CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY OF INDIA (LEGISLATIVE) DEBATES

(PART II—PROCEEDINGS OTHER THAN QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS)

Tuesday, 1st February, 1949

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at New Delhi, at a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock, being the First Day of the Fourth Session of the Constituent Assembly of India (Legislative), pursuant to sub-section (2) (a) of Section 19 of the Government of India Act, 1935, as adapted by the India (Provisional Constitution) Orders, 1947. Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) was in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

(See Part I).

11-45 A.M.

DEATHS OF DR. TEJ BAHADUR SAPRU, MR. AKBAR HYDARI, SHRI G. A. NATESAN, MR. M. SHAFI DAUDI, MR. VELLINGIRI GOUNDER AND MR. ABDUL MATIN CHAUDHURI.

The Honourable Shri Jawaharlal Nehru: (Prime Minister and Leader of the House): Sir, by your leave, may I refer to the passing away, since this House last met, of some eminent members of this House and the Assembly that preceded it. Among those who have passed away are Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, Mr. Akbar Hydari, Sri G. A. Natesan of Madras, Mr. M. Shafi Daudi of Bihar, Mr. Vellingiri Gounder of Madras and Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhuri of Assam.

In particular, may I say a few words more about a very distinguished son of India, Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, probably who is known well to almost every individual member of this House. Because he is so well known and because he was so well liked and loved by all of us, it is not necessary for me to recount the long tale of his activities in the public service. It is a long and distinguished record, a record of a great lawyer, of a great scholar and a great friend, a record of a man who throughout his life, so far as I know and I can remember, hardly ever made any enemies; who, in spite of coming into conflict on the political plane with many of us and many others, always retained our love and affection. And so we have this man of high integrity, of high character, representing something that unfortunately is not so evident, representing a certain high culture, suavity, a certain gentleness of manner in public life as well as in private life which endeared him to all.

His death means the passing away not only of a man of great ability, a man who has served the country greatly, a man who was beloved by a very large number of persons and a man who will be missed as a friend by vast numbers in this country; it is something more than the passing away of an individual; it is almost the passing away of a generation that he represented, and some of us who belong to that generation to some extent must necessarily feel sad at his passing away as we feel sad when anything to which we have been greatly attached passes away.

We have been passing through, in this country, great changes and from day to day other changes come. No doubt many of the changes are for the good; but also, perhaps, some of the changes are not so good and anything that takes away from the graciousness of life surely cannot be for the good. There is a tendency today and there has been, perhaps, owing to hard facts and conflicts of existence, for that graciousness to disappear from our public life, and even perhaps, to some extent, from our private lives. I feel sad when I think of this, because, after all, life may be a continuous struggle and a conflict, nevertheless, if there is no graciousness left in it, then, one wonders what the conflict aims at, what kind of good life is our objective. So, when a person like Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru passes away, who represented in ample measure that graciousness in life which somehow bypassed conflicts and everything and won for him the goodwill of all, we feel sadder than even otherwise.

Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru represented peculiarly that mixed culture which has arisen in Northern India during the last many generations. What is going to happen to it in the future, I do not know, because there are attacks on it from various sides. But, whatever one may feel about the merits of a particular question, I do submit to this House that any culture of any type is always a rich possession and a desirable thing to have. It enriches a nation. Undoubtedly the type of culture that Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru particularly represented enriched, and would enrich any country that possessed it. So, in saying a few words about Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, while I feel sad at the passing of a very dear friend, I feel almost sadder still at the passing of a generation which had much good in it, though it may also have had much that was essential to be put an end to.

May I also say a few words about a very distinguished public servant, Mr. Akbar Hydari. As the House knows, he was functioning as the Governor of Assam, after a long career of public service in other fields. He was there before the present Government came into power. He was appointed nearly about two years or more ago. We have come into close contact with him during this period and I express not my own opinion only, but the unanimous opinion of my Government that we could not have had an abler public servant. A man not only of high ability, high integrity and high efficiency, he had to deal with a province which has peculiar problems of its own, which has been even in the past a frontier province, which is much more so today, and where the problems that arise are not only the common problems of an Indian province or many of them, but peculiar problems which require extreme care. Mr. Akbar Hydari faced these problems with tact and ability. He was of great assistance to the Provincial Ministry and his death was really a great blow, apart from the personal aspect, from the public aspect, a great blow not only to the Government of Assam, but to the Government of India.

I am sure this House would like to convey its sorrow and regret to Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru's family, Mr. Akbar Hydari's family, and the families of the other gentlemen whose names I have mentioned.

Mr. Speaker: I fully associate myself with all that has fallen from the Honourable the Leader of the House and I do not think I need add anything more.

I would request the House to adopt this reference by standing in silence for about a minute.

Mr. Speaker: I have received notice of an adjournment motion from Mr. Sidhva. Is he moving it?

Shri R. K. Sidhva: (C.P. and Berar: General): Sir, in view of the statement that the Honourable the Prime Minister is going to make tomorrow, I do not propose to move the adjournment motion.

H.E. THE GOVERNOR GENERALS ASSENT TO BILLS.

Secretary of the Assembly: Sir, I lay on the Table a statement showing the Bills which were passed by the Dominion Legislature (Constituent Assembly of India—Legislative) during the August-September Session, 1948, and which have been assented to by His Excellency the Governor General.

STATEMENT RE LOANS FROM INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai (Minister for Finance): As considerable interest has been evinced in the country and by honourable members regarding the subject of India taking loans from the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank, I should like, Sir, with your permission, to make a full statement dealing with this matter.

The International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development are two connected, but independent organisations which were established by international agreement in the year 1944. India is a Founder Member of both these institutions, and has a permanent seat on the Board of Directors of both. I lay on the table of the House a statement showing the membership of these institutions, the quota of each member in the International Monetary Fund and the Share capital owned by each member in the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. India's quota in the Fund is 400 million dollars and so is her share capital in the Bank.

The functions of these two institutions are entirely different in character. The International Monetary Fund is an organisation which lends currency to its members for short terms to meet temporary disequilibria in their balances of payments. The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development on the other hand lends money on a long-term basis either for particular projects needing to be financed or generally for the reconstruction and development of a particular country's economy. India has been taking advantage of her membership of the International Monetary Fund to meet her dollar deficits. She started borrowing from the funds in March 1948 and has hitherto borrowed 80 million dollars. This money has been used for current purposes, but it is not possible to say that any particular class or category of goods was purchased from this money. This, however, is short-term finance and is not suitable for the provision of funds for capital and developmental projects which take a longer period to attain productivity. To provide for an exchange for such projects is the function of the International Bank. It is the practice of this bank to send out a technical mission to countries who feel that they will require a loan with the object of both assessing their economy and financial situation and of helping the country concerned to make out its case for a loan in the form decided by the bank.

The Government of India feel that many of their developmental projects have now reached a stage at which work might be started on them or accelerated, if arrangements could be made for making available the necessary foreign exchange. They therefore invited the bank to send out a mission with a view to acquainting themselves at firsthand with the Indian situation and its requirements, and for discussing with Government the projects which might qualify for a loan from the Bank. Accordingly, a mission headed by Mr. A. S. G. Hoare, Assistant Loan Director of the Bank arrived in New Delhi the 24th January 1949 and has been engaged in conversations with officials of the Government of India ever since. This Mission will shortly proceed on tour to see for themselves the works which are in progress in various parts of the country, as also to acquaint themselves with the existing industrial potential of the country. They expect to stay in India for about six weeks, and it is after their departure that India will put in a formal loan application to the Bank.

The Government of India are examining with the help of the Bank Mission all their developmental projects with a view to determining which of them may be suitable for being financed by a loan from the Bank. These plans include projects for bringing under cultivation the waste and weed infested lands, for the sinking of tubewells, for the development of fisheries and for the purchase of locomotives, ships and for hydro-electric development. As these matters are still under discussion, I cannot obviously at this stage give any indication to honourable members either for the amount for which we might ultimately apply for a loan or the terms or conditions on which the loan might ultimately be granted.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Madras: General): May I know whether it will be possible for the Honourable Minister to give us an indication of the projects which are being placed before these people and whether this Ramapadasagar project is one of them?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: They are making a general survey of all the projects in which we are interested and of which we have been able to work up all the details. But whether this particular project will be included specifically I cannot answer at present.

Shri R. K. Sidhva (C. P. and Berar: General): What is being done as regards the interest that is being charged by this Bank for loans?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: That will be a matter for negotiation at a later stage.

Shri B. Das (Orissa: General): Why did not the Government of India ask the International Bank to visit India earlier so that we could have utilised their funds earliest?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: We did not discuss this matter at an earlier stage because we could not raise this question with them until our projects had been developed to a sufficient extent.

Shri K. Hanumanthaiya (Mysore State): Is the benefit of the loan to be extended to Indian States?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Many of these projects which we are considering are projects which cover the States also.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): If any tour programme has been arranged, then by whom has it been arranged? Is this Ramapadasagar project also, included in it?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: This tour programme has been arranged by the Mission in consultation with the Government of India.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Is this project included in it? Have not Rs. 55 lakhs already been spent on investigation and is it not time for execution?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: As a matter of fact the tour has not been planned with a view to visiting the site of every project under consideration. The object of the tour is that the members of the Mission may be enabled to acquaint themselves with the general Indian situation and re-requirements.

Shri B. Das: Do I understand that the Government of India had no definite project last year and that is the reason why they could not approach the Bank earlier for the development of their projects and plans?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Obviously the honourable member does not realise the amount of labour involved in working out projects in sufficient detail. It is one thing to have projects and quite another thing to be able to present them in a detailed and concrete form.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know if care is taken to utilise whatever has been arranged that we should get from the sterling balances before monies are drawn upon either from the Bank or the Monetary Fund?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I take it that the Honourable Member's point is that plant and machinery of a kind which would be available only in hard currency areas should be met from funds raised from the World Bank! That is so.....

Shri Gopikrishna Vijayavargiya (Madhya Bharat): May I know if any large-scale industries are to be started out of these funds which may be run by the Government?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I do not know what the honourable member means by large-scale industries.

Shri S. V. Krishnamoorthy Rao (Mysore State): May I know if this House will have an opportunity to express its opinion before any final decision is taken?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: As a matter of fact, this is a preliminary examination. The final details will not be settled for a considerable time yet.

Shri B. Das: Has the Honourable Minister's attention been drawn to the statement by one of the Bank's officials of the International Bank that their first duty was to develop Europe, and now that Europe has been developed, they have come to India to examine Indian conditions?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I have seen no such statement.

Shri B. Das: I have seen it in the press.

Mr. Homi Mody (Bombay: General): Is it the function of the International Bank to decide on priorities or will it be their business merely to satisfy themselves that the projects for which loans are being asked are sound and are well under way?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I expect Mr. Homi Mody as the head of one of the biggest banks in this country to know that all these aspects of a loan problem would be taken into consideration by the Bank.

Shri H. V. Kamath (C. P. and Berar: General): Before the scheme is finally worked out, will the UNECAFE be consulted, as it is intimately connected with the development of the Asian Region?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: It is not necessary at all.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Has any tentative figure been arrived at of the amount, if approved by the International Bank, that may be drawn by way of a loan?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: That stage has not arrived yet.

Shrimati G. Durgabai (Madras: General): May I know whether this House will be consulted before an agreement is concluded?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I hardly think that is necessary.

PAPERS LAID ON THE TABLE

REVISED INSTRUMENTS OF ACCESSION EXECUTED BY RAJ PRAMUKH OF STATE UNIONS.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel (Minister for Home Affairs and the States): Sir, I lay on the Table a copy of each of the Revised Instruments of Accession executed by the Raj Pramukhs of the six State Unions and of the Governor General's acceptance thereof in accordance with sub-section (6) of Section 6 of the Government of India Act, 1935.

WHEREAS by Instruments of Accession executed in August, 1947, the Rulers of the States specified in the Schedule hereto have acceded to the Dominion of India;

AND WHEREAS by Covenant entered into January and February 1948, the Rulers of the said States have with the consent of the Government of India agreed to the integration of their respective territories into a single State known as the United State of Kathiawar in this Instrument referred to as "the United State";

AND WHEREAS it is expedient that a fresh Instrument of Accession should be executed on behalf of the United State replacing the Instruments of Accession executed in August, 1947, by the Rulers of the said States and accepting as matters with respect to which the Dominion Legislature may make laws for the United State all matters mentioned in List I and List III of the Seventh Schedule to the Government of India Act, 1935, except matters relating to taxation;

NOW, THEREFORE, I Digvijaya Sinjhi Ranjiti Sinjhi Jedeja of Nawanagar, Raj Pramukh of the United State of Kathiawar do hereby execute this Instrument of Accession for and on behalf of the United State; and

1. I hereby declare that I accede to the Dominion of India with the intent that the Governor-General of India, the Dominion Legislature, the Federal Court and any other Dominion authority established for the purposes of the Dominion shall, by virtue of this Instrument of Accession but subject always to the terms thereof, and for the purposes only of the Dominion, exercise in relation to the United State such functions as may be vested in them by or under the Government of India Act, 1935, as for the time being in force in the Dominion of India (which Act as so in force is hereinafter referred to as "the Act").

2. I hereby assume the obligation of ensuring that due effect is given to the provisions of the Act within the United State so far as they are applicable therein by virtue of this Instrument of Accession.

3. I accept all matters enumerated in List I and List III of the Seventh Schedule to the Act as matters in respect of which the Dominion Legislature may make laws for the United State:

Provided that nothing contained in the said Lists or in any other provision of the Act shall be deemed to empower the Dominion Legislature to impose any tax or duty in the territories of the United State or to prohibit the imposition of any duty or tax by the Legislature of the United State in the said territories:

Provided further that where a law of the United State with respect to one of the matters enumerated in the said List III contains any provision repugnant to the provisions of an earlier Dominion Law or an existing law with respect to that matter, then, if the law of the United State having been reserved for the consideration of the Governor General of India has received the assent of the Governor General, the law of the United State shall prevail in the United State but nevertheless the Dominion Legislature may at any time enact further legislation with respect to the same matter:

Provided further that no Bill or amendment for making any provision repugnant to any law of the United State, which, having been so reserved, has received the assent of the Governor General, shall be introduced or moved in the Dominion Legislature without the previous sanction of the Governor General.

4. I hereby declare that I accede to the Dominion of India on the assurance that if an agreement is made between the Governor-General and the Raj Pramukh of the United State whereby any functions in relation to the administration in the United State of any law of the Dominion Legislature shall be exercised by the Raj Pramukh then any such agreement shall be deemed to form part of this Instrument and shall be construed and have effect accordingly.

5. I further declare that the provisions contained in Part VI of the Act with respect to interference with water supplies shall apply in relation to the United State.

6. The terms of this Instrument of Accession shall not be varied by any amendment of the Act or of the Indian Independence Act, 1947, unless such amendment is accepted by the Raj Pramukh of the United State by an Instrument supplementary to this Instrument.

7. Nothing in this Instrument shall empower the Dominion Legislature to make any law for the United State authorising the compulsory acquisition of land for any purpose, but should the Dominion for the purposes of a Dominion Law which applies in the United State deem it necessary to acquire any land the Raj Pramukh of the United State shall at the request and at the expense of the Dominion Government acquire the land or if the land belongs to the United State transfer it to them on such terms as may be agreed, or, in default of agreement, determined by an arbitrator to be appointed by the Chief Justice of India.

8. Nothing in this Instrument shall be deemed to commit the United State in any way to acceptance of any future constitution of India or to fetter the discretion of the Government of the United State to enter into arrangements with the Government of India under any such future constitution.

9. Save as provided by or under this Instrument nothing contained in this Instrument shall affect the exercise of any powers, authority and rights enjoyed by the Raj Pramukh or the validity of any law for the time being in force in the United State or any part thereof.

10. The Instruments of Accession executed in August, 1947, by the Rulers of the States specified in the Schedule hereto are hereby cancelled.

Given under my hand this twenty-second day of May, 1948.

DIGVIJAYSINJHI OF NAWANAGAR,
Raj Pramukh of Saurashtra.

I do hereby accept this Instrument of Accession.

Dated this thirteenth day of September, Nineteen hundred and forty-eight.

C. RAJAGOPALACHARI,
Governor-General of India.

WHEREAS by Instruments of Accession executed in August, 1947, the Rulers of the States specified in the Schedule hereto have acceded to the Dominion of India;

AND WHEREAS by Covenant entered into in April 1948, the Rulers of the said States have with the consent of the Government of India agreed to the integration of the respective territories into a single State known as the United State of Rajasthan in this Instrument referred to as "the United State";

AND WHEREAS by Article VIII of the said Covenant it is provided that the Raj Pramukh of the United State shall, as soon as practicable, execute on behalf of the United

State a fresh Instrument of Accession in accordance with the provisions of section 6 of the Government of India Act, 1935, whereby he may accept as matters with respect to which the Dominion Legislature may make laws for the United State any matters in addition to those specified in the Instrument of Accession of any of the Covenanted States;

NOW, THEREFORE, I Maharajadhirajah Maharana Shri Sir Bhupal Singh of Udaipur, Raj Pramukh of the United State of Rajasthan, do hereby execute this Instrument of Accession for and on behalf of the United State and

1. I hereby declare that I accede to the Dominion of India with the intent that the Governor-General of India, the Dominion Legislature, the Federal Court and any other Dominion authority established for the purposes of the Dominion shall, by virtue of this Instrument of Accession but subject always to the terms thereof, and for the purposes only of the Dominion, exercise in relation to the United State such functions as may be vested in them by or under the Government of India Act, 1935, as for the time being in force in the Dominion of India (which Act as so in force is hereinafter referred to as "the Act").

2. I hereby assume the obligation of ensuring that due effect is given to the provisions of the Act within the United State so far as they are applicable therein by virtue of this Instrument of Accession.

3. I accept all matters enumerated in List I and List III of the Seventh Schedule to the Act as matters in respect of which the Dominion Legislature may make laws for the United State:

Provided that nothing contained in the said Lists or in any other provisions of the Act shall be deemed to empower the Dominion Legislature to impose any tax or duty in the territories of the United State or to prohibit the imposition of any duty or tax by the Legislature of the United State in the said territories:

Provided further that where a law of the United State with respect to one of the matters enumerated in the said List III contains any provision repugnant to the provisions of an earlier Dominion Law or an existing law with respect to that matter then, if the law of the United State having been reserved for the consideration of the Governor-General of India has received the assent of the Governor-General, the law of the United State shall prevail in the United State but nevertheless the Dominion Legislature may at any time enact further legislation with respect to the same matter:

Provided further that no Bill or amendment for making any provision repugnant to any law of the United State, which, having been so reserved, has received the assent of the Governor-General, shall be introduced or moved in the Dominion Legislature without the previous sanction of the Governor-General.

4. I hereby declare that I accede to the Dominion of India on the assurance that if an agreement is made between the Governor-General and the Raj Pramukh of the United State whereby any functions in relation to the administration in the United State of any law of the Dominion Legislature shall be exercised by the Raj Pramukh, then any such agreement shall be deemed to form part of this Instrument and shall be construed and have effect accordingly.

5. I further declare that the provisions contained in Part VI of the Act with respect to interference with water supplies shall apply in relation to the United State.

6. The terms of this Instrument of Accession shall not be varied by any amendment of the Act or of the Indian Independence Act, 1947, unless such amendment is accepted by the Raj Pramukh of the United State by an Instrument supplementary to this Instrument.

7. Nothing in this Instrument shall empower the Dominion Legislature to make any law for the United State authorising the compulsory acquisition of land for any purpose, but should the Dominion for the purposes of a Dominion Law which applies in the United State deem it necessary to acquire any land the Raj Pramukh of the United State shall at the request and at the expense of the Dominion Government acquire the land or if the land belongs to the United State transfer it to them on such terms as may be agreed, or, in default of agreement, determined by an arbitrator to be appointed by the Chief Justice of India.

8. Nothing in this Instrument shall be deemed to commit the United State in any way to acceptance of any future constitution of India or to fetter the discretion of the Government of the United State to enter into arrangements with the Government of India under any such future constitution.

9. Save as provided by or under this Instrument nothing contained in this Instrument shall affect the exercise of any powers, authority and rights enjoyed by the Raj Pramukh or the validity of any law for the time being in force in the United State or any part thereof.

10. The Instruments of Accession executed in August, 1947 by the Rulers of the states specified in the Schedule hereto are hereby cancelled.

Given under my hand this thirty-first day of May, 1948.

M. R. BHUPAL SINGH,
Raj Pramukh of Rajasthan.

I do hereby accept this Instrument of Accession.

Dated this thirteenth day of September, Nineteen hundred and forty-eight.

ADDITIONAL REGULATIONS OF INDUSTRIAL FINANCE CORPORATION OF INDIA

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai (Minister for Finance): Sir, I lay on the table a copy of the additional Regulations of the Industrial Finance Corporation of India made under sub-section (3) of Section 43 of the Industrial Finance Corporation Act, 1948.

INDUSTRIAL FINANCE CORPORATION OF INDIA

NOTIFICATION

New Delhi, the 25th October 1948.

No. 3/48.—In pursuance of the Industrial Finance Corporation Act, 1948 (XV of 1948), the Board of the Corporation after consultation with the Reserve Bank of India and with the previous sanction of the Central Government has framed the following Regulations to be added to the General Regulations of the Corporation:

CHAPTER VIII

Manner in which the accommodation granted by the Corporation will be secured.

53. No accommodation shall be given by the Corporation under clauses (a) and (c) of sub-section (1) of section 23, unless sufficient security to the satisfaction of the Executive Committee is taken as specified in sub-section (2) thereof.

54. The security to be taken for accommodation granted by the Corporation under Regulation 53 shall, in each case, require the approval of the Executive Committee and the instruments to be taken as evidence of such security shall be in such form as may be approved by the Committee.

55. For purposes of determining the amount of the accommodation to be granted, such margins shall be retained in the valuation of the assets pledged, mortgaged, hypothecated or assigned to the Corporation as may be considered reasonable by the Executive Committee.

56. For the purposes of Regulation 55, the Committee shall require adequate margin having regard to the earning capacity and prospects of the industrial concern, the competence of its management and other similar considerations.

57. In the instruments evidencing the security taken by the Corporation, there may be a stipulation that in the event of a fall occurring in the value of the assets pledged, mortgaged, hypothecated, or assigned to the Corporation, the industrial concern obtaining accommodation from it may be required to furnish such additional security as may be considered reasonable by the Executive Committee.

RAM NATH,
Managing Director.

FURTHER AMENDMENTS TO INSURANCE RULES, 1939

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy (Minister for Commerce): Sir, I lay on the Table a copy each of certain further amendments to the Insurance Rules 1939, published in Notifications No. 597-I (1)/46, dated the 19th April, 1947, and No. 597-I (1)/48, dated the 31st July, 1948, under sub-section (3) of Section 114 of the Insurance Act, 1938.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

NOTIFICATION

New Delhi, the 19th April 1947.

INSURANCE

No. 597-I(1)/46.— In exercise of the powers conferred by sub-sections (1) and (2) of section 114 of the Insurance Act, 1938 (IV of 1938), the Central Government is pleased to direct that the following further amendments shall be made in the Insurance Rules, 1939, the same having been previously published as required by sub-section (1) of the said section, namely :—

I. In the said Rules—

I. In rule 24—

(i) for the proviso to sub-rule (1), the following provisos shall be substituted, namely :—

“Provided that where the business done or to be done is marine insurance only and relates exclusively to country craft or cargo of country craft or both the fee for registration shall be two hundred and fifty rupees :

Provided further that where an insurer who is already registered for carrying on marine insurance business relating exclusively to country craft or cargo of country craft or both and no other class of insurance business, subsequently, applies for registration for carrying on the entire class of marine insurance or any other class of insurance business specified above, the fee for the such registration shall be two hundred and fifty rupees plus the fee for registration of the class if any, of insurance business other than marine insurance business for which registration is sought.”

(ii) after sub-rule (1) the following sub-rule shall be inserted, namely :—

(iii) after sub-rule (3) the following sub-rule shall be inserted, namely—

(iv) in sub-rule (5) after the word “page” the words “or part of a page” shall be inserted.

PAPERS LAID ON THE TABLE

2. For clause (b) of rule 25, the following clause shall be substituted namely :—

“(b) the proportion of renewal premium income spent in payment of commission and other expenses in each year during the period since the last investigation after allowing, as the cost of the new business of the year, seven and a half per cent, of single premiums including consideration for annuities granted and seven and half per cent. for each year of the maximum premiums—paying period, but not exceeding ninety per cent. in all, of first year's premium falling due in the year after deduction of those unpaid under policies allowed to lapse in the year :

Provided that in respect of any year of accounting period ending on a date earlier than the 31st day of December, 1946, the allowance out of first year's premiums as the cost of the new business shall be ninety per cent. irrespective of the premium-paying period.

Explanation 1.—Where the maximum premiums-paying period includes a fraction of a year, such fraction shall be ignored.

Explanation 2.—In the case of a whole life policy with premium payable throughout the duration of the policy the maximum premiums-paying period shall be assumed to be twelve years.”

3. After rule 25 the following rule shall be inserted, namely :—

“25A. The conditions with which a Mutual Insurance Company shall comply for the purposes of sub-section (2) of section 4 are that such company shall confine its activities to members of any one profession only or to employees under one employer only and that if any question arises whether or not a particular group of persons belongs to any one profession or is employed under any one employer, the Superintendent of Insurance shall decide the question and his decision shall be final”.

II. In the Forms set forth in the Schedule annexed to the said Rules—

(a) In Form VI-D.—

(i) in column 6 for the words “the dates on which the respective notices were received” the words “the date of registration of each nomination and of receipt notice of cancellation or charge thereof, if any” shall substituted;

(ii) after column 9 the following columns shall be inserted, namely :—

 The percentages of the first year and renewal premiums prescribed in the society's rules for expenses.	 Amount that can be expended on the basis of columns 9 and 10.

(iii) columns 10 and 11 shall be renumbered as columns 12 and 13 respectively.

(iv) to the Notes the following Note shall be added, namely :—

“If a uniform percentage (irrespective of the tables and premium terms of policies) is fixed for expenses of management or if a separate register of premium receipts for each group of premiums having the same percentage allowance for expenses is maintained this column need not be filled in”.

(b) In Form VI-E.—

(i) column 5 shall be renumbered as column 7 and after column 4 the following columns shall be inserted, namely :—

Amount of premium	Amount out of the premium stated in column 5 that can be spent as expenses of management as per rules of the society (to the nearest anna).

(ii) Note 3 shall be renumbered as Note 5 and in Note 5 as so renumbered, for the brackets and figure “(5)” the brackets and figure “(7)” shall be substituted.

(iii) after Note 2 the following Notes shall be inserted, namely :—

“3. Particulars relating to a new policy shall be entered in the month in which the first premium is received. Particulars relating to a revived policy shall be entered in the month in which the policy is revived.

4. If a uniform percentage is fixed for expenses of management, irrespective of the tables and premium terms of policies or if a separate register of premium receipts for each group of premiums having the same percentage allowance for expenses is maintained, column 6 need not be filled in."

(c) In Form VII-A.—

(i) for the columns headed "Policies insuring money to be paid on death" and "Policies insuring money to be paid only on survival", and the sub-headings thereto, the following columns shall be substituted, namely:—

Policies insuring money to be paid on death only			Policies insuring money to be paid on survival or earlier death
No.	Sum Assured	Reversionary bonus	No.	Sum Assured	Reversionary bonus additions

(ii) in the first column for item (6), the following item shall be substituted, namely:—

"(6) *By death—

(a) amount payable,

(b) amount not payable".

(iii) the following note shall be added, namely—

"NOTE.—*For sum assured and bonuses, the amount actually payable as per Rules of the society should be shown against item (6) (a), while the difference between the total sum assured and the actual amount payable on policies subject to lien becoming claims by death should be shown against (6) (b). The columns for number of policies should be left blank against item (6) (b)."

Krishnamachari, Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava, Mr. Frank Anthony, Shri Arun Chandra Guha, Shri Mihir Lal Chattopadhyay, Shri Jaspat Roy Kapoor, Kazi Syed Karimuddin, Shri M. Tirumala Rao and the Mover, with instructions to report on or before the 1st March, 1949, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

[Shri K. C. Neogy]

Sir, the House may recollect that the Bill was introduced in this House on the 4th September, 1948. Immediately thereafter we had the Bill circulated by executive action as widely as possible so as to afford an opportunity to all the various interests concerned to express their opinions on the provisions of the Bill. We have as a result obtained opinions from the provincial governments, from Chambers of Commerce, professional associations of accountants, societies and individuals generally interested in this question and I am happy to tell the House that the opinion so far elicited is overwhelmingly in favour of the principles underlying this measure.

Sir, if a brief historical review were to be attempted about the profession of accountancy with particular reference to its regulation in India one has to go back to 1918 as the year when, for the first time, an important step was taken in this matter and the credit for that step goes to the Government of Bombay, which had instituted a diploma in accountancy going under the popular name of G. D. A. From 1918 up to the year 1930 we saw an accession of strength in the ranks of the accountants mostly under the provisions of the Bombay Government measure as also otherwise. In 1930 it was felt that the time had come for the purpose of setting up a machinery to assist the Government in controlling and regulating this profession. So in that year an amendment of Section 144 of the Indian Companies Act was undertaken for the purpose of providing for the grant of certificates to auditors entitling them to practice throughout India. Provision was also made in the Rules issued under this amended provision of the law for the establishment of an Indian Accountancy Board to advise Government in all matters relating to this profession.

Then we come to the year 1936 when the Indian Companies Act came up for a comprehensive amendment in the Central Legislature. On that occasion, as far as I have been able to find, for the first time a demand was put forward that the profession of accountancy should have an autonomous body of its own to regulate and control the profession. The atmosphere then prevailing does not appear to have been quite suitable for a serious consideration of this issue, but I have a feeling that even Sir Nripendranath Sircar, who turned down the proposals that were made with a view to liberalising the provisions relating to the practising and the enrolment of accountants in India, in the course of a speech on the 6th October held out a hope that some of the questions that we are dealing with in this Bill would come up for consideration at the hands of Government in the near future. That was in October 1936. But nothing appears to have been done in pursuance of that assurance by the then Government. Due to the pre-occupations of the war undoubtedly it was not possible perhaps to give adequate attention to the various problems that arose in this connection. In the year 1946 the Accountancy Board made the recommendation that the question should now be reopened, and they supported the creation of an autonomous body of the charter that we envisage in this Bill. Thereupon a tentative scheme was prepared by Government and circulated for eliciting public opinion to the Provincial Governments, to Chambers of Commerce, Associations of Accountants and others. While my honourable friend Mr. Gadgil held charge of the Commerce portfolio he committed the examination of the whole question to what was described as an expert committee which included my honourable friend Shri Santhanam whose interest in this matter is well known. It is largely due to the expeditious way and the thoroughness with which this Committee did its work that it has been possible for Government to bring forward this measure which is largely based upon the recommendations of that Committee.

Sir, I should now briefly refer to the main features of this Bill. We propose to establish an Institute of Chartered Accountants of India and create a Council thereof to manage its affairs. The Council will be composed of persons elected by the members of the Institute on a regional basis and some nominees of the Central Government and of the organised commercial interests in the country. Having regard to their responsibility in the healthy development of the profession which, in a sense, will act as the watch-dogs of ordinary investors in joint stock companies, Government consider it necessary to have some representation in the Council. The Council will be autonomous and free from external control except in a few specified matters. All the functions in regard to the profession so far performed by the Government will be carried out in future by this Council which will also have the power to recognize foreign qualifications on a basis of reciprocity.

As I have already stated, the Bill has been widely circulated and has been welcomed by the different interests concerned, more or less. There might be a few questions in which some of my honourable friends would be interested, but I submit that all such questions could very conveniently be discussed and examined in the Select Committee. The principle to which I invite the House to agree is that an Institute of Accountants be established as an autonomous body and that, as regards the rest, all questions would be considered to be matters of detail which would be within the purview of the Select Committee to consider. Sir, I move.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill to make provision for the regulation of the profession of accountants be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Mr. Homi Mody, the Honourable Shri K. Santhanam, Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, Shri Mahavir Tyagi, Shri T. T. Krishnamachari, Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava, Mr. Frank Anthony, Shri Arun Chandra Guha, Shri Mihir Lal Chattopadhyay, Shri Jaspat Roy Kapoor, Kazi Syed Karimuddin Shri M. Tirumala Rao, and the Mover, with instructions to report on or before the 1st March, 1949, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

The motion was adopted.

PAYMENT OF TAXES (TRANSFER OF PROPERTY) BILL

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai (Minister for Finance): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill to make provision for the payment of taxes before transfers of property are recognised in certain cases, be taken into consideration."

Sir, this Bill embodies the provisions which have been in force in the form of an Ordinance since the 7th February 1948. I may say incidentally that this Ordinance was enacted by the Government of India partly in view of the fact that a similar Ordinance had previously been enacted by the Government of Pakistan. The object of the Bill before the House is to safeguard loss of revenue arising in the case of assessee who intend to leave the country and who dispose of their properties before paying taxes due from them. The provisions are very simple ones. There are really two provisions in the Bill. One is that in regard to immovable property other than agricultural land, no transfer can be registered unless a tax clearance certificate is produced, namely, a certificate to the effect that either taxes due have been paid or that satisfactory provision has been made for the payment of such dues.

The other provision is that in regard to immovable property other than agricultural land and in regard to movable property other than stocks, shares and securities, if any transfer has taken place since the 14th of August 1947, the Income-tax Officer can call for a tax clearance certificate and if such a certificate is not produced he can require the Collector of the area concerned to recover the tax, and for the purpose of recovering this tax the property would be regarded as still belonging to the transferor.

[Dr. John Matthai]

The reasons why this provision for exemption is made in respect of agricultural land and in respect of shares, stocks and securities are briefly these. As far as agricultural land is concerned, the income on that does not come within the purview of the Central Government. With regard to stocks, shares and securities, a restriction of this kind is likely to place impediments in the way of free negotiability and it was felt that it would probably do more harm than good to place any restriction upon this form of property.

A certain amount of concern has been expressed, Sir, that the provisions of this Bill might create general hardship. I should like to tell the House that ever since the Ordinance was enacted we have issued strict instructions to the officers of the Income-Tax Department that the tax clearance certificate required in these cases should be promptly issued except in cases where there are special reasons to believe that the party in question intends to leave the country. I have some assurance that these instructions have been carefully and strictly carried out, (Prof. N. G. Ranga: "Some assurance, is it?") and that is based on the fact that although this Ordinance has been in force now for a considerable period of months we have received hardly any complaint that these provisions have been implemented as to cause hardship.

There is one direction in which possibly hardship might be caused and that is that there is no provision in the Bill as it stands for an appeal from the Assistant Income-Tax Commissioner to any higher authority. That is to say, where a tax clearance certificate has been refused, there is no scope for an appeal as the law stands at present as the House knows, on the Order Paper I have given notice of an amendment providing for appeals from the Assistant Income-tax Commissioner to the Income-tax Commissioner. The enactment of this amendment would remove what I consider to be the chief disability in regard to the Bill as it stands at present.

I see from the list of amendments on the Order Paper that my honourable friend Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava has a motion for referring this matter to a Select Committee. If he does so and if the House feels that the matter should be examined in detail by a Select Committee, I want to say that as far as Government are concerned, we would have no objection. With these words, I move.

Mr. Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the Bill to make provision for the payment of taxes before transfers of property are recognised in certain cases, be taken into consideration."

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava (East Punjab: General): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable Dr. John Matthai, Shri T. T. Krishnamachari, Dr. Bakshi Tek Chand, Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi, Shri K. Hanumanthaiya, Shri Jainarayan Vyas, Pandit Lakshmi Kanta Maitra; Shrimati Renuka Ray, Sardar Hukam Singh, Mr. Tajamul Husain, Prof. N. G. Ranga, Shri B. Das, Shri B. L. Sondhi, Shri Deshbandhu Gupta, Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, Shri Mahavir Tyagi and the Mover, with instructions to report by the 5th February, 1949, and that the number of persons whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee be five."

Sir, the ways of Government are curious. The Pakistan Government while it was fully conscious that the Sikhs and Hindus who were going away from Pakistan had no property of their own except the few clothes on their person, yet were anxious to recover their dues of income-tax from them, and in December, 1947, they passed an Ordinance the provisions of which were perhaps similar to those which were copied by us in February 1948. Now, I understand that the Pakistan Government has gone a step further and they have passed an Ordinance of which some of the provisions are given in a letter which appears in the Hindustan Times of today. They read as follows:

"Any person not domiciled in Pakistan shall not be entitled to leave any province of Pakistan by air, sea or land until he produces before the permitting authorities a certificate indicating that (a) he has cleared his income-tax liability (b) or he has secured exemption from the payment of such liability and (c) or that he has made sufficient arrangements for such payment."

It appears that those persons who according to Pakistan law are liable to the payment of income-tax will not be allowed even to come to India under this Ordinance. Our Government has so far done nothing of the sort, but all the same, the provisions which are the subject matter of this Bill are of such a nature that they require scrutiny at the hands of the legislature.

In the first place, this Ordinance of February 1948 which is to be repealed and replaced by this Bill contained provisions which were too wide and this Bill also, though designed to safeguard the loss of revenue in the case of persons who dispose of their properties with the intention of leaving India and settling somewhere else, yet is very extensive and all inclusive in its scope. It does not indicate that this Bill only applies to persons who answer this particular description. On the contrary, complaints have been made and instances are not few in which many persons have been debarred from transferring their properties who did not intend to leave India and settle somewhere else. As a matter of fact, the provisions of the nature contained in this Bill are of too drastic nature and they unduly fetter the right and the liberty to transfer properties. When we look at the provisions of Section 3 it appears that the net has been spread rather much too wide.

A perusal of this provision would show that even the transactions of moveable property and even which took place after 14th August 1947 are to be scrutinised. Then, such immovable property, the ownership of which according to the general law passes by delivery may even come within the purview of section 3, though it may have changed hands several times during the interval. All those parties shall be called upon by the Income-tax Assistant Commissioner and given notice. After that, in para 2, the provisions are that if no requisite certificate is produced, then the Collector can be notified and recovery ordered and the property can be treated as if it belonged to any of the parties at the sweet will of the Collector. These provisions are too drastic and should receive scrutiny at the hands of the legislature. They cannot be allowed to be passed in this manner.

Again, so far as appeal is concerned, the honourable mover himself has accepted that there is a lacuna in the Bill. Even in regard to the provision for appeal there is dispute about the scope of the appeal. I for one maintain that unless and until the Bill contains provisions for appeal in respect of the acts of the Collector and the Assistant Commissioner as given in 3(2), it will not be helpful. Therefore the scope of the Bill has to be decided as well as the question whether the Act should be allowed to have retrospective effect. For these reasons it is absolutely necessary that such a complicated measure should be referred to a select committee. Moreover the position of the Government of India has to be reviewed in the light of the recent Ordinance passed by the Pakistan Government and in the light of the recent agreement entered into between the Pakistan and the Indian Government. For all these reasons I beg the House to agree to the reference of this Bill to a select committee.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That the Bill be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable Dr. John Matthai, Shri T. T. Krishnamachari, Dr. Bakshi Tek Chand, Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi, Shri K. Hanumanthaiya, Shri Jainarayan Vyas, Pandit Lakshmi Kanta Maitra, Shrimati Renuka Ray, Sardar Hukam Singh, Mr. Tajamul Husain, Prof. N. G. Ranga, Shri B. Das, Shri B. L. Sondhi, Shri Deshbandhu Gupta, Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, Shri Mahavir Tyagi and the Mover, with instructions.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: The Ordinance expires on the 6th. If it will be possible for the committee to meet and complete their report on the 4th and present it on the 5th it will be all right. Probably it would be difficult to get this done within that date. In that case I am prepared to take the risk of the Ordinance lapsing for a few days. The Ordinance expires on the 6th. But if the House comes to a decision about the matter in the course of a few days after the 6th, I do not think it will practically make any great difference. But I would prefer the 4th if the House would agree to it.

Mr. Speaker: What is the date which the Mover wants?

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: Before the 6th it may be difficult. But I would place myself in the hands of Dr. John Matthai. Any date, he fixed would suit all.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: We may accept the 4th.

Mr. Speaker: Then I will finish the sentence thus:

".....to report by the 4th February 1949, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): I beg to support the motion for Select Committee. I suggest for the Select Committee two considerations. The Honourable the Finance Minister has tabled an amendment by which he wants to introduce clause 4 to the Bill. I suggest that there should be consequential amendments in sub-clause (1) of clause 3 which I have suggested in an amendment. I suggest that it may be taken into consideration by the Select Committee.

The other point to which I wish to draw the attention of the Select Committee is contained in sub-clause (2) of clause 3. I quite agree with my Honourable friend Pt. Bhargava that clause 3 is very drastic. In fact, there may already have been honest transfers. The Government are going to be empowered to pounce upon bona-fide transferees. It may be that a transferee may be the second or third or later transferee in a chain of transfers. It is always against sound principles to affect a bona-fide transferee. We should consult all the scattered provisions meant for giving protection to the bona-fide transferee. I suggest that clause 3 should be remodelled to provide that in case only of fraudulent or collusive transfers these provisions should apply. Otherwise it would cause unnecessary hardship to bona-fide transferees if the taxes are ordered to be paid out of the property. The property to be transferred might be a small one and may not bear the levy of a large sum. I suggest that these points should be taken into consideration by the Select Committee.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Madras: General): Mr. Speaker, I have only two facts to place before the House for its consideration. I am in favour of this motion for Select Committee. I am rather surprised at the statement made by the Honourable the Finance Minister that he did not receive any complaint as to the hardship caused by this Ordinance. I wonder how this Government works in order to ascertain the effect of any of its Ordinances or Acts. I was touring in the rural areas of the South and I was shocked to be told one day by an ordinary peasant that it became impossible for him to transfer his very small piece of property of one acre, because the Sub-Registrar refused to register the deed unless and until he went over to the nearest town about 40 or 50 miles away and then consulted the income-tax officer and obtained a certificate from him as suggested or as imposed by this Ordinance. Therefore he sought my assistance. I said that I was not aware of any such Act at all. He said, 'No, Sir, it is a Central Act'. I was not quite sure whether any such Bill had been brought before the House. This was an Ordinance published in the papers and there it was. It did the mischief. In three other places also ordinary peasants came and told me that there was this hardship. Does my Honourable friend suggest that the ordinary peasants should go to their Kisan Congress and send their complaints to him? This is a hardship which is being experienced all over the country. You want to get hold of those people who wish to leave our country and go over to Pakistan, in order to make sure that the income-tax that they have to pay is actually paid; but instead of that you now have got an ordinance and you are going to have legislation also, which would make it practically impossible for millions and millions of people in this country, who necessarily have got to deal in transfer of property for their own family purposes. I think it is hardly fair. Therefore, there is considerable force in what my honourable friend, Mr. Thakurdas Bhargava has said that the net has been spread too far and too wide and you have got to take special steps in order to see that the ordinary people who have nothing to do with inter-dominion relations are effectively protected. Sir, when an ordinary person whose annual income is certainly much less than Rs. 3,000, who cannot be said to come anywhere near an Income-tax Officer when he goes to him, how is he to assure him that he has nothing to pay by way of income-tax? He has got to produce various accounts and certificates from the village officers, the local tahsildars and other people before he can satisfy that authority. It is not at all an easy process and what is more, as my honourable friend, Dr. Matthai had admitted, there is no appeal at all from the Assistant Income-tax Officer. The Honourable Minister now offers to make some amends in this particular matter. But even then to go to the District Headquarters, obtain the certificate from the Income-tax Officer and if that officer should misbehave, then to go to the Assistant Income-tax Officer and then afterwards to go to another officer to whom an appeal will hereafter lie, is a process of trouble and tribulation which we should save the millions of our people from. (Interruption) It is not the assesses, it is the ordinary man and if my honourable friend were to go with him to a Sub-Registrar's Office, in any mofussil town, he will now find to his very great surprise that there is not enough work there because the Registration Officer adopts the line of least resistance; he simply says: "You produce a certificate from the Income-tax Officer; otherwise, I am not going to register it". From whom does my Honourable friend expect a complaint? Surely not from every Registration Officer and Sub-Registrar. It may possibly come only from the Provincial Governments and I do not know why the Provincial Governments have not taken the trouble to inform my honourable friend about all these troubles that are being experienced by the ordinary folk and also about the loss of revenue that they are themselves sustaining.

Just now I came to know of one case in the Ministry itself. My friend had gone to the Registration office; he wanted to register a deed on behalf of a trust. He was only one of the trustees; he went there and he found the office practically empty. All these people generally go to get their deeds registered. It must be within everybody's experience that generally these registration offices are overcrowded with people who wish to get their deeds registered, and yet this office was more or less empty, and the Registration Officers themselves pleaded of loss of revenue and my friend himself was requested or rather demanded to produce this certificate for the transfer of property on behalf of a trust. On the face of it anybody could see that it was not to transfer the property to Pakistan, but still a certificate was demanded and my friend was put to the difficulty of having to go to an Income-tax Officer, obtain the certificate, go back again to the Registration Officer. Therefore, Sir, this gives us a warning against any of those laws that we ourselves are passing here and that we cannot be too careful in scrutinising the Bills that are emanating from the Central Government in order to protect the interests of the ordinary folk in this country.

Secondly, Sir, I suggest to my honourable friend to go a long way indeed in meeting the wishes of the Select Committee in making necessary amendments in this Bill so that the mischief of this Bill is not spread out over the whole of the country and does not touch the interests of any one and every-one, but is confined only to those people, may be a few more than those who ought to be touched and from whom any income-tax can possibly be expected to be paid.

Thirdly, Sir, and lastly, there must be some sort of exemption limit for the sale value of any particular property, so that even small properties whose transfer has got to be registered need not have to be brought within the mischief of this Bill that is placed before us.

شری دیش بندھو گپتا ! جناب صدر ! مجھے بھی یہ جان کر حیرت ہوئی کہ فائڈینس منسٹر صاحب کو کوئی ایسی شکایت نہیں مائی جو اس آرڈینینس کے خلاف پبلک کی جانب سے ظاہر کی گئی ہو۔ میرے خیال میں اگر آپ نے دہلی کے ایک منسٹریشن کو inform کیا ہوتا تو آپ کے نوٹس میں ایک نہیں بلکہ پچاسوں ایسی شکایتیں آتی جن سے یہ معلوم ہوتا کہ جس وقت سے یہ آرڈینینس جاری ہوا ہے اس وقت سے نہ صرف یہ ہوا کہ بہت سے لوگوں کو تکلیف ہوتی ہے بلکہ property کی value شہر میں بہت گر گئی ہے اور اس کی وجہ سے بہت سی لوکل فرمیں فیل ہو گئی ہیں۔ ایسی instances میرے نوٹس میں ہیں جہاں پر کہ کئی لوگوں کو Bank obligation کو meet کرنے کے لئے اپنی property کو sell کرنی پڑی ہے۔ اور سرٹیفیکریٹ نہ ہونے کی وجہ سے وہ sale نہ ہوسکیں جس کا نتیجہ یہ ہوا کہ وہ فرمیں fail ہو گئیں۔ مزید سمجھ میں نہیں آتا کہ کس طریقے پر فائڈینس منسٹر صاحب نے یہ کہہ دیا کہ اس کے خلاف ان کو کوئی شکایت موصول نہیں ہوئی۔ حقیقت یہ ہے کہ اس آرڈینینس کو جاری کرنے کا جو منشا تھا وہ صرف اتنا ہی تھا کہ یہاں سے جو لوگ جارہے ہیں وہ اپنے قرضے pay کئے بغیر نہ چاسکیں۔ لیکن اس کا اتنا wider application کو دیا گیا جس کی وجہ سے لوگوں کی properties کی value بہت کم ہو گئی اور لوگوں کو بہت سی زرعی زمینیں مصیبتوں کا سامنا کرنا پڑا۔

ہیں اور میں سمجھتا ہوں کہ شاید اس طرح کے قانون سے کام چل جائے جیسا کہ امریکہ اور دوسرے countries میں ہوتا ہے۔ وہاں پر جس وقت کوئی آدمی اپنے country کو چھوڑتا ہے تو اسے وہاں کے Treasury Department سے یہ سرٹیفیکریٹ لینا پڑتا ہے کہ اس کو کچھ انکم ٹیکس وغیرہ وہاں نہیں دینا ہے۔ میں سمجھتا ہوں کہ اگر اس طرح سے یہاں بھی کر دیا جائے تو ٹھیک ہے۔ اب ہندو پاسپورٹ کے دنوں ڈومینین میں لوگ آج نہیں آتے ہیں میں سمجھتا ہوں کہ گورنمنٹ کی requirements اس طرح سے پوری ہو سکتی ہیں کہ obligatory کر دیا جائے کہ جو لوگ پاسپورٹ لینا چاہتے ہیں وہ اس سے پہلے Treasury Department سے یا انکم ٹیکس پارٹمنٹ سے ایک Declaration لے آویں کہ وہ گورنمنٹ کے taxes کے سلسلہ میں کوئی obligation گورنمنٹ کو owe نہیں کرتے ہیں۔ اگر اتنا کر دیا جائے تو گورنمنٹ کا جو purpose ہے کہ کوئی شخص ٹیکس evade کر کے یہاں سے نہ جاوے وہ پورا ہو سکتا ہے۔ اسلئے میں فائڈینس منسٹر صاحب سے عرض کروں گا کہ جس وقت یہ بل سائیکٹ کمری میں جائے تو وہ اس point of view سے بھی اس چیز کو دیکھیں۔ تھوڑی سی بچت کے لئے اس کو اتنا wide کر دیا گیا ہے اور میں چاہتا ہوں کہ یہ اس Comprehensive شکل میں پاس نہیں ہونا چاہئے۔ میں اُمید کرتا ہوں کہ فائڈینس منسٹر صاحب! جس وقت یہ بل سائیکٹ کمری میں جائے گا open mind سے اس پر غور کریں گے اور اپنے ماتحت لوگوں سے یہ بھی دریافت کریں گے کہ اس کے خلاف کتنی شکایتیں لوگوں کی ہیں۔ اگر ان Complaints کو دیکھنے کی وہ کوشش کریں گے تو معلوم ہوگا کہ بہت سے hard cases ہوتے ہیں اور جو لوگ property کا کام کرتے تھے ان کا سب کام upset ہو گیا ہے۔

Shri Deshbandhu Gupta (Delhi): Mr. Speaker, Sir, I am also surprised to know that the Honourable the Finance Minister has not received any such complaint which might have been made by the public against this Ordinance. In my opinion, if he had informed the Administration of Delhi, not only one but as much as fifty complaints would have been brought to his notice from which it could be observed that apart from the fact that a very large number of people have been embarrassed since the promulgation of this Ordinance, the value of the property in the city has also considerably gone down and this has consequently resulted in the failure of many local firms. I know of many such instances where people were obliged to sell their property in order to meet with their bank obligations and these could not be sold for want of a certificate. This ultimately led to the failure of many firms. I fail to understand how the Honourable the Finance Minister has stated that he had not received any complaint against this. In fact the sole object of the issue of this Ordinance was to ensure payment of taxes by persons who were leaving India. But its scope of application has been so much widened that it had resulted in the depreciation of the value of the properties held by the people and they had to face a good deal of fresh hardships.

Sir, I feel that there was a time when the Government ought to have extended such protection. But to-day the conditions have changed and I think such legislation might serve the purpose. Just like America and other countries, when any person leaves his country, he has got to obtain from the Treasury Department a certificate to the effect that he does not owe any Income-tax to the Government of that country. I think it would be quite in order if we introduce a similar procedure here as well. At present people cannot enter any of the Dominions without a passport. According to my mind the requirements of the Government can be fulfilled by making it obligatory on the persons applying for a Passport to obtain in the first instance from the Treasury or Income Tax Department a declaration to the effect that they do not owe any obligation to the Government in the nature of payment of its taxes. If this is done, the Government can achieve its purpose that no body should leave this country by evading the payment of tax.

I would, therefore, request the Honourable the Finance Minister that when this Bill is referred to the Select Committee he should also look at it from this point of view. For the sake of a small amount of saving its scope has been widened to such an extent and I would urge that it should not be passed in such a comprehensive form. I hope that when this Bill is referred to the Select Committee, the Honourable the Finance Minister will consider over this suggestion and also enquire from his subordinate authorities as to the number of complaints made against it by the public. If he tries to look at these complaints, he would no doubt find that there had been many hard cases and the entire business of the property dealers has been upset.

Mr. Homi Mody (Bombay: General): Sir, I am altogether opposed to this measure. I am surprised that members of this House, who, judging from their speeches, seem equally opposed to it should have suggested a Select Committee. A very interesting question arises, whether the Select Committee could so alter the measure as to completely neutralise and negative it and whether it will be open to this House after the report of the Select Committee has been received to reject the Bill altogether. My suggestion is that this matter be postponed for a little while, particularly as the Honourable the Finance Minister is prepared to take the risk of allowing the Ordinance to expire and there being a time lag between its expiry and the enactment of the measure.

The measure was really enacted for meeting an emergency which no longer exists. When people were fleeing to Pakistan, and disposing of properties and evading payment of taxes, I could have understood the urgency of the measure and its utility. These conditions no longer exist. What is the position today? In order to be able to catch a very few individuals, you are jeopardising the interests of tens of thousands of people.

An Honourable Member: What about Mr. Ispahani?

Mr. Homi Mody: In reply to a supplementary question, the Honourable the Finance Minister referred to my being the head of a Bank in this country. Speaking as a Banker, I would say that Banks have found it extremely difficult to advance moneys either against immovable properties or against commodities. The position is reduced to an absurdity. Not only have you got to make all sorts of enquiries, and obtain Income Tax certificates, which on account of congestion in the Income-tax office, are not readily to be had, but even when properties are to be retransferred, after the mortgagers pay back the money, the same difficulties arise. In one case, my Bank was actually asked whether it had paid the Income-tax. Somebody, who had mortgaged his property to the Bank, repaid the amount, and as the Bank was retransferring the property, it came under the mischief of this Ordinance, and the Bank was asked to produce a certificate.

Shri B. L. Sondhi (East Punjab: General): They make no distinction between A and B.

Mr. Homi Mody: Except that we pay our taxes whereas some people may not.

This much is a fact that business is being rendered impossible. Take, for instance the large classes of people who want advances from Banks or private parties against commodities. Unless they produce an Income-tax certificate that they have paid up all their dues, it would be unsafe on the part of the lender to advance any money. What do the Banks do in the circumstances? In order to accommodate parties who they know are respectable, they take a risk which, in my opinion, is not a sound procedure at all. Looking at it from the point of view of almost any interest concerned, I think this Bill ought not to be allowed to be passed. I am against the appointment of the Select Committee. I would rather that an outright opinion was expressed in this House that this measure is no longer required.

I am not sure whether the Honourable the Finance Minister has applied his mind to all the implications of the Bill. He seemed to suggest that, because very few complaints had been received, there was no legitimate ground for apprehension. The position is entirely the other way about, and there are number of instances on record of business being paralysed. I, therefore, suggest that either the Government drop the Bill or delay its consideration, so that, some opportunity may be given to members of this House to consider what should be done.

Mr. Speaker: It is now time for us to adjourn for Lunch. We meet at 2.30 P.M. after Lunch. In the meanwhile, discussion may go on, as to whether the motion for reference of the Bill to the Select Committee is to be proceeded with or the matter is to be postponed, and then, considered again after two days. I am merely making a suggestion. I was thinking as to whether it would be proper for the Chair to import its own knowledge into the working of certain legislations, or ordinances. I was anxiously considering this point. But for the fact that this Bill is going to affect millions of people, I should not have said anything about this measure, but merely taken the vote of the House and allowed the debate to proceed. I do not want to say anything more at the present stage; but I think, the Bill is a matter of very serious consequences to the general public, and it will be better if the matter is considered coolly and dispassionately and then certain conclusions reached. I may just also inform the Honourable the Finance Minister that there has been a history about this Bill. If this history is looked into, I think, the suggestion which I am making for having some time to coolly consider this Bill, will be considered a proper suggestion, apart from the fact that it is coming from the Chair. Ordinarily I should not have made this suggestion. I think I have two alternatives before me: One to out-step a little the limitations of a Speaker in the Chair; or, if I do not do it, to allow very serious consequences, inconvenience and the fullest chance to corruption in the administration of a measure of this type. If I have said anything which I really ought not to say from the Chair, I hope honourable members will take a generous view of my act. But, it is equally my duty to serve my countrymen and save them from troubles. (Hear hear). That makes me say this; otherwise, I should not have said that. It pains me to be a silent spectator to what I believe to be a thing, which requires very serious consideration. The matter may be considered as to whether the reference to the Select Committee has to be gone through, or whether the matter is to be postponed for further consideration and discussion amongst the members informally. Particularly, when the Honourable, the Finance Minister is willing to allow some interim period between the lapsing of the ordinance and the enactment of a new measure, there seems to be no special hurry about it. That is why I have made this suggestion.

Mr. Homi Mody: Would you permit, Sir, the postponement of consideration of this Bill till tomorrow so that members may be able to meet informally?

Mr. Speaker: If there is substantial agreement, if the Honourable the Finance Minister agrees, I am entirely in the hands of the house. Whatever my personal view may be about any measure or proceeding, I am entirely in the hands of the House.

Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi: (Madras: General): The right may be given to the Select Committee to completely negative it.

Honourable Members: No, no.

The Honourable Shri K. Santhanam (Minister of State for Railways and Transport): That cannot be done.

Mr. Speaker: We need not go into that hypothetical proposition at present.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: If the House is in favour of a postponement of consideration, as far as I am concerned, I would not stand in the way.

Mr. Speaker: In the meanwhile, the matter may be discussed informally and if the members are informally agreed that the motion for reference to the Select Committee may be proceeded with, they may do so; if they come to the conclusion that the motion may be dropped altogether, we may not revive the matter and the motion may not be proceeded with at all.

Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi: Sir, I suggest this matter may be taken up the day after tomorrow. There must be some time for us to meet informally and discuss.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Day after tomorrow is a non-official day.

Mr. Speaker: Whatever it may be, if it is not be taken up and finished before the 5th, the date on which the ordinance expires, it may be taken up after three or four days. There is no particular sanctity in having it before the 5th.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: So far as I am concerned, I am prepared to have this considered as fully as the House would like.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): When we meet after lunch, we may make representation as to what our attitude is.

Mr. Speaker: In the meanwhile, this discussion will go on. I think Mr. Mody will continue his speech.

Mr. Homi Mody: I have finished, Sir.

Mr. Speaker: We adjourn now; we shall meet at 2-30 p.m.

The Assembly then adjourned for lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock, Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: I was not surprised when my honourable friend Mr. Homi Mody spoke. It is natural. I have known him for twelve years. He has always been a capitalist and he is anxious to save his property against taxation. But my friend, Prof. Ranga also joined hands with him. Now clause 2 of the Bill says: "No registering officer.....shall register, recognise or give effect to any document relating to property, other than agricultural land....." He said that when he went on a lecturing tour, some ryots came to him and said that they could not sell Rs. 100 worth of their property. I think Prof. Ranga hastily made this remark. In the villages houses are huts. No one there will go in for beautiful mansions. Agricultural land does not come within the purview of this Bill.

So far as Mr. Mody is concerned, certainly this affects non-agricultural property. It is natural that he should say so and it is equally natural that we should oppose it.

Let us see who are the persons who come within the purview of this Bill. After all, freedom in a civilised world is the product of limitations and I do want this restriction in the interest and safety of our country and in the interests of proper taxation.

In the first instance, to what provinces does this apply? It is largely applicable to people belonging in large numbers to East Punjab, Delhi, West Bengal and to some extent to Bombay.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari (Madras: General): It also applies to Madras. I can say categorically for the information of the House that it has been made applicable to Madras.

Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi: It is in operation in Madras under an Ordinance.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: My friend puts me one question and a second desires me to answer another question. My honourable friend, Shri T. T. Krishnamachari tells me that this applies to the province of Madras but I may tell him that it does not. To-day the Ordinance is going to lapse on the 6th and might have been made applicable to Madras. It applies specifically to the provinces where refugees have come and settled and so far, who are the persons who have gone to Pakistan?

Shri R. K. Sidhva (C.P. and Berar: General): Read clause 3.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: My friend is always one step in advance of me. Clause 3 says:

"(1) Where any right, title or interest in any immovable property, other than agricultural land,is, or has been transferred.....after the 14th day of August, 1947, the Income-tax Officer.....may at any time issue a notice to all or any of the parties to the transaction requiring them or him to produce within one month from the date of service of the notice....."

When the matter comes up there is time enough. The Honourable Minister is always in our hands!

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: Question!

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Yes, Sir, when it comes to the Province of Madras, my friend, Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari has not an inch of land but houses: I have a house but not an inch of land! Houses in Madras should not be so easily sold away. You are trying to save a man who is not prepared to pay tax to sell away his property. My friend asked how many cases did we get of tax-dodgers. Let me tell him that a Minister lost his post because we over-emphasized the importance of not allowing tax-dodgers to get away. So when his successor brings forward legislation, we are equally anxious to catch the tax-dodgers. I was glad and happy so long as Mr. Homi Mody was not in this House. But the moment he came all the people who have been talking of socialism have been capitalized overnight!

Let us see what we are trying to do. Have we not known instances where persons who have come from Pakistan over here have got house and property and that in India they are safe. They move about from place to place anywhere in India. Their motor cars are preserved in the Constitution Club. Every small article of theirs is preserved for them. What about us? What about the Rs. 800 crores worth of property left by our people who fled from Lahore leaving all their belongings there and came here? Do you know what is happening? We cannot go to Pakistan and we cannot sell any of our property. We can have big advertisements in the papers, but there is not a single Muslim who will purchase a single item from a Hindu. Some friend, who is now representing the Muslim League or the Pakistan Government in Egypt said, when I was speaking sometime ago that we were not making any communal differences like Pakistan. (Shri I. Krishnaswami Bharathi: "What has that to do with this?") What I am submitting is this. If I were a refugee from Lahore where I had property and I come to India I cannot go back to Lahore and sell my property. I won't be allowed. Besides nobody will purchase it. Take the reverse case. There was a gentleman here who was sitting in the front seat. Overnight he flies to Karachi, where he has his wife and children. He tries to be a good citizen of India. Often he adorns the Chair on account of your generosity Sir, for he is even on the Panel of Chairmen.....

Shri B. Das (Orissa: General): He is a zamindar of Gaya.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: So his property is here but his heart is there in Pakistan. So they can sell away their property and evade taxation and the next morning they can fly away to Pakistan. Do you want to help such people? Any piece of legislation even if passed after great deliberation may make for hardship in certain cases but that is not a ground for letting off tax-dodgers get away with it. My friend Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava quoted instances how it was impossible for a man who has property in Pakistan to come away here. Let alone selling his property he will not be given a passage to get to India by plane unless he produced a certificate that he has paid all the taxes which are legitimately due from him. We are not going so far as that. We are trying to recover these taxes. On one side we are insisting that the Honourable Minister should present a balanced budget and on the other we are pleading for tax-dodgers. We are preaching one thing and acting in another way.

What if this Bill goes to the Select Committee? I do not want that this Bill should be rushed through. If the Ordinance lapses and there is a gap the heavens will not fall down. If not on the 4th let the Select Committee submit its report by the 10th. As regards the question of inconvenience to some people I will suggest in the Select Committee that we should take a certificate from any person who sells his property. These classes of properties do not come within the purview of agricultural lands. The persons need not be asked to swear. Who are the persons affected? They are persons who are able to pay income-tax and whose property is not agricultural land. A man who pays income-tax earns more than Rs. 3,000 a year. Do you say that that man is illiterate? Whom are we trying to help? The man who wants to evade taxation? I am rather surprised that we should become partisans to help the rich get richer and the poor get poorer. The rich are not only rich but are absolute blackguards and what to get away without paying their taxes. Let an affidavit be sworn before the Registrar. When the document is presented he can get a certificate. The complaint is that the Incometax Officer does not easily give a certificate. The Incometax Officer assesses the tax.....

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: Give Rs. 100. That is the way.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: What I would suggest in the Select Committee is that the Income-tax Officer shall send lists of all assesses to every district officer, every sub-registrar within his jurisdiction. Let there be a list week by week. Once an assessment is made, let him compare with the list and whatever name does not find a place let him immediately allow the man. Let those documents be registered. If the purchaser is an incometax assessee or not does not come into the picture. Only the seller comes into the picture. If his name does not find a place in the list let him go.

The second thing is that an affidavit may be sworn before the Registrar, saying that he does not owe any tax or has paid his taxes. These are all qualifications to be imposed. The inconveniences we can remove without losing the tax in proper cases. My friend suggested that a man might sell a property worth Rs. 100. All right. In that case instead of the inspecting Incometax Assistant Commissioner the Incometax officer himself may say so. There is an Incometax Officer in every district. The Assistant Commissioner may be for a couple of districts. Let us therefore give power to the Income-tax Officer himself. My honourable friend the Finance Minister himself said that in proper cases appeals must be allowed. Let us find out ways and means of catching hold of the tax-dodger, prevent him from getting away with the sale of his property and at the same time let us see to it that this Bill does not work hardship on innocent persons.

My friend from Madras said that what I have said may apply to the North but what about Madras. Do they know that there is a city there by name Coimbatore which is equal to Ahmedabad. There are there 25 and odd mills. One person there was running a fleet of buses all over the district. He evaded tax five times and when the Incometax Commissioner came he sold away all the buses and ran them in the name of one of his son-in-law every time. God has given him quite a number of sons-in-law. When the Honourable Minister goes there he is the first man to put a garland round his neck. This is intended for such tax-dodgers also. We will now say "Yes, have it extended to the province of Madras". Does any honourable friend wish that such tax-dodgers must get away?

An Honourable Member: Not at all.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: If a man sold away his property there must be some registration office in the place. The registrar must be able to get hold of the man. What my friend says is equivalent to saying 'Do not have policeman but have only magistrates, who will deal with the offender only after the offence has been committed.' I want to have both prevention and punishment. Why should we stand in the way of a piece of legislation which does not make hardship except in certain cases. There is no perfect piece of legislation which does not cause hardship to somebody or other. Is it for an exception that you have to make a rule or is it for the rule that you have to make an exception. If necessary do not make this a permanent measure on the statute book. Confine it for three years. Also give power not to extend it over an entire province but a district all that can be done in the Select Committee. Let us take sufficient time. In the Select Committee there will be our friends. Our friend Mr. Mody will be there. I will walk out of this picture.....

An Honourable Member: We would not let you.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: This is a wholesome measure. Let us make it good, so that it may not work hardship on the innocent. I am bowing to your experience, Sir. I feel that this is a measure worth considering and I am appealing to you, Sir. In some cases it may work hardship. Possibly the Income-tax Officer may delay and a man may have to give Rs. 2 to the clerk who is there.....

An Honourable Member: Two rupees is not much.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: It may not be much to my honourable friend but each man judges it according to his capacity. It may involve possibly Rs. 1,000 in another case. So corruption is possible. Therefore without giving room for corruption and without at the same time letting people away with the sale proceeds of their property let us try to safeguard the interests of both the Government and the citizens. Let the legislation be not too oppressive nor too lenient. All this can be done in the select committee. Even in the third reading the Bill can be thrown out if it is not acceptable and Democracy is so designed that even at the last minute we can throw the Bill out. It is not a matter of principle but one of procedure. Let us therefore work harmoniously and not divide on a small matter. With your permission, Sir, I would like to make an amendment that instead of the Select Committee report being presented to the House on the 4th it may be presented on the 10th.

Mr. Speaker: Is that date agreeable?

The Honourable Dr. Jhon Matthai: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: While placing the motion before the House I shall give that date.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: Mr. Speaker, may I at the outset congratulate the Honourable the Finance Minister on the excellent support that he has received from my honourable friend from Madras, Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar. At the same time I would like to tell the House the history behind this particular measure. I do not know if the honourable members of this House remember that this particular Bill figured in the Order Paper for two weeks before the close of the last session. Did any honourable member ask for the reason why it was not taken up then? Some of us approached the Finance Minister at the time, my honourable friend Mr. Neogy, and represented to him the difficulties that would entail if this Ordinance was to be made a permanent measure on the statute book. After considerable amount of hesitation and after consulting his experts Mr. Neogy was convinced at that time, as it seemed to us, that the Bill need not be extended beyond the period of the 6th February when it will expire automatically, because the Ordinance was renewed only for another six months. I was therefore surprised yesterday when I found that this Bill has been put back on the Order Paper. Either it must have been due to an oversight on the part of my honourable friend Mr. Neogy in not communicating his own decision to his secretariat or because of the confusion that naturally arises when one person hands over charge to another and is not able to tell his successor all that had taken place during the period he was acting as locum tenens which he had to carry in his memory. Therefore there is no particular virtue in this measure which my honourable friend from Madras, Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, seeks to invest it with at the moment.

I would invite a reference to the Statement of Objects and Reasons. For the sake of clarification let me read it. It says:

"The object of the Bill is to safeguard the loss of revenue in the case of persons who dispose of their properties with the intention of leaving India and settling somewhere else. Following the issue of an Ordinance in Pakistan in December 1947, a corresponding Ordinance was promulgated in India in February 1948. This Ordinance was due to expire on the 6th August 1948 and was renewed on that date by another Ordinance called the Payment of Taxes (Transfer of Property) Ordinance, 1948, which is now being repealed by this Bill."

This is signed by Mr. Neogy and dated the 17th August 1948. The House will therefore understand that the object envisaged in this particular measure is not something which embraces all tax-dodgers but is only limited to those people who seek to emigrate from India to Pakistan and incidentally dodge the taxes they owe to this Government. In a sense it is also a retaliatory measure because Pakistan had first started with a measure of this nature. I do not know if my honourable friends in this House want this House to enact a measure similar to what has been enacted a few days back in Pakistan in regard to refugees returning to Pakistan and staying for a short time in that country. Imitation is certainly the best form of flattery and I do hope that this House is not going to flatter the Pakistan Government by copying the other measure that they have put on the statute book in order to prevent a few refugees that have left Pakistan from returning to that area after realising their assets in this country.

There is a lot of sentiment now being evoked by reason of the present discussion. I think people in the East Punjab and Delhi feel that if this measure is not passed Muslims will profit by it and they will be able to sell their properties here and not pay the taxes due. I do not think so. The Ordinance have worked for a year. What is actually the achievement during the year? In bringing forward a measure of this sort before the House with the experience of its working for one year I do expect the Honourable the Finance Minister normally to give facts and figures for the continuance of the measure. Will my honourable friend disarm all opposition by.....

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I ask my honourable friend one question? Could it not be that on account of this measure there were no sales, because they had first to get a certificate?

Shri Deshbandhu Gupta: There were no sales by those who had no intention of leaving India.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: My honourable friend makes a very pertinent point. How could he get facts and figures when there have been no sales? Nevertheless, in the working of this measure during the past one year information could have been gathered about the number of certificates granted after realisation of taxes due, and my honourable friend would have been able to assess how exactly it worked. There is no use my honourable friend from Madras saying that it affects only a few rich persons. After all, the rich are not affected by this measure. And there is no use his being glad or sorry that Sir Homi Mody is here. I rather wish he had been here all the time so that we can tell him face to face the delinquencies of his particular community. The rich people can always have the ear of the Honourable Minister, and a number of other Ministers to boot. It is only the poor man who has no such opportunity, like my honourable friend Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar has, that suffers in the bargain. It does happen that even a Minister of this Government who is not enterprising has also to suffer, because, as my honourable friend Prof. Ranga pointed out, a Minister takes a document to the registration office and he is not aware of the existence of these provisions, and the man of the registration office says "you have not brought the quitance certificate for the incometax returns and I cannot register your document." What has happened is that this measure, though it was originally intended only for those Provinces from which refugees are likely to emigrate, has been made applicable to Madras. It may be that the Bill does not specifically mention it, but it enables the Government to extend the measure to any Province. In the meantime, unaware completely of the intention of the Finance Minister, and when he has been replaced by another Minister, the Department goes on extending it to a Province where there are no refugees at all, merely because the Income-tax Commissioner of the area wants it. Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar who has been a doughty champion of individual liberties in the past has suddenly changed over because Government wants to safeguard loss of revenue. Let me tell him my own experience. It has been mentioned to me that there is a long queue outside the income-tax office in Madras. An auditor friend took me there and I did see it. But subsequently it was explained to me that the queue was not made up entirely of those people who wanted a quitance certificate in regard to transfer of property but also in regard to those wanting a certificate so that they could apply for import licences. All this is not perhaps germane to the Bill before the House, but I am mentioning it for the sake of telling the house how government Hukums work. Why should the Government say that anybody who applied for import licence must take out a certificate that they do not owe any money to the Income-tax authority? Why should not people who want import licences be chased by Income-tax officers in a different manner instead of getting them to make a queue outside the Income-tax office? Is it the idea of the Government to enable its subordinates to earn some money in this way. Does it really mean that the Central Government, not being in a position to pay increased dearness allowance to its subordinates wants to help them to augment their revenue in a different manner. If that is the position I have no objection. Probably a clerk might get Rs. 20, an officer might get Rs. 100 and the Assistant Commissioner Rs. 1,000 by way of additional income on each certificate. It may be according to the value of the import licence or the value of the property sought to be transferred. If that is the idea, it can even be justified as after all there are other Governments doing the same. The Chinese Government is going on in this way, being supported by such bakshish to its employees and this Government can follow suit. But I do believe that, apart from the intrinsic defects in it, to bring a measure of this kind before the House after its having been allowed to run for twelve months without let or hindrance and now to ask the Select Committee to devise ways and means to make this measure more innocuous than what the Department considers it now to be, is putting an onus on the members of this House which they are not in a position to shoulder.

I think it is highly unfair. If my honourable friend the Finance Minister feels that the Select Committee can improve the Bill, why does he not say here and now: "These are the ways in which I am going to ask the Select Committee to improve it". If he does that, that is another matter. It is said that the Select Committee may reject this measure. How could it? I would ask your guidance as being the Custodian of the privileges and the precedents of legislative houses, "How can a Select Committee, the members of which are more or less committed to the principle of the Bill when they accept to serve on that Committee?"

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: May I know what is the principle of this Bill except of safeguarding the loss of revenue from those people who intend to leave India and settle in Pakistan?

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: There you are. It only serves to confirm my view that this Bill has no principle and therefore there is nothing that the Select Committee can reject. I do not suppose it is all quite so easy. After all, the principle of the Bill is that there is a particular categorical aim attempted by this Bill and if you are going to deny that categorical aim you are denying the principle of the Bill. It may be that the Honourable the Finance Minister might, in his goodness, say "No. A number of members of the Select Committee seem to be averse to the Bill. So I will withdraw it." If he gives an assurance like that on the floor of the House, it is a different matter, but I cannot see how the Select Committee can say, "The Bill should be rejected".

I personally feel with you, Sir, that the original decision of the Finance Ministry—I hope I won't be contradicted—was correct, that the Bill should have been dropped, and if the Government had found a necessity for some sort of Bill of this nature they should come forward with a new Bill in an altered form. Supposing it is a matter of Government losing revenues, where what is involved is only in regard to property of the value of say a lakh of rupees or something like that, they could have brought a Bill to cover such cases. They could have said that all transfer of property involving sums of not less than ten, five or one if you like, lakh of rupees only should be done when a certificate is produced from the income-tax authorities. If they do that, it would be something different. You may even make it universally applicable or you may bring in another measure and say that notwithstanding the fact that a property is transferred the rights of the Income-Tax Department over that property is not extinguished, so that the buyer will have always to beware of the possibility of the Income-Tax Department coming on him later on, which, Sir, as you will understand is a matter which we will have to limit to a period of time. These are the various ways and means in which the income-tax structure of the country can be altered. There may be an amendment to the Income-Tax Act to offset this kind of evasion. But to use a temporary contingency that has occurred and make the remedy against it a permanent part of the Statute of this country is, I think, wholly iniquitous and notwithstanding the fact that a lawyer of the eminence of my honourable friend the Deputy Speaker is supporting it, I feel that the measure, solely on the merits of it, cannot be supported.

I would like to mention one or two other reasons for the position taken up by me before I sit down. The question really is that the number of people that are affected is out of all proportion to the revenue that Government gets. The amount of work involved on the Department is out of all proportion to the amount of revenue that Government can possibly get. Unless the area of the Bill is to be limited very drastically, proceeding with the Bill will be very unwise. Secondly, the Bill is so loosely worded that "interest" might mean anything. For instance, the interest of a trustee in a property or the limited interest similar to what one of my honourable friends mentioned about usufructuary mortgages. Thirdly, this Bill wants a certificate from the Inspecting Assistant Commissioner. May I ask the Honourable the Finance Minister to tell us how many Assistant Commissioners there are in each province. How could people go to the Assistant Commissioner excepting through these Departmental channels and the mere fact that he has issued instructions that all these applicants must be straightaway disposed of and there should be no delay does not vouchsafe the compliance with those instructions. If all the instructions issued by the Ministers of the Government of India were scrupulously observed by their subordinates, I think there would be no interpolations in this House. The Government of this country will then run on oiled-wheels. The only thing is the number of breaches of these instructions are far more than the number of cases where observance can possibly be found to be true.

The Honourable Shri N. V. Gadgil (Minister for Works, Mines and Power): Nobody prevents you from asking questions.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: My honourable friend does not give me a chance to ask. As a rule I do not ask questions at all. As a matter of fact, I have refrained from asking any questions, because I do not see how I can make use of the answer to those questions, being a member of the party in power. Even this limited opposition that I have to voice, the opposition of the man-in-the street, has only got to be done by sufferance because my honourable friend is smiling at me all the time; if he just frowns on me, I will sit down because my intention is not to put the Government in an embarrassing position.

These are the factors against the measure and there are certain absolute facts which my honourable friend Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar might go and verify; the number of people who have to go to the income-tax office to ask for a certificate of this nature and the over-riding factor that my honourable friend Prof. Ranga mentioned, namely, that in urban areas the number of documents registered has dropped enormously and the effect of it will be seen in the stamp revenue of the Provinces in due course. It may be that the provincial ministers are not alert enough, because nobody knows of how much a measure would affect provincial revenues. It is difficult to keep trace of Central Governments emergency legislation. The Central Government passes a number of Ordinances. Here I have a list of Ordinances in my pocket passed by the Finance Ministry since the House dispersed on the last occasion and somebody was asking me to day, "What has the Finance Minister done to control inflation?" He has been producing Ordinances,—one, two, three, four, five—and we are now more or less coming to the state of governing by Ordinances which used to be the practice during the war. Of course, there is an emergency, there is inflation; there are the refugees; there are all other problems. But the Ordinances that my honourable friend merely issues because the Department wants it often times produce nothing at all by way of results except inconvenience to the public. I might mention provisional assessment of income-tax ordinance. Assessments of income-tax will be only provisional thereafter there will be no final assessments at all, and if my honourable friend goes on with his practice of issuing Ordinances whenever the Department wants them, I can tell him the whole work of Govt. will have to be done, the whole work of the Finance Ministry and the finance administration will have to be done by Ordinances. There it is. The House is the watchdog of the privileges of the people. We will have to see that this method of ruling by ordinances must be kept down to a minimum absolutely and even as it is there is no excuse for the particular Ministry not having tabled a Bill early enough in the last session and got it through or got it rejected. They just let it go merely because it was renewed just before the session started, and lasted for another six months.

Notwithstanding the eloquence of my honourable friend Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, I would personally advise my honourable friend the Finance Minister to drop this measure and if he feels that there is need for safeguarding revenues due to Government from those are likely to owe large sums by way of taxes, he could do that by way of bringing a new Bill or an amendment to the Income-Tax Act, and put it as a permanent thing on the Statute Book. That can be done within the next month or fortnight, as the case may be, but as it is I see no useful purpose can possibly be served by referring this Bill to a Select Committee and the Select Committee coming to a decision in which Mr. Ayyangar will be of one view and somebody else will be of another view, and naturally they will say, "We are not able to come to a definite decision" and the Minister will probably say, "Let us go through the thing" or if we say we do not like it, we cannot reject it but depend upon the mercy of the Minister to withdraw it. I do say that he ought to withdraw this Bill and bring upon another measure of a restrictive character which might even become a part of the permanent income-tax structure of this country. That is my respectful submission to the Honourable the Finance Minister and I am naturally in the hands of the House whether the House intends to support the measure in its original form or in its amended form as amended by my honourable friend Pandit Thakurdas Bhargava's motion.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: Sir, my task has been made much easier by the reply given by my friend Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari to the Honourable the Deputy Speaker. In his enthusiasm to see that tax is not dodged by the tax-dodgers, he has in his arguments imported many irrelevant remarks which are not germane to this Bill at all.

Shri B. Das: Why do you not say, irrelevant?

Shri R. K. Sidhva: He has referred to the refugees who have come away from Pakistan and, in a pathetic manner, said that they have suffered immensely leaving their properties there and that they dare not go there to sell them. All that is perfectly true and I endorse every word of what he said. But this Bill has nothing to do with that. I know myself how our people who have come from Pakistan are suffering having left all their belongings there. A recent order issued by Pakistan, after the Delhi and Karachi negotiations, caused me to wonder whether those negotiations were genuine on the part of Pakistan. My friend the Deputy Speaker said.....

[At this stage Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair, which was then occupied by Mr. Deputy Speaker (Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar).]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is open to the honourable member to go on with his remarks.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: No, Sir. Now that you are in the Chair I shall only say this: that you were good enough to state that I may have many properties in Karachi. Let me tell you that I own no property and I do not hope to have any during my lifetime. Therefore, today while I associate myself with the remarks offered by Mr. Modi, I hold my views very strongly about this measure. I have seen in Bombay some of the small people who own property suffering great hardship. This Bill will hit them hard. They have come and asked me what kind of legislation the Dominion legislature is passing. They say that they should not be made to pay the penalty for others. They are perfectly right. The Bill, as Shri T. T. Krishnamachari pointed out, refers only to those provinces where people would like to run away from and avoid the taxation. The original idea was to have a restricted measure. Now one and a half years have passed and they want to run away from Pakistan and come and do business here. But our people cannot go there. During the recess I asked the Honourable the Finance Minister to what extent the Government have sustained loss in the absence of a measure of this kind. He said that he has no information available on this matter. Though that is also my view, in view of the difficulties of the small people, I asked the Honourable Minister to give me an indication of the extent of the loss to the State. He does not know and he was unable to tell me this. I concede that there may be loss of a few thousands of rupees. To avoid that small loss, are we going to impose hardships on the people involved in having to register their properties? On account of this measure, many transfers have been stopped. Mr. Mody, who is a banker and chairman of a big bank, told us how difficult it is for him to lend money on mortgages, in view of the restrictions imposed. Sir, big people can raise money when they want. What will poor people, who have property worth Rs. 10,000 or Rs. 5,000, do to get the required certificate and so on?

Sir, the amendments of Pandit Bhargava really aim at killing this Bill indirectly. He himself does not want it. One logical result of our sending this Bill to a Select Committee will be that we accept the principle of it. Once you accept the principle of it, I do not know what you are going to do in the Select Committee. While our own people are cursing the Government for bringing forward a measure of this kind which, though aimed at others, really causes hardship to them, how can we accept the principle of it?

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: On account of the recent agreement, many people will go away from here to Pakistan. It is a necessary measure but it should be limited to those people only.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: I do not know whether in any law you can make that distinction. I am sure it will affect every one. If you say that it is going to affect only a particular class of people I am prepared to consider the position. I believe the measure will affect every one. I wonder whether as pointed out by my friend Pandit Bhargava, one can make such a distinction.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: Certainly.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: Then let me know how you are going to make that distinction.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: See my amendments.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: As a layman I think the law will not permit you to do so. It is said that unless we have this measure passed into law, we may be losing some money. I want to know the correct position. For my part I would advise losing a small sum rather than creating hardship to the people. You have to look into both sides of a question. A few thousands would not matter much to the Government. If the Honourable Minister tells us that the State would, in the absence of this law, lose large sums, I am prepared to agree. But we have not been told how much they will suffer. We are told that people have left India for Pakistan. I want to know how much you are going to gain by placing this Act on the Statute Book permanently. This matter has till now been governed by an Ordinance. We do not mind it. The Legislature in my opinion should not be a party to this. If the Honourable Minister gives me an assurance that it is possible to make distinctions in the matter of the levy of this tax, I will consider it.

Shri B. Das: Sir, I oppose the reference of this Bill to a Select Committee. I was surprised to find my ex-capitalist friend Mr. Sidhva speaking in that subdued tone. He says he has no property now. He has left everything in Pakistan.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: I never had any.

Shri B. Das: You were a member of the Committee of the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce like me in those days. If you had no properties you could not have become a member.

Sir, before I heard the plaintive voice of my friend Shri T. T. Krishnamachari, I was under the impression that Madras was the most intellectual province in India. But now I find that Madras is finding difficulty in getting certificates from the income-tax officials in the matter of Transfer of property. For import licences if such certificates are called for, I approve of it. Why should Madras have large number of applicants for more and more import licences? I cannot follow but any applicant must show he has money to trade. I have been always against tax dodgers. The situation Mr. Sidhva has pictured to himself is interesting. The Bill aims at stopping the sale of property by those who want to run away to Pakistan.

Let us meet the first situation. Those are the provinces to which it is being applied from where people have run away and as the Honourable the Deputy Speaker insinuated while speaking, some of the people from Gaya are trying to go away with their property to Karachi. Of course we must safeguard our wealth and see that it is not being taken away illicitly to Pakistan. What has the Government done in the case of Rajah Akbar Ali, who was one of the biggest contractors of the Government of India and who did not pay even a few rupees to the Government of India and who had gone away to Pakistan. I ask my honourable friend, Mr. H. P. Mody—he is a very old friend of mine, I welcome him and I am glad that we are again participating in a debate on the floor of this House—if Mr. Habib Rahimtoola, who is Pakistan Ambassador today in London, if he by connivance with my honourable friends in Bombay, sells away his property and dodges paying the taxes to the Government, what is the Government going to do? India before the partition was ruled by Tatas, Birlas, Ispahanis and Dalmias and I do not know how far the truth is and what is the internal combination of these four great houses but it is well known on the eastern side of India that the Ispahanis are transferring crores of their wealth into Eastern Pakistan, and I do not know whether a part of that property has come to the banks and various other organisations with which my honourable friend, Mr. Mody is associated with, but I wish to know whether there may not be tax dodging by big firms like Ispahanis, who have made crores and crores of rupees by being the suppliers of the then Government of India and the Government of Bengal rice and other foodstuff and the inhuman tragedy in Bengal—that are too well known to everyone of us and I hope such things will never be allowed.

If injustice had been done to property sellers in Madras, it is a very small matter. It can be removed in the Select Committee, but we should not do away with this legislation or with this Ordinance. Such an eventuality will permit tax dodgers sell their property illicitly and evade payment of taxes by running away to Pakistan. I would be a traitor to my country if I permit them to part with their property without paying State taxes before they run away to Pakistan. That one principle alone makes me support this measure wholeheartedly and I do not think that Mr. Sidhva was right when he said that the Finance Ministry is after every little transfer of property transferred in Madras or Bombay and trying to catch and harass people unnecessarily. I think it is an exaggeration and it had better not be repeated on the floor of the House. Sir, I wholeheartedly support the motion.

Shri Mahavir Tyagi (U. P. General): Sir, I have great sympathy with my honourable friend, Dr. John Matthai, for before he came to the office, he was known to be a very great philanthropist but unfortunately he was selected to be on the portfolio in which everybody becomes a Shylock and becomes very miserly—I mean he has got the portfolio where he naturally has to take care after every pie, and therefore, he has come with such an unpopular measure. I do not agree with those friends who say that this Bill should be thrown out, for after all no State can proceed on sentiments alone. Only recently the Government has arrived at some sort of agreement with regard to transfer of property and when that thing comes into action, the properties shall either be transferred or sold or some other arrangement shall be made and naturally the question will soon become important, because all those whose properties had been left here will get their compensation and all those men who have come from Pakistan will get their compensation. It is all but clear when such a huge exchange of property or adjustment of property takes place, the Governmental accounts must also be cleared off. So I do not totally oppose the Bill, but there is a part of the Bill, which I am wholly opposed to. Firstly, because it emanates from a spirit of retaliation. Pakistan committed an error and we followed the error. It is a bad spirit. In fact when the people who came over to this side from Pakistan had been rummaged, robbed, beaten and looted on the way and their belongings were either stolen or destroyed. And even the ornaments of women were forcible taken away. Now, after all that was done the Pakistan Government came out with an ordinance that even if they had gone away penniless, even then their taxes would be realised and they would not be allowed to sell their property without paying these taxes.

Sir, a tax, so far as I understand—I do not know about the income-tax and fortunately or unfortunately I have never been an income-tax payer not that I have evaded it but I never had any income to the level of income-tax payment—is paid in advance. Although the previous accounts are taken into account but taxes are always paid in advance to enable the State to proceed on with its business. When one has left the State for good, why should he pay a tax? I pay my tax only because in exchange the State will give me protection, will feed me during famine, will protect my children and protect my honour and my liberty. But now those persons who are scared away from here, who have gone helter skelter, all hungry and starving, beaten, robbed and rummaged and in fear of getting murdered, such persons as have gone away from India and in the same manner people who have come to India from Pakistan as refugees who will never go to Pakistan to claim protection for their children or ask for their looted property or seek protection for their honour are not morally liable to pay any tax. What for should Pakistan demand from them income or any other tax, they are no more the citizens of that territory. The same applies here. I submit, Sir, on moral grounds if not on legal or political grounds, we have no claim to realise taxes from persons who are no more our citizens and whom we are not going to guard or give any protection or safety. I therefore, submit, I am not attacking the Bill altogether wholesale, but what I am condemning is the spirit to realize taxes while a man is running away for safety of his life. It is like that Hindustani saying: "Bhagte Bhut Ki Langote Bhati" which means to just seize the loin cloth of a running ghost. When a man is running, you just catch the little langoti and you get satisfied. Although I am in the Select Committee, I do not know what will happen to my suggestions because the Honourable Dr. John Matthai is being advised by my Madrassi friend who was sitting in that corner (I can't name you Sir) to behave in a manner in which even John Bull did not dare behave. The Honourable Dr. John Matthai who is such a great philanthropist and who has been reputed to be generous, is being advised to realize his dues from the property which was sold in distress. I know, in my town there have been disturbances, and when Mohemmedans went away to Pakistan, it was only in rare cases that a few lucky ones could perhaps dispose of their property. In one of the clauses it is mentioned that the properties which had been transferred after the 14th August 1947 would be taxed. The Masters have gone; they have taken full money. Now you will not realize the balance from those who have sold off their property and gone to Pakistan. According to your proposal, you will be realising this money not from the man who has run away, but from the man who has already been rummaged, robbed and beaten on the way while he was coming here helter skelter, and from the one who could just managed to acquire some property. You are going to attach his property and realise the tax. It is unnatural and immoral to realise the tax from the property of those refugees who have come from the Punjab, out of the refugees who had little money, who had no protection, who are still in the roads. You are trying to realise the tax from those few of the refugees who could manage to bring some money and who purchased some property in India. And the tax not due on him but on the man whom you can't now apprehend. I therefore submit that the Bill must go to the Select Committee to be corrected. State must have the right to realise the tax from those who now come from Pakistan to sell away their properties, only if the demand pertains to past areas. We had already given them protection in the past, for which service they owe the tax to this State. Because of the peace and order we gave them without which they could not earn a taxable income. They must pay to the State when they come to exchange their property. The Bill must be there. I do not therefore, oppose the Bill in toto. But, to give it a retrospective effect, to those days of misery, is something which does, Dr. John Matthai, neither suit your old position, nor new. Please send the Bill to the Select Committee and be prepared to curtail it wherever our friends advise you to do so curtail that pernicious part and make the Bill look fair. I submit that the Bill must go to the Select Committee. We must get the best out of it. With these words, Sir, I resume my seat.

Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, if some of the honourable members register their protest against this Bill, it is certainly not because they want to help the tax dodgers; most certainly not. Every member of this House wants to help the Government to realise their just dues. The opposition is because, if some people are dodging the taxes, the hardships should not be made to fall on a large number of persons.

Sir, I come from Madras. Recently, I happened to be in Madura. I know of a number of cases where poor people were hard put to it. I know of an old lady who wanted a loan of Rs. 200 on the mortgage of her property in distant Ettayapuram. She engaged a lawyer, and the lawyer advised many things. A true copy had to be made out; the Assistant Inspecting Commissioner was not there; she was waiting for long; I do not know if she has got the Certificate now. There are many many cases of this sort. Therefore, it is only because of those difficulties that we wanted to mitigate the rigour of this measure. I have some suggestions and you Mr. Deputy Speaker, have made also some suggestions.

Why should it be made that every one who has to deal with property should get this clearance certificate? In Madras, there are fifty two million people and I think the assesses will be about 10,000 or somewhere there. In order that the Income-tax authorities may realise their dues, should every one of them be asked to get this certificate from distant places? In Ramnad, Madura and Tinnevely, three extensive areas, there is one Assistant Inspecting Commissioner. It would be well if the Honourable the Finance Minister has given us some figures as to the number of applications that are pending with the Commissioner. Therefore, I would suggest, there is no reason why it could not be done—a list of all the Income-tax assesses may be sent to the Registration officers so that whenever there is a document coming up for registration, he can refer to the list and register those documents if the names are not found in the list. Better still, I would suggest that the concerned Income-tax offices might send a list of arrears of income-tax assesses at the end of every month, to the Registration officers, so that, on a particular date, they may be able to know what are the arrears outstanding against a particular person. Any person, if his name is not found in the list of arrears, may get his document registered. All these things are possible.

I have given notice of an amendment which is much better still. I do not know why it should not be that the property of an assessee, other than agricultural property, should be made subject to the first charge for payment of taxes. That must be the simplest way. Instead of asking these poor people to run about the Income-tax officers for getting a clearance certificate, we may have a simple law by which all the properties, of course, other than agricultural property, are declared first charge for the payment of taxes. They are all matters, no doubt, for the Select Committee. But, what is most important is that all these instructions have not been complied with, I know that as a matter of fact. Therefore, these rigours ought to be mitigated as far as it is possible.

I see no reason why, Sir, this Bill should be made applicable to Madras. Obviously, the Bill is intended to cover cases where a person sells away property with the object of settling elsewhere. The ordinance in Madras was promulgated only very recently. I would like to know whether there was a single case brought to the notice of the Government—you referred to some cases in Coimbatore—where there was an attempt on the part of any one in Madras to sell away his property and run away to any other place. In the absence of any data to that effect, I feel there is no justification for introducing this rigorous piece of legislation to all the provinces. Therefore, Sir, I would very much like—though it is not so stated in this Bill, it is just possible because they have already introduced the ordinance, that the next day after the Bill is passed, they may extend it by a notification to Madras—to have an assurance from the Honourable the Finance Minister that this Bill will not be extended to a province where there is no need at all. If the real object of the Bill is only collection of revenue by the Income-tax authorities, I can understand that. The Central Board of Revenue must have thought, here is a very good thing; we can easily realise the amounts without much difficulty. Incidentally not realising the difficulties and hardships to which large numbers of millions of innocent people are put to, they have thought it handy to extend it to all provinces.

I hope all these suggestions will be considered by the Select Committee and the rigours of the Bill mitigated as far as possible so that non-assesses who constitute a very large number of people may not be put to these hardships of going to the Income-tax officers and spending lots of money for the certificate.

Sardar Hukam Singh (East Punjab: Sikh): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, at the outset, I must confess that I did not know that there was an ordinance to that effect. I can give that explanation because I was a refugee myself, I had no property and I had no occasion to come across such an ordinance. I can understand the opposition that is being offered to this Bill by honourable members who are not refugees; but I fail to understand the opposition coming from my refugee friends as well. Mr. Sidhva tried to make out a case, perhaps he has given the explanation that he owns no property.

Shri B. L. Sondhi: Now?

Shri R. K. Sidhva: No; never during my life time.

Sardar Hukam Singh: What I am submitting is that Mr. Sidhva said he had no property; I can understand opposition on other grounds also.

But the feelings of those of us who have some property in Pakistan are quite different. I was wondering rather (Interruption)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Let the honourable member proceed.

Sardar Hukam Singh:that the Government did not come up with such a Bill earlier because I did not know that the Ordinance was there. I have heard with rapt attention all the speeches that have been made on the floor of this House and what I have been able to grasp of the position is this. As I understand it, this legislation is born of retaliation. I admit that retaliation is very bad and reprehensible. We have explained to honourable members our feelings in the matter. My friend, Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari has just explained that India would try not to imitate Pakistan by not allowing the refugees who have come to India to return to that country. I would request my friend to realize what would be the situation if all those persons who have gone to Pakistan were to come back to this territory and we were not allowed to go back to our homes. We understand that a large number has returned and I could quote examples of Gurgaon and Ambala districts. There the refugees were given land and when the real owners returned they were turned out. Undoubtedly, retaliation is a bad thing but what are you going to do with the refugees if the traffic has to go on only in one way and all those persons come up here?

I can give you my own example. I have tried to sell my own property. Several agencies have been set up there and I can show you the written answers that I have received. There are no buyers. Our men cannot sell the property that they have left behind while the others are coming here and freely selling away their property without paying taxes that they owe to this Government. Naturally the Government loses the money that is legitimately due to them.

It was argued that if we go there we will not be able to sell the land. But the fact is that we are detained there and we are not allowed to leave until we pay up the taxes. I do not know whether any of my friends would come to my rescue and pay my taxes and release me from that place.

I admit this is a strong measure but it has worked so far. We have not been able to sell property and likewise the Pakistanis. It was applicable to other owners as well. But the real object has not yet been achieved. The Inter-Dominion agreement is that sales and exchanges will take place so that the object can be achieved after this agreement.

One of my friends has asked the Finance Minister to give him figures showing how this Ordinance has worked. But only those cases can be cited that are here shown as instances of hardship. The object is quite all right but we do not wish to bring in those citizens who are already residing here and who want to sell property. These defects can be remedied in the Select Committee. The rigours can be modified and the measure can be brought to such a state that it could be accepted by all members. But when we totally oppose this measure I fail to understand the object behind this opposition. As far as I can judge, I can only attribute this opposition to the fact that during this one year only the hardships have been noticeable. The real object could not be achieved as the property could not be transferred during that period.

So I appeal to the House to divorce this measure of its ills and hardships. It is a very necessary measure and it should be referred to a Select Committee so that it can emerge in a more popular form.

Srījūt Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri (Assam: General): Mr. Deputy Speaker; I am speaking rather in an apprehensive mood. There was a cat in this House just before the quorum bell rang and I am not certain which way the cat actually left the House. My friend, Mr. Kamath gave an assurance but the House very well knows what a risk it runs whenever it acts on such assurances. Being in that apprehensive mood, I hope, Sir, you will excuse me if I cannot accept the assurance which you so kindly gave during your speech as a Member of this House. You have assured us that this Bill will not affect a poor province like Assam or Orissa. I had gone to slumber on this assurance. Waking up I looked through the Bill and I found that there was nothing there to prevent the people of Assam being affected by the provisions of this Bill.

If I may disclose a personal matter, as an instance of being directly hit by this Bill, one of the Insurance Companies in which I am interested has purchased property from a respectable Muslim gentleman who has since migrated to Western Punjab. Now, who is going to be punished by this Bill? Will the gentleman who has sold all his belongings and gone to Western Punjab, be affected by the provisions of this Bill? When this Bill comes into operation, the officer concerned will refuse to register my name because that gentleman had been successful in dodging taxation and has left the province. Whom are you going to punish now and whom should you punish? By having this Bill in operation you will be punishing the people of this province—say Delhi. Some of these people are refugees and others have come here after having fled from their own places. With the generosity of their friends they might have been able to purchase a plot or two of land or a house. If you do not recognise these sales, whom are you going to punish? And after all, why should you stand in the way of those who out of well-grounded fear at the time sold their property and left the place? Why should you rake up past history and try to go about enquiring with the object of punishing those people.

It is a very bad precedent always to pass legislation and give it retrospective effect. Why all this year has been allowed to elapse before making the legislation? No sensible House would do it nor would go to the length of encouraging such a kind of legislation. This encourages idleness, it encourages want of foresight and it encourages a spirit of vindictiveness and it is always an accepted principle in the parliaments of civilised countries not to resort to any retrospective measure, unless there is a clear case of emergency. There is no question of a case of emergency now. No case of emergency there was in the year 1948 so far as the disposal of properties is concerned. Will it be within the scope of this Bill to make any invidious distinction or to make any amendment to say that this Bill will only apply to those people who had left India for certain reasons? It would not be within the scope of the Bill and it would look very invidious if we introduced such a provision in this Bill. When you are making legislation for Independent India, when we are going to claim practically the leadership of all the Asiatic nations should you set an example by making a legislation of this kind which seeks to rake the past and which seeks to make an invidious distinction between man and man. After all, the assurance which will be given by the Honourable the Finance Minister in the course of his reply might be a mere trap, a trap which all Finance Ministers always like to employ. He might assure the House and say whatever might be the straightforward meaning of this legislation he will administer it in such a way that it does not affect anyone badly. He may say so now but what will ultimately happen nobody knows. Would he be able to control the Income-tax Department? My honourable friend Mr. Tyagi cited his case. It seems to me that Mr. Tyagi has been a very fortunate man. He must have given a very heavy and substantial retainer fee to the Department so as to keep himself free from assessment for all time. Looking at it from every point of view

I respectfully submit to the House for their consideration whether it would be worth while to proceed further with this legislation. You want to catch only a particular kind of offenders through the Income-tax Department. Come forward in a straightforward manner. Tell the public that you want to punish a certain kind of people in a certain way. There might be an understanding between the dominions of India and Pakistan. We might be able to tell the Pakistan Government that these are the people who have dodged taxes from our dominion and let us say that they should get the taxes realised from them. Similarly we may agree or give an undertaking to the Pakistan Government that we shall take steps to realise the money due to the Pakistan Government from such persons as fled from that country without paying. Surely of all those inter-dominion agreements of which you boast, is it possible to give effect to this agreement? In the case of criminals who have fled from one dominion to the other both governments are bound to hand them over mutually. It is a matter of inter-dominion courtesy to hand over the offenders. Would you do that in the case of these income-tax dodgers? If you can do that why have this legislation which will only blacken your face? On account of the exigencies of circumstances our own men have been persuaded to purchase properties from those who have sold their properties and run away. Why should you punish them now? Why should you have this fatal legislation and expropriate property which was purchased after spending a good lot of money, which might be the entire capital of a man. I would therefore ask the Finance Minister to reconsider the whole question in the light of the observations I have made and also observations which others have made and see if it would not be wiser, more proper and more to the benefit of the people of India itself to stop this legislation at this stage.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Sir, the main issues involved in this Bill have been debated sufficiently and I do not think it is necessary for me to reply in detail to the criticisms which have been made, because I find, on the whole, that criticisms from one quarter have been answered by criticisms from other quarters. Generally I think the criticisms have cancelled one another out. If I may sum up the sense of the House, so far as I was able to judge it in the course of the discussion, I think the sense of the House is that there is a case for examining this Bill in some more detail and with greater care, that on the whole the case for examining it in detail is stronger than the case for dropping it. When I decided to come forward with this Bill I did so, because I myself had a feeling that there was a prima facie case, to put it at its lowest, for proceeding with this Bill.

My honourable friend Shri T. T. Krishnamachari said that at a certain stage during the session of the House last August there was an undertaking given by my predecessor, Mr. Neogy, that this Bill would be dropped altogether. Of course I was not in charge of the Bill at that time and so, I am not in a position to speak from firsthand knowledge. But as far as I have been able to gather the position was that there was a considerable body of opinion in this House that the Bill should be dropped altogether and on the basis of that opinion from certain sections of the House a representation was made to my colleague, Mr. Neogy, who was then in charge of the Ministry. What he felt was that on those representations which were made to him it was not wise to proceed with the Bill straightaway but that it was necessary to give the House a little more time for considering the provisions of the Bill. Government also felt that it was necessary that this matter should be examined by them further. When it was necessary that this matter should be examined by them further. When proceed with this Bill or not what we did was to sense the opinion of representative sections of the House and as far as I could judge I felt that opinion was in favour of proceeding with the Bill, not necessarily in the form in which it was introduced. Therefore I felt on the whole that the right course for me to take as minister in charge was not to drop the Bill but to give the House another opportunity of examining it and judging for itself whether it is worthwhile to proceed with it.

The motion before the House at present is a motion for referring to a Select Committee.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: On a point of order, may I appeal to the Chair if it is permissible for the Honourable Minister to mention here conversations which he has had with individuals or groups of individuals which are basically wrong, and a member of the House is not having an opportunity to contradict him.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I was not referring at all to the group of opinion that Mr. Krishnamachari consulted.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: I think, Sir, in decency the Honourable Minister must permit an explanation. There is no use his standing on dignity and saying 'I am not yielding'. I look to the Chair.

Shri Mahavir Tyagi: The Honourable Minister has not mentioned anybody's name. He has merely said that he consulted some persons. Why should Mr. Krishnamachari object to that?

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: The honourable member is not cognizant of all the facts.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Honourable Minister will yield or give room after concluding his speech.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: Where does the objection come so long as no names are mentioned?

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: When contradictions are made I think a member is perfectly entitled to an explanation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is open to the honourable member to yield or not to yield. But such a remark against an Honourable Minister is not right. It is better to wait till the end of his speech; it is also necessary sometimes to take directions from the Chair. (Interruption by Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari.) Order order. The honourable member will have an opportunity to speak, if necessary. Let us hear what the Honourable Minister has to say. First of all the Minister is responsible and he knows if it is necessary to yield. If he does not then it is time for the honourable member to appeal to the Chair and the Chair will intervene then.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I had not the slightest intention of creating an emotional scene like this. What I intended to say was that my honourable friend Mr. Krishnamachari in perfect good faith made the suggestion that owing to certain representations made by honourable members my predecessor, Mr. Neogy, agreed to drop the Bill altogether. If Government had agreed to drop the Bill then it was not open to me to bring the Bill up again and I therefore owed an explanation to the House why I decided to bring the Bill up. And my explanation is simply this that Government having ascertained, again quite informally, what opinion generally on this matter was, felt that there was a prima facie case for bringing the matter up before the House again and give the House another opportunity of expressing its views on it. That is all that I have done and personally I think it is the most democratic way of dealing with a question of this kind. But I am sorry.....

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I ask if there is any recorded statement that the Honourable Minister's predecessor gave an assurance to the House, or made a statement that he would not bring this Bill?

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy (Minister for Commerce): No such statement was made. May I seek your permission to say a few words by way of personal explanation? It was definitely represented to me while I held charge of the Finance portfolio that the consensus of opinion in this House was against the continuation of this measure. I was particularly influenced by certain letters which the Speaker himself had addressed to me on the subject and which are on the relevant file of the Ministry. I therefore decided that the best course was to drop the Bill. But unfortunately for me I did not record my decision on the relevant file. But in coming to that decision it was not my intention that the door should be for ever closed to the revival of this measure but that I felt that there was definitely ground for an enquiry into the practical operation of the Ordinance which was sought to be replaced by this Bill. But I, as the House knows, had to give up charge of the Finance portfolio shortly after that and I am afraid I am responsible for causing a good deal of misunderstanding, it seems, in the House on this particular point. I think I have sufficiently explained myself. I apologize once again to the House for not having taken any decisive action on that occasion which might have helped my colleague Dr. Matthai to appreciate the circumstances in which I agreed to drop the Bill on that occasion.

Shri Mahavir Tyagi: In the circumstances I would request you, Sir, to please permit Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari to have his say because now we understand that there has been something substantial—the coming to of some understanding or giving some undertaking.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: After the Minister concludes his speech Mr. Krishnamachari will have the opportunity to say a word by way of personal explanation.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: As far as I am concerned there is no need at all for anybody to apologize to me because I felt that the best way of dealing with a matter about which there was no final decision recorded in the proceedings of this House was to get the opinion of the House on the matter. That is my sole explanation for bringing the Bill up.

Now, Sir, it was pointed out that in explaining the scope and purposes of the Bill this morning I should have given the House a clearer statement of the actual manner in which the ordinances have worked. I failed to do that. I confess. I failed to do that for the reason that in regard to a measure the purpose of which is more preventive than positive it is very difficult to produce quantitative evidence. The main purpose of this Bill is preventive: it is not punitive or positive. Therefore, in the very nature of things it is difficult to produce evidence of a kind which would be tangible.

Reference has been made, I think by more than one speaker, to the hardship that certain provisions in this Bill have caused. In my introductory statement I said that having looked carefully through such reports as we have received I did not get that impression. Now I am prepared in the light of statements made in the course of the debate today, to alter my opinion. I would certainly look to the Select Committee to make such changes in the provisions of this Bill as would ensure that the Bill is not worked in a vindictive or in a retaliatory spirit but in such a manner that the main purpose of this Bill, which is to prevent loss of revenue, is adequately fulfilled—and nothing more.

I think my honourable friend Mr. Rohini Kumar Chaudhury said that when people propose to leave the country it is not altogether right that you should put in operation a measure of this kind against them. As a matter of fact a measure of this kind is not without precedent. There are other countries where to prevent the loss of revenue which is likely to arise from people leaving the country and disposing of their property before doing so, a measure more or less on these lines is on the statute book. From the public point of view I think it is a measure which we might well consider.

I do not think I ought to say anything more at present in view of the fact that a Select Committee will be considering the provisions of this Bill. And if the House so desires I am quite prepared to have the time for the submission of the report extended to a later date than the 4th as you have suggested. I hope the motion for reference to Select Committee will be accepted.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: May I ask for clarification that the principle and the Bill as such, both, will be open for discussion by the Select Committee? Otherwise, it will be really very difficult for the Select Committee first of all to accept the principle and afterwards to go into the clauses.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: The principle is quite clear, which is protection against loss of revenue from persons who are leaving for Pakistan. That is the only point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is open to the Select Committee to look into all the amendments, modify and also after doing that, recommend to the House, if it considers that the modifications are so many, and add a remark but it cannot itself throw out the Bill. The business of the Select Committee is to recommend to the House in the form in which it has been sent without absolutely modifying the principle but touching it here and there.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: But would it not be open to it to recommend that it be dropped altogether?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: I am very grateful to you for this opportunity, but I think my honourable friend Mr. Neogy has cleared the air. He has more or less explained the position as it was, with this difference that when we heard him agree to dropping the Bill we thought that he dropped the Bill for ever and I think it was clearly understood that the Ordinance was to run out and of course in regard to any subsequent legislation Government will not be estopped from bringing forward. So far as the modification of Mr. Neogy's statement made by the Honourable the Finance Minister is concerned, I will leave the House to draw its own conclusion, except only to make one remark that he has been drawing largely from his imagination.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable Dr. John Matthai, Shri T. T. Krishnamachari, Dr. Bakshi Tek Chand, Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharati, Shri K. Hanumanthaiya, Shri Jainarayan Vyas, Pandit Lakshmi Kanta Maitra, Shrimati Renuka Ray, Sardar Hukam Singh, Mr. Tajamul Hussain, Prof. N. G. Ranga, Shri B. Das, Shri B. L. Sondhi, Shri Deshbandu Gupta, Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, Shri Mahavir Tyagi and the Mover, with instructions to report on or before the 10th February, 1949, and that the number of persons whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee be five."

The motion was adopted.

INDIAN TARIFF (SECOND AMENDMENT) BILL

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy Minister for Commerce): Sir, I move:

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Tariff Act, 1934, be taken into consideration."

As mentioned in the Statement of Objects and Reasons of this Bill, this is designed to give effect to the tariff concessions that India has undertaken by signing the Protocol of Provisional Application to give to the other countries that are parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade that was negotiated at Geneva in 1947. There has been considerable publicity in regard to this Agreement and the various Governments of this country in office from time to time prior to the actual formulation of the Agreement had done their best to call into consultation informed, and in many cases, expert opinion available in this country. A fairly comprehensive Press Note was issued on the 18th of November, 1947, summarising the main concessions and exchanges involved in the negotiations at Geneva. On the 21st of May, 1948, the proposals of the Ministry of Commerce for the acceptance of this Agreement were placed before the Standing Advisory Committee of the Legislature for that Ministry and the Standing Advisory Committee agreed that the Ministry's proposals reproduced below were sound and acceptable to the Committee. I am reading from the proceedings of the Advisory Committee itself:-

"(1) That India's permanent representative to the United Nations be instructed to sign on behalf of India at the earliest practicable date the Protocol of Provisional Application of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade with the following reservations,—

(a) that the Government of India withhold their consent under Article 35 to the Agreement being applied as between India and South Africa if and when South Africa becomes a contracting party; and

(b) that the Government of India shall give effect to the agreed tariff concessions in respect of a few items in Schedule XII as soon as they have obtained the approval of their legislature.

(2) That on the expiry of 30 days from the date of signature of the Protocol a notification be issued under Section 23 of the Sea Customs Act giving effect to that part of Schedule XII which involves tariff reductions only.

(3) That steps be taken to obtain legislative approval to all the concessions referred to in Schedule XII at the next session of the legislature."

Now, Sir, a summary of these recommendations of the Advisory Committee was circulated to all the members of this House under the usual practice, and in due course these recommendations of the Standing Advisory Committee were placed before the Cabinet and the Cabinet, in agreement with the Standing Advisory Committee, instructed India's representative to sign the Protocol of Provisional Application.

Now, a word as to the necessity for early action in this matter would perhaps be due. I have already said that the Advisory Committee considered this matter on the 21st of May, 1948. Just about a week earlier or so, doubts began to be increasingly entertained as to whether the United States was going to extend the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act without which she would have found herself unable to grant tariff concessions to countries that had not joined the Agreement before the expiry of that Act in June of that year. Further, while certain parties to the Agreement like Australia unilaterally and without waiting for reciprocal reductions in tariff rates reduced their rates, certain others like the U. S. A. could not find it possible to do so and were withholding concessions which they had agreed to give to India until India was in a position to give concessions which she had promised in exchange to them. For these reasons, it became necessary to avoid delay and Government were placed in the position of having to authorise the signature of the Protocol of Provisional Application in anticipation of the approval of the House. But, as I have already said, the Standing Advisory Committee had authorised Government to take whatever action was possible under notification powers to reduce the tariffs as required under the Agreement and in regard to the rest where legislation was absolutely essential, no action could obviously be taken.

Now, during the last session of the Assembly it was our intention to place this measure for consideration before the House. As a matter of fact, it was included in the agenda of the last session, but unfortunately it was crowded out by other measures of greater importance. The Government took care, however, to circulate during the last session an elaborate memorandum explaining the provisions of the Agreement and all the implications that followed from the various provisions of that Agreement.

Sir, in view of the great importance which the House will attach to this Agreement, the Memorandum covers in great detail the background, the provisions of the Agreement and the actual tariff concessions involved and it has been circulated to the honourable members. In view of this, an elaborate speech from me in explanation of the various details involved in this measure may be unnecessary.

The General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade is in a sense closely related to the Charter for an International Trade Organisation the draft of which was discussed simultaneously with the Agreement at Geneva and again further discussed at a world Conference at Havana from November 1947 to March 1948. Nevertheless, the two documents are distinct and it is desirable to stress this point here to avoid discussions of the Charter provisions on economic development and reconstruction including the treatment of foreign capital which do not find a place in the Agreement.

Before dealing with the actual tariff negotiations, I shall attempt to summarise the main provisions of the Agreement itself, although this may not be strictly relevant to the actual Bill before the House which deals only with the tariff concessions.

The Agreement consists of three parts. Part I provides for the general 'most favoured nation treatment', the rates of duty being only one of the items involved in such treatment. Part II reproduces in substance the chief commercial provisions contained in the Charter for an International Trade Organisation which are essential to safeguard the value of the tariff concessions. And Part III deals with procedural and ancillary matters.

The nature of the provisions will be clear from a perusal of pages 26 to 33 of the Memorandum that has been circulated. In the discussions preceding the final formulation of the General Agreement if there is one point more than another that was discussed in the greatest detail, it was provision relating to what has come to be known as Quantitative Restriction or Q. R. for short. Experience during the inter-war period, of the use of this weapon by various countries has not led to the development of any faith in the wisdom of nations using this protective weapon with the discretion that is necessary. While, therefore, the more developed countries would have preferred the absolute elimination of Q. R., countries like India and others which are even less economically developed than India were naturally averse to the absolute elimination of this mechanism which they felt may become vital for their economic development. The provisions that have been included in the General Agreement in regard to this are, therefore, a compromise between these extreme views and Government are satisfied that taking the provisions of the Agreement as a whole, no particular harm would result to the economy of this country by accepting the provisions contained in the Agreement. In arriving at this conclusion, Government have naturally taken into account the special provisions relating to the difficulties in the balance of payments, critical shortage of foodstuffs and other necessities and also, comparatively speaking, the short duration of the Agreement itself from which, according to its present terms, a country can withdraw after the end of December 1950. It might be explained that the Agreement contemplates a preliminary stage when it will be only provisionally implemented and a later stage when it will be applied definitively. The Government of India have, as will be apparent from the definition of the General Agreement in Clause 2 of the Bill, signed the Protocol for the Provisional Application of the Agreement on the 8th of June 1948. In signing this Protocol, we have undertaken to apply provisionally Parts I and III of the General Agreement and Part II of the agreement to the fullest extent not inconsistent with the existing legislation. In actual practice, however, we can claim with pride that other relevant legislation in this country, such as the Sea Customs Act, is in such general consonance with acceptable international practice and ideals that even if we were to apply the Agreement definitively, hardly any change in our existing legislation would be required to fully comply with Part II of the Agreement.

As I have stated earlier, the Protocol for the Provisional Application of this Agreement was signed on the 8th of June 1948, and it has begun to apply to India a month after that date, i.e., from the 8th of July 1948. Technically, therefore, Government had to implement all the tariff reductions from that date, but in the absence of the Legislature being in session, they have only implemented their obligations to a limited extent and without final commitment (as the notifications are capable of cancellation) by the issue of a notification under section 23 of the Sea Customs Act under which the executive has power to lower the rates of duty leviable under the law for specified goods in specified circumstances. Where, however, the implementation of the Agreement could not appropriately be effected by the reduction of the existing rates of duty, as in cases where preferential margins had to be reduced, Government have so far not done anything until the recent promulgation of the Ordinance in November 1948 with reference to the inflationary situation in the country, when it suited our revenue purposes also. And the other countries, which are parties to the Agreement, have borne with us in the delay that they recognise, is inevitable in terms of the law of this land in the full implementation of our part of the Agreement. The necessity to get this legislation through without delay need, therefore, hardly be stressed. Much as I wished to get the House to consider this Bill at the last session, pressure of other business did not enable it to do so.

I will now proceed to deal with the actual tariff negotiations. Although the negotiations were ultimately to result in the generalisation of benefits on a multilateral basis, for practical convenience the negotiations were conducted on selected commodity by commodity basis with countries which happen to be the principal suppliers of the same. In selecting items for the grant of concessions to other countries and determining the nature of the concessions to be granted, the Indian Delegation was guided by three main principles: (1) concession should be such as are demonstrably in the interest of the national economy or are not injurious to the national economy; (2) concessions should not relate to products which are protected or in respect of which a claim to protection is likely to be made during the next three years; and (3) concessions should not result in an excessive loss of revenue. The commodities on which concessions have been granted, the countries with which such concessions were initially negotiated, and the concessions which we have received in return from those countries are all detailed in the Memorandum. The nature of the concessions is of three main kinds: (1) Reduction in the existing rates of duty, (2) Bindings against future increase of duty and (3) Reduction or elimination of the margins of preference which India has granted to other countries. The House will appreciate that the nature of these concessions is such as would, given increasing production in the participating countries result not only in the general increase in the volume of international trade, but also in the elimination of grouping of countries involved in the trade for reasons other than purely economic or commercial.

The principal commodities in respect of which concessions have been offered are food products such as butter, milk, fresh fruit, etc.; raw products like tallow, wool, zinc, lead, etc.; chemicals, machinery, motor cars and optical instruments, etc. In return for these, concessions have been obtained mainly on jute and jute manufactures, cashewnuts, shellac, sports goods, spices and condiments, tea, cotton manufactures, mica, coir matting, carpets, essential oils and tobacco.

I must here explain the manner in which the tariff concessions negotiated have been implemented. In those cases where a positive reduction in the rates of duty has been agreed upon, such duties whether standard or preferential have been substituted for the existing rates. In cases where, however, only a reduction in the margin has been negotiated, the reduction has been secured invariably by leaving the standard rate untouched and by raising to the required extent the preferential rate.

The scheme of the Bill is such that it is open to Government, should the General Agreement cease to apply to India for whatever reason, to alter the rates of duty resulting from this Bill in such a manner that they would be what would have been leviable had this Act not come into force. Also there is an absolute limit to the period of validity of the Act and none of the concessions accruing under this Bill will, without further specific legislation, be available beyond 31st March 1951. As I have mentioned earlier, the General Agreement is open to revision or termination after the end of December 1950. Taking an optimistic view, if the Agreement is continued, there may be difficulties in continuing the concessions without a break, as would be necessary, as the Legislature may not be in session in December. This is the reason why the period of validity of the concessions is not fixed as 1st January 1951. On the other hand, as I have mentioned earlier, if there is no need to extend the concessions beyond the 31st December 1950, Government could, if necessary, withdraw the concessions by executive notification.

I might in passing mention that, although the various figures are given in the memorandum circulated to honourable members, the countries signatory to the Agreement cover 70 per cent. of the world trade. I mention this only to emphasise that although certain important countries like Russia are not party to the Agreement, the scope of the Agreement from an international aspect is sufficiently wide.

Now looking at India's own international trade, it will be noticed that the value of the trade on which India has obtained concessions, i.e., on her exports, is of the order of 28.62 crores if we took the figures of the year 1938-39 and 49.78 crores if we took the figures of the year 1944-45 and 60.4 crores if we took the figures of the year 1945-46. As a matter of fact it was on the basis of the figures for the years 1938-39 and 1944-45 that the Agreement was concluded and we now find on the basis of the figures for the year 1944-45 that the volume of trade has considerably gone up as measured in rupees, and in return for this the value of the trade on which she has given concessions both direct and indirect are of the order of 8.44 crores in 1938-39, Rs. 15.82 crores in 1944-45 and Rs. 23.14 crores in 1945-46. I have mentioned these figures of actual trade. I would not, however take these figures as accurate beyond a degree as our trade statistics are by no means maintained in the requisite detail.

I might draw special attention to the fact that in piloting this Agreement special consideration has been paid to India, as it existed when the negotiations at Geneva first started in April 1947, and to Pakistan and India, as they now are. In fact when partition intervened, during the progress of negotiations, although the actual signatures to the Final Act were separately appended by the representatives of India and Pakistan, the original Indian Delegation deprived of those that might have become representatives of Pakistan, had to continue the negotiations on behalf both of India and Pakistan. In the hope and expectation that the relationship between India and Pakistan not only in politics, but more so in trade and commerce, would continue to be not only passively cordial, but enthusiastically co-operative, the other parties to the Agreement very readily agreed to the introduction of a special provision in paragraph 5 of Article XXIV of the Agreement which reads as follows:

"Taking into account the exceptional circumstances arising out of the establishment of India and Pakistan as independent states and recognising the fact that they have long constituted an economic unit the contracting parties agree that the provisions of this Agreement shall not prevent the two countries from entering into special arrangements with respect to the trade between them, pending the establishment of their mutual trade relations on a definitive basis."

I am not entirely without hope that these two countries may still take advantage of the vision with which the parties to the Agreement inserted this special provision.

Before concluding, I shall have to make special mention of a provision that did not originally exist in the text of the Agreement as authenticated at Geneva, but which was, with the unanimous approval of all other parties except the Union of South Africa, introduced at Havana at the first meeting of the contracting parties. Occasions arise in the relations between nations, as of individuals, when trade between the parties cannot subsist on any self-respecting basis. This provision reads as follows:

"1. Without prejudice to the provisions of paragraph 5(b) of Article XXV or to the obligations of a contracting party pursuant to paragraph 1 of Article XXIX, this Agreement, or alternatively Article II of this Agreement, shall not apply as between any contracting party and any other contracting party if:

- (a) the two contracting parties have not entered into tariff negotiations with each other, and
- (b) either of the contracting parties, at the time either become a contracting party, does not consent to such application.

2. The contracting parties may at any time before the Havana Charter enters into force, review the operation of this Article in particular cases at the request of any contracting party and make appropriate recommendations."

It is well known that for reasons entirely unconnected with trade or commerce, India has been forced by the attitude which South Africa has taken in regard to the Indian Settlers in that country, to cease trade relations with her. If this Article had not been introduced into the Agreement and if India had not signed the Protocol of Provisional Application subject to the reservation against South Africa in terms of this Article, it would be open to South Africa to accuse India before the contracting parties of violating the terms of the Agreement to which both were parties along with the others. India could not under any circumstances place herself in such a situation. In fact, part of the delay between October 30, 1947 when she authenticated the text of the Agreement at Geneva, and June 8, 1948 when she finally decided to sign the Protocol of Provisional Application is due to this lacuna in the text as finalised at Geneva. It was not as though this problem was not considered even then, but the parties had hoped that by the time the Agreement was ready for signature, the problem about Africa and India would have been satisfactorily solved, or in the alternative the two countries would agree on making special exceptions in each other's favour in the application of the Agreement. Neither of these alternatives finally materialised, but this is hardly the occasion when the reasons behind it need be discussed.

I believe I have dealt with all the salient points that I consider necessary to draw special attention to in this particular measure.

Before I sit down, I would only say that the time that has elapsed since the Bill was introduced and the alterations in some of the Customs duties that have been made, render it necessary to make a few minor modifications.

[Shri K. C. Neogy]

in this Bill. Formal amendments to secure these will be moved by me and I have already given notice of those amendments.

Shri B. K. Sidhva: (C.P. and Berar: General): May I put one question, Sir?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Not now. I will put the motion to the House. Motion moved:

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Tariff Act, 1934, be taken into consideration."

Shri R. K. Sidhva: Sir, the Honourable Minister stated that after the Agreement was signed, he had issued an executive order revising certain duties on certain articles. May I know what would be the loss to the State as a result of such reduction in the duty? May I also request him to explain, from the copy of the Agreement that has been circulated to members, page 5, the concessions received by India and the concessions given by India, and what benefit India has derived. Although the amount mentioned on the concessions receipt side is 66.39 lakhs, the concessions given is shown as 32.15 lakhs. I would like to have more elucidation on this matter, so that we may be able to express our views.

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy: I presume my honourable friend does not want me to reply to these questions straightaway.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the Honourable Minister will reply after the general debate is over.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: I wanted this information in order to facilitate the discussion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: He prefers to wait till the end.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: I would like to speak tomorrow, if you could postpone the general discussion. There are only fifteen minutes more. Certain information which I wanted is not available from the library.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Madras: General): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I thought our task would be made easier by the Honourable Minister himself giving us some relevant information. Evidently, he is anxious to wait until we finish.....

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy: Do you want the same information?

Prof. N. G. Ranga:our own criticisms before he could begin giving his answers.

Sir, so far as I can see, I think we have done very well in these negotiations. I had the opportunity.....

Shri Mahavir Tyagi (U.P.: General): Were you in the Delegation?

Prof. N. G. Ranga: No; I had the opportunity of being present in Geneva at the time when these negotiations were carried on. I can say how anxious our delegation was to drive a hard bargain with other nations. There was a time, there was a stage when our delegation was seriously considering whether it would be in our interests at all to put their signature to the Charter, the agreement that was being negotiated. In the end, they came to the conclusion that we had better sign it. But, why is it that they were hesitant: that is very important for us. They were hesitant because there were certain restrictions that were being placed upon all those countries which were to become parties to this agreement. One such is the Quantitative Restriction. In the inter-war period, certain countries led by Germany invented certain methods of safeguarding their own home industries: by licencing of imports, by controlling of exports, by resorting to the earlier method of barter, by negotiating bilateral agreements and in that way safeguarding their own national interests and forcing other countries to make concessions which they were otherwise not to make. In order to implement these restrictions, they saw to it that they could have two levels of prices, one domestic level of prices, and another an export level of prices. That means, while in the earlier stages there was no such restriction at all, and the domestic level of prices was expected to be on a par with the international price parity, Hitler and Nazi Germany introduced this new system of making this distinction between the two levels of prices. America and other countries were hard hit by this and they wanted to ensure that no such thing would be repeated again after the last world war. So, they wanted to make sure that other countries would agree not to resort to what are known as trade restriction methods. Was India to agree to this or not was the question that our delegation had to answer.

They knew that India was one of the least developed countries in the world and so, they were badly in need of giving protection to her own industries and would be unable to deal with America and other industrially highly developed countries in the same way as they would like. Therefore, they wanted to have the power impose these restrictions if and when they found them to be necessary. But, America was unwilling. America had the whip hand. That is exactly where I found myself in disagreement with the leader of the delegation at that time. I pleaded that we should be able to reserve our right to go back to our own country and consult our own legislature and thereafter alone to agree to put our signature with such modifications or conditions to the agreement as would be found necessary in the interests of our country by our own legislature. The American delegation insisted that if India wanted to be a Founder Member at all,—what is it, Founder Member or Foundation Member? (An Honourable Member: "Founder Member.") A Founder Member—and enjoy the privileges coming therefrom, India should affix her signature then and there alone. Supposing we did not affix our signature then and there alone, then, it would be open to America and her supporters who would join in that agreement and who would like to bring into existence the I.T.O., to impose whatever restrictions they wanted upon India when India sought this membership. This is the sort of whip hand which America has utilised not only in regard to this particular thing, but also in regard to, as is well known to this House or those members who were then present, in regard to the World Monetary Fund as well as the World Bank. Our Delegation had to balance the advantages and the disadvantages. They came to the conclusion that we should sign that agreement.

Why is it, even though I had known all these facts, I have come to the conclusion that we have done very well by this agreement? It is because I have found that the concessions we have made or we have had to make to other countries were, after all, not so substantial when compared to the concessions that they were making to us. Secondly, we are badly in need of more and more imports into our country, especially machinery, basic machinery, prime movers and other things for developing our own industrial system in this country. If we are to encourage those people to export these various essential commodities to our country, including machinery, certainly we should be willing to be more than generous to them. As we know today, all over the world, it is not a buyers' market; on the other hand, it is a sellers' market. It is necessary for us, within the short period of three or four years for which this agreement is to run, that we should try our best to encourage the sellers to be willing to place their goods at our disposal in preference to the other markets that are also competing for these goods. It is for these reasons, Sir, I thought that we have done well in having agreed to this agreement.

But, I would have liked the Honourable Minister to give us information in regard to some of these figures. He has now given figures up to 1945-46, both in regard to exports and imports of the commodities under discussion. Naturally, at that time, these figures related to the whole of India including Pakistan. What would be the position today if Pakistan's side of the figures were separated from these figures and statistics for India as we have her today are collected? Unless we are able to look at those figures, it would not be possible for us to know exactly how we stand today.

Secondly, Sir, in regard to these multi-lateral agreements and bi-lateral agreements, everything depends upon how and with what countries we have to deal. It is true that Soviet Russia is not a signatory to this agreement. I also agree that after all it does not very much matter if Soviet Russia is not a party to this because 70 per cent. of the total world trade comes within the purview of this agreement, and therefore we have quite a wide field in which we can manoeuvre; but even then what are the countries with which we have come to these agreements, in regard to whom we have to make these concessions, and from whom we have to get concessions? That is a very important matter. So far as America is concerned. I am afraid she does not figure so very largely either in our exports or in our imports so far as these commodities are concerned. I speak of course subject to correction, and unless we take care to develop our trade, both import and export, with the United States of America, I do not think really India is going to gain very much indeed in the near future at least during the period when this agreement continues to function, because as everyone knows, we are very badly in need of dollar exchange, and it is only America that can supply that facility.

Thirdly, I was at that time under the impression that Argentine was trying to drive a very hard bargain with us. I would like to know whether we have struck any sort of favourable agreement or bargain with Argentine and other countries which are also on very good terms with the United States of America and from whom we can get dollar exchange.

Lastly, it is important to know now that we are giving up the earlier preferences known as Imperial preferences, how this agreement squares with that? Are we under this agreement going to gain anything more than what we were supposed to be gaining by exporting tobacco and other things to England under the Imperial preferences? Unless a case is made out that we stand to gain much more under this agreement than what we were gaining under the earlier Imperial preferences so far as our own exports were concerned to England, it would not be possible in this House to congratulate this Government upon the details of the agreement that they have agreed to.

I am not quite sure whether I would be in keeping with the sense of the House if I say that I would have very much preferred that this Bill should have been referred to Select Committee instead of simply being placed before us in this fashion and ourselves being asked to agree to it without that much consideration being given to it as it really deserves.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari (Madras: General): It is rather a difficult matter at this stage to comment on what my honourable friend, Mr. Ranga has represented as being more or less a fait accompli. But I do think some good would undoubtedly come out of a discussion of some of the provisions of this agreement as the criticisms made thereon which would not merely focus public attention but also help the Government to ascertain the views of the Members of this House in regard to these provisions.

One handicap we have in this House—in regard to most of us at any rate—is the absence of intimate knowledge of the trade that comes into this country and that which goes out of the country. To a certain extent, I believe that our representatives in the Geneva and Havana Conferences were also labouring under the same limitation, a limitation which, my honourable friend,

Mr. K. C. Neogy has avowed as being ever present. Our statistics are wholly imperfect and for a large country like this it is very difficult for us to envisage the position of the trade that comes in and goes out over a period of years, with the state of our statistics as they are today. But undoubtedly, subject to the limitations under which they were operating, our representatives at Geneva and Havana have done their very best for this country. As my honourable friend, the mover of this motion has mentioned: what they have given away, by way of concessions they have given with very great care. Likewise, it was not quite easy for them to obtain as part of the reciprocal arrangement more than what other countries were willing to give.

One important limitation in this regard is that we are not primarily a manufacturing country and we are importing manufactured goods from other countries. We are only exporting raw materials and our position so far as having any monopoly in raw material is concerned is limited, and one that is getting progressively more and more limited. Added to the difficulties we are labouring as a result of the hang-over of the past. This country has been exploited by a foreign nation which came to trade and remained to rule, and practically until the twenty's of this century the whole fiscal policy of this country was such as to benefit the ruling country and not this country. That background persisted in that agreement conceding Imperial preferences that this country entered into in the early thirty's. In actual fact it does transpire that the preferences have not worked adversely to this country whatever our feelings with respect to the very idea of giving preferences to a country which has been ruling over us might have been.

The hang-over of the past always obtrudes into our vision in any consideration of the present, and it is therefore difficult for an independent sovereign Legislature to say "Let our Ministers and Secretaries make up their minds as to what is best for the country in these international conferences: if the arrangement is unsuitable we will revoke it; otherwise we will work it wholeheartedly." We are always feeling that all imports are wrong and that only export is right. Undoubtedly we have to export more only for the reason that we have to import more. My honourable friend the mover who wants to stimulate exports has to do it only for the reason that we have not merely to export capital goods but also foodgrains for a long time to come. Therefore once we get out of the idea that we are not a subject nation any longer it is easier to comprehend that no country can afford to be entirely self-sufficient, as has been amply demonstrated by the fact that this country needs food products from other countries and we can get reconciled to the idea of an international trade agreement more easily.

My honourable friend, Mr. Ranga says it would have been better if the Select Committee examined the provisions of this Bill. I have been trying to grapple with the various details not out of this Bill. Actually the numbering of the articles vary between that of the Geneva draft and that of the Havana Final Act. For one thing that causes confusion and any question of comparison between the conditions that are stated in the Bill before the House and as they are in the tariff Schedules is also not an easy matter, and the figures are such as will confuse any brain, and they have really confused mine to the state in which it is today!

Therefore, it seems to me that any appreciation of the agreement can only be in a very general way.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member can continue his speech tomorrow.

The Assembly then adjourned till a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock on Wednesday, the 2nd February, 1949.

CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY OF INDIA LEGISLATIVE DEBATES

(PART II—PROCEEDINGS OTHER THAN QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.)

Wednesday, 2nd February, 1949.

11-45 A.M.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock, Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

STATEMENT ON DISTURBANCES IN DURBAN, SOUTH AFRICA.

The Honourable Shri Jawaharlal Nehru (Leader of the House, Prime Minister and Minister for External Affairs and Commonwealth Relations): With the permission of the Chair, I should like to make a brief statement on the recent racial riots in Durban in South Africa. Honourable Members must have read the reports in newspapers of these tragic happenings. They must also have seen the two Press notes which Government have issued on the subject. I am placing copies of these notes on the table of the House.

The Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa has stated that the casualties were as follows:

Indians killed 53 and injured 768. Africans killed 83 and injured 1,085. Europeans killed 1 and injured 30.

The Secretary to the High Commissioner for India in the Union of South Africa who was at Cape Town at the time, went immediately to Durban on learning of the disturbances which were in fact continuing when he arrived there. He made some inquiry then and later returned to Cape Town. He paid a second visit to Durban from January 25th to 31st and visited most of the affected areas and refugee camps and had discussions with leaders of the Natal Indian Congress and the Natal Indian Organisation at Durban and Maritzburg, and also with the Natal Administrator, the Mayor of Durban and other officials and non-officials.

He has reported to us that there has been a considerable destruction of dwelling houses and shops owned by Indians. About 250 dwelling houses and 53 shops have been destroyed and according to a conservative estimate the damage to property is £ 300,000.

At one time about twenty thousand Indians were in refugee camps. The position on the 31st January was as follows:

About 300 Indian families numbering two thousand persons, whose homes were burnt down, are collected at seven Indian Schools which have been recognised as camps by the authorities. Reopening of these schools has been postponed by one week to February seventh and meanwhile other suitable temporary shelter is being sought as it will take some time to find permanent accommodation for them. Food is being supplied through the Municipal City store and camps are run efficiently with Indian Volunteer committees. Others have returned to what remains of their original homes. These consist of about 2,000 families numbering 15,000 persons. Besides these, 1,000 persons are sheltering in a former Cattle Shed at Cato Manor Sub-division. Indian volunteers are supplying food to these people pending their gradual return to homes. For those who have returned to their homes the authorities are considering the issue of kitchen equipment and mattress, as homes are only empty shells having been completely looted. Assistance with rations is being supplied by Indian voluntary efforts.

Although there is still tension, shops have opened again and Durban life is returning to normal.

The official Natal Relief Fund has so far received £ 14,000, mostly from Indian donations. This Fund has no Indian or African representative. Two committees have been formed to deal with the homeless and those whose homes were looted but not burnt. These committees have representatives of the Natal Indian Congress and Organisation. So far as the relief of Africans is concerned, this is the responsibility of the Native Affairs Department of the Municipality. About 1,200 Africans have also left their homes situated in certain areas.

The Government of the Union of South Africa has appointed an Inquiry Commission consisting of three persons, namely Mr. Justice F. P. Van Heever, Judge of Appeal Court, as Chairman and Mr. Ryle Masson, Chief Magistrate of Johannesburg and Mr. H. F. W. Schultz, Chief Magistrate of Durban, as Members. This Commission is expected to start work soon. The exact terms of reference have not yet been announced.

The Government of India are seriously exercised at this sudden deterioration in the relations between Indians and Africans in South Africa. It is obvious that so violent a rupture of peaceful relations could not have taken place because of a stray incident and there must have been other causes. As, however, the Commission of Inquiry appointed by the Union Government is expected to investigate the cause and course of the riots, Government prefer to withhold any comment on the origin and course of the disturbances.

In a message to the Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa, I expressed the hope that not only will the Commission of Inquiry ascertain the basic causes of the riots, but that steps will also be taken by the Union Government to prevent a repetition of such incidents in future. I added that we are instructing the Secretary to the Indian High Commissioner in South Africa to do whatever he can in promoting good relations between the Indians and other sections of the population in South Africa. To this message I have had a reply from Dr. Malan saying that he has noted our request to Mr. Chari and is placing at his disposal all available information.

The Government of India's policy, not only in South Africa but all over the Continent of Africa, has been to promote close friendship and co-operation between Indians and Africans. While earnestly desiring the security and wellbeing of Indians abroad, Government do not look with sympathy on the establishment of any vested interests which may retard the advancement of the African people in their own homelands. This view has been frequently communicated to our representatives in the Continent of Africa.

Government have placed Rs. 50,000 at the disposal of the Secretary to India's High Commissioner in South Africa for use of relief at his discretion, and further sums will be placed at his disposal as required. It has been made clear that relief should be given to all those who stand in need of it and should not be confined to the relief of any particular community.

PRESS NOTE

DATED 18TH JANUARY 1949

News of the rioting in Durban in South Africa with its loss of life and extensive damage to property has been received by the Government of India with great concern and has created deep anxiety throughout India. The Secretary to India's High Commissioner in South Africa has been instructed to visit Durban immediately and to submit a full report. It is clear that these happenings are of the gravest character and a heavy responsibility lies on those who are responsible for maintaining peace and order. The Government of India wish to assure Indians in South Africa that they are deeply concerned at this tragic development and will do all in their power to help them.

DATED 23RD JANUARY 1949.

In a recent press note the Government of India expressed their grave concern at the tragic happenings in Durban and its neighbourhood in South Africa. It is clear that without some basic causes such serious rioting could NOT have started and spread in such a short time. Various allegations have been made as to the causes and the course of the riots, but as the Union Government are appointing a Commission of Enquiry to investigate these, the Government of India withhold their opinion at this stage. Government regret, however, the serious deterioration of relations between the Indians and the Africans in South Africa. Government's policy has been and is to promote good relations between Indians and Africans NOT only in South Africa but all over the continent of Africa and they do NOT wish that any vested interests should come in the way of the advancement of the African people in their own homelands. The immediate task is the restoration of relations of mutual confidence and friendship between the two communities and the organisation of adequate relief to victims of the riots. The Government of India have placed a sum of Rs. 50,000 at the disposal of the Secretary to the High Commissioner for relief and have instructed him to co-operate with all others who may be engaged in this task. Further sums will be placed at his disposal as they are required.

Shri H. V. Kamath (C.P. and Berar: General): May I ask a question?

Mr. Speaker: No questions on the statement can be put now.

Shri H. V. Kamath: But yesterday questions were asked of the Honourable the Finance Minister after he had made a statement.

Mr. Speaker: Yesterday, instead of replying to certain questions put to him, the Honourable Minister said he would reply by way of explanatory statement.

INDIAN TARIFF (SECOND AMENDMENT) BILL

Mr. Speaker: The House will now proceed with the further consideration of the motion that the Bill further to amend the Indian Tariff Act, 1934 be taken into consideration.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari (Madras: General): Mr. Speaker, before the House arose yesterday I was drawing the attention of the House to the fact that in judging this measure before the House we should seek to free ourselves from the hang-over of the past.

If I am permitted, I would like to deal with some of the provisions of the Havana Agreement as a sequel to which this measure has been brought before the House. The House will recollect that during the war, notwithstanding the fact that the then Government had perpetrated many deeds which put this country into difficulties, they sought to steer clear of one particular pitfall, namely, they refused to become parties to the Lease Lend Agreement of the United States of America, which also meant subscribing to Article 7 of that Agreement. Article 7 of the Lease Lend Agreement is really the provocation for the Geneva and the Havana Conferences, because by reason of that Agreement, the United Kingdom and other countries who were the beneficiaries under that Agreement had to take steps to bring down the barriers that tariffs imposed by them on multi-lateral trade. It must be said to the credit of the then Government in India that they scrupulously avoided all indications of any participation in that Agreement, and although we were actually the beneficiaries under the lease-lend scheme and also contributed reciprocal aid to U.S.A. there was not even any exchange of notes which committed us in any manner. The House will understand that if the Government of India participated in the Geneva and Havana Conferences, they did so as free agents and not compelled by the force of circumstances resulting from any prior agreement that their predecessors were parties to. That makes our position in judging the agreement a little more easy than it would otherwise have been.

Another factor which I would like this House to note before either accepting or rejecting the agreement is that the object of the Havana Conference and its predecessor at Geneva was not merely to make multilateral trading activity easier but also to aim at a higher level of employment in the various participating countries as well as a higher level of economic status for the people of the participating countries. That has certainly put India in a better position in these conferences than it would otherwise be, for the reason that though we are not a manufacturing country—we are not a country which has really flourished in the past to any material extent under a barrier of tariffs—we are still a backward country and as such can take advantage of all the exceptions that have been provided in this particular charter.

Sir, the basis of the agreement is what is called the most-favoured nation treatment clause, which has a very long history in commercial treaties. Actually I understand that the first time when this type of clause was mentioned was in commercial treaties between the Mediterranean cities in the 12th or 13th Century and the Arab Princes of North Africa, with whom those City States were in trading relationship. Since then the connotation of this clause has fluctuated considerably and its introduction in this particular agreement makes it extremely wide rather than limited, for the most-favoured nation treatment is going to be extended to 35 nations and one can very well understand that it has to be watered down to a very considerable extent when applied so to say in the mass. If it also means that when other countries come into the agreement later on by whatever manner that has been permitted to them, the connotation of the clause will, to that extent, also become more general and the effect of it would no longer be a particularly special relationship as between one country and another but one that has a more or less generalised significance.

My honourable friend Mr. Neogy very rightly pointed out that not merely existing conditions as between India and other countries have been safeguarded but we have also been safeguarded in regard to the special relationship that subsists between Pakistan and ourselves, though such special exceptions are more or less of a universal character, because there are similar exceptions in the Charter in regard to the United States and other countries as well. But Sir, I would like to point out one particular aspect of this charter to my friends who now feel that Imperial Preference is a thing which should be done away with as quickly as possible. Actually this Charter indirectly limits the extent of the preference that we are giving.....

Shri B. Das (Orissa: General): The charter of Imperial Preference continues.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: I do not know what my friend means. However, it is not very pertinent to what I have to say. The Bill before the House is the result of an agreement which is more or less covered by the Charter and therefore my reference to the Charter is perfectly right. What I was proceeding to say was this. In effect the quantum of imperial preference that has been conceded is being reduced as a result of this agreement. For one thing we cannot give any new preferences. Secondly, by the various adjustments there has been a substantial reduction in the quantum of preference that has been given in the past. An examination will reveal that the objective that we have in view, viz., doing away with Imperial Preference at some stage or other, has been begun and that one particular stage in this process has been reached if we agree to the motion before the House.

My honourable friend Mr. Neogy quite correctly pointed out that we have some kind of freedom so far as internal taxation is concerned and the only thing is that if we raise the internal taxes then we can also pro rata raise our duties. But there has been, I believe, some kind of discussion on this particular aspect in a negotiation between this country and Pakistan recently, namely how far this international agreement and the fact of our being signatories to it and Pakistan also being signatories likewise to it would entitle the latter to ask for a refund of internal taxation that has been levied on goods the exchange of which form part of the agreement between Pakistan and India. I do not know what ultimately would happen but it seems to me that even there we have a perfect right to deny the privileges claimed unless we feel inclined to grant them to any country which wants the benefit of exemption from the scope of the levy of internal taxation so far as the goods exported to that country are concerned.

The crux of the point is really this: that though actually there has been reduction in the matter of duty in certain respects (5 per cent. in most cases and 10 per cent. in a few) this reduction is coming on the top of what we might well consider a period during which our import duties have reached the peak. I do not think it is going to be possible for this country or for that matter for any other country, with deflationary conditions in the offing, with consumption propensity definitely dropping, as we see even now (though it may seem a paradox that propensity to consume should drop at a time when the country is still in the full grip of inflation) to raise to any appreciable extent our import duties; it is a fact that the duties that have been imposed by this country have more or less reached the peak and there will be no justification for a general increase in duties without adequate and careful examination.

Therefore any small reduction of five or ten per cent. in the standard rate of duty will not affect the revenue position very much and we are not really giving away a great deal by way of concessions. But that is not all. The real point is that the balance of payment position of this country being extremely nebulous, with our being so short of dollars and foreign currency, we are permitted to so arrange our foreign trade in such a manner that some kind of control or some kind of shutting out of goods becomes inevitable. This is true of most countries. It can be said therefore, without fear of contradiction that if this agreement should rise to its full stature it must take many many more years before the various countries can adjust themselves and shape their economy to suit the terms of this agreement. For the time being, not only India but many other countries besides must take advantage of these exceptions and continue the existing state of things in the matter of tariffs or other restrictions and perhaps impose certain additional duties without seriously infringing any provisions of this Charter.

There is one point on which I think there may be room for some amount of criticism and that is with regard to our ability to impose Quantitative Restrictions on the goods that come into this country. It may be that we will not do it ad hoc straightaway without any particular reference to what has been happening in the past. But it must also be conceded that it is a whole-some principle if it is accepted by other countries in the world as well that they will not use quantitative limitation on import of goods or export of goods without any reference to the country's economy as a whole, a type of restriction which will inevitably tend to favouring certain local interests to the detriment of the interests of the large mass of people. My own view has been that we should not allow our import restrictions or the granting of import licences to operate as a sort of protective wall, which might be done for a time but not for all time. So long as we have a body for examining whether a particular industry deserves protection or not, we should allow that body to decide the matter rather than use any indirect method of giving protection to the more clamorous amongst our industries. Therefore any universal application of a ban against quantitative limitation of goods coming in will have to be welcomed but even here I think the interim or special conditions that exist in this country will according to the Havana Charter allow some kind of limitation so long as there is no undue discrimination.

I now come to the end of my remarks on the motion before the House but I would like to say before closing that this agreement imposes one very great responsibility on this government. I do feel grateful to the Honourable the Mover of the Bill who has accepted openly the imperfect state of our statistics. The operation of this agreement either adversely or to our benefit will largely depend upon how we are able to watch the trends of trade as and when they develop and for this purpose I think we have got a governmental organisation here which is singularly inadequate. It must also be said that even private trading in the country is so ill developed that we can hardly get any statistics from private importers or exporters. People are only interested in getting goods and in selling them for profit, and there is no idea even in big firms of organising the business in a proper way and maintaining some figures about their transactions also of fitting into the general scheme of imports and exports in the country. The Government will do well to set up an example and build up a strong statistical organisation. There is no use the Government thinking of exhuming somebody who has been noted to have some kind of proclivities in making up some kind of statistics in the past or who has been a pioneer in the field. The effort of decrepit out of date people will not help this Government to build up a decent statistical organisation. I would like to make this clear that the ill effects of any such Agreement on this country will result in our inability to size up the movement of goods into the country and out of it all the time and to take remedial action when necessary because of the want of adequate statistical information. Actually this Agreement provides enough room for backward countries like ourselves to seek protection of the organisation, should it be necessary. But that may not come for some time to come. At the same time we have to be alert. The main obligation on the Government by accepting an Agreement of this sort and placing it on the statute book by means of this legislation is that they should build up a strong statistical organisation that will keep track of all trade movements both to and fro. That mainly is what I wanted to say. I would also like to assure my honourable friends in the House not to entertain any serious doubts about this particular measure: there is nothing very seriously wrong about it and it can be given a trial. There is always the saving clause—the clause which has been altered in the Havana conference—that enables us, by giving six months notice and to get out of the whole business, should it operate adversely on us. But I do not think, with all the exemptions that have been allowed for backward countries with all the facilities provided for maintaining existing trade relationship for the maintenance of existing agreements and for making such adjustment as are necessary to meet the overall factor of the balance of payments, that we would be unduly oppressed by being parties to the Agreement. It might only result in some good. No harm will result out of this if the Government is sufficiently watchful and if they have an organisation to watch the working of the Agreement. Sir, I support the motion before the House.

Shri R. K. Sidhva (C.P. and Berar: General): Sir, under article 17 of the Havana Charter of the I.T.O. it is stated that Tariff duties should be on a reciprocal basis. I share that view, but I do not agree with my friend Mr. Krishnamachari that the loss in revenue by means of import duty on account of the concessions granted by us would be negligible. He is not in a position to give the figures; nor am I in a position to do so. But yesterday I had requested the Honourable Mover to let me know to what extent our revenue would suffer in the import duty by such concessions. We have undoubtedly given concessions as shown on page 5 of this Memorandum of General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. It says that the concessions received by India in 1945-46 were Rs. 66,39,000 and odd whereas the concessions given by India were Rs. 32,43,000. Comparatively it certainly looks as if we are in a favourable position. But the point is how much we have lost in our revenue. That is a pertinent point which has to be considered but which in the whole report of 50 pages is not forthcoming. I would have preferred the Government to have given us some idea of this matter. It is stated that for our export trade we ought to give better concession as we are industrially very backward. I accept that proposition, but there are certain articles of export in respect of which foreign countries cannot do without importing those articles from India. Take mica, jute, chilly or spices. These are essential articles which, even if we do not make some concession in the duties, foreign countries which are industrially advanced have to import from this country. Having made concessions in the export to these countries I do not know whether we have in any way increased our export trade. If we go into the statistics of import and export and customs revenue it will be found that for the last nearly three decades the export of the articles which I have mentioned has always been on the increase even without this kind of concession being given. Because we want to increase our export trade, which I do admit we should for balancing our trade, we must not forget that there are certain articles in respect of which the foreign countries have to depend upon imports from India. So much Indian piecegoods have gone to Australia; 64 per cent. of cotton piecegoods has been exported to Australia, apart from certain quantity having gone to Africa. Africa I am not mentioning because it is not in the picture. I do not know what the Honourable Minister has to state on this point whether it was considered during the discussions at Geneva or at Havana where the Agreement was signed.

There is another factor. Import duties have been reduced, and my honourable friend Mr. Krishnamachari said that they have been reduced by 5 per cent. and sometimes by 10 per cent. But it is a high figure if you take the figures. For instance, in respect of Ham and Bacon a very large quantity of which comes from the Netherlands, the duty had been 30 per cent. ad valorem, and now it has been reduced to 25 per cent. In regard to Ham and Bacon, surely if it has to come it has to come, and if comes. There was no justification for the loss of revenue by decreasing the customs duty on such articles. If you take Butter, Ghee and Cheese these are imported in very large quantities. At the same time you know that butter is manufactured in India to a very large extent. On that also variation has been made and the duty has been reduced from 25 per cent. to 20 per cent. My point was this, namely, that I do not know whether our industry has been taken into consideration while we are giving concession for foreign trade.

[Shri R. K. Sidhva]

There is a big market for provisions in India—vegetables, fruits. Fruits are actually tinned now in India. In Simla there is a large factory, so also in Bombay and in Calcutta, for canned foods. The quantity of these articles which are being imported is being reduced on account of our own manufacture. And on that article I find a reduction of 5 per cent. duty. I would like to know whether Government have taken into consideration whether our industry would be affected by this preferential treatment.

If you refer to page 7 of the Bill, there is item No. 22 "Wines". At present the revenue duty on wines which contain a particular percentage of alcohol is Rs. 10/11 per gallon and on other sorts of wines Rs. 11. We have agreed to reduce this to Rs. 16/8 against Rs. 19/11 and Rs. 9/8 against Rs. 11/4. I do not know on this question of wines whether we have a policy. Yesterday there were questions whether Government would consider levying a larger import duty so that we may avoid even importing of wines in large quantities. Today we find a concession has been given by way of decrease of the import duty. I do not know how on this matter our Minister has yielded. We should have stated strongly, on the contrary, that we want to impose a higher duty in order to do away with this obnoxious drink. We should have stated that we would levy 25 per cent. duty more rather than reduce it by 25 per cent. I do not know what will be the total amount of revenue that we would be losing by this concession. I am not mentioning many other such spirits. There are a large number of items under this "Wine"—spirits which contain alcohol—and we have given concession in respect of all of them. I want to draw the attention of the Honourable Minister to the fact that if this agreement is a settled fact he must bear in mind that as he stated yesterday, within sixty days we should give notice on this matter and re-open the agreement in its own terms, and not necessarily wait till the 1951 period, which is supposed to be the termination of the agreement.

Then, Sir, I find that even in respect of cod liver oil which is now manufactured in India—there are many factories—concession has been given. I could point out a series of articles here in which we have made very fine concessions, but I do not know how India has benefited from them. I want to know from the Honourable Minister whether he is going to prove that in regard to jute, mica, spices, groundnut, seeds, ginger and other articles there has been an increase in exportation as compared with other goods between now and the time before the agreement came into force. We must have some statistics.

France has had a concession of Rs. 34.50 lakhs, again on the question of spirit which is consumed in the manufacture of perfumery. In respect of perfumery and toilet requisites which come from France we have given a very good concession. But as you know, toilet requisites and perfumery are being manufactured in this country on a large scale, and if facilities were provided to this industry, automatically their import would stop. There are first-class factories today which can compete with any kind of soap or toilet requisite which is being imported and compete with France which is known for the best perfumery in the whole world. If facilities were forthcoming, that would be possible; on the contrary, concessions have been given for their import, with the result that I do not know how far the soap and toilet industry would be affected.

Again, Sir, I find from this report that we have given a preferential rate of duty to articles manufactured in U.K. and British Colonies. I have not been able to find any information in this Agreement as far as import and export to and from the United Kingdom is concerned. Probably there is a separate agreement covering that, but I want to know the reasons why this preferential duty is given to U.K. and British Colonies. I find on several articles the duty has been reduced, the percentage varying from 10 to 15. What are the reciprocal advantages that India has gained? As we know, the preference that was given was the subject matter of great criticism. I am referring to the very well known Ottawa Agreement. I want to know whether that continues still, and if it continues, what are the reasons for its continuance. The House would like to be enlightened on this matter.

Then, there is a duty of ten per cent. less on ribbons. I do not know what these "ribbons" are. If they are typewriter ribbons, then I might say that there are in Calcutta and Bombay factories manufacturing typewriter ribbons which are self-supporting. But if they are ribbons of haberdashery, for the wearing apparel, then I have nothing to say, although even these ribbons,—laces—are manufactured in Ludhiana in large quantities. The item merely says "ribbons" and ribbons are of many kinds. I would like to know whether it is really our own industry of type-writer ribbons and why he has given a concession of five per cent. on this duty.

The very report which I had mentioned about the advantages given to France says, "items on which concessions have been granted by direct negotiations with France are champagne and other wines, bitters, perfumed spirits, rum, chemical drugs and medicine...." so that except on chemical drugs and medicines the duties have been reduced. Thus on drugs and medicines which we wanted they have not allowed the duty to be reduced whereas the other articles which we do not want and which we want to prohibit, in respect of them the duty has been considerably reduced. I do not know whether the Honourable Minister has studied this report page by page. He was not in charge of this agreement when this delegation was led, so that I do not know if he has made an exhaustive study of this report before he made the exhaustive speech that he read. The House would like to be enlightened on the discrepancies that I have pointed out.

I would also submit that the Honourable Minister should give us an assurance that this kind of excuse at all times that the House cannot be consulted, that there is no time to take the House into confidence and so on will not be put forward. That kind of excuse will not stand good a moment any further. We are here responsible, as they are responsible. The Honourable Ministers have been telling us that we are part and parcel of the Government. If they really mean it they must consult us. But what happens is that they ask us to be responsible, and at the same time do not consult us. Of course when it suits them, they consult us. I feel that in this case when the agreement expires in December, 1951, and before any new Agreement is negotiated, they should consult the House. If they had done so in this case, they would not have granted concessions in regard to some of the items mentioned by me. The Ministers are guided by Secretaries. They are not supposed to know everything. We are three hundred here holding a variety of views on all matters. If we had an opportunity we would have expressed our views on these matters. Though the Government accepts our views or not, we should have an opportunity to express them, before they decide one way or another. With these words, I support the motion, as I have no alternative.

Shri B. Das: I wish I was half as sanguine as my honourable friend Prof. Ranga and Shri T. T. Krishnamachari in support of this measure. I understand that Prof. Ranga had the advantage of being present at Geneva at an early stage of the negotiations for this Agreement. As for Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari he has developed an international mind and naturally he thinks from that angle. Sir, anything connected with the UNO or the United Nations causes forebodings within me. I have come to that conclusion and I expect that the House too will sooner or later come to that same conclusion that the United Nations Organisation is a farce and no dignity, no honour and no status is to be associated with it. That Organisation has had very little say in larger issues and at an early stage of its existence it caught India in its net. India was represented at Havana and at Geneva. Before I accept my friend Mr. Krishnamachari's verdict in regard to the five per cent. reduction in certain items of revenue, I must know the repercussions of this Agreement from my honourable friend the Finance Minister.

Sir, as a critic on public finance I have always wanted that the Government of India should derive much more revenue from spirits and wine and cigars and cigarettes. As pointed out by my honourable friend Mr. Sidhwa, it is most unfortunate that the duties on these items have been reduced. I am sorry that this little reserve pocket money in the hands of the Finance Minister has been taken away from him in the name of the UNO through this multilateral agreement. Not to touch cigars and cigarettes for revenue purposes was the policy of the old Imperialist masters of India before we attained Independence. That policy was intended to benefit the British manufacturers of those articles. Now, when we got freedom to examine this question, our delegates went to Havana and to Geneva and committed themselves to an agreement from which we cannot extricate ourselves. We have either to accept the whole agreement or not. I wish there were ways, as my friend Mr. Sidhwa suggested, of repudiating certain items in the agreement. Unfortunately there is no way to do that.

My honourable friend Shri T. T. Krishnamachari and Mr. Sidhwa both referred to Imperial preferences. To me it is an irony and a tragic fate that I should be discussing, even after achieving independence, multilateral trade agreements and the like as if we are still in bondage to the former British Empire. That British Empire is dead and yet, in the new draft agreement, we find preferences to British Colonies and the United Kingdom. I quite see that the Independence Act of 1947 authorises, in clause 22, that a trade agreement should be negotiated at an early stage. Why is it that my Government is silent over it? Why have they not yet begun the discussion of such a treaty? They take pity for them and do not discuss it. Thus you condemn us to the bondage of the United Kingdom and to Imperial preference. I hardly thought it likely that Imperial preference would again be mentioned in this House. Sir, to me there is no necessity of our entering into this multilateral trade agreement as we will soon see, when the Honourable the Finance Minister speaks now or on 28th of this month, that this multilateral trade agreement has ended disastrously to the poor finances of India.

Sir, I cannot think freely while my rupee is tied to the sterling at 18 pence. My Government have not seen fit to discuss the ratio question and I am tied down to the chariot-wheel of sterling, while I talk like a free man.

Another thing to which I should now refer is that the 600 million sterling debt due to India has been frozen by the United Kingdom. Call it what you like. How can I feel free when my 600 million sterling is in other hands and it is open to the free-booters, the looters—the Britishers to say that we cannot touch it. Sir, I read in the newspapers that a British Treasury Delegation is negotiating with our Finance Ministry over the sterling balance. I do not anticipate the results, but as long as the slave mentality persists, call it Commonwealth mentality or Dominion mentality—India will have no freedom of thought and India will not demand, even in her very bad financial condition, that this sum of 600 million sterling should be returned to us. Sir, with all these handicaps how can I have a multilateral trade agreement over which my friends Messrs. Krishnamachari and Ranga waxed eloquent?

I wish that the House does not pass this Bill. The passing of this bill envisages that upto December 1950 Imperial Preference in one name or other must continue. Is that the intention of the Congress? Is that the intention of every member of this House that upto December 1950 Imperial Preference cannot be terminated? Sir, questions have been asked many times about this. Our Cabinet and our Ministers have been silent all the time on that most demoralising issue—the Imperial Preference. England is dead. By that Imperial Preference it had been reducing us to slavery. I do hope my honourable friend Mr. K. C. Neogy than whom I recognize no better authority on the tariff policy of India and who denounced from this side of the House the Ottawa Trade Agreement in 1931 to make it clear as to what is the view of the Government of India on this question of Imperial Preference. The question of balancing budget does not occur when by this Trade Agreement you are giving away probably a crore or two. What will be the result of this, let the statisticians of the Finance Ministry say. Some people wax eloquent about our international position. We are exploited at every stage by every foreigner. I wish to know how our delegates—at that time there was no conception of Commonwealth relations or the new idea of Commonwealth that we are trying to envisage in our minds recently in the last couple of months—agreed to this. Did they envisage a pocket combined of Commonwealth nations within the bigger United Nations—a group trade agreement within this multilateral trade agreement whereby the Commonwealth Nations—barring of course South Africa, must enjoy special benefits—not so much for the benefit of India and not at all for the benefit of India but deliberately for the benefit of the British traders, merchants and capitalists that had built up the Commonwealth Empire or the former British Empire. That state of things is intolerable.

I do hope before other speakers rise, the Finance Minister will give us some idea as to the effect of this agreement. I am not happy as I have already said. I wish Government spokesmen should clearly state whether if the U.K. Trade Agreement is signed say by the middle of 1949, India can do away with the Imperial Preferences that colonial countries and the various Dominions of the former British Empire are enjoying at the cost of India.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): While I agree that hitherto the two wars that waged and engulfed the whole world were wars on account of economic difficulties and economic rivalries, I am not very happy about the manner in which we have approached this problem. We must review the economic position of India after the 15th August 1947 when the partition of India took place. Before that it was in the interest of the British who were our rulers to continuously keep us as producers of raw materials for their industries abroad but after the partition even that privilege has disappeared. The monopolies we had in oilseeds, hides and skins, cotton to some extent, have practically disappeared because they have become the products of and continue to be the products of Pakistan—that portion which was an integral part of India. Jute is grown in East Bengal and cotton which we require—the long-staple cotton—was being produced in Punjab. Hides and Skins which we were exporting, skins to America and hides to European Continent, are to come from West Pakistan. Now therefore we have lost the whip hand and we have only the oilseeds and oil-seeds are being produced by large concerns and corporations in South Africa. Brazil has also entered the list of competitors and Argentine also. Thus our favourable balance of trade that we were enjoying for over 50 years before the war has dwindled and today with some of the most important countries our trade balance is adverse. In addition on account of seasonal conditions which have persisted to be adverse to us during the past five years, we have been put to the necessity of drawing up on our accumulated resources for purchase of essentials like foodgrains. We are spending about 150 and odd crores on that and so let us therefore study the situation closely. Are we in a position to have any monopoly in raw materials which we can produce and dictate terms to the rest of the world? Are we industrially advanced even to make this country self-sufficient, though we may not earn in a foreign export so that at least we may not be forced to the necessity of importing our requirements? Who are the people that can at least stop the drain of 150 and odd crores spent for food grains. There are our neighbours like Burma, Indonesia, Ceylon and the rest of those countries in the Pacific and we can easily sell our products from our mills and also from our handloom products to the West, the Mid-East and to Pakistan, Burma and other countries in the East. We have for instance entered into various arrangements with some parts of Asia to whom we can supply whatever we can produce. But we have no capital goods and we have not started many industries. So we should first address ourselves to this question. I find, Sir, that none of these countries except Burma and Ceylon have entered as parties to this agreement. Australia cannot be considered as an Asiatic country. This is the reason why we attended the ECAFE meetings both at Ooty and Australia and there we found that the Western Countries on whom hitherto we were banking for support and particularly the U.S.A. and U.K. that when we were face to face, we found they expressed that we must produce a Marshall or Nehru plan to help India and Asia. Therefore it is useless to depend on foreign countries and America particularly to supply us any of these materials.

I have not much hope that even this International Bank proposal will help us to put us up industrially. They are all more anxious to develop our raw materials for the purpose of their exporting them to foreign countries, they are not anxious to advance us industrially. There does not appear to be any hope of our industrial advancement unless there is free flow of capital goods into our country. And so far as agriculture is concerned, we have not been able to make India self-sufficient even in the matter of cereals and foodgrains and cloth. Therefore, the prospect does not appear to be very cheerful. It is definitely gloomy. In these conditions, how far are any of these agreements going to be helpful to us? The object of the agreement, as it is stated in the Preamble, is to increase the wealth of the countries, raising the standard of living, ensuring full employment, to have a steadily increasing volume of real income, development of full resources of the world, etc. Sir, these are closely allied to the International Trade Charter now in the course of formation. We have already got a draft of that Charter. It started from America saying that there should be freedom for all countries in the world to have access to raw products. That was the first item. When it came to England, it said that in addition to that, there must be full employment to all persons within a State and we should not interfere with that aspect of any particular nation's life. But nowhere in the Charter, till to-day is it stated that capital goods as much as raw products should be available to all countries. Capital goods, at the present time, thanks to the researches that are being conducted, have become the monopoly of America, and to some extent, of England, after the fall of Germany and Japan. But there is no provision in the Charter that whichever country is undeveloped industrially, should get a free flow of capital goods. Just as the other countries which are industrially advanced are expected to have raw products from other countries.

This, Sir, is an ancillary agreement on the lines of the Ottawa Agreement. It is an enlarged Ottawa Agreement. The Ottawa Agreement was restricted to countries within the British Commonwealth, but this one is a bigger Ottawa agreement, excluding the Asiatic countries, though it is a fact that Asiatic countries alone can supply us for a long time to come what we so badly want.

Now, if we have the monopoly in any particular product, then we need not bargain with any other country. But we have no monopoly. What can we export? We cannot export even jute, because jute you have to buy from Pakistan. All the rest you are sending to America and as there is nothing in a large quantity which you can send, therefore, you have an adverse trade balance. (Prof. N. G. Ranga: "What about tea?") You may know that Brazil is manufacturing tea and in course of time, we may have to drink our own tea, and we will have to drown ourselves in our tea. (Prof. N. G. Ranga: "What is your inference? Have we become bankrupt?") I only want you to recognise that we are bankrupt. I am not trying to create an alarm. Nor do I say that with so many millions of our population, with such a fertile land, and with so many large rivers, we cannot do anything. We have got everything in our land. But we have to develop them on the proper lines, and not rush to foreign countries for help. I do not believe we can get help from America or England for the industrialisation of our country immediately. The only way in which you can make our country self-sufficient in food and cloth is by cottage industries. If every one of us were to take to spinning, we would be able to clothe the rest of the world even. But we do not do that. Our mills will not produce what we want, they will not let others also to produce. We started as socialists and we have become (Mr. Homi Modi: "Capitalists.") There is no escaping from the fact that if you want to check communism in this country, you must take the wind from their sails. I would like to confine my friend Mr. Modi to this bench. He has grievously failed in the attempt to clothe the country. He wants to sit on the top of a hundred-storey building in America, leaving the country to desolation and pestilence.

Now, let us see what we are trying to get. We have come to the stage of getting even powdered milk. Can we not produce milk in our country? What are the concessions that we are getting? There are three classes of goods. Some of the articles have been freely allowed to come in. On another set at present the tax has not been increased. And for the third set, the present rates of tariff have been reduced and for a period of two years, they shall not be increased unless the other contracting party has violated the contract, in which case, it is open to this Government by notification to say that the other contracting party has broken this agreement, and therefore we will go back. These are the ways in which we are trying to placate the rest of the world for the purpose of rehabilitating ourselves.

What are the articles that we are to get? The present position is that we must export more and receive less. How far are we going to be helped by these concessions? Why should we have bacon and ham? We are trying to be absolutely non-violent in spirit. Vanilla beans, Cassia lignea—I don't know what it means—rosin. For these the duty has been reduced from 30 per cent. to 25 per cent. five per cent. is big enough for the foreign countries, but here in his magnanimity, my friend Mr. Krishnamachari has said that after all, it is only 5 per cent. Five pies to one who gets only ten pies is a very big sum, though five rupees to one who has five millions is nothing. The high contracting parties at Geneva found that five per cent. was big enough. After all it has to be judged in relation to something else, and I think the reduction from 30 to 25 per cent. is sufficiently big. But for what are we making this reduction? What do we get in return? We get condensed milk, bacon and ham. I can dispense with every one of them. And then why go in for fish oil and such things? We have deep sea fish in the Arabian set and also in the Bay of Bengal. (Shri B. Das: "The capitalists may use it to adulterate your ghee"). I have not come to the stage of having my ghee adulterated by fish oil. The thing has reached only the stage of adulteration by vegetable ghee or vegetable oil. But my friend Mr. Dass being a non-vegetarian, probably knows better.

Then we come to the other set—the spirits, rum, Acetic acid, Boric acid, asphalt, paint, solutions ribbon. I had no occasion to look into this before the Women's Conference at Gwalior, otherwise I would have requested them not to use a single ribbon that comes from a foreign country. (Prof. N. G. Ranga: "It is not that ribbon but typewriter ribbon.") Let it be even typewriter ribbon. I would appeal to the House to survey the position of England. The war did not devastate us so much as it did England or Germany. (Shri R. K. Sidhva: "Do you suggest a deputation?") I do not want any deputation. I only want a deputation to our own inner hearts; to our own minds and to our limbs. Let us not become absolutely pessimistic. Why should we rush to others from time to time, even for such things as can be grown or produced in our own country? Britain and other countries deny us even capital goods. We have agricultural goods enough, and I am not enamoured of these agreements. The agreements should be with Asiatic countries before we go to other countries. Yes, possibly, it may be typewriter ribbons. But how long are you going to depend on them? Typewriter ribbons which I have been able to purchase in my part of the province fade almost every second day. I myself can produce similar fading typewriter ribbons.

Then let me come to the duties on fruit juices and squashes, tobacco unmanufactured, chemicals, drugs and medicines. I agree that by way of raising the revenue itself, indirect preference could be given so as to help those industries that are trying to keep on their legs. But they have allowed it only to fruit juice and squashes and such like things. After all our people have opened their eyes to these things. There is no increase in toilet requisites like talcum powder, soap and shaving cream. Why cannot we take steps to prevent the entry of at least 95 per cent. of these products? In England motor cars were more heavily taxed recently and the same is the case with articles for locomotion and traction, etc. Why should we not prevent toilets altogether? (Mr. Homi Mody: "Why not use chalks?") I can. I was wondering how this power is made from ordinary gravel with just an addition of sand. There are certain industries in my part of the province.

Shri B. L. Sondhi (East Punjab: General): What an industry.

