speaker: Then she is also not going to move the other amendment for the deletion of sub-clause (5)?

Shrimati Dakshayani Velayudhan: My objection is to sub-clause (4) of the Bill

Mr. Speaker: I would like her to clarify as to whether she insists on moving for deletion of sub-clause (5), that is amendment No. 13 in list No. 5. She is not going to move amendment No. 12; is she going to move No. 13?

Shrimati Dakshayani Velayudhan: Sir, I am told the Honourable Minister is not willing to accept any amendment, so I do not propose to move any of them.

Mr. Speaker: Then she may speak.

Shrimati Dakshayani Velayudhan: I said my objection is to sub-clauses (4) and (5) of clause 8 of the Bill. In sub-clause (1) of this clause it is said:

"(1) The Provincial Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, appoint such persons as possess the prescribed qualification to be Inspectors for the purposes of this Act and may assign to them such local limits as it may think fit."

According to this Bill, an Inspector is expected to possess certain qualifications. If a District Magistrate is to act as a factory Inspector, I wonder whether he is also expected to possess the prescribed qualifications of a factory

[Shrimati Dakshayani Velayudhan]

Inspector. I understand the Labour Department has a scheme for giving training to factory Inspectors. I would ask the Honourable Minister whether he will ask the District Magistrates also to go for this factory Inspector's training.

Then, Sir, it is a known fact that if Government officers are asked to take up work relating to labourers, there is every possibility of the Government official siding with the employers and not with the employees. That is the most important factor which I wish to bring to the notice of the Honourable Minister

Shri B. Das (Orissa: General): I wish it were so!

Shrimati Dakshayani Velayudhan: and if you want an Inspector to fulfil his duties as a Factory Inspector in the interests of the workers, I think he will not be able to perform these duties if he has other duties as well. A District Magistrate I think will have a large amount of work and I do not think he will be in a position to do justice to the labourers if he is given the work of inspecting factories as well. So, I think the workers will not get any benefit if there is provision made in the Bill that even District Magistrates or any officials of Government can be made Inspectors of Factories. I therefore strongly protest against the provision made in this Bill to appoint District Magistrates as Factory Inspectors.

Then, I object to sub-clause (5) as well. That sub-clause also gives the Provincial Government power to appoint public officers to act as Inspectors. The arguments that I have already placed before the House will hold good in the case of sub-clause (5) as well.

So, my objection is to sub-clauses (4) and (5) of this clause. I hope the Honourable Minister will try to see whether there is any weight in the arguments that I have placed before the House.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: I want to speak on this clause, Sir.

Mr. Speaker: In that case, we better adjourn and meet after Lunch.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock
Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: We were discussing Clause 8. Mr. Sidhva.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: On this clause, Sir, hinges the smooth working of this Act. I consider this a very important clause if the various provisions are to be worked in the spirit in which they have been made. But I am very sorry to find that while our Honourable Minister is so liberal in his views as regards beneficial measures for the workers, he has adopted a retrograde measure as far as the implementation of these clauses are concerned, particularly when he has empowered the District Magistrate to be an Inspector. Now, Sir, you are well aware how over-busy a District Magistrate is. He is the head of the Local Self-Government Department

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: May I point out one thing? I am afraid Mr. Sidhva will be repeating the same things which he said in the general discussion on this point. He took a long time in labouring the same points.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: That is not the answer to what I stated. The Minister did not certainly anticipate what I was going to state.

Mr. Speaker: The point is this. When the honourable member spoke on the consideration motion, the very same point was made by him.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: I never spoke a word about the District Magistrate.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: But he did, Sir.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: I never mentioned District Magistrate. If you read my speech there you will find it.

What I was now stating, Sir, was that the District Magistrate is so over-full with his work. He is the head of the Local Self-Government Department. He is the head of the Revenue Department. He is the head of the Judiciary also. In several provinces, he is also the head of the Labour Department. I know of a province where the Chief Secretary is the Labour Commissioner. Now, how can you expect fairness from an officer who is over-worked and who really is saddled with other Departments who are so very important that he does not give any time to labour work. In these days when we are out to do something good for the labourers, we must have a person who can devote his time for this class of work and who has an aptitude for the good of the workers. That is the point and this clause is therefore really very important. I am therefore pointing out to the Minister that it will be unfair to himself and naturally to the workers if he does not apply his mind liberally on this issue. I want to know from him as to how he expects wholehearted attention from a District Magistrate as far as these beneficial labour measures are concerned.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: You have already referred to training of Inspectors.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: Yes, I did refer to the fact that he has got an Adviser, a Department in which it is stated that the Inspectors are to be trained. Now, if that is a very good Department, if the Inspectors are trained, then, why bring in the District Magistrate? Delete the District Magistrate. I am not at present interested in the Inspectors to be appointed, but I wish to say that this appointing of the District Magistrate as the Inspector for the district is very obnoxious.