Mr. Speaker: I think the honourable member will take some time more. So he can continue his speech after Lunch.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock, Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Sir, when I was referring to the word ribbon I did not want to make an important matter of it. My honourable friend said that we are not able to manufacture ribbons in our country which are necessary for typewriters. The Honourable Member will kindly turn to page 17 item 49 (2), where ribbon is mentioned. Ribbon comes after textiles and subsequently, apparel, hosiery, haberdashery, millinery, etc. So this is that type of ribbon which is used for children's toilet. These may be essential materials with which to beautify people. Why are we trying to give some concession to this? However, I will not dilate upon these matters. I would rather put these concessions under three categories. Canned fish, canned meat, fish oils, wines and spirits, drugs, etc. go under one category. With respect to these not less than five per cent has been the reduction. My complaint is that these are not articles with respect to which any reduction ought to be shown. We must make ourselves self-sufficient in those articles and in respect to the other articles we should show concession. On the other hand, far from reducing they must have increased the duty upon those articles. Item 2 is jewellery, etc. Even with respect to them they need not have reduced the tariffs. So far as electric machinery is concerned I find that the tariff has been reduced from 60 to 50 per cent. We need electric bulbs which we are not able to manufacture sufficiently. Agricultural machinery is free and there is no alteration. The old 10 per cent. upon machinery other than agricultural machinery still continues. I would like that they should have made this agreement to be in force for a period of two years and during this period we might have allowed a lot of machinery to come in. I know that a number of applications were made by industrialists to import machinery without duty. An agreement could have been made in that direction. My complaint is that with respect to articles which we can manufacture here or are available we are reducing the tariff. With respect to articles which we want in this country such as plant and machinery we have not reduced the duty. With respect to some other articles which are shown in Schedule C to this Bill we have said that they are free. If you look at page 33 you will find articles like tallow, wool, raw and wool tops. Clause 5 says:

"It is hereby declared that, until the 31st day of March 1951,

(a) no duty shall be levied on the articles to which the first five items in Schedule C relate,....."

Why should we not impose duty on wool and wool tops; which we import from foreign countries. Wool is available in plenty in this country and in the absence of wool we have cotton. With respect to what we need let us get free. With respect to what the other countries need let us try to explore possibilities of sending them. The Honourable Minister should have satisfied us before he introduced the Bill or at least during the consideration stage told us what are the ways in which these concessions that we have granted will lead to the objectives of this agreement—the raising of the standard of life, ensuring full employment, steadily growing volume of revenue and effective income development, the full use of the articles of the world, extending the production and exchange of goods, developing to the full the resources of the country, etc. He must have said how all these objects are achieved by showing these concessions. What are the return concessions that we have got? Why should we allow free import of those articles which can be manufactured in plenty in this country and how are we going to be benefitted in the shape of a real increase of wealth. The Honourable Minister should have placed before us facts regarding the exports and imports hitherto, how the balance of trade would be affected and how it will be made more favourable. The Honourable Minister was also here at the time of Ottawa Agreement was placed before this House. There was a lively debate and I do not remember but I believe the agreement was ratified by one vote. During that period volumes of papers were circulated to members of the House showing how each item would increase or decrease our wealth and what are the corresponding benefits to the country and so on. Such materials have not been provided in the course of this debate.

[Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar]

It might be said that I am trying to destroy an edifice which has been built up with very great ability and skill by our officers who went to foreign countries. I will give a constructive suggestion. This is not one agreement but a bundle of agreements put together. All the nations were parties to the agreement. After a period we can revoke the agreement. I would urge on the Minister to have a Standing Committee of this House to watch the progress from time to time to find out how the agreement benefits us. I am aware that such a committee was appointed to find out if it is desirable for India to continue to be a member of the International Monetary Fund. Likewise there may be a standing committee to watch the working of this agreement to see how far these concessions that we have given are useful or beneficial and in what respect they require modification, sooner or later. That will certainly soften matters. Having entered into the agreement I am not suggesting that we ought not to accept the motion for consideration. I would have liked that this should have been sent to the Select Committee where greater attention could have possibly been paid to it. We could have sat together across the table and discussed it. There is no particular hurry to pass it during the course of this session. It is not as if on this day it lapses as any Ordinance. We have to ratify the Agreement. I do not know whether the other signatories to the Agreement have got it ratified by the various Assemblies. No such material has been placed before us. It is not as if all the other countries in the world have accepted the Agreement. Under the circumstances we could have spent some more time over this examining in what particulars the Agreement is not so useful to us and things like that. I give my general support to this with one suggestion that the occasion should be taken to bring into existence a Standing Committee to keep a watch over the working of these agreements with a direction to report to the Assembly at the end of every six months, so that the Assembly might give instructions or advise the Minister as to what action ought to be taken.

Prof. K. T. Shah (Bihar: General): Mr. Speaker, Sir, I had not much intention to intervene in this debate, but following the debate as it has proceeded so far, I find that there are certain misconceptions or misapprehensions prevailing in the House regarding the nature and consequences of this proposal, which I think ought to be carefully considered, and, if possible, dispelled. It is with that view in mind that I propose to offer a few remarks regarding the scope, nature and consequences of this Bill.

The statement of objects and reasons mentions the "barriers" to trade which brought about considerable international tension in the years between the two world wars, and which have led to the origin of this Bill and the Agreement on which this Bill is founded. I think there are two questions arising out of this Statement, which perhaps are not as fully grasped by the House as they ought to have been. In the first place, are all measures which a country adopts for protecting, safeguarding or developing its own industry, or, in the larger sense, its own national economy, to be regarded necessarily as "barriers"? I for one think that it is a misuse of the term, which perhaps the experience of small European nations in the last thirty years or so might justify, but which will not be fully justified when applied to a country of the size, population, and resources of India.

I have always held that the ideal of 'national self-sufficiency', if it at all can be attained by any country and that much more fully, advantageously and without harm to anybody, it can be attained in this country because of its area, its population and resources. I repeat this can be done advantageously to ourselves and without harm to any other people. In the second place, we should realize that those people who have originated, stimulated and advanced an Agreement of this kind, and roped us—if I may use that term without any offence—to accept this somewhat confused statement of objectives, have not quite appreciated the true importance of trade in a country's economy vis-a-vis its larger, fuller economic development. Even granting that the measures that we take for the safeguarding of our industries and developing our all round economy, are so many "barriers", which I do not grant—but even assuming that—those who have led us into this Agreement, and sought to promote free flow of international trade, have misunderstood the importance of trade in a country's economy, like ours. Trade is of vital consideration to a country like England, which produces a good deal that it cannot consume itself, and which must import a good deal which it cannot produce itself. It is, therefore, of an importance to England which to a country that can meet all its requirements from its own resources as we can has not the same significance.

Take again the example of the United States. It is most vitally interested in foreign trade today, because the large amounts that it has invested abroad by way of loans require to be realized, both principal and interest. Anybody who is familiar with the economic history of the past thirty years or so, ever since the end of World War I, will realize that in this matter America has been on the horns of a dilemma ever since World War I. That is to say, if it were to allow free imports of goods from its debtor countries it would run the risk of jeopardizing its own industrial position, though by that means it may be able to obtain part, if not the whole, of the amount of the interest or principal which it has invested abroad. But it would then run the risk also of either weakening the standard of living for its large employed masses, or, alternatively, of jeopardizing the industrial success or position that it had obtained. And if it wants to maintain its high industrial level and standard of living, it cannot realise its investment abroad as free imports would not be permissible. Nevertheless America talks of freedom of Trade partly because it has no fear of effective competition from the War-wasted regions of Europe; and partly also because of its realisation that the bulk of its loans or investment cannot be increased. Under these circumstances, throughout the period between the end of World War I and the beginning of World War II, American policy was constantly fluctuating. On the one hand you had tariff measures of the utmost stringency; on the other, and particularly since the advent of the New Deal, you had attempts at modification, which, however, were very ingeniously evaded. Now, for us in this country—though, I am afraid statistics are not available as fully as they should be—foreign trade occupies a relatively very small portion of the total trade of this country. The Foreign trade of India had no doubt received a very great importance in the past, because of the needs of the former ruler, in this country and the necessity of that government to maintain its own economy at the expense of ours.

It is a common and old complaint of ours, to which I hope no one in this House will take exception, that the industrial possibilities of this country had been neglected, and allowed to run waste because the economic position and requirements of Great Britain, which dominated in this country, were not compatible with the possibility of India realizing all her latent resources and potentialities. Now, however, that this country and the people of this country have come to their own, now however that the policy of this country has to be determined with sole regard to the interests of this country, I do not see why we should continue the old policy, and hasten to go into such agreements, which after all are a heritage from the past, to which we need not regard ourselves as morally or legally committed, and which, therefore, we are bound to follow irrespective of the consequences that may follow to our country.

Trade again—if you will permit my indulgence in some theorising—is generally believed to be the result of Comparative differences in costs, the costs being measured in money. That I submit is a most illusive method of measuring real costs. Real costs involved in the sacrifice of men and material involved in foreign trade are hardly ever measured by money costs.

Money costs in themselves, again, are the creation of a long complicated series of advertisement, connection, goodwill, enterprise and the quality and quantity of the goods available for trades into which we cannot enter at this moment. A backward country is bound to suffer in trading with a more developed, more enterprising, and perhaps politically and militarily more powerful country. At the instance and at the inspiration of such countries, if you are going to modify the basic policy of this country, for however short a period, I fear that the permanent interests of this country, the interests of future generation may be jeopardized.

I realize, Sir, that this Agreement is for a short period only, and that the legislation now proposed is intended to be in force only for a short period. Nevertheless, the basic principle of the Agreement and of the Bill founded thereon seems to me not at all consistent with the basic interests of this country in the long run, and for the fullest possible development of our foreign economy.

I am not going to waste the time of the House by discussing the items on which concessions have been made by India or some benefit received, nor am I in a position to tell the House what will be the sacrifice of revenue, for instance, which is very badly needed in this country, by the concessions that have been agreed to. But taking the Bill as it stands, and looking at the spirit which motives that Bill, I am bound to say that if this country desires, within a measurable future, to attain National Self-sufficiency, if this country desires, within a measurable future, to develop all her latent resources and realize all her known potentialities, whether by large-scale industrialisation or by an active development of local industries—the so-called Rural and Cottage industries—where what is wanted is more organisation, better credit, larger marketing and more scientific appliances the lack of which impedes their proper growth more effectively than any inherent defect of their own,—then, I think, before we get entangled into international agreements and commitments of the kind that this Bill proposes, we ought to think twice.

I would, therefore, suggest that if it is possible, a suggestion like the one made by the Honourable the Deputy Speaker with regard to some kind of machinery that would watch the working and progress of this legislation, as it were, or even a close and careful scrutiny of the measures through and by means of a Select Committee, would be very much to the advantage of not only the fullness, the propriety and the sufficiency of the legislation itself, but also to the interests of the House.

Sir, there is no denying the fact—and the critics of this country's demands themselves have admitted—that if only India was properly organised and minded to achieve it, there is nothing on earth that we cannot produce from our own resources. That has been an argument once upon a time against any protective measure in this country. Rather it was an argument used by those who were in power in those days to throw our resources to the wolves so to say. But now that you are in power in your own country, now that it is in the hands of our own people to shape the policy that is to guide the development of our national resources, I say, at this moment, for us to overlook the fact that, within a measurable time, within a given time, we are able to and can develop our own resources so as to meet our own minimum standards of our requirements all right, at that time to be tied down to the chariot wheel in the name of international cooperation, in the name of freedom of trade, and so on, to those who have ulterior motives, who have, I venture to say, their own axe to grind in securing or seeking to obtain free markets all over the world, I say that would be an act of folly which I trust this House will not be a party to. Both leaders in the United States and the United Kingdom have quite frankly admitted their own particular outlook. It requires no very deep research to find that the interests of those countries are not always consonant with the interests of relatively undeveloped countries, or countries which have future possibilities like ours.

Under those circumstances, Sir,—seeing that this Agreement has been inspired by those who have their own motives, seeing that this Agreement specifically refers to “barriers” to international trade and wants to demolish them, seeing that this Agreement lays extraordinary stress upon the development of the freedom of trade, and does not quite equally stress the need for each country to develop its own latent resources,—I say seeing all this, it is necessary, it is important, for our own safety and for our own prosperity to think twice before legislation can be implemented on a basis like this. No country can really exchange, or trade, in terms of equality, no country can trade with any hope of substantial benefit to itself from such trade, if its own economic development is on a lower basis than that of the country with which it trades. It may be that here and there, in one article or another, you may get some benefit. It may be that in one place or another, you may appear to have obtained a concession. But in the long run, and with an eye to the ultimate development of all our potentialities, I venture to submit that if you get tied down to any degree to freedom of exchange such as this Agreement demands and the Bill founded upon it requires, when we have yet to develop our resources, we have yet to meet our own requirements at home,—in that case, and under those circumstances, I think that this Agreement and this Bill requires to be very much more thoroughly scrutinised than has been the case so far. I, therefore, suggest that at the proper time appropriate amendments should be moved to the various clauses to make the Bill less likely to hurt the long range interests of this country, or perhaps it might even be advisable for those in charge of the Bill to demand time for further consideration.

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy (Minister for Commerce): I am afraid I will have to inflict another long speech on the House. The very importance of this Bill as also the interest evinced by my honourable friends who have already spoken would justify such an infliction.

In the very first instance, I should like to give some more details relating to the background of this Agreement. Reference has already been made by my honourable friend Mr. Krishnamachari that it originates in a sense from an Article in the Lend-Lease Agreement to which India was never a party. If he were to go a little further backwards, he could have traced it even to the Atlantic Charter. But let us not be prejudiced by these considerations.

I should like to tell the House from what stage and in what manner the specific proposals that are now before the House came to be placed before the world. In November 1945, a scheme was prepared by a technical staff of the Government of the United States embodying proposals for expansion of world trade and employment, and it is this scheme that formed the basis for the consideration of the matter that we are debating here today. It did not profess to be anything more than a mere basis for the consideration of the subject matter.

So far as India is concerned, that particular scheme was subjected to a careful scrutiny by the then Government and elaborate notes covering all the various aspects of the question were drawn up, in which all the very important points that have been raised of a fundamental character, particularly by my friend Prof. Shah, were fully considered and those points were put forward with as much emphasis in those official notes as Prof. Shah himself has done.

[Shri K. C. Neogy.]

Subsequently, in August 1946 these Departmental notes and proposals and criticisms were placed before a Consultative Committee of Economists. I find that apart from the various officials representing the different Departments of the Government, there were present at this meeting a large number of non-official economists. I do not find, unfortunately, the name of my honourable friend Prof. Shah, though he participated in similar discussions at a later stage—I will be coming to that. (Shri B. Das: "He was not a persona grata with that Government.") I do not know. There are names here, but whether they are to be described by that expression, I do not know. However, all these proposals were carefully discussed and we have this official document embodying the substance of the very many criticisms that were levelled against this scheme.

Later, the matter came up before a Sub-Committee relating to Trade and Tariffs which that particular Committee of Economists had appointed. There again all these various aspects of the question were discussed at length.

A month later, in September 1946, all these papers were placed before the Trade Policy Committee. This Committee, I find, apart from including a large number of officers, included my honourable friend Dr. John Matthai, who was then the Finance Member. That was the first meeting of the Trade Policy Committee. I find among the names of non-officials, very many distinguished persons and I find also the name of Prof. K. T. Shah as a participant in the discussions of that Committee. There again all the various aspects of the matter were very carefully considered. (Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: "Was there a dissenting minute?" Dissenting speeches were made. I do not mean any disrespect to my honourable friend Prof. K. T. Shah when I mention that he also participated and, perhaps he differed from the majority of the members of that committee who were present on that occasion. (Prof N. G. Ranga: "What was the decision of that body?") The decision was that, on the whole, it was to India's interest to participate in an international organisation of that kind, because it would not do for India to pursue an isolationist policy in the economic field. That was the general decision arrived at by all the various bodies who had ever anything to do with this subject matter.

Shri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar: (Madras: General): Did not that committee also say that the particular interests of India.....

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy: The interests of India had to be safeguarded and, whoever was to represent the interests of India at the subsequent discussions that took place in London, at Geneva, at New York or at Havana, was expected to bear in mind certain fundamental questions for the purpose of safeguarding India's interests. Those, broadly, were the expressions of opinion that are found recorded in all these publications. Shri R. K. Sidhva: "Did they bear it all in mind?" Do not be impatient. My honourable friend Mr. Sidhva challenged me this morning as to whether I had read everything on the subject. He should have patience while. I tell him what all literature there is on the subject. ('Hear, hear').

Then we come to the First Session of the Preparatory Committee at which these proposals were considered and put in the shape of a draft. Later, in February 1947, the matter was considered by the Consultative Committee of Economists again. They reviewed the progress made. They reviewed the draft that was then available and which, let me tell honourable members, marks a considerable improvement over the original American draft. So far even as countries like India are concerned, these matters were considered by all the economists. But I do not find my honourable friend Prof. K. T. Shah's name there. Perhaps he was a member of the other body, and not of this. Shortly after that,—actually this meeting took place on 24th February 1947 and the other meeting took place on 26th February or two days later—a joint meeting of the consultative committee of economists and of the trade policy committee was held for the purpose of reviewing the whole situation. And there were as many as 66 persons present representing the Government in various Departments, non-officials economists representatives of Indian States, representatives of industrial and commercial interests and so on. Sir, I find my honourable friend Prof. Shah was present on that occasion and he did put forward his own views to which we have just now listened. Shri R. K. Sidhva: "Will you mention the names of all members?" What is it? Does my honourable friend want to hear all the names of the 66 persons present read out now on this occasion? Well, I am prepared to place a statement on the table showing all the names. (Shri R. K. Sidhva: "I am not interested in the names. I want only the decisions.") (Prof. N. G. Ranga: The House may be interested in the names. I do not know why any objection should be taken to reading out the names"). The only live issue over which some dissatisfaction was expressed on that occasion concerned the question as to how far Quantitative Restrictions on trade could be utilised for the purpose of safeguarding the industrial development of this country. That was the only issue, as far as I can see, of any importance over which there was any misgiving on that occasion.

Sir, later the Indian Delegation went to Geneva to consider the report of the Preparatory Committee, and at Geneva it was that the matter progressed in a more definite manner than ever before, so far as this particular issue regarding Quantitative Restrictions was concerned. Sir, it must be said to the credit of the Indian Delegation that they did their best to influence the opinion of the Conference at Geneva on this point. Unfortunately, however, even at this stage, the position relating to Quantitative Restriction was not found to be satisfactory from the point of view of India. At that stage the report of the Indian Delegation, so to say, was considered by this joint meeting. Here again, I find that Prof. Shah indicated his opinion that the Charter had not been drawn so as to meet the requirements of countries like India and that India would be morally bound by the provisions in the Charter once it was signed, and suggested a cautious approach to the subject, although he put his objection in a general form. I find that very few others who participated in that conference shared this general apprehension with him. The real point again was as to how far provisions relating to Quantitative Restrictions were to the best interests of India. I find that the Chairman, in summarising the discussions said this: "As regards Quantitative Restrictions, the Indian Delegation will take up the line that each country should have freedom to impose Quantitative Restrictions subject to certain limitations. Although the Delegation may find itself in a small minority, it will take up that line. This is the definite instruction given to the Indian Delegation for further negotiation. Then the Chairman added: "If this suggestion is out-voted, the Delegation will accept the Charter as it stands." In regard to the remaining Articles of the Charter, he said that there would not be much difficulty.

Now, this was the final instruction given to the Indian Delegation that considered the matter at Havana. It must be said to the credit of the Indian Delegation that they did succeed to a considerable extent in getting the position relating to Quantitative Restrictions modified. I will presently place before the House the relevant provisions of the Havana Charter which have, by a subsequent Protocol, been incorporated into a general agreement on tariff and trade which is just now before the House.

Sir, originally, resort to Quantitative Restrictions apart from certain specific commodities like agricultural products and so on, was expected to be confined only to countries faced with balance of payment difficulties. That was the position more or less then. Now, as a result of the discussions at Havana, the scope for the application of Quantitative Restrictions was widened so as to cover, in the first instance, industries that had been established between 1st January, 1939, and 24th March, 1948, in respect of which Quantitative Restrictions could be resorted to without much difficulty. This would cover those categories of our industry mostly in regard to which it may be necessary in terms of the provisions of the Charter to apply this particular method in certain special circumstances without the requirement of prior approval of all the contracting parties. Such approval will be automatic more or less. But then, there is a further provision which is of importance from our present point of view because it enables a country to resort to Quantitative Restriction in the case of any industry established at any time on certain conditions. Now here it is that the requirement of approval is laid down and one has to prove in this category of cases that if having regard to the provisions of this Article, it is established in the course of examination that the measure is unlikely, that is to say, if we impose a measure of restriction of this kind, we have to prove that it is unlikely to be more restrictive of international trade than any other practicable and reasonable measure permitted under this Agreement which could be imposed without undue difficulty and is the one most suitable for the purpose having regard to the economics of the industry or branch of agriculture concerned and to the applicant contracting party's need for economic development or reconstruction. The Charter leaves us absolutely free to protect our industries in the straightforward manner, viz., by the imposition of a tariff or by the grant of a subsidy. That liberty of action is not taken away and our delegation from time to time took care to assure itself that no concessions of a binding character had been allowed in favour of any country that may have any unfavourable effect upon an industry that already enjoys protection or upon an industry that was likely to come up for protection in the usual manner. So, the normal type of protection is, I maintain, virtually outside the scope of interference of this Charter. But in the special circumstances of the case as I have read out from the particular article 18, even the resort to Quantitative Restrictions would be permitted provided we were to satisfy the contracting parties that in practice it would not amount to anything more than what would be the case had we resorted to the normal methods of protection. I am merely giving my own version of the thing but I have read out the exact text. I take it therefore that the bulk of Indian opinion that interests itself in this particular question would be perfectly satisfied by the provisions of the General Agreement as they stand at present particularly with regard to the application of Quantitative Restrictions for the purpose of safeguarding the interests of indigenous industry.

Sir, I should now come to another general issue before I refer to some of the specific points raised by my honourable friends. It has been assumed that the General Agreement and the policy that underlies it is unsuited to a country like India and it has been assumed that in so far as India's exports of articles that must necessarily be in demand in the importing countries, any concession that India may have received in respect of those articles were not to India's own interests. Sir, I should therefore like to tell the House that the pattern of trade has been changing and has already changed in India. As my honourable friend Mr. Ayyangar said that due particularly to the partition of the country, India has lost her position, her dominating position in the markets of the world in respect of some of the principal raw materials that used to constitute the principal commodities of her trade. Sir, take the case of jute and cotton. As has been rightly pointed out, we instead of being an exporter of raw cotton, are now a net importer of cotton to-day. Not merely that, we had to ban the export of certain varieties of cotton in the interests of Indian industry. So also in regard to jute. Instead of holding a sort of monopoly in respect of the raw materials which used to be exported apart from the jute-manufactured goods, we have to depend upon another country for the supply of raw materials for the use of the jute mills. In the case of oils and oilseeds again, our position has been very much affected by reason of the partition as also in the case of hides as pointed out by Mr. Ayyangar. What is happening to-day is that India is virtually emerging from the position of an exporter of raw materials to that of an exporter of finished products. Take jute. We yet hold the market for the jute manufactures. In regard to cotton instead of being an exporter of raw cotton during the war period, we established our markets for our cotton textiles in quite a number of countries. It is true that we have not succeeded in maintaining our position in all those various markets near about but even now even in spite of the comparative shortage of production of cotton textiles, we do have an export market for the manufactured cotton textiles. Take the case of oilseeds again. Gradually as a matter of policy we are encouraging the exportation of oils rather than oilseeds. That involves a slight process of manufacture. Even in the case of oils, I am hopeful that we are shortly going to have an export trade in soaps for instance for which there is a considerable demand from some of the neighbouring countries. Even to-day we have two delegations from two friendly neighbouring countries, Afghanistan and Iraq who are here at Delhi who have come to negotiate for the importation of some of the manufactured goods. I know it as a fact that even in regard to certain types of machinery made in India there have been enquiries received from some of the Asiatic countries. So, we are gradually emerging from the position of a country whose exportation consisted in mere raw materials to the position of a country which is likely to export consumer goods and other manufactured articles particularly to the neighbouring countries.

Sir, I would admit that from the point of view of a country whose export market relates to articles which are of an essential character from the point of view of the importing countries, perhaps the importance of such an agreement is not very great. But I maintain that from the point of view of a country that is emerging into a manufacturing country, the restrictions that used to prevail in the inter-war period over trade would be most harmful, because if quotas of a restrictive kind with which we are familiar during the inter-war period and which spell disaster for world trade, if these can be imposed by other countries, it would definitely be detrimental to the interests of India to have anything to do with the policy that might leave such a loop-hole.

[At this stage, Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair which was then occupied by Mr. Deputy Speaker (Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar).]

From that point of view, Sir, I have not the least doubt in my mind that to-day the general agreement on tariffs and trade is of greater importance and significance to India than it was on the day that we initiated discussions at the instance of the American Government.

Sir, it has been asked why should we not take steps for the facilitating of importation of capital goods, and why should we at all agree to facilitating the import trade, in respect of any other commodity? I do not know whether it is the opinion of those honourable friends who have put forward this point of view that India is in a position to command supplies of capital goods from all over the world, and that we can say, "Here, you must supply us with capital goods and machinery, and also as we are going short of food, you are under a definite obligation to supply us food also. But we are not going to negotiate with you in regard to any matter in which you might be interested. It may be of interest to the House to know that in the course of our negotiations with the Czechoslovakia, from which country we expect some capital goods, some steel and some machinery, in the course of the negotiations with that country, a demand was put forward by them that we should agree to take a supply of glass bangles because that industry was at one time established in Czechoslovakia on the strength of the demand from India. We should not delude ourselves into the belief that we are in a position to command the rest of the World for the supply of just those things which are most essential from our own point of view. It simply cannot be done.

Sir, I should like briefly to touch upon a few of the points that have been specifically raised by honourable members in the course of this debate.

First of all, a complaint was made by Mr. Sidhva that he has not been told as to what the financial effect of the reductions that we have allowed would be. Now, may I in all humility, request him to turn to page 5 of the Memorandum that was circulated a few months back, and where the following sentence occurs:

"Taking all these factors into account, the loss of revenue likely to result from the concessions given by India is estimated at a little over 24 lakhs on the basis of figures for 1938-39, and about 34 lakhs on the basis of those for 1945-46."

Let me tell you that it has not been possible to separate—because that would be only a theoretical process—these figures into the share of Pakistan and of India. And so far as the present period is concerned, it must be remembered that the present agreement came into operation just nine months ago, and not even a year has been completed. It would be extremely difficult to give any estimate of the loss of revenue during this period entailed by the concessions that we have granted to the various contracting countries. But then, even if we calculate on the basis of the trade for a particular period, the loss that would be entailed by reduction in the duty, it would, I submit, be entirely a theoretical calculation, because the underlying object of this agreement, the underlying object of these various concessions that we have negotiated with other countries, is expansion of our foreign trade. Now, it is quite expected that as a result of such concessions, the volume of trade would increase; and therefore, whatever we may lose by reduction of rate of duty may even be more than made up by the amount collected on a particular item. That certainly would depend upon the actual expansion that takes place in the trade with regard to any particular item.

Sir, my honourable friend Mr. Sidhva mentioned mica, jute, chillies, spices, and he wanted to know in the name of goodness why at all we agreed to any concessions. Let me tell him that so far as mica is concerned, it has got to face competition from substitutes. So far as jute is concerned, the other day, I placed before the members of the Advisory Committee of this House attached to my Ministry, samples which have been sent down from America of paper bags, and bags made of other stuffs that have been substituted for jute bags in that country. As regards chillies and spices, I do not know whether in the case of those countries in whose favour we have made concessions, they form such an important and essential part as in the diet of our South Indian friends. If for instance, the prices were to go up, it is quite imaginable that they might do with a little less of these stuffs, but not certainly in the case of my South Indian friends. So we should not be misled by the appearances of things.

As regards cotton piece-goods to which my honourable friends made a reference, I may tell him that in the case of cotton piece-goods we have made a very good bargain with a country like Australia where the preference in respect of cotton piece-goods enjoyed by even the United Kingdom has been lowered and we are definitely benefiting by the lowered preferential tariff which operates now in favour of India.

Sir, a reference was made to certain concessions in point of duty granted in respect of certain French wines. My complaint against my honourable friend—I mean Mr. Sidhva—is that while he was looking at one column of one page he altogether overlooked the parallel column. He was all the time looking at the column indicating the concessions that we have agreed to in favour of France, but did not look at the column indicating the preferences that France, in return has granted us (Shri R. K. Sidhva: "My question was why we gave that concession for wine"). We have to grant a concession in respect of a commodity which is produced in France, if we really want a concession to be given by that country. Now, France for one reason or other, stressed the importance of champaign in this context, and it might even have pleased French delegates to find that the rate of duty on champaign has been reduced from Rs. 19-11-0 per gallon to Rs. 16-8-0. Now, Sir, I must confess that my knowledge about the merits or demerits of the various types of spirituous liquor is very very limited. It seems that the more potent are not champaign and other wines which we find in this list and it will be observed that there has been no concession granted in respect of either brandy or whisky. Whisky of course is not made there. They tried their best to secure some concession in respect of Brandy.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: Is there no alcohol in champaign?

An Honourable Member: No.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: If I had not drunk it I would certainly not have known that it contains alcohol!

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy: I did not say it was a non-alcoholic drink. What I said was, judged from the volume of trade in champaign and other wines this trade is negligible if you compare the volume of trade in the case of say brandy or whisky. That was my point. Therefore, we had to grant certain concessions in respect of some articles with regard to which they wanted to have these concessions.

Here again, I should like to dwell on another aspect of the matter. It has been stated that it is inconsistent with our policy of Prohibition. I am not aware of any policy which has so far been adopted by the Government of India with which this is absolutely inconsistent. As a matter of fact we are merely making certain amendments in the Tariff Schedule which is already in operation. We are not doing anything which is contrary to any declared policy of the Government of India. Even if we were to adopt a policy of that kind which would not be consistent with the importation of any spirituous liquor at all, then there is an Article to which I would like to refer in this General Agreement, which could easily be availed of for the purpose of shutting down the importation of such articles altogether, notwithstanding any agreement that we may have arrived at. That is Article 20, which says:

"That nothing in this Agreement shall be construed to prevent the adoption or enforcement by any contracting party of measures necessary to protect public morals or necessary to protect human, animal, or plant life or health."

I take it that it would be quite feasible to justify such an absolute prohibition if we were to adopt it as a policy under that particular Article. At least that is what I have been advised by those who ought to know.

[Shri K. C. Neogy.]

My honourable friend, Mr. Sidhwa, wanted to be enlightened on very many matters. (Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Including spirituous liquor.) The other points that he raised have been dealt with by the many speakers who followed him so I will not touch on any of the other points that he raised.

Shri B. Das dwelt on the inequities of the Imperial preference rather from a sentimental point of view. Now let me assure him and the House that we are not seeking to do anything in this proposed Bill which will make it impossible for the Government to put an end, an absolute end, to Imperial preference, the moment we come to a decision to do so. It merely takes into account a policy that for good or ill is in operation at the moment and this House as a sovereign Legislature is perfectly entitled to demand the abolition of Imperial preference, and the moment that is agreed to nothing in this Bill will stand in the way of its being given effect to.

Apart from that, I would draw the attention of the House to a particular Schedule of the Bill. It is Schedule B. If you refer to the explanation to Clause 4 you find these words:

"Nothing contained in this section shall be deemed to limit in any way the duration of the amendment relating to the items, or portions of the items, specified in Schedule B."

This contains items in respect of Imperial preference and we have kept our hands entirely free to do just as we like and just when we like with regard to Imperial preference in respect of these specific items. (Shri B. Das: "Thank you, but when?") As I say, I am conscious I am addressing a sovereign Parliament. It is for that Parliament to decide when Imperial preference shall come to an end. But I think that it is not quite relevant to the present issue because we have to take into account the particular policy that is already in operation. But we are not doing anything either to form that policy or to approve it afresh. That is what I mean to suggest.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri (Assam: General): What is your opinion?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does not that explanation mean that the two year rule does not apply to Schedule B items? Therefore, Schedule B preferences will continue forever!

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy: It is the other way about. It does not affect Schedule B. We are at liberty to do whatever we like with the items in that Schedule and whenever we like. (Shri R. K. Sidhwa: "The point is whether you have suggested it to the Cabinet.") Let the House express its opinion in the manner that it is open to it to express its views and then it will be for the Government to take full note of it.

Let us not be altogether misled by slogans. It is true that the history of Imperial preference has a political taint which makes it difficult for us to reconcile ourselves to it. But at the same time now that we have attained independence, can we not be expected to take a dispassionate view of things and examine the practical effects of the preferences that we have enjoyed? Have we in any instance in respect of any commodity and in respect of any country benefitted in any manner under this system of preference? I suggest that it is up to us to give a dispassionate thought to this issue from this angle. The political sting is no longer existing.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: May I ask the Honourable Minister if it is possible for him to produce before this House at some later date a comparative statement showing the good and mal-effects of imperial preference?

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy: I shall do my best to comply with the suggestion of my honourable friend but he will realize that apart from other difficulties in the way of producing an exact picture in this matter the partition of the country has made the task rather complicated. I am afraid we may have to wait for a little while yet before we can be in a position to produce anything like an accurate picture on this subject.

Shri Biswanath Das (Orissa: General): May I know why no picture at all was given to us to form some idea of this? When the Ottawa Pact was placed before the Assembly for discussion, they supplied a lot of information and literature. But nothing has been done in this case.

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy: For the very good reason that Imperial preference is not directly an issue in this agreement.

If anything, we have reduced the preferential margin in respect of certain items and in certain items we have altogether abolished it as a result of the agreement between the countries concerned and India. So, if anything, this agreement has reduced the quantum of Imperial preference and that is fully explained in this memorandum which was circulated a few months ago.

I think I have taken up a lot of time of the House. I would only like to say a few words particularly with reference to the remarks made by my honourable friend Prof. Shah. We cannot afford to adopt an isolationist policy. India has already gained an honourable place in the councils of the Nations of the world. We have participated in numerous organisations that have been set up for the purpose of international cooperation, not merely in the field of politics but also in the field of economic and social activities. I have in my hand a chart indicating the very many bodies, agencies and other organisations that have been set up under the aegis of the United Nations for the social and economic welfare of the nations of the world. When I go through that list I find that India has participated and has made a contribution worthy of her to almost each and every one of these organisations.....

Shri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar: Mainly monetary contribution.

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy: I differ from my honourable friend. But what about the monetary contribution that you expect today from one of these very organisations? (Shri H. V. Kamath: "May I request the Honourable Minister to circulate this lovely picture among the members of this House?") I will lend my copy to the honourable member and that will give an idea of the array of those organisations, because that might stimulate the memory of some of my honourable friends as to how we already stand committed to a policy of international co-operation in both the political and economic fields.

The International Labour Organisation, I take it, is one in which some of my honourable friends are interested. The Food and Agricultural Organisation (called F.A.O. for short) is another. I need not remind the House of the importance of our adherence to this organisation at the present day. There is the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation popularly called the UNESCO. Then there is the International Civil Aviation Organisation, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. My honourable friend was talking about monetary contributions. What monetary contribution are we not getting from this institution today—the International Monetary Fund which we have utilised to the fullest extent possible for the purpose of meeting our balance of payment difficulties and so on and so forth.

Among these organisations is the new proposed organisation to deal with international trade. Should it be said that it is with regard to this organisation alone that India will withhold her co-operation? I would humbly submit to the House that it would not serve India's best interests to hold aloof from this field of international co-operation and that it would not do for her to follow an isolationist policy as advocated by my honourable friend Prof. Shah.

This is all that I have to say. Several honourable members made the suggestion that the Bill had better be taken to a Select Committee. For what purpose? The agreement is an international document. You cannot change a coma or a semi-colon even. It is not open to you unilaterally to change any provision of the agreement. So far as the concessions are concerned they are negotiated concessions and all the concessions have to be judged together, because although they may have been negotiated between India and any specific country because of the multi-lateral character of the agreement all the concessions are claimable by all the parties to the agreement. Therefore we are not at liberty to change any of the concessions without reopening the whole matter. In other words, the House has got only two choices—either to accept the measure as it stands or to reject it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Tariff Act, 1934, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): I beg to move:

"That in part (c) of clause 2 of the Bill, for the words "official Gazette", the words "Official Gazette" be substituted."

With regard to this amendment it has come before the House several times and I shall take my chance once again.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: Sir, it is a convention that such amendments are merely given to the Draftsman for his consideration. It is a convention which the House has been following all along.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Honourable Speaker has already given an assurance to the honourable member and to the House that such amendments will certainly be taken note of by the Draftsman and considered. I therefore hope that my honourable friend will not press the amendment.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I would only submit that such amendments have often been accepted and at other times ignored. Otherwise I would not have passed it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 2 stand part of the Bill"

The motion was adopted.

Clause 2 was added to the Bill.

Clause 3 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Amendment No. 4 in the name of Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad is only a verbal amendment and is a matter of form, which the Draftsman will take note of.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Explanation to clause 4 of the Bill be omitted."

It seems to me that this explanation has already been provided for in the Proviso. The Explanation says:

"Nothing contained in this section shall be deemed to limit in any way the duration of the amendments relating to the items, or portions of the items, specified in Schedule B."

That seems to have already been provided for in the proviso. The proviso says:

"Provided that in case the General Agreement ceases to apply to India, the Central Government may, by notification, modify any such amendment not relating to any item or portion of an item in Schedule B."

So the Central Government is not allowed to affect Schedule B in any way. That is clearly stated in the proviso and the Explanation is merely repeating the same that we cannot touch Schedule B at all. It is only a drafting point, and I hope the Honourable Minister will consider it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That the Explanation to clause 4 of the Bill be omitted."

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy: I am told that even if my honourable friend's contention were accepted as correct, a repetition of this kind would be justified by way of abundant precaution. That is all I have to say.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: In that case I do not press it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the honourable member the leave of the House to withdraw the amendment?

The amendment was by leave of the Assembly withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I find that amendments Nos. 6, 7 and 8 are all of a verbal nature.

The question is:

"That clause 4 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 4 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think amendment No. 9 is also of a verbal nature.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: It is something better than a verbal amendment. Sir, I beg to move:

"That in the Proviso to clause 5 of the Bill; for the word 'when', the words 'if and when' be substituted."

The word 'when' would be appropriate when it comes in as a matter of course. But it is not coming in here as a matter of course. That is why the words "if and when" would be more appropriate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in the Proviso to clause 5 of the Bill, for the word 'when', the words 'if and when' be substituted."

What is the reaction of the Honourable Minister?

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy: I would leave it to the judgement of the House. But if you will permit me I now remember that I did not reply to a point that was made by you in your speech, and that was with reference to the first five items in schedule C which are imported duty free. You said that you did not know why raw wool should enjoy that concession. As a matter of fact I am told that we are doing nothing new and these are essential raw materials for certain Indian industries.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in the Proviso to clause 5 of the Bill; for the word 'when', the words 'if and when' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 5, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 5, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Clauses 6 and 7 were added to the Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The amendment by Mr. Naziruddin Ahmed to clause 8 is also a verbal amendment, I find.

The question is:

"That clause 8 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 8 was added to the Bill.

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy: I might explain to the House that all the three amendments that I propose to move to the Schedule are necessitated by certain increases in the duty that have already been effected by an Ordinance. The rates mentioned in the Schedule will have to be increased as indicated in these three amendments. I beg to move:

"That in Schedule A to the Bill, in Item 24(3), as proposed to be substituted, in the sixth column, for the words and figures 'Rs. 7-8 per lb.', the words and figures 'Rs. 9-6 per lb.' be substituted."

This is to be found at page 9 of the Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in Schedule A to the Bill, in Item 24(3), as proposed to be substituted, in the sixth column, for the words and figures 'Rs. 7-8 per lb.', the words and figures 'Rs. 9-6 per lb.' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy: Sir, I move:

(i) "That in Schedule A to the Bill, in Item 75(1), as proposed to be substituted, in the fifth column, for the figures '44' the figures '54' be substituted."

(ii) "That in Schedule A to the Bill, in Item 84, as proposed to be substituted, in the fourth column, for the figures '60', the figures '75' be substituted."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

(i) "That in Schedule A to the Bill, in Item 75(1), as proposed to be substituted, in the fifth column, for the figures '44', the figures '54' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

(ii) "That in Schedule A to the Bill, in Item 84, as proposed to be substituted, in the fourth column, for the figures '60', the figures '75' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That Schedule A, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Schedule A, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Schedules B and C were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy: Sir, I move:

"That in clause 1 of the Bill,—

(i) the word 'Second' be omitted; and

(ii) for the figures '1948', the figures '1949' be substituted."

These changes have become necessary because the Bill was originally intended to be considered by this House during the last session. It is a verbal amendment which has been necessitated by the fact that it could not be considered during the last session.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in clause 1 of the Bill,—

(i) the word 'Second' be omitted; and

(ii) for the figures '1948', the figures '1949' be substituted."

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: May I suggest that these are drafting amendments which should be left to the Draftsman? They are so formal that they do not require to be moved at all.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Anyhow, I have put one of the formal amendments of the honourable member to vote and this would now follow suit.

The question is:

"That in clause 1 of the Bill,—

(i) the word 'Second' be omitted; and

(ii) for the figures '1948', the figures '1949' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 1, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 1, as amended, was added to the Bill.

The Title and the Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy: Sir, I move:

"That the Bill, as amended, be passed."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill, as amended be passed."

The motion was adopted.

PUBLIC COMPANIES (LIMITATION OF DIVIDENDS) BILL

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai (Minister for Finance): Sir, I move:

"That the Bill to limit the dividends which may be paid by Public Companies be taken into consideration."

I do not think, Sir, that it is necessary for me to explain in any detail the provisions of this Bill, because in the form of an Ordinance these provisions have been before the country now for some months and I think the House is generally familiar with the lines on which this particular restriction has been worked.

I should like, in the first instance, to point out—in view of the variety of amendments of which notice has been given—that the idea of limiting dividends in this manner was announced by us in the Statement of Policy that we issued on the 4th October last, and it was only on the 29th of October—that is, three weeks after the Statement of Policy was issued—that the Ordinance was enacted. During this interval of three weeks I received a large number of representations from the interests affected by this Ordinance suggesting the lines on which the limitation of dividends should be formulated and we took a great deal of care and went to great pains in order to see that the manner in which this principle was given effect to was such as would cause least detriment to the interests concerned, and I have some reason for thinking that after the Ordinance was issued there has been, on the whole, only a relatively small amount of criticism, making allowance for the fact that some kind of limitation was called for and had to be put into force.

The main object with which Government decided to issue this Ordinance was to provide a certain anti-inflationary force in the country. To the extent that a measure for limiting dividends would restrict the flow of purchasing power into the hands of the community, it would be an anti-inflationary measure. That therefore was the primary purpose with which this Ordinance was introduced.

But we had also an incidental object in view, and that was that by a measure of this kind it would be possible to help industrial and business concerns to build up their internal finance, so that in view of the difficult conditions prevailing in the money market all reasonable expansion could be financed by funds built up by business concerns internally. The limit which is proposed for dividends in this Bill is either six per cent. on the paid-up capital or the average dividend distributed by the particular concern during the two years ending the 31st of March 1948, whichever happens to be higher. Practically, the way it works out is that existing concerns would generally pay whatever average dividend was distributed by the concern during the two-year period in question, but as far as the new businesses are concerned, they would be subject to a limitation of six per cent. on the paid-up capital. That is how it would work generally.

While that is the limit imposed upon dividends which may be distributed, this limitation is subject to certain qualifications. One is that if during the period in question, that is to say the two years ending the 31st of March 1948, any bonus shares have been distributed to shareholders, the amount distributed as bonus shares would not be taken into account in calculating the average dividend on the assumption—and I submit to the House that it is a sound assumption—that bonus shares are by and large distribution rather of capital than of profit.

The second qualification is that if, since March 1948, there has been any variation in the amount of the paid up capital of any particular concern, there is provision in the Bill for making a pro rata adjustment of the average amount of dividend, that is to say, the same rate as was payable on paid-up capital during this two-year period would be payable also on the additional paid-up capital. (Prof. N. G. Ranga: "That point is not quite clear.") If the paid up capital of a particular concern as distinct from bonus shares has been increased since the termination of this two-year period ending the 31st of March 1948, then the additional paid-up capital issue will be eligible for the same return as the paid-up capital which the Company held during the two-year period.

The third qualification is that as far as preference shares are concerned, provision is made in the Bill for the payment of whatever rate has been fixed in respect of preference shares, but all future preference shares issues would be subject to a limit of six per cent.

Sir, I have examined with some care the various amendments of which notice has been given and I find, on running through these various amendments, that there is a certain assumption which is not altogether correct. The assumption is in certain of these amendments, that this measure is a measure which fixes what may be called a "fair return on capital". This measure is not intended to fix a fair return on capital. This measure is simply a disinflationary measure, that is to say, the principal point behind this measure is that there should be no increase in the amount of purchasing power that is likely to pass into the hands of the community in the form of distributed profits. There are certain amendments, for example, whose object appears to be to lower or raise the rate of six per cent. I would like to tell the House that amendments of that character are not relevant to the main and primary purpose of this measure.

I may also draw the attention of the House to the fact that this measure is an emergency measure. We are faced with difficult inflationary conditions. It is in order to meet this particular situation that this measure has been introduced. The duration of the measure, therefore, is restricted to the period ending 31st December 1950. It is not intended, that this measure would continue beyond that unless inflationary conditions also continue. That is to say, this measure is not going to be extended unless the conditions which called it into being persist. But it is not going to be renewed as a measure for embodying in the legislation of this country the principle of fixation of dividend limits.

There is one more feature of the Bill to which I should like to invite the attention of the House and that is that this Bill is applicable only to public companies. It is not applicable to private companies. I want to state quite briefly what the intention is behind this particular provision. It is perfectly true, looking at the problem from one point of view, that it is important in the case of private companies also, that profits should not be allowed to pass in any excessive measure into the hands of the community because, where profits of that kind are derived, whether from private companies or public companies, they would have the same effect as far as inflationary conditions are concerned. Also, it is perhaps of equal importance in the case of private companies that they should be helped to build up internal finance in the same way as public companies are expected to build up internal finance under these provisions. But there is a very important consideration in respect of private companies which we cannot overlook and that is: that under our Income-tax law, the major part of the profits of a private company is expected to be distributed as dividend in order that there may be no evasion of super-tax. If we introduce a limitation of the kind that we propose for public companies, the result is likely to be—from such experience as we have—evasion on a very extensive scale of payment of super-tax. It is for that reason that we have left private companies outside the scope of this measure. It is a question of balancing public interests from two points of view. And on a careful consideration of all the factors bearing upon this, we have come to the conclusion that the public interest would be better met by leaving private companies out of the scope of this measure. It is very difficult in the case of a measure of this kind to make exhaustive provisions for meeting all sorts of contingencies which may arise. As we examined the application of this measure and thought of the possible cases which may come under review in the implementation of this measure, we felt there were cases which were likely to occur for which it would not be possible in advance to make specific provision. In fact, various cases have come to our notice, since the Ordinance was issued, which it would not be possible to deal with on a fair, just and equitable basis in accordance with the strict letter of the Ordinance. Therefore we decided that, in order to make the administration of this Ordinance convenient and just, it would be necessary for Government to take power to grant exemptions in cases which present exceptional features. That therefore is one of the definite provisions in this Bill. I think I have summarised the scope and content of this measure.

[Dr. John Matthai.]

Since the Bill come before the House, I have received notices of quite a number of amendments seeking to modify important features of this Bill. And, apart from these amendments that I have received from honourable members, ever since the introduction of this Bill was announced, I have received representations from several quarters calling my attention to one feature or another of this Bill and asking that I should give special consideration to them. In view, therefore, of the criticisms which have been made in respect of the provisions of this Bill, I have come to the conclusion that it would be in the public interest not to rush the Bill through, but to give the House adequate opportunities for examining its provisions. Therefore, as far as I am concerned, if the House is inclined to accept the motion which has been given notice of by my friend Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad that the Bill be referred to a select committee, the Government would not stand in the way. Sir, I commend the Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the Bill to limit the dividends which may be paid by public companies be taken into consideration."

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: (West Bengal: Muslim): I beg to move:

"That the Bill be referred to a Select Committee consisting of The Honourable Dr. John Matthai, Shri T. T. Krishnamachari, Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, Shri Arun Chandra Guha, Shri B. P. Jhunjhunwala, Mr. Homi Mody, Shri Khandubhai K. Desai, Shri S. K. Patil, Shrimati G. Durgabai, Shri Biswanath Das, Shri L. Krishnaswami Bhargava, Shri Sita Ram S. Jajoo, Shri R. Sankar, Shri B. L. Sondhi and the Mover, with instructions to report by the 15th February 1949, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

Sir, the reasons for making this motion for sending the Bill to a select committee have been already furnished by the Honourable the Minister in charge of the Bill.

We have found that for some reason or other, or a combination of reasons, the investment market is completely stagnant. In fact it is very noticeable that very well-organised and well-supported flotations have not been subscribed to the extent they are expected to be subscribed. The result is that a good flotation even is not likely to be successful. I submit that industrialisation is largely dependent on the success of well-organized flotations. It is already the policy of the Government that it would proceed to nationalization of all the industries at once and for a long time to come private enterprise would be allowed to have full play. Taking all these into consideration it seems to follow that we should encourage flotations of companies so as to give full scope of employment of money. It is however felt in certain quarters that the investment market is controlled by the so called capitalists and there was a desire in certain quarters to book them and it was felt that if they could be controlled, the investment market would improve. But it seems to me there is a factor in the investment market, viz. the middle-class poor investors. It seems to me that their number is very large and capital from those quarters has become very shy. In spite of this Ordinance which is a very liberal Ordinance, capital is not coming into the market. Everybody is nervous as to what would happen. I do not want to go into the merits of these questions. In fact the dividend limitation to six per cent. is understood to give rise to certain misgivings. If we say, though even for a temporary period that the maximum dividend payable on flotations would be six per cent. you do not guarantee the minimum, so that the poor middle class investor will know that he will never get more than six per cent. but he does not know that his capital will be guaranteed. The risk of loss is very great but the chance of gain is not very decent. In view of the risks involved this limitation of dividend to six per cent. is a discouraging circumstance. Although it is tax-free as has been suggested, still the investor is a very cautious man and possibly not very courageous as in other fields.

I submit that these are matters which require and deserve careful consideration. In fact I believe the Finance Department was preparing figures as to how many middle-class investors are really shareholders in big companies. I believe if a census of that kind is made and published, it would throw some light as to how far the capitalists are controlling the markets and how far the middle-class investors play their part in that field. I submit these require careful consideration in the hands of the Select Committee.

With regard to the personnel of the Select Committee I submit that it represents the different sections of the House and I am given to understand that the names are acceptable to Government. If the proposal for Select Committee is acceptable and if the names are acceptable, I think the House would have the advantage of a full and detailed consideration of the various points arising so that the report of the Committee would rather help the House in coming to a proper conclusion. Though the term of the Bill is very limited, still it may have a psychological effect on the market and though it is anti-inflationary in intention, it has, as a practical effect, acted as a deterrent to people coming to the market. With these few words, I submit my motion and hope the House will accept it.

Mr. Deputy-Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That the Bill be referred to a Select Committee consisting of The Honourable Dr. John Matthai, Shri T. T. Krishnamachari, Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, Shri Arun Chandra Guha, Shri B. P. Jhunjhunwala, Mr. Homi Mody, Shri Khandubhai K. Desai, Shri S. K. Patil, Shrimati G. Durgabai, Shri Biswanath Das, Shri L. Krishnaswami Bhargava, Shri Sita Ram S. Jajoo, Shri R. Sankar, Shri B. L. Sondhi, and the Mover, with instructions to report by the 15th February, 1949, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

Both the consideration motion and the amendment are under consideration. It is open for discussion. Mr. Das.

Shri B. Das (Orissa: General): Sir, I support the motion. I do not wish to express any opinion about reference to the Select Committee. I do not think the time has come to discuss the bigger question that this House will have to face some day at a later stage. The first measure of socialisation was brought by the Minister of Works, Mines and Power and though my honourable friend the Finance Minister, I know, is not a socialist minded gentleman, I am glad he has brought the second Socialization Bill before this House. I Sir, had the misfortune to fight with you on the floor of this House and with my honourable friend Mr. Santhanam on the question of socialisation and nationalization. I now feel the time has come, inevitable circumstances compel my own Government to introduce socialistic measures and I accept it. I bow to it. Though my honourable friend informed that some of us have tabled amendments to lower the dividends, I think we need not give six per cent. and the Honourable the Finance Minister had forgotten the precedent that was laid down in the Electricity Act, 1948. There it has been laid down that in all utility concerns the basic earning should be five per cent. that means my honourable friend Mr. Mody will not get even five per cent. in his Electric shares and he will get only three and a half per cent. If that has been the desire of this House and we have agreed to it in the Electricity Act, let us go a step further and give five per cent. tax free and nothing more.

Sir a subject germane to this Bill under consideration arises in my mind. The Honourable the Finance Minister's predecessor told the House that he would introduce Bills to control gamblers—that means controlling Stock Exchanges of India. Nothing has been heard of it since March 1948. What has happened? We know of the panic which my honourable friend Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad referred to. All these are created by those gamblers in the Stock Exchanges which are not controlled by Government, who evade all taxes by certain system known as badla or something. My honourable friend Shri. Mody will describe it better because he knows it better. I do not understand it. However I think before we take the problem of socialisation and rationalisation which is bound to come, let us also try and control those panic-mongers—I mean those who control the Stock Exchanges in India.

A welcome feature of this Bill which I very much like is that it is going to control the Imperial Bank. Today and yesterday we have been discussing the inequity of tariffs and we talked of Imperial preferences. I am glad to be assured by my friend the Commerce Minister that the moment the House demands Imperial preference will be done away with. May I just ask him as a Member of the Cabinet, why the Cabinet has not brought forward a motion here, or in the other sovereign House to do away with Imperial preference?

Sir, this Imperial Bank of India has a sorry tale. When the Honourable Finance Minister's predecessor made his announcement last year, we all felt happy that we will not allow a few European employees of the Imperial Bank to boss over a very few old, old men of our capitalist society who happen to be the Directors of the Imperial Bank. But they were the Directors under the British regime, and they still continue under the regime of my own Finance Minister. And what happens? All the wealth of the Reserve Bank has to pass through the sieve of the Imperial Bank and the credit goes to the English men or the English subsidised companies or a few favourite companies. Sir, the story was gossipped last year that Pakistan was the bee in the bonnet. "How can we get out of it?" We were asked. My honourable friend the Finance Minister is a great economist and a great financier. Let him examine this question. Does the Pakistan branches of the Imperial Bank pay anything towards the huge rates that the Imperial Bank pays, something like sixteen per cent?

Mr. Homi Mody (Bombay: General): I think 14 per cent.

Shri B. Das: Think of the huge sums of money that are passing!

Mr. Homi Mody: But at to-day's market rate the dividend is only about four per cent.

Shri B. Das: But what about the heavy bonuses which have inflated the shares by ten times? Well, that is not the point I am on. The Imperial Bank takes all the credit and it does not develop or encourage Indian industries. If this had been clear last year, we would not have promoted that State owned company with a capital of ten crores, I mean the Industrial Banking Corporation. I remember his predecessor declaring that the shares of the Reserve Bank should be limited to 113 or so, and that they should not be gambled upon by the gambling dens in the various stock exchanges. But what has happened in the case of the Imperial Bank? Shares have been gambled because there was no standstill order. (Prof. N. G. Ranga: "Are they your bankers?") They are not my bankers, I may have an account with them.

My national government declared its intention of taking over the Imperial Bank from April, but they have only Europeanised that bank more and more. Here I have this well authenticated document which shows that the number of Europeans in the First Grade under that Bank has risen from 2 to 22 since April 1948. Their grades have been revised and also twenty appointments from lower-grade officials to higher grades have been made and they all are Europeans. Still people blithely talk here that we have got independence! Seven senior appointments on Rs. 2,500 have been made and their occupants confirmed. They all are Europeans. Sir, there are so many other items here, and I think I will hand over the whole paper to the Finance Minister so that the working of this Imperial Bank of alien swindlers, may be examined. Here is another item—entertainment allowance of Rs. 400 granted to Europeans mostly. And then pensions are guaranteed by the revised rules, at the rate of 1s. 6d. and not at the current rates. Sir, this reminds me of the Sterling Balance Deputation on which my friend Shri T. T. Krishnamachari participated in London and where the Europeans proposed taking all their pensions from the Sterling Balance in one lump sum and U. K. debited our Sterling Balances to the tune of 200 millions.

Well, Sir, I am glad my Government has had the courage to bring down the Imperial Bank a peg down. But that is not enough. We have to remove all iniquities whether sanctioned by my own friends, the old industrialists or others. We should not be responsible for this kind of inflated staff, and when we do nationalise the Imperial Bank, every Englishman in its employ must go. Sir, I am sorry to say that since independence has been gained by India, no Englishman employed by India has been loyal. I make this declaration on my own experience. The experience of members of Government may be otherwise. But my experience has been and my information has been that no Englishman has been loyal to India, and the misfortunes that we have gone through since August 15th 1947 were engineered and abetted by Englishmen under our employ.

Sir, to a question put by my friend Shri Ananthasayanam Ayyangar the Finance Minister replied yesterday though it could not be replied on the floor of the House, that the Imperial Bank cannot be nationalised at present. But, Sir, if we are to exist as an independent nation, we have to see that the Imperial Bank is nationalised. It should not remain as the only scheduled bank that carries the wealth of the nation. The Reserve Bank is now the national bank and it should see that every scheduled bank carries the government resources and not a bank controlled by Europeans and managed by a few friends. Before the session expires, we must reach that conclusion.

Shri Khandubhai K. Desai (Bombay: General): Why all this reference to the Imperial bank? The shadow is too big for the picture.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is reference to the Imperial Bank in the Bill.

Shri B. Das: Mr. Desai has converted me and I have to-day advocated the policy of socialisation and nationalisation, but if he in his generosity wants not to socialise the Imperial Bank, well, then I will have nothing to say.

I do hope that the two objectives with which this Ordinance and this Bill were drafted, will be achieved. As regards combatting inflation, it is no use raising this issue here. A date will be fixed, I hope, when the Honourable the Finance Minister and his colleagues will account to us how they have combatted inflation and if I am to believe the statisticians of his Department responsible for the issue of the index prices, I find that the index price has gone up and it has not gone down. Rather it is three to four per cent. more than last year's, somewhere in the level of four hundred per cent.

As regards the finances available for industrial development, I think this will lead to the amendment of the Companies Act. When we amended the Insurance Act we compelled the insurance companies' managers to invest their money in government stocks and shares. They will have to introduce in the Companies Act some such clause, so that if the Managing Agents of the company do not utilise surplus dividend in the capital programme of industrial development, then all that money should be invested in stocks and shares of the Government of India and not be quietly sent away to Australia or England so that some nest can be built up for my capitalist friends to live there on retirement.

[Shri B. Das]

With these observations I welcome the Bill and I hope the Ministry of Finance will pay special attention to the points I have raised and will have them examined properly.

Shri Khandubhai K. Desai: I accord my very mild support to a very very mild measure to fight inflation. The Finance Minister requires some support, because he has been flooded, it appears, with a lot of representations from vested interests. I do not think there is any necessity of referring this emergency measure to Select Committee. If opposition and objections are raised against such a mild measure, I do not know what the vested interests will do when we will take stricter measures to fight inflation.

My friend, Mr. Das, took up a lot of time in discussing the Imperial Bank. Though the name Imperial Bank is mentioned, the Bill has very deliberately been devised in such a way that the Imperial Bank would not be affected at all. (Shri B. Das: "Oh, yes: six per cent. and not 14 per cent.!") It has been laid down that the dividend that can be paid at six per cent or the average of two years, whichever is higher. (Shri B. L. Sondhi: "It means 14!") So the Imperial Bank will be paying 14 per cent. according to this Bill. What I would suggest is that it should be 'whichever is lower' and not 'whichever is higher'. That is my suggestion to the Select Committee and if it is accepted, the Bank cannot pay more than 6 per cent.

Then there is another point—the interest of six per cent. is too high if the purpose is to fight inflation. The six per cent. may for the time being be considered adequate, for giving an impetus and an encouragement if you want to consider it in relation to expansion of industry. For any other purpose and particularly the present one, I think the rate is high enough and it should be four per cent. only on paid up capital.

My friend, Mr. Naziruddin Ahmed stated that capital is very shy, very coy, very nervous. As our Honourable the Prime Minister had an opportunity to say on some other occasion, if capital is so coy, so nervous and is not able to come out, or does not want to come out, it does not deserve any protection or assistance at our hands. It must die a natural death. Why should it require protection when it has no buoyancy, no cheer, no strength as the Prime Minister then stated. I do not believe that my friend, Mr. Naziruddin Ahmed, has got in mind the purpose of whittling down this Bill. If it is so, then I think the Honourable the Finance Minister should not have brought in this Bill at all. It is a very very mild dose to fight inflation and nobody should object to it. Even that is being objected to. (Prof. N. G. Ranga: "Whittle down!") I would like to know whether those who are interested in making only more money, are still desirous of making more profits, paying more dividends in order to keep up the high prices and inflation and starve the common man? If that is their policy, if that is what they want to bring about in this country, then woe betide them. Sir, I would very strongly urge that the Bill be passed into law here and now, as it is an emergency measure and I think it is the first of its kind in a series of other measures which will follow in order to see that the common man in the country does not suffer. If the prices are not brought down during the next three or four months, I do not know what is in store for us?

With these words, Sir, I give my support, with this reservation, that it should be only four per cent. and the words "whichever is higher" should be removed and it should be substituted by "whichever is lower" in clause 3(b) of the Bill.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: (C.P. and Berar: General): I was rather surprised at the concluding remarks of my honourable friend, the Finance Minister, to the effect that he would have no objection if the House agreed to Mr. Naziruddin Ahmed's amendment for sending this Bill to the Select Committee. He had made out a very good case. I was very attentively listening to him and I agreed that this Ordinance which he promulgated was in the fitness of things one of the Bills that would really reduce inflation. We are all anxious to bring down prices and so is the Honourable the Finance Minister. He has made public statements to that regard. Therefore, I am the more surprised that he should agree to send this bill to Select Committee, unless it is the idea that dividends should be enhanced. There can be no other reason if he feels as he says he feels. He has said that he has received many representations. He was not prepared to disclose it. May I know what kind of representations they were which we are not entitled to know? This House is being asked to send this matter to the Select Committee and we must certainly know before we are asked to commit ourselves to a certain motion, unless it is in the public interest that we should not know. But that is not in the public interest. In moving the amendment Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad said.....

Shri Khandubhai K. Desai: He did not say it.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: He definitely said it.

Shri Khandubhai K. Desai: The Finance Minister never stated it.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad definitely stated that no money is forthcoming because the dividend is limited to six per cent. He made no secret of it. He may be right as also those friends who hold similar views. But I would like to know the views of the Honourable the Finance Minister as to why he is inclined to send the Bill to the Select Committee. He simply left it to the House. That shows that he is inclined to make amendments. This is an emergent measure. He made an Ordinance.....

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Ordinance will continue till the Bill is passed.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: My point is that when he promulgated the Ordinance these views were ignored. He honestly feels that this is one of the methods and if he feels strong enough why is he surrendering? (Shri Khandubhai K. Desai: "He is not surrendering.") I do not know what has happened to send this matter to the Select Committee. (An Honourable Member: "It is usual")

No. You are on the Select Committee and some of you want to have the dividends increased. I do not mean Mr. Khandubhai Desai. He was quite definite in supporting the measure. I wish him all success in the Select Committee. He said that he would not allow a single comma or full stop to be amended in this Bill. I wish him all success. I thought that before we dispersed for the day this Bill will be made into law. To my great surprise something seems to have developed and this Bill is going to the Select Committee. If the House is anxious to get it discussed in the Select Committee by all means have it. I might tell you that we consider this Bill from this angle viz., the prices and inflation. You have no idea as to what people say about them. There is no idea as to how long you are going to give dearness allowance, and what amount. Leave aside the labourers the poor servants also legitimately claim it. Naturally they will say that the index prices are going up and with what face can we tell them that they are not entitled. We are devising measures to bring down the prices. I am not in favour of giving more dearness allowance. I am in favour of bringing down prices, so that automatically everybody will be benefited. Every man is affected by the inflation. So we are trying to bring down the dividends by this Bill but it is now going to the Select Committee. I would like to know from the Honourable Minister what his own personal views are on the matter. I will support him if he states them. I will not support Mr. Naziruddin Ahmed because he has made it clear that he is not satisfied with six per cent. The Honourable Minister has been a party to the promulgation of the Ordinance and I would like to know from him as to what he feels about the measure and what are his reasons for sending it to the Select Committee.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I can very briefly reply to the point raised by my honourable friend Mr. Sidhva. My views and the views of my colleagues are set out in the Bill before the House but because I have a great deal of confidence in the judgment of honourable members I would like to have our views examined by them.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Madras: General): Sir, the Honourable Dr. John Matthai has excelled himself by reeling out before us that these are his views and those of his colleagues and he stands by them and at the same time he is quite prepared to allow them to be whittled down. Therefore he takes the risk of sending this baby into the bottomless bath. He is really not doing himself any justice at all. From one end it is being said that this limit is rather too low and therefore it should be raised to seven or eight or nine. But from other end Dr. Matthai ought to remember there was the complaint that the average of the past two years profits, it was feared, would reach up to a figure which would be considerably higher than six per cent. and therefore it is expected that some of the big profit-making concerns like the Tatas would be able hereafter to distribute profits exceeding six per cent. Even when this distinction was made between the older and new concerns this advantage was kept in mind by those who were in power. I do not know how far it is true but that was being said and I think sometime ago a memorandum was submitted to Dr. Matthai, the private individual as distinct from Dr. Matthai, the Finance Minister, in which this particular fear was expressed. That is one complaint.

The second complaint is why should this distinction between new and old companies be drawn at all. Once you make this distinction you necessarily create lot of prejudices against old concerns in the minds of those of us who do not want any such distinction and you also create a sort of disadvantage for those new concerns which today to weather all sorts of risks, make a profit and at the end of it they find themselves discriminated as against older concerns with whom they have to compete. Therefore we are anxious that this discrimination should either be completely done away with or it should be minimised as far as possible.

Thirdly I am personally not in favour of sending this Bill to the Select Committee. As Mr. Sidhva put it so powerfully there are interests in the country which are watching very carefully as to how we are trying to tackle this menace of inflation. You have tried to tackle it with the peasants by bringing in controls, compulsory procurement of their food grains at controlled prices and by failing to supply them the various controlled commodities that they themselves are very badly in need of. You are also trying to prevent any rise in wages and dearness allowance. As you all know from various quarters demands are being put forward by different sections of workers on the plea that while you ask them to accept certain sacrifices in the name of deflationary policy of the Government you are not doing anything else at all.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: How long more does the honourable member wish to speak?

Prof. N. G. Ranga: I would take only a few minutes more.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member can continue his speech day after tomorrow.

The Assembly then adjourned till a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock on Thursday, the 3rd February, 1949

CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY OF INDIA (LEGISLATIVE) DEBATES (PART II--PROCEEDINGS OTHER THAN QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS)

Thursday, 3rd February, 1949.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock, Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE RULES OF PROCEDURE AND CONDUCT OF BUSINESS

Mr. Speaker: I might invite the attention of honourable members to the fact that a Committee was appointed by me last session to examine the Rules of Procedure and to suggest such amendments as the Committee might deem proper for the consideration of this House. It was then the idea that the Committee might meet sometime in the third week of January, that is last month. But we were unable to keep up to that timetable. Before I invite a meeting of the Committee and proceed to discuss the amendments that they might like to suggest, I would again remind honourable members that those who wish to make any suggestions may do so by about the 10th or 12th February. On the last occasion there was a time limit fixed; and suggestions were called up to the 1st November and some suggestions have been received. But as the Committee will now be meeting later, this will be another opportunity for honourable members to send in their suggestions on the Rules of Procedure if they so desire.

RESOLUTION RE COMMUNITY-WISE CENSUS OF ASSAM, WEST BENGAL AND EAST PUNJAB

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri (Assam: General): Sir, I beg to move:

"This Assembly is of opinion that Government of India should take steps for taking census of the figures of population community-wise of the provinces of Assam, West Bengal and East Punjab so as to determine the number of seats to be allotted to each of these provinces and also to facilitate delimitation of constituencies thereof."

There is nothing new in this resolution. A resolution of a similar nature was ballotted in the last Budget Session which stood in the name of my honourable friend Mr. Basanta Kumar Das and it read as follows:

"This Assembly is of opinion that census be taken as early as possible with a view to utilising its results for the purpose of elections to be held under the New Constitution that will be framed by the Constituent Assembly and having reliable statistics for nation-building work."

[Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri]

This resolution was not moved at that time. A short notice question was, however, answered on the floor of this House and the question was put by the same honourable member, Mr. Basanta Kumar Das and it ran as follows:

"Will Government please state:

Whether Government propose to take a census earlier than the decennial census due in 1951 with a view to utilising its results in the elections to be held according to the New Constitution to be framed by the Constituent Assembly?

If the answer to the first part be in the negative, do Government propose to consider the desirability of having a special enumeration of the population of East Punjab and West Bengal before the next elections to the legislatures are held?"

The Honourable Deputy Minister's reply to the first part of the question was in the negative and to the latter part of the question he said:

"It is proposed to undertake some preliminary operations which are likely to be helpful in the preparation of electoral rolls. The question requires careful consideration in consultation with the provincial governments which have been approached."

This was the reply given in the last Budget Session and I presume that some steps have already been taken in the matter. The only addition that I have made to this resolution is to include the province of Assam along with West Bengal and East Punjab. Also I have stated in my resolution that the figures may be taken community-wise for obvious reasons, because I would like those figures to be ready for the purpose of holding the elections under the new constitution.

Since then the matter has been discussed in the constitution-making body of the Constituent Assembly. At first an amendment was moved by my friend Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad and thus the ball was set rolling. Afterwards my honourable friend Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava brought forward a specific amendment seeking to have a new census at least in the provinces of West Bengal and East Punjab. Of course as usual Assam was not mentioned in that resolution. My honourable friend Dr. Ambedkar in replying to that amendment, which was ultimately accepted by the House, said that he would ask the Government of India to take some measures in this behalf. He promised to speak about Assam in his speech but by the time he came to the end of it Assam entirely slipped out of his memory. So the position has become urgent in view of a direction which has been given by the Constituent Assembly to hold the next elections now under the new constitution as early as possible in the year 1950 and therefore it has become necessary to bring this matter to the pointed notice of the Government.

So far as Assam is concerned the census of 1941 proved very unsatisfactory: firstly in view of the fact that in 1941 the world war was almost at the gates of that province and secondly, the whole census figures and the subsequent compilation were done haphazardly. Furthermore, in view of the fact that a large number of East Bengal refugees have taken shelter in Assam, of which we have no correct figures, the whole arrangement so far as communities are concerned will be very different from what it was in the old census figures.

As regards East Punjab it is well known to the House that a large number of Muslim inhabitants of that province had migrated to West Punjab and correspondingly a much larger non-Muslim population have migrated to East Punjab. So if a new census is not taken the result will be that the Muslim population in East Punjab will get much more seats than they will be entitled to on the population basis and the non-Muslim population of East Punjab will get much less number of seats than they are entitled to get according to population figures. The same argument applies to West Bengal.

Pandit Lakshmi Kanta Maitra in speaking about this amendment in the other House said that the West Bengal Census was very unsatisfactory so far as the non-Muslim population was concerned, because power was at that time in the hands of Muslims and the census was practically carried out to satisfy the party in power in the province. So taking every thing into consideration it is highly desirable that the census of the population should be taken as early as possible and no time should be lost in doing it. I have seen suggestions made by certain Members of this House that there should be some verbal alterations in my resolution. My honourable friend Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava suggested the insertion of the article 'the' in some places. I have no objection to put in the article as he suggests. He also suggested that the words 'figures of population' should be dropped. I have no objection to that also. But what I would like the House to carefully consider is whether we should accept the suggestion which has been made that if census is not practicable some other method ought to be found in order to carry out the desired objective. I first of all question why it should not be practicable to hold a census for the purpose of this election. Here it is not necessary to find out how many men there are and how many women there are because all would come under the category of 'adults'. All that we need is information about the adult population and the community to which a particular person belongs. I submit that can be very easily and quickly done since according to the reply which was given to the short notice question some steps must have already been taken. Furthermore, I might remind the House that a Bill was sought to be moved by my honourable friend the Minister in charge of Relief and Rehabilitation last year, but he did not proceed with that Bill, and I have it on his authority that he has been able to complete the census of the figures of refugees in all the Provinces without any resort to legal measures. If that is correct and if the census of the refugee population has been already properly and correctly taken there should be no difficulty in having a census for the purpose of this election. In census I know that you have got to describe a person's occupation, the caste, exact age and so forth. We need not have all those details for the purpose of the election. They may be done subsequently while they are doing the compilation. All that we need now is the exact population and the community to which these people belong in these three Provinces. Sir, I hope the Honourable the Deputy Prime Minister will agree to accept this resolution. If not, I am sure he will be able to enlighten us and show a better and quicker device whereby the object of this resolution can be carried out.

It is needless for me to say that the entire House or the entire country is in sympathy with the object of this resolution, namely that there should be proper allocation of seats, there should not be any prejudice done to any community so that at the time when we usher in fresh elections we can join there with a cheerful and clear mind and not labour under any sense of grievance that our population were not properly taken into account. Sir, I move.

Mr. Speaker: Resolution moved:

"This Assembly is of opinion that Government of India should take steps for taking census of the figures of population community-wise of the provinces of Assam, West Bengal and East Punjab so as to determine the number of seats to be allotted to each of these provinces and also facilitate delimitation of constituencies thereof."

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel (Minister for Home Affairs and the States): Sir, I wish to assure the House, and more especially the representatives of the three Provinces affected, that no one is more anxious than the Government to ensure that the distribution of constituencies and of the seats between the general and reserved categories proceeds on a sound and statistical basis. Government are also equally keen that elections under the New Constitution take place as early as possible. I would, however, like honourable members to realize and appreciate the position and the difficulties involved in the task, and not to rush hastily to conclusions in favour of one or the other alternative in this matter. Honourable members may probably be aware that with a view to making preparations for holding early elections as soon as the Constitution is passed by the Constituent Assembly, Government have issued instructions as early as March last to all the Provinces to take steps for the preparation of the electoral rolls in their respective Provinces. With reference to the position in the Provinces we find that the electoral rolls in some Provinces are completed, and on examining these rolls we find that the adult population as brought on the rolls is about 50 per cent. of the population as registered in the 1941 census. On this basis we can compute the percentage of the various communities in the total population or apply reservations on the basis of proportion in the electoral rolls. That is one way of solving this difficulty.

I shall now turn to the alternative suggested in the resolution moved by the Honourable Member, namely of taking the census. Our calculation is that we will take about one year or more to print the slips and to train the enumerators for the purpose of taking the census. Then we have to complete the numbering of the houses before we can proceed to the enumeration and the recording of necessary details. In none of these three Provinces has administrative action proceeded any step towards making numbering of houses, possible in the near future. We have also to realize that the whole administrative fabric of the Provinces affected has been seriously damaged as a result of partition. The administrations of these provinces are engaged in setting right their own administrative machine, apart from their being engaged in the serious problems resulting from the aftermath of partition. They have still to deal with a large number of refugee rehabilitation problems and other questions of similar importance resulting from partition. If we now start administrative action or direct them to take administrative action in regard to census, it will easily take us near enough to the normal census of 1951 and would be an unnecessary duplication. In these circumstances, I fear I must request the House to reject this alternative.

Now, I come to the other alternative—the sampling system. No sampling system can be relied on for accurate results to the same extent as the actual counting of heads. We can achieve a fairly reasonable approximation to strict accuracy, but sampling must be based on satisfactory ground units, which again require correct house numbering. The fundamental of a sound sample is the possibility theory, which means that every item in the universe—which is a technical word—must have a chance of entering in the sample. The only other possible unit is a village. We asked the three provinces to give us a numbered lay-out of their areas, districts, tehsils within the districts, and the villages within the tehsils, but the work has not progressed beyond districts. Other possibilities of area sampling could be devised, but they would be intricate and again would require careful costing, conduct and check. Results from sampling would have to be scrutinised in the light of fuller records before we can say anything certain about the accuracy. In all these circumstances, I personally am inclined in favour of accepting the basis which is practicable and comparatively easy, namely, electoral rolls to which I have already referred in the earlier part of my speech.

There is another method suggested, namely, that of taking the ration cards. This, however, is very imperfect and perhaps very inaccurate and therefore we cannot safely rely upon ration cards. But I would be prepared to examine the possibilities of sampling and we would try to see what other method could be devised to meet the requirements of the case.

FAILURE OF GROW MORE FOOD CAMPAIGN AND SERVING OF RICE IN NON-VEGETARIAN HOTELS 111

I can assure the Honourable Mover of the Resolution and the representatives of the Provinces affected that we shall explore all possibilities of bringing about a proper distribution and allocation of seats and a proper basing of the constituencies on a statistical basis. We are not in a position to commit ourselves to any specific method. All methods will be properly scrutinised and examined and everything possible will be done to arrive at a proper conclusion which would be fair to all concerned. There would be no injustice caused to any community concerned or to any area concerned. I therefore request the Honourable Mover to withdraw his Resolution and take the assurance of the Government to do everything possible in this matter.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: Sir, people in my province as well as the other two provinces will be grateful for the assurance given by the Honourable the Deputy Prime Minister, and I beg leave of the House to withdraw my Resolution.

Shri Deshbandhu Gupta (Delhi): Before you put the motion, Sir, may I draw the attention of the Honourable the Deputy Prime Minister to the fact that when he considers other areas, he may also consider Delhi, because Delhi is equally affected in this respect as the population of Delhi has gone up by about five lakhs only on account of refugees' influx. I hope he will bear it in mind and Delhi will also be included in the list of provinces the ascertainment of whose population he may be thinking of.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: Certainly, Sir, Delhi is one of the most affected areas.

Shri R. K. Sidhva (C. P. and Berar: General): May I also submit that as far as Sindhis are concerned, there are about four and a half lakhs of them in Bombay and according to the Constitution which is going to be passed they would be entitled to four seats. Punjabis have got at least some portion of Punjab; Bengalis have got some portion at least of Bengal; Sindhis have lost their cultural language absolutely; they have no place, and therefore while Assam is being considered for two lakhs of people, I hope the Honourable the Deputy Prime Minister will bear in mind the four and a half lakhs of Sindhis and add also the province of Bombay.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: While I have great sympathy for the honourable member's views, I am afraid there is no province of Sind in any of the constituencies in the census.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member wishes to have leave of the House to withdraw. Has he the leave?

The Resolution was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

RESOLUTIONS RE (i) FAILURE OF GROW MORE FOOD CAMPAIGN (ii) SERVING OF RICE IN NON-VEGETARIAN HOTELS.

Dr. Mono Mohan Das (West Bengal: General): I beg to move:

"This Assembly is of opinion that Government should appoint a committee to investigate the reasons leading to the failure of the 'grow more food campaign', to ascertain the defects in our organisation for planning and executing programme of increasing food production and to make recommendations for improvement of the organisations and to outline an immediate programme."

The most difficult and dominating problem that our National Government has got to face today is how to feed the teeming millions of India. It is a problem of ever-increasing magnitude for the simple reason that every day, every month, every year, our population is increasing by leaps and bounds.

[Dr. Mono Mohan Das]

The British official statistics show that the population of India increased from 338 million in 1931 to 388 million in 1941—an increase of 50 million, that is, five crores of people. It means, Sir, five crores more mouths to feed and five crores more bodies to clothe and shelter. The sponsors of the Grow More Food Campaign would have done better had they added a few words more to their slogan. The words to be added are, I think, "Produce less children", so that the complete slogan will be "Grow more food and produce less children".

The scarcity of food that is prevailing in our country today may be ascribed to four principal causes. First, the rate of increase in our food production is not able to keep pace with the rate of increase in our population. Secondly, West Punjab and Sind—the two surplus provinces where the irrigation system is very near to perfection and where agriculture is completely free from the vagaries of nature—have gone out of the Indian Union leaving behind a large percentage of their population in this country. Thirdly, Burma, Malaya and other neighbouring countries which provided our sources of supply of rice at a cheap price, in pre-war days, are not in a position now to supply us the requisite amount of our food grains for reasons best known to everybody. Fourthly, Sir, with the advent of freedom the conditions of the poor people of our country have improved and the half-starved millions of our country are now getting not only more food, but better food. Large sections of the people who formerly used to live on millets, jowar, bajra, and other similar kinds of food grains are now demanding rice and wheat and to my great satisfaction, I may say, Sir, that they are getting it to a large extent. It must be said to the great credit of our National Government that if our National Government have failed in so many spheres, if our National Government have failed to give us so many boons, so many blessings of freedom that the people of other countries enjoy, our National Government have at least been able to improve the condition of the under-dog, the poor masses of the country.

Whatever may be the reasons, Sir, for the food shortage that we find in our country to-day, nobody can deny, Sir, that this food shortage if not tackled properly will cause great hardships. This problem of food shortage, which appeared at first to be a temporary one has proved to be a permanent problem and if we cannot solve it now and if we go on buying food grains from abroad worth crores of rupees every year, there is no doubt, Sir, that it will lead within a very short time to very deplorable consequences. The present Government of the country as well as its predecessor Government have been leading this campaign of 'Grow More Food' for more than eight years, but in spite of that, we find today that 200 crores of rupees have silently slipped into the treasuries of foreign countries from our national exchequer.

Sir, for the next year or two, what our Honourable Food Minister's Department tells us is not at all encouraging. Though our Government has made arrangements for import of 40 lakh tons of foodgrains from abroad, our food position during the next year is not going to be very happy. The object behind my Resolution is not an attempt to find fault with our Honourable the Food Minister's Department, because we know under what great handicaps he has achieved quite a commendable amount of success in this direction. Without any sufficient heavy machinery, he has brought under the plough more than four lakhs of acres of fallow land and has been able to produce lakhs of tons of more food than in the previous years. What my resolution aims at is to place before the House the great urgency and importance in this matter and the Herculean efforts that this problem demands for its solution. No one can say that our Grow More Food Campaign has achieved nothing, but the success, which has been achieved by this Campaign is far below the mark and is far below our requirements. The success achieved by the Government in these directions is inadequate, is insufficient to cope with the situation. Therefore, Sir, tremendous efforts must be made by the Government after due deliberation and planning by the experts on modern scientific lines, so that India, the land of our birth may become self-sufficient within the shortest possible time and so that our Food Minister will not have to go from one country to the other with a begging bowl in his hand.

It is true, Sir, that much depends upon the completion of the huge multi-purpose schemes like the Damodar Valley Corporation, the Tungabhadra Project, the Hirakud Dam and other similar projects, but these are all long term irrigation projects and they are not going to help us in our present difficulties and some of them will take at least ten years to be completed. We must look, Sir, to the short term irrigation works for immediate results. We must look to the proper manuring of our fields; we must look to the proper qualities of our seeds we sow and we must equip ourselves in every possible way to fight the vagaries of nature, which often play a havoc in the agriculture of this country.

There is one point more which I beg to mention here, Sir. Some of our Provincial Governments have imposed agricultural Income-tax. This agricultural income-tax is quite justifiable in the case of farms which employ labour and in the case of people who take agriculture as a profitable business, but to the millions of peasants and cultivators of moderate means, this tax is nothing but a burden and it prevents them from making an all-out effort to produce more food. We tell the people, Sir, to grow more food and when they grow more, we impose a tax upon them. I do not find any sense in it. We cannot create an urge in the hearts of the people, we cannot create any enthusiasm, we cannot exhort the people to produce more by telling them: "Grow more food and pay more taxes." So, I think, Sir, this agricultural income-tax has a very great crippling effect on the efforts of the middle-class peasants to grow more food. If we want to increase our food production honestly and effectively, we must devise some means by which we can relax the grip of the agricultural income-tax upon the cultivators and peasants of moderate and poor means, who form the bulk of the agricultural community in India. With these words, Sir, I beg to place my Resolution before the House for consideration.

Mr. Speaker: Resolution moved:

"This Assembly is of opinion that Government should appoint a Committee to investigate the reasons leading to the failure of the 'grow more food campaign', to ascertain the defects in our organisation for planning and executing programme of increasing food production and to make recommendations for improvement of the organisations and to outline an immediate programme."

I find that there is another Resolution standing in the name of Mr. R. K. Sidhva, which deals with an allied subject. Perhaps some of the ground will be common; so that may be moved and then the amendments might be moved, and then we will proceed with the discussion. I think it will be better that after this resolution and amendments are moved, and if the Honourable Minister is so inclined, he should make a statement, so that the House will be in possession of facts to proceed with the debate.

Shri R. K. Sidhva (C.P. and Berar: General): Sir, I beg to move:

"This Assembly is of opinion that with a view to minimise the import of cereals from foreign countries, steps be taken to issue orders on hotels, restaurants, messes, and public boarding houses which cater for non-vegetarian food, preventing them from serving rice to occupants, guests and visitors."

Mr. Speaker: After this, the amendments also might now be moved only without speeches. Then the Honourable the Food Minister will make a statement.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: My submission is this. The Honourable Minister will take a long time and we would like to express our views and he should give his view at the end of all the speeches.

Mr. Speaker: The Honourable Minister will have a chance of speaking twice. He will intervene in the debate and give the position of Government over the contents of the Resolution and the honourable members then, being in possession of the facts on which the Government is proceeding, perhaps might be in a better position to discuss.

Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi (Madras: General): That is so; we welcome that suggestion.

Shri M. Tirumala Rao (Madras: General): Will an honourable member have the right to speak twice?

Mr. Speaker: The rules are very clear on the point. If the honourable member refers to the rules, he will raise no difficulties. As for the honourable member Mr. Sidhva, if he is anxious to speak before the Honourable the Food Minister intervenes, I shall have no objection at all.

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram (Minister for Food and Agriculture): I would like to speak after the movers of the resolution and the amendments have made their speeches.

Mr. Speaker: That would be to the advantage of the Honourable the Food Minister; but the difficulty is this. These gentlemen will have no other chance to speak after they have heard the Honourable the Food Minister; while, on the other hand, he will have the right of replying to the whole debate. I am however entirely in the hands of the House and the Honourable Food Minister.

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: I leave it to you, Sir.

Mr. Speaker: I think instead of the movers of the amendments, the movers of the resolution might speak.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: Sir, my resolution is a simple and practicable one. I have submitted a very restricted resolution so that there may not be any difficulty in its acceptance to the Honourable the Food Minister and putting it into practice.

Sir, I have tried to find out what will be the saying on this account. I of people who are popularly known as non-vegetarians and who take meat, fish and eggs, rice should not be supplied. It is an admitted fact, that meat, fish and eggs contain a larger proportion of protein than vegetable food and it is scientifically accepted that the protein content in one egg is equal to the protein content in one pound of milk. There is protein in milk and butter; but you will kindly see the difference between the protein content of one egg and the protein content of one pound of milk. Therefore, those who take this class of food will not have any complaint to make that they will be deficient in vitamins or protein if they are not supplied rice in those hotels. I have restricted this resolution to hotels which serve non-vegetarian food; hotels which serve vegetarian food should be entitled to the supply of rice as in the ordinary course.

Sir, I have tried to find out what will be the saving on this account. I must admit that I am not in a position to give any correct figure, because it is nowhere available. I have tried myself to calculate figures from the 1931 census, because the 1941 census does not contain anything about hotels etc, and I have come to the conclusion that—it may be an over-estimate, it may be an under-estimate—in one year, we shall be saving something like nearly two and three fourths lakhs tons of rice of the value of two crores of rupees. It may be a very small sum as compared with the value of the total imports, namely 130 crores of Rupees; but 130 crores is the value of all cereals. We have to make some start somewhere. Who is to make that start? Why should not we, who take this class of food? If we are not prepared to do that, let me tell you we shall not be in a position to do anything, in the near future.

An argument may be advanced, and I am prepared to accept that argument, that an average person, if he takes meat, fish and eggs as a substitute for rice, does not feel that his appetite is fulfilled; for, rice is such a kind of food that although it contains very little vitamin, still when a person takes it, he feels that his appetite is satisfied. There is no doubt about that. But, I would submit that the upper middle classes or the middle class people who generally take non-vegetarian food should confine to this food and the lower class people should be allowed to eat rice because they cannot get any other substitute, and even if you give bananas or tapioca or any other thing, they will not be satisfied unless you give them rice. Therefore, I admit that that class of people who will not be satisfied that they are free from hunger unless they get rice, should be allowed to have rice. A start has to be made somewhere. If anybody has got a better solution, I have no objection. If anybody can make a start anywhere else, I have no objection. Only I want that some start should be made. A saving of two and three fourths lakhs of tons of the value of two crores of rupees is a good start, and if a start could be made through this legislature by an order, I can assuredly say that it will have a direct effect upon the country.

In this matter, I would like to cite the suggestions made by the Food Grains Policy Committee appointed by this Government. They have made an observation not only an observation, but stated that this matter of alternative and supplementary food stuffs requires the serious consideration of the Government. I will read for the benefit of the House the whole of the paragraph which is very small so that the House may know what this Committee has felt in this matter

"Though there is no specific mention in our terms of reference, we believe that the whole question of production, prices, distribution and consumption of supplementary foods is closely related to the problem of meeting the shortage in cereals. The first suggestion is that arrangement should be instituted for ensuring that some part of the cereal ration is surrendered by a consumer who buys meat in proportion to the quantity of meat purchased by him. The purpose underlying this suggestion is to secure a greater equality among consumers and to save cereals. It has not been possible for us within the short time at our disposal to examine the suggestion in detail, particularly as regards the nature of the arrangements which will have to be made, their feasibility and the amount of cereals likely to be saved. We commend the suggestions to the provincial Governments for their examination with reference to these aspects".

This is signed by Messrs Purshotamdas Thakurdas, Birla, Sri Ram, Ram Manohar Lohia—I am reading all the names for the benefit of the House so that they may know the members who were of this view—Phool Singh, Dip Narain Sinha, Hossain Imam, Babu Purshotam, R. L. Gupta, S. Y. Krishnaswami, Sethi, R. A. Gopalaswami (An Honourable Member: "All wheat eaters; there are no rice eaters.") I do not know whether they are rice eaters or wheat eaters. I am only putting forward the propositions of the Committee.

Then, Sir, it is recommended by them in their final report as well that this matter does require consideration of the Provincial Governments. I do not know what steps have been taken by our Government to consider this recommendation which I have just now read. I do not know whether Provincial Governments ever considered this matter. It is really a year ago that this recommendation was made and we would like to know from the Honourable Minister as to whether any steps have been taken or he has simply ignored this matter because it is a very small matter which is not going to give any requisite benefit. But as I stated that unless Government makes up its mind and makes a start and not merely depend on a long term policy, they are not going to do anything in the near future and continue to import large quantities of cereals as they have been doing year to year. Every year I have noticed that instead of curtailing the quantity of import of foreign food grains, they are increasing. I would like to state that we are importing this year 28.4 lakh of tons valued at Rs. 130 crores and after payment of this, we are going to lose 30 crores after recovering from the sale of this wheat. We are going to lose a substantial sum of public money of 30 crores. Last year it was 23 crores. You can see that every year we are losing more and in 1949—The Honourable Minister has supplied us statements this morning at 9 and I doubt whether any member could have had time to study and the Minister knows very well that the subject was going to come up and so he could have supplied us earlier—and that is not fair. His Department is an efficient Department as I am told and I don't understand why this information is not supplied to the Members in time—I had a cursory glance at this statement that has been supplied and some of them is useful and some require study and some require to be questioned and I have no time even to question from his Ministry for want of time. The Agriculture Ministry has no agriculture of its own barring some lands in Delhi and Ajmer-Merwara as the Provincial Governments have. Still they are spending 2 crores of rupees as against 58 lakhs of rupees in 1939. Can you understand a Department which has no land of its own, for the purpose of research and guidance to provincial governments is spending four times more than what it used to do before the war. May I know whether the Honourable Minister has given any consideration to this matter. I do not want to request that there should be retrenchment in this Department just now but I say the expenses are piling up for the purpose of guiding the provincial governments as to what should be the right steps. What I say is beyond calling every month—as I read in the newspapers—Conferences of Ministers and Secretaries from various provinces, the Members are not enlightened as to what are the practical results of these Conferences. Direct approach, I admit, is a good thing. I myself advocate it rather than sending circulars and letters but what are the results of direct approach. The other day I asked in my question the result of these approaches and I admit the reply was not satisfactory. I put a supplementary question as to whether the Honourable Minister has any short-term policy in view and to my great surprise, the reply was: "There can be no short term plan to make up a very large deficit". I am very astonished to hear from the Honourable Minister that there cannot be a short term policy. He ought to understand what we meant by short term policy—the sinking of wells, supply of manures so that food can be grown more. The short term policy is discussed in this Report of the Policy Committee and the Mover of the Resolution also just now stated and Government has also stated the short term policy but the Honourable Minister tells me that there cannot be a short term policy. Now with that angle of vision, how can an improvement be made? I quite appreciate that agriculture is a provincial subject and therefore there may be many handicaps for the Ministry to go ahead as they like to do but it is not made clear to us what they are doing day to day beyond giving some views, somewhat indirectly official news and some like direct official news in the newspapers. It is true as the Honourable Minister only last week stated in a public statement that due to loss of Sind and Punjab which is the best irrigated place, 60 per cent of our supply has been lost. But is that to be told after 18 months of partition. This was known when partition took place and why that argument is put before the public now. What have they done during 18 months that is what we want to know. It is no consolation to anybody to state that Punjab and Sind were the best irrigated provinces and all the world knows that we have lost it. I know the five year schemes that are being prepared. It is a large scheme and we all want that the Government should go ahead with these schemes whatever the economic condition of the country because the schemes which have been passed, when they are completed, I am confident that we shall be self-sufficient in our food grains but that will not be for nearly ten years to come. But within ten years my object and the object of everyone in this House is to stop this import from foreign countries. That is the main point. Every year due to acts of Nature as it has been shown to us, unfavourable monsoon or many other factors over which we have no control, this will go on. Where is the harm in the cultivable area where they have cultivated—from the statement that has been given to us—by sinking more wells and tube-wells or surface wells to increase the crops of whatever nature which is eatable, wheat, gram, rice, barley, Jawar, etc. We are not informed about that. There are detailed figures of importation and also of production but what we want is during the last two years how many areas have been cultivated, in what part, freshly virgin soil. How much new fresh crops have been grown from that? Let us have a statement from which we can at a glance say what has been produced and a comparative statement to give us an idea that really something substantial has been done by this Ministry in conjunction with the Provincial Governments. Then we shall be able to know which Government has failed to carry out the instructions from the Centre. We are giving grants to the Provincial Governments and even then I do not think the results are satisfactory. Considering all these factors, I would suggest to the Honourable Minister to leave the long-term schemes to themselves. They will take their natural course and although they may be of five years, their actual benefits will not be felt till about ten years hence. Let him therefore, concentrate his attention on the short-term policy. He must be able to see what is being done. I want the Government of India to say that within six months this part of a certain land will be cultivated, that certain number of wells will be sunk and that so much crops will be produced. If that line of action is taken by the Ministry, I am positively certain that the Provincial Governments will respond and if they have any difficulty in that respect they will present it to the Honourable Minister.

I hope I am making healthy remarks and criticisms. Let me state that while I am making strong comments, the Honourable Minister must not take them adversely. I am doing in for the good of the country. He is in charge of the portfolio. I am also responsible to the people and I do submit that when I make these remarks he should take it in the same spirit in which I am making them and that he will not believe that I am criticising simply for the sake of criticising. That has not been my habit in life. When I criticise I do so with the best of intentions and it is healthy criticism.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member has almost reached his time limit.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: I have thirty minutes!

Mr. Speaker: Yes, the thirty minutes are almost up!

Shri R. K. Sidhva: Then with regard to the long-term period, I think Government should come to a decision that in such and such a year there shall not be any foreign import. Today the Provincial Governments are encouraged despite all the help we give them. They say the Centre is coming to our rescue and it is an All-India matter. The Government of India cannot afford to see our people die and there is no point by trying to frighten people in the name of death. But the Government must make a declaration. Let Provincial Governments be told that from 1950 or 1951 there shall be no importation of foreign food grains. If for the purpose of grow more food campaign monetary help is needed, let them have it from the loss of Rs. 30 crores every year sustained by us. If we build up our own production it will be a national wealth for all time to come. There is no drive and no enthusiasm about this matter. The Provincial Governments are adopting the attitude of:

[Shri R. K. Sidhva]

"Chalnedeo, chalta hail"

when the war was on the same secretariat functioned and even things that could not be produced before were produced in a twinkling of an eye. That same staff is there. Why cannot they do now what was done then? It is a shame to us to have to import food grains when there are crores of waste-lands and there are refugees and unemployment is there. Why is it that we must have always to run to foreign countries? We must tell the officials that they must change their outlook because the national wealth is being lost.

What is happening with regard to the foreign imported goods? Nearly two per cent. of the total amount goes towards the loss in weight of these food grains. In the Standing Committee, according to my own calculation I pointed out that this loss comes to nearly rupees two crores. But the Honourable Minister in the Food Standing Committee has accepted the amount of rupees one crore as the loss of food. In other words, they are paid for full weight whereas actually we get much less in weight of food grains. According to my estimates, we lose about 4½ per cent. in weight for rice; according to the Food Ministry it is three per cent. The Ministry are aware of this situation but they say that they are helpless because the country badly wants rice and hence we have to surrender to these defrauding methods. Can we bear this any more?

May I submit with all humility to the Honourable Minister that does he not feel about it that this money is being stolen from us and consolation is taken that because we want food, we have no alternative. But this is a serious matter. I will not at the moment go into the figures supplied by the Honourable Minister. I shall however ask him to look into it and get the Government to fix a dead line and also to see that the short term plan is taken up.

Now about the amendment of Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri. He says that "more than one pound per diem of" he inserted after the word "serving" in my motion. That is to say that in the hotel if the man wants less than one pound, he may be given rice. If this amendment is accepted it would nullify the very object of my resolution. My friend contends "How can I eat fish without rice?" But we have to make a little sacrifice. I eat fish curry with bread and that has a good taste.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri (Assam: General): May I ask if the honourable Mover has ever taken rice and fish curry together?

Shri R. K. Sidhva: In my young days it was my cherished dish. I am not taking rice now. Well, he is not being generous enough when he gets fish not to allow more rice to those who are not getting fish. My friend Shri Brajeshwar Prasad says that wheat must be added. I will straightaway accept the amendment but I wanted to be cautious. If House is going to restrict both wheat and rice for non-vegetarian in the hotel I shall have no objection.

I may say that during the war one of the largest hotels in India, the Taj Mahal Hotel, rarely supplied any bread. They supplied boiled potatoes instead and nobody complained. This was done for four years. We should try and understand these things and not say that because we have a taste for a particular thing we must have it. Then why say to the world that we are going to do something when we are not prepared to make the sacrifice ourselves.

Mr. Speaker: Resolution moved:

"This Assembly is of opinion that with a view to minimise the import of cereals from foreign countries, steps be taken to issue orders on hotels, restaurants, messes and public boarding houses which cater for non-vegetarian food, preventing them from serving rice to occupants, guests and visitors."

Now I will call upon the various Members who have tabled amendments to move them if they so choose.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava (East Punjab: General): Sir, I beg to move:

"That in the Resolution moved by Dr. Mono Mohan Das, for all the words occurring after the words 'Government should' the following be substituted:

'among other matters as a part of the 'grow more food campaign' take immediate steps—

- (1) to bring home to every cultivator and land-owner that it is their patriotic duty of topmost priority to increase the production of food grains as far as possible and to grow food crops instead of other crops;
- (2) to insist on the realisation by every provincial government that it is its own duty to provide food for the inhabitants of the province under its charge;
- (3) to provide good incentive to the producer by fixing fair prices of food stuffs so that the producer may get fair remuneration for his labour and the consumer may get food at fair rates;
- (4) to enable the producer to get his own requirements at fair price;
- (5) to expedite as far as possible the rehabilitation on a permanent basis of refugees and adopt a certain and definite policy in regard to zamindaris and tenures of land so that the incentive to keep lands uncultivated may be altogether eliminated; and
- (6) to provide—
 - (a) means for breaking of waste lands;
 - (b) all sorts of water facilities for irrigation by opening new canals, constructing wells, tube-wells and bunds; and
 - (c) good and cheap manures, fertilisers, cattle, seeds and implements of cultivation including improved ploughs and tractors".

Mr. Speaker: Regarding parts (2) and (5) of the amendment I have to make a few observations. As regards (2) it does not seem to me to be clear as to what the honourable member means by saying "to insist on the realisation of every Provincial Government". What he means is "to bring home to every Provincial Government".

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: Yes, Sir, that would be better.

Mr. Speaker: So that part may be amended in that way. As regards part (5) I may draw attention to the portion which says: "to expedite as far as possible the rehabilitation on a permanent basis of refugees". This goes beyond the scope of the original resolution and it may not be in order. As regards the other part in which the Honourable member says "adopt a certain and definite policy in regard to Zamindaris and tenures", I am afraid this will be a provincial subject and the Central Government cannot be expected to adopt a definite policy. All that the honourable member means is to recommend to the Provincial Governments to adopt a definite policy in regard to zamindaris and tenures. If that is so.....

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: So far as rehabilitation is concerned my submission is that unless the refugees are settled on land on a permanent basis they will not be interested in cultivation, for if land is given to them on a temporary basis it happens that they do not cultivate them. It is a responsibility of the Government of India to rehabilitate the refugees and not that of the provincial governments. If they insist that the settlement be made on a permanent basis it is certainly the primary concern of the Government of India and they could direct the local governments in this matter.

[Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava]

As regards the second point which relates to the question about the policy in regard to zamindaris and tenures, Ajmer-Merwara and Delhi are definitely under the charge of the Central Government. As regards the other provinces they have only to make recommendations. In regard to the abolition of the zamindari the Central Government is expected to provide the money whereby it can be carried out and ultimately it is the Government of India which can direct not only the policy but also effectively control it.

Mr. Speaker: As regards the first, the connection seems to be remote. Is it not covered by what the honourable member says in the first para, viz., "bring home to the cultivators, etc."?

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: I do not want that the Centre should encroach upon the province of the provinces.

Mr. Speaker: Does it follow that he drops or wishes to amend para (5)?

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: I wish to amend it. I maintain that a good part of land in East Punjab is lying uncultivated on account of the wrong policy of the government.

Mr. Speaker: So he may make a recommendation to the provincial government.

Amendment moved:

"That in the Resolution moved by Dr. Mono Mohan Das, for all the words occurring after the words 'Government should', the following be substituted:

'among other matters as a part of the 'grow more food campaign' take immediate steps—

- (2) to bring home to every provincial government that it is its own duty to provide food for the inhabitants of the province under its charge;
- (3) to provide good incentive to the producer by fixing fair prices of foodstuffs so that the producer may get fair remuneration for his labour and the consumer may get food at fair rates;
- (4) to enable the producer to get his own requirements at fair price;
- (5) to recommend to the provincial governments to adopt a certain and definite policy in regard to zamindaris and tenures of land so that the incentive to keep lands uncultivated may be altogether eliminated; and

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: I beg to move:

"That in the Resolution moved by Dr. Mono Mohan Das, for the words 'the failure', the words 'unsatisfactory results', be substituted."

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in the Resolution moved by Dr. Mono Mohan Das, for the words 'the failure', the words 'unsatisfactory results', be substituted."

Shri Basanta Kumar Das (West Bengal: General): Sir, I beg to move:

"That in the Resolution moved by Dr. Mono Mohan Das, the following be added at the end:

'and the method of its implementation within a specified time-limit.' "

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in the Resolution moved by Dr. Mono Mohan Das, the following be added at the end:

'and the method of its implementation within a specified time-limit.' "

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock.
Mr. Deputy Speaker (Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar) in the Chair.

Shri Brajeshwar Prasad (Bihar: General): Sir, I beg to move:

"That in the Resolution moved by Mr. R. K. Sidhva, after the word 'rice', the words 'and wheat' be inserted."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in the Resolution moved by Mr. R. K. Sidhva, after the word 'rice', the words 'and wheat' be inserted."

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: Sir, I beg to move:

(i) "That in the Resolution moved by Mr. R. K. Sidhva, after the word 'serving', the words 'more than one pound per diem of' be inserted."

(ii) "That in the Resolution moved by Mr. R. K. Sidhva, before the word 'occupants', the words 'each of' be inserted."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Amendments moved:

(i) "That in the Resolution moved by Mr. R. K. Sidhva, after the word 'serving', the words 'more than one pound per diem of' be inserted."

(ii) "That in the Resolution moved by Mr. R. K. Sidhva, before the word 'occupants', the words 'each of' be inserted."

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: Sir, I have welcomed this opportunity from more than one point of view. First of all because I feel that it enables me to give to the House a little fuller picture, and more directly than might have been otherwise possible, of what has so far been done and why more has not been done. But I have welcomed it even more from another point of view that it gives to the House an opportunity which I feel is being fully taken advantage of to consider the larger issues involved in regard not only to our food problem but also in regard to agricultural development generally. Before, however, I go further into these matters I wish to express my regret at the inconvenience felt by some of the Members of the House who received such material as could be got together, only this morning. I understand that this inconvenience was felt particularly by those who reside in the Constitution House. (Honourable Members: "By others also; by everybody"). Well, so far as the Department was concerned, we issued the material last evening, and I understand that the Assembly Department also issued the material last night.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: At what time? The man came at midnight.

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: I am stating the facts as I have come to know of them. It is not usual when non-official resolutions are moved, for the Department to place any material before the Members. What has been now placed before the Members is almost entirely the same material as has come before them on many earlier occasions either directly or through the press. Most of it is therefore not new to them. It has been collated for convenience of reference except one table of the actual results of the Grow More Food effort which we are receiving, as a result of repeated telegraphic reminders, from the Provinces—and one Province, namely, Orissa has not yet been able to supply us the information we require.

Shri H. V. Kamath (C.P. and Berar: General): May I submit that at least the brochure regarding the proceedings of the Conference of Ministers of Agriculture of Provinces and States called by the Government of India on the 8th and 9th September—that is, six months ago—could have been supplied to us two or three months earlier? It came to us only this morning.

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: The full text of the speech delivered in September 1948 and the full text of the Resolutions passed at the Conference were published in the papers. That is why I say there is no new material that is being put before you, except that it is put together for convenience of reference.

[Shri Jairamdas Doulatram]

Sir, before I take up the first Resolution I would like to say a few words with regard to the second one moved by Shri Sidhva. I may inform him that the suggestion made by the Food Grains Policy Committee that the Provinces should examine the question of cereals being surrendered in the case of meat-eaters was sent to all the Provincial Governments, and almost all of them have stated that it is impracticable and that they would not be able to enforce it. I do not, however, know how much saving would be caused if rice were surrendered in the case of meat-eaters. I do not know on what basis exactly Shri Sidhva gave us the figure of 2½ lakh tons. He referred to the census of 1931. I would like to know how he has calculated the figure of 2½ lakh tons from the census of 1931.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: I said it was all vague and that I calculated it myself from the various aspects—the number of hotels.

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: It is difficult to put the number of workers.....

Shri R. K. Sidhva: I said number of hotels because my resolution refers only to hotels and restaurants. I calculated it on the basis of 50 persons attending a hotel.

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: As we know, hotels are scattered throughout the country. There are many hotels in the non-rationed areas and it will be difficult to calculate how much saving is going to be made if the restriction applies only to the hotels in the rationed areas. Then there are certain other aspects of the question. In the case of hotels like the Taj Mahal hotel I can easily understand restrictions being placed. But if these restrictions are going to be extended to a large number of those hotels which the lower middle classes and the poor classes visit, then I do not know whether Government will not be inviting curses upon itself if it removes from the diet of these poor people the major item of food and force them to satisfy their appetite by a greater intake of meat or fish or other more costly foods. I do not know what would be the reaction in the Constitution House itself if both rice and wheat were eliminated and the Caterer came in for fresh terms of contract because vegetable, meat and fish has to be increased to satisfy appetite. All that, I think, is practicable is that in most of the European type or restaurants, possibly at the railway stations, possibly in some of the big cities, some amount of restraint may be possible, but in the case of the majority of the hotels where the meat eaters go, an increased intake of the more costly potatoes or the more costly meat diet, will not be a solution at all, and I have no doubt it will become an exceedingly unpopular measure.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: My resolution meant only non-vegetarians, not vegetarians.

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: I am also talking of non-vegetarians, because when rice is eliminated, people will have to take instead of rice potatoes, meat or fish or fruits, which are more costly. That is why I said I doubt if it will be popular except in the case of a certain number of restaurants conducted in European style. (Shri V. C. Kesava Rao: Is it not possible to reduce the wheat and rice quota proportionately?) That is a possibility which can be considered, but as I said I am prepared to go into this matter so far as a certain section of the hotels are concerned, but if it is extended to all the hotels where non-vegetarians go, then I think it will lead to a serious difficulty.

Shri B. L. Sondhi (East Punjab: General): Do make a start somewhere.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: Start it in the Constitution House.

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: In the course of Mr. Sidhva's remarks, it was said that there were certain losses in the course of food stuffs being received in India from outside. There is a certain amount of loss in the course of this operation and we are appointing a Committee to go into the question how this loss could be saved or diminished to the maximum extent possible. But there are certain inherent difficulties which we cannot ignore. When crores of maunds are shipped from distant places and they take weeks to arrive, it is not impossible that there are certain leakages. All that I can say is that so far as the shipments from some of the western countries are concerned, the risk of such loss is very little.

So far as Burma is concerned, we are facing special difficulties. After all, where the Governmental control is not very exact and where trade action is comparatively free and unrestricted, many things happen as we in this country also know. We know of what is called the short length or short breadth in the case of cloth. Foreign merchants have complained of the manner in which our trade sends out certain goods and how quantity and quality suffers. Therefore, in the case of Burma we have been feeling special difficulty because of certain laxities in trade which are not within our control, but with regard to that also, the matter will be examined and we shall see what is possible to reduce our losses so far as Burma is concerned.

The difficulty is that on account of our allocation of rice being fixed by the International Emergency Food Council, the places from where we have to import are also fixed by them, so that we have no alternative left except to secure all that we need from certain countries, and the difficulties with regard to those countries have somehow to be put up with by us. But, as I said, in any case, this matter will also be examined and we will try and reduce the loss to the country.

I may mention that soon after I took charge, I discovered that in regard to one important port where the arrangements were in the hands of local authorities, we were suffering very heavy losses in regard to weight after unloading from the steamer. This matter also was gone into fully and we provided in the new contracts that there must be cent per cent. weight of the lakhs of tons that used to come in bulk in the ships. That means, unbagged food was simply put into the hold and we had to re-weigh it; and therefore this new system or re-weighing every maund of foodgrains was provided for in the new contracts and we have been able to save a very large amount on that account.

Coming to the main question, I am anxious that in this debate I should derive the maximum benefit from the constructive suggestions of the members of this House. It is possible to discuss this question in a manner which may, at the end of it, leave no tangible, concrete result, but as I sense it, the desire of the House is to conduct the discussion in a manner which leaves us with definite, tangible proposals with regard to one of the most difficult problems of the country. I have a feeling that we have not been able, all of us, to consider the difficulties inherent in the situation and we expect certain results from small measures and therefore our disappointment is the greater.

Taking first the smaller problem of our increase in imports this year, it is inherent in the situation that this year we have to import more than we did last year. Not that we desire to import even a single maund or ton, but the present situation is such that there is no other remedy at present possible, unless the provinces rise to the occasion even during this year. I will explain briefly what I mean. We have just re-imposed control. During 1948 when we imported round about 28 or 30 lakh tons, we were progressing gradually towards de-control. Government was giving up its responsibilities for rationing the people and so Government's need for imports was diminished. Need of local procurement was diminished. But we have to re-impose control during this year, that means Government has to hold within its own possession larger quantities of food to feed a larger proportion of population. In these circumstances, it was inevitable that we should have to import more. In 1948 we came down to one-fourth of the persons whom Government was feeding directly through its own ration shops in January 1947 but gradually, in September-October-November 1948 this number began to increase so that today in January the number is double of what it was in the middle of 1948. And the policy of re-control, that by October 1947 we should reach the same extent of rationing, that is cover the same proportion of population as we covered in October 1947; that means directly and indirectly round about 15 crores of men. At present Government is rationing or indirectly supplying or through controlled distribution feeding about seven Crores of men. Six months ago, it was three crores of men. At the end of October 1949, Government has to take the responsibility of feeding directly or indirectly and distributing directly or indirectly to 14 crores of men. Obviously this means that the Government must procure more or import more.

Now with regard to this particular matter of importing and procuring, I want to give you a few more facts. What has happened in the course of these two years 1947-48, 1948-49? Surely our population has increased. Forty lakhs a year is the annual addition to our population. Therefore in the course of these two years—the last year of control and the end of next year of re-control, the population will have increased by about 80 lakhs. What else has happened is that there is progressive urbanisation in our country. More and more people every year are getting drawn to towns for various economic and other reasons. Prof. N. G. Ranga. "Assured rations at controlled prices in towns.") Yes, may be. What I am saying is that it is therefore the responsibility of Government for feeding more people than before.

Shrimati G. Durgabai (Madras: General): May I know within what period this increase of population was effected, from three crores to seven crores.

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: During 1948. In two or three provinces rationing has been re-imposed gradually. More and more towns are being included in that control system. Therefore, the responsibility of the Government is increasing. This is visualized and we are planning to cover 1949. (Shrimati G. Durgabai: "It is a period of two years.") During the period of two years, there has been an increase in population. Forty lakhs a year is the natural increase in population. Then there is more urbanisation and then the direct responsibility of refugees.

Then with regard to procurement, since members of the House belong to Provinces and have some influence on the Provinces, I would wish to give you some idea of our procurement. If our local procurement increases, our imports naturally decrease. One method of decreasing imports is to try to procure as much as possible within the country. All the crores that we are sending out would then be paid to our own people. Now, it is here that we come across some amount of difficulty. The procurement also differs from province to province. I will give you the figures, percentages of procurement, to the total production in each province, for this year of 1949 and you will see how different and how varying is the effort to be put forth by the provinces. Madras will procure 20.8 per cent. of its total production and thereby assume control of one fifth of the product of the fields with a view again to redistribute to people. Bengal will procure 14.9 per cent. of the provincial production. Bombay will procure 6.5 per cent. of its total yield C.P. will procure 8.7 per cent. Assam will procure 15 per cent. Orissa will procure 6.4 per cent. The United Provinces 4.8 per cent. and Bihar 2.6 per cent. Now from this, you will find that there are some provinces which are procuring a much smaller proportion of the total yield of their fields than others. If rationing and control are to be a success and if our imports are to be further reduced, it is only possible when there is a greater uniformity of sacrifice and a much larger proportion is procured in certain regions of our country. (Shri Sitaram S. Jajoo: "What about the Indian States?") I have not got the figures of the Indian States. With regard to the States, it has been our experience that except a few of the bigger states, it is very difficult to get definite statistics. Their administrative machinery has not yet been tuned to the requirements of the present situation and both with regard to production and procurement, we are always in difficulty with regard to a number of states. But I know that there are some states, for instance, Cochin is procuring 33 per cent. and Travancore round about 20 per cent. (Prof. N. G. Ranga: "They produce so little!") I have tried to explain and give reasons why the scale of our imports need not surprise us until our production has increased and why we are importing more this year than we had to do last year. As I said, it is inherent in the situation.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru (U.P.: General): Can the Honourable Minister tell us what proportion of the food grains produced in the U.P. was procured in 1946-47?

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: It is round about the same figure, four per cent. or there about all these four years—1946, 1947, 1948 and 1949.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Madras: General): That is for export from U.P.

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: It is procured by the Provincial Government for the purpose of rationing in the province.

Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi: May I know how is it possible to ration with a total procurement of 4 per cent. of the total production, Sir?

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: Each province calculates the maximum it could procure and then comes up to us for the deficit.

Shrimati Dakshayani Velayudhan (Madras: General): Can not the Government insist on the provinces and say that they should procure a certain percentage?

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: It is difficult to be ordering about the Provincial Governments; we discuss with them; they explain to us their difficulties and they say this is the utmost that is possible.

Shrimati G. Durgabai: What was procured, was it procured uniformly or are there variations?

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: There is no variation within the provinces; they try to procure from all the surplus regions.

Shrimati G. Durgabai: I think there are variations in the procurements so far as the provinces are concerned, variations in procurement from month to month even within the provinces.

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: The amount which may be procured in a particular month differs from what may be procured in another month. It depends on how near you are the harvesting time; when the crops come to the market and sometimes the Provincial Governments also adjust their amount of procurement to the prices prevailing and there are a number of other factors which govern the total procurement.

I have tried to explain the reasons why larger imports are inherent in the situation so far as we are concerned this year.

Now I come to the major question—permanent schemes of production. As I have said recently and as was referred to by my honourable friend Mr. Sidhn, if we are not seized of the basic factors in the Indian agricultural situation and they do not compel us to try and deal with them, then I am afraid the present nature of complaint will continue. What I mean to say is that a big economic change has taken place since the middle of 1947, and that big economic change has thrown our country to a much larger extent than before on the uncertainties of the monsoon. We may say that we knew it in 1947 as we know it today; but what I feel is that we have got to deal with the situation and understand the implications of that situation. It may surprise you if I tell you that one implication of that situation has been that not only with regard to food, but with regard to jute and cotton, the attempt to make India self-sufficient and not to have to depend on Pakistan is making those who are interested in jute and cotton to ask for roundabout forty six lakhs of acres from the existing food acreage. That means, if we are to be self-sufficient in the matter of both jute and cotton, we must hand over from the food area about forty six lakhs of acres. Now here we are compelled to face a deficit in food. We are planning to reclaim land and increase the area under food crops; we are confronted with the problem of increasing the acreage for jute and cotton by handing over acreage from food. Therefore, what I am anxious this House should seriously consider is that the implication of this economic change should be fully discussed and its remedies for the situation implemented.

I will read out to you a few basic figures which though they are merely figures, their full economic import is vastly greater. After the partition, India has to maintain 80 per cent. of the original population; but the rice production on which to sustain this 80 per cent. of the population is only 69 per cent. Here we have got a definite big shortage due simply to the fact of partition. Wheat production is only 66 per cent. as against 80 per cent. of population. The irrigated area under wheat is still less, it is 54 per cent. All this has certain inherent consequences in the sphere of food production. (Shrimati Benudha Ray: "What is the acreage under tobacco cultivation?") When you realise that the acreage under food is sixteen crores of acres, you will see that even if tobacco is given up, it will make a difference of only a few lakhs of acres.

Shrimati G. Durgabai: I think that introduces a material change.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: You must prohibit smoking then, or import cigarettes.

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: Out of sixteen crores of acres under food grains, about 25 per cent. only is under permanently dependable perennial irrigation. So that 75 per cent. of our food has to weather the vagaries of monsoon. We have seen what has happened this year. Portions of Bombay province, Saurashtra and Cutch suffered from lack of rains; excess of rain resulted in damage in the United Provinces and Bihar; Cyclone affected both Bombay and indirectly the Central Provinces. Therefore, the difficulties of a country which is basically agricultural and which has to depend on the monsoons to such a large extent, have to be specially considered and dealt with.

The Food Grains Committee tried to deal with this situation. They made three broad recommendations. When we talk of the failure of the Grow More Food Campaign, the unsatisfactory results of the Grow More Food Campaign, or when we naturally express disappointment when we find that even this year we are short of food, not only with regard to the Government's food budget which is separate from the country's food budget—the Government's food budget is the requirement of the rationed areas, procurement made by the provincial Governments and imports by the Central Government, whereas the country's food budget is entirely different and much vaster, because the entire population is fed and all these sixteen crores of acres under foodgrains feed them—when we talk of the unsatisfactory results of the grow more food Campaign, we should realise what is this Grow More Food Campaign. The Grow More Food Campaign is only one of the three measures, and in a way the smallest measure recommended by the Food Grains Policy Committee. The Grow More Food Campaign is sustained by three or four crores of rupees of loans or grants from the Centre and three or four crores of rupees spent by the provinces, covering last year about eighty lakhs of acres. Eighty lakhs of acres out of sixteen crores under food grains makes round about five per cent. It is five per cent. of our food grains area which has been dealt with last year by this one recommendation of the Food Grains Policy Committee, which is called the Grow More Food Campaign. When my honourable friend Shri Sidhva suggested that we must have some short term policy, the short term policy is this policy recommended by the Food Grains Policy Committee. A short term policy cannot give you in a short period big results. There is no short-cut to get over our basic difficulty. (Shri R. K. Sidhva: "It will give small results, if not big results.") Coming to the small results, I would request the members to dispassionately consider what has been done. Under the Grow More Food Campaign, as visualised by the Food Grains Policy Committee, a target of nine lakhs of tons of extra production was planned for 1947-48, nine lakhs of tons to be produced by about eight or nine provinces. How was this extra production to be put up? Through wells and tanks, through seed, through fertilisers, through other manure. It is not possible for the Agriculture Department to function without the fullest co-operation of many other departments, and many other bodies outside the Agriculture Department. Take the simple question of fertilisers. When we planned for nine lakhs of tons for the various provinces, we planned that we will be able to give so much of fertilisers to the various provinces. Fertilisers are to some extent produced in this country; but a greater proportion has to be imported from outside. How much we should give to our country is not to be determined by us. It is the International Emergency Food Council which makes the allocation of these fertilisers for India. In making this allocation, they include also the local production in this country. Having included the local production in this country, they fix the quota. We asked for a certain quantity; we were allocated only 50 per cent. When we tried to purchase and import, on account of various difficulties and factors, we were able to give to our provinces only one-third of the quantity of fertilisers on the basis of which we had planned the increased production of nine lakhs of tons. You may criticise any provincial Government or the Central Government; here is a basic fact; we planned on the basis of a certain quantity of fertilisers and two-thirds of that quantity did not become available. Naturally, this will affect the quantum of results. It may be that other factors may come to the rescue; but so far as fertilisers are concerned, naturally, the result could be only one-third. Then, take another factor, steel. Steel is wanted for the ploughs; ploughs break; they go out of repair. I know a number of provinces complaining against their own Department of Industries that it does not give an adequate share of steel for the agricultural implements. (Shri Mihir Lal Chattopadhyay: "That is being sold in the black market for building cinema houses.") I am talking of the allocation by the Central Government to the provinces. The Agriculture Departments in the provinces received only 40 per cent. of the quantity of steel on the basis of which they had planned this target of 9 lakh tons. Take another difficulty. I was discussing with a Minister of Agriculture in one of our provinces only the other day and asking why the wells programme had not come off properly, and he said that he tried hard for certain facility for transport. We know how vigorously the transport authorities are trying to help and there is no doubt that progress has been achieved during the last six months but yet the strain on the transport system is so great that though 800 wagons were promised to one of our big provinces to carry coal dust for bricks for 6000 wells, only 10 wagons could be made available. The result was though other transport was somehow secured and even then, instead of 6000 wells, only 1800 wells could be constructed and many of them after the actual season for irrigating crops had passed. Now

all these various difficulties cannot be made to disappear by a wave of the hand. (Shri B. L. Sondhi: "What is the position of the new tube-wells?") I hope to give you information in the course of the discussion later on. In spite of these difficulties, according to the latest reports sent to us by the provinces which we have put in one of the appendices given to you, you will find that nearly seven lakh tons has been the extra production in the provinces towards the target of nine lakhs. Now when you say that the Grow More Food Campaign has not been satisfactory, it has not been satisfactory to the extent that instead of nine lakhs we have been able to produce only seven lakh tons. But I have given you many causes which are our handicaps. Suppose we had achieved the target of nine lakhs through these various methods of wells and fertilisers etc., after all what is nine lakh tons as against this huge demand for feeding well over 34 crores of men. The G.M.F. campaign affects only five per cent. of the area under foodgrains. We must realise that though this campaign will go on to increase the yield for the next three to five years, the major effort is to be on the rest of the area which is under foodgrains and unless as I say we realize that new irrigation schemes must place the fields of this country on a more dependable source of supply or unless thousands upon thousands of tube-wells give greater abundance of water supply to our fields, and unless many lakhs of acres of new land are put under the plough, it is not easy to meet the requirements of a growing population which increases at the rate of forty lakhs a year. Therefore I would very respectfully venture to suggest that apart from any criticism which may be perfectly justified to some extent and here and there the administration may not have functioned whether in the Centre or in the provinces satisfactorily, and I do not want to dispute that point—but I really want that we should place our emphasis on the broader issues which are facing the country and not only in the context of food production but in regard to general agricultural production as well. As I said in the case of jute and cotton, both these crops have to grow if India is to become self-sufficient. So also in the case of food, if we are to feed our country properly. As in the case of other countries we ought to produce sufficiently not merely for satisfying ourselves with the minimum requirements but we should have plenty. But I feel there are certain remedies which somehow we are not at present desirous of using or we are not at present decided upon using them and I feel strongly that the situation being what it is, it is in India's economic interest and it is in the interest of India's Industrial development also that we must spare more resources for the development of agriculture, whether it is food or other things. To-day most of our man-power, and money power is going in other directions and we retain the old prejudice which we entertained when the British wanted to place agriculture in the front as against industry—we suspected them—but to-day I realize that unless our country first develops agriculturally it can not progress industrially. Take our provinces. With the best of intentions they are sponsoring various industrial plans. For those plans the provinces need money, technical skill, engineers and dollars for the plant which is necessary and the same deficit provinces come again to the Centre for importing food from outside for which we have no dollars because the provinces want the dollars for the provincial industrial plans. In this country alone some of our friends feel, more money is being spent by the agriculture Department in the Centre than it should. I feel that is not a correct criticism. At least that is not a conception of things which is in consonance with our big developmental plans. Take a country like America where the Federal Government has not an inch of land of its own and yet the Federal Government in U.S.A. is spending Rs. 78 per man for Agriculture. I am not even saying per agriculturist or rural person—but per man—and only 50 per cent. of the population are rural but taking the whole population, U.S.A. is spending Rs. 80/- per man per year. We are spending only one anna per man. The Federal Government of America though not having any land of its own has taken some responsibility in regard to agriculture and need about 400 Agricultural Officers of the Central authority for every ten million persons. Even Britain—industrially so highly developed—has under the Central Government 20 Agricultural Officers for every 10 million persons, apart from Provincial. (Shri R. K. Sidhva: "There are no Provincial Governments in U.K.") Those who have been to America will be able to give more definite information. The Provincial Governments there have representatives in every country. In India the Central Government has for every ten million people six agricultural officers. It is not easy to shape things effectively, rapidly satisfactorily with very inadequate staff. I am not talking of the Centre alone but also of the Provinces. Agriculture in the Centre has eight per cent. share only of the budget. I feel that in the interest of this country agricultural production ought to be given the topmost priority and it is inherently in the interest even of the industrial development of the country. Unless agricultural wealth increases, there is no foundation for full industrial progress. Therefore what I feel is that unless opinion is cultivated in favour of giving to agricultural development its proper place both in the counsels of the people and of the legislatures and all co-operate, we will not be able to reach the goal that we are anxious to reach. There is need of reconsideration of the situation. There is need of co-ordination, and re-direction in this matter and there is need of, if you like, of fresh planning at the top in this matter but I do think that something ought to be done so as to improve the situation in a brief time. It may be, as I said, there is plenty to criticise but I think we should deal with the very important issues in a deliberative and well considered manner.

Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi: What is the quota for every province? There is some quota fixed of so much tonnage to respective provinces with regard to actual quantity that may be allotted to provinces from the Centre. I want actual quota of food grains.

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Daulatram: It depends on their needs. There is no fixed quota except in relation to needs. Take Madras last time. We knew at the last budget session what the situation was. We thought there was to be a famine there. So we gave more. Take Bombay. We will be forced to give more this time to Bombay. It depends on the local procurement and yield and the extent of rationing necessary, existence of the labour population, and railwaymen and several other factors.

Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi: I thought a quota was fixed. The Central Government fixes a quota for every province.

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Daulatram: Yes, it does after knowing how much is procured locally. (Shri Jaspal Roy Kapoor: "What quota has been allotted to the United Provinces?") I could not tell straight off. I will try and give you the information in the course of the debate.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: I am sure the House is indeed very grateful to the Honourable Minister, Shri Jairamdas Daulatram for having put in such an eloquent plea in favour of agricultural development. I am whole-heartedly in agreement with what he has said this afternoon. I think it is necessary for this House to concentrate more on the essentials of the situation than on the details of this Grow More Food campaign. It is true, Sir, as he said, that our country has now become dependent too much upon rain-fed cultivation and rain-fed cultivation is fitful, is undependable, and has become extremely risky. I am sorry my honourable friend did not mention the fact that large portions of Madras also are today in the grip of conditions verging on famine because of the failure of rains and also by the visitation of pests. Now such conditions are present in large areas of our country because large extents of irrigated areas have been lost to us by the division of our country into Pakistan and Hindustan; also secondly because the irrigation projects have not been developed. I have been most extremely anxious, Sir, that irrigation projects ought not to be postponed but most unfortunately for us, some of the important irrigation projects, I am afraid are likely to be postponed for some years to come. A year lost is not going to come back again. A statesman can have only a number of years to serve his country, and our statesmen, who are today providing the national leadership in such a strong and stable Government, should be enabled to achieve these irrigation projects before it is time for them to lay down their reins of office and retire into private life, as otherwise it may become possible for those destructive social and economic forces which are only waiting for a chance to disrupt this country's social and economic order to establish Fascism on the one hand or to totalitarian Sovietism on the other. This is all the more reason why this country should go ahead with all possible irrigation and flood control scheme and projects that can be developed within the next four or five years and that can be completed within the next ten or fifteen years.

I agree with my honourable friend when he said that we spend so little on agriculture. Some of my friends were wondering whether he was really correct to lay so much stress on the number of officers that America employs for every ten million people and when he was deploring that we were unable to employ as many officers. It is true that we have come to be prejudiced against these officers because many of them have not been able to give us as much service as we would have expected. But nevertheless we cannot get on without officers and we must have more and more of them too, especially in these nation-building departments.

I would remind the House and my honourable friend, Mr. Das that not so long ago Maulana Abul Kalam Azad himself had to come to this House and deplore the paucity of funds placed at the disposal of the Education Department, so that various educational institutions could be developed. It is no use going to the other extreme and starving our own nation-building departments. The very first department that ought to be given first priority so far as nation-building is concerned is Agriculture, and we have been giving it step-motherly attention in the Provinces and in the Centre.

Then, Sir, we want more and more food. But how are we going to get it? You have to see to it that your agricultural labour is properly fed and clothed. Are our people taking sufficient care about it? We should also see that our own peasants are properly fed and clothed. We have been neglecting these people. It has been stated here in report after report that unless a direct link is established between the Government on the one side and the producers on the other, it would not be possible for us to have greater production; and secondly to move more and more of it into our markets. Until now very little has been done in establishing that link between peasants on the one side and the producers and the Government on the other. I am glad to notice that in the recent September Conference of Provincial Ministers the conference was able to realise this need and therefore it was suggested that some sort of link should be established. In Madras an experiment has been made for establishing food councils. I submitted a note to the Minister here suggesting that similar Food Councils should be established all over India. Unfortunately for us, even in Madras these councils were given the go-bye and now today there is no real direct link between the producers on the one side and the Government on the other. I wish to reiterate that suggestion, namely, that these food councils should be established in a democratic manner from the village upwards, right up to the Central Government, tier by tier so that it would be possible for the Government, to depend on reliable sources with experience, coming directly from the peasants themselves, and sources of contact between the Government and the peasants on the other. Secondly, I am sorry to know that this Conference of Ministers, although it realized the need and importance of the development of co-operatives for the increased production of food, did not realise, or sufficiently stress, the need for organising co-operative marketing societies. If you were to look into these facts, both in regard to the procurement price and issue price, you will find that in several of these provinces there is as great difference as Rs. 2 per maund in the amount between procurement price and the issue price. This terrible difference of Rs. 2/- has been allowed not for the advantage of the consumer, nor for the advantage of the producer, but for the advantage of these middlemen. Surely this could have been avoided if co-operative marketing societies were organised all over India. An experiment was sought to be made in Madras in this direction to have co-operative producers with monopoly power of procurement and then supplying the consumers. But unfortunately vested interests came in and these societies were given the go-bye. I want similar experiments to be made and indeed a drive should be made in this connection so that you can give sufficient inducement to the producers by way of a higher price without at the same time making the consumers suffer in any way.

Then Sir, comes the vexed question of price. Many a time I have had to refer to it. I wish only to mention it and then proceed further. Until and unless this House and this Government make up their minds and offer a remunerative price, a price that will induce the peasants to place more and more of their land under foodcrops and grow more and more food also on their own land, it will not be possible for you to make this country at any time self-sufficient in regard to food. Secondly, even after offering a remunerative price it is most necessary that you adopt the other suggestion that I had made sometime ago, viz., that the Government should come forward to purchase in advance of the harvest 50 per cent. of the produce that the peasants are prepared to put into the market. The Government have not been willing to do so. I have had occasions to bring to the notice of the Honourable Minister the complaints of the peasants in the South, for their produce is now being purchased by merchants at a considerably lower rate than the controlled price itself. It is a fact that more than 40 per cent. of the peasants are prepared to sell their produce within two weeks after the crop is harvested in order to be able to pay the taxes, rents, interest on loans and to purchase in the new year his requirements in clothing and other articles.

Shri M. Tirumala Rao (Madras: General): Is it also a fact that people are not able to buy at the ceiling price fixed by the Government and so the peasants are prepared to sell at something less than the ceiling price?

Prof. N. G. Ranga: My honourable friend seems to be inverting all the facts. The fact is that there is a ceiling price fixed by the Government itself to the consumer. The consumer is being made to pay that ceiling price. Even today, unfortunately, the middleman goes to the peasant, takes advantage of the need of the peasant to place all his produce in the market, buys the produce at a lower price and obtains from him a receipt to the effect that he has been paid the ceiling price and then pockets all the difference. Who is benefited?

Shri B. L. Sondhi: That may be so in Madras but not in our province.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: That only shows to you that more than 40 per cent. of our peasants are not able to keep the grains even in their houses for a fortnight. There is a merchant to my back and a landlord in front of me and to them these things cannot be apparent. I know where the shoe pinches and it pinches me also because I am one of the producers. (Shri B. L. Sondhi: What do you produce?) Therefore it is most necessary that these middlemen should be eliminated.

There is the question of the inducement to the peasants. There was one suggestion made sometime ago, when there was a full-dress debate in this House, by my honourable friend Mr. Santhanam, that prizes should be offered to all those peasants who show better and better results of production from their own fields. I have submitted a memorandum to the Government on that particular point and till now we have not had either a proper response or any result of that suggestion.

We must also take sufficient steps to persuade our peasants to shift from non-food crops to food crops. It is very easy for some of my honourable friends to suggest 'why not force them to change to non-food crops.' It is very easy to say so but not in actual practice. First of all, it may be impossible for provincial governments to coerce the peasants. It is not going to be easy, it is not going to be wise or even in the interest of the country itself. On the other hand it is much better to adopt the policy that the American Government has adopted of starting what is known as the 'Agricultural Finance Corporation' and then financing from it only the production of certain crops and in that manner induce the peasants to take to those crops which are desired instead of going on producing non-food crops. Similar steps should be taken in this country. Sometime ago we suggested in this House also that there should be something corresponding to the Industrial Finance Corporation for agriculture also, that there should be an Agricultural Finance Corporation. Till now no steps have been taken in that direction.

It should also be possible for the Government to compensate the peasant to some extent by saying that for every acre of land that they shift to food production from non-food products they would be willing to give a certain amount of subsidy. They did so during the war when they wanted the peasant to give up cotton cultivation and take up some other crop. Similar steps should be taken in order to induce our peasants to place more and more of their land under food. I want to sound a warning that there has been a flight of land from food production to production of non-food crops. Let us also remember one other fact. There are places where food crops cannot be grown, because of their entire and exclusive dependence upon rains and hence only non-food crops can be grown. We should consider how we can prevent this by pursuing the present Grow More Food Campaign in the way of advancing money to peasants in order to enable them to sink more and more wells, tubewells, dig small tanks, or place small anicuts across small rivulets and thus bring more land under food. In these directions some progress has been made and that must be said to the credit of the Grow More Food Campaign. It is true that there has been a certain amount of corruption, there has been a certain amount of leakage and waste of money also. The Government also admits it and the only way in which you can prevent it is by what the Government itself at last has come to realise, namely by establishing direct contact with the peasant through their own organisations and also individual ad hoc organisations that have come into existence such as food committee.

The Centre must induce provinces like the United Provinces and Bihar who are placing only ten or twelve per cent. of their total estimated production at the disposal of your procurement officers, to place more and more of their food at their disposal. What you ought to do is to give them every possible encouragement by way of consumer goods and also producer goods. Very little has been done in this direction. We have been asking for these things again and again but with very little effect. Therefore I suggest that it is most necessary that at the Centre anyhow, as well as in the provinces, the Industries Minister, the Agriculture Minister and here is my friend the biggest transport bottleneck, the Transport Minister, these three ministers should go into a sort of special committee and they should make it their job to see for themselves, once in every three months, how much of iron they have been able to supply to the peasants and not merely iron in the form of iron ploughs, sickles and other implements that the peasants want, but how much of building material they have been able to make available to the peasants, also clothing, kerosene and other essentials, in regard to which there is today a shortage and control and which they are unable to get normally even in towns with ration cards in their possession. Unless such steps are taken in order to induce our peasants and through the peasants our provincial governments, it will not be possible for us to maximise our total procurement.

When you impose this compulsory procurement, do not take away from the peasants even that portion of grain which they themselves need for their own consumption and for the consumption of their labourers as also for their use as seeds and for other agricultural purposes. Secondly, when you reserve a certain portion for the local agricultural labour, do not keep it with the peasant himself. He may not behave himself properly. Take it away from him and keep in charge of the local village store and make it incumbent upon the store to distribute this grain at controlled price to the local agricultural labourers as well as non-agricultural labourers in that area. That is the only way in which you can protect the rural non-agricultural population from any kind of black-marketing or very high prices.

I wish to add in conclusion my high sense of appreciation not of the speech of my honourable friend Shri Jairamdas Doulatram (anybody can make a speech like that) but of the sentiments that he has expressed and of his realisation of the fact that agriculture should be given the first place in our national economy and agricultural development and agricultural schemes should be considered to be of as high importance as the development of industrial concerns in our country.

Shrimati Renuka Ray (West Bengal: General): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I think that all Members in this House and people outside in the country will agree, as Prof. Ranga has just pointed out, with what the Food Minister has said, that in these times when the food situation of the country is so extremely grave, it is essential that agriculture and agricultural production should be given prior consideration. We may not be facing the spectacular days of the Bengal famine when before our eyes hundreds and thousands died on the streets of a city. Nonetheless malnutrition is taking its toll and is seriously affecting the efficiency of the race. As a result of this it is really impossible for any scheme of national development to be fruitful in other sphere either. In pre-war days it was a well-known fact that the people of this country lived on a diet which, to quote an eminent foreign dietitian, Sir John Magaw was not fit for rats to survive for more than a certain number of weeks. Since war-time we know how much worse it has become. In spite of this Grow More Food campaign which, according to the reports that the Honourable Minister has placed before us, has been intensified since 1947, we cannot say that we see the slightest signs of a returning—self-sufficiency. The amount of food grains, as he has acknowledged, imported within the year is greater than before and at abnormal prices. This cannot but affect our national economy very adversely. For increased production India needs machine and machine tools, but it is quite impossible for us to concentrate on this aspect.

if the money of this country is drained in bringing in food grains—and this in a predominantly agricultural country.

Long term schemes we have, like multi-purpose, river valley projects and development schemes, which will within ten or fifteen years perhaps bring an increasing measure of prosperity and smiling plenty to this country, but we have got to face the situation as it is now. We have to do this effectively and well and I do feel very strongly that whatever has been done by this Government and the Provincial Governments so far in the direction of bringing in quick returns has not been achieved on any widespread scale. I would even say, in all humility, that the report would be creditable if it were the work achieved by non-official agencies who have not all the facilities at their command than that of a Government which has every facility and is able to Command all resources to encourage and implement such work.

I will not go into all the details of what should be done to bring in schemes whereby we can get quick returns, but I should merely like to stress one or two aspects. With regard to small scale irrigation schemes, though we have seen in the report that a certain number of schemes are being implemented and more schemes are on paper, I do feel that much greater strides could be taken if proper attention is focussed in this direction. I have no desire in particular to make any special criticism of Provincial Governments as such, but I do feel that Provincial Governments as well have not given as much thought to the problem of implementation of schemes as they should have; and I do not think, apart from the large number of committees, Commissions, Paper reports, and such things, the Central Government too has achieved anything worth while. If we really want to reclaim land it can be done by small irrigation projects if they are launched and implemented immediately.

Turning to the question of co-operatives, I see from the report that near Delhi a small number of schemes of co-operative farming at Chatarpur and other places have been started which are already showing signs of success. We are all aware that in an increasing measure fragmentation of land is going on. Some years ago forty per cent. of holdings in this country were less than one acre holdings. Today that has increased much—and this, I might say for those who are particularly interested in the matter, in spite of the fact that daughters have no rights of inheritance! We are faced with this very grave situation in this country and the question of fragmentation of land must be taken up immediately if we intend that scientific methods of agriculture should succeed in any big way, or even in the smallest way. You cannot increase tractor production, you cannot eliminate pests or any of these things unless these things are done on a fairly large scale. You cannot do it in farms which are less than one acre holdings. I would therefore say that co-operative methods of farming must be introduced immediately, and both by legislative action, and by implementation of such schemes Government must go ahead with the work. I notice that in the East Punjab some legislation is going on on these lines, but a good deal more has to be done and I would suggest that the Government of India should focus its attention in those directions.

I do not want to go into a great deal of detail, nor do I wish to reiterate what other speakers have said, nor again do I wish to discuss all the acts of omission and commission which are formidable. I would rather like to make one concrete suggestion for the future. I do feel that the administrative machinery, both in the Centre and in the Provinces, which has to deal with these agricultural schemes has not been adequate as for the purpose. By this I do not mean to cast any personal reflection on any particular person but I feel that it is so in all Departments to some extent. This is a vital point if we should go ahead. We must find some other machinery by which we can go ahead. We must cut red tape. We must cut out the fact that there is no inter-departmental cooperation as has been pointed out in some of the speeches. Prof. Ranga said that we should get the Agriculture Minister, the Transport Minister and other Ministers' departments to meet together; but all these things mean to some extent, delay. I would therefore humbly suggest that it would be much better if we could have some kind of a department dealing in particular, say, with reclamation of waste lands, irrigation and co-operatives, which would be somewhat like a Development Board. It would be somewhat on the lines perhaps of the Boards of these long term river valley projects, where you have an Administrator with certain technical staff to help him who are given full powers to go ahead, and there should be proper financial check from the Finance Department. There should be such a Board or department under the Agriculture Ministry in the Centre and similarly in the Provinces. There should be co-ordination between the Centre and the provinces in this way. It shall be the function of the members of this Board in the Centre not to sit over files in Delhi, but to go round in the districts and the provinces and see that plans are actually implemented. We can have the finest of plans. The last Government had fine plans also, but they were lying in the archives of the Secretariat, and I do think that if we are to go ahead this is the only way.

I would make a further suggestion. There are many things that it is for the public to do and without proper co-operation between Government and the people, we cannot go ahead. The public also must play its part. For instance, they may get used to a different diet. Then there is the other very important point which the Honourable Minister raised,—the question of the increasing pressure of population on land. I do think that it is very essential that family spacing should take place in this country. It is needed for improving the efficiency of the race itself, and for relieving the very grave situation that faces us. In order that people understand the very great necessity for changing the diet, for family spacing, etc., I think that non-official Boards may be attached to these Development Boards, who will advise the latter as well as put before the country the programme that needs their active co-operation. (Shri B. Das: "Why do not associations like the All-India Women's Conference advocate these things?") One of the Resolutions of the All-India Women's Conference held this year at Gwalior did stress this subject of family spacing.

I would like to say that certainly an association like the All-India Women's Conference and various social welfare associations and other economic organisations should be represented on this non-official body which will help the Development Boards to go ahead with the schemes. There should be experts also on these non-official Boards. With the help of such non-official organisations, the Development Boards would be able to go ahead much more quickly and make much greater strides than any Department of Government which is so overwhelmed with red tape can possibly do.

This question of food is a very important question for this country. We are now faced with the question of maintaining minimum standards—these minimum standards which were considered below the minimum in pre-war days. But surely, today we have not only got to see that people get that amount of food that they got in pre-war days, but we have to improve the nutritional level of the country as a whole. I would say that this should be given prior consideration by the Government today, and I would request the Honourable Minister to accept this suggestion of these non-official bodies being helpful and to set up development Boards for these particular matters, where we must have quick returns at once. When all the big schemes of River Valley Projects and Multi-purpose schemes which have been stated or are going to be launched in the future do come to bear fruit India will again become a land of plenty and prosperity, but until such time we must focus our attention on this problem, because without food we cannot get on in any other aspect, and India cannot advance in any sphere of national life.

Shri Biswanath Das (Orissa: General): I am very sorry that a question of this magnitude should have been relegated to a half-day out of one non-official day.

Shri B. L. Sondhi: No, no. We can continue tomorrow.

Shri Biswanath Das: May be, but my complaint is and is bound to be that the Government of the day should make it its responsibility and its duty to come before this House year after year and at least once in six months and lay before it the steps that have been taken in this direction. We clearly and fully realise that you are spending Rs. 150 crores, as it is stated to be the case this year, on the purchase of food grains. This is not a joke. As a result of 150 years of British rule, what have we got? We got two things, namely, one—extensive cultivation of lands, hills, dales and vales, and the other is—a progressive deterioration of soil and yield. In the result, Grow More Food or Perish is the only slogan with which we approach the country. I quite understand this. Having had shaken off British rule and we have to go on with this slogan. But I do not quite realise why my honourable friend the Minister for Agriculture comes before us with a big bill for over five million tons of cereals for the coming year. To me it looks strange. Before me, I have got two reports, namely, the Bengal Famine Enquiry Committee which gives the imports of a decennial period. Nowhere do I see in that report more than 16 and odd lakhs of tons being imported into this country.

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: That was undivided India when Punjab was in India.

Shri Biswanath Das: I am coming to it. I have it in view. There, the maximum that I could see is 19 lakhs and 60 thousand. Even here you have got what is called "re-exports", that is, export to other countries from India. Therefore, the net result is that in no year were we under the necessity of importing more than 17 lakhs of tons. That being the position, we have today to our credit more lands being brought under cultivation, more fertilizers being used for extensive cultivation and so on. The result of all this, as Government state, is an increase of seven lakhs of tons of cereals. I thank my Honourable friend and his activities for all that. But why on earth should you require more than five million tons of cereals?

My honourable friend says "Pakistan". Well, Pakistan has taken from us very good areas, namely, the barrage area of Sind and certain areas of Punjab. True it is. But it has also taken away with it...

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: Only two districts of Western Punjab produced more than the whole of present East Punjab.

Shri Biswanath Das: I know, but it has taken along with it also quite a big area, namely, Frontier Province and East Bengal, which was always a deficit area and a hanger-on on India. Therefore, both these put together, I do not think, we lose very much in the adjustment.

Added to it, you have also snatched away land from other cultivation. Looking at the Cotton Committee report, you find that there is a call and a need for extended cotton cultivation. Similar is the case over all other money crops. All these put together should, I think, entitle you not to need five million tons of cereals. My complaint is, and has been, that you have not got a proper statistical department. You are not publishing your statistics. How on earth can we be useful or helpful to you? I know that provinces like Madras and Bombay have got fairly reliable statistical organisation, but other Provinces and States have none. Under these circumstances, I would not stand on the statistics and I would appeal to my honourable friend, the Minister in charge of the Department to see personally to these things and see that these unnecessary swelling of figures are not published without necessary scrutiny, because they themselves give scope for black marketeers to store up paddy and create a situation and bring about an artificial rise in prices.

Sir, having stated so far, I come to the other question, namely: What else are we to do? Britain has gone. Well, we have to think for ourselves. Sir, looking to the Agricultural Commission's report, I see that Lord Linlithgow, the Chairman of the Committee has stated that for proper organisation of agriculture, agriculture animal husbandry and forestry are necessary to be kept under a unified control. The Centre has all these activities together under one Ministry. Why then do I not see the desired result? The reason, as has been pointedly stated by my honourable friend, Prof. Ranga, is that there is very little coordination worth the name among the ministries. For myself I feel that the ministries are responsible; they have to put their heads together if they want to save India from this unnecessary and artificial trouble. (An Honourable Member: "The whole Government.") I say the four Ministries. They are the Ministry for Agriculture, the Ministry for Finance, the Ministry for Railways and Transport and the Ministry for Industries and Supplies. Unless and until these four ministries put their heads together, I for myself would never believe any results can be achieved. I was also in charge of administration and I know the difficulties and benefits of Co-ordination. (Shri B. L. Sondhi: "What about the Commerce Ministry?") You can have your say when you get your chance. You are entitled to supplement. Sir, these four ministries have to put their heads together. I will explain how it is necessary. Of these four, Finance is very important. When I say Finance, I mean the banks including the Reserve and the Imperial Bank and they are no help to agriculturists and agriculture. You have to make the Finance Ministry to change its tools and to change its ways and be helpful and useful to the Agriculture Ministry and the agriculturists.

Sir, there is no use going in for the foreign useless stuff of Ammonium Sulphate and the like, throwing away your good oil-cakes and bones to the winds. I was appealing to the Honourable Minister for Finance to levy heavy taxation on the export of oil seeds, oil cake and bone. There is no country in the world which would think of throwing away their oil-seeds into the Bay of Bengal as India does today and without sending manufactured goods to outside countries. Sir, why on earth are you sending your oil cakes? How do you expect that that would improve the milk production of your country by sending away the cotton seeds out of your country? It is absurd to talk of more milk production? I will catch hold of the tongue of one who talks of more milk production and at the same time sells away the oil seeds out of my country. (An Honourable Member: "Non-violence?") I agree in a non-violent manner. Sir, my honourable friend talks of milk production. The milch cow requires salt. Are you producing salt? My province would have given you at least ten or fifteen lakh maunds of salt, but unfortunately the machinery is such, the tools of my ministers and the Ministry are such, that instead of Orissa exporting salt, it is itself importing. I have been begging the Ministry and the Minister for the last two years to extend cultivation of the waste salt lands and they have not done so. When the agriculturist does not get salt for himself, how could you expect agricultural husbandry to get salt and how could you expect the agricultural husbandry to utilise salt for agriculture. All these tools, which my honourable friends have in their hands, must either be sharpened or be thrown out. We have reached a time when we will have to decide one way or the other. There are limitations and we have reached the limitations.

Having stated so far, Sir, I will come to the spending capacity of the Government. True it is that the Government of India is spending little. It is not even a step-motherly treatment, because a step mother has some affection, comparing what little has been allotted for Agriculture by my honourable friend, it is not even a step motherly treatment. Sir, England has gone; we do not want to learn much from England but are we not to learn, what England has done in England herself. England was always a food deficit country; they were purchasing food from outside and what did England do during the hard war years? The British Cabinet thought it necessary to invest over 100 crores of rupees (calculated in Indian money) and the result was today you have in England production more than 50 per cent. even during the war years. Is not India capable of doing these things? You are spending at least 100 crores annually. Why not you spend about an equal amount for Agriculture and extend the activities of agriculture? I for myself would be a dog and bay at the Moon than to ask my honourable friend to throw this money into the hands of the black marketeers. I have great respect for honest officials, but I must say it is no use throwing the money into the hands of these wild animals to improve black marketing. Therefore unless state organisation is changed and unless the conditions are changed, and unless as my honourable friend, Prof. Ranga stated, direct relationship through some medium, which the Ministry has to choose, is established between the producer and the Government there is not going to be tangible improvement. (Interruption). Some of the agriculturists are also blackmarketeers. They are worst black-marketeers. But how on earth could you improve? I have appealed to a number of producers and they say, "With what face do you approach us. You are not able to supply us the necessities, even the ordinary requirements in iron. I have not got a rim for my ploughshare, but there is enough iron for putting big buildings". Has the Honourable Minister or the Ministry in the Government of India enquired how many buildings are being constructed in every town and every city? Give me the money. I will give you any quantity of iron that you require on two conditions. Firstly, I should not be asked to state the source from which I purchased; secondly, I should not be asked to tell you the price that I had to pay. Given these two things, I will get you any quantity. Where is all this steel coming from, it is for the Supply Minister to tell us. Therefore, I say, and I repeat that unless there is coordination, nothing will be possible and all this talk will be of no avail. With these conditions being fulfilled, I demand and I do assert that the utmost effort should be made, without caring for inflation, to spend money on agriculture.

Sir, Mr. Guntherstein, writing in 1947, gives you certain prices ruling in the American markets. Butter, Eggs, are cheapest in America, the richest country in the world compared with the Indian prices. How on earth could society subsist under these hard conditions, how can you expect these poor labourers to get on under these hard conditions? Therefore, you have either to bring down prices thoroughly controlling the black-marketeers and producers or you have always to increase the wages of labour and the pay roll of the subordinate officials and the like. These conditions are impossible to be tolerated and I want you, Sir—I am sorry that I do not find the other Ministers also except one—to realise the gravity of the situation and to gauge our feelings in the matter. I call for priority to the needs of agriculture. The Agriculture Minister must make it clear to the Honourable Minister for Supply that this quantity of iron and steel and other things are required for agricultural implements and unless this is done, let him tell him—you go your way and I go my way. I feel sure the Cabinet constituted though it is of Congress and non-Congress men, the leadership is that of the Congress. There is no friend greater than the Honourable Sardar Patel and Pandit Nehru of agriculture and agriculturists. Therefore, you are safe in their hands. I appeal to you who have nothing but sacrifice on your side, not to be worried over these things, to fight hard and impress upon the concerned gentlemen that either you go with me or go your way.

I am thankful to you, Sir, for having given me time. I have got lots of things to say; but I do not want to trespass on others' time.

سردار بھوپندر سنگھ مان : صاحب صدر ! خوراک کا مسئلہ ایک بہت بڑا اہم مسئلہ ہے۔ اس چیز کو مدنظر رکھتے ہوئے وزیر خوراک نے یہ سوچا کہ اس چیز کو تیزی نہ پایا جا سکتا ہے جب کہ پہلے فوڈ سکریتاریٹ کی تمام مشنری کو خوب تیار کیا جائے۔ چنانچہ انہوں نے grow more food campaign کے لئے ایک بڑی اچھی تجویز نکالی اور وہ یہ کہ انہوں نے grow more food کے لئے grow more secretaries کی ایک بڑی اچھی چیز پیدا کی۔ اور اس طرح سے grow more food کی انہوں نے پہلی منزل کامیابی سے طے کی۔ ساتھ ساتھ یہ چلا کہ grow more secretaries تو ہے۔ لیکن سندھ کی زرخیز زمینیں نہیں ہیں۔ partition کی وجہ سے وہ چلی گئی اور اب ان کا اس پر کوئی بس نہیں رہا۔ زمین تو گئی لیکن آدمی تو نہیں گئے اس لئے grow more secretaries کے ساتھ ساتھ انہوں نے enlist sindhis کا فارمولا بھی چلایا۔ اور میں انہیں اس بات کی مبارک باد دیتا ہوں کہ اس طرح سے انہوں نے grow more food کی دوسری منزل طے کی۔ انہوں نے سندھی دماغ کا دل کھول کر استعمال کیا اور فائدہ اُٹھایا ہے۔ لیکن وہ ایک بات میں چونک گئے کہ جب انہوں نے یہ enlist more sindhis کا campaign شروع کیا تو وہ بھول گئے اس بات کو کہ جو آدمی انہوں نے enlist کئے وہ بیوپاری اور نوکر پیشہ تھے۔ اور بیوپاریوں کی ذہنیت رکھتے تھے۔ وہ صرف خریدنے اور فروخت کرنے میں ہی کامیاب ہو سکتے ہیں۔ ارجنٹائن اور آسٹریلیا سے مکئی، باجرا اور دیگر چیزوں کی قیمت تھہرا سکتے ہیں۔ لیکن جہاں خوراک پیدا کرنے کی بات آتی ہے تو وہ اُن کے بس کی نہیں۔ ان کا دماغ Agriculture میں نہیں چلتا۔ لیکن جہاں تک کہ grow more food کا لگاؤ Commercial پہلو سے ہوتا ہے یہ کامیاب ہوتے ہیں۔ آپ بڑے بڑے ریلوے سٹیشنوں کو دیکھئے۔ کلات سرکس کے بازار میں دیواروں پر دیکھئے تو آپ کو بہت بڑے بڑے اور خوبصورت اور رنگدار اور شاندار پوسٹر grow more food کے متعلق دکھائی دیں گے۔ اور ان کو دیکھ کر کلات سرکس کے دوکان دار لوگ یہ سوچتے ہیں کہ کیا یہی grow more food campaign ہے اور کیا اسی سے لوگ مستفید ہو سکتے ہیں۔

Shri Deshbandhu Gupta: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir on a point of order. Are we discussing the merits and demerits of the different people belonging to the different provinces.

Sardar Bhopinder Singh Man: We are discussing the efforts made by the Food Minister to implement the Grow More Food policy.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member will confine himself to the subject and not refer to personalities.

سردار بھوپندر سنگھ مان: اب دوسرا پہلو سوچا جائے وہ یہ ہے کہ خوراک کو پیدا کرنے کے لئے اور کیا چیزیں ضروری ہوتی ہیں۔ انہوں نے Central Tractor Organization بنائی ہے۔ موجودہ اور نئے دور میں ٹریکٹرز ایک بہت ہی ضروری چیز ہیں۔ اب حالات یوں ہیں کہ یہ ایک ہی Central tractor Organization ہے اور تمام tractors اسی میں جاتے ہیں۔ اور اسی سے تمام صوبوں کو tractors بعد میں دئے جاتے ہیں۔ اور اگر کسی جگہ جہاں پر کہ پرائیویٹ آدمیوں نے یا کسانوں نے کوئی کوآپریٹو سوسائٹی بنائی ہو اور وہ درخواست کریں کہ انہیں tractors کی ضرورت ہے تو ان کو یہ کہا جاتا ہے کہ یہ سب Central Organization سے ہر صوبے کو ملتی ہے۔ تاکہ وہ زیادہ خوراک پیدا کرے۔ اور پراونسوں کو وہی سنٹرل Organization ہی supply کرتا ہے۔ اور اگر Central Organization کو apply کیا جائے تو وہ یہ کہتے ہیں کہ یہ provinces کو grow more food campaign کے بارے میں دئے جاتے ہیں۔ اس لئے آپ اپنے پراونس والوں سے درخواست کریں۔ چنانچہ وہ کسان لوگ اسی دور دھوپ میں پریشان رہتے ہیں اور ان کو کہی بھی یہ tractors نہیں ملتے۔ جناب عالی! آپ کو دعوت دی گئی ہے۔ کہ آپ ہسٹنیاپور، یو۔ پی۔ گورنمنٹ کے ایک سکیم کے بارے میں تشریف لویں۔ اور آپ وہاں جا بھی رہے ہونگے۔ میں بھی ہسٹنیاپور بہت دفعہ گیا ہوں۔ چونکہ ہم refugees ہیں اس لئے ہم نے وہاں پر co-operative کے طور پر farming شروع کی ہے۔ اور اس وجہ سے ہم کو وہاں کے اصلی حالات کا پورا پورا علم ہے۔ جب آپ وہاں جائینگے تو آپ کو وہ لوگ وہاں لے جائینگے جہاں sugar cane کے اُونچے اُونچے کھیت ہوں۔ اور جن کھیتوں میں اچھی اچھی فصلیں لگی ہوں اور کھیتیاں لہلہاتی ہوں۔ لیکن آپ کو وہ یہ نہیں بتائینگے کہ tractor کی کیا average ہے۔ اور ایک ایک پر کتنا خرچ آتا ہے۔ میں آپ کی توجہ خاص طور پر اس طرف دلاتا ہوں کہ جب آپ وہاں جائیں تو آپ یہ دیکھیں کہ وہاں پر کتنے tractor ہیں اور ان کی average کیا ہے۔ آپ کو معلوم ہوگا کہ یہ دو ایک سے لے کر پانچ ایک سے زیادہ نہیں ہے۔ حالانکہ D. 4 ٹریکٹر کا average پندرہ سے بیس ایک ہے۔ مجھے یاد ہے کہ ہمیں بتی مشکلوں سے چھ مہینے کی جدوجہد کے بعد دو ٹریکٹر ملے تھے اور صرف پندرہ دن کے بعد وہ ہم سے چھینے گئے۔ کیونکہ ان کو یہ پتہ چلا تھا کہ ہمارا کام ان سے بہتر ہے اور ہماری average پچیس ایک ہے اور گورنمنٹ کی average صرف پانچ ایک ہے۔ تو اس بات سے پتہ چل سکتا ہے کہ جہاں پر ریفیوجی محنت کا معاملہ تھا وہاں پر کیا average رہا ہے۔ اور گورنمنٹ کا کیا ہا ہے۔ اس کے ساتھ ہی میں

Sardar Bhopinder Singh Man (East Punjab: Sikh): Sir, the food problem is a very important one. Keeping the importance of this problem in view the Honourable Minister of Food thought that this importance can be maintained only when the whole machinery of Food Secretariat be made tiptop. So he devised a very nice scheme for 'Grow More Food Campaign', and that scheme is to grow more secretaries for the Grow More Food, and thus he very successfully crossed one stage in the Grow More Food Campaign. The scheme of grow more secretaries is quite nice but we are not in possession of the fertile lands of Sind. Due to partition they have gone out of our control and so he is helpless in this respect. But though the fertile lands have gone out of control yet the people have not. So he worked out the formula of enlist more Sindhis side by side with the scheme of grow more secretaries. And I congratulate him on his crossing the second stage of his grow more food scheme in such a way. He utilized the Sindhi brain most advantageously but he fell short in one respect namely that when he started his enlist more Sindhis Campaign he completely forgot the fact that the persons he enlisted were tradesmen and clerks and possessed tradesmen's mentality. They can be a success only in business. They can negotiate the prices of maize, millets and other commodities with Argentine and Australia but as far as the question of grow more food is concerned it is beyond their capacity. They cannot comprehend the question of agriculture. But as far as the commercial aspect of the grow more food is concerned they are a success. If you visit the big Railway stations, or look up the walls of the shopping side of Connaught Circus you would see huge, beautiful multicoloured and gorgeous posters concerning grow more food, and after seeing those posters the shopkeepers of Connaught Circus think over if this was 'Grow More Food Campaign' and can the people be benefited by this.

Shri Deshbandhu Gupta (Delhi): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, on a point of order, are we discussing the merits and demerits of the different people belonging to different provinces?

Sardar Bhopinder Singh Man: We are discussing the efforts made by the Food Minister to implement the grow more food policy.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member will confine himself to the subject and not refer to personalities.

Sardar Bhopinder Singh Man: Now let us consider the other aspect, namely what other things are necessary for growing more food. He has set up Central Tractor Organisation. In the present times the tractors are very very important. Now the present position is that there is only one Central Tractor Organisation and all the tractors are given over to this organisation, and from this organisation all the provinces receive tractors afterwards. If at any place private individuals, Pakistanis, start a co-operative society and if they put in an application that they stand in need of tractors then they are told that the Central Organisation gives tractors to the provinces so that they may grow food; and all the provinces are supplied by this very Central Organisation. But if an application is placed before Central Organisation then the reply given is that the tractors are supplied to provinces for grow more food campaign, so the provincial authorities may be approached. The result is that these farmers get fed up with this running here and there and they do not get these tractors also.

Sir, you have been invited to visit the U. P. Government scheme at Hastinapur and I hope you might be going there. I have also been to Hastinapur many times. As we are refugees so there we have started farming on co-operative basis and for this reason we are in the know of the real state of affairs there. When you would go there the people would take you to those places where luxurious sugar cane crops stand, and to those fields where other rich crops may be flourishing. But they would not tell you the average work of a tractor nor would they tell you the expenditure incurred per acre. I want to draw your attention particularly towards this point that when you go there you must see how many tractors are there and what is their average. You would come to know that the average is not more than 2 to 5 acres, although the average of D4 tractor is about 15 to 20 acres. I remember that with great difficulty we got two tractors after a strenuous struggle of 2 months and they also were taken back from us after only fifteen days, because they came to know that our work is better than theirs and our average is twenty five acres while the average of the Government is only five acres. From this it can be ascertained that as far as the work put up by refugees was concerned what the average has been and what has been the Government average. Besides this I would request you that as you have made provision for loans to different industries in the same way loans must be provided for agriculture also. We need money for tube-wells, tractors and other things. For example for tube-wells we need Rs. 20,000 and for tractors Rs. 25,000 i.e., we need Rs. 45,000 in all. If you are not to provide loans for this then kindly tell us from where are we to get this loan. I request you Sir, to make provision in the Budget for agricultural loans as well, in the same manner as you have made provision in the Budget for giving loans to other industries.

I think the Honourable the Food Minister must feel happy about the second resolution moved by Mr. Sidhva wherein he has demanded that in restaurants rice must not be served to non-vegetarians, and one other gentleman has suggested that wheat also must not be served to them. I suggest that vegetables must not be served to those persons who take milk and curds and those who take two or three vegetables must not be served wheat and rice both. By acting on these suggestions there will neither be fire nor smoke and food problem will be solved.

श्री महावीर त्यागी : मद्रास के पास इसके अलावा और भी रुपया है।

ज़रूर हुआ होगा और लोगों को उस तरफ़ रागिब किया गया होगा कि वह कुवें बनावें। मद्रास के अन्दर तकरीबन आठ हजार से कुछ ऊपर कुवें बने हैं और सरकार का चार लाख रुपया खर्च हुआ है। इसी तरह सी० पी० में ५६०० कुवें बने और आपकी सरकार ने कितना रुपया दिया? सी० पी० और बरार के लिए जो आपने ग्रांट (grant) दी खेती करने वाले के लिए वह १.२ लाख रुपया थी, और जो (criticism) त्यागी जी ने किया उसका भी जवाब मौजूद है कि आपने ४९.७ लाख कर्जा भी दिया। तो इस तरह से आप सारा हिसाब लगायेंगे तो आपको मालूम होगा कि सारा रुपया जो दिया गया वह १.७ करोड़ था और उसके बदले में २३ हजार कुवें बने। या तो हम यह मान लें कि यह आंकड़े तमाम ग़लत हैं और अगर हम ऐसा नहीं मानते हैं तो हमें मानना होगा कि हमें काफ़ी (Return) मिला। मैं समझता हूँ कि हमारी (Provincial) सरकारों की जो (agency) आंकड़े इकट्ठा करने की है अगर उस पर रुपये में दस आना बारह आना भी ऐतबार किया जाये तो भी मैं समझता हूँ कि यह आंकड़े बहुत ज़्यादा हिम्मत दिलाने वाले आंकड़े हैं। इसी तरीके से पीछे की बात कही जाती है कि सन् ४३ से ४६ तक इस सिलसिले में १६,१६,८४,१५९ रुपया खर्च हुआ है। तो इस रुपये में उनको और भी चीज़ें जैसे खाद वगैरह भी दी गई थी। लेकिन एक चीज़ जो हमेशा के लिए रहेगी चाहे उसे देने वाली गवर्नमेंट रहे या न रहे वह ५०००० कुवें हैं जो कि बनाये गये। इस सिलसिले में मैं आपसे एक प्रार्थना करना चाहता हूँ। पिछले साल हमने देश के लिए दूसरे देशों से १२९ करोड़ रुपये का अनाज मंगाया, मुझे ठीक आंकड़े याद नहीं हैं, और वह अनाज हमारे वकील भाइयों और शहरी भाइयों को और पढ़े लिखे आदमियों को सस्ता बेचा जिससे हमारी सरकार ने २८ या २९ करोड़ का एक साल के अन्दर घाटा खाया। तो मैं आपसे यह पूछता हूँ कि सरकार हर साल २८ या २९ करोड़ का घाटा महंगा अनाज दूसरे देशों से ख़रीद कर सस्ता बेच रही है तो उसपर तो कोई ऐतराज नहीं किया जाता बल्कि दूसरी किस्म की बातें कही जाती हैं। दूसरी तरफ़ जहाँ आपने तीन साल के अन्दर सिर्फ़ १६ करोड़ रुपया दिया उसके लिए इतना शोर है। मैं तो इसका अर्थ बिल्कुल दूसरे ढंग से समझता हूँ जैसा कि मैंने पहले आपसे कहा था कि यहाँ बहुत सारे ऐसे भाई बैठे हुए हैं जिनका खेती करने वालों से न कोई ताल मेल है और न वह उनकी तकलीफ़ें समझते हैं। एक बात मैं भी कहना चाहता हूँ कि मैं यह तो नहीं मानता कि तरक्की बिल्कुल नहीं हुई, लेकिन मैं मानता हूँ कि मुश्किलता है और उन्हें बहुत अच्छे ढंग से हमें सोचना होगा। हमारी गवर्नमेंट को, सरदार वल्लभभाई पटेल

को, पंडित जवाहर लाल नेहरू को और हमारे जैराम दास जी को उनका हल निकालना होगा। आप चाहते हैं कि देश को ज़्यादा अनाज मिले। देश के लिए ज़्यादा अनाज हासिल करने के लिए आपको यह देखना होगा कि जो लोग अनाज पैदा करते हैं उनको आप कहां तक खुश करते हैं, उनकी (psychology) को आप कहां तक बदलते हैं। जिस वक़्त जैराम दास जी बोल रहे थे उस वक़्त मेरी वहिन रेनुका ने तम्बाकू के बारे में कहा था। कोई पहले का वक़्त होगा, १०० या २०० वर्ष पहले का, जब कि किसान को अपने नुकसान का पता नहीं होता था। आज बहुत सारे किसान पूरे नहीं तो आधे परधे जागे हुए हैं। अगर कोई आदमी यह चाहता है कि जिस फ़सल से उनको ज़्यादा रुपया मिलता है उसको वह एकदम बन्द कर दे तो यह आसान काम नहीं है। हमारे रंगा साहब ने कहा कि शायद कोई गवर्नमेंट मजबूर कर देगी। मैं तो उससे भी ज़्यादा कहता हूँ।

मैं कहता हूँ कि पिछली दफ़ा यह अख़बार नवीस और दूसरे भाई बड़े जोर से यह बात कहा करते थे कि हिन्दुस्तान के अन्दर बलवा हो जायगा यदि शहर वालों के लिये सस्ता अनाज नहीं मुहय्या हुआ, तो मैं तो यह कहता हूँ कि उन बलवा करने वालों के हाथ में न दम है और न तलवार है। और जिन आदमियों को आप मजबूर करना चाहते हैं या जिन को आप दवाना चाहते हैं उनके हाथ मजबूत हैं और उनके हाथ में तलवार है, बलवा हुआ तो ऐसी चीज़ों से होगा। इस लिये आप को अपने किसानों को ऐसी बातों के लिये मजबूर न करना चाहिये जिसमें उनका कुछ फ़ायदा न हो। अगर आप चाहते हैं कि किसान आपके लिये अनाज पैदा करे, अगर आप चाहते हैं कि हिन्दुस्तान दूसरे देशों पर अनाज के लिये मुनहसिर न रहे तो आपको किसानों के दुखों को सुनना ही पड़ेगा। और उनका इलाज भी करना पड़ेगा। आप बेशक कितने ही हथियार रखें, कितने अच्छे ढंग से पढ़ायें लिखायें, कितना ही यह कहें कि "Grow More Food Campaign" फ़ेल होगया इस लिये हम रुपया नहीं देना चाहते हैं, पर इससे कुछ काम नहीं चलेगा। कितने ही देहात के लोग अनपढ़ हों लेकिन वह आज जागृत ज़रूर हैं। मेरे भाई सिधवा साहब तो मजदूरों की बात करते हैं। मैं उनसे कहता हूँ कि यह हिन्दुस्तान किसानों का देश है, अब किसान सोये हुए नहीं हैं, अगर आप चाहते हैं और हमारी सरकार और पार्टी चाहती है कि वह राज्य करें, वह ज़िन्दा रहें, तो उनको किसानों की बात सुननी होगी।

[चौधरी रणवीर सिंह]

उन को क्या (incentive) हम दे सकते हैं कि उनको हौसला मिले। वह दो चार बातें जो रंगा साहव ने कहीं उनके अलावा में कहना चाहता हूँ। आज जब हम देहात में जाते हैं तो हर एक देहात वाला हम से कहता है कि ज़रा सोचिये और बताइये, रोहतक ज़िला यहां से ४४ मील के फ़ासले पर है वहां चना का भाव इस वक़्त आठ रु० है। उसके मुकाबले में दिल्ली है जो ४४ मील पर है, लेकिन यहां १४ रु० का भाव है। तो आखिर इस से किसको आप खुश कर सकते हैं, किसके दम पर हुकूमत चला सकते हैं। अगर आप चाहते हैं

Shri Deshbandhu Gupta: East Punjab Government is responsible for it.

चौधरी रणवीर सिंह: यह तो मुझे पता नहीं कि कौन सी गवर्नमेंट इस में (responsible) है। लेकिन एक बात मैं जानता हूँ कि ईस्ट पंजाब की गवर्नमेंट का यह हुकूम नहीं हो सकता क्योंकि उसके अन्दर कम से कम पांच आदमी ऐसे हैं जो किसान घरानों में पैदा हुए हैं जिनको उनके भाई और रिश्तेदार मजबूर कर सकते हैं कि वह किसानों के नुकसान में न रहें। मैं इसको इस ढंग से समझता हूँ कि उनके ऊपर दबाव से करवाया जाता है, या वे दूसरे अखबार वालों के दबाव से करने पर मजबूर हो जाते हैं

पं० ठाकुरदास भार्गव: ईस्ट पंजाब की गवर्नमेंट की ज़िम्मेदारी है।

चौधरी रणवीर सिंह: मैं दो एक बातें और कहना चाहता था क्योंकि मसला भी ऐसा था लेकिन कुछ तो घंटी भी बज चुकी है। मेरा दिल तो था कि कम से कम दस पंद्रह मिनट और भी बोलूँ पर इस बात को ख़त्म करके मैं वह बातें कहना चाहता हूँ और मुझे आशा है कि सभापति जी, क्योंकि यह किसानों का मसला है, इस लिये मुझे थोड़ा समय देंगे।

आज खास तौर से नौ बजे कागज़ात मिलने के बावजूद मैं दावा करता हूँ कि मैंने इसका एक एक हरफ़ पढ़ा है, इस लिये मुझे और भी आशा है कि कुछ सुविधा सभापति जी जरूर देंगे।

मैं आप को बता रहा था कि अगर आप चाहते हैं कि अनाज किसान ज्यादा पैदा करे, तो आपको यह चीज़ हटानी पड़ेगी। आपको जो आंकड़े दिये गये हैं उसमें से देख लीजिये। आप चावल को ले लीजिये। सी० पी० गवर्नमेंट (Rice) ११ रु० ६ आना फी मन के हिसाब से हासिल करेगी। इसी तरह मदरास के अन्दर चावल ७ रु० १४ आ० ३ पा० के हिसाब से किसानों

से हासिल किया जायेगा। लेकिन जो गवर्नमेंट देगी, मेरा मतलब यह नहीं कि उन्हीं सूबों की बल्कि आखिर हिन्दुस्तान एक देश है हिन्दुस्तान की कोई न कोई गवर्नमेंट जो लोगों को देगी उस भाव का भी आप अंदाज़ा लगाइये। यू० पी० के अन्दर (Issue Price) ३० रु० मन होगी चावल की। बम्बई के अन्दर ३४ रु० २ आ० ८ पा० फी मन के हिसाब से चावल दिया जायगा। इसी तरह से आप (wheat) का हिसाब ले लीजिये। (Wheat) राजस्थान के अन्दर १० रु० फी मन के हिसाब से हासिल किया जायगा। (Procurement scheme) के तहत में और दिल्ली के अन्दर १४ रु० ८ आ० के हिसाब से हासिल किया जायगा। और दिल्ली के अन्दर एक और अजीब बात है कि दिल्ली में जो लोगों को दिया जायगा वह १२ रु० कुछ आने फी मन होगा। लेकिन दूसरे सूबों में (Issue price) जिस पर गवर्नमेंट देगी वह भी आप अंदाज़ा करके देखिये। हैदराबाद के अन्दर २५ रु० ३ आ० फी मन के हिसाब से गवर्नमेंट देगी। सी० पी० के अन्दर २० रु० ३ आ० के हिसाब से दिया जायगा। इसी तरह से दूसरी चीज़ें ले लीजिये। चना लीजिये। वह जैपूर के अन्दर ६ रु० ३ आ० मन के हिसाब से हासिल किया जायगा। ईस्ट पंजाब के अन्दर ८ रु० मन के हिसाब से हासिल किया जायगा। राजस्थान में सिर्फ़ ५ रु० मन के हिसाब से हासिल किया जायगा। लेकिन सौराष्ट्र के अन्दर १६ रु० ११ आ० में और यू० पी० के अन्दर १२ रु० १० आने में बेचा जायगा। आप ज़रा सोचें यह देश किसानों का है और किसान भी वह लोग हैं जो पढ़े लिखे नहीं, जो आपकी इस बात को नहीं समझ सकते कि यह ईस्ट पंजाब सरकार का कसूर है, या सेंट्रल गवर्नमेंट का या दूसरी सरकार का कसूर है, या अखबार वालों का है। वह समझते हैं कि उनके साथ अन्याय होता है। अगर आप चाहते हैं कि वह ज्यादा अनाज पैदा करें तो आप यह कीजिये कि (highest procurement price) और इश्यू प्राइस (Issue Price) जो हिन्दुस्तान में हो उसमें ज्यादा फर्क नहीं होना चाहिये। इतना फर्क हो जितना कि किराया लगे। इससे ज्यादा होगा तो आप याद रखिये आपकी गवर्नमेंट के पास चाहे जितनी मंज़ूत पुलिस हो, कितनी ही ताकत आपके पास हो (Black-market) नहीं रोक सकेंगे। (Black-market) का बज़ार गर्म रहेगा।

लेकिन जब फसल के बोनो का वक्त आता है तो वह भाव दूना और तिगुना होता है। अगर आप यह चीज कर सकते हैं कि फसल के वक्त में और बोनो के वक्त में तकरीबन एक आध रुपये का ज्यादा से ज्यादा फर्क हो और इससे ज्यादा फर्क न होने दें तो किसान जितना उसके पास फालतू अनाज होगा वह कभी अपने पास न रख छोड़ेगा। दिसम्बर के पहले सप्ताह में हिन्दुस्तान में अनाज के १९४७ के भाव का (Index) १०० था तो आपको पता लगेगा कि अप्रैल १९४८ के अन्दर पूर्वी पंजाब (Wheat) की कीमत का (Index) नम्बर १३० था और फिर नवम्बर के अन्दर २३४ था। यह फसल और बोनो के वक्त का फर्क है। अगर इसको आप ठीक कर सकते हैं तो किसान किसी हद तक राजी हो सकते हैं।

Ch. Ranbir Singh (East Punjab: General): Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am whole heartedly in agreement with what has been said by the Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram and Prof. Ranga. Many of my friends have emphasized that no satisfactory progress has been made in the 'Grow More Food Campaign'. My Honourable friend Sardar Bhopinder Singh Man even went somewhat beyond the limits. I would like to place before you some statistics and explain to you that the syrup prepared is relatively more sweet as compared to the quantity of sugar put in by you. When anyone in a confused state complains to this House that we have not been able to get proper return on the money spent on this account, I take it in the different way. Many of my honourable friends in this House have got no concern with the peasants. They do not approve of any amount being spent for the development of agriculture because they are educated people and know how to speak in a discreet manner. They want to utilize that money in some other way. Therefore they say that the money has been wasted. I will quote the statistics to prove that how much money we spent and the comparative return we got for that. Mr. Sidhva has complained against the belated receipt of the Government's report. It is a fact that it was received late, but as I have got love for this, I read its every word. Had they also got any attachment for this, they might have complained against the delay but could not say that they have not read it. These people live in the cities. They have neither any attachment nor any connection with agriculture. They can mince matters, speak glibly, use bombastic words in English and can even go to the length of saying that the money has been wasted. I, therefore, wanted to explain to you the extent of the progress made by us with the meagre resources at our disposal. I would invite your attention to the conditions existing during the year 1948 from which you would find that 8,141 wells were constructed in the Madras province during one year. Now you may see as to what amount was ultimately allotted by you to Madras.

Shri Mahavir Tyagi (U.P.: General): Besides this, Madras was also given some additional money.

Ch. Ranbir Singh: Government have allotted Rs. 4 lacs in all for this purpose. I know my honourable friend Mr. Tyagi is an agriculturist and like myself his heart is full of solicitude for the peasants. But he is very much fond of indulging in criticism and has got some other notions as well. I agree that all these wells were not constructed at Government expense, but the amount of Rs. four lacs would have been surely utilized for some propaganda. In Madras approximately little over 8,000 wells were constructed and Government spent Rs. 4 lacs over it. Similarly 5,600 wells were constructed in the Central Provinces and may I know how much money was allotted by your Government? The grant sanctioned by you for the benefit of the peasants in the U.P. amounted to Rs. 1.2 lacs and the criticism levelled by Mr. Tyagi can be counteracted by the fact that you also gave a loan of Rs. 49.7 lacs. So if you take all this into account, you will find that the aggregate amount given by you was Rs. 1.7 crores and against which 23,000 wells were constructed. Either we should admit that all these figures are wrong and in case we do not see eye to eye with this, we shall have to say that we got adequate return. Personally I feel that even if we believe to some extent in the accuracy of the statistics collected by the agencies set up by our Provincial Governments, the figures appear to be very much encouraging. The same can be said in regard to the expenditure amounting to Rs. 16,16,84,156 incurred previously during the years 1943 to 1946. This amount also includes the cost of other articles such as manure etc. supplied to the peasants. But one thing which will last for ever irrespective of the fact whether the Government responsible for taking such steps remains in office or not is that 50,000 wells have been constructed. In this connection I would like to tell you further that during the past year we imported from abroad foodgrains worth Rs. 126 crores for the use of our country. I do not remember the exact figures. These foodgrains were sold at cheap rates to our brethren lawyers, persons living in the cities and the intelligentsia and as a result of this the Government sustained a loss of about Rs. 28 or 29 crores during the course of one year. May I know why no objection has ever been raised to the loss of Rs. 28 or 29 crores annually sustained by the Government on the purchase of foodgrains from foreign countries and its subsequent sale at cheap rates? On the contrary things are viewed from a different angle, and so much hue and cry has been raised against the allotment of Rs. 16 crores made by you during the past three years. Personally I take it in the other way. Just as I have already stated before many of my honourable friends sitting in this House have got neither any contact with the peasants nor can they realize their difficulties. I would also like to say one thing, i.e., I do not quite agree with this that there has been absolutely no progress. But I do realize that there are difficulties and we shall have to tackle these tactfully. A solution for this shall have to be found by our

[Ch. Ranbir Singh]

Government, the Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel, the Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, and the Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram. You want to make this country self-sufficient in regard to food. In order to provide more foodgrains to the country, you shall have to see that how far you can please those who are the producers and how far you can change their psychology. While the Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram was speaking, my honourable sister Shrimati Renuka Ray made some observations in regard to tobacco. It might be sometime in the past viz., 100 or 200 years ago when the peasant was no wary of his loss. To-day, if not the entire agriculturist community but at least a great majority of them have been awakened. If any body wants that they should at once cease to grow crops which yield huge money, that would not be an easy job. My honourable friend Prof. Ranga pointed out that perhaps some Government might resort to coercion. I would go one step farther than that even. Last time the Pressmen and our other brethren used to say emphatically that riots would break throughout India if arrangements were not made to supply foodgrains at cheap rates to the people living in the cities. I dare say that those agitators have got neither guts nor sword in their hands. On the contrary the hands of those persons whom you want to coerce or suppress are comparatively much stronger and they have got swords. These factors will contribute to the out-break of riots, if at all such a contingency arises. Therefore you should not compel the peasants to adopt such a line of action which will not benefit them in the least. If you want that the peasant should produce foodgrains for you; if you are anxious to see that India should no longer remain dependent on other countries for the supply of foodgrains, you shall have to accord sympathetic hearing to the hardships experienced by the peasants and find a solution to redress these. You might possess any number of weapons, conduct any sort of subtle propaganda that the 'Grow More Food Campaign' has failed and thus refuse to sanction funds. But this will not obviously serve any useful purpose. How much illiterate might be the people living in the rural areas, they are certainly awakened to-day. My honourable friend Mr. Sidhva talks about the labourers. I would tell him that India is the land of agriculturists. The peasants to-day are no longer sleeping. If our Government and our party want that they should continue to hold the reins of administration in their hands, they shall have to listen to the demands of the peasants. I would like to tell you something more in this connection than what Prof. Ranga stated as to how we can induce the peasants to grow more food products and what incentive can we give to encourage them? To-day when we go to the rural areas every villager asks us just to think over and tell him: How is it that in Rohtak which is situated at a distance of 44 miles from Delhi, grams are sold there at present @Rs. 8/-; whereas here these are sold @Rs. 14/-? In this way whom can you please? On whose support can you run the Government? If you want.....

Shri Deshbandhu Gupta: East Punjab Government is responsible for this.

Cn. Ranbir Singh: I am not aware as to which particular Government is responsible for this. But one thing which I know is that this cannot be the order of the East Punjab Government, because this consists of at least five such persons who have been born in agriculturist families—who can be forced by their brethren and relations not to act in a manner prejudicial to the interests of the peasants. I take it in the other way, i.e., either some pressure is put on them from above or they are compelled to do so under the influence of the Press.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: This is the responsibility of the East Punjab Government.

Ch. Ranbir Singh: I wanted to say a few things more because an important issue is involved. But the bell has rung. I had a mind to speak at least for another 10 or 15 minutes. But after saying this, I would like to refer to those things and I hope, Mr. Deputy Speaker, you will give me a little more time as this matter vitally affects the agriculturists. In spite of the fact that I received the papers today at Nine O'clock, I aver to have read every word of it, and for this reason I have a fervent hope that you will surely accord some consideration. I was just telling you that if you want that the peasants should grow more food-products, you shall have to waive this. You can refer to the figures quoted by me. For instance, you may take the case of rice. The Government of Central Provinces shall procure this @Rs. 11/6/- per maund. Similarly in the Madras Province, rice shall be procured from the peasants @ Rs. 7/14/3 per maund. But what my submission is that you should not only estimate the price that would be paid by the Governments of these Provinces but that also which would be paid to the people by the Government of India, as after all India is one country. The issue price of rice in U.P. will be Rs. 30/- per maund. In Bombay it shall be sold @Rs. 34/2/8 per maund. Similarly you may take the case of wheat. In Rajasthan wheat shall be procured @Rs. 10/- per maund. In Delhi Province it shall be procured @Rs. 14/8/- per maund under the Procurement Scheme. In the case of Delhi, there is something peculiar i.e., the rice will be sold to the people @Rs. 12/- and some annas per maund. But you may just imagine the issue price at which it will be sold by the Government in other Provinces. The Government shall sell it @ Rs. 25/3 per maund in Hyderabad. In C.P. it will be sold @Rs. 20/3/-. Similarly take the case of other commodities viz., gram which will be procured @Rs. 6/3/- and 8/- per maund in Jaipur and East Punjab respectively. In Rajasthan it will be procured at the rate of Rs. 5/- per maund only. But it will be sold @Rs. 16/11/- and 12/10/- in Saurashtra and U.P. respectively. You may just imagine that this is an agricultural country and the agriculturists too are not even literate who can understand the implications of your remarks whether this is the fault of the East Punjab Government or Central Government or any other Government is to be blamed or the blame rests on the shoulders of the Press. They feel that injustice is being done to them. If you want that they should produce more food you should see that there is not any appreciable difference between the highest procurement price vis-a-vis the issue price. The difference should only be limited to the extent of freight payable. In case this exceeds this limit, you should remember that you cannot check the black-market—however strong Police force might be at the disposal of your Government and whatever power you might have. The black-market will go on flourishing.

I would also like to tell you another thing. You may see the figures which have been supplied to you. Sometimes it is said that the peasant indulges in black-marketing. But if you see these figures you will know that this is not correct to some extent, and if at all he does so, the responsibility for this devolves on our society, Government and the methods employed by us. Because when the crop is harvested, the foodgrains are available at cheap rates. But when the time for sowing of the crop comes, then that price is doubled or even trebled. If you can manage to regulate the difference between the prices prevailing at the time of sowing and harvesting to the extent of Re. 1/- or so at the most, then the peasant will not withhold any part of his surplus stock of foodgrains.

During the first week of December, the index of the price of foodgrains ruling in India in 1947 was 100. From this you will also find that in April '48 the index price of wheat in the East Punjab rose upto 130 and later on in November it shot up to 234. This is the difference between the rates prevailing at the time of sowing and harvesting of the crop. If you are capable of reconciling this difference, then of course the peasants could be appeased to some extent.

[Ch. Ranbir Singh]

One thing more I would like to say as a Punjabi. Our Province was allotted approximately Rs. 54 lacs for the sinking of wells. But as you are aware, Punjab had to pass through a topsy turvey state during the last year resulting in the mass migration of people from one corner to the other and coupled with the unsettled conditions, wells could not be constructed there. I would request the Honourable Minister to allot funds to Punjab as well and not to reduce its share in the amount previously allocated, because Punjab is the only place where more foodgrains can be produced for you by the sinking of wells. I do not now want to take any more time of the House and would congratulate the Honourable Minister. I would also like to say that the criticism levelled against him is quite unjust and I perfectly agree with him that if India wants to make its headway it should first of all develop its agricultural resources.

Shri M. Tirumala Rao: Sir, the food problem is one of the most serious problems that confront the Government today. Food for the stomach is the source of life and all the activities of life and so all other human activities are dependent on this problem and its solution. We see that the agricultural economy of this country is at a standstill and I may tell the Government that if it goes on like this for sometime more it is bound to break down. I see from the figures that during the last five or six years since 1943 till today, the Government of India have spent about 20 crores of rupees on the Grow More Food Campaign. Out of this nearly 16 crores were spent by the previous Government and how was it spent? Mostly on advertisements. Every department of the Government in those days was utilised for the sole and single purpose of winning the war and getting as much support as possible from all sections of the people. I refer to the advertisement of the Grow More Food Campaign which was carried on in advertisements through wall posters in hotels, railway station and in all other places where people have never grown a single blade of grass and it was done in English just like the "Travel Less" Campaign, which was carried on through wall posters in places where the bulk of the people were uneducated and in English language which they did not know. Also very many newspapers got subsidies by way of advertisement during those days.

Coming to the present situation, whatever the excuse might have been to a foreign government there is now a government of our own. If you see the figures of production that have been given here the largest amount of production that our country has had was in 1942-43 and 1943-44. It was 106 for 100, and there was the famous Bengal famine (Shri H. V. Kamath: Infamous) which the country faced during that year. There was no co-ordination between the people in the country and the quantity of food that was grown during the previous regime. Claiming as we do to be a responsible government and the Ministers being the natural leaders of the people with the backing of the people behind them, the people look to them to at least to give them a square meal a day. How far have we fared in this respect is a matter that we have to see with a little circumspection. Let it not be misunderstood when some of us offer you some suggestions with a little heat or emotion. If we say any unkind thing to you it is because we strongly feel about them and we do not want to conceal them from you, because he is no friend of yours who conceals the truth from the Government. We are not satisfied with the progress not only of this Department but also in other departments as well. Your department is not an isolated department in this respect. There is the Industries and Supplies, the Commerce, Finance and Transport. Unless there is co-ordination between the four departments you cannot achieve your object of improving the agricultural production of this country. As long as the supply of agricultural commodities, as my friend said, rests with the provincial government and the distribution of important commodities like iron and cement rests with the Industries Department of the Provincial Governments you will not be able to do anything. Whether he be a kisan or non-kisan human nature is the same. Corruption has permeated every department of society and every section of our people without let or hindrance. I know how our Industries Minister in the province is pestered for a little iron. Whether it be for building a cow shed, or alterations to his house or some other purpose if a man gets two tons of iron the major portion of it goes into the black market. I want to ask the provincial ministers who are in charge of the Industries Department how this nefarious thing goes on? Is it in the interest of the party or by recommendation? I do not charge the ministers themselves to be corrupt but they are helpless against the state of affairs which sweep them away even if they want to stem the tide of corruption. Therefore what I say is that if you are able to give the necessary commodities which the primary or agricultural producer wants at controlled prices then the problem of inflation will be resolved. My friend Prof. Ranga said that the spiral of prices of primary products should rise. They rise or fall equally with the other I understand that argument, though I am unable to sympathise with it. I want to know from my friend what is the definition of a kisan? Who is the kisan? What is the minimum quantity of acreage which a kisan must hold under the definition of the Professor? Is he a man who has 50,100 or more acres? I know people who have sold 4,000 bags of paddy produced in their fields at the rate of Rs. 25 a bag when the controlled rate was Rs. 13.

Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi: Did you bring it to the notice of the Government?

Shri M. Tirumala Rao: My source of information was the Government itself.

Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi: Did the Government take any action on that?

Shri M. Tirumala Rao: You put the question to the Government. This gentleman who sold 4,000 bags in the black-market, on the next day he wants to build a cinema hall and comes for iron and cement to the Industries Minister.

Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi: And perhaps it was sanctioned by the Government!

Shri M. Tirumala Rao: This is democracy in excelsis. In democracy we always go by slogans and shibboleths. There should be a revolutionary set up in the Central Government where we have to rule with an iron hand, even if it smacks a little of dictatorship it does not matter. I know what we have done so far. I am anxious that the prestige of the Congress and the life of this Government should be ensured and secured, because it must fulfil the purpose for which they have come into power. That is the only thing that I want. If the Congress goes into wilderness and is discredited there is no future for this country. That is my fear and it is that which impels me to express very strongly about these matters. Let not the Transport Department go its own leisurely way. Let them explore all possible avenues of transport—bullock cart, canal boat transport, road transport and the like. Let seafaring and ordinary country craft come into play. Let the railways come into full use. Let all modes of transport be fully utilised for removing the bottleneck and for enabling further production of food.

I am sorry about the procurement figures which my honourable friend has given. The relative efficiency of these Governments can be read from their procurement figures. The figure for Bihar is 2:7 per cent, for Madras 20:8 per cent., for Bengal 14:9 per cent. What is this? Why are they so slack? It is because if they have less food they are under a sense of security in that they can always come for a dole to the Central Government and the Central Government is prepared to send its representatives to buy food from abroad and supply it to these deficit areas. A sum of Rs. 135 or Rs. 150 crores is spent on food imports and Rs. 30 crores on subsidising food. Are you apportioning to the Provinces that are remiss in procurement, the amount of money that we are losing from the Central exchequer on this account? I am very much surprised that the United Provinces, one of the most forward Provinces for everything and for patriotism in this country, comes with 4.8 per cent of procurement. (An Honourable Member: It is a surplus Province). It is not a surplus Province I am told. C.P. is surplus, and it has procured only 3.7 per cent. It has to supply to other Provinces. I do not understand why the Provincial Governments should be so remiss in the matter of procurement. There is a fundamental defect in our very set up. If the Central Government undertakes and assumes the responsibility of feeding all the 35 crores population in this country, let them also assume the responsibility of administering the Food Department, in all the Provinces from here. Have you not integrated India to a single homogeneous unit? Have you not amended the Government of India Act by a motion moved by the Honourable the Home Minister in the other House, in the Constituent Assembly, to see that all the States are integrated and greater powers are taken by the Centre? I know that the Agriculture Departments in the Provinces are the most indifferent Departments. Agriculture, Jails, Law, Registration and all miscellaneous items are put under the charge of one Minister. What can he do? Even a single Minister assigned the portfolio of Agriculture is not able to do much. I entirely agree that the Agriculture Department is woefully under-manned. We want very many more technical and trained people—at least one officer for every taluk of a lakh of population, to go and do the job of inculcating new methods among our population and see that production is augmented in this country.

[Shri M. Tirumala Rao]

I want to deal with one or two more points. With regard to statistics, from the top, from the Prime Minister downwards everyone of us has agreed that our statistics are more empirical than real. The Honourable Minister himself has in his latest presidential address to the Provincial Ministers stated that our statistical reports are based on absolutely empirical and ignorant data, given by the village kulkarni, the karnam. You get in the Provincial gazettes every week a weather forecast, a rain forecast, a crop forecast. Where from does it come? It comes from the village karnam in a routine way. If he has put a little less last week he will put a little more this week so that the average may be like the same as last year. Does he go to the field? You get the same crop forecast which he is accustomed to give for years. From him it goes to the Revenue Inspector, then to the Tahsildar, then to the Deputy Collector, to the Collector, to the Secretary of the Revenue Board and then it is passed on to the Government press. It becomes sacrosanct when it is printed. Where is the data? The price of paddy is fixed in my Province at Rs. 17. Let alone the middleman—I am not a supporter of the middleman. There is same agency through which the village ryot, who has no means of transport, is obliged to reach the marketing centre, and the middleman comes that way. The Government cannot supplant the middleman unless by a cooperative marketing society. But today the ryots say "there is nobody who asks paddy for Rs. 17/4" which is the ceiling price fixed by Government. Government is not able to buy it up. Therefore he is prepared to offer it for something less. You must have proper statistics of how much each village produces and how much each village consumes and how much can be got by way of procurement from each village. If these statistics approximate to truth as much as possible then procurement will be easy.

Shrimati G. Durgabai: May I know whether this debate will be carried over to the other day?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It will be carried on as long as there are speakers to speak. It automatically stands over to the other non-official day—not tomorrow but the next non-official day.

Shrimati G. Durgabai: I suggest that another day—an official day—might be given for this. The request may be conveyed to the Leader of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Under the rules it automatically stands over to the next non-official day. The honourable member can move Government to fix an official day.

Honourable Members: We want you, Sir, to convey that to Government.

Shri M. Tirumala Rao: With regard to small holdings I want to say that it is time that the Government of India makes a beginning and see that large scale co-operative farming is compulsorily introduced and that the waste involved in the small units is eliminated. You can ask Provinces to introduce them and take land where it is reclaimed. This has got to be done on a large scale.

Then I would refer to the question of starting a Commodity Credit Corporation. If you start a big Commodity Credit Corporation which will deal entirely with the villages like cooperative societies, you will be creating an agency wherefrom the agriculturist will get all his needs at controlled prices. There should not be any black-marketing about it. When you control the prices of his requirements you can impose a control price upon the produce he produces.

There is another thing I want to suggest. If there is the possibility the State should enter into trading itself and buy up the whole produce in the villages, build their own warehouses, store them there and ultimately eliminate the middleman as much as possible. You will then be able to secure and guarantee a decent minimum earning to the primary producer.

I want to suggest one more thing and that is that the restoration of small tanks and wells and minor irrigation schemes must be pursued with energy. There is a scheme in Madras run by the Public Works Department, but it follows the same old routine of files and formalities before a thing is done. You must give a tempo and drive from the Centre and see that a certain amount of money is spent on these schemes and the schemes are augmented.

Sir, I am coming to a close. I want the Central Government to encourage community-eating. I mean that you should try to organise as many eating houses as possible in industrial areas and in places where agricultural labour also is concentrated during agricultural seasons. And you should ensure a standard diet for a minimum price, that is balance its nutrition value as well as its cost, and discourage people as much as possible from private cooking and make them go to eating houses and have their food. If you see that eating houses are started in industrial areas and in agricultural areas and enable people to go there and take their food, wastage of food will be greatly minimized.

With these remarks and hoping that a new set-up will come about—I mean with the same personnel at the head a new life will be infused—and that Government will take it up in a centralised way by giving a strong drive and in seeing that food is produced in sufficient quantity the crisis is averted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have conveyed the wish of the House—if that is the wish of the House—to the Chief Whip, that we ought not to lose the thread of the discussion and therefore we might carry on this discussion tomorrow. I understand it may be arranged if we forego the other non-official day, that is the sixteenth.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: Every session a day is allotted for discussion of the food problem and it is an official day. Therefore, tomorrow 5 P.M. it may be taken up and the other non-official day may remain as it is.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will make the suggestion to the Leader of the House that we shall have this continued tomorrow, and if the Leader agrees we will have another non-official day also. If it is not possible, we will have tomorrow substituted for that day.

The Honourable Shri Satyanarayana Sinha (Minister of State): If the House foregoes the non-official day on the 16th, we can very well have it tomorrow.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The debate will continue tomorrow with the consent of the Chief Whip. He speaks on behalf of the Government. The question as to whether we shall have the other non-official day or not, will be negotiated later on.

The Assembly then adjourned till a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock on Friday the 4th February, 1949.

CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY OF INDIA (LEGISLATIVE). DEBATES

(PART II—PROCEEDINGS OTHER THAN QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS)

Friday, 4th February, 1949.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock, Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS (See Part I)

11-35 A.M.

SCHEDULED SECURITIES (HYDERABAD) BILL

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel (Minister for Home Affairs and the States): Sir, I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill to provide for the control of the transfer of certain securities and for the issue of duplicate securities in respect thereof.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That leave be granted to introduce a Bill to provide for the control of the transfer of certain securities and for the issue of duplicate securities in respect thereof."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

PUBLIC DEBT (CENTRAL GOVERNMENT) AMENDMENT BILL

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai (Minister for Finance): Sir, I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill to amend the Public Debt (Central Government) Act, 1944.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That leave be granted to introduce a Bill to amend the Public Debt (Central Government) Act, 1944."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

ESTATE DUTY BILL

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF SELECT COMMITTEE

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai (Minister for Finance): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the time appointed for the presentation of the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to provide for the levy and collection of an estate duty in the provinces of India, be extended upto the last day of the first week of March, 1949."

[Dr. John Matthai]

Sir, the time which was appointed for the presentation of this Committee's Report was the last day of the first week of the Budget Session. We had several meetings of the Committee, but we found that the issues involved in the Bill were such that it would require more time for consideration and final disposal. I must also point out that the Members of the Select Committee were occupied with the work of the Constituent Assembly which was sitting all this time. I am hoping to get the work of the Committee completed sometime in the course of this month, and I would, therefore, ask the House to give us time until the last day of the first week of March when I hope to be able to present the report of the Committee.

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid the last day of the first week of March will be Sunday. Instead of saying 'the last day' I think a date may be given.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: May I suggest the 4th of March?

Mr. Speaker: Yes. I shall put the motion in an amended form.

The question is:

"That the time appointed for the presentation of the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to provide for the levy and collection of an estate duty in the provinces of India, be extended upto the 4th March 1949."

The motion was adopted.

CHILD MARRIAGE RESTRAINT (AMENDMENT) BILLS

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF SELECT COMMITTEE

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava (East Punjab: General): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the time appointed for the presentation of the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill further to amend the Child Marriage Restraint Act, 1929 (Amendment of Sections 3, 4, 5, 6 and 10), the Bill further to amend the Child Marriage Restraint Act, 1929 (Amendment of Sections 2 and 4) and the Bill further to amend the Child Marriage Restraint Act, 1929 (Amendment of Sections 2, 10, 11 and 13), be extended upto the 21st March 1949."

The House will remember that for presentation for Select Committee's report the date fixed was the first week of February. But it is so unfortunate that the Select Committee meetings could not be held on account of the Honourable the Law Minister being very busy. I had requested the Law Minister to arrange a meeting of the Select Committee as early as possible. But in reply I have received a communication that he can only agree to an extension of time—which is the subject matter of the present motion—and the date may be extended upto the 21st March. I have no objection to that. I only hope that the Select Committee meeting will be held before this date. I am, however, glad to say that the Honourable the Law Minister has practically assured me that it will be held before the 21st March to enable me to proceed with the further motions on the Bill on the next date for Bills. I therefore, make this motion.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the time appointed for the presentation of the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill further to amend the Child Marriage Restraint Act, 1929 (Amendment of Sections 3, 4, 5, 6 and 10), the Bill further to amend the Child Marriage Restraint Act, 1929 (Amendment of Sections 2 and 4) and the Bill further to amend the Child Marriage Restraint Act, 1929 (Amendment of Sections 2, 10, 11 and 13), be extended upto the 21st March 1949."

The motion was adopted.

RESOLUTIONS re, (i) FAILURE OF GROW MORE FOOD CAMPAIGN, (ii) SERVING OF RICE IN NON-VEGETARIAN HOTELS

Mr. Speaker: The House will now proceed with further discussion of the Resolutions moved yesterday.

Shri Upendranath Barman (West Bengal: General): On a point of order, Sir. In the revised list of business the Resolutions that were due on the 16th February have been transferred to today's order paper. My Resolution, which is No. 3 in the revised list, relates almost to the same subject—it is closely and intricately allied with Grow More Food. May I have your ruling whether I can move my resolution also so that all the three Resolutions may be discussed?

Mr. Speaker: The subject seems to be allied and as we have allotted today instead of the 16th for private business, I do not think there is any technical objection. But I should like to know what the Honourable the Food Minister has to say about it.

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram (Minister for Food and Agriculture): I think the purpose would be served by making a speech on this main Resolution. The honourable member may bring out his point of view.

Mr. Speaker: Instead of taking up the Resolution now, the honourable member may advance his arguments when he speaks on the present Resolutions.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): Sir, discussions and debates on food have almost become a regular feature every year. But rains have also been continuously failing and wherever there are rivers there has been overmuch of rain and floods. There is no use accusing our Government or the present Minister for all the evils that nature has thrown against us. Particularly during the past year, in the south of India there has been want of rain and consequently failure of crops. Similarly, in the north of India it is common knowledge that all the rivers were in floods and consequently we have not been able to produce sufficient quantities due to flood damage. This has necessitated a larger import to the tune of 150 and odd crores. The 'Grow More Food Campaign' was not started by this Government. It was started by the previous Government. It is a legacy from the past. Therefore, instead of entering into the various ways in which the Grow More Food Campaign has failed, let us draw upon it for the purpose of improving the position and trying to get the best by united effort in the future. That is how I would like to approach this problem.

First of all, there is no proper agency for pushing on with this programme correctly. The previous Government during the course of 150 and odd years made the Collector the most important personage in every district. He was also the District Magistrate and the Superintendent of Police was his subordinate. The previous Government was merely a tax-gatherer. It attended to only policing inside and prevention of aggression from outside. It never cared to improve the wealth of the nation, either agriculturally or industrially. It was pretended by them that they were improving agriculture and that aspect of our economy, but even that was not correct. They never did anything for the purpose of improving agriculture. Otherwise, we would not be in this predicament of having to go about to the various corners of the world, stretching out our hands, taking our begging bowl, for getting grain to sustain our body and soul together. Therefore, it is time for us to find what the causes are or have been; what the set-up was which did not conduce even to improve our agricultural economy.

[Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar]

I would suggest, as I have suggested already on a prior occasion when moved a Resolution for developing undeveloped areas and for preventing famine conditions that a Famine Commission or Agricultural Commission—permanent Commission—ought to be set up in this country with branches in the provinces and even extending to districts. They must have a regular five-year programme or even a shorter programme and they must pursue relentlessly the execution of that programme. Week after week the Minister or the person in charge of the Commission both here at the headquarters and also in the provincial branches must address the population on the various kinds of activities they must embark upon in order to push the programme through, and also report on the results that have been achieved during the previous week. I wanted somebody in the nature of Sir Stafford Cripps—a Minister with not merely powers of one Department, but a Super-Minister with all powers of commanding the services of other Ministers in the Centre as well as in the various provinces. The Honourable Minister gave us an assurance of a sort, but to this day he has not moved in that direction. I hope the Cabinet as a whole will very soon make a resolve to appoint a Commission of that kind for improving agriculture in this country.

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram. That suggestion was made in the provinces and the provinces disagreed with it.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: If the Honourable Minister finds that the provinces are not falling in line with the Centre, then the Centre with its enormous resources must set up its own machinery for the purpose of bringing waste lands into cultivation? (Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharati: "He can that be done?") If it is not so, we cannot be merely looking on. We have got to get a move on. When the provinces come here for subsidies and grants we can insist upon their falling in line with us. Above all, in the provinces as well as in the Centre, is it not the same Congress Government in force? Can we understand the previous Government saying, whenever any inconvenient questions were put, "Provincial autonomy is there". Whenever they want to suppress the legitimate sentiments and the patriotic instincts of the people the whole of India was one and Home Department at the Centre was ruling. That was the previous Government. But I am sorry that the same note continues even now. Is it not the same Congress Government ruling all the provinces? What is the good of the Honourable Minister coming again and again and telling us that the provinces are different from the Centre? To the uncrowned king of India is Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru with his Deputy, Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel. If they say "Yes" the Congress Governments certainly carry out and nobody will go against them, whether inside the Government or outside the Government. Therefore it is wrong to say that the provinces are not alive to the situation. The truth is this. The Agriculture Minister is the least respected one in a province. The old set-up continued even today. In the district, it is the Collector and District Magistrate who is feared, not the District Agriculture Officer or the District Co-operative Officer or the District Industries Officer. My respectful submission to the Honourable Minister and to the Minister in charge is, "Push the Collector back into the background. Push the Agriculture Officer, the Industries Officer and the Co-operative Officer—all these three—to the forefront". The previous Government was merely to gather taxes irrespective of the question as to whether the person from whom the revenue was collected was capable of paying or not. If he was not able to earn that year, it was no concern of the previous Government. The man had to sell his ancestral property and pay the taxes. That procedure must be reversed. We must first address ourselves to the nation-building economic and wealth-growing aspects and push them to the front and put more money into the pockets of the agriculturists. The State can then easily take the revenue that is due to it. Therefore, give prominence to the agriculturists. Formerly, it used to be said that the District Educational Officer was a man who was least respected—or, he commanded respect but he had no influence at all in a village, because the Revenue Department was all supreme. The patel would stand and tell the Collector or Revenue Inspector, but the Educational Officer who was concerned with a very serious nation-building service would not be attended to. That is the position today too. (An Honourable Member: "Perhaps Educational Officers were the least educated.") Not that they were the least educated, but education was a bug-bear to the previous Government. They did not want anybody to be educated.

Now, Sir, the Agriculture Minister is in the same position. Instead of his going round and commanding influence, the Collector goes round from place to place and has control over all other Departments in the district.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel (Minister for Home Affairs and the States): It is Madras experience you are quoting perhaps?

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: I am quoting Madras experience because I have no other experience. I would be glad if Madras alone does not constitute the whole of India; if Madras suffers, the rest of India might, with better influence in the hands of those Ministers elsewhere, may have another experience. Therefore, judging from the result of Agriculture Ministers in Madras, I believe the same to be the position in respect of Ministers all over India, whether Madras or elsewhere. And I am seeing it here in the Centre. The Minister in the Centre, with all his anxiety to increase production in this country, feels helpless as against chhota Ministers in the provinces and even against the bigger Ministers in the Centre. Therefore I am not quarrelling with any Minister. But we are confining ourselves with policing. And also whichever Minister holds the portfolio of Police commands greater respect, whether it is the Deputy Prime Minister or any other Minister of a lesser intellect. But we must see that the time has come for other things. We have settled our difficulties abroad. We have no aggression from elsewhere to consider, or disturbances from within. But hunger and starvation should not be allowed to kill our people gradually and as it were, inch by inch. That is a more dangerous thing. We must wipe out starvation and hunger out of existence. I am no pessimist. There is enormous energy in our Ministry. I would urge upon the Minister—and fortunately the Deputy Prime Minister is here present and I am sure he will attend to this aspect—I would urge upon the Ministry to set up a sort of commission or some other mechanism ere long, by which the Ministers in all the Provinces in charge of the Department should be given greater powers. I would not even stop with the Minister, but go even further. We are trying to fight communism and I am dead afraid of communism for the reason that I do not want any kind of class-warfare in our country, and ultimately dictatorship. Politically that will be committing suicide, and it will be the negation of democracy. But then, so far as the economic aspects are concerned, there may be certain things to be learnt from them also. So we must try to understand the problem and see how many kinds of programmes have been started in the various countries of the world and with what results. The villager to-day in our country is callous. If he is a small man with a little land, he only produces for himself and he eats what he produces. If it is a bigger man, he goes on clamouring for more and more price for his produce, and thus the country at large, is not able to pay. If we pay higher prices, the spiral of prices increases. And when he does not get higher prices, he cultivates only for himself. We must make the whole village responsible to grow more and we must make it an economic unit, and tell them that they should either cultivate and produce or perish. They must produce all the necessary cereals in their own area.

[Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar]

And then, Sir, some kind of crop planning is very necessary. We are growing tobacco, and other commercial crops which fetch good prices. Cosmetics, cigarettes and the like fetch larger prices though the amount of labour spent on them is much less than on the production of agricultural products. Therefore, there must be some change in the administration, and a commission or some other mechanism must be appointed to organise this.

As regards extensive and intensive cultivation, extensive cultivation is being attended to by the Minister in charge. He is sending out tractors; and he has given us a report that about 20,000 acres have been brought under cultivation. Therefore, so far as extensive cultivation is concerned, that can be attended to and is being attended to by means of the tractors and the organisation at the Centre. But so far as intensive cultivation is concerned, we are very backward. We are producing 900 lbs. per acre in this land, whereas in Japan and countries on the east coast of the Pacific, Indo-China, Siam and other countries, they produce 3,000 lbs. per acre. Therefore it is very necessary that instead of addressing ourselves to places where there are no irrigation facilities, and where the soil is not very rich, we must give more attention to places where there are irrigation facilities so that the yield per acre may be more. Where there are no irrigation facilities, but the soil is rich, there we must give irrigation facilities. I know subsidies for sinking wells and such things are being given. But there must be the introduction of co-operative farming in every village and the subsidies should be given to these co-operative societies. In my part of the country, subsidies were given for sinking wells. If a sum of Rs. 500 was given, actually Rs. 1,000 was necessary and so the man had to apply for a loan of another Rs. 500. But before that could come in, he had utilised the first Rs. 500 in sinking a pit and there is no water there, and he satisfies the authorities that he has sunk a well. Therefore, to avoid such a thing, my submission is that the co-operative societies must take charge of the work and receive the subsidies, and with the help of the minor irrigation department in the various provinces they must sink wells, irrespective of whether a particular agriculturist or ryot is able to do so or not. A proper survey of the land should be conducted to see what areas could be brought under such cultivation by better irrigational facilities, and wells sunk accordingly. Let the subsidies be spread over 30 years or so and let the recoveries be made whenever the season is favourable.

Next, we must give electricity wherever it is possible. I am speaking about my province about which I have more intimate knowledge. It is possible to install electric pumps for deep wells with great advantage and saving in cost, especially as bullocks are becoming more and more costly.

And then, Sir, I recently read an article in a paper and there was also a statement by an American to the effect that they in America are producing much more than we do, because of better and healthy seeds. If you use healthy seeds, you will save about 50 per cent. you will get about 50 per cent. more than what you are able to get today. Therefore sufficient attention should be paid to the proper distribution of healthy seeds.

As regards implements, a suggestion was made that agriculture must be the first charge on the iron and steel we have in the land. That has also not been done. In my province, a subsidy was given for sinking a thousand wells, and only 25 crow-bars and about 100 pick-axes were given. How can these one thousand wells be sunk with the aid of only 25 crow-bars and 100 pick-axes? If the necessary implements are not given, the wells cannot be sunk.

Lastly, better marketing facilities are very necessary. After the agriculturist has produced, he is unable to sell what he has with him, and so he does not produce any more. (Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi: Food grains he is able to sell all right"). No, there are places where even food grains he is not able to sell, as was pointed out yesterday by my friend Mr. Tirumala Rao. Therefore, my suggestion is that legislation should be undertaken to see that all the grain is sold to the co-operative society and these societies sell them out in their turn. Sir, this is no new thing I am suggesting. Even in Kautily's Artha Shastra says that no grain should be allowed to be sold and bought from one individual to another individual, but all the grain should be sold in the open markets. The necessary legislation should be brought in. Therefore, there must be legislation to impose restrictions on the nature of crops to be raised, to carry out a crop planning. We have crop planning for tea, we have said that the acreage under tea should be only such and such. But we must have such crop planning for food grains also.

There is no need to be pessimistic. Let us not lose hope. With more interest given to the subject, I am sure we can make our country flow with milk and honey.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Shiva Rao.

list that you are calling out the names?

Dr. P. S. Deshmukh (C. P. and Berar: General): Sir, is it according to any

Mr. Speaker: Not at all. I would like to make one suggestion. I find a very large number of honourable members are anxious to speak. Ordinarily, as the members know, under the rules, no speech should exceed fifteen minutes. But if that much time is allowed, only a very few number of persons will be able to speak during the course of the whole day. So, it will be better if we restrict the remarks to ten minutes, and make specific suggestions which the members may have in mind, so that the Honourable Minister also may be able to consider them.

Shri B. Shiva Rao (Madras: General): Even before you gave this ruling, when I was trying to catch your eye, I had decided to be as brief as possible.

Sir, I propose to deal with two or three points which arose at the meeting of the Governing Body of the I.C.A.R. which held its annual meeting earlier this week.

The first point that struck me attending the meeting first time was the extremely inadequate amount of money spent on agricultural research during the last twenty years. The total amount spent did not even reach two and a half crores of rupees. This works out at an average of about 10 lakhs a year. That, I think the House will agree, is an extremely small amount to spend on research in respect of our biggest industry. Since this point was touched both by the Honourable Minister for Agriculture yesterday and other speakers, I need not do more than refer to it.

The second thing which struck me was that no real effort has been made so far to bring the results of agricultural research to the notice of the cultivator. Last year, at the time of the Railway Budget, I had made the suggestion that the railways could play a very important part in fostering what I called mass education in the widest sense of the term, and that at important railway stations, especially at pilgrim centres, there should be small cinema houses for demonstrating documentary films on topics like agriculture, public health and the like, so that those who travel would have opportunities of benefiting by such shows. Another suggestion I had made, for exhibition trains was turned down for the reason, I understood at the time, that the Railway Board pleaded shortage of rolling-stock. I do not know if that difficulty still persists; but if it does, I would suggest, in view of the importance of this instrument of mass education, that the saloons which are used by Cabinet Ministers and Members of the Railway Board could be put to far greater use by their conversion into exhibition trains. Such exhibition trains play a very important part even in advanced countries like the United States.

[Shri B. Shiva Rao]

The third suggestion I want to make is in regard to crop-cutting surveys in respect of which there is at the present moment a five-year plan costing I think about 60 lakhs of rupees to be distributed equally between the Centre, the Provinces and the States. I do not know whether the Honourable the Finance Minister will be able to find funds for such a scheme. But even if he could, I would like the Honourable Minister for Agriculture to consider whether quicker and reasonably satisfactory results could not be achieved by adopting the technique which was followed by the Director-General of Medical Services about ten or fifteen years ago. Sir John Megay, who was then the head of the Medical Services, was dissatisfied with the results of public health statistics and evolved a technique of his own. He sent out a questionnaire to about 600 village doctors. The questionnaire included a certain number of questions which were intended not so much to elicit information as to test the sense of precision of those village doctors. When he got the results he discarded a certain amount of the data as unreliable evidence. With the rest of the material thus collected, he produced a report on public health conditions at that time which I think has remained a classic up to the present. I want to suggest to the Honourable Minister for Agriculture whether he could not evolve a similar technique and seek the assistance of the universities. There are hundreds and even thousands of undergraduates who I think could be trained in the art of collecting statistics. That, I would suggest, would be a more economical method, and probably the results, though not so satisfactory as by the method suggested now through a series of crop-cutting surveys, would sufficiently answer the purpose that we have in view. As he pointed out yesterday, in his opening speech, one of the most serious handicaps at the present moment is the lack of accurate statistics. Rather than wait for five years and undertake an elaborate and costly scheme, I think he would get quicker returns through the method I am suggesting.

I am suggesting it also for another reason. I think it is very necessary that there should be established, between our educated young men and the rural areas, an intimate connection. The Ministry of Labour has, at the present moment, a more popularly conceived scheme for an enquiry into the conditions of agricultural labour. I would therefore suggest to the Honourable Minister for Agriculture to consider whether these two enquiries could not be instituted on almost parallel lines.

Sir, a good deal of reference has been made to co-operative farming. I had the advantage, about 10 or 12 years ago, of spending two weeks in Palestine, where cooperative farming has reached a greater pitch of efficiency than in almost any other country in the world. Both last year in Paris and the year before in New York at the sessions of the General Assembly of the United Nations representatives of the Jewish Movement for Agriculture in Palestine expressed to me their willingness to send out one or more men who have had practical experience in running co-operative farming in Palestine. I have conveyed that suggestion both to the Honourable the Prime Minister and to the Honourable Minister for Agriculture. I think we would benefit largely by having expert guidance of a few of such men in starting co-operative demonstration farms in different parts of the country.

Then, yesterday, Mrs. Ray made a suggestion which I think deserves careful consideration. She urged the necessity for a Development Board which would take quick decisions and carry them out without needless red-tape and ensure the co-operation of the Provinces and the Centre. I think she had in mind particularly small-scale irrigation schemes and cooperative farms and the like. I hope the Honourable Minister for Agriculture will give his careful attention to this suggestion by Mrs. Ray. At the meeting of the Governing Body of the I.C.A.R. this week I felt that one of the most serious difficulties at the present moment is a lack of adequate understanding between the Provinces and the Centre. It seemed to me, watching the proceedings of the Governing Body, that while the representatives of the Provinces, whether they are ministers or directors of Agriculture, are willing to attend conferences convened by the Centre largely in the hope of securing financial assistance for their various schemes, they had not the same confidence in nor respect for the judgment of the Central Government, as the Central Government would like to have. (Shri B. Das: "Right, you are".) In Particular, I think there is an impression, whether it is justified or not, I do not know, but there is certainly an impression that officers of the Central Government—I am not referring in particular to the Ministry of Agriculture—but there is an impression amongst the provincial representatives that the officers of the Central Government are inclined to throw their weight about when they visit the provinces, though they know very little about the realities of the problems with which Provincial Governments have to deal. Sir, I would suggest that when Central officers go on tours, they should cultivate a little more of the spirit of humility in order to prove more effective.

There is only one more suggestion, I would like to make. In the Ministry of Agriculture, there is a nutrition section. In the Ministry of Health too, I believe, there is a nutrition section and at Coonoor there is run an admirable nutrition research institute. Especially at a time like this, when the country is faced with a serious shortage of food, I think that these nutrition sections should display greater activity than we have had evidence of so far. I hope that when the Minister speaks at the end of the debate, he would indicate to us precisely the scope and the nature of the activities undertaken by the Nutrition section in his Department.

Lastly, Sir, I would like to say a word about the speech with which he opened the debate yesterday. He referred more than once to what he called the inherent difficulties of the situation. With all respect to him, and not meaning to be in any sense critical of what he said, because it was a lucid and comprehensive account of the present position, with all respect to him, I would suggest that not all the difficulties of the situation were inherent when he took charge of the portfolio of Agriculture and Food. At least one of the difficulties, and perhaps the most serious difficulty at the present moment, is the abolition of controls which was a self-inflicted difficulty last year. And now that the Government has realised the blunder it committed last year by abolishing controls, I hope that any policy that is enunciated at the present moment will be clear cut; that there will be no vacillation in carrying it out, and more than everything else, that it would be entrusted to a body of competent and able officers, some of whom are still in the Ministry, some of whom have left the Ministry and have been sent to other posts, that the carrying out of such a policy would be entrusted to a body of competent and able officers who would not hesitate to take quick decisions without any intervention or interference from outside.

پنڈت تھاکر داس بھارگو: جناب ماننڈیہ سپیکر صاحب! میں نے جو amendment

نئی کمیٹی اس واسطے مقرر کرنے سے کہ وہ دریافت کرے کہ Grow More Food Organisation میں اور کیا کرنے کی ضرورت ہے۔ سوائے روپیہ اور energy خراب کرنے کے اور کوئی نتیجہ نہیں نکلیگا۔ جو معاملہ دراصل ہمارے سامنے پیش ہے وہ Grow More Food سے زیادہ اہمیت کا ہے۔ جیسا کہ کل جناب منسٹر صاحب نے فرمایا تھا کہ دراصل Grow More Food کا معاملہ تو اس سوال کا صرف ۵ فی صدی جز ہے کہ جو بڑا سوال ہمارے سامنے پیش ہے۔ اگر ۹ لاکھ تین خوراک پیدا کرنے کا target رکھا گیا تھا اور اس میں سے سات لاکھ تین خوراک پیدا ہو گئی جیسا کہ ان کاغذات سے معلوم ہوتا ہے۔ تو میں عرض کروں گا کہ آنریبل فوڈ منسٹر ہمارے مبارک باد کے مستحق ہیں۔ جو کچھ کام ہوا ہے وہ target کے تقریباً برابر ہے۔ لیکن جو اصل سوال ہے اور جسے سارے ہندوستان کو پریشان کر رکھا ہے اس کا حل نظر نہیں آتا ہے۔ میں یہ بھی نہیں جانتا کہ یہ سوال جس طرح ہمارے سامنے پیش کیا جاتا ہے وہ تھیک طریقے سے بھی پیش کیا جاتا ہے یا نہیں۔ میں ابھی تک اس بات کا قائل نہیں ہوں کہ ہندوستان میں اس قدر اناج اور دوسری چیزیں پیدا نہیں ہوتیں کہ ہندوستانیوں کی ضرورت کو پورا کر سکیں۔ میں statistics کو reliable نہیں مانتا لیکن جو سرکاری اعداد و شمار ہیں انکی دو سے پچھلے ۱۲ - ۱۰ سالوں میں کم سے کم ۵ سالوں میں ہم نے اس اناج سے زیادہ اناج پیدا کیا جو ہندوستان کی ضرورت کے واسطے کافی اوسطاً ہوتا ہے اس نقطہ خیال سے کہ statistics غلط ہیں۔ جیسا کہ عام طور پر بیان کیا جاتا ہے۔ ہمارے ماننے کے لئے کوئی چیز نہیں ہے جس سے کہ ہم اس نتیجے پر پہنچ سکیں کہ کنٹرول بالکل ضروری ہے۔ یا کنٹرول اچھا ہے۔ میں فوراً کنٹرول کو ہٹا دینے کے حق میں نہیں ہوں کیونکہ جو پالیسی گورنمنٹ نے سوچ بچار کر اختیار کر لی ہے اس کو چلانا چاہئے۔ لیکن میں intellectually مطمئن نہیں ہوں کہ دیش کے لئے کنٹرول کی اتنی ضرورت ہے۔ ہمیں کروڑوں روپیہ دوسرے ماکوں کو بھیجنا پوتا ہے اور یہ سلسلہ ختم نہیں ہوا۔ بلکہ کنٹرول کرنے سے زیادہ اور روپیہ خرچ کرنا پڑیگا۔ میں کنٹرول کے اوپر زیادہ نہیں کہنا چاہتا۔ لیکن میں ہاؤس کی توجہ ایک اور بات کی طرف دلانا چاہتا ہوں اور وہ یہ ہے کہ آخری لوائی سے پہلے دنیا کے اندر بہت زیادہ خوراک پیدا ہوتی تھی۔ بہت سارے ملک تو اپنی خوراک کو جلا یا کرتے تھے۔ مثلاً روس کے اندر گھوہوں کو آگ لگائی جاتی تھی۔ تو پہلے یہ problem تھا کہ اتنی خوراک پیدا ہوتی ہے اس کا کیا کیا جائے۔ دوسرے ماکوں میں وہ بھیجی نہیں جا سکتی تھی۔ ہندوستان میں بھی کوئی کمی نہیں تھی اس وقت agriculture provincial subject تھا اور یہاں پر سنٹرل گورنمنٹ میں فوڈ منسٹر نہیں تھا۔

صرف Education Health and Lands کا ایک Member ہوتا تھا۔ جونہی لوائی شروع ہوئی خوراک کی کمی محسوس ہونے لگی۔ آہستہ آہستہ ایک Food Secretary ہوا اور اسکے بعد سنہ ۲۶/۲۵ کے قریب Food Member صاحب کی الگ پوسٹ پیدا ہو گئی۔ لیکن دقت جو ہوئی وہ اس وجہ سے کہ سینٹر کے فوڈ منسٹر کی اور صوبہ کے منسٹر فوڈ کی کوئی clear cut ذمہ داری علیحدہ علیحدہ نہیں تھی۔ اس کی وجہ سے آج ہم نہیں جانتے کہ فوڈ منسٹر صاحب کی کیا responsibility ہے اور Provincial Agriculture Minister کی کیا responsibility ہے۔ میں عرض کرنا چاہتا ہوں کہ آدھی خرابی تو اس وجہ سے ہے کہ procurement کرتے ہیں پراونشیل منسٹر اور باہر سے خوراک منگواتے ہیں ہمارے سنٹرل منسٹر صاحب۔ معلوم ایسا ہوتا ہے کہ پراونسیز جنکو کہ powers ہیں وہ ذمہ داری محسوس نہیں کرتے کہ کل اشخاص باشندگان صوبہ کو خوراک پہنچانا ان کا فرض ہے سنٹرل گورنمنٹ منسٹر کے پاس powers نہیں ہیں کیونکہ ایک inch بھی زمین انکے پاس نہیں ہے۔ Conferences بلائی جاتی ہیں محض discussion کے لئے کیونکہ provincial autonomy ہے۔ لیکن ساری ذمہ داری خوراک بہم پہنچانے کی سنٹرل منسٹر صاحب کی ہے۔ یہ جو responsibility کا haphazard adjustment ہو گیا ہے یہ نہایت نقصان دہ ہے۔ ہمیں یہ صاف کرنا چاہئے کہ ہر Province اپنے باشندگان کے لئے خوراک بہم پہنچانے کی اپنی ذمہ داری کو محسوس کرے اور اگر وہ ایسا نہیں کرتا ہے تو خوراک کی قیمت Province کو دینی چاہئے تاکہ پراونس محسوس کریں کہ دراصل یہ انکا اپنا فرض ہے۔ ہمارے فوڈ منسٹر صاحب اتنے شریف ہیں کہ پراونشیل منسٹر صاحبان کے سامنے apology سی کرتے رہتے ہیں۔ میں انکی اس speech کی طرف توجہ دلانا چاہتا ہوں جو انہوں نے ۹ - ۸ ستمبر کو دی ہے۔

میں نے Eastern Economist کے صفحہ ۱۱۲ پر پڑھا ہے کہ پچھلے پانچ سال میں average جو Food-grains کی رہی ہے۔ وہ $\frac{513}{500}$ تھی۔ اس کے معنی یہ ہیں کہ اگر ساری قسم کے غلہ کو ایک جگہ پر اکٹھا کیا جائے تو کل غلہ کی پیداوار ہندوستان کی اپنی ضروریات سے زیادہ تھی۔

[At this stage Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair which was then occupied by Mr. Deputy Speaker (Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar).]

[پلڈت تھاکر داس بھارگو]

میں آجکل حصار میں یہ دیکھتا ہوں کہ وہاں پر لوگ پوری زمینیں کاشت کرتے ہیں۔ جو چھوٹے چھوٹے زمیندار ہیں وہ ایک ہل کی اراضی کاشت کرتے ہیں۔ اور باقی کاشت نہیں کرتے ہیں۔ جتنی زمین وہ خود کاشت کر سکتے

ہیں انہی ہی کاشت ہوتی ہے اگر وہ اس سے زیادہ زمین کے مالک ہیں تو وہ زمین خالی پڑی رہتی ہے وہ اس واسطے کہ ان کو "قر" ہے کہ اگر ہم یہ زمین کسی کو کاشت کرنے کے لئے دیں تو وہ کاشتکار بعد میں اس زمین کا مالک بن جائیگا انکو یہ قر ہے کہ اگر کسی کاشتکار کے قبضہ میں کوئی زمین کاشت کے لئے چلی جاوے تو بعد میں وہ اسکا مالک قرار دیا جائیگا اسلئے وہ تمام زمین کاشت نہیں کراتے ہیں۔ اسلئے میں بڑے ادب سے عرض کرونگا موجودہ خوراک کی جو مشکلات ہیں وہ اسوجہ سے بھی پیش آ رہی ہیں کہ ہندوستان کی ساری زمین اسوقت کاشت نہیں ہوتی ہے۔

جناب والا! جتنی باتوں کی طرف میں توجہ دلانا چاہتا تھا ان کے اوپر بہت سارا کہا جا چکا ہے میں زیادہ وقت نہیں لینا چاہتا ہوں اس لئے کہ بہت سے اصحاب کو تقریر کرنا ہے لیکن آپکی اجازت سے تھوڑا سا عرض کرنا چاہتا ہوں اور وہ یہ ہے کہ ہم نے Cow Slaughter کو روکنے کا ایک قانون گذار کانسٹیویشن میں پاس کیا تھا میں ابھی بمبئی سے ہو کر آیا ہوں اور کلکتہ بھی گیا تھا لیکن میں نہایت ادب سے عرض کرونگا کہ بمبئی اور کلکتہ میں Cow اور Bullocks سینکڑوں کی تعداد میں سلاٹر کیجانی ہیں اور انکا سلاٹر ہونا ابھی تک بند نہیں ہوا ہے تقریباً پندرہ بیس سال سے گورنمنٹ کے سامنے بھی یہ سوال پیش ہے کہ ضلع حصار اور دھتک سے گائے بیلنسیں بمبئی اور کلکتہ لیجائی جاتی ہیں اور وہ پہلے lactation کے بعد ہی سلاٹر کی جاتی ہیں وہاں کے لوگ بہت مالدار ہیں اور وہ گائے اور اس قسم کے دوسرے جانور یہاں سے اچھی قیمت دیکر لیجاتے ہیں اور ایک lactation سے انکو قیمت اور منافع وصول ہو جاتا ہے اور پھر وہ اس جانور کو مرودیتے ہیں اس لئے ضروری ہے کہ اس خرابی کا سدباب کیا جاوے تاکہ نسل ستیاناش نہ

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava (East Punjab: General): Mr. Speaker, Sir, It would be quite apparent from the amendment of which I have given notice that I am utterly opposed to the appointment of any new Committee. Hitherto this question has already been discussed time and again by many committees. During each session a day or two are allotted for holding a discussion on this subject. Before this, Krishnamachari Committee has already submitted a report in this connection. In addition to this, another Conference was convened on the 8th and 9th September, the report of which has been supplied to us. Many other conferences have already been held. So far as the 'grow more food' is concerned many suggestions were put forth all of which could not be implemented. Now the appointment of another committee with a view to investigate and make recommendations for improvement of the 'grow more food organization' would be nothing short of wastage of money and energy. The matter which is under our consideration carries more importance than the 'grow more food'. Just as the Honourable Minister had stated yesterday that in reality the problem of 'grow more food' comprises of only 5 per cent of the major issue involved and which confronts us. If the target of production of nine lakhs of tons of foodgrains was planned and out of this seven lakh tons were produced as would be observed from these papers, then the Honourable Minister deserves to be congratulated. Whatever result has been achieved, it is near-about reaching the target. But no solution of the real issue which has perplexed the whole of India is in sight. I am also not aware of the fact whether or not this question which has been put before us is being handled in a proper manner. I am not as yet convinced about the veracity of the statement that India does not produce sufficient quantity of foodgrains and other commodities which can cater to the needs of the Indians. I do not, therefore, believe in the reliability of the statistics. But according to the statistics collected by the Government for the last 10-12 years, I find that at least during the five years, the quantity of foodgrains produced by us is more than sufficient to meet the average requirements of India. Viewing from this aspect that the statistics are generally said to be incorrect, there is no other data before us from which we could conclude that control is not altogether essential, or control is a healthy measure. I am not in favour of immediate decontrol because the policy which the Government have adopted after careful consideration should be implemented. But I do not intellectually feel complacent that the control is so badly needed for the country. We have to remit crores of rupees to the foreign countries and there will not be any end to it. On the contrary the imposition of control will entail more expenditure. I do not want to make any more comments on the subject of control. But I would like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that before the last war, a very large quantity of foodgrains was produced in the world. Many of the countries used to burn their food products e.g., in Russia wheat was burnt. Formerly the problem was as to how to dispose of such a huge quantity of foodgrains. It could not be exported to foreign countries. India also did not feel any deficiency. At that time Agriculture was a provincial subject and here in the Central Government there did not exist any separate portfolio of a Food Minister. There used to be only one Member who was in charge of the Department of Education, Health and Lands. Immediately after the outbreak of war, shortage of food was felt. Gradually a Food Secretary was appointed and after this about the years 1945-46, a separate portfolio of a Food Minister was created. But the difficulty which arose was due to the fact that no clear-cut enunciation of the responsibilities of the Central vis-a-vis Provincial Food Minister could be made, and on account of this very reason we do not know even to-day what is the responsibility of the Honourable Minister for Food and of the Provincial Agriculture Minister. My submission is that partly the defect lies in the fact that the procurement is made by Provincial Minister while the foodgrains are imported from abroad by our Honourable Minister for Food. It appears that the Provinces which have got the powers do not at all realize that the onus to provide food to all the inhabitants of the Province devolves on them. The Minister in the Central Government has got no powers because he has not even an inch of land under his control. The conferences are called simply for holding discussion because provinces are autonomous. But the sole responsibility for the provision of food rests with the Central Food Minister. This haphazard adjustment of responsibility is quite detrimental to the country. We should explicitly lay down that each Province should realize its responsibility for providing food to its inhabitants, and in case it does not do so, it should be called upon to bear the cost incurred so that the Provinces should feel that in reality this is their duty. Our Food Minister is too noble that he even goes to the extent of expressing an apology to the Provincial Ministers. I would like to draw his attention to the speech delivered by him on the 8th and 9th September:

"As a matter of fact you may even consider whether the provinces should not so plan their food production programme as to be independent of any aid from the centre by 1952, except in the circumstances of unexpected natural calamity. I do not know how far such a proposal appeals to you, but I submit it to you for your discussion."

With all due respects, I would submit that when I see him sitting in the office day and night, I take pity on him. I feel that the Provincial Ministers should realize their responsibility. In the federal constitution which is being framed the Centre should be vested with full powers so that it should feel its responsibility. In case it is not done so, responsibility should be fixed on the Provincial Minister to provide food to all the inhabitants of the Province.

Sir, very respectfully I beg to submit that this problem cannot be solved by the present day policy. What happens is that the Provincial Ministries inform the Centre that they stand in dire need of foodstuffs and at once the Centre manages to procure for them foodstuffs from America. In fact the Provincial Ministries, if they want to have controls etc., should themselves make arrangements for full and complete procurement. Our Honourable Food Minister should inform all the Provincial Ministries that the Provincial Ministers are right-fully, morally and legally responsible for procuring food for the people of their provinces and they themselves are responsible for procurement of food and when the Honourable Food Minister would hold them responsible for this, then only will they realize their responsibility and will act accordingly.

For example, I would like to inform you that last year 2½ crore mds. of grams were produced in Hissar and we thought that as such a bumper crop has been produced after many years so the cultivators would reap good profits and the people in general would also be benefitted. But what actually happened was that in Hissar the cultivators went on getting Rs. 5 to Rs. 5/8/- per md. although the market price at Delhi was Rs. 10 to Rs. 12 per md. and at Madras and Calcutta Rs. 22 per md. Even at Rohtak the market price of gram was Rs. 7 to Rs. 8 per md. Therefore I asked the Punjab Government the reason of the cultivators of Hissar district not getting the full price of their commodity. I saw Honourable Jairamdas Doulatram also in this connection and requested him that if at Calcutta and Madras the market price of gram was so high and the commodity was not available then why grams from Hissar is not being sold there so that the cultivators here may get the rightful price of their commodity and also the people living in Calcutta and Madras may not experience the scarcity; and in this way the complaint of the Hissar cultivators, that they do not get the full price, will be met. I requested him to lift all restrictions and controls that have been imposed in this respect. But all my efforts proved a wild goose chase.

The real fact is that the Provincial Ministries are not prepared to adopt this policy and the Centre also does not make efforts to instruct them in this respect. When I discussed this matter with East Punjab Government, the Government informed me that if all the provinces do away with these restrictions or else the Centre compel the Provincial Ministries to do so then the East Punjab Government is prepared to withdraw all such restrictions. The result was that no decision could be arrived at. I would like to submit that these cultivators are quite illiterate and are not able to voice their grievances. They live in villages far away from towns, railways and roads, and what ever they produce they are incapable of withholding it for long. So they cannot gain any profits from a good harvest. But on the contrary those people reap profits who are more clever and have more money i.e. middlemen. If the poor villagers live far away from railways or roads it is not their fault, but of the former Provincial Government which did not provide these facilities to them. These villagers are not at all at fault in this respect. But after all there is a way out of all these troubles. A solution can be found out. And what is that solution? The solution and way out is the same that has been suggested to this House year after year and has not been acted upon at all. An easy solution of this problem is that the Government should purchase the entire crop from the poor cultivators at a reasonable price and resell it afterwards. Until the provinces are made responsible for this and the responsibility of the Centre clearly defined, no solution can be found out of this problem.

The first and the foremost necessity is that the Provincial Ministries be made entirely responsible for procuring food and they should feel their responsibility. Besides this I beg to submit that the crops grown in a particular district generally form the staple food of the people of that district. For example, in my home district millets and gram form the staple food, but now due to the policy of the Punjab Government all of them eat wheat. In Madras people want to eat rice and in Punjab wheat. But what is being done to-day is that wheat too is given to the people in Madras and rice is given in Punjab. In this way the difficulties of the people are aggravated and uneasiness is produced. Therefore if the local produce of a district is given to people of the same district then there would be no such difficulty.

On page 1120 of Eastern Economist I have read that the average production of food grains for the last five years was 500; meaning thereby that if food grains of all kinds were to be pooled together then the total crop exceeded the total necessity of the whole of India.

[At this stage Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair, which was then occupied by Mr. Deputy Speaker (Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar)].

But in the present times the policy is that all the people should eat only wheat or only rice. It should be ascertained where wheat is generally taken and where rice and food grains may be supplied accordingly. By doing so there would be no scarcity of food grains. For example, I would like to submit that in District Hissar a bumper crop of grains was raised and so a major portion of this crop is still at Hissar and is lying in the barns. But due to the wrong policy of the Centre as well as Provincial Ministry that crop is not being utilized even in these times of want and necessity. The reason is that the Provincial Governments are acting upon the wrong policy of Provincial restrictions and the Central Government also co-operates with this wrong policy with the result that the whole economic condition of the country suffers. It is matter of great regret that neither the former Governments recognised this defect nor the present Government puts forward any useful proposals. Except raising "Grow More Food" slogans none of the Governments pay any attention towards other necessary matters and thus this problem is not solved.

The second thing that I wish to submit is that the Provincial Ministries can execute all the schemes that have been proposed for Grow More Food Campaign, the Centre can not execute them. The Honourable Food Minister has also expressed this opinion in his speech and I am supporting this opinion of him. So in these circumstances I would request that the Provincial Governments should be made responsible for this and they should be compelled to acknowledge their responsibility. And secondly the cultivators should be given the full price of the crops they raise and the cultivators be encouraged to grow more Food. The responsibility of procuring all the foodstuffs should rest with the Provincial Ministries.

This present policy of procuring food grains from America etc. on requests being made by provinces that they stand in need of food grains is not proper. This policy cannot lead us to the ultimate and proper solution of the present difficulty. The Provincial Minister should see what things the cultivators need for growing more food grains and how for the Provincial Governments can help them in their difficulties. So far the Provincial Governments do not care to do so. I would submit an example before you Sir, in support of my argument. In September 1947 Hissar district got a copious rainfall. We approached Honourable Dr. Rajendra Prasad and requested him that we needed tractors for Hissar district. He very kindly passed orders that we may be given tractors. At that time East Punjab Government had not been properly established and was not functioning, and so we had to approach the Government of India. In spite of the fact that the Honourable Dr. Rajendra Prasad had passed orders yet the various Departments of the Government of India wasted fifteen days in this or that on pleas that wagons are not available, there is this difficulty or that and thus fifteen days were wiled away and then tractors were given. During the time wasted in obtaining the tractors the fields lost their moisture, because time waits for none. So when we are given tractors no useful purpose could be served as the proper time had passed. These tractors are still lying and rusting in the fields of the various villages of Hissar District. The Provincial and the Central Governments did not even take the trouble of enquiring about the fate of these tractors. You yourself can well estimate the significance of all this. The point is that the Provincial Agricultural Ministry does not at all realise its duty. While sitting here the handsome face of the Honourable Jairamdas Doulatram cannot be seen by the whole of India. India cannot see his invisible hands even. In the provinces the work done by Provincial Ministers is apparent to the people. I just heard Shrimati Renuka Ray putting forward her proposals and on the other hand Mr. Shiva Rao has also submitted his proposals. They have suggested that a Central Development Board be constituted. You yourself Sir, in your speech have suggested the formation of a Central Commission.

Then can I also very humbly submit a proposal? My proposal is that in every district a Development Board be established. This board should be in the charge of a Development Commissioner who should have complete and full knowledge of the conditions in the district and who should get the necessary developments being made in respect of agriculture and foodstuffs.

The principles of Ajmer-Merwara, Delhi Development Act and Damodar Valley Scheme, which have been drawn for the all round development, should be applied to each and every district of India. You will attain success only when these Development Boards will be formed district wise and placed under the charge of Deputy Commissioner or Collector of the district who should see due progress being maintained in accordance with local conditions. By doing so the Deputy Commissioner, Tehsildar and Patwari of every district will be duty bound to find out what the cultivators require for increased production, so that these may be obtained with the result that the fields be properly cultivated, the production increased and the land may not be left fallow.

I see that in Hissar District many cultivators do not cultivate their entire holdings. The petty zamindars cultivate as much land as can be tilled with one plough and leave the remaining land fallow. They cultivate only as much land as they themselves can cultivate, and if they own more land then the remaining land is left fallow. The reason is that they are afraid of the fact that if they were to lease out the land to someone for cultivation then ultimately that cultivator would become its owner. They fear that if any lands are leased to some cultivator for cultivation then afterwards he will be declared its owner. So they do not get the whole land put under plough. Therefore I would very humbly submit that the present shortage of food is due to this fact also that the entire arable land of India is not put under cultivation. If the entire arable land in every part of our country is put under cultivation then there would surely be no shortage of food. It is the duty of the Government to make its policy firm. I every day see that the Government policy changes from day to day. This is very improper. For example, if the Government intends to abolish the zamindari system then issue orders once and for all that zamindari system has been abolished, but if for the present the Government does not intend to abolish zamindari then an announcement may be made that zamindari system will last for ten years or more or less. The cultivators are put to loss by this policy of the Government with the result that petty zamindars owing 200-150 bighas of land put under cultivation only a portion of their holdings and do not wish to lease out the remaining portions of their lands to any cultivators.

Sir, much has been said on the points on which I had wanted to draw your attention. I do not intend to take more of your time as other honourable members have to speak on the subject. But with your permission Sir, I beg to submit that we had passed a directive in the constitution banning cow slaughter. I have just returned from Bombay and had also gone to Calcutta, but very humbly I would beg to submit that in Calcutta and Bombay thousands of cows and bullocks are slaughtered and their slaughtering has not stopped as yet. Since 15-20 years it has been in the knowledge of the Government that cows and buffaloes from Hissar and Rohtak District are being taken to Calcutta and Bombay where they are slaughtered just after first lactation. The people living there are very wealthy and so they take away from here cows and other milch cattle after paying heavy prices and on first lactation they not only get their money back put even profits also. Then afterwards they get these animals slaughtered. Therefore it is essential that this evil may be rooted out so that the breed may not be exterminated. The orders of the Government of India are passed only on paper. The Honourable Minister has admitted in his speech that this matter cannot be settled without the co-operation of the provinces. If steel is given for a particular purpose it is utilized for some other purpose. Under these circumstances there is no necessity of setting up these committees. The necessity is that a clear notice should be given to provinces that till the time they themselves do not make definite progress towards the self-sufficiency of the provinces, the Centre will not give them any help. I know that if it were to happen so then our country could produce food much more than our necessity. But this can be done only when every cultivator were to think it to be his patriotic duty to produce more food grains and in this only lies the well being of the country.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzra (U. P.: General): Sir, I am afraid that this resolution will be withdrawn. But I have no doubt whatsoever that it is necessary to appoint a committee to investigate the reasons for the failure of the Grow More Food Campaign and to suggest remedial measures. The Grow More Food Campaign has been going on for six years but the intensity of the public dissatisfaction with its results is well known. The Department of Agriculture have often claimed substantial results but they have never yet been able to satisfy the public that the expenditure has been commensurate with the results obtained. If the opinion of the Food Secretariat were asked for I have little doubt that it would be found that it was as dissatisfied as the general public. I may go further and say that it appears that even the Ministry of Agriculture themselves are dissatisfied with the results that have so far been achieved.

In the memorandum that has been supplied to us by the Ministry of Agriculture it has been pointed out that between 1943 and 1946 an expenditure of about 16 crores by way of grants and loans was incurred on the production of more food. As regards the results of this expenditure the memorandum says: "It is difficult to say in quantitative terms what exactly were the results achieved during the period." My honourable friend the Minister of Agriculture expressed a similar opinion during the conference of Ministers of Agriculture from the provinces and States that was held in September last. This being the state of things it is obvious that if Government want to inspire public confidence and to win the support of the public a committee should be appointed to go into the whole matter and if possible reassure the public that whatever mistakes might have been committed in the past we might expect more systematic and beneficial measures in the future.

The memorandum to which I have referred claims that while the system that existed up to the beginning of 1947 was unsatisfactory, the method that has been introduced to judge the results of the measures adopted or to be adopted in connection with the 1947-48 to 1951-52 plan are such as to enable Government to know accurately the return from the expenditure incurred in future. I am glad to know that the Ministry of Agriculture have at last seen the necessity of finding more accurate methods of determining the increase in the yield of food crops in consequence of the increase in expenditure. But there are two or three things that the House should bear in mind in this connection.

It is very necessary that the production of food in this country should be increased but it is no less necessary that the loss owing to various kinds of pests should be reduced to the utmost extent possible. The question of wheat rust has received a fair amount of attention in this country.

The research work carried on by Mr. K. C. Mehta, Principal of the Agra College has shown that disease germs are brought to the plains from the hills and that if wheat cultivation there were stopped, adequate compensation being given to the growers of wheat, a great deal of avoidable waste could be prevented. His work has secured recognition abroad, and I believe that the method recommended by him has been tried successfully in one or two countries. But for some reason our Ministry of Agriculture have held that either the method suggested is not sound or that it is not suitable to India. In 1946-47 the loss from wheat rust was as much as 2½ million tons. It is necessary in my opinion that the matter should be reconsidered. No prejudices and jealousies, if they exist, should be allowed to stand in the way of the adoption of methods that will greatly increase the quantity of food available to the public without any expenditure comparable to that already incurred.

There is another question also that demands attention in this connection. The Famine Inquiry Commission of 1943 have pointed out in their Report which was published in 1945 that in rice lands adequate water being available and no new irrigation facilities consequently being needed the production could be increased considerably if more manure could be used. The Report of this Commission has been before Government for about four years and before the present Government for two years. I should like to know what attention this question has received at their hands. My honourable friend the Minister of Agriculture told us yesterday that in spite of the best efforts put forth by them they could not secure an adequate supply of fertilisers from abroad. If the supply of fertilisers is limited I think its distribution between the various objects for which it is required should be carefully considered. Will it be more paying to use fertilisers in rice lands or not? Fertilisers can be used there without waiting for the construction of new tanks or canals. My honourable friend the Minister of Agriculture made an interesting and exhaustive speech yesterday, but unfortunately he made no reference whatsoever to this question to which the Famine Inquiry Commission attached no little importance and which has been before the Legislature ever since its Report was published.

I may, I think, usefully draw the attention of the House to another recommendation of the Famine Inquiry Commission. The Commission realised that if the production of cereals was to be increased to such an extent as to do away with the need for their importation, Government would have to shoulder a colossal responsibility. It therefore suggested that the production of tubers, that is root crops, should be regarded as a matter of great importance. It drew particular attention of the Government to the great need for increasing the production of potatoes, sweet potatoes, tapioca and bananas, and it pointed out that in energy value they were superior to the cereals though inferior in their protein content. If we could increase the production of such things, then the Commission felt that a smaller amount of cereals would enable the Government to provide the country with adequate and balanced food. In the Memorandum that has been supplied to us all that is stated is that greater concentration is aimed at in the future on the production of cereals and root crops. Surely, the matter being of fundamental importance, we should be supplied with far more information on the subject than what Government have done.

Lastly, I come to the question of the urgent need for making a proper approach to the cultivator on whom alone the success of the Grow More Food will depend. I do not know what efforts have been made in this connection. But so far as I have been able to ascertain, the importance of obtaining the co-operation of the cultivator has not received adequate attention so far and I venture to think that this question received the attention of the Conference of Ministers of Agriculture that was held in September last. But I think, Sir, that it should receive much more attention than it has yet received or is likely to receive if the Governments in India continue to follow their routine, hum-drum and hope-killing methods.

Sir, if you will permit me, I should like to refer to the question of the accuracy of our statistics before I sit down. It has been known for years that the character of the machinery employed for the collection of statistics of crop yields is very unsatisfactory. The Famine Enquiry Commission discussed this matter at some length. We are now asked to believe that as a result of the new method of calculating the increase in the yield adopted by the Ministry of Agriculture, the old errors would be avoided and that the calculations made in future would be more reliable. I do not know how we are going to obtain statistics not of what the yield should be but what it is. We have, in the past, been frequently told unofficially that the information received on this subject from the provincial governments was more or less unreliable. I do not want to be hard on the provincial governments. I do not accuse them of deliberate attempts to mislead the Government of India, but if it is felt that accurate information is not being received from the provinces, it is necessary for the Government of India to devise some method that would enable them to be more in touch with the cultivator than they are at present.

I do not propose to deal with any other points, though I should have liked to controvert some of the observations made by the Minister of Agriculture. He said yesterday, in pointing out the importance of agriculture, that its development was necessary for our industrial development. I heartily agree with him there, but I hope that he will not forget that the success of agriculture will depend not merely on its increased yield in future but also on the provision of alternative employments that would draw off the surplus population on land and reduce the pressure on it. Industrial development and agricultural development must proceed together. Unless our standard of living rises, there is no hope that we shall be able to solve the problem before us. If the Honourable Minister of Agriculture needs money for the development of agriculture, let him come before us and ask for it. Have we ever stood in his way? Have we said to him that if the Ministry of Agriculture can inspire public confidence the House will not be prepared to grant the money needed for its schemes and make this country not merely self-sufficient in regard to food crops but also to put it in a better position in regard to the growing of non-food cash crops. One result, I think, of the appointment of a Committee will be that it will be in a position to go into the whole question of agricultural production and ask Government so to plan it as to provide for all our needs. For these reasons, Sir, I repeat that I am heartily in favour of the appointment of such a Committee as is suggested in the Resolution before us.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch, till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch, at Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly the growing of Lunch, at Half Past Two of the Clock.
Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Maralankar) in the Chair.

Begum Aizaz Rasul (U.P.; Muslim): Sir, there can be no two opinions about the wishes expressed by the Honourable Minister for Agriculture yesterday, that more attention should be given to agriculture and more money should be spent on the development of agriculture in this country. Sir, in a country where 85 per cent. of the people live in rural areas, in a country where the main source of livelihood and income is agriculture, I think it is very necessary that every effort should be made in order to develop agriculture to the fullest extent. But, Sir, the resolution that is under consideration to-day brings home to the Government the fact that the Grow More Food Campaign instituted by the Government from the Centre and from the Provinces has been an utter failure; and I think I am voicing the opinion of the common man that this campaign has been an utter failure as far as the Provinces are concerned. We find from the figures given by the Agriculture Ministry that the Centre is giving large sums of money to the Provinces for this campaign, which includes boring of tube wells, supply of improved seed etc. We find that the Provinces are also spending large amounts of money in this respect. But, Sir, the results do not justify the spending of these big sums. There has been hardly any corresponding return for the money that has been spent by the Provinces and the Centre. Sir, just as education, clothing and other necessities of life are essential for the people of a country, of far greater necessity is the providing of food to the people in order to save them from starvation and to enable them to keep body and soul together. Therefore, Government cannot ignore its responsibility. There is no doubt that there is a world shortage of food. We all admit that. There is also no doubt that there are many factors that go to create this shortage of food in our own country, and the Honourable Minister mentioned some of those reasons yesterday. We are entirely in agreement with him as regards those reasons. But at the same time, it is the duty of the Government to devise ways and means in order to make up that shortage, and in order to do away with those reasons which cause this deficit and shortage, and try to provide for the people food that is necessary for their existence, by increasing production in the country itself.

It is said that about Rs. 130 crores were spent in one year in purchasing food stuffs from outside, and the amount that will stand as a dead loss to the Government will be about Rs. 30 crores. Sir, that is not a small amount for a poor country like India which is called by the statesmen of our country as the richest country in resources, but the poorest as regards its standards of living. It is, therefore, very necessary that such large amounts that are spent in the procurement of food from outside should be done away with, and this very much needed money should be utilised for nation-building activities, and for buying implements of agriculture for the development of our own agriculture.

Yesterday, amongst other reasons, the Honourable Minister, mentioned the fact that there has been an increase in the population in our country at the rate of about 40 lakhs a year. Sir, this a matter which should not be mentioned just in passing, but should certainly engage our serious attention, and I feel that when so much is being done to develop our country educationally, economically and in other respects this very necessary item of social education should also be taken up seriously. I am sorry that the Honourable Minister for Health is not present in the House at this moment, but I really should like to invite her attention to the fact that family planning and the limitation of families is a very great need in our country, and this matter should be taken up by the Ministry of Health, and with the concurrence and help of other social bodies our people should be made to realise the importance of this, not only from the point of view of health but from the economic and social point of view also. In every civilized country in the world these problems are being taken up and tackled in all seriousness and I do not see why we should not do so also. Much attention is being directed to the rural areas and educational and other facilities are being provided to them, therefore, this very necessary side of social education should also be taken up seriously and developed on the lines that it has been done in other countries of the world as soon as possible.

Sir, the Honourable the Mover of this resolution yesterday, amongst other things mentioned the Agricultural Income-Tax which will, to a great extent, discourage the Grow-More Food Campaign in the provinces. I am entirely in agreement with him, because I know from experience in my own province, that because the agricultural income-tax has been imposed, ordinary people, not only landlords and zamindars but big tenants and farmers who had started developing their lands on scientific lines and started farming on a large-scale, they are being greatly discouraged because they feel that the returns to them for the money spent will hardly justify their taking all this trouble. This is a thing which Government has to consider, and to see whether it is in the interests of the country as a whole, to impose this agricultural income-tax at a moment when every effort should be made to help the people to produce more, and when every avenue should be explored in order to increase production.

From the figures of procurement furnished by the Honourable Minister I am sorry to see that the United Provinces procured only four per cent. of its food requirements from the agriculturists. This is a very small percentage and should be increased. I think that a good way of procuring more food would be to fix rent in kind, instead of as at present in cash. If the tenant could give the rent in kind to his landlord, the latter could in turn pay his revenues to Government also in kind. This would in a great measure help the Government in its procurement policy. No policy of rationing or control can succeed unless there is a sound procurement policy. If, in the United Provinces, only four per cent. of the food could be procured, there must be something wrong with the system enforced. I am afraid I may again be displeasing Professor Ranga when I say that the agriculturist is not coming forward with his produce. I assure him that I am not saying this in any spirit of rancour, ill will or ill feeling, but the fact remains that on account of the high prices of foodgrains the financial condition of the tenant today is such that it is not necessary for him to sell out a very large part of his produce in order to pay his rent. I do not know the conditions in Madras and in the South. But I can say that in my province the tenant has only to sell a very small part of his produce in order to pay the rent due to the landlord, and hoards the greater part of his produce to sell when the prices go up. For this reason also, I say that if rents are collected in kind it will help the policy of procurement.

I am afraid I have not got more time to refer to other points. I hope that something will be done soon and that the very serious question of shortage of food will be dealt with in the proper manner. We cannot afford to let this policy of drift continue any longer. There should be far more co-ordination between the Centre and the Provinces as regards the agricultural policy. When the Centre pays large amounts to the provinces for pushing forward agricultural schemes, it is up to the Centre to ask for yearly or half-yearly returns of reports to enable them to judge the results and also to find out what the provinces are doing in order to improve their agricultural output. I suggest that it is necessary that the Centre should be more firm with the provinces in the matter of this agricultural policy.

Mr. Speaker: I propose to allot not more than ten minutes to each speaker. I am trying to adjust the speakers, but it is impossible to do that when members, in spite of requests, exceed their time and reduce the time available to others. I intend to call upon those members who have moved amendments to speak first. At my instance they have just moved their amendments, intending to speak later on.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri (Assam: General): I have moved an amendment in which I sought to substitute the words 'unsatisfactory results' for the words 'the failure'. I submit, Sir, this amendment is not a mere verbal amendment. The speech which was delivered yesterday by my friend from the right Mr. Ranbir Singh Chaudhuri goes to show what has been done as a result of the Grow More Food Campaign. He wants, of course for his province got a large grant of 54 lakhs from the Honourable Minister. Nevertheless I think the facts and figures which he showed demonstrated that the Grow More Food Campaign has not been a total failure, though it has not been as satisfactory as it should have been. I should be very careful in criticising his action, so long as I cannot suggest a better method than his. The Honourable Minister himself admits that the results were not as satisfactory as he wished. He has not held out any dogmatic assertion that his method is the best and that he would not accept any advice or suggestion. That being so, we have followed a programme which has unfortunately not been as successful as we expected. The result has not been commensurate with the urgency of the situation. It has not been commensurate with the hopes it has raised in our minds; it has not been commensurate with the expenditure which we have incurred and more than that, Sir, I would not say. I therefore suggest the Honourable Minister should be willing to accept the amendment, which I have proposed, because I would not like to say to the world that our National Government has failed in its attempt on a vital matter but that the result has yet to be seen. I feel we must not accept that we have failed before we have gone to the final end of the goal. This suggestion, which I have put forward, I submit should be accepted by the House as well as by the Honourable Minister.

As regards the specific suggestions which you, Sir, have asked us to submit, I would make some in the light of experience which I have obtained from my own province but these suggestions should not be carried out if it is not compatible with the condition of the provinces.

First of all, Sir, I would point out that Assam has been a surplus province so far as production of rice was concerned and yet unfortunately it so happened last year that there was a scarcity of rice in the two most important towns of the province, namely, Shillong and Gauhati, and in these two towns there were deaths from starvation. The position was most ludicrous. The Government had said that there was a bumper crop in that area; the Government had also asserted that not a single grain had gone out of the province by illicit means to Pakistan and yet even on the top of it, there was scarcity in the town and there were deaths also. The position was so desperate that even the Honourable Minister for Food had to go on fast. He felt for the people who had died from scarcity, and he himself went on a fast till he was able to improve the position. And it was not difficult to improve the position either. As soon as controlled prices were given up and as soon as greater attention was given to the transport system, the scarcity in these two towns disappeared. The fact of the matter was that the whole procurement policy was conceived in a wrong manner. There was a rise in paddy production, but there was no method of transport to bring them from the villages to the towns. The procurement officer instead of taking the trouble to go into the interior villages during dry season to procure rice when the crops are harvested, he spent his time in getting the supply from the places which are easily accessible, with the result that when the rains set in, it was impossible to get the crops from the interior villages and so the crops in the hands of the villagers could not be procured in time. Furthermore, I do not understand why there should be a control of the price of crops which are raised by the people of the provinces themselves? Our peasants ought to have the best price for the produce which they make. I do not accept the suggestion, which has been made by some, and which seems reasonable to many, that if we reduce the price of the crops, there would be an incentive to greater production to make up the loss in money. I think that suggestion is entirely wrong. In our own province, I found that because agriculture did not produce sufficient income, people, brothers and families had to go out of the town in order to earn living as labourers, but the moment the price was raised in our province and the moment the agriculturist was able to get more price for the produce, those people who had gone to the towns to serve as domestic servants or mill labourers, they returned back to the village and helped their brothers in getting more produce by cultivation. I would therefore request the Honourable Minister not to listen to those who suggest that there should be a reduction of price in order to compel the people to get more production. That will be a very suicidal policy.

Then, Sir, the specific suggestion which I wish to make in this matter is that the procurement policy ought to be revised. I should think that the control price should be removed; there need not be any control price because so long as the province is self-supporting, they should be allowed to get as much price as they can and the only condition which should be laid down is to see that no export is made from the province, without the consent of the Government. That is the only thing on which Government ought to pay attention and for that purpose if we are to spend the money which they are now incurring in the procurement policy to watch that the crops do not go out of the province without the permission or a permit of the Government then that expenditure would be much better utilised.

Then, Sir, I fully endorse what my honourable friend, the Begum Sahiba has said just now that we should now think of revising the assessable amount of the Agricultural Income-tax. The agricultural income-tax in some provinces are assessable on an income of Rs. 2,000. Considering the price level now-a-days, Sir, Rs. 2,000 is not very much, nor is this agricultural income-tax going to be a source of greater income on inasmuch as those people—the zamindars and the middle-class land-owners—who might have been producing more, they are now very much reluctant to increase the produce, because they would have to pay the agricultural income-tax. Therefore, Sir, I would suggest that the whole question of reducing the amount of the assessable income of the Agricultural income-tax should be reconsidered by different Government.

About another matter to which my honourable friend Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava referred, I can say with greater emphasis in respect of my own province. There is a system of land tenure by which annual leases are issued to cultivators and different persons. These annual leases are given on the strictest condition that if that land is found in possession of somebody other than the lease-holder, then the lease will be transferred in the name of that person who is in possession. This is No. 1 limitation. The No. 2 limitation is that no sub-letting is allowed in respect of those leases. What happens is this: A man who is in possession of land, more than he can cultivate, he keeps it fallow or he does the cultivation in a very indifferent manner, but if, on the other hand, he was allowed to sub-let his land or to employ all classes of labourers to cultivate for him, the land might have yielded more produce and that would greatly help in the Campaign of Grow More Food. This is a defect which has been pointed out by my honourable friend, Pandit Thakur Das in respect of his own province and I say this is acting very adversely against the desire to grow more food because of this system there. There in Assam, you cannot even employ a tenant, who belongs to a particular class. If there are areas which are meant for one class of people and areas which are meant for another class of people and if for one area of one class of people they utilise the labour of a person who belonged to another class, then his lease is liable to be cancelled. So that system of land tenure wherever it exists should be done away with.

Sir, my honourable friend, Shri Biswanath Das yesterday spoke of co-ordination of different heads of Ministries. He had, in his infinite, but inexplicable regard for the lady members of this House refrained from mentioning the name of the Honourable Minister for Health in this connection. I would submit, that the Honourable Department of which the Honourable Minister of Health is in charge is greatly responsible for lesser production of food in the country. I will show how in our part of the province, generally during the cultivation season large percentage of cultivators are laid up in bed on account of malarial fever. Just in the height of the cultivation season malaria breaks out in an epidemic form and if at that time you could only distribute quinine amongst them, you could have saved a lot of lives and at the same time would have contributed to much larger production of crops during the season. But today we do not get enough quinine for purposes of distribution among the cultivators. During that season dysentery also breaks out in almost every village. Nothing has been practically done to save these villages and this scarcity could be removed. These are preventable diseases and we should be ashamed that we are not able to tackle these preventable diseases even. These diseases take away a lot of human lives and they are largely responsible for lesser production of food in this country.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. The honourable member has already taken fifteen minutes, which is his full quota and he has exceeded that by another ten minutes.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: I will now speak on my other amendments.

Mr. Speaker: I cannot allow that. He may just mention his points in a sentence or two.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: I will just refer to the other more mischievous resolution moved by Mr. Sidhva. I take him seriously. I do not know if he has moved the resolution in a spirit of a joke or on account of spitefulness. I ask him if there is any other creature other than a carnivorous one who can live solely on meat and fish. Do human beings live on meat and fish without rice? Of course, I understand that dogs can do it; tigers can do it; jackals can do it. Can human beings in any country live merely on fish and meat? If this resolution has to be carried out.....

Shri R. K. Sidhva (C.P. and Berar: General): May I point out that the honourable member is misinterpreting my resolution. It is meant for hotels. He is talking jocularly!

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: I am not. Supposing his resolution is accepted by the Honourable Minister, which God forbid he does! Then all the messes in Calcutta, where students live, and the restaurants and hotels will have to close down. (Shrimati Renuka Ray. "And in Shillong!") Quite so. My friend has however not provided for the ordinary household. Rice is a staple food. No one can give up rice. One can give up fish and meat but not rice. If I take to rice instead of taking to fish and meat, I shall then consume more rice than the Mover of this resolution contemplates in his motion. I shall consume more than I am consuming today. When I have other foods to take, if the alternative is between rice and fish, then I shall take to rice and the result will be a greater consumption of rice.

The whole thing has been conceived in a spirit of a joke, because my friend who takes more to wheat has failed to include wheat here. He wanted to have his parata and gosht, which he takes. If my friend wants economy in this direction, he should show the example and he should tell his friends in Northern India that they must not take sweetened rice and "pulao". Why do they take so much of sweetened rice? If they wish that they can give up these luxuries, and then there in Madras and Bengal get more rice!

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member need not search for points.

Shri Basanta Kumar Das (West Bengal: General): The amendment that I moved was to the effect that the methods of implementation of the programme by a specified time limit should be taken into consideration by the Committee that has been suggested by the mover of the resolution. Sir, the points that have been raised during this debate have given us a picture of how the food production programme has been wanting. The defects that we find is in the method of implementation. I will just read a few lines from the memorandum that has been given to us:

"It cannot be over-emphasized that the success of the food production places depends primarily on the enthusiasm of the cultivators, the public and the Provincial Governments. Every effort is being made to create this enthusiasm. Food production work has to be built from below more than directed from above and here it is that the cooperation of the public is of paramount importance."

Sir, to my mind the crux of the problem is here. Up till now this problem has not been tackled on a nation-wide scale. There is no sign of a national emergency in our minds. I have practical and personal experience of the rural areas and we over there do not feel that we are in the midst of a national emergency. We do not know that our nation is heading towards a crisis. Our people do not know. Our public men do not feel that and they do not give expression to it by their action. Sir, if a national emergency is there, it must be tackled in that way. When there was a war, and when there were other national emergencies, it was tackled in that fashion and the people were aware of it. This memorandum says:

"More than all these difficulties, the major problem confronting those who are in charge of this work is how to prove to the public that for a certain amount of expenditure and effort, a certain result has been achieved."

The cultivator who has to produce is quite ignorant that his effort will produce some good results.

There is not a single farm conducted by the Government in the rural areas. I can venture to say that there is not a single farm in many districts of our province, and if the people can see with their own eyes that some good results can be produced by taking to some such methods, they will follow them. There are, I think, agricultural officers in every part of the country, but they are quite ignorant of their work. Generally they are fresh from college and school and they do not know what agriculture is. I know in Bengal we have at least 1,500 workers who were in the work of the Jute Department and they have now been taken to the Agricultural Department for working in the rural areas. But they are quite ignorant and they must be trained.

In this memorandum also we find amongst the difficulties that the want of training of workers is one. "Strenuous efforts are being made to train men in the provinces but this anyhow is a matter of time." I think unless and until some training is given to them and those workers actually in the field are trained in their work, they will be as useless as they are now. They can be taken by batches and given this training and within six months they will become useful. If model farms are started in the mofussil areas the cultivators will be able to understand what they have to do.

There is an other point which I would like to deal with. In many parts of the country only a single crop is produced on the land. We should taken to double-cropping and choose the lands which will yield two crops in a year. If that is done production will go up. There are some difficulties in this respect. Water has to be found and the crops have to be chosen for double-cropping purposes. If the Agriculture Department take it to their heart as to how this can be done I think good results will be produced by planned double-cropping.

Then, Sir, manure is unknown in many parts of the country. Cultivators do not generally use manure. Large quantities of cowdung and farmyard manure are being wasted. The fuel problem is such that the agriculturists generally use cowdung for fuel purposes. This has to be conserved by all means. Oil cake, cowdung and other manure can easily be procured and come handy to the agriculturists. They can be utilised for purposes of manure. We cannot procure chemical manure very easily and it is a question of money also. Besides the agriculturists also do not always know how to use that manure for agricultural purposes. All that we have got to do is to find a substitute fuel for cowdung which they can easily use.

Also they do not know how to keep proper seeds for their next cropping. These officers to whom I have already referred also do not know what seed to procure for the cultivators. I have personal experience of the procurement of seeds. Some agricultural officers procured thousands of maunds of seed which did not produce any results. Those seeds were thrown away, because they themselves did not know whether those seeds were useful or not. Therefore if we want intensive agriculture some intensive programme has to be taken in hand. We should not only look to the long term or permanent methods which we are adopting now. Of course the long term and short term processes must be simultaneous; otherwise we cannot cope with the situation that is before us. But the Grow More Food Campaign is a short term programme and we must have a specified time limit for that. If we fix up a programme for a specified time and apply ourselves strenuously to it we shall be able to have the desired result. For that purpose the man behind the plough should occupy our mind more. If we apply our minds to the difficulties that are before him we can solve them and we can induce him to produce more and more.

There are several difficulties that confront the actual man behind the plough and if we try to solve those problems we will be able to see the desired result. The first and foremost step is that all public men and public institutions should take it to their heart that we are in a national emergency and we should actively take up a programme in hand to solve the difficulties.

Shri Brajeshwar Prasad (Bihar: General): Sir, I have to offer a few concrete suggestions to the Honourable Minister for Food and Agriculture. I am not very sure how far the present food shortage in the country can be solved by improved methods of agriculture in the country. I feel that unless the Department of Food and Agriculture is vested with powers over agricultural lands it will not be possible for any Food Minister to solve the problems which confront us. Agricultural land must be brought under central jurisdiction. An amendment of the Government of India Act is necessary before anything can be done to improve the food position in the country.

The second suggestion which I have to offer is that division and fragmentation of land must be stopped and if this is to be done, then our laws of inheritance must be changed. I do not know how far these things are practicable at present but I do not see any other way of doing things.

To come to some concrete suggestions I have one suggestion in view, that the burning of cowdung cakes is a very wasteful practice and the Government must stop it if they want to use this natural fertiliser instead of depending upon foreign chemical fertilisers. I need not elaborate on this point because it is very well known and quite obvious that this natural fertiliser is far superior in value and in result to chemical fertilisers that come to us from abroad.

The other suggestion I have to make is that all the rice mills must be closed down. I do not know whether the Central Government have power to do it but if the present Ministry feels that it has no such power it can come before the House with some specific Bill to that effect. The real problem is that the peasant is not in a position to plough the field and as my friend Mr. Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri pointed out the peasant is disease-ridden

[Shri Brajeshwar Prasad]

The Ministry of Health must wake up to its responsibilities and duties before any improvement can be shown in this direction. Moreover the peasant suffers from lack of protein. He is therefore not in a position to plough the field. He has not got the strength to do it. He requires milk and eggs. I do not know from where those things will come. (An Honourable Member: "From cows and hens!") and how he is going to be fed. But I am sure that unless his welfare is attended to he will not be able to plough his land and we cannot grow more food. We are moving in a vicious circle. Unless the farmer is well fed he cannot plough his land and produce more food and unless there is more food he cannot plough his land.

There is one thing to which I would like to draw the attention of the Honourable Minister, I have been told on the authority of the Government Chief Whip that the East Punjab Government allowed more than one lakh maunds of gram to rot. This could have been distributed to the other provinces which stood in need of it. The whole thing rotted and went to waste and the Government of Pandit Gopichand Bhargava did not move its little finger to solve the difficulty which confronted the local population. Sir, I have nothing more to add.

Shri Upendranath Barman: Sir, this problem of food is such a hydra-headed problem that members have spoken on various aspects of it. Before I come to my own amendment which is No. 3 in the agenda, I shall make some observations which are of a general nature as regards the main purpose of the debate today. To my mind the main purpose of the debate on this Grow More Food Campaign is only to judge whether the Central Government with all its paraphernalia and machinery has taken up in right earnest the real problem that faces the country today. From the statement of the Honourable Minister yesterday we come to learn that so far as this Grow More Food undertaking of the Central Government is concerned it extends only to five per cent of the cultivated land in this country. Even as regards that he states that the real responsibility of making it a success lies with the Provinces and the public at large. I judge from that statement that it is a kind of plaintive tone; as if the Central Government has got some idea of making our country self-sufficient in food but that idea is not being imbibed by the public, or the Provincial Governments are not acting up to that idea. May I ask the Honourable Minister and his Departments whether they have drawn up any elaborate scheme for the purpose and whether they have given those schemes to the provinces, province by province giving definite suggestions for working it up; and may I know whether they have judged, from the conduct or action of the different provinces, as to which provinces have acted up to it and which have not? If it is the case of the Central Government that they are lacking in powers under the present Government of India Act, has the Minister in charge ever consulted with his colleagues in the Central Cabinet that such and such powers are needed for the purpose of making this food problem a success, and if so what is the result? There is no denying the fact that the Central Government today enjoys the unqualified support and confidence of the country as a whole, and if in their undertaking, which is of the gravest nature today, they find that the Government of India Act as it is at present is deficient and that they cannot act up to their methods or what seems to be their ideal, then they can easily amend the Government of India Act so that the country may live. There is absolutely no difficulty about that. But if they have not done that, simply to complain before the public who have entire and full confidence in them, is not acting up to the confidence that the public have in them.

[At this stage Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair, which was then occupied by Mr. Deputy Speaker. (Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar)].

From the statistics that are available to us I find that the present position of the food problem in India is that we have to import from outside crores and crores worth of food grains. Recently difficulties have arisen as regards payment for this purpose. We find that up to 1947 the balance of payments was being met from the Sterling Fund. But since 1947 these sterling balances were of no avail so far as our purchases in dollar countries were concerned. So since that time it was the International Monetary Fund that was being availed of for the purpose of meeting that balance. And we come to learn that even that International Monetary Fund has recently warned us that that Fund is only for temporary assistance and not for permanent assistance. They have therefore warned us that we should make our own arrangements and not rely upon that Fund. I think that as a result of that we shall not be able to import even that quantity of food which we require to meet our country's requirements even though it might be available in dollar countries. Then what would be the position? I think no more crisis can be imagined than this food crisis where almost thirty four crores of people have to depend upon Government for their daily bread. Once there is a crisis of food in India I do not know to what position we shall come to. There cannot be a greater national emergency than this food emergency in India as at present. And in order to meet that emergency, if the Central Government think that they should assume such powers as are necessary for this so that they can make the policy successful throughout the length and breadth of India, irrespective of Provinces or States, I think they can easily assume the power. The House will be quite willing to give them that power.

Now I shall come to my own amendment in which I have asked the Honourable Minister to consider whether, in order to make our Grow More Food Campaign or our food policy a success, it is necessary to fix a minimum as well as a maximum price for principal food grains in India. My reasons are these. First of all, as I have already stated, the Honourable Minister said that the present Grow More Food undertaking covers only five per cent. of the cultivable land in this country. Then what about the remaining 95 per cent. We are practically not tackling it. What are the means so that we can tackle all the hundred per cent of the cultivable lands in India? That is the problem of problems. Unless every inch of land in India that can produce some more food can be utilised for the purpose I think this huge problem cannot be solved. My own suggestion is that for that purpose huge amounts of money are not required and they are not also available. But it is necessary to bring about a psychological change in the minds of the agriculturists. What is that? Previous to me Chaudhuri Ranbir Singh and Pandit Bhargava have stated on the floor of this House that agriculturists have sometimes to part with their produce at a much lesser price than the market price. Sometimes huge quantities of food grains are also wasted because of want of procurement by Government at the fair price. What is the result? If the agriculturist does not know that he is assured of a certain price for his produce, he will not devote that much energy nor show that much initiative which is required to grow more.

In addition to this, it is to my mind necessary that in order that agriculture may be considered as a paying proposition in its relationship to industrial or other pursuits every able-bodied man who knows about agriculture must be encouraged to continue in it. Otherwise, they would try to find out jobs elsewhere. This will also take away the initiative and energy required for growing more. If the agriculturist knows that Government is ready to pay him a certain price for his produce, if not more, then he will calculate in his mind and stick to agriculture and produce more. Whatever the percentage,—I think it is five per cent—it will be sufficient, because India is five per cent deficit by its requirements or it may be more. In that case, the agriculturists will devote all his energy in producing more than he produces usually. That will not require tractors or dollar balance for purchase of tube-well machinery. It requires merely incentive in the mind of the people. That can only come about by the awareness that he will not have to depend on the vagaries of the market but the State is there and if he offers his produce to the State it will take it at that price.

I want also a maximum price to be fixed, because there is the question of consumers too. If we give more price to the agriculturists, that necessarily means that the consumers will have to pay more for it. But what is the actual state of things? As Chaudhuri Ranbir Singh has pointed out, we find that the agriculturist does not really get the price at which the consumer purchases. I recently had some experience of the rural area and I can say that the Government procurement price is not at all encouraging to the agriculturist for parting with his produce. Government have stipulated a price, a reduced price. There are certain agriculturists who have to sell more than they ought to, and in their case, after a few months they have to purchase again. The agriculturist who sells his produce at a reduced price has to buy after a few months at more than double the price. I say more than double, because that is the actual state of things in many parts of the country—at any rate, in my part of the country. Necessarily, therefore, the agriculturist is reluctant to part with part of his produce because he knows that he may be landed in difficulty by this Government which is taking away his food from him. The consumers also have to pay much greater price than should be paid according to the purchase price. It is the middleman that really enjoys the full benefit of the labour of the agriculturists and the consumers suffer. If there be a ceiling price fixed by Government from year to year before the agricultural season commences, if there be a minimum and maximum price, then the agriculturist will know that he will get the minimum price at least and the traders and profiteers will know that they cannot sell above the maximum price. Thus there will be no grumbling about this food grain trade. If you do not fix the maximum price, then this grumbling will go on and the consumers will suffer. It will not also ensure to the benefit of the growers. To my mind, one of the duties of Government is to ascertain the minimum price that it is prepared to pay to the agriculturist for his produce. In England, in Australia, in America, Government assures the agriculturist a certain price and the agriculturists take to their profession with great zeal and produce more. I submit, Sir, the time has come for Government to consider this matter.

As regards the fixation of price, I will not submit elaborately because it is an extensive problem, but I may suggest that the agriculturists have to invest some capital in their profession. The family unit of five—that is the unit generally accepted—works in its field; there are other costs such as bullocks and manures. All these factors should be taken into consideration and the agriculturist's family should be given a remunerative price which will enable them to lead a decent life. If all these things are assured, the other problems will also solve themselves to some extent and instead of dealing with five per cent. of agricultural land we shall be able to deal with cent per cent of it.

Dr. P. S. Deshmukh: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, the Resolution we are discussing refers to the policy with regard to growing more food, and there have been very many speeches made on the various aspects of this Resolution. Nobody will quarrel with the plan which is intended to grow more food, although I found it difficult to follow you, Sir, when you mentioned that this was one of the worst legacies which the Ministers had inherited from the past. If there was anything good in the legacy, to which we succeeded I should have thought that it was the scheme of "Grow More Food". There is nothing wrong in the scheme or in the idea just as there is nothing wrong in the basic idea of controls. The whole question turns on how far it has been possible to make it practicable and economical and whether Government has been able to get from the scheme the benefits that were expected to accrue from it. Similarly about controls. I for one dislike controls. Not that controls are totally bad or are to be wholly abolished, but because of the abominable situation to which they give rise. It was this that created abhorrence in the mind of Mahatma Gandhi who thought that the disappearance of controls at all costs would be a far lesser evil than the evils flowing from the controls when they were operating. We have had several members of this House—including some very old ones—who went to the extent of criticising the idea of Mahatma Gandhi in their zeal for controls. I am not a control-wala myself. If anything, I am a anti-control-wala and for very good reasons too, because I think that those who are in favour of controls, in their anxiety for the happiness and welfare of a very small fraction of the community, forget that there is a larger mass of people living in the villages—agriculturists and agricultural labourers—for whom controls can never be effective and if controls are worked in the way in which they have been worked in the past, then we will find ourselves in a much worse position every where. So far as grow more food campaign is concerned two important points have already been made. One of them was by Chaudhuri Ranbir Singh and the other by Shri Barman. The whole question of growing more food turns on what you are prepared to pay the agriculturists. Unless you are in a position to make the growing of more food attractive, there is no possibility of increase of production from the land. And unless we do that, there is no possibility of increased production from the land. And here, Sir, I would like to refer more particularly to the part of the country I come from. I come from the Marathi part of C.P. and Berar, and though we hear so much of famine in Gujrat, conditions in my part of the country are not any better. The present-day situation is this, that unless there is some substantial assistance given to the agriculturists, there would be hundreds of acres of land lying fallow during the next season, and nothing will be grown on it. So we have the paradox of the Government spending crores of rupees on bringing under cultivation waste-land and on the other hand we have got the problem of cultivable land lying fallow. My intention in interfering in this debate is merely to point out the gravity of the situation. I am not prepared to blame the Central Government or the Provincial Government. But there is great discontent amongst the people at not getting a proper opportunity to voice their grievances. Conditions in this House, to my mind, are unsatisfactory. There is no proper opportunity to tell the Government and the world and the people of India where exactly the shoe pinches, what is happening under our very eyes and before our very eyes. We have Congress Governments everywhere, and most of them are functioning fairly efficiently. But the dead weight of the majority that we so fortunately have is itself a handicap for many people to speak the truth and to speak it boldly and honestly. And that is the reason why we have a terrible amount of content in the whole country, and I would be very glad if people in responsible positions pay a little more attention to this than before. There has been talk of Communism and everyone wants that India should not suffer in the same manner as many other larger countries which were like India essentially agricultural. But if we do not pay more attention to the people and to the many handicaps and privations from which they suffer, we might be caught napping and we may have to rue the day.

You, Sir, while speaking on the Resolution said that formerly the District Magistrate or the Collector was merely a tax gathering and policing officer. But unfortunately Sir, we are compelled to say that he was doing it far better and discharging even these functions that we do at present. If you examine the figures of expenditure of the Police Department in the various provinces you will find that we are now spending probably five times as much as before. I do not think that is proper. Secondly, on the one hand we spend so much money on Grow More Food, but we are allowing good land to be fallow. Of course we cannot give up the whole scheme of grow more food all at once. That will be suicidal and a waste. But we must take stock of the position and see whether we get the return that we expect. We are told that we have 700,000 tons more of grain and probably at a cost of about Rs. 16 crores. If we work out the interest on this amount and the recurring cost, it will be possible for the Honourable Minister to see whether this is an economic proposition or not. Wherever the Grow More Food Campaign is working effectively, by all means, let it be continued. But wherever waste has been found, it should be discontinued, and money should be found to help the agriculturist to till the land which has not yet fallen waste, but which is likely to fall waste very soon if he is not given substantial assistance.

श्री दीप नारायण सिद्ध : सभापति जी, मुल्क के लिये बड़ी खुशी की बात है कि हम लोगों का ध्यान अब कृषि के महत्व की ओर जा रहा है। मैं पिछले कामों की आलोचना नहीं करूंगा। मेरे पहले जो लोग बोल चुके हैं वह इस बारे में काफी कह चुके हैं। मैं एक बात की ओर सरकार का ध्यान ले जाना चाहता हूँ। स्कीमें बनाई जाती हैं और बनती रहेंगी लेकिन काम करने में जो तेजी और डाइव चाहिए उसकी हमेशा कमी रह जाती है। उपायों को निकालना चाहिये ताकि काम करने में डाइव हो। मैं दो चार सुझाव सरकार के सामने रखना चाहता हूँ। अगर ये सुझाव काम में लाये जायें तो काम में जरूर तेजी आ जायेगी। मेरा अपना ख्याल है कि काम में तेजी आयेगी और खाने के सामानों में अभी जो कमी है उसकी पूर्ति हो जायेगी। इतना ही नहीं, आगे भी हमारे मुल्क में खाने के सामानों की कमी नहीं होगी। मेरे सुझाव इस प्रकार हैं—

१. हमारा देश एक कृषि प्रधान देश है। हमारी जनता बहुत तादाद में कृषि के ऊपर निर्भर रहती है। लेकिन यह एक बड़े खेद की बात है कि कृषि को हम वह महत्व अभी तक नहीं दे सके हैं जिसकी जरूरत है। मैं चाहता हूँ कि हमारी सरकार दुनिया को और हिन्दुस्तान के किसानों को साफ शब्दों में बता दे कि उसकी दृष्टि में कृषि का सवाल एक बुनियादी सवाल है, और सरकार उसे एक बड़े महत्व का सवाल समझती है। इसका ऐलान साफ साफ होना चाहिये। जहां तक मुझे ज्ञान है इस तरह का ऐलान न हमारी सरकार की ओर से अभी तक हुआ है और न हमारे नेताओं की ओर से, जिनके लिये हमारे हृदयों में काफी इज्जत है और मुल्क में जिनके लिये काफी प्रेम है। बराबर यह कहा जाता है कि कृषि के कामों को ऊंचा स्थान मिलना चाहिये। फ़ाइनंस मिनिस्टर, रेल्वे मिनिस्टर और दूसरे लोगों से कहा जाता है कि वे कृषि के सम्बन्ध के जितने काम या जितने सवाल हों उनको बहुत ऊंचा स्थान

दें। अगर हमारी सरकार कृषि को बुनियादी सवाल करार कर देगी तो कृषि के मिनिस्टर को दूसरे मिनिस्टरों के दरवाजे पर बराबर जाने की जरूरत नहीं होगी।

दूसरा सुझाव मैं बहुत अदब के साथ सरकार के सामने रखना चाहता हूँ। कृषि एक प्रधान सवाल है। मैं उसकी प्रधानता को मानता हूँ। इसलिए मैं चाहता हूँ कि हमारे मिनिस्टर जो कृषि विभाग के चार्ज में हों उनके हाथों में केवल कृषि विभाग ही हो। दूसरा काम उनके हाथों में न दिया जाय। अब खरीदने या अब बांटने का काम भी एक बहुत बड़ा काम है। मैं चाहता हूँ कि यह काम किसी दूसरे मिनिस्टर के हाथों में हो। जिस मिनिस्टर के हाथ में कृषि विभाग हो उन्हें अपना पूरा पूरा समय कृषि विभाग को ही देना चाहिये। मैं यह भी चाहूंगा कि हमारे नेता सूत्रों की सरकारों को भी समझाये कि वहां भी जो मिनिस्टर कृषि विभाग के चार्ज में हों वे केवल कृषि का ही काम करें। उनके हाथ में दूसरी तरह का काम न दिया जाय। अगर ऐसा होगा तो काम में जरूर तेजी होगी और कृषि के सवाल का महत्व बहुत ज्यादा लोगों के भीतर बढ़ जायगा।

तीसरा सुझाव जो मैं सरकार के सामने रखता हूँ वह बड़े ही महत्व का है। कल बोलते बोलते श्रीमती रेनुका रे ने बताया कि एक सेंट्रल बोर्ड का निर्माण होना चाहिये। मैं उनकी बातों का समर्थन करता हूँ और मैं चाहता हूँ कि यह सेंट्रल बोर्ड जल्दी से जल्दी बनाया जाय। सेंट्रल बोर्ड बहुत बड़ा नहीं हो ऐसा मैं चाहता हूँ। इसके मेम्बरों की तादाद ११ से ज्यादा न होनी चाहिये। सेंट्रल बोर्ड का काम होना चाहिये स्कीमों को मंजूर करना और यह देखना कि स्कीमों के मुताबिक काम होता है या नहीं। स्कीमों को चलाने में जितनी अड़चनें हों उन्हें ठीक ठीक जानने की कोशिश करना और उनके हल को निकालने का काम सेंट्रल बोर्ड का होना चाहिये। मैं चाहता हूँ कि इस सेंट्रल बोर्ड की प्रतिष्ठा मुल्क में बहुत ज्यादा हो और उसकी धाक बहुत बड़ी हो। इसलिये मेरी राय है कि इस सेंट्रल बोर्ड के सभापति का स्थान हिन्दुस्तान के प्राइम-मिनिस्टर को दिया जाय। जो कृषि के मिनिस्टर होंगे उनको इस सेंट्रल बोर्ड का उप सभापति होना चाहिये।

[श्री दीप नारायण सिंह]

के बोर्डों को बनाने के लिये कहेगी तो सूबे की सरकारें जरूर बोर्ड बनायेंगी। सूब की बोर्डों को सेंट्रल बोर्ड के मातहत काम करना चाहिये।

चौथा सुझाव जिसे मैं सरकार के सामने रखना चाहता हूं वह इस तरह का है। गैर आबाद जमीन को आबाद करना जरूरी है। मैं जमीन को आबाद करने के तरीके पर नहीं जाना चाहता। कहीं कहीं छिटपुट ढंग से यह काम किया जा रहा है, इस काम के लिए एक सेंट्रल कारपोरेशन बनाना चाहिये। इस सेंट्रल कारपोरेशन को सब तरह के साधन मिलने चाहिये। यह सेंट्रल कारपोरेशन जमीन को आबाद करे और जमीन को आबाद रखने के जितने नये तरीके हों उन्हें किसानों को बतलाये। मैं यह भी चाहूंगा कि इस तरह के गैर आबाद जमीन के आबाद करने के कारपोरेशन सूबों में भी बनाये जायें। सूबों के कारपोरेशनों को सेंट्रल कारपोरेशन के सलाह और विचार से काम करना चाहिये। अगर इस तरह काम होगा तो गैर आबाद जमीन आसानी से आबाद हो जायेगी।

पांचवा सुझाव जिसे मैं सरकार के सामने रखना चाहता हूं इस प्रकार है। मैं जानता हूं कि कृषि विभाग के मिनिस्टर के मातहत कौंसिल आफ एग्रीकल्चर और अनेकों कमोडिटी (commodity committees) कमेटियां हैं। इन कमेटियों का निर्माण बहुत पहले हुआ था। जब उनका निर्माण हुआ था उस समय की परिस्थिति और आज की परिस्थिति में बहुत हेर फेर हो गया है। जरूरत इस बात की है कि इन कमेटियों का फिर से संगठन हो और उनको इस तरह से ठोस बनाया जाय ताकि अपने कामों को आसानी से समय के अनुकूल वे कर सकें। उनको अपने काम को करने के लिए पूरा अधिकार होना चाहिये। उनके काम की परीक्षा होनी चाहिये, फल से, न कि उनकी रिपोर्टों से और लम्बे लम्बे नोटों से। इसलिये मैं चाहता हू कि इन कमेटियों का संगठन फिर से हो और उनको ठोस बनाया जाय। एक और भी सुझाव मैं सरकार के सामने रखना चाहता हू। मुल्क में कोआपरेटिव सोसाइटियों की संख्या काफी है। लेकिन अभी भी सभी गांवों में सोसाइटियां नहीं हैं। मैं चाहूंगा कि इस बात पर हमारी सरकार जोर दे कि तमाम गांवों में कोआपरेटिव सोसाइटियां बनें। कोआपरेटिव सोसाइटियों को कृषि के सम्बन्ध के सभी कामों के लिए इस्तेमाल करना चाहिये। मैं चाहूंगा कि कोआपरेटिव सोसाइटियों के मारफ्त ही कृषि का सारा काम गांवों में होना चाहिये। अगर ऐसा किया जायगा तो काम में बहुत तेजी होगी और काम होगा। लोग इस बात को जानते होंगे कि अमेरिका में एक एक्सटेन्शन सर्विस (Extension Service) है। इस सर्विस का काम किसानों की जरूरत को जानना और उनकी जरूरतों को पूरा करने का है। किसानों और कृषि के

विशेषज्ञों के बीच सम्बन्ध कायम कराने का काम भी इस सर्विस का है। यह सर्विस बड़े मोल की है।

हमारे यहां ऐसी सर्विस तुरन्त नहीं कायम हो सकती है, लेकिन अगर कोआपरेटिव सोसाइटियों से काम लिया जाय तो इनके द्वारा एक्सटेन्शन सर्विस का काम बहुत अच्छी तरह से हमारे मुल्क में हो सकता है और हमारा काम आगे बढ़ेगा। मैं अब अधिक कुछ न कह कर यह चाहता हूं कि हमारी सरकार मेरे सुझावों पर और और भी जो सुझाव सरकार के सामने रखे गये हैं उन पर विचार करे, लेकिन विचार करने में देर न लगायें। मूल प्रस्ताव में एक इक्वायरी कमेट्री बनाने की बात कही गयी है। मैं इक्वायरी कमेट्री से डरता नहीं हू। लेकिन मुझे ऐसा प्रतीत होता है कि इक्वायरी कमेट्री अगर बनेगी तो स्वभावतः उसके काम में बहुत समय लग जायगा। सारा मुल्क इक्वायरी कमेट्री की रिपोर्ट की इन्तज़ारी करने लगेगा और जब तक इक्वायरी कमेट्री की रिपोर्ट नहीं आयेगी, तब तक चाहने पर भी कोई काम नहीं होगा। इसलिये मैं चाहता हू कि इक्वायरी कमेट्री नहीं बनाई जाय।

Shri Dip Narayan Sinha (Bihar: General): Sir, It is a matter of great pride for our country that the people are realising the importance of agriculture. I will not review the actions done in the past. The honourable members who have spoken before me have commented upon it a lot. I wish to draw the attention of the Government towards one point. Schemes are chalked out and will be chalked out but the initiative and drive required for the working of these schemes is always wanting. Methods must be found out to give proper drive. I beg to place before the Government few suggestions. If these suggestions are followed then the work will certainly be intensified. I do believe that the work will be intensified and the present shortage of food materials will be made up. Not only this but in future also our country will not face food shortage. My suggestions are as follows:

Ours is mainly an agricultural country. A majority of the population depend upon agriculture. But it is a matter of great regret that till now we did not give agriculture the proper importance required. I wish that our Government should declare to the world outside and to the peasants of India that in the eyes of Government the question of agriculture as a question of basic importance, and the Government do consider it an important one. This declaration must be made in clear terms. As far as I know such declaration has not been made either by the Government or by our leaders, for whom we and the people of our country have great respect and love. Since long it has been said that the question of agriculture must get top priority. The honourable Finance Minister, the honourable Railway Minister and other people are requested to give top priority to every thing concerning agriculture. If our Government would declare agriculture to be a basic problem then the Honourable Minister for Agriculture will not have to request the other Ministers again and again.

Very humbly. I beg to put my second suggestion before the Government. Agriculture is a basic problem. I acknowledge its importance. Therefore I wish that the Minister incharge of Agriculture must hold the portfolio of agriculture only. He must not be given any other work. Purchase of foodstuffs or its distribution is also a major task. I wish that this work may be entrusted to some other minister. The ministry incharge of agriculture should devote his entire time towards agriculture. I would also like that our leaders should suggest to the Provincial Governments also that the ministers incharge of agriculture should devote their entire time towards agriculture. They should not be entrusted with any other work. If this suggestion is acted upon then the work of agriculture will certainly be intensified and the importance of the question of agriculture will clearly be brought home to the people.

The third suggestion that I like to place before the Government is of still more importance. Yesterday Srimati Renuka Ray had suggested the creation of a Central Board. Supporting the suggestion made by her I wish that the Central Board be constituted at the earliest. I wish that the Central Board need not be a very big one. The number of members may not exceed 11. The work of the Central Board must be to approve schemes for the development of agriculture and to see whether work is being carried out accordingly or not. Another work of the Central Board must be to try and find out practical difficulties in the working of these schemes and also to find out the way outs. I wish that the Central Board must be highly honoured and accredited throughout the country. I, therefore, suggest that the Honourable Prime Minister of India be appointed Chairman of this Central Board and the Agriculture Minister, its Vice-Chairman.

Except the Chairman of Central Board every other member should devote his entire time in the interest of the Board. Such Boards should be organised in provinces also. I think that if our Government would ask the provinces to constitute such Boards the Provincial Governments will surely organise them. The Provincial Boards should be under the Central Board.

The fourth suggestion that I beg to place before the Government is as follows. It is essential to reclaim waste land. I do not want to discuss the methods of reclamation. At scattered places this work of reclamation is being done. A Central Corporation should be instituted to deal with the question of land reclamation. This Central Corporation should be provided with every possible means to deal with the question. This Central Corporation should reclaim the waste lands and inform the peasants of all the new methods of permanently rehabilitating the land. I would like that such corporations be constituted in provinces also. The Provincial Corporations should act on the suggestion given by the Central Board. If work is done in this manner then the waste lands would easily be reclaimed.

The fifth suggestion that I wish to place before the Government is as follows. I know that the Council of Agriculture and many Commodity Committees work under the Honourable Minister of Agriculture. These committees were constituted long long ago. A great deal of change has taken place in the setting since they were constituted. Hence it is essential that these should be re-organised and be made substantial so that they may fulfil their task in the light of the changed circumstances. They should be given complete authority to carry on their work. The work done by these committees should be judged by the effects and not by reports or long notes. Therefore, I wish that these committees should be re-organised and be made substantial.

One more suggestion I like to place before the Government. The number of Co-operative Societies in our country is quite sufficient, but still in some villages there are no such societies. I would like that the Government should stress up the fact that all the villages should have Co-operative societies. These co-operative societies should be utilized for every work connected with agriculture. I would like that in villages the entire work connected with agriculture be carried out by these societies. If this is done then the work will certainly be intensified and substantial work will be accomplished. The people might be knowing that there is an Extension Service in America.

The main duty of this service is to ascertain the requirements of the peasants and to carry them out. This service also serves as a connecting link between the peasants and the agricultural experts. This service is very important there. Such service cannot be established in our country at once, but if co-operative societies be utilized then through them work of this Extension Service can be accomplished very successfully in our country and definite progress will be made. Without saying anything more I wish the Government to consider over the suggestions given by me and those given by others, but the Government must not lose time over considerations. In the original resolution a demand has been made for an Enquiry Committee. I am not afraid of any Enquiry Committee. But I believe that if an enquiry committee is set up then naturally it would take much time to do its work. The whole country would wait for the report of the Enquiry Committee and till the time the Report is not out no work will be done however wished. Therefore I wish that the Enquiry Committee may not be set up.

Shri B. P. Jhunjhunwala (Bihar: General): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I had no intention of participating in this debate on the subject. We have discussed this matter every year for the last four or five years and the only result has been the appointment of some committee to tell us something which we have to do. Every year we appoint a committee. If during the last five years these committees have not given us data on which we have to work, I am doubtful whether this latest committee is going to do anything better in the matter of giving us data for producing more food. As such, I am not enthusiastic about proposals for appointing Central Boards or high-power committees and the like. If our Ministers who are the best chosen people in the country have not been able to do much, where is the likelihood of any Board, which my honourable friend Mr. Dip Narayan Sinha wants to appoint, succeeding in doing anything? People who have to work are all there. If we want to produce more we should start the work in earnest.

There is one statement in the speech delivered by the Honourable Minister to which I should like to refer. The Honourable the Food Minister said yesterday that the Grow More Food Campaign has not been so unsuccessful as people think it to be, and in support of that he has said that the target of Grow More Food Campaign was five per cent. that is nine lakhs of additional food grains and in place of that nine lakh tons of food grains, we have produced 7 lakh tons of foodgrains. If that is the thing, I say that it is not only not unsatisfactory, but it has attained a good success. But then the whole question is how far these figures are reliable I would request the Honourable the Food Minister, what was the basis on which this target of increase in five per cent. for Grow More Food Campaign was arrived at and how this statistic has been prepared? Sir, what I say, I am saying it from my personal experience. Leave aside the question of big programmes, of having big dams and all those things. When we are connected with the whole world, we have to take up those things in our hands and we have to produce more, so that we do not only meet the requirements only of our country, but we can export outside also. But Sir, so far as meeting the present emergency situation is concerned, I can say that even with the available materials we can have an increase, at least of 20 per cent. Give us any field and have all the operations in that field according to the method in which our people used to do before and you will find, if not 20 per cent. there will at least be additional production of ten to fifteen per cent. My honourable friend, sitting on the other side, Mr. Dip Narayan Sinha was telling me that he has been able to get 50 per cent. more produce only with available resources and that I myself, as I have said, have tried these methods. I have taken few pieces of land and on which I have seen that the cultivators have got all the facilities of putting in all the operations, of ploughing, weeding and putting in ordinary manure etc. and the yield in that plot of land was fifteen per cent. more than the adjoining plot where there was no proper timely operation either for want only of this ordinary plough, bullock etc. which they have not got at present. (Shri Dip Narayan Sinha: "Fifty per cent. and not fifteen per cent"). I am telling of my experience and my friend, Mr. Dip Narayan Sinha says that he has tried these things only with the available material and that he has been able to show an increase of fifty per cent. production. Sir, the only defect in us is that we are looking only to the big schemes; we do not see as to what the immediate requirements of the cultivators are and whether those requirements can be met by us or not with available resources. If we go for those requirements to our Provincial ministers and to the Director of Agriculture and others, they think that these are things which are not to be taken notice of, because we cannot get anything out of it. Either they think like that or they have not the mind and they have not the approach to take those things into consideration. They are simply accustomed to do file work, and at the end of the year give explanations that because of this thing or that they could not do anything. Sir, in a most humble way, I want to tell the House that if these opportunities are given to the cultivators and if the officers who are there, if they take into their head to meet the needs of the people there, you will find that there is an increase at least of ten or fifteen per cent. if not fifty per cent. as my honourable friend, Shri Dip Narayan Sinha says. (Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi: "Short supply of most of the materials.") Take the ordinary ploughs. They are broken. They cannot get even a small piece of iron to put that plough right, with the result that they cannot plough their land: they have got no bullocks. We have been crying hoarse that the slaughter of cows and bullocks must be stopped but in vain. (Interruption). We put questions in the Assembly whether the Government is aware that so many bullocks are being slaughtered and so many cows are being slaughtered. The reply we get is that these are the functions of the Provincial Governments. Sir, if these things are disposed of in this way, then we do not know where we shall stand. We are importing food, as has been said so many times and I need not repeat at about 130 crores per year. If we import this for four or five years, I do not know and our Finance Minister will know it better as to where we shall stand. Mahatma Gandhi had said that it is criminal to import this food. If we cannot grow and if we cannot produce ourselves, it is better that we die rather than import food from outside and make our country bankrupt.

Sir, the other point which I wanted to bring to the notice of the House is about what my honourable friend, Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava has said. He has said very rightly that the Provincial Governments should be made responsible to produce their requirements if they have got sufficient land and sufficient facilities with them to produce them. As I have said that even with the land and the facilities which are available to them, they are not taking steps to produce. They think that if there is less food in their province, they will go to the Centre and take their quota; and if the quota is less, they will demand more. Sir, to what my honourable friend, Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava has said, I wish to add a few things more. I would say that there should be a direction from the Centre to the Provincial Governments, not in the tone in which the Honourable the Agriculture Minister has addressed the meeting of the Ministers in a begging tone as to whether it will appeal to them or not to produce sufficient food in their province, I will just leave it for the purpose of their policy. They should send strict instructions to the provinces that they must produce so much and the officers under them, their service will depend upon the result they show for the work which has been entrusted to them. (Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi: "They will produce it only on paper"). You give one crore of rupees to one province for distribution among the cultivators, for seeds, iron, for digging wells, this, that and all these things. I do not want to quote instances as to what happens with this money. The only thing that I want to tell the Honourable Minister is—I do not know whether he has got power or not to tell the provinces—those officers whom you entrust with this money, you just ask them to show the result as to what has happened with this money and what is the cutturn we have got by investing that money either with the cultivator in the form of seeds, in the form of Iron, in the form of ploughs, in the form of cows, in the form of bullocks, etc. and if they cannot give the result, those officers must go. Unless those things are taken in hand very strictly there is no chance of producing more. These are the only two points which I wanted to bring to the notice of this House.

Shri B. L. Sondhi (East Punjab: General): What happens to the Minister? Will he also have to resign?

Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi (Madras: General): And the members concerned in the constituency!

Shri B. P. Jhunjhunwala: My honourable friend says that the Minister and the members should also be responsible. I would only say that they should have that much self-imposed discipline on themselves that if they find that they cannot do this work properly they should make room for others.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, at this fag end of the day, there is hardly any time to deal with this enormous subject. What the country wants today is something to eat, but in response, it is getting commissions, committees, resolutions, amendments, speeches, reports and all sorts of things except food. The whole problem is a question of management. As it has been pointed out already, the Food Ministry has been undermanned. It has not got sufficient strength and push and neither is sufficient attention of the Government as a whole paid to it. I believe, food production should be made a top priority. The entire strength of the Government should be concentrated on it, and I believe that Sardar Patel, who has shown ample capacity for managing big affairs, should have a hand in this. The provinces cannot be controlled, they cannot be integrated. Sardar Patel has integrated so many unmanageable Princes and States and he is the obvious man. I think a man with a whip, a man with drive is what is wanted.

Sir, in the Grow More Food Campaign there are two adverse circumstances which go against growing more food. In fact, the cultivator is not given his proper price. In their procurement policy, the Governments in the Provinces are only willing to pay most inadequate prices—prices much below the market rates—for procurement, and the result is that the cultivator is discouraged and he is not encouraged to produce more. The high cost of cultivation and the rising cost of living leave him no margin to encourage him to produce more. They are in effect asked to grow less food.

The other circumstance is that Provincial Governments are talking of expropriation of big estates as well as those of the poor middle classes. The result is that landed persons—agriculturists—do not allow others to cultivate their lands. They let their lands remain fallow rather than allow them to be cultivated by others so as to prevent them from acquiring rights. (Begum Aizaz Rasul: "No, no"). This is happening to my knowledge. In West Bengal there is the talk that the actual tiller will get two-thirds of the produce and the owner only one-third. It is also said that lands would be redistributed without any compensation. In these circumstances there has been much difficulty in inducing agriculturists to utilise their lands to the fullest extent. There has been a considerable amount of activity by the Communists to work up agitation among the peasants. The harmonious relations between the peasants and the proprietors are being totally shattered. The Government is playing into the hands of the Communists. In times of danger like this, we should not talk of expropriation. We should in this emergency, cease to talk of expropriations. The whole nation should be encouraged to make a total all out effort to produce food.

The problem, as I have submitted, requires a strong hand and iron management, and then alone a solution will be reached. In fact, it is a question of push and drive and of getting things done. All the Provinces should be made to produce adequately or suffer because unless we do so, unless we can manage it with a strong hand, the country will soon be faced with a dangerous situation. The electorate is getting restive. People want food. Instead, they are getting resolutions. I submit, this state of affairs, which is picturesquely said to be the legacy of the past Government should stop. This can be stopped just now if we have the practical mind. I submit, that the full strength of the Government should be put to the job and the thing must be resolutely carried through. These are some of the few suggestions that I wished to make.

Mr. Frank Anthony (C.P. and Berar: General): I shall submit to the impatience of my friend and not speak for any length of time. As a matter of fact I had no intention of speaking on this subject except that one of my friends from the Congress Party suggested that perhaps there was some need, on a vital subject of this kind, for some frank speaking; and after I had listened to some of the speeches I felt, as my honourable friend, Dr. Deshmukh put it, the result of a dead-weight majority, and the fact that the Whip is usually present in the House has tended to make speeches more apologetic than they should have been.

Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi: We are entitled freely to speak out our minds.

Mr. Frank Anthony: As I listened to some back chat from some the back benchers, I felt that there would have been much more plain-speaking if the members felt that they could have said what was in their minds. As a matter of fact, most of the members feel that this resolution itself is colourless in character.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member may confine himself to speaking out his own mind!

Mr. Frank Anthony: I myself feel that this resolution is inclined to be pointless. The subject has tended, like the railway administration, to become a hardy annual. Every year we have had a spate of suggestions, a plethora of plans. The food policy has not failed because of lack of suggestions or for lack of beautiful plans laid down on paper. My own feeling is that the food policy, both in the Centre and the Provinces has failed because of lack of execution. The appointment of another committee, the investigation, the making of recommendations, and the time taken for the Central and Provincial Governments to apply their minds to these recommendations will take so much time that we might be facing either famine conditions or near famine conditions, or even bankruptcy. (Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi: "That does not mean that we cannot do anything by investigation?"). If my friend will permit me to develop my arguments, I may succeed in convincing him.

To my mind this food problem is the greatest single problem which the Government is facing today. I also believe it is the greatest single menace to the stability and economy of the country. I am not pointing a finger at the Honourable Minister of Food and Agriculture. As my friend, Thakur Das Bhargava pointed out he is one of those very shareef individuals but he has inherited this legacy of inefficiency and inertia in the Food Department. I have sat here for many years and this food policy has become today a sorry story of platitudes, of excuses, of miscalculations and of over-statements. If we are honest, we will admit that the food position today is worse than it has ever been before. In 1948 the Food Minister set as his target of imports two million tons. That was an over-statement on one side on the side of optimism, it was an under-statement. As a matter of fact, we had to import almost three million tons of foodgrains at a cost of Rs. 116 crores. Today the position is much worse. I believe that for the first half of 1949 the Food Department has set itself the target of two million tons of imports. That means that on this basis we shall have to import for the whole of 1949 about four million tons. If we allow for the miscalculation which occurred in 1948, we may have to import as much as six to seven million tons of food grains.

Sir, my friends in the front benches opposite will have to face this question. Where is the money to come from? The food grains imported in 1948 came predominantly from hard currency areas. It is an accepted fact today that what we are earning from exports to hard currency areas is being poured into this bottomless pit of importing more and more food grains. In 1949 where are we going to get sufficient hard currency to import six or seven million tons of food grains? I was an economist when I was a student. I still read papers and journals by economists and I read the other day that this dollar gap is widening to an alarming extent on account of the import of food grains and that in 1949 we are likely to have a minimum gap of 200 million dollars. My own feeling is that it is a rather conservative estimate, because today we are getting some of our imports from Burma and Siam. Conditions have supervened there which will wipe those countries out as potential sources of supply and this will make it inevitable for us to fall back entirely for our food grains imports on hard currency areas. We all know that because we are pouring this money out of our earnings of hard currency to import food grains we are retarding our development in other vital and urgent directions.

There is another consideration which I would like to bring to the notice of the House. It is not a grotesque consideration. What will happen if this present cold war develops? It may develop in Spring into a shooting war. Where then are we going to import our food grains from? This policy of drift, this policy of inertia, this policy of a hand to mouth existence, of importing more and more food grains to feed a predominantly agricultural country like ours, does it mean that if a shooting war started and we are unable to import our food grains from the North American Continent, millions of our people will have to die of starvation? My own feeling is that the problem is much too frightful to allow the present policy of drift to continue. I want to make it clear, I have the greatest respect for my honourable friend the Food Minister but the problem is too urgent for us to be able to get behind a wall of personal pleasantries or to constitute ourselves in this House into a sort of mutual admiration society. I believe in this figure, which I read somewhere, that we have spent more than 31 crores in this Grow More Food Campaign and it was also stated that the results of that Campaign in terms of the statistics of the Government were not acceptable. In the same article I read that because provincial governments are allowed to carry out their own halting and incompetent policies we are falling down in many of the provinces in the Grow More Food Campaign. I read an article recently. I do not know whether it was correct but it was in an authoritative journal and it said that Bombay faces the loss of 85 to 90 per cent. of its whole wheat crop because of damage from rust. And then this article went on to say in caustic terms that in spite of loud assertions from different provincial governments that they have evolved rust-proof varieties of wheat that is happening in Bombay. It went on further to assert on a fairly authoritative basis that this year we are facing damage from rust all over the country to the tune of over ten million tons of food grains. (Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: "It was 2½ million tons this morning and it has become ten!"). I head this about three weeks ago. Perhaps we are in a state of decline. My friend on my right has suggested that the problem is a radical one. I say that the suggestions that we have heard in the past two days have been suggestions which we have heard for the past six years. There have been no new plans. We have had plans for the reclamation of cultivable waste-land, we have had plans for sinking more and more tubewells, plans for importing chemicals and fertilisers, plans for getting alternative forms of food. But the stark fact is that our food policy is in a definite state of decline, that it is in a worse position today than it ever has been in the past and I am one of those who also feel that the problem is a radical one. As my honourable friend has said there is something of a conflict of authority between the Centre and the Provinces, that there is overlapping of authority. As my friend on my right has said it is not an ordinary matter. It has assumed proportions of an emergency and a crisis. The Central Government cannot get behind the excuse of intransigence on the part of the provincial governments, the excuse of unwillingness or reluctance on their part to play the game. It has assumed such serious proportions as to menace the very stability of our whole economy. The Central Government has ample powers under the Government of India Act to assume emergency powers. My friend made a suggestion (which is not one to laugh at) that a person of the stature of Sardar Patel should assume control of this Department. We all know that our Prime Minister and Deputy Prime Minister are persons who are over-worked and over-burdened but this is an immediate problem, and a vital problem and without casting any reflection on the present incumbent it has been suggested and suggested with all sobriety and respect that perhaps the only immediate answer to this is to ask either a person of the stature of our Prime Minister or of our Deputy Prime Minister to assume immediate control. They alone have the necessary stature, they alone have the necessary prestige and influence to bring the halting, incompetent and intransigent provincial governments to heel. I feel strongly that they alone have the necessary authority and the necessary prestige to give reality and form to all the plans. Our plans do not need any elaboration. They are among the most beautifully conceived plans that have ever been evolved in any part of the world. We want drive, we want prestige and we want coordination. It is only one of these two persons who has the necessary drive, prestige and intransigent.") If my honourable friend had listened to the Honourable Minister (honourable member may be asked to explain, Sir, how the provinces are intransigent.) If my honourable friend had listened to the Honourable Minister's speech he would have heard one long wail that his hands were tied, because of the lack of response from the different provinces. It is tragic that this country which is nothing if it is not an agricultural country should lead a hand to mouth existence, dependent on imports of food grains from abroad which are menacing the whole fabric of our economy.

The Honourable Shri Jai Ramdas Doulatram: Sir, I think it will be conceded that when I said at the commencement of my speech yesterday that I hoped that the larger issues involved in the problem, (which is being spoken of as the Grow More Food Campaign) of the place of agriculture in the country's economy would be properly considered the two days discussions, I think, has proved I was right. Apart from any personal aspect of this question I want to state as frankly as possible that if we have not reorientated our attitude as to the place of agriculture in our national economy, testified by the resources placed at the disposal of agriculture both at the Centre and in the Provinces, any other action that you may contemplate will not lead to the success desired. I have tried to show by certain figures (and behind those cold figures there are real facts) that the amount of effort put forth in the other countries, to which we look in regard to our agricultural development, would indicate that we are exceedingly behind those countries. I will develop this point a little further later on. I will now deal with some of the other preliminary points. I am sure I will not be able to cover all the points that were referred to; still I will make the attempt.

My honourable friend Mr. Anthony gave certain figures. He said that in 1947 we imported 20 lakh tons, later this was increased to 30 lakh tons, and this year still more. But I expected that when we deal with these figures we would deal with them in the actual concrete situation of our country. What happened in 1947 was the fact that from 20 lakh tons we increased it to 30 lakh tons. Was that the only event in the country? We know of the failure of the monsoon in Madras. The fact that Madras produced round about 15 lakh tons less than it needed was the other event. Was Government to say "We shall not import more"? Since Government had maintained its responsibility for rationing, either completely or partially, a part of the population, Government action in importing more was not due to any other factors that were referred to. It was due to the fact, which I have been trying to emphasize and which will have to be considered by the Government now and in the coming years, that large parts of our country—much larger than before 1947—have become dependent upon the uncertainties of the monsoon. It is a fact which we cannot get away from. It is the same fact which has created difficulties for us in this year. This year also, as everybody knows—and I need not repeat—large areas of our country have suffered on account of these uncertainties. The result is that, according to the Provincial reports, the country may produce 52 lakh tons less than last year. On the other hand last year three Provinces, U.P., Bombay and C.P., showed marked increases. C.P. showed as large an increase as 34 per cent in a single year, and Bombay and U.P. round about eight and ten per cent. But in the other Provinces where the monsoon was unfavourable there were deficits, large and small, which shows that when you are dealing with forces of nature, unless you have planned to make your agriculture independent of these vagaries as is being done progressively in other countries you cannot assure results. The entire rice area in Japan is under irrigation. It receives regular supply of water every year. The nation is assured of results and yields. And I will suggest to the House, all personal considerations apart, that these are facts which the country has to face and to deal with. I am trying to emphasize that it is because agricultural development has not been given the attention which it deserves that some of these things are happening.

I have been told that the Grow More Food Campaign has been an utter failure and figures have been quoted from 1943 to 1946 of Rs. 16 crores spent by the Central Government. My honourable friend Mr. Anthony spoke of Rs. 31 crores, which means only the remaining Rs. 15 crores were spent by the Provinces. All of us have criticized the efforts of those years when Section 93 Governments ruled the Provinces and our predecessor Government ruled the Centre. All the propaganda and all the comments of that time have somehow remained in our minds, and we are associating with a new situation, which happens to have the same appellation and name, the characteristics to which we were accustomed in those years. What happened after 1946? Or may I first explain what used to happen before 1946 when Section 93 Governments were ruling the Provinces? The Provinces used to ask for some amount on the ground that they wanted "to grow more food". Food was a very wide and expansive term in those days. And the Centre gave them money without any assurance as to what was the area involved what was the yield expected, how exactly was it going to give us what we want, what was going to be the outturn. It was only later on in 1947, when the new Government took charge that we began to put up what may be called "definite targets". The Food Grains Policy Committee, which had on it able men both of business and agricultural experience, decided upon this as one of the items that is the 'Grow

[Shri Jairamdas Doulatram]

More Food Campaign' and fixed up targets for each year. For the first year, 1947-48, the target, as I said, was nine lakh tons. This covered only five per cent. of the area under food grains in this country. I was asked what about the remaining 95 per cent. With regard to the remaining 95 per cent., large irrigation works were one solution. Progressive development of this Grow More Food Campaign from year to year for the next five years was another step. That means in the next year an additional quantity of land was to come under cultivation under the special effort which was supported by the Centre. Besides that, as I will refer to later on, dealing with 95 per cent of our land is impossible unless we make one fundamental change—and that is in our outlook on this question of agricultural production. I was told that as against the target of nine lakh tons only seven lakh tons was produced and that this was not commensurate with the expenditure. We from the Centre granted three crores of rupees and more, but the actual amount which could be utilised by the Provinces, because of numerous handicaps to which I have referred, was only one crore of rupees and the Provinces spent another one crore of rupees. In the Provinces there are responsible Legislatures and the Ministers function under the Legislatures. They equally risked their one crore of rupees and out of the investment of two crores of rupees, seven lakh tons were produced. Even at the rate of ten rupees a maund it will be Rs. 20 crores worth of additional grain produced. Even if these figures were undependable and wrong by 50 per cent. still ten crores of rupees worth of additional grain was produced by the expenditure of these two crores of rupees. What I wish to suggest is let us not, in dealing with the Grow More Food Campaign, be under the delusion that the Grow More Food Campaign, based on one crore of rupees aid from the Centre, dealing with five per cent. of the area, was to overcome the entire food deficit of the country. It is because of the association somehow of the idea that the Grow More Food Campaign is going to solve our entire food problem that this feeling that we have not achieved enough has arisen. If on the contrary we deal with it realistically there would not be that feeling of pessimism that there has been failure of this effort. Apart from the actual results of this effort it was never intended to deal with the whole problem. It is no use my paying a few rupees to go to Bombay if the train will only take me twenty miles. It is clear that the problem of food with regard to the whole of the country cannot be handled by this effort.

A number of suggestions have been made and I will briefly deal with them. The Deputy Speaker made a suggestion that in India we are producing only 300 lbs. per acre whereas they are producing 3,000 lbs. in Japan and elsewhere. This is a fact which I think is fairly well known and this is a fact which everybody regrets and this is a fact which everybody likes to remedy, but the question is "How."

Take another matter, that subsidies which were being given were not being properly utilised and that we should use them through cooperatives. That means that there should be cooperatives all over the country reaching the villages, through which we should carry on not only the work of giving subsidies but if we want to achieve any results, we should also do other things, e.g., marketing.

Suggestions were made that we should see that healthy seeds are distributed. Everybody would agree, but distribution of healthy seeds over lakhs of villages is really a problem.

Then it was suggested that we should carry on research and see that the results of research reach the villages. That means that the results of research have to reach all these lakhs of villages scattered all over the country. In a country like Japan they have as many as 400 stations scattered throughout the country. It is these 400 stations which supply the link between the Government, the research institutes and the cultivator.

I had valuable suggestions from my honourable friend Shri Shiva Rao. He also suggested that we must secure the cooperation of the cultivators. It was the same note struck by my honourable friend Pandit Kunzru. Government has to secure the cooperation of the cultivators. The cultivators are scattered in lakhs of villages. Unlike industrial production which is centred in a few hundred factories controlled by a few hundred people dealing with men who are handling automatic machines, agriculture is an industry which is scattered far and wide into the villages of the country.

I was given an illustration by my honourable friend Mr. Jhunjhunwala that the experience of one particular farmer was that he was able to secure 50 per cent. extra yield. How was it? It was the result of the coupling of intellect with land. That means, men who understood what exactly had to be done to deal with an agricultural problem.

Shri B. P. Jhunjhunwala: No, Sir. The intellect was also there. The thing was that the other cultivator who was ploughing the same kind of land had not the same facilities. His plough was broken. He had no bullocks. He had no fertilizers. If that could be supplied, then....

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: I am coming to that. That means that all the operations were performed. Now, the performing of operations means the provision in each field or most fields of our country of all these facilities. I want to suggest to you that the one missing link which came in the way of agricultural development in America and England and which was supplied later has yet to be supplied in our country. It was what was called the "extension service". Numerous men trained in agriculture were placed at the disposal of the agriculturists; numerous non official organisations in America and England created the link between the Agriculture Department and the cultivator, understanding his difficulties, helping to supply him all that he wants and needs, carrying to him the results of research. It was this fundamental missing link which when supplied gave in America and the United Kingdom the results which we are seeing today, whereas in this country the man power necessary is not available. One of the main things that was discussed at the Conference in September was to supply this link which will connect the Government and the agriculturists, whether through non-official organisations or through official organisations. But I am certain of the fact, having dealt with the problem for a year, that unless in the provinces and also in the Centre we place far more man power for the development of agriculture, we are up against serious difficulties. No one has pictured more definitely and emphatically the urgency of development of agriculture of the urgency of solving the food problem than myself, and I fully realise the need for emergent action. That is why in my speech at the commencement also I said that it will give the House an opportunity of dealing with some of the larger issues which are behind this problem.

A few other suggestions were made which I think I must refer to. One was about the Board for Reclamation. I have no doubt that whether for reclamation or other agricultural operations some kind of special quick-acting machinery is necessary and I want to assure Shrimati Renuka Ray that this would be one of the points that would have to be considered and some solution found.

Suggestions were made by Prof. Ranga with regard to Agricultural Finance Corporation. I do not know how far the tremendous amount of funds necessary for this kind of organisation would be available, but I can understand the development of the cooperative credit organisation and through it trying to improve the needs of the situation.

Reference was made to the wheat rust scheme by my honourable friend Mr. Kunzru. I want to inform him that probably the information on which he was relying was old, because last year we have actually sanctioned Mr. Mehta's scheme and at Nilgiris, Simla and two other places in the hillsides the wheat rust proposals of Mr. Mehta are being tried and a large scheme is before the Standing Finance Committee for its sanction.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Are all the hill areas going to be controlled or not?

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: Those areas are going to be controlled and the peasants have been given compensation and they have been asked not to cultivate those areas.

Suggestions have been made with regard to accuracy of statistics. It was proposed that we might follow the scheme which the Director-General of Health followed in regard to health statistics. I think there is a fundamental difference between health statistics and agricultural statistics for this reason, that when university students are sent to the agriculturists to ask as to what the yield is this year and what it was last year, it is a question which is entirely different from any question relating to health. Some how the traditions of the old government have made our people suspicious as to enquiries into their economic condition, and unless the workers are very familiar with the peasants, and unless they have lived among them and won their confidence it is not easy to secure from the cultivators any data with regard to their production, and financial positions. Somehow they fear procurement or some extra taxation or some other move on the part of the authorities. Therefore, it is not possible to send university students down to lakhs of our villages and stay there long enough to secure adequate data in regard to agricultural production. (Shri B. L. Sondhi: "Are Government servants more reliable in this respect?") No. What being devised is to have the method known as the random sample survey. That is a method based on statistical science and it has been used in many countries and has been in use in Bengal for the last four years. That is the method which the Agricultural Department has been using with regard to one or two crops in one or two selected districts in each Province, and the proposal is to extend this system to all the crops and to the States and Provinces also. And this matter is also being discussed with the Finance Ministry. The expenditure involved is about Rs. 30 lakhs, as far as the Centre is concerned. It covers the entire country and all the crops and is considered to be a great necessity if we have to base any of our planning on scientific lines.

What I was wishing to place before the House is that unless two or three fundamental things happen, we will not be able to solve our problem of either food production or adequate agricultural production. One of these things is the availability of resources in men and money, to be placed at the disposal of agriculture, whether in the provinces or in the Centre. I do not suggest that there is any conflict between the Centre and the provinces. If there is any impression that there is any conflict, I am afraid that it is a wrong impression. But the fact is that agriculture being a provincial subject, naturally the functioning in regard to agriculture takes place in the provincial field; and all of us who have experience of dealing with various questions know that we must secure the willing cooperation of the provinces in any plan that the Centre may have, and without that willing cooperation nothing is possible. The question is how to deal with a situation in which public opinion somehow, and the House here also, hold the Centre responsible, where the functioning almost entirely is in the provincial sphere. That is the problem that has to be seen to. There is no question of conflict between the Centre and the Provinces. (Shri Deshbandhu Gupta: "What about the Centrally Administered Areas?") There it is comparatively easy because the Provincial authorities there are a little more subordinate to the centre, i.e., Delhi and Ajmer.

The other point that I was trying to make out is that unless this living extension service between the cultivator and the government is set up, we will not at all be able to make any progress. Whatever schemes, whatever steps or whatever measures may be adopted, unless this link which was supplied in America, in England and in Japan, unless this link is supplied in this country, there is no possibility of our overcoming our deficits. (Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi: "We have it in Madras".) Yes there is something in Madras, but even there it is not adequate enough, as we have seen from the speeches of some Honourable Members here.

There is one other point which I wish to place before the House, in support of what I have said. (Shri Mahavir Tyagi: "Have you got some scheme to supply this link?") That is what I am suggesting. Unless there is the supply of more men and more money, unless there are thousands of workers either official or non-official, linking these research centres and the government headquarters with the villages, which means that unless our budgets are re-oriented and revised, unless in the Provinces and in the Centre we allot much more funds for agricultural development, it is not possible to make any advance.

Shri Mahavir Tyagi (U.P.: General): But we want to know whether you have made up your mind to do it now during this year.

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: Well, I am coming to that also. Unless opinion both in the Provincial and the Central Legislature feels the urgency of re-orientating its attitude towards agriculture and agricultural development it is going to be difficult. My Honourable friend Mr. Kunzru made a reference to industrial development and agricultural development. I wish to say that in the present situation in India, even industrial development....

Babu Ramnarayan Singh (Bihar: General): May I know whether you are going to submit a scheme in the budget which we are required to support, and which we can now say we shall support?

Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi: Sir, is the honourable member in order in addressing the Minister direct?

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: I am at present only trying to say that we should have a certain attitude towards the problem of agricultural production and many of the difficulties that we face to-day will be solved when that attitude comes to be adopted. I would say that in the present situation in the country, agricultural production may have to be attended to as a matter of even greater priority than industrial development. After all industrial development will progress only to the extent that there are purchasers for the industrial products. Unless it is suggested that industrial products must find purchasers largely in the urban areas, it is inevitable that industrial production if it is to be continuously progressing must find purchasers in the large mass of our people who are in the rural areas. Secondly, if our standard of living is to be increased, it is the standard of living also of the agricultural masses, and their standard of life and their purchasing power are linked up with much greater agricultural wealth being available to the rural people. Therefore, unless we give greater priority to agricultural development, it is not possible to go beyond a certain limit with regard to industrial development (Hear, hear).

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: There has been no industrial development.

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: What I am saying is that a much larger amount of money and men are necessary for agriculture than are available at present.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Madras: General): You must increase the purchasing power of the peasants in order to purchase your industrial goods.

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: I find, Sir, that it is nearly time, and I will not be able to refer to numerous suggestions that have been made in the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Honourable Minister can finish in ten minutes, we may sit longer.

Shri B.L. Sondhi: If the Honourable Minister has to announce any good policy of Government, we are here.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Honourable members want to know, perhaps what the policy of the Government is.

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: I find that there is a feeling that I should state exactly what the Government's policy is with regard to the main demand. I wish to inform the House that the discussions during these two days have clearly pointed out that the coordination of more than one Department is necessary for a proper and early solution of this important problem. Government, therefore, intend to have this whole problem reviewed at a very high level and consider what measures and machinery should be set up so as to lead to speedy and effective action. The Grow More Food Campaign 5 P. M. will also come in this review. So also will the other suggestions made by the honourable members here.

Shri H. V. Kamath (C.P. and Berar: General): How long will the examination take?

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: I do not think it will take more than a few weeks.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: What is the precise meaning of the words 'high level'?

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: The question would be considered by Members of the Cabinet, or a Cabinet Committee.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: Next time it will be 'higher' level. Why not go the highest level now?

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: If it is felt that the announcement I have made is not satisfactory, I should like to know.

Shri Mahabir Tyagi: It is quite satisfactory.

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: I hope therefore that the resolutions would be withdrawn.

To one point I have not made any reference. One honourable member suggested that we should have an arrangement whereby the prices of foodgrains could be fixed. What I feel is that if we go deeper into this proposal, we shall have to take the responsibility on behalf of the Government for purchasing huge quantities and storing and preserving them. That is a suggestion which was made by some Members of the Krishnamachari Committee. That may be considered. In principle it is quite sound. But with regard to its practical implications, I do not think it is possible to make any commitments at present.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I take it that the general sense of the House is that both the resolutions will be withdrawn?

Honourable Members: Yes, Sir. Ask the Movers, Sir.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am asking them. What about the first resolution. Is Dr. Mono Mohan Das withdrawing it?

Dr. Mono Mohan Das (West Bengal: General): I think myself fortunate that my resolution has been able to draw such a great amount of attention from the Honourable the Food Minister as well as from the honourable members of this House. I also thank the Chair as well as the House for devoting two days to its discussion.

Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi: Is the honourable member in order in making a speech at this stage when he is withdrawing his resolution?

Dr. Mono Mohan Das: As the Whip of the Government party who is also the Honourable the Deputy Minister. . . I stand corrected.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A speech is not permitted when a motion is being withdrawn.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: I rise to a point of order. The Chair observed that the Mover is not allowed to make a speech. I want to know whether he is entitled to give a reply or not.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari (Madras: General): He is absolutely entitled to give a reply.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Any member who has moved a resolution is entitled to make a reply either for withdrawal or for acceptance.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have heard both the point of order and the explanations.

Shri M. Tirumala Rao (Madras: General): I want to draw your attention to a ruling given yesterday that the mover of a resolution is not entitled to make a second speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am obliged to honourable members for their advice. I find that any person who is the mover of a resolution and wants to withdraw it, can make a brief explanatory statement as to why he withdraws. There is no meaning in a member moving a resolution and then without assigning reasons saying 'I am withdrawing'. It is open to the House not to give him leave to withdraw. Therefore the House has to be satisfied if the withdrawal is to be allowed. Therefore I would request the honourable member to be very brief.

Dr. Mono Mohan Das: As the Chief Whip of the party who is also our State Minister has informed me that this problem of food shortage is going to be considered and discussed at Cabinet level, I beg leave to withdraw my resolution.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the honourable member leave of the House to withdraw the resolution?

The Resolution was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As the resolution has been withdrawn the amendments relating to it lapse.

Honourable Members: There is Mr. Sidhva's resolution.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I cannot ignore Mr. Sidhva.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: I am not at all satisfied with the reply of the Honourable Minister. I only wanted a dead line to be fixed for stopping the import of food worth 130 crores at a loss of 30 crores to the State every year. No indication of it has been given by the Honourable Minister. This is not a short-term policy. I am not satisfied. But, as he says that there is going to be high-level consultation and that something substantial may be done, I beg leave to withdraw my resolution.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the honourable member leave of the House to withdraw his resolution?

The resolution was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The amendments relating to it also lapse.

The Assembly then adjourned till a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock on Monday, the 7th February, 1949.

PAPERS LAID ON THE TABLE

ANNUAL REPORT OF INDIAN STANDARDS INSTITUTION

The Honourable Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee (Minister for Industry and Supply): Sir, I beg to lay on the table a copy of the Annual Report* of the Indian Standards Institution for the year ending 31st March, 1948.

NOTIFICATION UNDER DESTRUCTIVE INSECTS AND PESTS ACT, 1914

The Honourable Shri Jalramdas Doulatram (Minister for Food and Agriculture): Sir, I beg to lay on the table a copy of Notification No. F-3-5(2)/46-PPS dated the 27th December, 1948, under Section 4D of the Destructive Insects and Pests Act, 1914.

No. F. 3-5 (2)/46-PPS.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA

MINISTRY OF AGRICULTURE

New Delhi, the 27th December, 1948

NOTIFICATION

In exercise of the powers conferred by sections 4A and 4D of the Destructive Insects and Pests Act, 1914 (II of 1914), the Central Government is pleased to direct that the following further amendments shall be made in the Notification of the Government of India in the late Department of Education, Health and Lands No. F. 16-3/48-A, dated the 28th March, 1944, namely :—

I. In the said notification :

1. In the Preamble, for the words and figures 'to prohibit, with effect from the 1st May, 1944, the transport from the Province of Madras' the words and figures 'to prohibit the transport, with effect from the 1st of May, 1944 from the Province of Madras and from the 1st of February, 1949, from the Province of Coorg,' shall be substituted.

2. For clause (c) the following clause shall be substituted, namely :—

"(c) by rail or inland steam vessel unless the consignment is accompanied by a certificate in the form set forth in the Second Schedule hereto annexed and signed by the authority specified therein."

* Not printed in these Debates. Copy placed in the Library of the House.—Ed. of D.

II. In the Second Schedule to the said notification, for the words "The above certificate should be signed by the Entomologist to Government Madras, Coimbatore, or such other officer as may be authorised by the Director of Agriculture, Madras, in this behalf" the following Note shall be substituted, namely :—

"Note : The above certificate should be signed (a) in Madras, by the Entomologist to the Government of Madras, or such other officer as may be authorised by the Director of Agriculture, Madras, in this behalf.

(b) in Coorg, by the Director of Agriculture, Coorg, or such other officer as may be authorised by the Chief Commissioner, Coorg, in this behalf."

ELECTION TO NATIONAL FOOD AND AGRICULTURE ORGANISATION LIAISON COMMITTEE

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram (Minister for Food and Agriculture): Sir I beg to move:

"That this Assembly do proceed to elect in such manner as the Honourable the Speaker may direct five members to serve for a period of three years on the National Food and Agriculture Organisation Liaison Committee constituted under the Resolution of the Government of India in the Ministry of Agriculture, No. F. 16-72/47-Policy, dated the 8th November, 1948."

Mr. Speaker: Motion moved:

"That this Assembly do proceed to elect in such manner as the Honourable the Speaker may direct five members to serve for a period of three years on the National Food and Agriculture Organisation Liaison Committee constituted under the Resolution of the Government of India in the Ministry of Agriculture, No. F. 16-72/47-Policy, dated the 8th November, 1948."

Shri K. Hanumanthaiya (Mysore State): Sir, we have great pleasure in welcoming the motion made by the Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram, because it is a very important matter which affects not India only. This Committee is expected to work in close co-operation with the world organisation which has made up its mind to improve the condition of nutrition and standard of living throughout the world.

In welcoming this motion, I want to make a few suggestions. The personnel of the Committee is printed in the Government Resolution supplied to us. The Chairman happens to be the Secretary to the Government of India in the Ministry of Agriculture. My first suggestion is that having regard to the importance of this Committee, the Honourable Minister himself should preside over this Committee. Secondly, in the matter of representation also, having regard to the importance of the Committee, we should have a little change in the personnel of the Committee. If the Honourable Minister agrees to serve as the Chairman of the Committee, the Secretary of the Department may be the Secretary of the Committee. One representative from the Ministry of Agriculture may then be omitted. One representative from the Ministry of Health also, I suppose, is unnecessary. Similarly, one representative of the Ministry of External Affairs and Commonwealth Relations may also be omitted. Two seats have been given to the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry. That representation may be reduced to one. I have suggested these omissions because Agriculture happens to be, for the time being, a provincial subject. The people directly concerned with the matter are the Ministers of Agriculture in the various provinces. I would like that in the place of those representatives, at least four or five Ministers of Agriculture from the provinces may be appointed on this Committee.

Mr. Speaker: I presume the honourable member is discussing the merits of the Government Resolution, under which this Committee is constituted and is making suggestions in respect of that Government Resolution. I am afraid it will be beyond the scope of this motion at this stage. The present motion is to proceed with the election in pursuance of the Government Resolution as it stands.

Shri H. V. Kamath (C.P. and Berar: General): On a point of order, Sir. May I submit that as this Government Resolution never came before the Assembly on any previous occasion and this motion pertains to that and arises out of that Resolution, you may kindly allow us to discuss the merits of both. This motion has been sprung upon us more or less as a surprise today.

Shri K. Hanumanthaiya: There is also this difficulty, Sir, that after the election of the members of the Committee, we will have no opportunity to discuss the personnel of the Committee. This matter was never brought before the House, as my honourable friend just now rightly pointed out.

Mr. Speaker: But to my mind, the difficulty is the Government Resolution is not before us to-day.

Shri H. V. Kamath: We have a copy here.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari (Madras: General): There is one particular point with regard to this Government Resolution which I have to point out. It is stated that the Secretary will be presiding over the Committee, and this House is asked to send five representatives to this Committee. Sir, it is iniquitous to ask a non-official of this House to participate in a committee over which a Secretary of a Ministry presides. Therefore fundamentally the Government Resolution is wrong and it is an insult to this House to be asked to nominate five members to go on a Committee over which a Secretary presides. If the Honourable Minister does not think it his duty to preside over this Committee, or to appoint a non-official to preside over it, we are quite right in taking exception to this procedure. And the only way we can register our protest against such a procedure is to discuss the Government Resolution and reject the motion because of the contents of the Government Resolution.

The Honourable Shri Jairamdas Doulatram: The F. A. Organization sent out to all the countries which are party to that organization model rules for the purpose of setting up local Committee for liaison. The desire is to find out how far the governments which are members of the organization have been able to carry out the resolutions which had been agreed upon. These model rules have been adopted by the countries which are members of the organization—I mean most of these rules have been adopted. The resolution containing the constitution of the Indian Committee was put before our Standing Committee of the Legislature. But I have not the least objection to make some of the changes proposed here, and I will put them up before the Standing Committee for Agriculture. If it is felt that the Secretary should not preside over the Committee, I will myself preside over it. Any other suggestions that may be made by this House will also be considered by the Standing Committee.

Mr. Speaker: Instead of taking up this matter for discussion now, I think it better that this matter be postponed. The matter may be discussed with the Honourable Minister and he may submit fresh proposals.

(Honourable members indicated assent).

So this matter is now put off. We pass on to the next item.

ELECTION TO COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai (Minister for Finance): Sir, I move:

"That the members of the Assembly do proceed to elect, in the manner required by sub-rule (3) of rule 100 of the Constituent Assembly (Legislative) Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business, one member to be a member of the Committee on Public Accounts in place of the Honourable Shri K. Santhanam who has resigned his seat on the Committee."

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the members of the Assembly do proceed to elect, in the manner required by sub-rule (3) of rule 100 of the Constituent Assembly (Legislative) Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business, one member to be a member of the Committee on Public Accounts in place of the Honourable Shri K. Santhanam who has resigned his seat on the Committee."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: I may inform the honourable members that I fix the 9th February as the date for receiving nominations for holding election, if necessary, to the Committee on Public Accounts. The date for election will be the 11th February, 1949. Nominations for the Committee will be received in the Notice Office up to 12 Noon on the date mentioned for the purpose. The election which will be conducted by means of the single transferable vote will be held in the Assistant Secretary's room No. 21, Council House, between the hours of 10-30 A.M. and 1 P.M.

PUBLIC COMPANIES (LIMITATION OF DIVIDENDS) BILL

Mr. Speaker: We will now proceed with the consideration of the Bill—The Public Companies (Limitation of Dividends) Bill.

Shri S. V. Krishnamoorthy Rao (Mysore State): Sir, I rise to support the amendment for referring this Bill to a Select Committee. Sir, the object of this measure is to check inflation, and I wish the Honourable Minister and told us how the Ordinance to check inflation has worked. In fact, Mr. Khandubhai Desai has told us earlier in the debate that this is but a small measure to fight inflation, and I may invite the attention of members in this connection to the remarks of the Director of the Reserve Bank. Sir, there are very few people in this country who depend mainly upon dividends. There are a large number of persons whose investments are very small. Persons who get fabulous incomes from dividends are very few. This apart, there is already surplus money in the hands of a few people who have made large profits during the time of the war, and also on account of the black-markets. In fact, Mr. C. R. Srinivasan, Chairman of the Board of Directors, Reserve Bank, says, "Money that is kept in the black-market still resists all attempts to be shepherded back into the straight and narrow path." I feel that unless measures are adopted to freeze this extra money and also to impose compulsory savings, this measure, by itself, will not help us much in checking inflation. Clause 3 gives two alternatives, i.e., (a) declaring the dividend at six per cent. and the other is (b) that they may declare the dividend on the average of 1946-47 and 1947-48. These two years are the peak years, and if this alternative is allowed, a monopoly will be given to certain companies, and this will act against new companies. I submit that this difference should not be perpetrated in this Act, and I wish the Select Committee would consider this question and make only one rule for all. Let it be five per cent. or six per cent. or seven per cent. it does not matter, but there should be one rate for all the companies, whether they are old or new.

The other point is that this Bill does not say how the extra profit is to be invested, whether it will flow back into the industry and thus help in the industrialisation of the country, or in what method it is to be utilised. I wish this Bill would make some provision for the utilisation of the extra profits also.

I also feel that there is the risk of wasteful managerial expenses. This also should be looked into by the Select Committee.

For all these reasons, Sir, I think it better that this Bill is considered in the Select Committee and then brought before this House.

Prof. K. T. Shah (Bihar: General): Mr. Speaker, Sir, I am not against the principle of this Bill, which I very much support. But I find that the principal reason advanced for this proposal is that it will check inflation that is now growing in our country. But I fear that the Bill, as it stands, will not very much help us in achieving that object.