Mr. Speaker: Will the honourable member refer to sub-clause (6)?

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: Yes, Sir. It says that where there are more Inspectors than one, the Provincial Government may declare the powers which they shall exercise etc.

Mr. Speaker: I do not claim to know the position of the Honourable Minister, but the scheme appears to be that there will be more than one Inspector and perhaps the District Magistrate is also to be an Inspector for his District so as to effect or bring about co-ordination in the whole of the district. That seems to be the scheme.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: I think, Sir, that if I intervene at this stage there will not be much necessity for a longer debate on this point. What the scheme envisages I shall presently explain, and also what will be the result if the suggestions to omit clauses (4) and (5) are accepted. The scheme is that the Provincial Governments will have a number of Inspectors in their jurisdiction, but it may not be possible that there will be an Inspector in every district or in every Sub-Division. In some of the Sub-Divisions, there may be a few very small factories which may not justify the appointment of a whole-time Inspector for that area alone. In that case, the S. D. O. of that Sub-Division may be empowered with the powers of an Inspector under this Act and it is always better to have the Sub-Divisional Officer given this power rather than not have any person in that locality with the power of the Inspector. So it is in the interests of the workers to have this authority delegated to the District Magistrate or the Sub-Divisional Officers and others whom the Provincial Governments may think necessary. It does not preclude that in those districts where the District Magistrates have been empowered as Inspectors under this

[Shri Jagjivan Ram]

Act there will be no Inspector appointed. There will be Inspectors in addition to the District Magistrate. It also happens that the District Magistrate, in the course of his duties, may go on tour in certain areas in the district and certain facts may be brought to his notice regarding some factories in that area. If he thinks that he will go and see the factory and find out whether the grievances or complaints are correct or not, unless he has got authority under this Act the employers may refuse him permission to enter the premises. Therefore, I think this provision is very necessary and it is in the interests of the workers. I am liberal to the workers, but that does not mean that I should also become impractical. I think that this provision is very necessary in the interests of the workers themselves.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: My point was that really I do feel that it will be impracticable for a District Magistrate, in view of the other work with which he is saddled, to work satisfactorily. That is my point.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member has not seen the point. The point is that the District Magistrate is not going to be the only Inspector. He is one of the many and he is given the power, in case there is not enough work for having a whole-time Inspector. The object is also that whenever a District Magistrate visits the district, he may casually go and see the factories. I think from the point of view of finance and also from the point of view of convenience, it is desirable that, as the head of the magistracy, the District Magistrate should be the co-ordinating factor. That seems to be the whole scheme.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: You know very well, Sir, the influence of a District Magistrate and anybody who will be appointed

Mr. Speaker: Well, the honourable member does not seem to be satisfied. He may proceed with his argument.

Mr. R. K. Sidhva: I am only stating that it would be good on our part if at least (4) is deleted. I am not even worried about (5), which deals with other public officers, but I do feel that the District Magistrate would interfere unnecessarily. He has also no time to go into this matter and if other Inspectors are appointed he will come into their ways and unnecessarily prevail upon them with his influence. I only feel in the interest of the workers and also to ourselves who wanted to do something good that this clause 4 should be deleted.

Shri Prabhu Dayal Himatsingka: I do not think that Mr. Sidhva is taking the right stand. Why should we be afraid of District Magistrates in the changed situation today? If we have ready made Inspectors in every place, we can appoint them under this section. Otherwise Inspectors have got to be appointed or they may not be appointed in time and so on. I do not see how that can prejudice anybody—either the employers or the employees if you appoint a District Magistrate as an Inspector. He should be there; when other Inspectors do their duty, he need not go out all his way and take up those duties. I do not think, Sir, we should object to this officer or be afraid of him.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think any further argument on that point is necessary. The situation seems to be so obvious. However, it is a question of opinion and we are unable to convince Mr. Sidhva on the point.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): On a point of information, I believe that under the existing Act every District Magistrate is ex-officio Inspector. This is so in the present Act and we have not made any modification in that.

Babu Ramnarayan Singh: rose.—