While it is impossible to give any precise figures as to the amount of money which this Bill will stop from going into the hands of the public, for the public to spend just as it likes, it seems to me, that by the provisions of this Bill, we would not be stopping more than, say five or six crores per annum from going into the hands of the public. My calculation is founded on assumptions which, however, are not utterly unwarranted by the figures available, though they are somewhat old.

It is said here that, "the amount distributed as dividend should be limited to the average annual amount distributed in cash during the two years ending 31st March, 1948, or six per cent of the paid-up capital of the company, whichever is higher." If you take into consideration the older companies which are long established, and which have, during the war, distributed fairly large dividends, this Bill will provide no limitation on them worth the name. These old companies can distribute such dividends as they may feel called upon to, or as their resources permit them to distribute, upto the average of the past two years' dividend rate. The average dividend, declared during the last two years will not be restricted by this Bill and can go in some cases to over 200 per cent. of the nominal paid-up value of a share like the Tata Iron and Steel Company's deferred share.

In fact, if the intention was that the possibility of distributing large profits into the proprietors' pocket, resulting either from the momentum of the last war, or from the excellent business done, are to be checked and conserved for more directly productive purposes, then really it is the older established companies that ought to have been restricted and restricted much more than the present Bill proposes to do.

As regards new companies, it seems unlikely that there will be very large profits in the period through which the industrial enterprise is passing today. In spite of the high prices prevailing, an air of depression prevails in the money market or industrial field. It seems to me that so far as new companies are concerned, there would not be any great prospect of their earning over six per cent. and therefore it is unlikely that they will be able to distribute much in the shape of dividend. I take it that in the established concerns, the aggregate amount invested is not over a thousand crores. If these have distributed on an average of ten per cent for the last two years, that will not be stopped. For the new enterprises with anything more than perhaps five or seven crores, paying to the limit of six per cent. would be too much to expect. Again I offer an explanation that the figures are not up to date and venture to submit that you will not be able to save more than five or seven crores. While saving this, you are at the same time, as the recent announcement declared, adding either to the allowances to be given to Government servants or railway or post office employees or wage-earners. So that what you save in one way, you are likely to dissipate or more than spend away in those other directions. That does not mean for a moment that I am against the basic principle of the Bill, viz., to impose restrictions on dividends made available for expenditure leading to higher prices of commodities.

What I would like to bring to the notice of the Mover of the Bill is this: that unless steps are taken which will not only save the amount distributable and distributed as dividends, but also to see to it that that amount is utilised in some productive purposes either by Government or by the company concerned in its own expansion,—in the Bill there is no such provision—you will not be really helping the process of productive effort.

The Bill as it stands makes no provision which would go to conserve this extra profit and see to it that it is made available for utilization in productive purposes; nor does the Bill make any attempt to see that other sources of income are similarly retrenched or at any rate any excess in them put an end to, that is to say, for productive expenditure even if it is productive in the long run. But at the present time, in the high prices it is disproportionately high, and necessarily leads to further addition to the note issue in wasteful expenditure such as for instance we may have with regard to any expedition or war, for suppressing local disturbances or for fighting the communist menace. If this kind of thing goes on and if there are not equal resources by way of income, then your process of inflation is not likely to be checked by a measure like this.

I realise that it is not within the scope of this Bill to include restrictions on expenditure and, I take it that the Honourable the Finance Minister is perfectly aware of this side of the question, so that when the Budget is presented, he would inform the House about the measures he is taking to restrict the unproductive expenditure. But, as far as this Bill goes, unless and until provision is made not only in respect of dividends but also for conserving the amount saved thereby for productive purposes, whether by Government in their great undertakings or by the concern itself, and unless every effort is made to restrict unproductive or excess expenditure, I am afraid the principal objective of the Bill, namely to put an end to further growth of inflation, will not be attained.

Mr. Speaker: I think the Honourable Minister is going to accept the motion for reference to Select Committee.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai (Minister for Finance): Yes, Sir.

Mr. Speaker: Then the Honourable Minister may reply.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I think most of the points raised in the course of the debate are points which might more conveniently be considered during the deliberations of the Select Committee. So I would reserve my comments till the Committee meets.

Mr. Speaker: I will now put the amendment to the vote.

The question is:

"That the Bill be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable Dr. John Matthai, Shri T. T. Krishnamachari, Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, Shri Arun Chandra Guha, Shri B. P. Jhunjhunwala, Mr. Homi Mody, Shri Khandubhai K. Desai, Shri S. K. Patil, Shrimati G. Durgabai, Shri Biswanath Das, Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi, Shri Sita Ram S. Jajoo, Shri R. Sankar, Shri B. L. Sondhi, and the Mover, with instructions to report by the 15th February, 1949, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

The motion was adopted.

TEA COMMITTEE FOR INDIA BILL

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy (Minister for Commerce): I beg to move:

"That the Bill to provide for the development of the tea industry under Central control, and for that purpose to establish a Tea Committee for India, and levy a customs-duty on tea produced in, and exported from, India, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Srijut Rohini Kumar Choudhuri, Shri G. S. Guha, Shri Upendranath Barman, Shri Ari Bahadur Gurung, Shri S. V. Krishnamoorthy Rao, Shri K. Hanumanthaiya, Shri R. K. Sidhva, Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad, Shri H. V. Kamath, Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, Shri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar, Shri S. M. Ghose, Mr. K. A. Mohamed and the Mover, with instructions to report on or before the 1st March, 1949, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five".

Sir, this measure is intended to promote the development of a very important industry in this country whose significance, particularly from the point of view of foreign trade, cannot be overestimated. The tea industry employs in the Union of India about one million labourers, and 775 lakhs of acres of land are under tea. From the point of view of foreign trade, the House will realise the importance of this industry when I mention that in the year 1947-48, our tea exports from India earned about 50 crores of rupees out of which seven crores came from hard currency areas. Now, efforts have been made in the past to provide a self-governing organisation for this industry with a view to promoting its general interests.

In 1903 the Tea Cess Act was passed by which a body representative of trade and industry was set up for the purpose of looking after certain interests of this industry and a cess was imposed upon exports of tea which worked roughly at about two annas per 100 lbs. and later from time to time by way of amendment of this Act, the maximum rate of duty came to be fixed at Rs. 1-8-0 per 100 lbs. Actually at the present day, the cess which is now levied amounts to Rs. 1-6-0 per 100 lbs. Incidentally, about 12 years ago, the original body which went by the name of Tea Cess Committee was given the name of Tea Market Expansion Board. A reference to the Tea Cess Committee Act will enable honourable members to realise the scope of that Act and to compare the rather restricted scope of that measure with the measure, which I have now placed before this House.

Sir, the principal object of the Tea Cess Committee Act was to enable the Tea Market Expansion Board to utilise the funds that they derived from the cess for the purpose of expanding the consumption of tea mainly in India. So far as propaganda in countries outside India was concerned, the Board made a contribution to an International Body called the International Tea Market Expansion Board out of the proceeds of this cess, and the International Tea Market Expansion Board carried on propaganda on behalf of the three principal countries that produced tea, India, Netherlands East Indies and Ceylon. The contribution was based upon the production in each country, but in carrying on the propaganda, the International Body used to carry on the propaganda on behalf of tea generally, that is to say, the object was to see that the consumption of tea as such and not tea from any particular producing country was expanded in the different foreign countries.

Taking the estimated figures for the year 1948-49, the cess that is estimated to be levied on exports of tea, the total amount is estimated at Rs. 56 lakhs in India, and out of this 26 lakhs is expected to be spent by the Tea Market Expansion Board of India on propaganda within the country and to make a contribution of Rs. 25 lakhs, or very nearly an equal amount, towards the expenses of the International Tea Market Expansion Board. At the present moment, in spite of the efforts of the International Body in the direction of expansion of the consumption of tea in countries outside India, it has to be regretfully admitted that there is a tendency for the export market of India to get reduced, that is to say, Indian tea is facing severe competition from its competitors, principally Ceylon, and East Africa is also coming into the picture gradually. Sir, there are two reasons why Indian tea is getting gradually replaced by other tea. In the first instance, the price of Indian tea stands rather high, and in the second, the quality of Indian tea appears to have gone down of late.

So far as the activities of the Indian Tea Cess Committee which came to be later known as the Tea Market Expansion Board, are concerned, they did not comprise any research being undertaken for the purpose of improving the position of the industry.

The principal feature of this Bill is that the proceeds of the cess would be available not merely for carrying on propaganda for the expansion of the use of tea, but also, as honourable members will find on a reference to clause 12, to supply technical advice to growers, manufacturers and dealers, encouraging the adoption of improved methods by them and undertaking or promoting research in that behalf. This is indeed the most important provision of this Bill, although reference is made to other important activities, which we contemplate the new Body to undertake, one of which is the collection of statistics. As in many other branches of the administration, statistical information in regard to the Tea industry is very unsatisfactory.

Sir, the research that will be undertaken under the proposed measure, will, I hope, enable the industry to improve the quality of the tea, as also lead to the adoption of improved methods of cultivation and other connected processes, which would ultimately result in an appreciable reduction in the price of the manufactured tea.

Sir, all these objects were explained on behalf of Government to a Conference that was held in December 1947 in Calcutta, which was attended by representatives of all the tea interests in the country, and there was a general measure of agreement about the necessity of a measure of the kind which I have placed before the House.

Soon after the Conference, a tentative scheme was prepared by Government, which was circulated to everybody concerned, and opinions were collected on that tentative scheme, and the present Bill is the result of such consultations.

Sir, a word about the composition of the Body, which is contemplated under the present measure. I claim that the proposed composition of the Committee is an improvement upon the Composition of the Tea Market Expansion Board in so far as the new proposals contemplate the representation of regional interests, but the most important feature of the Bill in this regard is the representation of Government and the previous measure did not provide for any Government control worth the name. Now having regard to the importance of this industry and the connected trade, Government have decided to take a hand in the control which would be provided through this particular measure.

Sir, I do not think I need take up any more time of the House and I very much hope that any points which honourable members have to raise with regard to the details of the measure would be duly considered in the Select Committee and the House perhaps need not occupy itself with a consideration of the various detailed provision of this measure. Sir, I move.

Mr. Speaker: Motion moved.

"That the Bill to provide for the development of the tea industry under Central control, and for that purpose to establish a Tea Committee for India and levy a customs-duty on tea produced in, and exported from, India, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Srijut Rohini Kumar Choudhuri, Shri G. S. Guha, Shri Upendranath Barman, Shri Ari Bahadur Gurung, Shri S. V. Krishnamoorthy Rao, Shri K. Hanumanthaiya, Shri R. K. Sidhva, Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad, Shri H. V. Kamath, Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, Shri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar, Shri S. M. Ghose, Mr. K. A. Mohamed and the Mover, with instructions to report on or before the 1st March, 1949, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

Shri H. V. Kamath (C. P. and Berar: General): On a point of information, may I ask whether you propose to rigidly enforce the rule of silence against members of the Select Committee? If you are not, then I am going to speak.

Mr. Speaker: I have already explained my views on this. When a Select Committee is appointed, it is better for the proposed members to hear what others have to say and then to consider the matter in the Select Committee because they will have full opportunity of discussing the points in Committee. Unless, therefore, there are exceptional reasons to the contrary, I do not propose to call upon those members whose names have been put down for the Select Committee.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari (Madras: General): May I suggest, even if it is presumed that I am questioning your ruling, that there are certain matters in which the Select Committee will not be able to go beyond the scope of the Bill, unless a direction is expressly given. We have no method of giving any express direction to a Select Committee to go beyond a particular stage. What is done to take up the gist of the discussion on the floor of the House, so that if a member of a Select Committee wants to raise a particular point, which does not fit in with the four corners of the discussion, he will be precluded from doing so unless he raises this question here. I have considered this point at some length and I have also studied the proceedings of the House of Commons and have also referred to May's Parliamentary Practice and I find that if a member wants to express a particular point which he wishes to be taken up in the Select Committee and which is not within the four corners of the Bill, he is precluded from doing so unless he makes mention of it in the House and unless there is no categorical vote against that particular point which he wants to raise. These are I humbly suggest points which you may consider at your leisure. So that the convention might be suitably modified.

Mr. Speaker: I have already stated that, that rule was not an inflexible rule, applicable in each and every case. I, therefore, said that in exceptional cases I might consider the case but my fear is that the exception may be turned into a rule! Anyhow, for the present, what I have explained stands.

Shri V. S. Sarwate (Madhya Bharat): I have very carefully listened to the speech made by the Honourable Minister in putting up this motion. I am afraid that he has in his speech mainly devoted his attention to the economic aspect of the question. But there is also another aspect which has to be considered in dealing with this motion. I am not sure whether tea is conducive to the health of society and of the persons who drink it. We need not of course go by the advertisements which we find at railway stations:

Chae garmi ke dinon men

thandak lati hai:

Aur thand ke dinon men

garmi lati hai.

But it is an admitted fact that eminent doctors are divided on the question whether tea is healthy to drink and there may be many a member here who may share my experience that tea generally adversely affects hunger and digestion. If after taking tea you take dinner it is not easily digested. Therefore, it has to be considered from this aspect whether it would be proper for a Government thus directly to take part in making propaganda for the expansion of tea. It may as well be said that there are so many persons who smoke, there are millions of labourers who are working in the cigar industry, etc., therefore Government may take an interest in doing propaganda to encourage smoking. The main thing that has to be considered is whether it is necessary or essential and in the interests of health and the good of society.

I may further say that in this country of ours, where the income is calculated to be Rs. 30 per annum—the average may be a little lower or higher—it should be considered whether it is desirable that people should be encouraged to take tea, which as every householder knows has become an item of great expenditure. I am afraid that as medical opinion is divided on this point, the Government should not be committed to this propaganda and therefore it is in the interests of society that this Bill be dropped.

Shri Prabhu Dayal Himatsingka (West Bengal: General): I wholeheartedly support the Bill introduced by the Honourable Minister. I am a person who does not drink tea. In fact I have taken two cups only in my life. But still I feel that this Bill is a necessary one. This is one of the important industries of the country and as the Honourable Minister said it brings in a large amount of money from foreign countries. I am afraid, unless it is carefully looked into and guarded against foreign competition, Indian tea runs the risk of losing its place in foreign countries. A large number of British owners of tea-gardens have been disposing of their tea interests in the country and trying to put up new gardens in East Africa and other places. Brazil is already competing with Indian tea and Ceylon is also there. Therefore it is very necessary that the quality of the tea which this country produces is improved, the prices are such that they stand foreign competition, and that it can be sold in other countries at a competitive price. Therefore the Committee that will be set up can go into all these questions and devise ways and means whereby the quality can be improved, the cost can be reduced and other measures for the protection of the industry can be taken. If it is injurious for people to take tea that committee can also take steps to give information to people asking them not to take tea but there is no reason why when the industry is there and such a vast amount of capital is invested in it, steps should not be taken to bring in measures which will protect the industry as also bring in improvements.

Shri Khandubhai K. Desai (Bombay: General): Sir, while according my wholehearted support to the motion before the House I would like to make three observations for the consideration of the Select Committee. The Honourable the Commerce Minister said that this is one of the most important national industries and the amount of export of tea to foreign countries is considerable and it earns for us hard currency for the purpose of imports. It also gives, as he has said, employment to no less than one million labourers. It is well known that the tea interests in this country are more or less foreign and they have not treated the labourers as they should have and it has been found that the workers working in the plantations are half-starved and not cared for properly. Sir, I have studied the constitution of the Committee and I find that there is a serious omission. The whole structure of the committee is laid on three planks—the planters, the traders and the State as representing the consumer—but the fourth party is missing. Therefore my submission to the Select Committee is that they must at least include in the composition of the Committee five labour representatives representing the five tea-growing regions of the country, if they really want to make the structure of the Committee a stable one and it will go a long way to develop the tea industry which, as has been stated, is one of the most necessary industries in the land.

There is one other omission in regard to the functions of the committee. The functions of the committee as have been laid down do not include according to me the function of considering whether the foreign interests which are working here should be bought over by the State. Most of these interests are British interests and particularly therefore it is a good thing to buy them over in lieu of our sterling debts, if necessary, so that a beginning may be made to work this industry in the national interest and we could nationalise at least a part of the tea planting industry in the country. These are the viewpoints which I place before this House and I very strongly urge the Select Committee to take them into consideration. Particularly the representation of labour is essential if you really want to develop the industry on the proper basis.

It has been said that the function of the Committee is also to see that proper grading is made, that proper production is achieved and that the quality of the tea is improved. How are you going to improve the quality, unless the proper representatives of the labourers (those who are half-starved and working under great difficulties) are taken into confidence and their grievances, their representations and even their technical knowledge which is there, are taken into consideration. However much you may say that technicians are the only people who can advise, the people who actually work know better what difficulties there are in actual production. So I would strongly urge that at least five representatives representing the labour organisations in these five regions must be taken on the committee so that the committee may be full and it will stand on four legs properly and not on three legs as at present. Otherwise the whole structure will fall down.

Dr. V. Subramaniam (Madras: General): Sir, I want to make a few observations. No doubt we want to export large quantities of tea to earn more money for our imports but at the same time, to make up the food shortage in our country, investigations should also be made whether at high altitudes rice could not be grown as in Dehra Dun. In Dehra Dun we are producing very good rice also. Much of the land given to tea-growing can also be utilised for growing rice. If that is done it will be very useful because instead of importing foreign rice and other grains and paying money to other countries we can also directly grow our own food also in those lands. Moreover from the health point of view I have no objection to export as much tea as possible for financial considerations and it is better for our people from the health point of view to drink less tea and take more coffee.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: Sir, I have a few observations to make on this Bill. In the first place the constitution of the committee does not find room for representatives of this House, not that I want the Committee to be unduly loaded with consumer representation but it is a common feature in similar committees (particularly for instance the Coconut Committee and the Oilseeds Committee) to have representatives of this House. I do not see why the draftsman of this particular measure has chosen to ignore the members of this House.

The second point I would like to mention is that it often happens that in the constitution of a committee of this nature the interests of the consumer is given the go-by. One pregnant example of how the consumers' interests are affected is the Coffee Expansion Board, where the price of coffee is going up by leaps and bounds irrespective of the price paid to the producer and the quality of the coffee that is being supplied to the consumer in this country is very poor. Apparently good quality coffee is exported. I do hope that this Committee will not share the same fate, so that the Committee will seek to export the more valuable and the better quality of tea abroad and give us only tea dust. That is a position which is quite conceivable.

Another point which I would like to make is this. The Tea Market Expansion Board is a non-official organisation. It has its defects. It is top-heavy. The top rungs of the Board are now manned by Europeans receiving very fat salaries but it is undoubtedly doing very good work, for the reason that control is very resilient. They are permitted to take part in many schemes which perhaps a Government body like this Tea Cess Committee would not permit. For instance, in Madras, during a recent exhibition which was held under the auspices of the Congress Committee, the Tea Market Expansion Board not merely did propaganda for their tea but undertook the entire catering on a non-profit basis, which is the only way in which they could get people to know of their work and their efficiency. A thing like that might probably be impossible in a quasi-governmental concern such as the one that is contemplated at the present moment. I do hope that the resilience that a non-official organisation has will be maintained in the working of the new Committee and adequate provision will be made either by rules or otherwise so that Government will give the Committee a free hand.

CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY OF INDIA (LEGISLATIVE) [7TH FEB. 1949]

I would like to endorse and heavily underline the suggestion made by my honourable friend Shri Khandubhai Desai. I do feel that whether or not the interests of labour is going to be safeguarded by the work of this committee it is essential that it should recognise that labour has a place in a body like this and the sooner we recognise it in this House the better it will be for all concerned. I do hope the Select Committee will make the necessary alterations to see that labour representation in this Committee is secured.

One final word before I sit down. There is another point which my friend Mr. Khandubhai Desai mentioned but I would like to approach it from a different point of view altogether. I look at the thing from the organisation side of it or the better run side of the industry, which is now being controlled by the European element in the industry. We might say that disturbing it will be wrong, but some kind of disturbance of the existing state of things is bound to occur before long. Very many of the foreign planters have sold their estates during war-time at high prices and have gone away; some of them have remained as managers; some of them are trying to come back. But we must put this particular industry on a stable basis. So long as its direction and control are mainly in the hands of the European who has really no interest in India's earning hard currency by export of tea, the difficulty of making the industry suit itself to the country's needs will always be there, unless the Committee is going to have some powers in regard to the internal management of the estates as well, which might result in what Mr. Khandubhai Desai wants, namely in these people selling out and going away or unless they fit into the organisation of the industry as it might be and work as nationals of this country. I do not want to expropriate British interests so long as the basic interest of such are identical with the interests of this country. But it may not be possible in actual practice. It would be worth while therefore for this Government to keep this in view that British interests which are there and which will have to be safeguarded for more than one reason—for diplomatic reasons mainly—may not be interests that will stay permanently for all time. Probably they would not have any permanent interests in this country. I am sure my honourable friend the Commerce Minister when he receives the deputation of tea interests will bear this particular point of view in mind, namely that any concession he concedes to them does not affect the permanent interests that India has in this industry.

Babu Ramnarayan Singh (Bihar: General): Sir, the Bill under consideration advocates the taking of tea. In times of yore there was a sage of the name of Raja Barthrihari. In one of his Slokas, talking of the world, the sage said:

न जाने संसारः किममृतमयः किम् विषमयः which means nobody knows whether the world is full of nectar or full of poison. Exactly the same thing can be said of anything and everything in the world. Tea is a thing which cannot be unanimously and universally supported. In such matters we have to consider whether there would be great harm to the nation without this. It is said that it is a national industry and all that. Will the heavens fall if this industry is not there? It is said that it will fetch dollars and a large income to Government. There was opium which used to bring more than six crores of rupees of income a year to this Government. But why is it discouraged? Because it is not a thing which improves the morale and the health of the people. Similarly with regard to tea it may be said by those who are accustomed and habituated to it that it helps them. But it is a thing which goes against the health of the people and it is not a proper thing to be encouraged.

Shri R. K. Sidhva (C. P. and Berar: General): Should it all be exported?

Mr. Speaker: Let him proceed in his own way.

Babu Ramnarayan Singh: I also have got my own experience. It is a very nasty thing. What I have observed in this if once you begin taking it, it becomes a habit. Once people have got into the habit of taking tea, if they do not get tea they will be upset. (Shri R. K. Sidhva: "Does not the taking of rice also become a habit?") Besides that, when there is Grow More Food Campaign, 7,000 acres are devoted to this industry. People are dying for want of food; there is no food; there is cry throughout the country; and there is the 'Grow More Food Campaign'? Under such circumstances why should this industry be developed at the cost of food? As my friend was whispering, let them do whatever they like. But why do they encourage and make propaganda throughout the country? If they want to export it and derive income, well, let them send it to the foreign countries. But for God's sake let them not make any propaganda in the country. With these words, Sir, I strongly oppose the motion.

پذت تھاکر داس بھارگو : جناب سپیکر صاحب ! میں چند یہی باتیں عرض کرنا چاہتا تھا جو میرے دوست شری سروتے اور بابو رام ناراین سنگھ نے اس معاملہ میں اس ہاؤس کے سامنے رکھی ہیں۔

Shri K. Hanumanthaiya: Sir, cannot the honourable member speak in English?

پذت تھاکر داس بھارگو : جہاں تک اس بل کا تعلق ہے وہاں تک اس کے industrial aspect پر میں سوائے اس کے کہ میں اس کو support کروں اور کچھ نہیں کہہ سکتا۔ یہ بھی تو ثابت نہیں ہوا ہے کہ tea سے بہت زیادہ نقصان ہوتا ہے اگر ایسا ہوتا تو میں اس کو ہرگز support نہ کرتا۔ اور یہ کہنا بھی مشکل ہے کہ چائے کے استعمال سے تندرستی کو فائدہ پہنچتا ہے۔ جہاں تک health کا سوال ہے وہ لوگ جو اس بات کو نہیں مانتے کہ tea سے فائدہ ہوتا ہے۔ وہ اس بل کی مخالفت ضرور کریں گے۔ اور اس کے حق میں نہیں دھینگے۔

انڈین tea کا جہاں تک سوال ہے۔ اس بل کا سیکشن (a) 12(1) یہ کہتا

ہے۔

"Promoting the sale, and increasing the consumption, in India and elsewhere, of Indian tea or of tea generally; carrying on propaganda for those purposes;"

میں نہایت ادب سے عرض کرنا چاہتا ہوں کہ اسکا جو یہ حصہ ہے یہ سخت قابل اعتراض ہے۔ حالانکہ میں اس بات کا قائل نہیں ہوں کہ tea سے ضرور نقصان ہوتا ہے۔

جناب عالی! میں نے ایک دفعہ اسپرین کے متعلق ایک پکچر دیکھا تھا۔ جس پر کہ اُس کے بنانے والوں نے بہت سا روپیہ اس دیش میں اس کے propaganda کے لئے خرچ کیا تھا۔

[پلڈت تھاکر داس بھارگو]

لیپٹن ٹی کا propaganda سٹیشنوں پر ہوتا ہے۔ کہ یہ گرمی میں تھلڈک پہنچاتی ہے اور سردیوں میں گرمی پہنچاتی ہے۔ یہ میں مانتا ہوں کہ اسکی عادت اس طرح خراب ہے جس طرح کہ افیم کی عادت خراب ہے مجھے ایک کیس کے متعلق معلوم ہے کہ ایک ساتھ برس کا آدمی جسکو افیم کھانے کی عادت تھی اور جس کا تعاقب ایک معزز گھرانے سے تھا اُسکو جب سزا ماری تو اُسکے وارث میرے پاس آئے اور مجھکو کہا اس کی ضمانت کراؤ نہیں تو یہ افیم نہ ملنے کی وجہ سے مر جائیگا۔ بعد میں اسکو افیم جیل خانے میں کھانے کے لئے اسکے وارثان نے smuggle کرا کر بہم پہنچائی۔

میں آپ کو اپنے شوگر کی بات بتاؤں گا۔ اُسکو اگر آپ تین دن تک کھانا نہ دیں تو اُسکو اس کی کچھ بھی پروا نہیں ہے۔ لیکن اگر اس کو آدھ گھنٹہ کے لئے چائے نہ ملے تو وہ کام کرنے کے قابل نہیں رہتا ہے۔ اسکی عادت اسی طرح سے پڑتی ہے جس طرح کہ دوسری بد عادتیں پڑتی ہیں۔

میرے دوست مسٹر سدھوا نے کہا کہ آپ چاول کیوں کھاتے ہیں۔ میرے خیال میں مجھے اسکا جواب دینے کی کوئی ضرورت نہیں ہے۔ وہ اپنے دل میں سوچیں اور دیکھیں کہ tea ایک luxury ہے اور چاول ایک ضروری چیز ہے۔ آپ یہاں پر ہر روز grow more food کے قصے سنتے ہیں۔ اور آپ نے tea کے لئے زمین مخصوص کی ہیں اگر آپ اسکی industry قائم کر کے آپ اسکو بڑھائیں تو میں یہ نہیں کہوں گا یہ بات خراب ہے۔ لیکن آپ جو یہ کہتے ہیں کہ ہندوستان میں اس کا propaganda کریں میں اسکے خلاف ہوں۔ tea کا دودھ کے ساتھ کوئی مقابلہ نہیں ہے۔ میرے علاقہ میں خصوصاً جالندھر میں لوگ گھی اور دودھ کھایا کرتے تھے اور اب وہاں پر وہ لوگ tea بہت زیادہ استعمال کرتے ہیں انکو اب اس کا بہت شوق پیدا ہو گیا ہے۔ پھر یہی وہاں پر لوگ چائے کے ساتھ butter ملا کر پیتے ہیں لیکن سارے ہندوستان میں butter ڈال کر چائے نہیں پیتے ہیں پھر بھی یہ بات غلط ہے کہ چائے کا مقابلہ دودھ کے ساتھ ہو سکتا ہے۔ اور نہ ہی اسکو دودھ کی جگہ substitute کیا جا سکتا ہے نیشنل point of view سے یہ ایک آفت ہے۔ یورپ میں آپ دیکھینگے کہ وہاں جب آپ کافی پینے جائیں تو وہ آپ سے پوچھینگے کہ white کافی چاہئے یا black کافی۔ اس طرح سے جو لوگ چائے پیتے ہیں وہ اس میں دودھ ملا کر نہیں پیتے ہیں بلکہ دور سے ہی ذرا سا دودھ دکھاتے ہیں اور دودھ نہیں ڈالتے اسلئے بہت سے لوگ Black tea پیلے لگے ہیں اور ایسے لوگوں کے لئے دودھ دوائی کی حیثیت رکھتا ہے۔

در اصل دودھ پینے والے جو لوگ ہیں وہ پھر تکی کی طرف راغب ہو جائیں گے اور ان کی طاقت میں اضافہ نہیں ہوگا۔ دیش کے اندر دودھ کی ضرورت کم محسوس کی جائیگی اور اس طرح health کے لحاظ سے دیش کے لئے نقصان ہوگا اس لئے میں اس حصہ کی مخالفت کرتا ہوں۔ باقی چٹلی چیزیں جو آپ کے روبرو آئی ہیں کہ cultivators of tea کو فائدہ پہنچایا جائے ان کی میں تائید کرتا ہوں۔ تکی کے بارے میں میں ایک چیز اور عرض کر دینا چاہتا ہوں۔ وہ یہ ہے کہ آسام کے اندر اور دوسری جگہوں پر cultivators پر جو مظالم ڈھائے گئے ہیں وہ عام طور پر روشن نہیں ہیں۔ اسلئے میں عرض کروں گا کہ ان کا protection ضروری ہے اور ان کے لئے جتنی بھی رعایت کی جائے وہ کم ہے ان الفاظ کے ساتھ میں اس کی تائید کرتا ہوں

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava (East Punjab: General): Mr. Speaker, Sir, I have nothing more to add to the observations already made in the House by my honourable friends Shri V. S. Sarwate and Babu Ramnarayan Singh.

Shri K. Hanumanthaiya (Mysore State): Sir, cannot the honourable member speak in English?

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: So far as this measure is concerned, I have nothing else to say except to support its industrial aspect. This has also not been proved that tea is very injurious. If this had been so, I would never have supported it and it is also difficult to say whether tea is conducive to the health of persons who take it. So far as the question of health is concerned, those persons who do not admit the fact that tea is conducive will surely oppose this Bill and will not support it.

So far as the question of Indian tea is concerned, Section 12(1) (a) of the Bill lays down:

"Promoting the sale, and increasing the consumption, in India and elsewhere, of Indian tea or of tea generally; carrying on propaganda for those purposes;"

With all due respect, I would like to submit that this portion of the Bill is highly objectionable although personally I am not convinced of the fact that tea is invariably harmful. Sir, once I happened to see a picture about Aspirin over which its manufacturers had spent a huge amount for conducting its propaganda in this country.

The propaganda of Lipton Tea is generally carried on at Railway Stations viz., it keeps warm during the winter and has a soothing effect in the summer. I do agree that the habit to take this is as bad as that of opium. I know of a certain case of a gentleman of sixty coming of a respectable family habituated to take opium. When he was awarded punishment his relatives approached me for getting him released on bail, as they apprehended lest he may not collapse in jail for want of opium. Later on his relations were able to smuggle and provide him with opium in the jail.

I will tell you the case of my own chauffeur. He does not mind going without meals for 3 days even, but if he is not provided with tea after half an hour he is unable to work. The tea-drinking habit is a concomitant to other evil habits. My honourable friend Mr. Sidhva asked us as to why you take rice? In my opinion it is hardly necessary for me to give any reply to this. He should himself think over the matter and find out whether tea is a luxury, and rice an essential commodity.

[Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava]

Every day you listen in this House to the stories about 'Grow More Food', and you have earmarked land for the production of tea. If you develop its industry, I do not find any defect in it; but I am opposed to its propaganda being carried on throughout India. Tea is no match for milk.

On my side especially in Jullundur, people were accustomed to take milk, and ghee, whereas at present they are very much habituated to the use of tea. Now they have become very much enamoured of it. Even then the people there drink tea after mixing up butter in it. But in the whole of India tea is not taken with butter.

Even then it would be absurd to say that tea is as good as milk. Neither can it be substituted for milk. From the national point of view it is a calamity. You will find in Europe that when you go to any place for drinking coffee, they will enquire from you whether you require white or black coffee. Similarly those people who drink tea do not take it after putting milk in it, but show a little milk from a distance and do not pour it.

Therefore, many of the people have been accustomed to drink black tea and to them milk appears to be like a medicine. As a matter of fact the people who are in the habit of drinking milk will again be persuaded to take tea and their strength will not increase. There will be little demand for milk in the country and this will prove harmful to the interests of the nation from the health point of view. Therefore, I oppose this part of the Bill. I support the other things which have been brought up before you inasmuch as these relate to the encouragement of the cultivators.

In regard to tea, I would like to mention another thing viz., the tortures that have been inflicted upon the cultivators in Assam and other places and which have not been generally exposed. Therefore, I would submit that there protection is most essential and they should be granted the maximum possible concessions.

With these words, I support this measure.

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy: Sir, I may state for the information of the House that I am not a habitual tea drinker. Therefore, I think I can claim to approach some of the points that have been made by some of my honourable friends with an unbiased mind.

This is not the first time that the question of protecting or promoting the interest of tea as an industry has come up for the consideration of the Legislature and I do think that having regard to the limited scope of the present measure, this wide question should not be raised but if we were to take a straight vote in this House I have not the least doubt that tea drinking would be supported by an overwhelming majority.

Sir, apart from anything else I think a propaganda for the expansion of the tea-drinking habit should be carried on as a concomitant to the prohibition drive. As a matter of fact, you should give some substitute for the spirituous drinks which you are going to deny to the people. It would be quite justified from many points of view.

[At this stage Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair, which was then occupied by Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava (one of the Panel of Chairmen)].

As a matter of fact, as is well-known, tea has been described as a drink that cheers but does not inebriate. I hope the House will not refuse this slight amount of cheer to those people who are going to be deprived of their spirituous drinks.

MANGROL AND MANAVADAR (ADMINISTRATION OF PROPERTY) BILL 227

Sir, several points have been raised which can very usefully be considered in the Select Committee, points regarding the composition of the contemplated Committee. But there again, I should like to remind the House that the object of this measure is a very limited one. Much as I sympathise with the object which my honourable friend Shri Khandubhai Desai has in putting forward the claims of labour to representation on this body, I very much doubt whether representation of labour is likely to advance the purposes of this measure as laid down in clause 12 of the Bill. However, Sir, this question is a point which can certainly be gone into in the Select Committee.

One point which was made and which to my mind is entirely outside the scope of this measure, was the question of buying up or acquiring the interests of the foreign investor in the tea industry. Sir, I am not expected to make any statement on this issue, but at the same time I should like to remind the House that as a matter of policy we may not perhaps bar out foreign capital. As a matter of fact, there is a desire that more of foreign capital should be forthcoming for investment in India and I do not know whether this is an opportune moment for raising the issue which has been raised by my honourable friend Mr. Khandubhai Desai. In any case, it is definitely beyond the scope of a Committee of the character contemplated to do anything to bring about the result which my honourable friend has in view.

My honourable friend Shri Krishnamachari raised the question of representation of the consumer. He also criticised the composition of the body in so far as the official element is concerned. Well, I have already indicated that Government feel that the control in so far as this body is in a position to control the industry, should not vest exclusively in the industry and trade, but because of the importance of the industry and the trade to the Government and the country as a whole, the Government should take a hand in that control. I am perfectly willing to consider the claims of representation of consumers and from that point of view to have the House represented on this Body, but that again is a matter which will have to be considered by the Select Committee.

I do not think that I need refer to any other point that has been made. I hope, Sir, the House will accept the motion.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That the Bill to provide for the development of the tea industry under Central control, and for that purpose to establish a Tea Committee for India and levy a customs-duty on tea produced in, and exported from, India, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri, Shri G. S. Guha, Shri Upendranath Barman, Shri Ari Bahadur Gurung, Shri S. V. Krishnamoorthy Rao, Shri K. Hanumanthaiya, Shri R. K. Sidhva, Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad, Shri H. V. Kamath, Shri M. Ananthacayanam Ayyangar, Shri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar, Shri S. M. Ghose, Mr. K. A. Mohamed and the Mover, with instructions to report on or before the 1st March, 1949, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

The motion was adopted.

MANGROL AND MANAVADAR (ADMINISTRATION OF PROPERTY) BILL

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel (Minister for Home Affairs and the States): I move:

"That the Bill to provide for the vesting of certain properties belonging to the States of Mangrol and Manavadar in Kathiawar in the Managers of the said States, be taken into consideration."

[Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel]

The administration of Manavadar and Mangrol States in Kathiawar was taken over on the 22nd October and 1st November respectively. The Ruler of Mangrol had signed an accession which he subsequently repudiated under pressure from Junagadh. The Ruler of Manavadar had no separate existence as a Ruler and Manavadar was merged at one time in Junagadh. Subsequently it was detached and like all the detached States was taken over by us afterwards in accordance with our Notification issued on the 14th August 1947, this State was also taken over. Subsequently, the Rulers were won over by Pakistan and are reported to have signed some sort of an agreement of political relationship with Pakistan. Having regard to our earlier claim, however, we took possession of these States and the Rulers were taken over under our protective custody. The States were placed under Managers who work directly under the supervision and control of our Regional Commissioner stationed at Rajkot, the old headquarters of the Residency of the Political Department in Kathiawar. Both these have properties consisting of Government securities, stocks, industrial shares etc., in the name of Chiefs or Rulers or Karbaris or other officials of the State. It was therefore thought best to vest these properties by law in the Managers, so that they could be safe and be operated on by the Managers in the interests of the State. Government of India therefore issued an Ordinance to that effect on the 16th August 1948. That Ordinance is likely to expire on the 15th of February 1949. It is therefore necessary to continue the arrangements by an Act of the Legislature. Accordingly this Bill has been introduced. It is a very short and non-controversial measure which I hope the House will have no difficulty in passing.

Mr. Chairman: Motion moved:

"That the Bill to provide for the vesting of certain properties belonging to the States of Mangrol and Manavadar in Kathiawar in the Managers of the said States, be taken into consideration."

Shri R. K. Sidhva (C. P. and Berar: General): On a point of information, Sir, may I know what is the total amount of all these securities? In Schedule Part I in the column of 'amounts' carries figures in respect of investments (a) only, whereas in respect of (b) (c), (d) and (e) and also Part II the amounts are not mentioned. I only want to know the total amount.

مولانا حسرت موہانی: جناب والا! ابھی ہمارے دوست سردار پٹیل نے جو یہ ریزولوشن منگروں اور منادوار کے متعلق پیش کیا ہے میں اس کی پوری زور کے ساتھ مخالفت کرتا ہوں۔ دراصل یہ ایک بہت بڑی پالیسی ہے جو کہ ہماری انڈین گورنمنٹ نے اختیار کی ہے اور انڈین رولرس میں سے خصوصاً چھوٹے چھوٹے رولرس کے ساتھ اختیار کی ہے میں اس کی شدت کے ساتھ مخالفت کرتا ہوں۔ اس پالیسی کے کیا معنی ہیں جو کہ آپ ان رولرس کے لئے اختیار کرتے جا رہے ہیں۔ یہ آپ کا برتاؤ کیا ہے ہم اور سردار پٹیل اور تمام کانگریس کے ممبر سب کے سب برٹش گورنمنٹ کے زمانہ میں جو یہاں رولرس تھے یعنی کیڈنگ، ڈلہوزی، ہیسٹنگز اور گلابو۔ ان کے اوپر لعنت کرتے تھے انہوں نے کیا کیا۔ کہ تمام ریاستوں کو ہڑپ لیا اور رولرس کو کہہ دیا کہ جاؤ مانگ کھاؤ۔ یا کسی کے ساتھ یہ کیا کہ تھوڑا سا وظیفہ مقرر کر دیا۔ کیا آپ کو یاد نہیں ہے کہ ٹھور اور پنجاب کی پوری ریاست وہ ہڑپ کر گئے اور ان کو یہ کہہ کر کہ تمہارا انتظام ٹھیک نہیں

بلکہ ان کو کوئی پلشن وغیرہ بھی نہیں دی

Mr. Chairman: May I remind the honourable member that the question involved in this Bill is not the taking over of these States but only relates to the question of vesting of properties? The States have already been taken over.

Maulana Hasrat Mohani: I am speaking only on properties.

Mr. Chairman: It is now 1 O'clock. The honourable member may resume after Lunch.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock.
Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: The House was considering the Honourable the Home Minister's Bill to provide for the vesting of certain properties belonging to the States of Mangrol and Manavadar in Kathiawar. We may resume the discussion.

مولانا حسرت موہانی: جناب عالی! میں سب سے پہلے ایک غلط فہمی کو دور کر لینا چاہتا ہوں۔ میں نے جو اس بل کو اپوز کیا تو اس لئے کہ بہت سے دوستوں نے مجھ سے پوچھا کہ تم کہاں سے ریاستوں سے وکیل بن کر کھڑے ہو گئے۔ میں تو ایک کمیونسٹ خیال کا آدمی ہوں ایسے آدمی سے یہ کہنا کہ وہ ریاستوں کی وکالت کرے ایک عجیب سی بات معلوم ہوتی ہے۔ میں جلد الفاظ میں اپنی پوزیشن صاف کر لینا چاہتا ہوں۔ میں تو ریاستوں کا سب سے بڑا دشمن اور مخالف ہوں جو ایتھٹیٹیوڈ (attitude) ہمارے جواہر لال کا تھا کہ تمام ریاستوں کو فنا کر دینا چاہئے۔ وہی میڈیو ہے، دائے ہے۔

(آنریبل سردار ولہ بھائی پتیل : میری نہیں ہے) ہمیشہ سے میری یہی رائے ہے - آپ کہیں ایک بھی پروانٹ دکھلا دیں کہ میں نے اس کے خلاف کہا ہو - میں یہ کہنا چاہتا ہوں کہ اگر ریاستوں کو مٹا دیا جائے تو ان کی بجائے کیا چیز ہو - میں اپنے دوست پتیل صاحب کی بڑی قدر کرتا ہوں اور میرے دل میں ان کی بڑی عزت ہے - یہ جو انہوں نے کیا کہ ریاستوں کو کسی نہ کسی طرح ختم کر دیا یہ بہت اچھا کیا کہ یہ تو میری رائے کے موافق ہے لیکن سوال یہ ہے کہ مرجر کرنے کے بعد آپ نے کیا کیا - چاہئے تو یہ تھا کہ چھوٹی چھوٹی ریاستوں کو مرجر کر کے آپ بڑے گروپ بناتے - اس گروپ کو بنا کر آپ اس کو ایک پروانٹس قرار دیتے اور اس پروانٹس کو بھی اس طرح سے آزاد کرتے جیسے کہ اور پروانٹس پہلے سے موجود ہیں - اور میری تو ہمیشہ سے یہی رائے رہی ہے کہ ہندوستان کا کانسٹیٹیوشن بھی ایسا بنے کہ یہاں ایک "socialists republics of India" "Federation of independent" ہو - آپ چاہے جتنے گروپ بناویں اور چاہے جتنی ریاستوں کو فنا کریں - لیکن جو آپ کا گروپ بنے اسے پروانٹس کا درجہ دیجئے اور اس کو سوویت سوشلسٹ سسٹم بنا کر لاگو رکھئے اور پھر ایسا فیڈریشن بنائیں تب تو ٹھیک ہو سکتا ہے - تب تو میں آپ کی تائید کروں گا کہ آپ بہت اچھا کر رہے ہیں - لیکن آپ ایسا نہیں کر رہے ہیں - آپ تو چھوٹی چھوٹی ریاستوں کو حذف کر کے ایک یونٹری نازی اسٹیٹ قائم کر رہے ہیں - میں اس کے سخت خلاف ہوں کوئی وجہ نہیں کہ آپ چھوٹی چھوٹی ریاستوں کو فنا کر دیں اور انکو ملانے کے بعد کوئی سو شلسٹ اسٹیٹ قائم نہ کریں بلکہ اپنی ایک یونٹری گورنمنٹ قائم کریں اور وہ بھی نازی ٹائپ کی - یہ ویسا ہی ہوا ہے جیسا کہ جرمنی میں سب ریاستوں کو ملا کر ایک نازی اسٹیٹ قائم کی گئی تھی - میں اس کے سخت خلاف ہوں - اور میں اپنے دوست پتیل صاحب سے اپیل کرتا ہوں کہ وہ اس کا لحاظ کریں - کیا فائدہ رہا کہ تاریخ میں آریکا نام کلايو - ہیسٹنگز اور ڈلہوزی کے ساتھ لیا گیا کیونکہ انہوں نے بھی چھوٹی چھوٹی ریاستوں کو فنا کر کے ایک انگریزی ریاست قائم کی اور وہ بھی نازی ٹائپ کی - آپ بھی اس کی تائید اور اسکی پیروی کرنا چاہتے ہیں - اگر آپ یہ سمجھتے ہیں کہ جو آپ نے کیا ہے وہ ٹھیک کیا ہے تو آپ اسکا اعلان کیجئے کہ جتنے گروپ آپ بناتے ہیں.....

Mr. Speaker: Is the honourable member discussing Government's policy with regard to States?

Maulana Hasrat Mohani: No, no. I was only removing some doubt. Some friends objected to my taking up the cause of the States. So I said this.

Mr. Speaker: Honourable member might say anything that he has to say about Mangrol and Manavadar; he can make general remarks, but cannot go into details.

مولانا حسرت موہانی : میں نے یہ اپنے ذاتی ایکسپلینیشن کے طور پر کہہ دیا - مجھکو اس میں کچھ زیادہ کہنے کی ضرورت نہیں ہے -

اب میں یہ عرض کرنا چاہتا ہوں کہ میں اس وجہ سے اس بل کی مخالفت کرتا ہوں کیونکہ اس میں پہلے پری امبل میں لکھا ہے

"And whereas it is expedient to provide for the vesting of certain properties belonging to the said states"

اس میں تو آپ لکھتے ہیں کہ یہ چیزیں اسٹیٹ کی ملکیت ہیں - لیکن جو آپ نے بعد میں فہرست دی ہے - اس میں یہ اسٹیٹ کی ملکیت نہیں ہیں بلکہ وہاں کے لوگوں کی ذاتی ملکیت ہیں - اس میں شیخ عبدالخلیق کا نام ہے اور دوسروں کے نام ہیں - مطلب یہ ہے کہ یہ چیزیں ان کی پرائیویٹ ملکیت میں ہیں آپ کہتے ہیں کہ انہوں نے یہ نالائق حرکت کی کہ پاکستان کا نام لیا - میں اس بحث میں نہیں پڑنا چاہتا - اگر آپ ان کو سزا دینا چاہتے ہیں تو دیجئے - لیکن دنیا میں آج تک یہ ظلم کہیں نہیں کیا گیا جو آپ کر رہے ہیں - آپ نے یہی جونا گڑھ میں کیا اور یہی آپ یہاں ریپٹ کر رہے ہیں - میں نے اس وقت بھی آپ سے کہا تھا اور پھر کہتا ہوں کہ جو سب سے بڑے امپیریلسٹ ترکی کے خلیفہ تھے - ان کی بھی خلافت جب ترکوں نے ختم کی تو جو رویہ سلطان عبدالعزیز کے نام سے بینکوں میں جمع تھا یا جو شہرس تھے ان کو تپ نہیں کیا - بلکہ وہ اُن کو ہی دیا اور اُن کے بعد اُن کے لڑکوں اور پوتوں کو ملا - وہاں پر آپ کی طرح نہیں کیا گیا کہ کھڑے ہو کر کہہ دیا کہ وہ اسٹیٹ تھی اس لئے ہم اس کو جتنا چاہیں دے لیں - میں کہتا ہوں کہ آپ کا یہ دعویٰ یہیں غلط ثابت ہوتا ہے - آپ نے سیکشن 9 میں لکھا ہے کہ کوئی معاملہ عدالت کے سامنے پیش نہیں ہو سکتا - کیوں آپ خوف زدہ ہیں اس سے - اگر آپ کو اپنے پر اعتبار ہے کہ یہ اسٹیٹ کی ملکیت ہے پرائیویٹ نہیں ہے تو اگر کوئی شخص دعویٰ کرے تو آپ کو اُس کا جواب دینا چاہئے آپ جو کہتے ہیں کہ کوئی معاملہ عدالت میں نہ پیش ہو اس سے یہ معلوم ہوتا ہے کہ آپ کے دل میں چور ہے کہ اگر یہ عدالت میں جائیگا تو ہم ہار جائیں گے - میں یہ ایک ثبوت پیش کرتا ہوں کہ جس سے معلوم ہوا کہ یہ پرائیویٹ ہیں - یہ ہرگز اسٹیٹ کے نہیں ہیں - میں آپ سے یہ پوچھتا ہوں کہ جتنے شہرس اور باندس جن جن لوگوں کے نام ہیں کیا وہ اب تک ایسے ہی پڑے ہوئے تھے - میں کہتا ہوں کہ آپ معلوم کر لیجئے کہ اُن سے جو فائدہ ہوتا تھا وہ اسٹیٹ کے خزانے میں جاتا تھا یا عبدالخلیق اور نصیر الدین کی جیب میں جاتا تھا اگر یہ ان کے پاس جاتا تھا تو یہ انہیں کا ہے اور اسٹیٹ کے حساب میں جاتا تھا تو اسٹیٹ کا کہا جا سکتا ہے - ایک اور ثبوت

[مولانا حسرت موہانی]

یہ ہے کہ اس میں باز چیزیں ایسی ہیں جو وقف کے طور پر ہوئی ہیں۔ یہ جو آپ نے کہا ہے کہ یہ منگروں اسلامی چیز تبدیل ترست ہے۔ تو اس میں کیا ہے۔ اس میں ان کی حیثیت پرائیویٹ ہے مگر وہ متولی ہیں۔ یعنی وہ رقم انہیں کو ملیگی مگر وہ اس کو اپنے پاس نہیں رکھیں گے لیکن جن چیزوں کے لئے وقف ہے ان کو دے دینگے میں کہتا ہوں کہ کم سے کم جتنی پرائیویٹ وقف شدہ ہے اس پر قبضہ کرنے کا آپ کو کوئی حق نہیں ہے۔ اس پر آپ کوئی مینیجر مقرر نہیں کر سکتے۔ کیا آپ مینیجر کو متولی بنا دینگے۔ متولی وہی رہیں گے شیخ منگروں اور جو وقف شدہ جائداد ہے وہ انہیں کو ملیگی کسی کو حق نہیں ہے کہ وہ وقف شدہ پرائیویٹ کو کسی اور کے نام منتقل کر لے۔ اور اگر آپ یہ ہی کہتے ہیں تو پہلے اپنا وقف کے متعلق قانون پاس کیجیئے ابھی وہ یہاں کے کانستٹی ٹیوشن میں نہیں آیا ہے۔ جب آئے گا تب ہم دیکھیں گے کہ آیا آپ وقف شدہ پرائیویٹ کو غصب کر سکتے ہیں یا نہیں۔

میں اس بل کی اس لئے مخالفت کرتا ہوں کہ inconsistent ہے آپ کہتی کہتے ہیں کہ اسٹیٹ کی ہیں کبھی ان کی پرائیویٹ ہیں۔ اگر آپ یہ کہتے ہیں کہ کبھی اسکو کوئی بیچ نہ سکے تو اس سے آپ کی کمزوری معلوم ہوتی ہے۔ اس کے بعد آپ کبھی کسی کی خوشامد کرتے ہیں کبھی کبھی پولیس ایکشن لیتے ہیں کبھی کسی کو قہراً ہیں اور پھر next step یہ ہے کہ bribery سے آپ سب کو شامل کرنے کی کوشش کرتے ہیں۔

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: I protest against the allegation of bribery and corruption. He said that the Instrument of Accession was obtained by giving bribes. The honourable member must withdraw the allegation.

Mr. Speaker: Has the honourable member made those allegations?

Maulana Hasrat Mohani: Unless I explain.....

Honourable Members: Withdraw.

Maulana Hasrat Mohani: I withdraw the word.

میں bribery کو جو کہہ رہا تھا تو اس کے Actual معنوں میں نہیں کہہ رہا تھا۔ میں یہ کہنا چاہتا تھا کہ بعض لوگوں کو آپ یہ لالچ دیکر کہ راج پر مکہ بنا دینگے۔

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member is going into irrelevant matters, matters with which we are not concerned. He has to restrict his remarks to the Bill.

جو بل چاہیں آپ پاس کریں سوائے میرے اور کوئی اس کی یہاں مخالفت کرنے والا نہیں ہے۔

Shri Brajeshwar Prasad: I wish to raise a point of order. I wish to know whether the honourable member is relevant in saying that the curse of God will fall on our heads.

Mr. Speaker: Let him speak. Order, order.

مولانا حسرت موہانی: میں یہ عرض کر رہا تھا کہ انڈین پارلیمنٹ آپکے قبضے میں ہے آپ جو کچھ چاہیں پاس کر لیں اس خیال پر کہ مناسب غیر مناسب جائز ناجائز سب کچھ پاس ہو جائیگا۔

میں مثال دیتا ہوں کہ یہاں پر جو Securities ہیں اسکو برٹس پارلیمنٹ میں پاس کر دیا جائے کہ اب ہندوستان کو نہ دو تو چونکہ برٹس پارلیمنٹ پر ان کا قبضہ ہے وہ فوراً ہی پاس ہو جائیگا۔ اور عربوں روپیہ کا آپ جو مطالبہ کر رہے ہیں جس کے لئے چرچل بھی کہہ رہا ہے کہ اب ہندوستان کو کچھ نہ دو اس لحاظ سے مجھکو بہت خطرہ ہے کہ کہیں کوئی وقت ایسا نہ آ جائے کہ خدانخواستہ آپکو یہ جو کمیونسٹ پارو پھیل رہی ہے چترال کی طرف سے دبانا چاہے اور وہ یہ کہے کہ سویت گورنمنٹ بھی پولیس ایکشن کر رہی ہے۔

They cannot tolerate any hostile forces on their side.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. The honourable member is going beyond the limit.

مولانا حسرت موہانی: یہ دلیل جو آپ نے حیدرآباد کے لئے پیش کی تھی (interruption).

خیر میرا مطلب یہ ہے کہ جو جو بل آپ پاس کرنا چاہیں پاس کر لیں لیکن آپکو یاد رکھنا چاہئے۔

You will have to regret for all this.

(English Translation of the above speech)

Maulana Hasrat Mohani (U.P.: Muslim): Sir, with all the emphasis at my command I oppose the motion just moved by my friend Sardar Patel about Mangrol and Manavadar. The policy, that has been adopted by the Indian Government, is in fact very bad. I strongly oppose the policy adopted about the Rulers of Indian States and specially about smaller states. What is the meaning of this policy that you are going to adopt about these Rulers? What does your behaviour show? In the times of the British Government I myself, Sardar Patel and all the other followers of Congress used to censure rulers of India like Canning, Dalhausie, Hastings and Clive. What they did was that they annexed all the states and told the rulers to go and beg for their living, or else they fixed for some of them small pensions. Do you not remember that they annexed the whole of the State of Lahore and Punjab and member that they annexed the ruler on the plea that his administration was not proper. They turned out the ruler on the plea that his administration was not proper. They baptized Dalip Singh the grand son of Maharaja Ranjit Singh and later sent him to Europe. What they did in Oudh? They dethroned and pensioned off Wajid Ali Shah on the pretext that his administration was not good. But they at least did so much as to grant them pensions. But what you are doing?

[Maulana Hasrat Mohani]

Out of the numerous smaller states Mangrol and Manavadar are two of them. At first they wished to accede to Pakistan. I am not a supporter of Pakistan. But as far as justice goes everybody was allowed to opt to any Dominion he liked and these states expressed their desire of acceding to Pakistan, then what objection could you have on their choice. But you first of all inflicted upon them a penalty by forcibly annexing the states and after annexation you did not meet out to them the same treatment as you meted out to other states, i.e., you did not allocate to them any share of the income, and what to say of share you did not even grant them any pensions, etc.

Mr. Chairman: May I remind the honourable member that the question involved in this Bill is not taking over of these states but only relates to the question of vesting of properties. The states have already been taken over.

Maulana Hasrat Mohani: I am speaking only on properties.

Mr. Chairman: It is now 1 O'clock. The honourable member may resume after Lunch.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half-Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock, Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: The House was considering the Honourable the Home Minister's Bill to provide for the vesting of certain properties belonging to the States of Mangrol and Manavadar in Kathiawar. We may resume the discussion.

Maulana Hasrat Mohani: Sir, first of all I wish to clear a misunderstanding. As I opposed this Bill a number of my friends have asked me as to why I stood up to plead the cause of the states. I am a man of Communist leanings. It seems quite strange for such a person to take up the cause of the states. In a few words I like to clear my position. I am the greatest enemy and adversary of the states. I also maintain the same attitude as Jawaharlal maintained that all the states should be liquidated. (The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: "I do not hold this view.") Ever since I have been holding this view. I ask you to quote a single instance where I may have said to the contrary. But what I want to say is that ~~the~~ states are liquidated then what should take their place. I have a great esteem for my friend Sardar Patel and I highly honour him. His action that by one way or the other states have been liquidated, is praiseworthy. This action is in accordance with the views I hold. But the question is what have you done after the merger? The proper action would have been to merge smaller states to form big groups, the group would have been declared Provinces and Provincial Autonomy granted to these also as is in existence in other provinces. I have held this view since long that the constitution of India be so drafted as to incorporate a federation of independent socialistic republics of India. You may form as many groups as you like and liquidate as many states as you desire. But you must give these groups the status of a Province and instal them on the lines of the Soviet Socialistic System and then constitute your federation, and then only can it be proper. Then only will I support you and say that you are doing something very good. But you are not doing so. You are creating a Unitary Nazi State by merging these smaller states. I strongly oppose this move. There is no reason why you should not establish a Socialist System after liquidating these smaller states instead of establishing a Unitary Government of your own and that also of the Nazi type. This all has been done on the same lines as was done in Germany where all the states were merged and a Nazi State established. I am strongly against such a move and I appeal to my friend Sardar Patel to have regard for this. What is the fun if in history your name is mentioned along with Clive, Hastings and Dalhausie because after liquidating smaller states they too established the British Empire, an Empire also of the Nazi type. You also want to support the action and step into their shoes. If you think that whatever you have done is right then make an announcement that the groups that you form

Mr. Speaker: Is the honourable member discussing Government's policy with regard to states?

Maulana Hasrat Mohani: No, no. I was only removing some doubt. Some friend objected to my taking up the cause of the states. So I said this.

Mr. Speaker: Honourable member might say anything that he has to say about Mangrol and Manavadar; he can make general remarks, but cannot go into details.

Maulana Hasrat Mohani: I mentioned all this as my personal explanation. I do not think it necessary to mention anything more in this connection.

Now I beg to submit that I want to oppose this Bill for the reasons that in its preamble it is mentioned:

"And whereas it is expedient to provide for the vesting of certain properties belonging to the said states."

Herein you mention that these properties belong to the State but in the list that you have submitted in the end these are not mentioned as State property but the personal property of the people of those states. Besides other names the name of Sheikh Abdul Khaliq is also there, meaning thereby that these are their private properties. You say that they did an improper act by acceding to Pakistan. I do not want to discuss this point. If you want to punish them for this do punish them, but throughout the whole world you did in Junagadh also and the same you are repeating here. I warned you then also and today I tell you again that when the Trucks ended the Caliphate of the greatest Imperialist of the day the Caliph of Turkey even then the sums of money that were in Banks against the personal name of Sultan Abdul Hamid or the shares held by him were not touched. But instead these were left with him and subsequently inherited by his sons and grandsons. There it was not done as you have done that you make an announcement that as all the property belonged to the State so you are authorized to give as much as you like. I say that your declaration proves to be incorrect on merits. In Section 9, you have laid down that no matter can be referred to a law court for the reason that you are afraid of the legality of the point. If you are confident that these properties belong to State and are not private then you should be prepared to give an answer if anyone lays a claim for them. Your allegation that no matter can be referred to a law court clearly shows that you have a skeleton in the cupboard and that if the matter is taken to a law court you will lose the case. I quote a proof that would show that these are private properties and do not belong to State. I want to ask of you whether the shares and bonds standing in the names of the various persons were lying as such giving no profit to them. I ask you to enquire if the profits were credited to the State Treasury or went to fill the pockets of Abdul Khaliq and Nasiruddin. If the profits were credited to their personal accounts then these shares and bonds belong to them and if to the State Treasury then these can be taken to be State property. Another proof is the fact that there are some such things which are Waqf properties. Your allegation that Mangrol is an Islamic Charitable Trust has no force. The status in private but they are Mutawallis meaning thereby that the profits will go to them but they will not utilize the money for personal use but will spend it over those items for which Waqf has been created. I declare that you have no right to take possession at least of the Waqf property. You cannot appoint any manager for this property. Will you make the Manager the Mutawalli? Sheikh Mangrol only will remain as Mutawalli and the Waqf property will be vested only in him. No one has got the right to transfer the Waqf property to any one else, and if you insist then first pass an act concerning Waqfs. Such an Act has not yet been incorporated in the constitution. When such a Bill will come before us then we will see whether you can misappropriate Waqf properties or not.

I oppose this Bill for it is inconsistent as sometimes you hold them to be state properties and sometimes private. If you say that this is to prevent the sale of these properties then it shows your weakness. Then afterwards you flatter some and sometimes resort to police action against others, you sometimes intimidate them and the next step is that you try to merge others by giving bribes.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: I protest against the allegation of bribery and corruption. He said that the Instrument of Accession was obtained by giving bribes. The honourable member must withdraw the allegation.

Mr. Speaker: Has the honourable member made those allegations?

Maulana Hasrat Mohani: Unless I explain.....

Honourable Members: Withdraw.

Maulana Hasrat Mohani: I withdraw the word. I was not referring bribery and corruption in the actual sense of the words.

I wanted to say that you by allowing some people that you would make them Rajpramukhs.....

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member is going into irrelevant matters, matters with which we are not concerned. He has to restrict his remarks to the Bill.

Maulana Hasrat Mohani: I was submitting that this is a dangerous policy that a thing is usurped first and then afterwards a Bill is presented here to declare that the action is legalized. I say that if you will continue to adopt this practice then you should also be afraid of the wrath of God so that you yourself may not be involved in some difficulty, and some misfortune may not befall you. You are empowered to pass any Bill you like as here there is none except I to oppose it.

Shri Brajeshwar Prasad: (Bihar: General): I wish to raise a point of order. I wish to know whether the honourable member is relevant in saying that the curse of God will fall on our heads.

Mr. Speaker: Let him speak. Order, order.

Maulana Hasrat Mohani: I was saying that the Indian Parliament is in your control so you may get whatever you like passed, thinking that everything whether proper or improper legal or illegal will be passed. For example if the British desire that India may not be given the securities held by her then as the British Parliament is under their control the motion will readily be passed. Then what will happen of those thousands of millions of rupees that are claimed by you and about which Churchill has declared that it must not be given to India. For this reason I am much afraid that God forbidding such a time may not come when the Communist power that is fast spreading may wish to smother you from chitral side saying that the Soviet Government also is resorting to police action. They cannot tolerate any hostile forces on their side.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. The honourable member is going beyond the limit.

Maulana Hasrat Mohani: The argument advanced in the case of Hyderabad (Interruption).....In the end I mean to say that you may pass whatever Bills you like but you should remember that you will have to regret for all this.

Shri Biswanath Das (Orissa: General): Sir, the discussion in this House, especially the speech of my honourable friend Maulana Hasrat Mohani has come as a shocking surprise to us. We have found Maulana Hasrat Mohani in an absolutely different garb from what he was wearing when he was in the Congress. The years have changed him, and for the worse. He has showered his curses not only on our heads, humble beings, but in the head of one whom we love and revere. Let me tell the Maulana plainly that if any Ministry has acted with capacity, patience and magnanimity, it is the States Ministry: ('Hear hear').

Sir, Britain took away the idea of a divided India. Britain divided India into two, Pakistan and India. Not being satisfied with this, she had created 600 different Indias, big and small. May the States Ministry and the Deputy Prime Minister be blessed and may God shower His blessings on him and his activities in giving us an United India within the short space of fourteen or fifteen months. I should have expected the Maulana that with his experience and with his wisdom, he should come to bless the activities of the Ministry. (Interruption). Well, you would not and that is all the more glory to you. What are we hearing here, all curses after 25 years' association with the Congress. Why this change? Heaven knows and he, the Moulana, himself knows. It is difficult for me to explain. Sir, Not only this, I thank my honourable leader for having foiled the mischievous machinations of Pakistan against India, although India always declared at the top of its voice: "We are your friends; we are your brothers". What is that machination? That machination was to take away from us areas which are justly our own. We could have taken Bahawalpur; we refused to do that; we knew the people are mainly Muslims and it was their right to decide for themselves and we left them at that. That was not done by Pakistan. So instead of cursing Pakistan as a national of India, does it come from his mouth to say now: "I curse you and the Deputy Prime Minister".

Mr. Speaker: Let not this dwindle into a controversy any longer. Let us come to the subject of the Bill.

Shri Biswanath Das: I am coming to it. I am discussing the subject-matter. I will invite the attention of my honourable friend even to a reactionary report like that of the Butler Committee. Sir, I refer him to page 15, paragraph 21. What is said there? The Butler Committee recommends that the paramountcy could be exercised by the Government of India itself in the interests of the people of India. British paramountcy has gone, but it has reverted to the people, to the people of the States and to the people of India and this is recognized even in so reactionary a report as the Butler Committee's Report. Sir, if the Government of India had not done what they did, they would have been cursed by the people of India, you and myself, and even my lady friend, who has the honour to represent the United Provinces here.

Maulana Hasrat Mohani: On a point personal explanation, I never agreed to any separate Pakistan. I opposed it up to the last moment, even when Sardar Patel and Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru accepted the partition. I never accepted it. Everybody knows that. My honourable friend is saying that I have been advocating Pakistan.....

Shri Biswanath Das: I did not say.

Mr. Speaker: Honourable members should restrict themselves only to the Bill and not deal with the general aspects of the Bill.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the principle of this Bill. Before the recess, Sir, the honourable Maulana Hasrat Mohani stated that the rulers of the Mangrol and Manavadar were only willing to accede to Pakistan, but by a forcible method the extraction was obtained by the States Ministry to accede to India. Sir, this is a most mischievous statement. Both these rulers had agreed and actually signed the document without anybody's insistence to accede to the Union of India. It is quite the reverse and at the pressure of the Pakistan Government, whosoever individuals they may be, the ruler backed out from it later on and stated that he wanted to accede to Pakistan. Who pressed it? At whose instigation this was done? Originally the ruler willingly accepted and signed the document, Sir, which is in the possession of the States Ministry. It has been proclaimed times out of number that they have acceded to India and subsequently, it was withdrawn, and to come and state here, Sir, that the States Ministry forcibly extracted this document is most mischievous and most objectionable, knowing fully well that it was quite the reverse. I do not want, Sir, as you stated, to refute all the arguments that have been advanced by my honourable friend about the feudal state and his own view about these various states and what he thought of them. I do not want to say anything on this because you stated that you do not want to have any controversy in this matter. However, I cannot refrain from stating that if he really believed that these mergers and these feudal states have been really a blessing, then he would have welcomed all what has happened today in the 600 states that have merged or acceded to India. It was really a miracle and the whole nation and the whole world is so jubilant that within a twinkling of an eye, all the states have come to the real position, and if my honourable friend really believes in the socialism, as he states, I am really surprised at what he believes in. I have been following him for the last 25 years. (Interruption) It is therefore I said, Sir, that some of the remarks could not go unnoticed in that House when they were most mischievously made. Sir, I do not want to say anything further, but I do state he has deliberately made a mischievous statement and I understand he is a person who has been drawing a pension from the various states.

Shri Jainarain Vyas (Jodhpur State): When Maulana Hasrat Mohani stood on his legs, it struck me that he with his Communist tendencies, would speak in favour of liquidating the properties and liquidating the Princely Order itself, but I was wonder-struck Sir, when I heard the Maulana pleading the cause of Sheikhs and Khans in the name of God. Although I am not a Communist, I hear that the Communists are in favour of a God-less and class-less society and here the Maulana is pleading both for God and for a particular class of people, who are called the Rulers. I cannot congratulate the Maulana for this, but I must congratulate the rulers of those blessed States for getting an advocate in him.

Sir, I would not go into the details of the task which the Maulana has given to us about the Socialist Republic, Nazi State, Khuda ka Khof and so many other things, but I must draw the attention of our esteemed Maulana that this Bill is to provide for the vesting of certain properties belonging to the States of Mangrol and Manavadar and not for confiscating the properties of these States. Let the Maulana rest assured that these properties are not being confiscated, but we are going to have some management and that management will vest in the hands of a Manager who will manage the States. Now the Maulana may say: "Leave the States to their own fate. Let the Nawabs and Sheikhs who are far off manage it by a magic wand". But that is an impossible thing and I cannot understand why the Maulana is asking for an impossible thing. The Maulana says that some of the properties have been ear-marked for Wakf or charitable purposes. The Manager would see to it that if they are for charitable purposes, they will be used for charitable purposes; they will not be squandered away. I object to his saying that by managing the estates we are acting as Nazis and this Parliament which is under the Sardar Sahib would not have raised its voice because it is under him. This Parliament is a sovereign body and even if the Sardar Sahib is opposed to the Parliament, Parliament would remove the Sardar Sahib, with due regard which we have for Sardar Sahib and in spite of all that the Sardar Sahib has done for us. To say and speak in this manner about Parliament is just belittling one's own self.

3 P.M. Parliament includes a lot of people like the Maulana and I cannot understand the Maulana saying that we are acting just like the Nazis. With all the powers I have got I tried to find out how we are acting as Nazis when we are doing so much good for the States.

Maulana Hasrat Mohani: Are you not establishing a bigger Federal State?

Shri Jainarain Vyas: The only sin that Sardar Sahib has committed is that in place of so many hundreds of States he has brought into existence only a few States, and instead of handing over the management of these States to absentee landlords, he has given it over to managers who are working under the supervision of Parliament and if they do anything wrong they will be questioned and removed. I do not know what is the sense in opposing an innocent Bill like this. Of course, Maulana Sahib is a Communist and therefore he opposes this. If anti-Communist action was the charge of the Maulana I would not say anything. Now, in spite of his Communist tendencies, in spite of his past advocacy of a godless and classless society, he is advocating for the property for Princes. Instead of taking things by force, we are managing by law and as such I do not see where the harm is. I hope the Maulana Sahib will withdraw his opposition and let the Bill pass unanimously.

The Honourable Shri Satyanarayan Sinha (Minister of State): The question is now put.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the question be now put."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: I would not have said anything in reply to a lot of irrelevant matter that has been introduced in the debate. Maulana is an old friend, and I was under the impression that he believed in God. But when he himself says that he is a Communist, then to him religion is the opium of mankind.

Maulana Hasrat Mohani: Is there any difference between communalism and religion?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: I would have been frightened by his invocation of the Divinity for a course, but when I find he is ungodly, it does not frighten me at all.

I will not try to answer the irrelevant matter that has been introduced in the debate. It is unfortunate that in a simple, uncontroversial measure of this kind, any irrelevant matter likely to be misunderstood, or to create an atmosphere of hatred should be introduced. We are a responsible House, a sovereign Legislature. It is not a meeting of Ulemas, or Maulanas or Congress Committees or the Pakistan League, or anything of that kind. Here we are discussing a serious matter in which frivolities have no place. I am sorry to say that this is not the first time that the Maulana who introduced this irrelevant matter has strayed outside his path. The real fact is that he has not really understood what the Bill means. He is carried away by his prejudices, when he says that I am responsible for partition, or Pandit Jawaharlal is responsible, God knows whether those who were not for Partition were not really responsible for this. It is difficult to say whether those who advocated against partition did not want this country to be partitioned, not in two parts but in many parts. Therefore it is very difficult to understand such people. They say one thing but mean another.

In the morning session he spoke about Dalhousie and Dalip Singh and all sorts of irrelevant things. Last week or ten days ago Dalip Singh's granddaughter came to me and said "What are you going to do about Lahore. It belongs to me? Are you going to deliver it to me?" I said it is beyond my power to do anything. If Dalip Singh had not been taken away, there would have been no partition.

All this irrelevant talk, I am unable to understand. Therefore, I would only confine myself to the measure about which one or two things have been said and which I would like to answer. As I have said he has not understood it. He thinks I am going to appropriate the property referred to in the Bill for my own benefit or for that of the Government of India. It is not so. This property belongs to the States of Manavadar and Mangrol, namely, to the people of those States. That is to say, if this money is misappropriated or allowed to be misappropriated, the responsibility falls on the Government of India, and I as the representative, of the Government of India am bound to protect the interests of these people. Therefore this is not a Nazi measure: this is an anti-Nazi measure. It protects the interests of the people. What I have done up to now, so far as the States are concerned, has been done with the agreement of the Princes and the people. Not a single step up to now has been taken in which either the people or the Princes have complained, except the Maulana and that too without a case! He complained about Junagadh: now he complains about Manavadar and Mangrol: and he complained, in the case of Hyderabad, but never about any other State! As he is unable to defend his position he puts all the States in a lump and make an irrelevant argument. Therefore it is not proper for this House at this stage to introduce such a debate as would create misunderstanding outside. I have willingly agreed to partition and I wish well to both partitioned countries. I have no ill-will towards either of the parts. At least for this side I can have no ill-will. For the other part I have every good wish. I have not been accustomed to talk with my tongue in my cheeks, or to say one thing and mean another. It is no use charging the Government of India with any evil designs in such paltry things. The property involved, as my honourable friend, Mr. Sidhva wanted to know is this: in the case of Mangrol the total property is worth Rs. 19.9 lakhs and in the case of Manavadar it is worth Rs. 14.8 lakhs. In the affairs of the administration of the Government of India, what is this property that we want and for whose benefit? The property is to be administered for the benefit of the people of the Manavadar and Mangrol States, and as a humble servant of the State, I am bound to protect these interests. Therefore the real point in this Bill is whether there is anything against the interests of the people.

He has suggested one matter that deserves consideration. There are some securities which relate to Waqf property. It is not our intention to touch his property for any other purpose than the purpose for which it is earmarked or intended.

One of my honourable friends has given notice of an amendment. I have myself drafted an amendment or a proviso to meet the purpose contemplated by the honourable member's amendment.

I never thought that this measure would take more than five minutes. It is a sheer waste of the time of the house, I should say a criminal waste of the time of the house, to have conducted the debate in the manner in which it has been. I am sorry to use this strong language but I cannot absolve the honourable member of his very serious responsibility and the serious abuse of the position that he is enjoying in this House.....

Maulana Hasrat Mohani: I take the fullest responsibility.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel:by raising issues in the debate of a very controversial nature, which are likely to do harm and no good.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill to provide for the vesting of certain properties belonging to the States of Mangrol and Manavadar in Kathiawar in the Managers of the said States, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clauses 2 and 3 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 2 and 3 were added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): Sir, I have an amendment to this clause. But if the Honourable Minister moves his own amendment that would suffice as it is on the same line.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: Sir, I move:

"That to clause 4 of the Bill, the following proviso be added:

"Provided that where any of the said properties was, immediately before the first day of November 1947, subject to any trust lawfully created, the Manager shall, in the exercise of his powers in relation to such property be bound by the terms of that trust."

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That to clause 4 of the Bill, the following proviso be added:

"Provided that where any of the said properties was, immediately before the first day of November 1947, subject to any trust lawfully created, the Manager shall, in the exercise of his powers in relation to such property be bound by the terms of that trust."

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: With regard to the amendment moved by the Honourable Minister himself I fully support it, because it is on the lines of my own amendment. The only thing that I desire the Honourable Minister to do is to carefully inquire into the matter as to whether the Waqf was really effected and if that is so the whole thing will be all right.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: Oh, yes. I have no doubt about it.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That to clause 4 of the Bill, the following proviso be added:
Provided that where any of the said properties was, immediately before the first day of November 1947, subject to any trust lawfully created, the Manager shall, in the exercise of his powers in relation to such property be bound by the terms of that trust."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 4, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 4, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Clause 5, was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I have an amendment to this clause but it is only a drafting amendment and not a substantial one and I hope it would be accepted by the Honourable Minister.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: I am not prepared to accept any more amendments to the Bill.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 6 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 6 was added to the Bill.

Clauses 7 to 12 were added to the Bill.

Mr. Speaker: Except amendment No. 5 the others are for the insertion of commas.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in Part I of the Schedule to the Bill, in the heading of column 5 for the words 'in whose name standing', the words 'Person in whose name the properties stand' be substituted."

Or,

"That in Part I of the Schedule to the Bill, in the heading of column 5 for the words 'in whose name standing' the words 'Standing in whose name' be substituted."

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): Sir, the honourable member must have pursued it by another amendment saying "in whose custody."

Mr. Speaker: The Honourable Minister is not inclined to accept the amendment.

The question is:

"That the Schedule stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

The Schedule was added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I have only one comment to make. With regard to the misunderstanding that has been created I have a duty to explain my position. In fact much irrelevant discussion, (has already taken place. The question is not accession,) because it is already an accomplished fact and it is not in dispute. The only question is where the property should be vested. As was clearly explained by the Honourable Minister on a previous occasion, vesting does not really destroy the right of anyone. It is only a formal legal matter. If there is any man who is interested in it his title will remain unaffected. It is only the administrator or manager that has been given the power to administer. In these circumtances I seek a clarification whether it is so. Where the title is clearly investigated by the Department and if the property really belonged to the person in whose name it stands his case should be considered. The effect of this Bill is not to destroy the title but to provide a machinery by which the property can be properly administered.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Title and the Preamble stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

The Title and the Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: Sir, I move:

"That the Bill, as amended, be passed."

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill, as amended, be passed."

The motion was adopted.

UNITED PROVINCES PROVINCIAL ARMED CONSTABULARY (EXTENSION OF LAWS) BILL.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel (Minister for Home Affairs and the States): Sir, I move.

"That the Bill to apply the law in force in the United Provinces relating to the United Provinces Provincial Armed Constabulary to members of the said Constabulary when serving outside the United Provinces, be taken into consideration."

This is a simple measure which has been necessitated from the fact that some of the U.P. Armed Constabulary have been brought to Delhi, and occasions have arisen when they have had to be moved for assistance in other areas outside the Province. Normally, the Act operates within the Provinces, and therefore when this Constabulary is taken out of the Province that Act does not apply for ordinary disciplinary purposes. For that purpose it becomes necessary that provision should be made of the nature contemplated in this small measure. I do not think any explanation or any debate is necessary on this. It is only intended for the purpose of giving disciplinary powers in respect of the forces that have been brought into areas outside the Provinces with the consent of the Provincial Government, during the period they are serving outside. Sir, I move.

Mr. Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the Bill to apply the law in force in the United Provinces relating to the United Provinces Provincial Armed Constabulary to members of the said Constabulary when serving outside the United Provinces, be taken into consideration."

Shri H. V. Kamath (C. P. and Berar: General): Mr. Speaker, this Bill which the Honourable the Home Minister has just moved before the House seeks to accord statutory validation or recognition to an Ordinance which in its turn arose out of the employment of the United Provinces Provincial Armed Constabulary in Delhi or outside the Province during the last few months. If I remember aright, some units of the Central Provinces police force also were sent to Delhi during the disturbed months after the partition of India on 15th August 1947, and I believe some of them served in Delhi for a number of months. To my mind a cardinal principle arises in connection with this Bill and that is this. In the Statement of Objects and Reasons, the second sentence reads: "It was considered that the law applicable to the members of this force in the United Provinces in respect of their disciplinary control should be applicable to them when they are serving outside the United Provinces." May I ask the Honourable the Home Minister whether he does not consider that the time is ripe now for having one law, despite the fact that police is a provincial subject, so far as disciplinary control is concerned, to be applicable to all the police forces all over India? The other day the Honourable the Home Minister himself in a speech—I do not remember whether it was at Baroda or Kathiawar or somewhere else, but the Press reported it—stated that he was, I believe, opposing or castigating those who were propagating very sedulously fissiparous and disruptive tendencies of various kinds in India,—he said that he was looking forward to the day when the whole of India would be administered as one unit. I welcome this idea propounded in his speech very recently and I whole-heartedly hope that that idea will be realised in his own life-time and that the whole of India will be administered as one unit ere long. I would say that we should take the first step in this regard and that is this, that so far as the security services are concerned, that is to say police and the army—there is one law for the whole Indian army—with the integration of the Indian States and with the fast developing and evolving unity of India it is high time we had laws which were common to all the police forces all over India in all the Provinces, especially so far as their discipline is concerned. To my mind in the future many contingencies and emergencies may arise when we may have to send police forces from one Province to another, and it is necessary for the integration of India also. Just as since a few years ago all the so-called Imperial Services used to be regarded as all-India services for matters of appointments and transfers and general control, so I think we must make a beginning with the security—law and order—services that they should be governed by uniform laws so far as their discipline and control are concerned, all over India. I would therefore request the Honourable the Home Minister to throw light on these two points: firstly, whether any of the units of the C.P. Police which were sent to Delhi during the disturbed months following the partition of India, are still working in Delhi or in any outside Province, and if that be so by what law their disciplinary control is governed. As the Bill refers only to the U.P. Provincial Armed Constabulary I want to know whether any of the other Provinces have sent their police to Delhi or outside their Provinces to function in times of emergency which arose recently, and if that be the case what law is to be applied in regard to their disciplinary control. Secondly, I would very much like that he should tell the House how he proposes to proceed in the matter of integrating these security services, the law and order services. Just as the Army is one and governed by one law I would very much welcome his move, if he intends to take it at an early date, to integrate the police which is another key service or security service. If there had been a uniform law governing the disciplinary control of the police in India, there would not have been any necessity for a Bill of this nature. If there is no such law now, and if there is going to be no such law in the future, then in future when another Province sends a few units to Delhi or to an outside Province it may be necessary to bring a new Bill before the House and get it passed into law so as to make it applicable to that particular force sent to operate outside the Province. Therefore, is it not necessary to have a uniform law applicable to the disciplinary control of the police forces all over India? And therefore I would request him to throw light on this point: whether he intends to go ahead with the unification of the administration of the Indian police force—an idea which he propounded in one of his recent speeches—and if he does so, whether he will take action, so far as this matter is concerned, at an early date. I support the Bill.

Srijut Robini Kumar Chaudhuri (Assam: General): I have no intention Sir, of inflicting any speech on the House; I rise only to seek certain clarifications. I am sure, Sir, everybody now realises that after the independence of India Delhi has become a City of very supreme importance, and it is also clear that the Delhi police force has to be largely augmented in order to maintain peace in the capital. That being so, I do not understand why instead of raising the necessary police strength, a position is being envisaged for the future where we have to borrow the police from the neighbouring Provinces.

Then, I have noticed in the papers that the United Provinces Government have decided to disband some of their Constabulary. If there is any truth in that information I would much rather prefer that instead of having a legislation of this kind the Delhi Police ought to absorb in their force the constables who were borrowed either from the C.P. or from the U.P.

Furthermore, if there is any necessity of borrowing police from anywhere, I suppose the best place from where they can be borrowed is Bihar. In our own Province we have recruited a fairly large number of them. Their general build, their upturned moustaches, their whiskers, are sufficient to create terror in the minds of any mischief-mongers. (An Honourable Member: Is that personal experience?). My honourable friend the Honourable the Deputy Prime Minister must have noticed these constables while on his tour in Assam. They are, of course, unable to catch any thieves because thieves run away even at their sight. But they are very polite, they are very gentle. I have noticed that before they make any lathi charge—mild lathi charge—they always caution the crowd by saying “Rana jara se hat juyige”; they say, “Gentlemen, please move a little”. That sort of police, I submit, Sir, both for the purpose of ornamentation as well as for competent service should be preferred to the general U.P. Constabulary whose members I have noticed are generally thin and slender-looking because of the food which they take i.e., the vegetarian food which they generally take. In Bihar there is no such scruple; the constables there are very strong and well-built and their general outlook is very good. That being so, they can be treated as well as the Army and I would respectfully request the honourable author of this Bill to take that view of the matter into consideration.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena (U.P.: General): I had no intention of interfering in the debate, but my friend Mr. Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri has cast a reflection on the manhood of the U. P. and he thinks that the Bihar people are more formidable looking. I personally think that if he had borrowed some U. P. people in Assam he would probably not have got this impression. I think he tell us all this because the Bill gives a sort of a special praise to the U. P.

The point made by him that the Central Government should keep its own police force in Delhi is, I think, not proper. Delhi is a small Province and if it is to have a special police force it will probably have to spend much. It requires a big police force only on occasions, and therefore it is natural that it should draw on the U. P. which is so near and which can supply its requirements. I therefore think that the proposition of a standing police force in Delhi is not feasible. We do not require it here always—we require it only on occasions; therefore this Bill which only extends the U. P. Act to the police when they are used in Delhi also, is quite fair and proper.

The other point raised by my friend Mr. Kamath, of having a uniform law for police all over India, is one which we should consider. It is an important point, but I think it is a bigger question and this Bill does not raise it.

[At this stage Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair, which was then occupied by Mr. Deputy Speaker (Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar)].

I hope when the Honourable Minister makes his speech he will give us some idea of his own intention of having a uniform law all over India about the police. I think it will be much better, but it is a thorny question: the question of provincial autonomy will come in and other question will come in. But still I do agree that we do want it as soon as possible uniformity is always good.

[Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena]

I support this Bill and hope that my friend Mr. Robini Kumar Chaudhury will not be jealous because U.P. has been given this privilege.

The Honourable Shri Satyanarayan Sinha (Minister of State): Sir, I move:

"That the question be now put."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That the question be now put."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: Sir, as one or two points have been raised I should like to answer them. My honourable friend Mr. Kamath has raised a question whether it would not be advisable to have one unified law for and control of the police all over India, or over the security measures. It is a very big question and I do not know that the Provinces would approve of it. But certainly so far as the Army is concerned, the attempt in that direction to have uniform command and control all over the forces including the forces in the States, is under consideration and steps are being taken towards that end. But so far as the police is concerned it is a different matter.

I have no recollection of my having made any reference of that kind in any of my speeches. It is true that I am advising uniformity of law so far as the police are concerned, or unification as far as possible in the direction of police laws, but to have the police under one discipline and one command all over India is a matter on which those who are advocates of provincial autonomy will dissent and probably it may not be advisable.

But this measure is a simple one. Whether we should enrol police from a particular province or not is not the question. I had instructed the Provinces some time back, long before the police action was taken in Hyderabad, asking the Provinces to enrol, train, discipline and have a good police force so that they may not have to depend upon military assistance in their Provinces, and that for internal law and order they must rely on their own police. I am glad to say that all the provinces took that action in the matter and U. P. was in the forefront. They have raised a very large police force. Unfortunately, in the city of Delhi conditions are different. Delhi suffers from various difficulties. One is that after the partition of Punjab and Sind, a large evacuee population has come to Delhi and among them a large number of restless and resourceless people have come here. In addition, some undesirables who left Punjab in those days have also found place here, where it is comparatively easy to commit robbery and pick-pocketing and other resources are available for making easy money. The Police force was also completely disrupted in those days and a large number, or perhaps a majority of them, were in a mood to desert and actually deserted; they have gone. So we have to begin from the scratch. If we enrol new police from the refugees, they are not easily disciplined and during occasions of communal troubles, to use refugee police to suppress them is a difficult matter. When we found that attempts were made in Delhi to start campaigns of disruption we were in need of police, which could not be trained immediately. To have a disciplined police was a necessity and therefore during those periods of trouble we asked the C. P. Government to come to our help and they readily gave us help. In two or three months' time, when the trouble was over that force was returned to the C. P. Government with thanks and we acknowledged our gratitude for the help they gave. Now, at this stage, we did not want to trouble the province again, and as the U. P. Government have trained a very large police force—indeed to such an extent that the reports are that they want to disband some of it—we asked for some armed companies and they readily gave us this assistance. We found by experience that the officer in command who comes from U. P. could take no disciplinary action against his own men, because the law governing the U. P. Police in the province of U. P., so far as disciplinary action in that force here is concerned, does not apply outside U. P. Therefore, as an emergency measure some action was necessary and it is only for this purpose that this Bill has been introduced. It may be necessary to send another batch of police to Ajmer, because we have these two or three Centrally Administered Areas. We are recruiting our Police but it takes a good long time to train and discipline this force. It must be remembered that this is armed constabulary, it is not the ordinary police which is used for patrolling or lathi charge or such "gentlemanly" purposes. This is a different kind of police. Therefore we have to take special care, and it takes a long time to train such police. This measure does not affect all the provinces. It is only for a small area where these police are that this measure has been brought. So I move that the Bill be taken into consideration.

Shri H. V. Kamath: With regard to the important question of the national integration of the police forces to which the Honourable Minister averted in his speech, does he think that the provinces will be so refractory as not to accept common rules for even the discipline and training of these forces. I do not think that the provinces will be so perverse as not to accept a common code for discipline and training. I think the House would be very grateful to the Honourable Minister if he took an early step in this direction.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: It is not a question of the provinces being refractory. I do not contemplate that any province would go against the wishes of the Central Government. (Shri H. V. Kamath: "Hear, hear."). The question is whether the Central Government would be prepared to encroach upon the autonomy of the provinces.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill to apply the law in force in the United Provinces relating to the United Provinces Provincial Armed Constabulary to members of the said Constabulary when serving outside the United Provinces, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We shall now take the Bill clause by clause. There is no amendment to clause 2 or 3. I shall therefore put them both together.

The question is:

"That clauses 2 and 3 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 2 and 3 were added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and the Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: Sir, I move:

"That the Bill be passed."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the Bill be passed."

Shri H. V. Kamath: Sir, I would only say this by your leave, that with due deference to the statement made by the Honourable the Home Minister, I do not think that the provinces would regard any move in the direction of national integration of the police forces—which is a very important matter in present day India—as an encroachment on their field of autonomy. I do not think that the provinces would regard it as an encroachment, but whether the Centre is prepared to move in that direction or not, is a different matter, but as far as the provinces are concerned, I do not think they will look upon it in that light. I would only request the Honourable the Home Minister at least to ascertain the views of the provinces in this matter, and if the provinces are amenable to such control, to proceed in that direction, and I am sure the nation will be grateful to him for this essential development of integration of important security forces.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: I do not think I have any thing to add to what I have already said. I have no doubt that the provinces would not appreciate the idea at present, nor would the Central Government appreciate the idea of asking the provinces to have uniform disciplinary rules and regulations and also to have one uniform police all over the country. The provinces have a certain amount of latitude, each province has different circumstances and different conditions, and must be able to decide what is good for it. As I have already said, so far as the military is concerned, we are moving in that direction, but so far as the police is concerned, it is better to leave that latitude to the provinces as it is.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill be passed."

The motion was adopted.

SEAWARD ARTILLERY PRACTICE BILL

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh (Minister for Defence): Sir, I move:

"That the Bill to provide facilities for carrying out seaward artillery practice, be taken into consideration."

Sir, as stated in the 'Statement of Objects and Reasons', in order to maintain the efficiency of the armed forces, it is necessary to provide artillery practice to them. At present such facilities are provided for in the Manoeuvres, Field Firing and Artillery Practice Act, 1938, only for clearing ranges for field firing and artillery practice on land; such facilities do not exist as far as seaward practice is concerned. During the war, this difficulty was overcome by rules framed under the Defence of India Rules. But with the lapse of the Defence of India Act, these rules do not exist now, and it has therefore, become necessary to bring forward this measure in order to maintain the efficiency of the forces.

Sir, this is a non-controversial measure and it was placed before the Standing Committee of the Legislature, and some of that Committee's suggestions have also been considered and incorporated in this Bill which is now before the House.

Notice has been given of some amendments and I propose to accept some of them which do not go contrary to the Bill. Others I am afraid, I will not be able to accept. I do not think it is necessary for me to take the time of the House any more, as this is a simple measure which is absolutely non-controversial.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill to provide facilities for carrying out seaward artillery practice, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Clause 2 of the Bill. Is there any amendment which the Honourable Minister accepts?

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: No.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): Yes, I have an amendment. The word 'publication' in part (b) of sub-clause (2) seems to be an interloper and it seems to me that it should be omitted.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: I am not in a position to accept this amendment, because on examination I find that it is not acceptable.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I may be permitted to move the amendment, and then the House can consider it. Sir, I move:

"That in part (b) of sub-clause (2) of clause 2 of the Bill, the word 'publication' be omitted".

Sir, Sub-clause (2) runs thus:

(2) In the application of this Act to any Acceding State—

(a) * * * *

(b) all references to the Collector or other authority entrusted with any functions by or under this Act or to the official Gazette shall be construed as references to such appropriate officer, authority or official publication as may be specified in this behalf by the Government of the Acceding State."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: But if you omit the word 'publication' you leave behind only 'official' coming after 'officer, authority'. Official there will be duplication. What is the difference between officer, authority and official.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Then does it mean an official Gazette? Is it a reference to an official publication?

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: Yes.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Then I do not press it.

Shri S. V. Krishnamoorthy Rao (Mysore State): Sir, sub-clause (1) (d) states: "vessel" includes any ship, boat, country craft or any other description of vessel. I move:

"That in part (d) of sub-clause (1) of clause 2 of the Bill, for the words 'any other description of vessel', the words 'any other sea-faring vessel or similar description' be substituted."

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: No, this amendment is not acceptable.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That Clause 2 stand part of the Bill".

The motion was adopted.

Clause 2 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Then we come to clause 3.

Shri S. V. Krishnamoorthy Rao: Sir, I move:

"That in part (b) of sub-clause (3) of clause 3 of the Bill, for the words 'some newspaper circulating in and in the language commonly understood', the words 'local vernacular newspapers having the largest circulation' be substituted."

Sir, the object of the clause is to give the widest publicity to the notification and for this it is necessary that it should be published in the vernacular papers.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: We propose to give the widest publicity, and so this notification will be published in the newspapers which are read in those areas also. There is no intention of publishing it only in English papers. It will be published in vernacular papers also.

Shri S. V. Krishnamoorthy Rao: But in the clause it is in the singular. It speaks of publication, "in some newspaper".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: But singular always means plural also. Newspaper means also newspapers. I suppose the honourable member does not intend to press his motion.

I find notice of these amendments was received only just now. Notice was received only to-day at 11 A.M.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: And so I could not get them examined at all. As I said, I propose to accept two or three amendments and they will cover the points made out in their amendments by other Members.

लाला अचिन्त राम : मैं यह तरमीम पेश करना चाहता हूँ :

Lala Achint Ram (East Punjab: General): I beg to move the following amendment:]

"That in part (b) of sub-clause (3) of clause 3 of the Bill, after the word 'specified', the words 'and also by beat of drums' be inserted."

यह बड़ी सदी तरमीम है और अगर मोहतरम वजीर साहब इस को कबूल कर लें, तो मैं इस पर कोई तकरीर न करूँ ।

(This is a very simple amendment. In case the Honourable Minister accepts it I shall make no speech in its support.)

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: I accept this amendment.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava (East Punjab: General): If this amendment is accepted, then the word 'either' at the very beginning of sub-clause (b) cannot stand there, because you have the word 'also' coming on later on. If you want to retain 'either' at the beginning, then you have to drop out 'also' coming in the words 'and also by beat of drums'.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: If by accepting this amendment, 'either' becomes unnecessary, it will be removed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The word 'either' occurring at the start may be omitted, if the amendment of Lala Achint Ram is accepted. That will be an ancillary change.

Shri R. K. Sidhva (C. P. and Berar: General): And for the word 'or' at the end, we may have to use the word 'and'.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes. Then shall I put the amendment to vote? The question is:

"That in part (b) of sub-clause (3) of clause 3 of the Bill, after the word 'specified', the words 'and also by beat of drums' be inserted".

And I also take it that Lala Achint Ram would like that the word 'either' occurring in the beginning be omitted, and also that the word 'or' occurring after the word "specified" be changed to "and".

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: If it is a consequential change, I accept it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Or I would suggest the words "by beat of drum or in any other manner"

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: But the mover wants all the three methods, publication in the Gazette, publication in the papers and also by beat of drum.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No. He says it may be done by beat of drum "or in such other manner as may be prescribed." But I think we can have "and" or "or" in the sentence.

Shri C. Subramaniam (Madras: General): Sir, the words "and in such other manner as may be prescribed" will include beat of drum and tom-toms also.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister accepts it.

The question is:

"That in part (b) of sub-clause (3) of clause 3 of the Bill, after the word 'specified', the words 'and also by beat of drums' be inserted".

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in part (b) of sub-clause (3) of clause 3 of the Bill, the word 'either' be omitted".

The motion was adopted.

Prof. Shibhan Lal Saksena (U.P.: General): I have not given notice of any amendment. But this clause gives power to the provincial Government to do certain things. As this concerns the army, I think it necessary that the Centre also should have this power. There may be occasions when things may have to be done by the Central Government itself. Provinces may not always be amenable to the Centre. To guard against such a contingency, in a matter concerning the army, it is necessary that the Centre also should have this power under clause 3.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: Sir, I think the form in which the clause stands is clear. The provincial Governments, by themselves will not take any action. It is only when we move them that they will take action.

Prof. Shibhan Lal Saksena: As this is an army question, I think the Central Government should have power for itself also in this matter of the artillery practice.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: Sir, the clause may be allowed to stand as it is.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: Sir, the position is clear. If the Central Government wants, the Provincial Government concerned will notify. No conflict between them will arise. All that the Government has to do is to send a notification and ask the Collector of the place to give it publicity. The people will then vacate the place and there will be no danger. The Central Government authorises the artillery practice and the provincial Government will notify it. I do not see how a possible conflict can arise.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 3, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 3, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Shri S. V. Krishnamoorthy Rao: I move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 4 of the Bill, for the word 'Where', occurring in line 1, the word 'After' be substituted."

I think the artillery practice should be begun only after the notification is issued.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: I accept the amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shri Krishnamoorthy Rao may move his next amendment also. The word 'and' at the end of sub-clause (1)(a) has to be removed and inserted after the word 'practices' in sub-clause (1)(b).

Shri S. V. Krishnamoorthy Rao: Sir, I move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 4 of the Bill,—

(i) the word 'and' occurring at the end of part (a) be omitted and part (a) be re-lettered as part (b); and

(ii) part (b) be re-lettered as part (a) and the word 'and' be added at the end."

[Shri S. V. Krishnamoorthy Rao]

Sir, I think the provision for the prohibition of entry and restricting the use of a notified area as found in part (b) should be made first and then only orders mentioned in (a) to carry out the artillery practice should issue and as such shown in the clause.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: I accept this amendment also.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will now put the amendments to the House. The question is—

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 4 of the Bill,—

- (i) for the word 'When', occurring in line 1, the word 'After' be substituted;
- (ii) the word 'and' occurring at the end of part (a) be omitted and part (a) be re-lettered as part (b); and
- (iii) part (b) be re-lettered as part (a) and the word 'and' be added at the end."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I have an amendment to this clause. I move:

"That in part (b), re-lettered as part (a), of sub-clause (1) of clause 4 of the Bill, for the word 'practices', occurring at the end, the word 'practice', be substituted."

In part (1) (a) of this clause the singular has been used. Here therefore we need not have the plural. The provision in the General Clauses Act will supply the plural if there is need for it in any case. The Honourable Minister is willing to accept this amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in part (b), re-lettered as part (a), of sub-clause (1) of clause 4 of the Bill, for the word 'practices', occurring at the end, the word 'practice', be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: Sir, I move:

"That in part (b), re-lettered as part (a), of sub-clause (1) of clause 4 of the Bill, for the word 'is' occurring in line 4, the word 'remain', be substituted."

In 4(1) (b) it is said: "give directions prohibiting or restricting the use of the notified area or any part thereof including the use of any part of the area of the sea by any vessel, and take such further measures as may be necessary to ensure that no unauthorised person enters, passes over or is in the notified area." I want that this word 'is' is substituted by the word "remains", because the requisite thing is that no person should be allowed to remain.

With your permission, I will suggest one amendment more, which is in clause 4(2). "The Officer Commanding the forces engaged in any such practice may declare any portion of the notified area as a danger zone, ..." I want that the word "as" be substituted by the words "to be" as you will find similar words are used in clause 6(3): "Compensation payable under sub-section (2) shall include compensation for the removal from any portion of a notified area declared to be a danger zone ..." I think it would read better if the word "as" be substituted by "to be". I move:

I move:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 4 of the Bill, for the word 'as', occurring in line 2, the words 'to be' be substituted."

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: I see no objection.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in part (b) re-lettered as part (a) of sub-clause (1) of clause 4 of the Bill, for the word 'is' occurring in line four, the word 'remain' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 4 of the Bill, for the word 'as' occurring in line two, the words 'to be' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Lala Achint Ram: Sir I move:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 4 of the Bill, for the word 'Commanding', wherever it occurs, the word 'commanding' be substituted."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This would not be allowed to be moved.

लाला अचिन्त राम : इसमें मैं यह कहना चाहता हूँ कि जहाँ कमांडिंग कैपिटल "C" से लिखा है वहाँ स्माल के साथ होना चाहिये । अगर यह मंजूर न हो तो ऐसे ही कर लीजिये । मेरे बड़े अंगरेजीखान होने का दावा नहीं है लेकिन आप चाहें तो छोटा कर लें । अगर हिन्दी में होता तो मुझे कोई शिकायत नहीं होती । लेकिन यह अंगरेजी में है इस लिये आप इसे छोटा बड़ी रखना मान लीजिये । लेकिन अगर आप Commanding का "C" छोटा करना नहीं चाहते तो Commar.ding के पीछे "of" लगा दीजिये ताकि फिकरा साफ और ठीक हो जावे ।

(English translation of the above speech.)

Lala Achint Ram: Sir, I beg to submit that wherever the word "Commanding" is written with a capital "C" there small "c" may be substituted. If you disagree then the change may not be made. I donot claim to be an authority on English language, but if you agree then small "c" may be substituted. Had it been in Hindi I would not have any objection, but as the Bill is in English so you may agree to make the change from capital to small. But if you disagree to substitute small "c" in "Commanding" then kindly add the word "of" after it so that the sentence may become clear and intelligible.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There was a ruling by Mr. Speaker that all these amendments will be carried out by the draftsman, i.e., regarding the capital, comma and so on. I hope the honourable member is not anxious to press it.

Lala Achint Ram: I have moved my amendment. The Honourable Minister promised to accept my amendment and he is going back on his word.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: No, Sir.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 4, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 4, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Shri O. V. Alagesan (Madras: General): I desire to have a clarification from the Honourable Minister with regard to payment of compensation. The entire coast line is dotted with small villages of fishermen who go out in country craft into the sea for fishing purposes and make out their livelihood. Under clause 3 they will be prohibited from doing so for a day or some days consecutively, it may be even for a week and that means they will be deprived of their livelihood and it will be interference with their rights and privileges within the meaning of section 5. In such cases it is but just and necessary that compensation should be paid. I should like to know whether compensation in such a case is contemplated and I should like to have the assurance of the Honourable Minister that these poor people would be paid compensation.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: It has been made quite clear that wherever these fishermen or other people have to vacate their places, they will be given compensation, but it will be for the local authorities to decide whether they have suffered any loss or not. It is very difficult for me to say, but as far as we are concerned, our intention is to compensate them adequately.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari (Madras: General): Not for loss of livelihood?

Shri O. V. Alagesan: It is interference of rights.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is evidently covered by the words "or interference with rights or privileges". Interference with the avocation also come under compensation.

Shri O. V. Alagesan: It is better if it is made clear and instructions given to Provincial Governments that compensation in such cases ought to be given; otherwise they may interpret it in a different way and the poor people will be left without anything.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is the intention of the Mover of the Bill to make it so.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: That is why we have kept this absolutely open and wherever the compensation is due, we want to give them due compensation, but it is very difficult, to say, for instance, the cases which the honourable member has made.

Shri S. V. Krishnamoorthy Rao: Amendments Nos. 13 and 14 are verbal amendments and I have tabled them to bring the phraseology in tune with the earlier phraseology.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: I accept amendments Nos. 13 and 14.

Shri S. V. Krishnamoorthy Rao: Sir, I move:

- (i) "That in clause 5 of the Bill, for the word 'practices' occurring in line 4, the word 'practice' be substituted".
- (ii) "That in clause 5 of the Bill, for the word 'and' occurring in line 5, the word 'or' be substituted".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

- (i) "That in clause 5 of the Bill, for the word 'practices' occurring in line 4, the word 'practice' be substituted".
- (ii) "That in clause 5 of the Bill, for the word 'and' occurring in line 5, the word 'or' be substituted".

The motion was adopted.

Shri C. Subramaniam: Clause 5 as it reads like this: interference with rights or privileges "arising from such practices" and it would appear as if "arising from such practices" qualifies the words, "rights or privileges." In my opinion it is not right.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It refers to any damage to person or property.

Shri C. Subramaniam: It should be so but as it is, it would read as if "arising from such practices," governs "rights or privileges."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Possibly a comma may be necessary.

Shri C. Subramaniam: That may be considered as some alteration is necessary, to make the meaning clear.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: Two points have been brought forward. The first speaker said that it may happen that the fishermen etc., who live there may not be given compensation as a result of notification and the other thing which has been pointed out by Shri Subramaniam is that there can be two interpretations. I sent amendment No. 9 and I beg to submit that supposing the practice does not take place, what happens. As a matter of fact a notification is issued and the rights of people are interfered with; they have to remove their effects and the practice must take place thereafter. Some damage or some interference with the rights and privileges may arise without the actual practice having taken place. I have not moved the amendment so far as I was assured that usually when a notification is issued practice does take place, but if there are difficulties as pointed out by other members, I submit that notice of this amendment be taken, and if the Honourable Minister is agreeable, that these words would mean that even after the issue of notification there is no practice in fact, but some damage or interference with the rights has taken place, then such a case will be covered and those poor people will be protected; I would ask that these words "consequent upon such notification of practice" be accepted for the words 'arising of such practices'.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: As I explained to my honourable friend, it is not possible to accept the amendment. I explained to him that we give notice only when we want to carry out practices. Once the notice is given the practice is carried out. It may be that instead of five to six days, the practice is cut down to one or two days.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: I have not yet moved my amendment. I have only pointed out the difficulties.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The notification may be issued and practice may be started fifteen or twenty days later. The damages, however, will be calculated from the date on which the practices start. But what about the notification. From that day there will be loss of occupation of profession. For fifteen days no one will be able to enter that area.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: I am not quite sure, but I think it is covered.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I leave it to the Honourable Minister and the House.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: In my opinion it is quite all right. "Arising from such practices" means as a result of the proposed practice. If there is any damage it will be paid for. I only fear that a practice may not take place. But the Honourable Minister has assured me that no such contingency will take place.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That Clause 5, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 5, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Shri S. V. Krishnamoorthy Rao: Sir, I move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 6 of the Bill, for the words 'area utilised for the purpose of seaward artillery practice', the words 'notified area' be substituted."

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: I accept it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 6 of the Bill, for the word 'area utilised for the purpose of seaward artillery practice', the words 'notified area' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Lala Achint Ram: Sir, I move.

"That in sub-clause (4) of clause 6 of the Bill, for the words 'fifteen days', the words 'one month' be substituted."

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: I accept it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (4) of clause 6 of the Bill, for the words 'fifteen days', the words 'one month' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Shri S. V. Krishnamoorthy Rao: Sir, move:

"That for sub-clause (4) of clause 6 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

"(4) Any claimant aggrieved by the decision of the Revenue Officer either on the ground of refusal to award compensation or its inadequacy may within one month of the communication of the decision to him, prefer an appeal to the Collector of the district against such decision."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That for sub-clause (4) of clause 6 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

"(4) Any claimant aggrieved by the decision of the Revenue Officer either on the ground of refusal to award compensation or its inadequacy may within one month of the communication of the decision to him, prefer an appeal to the Collector of the district against such decision."

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: I am not in a position to accept it.

Shri S. V. Krishnamoorthy Rao: In that case I ask leave of the House to withdraw.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the honourable member the leave of the House to withdraw?

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: I would draw your attention to clause 6 (2) which reads:

"The Revenue Officer so deputed shall consider all claims for compensation under section 5 and determine, on local investigation and after affording the claimant an opportunity of being heard, the amount of compensation, if any, which shall be awarded in each case; and shall disburse on the spot to the claimant compensation so determined as payable."

For the words "shall be awarded" I would like that the words 'should be, awarded' be substituted because disbursement follows. The word "awarded" does not mean any disbursement in fact.

The other thing is that in Clause 6(3) two kinds of compensation are mentioned: one "removal from any portion of a notified area declared to be a danger zone of any person, property or vessel." The other is "for any damage sustained in the course of any such removal." If you read a little further on it says: "such compensation to be disbursed on the spot at not less than the minimum prescribed rates before the removal is enforced. My submission is that in so far as the question of compensation for removal is concerned, it can be given before the removal is enforced according to the minimum prescribed rates. So far as the question of damage sustained in the course of any such removal is concerned, that amount of damage can be known when a person has been removed. So this cannot be given beforehand. Therefore, the phrase "such compensation" should be amended as I have indicated in my amendment. Then it would mean that this part would be governed by the minimum prescribed rates so far as removal is concerned, and so far as the damage in the course of such movement goes, it will be a matter of enquiry and subsequently it will be payable.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: I think the honourable member is referring to the amendment from the new list. But I am not accepting it.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: But the point still remains and it is really putting the cart before the horse.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is a matter of substance. The Honourable Minister might consider it. I am anxious to see that the proper phraseology is used.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: As far as the phraseology is concerned, I have no objection to adjustment. But with regard to the difficulty pointed out by Pandit Bhargava, I want to say that we have agreed in this Bill to pay compensation. That means that part of the compensation will be paid before the removal: the other part will be paid after enquiring as to what the extent of damage is.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As things stand, the fact remains that any such compensation has to be disbursed on the spot both in sub-clauses (2) and (3) of Clause 6. This compensation will not be paid at less than the minimum prescribed rates before the removal is enforced.

This compensation is both for removal and damage during removal. The latter compensation refers to payment before removal.

Mr. Bhargava wants to modify the clause so that compensation for removal shall be paid in advance, leaving the other thing damage to be determined later on. This will be an improvement in language and would make it clearer. I think the Honourable Minister might consider the amendment.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: I have no objection that for 'removal', compensation should be paid in advance.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: Sir, I move:

"That in sub-clause (3) of clause 6 of the Bill, for the words 'such compensation to the words 'the compensation for removal will' be substituted."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (3) of clause 6 of the Bill, for the words 'such compensation to the words 'the compensation for removal will' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 6, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 6, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Clauses 7 and 8 were added to the Bill.

Shri S. V. Krishnamoorthy Rao: Sir, I submit that the notifications are made by the Government and published in the Official Gazette for the information of the public. I have tabled some amendments according to the phraseology used in other Bills.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: I am sorry I cannot accept them.

Shri S. V. Krishnamoorthy Rao: In that case I do not want to move them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 9 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 9 was added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and the Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Sardar Baldev Singh: Sir, I move:

"That the Bill, as amended, be passed."

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, the long title does not contain any punctuation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That will be considered by the draftsman. The question is:

"That the Bill, as amended, be passed."

The motion was adopted.

INDIAN EMIGRATION (AMENDMENT) BILL

The Honourable Shri Jawaharlal Nehru (Prime Minister and Minister for External Affairs and Commonwealth Relations): Sir, I beg to move.

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Emigration Act, 1922, be taken into consideration."

This Act originally dealt with what used to be called British India. Thereafter the words "British India" were changed and gave place to "the Provinces of India". Now the words 'Provinces of India' are not sufficient, because of the acceding States and there are a number of ports in these maritime states—Okah, Cochin and a number of others—and it has become necessary that the benefits conferred by this Bill on emigrants be extended to the emigrants proceeding through those ports.

The Bill is a very short one proposing to change the language. Section 1 is amended to read "It extends to the whole of India". There is a consequential change in section 31 and in other sections for the words 'the Provinces' wherever they occur the word 'India' is to be substituted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Emigration Act, 1922, be taken into consideration."

Shri H. V. Kamath (C. P. and Berar: General): Sir, while welcoming this measure may I request the Honourable the Prime Minister to enlighten the House upon a matter which though not strictly germane to the Bill, itself, yet, to my mind, arises out of the issue which has necessitated this measure? The Indian Emigration Act, 1922, was enacted at a time when emigration was confined to movement by sea, so far at least as India was concerned. Now we are living in the air age when emigration by air is no less common and no less frequent than emigration by sea. It may be that in the present day all emigrants by air, though embarking at an air port in an acceding state, have got to touch at a port in an Indian Province and so the control will be ultimately exercised at the air port in the Indian province but it is not at all unlikely that in the very near future it will be possible for emigrants to embark at an air port of an acceding state and proceed straight out of India. There are many big aerodromes and air ports in the States that have acceded to India. Baroda is one of them, which has expanded in recent times considerably and as regards control at these air ports it will become a very important subject in the near future. I am constrained to say, and with the deepest regret, that the control exercised at some of the ports is not what it should be or might be. There are serious allegations of lack of efficient control at some of the air ports in India, for instance, with regard to passengers migrating from India to Pakistan. Serious allegations have been made even in the very recent past that people emigrating from India to Pakistan manage to smuggle a lot of property in gold and silver, if not other material too. I would therefore request the Honourable the Prime Minister to tell us, when this subject of emigration from an airport in an acceding State becomes a live issue, whether it will be necessary to bring yet another Bill to amend this Indian Emigration Act of 1922 of whether it will not be desirable, and even salutary, here and now, to place on the statute book a new Emigration Act to apply to all kinds of emigration. Emigration by land is perhaps not very common, and perhaps there is enough control already being exercised in that regard, but as regards emigration by air, no less than emigration by sea, I would seriously suggest to the Honourable the Prime Minister to place on the statute book a comprehensive measure, scrapping the old Indian Emigration Act, because we are now legislating in the year 1949 which is a generation later than 1922 when the last Act was passed. It would be far more desirable to have on the statute book a measure which will control emigration by sea as well as by air—from a maritime port as well as from airports in the Provinces and in the acceding States. This will again, be conducive to the integration and unification of India which we all have so much at heart. Sir, I support the Bill.

The Honourable Shri Jawaharlal Nehru: Well, Sir, I confess that my limited mind and vision had not given thought to the wide vistas which my honourable friend has pointed out that arise from this Bill. This Bill simply seeks to get in all the States and put them on a par with the rest of India in regard to emigration. When this Act was originally passed in 1922 it was meant for the protection of emigrants because a large number of people wanted to exploit emigrants by making promises to them or otherwise inducing them to go abroad. They made some money, I suppose, from the people who wanted skilled or unskilled workers. So the Act was meant to protect these workers. It was not to prevent people from going, but to protect emigrants who were going out in large numbers, normally for work, outside India. That was the object of it. Now Mr. Kamath has brought in all manner of other considerations, of people going to Pakistan carrying gold and silver and other things. Those points may be considered in their proper context, but they have nothing to do with this Bill at all. Nor does air travel come into the picture. No emigrant of that type goes by air.

I agree with Mr. Kamath that it may be desirable for us to recast the whole Emigration law sometime or other. In fact the time has come when it is difficult to encourage or even to accept the fact of Indian labour or emigrants going abroad, because they are not received with open arms or treated well outside. Therefore we should not encourage this thing. This Bill was not intended to encourage but to discourage it. As for other methods of stopping people from going or coming, I suppose sometimes we are forced to do that. But I hope the time may come soon when there will be free movement between countries. We have had enough of passports, visas, police and other officers functioning, and it is becoming almost impossible for people to move about from one place to another. The wrong kind of person always manages to go. It is the right kind of person who is troubled by all these restrictions and the like. I hope honourable members will remember—perhaps Mr. Kamath is too young to know that—that there were no visas and passports necessary previously. It is only about thirty years ago or a little more that they came in. I hope that time will come again. Anyhow, so far as this Bill is concerned I submit that all these points do not arise.

Shri H. V. Kamath: On a point of information only, may I ask whether there was no visa or passport necessary when the Honourable the Prime Minister went to England first?

The Honourable Shri Jawaharlal Nehru: None.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Emigration Act, 1922 be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That clauses 2 to 4 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 2 to 4 were added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is an amendment by Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad to the long title that a full-stop be added at the end. It is a drafting one.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): As it is, it is a non-stop long title.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri (Assam: General): Sir, I want to speak on this. My honourable friend Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad, is taking it in a very light fashion. But it is not as light a matter as it looks at the first sight. For instance we have got to send drafts of Bills, and we ought to know what is exactly the correct form. In the Bill which has been moved by the Prime Minister he has not used the full-stop, but in the Bill which is being introduced by the Deputy Prime Minister, that is the Bill to provide for the control of the transfer of certain securities and for the issue of duplicate certificates in respect thereof, he has used the full-stop. When there is this difference of opinion between the Honourable the Prime Minister and the Honourable the Deputy Prime Minister we are bewildered, and I hope that it will be generally agreed that we must follow the Prime Minister. If you ask us to do that, we shall henceforward not use any full-stop at all.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That the Title and the Preamble stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

The Title and the Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Shri Jawaharlal Nehru: Sir, I move:

"That the Bill be passed."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill be passed."

The motion was adopted.

PROTECTIVE DUTIES (AMENDMENT) BILL

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy (Minister for Commerce): Sir, I move:

"That the Bill to amend the Protective Duties Act, 1946, be taken into consideration."

I venture to claim that this is the shortest Bill of this session and the least controversial. It merely seeks to extend the life of an Act from three years to five years. I wonder if honourable members found time to refer to the Act itself. This is an Act which was passed in April 1946 and it was given a life up to the 31st March 1949. It sought to give Government certain special powers to be exercised, if I may say so, in emergent circumstances for the protection of an industry where such protection has been recommended by the Tariff Board.

There are further certain conditions which should be fulfilled in any particular case before this special power can be used. First of all, an industry must be recommended for protection by the Tariff Board. Secondly, the Government must accept that recommendation. Thirdly, the next Legislative Session should not be near at hand, that is to say a long time will otherwise elapse before the decision of the Government to give effect to the recommendation of the Tariff Board, could be implemented by the summoning of the Legislative Session where that recommendation could be taken up for consideration. If, in such circumstances, Government came to think that the interests of the industry concerned would be seriously jeopardised unless immediate action were taken on the lines of the recommendation of the Tariff Board with which they agree, then only action could be taken by a notification under this Act; the notification binds, could prescribe no greater increase in the duty than any that may be recommended by the Tariff Board. Then an obligation is cast upon the Government to bring forward a measure at the earliest possible opportunity when the next Legislative Session begins and if no such measure is brought forward then the notification automatically lapses after two months of the cessation of the Legislative Session.

Now, I may tell the House that during all these three years or so when this particular Act has been in operation, there arose only one case in which action had to be taken under the Act by way of notification. It is not a provision that is likely to be used in every case, but having regard to the fact that a large number of applications are now pending with the Tariff Board and a larger number still are coming in for reference to the Tariff Board we do think that as a measure of precaution we should seek to extend the life of this measure for another two years so as to correspond more or less with the extended life of the Tariff Board itself. Sir, that is the object of this measure.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the Bill to amend the Protective Duties Act, 1946, be taken into consideration."

Shri R. K. Sidhva (C. P. and Berar: General): Sir, this Bill, as the Honourable Minister has stated, is a very simple one, simple in the sense that it only wants to change the figure from 1949 to 1951. But what are the implications of the original Bill for which an extension is sought to be made? At one stage it was certainly desirable, under the British rule, that our industries should be fully protected and we advocated for it from the housetops despite the higher prices and the very large protection given by the State from the tax-payers' money, because we did not want the foreign goods to be imported into this country.

But the times are now changed. I do not know whether Government have considered whether the question of protective duties and the reference to the Tariff Board should be revised. I know of industries, Sir, which are tottering and yet they are referred to the Tariff Board for protection. In the last Session a reference was made that small industries which could not stand on their own legs should not be given protection. This protection has an indirect and sometimes a direct bearing on inflation. The consumer goods imported from foreign countries, though they may be foreign, at times are cheaper than our own articles made in this country. Therefore, Government should give serious thought to this matter and see whether under the changed conditions and the inflationary position, it is desirable that industries should be given protection at the cost of the consumers and the State money.

This Bill says that the period should be extended up to 1951 so that the Tariff Board whose life has been extended by a period of two years, should get an opportunity to consider all the applications that may have been placed before the Board. I only contend that although the principle of the Bill is only to extend the period, I do hope that the Government will consider the points that I have brought to the notice of the Honourable Minister.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena (U. P.: General): Sir, I have been surprised at Mr. Sidhva's speech. Probably he has not properly understood the purpose of this Bill. This Bill merely gives to our Government the power which we gave to the foreign Government. In fact, it does not give protection to anybody or take out protection from anybody. It only authorises the Government to give protection when it sees that it is necessary in national interests. I am myself against indiscriminate protection and have enquired from the Honourable Minister just now whether he would give protection to certain industries like the sugar industry which I think no longer should have any protection in the old form.

But this Bill does not do any such thing. It does not give protection to any industry or extend protection. It only gives the Government power that for two years they shall have the authority that if they think that in national interests it is necessary to give protection to some industry, they can give it. I think we should arm our Government with this power especially when they will give protection only on recommendation from the Tariff Board and only when this Assembly is not in session—if it is in session then they will bring it before us. Besides, there are so many safeguards. Therefore I think Mr. Sidhva's speech was misconceived. Probably he never understood the implications of this Bill. I support the motion moved by Mr. Neogy and hope that the Bill will be passed unanimously and that my friend Mr. Sidhva will withdraw his opposition to it.

Babu Ramnarayan Singh (Bihar: General): Sir, my honourable friend Mr. Neogy says that the Bill is the shortest of all Bills to be submitted. To me it seems the most extraordinary Bill. To give protection to industries is not always profitable, especially to consumers. The Bill is intended to give powers to the Government to grant protection. It is rather to give protection by way of Ordinance. I can understand that in matters of law and order and such other emergencies, Government can get any amount of power to issue Ordinances, but in matters of protection for Government to get these powers, I cannot understand it. (An Honourable Member: "It is emergent protection".) Professor Shibban Lal Saksena says that this Bill is intended to give powers to our own Government, the powers which we gave to the foreign Government. Well, Sir, it is our own Government all right, but are we to give the Government all the powers? Then in one sentence we may give all the powers to the Government to do anything and we may go home.

In the matter of giving protection to industries I do not think such powers should be given to the Government. It was given up to 1949; let it be up to 1949. Every time the Government should come to the Assembly for such protection. They do not require such powers in such matters.

With these words, Sir, I hope my honourable friend will consider the matter in a more serious manner and will allow the Assembly to have powers to give protection. My friend says the Assembly will not be in 5 P.M. Session throughout but it will be in session at least twice a year. So in the interval of two or three months, if any industry does not get protection and if it fails—such industry ought to fail.

Honourable Members: It is past five. Let us adjourn now.

Babu Ramnarayan Singh: I shall resume my seat, but, Sir . . .

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member may continue tomorrow.

The Assembly then adjourned till a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock on Tuesday, the 8th February, 1949.

CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY OF INDIA (LEGISLATIVE) DEBATES

(PART II—PROCEEDINGS OTHER THAN QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.)

Tuesday, 8th February, 1949

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock, Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS (See Part I)

11-50 a.m.

DEATH OF MR. C. N. MUTHURANGA MUDALIAR.

Mr. Speaker: Before the House proceeds now to further business, I have to invite its attention to the sad demise of Mr. C. N. Muthuranga Mudaliar, who was an ex-Member of the old Central Assembly. He died at Madras on the 5th February. He was a Member of the old Central Assembly from November 22, 1934, to March 30, 1940 when he resigned. He was a prominent leader of the Congress in Madras, a President of the Tamil Nad Congress Committee, and a Member of the A.I.C.C. I request the House to stand in silence to respect the memory of the deceased.

PROTECTIVE DUTIES (AMENDMENT) BILL—concl'd.

Mr. Speaker: The House may now proceed with the further consideration of the following motion moved by the Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy yesterday:

"That the Bill to amend the Protective Duties Act, 1946, be taken into consideration."

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): Sir, I agree with the Honourable Minister that this Bill is necessary. There was a misunderstanding regarding the scope of the Bill. As the Honourable Minister himself explained the Bill intends to clothe the Government with power which power has already been given under the Act of 1946, to give protection for such industries as have been recommended to be protected by the Tariff Board, and at a time when the Assembly is not in session and a regular Bill could not be introduced and an Act passed by the Legislature. Instead of resorting to an Ordinance power is given under the previous Act to the Government to impose, by a notification protective duties for such industries as have been recommended by the Tariff Board. I welcome this measure for the reason that the power to pass Ordinances is not being invoked and after such a notification is issued, at the next session of the Assembly the matter should be placed before the Legislature for its acceptance and enactment. There are all these safeguards.

In addition, I would like to suggest some more power to enable the House, though not in Session, through its Standing Committee of the Department to which this matters relates—I mean the Standing Committee for Commerce—to go into the matter to see if the Tariff Board's recommendation in any particular case ought to be accepted or not. It may be that to convene a special Session of the Assembly may not be practicable before action is taken on the recommendation of the Tariff Board, but to convene a meeting of the Standing Committee relating to the Commerce Ministry may not be difficult as the Standing Committee does not consist of more than ten or eleven Members. So, this suggestion I would make for consideration by the Honourable Minister before action is taken in regard to any particular matter by way of imposing a protective duty.

I would also like that the previous precedents should be followed in regard to the printing and circulation of all reports sent by the Tariff Board in connection with recommendations as to whether particular protective duties are to be imposed or not. That was a constant feature in the previous Assembly under the previous Government, but on account of various difficulties that have arisen, like these constant strikes in the printing press, such reports have not been printed in recent times. Normal conditions have been restored and I do not see why these reports ought not to be printed and circulated before even the matter is placed before the Standing Committee or at any rate before the Government makes up its mind to impose protective duties or act upon the recommendations of the Tariff Board.

Thirdly, I would like that the Tariff Board should be asked to submit half-yearly reports regarding its work, the number of cases that were placed before the Board for its consideration and what action was taken on those matters. Many bodies have been brought into existence to assist the Government from day to day with respect to various matters where expert opinion is necessary, but those matters are not placed before the Assembly and the Assembly is very often denied opportunities to discuss them. No doubt when a Bill is introduced recommending the imposition of any protective duty we have an opportunity to discuss the recommendation of the Tariff Board; but whether a Bill is introduced or not we should generally like to have a record or statement made to the House regarding the work of the Tariff Board inasmuch as it is a very important function that the Tariff Board is performing.

I would also like to know in this connection as to how many industries are waiting for consideration before the Tariff Board, how many have been disposed of during the past year, how many are under consideration by Government. If any, have been considered, and why those matters are not now being placed before us. We have yet two and a half months during this Session if Government contemplate bringing forward any Bill for the purpose for which Government is seeking to have power extended by this amending Bill by a couple of years more than was provided under Act XVII of 1946. Otherwise I support the motion for consideration.

Shri B. Das (Orissa: General): Sir, I endorse the observations of the Honourable the Deputy Speaker that the Honourable the Minister for Commerce should instruct the Tariff Board to submit yearly a report on its activities. The Tariff Board is a Statutory Board now and it has to do certain regular revision and examination of the tariff question from time to time. Up to now, apart from the reports which the Tariff Board submits, we have not had a review of its work and also an opportunity of examining whether the statutory power we have given to it are ample or not. I do hope that the Honourable the Minister for Commerce will accept the suggestion made by the Honourable the Deputy Speaker.

Sir, I have no objection to the Bill. Government will have to have some time to examine the recommendations of the Tariff Board and I do not mind the time being extended to April 1951. On the last occasion we granted extension; I referred to the anomaly that the Tariff Board has no power to examine the Imperial Preferences included in the system of protective tariff. The question was again recently debated on the floor of this House and my honourable friend said that if the House gives a mandate to the Government that Imperial Preference should end, Government will accept it. I thought, Sir, that Government and we on this side are all one. Our visage must be reflected by the governmental action. Government is the executive of the House and we are from one party. Why is it that Government has had no time to make a reference to the Tariff Board to examine the problems or any other body whether the obnoxious Imperial Preference should end? It is pertinent for me to ask,—and the Honourable the Minister for Commerce may enlighten the House—whether the Tariff Board has any such idea in its mind or whether it is tied down to the chariot-wheel of old recommendations of the predecessors of the present Tariff Board who did not touch the issue of Imperial Preference which vitiates our protective tariff system. How can protective tariff work when England and certain British colonies and Dominions enjoy advantages simply because we were formerly part of the Empire known as the "British Empire" which is now ended? I hope, Sir, that the Honourable the Minister for Commerce will take this occasion to clarify the position of his Government whether they are alive to the great desire of the members of this House that Government should proceed in the matter and examine it from the point of view of a new agreement between Free India and Free England and whether for our national dignity such type of Imperial Preferences should not end at the earliest.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava (East Punjab: General): Sir, when the original Bill which is sought to be extended for two years more was before the House in 1946, an amendment was moved by me to the effect that the Government of the day, i.e. the then Government, should be obliged to take action on the report of the Tariff Board if the Standing Committee for Commerce concurs with the Government and that no discretion should be given to the Government not to give immediate effect to the report of the Tariff Board if the Standing Committee wanted it. In case the Standing Committee did not concur, then also the Government according to my amendment, was to be given powers to give effect to the Tariff Board in regard to any particular industry. Now, the situation is changed.

I am very glad to give my wholehearted support to the measure, but all the same, I would like to support the proposal of Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar that in every case in which the Executive takes action, it should consult the Standing Committee for Commerce. I may just read out the assurance given by the then Member for Commerce, Sir Azizul Haque, in this respect. He said:

"I have no hesitation in giving an assurance that such matters will be placed before the Standing Committee for Commerce. But I certainly feel that an amendment of this character is one which should not be on the Statute-Book. I give this assurance that every case will be placed before the Standing Committee for Commerce for their advice and I do hope that on that assurance my honourable friend (referring to myself) will find reasons not to press his amendment."

On the basis of this assurance, I said: "I beg leave to withdraw the amendment." This was in 1946 when the original Bill was passed. So I beg the Honourable Minister for Commerce to kindly agree that when our Government takes action, they will consult the Standing Committee for Commerce. This is all I have to submit.

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy (Minister for Commerce): I am very sorry that my honourable friend, Mr. Ramnarayan Singh, could not be present here to finish his unfinished speech. Now, I do not know—I hope he is not indisposed—but on looking through the proceedings of 1946 when this measure was under discussion in the then Legislature, I find that Mr. Ramnarayan Singh was one of the earliest speakers to give his unconditional support to this measure. I wonder whether he had forgotten what attitude he had taken up on the previous occasion, because his speech yesterday gave me the impression that he was wholly opposed to the present measure which is merely one to extend the operations of the measure with which he was in full agreement. I am very glad Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar who also participated in the discussion in 1946 has again repeated his support of this measure. The point to which reference was made both by him and also by Pandit Thakur Das came under careful consideration and I should like to point out certain practical difficulties. When a measure for protection is recommended by the Tariff

[Shri K. C. Neogy].

Board, that recommendation is examined not merely by the Ministry of Commerce, but actually action on the recommendation of the Tariff Board is decided upon as a result of discussions of three Ministries—'Commerce', 'Industry and Supply' and 'Finance'. Now, I do not know whether it would be proper to consult merely the Standing Committee attached to the Commerce Ministry before taking action upon the question of issuing a notification under this measure. But at the same time, I should not like to say that the Standing Committee should not at all be consulted on this account. I have pointed out one difficulty. There are several other difficulties also to which I need not refer at the present moment. However, my intention is to place this very issue before a meeting of the Standing Advisory Committee attached to the Ministry of Commerce. I should like to place all the various considerations before that body, and then decide upon the appropriate course of action.

Sir, several suggestions were made by my honourable friend Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar and also by Mr. Das as regards the supply of information about the activities of the Tariff Board and other connected matters. I am in sympathy with much of what has been said on this particular subject, and I will take the earliest opportunity of furnishing such information as can be collected at an early date, for the information of this House. I should not, therefore, like to give any off-hand replies to the various points raised. I hope to be able to circulate a statement to the members of this House, covering as many of those points as possible before the present session terminates.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:—

"That the Bill to amend the Protective Duties Act, 1946, be taken into consideration." The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:—

"That clause 2 stand part of the Bill." The motion was adopted.

Clause 2 was added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and the Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy: Sir, I move:—

"That the Bill be passed."

Mr. Speaker: The question is:—

"That the Bill be passed." The motion was adopted.

SCHEDULED SECURITIES (HYDERABAD) BILL

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel (Minister for Home Affairs and the States): Sir I move:—

"That the Bill to provide for the control of the transfer of certain securities and for the issue of duplicate securities in respect thereof, be taken into consideration."

The House is, I think aware of the history of the loan of rupees twenty crores which was made by the Hyderabad Government in December 1947. This loan was negotiated at a time when the Standstill Agreement between the Hyderabad Government and the Government of India was in existence, and when negotiations were going on for settling the future relationship between the Government of India and the Hyderabad Government after the termination of the Standstill Agreement. Without a word to us, or any kind of intimation to the Government of India, the Hyderabad Delegation—the Leader of the Hyderabad Delegation who was the Prime Minister of the Government of Hyderabad, was at that time negotiating for a loan of rupees twenty crores to be given to the Pakistan Government. Now, he entered into this financial transaction concealing these facts from us and transferred securities to the extent of rupees twenty crores which were held by the Hyderabad Government, to Pakistan. As soon as we came to know of it, we made our attitude quite clear to the then Hyderabad Government or Prime Minister that this was a clear breach of the Standstill Agreement between the Government of India and the Government of Hyderabad, and that the Government of Hyderabad would be responsible for all the consequences. As a result of that, he, the Prime Minister of Hyderabad negotiated with the Pakistan Government and came to an arrangement that the securities will not be cashed and that they will not be negotiated in any manner during the time the Standstill Agreement was in force.

SCHEDULED SECURITIES (HYDERABAD) BILL.

After this it was brought to the notice of the Government of India that an application was made to the Reserve Bank for the conversion of some of these securities into promissory notes of small denominations. Such a conversion was obviously intended for the purpose of disposing of the securities. That was, therefore, a fresh breach of the undertaking given by the Hyderabad Government.

In lieu of these securities, the Hyderabad Government were to receive securities of the Pakistan Government. We had evidence that the Hyderabad Government were making frantic efforts to purchase warlike materials, obviously with a view to prepare the Hyderabad Government militarily. Large blocks of Hyderabad Government's holdings of India Government's securities were also being sold. This could not but have a detrimental effect on the Indian market. To protect our interests, therefore, it became necessary to promulgate an Ordinance on the 1st of July, 1948 so as to prevent the sale or transfer of Government of India's securities held by, or on behalf of the Hyderabad Government, in the Hyderabad State Bank, including the securities worth rupees twenty crores which had been transferred to Pakistan.

Till, then, of course, we were not in full possession of facts leading to the negotiations of the transfer and of the part which was played by the various parties in this transaction. We have now irrefutable evidence to show that the then Prime Minister of the Hyderabad Government, Mr. Laik Ali, exceeded the instructions of His Exalted Highness the Nizam and the Council in regard to this transaction and concluded an agreement which was quite different from the one originally contemplated by the Nizam and his Council. I am saying this not in order to excuse or mitigate the breach of the Standstill Agreement, but only to bring out clearly the close and intimate relationship which then existed between the leading personalities in Hyderabad Government and the Pakistan Government whose Finance Minister is, of course, an ex-employee of the Nizam, and subsequently became his pensioner. In November, 1948, His Exalted Highness the Nizam declared that the transfer of securities worth rupees twenty crores to the Pakistan Government was beyond the competence of the Hyderabad Government and therefore, invalid. The Government of Hyderabad thereupon wrote to the Pakistan Government through us requesting them to return those securities. The Pakistan Government refused to do so on various grounds which were found to be quite untenable. The Hyderabad Government then wrote to the Government of India to authorise the Reserve Bank of India to cancel these securities and issue duplicate to them. We felt that the request was reasonable and, therefore, in order to protect the interests of the Government of Hyderabad as well as those of the Government of India, issued an Ordinance on 31st December, 1948, giving such authority to the Reserve Bank. This Ordinance would expire on the 30th June, 1949. At the same time, it is necessary to protect the interests of the Government of Hyderabad as well as of the Indian Government and so we think that the provisions of this Ordinance should now be incorporated in a short piece of legislation. This is now brought before the House. The provisions of this Ordinance have, therefore, been included in this Bill, and I hope it will be passed.

Mr. Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the Bill to provide for the control of the transfer of certain securities and for the issue of duplicate securities in respect thereof be taken into consideration."

Maulana Hasrat Mohani (U. P.: Muslim): This is a Bill which seeks to make legal something that has been quite illegally done by introducing a Bill in the Indian Parliament. It says in the Statement of Objects and Reasons:

"It was brought to the notice of the Government of India in December 1947 that notwithstanding the Standstill Agreement with H.E.H. the Nizam of Hyderabad, the Hyderabad Government had decided to transfer Government of India Securities worth Rs. 20 crores to the Pakistan Government. The Government of India considered that this decision of the Hyderabad Government was in clear breach of the Standstill Agreement."

So the main basis of our demand is that we consider that this is done against the Standstill Agreement. I have got a copy of the Standstill Agreement. That Agreement was not unilateral. It was binding on both the parties and I submit that once the majority of the sections in that Agreement was most flagrantly broken by the Indian Government, I think that Agreement was no more. The second article of the Agreement runs thus:

"Nothing herein contained shall impose any obligation or confer any right on the Dominion to send troops to assist the Nizam in maintenance of internal order or to station troops in the Hyderabad territory except in time of war and with the consent of the Nizam which will not be unreasonably withheld. Any troops so stationed to be withdrawn from Hyderabad territory within six months of the termination of the hostilities etc."

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. Will the honourable member resume his seat? I must make it plain to the honourable member that while it may be perfectly competent for him to allege or advance that this particular conduct in transferring the Securities was not a breach of the Standstill Agreement, it will not be permissible for him to proceed on the other line of argument that, because of certain alleged breaches by the Government of India, the Standstill Agreement did not exist. That will open a very wide question which is not relevant at all for the present discussion. He may, therefore, restrict himself accordingly.

Maulana Hasrat Mohani: I am not going to other fields. Even supposing that it was done against that Standstill Agreement, I submit that the transaction which was entered into between the Reserve Bank of India and the Nizam's Government has been completed. There was no objection at that time and it is no use now for the Indian Government to come forward and say that the Nizam has now said that all those transactions are invalid because the Hyderabad Council had no power to enter into or transfer any of its assets to Pakistan. There was no objection at that time. Now nobody pays any attention to whatever the Nizam says. (Honourable Member: "Why?") Nobody would believe—not even the United Nations Council when you said that the Nizam withdraws all these things. It is in duress and we need not take them into consideration. I suggest that we should not take into consideration anything that has been said by the Nizam now. We should see what was done at the time when this transaction was completed between the Reserve Bank of India and Pakistan. Those people who were responsible and who had the right and authority to transfer the funds belonging to Nizam to any other Government, they did it and they were perfectly justified in transferring it and the Reserve Bank had no objection at that time. Of course there was some suggestion on the part of the Indian Government but they clearly said that they were helpless. The transaction had been completed and there is no legal flaw and now we could not rescind that. You now come forward and say make it illegal by introducing a Bill in this Parliament. I submitted yesterday and I will submit again to-day that you are introducing a very dangerous precedent. You may do anything which is illegal, immoral and present a Bill and get it passed in any House. You may say night is day and get it passed.....

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Shri Biswanath Das (Orissa: General): May I request you to call upon the honourable member to withdraw what he said just now?

Maulana Hasrat Mohani: I am not going to withdraw at all. This is a very dangerous principle. I mentioned it yesterday also but you took advantage of my speech being in Urdu.....

Mr. Speaker: Let him not bring in yesterday's speech. That is irrelevant.

Maulana Hasrat Mohani: Supposing the Labour Government or supposing Mr. Churchill's party takes it into its head and gets a Bill passed from the British Parliament to repudiate all the Sterling Balances as he has already been suggesting that this whole thing should be done away with because India has been saved from the trouble of being involved in the Great War and therefore the whole thing should be wiped out and suppose the British Parliament passes it, will that justify their action of repudiating all your Sterling Balances because a Bill has been passed in the English Parliament. So I say you are making a very dangerous precedent. By introducing any Bill and getting it passed and by passing that Bill if you want to make whatever is illegal or immoral as legal, it will not help you. Besides that, if you go on like this you are creating a precedent and people will take you to task as they have already taken. You introduced this system....

Mr. Speaker: Order, order; let the honourable member address the Chair.

Maulana Hasrat Mohani: By you, I mean the members responsible for this Bill (An Honourable Member: "He means the Government). I mean the Congress party; it is on the basis of one party that they are sitting here.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member need not go beyond the scope of the Bill. What are the arguments he has got to advance?

Maulana Hasrat Mohani: This is a very dangerous thing. You introduce something and you take advantage of your strong position in this House. (An Honourable Member: "Again, 'you'.") It makes your position ridiculous. You first introduce a thing. Take for example, you adopted this principle of police action. You copied it.....

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. The honourable member is going into irrelevancies. I cannot allow this speech to go on. Has he any points to make in respect of the Bill?

Maulana Hasrat Mohani: So I say you are creating a precedent. I oppose this Bill because it introduces something very dangerous which may prove very harmful to you afterwards. It will be used against you. (An Honourable Member: "Against the Speaker?") All right. There are two things here which are inconsistent. In one place you say that you.....(An Honourable Member: "Who says?")

Mr. Speaker: Order, order; let him proceed.

Maulana Hasrat Mohani: The Bill says. Those who are responsible for presenting this Bill. I ask them to see and consider their ridiculous position. Here the Bill says,—it is a controversial matter—that there will be no appeal and no court of law can say anything in respect of this matter; courts are precluded. Why so? Supposing there is a party which says that you are not justified in framing this Bill and in introducing this Bill and go to a court; are you afraid? Why should you say that no court can hear anything against you. This shows that your position is weak; this shows that you are doing something against your very conscience. I submit therefore that there are so many inconsistencies in this Bill. You are taking advantage of your majority.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. The honourable member will now discontinue his speech. He is repeating the same thing.

सेठ गोविन्द दास : सभापतिजी, मैं इस बिल का स्वागत करता हूँ और माननीय सरदार वल्लभ भाई पटेल को इस बिल के यहां पर लाने पर बधाई देता हूँ। मुझे वे दिन याद आ जाते हैं जबकि इस सम्बन्ध में दो (Ordinances) जारी हुए थे। यदि वे (Ordinances) जारी न होने तो आज हमारे देश का कितना नुकसान हो जाता यह हम साफ तौर से समझ सकते हैं।

यहां पर जनाव हसरत मोहानी साहब ने जो कुछ कहा उस पर मुझे बड़ा ताज्जुब हुआ है। पहले तो मैं आपसे, सभापति जी, यह कहना चाहता हूँ कि इस प्रकार के शब्द कि हम यहां पर रात को दिन बना सकते हैं और दिन को रात, केवल जिन्होंने बिल उपस्थित किया है उन्हीं के खिलाफ नहीं जाते पर हमारी पूरी इस धारा सभा के खिलाफ जाते हैं और मैं तो आपसे हम लोगों के अधिकारों की रक्षा की दृष्टि से यह निवेदन करना चाहता हूँ कि आइन्दा इस प्रकार की बातें, जहां तक हमारी धारा सभा का सम्बन्ध है, न कही जानी चाहियें। यदि कोई सदस्य इस प्रकार की बातें इस धारा सभा में कहता है कि हम इस धारा सभा में रात को दिन और दिन को रात बना सकते हैं तो मैं आपसे कहता हूँ कि उन सदस्यों को अपने इन शब्दों को फौरन वापस लेना चाहिये और अगर वह सदस्य वापस लेने के लिये तैयार न हों तो आपको अपने अधिकारों का उपयोग करके उन्हें House के बाहर निकाल देना चाहिये।

Mr. Speaker: I have already expressed my disapproval and called the member to order when he said so. I do not think the matter need be pursued any further and his argument need not be taken very serious notice of. (Interruption by Maulana Hasrat Mohani) Order, order. Our time is more valuable and we may apply it to the quick disposal of the Bill before us which is a non-controversial matter and a measure of a formal character. I do not see why any further arguments are necessary. For those who want to oppose, the matter stands differently.

सेठ गोविन्द दास : मुझे तो ज्यादातर उन्हीं बातों के उत्तर देने की जरूरत थी जो कि यहां पर इस प्रकार के विवादास्पद बिल के न होते हुए भी कही गईं, और मैं समझता हूँ कि उनका जवाब दिये जाने की बहुत आवश्यकता है। परन्तु जैसा कि आपने कहा कि इस बिल में कोई ऐसी चीज नहीं जो कि विवादास्पद हो, इस लिये मैं अब और अधिक न कहूंगा।

अन्त में मैं फिर सरदार वल्लभ भाई पटेल को इस बिल के लाने के लिये बधाई देता हूँ जो उन्होंने इस देश को करोड़ों रुपये की हानि से बचाया है। उसके लिये हमारे सारे हाउस को उनका अनुगृहीत होना चाहिये। मैं इस बिल का समर्थन करता हूँ।

(English translation of the above speech)

Seth Govind Das (C. P. and Berar: General): Mr. Speaker, Sir, I welcome this Bill and congratulate the Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel for having brought it before this House. I am reminded of the days when two Ordinances were promulgated in this connection. We can very well realize what loss our country would have sustained had not these two Ordinances been issued.

I have been really very much surprised to hear what the Honourable Maulana Hasrat Mohani has said. First of all I would like to tell you, Sir, that such words as we make night a day and the day a night do not only go against those who have presented this Bill, but against the whole of the Legislature. I would at least request you with a view to ensure protection of the rights and privileges of the members of this House that so far as our Legislature is concerned such things should not be allowed in future. If any member says such things in this House that we can make night a day then I would submit that those members should at once withdraw their words. And in case they are not prepared to withdraw them, you should, Sir, exercise your powers and call upon them to leave the House.

Mr. Speaker: I have already expressed my disapproval and called the member to order when he said so. I do not think the matter need be pursued any further and his argument need not be taken very serious notice of. (Interruption by Maulana Hasrat Mohani) Order, order. Our time is more valuable and we may apply it to the quick disposal of the Bill before us which is a non-controversial matter and a measure of a formal character. I do not see why any further arguments are necessary. For those who want to oppose, the matter stands differently.

Seth Govind Das: I was more concerned to reply to the arguments which have been advanced here against the non-controversial measure of this kind, and I feel it absolutely necessary to have replied to it. But as you have pointed out that this Bill does not contain anything which is controversial, I would not like to say anything more.

To conclude, I will again congratulate the Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel for his having brought forth this Bill, and served this country from sustaining a loss of several crores of rupees. For this the whole House should be grateful to him.

I support this Bill.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: Sir, I do not think I would be justified in taking serious notice of the irrelevant ramblings, the substance of which, really, I must confess, I have not been able to follow at all, except the repetitions of "you say", "this is dangerous", "that is dangerous". I do not know whether the honourable member himself has understood what he is saying.

Maulana Hasrat Mohani: You will understand some time later.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: I would only say that this is a simple measure on which I did not anticipate any debate or controversy. I thought it was five minutes work. For the assurance of the House, I may say this much. If this Bill had not been brought forward in this House, I would have failed in my duty to protect the interests of the people of Hyderabad.

I move that the Bill be taken into consideration.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill to provide for the control of the transfer of certain securities and for the issue of duplicate securities in respect thereof, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: I will now take up the Bill clause by clause. May I know if Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad proposes to move the amendments?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): My amendments are of a drafting nature. If they are acceptable, I shall move them. Otherwise.....

Mr. Speaker: I shall send them to the draftsmen for consideration.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Except amendment number 5 to clause 5.

Mr. Speaker: Then, I shall put clauses 2, 3 and 4 together.

The question is:

"That clauses 2, 3 and 4 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 2, 3 and 4 were added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in clause 5 of the Bill, for the words 'shall be instituted', the words 'shall lie' be substituted."

Sir, clause 5 says:

"No suit or other legal proceeding for the enforcement of any rights or remedies in respect of any scheduled security shall be instituted....."

This is an injunction against a party asking him not to institute the suit or proceeding. It is no direction to the Court to refuse to recognise such as suit. The better way would be that no suit would lie. It would prevent the jurisdiction of the Court from taking notice of it unless with the previous consent of the Central Government.

The question is whether we should tell the litigants that no suit should be instituted. Supposing anybody in disregard of the injunction institutes this suit: the Court will be in a difficult position. Section 9 of the Civil Procedure Code lays down that any suit of a civil nature may be entertained and taken notice of by the Court. In these circumstances the Court may take notice of a suit or proceeding even in contravention of this clause. If we say no suit "shall lie" that makes the suit absolutely illegal. It is from this point of view that I have submitted this amendment.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: I do not accept the amendment. I believe that the words "shall be instituted" will not be interpreted by any litigant as an injunction for which he will be liable to be hauled up: nor will the Court interpret it in any other manner than in the proper manner.

Mr. Speaker: So I need not put the amendment to the House.

The section is now open to discussion.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri (Assam: General): What I wanted to say is that Mr. Ahmad's.....

Mr. Speaker: That is not before the House now.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: Then that is all right.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: May I draw your attention to Clause 6? There is the analogy: "No prosecution shall lie." That is the language in Clause 6.

Mr. Speaker: Should I put all the clauses together, or should I put them one by one?

Honourable Members: All together!

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That Clause 5 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 5 was added to the Bill.

Clauses 6 and 7 were added to the Bill.

The Schedule was added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and the Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: Sir, I move:

"That the Bill be passed."

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill be passed."

The motion was adopted.

PUBLIC DEBT (CENTRAL GOVERNMENT) AMENDMENT BILL

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai (Minister for Finance): I beg to move:

"That the Bill to amend the Public Debt, (Central Government) Act, 1944, be taken into consideration."

This, Sir, is a simple and straight forward measure. The Public Debt Act of 1944 seeks to regulate the Public Debt of the Central Government. The intention of the Government was to undertake a fairly comprehensive legislation regarding the public debt of the Country not merely of the Centre but also of the Provinces. But it so happens that under the Constitution Act, the public debt of the provinces is a matter for legislation by the Provincial Legislatures. Therefore, the Act as it stands at present governs only the public debt of the Central Government. That has created an anomalous position, because the money market of the country is the same and the authority which regulates the public debt both of the Central Government and the Provincial Governments is the same authority, namely, the Reserve Bank. It therefore stands to reason that our policy regarding the public debt and our administration of the public debt, should both be on uniform lines.

Now this matter was put to the Provincial Governments and the Provincial Governments have readily agreed to the Centre legislating also for the regulation of the provincial public debts and the Provincial Legislatures have passed legislation agreeing to the Central Legislature legislating for their public debts. Therefore, the matter is purely a formal one, and I ask the House to accept my motion.

Mr. Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the Bill to amend the Public Debt (Central Government) Act, 1944, be taken into consideration."

Shri B. Das (Orissa: General): I welcome the Bill. I am glad to learn from the Honourable the Finance Minister that the various Provincial Governments have agreed to this measure. Some how the general impression all over the country is that these various Provincial Government can borrow any amount of money and play with it as they like! A case in point is the controversy that is agitating the country over the acquisition of zamindari rights by the Provincial Governments. I am not referring only to the impression among those who are in the know: but among the public the impression is that a Provincial Government can borrow hundreds of crores, issue bonds and acquire zamindari rights, coal-mines and even steel works.

[At this stage Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair, which was then occupied by Mr. Deputy Speaker (Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar)].

This kind of loose talk in certain quarters, whether amongst politicians or amongst responsible Ministers in the provinces has not helped the country, the stock exchanges and the money markets to have any confidence in the Government.

I therefore welcome this Bill and I am glad that the Provincial Governments have agreed to it and I hope that confidence will be restored in the financial markets and that there will be no vacillation or fear among any class of people.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Madras: General): I had no intention in the beginning to speak on this Bill at all, but my honourable friend, Mr. B. Das, provokes one to speak. I entertain fears from the other end. I certainly have no objection that the Central Government should be made aware of the public debt policy and programmes of the Provincial Governments so long as they can sit together and place their demands in the share market in a concerted manner. At the same time, I certainly cannot be a party to the Central Government getting the power to dictate to the Provincial Governments whether they could approach the share market at all, and when, for what sums and for what objects. If the Central Government were to take power into its own hands to dictate to the Provincial Governments; then these Governments would be reduced to the same status as Municipal Councils and Local Boards and they would not have the initiative for taking up any large and important policies or programmes for the social and economic development of the Country. As it happens my honourable friend, Mr. Das, has special objection to the policy relating to the zamindari system. He does not want the Provincial Governments to go to the market and raise loans and pay compensation to the zamindars. Tomorrow someone else will say "I do not want such and such a Provincial Government to nationalise and take over such and such a local industry, purchase such and such mills or factories. Therefore I do not want the Provincial Government to be able to go to the share market and borrow money. I would like that it should come to the Central Government." In this way the decisions of the Provincial Government would be set at naught.

The House remembers what happened sometime ago when the Madras Government wanted to pursue a particular policy, in regard to textile mills and the textile industry. The Central Government came in the way and said that the Madras Government could not pursue that policy and the Government was in the horns of a dilemma whether it should pursue its policy and afterwards take its chance in the Federal Court or accept this advice coming from the Central Government, which nevertheless amounted, under the circumstances, to a mandate. We do not want a similar experience to be repeated again and again in different provinces. Therefore I want a categorical assurance from the Honourable Finance Minister that the Government of India certainly does not have any such intention whatsoever, by getting this Bill now passed of controlling the provincial governments in their policies and programmes even in regard to their raising loans in the public market. Unless they give such an assurance I am afraid it will become necessary for the provincial governments to revise their own views and approach the Central Government for a suitable amendment of this Bill.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Sir, with regard to the question raised by my honourable friend Prof. Ranga it is not the purpose of this Bill in any manner to limit the discretion of provincial governments as regards the purposes or objects for which they want to raise funds. All that this Act does is to regulate what I may call the technical and administrative aspects of public debt. But what the provincial government would like to spend their funds on is a matter which under our present set up is for the provincial government to decide and the kind of tradition that we have established is this that the Central Government gives consideration to proposals which are made by the provincial government. At the same time, although it has nothing whatever to do with this matter, there ought to be of course a certain amount of co-ordination between the Centre and the provincial government—co-ordination which would be brought about entirely on a basis of mutual agreement and settlement. This Bill does not at all affect the main issue raised by my friend Prof. Ranga and I have no hesitation in giving him the kind of assurance that he wants.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill to amend the Public Debt (Central Government) Act, 1944, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That clauses 2 to 7 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 2 to 7 were added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and the Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Sir, I move:

"That the Bill be passed."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill be passed."

The motion was adopted.

BANKING COMPANIES BILL—contd.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai (Minister for Finance): Sir, I move:

"That the Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to banking companies, as reported by the Select Committee, be taken into consideration."

Sir, the Banking Bill, as the House is aware, has been before the country for a fairly long period of years and both the public and honourable members are familiar with the main provisions of this Bill. This Bill also has had the experience of being subjected to careful scrutiny by more than one Select Committee and therefore I submit that the Bill as it has emerged from the

[Dr. John Matthai]

Select Committee after this long process of careful scrutiny deserves respectful consideration.

Sir, the matters in regard to which changes have been made by the Select Committee in the original Bill have been set out in the report of the Select Committee. That report is a clear and concise document which sets forth the main matters covered by the Select Committee's proceedings with, if I may say so, commendable clarity. I do not think, therefore, it is necessary that I should go over the whole ground again; which would be wasting the time of the House. What I propose to do in the few remarks that I want to make to the House is to call attention to some of the more salient matters, in regard to which changes have been proposed by the Select Committee.

The first matter to which I would like to refer is the definition of a banking company, which is set out in the Select Committee's report. There has been a considerable amount of controversy as regards the definition to be adopted in the Bill of banking companies. The point regarding which most of this controversy has occurred is whether a business concern which accepts deposits which are repayable on demand could be excluded by a formula of the kind which was embodied in the original Bill. There was a good deal of discussion on this question with reference to the practice of accepting demand deposits for the purpose of financing trade or manufacture—a practice which having been in vogue for a considerable period and at any rate in those parts of the country where it is in vogue has not led to any serious financial dislocation. There was general agreement that it was not necessary that the scope of this Bill should be extended to such concerns. On the other hand, the feeling of the Committee was, and I think rightly, that the distinguishing feature of a banking company is that it accepts demand deposits which are repayable by means of a cheque. That is the outstanding, if I may say so, characteristic feature of a bank and the problem before the Select Committee was how exactly to reconcile these points of view. The formula which is suggested by the Select Committee is that any company which is engaged in trade or manufacture and accepts deposits for the purpose of financing such trade or manufacture would not be a banking company within the framework of this Bill, and if that is so, such a concern would not be brought under the regulation and control provided in this Bill.

In order to make the position absolutely clear from the legal point of view I propose to make an amendment of which I have given notice to say that the acceptance of deposits is merely for the purpose of financing trade or manufacture.

Another point regarding which there has been a good deal of discussion is the limitation regarding employment of persons by a banking company. The controversy arose from the provision contained in the original Bill that no person who is engaged in any other business or vocation could be employed by a banking company. That is rather a sweeping proposal and it certainly would make it impossible for example for a banking company to have on its staff a part-time person as Legal Advisor. If a person who is engaged in any other business or vocation is not to be employed, that class of person would be completely shut out. The Select Committee thought that was a point regarding which a suitable change should be made. What has happened now is that it is only with regard to the management of a bank that people engaged in any other business or vocation would be ruled out. That is to say, there is nothing to prevent a banking company from employing such a person. All that is prohibited is that such a person cannot be engaged for the management of the banking company.

Another point regarding employment which created some controversy was this. In the original Bill there is a provision that when there is a contract for management of a banking company beyond a period of five years that matter should be subject to the approval of the shareholders in a general meeting. The Select Committee went into this matter with some care, and on the whole they felt that from the point of view of good administration, from the point of view of preventing such things as canvassing for votes, it is better to leave out this provision: so that as the Bill has emerged from the Select Committee the question of extending a contract for management beyond a period of five years is a matter which would be settled by the Directors of the banking company. Apart from the fact that in matters of this kind it is of some importance that canvassing of votes should as far as possible be prevented, there is a further consideration in the case of banking companies which is this, that shareholders might also be borrowers from the banking company. It is therefore of special importance in the case of banking companies that the approval of the shareholders as an essential condition for the extension of contract of management should be avoided.

The next question is the question of limitation of dividends. The provision in the original Bill is that the dividend payable by new banking companies should be restricted to 9 per cent.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock, Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Narayan) in the Chair.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Sir, when the House adjourned I was on the subject of limitation of dividends. The provision in the original Bill before the Select Committee revised it was that the dividends payable on capital by new banking companies should be limited to 9 per cent. that provision has been omitted by the Select Committee so that, as the Bill before the House now stands, there is no limitation at all on dividends payable by banking companies. The reasons for which the Select Committee took this decision are, if I may say so, sound reasons. They are mainly these. In the first place it is not a sound thing to have one kind of regulation in the matter of dividends of new companies and another in respect of old or existing companies. The result of such discrimination is that when it came to arranging for expansion of business, old or existing companies would be placed in an unduly favourable position and new companies would be placed at a disadvantage. (Interruption). I was saying that it was not a reasonable kind of provision to make that there should be distinction in the matter of the rate of dividends payable between new companies and old companies because it places new companies in an unfavourable position. The provision which existed in the Bill before the Select Committee revised it was that there should be a limitation on dividends to 9 per cent. in respect of new banking companies.

The second objection to that provision is this that there is really no reason why a distinction should be made between business concerns engaged in one line of business and business concerns engaged in other lines of business, that is to say, if you are going to tackle this problem of dividend limitation the problem must be considered with respect to the general practices in the country—it must be handled as a general problem, not as a problem relating to one particular class of concerns.

The third objection is, if the House is going to accept the Bill for limitation of dividends which is now under its consideration, then this question would be covered for a period of two years after the 31st December, 1950.

by the Bill which is already before the House, and during this period, therefore, it is somewhat unreasonable that there should be a special provision in regard to banking companies.

That, therefore, is the position regarding limitation of dividends.

The next important question is with regard to investment by banking companies in shares of business concerns. When I say "investment", what it really means, when you apply it to banking concerns, is not direct investment but loans or advances made against the security of industrial shares; the provision in the original Bill was that such investment should be limited to twenty per cent. of the issued share capital of the company or twenty per cent. of the share capital plus the reserve of the banking company. The Select Committee has restored the original provision of forty per cent. Now, forty per cent. is the limit laid down in the Companies Act with regard to banking companies. The provision in the Companies Act is that such investment should not be more than forty per cent. of the issued share capital of the company concerned. What the Bill does is to limit it to forty per cent. of the paid up share capital of the company, or forty per cent. of the banking company's paid up share capital plus reserve, whichever is less.

It is necessary to look at this question of limiting investments of this character from two points of view. From the point of view of a banking company it is an essentially sound thing that there should be some limitation of this character. I say it is a reasonable thing from the point of view of banking companies because otherwise you might find that where a banking company invests an unduly large part of its resources in a single industrial concern it is likely to affect, under certain circumstances, the stability of the banking company. So, from the banking company's point of view, there is no sound reason for a limitation of this character.

The question must be looked at also from the public point of view because if you do not have a limitation of this character then a position may arise where a banking company would be able to acquire almost a position of monopolistic control in regard to industrial concerns. Both in this country and in other countries we have had experience of the adverse consequences that might arise when merely financial interests acquire an undue degree of control over the industrial concerns of a country.

The reason why the Select Committee decided to restore the original limit of forty per cent. is this. In regard to the bigger banking companies, that is to say banking companies which have a very large number of branches scattered all about the country, from a purely administrative point of view it is a matter of very considerable difficulty to see that this limitation is adhered to in the day to day administration of the company. From a purely administrative point of view a limitation of that kind would be difficult to work. That is one objection.

Another objection is this, that if you have an unduly low and rigid limitation, then a banking company may quite conceivably find that although there are shares of first-class industrial concerns in which they may invest their funds, this limitation would compel them to leave these first-class industrial concerns out and invest in concerns of inferior standing.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Madras: General): Supposing it is the other way about, and they go on investing in concerns of doubtful validity?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Well, all that I can say in reply to that is this, that if you are going to have banking companies in the country under the present economic set-up you must assume that the people who are responsible for managing these companies know something of their business. Unless you make a certain assumption, it would be impossible for us to work through the existing economic machinery.

The next point to which I would like to refer is the prohibition of the granting of unsecured loans in cases where there is a common Director between the banking company and a company which asks for a loan from the banking company. The provision in the original Bill was that where there was a common Director between a private company and a banking company, the banking company would be prohibited from granting an unsecured loan to the private company. That question was considered by the Select Committee and they decided that that kind of prohibition would be unduly restrictive in its character. The result of that would be that the business of the private company in question would necessarily be diverted to other quarters. That objection applies equally to public companies. I may tell the House that at a certain stage in the history of this Bill a similar prohibition was sought to be enforced in respect of public companies also. It was left out, and it was considered then that the restriction should be limited to private companies. The Select Committee considers that even in respect of private companies the restriction would be unduly rigid. The provision now in the Bill as it has been revised by the Select Committee is that that kind of prohibition would now apply in cases where the Director in question is a managing agent or a partner or where the Director is himself a guarantor of the loan. In other cases, the prohibition would not apply.

There is a consideration of general importance which I think it is necessary for us to bear in mind in the present circumstances of the country, that is to say, if you are going to place restrictions of this kind on people accepting Directorships in banking companies, the result is likely to be that you would find it difficult to secure people of the necessary qualifications and experience for accepting the Directorship of banking companies. As a matter of fact, in the brief experience of industrial concerns that I have had, it has not been an easy matter to find people of requisite qualifications and experience of appointment as Directors of companies, and in view of the fact that there is a paucity, in the present stage of economic development, of men of that kind, a restriction of this kind, I suggest, in the public interest, would be undesirable.

Another question of an important character which is raised in the Select Committee's report is with regard to the Reserve Bank. Originally, there was a provision that whenever a banking company was to be liquidated, when there were winding up proceedings, there was a provision that invariably the Reserve Bank should be the official liquidator. That has now been dropped and the provision as it stands now is simply this, that it is only in cases where the Reserve Bank applies for appointment as official liquidator that the Reserve Bank would be called upon to undertake these duties. The reason for it is that at present there is not enough staff available to the Reserve Bank to undertake the functions of liquidator in all cases where winding up proceedings are started.

Similarly there was a suggestion, in the course of the discussions on this Bill, that in regard to the inspection of banks by the Reserve Bank these inspections should be of a regular character, that is to say, instead of simply applying this provision for inspection to banks when they are in trouble, the Reserve Bank should arrange for a regular inspection from time to time. The reason for that suggestion is that if the Reserve Bank arranges for the inspection of a bank only when the bank is in trouble, then it is likely to create panic. There is a feeling produced that the particular banks is in trouble and panic arises among the depositors. So the suggestion was made that the inspection should be a regular inspection. There again, the difficulty of staff arises and under present conditions, however much an arrangement of that kind may be considered desirable, it was found for practical reasons difficult to arrange for it.

[Dr. John Matthai]

There is just one more point to which I want to refer. I have given notice of an amendment that in all cases where the Government or the Reserve Bank or their officers take action in pursuance of the provisions of this Bill in good faith, they should be granted protection in respect of such action. That, of course, is a provision which occurs in many Acts of this kind. We have considered it necessary to introduce a provision of this kind into this Bill, because cases have arisen recently where legal proceedings have been started against Government and the Reserve Bank and some of their officers in respect of action which they have taken in good faith in pursuance of the duties which they are called upon to perform in matters of this kind, and personally I think it is a matter of great importance that that kind of protection should be afforded to Government and the Reserve Bank and their officers.

I think, Sir, I have covered the more important points which are set out in the report of the Select Committee and I have no doubt in the course of the general discussion and the discussion on the various amendments that there would be opportunities of discussing other aspects of the Bill which I have not been able to mention in the course of this brief introduction.

Mr. Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to banking companies, as reported by the Select Committee, be taken into consideration."

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari (Madras: General): Mr. Speaker, in supporting the motion made by my honourable friend the Finance Minister, I would like to make a few remarks on the report of the Select Committee. The House knows that I was a member of the Select Committee, and I am well aware of the fact that any criticism that I have now to offer on the Bill as it has emerged from the Select Committee should be related to suggestions made in the Select Committee which were either accepted or rejected. Sir, in his opening remarks, the honourable the Mover referred to the age of this particular measure. I would like to remind the House that the proposal for a banking legislation emanated in 1939 from the then Governor of the Reserve Bank, Sir James Taylor, and substantially, except perhaps with reference to the provisions which give larger power to the Reserve Bank to interfere in the monetary set-up of the country, the Bill to-day represents the suggestions that were embodied in the original proposals of the late Sir James Taylor. I am laying emphasis on this particular fact because I want the House to realise that while the world has moved very very fast during these ten years, and ideas in regard to monetary control by government and the type of machinery required by it to be at its disposal have undergone revolutionary changes, we are here considering a Bill which, in the main, was the product of an emergency that occurred in 1938, namely, the failure of a few banks which prompted the Reserve Bank to bring forward draft proposals for banking legislation. That I think is at once an apology and an explanation for bringing before this House a Bill which is, in my opinion, a measure which falls far short of the needs of the moment, and that is a point which I would like to develop a little further as I go on.

Sir, it has been my good fortune or misfortune, perhaps, to have been able to speak in this very House on more than one occasion in regard to proposals for banking legislation. I remember some time in the fall of 1944, a measure of this sort was circulated for eliciting public opinion. Again some time in April 1945 a measure of this nature was referred to a Select Committee, and on both occasions I participated in the debate. Certain suggestions were made by me; a few of which were incorporated in the Bill that was brought up later.

As the honourable the Mover rightly pointed out, this measure has gone through two select committees—something unique for any piece of legislation—before it came before this House. And honourable members will note that in many respects, or in some important respects, the Bill as it has now emerged from the Select Committee is perhaps a little more retrograde than what it was at the time it emerged from the last select committee, whose report, however, was not taken into consideration by the House.

Sir, if the House will pardon me for introducing a personal note, I would like to say that I am neither a person who has interests in banks, nor am I one of those persons who have large vested interests at stake. My only reason for trying to speaking on this measure is that I am a student of banking and allied economic matters and I thought I would be failing in my duty if I did not place my own views before this House and before the wider public, while a measure of this nature is under consideration.

Sir, after this preamble, I must say that I am not perfectly satisfied with the measure as it has emerged from the Select Committee. I have taken up a few points from the Select Committee's Report to indicate my disapproval and I have incorporated them in my minute of dissent; and if I am permitted, I shall be moving a few amendments in support of those points that I have made out in my minute of dissent. But now at this stage I propose to touch only on certain general aspects of this measure.

One important aspect of this measure which I would like to touch on is the question of liquidity demands made by this Bill as it has emerged from the Select Committee. In essence it has not changed in shape or form from what it was in the original draft which the House committed to the Select Committee. This question of liquidity of the assets of a bank is now being decided under conditions which will not obtain for all time to come. We are now supposed to be in a period of inflation when there is plenty of money, though it now seems to have come to a stage that the people who need the money are not able to obtain it and most of all, one institution which needs money—the Government—is not able to obtain any money. But at the time when this proposal originally saw the light of day, it was brought out because of a banking crisis, because of a definite difficulty felt by a particular bank which though it ultimately paid twelve annas in the rupee had to go into liquidation for the one sole reason that the Reserve Bank was not able to come to its rescue, partly because of the working of Section 17 of the Reserve Bank Act, and partly because the elasticity afforded by the provisions of Section 18 of the Reserve Bank Act was not made available to that institution.

Sir, normally the position of good small banks in this country is that they do not have enough money to advance to their customers at the time when it is necessary when seasonal demands are high. One might very well ask, "Why should we have good small banks?" In fact, this particular fact was brought to my notice very forcibly when the Select Committee received a deputation of bankers. I asked one of the members of that deputation whether he was satisfied that the percentage of liquidity that is sought to be enforced by this Bill was not on the high side so far as the smaller Banks are concerned as I thought he was aware of the position of the smaller banks, but he said, "It is all right". But the real fact is—I do not know what has happened in the previous select committee—this Select Committee has not called up representatives of the smaller banks to come before it and testify as to what they would like the liquidity conditions to be fixed at. Sir, undoubtedly friends in this House will speak about nationalisation and I shall have a few words about it before I sit down. But I do feel that the common man, the people in the country who need money during seasons for financing agricultural business and the marketing of agricultural produce, depend largely on the smaller banks and I do not know whether this banking Bill should not have been preceded by another banking enquiry committee which should have decided for us what type of banks we should encourage in this country whether we should encourage the unit type of bank or whether we should encourage banks with a large number of branches. Here in this country we have a very mixed system. The smaller banks, banks which more or less approximate to the unit type of banks have no part or lot in this particular measure and only the bigger banks are able to represent their cases before the Select Committee and before the Honourable Minister and they have a certain amount of say in the ultimate formation or shaping of the measure before the House. I think this is a matter which we should consider before long, as I believe the Honourable Minister thinks that the inflation has started going down the curve and we might very well be in the midst of a depression before long.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: May I explain? I do not think I have ever stated anywhere, even in conversation with my honourable friend that we are in sight of depression. It has never been my opinion.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: I stand corrected. I apparently read far too much from one or two remarks which my honourable friend was good enough to let fall. But that at any rate is the opinion of the Honourable Minister's economic advisers, I mean the advisers of the Finance Department. I find Dr. Thomas almost Cassandra like prophesying that before long there will be depression.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: There is economic depression in the countryside. Go and see it.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: My own feeling is we will probably have to consider before long whether the interest of the agriculturists, of the small man or small business will not be best served by encouragement of unit banking to which no encouragement of any sort is being offered in this particular measure. I have in fact suggested at one stage that the question of fixing the percentage of the liquidity of assets must be a matter which should be elastic and must be left to the Reserve Bank to settle and even vary in accordance with the needs of the time within the particular limits that we might fix in the Statute. In harping on that point of view I have this in mind that most of the agricultural operations which demand financing are seasonal and such business is of a self-liquidating nature because of the reason that the security offered must before long be sold and the money returned to the bank. So some such consideration would probably have been more suited to the requirements of the rural countryside. I do hope that some time may come that the Government of India, alert and alive as it is, will perhaps use its Ordinance making powers to make this alteration in the present measure to suit circumstances as and when they arise.

Sir, one other matter to which my honourable friend the mover referred and it is in regard to limitation of dividends. My honourable friend referred to another measure which this House has committed to Select Committee viz., the Limitation of Dividends Bill. I would ask for forgiveness if I make a reference to the content of that Bill which I think is very necessary in order to meet a particular argument which I have sought to import in my Minute of Dissent. My feeling was that the original Ordinance which the Bill that has gone to the Select Committee seeks to put on the Statute Book on a semi-permanent basis hardly fitted in with our own ideas in regard to limitation of dividends to be paid by banking companies. I refer to the Ordinance and not to the Bill. The Ordinance merely crystallised the existing practice. It crystallises the status quo. I wanted to find arguments against this particular idea as being a check against that somehow crept into the authorities and I borrowed from the Library 'The Investor's Year Book' issued by Place Siddon and Cough one of the most prominent Brokers in this country and I went through the payment of dividends over a period of years for some selected companies. I found that in the main what the Ordinance sought to do was merely to crystallise the payment of dividends because if you take the Imperial Bank, the dividend for a period of years in the past has been 14 per cent. If you take the Central Bank after the war—they were very conservative before the war—I know I am speaking in the presence of the Chairman of its Board of Directors—before the war they were paying 9 per cent. and after the war they started increasing the dividend, and in any event even the quantum of dividend to be paid by the Central Bank even after the application of the Ordinance will not vary. So it seems to me that except in the case of Tata Deffereds which for a capital outlay of Rs. 30 often pays a dividend of five times that amount, if not more, where the variations have been phenomenal from 130 rupees and odd to 64, even where the present Limitation of Dividend Ordinance which now rules will afford the recipient of dividend a possibility of obtaining somewhere about Rs. 85 on a capital outlay of Rs. 30, I do not see that this Dividend Limitation is worth anything as an anti-inflationary measure. As I have great respect not merely for the experience but also for the wisdom and moderation of my honourable friend, the Mover, I felt that in justifying the elimination of the dividend limitation clause from the Bill my honourable friend was emphasising a fact which is not merely unsustainable but also unnecessary.

Sir, coming to this particular matter of whether dividends of banks should be limited or not, I think banking companies stand on a different footing from other companies. For other type or companies we allow large amount of freedom but for banks we don't allow. Why? One reason for interference by Government was said to be the protection of the interest of depositors. But, Sir, with the acceptance of the idea of monetary management which is the basis of Keynes's idea all the time—which he further elaborated in his monumental work on the General Theory, Governments have now come to accept the position that monetary management happens to be the primary duty of Government and I think that is perhaps the main justification for our having as Finance Minister a person of the type of Dr. Matthai with his considerable experience of economics and of management in business. This Government have accepted more or less the duty that has devolved on them of monetary management and we cannot have banks in the future, whether we nationalise them or not, which can do what they want, whatever might be the strength and influence of the vested interests who control them. It is not merely for the protection of depositors that control of Banks is needed which is an erroneous idea which has been given the go-by long time back. The banks have got to be controlled either by the Government or by its agent—the Reserve Bank—in various ways as a corollary to Governments monetary Policy which is the only justification for this elaborate measure before this House and it would be idle to-day to say that we are going to treat the banks on the same footing as any other companies and we are not going to permit banks to pay such dividends as we are permitting other companies to do because the foundation of the monetary policy of the Government will have to, to some extent, depend upon the interest paid by the banks for deposits and which again has some connection with the rate of dividend they pay to shareholders. Sir my honourable friend the Finance Minister will say—supposing I accept your suggestion and limit the dividend of banks to 9 per cent. what will happen to the share market? The price of the shares will drop. I say the price of the shares of the Imperial Bank,

[Shri T. T. Krishnamachari.]

Sir, dropped from Rs. 2265 last February to Rs. 1700 and odd this February. Was the Finance Minister of that time or the locum tenens who occupied that position during the middle period or the present incumbent able to defend and safeguard the interest of these share-holders? And I do not think any great disaster would have overtaken us if by our limiting the dividend to 9 per cent. the share value of the Imperial Bank the paid up value of which is about Rs. 500 has been brought to Rs. 1350 or Rs. 1400. Some people will suffer for the sake of large number of people. Any salutary measure of this nature where it fixes the dividend of semi-public organizations like a bank for reason of its stability and also particularly to discourage bankers from giving a larger rate of interest to depositors than what they ought to do so as to keep their income a little lower than what it otherwise will be, I think all these conditions require that limitation of dividend of banks must be undertaken, if not to-day at least to-morrow or the day after and I don't think it is any use saying that here is a Dividend Limiting Ordinance which is in operation and let us hear nothing more about dividend limitation. Let us consider the whole scheme in relation to private companies where risks are of a very much larger nature than that of banks where there is no Bill similar to the one that we are now considering which ensures stability and security of banks and where there is a perfect justification for limitation of dividends. Sir, one other point in relation to the body of the Bill to which I would like to refer is in regard to clause 19. Sir, I have had the advantage of hearing my honourable friend, the mover, explain why the recommendation of the previous Select Committee in regard to the fixation of the percentage of possible advances on shares of an institution was given up and why we have gone back to the original provisions of the Companies Act with the difference that he has indicated that exists between the provisions of the Companies Act and the provisions of this Bill. I do not think it is a very proper change. I would like to link this up with my criticism of voting rights.

Voting rights as they are conceded by this measure are: a person can have 10 per cent. of the total voting rights in so far as newer banks are concerned. We have known for a long time, in four or five years now, a number of Insurance Companies have changed hands and in every case where an Insurance Company has changed hands, it is linked to a Bank. (Shri B. E. Sondhi: "In every case?") "Practically in every case. I am not afraid of my honourable friend's challenge because I think I am a little better informed in this matter. (Shri B. L. Sondhi: "That is what you think a very much mistaken impression.") "Wherever an Insurance company changed hands, it was linked to a Bank. Whenever control of an Insurance company was sought to be obtained, the person who attempted to control had some kind of link with a Bank. In every case where an Insurance company came a cropper, there is a Bank somewhere there in the offing. I can tell him of an exception; I do not like to mention names; I know of two Insurance companies that changed hands without the aid of a Bank helping in the process. But that is an evil which this House is aware of which this House was made aware of times without number. A committee was appointed with an honourable member of this House, as he then was, Sir Cowasji Jehangir as Chairman to recommend ways and means of preventing this kind of fraudulent transfers and manipulation of other peoples' assets. Voting rights form an import part in this operation. You might ask me, supposing you reduce the voting rights from ten to two and a half per cent, what do you achieve? Cannot the owner of these shares get 20 dummies in order to achieve his object? I agree, Sir, that every provision that we make in this particular measure can be got over somehow by the introduction of some type of dummies. That does not mean that you should not make the business of obtaining dummies more difficult. That is what we can possibly do; that is what human ingenuity can do. If people thieve, we prevent that by putting policemen to watch for them and we put the thieves in jail when they are caught. We will put a different type of policemen in this manner by limiting the opportunities for these people to manipulate the intersets of depositors and thereby interfere with the monetary mechanism of this country. I find no justification at all for the rejection of the idea that those people who seek to use the Bank's funds for purposes of their own, for disturbing the economy of the country, their opportunities must be limited. I do feel that it will probably be more proper for me to say that no person should have more than one per cent. of the voting rights. I am amazed at my own moderation in that I have suggested it ought to be two and a half per cent. and not one per cent.

That again links up with the proposition in clause 19 whether any restriction in the investment in the shares of any one company by a Bank is a wholesome restriction. I do not think it is going to unduly affect the business of this country by accepting the suggestion of the original Select Committee instead of changing it to what it was prior to that committee's report.

I now propose to deal with one or two matters of general interests before I sit down. The basis of this measure is that we are throwing an enormous amount of responsibility on the Reserve Bank. Oftentimes when we had asked for some more restrictions, some more enquiry, some more statistics, it was urged and the argument was appreciated by some of us that the Reserve Bank as it now is, is not in a position to undertake an enormous amount of responsibility all at once. Even so, the amount of work that we are saddling on the Reserve Bank, the amount of responsibility that we are asking the Reserve Bank to undertake in this Bill is something very immense. I would ask the House to remember that when we shove this responsibility on the Reserve Bank, we are shoving it on an institution which has been nationalised. The Reserve Bank has been nationalised in order to meet a cry that existed right from the day when the Reserve Bank was brought into being. I will ask my honourable friends who have been urging for the nationalisation of the Reserve Bank, if they have found any visible change in either the character of that institution or in its personnel or in its outlook. I do hope that in the future the Reserve Bank would have more influence than what it has been having on the Government of India. Reverting for a moment to the question of limitation of dividends, I would like to refer to a Book produced by the Reserve Bank, Report on Currency and Finance for 1947-48, where the Reserve Bank has referred to at length to the Banking legislation and has said; "The main features of the new Bill are as follows:" Item 5 in these main features is limitation on payment of dividends. I did hope that the nationalised Reserve Bank will have a little more control, a little more pull over the Government and over us who are either controllers of this Government or are being controlled by the Government, whichever way you take it, in implementing what it thinks as most wholesome. I revert again to the composition of the Reserve Bank and the responsibility that we cast upon it. Nationalisation has not made any change in the personnel; the personnel remains the same; naturally, it will remain the same. I am not, Sir, for one moment, referring to the appointment of the successor to the present Governor of the Reserve Bank. Perhaps, I might make some reference to it on the proper occasion. The successor of the present Governor will be judged by his performance. I would make a reference to a fact which has come into being. I am referring to the Constitution of the Board. My honourable friend the mover has constituted the new Board taking advantage of the powers conferred on him. To some extent he has preserved the old set up in order to provide continuity. He has also provided new blood. Sir, in order to make the institution a live institution more alive to the needs of the country, to bring in more expert assistance to the Government which a shareholders Bank cannot provide. What is the type of new blood that is brought in? Old blood which will coagulate and ultimately produce thrombosis. I do not find a single economist of any standing, a single public man.

An Honourable Member: There is Shri Gadgil.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: Shri Gadgil is not in the Central Board, let me tell my honourable friend who interrupts. He is in the local Board of Bombay which has absolutely no powers whatsoever. The power of the local Boards have not yet been defined; as at present they have no powers at all. There is no economist, no man of any catholic outlook, not even labour leader. The new blood is in the form of old people whose arteries are getting thickened through which blood is running very slow, who are very near being affected by thrombosis. My honourable friends want nationalisation; here it is on a silver platter; take it.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: At least we are able to say this in regard to a nationalised institution. About his own institution, we can say nothing.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: I have one more word to say about the Reserve Bank as it is at present constituted. The functions that are cast on it are far more than I can bear. What is to be the type of Reserve Bank in order that it may shoulder those functions and more functions that we would seek to put on it? I am not a conservative. As I said, I do not believe in theories propounded by vested interests. I believe in change and I believe in experiment. I do not believe in what my honourable friend says who is sitting in the front opposition Bench who asks this Government not to experiment with new sociological ideas.

I want this Government not to experiment with sociological ideas. I want them to embark on them. And therefore, Sir.....(Mr. Homy Mody: "Heading towards insolvency!") If my honourable friend will be audible enough I will be able to convey my own reply to whatever remarks he has to make. But he is not audible.

The point I want to urge is this. We are either committed to an enormous expansion of the Reserve Bank so that it might fulfil its functions properly not only in so far as this Bill lays on it but also take up the monetary responsibility that will be cast on it, or to make it take over an institution which is performing some of the functions that the Reserve Bank has to undertake and seek to integrate it into its own so as to provide a very necessary apparatus in the hands of the Honourable the Finance Minister in order to control the monetary mechanism of this country. Though my honourable friend might hold other views, when the Government made that slip, that false step in rationalising the Reserve Bank, which we all know means nothing, which we all knew would mean the appointment of another civilian as a Governor and which we all knew meant the continuing presence of vested interests in the Directorate, when the Government made that false step, it committed itself irrevocably to the principle of enlarging that particular bank and also making it imperative for the Reserve Bank to absorb the Imperial Bank either today or tomorrow and make it a nationalised institution. To say to-day that the State should not interfere with commercial banking is saying something that is entirely out of date. The State has to interfere in commercial banking. In certain respects it does and this very Bill seeks to enlarge the scope of that particular type of interference. If my honourable friend will to-morrow seek to expand the Reserve Bank so that it may have 400 or 500 branches undertaking the Treasury duties of the various Provincial Governments, seeking to provide transfer of monies where necessary, and undertaking the full responsibility that this Bill and other Bills that will come later on will impose on it, well I am perfectly willing that the Imperial Bank be left out of ken and I am even willing for it to go out of existence. The alternative is for the Government to shake off its present inertia where the question of the Imperial Bank is concerned and make it an adjunct of the Reserve Bank or make it an allied institution so that the Reserve Bank work may become more efficient, so that the Government's policy in regard to monetary control can be more effectively implemented and so that this Banking Bill can become something very real.

I would like to mention a particular lacuna in this Bill, which is partly due to the fact of the constitutional set-up, and partly due to the fact that we have not courage enough to expand. Sir, the so-called non-Scheduled Banks have been left out of the orbit of this Bill more or less, except the control that the Reserve Bank may impose on it and the general provisions regarding banking business contained in this measure. We have one of two methods open to us in dealing with such institutions. Either we make all joint stock banks raise themselves to the level of a Scheduled Bank, namely that they shall have as their capital and reserves something to the tune of Rs. 5 lakhs—and this is not an impossibility—so that we shall not have the non-Scheduled Banks; or we must perhaps change the scope of this measure later on.

The other type of institution which wholly goes out of this measure are the private moneylenders. Sir, we cannot legislate for moneylenders because money-lending and moneylenders happens to be a provincial subject. But I do wish that the Government in consultation with the Reserve Bank would formulate a draft Bill for the use of the Provincial Governments—a draft Bill that is capable of uniform application in all provinces—which will provide a sort of adjunct to this measure which we have before the House today, which will seek to control private money-lending and moneylenders. My own view is that private money-lending must be put an end to. But it may not be very wise to do it because we might be withholding from those people, who are otherwise not supposed to be credit worthy the only type of credit that they get.

The compromise that is open to us is what I have mentioned. I would request the honourable the mover to get in touch with the Provincial Governments, seek their permission, and then get a move on with the Reserve Bank and put out a draft Bill for controlling money-lending and moneylenders.

I am laying stress on this particular aspect of the work we have to do in an advisory capacity, because of the influence the Central Government has because I see that interest rates are rising for those people who need money badly for their seasonal operations. There is no point in the Government saying that we are going to stick to our cheap money policy while they allow the moneylenders to lend at twelve per cent. or more as it might be if the present conditions persist in the rural areas. So the Government of India have willy-nilly to exercise some control over private lending and the rate of interest at which they lend if they are going to maintain a cheap money policy. We cannot have control at one end and absolute freedom to do what people like at the other end. So action in this direction has to be taken before long. If necessary, the Government of India must arm itself with powers in order to interfere in an emergency, because we cannot control one aspect of the monetary mechanism and at the other end leave quite a lot of it out of the scope of our control.

An old story which I would like to repeat here is this. Here this Bill gives a lot of powers and lays a lot of duties on the Reserve Bank. But it is not helping the Reserve Bank to go easily to the aid of institutions that need aid. I remember, Sir, in September 1947, due to the conditions obtaining in the

[Shri T. T. Krishnamachari.]

Punjab, where banking has developed to a very large extent, the Government of India promulgated an ordinance using the provisions of Section 18 of the Reserve Bank Act to allow the Reserve Bank to come to the aid of the small banks and here their report on Currency and Finance for 1947-48 says that the ordinance lapsed because it was felt that no one took advantage of it. Very possibly, the ordinance was there in the Statute Book and no one knew anything about it. Nobody was encouraged to take advantage of it. I would rather incomplete that the Government took steps to amend the provisions of Sections 17 and 18 of the Reserve Bank Act and make a thing like that ordinance an ordinary feature of the Reserve Bank Act rather than make it a temporary feature. The present provisions of Section 17 of the Reserve Bank Act make it difficult for the Reserve Bank to go to the aid of particular banks unless the Bill habit develops in this country to an appreciable extent. But it has not, even though it is more than twelve years that the Reserve Bank had come into being. So the provisions of Section 17 are virtually a dead letter. So long as the Bill habit is not developed, the provisions of that section cannot be taken advantage of. It was thought some years back—because I do believe the Governor of the Reserve Bank sent out a draft Bill for approval in regard to public warehousing—that people could deposit their local produce in such warehouse and the receipts granted by the warehouse keeper would be a negotiable security which would help to develop the Bill habit. Nothing has been done in this direction. We have no public warehouses today. The Bill habit has not developed in this country and therefore the provisions of section 17 are a dead-letter. If we lay certain obligations on a particular type of banks, we must lay some obligation on the Reserve Bank to go to their aid in the time of need. The position of the banks in Bengal during the last six or seven months has been highly deplorable. They are in a terrible condition and it may be that if we ask the Reserve Bank of India to interfere and go to their aid now we will probably be asking it to throw away some money. It may be that if the provisions of Section 17 are liberalised the Reserve Bank of India might be able to help. If the bill habit is not there, what has this Government done to foster the habit? They have not even started the warehousing scheme. I feel that as a sequel to the passing of this measure the members of the House will become alive to the necessity on the part of the Government amending the Reserve Bank of India Act and in fact stream-lining it.

We passed a measure the other day tinkering with a few provisions of the Reserve Bank of India Act, so as to make it a nationalised bank. We have not studied the working of the bank, we have not taken into account all the limitations operating in the working of the bank, we have not taken into consideration all the failures of the bank nor sought to amend the Act in the light of experience gained. I feel that an enquiry can now be instituted (and it would be very useful) not only into the working of the bank but also into the working of the general banking system of the country. I do not say that it should be something of the nature of a royal commission that sat about 18 years ago but a smaller enquiry committee at an expert level would perhaps help us not merely to revise the Reserve Bank Act but replace the measure that is now before the House, which within the limitations of my own capacity I have sought to make out as being highly imperfect.

There are many other matters relevant to the motion before the House that I could say. I know I have exhausted the patience of this House by trying to speak on a very very dull subject which would interest very few and having in mind my own limitations in regard to my powers of exposition. But before I sit down I should like to mention only one matter and that is with regard to bank employees. We are here enacting a banking Bill but what about those people who serve in those banks? I am not a labour leader but I have times without number come across cases where employees of banks have protested against the conditions under which they have to serve. Bank strikes are not unknown. I believe there was a strike sometime back in the bank that is controlled by my honourable friend, Mr. Mody. There was also either a strike or a threatened strike in the Reserve Bank of India. The Reserve Bank was able to lay down certain terms and conditions in regard to the wages to be paid to its employees. These may not have been very liberal but in comparison with the type of wages that exist all over the country I think the Reserve Bank's fixation of wages is fairly reasonable. I feel that that ought to be made the model for all banks. If anyone says that the smaller banks cannot afford to pay the same rates then there is no reason for them to exist. Let them hand over their business to bigger banks and go out.

There is another aspect of the matter which I would like to bring to the notice of the House. Whenever there is a dispute between the bank's employees and employers the provincial governments interfere. I believe there is some such thing now in the offing so far as the U.P. Government is concerned. They try to fix the wages often times in an arbitrary manner. Banking is a central subject. We legislate in regard to the very many provisions of ordinary banking. Should we not tell the banks what they ought to do in the matter of the wages paid to its employees? I think it is only fair that we should also tell the banks what they ought to pay to their servants. I do feel, though we need not put it in this particular measure, that the Central Government should use its enormous influence to bring to bear on banks generally through the medium of the Reserve Bank the necessity of their providing decent living conditions for their employees and also intimate to the provincial government that the Reserve Bank's advice might be sought in any arbitration of this nature. The final say in the matter of fixation of wages should be left to the Central Government or to such agency as the Central Government might employ to advise the provincial government in this matter. Some kind of coordination is necessary, because banking has developed to an enormous measure. What is paid to an employee by the Central Bank in Bombay I do not see why it should be refused to the Central Bank's employee in Madras or in Cawnpore? (An Honourable Member: "because of the difference in the cost of living.") The difference in the cost of living in urban areas all over the country is practically next to nothing. The urban cost of living in Bombay, Madras and Calcutta is more or less alike today; thanks to our policy of price control the cost of living is more or less alike. With perhaps a little variation here and there in regard to the dearness allowance, the basic wages in all types of bank employment should be made practically the same to all bank employees all over India. I do hope that the Government would move in this matter.

I have given notice of one or two amendments and if I am permitted to move them I shall make a few comments in addition to what I have already made while speaking to these amendments. As it is I feel that this is undoubtedly a good measure so far as it goes but it does not go very far. Sir, I support the motion before the House.

Prof. K. T. Shah (Bihar: General): Sir, while congratulating the Honourable Minister for the lucid exposition that he has given us of the various changes made in the original Bill by the Select Committee, and also his references to the purpose which the Bill is intended to serve, I regret that I am not able to take the view of the fullness and comprehensiveness of the measure that the Honourable Minister would like us to take.

Difference of opinion with the powers that he has become so characteristic of me, and minutes of dissent have become unfortunately so common, that it has almost become a standing joke with those who happen not to agree with me or who even agreeing are unable to support me openly. As, however, I have not developed any very considerable hump of modesty, I am not discouraged by the open or concealed innuendo sort of ridicule that has been showered upon me or thrown at me from time to time. (Shri H. V. Kamath: "Not ridicule.") Thank you very much. I am however inclined to remind the House that it is the fate of those (and I may say it in all humility) who are somewhat in advance of their time, or who have the misfortune to differ from a majority of the fellows, to suffer misunderstanding, if not ridicule. But as my back is broad enough to bear all that I have never been deterred by ridicule or misrepresentation.

Sir, it is a word of wisdom, or at least world's wisdom which says:

यद्यपि बहु लोकविहृदं नाचरणीयं नादरणीयम्

I feel that even if, for the time being the majority is not with me, there is no reason to fear that in course of time perhaps the eyes even of the majority may be opened. I for one feel that though I am unable to carry my colleagues, whether in the Select Committee or in this House, with me on important matters, and though I have no means of judging at this moment the majority sentiment in the country at large, may I assure the House that the majority will be with me ultimately, if it is not so today. I have therefore no hesitation in placing before the House some of the salient points on which I have been compelled to disagree with the majority in the Select Committee, and in which perhaps I may have the misfortune of finding even this House not quite sympathetic on those issues.

Sir, My task has been rendered very much easier and simpler by the very comprehensive review that my honourable friend, Mr. Krishnamachari, has placed before you, of the measure as a whole. And if one may offer a compliment without being presumptions, I do feel that Mr. Krishnamachari's review touching on the salient features, and even the weak points of the measure was far more searching and comprehensive than was done by the Honourable Dr. Matthai, without meaning any offence to the sponsor of the Bill. I may have to repeat some of his arguments, though I will try to do so from a different point of view so that the House may not be wearied by mere repetition.

I have also to offer an excuse of the kind that Mr. Krishnamachari himself has offered, that is to say, I am not myself concerned directly with banking. I am not a banker—thank God—and I am not accustomed to seek favours of bankers. Sir, it has been very aptly said that if you wish to misunderstand a country entirely go to the man who has been twenty-five years in it. That was with regard to the foreign bureaucracy which ruled in this country, and the remark was made by one who was a life-long critic of it. May I say that those who are directly and daily concerned with the routine of a business like banking are bound to take, unavoidably, without the least mala fide, a narrow or restrictive view, a routine view, of their operation—may I say, a purely traditional view—which may not be in the wider or long-term interests of the community they intend to serve. I am not at all challenging or impugning the bona fides of our banker friends in this House, or those who have had some interest in shaping the Select Committee's Report. Unavoidably they take a view of the purpose of the institution, of the functions of the institution, of the eventual objective that the institution is intended to serve, which is really not always in consonance with the long range interests of the country as a whole. Accordingly, those who have made it a life-time study of the business of banking, or viewed it from a somewhat detached standpoint considering the root, the theory, as well as a examining the practice, may claim to have a broader and wider outlook than those immersed in the daily routine of the business narrowly conducted.

Sir, I claim a certain advantage in this respect, not only because I have been a life-long student of such problems; but also because, in the last ten years or so, I have been connected with the National Planning Committee, whose function had been to plan for the country its economic life in all its items, all its aspects and stages. That has compelled me, even if I did not want, to take a comprehensive and co-ordinated view of the entire economic life of the country which those who specialise and who confine themselves to single objectives may not have. It is no very great merit I admit; but it does compel me to place before you the matters from that angle which those who consider our banks and banking by themselves are perhaps unable to do.

With this apology, Sir, I would now proceed to the specific points which I would like to place before the House, from the particular angle from which I think they ought to have been viewed by the sponsors of this measure, and by this House. In the first place, this Bill claims to be a consolidating and an amending measure. But I fail to see what it consolidates and what it amends. So far, at any rate, as the various types of banking are concerned, this Bill gives a cold shoulder to most of them, confining itself almost entirely to the commercial type of banking. This, may I say, is not necessarily quite the indigenous, the native or the natural type of banking which we should want to have, which we should develop, and encourage.

As regards the various improvements necessary in the law for making banking serve the deeper purpose that all banks, and, for the matter of that, all Utility services should aim at,—I am afraid the Bill as it has emerged from the Select Committee leaves me entirely cold. In a few moments I will try to place before you the reasons why I consider that the Bill has failed in its own claim in the very title and preamble with which it comes before this House. The Bill neither consolidates nor amends the law as it should have done and as it claims to do in the title and the preamble.

In the first place the remark has already been made by my honourable friend Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari, with regard to private money-lenders, and with regard to those private bankers, who, without calling themselves banks, or who without being organised as joint stock companies, are still carrying on the business of banks, who are not included in this Bill. I for one do not see why that part of the banking business of the country, involving such a very considerable amount, should have been left out of the purview of this legislation.

If the proposed legislation is to safeguard as it claims . . . (Shri B. L. Soudhi: Is that not a provincial matter?) If you have a little patience I will give an answer to all those points. The question with regard to the constitutional difficulty appears to me to be over-ridden and exaggerated. After all what is the Constitution? We are making it for our country now. If at that time, this kind of objections are thrown at us as so many reasons for not doing something, the proper thing, then we are not discharging our duty in the matter of the Constitution.

If it is a veritable or genuine difficulty, which is found in the basis of our life as a nation, then the Constitution-makers should take note of it, and try to devise ways and means to overcome it. But if your difficulty is only a formal one, a mere obstruction, then I will not take any notice of it. My honourable friend Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari has suggested that it is possible to circularise the Provincial Governments to make an arrangement and by agreement suo motu as it were by our own authority as the Central Government in this country for having a comprehensive co-ordinated legislation of the type this Bill pretends to be. The argument, therefore, about its being constitutionally barred does not prevent such an arrangement. Even though they may perhaps be left out simply as mere money-lenders, I do not see why, for instance, the so-called shroffs who do a good deal of banking business proper, banking business as defined in this Bill, banking business as it should be done, and which was natural and indigenous to this country, are left out, and must be left out. What is more, if the provisions of this Bill are hedged in, with so many controlling, supervising, checking by way of amendment or improvement in the measure, then it would be to the interests of those who want to take the cream out of this business without running the risk of being brought under control, of being brought to book by the Reserve Bank or by Government. It would be the simplest thing for them to say that they will not organise as a banking company so that they may escape the which those who specialise and who confine themselves to single objectives operation of the law, and yet get all the benefits of the banking business for themselves. I feel very strongly that banking, which is a great public utility and social service, should not be left at the mercy of predatory beasts of prey and private entrepreneurs who think more of their own interests, and not of the interests of the community they serve.

Even the pretence of helping the depositor is only a pretence as I shall show a little while later. Those who think, therefore, of banking as the preserve,—the exclusive preserve,—the close preserve,—of private proprietors, or the shareholders as they are called in companies, do not appear to me to be really serving the interests of the country. They do not seem even to understand the true nature and the real function of a bank, if it is to be a real social utility service and not a predatory trade which many banks are doing. I, therefore, think the shroff and the private banker should be brought under control, if you really have the interests either of the depositor, or what I think is still more sacrosanct, the interest of the community and the unborn generation of the country, at heart. This Bill does not do so.

This Bill is therefore radically defective, and untrue to its very title, preamble and pretension with which it has come before the House seeking support. In the past a good deal of legislation was passed by the Central Legislature which affected not merely Provinces, but States which were outside the competence, theoretically speaking, of the then Government of India. Nevertheless, very often the same object was achieved by agreement. Why should it not be done now? If that was the real objection. Tell me that this is not an objection but an obstruction, and I will accept it. But don't raise obstacles, and make bogies out of things of the very nature of which you are ignorant, and try to prevent the progress of the country, the development of our unknown resources, the realization of our potentialities which a bank is supposed to help in achieving and which this legislation will not allow the bank to achieve. I am, therefore, placing before you some of the items on which this legislation is, to my mind, fundamentally defective, and as such the matter should be referred back to the Select Committee or some other Select Committee.

Incidentally, Sir, may I take one remark of my honourable friend Mr. Krishnamachari, as regards a previous survey by an expert Committee of people familiar with the business and its nature and purpose, to advise us before such a legislation as this could be brought up. While agreeing in principle with him, I am afraid his own remarks in another connection in the same speech will show if not the futility, at least the inadvisability of a suggestion like this. While speaking about the nationalised Reserve Bank, and the Directorates he asked for incorporation of some new blood in it; and gave before the House some very interesting examples of the type of new blood and the type of new objectives a nationalised banking institution should have. It is, of course, not the fault of nationalisation as a principle—which I guess my honourable friend realises and accepts;—it is the fault of those who have power in their hands but who may not have perhaps the appreciation of the nature and the purpose of a nationalised Bank Directorate, that they cannot see the ways and means of choosing the proper personnel if the institution is to have really new blood and a new orientation. If this be true the Committee also may run the same risk. After all, it would not be for Mr. Krishnamachari to suggest either his own name or mine for composing the Committee. Therefore, he will have to be refuted by his own words. "After all", they would tell him, "you asked for a Committee, and we have given you one". And as a friend of mine told me on another occasion while we were having the food debate recently, a committee is the surest means to postpone, to defer and shelve very important issues. If that is the objective of my friend—and I am sure it is not—then I cannot agree with him. But if a genuine committee of people who really can serve or are competent to do so, is appointed, then I do think a suggestion of this kind for vetting the measure is necessary for preparing the material, and placing it before the House if all the aspects of the proposal and of the objective with which it is brought are to be properly carried out.

Sir, I look upon this proposal not merely as an incident in our daily routine, I look upon this proposal as a great, organic measure of national development, which it would be really a pity if we were to scamp, if we were just to pass through in a hurry, and if we were merely to consider matters of party loyalty and discipline alone not of the greater loyalty to the country and its unborn generation as well. From that point of view, Sir, I offer no further apology for the arguments I am going to advance against the report of the Select Committee, and in support of the view I hold that the matter should be referred back and the report be rejected.

Our Constitution has provided, and that clause I believe has been passed, that "untouchability" in every form is abolished, and the practice of it in any respect is to be made a crime. Now, Sir, I fear that we are developing a new type of untouchability or even an "unspeakability", and that is against the Socialists and much worse the Communists. If any measure is to be even in the remotest degree thought likely to be socialistic, or if any speech is thought likely to be socialistic, you just say, "That fellow is a Socialist, and no more consideration should be given to whatever he says". That is precisely the type of argument of those who are bankrupt otherwise, and therefore they need not be listened to with any greater respect than they would like to show to those who have the misfortune of differing from them.....(Interruption) Wait worse is coming.

I would now like to pass on to not only the objectives of the Bill, but the object of banking in general. What is banking intended to do? I put it forward—and you can laugh me out if you like as a mere student, as a mere theoretician—that there must be at least four cardinal objectives that a proper banking organisation of the country should try and achieve. I shall place them before you in, so to say, the reverse order or the order of ascending merit. There is in the first place the economy in ordinary currency, I mean metallic currency, the mere barren money material. The more we lock up the capital resources of the country in the barren money materials, the worse it is for us. A bank is an instrument, the bank is an institution which tries to help you to economise money. In fact, in the previous century the greatest possible emphasis was laid upon the bank's function to economise money material, to devise methods, to devise instruments, to devise ways and means, by which excessive use of metallic money could be avoided. Its function as a store of value, the miser's hoards which used to be piled up in days before banking came should be avoided, and the lifeblood of national economy should be available for better use.

Now, I find nothing in this Bill which would justify the pretension, or support the claim that this consolidating measure spoken of in such high sounding terms, is going in any way to assist us to economise money. I realise the fault now lies not with the Bank. I hasten to add, that this function of economising metallic currency, is not now left with the banker, or left in a very small measure. It is the Government who have taken over the function of regulating metallic money in circulation,—and, with what success you know, regulating prices of commodities or the prices of money in terms of commodities. That, however, may have in course of time become a somewhat minor function. But a second function which is no less important is that of organising mobilising, and utilising credit.

Credit, Sir, is the undeveloped wealth of the country, which the bank anticipates and provides as ready cash or capital to those who will use it in a more productive, more constructive manner, so that the process of production may not only continue, but that process may intensify, and new wealth may be introduced in the body economic, which, without the assistance of such new blood, so to say, may be lacking.

Now, here again, I find that any kind of new ground being broken is lacking in this Bill. Any kind of an impetus, of a spur to new devices, new ways, new methods of anticipating future wealth, utilising it in advance, so to say, so that before you feel the need this wealth is available. The sinews of war—if I may use a somewhat discordant phrase in this connection—must be made available and the economic machine may be kept functioning most smoothly.

This, Sir, is a tragedy due to the fact that banking is in private hands. Banking being in private hands, either the Banks try to be unduly conservative and go only in those places where they are sure of the cream for themselves and the other substances that arise from banking. But what is more, they are afraid; they are cowards, who will not tread the unbeaten path and therefore new developments, new directions in which the country's future lies, will not be tried by them.

Shri B. Das (Orissa: General): Can you give us a concrete example?

Prof. K. T. Shah: I am not confined to tradition or convention; and therefore, if I cannot give any example to satisfy you just now, it isn't that I do not know them, it is that they are not worth quoting.

My stalwart friend, Mr. Das, in his fervent support of the private enterprise is, of course, very willing (Shri B. Das: "For the nationalisation of the Reserve Bank I wanted all credit to myself.") Thank you, very much. You are an unexpected ally, and I am very grateful. I hope you will also support the nationalisation of all other industries, all other utilities all other services in the country, so that we shall all be socially happy, no one to prey upon his fellows, none to exploit them. I am glad about the conversion of my honourable friend Mr. Das to a noble purpose, namely, Socialisation, and I hope that all Insurance companies, all shipping companies, all transport companies, and all electric companies will be nationalised.

If we confine ourselves to the proper purposes and real functions of banking, or the service which the banks are intended to render, then the most important thing the Government should not overlook is that function of the Banks which pertains to the development of future resources. We have, Sir, received banking as a heritage from the British regime. That regime was very much more concerned with commerce, export and taking away the life-blood of this country, as it were, rather than the development of its resources. The greatest aim or purpose for which the British in the last sixty or seventy years ruled and dominated this country was to get the utmost advantage for his own strength, and ignore or neglect the economic possibilities of this country, itself.

This could be achieved only through trade. Trade and commerce was made by them the essence of banking, forgetting that a much more important role of Banking lies in a far more constructive direction than a mere exchange of commodities. National economy, unfortunately under influence of British rule and the peculiar exigencies of British economic life, had been made to appear as though it was always operating for exchange. I unfortunately hold heretical views on the subject namely, that national economy should be for use, production should be for use and not for exchange primarily. To take the view that the purpose of Banking is merely commercial, that is to say, taking the money of the public and investing it in short-term securities, not producing therefrom anything by way of new wealth, but just facilitating transfer from the producer to the consumer, and to think that that is the only type of banking, I say this is a view which I am unable to endorse. That is a view which has come to us from the British owners of this country; and because of that we have been so obsessed with it that our entire out-look has been dimmed, our vision itself has been clouded; and after fifteen months of national independence we are unable to get out of the mould which they had prescribed for our thought. I know our education has been inspired, dominated, and guided by their own objectives; and our very mentality itself is such that any kind of new thought is regarded as something terrible, something untouchable, something that should be avoided. Therefore, my respectful submission is that, although the Chairman of a great banking corporation of this country may regard it as very much revolutionary, I think sooner or later it will have to be dealt with, and I suggest that it be dealt with sooner rather than later.

The next function, apart from mobilisation and utilisation of credit, is the mobilisation of the available capital resources, and their employment or proper utilisation. Deposits are supposed to be so much savings; in the last analysis, surplus of production over consumption, which those who own them are able to bring forward and try to secure safety with some productivity, productivity not coming by the mere fact of deposit but arising because of accepted or implied utilisation of these deposits in productive channels of new wealth. That is a function again which this Bill seems to be utterly innocent of. It does not try to devise and develop the wage and means by which you can utilise, mobilise and intensify savings, the utilisation of which in productive channels would be one of the greatest services to the community. But, as I have said, the whole business is conceived in the spirit of the beast of prey; it is not the philosophy of service, of being useful to the fellows. Naturally, therefore, they do not want to go into these paths, which may quite possibly be dangerous. In fact, they would like to have a totally different corporation. Take the Industrial Finance Corporation, which will do nothing beyond endorsing those securities or helping industrial securities of a particular type or what the court may approve. Neither in agriculture nor in new or developing industry will the ordinary commercial banker dare to go; and, not going there, he naturally leaves those channels barren, unproductive and unused, and we are perpetuating that system by this Bill.

We are also not doing anything to make this unused capital not only available in a very full measure, but make it available so that it is really useful. Whether or not there is a depression on the horizon, whether or not the Finance Minister has that in the back-ground of his mind or on the tip of his lips, I do not know; but I do know this that as long as your business will not utilise the available capital resources of the country in the shape of savings or deposits, as long as your legislation does not enable them to do so, as long as your legislation does not spur, as it were, the process, you will have always the danger, and the risk of falling into periodical depressions. Today you may be carried with the tide in an upward swing, and go into shares or stocks or securities ten times their ordinary value. Tomorrow you may find that, by some trick of the turn of the wheel, or by some mischance of the management perhaps, also sometimes by some fault of the Finance Minister in proposing tax-enhancements, your securities going down five times or four times or one time, whatever it may be. That ought not to be the case in, may I say, a properly planned and organised society? These ups and downs, these vicissitudes, these risks of ordinary business should not occur if your society is scientifically planned, if your legislation is properly framed and if your entire industrial system is working in a coordinated manner.

And that brings me, Sir, to a little diversion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has there not been sufficient diversion already?

Prof. K. T. Shah: Diversion not on my speech; diversion may be amongst the members. But so far as I am concerned, I am innocent of any diversion. I won't call it diversion; I may call it a lecture, if you like, a professorial lecture, and if that entertains you, I shall be most highly rewarded.

Now, the purpose of legislation is using that which is, that is to say to conserve it and also to protect and maintain it on proper lines, upto a proper standard so that, by legislative protection, help is given to that which conserves in the best manner possible. Then there is another kind of legislation which indicates the line of progress, which is a sort of guide-post for the road we have to travel. Without being dynamic or revolutionary, it may nevertheless be progressive, so that not only does it give a protection or safeguard to that which is, but also indicates that which should be. And the third kind of legislation is frankly reforming if not revolutionary. Now, there is a legislation which I am afraid is not merely protective or safeguarding that which is or even indicating that which should be, the promotion of that which ought to be. I have my doubts if it is also sufficiently conservative of that which is. All that it does is keep to the beaten track. Here and there it makes a patch; work of change, and calls it a consolidating and amending Bill. I regret I am not able to see the utility or justification for that title. Lastly Sir, I come to that function of banking, which is the consequence of all the three that I have mentioned, the active, direct assistance for promoting the economic life of the country, both in production and distribution, as well as in the organisation of the normal life of society. Here again, this Bill is surprisingly—and I advisedly use the word surprisingly—lacking in any kind of hint or note for the progressive utilisation and realisation of our potentialities. Sir, in all these respects the Bill fails. In none of these respects does the Bill do anything by way of consolidating the law, or co-ordinating the various types of banking. And I for one do not see how we can justly regard this as a consolidating and amending measure.

Let me now come to certain individual provisions of this measure, to which also reference must be made in this general discussion. It is intended to confine this measure to a particular type of banking. But in that type will be included, and I think included with a certain degree of immunity, the so-called Exchange Banks which are of foreign origin, and which are taking the best business of the country even to-day, and which have been in the past the source of the utmost possible denial of the possibilities in this country. These Banks had a monopoly of exchange business, and they thrived on our resources, and nevertheless insulted us by not accepting as collateral the insurance policies of Indian insurance companies. These Exchange Banks, I am aware, will have to come under what is called the "Licensing" system. But I for one at the risk of being called very narrow-minded or parochial in my outlook, do not see why banking business of this country which is a great public utility service, should not be confined only to those companies or organisations registered in this country. I do not see why we should continue to have this soft corner, this indulgence—to call it nothing worse—that this Bill shows to foreign enterprise, and which perhaps many of its sponsors feel for the foreign capitalists. I have never concealed my view that the foreign capital as such may not be objectionable. But the foreign capitalist, and the influence he brings with him, are very objectionable.

I object to capitalists of every nationality, including our own but a foreign capitalist is still worse. Your own capitalists you may declare as offenders against the public safety, and deal with them prescribing any punishment from a sentence of detention till the court rises, to the ultimate penalty of the law. But the foreign capitalist coming to us is a very dangerous commodity. As such, I feel that the Exchange Banks which are the head and front, as it were, of the foreign capitalist in India should be brought in one form or another within the scope of a consolidating legislation of the type that we are bringing in.

Exchange Banks, Sir, do a lot of business with Indian resources; they do not bring such capital from outside. I do not have here with me exact statistics to tell you what proportion of our trade is done by the foreign Exchange Banks in our midst. But I believe from the statistics that I have got that quite a fair proportion of their resources are collected here, comparatively very little being brought from outside; and they do the greater proportion of their business from those resources. Yet, under the terms of this Act, we are not able to control and supervise their working, except in connection with this licensing? Sir, the conditions under which the Licence may be granted can easily be satisfied, without the business of the foreign Exchange Bank being in any way prejudiced. And the Indian bank cannot get the share of the business that it is by right entitled to have.

Sir, there was a time, and not so very long ago, but in the memory of many of us here in this House, when it was regarded as a cardinal principle of policy that Coastal Shipping at least should be reserved to Indian ship-owners. And if I am not mistaken, Mahatma Gandhi in his celebrated Eleven Points, at the time of the Salt Satyagraha, made this as one of the cardinal demands—I mean the reservation of Coastal Shipping for the ship-owners of this country. Foreign Exchange banks are on a par. In my opinion, Sir, Exchange Banking should be reserved exclusively for the banks owned, and manned, and controlled in this country by its citizens.

That being my view, I find one of the biggest defects in this Bill is in regard to its reserving or confining itself only to commercial banks registered in this country, with only a mild dose of Licensing. It is thought that this particular clause relating to Licensing is likely to help to control business of a certain kind among the Exchange Banks.

But that is not enough. Sir, if exchange banks are genuinely working in the interest of this country—which I do not believe, but many foreigners say that they are here for our good—then why don't they register themselves in this country? There are many other industrial concerns which have done this. There is the Imperial Chemicals (India) Ltd., which, for securing tariff protection, passes off as Indian. What is the reason, what is the Exchange Banks superiority over Indian that they should remain outside the control of the law, that they should refuse to be registered in this country. Why should we be obliged to make an exception from our consolidating and comprehensive legislation in regard to banking in general? Why we should make an exception of them, I fail to understand. When the proper time comes, I will table an amendment that this law should apply to all types of banks in this country, amongst them being included Exchange Banks.

Another omission is—and that also was referred to by Mr. Krishnamachari—in regard to limitation of dividends. One of the least satisfactory arguments, if I may say so without offence, is in that paragraph of the Select Committee's Report which relates to this matter. All that it says is that because some other piece of legislation is being thought of let us not touch it just now even though the original Bill had included this principle of limiting dividends.

I do not want just now to go into what the exact limits should be. I am now on the principle of the thing, that the dividends to be distributed by banking companies should be limited.

This, Sir, stands on a totally different footing from the dividends of other companies. I had occasion to say at an earlier stage that that particular measure, as it stands, is not likely to achieve its professed object of checking inflation. But over granting that it does, special treatment must be given to Banks. Whereas the other companies have some claim to say that they have earned their dividends or profits by their enterprise, bankers, I venture to submit to the House, have the least claim to say so, because they are dealing in other people's money. All shareholders are, Sir, parasites; shareholders of banks are peculiarly parasitical who do nothing and yet claim to have earned a dividend.

On an earlier occasion, a wholly irrelevant argument was advanced that they had contributed so much income-tax. As if it was an obligation they have conferred on us that they get something from other people's money and contribute a part of it to the State. Another argument used was that they have tried to help the commercial community or the banking business in general. I personally do not see that they have, even so, done any service so that any special reward should be given to them; and whether there is not a case for excluding them from the operation of a law such as the one that we are now thinking of.

But the greatest objection to this omission is that, admittedly, that particular measure now under consideration by a Select Committee is intended only for the emergency. It has a restricted objective, whether it is achieved or not, of checking inflation.

I take, however, my stand on the limitation of dividend in banking companies on a totally different proposition. That is to say, banking concerns are making their profits from other people's money. And since Banking companies have to play such an important role in the development of the country's economy and in the realization of its potentialities, it is more than necessary, just and proper, that the Bank proprietors, who contribute nothing beyond their capital should not demand unlimited dividend. Accordingly, I don't see why a definite limit should not be fixed upon that claim of sharing the profit that the Bank may earn.

My friend Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari mentioned his amazing modesty in suggesting a certain figure as the limit of distributable dividend. I complement him on his modesty but I am not following him just now, because I may have a still different figure to suggest. But even assuming that, those of us who are very modest, those of us who are very reasonable, those of us who are willing to compromise at every point merely because we find they have a slightly different principle in view, would be regarded as extremists, revolutionaries, or still worse Communists. That is not the intention. The intention is that according to every principle that one can think of, the banking profit must not be judged by the amount of dividend distributed, or the size of the reserve fund built up out of the profits. The success of banking must be judged by the amount of service to community in the various forms that I have indicated but if it is judged by the dividends earned from the most safest business, with almost loaded dice in its favour, then, however high the dividend, I cannot say that it has discharged its primary function. As such, therefore, Sir, not for the emergency purpose only of checking inflation, not for two or three years only, but permanently; so long as banking remains in private hands, so long as it is the concern of private proprietors, so long as it is preying upon the community, so long as it demands a disproportionately fat return for whatever service is rendered, we must impose a very rigid limit on the dividends that can be distributed, or the profit can be even carried on into reserve and is made available to the proprietor at a later time, or be made available for redistribution on a more favourable occasion.

I take my stand unhesitatingly on the principle that banking, being a public utility concern, must not be in private hand. So long as you are unavoidably obliged to do so and tolerate them in private hands, so long at least you must take this precaution that they do not run away with all the profits and that they discharge their function in full. They think they are great makers of charity to the country because an income-tax or corporation-tax is charged on their profit. They are nothing of the sort.

In this view of the omission or the defective provision in this Bill I may also add another, that in regard to the Directors. It is interesting to know the views they have about the Directors, and the way the Directors are to be elected. Here and there a slight restriction or amendment is added in the Bill to make one think that the Bill is strict. It is only nicely sugar-coated, but the real sense of the matter is not there.

The main objective of the Bill is said to be to safeguard the interest of the depositors. I question that the depositors are the only persons to be protected. But assuming that is the objective, I am surprised that no Director is provided in the arrangement to safeguard the interests of the depositors. The Directors are all to represent the shareholders. You have the analogy of the Insurance Companies where you have a Director of Policyholders. You have even the analogy of the Ordinary companies in which there are debentures you have debenture Directors or Trustees. Why should you not say that there shall be some Directors whose special function it would be to look after the interest of the Depositors, if your guiding principle is really to safeguard the interests of Depositors? Or is it only a verbal profession a lip loyalty that you want to use for throwing dust in our eyes? Is it your intention that you use high-sounding words and carry on the business in the same unrepentant incorrigible manner of bankers who live upon other people's sweat?

The Bible says: "Thou shalt earn thy bread with the sweat of thy brow." The bank says: "Earn thy bread with other people's sweat of the brow." That being the intention and practice, naturally these people come forward, and profess to render all services to the community; and say to you: "we are guarding the interests of the depositors". But in fact we are enabling bankers to deal in other people's money and we are thinking all the time only of proprietors' interests. Our provisions in this Bill secure the safest investment and we want the Reserve Bank to help the Bankers in hour of need, which is of their own making, and so allow them to distribute all that we have earned. That being the case, I do not think this Bill can be called a really amending Bill, if it omits, and as long as it omits, to safeguard the interest of the depositors, which is its professed objective. This safeguard must be properly secured by the presence of the Directors safeguarding their interests particularly.

There is still another omission, that is with regard to the success of the bank. For the success of the bank it is not the shareholder who is responsible. His is probably the least contribution. It is not even the depositor who is also a merely passive agent or a sleeping partner in the undertaking. The real-effective contribution is that of the operative staff that is responsible; and you say nothing with regard to the interest of the overworked staff. We are professing very great desire to seek cooperation from the workers. Time and again, on occasion or without occasion, from every platform by the highest authority in the State, we hear demands that there must be cooperation by the workers. Labour must cooperate; labour must come and join hands with the proprietors in increasing production. "Produce or perish" is the slogan. I am afraid "produce and perish" is the more correct expression that ought to be the slogan justly to be adopted by these who commonly use it.

Here is a most glaring example that the worker is not even thought of in the entire system of this Bill. It is not, if I may say so, a mere question of giving a few more crumbs to the employees, if the workers threaten to strike, as a barking dog gets a few crumbs, and then say: 'if you don't do the work, there is the authority of Government who will declare banking to be an essential services, and so stop all strikes'. As you have the power, you can do it; but remember this that by this kind of policy you will not solve the social problem. You are building up a great heritage of distrust and resentment in the country in the masses that are going to rule the country in time to come whether you like it or not. This is a country that is going to be ruled by workers and peasants. This is not going to be a country of mere middle-classes who also have their sympathies with the moneyed interests, because they think if we are beggars to day, we may have money to-morrow. This is going to be a country of workers and peasants. As such, do not, I beg, give them any ground, any solid reason to believe that they don't count for anything in your social system or legislation, in the basic principles of the legislation that we enact in this House. The workers must be regarded as an integral part of the community. The workers must, in my opinion, be regarded as the principal partner or contributory in earning the bankers profits, and adding to the production of this country. It is not useful, it is not proper to think of them only as so many barking dogs. It may be all right for Sir Samuel Hoare to say, "let the dogs bark, the caravan will pass on" you cannot say that. In this House, we who claim to be the representatives of the people, we cannot say that; we must not say that. We must not allow the slightest hint to attach to our legislation, and to our speeches that the workers do not count.

Here is another instance in which I have put forward an amendment which I hope will be properly dealt with at the proper time that the workers' representative sit on terms of equality on the Board of Directors of Banks. And the reason for that demand is not of one sentiment only. Unless and until you associate them, you will not have trained personnel for one thing. I am putting it at the lowest ground. You will not have the experienced manager which you may need when you want to take over the entire banking system. I am not thinking of this Bank or that Bank. I do look forward to the day when the entire productive process of this country, and all the several aspects of its national life, will be fully in the hands of the workers or producers, and not in the hands of drones and parasites, that the bankers are.

The Bankers, Sir, may look perfectly innocent when they come to you and say. If there is a threat of strike in the Central Bank, or in the Imperial Bank, or in any other Bank, we are willing to give what the Government gives. The Government is a national service. The Government may or may not be able to give much; but who are you who are making private profits from other people's money for yourselves, and getting fat dividends absolutely unearned. to come and say: we have given dearness allowance, we have given housing allowance, we have given transport allowance; and therefore we must not be asked to share the profits with them? I am asking that the workers should be associated fully as equal partners in your business. I am asking that they should sit on terms of equality on the Committees of management and in the Boards of Directors, so that they shall be trained, they shall be educated, they shall be experienced in the conduct of the business; so that when the day comes, when the banking business in its entirety is taken over by the country, they shall be available for such public service; and we shall not be exposed to the threats that the capitalist holds out today that capital is shy, and that it will run away. Where will it run away? to hell? Where will it go? What country is there in the world today which is going to welcome, entertain and accept the capitalists unless they are also workers. Don't you imagine that there remains a day for you when you can threaten the country that you would pack up and go away with your bags of money and belongings. ~~Don't you see to it that you take away nothing; we shall examine what you take with you.~~ We shall see that nothing of value and importance, that ~~can be of service to the~~ country is allowed to be taken away, free of charge. And if you attempt to smuggle, you shall have to pay dearly for it; let me tell you, however much I may sound a prophet of woe today, you will have to remember my words.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I believe you are not addressing the Chair.

Prof. K. T. Shah: I am addressing the Chair, Sir. I am not addressing you personally, Sir, I know you are not a parasite. You are the most useful and productive member of society. When I am addressing the Chair, Sir, I view it as an impersonal institution, which is to guide the debate, to help up the light, and to give us rulings in case of difficulty. I do not regard you as an individual, with all respect, in the Chair. When I said you meant it to be impersonal. Please, therefore, if I have offended you, do forgive me. It was farthest from my intention to offend perhaps the most respected person on this House.

I was developing the various defects in this legislation. I have spoken about the depositor, of the operative in a Bank who goes unnoticed. Last but not the least, I come to what I may call the customer. The customer may, of course, be the shareholder also. The biggest customer is often a shareholder also. A great banker told me not many years ago that when a run was organised on his bank, he had the courage to say he knew who had organised the run. He had the courage to say, well, gentlemen, I will keep the bank open for twenty four hours; next time, beware. That is the device that customers who are interested as shareholders may adopt, and it may be dangerous to Banks and to their prosperity.

But, there is a wider world of customers who are particularly innocent, who are not aware of your various manoeuvres, all your various devices by which you carry on your business and make it a moneyed success. This customer that I am speaking of is the country as a whole. It is not individual customer; it is not even perhaps the living customer of today; it is the customer, the country as a whole and its unborn generations. I mean the immense reserve potentialities that you as bankers are expected to, or are in a position to, help and develop, but which you, or your predecessors of the same agency used to neglect, to despise, and to leave undeveloped, so that the country should remain in the depth of poverty in which we are. Therefore, I say these customers should also be attended to. Since no one is so unorganised as the customer in order to be able to make their voices felt, the customers must be represented or nominated so to say by the Government. I think that in the various provisions of this Bill there are other omissions, not the least of which is the absence of a direct control, a living control by the Government except a few provisions that are there enabling the Reserve Bank to step in at a time when it has reason to believe that the affairs of a Bank are going wrong. That is my next point. The control provisions are extremely misleading. The Reserve Bank is supposed to intervene; but it intervenes after the mischief is done, not before. That is to say, after a bank manager or director or the whole board has cooked the goose, and after all the mischief has been done, risky business undertaken, losses incurred and the serval interest concerned sabotaged. Then, somehow, you spread the rumour that things are not as best as they can be; the Reserve Bank sends somebody who looks into the affairs and then makes a report. This report may be acted upon or not. I should like the Inspectors whom the Reserve Bank may appoint not to be not some blood brother of the capitalists. They should be really some independent agency; they should be—I am only giving this as an illustration, I am not pinning my faith on it. I am quite prepared to accept a better suggestion—they should be let us say, from the accountants, from the Finance Department of the Government of India, even if the Finance Minister happens to be an industrialist or a businessman.

The point that I wish to make is this. If you are to have proper Inspectors, if you are to have Inspectors and auditors who are to act, not merely as the nominees of the proprietors of the Banks, but to be the real watch dogs on behalf of the public, then I take it that your auditor, Inspector should go not only when an emergency arises. He should be in a position to be constantly on the watch, and go at any time without notice and inspect a bank. Then only you will be able to keep the people in the right line. Then only you may have some guarantee that even the professed objective of your banking legislation, namely the safeguarding of the interests of the depositor, will be achieved to some extent. Otherwise, I for one, do not see how you will be able to achieve any of the objectives that you have set out.

The next point that I would like to place before you, Sir, arises out of some comparison of the previous legislation with this. The previous legislation had made a very considerable distinction between banks registered or licensed in one province, and having branches in another, and banks registered and licensed in a province of India as against those in the States of India. Luckily that distinction is going. The States having ceased to exist as a separate entity, we are having a chance of a uniform, comprehensive legislation in a matter so vital as this.

But some restriction, limitation on branchification still survives. The conditions and regulations under which a Bank can open branches, provide capital, maintain deposits, and so on are still there in essence though not in the same words. I put it to the House, that, if banking is to serve successfully and satisfactorily the various purposes, the various aims and objects of a proper banking system, then, you have to choose between one of two systems:— Either the centralised system that prevails in the United Kingdom, where a few big banks have a large number of branches that serve the interests of the community; or as in the United States, a number of decentralised banks, each serving the peculiar interests or requirements of the given community. This Bill, as another respected friend said a few minutes back, is neither fish, flesh nor good red herring. I do not know how a fish will taste or flesh will taste or a red herring will taste. But, I should like to use the idiom only to say that this Bill does not go either towards what I might call the Centralised banking of the British type or the Decentralised banking of the American type. It tries to sit between two stools, and it is likely that it may come a cropper between them. It may not succeed.

Then there are the provisions relating to the various kinds of registration of Banks in one province operating in another province, or more than one province, or in the two capital cities of Bombay and Calcutta. Why not in any other city I cannot understand? The special selection of these two cities appears to me to be assuming an obsession against the proper development and wide diffusion of the banking service in the country. Once more I join issue on the fundamentals: Do you or do you not wish the banking service to be available to all the country as much as possible, and in all its various requirements? Do you or do you not wish the banking facility to be available and utilised in the productive and distributive side by the entire community as it is constituted today? If you wish this, then you must take some measure by which either the branches may grow fully, and be spread to the farthest limits of the country; or you must encourage each unit to develop its own banking system, and see that the machinery you have devised is really useful, helpful and encouraging to all of them.

I am personally not in favour of the British system, because it gives undue powers to the Managers or Directors of a few big banks, who will see to it that the sacred circle of the banking cousinhood is justly and properly safeguarded, and therefore, the economic life of the community may be at the mercy of a small, close clique of the capitalist order that I for one am always fighting. I do not wish, I hope it will never be a fact, that the economy of this country, or the conduct of its banking system will be in the hands of a clique or a class, and through a caucus, of the kind that the Boards of Directors generally are.

That being so, I feel that some amendment should be made whereby either a system of branches—even though I may not like it—of some great bank is extended throughout the country, with due association of the depositors and the workers in each branch being included: or, alternatively, a method of decentralised banking, so that every important centre of population has a bank of its own. Let it be either this or that, but do not legislate so that you can develop neither.

Sir, if I may be permitted to mention it, in the report of the Planning Committee we have suggested a standard by which we should judge the success of the spread of the banking habit. I am not going to impose upon you that this should be accepted by you. What I am going to say is that you should have some means some standard or norm by which you could judge the success or otherwise of the spread of the banking habit, so that many of the criticisms against our people and our economic system may be remedied.

Sir, most of the points on which I had intended to address you have been covered. But good specific alternatives will hereafter be put forward in the form of amendments. I have been charged with having nothing but destructive criticism. That was a fate that I used to meet with under the previous Government. I am not surprised to find that even now, the honourable occupants of the Treasury Benches (without a Treasury) always throw that at me. I do not mind that because I am suffering from a hardened back. But I warn you, Sir, that if you do not listen to the voice of moderation, if you will not listen to the voice of reason and goodwill, if you will not listen to that which justice demands: if you will not listen to your own claims being properly justified: all that I can say is that you are not discharging truly the trust placed in you.

Shri B. Das: Sir, I feel rather diffident to make the few observations in support of the Bill that I wanted to make after the two redoubtable speakers that preceded me.

When I was listening to my friend Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari I rather got a cold spell. There is a cold spell outside but the hall here is rather warm. He was condemning the nationalization of the Reserve Bank but he did not say how that nationalized bank had not worked properly and he even appears to condemn the House over the proposed nationalization of the Imperial Bank.

[Shri B. Das.]

When I heard my esteemed friend Prof. Shah I felt my head in the upper air! When I closed my eyes I felt I was really listening to a seer and a savant, whose days are coming ten years hence and not today. I was for nationalization of the Reserve Bank from 1927 when the Blackett Reserve Bank Bill was thrown out. I was for nationalization in 1933 at the time of Sir George Schuster when people like my friend Mr. Mody and others conceded to the form of its set up at the Round Table Conference because its acceptance was a condition precedent before the 1935 Act could come into action. At that time the Congress had boycotted the Legislature of the time and those of us Congressmen who were there, thought it was wise on our part to accept the Reserve Bank as it was conceived then. We had no other alternative. But from 1934, in season and out of season I have demanded the nationalization of the Reserve Bank and it has come at last. It is not the fault of this National Government of ours that it did not improve the Reserve Bank. The Reserve Bank belongs to the Government as much as it belongs to the member of this House. It is high time that my friend Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari and others like him sit down and formulate a Bill to amend the Reserve Bank Act as to how it should function as a proper national bank and not be a slave of the Bank of England as it was so long. Whether it is that still now, I cannot say because I have not yet examined its functions since it became a national bank.

I stated it last year on two occasions, and I repeat it now, that the National Reserve Bank Act should see to it that there is no favourite mistress. The Imperial Bank happens to be the favourite mistress of the former Reserve Bank. A national bank should distribute all its assets to most of the Scheduled Banks, but knowing the history of Banking in India, I can say that the banks in India previously existed for British exploitation. The three Presidency Banks that combined into the Imperial Bank—the very name Imperial Bank showed that it is a hateful thing—exploited India for the former British raj. Unfortunately our national government has had no opportunity to exploit the Imperial Bank. What was the policy of the former government and its slave, the old Reserve Bank? The past had been that its favourite mistress, the Imperial Bank, should be pampered. That must go and should go and I hope the Honourable the Finance Minister will give an opportunity to the House to express their opinion on the nationalisation of the Imperial Bank, so that the Imperial Bank not only gets nationalised but does not enjoy any advantageous position over other scheduled banks like the Central Bank, the United Commercial Bank or the Bank of India and the other scheduled banks registered in India, which are meant for the development of trade and industry in this country, though they may be owned by people of the capitalist school of thought.

So there is this knotty question of the Imperial Bank and our national government seem to be silent and do not want to take an early decision. On the question of the advantageous position of the favourite mistress of the former Reserve Bank a decision must be taken at an early date. That is the reason why I support the Bill.

My honourable friend Prof. Shah is a barrister and he knows law better than I know. The banking laws have been till now here and there,—in the companies Act and elsewhere. It was not codified and it was felt even by those who were opposed to Sir James Taylor and his school of thought that there should be a banking bill. The insurance act was codified and certain provisions were enacted laying the obligation on insurance managers to invest their money in government stocks and securities. At that time it was the law of the alien government but at present the national government could easily control insurance, banking and shipping. This is a principle which I have expounded on the floor of the Indian legislature for the last 20 years. Insurance has been controlled but whether it will be nationalised in the way Prof. Shah wants it I do not know. I will leave it at that but perhaps ten years hence when he and his school of thought will form the Government they will lay down how they will nationalise the insurance companies. As for shipping we hear that Government is going to have three companies and they are going to own 51 per cent. of the shares. Our difficulties are that we do not possess the experienced personnel in this country to run national shipping.

Prof. Shah just now said that his slogan to the workers was "Produce and perish". I will not go so far. I would say to the workers "Produce and prosper". I would request him to use his great scholastic eminence amongst the working classes and tell them to produce and prosper. These are days of strikes. Every one is alarmed whether he would be able to go back to his home and I am afraid if I can go to Cuttack. One feels afraid whether his letter to his wife or children would ever reach the family. Those socialist leaders here and outside should bear in mind that they cannot succeed the Government that is ruling today, if they only think of strikes and workers' unions and if they plead in season and out of season for a socialist state of the working classes of India. You cannot govern the country by advocating the cause of two million or may be twenty million workers in the country. But what about the rest of the people of India? If the Congress have attained the eminent position of governing the country it is because they advocated every body's cause—the working classes, the poorer classes and the kisans, over whom Prof. Ranga Presides. (Prof. N. G. Ranga: "He is a portable platform"). After he takes stock of this Bill as it emerges from this House I hope the Finance Minister will see that he brings in an amending Bill to the Reserve Bank Act: Though the Reserve Bank Bill was approved by the House at the time, (1934) it did not record the consensus of desire of the people. It was meant to bride the British Government for that was the time when the 1935 constitution came. Last year we nationalised the management of the Reserve Bank, but we have yet to nationalise it in its objectives. Last year both Messrs. Chetty and Neogy gave promises that they will bring such an amending bill.

With one passage in the minute of dissent of Prof. Shah I agree, viz., that agricultural credit must be given. Now that the Government is going to control all banks through the instrument of the Reserve Bank I hope this will be done. The Reserve Bank has been sleeping since 1934 without doing anything towards agricultural credit, although at that time we fought for days and days to introduce a particular clause, so that the Reserve Bank may finance agricultural credit.

My honourable friend Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari suggested that the dividends of the banks should not be limited. I understand that it is going to be limited by a Bill which has been referred to a select committee. But banking also includes Co-operative banks. I would like to know if my honourable friend wishes that all banks should be converted into co-operative banks. In fact all banks are co-operative banks, perhaps co-operation between the "Haves", and not the "Have-nots": (Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi: "That is not the way of co-operation.") It is a form of co-operation. I was surprised that an astute friend like Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari does not want to limit bank dividends. I do hope that the House will sooner come to the decision, in order to meet the criticism of our friends who ten years hence are going to form the Government of the country, that the dividend should be 5 or 6 per cent. in all industrial and banking concerns and anything extra should go towards national industrial development.

[Shri. B. Das.]

I hope my honourable friend Professor Dr. Matthai will not give the House a dissertation on the principles of banking for that will be unbearable. Let us digest one speech. When I support the present banking Bill it is because I feel that this is a start we are making in the direction of control of banking and nationalisation of banking in the country. Thereafter we shall have to discuss not the question of the Reserve Bank, not the question of saving a liquidated or going to be liquidated bank but the relation of the Reserve Bank as a national bank with the different banks, how national credit will go to millions and multi-millions. I am not interested in the trade of the capitalist cities like Bombay, Delhi, Calcutta and Madras. There are private owned banks and joint stock companies which will look after these industrial concerns. But I am very much concerned as to how sufficient credit will be available to the people, whether through co-operative principles or through some other system of agricultural credit. That should be investigated and explored.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member may continue his speech tomorrow.

The Assembly then adjourned till a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock on Wednesday, the 9th February, 1949.

CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY OF INDIA (LEGISLATIVE) DEBATES

(PART II—PROCEEDINGS OTHER THAN QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS)

Wednesday, 9th February, 1949

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock, Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

BANKING COMPANIES BILL—contd.

Shri B. Das (Orissa: General): Sir, when we adjourned last evening I gave my support to the present Banking Bill as a step in the right direction—as the starting point to deal with the banking structure of India and for the maintenance of sound finance. I expressed my disappointment that the Government of India have taken no steps to bring forward an amending Bill to the Reserve Bank of India Act, so that the bank could be a properly nationalised bank. If we go over the debates that took place last September, member after member all over the House expressed the view that we have only nationalised the shareholders and the Government of India has yet to lay before the House a proper Bill to amend the Reserve Bank Act, so that it will function as a nationalised bank. In that debate the case of the Imperial Bank of India (which I characterised last evening as the favourite mistress of the former Reserve Bank) was also raised. The other day I pointed out that since the Government of India through the predecessor of my honourable friend Dr. John Matthai announced that the Imperial Bank of India will also be nationalised the management of that Bank has taken steps to Europeanise the higher staff to an abnormal extent. My mind goes back to the debate in 1934 when my late lamented friend Mr. S. C. Mitra quoted on the floor of the House that when the first Imperial Bank of India came into existence Sir Malcolm Hailey announced that steps should be taken to Indianise the Imperial Bank. In 1934 while we were discussing this question Mr. S. C. Mitra read out a statement in the House to show that the Bengal circle of the Bank had 110 Europeans and 19 Indians, the Bombay Circle had 68 Europeans and 8 Indians, Madras Circle had 50 Europeans and 9 Indians and the Central Office had 9 Europeans. During the debate last September I read out a passage from the speech of the Indian Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Imperial Bank. Parenthetically I might say that I entirely agree with my honourable friend Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari that the Board of Directors of the Reserve Bank are fossilised. Even so, the Directors of the Imperial Bank are mostly fossilised people who helped the British Government to maintain their rule over us and they are still helping the United Kingdom tradition to continue by their administration of the Imperial Bank. The Chairman of the Bank read out in his annual report that there are only 67 Europeans in the employment of the Imperial Bank. If that statement was correct, how is it that the bank has managed to increase the employment of Europeans to such an abnormal extent, which I pointed out the other day. That is a minor point but I do not want fifth columnists and Quislings in the management of banks in India. I do not mind if the Imperial Bank was a public bank having nothing to do with my State. Unfortunately today it is carrying on the old tradition. From every sub-district treasury the money flows into the district Imperial Bank or the Provincial Imperial Bank and the Reserve Bank merely sits at the apex and asks the Imperial Bank to carry out its transactions. Today there are in every district and provincial town scheduled banks of very high status. Call it the United Commercial Bank, call it the Punjab National Bank or call it the Central Bank, over which my honourable friend Sir Homi Mody presides, they are discharging their national obligations and I do not think that the three banks I mentioned has any alien or Englishman to give them advice as to how to play treacherously with the national credit, so that England would prosper. Why is it that the Government is so chary as not to think of the transfer of national credit to itself. Why is it that they are still tied to their old exploiting mistress, the Imperial Bank of India? That is a point that must be solved. In fact that assurance was given by my friend Shri Shammukham Chetty, the previous Finance Minister. My honourable friend Mr. Neogy while closing the debate in the last session said that the subject is fraught with certain difficulties. But we have to solve those difficulties. We have kicked out the Englishman from India. We have solved our problems and we are controlling the destinies of our nation. But today the Imperial Bank is my Enemy Number One. Unless it is properly nationalised and Indianised it will continue to be my Enemy Number One. It is no use the Finance Minister rising and strutting out that it is working for the good of India and for the good of Indians.

Sir, in the last session my honourable friend Mr. Ramalingam Chettiar raised the issue of the failure of the Reserve Bank in the matter of rural credit—in the matter of giving assistance to co-operative societies. We had a debate but we did not reach conclusions. Today I am surprised that my honourable friend the Finance Minister has tabled an amendment for raising the status of the officers of the Reserve Bank to the status of the I.C.S. bureaucrats that ruled us under the foreign regime and that still rule us under my own national Ministers. Today it has been a fashion with the Honourable Ministers to include in every Bill a provision that any mistakes done by the officers or the Ministry will be condoned. Today my honourable friend has gone to the extent of tabling an amendment that similar grace will be given to the Reserve Bank officers. Why should it be given? In what way has the Reserve Bank official—be he the Governor, the Deputy Governor or a senior officer—done more work than the private subscribed banks, for the development of trade, commerce and industry in India? The antecedents of the Reserve Bank have been discreditable. It helped to perpetuate British rule, during the war. It helped to freeze the whole Indian wealth and transfer it to England as sterling balance. That is its past. I have excused it. I am ready to condone it. But I am not going to allow the Reserve Bank official to seek privilege because he is identified with the bureaucratic service, the old Civil Service or the Indian Administrative Service, that he must be excused for all his mistakes committed in the past or hereafter. I do not think my friend Prof. Shah will agree to that. Yesterday he was saying that the employees of the other scheduled banks should have similar amelioration as the Reserve Bank employees. Why should the Reserve Bank officials get a special privilege simply because we have nationalised the Bank. We have nationalised the Bank, we do not want it to be bureaucratized.

I do hope that my honourable friend the Finance Minister will rectify an error of his Ministry committed last March that no warning was issued to the Imperial Bank on going its merry way of becoming fifth-columnist and quisling in employing more Europeans so that the secrets of Indian national credit and Indian financing structure are always available to our enemies in the United Kingdom and elsewhere. Let me hope he will do that immediately.

I would give another warning. I do not want the Reserve Bank officials trying to be another bureaucratic structure within the structure of the Government of India, following the chariot-wheel of the Grow More Food Ministry which spent Rs. 31 crores with no results, which believes in employment of more officials and incurring more national obligations for keeping hunger away from our doors. If the Reserve Bank is to function as a real national bank it must devote fifty per cent of its thought and action to the development of rural credit so that prosperity will grow in our countryside and not merely in a few cities.

At present I do not think the Reserve Bank has got the brain, the 12 noon knowledge, the nucleus, the staff to think of these. They are thinking only of how to maintain the credit of the Government of India in the present unwholesome position that we find ourselves in after gaining freedom. If the Reserve Bank derives its precedents and knowledge from the maintenance of capitalist structure of national Banks or Reserve Banks in America, Germany (of course the German Reich Bank is no more) or U.K. that is not the tradition we want them to build up. We want them to understand the spirit of the times, the spirit of the nation, and to pursue a policy that will bring prosperity and happiness throughout the country.

My honourable friend Prof. Shah made certain remarks that the Reserve Bank does not control the activities of exchange banks. We must have our connections with other nations and there must be exchange banks. The Imperial Bank, managed completely by Europeans, did not develop exchange bank activities in the past because it was not to the interest of U.K. and the exchange banks were exploiting us. I may be wrong. I was under the impression that the Income Tax Act, the Indian Companies Act and this Banking Bill give sufficient control. I wish to be explained if the present Banking Bill will give sufficient handle to the Reserve Bank and my honourable friend the Finance Minister to control and restrict the activities of these exchange banks. If that be not so I would tell the Minister of Finance that the House will help him in any measure that he will introduce to control the unholy activities of exchange banks in India. I do hope that my honourable friend the Minister for Finance would call for an explanation from the Reserve Bank as to its policy and decision about the control of exchange banks today and hereafter if the Bank really wants to perform national functions.

My honourable friend Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari referred to the appointment of an I.C.S. Governor for the Reserve Bank. If any I.C.S. person forgets his old place under the former Government and does not demand a special reserved place and special salaries and emoluments because he was recruited by the former British Government, he is an Indian national. I will give him my confidence, provided he does not want both the advantages of having been employed under the former British Government and the advantage of being an Indian national, and riding the high horse as a bureaucrat, as the knowledgeable man who knows the past and who helps my present Government because we have not the necessary man power at command to control our own destinies. That is a warning. I do not mean any particular I.C.S. man that will control the Reserve Bank. That is a warning to all I.C.S. people who are riding the high horse demanding their Rs. 4,000 salary per month because they were recruited under the British regime. They must either prove to be our nationals, or else let them be paid off as we have paid off many English I.C.S.'s and India has not lost anything nor is our future ruined as was predicted by these English officers before August 15th, 1947.

[Shri B. Das]

Sir, I will conclude my speech. I saw a particular passage in the editorial of the Hindustan Times today, which is relevant to the subject under discussion, as the point of prosperity and production was brought in yesterday partly by me and partly by my honourable friend Prof. K. T. Shah. It says:

"Prosperity can come only by way of production of more wealth by hard and sustained work. It cannot come by the easy way of go-slow methods, strikes, higher wages, hoarding, perpetuation of scarcity and high prices."

Sir, I make a present of this to my socialist friends in the House and outside. My friend Prof. Shah demands more salaries for all bank employees in India. It is mere obstruction, go-slow movement in banking organisations as it is the go-slow movement in the industries all over India at present engineered by the dissidents in the Socialist group. I hope they will completely co-operate and remove that condition whereby India's national credit is at a challengeable position and whereby the Honourable the Finance Minister cannot really say that India has at present sound financial administration and that India's public finances are sound.

[At this stage Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair, which was then occupied by Mr. Deputy Speaker (Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar).]

Mr. Homi Mody (Bombay: General): Sir, I desire to say a few words in support of the motion before the House. The Bill has been necessitated by the defects and also the malpractices which the operation of banking in this country in the last few years has brought to light, and it is natural, therefore, that it should be restrictive in character. It is inevitable that when we legislate for the few, the many suffer, and so it is that we find the Bill providing for a number of restrictions which banking did not have before. All the same, banking interests have accepted the necessity of the measure and have also, agreed to most of the provisions that have been made. It is necessary in the public interest that banking should be conducted not only on sound lines, but should also be free from any frauds or malpractices that are apt to creep into business and industry.

The Select Committee set about the task in a spirit of realism and I endorse the tribute which my honourable friend the Finance Minister paid to its work. I would also like to add my own expression of gratitude for the opportunity the Select Committee gave to banking interests to put their point of view forward. My friends and I who appeared before the Select Committee, placed before them a number of practical considerations and I am happy to find that they were given serious thoughts, and a number of changes made. This shows the value of consultation on all such occasions with the interests which are concerned and which are able to bring to bear upon the problems under consideration a sort of expert scrutiny.

From the Minutes of Dissent which have been appended to the Report and from some of the speeches which have been made in the course of the debate, it would appear that a number of my friends here are anxious to make the provisions of the Bill even more restrictive. I readily grant that it is possible to make the protection which we seek to give the investor, the depositor and the public more adequate by imposing more stringent conditions upon the day to day operation of banking, but I put it to the House whether it would serve the larger interests of the public if banking were cribbed, cabined and confined by a number of provisions which, while they may help in safeguarding the public against the malpractices of a few, might render banking transactions extremely difficult.

Banking in this country has emerged from its infancy and, has grown into a vigorous boyhood; but it has still a very large way to go before it can be said to subserve the full needs of the country. The record of the Indian banks since they came into existence—barring a few black sheep—is one which I think is extremely creditable. Banks have grown in strength from year to year, public confidence in them has been increasingly manifested, and today, deposits placed with Indian banks record a very imposing figure and are a testimony to the manner in which Indian banks as a whole have been conducting their business. Banks have passed through many vicissitudes and as I have said the record is not altogether free from blemish, but, by and large, the country has been served very well, particularly by a development which has been of recent years, that is, branch-banking. Indian banks are trying to reach out to as many places as possible in this vast continent and I think they are doing a very considerable service in the financing of agricultural commodities and the products of industry. (An Honourable Member: "Agricultural finance! Where is it?").

That being the position, an ill-conceived piece of legislation would have very serious consequences on the growth of banking in this country. The cry of nationalization is of the market-place and so long as it is confined to the market place, I do not think it can do much harm. The Government of India have last year defined their attitude towards nationalization of industry and have subsequently clarified their intentions. They are not likely to be deflected by irresponsible utterances outside this House. (Prof. N. G. Ranga: "Hear, hear.") But it is very difficult story when members of this legislature indulge in this parrot cry that is apt to create a considerable amount of apprehension in the minds of those who do not appreciate the implications of the position which people occupy as members of the legislature, (Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: "The impotence of the members of the legislature?"). Impotence or importance?

My honourable friend Mr. Krishnamachari, to whom I have listened with interest criticised various features of the Bill. One of his criticisms was that there should be dividend limitation imposed, and he does not agree with the Select Committee in this respect. I put it to him whether it is right and fair that, before the national policy has been defined, he should single out one particular sector of the economy of this country for imposing a limitation of this character. I say, Sir, it would be grossly unfair, before the national policy was defined, to single out any industry and to incorporate in the control of that industry provisions for limitation of dividends. We have an Ordinance which is now being sought to be translated into a Statute; that Ordinance was designed purely to meet an emergency and its duration is limited to two years. When this Bill which replaces it runs out its course, it will be time to consider whether, as a matter of policy applicable to the whole field of industry, it is at all necessary to limit dividends. I personally feel, without seeking to anticipate the occasion when such a development may come about, that it would be a very disastrous thing if, without any special emergency, dividend limitation—became the law of the land.

My honourable friend, Prof. Shah,—I am sorry not to find him in his seat, as I will have to forego the pleasure of much of what I was going to say (Shri B. L. Sondhi: "Let us have it.") Well, my honourable friend spoke for well over an hour and raved and ranted, called us "drones and parasites", and he stated that that was not enough. I suppose he did not go further, merely because he was out of breath. I do not know where Prof. Shah got his particular brand of political economy from.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order. Will the honourable Member kindly resume his seat? I do not know if it is right for him to say that another honourable member "raved". It is open to any honourable member to say what a particular set of people think is good for the country, but to point out to another honourable member's speech and say that that honourable member "raved" is not right.

Mr. Homi Mody: Sir, I accept it and I withdraw "raved", but I hope I can keep "ranted". My honourable friend ranted for well over an hour and I am wondering from where and under whose tuition he got his peculiar brand of political economy. (Shri B. L. Sondhi: "From your province.") I am sorry for my province; it does sometimes very peculiar things. If Prof. Shah's professors are still alive, they must be feeling very depressed over some of his recent performances, and if they are in the other world they must be violently turning in their graves. (Shri H. V. Kamath: "Are there graves in the other world?") Well, I do not know. One of the things that Prof. Shah was insistent on was about the qualifications of Directors. I do not know why he should single out banks for laying down qualifications for Directors. Are qualifications laid down for any other thing? Is there any qualification, for instance, for membership of this legislature, except that one must not be of unsound mind, and if the members of this legislature who are discharging very responsible functions and who can make or mar the future of the country—if no qualifications are required for them, why single out the Director of a bank for any particular set of qualifications? And who is going to examine the qualifications? Prof. Shah? I hope not.

Prof. Shah would like anything and everything to be nationalised. I wish our first experiment in nationalisation would be to nationalise professors, bring them under regulation and control and see what can be done with them.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Madras: General): He will have no objection.

Mr. Homi Mody: I am afraid another professor is going to be on his legs presently.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Yes, we have no objection to be nationalised.

Shri B. L. Sondhi (East Punjab: General): Prof. Ranga says he has no objection.

Mr. Homi Mody: I have known Prof. Ranga for many years and from recent utterances it looks as if he was as vigorous as ever. I would have liked to have followed him, but he made no move; he sat quiet and I thought that I had to get up and intervene, at an early stage of the debate. (Shri B. L. Sondhi: "Prof. Shah is just coming.") I am sorry that whatever little I had to say about Prof. Shah had to be said in his absence. Since he has come now, the only other thing that I will say is this, that at the end of his speech he expressed the hope that, some day, the majority would be with him. I have no doubt that if we are in this House for another thirty, forty years and get into our dotage, we may agree with him some time, but until then, I do not think there will be any section in the country which he will be able to carry with him.

I wish very much that members of this House would realize their responsibilities before they talk in terms of nationalisation. Already, a great deal of harm has been done by the irresponsible talk—I am not accusing the honourable members of this House—which has been heard in many places. It serves no purpose. We all know that whatever our opinion may be on the policy of nationalisation, nationalisation cannot come about with our present resources, with the present industrial development of the country. Therefore, why talk about it? Why create confusion and apprehension in the popular mind by talking in season and out of season about nationalisation? It will be a particular disservice to the trade and industry of the country, not merely to banks, if anybody sought to nationalise banking institutions in the country. All over the world, where democratic institutions flourish, banks have been excluded from schemes of nationalization, and I hope that, in this country, whatever our policy may be in regard to nationalisation in the next ten or fifteen years, at any rate, banks will be kept out. A Bank is a credit institution. It is a delicate plant and its sensitivity to any untoward development is considerable, and I hope, Sir, that whatever we may do in order to strengthen the banking structure of the country, in order to protect the investor, the depositor and the trade and commerce of the country against inefficiency or frauds or malpractices, we shall at least allow banking to remain as a private enterprise, which it is pre-eminently fitted to be.

Shri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar (Madras: General): Coming, Sir, immediately after Sir Homi Mody, I should like to pursue one or two points that he raised. He raised the question that banking is a very delicate plant and we should not interfere with it and we should not talk of nationalisation and all that. After all, the purpose which any institution serves is the main consideration in ordering its constitution and its control. He forgets, when he talks in this strain, that there are institutions in this country which undertake at least in a small way the functions which these banks which he represents are performing at the present moment, which are able to get on with the controls and with what one may consider something going farther than nationalisation. I refer to the co-operative societies. Co-operative societies are institutions which are formed by the borrowers. My honourable friend (Mr. Mody) will shudder at a thing like that if any one proposes that the borrowers should form part of the directorate of the Bank which he represents. But, as a matter of fact, the borrowers form the co-operative societies. They are able to manage them. They are able to look after themselves and the interests which are near and dear to them. All this at a time when the bigger banks would not come to their help. They (the bigger banks) would not move their little finger to help them. Not only that: the constitution of these co-operative banks is exactly on the lines suggested by my honourable friend Professor Shah. Two-thirds of the directorate of the co-operative societies consist of borrowers and one-third consists of shareholders and depositors. That is how the Board of Management of the Central Banks all over India is constituted. Still, they carry on. They are able not only to manage the banks, but they get all the deposits they want. The present times are an exception. But, ordinarily, at any rate in Madras and Bombay, we have been able to get all the money we want for our transactions from the depositors. There has been no difficulty in getting the necessary sums from deposits. We are able to manage with all the restrictions.

Now, Sir, my friend shuddered at the idea of restricting dividends. Dividends have been restricted in co-operative societies. The Central Bank can give a maximum dividend of only 5 per cent in my own province. The Central Bank at Coimbatore has got transactions to the extent of nearly a crore of rupees, and the smaller banks deal with 20 to 30 or 40 lakhs. There is a restriction that no Central Bank can give dividend higher than 5 per cent to the shareholders. Not only that. We are able to manage by lending at a very low rate of interest. The Provincial Banks get deposits and lend to the Central Bank to be utilised for lending at 2½ per cent. interest. Again, I am sure Mr. Mody will be very much surprised when I tell him that these banks finance the transactions of agriculturists and industrialists at something lower than 4½ per cent. We lend at low rates of 2½ per cent. for cultivation purposes and for marketing, and at 3 per cent. for other purposes. These are the rates in Madras. Probably in Bombay the rates are a little higher. This is how we are doing our business. The ultimate borrower in all societies gets money at 6½ per cent. That is the maximum that we have fixed for lending to the ultimate borrower. With these restrictions, we are able to carry on.

[Shri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar]

The question of liquid assets was raised both in the select committee and here. We are able to manage things with a little more control and higher rates of liquidity than what are imposed in this Bill for the banks. Mr. Mody complimented the Select Committee by saying that they accepted his contention that the dividend should not be fixed in the Bill. The reason for the Select Committee deciding that way was, however, different. It is not because we wanted to allow them to give large dividends. At least some of us thought 9 per cent was too high. When we in the co-operative movement are giving 5 per cent and we are satisfied with it, I do not see any reason why we should fix it at 9 per cent. for new companies. That was the reason why I agreed that that clause ought to be deleted. When the Government are thinking of fixing the return for the capital invested in business generally, I do not see any reason why there should be a special provision in this Bill alone. I wanted that it ought to be a general provision applying to everybody.

Sir, in the Ordinance that was published, the rate fixed for new companies was 3 per cent. Here in the Bill it is 9 per cent. I thought there was no justification whatever for it. If after two years the Government are going to fix the rate of interest of dividend in every business, they will have to treat everything alike. The only consideration that was urged was that there were people who purchased the shares at very high rates and that they should not be let down. Of course I do not agree with Mr. Krishnamachari that we need not bother about them, that they lost heavily last year and can afford to lose heavily again. That is not an argument which ought to be accepted. But there is no objection to gradually reducing the dividend that is going to be paid. It is in that way that we agreed to the deletion of the particular clause.

Sir, after all, this Bill touches only a very small portion of the banking that is actually going on in the country. The great industry of agriculture is not very much helped by these banks which are coming under this banking law. Of course Mr. Mody was talking about marketing and about the help that these banks are giving for agricultural marketing. It is true that they do this business to a small extent. The major part of the internal marketing—it may be for export purposes or higher for classes of goods like cotton and ground-nuts.....

Mr. Homi Mody: All sorts of food-grains.

Shri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar: They may be helping to a certain extent. But, for cultivation purposes, for improvement of land and for internal marketing, these big banks are of no help whatever. That is the sort of banking which we require most. Well, Sir, to the extent these concerns go, the only agencies that are in existence at the present moment are the indigenous bankers—the co-operative societies. To a considerable extent these societies have succeeded in replacing both the indigenous bankers and also the landlord who used to finance these people, and the traders who used to advance money and take the produce at very low prices.

Sir, one service at least the co-operative societies can claim to have done, viz., that they have brought down the rate of interest in the mufassal to a large extent. That is a distinct service which the co-operative societies have performed.

Now the question arises: how are we going to meet the demands of the countryside, the rural banking? I am sure the big banks for which we are enacting this legislation will not be in a position to do that work. It can only be by smaller institutions. In this, Sir, I differ very much from my honourable friend, Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari. He said yesterday that the small banks should all combine together; they should become big banks; they should be able to employ large agencies and they should function; otherwise, they should cease to exist. But he forgets, Sir, that in the case of agriculture, in the case of cottage industries and in the case of other small matters, it is these small banks and the co-operative societies, which even today are financing. It is these bodies that are performing the functions, which, he hopes, probably the larger banks will undertake hereafter. Sir, the larger banks with their branches will not be able to satisfactorily meet the requirements of these small concerns. It will be impossible, Sir. In many cases we have to depend on the personal security. There is very little security for a man employed in a cottage industry to give. Is the big bank represented by my honourable friend, Mr. Mody, going to advance to the small industrialist, who has got one loom in his cottage or a small cultivator with three acres of land? It is absolutely impossible. For these purposes, Sir, it is necessary that we should have smaller institutions, which will be in touch with the people, which will know the requirements of the people, their character and advance money when and where they require it. Sir, for that purpose, it is only the co-operative societies that can possibly take the place of the indigenous money-lender and the other agencies which are there at the present moment.

Sir, I should like to say a word about the indigenous money-lender. My honourable friend, Mr. Krishnamachari as well as Prof. Shah, both said that the indigenous money-lender is left out of this Bill. Of course, there is the legal objection that money lending is a Provincial subject, but apart from that, supposing we pass a law, how are you going to enforce against the indigenous money-lender? There are so many ways of evading anything, any law that you can pass. We have got, for instance, a Money Lenders' Act in the Madras Province which says that when a money lender goes to the court, he will not be allowed more than 15 per cent. on his lending. How much of that is really enforced? Well, a man who lends money can always take a document for double the amount. He can add the interest beforehand; so many things are done, and even if he takes the money privately and there is no account of it, how is it going to be proved. There are so many difficulties, Sir, in dealing with the indigenous banker. It is only by altogether taking him away and introducing some other institution to take his place, that the question of finance can be satisfactorily solved, and as I said, the only way in which it can be done is by very largely increasing the number of co-operative societies, strengthening them and giving them financial backing, so that they can meet all the needs of the rural population. That is the only course open.

Sir, the number of institutions now is no doubt increasing, but that is not enough. There ought to be better banking both financially and by proper supervision and otherwise to make these bodies really help the rural population and meet all their needs. In the Madras Province, for instance, there are 13,000 rural societies and there are 70,000 villages. They cater for about 20,000 villages at the present moment. There are still about 50,000 villages left out. A large number of co-operative societies will be necessary. But in addition to it the co-operative societies now working are dealing with only some small credit, such as meeting cultivation expenses. We are trying to extend the scope of the lending. Even with that, Sir, it may not be possible to meet all the needs of both the agriculturist and the small artisan who are in the village. What is required is a strengthening of the co-operative societies and also putting them on a proper basis for working these. We have been hearing quite a lot about multi-purpose projects and one thing or another, but what exactly has been done? I am very sorry to say very little indeed has been done so far. I can speak with some authority about the co-operative movement in some parts of India both in Madras, some parts of Bombay and elsewhere. I can say that we have not even touched the fringe of the problem. No serious attempt has been made to place these co-operative societies on a proper basis with regard to finance that ought to be given to them and the method of work and the supervision. These are things which require very urgent and very careful consideration, if we are really going to solve this question of banking this question of financial assistance to the biggest industry of agriculture and the next biggest industry of the cottage industries. Leaving those aside, if we come to the bigger industries, to the commercial interests, there alone, the bigger banks come in and this banking law is going to apply only with reference to those matters. Even with reference to those matters, a serious flaw was shown by my honourable friend, Mr. Krishnamachari yesterday. The practice of the banks to ask for bills and to ask for warehouse certificates have stood in the way of much progress. I am glad Mr. Krishnamachari has changed today. When I asked, Sir, last year, that some representation should be given to co-operative societies on the boards of the Reserve Bank, I especially mentioned this difficulty and I said in view of this difficulty that has been felt by the co-operative societies, the Reserve Bank did not care to help us, then he was of a different view. Now at least he has changed. He finds the difficulty, Sir, that the practices that are followed by these big banks, including the Imperial Bank and the Reserve Bank have stood in the way of our getting the requisite finance for even the bigger bodies. Sir, we have been fighting the Reserve Bank for the last two years on this matter and only last week, we had a long discussion with the Agricultural Department of the Reserve Bank in Bombay. With reference to the question of the demand bills and the warehouse certificates, it is not possible for the co-operative societies and others to give them. In the old days when the Imperial Bank was not there, we had only the Provincial banks and they were satisfied with the co-operative paper. The Central Bank or the provincial bank were given accommodation on the security of the co-operative paper, but now the Imperial Bank has come in and they decline to look at the agricultural paper; the Reserve Bank came in afterwards and it was specially asked to help the agricultural operations and they also say: "We won't look at this co-operative paper." (Prof. N. G. Ranga: "Why?") Because it is not supported by any security. They want the warehouse certificates to support these bills. They want 'two good names', as they call it. We are prepared to give two names, namely, the two banks, both the Central Bank and the Provincial Bank, which are approved by them. But they are not satisfied. They say: "Section 17 of the Reserve Bank Act stands in the way and we cannot proceed with this." We are going to ask the Honourable the Finance Minister to introduce legislation without delay to remove some of the difficulties which the Reserve Bank is feeling with reference to accommodation they can give to the co-operative societies especially in these matters. We have suggested already with the concurrence of the Agriculture Department of the Reserve Bank that they should move the Government to make some alterations in section 17 of the Reserve Bank Act. (Shri B. Das: "But, they are so very slow"). Sir, so far with reference to the finances for co-operative societies.

Coming to industries, they are at the mercy of these bigger banks. I do not know whether it is known to the members of this House that we the industrialists in the Coimbatore District, textile mills, depended on the Imperial Bank of India for our finances. One fine morning, they sent notices that within two months we will have to clear all dues and that they will not advance money any further because they were told by their legal advisers that the security was not good. We found ourselves in a fix. Fortunately for us, the P. and O. Bank and the Central Bank of India came to our help and we were able to carry on. The P. and O. Bank and the Central Bank of India were satisfied with the security that we were able to give and we are carrying on even to the present day with the same sort of arrangement. But, the Imperial Bank of India would not agree to the same terms and they said that we should clear all the dues. Such treatment is the reason, Sir, why there is so much demand for nationalisation of the Imperial Bank of India. When the Banking Enquiry Committee went into the country, there was so much evidence placed before it about the vagaries of the Imperial Bank of India, about the way in which they were financing our industries and our commercial transactions on the one hand and the way in which they were financing the transactions in which our European friends were concerned. Companies like Messrs. Spencer and Co. would be given lakhs and crores of Rupees without any security, for one signature; but the textile mills with large block capital will not be given working capital. Nobody went to them for block capital. That is the state of affairs. So, it is not at all surprising that from every side there is demand for the nationalisation of the Imperial Bank of India. I am very sorry that even within this Bill the Imperial Bank of India is not brought; it is outside this Bill altogether. I do not see any reason why it should not be placed in the same category as Scheduled Banks. Also I would like to ask the Finance Minister to consider and revise his opinion with reference to the nationalisation of the Imperial Bank. The sooner he can do that, it will be better for everybody concerned. (Hear, hear). I would also say even from the administrative side, there will be a great advantage, because the Reserve Bank of India and the Imperial Bank of India have got branches in different places, and the Imperial Bank is the agent of the Reserve Bank, and all this duplication of machinery, of agency and everything else can go if the Imperial Bank is also nationalised and amalgamated with the Reserve Bank. It would lead to saving of money; it would lead to some sort of control by the Government and it will ease the situation to a very large extent.

As I said, we should have a clear idea of what we want and what we are going to do. With reference to the agricultural operations, with reference to cottage industries, with reference to small trading, internal trading, these banks cannot perform the functions. We will have to recognise this fact. We will have to bring into existence co-operative societies with powers, functions and financial backing so that they can do this work. Then, Sir, the bigger banks will come and the larger issues will have to be taken up by banks with which we are dealing. These banks will be able to function with the restrictions that are mentioned in the Bill. As I said, provincial Banks and Central Banks of the co-operative service are able to carry on with very much minuter control and stricter conditions than those embodied in the Bill and I do not see any reason whatever why they should in any way be restricted further.

I would like only to add one more restriction if my honourable friend Mr. Mody may consider, namely, that the present auditing is only a joke. Sir, the auditors are appointed by the managing director or (Mr. Homi Modi: "Appointed by the share-holders.") I am coming to that; I know what is being done, The managing Director or somebody in management go through the farce of having him elected by the general body. What is the general body? Has it ever gone against the wishes of the managing director or the manager? I do not agree with what my friend Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari said yesterday. We are finding it very difficult in the companies to get the requisite quorum for the meetings. Very few people come there. It is only by getting proxies that we are able to make up the quorum. Such being the case, to say that the general body is appointing the auditor and that the auditor is responsible to the general body is something which I cannot call real. Of course, Mr. Mody wanted to take a realistic view of things; the realistic view is that the auditor is not appointed by anybody but the managing director. I would very strongly urge that the auditor should be appointed by the Reserve Bank or if that is considered too much of a change, at least from a penal given by the Reserve Bank, that at least should be done. With that change, I think it ought to be possible to approve of this Bill.

With reference to what my honourable friend Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari said yesterday, with regard to voting rights, I said how we are managing our general bodies now. Except when there are two parties interested, when there is a factious fight in the company itself, it is very difficult to get even a quorum. Proxies are obtained. How does it matter whether the shares stand in the name of one person or in the name of a person and his relations or he goes about getting proxies? That is the real state of affairs. I hope he will not press his objection in this matter very much.

With these words, Sir, I support the motion that is before the House.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I am glad my honourable friend Mr. Mody has spoken before me. I know now the mind of the hard boiled capitalist; I also know where his studies had begun and where they are likely to end or land him. I wish to assure my honourable friend Mr. Mody that whatever may happen to my honourable friend Professor K. T. Shah, who, I can assure him, to be a professor of professors in this country, I know certainly where Mr. Mody is going to land. He is going to land in the same place where Chiang Kai Sheik has landed today. The studies which he seems to be making, if accepted by our country, are likely to lead us also into the same unfortunate plight as that of China.

I am very glad that this House is not going to accept the advice of Mr. Mody. It means unfortunate that Mr. Mody seems to have somehow acquired some additional gumption during the last few months. It may be because of the comparative success of the non-co-operation movement which he himself and his confederates are carrying on in this country with our own Government by blocking all the stocks and share markets and playing all sorts of tricks there. Sir, my honourable friend, Mr. Ramalingam Chettiar, has given a devastating reply. (Mr. Homi Mody: "Very much better than what you are giving!") to the few serious arguments that Mr. Mody advanced to-day. What is more, he gives serious advice to people: 'For God's sake, do not talk of nationalization because you are going to frighten away people!' If these capitalists are such shy birds, then I am afraid they are going to be frightened not only by nationalization but by very much less than that, and that is the solution offered by Mr. Ramalingam Chettiar namely the co-operation of banking and various other industries also.

Mr. Ramalingam Chettiar has shown to this House—I for one am very grateful for what he has said—how co-operative banking in this country has been successful in serving the agriculturist to a much greater extent than all the Scheduled banks put together. Mr. Ramalingam Chettiar has been very modest in his claims, but I can assure the House that he has been the President of one of the largest and biggest co-operative banks in this country, being the President of the Madras Co-operative Bank, and he knows what he has been talking about. This co-operative bank has been a success in this country and it is a bank of the borrowers and not of the lenders. Therefore the future of this country really lies not with these bankers but with the co-operative bankers, and it is the duty of the Government to go out of its way and render every possible assistance to co-operative banking as a whole. Every one knows that these so-called Scheduled Banks have so far touched only the fringe of the problem, and they have not been able to help our agriculturists: nor have they been able to help even the cottage industries. Have they at least helped the small industries, leave alone some of the bigger industries? If they had succeeded in that, there would not have been any need for any Industrial Finance Corporation, for which we passed legislation only some time ago, and for all the industrial finance corporations that are being brought into existence in all these various provinces. It shows that this private enterprise of banking which till now has been playing only a role of the dog in the manger has not been able to serve our country as well as it was expected to do. It may be a delicate plant. It certainly is but most unfortunately this does not seem to attain any sort of maturity at all! I read when I was a student in Oxford that Indian banking was a very very delicate plant, which is sprouting and finding its way. It seems to be in the same position today, although my friend, Mr. Mody has now got the satisfaction of being the head of one of the biggest banks in this country! And what is its bigness? Its bigness is lost in oblivion. It is of no consequence. Its utility is not felt in the industrial economy of this country nor is it of advantage to its agricultural economy. He can feel proud of his position as the head of the Bank, but certainly this country cannot be proud not only of that bank but of the whole lot of the banks in this country because of the sorry figure that they cut in our industrial economy. (Shri B. L. Sondhi: "Question!") So far as nationalization is concerned, Mr. Ramalingam Chettiar, who besides being a prominent co-operator is also an important industrialist as my friend Mr. Mody, has given the answer namely that he is in favour of the nationalization of the Imperial Bank. I said that my friend has not come forward and said that the Imperial Bank should be at least nationalised. I can understand that attitude because it is a sort of an esprit de corps.

Shri K. Hanumanthaiya (Mysore State): Why not ask Dr. John Matthai?

Prof. N. G. Ranga: I can understand that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable Member may continue his speech after Lunch.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock, Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Sir, before the House rose for Lunch I was referring to the remarks made by my honourable friend Mr. Ramalingam Chettiar regarding the Imperial Bank. I am really glad that such an experienced businessman and banker like Mr. Chettiar has himself demanded the nationalisation of the Imperial Bank of India. That ought to be a good enough answer to my honourable friend Sir Homi Mody, that the talk of nationalisation is not to be restricted to the markets but it could come into this House and that too from very sound and responsible quarters just like those of himself. I wonder why the Finance Minister has come to the decision not to nationalise the Imperial Bank at all. I would like to remind him that his own predecessor, himself a businessman and an industrialist, Mr. Shanmukham Chetty, was himself in favour of nationalisation of the Imperial Bank and more than once gave the assurance in this House that the Government were keen on nationalisation of that bank and that they were only waiting until it would be possible for the Imperial Bank to get clear of its own liabilities and assets and other responsibilities in Pakistan and then make it possible for our Government to nationalise it. This House has every right to demand a full explanation from the Finance Minister for this decision and I can assure him that it is a very very unpopular decision so far as the people and this House are concerned.

Sir, it is well known how antinationalistic and anti-Indian this Imperial Bank has been and it is, as everybody knows, the biggest bank in this country with the largest number of branches all over India. Naturally it has in its hands the power either for mischief or for good and it has been using this power not in the interests of the people, at any rate certainly not in the interest of the people away from the three or four cities of this country. Sir, in every other direction we have been having complete Indianisation but have we been able to achieve this Indianisation at least in the Imperial Bank of India? We have not achieved anything at all till now. We have been talking about it for years and years and that is another reason why I am angry with the Finance Minister for not having given us any assurance that he would be bringing forward a Bill for the amendment of the Imperial Bank of India Act in order to nationalise it or at least to better control it and see that it becomes a national institution, if not completely nationalised. Even that will not satisfy us. We want the complete nationalisation of the Imperial Bank and I wish to sound a note of warning to the Finance Minister. Have we been able to control these banks and bankers even during the time when banking is not nationalised in this country or prevent them from playing at any time any sort of mischief at all with our finances in this country? The most important thing for the Government to do is to get the control of this biggest bank in this country and thus have a kind of safeguard against any sort of strike on the part of the bankers. Therefore looked at from any point of view you like it is most necessary that the Imperial Bank should be brought under nationalisation.

My friend Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari was rather unhappy about the results of the nationalisation of the Reserve Bank. I do not know why. I thought he was himself a party along with all of us to the nationalisation of the Reserve Bank. I thought he was also enthusiastic about this demand of the country that the Reserve Bank should be nationalised. Now that it has been nationalised he comes and says "Look at the manner in which the Government of India and its Finance Minister have appointed these various Directors to the Reserve Bank Board." Well, it is quite possible that Mr. Krishnamachari's complaint is quite correct when he says that labour, economists and other people have not been represented on this Board. But it is because the Bank has been nationalised that it has become possible for my honourable friend to make this complaint. Is it possible for anyone of us to find fault with Mr. Mody or any other Chairman of any of these big banks about the appointments that they themselves make? We cannot. We have no hold over them we have no control over those people. Therefore to that extent at least we should be glad that the Reserve Bank has been nationalised so that this House has come to have the right and any one of the members of this House has now the right to complain whenever anything goes wrong with the Reserve Bank and whenever the Finance Minister makes a bad choice in any appointments that he himself makes concerning this particular Bank.

Shri B. Das: He is not against nationalisation. He is against its present method of working.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: He did not express that much approval of the nationalisation of the Reserve Bank as one would have expected from him. I wish to warn my friend Mr. Mody that these bankers cannot continue to have their monopoly for ever. Co-operative banks are coming up to compete with them and what is more the ordinary people themselves are beginning to take things into their own hands. Let me remind him of the fact that in South India in a period of only 2½ months in five districts alone it was possible for the ordinary peasants to organise 125 producers-cum-consumers co-operative societies and place at their disposal as much as 1½ crores of paid up share capital. I want to know how much any one of these big banks in this country has got as its paid up share capital and whether any one of them has as much as 1½ crores of paid up share capital. (Mr. Homi Mody: "Many.") When was it been paid in? Was it within a period of 2½ months and in a small area of five districts alone and confined to the producers? (An Honourable Member: "There is the money.") There is the money but what is it that the banks have been doing till now? If the banks have been so very efficient and capable why did not they win the confidence of the people? Why is it that they have failed to draw into their coffers all the money there is in the country. That Is why I say that if the provincial governments were to pursue the policy of co-operation, which I hope they would, and if my honourable friend were to pursue a more popular policy of canvassing for the national savings certificates, it would be possible for them to develop many co-operative societies and to draw into the Industrial and Finance Corporation as much money as they want independently and in spite of these bankers and banks and in that way help our people to finance agriculture, industry as well as commerce.

I am glad my honourable friend Mr. Krishnamachari has raised this point of bills. Mr. Ramalingam Chettiar has rightly complained how the Imperial Bank and the Reserve Bank have been non-co-operating in the development of this Bill habit as an important means of financing our agriculture. I have known a number of loan and sale co-operative societies, and co-operative marketing federations also, which have advanced money on the collateral security of grain stores to our peasants. These stores are all ordinary structures put up by the peasants without any pucca building or anything like it and they have been insured against fire. It is against these stores that the loans have been advanced. I do not see any reason why the bills that can come into existence as a result of these loans should not be treated as negotiable bonds by the banks, and especially the Imperial Bank and the Reserve Bank. Till now it has not been complained anywhere that the stores have gone out of existence because of theft. It is true sometimes they have been destroyed by fire. But they have been insured against fire, and the insurance companies that have insured them against fire have not gone broke. Therefore it can be seen that so far as the stores are concerned they are generally safe, they are properly kept, and whatever money has been advanced against these stores has been realised by the co-operative organisations as well as the local banks. Therefore I think the Honourable the Finance Minister should take an early occasion to bring forward the necessary Bill or take any administrative action necessary in order to make at least the Reserve Bank of India, and if possible the other banks also, to issue these bills against these collateral securities so that it would be possible for them to finance agriculture much more efficiently than they have been able to do till now.

There are a few good features in this Bill to which I would like to draw the attention of this House. There is the Explanation to clause 5 which permits any company which is engaged in the manufacture of goods or carries on any trade to accept deposits of money from the public for the purpose of financing its business. This is a very important thing and I hope many such companies will take advantage of this provision.

Then there is item (j) of sub-clause (1) of clause 6 where these banks will be empowered to establish or support or aid in the establishment and support of associations, institutions, funds, trusts and conveniences etc. This is likely to help a number of such organisations with the aid of the banks.

Then there is item (a) of sub-clause (1) of clause 10. It is a very short provision, but it is indeed very good. It reads "No banking company shall employ or be managed by a managing agent". It is just here I think my honourable friend Mr. Mody will admit that at long last an important reform like this has come to be adopted by the Select Committee itself, a reform against which his class has fought terribly about twelve years ago when this question was being discussed while the Companies Act Amendment Bill was on the anvil. (An Honourable Member: "It is not a new thing"). It is not a new thing but twelve years ago it was achieved. And how was it achieved? In spite of these people. There were people even in those days like my honourable friend Prof. K. T. Shah. They wanted a reform like this and they were treated in the same shabby manner in which my honourable friend tried to treat Prof. Shah this morning. Nevertheless even when my honourable friend Mr. Mody is still in the full possession of all his faculties this has come to be such an established thing that he has actually swallowed it without a tremour whatsoever and allowed it to be incorporated in this Bill, and I do not see any amendment in his name to the effect that this provision should be deleted. Similarly I shall not be surprised that within the next five or ten years—on this side of ten years—this national business of banking might become a serious as well as practical proposition.

Then there is clause 13 which deals with restriction on commission, brokerage, discount etc., on sale of shares. I welcome this.

Also clause 15 which deals with restrictions as to payment of dividend. This clause has had a very unfortunate history. At one time they wanted to put a restriction. Now my honourable friend says that such a restriction need not be put in at all. He tried to convince us, at another place, and I thought with some success. The only thing I can say is I have yielded to his pleading, not because I am convinced but because I find that the limit of 9 per cent. which was suggested by the earlier Select Committee is too high—there I agree with my friend Mr. Ramalingam Chettiyar—also because this is not just the time when we should be going into it and there is plenty of time for us to come back to this matter and deal with these gentlemen so far as the maximum limit of their profits is concerned.

Shri B. L. Sondhi: By 'these gentlemen' do you mean Mody and Company?

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Well, yourself also included.

Then there is clause 35 which is about inspection. In regard to this my honourable friend Dr. Matthai was trying to say that periodical inspection is not such a good thing. I cannot agree with him. This is likely to do more harm. The moment the Reserve Bank of India or the Government of India were to take into their head that this sort of inspection is necessary in the case of any bank, well, the credit of that bank will go down and it is quite possible that there may be a run on its resources. Even if there is no run if the credit of the bank were to go down and in the share market its stock also were to come down, certainly it will deal a woeful blow to that bank, if not a death blow. What ought to be done is to provide for an annual inspection, a regular inspection, and in addition to that if at any time in the course of the next year the Reserve Bank of India or the Government of India were to find that the affairs of any particular bank are in a very bad state then it is open to them to order a special inspection if they are so minded.

Lastly they have taken to themselves a very large power to exempt in certain cases. Clause 53 reads thus: "The Central Government may, of course, on the recommendation of the Reserve Bank, declare by notification in the Official Gazette that any or all of the provisions of this Act shall not apply to any banking company or to any class of banking companies either generally or for such period as may be specified." I take very strong objection to this. This is a sort of sweeping power that the Government of India has taken for themselves, and on the recommendation of the Reserve Bank of India. The Reserve Bank of India may decide in favour of exempting any one bank or any class of banks or any group of banks in any particular area or the whole of India. Is that any reason why the Government of India should exempt those banks from any provision or all the provisions of this Bill? I do not think really it is a very desirable demand to make on this House. It is also quite possible that unnecessarily the Central Government may come into bore with this House as well as the public for any sort of exemption that they may give to this or that persons or group of persons interested in one or two or group of banks. Therefore it is only right that they should not ask for such a sweeping power to exempt. If they want to have any such safeguard at all they should really take care to restrict the scope of this clause 53.

Sir, I have done. I only wish to say one thing more and that is I certainly cannot feel very happy at the hesitation that the Government of India is showing from time to time to give effect to their own policies. This nationalisation has been made into a sort of fearful bogey by our own businessmen and our own leaders have come to be very nervous about it. They do not want anybody to talk about it with the result that my friend Mr. Mody was bold enough to say, and give a sort of exhortation "Never talk about nationalisation at all". Well, he has learnt his lesson in those days and in those universities—either in England or in India—which have gone out of date. Let me remind him of a book called "Economics of Welfare" by Prof. Pigot—not Prof. Shah who seems to be such a bugbear to my friend—of Cambridge University. It is a very respectable University I may tell him, much more respectable than any University that my friend can conjure up. He has written that book and on Economics and Welfare—that is the most important thing.

Secondly, the idea of economics of the world is changing every day. The economics of Dewey has been dismissed by the American electorate and it is the economics of the New Deal and of Truman which is ruling in Wall Street. It will also very soon be the economics of Pandit Nehru which will be ruling here in this country and not the economics of Mr. Mody. And Pandit Nehru's economics will demand that everyone of these concerns should make the public welfare at their primary concern, not making profits for their shareholders. It is from that view-point that I give my general consent to this Bill and also say that I am certainly glad that this Bill is being brought forward, not to give any more powers to these banks but to control those powers, to trim them, to keep them under proper control and to make them behave in the interests of their shareholders, depositors and the general public. I sincerely hope that once this Bill comes to be passed into an Act our State will come to have sufficient information in regard to the activities of these banks and sufficient experience also in controlling these banks so that it would be possible for them within the next five or ten years to seriously consider the nationalisation of groups or blocs or the whole of the banks in our country.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): Sir, after some experts have spoken on a technical subject like this, it would perhaps be proper for a layman like me to say a few things which may not be very much appreciated by the experts but which would probably be appreciated by some laymen in the House. I submit that the Bill aims at curing a large number of vicious practices which have grown up amongst our indigenous banks. There has been a plethora of mushroom small banks many of which have gone into liquidation having done an enormous amount of mischief to people, and a very large number of middle class depositors have been ruined. It is therefore just fit and proper that the Honourable the Finance Minister should come in and try to tighten up banking procedure, though in that process some big and soundly run banks also have to suffer some little inconvenience. But there is the power with the Government to exempt any bank from the operation of the provisions of the Act. It is therefore in the larger interest of sound banking that this Bill has been brought. We have the experience of a large number of banks failing, particularly in West Bengal, and coming from that Province I have to submit that the law should be tightened to the maximum extent to prevent any kind of mismanagement by the banks.

With regard to the limitation of dividends, the experts have differed. But the plain commonsense point of view will be that dividends should not be limited. Somehow or other it is felt that high dividends naturally imply some kind of exploitation. But I do not think that is so. The dividend of a bank depends upon the efficiency and the policy of sound expansion with which the bank runs. A bank may charge very small interests for the advances in the course of its business, thereby increasing its efficiency and thereby again securing large business and make a good marginal profit. If you limit the dividend, the incentive to improve and deserve more business would to a certain extent be taken away. What is after all the harm if a bank makes a large profit? A large part of this profit comes to the exchequer by way of taxes, and a large part of this profit goes to shareholders who are our very people by way of dividends which encourage them. These investors become more and more solvent, spend more and enrich the country by helping circulation by increasing the buying power of the people. I do not see anything inherently wrong in an undertaking making profits so long as they do not use unlawful or questionable means or exploit the people. That is a different thing all together. But the mere fact of a bank or a concern making a profit should not be a matter for concern at all. It should rather be highly encouraging in view of the fact that the exchequer as well as the country are profited thereby.

But a very distinguished member of this House has cited the example of co-operative banks paying very small dividends. That is due to the fact that a co-operative organisation is run for mutual benefit and the members are given concession rates. If co-operative banks try to pay more dividends then the very cheap rates at which the members would be entitled to get loans or buy goods or enjoy the benefits will be curtailed. The very fact that the dividend is limited makes it possible for the co-operative banks to offer their services and sell their goods to members at specially cheap rates. So the members profit in two ways. First of all they are getting things cheap and cheap money-credit; and secondly by way of dividend. So the limitation of dividend in their case does not go against them but rather benefits them indirectly. There should therefore be no comparison between the limitation of dividends in co-operative organisations and the limitation of dividends in banking concerns. I think from these points of view there should be no attempt to limit the dividends. That would be limiting the efficiency of the banks. In these circumstances they should be allowed to make the profit. Of course, as I have already submitted, if they use any wrongful means or means which are injurious to the public, it is a different matter and should require correction. But efficiency and expansion and consequent profit should never be discouraged.

With regard to nationalisation much has been said by experts and they have criticized each other mercilessly, and each side has tried to show that their opponents are hopelessly wrong. It would therefore perhaps be not out of place to place before the House a layman's point of view. I submit, Sir, that nationalisation should not be made a slogan. It should not be asked for simply for its own sake. Nationalisation or no nationalisation must depend upon one simple practical formula and that is efficiency. If it is possible for a private business house to run a bank, a business or producing concern more efficiently and cheaply and therefore in the better interests of the people, then it should not be nationalised. If on the other hand, the taking over of a business concern by Government will lead to better and cheaper and more efficient production and ultimate good of the country by way of sound and efficient management, then it should be nationalised. Nationalisation should be considered with respect to each industry and concern on its own merits. By the very fact that we talk of nationalisation, it creates wonder and bewilderment and creates nervousness in the money market. I shall explain how. Perhaps it is not realised in the House that it is not the capitalists alone but a very large number of the middle classes who supply the capital to industrial undertakings. Now any nervousness on their part would be extremely undesirable.

The result of this is that sound floatations are not subscribed to the fullest extent; consequently industrialisation is suffering. We do not gain anything by mere talk of nationalisation, expropriation or limitation of dividends. If it is to be done, it should not be merely talked of. Talking like this in season and out of season really creates much confusion in the market. Of course, I talk as a layman. I have not the responsibility of experts or even that of people like Prof. Ranga who is the leader of the Kisan movement. But I think I have the right to express the onlooker's point of view as a layman. If nationalisation is to be accepted, it should not be accepted indiscriminately as a principle. The matter should be carefully considered. It is initially a matter of financing. Government has to find the money to buy up the Imperial Bank and other concerns. Then the most crucial question is whether the Government should be able to run its business on a sound basis as a business concern would do. The largest business which Government has undertaken is the Indian Railways. It is badly managed. During the war another business was taken by the Government—the Civil Supplies Department. It was run badly and is still run badly. Government management is not necessarily very effective. The authorities who run Government business or offices are trained on a different line altogether. They are accustomed to red-tapism. Notes and counter notes, sanctions and approvals from their machinery. They are accustomed to look to rules more than to efficiency. In fact, a Government official who sticks to the letter of the rules even ignoring the substance and causing much loss to Government, will be regarded as an ideal officer. A man of least resistance, a man who does not come into clash with anything but who just goes on lubricating his way up is a successful government official in fact, flattering high people, mixing with them, pampering to their wishes and fancies—this is what I mean. There are some government officials who have a way of lubricating themselves into high positions. These are the best Government servants. But in a business concern a man who does not break the rule to save a profit or to prevent a loss, would be chucked out at once. His training has been from the point of view of efficiency. Government training has been from the point of view of subservience to rules. So Government machinery, unless trained particularly to run properly on business lines, would for the time being fail to run business undertakings. So we shall have to consider the financial implications, the efficiency and other things and not merely talk of nationalisation for its own sake. That I believe is the middle view between the two extreme expert views. I think we should approach the question from that commonsense point of view.

With regard to the general principles of the Bill, I am in full agreement except that I want to tighten the procedure and the machinery here and there. I have submitted some drafting amendments. With regard to these, we have the perpetual grievance that drafting of Bills is very badly done. Somehow or other, any kind of English is considered to be good enough. If any amendment is moved, it is always said "Let us have the original; what is the good of a change?" If there is anything bad in a Bill, it is said "What is the harm?" But I believe that when a Bill has to be passed by the House the House has a right to be better served in this respect. It may be that the draftsmen are put to very hard test because they have a very large number of Bills to deal with. In fact, last year we have put on the statute book a record number of 67 Acts. I believe at the rapid rate we are proceeding, we may break our own record in 1949. I submit that the Banking Companies Bill is being rushed through. After it has come from the Select Committee, very little time has been given to us to consider the matter. It is not enough that the Bill is conceived on right lines. We have to see how the machinery fits in with facts, how the language is suitable to the idea, how anomalies, dead-locks and difficulties are avoided. I have had to submit a very large number of amendments both of a drafting nature and others which are known as "substantial" amendments as if drafting amendments cannot be substantial amendments. I submit they should be a little carefully considered by the Department.

In the course of two or three days I have had to submit a large number of amendments. Honourable members may easily see the difficulty of drafting so many amendments, copying them, presenting them to the Department and of course putting them to so much more work and then being ignored by the House as being so much nonsensical mischief. I am not speaking by way of complaint. I believe that the members of the Select Committee and the members of this House have a right to be better served by the Draftsmen. It is in fact not the business of members to look to drafting. They give the idea and it is for the draftsmen to put them in proper shape. In this case, honourable members. They seem to feel that the interests of the depositors are somewhat, but the clauses have not been redrafted in the light of the amendments but the clauses were amended by a kind of scrappy patch work. I believe many of our Bills will give rise to large number of litigations and the very lawyers who are somewhat in disfavour in the House will benefit by bad drafting. It has already been said that our Draft Constitution is a lawyer's paradise and many lawyers are likely to make very good business out of it. On the whole, I heartily support the principles of the Bill and I thank the Honourable Minister for agreeing to be rather very strict in tackling the banking problems. The interests of the depositors should be safeguarded. In this matter also there is some kind of fallacy lurking in the minds of some honourable members. They seem to feel that the interests of the depositors are something antagonistic to the interests of the nation. But, are not the depositors our own nationals? By safeguarding the interests of the depositors, shall we not be safeguarding the interests of the nation? If we destroy the interests of the depositors and constituents of the banks, would we not be shaking the credit of the people in our banking system?

There is also noticeable in the House a tendency to ignore and criticise the bankers as if they have no part to play in the economy of the country. I may assure honourable members that I am neither an industrialist nor a banker. I am only a constituent of a bank with a minus balance. But I believe constituents of banks form a very large part of the country and therefore their interests cannot be ignored on the supposition that their interests are antagonistic to the interests of the country. I submit that the interest of all must be looked into. The industrialist has his part to play, the capitalist has his part to play, the middle classes have their part to play and the labourers and the kisans, who are the beloved of some sections of the House, have their part to play. But, I believe, somehow or other, the capitalist and the industrialists know how to take care of themselves. Nobody can really touch them. As regards the labourers and the kisans, they are the object of special care of some and have somehow or other many friends. The class of people who require protection are the middle classes. They are hard hit everywhere. The Honourable the Prime Minister said a few days ago that the middle classes are the hardest hit. They are the object of ridicule and criticism and are often looked upon with some kind of animosity as if they are parasites of society. Under one measure or another, you always hit the middle classes. Under these circumstances we should take a balanced view and create harmonious relations between all sections of the people. We should approach this Bill from that point of view. With these few words I support the first reading of the Bill.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): Sir, the debate on the whole has been very favourable to the report of the Select Committee. I find two extreme views given expression to. Naturally, on a matter of such importance, as the banking system is the soul of the economic life in any country, much interest is evinced by honourable members. Two friends, two important members of this House come from the same province. One is a theorist and the other is too much of a practical banker. One is a Rightist and the other is too much of a Leftist. One of them was a member of the Select Committee and the other appeared before that body as a witness and gave evidence. They have both spoken on this measure this morning. The Select Committee tried to steer a middle course between the opposing views held by these gentlemen. I think it was right that it did so.

Sir, honourable members should know the previous history of this legislation. Before the Company Act was amended in 1937, there was no separate banking law at all for this country. For the first time a Chapter was introduced as 10-A in the Company law. It was, before that time, holding the same position as any other joint stock company in this country. Now, the need was felt to put separate restrictions regarding the maintenance of reserves and so on. The considerations regarding banking business are in many cases different from those relating to industrial concerns though all these concerns can be registered as joint stock companies under the Companies Act. Therefore it was that a separate Chapter was introduced. Even then, the late lamented Sir N. Sircar, who piloted the Bill, gave an assurance that soon after, he would introduce a regular banking Bill devoted purely to commercial banking and, if possible, to other kinds of banking in this country. Thirteen years thereafter, we have got this for consideration before the House. On a prior occasion a Bill was referred to a Select Committee and that body went through the matter carefully. The Assembly was then prorogued necessitating that measure coming before another Select Committee. We have now got its report before us. It is now as if this matter has not been considered fully and all shades of opinions consulted.

Sir, an observation was made by a member yesterday that the smaller banks were not allowed to appear before the Select Committee, where as by some fortuitous circumstance or indirect method Mr. Mody tried to submit a memorandum to the Committee and also gave his evidence. The correct position is not that. On a prior occasion we went from day to day into this matter and a number of witnesses came representing all shades of opinion in this continent. There came before us small rats, big rats, puny rats, white rats and also black rats. The Exchange Banks were represented, the Imperial Bank was represented, the National Bank was represented, the Central Bank was represented and the Allahabad Bank was represented. The small banks of Calcutta and the smaller banks of Madras were also represented. No shade of opinion was allowed to go by default. Mr. Mody who did not appear before the Committee on that occasion, gave us the benefit of his advice on this occasion. We are not going to be too much in his pocket, nor are we going to throw away the volume of experience he has gathered and placed before us. After all what did he say? He does not want to go against the interests of the country. You cannot say he has become a white man. He is a dark man and continues to be darker in colour. A good deal of material was placed before the Select Committee on behalf of the middle classes also. Even the Secretary of the Shareholders' Association of Madras—nobody knows that Secretary and none can impute any partiality to him for the industrialists of Bombay. The best of opinions we had from Bombay and other parts of the country. Now, I agree in some respects with the advice given to us by Professor Shah and I agree with the manner in which Mr. Krishnamachari tried to improve this Bill. Professor Shah wanted this Bill to be enlarged so as to cover private money lending by individuals also. That matter was considered by the Select Committee. I am not giving away any secret when I say that the reason why we did not go into that matter was this: we did not want a comprehensive legislation, nor did we stand by the technical objection that the Centre has no right in this matter. If it were necessary we may provide for this in the Constitution that with the consent of the provinces we can introduce comprehensive legislation. But some of the Provinces, as honourable members know, have already introduced and passed various pieces of legislation differing one from the other according to the necessities of each province regarding money lending. Also, the Reserve Bank of India, three years ago, said in its report that, for sometime to come, we cannot do away with the money lenders in the villages. Until we are able to introduce multi-purpose co-operative societies or other financial corporations to help agriculture and also supply the necessities, we will have to get on with this system. There was one point which we considered and that was whether we are to wait until there is another committee or commission to bring this matter also within the purview of this Bill or we may proceed with the Bill as it was, at any rate regulating the joint stock companies which were not being regulated properly. Apart from other considerations, we thought that immediately it was necessary to bring into existence a comprehensive legislation dealing at least with the major problems of the major banks. Therefore, Sir, it is not our intention to exclude this aspect. I am sure the Provinces will follow suit and bring in comprehensive legislation on the lines of scrutiny by bankers who are individuals, partnerships or nidhis, and so on.

As regards the object of the Bill, it is natural to expect that this banking legislation over which so much thought has been bestowed should not merely safeguard the interests of the depositors. I agree safeguarding the interests of the depositors must be one of the primary objects, but if it is merely to keep the surplus money of the depositors, an iron safe may be built in the centre of the heart of Delhi, the entire money may be kept there and the key may be deposited with the Honourable Minister for Finance. It is the money of the masses. The money that goes into the banks should not stagnate, but flow back to the masses, so that the industrial and agricultural economy of this country may grow and ultimately the wealth of the nation may grow. Lots of money are here rotting in the Imperial Bank and people are prepared to place their money there even without interest as deposits and without giving a pie to the villager. Those people who have surpluses cannot live or sustain their existence without the help of those millions of the masses who are rotting. Anybody who has the interests of the country at heart would certainly ponder—for whose benefit are we making this legislation? It is for the middleman. Is it for making Mr. Mody the richer that we are spending 2-1/2 to 3 months here? Naturally the question arises as to whether we ought to make sure that this money will flow. The bigger banks are trying to swallow the smaller banks, because they cannot lend by themselves. As it was said, the Central Bank cannot go to a village and themselves lend, to a man who has got three acres of land or a sheep farmer or one who has goats. Such are the persons who will encourage such things. I make a reference to China and my honourable friend, Prof. Ranga referred to the unfortunate position in which the leader is, but I do not look to this system of banking by this statute. Though it has not progressed, they have had the apex bank, the industrial bank and the commercial bank and so on. Therefore it is up to the Co-operative Societies or the Government to have an All-India Co-operative Society with a number of provincial banks with an apex bank at the Centre, really attending itself to the needs of the population, to the financing of agricultural operations. The Reserve Bank in this regard has so far not addressed itself to that and had shown a cold face to it. I say now that it has become a State Bank. I am sure that the co-operative enterprise in the provinces will be enlarged and real help will be given to the villages. Let us not be carried away by the course of another State and see which particular community or group of interests have been safeguarded. From the interests of the country as a whole it is not quite relevant to say that agriculture also must be brought within the scope of this Bill. It is enough we thought that the co-operative societies ought not to be brought within its purview, because it is likely that the Reserve Bank Act which has so many sections has not done anything towards agriculture. If therefore power is given to the Reserve Bank to impose its own terms and conditions, I am not sure whether the co-operative societies will flourish in these conditions and we allowed these co-operative societies not to come within the purview of these banks.

So far as commercial banking is concerned, we have really appointed the Reserve Bank as the Superintendent of all Banks. As honourable members may know this legislature has appointed a Superintendent of Insurance Companies. It is his job to check and supervise. Likewise the Reserve Bank is the watch-dog of our interests, but today we have a right to say that it is our own Government and it is our own Reserve Bank which is now the watch-dog of the interests of all banks and the community at large. Unless I become a Minister myself, I may not be satisfied with the appointment made by any other minister. That very often happens. Even if it is possible, I have to do a number of things, not according to my own choice, but according to the advice that I have to receive. Therefore, if any directors have been chosen from the old set and new blood has also been infused, there can be honest differences of opinion and the Honourable Minister can have no motive except the best interests of this country. We will wait and see if the present directorate does not change its attitude towards the public. It is our property and we have control. We can dismiss those people whom we have appointed. Therefore, let us not say that it is a wrong step that was taken. (Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: They are tenure appointments.) We can have an amendment tomorrow. We sometimes feel that we are a sovereign body and the next moment we are absolutely so depressed that we have no powers at all. I am not a pessimist. I believe we have taken the right step, when we nationalised the Reserve Bank deliberately. We did want, as a second step that the Imperial Bank should also be nationalised. We convinced the previous Minister and he agreed. Our present Minister has always been noted for his socialist views, but I feel we must not attribute motives. I and Prof. Ranga are good friends, but when he refused to speak to me tomorrow, it is not right to impute motives and if I turn the search-light in the mind, I will find the cause of his change of attitude. Therefore, I am not prepared to accuse the Honourable Minister and I know he has always taken the line that we must go on towards socialism. I don't see why he should change. I tried to ascertain from him. He says that in the nervous state in which we find ourselves, after we have assumed charge of this administration of ours—it is no doubt a triumph—let us wait and see. There are two ways of taking his money, immediately we will distribute or allow him to grow fat. There is a Telugu proverb: The ram is allowed to grow fatter and fatter, for whose benefit? For the man to eat it.

Therefore, he is not going to go away with this money. If not ourselves, at least the future generations will get hold of him. It is not even a long range policy. Two years is the time that the Honourable Minister wanted and if possible, it will be earlier and in this troubled state of affairs and the nervousness in the market, we do want to produce much more by way of agricultural produce and industrial produce from end to end. But unfortunately we have not progressed in that line. There is some justification for it; not that I am trying to justify it. On account of the 14 per cent dividends, the price of the five hundred Rupees share has gone up to Rs. 2,500; now it has come down to Rs. 1,800. The middle class men have invested their money in the shares. Are we to say, I am going to reduce it immediately so that it may come to a very low figure. There is another point. On the strength of these securities, banks have lent. If suddenly the dividend drops down, the banks will ask for further securities. That is the way in which small banks fail. In Calcutta, a number of small banks, 130 or so, —I do not exactly remember the number— they all collapsed for this reason. Suppose I want to draw money from a bank. I pledge with the bank the securities with me. If the securities are gilt edge securities, the banks lend up to 90 per cent. of the value. If the value is falling down, they will say it is not even worth 40 per cent. and demand of me additional security. I am at my wits end to get the additional security and therefore I collapse. This is a point which we have to keep in view. I have been accustomed to argue for both sides and that is why I am pointing this out (An Honourable Member: Whose case are you arguing?) I am only warning my friend Mr. Mody, let him not be happy before he is out of the wood. These are the considerations for which our Finance Minister thought that it is too early to embark upon the nationalisation of the Imperial Bank. Honourable members will also see that it is in reply to my question—I do not claim any credit for it—only I put the question—it did not come before the House as the question time was over—I got the written answer and I am satisfied with that—that the Honourable the Finance Minister said so. I am anxious that the Imperial Bank should be nationalised on account of the fact that the Europeans are still ruling. During the war time they had all the benefits of us. The money was ours; but the enjoyment was theirs. The Exchange Banks do the same thing. It is like this. I build a house, but somebody else occupies it. At least I wanted a change now. The Honourable the Finance Minister assured us outside this House that he would try to see that it is completely in the management of Indians as early as possible. Any way, Professor Ranga suggested that for the present we will be satisfied with Indianisation and so on.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: I did not say so. I want the nationalisation of the Imperial Bank; you are watering it down.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: I am sorry if I have understood him otherwise. I do want nationalisation of the Imperial Bank; I do not want to get out of that position. But, I am satisfied if the Honourable the Finance Minister, who has to pilot us through these troubled years, says, wait and see, and I am prepared to accept it. That is my position.

Now, let me proceed to the other point. Apart from nationalisation, we have practically given enormous powers to the Reserve Bank under this Bill. Without going into details, we have given enormous powers at every stage regarding policy, regarding programme, and we have made the Reserve Bank the guardian of all interests, whosoever it may be, depositors, shareholders, and the people at large. We have added a new clause, clause 21, in the Select Committee which says:

"Where the Reserve Bank is satisfied that it is necessary or expedient in the public interest to do so, it may determine the policy in relation to advances to be followed by banking companies generally or by any banking company in particular and when the policy has been so determined, all banking companies or the banking company concerned, as the case may be, shall be bound to follow the policy as so determined."

Further on, the clause says:

"The Reserve Bank may give directions to banking companies, either generally or to any banking company or group of banking companies in particular, as to the purposes for which advances may or may not be made, the margin to be maintained in respect of secured advances and the rates of interest to be charged on advances, and each banking company shall be bound to comply with any directions so given."

As regards formation, even at the formation stage, the Reserve Bank can insist on certain capital; but we have tried to make it easy for smaller companies to come into existence. There are the licensing provisions. I believe Professor Shah wants that so far as the foreign companies are concerned, they must be registered under this Bill. I will also agree to their registration; but we thought that the licensing provisions are quite sufficient. We have made a provision that no company shall carry on banking business unless it holds a licence granted by the Reserve Bank, that every banking company in existence on the commencement of this Act before the expiry of six months from such commencement and every other company before commencing banking business shall apply in writing to the Reserve Bank for a licence. We thought these provisions were sufficient to see that the foreign companies would behave properly and not walk away with our funds to our detriment. There are also many other provisions regarding the reserves. There is nothing to prevent us from changing the provision and insisting upon their registration in this country. I myself have appended a minute of dissent on two matters. I want that our auditors must audit those banks. The English Banks or foreign companies who have not registered themselves here must also be made subject to the licensing rules and so far as auditing is concerned, our men should audit their accounts. As at present, there is no knowing as to how their accounts are being manipulated and whether they are kept properly or not. If the Honourable the Finance Minister agrees to our own auditors looking into their accounts and reporting to us so that we may have sufficient information to see whether the licensing provision is enough or if a more stringent provision is required, I think it is all right. I hope the Honourable the Finance Minister will accept the amendment. As regards opening branches also, power has been given to the Reserve Bank. Where one company has worked as a pioneer, another also tries to start a company there. That is the case in the case of Transport also. Power has been given to the Reserve Bank to see that Banks do not overlap. Where there is a branch of a Bank catering to the needs of the people in that locality, let there not be another branch also, to compete with the other. Power has been given to the Reserve Bank to spread the various branches of the Banks over this continent so that they may be really useful to industry and commerce, (Shri B. Das: "And show partiality to the Imperial Bank!") A dark man would never show partiality unless he changes his colour; but the colour often changes.

As regards administration, there is a provision which says that the Reserve Bank can fix the remuneration of the managing agents. We cannot fix a remuneration. In our parts there is a saying which goes thus: A man who draws the honey. (An Honourable Member: "After the sting." Yes, after the sting. Big companies will have to pay more on account of the huge resources; a small company cannot pay so much. Therefore, you cannot fix a definite percentage. One per cent of a crore would be more than ten per cent. of Rs. 1,000. Percentage by itself, out of its context may not mean anything. We therefore found it inconvenient to lay down a hard and fast percentage, and have left it to the Reserve Bank to see that the amount charged over the management is in keeping with the resources of that company. That is what we have done. But Professor Shah says there must be something for employees. I agree. We have come to a position, and Mr. Mody will accept it, in the industrial policy that is laid down, where all the interests are represented. We said that hereafter employees or labour must be made partners in business along with capital. I agree that this must be done also in banking concerns. But it must not be left to their selection. The Government may nominate in the first instance and there is some force in my friend saying that the depositors contribute the largest amount of money. A banking concern does not run its business on account of the paid-up capital it receives but it depends more on deposits. These deposits are more than ten times the share capital. Therefore we should not leave it entirely in the hands of people who originally purchased the shares and who actually have nothing to do with the management except that they brought the concern into existence and that they meet once a year and pass a vote of confidence in the Directors. Therefore, there is justification for the claim that the depositors who are the main contributors to the concern must also be represented on the Bank directorate. But I would say, if the Honourable Minister finds it convenient that the Government may nominate one or two on behalf of the depositors.

Shri B. L. Sondhi: And immediately he takes away his deposit he can go!

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Many a man, once appointed a director will continue to be so for the period that he is appointed.

Shri B. L. Sondhi: You mean that his deposit is locked up?

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: That is all right. There is always some convenience in any human institution. We are, however, trying to protect his interests. At any rate there will be a man there to find out if all the things are going right or if something is going wrong. The depositors must be represented in the directorate, and in the first instance that loose body may not be given the right to elect but may be nominated by the Government. There may be an employee director on the bank and a director nominated for and on behalf of the depositors. In that case, there is a case for going on with it.

The next point is about the dividend. However temporary a measure it might be, the Dividend Control Ordinance, which it is now sought to continue by a Bill, has been placed before this House and has been referred to the Select Committee. It is intended to deal with inflation for the time being. Its aim is six per cent. or the average of past two years, whichever is higher. If that is so, it does not touch our nine per cent. The Imperial Bank paid the last time 14 per cent. dividend and it will again probably pay another 14 per cent.: so 14 and 14 will be the same 14 per cent.! My friend, Mr. Ramalingam Chettiar gave his support to this under the expectation that it will go down. With his experience in this field, he thought that persons who were capitalists would reduce the nine per cent. to six per cent. It is a wrong step. All the same, if by that we are.....

Shri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar: He has misunderstood me. I said the Ordinance fixed six per cent. whereas we proposed to fix it at nine per cent. here. I thought it was incongruous. It ought to be less than nine per cent. So I agreed to the deletion of the clause.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: The Ordinance does not fix merely six per cent. but six per cent. or the average of the previous two years, whichever is higher, not less. Therefore, I have no objection. My honest friend was honestly misled!

If my friend, Mr. Mody feels that the business in this country will revive and the country will flow with milk and honey, I have no objection to put myself personally speaking, to that inconvenience for some time. But in the Select Committee we can make certain changes and not confine it for one or two years. Inflation is not going to come down. The last time during the war when a similar measure was introduced, do you know how it was circumvented? Even the business of reducing the inflation was not achieved.

because whatever was not paid to the shareholder was done away with. A clerk drawing Rs. 60 began to draw Rs. 600. Once again the shareholder does not get the money and throw it into the market: the clerk gets Rs. 600 and he throws it into the market. Otherwise, the Managing Agent will take it. It is up to our friends who are running this whole show to feel that they are also guardians of our liberty and the freedom of this country. I was vexed to hear that a manager of a particular factory who for performing Lakshmi Vrittha in the premises of his factory charged Rs. 4,000 but had the same performed by his wife in his house for Rs. 40. This is discreditable. Gandhiji's photo is there because he discarded wealth: the other man's photo is not there because he is the man who grasps wealth! If I had trained myself or my boy to run a bank I would run it with the ideal of service as my motto. I would be happy if I could by my service put one more morsel of food into another's mouth.

If my friend says, how can nationalization be effected, I would first nationalise him and leave him to manage the affairs. He should be able to say to himself that I have done my best and enough for my wife and my children. Hereafter I will place all my resources for the good of my country. What else is nationalization? It is not out of place to say when the late Pandit Motilal Nehru was asked to draw up a constitution for this country he was told: "And you want the Englishman to go? If they go what about the Army?" He said: "Certainly I am going to have an army." "Then how?" came the query. "This army is mine" said Nehru.

Therefore, Mr. Mody is mine. I will ask him to take charge of this. Instead of saying I will not work for less than Rs. 10,000, he will say: I have earned enough for my wife and children. I will now do service to my country. I do expect my own men to say this. They have to change their attitude. Whether from a socialistic point of view, or a communist point of view, or a religious point of view, there comes a stage in a man's life when he says: I have done enough for my wife and children. I now place myself at the service of my country. If anyone says this cannot work because of profit I bend my head in shame and say: profit is not my motive: service and sacrifice to the community is my motive. Whatever concessions I attain they have been drawn from the blood of millions of this country. If I have a surplus it is so much surplus taken away from the mouths of other mouths. If I have a surplus of milk I am taking away milk from the millions of other children in this country. If I have one more room in my house I am throwing out so many refugees into the streets in this cold weather. Let every one, who wants to justify himself as the citizen of this country come forward and say that I am not frightened of nationalization. Let him not sell himself for a mess of pottage. That change of attitude is expected. All the same I for my part am prepared to say, have 6 per cent. or take 8 per cent., I have no objection. But if he still persists in this I am afraid he and I may not be able to avoid the cataclysm that is going to come. It has already started in his province, which is a fertile field for all kinds of movements—communism started there, socialism started there, extremism starts there and also hard-boiled conservatism starts there. (Prof. N. G. Ranga: "Also R.S.S.") I may also say to the House that what has been done is all right.

Lastly, my friend Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari made a very beautiful speech yesterday. He spoke very well indeed. I wanted to oppose him as far as possible but I was converted. So far as the two points are concerned I am extremely obliged to the Honourable Minister for his being prepared to compromise on them. (Prof. N. G. Ranga: "Let him speak on his concessions.") So far as the concessions are concerned why don't you allow me to thank the Minister in advance? The concession is this that hitherto in the banking Bill a person ought not to have voting rights of more than 10 per cent. and if ten persons have charge of a banking administration those ten become the rulers. Five plus one, six persons will control the destinies of any bank. All that my friend Mr. Krishnamachari wanted was that $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. would be the maximum voting right of any man. Thus at least you guarantee that 40 persons will be in charge of the administration. Forty persons mean that the majority would be a matter of 21 persons. Instead of $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. the Minister, I think, has agreed to five per cent. It will take time for him to feel that five per cent. is not enough. Anyhow I am satisfied with this assurance.

[Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar]

Looking at our banking assets in individual concerns. Originally in the Select Committee it was 20 per cent. No bank shall advance on the shares of any other concern or hold shares more than 20 per cent. either of its capital or of the capital of the other bank, because by five such companies the whole banking concern will be locked up. In the Select Committee it was raised to 40. Mr. Krishnamachari opposed it. Between 20 and 40 I would put the compromise at 30 per cent. The Honourable Minister is able I think to agree on the compromise. I thank him in advance. Sir I support the Bill as reported by the Select Committee subject to these modifications which may be accepted.

[At this stage Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair, which was then occupied by Mr. Deputy Speaker (Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar.)]

Shri T. Prakasam (Madras: General): I thank the previous speaker who has now taken the place of the Speaker in the Chair. He has enlightened me, who is a day too late in this debate, on both sides of the case. I thank him very much.

I was wondering why the Honourable the Finance Minister introduced this Bill at this stage and at this period of inflation and other monetary troubles. I was so glad to hear that this was a Bill that was drafted during the time of my good old friend Sir N. N. Sircar when he was the Law Member here. Eleven years have elapsed and during these eleven years the whole world has changed, the whole of our country has changed and even our position in the world has changed. This Bill is introduced to amend on the lines suggested 11 years ago. If the Honourable the Finance Minister had waited perhaps for another 12 months he would not have found it right to introduce a Bill of this kind to suit the present conditions.

Mr. Ayyangar spoke very nicely on both sides and tried to reconcile irreconcilable position. Let me tell the House that the inflation trouble started in our country more than 120 years ago when the English people began to establish their banking system in our country. Our people had then their own banking system in an excellent manner. They resisted very much and tried to prevent the establishment of the banking system on the British lines. I may tell you how inflation started at the very beginning of the establishment of this English banking system in our country.

In the three capital cities of India the English people established their banks, which the East India Company wanted to support, so that they might be enabled to carry on their trade and business in this country. The Government itself did all that they could to strengthen these banks and also make them the authorised banks. The reason was that the Government itself was in a tottering condition at the beginning. They were in need of 74 lakhs of rupees at one time. They could not get the money and they asked the Bank of Bengal to lend them this sum. But where would the bank get it. The Bank had no money. So notes were printed for 74 lakhs and this 74 lakhs was lent to the Government. This forging of currency notes without any backing or support behind it started then. That was the beginning of our inflation. Before the war inflation went up to more than 1,200 million rupees. We are in the throes of that inflation now. We do not know how we are going to get out of it or whether we are really in a position to get out of it. At this time this Banking Amendment Bill has been introduced and what is to happen now with these amendments? Sir Homi Mody got up and thundered and called upon Prof. Shah to explain wherefrom he got his knowledge of economics. I do not know what Prof. Shah would reply but we got every thing from Great Britain. When British banks were established inflation started and now even after 150 years of British rule here and after their having gone away we are still in the throes of inflation and we are not in a position to know how we are going to get out of it. To get out of it what is it that we should have done? What should we have done immediately after we sent away the Englishmen, their soldiers and their armies from here? When we took charge of the administration the first thing that should have been done was the nationalisation of the Reserve Bank, the nationalisation of the Imperial Bank and the nationalisation of every thing which would immediately give us relief. We have not taken that step. You were trying to explain how you members of the Select Committee were induced to take up this view. You 4 P.M. tried to explain by saying that you did not wish to thrust the whole thing all of a sudden upon the country or upon the capitalists or upon the old bankers. I agree it is not possible to thrust anything all of a sudden and bring about a reform in a month or two or even in 12 months, but still we ought to have been on that road and not on a different road which has been taking us lower and lower into the ditch so far as the finances and the banking business are concerned.

Now, Sir, after the British banking had been established and after the British people's influence had waned after some time, our own friends came forward. They established their own banks. They suffered and they grumbled. So long as the British were exercising their full influence in this country, their grievance was that they were not favoured by the Government. It was a matter of jealousy to drive away the English banking system and the Englishman from the top; it was in the interest of our own bankers—it was natural. In this world we are governed today only by competition and profiteering and nothing more and nothing less.

In that way our people got the upper hand in the banking system. They established their banks and they have been doing business in their own way exactly following the lines laid down by the English people so long as they were here. They became jealous of our banks, they became jealous of any other banking system that was introduced in this country. My honourable friend Mr. Ramalingam Chetty had been labouring for some time, whether here or elsewhere, to introduce something on a co-operative basis. But he was finding it somewhat difficult. These banks that had been taken charge of by our own people mostly, were jealous of these co-operatives. This co-operative banking system had continued successfully in many places and also worked successfully. Long ago it was in Baroda that these rural multi-purpose societies were started—started not merely in theory but also worked up and they showed how they would benefit the ordinary villager, the ordinary cultivator, the ordinary coolies even. Even after that experience, we had not been able to make sufficient progress with regard to the establishment of multi-purpose societies.

We, Sir, in Madras established a Committee over which our esteemed friend Mr. Vijayaraghavachariar was the President. They struggled hard to evolve a system out of which the co-operative society system could be established and spread for the benefit of those rural classes who are the real millions of the country and for whose benefit everyone professes that he has started this bank and that bank; everyone says that it is all in the interests of the millions; you also said, Sir, "For whose sake are we doing all these things?" You are sitting there, we are all sitting here, we are all functioning for their benefit. Of course we must show that in action also.

Even the Preamble of the new Constitution says that the co-operative basis should be adopted in this country. The co-operative system is the one system that must be established in this country. You yourself were good enough to say, "Do bring this matter separately under the new constitution of the altered Reserve Bank Act". Why should they bring it? Why should any member of this Assembly be asked to bring such a thing? Is it not the duty of the Government? It is the duty of the Government that is struggling hard now to supply food, to supply cloth, to supply all the necessities. I would ask the Finance Minister to tell us the amount he has been spending in the importing of the food-stuffs from outside countries. Rs. 110 crores to be spent for one year? Why not that amount be spent here for the better purpose of improving cultivation, growing more food and all that? You exhort through appeals and say, "Grow more food, grow more food, grow more food". Where do they grow it? You say that you are not able to give them the implements and you say you are not able to get the implements and to undertake collective farming. It is the duty of the Government. During the last three years of the food famine, it was the duty of the Government to have taken hold of lands that were available for cultivation and brought them under cultivation to grow more food. That was what was done in other countries when similar troubles arose, long time ago. Nothing of the sort has been going on here.

We have now been told that these amendments and small things would help industry in this and that way. God forbid, Sir, but let us save the country from these troubles. Why are not the Government advocating a clear and bold policy? If you wish to give food to the people, if you wish to give cloth to the people, you have to undertake a different policy altogether from the one which the Government have been undertaking until now. I am very sorry that we have been going on the wrong side of the road until now.

Mr. Ramalingam Chetty who has been working in the co-operative system, out of experience, pointed out how the co-operative societies or the co-operative banks had not been able to get real support from the Imperial Bank or even other Banks. They have been shifting for themselves. The co-operative system solves all the problems. The Honourable Dr. Matthai might understand it. The co-operative societies solve all the troubles of any Government which has got a responsibility to serve the millions of the masses of this country because the money is coming from the masses and not from a few capitalists in the capital cities of this country. In that way it was that the co-operative system had been struggling hard to raise its head during the last 50 years. Let me tell you, Sir, for forty years in the Madras Province where the co-operative system is very popular, it could not succeed because during the 40 years of its existence it could not get a collective share money of more than one crore. We have passed that stage also. The English days are gone, the Indian banking days are gone. I am advising the honourable Mr. Mody to look ahead, not to go under any wrong impression that this country is standing in the same old condition. Conditions have changed. Sometimes we cannot see with our physical eyes; you have to see with a vision which is not confined to the physical examination only. You have to change everything. The present banks must change of their own accord. If they had been studying everything, they should have come forward saying that in this very measure they should have proposed a method by which the accumulated money, if I can call it money at all, is to go down to the masses from whom you have collected it in all the banks and which is standing to your credit.

With regard to this famine, I may say that three years ago when I took charge of the administration in Madras, there was worse famine and we were asked to shift for ourselves and we had to face the trouble although the Government had been spending crores of rupees before I came into office. Something was suggested to me by some wiser friends whom I had with me, "Start co-operative producers-cum-consumers societies. You will get money from the people; from the masses you will get money and with that you can convert those very fellows to give you all that you want and also supply other people's need." Let me tell you, Sir, and let the honourable members also understand, within four or five weeks, we could collect two crores of rupees in four or five districts on the East Coast; we could collect another crore in the West Coast. We could start those societies and they were paying dividends from the second month or the third month. If they had continued until now there would have been no famine in the whole of the Madras Province. But circumstances changed, the Government was overthrown, those who came into office had no sympathy with those societies. Those societies are not dead; they are still kept there without life, without functioning. My honourable friend Mr. Ramalingam Chetty was one of those who at first expressed himself against the working of these co-operative consumer societies. Luckily, later on, the honourable Ramalingam Chetty was appointed chairman of a small sub-committee to tour the whole area to examine the working of these societies. As an honest and good man, although he had expressed his opinion at one time to the contrary, he changed his view and he said that everything was good with regard to these societies and that they should continue. Such is the value of experience and work.

Leaving the people to themselves is no good; attempting to amend the Bills here is no good; no food would come out of it, no cloth would come, no distribution would take place. Let me tell the Union Government and the Finance Minister that fact. That is why I say all this is besides the point as it were. So far as the Bill is concerned or the amendments are concerned or your exposition is concerned and the way in which you are going to give protection from this side and that side, all this is more zero because they will not give us any relief in this country. You must change. Of course you are such a clever man, Sir,—I am addressing you although you are sitting in the Chair, for which you may please excuse me—you give a fight for everyone, in any direction as it were, "In course of time this will come, that will go". But we shall not wait, Sir. The present situation in the country should be handled immediately. I made a special application to the Leader to permit me to come and take part in the Budget debate at this time of the year. I have come with that object. The Budget will come at the appropriate time, but the Banking Bill has come.

This is the crux of the whole situation: the whole of the banking system must change. Whether we change it or not, the people are bound to change it; they will change it to make it serviceable all over the country. The millions have to be served, not a handful of persons here and there—the capitalists or the middle managers. That is the position in which we are placed. The Banking Amendment Bill is no doubt there. I have no voice—I had no voice in my own Province. People there had been suffering for two years now and the time has not come even for them to say whether they are alive or dying or whether they are dead. The time will come, if it comes at all. That is a thing which applies to all the Provinces, although it may be a bit worse in my own Province. That is the position in every province in every area; people are the same; they are suffering in the same manner. What are you doing in order to checkmate the inflation? You may carry out the amendments, you may pass this Bill which ought to have been passed 11 years ago, but all these amendments and other amendments will not, however, help the people, they will not help the country, nor will they help the Government either. The Government must take serious note of the situation—they have been taking serious note, I cannot accuse them of indifference—they have been telling the people how the country is coming into trouble financially. The other day in Gujarat the Home Minister, my friend Sardar Vallabhbhai was telling the people how the food famine had come upon them, how the cloth famine had come upon them and how they should have recourse to the old methods pointed out by the departed great leader of this country. Now, we are in that condition, and I thought I would express myself a bit to enable the honourable members and the Honourable the Finance Minister to understand exactly where we are and what is the effect of this Amending Bill and for whose benefit it is. I am afraid it is for the benefit of nobody. We are not able to see how we have to deal with the matter.

Sir, the question of the nationalization of the Imperial Bank, it was reported recently, has been postponed. Why was it postponed? Does the Government know the effect of the postponement of the nationalization of the Imperial Bank? It is very serious; it should not be postponed, it should be undertaken immediately. Sir, you have tried to explain it by saying that there would be difficulties in adjusting deposits and that there would be other difficulties. We have been witnessing these difficulties during the last half a century here in this country and even in this City of ours. Twenty years ago it was in this very hall—18 or 19 years ago—there was a very big debate on the Currency Bills and the increase of exchange ratio from 1s. 4d. to 1s. 6d. We fought to the end; by one vote they got the other way. What is it even if we had succeeded by that one vote? They had the power to say, "No, we don't care for your majority or for your voting". That was the thing that was done then. By increasing the exchange ratio from 1s. 4d. to 1s. 6d., by merely adjusting the accounts, Rs. 50 crores was the loss sustained by us. We have been ruined in this country through the legislation and the Currency Bill of Great Britain. Even after the arms and soldiers of Great Britain have left here, we are still in the throes of the same old Currency Bill, not yet come to any definite point.

I am very sorry that I am forced to say all these things on this Banking Bill debate. But this Bill is altogether out of place. We could have waited and seen. The Finance Minister could have waited and seen after another 12 months or two years to what condition we would be reduced. I have always been an optimist fighting against all odds everywhere and I do not strike any discordant note. But the Government should be aware of the forces that are gathering against us both inside and outside. If you want to prevent some disaster in this country you have to be ever more careful than until now in order to prevent it. If you want to prevent the communist menace, for the matter of that you have no alternative but to adopt the nationalistic programme of, having village co-operative societies and banks. It ought to have been the basis of our Constitution; as a matter of fact when we started our Constitution in the other House, co-operation should have been the basis of it. We have stated that in the Preamble; we have not cared to go to the root of it. I hope co-operation will become the basis.

It is only in that way that we can survive in this world. So long as we adopt the capitalistic monetary system and we continue to work under it, so long as we adopt the British oath, the British this, the British that and the British everything including the adaptation of the 1935 Act, we shall have no salvation.

With these remarks, I resume my seat.

Shri Prabhu Dayal Himatsingka (West Bengal: General): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I wholeheartedly support the motion for the consideration of the Bill. Some honourable members have pointed out certain lacunae in the Bill.

One was that it does not make provision for operations of money-lending and money lenders and does not provide for agricultural banks and so on. You, Sir, in your speech have met those points and have pointed out that this Bill seeks to make provision for what are known as "commercial banks" and seeks to consolidate the law relating to such banks. At the present moment, these are the more important banks functioning in big and smaller towns and helping commerce and industry and the present Bill seeks to consolidate the law and provide for the supporting of different interests involved in such banking.

My friend Mr. Krishnamachari who was a member of the Select Committee was pleased to say that in some instances, this Bill is a retrograde measure. I have not been able to follow in what respect and why he thinks so. It has sought to meet different points of view, and it has almost met in all respects the considered view placed before the Select Committee by the persons who know banking and who are running the more important banks in the different parts of the country. It was said that certain provisions regarding advances to be made by the banks and other provisions might be misused. As you pointed out, Sir, Section 21 has made ample provision for putting a check in any particular case or in a group of cases or by Banks generally if such action be found to be necessary at any stage. The Reserve Bank has been given power to issue directions as to the extent to which advances can be made to a particular company or any particular shares and at what rate of interest etc. There are other provisions about inspection and report. Some of us in the Select Committee wanted the Reserve Bank to be given further powers to carry out annual inspection and also in cases where any bank came into difficulty the Reserve Bank was suggested to take up the liquidation work. It was however pointed out that the Reserve Bank do not have the necessary staff and also the necessary equipment to discharge the obligations that would be cast on it if this provision was made in the Bill. That was the only reason why the Select Committee had to give up the idea. We from Bengal know that in cases when banks go into liquidation or when certain schemes of settlement are put through by orders of the High Court, the Directors who put forward such schemes manage to carry on in the old way, because there is no proper supervision and it is not possible for the court, unless some litigant or some party brings it to its notice, to intervene. So if it had been possible for the Reserve Bank to take up this work it would have certainly helped in a number of ways to safeguard the interests of a large number of shareholders and depositors.

Prof. K. T. Shah pointed out that the Bill has not made provision for Directors, advances on agricultural commodities and various other things. No doubt, co-operative societies have been doing useful work wherever they have been functioning properly. Where they are not, they are in a moribund condition. It all depends on who is in charge and how the particular institution is run. The charm is not in the word "co-operative society" but in how it is run. A few years ago, the banking habit was very much wanting. Now there is what might be called the banking-mindedness in the country, thanks to these banks, and the more the banks spread out, the greater the tendency will be to take to banking and that will go a long way in helping to start co-operative societies in different places. Therefore this Bill which seeks to consolidate the provisions relating to banking should have the support of the House.

[Shri Prabhu Dayal Himatsingka]

As you will notice, the present Bill seeks to regulate capital and has made provision for reserves. It has also laid down the cash reserves that must be kept by every bank. A licence system has also been introduced whereby control can be exercised on banks. If any bank acts in a manner detrimental to the interests of the country, the Reserve Bank will have power to cancel the licence and stop such a bank from functioning. Similarly, there is provision to inspect and make a report and on the basis of such report power is given to Government to take action.

I am afraid some of the provisions have not been properly understood which accounts for Prof. Ranga taking exception to Section 53. As you will see from the Select Committee report, this Section has been introduced as a matter of caution. Exemptions may be needed in the case of industrial finance corporations, land mortgage banks, housing societies and other like institutions which obtain deposits from the public. This provision will enable Government in suitable cases to exempt such institutions from the operation of the Banking Act or some of the provisions which may stand in the way of the proper working of such institutions. That is why power has been given to Government on the recommendation of the Reserve Bank to exempt such institutions. The Reserve Bank is a nationalised Bank. The Government is a national government. If we cannot trust our own government, if we cannot trust the Reserve Bank, then I do not know whom we should trust.

The Bill is definitely an improvement on the existing law and it has tried to meet different points of view. As regards auditing, you will remember that a suggestion was made that at least the Indian portion of the business done by a foreign bank doing business here should be audited by an auditor, and so far as I remember, the suggestion was made that the Chartered Accountants Bill that has already been introduced will meet the requirements.

If need be, the Honourable Minister should consider whether or not he should make a provision for making it compulsory for the Indian portion of the business being audited by an auditor registered in India. With these remarks I wholeheartedly support the Bill.

Shri Moturi Satyanarayana (Madras: General): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I had no intention of making any speech at the fag end of this debate. But I have a duty to perform in associating myself with this debate, especially in congratulating the Honourable the Finance Minister who has brought forward this Bill.

I have no pretension to speak either on the theory of banking or on the practice of it. All the experience I have in life is confined to approaching people who have money and who are bankers favoured by fortune to help me discharge my duties as guardian of public institutions. I have done a good deal of collection work on behalf of public institutions. During my experience all these thirty years I have had revelations as to the manner in which the country's money and the country's enthusiasm can be misused and abused and exploited.

In the year 1946 when I was going about collecting funds, I visited Bombay on the advice of a friend of mine who said that that place was the best for collecting donations. While on that mission I was going from one locality to another, I fell into friendly hands and was directed to go to Dalal Street where I was told that there was plenty of money and that I could collect in five minutes thousands and lakhs of rupees. I accordingly walked into that street and met a friend who was a sharebroker. I found there hundreds of people howling without any kind of intelligibility in a language which I could not follow. This sharebroker friend came to my rescue and informed me that they were all doing business in lakhs and crores worth of shares. He explained to me how he himself was doing business with the shares of a particular industrialist or moneyed man. I heard all the details of the business from him and ultimately came to the conclusion that that was a place where sane people could not live even for a few minutes. I was not a little surprised to know that those brokers were getting money from the banks, though it all belonged to the depositors. On the credit supplied by the depositors those brokers were either making fortunes or getting ruined. I thought to myself then that if the banks are doing such mischief, why should not Government take action against those who were responsible for it. I had a faint idea that the Reserve Bank had some control over those banks and so I tried to contact the Governor of the Reserve Bank and sent in my card. He, however, refused the interview because I had no credentials. I got disgusted with the affair. My idea in seeking that interview was to ask him whether he could stop the banks from advancing money to the share-brokers and enquire how he could encourage people in gambling in that manner. Subsequently I met him and he told that he had sent a circular authorising a restriction on such advances to the share-brokers. A few days later I met my share-broker friend and asked him why they did business in that manner. He felt very enthusiastic about my question and asserted that unless and until we had a share market and a stock market it would not be possible for our country to flourish. In his view the liquidity of the money and the circulation of the money was to be judged in terms of what was happening in the stock market which was the nerve centre. I could not appreciate what he said, but a number of people seemed to appreciate it hoping to make lots of money without doing any work or using any kind of labour. That is the theory on which the stock market is built up. Now I am glad to see that this kind of gambling with other people's money is going to be stopped to some extent by this Bill. It is for this I thought I should congratulate the Honourable the Finance Minister and thank the Select Committee for its useful labours.

I was watching with great interest the part played by Professor Suman in the consideration of this measure. His reputation for academic theories is known throughout India. I watched also the efforts at explaining his point of view by the honourable member Mr. Mody. His great sympathies and talents for building up capitalist institutions are very well known. I must say that I was very much disappointed with his speech. I have every sympathy for the capitalists to whom I very often go for collecting donations. But I was very much disappointed by his pleading. Capitalist institutions are good and therefore we must encourage them if we could get an assurance from them that they would do some public service. It is true that there is still room for hope. But we only see wealthy people using their wealth for increasing their own comforts and pleasures. That is the reason why there is so much reaction and antagonism against the moneyed people. If they had used their wealth for the purpose of serving the people whose care they have to take, probably so much of antagonism would not have been aroused in this country and the capitalists would not be sitting solitarily here.

I was just watching as to how this debate which is now being carried on here will finally help me in understanding what exactly was the banking position in this country going to be. My own feeling is that much has been said about the co-operative societies. My own experience tells me—I also come from the province from which Shri Ramalingam Chettiar comes and who is a veteran co-operator and who has built up a very great co-operative movement, especially a province which has been very well known for its co-operative movement, but between the co-operative societies and the banking societies today, there are money lenders and probably the money lenders are not at all touched by this

[Shri Moturi Satyanarayana]

Bill, but banking that is supposed to serve the commercial interests today probably is dealt with in this Banking Bill. This commercial banking, though they are supposed to be very antagonistic to the ordinary common man's interests, they have also their own competitors, namely, the foreign exchange banks. My close touch with those people who have banking experience tells me that the foreign companies compete very severely with the local banking and they are able to lend at much cheaper rates and they also take away a lot of money from the indigenous banks. I see that this foreign banking has not come within the purview of this Banking Bill. They also get help and support from the foreign business men and also from the Government and therefore, they are able to give at a cheaper interests a lot of money which they are able to gather in this country itself. It has also to be checked and it has also to be brought under control.

Another point which I want to mention in this connection is that the Reserve Bank was nationalised. Every day its functions and its duties are being increased. Now this banking control also is made a part and parcel of this Reserve Bank, but I do not know whether it will be possible for the Reserve Bank to expand itself in such a fashion as to take complete care of all the indigenous banks in this country and put itself in the position of a care-taker and watch-dog of all the interests of the depositors of the banks and shareholders and the trade interests and the business interests and the industrialists. Is it not possible for the Government to create a separate department for the banking development, so that the banking in this country may have exclusively a separate entity of its own and have its deep seat in this country without any question of mutual competition with each other, so that all the liquidity of the money, of the monetary organisations of this country and all the money that is necessary to be put in the market for the purpose of making the distribution of the goods easier and for the purpose of creating the necessary incentive for work more possible, and organisation, which would be different from the Reserve Bank? This is the suggestion that I want to make before this House for the consideration of the Honourable the Finance Minister, so that a separate department may be built for the purpose of organising the indigenous banking, for the purpose of organizing the banking, for the purpose of seeing that money lending in this country is put on a proper, legal, more fruitful and productive basis, so that it may ultimately take hold of the whole monetary organisation of this country. With these words, Sir, I want to support and I want to congratulate again, the Honourable the Finance Minister for having brought out this Bill and if I have got to say anything, I would like to participate in the debate at a time when the amendments are moved and debated.

Shri Arun Chandra Guha (West Bengal: General): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I give my support to this Bill as it has come out from the Select Committee, and I congratulate the Honourable the Finance Minister on his having been able to go through the Bill to a final stage. This Bill, as has been pointed out, has a chequered career and it has been pending in some way or other for about ten years or more. There has been some criticism to some of the provisions of the Bill and I can say that no Bill or no human work can claim perfection.

Sir, coming from a province which has some special banking problems, I feel that I must place before the House and before the Government those problems. Particularly, I want to draw the attention of the Honourable the Finance Minister to the banking problems of West Bengal. In addition to some political and natural calamities that have been fallen my province, it has recently experienced a serious financial crisis through the failure of about 50 banks including 5 or 6 scheduled banks. Sir, I feel that the Government and the Reserve Bank have not acted properly and promptly; if they had taken proper precautions in time, my province would have been saved from such a huge calamity. Lakhs of middle-class people have been practically ruined. Bengal being a middle-class province, its economic life rests primarily on middle-class. Even in this Bill, I would have liked some more provisions added particularly for the Reserve Bank taking some more responsibilities and some more obligations. I would have liked to see the Reserve Bank provided with the responsibility of having regular inspections of all the banks. It might be annual, triennial or biennial; or some other periodical inspection should have been provided. But as the Reserve Bank has not sufficient staff, the provision has been made that the Reserve Bank can inspect any bank whenever it likes or whenever the Government of India directs it to do so. In that case, I want to point out to the Government and to the Honourable the Finance Minister that such inspection is mostly interpreted as something like a danger signal. Even though regular and normal inspections have not been provided in this Bill, I would ask the Honourable the Finance Minister and the Reserve Bank authorities that they may so conduct the inspections that any inspection may not create panic among the depositors. They may inspect the banks so that not only the banks which are unsound and which are in danger would be inspected by the Reserve Bank. Even sound banks should also be inspected occasionally, so that the depositors may feel that inspection by the Reserve Bank is not really a danger signal.

Another point, Sir, particularly from my experience in West Bengal, is that in all cases of liquidation, the Reserve Bank ought to have been made the official liquidator. Here also the objection has been that the Reserve Bank has not sufficient staff; but I feel that the Reserve Bank should have taken this responsibility; at least for Bengal, the Reserve Bank should take greater responsibility. I know of several cases where the liquidation process has taken years to complete and in this long process of liquidation, depositors have lost heavily and they would have saved a great deal if the liquidation proceedings were expedited.

There is another point, Sir. I feel that the smaller banks should be saved; particularly in the case of Bengal, these smaller banks have a duty, an obligation and some useful purpose to fulfil. At the present time, most of the banks in Bengal are merely doing savings bank business. But a bank is not a safe deposit vault; it has some economic function also. It has got some industrial and commercial function to perform. As far as I can understand, the Congress point of view is to encourage small scale industries, cottage industries and agricultural products. The economic need of the country is also to encourage small scale industries, cottage industries and agricultural production. At least in the case of Bengal I can say, these big banks are of little help in that respect; and the small banks have a very useful function to perform—I cannot say for other provinces. The smaller banks of Bengal are now in a very precarious condition. I do not know if the provisions embodied in this Bill would be sufficient to give them protection and keep them alive. If not, I would request the Honourable the Finance Minister to look into the matter and see that the smaller banks of Bengal may be saved so that they may fulfil a very useful purpose in the national economy.

In this connection, though not quite germane to the debate, I must mention another thing. The banks that have closed their doors or suspended their business, have ruined thousands of middle-class families who deposited their money in those banks. But, those persons who were in charge of those banks, those managing directors, managers, none of them has become poorer; every one of them has become richer. They are guilty of bungling if not of deliberate dishonesty and deliberate corruption. There ought to have been a public enquiry as to why so many banks have failed. About 25 or 30 crores of poor men's money have gone to some bottomless pit, and those men who have been responsible for this disaster, are now rich men; and they are flourishing and doing other business. I would request the Reserve Bank authorities to hold an enquiry into this affair.

As regards the provisions of this Bill, some of the items have been already dealt with. I do not claim to be an expert in banking and therefore it is not proper for me to discuss all these things in detail. I would like to touch two or three items, particularly one. The Reserve Bank has been given authority to supervise, inspect, give directions and also it has been given certain obligations. This I hope is the first step towards the nationalisation of banking concerns. Ultimately we shall have to go to that. Banking is an important and vital factor in national economy. Unless we can nationalise all banking concerns, it will be very difficult for us to develop a nationalised economy. The Reserve Bank has been nationalised. Government and Congress have accepted the policy of the nationalisation of the Imperial Bank. It may be deferred by a few months, but ultimately, it will be given effect to. I hope these obligations and responsibilities that have been put on the Reserve Bank under this Bill will ultimately lead to the nationalisation of all banking concerns.

Some restrictions have been put on the opening of new branches. From my experience of Bengal, I can say this is a very healthy restriction and a very healthy provision. All sorts of branches are being opened simply in a competitive spirit without due care and precaution. The Reserve Bank has now been given authority to give licences for opening new branches. With these few remarks or points which particularly concern Bengal, I commend this Bill to the House and I congratulate the Honourable the Finance Minister on his having been able to complete this very useful piece of legislation which has been dragging on for the last eleven years. I support the Bill.

Shri R. K. Sidhva (C. P. and Berar: General): Sir, as regards this Bill, much has been said about nationalisation of Banks and my honourable friend Professor K. T. Shah has very ably advocated the cause of nationalisation. I shall not therefore deal at great length with this matter. However, I will be failing in my duty if I do not express very briefly my views about the nationalisation of banks.

Sir, it is not correct to say that money will not be forthcoming from the country if the banks are nationalised. The country has enough wealth in the Banks; I mean the scheduled banks; I am not talking of those small banks. There are eight hundred crores of cash money in deposit with these banks. Apart from this, there is individual wealth not deposited in the public banks. You can therefore see that this 800 crores belongs to the public and it is national wealth and if it is properly utilised, it can increase our national wealth. The other day, I had been to Jaipur to attend the Indian National Congress session. While I was strolling in the compound of the bazar, I found four boards of banks, the Jaipur Bank, United Commercial Bank, The Udaipur Bank and one or two more. As a curiosity as to why in Jaipur, a small city, there were so many banks—whether it is merely for the purpose of advertising the banks or whether there were really so many banks—I made enquiries and I found that Jaipur is doing the largest banking business, and largest bullion banking business in the whole of India. I made further enquiries whether it was merely speculation or it was really business. I was told that every day, train loads, plane loads of silver bars actually come from Bombay to Jaipur and actual business is done in silver and also speculation. I was convinced that there was so much wealth in Jaipur, cash money, that the residents of Jaipur who are businessmen generally do not put the money in the banks, for the purpose of gaining interest, but they put it in some trade or some industry. There is so much money in Jaipur city itself that in one bank the Jaipur Bank. I was able to find that there were seven and a half crores of Rupees as deposits. You can very well understand the money power with the people of this country. If one Jaipur city can have seven and a half crores in one bank, it is all bunkum to say that we cannot run national institutions on national lines. It surpasses my comprehension to believe such a thing. We are rich in minerals; we are rich in material wealth, that is money.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member will continue his speech tomorrow. The House is adjourned till 10.45 A.M. tomorrow.

The Assembly then adjourned till a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock on Thursday, the 10th February, 1949.

CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY OF INDIA (LEGISLATIVE)
DEBATES

(PART II—PROCEEDINGS OTHER THAN QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS)

Thursday, 10th February, 1949

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock, Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

(See Part I)

12 Noon.

ELECTION TO COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

Mr. Speaker: I have to inform the Assembly that up to 12 Noon on Wednesday, the 9th February 1949, the time fixed for receiving nominations for the purpose of election of one member to the Committee on Public Accounts in the vacancy caused by the resignation of the Honourable Shri K. Santhanam only one nomination was received. As there is only one candidate for the vacancy, I declare Prof. K. T. Shah to be duly elected to the Committee.

CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

(AMENDMENT OF SECTION 82)

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar (Minister for Law): Sir, I move for leave to introduce a Bill further to amend the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That leave be granted to introduce a Bill further to amend the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: I introduce the Bill.

INDIAN TEA CONTROL (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy (Minister for Commerce): I move for leave to introduce a Bill further to amend the Indian Tea Control Act, 1938.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That leave be granted to introduce a Bill further to amend the India Tea Control Act, 1938."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Shri K. C. Neogy: I introduce the Bill.

BANKING COMPANIES BILL.—contd.

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF SELECT COMMITTEE

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai (Minister for Finance): I beg to present the report of the Select Committee on the Bill to make provision for the payment of taxes before transfers of property are recognised in certain cases.

BANKING COMPANIES BILL.—contd.

Mr. Speaker: The House will now proceed with the further consideration of the motion that the Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to banking companies as reported by the Select Committee be taken into consideration.

Shri R. K. Sidhva (C.P. and Bearar: General): Before we dispersed last evening, I was developing my point that the banks with which this Bill is concerned have about Rs. 800 crores of deposit money. I also singled out one bank for the purpose of showing what an amount of material wealth the Country possesses. I said that in Jaipur during my visit to attend the Congress Session I found that the small State bank had 7-1/2 crores of deposit money. It is not therefore proper to state that for the purposes of nationalisation of banks or other industries, sufficient material wealth is not available in the country. We have sufficient wealth, but the point is how to get this money for the welfare of the country and its nationals. That is the point to which proper attention has not been paid. It has been stated, Sir, that money is shy because this Government from time to time proclaims its policy of nationalisation of banks or other industries. Therefore the money that is required by the State is not forthcoming. Sir, this Government has times out of number proclaimed that they want to restore confidence amongst the general public, amongst the industrialists, amongst the investors, amongst all people and even amongst labour, and they have by practical steps shown what their future policy will be as regards nationalising all industries, so that there may be no difficulty as far as the forthcoming of money is concerned. But such is the state of affairs, despite the above fact and despite the assurance given by the Honourable the Finance Minister last year during the budget debate that with regard to his policy of taxation—for which there were certain questions at the time—he had suggested this after consultation with some of the big industries, so that our economy may not in any way suffer: and the House, although reluctant, at once agreed to his proposal.

In spite of all these facts, what do we find? We find that neither the big capitalists nor labour, for whom also we have made some concessions, are prepared to come forward and help the Government. The Government went to the length of reducing the amount of import duty for any new industry that was going to be started. There also the response which was expected was not forthcoming and I do not therefore understand what else Government should do.

It is the industrialists who have been frightening the middle class people who invest their money in the banks. It is not the Government that is frightening them by their national policy and that therefore their money is not coming forward. These big capitalists, who have been enjoying privileges and concessions, fear that by the introduction of nationalization they might be deprived of their profits, and they spread such kind of fears among the middle class of people. I mentioned about the investment of Rs. 800 crores in certain banks. Let me tell you that the predecessor of the present Honourable Minister stated that 75 per cent. of the money by way of loans and deposits come from the middle class people. That is true. These big capitalists do not put their money as fixed deposits into the banks for getting interest. They borrow money. It is the small class of people who invest the money and the advantage is taken by the capitalists and yet they are not prepared to help the State. When an emergency has arisen and when they must subscribe to the loans, a greater number of these people should help the State in industry and banking. I therefore feel that when Government are making concessions after concessions this policy of theirs will not pay. We are prepared to wait even for another 15 years provided they are prepared to co-operate. But I am sure that from the trend of things and manner in which the capitalists are proceeding, they are not prepared to help the Government. Either we must go the whole hog for nationalisation or let time take its own course. There can be no via media. We have done our best. I admit that Mr. Mody has wholeheartedly supported this Bill. I also support it for whatever it is worth. But I do feel, Sir, that instead of blaming the Government that because of their policy money is not forthcoming, persons like Mr. Mody who are at the head of banking concerns, should change their outlook and mentality and see that the money which is really invested by the middle class of people is used in the right direction.

My friend, Mr. Ramalingam Chettiar spoke about co-operative banks. I had the honour and privilege of being the President of two co-operative banks with a running capital in one case of Rs. 1 crore and in the other case of Rs. 18 lakhs; and I can assure you that these co-operative banks and societies do wonderful work. These big banks to whom the small man goes for a loan for industry do not give any help. I certainly do not want to minimise the great part our Indian banking has played in the past when these European concerns were committed to demolish these banks. I know the Central Bank of which Mr. Homi Mody is the Chairman has met with so many odds, but it has faced all of them. I know of an instance where there was a rush on the bank, but the bank stood firm and paid every one up to 11 o'clock in the night. At that time the English Banks and the Imperial Bank were not prepared to help our Indian banks. I must give credit to them for maintaining the credit of Indian banking. But times have changed and they must under these circumstances bear in mind that if they do not change their outlook neither they, nor the country, nor the small investors are going to benefit, and that confidence in the banks and the Government will drift somewhere else. Therefore instead of the industrialists blaming the Government, they must blame themselves. Their big Federation of Chambers of Industry must try to understand what is the position, and then if they change their outlook I am quite sure the affairs of the State will be very much better than what they are now. I have no fear about our own position. We have ample money.

Without fear of any contradiction, I say if money is to be collected, it will come spontaneously. The point is how it is to be planned and collected. That is the conclusion I have come to in this matter of nationalization. The Imperial Bank has Rs. 281 crores as deposits and the Central Bank also has got Rs. 123 crores. Where is that money? That money is lying somewhere utilised in shares. The poor depositor gets not more than one per cent. on his money; if it is for a long period, he gets one and a half per cent. That is the position of banking. I want that the banking system in India be revolutionized so that small and big industries can prosper and not only one class of people.

This Bill is being brought for the prosperity of one class of people in this country. I would have preferred a banking measure of a very far-reaching importance, so that under the new set-up, as you rightly have been stating all along, there should have been better types of Acts so that small people, the middle class people and the big people could be benefitted by them. In this Bill I do not find such a provision.

Now one important point which I want in the provisions of this Bill is the representation of the depositors. It has been argued that if the depositor has the right to vote, it will be impracticable. I fail to understand such an argument and I can only come to this conclusion that it is not the intention of the bankers to give any kind of right to the depositors who really contribute three-fourths of the money in banks.

This is only for a few banks. But there are many other small banks and if you include all of them it may come to Rs. 1,000 crores. In the Insurance Company you have given a right to the policy-holders. It was argued then also, when the question of the right of the policy-holders came up, that it was not feasible. I have been reading the debate on that occasion. Ultimately the Government of those days had to yield and give representation to the policy-holders and today that system is functioning so very well that the companies are very vigilant. Policy-holders' associations have been created and they send their representatives to safeguard their interests. May I ask the Honourable Minister why a similar proposition could not be evolved in this case also? Why could it not be stated that those who have money for six months as fixed deposits at the time when the election takes place should have the right of voting. Under the Companies Act on a particular date the books are closed to the shareholders and after the closing of the books nobody has a right of voting. Similarly such a plan could be devised. Is there any point in stating that it could not be devised? Where there is a will there is always a way but if there is no will obstacles will be found. I do contend, Sir, that this matter requires the serious consideration of the Honourable Minister, for it has been very lightly treated and the argument has been advanced that it is not feasible. If the Government want more money from this class of investors they must give them this right also. They invest crores of rupees. I shall be glad to hear if my statement is incorrect, that a larger portion does not come from the middle and lower middle classes. I also know that in many banks it is the middle classes that keep their little savings. Some depend on the interest they receive on their deposits. The Tatas, Dalmias and Birlas do not invest for the sake of interest. They borrow money. So with what logic can you refuse representation to them? It passes my comprehension.

[Shri R. K. Sidhva]

I was discussing with a member of the Select Committee and he told me that this matter was ruled out, (although it was quite correct that they should have been given the right) because they thought it was not practicable. Why? You may put down six months or one year or any other restriction that you want. But why deny that right to the class of people which is giving ample money? The Government ought to encourage such a motion. But they do not want any depositors' representatives to be sent. Thirty crores are the unsecured advances given by all these banks. Under the Indian Companies' Act a statement of unsecured advances has to be given by each bank. So they fear the depositors may form their association and send their representation and the benefit which they are enjoying now, which is not due to them, will be lost. I therefore lay great stress on this and I would request the Honourable Minister to reconsider this matter and let him not state that it is not feasible. It is the big Directors who do not want it. I do not agree that the Government should say that it is not possible. These bankers will certainly say so. They would avoid such a right being given to the people. They want to confine their right to a coterie of people who have been enjoying all these benefits so long.

Section 27 of the Bill permits the Reserve Bank to inspect the working of all the scheduled banks. A similar clause was there already and even now the Reserve Bank under instructions from the Government of India from time to time used to get statements from these banks. As my friend Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari rightly stated I do feel that the laws are sometimes very good but they are not implemented. Why should not a surprise visit be made by the representative of the Reserve Bank periodically to any bank, not with any malice but with the best of intentions, to safeguard the interest of the depositors and find out if the bank is working satisfactorily. I will give the House an illustration.

After the enactment of the Reserve Bank Act all along depositors were so confident that they took it into their head that the scheduled banks were gilt-edge banks and thought that to invest their money in a scheduled bank was the safest. I will give you the illustration of the Jwala Bank. For 25 years this bank was running its business. I do not know in what manner. I have gone into the details of this Bank. The directors were a family affair and they probably went on investing in shares and one morning the Reserve Bank issued an order that the Jwala Bank should take no more deposits. That was a public notice. The result was that there was panic. Many small depositors who had invested their money (many widows have come to me to represent) have lost lakhs of rupees. The chairman of the bank was a very clever man and somehow for a certain period managed to give them 90 per cent. and took a receipt for 100 per cent. Then he came down to 80 and later on to 75 per cent. in full settlement of the deposits. The people thinking that their money is going away even accepted 75 per cent. Now they are offering 50 per cent. That was about five months ago and it has been accepted. I do not know today how much they will be in a position to pay. Where is the supervision of such a bank I am asking? You are enacting this Act for the benefit of depositors and if you cannot protect their money better say so. The rule for the inspection by the Reserve Bank is merely on paper but is not to be put into operation. That is the position.

I know of another bank in Bombay and in regard to that also a similar notice was issued. It so happens that some banks are not solid, then the Reserve Bank must go to their aid. If they found that the Jwala Bank was rotten what were they doing? It was a 25 year old Bank. Why did they not detect its condition long ago and save the money of the depositors. The Government lost nothing, the directors lost nothing but it is the depositors who have lost their lives' savings. That is the point to which I want to draw the attention of the Honourable Minister.

My friend yesterday mentioned in detail about the Calcutta Bank. I have no knowledge except that I read in the newspapers. But I know of these other instances personally, for those depositors have been coming to me. I know also the sums of money deposited and I know in what condition the families affected are. Therefore I desire that some improvement has to be made in clause 27, so that such a thing could not be repeated.

Sir, I have not much to say. Many of the points have been dealt with by various speakers who have spoken before me. I have only to state in the end that banking must always be considered as one of the great keystones for the expansion of industry and the economy of this country and it is a policy accepted by everyone. Therefore I am rather surprised to find that the Imperial Bank which has been catering for Government before the Reserve Bank came into existence, has been accepting deposits without giving a single pie of interest. The House may be aware that crores of rupees are in the current account of the Imperial Bank even today where there are no issue offices and they are operated upon by the Imperial Bank, although there is no interest paid on the current account to the State.

The Imperial Bank with crores of rupees of the State gives hardly one or two per cent. on loans to depositors but advances to the other concerns and earns about five, six or eight per cent. We were so delighted when we were told that the Imperial Bank was going to be nationalised. We must take some step in some direction and we were happy. After all, in the House of Commons, under the present Labour Government the Bank of England has been nationalised. We are always quoting the House of Commons here and saying that we are now functioning as the House of Commons. If that is so I want to know why we cannot function one-hundredth of what they are functioning like. Why should we not nationalise the Imperial Bank where our money is invested? Europeanisation is still there. I know of certain branches where the Managers and even the Accountants are Europeans. But I was glad to learn from the Deputy Speaker—which the Honourable Minister has still to corroborate and make a statement—that he is going to bring a proposal to nationalise the bank soon and at the same time say that all the staff is Indianised. I therefore commend this Bill. It may be defective in many ways. But I feel that the provisions there will be of some benefit to some people though not to all classes of people as I have already stated. I therefore accept the principle of this Bill with a suggestion that the Honourable Minister will be good enough to see that the representation of the depositors is there.

The Honourable Shri Satyanarayan Sinha (Minister of State): Sir, the question may now be put.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

That the question be now put.

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai (Minister for Finance). Mr. Speaker, it is difficult for me to know after so prolonged a debate which has covered so wide a range of matters at what point to begin in making my reply to the debate. I would like first of all to point out that the object of this Bill is a somewhat limited one. It is to prevent some of the more serious kinds of abuses in the working and management of banks of which we have had experience in recent years. I think it was my honourable friend Mr. Krishnamachari who pointed out that this Bill was born as long ago as 1939 and therefore the kind of problems that it tries to meet are problems which have on the whole little relation to those with which banking as a whole is faced today.

[At this stage Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair, which was then occupied by Mr. Deputy Speaker (Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar.)]

I do not want to dispute the essential correctness of that statement, but I think it is necessary for me to point out that this Bill has greatly expanded in scope since the original Bill of 1939. Taking purely the physical dimensions of the Bill I should say it is at least three or four times the size of the Bill introduced in 1939. As regards the main provisions regarding control, inspection and supervision I think the provisions as they stand in the Bill today are more extensive in character than the provisions of the first Bill. I say this with a clear conscience because as far as this Bill is concerned I came into the picture only very recently—to be quite precise a couple of months ago. Therefore I think there is very little in the way of contribution which I have been able to make the build-up of this Bill. Whatever provision is contained in this Bill for tackling the problems of banking has been made by my predecessors. I think it is but fair to them that I should point out that the Bill is not quite so inconsequential in character as has been suggested.

Various problems of an important character concerning the structure, organisation and management of banking in this country have been mentioned in the course of this discussion. For example my honourable friend Mr. Krishnamachari raised the problem of the precise lines on which banking should develop in this country. The particular point that he had in mind was whether we should aim at developing our banking on the lines of big banks with branches all over the country or whether we should attempt to develop it in the direction of what he called unit banks, catering for relatively small local areas. I think that raises a really important problem of banking organisation. My personal view is that we should be prepared to develop our banking organisation in both directions at the same time. As far as these big banks with branches in every part of the country are concerned I think there is a very important service that banks of that class perform. They are able to pool the resources of the country as a whole and on the whole, with rare exceptions, they make for the general stability of our banking structure. As regards unit banks they perform this essential service that by reason of the local contacts that they establish they are able to tap local resources more effectively than big banks can. That in the present circumstances, of the country is a matter of great importance, because money is passing increasingly into the hands of people who have not been used to investment and the only way in which we can make use of these resources which are available in the country is by the establishment of what may be called unit banks with local contacts. From the point of view of Government and of the administration the problem that this particular question raises is that if you want to develop these on parallel lines you will some day be faced with a conflict between the two. That is to say, when you want to develop unit banks for the purpose of tapping local resources, then a big bank with its branches comes along and makes it difficult by competition for the unit bank, to survive. That is the practical problem that we have to face in this matter and which certainly deserves consideration. That problem is not essentially different from the problem that arises in industries. In the textile industry you are faced with this question of the conflict between large scale industry and the handloom industry. Both of them render services of an essential character. Sometimes conflicts do arise. How that conflict is to be resolved when it arises is a question of considerable importance. All therefore that I am prepared to say at present is that while I am definitely in favour of unit banks being started in increasing numbers I think at the same time it is necessary in order to implement our objective in this matter that any unfair competition that may arise between the big bank and the small bank must be prevented by such measures as may suitably be devised.

Sir, the next question that was raised is the provision required for industry and agriculture. That is a long-standing problem. I believe the Banking Enquiry Committee gave a great deal of attention to this. I think most or a very large part of the criticism which was directed by my friend Professor Shah against this Bill is that the Bill as it stands at present makes no attempt to meet this essential need. That is a problem which is important but the solution of which is not so easy to find because this Bill covers only commercial banks and commercial banks are essentially based upon the principle of short-term finance. These commercial banks cannot undertake to meet the long-term requirements involved in the provision of industrial and agricultural finance. It seems to me that this class of finance has to be provided for by legislation of a different character. You cannot combine the two without creating confusion.

An important point again was raised by Shri Krishnamachari with regard to the question of liquidity. I take it what he had in mind when he raised the question of liquidity was that in fixing the level at which the ratio of the liquid resources of a bank to its deposit liabilities should stand, the level should not be such as would prevent the bank from making the fullest use of such resources as it has. That again is a difficult question to which to give a clear-cut answer because after all when it comes to fixing these percentage limits a great deal depends on individual judgment. The percentage provided in this Bill is 20 per cent. Whether that is on the high side or on the low side is a matter very largely of opinion and of circumstances. The point that we have to bear in mind is this. While it is of great importance that banking resources should be available in sufficient measure and that they should possess a sufficient degree of elasticity, it is necessary at the same time that the solvency of the bank is maintained and the interests of the depositor are properly safeguarded. Therefore, it is a difficult matter on which to come to a conclusion of final validity. Twenty per cent. has received the approval of the Select Committee and I think it is as good a figure as we can adopt for the time being.

The next question that was raised was the position of money lenders. That there is constitutional difficulty in providing for money lenders by Central legislation, is admitted. There is also another consideration that arises and that is, that if a Banking Bill is going to provide for due control and supervision of money lenders, it raises the question of providing administrative resources on an enormous scale. It is difficult for the Central Government to provide for the kind of administrative organisation that would be required for the supervision and control of money lenders and I think the suggestion was properly made in the course of this discussion that as far as this matter is concerned we must try and find a solution on the basis of co-ordination between the Centre and the Provinces and that is the direction in which I personally would approach this problem.

I think Shri Krishnamachari suggested that it was time that we had a comprehensive examination of the banking position in this country. He made the valid point that the Bill as it stands before the House today, containing provisions the beginning of which has to be traced back to 1939, is a Bill which in many respects is out of date. If we had a banking enquiry today, an enquiry into all the problems relating to banking in India, and the Committee made its recommendations in a year from now, it is quite conceivable that when the report comes up before this House for consideration, the recommendations might equally be found to be out of date. I say that specifically for this reason because just at present in regard to monetary and financial matters we are passing through a critical time, a period of difficult transition. While we are all aware of the many problems which have arisen as the result of the inflationary conditions which prevail in the country, we cannot altogether ignore the signs which are gradually visible on the horizon of a tendency in a different direction. I think we would be wise to proceed on the assumption that in the matter of inflation we have now reached, so to speak, the cross-roads. On one side is this mountain of inflation, on the other side is the chasm of approaching deflation and whoever is responsible for guiding the financial and monetary policy of the country, in my opinion must act with more than ordinary care and with more than ordinary circumspection in steering the wheels of the country's financial machinery. Personally, therefore, I take the view that if we are to have a comprehensive examination of the financial and banking position of the country it would be well for us to wait a little.

Sir, the point was raised that in view of the very large powers which we are conferring on the Reserve Bank in this Bill and in view also of the fact that the Reserve Bank is now a nationalised institution it is necessary that the staff and other equipment of the Reserve Bank should be suitably modified. I am aware of the importance of that problem and the distinguished Governor of the Reserve Bank is equally alive to that problem, and we shall see to it that the Reserve Bank is fully equipped for meeting these important responsibilities which are being placed upon it.

Then, Sir, the question of nationalisation has been raised. (Shri Mahavir Tyagi: "Nationalisation of the Imperial Bank.") The question of nationalising not merely the Imperial Bank, but also all the banks of the country, particularly commercial banks, has I think been raised. As far as I am concerned, I am a believer in the doctrine of the State as a positive instrument of social and economic progress, but I believe at the same time that it is not a doctrine of universal application. There are certain matters in which the State is not a suitable instrument for securing progress. There are other matters in which the State is eminently suitable for that purpose, and therefore I think in judging problems that arise in connection with nationalisation we have to keep in mind the importance of drawing a distinction between the two spheres. In the matter of nationalising the Imperial Bank, I am of course in the hands of the House.

But I do want to say this, that as far as my personal observation and examination go, I have some doubt in my mind whether the management of commercial banks is a suitable field for nationalisation. I say that for this reason, that in the matter of commercial banks, the day to day activities of the concern depend largely on the personal contacts and relationships that you build up between the bank and its customers. The activities in which a commercial bank is engaged are activities which require, in the first place, a certain elasticity in the mental outlook of those who manage it. It requires also a capacity for readily sizing up practical situations as they arise from time to time. It involves also a capacity for arriving at quick and sound decisions in the light of changing circumstances. I have had some experience of Governmental machinery and I have doubts in my mind, which I cannot altogether get rid of, that the kind of machinery with which Government works is machinery which will not rise to problems of this character. But as I said I am in the hands of the House in this matter.

But since the question has been raised, particularly in regard to the Imperial Bank of India, I want to say this. I have listened carefully to that part of the discussion which related to the position of the Imperial Bank and I would say that I am not satisfied myself with the organisation and working of the Imperial Bank under the present set-up. What I would like to do, in the light of the criticism to which I have listened, is to see whether without nationalising the Imperial Bank of India it is not possible for us to secure the objects which honourable members have in mind by undertaking a suitable revision of the Imperial Bank of India Act. I think my honourable friend Mr. Das pointed out that this Act which was enacted in 1920 has not been revised since, although conditions have changed vastly. I think he is perfectly right and what I want to do is to take in hand immediately the question of examining the provisions of the Imperial Bank of India Act in the light of the actual experience of its working and the points made in the course of this discussion and to see whether by revising that Act we could not put the Imperial Bank of India on a basis which would enable it to render the fullest possible service in the most suitable manner.

I listened with great interest to the speech which my dear friend Prof. Shah made, and when I listened to him I was naturally thrown into a reminiscent mood, because most of the things that he said used to be my stock-in-trade when I was a professor of Economics nearly a quarter of a century ago, and although Prof. Shah and myself have kept in contact with each other all this period of years it was a surprise to me that he had advanced so little since twenty five years ago. (Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: "Out of date or just in advance of our time?") Perhaps both, Prof. Shah raised some very important questions and I do not want to make light of them. It has been my experience ever since I left the chair of Economics in Madras and fate put me into positions where administrative problems of an economic character were my special concern, that it is not possible to handle these problems effectively unless we view them against the background of the real things that are happening all about us. I sometimes wonder, when the time comes for me to retire from this political arena if I were asked to revert to my old vocation as a teacher of economics, whether I would ever be able to expound economic theory with any thing approaching conviction. Now that we are trying to put Prof. Shah on the Standing Committees of the Legislature—and I am glad to find that he has been put on the Public Accounts Committee—I hope when he has had more experience of these Committees Prof. Shah and I might find ourselves approximating a little more closely to each other.

My friend Mr. Ramalingam Chettiar very rightly raised the question of co-operative banks. With many things that he said in connection with co-operation, I am fully in agreement. I have had a certain amount of experience of the working of the co-operative movement myself, because one of the first jobs that I ever held was that of Deputy Registrar of Co-operative Societies in the very province to which my friend Mr. Ramalingam Chettiar belongs, and I also once had the rare experience of working off and on for nearly a year under Sir Horace Plunkett, the great founder of the agricultural movement in Ireland. There was a time when I used to think that practically every economic problem in this country would find its solution in terms of the co-operative movement. I am still a believer in the co-operative movement, I cannot altogether conceal from myself that compared with the high hopes with which we started the co-operative movement in this country, going back to the days when Frederick Nicholson wrote his monumental report in the nineties of the last century and going back to the days when Lord Curzon passed the Co-operative Societies Act of 1904, and going back to the early reports produced by the pioneers who were Registrars of Co-operative Societies in those days, you cannot altogether escape the feeling that the results which we have achieved by means of co-operation fall not merely short but far short of the hopes with which we started. It is a depressing thought. I am glad to hear from Mr. Ramalingam Chettiar that things have improved in his province. I have no doubt they have but I do want to say that there is a big gulf between the expectations with which we started the co-operative movement more than 40 years ago and the results which the movement has so far achieved. (Prof. N. G. Ranga. "That is the case with everybody and every movement all over the world and in all ages"). In spite of Prof. Ranga, I propose to say what I think. I have given a good deal of thought to the co-operative movement—at one time I perpetrated a book on it which fortunately is out of print altogether—and I have kept myself in fairly close touch with the development of the Co-operative movement through the Annual Administration Reports which I read with some care. I want to tell my friend Mr. Ramalingam Chettiar—because he is one of those few people who believe in the movement and bring to bear upon it a great deal of public spirit. I want to tell him what in my opinion are the reasons which have prevented the co-operative movement from fulfilling the expectations of its early founders. I trace the relative failure of it to two things—first of all it is the lack of skilled and trained executive staff. No democracy can work without a first-class permanent service and the real reason why the Co-operative movement in spite of the enthusiasm and the public spirit of leading workers like Mr. Ramalingam Chettiar has not risen to the heights of our expectation is that it lacks that kind of service.

Secondly, I think among the rank and file of those who work in the co-operative movement, there is a lack of that sustained enterprise and spirit of initiative which alone can keep a movement of this kind at the highest level of efficiency. What I am trying to suggest is this, that if we are going to depend on the Co-operative movement entirely for fulfilling the requirements of agricultural finance, we shall not be able to solve in a measurable time that problem. I do not for a moment decry the Co-operative movement—I am as much a believer in it as Mr. Chettiar—but I do see the practical difficulties which are hindering the efficient working of the movement. It is necessary that the Co-operative movement must be supplemented by other type of finance if we are to be able, in a measurable time, to meet the problem with which we are faced in the agricultural field. A suggestion was made that the Reserve Bank has not done all that it was expected to do in regard to helping the Co-operative movement. It is a subject with which I am not sufficiently familiar and therefore I do not want to make any definite suggestion at the present. But I want to point out that it was in view of the importance of linking up the Reserve Bank in some way with the Co-operative movement that I decided, in appointing the Directors of the Central Board of the Reserve Bank this time, to put on it so distinguished a Co-operator as Sir, Manilal Nanavati. In point of experience and knowledge he is as distinguished a Co-operator as we can find in this country to-day and I hope as a result of his efforts and advice it will be possible for us to make the services of the Reserve Bank available in increasing measure for providing the finance required by our agriculturists.

Sir, reference has been made more than once to the controlling of foreign banks. It is not accurate to say that there is no provision in this Bill for bringing foreign banks under control. The definition of a company in this Bill is at first sight a queer definition. The definition of a company which has been adopted for the purpose of this Bill is a company which may be wound up under the Indian Companies Act. It is a queer thing that an institution should be defined with reference to its funeral rites but the reason is that under the winding up provisions of the Companies Act, not merely registered but also unregistered companies may be brought in. Therefore we adopted that definition specifically for the purpose of bringing foreign banks within the ambit of this Bill. May I also draw attention to the fact that among the provisions regarding licensing, we have included an important provision in regard to banks which are incorporated in countries which discriminate against Indian Banking Companies. So far as the limited purpose of this Bill is concerned, I think due provision has been made for the control and supervision of foreign banks.

The only other point that I would like to refer to is the point to which my friend the Deputy Speaker referred to yesterday. There are various amendments before the House but I want to say in advance that it is my intention on behalf of Government to accept the amendment of which my friend Mr. Krishnamachari has given notice reducing the percentage limit for investment from 40 per cent. to 30 per cent. and also the amendment of which my friend Professor Shah has given notice for reducing the limit of voting rights which may be held by any one person from ten per cent. to five per cent. I hope with these major amendments, the Bill will find general acceptance at the hands of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to banking companies, as reported by the Select Committee, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock, Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: The House will now proceed with the clause by clause consideration of the Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to banking companies.

Will it not be better if we clarify the position as regards the drafting amendments first?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): Sir, the position regarding these amendments is this. There are some of them which need not be moved at all, I mean those relating to punctuation and other formal matters. But with regard to others, I think I should move them. But in any case, it would be better if I could know from the Honourable Minister what amendments are acceptable and what are not.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I am afraid such a selection of the amendments is not possible.

Mr. Speaker: What he wants is this. If all his amendments are scrutinised and if he is informed that such and such amendments are going to be accepted, then he may not move the others.

CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY OF INDIA (LEGISLATIVE) [10TH FEB. 1949]

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: The only reply I can give to that is that, after scrutinising the various amendments, the conclusion that I have come to is that I am prepared to accept some of his amendments relating to commas, but I reject all his amendments relating to full-stops, and all his other verbal amendments, also, I reject.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: But the difficulty is that we have not had sufficient time to consider these points, and the Government also does not have the time to consider and decide which are the good amendments and which are not.

Mr. Speaker: We do not know the case of the Government, at least so long as they do not admit it. But on his own admission, the honourable member has not considered his amendments sufficiently.

Now what is the position as regards clause 2?

Does he move his amendment?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I propose to move it, Sir.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari (Madras: General): This particular amendment of my honourable friend is merely a re-casting of the clause as it is to-day. The same is the case regarding his amendment to clause 4. If we are going to consider all these re-casting amendments, I am afraid we will require a whole week for it.

Mr. Speaker: That is what I was putting to the honourable member, but it is for the member himself to decide, for it is a matter of his right. If he thinks that this particular clause is not properly worded, he has the right to move his amendment to it. But having known the mind of the honourable Minister, that none of his amendments will be accepted, the question is whether he will not be interested in saving the time of the House, by not moving the amendments.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, as a matter of protest, they should be moved and kept on record for future generations to see. I beg to move:

"That for clause 2 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

"2. The provisions of this Act shall, save as hereinafter expressly provided, be in addition to, and not in derogation of, the Indian Companies Act, 1913 (VII of 1913), and any other law for the time being in force."

Sir, I frankly confess that this is a rearranging of the clause. The question is: where are we to put the conditional clause—"save as hereinafter expressly provided". Sir, after all, the language should be absolutely free from any objection, and here I find there is room for improvement.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think I need put the amendment to the House, in view of the honourable Minister's unwillingness to accept it. But if the mover is keen, I shall put it to vote.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: No, I am not.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 2 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 2 was added to the Bill.

Prof. K. T. Shah (Bihar: General): Sir, I beg to move:

"That in clause 3 of the Bill, before the words 'or any other law,' the following be inserted:

'or land mortgage banks, or the Industrial Finance Corporation; but, unless otherwise provided to the contrary, shall apply to any municipal or State Government bank which may be established by special Charter or Statute hereafter'."

My reasons for submitting this amendment for the consideration of the House are three. But before I proceed to enumerate them, there is one slight verbal alteration which, with your permission, I would like to indicate. The word 'state' is used as the equivalent of Government. But I think it would improve matters if you are to add 'or' between 'State' and 'Government'.

Mr. Speaker: Does the honourable member want to add the word 'or' between the words 'State' and 'Government' in his amendment?

Prof. K. T. Shah: Yes, Sir. I have put forward this amendment because in the first place the law has been described in the title as a consolidating Bill. It has been a misleading phrase to me, and, though explanations have been vouchsafed from several quarters of the House, including one by the sponsor of the Bill himself, that this law relates only to commercial banking, I confess what my limited intelligence does not grasp this fine distinction between a Bill confined to one class of banking being also called "consolidating."

If, however, that is the intention, my suggestion to the Honourable Minister is that he might be kind enough to amend the position when the Title and the Preamble come before the House by adding a clear expression that the Bill relates to commercial banking. I would then be satisfied. If that is not done, I fear that the matter would not be as clear as the Honourable Minister has in his imagination or in his mind.

Another argument I would like to advance is: Here is one suggestion—that unless it is clarified it would give room to disturbances and difference of opinion. A Municipal Bank is still unknown, or practically unknown, in this country. And yet it has developed to very considerable proportions in other countries where banking had a wider significance than we are prepared to accept in this country. A Municipal Bank was one of the great contributions of the late Mr. Joseph Chamberlain in the city of Birmingham. Today it is one of the most flourishing municipal banks, that combines the principle of co-operation as well collective enterprise in an eminent degree. Now if this law is to apply to a Municipal Bank then I think, since the sponsors declare the law to relate only to commercial banking, it is quite possible that an institution like that may not come within the purview of any law.

I have, therefore, added in my amendment the words: unless the statute or Charter may otherwise provide. I suppose a statute that establishes Government Bank or municipal bank will do so. In a Municipal Bank there are many advantages which those who refuse to progress with the times do not recognise. It is for them to say that, whereas 25 years ago they had the same arguments and ideas which I put forward yesterday, today, under the force of responsibilities thrust upon them and in view of the changed circumstances, they have revised their opinions, with the consequence that they find themselves wiser in these days. I confess guilty to that charge of not having "progressed" in that sense. Though I have my own opinion as to the direction in which progress takes place, whether backwards or forwards.

Apart from that, I would say that this type of banking this country very badly needs, especially if you are sincere in your desire that this sort of banking should be encouraged and that the law should help to develop it.

I come next to the question of the possibility of different states forming part of the union of India. Each province or state should have its own banking organisations, so that any particular interest of a given region may be served much more suitably and effectively, by the appropriate public banking institution of that region, than would be the case if you do not provide for that. It is for these reasons that I have ventured to move this amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in clause 3 of the Bill, before the words 'or any other law', the following be inserted:

'or land mortgage banks, or the Industrial Finance Corporation; but, unless otherwise provided to the contrary, shall apply to any municipal or State or Government bank which may be established by special Charter or Statute hereafter'."

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): Mr. Speaker, I find that this amendment is not necessary. It seeks to exclude the land mortgage banks from the operations of this Act. Land Mortgage Banks are also banks registered as co-operative societies. No land mortgage bank is to be registered under the Indian companies Act. Therefore it is unnecessary to add the words 'land mortgage banks'.

The other category of banks which Professor Shah wants to exempt is the Industrial Finance Corporation. The Corporation is not a bank which can be wound up under the Indian Companies Act. A company as defined here means any company which may be wound up under the Indian Companies Act. This applies only to companies. The Indian Finance corporation came into existence as the creation of a Statute and can be wound up only in a particular manner. Hence in this respect also this amendment is unnecessary.

As regards the suggestion to include the words 'unless otherwise provided to the contrary', I may say that if a municipal bank is established by a charter, the charter will also provide for its winding up. If it is municipal bank it will be governed by this Act without any particular mention regarding it.

The State Banks were included because in the Select Committee it was considered necessary to do so in so far as the States concerned agree to accept the law passed by the Dominion Legislature in regard to banking also. If the accession is not confined only to three items, but is extended to banking also, automatically the Indian laws relating to banking will apply to that State also. Therefore this amendment does not seem to be necessary.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I agree with my honourable friend the Deputy Speaker, Sir.

Mr. Speaker: I will now put the amendment to vote.

Prof. K. T. Shah: Yes, Sir.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in clause 3 of the Bill, before the words 'or any other law', the following be inserted:

'or land mortgage banks, or the Industrial Finance Corporation; but, unless otherwise provided to the contrary, shall apply to any municipal or State or Government bank which may be established by special Charter or Statute hereafter'."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 3 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 3 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 4 of the Bill, for all the words beginning with the words 'The Central Government' and ending with the words 'by notification', the following be substituted:

'If on a representation made by the Reserve Bank in this behalf, the Central Government is satisfied that it is expedient so to do, it may by notification'."

This is also a re-arrangement of words in order to conform to the usual standard.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I do not think it improves the draft. I do not accept it.

Mr. Speaker: According to our convention, I do not put it to the House.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I move:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 4 of the Bill, for the words 'where he does so', the words 'where the Governor or the Deputy Governor, as the case may be, does so' be substituted."

In this case there is the provision of some acts by the Governor and also under certain circumstances of acts, in the absence of the Governor, by the Deputy Governor. It is provided in line 5 where "he" does so. 'It is difficult to say whether the word "he" refers to the Governor or the Deputy Governor.' I want to clarify the position—'where the Governor or the Deputy Governor, as the case may be.' It is purely drafting.

Mr. Speaker: Is it not clear as it is? Whosoever exercises the power, he has to do it!

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: It all depends as to who will interpret it.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I have no objection to it.

Mr. Speaker: So the amendment is acceptable.

The question is:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 4 of the Bill, for the words 'where he does so', the words 'where the Governor or the Deputy Governor, as the case may be, does so' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: With regard to amendment No. 18, if it is acceptable, I shall move it. Otherwise I shall not move it.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: No, I do not accept it.

Mr. Speaker: Therefore it is not moved.

Prof. K. T. Shah: Sir, I move:

"That to sub-clause (3) of clause 4 of the Bill, the following proviso be added:

'Provided that any such notification suspending the operation of the Act, exceeding ninety days in all, shall be placed before the Legislature as soon as it meets after the issue of the notification: and, unless approved by the Legislature by a resolution or by an amending Act, shall cease to operate from the date the Legislature is adjourned, after the issue of the notification, for a period exceeding three months without approving the suspension'."

Sir, this is more from a constitutional, than from a purely technical banking point of view, that I have brought forward this amendment. I want an extraordinary action of this kind,—namely, the suspension of an organic Act,—to be approved at the earliest opportunity by the Legislature, either in the form of a resolution or in the form of an amending Act. It may be, and I recognise it fully, that emergencies may arise, or situations may develop, in which it is necessary to suspend the operation of this Act, either as a whole or some specific parts thereof. While admitting that, I would also secure the right of the Legislature to review the action of the Government in this behalf. And for that purpose I suggest that if such a suspension is, in the aggregate, for a period longer than ninety days, then that notification must be placed before the Legislature, to be approved or rejected, either by means of a resolution approving specifically or disapproving of the action of the Government, or even making it a part of the normal Legislature by an amending Act.

As I started by saying, Sir, this is more of a constitutional than of a purely technical banking character. But I trust the reason behind it will commend itself to the honourable Minister, that the House must have an opportunity to look into the propriety, the necessity and the working of such a suspension. For that reason, while allowing such sufficient period, namely ninety days or more, I require by this amendment that the matter be reviewed and approved or disapproved by the Legislature. If the Legislature does nothing, and is adjourned after the issue and submission of such a notification for a period longer than three months without doing anything, then I think the notification should cease to operate.

I think there is nothing offensive in it and may be accepted. I commend it to the House.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That to sub-clause (3) of clause 4 of the Bill, the following Proviso be added.

"Provided that any such notification suspending the operation of the Act, exceeding ninety days in all, shall be placed before the Legislature as soon as it meets after the issue of the notification; and, unless approved by the Legislature by a resolution or by an amending Act, shall cease to operate from the date the Legislature is adjourned, after the issue of the notification, for a period exceeding three months without approving the suspension."

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: I do not know what the honourable Minister has to say about this. But personally speaking, in an emergency the period of suspension is more than ninety days, that is three months. I would like, if the suspension continues and the House is in session, that this matter must be brought to the notice of the House: that is, the notification may be placed on the table of the House for such action as the House may consider proper. But the latter clause—"unless approved by the Legislature by a resolution or by an amending Act, shall cease to operate from the date the Legislature is adjourned..." is restrictive. In such cases, there may be some matters where we cannot be ready with a Legislature as a whole to analyse and scan the position in respect of a bank or a series of banks. The Government is competent on representation to the Reserve Bank, which means not only Governor but the general body or the Governing Body of the Reserve Bank. Therefore, normally, it ought not to be open to the House to scan, unless it is to give publicity and destroy the whole banking structure. Therefore the latter clause saying "unless approved..." seems to be very restrictive. A popular Government should be entrusted with the task of deciding it by itself. I do not see any objection to the earlier provision. If the provisions of the Act are suspended, and the Assembly is in session, and the suspension continues, it must be brought to the notice of the Assembly.

If the honourable Minister has no objection, I will support the earlier portion but not the latter.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: I do not think it is at all necessary to accept the earlier portion, because sub-clause (4) deals with this:

"A copy of any notification issued under sub-section (3) shall be laid on the table of the Dominion Legislature as soon as may be after it is issued."

Then the point really is that I suppose the practice that now exists of sending a copy of a Government notification to Members of the Assembly will continue even later on, and surely any Member who is interested is bound to ask questions and raise a debate if the situation is really of such a serious character. I think the precaution that my honourable friend, Prof. Shah has in mind would come into being and would be exercised by Members of the Legislature 4 P. M. and there is no need to fetter either the discretion of the Legislature or the Government by putting a precise provision in the body of the Bill.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I agree with my honourable friend Shri T. T. Krishnamachari. I think sufficient provision is made for publicity and as far as the rest of the amendment is concerned it is a matter of administration and I do not think the House is concerned with it.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That to sub-clause (3) of clause 4 of the Bill, the following Proviso be added:

"Provided that any such notification suspending the operation of the Act, exceeding ninety days in all, shall be placed before the Legislature as soon as it meets after the issue of the notification; and, unless approved by the Legislature by a resolution or by an amending Act, shall cease to operate from the date the Legislature is adjourned, after the issue of the notification, for a period exceeding three months without approving the suspension."

The motion was negatived.

Prof. K. T. Shah: Sir, I beg to move:

"That after sub-clause (4) of clause 4 of the Bill, the following new sub-clause be added:

"(5) The Central Government may in the event of a financial crisis or national emergency, as reported by the Reserve Bank of India, declare a general moratorium if it is satisfied that it is expedient so to do, by notification in the Official Gazette of the Government for such period not exceeding sixty days as may be specified in the notification; and during the period of such moratorium, the operation of any or of all the provisions of this Act, either generally or in relation to any specified bank or banking business, shall be suspended."

Sir, this amendment stands on a different footing from my previous amendment. Had it been on the same lines with verdict of the House on the previous amendment I should not have ventured to submit it to the House. As this amendment is conceived in a different spirit, and tries to guard against a really different emergency. I hope the House will be indulgent enough if I briefly put the case before it.

The situation contemplated in this amendment has occurred in the past, and it may occur again. Not only that in normal peaceful times such an emergency has arisen in the U.S.A. in 1933, when the President was compelled to declare, by his executive authority, a sort of closure of all banks for a certain period; but in abnormal times, like those of war, it may become quite necessary to suspend a bank's dealings or obligations statutorily within one's own country, or even to those abroad. Such a situation did arise in 1914, for example, when the then Chancellor of the Exchequer had to authorise the Bank of England to guarantee the foreign obligations of the British banks at the time operating all over the world; and pending ascertainment of those obligations, declare a moratorium, subject to certain exceptions. That saved the banking situation of England from a threatened disaster which would otherwise have befallen it.

In the days in which we are living, with the growth of international commerce, and our own country taking its place in international trade on a growing scale, when we are standing as it were on our own legs without anyone else to think of as supporters or backers, I think it but right that the Executive Government should be armed with powers, not only to suspend operation of any particular clause, not only to suspend the activities of any particular bank or any kind of banking business; but declare a wholesale moratorium suspending all obligations as between debtors and creditors, so that the emergency may not take us by surprise, and the country may pass through it unscathed after the critical moment has been successfully weathered.

From this point of view, therefore, I suggested the amendment, that the right be given, and it be given by Act, not exercised by the inherent executive or prerogative power, so to say, of Government, the right being given by law expressly, that Government may suspend by declaring a general moratorium of obligations between debtors and creditors, particularly between banks and customers, so that the emergency may be met without any great dislocation and the country weather through the crisis without any untoward happening.

I do not know whether the Honourable the Finance Minister would agree to consider this point at all. It may be that we live in times when perhaps we may sleep in peace and may not worry as to what will happen even though the volcano may be about to erupt at our very foot. That is a kind of self-assurance, that is a kind of self-complacency or self-satisfaction which I am afraid I am not quite accustomed to, even though I have no practical or business experience. That being so, in all humility and modesty I commend the proposal to the House.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That after sub-clause (4) of clause (4) of the Bill, the following new sub-clause be added:

"(5) The Central Government may, in the event of a financial crisis or national emergency, as reported by the Reserve Bank of India, declare a general moratorium if it is satisfied that it is expedient so to do, by notification in the Official Gazette of the Government for such period not exceeding sixty days as may be specified in the notification; and during the period of such moratorium, the operation of any or of all the provisions of this Act, either generally or in relation to any specified bank or banking business, shall be suspended."

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: I am afraid the first part of my honourable friend's amendment is not germane to the Bill which we are now considering. Powers to Government for declaring a general moratorium cannot be put in a banking Bill because as my honourable friend himself recognises it the whole thing is meant to cover the entire relationship between the debtor and creditor of all kinds. Here we are dealing with a specific issue. So far as powers in regard to moratorium for banks are concerned I think that can be achieved even by means of the provisions of the Bill as they are today apart from the other means available. I do not see where this particular amendment fits in though I agree with my friend Prof. Shah that a contingency might conceivably arise but that contingency has to be met by other legislative powers which the Government of the day will have, and not by means of a clause of this nature put in a specific Bill relating to banking companies. I think the amendment does not fit into the Bill and it should be rejected.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri (Assam: General): Sir, I am speaking subject to correction. I believe this amendment would be useful in helping the smaller banks and particularly helping the indigenous banks which have now been started in undeveloped provinces. At present if you want to have a moratorium you have to send a petition before the High Court and that takes a lot of time. Sometimes the bankers do not feel inclined to take the trouble of going to a court of law. If this amendment of Prof. Shah is accepted you will save a lot of inconvenience and it will enable the banks to get expeditious remedy. After all the banks getting this expeditious remedy means that the depositors will be helped. We have seen during the last Noakhali trouble in Bengal how a number of banks, which were otherwise well managed, had to close their doors, because there was a lot of exodus from those districts and the neighbouring districts on account of fear and how banks which were established in Eastern Bengal, even before the Partition had to collapse on account of the fact that there was a sudden rush on the banks. Recently also we have seen that some banks, including scheduled banks, in Bengal which had branches in Assam suddenly closed their doors, because there was a rush on account of misapprehension of facts, on account of unfounded rumours having gone about. So if in such cases it was possible for the Reserve Bank to step in immediately and if it was possible for the Central Government to grant moratorium immediately there would not have been any necessity for closing the doors of so many banks and so many poor depositors would not have suffered. Therefore I would ask the Honourable the Finance Minister to be somewhat affectionate not to the mover of the amendment but to the depositors and accept it in the interests of the depositors.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I would also like to support the amendment.

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena (U.P.: General): When I heard carefully the speech of my honourable friend Mr. Krishnamachari I thought he was pointing out some provision in the Bill which would meet the contingency referred to by Prof. Shah. But he has only said that the amendment proposed by Prof. Shah is not germane to the Bill. But the contention of my honourable friend Prof. Shah is a real one and he has also sketched instances in the past elsewhere, and such a one may arise in our country. I do not see any harm in accepting the amendment unless it be for the reason, as our friend Mr. Chaudhuri has said, that it has been moved by Prof. Shah and therefore should not be accepted. I think it is a very useful amendment and should be accepted. I hope the Honourable the Finance Minister will either tell us how he will meet the contingency pointed out by the mover of the amendment or accept it.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I regret I cannot accept this amendment because in case there is a crisis of sufficient magnitude for a declaration of a general moratorium Government can take action either under the Negotiable Instruments Act or if necessary by an Ordinance. I do not think a provision in the Bill is necessary.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Ordinance may take time.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That after sub-clause (4) of clause (4) of the Bill, the following new sub-clause be added:

"(5) The Central Government may, in the event of a financial crisis or national emergency, as reported by the Reserve Bank of India, declare a general moratorium, if it is satisfied that it is expedient so to do, by notification in the Official Gazette of the Government for such period not exceeding sixty days as may be specified in the notification; and during the period of such moratorium, the operation of any or of all the provisions of this Act, either generally or in relation to any specified bank or banking business, shall be suspended."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 4, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 4, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I move:

"That in part (a) of sub-clause (1) of clause 5 of the Bill, for the words 'and such securities', the words 'and includes such securities' be substituted."

This occurs in the definition of 'approved securities' in item (a) of sub-clause (1) of clause 5. 'Approved securities' is clearly defined there. An addition has been made by way of clarification. In such cases it is the practice to say that it 'includes' such and such things. The definition in the earlier part of the sub-clause is already complete. It is only some additional explanation that has been attempted in the latter part. So the word 'includes' is proper.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I do not think it improves the draft. I am advised by my legal adviser not to accept it.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Then I am not pressing it. I move:

"That in part (c) of sub-clause (1) of clause 5 of the Bill,—

(i) the following be added at the end:

'but does not include a company which is engaged in the manufacture of goods or carries on any trade and which accepts deposits of money from the public for the purpose of financing its own business'; and

(ii) the Explanation be omitted."

Sir, the real purpose of this amendment is to delete the Explanation. If the Explanation is deleted the first part of my amendment does not at all arise. My object is to delete it altogether, and in the alternative, if it is not deleted, to incorporate this in the definition of a "banking company". The real reason for the deletion of this Explanation is that it is absolutely unnecessary—it is clearly unnecessary. "Banking company" means, according to the definition, any company which transacts the business of banking. The meaning of "business of banking" is well known. But an Explanation has been attempted to be added on account of certain misgivings by certain companies—millowners and others. There is the practice of these companies borrowing money from the public on interest and paying them off when the necessity is over. It is feared by some of them that unless this Explanation is added, they may be regarded as banking companies because they were borrowing money from the public and therefore this Explanation has been added purporting to exclude them. But the word "banking" is well known. Stroud's judicial dictionary, which is an acknowledged authority, says that the business of a banker is "the lending of money on security of goods used in the ordinary business of the bank." The ordinary business of the bank is therefore the lending of money. A cloth dealer or any other manufacturer in the proposed Explanation does not lend money—he borrows money. The most important characteristic of banking business is lending money on the security of goods. These concerns borrow money as debtors and do not lend money to others as an ordinary business of the concern.

The other definition of "banking" is to be found in Halsbury, Vol. I. It says that a banker is "an individual or partnership or a corporation whose sole or predominating business is banking, that is receipt of money on current deposit account and the payment and collection of cheques drawn by or paid in by customers." These are the two points which give us an idea of the business of banking, namely to accept current deposits and the payment of cheques and the collection of cheques and cashing them, and again lending the money to constituents as part of its ordinary course of the business concerns which borrow monies for running their own business are not banks in any sense of the term. If we go on explaining things which do not arise there will be no end of Explanations. The fears are absolutely unjustified. The business of banking is well known even in ordinary parlance and a textile millowner does not in the least come in. So I should ask for the deletion of the Explanation. In case the House does not accept it, the earlier part may be accepted—that a banking company does not include such and such thing. An Explanation does not arise; it is rather by way of exception. Therefore, to say it does not include such and such thing would be quite enough. But I should think that the Explanation is wholly unnecessary.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in part (c) of sub-clause (1) of clause 5 of the Bill,—

(i) the following be added at the end:

'but does not include a company which is engaged in the manufacture of goods or carries on any trade and which accepts deposits of money from the public for the purpose of financing its own business'; and

(ii) the Explanation be omitted."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: This particular point was discussed at great length in the Select Committee and considered repeatedly. It presented a great deal of difficulty and it was after prolonged consideration that we reached this formula. I would therefore earnestly appeal to the mover of the amendment not to press it.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I speak a few words on this?

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: I would like to explain to my honourable friend the Mover of the amendment the genesis of this Explanation being put in. I do not know if he attended the meeting of the Select Committee. As he will remember clause 8 of the original Bill has been omitted from the Select Committee's Report, and it is really to link up clause 8 with this definition that this Explanation has been put in.

As the Honourable the Finance Minister has stated, it is a matter on which the Select Committee spent a lot of time to arrive at a proper type of definition in which we could afford protection to those people who are entitled to protection, at the same time giving an adequate definition. My only feeling is—particularly as I am now reminded that the Mover was also in the Select Committee—that he will understand that this is a sequel to our having given up clause 8 in the original Bill as it first appeared in the House, and, therefore, if the Explanation is deleted I am afraid the mischief that will be caused, notwithstanding what is found in Stroud's definitions, would be of enormous consequence to business generally. Sir, I think the interests of safety demand that the Explanation should be retained.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad was not a Member of the Select Committee. Now, Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad wants that the Explanation be omitted. Instead of an Explanation he wants to make it a part of the definition itself. It is not as if we consider this category which is provided for by the Explanation to be a "banking company" at all, in which case we will exempt it deliberately saying, "This applies to this but in our view we must accept it and give exemption". Then that case will not be included.

We wanted to offer a word of explanation. Take the definition of the word "banking". "Banking" means acceptance for the purpose of lending or investment. If we merely accept Selisbury then here it is not for the purpose of lending—lending is not there. It is merely accepting deposits to be repayable on cheques etc. Stroud no doubt says "acceptance for the purpose of lending".

But we have included another word, "investment". Those companies who came before us said "investment" must mean investment not outside but it must mean investment for their own trade or business. Therefore, we did not want to create that kind of a misinterpretation when they have absolutely no idea of lending it to others but utilising it for themselves. We did not want to bring in others because it might militate against themselves. They may not receive deposits but can always borrow on promissory notes and there is nothing to prevent them from utilising the money themselves. A promissory note is equally payable on demand. There were a large number of companies in Ahmedabad and other places which were receiving deposits. The Managing Agents and Directors who had surplus money kept it by way of deposits and withdrew it whenever they required it; but in the meanwhile the money was available for use by the trading company. It was merely an industry or a trading company and never intended as a bank which would draw surplus money from the general public and give loans to others. Investment may mean in its own field or outside. To avoid a misunderstanding on that score we added the Explanation. We did not want to create an exception. Here it does not normally come under the definition, and therefore we chose the better form of having it as an explanation and not as part and parcel of the definition.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: Sir, so far as this Amendment of my honourable friend Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad is concerned, I am in an absolute quandary. It seems to me I am almost placed in a position 'to be or not to be': whether I should oppose it or whether I should accept it.

In the Select Committee's Report we find this mention:

"The mere acceptance of deposits by companies, like textile mills, etc., for the purpose of financing their own businesses should not be regarded as 'banking' within the meaning of this Act, and although we are given to understand that this would be so even under the existing definition of 'banking', we have thought it advisable to make the legal position clear by adding an Explanation to this effect in the definition of banking company."

So, even if this amendment of my honourable friend is accepted, the position so far as he is concerned does not improve at all unless he can have the House to agree to the other earlier part of his amendment.

As far as I am concerned, in days gone by, when in our Province there was none of these modern banks, a lot of banking used to be done by the Marwari traders of the Province. They used to accept deposit without giving any promissory notes, from different persons who were able to afford it and give them interests money from time to time, or some day he would show his back and all the money would be lost.

This, I would submit, is a very dangerous clause in this sense. Supposing there is a jute mill, as we all know the millowner has to buy a lot of jute for the purpose of running the mill. They can, under this explanation, accept any amount of deposit from the public. Having accepted that deposit they can also advance money out of that deposit to the agriculturists who actually deal in jute, because it will be in his own business. The millowner is taking money from the public for the bona fide purpose of carrying on the jute mill and then after having got all that money, he could lend it out to the so-called growers of jute. As a matter of fact this system has been invoked in some parts of the country, particularly in Bengal and Assam where the mill orders on those persons interested in jute. The millowners used to advance money to the jute growers and take from them an agreement that they will supply jute, when it is harvested, to these persons at a very nominal price. They advance the money on the consideration that they would supply the jute and they fix the price at a much lower rate, which is almost nominal, and the cultivators who have not ready cash agree to take such advances. This system became so pernicious that in our Province during the war time it became necessary to pass a legislation to prohibit any such merchant to make any forward agreement with the cultivators.

Sir, whether you accept this Explanation or whether you do not accept it, I only want this to be made clear by the Honourable the Finance Minister, that there is provision in this legislation to prevent these people who take money ostensibly for the purpose of carrying on the manufacture of goods or for their trade from advancing this money to agriculturists at a very spurious rate, so to say, because he gets the produce almost for half or one-fourth of the market price. We should prevent that sort of a thing which is injurious to the agriculturists as a whole and prevent also these millowners or other traders from advancing this money on a pretext to other persons who are in need of money. That should be made clear, and if that has been made clear by this clause, well and good, let it remain. I would not spend one minute for consideration of a Banking Bill, I think the average Member in this House will not spend one minute for the consideration of a Banking Bill; we can let the banks and bankers do as they like and go as they like, happily or miserably, we do not care. But I would always intervene in a debate of this kind in the interests of the agriculturists and the poorer sections of the people. Unless there is some modification of this provision and unless a clear statement is made by the Honourable Minister himself in exposition of the policy, that this exemption will not be misutilised for the purpose of carrying on banking in another form and enable the capitalists—after all, who borrows? The capitalists borrow large sums of money—to feed on the growers and other poorer sections of the people.

Shri S. V. Krishnamoorthy Rao (Mysore State): If I understand the Explanation correctly, it applies only to the business of banking. It excludes certain types of business such as manufacturing companies which accept deposits for the purpose of financing their business. I think the Explanation is necessary and the amendment should be dropped.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: With regard to the point raised by my honourable friend, Shri Rohini Chaudhuri, that is a point which I do not think it is possible to cover by means of a banking law. Of course, in the particular case that he mentioned, the advances I take it are made for the purpose of the business itself. The class of cases that we are trying to exclude is the cases of those companies who accept deposits for the purpose of financing the particular type of business in which they are engaged, and if the kind of transaction that Shri Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri referred to is part of the business of that company, it is not possible to prevent it under this Bill. The whole point is this, that if we want to regulate that class of cases, you have got to regulate them under a separate law.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: Is there any provision in this Bill which can prevent the mischief which I am referring to?

Shri B. L. Sondhi (East Punjab: General): He has said 'No'.

Mr. Speaker: I am putting the amendment to the House.

The question is:

"That in part (c) of sub-clause (1) of clause 5 of the Bill.—

(i) the following be added at the end:

"but does not include a company which is engaged in the manufacture of goods or carries on any trade which accepts deposits of money from the public for the purpose of financing its own business"; and

(ii) the Explanation be omitted."

The motion was negatived.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Sir, I move:

"That in the Explanation to part (c) of sub-clause (1) of clause 5 of the Bill, after the words 'from the public', the word 'merely' be inserted."

It is in order to make it absolutely clear that the class of companies which are excluded from the scope of this Bill are companies which accept deposits for the purpose of financing the business in which they are engaged.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in the Explanation to part (c) of sub-clause (1) of clause 5 of the Bill, after the words 'from the public', the word 'merely' be inserted."

The motion was adopted.

Prof. K. T. Shah: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in part (d) of sub-clause (1) of clause 5 of the Bill, after the word 'which' the words 'is registered in India and', be inserted."

This is one of the structural and very important amendments of principle, which I must move, and I trust the House will be with me at least in spirit if not in the letter.

This relates, I need hardly point out, to the Exchange Banks which have long preyed upon this country, which have insulted its leading merchants, its entire commercial community, which have deliberately neglected its industry, which have in every possible manner tried to monopolise the banking business of the modern type in their own hands. It is time that Free India should remove these vestiges, these remnants, these reminders of the imperialist exploitation to which we have been subjected in the past.

Speaking for myself, I do not see why any institution of the type of a bank or an insurance company should continue to operate in this country, without registering itself under the laws of this country. We have, I think, passed some legislation in regard to Insurance, for instance, which makes it obligatory on all foreign insurance companies operating in this country to register themselves here.

I also remember that there are other countries in the world, no less civilised or claiming to be more civilised than ours, which nevertheless reserve certain types of business for the nationals of their own country. I had occasion to refer to that question on an earlier occasion. There has been considerable agitation in the past in this country, and I think rightly, that, for instance, the Coastal Shipping of this country should be confined to the nationals of this country and be reserved for them. We have not yet succeeded. Now that we are free, when we find instances in which we are still undergoing drain at the hands of these exploiters of this country, we should take steps to end such exploitation.

I have no statistics to tell you how much tribute in an invisible form is levied by the Exchange Banks in financing the trade of this country, both export and import. I have no definite idea as to what proportion of the new wealth in the country is drained away in the shape of shipping and banking commission. It used to be quite a considerable proportion of the so-called invisible exports of England; and I know also that it is quite a fair proportion of our wealth that is now being drained away without any kind of account being taken, without even any knowledge of the members of this House, or perhaps the public at large.

If the bankers are to levy a tax upon us for their own benefit, if private enterprise is to levy a tax upon us in this form, let it be by our own nationals at least; and I see no reason why these exchange banks should not be stopped altogether from operating.

Even if you do not go so far, even if you regard that as a sign of isolationism and isolationism for which I was rebuked the other day, I would certainly say that by simply requiring them to be registered in this country we are not asking too much. The claim or demand of anybody to say that they will not be registered in this country sounds to me an impertinence which ought not to be tolerated. I certainly feel,—I am speaking without any repentance of the matter—whether you call me an Isolationist or any other aprobrious epithet, I do feel that if you desire that the banking business of this country is to remain with the children of the soil then it is up to us now in this consolidating Bill,—even though it may be a consolidating Bill of only commercial banks,—to provide that these foreign institutions shall be registered. And if they do not they shall not be allowed to operate in this country.

I am told that there is such a provision as licensing in this Bill. I have studied that particular clause, and speaking for myself, I find that it is utterly insufficient to guard against the operations of these institutions which have for a hundred years exploited us, and which will continue to exploit us. Unless some very powerful interests are openly or secretly allied with them and have their own interests in these Banks continuing to operate here, I see no reason why this Assembly, at this time of the day, should permit that standing insult to our national independence being continued in the shape of foreign bodies exploiting our resources. I make no apology, however, for putting forward this amendment; and I trust the good sense of the House will accept, as I said before, at least the spirit of it, if not the letter, and leave it to the Honourable the Finance Minister to provide a more appropriate and more suitable and more appropriate amendment than mine.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in part (d) of sub-clause (1) of clause 5 of the Bill, after the word 'which' the words 'is registered in India, and', be inserted."

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: Sir, I do not know if I am doing an injustice to my honourable friend the mover of this amendment. But I think that I should rather run the risk of not having any sense at all than support this amendment.

Sir, my objection is based on the observation which my honourable friend has made in his Minute of Dissent. It is stated in para. 2 of his Minute of Dissent as follows:

"The Bill is styled to be 'A Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to banking companies.' Notwithstanding this title and preamble, considerable sectors of the banking business are left out of the purview of the proposed legislation. The Bill does not pay any attention to the entire system of private banking, including money-lending, which is not conducted by a joint-stock company. This seems to be an arbitrary distinction, and needlessly restricts the scope of the legislation, which cannot therefore, be correctly described as a consolidating Bill."

Now if that is the correct position of the bill, I heave a sigh of relief and say 'Thank God'. Sir, as banks stand at present, they do not very much help the poorer sections of the people or people who only have landed property. Go to any bank and they will ask you to furnish security of Government Papers, National Savings Certificates etc. If I have a big insurance policy or a Government Security, etc. I need not approach any bank. So it is only to help the richer section of the people, the more clever section of the people that the banks stand at present. To an ordinary person who owns a little land, the bank does not afford any relief. Go to any bank and say you are prepared to mortgage your land and they say we do not advance money on lands, garden, etc., with the result that the poor man who has no Government Securities or Insurance Policy is driven to the position of transferring or selling his land.

[Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri]

If the banks could advance some money to these people, he could invest a portion of it in other business and get some return.

Mr. Speaker: I have not been able to follow really how his speech is relevant to the issue before the House. The question is about amendment of the definition of 'Company' and whether the definition should be enlarged. I do not know whether the proposed amendment really enlarges it or curtails it. Probably it is restricting but that is the issue before the House.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: It is never too late to learn!

Mr. Speaker: I can assure him that he has not run the risk feared by him at the beginning of his speech.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: I thought this amendment wanted to include the private banking system also under banking.

Mr. Speaker: There is nothing of that kind. So he need not continue his speech on that.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: Then I apologize to Professor Shah.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Sir, I agree in principle with my learned professor regarding the object of his amendment. This is a very vital point and so long as we were governed by the previous Government of India Act, 1935, there were discriminatory clauses 111 and 115 under which we cannot discriminate against any foreign company. They were taking away the cream of our foreign business and also encroaching upon our business inside. But I do not know how the amendment moved by my friend would meet the situation apart from the restriction here that a number of companies whether registered in this country or not could be wound up under the Indian Companies Act. That way even foreign companies can come in but if we put the word registered, you will restrict the scope. Even apart from that what the learned Professor desires is that we must put those restrictions even under the Companies Act insisting upon 75 per cent. of the Directors being Indian Nationals or the entire management can be in our hands and would not like as far as possible to exclude them from encroaching upon the fields in which our banks are earning their business. That will not be served at all by merely introducing the clause that they must also be registered. The Government must make up its mind as to what it should do regarding foreign companies which had very favourable atmosphere here in the previous regime and they continue to do the same business now also. I was told the other day that when a number of small banks in Calcutta were in bad circumstances there was a long queue of a number of persons trying to invest their monies in the Lloyds' Bank. But for the existence of foreign banks like Lloyds, people would go to important Indian banks like the Central Bank and others which will come to the help of the smaller banks. So I am one with the Professor that we ought not to allow the foreign banks to function at our expense. For that we have to bring in other legislations which would put restrictions upon foreign banks and industrialists from taking away the major part of our income which would otherwise flow into our industries or by putting restrictions that there must be 75 to 80 per cent. of Indian Directors in charge of management or share-capital must belong to us or that the business must be transacted for our benefit and so on. But as it is in spite of this amendment requiring that they must be registered, this would not meet the situation. Under those circumstances, I should think that this amendment is not necessary.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: I must confess that if at all I am in a position to speak with some kind of experience and knowledge, perhaps it is upon this particular aspect of banking business. Having had considerable experience of the working of exchange banks, I can quite understand Professor Shah's chagrin because there was a time when exchange banks did try to stifle Indian business if it was possible for them to do so. But we cannot altogether rule out the possibility of exchange banks operating in this country for the reason that so long as we want international trade, so long as movements of goods from and out of this country exist it would not be possible to say that no bank which is registered somewhere else should operate in this country unless they fit into some conditions which are very difficult for them to comply with excepting those conditions that we have in this bill before us.

It may be that at present the reason for us to be afraid of the Exchange Banks doing harm to our trade no longer exists because the political pressure that they could exert and the influence they had in the past do not exist. It may be that they might help a few European firms now and again but it is a thing which will gradually disappear as and when we regulate our business in a different way. Therefore the presence of Exchange Banks might do a bit of good rather than harm to our economy for one thing that they are able to get money fairly cheaply and I do think that where they operate—and as they do operate notwithstanding my honourable friend Mr. Ramalingam Chettiar's remarks about Banks generally not doing any thing for agriculture they do operate even in the market for agricultural goods and in my experience they have sought to bring down the interest rates because they are a competitive element in the field. So if you remove the element of competition which will bring down the interest rates, you might be doing more harm to our own people.

Of course, if the whole banking system in this country is nationalized, then automatically the Exchange Banks will have no place as Exchange banking will be done as between one Government and another. But now as private banks exist in this country I see no sense in excluding the Exchange banks provided they shake off their previous predilections and their antipathy to Indian interests which they are bound to do under the present conditions. I do not want to steal the Finance Minister's thunder but he has already explained the reason why he did not want to put any more control or check over the Exchange Banks than what is now provided in this bill and I feel that this amendment, if it is accepted, would probably act exactly the other way about. Unless we have a complete ban on exchange banks coming in, the exchange banks will be outside the purview of this Bill. I think the intention the mover has in mind, will not be served by accepting this amendment.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I entirely agree with Shri Krishnamachari that this amendment not merely does not secure Professor Shah's purpose, but it actually defeats it. I am sorry I cannot accept it.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in part (d) of sub-clause (1) of clause 5 of the Bill, after the word 'which' the words 'is registered in India, and', be inserted."

The motion was negatived.

[At this stage Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair which was then occupied by Mr. Deputy Speaker Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar.]

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I move:

"That in part (h) of sub-clause (1) of clause 5 of the Bill, for the words 'entitled to', the words 'entrusted with' be substituted."

Sir, this passage occurs in the definition of "managing agent" as "a person, firm or company entitled to the management of the whole affairs of a company." I want to make it read, "a person, firm or company entrusted with the management..." In fact, the real test is the entrustment and not the legality of the appointment. If a man is entrusted with the management, though not strictly legally, he should be regarded as the managing agent. The word "entitled" gives a man the legal right to the management, and "entrusted with" does not necessarily do so. In the circumstances, my amendment is making the definition wider, and agents who are legally appointed will also come in.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad himself has argued the case against his amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall I put the amendment to vote?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: No. I shall now move my next amendment. Sir, I move:

"That in part (h) of sub-clause (1) of clause 5 of the Bill, for the words 'affairs of a company', the words 'affairs of a banking company' be substituted."

Sir, throughout the Bill, nowhere is the word 'company' used meaning a banking company. Wherever it occurs, we have the words "banking company". Here there is an exception. I want the language to be uniform throughout.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I accept the amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in part (h) of sub-clause (1) of clause 5 of the Bill, for the words 'affairs of a company', the words 'affairs of a banking company' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I move:

"That in part (h) of sub-clause (1) of clause 5 of the Bill, for the words 'by virtue of the memorandum', the words 'under the memorandum' be substituted."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: This amendment is not accepted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: It need not be put to vote. Sir, I move my next amendment:

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: This amendment is not accepted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: It need not be put to vote. Sir, I move my next amendment:

"That in part (h) of sub-clause (1) of clause 5 of the Bill, for the words 'by whatever name called', the words 'under whatever name or designation' be substituted."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: This amendment too is not accepted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member may himself move only such of the amendments as are likely to be accepted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, here the Member proposes and the Minister disposes. Sir, I move:

"That for the Explanation to part (h) of sub-clause (1) of clause 5 of the Bill the following be substituted:

Explanation.—Any person who actually occupies the position of a managing agent though under the designation of a manager or managing director, shall, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed to be a managing agent."

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: This is only a consequential amendment.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: That means, instead of the word "regarded", you want to put in the word "deemed".

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Yes, and also put in the word "designation".

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: That has already gone. I accept the word "deemed" for "regarded."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Then does it mean that the amendment confines itself to this: that for the words "regarded as", you want the words "deemed to be a", to be substituted?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Yes.

Prof. K. T. Shah: What is the difference between "deemed" and "regarded"?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The word "deemed" seems to be more legal language than the word "regarded".

Prof. K. T. Shah: I see.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in the Explanation to part (h) of sub-clause (1) of clause 5 of the Bill, for the words 'regarded as', the words 'deemed to be a' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I move:

"That in the Explanation to part (h) of sub-clause (1) of clause 5 of the Bill, the word 'nevertheless' be omitted."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: This amendment is not accepted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, the word "nevertheless" only lays more emphasis. It is used in a declamation or in business language by way of assurance or reassurance. But in Statute if we add this word, we would be overemphasising things unnecessarily. If we say, "shall be regarded as managing agent" that would be quite enough. Every word in a legislative enactment is emphatic and if we use the word "nevertheless" it would be only needlessly over-emphasising a point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Honourable Minister thinks that the objection to the word is over-emphasised. May I put it to vote?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: No, Sir. I beg to move:

"That in the Explanation to part (h) of sub-clause (1) of clause 5 of the Bill, for the words 'regarded as managing agent', the words 'deemed to be a managing agent' be substituted."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In accepting amendment No. 41, the House has adopted this change. So that, instead of having that amendment, we will take it that this amendment has been moved and adopted. I take it that that is the sense of the House.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I beg to move:

"That sub-clause (2) of clause 5 of the Bill be omitted."

Sub-clause (2) states: 'In the application of this Act to acceding States all references to the Provinces of India shall be construed as including references to the Acceding States to which this Act extends'. I submit that I do not oppose the principle. But this is not the place for its insertion. Its proper place would be the one indicated in my amendment to clause 1. In clause 1 sub-clause (2) it is said that it extends to all the Provinces of India. We should add there that it should extend also to Acceding States. That is the reason why I want to delete it here.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I do not propose to accept it.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I do not want it to be put to vote.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 5, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 5, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That in the Bill, for the word and figures 'Part II', the word and figures 'Chapter II', be substituted."

Sir, it is an important drafting point. You will be pleased to note that important Acts are divided initially into Chapters which are also, if necessary, divided into Parts. This is the case with the Civil Procedure Code, the Penal Code, the Evidence Act and so on. This Bill has four Parts which should be described as Chapters.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: This Bill has followed the model of the Companies Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in the Bill, for the word and figures 'Part II', the word and figures 'Chapter II' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That in part (a) of sub-clause (1) of clause 6 of the Bill, the word 'the', wherever it occurs, be omitted."

This word 'the' here has a long history. In connection with this clause this word has been used freely, liberally and indiscriminately. In part (a) this word has been used freely and in clause (b) very sparingly or not at all. Throughout the clause it occurs in 13 places and is omitted in 13 places. I desire in another amendment, either to have 'the' as much as you like, or not have it at all. This is jarring to the ear and unnecessary.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall we not relegate this to the draftsman?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Wherever 'the' occurs, it is perfectly in its place and wherever its insertion is suggested by my honourable friend, it would be out of place.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I suggest it would be out of place everywhere. I simply pointed out the absurdity of using this word everywhere, in appropriate and in inappropriate places. This should be further considered.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not think the honourable member would like me to put it to the House. We could leave it to the draftsman.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Yes, leave it to the draftsman.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: So the amendment is not put to the House.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I may state here that the clause in the Bill does not seem to be correct.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: It is taken straight from the Companies Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If it is wrong there it is wrong here! Does the honourable member want to move it?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: No, Sir. But what is the meaning of "taking up"? We are familiar with cattle lifting but we do not know of money lifting! Those things were under the British Government. But we are living now under changed conditions. So I had better move it and leave it to its fate. Sir, I move:

"That in part (a) of sub-clause (1) of clause 6 of the Bill, for the words 'borrowing, raising or taking up', occurring in line 1, the words 'borrowing or raising' be substituted."

The illustrious precedent of the Companies Act has been cited. But it is always a weak argument to cite precedents. The question is one of first impression. We should rather read the clause as it is and see whether the words "taking up" is really appropriate and can be supported in the context. It may be that in the other context it may have been proper or it may have been a misprint or an error. But we have to consider the matter once again.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in part (a) of sub-clause (1) of clause 6 of the Bill, for the words 'borrowing, raising or taking up', occurring in line 1, the words 'borrowing or raising' be substituted."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I am not an authority on drafting but I should like to say quite off-hand that a distinction of this kind might probably be contemplated here. When capital has been subscribed it is raised; and when actually called up or paid up it is taken up.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Money goes into a bank here and a draft is taken on some other bank. It is not borrowing or raising or accepting a deposit. It must come only in the "taking up". I deposit money in the Imperial Bank and at the other end I want this to be paid by way of a draft.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: In a matter like this we might accept the authority of the Companies Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will I put this amendment to the House?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Yes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in part (a) of sub-clause (1) of clause 6 of the Bill, for the words 'borrowing, raising or taking up', occurring in line 1, the words 'borrowing or raising' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I move:

"That in part (a) of sub-clause (1) of clause 6 of the Bill, the words 'or not' occurring in line six, be omitted."

The words "or not" seem to me to be absolutely unnecessary. Anything unnecessary should be avoided.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There may be a third category—transferable, negotiable or not.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I cannot accept it.

Mr. Deputy-Speaker: The Honourable Minister does not accept it. So, I presume the honourable member does not wish to press it.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I do not press it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Generally, in all matters when the honourable member does not press his motion, we take it that the leave of the House is granted for the withdrawal. That will be a convention.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: The Honourable the Speaker ruled that unless it is put to the House it is not before the House. So the question of withdrawal in such a case does not arise.

Prof. K. T. Shah: I move:

"That in part (a) of sub-clause (1) of clause 6 of the Bill, after the words 'kinds', occurring in line twelve, the words 'except their own' be inserted."

This is intended to prevent banks from acquiring, holding, dealing in their own shares; and, therefore, directly becoming instrumental in promoting speculations in dealing in their own shares. I think it is a very salutary and necessary addition, and I trust the good sense of the Finance Minister will enable him to accept this amendment also.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: This point is covered by the Companies Act. I have taken legal advice on this point. I understand that the particular matter that Prof. Shah has in view is covered already by the Companies Act.

Shri Prabhu Dayal Himatsingka (West Bengal: General): There is section 54 of the Companies Act which prevents a company from purchasing its own shares or lending money on its own shares. It is not necessary to put it here. The bank can purchase its own debenture bonds if any.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Need I put this to the vote?

Honourable Members: No.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: The expression is "purchasing and selling". In such transactions it is usually called 'buying and selling'.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: It makes no difference at all.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: "Purchasing" seems to be a more dignified word.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: But "selling" is not a really suitable consort of "purchasing"! Sir, I beg to move:

"That in part (a) of sub-clause (1) of clause 6 of the Bill, for the word 'purchasing', occurring in line twelve, the word 'buying', be substituted."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I do not accept it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the honourable member wants I will put it to the House.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I am not pressing it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We come now to amendment No. 63. I think "part" includes the "whole".

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, as my friend Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava points out the whole includes the part and not that the part includes the whole. Sir, I beg to move:

"That in part (g) of sub-clause (1) of clause 6 of the Bill for the words 'form part of the security' the words 'from the security or part of the security' be substituted."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Sir, I accept it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in part (g) of sub-clause (1) of clause 6 of the Bill for the words 'form part of the security' the words 'from the security or part of the security' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in part (j) of sub-clause (1) of clause 6 of the Bill, all the words beginning with the words 'subscribing to' to the end, be omitted."

I have the authority of Shri T. T. Krishnamachari himself as being a co-author with me of this amendment and I leave it to him to explain the reason.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Sir, this occurs also in the Companies Act and it does not seem to me to be necessary to make this omission.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: It was referred to in his dissentient note to the Select Committee report by Shri T. T. Krishnamachari. However, I do not want it to be put to the House.

Prof. K. T. Shah: Sir, I beg to move:

"That after part (j) of sub-clause (1) of clause 6 of the Bill, the following new parts (k) and (l) be inserted and the subsequent parts be re-lettered accordingly:—

(k) assisting in financing new industries to be established, or expansion of existing industries by subscribing for or taking up any shares, bonds, or debentures of any company if guaranteed by the Industrial Finance Corporation, or the bonds or debentures issued by the Industrial Finance Corporation on its own account, so, however, that the total investment made in any single concern shall not exceed five per cent of the fixed deposits in the bank making such investment;

(l) developing such system, methods, or facilities of making payments between customers of the same bank, or of a different bank in the same place, or in another place, as would eliminate the cost of remittance within the country, and popularise the habit of banking among all classes of the population, provided that such customers maintain a minimum balance in each such bank or branch of the bank, as may be prescribed by the Reserve Bank; "

Sir, these are amendments suggesting two types of business that might be specifically mentioned in the Act as open to a bank to carry on. The former I recognise is perhaps partly covered in part (a), if it is liberally interpreted, and may be said to have been included. I however was, and still am, under the impression that, as this is a consolidating legislation specific mention must be made, if it is not through the ingenuity of some profound lawyer to be misinterpreted, that banks may assist in the development of industries, and the realisation or development of our resources and potentialities, which under the traditional methods of banking followed under the inspiration of the English banking system, is not being done.

The specific way in which I feel that the Bank should do this business is by guaranteeing and safe-guarding the interests of depositors and shareholders; so that, I think, on that score, there shall be no objection to include specifically this provision in the Act. The argument, if it is urged, that this only relates to short term finance of commercial banking, and not to any industrial banking of the type implied in this amendment, would be met, I think, by saying that these investments are so specifically guaranteed, so assured and safe that there ought to be no very great risk in the investment of the kind contemplated.

As proof of my desire to be reasonable, I have tried further to restrict it to a percentage of the fixed deposits which are for a longer term, than the call money of the bank which is making such an investment. I trust that if the Honourable the Finance Minister will realise the spirit behind it, and understand the necessity of some such provision being inserted, he would be agreeable to considering it.

As regards the second addition about the cost of inland remittances, I have always held that the cost of remittance in this country is prohibitive, particularly to the smaller man. The ordinary remittance ought not to be costly at all beyond the postal stamp that would suffice to send a cheque from one place to another. If it is a crossed cheque it would be perfectly safe, so that none but the payee would be able to cash it and obtain the proceeds thereof. In countries where the cheque habit has been developed, the charge for remittance is in effect abolished. I do not see why, in a country of the size of India, we should allow this kind of needless taxation to be levied by Banks, on not only the business community, but progressively on the poorer community, also by permitting a tax to be levied in this indirect manner.

The banks particularly which have branches in different places, and are required to facilitate remittances between those branches of their own, or for customers of their own, should not, I think, take any objection to this requirement, that they shall make no charge on a cheque drawn in one place being payable without charge in another of their own branches, and from one of their own customers in one branch to another in another branch. It seems to me very simple. I feel that there should be no rational objection to the acceptance of a provision like this, except of course the invincible might of vested interests, that can always find some loophole, some objection some imaginary or real grievance which would not be solved by this method.

Apart from the objection that the mover is a persona non grata to the powers that be, I think the subject is such (and I will bring it up in another connection) that it should receive a very sympathetic consideration from my honourable friend the Finance Minister, who may have lost all his convictions or illusions, (let me call it by a more charitable name) but who nevertheless was sufficiently a student of economics to realise that here is a consideration which I am bringing which is real economics, even if it be not sound a la Matthai?

Sir, the actual position is that if a millowner has his own funds in another place and wants to remit the money to another place in large sums, he can do so at a cost perhaps of two annas per cent, or lower if he has any special arrangement. But if a poor man wants to remit Rs. 10 or Rs. 25 he will be charged 800 per cent. the amount the millionaire has to pay. That is to say eight times of that, by way of Money Order charge of annas four on a remittance of Rs. 25. That I think is a very unfair system.

The postal remittance system of Money Orders was intentionally made so difficult and so costly, that the poor man might not avail, or at any rate that there should be no competition with the established vested interests of banks. I trust we have come to a time when this should not be permitted, and banks should be required,—at least for the customers of their own, and at least as between places where they have branches or agencies of their own, not to make any such charge as is customary nowadays. I hope that in this case at least the interest of economy will prevail over the power of vested interests, and the amendment would be accepted.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: This Bill has a very limited scope and the issues raised by Prof. Shah, however important, are outside the scope of this Bill. I appreciate the spirit of the suggestion but must reject the amendment moved by my honourable friend.

Mr. Deputy-Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That after part (j) of sub-clause (1) of clause 6 of the Bill, the following new parts (k) and (l) be inserted and the subsequent parts be re-lettered accordingly:

(k) assisting in financing new industries to be established, or expansion of existing industries by subscribing for or taking up any shares, bonds, or debentures of any company if guaranteed by the Industrial Finance Corporation, or the bonds or debentures issued by the Industrial Finance Corporation on its own account, so, however, that the total investment made in any single concern shall not exceed five per cent of the fixed deposits in the bank making such investment;

(l) developing such system, methods, or facilities of making payments between customers of the same bank, or of a different bank in the same place, or in another place, as would eliminate the cost of remittance within the country, and popularise the habit of banking among all classes of the population, provided that such customers maintain a minimum balance in each such bank or branch of the bank, as may be prescribed by the Reserve Bank; "

Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena: I have great pleasure in associating myself with all that my honourable friend Prof. Shah has said in regard to this amendment. I feel that he has pleaded the case of the poor man in whom we are trying to develop the habit of keeping his money in banks. He has taken the trouble of pointing out this which though a very small thing will yet go a lot to help the banking habit. I personally feel that the present system of charging an amount for the transfer of money from here to Kanpur or Lucknow is really very high and this should not be permitted any longer, as Prof. Shah has pointed out. Although the Honourable Minister has stated that he will not accept the amendment, I think that in the interests of the poor man and as it will not cost much he should accept this amendment at least.

Shri Prabhu Dayal Himatsingka: Sir, I have not been able to follow how the acceptance of these two additional sub-clauses will serve the purpose that my honourable friend Prof. Shah has in view. He has himself stated that the other parts cover part (k) that he has proposed, and I dare say they do. As a matter of fact this kind of business is one of the ordinary businesses that banks do.

As regards remitting money from one place to another that also is being done everyday. I do not know how the addition of this part (l) will compel any bank to remit money at no charge or at a nominal charge. I do not know about Lucknow but even now we know that in Calcutta and other places the charge levied is so nominal that there should be no difficulty in sending money. As a matter of fact for remittances of a thousand rupees or more most of the banks charge 2 pice or at the most the highest charge is one anna per cent. If a man wants to send rupees ten why should he go to a bank? There are the postal money order facilities. In fact if he wants to send a small sum of Rs. 10 or 15 he will have to go to the bank, they will issue a draft, it has to be taken to the other bank on which the draft is issued and the whole thing will be a troublesome process. A person who does not know these things will in fact find it impossible to have the money cashed from one branch to another. Simply because this clause will be there no bank will be compelled to accept such remittances. They will have to look to their expenses, and so on. Therefore I do not think that there is any occasion or necessity for adding these two sub-clauses in the Bill, nor will they help in achieving the object that the Professor has in view.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: I am afraid I feel that Prof. Shah's amendment does not materially improve the position particularly as we have in view that the banking business must be conducted under certain rigid rules. If for instance Prof. Shah has in mind that a bank, if it is willing, should take up debentures of some firm, they can do so or alternatively invest money in debentures of that sort if they wish to do so. But in regard to operating in the same manner like an industrial bank I am afraid the honourable Mover of the Bill has very clearly explained that though it is a very desirable expansion of banking business which we should contemplate in the future this Bill does not allow any room for any such expansion of its scope.

So far as the other part of his amendment is concerned, namely the provision of remittance facilities, this can be done easily by the Reserve Bank. The Reserve Bank offers remittance facilities to many banks without any charge and it can also dictate that such bankers who take advantage of the Reserve Bank's remittance facilities should only charge a nominal fee to their customers. The effect can be achieved administratively which the additional sub-clauses to this Bill proposed by the mover will not ensure. I think the purpose is undoubtedly very well meant and one that is desirable, but we cannot achieve this by means of the addition of the sub-clauses to clause 6. Therefore I would ask the House to reject the amendment.

Shri B. P. Jhunjhunwala (Bihar: General): The amendment which has been moved by my honourable friend Prof. Shah enlarges the scope of this Bill. My honourable friend Mr. Himatsingka has said that this business which is contemplated in the proposed part (k) the bank always does. If this business is ordinarily done by the banks as is made out by my honourable friend Mr. Himatsingka, I wish to say there are so many other things which have been incorporated in this clause which the Bank already does. But still they are there. So if it is necessary at present to develop the industries and help small industries and new industries it is very necessary that the proposed sub-clause should be there. My honourable friend Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari has said that the Honourable Minister has explained in his opening speech that though such things are necessary there should be separate legislation for this. But if there is no other such legislation at present it is very necessary that this sub-clause should be there and the bank while advancing money on such projects may carefully see that the money is safe.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That after part (j) of sub-clause (1) of clause 6 of the Bill, the following new parts (k) and (l) be inserted and the subsequent parts be re-lettered accordingly:

- (k) assisting in financing new industries to be established, or expansion of existing industries by subscribing for or taking up any shares, bonds, or debentures of any company if guaranteed by the Industrial Finance Corporation, or the bonds or debentures issued by the Industrial Finance Corporation on its own account, so, however, that the total investment made in any single concern shall not exceed five per cent of the fixed deposits in the bank making such investment;
- (l) developing such system, methods, or facilities of making payments between customers of the same bank, or of a different bank in the same place, or in another place, as would eliminate the cost of remittance within the country, and popularise the habit of banking among all classes of the population, provided that such customers maintain a minimum balance in each such bank or branch of the bank, as may be prescribed by the Reserve Bank; "

The motion was negatived.

Prof. K. T. Shah: Sir, I beg to move:

"That after sub-clause (2) of clause 6 of the Bill, the following new sub-clause be added:

"That after sub-clause (2) of clause 6 of the Bill, the following new sub-clauses be added:

- (3) Unless the Reserve Bank otherwise prescribes, no charges shall be levied by any bank for any remittance on account of any customer of that bank from one place to another in India.
- (4) No company, firm or individual shall be allowed to engage in banking business without being registered as a bank or banker and licensed to carry on any banking business."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I ask the honourable member whether both these points are not covered, the earlier one by his last amendment, and the latter one by the amendment regarding registration which were negatived?

Prof. K. T. Shah: Sir, if I may submit, the first one is not quite covered by the last amendment I had moved, in the sense that now I bring in the authority of the Reserve Bank, and therefore, by implication, necessarily the facility should be given by the Reserve Bank so that the banks need not be permitted any charge. In that extent it is different whereas in the previous amendment I had suggested that the bank of its own accord, without reference to the Reserve Bank, should for its customer, make no charge as between two places where the bank has its branches. Here it is a little different.

In the second place, also it is different because, whereas the previous amendment of mine on registration referred specifically to those operating in India but not registered here, and now I make it categorical for all banking businesses or rather for everybody carrying on the business of a bank that the concern must be registered and licensed to carry on the banking business. To that extent this is much wider in both cases than the previous ones that I had submitted to the House. So, unless you rule that this point has already been disposed of and the House cannot stultify itself by considering this thing. I would beg permission to move them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Sub-clause (3) in the amendment may be all right, because power is given to the Reserve Bank. But in sub-clause (4) in addition to registration he has added the word "licensed". Registration is equally compulsory. I believe sub-clause (4) is out of order subject to what the Honourable Minister might have to say.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Sir, as regard sub-clause (4), the amendment as proposed by Prof. Shah covers firms, individuals and so on, which are outside the scope of this Bill. As far as licensing is concerned, there is already provision in the Bill.

As regards his other sub-clause in the amendment, I do not think it is a satisfactory thing to place a wholesale restriction of this kind. If the distance between the two places is not very much it may be that the Bank will not be put to any expense, but where one place is very far away from the other place, there ought to be some provision for the bank to meet its expenses. It is a matter to be left to the discretion of the bank.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: Sir, if the point raised by the Chair was whether the Chair could rule the amendment out of order, I am afraid not, because the question of registration which was rejected does not apply to a bank as such—it was only in relation to firms which have been registered in this country under the Companies Act. So, the honourable member is perfectly entitled to bring in an amendment to say that every bank should be registered as a bank. The fact that licensing is covered by Clause 22 later on, does not make it out of order to put licensing here though it might be perfectly redundant. On the merits, it is a different matter and; on the merits I agree with the remarks of the honourable the mover of the Bill. But whether the amendment could be allowed in its present form or not ultimately I think there is a case for allowing the honourable member for moving his amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member will kindly go on with his speech.

Prof. K. T. Shah: Am I allowed to move both sub-clauses (3) and (4), Sir?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Prof. K. T. Shah: Sir, sub-clause (3) I was informed is already in practice done, namely, that the Reserve Bank can offer facilities, and those banks which avail themselves of the facilities may be able to make remittances free of charge, or at a very nominal charge. I would point out that having admitted the authority of the Reserve Bank, I am entrusting to that central national banking institution in the country the discretion and the power to make rules, so that if the Reserve Bank—which is the bank of all banks—is of the opinion that some charge is desirable and necessary, it will not make the rule to that effect. If, however, the Reserve Bank does not provide to the contrary, then the law should say that subject to that it is desirable that there should be no charge for remittance to anybody who can have a banking account and has occasion to remit money from one place to another.

I place this matter on a slightly higher ground than that of mere convenience to the remitter. I think, Sir, if you desire in this country—it is a question, in the last analysis, of your objectives—if you desire to have as wide-spread a banking habit and banking facilities as possible, then you should accept my amendment. That is to say, the poor people who have to make small payments, let us say their insurance premium, or their electric charges, or their newspaper subscriptions, or anything of that kind which is a recurrent periodical payment, including also their taxes, if they are allowed to make payment from one place to another free of charge by a cheque then you will help the spread of the banking habit if you remove the obstacle which for the poor man stands very seriously in this way.

One pice per cent. or two pice or one anna per cent. may be nothing to millionaires; but one per cent. even to a man whose income is perhaps Rs. 10 a month or Rs. 15 a month, is on a remittance of Rs. 5 equal to $1\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. This is too much. If a domestic servant working in a capital city like Bombay has his monthly wages of only Rs. 5, say Rs. 15, and out of that he has to remit and he has no alternative but to go to the post office he would have to pay four annas on Rs. 5. I submit that this is very burdensome on the poor man; and as such you should not be a party to permitting, for the sake of these millionaire Bankers, to continue this kind of a charge.

The penalty on the poor man is that he cannot have a banking account and has not thousands to remit. Such remittances that he has to make must be done through the Post Office, which charges a considerable sum, and that makes taxation very inversely with inability.

Well, we are told that the poor man will have to incur the trouble of going to the bank, then on the other hand the remitter through the Post Office has to go to cash it. The poor man has to face these troubles because it is necessary for him to consider every single pie that he spends.

Those of my friends who are millionaires, and to whom thousands do not matter or millions do not matter, to them these small things do not matter. They do not come into their mind at all. I quite understand their outlook, and I fully understand their general reasoning on this matter. While appreciating such points I can only be reminded of that unhappy French Queen, who, in the days of the Revolution, when the mobs went shouting "Bread, bread" around the palace, asked her attendant, "Why are they shouting? What are they shouting for?" and the attendant said, "Your Majesty, they are shouting for bread". The Queen replied, "Why are they shouting for bread? If they have not got bread, why don't they eat cakes?"

This is an attitude which I can understand from Marie Antoinette, Queen of France, I can understand it also from some millionaire friends in this House. But I must say I cannot understand it from the representatives of the poor man.

I have given you an example which happens every day in a city like Bombay, and I expect it happens also in other cities. When we come to domestic servants or even wage-earners in small employments, who have very small savings to remit to their parents or to their families at home a few miles away, some distance away, they find this charge very hard. Believe me, Sir, if you wish to safeguard the interests of the bankers' profits, and do not provide for this charge to be removed or dispensed with, you will not be serving the interests of the masses. If you wish that banking business should take a line which will give facilities to prevent this charge disappearing, then I am afraid you are thinking more of the interests of the big business rather than of the small man. I know the small man is only to be talked about. But when the question of his interest is concerned, then of course so many difficulties and objections arise that we ignore it altogether. But I for one feel that at least once in a way some small evidence may concretely be given about our resolve to try and safeguard or promote his interest.

I know I am in a hopeless minority—not hopeless myself,—but in a hopeless minority. * * * But at the same time I feel that there will be a few people at least, a very few people, whose voice would be powerful enough to allow me to obtain an "Aye" in this case, and make one division on this subject, at least to record the names of those who refused to give even this small facility to the poor.

As regards the second amendment, Sir, I am very grateful to my friend Mr. Krishnamachari for pointing out that this is a totally different matter from the one on which I spoke earlier. The proposed sub-clause (4) deals with any individual firm or company, and not only company. By this method, you may say that it goes beyond the scope of this Bill. You may say that it is not our intention to think of any but banking companies, and not of those who do banking business I can understand that argument. But to say that because I, on a previous occasion, moved an amendment relating to the registration of companies in India, meaning clearly especially those Exchange Bank companies which operate and take a heavy toll from India, with headquarters, registration and capital in foreign countries, unamenable to our legislation, that they need not be required to be registered in India—I must accept the decision of the House, and say nothing more about it. But when I spoke of others who also get into this honourable fraternity of parasites, by their usual activity to require them that they at least be registered and subject to certain conditions of registration, and licensing, especially when they want to do banking business, is I think a proposal which I think the House should accept.

I commend my amendment to the House. I do not know, Sir, if you will put them together and condemn, in fact, the poison of one as well as the reactor of the other, but I am in your hands, you may put them as you like.

Shri H. V. Kamath (C. P. and Berar: General): On a point of order. Is not the remark of my dear friend Prof. Shah against the House far too sweeping and objectionable?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thought so. I thought that such a remark in respect of the House—of course, he has been charitable to say "except a few"—but a general remark does not seem to be appropriate.

Prof. K. T. Shah: Sir, I apologise.

Seth Govind Das (C. P. and Berar: General): There is no question of apology. He must take back those words. Otherwise, such remarks will be made by one member or other every now and then and they will go into our proceedings. They should be taken back. They should be removed from the proceedings.

Shrimati Renuka Ray (West Bengal: General): Mr. Deputy Speaker, an apology should be good enough.

Seth Govind Das: I would request you Sir, that these remarks should be removed from our proceedings.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: With due respect to you, Sir, we are men after all. A mere remark need not hurt anybody. The fact that the honourable member regrets is quite enough. After all, we are not sentimental bodies that would be afflicted by small remarks.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: On a point of order, Sir. My friend Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad said that we are all of us men here. Are all of us men here? He has simply ignored a very important section of the House.

* Expunged as ordered by the Deputy Speaker in the House.

Shri H. V. Kamath: But men includes women, Sir.

Seth Govind Das: The other day certain remarks were made by Maulana Hasrat Mohani. I raised some objection to it. Today Mr. Shah has done it. On the third day, some other member will make such a remark on this House and this House will not have any honour.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think Prof. K. T. Shah has made sufficient amends to the House. The House must be satisfied with this. But lest this should appear in the paper and in the official report that one member made a remark I do not think Prof. K. T. Shah would require that these words should continue in his name, particularly when he has said that he is sorry for having said those words. I do not think he will have any objection to having those words to be expunged.

Prof. K. T. Shah: If you will permit, Sir, I would even say, "I withdraw".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: So the words will stand expunged.

Now, we will proceed. These two amendments will be put separately according to the wishes of the mover. I will put the amendments to the House; then discussion may go on.

Amendment moved:

"That after sub-clause (2) of clause 6 of the Bill, the following new sub-clauses be added:

(3) Unless the Reserve Bank otherwise prescribes, no charges shall be levied by any bank for any remittance on account of any customer of that bank from one place to another in India.

(4) No company, firm or individual shall be allowed to engage in banking business without being registered as a bank or banker and licensed to carry on any banking business."

Shri Prabhu Dayal Himatsingka: I rise on a point of order, Sir. With due respect, can we legislate for a firm or individual?

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: That is irrelevant. It is inapplicable. If you put something into it which cannot be enforced, it is useless.

Shri Prabhu Dayal Himatsingka: But can we legislate here for a firm or individual as money-lending is a Provincial subject? It is all right so far as companies are concerned. Firm or individual ought not to be included.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: May I suggest that discussion may be allowed on this and before voting the Chair might give a decision on whether to allow the words "firm or individual".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: So far as we have proceeded, we have done only clauses 2 to 5. We are on clause 6. Clause 2 says the provisions of this Act shall be in addition to, and not, save hereinafter provided, in derogation of the Indian Companies Act. There is nothing preventing a reference to a firm or individual. Clause 3—Act not to apply to cooperative banks. It does not say, to a firm or individual. Clause 4 relates to power to suspend operation of Act. The next clause—interpretation clause cannot be substantial portion. Therefore, as it stands I cannot see any objection to this amendment, whatever may happen later.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: If I may submit, firm or individual could not come within the scope of the control of the Central Government. A partnership or an individual will come under money-lending and could not come within banking. That is the real point. That is why we have steered clear right through this Bill from roping anybody who is a partnership firm or an individual moneylender.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It has been held on a prior occasion by the Speaker from the rulings that it is not open to the Chair to decide as to whether this comes in or not. It is left to the House. The House may vote against it.

As it is already five o' clock, the House may now adjourn.

The Assembly then adjourned till a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock on Friday, the 11th February 1949.

INDIAN PENAL CODE AND THE CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE (AMENDMENT) BILL

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava (East Punjab: General): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, be continued."

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, be continued."

The motion was adopted.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the same personnel as that of the Committee to whom the three Bills in respect of the Child Marriage Restraint (Amendment) Act have been committed, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

Sir, with your permission I may add that the Committee should be asked to send their Report by March 21, 1949.

Sir, these three Bills relating to the Child Marriage Restraint (Amendment) Act have already been sent by this House to a Committee. As the subject matter of these three Bills and the subject matter of the present Bill is the same, I propose that the same Select Committee be authorised to deal with this Bill also.

As regards the question whether this Bill should be sent to a Select Committee or not, I may remind the House that this Bill was sent for eliciting public opinion on December 3, 1947, and on that date I submitted before the House my reasons in extenso why this Bill was necessary. I do not want to go into the same reasons again as on that occasion also the House was pleased to support this measure; the only question that troubled the minds of some of the gentlemen was whether public opinion was in favour of such a Bill or not. Now that public opinions have been received, I would content myself by only just giving the House a resume of the opinions received.

Papers have been circulated to us in regard to those opinions and about 133 people or associations have given their opinions, out of which 130 are in favour and three are against. I may just make one remark about those three whose opinions are against. They have not considered the merits of the Bill; they have refused to consider the merits of the Bill on the plea that a House like this is not competent to make any legislation about marital rights and that it is a religious matter and therefore there should be no legislation about it. Now, this piece of argument was demolished very long ago. In 1860, 1891 and 1928 these Bills relating to this religious affair were passed and the reason given by them, therefore, is not sound. Therefore, if we exclude these three,

[Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava]

I can claim that the entire country supports this measure as all the opinions that have been received support this measure.

It may be that the measure is not supported in its entirety. The two ages, that is, the age of 18 for extra-marital and 15 for intra-marital, have not been endorsed by all the people, but there is none among these opinions which does not say that an extra-marital increase should not be made or that an intra-marital age increase should not be made. Most of the opinions are about the fact that if you enact a law relating to age of consent, without having a proper marriage law for the same age, then in practice such a contingency might cause very great hardship. I fully agree with this proposition. My humble submission is that unless and until you raise the marriage age, the raising of the age of consent might inflict more hardship than is necessary. Since these three Bills and this Bill go to the Select Committee, I hope that the required change will be effected simultaneously and that there will be no such trouble.

I do not propose to go through all these opinions which have been received nor do I propose to read the opinions before the House as it will take a very long time. I have got a small resumé made but this resumé also covers eleven pages, so I do not want to read even that. I would only content myself with saying something about the opinions received from the major Provinces, and even a cursory glance at those opinions will be enough to satisfy everybody that the entire country is in favour of this Bill, and if the House is so pleased—I do not want to waste the time of the House, Members must have already read these opinions—I may not trouble them at all with these opinions because we have got other important business to do. It will, therefore, suffice to read from the opinions from Bombay, Madras, the United Provinces and East Punjab. In regard to them also, Sir, I do not propose to read all the opinions but only just to state how representative these individuals and associations are who have supported this measure.

In regard to the United Provinces, the Government of U. P. regard this measure favourably. Similarly, the High Court: Justice Raghubar Dayal; Justice Sapru; Justice Bindbasini Prasad; the District Judges of Agra, Allahabad, Aligarh, Azamgarh, Banaras, Bareilly, Naini Tal, Meerut, and Shahjahanpur; the Chief Court of Oudh: Justice Kidwai; Justice Chandramani; the District and Sessions Judge, Lucknow; the District and Sessions Judges, Sitapur, Hardoi and Faizabad; the Advocate-General, U. P.; Government Advocate, Allahabad; Government Advocate, Chief Court, Allahabad; and many others—I do not propose to read other names—have expressed opinions in favour of the principle of the Bill.

In Madras, the Government of Madras; the High Court; the Government Solicitor; Public Prosecutor; District Magistrate, Chingleput; District Magistrates, Salem, Arcot, Cuddalore; and many other people including Retired Judges of the High Court, Mr. Sundaram Chettiar, Mr. Venkatarama Shastri; Mr. Ratnaswami of the Annamalai University and Mr. Venkataraman have supported it. Sir Alladi Krishnaswami is not favourably disposed towards the Bill. This is a solitary exception. But what he says is this, that marriages below the age of 14 should be prevented. It means that there is qualified support given by him also. Similarly, in East Punjab the Punjab Government, Judges of the High Court, Bar Associations and very distinguished persons have supported it. Similarly in Bombay and West Bengal. So I would not like to read their opinions, but suffice it to say that the opinions are unanimously in favour of the Bill.

On the last occasion I spoke I took great pains to show to the House the evil effects of child marriage and I quoted authorities to show that speaking physically; psychologically and economically this institution of child marriage is very harmful for us, and the way in which we could cope with the situation was to raise the marriageable age and to supplement this age by having recourse to the age of consent law which gives the age of consent in married life as 13 today, which I want to be changed to 15. As regards extra marital age, I want that it may be changed from 14 to 18. It is not necessary for me to go through all these reasons over again. Last time, when the Bill was before this House on the 3rd December, 1947, Dr. Pattabhi supported it, Mrs. Durgabai supported it, Mr. Karimuddin supported it. There was no voice in opposition, and last of all, our beloved Sardar supported it. He said that he was in full sympathy with the provisions of this Bill and this measure was overdue. He only wanted it to be referred to the public for ascertaining their opinion. Now, Sir, I want to reiterate the words with which I closed my speech then. The last sentence was as follows: "I bow again to Sardar Patel though not without a gnawing of the heart which will cease not until the Bill is passed". That was on the 3rd December, 1947, and now it is the 11th February, 1949, and the Bill may take still more time. Meanwhile, the result is that lakhs of marriages may have been celebrated during this interval and pre-puberty consummation and early consummation may have inflicted such great suffering on the community that we cannot conceive of it. In fact, this is an invisible hardship. Physical hardship is also there. It can also be seen in some cases, but as a matter of fact, the hardship is more invisible than visible. Therefore it is not realised. But hardship is inflicted, and it has been inflicted on the country by waiting for two years. I humbly submit now for the consideration of the House that the House will be pleased to pass this measure as soon as possible in this session, because I regard that even a single case of early consummation or pre-puberty consummation is a sin and we are committing sins in fact we are committing suicide by withholding our sanction from this Bill and giving it full effect as soon as possible. The only way in which this Bill will fructify and be successful in its operation will be by raising the age of marriage; otherwise, it would not be successful. I know that. This is a measure which is directly connected with the then other measures. While moving another motion two days ago, I submitted to the House that the report should be called from that committee by 21st March. Early in April there will be another day for this business and I hope that these Bills will be passed on that day. I beseech the House to agree and to see that these Bills are passed in this session.

With these words, I beg to submit the motion for the consideration of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Before I put the motion to the House, I might just make a casual remark, that it will be more desirable if the names of members for the present Select Committee were to be included in the motion itself rather than have them put in, by reference to some other Select Committee and so on. Of course, I have got the names from the office.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: With your permission, Sir, I will read the names

Mr. Speaker: I have got them, but I am making this remark, so that next time, members will put their motions in a proper form and completely instead of leaving it to the office or to myself to search them out.

The question is:

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Dr. Bakshi Tek Chand, Shri Prabhudayal Himatsingka, Shrimati G. Durgabai, Begum Aizaz Rasul, Shrimati Dakshyani Velayudhan, Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, Pandit Krishna Chandra Sharma, Sardar Hukum Singh, Shri Ajit Prasad Jain, Shri P. Kumbharam, Shri Deshbandhu Gupta, Shri Upendranath Barman, Dr. B. Pattabhi Sitaramayya, Shrimati Renuka Ray and the Mover, with instructions to report on or before the 21st of March, 1949, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

The motion was adopted.

WORKERS' PROVIDENT FUND BILL

Shri R. K. Sidhva (C. P. and Berar: General): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill to provide for the establishment and grant of Provident Fund to certain classes of workers by their employers be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram, Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, Shri Khandubhai K. Desai, Shri Mohan Lal Gautam, Shrimati G. Durgabai, Shrimati Renuka Ray, Prof. K. T. Shah, Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena, Prof. N. G. Ranga, Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi, Mr. K. A. Mohamed, and the Mover, with instructions to report on or before the last day of first week of the next Session and that the number of members, whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

This is a Bill of a very important character, and it should have been brought in this legislature long long years ago. The Bill envisages the grant of Provident Fund to a certain class of workers in this country. Provident Fund means that an employee during his hard service sets aside a certain portion of his hard-earned money to which a certain portion is added by the employer, so that after retirement the employee gets some relief, some morsel, some protection for himself, his wife and children. That has been an accepted policy all throughout the world, and it has been accepted in India and also by the Government of India. But in this country those who have been in power and those who could protect themselves and those who were already protected introduced the system of Provident Fund ever since they were employed in the service.

But that class of people for whom there was no person to protect their interests or who are the least protected or who go without any protection, they go without the benefit of this Provident Fund. It is for this class of workers for whom this Bill seeks to provide a Provident Fund. A distinction has been made, Sir, all along and on going through the proceedings of the Assembly of the previous twenty years, I find that this subject has been discussed from time to time, and particularly in every Budget session, that for the Provident Fund of the labourers, an Act should be made, but the then Government refused to come to the aid of the legislators of those days, until in 1925, when it was made too hot for the treasury benches, they enacted an Act, which is now in existence, which is known as the Provident Act of 1925. This Act is, however, greatly restricted in scope, in which this class of people, for whom this Bill envisages, do not come in.

Sir, as far back as 1921, when the Labour Commission came to India, as you are all aware, they recommended that the rules regarding the Provident Fund should be changed immediately and that those who get Rs. 20 and over and those who have put in one year's service should get Provident Fund compulsorily. Now Sir, as I said, a distinction has been made between a class of people who are already deriving the benefit of this Provident Fund and a class of people, a very large number of them, who do not get the benefit of the Provident Fund. Sir, this is a discrimination, and it is very unfair that between human beings there should be a distinction and a discrimination made by the previous Governments. After all, the persons who can protect themselves and who are benefited by the Provident Fund today, have to live after the retirement in the same way as these poor fellows have to remain. On the contrary, they have to remain under very extraordinary conditions. Those big people who are protected under the Provident Fund, may have built up some reserve for their period after retirement, whereas these poor fellows, who draw Rs. 20 and onwards, have no reserve and they have no protection from the State or from their employers. Of course, I must give credit to our Honourable Minister in charge of Labour, who is taking very keen interest for the welfare of labour. As I have stated before, in every session, there has been one Bill that he has presented in one form or the other, and today the Factory Act has been changed considerably in the last two sessions, so as to give some kind of benefit to the labourers.

This is the result of the changed conditions and our Government have been alive to that and I thought, Sir, to assist our Minister, I must also contribute and such a Bill should be enacted at a very early date. I submit this Bill with this object in view and although the Honourable Minister is not here, I am sure he would have welcomed it, knowing his views as I do about the welfare of the labourers.

It might be argued that in the present Income-tax Act of 1922, under section 58B, there is a provision that if an employer asks the Income-tax Officer to recognize any Provident Fund, that could be taken into consideration, but that clause in the Income-tax Act is not comprehensive; it says the employer can make an application. I have yet to see an employer voluntarily coming out for the Provident Fund and making an application to the Government stating: "Please see that these Provident Fund Rules are admitted and this relief should be given to the employees." There has been no such instance, Sir, despite this rule existing, no application has been made. Therefore, it may be argued by anybody that rules are there and anybody could have done it, but the very fact that this rule exists for the last 26 years and no advantage has been taken by the employers to voluntarily come forward and give this relief, goes to show that this kind of attitude on the part of the employers is very undesirable. I would have really welcomed that if the employers of their own choice make the Provident Funds for their employees; it would have pleased nobody more than myself or anybody who has the welfare of the workers at heart, but, Sir, that not being so, we have no other alternative but to enact law to say that there should be a compulsory Provident Fund, whereby the employee gives a share and the employer contributes towards it. It is regrettable that the employers themselves have not realized the workers' condition long, long ago, with whom I have been advocating wherever occasions had arisen. In the new set up they must change their outlook and provide two things, houses for the labourer and the Provident Fund. They have never risen to the occasion. Some employers to their credit, I might say, have built up some houses for their employees; some have introduced some beneficial measures, but that is very negligible. There are good employers who have taken this initiative of their own accord. I have seen that, Sir, wherever the houses are provided, the workers are happy and the strikes do not take place. These two things I have always felt as an essential factor in the life of a worker. If an employer when establishing his own industry sets aside from his initial capital amount simultaneously with the erection of a factory a provision for the houses of the workers, I am sure the present trouble of these workers and the strikes could have been considerably avoided. At the same time the workers would be really happy if they feel that something is reserved for them after their retirement from the service. I would certainly welcome that once an employee is confirmed in the Service, he should be entitled to the benefit of the Provident Fund Act; if he is dismissed or does not behave as he is required to behave, then he loses the share of the employer. So he will be always eager to see that he performs his duties loyally and faithfully to the State and to the employer, so that he may have the full benefit of the fund, that may have been kept aside for him. It is also very necessary to cement the good relations between the employer and the employed. It is highly essential that these things which are needed should be provided by the employers.

I have therefore a very simple Bill and the one object with which I have brought it, I have stated in this Bill, i.e., that the subscription that has to be deducted from the employee's salary should be compulsory. You can imagine, Sir, a man drawing Rs. 30 or 40 a month has hardly sufficient for his maintenance yet he is prepared to spare a rupee from that every month, so that at the time of his retirement, he might get something with a consolation: "That this is my money and my master has also given some money." He will bless that master who is cursed by him today. I want to avoid all that by this kind of enactment, which is overdue. I feel, Sir, in presenting this Bill I have absolutely no hesitation in stating that this Bill will find the fullest support at the hands of the Government.

[Shri R. K. Sidhva]

I have stated, Sir, that the provisions of this Bill should come into operation for employees who draw salaries of Rs. 20 and over. It may be argued: "Why not Rs. 20 and under?" I know there are employees who are getting less than Rs. 20; I know in some provinces there are yet persons who draw a salary of Rs. 15 and if I mistake it not, it is in the United Provinces.

An Honourable Member: They are mostly Government servants.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: I have, Sir, in this Bill defined the term 'employer'. "Employer" includes any body of persons whether incorporated or not and any managing agent of the employer and the legal representative of the deceased employer. As far as the Government is concerned, my friend has put the question; they are not included here. During recent years, the Government have provided by executive order for a provident fund system for these people and therefore, I have not included them. What I want is that though a certain class of labourers, a very negligible proportion, enjoy these benefits, there are large number of them, tramway workers, dock, wharf, jetty workers, all these people do not enjoy these benefits, and they should be given all these benefits.

In conclusion, Sir, I submit that my Bill seeks to promote a spirit of confidence and co-ordination among the employees and the employers, with the object of producing better results in the production of manufactured goods. Today, we know, that our country is suffering from less production; our Government has been advising the labourers and employers to step up production. I entirely share the view that production must be increased at any cost. At the present juncture, I oppose any kind of strike. At one time, during the previous Government, I had myself led many strikes. Under the existing conditions, I do not want, despite the difficulties that are created for the labourers, to initiate a strike. But, Sir, that does not mean that we should overlook the future betterment of the labourers, which is already overdue. If we compulsorily ask these employers to really change their outlook and create this fund, it will strengthen our hands and immediately, the country's wealth will be increased by increased production. Today, we are handicapped by the arguments advanced by some of the labour leaders—you ask us to step up production, but what have the employers done for us? Some of the arguments are right and some are wrong. Those arguments which are right should be borne in mind and this House must show to the workers, as we have always done, that we are in entire sympathy with them and that the employers will be made to give this benefit to the workers.

Sir, an amendment has been proposed by the honourable the Chief Whip that this Bill should be sent for circulation. I have no hesitation to have the Bill circulated. A measure of this kind is a very simple one and should have been sent to the Select Committee and passed in this session. However, if the honourable the Chief Whip feels that this Bill should be circulated for eliciting public opinion, I do not mind. I do not know what is the public opinion to be sought on a measure of this kind. The employers will all come with all sorts of stories and will present a memorandum. As the period mentioned by him is 30th June, I would be inclined to accept if the House so desires to accept the amendment. I however hope the object of the amendment is not to shelve the Bill. The intention of the Government has been sympathetic; I want them to be a little quicker so that we can repudiate the arguments advanced by the labour leaders and show that this House which has shown much sympathy all along towards the welfare of the labourers would also see that this benefit is provided and in the next session whenever we meet, in July, August or September, this Bill is passed into law.

With these few words, Sir, I commend this motion for the acceptance of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the Bill to provide for the establishment and grant of Provident Fund to certain classes of workers by their employers, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram, Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, Shri Khandubhai K. Desai, Shri Mohan Lal Gautam, Shrimati G. Durgabai, Shrimati Renuka Ray, Prof. K. T. Shah, Prof. Shibban Lal Saksena, Prof. N. G. Ranga, Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi, Mr. K. A. Mohamed and the Mover, with instructions to report on or before the last day of the first week of the next Session and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

The Honourable Shri Satyanarayan Sinha (Minister of State): Sir, I move:

"That the Bill be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion thereon by the 30th June, 1949."

I am glad to inform the House that the Government has already, as an experimental measure, introduced the system in one of the very big labour areas and the Government is anxiously watching its result. It is quite likely that the Government itself may sponsor a Bill of this nature in the next session. In view of this, I would request my honourable friend Mr. Sidhva to agree to my amendment. (An Honourable Member. "He has already agreed.") He has to agree formally. On behalf of the Government, I can assure the House, that the Government has gone into this question and as I have said, it is quite likely that the Government itself will bring a Bill of this nature in the next session.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: In view of the assurance given, I agree to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: I shall put the amendment to the House.

The question is:

"That the Bill be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion thereon by the 30th June, 1949."

The motion was adopted.

PREVENTION OF FREE OR FORCED OR COMPULSORY LABOUR BILL

Shri R. K. Sidhva (C.P. and Berar: General): With your permission, Sir, I move:

"That the Bill to provide punishment for free or forced or compulsory labour, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram, Shri A. V. Thakkar, Shri H. V. Kamath, Dr. V. Subramaniam, Begum Aizaz Rasul, Shrimati Annie Mascarene, Shri S. Sanker, Shri P. S. Nataraja Pillai, Shri K. Hanumanthaiya, Srijut Robini Kumar Chaudhuri, Shri Jaipal Singh, Shrimati Dakshayani Velayudhan, and the Mover, with instructions to report on or before the last day of the first week of the next Session and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

Sir, the ugly instances that are coming from time to time, of extracting forced labour from the poorer classes of people, are well known to everybody. This kind of forced labour was considered by the International Labour Conference in 1930 at great length and it was decided that this kind of forced labour is an evil and it must be eradicated from all the countries. Article I of that decision says:

"Each Member of the International Labour Organization which ratifies the present Convention undertakes to suppress the use of forced or compulsory labour in all its forms."

[Shri R. K. Sidhva]

This is the clause to which the Government of India is a party. It further goes on to say in Article 5 that—

"Where such forced or compulsory labour for the benefit of private individuals, companies, or other entities than the community exists at the date on which a Member's ratification of the present Convention is registered by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, such forced or compulsory labour shall be completely suppressed within a period of three years from the said date of registration of ratification."

We were a party to this but the then Government which was a party to the article did nothing to eradicate this evil which is existent in this country for so many years. I might state that now with the vigilant civic conscience that has arisen even among that class of people from whom this forced labour is extracted, they have in some cases refused to render this kind of labour. But I know from personal knowledge that this kind of forced labour is extracted sometimes by Government servants also. They charge the Government for the false payments of having secured labour and misappropriate the wages to themselves and do not pay these people their wages. It is an established fact and some Provinces have appointed committees and it was admitted that this was so. Despite this, the previous Government did nothing. There are hill tribes in this country—of a population of 2-1/2 crores—and among this class of people this evil exists to a great extent. My friend Shri Amritlal Thakkar who is an expert in this has travelled extensively these areas and he has submitted a report to the Constituent Assembly for the Constitution making and he has given reasons as to what are the conditions of this class of people and the Constitution is going to provide some kind of relief to these people. That in itself would satisfy and prove as to what kind of conditions prevail today among these people. But that is not sufficient. The Constitution is going to provide general rules as far as their welfare is concerned but I want by this Bill to put a stop to this in those places particularly in Bihar, Orissa—it is in Madras also to a certain extent—where this exists to a very great extent.

Now, Sir, in my Bill I have excluded the services of persons who are required for public emergencies. Because when Government employ they do pay. Sometimes there are many irrigation works and the Zamindar wants his land to be cultivated and he calls some people round by and asks them to dig the canal, etc., and he gives them only a little morsel and no cash money. These are the class of people who suffer today immensely. I submit that under Section 374 of the I.P.C. any kind of labour is prohibited but nobody has taken cognizance of this section. This has remained a dead letter and, therefore, I feel that unless a separate Act is made for this purpose this kind of hardship could not be removed, leave aside, eliminated. I do not think anybody would like this to continue which is against the society and everybody would be too pleased to see that such evil which exists today is immediately stopped. Somehow in the past no efforts were made in this direction probably under the impression that it is not possible to remove it. If under those arguments and presumptions we work, we are not going to do any good to anybody at any time. It is our duty to see that such a thing which is a stigma on the society should be immediately removed and efforts should be made accordingly. If this Bill is passed into Act, then Government has to be alert and see that through various agencies the provisions of this Act are carried out and then I am confident that within a short period this kind of labour which is forcibly taken by the interested class of people will be removed.

[At this stage Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair, which was then occupied by Mr. Deputy Speaker (Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar.)]

I have defined that—Free labour means labour without providing remuneration in cash at the prevailing market rates in the locality for that kind of labour;

Forced or compulsory labour shall mean all work or service which is exacted from any person under the menace of any penalty and for which the said person has not offered himself voluntarily.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Madras: General): Without a quid pro quo.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: Then I have made a proviso that under the Indian Forest Act, 1927 and the Bombay Irrigation Act, 1879 where certain services are required for the interest of the State, should be exempted from the operation of this Bill. I have also been careful in saying that this Bill when it is passed into law should not come into conflict with the requirements of the State in an emergency. Therefore, with these words I am confident that the House will accept my motion. In this matter also I find that the Honourable the Chief Whip has tabled an amendment stating that this should go under circulation and the opinions should be invited by September. As I stated at the earlier stage this Bill is of a far greater importance—although both are equally important—I should have felt that this Bill which is really a stigma to society should have been passed without any reference or circulation. I want to know who is going to state that this condition should remain. There is no question of any employer saying that this should remain unless they want to make out a false case. However if the Bill has to be sent for circulation I wish that he will reduce the period for eliciting opinion from September to June so that in the next session when we meet the reports will be available and the House may be in a position, to dispose it of in the next session. I only make an appeal to him and if that is acceptable to the House, namely, that this Bill be circulated for eliciting opinion thereon by the 30th June, then I will have no objection. With these words, I commend this motion for the acceptance of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the Bill to provide punishment for free or forced or compulsory labour, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram, Shri A. V. Thakkar, Shri H. V. Kamath, Dr. V. Subramaniam, Begum Aizaz Rasul, Shrimati Annie Mascarene, Shri S. Sankar, Shri P. S. Nataraja Pillai, Shri K. Hanumanthaiya, Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri, Shri Jaipal Singh, Shrimati Dakshayani Velayudhan, and the Mover, with instructions to report on or before the last day of the first week of the next Session and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the committee shall be five."

The Honourable Shri Satyanarayan Sinha (Minister of State): Sir, I move:

"That the Bill be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion thereon by the 1st September, 1949."

I have again to request the honourable the Mover to agree to my amendment in view of the fact that it is already engaging the attention of Government and Government has appointed a Special Officer to investigate the whole thing. The report is awaited very keenly and there is every likelihood that the report might be submitted to Government in the course of a month or two. As I have stated with regard to the other Bill, so in respect to this Bill also I may inform the House that it is quite likely that the Government might sponsor a Bill itself. If Mr. Sidhva wants this date to be changed to the 30th June, I have no objection. I will very gladly accept that as an amendment to my amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In view of the statement by the Honourable Minister of State, the amendment now before the House is as follows:

"That the Bill be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion thereon by the 30th June 1949."

Shri H. V. Kamath (C.P. and Berar: General): I welcome with all my heart the Bill that has been brought before the House by my honourable friend, Mr. Sidhva. I am sure there can be no two opinions on this point, that that Bill represents a move in the right direction, the direction of the social and economic emancipation of the vast masses of our country in conformity with the spirit of the Constitution on which we are all engaged. The House is very well aware that in the last session of the Constituent Assembly we adopted unanimously Article 17 of the Constitution which reads thus:

"Traffic in human beings and begar and other similar forms of forced labour are prohibited and any contravention of this provision shall be an offence punishable in accordance with law."

My friend, Mr. Sidhva has detailed to the House the international convention on this subject, and I do not therefore propose to go into it all over again. As he remarked, this usage of begar has been rampant in this country. I do not presume to say since when: but ever since perhaps our country passed into the gloom and the night of slavery, this custom must have taken a firm foothold in our country. Ever since the vast masses of our country began to be exploited, not merely by the foreigner, but by the indigenous feudal landlords, this custom has taken a heavy toll in India. It is high time, now when we have emerged from the night of slavery into the light of freedom, that we put an end to all the vestiges of slavery which may still exist in our social structure. This custom of begar is one such, and in my judgment this Bill has been brought not a day too soon.

My friend, Shri Satyanarayan Sinha moved an amendment seeking to circulate the Bill for eliciting public opinion thereon. I see no rhyme or reason for such a move with regard to the amendment that has been brought before the House by the Honourable Shri Sinha. The reasons that he advanced for the amendment are by no means convincing, and I have no hesitation in opposing the amendment that he has moved before the House.

What is Government's view in this matter? Does it or does it not accept the spirit and the letter of Article 17 of the Constitution which we have adopted already? I have read the Article to the House already and there is no doubt whatever that the spirit of the Bill is absolutely in conformity with and not at all at variance with Article 17 of the Constitution which we unanimously adopted at the last session of the Constituent Assembly. I see no reason whatever for circulating this Bill for eliciting public opinion thereon. The very reason which my friend, Mr. Sinha, adduces for circulation of the Bill is in my view a reason for not circulating it. He has said that Government is very sympathetic and that Government is very keen about it. We are very glad to hear that from the Honourable Minister of State. He has said that Government is not only keen but has appointed a Special Officer to investigate the whole problem. If that is so, then his report will be before us; and so what is the point, when we have adopted the Article, in further circulating it among the people of India? We, Sir, are functioning in the Constituent Assembly as representatives, as plenipotentiary representatives of the people of India. And did we not adopt the Article as representatives of the people of India? Why again go to the people of India and ask them for their opinion? If that is the case, then perhaps it cannot be gainsaid that every article that we have passed in the last session of the Constituent Assembly, and which we are going to adopt in the Assembly in future, will have to be brought before the people for a referendum or plebiscite. I cannot accept this proposition and I hope that this sovereign House not stultify itself by accepting this amendment moved by Mr. Sinha because that will be against the spirit of the Constitution which we are busy framing.

Therefore, Sir, I strongly oppose the amendment moved by my honourable friend, Shri Sinha and support the Bill wholeheartedly for the abolition of begar and all kinds of forced and compulsory labour that has been moved today by my friend, Shri Sidhva, and I think, Sir, that the House will see its way to accepting the reference by Shri Sidhva to a Select Committee for its report. After all, when the Constituent Assembly has adopted the article and the Select Committee of this House is going to consider the Bill, there is no reason, no purpose served in my judgment, by circulating this measure again for public opinion. Public opinion of the vast mass of this country, the poorest, the lowliest and the lowest, I am sure, will wholeheartedly welcome every provision of this Bill and if at all there will be any opposition to this measure it will come from the vested interests, the feudal landlords and zamindars who unfortunately, still stalk the land.

I therefore have great pleasure in welcoming Shri Sidhva's Bill and supporting it wholeheartedly and opposing the motion of my friend Shri Satyanarayan Sinha.

Shri A. V. Thakkar (Saurashtra): Sir, I rise to support the Bill introduced by my friend the honourable member Shri Sidhva. Section 374 of the Indian Penal Code exists for the last 89 years since it was enacted in 1860. I am sorry that that section has remained a dead letter, as mentioned by Shri Sidhva. There has been only one case of offence under that Act and I believe it will remain a dead letter until something very substantial is done to mend the state of things. Those who move in villages, those who go round in the country side can observe this for themselves. This begar will not be seen in cities and towns. It cannot be seen by the people moving in high societies: it will be seen by people who go round the villages and go round even the tahsil towns and see things for themselves as social workers. (Prof. N. G. Ranga: "In the hills and the jungles.") Yes, in the hills and the jungles as my friend the honourable member Prof. Ranga reminds me. In the hills and jungles I have observed it myself since the year 1920, since when I was working in the Bhil country in Gujarat. I know of a friend who had undertaken the opposition to this kind of begar by observing it himself and taking the load from the head of a Bhil and putting it on his own head in order to make an exhibition of it—a sort of small satyagraha. That was what he did in order to bring it to the notice of the public.

Another thing which I wish to say is that I do not understand why the Government should delay this matter as we have heard from the Honourable Minister Shri Satyanarayan Sinha, the Chief Whip. I would like the Honourable Shri Sinha to say who is this special officer who is going round the whole country in order to get evidence and give a report to the Government of India. I would like to be in touch with him. As a friendly measure I would like and see what he has been able to do and what evidence he has been able to collect.

Apart from that, there is one more important point. This begar is a relic of the past. As far as I can see, it has been brought in not by the British Government but by the previous Moghul rulers or at the time of the dark period through which the country passed after the fall of the Moghul Empire. It has been existing there for the last 200 or even 300 years. Therefore let us put an end to this custom as soon as we can. No time should be lost. We have lost, as I said, already 89 years after enacting that section 374. Let us not lose any more time. We are now independent. Let even the poorest and humblest people in the country feel independence.

[Shri A. V. Thakkar]

One last point before I sit down. Until the mass illiteracy of this country is removed this begar is not going to stop and I see no signs of this mass illiteracy being removed by the introduction of primary compulsory education. We are giving adult franchise to people without the benefits of primary education. How can that go on? Until the villager knows that he is entitled not to render any free service or even compulsory service, the poor fellow cannot understand this. Therefore the sooner we teach him how to read and write and to enforce his own right and see that he is not under any necessity to undertake any labour for anyone, even the highest in the land, until that time this begar will continue to a certain measure. At present almost universally it is there in villages, let me tell you that. At present the villager does not know that he need not do the forced labour and that he is entitled not to do it. Sir, with these words I support the motion moved by my friend, the honourable member Shri Sidhva.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar (Minister for Law): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I have no justification for intervening in this debate, because the subject matter of the Bill does not by the remotest stretch of imagination pertain to the department of which I am the head. But if my past experience as a Labour Member is sufficient to justify my intervention I am prepared to do so.

When I was the Labour Member I had taken up this matter of putting a stop to forced labour and, if I may say so, I spent practically about six months to study the different forms of forced labour that prevailed in this particular country. The subject appeared to me to be assuming so many different forms in different parts of India that I could not come to the conclusion that a simple measure applying generally to all parts of the country would solve this problem. Consequently when I was a Labour Member I had decided to appoint a small committee of four or five people to go round different parts of the country to examine the problem and to report on the different forms of forced labour which prevailed, so that having had the fullest knowledge of the various forms of forced labour it would be possible for Government to frame a measure which may be fool-proof and knave-proof. Unfortunately for me my proposal to appoint a committee to investigate into this question was negated at the highest quarters on the representation of interested parties. In fact I was accused that I was rushing too fast in the field of labour legislation. Consequently the whole of the proposals which I had put forth remained in abeyance. I now understand that my successor has appointed an officer to deal with that matter. Whether an officer is better than a committee is not a matter on which I propose to express any opinion but I should very strongly impress on the House the necessity of knowing the different forms of forced labour before the House undertakes any piece of legislation. (Babu Ramnarayan Singh: "Not necessarily.") It is on that ground that I support the motion of my friend the Honourable Shri Satyanarayan Sinha that the House should be in possession of the fullest information before any legislation is adumbrated.

The second thing that I should like to refer to is that the question of forced labour, as my friend Mr. Kamath just now said, is really now regulated not so much by the Penal Code but by the Constitution itself. But Mr. Kamath, I think, forgot to realize what are the incidental powers which go with the provision relating to forced labour embodied in the Constitution. I think he forgot to realize that the power to legislate with regard to forced labour will now pertain to the Central Parliament. It would not be in the concurrent field as such. Today if you want to legislate on forced labour it will be either for the Central Government or the Provincial Government.

The second difficulty would be that even if Parliament was to legislate with regard to forced labour under the entry 'labour welfare' contained in the Concurrent Legislative List, the power of administration of such law would vest in the Provinces. It has been my firm conviction that if a large number of welfare measures which have been passed by the Centre have come to nought it is because the Centre itself has had no power to administer the laws that they have made, and I am firmly convinced that even if you pass one hundred laws preventing forced labour, if the administration of these laws remained with the Provinces, persons who are victimized by forced labour would never be able to get the benefit of such laws. Fortunately for us we propose to provide in the New Constitution that whenever any law is made in the concurrent field it would be open for Parliament to reserve to itself the right to administer any particular law. I am quite satisfied within myself that if any legislation dealing with forced labour is to be effective so as to completely eradicate the evil, such a law would have to be administered by the Centre and not by the Provinces. As I submitted, these are matters which would come into operation only when the Constitution is passed and not before that. I therefore submit that having regard to the considerations that I have placed before the House the most appropriate motion for the House for the present time to pass is the motion of my friend Shri Sinha. It would give us the time we need for the Constitution to come into operation and the information we so badly want for the purpose of framing a proper legislation.

Shri H. V. Kamath: On a point of information only, will not the purpose, that my honourable friend Dr. Ambedkar has in view, of collecting information on this subject be adequately served by a two or three member sub-committee of the Select Committee either summoning witnesses or touring the country and getting the information themselves instead of leaving it to a third person?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: No. As I said it is much better if this legislation came after the Constitution was passed because we could then get the power to administer the law that we make.

Shri H. V. Kamath: Even then the report of the Select Committee can be awaited. Why should we leave it to public opinion? That is my point, especially when we have adopted the article in the Constitution. Such a course will do violence to the spirit of our constitution.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shri Mahavir Tyagi.

Honourable Members: It is one o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shri Mahavir Tyagi has been called. He will speak after Lunch.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock, Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

Shri Mahavir Tyagi rose—

Mr. Speaker: I see no Ministers on the Treasury Benches!

Shri Mahavir Tyagi (U.P.: General): Will it be proper for me to address the House without any Member present on the Treasury Benches, Sir?

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari (Madras: General): It is a non-official day!

Shri H. V. Kamath: But a motion has been made by the Honourable the Minister of State and certainly some Member must be present on the Treasury Benches.

Mr. Speaker: Somebody must be present. I am taking steps to see that somebody is present.

The Honourable Shri K. Santhanam entered—

Shri Mahavir Tyagi: Well, I welcome my Railway friend, Sir.

Sir, I am glad Shri Sidhva has brought before the House a question which is the unanimous demand of the whole country. It has been before the country for the last thirty years as far as I know—because I took to politics thirty years ago—and since then we have always been shouting and protesting against this custom of compulsory and forced labour. Shri Sidhva has brought a Bill which expresses practically the unanimous desire of the whole country. I do not exactly agree with what is said in it because it requires a lot of changes and needs consideration. But in the past there has been a custom that whenever non-official Bills were brought before the House they were not taken care of by the Treasury Benches or not taken due notice of, and they were looked upon and discussed carelessly and things were left as they were. Now, Sir, since the popular Government is in power I hope this non-official Bill will receive due consideration at the hands of the Treasury Benches.

In clause 5 of the Bill, Shri Sidhva says:

"The normal working hours of any person from whom forced or compulsory labour is exacted shall be the same as those prevailing in the case of voluntary labour and the hours worked in excess of the normal working hours shall be remunerated at the rates prevailing in the case of overtime for voluntary labour."

I want to point out this clause 5 just to say that it requires a change because after all, if we keep clauses like this it means that even after passing the Bill there may be a possibility of forced labour still going on and we will be recognising forced labour even after the Bill is passed. It is only a verbal change that is required which Shri Sidhva will be able to accommodate.

Then it is not the only question. As Shri Sidhva has said, the root of this forced labour was in the feudal form of society. In fact, as I see it, it goes far beyond. It has its origin in the old golden past, because in those days in the villages nobody was paid and everybody worked for the society. They were the golden days of the rural areas when agriculture was the main profession and everybody worked for agriculture. Those who were peasants used to reap the crops and those who were artisans got a share of the produce. The washermen got a percentage of the produce of every field and so did the weaver. They never got any compensation for the services they rendered to individuals; in fact, they were doing all the service free; the peasants were tilling the land free and the artisans were doing all the service free. Everybody had a fixed proportion in the crop produced in the village. It was then that people were working free and it was a sort of a corporate society which was everybody's lot and everybody's good fortune to work for. It was then that people got, instead of their wages, their shares.

Then came the feudal system in which the good points were lost sight of and then this voluntary labour became forced labour; and since then people are being forced to work against their liberties. I come from the village and I know how this forced labour is practised. It is not by force of weapon or by physical force that a man is put to forced labour or has to work against his will. It is in fact the circumstances there, the economic circumstances, that force a man to work free for another. In the villages practically half the population is such that it has no house of its own—no person in the village has a house. People who live in the cities cannot realise the conditions that obtain in the rural areas. In my side, in the rural areas—and in many other provinces—people, especially the artisans, the labour class and the scheduled classes, have houses in which they live. They have been living in houses for generations past but they have no ownership over those houses. They are there at the free will of the landlord. If they refuse to work for the landlord, they are ejected out of the house. In fact, a very big number of the citizens of India are without houses. Therefore, it is under the stress of that threat of ejection that those people have to render labour. They have no grazing lands of their own and they have no right to graze their cattle. The landlord says that because of his grace he allows these labour class people to graze their cattle and therefore in exchange of that privilege which is given them, they do forced labour whenever the Zamindar wants them to render forced labour.

This forced labour is prevalent only in the rural areas. In the cities I do not think there is anything as forced labour. This forced labour exists and a man does it not because he is punished or beaten; he does it because the economic conditions that obtain in the villages are such that a man has to put in forced labour. So, by law alone forced labour cannot be wiped out. You cannot do away with it by passing an Act only. In my side, in Jaunsar Bawar in the Dehra Dun area, in the hilly tracts, some hundred years ago a feudal lord had advanced some ten, twenty, fifty or one hundred rupees to a person for his marriage. Since then the family has always given one man to serve the feudal lord because though the loan was advanced long ago—centuries or generations ago—it still stands. There is no interest charged on such loans but a man of the family must serve the landlord because he had helped his forefathers in getting married, out of which marriage these people were the issues. They have to pay for their birth because they were born of a family which was indebted and therefore they have to render forced labour.

There was a Committee appointed to report on this—our honourable friend Thakkar Bapa knows it. In that area which I have already mentioned there are thousands of such people who go under this sort of slavery. They practically, from their birth had come over to the family of the landlord and they worked for the landlord. When we went there and enquired from them as to whether they were willing to leave, they said they had no other alternative but to stay because the landlord had fed them, he clothed them, and therefore they were his slaves. Slaves are naturally to be fed. In olden days even in Europe slaves were fed, and sometimes better fed than our countrymen are fed today. Those slaves are not willing to leave, and will we not call them as subjected to forced labour? It is forced labour, forced by circumstances of long ago in the past, and those people are labouring. They are practically slaves. This Bill alone, as it is, will not do. Some drastic action and executive action of the Government is necessary to wipe out this slur on India—the "forced labour". Because, if the man who is working as slave in Jaunsar Bawar leaves today, where will he go? There is no other land or profession for him. The State has not yet thought it fit to start cottage industries in the villages. It seems as if the State were being run for urban areas only, and as if rural areas in India did not exist. No attention has been paid to conditions of rural areas. Those persons have no home, have no house, no land on which to build a house, kutcha or pucca. Those who do not have an alternative means of living, can not resist forced labour. Under these circumstances, those people are naturally forced under stress of conditions to render forced labour. So, by law alone this forced labour cannot go. They must have some thing to fall back upon which they may call their own. I therefore submit that as Dr. Ambedkar has just now pointed out, this question requires a thorough enquiry. But an officer of the type which he mentioned cannot do the job. They say, an officer has been appointed to enquire. What does an officer know? He may be an England-returned officer. He generally knows only about the system of red-tape in Government. Those persons who have been in the villages, they are not recognised to be officers, because they are of no use to this Government. Only England-returned officers, highly graduated officers, are needed. (An Honourable Member: "Is that a disqualification?") Yes, it is. They are still sticking on to the old British ways when a man who came from England or had an Oxford accent would be taken as a superman. I speak wrong English. But, I think I am quite all right in spite of it. What do I care for this blessed accent or grammar? I must have knowledge and experience. Sir, I submit that these officers are of no use. They are for the use of the Secretariat all right, and that too from 11 to 5 O'clock. I submit they cannot have any idea of the villages. I therefore press, I hope our friend Shri Satyanarayana will see to it, that an officer alone is not enough, to depend upon his reports alone will not do. The situation is grave. It is really very serious in the country-side. An officer therefore will not do. I would suggest, and I hope Shri Sidhva might perhaps also agree, that if the Government appoints a committee to enquire into the situation in the country and that committee goes about and finds out what kinds of forced labour or forced service is taken from the people then alone you may be in a position to come out with a good Bill or enactment.

I understand and I confess that non-official Bills are mostly criticised on the basis that they are incomplete. We have no data. We have no statistics. It is those benches alone under whose orders statistics can come. Our business in bringing forward non-official Bills is mostly to point out the direction in which the trends of public thought and the demands of the public are. The real Bill which should take the shape of law should come from that side. I therefore submit if they appoint a committee and come out with a complete Bill the House will always co-operate with them.

One thing more, and that is, that in the case of official Bills we always, the non-officials, put ourselves on Committees; offer ourselves and work for them. We give the best co-operation to them. I hope the Government also in reciprocity lend their best co-operation in the matter of Bills that come from this side.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: General): Sir, I rise to support the Bill. I am against circulation. It is a common joke in the country that whenever a certain thing is not wanted it is relegated to a committee, and whenever a Bill is not wanted it is sent for circulation. It is to circulate. Perhaps it is to revolve round its own axis and then come to a dead stop. One of the Honourable Ministers, Dr. Ambedkar, said—not representing the Department concerned but in his individual capacity—that it is absolutely necessary for us to know the various kinds of forced labour that are current in the country. I submit any classification is absolutely unnecessary. Our object is absolutely to prohibit all kinds of forced labour, no matter what different kinds of forced labour are in vogue in the country. If we want to stop corruption, it has to be stopped altogether without classification. It would be unnecessary to send some officer to find out what are the different types of corruptions that prevail in the country. When the Penal Code was enacted, I believe, they did not send people to find out what were the different kinds of thefts that were then in fashion in the country—by pick-pocketing, by sneak theft, in fact thefts of different kinds. Theft is always theft and it must be stopped. Take the case of misappropriation or cheating. The point is you must stop it. It is not necessary to tabulate the different classes of these offences. The question is whether forced labour should be stopped. The common determination throughout the House as well as outside the House is that forced labour must be stopped. There is no point in asking for public opinion. Public opinion is fully represented in the House. There is no question that it should continue.

I submit that the Bill should be taken into consideration. Of course, as has been pointed out by Shri Tyagi, if non-official Bills are defective—that is perhaps so in some cases—it is for the draftsmen of the Government to look to them and supply the gaps. The great idea behind the Bill is that forced labour must stop, and unless Government wants to oppose it, there is no point in sending the Bill for circulation. I therefore support the original motion of Shri Sidhva.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri (Assam: General): Sir, I am told that when the King or any person in sovereign authority requests anybody to do anything that request is not to be treated as a request but it should be treated as a command. When an Honourable Minister who has to himself a Chief Whip of the majority party of this House wants a certain thing to be done it has to be done. There is no option. There are one or two persons in the House who want to support Shri Sidhva's motion. These honourable members will find that the pillar which they are supporting will collapse before their support comes in and there will be no necessity at all to support him. But it is not merely from a sense of compulsion that I am supporting the motion for circulation. I think there are certain kinds of labour which is unknown to many members of this House, and if this Bill of Mr. Sidhva is going to be accepted, then the first person or body of persons who will have to be prosecuted will be the Prime Minister of Assam and the Government of Assam because in Assam there is a sort of labour, which is recognised by rules themselves. There are forest villages, that is to say, villages declared to be forest reserve. If any one wants to live in the forest reserve, he is not allowed to live on mere payment of rent in cash. He has got to perform work for certain days in the year; he has got to do it; he has to carry out that labour when the Forest Department wants his work and sometimes they are also taken to construct latrines. They have got to do it; they may be respectable men or they may be Brahmins; still they have got to go and work there and to construct latrines. Of course, there is no harm in constructing latrines, which are not used. They are not asked to repair latrines; they are not paid anything, but they are allowed to live in the forest area. They cultivate the land for which they do not pay any rent to the Government, but they have to work for 12 days in the year. Wherever the Government wants them to go, they have to go and do this forced labour. Now I want to know whether this forced labour will come under the definition of labour here. (Prof. N. G. Ranga: "There is exemption.") There is a consideration, but that consideration the labourers themselves like and, if they are allowed to pay a rent instead of being asked to work, they would have been thankful. At the same time you might consider it as a sort of exchange, because they are working for 12 days as labourers and that would come to Rs. 24 or something but the rent itself would not come to more than Rs. 5 or at the most Rs. 6. Is that not forced labour? That is the question which has to be considered. On the one hand it will be difficult for those people to work and the Government will never allow or give permission to get the land on payment, because they would not get labour in that part of the country. I would like to know what definition would you give for this kind of labour. I suppose this system is not so much in vogue in any other part of India. This has got to be investigated and some specific recommendation has to be made. Mr. Sidhva with his vast knowledge of things in India was not acquainted with the state of affairs in Assam, and therefore, after having heard me, I hope he will agree with me that this Bill ought to be circulated.

[Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri]

Then, Sir, I wanted to say they have fixed the number of hours which usually some labourers perform in the towns. The factory labourers have certain hours in which they work but in the villages or in out-of-the-way places, this cannot apply. I have seen in villages that sometimes the clocks show 12 o'clock when it is actually about 3 o'clock. So this fixation of hours is not so much to be considered. I am speaking from my knowledge of the villages. The difficulty may be that the clock has not been working properly; there may be differences in the timings. That is why I say, Sir, that this Bill has to be considered thoroughly.

We have waited long enough and it will not matter if we wait till September 1949. We have now, at least seen the beginning of things. The Committee which my honourable friend, Dr. Ambedkar set up ended in nothing, because he did not follow it up. Now I suppose September is quite near and September will be time enough if the Bill is to be circulated.

The Honourable Shri Satyanarayan Sinha: I have agreed to the 30th of June.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: We may have a session in September and we may pass this Bill and in the meantime, we must have patience.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): I rise to speak a few words in support of the motion for circulation of the Bill. I entirely agree with what all has been said. It is an unfortunate recrudescence of the past, the Britisher who was here never wanted to raise the economic level of the masses and they have left us in a much worse condition. Therefore, every word and the earnestness and the enthusiasm with which this matter has been pressed before the Assembly does ample justice to the members' interests in the masses at large. Now, we heard from the Honourable Dr. Ambedkar that when he was the Labour Member here, he appointed a committee to thoroughly go into this matter, but unfortunately.....

Shri R. K. Sidhva: He only said that he wanted to do so.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: I am sorry for the error. He only wished to. It was during the previous Government and unfortunately after this Government came in, he changed his portfolio; his successor did not also take the necessary steps in the manner we would like. We shall have a committee appointed with experts non-officials where the officials will only be the Secretary, whose job will be to gather evidence. If that is the view, we can certainly get the help of independent workers like Thakkar Bapa who has worked all his life and for that matter other interested persons in various provinces who have been taking a keen interest in this matter. If this reform had not been already placed in the statute book, it is not for want of enthusiasm of Dr. Ambedkar, but it is exactly because the previous regime was not keen about it. Now it is only a year since we came into office. Honourable members know how much trouble there has been all along and as soon as the Government was taken by our people, we have passed the fundamental rights. The Fundamental Rights Committee was appointed long ago and one of the important article says that forced labour in any form or shape is prohibited and there is penalty under another clause. Thus nothing has been wanting so far as we are concerned. The time has been too short. Even in the previous regime such friends as Dr. Ambedkar and others have been pressing, but the problem is a very serious one. Free labour means labour without profit. The labourer must be paid in cash. Now I will not talk of the absurd limits, but the solution may not be the same thing for all kinds of free labour. Free labour may have to be allowed in particular cases. In Section 374 the Indian Penal Code refers to unlawful free labour. (Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: "Labour of love") Labour of love or affection? Therefore, Sir, if this Bill straightaway goes to the Select Committee, it would frustrate the very purpose we have in view and therefore we may have to wait some more time, say till the 30th of June. In the meantime there is nothing lost. But there is one regret that this official may not carry the confidence that the experts and members from various parts of this House may have. Therefore, I suggest that there must be a committee of non-officials with some person like Thakkar Bapa to be the Chairman with an official who has made some survey as Secretary to go round from place to place and collect the experiences and talk to individuals and place it before the House and I am sure that will be really useful and effective. This motion for Select Committee need not be pressed. I would urge upon the Mover himself to accept reference to circulation. After all, it is not a long period and it will come back to us before the 30th of June.

Shri H. V. Kamath: Will my honourable friend accept the appointment of a non-official committee consisting of some members of the Select Committee?

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: I am only making a suggestion and I am as much a member as the honourable member.

The Honourable Shri Satyanarayan Sinha: Mr. Speaker, Sir, I have nothing more to add to what I have said while moving the amendment, but I can assure again this House that there is no intention on the part of the Government to shelve this Bill as remarked by one honourable member. I have accepted the amendment of Shri Sidhva to my amendment that the date should be reduced to the 30th of June. As regards the appointment of a Committee, I think the Government will consider it—and this is all that I can say now and most likely a committee will be appointed. What will be the composition of the Committee. I cannot tell you here, but certainly the non-officials will be associated with that Committee. I will again appeal to the Mover, he has already accepted my motion, but there are other friends who are more loyal than the King and I think they should not stand in the way of the Mover accepting the amendment which I have moved.

Shrimati Dakshayani Velayudhan (Madras: General): On a point of information, Sir, at the recent Conference of Labour Ministers in Delhi, I think they passed a resolution saying that a Committee will be constituted to investigate into agricultural labour and that the Committee is expected to submit its report within one year. We were also told that an officer is appointed on special duty to study the labour problem. I would like to know whether this special officer will leave out agricultural labour, what the Committee will be doing, what the Government is proposing to do and whether they are going to appoint a separate committee altogether to investigate into the various kinds of labour in this country.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: If it is open to any other member to answer, I can only say that this morning I received a questionnaire from the Labour Department, on the question of wages of agricultural labour, their conditions of service, etc., and whether they ought to be improved or modified in this country.

Mr. Speaker: That will be a different proposition. All that the honourable member is naturally entitled to know is whether that Committee is going to look into the question of free, or forced or compulsory labour. That is the point of enquiry.

I think the matter has been sufficiently debated. I shall put the amendment to the House.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: Have I a right of reply?

Mr. Speaker: No.

The question is:

That the Bill be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion thereon by the 30th June, 1949."

The motion was adopted.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava (East Punjab: General): Sir, I move:

"That the Bill to clarify and modify the law in practice hitherto followed in Criminal applications for special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council for Criminal cases decided by the Indian Courts, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar, Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, Shrimati G. Durgabai, Dr. Bakshi Tek Chand, Shri C. Subramaniam, Pandit Mukut Bihari Lal Bhargava, Shri L. Krishna-swami Bharathi, Shri Upendranath Barman, Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad, Shri Brajeshwar Prasad, Mr. Frank Anthony and the Mover, with instructions to report by the 1st of March, 1949, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

Today, we were informed by the Honourable the Law Member that there are 187 appeals pending before the Privy Council. They include civil appeals, probably criminal appeals and perhaps applications also. Under the present circumstances persons who are given death sentences by the High Court, or whose sentences have been confirmed by the High Court in regard to transportation for life or death having got no other venue of appeal or making applications rush to the Privy Council.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar (Minister for Law): For appeal?

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: For appeals as well as for making applications for leave to appeal. This is a sort of revisional jurisdiction as well as appellate jurisdiction. Appeals also are heard. In some cases, the Privy Council does not grant leave; in other cases, leave is granted on a question of law. It is not a clear and defined jurisdiction. I have known very hard cases in which leave has not been granted. In the Martial Law days of 1919, Kalinath Roy and others sentenced to transportation for life and death, preferred applications. Though ultimately the sentences were withdrawn by the Government in respect of some persons, the Privy Council did not interfere. I know of other cases in which some points of law have been clarified by the Privy Council, especially in regard to confessions etc., and they have laid down the law.

As a matter of fact, today, every Indian feels that it is quite unnatural to have a court six thousand miles away from India for deciding and giving final decisions in regard to criminal cases. Moreover, Sir, it is galling to our self-respect that even now, when all connection with Great Britain is broken off, we are still under the Privy Council in regard to judicial matters. Apart from that, the economic drain on the country is also not insignificant. Every person who has to make an application or to go for an appeal, has to at least spend Rs. 5,000. He has to deposit a large sum with the High Court before the death sentence is stayed and a convict is allowed to make an application for leave to appeal. Then, again, there is no dearth of Judges here in India. India can very well provide Judges who can dispose of these appeals and applications. Moreover, Sir, as far as I am aware, and as far as I have been able to see the judgments, I must say that they proceed more or less on such lines as can be called legalistic and technical and substantially, they do not give us good justice according to our notions and according to our ideas. So that, taken from whatever standpoint, the average man in India does not like that this Privy Council should exercise this sort of jurisdiction. What we want today is that our Federal Court should be given this jurisdiction.

At present, after a death sentence has been awarded or confirmed, there is no right of appeal whereas a convict for the ordinary crimes has got two appeals. He can go to the Sessions Court and the High Court. A person convicted by the Sessions Judge and sentenced to death has got one appeal to the High Court and if the High Court confirms the sentence or sentences a man to transportation for life in revision, that person has got no right of appeal. Similarly in regard to acquittals also, if in an appeal by the Government under section 417, Criminal Procedure Code, the High Court acquits a person, then the other Party has got no right of appeal. Therefore, my submission is that it is high time that we invested the Federal Court with all this jurisdiction. At present, what it is proposed to do is that the jurisdiction at present exercised by the Privy Council be conferred on the Federal Court. If this is done, we shall get speedy justice in an Indian manner by Indian Judges, without great cost.

It may be asked whether it is competent for this legislature to confer this jurisdiction. In regard to this perhaps the matter may not be quite free from difficulty. I say this because I know that there is a certain amount of influential and adverse opinion which I respect very much and therefore, I say it may not be free from difficulty. But, so far as I am concerned, I am convinced that this legislature has got full powers in the matter and can certainly take away that jurisdiction and confer the same on the Federal Court. According to section 6 of the Indian Independence Act, this Dominion legislature has got absolutely full powers, almost sovereign powers and it can do anything it likes. According to section 8(1), the jurisdiction to make a constitution for India lies with the Constituent Assembly. In regard to other laws, and other jurisdictions, I understand that this Dominion legislature has got a perfect right to make any law. In regard to the Government of India Act, I must say that the Government of India Act does not deal with this jurisdiction at all. If you kindly look at the provisions of the Government of India Act, section 206 speaks of civil jurisdiction; it does not speak of criminal jurisdiction at all. It is not under the Government of India Act that the Privy Council exercises this criminal jurisdiction; it is under an Order in Council which has nothing to do with the Government of India Act. Section 8(2), of the Independence Act which speaks of India being governed by the Government of India Act, 1935, as adapted, only relates to matters which come within the purview of the Government of India Act. Otherwise, this legislature has the inherent right to confer any jurisdiction. If you kindly see section 8(2) (b) of the Indian Independence Act, it says like this:

"Provided that

(b) nothing in this sub-section shall be construed as continuing in force on or after the appointed day any form of control by His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom over the affairs of the new Dominions or of any province or other part thereof."

It appears, Sir, that the Government of Great Britain was anxious to wash its hands off and there is no reason why we should cling to the Privy Council when the intentions of this Government and the British Government are quite clear. I feel that India remains judicially a slave to another country if we maintain this jurisdiction.

I therefore submit with all the emphasis at my command that we should refer this Bill to the Select Committee so that it may be passed as soon as possible. If this matter is deferred and is not passed in this session, it may happen that many people will go to the Privy Council and they may have to spend lakhs of rupees which money can be better utilized in this country. May I therefore humbly ask, if the matter goes to the Federal Court, who would object to it. So my submission is from all these standpoints we will be well advised in referring this matter to a Select Committee. I therefore submit to this House that it may be pleased to refer this to the Select Committee.

Mr. Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the Bill to clarify and modify the law in practice hitherto followed in Criminal applications for special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council for Criminal cases decided by the Indian Courts, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar, Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, Shrimati G. Durgabai, Dr. Bakhshi Tek Chand, Shri C. Subramaniam, Pandit Mukut Bihari Lal Bhargava, Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi, Shri Upendranath Barman, Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad, Shri Brajeshwar Prasad, Mr. Frank Anthony, and the Mover, with instructions to report by the 1st of March, 1949, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

Shrimati G. Durgabai (Madras: General): Mr. Speaker, I have very great pleasure in lending my whole hearted support to the Bill brought by my friend Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava. Sir, not only myself but as far as I know there is a large section of the public which is in favour of this Bill to invest the Federal Court with the power of criminal jurisdiction also in some form or other at an early date. Sir, the object of this Bill as already stated by the Mover of the Bill is to make the Federal Court self-sufficient to the extent the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council had been in regard to criminal matters which Their Lordships have admitted from the Official Judgments and Orders of the High Courts in India.

Sir, this Parliament some time ago passed an Act, viz., Federal Court Enlargement of Jurisdiction Act. By virtue of section 206 of the Government of India Act this Dominion Legislature has passed that Act. Sir, the House is aware that that Act is very much limited in its scope and limited only to the civil matters. The Act that is passed, only related to civil matters and the criminal matters are kept entirely out of its purview. Therefore the object of this Bill is to empower the Federal Court with the jurisdiction of the Court of Criminal appeals in England and this Bill removes that kind of lacunae which we found in the Federal Court Enlargement of Jurisdiction Act. The Mover of the Bill wants by this to confer jurisdiction upon the Federal Court to entertain applications for special leave to appeal to that Court in criminal matters and a power which the Federal Court does not possess today and this would be in keeping with the status of our Free India. Otherwise I ask where is the independence of judiciary?

It would also enable us to take the criminal matters to this Court and it would check the further flow of criminal matters going to the Privy Council which as the Mover of the Bill has already stated, involve enormous expenditure, delay and inconvenience to the parties. I am told today there are nearly 187 or more appeals pending in the Privy Council. I am sure and my information is that about 25 to 30 per cent. of the appeals are criminal matters. Therefore it is necessary that we should take immediate steps to see that our Federal Court is invested with the power of entertaining applications in criminal matters. The position today is that in criminal matters the special leave is granted by the King in the exercise of his Prerogative Right and of course the position is a bit relaxed when an amendment to section 411 of the Cr. P.C. was made in the year 1913 when the matter arose in Thiagaraja Bhaghavathar's case. It says:

"Subject to such rules as may from time to time be made by His Majesty in Council in this behalf, and to such conditions as the High Court may establish or require, an appeal shall lie to His Majesty in Council from any order made on appeal under sub-section (1) by a Division Court of the High Court in respect of which order the High Court declares that the matter is a fit one for such appeal."

So the appeal could straight go to the Privy Council and there the Prerogative Right of the King is not required and directly with the certificate of the Division Court the appeal could be taken. But now if we invest the Federal Court with this power by this Bill it would enable us to take the criminal appeal to the Federal Court and that should be done immediately.

I know what may be said on the other side by Dr. Ambedkar that this Federal Court is the creature of the Government of India Act and there is section 206. This Parliament is not competent to take up this legislation and also whatever powers are to be exercised by the Federal Court, they must be exercised within the limits of the Statutory Provisions of the Government of India Act and it would be ultra vires otherwise. But my friend has already answered all those points. Therefore I do not want to take the time of the House in answering them. They might also say, wait, till the Constitution is passed and then automatically it will enable us to take up these matters but we do not know when this Constitution is going to be passed. It may be some years or it may be one year or some months but we need not wait because already sufficient number of appeals are pending and many more are going. Therefore it is high time that we should take this matter up without waiting for the constitution to be passed and enable ourselves in this matter. Amendment to section 206 can be taken. As it is 206 runs thus:

"The Dominion Legislature may by Act provide that in such civil cases as may be specified in the Act an appeal shall lie to the Federal Court from a judgment, decree or final order of a High Court without any such certificate as aforesaid."

In the amending Bill which we may consider we might delete the word "civil" or add the words "criminal also" in which case it would apply to all civil and criminal cases. So by taking some kind of immediate steps the spirit of this Bill which Mr. Bhargava has brought could be given effect to.

I am told there are certain things going on and there is a move that a Commonwealth Judicial Committee is going to be set up and some people have come to visit India. It is said that a wing of the Commonwealth Judicial Committee will sit in India which may involve a great expenditure. We do not know what kind of proposal they would make and what kind of arrangement we may be obliged to accept. Therefore without waiting for anything I think we can easily adopt without any difficulty the spirit of the Bill which Mr. Bhargava has brought and I appeal to Dr. Ambedkar to see that some immediate remedy is provided and the Federal Court is invested with the jurisdiction in criminal matters also.

Shri C. Subramaniam (Madras: General): I am in full sympathy with the objects of the Bill but I am afraid there is a certain lacuna in the Bill. The Privy Council as far as it acts as a Court of Appeal it might be alright for us to invest the Federal Court with those powers but the Privy Council apart from being a Court of Appeal, acts also as the King's Representative in the exercise of the Sovereign's Prerogative Rights. We are still a Dominion and the King of England is also the King of India. As a Sovereign he has got those Prerogative Rights and the Privy Council in certain matters acts as the representative of the King in the exercise of those Prerogative Rights. In criminal appeals, it is not as if the Privy Council is acting as a Court of Appeal. In exercise of the Sovereign's Right of Prerogative, the Privy Council used to interfere, not in all cases but only in cases where there was a gross miscarriage of justice. It is not even in cases where there is a mistake on a point of law that the Privy Council interferes; but it is only in cases where there was a gross miscarriage of justice that the Privy Council interfered with decisions of the High Courts in India in criminal cases. The section in the Bill reads that "it is hereby declared that all applications of the kind and character made to His Majesty's Judicial Committee of the Privy Council shall hereafter be made to and heard by the Federal Court" certainly the Federal Court cannot be invested by this Assembly with the powers which the Privy Council exercises as the King's representative. So it might be all right that we invest the Federal Court with certain appellate powers or powers of revision in criminal cases. But I do not see how we can invest the Federal Court with all the powers that the Privy Council now exercises. So there is a lacuna which could be, if necessary, rectified in the Select Committee. At this stage I wanted to point out that, we cannot invest the Federal Court with all the powers that the Privy Council now exercises, and that is the point that I wish to make.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: There is no difference of opinion between myself and the honourable the mover of the Bill that the jurisdiction of the Privy Council should be done away with. In fact, we have as early as possible taken the opportunity of passing an Act of this House by which the jurisdiction of the Federal Court has been considerably enlarged in the matter of civil appeal. But with all the sympathy that I have with the mover of this Bill, I am afraid he has not taken sufficient trouble to consider the difficulties that lie in the way of carrying out his aims and objects.

First of all, in order to carry out the purposes we have set out in the Bill, it would be necessary to pass an Act to amend the present Government of India Act which forms the Constitution of this country. Under the Government of India Act, which I said forms the Constitution of this country and under which this Legislature must work within its ambit, we have no power to invest the Federal Court with criminal jurisdiction. That matter will have to be dealt with in another Assembly sitting as a Constituent Assembly. The first thing that we have to do is to get the Government of India Act amended so as to enlarge the power of this House to confer criminal jurisdiction upon the Federal Court, which this House under the existing law does not possess. After having done that, we have to consider what criminal jurisdiction shall be conferred upon the Federal Court: whether the Federal Court will act as a Court of appeal in criminal matters, hearing cases from the various High Courts: whether instead of conferring appellate powers on the Federal Court we shall confer merely revisional jurisdiction upon the High Court: or lastly, whether we shall confer the same powers upon the Federal Court which are at present possessed by the Privy Council, namely, appeal by special leave. All these matters have to be considered very carefully before any such Bill is taken in hand.

The second thing which my friend does not seem to have considered is this. We have on the anvil the draft Constitution, sections 110 to 113 or 114—I forget for the moment—deal completely and exhaustively with this matter relating to the appellate jurisdiction of the Federal Court. One thing any one can see by reading those sections is that the powers of the Privy Council have been completely eliminated. Now, although my honourable colleague, Mrs. Durgabai stated that she did not see any prospect of the Constitution being passed at an early date, I venture to hope that when the Constituent Assembly meets on the 16th May next, it will try its level best to carry through the Constitution at any rate before the 15th August, 1949. If that happens, I do not understand why we should hurry with this particular measure. As I said, with all the difficulties with which it is presented, and which difficulties will have to be overcome if this Bill is to be carried through, I want to know whether my friend, Mr. Thakur Das Bhargava, cannot exercise a little patience so as to wait for two or three months when the whole matter will be set right by the law of the Constitution. If however members of the House think that this is a matter which must be taken in hand at once, I have no particular objection to his motion for referring the matter to Select Committee, although I must make it quite clear that I cannot help in not being able to hasten the work of the Select Committee in view of the fact that my hands are completely tied up by other work both in this House and outside. If on that footing he is prepared to put the motion to the House and insist that the Committee be appointed, I shall raise no objection.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): I would like to know what is the provision in the Government of India Act which prohibits the jurisdiction of this House. The point before the House now is whether the acceptance of the Bill involves the amendment of the Government of India Act.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: My friend seems to forget the fact that when positive powers are conferred, you cannot say that powers which are not referred to are also conferred. If nothing had been said in the Government of India Act, it would be open to argument that this Legislature would be able to confer any power upon the Federal Court: but when the law has gone to the length of conferring certain specific powers, the inference is that other powers are not conferred.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: May I speak on this point of law?

Mr. Speaker: That is not germane to the issue now. He has only made it, a point in his speech, with regard to the difficulties in the way. But that is not the ultimate point for discussion here.

Shri R. K. Sidhva (C. P. and Berar: General): Has he consulted the Advocate General and found out that his views are identical to his own?

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar: It is quite unnecessary to consult the Advocate General.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: This point of law is one of the reasons which may stand in the way.

Mr. Speaker: We cannot have a fresh discussion making that point a principal point. That is one of the points which has given the Honourable Minister grounds to oppose.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: But no provision has been referred to.

Mr. Speaker: That is again arguing the point!

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: Sir, with your permission, I would like to make a reply. In the first place I do not accept for a moment as a matter of argument that any positive powers if they are not conferred then by implication the legislature is debarred from exercising its jurisdiction in respect of conferring those powers, because if you would kindly see section 8(3) of the Indian Independence Act.....

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member is again going into the same argument.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: Barring that, if this is conceded, the only question is whether it will be useful to have such a measure at this stage and that is the only question to which I shall address myself now.

In the first place, this measure was originally introduced by Sir Hari Singh Gour and with your permission I have introduced the Bill. I think I should be allowed to go on with this measure and I do not want to take the responsibility of withdrawing this measure.

Secondly, I know that the people of the Indian Dominion are at the moment anxious to do away with the Jurisdiction of the Privy Council much more than perhaps the Ministers themselves. We had the law passed here for the enlargement of the jurisdiction of the Federal Court in 1947. I even then gave notice of an amendment that Ajmer-Merwara should be included but so far as Ajmer-Merwara is concerned it is not included so far. So even now appeals go to the Privy Council. We are very anxious and we want to have the jurisdiction of the Privy Council taken away as soon as possible and I do not want to brook even a moment's delay. I know the adage "make friends with the allegator if you have to live in the pond." I would, therefore earnestly beseech Dr. Ambedkar not to obstruct the passage of this Bill, and to enable us on the coming date for Bills in April to put it through. Unless this jurisdiction is taken away, lakhs of rupees will have gone to Great Britain on account of these appeals which are sure to be made. I further want that 187 appeals now pending should also be transferred to India.

My friend should know that I sent many amendments to the sections of the Constitution Act relating to the Jurisdiction of the Federal Court in which I had sought to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Federal Court. Those things are not germane now. I want the jurisdiction which is exercised by the Privy Council to be made over to the Federal Court today. What the constitution of the Federal Court would be is a matter which we shall discuss at the proper time. In between this period those powers which are exercised by the Privy Council can very well be transferred to the Federal Court, if we accept the motion and pass the Bill.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill to clarify and modify the law in practice hitherto followed in Criminal applications for special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council for criminal cases decided by the Indian Courts, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar, Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, Shrimati G. Durgabai, Dr. Bakshi Tek Chand, Shri C. Subramaniam, Pandit Mukut Bihari Lal Bhargava, Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi, Shri Upendranath Barman, Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad, Shri Brajeshwar Prasad, Mr. Frank Anthony and the Mover, with instructions to report by the 1st of March, 1949, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

The motion was adopted

CRIMINAL TRIBES (REPEAL) BILL

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill to repeal the Criminal Tribes Act, 1924, be taken into consideration."

Sir, this Act has been repealed so far as the Province of Madras is concerned and with respect to the other provinces they are not of the same view. At any rate it is a blot on our statute book and I do not want any tribes to be called Criminal Tribes. No doubt originally the intention was that there should be settlements where they will be reclaimed within a particular period. It is also true that provincial governments have been establishing some settlements but they have not gone to the full length and by the manner in which the settlements are working today it may take a century before the criminal tribes can become civil tribes. I do not want them to continue perpetually like this. I therefore thought that this Act ought to be repealed and introduced the Bill subject to what the Deputy Prime Minister might say in this regard. I understand that he would like to have this matter thoroughly examined by a committee. However, I will await what he says before I proceed further.

Mr. Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the Bill to repeal the Criminal Tribes Act, 1924, be taken into consideration."

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel (Minister for Home Affairs and the States): Sir, Government propose to appoint a committee to inquire into the working of the Criminal Tribes Act in the Provinces. It is true that we had made enquiries about this from all the provinces and some of the provinces are strongly opposed to the repeal of the Act altogether. The province of Madras has already repealed it but a sudden break altogether from the present position in several provinces, where the problem is more or less chronic is thought to be undesirable. Yet, in view of the desire from several quarters that it is inconsistent with the dignity of free India to have such a measure on the statute book classifying a particular class of people as criminal tribes, we propose to appoint a committee to inquire into the working of this Act in the provinces where the problem is acute and to see how far it can be modified or whether the time is ripe for the repeal of it altogether. Therefore we have agreed to appoint a committee which will investigate this matter.

the Honourable Minister I do not want to proceed with the Bill further at the Honourable Minister I do not want to proceed with the Bill further at this stage.

Mr. Speaker: So the motion will stand over.

INDIAN BAR COUNCILS AND THE LEGAL PRACTITIONERS (AMENDMENT) BILL

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): Sir, before I formally move my motion I might say that I had a talk with the Honourable the Law Minister and I ascertained from him that he is trying to institute a committee of certain judges to go into the whole matter of revising the Bar Councils Act as also the Civil Courts Act. If he makes that clear I will not pursue the matter.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar (Minister for Law): I have said so last time.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: So I do not want to move the motion now

[At this stage Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair, which was then occupied by Mr. Deputy Speaker (Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar)].

MOTOR VEHICLES (AMENDMENT) BILL

Shri R. K. Sidhva (C. P. and Berar: General): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill further to amend the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, be taken into consideration."

Sir, before 1939 every province had a separate Motor Vehicles Act and the result was that from province to province the provisions of the Act differed immensely; so that it affected not only the vehicle owners but the passengers and the consignees of goods through those motor vehicles. So there was a great deal of agitation. Take for instance licensing and registration. One province made one rule and another province made another rule. Similarly in regard to the control of transport and also regional transport authorities.

[Shri R. K. Sidhva.]

Every province had separate rules with the result that they did not conduce to the smooth working of the motor vehicles on the roads. From that point of view in 1939 the Government of India enacted a comprehensive Motor Vehicles Act and that is the Act which is now in existence.

My Bill does not seek to do anything except to amend the clause relating to the speed at which these motor vehicles ply on public roads and that has a bearing on the accidents that occur on the public roads both in cities and elsewhere. Frequent complaints have been made that these accidents by motor vehicles be checked and reduced. Notwithstanding the vigilance of the police authorities and the fixing of sign boards that in particular roads the speed limit will be 20 or 25 miles per hour, the drivers take no cognisance of them with the result they drive fast and there have been a number of instances where without the slightest fault on the part of the pedestrian accidents have been caused and people have been killed.

As you know, Sir, footpaths are meant for pedestrians to walk. But I can cite a number of illustrations where the pedestrians were walking on the footpaths and motor vehicles have gone over on the footpaths and killed them. In Delhi City itself only a few months ago a poor pedestrian was standing on the brink of the footpath and a motor vehicle knocked him down and killed him. It happened similarly in Calcutta five months ago. I am giving you specific instances within my own knowledge. There will be many many others. A pedestrian was standing in Chowringhee on the footpath and a military truck came and killed him with the result that his widow and children are without any maintenance. At the prime of their life persons are being killed without any consideration by the drivers, neglecting their duty as to what their speed should be on the roads. The police are not able to check and control each vehicle. Very rarely, once in a hundred times, if a motor vehicle runs rapidly they note down the number and call the driver to the police station, or at the most he is prosecuted and fined with a paltry sum.

I have given thought over this matter and after going through the literature in other countries I have thought that after Section 27 of the Motor Vehicles Act there should be an additional section 27A. Section 27 reads thus:

"The registering authority may refuse to register any motor vehicle if the vehicle is mechanically defective or fails to comply with the requirements of Chapter V or of the rules made thereunder, or if the applicant fails to furnish particulars of any previous registration of the vehicle, and it shall furnish the applicant whose vehicle is refused registration with the reasons in writing for such refusal."

That Section will stand. I consider this as the appropriate place for adding the new section 27A which will read:

"27A. Governors to be fixed on Carburetter.—(1) No motor vehicle, carrying capacity of which is half a ton or in excess thereof used for carrying loads or passengers, shall be registered, unless its carburetter has governors fixed thereon.

(2) Such governors shall be sealed by such a Police Officer as the Superintendent of Police of the District may appoint in this behalf and shall be open to inspection by a Police Officer, not below the rank of a Sub-Inspector, in the area in which it plies."

What the carburetter is those who own and have seen cars know. It provides petrol for igniting purposes. Carburetter is the place through which speed is increased. If the driver puts his foot on to the accelerator the speed increases and upto sixty miles the car goes if it is in a position to have that speed. And nobody could check it. Therefore there is a governor fitted. Governor is a kind of an instrument which is provided in some countries. I have read it is provided in Italy and in some parts of France.

The governor is fitted and sealed with the carburetter in such a manner that howsoever the driver should press the accelerator with his foot the car cannot go beyond the speed fixed in the governor by the police authorities. That is the sum and substance of this amendment which is the only solution. If a better solution is offered by the Government I shall gladly accept it. I have considered this matter over and I thought that for ensuring the safety of the passengers travelling and the pedestrians the only course is that compulsory governors should be fixed to the carburetters.

I have also tried to add a clause 114A which is a penal clause for infringement of the earlier clause. In this clause I say that "whoever drives or causes to be driven a motor vehicle in contravention of section 27A (which I have just now read) shall be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months and shall also be liable to fine not exceeding one thousand rupees." I do not think the House will say that the penalty which I seek to impose is serious having regard to the fact that the life of a person is concerned. Six months is nothing. If we have some consideration for the life of a human being, whosoever he or she may be, it is our duty to enact a law whereby in whatever way our intelligence could be applied we should see that these kinds of things are stopped. If human agency and police action cannot prevent these things then we have to invent some mechanical method for this purpose. This is the mechanical method which exists. These governors have been produced for this purpose.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar (Minister for Law): How many governors are there now?

Shri R. K. Sidhva: None. If it exists in any part of India my purpose would be easy. It would be so easy that honourable members could have seen for themselves how far it is successful. I am seeking to introduce this method.

Sir, my Bill is a very simple one and I hope the Honourable Minister will kindly see to it that it is accepted. I do not think any further comment is necessary on this matter. It speaks for itself. I only wish to say that if we have consideration for human beings we should accept this Bill or else find out any other remedy if the Honourable Minister feels in that way.

Shri Mahavir Tyagi (U. P.: General): What is the speed you would prescribe?

Shri R. K. Sidhva: Any speed that the police officer considers proper. If the vehicle is going in, say, Connaught Circus it may be fifteen miles or so. The driver cannot go beyond that speed when once it is regulated at fifteen. (Interruption) Let me tell my honourable friends that there are licences issued for particular areas. If the car has to run in the City of Delhi, between New Delhi and Old Delhi, the police officer will regulate it accordingly. On the other hand if the car has to run far off in the suburban area the police will increase the speed limit consistent with the traffic in that area. Honourable friends have not seen these governors. They must apply their mind and ask themselves who has invented these governors, what has been the result of the invention of governors. Let them apply their mind and think over this. The governor is an instrument which has been manufactured for this purpose. If they do that then the difficulty will be over. Unfortunately nobody has seen these governors and therefore the difficulty arises as to how it would be regulated. Leave it to the police authorities. Sir, with these words I move the motion and I hope the Honourable Minister will be good enough to accept it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the Bill further to amend the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, be taken into consideration."

The Honourable Shri N. Gopalaswami Ayyangar (Minister for Railways and Transport): Sir, I am in full sympathy with the objects which the honourable the mover has in view. But my trouble is in the first place that we cannot, as we do in the political or constitutional field, have merely ornamental Governors who do not exercise powers or who are not sufficiently effective. If we are going to have governors fitted on to carburettors in a motor engine those governors have to be perfectly effective. They are to do their duty. Unfortunately all the expert advice that we have had up to now is that the governors now available are such that you cannot depend upon them. Not only that. We have not got sufficient governors available in this country. We have no doubt nine of them in different Provinces, but I am afraid if we have to fit governors on to carburettors we shall probably require nine lakhs of them. I am afraid that so far as my information goes these governors are not available in the market. Let me read to you the opinion of a Technical Committee which reported.....

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): One Governor-General for all the motor vehicles in India?

The Honourable Shri N. Gopalaswami Ayyangar: Unfortunately even a Governor-General is becoming more and more ornamental. I shall read to you the opinion expressed by the Technical Committee of the Transport Advisory Council which reviewed the question only in 1947. It said:

"We feel strongly that the use of speed-governors should not be made compulsory. They are easily tampered with unless sealed, in which case an element of corruption is introduced. They frequently go out of order and there is an unfortunate tendency to govern vehicles at speeds at which the maximum output is not developed in top gear. We were interested to learn from Whitfield, Provincial Transport Controller, Bombay, that the compulsory fitting of speed governors in the Bombay Province, suspended during the war, is unlikely to be re-introduced."

Let me say that in the Bombay Province there is a rule which enables the Provincial Government to notify a provision of the kind that my honourable friend has in view—they did issue a rule to that effect—but since 1942 when that rule was issued they have been postponing the bringing into force of that rule because of lack of governors and, at that, lack of reliable governors.

I wish also to point this out. I do not think the country is going to suffer, not even the pedestrian on the roads, by the fact that an amendment of this kind is not introduced into the Indian Motor Vehicles Act. As the honourable mover has pointed out, Section 27 does say that the Registering Authority may refuse to register any motor vehicle if the vehicle fails to comply with the requirements of Chapter V or of the rules made thereunder. And if you look at the rule-making section 70 of the Indian Motor Vehicles Act, sub-section (2), clause (g) of that section permits a Provincial Government to make rules as regards speed governors.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: That rule is an all-India rule?

The Honourable Shri N. Gopalaswami Ayyangar: I will explain the position to you. The Government of India have issued model rules for adoption by Provincial Governments and one of the rules that they have suggested, which Provincial Governments might adopt, is in the following terms:

"Model rule 176. With effect from.....every transport vehicle other than a motor cab and a delivery van shall be fitted with a speed governor of one of the makes specified in the Eighth Schedule of these rules, in such a manner that the speed governor can be sealed with an official seal in such a way that it cannot be removed or tampered with without the seal being broken."

The speed governor of every transport vehicle as aforesaid shall be so set that the vehicle is incapable of being driven at a speed in excess of the maximum lawful speed of the vehicle except down an incline."

That model rule is in the hands of the Provincial Governments and if a Provincial Government adopts it then it has got to be complied with and any person who does not comply with it will be liable to a penalty under the provisions of the Act itself. As a matter of fact, the majority of the Provincial Governments have not adopted this rule. The Bombay Government adopted it and tried it, I think in the Poona area, but it subsequently suspended it and now we have had a report from the Bombay Government to the effect that though they have postponed the coming into force of this rule till April 1, 1949, their difficulty is that these governors are not available. You will be interested to know that though this rule refers to the Eighth Schedule in which the particulars of these governors were to be mentioned, including make, etc., that particular Schedule even in these model rules is blank! That shows that very few people really can get at a governor of this sort in this country.

All I ask my honourable friend Shri Sidhva to do is this. We have got all the powers necessary for bringing into force a rule of the kind he has in contemplation, when the conditions are ripe for doing so. It would not require his Bill being passed into law for Provincial Governments to take this power; we have enough power under the Indian Motor Vehicles Act and the Rules that could be framed under it by a Provincial Government. I therefore think that this particular Bill is altogether unnecessary and I would appeal to him not to press his motion.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: Sir, I have heard with interest the reply given by the Honourable Minister and I find he has quoted a model rule. It seems to me from the rule quoted that if it were applied, it is really effective and that it would serve my purpose. But the answer that he advanced that the governors are not available or that the Provincial Governments have not thought it fit, is not appealable to me for the reason that probably they are unaware of these rules; probably the Provincial Governments excepting Bombay have not seen this rule. I would request the Government of India to make enquiries in foreign countries whether these governors are available, and, secondly, to write to the Provincial Governments drawing their attention that such a rule exists and that in order to avoid accidents, if they find it desirable, to see that this rule is adopted.

I therefore beg leave to withdraw my motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the honourable member leave of the House to withdraw his motion?

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

HINDU MARRIAGES VALIDITY BILL

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava (East Punjab: General): I move:

"That the Bill to provide that marriages between Hindus, Sikhs, Jains and their different castes and sub-castes are valid, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Giani Gurmukh Singh Musafir, Sardar Hukum Singh, Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, Shri Deshbandhu Gupta, Shrimati G. Durgabai, Shrimati Renuka Ray, Shri Banmali Goenka, Dr. Bakhshi Tek Chand, Lala Achint Ram, Ch. Ranbir Singh, Shri Mahabir Tyagi, and the Mover, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

Sir, in making this motion, with your permission, I will just state what the present condition of the law is. At present, in all matters, Hindus, Sikhs and Jains are bound by the Hindu Law. In regard to marriage today according to the terms of the Hindu Law, a marriage between a man and a woman belonging to different castes is not valid except in Bombay where anuloma marriages are allowed but the pratiloma marriages are not allowed. In Allahabad, Madras and Calcutta, the High Courts have been pleased to hold that even the anuloma marriages are not valid.

As regards persons belonging to different religions, I should say here also the position is very indefinite. According to custom any marriage is allowed which may not be allowed according to the strict principles of the Hindu Law. For instance, in the Punjab even karrari and chandravari marriages are allowed, and though according to strict Hindu Law marriages between members of different Hindu communities are not allowed, by custom in many places such marriages are allowed. For instance, in Nepal such marriages are held to be valid. In the Punjab, which is not a caste-ridden Province, marriages between the Sikhs and Hindus have been held to be valid not by the courts but by the society in general. Their children have been allowed to inherit and they have been treated just as though the marriages have taken place according to law. As between Jains and Hindus previously no marriages used to take place, but at present the pendulum has swung the other way and marriages take place between Jains and Hindus, especially Jain Aggarwals and Hindu Aggarwals, but it is very doubtful if a Jain Aggarwal could marry validly a Shudra or a Brahman. As regards sub-divisions and sub-castes also, before the Act of 1946 was passed marriages between sub-divisions of the Hindu community were declared legal in some places and in others illegal. But that is beside the point here. If sub-division and sub-caste is the same, then I am sorry to have used the word "sub-caste" here. The marriage between the members of the sub-divisions of the principal caste have already been legalised. In regard to the rest, for instance, if persons belonging to different religions and different castes want to marry, my humble submission is that according to the present law such marriages are not legal. At present, public opinion clearly demands that this must go and the marriage between persons of different faiths as well as of different castes should be made legal. At present there are many young men and women who want to marry beyond their castes. So far as public opinion goes, I am on sure ground that we are on a solid rock of foundation for this measure.

Taking it from a national standpoint, may I humbly submit to the House that to resolve the present friction between Hindus and Sikhs in the Punjab and to make them one solidified people if hundred girls of Sikhs and Hindus were married to hundred boys of Hindus and Sikhs, the whole trouble would have gone. In fact, I believe that if the Hindus and Muslims had married with each other, this Pakistan would not have been brought about. If we adopt this inter-marriage as a system among ourselves, I am perfectly sure that all the bitterness between the castes and the bitterness between persons of different faiths would go away. I do not understand why we should not adopt this measure. It may be said that the true principles of Hindu Dharma stand in our way, we are not well advised in adopting contrary measures. May I humbly submit that the first sloka in Mahabharata begins in this manner that because there are not many Kshatriyas in the land, therefore some Brahmins may be brought and asked to procreate Kshatriyas. All our religion and our Vedic lore do tell us that among Hindus such marriages were not infrequent. As a matter of fact, before the caste system became stereotyped, it can very well be imagined that there was no prohibition among the Hindus for inter-marriage so far as caste was concerned. Therefore taking it from the radical point of view, I should understand that there is no special difficulty with regard to this measure.

But all the same, the point that I wish to make is that it is an enabling measure. It does no force any person to marry outside his caste. If a person so wishes, if a young man and a woman are so minded, if their parents are so minded, all I want is that the couple should be enabled to marry and their offsprings should be legitimate. At present, if a Hindu wants to marry outside his caste, it is not as if he cannot effect his purpose by resort to falsehood. According to the Arya Marriage Validation Act he can very well marry any Hindu outside his caste. Supposing a person does not belong to Arya Samaj, why should he have recourse to falsehood to effect his purpose? Therefore, the thing which the law should care about is that persons be enabled to do things in a legal manner. I also know that according to the provisions of the Special Marriage Act (Act III of 1872) it was possible for a Hindu to contract a marriage under its unamended provisions provided he declared that he was a non-Hindu while continuing to be a Hindu. A very nice paradox is given in the Hindu Code by H. S. Gour in para 457. This is what it says:

"It will thus be seen that the Special Marriage (Amendment) Act has created a paradox. If the Hindu declares himself to be a non-Hindu and marries, he remains subject to Hindu Law. If he does not so declare, he ceases to be subject to Hindu Law, giving rise to a conundrum: When is a Hindu a non-Hindu? The answer is: When he marries as a Hindu under the Special Marriage (Amendment) Act."

When the Act of 1923 was passed—I have read the proceedings of that time—it appears that Dr. Gour was driven to a corner and he had to accept a situation which would never have been accepted had he been free. According to the Special Marriage (Amendment) Act, the situation is very strange. If a person wants to marry outside his religion, say, a Hindu wants to marry a non-Hindu, then under the Amendment Act, "their previous rights are unaffected to the extent provided in the Caste Disabilities Removal Act." But yet what happens if they marry? The disability which they will suffer from, I am going to describe from Gour's Hindu Law. Their previous rights are unaffected to the extent provided in the Caste Disabilities Removal Act. "They no longer possess the right of adoption. And if the person so marrying is an adopted son, his adoptive father may, if he so chooses, make another adoption." So that the poor man who wants to marry, his rights as an adopted son go away and his father is competent to have another adoption. Then, "such marriage has the effect of dissolving the joint family." This is another very great disability. If a person wants to marry a non-Hindu, he must cease to be a Hindu so far as the joint family is concerned. Then, "succession to their property and to the property of their issue is regulated by the Indian Succession Act." My humble submission is that there is no reason why we should undergo these disabilities. Why should a man wants to marry a non-Hindu suffer from these things, which go to show that as a matter of fact he must renounce all the laws which are dear to him and which he has inherited from generations. This is a wrong provision and leads to fraud and many other evils. There is no doubt that from the old position the present position is a bit better. I know of cases in which Arya Samajists married before the Arya Marriage Validation Act was passed and for years together they did not declare themselves as husband and wife. They were afraid of declaring, and what would happen to their off-spring? It may be said that at present the Hindu Code Bill is on the anvil, so where is the necessity for this measure at this stage? I would beg of you to allow me to meet this point.

In the first place, my submission is, I do not know when the Hindu Code Bill will be passed. It is doubtful if it will be passed in this session, next session or some other session. We do not know. Secondly, if this Bill is accepted, it would pave the way for such of the provisions of the Hindu Law as are given there and so it will be a help to passing that law. What would happen to many people who would not marry on account of this law not being there? Or if a person dies will his rights to property not be affected? At the same time, if this Bill is not allowed to be passed into law, many cases which could be governed by this law will be governed by the present law and people will suffer. The whole nation shall suffer in so far as we will not be able to make for conditions which would go to solidify the nation and make it homogeneous.

It may be said, it is a case of piecemeal legislation. We all know many instances of such piecemeal legislation. We know that we passed in 1946 the Act relating to validity of marriages between subsection of castes and then we passed in Bombay, the Prevention of Bigamous Marriages Act; and many other laws have been passed. I do not know of any other objections that may be raised to this Bill. It is a very small measure and this is a one-class Bill. All that it says is that previous marriages will be regarded as valid and in future such marriages will be valid. It does not propose to do anything else. I did not, as a matter of fact, venture to come before the House with a straight motion that it be passed into law because I am afraid it is a convention of this House that all these measures should be taken to the Select Committee.

I am anxious that in this session, we should be able to pass this measure into law, so that so far as the public is concerned, they will feel convinced that we mean business and we want to evolve a class-less society. I know what I am saying may not be liked. I was taken to task for expressing such an opinion in the papers an opinion which I read today to the House but in this vital matter. We are not to fear anybody. Mahatma Gandhi has told us we must have a class-less society. This is the right way to have a classless society. All differences between those people who are opposed to each other from the point of view of social rights, economic rights and political rights, will disappear and we will have one class-less society, if we adopt a measure like this. I would beseech the House to kindly pass this measure in this session after referring it to the Select Committee today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the Bill to provide that marriages between Hindus, Sikhs, Jains and their different castes and sub-castes are valid, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Giani Gurmukh Singh Musafir, Sardar Hukum Singh, Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, Shri Deshbandhu Gupta, Shrimati G. Durgabai, Shrimati Renuka Ray, Shri Ramnath Goenka, Dr. Bakhshi Tek Chand, Lala Achint Ram, Ch. Ranbir Singh, Shri Mahavir Tyagi and the Mover and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

The usual practice is to fix a date by which the report may be submitted to the House. With instructions to report by what date?

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: By the end of this month, say the 28th of February

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With instructions to report by the 28th of February, 1949.

Shri K. Hanumanthaiya (Mysore State): Sir, I have great pleasure in welcoming this Bill. Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava has advanced very good reasons in support of it. They hardly need any support or addition. Before August 1947, our watch-word was 'freedom' and Mahatma Gandhi gave us the phrase 'quit India' and after the attainment of freedom, Sardar Patel has given us the word consolidation. He is doing it on the political front and that is the greatest achievement that this country can boast of. (Interruption). And we have to do it also—may I say humbly with all sincerity and not with any levity—on the social front also. The great danger to India is 'disruptive tendencies', which are called communal tendencies and the marriage institution is the bastion which keeps these various differences intact and in perpetuity. This measure in a very humble fashion makes a beginning to abolish those distinctions in times to come and consolidate the Hindu society to begin with. I heartily welcome this measure and I suggest to the mover of this motion that he can take another Member into the Select Committee and I suggest Shrimati Annie Mascarene, M.A.B.L. being taken into the Select Committee.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: I have no objection to add the name.

Shri K. M. Munshi (Bombay: General): I beg to support this motion. My honourable friend, Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava was pleased to describe this measure as a small measure. I beg to differ from him. It is a very big measure and a very important one. It should have been passed not now, but forty years ago. When the question was first raised before the courts and when the courts held in different provinces that marriage between the Hindus of different castes were invalid for one reason or the other. But in those days the Government benches were not prepared to allow the Hindu community to be dynamic and wanted to perpetuate the old customs which were enshrined in text books composed 700 or 800 years ago. I remember a case, Sir, I think it was some 40 years ago, when the validity of the marriage of a widow, whose husband had died several years ago was raised before the Bombay High Court and the High Court held that after long years of married life and leading case where I tried for four years to establish that the marriage between having grand children, her marriage was invalid because she happened to belong to a higher caste than her husband. I was concerned in another leading case where I tried for four years to establish that the marriage between a Hindu of higher caste with a wife of a lower caste was invalid. But for the fact that Sir LaLubhai Shaw was a judge of catholicity, perhaps I would have won the case, but even then the validity of anuloma marriage as we call them,—between the husband of a superior Hindu caste and the wife of an inferior Hindu caste—is not accepted as valid in some of the provinces. The question has also risen with regard to Hindus and Jains in part of the country. Hindus and Jains marry freely, but the point has always come before the lawyers for opinion whether a marriage between a Hindu and a Jain was valid. Now these are questions which ought to have been solved, as I said, years and years ago. But we have reached a stage when this must be solved immediately.

My honourable friend, Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava referred to the special case of the Punjab. It is not a special case of any particular province; it affects the whole of the country. On account of education, on account of freedom marriages between members of different castes take place. But they find themselves in great difficulty on account of this doctrine of Hindu Law I know, not one or two, but dozens of cases where the parties merely profess to marry under the Civil Marriage Act, though they do not want to do it; they hated doing it; they do not want to disturb the joint family; they do not want that the succession Act should apply to them; they do not want to separate themselves from their parents; but because of the unfortunate state of the law, they have to marry under the Civil Marriage Act. Therefore, I submit, Sir, this a crying grievance which requires to be remedied as early as possible. I am glad that the mover has accepted your suggestion about the 28th of February and this Bill should be passed as early as possible.

[Shri K. M. Munshi]

There is one little point which I should like to mention and I am sure this defect will be duly rectified in the Select Committee. The words as they stand are: Notwithstanding any text, rule, interpretation of Hindu Law, or any custom or usage to the contrary, no marriage among Hindus is or will be deemed to be invalid by reason of the fact that the parties thereto belong to different religious castes or sub-castes. This might lead possibly to a construction that this provision only applies to marriages between parties who are alive. I think it should be made perfectly clear that even marriages of this character which have taken place in the past and in respect of which the question of succession arises should be deemed valid hereafter. I am sure proper rectification will be made in the Select Committee. I therefore, Sir, heartily support this motion.

Shri Deshbandhu Gupta (Delhi): I rise to support the motion which is before the House just as my honourable friend, Shri Munshi has pointed out, I also feel that it is a really very important measure. For many years one thing which has been standing in the way of Hindu solidarity and also in the way of our national solidarity is this division of the Hindu society in castes. I feel the time has come when we should pass a measure like this which seeks to abolish these artificial barriers without any further delay. I know of instances where some of my close friends who did not believe in civil marriages had to resort to civil marriages, simply because they happened to choose a mate which belonged to a different caste. You are aware, Sir, that the Arya Samaj has always been a believer in caste system by 'Guna and Karma'. In spite of the fact that the founder of the Arya Samaj preached that cult and from the very beginning they advocated that there was no caste by birth. Arya Samajists also had to suffer from the same disability from which other people are suffering today.

It was after many years of struggle that the Arya Marriage Validation Act was passed. But, I find public opinion amongst Hindu has also advanced sufficiently and not only Arya Samajists but today many more Hindus do not recognise the artificial barriers placed by the caste system based on birth. Therefore, there is no reason why they should be forced to have recourse to the Arya Marriage Validation Act or to the Civil Marriage Act. Today, when public opinion has advanced, and when the caste barriers that have stood in the way of the solidarity of the Hindus and in the way of creating a national feeling, have gone, I feel the passage of a measure like this should not be delayed.

There may of course be some point in saying that the Hindu Code is coming and therefore we should not have any piecemeal legislation. But along with many of my friends I too believe that a measure of this nature, which is in no way opposed to the reformist ideas contained in the Hindu Code, should not be delayed. Although, my honourable friend Dr. Ambedkar would like the Hindu Code to be passed into law this very session, many of us do not share that view. It may take time. After all, that is a very important measure and has got many controversial clauses. Therefore, I would urge that this measure should be welcomed by us and its passage should not be delayed.

I wholeheartedly support the motion moved by my honourable friend Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava and I hope Dr. Ambedkar will also accept it and that the House will pass this small measure which is of great importance to Hindu Society, in this very session.

Dr. Bakhshi Tek Chand (East Punjab: General): I wholeheartedly support the motion which Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava has made for referring this Bill to the Select Committee. The Bill has so far received support from various quarters of the House and I do hope that not a single discordant note will be raised against it.

The Bill, if I may say so, is no new measure. A Bill almost on identical terms was introduced in the old Imperial Legislative Council as it was then called, in 1919 by the late Mr. Vitthalbhai Patel. That Bill was circulated for opinion. Of course, different opinions were expressed, the orthodox element opposing it, officials opposing it and a number of persons and societies supporting it. But, before the Bill could come up for consideration before the Council, the Montagu Chelmsford Reforms came into operation the council was dissolved and the Bill lapsed. After that, Dr. Gour attempted in 1923 to modify the old Bill of 1872 but then also, there was opposition and the Bill had to be modified in several particulars. It was only in the form of a civil marriage that persons of different castes or different sub-castes of Hindus could marry; sacramental marriages are not permitted. With regard to sacramental marriages under the Hindu Law, the position is different in the different provinces. Some provinces, as has been pointed out, permit what are called Anuloma marriages; other provinces do not allow that. In the latter provinces, the courts have held that though in some of the Smritis, Anuloma marriages were permitted, they have become obsolete and they are not now recognised. In almost all Provinces, it is held that Pratiloma marriages are invalid. In the Punjab and in some other provinces, where custom is the rule of decision, marriages between certain castes are allowed, but between certain other castes are not allowed. I think the time has now come when a bold step should be taken and this measure should be placed on the Statute book. No doubt, under the Hindu Code which is now before us, provisions to this effect have been made. The Hindu Code Bill is however a very comprehensive measure dealing with different subjects and covers a very much wider field. There is much opposition to some portions of it. We do not know how long it will take for the Bill to pass, in what form it will be passed, or whether it will be passed at all. (Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi: "It will be passed.") It will certainly take time. There is no reason therefore, so far as this matter is concerned, to delay the passage of this simple measure, with which I think most people are agreed. I therefore support the motion.

Shri Mahavir Tyagi (U.P.: General): I do also want to have the honour of recording my support to this Bill of great reform as my honourable friend Mr. Munshi has said.

It is long since India has suffered on account of communal differences. Marriages are the root cause and elections the 'fruit-cause' for all these differences; because, it is primarily at the time of the marriage that one enquires into the caste of the other. Every time when marriages are held, castes are enquired into. The next occasion, when the caste of a person is enquired into, is when one stands for election. Now that we have decided to have joint electorates, we have to a great extent done away with the 'fruit-cause' of the communal evil. Thus politically we have put ourselves on the right track. And, as my friend Mr. Hanumanthaiah has just now said, the credit goes to the Honourable Sardar Patel for giving us political consolidation in the country. After this political consolidation, our next immediate need is to have social consolidation. This Bill will provide this need. I am sure, if this Bill is passed into law, marriages will be free. I am a believer in free marriages. Now that India is free, marriages must also be free and there should be no restrictions. I am sorry that the Bill has come at a very late stage in our lives; but let us pass this Bill for our future generations to practice it. I hope that the country will enjoy the freedom given by this Act. I wholeheartedly support the motion.

Shri Upendranath Barman (West Bengal: General): I also beg to accord my whole hearted support to the Bill and its reference to the Select Committee. In my mind, I am convinced of one thing. The circumstance that stands in the way of our national sense is the caste barrier. So long as it lasts, the different sections of the Hindu community and other non-Muslim communities cannot unite together and imbibe a sense of nationality in its true sense. So long as one knows that he cannot marry his son or daughter with the son or daughter of his neighbour, the true sense that they are one cannot come. I think that by passing this measure that barrier will be won. It is the sense of kinship that is the real basis of national sense and I wholeheartedly support this Bill and I hope that it will be passed into law as soon as possible.

The Honourable Dr. B. R. Ambedkar (Minister for Law): With regard to this Bill, there cannot be any difference of opinion between myself and my honourable friend the mover for the simple reason that the Bill is merely a part of the Hindu Code which I am sponsoring. My only objection to the Bill is that the Legislature having accepted the principle that the Hindu Law ought to be codified, it is wrong now to proceed piece-meal with the legislation. I have no objection, as I said, to the principles underlying the Bill. In fact those are the very principles which are embodied in the Hindu Code and therefore what I will suggest to my honourable friend is that either he should withdraw this Bill or postpone the consideration of the Bill so that we may know exactly what happens to the Hindu Code.

I am afraid having regard to the fact that I am sponsoring the Hindu Code and having regard to the fact that there being the motion before the House for consideration of the Bill as reported by the Select Committee, I am afraid I cannot take any other attitude than the one I have taken.

Ch. Ranbir Singh rose—

Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi (Madras: General): How can he be allowed to speak?

The closure motion has been put.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I allowed Dr. Ambedkar to speak and he is not the sponsor. The question was not put.

चौधरी रनवीर सिंह: सभापति महोदय, इस बिल का समर्थन करते हुए मुझे बड़ी खुशी है क्योंकि मैं हिन्दुओं की उस Community से ताल्लुक रखता हूँ जो आज से नहीं बल्कि शुरू से ही इस बिल के Principle को मानती चली आ रही है। अगर हिन्दुओं के अन्दर कोई कम्युनिटी थी जिसके अन्दर कि किसी दूसरी कौम के साथ रिश्ता हो सकता था और उस रिश्ते के बावजूद कोई बहुत ज्यादा भेदभाव नहीं होता था, तो वह जाट Community थी। यह ठीक है कि थोड़ा बहुत भेदभाव था, कुछ परहेज भी था, लेकिन वह बहुत मामूली था। तो इसलिए भी कि इस बिल से एक वह चीज़ जिसको हम सदियों से मानते चले आये हैं वह सारे देश के अन्दर हो जायगी, मुझे इसके समर्थन करने में बड़ी खुशी है।

दूसरी बात, जैसा कि त्यागी जी ने बताया, इसमें यह है कि इससे हमारे आपस के भेदभाव दूर होंगे, जिन की वजह से हम गुलाम हुए। हमारे नेता सरदार बल्लभभाई पटेल ने छोटी छोटी रियासतों को मिला कर देश को एक बना दिया और वह प्राबल्य सुलझ गया। यह बिल आपस की सामाजिक गुलियों को सुलझाने के लिए बहुत अच्छी चीज़ है।

जहां तक हिन्दू कोड बिल का ताल्लुक है वह एक बहुत बड़ी चीज़ है। पता नहीं देश या यह सभा उसको मानती है या नहीं। उसमें कई चीज़ें ऐसी हैं जिनके बारे में हमारे देश के नेताओं ने मतभेद प्रकट किया है। तो मैं नहीं समझता कि सिर्फ यह समझ कर कि यह चीज़ एक बिल का part and parcel है इस को ठुकरा देना या उसको न आने देना कहां तक ठीक है। क्योंकि अगर हिन्दू कोड बिल पास हो जाता है तो कुदरती तौर पर यह चीज़ उसके अन्दर शामिल हो जायगी। अगर वह पास नहीं होता है तो कम से कम इसको तो पास होने का मौका मिलेगा। यह बात कहते हुए मैं हार्दिक तौर पर इसका समर्थन करता हूँ।

(English translation of the above speech.)

Ch. Ranbir Singh (East Punjab: General): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I have great pleasure in supporting this measure because I belong to that community amongst the Hindus who have always believed in the principle of this Bill from the very outset. If there was any community amongst the Hindus which ever established relations outside its own sphere and that there existed no differences, it was the Jat community. It is true that there did exist some such element of difference and social ostracism but that was negligible. The very fact that this Bill will go a long way to establish throughout our country a principle in which we have believed since centuries past, affords me great pleasure to support this.

Secondly, just as my honourable friend Mr. Tyagi has stated, this will banish our mutual differences which were responsible for our slavery. By the integration of small states our leader the Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel has consolidated our country into one and that problem has been well solved. This Bill is a very good measure for solving our social problems.

So far as the Hindu Code Bill is concerned that is a big thing. It is not yet known whether or not the country or this House accepts it. It contains some provisions over which our leaders have expressed some sort of difference. I, therefore, fail to understand how far it is correct to shelve or reject this Bill simply for the reason that it forms part and parcel of that Bill, because if the Hindu Code Bill is passed, this measure will naturally be incorporated in it. If that is not passed, this Bill will at least have chances of being passed.

With these words I wholeheartedly support this.

Shri K. M. Munshi: Is it permissible for me to answer a point made by Dr. Ambedkar?

An Honourable Member: Pandit Bhargava can deal with it.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: Sir, I am very glad that all sections of the House have supported this measure. It is a measure of such a kind that I could not foresee with the highest flight of imagination that any sort of objection could be raised and I am very glad that this measure is liked by everybody. One objection has been raised and that is that since the Hindu Code Bill is on the anvil therefore, we should not proceed with this Bill. If the principles of this Bill and the principles which are the subject matter of the Hindu Code were antagonistic to each other, I could understand the objection, but where this measure proceeds on the same basis as the Hindu Code Bill, if we pass it in advance, it will really pave the way for the passing of the Hindu Code. I cannot understand how the passing of this will obstruct the passing of the Hindu Code—really it will accelerate its passage. May I enquire where is the law or rule or convention that if a Bill like the comprehensive Hindu Code Bill is on the anvil therefore another Bill cannot be passed. There is no such convention. I cannot understand that if a measure is there which covers one of the points covered by another measure, therefore the second measure should not be passed.

Bakhshi Tek Chand has pointed out that this measure was a subject matter of a Bill in 1919 and this measure is associated with the name of our revered President V. J. Patel. Now in point of time I think so far as Hindu Code is concerned, this kind of measure is much anterior. In a matter of this kind, these technicalities even if they be valid, should not be allowed to stand. What would happen to those thousands of men and women if this Hindu Code Bill is not passed and I think it is not going to be taken clause by clause this session and it may go on to September or October and not passed in this Session because it is a controversial measure and it may take a year; what would happen to those young men and women who desire to marry according to the provisions of this Bill and our activities which certainly conduce to the formation and consolidation of one nation?

Sir, it is not a matter of joke. I am only helping Dr. Ambedkar whose marriage also will be legalised by this Bill. Why should he laugh at this? This may or may not be applicable to him yet the disabilities if any will be removed. I know hundreds of people want to marry under this and is it wrong to marry under this rule? I for one deprecate that anyone should place any obstacle to this Bill being passed in this session. If this measure is not passed in this Session all our efforts and Gandhiji's efforts will be futile. So my submission is this and I beg Dr. Ambedkar to kindly withdraw his objection and agree to the passage of this Bill as soon as possible because this would also help him in getting this relevant portion of the Hindu Code passed.

Shri K. Hanumanthiya: Has the honourable member accepted the name of Shrimati Annie Mascarene which I have suggested?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes, I suppose the Honourable the Law Minister wants to know the number of men on the waiting list.

The question is:

"That the Bill to provide that marriages between Hindus, Sikhs, Jains and their different castes and sub-castes are valid, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Giani Gurmukh Singh Musafir, Sardar Hukum Singh, Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, Shri Deshbandhu Gupta, Shrimati G. Durgabai, Shrimati Renuka Ray, Shri Ramnath Goenka, Dr. Bakhshi Tek Chand, Lala Achint Ram, Ch. Ranbir Singh, Shri Mahavir Tyagi, Shrimati Annie Mascarene, and the Mover, with instructions to report by the 28th February 1949, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

The motion was adopted.

CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE (AMENDMENT) BILL

(AMENDMENT OF SECTIONS 4, 29A, ETC.)

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava (East Punjab: General): I have come to know that the Government intend to bring a comprehensive measure which will embody all the provisions of this Bill also along with other provisions. So I do not think it necessary to proceed with this measure. I hope it will be brought in this session. So we must await it

CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE (AMENDMENT) BILL

(AMENDMENT OF SECTION 488)

Shri R. K. Sidhva (C.P. and Berar: General): Sir, I move:

"That the Bill further to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (Amendment of Section 488), be taken into consideration."

This is a very simple Bill. The statement of objects and reasons which are attached with this Bill are self-explanatory. For the benefit of the House I will read those objects so that Members will understand the purpose of this Bill.

"Section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code provides for a summary remedy for the wife to claim maintenance from her husband who neglects to maintain her. But in the event of her refusal to live with the husband without sufficient ground, she is not entitled to a separate maintenance. Several High Courts have given different rulings on this point and therefore the wife under the circumstances is found to be at a disadvantage. In one of the High Courts it was ruled that even if a husband has got a mistress it is not sufficient ground for a wife's refusal to live with her husband. This is a great hardship upon her. It is therefore necessary to make it quite clear and amend the law as stated to be so that the wife will be able to refuse to live with her husband under any extraordinary circumstances and yet claim the separate maintenance."

It is therefore sought in this Bill that an additional clause be added to Section 488 and I desire that the following clause be added:

"If a husband has contracted marriage with another wife or keeps a mistress it shall be considered to be just ground for his wife's refusal to live with him."

Section 488 undoubtedly provides in extenso the provisions mentioned by me. But there is a lacuna and therefore the Courts have so far been reluctant to give maintenance to the wife. Section 488 says:

"If any person having sufficient means neglects or refuses to maintain his wife or his legitimate or illegitimate child unable to maintain itself, the District Magistrate, a Presidency Magistrate, a Sub-divisional Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class may upon proof of such neglect or refusal, order such person to make a monthly allowance for the maintenance of his wife or such child, at such monthly rate, not exceeding one hundred rupees in the whole, as such Magistrate thinks fit, and to pay the same to such person as the Magistrate from time to time directs."

And there are other clauses in regard to this. I, therefore, submit that it is in fairness to the wife of a husband who has married another wife, or kept a mistress, that the original wife should have the right of maintenance. It is not proper that the husband who marries a second wife and enjoys the benefit of it should refuse to give a maintenance allowance to the first wife, who is the recognised wife. Therefore, I contend that this is a simple measure dealing only with the issue of maintenance. Three instances have come to my knowledge where the Court refused to give, even under section 488, a maintenance allowance. These cases were so just and pitiable, that I thought that, since despite my representation to the authorities under the present Act as framed it was not possible to give any relief, the only course was to add another clause to section 488 of the Act. I hope my Bill will be acceptable in the circumstances that I have mentioned.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motion moved:

"That the Bill further to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (Amendment of Section 488), be taken into consideration."

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel (Minister for Home Affairs and the States): I have no objection to this.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill further to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (Amendment of Section 488), be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That Clause 2 stand part of the Bill".

The motion was adopted.

Clause 2 was added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and the Preamble were added to the Bill.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: Sir, 1 move:

"That the Bill be passed."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That the Bill be passed."

The motion was adopted.

DENTISTS (AMENDMENT) BILL

Shri R. K. Sidhva (C. P. and Berar: General): I do not want to move, but I want to keep it alive because the Honourable Minister for Health is considering this matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member may make a motion later.

SOCIETIES REGISTRATION (AMENDMENT) BILL

Shri R. K. Sidhva (C.P. and Berar: General): Sir, I beg for leave to introduce a Bill further to amend the Societies Registration Act, 1860.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That leave be granted to introduce a Bill further to amend the Societies Registration Act, 1860."

The motion was adopted.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

The Assembly then adjourned till a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock on Monday, the 14th February, 1949.

RUBBER (PRODUCTION AND MARKETING) AMENDMENT BILL

The Honourable Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee (Minister for Industry and Supply): Sir, I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill to amend the Rubber (Production and Marketing) Act, 1947.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That leave be granted to introduce a Bill to amend the Rubber (Production and Marketing) Act, 1947."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

BANKING COMPANIES BILL—contd.

Mr. Speaker: The House will now proceed with the consideration of the motion that the Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to banking companies, as reported by the Select Committee be taken into consideration. The House is resuming discussion on clause 6.

[At this stage Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair, which was then occupied by Mr. Deputy Speaker (Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar)]

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari (Madras: General): The House adjourned the other day while considering the amendment moved by my honourable friend, Prof. K. T. Shah. Sir, I wish to oppose this amendment, the first part of the amendment which says: "Unless the Reserve Bank otherwise prescribes, no charges shall be levied by any bank for any remittance on account of any customer of that bank from one place to another in India". This is wholly outside the purview of the present legislation for the reason that this is purely a business matter. The ability of particular banks to accept monies for remittance to somewhere else depends upon a number of factors. It may be that the physical factor might be there. Actually money will have to be transferred from one place to another. There is also the other factor that a branch might be a branch which would be sending out money in a particular season. So any remittance to that branch can be taken up by another branch without perhaps any charge, but that season might come to an end. It might be that that branch would want to collect its advances and send the monies to the Head Office. When the reverse process is in action, then the possibility of any other branch taking monies for that branch will be difficult. These are all matters which cannot be decided by a fiat in a piece of legislation which compels a bank to accept monies for a remittance to any of its branches.

In discussing this particular matter in regard to a previous amendment, I suggested that since the Reserve Bank was in a position to confer favours on banks by giving slight advance remittance facilities at a nominal or no cost, the Reserve Bank may be able to dictate the terms on which these people should transfer monies within their branches so far as their customers are concerned.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri (Assam: General): On a point of information, Sir, are we considering both the amendments of Prof. Shah together?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Both the Amendments are being considered, but they will be put to vote separately.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: My suggestion was that the Reserve Bank might use its influence to generally lower the remittance charges, but it must depend on a number of other circumstances, whether a bank is able to accept a particular charge, high or low as the case may be, for transfer to some other branch of that particular bank. Therefore, I think it would be throwing a burden on branch banking out of all proportion to what it could bear, if we put in a provision of this sort in a Bill. Again, there is the other factor. Often times a bank might accept from a particular customer at a nominal charge an order for remittance somewhere else. That is because the bank gets from that particular customer a lot of other facilities; it gets a lot of money or income. These incomes vary with individual customers as also the other matters I have mentioned before. So it would be highly improper to put in this particular amendment in the body of the Bill.

In regard to suggested sub-clause (4), it again deals with "No company, firm or individual shall be allowed..." Firms or individuals do not come within the scope of this legislation. So far as no company being allowed to engage in banking business without being registered as a bank or banker and licensed to carry on any banking business is concerned, that is provided for in clause 22, and clause 23 also operates as a restriction in regard to opening up of new and transfer of existing places of business. So the Reserve Bank will be fully posted with all developments of new offices or new banks being opened. Then there is the licensing clause and there is another clause 23, which gives ample powers to the Reserve Bank to control these operations. So the present amendment is not only unnecessary but is inadvisable and as such I suggest that, the House should reject them.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: I am divided in my opinion so far as this amendment of Prof. Shah is concerned. I am inclined to support the proposed sub-clause (3) and not sub-clause (4). However, this is a novel way of putting an amendment.

I support sub-clause (3) because it is to help needy persons. Men who are in urgent need of money would like to have their expenditure saved so far as telegraphic remittances are concerned. An ordinary remittance by way of sending a draft or a cheque is not much of an expense. But when a large amount has to be sent by telegram, then the expense involved is somewhat substantial. So if that expense can be saved, this may be welcomed by many persons who are in urgent need of money.

So far as the second part of the amendment is concerned, I do not see eye to eye with my honourable friend Prof. Shah. Sir, I think the only saving grace of this Banking Bill, so far as poorer constituents are concerned is that it still leaves much room for private banking, and as I said the other day, the present-day banks do not wish to advance any money on the security of landed property or of a house, etc. They do not want to block up capital by lending money on such securities, because banks are afraid that if they do so a large amount of money will be involved and this will result in blocking up capital. The result is that those people who have not large amounts of money are always in difficulties in the matter of raising funds for their immediate needs.

I do not see why my honourable friend wants this particular amendment because in every province, I think, by now, the Moneylenders' Act has been enforced, and one of the provisions of the Moneylenders' Act is that even private bankers have to register their names: they have to submit certain returns. They cannot escape that. Therefore it is not necessary for any purpose to have this kind of provision, that is, no firm and no individual can advance any money unless they are registered as a bank. Some sort of private banking should be left under the present circumstances, otherwise the poorer people will not be able to raise any loans when difficulties arise. I therefore oppose sub-clause (4).

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava (East Punjab: General): These two sub-clauses have no relationship with one another. They are quite independent. In regard to the first amendment, there is much to be said. If a person goes to a bank and puts his money there and he becomes a customer of the bank, it is but fair that the bank should extend to him this facility of transferring his remittances from one branch to another. After all, in this process, entries are only to be made in the corresponding books of the two branches so far as the bank is concerned, and the bank need not incur any expense in this matter. As a result the banking habit will be encouraged. If this is accepted, many people will be benefited thereby.

I do not know what the effect on the income of the banks will be by this change being made. At the same time every bank should look forward to income from customers from other sources other than that of transferring remittances from one branch to another. Anyhow, if this wide remission or concession was not available, it would be a very good thing if at least in regard to remittances below Rs. 100 this concession was allowed. This would give relief to many poor people.

As regards the other question, which is the subject matter of sub-clause (4), I beg to submit that so far as I have been able to see this Bill, it is beyond its scope. This Bill only deals with companies and banking companies. As a matter of fact, the report of the Select Committee is on the Banking Companies Bill. No other individual or firm is mentioned anywhere in this Bill. I therefore submit that in this Bill the words "firm or individual" should not be included. Moreover, the equities relating to firms or individuals are different from those relating to banks. There is no knowing how the "firm or individual" would be controlled if these words were included.

So far as giving loans to agriculturists are concerned, I hope that the mover of the amendment fully knows that there are forms supplied to individuals financiers and others who advance loans to cultivators, etc. They have to fill up those forms and they are bound by regulations and laws. So there is already control so far as this form of banking is concerned. Consequently, I do not see how "firm or individual" can be included.

Therefore, I oppose the amendment regarding sub-clause (4) and I support amendment regarding sub-clause (3).

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai (Minister for Finance): I am entirely in agreement with my friend, Shri T. T. Krishnamachari, who explained very clearly the position of the Select Committee in this matter. I cannot usefully add to what he has said. I am not in a position to accept either of these sub-clauses.

As regards remittances, I think it is a recognised banking practice, and further I do not think the poorest class of people, to whom references were made, are affected by this, because they have hardly any banking account and I do not think it is necessary for us to introduce a change in this matter.

As regards sub-clause (4), Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava has rightly said that it is entirely outside the scope of this Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That after sub-clause (2) of clause 6 of the Bill, the following new sub-clause be added:

(3) Unless the Reserve Bank otherwise prescribes, no charges shall be levied by any bank for any remittance on account of any customer of that bank from one place to another in India."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That after sub-clause (2) of clause 6 of the Bill, the following new sub-clause be added:

(3) No company, firm or individual shall be allowed to engage in banking business without being registered as a bank or banker and licensed to carry on any banking business."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 6, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 6, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): Sir, I beg to move:

"That in clause 7 of the Bill, for the words 'one of such names' occurring in line 5, the words 'one of such words' be substituted."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Sir, I accept it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in clause 7 of the Bill, for the words 'one of such names' occurring in line 5, the words 'one of such words' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I move:

"That in the Proviso to clause 7 of the Bill, for the words 'association of banks', the words 'association of banking companies' be substituted."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Sir, I do not accept it.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, with regard to this, the Proviso to section 7 says: "nothing in this section shall apply to any association of banks formed for the protection of their mutual interests." So far as this Bill is concerned it has always used the expression "banking companies" and not "banks". Banks are institutions but we are concerned with companies. If banks combine into an association they do so as banking companies and not banks as such. Throughout the Bill we have never used the word "bank" in such context. It is for this reason that it should be said that the association is of banking companies.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: The position is that any association of bankers might be in it. We are not legislating here regarding association of persons. Individuals might be in it. Why should we prevent them from entering into an association?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Sir, the reference is to section 26 of the Companies Act and the kind of purpose for which these associations might be formed are purposes like promoting commerce, science or religion, charity or any other useful object. In regard to the promotion of these objects banks or banking companies may come together. There is no reason why for this purpose we should exclude banks which are not companies.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I do not press my amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 7, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 7, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That for clause 8 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

8. (1) A banking company may deal in the buying or selling or bartering of all actionable claims, stocks, shares, money, bullion and specie, and all instruments mentioned in clause (a) of sub-section (1) of section 6.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in section 6 or in any contract, no banking company shall—

(a) directly or indirectly deal in the buying or selling or bartering of any goods other than those mentioned in sub-section (1);

[Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad]

Exception.—Clause (a) shall not apply to dealings in goods in connection with the realisation of any security given or held by a banking company.

(b) buy, sell or barter such goods for others otherwise than in connection with bills of exchange received for collection or negotiation or with such of its business as is referred to in clause (a) of sub-section (1) of section 6 :

Provided that sub-section (2) shall not apply to any such business as aforesaid which was in the course of being transacted at the commencement of the Act so however that the said business shall be completed within one year from such commencement or within such extended time as the Reserve Bank may from time to time allow not exceeding five years from such commencement."

The amendment, in order to be appreciated, will require an analysis of clause 8. The clause which this amendment seeks to replace reads:

"Notwithstanding anything contained in section 6 or in any contract, no banking company shall directly or indirectly deal in the buying or selling or bartering of goods, except in connection with the realisation of security given to or held by it, or engage in any trade, or buy or sell or barter goods for others otherwise than in connection with bills of exchange received for collection or negotiation or with such of its business as is referred to in clause (i) of sub-section (1) of section 6."

There are two prohibitions in this clause. The first is that no banking company shall deal in the buying or selling or bartering of certain goods. To this there is an exception that if there are goods which are made over to banks for realisation and held by them as such, then the prohibition does not apply. The second prohibition is that the banks cannot engage in trade or buy or sell or barter goods for others otherwise than in connection with certain exceptions.....

Mr. Deputy Speaker: What is the difference in substance between the honourable Member's amendment and the existing provision in the clause?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: That is what I am going to show. The real purpose.....

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: One is positive and the other is negative.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: The real substance of the whole clause is imbedded in the last part of the section in the Explanation.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: The sting is in the tail.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Yes, the sting is in the tail. In fact at the tail there are certain exceptions to that exception and there are again exceptions to that exception. In the last Explanation it is said:

" 'goods' means every kind of movable property, other than actionable claims, stocks, shares, money, bullion and specie and all instruments referred to in clause (a) of sub-section (1) of section 6."

It would appear therefore that this exception to this Explanation is the real operative part of the section. That is that a banking company may deal with actionable claims, stocks, shares, money, bullion and specie and all instruments referred to in clause (a) of sub-section (1) of section 6. That is expressed in the amendment as a positive declaration instead of allowing a banking company to roam about and find out what is the provision, what is the exception, what is the Explanation to that exception and what is the exception to the Explanation. I have attempted to state this precisely at the very commencement of my amendment that "a banking company may deal in the buying or selling or bartering of all actionable claims, stocks, shares, money, bullion and specie, and all instruments mentioned in clause (a) of sub-section (1) of section 6." This is a clear unconditional power which is meant to be given, but it is given in the Bill in an extremely qualified, indirect and circum-spect manner. I submit that this power should be given to banks clearly and positively instead of putting it into so many negatives with exceptions. This power, again, is not conditional upon "notwithstanding anything contained....". This warning applies to other parts of the clause.

The second part of the amendment is sub-clause (2) of clause 8. This is controlled by the clause "notwithstanding anything contained in section 6 or in any contract,". This safeguard, as I have explained does not apply to sub-clause (1) of my amendment. That power, that is, the power of banks to deal in the buying or selling or bartering of shares, money and other things is absolute. It is not controlled by the safeguarding clause "notwithstanding anything contained in section 6 or in any contract" and so on which is applicable only to the second part. Part (a) of sub-clause (2), as I have suggested, says "no banking company shall directly or indirectly deal in the buying or selling or bartering of any goods other than those mentioned in sub-section (1)". As I have already said, sub-section (1) mentions certain things which are specifically given. Sub-section (2) mentions things in which the banks cannot deal in. There is an exception to this also. It is mentioned specifically as an exception in my amendment. In part (b) of the sub-clause there is a prohibition that it should not buy or sell certain things for others. And there is a Proviso to that. This Proviso is also specifically set out as such in the amendment.

In these circumstances I submit that the real power which is given to banking companies, instead of being obscurely embedded at the end with a sting at the tail, as Mr. Krishnamachari happily pointed out, should be definitely and positively given without any condition. In fact it would be difficult for a banking company to find out what is really given to them and what is prohibited. It is equally necessary to positively and clearly define what they are prohibited from doing. And the exception to the prohibition should also be specifically stated. If this way of a positive statement is acceptable to the Honourable Minister, well and good. Otherwise there are in the subsequent amendments some alternative amendments dealing with particular parts which I shall submit later on. But I submit that my amendment suggests a positive way of stating for powers which are given to banking companies, a positive way of preventing them from doing what they should not do, and again a positive exception or qualification to this negative power, definitely and clearly stated. This is the way they should be stated. With these few words I would ask the Honourable Minister to consider the points and if possible to accept the amendment.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I have had the amendment carefully examined by my legal advisers and they are of opinion that my honourable friend's amendment is no improvement at all. In cases where there is no particular improvement provided in the amendment I suggest respectfully, Sir, that for the sake of facilitating printing we might leave the matter there.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: So the honourable member does not wish to press his amendment, I take it.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: No, Sir.

Prof. K. T. Shah (Bihar: General): Sir, I beg to move.

"That in clause 8 of the Bill, after the word 'goods' occurring in line three, the words 'land, forests, mines or houses' be inserted."

The amended clause will then read:

"Notwithstanding anything contained in section 6 or in any contract, no banking company shall directly or indirectly deal in the buying or selling or bartering of goods, land, forests, mines or houses....."

[Prof. K. T. Shah]

I have tried to understand the intention behind this provision as it stands, and I find that, in all likelihood, it is intended to secure the liquidity of the assets of a bank; and therefore a prohibition is imposed, subject to certain exceptions, upon its engaging in direct trade in movable goods.

I think, however, that if it is important to lay down such a prohibition in regard to goods which are the subject matter of ordinary trade or exchange. It ought to be for the same reason much more important and necessary to lay down an equally strong prohibition against banking companies engaging in buying or selling or bartering of immovable property, like those which I have mentioned. I would like to be enlightened why this should not be done, if the Honourable Minister is against accepting this amendment.

So far, however, as my knowledge of banking theory goes, I am free to say that it has always been emphasised, particularly in regard to commercial banking, that their funds shall not be locked up in securities or in investments which it will be very difficult to realize at a moment of need. Particularly is this the case in regard to landed property, or immovable property, where a number of unknown claims may be in operation so that in the event of it becoming necessary for the bank to realise such securities, people other than those who originally offered to deal as their property in such material may come forward and prevent the bank from realising that security on the failure, let us say, of the first dealer in making good the security. I think, therefore, that, subject to any explanation or justification that the honourable the sponsor of the Bill may be able to give, this amendment is in the interests of the commercial banks themselves and ought to be accepted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in clause 8 of the Bill, after the word 'goods' occurring in line three, the words 'land, forests, mines or houses' be inserted."

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: May I ask whether clause 9 would not cover all cases of immovable property?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Clause 9 covers it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Clause 9 provides that a bank can hold it for a particular period of years, beyond that it cannot. And within that period it can deal in it.

I also thought of clause 9, but there is no such prohibition in it as is contained in the matter of goods in this amendment to clause 8, which says that it shall not deal in it. If in any particular manner it indirectly comes into possession of it, as by realisation of security, it can be held beyond the particular period. So there is a difference between the two.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I thought my honourable friend's point was that the prohibition in section 8 must apply also to immovable property. The extent to which immovable property can be held or utilised is covered by section 9. As far as the public interest aspect of it is concerned I think the matter is sufficiently safeguarded.

Prof. K. T. Shah: Clause 9 only speaks of holding or acquiring. It does not prevent a banking company from buying or selling or bartering or dealing in which is the wording of clause 8.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Within seven years it can go on dealing in it. Therefore the honourable member wants, I think, to prevent acquisition of land, houses, mines and forests.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: Under clause 9, holding it is only possible if it is for its own use.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: But the point is that within seven years it can go on buying and selling.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: Sir, for various reasons, I would request the Honourable Minister to accept this amendment which has been moved by Prof. Shah. For one thing, the Honourable Minister will remember that when he moved one of his amendments last Friday, he was in a very despondent mood.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Who?

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: Professor Shah. He says that he is quite helpless, that nobody seems to take his amendments seriously, and so on and so forth.

An Honourable Member: So, that is the reason for accepting his amendment?

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: No, no. It is one of the reasons, Sir, with due deference, I would ask my honourable friend Prof. Shah to have before him the example of my honourable friend Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad. It reminds me of a couplet which I learnt in my school—

"Pitch thy behaviour low thy projects high
So shalt thou humble and magnanimous be
For he who aims at the sky
Shoots higher than one who aims the tree".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's speech may be very interesting, but we have got a number of amendments and a number of clauses to go through.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: Yes, Sir. Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad sends about two thousand amendments, but he had various amendments accepted on the floor of this House. So, what I am saying is that the House is not unreasonable; it accepts the amendments, it does not reject them because they are too numerous.

So, on this particular amendment, Sir, I would ask the Honourable Minister to consider it because mines, houses and lands are also sometimes held in security, and when the debtor is unable to pay his debt the power should be left to the paying concerns to negotiate their sale so that the best value can be fetched and not only the debt will be liquidated but something will be left for the debtor.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Honourable Member is opposing the amendment!

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: He is arguing against the amendment!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The amendment is that a bank ought not to be allowed to deal in this property.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: I wanted to support it, Sir.

An Honourable Member: Take another chance.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: There is nothing to laugh at because this Bill has been drawn up in such an abstract way that it is difficult for us—even for a lawyer of some practice—to understand and follow it, and when a person of my position does not understand the plain meaning of these provisions, how much more difficult it would be to the ordinary constituents of a bank?

[Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri]

I rose up not so much for the acceptance or rejection of a particular provision, I rose up only with a view to have some discussion in the matter. If the matter is further discussed it will be seen that there are persons in this House—there may be honourable members in this House, I say with due deference—who may be in a more helpless position than myself in understanding this clause. So, I would ask the honourable Minister to elucidate the real meaning of this clause.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava. Sir, in regard to this amendment, I consider that the reasons advanced by Prof. K. T. Shah are weighty and we should be well advised in accepting this amendment. If the prohibition in regard to banking companies extends even to particular kinds of goods excepting those which are mentioned in the Explanation, I do not understand why a banking company should be allowed to deal in lands, forests, mines and houses. The essential work of a banking company is that it deals in such commodities in which money can be advanced and money can be recovered very easily. If the money is locked up in lands, forests, mines and houses, then the essential purpose of this legislation will be lost. In fact, the amendment moved by Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad was clear enough and if that had been accepted the language would have appeared to us much more clear and the mistake which Srijut Chaudhuri had made would not have occurred. Clause 8 is so involved that the real meaning of the clause is rather obscure. The real point at issue is if you disallow these companies to meddle in respect of transactions regarding goods as with immovable property, then is it justifiable to allow the banking companies to deal in lands, forests, mines and houses? I feel this amendment is certainly very weighty and should be accepted by the House.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I regret, Sir, that I am not in a position to accept this amendment because I have had it very carefully examined and the Select Committee also went very carefully into this matter, and I feel that the practical interests of banking would be sufficiently met and the dangers referred to by Prof. Shah would be sufficiently avoided by the provision as it stands in this section.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in clause 8 of the Bill, after the word 'goods' occurring in line three, the words 'land, forests, mines or houses' be inserted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in clause 8 of the Bill, for the words 'realisation of security', the words 'realisation of any security' be substituted."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is not necessary.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Sir, this amendment is quite unnecessary.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: It may be unnecessary in the sense that it expresses the meaning, but a piece of legislation should be a work of art and should be free from all defects and should be incapable of further improvement. So, the maximum attention should be paid to draftsmanship. I suggest the amendment from that point of view. Not that it is necessarily better than what the text says, but it is suggested to the House for consideration. We should not grudge any little consideration which a Bill of this magnitude, and importance coming from a Minister of eminence, deserves.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Unfortunately, Sir, my aesthetic judgment differs from that of my honourable friend in this matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As it stands, the clause is more comprehensive.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: But the word "any" would have improved the text.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In view of what the Honourable Minister has said, does the honourable member propose to press his amendment?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: No. Sir, I do not press it. I beg to move:

"That in clause 8 of the Bill, for the words 'buy or sell or barter', the words 'buy, sell or barter' be substituted."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Sir, I propose to accept it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in clause 8 of the Bill, for the words 'buy or sell or barter', the words 'buy, sell or barter' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I beg to move:

"That in the Proviso to clause 8 of the Bill, for the words 'on the commencement' the words 'at the commencement' be substituted."

The proviso says that this Section shall not apply to any such business as aforesaid which was in the course of being transacted on the commencement of this Act. The word "on" refers to an event, not a point of time. The word "at" refers to a particular moment when the Act comes into force. When we say "on a certain thing happening" it does not refer to a point of time but it merely means "some time after" the happening of an event. I submit that the word "at" is more appropriate because it refers to a particular moment when the Act comes into force.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I am sorry I do not accept it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in the Proviso to clause 8 of the Bill, for the words 'on the commencement' the words 'at the commencement' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in the Proviso to clause 8 of the Bill, the following be added at the end:

'or within such extended time as the Reserve Bank may from time to time allow not exceeding five years from such commencement'."

The prohibition in the clause will not apply to business which was in course of being transacted at the commencement of the Act, if completed within a year of such commencement. I want to give the Reserve Bank power to extend the time in suitable cases to facilitate the completion of such transactions which may be delayed by a hitch.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I am sorry I cannot accept.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in the Proviso to clause 8 of the Bill, the following be added at the end:

'or within such extended time as the Reserve Bank may from time to time allow not exceeding five years from such commencement'."

The motion was negatived.

Prof. K. T. Shah: I beg to move:

"That to clause 8 of the Bill, the following further Proviso be added:

"Provided further that, notwithstanding anything contained in this section or in section 6, no bank shall be barred from shaping the policy or taking a direct or active share in the management of any industrial or commercial enterprise or utility, to whose capital it has subscribed more than twenty per cent. of the total capital stock of that company, or whose shares, bonds or debentures, have been acquired in the ordinary course of business by a bank, aggregating twenty per cent. of the capital of the bank, by nominating one or more directors on the board of such concerns, or appointing managers, accountants, secretaries or agents, for the efficient conduct of policy and economic management of any such concern."

This amendment becomes necessary notwithstanding the fact that the legislation is said to be confined to commercial banks; because, after all, under the provisions of this Bill it is possible—it will be possible—for a bank to be interested in the working of an industrial concern by subscribing a given percentage upto a maximum of its capital. In the case of the capital investment of a bank in any given concern exceeding 20 per cent., it is obvious that the bank's own investment requires that it should have some direct association in the policy and management and general efficient working of the concern. The provisions of this Bill as it stands do not give that direct association to banks in the efficient and proper conduct of industrial or commercial enterprise in which the interests of the shareholders are involved.

It is true that we have devised a separate Corporation for industrial finance proper, and that there it is supposed to be the function of that organisation to help in the industrial development of the country. There, also, provision has been made I believe—I am speaking from memory—for the Corporation appointing its own Directors. I am taking that analogy for this type of banking also under the circumstances, and contingencies specified in the amendment. It is not at all unlikely or impossible that banks may have to have—may come to have—direct concern in the success of any given enterprise and collectively of all establishments in an industry.

Even though this is a law relating to commercial banking, industrial concerns will not be barred from going and seeking assistance of banks in the ordinary course of their business. And if that assistance is rendered up to the degree specified in the capital stock of that business, then I think it would be proper and necessary and desirable, in the interests of the shareholders of and the depositors in the bank, that the bank should have some voice in the management and even directing of policy of the concern.

I have, therefore provided that the bank shall not be, legally, barred from nominating its own Directors or its representatives as Director in the concern in whose capital it is substantially interested, or if need be, in the appointment of Managers, Secretaries, Accountants etc. that that other concern may need for efficient and satisfactory conduct of its business. Here is an amendment which is designed to serve the interests of the bank itself more fully, and as such I hope it will not be objected to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That to clause 8 of the Bill, the following further Proviso be added:

"Provided further that, notwithstanding anything contained in this section or in section 6, no bank shall be barred from shaping the policy or taking a direct or active share in the management of any industrial or commercial enterprise or utility, to whose capital it has subscribed more than twenty per cent. of the total capital stock of that company, or whose shares, bonds or debentures, have been acquired in the ordinary course of business by a bank, aggregating twenty per cent. of the capital of the bank, by nominating one or more directors on the board of such concerns, or appointing managers, accountants, secretaries or agents, for the efficient conduct of policy and economic management of any such concern."

Shri Mahavir Tyagi (U.P.: General): Sir, I rise to oppose this amendment. I am really surprised that a confirmed socialist and an economist like Professor Shah should have made this suggestion. Now, the bane of our economic and industrial life in India has been that those who have money, the capitalists, have a tendency of jumping on to every trade or industry where there is a chance of making a profit. In other countries we hear of iron princes, cement princes, textile princes and so on about those who specialise in one particular industry or other and develop that industry alone. But here in India an industrialist will go from selling mungphali and singhara to anything, iron, or cement or textile or all, wherever there is a chance of profit. They come into politics too, and also to advertising agencies. Sir, if we allow this sort of thing to continue, our industries cannot develop. The capitalists would dominate over all the industries as if the profits made were meant only for the chosen few. Therefore, I feel that it is bad to allow a man to go from one industry to another. If we allow that, then there will be no planning in our industrial or economic life. Therefore, I would impress upon this House that if it is their desire to make better the industries, we should see that people engaged in one industry are not generally encouraged to jump to any other industry, so that they may be induced to effect improvements in their own industry.

To allow banks to come and capture the industries is a still worse thing. Banks, are the real nucleus of the capitalists. Industrialists at least do something constructive. They produce or create and manufacture articles. But what do the banks do? They do nothing except perhaps manufacture cheques or papers. Banking is not a productive trade, it is not a productive business. Banks are only centres of exchange, and to that extent they may be helpful. That is all. But if we allow the banks to dominate over the industrial enterprises, then it will mean that the banks alone will be having the industrialisation of the country in their hands. They will capture all industries. I wonder how Professor Shah, a man of high intelligence, honesty and integrity and idealism—he never allows any grit to get mixed in his ideology—should have come forward with such a suggestion. I am afraid, this is a capitalistic amendment that he has moved. It is the very antithesis of socialism, and so I oppose it.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I must share the surprise of the honourable member at the fact that Professor Shah should have sponsored this amendment. This amendment, I think, seeks to achieve a purpose which is quite outside the scope determined for the operation of banks in this Bill. Clause 6 defines the purposes and the kinds of business in which banking companies could engage, and clause 19 defines the kind of business in which subsidiary companies could engage in, and these are entirely inconsistent with the amendment now proposed by my honourable friend Professor Shah. And also, last Friday, I believe, Professor Shah himself moved an amendment which dealt with more or less the same kind of problem, I think, and the House very rightly rejected it. In view of this I submit to the House that there is no case for accepting the amendment.

Shri B. P. Jhunjhunwala (Bihar: General): On a point of information, Sir. Is there any bar to banking concern taking up the management of a concern?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I take it that Professor Shah's amendment relates to concerns in which a banking company has a financial interest. That I think is the reference in his amendment. That is covered by clause 19 of this Bill which determines the purposes of subsidiary companies and that gives you the various directions in which banking companies could control or direct the business of subsidiary companies.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member wants to know whether there is any specific prohibition in the Bill against banking companies directing the managements, or controlling them.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: It is perfectly clear from the relevant clauses in this Bill that the idea of banking companies taking direct interest in the working or development of an industrial concern is not within the scope of this Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That to clause 8 of the Bill, the following further Proviso be added:

'Provided further that, notwithstanding anything contained in this section or in section 6, no bank shall be barred from shaping the policy or taking a direct or active share in the management of any industrial or commercial enterprise or utility, to whose capital it has subscribed more than twenty per cent. of the total capital stock of that company or whose shares, bonds or debentures, have been acquired in the ordinary course of business by a bank, aggregating twenty per cent. of the capital of the bank by nominating one or more directors on the board of such concerns, or appointing managers, accountants, secretaries or agents, for the efficient conduct of policy and economic management of any such concern.'

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I would like to know from the Honourable Minister whether he would be able to accept that amendment—I mean the amendment seeking to substitute "mentioned" for "referred to."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I do not think I can accept it.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I do not move it, then.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That Clause 8, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 8, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I beg to move:

"That in clause 9 of the Bill, for the words and figures 'sections 6 and 8', the word and figure 'section 6' be substituted."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I accept the amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in clause 9 of the Bill, for the words and figures 'sections 6 and 8', the word and figure 'section 6' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I beg to move:

"That in clause 9 of the Bill, before the first Proviso the following new sub-clause (2) be inserted and the existing clause be numbered as sub-clause (1):—

(2) The Reserve Bank may in any particular case extend the aforesaid period of seven years by such period not exceeding one year at a time so however that the total period does not exceed five years when it is satisfied that such extension would be in the interests of the depositors of the banking company."

It transposes the second Proviso and converts it into second sub-clause.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: You cannot put a substantive provision in the way of a Proviso.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: As I learn that the Honourable Minister is not willing to accept it, I do not wish to pursue the matter.

Shri O. V. Alagesan (Madras: General): Sir, I beg to move:

"That in clause 9 of the Bill, after the word 'thereof' occurring in line 4, the words 'or from the commencement of the Act, whichever ends later' be inserted."

The object of my amendment is this: It covers the cases of property that has been acquired before the passing of this Act. In cases where properties have been acquired 12 years or so before the passing of this Act, even the Reserve Bank cannot have the power of granting extension.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I think my honourable friend's amendment raises a point of some importance.

Shri O. V. Alagesan: Since restriction is imposed anew, the time granted for disposing should apply to property acquired before the Act is passed as well as after. This amendment will enable property acquired before the passing of the Act to be disposed of within seven years after the passing of the Act. I hope the honourable Minister will accept it.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I am prepared to accept this amendment subject to a small verbal change. Instead of the words "or from the commencement of the Act, whichever ends later", we should have "or from the commencement of this Act, whichever is later."

Shri O. V. Alagesan: I accept the amendment.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: As a matter of fact, I think the suggestion made by my honourable friend is to restore in the Bill revised by the Select Committee, the provision that was in existence in the draft Bill. The original section 10, which was revised by the Select Committee, contained those words "within a period of seven years from the date of its acquisition or from the commencement of this Act whichever is later". I must confess, I do not think the Select Committee considered this particular point. It was probably a slip on the part of the Select Committee. The point raised is important and has got to be covered by the Bill. So, as far as I am concerned, I accept the amendment subject to the verbal change indicated.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in clause 9 of the Bill, after the word 'thereof' occurring in line 4, the words 'or from the commencement of this Act, whichever is later', be inserted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That Clause 9, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 9, as amended, was added to the Bill.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock, Mr. Deputy Speaker (Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar) in the Chair.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That part (a) of sub-clause (1) of clause 10 of the Bill, be omitted."

In moving this amendment, I only seek clarification of the object of this clause which reads: No banking company (a) shall employ or be managed by a managing agent. I do not wish to press it.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: This really raises a question of policy and I think it has now been generally admitted that the sphere open to managing agents should be considerably curtailed and I think it is the general position in regard to concerns like banking, insurance and so on, where the scope left for a managing agent is very little; on the other hand the liability of the system being open to abuses is greater, and therefore the policy of Government is not to have banks managed by managing agency. It is in keeping, I think, with admitted opinion of financial experts on the question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The amendment is not pressed.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I desire to know whether my amendment will be acceptable.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: No, Sir.

Prof. K. T. Shah: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in part (b) (ii) of sub-clause (1) of clause 10 of the Bill, after the word 'company', the words 'or is in excess of the maximum prescribed, if any' be inserted."

Sir, the amended portion will then read: "whose remuneration or part of whose remuneration takes the form of commission or of a share in the profits of the company; or is in excess of the maximum prescribed, if any." By this amendment, Sir, I wish to draw attention to the necessity of prescribing a definite maximum sum that could possibly be given away by way of remuneration for management.

The principle Sir, has already been accepted that in regard to banking enterprise there shall be no managing agent of the type that we have in other industrial or commercial concerns in this country. In itself the principle in my eyes is highly objectionable. It has been calculated that managing agents take away far more than even perhaps share-holders get and of course, if the managing agents were allowed in the case of banking companies, they would get much more than the depositors who would get their interests on their fixed deposits, which is of a very low rate.

In that case, Sir, it is of the utmost importance and necessity, in my opinion, that we should accept the principle of there being a maximum, whatever that maximum may be; and that maximum should be prescribed by rules made by the Reserve Bank, for which power is given under this Bill.

The need for a maximum being fixed in that manner need not be elaborated, inasmuch as the other provisions also of this Bill aim at some kind of limitation, for instance, the dividends that can be distributed or other advantages of banking business by the proprietors or those who help in their success. On this ground, Sir, therefore, I have proposed the amendment that if any maximum is prescribed, managing commission shall not exceed that. I hope my amendment will be accepted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Amendment moved:

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: I am afraid, it would not be correct to accept this amendment for the reason that we are dealing with banking companies of varying sizes. There may be banking companies with a capital of rupees five lakhs or less and some others which have about rupees two crores and that is why this particular clause has been put in this way. Clause 10 (i) (b) (iii) and sub-clause (2) are really the operating clauses. Supposing we fix the maximum, then the maximum has necessarily to be one that suits a company with a capital of two crores size and not with a capital of 100 crores and so we say the maximum should be Rs. 4,000; that will be the maximum for a company with about rupees two crores of capital. I think it would really be meaningless, and perhaps an encouragement that smaller companies should pay larger sums. sub-clause (1) (b) (iii) says; "whose remuneration is on a scale disproportionate, according to the normal standards prevailing in banking business, to the resources of the company", and who is to judge the particular thing? It must be left to the Reserve Bank. I think, the intention that my honourable friend, Prof. K. T. Shah has will be adequately subserved by the provisions of sub-clause (1) (b) (iii) and sub-clause (2) rather than putting in amendments, which apparently he has in mind by introducing later in the object of this particular clause. Therefore, I feel that the House should not accept this particular amendment.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I agree.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in part (b) (ii) of sub-clause (1) of clause 10 of the Bill, after the word 'company', the words 'or is in excess of the maximum prescribed, if any' be inserted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That to part (b) of sub-clause (1) of clause 10 of the Bill, the following Proviso be added :-

"Provided that the bar to the employment imposed by sub-clause (i) shall cease to operate on the expiration of five years from the date of the adjudication, suspension or the compounding or the conviction as the case may be, or where the Reserve Bank considers that the bar to employment should no longer apply."

Sir, this part (b) of sub-clause (1) of clause 10 says that a banking company shall not employ any person who has been adjudicated insolvent or has suspended payment or has compounded with his creditors or who has been found guilty of an offence involving moral turpitude. According to the election laws there is a provision that even in such cases a time limit is given after the expiration of which these powers are not considered sufficient to disqualify a man from being a Member even of this Legislature. So when a time limit is supposed to cure the disqualifications as to membership of this House, it is meet and proper that the same time limit should apply in the case of appointments to banking companies. With regard to insolvency, it was perhaps thought that insolvency is a dishonest affair and that compounding with creditors and others is a disreputable business. But there may be very honest men who may be in difficulties, perhaps for no fault of their own. The disqualification should not therefore adhere to them throughout life. So I have attempted to put down a limit of five years. In the case of conviction for an offence involving moral turpitude, the same rule could apply, because it may be that a man may be guilty of a technical offence, in which the element of consciousness or intention might be very small. In these circumstances, if he is not to be considered to be unfit to be elected as a Member of this Legislature, he should not on that ground alone be considered unfit to hold any position in the banking company.

The next point is that I want to give the Reserve Bank an over-riding power. In any case they may on consideration of the circumstances of each case exempt a man. It is to avoid some hard cases where an unfortunate man, on account of a sentence or an insolvency through no fault of his, would suffer a disqualification throughout life. (Mr. Homi Modi: "That is not your amendment." It is "either/or".) So that these are the two conditions: the first condition is that on the expiration of five years, all disqualifications should be wiped out; and within those five years, the disqualification might be removed by the Reserve Bank in a suitable case. (Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: "It may be removed earlier!") Yes, that may be so. If this limit of five years or the alternative condition is not acceptable on these specific terms, it may be reconsidered by the House. I have suggested a way out so that a disqualification should not be permanent or absolutely irrevocable in every case. It should depend on the circumstances of the case. It is possible that very efficient and honest men may be shut out.

[Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad]

With these words, I submit that the amendment should be considered on the merits and, if necessary, revised.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That to part (b) of sub-clause (I) of clause 10 of the Bill, the following Proviso be added:

"Provided that the bar to the employment imposed by sub-clause (i) shall cease to operate on the expiration of five years from the date of the adjudication, suspension or the compounding or the conviction as the case may be, or where the Reserve Bank considers that the bar to employment should no longer apply."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: My view about this amendment is this. In Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad's amendment there is an alternative provision: "or where the Reserve Bank considers that the bar to employment should no longer apply," and it seems to me therefore that it would be possible for handling cases of this kind with reference to clause 53 of the Bill. In other words, what Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad practically says by the introduction of this alternative provision is that this is a matter which must be considered with reference to the discretion which is vested in the Central Government and the Reserve Bank in clause 53. But I am prepared to say this that if the House generally feels that there are likely to be frequent cases of a kind which would make the operation of this particular sub-clause difficult, I am prepared to drop it altogether rather than accept Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad's amendment. I do not think it is going to matter very much whether we drop part (i) of sub-clause (b). My own reaction to it is this: that if the feeling in the House is that this clause might be dropped, I should be prepared to accept a suggestion of that kind.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: If the clause is dropped as the Honourable Minister has suggested then it would be acceptable to me. With regard to the amendment I have put it to elicit a clarification or a decision on the merits and not on the exact terms.

Mr. Homi Mody (Bombay: General): I have not followed the proceedings. The Honourable the Finance Minister suggests that this clause be deleted so that Banks can employ insolvents!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Can insolvents or convicts be employed?

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: Actually this particular sub-clause was an introduction in Select Committee, and at that time the intention was that it should apply only to senior officers of a bank. As it is it would apply even to chaprassis. If a chaprassi had compounded with his creditors or had been adjudicated an insolvent, it might apply to him. But the thing can be got over by what the Honourable Minister has said by the power of exemption under clause 53. As he has said if the House feels that in its operation it would be far more difficult and would perhaps affect quite a number of people, an exemption in every case would be very difficult. I suppose the path of wisdom is to eliminate it because it is not in the original Bill. As my honourable friend sitting in the front seat of the Opposition realizes no bank will employ a person who has been adjudicated an insolvent and has not been sufficiently discharged. It will affect the bank's reputation which is the primary thing. But the fact that a clerk or chaprassi, for various reasons has had to undergo this particular misfortune does not necessarily mean that the bank need send him out of a job. I would rather support the idea that no serious harm will be done by an elimination of this particular sub-clause rather than that the House should accept the involved amendment of my honourable friend, which his vigilance has enabled him to suggest to this particular clause.

Mr. Homi Mody: I am sorry I cannot agree with the Honourable the Finance Minister or with Mr. Krishnamachari. The Bill seeks to impose all manner of restrictions upon the practice in banking companies, and if you leave this sub-section out and enable a bank to employ a man who has been judged guilty of an act involving moral turpitude or insolvency, I can easily imagine a few institutions in which such people would be employed. I grant the argument that probably it is immaterial whether a chaprassi becomes an insolvent or not and that his insolvency should not be a bar.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: And if the chaprassi is convicted of theft?

Mr. Homi Mody: I am very glad the Chair reinforces my argument! Anyway, Sir, what I was going to urge was that we cannot discriminate between one type of servant of a bank and another. It might be a manager who might be employed, and he may have gone to jail. It is curious that I, in alone minority of one, should plead for the purification of banking operations while my friends there should want to let in all manner of objectionable practices. I do not think this sub-clause ought to come out.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: In view of the opinion expressed by Mr. Mody I should like to ask him with your permission, whether in that case, he would accept Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad's amendment.

Mr. Homi Mody: I do not accept the amendment.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I take it that Mr. Mody's view is what I originally expressed, namely that in case there is any hardship or there are special cases it would be a matter for determination with reference to clause 53.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That to part (b) of sub-clause (I) of clause 10 of the Bill, the following Proviso be added

"Provided that the bar to the employment imposed by sub-clause (i) shall cease to operate on the expiration of five years from the date of the adjudication, suspension or the compounding or the conviction as the case may be, or where the Reserve Bank considers that the bar to employment should no longer apply."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I would like to know from the Honourable Minister whether he would be in a position to accept my amendments. They are merely a rearrangement of the parts.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I am prepared to accept the first.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I beg to move:

"That for part (b) (iii) of sub-clause (I) of clause 10 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

"(iii) whose remuneration is, according to the normal standards prevailing in banking business, on a scale disproportionate to the resources of the company."

This is only a rearrangement and it has found acceptance in the Honourable Minister's heart.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That for part (b) (iii) of sub-clause (I) of clause 10 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

"(iii) whose remuneration is, according to the normal standards prevailing in banking business, on a scale disproportionate to the resources of the company."

The motion was adopted.

Prof. K. T. Shah: Sir, I move:

"That in part (c) (i) of sub-clause (I) of clause 10 of the Bill, the words 'not being a subsidiary company of the banking company' be omitted."

[Prof. K. T. Shah]

The amended clause would read "No. banking company shall be managed by any person who is a director of any other company", and the rest of the words are to be omitted. If you do not desire a banking company to be managed by any director of any other company, I do not see why an exception should be made in favour of a company which is a subsidiary of the banking company. Unless I totally misunderstand the meaning of this clause it seems to me that a specific exception is made in favour of a possible management or direction by someone connected as director of a subsidiary company of the bank. I might have understood a director of a bank becoming the director of a subsidiary company by nomination of the bank. That, however, the House has negatived. And here is the reverse, namely the director of a subsidiary company being allowed by specific exception, as it were, to become a manager or director of the bank. That is a kind of logic or a process which I do not at all understand: hence my amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in part (c) (i) of sub-clause (1) of clause 10 of the Bill, the words 'not being a subsidiary company of the banking company' be omitted."

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: It is in relation to Section 19. The position is that these words have been put in merely because of the reference to a subsidiary company and the restricted manner in which a banking company can have a subsidiary company. Without this provision here Section 19 will become more or less inoperative, at any rate, the exceptions taken therein. The amendment has no meaning in the context of the entire Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Unless the doubt is that on the date on which a director of a company is appointed he ought not to be a director of the subsidiary company. It is also otherwise namely if he becomes a director of the bank he ought not to be a director of the subsidiary company.

The question is:

"That in part (c) (i) of sub-clause (1) of clause 10 of the Bill, the words 'not being a subsidiary company of the banking company' be omitted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 10 of the Bill, for the words 'whether remuneration is on a scale disproportionate, according to the normal standards prevailing in banking business,' the following be substituted:

'whether the remuneration is according to the normal standards prevailing in banking business, on a scale disproportionate'."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I am prepared to accept the amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 10 of the Bill, for the words 'whether remuneration is on a scale disproportionate, according to the normal standards prevailing in banking business,' the following be substituted:

'whether the remuneration is according to the normal standards prevailing in banking business, on a scale disproportionate'."

The motion was adopted.

Prof. K. T. Shah rose—

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: On a point of order, Sir, am I entitled to speak on sub-clause (1)? I wanted to draw the attention of the Honourable Minister to sub-clause (1) (c) (ii) which relates to one "who is engaged in any other business or vocation."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: After the amendments are disposed of I shall put sub-clause after sub-clause if he so desires and then the honourable member can speak.

Prof. K. T. Shah: I beg to move:

"That after sub-clause (2) of clause 10 of the Bill, the following new sub-clause be added:

(3) The Reserve Bank of India shall make rules and lay down scales for the remuneration of the Managing Director; General, Departmental or Branch Manager; Accountant, Secretary, Agent and any other executive officer of a Bank, with due regard to the circumstances and conditions prevailing in the area in which such bank or a branch thereof operates, subject to a maximum salary and emoluments in the case of all executive officers of the bank named above, not exceeding the maximum salary and emoluments payable to the highest civil administrative officer in the Government of India.

Explanation.—The Ministers, their Deputies, Assistants, or Parliamentary Secretaries, shall not be considered as coming within the category of the highest civil administrative officer in the Government of India.

(4) No one shall be appointed Managing Director; General, Departmental or Branch Manager, Accountant, Secretary, Agent or any other executive officer of any bank or a branch thereof, who has not the requisite academic qualifications or practical experience of banking business, as laid down by the Reserve Bank in this behalf, and approved by the Legislature."

Here is a principle which I should think has the authority of a great and famous resolution of the Indian National Congress. Unfortunately, it is at present observed more in breach than in honouring it. It will be still fresh in the minds of most members, I hope, that the Karachi Congress some 18 years ago laid down the maximum salary payable to any officer of the Government, from the Governor-General downwards, as Rs. 500 per month. With whatever enthusiasm that resolution was passed, at the present time hardly anywhere do I see any reference to it and much less any observance of that principle. (Shri H. V. Kamath: "Inflation.") I am coming to that. I wanted to reserve it for a later occasion, but I have been made to precipitate this argument. I have been given the stock argument of inflation. It is a very interesting phenomenon in human nature and practical politics that.....

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Cannot the honourable member reserve this to some other time as he himself said?

Prof. K. T. Shah: I am very grateful to you for suggesting that course. But if interruptions take place, one is obliged to answer them on the spot for fear that one might omit to do justice to the honourable members who care to interrupt, or one might not do justice to oneself.

Shri H. V. Kamath (C.P. and Berar: General): I will remind him on a subsequent occasion.

An Honourable Member: The interruption is withdrawn.

Prof. K. T. Shah: The interruption having been made cannot be easily withdrawn without its being expunged from the records.

Shri H. V. Kamath: I have not withdrawn it, but kept it alive for a subsequent occasion.

Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi (Madras: General): It is a helpful interruption.

Prof. K. T. Shah: You will see how helpful it is when I come to it. It is an easy way to rush into the public with very appealing nostrums, and lay down grand principles which, if I may say so without any disrespect, are made with one's tongue in one's cheek; and say 'we shall be content, and expect all our public officers to be content—from the highest executive, the head of the State downwards with salary or emoluments not exceeding so much. Idealists who are not afraid of being regarded by their contemporaries as having a screw loose somewhere in the upper storey may not like to lay down such a proposition. But when we have to deal with hard headed businessmen, who make it a practice of telling us that idealist comes into being only when they are in dotage,—without any possibility of a lucid interval between the two—when we have to deal with such hard-headed businessmen, we have to remember that some sort of sugar-coating has to be added. (An Honourable Member: “To the bitter pill”.) The pill is always bitter particularly to those who are living in luxury at the expense of others. But even to those who just interrupt with an income below the minimum chargeable to an Income-tax (Shri H. V. Kamath: “You have a very good memory!”) I do have a long memory, but a short sight. From them also one might expect a support which will be, I hope, not merely of moral sympathy but also of actual voting.

The point I was making was that when we are dealing in this matter with practical bankers who are accustomed to note the financial standing of other people and keep perfectly confidential their own, it is necessary to make regulations for laying down, with due regard to the prevailing conditions and circumstances, scales of salary and emoluments that the executive officers of the bank should receive whether at the head office or in any branch office.

A little while ago when the House was considering an amendment of mine regarding the emoluments of the manager—we do not call him now the managing agent—it was said that any suggestion of a maximum would be “impracticable”. I know that in some cases what are called the under-studies become even more important than the principal sponsors of a measure. The argument advanced a few minutes ago that it would be impossible for the Reserve Bank to lay down the scales in respect of a bank, for example, whose assets may go up to Rs. 100 crores with a capital of rupees two crores, failed to appeal to me.

I for one believe that it is possible to lay down not only fixed, but varying or sliding scales. As a matter of fact the amendment suggests that, with due regard to the conditions and circumstances prevailing in different parts where branches are operating, you may have varying scales. The maximum is a matter of principle, and the scales may change taking into account the conditions and circumstances. Otherwise you could not really be doing any justice.

The question really boils down to this. Do you or do you not wish to have this principle that there shall be an upper limit to the emoluments of Bank managers. Sir, on the day when we were having a general discussion on the motion that the Bill be taken into consideration, my honourable friend the Finance Minister told us that he felt, while he was listening to me, in a reminiscent mood. The reminiscence called to his mind many things I fancied there were many at least which ultimately left him with the conclusion that if he were to revert to his old love—I do not suggest that he is running away from it—he would not be able to teach any economic principle with anything like conviction. He may have had no judicial convictions against him, but he has I am sure, or had at least certain political and economic convictions. When I listened to my honourable friend that he may not be able to teach these doctrines of economics with any degree of conviction, I felt a moment of despondency, not of the type that my friend Mr. Chaudhuri referred to—I am never despondent in that sense—but of a great feeling of despondency that a man so sound, so versatile, so wise as our Finance Minister, should confess, in a public place like this, that all his convictions were almost like illusions, and that he is richer in having lost them. I felt it as a matter of great despair and chagrin for me—not for my own sake but for the sake of the country whose destinies in the financial field he is directing. May I also remind him and the House of another reminiscence to which he was a party. That was about twentyfive years ago.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Of course these observations were made; but the honourable member may choose another opportunity to reply to them.

Prof. K. T. Shah: It seems, Sir, that only my reminiscences are to be interrupted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member has already said enough.

Prof. K. T. Shah: I accept it with my own apologies and only wish to say that the one last thing I had reserved like the song of Karna, namely the argument about inflation which was the subject matter of an interruption. It may now be resumed with your permission. It is an interesting observation in human affairs that we on the one hand ourselves create inflation; and then we say, because there is inflation, we must be compensated for it. This amounts to saying that for any offence that we may commit, instead of being punished we ought to be compensated. It is a logic which does not penetrate my thick skull. I cannot quite understand it, that those who have had it in their power to check or control or restrict, if not avoid altogether, inflation should themselves be saying that inflation being there we should be compensated for it.

Sir, inflation is the.....

Mr. Homi Mody: Coming now to the amendment!

Prof. K. T. Shah: What? I am sorry if the honourable member has not the courage to speak up and get my answer, but I shall not be deterred by any sides like that. He is the only man who is not able to speak up unless when he wants to.....

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The amendment has a limited scope.

Prof. K. T. Shah: I am confining myself only to that, that the amendment has the limited scope of fixing the maximum. That is the important thing. And the maximum lead me to give the authority and precedent of a Congress resolution. After all, in this House, we are accustomed to honour precedent and respect tradition; and I have quoted the most venerable precedent of no less a body than the Indian National Congress, of which you Sir, are such a distinguished ornament. And, therefore, I ought to have the indulgence of the House in putting forward this amendment and quoting this authority in support. Do you think I am going beyond the scope of my argument in offering you such a sacred and reverenceable precedent? Then, I would apologise once again—Apologies are very easy with me.

The argument of inflation, Sir, to be more serious, is really misleading. This is making of the argument of inflation a fetish, and a vicious circle. On the one hand, we set in motion those forces—and bankers are particularly liable to do so—we set in motion those particular forces which lead to inflation; and then claim that because of that we should not be penalised or we should be compensated. All that I am asking, however, is not that you should ignore inflation—I am not asking that. After all, you can say and you may say that this inflation was not created by us because we were not in power at the time when the inflation began. I agree.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I ask the Honourable Member if by referring to inflation he is supporting the argument of the honourable Minister himself?

Prof. K. T. Shah: Sir, I understand that there is some excuse on the other side. If the other side is utterly inexcusable, then I have nothing to say.

[Prof. K. T. Shah]

The point I am making is that those forces having been started; and inflation having occurred, we have to deal with it, and I can only suggest to deal with it in this manner. Some day a beginning must be made. If all the time we go on saying that the workers, for instance, shall not ask for further allowance and increased wages, because inflation is there and we must stop it, but that the superior officers will go on asking for it, then I am afraid no inflation can ever be stopped. Unless wasteful expenditure of Government were stopped; unless all these increases were put an end to; and unless a definite limit was placed upon these avenues of waste, I am afraid there would be no chance of our curing inflation. Hence, our ability to effect any real economy in the conduct of our affairs, whether of the nation as a whole or of a section of it which deals in banking, is nil.

It is, therefore, for this reason that I begin the process at the very top. From the Managing Director downwards there shall be a maximum fixed. And I make no apology for stating that I do not believe in unlimited incomes in whatever form they come. I think it is important, following as we profess to do in the footsteps of the Father of the Nation, that we must accept, here and now, in this shape for example, the principle that in any business, industry or profession, there shall be a maximum; and that in any service, in any capacity, the maximum income available must be fixed by law.

I leave it for the moment to the Reserve Bank to make rules and govern it. It may be that you might speak of the income-tax as indirectly fixing the maximum. I agree, that also is a possibility. In fact, a very important executive officer of this country—a Minister—told me the other day that his whole income as such officer was being paid away by way of income-tax—for the last year, of course. That being his position, he may agree that the income is indirectly limited. But why do it indirectly? Why not directly? If it is your intention that there shall be equality, within the country; and that we shall not have the spectacle at one end of people having less than one meal per day, and at the other end people having so much that they do not know what to do with what they get, then I submit, Sir, that it is high time—when we have a chance like this—that we should lay down the maximum.

The principle of unlimited income is not denied by this clause itself. After all, it does say that it shall be in accordance with conditions and circumstances prevailing. That means, if it means anything, that the remuneration—shall be fixed, not in accordance with the sweet will of the Directors concerned. Having gone so far, I only ask, through my amendment, that we should go a little further to the logical conclusion, namely that there shall be a definite and legal, prescribed limit beyond which no salary or emolument can be paid. On that ground, I trust, there would be no objection.

I come next to the second part of the amendment, sub-clause (1) which I propose should be added. I am only requiring that there shall be definite qualifications, whether academic or the requisite training and experience needed for the proper conduct of banks.

Banking, I was told the other day, is a very sensitive plant. Or, was it said in reference to credit? But credit is in reference to banks, and therefore the two terms are interchangeable. If it is such a sensitive plant, then those who are concerned with the management and direction of it should also be, like Caesar's wife, above suspicion.

That being my ground, I think it is necessary, it is right and proper, that you should prescribe qualifications. I leave it again to the Reserve Bank to do so. We ignoramuses may not be able to do it—I do not mean the whole House, please, Sir, let nobody object to the expression, as I am only speaking for myself—ignoramuses like myself may not be able to prescribe the qualifications that might be expected, whether academic or otherwise, of would-be bankers, or from managers of the banks. But that there must be some qualification, I think no one in this House should deny, and that they should be laid down by rules under the Reserve Bank could also not be denied.

It appears to me, for instance, that as regards Directors the only qualification is the fitness of their cheque-book and nothing else. If there are others, of course, they are not publicly laid down; it may be for the Directors themselves or for prominent shareholders to decide. But whether it is a Managing Director or a General, Departmental or Branch Manager or others, the qualifications that go to the success of the bank—and success in terms measured as I have suggested on a previous occasion—must be definitely, categorically laid down. That is why this amendment which requires that the qualifications, both academic and practical, should be laid down.

I trust that both the amendments will commend themselves to the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That after sub-clause (2) of clause 10 of the Bill, the following new sub-clauses be added:

(5) The Reserve Bank of India shall make rules and lay down scales for the remuneration of the Managing Director; General, Departmental or Branch Manager; Accountant, Secretary, Agent and any other executive officer of a Bank, with due regard to the circumstances and conditions prevailing in the area in which such bank or a branch thereof operates, subject to a maximum salary and emoluments in the case of all executive officers of the bank named above, not exceeding the maximum salary emoluments payable to the highest civil administrative officer in the Government of India.

Explanation.—The Ministers, their Deputies, Assistants, or Parliamentary Secretaries, shall not be considered as coming within the category of the highest civil administrative officer in the Government of India.

(4) No one shall be appointed Managing Director; General, Departmental or Branch Manager, Accountant, Secretary, Agent or any other executive officer of any bank or a branch thereof, who has not the requisite academic qualifications or practical experience of banking business, as laid down by the Reserve Bank in this behalf, and approved by the Legislature."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: As usual, Prof. Shah's arguments have produced in my mind no conviction at all. If you think you are going to deal with the problem of a limit to remuneration, it must be taken as part of a general problem. It seems to me irrelevant to the purpose of this Bill that a limitation of this kind should be introduced. Apart from that, I think it is not a workable proposition and it is not necessary either.

As regards the second one, it is quite unnecessary to prescribe academic qualifications and if it comes to prescribing academic qualifications, I doubt if it will be possible even for the Reserve Bank to lay down qualification of a kind which will be opposite in every case.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That after sub-clause (2) of clause 10 of the Bill, the following new sub-clause be added:

(3) The Reserve Bank of India shall make rules and lay down scales for the remuneration of the Managing Director; General, Departmental or Branch Manager; Accountant, Secretary, Agent and any other executive officer of a Bank, with due regard to the circumstances and conditions prevailing in the area in which such bank or a branch thereof operates, subject to a maximum salary and emoluments in the case of all executive officers of the bank named above, not exceeding the maximum salary and emoluments payable to the highest civil administrative officer in the Government of India.

Explanation.—The Ministers, their Deputies, Assistants, or Parliamentary Secretaries, shall not be considered as coming within the category of the highest civil administrative officer in the Government of India."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That after sub-clause (2) of clause 10 of the Bill the following new sub-clause be added:

(3) No one shall be appointed Managing Director; General, Departmental or Branch Manager, Accountant, Secretary, Agent or any other executive officer of any bank or a branch thereof, who has not the requisite academic qualifications or practical experience of banking business, as laid down by the Reserve Bank in this behalf, and approved by the Legislature."

The motion was negatived.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: While our National Government is trying to destroy monopoly in every shape or kind it seems to me that discussions on this Bill have become a sort of monopoly which is only available to certain knowing members of this House. Others like me who do understand much of this banking business rise up and speak something and make a fool of themselves. (An Honourable Member: "You have got a monopoly of humour").

I should like to draw the attention of the House to the particular clause, sub-clause (ii) under (c) of sub-clause (1) which says: No banking company shall be managed by any person who is engaged in any other business or vocation. I want to know particularly whether this clause would stand in the way of anyone, who is engaged in any kind of business for his living, holding office as Managing Director of a banking company. This clause consists of two parts as it is, first, that no banking company shall employ or be managed by a managing agent. Secondly, no banking company shall employ any person who comes under the categories of (i), (ii), (iii) of sub-clause (b). Then we come to (c). Under this heading no bank can be managed by any person who comes under (i), (ii) and (iii) of sub-clause (c). From the proviso it is clear that managing Directors are intended to be covered by this sub-clause (c). The question which I am asking is this, whether in a province or place where banking is still undeveloped, where banking business is being newly started, a person who is a lawyer or doctor can hold office as managing director of a bank or not. As regards the definition of "vocation", not being very clear about its use, I consulted the dictionary and there vocation means "career or profession", so that a lawyer or doctor would come under this definition of vocation. Now, I want to ask the Honourable Minister and the House if they are aware that in the past impetus for business of this kind—banking and others—has been given in most cases by lawyers, and also those who come from Bengal and those who are familiar with things in Assam will know that eminent doctors—I think I can venture to mention a name,—that Doctor Bidan Chandra Roy is responsible for sponsoring many businesses and successful businesses in Assam and Bengal. So, if you say a lawyer or doctor or any other man who has some business cannot hold the position of managing director, it only means in other words that you do not want any new bank to be started.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Under the Indian Bar Councils Act, is not a lawyer prevented from engaging himself in any other trade or business?

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: With the permission of the High Court he can engage in any other work. My question is this. This clause says "shall be managed by any person." Does it include managing director or not? If it does not include, then there is no point in the Note of Dissent. I am asking about (c), whether "No banking company shall be managed by any person etc." includes managing director or not, and if so whether or not a person who is a lawyer or a doctor or a professional man would be prevented from becoming managing director of a bank. (Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: "Yes"). That is why I object. In that case, the amendment thrown out just now, moved by Prof. K. T. Shah, would become very relevant because a Parliamentary Secretary is not engaged in any business and does not engage in any vocation. So you have to select some persons who have absolutely no business, who is a vagabond, who has no profession, has nothing to do. So select that man and none else as a managing director. You confine your choice to a very limited sphere. This is in accordance with the remark made by Professor Shah in his Note of Dissent, which by the way, I may inform the House I am taking as scripture so far as this Banking Bill is concerned. He says, in para 17,—

"This Bill is, in fact, replete with apprehension or misgivings regarding the extension of branches of banks foundation of new banks. It seems to consider it dangerous and undesirable that banks should multiply or branchify even of the standard commercial type."

Mr. Homi Mody: Branchify?

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: 'Branchify' means giving birth to branches in several places. And Prof. Shah says,—

"The advent of new banks or increase of branches of existing banks may be a sign of danger from the point of view of depositors, of unsound methods of business; but they are indispensable for the effective development of the country's resources."

Sir, I would repeat his words, that new banks are indispensable for the effective development of the country's resources. He further says,—

"The law should, indeed, see that any unsound practice is prevented rather than branch banking be stopped, or increase in the number of existing bank branches is prevented."

Sir, I endorse these words, and I think the whole secret underlying the inclusion of this sub-clause to which I have taken exception is that you do not want new banks to be started. If that is the position, then provinces like Assam will be in a very unhappy and miserable condition. In Assam, a large number of banks with their headquarters or head-offices in other provinces were started, and all these branches have failed, even scheduled banks. The result is that people are now very unwilling to start branches or to subscribe to bank shares. They would naturally be willing to start banks in their own province so that they may take to task the men responsible for the failure of the bank. But in the face of this clause, when you restrict that neither a professional man nor a government servant, nor any other person engaged in any other business can become a managing director, no new bank can be started there, nor will they flourish, even if started. We will have to choose the kind of person who will be the managing director. He may be a professor who does not do any business, or a person who has ancestral income to live upon; such a person will be eligible for election. Others would not be. The right man is the one who does not do any business or who has no profession, he will be eligible for election. He may be illiterate, he may be half-educated, but all the same, he will be eligible. But a lawyer who understands something about this business he will not be eligible, nor a doctor. Sir, how are we to reconcile this position with our desire to develop banking in places where such development is very necessary, so that those areas may be developed?

Sir, it may be said that I have come by the back-door, in making these observations, instead of moving an amendment straightaway. But seeing the results of amendments moved here, seeing the massacre which is taking place, for which the rumour goes that you Sir, are responsible, to a great extent, it seems rather a very bold task to move an amendment. And if I may sound a personal note here, I fully give credit to Professor Shah for the interest he has taken in this Bill, and I rue the day—and I say this in his presence—when I expressed a pious wish that all his amendments may be stolen. But judging from the pains he has taken over this matter, I feel I should not have said so, and I withdraw those words, in this open House.

Shri Mohan Lal Gautam (U. P.: General): I want to make one or two observations regarding this clause 10. In sub-clause (1) (b) (i) it says, "has suspended payment or has compounded with his creditors" such persons shall not be eligible for employment in any banking company. I would draw the attention of the honourable Minister in charge especially to the cases of people who have come from Pakistan. So many people employed in banking Companies who left every pie of theirs in the Pakistan area and who were driven away from there, they might have compounded with their creditors or some banks whose headquarters were there in Pakistan or might have temporarily suspended their payment. If this clause applies to these people also, then it would be very cruel on the part of government to do so. It was because of the failure of Government to protect them and their property that they had to suspend their payments or that they had to compound with their creditors. Sir, this is one point I want to bring to the notice of the Honourable the Finance Minister.

The other point is regarding time-limit. There is no time-limit laid down when the director of a company has to give up the directorship and take up the management of a banking company. Suppose a person who is the managing director of a banking company and is also the director of another company, and he wants exemption for it, or wants to give up one, and he wants a week or two to decide the matter. This time he does not get. If to-day or tomorrow we pass this Bill and in a day or two the Governor-General's Assent also is obtained, then from the day it is an Act, the person who is on the managing agency of a banking company or is the manager, and is also the director of another company, he commits an offence. Sir, this should not be so, and I think there is a flaw here and the Drafting Committee has omitted to mention any time-limit within which such persons have to take a decision. As the wording of the clause stands, it is liable to misuse. Therefore, I would draw the attention of the Honourable Finance Minister to this point also.

Srijut Kuladhar Chaliha (Assam: General): It seems, that by sub-clause (1) (c) (ii) we have been in a trap. The words used there are "Who is engaged in any other business or vocation." Sir, I looked up the dictionary for the word 'vocation' and I find that it includes profession. So Mr. Chaudhury's objection is quite valid. He being a lawyer, would not like it. The word "vocation" there is troublesome, and I hope Government will be willing to accept its deletion. In that case the objection of Mr. Chaudhuri and others can be eliminated. Actually I looked up a dictionary and found that the word in its meaning includes "business, trade and profession."

You will find in clause 10 (I) (c) 'No banking company shall be managed by any person (i) who is a director of any other company, not being a subsidiary company of the banking company; or (ii) who is engaged in any other business or vocation'. The word 'vocation' should be deleted and if this is done the objection of my honourable friend Mr. Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri also can be met. I trust the Honourable Minister will see his way to accept this suggestion.

Babu Ramnarayan Singh (Bihar: General): I was not taking any part in the discussion on the Banking Bill. I was under the impression that, every Act passed by us must be for the good of the people and for the development of the interest concerned. In my own part of the country, as Mr. Chaudhuri has said, banking has not developed to any satisfactory degree. There were one or two banks in my town of Hazaribagh in my childhood days. I have seen that they were successfully managed by lawyers. According to this clause, they will be prevented from doing that. I support every word that has fallen from the lips of my friend Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri. The object of this Bill must be to allow the existing banks to carry on business and to encourage people to start new banks. But if this clause forms part of the Act I am afraid this activity of the people will be greatly discouraged. I therefore appeal to the honourable Minister either to do away with this clause altogether, as he now and then agreed to do in the course of this discussion, or to modify it in such a manner as not to discourage people doing banking business.

During the passage of this Bill I got the feeling that the honourable Minister has the impression that only those who have given notice of amendments are concerned with the measure. My friends who have given notice of amendments say: 'Will the honourable Minister be pleased to accept the amendment'? An understanding is come to between the Minister and such Members almost without the knowledge of the other Members of the House. It looks as if the House is nowhere and that only those who have given notice of amendments and the honourable Minister in charge are concerned with the legislation under consideration. This sort of procedure must go.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am afraid the honourable member has misunderstood what is happening. After all, if the Minister accepts an amendment he says so in the early stage of the discussion. But the matter is further discussed. In cases where the Minister does not accept any particular amendment he says so in the early stages and the Member concerned, instead of taking up the time of the House, expresses his desire not to press his amendment. I am sure nobody wants that unacceptable amendment should be discussed at length and ultimately thrown out.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: My friend Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad may not be able to convince the Minister about the utility of a certain amendment of his. But when we join hands with him and use respectful language, we may succeed in persuading the honourable Minister to agree with us and accept this or that amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is open to the honourable member sitting behind Mr. Naziruddin (Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri) to ask him to stand up for his right and move the amendments desired. After all, the honourable Minister has the backing of the House; otherwise, he would not be a Minister. Therefore wisdom lies in ascertaining the wishes of the Minister and adjust matters so as to progress further with the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Mr. Ramnarayan Singh is not right in saying that it was all a private arrangement. I am afraid to take up the time of the House and that is why now and then I consulted the Minister and agreed with his wishes. It was not any private arrangement. And I do not desire to ignore the House.

Babu Ramnarayan Singh: You have explained the matter in a satisfactory manner but many Members had the feeling that the business of the House was being conducted in the manner described by me.

Sir, as I was saying, this clause deserves to be modified or dropped. If the Honourable Minister is anxious that banking facilities are to be developed in rural areas and in areas where these facilities are rare, this clause must go.

Pandit Thakurdas Bhargava: In connection with part (c) the words are: 'No banking company shall be managed by any person who is a director of any other company, not being a subsidiary company of the banking company; or who is engaged in any other business or vocation.....' I want to understand the real significance of the word 'managed'. What does management consist of? Then again, what is meant by 'being managed by a managing agent'? Suppose there are some clerks, accountants and other officials in a banking concern. Will they be regarded as part of the management? Though the provision here is that no banking company shall be managed by any person who is engaged in any other business, its reverse effect will be that no person engaged in any banking business shall engage himself in any other vocation. So that a clerk or an accountant who is in the management of a concern will not be able to supplement his income by working in any other manner.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is the definition for 'management'.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: The question is as to what the meaning of the word 'managed' used as a verb. The word 'Managing agent' have been defined in clause 5 which says: " 'Managing agent' means a person, firm or company entitled to the management of the whole affairs of a company by virtue of an agreement....." We know what is a managing agent, but we do not know what is the exact and precise significance of the word "managed" in part (c) which says: "No bank shall be managed by any person....." Would it include the higher executive officers or will it include the chaprassis, the accountants, the clerks or other smaller officers also?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The law that we are passing is special in other respects. In the Company law, the honourable member will find that there is a definition of the word "manager" there.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: It is quite different here. The sub-clause says "No banking company shall be managed by any person". It does not follow that only a manager manages a company. The question is what is the exact meaning of the word "managed" here and if the smaller officials are included, then it will work a very great hardship. My submission, therefore, is that it should be confined only to the higher executive officers or the manager, etc. It should apply only to the highest and there is no bar against them.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: On a point of explanation, 'manager' or 'branch manager' will come under the category of employee. It is only intended for managing directors and 'manager' will be an employee and he will come under clause (b). Assistant Manager, Branch Manager they will also come under this.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: What would happen to the accountant or head clerk or other clerks?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I was going to say that the point raised by Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava is sufficiently covered by the distinction being made in this clause between employment and manager. Sub-clause (b) refers to people who are employed. Sub-clause (c) refers to people who are to manage and all these cases that Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava referred, that is to say the cases of clerks and so on, those would be covered by sub-clause (b).

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: The line is very thin. Will you call a person who is managing it partly, as a non-manager? Will he cease to be an employee? A manager will also be as much an employee or am I to understand that a manager can be a person who may be an insolvent or who has compounded with his creditors, if he does not come under sub-clause (b)?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Where an employee is also a manager, then sub-clause (c) begins to operate.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Madras: General): I fail to understand the force of the arguments raised by our friends here. If there is to be a bank and people are to be encouraged to place their money in safe keeping of the bank and if this money is to be properly invested and looked after properly, then certainly we should have people who make it their whole-time business to carry on this banking by providing the managerial staff and managerial services, etc. Surely, it is not contended that banking should be developed to the same position as extra Departmental Post Offices or village post offices, where you have got extra departmental employees, who are recruited for working two or three hours per day and for the rest of the time they carry on other professions. This is a very serious matter. It is because so many banks have come to a bad end that Government thought it fit to bring forward this Bill. For a number of years, there has been this crying need for a regular Bill like this. Now this Bill.....

Babu Ramnarayan Singh: In that case the management will be a costly affair.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: It has got to be. The other day Mr. T. T. Krishnachari raised a relevant point and that is that these banking employees also should be paid just as well as those who are employed by the Reserve Bank of India. If, on the other hand, you are going to have merely half-timers, they will either be exploited or they would be thoroughly inefficient and unreliable and incapable of giving you efficient service and it is time that we make up our minds about it. If we want half-timers to go into this and with a public spirit, let us organise co-operative credit banks, where you have got another law to restrict their activities and see that they behave properly and render necessary service to the people. If, on the other hand, you want large sums of money to be deposited by the masses here and later on to be properly and safely invested, then certainly we should go in for whole-timers and these whole-timers cannot be expected to play at law, at medicine and do various other things, while at the same time being managers of these banks. Therefore, Sir, I am very much in favour of the clause as it is and the proposal made by the Honourable Minister, and I very strongly dissent from the stand taken by my friends on this side of the House.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I entirely agree with the line taken by my honourable friend, Prof. N. G. Ranga, which is precisely what I was going to say in reply to the criticisms which have been levelled. The fact of the matter, Sir, is this, that the development of banking in this country and the abuses which bad management has led, all these have reached a stage; where it becomes necessary for us to regard banking not as a hobby, but as a very serious occupation. It deserves whole-time thought and whole-time energy.

Now with regard to the distinction between 'business' and 'vocation', I regret I cannot accept my honourable friend, Mr. Chaliha's suggestion, because by introducing the term 'vocation' we want to prevent people who are practising law or practising medicine being made responsible for management of banks. They can be employed, but they cannot be made managers. Then my honourable friend Mr. Gautam raised the question of the possible repercussion of this clause and the position.....

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: On a point of information, is the Honourable Minister aware that such big scheduled banks like the Comilla Banking Corporation was started in the first instance by a lawyer who started by practising and afterwards attained a big position?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I am aware of that and I am making my statement in spite of that.

Now my honourable friend, Mr. Gautam raised the question of the banks in the Punjab which have been placed in a difficult position on account of these serious developments in the province. That is a matter which is present to my mind, and I propose to take suitable action, so that no undue hardship is caused in such cases.

Another point which Mr. Gautam raised was whether in view of the disqualification in cases of certain categories of persons, whether sufficient time would be allowed for them to make the necessary adjustments. Of course, that is a matter which could be provided for with reference to sub-clause (3) of clause (1), that is to say, 'this Act will come into force on such date as the Central Government may by notification in the official gazette appoint in this behalf,' in prescribing the date, it is open to the Central Government to take into consideration the time that might be required for certain necessary adjustments of this kind.

I think my honourable friend, Mr. Ramnarayan Singh said that the Minister was trying to play a dictatorial part in this matter. Now, Sir, If you have been so kind as to ask me before a discussion on an amendment began, whether I agreed to it or not, it is not because of any authority that attaches to my position as a Minister. It is simply that I am here putting forward the recommendations of a Select Committee appointed by the House, not merely with my authority, but with the authority of a representative and responsible body, appointed by this House, and I think the House ought to give some regard to their views.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 10, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 10, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I have been blamed for making a private arrangement with the Honourable Minister and at the same time it is not possible for me to know in advance the intention of the Minister. Sir, I move:—

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 11 of the Bill, for the words 'elsewhere than in', the words 'outside' be substituted."

This is economy in words and the one word is more effective and more expressive than a number of words.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In connection with this, I would like to say that it is wrong to interpret that the honourable Minister is trying to impose his will.

Far from it. We are all interested to go through the various amendments tabled and if the honourable Minister does not accept any amendment, there is no purpose in pursuing it. In that case, it is up to the mover to move or not. Therefore, ordinarily, I will follow the previous practice of asking the honourable Minister if generally it has his approval before I call upon the Member to move. In this case, the honourable Minister does not approve, but it is open to the honourable member to insist on it being moved.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: But I have already moved it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is.

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 11 of the Bill, for the words 'elsewhere than in', the words 'outside' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Prof. K. T. Shah: May I move both of my amendments together as they are more or less connected?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes, you may.

Prof. K. T. Shah: Sir, I move:

(1) "That in sub-clause (2) of clause 11 of the Bill—

(i) after the word 'Bombay', a comma be inserted;

(ii) the word 'or' occurring after the word 'Bombay' be omitted; and

(iii) after the word 'Calcutta', a comma be inserted."

(2) "That in sub-clause (2) of clause 11 of the Bill—

(i) after the word 'Calcutta' the words 'Delhi or Madras' be inserted; and

(ii) the words 'or both' be omitted."

Sir, in submitting this amendment, may I make a preliminary observation that: In these amendments attention is invited to the insertion or the deletion of commas not necessarily as a form of sincere flattery of the honourable member who specializes in punctuation? I feel, as he does not doubt, that these are important additions, not ornamental but useful, for making clear the sense of the clause and of the amendment made thereto.

The clause as it stands, speaks of only two cities in the country—Bombay or Calcutta—as the most important banking centres. It contemplates them as the most important banking centres, and the others, no matter what their commercial or industrial positions may have been, are to be relegated amongst the categories of the also 'ran'.

This is a legacy of a time when the big business interests of the foreigners who ruled in the land were concentrated in these two places—Bombay or Calcutta. And however flattering it may be to one coming from Bombay to find Bombay preceding—only in alphabetical order—Calcutta, I feel that there are other centres no less worth considering than these two so-called old Presidency towns, now provincial capitals and perhaps the commercial capitals of this country. I would like therefore that at least two more cities be placed on a par.

The political capital of the country ought not to be relegated to the category of 'also ran', and the southern capital of the land, Madras, should also not be treated as less important from the banking standard than Calcutta or Bombay. I think, Sir, that whatever may have been the case in the past, when for geographic or other reasons Bombay may have been the centre of trade with the West, and Calcutta the Centre and focal point of trade with the East, in this age of aviation, when distances do not count, and when the position of places in this country, or sub-continent as it is now the fashion to call this country, the old tradition should not matter. We should not neglect not only the present position, but should not overlook the possibility that these other cities may have, as developing great banking concentrations, a great banking business of their own. Accordingly, if you do decide to introduce limitation on branches or offices of banks which may function in those places, then I suggest it would be as well to place all those capital cities on a par, and while I do not approve of many of the provisions that come into this clause and in subsequent clauses regarding the restrictions or conditions of capital and reserves I do think that, whatever treatment you give to the commercial capitals hitherto accepted as such, it should also be extended to these other two cities—Delhi and Madras.

I know, Sir, that at the present time perhaps, measured in terms of imports and exports, or in the volume of business or industry, these two cities may be said to lead, that is no indication in my opinion of the future trade and the possibilities of other cities for which a Bill like this ought to provide. I therefore commend the amendment to the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Amendment moved:

(1) "That in sub-clause (2) of clause 11 of the Bill—

(i) after the word 'Bombay', a comma be inserted;

(ii) the word 'or' occurring after the word 'Bombay' be omitted; and

(iii) after the word 'Calcutta', a comma be inserted."

(2) "That in sub-clause (2) of clause 11 of the Bill—

(i) after the word 'Calcutta' the words 'Delhi or Madras' be inserted; and

(ii) the words 'or both' be omitted."

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: If my honourable friend, Prof. Shah, had only known what a rude shock he has given me by moving the second amendment, he would have been full of self-reproach. I had understood from the passage which I had quoted with such glee and approbation—I mean paragraph 17 of his Minute of Dissent—that he was in favour of new branches being established by banks and this should not be merely the prerogative of the Central Bank or such other banks. What do we find here? He is extending the effect and scope of this clause to other provinces and towns as well. It is not merely that he wants that the restrictive provision should apply only in cases of branches established in Bombay and Calcutta, but by his amendment he wants to spread the evil of the provision to Delhi and Madras as well. That is what he wants and I do not understand what he means by saying encouraging new banks and new branches when he is in favour of extending the clause to other cities—cities other than those which were in the mind of the honourable Minister. Let me tell the House what the effect of this clause would be on indigenous banks in my province as well as banks which have been recently (that is 20 or 25 years ago) started. I do not know whether the honourable Minister will be able to give us an assurance that this clause will not affect the branches which have been already established, but if he does that there will be something in it.

There are two or three banks in Assam which have their branches in the city of Calcutta. Their paid up capital is not what has been demanded by this clause. You will say "What sort of banks you are speaking of which cannot have a paid up capital of twenty lakhs?" You can say that. Those who come from bigger provinces and those who are wealthy can say that. But those who want to have their own banks and those who want see their own banks prosper and grow will be very seriously affected by this clause. If this clause is given effect to also in the case of those branches which are already in operation many banks will have to close down their branches in Calcutta. Similarly it is possible that they will have to close their branches in other cities also. This is a sort of vicious circle in which we are moving. I want to have more capital. I make an application for capital issue. My application is not granted. I want to make my banks scheduled banks. But I cannot fulfil those conditions or raise more capital and convert my bank into a scheduled bank. There are so many bank failures that there is alarm in the minds of people so far as banks are concerned. I want to apply for capital issue. I want to make my bank a scheduled bank. There comes a fiat from the Central Government or the Reserve Bank that no more capital issue will be given in my province. I do not want to state the names of the banks but this is a fact as the honourable Minister himself will know. On the one hand you would not allow capital issues and on the other hand you will say that we cannot have this, unless we come up to a certain standard. Why do you not speak out clearly and say that we have already so many hundred banks, fiat these banks will remain and that no other banks will be allowed to grow up. I can understand that straight forward statement. By this clause instead of encouraging you are asking the branches in Calcutta to be closed. I cannot help feeling that the intention of this Bill is not quite proper. I feel that no other banks will be allowed to compete with the existing banks.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: I am afraid I have nothing to say in regard to the first amendment moved by my honourable friend Prof. Shah but in regard to the second, as regards the general objection raised by my honourable friend, Mr. Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri, I have a few words to say. This is one of the most difficult clauses in this Bill. It has been considered by two Select Committees very carefully and so far as lack of facilities given to existing institutions for raising their capital is concerned, whatever might have been the experience of my honourable friend Mr. Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri in the past, I believe those difficulties would not exist in the future because for the reason that banks are required to raise their capital to the level prescribed in the particular clause within a period of three years, all facilities will be given to the banks so to do, if they want to function in these cities according to this measure. In the past there might have been various reasons why the Reserve Bank did not sanction the raising of the capital structure but it does not necessarily mean that they were opposed to banks raising their capital structure. Probably there may have been other reasons.

In regard to Madras and Delhi I would like uniformity and I agree with Prof. Shah that these cities must rise in importance equal to that of Bombay and Calcutta. But the proper time to introduce an amendment of this sort is when these cities have risen to a state of importance equal to that of Bombay and Calcutta. For the time being both these cities are in such a condition that they will not be able to fulfil the conditions that we now seek to impose by means of this clause. Until the contingency occurs when these cities rise in importance and in population and wealth I am afraid Prof. Shah will have to hold his soul in patience. I oppose the second amendment moved by Prof. Shah.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: My friend Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri has raised a very important question which may affect small banks in Bengal and Assam.

Babu Ramnarayan Singh: Also in Bihar.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Also in Bihar. In other words it is a question which affects the small banks. The present Bill seeks to eliminate small banks although they are successful, and seeks to put a higher limit of capitalisation and thus creates difficulty in the way of small banks. The idea somehow or other seems to be that banks fail on account of their smallness or invariably for dishonesty or want of good management. The failures of banks in Bengal particularly was largely due to the monetary policy of the Government. There is here incessant talk of nationalisation or limitation of dividends and the like and the result is that the share values have crashed. No amount of coaxing, no injection of high hopes, no amount of promises has been able to raise the share value or to stimulate the value at all. (Shri B. Das: "The deposits have vanished.") It is a fact that many deposits have vanished and the reason is this. Many businessmen pawned their shares in banks and took advances. On account of the monetary policy of the Government the share market absolutely collapsed and is unable to recover. It is thought that some big speculators and gamblers are responsible for this but I submit it is not so. These speculators can operate the market only for a few days. It is after all the confidence of the small investors that keeps the market alive. That confidence is absolutely gone. When share values depreciated banks found it impossible to allow advances or continue to keep the advances on the depreciated security. So they demanded their money and the shares had to be thrown into an unwilling market which was not ready to absorb them. The consequence of this was that many shares had to be sold at a sacrifice prices. This created more depression in the market and the share values went further downwards. The result of all this was that many banks came to a crash. So what is wanted is a sound monetary policy which would encourage the small investor, the middle classes, to invest their money. On the other hand there is talk of nationalisation and of more things to come or there are more menacing hints. I beg to submit that confidence takes time to grow. It is easy to shatter it but it is not as easy to revive it. There is the need for small banks. In Bengal there are still many small banks which began from small beginnings and function efficiently. If you eliminate the small banks the result would be that the smaller areas—small towns and semi-village areas—will not be fed with sufficient banks and the big banks. Whom some are trying to eliminate and who are capitalists and exploiters, will alone remain and the others will be wiped out.

[Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad]

This requirement of high capitalisation for as many branches as they can spread would be extremely harsh. I think the very policy of this clause is unsound. Small banks have their utility and they should be encouraged and in every way stimulated, and no additional difficulty should be put in their way. Many small banks in Bengal have failed on account of the want of sufficient courage on the part of the investors and the crash in the share value. These are very serious considerations. Mere raising of the standard of capitalisation will not do. Mr. Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri has raised an important point and I think it should be carefully considered not merely in the passing of this clause or the Bill but towards revision of their monetary policy.

Shri B. Das (Orissa: General): Sir, I had no intention to participate in this debate but I find there is a misunderstanding on the floor of this House and my honourable friends Mr. Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri and Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad have misunderstood clause 11 as making definite provision for doing away with small banks. I remember I had to come and plead before the last Select Committee and on behalf of the small banks in 1946. Sub-clause (1) of clause 11 of the Bill has a Proviso:

"Provided that a banking company to which this clause applies and which has only one place of business shall not be required to have paid-up capital and reserves exceeding an aggregate value of 50,000 rupees."

In the previous draft of the Bill it was Rs. 1,00,000 and at that time objections were raised and the Select Committee decided that it would be limited to 50,000 rupees. There is no desire to do away with small banks or banking activity in small towns and small cities. My honourable friend Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad talked about the share market being fluctuated by adverse effect on shares. The shares of the banks to which my honourable friend was referring to never go to the stock exchanges of Bombay and Calcutta, because such banks were never successful and the moment the depression period came in, most of them vanished from their active fields. If money was spirited away it was the depositors' money and God alone knows whether it has gone to the so-called managing directors for whom my honourable friend was suggesting—lawyers and what not? I support the whole clause 11. The discussion which has started on sub-clause (2) I think is met by sub-clause (3), and I have no sympathy for the bankrupt banks which have taken advantage of the war conditions and have made many depositors poor.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Sir, I regret I cannot accept this amendment with regard to punctuation. There I think Professor Shah is wrong in his ideas of punctuation. With regard to the question of including Delhi and Madras, there also I am afraid I cannot agree with him. I agree with what my honourable friend Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari has said on that point. The purpose of this clause is simply to provide that in the matter of paid-up capital and reserve of the banks it should be in accordance with the business requirements of the areas in which they work. The whole of this clause has been the result of experience of our banking system and the Reserve Bank and the figures that have been suggested here are figures which may be accepted by the House.

My honourable friend Mr. Naziruddin made a reference to the position in Bengal. I do not pretend to have first-hand knowledge of the position in Bengal, but since I assumed office as Minister for Finance I have come across several reports regarding banking institutions in Bengal which give me an impression very different from that which Mr. Naziruddin tried to create.

Mr. Deputy-Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 11 of the Bill,—

- (i) after the word 'Bombay', a comma be inserted;
- (ii) the word 'or' occurring after the word 'Bombay' be omitted; and
- (iii) after the word 'Calcutta', a comma be inserted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 11 of the Bill,—

- (i) after the word 'Calcutta', the words 'Delhi or Madras' be inserted; and
- (ii) the words 'or both' be omitted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next amendment is by Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad.

An Honourable Member: It makes no meaning.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: It makes a meaning. I absolutely deny the suggestion that it makes no meaning.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It may make meaning. It seems to be unnecessary.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: It may not be acceptable to the majority.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I take it the honourable member is not moving it.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I am not moving it.

Prof. K. T. Shah: I move:

"That after the existing Proviso to part (iii) of sub-clause (3) of clause 11 of the Bill, the following new Proviso be added:

"Provided further that nothing in the Explanation shall apply to any branch or agency that a bank may open in a capital city like Bombay, Calcutta, Delhi or Madras, within the municipal limits of each of them or in limits that may be increased hereafter by appropriate legislation, even if the distance between any two of such branches or agencies within the same capital city does not exceed one furlong."

Here is some suggestion, some remedy I hope for the rude shock I seem to have unwittingly administered to my very respected friend Srijiut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri. I am definitely not against the spread of the banking habit and of banking facilities to as large an extent as possible. I had suggested on a previous occasion a restriction, if you so read it, to the temptations which may exist on banks, if they have branches within capital cities. Bankers are politely dressed sharks and if you fall within the area of these sharks, it is not unlikely particularly for smaller banks that they may be their ruin. They may be doing very good service in the mofussil, but it may be interrupted and ruined by venturing into waters too deep for them to swim.

It was only with these intentions that I have suggested this restriction which I am very sorry to find was misinterpreted or misunderstood by one whose support otherwise I was very happy to have.

In the present instance, however, again without realising the possibilities that lie hidden in it, I have come forward with some sort of a remedy or attenuating provision to relieve shock that might have been administered. As you see, I do not mind branches being multiplied as much as can be where business centres require. In cities particularly, whose limits are constantly growing branches must multiply irrespective of distance. We have a programme, for example, of Greater Bombay, and I do not know what is the longest distance between two farthest points in Calcutta. But I am sure the limits of the kind prescribed in this Bill will be very injurious to the increase of branches, and to the availability of banking facilities to as large a section of the metropolitan population as possible.

Accordingly, I move that no matter what the distance, even if the distance is a furlong or less, the banks in these cities shall not be prevented—within their municipal limits or within the greater limit—given to them—from opening branches within the same area. I hope it will be acceptable at least to Shri Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That after the existing Proviso to part (iii) of sub-clause (3) of clause 11 of the bill the following new Proviso be added:

"Provided further that nothing in the Explanation shall apply to any branch or agency that a bank may open in a capital city like Bombay, Calcutta, Delhi or Madras, within the municipal limits of each of them, or in limits that may be increased hereafter by appropriate legislation, even if the distance between any two of such branches or agencies within the same capital city does not exceed one furlong."

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: Sir, I am afraid there is a little misapprehension here because I quite understand there is room for misapprehension. Actually the phrasing is so involved that my honourable friend has not understood the Explanation properly. I would like the House to permit me to read the Explanation which is as follows:

"Explanation.—For the purposes of this sub-section, a place of business situated in a Province other than that in which the principal place of business of the banking company is situated shall, if it is not more than twenty-five miles distant from such principal place of business, be deemed to be situated within the same Province as such principal place of business."

Actually, the safeguard here—attempted probably clumsily, if one may put it so—is for places where two Provinces converge. They might just open a branch at the end of one Province. It is only in relation to places where two Provinces converge that the distance is put in. Actually, I think it is no Explanation at all for the purpose of opening branches in the cities, as my friend Professor Shah wants to put in.

In any event, the idea seems to be that there should not be a limitation. I think there is no limitation as it is and therefore the proviso cannot serve any new purpose. That is my view of the matter, but I do agree there is room for a possible misconception. Even if there is a misconception, the Explanation cannot be explained properly by means of this addition of Professor Shah's. I therefore think there is no point in accepting a proviso of this sort.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I agree, it is irrelevant to the Explanation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That after the existing Proviso to part (iii) of sub-clause (3) of clause 11 of the bill the following new Proviso be added:

"Provided further that nothing in the Explanation shall apply to any branch or agency that a bank may open in a capital city like Bombay, Calcutta, Delhi or Madras, within the municipal limits of each of them or in limits that may be increased hereafter by appropriate legislation, even if the distance between any two of such branches or agencies within the same capital city does not exceed one furlong."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the honourable Minister in favour of the next amendment.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: No, Sir. It is not necessary.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the honourable member want to move it?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Yes, Sir. I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (5) of clause 11 of the Bill, for the words 'real or exchangeable value', the words 'actual market value' be substituted."

Sir, we are concerned with the meaning of the word "value" for purposes of this clause. "Value" means, according to the clause, the "real or exchangeable value" and not the nominal value which may be shown in the books of the banking company concerned. This is an unusual expression. What is meant really is the market value. You can at once determine the "market value" of investments and shares which are quoted on the Stock Exchange.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is not "exchangeable value" covered there? It need not be exchanged in a market, it may be exchanged elsewhere.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: "Exchange" indicates not actual sale, but one share exchanged for another. That is the idea of exchange. Sale is distinguished from exchange in this way that sale is transfer for money, while exchange is barter. Market value indicates the real legal idea; exchange value does not really mean the saleable value—in fact it is a loose expression and "market value" is the more correct and precise expression.

As I was going to submit, many shares recognised by the Stock Exchanges are quoted in the Stock Exchange. They comprise all the best shares in India. Their "market value" is easily knowable. With regard to others the "market value" can be decided otherwise.

With regard to sub-clause (5), I have this objection that in sub-clause (3) and other parts there are conditions as to the aggregate value of the paid up capital and reserves. By sub-clause (5) it is provided that the "market value" or the "exchangeable value" is really meant. The effect of this would be that a company which has issued share capital of the requisite nominal extent will again be harassed under sub-clause (5) by the authorities where the "exchange value" or the "market value" is less. So, there would again be a competition between the Government on the one hand and the banking concerns on the other as to whether there is adequate capitalization, because the "market value" of the capital is a fluctuating and uncertain quantity and it may be that many shares which have gone down in the crash would show a small market value though of an adequate "book value". In these circumstances, the question of the advisability of retaining sub-clause (5) is also in question.

I object to sub-clause (5) because it introduces needless complications. After all, the "market value" or the "exchange value", as the Bill says, is not a determined value; it fluctuates from day to day and as at present the clause would work much hardship, especially in the case of small banks which otherwise may be sound. Therefore, I submit this clause itself should be deleted. It serves no useful purpose to put such rigorous conditions. Of course, efficient management and sound management, honesty and strictness must be insisted upon in every way, but apart from that, to ask for more money through this inoffensive-looking sub-clause (5) would be really perpetrating hardships upon banks which are struggling from the effect of the market crash and which, with a little encouragement, may probably stand on their legs. I submit that clause (5) should be deleted, or in the alternative the drafting amendment be accepted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in sub-clause (5) of clause 11 of the Bill for the words 'real or exchangeable value', the words 'actual market value' be substituted."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: There are three possible bases on which you can determine value in this case. You can take the book-value or nominal value. You can take the actual market value. You can take the exchangeable value. The precise difference is this. The whole object of having this particular provision is to rule out book-value leaving that out, you have two alternatives: either you take the real or exchangeable value or you take the...

Mr. Homi Mody: Where do you get the words "exchangeable value" from?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I am coming to that; be patient. As regards the actual market value, it is impossible in many cases in practice to get the actual market value of the assets of a bank. Therefore, you must have some kind of estimate or valuation. The real or exchangeable value is a matter of valuation or estimation. If nominal value is ruled out, if actual market value cannot be obtained, then there is no other solution except valuation.

Mr. Homi Mody: But you have not told us where you get the expression from.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: This is as good an expression as you can find.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: I can only say that that particular expression comes right through beginning from 1939.

Mr. Homi Mody: Perpetuation of bad English.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is.

"That in sub-clause (5) of clause 11 of the Bill for the words 'real or exchangeable value', the words 'actual market value' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: I confess that I am short of hearing and do not follow all that is said on the floor of this House, but I am yet to know whether the honourable Minister means that the restrictive clause to which I referred, namely, sub-clause (2) would apply to the existing branches in the city of Calcutta and Bombay although they may not satisfy the capital condition. My honourable friend Mr. Das had argued at some length in reply to the points which I had raised but he has also left me unconvinced and the reason for his failure is that he had given a deaf ear to all that I had said. My point is this. I am stating an actual fact, although I do not wish to disclose the name. A particular bank started with a small capital, say, five lakhs of rupees, and the paid-up capital was less than that. Nevertheless, it had started business in Calcutta and with that capital that bank was allowed to have the branch in Calcutta and the branch has been working fairly well. If this Bill is passed, will that branch have to be closed because they do not satisfy the capital condition?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: That is so.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: If it is closed, then is not a great injustice being done to that class of bank, because on the one hand—which the honourable Minister has not denied—on the one hand you are restricting the issue of capital and on the other hand, you are closing the branches of the bank for want of adequate capital. You cannot have it both ways. The business of the branch is gradually increasing. The bank has got good reserve. You are not taking into consideration the reserve at all. You are only going by the capital. You are not allowing any new man to come. You want that a real capitalist should come and buy up the bank and become the proprietor of that bank practically. You are not allowing us to issue the capital at all. That is a position which is intolerable. If really your intention is to encourage new banking business, but if your policy is that no more banks should be allowed to be opened or no small banks should be allowed to exist—let it be a straightforward policy—if you do not want new banks, I can understand that although I may quarrel with it, but still I can understand it, but I do not understand this two-fold policy—on the one hand closing the bank for want of capital and on the other refusing to issue capital. That is quite incomprehensible.

Similarly, in starting banks in one's own province, as I said more than once, we have learnt bitter lessons on account of banks having come from outside. People do not believe in banks in our province, because a large number of banks for causes—good or bad—have failed, but they would be quite prepared to have branches of the banks of their own, because if the banks which have headquarters elsewhere start in my province and fail, we cannot touch them at all. They are illusive people. They run away before the bank closes, but if there are branches of banks started by my own people in my own province, at least I can knock them, I can at least give them physical blows. That is some satisfaction. Therefore, if a bank is started by my own people in my own province, there will be shareholders; there will be depositors, but you do not allow deposits; you do not allow depositors to deposit their money in their own bank. Supposing there is a bank with headquarters at Gauhati, if they want to establish a branch at Dibrugarh or any other place, you do not allow them to open this branch, with the result I have to be content not with my own bank but with a bank which may prove as illusive as the branches which have formerly failed. That is the position to which you are driving me. Is there any justification for that? Why do you want an additional condition to be imposed because the branches are to be established in one's own province? Why you not make an exemption in the case of those provinces which have no banks or only a few banks? If 100 branches are there with their headquarters outside, cannot my own provincial bank have branches in our own province in the different towns? Why do you stand in the way? Why do you not make an exception in the case of such provinces? Should not a man of the province have a chance of starting his own business? Why should you stop that man? Perhaps you want some other gigantic banks. I borrow the expression from Prof. Shah. You want to have a few gigantic banks so as to fill the stomachs of gigantic people. You want these gigantic banks not merely to confine themselves to the city of Calcutta, Bombay and Madras; you allow them to have as many branches in Assam, Bengal, etc. but you do not allow the man of the province because he cannot have sufficient capital. So you put this penalty. This is a penalty. This is a tax which you are wanting to lay on the regional banks of the province and you are standing in the way of allowing them to start new branches. Sir, this is a position which I cannot justify in the eyes of the public. I hope that, if I have not understood the position clearly, the Honourable the Finance Minister will take pains to explain the position to me so that I may understand it and I may be able to tell my own people that our Government of India is full of sympathy for the poor people like myself.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I do not quite know what is troubling my honourable friend Srijut Chaudhuri. I have not been able to make out what it is. But as far as the policy behind this particular provision is concerned; it simply means this, that in laying down conditions which ought to be applicable to all banks, and which should be fulfilled by all banks, there are necessarily two points of view to be considered. There is the point of view of those who promote the banks as a business concern, and there is the point of view of the depositors, and we can reconcile these two view-points only by providing conditions of this kind. I think Srijut Chaudhuri is not very familiar, obviously, with the evil consequences that have followed because of the absence of conditions like these. Depositors' interests have been allowed to go by default because when people speak of the public interest and the provincial interest, they mean only those of the promoters of banks. If difficulties are felt by banks in fulfilling these conditions, there is nothing in the way of any action being taken by the Capital Issues Committee and there is nothing to prevent me from taking the necessary action to remove those difficulties.

Shri Jut-Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: Then why are you not satisfied with the chartered banks whose figures show that the people have greater confidence in them?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 11 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 11 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Now we come to clause 12. Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Amendments No. 127 and 132 go together and I would like to know from the honourable Minister if they are acceptable.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I do not think they are acceptable.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Then I do not move them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Then amendment No. 128. The Member wants to know if that is acceptable to the honourable Minister.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I do not think it is an improvement.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I may then move No. 129?

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: There are three amendments, one of Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad, one by Prof. Shah and one in my name. If one of them is moved and accepted, then the others fall through. Let us, I suggest, take up the positive amendment rather than a negative one.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: My amendment is the more sweeping one.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes, it is for the deletion of the part of the clause.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I beg to move:

"That part (iv) of clause 12 of the Bill be omitted."

I submit that this part which I seek to delete is absolutely ineffectual from the practical point of view. It seeks to limit the voting right of any one shareholder, that it should not exceed ten per cent. of the total voting rights of all the shareholders. It limits the voting power of the individual shareholder. But the question is whether the provision of a clause like this will at all be effective and serve the purpose for which it is put in. The only effect of this provision would be that a big shareholder will distribute his shares among some of his friends and relations and retain the voting power in his own hand, intact. I submit that the shareholders will be quite easily able to elude this somewhat loosely conceived provision. If a man has twenty per cent. shares, what he has to do is to keep half of it with himself and transfer the rest to his wife, children or father or friends or even non-existing persons. Such a thing is not unknown. As a matter of fact, this provision will be totally inoperative. There are amendments to vary this ten per cent. to various percentages. But the clause, I say is totally ineffective, and it is simply asking for transfers of the shares keeping the ten per cent. in each hand. In these circumstances, I submit that this clause should be deleted.

Shri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar (Madras. General): All the three amendments may be taken together.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The suggestion has already been made. But we take them separately, because this amendment stands on a different footing.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: This is really a compromise.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That Part (iv) of clause 12 of the Bill be omitted."

The motion was negatived.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: Prof. Shah may move his amendment. I do not move mine.

Prof. K. T. Shah: Sir, I move:

"That in part (iv) of clause 12 of the Bill, for the word 'ten', the word 'five' be substituted."

I do not know if my ears deceived me, or my memory fails, but I am under the impression that the honourable the Finance Minister had forgotten to say in the case of this amendment that it is not acceptable. If that is so, I do not want to rub him the wrong way by making a speech.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: It gives me very great satisfaction to accept Prof. Shah's amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in part (iv) of clause 12 of the Bill, for the word 'ten', the word 'five' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Shri T. T. Krishnamachari: I move:

"That in the Proviso to clause 12 of the Bill, after the words 'contained in', the words, brackets and figures 'clauses (i), (ii) and (iii) of' be inserted."

This merely makes Prof. Shah's amendment applicable to all banks, irrespective of the date of their floatation.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I do not think this amendment is necessary. The position really is that conditions (i), (ii) and (iii) are conditions which apply to all banking companies incorporated since January 1937, and this additional clause might, I think modify it to mean that it will apply to all the categories of banks which are now subject to conditions (i), (ii) and (iii). I think the clause might stand as it is now, and I do not think any serious trouble will arise thereby.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: So this is not pressed. Then what about the next.

Prof. K. T. Shah: I am not moving it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That Clause 12, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 12, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House stands adjourned till 10-45 A.M. to-morrow.

The Assembly then adjourned till a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock on Tuesday, the 15th February, 1949.

CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY OF INDIA (LEGISLATIVE) DEBATES

(PART II PROCEEDINGS OTHER THAN QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS)

Tuesday, 15th February, 1949.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock, Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

(See Part I)

11-45 A.M. TIME TABLE FOR THE DAY'S BUSINESS

Mr. Speaker: Before I proceed with certain announcements which I have to make, I should like to know the wishes of the House with reference to the time-table of the meeting today. At 5 o'clock the Railway Budget will be presented. I think honourable members would like the idea of sitting till 4 o'clock and then reassembling at 5.

Shri B. L. Sondhi (East Punjab: General): Why not have it earlier?

Shri R. K. Sidhva (C. P. and Berar: General): As far as the General Budget is concerned we can understand it being introduced at 5 o'clock, because of taxation. Where is the sanctity in the Railway Budget also being presented at 5 o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: There is no question of sanctity. The importance of it is that we get the whole of the day for other work; and in view of the slow progress which the Banking Bill is making, I was just thinking whether we should break for an hour at all, instead, why not break at 4-30, (Honourable Members: "No Sir, 4 o'clock.") I think then we shall break at 4 and re-assemble at 5. That is the time-table fixed.

The Honourable Shri N. Gopalaswami Ayyangar (Minister for Railways and Transport): If that is your wish, I have no objection if you fix the Railway Budget to be presented at 4 itself.

Mr. Speaker: My difficulty is, 5 having been already announced, it will not be fair to absent members. I can agree to prolonging the time to 5-30, but it is not fair to the absent members to have it earlier.

Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi (Madras: General). When the whole House agrees.....

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member does not see the position that a notice of 5 o'clock has already been issued. So now the House will reassemble after Lunch at 2-30; again adjourn at 4 and re-assemble at 5 for the Railway Budget.

PANEL OF CHAIRMEN.

Mr. Speaker: I have to inform the House that under sub-rule (1) of rule 9 of the Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business, I nominate Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava, Shri S. V. Krishnamoorthy Rao, Shrimati G. Durgaba and Mr. Frank Anthony on the Panel of Chairmen.

COMMITTEE ON PETITIONS

Mr. Speaker: I have also to announce that under sub-rule (1) of Rule 65 of the Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business, the following honourable members will form the Committee on Petitions, namely, Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava, Shri S. V. Krishnamoorthy Rao, Shri R. K. Sidhva, Shrimati Dakshyani Velayudhan and Shri B. Das.

PUBLIC COMPANIES (LIMITATION OF DIVIDENDS) BILL

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF SELECT COMMITTEE

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai (Minister for Finance): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the time appointed for the presentation of the report of the Select Committee on the Bill to limit the dividends which may be paid by public companies, be extended up to the 21st February, 1949."

The Committee held a meeting a few days ago—a prolonged meeting. They have been able to cover most of the ground, but it is still felt that there are certain matters which call for further consultation and discussion, and in view of the importance of the issues involved, I submit to the House that this short extension is necessary.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That the time appointed for the presentation of the report of the Select Committee on the Bill to limit the dividends which may be paid by public companies, be extended up to the 21st February, 1949."

The motion was adopted.

BANKING COMPANIES BILL—(Contd.)

Mr. Speaker: The House will now proceed with the further consideration of the motion that the Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to banking companies, as reported by the Select Committee, be taken into consideration. Clause 13.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): I beg to move:

"That in clause 13 of the Bill, for the word 'share' wherever it occurs, the word 'shares' be substituted."

In this clause we are dealing with the issue of shares. So the word should be in the plural.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai (Minister for Finance): I accept.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in clause 13 of the Bill, for the word 'share' wherever it occurs, the word 'shares' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Prof. K. T. Shah (Bihar: General): I move:

"That in clause 13 of the Bill, for the words 'two and one-half' occurring in line five, the word 'one' be substituted."

This, Sir, relates to and tries to discourage the practice of paying commission for getting Bank Shares subscribed. The commission provided for in clause 13 appears to me to be much too high for a sound banking concern to offer. It may be very well for those concerns which are shaky, or which have doubtful prospects, to try and raise capital by offering attractions of this kind.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the honourable member—if he agrees—it appears that the likelihood is that the arguments will be common both with reference to this end and his next amendment. If that is so.....

Prof. K. T. Shah: My next amendment relates to deposits; this relates to capital. I thought the two are on a different level.

BANKING COMPANIES BILL

479

Mr. Speaker: It is a question of commission, brokerage, discount, or remuneration on deposits; the nature of commission on shares.....

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: It is somewhat different.

Mr. Speaker: It is somewhat different no doubt. But the arguments, I thought would be common—some of them, perhaps.

Prof. K. T. Shah: My own position is that the nature of these two items of working capital is different. However, if you so desire, I will combine the two.

Mr. Speaker: I am not talking of combining the two. What I am suggesting is that both may be moved, and may be argued, so that much of the common ground need not be repeated.

Prof. K. T. Shah: Certainly, Sir, I shall then combine my arguments on both, if you will permit me to move the other one also.

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Prof. K. T. Shah: I shall then move the second one. I beg to move:

"That in clause 13 of the Bill, the following be added at the end: 'nor shall any commission, brokerage, discount, or remuneration, be paid to anyone for attracting fixed or call deposits or bringing business to the bank.'"

[At this stage, Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair, which was then occupied by Mr. Deputy Speaker (Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar)]

This is an attempt to prevent undue attraction being offered by banks to secure any part of their fixed or working capital. In the case of the Share capital, I do think that any bank, with any prospects of good business before it, or the promoters of any Bank who have such hopes, should not really offer such attractions as are provided for in this clause, namely, a brokerage or an under-writing commission or discount on shares of two and a half per cent. That would be an admission of the possible difficulties in getting capital subscribed, which should not be made by the Bank or its promoters. This rate is excessive; and is paid, in my opinion, for no very good service or benefit to the proposed institution.

I take it, of course, that this Commission, etc. relates to new capital being issued. If it relates to additional capital being issued by an existing bank, then the argument would be still stronger, namely, that having proved its success; being so to say in a position of good business, and having also some uncalled share capital on existing shares it is all the more undesirable for it to allow any such high commission, discount or brokerage for securing subscription to their share capital.

It is well-known, though perhaps not easily admitted or provable, that share-brokers and those conducting banks are inter-linked. And one of the greatest curses, in my opinion of the Capitalist system is the very wide ramification of the sacred institution of Nepotism whereby brothers, sons, nephews,.....

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri (Assam: General): Sir, on a point of order. This amendment which my honourable friend has moved is not germane to the particular section. Section 13 deals with the restriction on commission, brokerage, discount etc. on sale of shares. It has nothing to do with fixed deposits. So this amendment cannot come now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no point of order; Professor Shah can go on.

Prof. K. T. Shah: Sir, I was saying that those connected with and dependent upon the conduct of banks have ways and means of handing out Secretary to whomsoever they want, big profits or substantial benefits, which are only made available at the cost of the community. The benefit may be covered and be given a legitimate shape by a provision such as this, and so I suggest it should be avoided altogether or at least minimised.

CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY OF INDIA (LEGISLATIVE) [15TH FEB. 1949]

It may be that the attracting of capital in the shape of shares may perhaps be a little difficult, in times, particularly of scarcity, when there is all-round anxiety or depression especially to new Banks. To that extent, I am willing to compromise and suggest that one per cent. maximum commission, discount or brokerage may be allowed. But even that, I think, would not be earned. However, that is a matter for the Income-tax Commissioner to decide whether it is earned or un-earned income. But even that argument does not apply to the case of the Depositors. Attracting Deposits by such means is highly objectionable. For my part, there should be no toleration or allowance of any commission, brokerage or discount, for the simple reason that if such a thing is permitted, there will be a very unhealthy system of competition and rivalry of interests amongst banks which will be prejudicial to the sound conduct of the Bank, to the interests of the depositors which this Bill is supposed to safeguard.

I am sure that actually no respectable bank would be encouraging any such methods or be engaging in such competitive or shaking methods of attracting deposits to itself. I am therefore, by my amendment, trying to secure nothing more than a legal recognition and enforcement of an actually admitted principle, namely, no undue attraction to secure deposits to the banks should be offered.

I trust this reasoning would prove acceptable to the Honourable Minister and that the amendment would be adopted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Amendments moved:

(i) "That in clause 13 of the Bill, for the words 'two and one-half' occurring in line five, the word 'one' be substituted."

(ii) "That in clause 13 of the Bill, the following be added at the end:
'nor shall any commission, brokerage, discount, or remuneration, be paid to anyone for attracting fixed or call deposits or bringing business to the bank.'"

Shri R. K. Sidhva (C. P. and Berar: General): I do not know how far this amendment is expected to serve the purpose which my honourable friend Professor Shah desires. As far as I know, when firms want to invest money, they write to various banks asking for quotations, and I know various banks have various rates of interest, and whichever is highest, consistent with security, in that bank, the firm invests the money. Prof. Shah has himself stated that he would be prepared to accept one per cent. interest, but I think even in all money or long-term deposits, banks do not pay more than one per cent.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Madras: General): What about the shares?

Shri R. K. Sidhva: I am not referring to shares; I am only referring to fixed deposits.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: But the first amendment refers to shares.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: The first amendment is all right. I am referring to the second. The question of non-payment of commission does not arise at all, because it is not paid at all. Therefore the amendment is redundant.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I oppose both the amendments proposed by Professor Shah. With regard to his first amendment, the Select Committee considered this matter in great detail, and this figure of 2½ was accepted because it happened to represent the largest measure of agreement. These are matters in regard to which you cannot fix limits which would have any sort of final validity. It is a matter of judgment, and what we did was to follow a practical course and accept a figure which represented the largest measure of agreement; and I suggest that the House may adopt this figure.

With regard to the second amendment if any commission is paid in respect of deposits, what it really amounts to is that the bank is prepared to pay something in the nature of a higher interest on the deposit. This Bill does not control the rates of interest. Moreover, it is altogether impracticable to fix the rate of interest which a particular bank may be prepared to pay. Therefore, it seems to me both from the point of view of the merits of the proposition and also from the point of view of the practicability of it, both the amendments must be rejected.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in clause 13 of the Bill, for the words 'two and one-half' occurring in line five, the word 'one' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in clause 13 of the Bill the following be added at the end:
'nor shall any commission, brokerage, discount, or remuneration, be paid to anyone for attracting fixed or call deposits or bringing business to the bank.'"

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 13, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 13, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That in clause 14 of the Bill, for the words 'No banking company', the following be substituted:

'Notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Contract Act or in any other law for the time being in force, no banking company.'"

Sir, we have already adopted this mode of expression in clause 2 and in other places. Similarly we have to introduce this condition in clause 14 also; otherwise there may be a clash between this Act and personal contracts. Provision of clause 14 should over-ride all such contracts. That is the only point in this amendment.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I have had this point examined by our legal advisers and they think such a change is not necessary. The point is sufficiently provided for already.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That means the amendment is not moved?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: It is moved, but it need not be put by you.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: What about the next amendment.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Same as the last one, it is not necessary.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I do not move it then.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 14 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 14 was added to the Bill.

482 CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY OF INDIA (LEGISLATIVE) [15TH FEB. 1949]

Kazi Syed Karimuddin (C. P. and Berar: Muslim). I beg to move:

"That in clause 15 of the Bill, after the word 'shares' occurring in line two, the words 'which shall not exceed nine per cent. per annum' be inserted."

If that case, Sir, the clause will read thus:

"No banking company shall pay any dividend on its shares which shall not exceed nine per cent. per annum until all its capitalised"

The other day I have heard with great regret the speech of the Honourable the Finance Minister, which was very much distressing. It was said that the programme of nationalisation of Banks could not be enforced in the immediate future. The minimum that we expected from the Government and the Finance Department was that at least the dividend should have been fixed. On the contrary, we find though in the original Bill there was fixation of the dividend to the extent of nine per cent. we find in the Select Committee Report and after the stage of Select Committee, even that has been taken away. My submission is that those in charge of banks have earned in the past huge sums of money because dividends were not fixed. In any case, if nationalisation is not possible in the near future, it is extremely necessary that the dividend should be fixed at least to the extent of nine per cent.

Mr. Homi Mody (Bombay: General): Nine per cent of what?

Kazi Syed Karimuddin: Shares.

Mr. Homi Mody: On today's value?

Kazi Syed Karimuddin: Sir, I press this amendment. There are absolutely no reasons given as to why this provision should have been excluded at the stage of the Select Committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in clause 15 of the Bill, after the word 'shares', occurring in line two, the words 'which shall not exceed nine per cent. per annum' be inserted."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: This point was explained by me in my speech with which I moved the motion for consideration. I think I explained at some length the reasons why the Select Committee decided to drop the provision relating to the limitation of dividend. As a matter of fact, there are two points of view from which the particular provision was considered. On the one hand, there are people who said that under the present conditions, that is to say, while there was the Limitation of Dividends Ordinance, and a Bill is also before the House under consideration, it was not necessary to have a special provision for Banking companies. On the other hand, there are members of the Select Committee like my honourable friend Mr. Ramalingam Chettiar who thought that nine per cent. was too high. In the end, we found the solution by omitting the provision altogether. I suggest to the House that the matter may be left as it stands.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in clause 15 of the Bill, after the word 'shares', occurring in line two, the words 'which shall not exceed nine per cent. per annum' be inserted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That in clause 15 of the Bill, for the words 'tangible assets', the words 'tangible and substantial assets' be substituted."

This is a substantial amendment. In clause 15, it is provided that a banking company shall not pay any dividend unless certain expenses are written off. One of these things is, 'any other items of expenditure not represented by tangible assets'. What may be tangible assets may yet be unsubstantial. Tangible means, which could be felt by the hand, seen by the eyes and felt by the senses.

Mr. Homi Mody: The wording is 'represented by tangible assets'.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: That means covered by tangible assets. "Tangible" means something which could only be felt by the senses. "Substantial assets" indicates that the expenditure is adequately covered. "Adequately represented by tangible assets", would be all right. If we do not introduce some such thing, there would be a loop-hole and much dispute.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I think this is quite unnecessary. As Mr. Mody pointed out, if the thing is to be represented by tangible assets, you can see it, feel it, touch it and do everything else.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think I need not put it to the House.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: As you feel, Sir.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is not a question of my pleasure. If you want, I shall put it to the House.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I do not press it, Sir.

Prof. K. T. Shah: I beg to move:

"That to clause 15 of the Bill, the following Proviso be added:

"Provided that no bank or banking company shall declare or distribute as dividend or profit any part of the profit at a rate exceeding five per cent. per annum on the paid up capital and all surplus remaining undistributed after the payment or distribution of such dividend or profit, and after due provision has been made for appropriate reserves, shall be made over to the Reserve Bank on behalf of the Government of India."

Sir, this is a principle which I have been impressing before this House for a long time and variety of reasons. Applied to this particular case, that is, of banks, I feel that the principle of limiting dividends that can be distributed, has more than one justification.

The argument which weighed with many members in the Select Committee to drop that clause that there is another measure to achieve that end. On the other side those who think that all undue profits or excessive profits should be stopped from distribution to the owners of the capital, and as such, believed that if not directly, at least an indirect restriction be placed upon the purchasing power in the hands of the community, and thereby a check be afforded to the growing spiral of inflation. This is a view that has been an argument that has commended itself in many quarters.

In principle, of course, a similar argument could be, and was urged with regard to other forms of income. But, here is a case of a generically different kind; while the income from joint stock companies shares may be said somehow to be earned, here is a form of income which is scarcely earned. The earners of Bank profits are not those who receive the dividends. The earners are a totally different section of the community, viz., the workers or employees of the bank. If, recognising their right of ownership, and in virtue solely of that ownership, you allow the shareholder this maximum share of profit, I think you are more than generous and just to them.

To my mind, Sir, the banking concern is particularly open to this charge that the shareholders do not contribute anything to the earning of the profits; and as such, in the distribution of profits . . .

Shri B. P. Jhunjhunwala (Bihar: General): On a point of order, Sir, the amendment of Mr. Karimuddin has been rejected. That limited the dividend to nine per cent. Here, the amendment is for five per cent. I think the principle has been voted down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry, there is no point of order, for the reason that the principle as such whether any limitation ought to be there was not put to the House, but whether it should be nine per cent. This amendment says, five per cent.

Shri B. P. Jhunjhunwala: Whether there should be limitation or not, that was the principle involved in that amendment. Here also, the same principle is involved.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It may be involved; that was not the main point at issue. The honourable member may go on. Any how, as has been pointed out, this matter was discussed on a previous occasion as to whether there ought to be a limitation. The further question is whether it should be nine per cent or five per cent. The Honourable member may confine himself to that.

Prof. K. T. Shah: I did not quite follow your remark, Sir, whether the principle as to limitation of dividend has been disposed of. I understand, Sir, that that was yet to come in the form of another Bill. That principle has not been disposed of so far as I know.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is not my ruling that it was disposed of. There has been an opportunity to discuss that matter in the previous amendment.

Prof. K. T. Shah: There has been a discussion on the subject; but the House has not yet decided it except the higher rate. If the higher rate is negatived, the lower rate may still stand. Rejection by the House of a higher rate does not necessarily justify the belief that the House is also against any limitation whatsoever. However, if you will permit me to go on, I will resume the thread of my argument and continue.

I was saying that even if the proprietors of other concerns could justly be said to earn their dividend, the shareholders of a bank cannot be so described, as they are particularly that class of persons who contribute nothing to the earning of the dividend. Anything, therefore, that is allowed to them by way of dividend is really generosity on the part of the public from whom they earn this dividend.

Shri B. L. Sondhi (East Punjab: General): Does any shareholder earn anything?

Prof. K. T. Shah: No shareholder ever really earns. It is all very well for interrupting a speaker on such grounds; but when it comes to testing point, those who offer such arguments make a discreet retreat.

The point is that if we limit the banking company's profit in the manner I am seeking to do by this amendment, we would not be negativing the general idea that I think the Finance Minister had in mind when he put forward that argument about limiting dividend of all companies, and which is contained in the ordinance even now. I do not know whether the date of the Ordinance's operativeness has passed. The principle of limitation of dividends is most unquestionably justified particularly in the case of banking concerns.

The second part of the amendment goes a step further. It is in the direction of conserving the profit thus earned, viz., all the surplus, undistributed profit is not to be left at the mercy or at the discretion of the conductors of the bank—the Directors of the Bank. It is to be made over to Government,—to the Reserve Bank in the first instance, who will hold the amount on behalf of Government.

This is a form of taxation of Unearned Income, which I trust will not be rejected by a Finance Minister whose next budget is expected to be, or is rumoured to be, a deficit budget. I do not exactly know how much he might gain out of this source. I am not prepared to say myself whether it will go a long way to relieve the deficit; but certainly it will be a laudable exercise of his Liberalism—if I may use the term—if he would put an end to the unlimited gain that the proprietors of banks derive. I hope therefore the House will accept this amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That to clause 15 of the Bill, the following Proviso be added:

"Provided that no bank or banking company shall declare or distribute as dividend or profit any part of the profit at a rate exceeding five per cent. per annum on the paid up capital and all surplus remaining undistributed after the payment or distribution of such dividend or profit, and after due provision has been made for appropriate reserves, shall be made over to the Reserve Bank on behalf of the Government of India."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I think it is quite unnecessary for me to repeat the arguments which I have placed before the House more than once. So I am not able to accept this amendment. I have always stated that this matter must be taken up as part of the general programme and secondly, while there is a provision affecting dividend payable by a company, this is not the period for introducing a provision specifically applicable to the banking companies and the rest of the amendment is simply consequential of the first and therefore I do not want to argue about it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That to clause 15 of the Bill, the following Proviso be added:

"Provided that no bank or banking company shall declare or distribute as dividend or profit any part of the profit at a rate exceeding five per cent. per annum on the paid up capital and all surplus remaining undistributed after the payment or distribution of such dividend or profit, and after due provision has been made for appropriate reserves, shall be made over to the Reserve Bank on behalf of the Government of India."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 15 stands part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 15 was added to the Bill.

Shri B. P. Jhunjhunwala: Is it to be supposed that Government does not contemplate limitation of dividends in the form of any other Bill?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: There is an Ordinance at present in force and question of transforming that Ordinance into an Act of this Legislature—that question is before the House.

[At this stage Mr. Deputy Speaker vacated the Chair, which was then occupied by Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava (one of the Panel of Chairmen)].

Prof. K. T. Shah: I move:

"That after clause 15 of the Bill, the following new clause be added:

"15A. (1) The policy of every banking company shall be governed and regulated by a Board of Directors, consisting of not less than seven and not more than eleven Directors, of whom—

(i) not more than half shall be elected by the shareholders from amongst themselves;

(ii) not more than one third of whom shall be nominated by the Government of India, on the advice of the Reserve Bank of India, to represent the deposit holders in the Bank, with due regard to the proportion between demand and fixed deposits;

[Prof. K. T. Shah]

(iii) and at least one Director shall be nominated by the Government of India, on the advice of the Reserve Bank, from amongst the members of the staff and employees of the bank to represent the staff and employees; and

(iv) one Director shall be nominated by Government of India, on the advice of the Reserve Bank, to represent the customers of the bank not included in any of the above categories.

(2) The Reserve Bank of India shall make rules to regulate the procedure of election or nomination of the Directors mentioned in sub-section (1), and prescribing the qualifications and experience required for such election or nomination in each case:

Provided that no Directors shall hold office at any time for more than two terms in succession."

Here is an evidence of my intention to save the time of the House in commending several points that are included in this one composite amendment. I could have put them forward each in a separate amendment, and that would have involved some waste of the time of the House. I trust the House would appreciate the desire on my part to be careful of its time and patience: and will give me a hearing on the subject, which I promise would be in as short a space as I can manage to put my arguments in.

In this case the first proposition may be taken to be understood, viz., that the policy of the banking company shall be governed and regulated by a Board of Directors. That is a matter of course that every company would have a Board of Directors, and it may be said that it is unnecessary to have brought it in by a specific amendment. My only excuse for having done so is that the several categories or interests, which I wish to get represented on the Board of Directors, could not have come in merely by taking it for granted that there is a Board of Directors.

That being premised, I now shall proceed to justify the number that I have suggested should be the upper and lower limit of the total personnel for the Board of Directors.

I do not think an excessively large board would contribute to the efficient working of an institution like a bank. It may be that every bank has branches in several parts of a province, or the country, the local conditions of which may not be known to the Central Board. It may accordingly be quite possible that local Directors, if any, are recruited for just a particular area or zone in which a branch or branches operate, while the general policy of the Bank rests with the Central Board. It must be compact and manageable.

On the other hand, too small a number will also be undesirable; for the variety of functions that the bank discharges—even a commercial bank has to perform—will not be satisfactorily attended to if the number is so small that there is no specialization possible.

I know that, as a matter of ordinary custom, bank directors are chosen, not by their special knowledge or experience in regard to any part of the banking business. Their only qualification usually is the length of their bank balance. In proportion, therefore, as they can sign a big cheque or not they are selected as bank directors.

I have, however, in mind a kind of director who would not be only a fee-receiver. He would be something more. In the last century—and I do not know if it is not so in the present time—a very expressive term was invented to describe directors of companies who were content only to receive fees. They were known as Guinea-Big directors. Far be it from me, Sir, to suggest that the most "respected" element of society, the bank director, is anywhere near that highly-prized laboratory specimen of the biologist. But in this case, Sir, I think the Bank director nevertheless ought to be a little more valuable and able to contribute something much more substantial to the working of the Bank than the usual type of directors in companies is.

I have, therefore, thought it necessary to lay down the minimum number so that there is some chance of some directors really directing and not merely receiving fees. I hope that this argument would commend itself to those who have it in their hands to conduct banks. Even if the amendment is not accepted, which is not a remote contingency, then too, they will, I hope, bear this free advice in mind. I know free advice is not usually listened to; and therefore may be not wanted. But at the same time, since bankers profess to render public service, I see no reason why I should not co-operate, and do part of my duty in giving them this free advice.

With regard to the next item of my amendment the categories that are to be represented should be the shareholder, the depositor, the employee and the customer. The most important in my opinion what is necessary, much more just and proper, is to have represented on the Bank Directorate the depositors. These are really the elements which contribute, if at all, to that volume of working capital, by which banks earn their profits. The deposits are usually several times over the shareholders' money. The shareholders, of course, I have put in the forefront, because even I am not prepared to invite this House to accept my logical view that there should be no representation for shareholders. I know it would be useless for me to put forward such a proposition, however logical and sound in theory it may be and as I have no desire to qualify myself for an inmateship in a lunatic asylum, I have refrained from giving you any such proposition.

I trust this sign of my innate moderation and wisdom will be appreciated by those who have the charge of this Bill in their hands; and that they will realize that when we give to the shareholders, who are the least operative and the least useful part of the Bank proprietorship, such as one half of the directing influences, we have done more than justice to the reasonable and legitimate claims of the shareholders.

That portion, on the other hand, of the sinews of war, which is several times more than share capital,—my honourable friends the bankers in the House will be able to tell us how very much more in proportion is the importance of the deposit-holder, as against share holder if only justice was done to everyone in this world, should get some representation. That at least should be given some recognition, and I am asking for no more than one-third.

Sir, it is some time since I have adopted the practice in public meetings not to address any meeting by beginning with "Ladies and Gentlemen", because I hold the view that "gentleman", according to the true authoritative dictionary definition of the Oxford English Dictionary, is one who lives upon his means, that is upon other people's labour, and therefore he is an excellent specimen of a parasite! (Mr. Homi Mody: "In your meetings there are no gentlemen!") No, people like you never attend my meetings; and therefore I am bereft of having "gentlemen" in my meetings of that type. And "ladies" are those who live on gentlemen, and therefore they are parasite into parasite or parasite square. So I have given up that practice. I have mentioned this here because I hold the depositor is like "gentleman", and the shareholder like "ladies"; and therefore their claim to receive any share, or dividends, or representation is in my opinion necessarily limited. But again, appreciating the present mood of the community, and thinking of the accepted notions in such a matter, I have to be moderate, and so have put forward only a very very moderate claim on behalf of the depositors, I trust it would be recognised that the depositor is a real contributor to the working capital of the bank; and that my plea will therefore not go unheard. I hope, therefore, that at least so far as this portion of my amendment goes it will be accepted.

May I, Sir, mention in this connection a parallel. Recognition has been given, and an analogy has been forthcoming, in other parts of our legislation, whereby for instance in the Insurance Companies, where a special policyholders' director is appointed. I am, therefore, asking for nothing revolutionary, when I suggest that there should be some representation for the Depositors who are similar to policyholders on the directorate.

Even for mere mortgages in an ordinary industrial or commercial company, the debenture holder is entitled to have a trustee of his to see that the interests of the Debenture holder or mortgage, are not neglected by the other directors of a concern. This is another well known precedent. I think that in this case, the demand, the suggestion of the amendment that the depositors should be represented in some proportion on the Board—and mine is a very modest proportion—will, I trust not be unacceptable to the House.

I next come to that element which in my opinion is the real source of all profit. It is the creator naturally of all the additional or surplus value in the community—namely, the workers in such concerns. It has become a very glib saying, and quite a fashionable fad, now a days that the workers should be asked to co-operate: the workers should join hands with the masters, or shall we call them employers: and, therefore, they should be asked to do the utmost work on the least favourable conditions their masters choose to offer them: and as for the policy or activities which determine the success of the undertaking, they shall have no voice in them. I hope there is no one in this House now, at this time of the day, who would quite frankly and brutally accept such a proposition. That I expect of course from those who are "gentlemen", but not from sensible people. The possibility then of some recognition of the source of all value, namely human labour, will not be too remote to contemplate and too fantastic to accept.

The proportion given to the employees by this amendment of mine is extremely small, almost negligible. And further, its appointment is entrusted to the Government of India who will act in such matters on the advice of a bank to recommend. In both cases of depositors as well as staff and employees I have suggested that the nomination should be by the Government of India on the advice of the Reserve Bank. And my reason for suggesting it also is quite clear.

There are some objections to my suggestion which I can anticipate and answer. It has been said, for instance, that the depositors are an ever-changing community. Hence to accord recognition to them in the shape of any representation on the Board of Directors would be to grant representation to a changing quantity. I do not think this argument is quite correct, because even the shareholders change. The shareholders are, for example, also those who are registered on a particular date and only those are entitled to participate in the election of directors when an election comes round. In the case of the depositors the same regulation may be made, if you wish to be fair and just to the depositors. That is to say, the depositors as on a given date may be regarded as a body by themselves, who may elect, just as the shareholders registered on a given date elect.

I know, of course, that the election of Directors by shareholders also is something like a farce, except in concerns, which, for one reason or another, provoke disproportionate publicity and the shareholders' annual meetings are much more active than Directors or managing agents would desire. The depositors may be still more inactive. Hence for fear that an unusual principle in its very beginning may be made futile, brought into needless ridicule, I suggest that the Government of India may act as trustee and on their behalf; and they may make appointment of a proportion or a number of directors who will look after their interests.

The same logic applies in the case of employees and staff of the banks. These are, as I have already said, the real makers, the real earners of the profits. To exclude them altogether from any seat on the Board or share in directing the policy or conducting the activities of an institution like a bank,—which after all is a public utility service,—is I think mistaken, mistaken not only in the interests of the bank itself, but mistaken also in the larger interests of the country. I hold this view because one day, however remote though it may be in the conception of my honourable friend, the Knight of the Money Bags, Sir Homi Mody or Mr. Mody, one day you will have to take over all public utilities. And when you have to take them over such a utility as a Bank you must find the personnel necessary and qualified to carry on these activities. If these activities have to be carried on by really qualified persons, then I think it is high time we begin now to give some representation to the workers, in the bank on the Board of Directors, on the highest place, on the highest authority regarding the conduct of the affairs of the bank.

All your claim, all your scheme for profit-sharing, for instance, would be useless or meaningless, so long as the determination of the profit is done exclusively by the proprietors or their representatives on the Board of Directors. There are ways and means by which profits can be made up, can be cooked, can be shown at a lower level or higher level, as you desire. And unless the workers are properly associated from the start, so to say,—unless the workers know how these profits are earned or made up, they would be justified in distrusting any scheme of profit-sharing.

I am, therefore, suggesting that, in this pre-eminent profit-making institution, namely a bank, it would be useful, and I think just as well necessary that we should have representatives of workers on the board of directors. That, therefore, is the justification for the next part of my amendment.

There remains only the last part of that section of the amendment which concerns the customer. The customer is the least represented in the direction of a bank's policy. In a co-operative institution, no doubt, the customer is most important; and no one has suggested that any lack of success,—assuming that there is any in the co-operative bank,—is due to the fact that customers were conducting or shaping the policy of the bank and taking part in its activities also. If it can be so in the case of a co-operative bank, why should it not be so in the case of commercial banks, where, presumably, the ordinary customer is as directly concerned with the daily business of the Bank as anybody else; and therefore would be in a position to advise on the Board of Directors quite as well as the ordinary director himself.

We have, indeed, a provision in the Act that directors cannot get for themselves unsecured loans from the Bank they direct; and, therefore, the customer, subject to this Act, if he happens to be elected as director or nominated as director, will certainly not be entitled to benefit himself only in the conduct of the bank's operation.

Best, however, that possible danger may dispose any section of the House against this amendment, I am trying to secure that, not the floating elements which make up the customers, but Government acting on behalf of the community as a whole, shall nominate one person on the Board to represent this floating or changing element of customers. After all the ultimate customer of all banks is the community as a whole. Therefore the Government should act as the trustee of the community. There is nothing improper in it. In fact it is but right and proper that the Government should do so.

All these categories are those which are most vitally interested in the successful operation of the bank; and as such I suggest that they should be all given their due share, or at least some share on the Board of Directors, so that they may be associated in shaping the policy and overlooking the conduct of the affairs.

One word more with regard to the last part of my amendment, namely that the Reserve Bank should make rules prescribing the qualifications for directorship whether elected or nominated. The rules, of course, may relate only to the procedural side, whether of election or nomination; but they must include some definite qualifications being prescribed for appointing or electing directors. This, I take it, will apply not only to the shareholders' directors and these three other categories—depositors, employees and the customers. Unless and until the directors are qualified, until and unless they have the necessary knowledge, training and experience, the entire Banking system may suffer. The entire business may suffer: all the more so, since at least as much as half of the total board may consist of representatives of the shareholders. I take it therefore that the qualifications prescribed by the rules shall apply as much to the directors chosen by the shareholders as those elected by the depositors or by the staff or employees or by the customers, or by all these or by Government on behalf of all these.

These qualifications, I further suggest, need not be necessarily restricted to the possession of certain capital holding in the bank, or certain deposit holding. But even if you have that (We can lay down as one of the qualifications the possession of some share or some other stake in the success of the bank) I suggest that there must be more positive, additional, and substantial qualifications which may justly rank as a reasonable claim to some knowledge and understanding of banking business. What those qualifications should be I am not presumptuous enough to say, prescribed here. I am leaving it to the Reserve Bank to make rules laying down these qualifications. Since the authority to lay down the rules will be pre-eminently that of the bankers' Bank, the national central bank or the credit institution of the country, I trust no one will look with suspicion and distrust upon this national organisation making rules of the kind suggested here.

For all these reasons I commend this very important amendment which I have the honour to place before the House and I trust the House will accept it.

Mr. Chairman: Amendment moved:

"That after clause 15 of the Bill, the following new clause be added:

- 15A. (1) The policy of every banking company shall be governed and regulated by a Board of Directors, consisting of not less than seven and not more than eleven Directors, of whom—
- (i) not more than half shall be elected by the shareholders from amongst themselves;
 - (ii) not more than one-third of whom shall be nominated by the Government of India, on the advice of the Reserve Bank of India, to represent the deposit holders in the Bank, with due regard to the proportion between demand and fixed deposits;
 - (iii) and at least one Director shall be nominated by the Government of India, on the advice of the Reserve Bank, from amongst the members of the staff and employees of the bank to represent the staff and employees; and
 - (iv) one Director shall be nominated by Government of India, on the advice of the Reserve Bank, to represent the customers of the bank not included in any of the above categories.

- (2) The Reserve Bank of India shall make rules to regulate the procedure of election or nomination of the Directors mentioned in sub-section (1), and prescribing the qualifications and experience required for such election or nomination in each case:

Provided that no Director shall hold office at any time for more than two terms in succession."

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: In all the past amendments moved by my honourable friend Prof. Shah it was always possible for a layman to make a distinction or make two divisions, one acceptable and the other unacceptable, one thinkable and the other unthinkable. We could make such broad divisions in all his past amendments. But in the case of his present amendment I am afraid no such distinction can be made. I am of opinion that none of the provisions which my honourable friend seeks to introduce would be acceptable if we examine the provisions carefully. First of all I consider it to be an arbitrary proposition that all banks must have directors not less than seven. Let us think for a moment of a bank which has been newly started and which has a comparatively small capital. If you insist that that bank should have not less than seven directors it will not be wise. At the same time in a big bank where a large sum of money is involved, large amount of capital has been invested and large amount of deposit has been taken, would it be wise to restrict the number of the directors to eleven? So I find it extremely difficult to accept the very first addition which my honourable friend has laid down in his amendment.

Coming to the clause in which he says that of the directors "not more than half shall be elected by the shareholders from amongst themselves" this clause is like turning out the owner of the house and occupying the house yourself. The shareholders in a bank or in any concern are in my opinion the persons more largely interested than anybody else. Just think for a moment of a concern which is not a banking concern and there you want to introduce somebody into the responsible position of director in the board of directors. At least you ought to have allowed the majority of the board of directors to be taken from the shareholders because they are the persons whose interest is largely at stake. So, that in my opinion is a very arbitrary proposition and should not be accepted by the House.

Then I come to the second sub-clause which says that "not more than one-third of whom shall be nominated by the Government of India, on the advice of the Reserve Bank of India, to represent the deposit holders in the bank, with due regard to the proportion between demand and fixed deposits". Now, this is a very difficult proposition and I do not know if my honourable friend has considered this matter in all its aspects, whether it is a practical proposition at all. Take for instance the case of the demand depositors. They are more or less transient beings. You will have a current deposit today and you may not find it the next morning. So I think it is rather going too far to give the demand depositors a representation in any bank. After all what interest has he got? He has not got any permanent interest in the bank. Demand deposit is removable at any time. Why are you so anxious to give representation to the demand depositors I cannot understand. Even in the case of fixed depositors the fixed deposits are only for a fixed period. Fixed deposits are not kept in the banks for all time. Why should they have any representation and why should they have as much or as substantial a representation as one-third of the whole board of directors. (Shri B. L. Sondhi: They may have drawn their deposits also.) My honourable friend Mr. Sondhi does not speak out in this Banking Companies Bill because he is afraid of wasting some time and afraid of persons who are interested in another Bill probably. So he is just giving out his views by way of interruption.

[Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri]

I also want to draw the attention of the House to the very impractical character of this proposition. Why is the Government of India going to bother its head about all sorts of banks which are going to be started in the country, and why should the Government of India take the responsibility of foisting upon the board of directors some member whom the Government of India consider fit? Why should they do it? And why should the Reserve Bank of India go about scanning the leaves of all the shareholders of different banks and find out from them persons whom they can recommend for the board of directors on any bank? Suppose a bank is started in the far eastern corner of India and certain persons have taken shares in it, how can the Reserve Bank go about inquiring and find out who amongst them are most deserving of nomination by the Government of India as a director of that bank? Therefore I say that in these days when both the Government of India and the Reserve Bank should be busy in chalking out a policy of nationalisation of banks, of which a large section of the House seems to be so much in favour, why should they fritter their energy and bother themselves in hunting out suitable members for the board of directors of banks?

The third sub-clause which my honourable friend has put in here runs as follows: "and at least one Director shall be nominated by the Government of India, on the advice of the Reserve Bank, from amongst the members of the staff and employees of the bank to represent the staff and employees". It is a most absurd proposition. Nobody could think of it. I know that in some educational institutions aided by Government and which have a managing committee, the staff is represented on the managing committee. If my honourable friend has taken the analogy from that I cannot praise him for doing so. It is one thing to run an educational institution and it is quite another thing to run a banking concern. To introduce into the board of directors of a banking concern representation from the staff is asking for something too much because after all it is the staff which has to be managed by the board of directors themselves and if the staff can come in their midst and thereby prevent or stand in the way of a proper criticism of the work of the staff, that would mean something which will very seriously hamper the work of the board of directors.

The next thing which my honourable friend will probably ask in a Managing Committee of an educational institution would be that the students should have a seat in the Managing Committee of a school. Already, Sir, a system has been started, and I think it has been started in various places in India, whereby the students have themselves now and then taken upon themselves the duty of selecting their teachers, making representations to the Managing Committee that a certain teacher is bad or that certain teachers ought to be changed. That sort of a thing may be a sort of an amusing pastime but it cannot be seriously considered in a banking concern. So, I say that even if my honourable friend is so ambitious as to ask the House to accept this amendment, he should at any rate withdraw the amendment in sub-clause (iii) which, in my opinion, is quite absurd.

Then, the most stunning blow which this amendment gives is what is contained in sub-clause (iv). It is an astounding proposition and it will take years for the Government of India to institute proper investigation and to oblige the honourable Mover in complying with what he wants in this clause. This clause says that the Directors shall be nominated by the Government of India on the advice of the Reserve Bank, to represent the customers of the bank not included in any of the above categories. Where are you going to find out all the customers of the bank? And from among the customers of the bank the Reserve Bank shall have to select somebody and submit a recommendation to the Government of India and the Government of India out of a panel of the list which is given by the Reserve Bank of India, has to find out a suitable customer who will be able to represent them in the Board of Directors.

Who are the customers, may I ask? Does the honourable member refer to the borrowers of the banks as the customers, or the depositors again come as customers? The depositors are already covered. Sir, I do not understand what actually is meant by "customers" in this clause. And where can they be found and how can their list be prepared? Supposing my honourable friend Mr. Jhunjhunwala gives me a cheque—which he some times does, by the way—and I cash that cheque in some bank, am I the customer of that bank on whom he has issued the cheque, or am I not? So, if I am the customer, then there are two customers in one transaction. He is a customer because he has issued the cheque, and I take the cheque and give it to Mr. Ahmed; I take the cheque and I become a customer and Mr. Ahmed actually cashes the cheque in some bank and he also becomes a customer. So, in one transaction there can be several customers and how can you find out these customers?

The honourable mover of the motion perhaps desires as a sort of a set-off on account of the rather unkind treatment which he has received at the hands of the Select Committee and also the Honourable Minister who has in most of his points not seen eye to eye with him and has given a lot of trouble, as a sort of a revenge he wants the Honourable the Finance Minister to go about in the country, search out the customers, hunt out the depositors, look at the employees of the different banks and then make up his mind whom he should nominate, whether he should accept the recommendations of the Reserve Bank or not.

An Honourable Member: Sir, it is already one O'clock.

Mr. Chairman: He is finishing now.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: I have not finished, Sir.

Mr. Chairman: Then the House stands adjourned till 2-30 P.M.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock, Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: I will now make my observations on the sub-clause (2) of this new Clause 15A. Sub-clause (2) says that "the Reserve Bank shall make rules to regulate the procedure of election or nomination of the Directors mentioned in sub-section (1) and prescribing the qualifications and experience required for such election or nomination in each case." There is a proviso, which says "that no Director shall hold office at any time for more than two terms in succession." Presumably, the word "election" in this sub-clause refers to the election of Directors from amongst the shareholders, because the other sub-clauses do not refer to any election but are confined to nomination. Now, I would most strenuously resist this sub-clause on the ground that now you are going to invite the Reserve Bank of India to lay down qualifications for election as Director of a banking concern. All banking concerns which are now in existence have in their Articles of Association laid down qualifications of Directors and also the procedure by which they will be elected. If the House accepts this sub-clause, it will mean that new qualifications which may be different from those laid down in the Articles of Association and new procedure for election will have to be adopted. That cannot be supported by any banking concern. On the other hand, there will be a lot of row if you are going to tell the existing banking concerns, "Look here, you have to modify your Articles of Association, you have to modify your procedure. This is the new qualification laid down by the Reserve Bank and those who are not qualified according to it will have to go out of the Board of Directors." It may so happen that by the new rules which will be laid down by the Reserve Bank most of the shareholders of the bank will have been disqualified and prevented from having a position in the bank itself.

That is about qualification. Now about experience. I have a very great quarrel over this word "experience". Now, what do you mean by "experience"? Is it the experience of a Director, or experience as a successful businessman, or experience as a retired Government servant in a responsible position, which will be a qualification? What is the experience you want? Furthermore, it becomes a good contradiction—whether long experience is wanted or even a short experience will do. In all matters where experience is wanted, the longer the experience the greater the value we attach to it. Now, my friend Prof. Shah has limited by this proviso the experience to a period of two terms.

Mr. Speaker: May I know whether the honourable Minister proposes to accept this amendment?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: No, Sir, I am not going to accept it.

Mr. Speaker: Therefore, the opposition is unnecessary now. Let us proceed to the next clause.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: It is better to know the thing and give one's vote. The Minister may oppose it, but am I not entitled to give my views on this subject?

Mr. Speaker: Certainly, but the point is that we have a very long Bill and a large number of amendments, and the same arguments are being repeated.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: I am not repeating.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member is not repeating his own arguments, but the arguments advanced by others. Practically, the points are the same and generally-speaking, the arguments are being advanced over and over again. It is difficult to say which is being repeated and which is not being repeated. Now, that the honourable Minister does not accept the amendment, the honourable member may put his points very briefly. He need not take a long time.

Shri Bihari Lal Bhargava (Ajmer-Merwara): But in spite of the Minister's not agreeing to the amendment, still the amendment may be acceptable to the majority and therefore my friend's arguments may help us.

Mr. Speaker: Theoretically, everything can be argued, but we have to see whether we are utilising the time of the House to the best advantage or not.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: So far as this amendment is concerned, no one has spoken excepting Prof. Shah and now myself. When I began to speak, the Honourable Minister had not expressed his views, and I do not know—sometimes by accident some amendments of my honourable friend Mr. Ahmad are accepted.

Mr. Speaker: Therefore, I put it to the honourable Minister whether he is going to accept it or not. However, the honourable member may shortly state his points.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: I have two points. I will deal with them one by one. As regard experience, I pointed out how, if this proviso is accepted, short experience seems to be preferred to longer experience. As regards nomination and qualifications to be laid down for nomination, what are the qualifications in case of depositors? Whether a fixed depositor will be preferred or a depositor who has a current account will be preferred—this point has to be seen. As regards the experience and the qualification of the employee, whether it is educational qualification or the higher position of the employee in the office should be given preference.

Thirdly, as regards shareholders even, we find among the shareholders there are some who invest large sums of money, but who are not educationally as qualified as other shareholders. There are graduates, M.A.s. and doctors also among shareholders. We do not know whether these latter should be preferred or whether a man who is ignorant or illiterate should be preferred just because he has invested large sums of money, in the matter of election or nomination. Sir, I keep an open mind, though I oppose this amendment. There may be some points in it which may commend themselves to the House, and it is just possible that the amendment is accepted by the House.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I oppose this amendment. As regards the appointment of directors is concerned, the proposal embodied in the Bill is that the appointment of directors of banking companies should be regulated under the relevant provision in the Companies' Act, Sec. 83 (a) and Sec. 87. The scope of this Bill is limited. It is intended to prevent the more serious abuses which have crept into our banking system, particularly in the war period, and for this purpose we think it unnecessary to introduce such drastic provisions regarding the directors of banks. It is impracticable for Government to nominate the directors of banks in the whole country. It is quite an impracticable thing. Apart from that, if the Government and the Reserve Bank accept responsibility for the management and supervision of every banking company in the land, such a responsibility will place them in a very embarrassing position.

As regards the depositors, it is a very difficult question, and it stands on the same footing as the representation of consumers in an industry. Naturally we take it that the Government which represents the whole community would be representative of the depositors and the consumers. In fact the whole purpose of this Bill is to prevent the interests of depositors and of customers directly being jeopardised. The general prohibition with regard to the various practices of bankers which are likely to adversely affect the interests of customers will, I think, be quite sufficient; and I do not think any purpose will be served by accepting Professor Shah's amendment.

Mr. Speaker: I put the amendment to the vote of the House.

The question is:

"That after clause 15 of the Bill, the following new clause be added:

15A. (1) The policy of every banking company shall be governed and regulated by a Board of Directors, consisting of not less than seven and not more than eleven Directors, of whom—

- (i) not more than half shall be elected by the shareholders from amongst themselves;
- (ii) not more than one third of whom shall be nominated by the Government of India, on the advice of the Reserve Bank of India, to represent the deposit holders in the Bank, with due regard to the proportion between demand and fixed deposits;
- (iii) and at least one Director shall be nominated by the Government of India, on the advice of the Reserve Bank, from amongst the members of the staff and employees of the bank to represent the staff and employees; and
- (iv) one Director shall be nominated by Government of India, on the advice of the Reserve Bank, to represent the customers of the bank not included in any of the above categories.

[Mr. Speaker]

- (2) The Reserve Bank of India shall make rules to regulate the procedure of election or nomination of the Directors mentioned in sub-section (1), and prescribing the qualifications and experience required for such election or nomination in each case:

Provided that no Director shall hold office at any time for more than two terms in sub-session."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Speaker: I find that we have been in this clause by clause consideration of the Bill, for more than two days and we have not got to more than about half of it. So I have two things in mind to save time, without interfering with the proper discussion of the subject. One is that I propose to request the Honourable Minister to intervene and give out his views on any amendment as it is moved. That will clarify the position of the Government to the House; and only those who do not agree with the Government may find it necessary to make long speeches in support of the amendment, if the Government is opposed to it, or in opposition to the amendment, if the Government is inclined to accept it. That will materially save the time of the House.

The second suggestion is that, though I am very much unwilling to impose any time limit for a particular amendment, I think I shall have to request Members to agree to some such convention, so far as this Bill is concerned, if we find that any particular amendment is being debated for an inordinately long time. But I hope we shall not have to resort to it, if we follow the first procedure that I have suggested.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: I hope this procedure will be relevant to this particular Bill only.

Mr. Speaker: What the honourable member perhaps means to ask is whether this procedure is restricted to this particular Bill. Yes, and to other Bills in similar circumstances. My point is that everything will be judged on its own merit. This is not necessarily a precedent. I do not want to have any time limit whatever in the matter of a legislation. But as we go on with this Bill, it is inevitable that arguments are repeated over and over again, different aspects are stressed at different times, the substance of the arguments being the same.

Prof. K. T. Shah: Sir, I move:

"That in clause 16 of the Bill, after the word 'is', the words 'himself or whose father or brother or nephew or partner' be inserted."

Mr. Homi Mody: Or father-in-law?

Prof. K. T. Shah: No fathers-in-law.

Sir, the amended clause would read thus

"No banking company incorporated in a Province of India shall have as a director any person who is himself, or whose father, or brother, or nephew, or partner is a director of another banking company."

This is intended to guard against a banking directorate becoming more or less a close concern, an exclusive field in which, by means of inter-locking arrangements, the entire control of the banking system is reserved, so to say, for a very small number of persons, in effect.

Sir, I have listened with the utmost respect and attention to what you were pleased to say a few moments back; and I can assure you that, for my part, I have taken every word of it to heart. I shall try my very best to carry out what you have said. But, may I, with all respect, submit that this is a very important and an organic measure, on the proper construction of which depends, not only the welfare of the present generation, but even of the future generations. This is a service which goes to the very root of the matter, and it needs to be looked at from a variety of angles. The arguments, therefore, advanced for the several amendments by several speakers may sound like repetitions. But, speaking for myself, I can assure you that I shall try to avoid any repetition. (Shri B. L. Sondhi: "But you have no further amendments") I have no more amendments, not because I have become out of breath, but because I have some consideration for other people, too.

The intention of this amendment is to avoid the possibility of banking directorates becoming a close-geld, for personal relatives or business associates, of bank directors. If they by their relatives and associates become directors in Bank after Bank, there would soon be a monopoly of directorships for a small section. Persons belonging to one bank should not be appointed directors in another bank. That, I think, is a straight proposition; and as such, ought not to be objected to. I hope the House will accept the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in clause 16 of the Bill, after the word 'is', the words 'himself or whose father or brother or nephew or partner' be inserted."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Sir, I oppose this amendment. I think it is unreasonable, unworkable and unsound to visit the sins of a director upon his father, brother, nephew or partner.

Shrijiit Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: I support the principle contained in this amendment from this point of view. Why it is necessary to have this provision is this. A director of a Bank, if he is also a director of another trading concern, or Bank, might be in a position to influence the board of directors to advance money to that other firm or Bank without any security, or with insufficient security or for any other reason for which this bank may suffer. If that is so, it is necessary that the near relations of the board of directors of a bank should not be allowed to have any interest in any other concerned. Otherwise, the benami system will take place. Suppose I am a director of a bank, I cannot be a director of an Insurance company or Bank. What I shall do is, just to help my son or son-in-law or somebody who is a near relation to be a director of that concern. The whole object of this Bill will be frustrated unless you have a restriction on the lines of my honourable friend Prof. Shah's amendment. So this aspect of the matter may be considered by the honourable Minister.

Mr. Speaker: I shall now put the amendment to vote.

Shri B. P. Jhunjhunwala: On a point of clarification, Sir, will it apply to the existing banks? Suppose a man is a director of so many banks, will he retire as soon as this Act comes into force?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in clause 16 of the Bill, after the word 'is', the words 'himself or whose father or brother or nephew or partner' be inserted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 16 stand part of the Bill".

The motion was adopted.

Clause 16 was added to the Bill. ...

Clause 17 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

(i) "That in clause 18 of the Bill, for the words 'on the Friday of each week' the words 'on Friday of each week' be substituted."

ii) "That in clause 18 of the Bill, for the words 'on each such Friday', the words 'on each Friday' be substituted."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Sir, I accept the amendments.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in clause 18 of the Bill, for the words 'on the Friday of each week' the words 'on Friday of each week' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in clause 18 of the Bill, for the words 'on each such Friday', the words 'on each Friday' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 18, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 18, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Shri O.V. Alagesan (Madras: General): Sir, I move:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 19 of the Bill, for the word 'forty' wherever it occurs, the word 'thirty' be substituted."

I remember the Honourable the Finance Minister in his reply to the debate in the course of the general discussion has agreed to reduce the forty per cent. to thirty per cent. and I hope he will accept this amendment.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I will accept the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 19 of the Bill, for the word 'forty' wherever it occurs, the word 'thirty' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move my amendment. I would like to know whether it will be accepted.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: No.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That in clause 19 of the Bill,—

(i) the first proviso to sub-clause (2) be omitted; and

(ii) in the second proviso to sub-clause (2) the word 'further', occurring in line one, be omitted."

This proviso reads:

"Provided that a banking company shall not be liable for an inadvertent contravention of the provisions of this sub-section if it had not been guilty thereof for a period exceeding two months and if it satisfies the Reserve Bank without delay that such contravention was inadvertent."

There is an attempt to excuse deliberate contravention of the provisions of the clause. I submit this would be extremely mischievous and this should be entirely deleted.

Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi (Madras: General): The wording is, "inadvertent contravention".

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: It purports to be inadvertent contravention, I shall show there could be no inadvertent mistake anywhere in a bank. Under sub-clause (2), a bank cannot possibly be the owner whether as pledge mortgagee or absolute owner, of the shares of another company, exceeding thirty per cent. of the paid up share capital of that company and also it cannot subscribe to or hold as pledgee, mortgagee or as absolute owner any shares in excess of thirty per cent of that company. Where is the chance of any inadvertent mistake? Is it possible for anybody to make a mistake as to what is the share capital of a limited company? These are public figures. Any limited company has a defined and well known share capital which is known and which is at any rate knowable, and the share capital of his own concern is also known. How can it be possible that a man inadvertently subscribes or takes shares more than thirty per cent. of another company? I submit that this could not be inadvertent. What is the consequence? On a point of clarification, I would like to know whether this is a provision against the prosecution of inadvertent contravention. Is it so? (The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: 'Yes.') I shall show also that a prosecution would not lie, because, here, the liability is that of the 'company'. The proviso says: "Provided that a banking company shall not be liable....." you cannot prosecute a company. The only penalty provided is in sub-clause (4) of clause 46. Sub-clauses (1) to (3) deal with different matters. Sub-clause (4) says:

"If any other provision of this Act is contravened, or if any default is made in complying with any requirement of this Act or of any order made thereunder, every director and other officer of the banking company who is knowingly a party to the contravention or default, shall be punishable....."

So, a man cannot be punished under the penalty clause for any contravention which is done unknowingly. The safeguard which is attempted to be provided through the proviso in question is sufficiently provided for in sub-clause 4 of clause 46. The prosecution can only be of a director or an officer who knowingly contravenes or is a party to the contravention. The proviso under consideration tries to save a company which can never be prosecuted under the penalty clause. So the proviso is inapplicable to any conceivable set of circumstances. It is impossible, thus, in normal circumstances, to conceive of an inadvertent mistake on the part of a banking company. We are laying down a procedure against principles of sound banking. The proviso should be deleted. In fact, if we allow this proviso to stand, it would rather open the door to fraud and knowing contravention; and whenever any body is caught, he would say "this is inadvertent". The Reserve Bank will have to be approached and they will have to be satisfied that the contravention was inadvertent and so on and so forth, and then the contravention must last for two months and so on and so forth before any prosecution could be launched.

I submit the safeguard which is a normal safeguard that a man cannot be held guilty of any offence unless he does an act knowingly is sufficiently provided for in clause 46. Even apart from this, it is a well known principle of 3 P. M. law which has been recently enunciated by the Judicial Committee that unless knowledge or intention is definitely ruled out by a Statute, such knowledge or intention is the necessary ingredient of an offence, i.e., for an offence, unless knowledge or intention is definitely ruled out, it is to be presumed that a man can never commit an offence unless he does the act knowingly or intentionally. In these circumstances I beg to submit that the proviso is objectionable from every point of view and it is absolutely needless and it may throw the door wide open to fraud.

Then, Sir, the drafting is bad. It should have said that "unless the contravention has continued for two months". Instead of that clause says "if it had not been guilty thereof for a period of exceeding two months." The companies cannot be guilty because the company is not contemplated within clause 46. Further, a man merely contravenes a provision. He is "guilty" only when the court says so. I submit this proviso should be carefully considered in relation to clause 46 and in relation to points which I have mentioned. I think the proviso is absolutely meaningless and should be dropped.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in clause 19 of the Bill,—

(i) the first proviso to sub-clause (2) be omitted; and

(ii) in the second proviso to sub-clause (2) the word 'further' occurring in line one, be omitted."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: This proviso was put into the Bill in response to suggestions made to the Select Committee by a representative deputation of bankers. Because I think they felt that although you might not impose penalties under Section 46 and though no positive purpose may be served by it, nevertheless it is worth while giving a clear direction of this kind for the guidance of bankers in their day to day work. The question of inadvertency is a matter which has to be decided on by the Reserve Bank. They have to satisfy the Reserve Bank as to whether there is inadvertency. That is the main point he has raised.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: May I point out that the Reserve Bank's complaint is absolutely necessary under clause 47? No prosecution could proceed unless upon a complaint by the Reserve Bank. If the Reserve Bank thinks that no contravention has been made, it would not prosecute at all.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava (East Punjab: General): If no penalty is provided at all, where is the gravamen of the offence?

Mr. Homi Mody: May I explain to my friends what happens? The provision was put in the Bill, as the Finance Minister said, as a result of the representation made by the deputation which appeared before the Select Committee. In the case of large banks, such as the Bank with which I happen to be connected, having dozens of branches all over India, more than one branch may be asked advance against a particular scrip. Now at a particular moment when any Branch Agent is asked to advance money, he does not know what other Agents have been advancing or the Head office has advanced, and the Head Office is not in a position to say what the aggregate of advances is that have been made by all the branches on that particular scrip. Therefore it is that the safeguard has been provided. At the end of the month, of course, all returns are in and the Head Office is in a position to lay down instructions for the guidance of all agents asking them not to go beyond a particular limit. But at a particular point, of time when an advance is asked for, it is not possible for every Agent to know what other agents or the Head Office have advanced on that particular scrip.

Mr. Speaker: As I see, the difficulty pointed out is this. It is not that inadvertency is not possible. That is conceded but the point made out seems to be that, if this inadvertence and the consequence of it is not liable to be punished either by prosecution or in any other manner in the exercise of its powers by the Reserve Bank, then where is the occasion for this proviso? If it is a breach which is not punishable in any manner, then why have this proviso?

Mr. Homi Mody: Sir, so far as the point made by you is concerned, it is a matter for the Draftsman, but my honourable friend's point was that it was impossible for a bank to commit through inadvertence a breach of this section.

Mr. Speaker: That is how I understood the point.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): I wanted to intervene earlier and say that the arguments of my friends Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad and Pandit Bhargava are not for deletion but for introducing an omission later in the penalty clause. In a big bill of this kind sometime here and there, with all due diligence, some mistakes might be committed. Now we were under the impression that this would be covered by connecting clause. Originally it was stated not more than 20 per cent of the shares of any other company should be held by a bank. That was what the Original Select Committee reported. This Select Committee somehow thought that it should be increased from 20 to 40 per cent. Now the Finance Minister seems to agree to 30 per cent. Mr. Naziruddin's point is it is not the penalty whether it is 20 per cent or 40 per cent. Even if it be 40 per cent we cannot catch hold of these people. We are much obliged to my friend Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad for having pointed out the default committed in the penalty clause. I am sure this is important and with your permission and I hope you will excuse the absence of notice in this matter. I will move an amendment. This proviso is intended for the bonafide cases. A bank may have so many branches and one branch might be taking as pledge a number of shares and another may take and it may be more than 30 per cent. So unless within a period of two months they make it up they are liable to be punished. With this my friend Mr. Mody also agreed that it is a matter for drafting. So the person who has to cry against is keeping quite and let us not try to water it down. I would appeal to Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad not to insist on his amendment but let us join together and put down another amendment to make this penalty clause a little stringent and cover this particular case also.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I have not the least objection to making the law stringent.

Shri S. V. Krishnamoorthy Rao (Mysore State): I think it is already covered. It comes under Section 46, clause (4) which reads:

"If any other provision of this Act is contravened, or if any default is made in complying with any requirement of this Act or of any order made thereunder, every director and other officer of the banking company who is knowingly a party to the contravention or default, shall be punishable with a fine....."

Mr. Speaker: The point is this. There is the word 'knowingly' there. So mere contravention will not do. In order to charge a director or other person with liability, the knowledge of that particular breach must be brought home to him. Therefore his argument was that this proviso becomes meaningless if you put in the word 'knowingly'. If you drop it, the proviso might be without any meaning because I do not know what the other provisions are. The question will have to be considered, whether every director or other person is to be made liable merely by the accident of his being a director or any other person. He may be staying thousands of miles away and even if the breach is inadvertent he may be liable.

I think the best course would be, unless the Finance Minister is very clear on that point and he is of the other view, to consider the present amendment along with clause 46, because the provisions are allied. I can keep them over for consideration and the matter can be taken up later on. I do not think it is merely a drafting matter.

The other point will have to be considered as to whether every director or other person is to be made liable criminally merely because he is a director, and irrespective of the fact as to whether he knows or not or has nothing to do with the breach.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I will have it examined.

Mr. Speaker: So may I postpone consideration of the amendment? It may then stand over. The point may be informally discussed and if honourable members come to a conclusion that some amendment of Section 46 is necessary, or some amendment is necessary here,—whatever it is—provided it is substantially agreed upon, I will accept it.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I move:

"That in the second Proviso to sub-clause (2) of clause 19 of the Bill, for the words 'without delay', the words 'within one month of the said commencement' be substituted."

[Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad]

In the second proviso it is said that if something is done without delay, the person involved may be saved. But the words "without delay" are vague. There should be some time limit. A prosecution may depend upon this. Otherwise, it will be impossible to find out whether information has been given to the Reserve Bank without delay. In fact, when a prosecution may depend on this, this may create an uncertainty. I have suggested one month to bring out the point, but the matter may be considered. This vagueness also adheres to the first proviso "without delay".

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in the second Proviso to sub-clause (2) of clause 19 of the Bill, for the words 'without delay', the words 'within one month of the said commencement' be substituted."

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: It should be two months as in the previous proviso.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: "Without delay" might stand because it provides a certain amount of elasticity: "...if it reports the matter without delay to the Reserve Bank if it brings its holding of shares into conformity with the said provisions within such period, not exceeding two years, as the Reserve Bank may think fit to allow". I think that makes sufficient provision for that amount of indefiniteness.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: The Bank is to report without delay on the question. The prosecution will depend on whether the report has been made with delay or without delay. It is impossible for any Court of Law to find out whether it is with delay or without delay. The prosecution would be uncertain.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: That part may be left elastic as it stands now. It does not do any harm.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: This one month we need not insist upon, because even if it is only without delay, the matter has to be brought to the notice of the Reserve Bank. But the bank can have two years time within which it can readjust its holdings, namely, "...if it brings its holding of shares into conformity with the said provisions within such period, not exceeding two years, as the Reserve Bank may think fit to allow." The Reserve Bank may give two years. "Without delay" is what the Reserve Bank may consider in the circumstances. If it is only one or two banks, it may not be difficult. It may ascertain the facts and there will not be any delay. What is a delay with respect to a small bank may not be a delay in respect of other banks. It is best to leave it as it is.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: These words "without delay" should be deleted. It is the company which has to find out whether it has contravened and it is not the Reserve Bank who has to find out that there is a contravention. It is the duty of the company to report without delay. I would like two months as in the previous proviso. In that case, it will be two years again which will be given by the Reserve Bank Unless "without delay" is made definite, it will be difficult for the court to find out what is "without delay".

Mr. Speaker: The point seems to be that any bank which contravenes this provision cannot know about it unless it investigates all its dealings and affairs, and that bank has to be given some time to look into all its affairs: then only, after it has looked into all these matters, there is the question of delay or no delay. The bank cannot be expected to look into all its dealings in one or two months. The maximum delay is permissible.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Two years time is given for the Reserve Bank to readjust, but the information must be communicated without delay.

Mr. Speaker: But first the party has to know that there is a contravention, and how can it know it unless it looks into its affairs?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Give them two months!

Mr. Speaker: I think it has been sufficiently discussed. Does the honourable member want it to be put to the House?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in the second Proviso to sub-clause (2) of clause 19 of the Bill, for the words 'without delay', the words 'within one month of the said commencement' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That in the second Proviso to sub-clause (2) of clause 19 of the Bill, for the words 'may think fit to allow' the words 'may allow' be substituted."

The words "may think fit to allow" rather indicates a psychological factor. If we leave it as it is, then the test will be subjective as to what was in the mind of some officer of the Reserve Bank. If you say "may allow" that is enough. The thing must depend on the actual allowing and not on whether the officer "thinks fit" to allow. In fact the test is absolutely wrong. It should be an objective test, a test which can be perceived by the senses as a physical fact. If it is "allowed" it indicates that they "think fit to allow", but nothing should be made to depend on the psychological condition of the mind of the officer.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I have nothing to say.

Mr. Speaker: Do I put it to the House?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in the second Proviso to sub-clause (2) of clause 19 of the Bill, for the words 'may think fit to allow' the words 'may allow' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: So clause 19 stands over and I shall not put it to the House. May I make one more suggestion now. It seems.....

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, the further amendments are not of such a controversial nature.

Mr. Speaker: There are several amendments which stand in the name of Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad...

Shri B. L. Sondhi: Ninety five per cent.

Mr. Speaker: Will it not be possible just to sit outside the House, discuss them informally and come to a conclusion...

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I shall be perfectly willing but I do not get the opportunity.....

Mr. B. L. Sondhi: There are 125 more amendments in his name.

Mr. Speaker: I think my suggestion should be possible if the Honourable Minister agrees...

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I would like to know whether any of these amendments would be acceptable to the honourable Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Instead of ascertaining that in the House itself, it would be better if the parties sit outside the House for half an hour and discuss the amendments between themselves.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Sir, I had all the amendments examined in consultation with the law officers and I regret to say that I am not in a position to accept any of the amendments to clauses, 20, 21 and also 22. I have had them all examined.

Mr. Speaker: Is the honourable member then keen to move any one of the amendments now? Let us be clear about these three clauses.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I can say that only one by one.

[At this stage Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair, which was then occupied by Mr. Deputy Speaker (Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar.)]

I do not wish to move any of the amendments to clause 20.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 20 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 20 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I do not know if the honourable Minister would consider accepting any of the amendments under this clause.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: They have been considered and I am unable to accept any.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: They should be considered with reference to the arguments and reasons behind them. It is impossible to appreciate an amendment without hearing the argument for it. If it is the desire of the House that I should not move them, I would not trespass upon the attention of the House any more. I do not know what is the desire of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member must make up his mind. That is not the method of ascertaining the wishes of the House. The honourable Minister does not accept the amendments.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, there is a feeling in the House that the amendments are of a dilatory character or are of an unsubstantial character. It looks as if I have created a certain amount of disgust in the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We shall start with a clean slate and it is open to the honourable member to make up his mind one way or the other.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: May I make an appeal to the honourable member? I am grateful to him for drawing my attention to these points but I can tell him that I discussed them very fully, I spent a great deal of time over all these amendments of which my honourable friend has given notice. I am not dismissing them off hand.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I am not saying that the honourable Minister is dismissing them summarily. I am submitting that it is not easy to see the points in favour of an amendment unless it is argued by the member who moves it.

Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi: The idea of the discussion proposed outside the house was to give him the opportunity of convincing the honourable Minister.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: There is still half an hour more for discussion of the Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Take for instance the first amendment. The honourable Minister does not accept it. There is no difference between the original clause and the amendment, unless an enormous amount of light is likely to be thrown by the honourable member. In view of what the honourable Minister has said it is open to the honourable member to move his amendments or not. We need not spend any more time on this.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Although members say that I am free to move, still I feel that there is a desire that I should rather stop. In fact it is hardly appreciated that these drafting amendments are of substance. Only seven days ago in the Federal Court the word "the" in a particular place created a lot of trouble and Shri K. M. Munshi had to advance a long argument over it. It was felt that the position of the word "the" and a 'comma' created a lot of difficulties. These are not very easy to appreciate for those who are not accustomed to deal with them. So it is not easy off hand to give up a thing or to press for it. The best course is to move the amendment, press it before the House, and rely upon the judgment of the House. Yesterday an honourable member told me privately that it is provoking to be met with a comma. The very sight of the thing upsets many honourable members. Sir, I do not propose to move any amendment to clause 21 but I do so under protest....

Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi: Sir, there should be no reflection on the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I should like it to be understood by the honourable member that the House is not against him. So far as this particular clause is concerned the honourable Minister thinks that these amendments are not so important. However, if the honourable member feels seriously that further discussion is necessary he can move them without making any remarks against the House as a whole.

The question is.

"That clause 21 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted

Clause 21 was added to the Bill.

Clause 22 was added to the Bill.

Clause 23 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I would like to know whether my amendment would be acceptable to the honourable Minister. It is only a re-arrangement of the words, which appears better.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I do not accept it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member may move his amendment if he wants.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I do not wish to move it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 24 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 24 was added to the Bill.

Clause 25 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I would like to know whether my amendment would be acceptable. It is a desirable re-arrangement.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: No.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I submit that re-arrangements ought not to be rejected because of the fact that it is re-arrangement or that the existing words would do. Sometimes it is said that a wooden cat would do if it can catch rats.

Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi: Catch wooden rats, I suppose.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: You ought not merely to say that the existing draft would do. One cannot be too careful in the matter of drafting. We should have in view the difficulties which would arise in a court of law. I would ask the Honourable Minister to consider this re-arrangement from that point of view.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I have considered the re-arrangement and I do not think it improves the drafting.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next amendment seems to be more of substance and I think the honourable member may confine himself to that.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That in clause 26 of the Bill, for the words 'all accounts', occurring in line four, the words 'all deposit accounts' be substituted."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the honourable Minister accept it?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: No, Sir.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: The passage occurs in clause 26, in line 4. It is there that "every banking company shall, within thirty days after the close of each calendar year, submit a return in the prescribed form and manner to the Reserve Bank as at the end of such calendar year of all accounts in the Provinces of India..." The words "all accounts" standing alone would be somewhat misleading. I think what is meant is all deposit accounts, that is all accounts of current or fixed deposits which have not been operated upon for ten years. "Accounts" may mean account books, but "deposit accounts" may mean something specific. If we say "all accounts which have not been operated upon for ten years" it might be intelligible to a businessman, but it is not sufficiently precise.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it not made clear by the words which immediately follow namely "giving particulars of the deposits"? "Return of accounts" does not mean return of account books.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: It can be made more intelligible.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not think the honourable member presses it.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: No, Sir.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In the next amendment. I think the words suggested and the words which stand in the clause mean the same thing.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: "Maturity" is the term which is well-known and which is universally used. That is the technical expression. My honourable friend Mr. Mody will be able to say that. We all think of the date of maturity of a fixed deposit. Whenever it becomes payable it becomes mature.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: "Date of expiry" is clearer.

Shri H. V. Kamath (C.P. and Berar: General): Perhaps my honourable friend Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad thinks that an individual does not necessarily expire when he becomes mature and that is why he is suggesting the word.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Bachelors do not mature!

Sir, I shall first move this amendment. I move:

"That in the Proviso to clause 26 of the Bill, for the words 'date of the expiry of such fixed period', the words 'date of maturity' be substituted."

The date of expiry of such fixed period really is the date on which the deposit becomes payable. As I submitted, the usual expression is "maturity" of such deposit. Mr. Homi Mody is fortunately here and I think he will be in a position to tell us what is in vogue. It will not do merely to say that the thing is intelligible but the correct expression in vogue should be used.

Mr. Homi Mody: Since my expert opinion has been asked for I am giving it free, gratis and for nothing. "Maturity" would be certainly the better word. But that is not the point on which I rose to intervene. What I would like to know is, what do Government propose to do with all these inoperative deposits? Is it intended to confiscate them? What is the intention behind this provision, may I know?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: That is a matter for the Reserve Bank to decide.

Shri B. L. Sondhi: But it is the official organ today.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: You do not surely want to provide straightway for the particular way in which it would decide.

Mr. Homi Mody: On their own responsibility the Reserve Bank could not decide. It would be a matter of legislation or an ordinance.

Shri B. L. Sondhi: Government must be able to give us a satisfactory reply on this point.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I take it that unclaimed deposits might in the end revert to the State.

Shri B. L. Sondhi: What? Expropriate them?

Mr. Homi Mody: In a number of instances the accounts may not be operated upon for a variety of reasons. A man may not bother about the account, and for years and years it might lie undisturbed. I myself have a small account in a bank which I have not operated upon for a very long time. I do not know whether.....

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: May I suggest that as the clause stands at present, the particular point that Mr. Mody has raised does not really call for any answer. Because, all that is required here is a report. It is only a matter of information.

Shri B. L. Sondhi: Then Government is not committed. Is that the idea?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Mr. Mody put a hypothetical question and I have said that this is a matter to be discussed later on. The question does not arise here. All that clause 26 contemplates is information.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The point raised by Mr. Mody does not arise with reference to this clause. The unclaimed deposits will be disposed of according to the law of the land unless the law is modified.

Mr. Homi Mody: There is no law of the land yet.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In respect of a property belonging to a person he can file a suit up to thirty years from the date of refusal of payment. The bank is always bound to render an account when the period of limitation is over. It is not left to the Finance Minister to explain as to how and under what circumstances it will be dealt with. All that is said here is to safeguard the interests of the depositors, they must send an account to the Reserve Bank which is one more check.

Shri B. L. Sondhi: In other words, so far and no further.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes. Regarding the amendment of Mr. Naziruddin.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: That has been forgotten altogether!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Honourable Minister does not accept it.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I prefer "expiry".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in the Proviso to clause 26 of the Bill, for the words 'date of the expiry of such fixed period', the words 'date of maturity' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 26 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 26 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I would like to know whether my amendment would be acceptable.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: No.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I shall move it just to show the difficulty. I move:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 27 of the Bill, for the words 'The Reserve Bank may, by notice in writing, require a banking company at any time to furnish it', the following be substituted:

'The Reserve Bank may at any time, by notice in writing, require a banking company to furnish it'."

I submit the whole point in the amendment is the placing of the parenthetical expression "at any time". Where would you place it? In the clause it is placed, I submit, a little wrongly. It says "The Reserve Bank may by notice in writing require a banking company at any time to furnish it". Whether the expression "at any time" is to be taken along with the furnishing of it or with the Reserve Bank requiring it at any time is not clear because the expression is placed between the two conditions. It is hovering between the previous condition and the subsequent one.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Sir, may I accept this?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 27 of the Bill, for the words 'The Reserve Bank may, by notice in writing, require a banking company at any time to furnish it', the following be substituted:

'The Reserve Bank may, at any time, by notice in writing, require a banking company to furnish it'."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 27, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 27, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Clause 28 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, before I move the next amendment, I would like to know whether it will be acceptable.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: No Sir.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Then, does the honourable member wish to move it?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, it is difficult even for me to make up my mind on the spur of the moment as to whether this is to be moved

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member must have looked into all these things.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: No, Sir. It is so difficult to keep notice of all things which have come and of things coming in advance that I cannot make up my mind. I must consider it. In fact, we have skipped over a large number of amendments, so I was a little out of breath.....

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not think the honourable member expected that all his amendments were acceptable!

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: An argument may alter the mind of the honourable member. It may be that there may be some good thing underlying these amendments. Sir, I think it is better for me to move it. I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 29 of the Bill, the word 'At the expiration of each calendar year' be omitted."

Mr. Homi Mody: Then what happens to the subsequent reference to "that year"? If you cut out the words mentioned in your amendment then the subsequent words are meaningless.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In his next amendment, the honourable member has put "at the expiration of each calendar year" later on. It is only juxtaposition.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: All right, Sir, I do not press the amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next amendment is also not pressed?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Not pressed.

श्री लक्ष्मी नारायण साहू: मेरा जो संशोधन है वह बहुत छोटा है। लेकिन इस प्रस्ताव को मेरा देने का मतलब यह है कि यहां एकदम खुलासा कर देना चाहिये क्योंकि आडिट जो होता है बहुत जगह में गड़बड़ होजाती है और आखिर में बैंक की खराबी होती है। इसलिए क्लॉज़ २९ का जो बी पार्ट है उसमें इतना हो जोड़ दिया जाय।

(English translation of the above.)

Shri Lakshminarayan Sahu (Orissa: General): I have got a minor amendment. The object in moving this amendment is that it should be clearly laid down that occasionally as the audit is not properly conducted it ultimately affects the Bank adversely. Therefore, the following be added to part (b) of sub-clause (2) of clause 29 of the Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The amendment has not been moved. The honourable member will move it first.

Shri Lakshminarayan Sahu: I move:

"That for part (b) of sub-clause (2) of clause 29 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

'(b) in the case of banking companies incorporated outside the Provinces of India by the manager, or agent or the principal officer of the company in the Provinces of India duly audited by an auditor qualified under Section 144 of the Indian Companies Act.'"

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The amendment does not fit in. Possibly the honourable member wants in the amendment, in addition, "these accounts must be duly audited by an auditor qualified under Section 144 of the Indian Companies Act."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Here it is only a question of signing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes, signing by the Manager.

Mr. Homi Mody: There is no question of auditing about it.

Shri Lakshminarayan Sahu: If he signs it he must assure himself that it is properly audited.

Mr. Homi Mody: Then the phrasing of your amendment does not bring it out.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Possibly the honourable member forgot to mention—or it is a misprint, we do not know—after the words "Provinces of India", the words "after the accounts are". I think that is what the honourable member probably means. Then the amendment will read thus:

"That for part (b) of sub-clause (2) of clause 29 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

(b) in the case of banking companies incorporated outside the Provinces of India by the manager, or agent or the principal officer of the company in the Provinces of India, after the accounts are duly audited by an auditor qualified under Section 144 of the Indian Companies Act."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Personally, I think, Sir, that it is quite unnecessary to have this provision because as far as the standing of auditors in other countries is concerned. I do not think we are justified in casting this reflection upon auditors who have been accepted as auditors certified in other countries. I think it is a point to remember that we might have branches in other countries and this sort of a thing might call for retaliation.

Shri Lakshminarayan Sahu: But will it not leave loopholes for certain banking companies not to get their accounts audited by duly certified auditors?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: But it would be done by people who would be certified under the law of the country. There is a later provision for that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the honourable member wish to move his amendment, or if he has moved it does he withdraw it?

Shri Lakshminarayan Sahu: I have moved it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Honourable Minister does not accept it. Anyhow, if it is the wish of the honourable member to put it to vote I will formally do it, along with the additional words—evidently that is the intention of the mover.

The question is:

"That for part (b) of sub-clause (2) of clause 29 of the Bill, the following be substituted:

(b) in the case of banking companies incorporated outside the Provinces of India by the manager, or agent or the principal officer of the company in the Provinces of India, after the accounts are duly audited by an auditor qualified under Section 144 of the Indian Companies Act."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Then the next two amendments are formal ones.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, I wish to speak on this point, though I do not wish to move the amendment. The point is about the expression "official Gazette". This expression is defined in the General Clauses Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The only point is, if the small letter 'o' is put there for the big letter 'O', perhaps it may be that the printer had only the small letter.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: No, Sir, in various enactments 'official' begins with small 'o' and 'Gazette' "G".

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I wish to clear up the point. I have carefully considered the amendment. Sir, I beg to move.....

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This particular thing appears in various other enactments also.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Let it be discussed and finished once and for all. Let the House give a ruling.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It has already been decided that House cannot give direction so far as capital letter and small letter is concerned. It is for the Draftsman.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: The House has the right. It is useless for us to refer the matter to the Draftsman, who systematically ignores it. It is better for us to know that this sad state of affairs would be more acceptable to the official Draftsman and then we shall cease to trouble ourselves altogether. I wish to explain the whole situation. First of all, I shall move it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think it will be better to refer this matter to the Draftsman to adopt a uniform course in this matter.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I wish to give them certain amount of information.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The amendment will be sent to them.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I should explain my position

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think this has been sufficiently explained a number of times. I rule that this suggestion shall be left to the Draftsman.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad rose—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order. The question is.....

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Then it is perfectly useless.

(The honourable member threw his papers on his tables)

You may do whatever you like.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Such kind of conduct on the part of the honourable member will not be tolerated by the Chair.

The question is:

"That clause 29 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 29 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I desired to make my point clear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is not the intention of the Chair, particularly myself, who has only come here for some time and will get back to the seat there—I am one with you—it is not my desire to insult any member, but on the other hand we have had these suggestions for a long time and the honourable member has been given us all treats about this matter. This is a matter for the Draftsman and therefore there must be a stage, especially when we are anxious to get through this Bill, when we should stop. I am sure the honourable member also appreciates the desire.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I have co-operated with the desire of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: But against this, why should this House have to spend more time whether it should be capital letter or small letter so far as 'Official Gazette' is concerned? I leave it to the House to decide whether it is right or not. I have given my ruling.

Shri R. K. Sidhva: You have given the ruling. We must obey when a ruling is given.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That in part (b) of sub-clause (1) of clause 30 of the Bill, for the word 'country' the words 'country or the Indian State' be substituted."

Shri B. L. Sondhi: Can we legislate on the Indian States? Is not the amendment out of order?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: It is an Acceding State. It should be "Acceding State".

Shri B. L. Sondhi: You cannot change your own amendment now.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: It is not my amendment. It is the property of the House. It is due to the House to make it as perfect as possible. I admit the justice of the objection taken by Mr. Sondhi and in obedience to his direction, I wish to amend it into "country or an Acceding State." I shall explain the position. The passage occurs in clause 30. It refers to audit. It is said that "the balance sheet and profit and loss account shall be audited by a person duly qualified to be an auditor under the law of the country in which the Company is incorporated." I beg to submit that there are many companies which are incorporated outside India or the Acceding States, but there may be a company operating in India which has been incorporated in an Acceding State. In such circumstances, the audit of the company may be conducted by an auditor who is qualified under the law applicable to the Acceding State concerned. This is the intention of the amendment. I believe there are banking companies in India which have been incorporated in an Acceding State. Is that not so?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: If I may explain, I think the honourable member's amendment is rather misconceived, because the word "country" applies to any territory which has a particular system of laws. India is a country, a State is a country, U.K. is a country; it really shows the territorial area within which a particular system of laws applies.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I have given due consideration to that, but here in the context, a country does not to my mind include an Acceding State at all. Country really means an independent country—Afghanistan, Persia, China are all countries, but in regard to the States, they are Indian States and they are Acceding States. The question is whether the word "country" is sufficiently comprehensive to include also an acceding State. The safeguard in sub-clause (2) of clause 5 would not also help, because here the word used is "country", not "province". The whole question is whether "country" is sufficiently wide to include Acceding States. I submit that it is not. In fact, my amendment is designed to clarify it so as to include also an Acceding State. That would make it absolutely complete and it would give right to auditors to audit the accounts of a banking company which is incorporated in a State.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in part (b) of sub-clause (1) of Clause 30 of the Bill, for the word 'country' the words 'country or an Acceding State' be substituted."

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: Sir, I support the amendment moved by my honourable friend, because the law as regards auditors in the provinces of India and in the Indian States is not the same and we are having the Chartered Accountants Bill and even there the qualifications in respect of persons who are in the Indian States are not the same. This morning, I met a gentleman who hails from Jaipur, and he did not pass any examination but the State of Jaipur appointed him auditor for companies. According to the Bill we are now considering, this gentleman will not be qualified to be an auditor, whereas in Jaipur State he is a good auditor. Unless a specific mention is made for the States, this will not cover those cases.

I submit that section 5(2) will not cover this point. Therefore it is quite necessary that we should make it quite clear that auditors in the Indian States will be competent to audit accounts of companies in those States.

Shri S. V. Krishnamoorthy Rao: Sir, I think clause 1(2) makes the position quite clear. It states that this Act shall apply to all the Acceding States. All references to Provinces in India will be considered as including the States also, and I think the amendment is not necessary.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: May I explain the words that we have used to distinguish the various territorial areas. We use the word 'provinces' with regard to the Dominion and "Acceding State" with regard to the States but the word "country" is common to both.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in part (b) of sub-clause (1) of Clause 30 of the Bill, for the word 'country' the words 'country or an Acceding State' be substituted."

But what will happen if there is a different law in an Acceding State?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: He will be qualified under the law which prevails in that State.

The Honourable Shri K. Santhanam (Minister of State for Railways and Transport): Under the new Bill for auditors, the auditors in the Acceding States will also be brought in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: But if the State accedes only for certain purposes, and not for the Banking or Company law purposes, what happens?

Shri S. V. Krishnamoorthy Rao: In that case, the wording will have to be "other than Acceding States" because the Acceding States come under the Provinces under Clause 5(2).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Anyway, I shall put the amendment to vote. I have already read it.

The motion was negatived

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House now stands adjourned till 5 P.M. today.

The Assembly then adjourned till Five of the Clock in the afternoon.

The Assembly re-assembled at Five of the Clock in the afternoon, Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

RAILWAY BUDGET FOR 1949-50

The Honourable Shri N. Gopalaswami Ayyangar (Minister for Railways and Transport): I rise, Sir, to present the Budget for Indian Government Railways for the financial year 1949-50, and, in doing so, to invite the attention of honourable members to certain broad results of their administration.

2. With the conditions that prevailed in the country immediately after the transfer of power in 1947 and the manner in which Railways had to function under those conditions, the House has been made fully familiar by my predecessor when he introduced the Budgets for the latter 7½ months of 1947-48 and for the year 1948-49. I do not propose to deal with them again on this occasion. The strain of the second world war, the splitting into two of a united railway system, the violent civil disturbances in the Punjab, the aggression and fighting in Kashmir, the Hyderabad Police action, the general economic and transport upset—these and other similar developments in the country confronted Railway Administrations with problems at once difficult, grave and unprecedented in their nature and intensity. But they tackled them all with determination and vigour and the situation had, after a few months, so far improved that Dr. Matthai was able to tell the House in February last that we had turned the corner. Not only had we then got our feet planted firmly on the road to normalcy but we have since confidently, and with increasing pace, made progress in the direction of a rationalisation and an expansion of the service that Railways render to the public. Partition, as a profoundly disturbing factor in our economy, has not spent itself out completely yet. But it is rapidly receding into the background and we are progressively settling down to the new and altered conditions created by it. Railways have registered this trend perhaps even more quickly than other sectors of our economic make up.

3. The story of Indian Government Railways, their actual performance during the last 18 months, their present position and their promise for the future will take me longer to tell than the time I would willingly tax the patience of the house for on any other matter or occasion, but I do hope honourable members will bear with me on the present occasion. It is not my purpose, however, to recount anything like a fairy tale. I shall not seek to exaggerate such small achievements as the Railways may claim to their credit; neither shall I gloss over their obvious and many deficiencies. Mine will be an endeavour to give an unvarnished recital of some features of Railway Administration as it has been, and, as I hope it will, in the immediate future, be.

4. I desire at the outset to take Honourable Members into my confidence and tell them straightaway that there will be no enhancement of railway fares or freights in the coming year. This, I hope, will be received by the House and the country with a sense of relief. One reason for my making this known at once is that, if I reserved it to a later stage of my speech its surprise value might get discounted on account of its inevitability on the fact and argument preceding it. There is, however, another reason. That, in spite of the Central Pay Commission scales of pay and dearness allowance, of the Adjudicator's Award, of the mounting demand by labour for larger additions to wages, of the continually rising cost of works and stores and the like, we have not yet reached the stage of being compelled to raise fares and freights for financing them in the Budget year is a piece of good fortune which I am naturally anxious honourable members should share with me and the Government from the earliest possible moment. It will, I hope, put honourable members into a cheerful frame of mind—if nothing else, into a mood for enduring the drab, largely factual, account of finance and administration that it will be my duty to place before them this afternoon.

5. I shall first give a summary of the financial position. For the first time after the partition, figures are available for a three-year period—the actuals of a past or completed year, the Revised Estimates for the passing or current year and the Budget Estimates for the coming or Budget Year. Only in the present case, the year for actuals is a truncated one, being the period of 7½ months from 15th August 1947 to 31st March 1948.

6. Both the Budget and Revised Estimates for this period of 7½ months were based on a number of uncertain factors and were, therefore, vitiated by some amount of guess work. The Budget Estimate showed a deficit of Rs. 2.69 crores which was raised to Rs. 5.2 crores in the Revised Estimate. In the accounts of the year, however, the actual gross receipts were Rs. 7 crores less than in the Revised Estimate but the Working Expenses also showed a reduction of Rs. 8.75 crores. There was a net improvement of Rs. 37 lakhs under Miscellaneous Transactions and a saving of Rs. 34 lakhs under Interest Charges. The actual net deficit was, therefore, Rs. 2.74 crores which was met by withdrawal from the Railway Reserve.

7. In the Budget for the current year the estimate of gross traffic receipts was placed at Rs. 190 crores. Deducting Rs. 3.87 crores on account of worked lines, the traffic receipts of Indian Government Railways were estimated at Rs. 186.13 crores. The chief contributors to the amount under gross traffic receipts were passengers (Rs. 79.54 crores), other coaching traffic (Rs. 13.82 crores), goods (Rs. 94.16 crores), other earnings (Rs. 3.44 crores) and suspense (minus Rs. 96 lakhs). A considerable growth of traffic, both passenger and goods was relied upon for sustaining these estimates. The experience of actual receipts in the course of the current year indicates that the Budget Estimates will be bettered substantially. Passenger earnings will account for an increase of Rs. 5.86 crores, other coaching earnings for an addition of Rs. 3.91 crores and goods earnings, for a rise of Rs. 3;20 crores. In the case of passenger earnings, it is due to a large increase in the numbers using railways and some decrease in ticketless travelling. An enhancement in the rates for parcels and the larger volume of military traffic maintained throughout the year are responsible for the increase under other coaching earnings. The additional revenue under goods earnings is mainly due to the general revision carried out of the railway rates freight structure with a view to achieving both rationalisation and simplification. The new rates came into effect on the 1st October, 1948. The Revised estimate figure for passenger earnings is Rs. 85.40 crores: for earnings from other coaching traffic Rs. 17.73 crores and for goods earnings Rs. 97.36 crores. Allowing for a drop of 30 lakhs under other earnings and a difference of 1.83 crores under suspense, the total of gross traffic receipts has been placed at Rs. 204.50 crores in the Revised Estimate of the current year. Deducting Rs. 4.12 crores for worked lines, the traffic receipts of Indian Government Railways will amount to Rs. 200.38 crores.

8. Working expenses for the current year were taken at Rs. 159.78 crores in the Budget but are put at Rs. 168.71 crores in the Revised Estimate. Ordinary Working Expenses will be higher by Rs. 8.71 crores due largely to increased expenditure under repairs and maintenance, freight and handling charges on fuel, loss on grainshops and dearness allowance. There will be a small addition of Rs. 11 lakhs to the Appropriation to the Depreciation Reserve Fund; though the capital expenditure is below the estimate, a sum of Rs. 25 lakhs has to be appropriated to the Fund on account of the Darjeeling-Himalayan Railway. Another Rs. 11 lakhs are accounted for by increased payment to worked lines. Per contra there will be an improvement of Rs. 13 lakhs under Miscellaneous transactions. The net revenue which in the Budget Estimate was taken at Rs. 32.37 crores will be Rs. 33.07 crores in the Revised Estimate. From this has to be deducted the amount (Rs. 22.24 crores) representing interest on the Capital at charge. The net surplus on the year's transactions is thus estimated at Rs. 15.83 crores. I shall be dealing with the disposal of this amount later.

9. The estimates for the Budget year 1949-50 have been framed as carefully as it is possible to do now. It is not anticipated that there will be any substantial change in general economic conditions in the country taken as a whole. There is likely to be no worsening of the present position. On the other hand, it might be hoped that such overall change as might express itself will be in the direction of a slight improvement. It is expected that there will be a progressive replacement of outworn locomotives and a consequent improvement in the power position. More traffic will thus be catered for. The new freight rates which were enforced in 1948-49 only for half the year would operate during the whole of the year 1949-50 and bring in an appreciable addition to goods earnings. The food position however, might be difficult. There will probably be a gradual extension of rationing and scarcity conditions have already made their appearance in parts of the country. A record volume of food grain imports is anticipated. All this would mean a larger internal movement of food grains which, being low-rated traffic, will probably express itself in some reduction of goods earnings. A slight drop in passenger earnings has been assumed as a result of the introduction of the new three class accommodation in trains, though the recent trends of the results of this change do not altogether justify this apprehension and there might possibly be some increase under this head. The progressive increase in recent years in the volume of parcels traffic will, it is expected, be maintained in 1949-50. And this, together with the revision of parcels rates introduced from the 1st October 1948, will also bring in some addition. There will, however, be a fall in earnings from military traffic. Based on these anticipations, the Budget Estimate of gross traffic receipts has been placed at Rs. 210 crores. This is the combined result of a slight reduction under passenger earnings (Rs. 31 lakhs) and under sundry earnings (Rs. 10 lakhs), an improvement under other coaching earnings (Rs. 39 lakhs) and under goods earnings (Rs. 6.04 crores). Deducting receipts of worked lines (Rs. 4.15 crores), the traffic receipts of Indian Government Railways will amount to Rs. 205.85 crores.

10. The estimate of ordinary working expenses for the Budget year has been placed at Rs. 159.03 crores being Rs. 3.17 crores above the figure (Rs. 155.86 crores) in the Revised Estimate of the current year. The additional dearness allowance sanctioned by Government with effect from the 1st January 1949 to all staff drawing not more than Rs. 250 has been provided for the full year at a cost of about Rs. 8 crores. The increase in pay and running allowances of Running Staff will cost another 1 1/3rd crores. The total provision on account of cash dearness allowance is estimated at Rs. 28.85 crores to which has to be added the loss on working the restricted Grainshops Scheme, for the benefit of those sections of the staff who have opted for it, namely Rs. 12.80 crores. For the programme of implementation of the Adjudicator's Award to be carried out in 1949-50, the different Railway Administrations except to employ about 74,000 additional hands and the consequent increase in the wage bill on this account alone will be about Rs. 4 crores. An increase of Rs. 1.15 crores over the Revised Estimate of the current year will occur under periodical over hauls and other repairs to locomotives and other rolling stock and under track maintenance. For payment of claims for goods lost or damaged other than those relating to repartition transactions, an amount of Rs. 1.31 crores has been included. To the total under Working Expenses (Rs. 159.03 crores) has to be added Rs. 11.47 crores under depreciation and Rs. 1.62 crores for payments to worked lines.

11. The net revenue of the Budget Year will thus be Rs. 32.32 crores. Deducting Rs. 22.88 crores under interest charges, the net surplus will be Rs. 9.44 crores.

12. I shall now explain how I propose to dispose of the net surplus in each of the two years 1948-49 and 1949-50. According to the arrangements recommended at the time of the last Budget by a Committee of the House presided over by you, Sir, and accepted by the House, out of the Railway surplus for the year 1948-49, Rs. 4.50 crores were to be credited to General Revenues and an equal amount to the Railway Reserve Fund; the balance and any improvement in the surplus that might accrue during the year were to be credited to the Railway Betterment Fund. The surplus was estimated in the current year's Budget at Rs. 9.84 crores and thus the Betterment Fund obtained a credit of Rs. 84 lakhs. The Revised estimate figure for the Railway surplus is as I have already said, Rs. 15.83 crores, an increase of about 60 per cent. Under the arrangements already referred to, this amount would have had to be distributed as follows:—

General Revenues	..	..	Rs. 4.50 crores.
Railway Reserve Fund	..	..	Rs. 4.50 crores.
Betterment Fund	..	..	Rs. 6.83 crores.

I have, with the concurrence of my honourable colleague, the Finance Minister, reviewed the position in the light of compelling considerations. The substantial increase in the total surplus amount and the needs of the general financial position of the country justify an increase of the contribution which Railways may make to General Revenues. Neither of the two usual claimants for the Railway share of the surplus, namely, the Railway Reserve Fund and the Railway Betterment Fund stands in its present condition in need of any replenishment. On the other hand, the Railway Depreciation Reserve Fund requires to be strengthened to the maximum possible extent. It has, therefore, been decided to distribute the current year's Railway surplus as follows:—

General Revenues	..	..	Rs. 7.34 crores.
Railway Betterment Fund	..	..	Rs. 84 crore.
Railway Depreciation Reserve Fund.	..	..	Rs. 7.65 crores.

For the same reasons as in the case of the 1948-49 surplus, the Budget surplus for 1949-50 (Rs. 9.44 crores) will be allocated as follows:—

General Revenues	..	..	Rs. 4.72 crores.
Railways	..	..	Rs. 4.72 crores.

The whole of the Railways share will be appropriated to the Railway Depreciation Reserve Fund.

13. Expenditure not chargeable to the Revenue of the year is financed from three sources, Capital Funds, the Betterment Fund and the Railway Depreciation Reserve Fund. In the Budget for the current year, a provision of Rs. 53.29 crores was made for such expenditure. The Assam rail link will, however, cost us Rs. 1½ crores more than what was entered for it in the Budget. In the course of the year we have sanctioned and commenced additional works not provided for in the Budget, such as the Locomotive Building Project at Mihijam—which, honourable members will be interested to know will be re-named Chittaranjan—the doubling of the Anand Barejadi line on the Baroda-Ahmedabad Section of the B. B. & C. I. Railway, the partial doubling of the Delhi-Mathura Section and the doubling the Budni Barkhera Section of the G. I. P. Railway. Per contra, the expenditure anticipated on Road Services will not be fully utilised and some of the works have been dropped or postponed as a part of the measures for fighting inflation. The revised estimate of the expenditure during the year is now placed at Rs. 54 crores, Rs. 27.3 crores of which will be under Capital, Rs. 3.79 crores under the Betterment Fund and Rs. 22.91 crores under the Railway Depreciation Reserve Fund. The programme for 1949-50 is estimated to cost Rs. 71.15 crores. It does not include the construction of any new line. Rs. 50 lakhs will be spent on the railway-cum-road bridge project over the Ganga at Mokameh. The total cost of this work is Rs. 12 crores and it is expected to take five years to complete. The expenditure on the rolling stock programme for the year will be Rs. 36.15 crores and includes 440 locomotives, all on replacement account. Rupees four crores will be spent on machinery and Rs. 26.63 crores on other works. The most important of these in the Locomotive Building Project at Chittaranjan, for which there is a provision of Rs. 5.5 crores. Provision has been made for a marshalling yard at Vatva on the B. B. & C. I. Railway and an expenditure of one crore of rupees on Road Services. It is proposed to buy the Pachora Jamner Railway at a cost of Rs. 21.88 lakhs, out of which Rs. 3.75 lakhs representing the premium will be charged to Revenue. For other details, I must request honourable members to refer to the Explanatory Memorandum. Although the budget year's programme is for an expenditure of Rs. 71.15 crores, a lump sum cut of ten per cent. is being made to provide for the usual inability of Railway Administrations to spend the full amount. The net provision entered in the budget is therefore only Rs. 64 crores, out of which Rs. 28.64 crores will come from capital, Rs. 1.5 crores from the Betterment Fund and Rs. 33.86 crores from the Railway Depreciation Reserve Fund.

14. It is necessary that I should give honourable members some particulars about our reserves. In view of the state of the Railway finances during the three year period which we have been surveying, as also the likely prospects during the period immediately following, it is safe to assume that there is no likelihood of our having to draw on the Railway Reserve Fund, either for meeting losses or for making contribution to General Revenues. This Fund started the current year with an opening balance of Rs. 6.51 crores. There has been an addition to it during the year of Rs. 5 lakhs, being the net gain on investments in shares of Branch Line Companies. The withdrawal from the Fund amounted to Rs. 5 lakhs again being arrears of depreciation on the units of replaced rolling stock chargeable to this Fund. The balance at the end of the year will therefore also be Rs. 6.51 crores. No amount is proposed to be added to the Fund during 1949-50, nor is there any need to do so. The balance of Rs. 6.51 crores will, however, stand to the credit of the Fund in that year.

15. According to the practice in vogue since the Betterment Fund was constituted, it has been meeting not only the expenditure on passenger amenities, but also the expenditure on amenities to staff, including quarters for class IV staff and on unremunerative operative improvements costing not more than three lakhs of rupees each. The expenditure from the Fund provided in the Budget for the current year for all these purposes was Rs. 5.22 crores. In the course of the Budget debate during February 1948, the House took exception, and I consider rightly, to this Fund being used for financing expenditure other than that relating to passenger amenities. Dr. Matthai then assured the House that its wishes would be respected in the future. In pursuance of this undertaking, the rules for the classification of expenditure have been changed. The change will in the normal course only apply to works started after 31st March 1949, but with a view to fulfilling the spirit of the undertaking given, it has been decided that the amount charged to the Betterment Fund in the Year 1948-49 in respect of works in progress on the 1st April 1949 other than those relating to passenger amenities should be written back to Revenue in the accounts of the year 1949-50. Expenditure on amenities to staff and on unremunerative improvements costing not more than three lakhs of rupees will, from 1949-50 onwards, be charged direct to Revenue. The actual opening balance in the Fund at the beginning of the current year was Rs. 14.54 crores. The additions to the Fund during the year are Rs. 83.62 lakhs, the share of the Railway surplus and Rs. 41.80 lakhs being the interest on the balance of the Fund. From the total of these three items, namely, Rs. 15.79 crores, has to be deducted the amount of withdrawal from the Fund, namely, Rs. 3.79 crores. The closing balance of the Fund in the revised estimate will thus be Rs. 12 crores. In view of this heavy balance and of the slow pace of expenditure from this Fund in the past, particularly on passenger amenities, it has been decided not to make any appropriation to this Fund in the Budget year. It will, however, be credited with the interest on the balance of the Fund amounting to Rs. 40.33 lakhs. The expenditure provided for the coming year is only Rs. 1.5 crores and the whole of this will be spent on passenger amenities. The history of this Fund must be somewhat disappointing to honourable members as it is to me. Out of a total expenditure on works from the Fund since its inception, namely Rs. 98 lakhs, the amount that has been spent on passenger amenities proper was only Rs. 13 lakhs up to the end of 1947-48. And even in the current and budget years, the amounts spent on and provided for passenger amenities, are wholly disproportionate to the requirements. I can find excuses for these shortages, but cannot disguise, from myself or the House, the feeling that more should be done in this direction. The importance of pushing expenditure on passenger amenities is being repeatedly pressed on Railway Administrations and I propose to have an intensive examination of the position carried out early in the coming year with a view to listing works which should be executed and to laying down a programme with time limits for ensuring that such works are carried out with expedition. If, as a result of this intensive drive, it is found possible to spend in 1949-50 more on such works than the Rs. 1.5 crores provided for, I am sure, I shall be able with the concurrence of my honourable colleague the Finance Minister and the Standing Finance Committee for Railways, to increase the amount to be withdrawn from the Betterment Fund for expenditure on such works.

16. The annual appropriation to the Depreciation Fund is now made at 1/60th of the capital at charge, but withdrawals are made to the full extent of the replacement cost. It has been calculated that, in respect of certain assets like locomotives which have to be replaced in 1949-50, the withdrawal from the Fund will be at the rate of rupees eight for every rupee contributed to the Fund in respect of those assets up to the date of replacement! Honourable members will appreciate that at this rate there would be a disastrous depletion of the Fund in the near future. The actual Opening Balance in the Fund at the beginning of the current year was Rs. 95.93 crores. There will be a withdrawal of Rs. 22.91 crores during the current year and Rs. 33.86 crores during the Budget year. The normal appropriation to the Depreciation Fund is Rs. 11.29 crores in 1948-49 and Rs. 11.47 crores in 1949-50. The withdrawals will thus be twice the normal contribution in the current year and three times in the coming year. The closing balance at the end of 1949-50 would have dwindled down to Rs. 61.92 crores but for the special additions to the Fund that we have decided to make; with these additions it will stand at Rs. 74.28 crores. It may be safely assumed that there will be heavy withdrawals from the Fund in the succeeding two or three years also. The position of the Fund at the end of five years from now is a matter which gives grave cause for anxiety. This unsatisfactory position is due mainly to two factors. There is a very large gap between the original cost on which the annual appropriation to the Depreciation Fund is based and the replacement expenditure at present prices. The flat rate of contribution, 1/60th, is out of tune with this gap. Secondly the Depreciation Fund which started in 1924-25 has so far received no contribution in respect of the depreciation on assets in existence then which had accrued prior to that year. These arrears were estimated at the time at Rs. 20 crores. The Indian Railway Enquiry Committee have recommended that for the next five years an annual contribution of about Rs. 22 crores should be made to the Fund. It is obvious that the whole matter should be carefully examined and our future policy in regard to depreciation should be very clearly defined. Pending such an examination, it is necessary that we should strengthen this Fund to the maximum possible extent at every opportunity that presents itself. It has accordingly been decided to pay into the Fund, in addition to the normal contribution and in instalments the 20 crores representing the arrears prior to 1923-24. The result of this policy is expressed in the Budget now presented. The total contribution to be made to the Fund under the decisions that have been taken in regard to the disposal of the Railway surplus will amount to Rs. 18.94 crores in 1948-49 and Rs. 16.19 crores in 1949-50.

17. The convention relating to the separation of Railway from General finance which was adopted by a resolution of the old Central Legislative Assembly in 1924 was, as honourable members are aware, intended to remain in force for at least three years and was to be thereafter subject to periodic revision. There was an abortive attempt by a Committee of the Assembly in 1928 to re-examine this question. For the next 15 years this attempt was not renewed. In 1943, a Railway Convention Committee which was constituted was wound up soon after it issued an interim report. In 1947, during the Budget session, a Committee of the Legislative Assembly was set up for the purpose of investigating this matter, but owing to the far-reaching political changes that followed, the Central Legislative Assembly and its Committees ceased to exist after the Budget session. It has not been possible since, in view of the far more important problems that confronted Government in quick succession, to take up this question. The investigation should, however, no longer be delayed. I shall, therefore, be inviting the House in the course of this session to set up a Committee to go into this matter including also the problems relating to the Depreciation Fund and to make its recommendations before the end of the calendar year.

18. From these details of Railway book-keeping, I shall now turn to a subject in which, I am sure, honourable members will feel somewhat more interested namely, Railway performance. Our travel, our agriculture and our industries have gradually grown up on a foundation of cheap and adequate railway transport. It is not, therefore, a matter for surprise that its shortcomings should come in for frequent, at times carping, criticism. The War, and the Partition which followed a little over two years later, are responsible for many of our present difficulties. We have however to bear in mind that it takes a considerable amount of time to overtake the effects of such far-reaching and disturbing events. We have made progress in overcoming them and shall continue to do so.

19. Under passenger traffic, there has been some increase in the number of trains during the current year. Between April and November 1948, 5½ million more train miles were operated than we did during the corresponding period of 1947. The additional trains have reduced overcrowding somewhat and reports recently received appear to indicate that, except in the proximity of towns and fairs, there has been a definite change for the better in this matter. But it is a fact that there has been a larger increase proportionately in the number of passengers during the last few years than the increase in the number of passenger trains and the accommodation therein. There has been consequent overcrowding which can only be relieved gradually. Steps have, however, been taken to produce more coaches. From 1st April 1948 to 1st November 1948, 172 coaches (in terms of four-wheelers) were completed in railway workshops and 272 coaches are now in process of construction. 100 improved type of Class III all metal coaches 10 ft. wide equipped with electric fans are on order with the Hindustan Aircraft Ltd. Bangalore. A few of these have already been delivered and are in use on the M. & S. M. Railway. The remainder will be delivered during the year 1949-50. Orders have also been placed for 250 coach body shells with the Wagon Manufacturing Panel and in the U. K. for 112 electric multiple unit suburban coaches for the G.I.P. and B.B. & C.I. Railways. Two hundred and fifty-one Broad Gauge coaches have also been returned by the Ministry of Defence since 1st April 1948. In spite, however, of these steps, the conditions of travelling for Class III passengers still leave great deal to be desired. I can only promise that a continuous drive will be kept up for improving them in every direction. There has been noticeable improvement in train punctuality as a result of a special drive that was initiated. I am talking of percentages. The percentage of trains not losing time is roughly 60 and in a few cases as high as 83. These figures, however, are not a matter for complacent satisfaction but should and will be improved further. A number of steps have been taken to improve in several ways the conditions in which Class III passengers travel. This question has been continuously under our consideration and I am glad to say that some important measures have been taken in this direction. Instructions have been issued to Railways to provide electric fans in third-class waiting halls and covered platforms at important stations and to increase the seating accommodation provided therein. The ensuring of cleanliness of coaching stock and of station premises has been specially stressed. Arrangements have been made for adequate supply of water and certain Railways have introduced a scheme which provides for drinking water and watermen being carried in Class III compartments on long distance trains.

20. In the past more attention was paid to the class in which a passenger travelled than to distance. The more fundamental distinction is that between long distance and short distance passengers. It has, therefore, been decided to provide special compartments and reserve seats therein for long distance passengers travelling for more than 300 miles. In the matter of service of meals and other attention, it has been enjoined that they should be treated like upper class passengers. In some principal stations a special booking office window for the issue of tickets to such passengers has been opened.

21. In the autumn session of 1947, a suggestion was made that social service workers should be employed to assist Class III passengers at major stations. Most of the Railways have given effect to this suggestion and social guides have been appointed in consultation with recognised social service institutions.

22. Ticketless travelling and the consequent overcrowding have been attacked with vigour during the year and Provincial Governments have whole-heartedly co-operated with the Railways in this matter. In the United Provinces, where the evil had attained serious proportions, the work of 17 platoons of mobile police and 34 Special Magistrates has yielded very encouraging results. During the first nine months of working, some 2-1/2 lakhs of cases were detected and Rs. 8-1/2 lakhs recovered from the culprits. The drive naturally added also to the regular receipts at booking offices.

23. I would like to make a reference in passing to the new re-classification of accommodation in passenger trains, which took effect on the 1st of January last. The congestion which the old Inter Class passenger was the victim of has been somewhat relieved under the new system (Honourable Members: Not at all) consequent on the downgrading of a number of old Second Class compartments to this class. Arrangements have been made to reserve seats in new Class II. It has not been possible to provide sleeping accommodation for Class II passengers in all trains, but a beginning has been made and Railway Administrations have been instructed to investigate ways and means of extending this facility. The conversion of all the previously existing stock into stock of the new type requires a large-scale withdrawal of some of the old stock for necessary readjustments and would entail a considerable curtailment of the limited coaching accommodation now available on the line till they were returned from the workshops. To avoid this, some old Second Class compartments were downgraded to new Class II, while others were upgraded to new Class I. This naturally resulted in a difference in the standard of accommodation to which new Class II passengers were entitled, but this particular complaint will only be temporary until conversions have been taken up and completed to new standards. There can be no doubt that the re-classification has evoked a large volume of criticism. Class III passengers have had no benefit from it. Old First Class passengers, who travel in new Class I have definitely benefited. Old Inter passengers who are able to obtain accommodation in old Second Class compartments, converted into new Class II, get better amenities at practically old Inter rates. The old Second Class passenger, if he has to be sure of the same comfort and sleeping accommodation as he was previously entitled to, must go in for a new Class I ticket (Shri L. Krishnaswami Bharathi: At what cost?) which means a 50 per cent. increase in his fare. You will admit that I am not concealing anything. If, however, he elects to travel in new Class II, he has to be content with old Inter discomfort without being sure of obtaining sleeping space in all cases. The Railway Administrations have been directed, however, to watch carefully the effects of the new classification and the reactions of the travelling public thereto. The first reports on this subject have been received from General Managers. The period they relate to was, however, too short to base any definite conclusions on. The views expressed are not uniform, though from the purely revenue point of view they do not appear to give much room for anxiety. The matter, however, requires further watching, and I trust that the additional facilities which have been ordered to be gradually provided for Class II passengers will, when they are implemented, persuade them to settle down to the new system. It is premature, however, to pronounce a final verdict on the question whether the change that has been brought into effect in deference to the views expressed in this Assembly and in the Central Advisory Council, (Shri R. K. Sidha: "That is not correct.") calls for any reconsideration.

24. Criticism has been loudest against Railways in respect of goods services. I would address this particularly to Mr. Homi Mody. There are bottlenecks in railway transport. But it is well to remember that there are bottlenecks also in other forms of transport and in industry and trade. I am free to confess that Indian Railways in their present condition cannot carry concurrently all the traffic offering. But all essential traffic has, subject to exceptions, been moved in reasonable time having due regard to the conditions that prevail; while all other traffic has been obliged to wait until the needs of essential traffic have been satisfied or to be content with a scramble. The daily average coal loading from January to December 1948 was about four per cent. higher than that during 1947; in November 1948, it was higher than in any month since 1943. In the Iron and Steel industry, despite a decrease in production, despatches during January to December 1948 were higher than those during 1947. The bottleneck in this industry has, in the recent past, been its difficulty in facilitating the clearance of previously accumulated stocks and not the lifting by Railways of current production. But even these stocks are now being moved by planned train loads to the extent that the industry is able to load wagons. The movement of textiles during the period between January and December 1948 was 18 per cent. higher than that during 1947. During the first eleven months of 1948, the movement of cement was nine per cent. more than in the corresponding period of 1947. For the sugar industry, rail transport has been regularly programmed and the sugar factories, despite accumulation of stocks, have not been able to utilise all the transport facilities that were offered to them.

25. So long as rail transport resources fall substantially short of the demand, their rationing and control from the public point of view are inescapable. The Rail Priorities Organisation, with five Regional Controllers assisted by Local Regional Advisory Committees and supervised by a Chief Controller of Priorities at the Centre working in close association with the Railway Executive and the Central Board of Transport, has done and is doing good work. The weekly meetings of the Standing Committee of the Board are of the greatest value in this connection. They ensure coordination between the competing claims of different Ministries for transport. What is more, they serve to keep continuous watch on movements and to detect and to remove bottlenecks in railway transport wherever they occur. The most notable decision of the Board itself was the determination of national priorities. Food movements of course, come first and then industries. The Board decided that full transport facilities should be provided for steel, textiles and cement to start with. A programme for each quarter has to be framed in advance of it and the Standing Committee of the Board prepares movement programmes to implement such targets. The planning for these three industries for the first quarter of 1949 has already been completed and wagon quotas have been fixed so as to ensure that these industries work on the optimum planned level. A new scheme has also been introduced by which an efficient follow up machinery will ensure that every consignment covered by a priority order is assured of movement.

26. It is, I trust, appreciated all round that considerable improvement has been effected in recent months. This has been achieved by special measures such as careful programming of movements and a steady stepping up of operating efficiency from the low levels to which it had dropped. One of these important steps is the movement of traffic in full train loads. During the month of December 1948, for instance, as many as 329 B.G. specials were run on the different railways. The daily wagon loadings on the B. G. have improved from 9,800 in June 1948 to 11,267 in December. The turnround of wagons over the same period has shown an encouraging decline from 15.03 to 12.21 days. The average speed of goods trains to refer to another aspect, has been registering an upward trend. These are reassuring features in recent railway working, though I concede that a great deal more requires to be achieved before public satisfaction can be extorted. It is not enough in my judgment to meet industry's immediate needs. Industries must be given the confidence that additional calls on transport due to the stepping up of production in existing industries and to the establishment of new industries will be met if and when they come to be made. There is still a considerable gap between the actual demand for transport and the capacity of railways to meet it in full in proper time. The problem of bridging the gap is one of adequacy of power, rolling stock and line capacity.

27. Having regard to the difficult power position and the urgent need to strengthen it, the Chief Commissioner of Railways went to Europe and America during 1948 to seek manufacturing capacity for locomotives to be quickly built to India's specifications. As a result of his visit and on an examination of the quotations of prices and delivery dates, orders have been placed in the U.S.A., Canada, the U.K. and France for 390 locomotives, in addition to 473 previously ordered, making a total of 863 locomotives consisting of 640 B.G., 203 M.G. and 20 N. G. engines. 303 of the total number have been ordered in the U.S.A., 350 in Canada, 190 in the U. K. and 20 in France. 19 B.G. and 33 M.G. locomotives have been received in India by 15th January, 1949. By 31st March next, 120 more B.G. locomotives are expected to be received. The total receipts during the current year will thus amount to 139 B.G. and 33 M.G. locomotives. According to the scheduled delivery dates 202 B.G. and 22 M.G. locomotives are expected to be received in India before the end of September next; 90 B. G. and 91 M.G. locomotives by the end of December and 45 B.G. and 57 M.G. locomotives by March 1950. We hope, therefore, to receive a total of 337 B.G. and 170 M.G. locomotives during 1949-50. Of the balance, 164 B.G. and 16 N.G. locomotives are expected to be received in India during 1950-51 and the remaining 4 M.G. locomotives during 1951-52.

Questions have sometimes been asked as to why loco orders have not been placed in other countries in the world. In order to clarify the problem, it may be stated that three factors governed the placing of orders. Firstly, locos which we require must be built to our specifications. Designs suitable elsewhere do not conform to our standards, and interchangeability in stock is important. Secondly, the price quoted should be competitive, and lastly the delivery dates should be acceptable for our needs.

28. Our dependence primarily on the foreign manufacturer for our locomotives has thus been largely responsible for our present sorry plight in this connection. The Central Legislature has for years demanded the setting up in the country of a locomotive industry of our own. There had been regrettable procrastination in this respect in the past, but I am glad to be able to say that we are making rapid progress in meeting this demand now. At Chittaranjan, 20 miles from Assansol, close to the coal and steel producing areas, work is proceeding in full swing on the erection of the Locomotive Building Workshops designed to manufacture 120 steam locomotives and 50 additional boilers per year. The smaller shops in this factory for the manufacture of components are expected to be ready early in 1950 and the main assembly shop for the production of complete locomotives by early 1951.

[Shri N. Gopalaswami Ayyangar].

29. For the time being, however, we have to do the best with a shortage of power. Our overaged locomotives on 31st March 1949, both B.G. and M.G., number 1,291 and it will be some time before they are all replaced. Quite apart from the fact that it is uneconomical to maintain obsolescent types, one has to reckon with engine failures which assumed serious proportions during certain months of 1948 and interfered with punctuality of operation. To add to our difficulties, the efficiency of the periodical overhaul of engines in workshops was impaired by lack of, or inadequate, stocking of spare parts. There had been protracted delays in the placing of orders for and in the receipt of spares both in India and from abroad, and these have had serious repercussions on the maintenance schedules of the workshops. The out-turn in workshops of rolling stock has been adversely affected in consequence. Steps are being taken to minimise avoidable delays in finalising contracts and expediting delivery.

30. As regards wagons, our requirements per annum are of the order of 10,000 in terms of 4-wheelers. Up to 31st December 1948, 2,349 wagons of different types (in terms of 4-wheelers) have been put on the lines. By March 31, 1949, another 485 wagons would come into service. The orders placed in the year amount to 3,600 wagons. The numbers expected to be delivered during 1949-50 are 4,400 wagons. The shift in the traffic flow due to war-time changes in our industrial production and to Bombay having to take over the role of Karachi as the principal port for North India, have stressed the need for increase in line capacity. This matter has received attention. The Delhi-Mathura track is being partially doubled. One fraction of it has already been opened to traffic. An additional line between Budni and Barkhera on the Bhopal-Itarsi section of the G.I.P. Railway is being constructed. As the existing line in this length has steep gradients and requires the use of banking engines, the additional line is being constructed on a separate alignment with flatter grades. The existing line will be used for down traffic without banking engines and the new line will be used for up traffic, also without banking engines. On the B.B. & C.I. Railway, Anand-Barejadi single track on the Baroda-Ahmedabad section will soon be doubled. The quadrupling of 52 miles of track between Saktigarh and Sitarampur on the E. I. Railway has already been completed while the doubling between Ekdil and Kanpur is now in progress. Along with line capacity, we have to consider yard capacity as well. For speeding up of traffic, several large yards are being remodelled. The work on the New Delhi yard is nearing completion and that on the Delhi Main Yard will soon be taken in hand. On the O. T. Railway the remodelling of Gonda and Gorakhpur yards is likely to be completed in 1949-50. I will not weary the House with more details.

31. There is, however, one important point to which I should draw the attention of honourable members, namely, that progress in works of the kind referred to and in rehabilitation has been held up by shortage of supplies of steel to Railways. The increased wear and tear and the deferred maintenance of locomotives and other rolling stock have accumulated large arrears of maintenance and repairs. The present supplies of steel to Railways fall far short of the full tonnage required to maintain the repair schedules. The short allocation of steel has also placed limits on the actual orders for rolling stock with indigenous manufacturers. For instance, we desired to place orders for 5,080 wagons against annual normal requirements and for an additional 4,500 wagons to meet the industrial needs of the country. Owing, however, to the limited supplies of steel available the orders had to be reduced to 3,500 B. G. wagons representing only about 40 per cent of indigenous capacity. The shortage of steel has affected permanent way maintenance also. The need for the topmost priority being given to demands of steel from Railways to meet their minimum requirements for essential maintenance and replacement hardly requires stressing.

32. I have already referred to the proposed Locomotive Building Workshops at Chittaranjan now under construction. Railways in this country have experience of work on repairs and maintenance of locomotives. They have little or no experience of the manufacture of locomotives on modern production lines. If, therefore, we are to avoid the very expensive method of learning by mistakes we require to import specialised technical aid for a temporary period. The Railway Board has now under consideration the possibility of making arrangements with foreign manufacturers for obtaining such technical aid. The intention is to secure the loan of trained technicians for service at our workshops where they would be required to organise the production side as well as to train our men in the technique of production. It may be necessary to get the assistance of any firm with whom an arrangement of this kind is made for producing to a planned scheme such parts of locomotives as we may find it not possible to manufacture at our workshops or elsewhere in India until our own factory comes into full competitive production. It would be necessary for such a firm also to undertake to train, where necessary, our technicians in their own workshops.

33. The Railway Board has, further, under examination at present the whole of the locomotive position on Indian Railways. The normal life of a locomotive is 40 years. The average age of locomotives on the line should be half that figure, namely, 20. At present, the average age of our locomotives is very much higher than that, being about 28 years. This indicates that we have in use more older than younger locomotives on the line. With due regard to the expected delivery dates of locomotives on order and the number and types of locomotives which will become overage by then, it has been calculated that we shall require, without embarrassing our own production, both from our workshops as well as from Tatas, from 400 to 500 more locomotives to be imported. The details, however, have still to be worked out.

34. The House will remember the Silver Arrow model train which was exhibited round India in 1947. Many enquiries have since been received as to when stock of that kind could be seen on Indian Railways. Progress has been made in manufacturing the all-metal light-weight type coach in India. The position at present is that we have prototypes under construction and these will have to be given the various buffing and other tests required before we go in for mass production. The Railway Board has been examining the possibility of establishing for Indian Railways a Central Coach Manufacturing Workshops where such all metal light-weight coach construction could be done with a view to adding to indigenous capacity in this sphere. For this workshop also, as in the case of locomotives manufacture, the Railway Board is considering the question of obtaining technical aid from foreign manufacturers with years of experience of welded all-metal coach building.

35. While presenting the Railway Budgets in November 1947 and February 1948, Dr. Matthai referred to the demands of labour on Railways, particularly in connection with the implementation of the recommendations of the Central Pay Commission. During the year, a Negotiating Committee consisting of representatives of the All-India Railwaymen's Federation and of the Railway Board discussed certain issues arising from the application of the Commission's recommendations. A variety of matters had to be covered during this discussion. Several of them were requests for modification even of the basic recommendations of the Central Pay Commission. At their annual convention at Calcutta, the Federation passed resolutions demanding that there should be no curtailment in Grainshop concessions and drawing attention to certain outstanding points at issue in connection with the Central Pay Commission scales of pay. In November, the General Council of the Federation met at Nagpur and decided on the taking of a strike ballot. Towards the end of December, the President of the Federation wrote to me drawing my attention to the clause in the Nagpur resolution expressing the preparedness of the Federation to come to an honourable settlement. In reply I suggested that he might come over and have a discussion with me. During the talks between us last month at Bombay and Delhi, there was a frank exchange of views and we arrived at certain understandings which, I have reason to believe, have cleared the air considerably. As a result, the Federation Executive has now a better appreciation of the policy of Government towards railway labour and its trade union organisations. The General Council of the Federation is timed to meet tomorrow. I trust that good sense will prevail and the decision will be against a railway strike.

36. It is necessary here to refer to Railway Grainshops. In pursuance of the undertaking given at the last Budget session, the Railway Grainshops Enquiry Committee with Shri Mohan Lal Saksena as Chairman and Shri K. Santhanam and Shri Khandubhai Desai as members was appointed to examine the structure of the grainshop organisation, the system of procurement, stocking and distribution and the admissibility of the grainshop concessions to the various categories of railway staff. The Committee was also asked to suggest modifications in the present system which, while retaining the essential benefits of the grainshop scheme, would keep the cost within the limits the Railways could afford. The Report of the Committee was submitted in June and its recommendations were accepted later by Government with only slight modifications. The result was that staff drawing above Rs. 250 were given the full cash dearness allowance payable to other Central Government employees, and an option was given to staff drawing upto Rs. 250 either to continue to enjoy grainshop concessions limited to five essential articles or to give up the concessions in favour of the full cash allowance. Government also offered lump sum payments to those drawing up to Rs. 50 who decided to opt out of the grainshop concessions before 1st January 1949 with a view to enabling them to make suitable adjustments in their domestic budgets. When subsequently Government decided to increase the rates of cash dearness allowance to all Central Government employees drawing upto Rs. 250 by Rs. 10 per mensem, they sanctioned in the case of Railway workers the same allowance of Rs. 10 per mensem for staff drawing up to Rs. 250 with a proviso that in the case of such of the staff as elected to retain grainshop concessions on the restricted scale, the allowance would be only Rs. 5 per mensem. The period for electing to opt out of the Grainshops was extended up to 31st March 1949, and, in the case of those who did so opt out, lump sum payments on the same scale as for those who opted out before the 1st January 1949 were also promised. The new scheme has been brought into operation from the 1st January 1949.

37. Government have no desire other than to deal justly and even generously with labour. The Central Pay Commission scales of pay, the Rajadhyaksha Award, the new rates of pay and allowances to Running Staff, the increases in the dearness allowance which have taken effect from the beginning of this year, all these have added to the financial strain on the Railways, and, therefore, on the community as a whole. It will not help the railwaymen to get their spending power increased when it is unaccompanied by increased production all round. In the circumstances in which we find ourselves placed to-day in the country, there is need for austerity and sacrifice on the part of every section of the community. The Government are committed to a long term policy of raising the standard of life of every one in the country. But a higher standard of life is not a matter merely of higher wages. It is essentially one of higher productivity. The present situation thus offers a challenge to our capacity and sense of responsibility as well as to the objectives that we must place before ourselves. I have always felt that, in the long run, labour will rise to the height that it should in promoting the welfare of the country as a whole and in avoiding everything that is likely to conflict with peace and the attainment of that welfare by everybody. I have good reason to think that responsible leaders of Railway labour, including those in the All-India Railwaymen's Federation, are fully alive to the disastrous consequences of taking a decision which will cause direct injury on a colossal scale to the rational interest, and I do trust that they will not allow themselves to be misguided and overwhelmed into taking a wrong course by those who attempt to exploit them and their clientele not for legitimate trade union interests but for purposes of self-aggrandizement or of winning political party advantage.

38. The Railways constitute the biggest nationalised industry in the country, and I am one of those who believe that the administration of this industry should be so ordered and developed as to give labour more and more the feeling that it is participating with the management in raising the public service which the industry renders to the community to the maximum, both in quantity and quality. I am keen, therefore, that the conditions of life of railway workers should improve with expedition and, in some respects, radically. The Railway Budget provides for many items of expenditure relating to labour welfare. In spite of the need for economy and the difficulty of obtaining materials at reasonable prices, the Railway Administrations are trying to put up as many houses as possible, especially for those belonging to the lowest income groups amongst the workers. Railway hospitals and dispensaries provide for the railway workers greater facilities for medical relief than are available to the ordinary citizens of India. Other items of expenditure include maternity and child welfare, schools and institutes. It is proposed to review all these activities so that they may be fitted into an effective all-round programme of labour welfare. In order to enable Parliament as well as the railway workers to watch the progress of a scheme of this nature, the question will be examined whether all these items of expenditure cannot from the next year be brought under one demand head as in the case of passenger amenities.

39. The establishment of the most cordial of relations between railway managements and the railwaymen who work with them will be the supreme test of the efficiency of Railway Administrations. Past traditions and present conditions have combined to bring about an atmosphere of apparent conflict and hostility between them. The right of workers to combine for the protection of their interests is undoubted. But, on combining together, Unions and Federations of workers should realise that nothing could be to the real interest of the workers themselves unless it is in unison with the interest of the community as a whole. To exploit trade Unions for political party ends merely is a crime, whoever may resort to it. I desire to appeal to all labour leaders, whatever school of politics they may belong to for other purposes, seriously to consider whether for subserving the real welfare of their primary clients, the general body of workers they should not unite in a common organisation and confine its activities to the realisation of essentially trade union objectives.

40. An important piece of reform was completed during the year with the introduction of a new rating structure on the 1st October 1948. I would not weary the House by giving details of the new system that has been introduced. A new Railway Rates Tribunal will shortly commence to function under the legislation passed last year and will, I hope, be welcomed by the trading community. The need for a more satisfactory machinery to decide disputes in connection with rates than was provided by the Rates Advisory Committee of the past had been pressed for long and the functioning of the Tribunal should go a long way towards satisfying the public that their complaints regarding the making or giving of undue preference in rates or charges or of refusal to quote a station-to-station rate will be looked into and decided finally by an impartial authority.

[Shri N. Gopalaswami Ayyangar].

41. I would here make an appeal to our trading community for co-operation in the matter of the utilisation and release of wagons. In a number of cases it has been found that indents placed for supply of wagons are cancelled or not fully availed of when they have been complied with after a great deal of effort and programming of movements on the part of the railways. To avoid delays in the release of wagons at starting or destination stations, the Railway Board has recently had to reduce the free time allowed for the levy of demurrage from 9 to 6 hours. This has led to an improvement in wagon loading since last April by 2.71 per cent on the broad gauge and 4.74 per cent on the metre gauge as compared with the corresponding period of 1947. It is not a pleasure to be compelled to institute penal measures for what could readily be accomplished with the willing co-operation on the part of traders and businessmen. I wish our Chambers of Commerce and Trades Associations will build up a code of their own of healthy practices in this regard. This is what has been done for many years in the U.K. and the U.S.A. The absence of responsible conduct of this nature has expressed itself in the enormous accumulation of uncleared consignments, as for instance, was the case in the New Delhi yard. If some businessmen do not clear wagons in time, they are actually depriving many others of the supply of wagons so essential to the functioning of our economy in a regime of shortages and priorities. I have no hesitation in assuring the commercial community that the Railways will do their utmost to serve their needs. I am sure they appreciate the radical measures adopted recently to clear the arrears of claims which had accumulated during the war and on account of the unsettled conditions of the last two years.

42. The Indian Railway Enquiry Committee concluded its labours during the year and submitted its report to Government early in November last. To my honourable friend Pandit Kunzru, who presided over the Committee, and to his colleagues, I wish to express the Government's obligations for the comprehensive survey of railway problems, the painstaking study of those problems and the recommendations they have made in the Report. These recommendations are individually being processed by a high level Officer on Special Duty with a view to obtaining Government's orders thereon. I need hardly say that Government will give their very best consideration to the recommendations. The Report was sent to the Press soon after its receipt, and printed copies of it will not be available for some days more. I apologise for this delay to the House. I may tell honourable members that two typed copies of this report have been in the Library for some days now. (An Honourable Member: You should have given us opportunity to study it before the Budget Session). You have got to depend on the Government Press and they have promised copies only after a few days.

43. I ought to refer to another topic to which reference has been made by the House in recent years, namely, the economic and statistical information relating to railways. The question has a public as well as a domestic importance to railways. Indian Railways have for many years followed a policy that is perhaps unique. There is hardly an aspect of their working—financial, operational, or commercial—on which they do not collect, and cannot supply, full information. All this information is necessary for the purpose of managerial control, to maintain efficiency in working, to keep down uneconomic expenditure and to improve financial results. I am assured that our record in these matters compares very favourably with that of other countries, including even the U.K., the U.S.A. and Canada. The principal defect with us has been that we have not been making as good use of the information that is available as these other countries do. We are instituting measures to bring about a rapid improvement in the present set up, taking into consideration the valuable suggestions made by the Indian Railway Enquiry Committee.

44. What is badly required is the collection and collation in suitable forms of the information we have and its interpretation and correlation with the broad economic trends in the country. This is of vital importance to all those, such as the members of this House, who have to decide, or pronounce on, questions of policy and must have a correct appraisal of railway working from time to time. We are also strengthening our economic research side. The resources have to be harnessed to support and promote the economic welfare of the nation. As railways touch the life of the community more intimately than perhaps any other single economic agency, their managements should know as precisely as they can its changing needs, so that the service they render it is adjusted to what is desired. For this, there should be a continuous study in relation to railway working of current trends in industry, agriculture and domestic and foreign trade. Such studies, so common in other countries, should prove to be of great value to our industrialists and businessmen. A beginning on this task will be made in the Budget Year.

45. The Railways offer a wide field for scientific research. The Research Committees of the Indian Railway Conference Association and the Central Standards Office have a fairly good record to their credit in this respect, but it is recognised that there is need for a more comprehensive effort in this direction. The matter is under active consideration.

46. Honourable members are, I know, greatly interested in the problem of the re-grouping of railways in this country. Amongst the nine units of Railway Administrations now in existence, the route mileage in charge of each varies from 1,231 miles on the Assam Railway to 4,457 miles on the E. I. Railway. Their operation ratios vary within fairly wide limits and some of them have been living on the others. Their present geographical distribution has grown haphazardly in some cases and are a product of the history of both State and Company effort in the past. Whether we should interfere with the present grouping at all and, if so, how best to regroup these systems with the assurance of giving satisfaction both territorially and functionally is a problem which bristles with difficulties. The Railway Board and I are studying this problem in all its various aspects. The dimensions of the problem change daily—thanks very largely to my honourable colleague on the left. The political developments in Indian States and Unions of Indian States are at present a disturbing factor in the way of arriving at conclusions which can have any permanence. When, however, the political map of India gets finally settled—as there is every prospect of its doing in the very near future—we should be in a position to re-draw the railway map of India and cut it up into units of Railway Administration, which will ensure both regional and operational efficiency.

47. There is the other problem also of the re-organisation of the internal administrative set up in each unit of Railway Administration. This also is being studied very intensively, but, in a sense, it is linked with the problem of re-grouping. The matter is under active consideration, but, in view of obvious facts, it seems to me that a hasty decision in respect of this matter should be avoided.

48. Proposals have been made from time to time by Committees and individuals, and quite recently by the Indian Railway Enquiry Committee, regarding the changes that are necessary in the central machinery for controlling this huge nationalised concern. I am giving this problem also my best attention and, while improvements for the purpose of achieving greater efficiency with the present Central set up are being and will be effected, the larger problem of the nature and functions of a Central Railway Executive and of its relations with the Minister and Parliament requires the most careful consideration and such legislation as may be required for altering the existing system might, perhaps, be more wisely introduced in Parliament after the new Constitution comes into force.

[Shri N. Gopalaswami Ayyangar].

49. In a broadcast, which I made soon after I took over charge of Railways, I said—"On the railways, among the station, goods, train and such like staff, the demand and payment and the offer and acceptance of illegal gratification are almost a tradition, deep rooted and of many decades standing. A determined drive is now on to combat this evil with firmness". The House has always evinced the keenest interest in the putting down of this corruption. The arrangements that exist for achieving this result have been under my continuous consideration and recently I approved of a scheme evolved by the Railway Board under my instructions and after consulting both the Head of the Special Police Establishment and General Managers of Railways. The object of the scheme is to co-ordinate the activities of the Special Police Establishment and Railway Administrations and to tighten up the executive machinery, both Police and Railways, dealing with the detection and investigation of cases. The main points of the scheme are:

Firstly, Organisations to suit local conditions for the prevention, detection and departmental investigation of corruption on each Railway;

Secondly, merely departmental or procedural irregularities resulting in preferential treatment to traders, travellers, contractors or firms should be ordinarily enquired into and disposed of by the Railway Administration concerned. If, however, there is reason to think that receipt of some monetary or other consideration can be established against the Railway staff concerned with these irregularities, the cases should be handed over to the Special Police Establishment without delay; and Thirdly, in dealing with cases of corruption departmentally all non-Railway authorities and organisations, however influential they may be commercially or politically, should be entirely excluded.

The House will be interested to know that the number of cases investigated by the Special Police Establishment up to the end of December 1948 was 837, of which 389 cases were sent up for trial to Courts or Tribunals. 282 persons were convicted and 188 acquitted. 163 cases were referred back to Railway Administrations for departmental action. The number of Railway Gazetted Officers implicated was 40. The anti-corruption drive will be continued with the maximum of vigour, and I am glad to be able to tell the House that the officers in key posts on the Railways are quite alive to this and has given evidence of keenness for putting it down.

50. Before I close, I should like to pay a tribute of appreciation to the Chief Commissioner of Railways and his colleagues on the Railway Board, to the officers and staff serving under it, to the Heads of the nine Railway Administrations and the officers and staff serving under them, and particularly to the large body numbering over eight lakhs of Railwaymen for the hard work they have been and are doing as well as for the service they have been rendering to the public under conditions of a certain amount of disorganisation and confusion, for which they certainly could not be saddled with responsibility. The House will, no doubt, join with me in paying this tribute. To honourable members who have served on the Railway Standing Finance Committee and on the Central Advisory Council for Railways, I wish to express my gratitude and that of the Railway Board for the helpful criticism and the willing assistance we have throughout received from them:

51. And that Sir, brings me to the end of my story this afternoon.

The Assembly then adjourned till a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock on Wednesday the 16th February, 1949.

CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY OF INDIA (LEGISLATIVE) DEBATES.

(PART II—PROCEEDINGS OTHER THAN QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS)

Wednesday, 16th February, 1949

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at a Quarter to Eleven of the Clock, Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS. (See Part I)

PAPERS LAID ON THE TABLE

CONVENTIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS OF INTERNATIONAL LABOUR CONFERENCE, GENEVA, THIRTIETH SESSION, 1947.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram (Minister for Labour): Sir, I lay on the table—

- (1) a copy of the *Conventions and Recommendations adopted by the International Labour Conference at its thirtieth session held in Geneva in 1947; and
- (2) the statement indicating the action which the Government propose to take on those Conventions and Recommendations.

STATEMENT

Action proposed to be taken on the Conventions and Recommendations adopted by the XXXth Session of the International Labour Conference held in Geneva in June-July, 1947.

The XXXth Session of the International Labour Conference convened at Geneva in June-July, 1947, adopted the following Conventions and Recommendations:—

- (1) Convention No. 81 concerning labour inspection in industrial and commercial undertakings;
- (2) Convention No. 82 concerning social policy in non-metropolitan territories;
- (3) Convention No. 83 concerning the application of international labour standards to non-metropolitan territories;
- (4) Convention No. 84 concerning the right of association and the settlement of labour disputes in non-metropolitan territories;
- (5) Convention No. 85 concerning labour inspectorates in non-metropolitan territories;
- (6) Convention No. 86 concerning the maximum length of contracts of employment of indigenous workers in non-metropolitan territories;
- (7) Recommendation No. 81 concerning labour inspection; and
- (8) Recommendation No. 82 concerning labour inspection in mining and transport undertakings.

* Not printed in the Debates. A copy placed in the Library.—Ed. of D.

A printed copy of the texts of the above Conventions and Recommendations is attached.

As required by Article 19(5) of the constitution of the I.L.O., the Conventions and Recommendations are required to be brought before the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies, for the enactment of legislation or other action.

2. Conventions Nos. 82, 83, 84, 85 and 96 relate to non-metropolitan territories. Since India is not a non-metropolitan territory and does not have any non-metropolitan territories under her, she is not concerned with these five Conventions. The question of taking action on these Conventions does not, therefore, arise.

3. Convention No. 81 consists of two parts, the first part relating to industrial work-places and the second to commercial work-places. Article 25(1) of the Convention allows a Member State to ratify Part I alone and to exclude Part II from acceptance by means of a declaration appended to its ratification.

4. Part I of the Convention prescribes that the ratifying country shall maintain a system of labour inspection in industrial work-places in respect of which legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work are enforceable by labour inspectors.

The functions of the inspection services will be—

- (a) to secure the enforcement of the legal provisions referred to above;
- (b) to supply technical information and advice to employers and workers regarding the most effective means of complying with the legal provisions;
- (c) to bring to the notice of the competent authority defects or abuses not specifically covered by existing legal provisions.

The Convention further lays down the principles that should govern:

- (a) the recruitment and training of inspectors;
- (b) the qualifications of inspectors;
- (c) the powers and duties of inspectors;
- (d) the strength and composition of the inspectorate;
- (e) the provision of office facilities, transport facilities etc.; and
- (f) preparation of annual reports on the work of the inspection services.

The Convention prescribes that appropriate arrangements shall be made to promote (i) effective co-operation between the inspection services and other Government services and public or private institutions engaged in similar activities and (ii) collaboration between the inspectorate and the employers and workers.

5. It may be noted that unlike other I.L.O. Conventions, this Convention enunciates the broad principles that should govern the organisation and administration of factory inspection services and lays down the administrative practice to be followed in order to ensure an efficient and impartial Inspectorate. The Factories Act, 1948, which will come into force on the 1st April, 1949, fully meets the requirements of Part I of the Convention. Though the obligation to implement the Convention will actually arise after 12 months from the date of ratification, it may be mentioned that well-organised factory inspection services already exist in all Provinces and Centrally administered areas.

6. Part II of the Convention provides that the ratifying country shall maintain a system of labour inspection in respect of commercial work-places which are subject to legal regulations. Some of the Provincial Governments have enacted legislation for regulating the conditions of work in shops, commercial establishments, etc. The extent and scope of such legislation, however, vary from province to province. Moreover, there is as yet no Central legislation covering commercial establishments, though proposals for such legislation are under the consideration of the Government of India. In the circumstances, it is felt that India cannot ratify this part of the Convention for some time to come.

7. The Government of India, therefore, propose to ratify the Convention and to exclude Part II from acceptance by a declaration appended to the ratification.

8. Recommendation No. 81 stresses that each member should apply, as rapidly as national conditions permit, the suggestions contained in the Recommendation in respect of preventive duties of labour Inspectorates, collaboration of employers and workers in regard to the health and safety of workers, interference or labour inspectors in labour disputes, and information to be contained in the annual reports on inspection. The Recommendation has been brought to the notice of Provincial Governments, the employing Ministries of the Government of India, etc. The Standards laid down in the Recommendation constitute a desirable objective and will be given effect to as far as possible.

9. Recommendation No. 82 requires that each member of the I.L.O. should apply to mining and transport undertakings, as defined by the competent authority, appropriate systems of labour inspection to ensure the enforcement of legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work. This Recommendation is acceptable to the Government of India. In the case of the mines, a system of labour inspection already exists. Similarly, adequate provision has already been made for proper inspection in the case of railways and major ports. As for road, water and air transport, conditions of work are not yet regulated to the desired extent on an All India basis. It is, however, hoped that when the question of such regulation is taken up, provision will be made for an appropriate system of labour inspection. The attention of the Provincial Governments has been drawn to the desirability of giving effect to this Recommendation as far as possible in respect of transport undertakings which fall within the Provincial sphere.

COAL MINES LABOUR WELFARE FUND (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram (Minister for Labour): I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill to amend the Coal Mines Labour Welfare Fund Act, 1947.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That leave be granted to introduce a Bill to amend the Coal Mines Labour Welfare Fund Act, 1947."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

BANKING COMPANIES BILL—contd.

Mr. Speaker: The House will now proceed with the further consideration of the Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to banking companies, as reported by the Select Committee. Clause 30 was under consideration. Amendment No. 184.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai (Minister for Finance): If I may make a reference to the point that you reserved for consideration yesterday—this is with reference to amendment No. 153 under clause 19—I have had the matter further examined in the light of your suggestion and I am now prepared to accept the amendment of my honourable friend Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad.

Mr. Speaker: This was left over as it was related to clause 46. The honourable Minister now says that he is willing to accept that amendment for deletion of the Proviso.

The question is:

"That in clause 19 of the Bill,—

- (i) the first Proviso to sub-clause (2) be omitted; and
- (ii) in the second Proviso to sub-clause (2), the word 'further', occurring in line one, be omitted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 19, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 19, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Mr. Speaker: We now proceed to amendment No. 184.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri (Assam: General): Sir, may I know whether the arrangement which you made yesterday shall hold good today also, that when a particular amendment is opposed by the honourable Minister then no other Member need speak on that amendment?

Mr. Speaker: The honourable Member is placing the whole thing in a ridiculous manner. That was never my meaning, it could never be my meaning. But it should be the anxious consideration of each Member of this House, to save as much time as possible and my anxiety was to avoid unnecessary discussion of any point on which there was a substantial agreement. Therefore, I said that if the honourable Minister accepts an amendment, there was no practical need—considering the discussions that we had at the consideration stage, at the clause-by-clause stage, at the various stages—of again further advancing arguments in support of what the honourable Minister has stated. It is only people who want to oppose it, that might speak. If the honourable Minister wants to oppose the amendment, a member who wants to support it might have to say something, but he could do it briefly. Not that anybody is prevented from exercising his rights, but perhaps the impression created would be that he is addressing for the sake of addressing and therefore wasting the time of the House. I would like to protect Members also against that impression. That was my meaning.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: If the honourable Minister opposes the motion then any other Member who wants to oppose it need not say anything. That is the position?

Mr. Speaker: He need not say. Not that he will not be permitted to say, but he should not say. It is only a piece of advice or a request or an appeal—it does not go beyond that.

Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: When the honourable Minister opposes an amendment, he simply opposes it—he does not produce any grounds. So, if he asks the honourable Member to adduce the grounds should he not be allowed?

Mr. Speaker: No general rule can be laid down. The amendment may be of such a small nature that nothing more can be said than, "I oppose". But if it is of a substantial nature then certainly something can be said.

Which of the amendments is Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad going to move?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad (West Bengal: Muslim): I would move Nos. 184 and 185 together. But I would like to know whether they are acceptable. They are of a verbal nature.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I do not think, Sir, that it improves the draft at all. I am not inclined to accept.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Then I am not moving Nos. 184, 185 and 186.

Mr. Speaker: Then the next amendment.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, "aforesaid" is more sonorous than "said".....

Mr. Speaker: Let us stop it. You are not moving the amendment?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: No, Sir. I am also not moving the next.

Shri Lakshminarayan Sahu (Orissa: General): I move:

"That for part (c) of sub-clause (3) of clause 30 of the Bill, the following be substituted: 'whether or not the returns received from branch offices of the company have been found adequate for the purpose of his audit, in case the bank auditor thinks that any return does not give adequate information for the purpose of balance sheet; he shall have power to audit the same, and his and his staff fee, shall be paid at the scheduled rates prescribed under the Auditor Certificate Rules, 1922'."

The amendment is so obvious that I need not explain anything.

Mr. Homi Mody (Bombay: General): No question of audit fees arises.

Shri Lakshminarayan Sahu: The first point is that in case the bank auditor thinks that any return has not given adequate information for purposes of the balance sheet, he has power to audit it. That means he must be allowed to go to the branches and audit accounts. At present he audits the accounts only at the centre. There may be difficulties in the branches and unless the auditor goes to the branches and audits the accounts closely there, it is not possible that mistakes may be found out. That is the first point.

As regards the second point of fees, his staff fee shall be paid at the scheduled rates prescribed under the Auditor Certificate Rules, 1922. These are the two points.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That for part (c) of sub-clause (3) of clause 30 of the Bill, the following be substituted: 'whether or not the returns received from branch offices of the company have been found adequate for the purpose of his audit, in case the bank auditor thinks that any return does not give adequate information for the purpose of balance sheet; he shall have power to audit the same, and his and his staff fee, shall be paid at the scheduled rates prescribed under the Auditor Certificate Rules, 1922'."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Sir, I regret I must oppose this amendment for this reason, that in the particular clause in which this provision occurs, all that the auditor is asked to do is to produce a report, and sub-clause (3) states the various matters which are to be included in his report. It is not a clause which enjoins any positive action on the part of the auditor. I entirely agree with my honourable friend that the auditor must have powers in case he finds that the information is not adequate, but he has sufficient powers under various clauses in this Bill. Apart from that, the relevant section in the Companies Act still holds good, and that section—section 145—says:

"Every auditor of a company shall have a right of access at all times to the books and accounts and vouchers of the company and shall be entitled to require from the Directors and officers of the company such information and explanation as may be necessary for the performance of the duties of the auditor."

It is not necessary to go beyond that.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That for part (c) of sub-clause (3) of clause 30 of the Bill, the following be substituted: 'Whether or not the return received from branch offices of the company have been found adequate for the purpose of his audit, in case the bank auditor thinks that any return does not give adequate information for the purpose of balance sheet; he shall have power to audit the same, and his and his staff fee, shall be paid at the scheduled rates prescribed under the Auditor Certificate Rules, 1922.'"

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, the principle has already been accepted. I find that by an error, almost the same amendment appears in (c) and (e). So I shall put them together in an amended form. I move:

"That in sub-clause (3) of clause 30 of the Bill, for the word 'company' wherever it occurs, the words 'banking company' be substituted."

The word occurs in part (b) twice and in parts (c) and (e) once each. Thus there are four places. The principle has already been accepted that wherever the word 'company' occurs, the words 'banking company' should be substituted.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: It is quite unnecessary. It does not make the thing any clearer.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (3) of clause 30 of the Bill, for the word 'company' wherever it occurs, the words 'banking company' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 30 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 30 was added to the Bill.

[At this stage Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair, which was then occupied by Mr. Deputy Speaker (Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar)]

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That in clause 31 of the Bill for the words 'auditor's report' the words 'auditor's report thereon' be substituted."

The passage says that "the accounts and balance sheet together with the auditor's report" shall be published. The word "thereon" is necessary to fill up a gap. Merely "auditor's report" will not be complete.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: What is the reaction of the honourable Minister?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Quite unnecessary.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Need I put it to the House?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: No, Sir. I shall move my next amendment. I move:

"That in the Proviso to clause 31 of the Bill, for the words 'in any case', the words 'in the case of any banking company or any class of banking company' be substituted."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the honourable Minister accept it?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: No, Sir.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Then it need not be put.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 31 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 31 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 32 of the Bill, for the words 'with that section' occurring at the end, the words 'with the said section of the Act' be substituted."

Here the section referred to is that of another Act, namely, the Indian Companies Act. The word "section" in an enactment means section of the enactment in which it occurs, but here there is a reference to another Act. That is why it is necessary to make it clear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: What is the reaction of the honourable Minister?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Definitely opposed.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Let it be put to the vote, Sir.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 32 of the Bill, for the words 'with that section' occurring at the end, the words 'with the said section of the said Act' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 32 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 32 was added to the Bill.

Clauses 33 and 34 were added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 35 of the Bill, —

(i) the words 'to the contrary' occurring in line one be omitted; and
(ii) after the word, figures and brackets '(VII of 1913)', the words 'to the contrary' be inserted."

Obviously, the words "to the contrary" are transposed to a different place. The context says: "Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained". I beg to submit the words "anything contained" are happy pairs. "To the contrary" is not related to this combination. Therefore, the proper expression would be to remove the words "to the contrary" from the happy combination, that is to say, it would read: "Notwithstanding anything contained to the contrary". That is the need for this change.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 35 of the Bill,—

(i) the words 'to the contrary' occurring in line one be omitted; and
(ii) after the word, figures and brackets '(VII of 1913)', the words 'to the contrary' be inserted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That in sub-clause (3) of clause 35 of the Bill, for the words 'may administer an oath accordingly', the words 'may accordingly administer an oath under the Indian Oaths Act (X of 1873)' be substituted."

In this case, power to examine persons and administer oath is given, but the method of oath and the power—the Act under which this power is given is not clear. If the oath is taken under this Act, there is a penalty for making false statements under oath. If the oath is a formal one, there will be no such penalty. The requirement of oath would invest the enquiry with some amount of dignity. There will be the fear that if any false statement is made there will be prosecution. That is why mention of the words 'under the Indian Oaths Act' would be more appropriate.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I oppose the amendment because, an oath under the Indian Oaths Act, administered by any person authorised to administer it, attracts the penalty provided for false statements under the Indian Penal Code. I looked up the Indian Oaths Act section 4 which says, that all persons having authority by law to receive evidence are authorised to administer the Oath. Therefore, this particular person, who is authorised by this law to administer the oath, will come under that Act, and any false statement made to him will attract the penalties provided in the Indian Penal Code. The amendment is quite unnecessary.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: In that case I do not press my amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable Member may move his next amendment.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, in view of what the honourable Minister just now said, I propose to drop the first part of amendment No. 206 and move only the second part. I beg to move:

"That after sub-clause (3) of clause 35 of the Bill, the following new sub-clause be inserted:

"(3a) A person making an inspection under sub-section (3) shall be deemed to be a public servant within the meaning of section 19 of the Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860)."

If the man who makes the enquiry is made a public servant, then the refusal to answer questions put by him or obey the summons issued by him would become punishable under the Indian Penal Code. It is to invest the person making the enquiry with this authority that this amendment is necessary. This would ensure obedience to his authority.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That after sub-clause (3) of clause 35 of the Bill, the following new sub-clause be inserted:

"(3a) A person making an inspection under sub-section (3) shall be deemed to be a public servant within the meaning of section 19 of the Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860)."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I may perhaps explain that the object of my honourable friend is met already in effect by clause 46(2) of this Bill. It says:

"If any person fails to produce any book, account or other document or to furnish any statement or information which under sub-section (2) of section 35 it is his duty to produce or furnish or to answer any question relating to the business of a banking company which he is asked by an officer making an inspection under that section, he shall be punishable with a fine....."

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Refusal to attend is not covered by the sub-clause.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Substantially it provides. In any case he will be regarded as a public servant and the provisions regarding obstruction would apply to this person.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: A public servant has been defined in the Indian Penal Code. Unless it is extended to this Bill, it cannot apply to this case.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: We have looked it up and we are satisfied.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Failure to appear is not covered by that.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: For the purpose of this Bill, this is sufficiently covered by the clause.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That after sub-clause (3) of clause 35 of the Bill, the following new sub-clause be inserted:

"That after sub-clause (3) of clause 35 of the Bill, the following new sub-clause be a public servant within the meaning of section 19 of the Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860)."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (5) of clause 35 of the Bill, after the words 'banking company' be inserted".

Sir, in regard to the notice issued to a banking company about a certain action proposed, if the party concerned fails to make his appearance, certain consequences follow. In such cases it is but fair that an explanation if any should be compulsorily considered, though not accepted.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I may perhaps explain the position. If the honourable member will refer to sub-clause (4) he will find that it provides: 'after giving such opportunity to the banking company to make a representation in connection with the report as, in the opinion of the Central Government, seems reasonable'. I do not see why any other provision is necessary.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: But consideration of the representation has to be made compulsory.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When an opportunity to make a representation is given, does it not follow that there will be consideration of it? I will now put the amendment to vote.

The question is:

"That in sub-clause (5) of clause 35 of the Bill, after the words 'banking company', the words 'and after considering the explanations of the banking company if any,' be inserted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (5) of clause 35 of the Bill, for the words 'as may appear necessary', the words 'if it considers necessary or desirable in the interest of the depositors or of the public', be substituted."

This refers to the publication of the state of affairs of a bank. If publication is made automatic and in all cases, unnecessary publication may damage the reputation of a bank. In these circumstances two definite tests should be laid down. I am merely making a suggestion. If the honourable Minister does not accept it, I do not want to press it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 35 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 35 was added to the Bill.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I beg to move:

"That in part (c) of sub-clause (1) of clause 36 of the Bill for the words, brackets and figures 'clause (3) of section 18', the words, brackets and figures 'clause (3) of sub-section (1) of section 18', be substituted."

The way in which section 18 has been amended has split it into two sub-clauses. This amendment has been moved only to make the reference more accurate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in part (c) of sub-clause (1) of clause 36 of the Bill, for the words, brackets and figures 'clause (3) of section 18', the words, brackets and figures 'clause (3) of sub-section (1) of section 18', be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 36, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 36, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 37 of the Bill, for the words 'for a fixed period of time', the words 'for a period of time not exceeding one year' be substituted."

Clause 37 gives power to Courts to suspend the operation of the commencement or the continuance of any action against a bank. In fact, the Court may on the application of a banking company suspend or stay the commencement or the continuance of all actions against the company. These are directed against actions taken by shareholders, depositors and others. They may, under the Indian Companies Act, take other steps. This sub-clause (1) of Clause 37, authorises the Court to suspend them. Experience has shown that many banks, who have had fraudulent transactions come to difficulties, and shareholders and others interested, try to wind up the company or to take legal action. Especially in Bengal in some cases they came to trouble. When an ex parte application is made to the Court, without hearing the other side and without realizing the difficulties, the Court grant this power, that is, suspension or continuance of all actions against the banks. What happens is that in a banking concern of this type, many bogus creditors and false entries are made, and then the creditors and others try to take action. In the meantime, the bank comes to Court and asks the Court to suspend all actions or stay all actions. In these circumstances, what happens is that the Court is presented with some apparent facts, which apparently give colour to the situation that the bank is really in difficulties without any fraud on their part. In these cases, time is given to the bank in which the bank could compound with creditors or settle matters out of Court and a long time is given. If time is gained, the account books and papers are with the bank, and they can manipulate the account, effect fraudulent preferences with some creditors and then place the shareholders and the depositors ultimately into difficulty. In these circumstances, I submit that action of the type should be controlled.

The House will be pleased to consider that in sub-clause (1), the Court is given a fixed period of time and then again extensions of time not exceeding six months. This is taken from the appropriate section of the Indian Companies Act. The difficulty here arises as it arose under the Companies Act that the extension of time the maximum laid down in this sub-clause is six months. Then it does not represent the total period of time. The original time given by the Court is known to be one year or two years, to allow the company honestly to settle up its difficulty, but then a long period is given and then again extensions are given to the extent of six months by instalments. In the meantime the assets are entirely frittered away or they pass from their hands.

Sub-clause (2) says, however, that no application can be made except on a report of the Reserve Bank. This is a very salutary provision that such action to stop and all actions against the banking company must start on the report of the Reserve Bank, because now the Reserve Bank will have full control of those banks, and will have full possession of facts and would be an expert body quite competent to take a dispassionate and accurate view in the interest of the public, the depositors and of the shareholders and such an action of the suspension of business by the Court would be appropriate. But then the proviso says that relief may be granted even if there is no such report about which I shall refer later on. At present, the amendment is confined to the time given by the Court. I want the time limit to be initial time given by the Court. It is made ex parte and without hearing anyone. In these circumstances the limit of one year is just by way of suggestion and I desire that the honourable Minister should consider whether the Court's power to give time initially should be further curtailed, and time of one year is suggested only as a tentative measure. In these circumstances, Sir, I beg to submit, that the present amendment should be considered in this light. My other amendment is only a drafting amendment in order to make the amendment more clear, but my desire is really that honourable Minister should consider the matter as to whether Carte blanche should be given to the Court.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member says that in all the period of time that is limited as six months should be extended beyond one year, that is the ultimate period.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: It is eighteen months.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: The first period is counted apart from the extension of time that is the interpretation under the existing Indian Companies Act. It has happened that Courts have given one year, two years or three years' time and then the question of extension comes. I want to separate the initial time and the extended time. At any rate, there is a doubt as to whether the six months includes the original time or the total time that may be given.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no doubt about that.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: The thing has not been found to be so clear in experience.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Unless the honourable member thinks it is a matter of such importance that time in the first stage ought to be one year and extended by a period not more than six months in all, eighteen months, there is no point in this amendment.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: If the House considers that the total period of time is six months, then I need not press the matter, but I am told by persons who have experience that difficulties have arisen.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Difficulties have arisen even before the Bill has been passed. The honourable member after such a long speech is not moving his amendment.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I have already moved it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is not accepted.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Does the honourable member mean six months in all and extension should not go beyond six months?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Six months in all, but may from time to time extend the period.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Up to a total period not exceeding six months including the fixed period.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: It is capable of doubt.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: The phrase 'total period' makes it quite clear. If I may explain the point, Sir, the position is really this. When my honourable friend says that it is necessary to give initially a longer period than six months in order to enable the bank to settle its affairs, my honourable friend is looking at it entirely from the point of view of the bank. Now when you declare a moratorium for so long a period as a year, you would have to look at it from the point of view of the depositors and if you declare a moratorium for so long a period, it destroys the confidence of the public, which will result in serious consequences. Supposing in the case of certain banks which have been exempted, it is found that a longer period than this is necessary, we have taken sufficient powers under clause 53 to deal with exceptional cases.

Srijut Kuladhar Chaliha (Assam: General): There is a certain vagueness about this.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I shall now refer to clause 4, sub-clause (3), where a similar extension is given:

"The Central Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, extend from time to time the period of any suspension ordered under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) for such period, not exceeding sixty at any one time, as it thinks fit so however that the total period does not exceed one year."

Even the same expression is used covering the entire period.

Srijut Kuladhar Chaliha: There is no limit to the fixed period of time. What is the fixed period of time? I have a right to fix it as 12 months in the first instance and extend it by another six months. I am entitled to fix it at 12 months.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: May I suggest, Sir, that when in the first instance a direction is given in this matter, by the court, the period would be a fixed period, for example, that the moratorium would be in force for a period of two months expiring on a particular date. The point is this. When you declare a moratorium, it must be declared for a fixed period, the duration of which would be absolutely definite and clear to all the people concerned. If it becomes necessary to extend the time, you give another definite period. Altogether, you can extend up to a period the total duration of which is six months.

Srijut Kuladhar Chaliha: I would request the honourable Minister to read it again.

Mr. Homi Mody: Would this wording make it more clear, Sir, "..... it shall think fit and proper, and may from time to time extend the period, but so that the total period shall not exceed six months."

Shri B. L. Sondhi (East Punjab: General): 'Period of moratorium' may be added.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I will accept it, Sir,

Shri Krishna Chandra Sharma (U.P.: General): As the words stand, they are quite clear. Time will never be extended for more than six months. The initial period is included in the six months. The wording is, "may from time to time extend the period up to a total period not exceeding six months in all." It is quite clear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would this suit Mr. Mody? 'For all the words occurring after the word "period" in the last but one line, substitute the following: "but so that the total period of moratorium shall not exceed six months."'

Dr. B. Pattabhi Sitaramayya (Madras: General): Are you having 'but' and 'so that'? Either 'but' is unnecessary or the words 'so that' may be dropped.

Mr. Homi Mody: First the period is fixed and then extension is granted. Therefore, 'but' is necessary. I think this wording is used in legal phraseology.

Dr. B. Pattabhi Sitaramayya: I think 'so however' would be better.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (7) of clause 37 of the Bill, for all the words occurring after the words 'extend the period' the following be substituted: 'so however that the total period of moratorium shall not exceed six months'."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I beg to move:

"That the Prviso to clause 37 of the Bill be omitted."

Whatever safeguard in the interests of the public or the depositors was embodied in sub-clause (2) by requiring a report of the Reserve Bank is taken away by the proviso. Before the Court grants time frustrating the attempt on the part of others to proceed against the bank, the Court must have the report of the Reserve Bank. But, the proviso says that for sufficient reasons, the Court may pass an order without the report. I beg to submit this has led to many fraudulent transactions being perpetrated through the Court, when a party appears before the Court ex parte, there is no report from the Reserve Bank. There is an apparent state of affairs and on that apparent state of affairs, the Court gives time. I beg to submit that the requirement of the report from the Reserve Bank in the interests of the safety of the public and the depositors will be seriously impaired unconsciously by a Court not having all the facts in its possession. I should therefore like that the entire proviso be deleted as it would frustrate the very object for which sub-clauses (1) and (2) have been enacted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A report is provided for later. After an ex parte order, a report is provided for. This is only in emergent cases.

Mr. Homi Mody: The Bank may be in difficulty; there may not be sufficient time for a report.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I have an alternative in the next amendment. I may argue that also. I shall move it formally later.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We may put both to the House. The other amendment refers to 'special reasons'. Then he gives up the first amendment.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move the second amendment alternatively to the first amendment. I move that the proviso be deleted. If it is not accepted, I shall move the other.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I do not accept the first.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: He is not accepting it. Then I need not put it.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Then, I move the alternative amendment. I move:

"That in the proviso to clause 37 of the Bill for the words 'for sufficient reasons', the words 'for special reasons to be recorded in writing' be substituted."

I beg to submit that if the Court acts ex parte.....

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there a case to the knowledge of the honourable member where a Court gives relief without writing?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I am told by an expert who has large experience in this line. What happens is this. The Bank appears before the Court and the Court passes an order. But without mentioning reasons.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that not in writing?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: The order is in writing but reasons are not recorded in many cases. It says, a prima facie case is made out and an order is passed. If it is provided, "for special reasons to be recorded in writing", the Court will think twice before giving an order. A gentleman with sufficient experience of bank failures in Bengal, of which there have been many, has asked me to place this view before this House that this wording in the Companies Act has not been sufficient to induce the Court to record reasons. In these circumstances, if special reasons are to be recorded, the Court will be more careful and pass an order.

Shri S. V. Krishnamoorthy Rao (Madras: General): Does not that amount to restricting the discretion of the court?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: It does not; the Court must be satisfied fully as to the thing before passing an order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think such insistence is done in regard to executive officers, but not courts of law. If it is the desire of the honourable member, I will put it to the House.

The question is:

"That in the proviso to clause 37 of the Bill for the words 'for sufficient reasons', the words 'for special reasons to be recorded in writing' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That in the Proviso to clause 37 of the Bill, after the words 'affairs of the banking company', the following be inserted."

"and pending a full report, may call for an interim report on such affairs."

It has happened that before a full report is obtained, some time will elapse and in the meantime, the assets are frittered away.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No where in the Bill is there a call for a full report. The words are "shall call for a report". It may be an interim, final, full, or an incomplete report!

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: The difficulty of the Reserve Bank will be that if they are to furnish a report, they will have to wait for a final report. In the meantime the Court may pass an order in anticipation of the Reserve Bank report. It may not be full, but it may give the Court a better picture than any expert statement on behalf of the bank. I am told that this amendment also is very necessary.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there anything in the language preventing the Court now from calling for an interim report and then a final report?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: The Bill does not make any distinction between an interim and a final report. If we say so, the Court may grant relief.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: It is better to leave it elastic.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the honourable member pressing his amendment?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I am not pressing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 37, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 37, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: What is the Minister's attitude to the amendment by Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: What the honourable member tries to do is to transfer Clause 46(5) under Clause 38. I do not know why he wants it.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Without moving it, I shall explain the reason. The operative provision should be embodied in the proper place in the Bill itself. The place where it has stood, in sub-clause (5) of clause 46 is a place for penalties, breaches and the consequences of such breaches. This sub-clause should be relegated to its proper place, and this is its proper place—where it should be placed. It is the operative part of the Act. In providing for a breach and a penalty, the operative part is not mentioned.

The House will be pleased to consider the other parts of clause 46. They merely refer to certain breaches, failure to submit returns and refusal to produce documents and breaking rules about minimum deposits. Here the entire substantive law has been set out. This is where it should find a proper place. If we remove sub-clause (5) of clause 46 and place it here, the penalty would be adequately covered under sub-clause (4) which says: "If any other provision of this Act is contravened." If this is removed from clause 46 without any mention of it, that would be sufficiently covered by the provisions of sub-clause (4), which gives a penalty for any other non-compliance with the provisions of the Act, not ordinarily covered by sub-clauses (1), (2) and (3). That is the reason which induced me to transfer it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable Minister does not accept it. Is it the wish of the honourable member to move it and have it put to the House?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Yes Sir, I move:

"That after sub-clause (1) of clause 38 of the Bill, the following new sub-clause be inserted:

"(1A) Without prejudice to the provisions of sub-section (4) of section 46, if any Banking company fails to comply with the provisions of section 24 or of section 25, the Reserve Bank shall by notice in writing direct the banking company to comply with the said provisions within thirty days from the receipt of the notice, and if the banking company fails so to do, the Reserve Bank may apply under section 38 for the winding up of the banking company, and the Court shall order the winding up of the banking company."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That after sub-clause (1) of clause 38 of the Bill, the following new sub-clause be inserted:

"(A) Without prejudice to the provisions of sub-section (4) of section 46, if any Banking company fails to comply with the provisions of section 24 or of section 25, the Reserve Bank shall by notice in writing direct the banking company to comply with the said provisions within thirty days from the receipt of the notice, and if the banking company fails so to do, the Reserve Bank may apply under section 38 for the winding up of the banking company, and the Court shall order the winding up of the banking company."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 38 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 38 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That in clause 39 of the Bill, the following be added at the end:

"and in any other case, the Reserve Bank or a nominee of the Reserve Bank shall be appointed the official liquidator."

With regard to the appointment of a liquidator it has happened—and I speak from instructions from a very competent man—that official liquidators are appointed from persons who have no experience. Sometimes a junior lawyer without any experience is appointed and he prolongs the matter not having sufficient experience. Assets are frittered away and ultimately the shareholders and depositors get nothing. By this amendment it is provided that the Reserve Bank itself should be appointed the liquidator. But it may be that we put too many responsibilities on the Reserve Bank, so a nominee of the Reserve Bank shall be appointed liquidator. A nominee of the Reserve Bank would be a competent man, for example a Chartered Accountant or any other person reliable and competent. In fact to manage a bank as a liquidator requires all the technical knowledge of an expert, as is required by this amendment. I submit, that the appointment of a suitable liquidator in the interests of the depositors and shareholders and the public at large is very necessary, because in the case of a liquidation, the matter should be in the hands of a competent person. So, first of all, my first preference would be the Reserve Bank itself, and if the Reserve Bank is unable to help on account of other preoccupations, then a nominee of the Reserve Bank would be desirable. It should not be left to the choice of the Court to appoint non-experts and I am reliably informed that this has often happened and the proceedings have been prolonged, ultimately to leave nothing to the depositors and the shareholders. In these circumstances, I submit that this amendment should be accepted as it is.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in clause 39 of the Bill, the following be added at the end:

'and in any other case, the Reserve Bank or a nominee of the Reserve Bank shall be appointed the official liquidator'."

Pandit Lakshmi Kanta Maitra (West Bengal: General): What is the meaning of "and in any other case"?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: When any third person applies for liquidation of the bank, then either the Reserve Bank or some person approved by the Reserve Bank would be appointed the official liquidator.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Reserve Bank does not choose to apply, it is open to the Court to appoint any other person. But the honourable member wants that the Reserve Bank must be appointed or even a nominee of the Reserve Bank.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: This is a matter which I discussed at considerable length with the Reserve Bank and in the present position the Bank feels that it is not possible for it either to provide official liquidators from among their employees or to accept responsibility for appointing nominees to do this work.

It would be putting on the Reserve Bank a big responsibility in respect of every single banking company in the country, which I do not think in the present circumstances it is fair to place upon them.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I have never said nor desired that any officer of the Reserve Bank should do it. A nominee might be a person from the rank of chartered accountants.

Pandit Lakshmi Kanta Maitra: I have listened to the arguments advanced by my honourable friend Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad, who has the singular misfortune of getting every one of his amendments defeated. It is not for that that I have risen to support him but he has raised a substantial point. The point really is that if a banking company goes into liquidation and if it seeks the protection of the court in this matter, what is the option left to the court. According to the provisions of section 39 the Reserve Bank has the right to be appointed the liquidator of the banking company which is going in for liquidation. But cases might arise when the Reserve Bank may not be coming forward. In that case the court has the option of appointing anybody and I share the apprehension of my honourable friend Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad that in such cases a man may be appointed a liquidator who has absolutely no banking experience and knows nothing of banking.....

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: That has happened.

Pandit Lakshmi Kanta Maitra: An instance like that happened in my province of Bengal about two decades ago, when a very big bank unfortunately collapsed. Do you know what happened? An official liquidator was appointed by the Honourable High Court of Calcutta. I was one of those unfortunates whose father had a large amount in that bank. After two or three years of protracted proceedings, by that liquidator practically all the assets of the bank had been exhausted and I was offered two pies (one sixth of an anna) in the rupee and in sheer disgust many people would not touch that money. What happened was this. The liquidator so appointed had fixed such a high scale of his remuneration, which was approved by the High Court, that during the long period of three years nothing was left for the depositors to get except the paltry sum of two pies in the rupee.

Mr. Homi Mody: It is scandalous.

Pandit Lakshmi Kanta Maitra: This is scandalous. My honourable friend the Minister says that the Reserve Bank's hands are so full that they cannot spare any of its officers. This can be no argument. When we are going to overhaul the entire banking structure of the country by this legislation, when we are trying to put in all manner of safeguards for the depositors and in the ultimate analysis, for the safety and security of the financial structure of the country, I think this amendment—you may improve on it if you want—has got a substantial point in its favour, which cannot be denied. It is quite possible that the Reserve Bank will say that they have not got any officers to spare. Personally speaking I feel that the distress of most of the banks today is due to the dereliction of duty on the part of the Reserve Bank. That is a responsibility which cannot be shirked by the Reserve Bank. Recently we have passed through several banking crises in Bengal and only at the last moment the Reserve Bank came to their rescue in a halting manner. That was at a very late stage. That is another matter. If I get a chance in the third reading I will make that point. For the time being I would earnestly request the honourable Minister carefully to consider the implications of this amendment. It is quite possible that the Finance Minister might put in a nominee who need not necessarily be an officer of the Reserve Bank or the Reserve Bank can make a suitable nomination, knowing the full antecedents of the man whom they are going to nominate. Though I am not generally in favour of the amendments of my honourable friend Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad, at least he should listen while I am supporting him. This is really an important matter and I hope the House will give it some consideration.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Sir, in view of the speech of my honourable friend Pandit Lakshmi Kanta Maitra I should like to have the privilege of...

Pandit Lakshmi Kanta Maitra: The honourable Minister can think it over and we shall take it up when we re-assemble after Lunch.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock, Mr. Speaker (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Sir, just before the House adjourned for Lunch my honourable friend Pandit Lakshmi Kanta Maitra referred to the importance of having somebody who is authorized by the Reserve Bank to act as liquidator. The amendment before the House is that the Reserve Bank or a nominee of the Reserve Bank shall be appointed as the official liquidator. The really important point is that the liquidator must be somebody upon whom the Reserve Bank has a sufficient degree of control who would act with the authority of the Reserve Bank behind him. That is really the point. In the first place I should like to assure the House that in view of the extensive powers which are going to be conferred upon the Reserve Bank if this Bill is passed into law it is our intention that as soon as possible the staff of the Reserve Bank should be sufficiently increased to enable it to meet these very important responsibilities which are being placed upon them, so that the difficulty that was experienced in the particular case to which Pandit Lakshmi Kanta Maitra referred is not likely to arise again, at any rate, to the same extent.

Apart from that, suppose a case arises where it is found that there is nobody on the staff of the Reserve Bank who can be spared for this purpose, assuming that the case is an important one where serious losses are likely to occur to a large section of the community, then I suggest that the most satisfactory course from every point of view would be not for the Reserve Bank to nominate somebody but for the Reserve Bank temporarily to appoint, for that purpose, an accountant of standing to do the particular piece of work. The advantage of that course is that the Reserve Bank is then not merely the authority nominating the person but is also the authority which is in a position to.....

Pandit Lakshmi Kanta Maitra: That is, irrespective of the order of the court? If the court appoints a liquidator would the Reserve Bank appoint a chartered accountant in addition to him?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: The provision as it stands is that the Reserve Bank makes an application. Suppose the case is an important case where serious losses are likely to occur, then the Reserve Bank would make an application. Even if the Reserve Bank at that time is short of staff and for that reason thinks that it cannot spare an officer it might be expected to appoint temporarily an accountant of standing to do the work. In that case there is a definite responsibility resting upon the Reserve Bank. If you are giving responsibility to the Reserve Bank, you must place them in a position where the responsibility cannot be properly enforced. While I quite appreciate the intention that my honourable friend Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad has, I think his intention would be better implemented by a line of action of the kind I have suggested.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I could not quite follow the line of action. May I explain the position? This is a very important matter. The position is if the Reserve Bank applies, of course the Reserve Bank would be appointed the liquidator. But suppose the applicant is not the Reserve Bank but it is somebody else, some creditor or other person. Then the court will not be bound to appoint the Reserve Bank or any nominee of it or any person selected by it as the liquidator.

Mr. Speaker: There is a practical difficulty in what the honourable member is suggesting. Suppose a frivolous application is made by a creditor and the question arises of appointing a provisional liquidator then and there. Should the Reserve Bank be appointed?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: No.

Mr. Speaker: That is the point.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: That is exactly the point, Sir.

Shri M. Tirumala Rao (Madras: General): Does the honourable Minister suggest that a frivolous application would be made?

Mr. Speaker: Not by the Reserve Bank itself but any other person may do so. I think persons who practise in courts know the kind of applications made.

Shri M. Tirumala Rao: When the court holds that there is sufficient reason to appoint a liquidator.....

Mr. Speaker: If the honourable member knows about liquidation proceedings, there are two stages. First a provisional liquidator is appointed and then finally the pukka liquidator is appointed. So the question will be who the provisional liquidator should be. Some person will have to be appointed. But if an amendment of this type is introduced, no provisional liquidator other than the Reserve Bank can be appointed. And in the case of each and every application, whether made properly or improperly, the Reserve Bank will have to take up the burden of acting as liquidator. That, I think, is the point of the honourable Minister.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I have suggested also a nominee.

Mr. Speaker: The matter should be left better to the court and its discretion—unless the Reserve Bank in each case undertakes the responsibility of seeing that the liquidation is properly put through. That seems to be the point. However, if the honourable member wishes to say anything I should not like to stop him.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: The point is if the Reserve Bank applies, the law says that the Reserve Bank shall be appointed the liquidator. But suppose somebody else applies. Then the Court, as I said before, will appoint the liquidator and it will be free to appoint a lawyer without experience. Sometimes that is done. I was assured by a lawyer having long experience of these cases that what is done in an ex parte application is that a lawyer without much experience is appointed. He does not mismanage it intentionally, but not having sufficient experience in running a bank, he allows the bank to run for some time and in the meantime the resources of the bank are frittered away, leaving no dividends for shareholders or depositors. I do not want to place any burden on the Reserve Bank. It comes to take a serious responsibility with regard to banking. Would the Reserve Bank find it difficult to nominate a person or have a list of persons who would be approved by them for this purpose?

Mr. Speaker: Let the matter be considered in its practical application, and perhaps a way may be found. The court may appoint somebody on the recommendation of the Reserve Bank.

Pandit Lakshmi Kanta Maitra: I want one point made clear. I think the honourable Minister also means this. Suppose, as my honourable friend Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad assumes—as I say he assumes—the court, on any application, appoints somebody else who is not a very desirable person to take over charge of liquidation proceedings then, if I have understood the Honourable the Finance Minister aright, it will be open to the Reserve Bank to appoint a Chartered Accountant there in addition to the liquidator who may be appointed in that way. Is there any bar to it? Or is it contemplated that if a liquidator is appointed who may not be a very desirable or competent person, all the same it does not oust the right of the Reserve Bank to appoint a chartered accountant to supervise and see things? Is that the point?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: If I may say so I would respectfully endorse what the Honourable the Speaker said that this is a matter which has got to be settled in relation to the actual circumstances of each case.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: The Court may not agree with the Reserve Bank.

Mr. Homi Mody: After we rose for lunch, I made a suggestion informally to my honourable friend the Finance Minister that in such cases an officer of the Court be appointed instead of any ordinary person, and he pointed out to me that any lawyer could be regarded as an officer of the Court. What I meant was an official of the High Court, and the question is whether if the words used were "officer of the Court" it would mean an official or not, because if it was an official then there would be a sufficient safeguard to the public.

Mr. Speaker: It is difficult for me to give interpretation.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras: General): There is nothing to prevent in the clause as it stands, for any person or any set of persons, shareholders or others, who are interested in the bank moving immediately the Reserve Bank to make an application. Why are we forgetting that?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Or to me.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Or to the Honourable the Finance Minister or his Department, instead of going straightaway to the Court and tying the hands of the Court and asking it to appoint only the Reserve Bank or its nominee irrespective of the time at the disposal of the Reserve Bank. It is always open to a party to ask the Reserve Bank and the Reserve Bank will certainly be interested in this matter.

Regarding the officials, my own point is this. Though an official may hold a responsible position, he may not have as much experience as a lawyer may have. We will give both a lawyer and an official, then under this clause as it stands there is nothing to prevent the appointment of a businessman who has a reputation to run the bank efficiently. My own impression is that very often persons who have knowledge of banking experience and who are of high integrity, will be chosen to take charge of this administration, for however short a period it might be. Therefore, I think the clause may be allowed to stand as it is without fettering the discretion of the Court. If the Court itself which is the ultimate authority in all matters is going to commit a mistake, I do not know who will be the ultimate authority.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Difficulties have arisen in Bengal.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think any further discussion on the point is necessary, but I carried the impression that the discussion started because honourable members do not seem to be very conversant with actual liquidation proceedings in the Courts. I ventured to pass a few remarks, because I happened to have a good deal of practice in liquidation matters. I might point out one thing more, that liquidation proceedings are not on behalf of the particular creditor who applies, but they are on behalf of all the creditors of the company. So, in case any adverse order is made, which is not liked by any other creditors or any other interested persons, then those people will be entitled to move the Court and the matter can be taken even in an appeal. That is how the position will stand. And perhaps it will be competent for some of the creditors also to say that the Reserve Bank should be appointed the liquidator in that case. So, the discretion is quite wide.

I shall put the amendment to vote. The question is:

"That in clause 39 of the Bill, the following be added at the end:

'and in any other case, the Reserve Bank or a nominee of the Reserve Bank shall appointed the official liquidator.'

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 39 stand part of the Bill".

The motion was adopted.

Clause 39 was added to the Bill.

Clauses 40 to 44 were added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I beg to move:

"That in part (a) of clause 45 of the Bill, for the word 'members', the word 'shareholders' be substituted."

The Bill says: "members of the bank." In co-operative societies shareholders are sometimes described as "members". Here the expression that is ordinarily used is "shareholders." In the case of an ordinary bank the shareholders are never called members. "Member" is a vague expression so far as this matter is concerned. There is fortunately Mr. Homi Mody present here and he would be able to give us some idea as to whether shareholders are called "members". If they are, I have no objection.

Mr. Speaker: In the Companies Act they are called "members".

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Then I do not press the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That clause 45 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 45 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That after clause 45 of the Bill, the following new clause be inserted:

'45A. The Court shall dispose of all proceedings under this Act with the least practicable delay'."

There is a reason for this amendment. As I submitted to the House before, in this matter I was instructed by an experienced lawyer from the Calcutta High Court who enjoined upon me the necessity of these amendments. He assured me that a bank may indulge in fraudulent transactions having on the list some fictitious persons as creditors and with an imposing array of books they come to Court and then the case drags on interminably. In fact, even in the High Court the cases are dragged on. In the meantime the resources of the bank are frittered away and ultimately the shareholders and the depositors lose everything.

In the circumstances, a clause of this type would always remind the Court that it is very desirable to dispose of the case rather speedily. If this clause is there, Courts will be disinclined to give many adjournments, but otherwise it is possible to drag on and I have been assured by an experienced man that this has actually happened to the detriment of many banks. Unfortunately, there have been many bank failures in my part of the country and therefore I can claim some consideration in this respect.

Shri B. L. Sondhi: How would you paraphrase these words "least practicable delay"?

Mr. Speaker: That would be going into the merits of his amendment. I do not think, on its merits, it requires much consideration.

Amendment moved.

"That after clause 45 of the Bill, the following new clause be inserted:

'45A. The Court shall dispose of all proceedings under this Act with the least practicable delay'."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: As a member of Government, I presume that our courts always act with the least practicable delay.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: There have been many Committees like the Law Reform Committee and others, but however much you may try, it must be left to each judge to dispose of the case as early as possible. How can you measure delay, to say that it shall be the least practicable delay? It is rather difficult. Therefore it is good to leave it to the judges instead of saying "with the least practicable delay."

Mr. Speaker: The consensus seems to be that this would be merely a pious wish.

The question is:

"That after clause 45 of the Bill, the following new clause be inserted:

'45A. The Court shall dispose of all proceedings under this Act with the least practicable delay'."

The motion was negatived.

Kazi Syed Karimuddin (C.P. and Berar: Muslim): I move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 46 of the Bill, the word 'wilfully', wherever it occurs, be omitted."

My submission is that this word "wilfully" suggests a plea to the accused when he makes a false statement knowing it to be false, that he would be acquitted merely because he says that it was under the orders of the Directors or the shareholders that he made such statement. If it is established that he makes a statement which is false, knowing it to be false, that is quite enough to convict him. But in the present circumstances, if he makes a false statement, knowing it to be false, he can put in a plea in the court of law that he did not do so wilfully but it was under a Resolution of the Board of Directors and he would be entitled to be acquitted. Therefore, my submission is that the word "wilfully" ought not to be there.

Mr. Speaker: There are various amendments, practically raising the same substantive issue. There is one in the name of Shri Krishna Chandra Sharma and some others in Mr. Karimuddin's name and Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad's name. These may just be moved and the honourable members may have their say later on.

Shri Krishna Chandra Sharma: I move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 46 of the Bill, for the word 'wilfully', wherever it occurs, the word 'intentionally' be substituted."

Kazi Syed Karimuddin: I move:

(i) "That in sub-clause (1) of clause 46 of the Bill, after the words 'which is false' the words 'to his knowledge' be inserted."

(ii) "That in sub-clause (1) of clause 46 of the Bill, the words 'knowing it to be false', be omitted."

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 46 of the Bill, for the words 'knowing it to be false', the words 'knowing or having reason to believe it to be false' be substituted."

Mr. Speaker: I shall now place all the amendments before the House and then I shall call upon the movers to have their say in support of them.

Amendments moved:

(i) "That in sub-clause (1) of clause 46 of the Bill, the word 'wilfully', wherever it occurs, be omitted."

(ii) "That in sub-clause (1) of clause 46 of the Bill, for the word 'wilfully', wherever it occurs, the word 'intentionally' be substituted."

(iii) "That in sub-clause (1) of clause 46 of the Bill, after the words 'which is false', the words 'to his knowledge' be inserted."

(iv) "That in sub-clause (1) of clause 46 of the Bill, the words 'knowing it to be false', be omitted."

(v) "That in sub-clause (1) of clause 46 of the Bill, for the words 'knowing it to be false', the words 'knowing or having reason to believe it to be false' be substituted."

Shri Krishna Chandra Sharma: I take the word "intentionally" from the Indian Penal Code Section 193. I think when a man makes an intentionally false statement or intentionally gives false evidence, he should be liable. This is a better expression than "wilfully" and expresses the intention of the Legislators better.

Kazi Syed Karimuddin: I have already spoken and I have given reasons why the word "wilfully" should be omitted. The honourable member on the other side has said that the word "intentionally" should be substituted in the place of "wilfully". It will have practically the same effect. If a man makes a false statement knowing it to be false, then is it necessary that the word "intentionally" or "wilfully" should be there? In the case of a bank, suppose a manager or officer of the bank makes a false statement which to his knowledge is false, he may say that he did not do it wilfully but it was under the orders or resolution of the bank, then on that statement he will not be convicted; he will be entitled to be acquitted. There is no prosecution of the members or shareholders of the bank because it is not a duty with which they are charged. Therefore, my submission is that neither "wilfully" nor "intentionally" should be kept there, but the word "wilfully" should be omitted.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: With regard to my amendment, I have introduced the new words because I want to tighten the law. If a man makes a false statement knowingly, with his knowledge, he will be guilty; he should be guilty also when he has reason to believe it to be false. It may often happen that a man may have a very good reason to believe a certain thing to be false, but yet it will be difficult in a Court of law to prove that he actually knew it. It would be enough for the Prosecution to show that he had reason to believe. In that case, ordinarily it would be possible for Courts to hold that he had reason to believe that it was false, so he is liable. The law should be further tightened and with that end in view I have brought in this amendment.

Regarding the deletion of the word "wilfully" I submit that if a man does make a false statement on account of the resolution or order of his superior body, he nonetheless does it wilfully. Supposing there is a resolution asking a Manager of a bank to commit a murder or fraud or forgery; he cannot be excused. The mere fact that there is a resolution should be no excuse. If he is a law-abiding citizen, he should say, "I refuse to make false statement, although I am directed to do so." In fact if he agrees to obey the order or a resolution directing him to make a false statement he becomes at once a party to a criminal conspiracy to break the law. I do not think the word should be removed. Wilfulness or intention is a necessary element and I want to add to it the words 'knowing or having reason to believe it to be false'. This is only an additional safeguard.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: So far as the need for the word 'wilfully' is concerned, I can only refer to the Penal Code. In Chapter XI of the Code, this is what is said: "whatever is uttered by a person which is false and which he knows to be false". First, the statement must be false and secondly the person making it must know it to be false or has reason to believe it to be false or at any rate does not believe it to be true. In one of these cases he is said to be giving false evidence. Under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code the wording is 'whoever intentionally gives false evidence'. The three ingredients for this offence are, (1) it must be false statement, (2) he must know it to be false, and (3) even then, he must intend to give that false evidence. It may be asked, what are the cases? A man knows it to be a false statement and he would not give it if he does not do so intentionally. Inadvertently he might do so. I might have known something and have forgotten it for the time being. Therefore, the gist of any criminal offence is intention. Let us not add to the list of offences without corresponding limitations as provided in the Penal Code. Therefore, either 'wilfully' or 'intentionally', ought to be there. But, as between these words, I would prefer 'intentionally', because the same expression is used in Chapter XI relating to false evidence and offences against public justice. I would ask the honourable Minister to accept that if he has no objection and if he is not advised otherwise. So far as 'knowing' is concerned, there is no meaning in adding to it. If you refer to the later portion, the word 'knowing' is already there.

Mr. Speaker: I think in the Indian Companies Act, the expression used is 'wilfully'.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: That is what I was told by my legal advisers also.

Mr. Speaker: It is better to adopt that phraseology in this company legislation also.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Then we will have to find out the difference between the words 'wilful' and 'intentional'. I am not an expert in the English language to explain why one word has been chosen in Company law. In other particulars we are following the Company law in this measure. I see no objection to retaining the word 'wilfully'.

[Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar.]

As regards the other amendment to omit the words 'knowing it to be false', I do not think it is necessary. My impression is that these words 'to his knowledge false' are unnecessary, for the reason the words 'knowing it to be false' are there. Those words have been copied from the Indian Penal Code and may remain. Thus, the wording in the Bill seems to be all right. There is no need to amend it.

Shri H. V. Kamath (C.P. and Berar: General): To my mind there is some substance in the amendment to omit the word 'wilfully' and in the two amendments of Kazi Syed Karimuddin. I believe it is my friend's intention that they should be taken together. If all these three amendments are accepted by the House, the clause will read as follows:

"Whoever in any return, balance-sheet or other document required by or under or for the purposes of any provision of this Act, makes a statement which is false to his knowledge."

If the clause is allowed to stand as it is, the ingredients for an offence under it will be wilfulness plus knowledge. My friend Shri Ananthasayanam Ayyangar made an astounding statement that there can be knowledge and also inadvertence.

An Honourable Member: Did he say that?

Shri H. V. Kamath: He said, he might know it to be false, yet in advertently make it. Sir, I am sure the House will not accept the proposition of Shri Ananthasayanam Ayyangar that when a man knows a thing to be false he might inadvertently make a statement about it as true.

Mr. Speaker: I think there is some misapprehension as regards what he meant. The House has understood him in a manner different from what he meant.

The elements necessary for constituting an offence are that the statement must be false. That is one. Then, secondly, the person who makes it must be knowing it to be false. He may know it to be false and then he must make it wilfully. So, substantially he must know that the statement is false and he must make it wilfully.

Shri H. V. Kamath: At first he made a statement about knowledge in which he said that a man might know a statement to be false and might make it inadvertently.

Shri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: I may add my own explanation also to what I said. My friend has not understood me correctly. I mentioned, as you suggested, three ingredients: (1) the statement should be false; (2) the person making it must know it to be false; and (3) he must wilfully make that false statement. My friend does not understand that there is demarcation between wilfully make a statement knowing it to be false and otherwise. Legally and technically one must have made a false statement wilfully, to be subject to the penalty. There is yet another ingredient and that is that the statement must be wilful and intentional.

Mr. Speaker: The courts will take care of this. I would request non-lawyers not to worry so much about legal technicalities.

Shri H. V. Kamath: I do not presume to have much knowledge of law, but I have heard lawyers arguing and quarrelling among themselves. To my mind, the head and front of the offence under this clause should be knowledge of the statement to be false. Otherwise, I think if we include 'wilfulness' along with 'knowledge', it may not deter prospective offenders from committing such an offence under the Act. Therefore, if we omit the word 'wilfully' and retain the words: 'makes a statement which is false to his knowledge' that should be enough to constitute an offence under this act. Wilfulness in addition to knowledge is to my mind not necessary. If a person makes a statement which is false to his knowledge that should be enough to constitute an offence and to be convicted under this Section.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: rose —

An Honourable Member: Sir, he is not a lawyer.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: No, Sir, I practised criminal law thirty years before, but I am afraid I have now lost my instinct for legal subtleties, but I would respectfully submit to the House that the phrasing of this clause closely follows the phrasing in the corresponding sections of the Companies Act and further than that, I discussed all these amendments as carefully as I could with my legal advisers and I have been advised that the clause as it stands is probably the most suitable way in which the provision could be worded and if I may say so, I am quite prepared to be guided in this matter by any views that you may care to express.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Of course, I do not wish to press my amendment.

Mr. Speaker: In any case, I have placed it before the House now.

I may just only point out what is provided for in section 282 of the Indian Companies Act. The language of that section runs as follows:

"Pendency for false statement.—Whoever in any return, report, certificate, balance-sheet or other document, required by or for the purposes of any of the provisions of this Act (here means the Companies Act) wilfully makes a statement false in any material particular, knowing it to be false, shall be punishable,....."

Practically the same words are given.

A point was made that this legislation is taken as a sort of complementary to company legislation and it is better to follow the same phraseology; otherwise, there is a likelihood of conflict in the interpretation. Any way, I am now putting the amendments to the House.

The question is:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 46 of the Bill, for the word 'wilfully', wherever it occurs, be omitted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 46 of the Bill, for the word 'wilfully', wherever it occurs, the word 'intentionally' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 46 of the Bill, after the words 'which is false' the words 'to his knowledge' be inserted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 46 of the Bill, for the word 'wilfully', wherever it occurs, be omitted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad is not pressing his amendment but I must place it all the same before the House.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I am very eager to withdraw it.

Mr. Speaker: Has the honourable member leave of the House to withdraw his amendment?

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 46 of the Bill, for the word 'imprisonment', the word 'imprisonment of either description' be substituted."

[Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad]

I only want to make this clear. In the Penal Code, there is always a distinction between imprisonment of different descriptions unless something is specifically stated.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Under the General Clauses Act, imprisonment means imprisonment of either description.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: The General Clauses Act has been practically repealed in this House; it has been superseded so many times.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member is urging its acceptance so many times and so he should not reject it this time. The amendments are practically unnecessary.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 46 of the Bill, for the word 'fails', occurring in line one, the words 'fails or omits' be substituted."

The expression is that "if any person fails to produce any book, account" and so forth. I want to make it that "If any person fails or omits to produce any book, account" and so forth. I want to tighten the law a bit further. I think the clause will be more elastic if the words "or omits" are used along with the word "fails", evasion would be a little more difficult.

Mr. Speaker: Does not the word 'fail' cover also the "omission"?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: A man may say: "I missed the train and failed thereby, but there was no wilful 'omission' on my part."

Mr. Homi Mody: You cannot say you omitted the 'train'.

Mr. Speaker: Omission may be one of the causes of failure, but failure is a more general term. The honourable member may look into it.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: The juxtaposition of the two words will make it more complete. Though they overlap to a large extent, they may be combined as a legal device to make the sense complete. That is the only justification.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable Minister is not accepting it. May I put it to the House?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: No Sir.

Shri Krishna Chandra Sharma: I move:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 46 of the Bill, for the words 'a fine which may extend to five hundred rupees', the words 'simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both' be substituted."

There are similar provisions in the Indian Penal Code where a certain duty is imposed on a person under the law to help the public servant in the discharge of his duties and if the person intentionally omits to do this, this is the punishment provided in the Indian Penal Code under Section 187. A lesser punishment should not be provided for the person who is much more educated and responsible. My respectful submission is that simple imprisonment for one month and fine up to Rs. 1,000 may be substituted for the provisions in the article.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 46 of the Bill, for the words 'a fine which may extend to five hundred rupees', the words 'simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both' be substituted."

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I think it is not necessary in this case to provide for imprisonment. In cases of this kind, the point that we have got to remember is that when an offence of this kind has been committed and the party concerned has been convicted and has been fined, the publicity that attaches to it will reflect on the business and will carry a good enough punishment with it.

Mr. Speaker: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 46 of the Bill, for the words 'a fine which may extend to five hundred rupees', the words 'simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment No. 248 falls through, practically, because there is no 'omission' now.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: Sir, the word 'persists' indicates a dogged determination, a wrong-headedness. The words "continues in his failure or omission".....

Mr. Speaker: 'Or omission'; both these words must disappear now.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: It is a question of drafting. My point is, the word 'persists' indicates a dogged determination like that of a naughty school boy. That wording will be taken advantage of by criminals. That is why I want to move this amendment. I move:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 46 of the Bill, for the words 'persists in such refusal', the words 'continues in his failure as aforesaid' be substituted."

The wording in the clause is "persists in such refusal" and so forth. As I have already submitted, 'persists' is just like the act of a member who is determined to speak although definitely ruled out several times. A man who is hauled up for breach will say, 'I failed, but I did not persist in it'. Every word of this Bill will be deemed to have a meaning and every word must be deemed to have been used by the Legislature for a definite policy and purpose. In these circumstances, the word 'persists' would be too strong an expression and would allow a loop hole for many criminals. That is why I want to make it easy for the prosecution to rope in a criminal.

Shrimati G. Durgabai (Madras: General): Sir, I do not think this amendment has any purpose besides making some improvement in the language. That may safely be left to the draftsman.

Mr. Speaker: Let me put the amendment to the House.

Amendment moved:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 46 of the Bill, for the words 'persists in such refusal', the words 'continues in his failure as aforesaid' be substituted."

Mr. Tajamul Husain (Bihar: Muslim): I rise to oppose this amendment. Being a lawyer myself, I must say something on this. The word 'persists' really conveys obstinacy, that a man is obstinate in refusing to do a thing. This word is more proper and stronger than the words suggested by my honourable friend, Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad. He says, "continues in his failure." What is 'continuing'? It means 'going on'. Therefore, the amendment, in my opinion, is not as strong as the wording in the Bill. I support the original draft and oppose the amendment of my honourable friend.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: With regard to the suggestion that this may be left to the draftsman, I think our Rules preclude it.

Mr. Speaker: He has no right of reply.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I do not accept the amendment for the obvious reason that continuing in a wrong line of action is persistence.

Mr. Speaker: I was just wondering, in view of the previous phraseology—it may be examined and it may come up at the third reading stage also if the honourable member so likes—is the word “refusal” proper? Should it not be “failure”. The wording in this sub-clause is, “if any person fails to produce any book of account, or fails to furnish any statement or information or fails to answer any question, etc.” The word “refusal” does not so much fit in as the word “failure”. The honourable Minister may look into the matter.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I agree with you, Sir,

Mr. Speaker: I should like to have the opinion of the draftsman on this question, even though it may mean just a little change in the wording.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: May I have the precise suggestion that you are making?

Mr. Speaker: The word “failure” may be substituted for word “refusal”. It is only a question of language.

Mr. Homi Mody: Is there anything like persisting in failure?

Mr. Speaker: It is more or less a question of language. That also may be considered. Shall I leave it to the third reading stage? After all, the amendment will be a verbal one.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: If that is the way you act to the thing, I am prepared straightaway to accept your suggestion.

Mr. Speaker: An amendment to that effect may be moved later on. I shall put the amendment to the House then.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: If it is subject to reconsideration, it need not be put at all.

Mr. Speaker: This is not the subject of reconsideration. Either he withdraws or I shall put it to the House.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: He has promised to re-examine the matter.

Mr. Speaker: He is not promising to examine the matter in its entirety. The word ‘persists’ is there. The amendment under consideration is that the word “refusal” disappears in favour of “failure”. That is the only point.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I beg leave to withdraw Sir.

Mr. Speaker: Has the honourable member leave of the House to withdraw his amendment?

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Kazi Syed Karimuddin: I move:

“That in sub-clause (3) of clause 46 of the Bill, the word ‘other’, occurring in line two, be omitted.”

The sub-clause reads like this:

“If any depositors are received by a banking company in contravention of an order under clause (a) of sub-section (4) of section 35, every director or other officer.....”

The word “other” is wrongly used and the amendment should be accepted.

Mr. Speaker: Amendment moved:

“That in sub-clause (3) of clause 46 of the Bill, the word ‘other’, occurring in line two, be omitted.”

The honourable Minister may consider about “failure” or “refusal” and it may come at the third reading or at the end of this clause.

[At this stage Mr. Speaker vacated the Chair, which was then occupied by Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava (one of the Panel of Chairmen)].

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: This wording comes from the Companies Act.

Kazi Syed Karimuddin: May come from the Companies Act, but it may be wrong.

Mr. Homi Mody: “Other officer” has to be somebody like a Director. He cannot be one of the hundreds of officers of the lower category who can be made responsible under this section. The word ‘other’ should be there.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: The word ‘other’ should be there.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

“That in sub-clause (3) of clause 46 of the Bill, the word ‘other’, occurring in line two, be omitted.”

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

“That in sub-clause (3) of clause 46 of the Bill, for the words ‘other officer’, the words, ‘every other officer’ be substituted.”

The difficulty which was felt by Kazi Syed Karimuddin was also felt by me. The approach has been through different ways but the object is the same. In fact the text is “every director or other officer...”. It gives the impression that a director is an officer, and other officers are also included. If we say ‘every director and other officer’, it would mean ‘every director who is an officer and other officers’. But then the amendment would make it read like this: ‘every director and every other officer’; the anomaly of using the word director as suggesting that he is an officer would be eliminated. It should read: ‘Every director and every other officer’. Or the word “other” may be eliminated. “Every director and every officer” would perhaps be better, if it is acceptable to the honourable Minister.

Mr. Chairman: Amendment moved.

“That in sub-clause (3) of clause 46 of the Bill, for the words ‘other officer’, the words, ‘every other officer’ be substituted.”

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I need not repeat my argument. I oppose the amendment.

Mr. Tajamul Husain: I rise to oppose the amendment. “Every other officer” has no meaning. That means everybody who may be an officer, and there may be so many officers. I see no sense in that.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

“That in sub-clause (3) of clause 46 of the Bill, for the words ‘other officer’, the words, ‘every other officer’ be substituted.”

The motion was negatived.

Kazi Syed Karimuddin: I move:

“That in sub-clause (3) of clause 46 of the Bill, after the words ‘banking company’, occurring in line three, the words ‘who is charged with the duties prescribed under sub-section (4) of section 35’ be inserted.”

In sub-clause (3) it is said:

“If any depositors are received by a banking company in contravention of an order under clause (a) of sub-section (4) of section 35, every director or other officer of the banking company, unless he proves that the contravention took place without his knowledge or that he exercised all due diligence to prevent it, shall be deemed to be guilty...”

Therefore I make the suggestion that only that director or officer, who is charged with the duty prescribed under clause 35 should be made liable. Therefore my submission is that only those who are charged with the duty prescribed under sub-section (4) of section 35 should be made liable under sub-section (3).

Mr. Chairman: Amendment moved:

“That in sub-clause (3) of clause 46 of the Bill, after the words ‘banking company’, occurring in line three, the words ‘who is charged with the duties prescribed under sub-section (4) of section 35’ be inserted.”

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I regret I cannot accept it.

Kazi Syed Karimuddin: Will the Government not give any reasons for opposing?

Mr. Chairman: If the honourable Minister does not choose to, you cannot force him.

The question is:

"That in sub-clause (3) of clause 46 of the Bill, after the words 'banking company', occurring in line three, the words 'who is charged with the duties prescribed under sub-section (4) of section 35' be inserted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That in sub-clause (3) of clause 46 of the Bill, for the word 'knowledge', the words 'knowledge or connivance' be substituted."

The element of knowledge may in particular cases be difficult to prove, but if we add "connivance" it makes the expression more elastic and probably many a defaulter would be roped in through this combination of words who would otherwise escape if there was only one word.

Mr. Chairman: Amendment moved:

"That in sub-clause (3) of clause 46 of the Bill, for the word 'knowledge' the words 'knowledge or connivance' be substituted."

Mr. Tajamul Husain: I again rise to oppose this amendment of my learned friend, Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad. The word 'connivance' includes 'knowledge'. You cannot have connivance without knowledge. It is meaningless and senseless to have both words. One is quite sufficient.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I agree with my learned friend!

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: So the honourable Minister connives with the honourable member.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (3) of clause 46 of the Bill, for the word 'knowledge' the words 'knowledge or connivance' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Shri C. Subramaniam (Madras: General): Sir, I would like to know the attitude of the honourable Minister in regard to my amendment.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I am going to oppose it. It is for the reason....

Shri C. Subramaniam: Then I am not moving it.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: I move:

"That in sub-clause (4) of clause 46 of the Bill, for the words 'or of any order', the words 'or in complying with any order' be substituted."

The more objectionable word is "of". The House will be pleased to consider a simple rule of grammar. If we use the word 'complying', it is 'complying with' and never 'complying of'. Yet this is the effect of the passage and I am sure the honourable Minister's advisers never liked into it. It is said in sub-clause (4) of clause 46:

"If any other provision of this Act is contravened, or if any default is made in complying with any requirement of this Act or of any order....."

The word 'complying' is with "any order"!

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: "Of" relates to requirement.

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: It is always an unsatisfactory way of interpreting a thing by the man who drafted it. The man who drafted it wrongly is always clear as to what he means. But the trouble is whether others will appreciate it. It is better to redraft it.

Mr. Chairman: Does not the honourable member realize that it refers to "requirement"?

Mr. Naziruddin Ahmad: All right, Sir, I am not pressing it.

Kazi Syed Karimuddin: I move:
