THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" The register shall be prepared, signed and verified by the trustee of the institution concerned and submitted by him to the Commissioner within three months or within such further period not exceeding three months as may be allowed by the Commissioner, the Area Committee or the Assistant Commissioner. That is to say, the Commissioner or the Assistant Commissioner can extend the time only by three months. This time may not be quite sufficient. Therefore, it is proposed to omit the words 'not exceeding three months'."

My hon. Friend Sri Varadachari wants to know whether the register would be published. Sub-clause (6) says—

'One copy of the register as approved by the Commissioner shall be furnished to the trustee and one to the Area Committee or the Assistant Commissioner concerned, if any.'

It will be sufficient for the purpose. The register will be there for any person to see."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is—

'That the words "not exceeding three months" in sub-clause (2) be omitted.'"

The amendment was carried.

21st November 1950]

New sub-clause (7).

SRI K. BHASHYAM :—" Sir, I move—
'That at the end of clause 27 a new sub-clause (7) be added as follows :—

" (7) In case any person or his right is prejudicially affected by such entry, he may bring a suit to establish the right which he claims." "

The register is kept as required by the statute. Suppose the property of an individual is listed as a property belonging to the religious institution. Then that party should be given the right of suit."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" I second the amendment, Sir."

MR. SPEAKER :—" Motion moved—

'That, at the end of clause 27, a new sub-clause (7) be added as follows :—

" (7) In case any person or his right is prejudicially affected by such entry, he may bring a suit to establish the right which he claims." "

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, my hon. Friend Sri Bhashyam wants in case the right of any person is prejudicially affected, a right of suit must lie. For that, we have said in clause 62 that, subject to the rights of suit or appeal, the Deputy Commissioner shall have power to inquire into and decide disputes."

SRI K. BHASHYAM :—" Sir, the Government perhaps had intended to give a right of appeal but it is not clear at all. If we look at clause 62, we shall find that it deals with questions like (a) whether an institution is a religious institution, (b) whether a trustee holds or held office as a hereditary trustee, (c) whether any property or money is a religious endowment, (d) whether any property or money is a specific endowment and so on and so forth. None of these clauses show anything relating to entries required to be made under clause 27. It may well be said that the Government do intend to allow a right of suit. But it is not at all provided for. There are a good many matters connected with such entries. A property may be claimed by a certain person which may actually belong to the institution. Such a case has necessarily to be decided by a Court after verifying facts. The right of appeal to the Court must be statutorily recognized. For instance, there are certain vahanams—made of gold and silver—intended for the temple. But what happens is this. They are actually kept in the houses of certain private individuals—Nattucottai Chettiars or any other persons—who exercise their discretion as to when they should be used and when they should not be used. There is the other side which claims that the vahanams belong to the temple and writes to the Board or tells its officers so. What should happen to this case? Again, there are other matters also. In the village temples, jewels are borrowed for adorning the deity on particular days from some of the wealthy residents of the locality and are returned after a few days when the festival is over. This is a practice obtaining for a long time and how are we to deal with disputes that may arise from such cases? There are persons who claim certain properties of the temple as theirs or who enjoy certain specific rights over them. For example, the custodian of a vahanam would allow it to be used by the temple only on a particular day when the mantakapudi may be his or that of his family or friends. On that day the deity may be taken out. Suppose, in such a case, the Board says: 'Give the vahanam to X, he wants to perform the utsavam and he will do it in a grander fashion'. Sir, it is quite possible that a difference of opinion may arise here. In fact, it did arise in a case which I had to do something with. After all, such records are not made year after year. Records are made for all time and it will be difficult, once they are made, to change the entries. There must be provision for filing a suit before the court. As soon as a record is made, as my hon. Friend, Sri N. S. Varadachari, has said, opportunity must be given to the public to know what is contained in the inventory so that they may know what are the things that have been included in it and what has been left out.

"I am sure that the Government intend to have a right of appeal and, therefore, will have no difficulty in accepting my amendment."

SRI K. R. KARANTH :—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I feel that the amendment suggested by my hon. Friend, Sri Bhashyam, has a good deal of substance in it. It is no doubt true that under clause 62 and those that follow it, suits are dealt with. Whether Sri Bhashyam's amendment should go under clause 27 or clause 62, I consider that right of suit is necessary. He has stated certain cases to explain the object of his amendment. There are other cases also which I wish to place before this House. Under clause 27, the Commissioner is the final authority to say, 'you shall enter this and you shall not enter that'. Suppose there is a case in which there is no article at all to be entered in the register as belonging to the math or the temple and yet the Commissioner says: 'you enter such and such a valuable article in it'. There must be some relief provided for the trustee or the matadhipathi to see that the order of the Commissioner is not final. This matter is of some importance. The Commissioner will order the matadhipathi to include a particular article and the matadhipathi may say, 'there is no such article'. I do not know who is to decide the issue in such cases. A thing may not exist and yet an order will be passed relating to that non-existing thing. Therefore, some right of appeal is necessary. The Government may well bring in an amendment themselves to suit Sri Bhashyam's case. Rights of suit are dealt with in clause 67. When that is taken up I myself mean giving in an amendment. But what I wish to tell the Government is that there are really hard cases which need special protection. On the information of some people, the Board may, for instance, say, 'it is understood that there is such and such an article; include it in the inventory'. The person concerned has to make an entry and he has no right of appeal against that order. Some relief must be provided for him and this may well be done under clause 67."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA :—"Sir, I suggest that the amendment may be accepted by the Government as it is or it may be withdrawn for the present if the Government give an assurance that they will make suitable provision under clause 62. Besides disputes that may arise out of entries to be made in the register, there are several other parties who are concerned with this matter. When a person makes an entry in the register, the public must have a right to bring it to the notice of the administration—with a view to correcting errors of omission and commission—before being obliged to go to a court of law. It is not easy to go to a court always as it is very expensive. It is not fair that one should take the initiative of going to a court and incur the odium of others. They must be given a chance to file objections before the Government to see that the omitted articles are entered in the register and the non-existing things that may find a place in the register are removed. If the Government give an assurance that suitable provision will be made under clause 62, I feel that my hon. Friend, Sri Bhashyam, may withdraw his amendment."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI :—"Sir, the Hon. the Minister for Law tried to assure me that the point I had raised was fully met. But let me draw his attention to one or two particulars. The object of this register is to keep an inventory of everything including dittam. The several items mentioned under this clause comprise not only the property but the routine of the administration. Now, Sir, I know—I want the Hon. the Minister's attention here—that in respect of (c) it is just possible that due to certain circumstances, the scale of dittam has been reduced. I may point out the case of the Tirupathi temple here where the daily offering to the deity has been reduced by reason of the fact that other circumstances have intervened and there is no supply necessary forthcoming for the purpose. Now, I want to know from the Hon. the Minister whether, in regard to these particulars, what obtained before these peculiar circumstances intervened would be noted in the register or the current practice would be mentioned. In fact, the latter has no place in the register and the circumstances intervening may absolutely cease to exist after, say, three or four years or five years at the most. I want to know whether in respect of particulars required under (c) those approved by usage and custom—that is, the longstanding practice of the administration—could be mentioned in the register. I know, there is a code called the Bruce Code. It is only a translation in English of the great Ramanuja's record of temple practice. The matter contained in it should not be mutilated when the registers are written up. I want the Hon. the Minister to give an assurance that whatever that is required to be mentioned in the register under item (c) will be what is observed by custom and practice for the last so many tens of years.

"The second point, I would like to make, is this. The register should be prepared by the trustee or by somebody else authorized by him and submitted to the Commissioner or the area committee. The register is asked to be made by the very person who is in charge of the temple at the time. Though there is a direction to this effect, there is no provision anywhere for other persons to be present—or for any interested parties to be present—to see that the register is properly made. Of course, I do not suggest that the register will be improperly made. But it is just possible that important omissions may occur. After it is prepared, what is it that the Government say? They say: 'The trustee shall carry out the corrections made by the Commissioner and send three copies of the register so corrected to him'. Correction can only be made on the suggestion of the area committee, I suppose. It cannot be on anybody else's suggestion. Then, the register will be furnished to the trustee and that is the final thing. I want, Sir, that, even if the area committees are made responsible for such work, even if they are made the authority to call upon the trustees to make the necessary entries, the Government should make provisions at least under the rules—not in all cases where frivolous applications may be made but only in certain important cases where persons interested or worshipping in the temples may put in applications—to permit them to scrutinize the register. The register when so demanded should be made available to them. Some people, at any rate those who are not Members of this House—may not be aware of the articles which the several devasthanams possess to-day. The articles were either presented by the Mahratta kings or by other ancient kings of Vijayanagaram. Some of the presents date back even to the Pallava regime. Once a register is written it will be very difficult to make additions to the list and make it up to date. Though corrections can be made under clause 28, what will happen to cases such as those that I shall presently place before the House? Suppose some jewel is melted. Some gold is melted. Naturally that item will have to go out and some other article made out of that gold has to be substituted in its place. Suppose there are loose diamonds. The list would say that there is such and such a number of loose diamonds. And suppose those diamonds are made into a kritam for the deity. These are very important matters and some provision has to be made to permit persons who are really interested in the temple to have access to the registers. For instance, the people next door or those who perform services in the temple may be allowed to scrutinize the register."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, the amendment seems to be very necessary as the items mentioned under clause 62 are not the same as those mentioned in the clause under discussion. For instance, an entry should be made with regard to custom. An entry should be made with regard to succession to the office of trustee. This is a very important and valuable right. The entries in the register would be more or less ex-parte opinions. There is no special provision mentioned in this clause regarding the evidentiary value of these entries though of course it is not said that the entries in the register shall be a conclusive evidence. I agree that the register is not a conclusive evidence because the entries therein are not made after public notification to all parties concerned. However, it is a statement maintained by the institution and scrutinized by the officers appointed by the Government. Therefore, it acquires a particular value. Year after year it goes on, and though the entries are not made after notice to the third parties concerned in the matter, at the end it acquires a particular value. I am not referring merely to these jewels and other articles. I am referring to the custom regarding succession. Those are rights which should not be concluded by a mere entry in the register. Therefore, it is necessary that a person who is aggrieved by an entry in this register should be given similar right, just as a person aggrieved by an entry in the municipal rent rolls or the survey register has a right if he is aggrieved to take the case to a court of law, within the time-limit prescribed by the Survey Act, and get a declaration that the entry is wrong and set right the same. It may be said that it is a record of only such things as jewels and others and the entries are not very important because they are only varying things. This year they may be there, next year they may not be there. I do not think it is not so. It is a complete record made only on one-sided information and where rights of third parties are included it should not be made final in any way or given an air of finality unless the persons aggrieved prejudicially are given an opportunity to question it in a court of law. I, therefore, submit that the amendment is very necessary."

SRI V. M. RAMASWAMI MUDALIYAR:—"Sir, I have listened to the remarks of the hon. Friends who spoke in favour of the amendment. I believe that under this clause they want to give this register an importance which the Government did not claim for the register. As a matter of fact, this register, so far as I can see, is only a catalogue or an inventory of certain things. No doubt under sub-clause (1) (a) the register should show 'the names of past and present trustees and particulars as to the custom, if any, regarding succession to the office of the trustee', etc. But in fact the register is only a list. Suppose a French traveller who might have come some centuries back has recorded in his book some impressions of the customs and manners prevailing at that time, it does not mean that it gets very important than the customs and manners now prevailing. It is simply a record, according to him, of the customs and manners that prevailed when he visited the country. I am trying to persuade my hon. Friend to realize that this is only a register or an inventory and that this is not a 'record of rights' whereby vested interests are created or divested. As a matter of fact, if it were a question of record of such valuable rights, the Government could have stated: 'It is unalterable, once the trustees, the area committee and the Commissioner after scrutiny have approved the list'. It is no such thing. The register is only an inventory in the larger sense of the term. After all the Government is as much a party where rights are concerned as any private property. If the Commissioner says that a certain property belongs to a particular temple, it is always open to the party aggrieved to go to the court and say it does not belong to the temple, though included in the list, and obtain a declaration from the court. The right is there and nobody can take away such a right. As my hon. Friend said, there are certain Acts under which after the lapse of some specified time such rights are taken away, as in the case of land rights where a survey is made and if no objection is made to the Survey Officer, within a specified time, the inclusion of the land in the register confers a right. In the case under discussion it is not so. The register referred to is nothing more than a mere inventory with regard to customs, names of trustees and so on. It is always open to the person aggrieved to claim that the custom mentioned in the register is not the proper custom and go before the public forum and show that the record is not right and proper. I submit, Sir, that these rights, so to speak, vested rights, rights regarding property, regarding succession are rights vested in the citizen of the Union and it is always open to him to agitate and go to a court of law whenever he feels these rights are affected. I see also as the Hon. Minister in charge of the Bill pointed out, that this register as approved by the Commissioner and furnished to the trustee or the Area Committee is to be put up in the notice board of the office of the Trustee or the Assistant Commissioner as the case may be for inspection by those worshippers interested in the matter. That will be ample and sufficient to safeguard the rights of the public, the worshippers, 'Kattalaidars' of the temple. After the publication of this list it is always open to anybody to write to the Commissioner to have the register corrected, or added to or delete certain of the items to which the claimant is entitled to, under clause 28. Therefore, Sir, I am unable to support the suggestion of my hon. Friend Sri Bhashyam in this matter."

SRI A. KALESWARA RAO:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, this clause makes it obligatory on the part of the trustee to prepare an inventory. He is also asked to enter many important things in the register with regard to the usages, customs and rights of certain families and individuals, etc. This register is very important as it gives a lot of information. The omission of an entry in this register of the properties of the temples, rights with regard to precedence in receiving honours, in regard to custom thus becomes such an important piece of evidence that it will be difficult for anybody to rebut. It is a case where a presumptive piece of evidence becomes a sort of a conclusive evidence. When such is the case there must be some right to those who are interested to make representations to correct the entries in the register, and we must see that the interests of the temples or the religious institutions are safeguarded and that the properties that really ought to belong to the temples are entered there and in no other and the rights of the third parties are not jeopardised by the entries in the register. Therefore, the register is a comprehensive register, a basic register as it were and when the legislature is passing this Bill, things begin afresh and new records are made of the various items and rights are created. Therefore the public generally interested in the welfare of the temple should not only have the right to put in petitions to the Commissioner or to the Board or to the Area Committee in proper time but also if they find that things are not properly done in the final stage they should have a right to go to a court of law and get a declaration from the court. It is a very valuable right. Individuals who are aggrieved cannot be shut out. Of course, there is much force in what the hon. Member Sri Ramaswami Mudaliyar has said that the third party interests are not affected by this. That is a different thing. When we have a special list and when there are certain other clauses which give the right of suit the presumption would be that there is no right of suit in regard to clauses where such words are not used and where it is merely stated that the Commissioner's orders are final. That means that no right of suit exists under this clause. In order to see that such doubts do not occur, the acceptance of my hon. Friend Sri Bhashyam's amendment is quite necessary. Therefore, I support the amendment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"I oppose the amendment for two reasons, Sir. In the first place I entirely agree with my hon. Friend Sri Ramaswami Mudaliyar that we are giving undue importance to this register as establishing any rights for anybody. Even the entries in the 'A' Register maintained in the Revenue Department are not conclusive evidence. A suit can be filed to set aside the entries in the 'A' Register. What is contained in the sub-clause is merely a direction that a register shall be kept of the properties and particulars in respect of a math or an endowment. The entries in the register cannot create any right for anybody particularly so in the case of the third party interests. It is not a record of rights at all. My hon. Friend Sri Kaleswara Rao said that when the Commissioner's orders are considered final there ought to be a right of suit. We have not stated anywhere in the clause that the orders of the Commissioner would be final. No judicial enquiry is mentioned except in sub-clause (4). But this is not an enquiry of a judicial nature and no final orders could be passed on such an enquiry. The clause simply says that a record of the properties shall be maintained. The wording used is an identical reproduction of the words in the existing Act. Where, in this Bill it has been mentioned that the orders of the Commissioner shall be final it is subject to the provision that the right of suit against the orders will lie. Under no circumstance can it be argued that an order under this clause cannot be tested in a court of law, as the entries in the register do not confer any rights. It is open to any person whose interests are prejudicially affected by the entries in the register, to file a suit. No particular promise is necessary for that. It is open to one to file a suit. No permission is necessary because there is no prevention. When there is no specific prevention to file a suit, it is clear that the orders of the Commissioner are not final and therefore the right of suit is automatically there if a right of suit is necessary at all.

"Secondly, if a particular person has a right over a particular property, he can bring it to the notice of the Commissioner under clause 62. I therefore feel that it has been covered by this clause and that no amendment is necessary.

"Hon. Sri N. S. Varadachari referred to sub-clause (c) about dittams. There is no arguments in saying that this is the final register. Clause 28 says: 'The trustee or his authorized agent shall scrutinize the entries in the register every year and submit to the Commissioner for his approval, a verified statement showing the alterations, omissions or additions required in the register.....'. There is no purpose in saying that this register is final. Any person can go through the register at any time. It specifically provides for trustees. I do not think that the Commissioner will refuse anybody to see the register. If anybody wants and if it is necessary to issue specific instructions, they may be done and any alterations or omissions or additions can be made. I therefore feel, Sir, that the amendment is not necessary."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, the contention of the Hon. Minister that it is really unnecessary is wrong. For example, the provisions of the Act are so ambiguous in their wording that I am not sure what is and what is not affected. For example, look at section 95 (1). I really point out the ambiguity in the wording and that suits will really be not coming and they will be barred.

"95. (1) No suit or other legal proceeding in respect of the administration of a religious institution, or in respect of any other matter or dispute for determining or deciding which provision is made in this Act, shall be instituted in any court of law, except under, and in conformity with, the provisions of this Act."

Sir, when we go to section 95, I will have to say something about this. Section 95 as it stands is wide in its scope. I venture to suggest that it is absolutely necessary that suits in respect of properties which are really private properties not belonging to the temple or institution or are subject to certain conditions, must be allowed. Therefore, Sir, if the Government agree that a suit can be filed, there is no harm in accepting this amendment.

"Sir, this will be much more important in regard to succession. There is no succession to a particular institution unless we know what a particular institution is and for that we have got to go deep into the records of the institution. Therefore, Sir, in my opinion the succession rule may be decided ex parte.

"Hon. Mr. V. M. Ramaswami Mudaliyar said that this register is an unimportant record. I would like to say that this is a very important register in which nearly every item is entered. It is not unimportant. What happens is this. When an article is being repeatedly shown year after year in a particular register for a number of years, it acquires a value in the eyes of the law courts. That is what I want him to note. Are we not seeing a karnam showing a revenue register and saying 'this is the register we have been keeping for a number of years' and this is accepted as such. So, you may say that a register may be of no value and it does not acquire value at all. I hope Mr. Ramaswami Mudaliyar will agree with me, that, if a false statement is being perpetuated year after year in a register like this, it is dangerous to do so, it may be the person affected does not know it at all. So, what I say is it is not unimportant. That is what I want to impress on the hon. Members of the House who argued against the amendment.

"Hon. Sri N. S. Varadachari said that the details of the dittam which were in practice previously and which are now reduced, should also be included. I think he is right and it would be better if they are also included.

"The Government say 'we agree with you, but we won't accept the amendment'. That is not the way to do it. If there are difficulties and if we point out some way to meet those difficulties, the Government should accept them. That is the reason why I move my amendment."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

'That, (a), new sub-clause (7) be added at the end of clause 27 as follows:—

"(7) In case any person or his right is prejudicially affected by such entry, he may bring a suit to establish the right which he claims." "

The amendment was lost.

Clause 27 as amended was put and carried.

Clause 28 was put and carried.

Clause 29.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—
'That clause 29 do stand part of the Bill'."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir. I beg to move—

'In sub-clause (1) after the word "religious" in line 1, insert the words "and charitable".'

The word 'charitable' must be added to this."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The Hon. Member has given two amendments. Will he move both?"

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Only one by one, Sir."

MR. SPEAKER:—"I have no objection."

[21st November 1950]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, the first amendment is out of order."

MR. SPEAKER:—"Let me hear him."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I want the words 'and charitable' to be inserted. I want the Hon. Minister also to be a little charitable. If he refers to clause 5 (3), there are certain Acts which will cease to have force in this State after this Bill comes into force:

(a) The Madras Endowments and Escheats Regulation, 1817;

(b) The Religious Endowments Act, 1863;

(c) The Charitable Endowments Act, 1890;

(d) The Charitable and Religious Trusts Act, 1920; and

(e) Sections 92 and 93 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908.

All these will cease to have effect so far as the Hindu Religious Endowment Institutions and Charities are concerned. So, the present Bill will be the entire Bible for us hereafter to deal with the religious institutions. Then, what will happen to the other charitable institutions which are not religious institutions?"

MR. SPEAKER:—"That has nothing to do with this."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"It has got some connection, Sir. The word 'religious institutions' does not include other charitable trusts at all. It is not as if there are other legislations. If this legislation confines itself to maths, temples and specific endowments, it would be a different matter. But, this legislation includes all religious institutions. So, all the existing Acts in respect of all charitable institutions and trusts will cease to have effect in this State. I understand that Clause 5 has already been passed. If so, what will happen to charitable institutions and trusts which are not covered by the definition 'religious institution'? The wording 'religious institution' covers only maths, temples and specific endowments. Therefore, unless you make some provision for other charitable trusts and endowments, we will go without law altogether. Hitherto there were 5 pieces of legislation and they will cease to have effect after we pass this Bill."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, I second it."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir. This amendment is out of order. Some clauses of this Bill when it comes into force will become applicable to the charitable endowments also. Clause 3 which we have already passed, says:

"The Government may, by notification in the Fort St. George Gazette, extend to any Hindu or Jain public charitable endowment all or any of the provisions of this Act and of any rules made thereunder and thereupon the provisions so extended shall apply to such charitable endowment as if it were a specific endowment."

[21st November 1950] [Sri K. Madhava Menon]

Provided that before issuing such a notification, the Government shall publish in the Fort St. George Gazette, a notice of their intention to do so, fix a period which shall not be less than two months from the date of publication of the notice, for the persons interested in the endowment concerned to show cause against the issue of the notification, and consider their objections, if any."

Any section can be made applicable by notification in the Fort St. George Gazette and so it is out of order."

MR. SPEAKER:—"Yes, I rule it out of order."

Clause 29 was put and carried.

Clause 30.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'That clause 30 do stand part of the Bill.'

Sub-clause (1).

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir. I beg to move—

'In sub-clause (1), delete the words "or any officer or other person deputed by the Commissioner in this behalf".'

I can understand the Commissioner getting the power to inspect all movable and immovable properties belonging to any religious institution and referring to any records, plans and other important documents. But, this power should not be given to every person on his behalf because this right of inspection is an important right. I therefore submit, Sir, that, if we are to give such power, we must give only to the highest officer who will exhibit a certain sense of responsibility in these matters."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—"Sir, I second it."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, I support it. I am not repeating myself again. The title deeds of properties belonging to the temples are confidential documents. If every person is deputed for this purpose, it may even injure the interests of the temple itself. So, it is much better if this inspection is left to the Commissioner only. It is therefore necessary."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, there are thousands of temples and maths. You cannot expect the Commissioner sitting in Madras to go and inspect all the properties from Visakhapatnam to South Kanara. It is not physically and humanly possible for the Commissioner to personally inspect all the properties. He has to depute somebody and it is necessary that this power of deputation should be retained."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—"On a point of information, Sir. I can understand the Commissioner being empowered to depute any officer to inspect all movable property, etc. But how can we authorize him to depute 'any other person' or anybody going along the street? May I know what this means?"

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, does my friend think that the Commissioner would be an irresponsible person? The Commissioner must be expected to use his sense of responsibility in deputing persons for this sort of work."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Sir, I am unable to understand this argument. We are passing a statute and cannot therefore afford to leave everything to the sense of responsibility of this or that officer and legislate in vague terms. We are not objecting to what is contained in the clause, but we cannot approve of 'any person deputed by the Commissioner' to visit any of the 80,000 temples and religious institutions and do things which may lead to costly litigation. In a matter of this kind, we should not be asked to depend on the sense of responsibility of the Commissioner. It is wrong in principle to give him such a wide discretion to depute 'any' person."

The amendment was put and lost.

Clause 30 was put and carried.

Clause 31.

MR. SPEAKER :—" The motion is—

'That clause 31 do stand part of the Bill.' "

Sub-clause (1).

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI :—" Sir, I move—

'In sub-clause (1) in line 5, after the word "Commissioner", insert the words "on the recommendation of the trustees or the Area Committee concerned".'

The clause as it stands enables the Commissioner to sanction any exchange, sale or mortgage of property belonging to any religious institution, provided that before such sanction is accorded, the particulars relating to the proposed transaction shall be published

It only means that the Commissioner can give his sanction to any sale or exchange or mortgage of any valuable temple property at his sweet will and pleasure. In my own village this power has been misused and the Commissioner has given sanction for the exchange of a very valuable property to one which does not cost even a tenth part of it. I want that there should be a safeguard. The trustee should first allow these exchanges or mortgages of valuable properties of temples. The Commissioner sitting in Madras would not know the nature of the property situated hundreds of miles away and therefore should not accord sanction for sale or exchange of his own accord. I therefore want that this recommendation should pass through the trustees of the temples or the Area Committee. Only when both of them agree should such a transaction be given effect to. If either the trustee or the Area Committee does not agree, the transaction should not go through."

SRI A. KALESWARA RAO :—" I second the amendment of Sri L. N. Gopalaswami. The reasons are very obvious. This is a very important right which the Commissioner will have to exercise and we should see to it that his decisions do not reflect his prejudices. Therefore it is necessary that the whole matter should start with the trustees and the Area Committee and finally go to the Commissioner."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, I cannot understand the need for the addition of the words 'on the recommendation of the trustees or the Area Committee concerned,' when it is the trustee that initiates the lease proposals."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" The trustee does not initiate the proceedings."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" It is possible that where there are executive officers, they may initiate proceedings. But in cases where there are no executive officers, the leases will be in the name of the trustees. Again, there may be cases where if the executive officers want a thing to be done, the trustee may object. So, all things considered, the Government have come to the conclusion that this amendment should be resisted."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI :—" My point has not been answered. I want that if the executive officer initiates such proceedings, the sanction of the trustee or the Area Committee should be obtained before the Commissioner accords permission and, if the trustee or the Area Committee initiates these moves, the trustee should be consulted by the Commissioner. In any case valuable properties should not be exchanged on the sole authority of the Commissioner on the recommendation of the executive officer on his own initiative. An instance of this kind happened in Lalgudi where on the recommendation of the executive officer land worth Rs. 10,000 per acre were permitted to be exchanged for land worth Rs. 1,000 per acre. It is to put a stop to such practices and safeguard public properties that I have suggested in this amendment that people who know the value of the properties should be given power to exercise their discretion and not the Commissioner. I request the Hon. Minister to appreciate my viewpoint and agree to this amendment which aims at securing the temple properties against exchange at the whims and fancies of the Commissioner without the sanction of the trustee or the Area Committee."

The amendment (of Sri Gopalaswami) was put and lost.

SRI K. T. KOSATRAM :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I move—

'Insert the following as sub-clause 31 (1) (b), renumbering existing sub-clause (1) as sub-clause (1) (a) :—

"(b) In the case of cultivable lands the Government shall form co-operative societies of the actual tillers of the lands and lease out the same to the societies so formed on a perpetual lease basis."

[Sri K. T. Kosalram] [21st November 1950]

SRI V. I. MUNISWAMI PILLAY:—"Mr. Speaker, I heartily second the amendment moved by hon. Sri Kosalram. I have personal knowledge of the fact that most of the lands that belong to temples have been leased out to intermediaries. These people have not given them to the tillers of the soil, but have sub-leased them and this sort of sub-letting has gone on indefinitely. This amendment is a very useful one, in that it will give an economic position to the tillers of the land. The applications of these people for lands on lease to the various trustees are now mercilessly turned down. An amendment of this kind should be made to this clause in the Bill before us. I support the amendment."

SRI K. R. KARANTH:—"Sir, I am rather surprised at the support which the amendment has received from hon. Sri Muniswami Pillay. One can understand and sympathize with him when he says that the temple lands are being auctioned in Tamil Nad and that middlemen are coming in and making a profit. But the remedy for it must be found in a land tenure legislation. The lands belong to the temple. I can understand Mr. Kosalram when he says that in regard to cultivable lands the Government should form co-operative societies. The Government have got ample funds and they can spend upon anything. But how can the Government lease out the lands to societies so formed? The lands are the property of the temple. Unless the Government confiscate the lands, what right have they to lease them out to others? The right of leasing belongs to the temple trustees, whoever they are. How can the Government come on the scene unless they take possession of the lands under some provision? Sir, this may be nice propaganda outside and but it is out of place here."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The Hon. Minister will now reply."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"I want to say a few words, Sir."

MR. SPEAKER:—"I have allowed enough discussion on this amendment. The Hon. Minister will now reply."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I am sorry I cannot accept the amendment. An identical amendment was moved by hon. Sri Kosalram in the Select Committee and when the difficulties of attaining the object he has in view were pointed out to him, he did not press it."

MR. SPEAKER:—"He is not going to press it now also!"

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Apart from that, as hon. Sri K. R. Karanth has pointed out, the Government have no right to lease out other people's lands. With regard to the formation of co-operative societies, with the best will in the world, the Government may not be able to form these societies. It is for the people themselves to decide on forming co-operative societies. With regard to leasing out the lands on a perpetual lease basis, I entirely agree with the principle underlying it, not only with regard to these lands but with regard to every available land. If it is possible to cultivate every piece of available land on a co-operative basis in the best interests of the country, it will be good. But it is not practicable and it is not possible to do anything for it in the present Bill. So I request the hon. Member Sri Kosalram to withdraw the amendment."

SRI K. T. KOSALRAM:—"I beg leave to withdraw the amendment."

The amendment was, by leave, withdrawn.

MR. SPEAKER:—"I wish to remind the House that, as suggested by hon. Sri K. Bhashyam and other hon. Members, we may sit till 7 p.m. to-day."

SRI K. R. KARANTH:—"We shall wait and see what progress we make up to 5 p.m. and then decide, Sir."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"On such an important amendment as that of hon. Sri Kosalram, I wanted to say a few words. If I am not allowed to say a few words on such matters, how can we

[21st November 1950]

MR. SPEAKER:—"In my opinion there has been sufficient discussion on the amendment. It is entirely for the Chair to decide whether there has been sufficient discussion of a matter; and if the Chair thinks that sufficient discussion has been allowed, it is final."

The House then rose for lunch and to reassemble at 2-30 p.m.

(After lunch—2-30 p.m.)

Clause 31.

Sub-clause (3).

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"Sir, I move the following amendment:—

"In sub-clause (3), add at the end the words "and published by tom-tom in the village or villages where the property is situate and affixed in the notice board of the temple."

Sir, we are dealing with very valuable properties of temples that are going to be given over in sale, exchange or otherwise. The Government themselves are anxious that the order of the Commissioner should be published and anybody who has got any objection to the transaction should be heard. But the method of publication is this:

A copy of the order made by the Commissioner under this section shall be communicated to the Government and to the trustee.

I want to add, Sir, that this communication should be made not only to the trustee and the Government, but the order should be published locally by tom-tom in the places where the properties are situate and, it should be affixed to the notice-board of the temple so that any person who comes to know that these temple properties have been trifled with or exchanged for less valuable properties may make an application to modify or set aside the order as provided for in sub-clause (4) which says that the trustee or any person having interest may within three months from the date of receipt of the order by the trustee, appeal to the Government to modify or set aside an order under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2). Otherwise how is 'any person having interest' to know of the order if it is a matter only between the trustee, the Government and the Commissioner and if it is all found only in the files of these persons? I therefore want that these things should be published not only in the place where the temple is situate but also in the places where the property is situate so that the people around may know how the valuable properties of the religious institution are going to be dealt with."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, I second the amendment. I have always been saying that the register is a very important document prepared for the safety of the temple property. If the register is to be prepared by the trustee, if at least he does it in the presence of two respectable persons in the village, there will be certainty or guarantee that it will be all right. But if it is merely prepared by the trustee and sent to the Commissioner or the Assistant Commissioner or the Area Committee, there must be somebody to check it. That is why it is necessary to give an opportunity to persons having interest to see that the thing is properly done."

SRI K. VARADACHARI:—"Sir, I support the amendment. If the Government think that it is not necessary to add all the words in Sri Gopalaswami's amendment, I think it would be enough if we say that 'a copy of the order made by the Commissioner under this section shall be communicated to the Government and to the trustee and shall be published in such manner as may be prescribed'. The last few words are also found in the proviso to sub-clause (1)."

SRI A. KALESWARA RAO:—"Sir, I also support the amendment of Sri L. N. Gopalaswami. Publication of the order is quite necessary. In a temple in a village all the people of the village are interested and in order that things may not go on in secret, for party purposes and all that, it is necessary that there should be as wide publication as possible of not only the things entered in the register but also particularly of the exchanges and other dealings with the immovable properties of the temple."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I agree with the principle mentioned by my hon. Friend. As a matter of fact there is not so much danger as is feared, because the proviso to sub-clause (1) says:

"Provided that before such sanction is accorded, the particulars relating to the proposed transaction shall be published in such manner as may be prescribed"

I have, therefore, no objection to the addition of the words 'and shall be published in such manner as may be prescribed' at the end of sub-clause (3) as suggested by Sri K. Varadachari. We need not specify the nature of the publication. It may be by tom-tom or by affixing notices or both. If my hon. Friend the mover of the amendment will be satisfied I have no objection to the addition of the words mentioned."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"I quite agree to the amendment proposed, Sir."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The amendment is—

'At the end of sub-clause (3) of clause 31, add the following words: "and shall be published in such manner as may be prescribed".'

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, while I agree with the amendment, I have to point out that in several cases where the property happens to be merely land, the rules provide that the order shall be affixed on some spot on the land. The land does not have a spot where the notice could be affixed. I am not speaking of the amendment itself; I am only speaking of the general implications of the provision if it is accepted by the Government. I wish to point out that in framing the rules, the Government should take care to see that this publication is made not only in the temple and in the village where the temple is situated but also in the place where the land is situate, wherever the land has got anything on which the notice could be put up prominently. Otherwise, if there is only a plain piece of land, there will be difficulty and it has happened in several cases, where exchanges and sales of sites in municipal areas have taken place."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, the hon. Member Sri Gopalaswami wanted publication of the notice by tom-tom. This will certainly be included in the rules."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is—

'That at the end of sub-clause (3) of clause 31, the words "and shall be published in such manner as may be prescribed" shall be inserted.'"

The amendment was carried.

Sub-clause (4).

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI :—" Sir, I move the following amendment :—

'In sub-clause (4), after the word "trustee" in line 3, add the words "and publication thereof as per sub-section (3) "'.

This is only a consequential amendment and I hope there will be no difficulty about accepting it."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" I second it."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sub-clause (4) only gives permission to the trustee to file an appeal to the Government. It is only a permissive clause. Why should the permission be published? "

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI :—" 'Any person having interest' also may file an appeal. I want to provide that the time for filing an appeal should begin from the date of the receipt of the order by the trustee in the case of the trustee and from the date of publication in the case of 'any person having an interest'."

SRI V. M. RAMASWAMI MUDALIYAR :—" The sub-clause says:

'The trustee or any person having interest may within three months from the date of the receipt of the order by the trustee, appeal to the Government

How is 'any person having interest' to know when the trustee received the order? "

21st November 1950]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" I suggest then, that instead of the words used in the amendment of Sri Gopalaswami the following words may be inserted namely, 'or of its publication under sub-section (3) as the case may be'."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI :—" I accept the amendment, Sir."

MR. SPEAKER :—" Amendment moved—

'In sub-clause (4), after the word "trustee" in line 3, add the words "or of its publication under sub-section (3) as the case may be'."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" To whom does the period apply, Sir? To the trustee or to the person having interest? "

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" To the trustee, it is three months from the receipt of the order by him and to the person having interest it is three months from the date of the publication. There are the words 'as the case may be'."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The amendment of Sri L. N. Gopalaswami as now proposed will read as follows :—

'In sub-clause (4) after the words "trustee" in line 3, insert the words "or of its publication under sub-section (3) as the case may be'."

The amendment was put and carried.

New sub-clause (6).

SRI K. BHASHYAM :—" Sir, I move—

'Add at the end, a new sub-clause (6) as follows :—

"(6) Nothing contained in this section shall apply to exchange, sale, mortgage or lease executed before the commencement of this Act, which by law or usage or custom is binding on the institution or which by the law of limitation or otherwise has become binding on the institution."

This is intended for the purpose of saving properties which have been alienated or sold away by previous trustees long ago. The clause as it is wide in its terms and nullifies all transactions which have been made long before the commencement of this Act. According to the law as it stands, if the trustee makes any exchange, sale or mortgage of property for purposes connected with the necessities of the institution they have been held to be good, that is to say, if in the course of administration, he finds it necessary that a certain property should be sold or leased for a long time and that otherwise he cannot make any money out of it, in such cases the transactions have been held to be valid and binding on the trust itself. Again, when a trustee has sold away the property and the person has been in possession of it for over twelve years, he has acquired title over it by virtue of the law of limitation. Section 31 (1) says:

‘Any exchange, sale or mortgage and any lease for a term exceeding five years of any immovable property belonging to, or given or endowed for the purposes of, any religious institution shall be null and void unless it is sanctioned by the Commissioner as being necessary or beneficial to the institution.’

It applies only to cases that are to come hereafter. But in the case of transactions that have taken place long ago, where the transferee has been in possession either because he has been assured that the necessities of the case required such transfer, and he has paid the sale amount to the trustee or because he has been in possession for a period of twelve years, I am anxious that this provision should not affect such transactions. They are all third-party transactions; and if they have acquired a title to the property, I submit this clause should not apply to them. Already, the Government have recognized that in certain cases, where a person had become the owner of the property prior to the commencement of this Act, these provisions shall not apply. For instance, clause 6 (14), proviso, says:

There, the Government have recognized the justice of excluding it from the property belonging to the endowment. My question is: are you going to say that transactions which have taken place long ago and transactions whereby persons have become owners of the property long ago are going to be null and void? So far as the future is concerned, I quite agree with the provision that the Commissioner's sanction is necessary for the exchange, sale or mortgage of the property. But my submission is that so far as the past transactions are concerned, they must be definitely excluded and should not in any way be affected by this clause. That is my amendment, Sir.”

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—“I second it.”

SRI A. KALESWARA RAO:—“Sir, this is a very important clause, and the amendment is very necessary for the reason that it refers to properties already vested in third parties. The trustees might have alienated properties to some strangers who were third-parties long ago and the third parties might have acquired absolute title over them. Of course if the title is not there already established, then the Commissioner or the Executive Officer or whoever may be empowered under the Act, may file a suit that the alienation is void for so many reasons, such as made in collusion, not made for beneficial purposes, etc. But to say, as you do here, that all alienations become ipso facto void, whatever may be the period of alienation is wrong; it affects third parties and therefore such a provision should not be in a Bill like this.”

SRI V. M. RAMASWAMI MUDALIYAR:—“Sir, my complaint is just the other way; under the rules of construction unless made specially retrospective, all legislation is only prospective. They cannot apply to past transactions, unless they are made to apply to them, in so many clear words. Clause 31 (1) as it is supports that position. It says:

This provision cannot have effect from a date prior to that on which the Act comes into force. As a matter of fact, I know that during the time between the date of introduction of this Bill and now, some matadhipathis and heads of religious institutions have taken advantage of the transition period and entered into many transactions of a doubtful nature and alienated the properties to some one or other. My complaint is that there is no provision here to cover such cases. So far as interest acquired by the law of limitation is concerned, there can be no going back, I agree; but in the cases such as I have referred to where during the past about twenty months, transactions of a doubtful nature have taken place, I submit this clause does not give the Commissioner or any other authority to scrutinize them. I want to know how Government are going to rectify this defect. Therefore, my complaint is, Sir, that this is not wide enough to cover all transactions because under the ordinary rules of construction, legislation can only be prospective and not retrospective unless specifically stated to be so, and I should therefore like to know the intention of Government in this matter.”

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—“Perhaps the reason is that if it is made to cover prior transactions there may be created a lot of discontent and trouble. I am in favour of stating that this provision should apply to all transactions which have been entered into within the past two or three years ever since this Bill has been in the air, so that these people might not succeed in defrauding the Government or the temples of their just dues. This Bill has been in the air for the past nearly three years; people knew that some reform was attempted to be brought in and it was pretty certain that the whole law was going to be changed. I know there have been cases where trustees have taken advantage to enter into spurious transactions. I know of a case in the Nellore district where land of about 250 acres was given away for Rs. 1,000 to a person who took it benami; but suddenly anticipating this Bill and thinking that the Government would sit tight over him, he quietly sent for the previous lessees and gave a registered lease deed for Rs. 3,000. But on petitions filed by several people, Government went into the question, cleverly sent for the lessees and managed things in such a way that they agreed to give away the land. When the property was re-auctioned, it brought in Rs. 8,000—I am referring to the Meykottai affair. The land was fetching about Rs. 1,000 for the past nearly fifty years, but all of a sudden it went up to Rs. 8,000, because Government were on the alert and interfered at the instance of people who had the temple's interests at heart. Such things do happen and have happened. I do not want that Government should bind themselves to something by which these defrauders can take advantage. As it is, clause 31 does not provide for such contingencies; it only says that future transactions shall be sanctioned by the Commissioner. It is deplorable that the Government have not made ample provision for covering transactions that have been entered into during the past three years. Some such provision must now be made."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" I cannot accept this amendment, Sir, for various reasons. The amendment says :

' Nothing contained in this section shall apply to exchange, sale, mortgage or lease executed before the commencement of this Act, which by law or usage or custom

What law my friend means is not clear; it is so vague here. Apart from being vague, I may say the very idea of the Government is that notwithstanding usage or custom, no property should be misappropriated, and if there is a law or custom allowing that, this clause must apply. The idea of the Government is that even if there is a custom or usage allowing the taking away of trust property and giving it to somebody else, that custom is bad and should not be allowed to continue. Again, Mr. Bhashyam's amendment says ' before the commencement of this Act ', i.e., that it shall not apply to transactions entered into before the commencement of the Act. That will go against the existing section 76. The present provision in the Bill is an exact reproduction of the existing section 76 which says :

' No exchange, sale or mortgage and no lease for a term exceeding five years of any immovable property belonging to any math or temple shall be valid or operative unless it is necessary or beneficial to the math or temple and is sanctioned by the Board in the case of maths and excepted temples, and by the committee in the case of other temples.'

So, all such things are invalid even according to the present Act. Mr. Bhashyam, it appears, wants to make these things valid now by his amendment. He says : " before the commencement of this Act ". When there is already a law prohibiting that, we cannot take it away. These provisos to clause 31 were not there in the original Bill, but they were introduced in the Select Committee, so that we can safeguard the temple properties as much as possible. So, either on its merits or having regard to the existing law, I am sorry, Sir, I cannot agree to accept Mr. Bhashyam's amendment."

SRI K. BHASHYAM :—" I am afraid, Sir, there has been misconception as to what my amendment implies. My amendment only tries to save from the operation of this clause such transactions which were allowed by law or usage or custom and were binding on the institutions. The Hon. Minister referred to section 76 of the existing Act; but it does not mean that I want section 76 to be taken away altogether. If there is any transaction which is covered by section 76 of the Act, then my amendment will not have any effect at all. I am careful enough to say ' Before the commencement of the Act ' because I know there are institutions which have not yet been taken over by the Board. If in such cases, the trustee for the purpose of the necessity of the institution leased out the property, what is to become of that? If you say that section 76 of the present Act applies, I say there are cases where the Board has not taken possession of the institutions. That is why I say, while giving effect to the provisions of section 76 of the existing Act, let there be this additional provision which will safeguard the interests of third parties in cases which have been mentioned by me. Of course, some questions were raised as to whether we are going to give retrospective effect or not. It is a matter neither for me, nor for Mr. Ramaswami Mudaliyar to be definite about and it is for the court to say whether any prior transaction shall apply to this or not. The section as it is worded, does not in terms refer to transactions made before the commencement of the Act. Therefore, I would rather be safe and make some provision as not to give it retrospective effect. As I said, I only want those transactions which are binding on the institution by custom or law or usage to be saved. For instance, in South Kanara there is no question of auctioning out leases. I think that there are certain kinds of tenants who are continued year after year and you cannot change the tenants at all. Such cases are there and therefore it depends upon the custom obtaining in a particular locality. Then take the case of kanams. Twelve years leases there are. Suppose the kanams are for not more than five years. What is to be done in respect of those transactions? There are also mixed transactions; kanam and also lease. In all such cases, what I want is, that these things should be in conformity with usage or custom of the place. If it is expected it is not going to affect honest and bona fide persons selling for the benefit of the institution and not cases of breach of trust or alienation of property with selfish or personal benefit of the trustee I can understand."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" My answer is, Government do not want anything more to be saved than what is exactly saved under section 76 of the existing Act. I do not accept the amendment."

The amendment was put and lost.

Clause 31, as amended, was put and carried.

Clause 32.

MR. SPEAKER :—" The motion is—

' That clause 32 do stand part of the Bill.' "

[21st November 1950]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, I move the following amendment :—

' For clause 32, substitute the following clause :—

" 32. (1) The trustee of a religious institution may, out of the funds in his charge, after making adequate provision for the purposes referred to in section 75, sub-section (2), incur expenditure—

(a) on arrangements for securing the health, safety or convenience of disciples, pilgrims or worshippers resorting to the institution; and

(b) for the training of archakas, adhyapakas, vedaparayanikas and othuvans.

Sir, it was thought that the original expression and the amendment made by the Select Committee, namely, 'the trustee may out of the funds in his charge, after satisfying adequately the purposes of the institution, incur expenditure' etc., might be objected to as being vague. So, in order to avoid this difficulty, it is proposed to specifically refer to those purposes as are mentioned in clause 75 and also make it clear by adding 'for the training of archakas, adhyapakas, vedaparayanikas and othuvans', in this clause. As I said, Sir, it is with a view to avoid any vagueness this amendment is proposed."

SRI K. BHASHYAM :—" I am not moving my amendment for the deletion of the word 'disciple' in sub-clause (1). But, I am moving the following amendment of which I have given notice, namely :—

' For the words "referred to in section 75, sub-section (2)" of the Government amendment, substitute the words "for all purposes relating to the institutions".'

Sir, the Select Committee has agreed with my view. That is, before the surplus is discovered for the purpose of utilising it for the various purposes mentioned in section 64 you must satisfy all the adequate requirements of the institution. What the Government now say is, the amendment originally proposed was so vague and so they want to be more specific. What is meant by saying more specific? After providing for the things mentioned in the budget, you must take all the rest as surplus for the purpose of being utilised for various purposes. I do not want such a thing to be done. After all, the surplus belongs to the institution. It is very important to see that this surplus is not utilised for a number of purposes which are not really connected with the institution. Perhaps the Government have in view the utilization of the surplus of one institution for other institutions or for other good objects. I want, the words 'any adequate purposes of the institution,' to be retained. The budget provides only for some things, but it does not say, 'provide for a reserve fund or other unforeseen contingencies. For instance they have got to provide for repairs, it is not concerned with new constructions. Suppose, for any reason, the whole building comes down. Or, a new gopuram may be put up altogether; or a pious devotee wants to give Rs. 50,000 and wants another Rs. 50,000 from the temple for the purpose of putting up a mandapam? In such cases, the budget does not say anything but you take all the surplus over. I say it ought not to be so, but the budget must be elastic. The budget as provided in the present case is not elastic and it is so narrow and indefinite. Once the surplus is taken over, there is nothing left. We object to the Cypres doctrine altogether. For it is left only to the Commissioner or the Government and not to the courts or the denominations concerned or to the shishyas as to which objects the surplus should be spent. Though the Government may like to spend it for very good objects like schools, colleges, establishment of dispensaries and so on, I say they ought not to be given power that the surplus of religious endowments left over should be utilized for purposes mentioned in section 64. I would therefore like hon. Members to consider whether they are going to allow this or not."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Sir, I second the amendment. The question of surplus has to be discussed again for another reason than what Mr. Bhashyam has said. The nature of the surplus, the concept of the surplus and the power of utilization of the surplus will have to be discussed again when we come to clause 64. Neither under this clause 32, nor under clause 64 the court has got power to go into the utilization of the surplus. By some other section, even if there is a scheme by a court, such scheme also shall be set aside by the provisions of this Bill. I therefore, submit that the question of surplus need not have been dealt with here at all and we could have more conveniently dealt with it under clause 64. When once the section is taken up here, unless the Government are prepared to drop it here and take all the surplus under clause 64, I think I must second Mr. Bhashyam's amendment. It is very necessary to ascertain what is 'surplus' and it is not so easy. It is made year by year and these are permanent institutions. Each year the trustees may change and again they are not acting on their own responsibilities. Sub-clause (2) brings them under the thumb or the heel of the officers concerned. I want to add also another reason. I can understand it to some extent if the trustees are burdened with any responsibility and take the consequences of such responsibilities. But, they come under the officers. I therefore submit there is greater reason why we should accept the amendment moved by Mr. Bhashyam."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, the words 'after satisfying adequately for the purposes of the institution' practically nullify section 75 (2) altogether. Section 75 (2) says :

'(1) The trustee of every religious institution shall, before the end of March in each year, submit, in such form as may be fixed by the Commissioner, a budget showing the probable receipts and disbursements of the institution during the following fasli year—

(a) to the Area Committee if the institution is subject to the jurisdiction of such a Committee ; and

(b) to the Commissioner in other cases.

(2) Every such budget shall make adequate provision for—

(a) the dittam or scale of expenditure for the time being in force,

(b) the due discharge of all liabilities binding on the institution,

(c) the repair and renovation of the buildings connected with the institution, the provision made under this clause not being less than ten per centum of its income in the case of an institution assessed to the contribution under section 81 for the previous fasli year on an income not exceeding three thousand rupees and not being less than twenty-five per centum of its income or ten per centum of its income up to three thousand rupees and the whole of the excess of its income over that amount whichever is less in the case of any other institution.

Provided that any institution the income of which does not exceed or does not sufficiently exceed the expenditure referred to in clauses (a) and (b) may be exempted by the Commissioner, in whole or in part as the case may be, from the requirement of this clause ;

(d) the maintenance of a working balance.'

" So, Sir, all the necessary available expenditure has been defined in section 75 (2). When that is so, to simply say 'after satisfying adequately the purposes of the institution' will be very vague. Moreover, any expenditure may be said to be for the purpose of satisfying adequately the purposes of the institution. The Government have made adequate provision for the purposes referred to in section 75. In sub-clauses (a) and (b) of clause 32, we have also provided for arrangements for securing health, safety or convenience of disciples, pilgrims or worshippers and also for the training of archakas, adhyapakas, vedaparayanikas and othuvans. That is, Sir, we do not want to put anything vague so that any expenditure can be said to be for the purposes of the institution. That is the idea with which this amendment has been proposed. Since the purpose has to be defined here regarding the surplus, it has been provided here, so that it may not be said afterwards that that is not the purpose or this is not the purpose and that a dispute might arise. In order that such vagueness should not be there, it has been put in here and that is also the object with which hon. Mr. Bhashyam wants to bring back the provisions of the original clause. So, Sir, the amendment of my hon. Friend cannot be accepted."

SRI K. BHASHYAM :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I do not understand the obstinacy of the Government. I have raised a specific point as to what is to be done in case a devotee offers Rs. 50,000 for the temple for the construction of a mantapam for the general purposes of the institution, the other half of Rs. 50,000 coming from the temple funds. There is provision for repair and renovation under clause 75, but there is no provision for new construction at all; if such a situation arises, they cannot under the scheme of the budget laid down do anything. So, Sir, the clause as it stood 'making adequate provision for the purposes of the institution' is all right. Having specified certain purposes under clause 75 for certain items of expenditure the thing not being elastic, you will find it very difficult, if not impossible to put through various things that may crop up now and then. I am anxious that there should be a surplus while the Government are equally anxious, but my purpose is that the purposes of the institution, the like of which I have mentioned, must really be met. In that connexion, I would like a definite answer from the Hon. Minister as to how there is a chance of the thing being put through if an offer is made by a worshipper for a donation of Rs. 50,000, the other half of Rs. 50,000 being met by the temple. The Select Committee said that the general purposes of the institution must be provided for. The original section was quite all right. It was elastic and gave a little latitude for the trustee and also to the Commissioner regarding the utilization of the funds of the temple for the benefit and glorification of the temple. Now, his hands are tied and he cannot do anything more than what is laid down in clause 75. I suggest that the Government may think over the matter and come to a decision."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I do not see how in the case put forward by my hon. Friend Sri Bhashyam there can be any difficulty and how it will be impossible for the temple to come forward with Rs. 50,000 from its funds when an equal amount is donated for some purpose by Sri Bhashyam or some other devotee. Clause 75 (2) says that the budget shall make provision for certain purposes and it does not at all say that it shall not make a provision for anything else. In other matters, if they make a provision and if it is approved by the Commissioner, certainly it can be done. Provision for dittam, repairs and renovations and the discharge of liabilities binding on the institution have all been made obligatory but there is nothing to prevent the case mentioned by hon. Friend being taken up. Provision may be made for it in the budget; it is not prevented."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is that—

'For the words "referred to in section 75, sub-section (2)" of the Government amendment, substitute "for the purposes relating to the religious institution".'

The amendment was lost.

Sub-clause (2).

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move that—'Sub-clause (2) of clause 32 shall be omitted.'

It is very necessary, Sir, and I have indicated the reasons while seconding the amendment moved by my hon. Friend Sri Bhashyam. Here, Sir, we are coming to the fundamental principles of the management of the religious institution and once again the Government will have to say which is the body of persons to administer the religious institution; the trustees have been recognized for some purposes and my point is that I want them to be recognized for every purpose. They may be removed by a proper proceedings before a tribunal but so long as they remain the trustees representing the particular denominations in charge of the religious institutions, they should have full responsibility to do what they like and should take the consequences and they should not be interfered in the discharge of their duties by officers every now and then in the name of superior authority or control or general superintendence. The argument that we can sustain the intra vires nature of the Bill by mentioning that trustees are given ample powers with regard to the full range of their activities, will not hold good in the face of sub-clause (2) of clause 32. In sub-clause (1) you have given them certain powers and they are given initiative to do certain things and to that extent it is all right. But in sub-clause (2), the Government have put the Commissioner over their heads and he can issue general instructions or special instructions and not only that, there is the Area Committee which is not an elected committee but a committee appointed by the Government and they can also give such instructions in the case of institutions which are under their jurisdiction. Therefore, Sir, I wish to point out that the responsibility of the trustees is taken away and their powers are taken away; it is not the trustees that exercises powers but it is the Commissioner or the Area Committee that exercises all their functions carry on the management under the Bill. If the Government say that they want the trustees to discharge their responsibilities and take the consequences, it is absolutely necessary that this overriding power of the Commissioner should be taken away. Therefore, Sir, I move for the deletion of the sub-clause."

SRI K. R. KARANTH :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to second the amendment. The Hon. Minister was pleased to state that they should keep proper accounts and they should be audited. It is one thing to say that trustees and matadhipathis should not misappropriate the funds of the institution and if they do so, they would be brought to book. I have not the least objection to sub-clause (1) in which it is said that after providing for the purposes of the institution so much, they shall incur expenditure for certain other purposes. But sub-clause (2) is really a mischievous clause according to which the trustees and matadhipathis are reduced to mere non-entities and for every item of expenditure the Commissioner or his Inspector can go and tell them not to spend money on certain things but on something else. That sort of thing takes away all initiative from them. If my hon. Friends want an instance I will give a very simple case which will go to what extent things can go. It occurred in 1945 and so nobody at the present time need be hurt by what I am going to say. One Swamiji of Udipi was asked to state whether the sanction of the Board had been obtained by him to present a japamala to a devotee. It is common knowledge that a japamala ordinarily costs from Rs. 1-8-0, Rs. 2 or Rs. 3 and it may not exceed Rs. 10 at the most. Being a Madwa institution, they prize it very much especially tulsi malas. In this particular case, I understand it was a doctor who had treated the Swamiji for asthma for nearly one year without taking even a single pie and in return for this he gave a japamala to him. The order was issued to him and the order of the Board is dated 1st October 1945. That is the extent to which interference with their actions can go. As I said, Sir, sub-clause (1) is all right but to say under sub-clause (2) that in incurring expenditure the trustees shall be guided by the 'general or special instructions which may be given by the Commissioner' is to reduce the whole thing to an absurdity and to dictate at every step that such and such a thing should be done and such and such an expenditure shall not be incurred goes against the fundamental rights accorded under Articles 25 and 26 of the Constitution. I say, Sir, for Heaven's sake remove this sort of interference. By all means if a trustee commits breach of trust, punish him; I have the least mercy for such people. But do not go on dictating to them at every step; that is not fair nor proper."

SRI K. VARADACHARI :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I am obliged to support this amendment because what is given by one hand under sub-clause (1) is taken away by the other under sub-clause (2). Apart from infringing the Constitution, a positive right like this vested in the Commissioner will cause too many pin-pricks in the course of the administration of religious institutions. While on the one hand the Government are very liberal in saying that they should spend so much of the surplus amount for beneficial purposes under sub-clause (1), the power is entrusted to the Commissioner to say: So much shall be spent for this purpose and not for that purpose and I am going to give you special and general instructions how it should be spent on health, safety and convenience of pilgrims, whether to spend on the one rather than on the other. Not only would it be in the nature of pin-pricks to the trustees but there would be delay in regard to the carrying out of useful purposes by the trustees under sub-clause (1). Why should the Government unnecessarily load themselves with a responsibility of this kind? A general provision that any illegal act would be taken serious notice of will be quite all right. To have framed sub-clause (1) of clause 32 in a very wise manner but to take it away by the subsequent clause is a very unwise step. I submit it is a very wrong thing to do. I submit nothing is lost by omitting it. The power of the Government to catch hold of offending trustees will always be there and this sub-clause is not going to add to that power or to minimise that power. So, I suggest that it might be omitted."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I would urge on the Government to delete sub-clause (2) in its entirety; if not, it might be made applicable to (a) and not to (b). My reasons are these, Sir. The Act contemplates that every temple or religious institution shall have a budget and it will provide for the running expenses and also for renovation of the buildings if necessary. All the main purposes of the institution will first be served and then there are subsidiary purposes. I submit there should be a sphere of activity earmarked for the trustees as such without interference by the Commissioner. We should not assume that all trustees are bad people and liable to do wrong things. In fact, our assumption ought to be that trustees would be men of responsibility and would act in a reasonable manner and would be prudent enough to spend money only on purposes closely allied to the main objects of the institution. Now Sir, if we take away by sub-clause (2) what is given by sub-clause (1)—for that is what it amounts to in effect, for look at the wording of the sub-clause which runs thus :

—this would lead to a lot of misunderstanding and confusion in the administration of all temples and religious institutions. Sir, the trustee should not merely be expected to act as a mere trustee, but should be given a certain amount of initiative, and he should be expected to command the respect of the worshipping public. Of course, in selecting trustees, great care will have to be taken, provided they are not trustees, who are called hereditary trustees; they have to be men of proper disposition and proper understanding of things. We should not at once tell them that they will frame budgets and submit them to the Commissioner, and afterwards they would not be given even an iota of discretion in their discharge of duties.

“Now, what is clause 32? It takes precedence over clause 64, which is based on the Cypres doctrine. Clause 64 says, where there is a surplus of funds after meeting the regular expenditure of the religious institutions, it should be appropriated to all or any of certain purposes, which are stated in that clause. So this clause 32 is a provision which applies even before the surplus is declared. Under clause 75 the trustee is expected to provide for all expenditure which he considers necessary to incur in connexion with the institution or for allied purposes or for purposes akin to the purpose of the religious institution to which the trust applies.

“Then, Sir, one more point. If we apply the principle of sub-clause (2) to the provision contained in sub-clause (1) (b), that is, for the training of archakas, adhyapakas, vedaparayanikas—I welcome this matter of detail—I ask, what knowledge will the Commissioner have in these religious observances. Often Commissioners do not know Sanskrit, they are not well-versed scholars even in Tamil. Of course they are men of reputation; they are men who are expected to rule very properly in regard to secular matters. And so it is rightly expected of them not to interfere in matters solely pertaining to religious observances as otherwise they would cause great disappointment to the worshippers in general. In fact it is better to allow the trustee complete freedom in this, even if he commits mistakes; for if he commits mistakes he will have to face the fire of public criticism. So it is better to do that than allow the Commissioner power to do a thing, in which he is liable to commit mistakes, which he never intends to commit. So, if we retain the sub-clause (2) in clause 32, we would be putting him in an unfortunate position. So, I tell Government through you, Sir, that they are suggesting by sub-clause (2) to carve out a certain amount of discretion over a sphere of activity, from the trustee which he should rightly have, even though he may sometimes do wrong there. If he does wrong he will be taken to task; that risk is there. In respect of the sphere contemplated in sub-clause (b) the Commissioner is a perfect stranger, an absolute stranger and so he should not be given any power in that sphere. So I would request Government to drop this sub-clause (2) to clause 32; or if they are not prepared to do that at least it should not be made to apply to sub-clause (1) (b).”

SRI V. M. RAMASWAMI MUDALIYAR:—“Sir, clause 32 deals with the authority of a trustee to incur certain expenditure and it has been rightly linked with clause 75 which deals with budget, accounts and audit. If a trustee has to deal with trust money, there must be some idea as to how that money is to be spent, and that is dealt with in clause 75, which deals with minimum necessary expenditure to be spent in connexion with the trust, like dittam, due discharge of liability, repair and renovation of buildings and the maintenance of a working balance. Now, after incurring such expenditure, the surplus left may be very great, probably much greater in some institutions. I know in some cases it will run to a large figure. So there must be some control as to how this surplus money should be spent. In sub-clause (1) of this clause 32, it is said as to how this surplus money should be spent; and in sub-clause (2) it is said that in incurring such expenditure the trustee shall be guided by the general or special instructions of the Commissioner or the Area Committee. So, if the amendment to delete this sub-clause (2) is agreed to there will be no check by the Commissioner over the expenditure of the surplus money that stands after meeting the expenditure mentioned in clause 75. So some check is necessary over the expenditure contemplated in sub-clause (1); that thing sub-clause (2) provides.

“Sir, if anyone reads the clauses together he will understand what I mean. Clause 32 (1) states that after making adequate provision for the purposes referred to in clause 75 (2), the trustee may incur expenditure on other things such as measures of health, safety or convenience of disciples, for the training of archakas, adhyapakas, vedaparayanikas and othuvans. I must here congratulate Government for introducing a provision for incurring expenditure on the training of archakas, etc. Now if sub-clause (2) is deleted there will be no check over the expenditure incurred under sub-clause (1). Mr. Karanth quoted one extreme example of interference by the Commissioner. Now I will quote another example resulting from lack of control over expenditure. Suppose there is a trustee, and he says that out of the surplus money, 'I am going to build a hospital of two thousand beds, because I have a surplus of two crores', a hospital for the disciples. I say there must be some checking authority to say whether that is necessary or not. Or suppose the trustee says, 'I am going to open a college for archakas' or 'I am going to have an university for archakas' there should be somebody who should decide whether it is necessary or not. That power must vest with the Commissioner, and it is that which is contained in sub-clause (2). So sub-clause (2) should stand, and not be deleted."

SRI D. V. RAMASWAMI :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, after passing clauses 20 and 21 and the following clauses thereto, I am a little surprised that there should be objection to sub-clause (2) of the present clause. After passing a clause like clause 22, under which we have said that it shall be the duty of the Commissioner to see to the proper management of the affairs of religious institutions and he may do all things which are necessary and reasonable to ensure that religious institutions and endowments are properly administered, I fail to see why members should take objection to the Commissioner issuing general or special instructions. Once we accept that the position of Commissioner involves high qualifications and a sense of awareness of his duties vested in him and the responsibility he owes to the public at large and to the trustees and the matadhipathis, I feel sure that in trying to clothe him with the power to issue general or special instructions there is nothing unhealthy or wrong, unless this guidance means practically to throttle the trustee himself, which I fail to think it is the object of Government. I therefore fail to see the soundness of the argument to delete this sub-clause."

SRI A. KALESWARA RAO :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I am not in sympathy with the amendment of hon. Mr. Viswanatham. The trustees are men of local reputation and local standing. We know how these men will be appointed. Various influences will come to play upon the Commissioner; communalism will come in to appoint a Komati or a lawyer or a Reddi. Really the choice of trustees will not be made on the ground of learning or any such thing. So I am not in favour of giving entire discretion to the trustees; I think discretion should be given to the Commissioner, who is a high official, who belongs to the Hindu faith; of course they will not be very pious, etc., but from the point of view of office they must be men of great responsibility. Therefore I agree with the clause as it is, namely, that the trustees should be guided by the general and special instructions to be given by the Commissioner. In clause 75 the budget is sanctioned by a higher authority, as the trustee should not have absolute authority in occurring everyday expenditure. Even so, with regard to the expenditure of the surplus also there should be a control. So, I think the provision, as it stands, is reasonable."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I take it that sub-clause (2) seeks to give power to the Commissioner only over matters dealt with in sub-clause (1) (a). I do not think it is sought to give him power to control over expenditure incurred on subjects dealt with in sub-clause (1) (b), which are purely religious matters. So I take it that the object of Government is to give the Commissioner power over measures to secure the health, safety or convenience of disciples, pilgrims or worshippers."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Sir, he is dealing the whole clause and not with the amendment now under consideration."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA :—" If it is the intention of the Government to extend the power of control of the Commissioner over the training of archakas and so on, I protest against it. For they have rightly or wrongly in their original commitment charitable enough and good enough to permit the trustee to deal with the expenditure on major items. What is mentioned in this clause is all minor items, sanitary arrangements, health and safety of pilgrims and so on. When in the previous clauses we have allowed the trustee to incur expenditure on major items, I do not see why he should not be given power to incur on minor items of sanitary conveniences and other health measures."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, I do not accept the amendment."

" Hon. Sri V. Raghavayya was perfectly right in saying that 'such expenditure' occurring in sub-clause (2) meant only the expenditure referred to in sub-clause (1).

" Sub-clause (1) says that—

" the trustee of a religious institution may, out of the funds in his charge, after satisfying adequately the purposes of the institution, incur expenditure

Firstly, adequate provision must be made for the day-to-day needs of the institution. Making provision for the purposes mentioned in clause 75 (2) is obligatory. Only the surplus that may remain after making such provision can be spent on the purposes mentioned in this clause. Sri V. M. Ramaswami Mudaliyar was perfectly right in making out this point. If all the excess money is spent on arrangements for securing the health or other conveniences of disciples and worshippers and for the training of archakas, etc., clause 64 cannot come into operation and application of cypres doctrine does not arise. To use Sri V. Raghavayya's language, in the name of arrangements for the sanitary convenience or other convenience of disciples and worshippers and the training of archakas, etc., a trustee may spend any amount.

MR. SPEAKER :—" Let not the hon. Member repeat that."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Well, Sir, it is all right to say that it is a ridiculous thing. Why did it look ridiculous? Because the existing Board gave an order with regard to a trifling thing. When an order comes from Madras with regard to a trifling thing, it looks ridiculous to those who see and understand and there is nothing very wrong in saying it is ridiculous. On the other hand, it is not ridiculous that the Commissioner should have absolute powers to dictate to the trustees? Suppose the Commissioner says: 'I looked into all the tenders. Stop giving contract to the lowest tenderer and give it to this particular tenderer.' Do not cases like that arise? Therefore this ridiculousness applies either way, to things of a trifling as well as a serious nature. All this happens because persons who should not have any control are being invested with control."

"The Hon. Minister pointed out to the existing provision. The provisions of the existing Act were enacted long before the Constitution. Our complaint is also against several provisions of the existing Acts. There are many provisions in the existing Acts which will not stand the test of the new Constitution. To defend this clause by the provision in the existing Act is not very helpful."

"The Hon. Sri K. Madhava Menon agrees with hon. Sri V. Raghavayya in that this clause related only to expenditure out of the surplus funds left over after making adequate provision for the essential purposes of the temple. I am unable to agree with both of them. The clause reads:

For giving a decision whether an expenditure under this clause is worthwhile incurring or not, the Commissioner has got to see whether adequate provision has been made for the purposes mentioned in clause 75 (2). He has actually to go into and scrutinize every item of the entire original budget, because he has got to satisfy himself as to the adequacy of the provision made for the purposes mentioned in clause 75 (2)."

"On the other hand, Sir, it can be equally argued that the Commissioner and Assistant Commissioners may have to hear all those persons who have got local feelings and local prejudices. But who are these Commissioners after all? They are only the appointees of the Government and therefore they are bound to carry out their orders and instructions. They cannot use their independent judgment always. Sir, only this morning we have seen a judgment of the High Court, published in the 'Hindu' of to-day's issue. It was stated therein that though the head of a department was delegated certain powers and allowed to exercise his discretion in certain matters, but the Government seemed to have called for the file to the Secretariat and sent a demi-official communication to that officer directing him to issue orders superseding a certain panchayat and appointing such and such a person to be in charge of it. (Sri K. Bhashhyam: The name of the person was also mentioned therein.) Therefore, it cannot be said that the Commissioners will not be without local feelings or that they will not be under the influence of the Government. I submit, Sir, it is the local feelings and local colourings and local affinities that are carried into the Fort St. George and it is the same separatist feelings that exist in the Fort St. George that spread into the remotest villages and create local feelings. I therefore submit, Sir, that it is rather unfortunate that such an argument about local feelings should have been brought in this connexion."

"Sir, it has also been argued that there must be somebody to check these trustees and their actions and that this is merely a provision to check them. But in order to check these trustees, there are other provisions and other laws. The trustees are responsible people representing certain particular religious denominations and therefore their discretion in such matters should be unfettered because they will take the consequences in a civil or criminal court if they abuse their discretion. They have got certain duties and responsibilities imposed on them, not only by this Act, but also by the general law of trusts and if they do not carry out their duties properly, action can be taken against them under those laws and they can be sent out or changed or dismissed or punished in so many other ways. Therefore, the proper procedure is, to frame certain rules under the rule-making provisions of this Act for the conduct of the trustees and ask them to follow those rules, and if they fail to follow them, then action may be taken against them. But it is not right and proper on the part of the Commissioner to issue orders or directions to the trustees to do certain things. Orders are different from rules. If you refer to clause 100 of this Bill, which gives powers to make rules under this Act, you will find that about 29 or 30 purposes are mentioned for which rules can be made to cover the entire administration of these endowments. Now the Government can make certain general additional rules for the guidance of these trustees under the rule-making clause, and if any trustee does not follow those rules, he can be removed. But to say that the Commissioner can issue orders directing a trustee to do such and such a thing, is totally different

MR. SPEAKER:—"Let not the hon. Member repeat that."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Well, Sir, it is all right to say that it is a ridiculous thing. Why did it look ridiculous? Because the existing Board gave an order with regard to a trifling thing. When an order comes from Madras with regard to a trifling thing, it looks ridiculous to those who see and understand and there is nothing very wrong in saying it is ridiculous. On the other hand, it is not ridiculous that the Commissioner should have absolute powers to dictate to the trustees? Suppose the Commissioner says: 'I looked into all the tenders. Stop giving contract to the lowest tenderer and give it to this particular tenderer.' Do not cases like that arise? Therefore this ridiculousness applies either way, to things of a trifling as well as a serious nature. All this happens because persons who should not have any control are being invested with control."

"The Hon. Minister pointed out to the existing provision. The provisions of the existing Act were enacted long before the Constitution. Our complaint is also against several provisions of the existing Acts. There are many provisions in the existing Acts which will not stand the test of the new Constitution. To defend this clause by the provision in the existing Act is not very helpful."

"The Hon. Sri K. Madhava Menon agrees with hon. Sri V. Raghavayya in that this clause related only to expenditure out of the surplus funds left over after making adequate provision for the essential purposes of the temple. I am unable to agree with both of them. The clause reads:

"The trustee of a religious institution may, out of the funds in his charge, after satisfying adequately the purposes of the institution, incur expenditure

For giving a decision whether an expenditure under this clause is worthwhile incurring or not, the Commissioner has got to see whether adequate provision has been made for the purposes mentioned in clause 75 (2). He has actually to go into and scrutinize every item of the entire original budget, because he has got to satisfy himself as to the adequacy of the provision made for the purposes mentioned in clause 75 (2)."

"On the other hand, Sir, it can be equally argued that the Commissioner and Assistant Commissioners may have to hear all those persons who have got local feelings and local prejudices. But who are these Commissioners after all? They are only the appointees of the Government and therefore they are bound to carry out their orders and instructions. They cannot use their independent judgment always. Sir, only this morning we have seen a judgment of the High Court, published in the 'Hindu' of to-day's issue. It was stated therein that though the head of a department was delegated certain powers and allowed to exercise his discretion in certain matters, but the Government seemed to have called for the file to the Secretariat and sent a demi-official communication to that officer directing him to issue orders superseding a certain panchayat and appointing such and such a person to be in charge of it. (Sri K. Bhashhyam: The name of the person was also mentioned therein.) Therefore, it cannot be said that the Commissioners will not be without local feelings or that they will not be under the influence of the Government. I submit, Sir, it is the local feelings and local colourings and local affinities that are carried into the Fort St. George and it is the same separatist feelings that exist in the Fort St. George that spread into the remotest villages and create local feelings. I therefore submit, Sir, that it is rather unfortunate that such an argument about local feelings should have been brought in this connexion."

"Sir, it has also been argued that there must be somebody to check these trustees and their actions and that this is merely a provision to check them. But in order to check these trustees, there are other provisions and other laws. The trustees are responsible people representing certain particular religious denominations and therefore their discretion in such matters should be unfettered because they will take the consequences in a civil or criminal court if they abuse their discretion. They have got certain duties and responsibilities imposed on them, not only by this Act, but also by the general law of trusts and if they do not carry out their duties properly, action can be taken against them under those laws and they can be sent out or changed or dismissed or punished in so many other ways. Therefore, the proper procedure is, to frame certain rules under the rule-making provisions of this Act for the conduct of the trustees and ask them to follow those rules, and if they fail to follow them, then action may be taken against them. But it is not right and proper on the part of the Commissioner to issue orders or directions to the trustees to do certain things. Orders are different from rules. If you refer to clause 100 of this Bill, which gives powers to make rules under this Act, you will find that about 29 or 30 purposes are mentioned for which rules can be made to cover the entire administration of these endowments. Now the Government can make certain general additional rules for the guidance of these trustees under the rule-making clause, and if any trustee does not follow those rules, he can be removed. But to say that the Commissioner can issue orders directing a trustee to do such and such a thing, is totally different section 32, sub-section (1), there is a surplus in the income of the institution, the trustee thereof may, with the previous sanction in writing of the Deputy Commissioner, appropriate such surplus or any portion thereof for all or any of the purposes specified in section 64, sub-section (1):

Provided that before according such sanction, the Deputy Commissioner shall publish the particulars relating to the proposal of the trustee in such manner as may be prescribed, invite objections and suggestions with respect thereto and consider all objections and suggestions received from persons having interest:

Provided further that the sanction aforesaid shall be published in such manner as may be prescribed.

(2) Any person having interest may, within such time as may be prescribed, appeal to the Commissioner against the sanction accorded by the Deputy Commissioner under sub-section (1)."

"Sir, clause 64 as it emerged from the Select Committee says:

"The Deputy Commissioner may, on being satisfied that the purpose of a religious institution has from the beginning been, or has subsequently become, impossible of realization, or that the machinery for effectuating such purpose has failed or no longer exists; or that after providing adequately for the purposes of the institution and after setting apart a sufficient sum for the repair and renovation of the buildings connected therewith, there is a surplus, by order direct that the endowments of the institution or such surplus as is declared to be available, as the case may be, be appropriated to all or any of the following purposes, namely—

"We have examined this clause further in detail and we found that the adoption of the cypres doctrine by the Deputy Commissioner of the surplus funds of religious endowments is likely to conflict with the fundamental rights conferred under Article 26 of the Constitution. We therefore want to be on the safe side and therefore we have said that even in the case of trustees, they can with the previous sanction in writing of the Deputy Commissioner, appropriate such surplus or such portion thereof for any of the purposes specified in clause 64 (1) of this Bill. My hon. Friend Sri K. Bhashyam says: 'how clever it is that we are trying to introduce a new clause here to get over that difficulty in clause 64, and still retain the words "with the previous sanction in writing of the Deputy Commissioner" with a view to control the trustees and compel them to do the things that the Commissioner or the Government wants.' Sir, I cannot be as clever as my hon. Friend Sri K. Bhashyam, because he might raise the same objection to the revised clause 64 later on, and so to the extent it is possible for me I must try to be clever and see that the surplus amount available is spent for the good of the institution and be in conformity with the wishes of the original donors, and not be squandered away by the trustees in whatever way they like. So, if I can possibly do so, even with a little bit of cleverness on my part, it is but just and proper that I should do it. But it is stated again and again that we are compelling the trustees to do certain things. Sir, the words 'with the previous permission' do not mean that compulsion is sought to be enforced. There is no compulsion at all here. Perhaps in the original clause 64 at least, the Deputy Commissioner may compel the trustees to use the surplus funds on a particular object, but now we have said that the trustees may use their discretion for spending the surplus on any of the purposes mentioned under that clause. Then where is the compulsion?

"Sir, we are also amending clause 64 of the Bill as it emerged from the Select Committee, as mentioned by me already, for this purpose, retaining only such purposes for which the surplus can be spent. We have also amended the proviso in clause 64, stating that in the case of a religious institution founded and maintained by a religious denomination or any section thereof, the endowments shall, as far as possible, be utilized for the benefit of the denomination or section concerned for the purposes mentioned therein. That is to say, we have also satisfied the provisions of the Constitution guaranteeing certain fundamental rights to religious denominations.

"Sir, we have also made a provision in this new clause that any person having interest may, within such time as may be prescribed, appeal to the Commissioner against the sanction accorded by the Deputy Commissioner under sub-clause (1). I hope, Sir, the House will accept this amendment."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, the amendment that I moved to clause 32 moved by the Government was voted down. I expect the same result for my amendment to new clause 32-A. Therefore, Sir, I am not moving my amendment."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I move—

Sir, I really wish that the question of surplus should have been dealt with at one place. Already we have dealt with it in one place. Now we are again dealing with it, and we are going to deal with it still again at a later stage, namely, clause 64. Will it be possible for the Government to take this clause along with clause 64? If so, can we now pass over this clause now? I want to know this from the Hon. the Minister."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"The amendment is to clause 32-A (1). It has to be moved now alone."

more advantageous to me. But I did not do so. Please give us a little more time, Sir. Let us not be hurried over this. After all, it is not a matter of a few thousands of rupees. It is going to affect the trust properties in the whole of this State amounting to crores of rupees. Therefore, I am appealing to you for some more time. If I appeal for more time it is with all sincerity and not with a view to delay the proceedings."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The hon. Member will continue his speech."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"I make the position of the Government absolutely clear. The trustee has no freedom. He is really controlled at every stage by the authorities. When that is so, I ask who really runs the administration of the institutions? Is it the trustee or the Government? Why is this camouflage and pretention? The trustee is only an instrument in the hands of the Commissioner. It is the Commissioner who really does the things. That is why I stated that the Government were clever. Instead of doing it in an open manner, they want to do it in a roundabout way, and do it in a form which cannot be easily seen through by anybody else. This control at every stage is wrong. The position taken by the hon. Member Mr. Viswanatham is correct. The trustee must go to the court for the purpose of utilizing the surplus funds. He has stated the legal point correctly. Under this clause where is the religious denomination coming in for being consulted? The disciples will require to be consulted as to the utilization of the surplus. When the matter is taken to the court, the disciples will put in their objections. The enquiry that is contemplated in the Bill is not a judicial enquiry. The Government are instituting only a departmental enquiry, and the Commissioner is the final authority in the matter. I submit that this is not the correct procedure. It looks as though the Government are proceeding according to the Constitution in letter but not in spirit. The sishtyas of the religious denomination must have a controlling voice in the matter. I should say that finality must vest in them; and not in the Commissioner or the Government. I say that the religious denominational institutions must be administered according to law. It does not mean that we should make a law to take the administration altogether from the religious denomination into the Government's hands. If the Government say that the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner is there to ascertain the wishes, and that he will follow the majority wish, I shall not have any objection. The position is, even though the majority of the disciples and worshippers are against him, the Commissioner will still have his own way. This I cannot accept either as correct or as moral. I respectfully submit to the Government that they should accept this amendment and thus allay the apprehensions of the people who are interested in the temples. I want the Government to get the approval of all persons interested in temples and all those who still have faith in maths, temples and religious institutions. It is only their voice which should count and not the voice of the people who are out to destroy all these institutions."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"Sir, in wholeheartedly supporting the amendment, I want to point out only one aspect of the matter. The whole of this Bill takes protection under Article 25 of the Constitution where the right to make a law to regulate the financial or secular aspect of a temple is not taken away. Under that guise this legislation is being enacted. On the other hand, there are various other aspects that are mentioned in Article 26 where every religious denomination is given the entire right to establish, maintain and propagate religion."

MR. SPEAKER:—"That point has already been answered by the Hon. Minister. It is a repetition."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"Sir, every religious denomination is entitled to establish and maintain religious institutions for the propagation of that religion. Under this clause we give him no scope at all for this purpose. All the moneys of the temple are earmarked for X, Y or Z, firstly for dittams, secondly under clause 75 and then under clause 64 and lastly under this clause 32-A. It is not proper on the part of the Government, under the pretext of regulating the religious practice of a religious institution, to lay its hands on all the properties and incomes of the temples and bind the hands of the trustees in all these matters and not give him scope to propagate his religion which, according to the Constitution, is his sole right. I, therefore, request that at least so far as this matter is concerned, they may not put it to the scrutiny of the Commissioner but may give the trustee some scope to propagate the tenets of his religion."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"Sir, I little thought that time was so soon coming to contradict what the Hon. Minister said while discussing the last clause. This clause 32-A bears out what I said last. The question of surplus arises only after clause 75, sub-clause (2), and this clause 32 are satisfied. The Hon. Minister spoke just the other way. He said that clause 32, sub-clauses (1) and (2), would give him the right to dispose of the surplus, being led away by the false argument of my hon. Friend Sri Ramaswami Mudaliyar. I will draw the attention of the Hon. Minister to the importance of what I said. Clause 75, sub-clause (2), prescribes the necessary expenditure of the temple. Clause 32 (1) prescribes what I called the ancillary expenditure, i.e., expenditure ancillary to the prime object of the institution, for instance, construction of choultries for pilgrims, training of archakas and the like. These are very important objects. That is why I urge that we should give full discretion to the trustees at least with regard to the training of archakas, adhyapakas, vedaparayanikas and othuvans. That training in the practice of religion is necessary for the promotion of the objects of the institution. Now, there may be a surplus only after this is met. What is proposed with the surplus is that the trustee may, in accordance with clause 64 which will come up later, with the sanction in writing of the Deputy Commissioner, say, 'I appropriate the surplus in such and such a manner'. When clause 64 comes up for discussion, I will have to say something about the order of priority. There may be only a small surplus with certain temples and a heavy surplus with certain other temples. It should not be left to the discretion of the Deputy Commissioner to say 'I won't go in that order, I would take up a particular subject which is most dear to my heart'. The initiative should be left to the trustee in these matters. There should be some order of priority so as to save small surpluses being deliberately misused under orders of a higher authority. That I will deal with when I come to my own amendment to clause 64. But this amendment only says that he will publish the scheme, call for objections, and then if necessary an appeal to the Commissioner will lie. But as my predecessor has pointed out, there is nowhere any opportunity given to any section of worshippers or persons having an interest to be consulted on the matter. They can only write their objections and keep quiet. There is no opportunity for ascertainment of their opinion. At least let me get an assurance from the Hon. Minister. He has given me already some assurances. One is in respect of service-holders that there will be no other control excepting the one control that he may be dispossessed of the inams if he discontinues his services. The second is in respect of the previous clause that the Commissioner will be expected to be very liberal and not to issue all kinds of special instructions in regard to the training of archakas and the like. The Hon. Minister felt the reasonableness of my suggestion. In regard to this clause also, I want him to say that in the rules there will be some machinery provided for consultation and ascertainment of the majority opinion, or if not of the majority opinion, of the enlightened opinion either of the denomination or the worshippers in a particular temple, at any rate of those who are interested in it."

SRI V. M. RAMASWAMI MUDALIYAR:—"Sir, I would not have intervened in the debate but for the fact that my hon. Friend Sri Varadachari referred to my speech. While discussing the previous clause, what I said was this. After making the necessary provision for expenditure under clause 75 (2), the balance will be controlled to some extent by clause 32. After satisfying the requirement of clause 32, the trustee may say that there is no surplus. Then there may be no scope for the application of cypres doctrine. This is what I said. Let there be no misrepresentation of what I said. I must say that the Government have gone some way in providing for consultation, though not in a very direct way. Clause 32-A says that the Deputy Commissioner shall publish the particulars relating to the proposal of the trustee in such manner as may be prescribed, invite objections and suggestions with respect thereto and consider all objections and suggestions received from persons having interest. So, some machinery has been provided. Persons having interest have got scope to make their views known to the trustee or to the Commissioner.

"Sir, even under the existing Act, section 77 gives power to the trustee to incur expenditure. Practically the same wording is repeated here. Whether it offends the Constitution or not is a different matter. So far as the power of the Deputy Commissioner with regard to the application of cypres doctrine is concerned, there has been a change in the provision as framed in the original Bill. The Deputy Commissioner is only a directing authority. Whether it is a camouflage or not, I am not much concerned with at this stage. All that I say is this. The rights are there in the Constitution. The Government, having taken the advice of their Law Officers, think that this will overcome all possible objections. Therefore, there is nothing wrong in the Government proposing to do this."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, my hon. Friend Sri Viswanatham's amendment is in tune with the amendment which he originally moved. He moved that the business of the Commissioner or Deputy Commissioner should only be to initiate proceedings in a Civil Court for misconduct or any such thing. If there is any surplus, then the trustee or the Commissioner may inform the Court and ask them to frame a scheme to use the surplus. Sir, if we could avoid spending of trust money in wasteful litigation, we want to avoid it. It is not because of hatred of Courts or because I do not want members of my profession to have more work. It would certainly be advantageous for the Commissioner or the trustee concerned, wherever there is a surplus, to refer the matter to the Court and decide it. Even in this particular amendment, we have said that only the trustee, if he wants to use the surplus for anything, must get the sanction of the Deputy Commissioner. So, the discretion of the trustee to use it is there. The only thing is the Deputy Commissioner is expected to see whether the money is invested for any purpose other than those mentioned in the various sub-clauses of clause 64.

"Sir, the amendment of hon. Sri Viswanatham also is against the Constitution if the Government amendment is also against it according to his argument. He says that articles 26 gives the right to the trustee to administer the property according to law. Instead of allowing the trustee to administer the property, he wants the Court to administer the property. That will be equally wrong if the hon. Members argument is to be accepted.

"My hon. Friend Sri Viswanatham gave us the pleasant example of the Sanyasi. It is quite common in Malayalam also. That means, if you want to kill a tortoise, put it upside down. If a surplus property of a trust is there, it should be used in a proper way. If the advice of the Sanyasi was the correct one, then I am prepared to say that the Government is the Sanyasi in this case, because the Sanyasi has given the right advice as to how to kill the tortoise."

SRI K. BHASHYAM :—"I am no Sanyasi."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"Sir, my hon. Friend Sri Bhashyam said that he was particularly concerned with maths. Both he and hon. Sri Viswanatham said that the trustee was only a creature of the Commissioner or of the Government.

"There are hereditary trustees; there are nominated trustees. It is not always that the Commissioner appoints the trustees. It is not a case here of the Government giving instructions beforehand. If we read the clause once again, we shall find the words 'if after making adequate provision for the purposes referred to in section 75'. It means it is obligatory on the part of the trustee to provide for these. If after providing for such things, there is a surplus, even then it need not be spent for the purposes mentioned in clause 64. Provision must be made for the arrangements and training referred to in clause 32. If after making even this provision, there is a surplus, the trustee may, with the previous sanction of the Deputy Commissioner appropriate it for any of the purposes mentioned in clause 64. The trustee can appropriate it but he should do so in such a way as it is not improperly done and this is the reason why the sanction of the Deputy Commissioner is required. In order that the sanction of the Deputy Commissioner may not be arbitrary, there is a proviso to the effect that the Deputy Commissioner before according sanction publish the proposals, invite objections, etc.

"Then, Sir, my hon. Friend, Sri L. N. Gopalaswami said that he wholeheartedly supported this clause particularly. I do not think that wherever he supported the Government previously he did so otherwise than wholeheartedly. He, however, said one thing. He was sorry that we had not done anything to help the trustee to propagate the tenets of the Hindu religion. Let me tell him, Sir, that what we are exactly doing is what he said we were not doing. Item (a) of clause 64 says: 'propagation of the religious tenets of the institution' and this is one of the purposes for which the surplus funds can be used. It is open to the trustee to spend all the money for the propagation of the religious tenets of the institution. This clause is there only to permit him to do so and not to prevent him from doing so. (Sri K. Bhashyam: Sanction may be refused.) If sanction can be given for other purposes why not for this also? It is to give sanction and not to refuse sanction that this provision is there. My Friends find a thief in every bush and I cannot answer their criticisms. My feeling is that sanction will be given and must be given. That is why the provision is there and not for refusing sanction. If the clause should be interpreted in the manner in which it has been interpreted by my hon. Friends, Sri Bhashyam and others, then I cannot help it. Let me once again assure my hon. Friend Sri Gopalaswami that there is ample provision for the propagation of the religious tenets of the institution.

"Then, Sir, my hon. Friend, Sri N. S. Varadachari wanted an assurance about consultation. I am afraid, I cannot give more assurances than what is mentioned in the clause. My hon. Friend, Sri Viswanatham, on the other hand, is not for consultation with anybody. He wants the whole thing to be placed before the Court, which does not consult anybody but decides the issue itself and is costly. There is scope for as much, if not more, consultation, in the clause in the Deputy Commissioner publishing the proposals, inviting objections, hearing parties, etc., as may result from the matter being taken to the Court. No more assurance is necessary and I cannot accept the amendment."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—"Sir, the Hon. the Minister closed his speech by saying that I wanted the matter to be placed before the Court, that the Court did not invite objections and that it was a costly affair. (The Hon. Sri K. Madhava Menon: 'I meant that the Deputy Commissioner would invite as many objections as the Court would.') He has modified his statement. He admits that the Court will invite as many objections as the Hon. the Minister may invite or the Deputy Commissioner may. As regards Courts being a costly affair, I submit that this assumption is wrong. Where public interest is involved, the costs are not high. Where the people have a beneficent interest, the fee is very very little. The maximum itself is about fifty rupees or so for the City and for the mufassal, it will be something less. (Sri K. Bhashyam: 'Even this may be excused in this case.') Yes, even this fee may be excused, if the Government so choose. I, therefore, think that the question of cost should not have been brought in here. It is only a red herring across the path. The next herring is even more red than the previous herring. He said that the Court did not invite objections. Does he not know that the Court publishes in all newspapers, in English and regional languages particulars relating to suits of this nature? How can it be said that the public will not have as much notice of Court proceedings? Not only this. Persons who are interested in the matter can appear before the Court either in person or through an advocate who can understand the legal implications of a suit, who can quote precedents and who can help the Court to arrive at proper decisions. Therefore, the foundation upon which the Hon. the Minister based his arguments is very weak.

"Then, Sir, I would go to the other points raised by him. The Hon. the Minister referred to the cypres doctrine. Sir, the doctrine of utilization of surplus funds is an ancient legal concept. The fundamental principle underlying the cypres doctrine is that where the original intention of the donor is not known, the Court can find it out by inference from the long practice associated with the institutions founded by him and take it as the intention of the founder. It is not for any and every case that we are going to apply this doctrine. We are now trying to create a position whereby all surplus funds may be utilized for other purposes than for which they were endowed. What kind of funds are we utilizing for such purposes? Funds given by what kind of persons? We are taking the surplus funds of institutions which are based on certain philosophical concepts and on certain religious traditions deriving from certain philosophical doctrines. And when the people gave this money at the time of the foundation of the trust what they had in their minds we cannot know. But there are those who still make contributions to those trusts and we can know their intentions. What is the intention of a Madhwa when he makes donations or gifts to the temple at Udipi? What would be the intention of the persons who make donations to the Mylapore temple? What would be the intention of the persons who make contributions to the Parthasarathi temple at Triplicane? They are all different but ascertainable. Sir, in the inner recesses of the heart of the Hindu, there is a religious sub-stratum of feeling. Hindu life is built upon religious traditions which are themselves based on certain philosophical concepts. Therefore the intention of those that give money is not expressed day to day in writing. It need not be written either. As people having some knowledge and culture, we know their intentions. To ascertain them Court is the most appropriate authority. In England, whose jurisprudence we have borrowed largely, in America which has borrowed much of English jurisprudence and in fact everywhere else, utilization of surplus funds is the general care of the Courts. I feel, Sir, that the Hon. the Minister over did a little when he said that going to the Court would be ultra vires of the Constitution. Evidently he thought by saying so he was giving me a fitting retort. It is astounding that such a statement should come from a Law Minister even, if it was just meant as a joke, for, these things are reported and in the report jocular remarks are not differentiated from the rest in different kinds of types. I do not think that such a statement should be made by a Law Minister. I do not believe that he really believed in what he said.

"Finally, I submit, Sir, that the only authority for the proper utilization of surplus funds is the Court. If this view is accepted by the Government, then it will be in accord with the purposes of the founders, with the purposes of the donors, and the Court will investigate and judge whether the original intentions and the objects of the trust have been properly fulfilled or not. I suggest that the Hon. the Minister do accept my amendment and discard the view that it is wrong to entrust the Courts with such matters."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"Sir, I want to clear the wrong impression which my hon. Friend, Sri Viswanatham, seems to be under. He said that my statement would go into the reports as was made by me and, therefore, I should be careful. Sir, what I said was this. Sri Viswanatham said that the Government amendment was ultra vires. I replied that if that was so, his amendment to the Government amendment would be as much ultra vires as the Government amendment itself. I used the term ultra vires in the limited sense in which he employed it. Let me make it clearer. I said that if the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner administering a certain thing was to be considered ultra vires of the Constitution then the court also could not have any power to administer it but to leave it to the trustee himself to do the job. Therefore, the question of my statement being recorded does not arise at all here. In fact, my safety is that whatever I say is recorded here—and correctly recorded—and I know I shall not be wrongly reported in this case also. I did not say that the courts would not publish anything. I said that provision existed in the new clause now proposed for giving as much publicity as would be given by a court. I did not say either that the courts would not invite objections. Sir, it is not right nor is it fair to interpret my statements in this manner."

MR. SPEAKER :—"The question is—

'For the words "with the previous sanction . . . sub-section (1)" occurring in sub-clause (1) of new clause 32-A, substitute the words "apply to the court for framing a scheme for the utilization of such surplus. The scheme may provide for the method of utilization of future surpluses".'

The amendment was lost.

The new clause 32-A was put and carried.

MR. SPEAKER :—"It is now five of the clock. As agreed to yesterday, I shall now adjourn the House for half an hour."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—"Although, Sir, the suggestion was made by a person to whom we could not say 'No' . . ."

MR. SPEAKER :—"But the progress has been very slow."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA :—"The Hon. Sri Madhava Menon looks jaded."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"In spite of my feeling jaded I will sit late and work. I have no objection to sitting till seven."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—"Sir, the Bill has been pending for a very long time and a delay of one or two days will not matter much. After all, it has to go to the other House after being passed here. Then it has to receive the President's Assent and become law. So it will not matter if we adjourn now to meet again to-morrow."

MR. SPEAKER:—"Let us sit till seven of the clock at least to-day. Yesterday we came to the decision . . ."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Although it was suggested yesterday and agreed to by the House, I did not record my protest because I did not want to oppose such an elderly gentleman like hon. Sri Bhashyam."

SRI R. V. SWAMINATHAN:—"Sir, yesterday we agreed that we would adjourn at 5 and resume at 5-30 and continue till 7 p.m. With that idea I have come prepared. I want to make another suggestion, Sir. From to-morrow let us have night session. We may adjourn either at 4 p.m. or even earlier in the evening, if necessary, and if the hon. Members agree, resume at 8 in the night and continue till 11 p.m. in the night. It will be very convenient." (Hon. Members: 'Like the House of Commons.')

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, one word about the suggestion of my hon. Friend, Sri Swaminathan. As things are, we are sleepy except one or two and if we are to assemble at 8 p.m. and continue till 11 p.m. you will perhaps hear the snorings of hon. Members, Sir."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The hon. Member said that we were all sleeping. It will look awkward if it is published. I am going to adjourn the House till 5-30 p.m."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"Sir, I was not here yesterday. I saw the decision of the House to sit to-day till 7 p.m. only in the papers. Certainly I have every reason to believe that there would be discussion of a character which might perhaps require a little more attention than on the later clauses of the Bill. Most of the things that come under the later clauses of the Bill have been more or less disposed of during the discussion of the clauses that we have so far finished. Some of us who have given amendments to the later clauses find it would be very inconvenient to attend night sessions. In fact we are trying to progress as fast as we can reasonably expect and the progress in future will be faster. I think no case has been made out to sit at nights. Why should we sit at night? Am I to be told by the Hon. Speaker that I should not do any other work except to attend the Assembly from 10 o'clock in the morning to 7 o'clock in the night. I may tell you, Sir, I have just returned after four days' service on a Government Committee. I have lost four days and have still to lose five days more. What am I to do for my other work? It is very inadvisable to have night sessions unless there is a strong case made out by the Government, or the Government wish to rush through not looking into the amendments at all. I can give you this assurance, Sir, on my part and on behalf of one or two other hon. Members—I cannot answer for the other side of the House—that there will be no unnecessary delay introduced in this matter. In view of what I have said, I request you, Sir, to adjourn the House even now."

SRI K. R. KARANTH:—"Sir, the remedy lies in our own hands. From to-morrow I would appeal to all hon. Members not to press amendments which are not very material. At the same time I must say that we feel quite fatigued sitting here from 11 o'clock in the morning. As it is we cannot give an intelligent interest to it if we sit for late hours. If it is a question of mere passing we can pass all the amendments—all the clauses even. They may even be guillotined."

"You will be pleased to see, Sir, how ill attended or well attended just now this House is. Most of the hon. Members have gone. It would not be fair to the subject if we continue when the House is so thin. At the same time, I would say, it is open to us from to-morrow to have only important amendments and not to press all the amendments that have been given notice of. That is the understanding to which we must come. It will be better if we meet daily from 11 o'clock in the morning till 5 o'clock in the evening."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The suggestion has to be accepted by the other hon. Members. Let me know what the Hon. Minister has to say."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"I entirely agree with what the hon. Member Sri Karanth has said that the hon. Members should press only important amendments. Unfortunately it is the hon. Members that have to decide whether the amendments given notice of by them are important or not. It has been my experience till now that all the amendments were considered very important."

"It is not right on the part of the hon. Member, Sri Varadachari, to say that we have been rushing through the Bill."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"I did not say so, Sir."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"The hon. Member said so, Sir. It is not a case where we wish to rush through. The Bill is before the House for the past twenty months. Nobody can say that we have rushed through nor are we rushing through the Bill. To-day we have done only two or three clauses. That is the position. There are very important things yet to be gone through, viz., the maths and all that. You have announced, Sir, at the request of the hon. Member, Sri Bhashyam, and after the consent of all the hon. Members that to-day we would sit from 5-30 p.m. to 7 p.m. We are prepared to sit every day from 8 o'clock to 11 o'clock in the night if it is so desired. But to-day at least we shall sit till 7 p.m."

[21st November 1950]

MR. SPEAKER:—"I adjourn the House to meet again at 5-30 p.m."

The House then adjourned to meet again at 5-30 p.m.

Clause 33.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'That clause 33 do stand part of the Bill.'"

Sub-clause (1).

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move—

'In sub-clause (1), omit the words "math or" wherever they occur.'

Because, in my scheme of things, a special chapter should be devoted to 'maths' instead of the present chapter. The present provisions of the Bill are almost inapplicable to 'maths'. Therefore, Sir, the words 'math or' may be omitted from the clause wherever they occur."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I second it."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, clause 33 refers to specific endowments attached to a math or temple. So, if we omit 'maths' in this clause, the specific endowments attached to maths also will be excluded. Hon. Sri K. Bhashyam's idea is that 'maths' may be deleted. In any case the Government cannot accept the amendment. More so, we cannot agree to the specific endowments attached to a math or temple being excluded."

The amendment was put and lost.

Sub-clause (5).

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move—

'Add at the end a new sub-clause (5) as follows:—

"Any person prejudicially affected by any order made or declaration given under this section may bring a suit to establish his rights which he claims."

This is very near the same which I said before as regards cypres doctrine. A person interested in the temple or religious institution ought to be given an opportunity to go to a court of law. In fact, under clause 67, clause 33 is not mentioned. Otherwise, I would not have moved this amendment."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I second it."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, the very purpose of clause 33 is for a quick enforcement of a remedy. If there is a service holder and the property is in the hands of somebody else and if he does not get the service properly out of the property, there must be some quick way of realizing the money and paying it to him. The idea is that, where specific endowments attached to a math or temple are concerned, 'the trustee of the math or temple concerned may require the person in possession of the property on which the endowment is a charge, to pay the expenses incurred or likely to be incurred in causing the service or charity to be performed otherwise . . .'. The service has to be done properly and the trustee must set the money and pay it to the service holder. The very essence of the clause is that it should be done quickly."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, I beg to withdraw my amendment."

The amendment was, by leave of the House, withdrawn.

Clause 33 was put and carried.

Clause 34.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'That clause 34 do stand part of the Bill.'"

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move—

'That the words "math or" may be omitted wherever they occur.'

If the Government do not accept this, they can vote it down."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"I second it."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, the Government cannot accept the amendment."

The amendment was put and lost.

Clause 34 was put and carried.

Clause 35.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'That clause 35 do stand part of the Bill.'"

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move—

'Clause 35 may be deleted.'

This is foreign to the subject of the Bill and what is to be done? There is also a separate Act for various inams and this gives another kind of procedure. I therefore submit, Sir, that this clause may be omitted in this place altogether. If the Government really want to amend any provisions, they can amend the existing Act. Therefore, Sir, I submit that this may be deleted as it is foreign to the purposes of the Bill."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir. I think we are too much in a hurry. After all what is the nature of things laid down in this clause? It is clear that the Government want to enfranchise the inams. I do not see why this clause should be brought in for this purpose. If it is for the purpose of anything, it is a matter which could be done under the Inam legislation or under Devadasi legislation. It has been provided for already and I respectfully submit that it is wholly foreign to the scheme of this Bill. It may perhaps lead to difficulties in the way of reconciliation between the old Act and the present Act. I therefore second the amendment, Sir."

SRI R. V. SWAMINATHAN:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, while opposing this amendment, I wish to say a few words. This clause is absolutely necessary. According to the Devadasi Act, devadasis might have been given these inams which are enjoyed by them. But, in a separate clause we have to decide, if a person who has been given charitable inam has not performed her duty, whether that should be taken away from that person and transferred to another who is doing that duty. So, unless we are sure that this will be replaced by some other clause, this clause is absolutely necessary. I therefore oppose the amendment, Sir."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, hon. Mr. Swaminathan has already explained the difficulty. We have said that, in the case of service inams where service is not performed, their inams would be resumed. When an inam is given to a devadasi for service, whatever may be the service that is accepted, she will be relieved of those services. The inam will be hers and the imposition of proper rent only is now sought and nothing more, Sir. This is exactly section 44 of the old Act except sub-clause (9) which is now added. It is therefore necessary that this clause is retained."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I do not know why Mr. Swaminathan is so hard upon devadasies. Almost simultaneously during the same period when the Hindu Religious Endowments Act was originally passed, there was other legislation dealing with this and there are no such inams. This is only a survival of an anachronism and it does not fit in here. If the Hon. Minister thinks that this will fit in here, he can certainly do it."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I have nothing to add."

The amendment was put and lost.

Clause 35 was put and carried.

Clause 36.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—"

"That clause 36 do stand part of the Bill."

21st November 1950]

Sub-clause (1).

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move—"

"That, after the word "sale" in the first line, the words "other than a court sale" may be inserted."

"I do not want to repeat the same old arguments which have been negative by the Government. Here I want the Government to consider two aspects. Firstly, I have purposely said that only court sales should be excluded. There may be cases where people have advanced money bona fide to the temples not only to draw interest from them, but also with a view to help the institutions to run their day-to-day administration. It is not as if our temples are in possession of large funds and that they can command money as they please. There are temples with poor income and which will be without any money at the very beginning of the year before harvest. Therefore, by necessity some of these institutions have to borrow money from persons either for interest or low interest or no interest at all. It is not fair to dispose of these persons without any compensation at all. I have given only an extreme case where these persons bona fide give money to these institutions to enable them to carry on their day-to-day administration. Now, if the Government say that, irrespective of the fact that a person has given money, irrespective of the fact that the temples have used the money for the performance of pujas, etc., irrespective of the fact that a person has established his claim in a court of law and that the court has given a decree, and that a person has got possession of properties of temple, all sales will become null and void, it is a thing hardly fair nor will it be for the proper working of the temple themselves. It may be very difficult for these temples hereafter to get money from others for the conduct of their daily rituals. No man will lend money hereafter to carry on the business in the temples if he has not the right to bring the temple property for sale and get his money back. In the circumstances I hope the Government will accept my amendment."

SRI M. S. PATTABHIRAMIAH:—"I second the amendment. I do not want to speak at length on this question. It is only in the interests of the proper discharge of the duties of the trustees that this has been moved. It may therefore be accepted."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I have a doubt whether the language employed in lines 5 to 7 of sub-clause (1) is correct. The language employed is this: 'or service connected therewith or of any other religious charity and made, confirmed or recognized by the Government shall be null and void'. Are there such things? It does not apply to other inams."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"I oppose the amendment of hon. Mr. Gopalaswami not only for the reason that this is only a reproduction of the existing provision in 44-B (1), but also for other reasons. There will be very few court sales prior to 1934. Regarding the future court sales if we accept this amendment we will be only creating room for much greater fraud. I do not see any reason why Sri Gopalaswami should be particularly partial to court sales as against private sales. The execution of court sales will lead to tremendous fraud. You have only to file a collusive document and get a decree. Why should court sales brought about by this method should have an advantage over private sales, I cannot understand. There will be greater room for fraud if court sale is exempted from this clause."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"I only wanted the court sale to be brought under this clause for the simple reason that the Government have alleged that there may be collusive transactions entered into by the trustees and private owners. If it is a court sale all these points would have been enquired into. The court could be expected to look into the question whether the transaction was entered into to cheat the temple of its money. If the Hon. Minister will take other sales as well into consideration and exempt them I would be glad. As I said already, if the court sales are not exempted, the sufferers will be the temples. There may be at times nobody to lend anything even when it is required for the daily poojas."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, may I say that my feeling in this matter is just the reverse of what the hon. Member feels? I cannot accept his plea to exempt the court sales."

The amendment (of Mr. Gopalaswami) was put and lost.

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, my amendment to this sub-clause runs thus—

'Add at the end of sub-clause (1) (and before the proviso), the words "unless it is found that such exchange, gift, sale, mortgage or lease has been made prior to the commencement of this Act and for the purposes beneficial to and binding upon the religious institution or charity".'

"This I have argued already and got defeated. I move it again to get a second defeat."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"I second the amendment. The Hon. Minister was not quite fair to himself when he opposed the earlier amendment. He would not be fair to himself in this case also if he does not accept the principle of the amendment even if he does not approve of the language of it. There is no point in always arguing that there are some collusive and fraudulent sales and therefore declaring every sale is invalid. It is a wrong way of looking at things. Superior tribunals are there to enquire whether a sale is fraudulent or collusive. There are well-known means of finding out fraudulent practices and therefore there is no meaning in saying that all fraudulent sales will be affected if this amendment is accepted. On the contrary bona fide transactions will be prejudicially affected. No fraudulent action is ever protected under any law and no member of this House will be so bad as to bring in amendment to protect fraudulent or collusive sales. I am sure Mr. Bhashyam's amendment is only intended to see that you do not tar everybody with the same brush. There may be genuine transactions and there may also be non-genuine transactions. Therefore you should declare null and void only transactions which are fraudulent. It is no use saying this will provide a loophole and therefore should not be accepted. Let the Hon. Minister reconsider the question and accept this amendment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"I have considered the question very well."

The amendment was put and lost.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"I move that—'In the proviso, omit the words "where the inam is held by the religious institution or the trustee thereof".'

"This is intended to give power to the Government to sanction an exchange or gift if it is necessary or beneficial to the institution. The proviso as it stands says: 'Provided that where the inam is held by the religious institution or the trustee thereof, any transaction of the nature aforesaid (not being a gift) may be sanctioned by the Government as being necessary or beneficial to the institution.' It is felt that when the Government is given power to sanction any particular exchange or gift, as being necessary or beneficial to the institution, we need not give that benefit only to inams held by trustees thereof. We can extend that benefit to all service inams. That is why this amendment."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, having said categorically that he has considered the question and still wants that all these classes of transactions should be declared null and void, I do not understand why the Hon. Minister wants reservation in favour of the Government. I want them to stick to their declaration, Sir."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Consistency is good and that is why this amendment. Reservation is there already in the case of inams held by a religious institution or the trustee thereof. Consistently with that provision this is extended to inams held by trustees. We are sticking to our declaration."

The amendment was carried.

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"I move—

'Add at the end of sub-clause (1), the following further provisos:—

"Provided also that where any property is charged or burdened for any of the purposes mentioned in clause (1)

an exchange, gift, mortgage or lease of such property shall be legal and valid provided proper provisions are made for the execution of the purposes mentioned in the section :

Provided also that the section shall not apply in respect of any properties which have vested in any person before April 1946 by the operation of the Law of Limitation."

"This, Sir, is an important amendment. In consideration of the fact that I have not taken any time over the other amendments moved by me, you must give me more time to speak on this amendment.

"There are properties given away to a charitable or religious institution, but still the property is not actually transferred. There is, for instance, a property given to A who is bound to perform a charity in a particular temple. Such properties are technically known as 'properties burdened with a trust'. This A is bound to carry on some service in a temple like mandagappadi or thanneer pandal. Such cases there are where properties are not vested in any institution, but in a trustee individually and that individual is bound to do some service in a temple. In such a case the law says, so long as the man gets the service performed, neither the institution nor the Government is interested in seeing who is in possession of the property. I will give an instance. A person is bound to contribute Rs. 100 a year for the purpose of performing the Garuda Servai in Parthasarathi temple. The property endowed for this purpose is in the hands of A. A may sell it to B and B will say 'I take the burden of contributing Rs. 100 for the Garuda Servai.' Here, the institution does not suffer. The transaction goes on. Even if B transfers the property to C, C is bound to carry this burden. All that I want is that such transactions should be saved and the properties left undisturbed. Persons who receive such properties with the burden of performing the charity should be saved. There is no provision in the clause to meet such cases. You have not thought about a case where a gift is made and an inam granted not the institution as such, but to a particular person and that person is bound to do the kaingkaryam (கைங்கரியம்). In such cases, so long as the performance of the service in the temple either by contribution of money or otherwise continues, the mere transfer of the property by an individual should be recognized and saved. The old law as laid down in Indian Law Reports (Calcutta) is this. A property burdened like this is liable to be sold, exchanged or mortgaged and sold in court auction, but the purchaser would be bound to do the stipulated service. In regard to such cases the Government amendment makes no provision. The cases of properties not given to a temple, but to an individual but burdened with the performance of some sort of kaingkaryam must be distinguished and dealt with separately."

21st November 1950]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"Sir, I take it that Mr. Bhashyam has moved his last amendment to sub-clause (1). I cannot accept it. It goes against the existing laws. We have merely copied section 44 (b) (1) here. This has so far worked without any difficulty. The amendment cannot be accepted."

SRI K. BHASHYAM :—"Sir, the existence of properties of the kind I have mentioned is a wellknown fact. If they are not treated separately, a large number of people will be hit by a provision of the kind Government have made."

The amendment was put and lost.

Clause 36 as amended was put and carried.

Clause 37.

MR. SPEAKER :—"The motion is—

'That clause 37 do stand part of the Bill.' "

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, this again is one of those clauses which attracts the operation of the Constitution and I request you not to mind it if I bring in the Constitution again. This Constitution, like the paramathma, has spread itself into so many clauses."

MR. SPEAKER :—"It is omnipresent!"

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—"Clause 37 says :

'Notwithstanding anything contained in any scheme settled or deemed to be settled under this Act or in any decree or order of a court, or any custom or usage to the contrary . . .

Sir, I ask you to mark the words 'notwithstanding anything'. That is, you wipe out everything that has happened up to 6 o'clock on 21st November 1950. (An hon. Member : From the date of the passing of the Act). The clause proceeds—

' . . . no office-holder or servant of a religious institution shall have the right to be in possession of the jewels or other valuables belonging to the religious institution except under such conditions and safeguards as the Commissioner may, by general or special order, direct.'

I submit, Sir, that this is to practically declare that all the properties belong to the Commissioner and not to the institution, and not to those who by the Constitution are entitled to be in charge and have the right to possess and manage and administer the institution. The court decrees are wiped out. It may be a court decree which might have been passed after a litigation about who is to be in possession of the jewels and where they are to be kept. Notwithstanding all these things, to-day the Bill seeks to give the right, not to the trustee, not to the religious denomination, but the whole thing is put entirely in the hands of the Commissioner who may pass special or general orders with regard to these things. The particular religious denomination is completely wiped out. If I do not have the right to hold my jewels in custody and somebody else has it, how can it be said that I am enjoying my property?

[Sri T. Viswanatham] [21st November 1950]

If the trustee or the hereditary trustee who is otherwise entitled to the custody of these valuable jewels under a scheme framed by a court after proper investigation and after hearing all the parties interested, has not got the right to have the custody of the jewels and other valuables pertaining to the institution then I submit that the Constitution is given the go-by. This clause is entirely ultra vires and therefore in the interest of the preservation of the Bill, I want to be omitted. I move, Sir, the following amendment:—

‘Substitute the following for the existing clause 37:—

“Trustees, managers or other office-holders according to usage, directions of the founders or directions of a Civil Court issued either in a scheme or otherwise, and in other cases, other persons, who come into the possession or custody of jewels, valuable and other properties shall be responsible for their safe custody and maintenance, for the proper collection of income and the incurring of expenditure, and shall be liable to reimburse the institution for any loss or damage except when such loss or damage was due to reasons beyond their control.”

SRI K. R. KARANTH:—“I second it, Sir.”

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—“May I support it with a few illustrations, Sir.”

MR. SPEAKER:—“I have no objection.”

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—“I feel somewhat diffident, Sir. There is a feeling, there is an atmosphere created here that there is something wrong in our speaking here. This provision will specially hit the matadhipathis. Sir, matadhipathis are sometimes presented with some personal gifts. As I said before, the matadhipathi is the God in the math. Sometimes he is presented with a silver tumbler for drinking milk from or given some sort of a bangle or pathakkam for decorating himself.”

MR. SPEAKER:—“The clause only speaks of valuables belonging to the religious institution.”

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—“Sir, a religious institution includes a math also. We have been crying hoarse that the definition of religious institution should not include maths but it was not accepted. Therefore it is I am saying all this. The words ‘religious institution’ come in at every stage and wherever they come they will refer to maths as well. Suppose, Sir, a gold plate is presented to a matadhipathi, then it becomes a jewel or valuable belonging to the math. It must be kept not with him but in the safe deposit vault of the Imperial Bank. But if he wants to keep it, he must give a security for it. Or he must keep it under three locks, one lock by him, one by the Executive Officer and the third by the Commissioner. The matadhipathi can take it out only on application made to the Commissioner and he can take it out only on particular occasions like the ‘Karthigai’ coming on Friday next. All these difficulties will be there. I can understand it if it is said that these valuables may be kept in accordance with the custom and usage of the institution but there should be sufficient safeguards made for their safety. But the clause says, ‘notwithstanding the custom, notwithstanding the scheme, notwithstanding any decree of court and so on. The only thing that matters is the whim and fancy of the Commissioner who gives the directions. It all comes to nothing more than this, that the persons who are now in charge of these things are dishonest people and that the only persons who are honest, straight and pure and angelic in their character are the Government officers. Sir, that is an assumption which is too much to make. It is hardly fair and hardly charitable to say that. I am not saying that there are not persons who are bad but that does not mean that for the sake of the badness of a few people you must brand all good people as bad and take action against them. That is the real trouble. We have been reared on British traditions according to which even though thousand guilty persons escape punishment, we must be careful to see that one innocent person did not suffer. But what is happening now is, we start with the presumption that all are guilty men and make provisions saying that they should not do this thing or that thing. They are all put in straight jackets so that they may not move this way or that. Under these conditions if a person wants to be there let him be content with the restrictions made. If he does not want to be there let him get out of it. Then to-morrow a gentleman like Sri Kosalam will be a matadhipathi. That is not the way of looking at things. I feel it is a very very irksome thing and it ought not to be done.”

SRI R. V. SWAMINATHAN:—“Sir, I have listened to the speech of Sri K. Bhashyam describing a matadhipathi and saying that bangles and ornaments and jewels are presented to him. Sir, our conception of a matadhipathi is different. We want that the matadhipathi must be a sanyasin and he must be respected as a sanyasin. Our conception of a sanyasin is one who has no personal belongings—(முற்றுப் பற்றதவர்). That is why we have been insisting in connexion with many provisions in this Bill that the control should be tightened, that the Government should have more powers in regard to these worldly things. After hearing Sri K. Bhashyam and his description of a matadhipathi or a pandarasannadhi I am opposed to this particular amendment. I agree with the main provision in the Bill.”

SRI P. KANDASWAMI PILLAI:—“Sir, I strongly oppose this amendment. By this clause we make the matadhipathi a real matadhipathi with absolute detachment to worldly possessions. Matadhipathis should not have attachment to property. If a man has attachment to property and if he is a family man he ceases to be a matadhipathi, a spiritual teacher. A spiritual teacher must have no attachment of any kind. Now some matadhipathis are getting into wrong ways. Just to prevent them from doing that and direct them on the right spiritual path, we think this clause is very essential. At least in the interest of the matadhipathis themselves, I request my hon. Friends Sri Bhashyam and Viswanatham to withdraw the amendment. If matadhipathis give up all worldly pleasures, attachment to jewels, women, lands and everything, if they become sanyasins, they will be competent to guide us on the true spiritual path. But so long as they have feelings of attachment and desire for jewels, gold plate, silver plate, silver cup and so on they cannot elevate themselves and they cannot elevate other people. Therefore, Sir, in the interests of the matadhipathis and the maths and in the interests of our nation we must have this clause so that these matadhipathis may become real sanyasins and real ascetics. I request the hon. Member to withdraw the amendment and allow the original clause to stand as it is in the Bill."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, may I remove one misconception? The whole of the remarks of Sri Kandaswami Pillai seems to be based on the misconception that because in certain maths the matadhipathis are sanyasins, persons who do not marry, so all matadhipathis are sanyasins. There are any number of maths where grahasthas are heads of maths. They marry and they have children and the head-ship of the maths is hereditary. Therefore it is wrong to say that in all cases the matadhipathis are sanyasins. There are what you call Vellai Vettikara sanyasi. When such a person is given the property . . ."

MR. SPEAKER:—"Is it a personal explanation? It is very long."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"It is a misconception that I really want to remove, Sir, with regard to all matadhipathis being sanyasins. The hon. Member Sri Kandaswami Pillai wants to be an acharya of acharyas and he wants to teach them how to tread the spiritual path. I suggest, Sir, that Sri Kandaswami Pillai's speech must be printed and circulated to all matadhipathis."

SRI P. KANDASWAMI PILLAI:—"Yes, Sir." (Laughter.)

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I want the House to understand what exactly the implication of the clause is. No matadhipathi is involved in this. Let us not confuse the issues. The clause says:

"Notwithstanding anything contained in any scheme settled or deemed to be settled . . . no office-holder or servant of a religious institution . . ."

A matadhipathi is not an office-holder or a servant of a religious institution. The clause is intended to cover executive officers, archakas, clerks and other servants of the temple. Various costly jewels are there in the temple. The only object of this clause is to see that the servants of these religious institutions are not put in possession of valuable jewels unless there are sufficient safeguards for their safety and security. The necessary orders and rules should be passed for that purposes. That is the only thing that is intended. My hon. Friend might say that it might be my intention but that is not the wording there. The wording can only mean that and nothing more. I would ask Sri Bhashyam to look at Sri Viswanatham's amendment.

"That amendment is worse than the disease. It reads:

"Trustees, managers or other office-holders according to usage, directions of the founders or directions of a civil Court issued either in a scheme or otherwise, and in other cases other persons, who come into the possession or custody of jewels, valuable and other properties shall be responsible for their safe custody . . ."

What is the use of saying that a servant of a temple who keeps valuable properties of the temple shall be responsible for their safety? There is no use of merely saying that he must be made responsible but necessary safeguards must be provided. Office bearers and servants of a temple in possession of valuable jewels must have possession of them only under proper safeguards."

MR. SPEAKER:—"Is Mr. Viswanatham withdrawing his amendment?"

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, it involves a very important principle. Apparently, I was not very clear. The Hon. Minister thinks there is no harm in saying how the office-bearers or servants should have custody of jewels, etc. If that is the simple object, I really cannot understand why he says 'notwithstanding anything contained in any scheme settled or deemed to be settled under this Act or in any decree or order of a court'. If the Hon. Minister can explain it, this House will be very glad. On the other hand, what I have stated in my amendment is: 'Trustees, managers or other office-holders according to usage, directions of the founders or directions of a Civil Court issued either in a scheme or otherwise, and in other cases other persons, who come into the possession or custody of jewels, valuable and other properties shall be responsible for their safe custody and maintenance . . . and shall be liable to reimburse the institution for any loss or damage'. So, I go further than the Government. I have made a provision to see that the cost should be recovered for the benefit of the institution. Again, my amendment is not restricted to office-holders; I am extending it to trustees, managers and anybody who is in possession of the jewels who by law or otherwise have come into possession of the jewels and I have made them accountable for any loss. The Commissioner shall not say the jewels should be kept here or there, but the Government may make general rules for the custody of jewels which may be applicable to all the institutions. The Commissioner or the Government cannot make one rule for one temple and another rule for a second temple; and subject to such rules, anybody whether an office-holder or trustee or manager shall manage and be liable in a court of law, both criminally and civilly—they can be prosecuted if they misappropriate—for any loss caused by them, and the institution shall have the right to have the loss reimbursed. I submit, Sir, this is a very good amendment; it is conceived in good spirit and therefore I request the Government may accept this, without seeing something wrong in it."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, my hon. Friend said I did not understand the implications of his amendment. He is right; I find it really difficult to understand it. My hon. Friend says: 'other persons who come into possession or custody of jewels, valuable and other properties shall be responsible for their safe custody and maintenance, for the proper collection of income and the incurring of expenditure'—I agree with all that—and shall be liable to reimburse the institution for any loss or damage'. There is no use asking a man to reimburse the loss unless he has property. Suppose the person is a servant of the temple, how is the money to be collected? My friend after all wants the responsibility for the loss or damage and he says they shall not be in possession except under conditions and safeguards, and he also wants Commissioner to make necessary provision for the purpose. All that is already contained in the clause as it is, and there is no necessity for this amendment. I am sorry, Sir, I cannot accept the amendment."

MR. SPEAKER :—" I shall now put the amendment to the vote of the house."

The amendment was put and lost.

Clauses 37, 38 and 39 were then put and carried.

Clause 40.

MR. SPEAKER :—" The motion is—

'That clause 40 do stand part of the Bill.' "

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Sir, in the printed list, there is an amendment which is printed under clause 39 but it really belongs to clause 40."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The Government have given notice of an amendment to omit the clause. If that amendment is accepted, none of the other amendments given notice of by the Members to the clause can be moved."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, I move—
'That clause 40 be omitted.' "

SRI V. M. RAMASWAMI MUDALIYAR :—" Sir, the reason for the omission of this clause should be given to the House. I see there is some principle involved there. The clause as it is, allows the appointment of a salaried executive officer 'notwithstanding that the institution has a hereditary trustee or trustees'. I want to know the reasons which prompted the Government to delete this clause."

SRI R. V. SWAMINATHAN :—" The Members of the House and some of us who have been members of the Select Committee cannot understand why this clause should be deleted from the Bill now. The idea is that if there is a hereditary trustee and if we find something wrong is going on, and he is mismanaging, there should be some sort of check and we must have power to appoint an executive officer. We want to know why just now the Government want to delete this clause. Will the Hon. Minister kindly explain to us the reason? "

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, the reason is this: In drafting certain amendments to be moved on behalf of the Government, we had certain provisions of the Bill examined in detail. Moreover, we had also general discussions on the Bill after the Select Committee report was made available to us. Clause 40 says:

'For every religious institution included in the list, published under section 39, the Commissioner shall constitute a Board of Trustees and appoint a salaried Executive Officer, notwithstanding that the institution has a hereditary trustee or trustees or that the scheme settled or deemed to be settled for the institution under this Act contains provision to the contrary.'

On further examination, we had reason to doubt that clause 40, as it empowers the appointment of non-hereditary trustees in cases where there are hereditary trustees and also the appointment of salaried executive officers, may offend Article 26 (d) of the Constitution. In cases where there are hereditary trustees, to impose non-hereditary trustees, might offend that Article and so we wanted to be on the safe side, when there was a doubt. That is the reason for our omitting the clause now. So far as executive officers are concerned, there is already a provision empowering the appointment of executive officers in respect of temples and institutions, and so it is not necessary that this provision in clause 40 should remain. And that is the reason, Sir, for the omission of this clause."

The amendment that clause 40 be omitted was put and carried.

Clause 41.

MR. SPEAKER :—" The motion is—

'That clause 41 do stand part of the Bill.' "

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, I move—

'That for clause 41, the following clause be substituted:—

" 41. (1) Where a religious institution including in the list published under section 39 or over which no Area Committee has jurisdiction, has no hereditary trustee, the Commissioner shall constitute a Board of Trustees, consisting of not less than three and not more than five persons appointed by him.

(2) Where any such institution has, at the commencement of this Act, both a hereditary trustee or trustees and a non-hereditary trustee or trustees, the Commissioner shall have power to appoint the non-hereditary trustee or trustees as and when vacancies arise in their number.

This is only consequential to our omitting clause 40. The reasons which prompted us to omit clause 40 have necessitated this change in clause 41 and power is taken to appoint a trustee only in cases where there is no hereditary trustee, or where there is a combination of both hereditary and non-hereditary trustees even now. This is only intended to bring the clause in consonance with the Articles of the Constitution."

MR. SPEAKER:—"Hon. Members, Mr. Viswanathan and Mr. Karanth have given notice of amendments to clause 41. But they cannot move them now; they can only move amendments to the Government amendment."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, I move the following amendment:—

"At the end of sub-clause (2), add the following proviso:—

"Provided however that a non-hereditary trustee who has been appointed to a religious institution having originally hereditary trustees only, after November 1942 by the Hindu Religious Endowments Board under the provisions of the Hindu Religious Endowments Act, such trustees shall not be treated as non-hereditary trustees for the purpose of this sub-section."

Sir, I am glad the Government have at least at this distance of time come to recognize the claims of the hereditary trustees. True, it is not on the grounds I have mentioned—that they are a useful set of people for the governance of the religious institutions,—but under threat of the provision being unconstitutional. In giving effect to it, however, what will happen is this: Up till now, in all cases where there were hereditary trustees, the Board has interfered; and just to see that the hereditary trustees were put out of action altogether, non-hereditary trustees, larger in number, have been appointed and yoked along with hereditary trustees. In certain cases, however, some hereditary trustees have been dismissed or a scheme has been framed for the institution, or some other arrangement has been made and other people have come in their place. By my amendment I suggest that a non-hereditary trustee who has been appointed in such cases, after November 1942 should not be treated as such. The reason why I put in that date is that at that time we had the Advisers' Government and some committee was appointed at the time which took a retrograde view in respect of these matters. What I submit is: if you want to give some consideration to the hereditary trustees, give it with a full heart. As I said, there has been a crusade against these hereditary trustees and they have been practically sent out or put out of action by the appointment of non-hereditary trustees. So, I move this amendment, so that hereditary trustees may be fully recognized and their help and guidance in the scheme of administration of our temples may continue to be taken."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I cannot accept the amendment for two reasons. I have already said that where there are hereditary trustees, no non-hereditary trustee can be appointed. It is only in cases where both of them exist, in the vacancies of non-hereditary trustees, others can be appointed. Mr. Bhashyam wants that:

"no person shall be appointed as a member of the Board of Trustees or as a salaried Executive Officer who does not belong to the category of persons entitled to hold SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, I may point out that the Hon. Minister is reading some other amendment. My amendment reads as follows:—

"Provided however that a non-hereditary trustee who has been appointed to a religious institution having originally hereditary trustees only, after November 1942 . . . etc."

"That comes under clause 41, Sir."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"I am sorry, Sir. I definitely oppose the amendment. Sir, I definitely oppose it, because Mr. Bhashyam's object is any trustee appointed after November 1942 shall not be treated as a non-hereditary trustee. This in effect would nullify the Government amendment. The Government amendment says, 'Where any such institution has, at the commencement of this Act, both a hereditary trustee or trustees and a non-hereditary trustee, or trustees, the Commissioner shall have power to appoint the non-hereditary trustee, etc., as and when vacancies arise . . . But, hon. Mr. Bhashyam says that ought not to be there. I cannot accept it certainly, Sir."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

"At the end of sub-clause (2), add the proviso—

"Provided however that a non-hereditary trustee, who has been appointed to a religious institution having originally hereditary trustees only, after November 1942 by the Hindu Religious Endowments Board under the provisions of the Hindu Religious Endowments Act, such trustees shall not be treated as non-hereditary trustees for the purposes of this sub-section."

The amendment was lost.

SRI K. SHANMUGAM:—"I move—

"Add the following to sub-clause (1):—

"Provided the Board of trustees so constituted shall consist of at least one member from the Harijan community."

“అధ్యక్ష మహాశయ ! అనేకవేల సంవత్సరాలనుండి దేవాలయాల చెంతకు కూడా రానివ్వకుండా హరిజనులను బహిష్కరించి యుండినందున హిందువులు వారు చేసిన అన్యాయానికి కత్తిరాప పడి—అందుకు పరిహారముగా నైనను ప్రతి Religious Institution లో ఒక్కొక్క హరిజనుని non-hereditary trustee గా నియమించి నట్లయిన కాంగ్రెస్ అధికారములోనికి వచ్చి సాంఘిక అనర్హతలను తొలగించి-దేవాలయ ప్రవేశం కలిగించి ఆస్పృశ్యతా నివారణకు తోడ్పడుటయేగాక దేవాలయముల మీద పెత్తనం కూడా యిచ్చిందని దేశములో భృతిగలుగుటయేగాక హరిజనులు ఇంకా ఎక్కువ ప్రోత్సాహకరింగా—భక్తియుతంగా సత్ప్రవర్తనతో జీవ యాత్రను గడుపుగోగలరని యీ సవరణను ప్రవేశ పెట్టుచున్నాను. గౌరవనీయులైన ముగ్గురు గారు తప్పక యీ తీర్మానమును ఆంగీకరిస్తారని విశ్వసిస్తున్నాను.”

SRI V. I. MUNISWAMI PILLAY :—“Sir, I second the amendment and in seconding it, I wish to point out that the Government have been very generous to Harijans in appointing members to the various Advisory Committees of very important temples and I wish them to continue the same spirit by accepting the amendment.”

SRI R. V. SWAMINATHAN :—“Sir, I entirely sympathise with the object of this amendment, but I wish to remove the impression of the hon. Member who moved the amendment that when trustees are appointed the claims of Harijans are being neglected. That is what Mr. Shanmugam said in speaking on the amendment, but I want to inform the House in this connexion of what happened in one case in my own district. In Kunnakudi there is a big Devasthanam where three trustees are appointed once in three years. According to the Act only the District Judge of Ramanathapuram has to select the trustees. People who want to become trustees will have to apply to the District Judge and after going through the merits and claims of all the applicants he will select the trustees. Last year, twelve persons submitted their applications for appointment as trustees and out of these twelve only one Harijan applicant came forward and of course, there were also Brahmins and some so-called high caste people. Though the judge was a Brahmin, he was wise enough to select the Harijan candidate though he was the only applicant and also two others from other communities. I want to bring this to the notice of the House that whether there is an Act or not, it is being done in practice.”

MR. SPEAKER :—“The hon. Mr. Muniswami Pillay is a trustee of the Madhurai temple.”

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—“Sir, I entirely sympathise with the amendment moved by hon. Mr. Shanmugam. While speaking on the amendment he said that the claims of Harijans are not considered. You may remember, Sir, that both of us were shut out of a temple in Ialgudi in spite of the Temple Entry Act, because both of us were going there. I know it to our cost and to the extent the law will permit, we will certainly try to accommodate the feelings expressed by the hon. Member and others who supported the amendment. But, what the amendment says is, in every board of trustees constituted there shall be a Harijan. I may point out that the provision as passed by the Select Committee in respect of clause 46 is that in making appointments of trustees the Commissioner shall have due regard to the claims of persons belonging to the religious denominations for whose benefit the institution concerned is chiefly maintained. To this, the Government have proposed an amendment, namely, for clause 46, substitute the following clause :—

“46. Every trustee appointed by the Commissioner under section 41 or by the Area Committee under section 44 shall be a person having interest in the institution concerned.”

So, Sir, it will all depend upon the qualifications that are necessary for a trustee. The question whether he is of the religious denomination has to be looked into or he has the interests of the institution should be looked into. There are also other legal difficulties in the way if we pass this amendment. Moreover, it may be impossible of performance and the Constitution will come in. That is the difficulty in accepting the amendment, but I may inform the hon. Member that the point raised by him will be borne in mind by the Commissioner in making these appointments.”

The amendment was by leave withdrawn.

JANAB MAHIN SCHAMNAD :—“Sir, I move the amendment standing in my name, namely :—

(1) After sub-clause (2), insert the following as sub-clause (3) :—

“(3) No person shall be appointed as a member of the Board of Trustees who does not belong to the category of persons entitled to hold the trusteeship of the religious institution by virtue of ancient and long established religious custom or usage of the community or group of persons to which the religious institution belongs.”

(2) Sub-clause (3) proposed by the Government may be re-numbered as sub-clause (4).”

“Sir, in communal temples nobody who is not a member of the community can be a trustee. So, only members of that community by virtue of ancient and long established custom and usage can administer the temples. The amendment is also in accordance with the provisions contained in Article 26 of the Constitution of India.”

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI :—“I second the amendment, Sir.”

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—“Sir, I oppose the amendment because, as I said, this applies only to non-hereditary trustees and any such condition like this will not be workable. Moreover, under section 46, we have provided for the conditions for the appointment of trustees.”

The amendment was put and lost.

[21st November 1950]

SRI V. M. RAMASWAMI MUDALIYAR:—"Sir, I regret very much that the Government are giving up their rights under the original sub-clause (2) of appointing or co-opting so to speak, non-hereditary trustees with hereditary trustees. I do not know why they have become panicky. The only reason advanced by the Government is that their legal advisers have said that it may offend some Article of the Constitution—probably Article 26. When a clause like that was found necessary by the Government and especially when it has been approved by the Select Committee, I should say that even at the risk of its being declared illegal subsequently, it should find a place. After all even if it is declared illegal, only that clause will become illegal and the other clauses will be there. Therefore, Sir, the Government agreed to it on principle in the original Bill and in the Bill as it emanated from the Select Committee. I therefore move my amendment, namely:—

'After sub-clause (2), insert the following as sub-clause (3):—

"(3) Where an institution had only a hereditary trustee or trustees, the Commissioner shall have power to appoint other non-hereditary trustees exceeding the number of hereditary trustees by one."

I want this clause to be put in because, Sir, it is proposed to be deleted from the Bill, having agreed to it originally and approved by the Select Committee. No reason has been advanced for omitting it, except that some doubts might be raised later on. After all, Sir, what will happen is, what happened to clause 14 of the Preventive Detention Act will happen here also. Only that clause will be declared illegal. On the other hand, what will happen if we agree to the deletion of this clause is, institutions with non-hereditary trustees will go without control because there will be no other person to be in charge of the management of that institution. There will be a lacuna so to speak. What will happen is, in the case of temples with hereditary trustees, the hereditary trustee will become the sole monarch. So, Sir, I think no case has been made out by the Government for dropping this provision.

"In fact, Sir, I can quote instances where hereditary trustees misbehave and are not amenable to reason and that is why non-hereditary trustees have been associated with hereditary trustees in some cases. I may refer to the judgment of a Judge of the Madras High Court on the original side about 15 days ago saying that the appointment of a non-hereditary trustee under section 51 of the present Act was not proper. Of course, that went on a different basis altogether, that is where the Board delegated their power to the Assistant Commissioner to appoint a non-hereditary trustee, and they said that such appointment was not proper. However, I do not want to canvass the validity or the propriety of that judgment and that is the subject-matter of appeal. As I said, Sir, if a hereditary trustee misbehaves we have no control at all. (Sri K. Bhashyam: 'He will be dismissed.') Yes, but only by the Court. So, Sir, I do not want any temple to be left in sole charge of a single hereditary trustee. In this connexion, I want to bring to the recollection of the House the opinion of such an eminent Hindu jurist like the late Sir Sadasiva Ayyar in 36 Madras (1400). He said that the institution of hereditary trustee is an anachronism. It is an anachronism such as the divine right of kings. Why should there be hereditary trustees for all time? That is the opinion of a very learned and eminent Hindu jurist like Sir Sadasiva Ayyar. I am sorry, Sir, why the Government have become panicky and want to go behind the original idea which they have supported and piloted through the Select Committee and now want to drop it at this stage."

SRI V. I. MUNISWAMI PILLAI:—"Sir, I rise to second the amendment of my hon. Friend, Mr. Ramaswami Mudaliyar. I do not find any reason why non-hereditary trustees should be left out and why the hereditary trustees should be given the first place. From the new clause proposed by the Government in sub-clause (2) it is very clear that they want to give the first place to the hereditary trustees and then only take non-hereditary trustees if there are places available for them. What I would suggest to the Government is in bringing these trustees into office, they should take into consideration the credentials of both the hereditary and non-hereditary trustees who apply for trusteeship. Only if they have good credentials, capacity and such other requisite qualifications they should appoint these trustees either hereditary or non-hereditary. I feel, Sir, that the reasons advanced by my hon. Friend, Mr. Ramaswami Mudaliyar, are very pertinent to this matter. I therefore support the amendment."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, there is a slight misunderstanding as regards the provisions of the Bill with regard to hereditary trustees. Their rights have been recognized even under the old Act. As a matter of fact, any trustee can be removed or dismissed but in the case of a hereditary trustee if he commits any default, he is dismissed but his successor comes into office; that is what is being done even to-day. The position under the present Act is that where there is only a hereditary trustee and there is no non-hereditary trustee, the Government do not propose to interfere with him in any way. But it does not mean that for any default in respect of any matters, he is not likely to be removed. It is not as if there is no provision made for the purpose of getting rid of people even though they may be hereditary trustees. That is the case with regard to hereditary village officers and that is what is being done here. If a person is incapable or has committed any default, his successor will be put in his place and if his successor is a minor, there is a person appointed to perform the duties during the minority of the successor. It is something like that that is proposed and it is nothing new. I am very glad that the constitutional right of the hereditary trustees has been recognized and there need be no misapprehension that the hereditary trustees will be allowed to act as they please."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, my personal feelings are almost the same as what my hon. Friend, Mr. Ramaswami Mudaliyar, said, namely that we must if possible associate non-hereditary trustees also with hereditary trustees in the management of religious institutions for after all it is a trust property in respect of which all Hindus have a right to see that they are properly maintained. But it was not due to panic or anything like that that it was given up. If we were definitely advised that it will offend the Constitution and when there is a definite advice to that effect, no Government is entitled to say that they know the law better. As remarked by Sri Ramaswami Mudaliyar it may be an anachronism and the judgment of Justice Sadasiva Ayyar in Madras 38 may be correct in the circumstances then existing and I doubt very much whether 38 Madras would have been the same if at that time they had a Constitution such as we have now under which religious denominations are given powers to manage their own affairs and though it was an anachronism and he felt like that he will have to apporve it. So, Sir, that is the position. Let the hon. Member be not under the impression that it was in a panic that it was done. By the little power that the Government can exercise by means of a provision suggested by my hon. Friend, I do not want to imperil the very Act by adopting a clause which we were definitely advised by the authorities that it will offend against the Constitution. So, the idea is that where there are hereditary trustees now, it must continue. So, I appeal to my hon. Friend, Sri Ramaswami Mudaliyar, not to press his motion."

SRI V. M. RAMASWAMI MUDALIYAR :—" I have no option but to withdraw the motion."

The motion was by leave withdrawn.

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is—

'For clause 41, substitute the following :—

"(1) Where a religious institution included in the list published under section 39 or over which no Area Committee has jurisdiction, has no hereditary trustee, the Commissioner shall constitute a Board of Trustees consisting of not less than three and not more than five persons appointed by him.

(2) Where any such institution has, at the commencement of this Act, both a hereditary trustee or trustees and a non-hereditary trustee or trustees, the Commissioner shall have power to appoint the non-hereditary trustee or trustees as and when vacancies arise in their number.

(3) Every trustee appointed under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) shall hold office for a term of five years, unless in the meanwhile the trustee is removed or dismissed or his resignation is accepted by the Commissioner or he otherwise ceases to be a trustee."

The motion was carried.

Clause 41 as amended was carried.

[21st November 1950]

Clause 42.

MR. SPEAKER :—" The motion is—

'That clause 42 do stand part of the Bill.' "

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move—

'For clause 42, substitute the following clause, namely :—

"(1) In the case of a religious institution for which a Board of Trustees is constituted under section 41, sub-section (1) the Board shall elect one of its number to be its Chairman.

(2) In the case of any other religious institution having more than one trustee, the trustees of such institution shall elect one of their number to be the Chairman.

(3) A Chairman elected under sub-section (1) of sub-section (2) shall hold office for such period as may be prescribed."

The amendment is necessitated by the omission of clause 40. For the reasons I have already stated, we cannot associate non-hereditary trustees with hereditary trustees and therefore, Sir, this amendment has become necessary."

'Delete sub-clause (3) of clause 42.'

According to sub-clause (3) of clause 41, every trustee shall hold office for a term of five years and their number has been stipulated in sub-clause (1). So, Sir, the Chairman must have the same period of life, that is as long as he is a member he must continue as such and the period should not be left to be prescribed by the Government because he is an elected Chairman. He will, however, stand on a different footing if he is nominated or appointed by the Government. I submit, Sir, that he must have the same life as that of a trustee or the trust board; if he begins with it he must end with it and if he comes in the middle he must end with its life and his life cannot be for any other period."

SRI K. BHASHYAM :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to second the amendment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, the Chairman is to hold office for such period as may be prescribed; it may be for the full term. We want to try the system of holding office by rotation. It can be prescribed by rules and it can also be cancelled by rules and therefore, no specific provision is made, the idea being that we want to enable the Chairman to hold office by rotation and see how it works."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I am not at all satisfied with the explanation that he wants to try the system of rotation; if he wants it, it must be made statutory and he cannot think in two ways about the same thing. By rules, we can do so many things and even change the shape of the earth."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is—

'Delete sub-clause (3) of clause 42.'"

The amendment was lost.

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is—

'For clause 42, substitute the following, namely :—

"(1) In the case of a religious institution for which a Board of Trustees is constituted under Section 41, sub-section (1) the Board shall elect one of its number to be its Chairman.

(2) In the case of any other religious institution having more than one trustee, the trustees of such institution shall elect one of their number to be the Chairman.

(3) A Chairman elected under sub-section (1) of sub-section (2) shall hold office for such period as may be prescribed.'"

The motion was carried.

Clause 42 as amended was put and carried.

Clause 43.

MR. SPEAKER :—" The motion is—

'That clause 43 do stand part of the Bill.'"

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move—

'Omit clause 43.'

This is consequential on the omission of clause 40 which provided for the appointment of salaried executive officers. With section 40 this automatically goes."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is—

'Omit clause 43.'"

The motion was carried.

Clause 44.

MR. SPEAKER :—" The motion is—

'That clause 44 do stand part of the Bill.'"

21st November 1950]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move—

'For clause 44, substitute the following, namely :—

"(1) In the case of any religious institution over which an Area Committee has jurisdiction, the Area Committee shall have the same power to appoint trustees as is vested in the Commissioner in the case of a religious institution referred to in section 41 :

Provided that the Area Committee may, in the case of any institution which has no hereditary trustee, appoint a single trustee.

(2) The provisions of section 41, sub-section (3), and section 42 shall apply to the trustee or trustees appointed, or the Board of Trustees constituted, by the Area Committee as they apply in relation to the trustee or trustees appointed, or the Board of Trustees constituted, by the Commissioner.'"

This is necessary for the same reason as I have mentioned for the omission of clause 40."

The motion was put and carried.

SRI K. BHASHYAM :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I am able to understand the sense of it, Sir, but I have some little difficulty and that is this : Clause 41 says in respect of institutions included in the list or where the Area Committee has no jurisdiction and there is no hereditary trustee, the Commissioner can constitute the Trust Board consisting of not less than three persons and not more than five and their term of office has also been prescribed and when both hereditary and non-hereditary trustees are there at the commencement of this Act, he appoints the non-hereditary trustees. But here this clause says that the Area Committee shall have the same power as the Commissioner has in the case of a religious institution under clause 41, the powers there being in respect of constitution of the board of trustees. I am at a loss to see how the trustee will be appointed, as the power of appointing trustee is not there. I feel some difficulty in understanding the position, Sir."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I do not think there is any difficulty as it is covered by the proviso :

'Provided that the Area Committee may in the case of any institution which has no hereditary trustee, appoint a single trustee.'

The proviso sets at rest the difficulty contemplated by my hon. Friend Sri Bhashyam."

Clause 44 as amended was put and carried.

[21st November 1949]

New clause 44-A.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—“ Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move—

‘After clause 44, insert the following clause :—

“ 44-A. The power to appoint trustees under section 41 or section 44 shall be exercisable notwithstanding that the scheme, if any, settled, or deemed under this Act to have been settled for the institution contains provision to the contrary.”

Even now there is such a provision and it is considered desirable to make such a provision in the case of other institutions like this also.”

SRI K. BHASHYAM :—“ Mr. Speaker, Sir, this is of great constitutional importance and I am afraid it cannot be disposed of within a short time, as it will take much time. Therefore, we shall take it up to-morrow.”

MR. SPEAKER :—“ We shall take up further consideration of the clause and amendments to-morrow.”

THE MADRAS HINDU RELIGIOUS AND CHARITABLE
ENDOWMENTS BILL, 1949 (L.A. BILL

22nd November 1950]

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—" Madam, there is a difference between merely opposing a motion and a proposition to delete something. To delete is a more positive act than merely to oppose it. An amendment to delete a clause has got greater significance. As a matter of practice, such amendments have all along been permitted."

DEPUTY SPEAKER:—" The motion is that a new clause be inserted. Unless the House accepts the motion, the hon. Member cannot say that it be omitted. He can only oppose the motion."

SRI K. R. KARANTH:—" Madam, all the clauses as framed by the Joint Select Committee are before the house. So, a motion to delete a particular clause will be in order. In this case there is no such original clause. A new clause is sought to be inserted by the Government. Therefore, the only possible thing seems to be to oppose the insertion of that clause, because it has not yet formed part of the Bill. A motion for deletion of that clause may not be appropriate."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—" If there is no original clause, my amendment comes in as an amendment to the Government amendment. Therefore, it is perfectly in order. The Government amendment is to insert a clause. My amendment is an amendment to that."

DEPUTY SPEAKER:—" He can oppose it."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—" The practice is this. If the Government want to move an amendment and my proposition is that it should be deleted, my amendment comes in as an amendment to the Government amendment. That has been the procedure here all along. I have gone through the trial of three or four long Bills and I submit that the practice which I am suggesting has been followed in this House. Therefore, I move this as an amendment to an amendment."

DEPUTY SPEAKER:—" I do not think it is a correct proposition at all. Where there is a clause or an amendment that is incorporated in the Bill, the hon. Member can say that it be deleted. But here the Hon. Minister wants to insert a new clause. It has not been considered. If it is once considered and incorporated in the Bill, then the hon. Member can say that it be omitted. Now, he can only oppose it."

(At this stage Mr. Speaker occupied the Chair.)

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, we are now in a very interesting position. (Laughter.) The Hon. the Minister for Law has moved for the insertion of a new clause 44-A. I have an amendment that it be deleted. The Hon. Minister raises a point of order that I cannot move an amendment to delete a provision. (The Hon. Sri K. Madhava Menon: 'That is not what I said. You are misquoting me.') I cannot misquote a person right in his presence." (Laughter.)

THE MADRAS LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

Wednesday, the 22nd November 1950.

The House met in the Assembly Chamber, Fort St. George, at eleven of the clock, Mr. Speaker (THE HON. SRI J. SIVASHANMUGAM PILLAI) in the Chair.

THE MADRAS HINDU RELIGIOUS AND CHARITABLE ENDOWMENTS
BILL, 1949 (L.A. BILL NO. 10 OF 1949)—cont.

DEPUTY SPEAKER:—" The Hon. Minister has moved for the insertion of a new clause 44-A in the Bill. Hon. Sri Viswanatham's amendment has to be moved."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—" Madam, I have moved for the insertion of a new clause 44-A. There is no clause to be omitted. Therefore, my hon. Friend can only oppose my motion. He cannot ask that the clause be omitted."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—" Madam, I can move to delete the clause."

DEPUTY SPEAKER:—" That is, the hon. Member is opposing the motion for the insertion of the new clause?"

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, my objection was to his moving an amendment to a provision which is sought to be introduced. How can a provision which is not in the Bill be deleted? It is open to him to oppose the new clause and not make a motion to delete it when it is not there. I can understand him if he makes a verbal amendment to that effect. But certainly he cannot make a motion. Sir, I feel that he is making a motion only to get entitled to a right of reply." (Laughter.)

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"The Hon. Minister seems to know my mind much more than myself. (Laughter.) Sir, I submit that my amendment is to the Government amendment to insert a new clause 44-A. Let me proceed with the subject-matter of the Motion. The gravamen of the offence of this clause is this. It says—

'The power to appoint trustees under section 41 or 44 shall be exercisable notwithstanding that the scheme, if any, settled, or deemed under this Act to have been settled for the institution contains provision to the contrary.'

Sir, we have always been saying on the floor of this House that where there are schemes already settled, they should not be disturbed by this legislation. The schemes already settled would have created certain positions and my point is that such things must be kept intact. The words commencing with 'notwithstanding' should go if the clause is to stand. But they form the blood and bone of the clause and if they go the whole clause goes. I, therefore, say that the whole clause must be deleted and schemes already settled should not be disturbed by this kind of legislation."

SRI K. R. KARANTH:—"Sir, I am opposing the Government Motion. I have already said that it is enough to oppose it. We need not delete it. It being a new clause, I take this view and I have already expressed it. When I oppose this Motion, Sir, I am doing so on two grounds. In the first place, we were told by the Government yesterday that in respect of hereditary trustees and other persons they were respecting the existing rights of those people, that they did not interfere with them and that they were advised against doing so. But to day the position is just contrary to that, because in the case of settled schemes that have been finally decided by the Courts, by this new provision we are giving authority to the Commissioner or to the Area Committee to appoint trustees in contravention, if necessary, of the terms of the schemes so settled. The Government are doing just the thing which they spoke against yesterday.

"Secondly, Sir, my submission is this. There is a clause in the Bill in which provision exists for modifying existing schemes for valid reasons. Clause 63 provides for modification of existing schemes. I feel strongly that till such modification is made, this power of appointing trustees contrary to the provisions of the existing schemes should not be given. It is not good and the idea should not be supported."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, we are now far removed from the position which we had taken when the Bill was first introduced in this House. We moved a little further from our original position when the Bill was before the Select Committee and are moving still further now when the Bill is before the House for our acceptance. The position has, therefore, changed from time to time. Now we are in a position where we have to give the Area Committee and the trustees large powers of management of the various institutions in their charge. Their rights we have come to recognize and we have shown our sympathy—lip sympathy I may call it in the present case—to the Constitution by allowing some members of the denominations to have some right to manage their own affairs. In such a case, suppose a scheme has already been framed by a Court or by the Board in its wisdom in a particular manner. Why should we appoint a trustee contrary to the terms of such a scheme when the Court has finalised it? The Court is certainly a better authority than the Board. You will find, Sir, that under clause 63 a Deputy Commissioner can also formulate new schemes which may include the removal of a trustee, hereditary and non-hereditary. In the case of religious institutions other than maths it is to be done by the Deputy Commissioner and in the case of maths by the Commissioner. Now we have taken all these pains for purposes of framing schemes. I do not think that we should really set aside for instance, schemes in which the Court, for some reason or other, has come to the conclusion that the appointment of trustees must be in the hands of the villagers or persons who make contributions to the temple funds. If such a provision has been made by the Court in the interests of the temple or the institutions concerned, why should we put in a new provision to supersede those directions? If such a provision is there, it is a very good provision. It is a salutary provision. If the Government want to modify schemes let them do so properly. Let them not attempt it in this indirect form. This new provision is hopelessly contrary to the assurances given by the Hon. the Law Minister and, therefore, it ought not to be there."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—"I am afraid Sir, that this clause is the most clumsily worded of all the clauses in the Bill. Sub-clause (1) to clause 44 says that the Area Committee shall have power to appoint either a single trustee or a Board of trustees. I am sure that it is not the idea of the Government to appoint single trustees. I can understand the Area Committees being given power to add one or two trustees to the number of hereditary trustees. If the idea of the Government is to do away with hereditary trustees once and for all by the appointment of single trustees, then it is not fair. When the appointment of single trustees is made it is better to respect the feelings of the people connected with the temples. Hereditary trustees should be allowed to continue wherever they exist. It is only when their continuance in office is felt to be not congenial to the better administration of the temples, the Area Committees should be empowered to select one or two trustees in addition to the hereditary trustees already existing and carry on the management of the institutions. In any case, they should not be totally uprooted and told that they will have no place in the new dispensation."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, there is no question of the hereditary trustees being uprooted. We have already said in clauses 41 to 44 that hereditary trustees will become members of the Board and non-hereditary trustees will be appointed in addition to them to the Board and not by 'uprooting' them. The question of appointing single trustees arises only in cases where there is no hereditary trustee at all. Therefore, the question of ousting hereditary trustees does not at all arise here and this clause must stay.

"After listening to my hon. Friend, Sri Bhashyam, I feel that this is another case of his becoming wiser after the event. Sir, the new clause sought to be inserted under clause 44, viz., 44-A did find a place in the Bill as reported upon by the Joint Select Committee. Clause 44 in the original Bill says—

"In the case of any religious institution over which an Area Committee has jurisdiction, the following provisions shall apply notwithstanding that the institution has a hereditary trustee or trustees or that the scheme settled or deemed to be settled for the institution contains provision to the contrary."

Since this clause has been amended we have put the substance of it in a new clause and introduced it as clause 44-A. The language used in the original clause 44 and the new clause 44-A is identical. When clause 44 was discussed Sri Bhashyam did not move any amendment to it though my hon. Friend, Sri Viswanatham, moved for its deletion. Under the provisions of clauses 41 to 44, we cannot disturb the existing trustees. The new clause is intended to cover such cases as may require certain changes for the better notwithstanding the fact that they have been finalised either by the Court or the Board. Suppose the Court has said there should be one trustee for an institution. It will be open to the Commissioner to have a Board of Trustees instead of one. That is the intention of the Government in inserting this new clause and it is absolutely necessary."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir. . ."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"He has not moved any amendment and, therefore, he has no right of reply."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"I rise on a point of information, Sir. How are we to reconcile ourselves, placed as we are now, with the provisions of clause 63. Clause 63 empowers the Deputy Commissioner to settle a scheme and clause 67 provides for appeal to the Court against the orders of the Deputy Commissioner. What is the position of clause 44-A vis-a-vis clauses 63 and 67? Does the Hon. the Minister for Law want to set aside only existing schemes framed by the High Court some time ago or does he mean laying his hands on all schemes which are covered by clauses 63 and 67?"

[Sri T. Viswanatham] 22nd November 1950]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, clause 63 gives power to the Deputy Commissioner to frame schemes. Clause 44-A, on the other hand, relates to the powers of the Commissioner to appoint trustees under clauses 41 to 44. I have not come across any scheme framed by the High Court. There are schemes framed or settled by the Board, settled by Courts and drawn up by agreement between two parties. There are such settled schemes in which if any change is required for the betterment of the schemes themselves, the Commissioner can effect those changes. Clause 44-A empowers him to do so and that is all the position."

Clause 44-A was put and carried.

Clause 45.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—
'That clause 45 do stand part of the Bill.'"

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I move—
'Omit this clause.'"

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"How can it be an amendment, Sir? Government want the deletion of the clause."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"The position is that clause 45 is before the House and as much I move that the clause be deleted."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, in view of the Hon. Minister's statement I should also be allowed to move such amendments, Sir."

SRIMATHI C. AMMANNA RAJA:—"Does the hon. Member, Sri Viswanatham want that the Hon. Minister should oppose the original clause?"

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, in view of the fact that we have omitted clauses 40 and 43 there is no necessity for this clause."

The motion was put and carried.

Clause 46.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—
'That clause 46 do stand part of the Bill.'"

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"I don't propose to move the amendment, Sir. The existing clause may remain."

[22nd November 1950]

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—" May I know, Sir, why the Government are not moving the amendment? They have given notice of an amendment."

MR. SPEAKER:—" It does not simply mean that because the Government have given notice of an amendment, they should move it. They have the power to move or not to move it."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—" I agree, Sir, they have got all powers. But it takes one's breath away when in the first instance they say they want to move an amendment and then say that they don't propose to move it. It is mere waste of time to put something on paper and then say they do not want it any more. What happens is this. On the basis of the Government amendment we have given a number of amendments. Since Government are not moving their amendment what is to happen to our amendments? I would rather move for the adjournment of the House on the very basis of this matter . . ."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—" May I point out one thing, Sir? The Government amendment was given recently, some days back and on this additional amendments have been given by hon. Members. Perhaps all these will have to be dropped. But the other amendments, the amendments given to the original clause, remain and may be moved."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—" I want the Hon. Minister to explain the position, Sir."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—" The original clause reads thus—

"In making appointments of trustees under sections 41, 44, or 45, the Commissioner or the Area Committee, as the case may be, shall have due regard to the claims of persons belonging to the religious denomination for whose benefit the institution concerned is chiefly maintained."

"The amendment that we proposed was—

The reason for not moving the amendment is that we have defined already what a person who has interest means. The person interested can include any persons, it need not necessarily be 'a person belonging to the denomination for whose benefit the institution concerned exists'. On subsequent consideration we thought that the amendment may not be as good as limiting it to persons of the denomination for whose good the institution concerned exists. That is why the original clause is being retained and the amendment is not moved.

"In view of the fact that we are not moving the amendment to this clause, an amendment may be necessary to the existing clause 46 as we have omitted clause 45. I will move an amendment later on."

22nd November 1950]

MR. SPEAKER:—" The hon. Member Sri Viswanatham may move his amendment for the deletion of the clause."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—" Sir, I move—
'Delete the clause.'

"Sir, all along our fight has been that the persons appointed to the posts of trustees should be persons who belong to the religious denomination for whose benefit the institution concerned is chiefly maintained. I understand now why the Hon. Minister is not moving his proposed amendment. 'A person having interest' may have a double meaning. A person having interest in the religious denomination may mean a person belonging to that religious denomination. But a person having interest has elsewhere been defined—I think in clause 6 (11). Trustees also will be deemed as persons having interest in the institution. If the idea of the Government is that the trustees appointed under clauses 41 and 44 are to be deemed as persons coming under clause 6 (11) then the definition is not quite appropriate. There is another point. The Hon. Minister says that the trustees shall not be of the same denomination but only have interest in the purposes for which the institution was founded. I submit, Sir, the original clause also though not very bad, still it is bad enough: 'due regard to the claims of persons belonging to the religious denomination for whose benefit the institution concerned is chiefly maintained', is the wording in the original clause. It is something. But on the other hand our contention has been that it is not merely due regard that should be given to persons belonging to the religious denomination but that the trustees must belong to the religious denomination for whose benefit the institution concerned is chiefly maintained. Else this due regard may become disregard in course of time. I submit therefore that the Clause should be altogether deleted to save further trouble."

SRI K. R. KARANTH:—" Sir, while Government cannot be compelled to move a particular amendment of which they have given notice, one can quite see why they don't do it. Certainly I understand it in a different way, because the clause as it stands says 'the Commissioner shall have due regard to the claims of persons belonging to the religious denomination'. That means that their claims should be considered; but in actually appointing the trustees, the Commissioner may or may not consider their claims. That opportunity is given here. That is how I understand it. Whereas under the new Clause which the Government had given notice of after taking legal advice they had no power to appoint anybody they liked and that the trustee must be a person having interest in the institution. I do not find any substantial difference between 'religious denomination' in the one or 'having interest' in the other. The thing is no outsiders, persons who have no interest in the institution, should come in. That is the essence. The real difference is, under the Clause as it now stands they can appoint anybody whom they like whereas according to the amendment of which they gave notice they are bound to appoint only such persons who have interest in the institution. It would have been much better if the Government had introduced the new Clause but since they don't do it, I see that this is the next best one."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"I have given notice of an amendment to the Government amendment, Sir. It says—

'Add at the end of the Clause, "and belonging to the denomination or sect for which the religious institution is intended".'

Sir, you must at least allow me to move that amendment."

MR. SPEAKER:—"It is an amendment to the Government amendment. Government have not moved their amendment and therefore I cannot allow it. Further how does it fit in with the original clause?"

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"If the Government are not moving their amendment, at least please allow me by using your discretion, Sir, to move it as an amendment to the original clause 46."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"He has not given notice of an amendment to the original clause, Sir."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"I have given enough notice, Sir, to everybody of what I have got in my mind. Is there any surprise in this matter to the Government or to any of the hon. Members here is all that you have to look into, Sir. Let me pass on my amendment to you."

MR. SPEAKER:—"Whether it would fit in with the original clause or not has to be examined. It will take time."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"If the Government go on changing their ground, we have also to change our mind bit by bit. I shall redraft the amendment and see that it fits in with the original clause. If my amendment is not accepted, I oppose the whole clause. If it is accepted, the point of our side is this . . ."

MR. SPEAKER:—"I am going to put the amendment of Sri Viswanatham to the vote of the House. The amendment is—

'Delete the clause.'

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"Sir, Government are certainly entitled not to move any amendment of which they have given notice. But Government are not entitled to explain things in a different way from what it is actually intended. The difference between the two clauses the original one and the amendment proposed, is this. The Hon. Minister explained that really they were seeking smaller power, a very restricted power than that sought under the amendment of which they gave notice. The amendment of which they gave notice proceeds on the basis that 'Every trustee', please read from the beginning, let me understand the meaning of things and vote upon it—Every trustee appointed by the Commissioner—note the language, 'every trustee'—not even one out of ten can be a person other than those interested in the institution concerned. 'Person having interest in the institution' has already been defined and passed by the House. What was the original clause 46? Clause 46 says that 'In making appointments of trustees under sections 41, 44 or 45 the Commissioner or the Area Committee, as the case may be, shall have due regard to claims of persons belonging to the religious denomination for whose benefit the institution concerned is chiefly maintained.' 'Shall have due regard to the claims' that is all it says. They will consider the claims and give them priority if it is necessary or prefer them to other people whom they have in their minds to appoint. The idea is patronage under the original clause 46 would be much wider than exists under the amendment which the Government gave. In fact, the interpretation has been the other way about. Let every hon. Member understand the proper implication of the amendment and the withdrawal of the amendment. I do not object to the Government having clause 46 in the old fashion in which they desire it at present. But let me not be deluded into the belief that clause 46 is not wider than clause 46 as amended or rather was sought to be amended. Really speaking the old clause 46 gives much wider powers of patronage to the Government than they ought to exercise in this matter."

SRI M. S. PATTABHIRAMIAH:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir. The Government have taken us all by surprise by not moving the amendment they gave notice of. I intended to second the amendment to the Government amendment given notice of by my hon. Friend Sri M. R. Appa Rao. I understand that the Government have withdrawn their amendment and so my hon. Friend Sri M. R. Appa Rao may not be very much interested to move his amendment."

MR. SPEAKER:—"Hon. Sri Appa Rao has not given any amendment to Government amendment. He has given an amendment to the original clause. (Interruption.) Let me hear Sri Appa Rao. Does the hon. Members want to speak on the amendment moved by hon. Sri T. Viswanatham?"

SRI M. S. PATTABHIRAMIAH:—"Sir, I do not mind about his amendment. I want to speak on Sri Appa Rao's amendment if it will be taken up."

MR. SPEAKER:—"He has not given any amendment to Government amendment. He has given an amendment to the original clause 46."

SRI M. S. PATTABHIRAMIAH:—"Sir, I beg to point out one thing. At least the Government might have deleted the words 'or 45' occurring in this clause as we have already deleted clause 45. The clause 46 as it stands contains the words 'or 45'."

[22nd November 1950]

MR. SPEAKER:—"The Government have given an amendment for that."

SRI M. S. PATTABHIRAMIAH:—"Sir, that is alright. I simply wanted to point out this."

"As far as it goes, Sir, the Commissioner would try to appoint a person having regard to the religious denominations for whom the religious institution was intended. If it was confined to a person who had interest in the religious denomination for whose benefit the institution was intended, it would have been better. If a person not belonging to that particular religious denomination is appointed, he may not have any interest in the institution itself. As the Hon. Minister, Sri K. Madhava Menon said, even Charvaka was considered to be a Rishi. There may be Charvakas and there are Charvakas in each religious denomination. Charvaka was never called a Rishi by our ancient people. He cared only for sexual enjoyment and he taught only sexual enjoyment instead of spiritual advancement. We have many such people in every religious denomination and generally among people professing faith in Hinduism. May be that these Charvakas are the followers of Rishi Charvaka and who nominally belonged to Hinduism. I am only afraid, Sir, that these Charvakas may be appointed as trustees. If the Government had chosen to put in religious denominational interests and if the Commissioner had been compelled to appoint only persons who have any religious denominational interest in the institution as trustees, it would have been good. If not, Sir, it will be only encouraging the people who have absolutely no religious inclination, to go into the institution and destroy it."

SRI K. VARADACHARI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, A difficulty arises in this. The words 'shall have due regard' in the original clause is suspected to mean also 'shall not have undue regard'. That is the difficulty that arises because it lends to that meaning and because it is left to the whims and fancies of an officer or an Area Committee in nominating a trustee. Therefore, why should the Government take upon themselves the responsibility of leaving this in such doubt and creating panic in the minds of the public as to what is being done in the creation of trusteeships for about 30,000 institutions in this State? Therefore, it is better that the Government change the language a little so that it may be binding. Their serious intention to modify this is revealed in the new clause that they have proposed. Consistent with that intention, the original clause may be amended by suitable words in a very short way by the Government themselves, instead of putting all people in a panic about this."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir. I do not see absolutely any difficulty in appreciating clause 46. It does not give anything beyond what it means. When the legislature language says 'shall have due regard', I do not think it is proper on our part to read something else in it. It only means 'shall have due regard' and there is nothing for monkeying about the language."

"I think, Sir, that Statutes are for all time and not for a particular time only. They are not governed by some persons always. The letter of the law will be always interpreted in a very liberal fashion. The clause concedes the obligation to consider the claims of persons belonging to religious denomination. I do not see any reason why, if simply a Vaishnavite is appointed as a trustee for a Shiva temple, the people cannot get along in the same way as before. The people are getting attracted to Advaita philosophy. I have absolute regard for both Shaivites and Vaishnavites. I do not know that a Shaivite will be inimical to Vaishnavite and vice versa. We need not fear that people will fight simply because a man of other denomination is appointed as a trustee for the temple. So long as they are Hindus and they believe in the tenets of Hinduism, I do not think that heavens will fall on account of entrusting the trusteeship to persons other than those who belong to that particular religious denomination. I do not think, Sir, that they will be so narrow-minded."

SRI M. R. APPA RAO:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir. My original intention in moving an amendment is that persons occupying the trusteeships must be persons belonging to the religious denominational interests. As hon. Sri N. S. Varadachari has said, there is lot of difference between the amendment given notice of by the Government and the original clause. The original clause contains 'shall have due regard'. The amendment contains 'shall be a person having interest in the institution concerned'. If Government say that they do not move it, my amendment also is automatically dropped. Is that the ruling, Sir?"

MR. SPEAKER:—"Yes."

SRI M. R. APPA RAO:—"I suggest that the Government may make suitable amendment to clause 46 so that persons belonging to the particular religious denomination to which the temple belongs only may be selected. Of course, as my hon. Friend Sri V. Raghavayya said, other people may not have any hostile intentions to each other's denominational sections; but there may be persons having such narrow view and we must also provide for that. Let the Government say that the person need not necessarily belong to the particular religious denomination and yet he must have interest in the religious institution. But, how to find out that it is so is a difficult question. Let the Commissioner ascertain the information that that person is a Hindu—of course Hinduism has many sects and some sects are opposed to each other—and that at least he is interested in the religious institution and he is not opposed to other sects. Let the Commissioner see that no discord is brought by the appointment of trustees. With this view,

[Sri M. R. Appa Rao] [22nd November 1950]

I want the Government to see what amendments are necessary. This religious denominational interest is guaranteed by the Constitution. So, we must be careful about this aspect."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I only want to add a word by way of reply to my hon. Friend Sri V. Raghavayya. I appreciate the highly philosophical ideals propounded by him that a Vaishnavite may be appointed as a trustee for a Siva temple and a Shaivite for a Vaishnavite temple and there is no harm. But, I want to bring to his notice that the Constitution stands in the way because it gives that right to persons belonging to that particular religious denomination only. It has already been recognised and we want to give recognition that the right to manage the institution should really vest in a person who belongs to that particular religious denomination."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I cannot be compelled, as hon. Karanth said, to move the amendment. Let it not be under any doubt. Hon. Mr. K. Varadachari said that the Government may accept some other wording. If the wording of the amendment that I have given notice of will satisfy the Hon. Members, I have no objection. But, that is not the case. The amendment is that 'every trustee appointed by the Commissioner under section 41 or by the Area Committee under section 44 shall be a person having interest in the institution concerned. There are other amendments. It is idle to contend that, because I dropped the amendment, that amendment is right. Sir, many amendments have been given. I gave an amendment in the same way as any hon. Member gave an amendment. I do not move the amendment in the same way as any other Member may not move it."

"Sri T. Viswanatham's amendment is that clause 46 should be deleted. Sir, it cannot be deleted. What is exactly the connotation. It says in making appointments of trustees under sections 41, 44 or 45, the Commissioner or the Area Committee, as the case may be, shall have due regard to the claims of persons belonging to the religious denomination for whose benefit the institution concerned is chiefly maintained. It is necessary to have it like that. As Sri N. S. Varadachari said, it has a restricted meaning. But, I feel, Sir, that the words '... having interest in the institution' is much more wide and so the clause may stand."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir. Speaking on the language of clause 46, I said that they shall have due regard to claims of the persons, etc., etc. I submitted, Sir, and I still suggest that the words 'shall have due regard' in course of time will mean 'due disregard'. That is the real trouble, Sir. The Hon. Minister said, 'if you had accepted my amendment, everything would have been all right.' But he has withdrawn that amendment and there is no possibility of accepting it or modifying it. This is not in keeping with the demand we have been making that the trustees belonging to the same denomination should be there. 'Due regard' will degenerate into disregard. It should therefore be deleted."

The amendment was put and lost.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I move—
In line 2 of clause 46, for the figures and word "or 45," substitute the figures and word "41 or ..."

The amendment was put and carried.

JANAB MAHIN SCHAMNAD:—"I want to know whether I can move my amendment to the original clause or the amended clause?"

MR. SPEAKER:—"The Government amendment is not moved now. His amendment can therefore be only to the original clause."

JANAB MAHIN SCHAMNAD:—"I move—

After the words "the religious denomination", add the words "or community or group of persons"."

MR. SPEAKER:—"Nobody has seconded the motion."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"I second it, Sir."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, for various reasons this amendment is not acceptable to the Government."

The amendment was put and lost.

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, I move—

That the following be added at the end of clause 46:—
"The persons so appointed shall belong to the denomination for whose benefit the institution is existing or is being maintained."

"The Government say that they will have due regard to the claims of the community. The claims of the community may be of many sorts. One such claim may be that they wish to elect a person. In many villages these trustees are elected by the community and they may ask this right to be recognized. This might satisfy the letter of the law, but the person so appointed may not belong to that particular denomination for whose benefit the institution exists and you may not get the co-operation of the community. If the person so selected does not belong to that particular denomination, difficulties will arise. In a village there may be two parties, the angalathamman party and one in opposition to it. On account of village feuds one party may say that the person chosen does not belong to this or that particular street and therefore should not be the trustee or ask for one more trustee for their group. To avoid these tangles I am suggesting that the person so appointed shall belong to the denomination for whose benefit the institution is existing or is being maintained. A trustee or an archaka may not belong to the community for whose benefit the institution exists and people's mind would be agitated. We cannot really ignore the feelings of the people altogether. Therefore it will be best if the Government take my advice and accept my amendment. This will promote harmonious working and stimulate local interest in the temple."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"I second the amendment."

SRI V. M. RAMASWAMI MUDALIYAR:—"The point sought to be made out is very clear. The hon. Mover says that there is now elasticity in the provision: the Commissioner is now permitted to go outside the religious denomination and choose a man. My hon. Friend does not want this elasticity. But I ask, why should we, in the case of the Commissioner and the Area Committee, always be suspicious that they act without due regard to the intentions of the Legislature? They are bound to consider the claims of persons of that denomination. After all they are human beings and responsible authorities recognized by the Act. Why should we suspect them all and say that they will not consider the claims of persons belonging to that denomination and that they will wilfully disregard the opinion of the Legislature? My hon. Friend moved so many amendments in which he placed the matadhipathis and trustees on a pedestal of infallibility. He does not admit that they are fallible. At the same time he depicts the Commissioner and the Area Committee as irresponsible people who will disregard the directions of the Legislature. I do not think that that sort of suspicion is merited by these persons appointed under the law. The provision in this regard is quite clear and correctly conveys the directions of the Legislature. If still these people go wrong, the Government can pull them up. It is not proper to live in an air of suspicion all the time."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I have not much to add to what hon. Mr. Ramaswami Mudaliyar said just now. The existing provision is that in making the appointment of trustees under section 41 or 44, the Commissioner or the Area Committee, as the case may be, shall have due regard to the claims of persons belonging to the religious denomination for whose benefit the institution concerned is chiefly maintained. To this my hon. Friend Mr. Bhashyam wants to add: 'The persons so appointed shall belong to the denomination for whose benefit the institution is existing or is being maintained.' This is something very different from what the Government have in view. I cannot accept the amendment. The Government is always content with saying 'No'. That I can understand. But what I cannot understand is what fell from hon. Sri Ramaswami Mudaliyar. Let me tell him that the whole Bill is based on suspicion of trustees and of the authorities now managing the temples. The Bill in effect says that every trustee is a dishonest man; every matadhipathi is a rogue; and only persons in the world who have some honesty are the persons to be appointed by the Government. That is the spirit of the whole Bill. It is not I that raised the question of suspicion. It is not I that suspected that these persons will do something wrong. The whole Bill seems to be actuated by the spirit of suspicion. I could have understood it if hon. Mr. Ramaswami Mudaliyar had stated that everybody should be deemed to be honest till he is found to be dishonest. But what is happening now? Today everybody is held up as dishonest, the small man with the big man, if he has any public money in his hands. This suspicion was not created by me. It is the Government that created it. The Bill has created fear and apprehensions and the words uttered here are also responsible for it. We say we should have responsible people for discharging these functions and that now people walk away with public money. Small people interpret this in their own way and say all sorts of things against the trustees. Therefore let not my friend think that he is right. All that I ask is that, if it is possible, why not we do something to remove the suspicion from the suspicious minds. There is a suspicion that they may go outside the community for making the appointments of trustees. Why not remove that suspicion? I am glad that hon. Mr. Ramaswami Mudaliyar recognized the justice of my amendment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Speaker, I would not have sought to speak a second time on this amendment, but for the remarks made by hon. Mr. Bhashyam. He made a statement that the entire Bill is based on suspicion."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Absolutely."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"The hon. Member misrepresented the Government as saying that every matadhipathi is a rogue and that only the trustees can be trusted. Let me assure hon. Mr. Bhashyam that that is not the case of the Government."

"Then, Sir, hon. Mr. Bhashyam was heard to say that there is apprehension in the minds of the people about this Bill. To that may I say that, as against that apprehension in the minds of some, there are lakhs of people who feel that the temples and trusts which belong to the entire community are not being properly administered and that there rogishness plays a large part in their administration. The whole principle of the Bill is that we should prevent such things and put an end to roguery. As prevention is better than cure, now that it is possible for us to prevent it, let us do so. This Bill is based on actual facts and nothing less."

The amendment of Mr. Bhashyam was put and lost.

MR. SPEAKER:—" Clause 46 as amended is for the consideration of the House."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—" Sir, I am very sorry that so much heat has been generated in a matter like this. The Hon. Minister and other hon. Members should learn to be restrained in their pronouncements in general and in a Bill of this kind in particular. The Bill does not proceed on distrust. I certainly agree that a certain amount of control is necessary and ought to be exercised over the public, sometimes over a section of the public and sometimes over even a very small section of the public like the Government's own servants. There is no objection to that kind of control. The Bill as originally conceived was one thing and the Bill as it has finally emerged from the Select Committee and after all the Government amendments have been passed, is quite another thing. Today the initiative is all to come from the trustees. Though appointments may be made by the Commissioner, the power will be exercised in the first instance by the trustees. There ought to be a feeling of hope in the country. There are many good men and true everywhere throughout the land who will come forward to take charge of these institutions and run them for the benefit of the millions who are not in this or that controversy or on this or that side and who are looking forward only to one thing, namely, the correct observance of the grand traditions of the country."

Clause 46 as amended was put and carried.

Clause 47 was put and carried.

Clause 48.

MR. SPEAKER:—" The motion is—

' That clause 48 do stand part of the Bill.' "

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—" Sir, I move the following amendment:—

' Omit clause 48.'

" Since clause 40 which deals with the appointment of executive officers has been omitted there is no necessity for this clause dealing with the powers and duties of executive officers."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—" Sir, I congratulate the Government on moving this amendment."

The amendment was put and carried.

Clause 49.

MR. SPEAKER:—" The motion is—

' That clause 49 do stand part of the Bill.' "

[22nd November 1950]

Sub-clause (1).

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—" Sir, I move the following amendment:—

' For the words " The Deputy Commissioner in the case of any religious institution . . . other religious institution, substitute the words " The Commissioner ", and insert the following after " may " in the line 4:—

" apply to the Principal Court of Original Civil Jurisdiction to."

" Sir, this involves a principle of great importance for which we have been striving energetically for the last three or four days and which has been opposed by the Government equally energetically. This clause deals with the power to suspend, remove or dismiss trustees. The clause reads—

' 49 (1) The Deputy Commissioner in the case of any religious institution over which an Area Committee has jurisdiction, and the Commissioner in the case of any other religious institution may suspend, remove or dismiss any hereditary or non-hereditary trustee or trustees thereof . . . '

We will deal with the question of how far we can touch the hereditary trustees later on. The power to remove or dismiss the trustees should not be exercised by the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioners on their own authority. The Deputy Commissioner should not come into the picture at all. The Commissioner should initiate the proceedings in all cases covered by sub-clauses (a) to (e). I do not say that the trustee should continue there if it is a case of persistent default or wilful disobedience of lawful orders or if there is misfeasance, malfeasance or misappropriation, if he is of unsound mind or if he has a mental or physical disability which unfits him for discharging his duties. But it is not the Deputy Commissioner or the Commissioner that should be the final authorities in the matter. The Government have been contending that they should be the authority and I have been contending all along that while the thing may start with the Commissioner, the decision must be left in the hands of the civil courts. It is for the Principal Court of Original Civil Jurisdiction to remove or dismiss a hereditary or non-hereditary trustee. Sir, I have been fighting for a principle and I hope that after some time the Government also will agree with me. I want them to agree with me even now and say that these matters are better decided by the courts. We have seen just now how heat has been generated on suspicion. Sir, we are suspecting some people and others are suspecting us here. All of us who live in this world live in glass houses and there is no use of throwing stones at others."

MR. SPEAKER:—" Let us come to this question." (Laughter.)

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—" I want that the final decision in these matters should not be left to the officers appointed by the Government but to the Courts which are not actuated by any party colourings and not subject to any extraneous influences. They should be the persons who will give a final decision in these matters. The Commissioner can certainly initiate action in these matters, but he should get the sanction of the Principal Court of Original Civil Jurisdiction having jurisdiction over the area."

• SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, I second this amendment for more reasons than one. The first is this. The Commissioner and the Deputy Commissioners and the various hierarchy of officers are the very persons who will be complaining against the trustees for wilful default, misfeasance, malfeasance, misappropriation and so on. These are the very persons again who will decide whether the trustees are guilty or not. A man cannot be both prosecutor and judge in the same case. The Commissioner, let us suppose, issues an order. The trustee says that it is not a lawful order and that he is not going to obey it because it is not lawful. The Commissioner will say that the trustee is not obeying lawful orders, that he is wilfully defaulting and therefore he may dismiss him. That is how the thing will be judged. To have the person making the complaint as the person who is to decide it, is not justifiable from any moral point of view.

"Next, Sir, even from a practical point of view, let us look at the matter. The Hon. Minister in charge of the Bill has more than once admitted that it is very difficult to get respectable persons to come forward to take up trusteeships, because it is an onerous duty. If the person is a very religious man, he will say, 'I am afraid I might unconsciously appropriate some of the property of the temple and thereby I might go to hell.' There is another class of people who would like to have the power and prestige of being trustees but for the irksomeness of the job. They do not like to place themselves in a position where any man may put in a petition about something or other to the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner and the latter ask them to give their explanations about it. After all these gentlemen could only give a portion of their time for the duties of a trustee. It is not as though they have a regular office with clerks appointed to look into the tappals and reply to them and so on. I know in one instance there was a complaint that the trustee did not reply to the letters at once. That is the sort of thing that is asked for. We have been going on in some easy way. If there is mismanagement or taking away of funds fraudulently, I do not want you to be lenient. But if for mistakes of the kind I have mentioned a man is dismissed, whoever will come into the job at all? If every petty officer is going to ask the trustee to show his registers, show his accounts and ask him why the returns are not given properly and so on, it will be very difficult. Therefore if you want the right type of men for the posts of trustees, you must see that they are treated properly.

"Then the third point is this. Suppose a person is dismissed from his trusteeship. If he happens to get into a witness box at any time thereafter invariably the question will be put to him, 'Where you not dismissed from your trusteeship of so and so?' If hon. Mr. V. M. Ramaswami Mudaliyar appears in the case on the opposite side, he is sure to put that question to him. Look at the obloquy that is involved when a man is dismissed in this way. Why should we condemn a man in this way? Will it be proper to do this? It will be a black-mark following him all through his life. Whenever he appears for selection for a public job, this will be trotted out against him. Therefore in a case like this which affects a man's character, where the obloquy will pursue him throughout his life, it is better that the matter is put before a proper court, a judicial enquiry is made, the party affected is given a chance to put forward his case and a decision obtained from the Court. The Commissioner should go to a court of law and he should not be the final authority in these matters. On all these three grounds, it is fairly conclusive that the Government should accept this amendment."

SRI R. V. SWAMINATHAN:—"Sir, I am afraid if this amendment is accepted it will be detrimental to the proper day-to-day administration of the Act. The hon. Member wants that the Commissioner should get the decision of the court in these matters. If there is a provision like that, the Commissioner can take no action even if a trustee swindles and misappropriates the funds. I have not known any cases where even for suspension of officers one has to go to courts. This is a new kind of provision that is being suggested not only in this Bill but in other Bills also. After all, Sir, who are these Commissioners and Deputy Commissioners? They will be officers of great experience selected from the highest ranks of the services and they can certainly be expected to use their sense of proportion. They would not, for any flimsy reason, suspend or dismiss a trustee or hereditary trustee. They will go into the whole question thoroughly before they take any such action. Only if there are any of the grounds mentioned in clauses (a) to (e) of sub-clause (1) will they dismiss or suspend a trustee. There is this thing also, Sir. The trustee affected has got the right of going to a court. Instead of asking the officer to go to a court and adopting a new procedure, the trustee affected may go to a court. Therefore, Sir, I strongly object to the amendment. Though Sri K. Bhashyam has seconded the amendment, he is a lawyer and he must know more than I what is possible and what is not possible and I am sure he will agree with me. It is absolutely impossible to ask the officers to go to a court before they take any such action. I oppose the amendment, Sir."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The House will now rise and reassemble at 2-30 p.m."

[22nd November 1950]

(After lunch—2-30 p.m.)

THE MADRAS HINDU RELIGIOUS AND CHARITABLE ENDOWMENTS

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—"Sir, the powers conferred by clause 49 are a bit too wide. I do not think it is proper to confer on Deputy Commissioners such wide powers as summarily dismissing the trustees as if they were mere servants. I should like to suggest, on the other hand, that the Commissioner alone should be empowered to remove any trustee for any one of the causes enumerated in the clause. And he should do it only after an enquiry. As it is, the clause does not provide for any enquiry at all. It is only proper that after an enquiry is held, the order should be pronounced by the Commissioner and the aggrieved party may be asked to go to a court of law in appeal, if he thinks fit. That would be proper; otherwise, if the Commissioner is himself to be asked to refer the matter to a court of law first and then wait for the decision, it may take two or even three years; and that will be defeating the very objects of this legislation. The idea of this legislation is to bring these institutions more and more under the control of the Government rather than to leave everything to go to the law courts for a decision. If that idea is accepted, as has been done in the foregoing clauses, I do not think it is correct to go to the courts for a judgment before any action can be taken. At the same time, I feel that anybody less than the Commissioner should not be empowered to remove the trustees."

"Again, Sir, there are certain sub-clauses here which are very indefinite. For instance, it says that a trustee can be removed for any infirmity. God knows what this infirmity is. When a man is deaf, is he disqualified? I think mere deafness should not be regarded as a disqualification or as making him unfit for attending to the duties of his office. A man may be deaf, and the only trouble is that he must be told everything very loudly; it may be a nuisance. But anyway, it is better these powers are not made as wide as they are here. Again in clause (c), you find 'neglect of duty'. For neglect of duty, a man can be removed from office. I think if that clause is to be applied to every one of us here sitting in the Assembly, we may be found grossly guilty of neglect of duties which have been prescribed not only by the Constitution of the country but even by modern canons. I think this 'neglect of duty' is too wide a disqualification and ought not to find a place in the list of disqualifications in the clause. I think the Minister himself will not be bold enough to assert that he is clean of this charge; occasions may arise when he will have to plead guilty to God, if not to men, of neglect of duty. And when a reasonable man is chosen, not by the Government or the Commissioner alone, but by the Area Committee and the public concerned, to remove him simply because he is guilty of various things of which I am sure everybody else is equally guilty, is not at all proper."

"Coming to the legal aspect, Sir, I believe an appeal must be provided for against the order of the Deputy Commissioner to a court of law. It may be that the appeal is limited to first appeal and it need not go further up. The Act may provide for the appointment of a Sub-Judge as the first court of appeal and the last court of appeal as well. Some such provision must be here to meet the ends of justice and to restore trustees to their places in cases where the Commissioner thinks they have been negligent in their duties."

"Finally, Sir, when disposing of charges against a man, the power of suspension must always be there; otherwise, the man with impunity can go on misappropriating and continue to ask the Government to go to a court of law, knowing full well that courts of law will take their own time. Even legislation takes its own time in this House; as a matter of fact, this Bill was taken up some three years ago and we are still in the middle of it. I think, Sir, this amendment must be accepted with profit by the Government."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I am only afraid that by this clause the Government want indirectly to take powers which are not really vested in them under the Constitution. In one of the speeches yesterday, the Hon. Minister said that however much he would be willing to take and would like to take the hereditary trustees under his control, the law prevented it and therefore he was not taking over such control."

but here what we find is that even the hereditary trustees are not excluded from the operation of this clause 49. By saying even the smallest thing against such trustee, such as 'you have neglected your duty' and without going to a court of law or even before a Judicial Tribunal, the Deputy Commissioner has power to remove him. This is hardly fair. I ask, Sir, what is wrong if the matter is taken to a court of law? It is a court appointed by this self-same Government to see that justice is done to the people. It may be that in all cases the Commissioner cannot interfere, but why do you want to give the power to the Deputy Commissioner to remove the trustee for vague reasons such as 'neglect of duty' or 'even wilful disobedience of an order he himself may pass'? These are provisions which, I think, are intended to bring the hereditary trustees within the scope of the clause while really as a matter of fact the Government have no right to do so. I therefore support the amendment of hon. Mr. Viswanatham.

SRI K. VARADACHARI:—"Sir, all this trouble and all these fears engendered by the wording of this clause are caused by the omission to prescribe qualifications for the Commissioners or the Deputy Commissioners in the Bill itself. If only we had said that a Commissioner should be a District Judge or a Retired High Court Judge, these apprehensions will not be there and there will not be so much of heated debate here over questions like this. Unfortunately, the Government could not see their way to make such a provision and allay the suspicions of the public, the Members of this House and others. In their anxiety to make the clauses as sweet and short as possible, all matters relating to suspension, removal, dismissal, etc., have been clubbed together, without indicating anywhere for what offence they will be removed, for what offence suspension will be the punishment and for what offence dismissal alone will be the punishment. All these things are jumbled together and that is an additional reason for the apprehensions of some of the Members of the House. Even now, Sir, it is not too late for the Government to make adequate provision for allaying the apprehensions of the public. There should be and there is bound to be some time before we take up the third reading of the Bill; and Government can go into these matters in detail, reconsider the position, and it will never be too late for them to introduce such provisions as are necessary for allaying the reasonable suspicions of the public."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, the amendment of hon. Mr. Viswanatham is to apply to the Principal Court of original civil jurisdiction before the Commissioner—and not the Deputy Commissioner—takes any action. I thought, Sir, after his amendment to insert a new clause 10-A defining the powers of Commissioners, Deputy Commissioners and others was lost, he would not be moving amendments when he wants that wherever the Commissioner has to take some action, he must move the court. In that new clause 10-A he wanted to define the functions of the Commissioner—that he should maintain registers, watch the working of the institutions, apply to civil courts for the framing of schemes, launch prosecutions wherever necessary, etc. After that amendment was not accepted by the House, I thought he would not be moving these amendments. After all, Sir, these are matters of day-to-day administration and discipline; and if in cases of misappropriation or misfeasance or persistent default or not acting according to the directions lawfully given, it is to be the business of the Commissioner to move the court, no administration will be possible. Regarding rules of conduct and discipline, it is not possible, nor is it usual to entrust them to a civil court. So, Sir, I cannot agree to the amendment.

"Then, Sir, in regard to another objection of hon. Mr. Viswanatham I should say that it is not possible for the Commissioner sitting at the headquarters in Madras and looking to matters relating to the whole State. So, Sir, the work has been divided and it cannot be centralised. Again in every matter of discipline we cannot have it done by the Commissioner sitting in Madras. That is why we say 'The Deputy Commissioner in the case of any religious institution over which an Area Committee has jurisdiction and the Commissioner in the case of any other religious institution.' These are the identical provisions in the existing Act. Apart from that, Sir, it is absolutely necessary.

"Hon. Mr. Gopalaswami always finds Constitutional difficulty everywhere. I have only to give him the same answer that I have given before to the question of Constitution. He said this is a ruse. I say it is not a ruse, it has been openly stated and I do not see where the ruse is. It has been definitely stated what the powers of the Commissioner and the Deputy Commissioner are in cases of default committed by the trustees.

"Then, Sir, hon. Mr. Varadachari said, if we had mentioned the qualifications of the Commissioner, then there would have been no objection at all or that much of the objection would not have been raised. Both hon. Mr. Viswanatham and those who supported his amendment do not want on principle that such powers should be given to the Commissioner, even though the Commissioner be a High Court Judge or a Supreme Court Judge but that it should be given to the court. That principle I do not agree, and the considerations mentioned in clause 49, should remain. So, I cannot accept the amendment."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I thought I would get some arguments to convince me that my amendment is wrong, but I have been disappointed. As the hon. Mr. Bhashyam has pointed out, an order passed by the Deputy Commissioner or the Commissioner in the cases indicated in this clause will leave a moral stain upon the person concerned. Let it not be forgotten,

Sir, that there would be trustees appointed for nearly 30,000 institutions. If the Deputy Commissioner or the Commissioner is to be entrusted under this clause with such vast powers of not merely suspension to enable their routine administration to go on, but also of removal or dismissal of the trustees, I submit, Sir, that where offences like malfeasance, misfeasance, neglect of duty or breach of trust, are alleged, what happens is, that a person who is dismissed, although ultimately it may be possible for him to get some redress at the hands of the Government which is the final authority under sub-clause (5) of this clause, in most cases he cannot get redress from the Government, as the Government is bound in ninety-nine cases out of hundred to support the actions of its subordinates in those matters on administrative grounds. The Hon. Minister wants all the powers for the Commissioner and the Deputy Commissioner on administrative grounds. Let us not assume, Sir, that trustees come from the small categories of men, but any one of the hon. Members of this House may be in the position of a trustee and he will also come under the operation of this clause. Sir, we must therefore be very careful. Just to impress upon you the importance of this, I may tell you that one of the persons who held a very important political position in this State, happened also to be a trustee of some small temple and subsequently he became one of the most important political figures of this State also. But, owing to executive and administrative reasons, the Commissioner passed proceedings to dismiss him. I am referring to an event which happened about 12 or 13 years ago. Sir, I submit to you and to the members of this House that it took the personal intervention of two Ministers to see that order was not given effect to and that nothing happened to the gentleman. So, Sir, if the Ministers had not interfered, of course, they interfered on personal grounds—that moral stain on the person would have been there all these 13 years and he would not have become the most important person in this State. So, Sir, in matters like this, I submit, we are not dealing with some small bazaar men coming in as trustees for whose reputation we do not need to have any care. Small men will also become big men. Therefore, Sir, I submit that these Commissioners, particularly when there are no special legal difficulties, ought not to be entrusted with such wide and vast powers. I assume that possibly in the matter of suspension, the Commissioner may have some power. If that is so, I would say, insert the words referred to in my amendment not after the word 'may' but after the word 'suspend.' I have no objection to give the power of suspension to the Commissioner, but the rest of the matter should be left in the hands of the judicial tribunal.

"Then, Sir, the Deputy Commissioners can frame charges against the trustee concerned, collect evidence and appreciate the evidence in such cases and then the superior authority over these are the persons who are the appointing authorities of these ver-officers. At no stage is a right of appeal to the civil court is given. It is not an easy matter to know whether a particular act of a trustee amounts to breach of trust or not. So, why should it be left merely to the executive head of the Government or the executive head of the institution to give a decision on the point where there are legal subtleties which cannot be gone into by such officers whose mind may not be of a judicial nature but who merely want to get on with administration somehow or other. Therefore, Sir, it is necessary that the trustees of temples which number as many as 30,000, should have some sense of security. It is not a question of suspicion or anything like that. When we are enacting laws, we have to provide for all contingencies and the only proper method of doing it is to leave such decisions to a court of law. As Mr. Raghavayya has pointed out not even one appeal has been allowed to the civil court. Therefore, I submit, that my amendment is quite in order and I hope the Government will do well to consider it and accept it."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

'For the words "The Deputy Commissioner in the case of any religious institution . . . other religious institution", substitute the words "The Commissioner" and insert the following after "may" in the line 4:—

"apply to the Principal Court of original civil jurisdiction to."'

The amendment was lost.

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I would like to move the last amendment that stands in my name, namely:—

'In sub-clause (1), add a new item, viz:—

"for leading an immoral life and bringing the institution into contempt."

"Sir, if at all the Commissioners should exercise any power I submit they should certainly exercise this power. Now that power has been given to them, let them exercise their power at least on moral grounds. When the trustee is found to be leading an immoral life and when his conduct is such as to bring the institution into contempt, the Commissioner must have the right to get rid of the trustee. After all we are dealing with religious institutions and not with ordinary administration. I am not referring to qualifications in the context of the appointment of Commissioner or Assistant Commissioner, but my amendment is that trustees should not lead an immoral life. Whether they lead an immoral life or not, it is another matter, but when they are found to be leading an immoral life, they should not be continued as trustees any longer, because it is necessary in the interest of general purity, general morality and the name and prestige of our country and the nation."

SRI D. V. RAMASWAMI:—“Mr. Speaker, Sir, I wholeheartedly second the amendment. It is very necessary because in several cases the sort of conduct that is expected of a religious head has been found to be wanting. Even if there are four or five cases, of course, it is sufficient to prove the case. Therefore, such conduct on the part of these persons reduces the position of matadhipathis or of the ‘Mahants’ as they are called in the Ganjam district. These people are looked upon with much respect because they are entitled to that, being heads of maths. But, when the public come to know that they have fallen in the moral opinion of the people by keeping nautch girls or such other people, there is bound to be a reaction in public opinion. Therefore, I feel a disqualification like this should certainly be welcome and should be inserted in the clause, as suggested by my hon. Friend, Mr. Viswanatham.”

SRI M. R. APPA RAO:—“Sir, it is very difficult to put into practice the amendment proposed by my hon. Friend Mr. Viswanatham, particularly when you see that nowhere in the Bill there is any definition of a person who is moral or immoral. Unless it is defined in the Act as to what constitutes moral conduct, it is difficult to put it into practice. After all to some extent morality is subjective. So, I feel that this sort of vague expression will go against the stand taken by Sri T. Viswanatham, because he is against giving more powers to the Commissioner. Anybody can say that a person is immoral and on that ground the trustee may be dismissed. So, Sir, I submit this sort of nebulous power should not be given to the Commissioner.”

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—“Sir, this is not the only clause where hon. Mr. Viswanatham has given notice of this amendment, but in many other sections also my hon. Friend has given this amendment relating to leading an immoral life and bringing the institution into contempt. I entirely agree with what all he said that a person who leads an immoral life or behaves in such a manner as to bring the institution into contempt is unfit to be a trustee. But, as hon. Mr. Appa Rao has said, the statement that a person is leading an immoral life as to bring the institution into contempt is very vague. I may point out that we have provided in another clause that a person convicted of certain offences cannot be appointed a trustee. Of course, I have no objection if my Friend says of a person convicted of moral turpitude and I can understand it is easy of being acted upon. But, simply to say that a person is leading an immoral life, it is difficult in such cases to lead evidence to prove such a thing. (Sri K. Bhashyam: ‘It is a valid thing also’.) It may be so, but it cannot be valid according to our sense of what should be the conditions in temples. My objection is that the amendment is vague. As I said it must be more tangible, as for instance, a person having been convicted of an offence involving moral turpitude, and there will be no difficulty in accepting an amendment like that, but we cannot accept such a vague statement as proposed by hon. Mr. Viswanatham.”

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—“Sir, the Government claim the words ‘neglect of duty’ are very precise, I should say that ‘leading an immoral life’ is as at least precise as that.”

The amendment was put and lost.

Sub-clause (4).

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—“Mr. Speaker, I beg to move—

‘Delete sub-clause (4) of clause 49.’

Power is given under this sub-clause to the Assistant Commissioner to move the Deputy Commissioner to take action in respect of a trustee and at the same time, he can place the trustee under suspension pending his orders. I submit that all persons should not have this power. We have already argued though we could not convince the Government that the powers are very wide and that they should be exercisable only by some important authority. Here an Assistant Commissioner can move the Deputy Commissioner to take action against a trustee and naturally when an Assistant Commissioner moves for such action, on administrative grounds for the smooth working of the administration, the Deputy Commissioner will be obliged to approve his action. My submission is that such powers should not be given to all officers. I move, Sir, that the sub-clause be omitted.”

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—“Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to second the amendment.”

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—“Mr. Speaker, Sir, let me draw the attention of the House to the fact that the hon. Member who seconded the motion advocated that power of suspension should be there. The hon. Member suggested that before the Deputy Commissioner takes action, the mischief should not be done. What is provided for here is that the Assistant Commissioner moves the Deputy Commissioner to take action against a trustee and places him under suspension pending orders of the Deputy Commissioner. This is very necessary and I am sorry I cannot accept the amendment.”

The amendment was put and lost.

Sub-clause (5).

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—“Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move—

‘Delete sub-clause (5).’

Here, Sir, the final authority is the Government. I would rather not have this clause at all so that he may be given a chance of seeking a remedy in a court of law when he is removed or dismissed. I would rather give him a chance to go to a court instead of going to the Government. In the other section they said, 'subject to the orders of Government, the Commissioner has got powers. . . . and now they have dropped the words 'subject to the control of the Government.' Therefore, it will be proper that the final appeal to the Government should be removed. My hon. Friend Sri Raghavayya suggested last time while discussing the previous clause that the right of appeal should be provided but the appellate authority should not be the Government. I commend the amendment for the acceptance of the House."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I second the motion. In doing so, I would like the Hon. Minister to understand one salient factor in dealing with these things and that is that the Government officials have got a herd mentality. Whatever may be the offence committed by the person in the lowest rung of the ladder, from top to toe there is a tendency of people above him to overlook the fault and even the Hon. Ministers sometimes fall a prey to that mentality. If it is a Collector that has misbehaved and is punished for corruption, according to the Minister's view his name need not be exposed and for confidential reasons or in public interests, it must be kept confidential but if on the other hand, a peon misbehaves, his name is published in all the dailies. So, Sir, my view is that the mentality of the officials to support and to cling to each other in times of distress makes an appeal to the Government unsafe. After all, Sir, what is the Government; it may be anything between the Government down to the village karnam and the provision that an appeal should be provided to the Government does not in any way provide any additional safeguard to the trustees. I submit that it may be dropped and the only tribunal which shall have the right to enter into the question should be the court of law. People, rightly or wrongly, have come to believe that even a District Munsif can sometimes rise to the occasion and pull up the Government, however high it may be, because still the traditions left by the Britisher have not died down in spite of the various encroachments made upon courts and still the independence of the courts has been preserved. So, why should not we get relief from such courts and why should we submit ourselves to the paraphernalia of the Government machinery which works in its own way? I strongly support the amendment and I see no reason for the Hon. Minister to reject the amendment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, the amendment proposes that sub-clause (5) shall be deleted. According to that clause, the right of appeal is provided for; if the order appealed against is the order of the Deputy Commissioner, the appeal is to the Commissioner and in the case of the Commissioner's orders, the appeal lies to the Government. If this clause is omitted, except that the appeal to the Government will be taken away, there is nothing to say that the right of suit has been given. There is no appeal to the Government but does that give a right of suit; if the right of suit is there, the retention of sub-clause (5) does not take away the right of suit. I submit, Sir, that it is not good to take away the appeal to the Government and so I oppose the amendment."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I am not unaware of the position explained by the Hon. Minister and I want him to be aware of the position that appeal to the Government at the executive and administrative levels will cause great hardship to those affected. I submit that when the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner conducts an enquiry, frames charges, calls evidence and passes orders that must be enough cause of action for the particular person to go to court. I do not want that time should be wasted again by further appeals to the Government. After all, it is only an executive head and that is why I want that it must go to a court of law rather than to the Government. I am equally aware that a man can go to a court of law even if there is a provision by which he can appeal to the Government. I do not want that time should be wasted. When their trusted officers have come to a conclusion, I submit the matter should be left there and the parties should be left to go to the court instead of putting an intermediate obstacle."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, instead of wasting time, it will save considerable time and there will be speedier disposals and less costly disposals."

MR. SPEAKER:—" The question is—

'Delete sub-clause (5).'

The amendment was lost.

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I would like the Government to state what they mean by the words 'neglect of duty in respect of the trust'. In fact, I wish the words had been omitted altogether. Offences such as default in the submission of the budget, wilful disobedience, malfeasance, misfeasance, breach of trust or misappropriation or the person becoming unsound of mind are things in respect of which I can understand the Deputy Commissioner or the Commissioner taking action but the words 'neglect of duty in respect of the trust' gives far too wide an import and what the Deputy Commissioner or the Commissioner may think as such in certain circumstances may not be construed to be neglect of duty in respect of the trust by worshippers. I should ask the Government for an explanation as to how this section would be put into force and would it be neglect of duty by the trust only if it would land the institution in breach of trust or malfeasance or misfeasance. Just now a member pointed out very wrongly, I believe, that most of us neglect our duty. The other day, I read a very interesting report of a Labour Member having been censured by the British Labour Party for neglect of duty. That was when he abstained from attending Parliament continuously for a period of three months and took a paying job as war correspondent in the Far East. I can understand such cases like that. Even there, it was difficult for the Government to say or for anybody to say that he has neglected his duty; the party may say this, however, but it is difficult for an officer as such to determine what is neglect of duty. I think, Sir, there is a strong case for the omission of the words. It would be enough if I should expect that the Bill will prevent mismanagement or maladministration of institutions and I would not be surprised if after the Bill is passed there are very many positive improvements in many of the endowments and positive improvements there might well be on the whole. So, Sir, I think there is a case for dropping these words 'neglect of duty' in respect of the trust especially as the power to be exercised is by an officer and not by any court of law."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, my hon. Friend Sri Varadachari wants the definition of the words 'neglect of duty'. It cannot be defined in any particular manner but I would refer him to sub-clause (2)—"

"When it is proposed to take action under sub-section (1) the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner, as the case may be, shall frame charges against the trustee concerned and give him an opportunity of meeting such charges, of testing the evidence adduced against him and of adducing evidence in his favour; and the order of suspension, removal or dismissal shall state the charges framed against the trustee, his explanation and the finding on each charge with the reasons therefor."

So, Sir, when a particular action is taken definite charges have to be framed and these charges will relate to neglect of duty and that is all that can be done and we cannot define the words 'neglect of duty'."

Clause 49 was put and carried.

Clause 50.

Sub-clause (1).

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—"

"That clause 50 do stand part of the Bill."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I move—"

"In sub-clause (1) (a), after the word 'disqualification', insert the words—"

"or if he is proved to be leading an immoral life and bringing the institution into contempt."

In connexion with the appointment of trustees; I said that they should have certain moral qualifications. Now, Sir, after becoming a trustee, he might become immoral on account of the easy position which he is occupying. It is not a general or vague proposition. Where a man makes a definite allegation to the Deputy Commissioner or the Commissioner or the court and it is proved he should be disqualified. In the interests of public morality I want the Hon. Minister to accept this amendment without hesitation or even smiling."

SRI D. V. RAMASWAMI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I rise to second the amendment. Whatever may be the case of a person who is in charge of a secular office where he has to give patronage to fine arts or Indian dances, it will very ill-befit a person holding the office of a trustee in a religious or charitable institution. Therefore, my hon. Friend Sri Viswanatham is very anxious that sufficient stress must be laid on the purity of the person who takes upon himself the onerous duty of being the religious head or a trustee of a religious institution. I feel that this amendment is quite reasonable and may be accepted by the Hon. Minister."

SRI K. BRAHMANANDAM REDDI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, sub-clause (a) says—"

"is sentenced by a criminal court to transportation or to imprisonment for a period of more than six months for any offence other than an offence not involving moral turpitude."

I want to know, Sir, if suppose a man is sentenced and convicted or rather convicted and sentenced to a period of five months in a case involving moral turpitude, what is the position of the Government? Do they want him to be disqualified or not?"

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—"Certainly."

SRI K. BRAHMANANDAM REDDI:—"How, Sir? Look at the clause; it says—"

"to imprisonment for a period of more than six months for any offence other than an offence not involving moral turpitude."

Suppose the trustee is convicted and sentenced to a period of five months for an offence involving moral turpitude, do you want him to continue or not? Here there are two conditions; moral turpitude and six months' imprisonment. I want my friend Mr. Raghavayya to realize that. I want Government to put the clause to have a positive meaning instead of putting it in a negative way. I would like the clause to be—

"to imprisonment for any period for any offence involving moral turpitude."

That would be a better thing as it would make the meaning and intention of Government clear, instead of having a negative phraseology."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"Sir, there is a lot of difference between clauses 49 and 50. Clause 50 says that the person will cease to hold office if the sentence is for a period longer than six months. In fact I want Government to drop the words—

"provided that the Government may direct that such sentence shall not operate as a disqualification."

I do not see any reason why Government should reserve power like that. I do not see why a non-hereditary trustee, who has gone to court and who has been found guilty and convicted and sentenced, should be exempted from disqualification simply because they have been appointed by Government. I think there is no case for a proviso like that. In clause 49, the trustee will be removed by somebody who takes the initiative. But in clause 50, the trustee will cease to hold office from the time the verdict is pronounced against him or he is adjudicated an insolvent. I think this proviso has no place in the clause. I fear it has been bodily copied from some other Act. It may have a place when the officer wishes to become a Member of Parliament, or when a man is detained without trial or when he is sentenced for a political offence, then that shall not constitute a disqualification. I think in the case of trustees this proviso has no place. A person when he is appointed as a trustee of a religious denomination, he is expected to be a good man and should have a clean record of character. So, I think there is a strong case for the deletion of the proviso."

SRI K. VARADACHARI:—"Sir, the use of the word 'moral turpitude' will be a difficult thing for any Commissioner or Deputy Commissioner to act upon. There are several things which may be considered to be an offence involving moral turpitude. There will be a difference of opinion with regard to this matter in every case. Suppose a man has been sentenced to imprisonment for a period of six months, or say, seven months for drunkenness under the Prohibition Act, would it be an offence involving moral turpitude?"

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—"Yes."

SRI K. VARADACHARI:—"No. It cannot be so, because the Government itself is issuing permits in deserving cases. (Laughter.) So, it is a difficult thing to determine. I think any offence committed under the Indian Penal Code should be made a disqualification for a trustee to remain in office. Therefore the words 'moral turpitude' should be taken away, and the words 'more than six months' should be deleted."

"Then, Sir, with regard to Mr. Viswanatham's amendment I see absolutely no objection. If a man is proved to have been indulging in continuous concubinage, it should be within the power of the Commissioner to remove him from office. Important things are let off and small unnecessary things are sought to be introduced. So I suggest hon. Mr. Viswanatham's amendment may be accepted at least once."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, my objection to hon. Mr. Viswanatham's amendment is the same as I said to the previous clause. Hon. Mr. Varadachari said that it is difficult to distinguish what is an offence involving moral turpitude and what is not. Sir, if it is difficult to distinguish what constitutes an offence involving moral turpitude and what is not, it is more difficult to prove 'what is leading immoral life and bringing the institution into contempt.' If such vague conditions are introduced, it will lead to all sorts of blackmail.

"But, Sir, there is some force in the argument of hon. Mr. Brahmanandam Reddi. I have examined the sub-clause; there is a double negative. Of course, hon. Mr. Varadachari said that it has been copied from another enactment. Yes, it has been copied from the previous Endowments Act. I agree, due to the use of double negative, the sub-clause can be interpreted to mean that if a person is sentenced to a period of imprisonment of five months that may not constitute a disqualification. But I cannot conceive of a conviction for less than six months, where really moral turpitude is involved. Apart from this, it is quite possible that a man may be given a sentence of imprisonment for a day or till the rising of the court for a rape case. It is possible; but, whether it is probable I cannot say. But when double negative is introduced, whether it will result in exempting convictions for less than six months, is a matter to be considered; and if there is difficulty felt on that score, I wish to be permitted to reopen the clause at a later stage of the Bill. But hon. Mr. Viswanatham's amendment cannot be accepted for the reason that it is vague."

MR. SPEAKER:—"I shall now put Mr. Viswanatham's amendment to the vote of the House. The question is—

'In sub-clause (1) (a), after the word "disqualification", insert the words "or if he is proved to be leading an immoral life and bringing the institute into contempt".'

The amendment was lost.

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, my amendment is a simple one. Much of the ground has been covered by Mr. N. S. Varadachari, when he spoke on the previous amendment. I move—

Sir, arguments were advanced and in fact it has been conceded by the Hon. Law Minister himself that if it is an offence involving moral turpitude and a sentence has been given even for a day's imprisonment, it should be brought under this clause as a disqualification, and the trustee should not be allowed to hold office. I do not see any reason why even in cases where a man is convicted of an offence involving moral turpitude, Government should have a right to exempt him from disqualification. Then, Sir, another argument I wish to adduce is that this Government is making a distinction between one set of trustee and another set of trustee. The offence that might be committed by a non-hereditary trustee, one is led to believe, is not so heinous as that committed by a hereditary trustee. A hereditary trustee even according to Government does occupy a different position or better position than that which a non-hereditary trustee occupies. Such being so, why should there be one set of rules for a non-hereditary trustee and another set for a hereditary trustee. Then, Sir, a matadhipathi under Chapter V is sought to be removed even if his is a case of simple conviction for any offence, be it a fine or be it imprisonment or of any kind. On such a conviction he is immediately removed from office. But if it is the case of a non-hereditary trustee, simply because he is appointed by Government, even if he is convicted of an offence involving moral turpitude even for a period of more than six months Government reserve the right to keep him in office. I cannot understand why there should be one rule for removing a hereditary trustee and another rule for a non-hereditary trustee."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I say this is nothing but throwing open the flood gates of patronage. Sir, Government have already provided so many things for having men of their liking, and so there is no need for this proviso. A previous party which was in power for some years before, the Justice Party, had ruined itself on account of this power of patronage. I do not know why the Hon. Minister wants to ingratiate with a future Government by this proviso. So this Government should profit themselves by that lesson and not let themselves by this means to bring a lot of obloquy upon themselves by trying to help people to retain their place, who could not be allowed to hold positions of responsibility."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, every amendment which Mr. Gopalaswami brings is so simple; because he says it is so! Sir, it may look simple; but it is not so if we understand the implications of it, and so it is not so simple for acceptance. Some of the members, I think it was Mr. Viswanatham, wanted that conviction for political offence should be exempted. But, there are cases where people are convicted for what are called vicarious liability."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—"Constructive liability."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"In such cases, a particular person may be perfectly innocent, but on the ground of constructive liability or vicarious liability, in cases like that, where Government know that the person is absolutely innocent, but still he has been convicted for vicarious liability, should there not be a reserve power with Government to exempt him from disqualification? Then, Sir, reference was made to the Justice Party. It has no bearing to the present clause or to the present question. Sir, this is a power which any Government must have to do justice where an injustice is likely to be perpetrated. So this power is not intended to do patronage to anybody. Sir, I was surprised to hear Mr. Gopalaswami when he referred to the case of a matadhipathi being removed on the ground of simple conviction. Sir, is he to be considered no better than an ordinary man? He is a person who has to guide others in matters of religion, and if he is to be convicted of moral turpitude, even if it be for an hour, then certainly he should not be allowed to hold his office than an ordinary man or any other officer. He occupies a greater status, the status of the person of a moral preceptor, and so he should be very careful about his conduct. So, Sir, the comparison is not at all happy. I oppose the amendment."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"Sir, one fails to understand how there can be one set of morals for one kind of trustee and another set of morals for another kind of trustee, when there is no difference in the nature of institutions of which they are the head. The very fact that these institutions are not properly managed necessitates the passing of this Bill and the appointment of good persons as trustees. So I am unable to appreciate the attitude of Government in taking power to exempt trustees convicted for offences involving moral turpitude and sentenced to periods of more than six months. The second point I want to say is Government have not shown such leniency to hereditary trustees. Why should they show such leniency only to those appointed by Government themselves? The question of vicarious liability would arise equally well in the case of a hereditary trustee; for do they not also hold positions of responsibility, and hence would they not also be held responsible for the acts of their agents. Therefore if a code of morals is to be set up, it should be made applicable to both hereditary and non-hereditary trustees. For there can be no difference in morals or moral codes."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, in the case of hereditary trustees, since they occupy the position of a spiritual head and a moral preceptor, the disqualification becomes greater when they are convicted for any offence, be it fine, be it imprisonment, or be it of any kind."

MR. SPEAKER:—"I shall now put the amendment of Mr. Gopalaswami to the vote of the House. The question is—

'In sub-clause (1) (a), delete the words "provided that the Government may direct that such sentence shall not operate as a disqualification".'

The amendment was lost.

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I move—

'Add the following as sub-clause (1) (c):—

"if it is proved that he has no faith in the tenets of the Hindu religion."

When I moved a similar amendment with reference to Area Committee members, the Hon. Minister was good enough to say that one could not get into the hearts of persons and see whether they had faith in religion or not and that therefore the amendment could not be accepted. I only point out to him clause 57 (1) (c) which he himself has introduced in which it is provided that a suit for removing a matadhipati can be filed if he ceased to profess the Hindu religion or the tenets of the math. In the case of a matadhipati, the Government want to hedge his position with all sorts of conditions. In the case of a trustee, the Government say that he is above all morals and law. The code of morals applicable to a matadhipati is absolutely different from that applicable to a trustee. A trustee can continue to hold office even though he ceases to profess the Hindu religion, but a matadhipati, who is entitled to hold office for life and according to the constitution supreme cannot continue if he ceases to profess the Hindu religion. I want the Government to reconcile the reasons for the distinction made between these two."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—"I second the amendment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"My hon. Friend says that provision is made for the removal of a matadhipati if he ceased to profess the Hindu religion or the tenets of the math. There is difference between tenets of religion and tenets of math. Profession of Hindu religion is prescribed for the trustee also. I invite my hon. Friend's attention to clause 24, which we have already passed, in which it is provided that no person can be a trustee unless he professes the Hindu religion. When he moved an amendment to that clause to add faith in religion, I said that faith could not be measured. I referred to the Oxford Dictionary and the meaning of profession of faith given therein is affirming faith in religion. What my hon. Friend wants is not affirming faith but faith itself."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"I understand the difference between ceasing to profess faith and ceasing to have faith. If the negative of one can be proved, the negative of the other also can be proved. If it can be proved that one has ceased to profess the Hindu religion, it can equally be proved that he has ceased to have faith in the tenets of the Hindu religion. I therefore press my amendment."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

'Add the following as sub-clause (1) (c):—

"if it is proved that he has no faith in the tenets of the Hindu religion."

The amendment was lost.

Clause 50 was put and carried.

Clause 51.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'That clause 51 do stand part of the Bill.'

22nd November 1950]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I move—

'In sub-clause (3), omit the words "legally constituted" and the word "such" occurring before the word "guardian".'

We were advised that the words proposed to be omitted were superfluous. This is only a verbal amendment."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

'In sub-clause (3), omit the words "legally constituted" and the word "such" occurring before the word "guardian".'

The amendment was carried.

Clause 51 as amended was put and carried.

Clause 52.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'That clause 52 do stand part of the Bill.'

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—"Sir, I move—

'In sub-clause (2) after the word "succession" and before the word "shall", insert the words "according to the law of primogeniture".'

I want that succession to the office of service-holders should be governed by the law of primogeniture, so that the office shall not be split up between various persons. In temples there are archakaship, devadasiship and several similar services. (Sri T. Viswanatham: 'I do not understand what devadasiship means.') This question arises out of a misunderstanding of the purpose of a devadasi. The duty of a devadasi is to perform dance before the deity in a temple. If the dance is called Bharata natya, all educated people attend the performance and praise it. If it is a dance performed by a devadasi, people begin to preach morals. Some of these services are essential. It looks as though subdivision of these services is hindering the satisfactory performance of the various duties. I suggest that the succession to these services should be governed by the law of primogeniture as, according to that law, the properties appurtenant to these services are kept intact without subdivision and the devolving of duties on one person enables their efficient and continuous performance."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"I second it."

SRI K. BRAHMANANDAM REDDI:—"Sir, I do not know why hon. Sri V. Raghavayya wants the law of primogeniture to apply to these services. That law has become obsolete long long ago. Perhaps it finds a place in the Madras Hereditary Village Offices Act and the Zamindari Act. It is the Hindu Law, under which the next in the line of succession succeeds, that should apply to these services. Suppose I am a temple servant, my son succeeds me. If I have two sons, my first son will succeed. If he dies, the second son will succeed. If I have no son, my brother will succeed. Why should my son's son get any preference to my second and subsequent son? As I said, the law of primogeniture has become obsolete and I object to the amendment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"We have copied the language from the corresponding section in the existing Act and we have not found any difficulty in working it for such a long time. What the expression 'next in the line of succession' connotes is well understood. Suppose according to the present custom or usage, the law of primogeniture does not apply. Where is the necessity for introducing the high-sounding expression 'law of primogeniture'? The clause may stand as it is."

SRI K. VARADACHARI:—"I want to submit a point of law so that the Hon. Minister may think over it. The expression 'next in the line of succession' will introduce complications in existing rights. There are several mirasi or service-holders in several institutions. When an office-holder dies, his sons equally share the emoluments and the services. All of them are expected to perform the service. The expression 'next in line of succession' will unsettle rights which have accrued to, and which have been enjoyed for ages together by, mirasi service families. This point may be considered once again before the third reading stage is reached."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—"The difficulty of the service being split up among the various sons and every one of them being asked to perform the service was pointed out. We have had cases where there are three or four sons. They share the emoluments and service year-war. If one son does service this year, another son does it next year and likewise it goes. There is no hard and fast rule and in some cases difficulties arise. Where the property is small and is not so alluring as to attract the various sons of the previous incumbent, the service falls into disuse and ultimately it is the deity that suffers. I suggest that the law of primogeniture should be followed in this matter, as it keeps the property intact and makes it available to one person so that he can satisfactorily perform the duties."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, my hon. Friend Sri V. Raghavayya forgets that the law of primogeniture is not applicable in the whole of this State. For the matter of that, in my district, the law of primogeniture does not apply at all. There are temple servants there with service tenure also. We are governed by the Marumakkattayam law and we do not know anything about the law of primogeniture in Malabar. Therefore the amendment of my hon. Friend Sri Raghavayya is not acceptable, Sir."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Is there no mention of primogeniture at all in the Marumakkattayam law?"

22nd November 1950]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"No Sir."

The amendment was by leave of the House withdrawn.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I move—

That in sub-clause (3) of clause 52—

"For the portion 'where the person entitled to succeed is a minor without a legally constituted guardian fit and willing to act as such, or' substitute the following:—

'Where the person entitled to succeed is a minor without a guardian fit and willing to act as such or there is a dispute respecting the person who is entitled to act as guardian, or.'

"Sir, this is only a verbal amendment intended to improve the wording of the sub-clause as such. If a person who is entitled to become an office-holder happens to be a minor, he can be represented by his legal guardian, who can officiate for him. But if there is no legally constituted guardian, it may be that there is a dispute regarding the question of who should be his guardian and that is why we have added the words, 'or if there is a dispute respecting the person who is entitled to act as guardian'. Moreover, the term 'guardian' really implies a legally constituted guardian, and therefore the words 'legally constituted' are not necessary and therefore they have been left out in the amendment."

The amendment was put and carried.

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—"Sir, I move—

'That in clause 52 (3), add the following as Explanation (2) numbering the existing Explanation as Explanation (1)—

"No proxy shall be entertained."

Sir, this system of proxy is very unpopular and is being banned everywhere. In many of these temples, even boys and sometimes girls of 6 and 7 years of age are pushed into service and certain elderly persons officiate in their place. Sometimes some women continue to hold office, even though they cannot on account of various disabilities perform those functions. Still they are permitted to hang on to their offices and somebody is brought in to officiate on particular occasions. During utsavams, this is a usual practice in many of the temples and somebody else is brought into service as a proxy to act for the original office-holder, who might have been disabled or incapacitated. This is a very unsatisfactory state of affairs and all this kind of thing is going on, because they are in the enjoyment of service inams. My submission therefore is that this system of proxy should not be entertained under any circumstances."

MR. SPEAKER:—"May I know whether any hon. Member wants to second this amendment?"

[Mr. Speaker] [22nd November 1950]

"Since no hon. Member has come forward to second this amendment, and for want of a seconder, the amendment falls through clause 52 as amended was put and carried."

Clause 53.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'That clause 53 do stand part of the Bill.'"

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I move—

'That in sub-clause (1) of clause 53—

"After the words 'the trustee may' and before the words 'fine, suspend', insert the following:—

'After following the prescribed procedure, if any.'"

"Sir, the object is that the trustee may punish the office-holders only after following certain procedure prescribed for that purpose and not in an arbitrary manner and that is the proper and legitimate procedure followed in all other services for the punishment of subordinates by the officers concerned. That is why we have inserted the words 'after following the prescribed procedure, if any' in this clause."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, I cannot really understand the object of the words 'if any' in this amendment. Of course, I can understand that the trustees should follow some procedure before punishing any office-holder of a temple for any dereliction of duties or misconduct, etc. But I submit that the addition of the words 'if any' means that whatever is provided for earlier is taken away. If you want to prescribe a procedure to be followed by the trustee in the matter of punishment of his temple servants, then by all means do it, but on the other hand if you do not want to prescribe any such procedure, then keep the clause untouched as it is but do not make it look ridiculous by amending it in this manner, and by adding the words 'if any' at the end. To say that 'the trustee may punish an office-holder after following the prescribed procedure' if any looks rather ridiculous. It would be more in accordance with commonsense if the words 'if any' are omitted altogether. I therefore suggest that it is better that these words are omitted, Sir."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, this clause is all important from my point of view. It gives power to the trustee to fine, suspend, remove or dismiss any of the office-holders in a temple, not merely for any breach of trust, but also for incapacity or disobedience of orders, or neglect of duties, or misconduct or other sufficient cause. Sir, I have known of some trustees who are responsible men using their powers in a most irresponsible and arbitrary way, sometimes suspending or sometimes fining heavily the servants of temples even for trivial lapses, themselves not knowing anything about the procedure of worship or the custom in vogue in regard to certain rituals, in the temples. Sir, I am speaking from personal knowledge that in the Tirupati Devasthanam, the Committee has taken upon itself the duty of looking into matters over the head of the Commissioner who had decided on a particular matter relating to the usage obtaining in the temple. One gentleman who was the trustee of the devasthanam thought it fit, though he had powers to control the temple servants only in regard to secular matters, to direct a particular temple servant to do worship in a particular manner, and fined him for not doing so, while he offered reward to some other servants who were his favourites. This, Sir, I submit, cannot be considered as a neglect of duty or disobedience of orders on the part of the temple servant or archaka, but it is a gross breach of trust on the part of the trustee who is put in charge of the temple administration, only so far as the secular part of it is concerned. I think, Sir, that this clause does not contemplate that trustees should enforce discipline or take action against temple servants even in matters connected the religious worship or the ritual side of temple affairs. Otherwise the trustees can construe any and every action of the archakas or temple servants unconnected with secular affairs of the temple as coming within the mischief of this provision and punish them saying that they had disobeyed their orders or neglected their duties, etc. I submit, Sir, that the term 'other sufficient cause' in this clause has been kept so delightfully vague that any trustee can do whatever he likes against the temple servants and punish them in any manner for any thing and everything that they might do, which goes against his wishes and fancies. I can understand a temple servant being fined or suspended or removed from service if a jewel is stolen from a temple. Or he may be handed over to the police for necessary action, or he may be dismissed forthwith. But, if a particular temple trustee insists that a particular form of worship or ritual which has been going on there for a very long time and which has been in accordance with certain usage and custom of that temple, should be changed to suit his fancies, then I think, it would be wrong on the part of the trustee to punish the archaka or the temple servant, if he fails to carry out his instruction. He should be given no powers or liberty to interfere with the service-holders or persons associated with the performance of service in matters connected with temple routine or religious forms of worship. I hope that the Government when they prescribe the procedure to be adopted under this clause will take care to see that the trustees do not interfere with the temple routine or the customs and usages in the temple. I want that this matter should be cleared up here and now, so that this provision cannot be used arbitrarily by any unscrupulous trustees. Sir, I have given notice of an amendment to a subsequent clause connected with this subject and I shall have occasion to deal with it more fully later on when we come to the end of this chapter."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, the object is, that if a procedure has already been prescribed, it must be observed. But if no procedure has been prescribed till now, the trustee need not adopt any procedure at all. That is all the intention of this amendment and I think it is clear enough.

"With regard to the observation of my hon. Friend Sri N. S. Varadachari, I quite agree with him that ordinarily this provision will apply only to matters of secular importance, but so far as religious matters are concerned, the trustee may consult with people who are in the know of those things. It is only a matter of commonsense that will apply to these things, and if there is any mistake or wrong committed by any trustee, there is the Area Committee above him, and if there is no Area Committee, there are the Deputy Commissioners and the Commissioner to whom an appeal can be made against the orders of the trustee for which there is necessary provision in this Bill. I do not think, Sir, these matters of detail in the temple administration can be settled now in this clause."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—"On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this clause 53 makes provision for punishment and fine in the case of a breach of trust also. Breach of trust is an offence punishable under the Indian Penal Code. I do not think it would be in order, if the House gives power to the trustees to compound an offence of breach of trust simply by the imposition of a fine. This clause, I think, offends the Indian Penal Code and is out of order, if we include an offence of breach of trust also in it."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"I do not think, Sir, the point raised by my hon. Friend Sri V. Raghavayya is correct. If a servant of mine commits a breach of trust, I can directly dismiss him and can do anything with him which is legal, but that does not prevent a policeman from charging or arresting him for any breach of trust."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The amendment is—"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 53 after the words 'the trustee may' and before the words 'fine, suspend', insert the following:—

"after following the prescribed procedure, if any." "

The amendment was carried.

Clause 53 as amended was put and carried.

Clause 54.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'That clause 54 do stand part of the Bill.'

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"I move, Sir—

'That clause 54 be omitted.'

22nd November 1950] [Sri K. Madhava Menon]

This clause relates to punishment by executive officers. Since we have omitted clause 40 relating to the appointment of executive officers, this need not be here and therefore this can be omitted."

The motion was put and carried.

Clause 55.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'That clause 55 do stand part of the Bill.'

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"I move, Sir—

'That clause 55 be omitted.'

I think, Sir, this is a most mischievous portion of this Bill and it is going to introduce many complications and create discontent among the members of the temple staff. There are customs and usages obtaining in every temple or religious institution, as to what fees are to be charged for archanaïs or other temple offerings, and whether the full fees are to be taken by the office-holders of the temple or if not, what portion should be given to them and how they should be appropriated, etc. If in spite of such a custom or usage which has been in vogue for a very long time, the Commissioner is going to interfere in such things, I am sure it will lead to a lot of difficulties in the administration of these institutions. Sir, I do not want to use the word 'strike', because these servants in religious institutions cannot afford to go on strike and I do not suggest for one moment that they should resort to strikes. But what I want to say is that this provision is likely to create a lot of discontent among the archakas and other temple servants. Under this clause, the trustee is given power, notwithstanding anything contained in any scheme settled or deemed to be settled under this Act or any decree or usage to the contrary, subject to such conditions as the Commissioner may, by general or special order direct, to fix fees for the performance of archanaïs and to determine what portion, if any, of such fees shall be paid to the archakas or other office-holders or servants of the temple. I have known many cases where office-holders have gone to courts to claim their right of share on the offerings to the God. I know, that in the Parthasarathy temple in Triplicane, even to-day if a devotee goes and offers to perform a taligai to the God, he gives some measures of rice and other things necessary and when it is made up and offered to the deity, a portion of it goes to the adhyapakas, a portion to the vedaparayanikas and out of the rest a certain portion is set apart for distribution to the desandhris and people assembled as viniyogam and a little portion to be reserved for the ubhayakars, etc.

"These are settled by custom and usage. Cases have gone to the courts to establish whether the office-holders of the temple are entitled to 1/4th or 1/8th portion. So, it is an emolument attached to the office of the office-holder. If we really look at it from that point of view, it will be seen that it is part of the salary of the office-holders. Of course in the olden days the actual salary was very low. These perquisites they had as compensation for the low salary. Under this clause, the trustee can fix fees for archanais irrespective of the scheme settled already or any decree passed by a court to that effect. If a person offers talika in a temple to the deity, is it the intention that the whole offering should be taken away by that devotee who offered it? I do not think anybody will allow that. Of course there is the special sanctity attached to the offering to the deity, and a portion of the offering is much more priced than even Rs. 100 or more. This clause is a revolutionary innovation in the management of temples. The management of temples is not like Government departments. The persons who do the service in temples do not do it only for the love of money but because they feel that they will get God's grace if they serve Him prasadam. The trustee can interfere in all these small matters. I do not know whether the Government will ever leave things to be done according to custom or usage. By all means let Government prevent abuse of usage. I should like to put it that way rather than put it in a positive and perhaps offensive way. I know there have been instances where the archakas have demanded extraordinary fees from rich men. They have come to my notice. I am not really concerned with those cases. Where the fees for archanai, etc., have not been fixed, let the trustee fix. But in cases where they have been fixed by any scheme of the court, let him not interfere with them. Let him not interfere with the proportion in which the various office-holders must divide. After all what is the archanai, Sir? It means the whole setting in the temple. There is the lighting of the lamps. There is the service in the Garba Graham for making God ready for receiving the offering and so on. Let not Government imagine that they are hitting at the archaka only. By this clause, they are hitting at all the office-holders who do service in the archanai in one capacity or another. Therefore, this is a matter which will lead to great complications, and perhaps good lot of unrest among the members of the temple. I should like the Government to go slow in these matters. Let them first know what the abuses are. If they then think that this clause is necessary, let them have it. But as things stand to-day, making the Commissioner the sole monarch of all these things is not correct. This power given to a single individual is liable to abuse not only due to perversity but to ignorance also."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, in seconding the amendment, I would once more appeal to you to understand the implications of what the Government propose to do by employing language of this type from clause to clause. We are not raising our voice of protest for idle reasons. But we do so as we feel strongly in the matter. This clause says that the trustee may fix the fees notwithstanding anything contained in any scheme settled or any decree or usage to the contrary. There are immemorial customs. Manu has stated immemorial custom is transcendent law. When this is the position, the legislature shall not be a party to a Bill which wipes out all these things at one stroke. This is not a healthy method of passing legislation. It is not a good precedent either for the future. It is not a good example to be followed by our successors who will occupy these seats after adult franchise comes into full play. If we do not respect the schemes settled, not by any individuals, but by courts of law and by competent authorities including the Board itself, and if we do not respect the decrees of courts which were competent to pass them at the time they passed them, I ask, Sir, what sanctity and respect can we expect to our legislation from the future generation? We want peaceful progress of society. We want society to progress as smoothly as the various parts work in the mechanism of a big machinery. We cannot have violent jerks and jolt. This would not make for progress. Every time the legislature says that the decrees passed by competent courts or schemes framed by courts or by competent authorities can be wiped out by a clause like this, I submit we are doing violence to ourselves and to the art of legislation. We cannot allow this occasion to pass without entering our emphatic protest. I strongly support all that the Hon. Member Mr. Bhashyam stated. I suppose other speakers will participate in this discussion. I hope we will have a full discussion on this subject, because it involves a principle of very great magnitude, not only for the people now but for the future generations."

SRI P. KANDASWAMI PILLAI:—"Sir, I oppose the amendment. This clause really saves lot of trouble when there is difference of opinion between archakas. There is one head archaka generally. He appoints his assistants. One man performs archanai to-day, another man performs to-morrow, and a third does on the day after to-morrow. They are all partners, and they are continuing the profession. Their sons and grandsons also continue the same profession. When there arises a difference of opinion, claims and rival claims are put forward by these people, and they go to courts. The result is lawyers flourish. I do not mean to say that lawyers should not flourish. All I say is that they should not flourish upon unnecessary quarrels. The hon. Member Mr. Raghavayya is very angry because I stated that lawyers flourish on unnecessary quarrels. This clause clearly says that even when the fees have been already fixed, the trustee shall have power to fix the fees and also determine the portion of fees to be paid to the various office holders. The office holders need not go to court when this clause is here. The trustees will fully consider law and be guided by them. They will decide the matter easily. This is a very important clause, and, therefore, it must be here in the interests of the archakas and pujaris who do service in temples. My hon. friends with all sincerity want to safeguard the interests of the temple and its pristine purity.

I am quite sure of their bona fides. But with all this, they have got some antiquarian ideas and peculiar notions. They want the ideas which held good perhaps 100 years before to continue for ever. There only I differ from them. It is not right to allow these poor archakas to go to the Court of law for everything. To save them from the trouble of going to the Court, and wasting money, this clause is put here. Otherwise the archakas and others will go up to the Supreme Court. It is only to avoid that the Commissioner is given power. When my hon. friends say that, if power is vested in the Commissioner and the trustee, custom and usage will go away. They presume that wrong persons will get in, and that they will violate every rule in the temple. That will not be the case. When the Government appoint a Commissioner, they will appoint only the best man. The persons appointed will have great interest in our religious institutions. Hon. Members need not presume that wrong persons will get in and spoil the temples. Therefore, Sir, I say that this clause is intended for the benefit of the archakas and temple servants. This clause is very essential and it must remain."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I have great doubts whether this clause is at all intra vires. That is a different matter altogether. I shall confine my remarks to the merits. In fact I had consultation with a very high authority, and I was told that a mere going to the Supreme Court will negate this clause altogether. I am not giving this information simply as a piece of information, but as one to be seriously pondered over by the Government. What is if this clause seeks to do? In the first place it seeks to give power to the trustee, of course subject to the directions of the Commissioner, to fix the fees for the performance of archanais. Obviously the framers of this Bill do not know anything else. They have little knowledge of the routine in temples, and they hardly know how the archakas get their emoluments. The custom in each temple is different. In some temples the archaka gets nothing out of the money paid for archanais. For instance Rs. 7 is the fee charged for archanais in Tirupati temple. But six annas is the fee charged in Tiruchanur temple. That is to say, the fee varies from place to place. The archakas of the Tirupati temple get no portion whatsoever of the fee for archanai. They were never entitled to any portion, but they are entitled to the proceeds from certain villages which were allowed to them in return for their service in the temple. We have now sought to take those villages away if they are whole villages. I cannot understand the policy of Government which first seek to deprive the archaka of all his source of living, then make him stick to the service, and then go further and say that the trustee shall have power to decide what portion of the fee the archaka can get. In Tirupati temple he is entitled to nothing. But in Tiruchanur temple he is entitled to all the proceeds of the archanai. They have no inam villages. Inam villages were given to those who rendered service in the temple, because, if cash was given, there was always the temptation for the temple servants to discontinue the service. They were given whole inam villages so that they might be tied down to the lands.

During the Kalyana Utsavam any pilgrim who goes to Tirumalai is entitled to a dakshina of a quarter of an anna. That quarter of an anna is considered a sacred thing. The pilgrim is supposed to take it to his home, put it in the safe and preserve it for it is considered that God's present even in the form of a kowdi is worth keeping and that the person would grow to prosperity. Thus these archanas have a significance of their own. They were settled by custom. Regarding the Tiruchanur case, my hon. Friend Sri Kandaswamy Pillai who knows very little about this obviously thinks that the archakas went to Court and fought their case out in the High Court of Madras. Sir, the history of this case is this. The archakas were tyrannised by the trustee who contrary to usage said that he would not give them a kowdi from out of the proceeds of the archanas. Then the case had to go to the court. From one court to another the archakas had to go selling even the little property they had earned by the service which they had performed. That is a most pitiable case. Whole families were driven to court by the tyrannical exercise of power by an unknowing person. This scope is given by what is being done here. The trustee may be a good man but he may be totally ignorant of the customs. He may have individual notions, very honestly held no doubt, but which may be harmful to the archakas. In the case I referred to the archakas fought their case out in the court after selling all their properties. The litigation was forced on them by the trustee. Ultimately it was decided by the High Court that they were entitled to all donations below Rs. 11 made by worshippers and that donations over Rs. 11 would exclusively belong to the temple. The rule is still in force, a very wise and salutary rule, and one which is derived from custom, and the people should not deviate from it. That rule gave the archaka his proper place. Now what do we seek to do to-day? We create a trustee. The Government can appoint anybody as the trustee. They have now wide powers and not restricted powers as before. Then the trustee may come with all his new notions and say that he will fix what portion the archaka shall receive. Perhaps it may be that the trustee never attended an archana. In fact, most of our trustees do not even care to remain there when an archana is performed. Hereafter it would not be the order of things. Just the reverse may obtain because the Government are going to choose from others and I hope they will get a better class of people who will follow the temple worship, understand it and really want to receive the blessings of hundreds of people. But this Clause 55 takes away the rights vested in the archaka by immemorial custom which was settled for reasons well thought out and argued by our ancient people. What will be the result after this clause is brought into effect? The whole order will be changed. I hope, however, that it would not be necessary for a trustee of a temple always to go against the custom and change the order of things. There may be a few trustees who may do it and they tried to do it in Tiruchanur. Therefore, I want the Government to take a serious view of the matter and to entrust the trustee only with such power as to enable him to regulate the affair in accordance with usage settled by Courts of Law or by custom. That is the object of my positive amendment. I cannot enlarge upon this any more. I hope the hon. Members would properly appreciate the importance of fixing the duties and responsibilities of temple servants and would desire that they should discharge their duties in an efficient and proper manner. I strongly oppose the language of the clause as it now stands."

SRI P. KANDASWAMI PILLAI:—"On a point of personal explanation, Sir, my hon. Friend Sri Varadachari says that I do not know much about these archanas and other things. I shall give only one instance. I may not know as much as Acharyapurushas know. But in Suguneswarar Temple in Salem there was one Gurukkal. Those people who did not know Agamas well, thought that if this man came in, their profession would go. So they all joined together and there was a tussle. They said that this man was not a proper selection and that puja had to be performed for five days in a week. The matter had to go to court. But a vakil who was there sent for them and made a compromise between them with the help of the Board also. There are several such instances. My hon. Friend Sri Varadachari may be very well acquainted with the Tiruchanur and Tirupati temples for he has been living there from his childhood. Similarly I know about my native place. There is nothing new in this. I am also a Hindu like him and I am as much a religious man as he is. We are not simply renouncing religion; we are not atheists. I submit I have got some knowledge about these religious matters and about these temple bodies also. In view of that, I am honestly convinced that this clause will help all these people."

SRI K. R. KARANTH:—"Sir, after the very lucid argument of my hon. Friend Sri Varadachari, I shall not add very much to it. So far as the last speaker hon. Sri Kandaswamy Pillai is concerned, he has shown how he knows more than all of us in these matters. Regarding his criticism of the lawyers I have found that some of those who are not lawyers are often jealous of the profession. Anyway I can assure him that if he were one he would be one of the most illustrious in the profession because even without passing the Law tests he can put things so nicely and so clearly. Sir, it is not as if this clause is concerned only with archakas in so far as what they are to get or in so far as what rights have been conferred on them under decrees or otherwise are concerned. I cannot do better than my hon. Friend Sri Varadachari who has put the case very clearly."

"Another aspect which suggests to me is that by this clause the trustees are reduced to non-entities. It is there that my quarrel is. The fundamental rights say that the trustees of institutions shall manage the affairs in their own way whereas here even in a matter like fixing the rates for archana, we are told that the trustee of a temple shall have power, subject to such conditions as the Commissioner may by general or special order impose. Even in a small matter like fixing the scale of fees for archanas, are not the trustees to have their own rights or their own discretions? Even there are they to be dictated to by the Commissioner? If this is done, I may submit that this is an interference of the most undesirable type. Local people are the trustees. The fundamental rights permit them to manage the affairs as they like. But we see that even in these small matters, there is to be control. We have seen with regard to expenditure, framing of a budget and in the incurring of expenditure there is to be control. This clause defeats the very purpose of the fundamental rights and I can only say that the Government are ill-advised in including a provision of this type."

"Yesterday there was one matter about the presentation of a japamala by a swamiyar to his disciple. The Hon. Minister asked whether it was set with diamonds or with gold. I was not very sure about it. I said offhand that it might not be worth more than Rs. 10. I sent a telegram last night so that this House should be possessed of correct facts. I got a reply just now that the doctor who treated the swamiyar for a year for asthma was not paid anything and that the japamala presented to him was worth Rs. 136-8-0. This is only by way of an illustration of interference in such a case. Is he to be told, why have you not obtained the sanction of the Board? Here in this clause we are told that in fixing the scale of fees for archanas, the Commissioner is given power of control. This is outrageous, wrong and unjust and the Government by putting such clauses in this Bill will only help a declaration that much of it is ultra vires."

SRI K. VARADACHARI:—"Sir, on going through the wording of this clause, I feel I am compelled to request the Government in all humility to delete this clause altogether. After the several clauses dealing with the powers conferred upon the Commissioner and the Deputy Commissioner, we now come to the stage of arming the trustees themselves with powers which they have never possessed. Under this clause, it is the trustees that are given the power to fix the fees for archanas and all those things, of course subject to the Commissioner's directions. But the main power is given to the trustee. I submit that at no time the trustee had such power in any institution. The trustee is guided only by the ancient usage of the temple and this archana service in temples is part of the dittam itself and nobody has got any power to change these dittams in any manner. There are temples in which archanas are part of the regular service and part of the regular ritual. That archana is done without any separate fee. The emoluments attaching to the office are in general applicable to this also as this service is part of the regular service. Where an archaka performs a service by way of an archana, he is not bound to do it for every pilgrim that demands it. The Hon. Minister may know this. In no temple is the archaka bound to do it unless there is already an usage to that effect. He may not do it unless the pilgrim pays the required fee, for it is outside the regular duties. For the sake of the satisfaction of the pilgrim or of the devotee, in many temples an usage has grown up that the archaka ordinarily performs it but charges a fee which he likes. Courts have regulated these things. In several disputes relating to archana in which I had the honour to appear in Courts also, this experience has been noticed, namely, that the archaka is not bound to perform the archana service to every pilgrim that asks for it but if he does, he must do it only according to ancient usage by receiving a prescribed fee which cannot be altered or enhanced. But this clause not only gives the trustee the power to fix the fee but also says that he can reduce or enhance it. When it is said that he can fix, he may reduce the existing fee or enhance it. Both these powers are given to him. There are many temples in which emoluments to the archakas are very little and one source of income for him who is toiling from early morning till late at night is archana.

"Are the Government going to disturb those usages and starve the temples and put an end to all the services rendered to the pilgrims by giving such powers to the trustees? I never thought that the Government would go so far as to destroy the usages and customs of the temples—the Mirasi rights of the archakas including. I think such interference will be ruled ultra vires of the Constitution. I submit, Sir, that this clause may be omitted."

SRI R. V. SWAMINATHAN:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, the point raised by my hon. Friend, Sri Bhashyam was whether fees should be fixed or not."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Let me clear myself, Sir. Fees are already there and I do not want them to be altered by the Commissioner. This is all what I said."

SRI R. V. SWAMINATHAN:—"I know, Sir, they are fixed. Even in big temples like the Mathurai Meenakshi temple they have fixed fees for the various archanas—ordinary archanas, laksh-archanas, and sahasranamarchanas. They have printed tickets for the purpose. But my point is this. To-day the cost of living has gone up beyond expectations and the common man is not in a position to afford decent clothing, not to speak of food and other equally important requirements of his. Why not we allow this man facilities to worship God at least? I know in most of the temples, to worship God has become a costly affair. Ordinary men cannot go to such temples and perform archanas. It is not an easy job for a poor Hindu. According to my hon. Friend, Sri

[22nd November 1950] [Sri R. V. Swaminathan]

N. S. Varadachari, one has to pay six rupees for worshipping at the Tirupati temple. Is it possible for a poor man to go to Tirupathi and pay six rupees there? Sir, this is certainly beyond the means of the poor worshippers and this principle is definitely wrong. Even God, if He can speak, would not tell the archakas to charge such high fees. Then, Sri Varadachari referred to certain temples where they charge six annas. I think that a low fee is charged in temples where the archakas enjoy inam lands and high fee is resorted to where there are no such inams. If that is so, where is the harm in the Commissioner fixing the scales of fee with reference to the practices obtaining in the particular temple? Sri K. Varadachari threatened the Government that unless this clause was omitted, the matter would go before the Supreme Court where it would be declared ultra vires. Sir, every important piece of legislation that comes up before the House is said to be repugnant to the provisions of the Constitution or to go against the Fundamental Rights enunciated therein. I appeal to the Hon. the Minister for Law not to be frightened by such threats but to go on with the measure if only he feels it proper and just."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, it was said that a very great principle was involved in this provision. My hon. Friend, Sri Viswanatham also said that there was a principle involved in this question. I also know, Sir, that there is a principle involved here. All that I say is let us understand that principle. Let us examine it dispassionately. Let not my hon. Friend, Sri Swaminathan, be under the impression that the reference to the Constitution by certain hon. Members is bad. It is not so. When hon. Members say it is against the Constitution, they would have certainly examined the position, and consulted experts. Even some of us who want certain provision to be there feel that it may go against the Constitution and refrain from inserting such things in the Bill. There are many who have read the Constitution thoroughly and say this provision is repugnant to it. I can see their view point. But there are others who have not read anything in the Constitution, who do not know what is contained in the Constitution but yet say this is against the Constitution in their anxiety that this should not find a place in the Bill. Let me tell them, Sir, they should be charitable to those against whom they hurl such remarks.

"Now, Sir, before proceeding to reply to the points raised by hon. Members, I would like to say a word about the japamala incident to which reference was made by my hon. Friend, Sri Karanth, to-day also. Sir, I contacted the President of the Hindu Religious Endowments Board and enquired what exactly the matter was. He has since given his reply. As I said yesterday, Sir, if the swamiyar had given even ten thousand rupees as fees it would not have been questioned. What happened is this. The auditor who went to audit the accounts found this item there whose cost was mentioned as Rs. 193. (Sri K. R. Karanth: 'It was Rs. 136-8-0.') I have got the audit report here and it says Rs. 193. The auditor had said that it was an unauthorized expenditure and thereupon, the Board asked the math to explain how this expenditure was incurred without the Board's sanction. (Sri K. Bhashyam: 'Why sanction for this expenditure?') The Board's sanction is needed only when unusual expenditure is incurred. When it was explained to the Board that the doctor was presented with the japamala, the matter was dropped. This is all what has happened according to the records at my disposal. I do not think that the action of the Board in this case is improper.

"Sir, the position of the archakas has been very clearly explained to the House by the various hon. Members who spoke on this clause. I entirely agree with my hon. Friend, Sri N. S. Varadachari that there are in every temple Thrikala or Kala poojas, i.e., poojas performed at stated times. To perform such poojas, there are archakas who are given either inam properties or paid other emoluments. We are not doing anything with that now. We are thinking of cases where archanas are not performed in pursuance or as a part of the regular poojas. Suppose half a dozen worshippers go to a temple and ask the archaka to perform ashtothra or sahasranama pooja. In such cases we must fix the fees. My hon. Friend, Sri K. Varadachari said that the archakas were not normally bound to perform such archanas. If that is a fact, that is all the more the reason why there should be fixed fees so that the archaka may not begin to auction the rates, so that he may not say, 'whoever that pays Rs. 25 will have his archana done and others will not.' (Sri K. Bhashyam: 'It cannot happen.') I was myself a victim of this kind when I went to Gaya some twenty years ago for performing shardam. (Sri T. Viswanatham: 'That may be in the North. Here in South India it will not happen.') A purohit came and demanded Rs. 250 for performing the shardam. He said, 'you cannot do it unless you pay this amount.' We were half a dozen of us then and a friend of mine put it at 150 and another put it at a still lower sum with the result that finally we paid Rs. 1-8-0. (Sri T. Viswanatham: 'What has it got to do with archakas?') Let my hon. Friend listen to me fully. I say all this because the tendency to auction rates is always there. In a temple where there is archana, it is not always that the archaka gets the fees. So, it would be better for the archaka himself if there is a stipulated fee for him. If there is no fixed fee, how can we protect the archaka's interests? That apart, are we not to protect the temple's interests also? Are we not to protect the interests of the worshippers? The clause says that everybody who wants to perform archanas should pay a fixed fee. Let them pay four annas or eight annas to the trustee, take a ticket, give it to the archaka and have the archana done. If after the archana is done, the worshippers want to pay anything to the archakas, they are at liberty to do so. My hon. Friend, Sri Bhashyam said, 'do not have anything that will affect the interests of the archakas; do not whip them.' Sir, I feel as strongly as he feels for the archakas. But at the same time I would tell him, 'do not hit the poor worshipper also.' The worshippers' interests should be safeguarded as much as the archakas. I am not decrying the work of archakas. I want to avoid discrimination between the influential and the non-influential, between the poor and the rich worshippers. Suppose a temple demands Rs. 200 as the fees. Is it not outrageous? Should not the Commissioner intervene then and say it must be reasonable? I say let the worshipper have the satisfaction of having got the archana performed with the minimum sum paid. Let others have the satisfaction or the assurance that they can get such things done without having to pay high fees. Let the archaka be paid more as dakshina—that is a personal gift. In fact I do so whenever I go to Malabar and visit the Guruvayoor temple. If I want to do a kalaham I would pay the prescribed fee of thirty or forty rupees. After it is performed the archaka brings me the kalaham."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—"What is this 'Kalaham'? We do not understand what it is."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Perhaps, my hon. Friend thinks it is 'kalagam', that is 'quarrel'. (Laughter.) I do not quarrel, Sir. Kalaham is a kind of pooja performed in the Guruvayoor temple. Kalabham in Sanskrit means 'yana' (elephant). But in our parts it is a pooja, wherein sandal paste mixed with scent is put on the deity. After the performance of the pooja the sandal paste is given to the person who arranges for it. For the performance of the pooja I pay and get a ticket. When the sandal paste is given to me, I pay the archaka out of my own free will three or four rupees. This is done in many cases and we do not want to interfere with this case. Where fees are demanded for the performance of an archana we say that they should be fixed. The idea is let all people be benefited. After all the Deputy Commissioner or the Commissioner may say 'you keep an account book for the purpose' and nothing beyond that. It is only the trustee that is going to fix the fees. There are certain temples in which the archakas are entitled to the entire proceeds from archanas. There are certain others in which they do not get any. In such cases, suppose a person pays one rupee as the archana fee. He pays it because it is performed at a particular place, inside a temple where the deity is installed, and he will not pay this amount if it is to be performed on a public road. When he pays this one rupee, what is wrong, I ask, Sir, in the trustee saying, 'let the archaka take fourteen annas or fifteen annas and let the balance of one anna or two annas go to the temple'? I see absolutely no reason why this should not be done. The people go to a particular temple because they are interested in that temple . . ."

SRI K. R. KARANTH:—"But why should the Commissioner interfere?"

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"The Commissioner is there only to lay down the conditions under which the amount should be collected. It is the trustee that fixes it and the conditions put down by the Commissioner need not be as to how much should be collected. He would suggest the method of collection. If the conditions go against the wishes of the trustee it is a different matter. The person who is asked to fix the rate is the trustee.

"The scope of the Clause is to determine what fee shall be levied for the performance of the 'archana' and what portion of such fee shall go to the 'archaka' and the temple. It has been said and particularly, the hon. Member Sri Viswanatham said that we should not have a law for that, custom must be respected and settlements that might have been given by Courts should not be disturbed and all that. It is not an uncommon thing that when a legislature passes a law, the Court interprets it in a particular way. The Courts interpret the law according to the wording of the law though it might not be the intention of the legislature. The Courts say 'Though it might not be the intention of the legislature the thing has not been properly worded and it is our duty to interpret it only according to the wording of the legislation.' In such cases do we not amend the legislation. To do so is not showing disrespect to the Court, it is only trying to put it in the proper form so that the intention of the legislature might be brought forward correctly. By amending the legislation after the decision of a Court has gone against the legislation, we do not insult the Courts, we only get guidance from the Court and correct the legislation. Have we not also cases where Judges have pointed out particular flaws in certain legislations and expressed that those flaws should be removed. To remove a flaw in the legislation because the legislature wants it, is it an insult to the Court? Not at all. I say all this because it was contended that there are settlements by Courts or schemes by which it has been sought to fix a fee for the 'archana', the trustee collecting it and giving a receipt and all that and therefore the Government should not now pass a law. The trustee is only a collecting agency. It is not paid to him out right. In such cases it is open to the trustee to say that he should be paid a portion of the 'archana' fee for the temple.

"Again it is not only the question of 'archana' and 'archana' alone. In Tirupathi if you pay six annas and take a ticket you can get your head shaved. It seems, before this system was introduced, it was a regular auction business and there was lot of trouble in such cases. 'Tirupathi kshavaram' has become proverbial to indicate that the people are entirely at the mercy of these But now it has been fixed. If you pay the prescribed fee you can get yourselves shaved. Of this fee of six annas five annas go to the barber and the balance of an anna goes to the temple. What is wrong there in fixing the fee. I do not see anything wrong in doing it. This Clause says that in such cases the trustee might fix a fee for the performance of the thing. In cases where there are no settlements and where the temple does not get anything there is nothing unreasonable or unconscionable by legislation to take power to make the levy of the fee reasonable and conscionable. That is why we say in the clause—

"Notwithstanding anything contained in any scheme settled or deemed to be settled under this Act, or any decree or usage to the contrary, the trustee of a temple shall have power, subject to such conditions as the Commissioner may, by general or special order, direct, to fix fees for the performance of archanas and to determine what portion, if any, of such fees shall be paid to the archakas or other office-holders or servants of the temple."

There is a principle involved in this. It is that the worshippers are entitled to have the worship without harassment and worry. At the same time the 'archaka' also will be assured of his share of the fee. Particularly in cases where the 'archaka' is not bound to do the 'archana' the trustee must fix the fee, take the money, pay the share of the fee prescribed to the 'archaka' and see that when the money has been paid, the 'archana' or the worship necessary is done. That is the principle involved in this Clause. Only, we can understand it, if we think in this way. We should extend our consideration and sympathy to the temple and the worshippers. After all there is nothing wrong in having sympathy for the 'archaka' but we should show equal consideration and sympathy for the temple and the worshippers. If you view it from this point it won't look outrageous, or obnoxious as was attempted to be made out in this House.

"The hon. Member Sri N. S. Varadachari said 'Do you realise what would be the result if this Bill is passed.' I say, Sir. I perfectly realise what it will be. The 'archaka' will be helped, the worshippers will be helped, the worship will be performed for the money that is paid and the temple may get a share to which it is entitled to.

"There is nothing harmful in this Clause if viewed from these standpoints. This Clause is very necessary and if worked properly it will be to the good of all concerned."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"I think, Sir, the Hon. the Law Minister has exhibited lot of vehemence in the matter which is wholly unnecessary. The only question before the House is whether old usages, things settled by schemes, things settled by decrees, should be interfered with by the Commissioner to-day. That is the only question. We are not disputing the fact that there should be some order in respect of these matters, that there should be a fee fixed. In fact, our forefathers have been wiser than we and fixed the fees and determined by custom as to what has to be done in particular cases. They have done it in the case of every temple. I tell you, Sir, if you go to a temple and ascertain the custom, they will give you all details, namely, the fee for the 'archana', how much of it will go to the 'archaka', how much to the temple and to other servants. They know how to divide it among themselves. It is a 'mamool'. It is not as if we introduce it for the first time. The Hon. the Law Minister assumes that they start from scrap, as if there is chaos and therefore they must bring order into that chaos and therefore they must have this Bill and all these powers. It is certainly not so, Sir. I deny any such thing happening. I ask the Government why they should interfere now. In cases where there is no such fees fixed they can do so now and I can understand power being taken by Government in such cases. But in cases where there is already the usage, where a scheme has fixed it and a decree of a Court has fixed it, why should the Government intervene in this matter. Things have been going on for a long time. Why then interfere with all these small matter now. Therefore much of the vehemence shown by the Hon. the Law Minister as if we are against fixing any fees is wholly irrelevant to the point at issue. I say when things are orderly why disturb them and make them disorderly and try to bring order over again.

"Sir, it is not as if we are here, persons who want to support the 'archakas' only. The Hon. Minister referred to his experience at Gaya. We don't treat those people as priests. They are quite different from the 'archakas' in these temples. Perhaps my Hon. Friend wanted to perform the 'Sradha' on the banks of the Ganges and therefore certain fellows demanded from him a fee for the performance of the 'Sradha.' When I was there I refused to perform it. I had my own 'purohit' for the performance of the ceremony. Why do it at all under those conditions. That is my point. It is a case where the Hon. Minister could have found his own remedy."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—"He succeeded in his bargain and had it performed for a rupee and twelve annas."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"A Malayalee will do it. (The Hon. Sri Madhava Menon stood up to protest) I am sorry I do not yield. Sir. But that is a different matter. What I want to say is there are ways of doing it. I do not know whether my Hon. Friend went there when he was a Minister. They might have thought he was a Minister and so demanded a big fee."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"I went there as early as 1922."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Then perhaps he went there with a lace cap and lace clothing, or they might have supposed that he was a rich man, a very rich man. (An hon. Member: 'He looks a rich man even now.') It all depends on the appearance. Indeed if you look at him he looks rich. That is the whole trouble. I say, Sir, all these illustrations are no good. We are dealing with institutions and practices that have been there for years and centuries. Certain customs and usages are there in these things. Are the Government going to interfere in these things. If you really say that the trustee should do it, why allow the Commissioner to interfere with the trustee. It is the local opinion that should count, the persons there, the worshippers in the temple should do it. The worshippers know what to do. They won't give what is demanded of them by the 'archaka', and the 'archaka' also knows his business. If they feel that the demand is extraordinary, they know how to moderate it. These are mere bargains, each person knows how to deal with the other side. There won't be any trouble or difficulty in respect of these matters. By enacting this Clause Government are trying to raise a devil and then exorcize it. That is what is happening to-day. The Government are creating trouble where there is no trouble. This Clause is wholly unnecessary."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"My hon. Friend Sri Bhashyam said that I thought it was a thing started now, a thing which was not in existence before. I do not want the hon. Members to be misled. It is not my purpose to mislead them now. I have not attempted to do it at any time. About that I am sure. I ask the hon. Members to say where the clause is misleading. I would request them to read the clause and then say whether I have misled them. I simply said that the clause empowers the trustee to fix the fees and also the share that should go to the 'archaka' and the temple from the fee collected. That is the only thing that I said."

"As to my being less clothed or looking rich, at the time I went to Gaya and referred to by my hon. Friend Sri Bhashyam, I may tell him that I was there in 1922 as a poor non-co-operator, a student, not with the 'Kavi vasthram' and all that. Still the 'archaka' thought that I must pay 250 rupees."

The amendment was put and lost.

THE MADRAS LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Friday, the 24th November 1950.

The House met in the Assembly Chamber, Fort St. George, at eleven of the clock, Mr. Speaker (THE HON. SRI J. SIVA-SHANMUGAM PILLAI) in the Chair.

THE MADRAS HINDU RELIGIOUS AND CHARITABLE ENDOWMENTS

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, while I appreciate the anxiety of Government to conclude the debate on the Hindu Religious Endowments Bill before to-morrow evening, I would urge that such a thing would be possible only if they exercise some amount of consideration for reasonable amendments. Otherwise, a full debate will have to be gone through. Clauses which are very contentious cannot be rushed through this House in the manner in which they are sought to be rushed. My amendment to Clause 55 is as follows:—

For existing Clause 55, substitute the following:—

" 55. The Trustee of a temple shall have power subject to such conditions as the Commissioner may by special or general order direct to fix fees for the performance of archana and to determine what portion if any of such fees shall be paid to the archakas or other office-holders or servants of the temple but in doing so he shall not depart from the settled usage where it has been clearly laid down either in the temple records or by decrees of courts of law."

" Sir, I consider that this amendment is vital to the whole Bill since it touches upon a principle that we shall not ordinarily depart from immemorial custom where it has been sanctioned by the force of public opinion for thousands of years or where in cases of disputes it has been settled by a clear statement in the record of the temple itself or by decrees in Courts of Law. The object of this amendment is not to defeat the Government's purpose. I am not opposing clause 55 but am only seeking to put it in a proper setting. The Hon. Minister made a very unhappy reference to the Sraddha ceremony while talking about archakas. Obviously the Hon. Minister while on a visit to North India thought of performing a Gaya Sraddha and sought the service of some family or other there for it. But there is very little meaning in its reference to temple customs and the performance of archakas. The Hon. Minister does not even have full knowledge of this custom of archakas. He said, 'We must safeguard the interests of the worshipper. Why are you only thinking of the underdog called the archaka in the temple? Are not all the poor worshippers to be safeguarded in their rights?' Yes, Sir, they ought to be safeguarded. That is why I ask the trustee of a temple whom the Government appoint to be given the right to fix the fees where they have not been fixed already. But in cases where they have been fixed either by custom or by decrees of Courts of law and the apportionment of the shares of money realized from such archanas has already been determined, I say that the trustee shall not disturb that arrangement. I think the Government could at once concede that it is a very reasonable amendment.

"The Hon. Minister may say that in most of these cases the worshippers have the upper hand and not the poor archaka. The worshippers sometimes crowd in a temple and then say, 'Please offer an archana.' The archana takes usually some 5 to 10 minutes. It consists of a number of recitations of names of God; sometimes it may be a thousand and sometimes it may be only 108. The time taken varies and if the gathering visiting the temple is very large and the worshippers are large in number, naturally the number of archanas performed cannot be more than a few for the whole day. The fee given for these archanas is also very very little. It has never exceeded 2 annas to my knowledge and the richer the worshipper the less he gives. Let me tell the Hon. Minister that I have never seen a rich person in my company opening out his heart in the most liberal fashion and after hearing all the thousand and odd names of God uttered in his presence for His blessings on the worshipper give more than a couple of annas while poor worshippers of my own place, taking a real back seat in the queue that stands for archanas, sometimes give of their hard-earned money a few annas more, perhaps 4 or 8 annas. Four annas perhaps is the top fee paid in any temple for archanas. My hon. Friend will know that in certain temples the archana itself forms the routine for worship as in the Tirupati temple. There is no separate archana performed for each worshipper but the right to be present when an archana is performed is sought to be regulated by the issue of tickets by the Devasthanam. It is then that they pay Rs. 7 and 5 persons of a family are allowed to be present at the time of the archana. Even this is not surely an exorbitant rate. In the Tirupati temple what will happen if archanas are made free or if the fee is reduced? There are thousands of worshippers daily. You cannot even accommodate them. At present the Devasthanam is obliged not to issue the archana ticket if there is not enough space for all the ticket-holders to stand beside the sanctum sanctorum. That is the custom even to day. This arrangement is only for the convenience of pilgrims. It is only to take off the rush that occurs at times in the ordinary queue, that attendance at archanas is made subject to a ticket fee of Rs. 6 or 7. In the case of the other temples, what happens? The fee is a few annas and perhaps that is the only income earned by the archaka. The Hon. Minister referred to a case where recently the High Court had held that the trustee would be merely a collecting agent and that all the proceeds of the archanas would be handed over to the archakas. What is the mistake in that arrangement? What are the other emoluments which these archakas get? The present practice in Tiruchanur is nearly the same. The High Court held in a decree that any offering below a particular sum shall belong exclusively to the archaka but that any offering above that sum shall without any apportionment belong in its entirety to the Devasthanam. It is a very reasonable arrangement. The archakas in these cases have no inams and no villages and have not even a few acres of land in their possession. If a trustee takes it into his head to-day to disturb the arrangement very properly legalised by Courts of Law, what will happen? He will simply be disturbing the worship in the temple and give the archakas an inducement to be slack. They may perhaps not perform their duties with the same ardour and zeal with which they are performing them to-day. In the sacred name of religion and with a view to safeguard the rights of worshippers, I suggest that the Government may accept my amendment. It still gives power to the trustee to fix the fees where they have not been fixed already either by custom or by law and also to fix the apportionment. The only exception that I make is with regard to cases where decrees have already been passed by Courts of Law fixing the arrangement or where custom has already fixed the arrangement far in advance of the legislation.

"On a very reasonable consideration of the entire case, I suggest in all humility that this amendment would meet Government's case and they ought to accept it in fairness and reason."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, it is necessary that the Government should recognise the rights which have been established already in this matter."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The point has already been made by the hon. Member while speaking in support of the amendment moved by Sri Bhaskaran."

[24th November 1950]

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Then I will resume my seat."

SRIMATHI V. LAKSHMI AMMAL:—"கனம் அக்கிராசனாதிபதி அவர்களே, கனம் ஸ்ரீ வரதாச்சாரியார் அவர்கள் கொண்டுவந்திருக்கும் திருத்தப் பிரேரணையை நான் ஆதரித்து இரண்டொரு வார்த்தைகள் பேசுகின்றேன்.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, all the points were dealt with in detail on the first motion moved by my hon. Friend Sri Bhashyam to delete this clause. The arguments advanced to-day are identically the same as those advanced then. Therefore, I have not much to add to what I said the other day.

I shall answer one or two points made by Srimathi Lakshmi Ammal to-day. She said: 'இந்த மாதிரியாக புனிதமான காகியங்களில் தலை யிடுவது ரொம்பவும் அநீதியானது, தப்பிதமானது.'

"The amendment of hon. Sri Varadachari really negatives the clause as a whole. The clause as it stands says, 'Notwithstanding anything contained in any scheme settled or deemed to be settled under this Act, or any decree or usage to the contrary the trustee of a temple shall have power', etc. Sri Varadachari starts his amendment by saying 'subject to such conditions as the Commissioner may by special or general order direct to fix fees', etc. In the last portion of his amendment he says, 'but in doing so he shall not depart from the settled usage where it has been clearly laid down either in the temple records or by decrees of courts of law'. In effect, the wording of hon. Sri Varadachari's amendment is just the opposite of what the Government want to introduce. I find that Srimathi Lakshmi Ammal supports the amendment of hon. Sri Varadachari. Sri Varadachari says that the trustee shall have power subject to such conditions as the Commissioner may by special or general order direct to fix fees for the performance of archana. But hon. Srimathi Lakshmi Ammal says that the fixing of any fee is wrong but still supports hon. Sri Varadachari's amendment. The hon. lady Member says that nothing should be fixed, and the archana fee should be left to the good sense of the person who wishes to perform the archana and then to the good sense of the trustee, etc. I entirely agree with the hon. lady Member. Let there be no archakas then and let the worshippers themselves perform the pujas, etc. The hon. lady Member also cited the case of Kasi. I am quite agreeable if such a form of worship exists here also. In that case there will be no archakas and therefore there will not be any need for the operation of this clause. This clause is intended to cover cases where there are archakas in temples who perform archanas on behalf of the worshippers. If there were no archakas to perform archana, then it is another matter. (Srimathi V. Lakshmi Ammal: 'I will be glad if the worshippers themselves were allowed to perform the archanas'.) It is not a question of the hon. lady Member being glad or not. Neither she nor anybody can change a custom which has been in existence there for so long a period. It is the custom that only archakas can perform archanas in temples. To-day, I will not be permitted to do archana myself in the Tirupathi temple if I want. I want to tell hon. Srimathi Lakshmi Ammal that hon. Sri Varadachari's amendment gives power to the trustee to fix fees for the performance of archanas; but what hon. Sri Varadachari says is this: 'In certain cases where it has been fixed by settlement or by decrees of courts of law, don't go beyond that'. That is what he says. I may tell the hon. Members that the Government wanted to do something more from the very beginning. The archakas are paid some archana money when they perform archana in a temple. Suppose an archaka to-morrow performs archana in front of the Secretariat, will he be paid any fees? I am sure nobody will be eager to call an archaka and ask him to do archana—either Ashtothram or Sahasranamam—in front of the Secretariat, however great it may be. At present the archaka is getting his archana fee only because he performs archana in the temple before the deity. Because it is a temple, people go there and ask him to perform archanas. In view of this, why should not the temple get a small share out of the archana fees? To quote another instance, for mudiyeduppu in Tirupathi the charge is six annas. Out of this, the barber is given five annas and one anna is credited to the temple. Because this has got to be done in Tirupathi, such a charge is made and there is nothing wrong in the temple getting a share of such charges. Similarly, I feel that there is nothing wrong for the trustee to collect the fees and allot a portion of it to the archaka and credit the other portion to the Devasthanam.

“Coming to the fixation of the fees, I think it is very desirable to have fixed rates. Take the case of the Tirupathi temple. If the archana fees were not prescribed, it will be a question of the rich people alone being able to perform archanas. In such a case, only people who have money and influence can get something, and the poor man cannot get anything out of it. Now, if a particular rate is fixed, there is at least a chance for all the people—rich and poor, to perform archanas by paying that amount. The worshipper will have at least this consolation, viz., ‘I have done what is necessary and so I am satisfied. If he does not do it, then he becomes a cheat before God. I have done what is to be done by paying the prescribed archana fee’. It is true that there are some settlements made by custom and also by courts of law. Why should the trustee be a mere collecting agent and collect all the archana fees and pay the entire money to the archaka? As I said the trustee must have power to fix the archana fees and allot a portion of it to the archaka and allot the other portion to the temple. Here, we are not trying to deprive the archakas of their archana fees. There is one other matter. Besides the trustee, archaka and God, there is also one other party, viz., the worshippers. We have to consider their convenience. After all, where is the money coming from? It is coming from the worshippers. So they must be given some consideration and some facility to perform the archanas. That is the reason why we have provided that the trustee may be given power to fix the fees. Srimathi Lakshmi Ammal said that this will lead to blackmarket in archanas. That is exactly what is going on now. Probably the hon. lady Member may not feel it now. But there are scores of worshippers who feel it just at present. As there is no fixed archana fee, a lot of people are compelled to resort to blackmarketing even in archanas. Blackmarketing is going on under any conditions. Our desire is that at least in the name of God it should not be done. It is only with a view to prevent and check blackmarketing in the performance of archanas, we are seeking to provide for the fixation of the archana fees. The other day hon. Member Sri Bhashyam instanced a case where the archaka demanded Rs. 200 for performing an archana. He characterised it as highly outrageous. True, to demand Rs. 200 for performing an archana is certainly outrageous. It is with the idea of preventing any sort of harassment of the worshippers by asking them that they should pay huge amounts as archana fees, and also of preventing any bargaining with regard to this fees, we have provided for the fixation of this fees. We have also provided that the archaka will be entitled to a proper share of this fees and the temple also will be entitled to the other share of this fees. For these reasons I cannot accept the amendment.”

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—“Mr. Speaker, Sir, the Hon. Minister must accept that all the arguments that he has put forward, though they may seem to him as reasonable and all that, are not correct in respect of this matter. First of all, he unnecessarily drew the attention to what is called blackmarket in archanas. He knows nothing about it. (The Hon. Sri K. Madhava Menon: ‘I entirely agree that I do not know anything about it’.) I have visited temples—twice as many as the Hon. Minister might have done. I have not come across a single instance where an archaka has demanded any fees for performing archana on my behalf. He may not have known me, but all the same the archaka has not demanded anything from me. Again, when the Hon. Ministers visited the Tirumalai temple, they had free archanas, and perhaps they got even Mel Sathus worth hundreds of rupees.”

SRI V. I. MUNISWAMI PILLAY:—“Those things were given by the temple authorities and not by the archakas.”

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—“The temple authorities give them through the archaka.”

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—“The hon. Member is entirely wrong when he says that all the Hon. Ministers were having free archanas. I have always paid a minimum of three rupees wherever I have gone for performing archana.”

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—“It may be so in the case of the Hon. Minister for Law. But some Hon. Ministers have had free archanas performed. I do not say that there is anything wrong about it. It is only an honour to the gentleman concerned. When I go to my native place, the archakas may not receive the archana fees every time I want to perform archana. I must say that the use of the word ‘blackmarket’ with regard to archanas is highly objectionable. The Hon. Minister quoted Sri Bhashyam with regard to this matter. I do not know in what context and to what case Sri Bhashyam referred, and any way he is not here now. But I can say this much confidently. In all my experience about these archakas in this State, there has not been a single case where the archaka demanded huge amounts as archana fees. After all they are all under-dogs who are under the heels of the trustee and then the Government and then your legislation. I say this deliberately. Never has an archaka demanded even a rupee from worshippers for performing an archana. So let me disabuse all these notions from the Hon. Minister's mind.

"Now, coming to the point, I still maintain that the trustee may have power and not the Government. I may, however, tell the house that in view of what has happened here, no trustee will come forward to take this power for years to come, in violation of the existing practice or in violation of the decrees of the courts of law. I know the strength of public opinion in this matter. The purpose of my amendment is this. Suppose there is a place where the fee has not been fixed and no practice or custom obtains there or suppose a new temple suddenly acquires prominence like the one which acquired prominence in the suburbs of Madras in the last ten years where a large number of worshippers go for worship, in that case, there may not be a longstanding custom or usage, and in such cases under my amendment, a definite archana fees can be prescribed. My objection is this. Do not try to unsettle a longstanding custom or usage. Where there has been trouble and dispute formerly and which has been referred to a court and where the court has finally decided in the matter, do not try to get behind and put up your own trustee and create trouble in the temple where there was no trouble before. We must restore order and peace and confidence in worshippers and give stability to the archakas. That is what I am aiming at. We cannot question the archaka about his duties. If you fix a very low fee, it is quite possible that he may utter only a few names or omit several names when performing archana. The Hon. Minister asked, 'why should the trustees be the collecting agents?' There is nothing wrong in their being collecting agents. The temples have other sources of income. They have landed properties. Even the worshippers get a share of the produce from the properties of the temple in the form of prasadam. But the archakas too get a little like that and their income is very limited. At times we can as well imagine their going without even the prasadam. So there is nothing wrong in the trustee being a mere collecting agent for the archaka. I will tell you the reason. Mr. Speaker, I want to draw your attention to this factor as I know you are a very religious-minded person. So I want you to kindly listen to this. When you go to a temple for performing archana, the archaka gets a few annas. He may have no other income. But the temple itself may have other properties. The trustee need not worry himself about collecting a share of the archana fees to the temple. His chief business is to regulate the practice of archana by insisting a small fee which will go to the person who does this. I do not think that there is anything wrong in his doing so.

"Is there anything wrong about it? What is the outrageous aspect of it, I want to know. Why do the Government want to disturb the decrees passed by the courts? Why did these decrees arise. It is because of the very reason which the Hon. the Minister adduced just now that those decrees arose. Some trustee who was either very unreasonable or who tried to interfere where interference was unnecessary had driven these people to the courts of law. They had gone to the courts spending all their money and obtained decrees. And what do they find now? They see that the Government go behind the decrees that they have obtained and the rights that they have established. They think that it is a Sacred Charter that they have obtained and that they are entitled to all the emoluments. Now the Government are trying to strike at it, disturb it and throw the whole thing out of gear. Of course, the trustee exercises the power. Let the Hon. the Minister understand, and through him, let the Government understand, that no trustees dare exercise this power which the Government propose to secure for them. They will themselves see it. Whatever the authority of the Government be, I know how difficult it is to proceed in this matter. I utter a warning to-day on behalf of the thousands of worshippers that visit the temples. I know they may not care for it to-day, but they will find in effect later on that they have to-day produced a Dead Sea fruit. There may be hon. Members, who may vote for the law but who still want to respect the sacred rights and traditions created by a long course of public opinion. I strongly press the amendment and commend it for the acceptance of the House."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—Sir, nothing new has been said by my hon. Friend, Sri Varadachari, except the imprecations and curses which he uttered. (Laughter.) My only consolation is, Sir, that they were made on behalf of the archakas and not on behalf of the worshippers."

For existing clause 55, substitute the following:—

"55. The trustee of a temple shall have power subject to such conditions as the Commissioner may by special or general order direct to fix fees for the performance of archana and to determine what portion, if any, of such fees shall be paid to the archakas or other office-holders or servants of the temple but in doing so he shall not depart from the settled usage where it has been clearly laid down either in the temple records or by decrees of courts of law."

The amendment was lost.

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I move—

For the words "Notwithstanding anything contained in clause 55" substitute the words "Subject to"

[24th November 1950]

MR. SPEAKER:—"Does the hon. Member move the other two amendments also?"

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"No, Sir. I have moved my first amendment and I do not intend moving the other two."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"It is out of order, Sir."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Let me finish, Sir. Let the Hon. the Minister have a little patience and say what he has to say after I have finished. Let him raise his point of order then. If my amendment is accepted, Sir, then it will read like this—

'Subject to any scheme settled or deemed to be settled under this Act, or any decree or usage to the contrary, the trustee of a temple shall have power, subject to such conditions as the Commissioner may, by general or special order, direct, to fix fees for the performance of archanas and to determine what portion, if any, of such fees shall be paid to the archakas or other office-holders or servants of the temple.'

The effect of this is that the trustee, subject to the general or special orders of the Commissioner . . .

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"On a point of order, Sir, when an amendment is printed and circulated in advance, is it not open to a Minister to rise to a point of order even before the amendment is moved?"

MR. SPEAKER:—"Yes, he can."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"The amendment moved by my hon. Friend, Sri Viswanatham, is identical with the one moved by hon. Sri N. S. Varadachari which was negatived. Hon. Sri Varadachari's amendment said that the settled usage laid down by decrees of courts of law should not be departed from. Hon. Sri Viswanatham's amendment says subject to such directions or conditions as contained in the decrees by courts of law the trustee may fix the fees. So, both the amendments mean the same thing and both seek to defeat the very object of the provisions contained in clause 55. The first amendment has been voted down and, therefore, this is out of order."

MR. SPEAKER:—"Let us hear what the hon. Member, Sri Viswanatham, wants to say on this."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"I submit, Sir, this is, not a point of order."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"It is."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"It is a question on which a point of order cannot arise. Sir, by accepting this amendment no principle of the Government will be thrown to the winds. But, on the other hand, by refusing to accept it, they will be throwing to the winds the decrees passed by the courts of law. Sir, we cannot raise any new arguments. The Hon. the Minister said in reply to Sri N. S. Varadachari that he had adduced no new arguments. The Hon. the Minister has not rendered any new arguments in his reply either. Likewise, I too cannot adduce new arguments. My amendment is simple and I have moved it. After it is seconded, let the Hon. the Minister oppose it if he wants."

MR. SPEAKER:—" (After a pause.) For want of a seconder, the amendment falls through."

SRI V. I. MUNISWAMI PILLAY:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I welcome the provisions in clause 55 of the Bill. Knowing personally and having visited many of the temples in this State, I may say, Sir, that there is a lot of corruption in the matter of collecting fees for archanas and the manner in which they are conducted. Where the trustees or the executive officers have fixed the fees for archanas, things are going on very well. I may instance here what is obtaining in the Sri Meenakshi temple and the Thiruparankundram temple in Mathurai. The executive officers there have fixed the fees for archanas. In other temples where there is no such fixed fee, people who visit those temples from far off places, pay even three times and four times the ordinary fee demanded of others. The introduction of this clause will save such people and others from being fleeced. This will help the poor people from whom money is being extracted now. Sir, after throwing open the temples to the Harijans, many of them visit the temples regularly and offer worship there. These poor people when they go there are not in a position to know what the exact amount that they have to pay for archanas is. I know that they have on many occasions been asked to pay more than the usual fee they collect. When such a thing is taking place, Sir, how can the Harijans go to the temple and get poojas performed? Will not the whole question of temple entry become a farce then? When I consider this question, Sir, I feel that clause 55 must be there in the Bill."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I am . . ."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The hon. Member has already spoken on this clause."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"I want only two minutes, Sir. I am sorry that the Government have stuck to this position and are not willing to move even an inch. The Hon. the Minister talked of imprecations and threats. (The Hon. Sri K. Madhava Menon: 'Curse.') Quite right. I have no curses—nor imprecations—for him. But I wish to tell him even now in a very cool and collected manner that he may pass this law because he has enough force to push it through; he will not, however, be able to effectuate it in cases which have been settled by custom or by decrees of courts of law because wise trustees will not be tempted by this power which the Government are now seeking to place in their hands and make them exercise it to the detriment of the interests of the archakas and the worshipping community."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, as I was listening to the arguments advanced both on behalf of the Government and by those who moved amendments, I felt that this archana business was viewed by the Government as something like a tax to be collected for the temple from the worshippers. It was thought of as something to be measured in terms of the offerings being shared between the archakas and the temple. I may tell this Honourable House that it is not a thing to be measured as such. In my own humble way, Sir, I have travelled throughout India and visited all shrines, holy and sacred. There is nothing like special fees offered by the worshippers or demanded by the archakas. The latter are satisfied in some cases with the part of the coconut that is broken while the other half is given back to the worshipper. I now find that the whole question is considered as something of monetary value only. I am not able to understand this position and that is the reason why I have been throughout opposing this measure as one interfering with religion and religious practices. Archanas are nothing but offerings to God by humble individuals like me. Though the worshipper is not able to do it personally, he does it through an agent—the archaka—whose life is one of dedication. He is willing to do it not because of the pittance offered to him by the worshipper but because he believes that his salvation lies that way. He equally believes that he by so doing throws open the gates of salvation for the worshippers also. There are people who have opened their purses, who have emptied their purses, without caring to know whether they have money enough to carry them back home, all in favour of the archakas. There are also persons who view archanas in terms of money and say, 'Two annas will do for this archana; he is simply breaking the coconut'. They calculate the fees on the basis of the amount of time spent for the archana. I do not deny their existence. But the question of money should not at all weigh with the Government in this matter. It is a matter of religious faith and, therefore, this business of regulating the conduct of archanas by introducing tickets, etc., should not be countenanced. Monetary consideration should not prevail in matters of religion."

SRI R. V. SWAMINATHAN:—"Sir, I do not intend to make a long speech now, as has been done by several hon. Members who have spoken two or three times on this clause. After listening to the several points raised by them, I want to ask the Hon. the Minister whether it is his intention that once a fee is fixed for archanas, the worshippers should be prevented from paying anything to the archakas over and above what has been paid as the archana fee. I want to have the position clarified."

24th November 1950]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, on the other hand, I shall be glad if any worshipper who can afford it, if he is decent enough to do it, pays to the archaka something of his own accord after the archana is performed over and above the sum he has paid by way of archana fee to the devasthanam. For my part, I would feel, Sir, that I shall get some more punyam by so doing. I pay in addition to the archaka fee which goes to the temple, something to the archaka so that I may have a bit of his grace. This is a thing which he is entitled to and if he gets anything like that it will not be improper on his part to have done so. My hon. Friend, Sri Gopalaswami said that the Government wanted to collect it as a tax. They do not want to collect it as a tax but they want to prevent the archaka from getting it as a tax."

Clause 55 was put and carried.

Clause 56.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'That clause 56 do stand part of the Bill.'

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I wish to move—

(1) In line 1 in sub-clause (1), after the word "religion" insert the words "or charitable" and for the word "may" substitute "shall".

(2) Delete the words "to the Area Committee" in other cases."

Sir, the Government have in certain cases decided to bring charitable institutions within the scope of the Bill. This provision will be more useful to the charitable institutions once the Government decide to extend the provisions of the Bill to them."

MR. SPEAKER:—"A ruling was already given on this matter."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"What ruling, Sir?"

MR. SPEAKER:—"That it is out of order."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"I do not understand, Sir, what is referred to now."

MR. SPEAKER:—"On a previous occasion, the hon. Member moved a similar amendment and it was ruled out of order."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, we have adopted clause 3 which says that any or all the provisions of this Bill may be extended to charitable institutions by notification in the Fort St. George Gazette, i.e., by a specific notification. If my hon. Friend's amendment is accepted, that the whole sub-clause will go against clause 3 which we have adopted."

[24th November 1950]

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"It would not go against, Sir."

MR. SPEAKER:—"It does."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Excuse me, Sir. In clause 3 it is stated that certain sections of the Act or the whole Act may be applied to the charitable institutions after due notification. Does it mean, Sir, that there should be no words referring to charitable institutions in other clauses? If we include charitable institutions in sub-clause 1, that will also apply to the charitable institutions when a notification is made extending the Act to them."

MR. SPEAKER:—"These amendments are out of order."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"If you feel they are out of order, I must bow to your ruling."

MR. SPEAKER:—"Then what about the amendment for sub-clause (3) of clause 56?"

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"I move—

'Delete sub-clause (3).'

"Sir, the Government agree with me to a large extent. I want them to agree for a little more. The earlier sub-clauses deal with the scales of expenditure and all that. A further machinery is not necessary."

SRI K. VARADACHARI:—"I second it, Sir."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"I oppose it, Sir."

MR. SPEAKER:—"I am going to put the amendment to the vote of the House."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Have the Government nothing to say by way of opposition to this amendment, Sir?"

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'Delete sub-clause (3).'

The amendment was lost.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The Government amendment to clause 56 may be moved."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I beg to move—

(1) Omit the proviso to sub-clause (5).

(2) Omit sub-clause (6)."

24th November 1950] [Sri K. Madhava Menon]

"Sir, the proviso to sub-clause (5) reads—

'Provided that the area Committee or the Commissioner as the case may be, may at any time on its or his own motion, for sufficient cause, direct the trustee to modify the dittam or scale of expenditure.'

This proviso gives the power to the Area Committee and the Commissioner to alter the dittam. That is not necessary. The trustees must have the liberty to do it and so I want to omit the proviso. Suo motu sub-clause (6) is not necessary."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

(1) Omit the proviso to sub-clause (5).

(2) Omit sub-clause (6)."

The amendments were carried.

Clause 56 as amended was put and carried.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The hon. Member Sri N. S. Varadachari has given an amendment for the inclusion of a new clause, Clause 56-A."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"I say, Sir, this is out of order in view of the ruling you have given. He cannot move the amendment for this reason. Clause 53 which we have passed says—

'All office-holders and servants attached to a religious institution or in receipt of any emolument or perquisite therefrom shall, whether the office or service is hereditary or not, be controlled by the trustee and the trustee may, after following the prescribed procedure, if any, fine, suspend, remove or dismiss any of them for breach of trust, incapacity, disobedience of orders, neglect of duty, misconduct or other sufficient cause.'

The suggestion in the amendment is that the trustee or the Commissioner shall not dismiss an archaka or other temple servants. This goes against clause 53 we have already passed."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"I am sorry the Hon. Minister has not made clear the point of order. I was about to suggest that in view of dropping the proviso, the second sentence was unnecessary, namely, 'Any alteration in the scale or dittam of expenditure in connection with actual worship in the temple for the time being in force directed either by the area committee or the Commissioner will be deemed to be made for sufficient cause only when the approval of such religious counsel as constituted above is obtained for the purpose.' The Government have taken away these powers. There cannot be alterations made by them. All alterations are left to the trustee, the poor fellow to be appointed who will be made the victim, the scapegoat of the faults to be committed hereafter by us. So that, that part of my amendment goes."

"Now, Sir, the first part is perfectly in order, only omit the words 'or Commissioner.' They have taken away his powers. In my amendment I have not said that the Government have no power to suspend, fine or to do other things."

[Sri K. Madhava Menon] [24th November 1950]

Sri Viswanatham asked whether it was open to a Member or the Hon. Speaker to say that a motion was out of order even before it was moved. I say, Sir, if I feel that the motion is dangerous and should not be allowed on public and other grounds, it is open to the Chair not to allow the motion even before it is moved."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"I wish the Hon. Speaker would peruse the reports and see whether the words 'knowingly out of order' were used or not."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"I did not say so, Sir."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The Hon. Minister never meant anything like that."

CHAPTER V—MATHS.

MR. SPEAKER:—"Chapter V dealing with maths will now be taken up."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, in the first place, I would like to move the long amendment which was given notice of by my hon. Friend Sri Bhashyam and give notice of by me also. Before moving the amendment, I want to know whether you would like me to take this amendment in several parts or the whole thing as one amendment. I will do as the Chair pleases."

MR. SPEAKER:—"I think it would be better if you move the whole thing, and we can save time."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, as arguments will be the same more or less for the amendments and as it will save the Hon. Minister from repeating his arguments of opposition, I move—is a disciple of the mutt and shall also include persons who receive instructions or initiations for the spiritual advancement.

(6) 'Prescribed' means prescribed by the Provincial Government by rules made under this Act.

(7) 'Religious Endowments' or 'Endowment' means all property belonging to or given or endowed for the support of mutts and includes the premises of mutts but does not include gifts or property made as personal gifts to the head of a mutt or other employee of the mutt.

(8) 'Specific Endowment' means all property given or endowed for the performance of any specific service or charity connected with a mutt.

All properties endowed to or belonging to a mutt shall vest in the mutt and the matadhipathi of a mutt shall not have hereafter any beneficial interest in such properties.

The management of the affairs of the mutt shall be in the hands of the matadhipathi who shall be assisted by a council composed of members chosen as hereinafter provided from among the body of the disciples of the mutt.

As soon as may be after the notification is published, the matadhipathi shall prepare a list of disciples of the mutt and publish it in such a manner as may be prescribed:

Provided that if within one month from the date of such publication, any objection or suggestion is received from any person having interest, the judicial tribunal constituted under this Chapter shall consider such objection or suggestion and direct such additions to, or alterations in the list as it may deem fit and the order of such Tribunal shall be final.

Every mutt shall have a Council of Disciples chosen from among the disciples named in the list published as stated above. The Council shall consist of not more than nine and not less than five members as may be fixed by the Government in the notification referred to in section and shall be elected by the disciples of the mutt in such manner as may be prescribed.

Provided that if any difficulty arises in the constitution of such a Council, the Government may direct the Collector of the district to take such measures as may be necessary to bring into existence such a Council.

Every member of the Council shall hold office for a period of five years and the matadhipathi shall be the ex-officio President of the Council of the disciples of the mutt.

24th November 1950] [Sri T. Viswanatham]

The Council of Disciples shall have power to make suggestions to the head of the mutt with regard to the affairs relating to the mutt and in case there is a difference of opinion between the majority of the members of the Council of the mutt and the matadhipathi, the matter may be placed before the Judicial Tribunal by either the matadhipathi or by the Council as regards any matter relating to the affairs of the mutt.

(a) When a vacancy occurs in the office of the matadhipathi and there is a dispute respecting the right of succession to such office, or when such vacancy cannot be filled up immediately, or when a matadhipathi is a minor and has no legally constituted guardian for and willing to act as such, or there is a dispute respecting the person who is entitled to act as such guardian or when a matadhipathi is by reason of unsoundness of mind or other physical infirmity unable to discharge his functions, the Judicial Tribunal at the instance of the Council or any person having interest may appoint a fit person to discharge the functions of the matadhipathi until another succeeds to his office or the disability of the matadhipathi ceases to exist, as the case may be. In the meanwhile the Collector shall assume charge of the properties and provide for the discharge of the religious functions with the advice and guidance of the Council of Disciples.

Nothing in this sub-section shall be deemed to affect any thing contained in the Madras Court of Wards Act, 1902.

(b) In making an appointment under sub-section (a) the Judicial Tribunal shall have due regard to the claims of the disciples of the mutt, if any, entitled to succession as well as the wishes of the disciples.

(c) The person so appointed shall be entitled to exercise all the powers which a matadhipathi could exercise in relation to such endowment.

Every mutt having an income not more than Rs. 10,000 a year, shall appoint a Manager for the management of the properties of the mutt. Such an officer shall be approved by the Judicial Tribunal and he shall be a Hindu professing the Hindu religion and also belonging to the denomination for whose benefit the mutt exists.

Such a Manager shall be whole-time officer of the mutt and shall not undertake any work unconnected with the mutt. Such a Manager shall be paid such salary as may be fixed by the Council. He shall be in office for a period of five years in the first instance and the Council is entitled to extend the term of office to such a period as it deems fit.

[Sri T. Viswanatham] [24th November 1950]

The Council will be entitled to dismiss or suspend such a Manager for good and proper cause but the Manager is entitled to appeal before the Judicial Tribunal against such dismissal or suspension. The Judicial Tribunal may pass an order as it may think fit either to restore him to office or direct the mutt to compensate him for dismissal which may be found to be illegal or improper.

The Manager shall be in custody of all the properties and records of the mutt and be responsible for the proper collection of its income and the disbursements to be made on its behalf. He shall also be responsible for the maintenance of true and correct accounts of the receipts and disbursements.

The matadhipathi shall with the help of the Manager before three months before the end of the year, place before the Council of Disciples proposals for fixing the dittam or scale of expenditure for religious functions or ceremonies in the mutt and the amounts which should be allotted to the various objects connected therewith and the proportions in which the income or other property of the mutt may be applied to such objects. The matadhipathi shall publish such proposals in such a manner as may be prescribed together with a notice, stating that if within one month from the date of such publication any objection or suggestion is received from any person having interest, the Council will consider such objection or suggestion, and after the expiry of the period fixed, as stated above, the Council shall consider the objection or suggestion that may have been received and may pass such orders as it thinks fit on the proposal. The decision of the Council shall be final except where a dittam or the scale of expenditure for the time being in force in the mutt is sought to be altered by the Council. Any person interested in the mutt shall be entitled to bring the matter before the Judicial Tribunal who will decide the matter finally.

The matadhipathi with the help of the Manager shall, in each year before and in such form as may be prescribed, prepare a budget showing the probable receipts and disbursements of the mutt and the endowments connected therewith during the following year and have it placed before the Council of Disciples who shall be entitled to alter, modify and add to the budget. Provisions relating to the expenditure required for religious functions according to the dittam fixed under section shall first be included therein as charge on the income and shall be provided for in the first instance. Such a budget shall be published for general information and any suggestions that may be made by disciples shall be considered by the Council, provided however in case of emergency the matadhipathi may direct the execution of any work or the doing of any act which is not provided for in the budget and the immediate execution or the doing of which is in his opinion necessary for the preservation of the properties of the mutt or for the service or safety of the pilgrims resorting to the mutt; that expenditure shall be paid. This action should forthwith be reported to the Council with reasons therefor.

The accounts of the mutt shall be audited annually or at such other intervals as may be prescribed by an auditor included in the list of approved auditors to be furnished by the Government. Such an auditor shall be deemed to be a public servant within the meaning of section 21 of the Indian Penal Code.

The auditor shall submit a report to the Council which shall among other things specify all cases of irregular, illegal or improper expenditure or of failure to recover moneys or other property due to the institution or of loss or waste of money or other property of the institution, caused by neglect or misconduct. The auditor shall also report on any other matter which the Council may require in respect of the mutt or any specified religious endowment. The cost of auditing the accounts of the mutt shall be fixed by the Council and be payable from out of the funds of the mutt within such time as may be prescribed.

The Provincial Government may make rules for

- (a) the manner in which the records, accounts or receipts, and expenditure and register relating to the mutts may be kept,
- (b) the custody of the records and documents of the mutts,
- (c) the investment of the funds of the mutts,
- (d) the time and place of the meetings of the Council of Disciples,
- (e) the manner in which the notice thereof shall be given,
- (f) the quorum for transaction of business at such meetings,
- (g) the manner in which the proceedings of the meetings shall be recorded, and
- (h) the manner in which the decisions of the Council of Disciples shall be brought forth before the Judicial Tribunal.

For every mutt a register shall be maintained by the matadhipathi showing—

- (a) the names of past and present matadhipathis and particulars as to the outcome, if any, regarding succe-

NO. 10 OF 1949)

[Sri T. Viswanatham] [24th November 1950]

- (b) particulars of all endowments of the mutt and all title-deeds and other documents relating thereto;
- (c) particulars of the scheme of administration and of the dittam or scale of expenditure;
- (d) the names of all offices to which any salary, emolument or perquisite is attached and the nature, time and conditions of service in each case;
- (e) the jewels, gold, silver, precious stones, all vessels and utensils and other movables belonging to the institution with their estimated values; and
- (f) such other particulars as the Judicial Tribunal may fix. The register shall be signed by the matadhipathi and shall be kept open for inspection by the Council of Sishyas or any person interested in the mutt. If there is any matter which requires investigation and scrutiny, it is open to either the Council of Disciples or any person interested in the mutt to bring the matter before the Judicial Tribunal who will be entitled to investigate and make final orders thereon.

No exchange, sale or mortgage and no lease for a term exceeding five years of any immovable property belonging to any mutt shall be valid or operative unless it is necessary or beneficial to the mutt and is sanctioned by the Judicial Tribunal.

Not less than three members of the Council of Disciples and not less than 30 in number of persons interested in the institution may institute a suit in the Court to obtain a decree:

- (a) appointing or removing the matadhipathi,
 - (b) vesting any property in the mutt,
 - (c) directing accounts and inquiries,
 - (d) declaring what proportion of the endowed property or of the interest therein shall be allocated to any particular object of the endowment, or
 - (e) granting such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require.
- (1) The decision of the Judicial Tribunal shall be final and shall not be open to question in a Court of Law, except to the extent mentioned.
- (2) The Judicial Tribunal may, after holding an enquiry in such manner as may be prescribed, by order, declare that the purpose of the endowments of a mutt has from the beginning been, or has subsequently become impossible of realization or that the machinery for effectuating the original purposes of the endowments has failed or no longer exists or Tribunal such contribution not exceeding one and a half per centum of its income as the Judicial Tribunal may determine."

"Sir, as the clauses stand at present, we believe that they do not meet the point of view expressed by us both on constitutional and legal grounds and on merits, in regard to the position and the manner in which these maths and the matadhipathis should be dealt with in a comprehensive measure of this type. We have been saying that these matadhipathis stand on a different footing from the other charitable institutions and temples. Government at one stage said that they have dealt with them in a separate way and they have been given a separate chapter. I have gone through the separate chapter and I believe, unless Government accept some of the positions taken by the alternative amendments, they would not really satisfy or fulfil the purpose with which they have allotted a separate chapter for these maths. I would first like to give you the opinions given by some of the witnesses who were examined"

The House adjourned to meet again at 3 o'clock after lunch.

THE MADRAS HINDU RELIGIOUS AND CHARITABLE
NO. 10 OF 1949)—DISCUSSION—cont.

MR. SPEAKER:—"Let the hon. Member, Sri Viswanatham continue his speech."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I want to make it clear in the first instance that this is not an amendment which says that the Government should not seek to have any control over maths or their properties. This amendment is an alternative. We would have liked these things to be excluded. But, that not having been done, we wanted to go as far as one can go and therefore in this amendment we provide an alternative in accordance with certain views put forward before the Select Committee by persons who took great pains and interest to know these matters and, Sir, who had also some authority to speak about this subject.

[Sri T. Viswanatham] [24th November 1950]

"Sir, if you refer to the summary of evidence taken before the Joint Select Committee, you will find some good opinions given by eminent witnesses. Here is the evidence of Dr. S. Kanthimathinatha Pillai (Saiva Vellala Maha Sabha, Mathurai)—

"He classified mutts into different classes according to the system of philosophy and tenet followed, viz. Saivites, Vaishnavites, Smarthas, Madhwas, etc. His proposal was that each mutt should maintain a register of its sishyas and followers who have received some initiation and declare their allegiance to the mutt and that from among those disciples, a Committee of 9 to 12 members, in the first instance, should be nominated by the Government.

Then, Sir, he gives some details of his proposals—

"The head of the mutt will be the spiritual and religious head and will look after all religious functions, though he should have an overall and general interest in the mutt properties.

In my opinion, Sir, he should have preferred an elected committee of sishyas. But, nomination was suggested, in the first instance, so that the machinery can start working. This amendment embodies only the opinions of those who have agreed with the proposal that the Government should have control. But, what is the kind of control? The Government have proposed one kind of control under clause 57 and the following clauses. This is an alternative, Sir. He continues—

"The secular administration should be entirely in the hands of the committees through the executive officers. The matadhipathi as a constitutional head should preside over the committees so that there might be mutual understanding and lesser conflict between them.

"Sir, I would next take you to the evidence given by Sri M. C. S. Ratnasabapathi Chettiyar (Saivite Disciple of Thiruvaduthurai Mutt, and Chairman, Municipal Council, Kumbakonam). He is also of the same Conference)—

"He was against mutts being brought under the Bill. Instead of the Government taking over their control there should be a Judicial Board of three judges, a High Court Judge and two district judges. There should also be a committee of sishyas. All matters of maladministration should be referred to that Tribunal by the committee of sishyas.

Then, Sir, I would refer to the opinion of Sri C. K. Subramania Mudaliar and Sri C. M. Ramachandra Chettiar (representatives of the Coimbatore District Saiva Conference).

"With regard to mutts he was of opinion that financial control was necessary. The matadhipathi might be assisted by an advisory committee consisting of his sishyas only. There should be an advisory committee of sishyas for each mutt. Secular and religious administration might be separated. If the matadhipathi did not carry out the purposes of the mutt, the advisory committee could force him to do so. The advisory committee may be constituted by nomination or election. He did not think that election would be expensive. In cases of difference between the committee and the matadhipathi, the matter might be taken to a special court like the Ecclesiastical Court in England. The court should be composed of persons who knew the rituals and so on. If a matadhipathi did not carry out the purposes of the endowment, he must be forced to do it by the advisory committee. If he still persisted, there should be some authority to enforce it."

Then, we come to another opinion, Sir, given by Sri S. Sachidanandam Pillai, Register, Annamalai University (Hindu Dharma Paripalana Sangam, Madras)—

"He approved of Government interference in mutts subject to the safeguards suggested in his memorandum. He would not, however, give the

24th November 1950] [Sri T. Viswanatham]

Commissioner the power to dismiss a matadhipathi. He should only go to a court of law to get the matadhipathi dismissed. He proposed an advisory council for mutts consisting of sishyas and followers of the tenets of the mutt. The Commissioner might interfere in case there was difference of opinion between the matadhipathi and the committee. If a matadhipathi misbehaved the committee of sishyas could give him a warning and allow him time to improve. If still he did not mend himself, then the court could take cognizance of it either on a complaint by the committee of sishyas or by not less than twenty sishyas as the case may be.

I will now refer to the opinion of Sri Kulasekara Doss, a Member of our Assembly, who also gave evidence—

"The witness said that the matadhipathis should be treated with the respect due to them. He had no objection, however, to committees managing the secular affairs of mutts with an executive officer for each. Such committees should consist partly of sishyas and partly of religious-minded non-sishya Hindus.

Again, Sir, Sri V. Bhashyam Ayyangar, Hindu Dharma Paripalana Sangam, Madras, says—

"The witness said that mutts should be treated on a separate footing. The Government might take powers to notify such of the mutts as were being mismanaged and bring them under the control of the Commissioner. Each mutt should be dealt with individually and not as a class. Prestige of the matadhipathi should be maintained.

"He was against the removal of the matadhipathi without further application to the court, even in cases where the matadhipathi was convicted of a crime for moral turpitude. To a question whether the witness would favour the automatic forfeiture of the office of the matadhipathi after his conviction for a crime involving moral turpitude, the witness said that conviction for an offence involving moral turpitude might, by itself, amount to the removal of a trustee. No further judicial action was necessary.

"In regard to the budgets of mutts, the witness agreed that the Commissioner should not interfere with the small details of these budgets.

"Asked whether the witness would like a small body, say, a council of about a dozen sishyas to be appointed to advise the Government officer in the preparation of the budget, etc. of the mutts, the witness stated that a better body to advise the Government officer would be about a dozen persons selected from the district as a whole with the matadhipathi as the head and if the majority passed the budget, the Commissioner should not interfere. The final authority must be vested in such a committee presided over by the matadhipathi."

The final opinion to which I draw your special attention, Sir, is that of Sri Ravu Surya Rao, Ex-President, Hindu Religious Endowments Board. I know him personally and he is one of the most respected men in our district. He says—

"The witness agreed that mutts had to be controlled in a way and their expenditure regulated. The budget and the audit report might be published for public information. Audit might also be obligatory. The Mahant of Tirupati was different from other matadhipathis. A committee of sishyas might be appointed for the management of the affairs. As there might be difficulty in giving effect to election by sishyas immediately, the committee might be nominated by the Government in the first instance. Committees should consist also of the gahasthas of the community who held the matadhipathi as the guru and not merely those who lived inside the mutt premises. The matadhipathi did not usually excommunicate a person as not being a sishya. Sishyas might be determined by the 'Samasrayanam' in the case of Vaishnavites, 'Siva diksha' in the case of Saivites, and 'Mudradanam' in the case of Madhwas. The matadhipathi might be the chairman and the Government might appoint an executive officer for the mutt in consultation with the committee. This executive officer should work under the committee.

That opinion, Sir, has got to be followed in my opinion, because Mr. Ravu Surya Rao was Ex-President of the Hindu Religious

[Sri T. Viswanatham] [24th November 1950]

Endowments Board for some time and he had intimate knowledge of the working of these institutions. He is also of the opinion that, where executive officers are appointed, they should work under the committee.

'The matadhipathi controlled the sishya committee and the committee of sishyas will control the executive officer.'

This view of his is based on his experience. 'In case of difference of opinion the matter might be decided by the majority of the Committee of Sishyas and their decision should be binding on the matadhipathi and the executive officer. In religious matters it may be carried further to the ecclesiastical court. Civil matters may be referred to the Commissioner for decision with an appeal to civil courts. The court will have to decide whether a matter is civil or religious.'

'As regards customs and usages, what Sri Ravu Surya Rao says is this: 'Where decisions have to be taken, the matter may be referred to the ecclesiastical court, as envisaged by the late Sri T. Sadasiva Ayyar, consisting of two or three retired Judges who knew about these matters and one or two experts. They could meet once or twice a year and decide cases. Their decisions should be final. It should be left to the Government whether a particular mutt should have an executive officer or not. He should be appointed solely for secular purposes and should not interfere with the religious affairs of the mutt.'

'These are some of the opinions given in the summary of evidence. There are also other opinions in this book which contains the evidence of 28 witnesses. Among these 28 witnesses there was only one who said that the mutt also should be treated in the same way as other religious endowments. All the other witnesses whose evidence is given here have suggested that the mutts stand on a different footing and therefore the advisory council composed of sishyas might be constituted to govern them. It is based upon these opinions, which in my humble opinion reflect general public opinion regarding the management of mutts, we have framed this alternative scheme. Sir, in the light of these remarks you will be able to appreciate why it was necessary to give notice of an alternative scheme rather than amendments to each clause. It is very difficult to insert all these by way of amendments to one sentence here or to one clause there. Therefore, we have given notice of this alternative scheme thus--

'Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, this chapter shall apply to the mutts.'

This chapter shall apply to such of the mutts in the Province of Madras as are notified by the Provincial Government under section and the endowments therefor. Notwithstanding anything contained hereinbefore, the mutts shall be governed by the provisions of this Chapter only.

As soon as may be after the passing of this Act, the Provincial Government shall constitute a judicial tribunal consisting of three members, one a High Court Judge or a person who has been a High Court Judge within two years of the appointment and two other persons to be associated with him who are either District Judges or have been District Judges within two years of the appointment.

The Provincial Government may by notification bring within the scope of this Chapter any mutt situated within the Province of Madras. Such a notification shall not be issued by the Provincial Government unless a judicial officer not below the rank of the District Judge appointed by such Provincial Government finds on investigation and after giving sufficient opportunities to the head of the mutt concerned to offer his explanation and also particulars in respect of any charge against him, comes to the conclusion that it is desirable in public interest that such a mutt should be brought under the provisions of this chapter.'

'The Government, in another clause, have already accepted the principle that only where mismanagement is proved, the provisions of this Bill should apply. Similarly we suggest that, only after this step is taken and after giving an opportunity to those persons who are concerned to establish their position, the Government should notify and apply the provisions of this Bill.

'Then we say--

'Nothing in this Chapter shall be construed to affect or in any way derogate from, the powers in respect of religious endowments which the Advocate-General may exercise under sub-section (2) of section 114 of the Government of India Act.'

'Then we have dealt with certain definitions, so that in the definition clause there would not be any difficulty. In order to make the position clear, the next clause in my amendment says--

'Now, Sir, you will appreciate how far we have yielded to meet the wishes of the Government in this matter. Our arguments hitherto were based on certain decisions that the matadhipathi has got beneficial interest. But, having been defeated in that stand, we have fallen in line, to some extent, with the view of the Government and that is why we say 'All properties endowed to or belonging to a mutt shall vest in the mutt and the matadhipathi of a mutt shall not have hereafter any beneficial interest in such properties.' It will be seen from this that we are willing to come to a compromise with the Government and hence have provided:

'All along we have been suggesting that there should be councils of sishyas or persons who reside in the mutt and who closely follow the matadhipathi. Arguments have been advanced to suggest that these sishyas will never be able to question any action of the matadhipathis. We do not have in mind such sishyas. According to us these sishyas will be those who live with the head of the mutt and learn from him the agamas and religious lore so also those who owe active allegiance to the mutt though not living there. A man may be living inside the mutt or outside; if he shows that he owes allegiance to that mutt his name should be taken into the list of disciples. There are several mutts now having such lists. With regard to Vaishnavites there is a slight difference in this matter between the Vadagalais and

Thengalais. They do not at all like the Madhwas, go to a matadhipathi and get the mudradharanam. They have the samasrayanam. But, whoever does these things and swears his allegiance to any mutt should be put in the list of disciples of that mutt. Some of us from distant places send our donations to a particular mutt sometimes. Since we send our names also, these go into the list of sishyas. Therefore, these sishyas are not an indeterminate body. They are persons who take, as Sri Ravu Surya Rao has said, mudradharanam or samasrayanam or Sivadheeksha and there are also others who send their donations and owe their allegiance and make it known to the matadhipathi that they owe allegiance to the mutt. All these are disciples of the mutt. Therefore, I submit that the sishyas we have referred to here are not the class of sishyas who live inside the precincts of the mutt and who are supposed to be not in a position to protest against any mismanagement of their mutt. They extend over a wider area. They may consist of independent persons living in places where the mutt owns properties. It cannot be said that because they owe allegiance to the mutt they will not question the misdeeds of the mutt. Let us see our own case; we all owe allegiance to the Government and that does not stand in the way of our questioning their actions. When we owe allegiance to a mutt, it does not mean that we as sishyas will not raise our voice in protest where necessary. There are sishyas who have done so in an effective way. There have been schemes framed by the High Court on petitions presented by the sishyas. I, therefore, submit that ours is a very feasible proposition and a practicable proposition and that is why we say—

“Then, by this amendment we propose to give power to the judicial tribunal also to consider objections or suggestions to these lists. Thus our proposal in sub-clause (7) of our amendment says—

‘Every mutt shall have a council of disciples chosen from among the disciples named in the list published as stated above.’

“The election thereto will be from a determinate body—

‘The council shall consist of not more than nine and not less than five members as may be fixed by the Government in the notification referred to in section . . . and shall be elected by the disciples of the mutt in such manner as may be prescribed.’

“We are not imposing our own views on the Government as regards election or even the place of election. We are prepared to leave the whole thing to the Government, provided it is a mutt managed by the matadhipathi advised by a managing committee consisting of sishyas.

“The powers of the council of these disciples also does not suffer. We are creating a council which will not exercise real control. It will have power to make suggestions to the head of the mutt with regard to the affairs of the mutt and, in cases of differences of opinion, the matter will be placed before a judicial tribunal. Therefore, this council of disciples will be a very powerful body and bring in new thought into the counsel of the matadhipathi. And, wherever there is any strong difference of opinion, instead of leaving it to one man to decide, we suggest an immediate reference to the judicial tribunal to be constituted under this clause. It is not as if one has to go to an ordinary court which has no time to do this work expeditiously. We are creating under this clause something of an ecclesiastical court, because there are about 700 mutts in this State. We submit, therefore, that we are suggesting a practicable, feasible and useful procedure.

“With regard to vacancies in the headship of the mutts, there is a provision in the Government Bill relating to succession. The language employed in the provision is not, however, very clear. What the Government propose to do with regard to succession disputes we do not know. I went through the whole Bill. I do not know the position of the Government with regard to this matter. They have thought over the question of the settlement of disputes. With regard to succession each mutt has sometimes a different method. Sometimes it is by nomination and sometimes the selection is made by the council of sishyas.”

MR. SPEAKER:—“The hon. Member has already taken 25 minutes. As he is moving a whole chapter as an amendment, I will allow him five minutes more.”

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—“With regard to succession I shall quote a passage from Sri P. R. Ganapathi Ayyar's book, ‘The law relating to Hindu and Muhammadan Religious Endowments’ page 176—

‘There are various ways of succession by nomination as already stated. The nomination by the last mahant may not require any confirmation at all either by the disciples or by the neighbouring mahant. In such cases, however, installation by the Assembly of mahants may by usage seem to be necessary.’

“We may take it, Sir, that the words ‘mahant’ and ‘matadhipathi’ are used synonymously for such purposes.

In the Ahobilam mutt, the usage is for the Jeer for the time being to nominate his successor, failing which the disciples assembled at the place where the Jeer died have the right to elect his successor. The eight mutts at Udipi founded by Madhwachariya are administered according to certain rules framed by the founder. Then we come to several of the maths in the south, the Saivite maths. There are several methods by which succession is controlled in the various maths. I do not find any provision made here for the purpose. The Government only refer to disputes about succession but whether the normal succession is to be left to the present usage and the present methods or whether they propose anything else, it is not quite clear. Therefore in this alternative amendment, we were obliged to put something about succession also.

“The other clauses of the amendment deal practically with the same things with which the Government also have dealt with appointed by the trustee. The amendment of hon. Sri Viswanatham says that in relation to every matter concerning maths the sishyas who may form a council of sishyas may move the judicial tribunal. Only in very very limited cases the disciples will have power to make suggestions to the head of the math. Hon. Sri Viswanatham's amendment also says that only when a vacancy occurs in the office of the matadhipathi and there is a dispute respecting the right of succession to such office the judicial tribunal may be moved in the matter. Otherwise the normal course will be followed. That is also what clause 58 of the Bill says. It only operates when there is a dispute. It does not in any way give more power of supervision or control than what exists now. I do not see what hon. Sri Viswanatham wanted to convey when he said that they had compromised to such an extent as to satisfy the Government and that the Government might therefore accept his amendment. Sir, hon. Sri Bhashyam's amendment which has now been taken up by hon. Sri Viswanatham is absolutely a camouflage for showing that maths are included in the Bill while as a matter of fact they would be in no different position than what they are in now. Of course that may be their intention, because both hon. Members Sri Viswanatham and Sri Bhashyam are of the view that maths should be excluded altogether from the Bill. If they cannot be excluded they want that the control over them should be as little as possible. The Government policy also is that the control in regard to the maths need not be the same as the control in regard to temples and charities. That is why a specific chapter on maths has been provided here. In important matters the Commissioner has power only to move the court. Only in the matter of the dittam, if he finds that the scale of expenditure or any item in the scale of expenditure is at variance with the established usage of the institution, or is not justified by its financial position, he can move the Government and obtain their orders. In other secular matters like the appointment of the manager, the trustee has got the power. The Commissioner need only be consulted. The provisions here and the provisions in hon. Sri Viswanatham's amendment differ so fundamentally that the Government cannot agree to it.

"Then Sir, certain things were read out by hon. Sri Viswanatham. I find from the evidence printed at page 28 of the book of one Sri P. K. Subramaniam, Perambur, a Saivite and hereditary disciple of the Tiruvaduthurai math, this is what he says—

"The witness's experience was confined to the Tiruvaduthurai mutt and the Dharmapuram mutt. He was in the service of Tiruvaduthurai mutt and was suspended. He knew the details of the maladministration, personally in some cases and through the records in others. Though the facts of maladministration were known to the other sishyas and had been public property, no sishya other than him had come forward to give evidence before the Select Committee like him, as they should have done if they were interested, and therefore, all mutts should be taken over by the Government. He was giving evidence as a sishya and according to his conscience.

He did not favour the appointment of committees of sishyas, for, from his experience of Tiruvaduthurai mutt, disciples were tools in the hands of the matadhipathi and maladministration of mutts could not be remedied by them. In Tiruvaduthurai mutt, only tambirans were entitled to take legal action; they were treated as sons of the mutt. The other disciples were not so treated. The sanctity and devotion to the mutt would not be lost if executive officers were appointed and provision was made for control over budget and for audit. Committees of sishyas, if at all, should be purely advisory.

From his past experience, he said that any advisory committee if given some powers of control would not work. That applied even to a committee of sishyas who were interested in the mutt and who could be expected to know its spiritual needs better than a Government officer. He pointed out that in the original scheme framed by the sub-court for the Tiruvaduthurai mutt, there was an advisory council of disciples to the Pandarasannadhi, but the latter always rejected their advice. Even if it was now provided that the mutts should have advisory committees of sishyas, those committees could be purely advisory and should not be given any powers. He was of opinion that better administration could be achieved only by an executive officer under the control of the Government. He preferred a Government official because he was bound by Government Servant's Conduct Rules and if he did anything wrong, he would be punished by Government. But a member of the committee could not be punished like that.

There was a belief in South India with some of the devotees that a sishya should surrender every worldly possession to the Guru when he wanted it. Some times the matadhipathi misused this faith even to-day.

That is one evidence, Sir, which however we thought might be going a bit too far. Sri T. Ranga Reddi, a Vakil of Guntur, states, at page 27—

"The witness had no objection to interference with mutts even with regard to spiritual and ritual aspects. There would be no interference if the mutt was properly managed. If the matadhipathi did not teach anything or gather his disciples, the Government must take up the matter. The sanctity and reverence for mutts would not decrease if the Government took over the powers of supervision and control. On the other hand, they decreased now on account of the mismanagement of these institutions. He was of the view that the assumption that the mutt was not a place of public worship like the temple was not correct, because there were also temples there. The mutt's property was public property in the sense that the disciples who enjoyed that right formed part of the public and when it was not properly managed the Government which represented the public, had got a right to interfere."

Then my Friend referred to Sri Kulasekara Doss, an honourable Member of this Assembly. His evidence is at page 30—

"The witness said that the matadhipathis should be treated with the respect due to them. He had no objection however to committees to manage the secular affairs of mutts with an executive officer for each. Such committees should consist partly of sishyas and partly of religious-minded non-sishya Hindus. The sishyas should be in a minority in the committee, for, they generally might not be willing to expose the misbehaviour of their gurus, and if they were in a majority might act as a deterrent to exposing the behaviour."

If a matadhipathi misbehaved, the committee of not less than 20 or 25 people could complain to the Government who could take action through a suitable agency.

Then my Friend referred to Sri V. V. Srinivasa Ayyangar, a very orthodox gentleman, a very old revered gentleman, who cannot according to his own evidence, reconcile himself with certain things. He said that after the passing of the Temple Entry Act—the first thing that the Government did—he had ceased to visit temples because he had lost all faith in temples after the passing of that Act. It is a very honest opinion that he has given. There is nothing absolutely wrong in what he feels and it is not easy for us to conceive people of that age to change suddenly their age-old habits. Still, we can only understand and appreciate what such orthodox people say. This is what he says about the maths—

‘If a matadhipathi was guilty of a very serious offence, it could not be said that no steps should be taken against him, as he was an Acharyar. The general law was enough to deal with him. There were sishyas who had been bringing the mismanagement of the mutts to the notice of the proper authorities.’

He said that a Protector of Endowments must be appointed and that the Protector—

‘might be empowered to inspect the accounts of mutts also. In regard to the dismissal of the matadhipathi, the courts were sufficiently empowered to try these cases and pronounce judgment.’

My Friend next referred to Sri V. Bhashyam Ayyangar’s evidence. He said—

‘The mutts should be treated on a separate footing. The Government might take powers to notify such of the mutts as were being mismanaged and bring them under the control of the Commissioner. Each mutt should be dealt with individually and not as a class. . . . The present provisions regarding mutts might be retained. . . . When there was a complaint about the mismanagement by the matadhipathi in regard to the administration of funds, etc., the Government authority should go into it and make a judicial enquiry and hear both the parties. The notification should be as a result of Government decision after hearing both the parties. The provisions of sections 15 to 19 and 39 to 42 would then apply’

He was against the removal of the matadhipathi without further application to the court, even in cases where the matadhipathi was convicted, of a crime for moral turpitude. To a question whether the witness would favour the automatic forfeiture of the office of the matadhipathi after his conviction for a crime involving moral turpitude, the witness said that conviction for an offence involving moral turpitude might, by itself, amount to the removal of a trustee. No further judicial action was necessary.

Then about the Council of Sishyas—

‘Asked whether the witness would like a small body, say, a council of about a dozen sishyas to be appointed to advise the Government officers in the preparation of the budget, etc., of the mutts, the witness stated that a better body to advise the Government officer would be about a dozen persons selected from the district as a whole with the matadhipathi as the head and if the majority passed the budget, the Commissioner should not interfere. The final authority must be vested in such a committee presided over by the matadhipathi.’

(Interruption by Sri Viswanatham.) If the hon. Member can read some portion of Sri Bhashyam Ayyangar’s evidence, I can also read some other portions, Sir, of the same evidence.

‘I shall now take up the evidence of Sri Surya Rao, an ex-President of the Hindu Religious Endowments Board. He says—

‘A committee of sishyas might be appointed for the management of the affairs. As there might be difficulty in giving effect to election by sishyas immediately, the committee might be nominated by the Government in the first instance. Committees should consist also of the grahastas of the community who held the matadhipathi as the Guru and not merely those who lived inside the mutt premises.’

He says a committee may be appointed and that the matadhipathi may be the chairman of the committee and that the Government may appoint an executive officer for the mutt in consultation with the committee—

‘Civil matters might be referred to the Commissioner for decision with appeal to civil courts. The court would have to decide whether a matter is civil or religious.’

The executive officer should be responsible for the proper management of the properties. In case of mismanagement, it might be referred to the Government or the Commissioner. The decision of the appointing authority should be final. So far as religious matters were concerned, the matadhipathi was the head and nobody could question his right. He might occupy the position of a president of the district board.’

So, his opinion is that the matadhipathi should occupy the position of a president of the district board. Sir, I do not want to quote more. Certainly, there were more witnesses who gave evidence on behalf of matams and matadhipathis than others who were comparatively poor people, poor worshippers. The evidence is there both ways, and all that we have provided in Chapter V is only very limited power of superintendence and control in the matter of the administration of maths. To me it appears to be a very, very modest provision, not in any way going more than what is necessary and is in no way derogatory to the matadhipathis or those who have faith in these maths. This amendment now proposed, completely changes the very nature and idea underlying the scheme of the Bill itself, and Government cannot accept it.

‘I forgot to refer to the evidence of Mr. Sachidanandam Pillai, the Registrar of the Annamalai University, a very devout person. He approved of Government interference in maths subject to the safeguards suggested in his memorandum. He would not, however, give the Commissioner the power to dismiss a matadhipathi. He should only go to a court of law to get the matadhipathi dismissed. He proposed an Advisory Council for maths consisting of sishyas and followers of the tenets of the math. The Commissioner might interfere in case there is difference of opinion between the matadhipathi and the committee. If a matadhipathi misbehaved, the committee of sishyas could give him a warning and allow him time to improve. If still he did not mend himself, then the court could take cognizance of it either on a complaint by the committee of sishyas or by not less than twenty sishyas, as the case may be. He had no objection to retaining Clause 39 of the original Bill with the amendment he had suggested.’ And Clause 39 of the original Bill is put here as Clause 57, with the amendments that he has suggested.”

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—“Sir,”

MR. SPEAKER:—“No, I cannot allow the hon. Member to speak now.”

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—“Please hear me, Sir; I only want to make a special request to the Speaker to allow me to speak at this stage; I know I have not been present here all through, but I do think I can really contribute usefully to the discussions in the House if you will kindly allow me to speak now.”

MR. SPEAKER:—“I cannot; it is against the Rules.”

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—“If you think you cannot allow me, Sir, then I can only say it is my misfortune.”

[24th November 1950]

MR. SPEAKER:—"I cannot go against the Rules. The hon. Member Mr. Viswanatham will now speak."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, the Hon. Mr. Madhava Menon used the word 'camouflage' in connexion with this amendment. Sir, I did not use a single hard or harsh word, and yet he was good enough to hurl the word 'camouflage' against me because somebody else used that word against him the day before yesterday, and he now after 48 hours, hurls it on an innocent fragile young man like myself. (Laughter.) The line which the Hon. Mr. Madhava Menon has taken is not surprising; but I thought after what I said in language which was sufficiently clear, he would not raise the very same objections which he raised at the first stage of the introduction of the Bill and at the opening stages of the Bill. I thought he was hearing whatever I was saying. Except with regard to the names of a few witnesses, he was not good enough to reply to anything that I have said, but simply repeated the arguments which he might have repeated on an amendment for the deletion of this Clause. If I moved for the deletion of this Clause, then his arguments would have been quite valid; but it was not for the deletion of the Clause that I have moved. I have also given an alternative amendment in which there is even a specific declaration made that the matadhipathi will not be the beneficiary but the math alone will be the beneficiary of the entire math endowment. The Hon. Minister referred to the arguments used in the evidence of witnesses. I am very sorry. I said that there were 28 opinions embodied in this book and excepting one, almost all were in favour of a council of sishyas to advise the matadhipathi. Am I wrong? He has quoted certain people's opinions, but not one of them says that he is against this council of sishyas, except for one gentleman whose opinion I did not read out for this reason: he is a dismissed servant of the Tiruvaduthurai math. So, I did not want to weigh his opinion either for me or against me, but I quoted the opinion of another disciple, Sri M. C. S. Ratnasabhapathi Chettiyar, who is a Saivite disciple of the same math and the Chairman of the Municipal Council, Kumbakonam. I read out almost everything and not omitted anything, but the Hon. Minister was reading and almost underlining them as if they were a great discovery. The fact is, that except one opinion which was against it, I said that every other opinion was in favour of my amendment. And, what is the essence of the scheme we have presented? Apart from the length of the amendment, there is a declaration in it that the math is the beneficiary and not the matadhipathi. Is it wrong, Sir? We have gone to the utmost lengths we could go in saying that it is not the 'matadhipathi' that has the beneficial interest but it is the math that has the beneficial interest? Does the Hon. Minister understand the implications of the amendment when he says that my amendment is a camouflage? Is it a camouflage, especially when on a previous occasion I was quoting extensively from the opinions of learned Judges to show that beneficial interest

lay in the matadhipathi? Even though the Government may not accept it, I will agree to it and in fact in my amendment I have declared that the math shall have the beneficial interest and not the matadhipathi. Is it right then for the word 'camouflage' to be used when I switch over from the beneficial interest of the matadhipathi to that of the math? Particularly when it is in favour or in line with the opinion of the Government it was not fair on the part of the Hon. Minister to use the word 'camouflage' in that connexion. I say, Sir, we are satisfying the progressive opinion of so many persons who are in favour of the proposal that the matadhipathi should be controlled by a council of sishyas. Then again, Sir, the Hon. Minister read out opinions that sishyas would not raise their voice. I made this point quite clear even in my opening speech on my amendment. I never intended it to mean an exclusive council of these few people who resided inside a math and necessarily therefore they would not be able to do anything. He quoted Mr. Kulasekhara Das; but that is not only his opinion, that was the opinion of the Select Committee also and that is the opinion I am adumbrating in my amendment. I said that the sishyas might be anywhere from Cape Comorin to Kashmir. I said that the matadhipathi should prepare a register of sishyas and also how he should prepare it. Did I say, Sir, that they would be under the thumb or heel of the matadhipathi? I never said it. What I said was that the matadhipathi should prepare a register of sishyas spread throughout the State and it might even be they were spread throughout the country, for some of the important maths are held in high esteem throughout the country. I therefore, submit, Sir, that if the Government are not prepared to accept my amendment, I do not mind it, but let them not misunderstand the implications of my amendment and let them not mis-state facts. After all with the majority which the Government have, they can throw it out, but let them not mis-state what I have said. I have understood their position; they are not agreeable to the amendment, but I have the satisfaction of having done my duty. But, to say what I have said, is a camouflage, I submit, is not right, because my amendment is not such. It may be that some time ago we were arguing that the Government did not accept our position, but when the House accepted certain provisions, we only suggesting an alternative to the Government amendment, but we did not say that the Government should not have control over the accounts of the maths. In fact, my amendment goes further and because it is an alternative amendment, it is a bit long and it is all necessary for the proper running of the various maths and safeguards that are necessary for their proper administration, in order to keep the maths above suspicion and in a position in which they can command respect not only of the sishyas but even outsiders not only in this country but in every other country. So, Sir, I submit, that the provisions we have made in the amendment are in line with the progressive judicial thought in the country and also in line with the spirit and letter of the Constitution. I only ask the Hon. Minister to look at the matter from that point of view and have no misconceptions about the matter. Let him reject it if he wants, but not mis-state facts."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I have not mis-stated facts. If I had said that the effect of Mr. Viswanatham's amendment would be to put the position exactly as it was without any material change, I might have used the word 'camouflage'."

MR. SPEAKER:—"It is not unparliamentary."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"I still maintain that, if my friend objects to the word 'camouflage' it covers the position as it was before and there is no difference. It covers in a certain language, the result of which will be that the maths will be as they were before the introduction of the Bill. If that will satisfy my hon. Friend, I may withdraw the word 'camouflage'."

"Then, Sir, he raised the same objections in three or four cases where the definition of maths came and on every occasion he moved for the deletion of 'maths' on identical grounds and nothing more. My friend says that his amendment represents progressive judicial thought in the country. But I can say that advanced progressive judicial thought in the country, according to justice and evidence given is represented in the amendment proposed by the Government, and it represents also the progressive thought of the ordinary man who has faith in temples and maths. That is what is represented in the Government amendment, Sir."

The amendment was put and lost.

Clause 57.

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I move—

"Delete the words "and having obtained the consent in writing of the Commissioner."

Sir, the existing Clause in the Bill says—

"The Commissioner, or any two or more persons having interest and having obtained the consent in writing of the Commissioner, may institute a suit in the court to obtain a decree for removing the trustee of a math or a specific endowment attached to a math, for any one or more of the following reasons, namely,

"Sir, a healthy provision is made here with regard to certain aspects in regard to certain matters where the Commissioner should go to the court to get redress against matadhipathis. Here, any two or more persons are given the right, but I do not understand why the Commissioner should give his seal of approval for instituting a suit in court. That means the right given to two or more persons is practically denied by saying that the Commissioner should give his consent for going to court. The effect of it will be that if the Commissioner does not give his consent, the two or more persons cannot go to a court of law, and so the effect of the right given to two or more persons to go to court will be nullified by the provision that they should obtain the consent of the Commissioner. What I say is, if the Commissioner is given the right, it is good he exercises that right, but persons having interest also must have the same right and that right must not be stifled by an unwilling Commissioner. That is the object of my amendment, Sir."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, I second the amendment moved by my hon. Friend, Mr. Viswanatham. Complaints have been made from time to time by the Government that persons are indifferent to mismanagements in temples and maths and people do not come forward or take the trouble to bring it to the notice of the courts and therefore it has become necessary that an officer should be appointed for the purpose of taking up the matter and that is the justification for all the provisions in the Bill. That was the thing that was stated originally when the Bill was introduced.

"Now, what happens is, if two or more people come forward and say, 'we have special interest; we want to take up the matter to the court and we are prepared to bear all the expenditure,' why should the Commissioner be given a say in the matter? Of course, the Commissioner is there when the public are indifferent to the matter, but if the public are vigilant and want to take up the matter to court, why should the Commissioner come in at all? I cannot understand it. The whole argument of the Treasury Bench was that the people were indifferent and they did not take interest in respect of such matters. Perhaps the Government are to-day stimulated with the idea that they find there is so much breach of trust or mismanagement and that a duty has devolved upon them for the purpose of taking all these things on their heads and therefore they are making this provision. I wonder why when two or more persons come forward and are willing to expend all the money for the purpose, should the Government put a spoke in the way of getting the consent of the Commissioner. Perhaps there may be a Commissioner who has 'dhakshanyam' for certain people and for that reason he may not be willing to give his sanction. Of course, they may be justified in saying—the Hon. Law Minister may say—'under section 92, you have got to obtain the consent of the Advocate-General and therefore we put in a similar provision here and whether you approve it or not, we reproduce it here.' But, I ask, 'why do you reproduce this provision alone and not all the other things and why do you reproduce only a bad thing and justify it?' It is really wrong to reproduce bad provisions and not the good provisions. When you are taking a thousand and one good things, and along with that you are taking a bad thing also, now, why should you take a bad thing and rule out the other good things. This is what the position of the Government comes to. Therefore I say the consent of the Commissioner need not be obtained to institute a suit for removing a trustee of a math. I strongly support the amendment."

[24th November 1950]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—“ Mr. Speaker, Sir, I thank my hon. Friend, Mr. Bhashyam for the compliment he has paid to my legal knowledge. It is a very proud thing for me to get such a compliment from one like Mr. Bhashyam.”

SRI K. BHASHYAM :—“ Then follow the master closely. That is the reason for this amendment! ”

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—“ Regarding this Clause, the disciples may follow the master too much. Sir, hon. Mr. Bhashyam said that the Hon. Law Minister with his legal knowledge might as well say, ‘ there is the section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code.’ Sir, I tender my thanks to him for reminding me of that section. But, Sir, may I tell him there are various provisions in the Criminal Procedure Code, where, even in big cases, prosecution should not be launched before a court without the previous sanction of the Government? What is the reason for that? It is because we want to see that blackmail should not be done. Otherwise, Sir, for flippant reasons anybody and everybody may rush to court. So, to prevent all that, a prima facie case should be established, before a suit is proposed to be filed for dismissing a matadhipathi. It should not be done light-heartedly. Mr. Bhashyam asked, ‘ why should Government take the responsibility on their head for this? ’ It is not a question of our anxiety. It is the duty of the public to see that blackmail should not be done. So, what is the provision to prevent that blackmail? So, the words, ‘ any two or more persons having interest and having obtained the consent in writing of the Commissioner ’ are necessary. Argument was advanced for keeping the pristine glory of the matadhipathi, and the respect and dignity that he should command. Now, where is all that gone, when my friends say, now, that every citizen should be given the right to file a suit for his removal? I have greater respect, if not equal respect, as my friends do have, for the matadhipathi, and I say, it is in their interest that such a right, as is sought to be given to the ordinary citizen by my friends to be flippantly allowed to be used by them, should not be allowed.”

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—“ Mr. Speaker, Sir, I entirely disagree with the Hon. Sri K. Madhava Menon. He has been saying all this while that it is in the interests of the good administration of the Hindu religious endowments, charitable trusts and maths that we are coming forward with the present legislation. But, here, what is it that is sought to be done? It appears, Government want to have their finger on every detail of administration. If really, they are interested or anxious to see that the properties of the math are to be properly managed, let them declare that any person who has an interest in the math property should have the right to bring a suit for the better management of that property. Instead of doing that, by the present Clause, Government seek to have under their thumb the entire administration of the math property. They wish to have all the thirty thousand religious institutions and seven hundred matadhipathis in the State at their beck and call. This is, at least, what the Clause would amount to in practice. Now, if that is not the idea of Government they should give the right to every citizen in the country who is interested in the math property to bring a suit for the better administration of that property, instead of asking him to approach the Commissioner for leave to institute a suit. I know for the last fifteen or twenty years, though people were trying to go to a court of law for this purpose, it was not possible, because of the Hindu Religious Endowments Act. Sir, some of these matadhipathis are very influential and they have got moneys at their disposal, and they have rich sishyas, and so, it is not possible to control them, unless we give power here to every citizen who has an interest in the management of the institution. Why am I saying that? Because certain things have come to my notice of what has happened. So, it is not to my benefit or any particular man's benefit, that I want that the Commissioner should not be approached to obtain consent to institute a suit. Sir, these Commissioners will have a hierarchy of high officials, and they may be anxious in seeing that certain matters are not brought to light. Therefore, I say, it is in the public interest that an ordinary citizen should be given the right to go to a court of law and not be asked to approach the Commissioner for consent to institute a suit. So, if the object of the Government is to see that these maths are properly administered, let them not deprive the ordinary man of his ordinary right, and that is why I want the Hon. Minister for Law to reconsider the matter.”

MR. SPEAKER :—“ The question is—

‘ In sub-clause (1), delete the words “ and having obtained the consent in writing of the Commissioner ”.’ ”

The amendment was lost.

MR. SPEAKER :—“ I rule the other amendment of Mr. Viswanatham, as out of order, and so, he cannot move it.”

Sub-clause (1) (b).

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI :—“ Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move the amendment which stands in my name; and that is, to—

‘ Delete sub-clause (1) (b).’

Sir, my arguments are as follows: The Hon. Sri Madhava Menon, while opposing Mr. Viswanatham's amendment spoke very much, saying that these trustees should be dealt with not lightheartedly. Sir, we have got the greatest regard for the matadhipathis, and we agree that all persons should not be allowed to file suits against them. But his reasoning falls to the ground when we look at sub-clause (1) (b). It is all vague there. It says a trustee may be removed if he is suffering from any physical or mental defect or infirmity which renders him unfit to be a trustee. Sir, I am not able to understand how these descriptions of infirmity can render him unfit for his work. Sir, is this not treating him lightheartedly, I ask? Perhaps the Hon. Minister is thinking of certain imaginary defects, mental, physical or otherwise, which should entitle two persons to approach a Commissioner to give consent to file a suit for the removal of the trustee. I wonder how any of these defects can be made a ground. This provision becomes all the more important when we keep in mind the importance and the reverence with which a matadhipathi is held in his locality. That being so, under Clause 57, such a person is sought to be removed lightheartedly, on the ground that he is suffering from any physical or mental defect or infirmity. Now, on these self-same grounds, in another Clause, the Deputy Commissioner is entitled to remove him from his office and place his property in some other's possession or deal with the property in the way he likes. For, look at Clause 58. There, you will see, that when a trustee is by reason of unsoundness of mind or other mental or physical defect or infirmity unable to discharge the functions of the trustee, the Assistant Commissioner may take such steps and pass such order as he thinks proper for the temporary custody and protection of the endowments of the math. Now, I ask, Sir, is this all not treating the matadhipathi lightheartedly? It may be, there may be men who have got an old grievance against the head of the math, and there is nothing in the Bill which prevents such persons from proceeding to institute a suit to remove the head of the math. Is this not treating the head of the math lightheartedly, once again, I ask? Nobody knows what sort of suffering or infirmity is contemplated in this sub-clause. So, Sir, I request the Hon. Minister to reconsider the matter. Apart from the legal aspect of it, even the administrative difficulty that may be felt in carrying out this sub-clause, may be looked into. So, Sir, I ask the Hon. Law Minister whether what is contemplated in this sub-clause is not treating the matadhipathi lightheartedly?"

SRI K. VARADACHARI:—"I second the amendment."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, the difficulty in accepting this Clause is because the implications of it are not seriously appreciated by the Government. That is my view, at any rate. Because the sub-clause says—his suffering from any physical or mental defect or infirmity which renders him unfit to be a trustee.

Is it the case of the Hon. Minister that if a person suffers from these infirmities or any one of them he becomes unfit to be a trustee, and thereby becomes unfit to manage the property of the math or becomes unfit to render the spiritual service for which he is there as the head of the math? The difficulty in this case will be this: though he may be old, he may not be so old as to manage the property, or not so old as to be in a capacity not to give the necessary initiative to his disciples. I think, the older he is, the wiser he will be; because as one grows old, he becomes mature minded to give spiritual advice, and so, he may still be competent to occupy the position as head of the math. Now, the clause, as it stands, looks as if, in case he is not fit to be the head of the math for the purpose of giving ministerial or spiritual advice, you may dismiss him, on the ground that he will not be able to do anything else also. This is a thing which should not be done so lightheartedly. It will work very great hardship in actual practice. Then, Sir, the Hon. Minister for Law may say that the Commissioner will not be so unreasonable as to do anything like that. But, Sir, sometimes we may get unreasonable Commissioners; for, do we not get unreasonable Government officers sometimes? And have not Government punished them for their action? Therefore, Sir, we should provide for all kinds of men, as it is not always do we get men of high quality, integrity, knowledge and intelligence. So, I am asking the Hon. Minister for Law to understand the implications of this sub-clause and see whether he cannot change the words to suit my point. If he says that the trustee in spite of the infirmity may continue to manage the property and not as the spiritual head, at least, let him put the sub-clause in that way. The sub-clause, as it is, is defective, I mean, defective in drafting, and I hope the Hon. Minister will meet my point."

RAJA MUTHIAH CHETTIYAR OF CHETTINAD:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I am not a friend of matadhipatis at all at this stage of the Bill, though I had some sympathy with them at the Select Committee stage. Yet I feel that some change is called for in Clause 57 (1) (a) and (b)."

MR. SPEAKER:—"We are now dealing with item (b)."

RAJA MUTHIAH CHETTIYAR OF CHETTINAD:—"In dealing with item (b), I am referring to clause (a) for comparison. I agree that a person who is of unsound mind should be removed from office. Even there, the learned Doctor, under whose portfolio this Bill comes, knows more than anyone of us that a person of unsound mind may become all right after some treatment. The 'mental defect' referred to in item (b) may include the unsoundness of mind referred to in item (a). I request the Government to combine (a) and (b) under one item. The usual language employed in legislation is leprosy, insolvency or unsound mind. These are the three things to which we are generally accustomed. I find for the first time the inclusion of physical defect in this clause. Physically a person may be unfit. For example, if a person is suffering from paralysis of one of the legs, he can be moved in a chair. He may be perfectly all right for carrying the religious affairs and his disciples would like to hear his teachings, and also the secular affairs. For what kind of physical infirmity is a matadhipati to be removed? A person who is over seventy years of age may be infirm according to some of us. But there are persons who are physically and mentally fit even up to eighty years. Expressions like old or infirm are vague and very difficult of interpretation. As the hon. Member Sri Bashyam said, the Government can always reply bona fide that the Commissioner is expected to be reasonable and that every Commissioner is not likely to issue perverse orders. In legislation we must use as clear a language as possible, especially when defect or vagueness is pointed out by hon. Members. The duties of a matadhipati are classified under two main headings—secular and religious. In the administration of secular affairs, he is assisted by a manager according to a provision in this Bill. I shall speak about it when the relevant clause is taken up. When the secular part of the work is separated, a matadhipati is expected to do only the religious part. If the physical defect is of such a nature as not to require removal from office or as can be cured within six months or so, a matadhipati need not be removed. A matadhipati is learned and respected, unlike many matadhipatis with whom we are familiar and about whom we have natural prejudices and rightly so. Those prejudices should not cloud our vision and prevent us from taking a judicious view of how this provision will affect a really good matadhipati. Even a slightly infirm person may be all right otherwise. Therefore I appeal to the Hon. Minister who is now in charge of the Bill to recast items (a) and (b) suitably and move an amendment at a later stage at least."

SRI P. KANDASWAMI PILLAI:—"I oppose the amendment, Sir. Just before, the Raja of Chettinad was asking what physical defect a matadhipati will have. I have great regard and respect for all spiritual heads. But I presume matadhipatis also are human beings, and therefore subject to all the weaknesses and ailments of ordinary human beings. Doctors tell us that when a consumptive patient coughs, he spreads contagion to a distance of twenty-three feet. Suppose the head of a math is a consumptive patient. Who is to decide whether he is a consumptive patient or not? He may not be willing to reveal it because he will have to lose his position. I do not say that every head of a math will do like that. But when such cases do occur, under what provision of this Bill can he be asked to undergo treatment or kept away from spreading contagion if item (b) is deleted? A person is heir to so many physical complaints. He may become deaf or as the Raja of Chettinad said, get paralysis of the leg or tongue. Because he cannot talk, he may be keeping quiet inside the math. Because such amendments are moved, we have to analyse and discuss threadbare all aspects on the floor of the House. It is not as if every Commissioner will pounce upon a matadhipati and remove him from office. It is provided that the Commissioner, or two or more persons having interest with the consent of the Commissioner, can file a suit for removing a matadhipati. A court of law will try the case and give its verdict as to whether the matadhipati is suffering from any physical or mental defect or not. Therefore where is the room for fear? Unnecessary fear need not be entertained. No harm will result from this clause and the clause should remain as it is."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I have refrained so far from participating in the discussion of this chapter. I want to draw the Hon. Minister's attention to one aspect. As a person with some little culture, I would suggest that this whole chapter be recast. It begins with a provision for the removal of a matadhipati and then deals with the filling up of vacancies and so on. Why should we not begin the chapter with some decent clauses and consign dismissal or removal to later clauses? If I had been in the Select Committee, I would have suggested this order. I do not like the very set-up of the chapter or the language employed. It ought to have begun by saying that the trustee shall ordinarily be the head of the math with complete charge of the religious portion of the duties there. Then secular matters may be dealt with and the Government can provide for whatever control they want. My sense of culture revolts against the whole arrangement."

"Coming to the amendment before the House, it is very right that item (b) should be deleted. Ordinarily no person with a physical or mental defect will aspire to the office of a matadhipati. I will give a cultured example. Suppose a person suffers from loss of memory because of old age. Normally he will say: 'I have lost my memory. I do not want to continue any longer!'

"I still feel that all of them are good honourable and respectable people. If the trustee is of unsound mind, he must cease to be a trustee and the Government have a perfect right to move the court to see that he vacates his office. Nobody desires to stick to his office as was alleged by the hon. Member who preceded me. What is there in that office to covet? The office is not usually sought after by many people. Nowadays it is very difficult to get persons to take up the headship of maths. I know that even deserving people have rejected the offer. The responsibilities of the office only dissuade and do not persuade people to accept it. I am talking only about the two maths within my knowledge and I know that they have had a distinguished succession of scholars as their heads. If a matadhipati is found to be suffering from any physical defect or infirmity, the Commissioner can ask him to appoint a competent person as manager to look after the secular administration. The Raja of Chettinad assumed that a manager would be appointed in every case. If a trustee looks after the secular as well as religious affairs properly, I think the provision relating to the appointment of a manager will not apply to him automatically. Only when the Commissioner is satisfied that a trustee is incapable of discharging his secular duties properly, he will move for the appointment of a manager. In regard to purely religious observances, I do not think there is any case for retaining sub-clause (1) (b)."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"When we passed clause 49 relating to the trustee of a religious institution, there was no difficulty in understanding the words 'unsoundness of mind or other mental or physical defect or infirmity'. But difficulty has been expressed in understanding similar words when applied to maths! If similar wording is adopted by Sri K. Bhashyam in his amendment, it will be acceptable to Sri L. N. Gopalaswami. There will be no difficulty in understanding it because it was used by Sri Bhashyam. (Interruption by Sri K. Bhashyam.) In the amendment proposed by Sri Bhashyam, the language adopted is: 'when a matadhipati is by reason of unsoundness of mind or other physical infirmity unable to discharge his functions'. If this wording is right in Sri Bhashyam's amendment, the wording used in this clause is also right."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir. I still maintain that it is ununderstandable that in spite of what Sri Bhashyam has said in his amendment, why this clause should be retained. I want to point out to the Hon. Minister for Law that my hon. Friend Sri K. Bhashyam has used the words 'infirmity' along with 'physical', but in this clause there is nothing of it at all. The Hon. Minister has misread the amendment altogether. His amendment says 'by reason of other physical infirmity unable to discharge his functions'. There is a vast difference between this and the sub-clause 57 (1) (t) as it is."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I know whether an hon. Member has a right to say, which I have not said or that I have misread. The sub-clause (b) says 'any physical or mental defect or infirmity which renders him unfit to be a trustee' and I quoted Sri Bhashyam's amendment exactly from the Chapter which he wants to be substituted instead, namely 'by reason of other physical infirmity unable to discharge his functions' and I submit there is no difference at all, and the hon. Member cannot say that I have misread the amendment of Sri K. Bhashyam."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"It is the mere reading of the clause and the understanding of the English language that is required here. It is perhaps not a misstatement or misreading of the clause. I still maintain, Sir, that what I have said is correct. What is stated in the sub-clause is 'his suffering from any physical or mental defect or infirmity which renders him unfit to be a trustee'. There is no such qualification as physical or mental and the word 'infirmity' is used in a separate sense, while the Hon. Minister wants to make it synonymous with physical or mental defect. Therefore there is no such thing as mis-statement which I have made.

"But, Sir, I am very glad that it has been possible at least for some of the hon. Members like the Raja of Chettinad to understand that this is a very vague clause and is likely to be misunderstood not only by the Commissioner, but it will also be made use of as a weapon by some people who make it their business to dethrone the matadhipathis on some pretext or other, to be always threatening them. So far as my point is concerned, I still maintain that the Hon. Minister has not answered it and if he does not answer, the House will take note of it.

"So far as the other provision is concerned, I think it is not desirable to retain in the hands of the Commissioner the power to institute a suit or of giving his consent in writing to other persons who want to dethrone a matadhipathi by instituting legal proceedings on some vague pretext or other. There should not be any vagueness in any of these provisions."

SRI K. BRAHMANANDAM REDDI:—"May I know, Sir, whether it is the Commissioner's opinion that the trustee of a math is unfit for service that is enough or it is the court that is to decide the fitness or otherwise of the trustee? Suppose the Commissioner thinks that a particular trustee is unfit for service by reason of his physical or mental defect, it will only be a ground for him to approach the court to declare him to be unfit for service as trustee, is it not?"

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, my name has been dragged in and my amendment was really referred to in the course of the reply of the Hon. Minister for Law as an argument against his accepting the amendment of my hon. Friend Sri L. N. Gopalaswami. Sir, I am not able to repeat the exact words that he used, but I think there is a great deal of difference in what I have said in my amendment, and what the Hon. Minister has taken it to mean. The expression which I have used, namely, 'that a matadhipathi by reason of unsoundness of mind or of physical infirmity unable to discharge his functions' is quite different and conveys a different meaning from the expression used in this sub-clause, namely, 'his suffering from any physical or mental defect or infirmity which renders him unfit to be a trustee', because 'unfit to be a trustee' conveys a different meaning from 'unable to discharge the functions of a trustee'. If my Hon. Friend the Law Minister wants to make a capital out of my amendment, then all I can say is, that he has not really understood my amendment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I cannot really understand the difference for myself between the expression 'physical infirmity unable to discharge the functions as trustee', and 'suffering from any physical or mental defect or infirmary which renders him unfit to be a trustee'. I think that the difference, if there is any, will be the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee.

"Sir, my hon. Friend Sri K. Brahmanandam Reddy asked whether it is the Commissioner's opinion that the person is of a mental or physical infirmity that would make him unfit to be a trustee or whether it is the court that should be satisfied with it. The object is that the Commissioner, if he thinks that the trustee is mentally defective, may institute a suit in the court and obtain a decree for removing him from his office. It is the court that must decide the issue and not the opinion alone of the Commissioner, Sir."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"On a point of personal explanation, Sir, it is not merely with reference to this clause where a court's reference has been provided for, but also with reference to the other clause 58, where there is no mention of interference by court, that I have spoken, Sir."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The amendment is—

'Delete sub-clause (1) (b) of clause 57.'"

The amendment was lost.

Sub-clause (1) (d).

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I move the amendment standing in my name, namely—

'In clause 57, sub-clause (1) (d), add at the end the words, "or for leading an immoral life and bringing the institution into contempt".'

"Sir, I want to add these words at the end of the sub-clause (1) (d) in order that this may serve as a ground on which a trustee or matadhipathi can be removed from his office. It is most necessary, Sir, that the trustee or the head of a math must be a person leading a moral life and it is not enough to say that his conviction for any offence involving moral turpitude should alone be a ground for instituting proceedings to remove him from office. Because we are dealing with religious institutions and because the whole Act deals with objects of spiritual elevation, namely temples and maths, I submit that there must be some relation between the person who is the trustee of the institution and his private morality and life to make him fit to hold the post of the spiritual head of that institution. To enlighten the House about the necessity to keep the trustee above reproach with regard to his personal morality, I shall read an extract from the Judgments of Madras and Calcutta High Courts. I am reading from this book, entitled, 'The Law, relating to Hindu and Muhammadan Religious Endowments, with commentaries', by P. R. Ganapathi Ayyar.

There can be no doubt that a charge of immoral conduct subsequent to the appointment will be a valid ground for dismissing the head of a mutt who is required to be an ascetic. So it was held in one case that the Swamis of the mutts at Udipi with their disciple had the right to inquire into the immorality of one of the eight Swamis and on proof of the same to outcaste him when he ceases to be the head. Even where the head of a mutt is not required to be an ascetic but is permitted to marry, the leading of an immoral and a vicious course of life ought to be a sufficient ground for dismissal as the duty of the head is to impart spiritual instruction and to propagate the Hindu Religion and he is expected to lead a chaste and an austere life."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I second the amendment of my hon. Friend Sri T. Viswanatham. Of all the amendments that have been moved so far, I have no doubt that this is the best one and if anybody should try to oppose it, I will have no hesitation in saying that his position will be the worst. The hon. Mover of this amendment said that an immoral man shall not continue to be the trustee of a religious institution or the head of a math. If a trustee could be sent out for being deaf, or if he can be removed from service for having lost an arm, or if he is debarred to hold the post if he has lost his memory, there is no reason why he should not be sent out if he leads a notoriously immoral life. The question arises as to how a person should be declared to have been leading an immoral life. Sir, the world is not so blind to know that, nor can the Government be. It is an easy matter to find out whether a man is immoral or not. Even the Indian Penal Code has tried to catch man and punish him for immorality. It has laid down that if a person entices a married woman or is guilty of adultery, etc., he is punishable by law. But these are compoundable offences. It can be argued that even though these are provable offences, they are not enough, but that the person must have been convicted for such an offence in a court of law. Sir, the term moral turpitude is so very vague that it is doubtful whether it will cover such offences. There are two sections in the Indian Penal Code defining what is immorality and I daresay that the Government should be able to assess whether a trustee is immoral or not by applying these definitions.

"As regards the general test of how immorality could be assessed, suppose a trustee has been leading an immoral life, keeping a permanent concubine or suppose a lady who is not in wedlock with any other person is living with the trustee, then there is absolutely no law which could punish him in a criminal Court. But so far as this sub-clause is concerned, that should be an enough ground for the Commissioner to take action to remove him from his office. The clause as it stands at present, does not make any such provision. It need not be proved that they were living as husband and wife in a Court of Law. The very fact that he is leading an immoral life must be enough to move the court to remove him from his office. That is the purpose of this amendment and I see no difficulty which would stand in the way of Government accepting this very reasonable amendment."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, I must confess that I have certain doubts so far as this amendment is concerned, before I could fully subscribe to it. If a matadhipathi is immoral, certainly he should not be continued in office. There is no doubt about that and I entirely agree with the first portion of the amendment. But there is also the addition of the words, 'bringing the institution into contempt' in the amendment. It is so general and a little bit vague and I am afraid that it would be used as a weapon in the hands of the Commissioner or any person who is against the matadhipathi to bring any matter to the Court, saying that it would bring the institution into contempt, and therefore it is rather dangerous to add that portion. That is why I slightly hesitate to support the amendment.

"Sir, while perhaps the question of immorality is provable in a Court of Law, the latter portion, 'bringing the institution into contempt' is more difficult of definition. But, it is the Court's decision that will prevail ultimately, I think, one may support this amendment with some hesitation."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, this is the third or fourth occasion on which my hon. Friend Sri T. Viswanatham has raised objection to morality clauses. He moved certain identical amendments once in connection with the trustees and religious institutions, hereditary and non-hereditary, and then in connection with the trustees of area committees, etc. My hon. Friend wants to add the words 'that a person leading an immoral life and bringing the institution into contempt' at the end of the sub-clause (d). Nobody will raise any objection to the propriety of a matadhipathi being removed because of his immoral conduct, or conduct which would bring the institution into contempt, because the sacredness and sanctity of the institution depends upon the integrity and morality of the head of the institution. So, I do not think anybody will object to the object of the amendment. But at the same time, it is difficult to prove what a moral life is, and to define the term 'bringing an institution into contempt.' These should not be left so vague. A person may have a very bad reputation of leading an immoral life, though as a matter of fact, he may be leading quite a moral life. It is easy to spread scandals against persons occupying such positions, but they may or may not be true or capable of being proved in a Court of Law. In this clause we have provided that his conviction for any offence involving moral turpitude should be a ground for moving the Court to removing him from his office. I think that is enough and will cover this intention also. It is not possible to add these words, because they are very vague and uncertain. That is why I cannot accept the amendment."

24th November 1950]

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, the clause is a masterpiece of uncertainties when it refers to neglect of duty and physical or mental defect or infirmity rendering him unfit to be a trustee. All these the Hon. the Minister considers clear and precise, but he considers 'leading an immoral life and bringing the institution into contempt' as too vague. That is an argument which passes the understanding of any man of good reason and sound judgment. I submit that it is not so vague. I have quoted seven decisions in this regard, where persons have been dismissed from the office of matadhipatis on account of their immoral life. I gave the decisions of the High Court. It is not anybody's opinion. They are not the decisions of District Munsifs or District Judges. They are the decisions of the Calcutta and Madras High Courts. The Commissioner is not going to dismiss him, but he will only take the matter to the Court. The Court will decide whether the person is leading an immoral life or not. There is nothing uncertain in the amendment. Let the Hon. the Minister reject it if he wants to but not on the ground of uncertainty."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

'In sub-clause (1) (d) add at the end the words "or for leading an immoral life and bringing the institution into contempt".'

The amendment was lost.

Sub-clause (2).

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"This is a very troublesome sub-clause, Sir. It involves an important principle. Just as in a nursery song—

'Simple Simon met a pie-man. He put his thumb in the plum
. . . . And said what a good boy am I?'

the Government here have removed the word 'subject to the control of the Government', etc., in the other provisions but here they say that two gentlemen having an interest may appeal to the Government against the refusal of the Commissioner to give his consent. In the other place they have stated that any two persons having interest could go to the Court only after they had obtained in writing the consent of the Commissioner. It looks the Government want to reserve the power to themselves. When the Commissioner refuses to give his consent, these persons have to go to the corridors of the Secretariat. Where is the necessity to do so? Persons having interest in the matter will not have the heart to go to the corridors of Fort St. George and hang on the Government's coat tails. In respect of their own institutions, in their own local areas, and maintained by their own denomination in proper condition, should they not be given the right of going to the Court of Law praying that this matadhipati is leading an immoral life? From the beginning the Government

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—“ Mr. Speaker, Sir, when the hon. Member supported hon. Mr. Viswanatham's amendment 'or for leading an immoral life and bringing the institution into contempt', he stated that he was supporting the amendment, because it was the court that would decide the question. My answer to his argument is that sub-clause (1) gives the reasons on which a matadhipati can be removed by a court. He cannot be removed by the Commissioner's whims and fancies. The Commissioner only initiates the proceedings, and the court will decide the case. The hon. Member Mr. Bhashyam said that under sub-clause (1) (c) a man might not be willing to exhibit his profession of the Hindu religion, but he will be giving instruction in any particular tenet or philosophy of Hinduism. When it can be a tenet of Hinduism or tenet of philosophy, tenet of math also has got a meaning. That is all I can say, Sir.”

Clause 57 was put and carried.

12th-September 1950] [Sri M. S. Pattabhiramiah]

It is quite essential that we should take note of all these things. We should not ignore the existence of these differences in our religion.

“ I then wish to point out that what is stated to be a salient improvement in the present Bill is not really an improvement. I refer to what is called the third salient improvement, that is, the restriction of the scope for litigation and the consequent wastage of the funds of religious institutions. In this connexion the Hon. Minister has stated in his speech as follows:—

‘ We have removed the right to go to Courts in the following matters, which are all allowed under the present Act :—

- (i) Appointment and removal of hereditary trustees ;
- (ii) Fixing of dittams, or standard scales of expenditure in temples ;
- (iii) Utilization of surplus funds of religious institutions ;

“ With regard to item (i) above, that is, appointment and removal of trustees, a point made by some of the speakers including the Leader of one of the Opposition Parties is worthy of being taken into consideration. We should be very careful in this matter and we cannot leave it in the hands of a Government servant.

“ With regard to item (ii), that is, fixing of dittams, or standard scales of expenditure in temples, will the Commissioners be people who have studied the rituals of Panchathantra, etc., systems? Will the study of these texts be prescribed as qualification for a Commissioner? If this is done and if the Members of the Area Committees are tested in this respect, I have no objection to the present provision.

“ Coming to the question of utilization of surplus funds of religious institutions, they may be utilized for purposes which are not diametrically opposed to the spirit and intention of the original donor. It is, of course, open to the Government to enact any legislation they like but it should be seen that those laws do not go against the moral laws prevalent in the land. Therefore, I consider this change is not at all an improvement in this Bill. I hope suitable amendments will be brought forward and the Bill will be made more acceptable to the people.

Sub-clause (1).

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—Mr. Speaker, Sir. I beg to move—

'That in sub-clause (1), for the words "the Assistant Commissioner may take such steps and pass such orders as he thinks proper for", substitute the words "the Commissioner may apply to the Court for orders regarding".'

This is a proposition which I have been pressing and I cannot, of course, advance any new arguments in support of it nor can the Hon. Minister advance any new arguments to reject it. But, anyway I move it, Sir, and he may oppose it."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—Mr. Speaker, Sir. I second the amendment. This is a matter which affects the religious institutions most intimately. With regard to the succession to the trusteeship, while the section does not make any arrangements for filling up vacancies, it does say, when there is a dispute, what the Commissioner or Assistant Commissioner can or cannot do. When a vacancy occurs, it has to be filled up. If, according to the Government or the Commissioner, the person in charge of an institution is unable to discharge his functions properly, I think the word 'functions' is properly used in this section as it was used in section 57, what are the arrangements to be made in respect of this matter? If it is an urgent matter, I can understand some step being taken by the Commissioner or Assistant Commissioner or other officer, for getting things done for the purpose of carrying on the business. But, the question arises when it is a permanent vacancy, in case a person is mentally unsound or physically defective, etc., what should be done, for his removal. He cannot be removed because the Court has to give an order whether he should be removed or not. Therefore, the question in all these cases is that one has to go to a Court of law regarding what steps should be taken. Supposing that a person is not discharging his functions properly, or that he is a minor or that there is a dispute respecting the person who is entitled to act as such guardian, or for other reasons, the matter has got to go to a court of law for the purpose of fixing a successor unless the community or the denomination as such according to the custom or usage appoint the successor. So, if the head of a math has made a nomination, the question is whether the nominated person can be appointed because there are cases where nominations are made, such nominations are disputed and the question is before a court of law.

"Next is the question of election by the sishyas. There also it is a question of nomination because the sishyas have to agree and make a nomination and this is again difficult. Therefore, in all these matters, when the matter is before the court pending final orders, to say that the Commissioner may take upon himself and make temporary orders seems to be wholly bad.

I have quoted seven decisions in this regard, where persons have been dismissed from the office of matadhipatis on account of their immoral life. I gave the decisions of the High Court. It is not anybody's opinion. They are not the decisions of District Munsifs or District Judges. They are the decisions of the Calcutta and Madras High Courts. The Commissioner is not going to dismiss him, but he will only take the matter to the Court. The Court will decide whether the person is leading an immoral life or not. There is nothing uncertain in the amendment. Let the Hon. the Minister reject it if he wants to but not on the ground of uncertainty."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

'In sub-clause (1) (d) add at the end the words "or for leading an immoral life and bringing the institution into contempt".'

The amendment was lost.

Sub-clause (2).

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"This is a very troublesome sub-clause, Sir. It involves an important principle. Just as in a nursery song—

"Simple Simon met a pie-man. He put his thumb in the plum
. . . . And said what a good boy am I?"

the Government here have removed the word 'subject to the control of the Government', etc., in the other provisions but here they say that two gentlemen having an interest may appeal to the Government against the refusal of the Commissioner to give his consent. In the other place they have stated that any two persons having interest could go to the Court only after they had obtained in writing the consent of the Commissioner. It looks the Government want to reserve the power to themselves. When the Commissioner refuses to give his consent, these persons have to go to the corridors of the Secretariat. Where is the necessity to do so? Persons having interest in the matter will not have the heart to go to the corridors of Fort St. George and hang on the Government's coat tails. In respect of their own institutions, in their own local areas, and maintained by their own denomination in proper condition, should they not be given the right of going to the Court of Law praying that this matadhipati is 'leading an immoral life? From the beginning the Government have had always this view that they must exercise patronage at every stage from morning till evening. Therefore, this proposition which is based upon that idea, should go. This sub-clause should go root and branch. That is why, Sir, I move—

'Delete sub-clause (2).'

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"I second the amendment, Sir. I oppose this sub-clause on a different ground altogether. I put it on the ground that the Government have washed their hands of any superintendence or supervision of the religious institutions where any scheme for the religious institution is settled. When they really abjure all interests in the religious institutions, why this power over small matters? When the Commissioner finds it not possible to give the necessary consent, let the Government leave the matter at that. The Commissioner is the Government's own trusted man. They have confidence in him. Why should the Government say, 'no, no; the Commissioner may not have examined the case fully; he may not act correctly'. Let the Commissioner have the final say in the matter. The Government have not accepted our amendment to the effect that the Commissioner shall not interfere. But the Government say that the Commissioner should have powers of interference. If the Commissioner should have that power, why should the Government again say that the matter may be taken to Government if the Commissioner refuses to give his consent. This only betrays want of confidence in their own Commissioner. This is wholly bad from many points of view, and, therefore, this sub-clause should go. Let the Government throw the whole responsibility on the Commissioner and let not the Government at every stage obstruct the good administration of the maths."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, both the hon. Members Mr. Bhashyam and Mr. Viswanatham are contradicting absolutely what they said previously. Memories are short, Sir. The hon. Member Mr. Viswanatham moved an amendment to sub-clause (1). The amendment is to delete the words 'and having obtained the consent in writing of the Commissioner'. He asked why should two persons take the consent of the Commissioner and why not they go direct to the court. He stated that the consent of the Commissioner was not at all necessary, and that the Commissioner would only be fettering the persons thereby. The amendment was not accepted, and that sub-clause was passed. We want this sub-clause to remain so that any improper refusal by the Commissioner to give his consent to the persons to appeal to the court may be set right by the Government. Both the hon. Members oppose this sub-clause also. It is a very curious argument, which I cannot understand. I oppose the amendment."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, my argument is supposed to be curious. With all the clarity of expression I possible I have put my argument. If my argument is considered curious, I cannot any more help it or make it less curious. I leave it to the vote of the House."

24th November 1950] [Sri T. Viswanatham]

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

'Delete sub-clause (2).'

The amendment was lost.

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, so far as the main clause 57 is concerned, I say that it really gives power to persons to take the matter to a court of law. The items mentioned in (a) and (b) of sub-clause (1) are very difficult of being worked out. Sub-clause (1) (c) says 'his having ceased to profess the Hindu religion or the tenets of the math'. Having ceased to profess the Hindu religion and converted himself to the Christian faith, he may say that he is professing the tenets of the math. Who is to decide whether he is professing the tenets of the math? I can understand if he practises. For instance, if a Vaishnavaita matadhipati ceases to put on namam, when as a matter of fact, he is practising the Hindu religion, how are the Government going to dive into the mind of that matadhipati and say whether he is professing the religion of the institution over which he is presiding? This is wholly unworkable. This item is very difficult of being put into force. Sub-clause (1) (f) says 'persistent and wilful default by him in discharging his duties or functions' under this Act or any other law'. This is so wide, vague and indefinite. Any Commissioner can come and haul up any matadhipati for persistent and wilful default by him in the discharge of his duties. Sir, I am a Vaishnavaita. I go to a Vaishnava matadhipati and ask him to give me Mudradaranam. I complain that he has not performed his function well, and that he merely passed the mudra instrument by my shoulders. How is this to be decided? The words 'in discharging his duties or functions' are indefinite and will place the matadhipati at the tender mercies of the Commissioner. Instead of respecting matadhipatis, the Government are treating them as their own servants. The Commissioner will put on the regalia and he will be the presiding deity over the matadhipati. All his orders will have to be carried out, and if he does not obey the orders, he will be guilty of wilful default. This sub-clause (1) (f) is a very mischievous clause. I myself would have moved amendments to this sub-clause. But I gave notice of an amendment to omit the very chapter on maths, and, therefore, I did not give notice of any amendment to this sub-clause. If the Commissioner is not inclined in favour of the matadhipati, or if the matadhipati does not appoint any of the nominees of the Commissioner, the matadhipati will be charged with persistent and wilful default in discharging his duties. All these things will certainly come under this sub-clause. It leaves such large room for mischief to be done by the Commissioners, even if they are the best of men. So, I oppose clause 57."

[24th November 1950]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—“ Mr. Speaker, Sir, when the hon. Member supported hon. Mr. Viswanatham's amendment ‘ or for leading an immoral life and bringing the institution into contempt ’, he stated that he was supporting the amendment, because it was the court that would decide the question. My answer to his argument is that sub-clause (1) gives the reasons on which a matadhipati can be removed by a court. He cannot be removed by the Commissioner's whims and fancies. The Commissioner only initiates the proceedings, and the court will decide the case. The hon. Member Mr. Bhashyam said that under sub-clause (1) (c) a man might not be willing to exhibit his profession of the Hindu religion, but he will be giving instruction in any particular tenet or philosophy of Hinduism. When it can be a tenet of Hinduism or tenet of philosophy, tenet of math also has got a meaning. That is all I can say, Sir.”

Clause 57 was put and carried.

THE MADRAS HINDU RELIGIOUS AND CHARITABLE
No. 10 OF 1949)—cont.

25th November 1950]

Sub-clause (1).

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—“ Mr. Speaker, Sir. I beg to move—

This is a proposition which I have been pressing and I cannot, of course, advance any new arguments in support of it nor can the Hon. Minister advance any new arguments to reject it. But, anyway I move it, Sir, and he may oppose it.”

SRI K. BHASHYAM :—“ Mr. Speaker, Sir. I second the amendment. This is a matter which affects the religious institutions most intimately. With regard to the succession to the trusteeship, while the section does not make any arrangements for filling up vacancies, it does say, when there is a dispute, what the Commissioner or Assistant Commissioner can or cannot do. When a vacancy occurs, it has to be filled up. If, according to the Government or the Commissioner, the person in charge of an institution is unable to discharge his functions properly, I think the word ‘ functions ’ is properly used in this section as it was used in section 57, what are the arrangements to be made in respect of this matter? If it is an urgent matter, I can understand some step being taken by the Commissioner or Assistant Commissioner or other officer, for getting things done for the purpose of carrying on the business. But, the question arises when it is a permanent vacancy, in case a person is mentally unsound or physically defective, etc., what should be done, for his removal. He cannot be removed because the Court has to give an order whether he should be removed or not. Therefore, the question in all these cases is that one has to go to a Court of law regarding what steps should be taken. Supposing that a person is not discharging his functions properly, or that he is a minor or that there is a dispute respecting the person who is entitled to act as such guardian, or for other reasons, the matter has got to go to a court of law for the purpose of fixing a successor unless the community or the denomination as such according to the custom or usage appoint the successor. So, if the head of a math has made a nomination, the question is whether the nominated person can be appointed because there are cases where nominations are made, such nominations are disputed and the question is before a court of law.

“ Next is the question of election by the sishyas. There also it is a question of nomination because the sishyas have to agree and make a nomination and this is again difficult. Therefore, in all these matters, when the matter is before the court pending final orders, to say that the Commissioner may take upon himself and make temporary orders seems to be wholly bad.

THE MADRAS LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Saturday, the 25th November 1950.

The House met in the Assembly Chamber, Fort St. George, at eleven of the clock, Mr Speaker (THE HON. SRI J. SIVASHANMUGAM PILLAI) in the Chair.

THE MADRAS HINDU RELIGIOUS AND CHARITABLE ENDOWMENTS
BILL, 1949 (L.A. BILL NO. 10 OF 1949)—cont.

Clause 58.

MR. SPEAKER :—“ The motion is—

‘ That clause 58 do stand part of the Bill.’ ”

[Sri K. Bhashyam] [25th November 1950]

"I therefore submit, Sir, that in the present case it is much better if resort is had to a court of law. The Commissioner is after all a political animal. Because he is controlled by a political body he is a political animal. Therefore, in these cases it is necessary that one should be able to go to a court of law. The amendment of Sri Viswanatham is very reasonable. Therefore, I second it and it may be accepted."

SRI V. M. RAMASWAMI MUDALIYAR:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir. Mr. Bhashyam and Mr. Viswanatham have advanced very plausible arguments. The hon. Sri Bhashyam in his argument said where a court is seized of the matter, how can the Commissioner interfere. I believe reading clause 58 as it stands, it contemplates a case where the court is not seized of the matter. I will give an illustration. Suppose a trustee is a minor or there is no legally constituted guardian or by reason of unsoundness of mind, the head of a math has to take some action. You cannot imagine that these will be taken to a court of law without delay. Nobody takes them to a court of law without consultation. Then what is to happen during the interval? Are these to be in the air all the time in an unsettled condition. Therefore, some action has to be taken as a temporary measure to vest some power with the Commissioner."

"With regard to the line of succession and so on, I am sure, Sir, this clause does not provide for or interfere with the line of succession that may be in vogue or in force in any particular math. Therefore, the line of succession is not interfered at all. For example, in a particular math the line of succession is by nomination. In some cases it is by election amongst the disciples. Therefore, the succession of matadhipathi is not interfered at all."

"So, as a temporary measure some provision must be there. And if the court is seized of the matter, this cannot be left in the vacuum as I said and some provision must be made by somebody for the administration of the math during the interval. If the question regarding line of succession is before a court and there is some representation to the court that the Commissioner's order is not proper, the Court may give directions to the Commissioner that those things are not proper. I do not think that there is anything which cannot be remedied by a court even if the Commissioner acts upon this provision."

SRI T. K. T. N. R. TATACHARI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, in opposing this amendment, I should like to point out that the clause as it stands does not interfere as my hon. Friend Sri V. M. Ramaswami Mudaliar has said, with any dispute as to succession being taken to a court of law. It only provides for the temporary custody and safeguarding of the properties of the institution as well as its endowments. It does not seek to install the Assistant Commissioner as matadhipathi as my hon. Friend Sri K. Bhashyam hurled across the table. I will give you an instance very much nearer home to me. I can cite the case of the Hathiramji math where the Mahanth died a few years back and where there has been a dispute as to succession; agreement was reached between two persons that one should be the senior Mahanth and the other junior Mahanth. The Board had appointed a certain person to act as a temporary trustee of the math till the question of succession was settled. It having been settled this way there were about Rs. 2½ lakhs in the personal chest of the deceased Mahanth and the Board said that they had no other option under the Act but to hand over the amount to one of the heirs, and so it was handed over to the senior Mahanth, but because they had not come to any terms and there was a lot of dispute in the math the money is alleged to have been frittered away and still the question of succession has not yet been settled."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"On a point of Order, Mr. Speaker, that matter is still sub judice, and I may say that I am appearing in that case for one of the parties, and therefore, the hon. Member need not cite it as a case in point."

SRI T. K. T. N. R. TATACHARI:—"I may submit, Sir, that it is not sub judice. I am not speaking about the question of succession at all. I am only speaking about what has happened to the property of the math, when the Board was not having the power to deal with the question and to make some immediate arrangements for the temporary custody of the property. But if the Commissioner had the power to make such arrangements immediately after the old Mahanth's death, there would have been no dispute at all. That is the point that I am trying to make out."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"It is not the question of succession that is in dispute in court, but it is only about the right to the amount of Rs. 2½ lakhs that is supposed to have been frittered away, that is a matter under adjudication before the Court, and I am only saying that my hon. Friend without knowing the actual facts is referring to it and saying that somebody has frittered it away, and all that. Let him take the information from me that it is sub judice and stop referring to it."

SRI T. K. T. N. R. TATACHARI:—"On a point of personal explanation, Sir, I have not referred as to who has frittered it away and how. All I said was that there is a dispute about the property and that one party was saying that it was frittered away by the other while the other was saying that it was not frittered away. My point was that there would have been no chance for any such dispute if power had been given to the Assistant Commissioner to make immediate arrangements for the temporary custody and safeguarding of the property. That was all the point that I was trying to make out."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I have only to re-read the clause to show whether all the fears which are anticipated by my hon. Friend Sri K. Bhashyam are justified."

My hon. Friend Sri T. Viswanatham said that he did not want to say anything more as he had already made his argument in this matter so many times and that there was nothing more for him to say by way of reply to my reply. But my hon. Friend Sri K. Bhashyam kicked up a ghost and expressed with so much force what the consequences would be if this clause is allowed to remain in the Bill as it is without the amendment being accepted. Sir, this is what the clause says—

‘When there is a vacancy in the office of a trustee, and there is a dispute respecting the right of succession to such office, or when the trustee is a minor and has no legally constituted guardian fit and willing to act as such, or when the trustee is by reason of unsoundness of mind or other mental or physical defect or infirmity unable to discharge the functions of the trustee, the Assistant Commissioner may take such steps and pass such order as he thinks proper for the temporary custody and protection of the endowments of the math or of the specific endowment, as the case may be and shall report the matter forthwith to the Commissioner.’

“Mr. Bhashyam fears that in that case the Assistant Commissioner will be the matadhipathi for all practical purposes. When it has been specifically said that it is only for the temporary custody and protection of the endowment of the math that the Assistant Commissioner will take such steps or pass such order as he thinks proper, I do not think that he need entertain any such fears that the Assistant Commissioner would become the matadhipathi himself. If there is a dispute, the Commissioner has got the right to move the court to settle the dispute. Suppose there is a minor, who is entitled to become a trustee, certainly if there is a legally constituted guardian, he will be appointed to the post. But if there is a dispute respecting the person who is entitled to act as such guardian or when the trustee is, by reason of unsoundness of mind or other mental or physical defect or infirmity unable to discharge the functions of the trustee, then there must necessarily be an interregnum till the suit is decided and a legally constituted guardian or another trustee takes the place of the original trustee, and it is for this interregnum; that we are giving the necessary power to the Assistant Commissioner to make arrangements for the temporary custody and safeguarding of the endowments of the math. There is absolutely no fear that the Assistant Commissioner would get into the shoes of the matadhipathi himself. In the instance cited by my hon. Friend, Sri Tatachari, it was stated that after the death of the former Mahanth, there was some cash left by him, and if there had been some machinery provided in the Act to take charge of the property under temporary custody and protection, the dispute would not have arisen at all. Here we have also provided that the Assistant Commissioner shall report the matter forthwith to the Commissioner and that upon the receipt of that report, the Commissioner, after making such inquiry as he deems necessary is satisfied that an arrangement for the administration of the math and its endowments or of the specific endowment, as the case may be, is necessary, he shall make such appointment and arrangements as he thinks fit until the disability of the trustee ceases or another trustee succeeds to the office, as the case may be.’ My hon. Friend Sri T. Viswanatham wants that instead of the Commissioner making the temporary appointment of a trustee, he should apply to the Court for orders regarding the temporary custody and protection of the endowments and that it is the Court that should be asked to appoint a Receiver to look after the administration of the math and its endowments. I submit, Sir, that this will entail unnecessary delay and there will be nobody who will be in charge of the endowments during the interregnum that I have pointed out. The next clause says that in making the appointment, the Commissioner shall have due regard to the claims of the disciples of the math. Nobody can say how the disciples will view, if a Receiver is appointed by the court.”

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—“I am sorry, Sir, I am not able to follow the line of reasoning of the Hon. Minister for Law. If you refer to clause 57, which we have already passed, you will understand why it is that I want the amendment here.

“One of the grounds on which the Commissioner can go to a court for the removal of a trustee from office, is that he must be of unsound mind or that he must be suffering from any physical or mental defect or infirmity which renders him unfit to be a trustee. In such a case, you will see that the court is already in possession of the matter, because the Commissioner is compelled to go before a court for the removal of the trustee under clause 57. Now in the next succeeding clause, namely clause 58, you provide the very same ground, for the Commissioner to make interim arrangement for custody of the properties and for the appointment of a temporary trustee to look after the administration of the math. I therefore submit that this clause conflicts with clause 57 which we have already passed. Sir, we are aware of some of the practices in courts. When the court is in possession of all these facts, and is seized of the matter, how can the Commissioner make arrangements for the custody and protection of the endowments, and appoint a temporary trustee, without the orders of the court. The court is the statutory authority in this matter. So when we are drafting these clauses, we must see that there is no mutual conflict between one clause and another. If it is really the intention of the Government that the Commissioner should take direct control of the maths without reference to the court, then they must say so. As a matter of fact, this clause is quite unnecessary, in my opinion. A person who goes to the court knows that it is the duty of the court to pass interim orders, before the final appointment of the trustee takes place. Here, in these clauses, the Commissioner is not in a position to follow these suits. It may be that the Assistant Commissioner may not be aware that there is a suit pending in the court for the removal of a trustee under clause 57 (1) (b), and under clause 58, the Commissioner may catch hold of the Assistant Commissioner and ask him ‘Why have you not taken action earlier? This clause says that you must make temporary arrangements for the custody and protection of the property of the math. What arrangements have you made for that?'. Why create all these difficulties unnecessarily? There is no use saying that these are unreasonable things and will not happen at all, and that we are simply kicking up a ghost. Now sir, let me read clause 58. It says—

'When a vacancy occurs in the office of the trustee of a math . . . and there is a dispute respecting the right of succession to such office, or when the trustee is a minor, etc., etc., or when the trustee is by reason of unsoundness of mind or other mental or physical defect or infirmity unable to discharge the functions of the trustee, the Assistant Commissioner may take such steps and pass such order as he thinks proper for the temporary custody and protection of the endowments of the math, etc.'

"In clause 57 (1) (b) for exactly the same reason, the Commissioner is asked to go to the court for removal of the trustee, and in this clause, the Commissioner is asked to make temporary arrangements to fill up the vacancy. If any amendment is accepted, the conflict goes. If it is not accepted, I would at least request the Hon. Minister to drop clause 58 altogether, because when the court is already seized of the matter it would be its duty to make interim arrangements."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"Sir, I think the amendment is absolutely unnecessary and in my opinion, it is wrong. There is no inconsistency between clause 57 and clause 58. I would once again request my hon. Friend to take up clauses 57 and 58 and read them very carefully. Clause 58 says—

'When a vacancy occurs in the office of the trustee of a math or specific endowment attached to a math and there is a dispute respecting the right of succession to such office . . .'

Therefore, this clause postulates two conditions, namely, that there should be a vacancy in the post of a trustee and also that there should be a dispute as to who is to be the successor. But that is not so in clause 57. I would request my hon. Friend to re-read clause 57. It says—

'The Commissioner, or any two or more persons having interest and having obtained the consent in writing of the Commissioner may institute a suit in the court to obtain a decree for removing the trustee of a math or a specific endowment attached to a math, for any one or more of the following reasons, namely :—

(b) his suffering from any physical or mental defect or infirmity which renders him unfit to be a trustee.'

"Here, there is already a trustee in office, and clause 57 provides some of the grounds on which the Commissioner can file a suit to remove the trustee and one of the grounds is that he is suffering from any physical or mental defect or infirmity which renders him unfit to be a trustee. The dispute is not as to the succession of a trustee to a place which has been vacant, but to the removal of a trustee who is already in office. In clause 58, the matter is already before the court, while clause 57 furnishes one of the grounds for taking the matter to a court. Clause 58 provides for arrangements to be made during the interim period to safeguard the property and to carry on the administration of the math, till the question of final succession is decided by the court. Even otherwise, the same contingency might occur, namely, when the court closes for the summer vacation, the trustee's place cannot be left unfilled as the math has got to be administered and its properties safeguarded. Therefore, I cannot accept the suggestion of my hon. Friend Sri T. Viswanatham to drop this clause altogether or to accept his amendment, because it is absolutely unnecessary."

MR. SPEAKER :—"The amendment is—

'In clause 58, sub-clause (1), for the words "the Assistant Commissioner may take such steps and pass such order as he thinks proper for", substitute the words, "the Commissioner may apply to the court for orders regarding".'

The amendment was lost.

[25th November 1950]

THE MADRAS HINDU RELIGIOUS AND CHARITABLE ENDOWMENTS
BILL, 1949 (L.A. BILL NO. 10 OF 1949)—DISCUSSION—cont.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The hon. Member Mr. Viswanatham will now move his amendment to clause 58."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I am not moving my amendments to sub-clauses (1), (2) and (3)."

Sub-clause (2).

SRI K. R. KARANTH:—"Sir, I move—

'In sub-clause (2), delete the words "appointment and".'

While I am prepared to agree with the Hon. the Minister that some temporary arrangement has to be made—till the court might appoint somebody as receiver unfortunately the wording here does not help us in that respect. The wording is defective. There may be cases of death or insanity of the trustee, and there must be some temporary arrangement. But there must be something to show when this temporary arrangement must come to an end. I am pointing out the defect of the wording here. Even though it may be a case of minor, which will run on for 15 years to come, the question is whether the Commissioner, without any appeal against his order, should have the right of appointing anybody for 15 years? I say it should not be. I can understand some temporary arrangement till the parties establish their claims in a court of law. The other defective wording in this sub-clause is 'or another trustee succeeds to the office'. The appointment of a receiver will not arise if it had been stated 'he shall make such arrangements as he thinks fit'. The word 'appointment' is likely to be misunderstood. It may mean the appointment not merely of an interim trustee. If it had been stated that an interim trustee may be appointed, I have no objection. I can understand that in cases where there are deaths, the Deputy Commissioner makes some temporary arrangement. There will also be cases where fights will be going on for succession to that office. Some temporary arrangement will have to be made. But it is not a thing to be given to the Commissioner finally. In this sub-clause it is stated 'he shall make such appointment and arrangements as he thinks fit'. I do not know whether appointment of a permanent nature will be made. The language is again defective when the sub-clause says 'until the disability of the trustee ceases'. The trustee may be one year old, and for 17 years to come, there is no power of appeal under the whole sub-clause against what the Commissioner does. Then the next wording is still more defective. It is 'or another trustee succeeds to the office'. My suggestion to the Government is this. I quite agree with the Government that the Commissioner shall make such arrangements as he thinks fit until the disability of the trustee ceases or a proper appointment or provision is made by a court of law. If the sub-clause says so, I do not have the least objection. But it is not clear, whether the Commissioner can make an appointment for 15 or 20 years. If by law we give the Commissioner power to make an appointment as he thinks fit, until the disability ceases or another trustee succeeds, even the court will be precluded."

25th November 1950] [Sri K. R. Karanth]

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"I second the amendment, Sir."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"I am prepared to accept the amendment, Sir. The sub-clause, as amended, will read—

'... he shall make such arrangements as he thinks fit until the disability of the trustee ceases or another trustee succeeds to the office, as the case may be.'

SRI K. R. KARANTH:—"Even as it is, Sir, a further amendment is necessary to provide for cases of 'another trustee succeeds to the office'. A sub-clause may be necessary to provide for arrangements made by a court. I have given the substance of that clause now."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Are the Government accepting the amendment, Sir?"

SRI K. R. KARANTH:—"The amendment, Sir, is this—

'In sub-clause (2), delete the words "appointment and".'

In the printed list of amendments it is given as 'such appointment and'. The word, 'such' is a mistake, and, therefore, I seek to remove that word by my amendment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"The Government are accepting the amendment, Sir. The sub-clause will now read as follows:—

'... he shall make such arrangements ... as the case may be.'

SRI V. M. RAMASWAMI MUDALIYAR:—"Sir, the addition of the word 'interim' after the word 'such' may probably clear up the difficulties. The word 'interim' may be put there."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"The word 'interim' need not be there. I cannot accept that."

SRI V. M. RAMASWAMI MUDALIYAR:—"The addition of the word 'interim' is necessary, because the courts may intervene."

[25th November 1950]

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, I was trying to understand what the understanding between Mr. Karanth and the Hon. the Law Minister was. There was some discussion and the Hon. the Law Minister stated that he was accepting the amendment. The Hon. the Law Minister was not clear enough that he was accepting the amendment. We understand the amendment now."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

'In sub-clause (2) delete the words "appointment and".'

The amendment was carried.

Sub-clause (3).

SRI K. R. KARANTH:—"Sir, I move—

'In sub-clause (3), substitute the word "arrangement" for the word "appointment".'

"This is only a consequential amendment."

The amendment was duly seconded.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"We accept the amendment, Sir."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

'In sub-clause (3), substitute the word "arrangement" for the word "appointment".'

The amendment was carried.

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"Sir, the Government have accepted the amendment to sub-clause (3). The sub-clause will now read as follows: 'In making any arrangement under sub-section (2) . . . if any.' In sub-clause (3), the wording is not all-right. Let Government put in some other wording at the third-reading stage. I think the language employed is very bad."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"My point in accepting the amendment is this. There is sentimental objection to the use of the word 'appointment'. (Sri T. Viswanatham: 'There is no sentimental objection.') It may not be sentimental to the hon. Member Mr. Viswanatham. The sentiment is that matadhipathis should not be appointed. To avoid that misunderstanding I agreed that the word 'appointment' should go and 'arrangement' should be substituted."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, this clause is intended to make temporary or interim arrangement pending the rightful person being put in charge. Though it is stated so, it does not achieve the purpose because it does not compel the Commissioner to go to a court of law for getting a guardian appointed in one case or getting a person appointed in the place of a disabled person, or getting a person appointed till the claims of parties are settled. These three are referred to in this clause. Who is to go to the court of law? Is it the guardian or the person who really claims the property? If for any reason there is no claim and nobody comes forward for the purpose, because there is not enough property to go round, who is to go to the court of law? Only when there is property people come forward, and in other cases they do not. In such cases is it to be a dead weight on the Commissioner for all time? Should there not be some power for compelling the Commissioner to go to a court of law and get directions in this matter? "Till the legal successor is appointed, the Commissioner will make arrangements for the appointment of a trustee. During that period, if anybody wants, should he go to the Commissioner for mudhradharanam? Therefore, I would like the Government to reconsider the matter. The Hon. Law Minister thinks that I am against him on every matter and if I say anything which he thinks offensive to him, I withdraw those words and I ask him to consider this suggestion which I make, unaffected by any of those things. At some stage or other, I would like the matter to be placed before the court and if nobody else goes, at least the Commissioner should go to the Court of Law. Sir, suppose there is a minor matadhipathi and nobody cares for that *matadhipathi*ship in view of the number of difficulties in respect of that. (Raja Muthiah Chettiyar of Chettinad: 'Then the Government will take it over.') The Commissioner should take possession of all the properties. There may be a few disciples attached to the math. For a long period they may have to go without and spiritual help. This may go on for a number of years without anybody being in charge of the math except that the properties will be managed by the Commissioner. Therefore, is it not necessary that there should be some provision inserted in the clause itself that the Commissioner shall, within three months, six months or even one year, go to a Court of Law to get the necessary orders for the purpose of either getting a guardian appointed or the dispute about succession being settled, or if a person is disabled, for getting another person appointed in his place? If this is not provided for, this clause will be lopsided and it will be very difficult to work it. I think the Government also will get into difficulties in this matter."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, the clause says, 'when such vacancy cannot be filled up immediately. . . .'. The Hon. Minister says that the clause means that the proper claimants can go to the court of law and settle their claims. I will be very glad if he makes a specific provision that in these cases they may go to a court of law. It must be specifically provided or indicated here. It cannot be implied. No person can get any legal rights by mere implication. This is especially important when we are codifying the law with regard to religious endowments."

"Sir, there are several contingencies that may arise out of a vacancy occurring in the office of the trustee of a math or specific endowment attached to a math. One such is a dispute respecting the right of succession to such office. That means to say the dispute is before somebody. It should be before a court; it cannot be anywhere else. It must be settled by the court. Therefore, at the first stage we said that the court must pass interim orders. The second contingency is when the vacancy cannot be filled up immediately. It is really a master-piece of vagueness. The third contingency arises when the trustee is a minor. In all these cases the Commissioner can make arrangements until the disability of the trustee ceases. Suppose the person is only two or three years old. Does it mean that that arrangement should continue for fifteen years? The Hon. Minister said in his reply that it was not the intention but that the matter would be decided by the court. I want that he should make a specific provision that in these cases the court is empowered to issue interim orders. Otherwise, there will be a lot of difficulty. Sir, you must be aware of the decision of the High Court with regard to the appointment of a trustee. In 1946 the Religious Endowments Act was amended. Under the amended Act the Religious Endowments Board thought that the court was deprived of the power to appoint a trustee. The matter went up to the High Court. Notwithstanding the amendment of the Act by the insertion of section 75-A vesting that power of administration in the Board, the High Court decided that the Board had not the power to appoint the trustee but that it was the High Court that had the power of appointing him, trustee. Who will do it now? The Board in its administration reports also referred to this. Therefore, I think the word 'appoint' is a result of the matter having been taken up by the Board with the Government that this section should be amended and that the Board should be given the power of appointment. However, the Hon. Minister has, in my opinion, rightly accepted our amendment that the Commissioner should not have the power. Then somebody else must have the power. Who is that somebody else? It should be the court in our opinion, because notwithstanding any assertion, it is not merely when there is a dispute about the right of succession but when three other contingencies arise as envisaged in the clause that the matter goes to the court. The court must be seized of the matter and the Hon. Minister does not deny it. The Hon. Minister says that they have not ousted the jurisdiction of the court. My hon. Friend Sri V. M. Ramaswami Mudaliyar was good enough to suggest the words 'interim arrangements'. It would then be at least suggestive that there is some competent authority to make the final arrangements. But as promptly as it was suggested the Hon. Minister disagreed with it and did not accept it. I submit that it would be alright if it is said, 'interim arrangements pending orders to be issued by a court'. This must be done at one stage or other; otherwise there will be some conflict and we cannot simply say that by implication these powers will be exercised and that the Commissioner will obey the orders of the court. Now it is said that there will be arrangements. This arrangement may have sometimes to continue for 16 or 17 years under this amended clause, in the case of a minor. If it is the case of a man who is unable to discharge the functions of the trustee by reason of unsoundness of mind or other mental or physical defect or infirmity, then it will continue for 40 years or 50 years in some cases. Nobody knows how long it will continue. His unsoundness may increase in the meanwhile and this arrangement will continue. Under these circumstances, the Commissioner is not here compelled to go to a court of law. If the Commissioner is so inclined, he may make his own arrangements under clause 58 and never go to the court to remove this unsound man. There the difficulty arises. Of course, Hon. Sri Madhava Menon said that absolutely there was no conflict. Anyway let him think about it."

Clause 58, as amended, was put and carried.

Clause 59.

MR. SPEAKER :—"The motion is—

'That clause 59 do stand part of the Bill.'

Sub-clause (1).

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—"Sir, I move—

'That sub-clause (1) be deleted.'

"Sir, the question is who is to manage the properties of the math. On this point we have again and again referred to the fundamental rights. Here who is to manage? Of course, the word 'trustee' is mentioned. But what is he to do? He cannot do anything by himself. If there is a board of trustees, even that board cannot do anything. They can simply submit proposals for fixing the dittam or scale of expenditure. With regard to these things, maths or specific endowments attached to them may be of a varied nature; sometimes they may be secular or religious in nature, and the inter-relation is not easily to be ascertained. Under this clause, all the things must be done by the Commissioner himself. Therefore, I submit the trustees are practically ousted of their functions. Therefore, I move that this sub-clause be deleted."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI :—"Sir, in seconding the amendment, I wish to say that the Hon. Minister should note this. The language of this clause is highly objectionable. The trustee is not a head clerk. It is said that the trustee of every math may submit proposals. Will it not be dignified if it is said, 'The trustee of a math shall publish proposals fixing the dittam, etc.', or 'The trustee of a math shall be responsible for fixing the dittam and publish proposals . . . ? If we look at sub-clause (3), we shall see that absolute Secretariat language is employed. It is said that on a scrutiny of such proposals, the Commissioner may call for the remarks of the trustee as if he were a ten-rupee clerk in the office. At least it ought to be said in proper good language considering courtesy and culture. Firstly, this chapter begins with the trustee who is unsound in mind and then it reduces the trustee to the position of a clerk by saying that he shall submit proposals. I suggest the whole thing is against the dignity and culture of the House. If we really attach any value to Hindu culture, the whole of this must go. It is not as if Ministers write on a file and some other people use the language. Have they taken the Church of England Act for comparison of language? They do not use the very disrespectful language employed in this clause. I can understand this kind of language in any other matter. Even in the matter of Members of Parliament, the Constitution provides for very dignified language. Are not these people to be treated at least on our level? At least rearrange the whole thing; begin with something that will bless them and not kill them at the beginning. Do not think of vacancies on account of unsoundness of mind. (Laughter.)

MR. SPEAKER:—"The hon. Member is speaking on the whole Chapter."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"After having made clear how unsuitable the whole thing is, I come to the point, Sir. 'The trustee of a math or a specific endowment . . . may . . . submit to the Commissioner proposals . . . I object to it. Sir, it may be recast somewhat like this: 'The trustee of a math . . . may fix the dittam or scale of expenditure and then communicate to the Commissioner his proposals and may also publish them in the premises of the math.' Instead of that, why do they simply adopt the procedure as if he were a clerk or a routine secretary in regard to the heads of maths. This is what I object to."

MR. SPEAKER:—"Amendment moved—

'That sub-clause (1) be deleted.'"

SRI R. V. SWAMINATHAN:—"Sir, I entirely agree with the sentiment expressed by my hon. Friend Sri Varadachari that a matadhipathi should not be reduced to the level of a clerk. No doubt everybody will agree with it. It is true that the matadhipathi must be respected as much as an Archbishop of a Christian missionary. At the same time, we have to expect the same thing from the matadhipathi. He should also behave in a proper manner. According to the clause also, I do not think that a matadhipathi is to be treated as if he is a clerk. Here I do not know whether there is any clerk on a salary of Rs. 10.

"Now, the Commissioner will only scrutinize the procedure adopted with regard to fixation of dittam. The matadhipathi will have his clerks working under him. He is the head of the math. So, the clerks will only submit proposals to him. But as he is the head of the math, communications will ordinarily be addressed to him. That is all. For instance, we write a letter to the Hon. Speaker. That means the Hon. Speaker will open it and pass it on to the clerk for necessary action. Finally the Hon. Speaker will pass the draft or order.

"Suppose I want some papers, some literature or some extracts of statements from the Hon. Speaker and I apply to him for the same. The Hon. Speaker will not himself take the book, copy out the portion that I want and paste it and then go to the post office and post it to me. All this work will be done by his clerk. Immediately the Hon. Speaker receives my request, he will pass it on to the clerk who will attend to my request. Similarly, the matadhipathi himself is not going to attend to the administrative matters and somebody else will be attending to them. So I do not think that the matadhipathi will be reduced to the level of clerks by this clause. I therefore feel that this clause is absolutely necessary."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I do not propose to speak upon the refinement of language or indecency of expression and all that. We have become accustomed to such things and we have found that nothing is held sacred and everything which is sacred is sought to be brought into contempt in the market places and even in Legislative Councils and Legislative Halls. Therefore I am not surprised at the language used. But we are only pained to see that such things are taking place. Moreover the atmosphere is also filled with all sorts of discussions about the behaviour of trustees and heads of maths and other things. It is also filled with disrespect towards things which are considered to be very sacred. Coming to the point, so far as this clause is concerned, I can understand the dittam of a temple which is fairly well-known. In the case of a temple, everybody knows what the dittam is on festival and other important days. This dittam used to be followed for centuries now according to the established usage and custom. So everybody knows what the scale of expenditure is with regard to a temple. That is why we have already passed clause 56, relating to the fixation of scales of expenditure for temples. But with regard to a math, I would like to know what a dittam means. I do not understand how we can fix the scale of expenditure in the case of a math. It has been held that the income from the properties of a math can be disposed of by the matadhipathi for purposes connected with the math. Suppose a learned Pandit visits the math, and the head of the math presents a shawl or a silver vessel. This may not be found in the dittam. There are various other similar things also. The head of a math may wish to hold a conference of Pandits at any time. It is not as if he is going to hold this conference every year. So far as the dittam of a math is concerned, it is something which is very different from the dittam of a temple and absolutely new. Because everybody is conversant with the dittam of a temple, it should not be taken to mean that the dittam of a math is also the same. The dittam of a temple is a thing which might have been fixed by our forefathers centuries back. But I cannot understand the fixing of the dittam in the case of a math. In the old Act, there was appeal to courts provided when there was dispute with regard to the dittam of a temple. But that has been taken away. What usually happens in a math is this. The disciples of a math visit the math in large numbers in some months and in less numbers in some other months and may not visit at all in other months. Especially in auspicious months they visit the math in large numbers. So I am unable to understand how we can fix the dittam of a math which is contradictory to the principles of the maths. I can only say that the fixing of dittam in respect of maths betrays ignorance about these maths which cannot be easily excused. The trustee of a math has to submit to the Commissioner proposals for fixing the dittam. Further if the Commissioner was not satisfied with the dittam proposed by the trustee, he has to submit the proposals with his remarks to the Government and their orders will be final in respect of this matter. So the Government want to take powers to finalise the dittam amount in respect of the maths and fix the scale of expenditure in respect of the maths. Is it the way to treat the matadhipatis? Is it the way to deal with the properties of the maths which are intended for the purpose of imparting religious instruction? It is not like the worshippers going to a temple throughout the year. The maths are merely colleges of learning. There may be five students, six students, or ten students or even 600 students in a year. Therefore the Government cannot with any justification fix the dittam in respect of a math and I say it will be impossible to do so. Therefore, the Government should not take power to fix the dittam in respect of a math. They have already very many powers. If there is to be a regular budget, all these can be done. They can anticipate some expenditure and provide for it. If there were more visitors, they can provide for them. Persons who are conversant with the working of these maths will really be unable to understand the fixing of dittam for maths. When the old Act was passed, the Rajah of Panagal who was a clever and wise man in his wisdom exempted the maths from the fixation of dittam, etc., thereby avoiding the inconvenience and disputes in fixing the same. Fixing the scale of expenditure for educational purposes for a definite number and similar other things. I can understand. But I am unable to understand the fixing of a dittam in respect of a math."

SRI P. KANDASWAMI PILLAI:—"What is a dittam and what is a budget?"

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"I am surprised that Sri Kandaswami Pillai who wants to be an acharya of acharyas should ask what is a dittam. (Interruption.) But all the same I can clarify the position. I think I should explain that a dittam is a thing which has been established by usage in respect of a temple or other institution concerned, as to what amount of expenditure should be incurred on each particular occasion. We know that in temples

we have mahotsavams, brahmotsavams and other utsavams. We have also various mandahappadis and other things. What should be the amount that is to be spent on such occasions in a temple and other particulars with regard to these festivals are prescribed in a book or register, and one can easily find out these things. So far as these maths are concerned—I can only say with regard to the maths which I know and there may be persons who may know about all things—there is no question of any dittam. The properties and monies belonging to the maths are now in the hands of the matadhipathis who used to spend the income from the properties for purposes connected with the maths, and on anything which they may think proper. For example, he may hold conference of Pandits and he may present some valuables to Pandits or he may contribute something to Veda Patasalas. There are so many other things on which a matadhipati may wish to spend and which cannot be covered by the fixation of any specific dittam. Therefore the fixing of any dittam in respect of a math seems to be most incongruous to me and will not easily work."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, dittam is explained in the clause itself as the scale of expenditure in the institution and the amounts which should be allotted to the various objects connected with the institution. Dittam is the common language of the place. The amendment is to delete sub-clause (1). I think there is another amendment to delete sub-clause (2) also. There is no amendment to delete sub-clause (3). When sub-clauses (1) and (2) are deleted, sub-clause (3) will be hanging somewhere."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"It is a clerical omission. You can take it that sub-clause (3) may also be omitted."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"I was wondering myself what is to happen for sub-clause (3) when sub-clauses (1) and (2) are deleted. The objection of hon. Sri Varadachari is about the language. He was mainly complaining about the language and was asking, 'How will you ask a matadhipati to submit proposals to the Commissioner?'. I don't think we need read so much into the word 'submit'. After all, we are copying from the existing Act. It is not the first time when Sri Bhashyam sang the glory of the Rajah of Panagal. When the Rajah of Panagal passed that Act, I do not think he made any objection to the trustee's submitting proposals to the Commissioner. Even in the old Act, the word 'submit' has been used and we have only taken it from the old Act. Sir, there is no particular purposeful insult there. Sri Bhashyam referred to indecency of expression and all that. I do not know whether the hon. Member referred to the expression in this House or outside. He said that he was surprised at the attempts made to bring everything that is held sacred into contempt and all that. Why should he presume that there was any purposeful disrespect towards a matadhipati and all that? I can only say that it is nothing but an innocent following of the old Act. We are now amending the old Act, and are bringing certain provisions for certain purposes. In the new Act we have used certain identical words and phrases that are used in the existing Act. We can say that the trustee shall forward to the Commissioner proposals and there is nothing wrong in it. After all, we need not unnecessarily read into the meaning of the word 'submit'. When I address the hon. Members I use to say 'I submit'. Similarly, when the hon. Members address the House, they use the words 'I submit'. This cannot be taken to mean as submission in slavery and all that. 'Submit' is a word which is very commonly used and nobody need read too deep into it. As it is, the clause does not give any power to a trustee to alter anything arbitrarily. He has to send the proposals to the Commissioner. Again, it has been provided that the trustee should publish such proposals. This is very necessary as the public and others who have got an interest in the affairs of the maths should be in the know of things. After all, it is said that the trustees and the matadhipatis are ascetics and are supposed to be detached from the worldly affairs. That being the case, the properties attached to the maths will be managed by some manager or somebody in the name of the matadhipati. Let those people who manage these properties send proposals to the Commissioner and let those proposals be published so that people may know what exactly is the object of these proposals and also scrutinise the proposals and offer any suggestions that they may like to give to the Commissioner. That is why it has been provided that if any item in the scale of expenditure was at variance with the established usage of the institution, or was not justified by its financial position, then the Commissioner may refer the matter to the Government. Sir, we have to be very careful when large amounts and extensive properties are involved. The matadhipatis in their detachment may not be very careful about the management of these properties. (Sri V. M. Ramaswami Mudaliyar: Other people may get attached to these properties.) As hon. Sri Ramaswami Mudaliyar says, other people may get attached to these properties because of the detachment of the matadhipatis. This should be checked by having suitable provisions for adequate scrutiny of the proposals. So I cannot accept the deletion of sub-clause (1)."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, the Hon. Minister referred to the old Act. There it is said . . ."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The Hon. Minister referred to it in respect of the word 'submit'."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"I am referring it for some other reason. The Hon. Minister drew the attention of the House to that Act. I would also like to draw the attention of the House to the old Act for some other reason as I want to enlighten myself if not others. In the old Act it is said—

"The trustee of every math and excepted temple shall, in each year, submit to the Board before such date and in such form as the Board may require—

(a) a budget showing the probable receipts and disbursements of the following year, and

(b) a statement of the actual receipts and disbursements of the previous

25th November 1950] [Sri T. Viswanatham]

That is all what is said in the old Act, and there is nothing else so far as the maths are concerned. I was always propounding that the Commissioner should have the power of getting statutory information as to what is happening throughout the State. But here the tail is added and the sting is in the tail as in the case of the scorpion; it compels the trustee to submit proposals to the Commissioner for fixing the dittam or scale of expenditure under sub-clause (1) which is under discussion.

"The second sub-clause relates to the publication of the proposals and inviting objections. In the third sub-clause, the Commissioner sends his modifications to the Government and the Government pass their orders thereon which are final. We have gone two steps in advance of what is happening now under the existing Act. Under the existing Act, so far as the scale of expenditure of the maths is concerned, the interference by Government is not contemplated. But here it is not so. As my hon. Friend, Sri Bhasyam has explained, this dittam deals with almost the daily management of the math. If is expenditure incurred in the daily life of the institution. The trustees send his proposals to the Commissioner, the Commissioner sends them on to the Government with his objections or modifications, and the Government pass the final orders. I am asking, Sir, is this not management by the Government of the daily routine of the maths? Is it the matadhipati that is doing all this? This is the simple question, I put to the House. The Government will fix the budget for each of the 700 maths in this State and according to this clause, the Government will manage the daily routine of the maths. It is not the matadhipati that is expected to manage the properties of the math under this clause but it is the Government that seek to manage them. Sir, I submit this ultra vires of the Constitution. It is better, therefore, that all the three sub-clauses are omitted. Of course I have given notice of amendments to delete sub-clauses 1 and 2 only. But if they go, sub-clause 3 also goes automatically. Therefore, I press my amendment."

'Delete sub-clause (1).'"

The amendment was lost.

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"I am not moving my amendment to sub-clause (2), Sir."

SRI P. KANDASWAMI PILLAI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, it has been said that if clause 59 is retained, then all the maths in this State will be run by the Government. It is not a fact. It is a highly exaggerated fact, Sir. Just now, my hon. Friend Sri Viswanatham was saying that the trustee must submit the dittam to the Commissioner, that the Commissioner would scrutinise it and send it to the Government, that the Government would approve of it and that all this meant that the Government were running the maths themselves. Sir, it is not so. The chief object of the Bill is to prevent the several matadhipatis, who in the name of usage and custom squander money as they like, from misusing the funds, so that they may be useful to the society. The object is to ensure that the funds are spent in a proper way. Such being the case, Sir, we have naturally to control the expenditure incurred by the maths. We must know whether it is reasonable or bogus. I am openly using this word 'bogus' because there are very many people who say, 'we are spending two lakhs of rupees for feeding' and whom they feed, how they feed or do they really feed, no one knows. This is a matter for very serious consideration by every one in this House. We have achieved independence now and we must have control over all aspects of human life as far as possible. The Government must know how much they spend and whether they spend that amount according to established usage and custom. There is the Guru Pooja, i.e., the celebration of the birth day of the matadhipati according to the position of stars and they may have to spend a certain amount for it. There are like items of expenditure. All that I say is let the public know whether the matadhipatis are using the charities in the rightful way. Otherwise, the fair name that they have now (laughter) will go. The Commissioner is not given full powers in this matter. If the Commissioner feels that a particular item of expenditure is not justifiable, he has to write to the Government. Thus there is a second check. The Government will go through the proposals with an unbiassed mind and find out whether the expenditure is essential or not essential. Therefore, Sir, this clause is very important in the interests of the charities themselves. Some people think that it is only their monopoly to know everything about the maths. They think others know nothing about maths. They think 'what does Kandasami Pillai know about maths? We are Swayamacharya Purushas.' (Laughter.) Sir, they must take it that everybody knows something about maths. I am a Hindu. I have been brought up in a religious atmosphere right from my boyhood. I cannot simply swallow what others say because they are eminent lawyers. The Government simply say that they will set right matters where they are wrong. I do not talk with a biassed outlook. When I say this, I do so honestly and sincerely. I honestly feel that this clause must be in the Bill. It only says that the trustee should submit—if he does not want to submit, let him send (laughter)—his proposals and the Government will approve of them. Then the trustee is free to spend the money as he likes. There is nothing wrong in this position. The position of the matadhipatis will not be affected by any such provision. I look at the maths with as much reverence and respect with which I look at other religious institutions. Just like other institutions are under the control of the Government, so also will be the maths. The matadhipatis will have to send up their proposals just like the Collectors of districts or any other heads of departments send their reports to the Government. I say this only in the public interests and not with any personal end in view. This provision is included in the Bill with the best of intentions and no motives need be attributed to the Government in this matter."

SRI K. R. KARANTH :—" Sir, this seems to me to be a case for the Government to. Save me from my Friends. (Laughter.) I dissent from the previous speaker. With the achievement of Swaraj, our independence should be consistent with that of others also. It does not mean that merely because we have got independence we must interfere with the lives, properties and work of everybody. I do not think that any particular set of people have got a monopoly of the knowledge of maths. But all the same, we cannot forget the Constitution which gives certain rights to the people. That says that we cannot interfere with their fundamental rights. I for one have said more than once that the matadhipatis have no right to misappropriate. But they have got a right to spend the money according to usage and customs of the institution. If the clause has said that the proposals should be published by the matadhipati and the people can put in objections, it is all right. But it says that the Government shall finally give a decision. This seems to be the most objectionable feature of the clause from the Fundamental Rights point of view. In a secular State, I do not know how the Government can pass final orders in matters like this. And what is more, there is no provision that even the trustee will be heard by the Government. You will be pleased to see that in sub-clause 3 of clause 59 that the Government shall pass orders on the Commissioner's modified proposals and such orders shall be final. Not even the words 'after the trustee is heard' are there. I take it, however, Sir, that this is not the intention of the Government and that they will fill it up later. But what I object to is this. The usage and customs of the institution, are things to be left to the decision of Courts of law and not for the Government to decide? My hon. Friend, Sri Bhashyam, was perfectly right in saying that such things should be decided by Courts. Courts hear both the sides and decide them. Dittam is not a thing which can be easily stated so far as maths are concerned. In the case of temples it is different. There are regular ceremonies going on there from morning till evening, which have gone on and which are definite. But so far as the math is concerned, dittam is very difficult to state. My hon Friend, Sri Kandaswami Pillai asked what was dittam and what was budget. If he is pleased to see clause 75, he will understand what budget is. There, there is a provision that the matadhipati must give his budget. In my humble view, that would have been quite sufficient. There it says—

'The trustee of every religious institution shall before the end of March in each year, submit, in such form as may be fixed by the Commissioner, a budget showing the probable receipts and disbursements of the institution'

[Sri K. R. Karanth] [25th November 1950]

That will quite suffice for the purpose. Whereas it is possible for a temple to say what its expenditure would be on the ceremonies, etc., in the case of a math it is not. That is the initial difficulty and my hon. Friend, Sri Bhashyam, was right in saying that there was no such thing known as dittam in maths. There is no such thing as daily expenditure there. In some months, there may be no expenditure. Only in certain months, when a lot of disciples come, they may incur some expenditure. My hon. Friend, Sri Kandaswami Pillai doubted whether people were really fed at all. If Government were to manage the maths, they may have to employ inspectors also to verify whether people have actually been fed. A Government agent will become necessary to see how many were fed and how many ration cards obtained. This is the sort of interference I am against.

"Then, Sir, my second point is that under this clause the proposals are not to be made every year or for a particular year but for some time. If the finality in such matters should vest in the Government then it is certainly an interference which is rather too much. What I would say is, if, supposing the income of a math is Rs. 10,000 and if the matadhipati says, 'I shall spend Rs. 2,000 on certain ceremonies, Rs. 2,000 on feeding disciples and the rest on certain other things', he must be allowed to do so so long as he spends the money within the four corners of the usage of the institution. As the Constitution puts it, it is not open to the Government or the Commissioner under them to say to the matadhipati, 'you shall spend only so much'. It is not open to any person, for that matter, to say, 'you shall buy sugar, you shall not buy jag-gery'. This interference with every detail of administration is not good. Whether there is a minor difference or there is a serious difference of opinion between the trustee and the Commissioner, the matter must be left to Court of law to decide. Where a person for instance really feeds only 2,000 persons but puts the figure at 10,000, then certainly I would have no objection to that person being surcharged and sent to jail for two or three years. In certain months he feeds and in certain others he does not and the discretion must vest in him to do as he likes. Sir, in a secular State, there is no obligation that the Minister for Hindu Religious Endowments Board should be a Hindu. Under the Constitution, there is no obligation to this effect. According to the provisions of the Bill before us, it is only the Department that is to be created that should be manned by Hindu officers. So far as my knowledge goes, let me inform the Hon. Minister, there is no obligation under the Bill that the Minister holding this portfolio should be a Hindu. There is not one clause which says like so. If my Hon. Friend, Sri Roche Victoria, who is the Minister for Food, becomes the Minister for Hindu Religious Endowments tomorrow, there is nothing preventing him from becoming so either in the Bill or in the Constitution. If he become a Minister, is he to decide what shall be done and what shall not be done by a trustee? Will any other religion allow such a thing to happen? Merely because we are in this position and talk loosely sometimes, the Government cannot do like this. I do not say all the matadhipatis are good. A few may be bad. There are about 120 big maths in this State and I would like to know from hon. Member, how many of them are bad.

"It may be half-a-dozen or at the most ten. Is it more? Or I would like to know whether the whole body of them are rogues and rascals as it is supposed to be? I don't think so. For the sake of the few you cannot condemn the entire lot. By all means have a law and say that they should have correct accounts. If the accounts are false they would be punished. But it should not be said that the dittam which they prepare should be subject to the final decision of a Minister of the Government. Where there is difference of opinion, if that is a minor matter, let it be left to the discretion of the matadhipati."

MR. SPEAKER:—"I shall adjourn the House"

SRI K. R. KARANTH:—"I shall finish in a minute, Sir. If it is a major thing it should be left to a third party who could take into account the usages of the institution, the needs of the math and all these things. A Court can take a better decision than the Minister concerned. I am therefore opposed to the clause as it stands."

MR. SPEAKER:—"I adjourn the House now to meet again at 2-30 p.m."

The House then adjourned for lunch.

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, I have already referred to the undesirability of having this clause as one of the clauses of the Bill. It says that the trustee should in the first instance draw up the dittam. It has to be scrutinised by the Commissioner and any objections and suggestions received by him have also to be considered by him. The objections and suggestions have to come from 'any person having interest'. It is very difficult to decide who is 'a person having interest' it is a very wide definition.

"Then it is said that an order shall be passed having regard to the established usage of the institution and its financial position. So far as maths are concerned, there is no such thing as established usage of the institution in respect of this matter. Practically the income is spent at the discretion of the matadhipati. Therefore we cannot say that anything is 'at variance with the established usage of the institution'. Then the next thing is, 'is not justified by the financial position'. This is a matter which cannot be left to the Commissioner. I may tell you one case, Sir, and I hope my hon. Friend Sri Karanth will correct me if I am wrong. There are eight maths in Udipi and there is a pariyayam every two years. One of these maths is to be in charge of the pariyayam that year. Pariyayam means a large number of persons have to be fed and other ceremonies have to be gone through. It means a lot of expenditure. In fact every math prepares for the pariyayam for years prior to that. They gather firewood, rice and other grains necessary. In fact, in spite of the utmost care, the math is likely to borrow large sums of money for getting through the pariyayam period, that is the period during which the math is in charge of the Krishna math in Udipi. Thus the math has to incur debts. These debts are being wiped out during the period when the math is not in charge of the pariyayam. The matter came to a court of law and even went up to the Privy Council. The question arose whether the math can incur large expenditure beyond what may be called its budgetary income. It was held that the usage sanctioned such a thing and therefore the matadhipati was right in incurring such expenditure and that the creditors who advanced the money were entitled to be repaid. In regard to these matters the usage of the institution is the primary thing and not the opinion of the Commissioner or the Government as regards the financial position of the math. I have tried to show that there is no such thing as 'the established usage of the institution in respect of maths and even so far as established usages are concerned, they are not limited by the financial position'. It may be asked, what will happen if the math gets into debts. Generally an appeal goes forward from the matadhipati to the disciples of the math and they make the necessary contributions for wiping out the debts. Therefore the question of financial position of the math with reference to which the Commissioner is asked to decide the dittam will be practically impossible in these matters. It will be an impracticable thing to do. It will be a very difficult thing to put into force and implement fully. It is much better that the Government do not interfere with this at all. I was glad that the secular Government had washed its hands clean of the clauses 7 and 8 relating to the superintendence of these maths. When they did so, I thought it would logically follow that they would not have any further interference. But strangely enough in this portion of the Bill, they want the whole thing to be done by the Government. That, I submit, is wrong.

"Sir, in regard to the dittam, it has been pointed out more than once that it is a matter affecting the daily life and the daily ceremonies of the matadhipati concerned. The matadhipati gets up in the morning, performs the aradhana to his personal God and then instructs his disciples, decides the number of persons to be fed that day, then receives visitors and disciples, perhaps eats at 3 o'clock in the afternoon and so on. These things are regulated according to the usage of the institution. One must know how many persons come for initiation and so on and the dittam depends upon that. Now when the Government try to interfere with the dittam, they will be really interfering with the day-to-day life of the swami. Is that to be done? Should a secular government which had washed its hands clean of superintending these maths take upon themselves this more arduous task? I feel the Government had rather taken upon themselves the superintendence of these institutions than trying to interfere with the day-to-day life of the swamis. It is against the Constitution, if I may say so. I do not want to make it a point of order. I wish only to point out that interested persons can take the matter to a court of law. I wish to point out to the Government that they should act constitutionally. If they say that in spite of the fact that what they do may not be in accordance with the Constitution they would take the risk of being dragged before a court of law, and it is not for me to stand in their way. Therefore I think that it is much better that this clause is omitted. It would be much better for the institutions concerned."

SRI R. V. SWAMINATHAN :—"Sir, this clause regarding the fixing of the dittam was one of the clauses to which the Select Committee gave a prolonged consideration and came to this decision. Sri K. R. Karanth said that simply because out of 100 maths a few maths—5 or 6 or 10 maths—were bad, we should not say that all the maths were bad. Even assuming that only 5 or 6 or 10 maths are bad and the rest are well-managed, how are we to check the few maths which are bad and prevent them from spending the money without any proper accounts and so on? Charges have been levelled against some of the matadhipatis and their officers that they spend some money for some purpose and show it in the accounts as having been spent for some other purpose. Suppose there is a gurupuja and usually 1,000 to 2,000 persons are fed every day. If there is no such restriction as proposed here, the matadhipati will say that he fed 10,000 people every day and spend the balance for some other purpose. To check all these things this clause is inserted. Then, suppose the Commissioner fixes a dittam which is not agreeable to the matadhipati; for instance, suppose for a gurupuja the matadhipati wants to feed thousand people and the Commissioner says that only hundred people should be fed, then the trustee has a right to represent this matter to the Government. We discussed as to what should be done in such a case and we decided that it was better to provide that the trustee may represent the matter to the Government. That is the safeguard clause. It was asked why the trustee should not refer the matter to a court. But the difficulty is, the court will take a long time to decide the matter. Suppose the gurupuja is only 4 or 5 days or a week ahead, if the matadhipati is to go to the court and take the permission of the court, it will take a long time and by the time the court's decision is given the gurupuja day might have passed off. But if it is with the Government, the matadhipati may immediately approach the Government and have the matter settled. That is why a provision like that has been inserted in sub-clause (3) of this clause."

"Sir, some hon. Members said that if the Commissioner was a pious man and one who respected the religious institutions he would do the proper thing but if he happened to be one who always attacked Hindu religion, if he happened to be a gentleman like Mr. Annadurai or Mr. E. V. Ramaswami Naicker, what would happen? There is no doubt there is a fear like that in the minds of some people. Therefore the Government should see that not only in this clause but also in every other clause where power is given to the Government, they should appoint as Commissioner or Deputy Commissioners only proper persons, those who will respect the religion and the customs and the usages. It is the duty of the Government to appoint only proper persons as officers.

"Then Sir, another doubt was expressed by the hon. Member Mr. Karanth: Suppose the portfolio of Hindu Religious Endowments is taken up by a Muslim or a Christian who may happen to be a Minister tomorrow, what will happen? Sir, we are passing this Bill only for the Madras State and not for all India. The Hindus are in a majority in this State and in any cabinet of 10 or 15 or 20 Ministers, the majority of the Ministers will be Hindus. There is no fear that any Chief Minister will hand over this portfolio to a non-Hindu. I do not think that any sane person who will be the head of the Cabinet will like to hand over this portfolio to a non-Hindu. Even assuming that a Chief Minister wanted to hand over this portfolio to a non-Hindu, I do not think that so far as Madras State is concerned, any non-Hindu—a Muslim or Christian—would agree to take over this portfolio. Therefore nobody need have any fear on that score. Anyhow I request that the Government should be very very careful when they make appointments of Commissioners and Deputy Commissioners. With these remarks, I appeal to the hon. Members not to oppose this clause but support it. So far as we are here, we will see that the thing is properly done."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, we are now on clause 59 and it has been debated. Now I wish to submit that the hon. Minister may be pleased to recast the clause as follows—I am only making a suggestion to him, and he may or not accept it. I shall first take the matter about 'dittam' and say a few words; it is only about the 'dittam' that there should be some modification, the other portions may remain as they are. Again in clause (2), "in such other manner as the Commissioner may direct"; you need not always have the Commissioner for this purpose; you may say 'in such manner as the law may prescribe'. Clause (3) says that only 'if the scale of expenditure is at variance with the established usage' or 'of it is not justified by its financial position' the Commissioner may call for the remarks of the trustee and if any modification is required in his opinion, he should submit the case to the Government. So, if it is not at variance why should the proposal be submitted? The scheme of the whole Bill is this: the trustee who is the head of the institution has got two kinds of money according to the Bill.

25th November 1950] [Sri N. S. Varadachari]

One is personal gifts made to him for which a very highly objectionable procedure is contemplated, i.e., if he can spend it at his discretion, he must also grant receipts, keep accounts, etc. The head of the math will sit in a particular place, somebody will come and give him money, and he must get a receipt for the money given; suppose a man by name Srinivasa Ayyangar gives him Rs. 10 or Rs. 5, the trustee will have to give him a receipt for it. That is not the way to deal with trustees. I shall have something to say about it under clause 60. But as regards the trustee being asked to prepare a budget, I submit there is no such thing as dittam in respect of the maths, unlike temples. What is it that happens in a math? It is the personal life of the swami, it is the imparting of religious instruction to his disciples holding kalakshepas and the like and making enquiries of the various guests that are introduced to him during the day and also looking after the patasalas and schools established by the math in connection with the work of the math. What is it that he can give as 'dittam'? Much stress was laid on feeding. It is good that some people are fed in these days of starvation; but even these maths do not feed many. Let me tell you, Sir, and through you, the Government that very unjustly some of the maths who have the duty of feeding guests at Tirupathi have been stopped from feeding them, because the authorities have not allowed the quantity of rice that the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanam has allotted to these maths under ancient usage. I know that last year for the Brahmotsavam, the quantity of rice used to be allowed was reduced and when I came to know of it, I grew paddy on my own land and offered to submit that paddy and take it to the hills to feed a limited number of people considering the number of pilgrims that go to the hills. That is what an honest trustee would do; he would strive to make the best of a bad situation. Is it possible in such cases to make out an advance budget in the manner in which a temple trustee can make out? There is no obligation on the part of the temple trustee to feed people. There is only a dittam saying so much for the naivedyam in the temple, so much for the Brahmotsavam and for the other utsavams. But there is no such obligation caste on the head of a math. In fact, this should be gently dealt with. It should not be regular scrutiny. And what is the scrutiny we are going to effect in this case? I am sure no Commissioner who is to be appointed will be able to scrutinise effectively. We will only have the satisfaction of passing a law and seeing that even an honoured trustee is to be subjected to this kind of scrutiny. I agree that he must keep accounts, that there should be proper management, and all that. As a matter of fact, most of these maths are already keeping accounts and have a council to assist them, consisting of very learned men. In such cases, I am sure the Commissioner can have no difficulty. I want the whole of this clause to be recast. There is no use telling me 'take the old Act, you will find it there'. It is like saying that you use some language because your father also used it. Why not we improve upon it, why not we use better language; why not we make it presentable and agreeable to the party concerned? There is nothing wrong. Suppose a foreign visitor comes here and reads this Chapter; the frightful feeling that will overtake him is: are all these people such bad people, are the common people struggling against this tyranny? And are you trying to get rid of this scourge? And even there, I think, Sir, you must have a pleasant way of doing it."

SRI D. V. RAMASWAMI :—" Mr. Speaker, from the speeches made so far on this clause, I am sure the Hon. Minister will see the extreme anxiety which the Members feel and express in order to assist the Government to come to the right view and the manner of expressing that view through this clause. The main intention of Government in omitting Chapter II was really very commendable. The object of Mr. Karanth and others is to see that the legislation is framed in such a way that there is no inconsistency here which will bring it under the mischief of the Constitution Act. The budget proposals by the trustee and the matadhipathi may be scrutinised and there may be the necessary control and supervision. At the same time, the object of the Government is to see that the ideals for which the maths were established, i.e., the spiritual advancement of the people, should be subserved. I therefore feel that necessary alteration should be made in the language of the clause. I feel, Sir, this is a very important matter and the Hon. the Minister for Law will do well to take these suggestions in the best spirit and see if it is not possible to revise the wording of the clause so as not to infringe on the language of the Constitution Act."

SRI M. S. PATTABHIRAMIAH :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I am one of those people who believe that however good-intentioned the Government may be, they have no right to interfere with the daily observances in religious institutions. I said so at the time we discussed generally the report of the Select Committee. I referred then to this 'dittam'. Strictly speaking, the Government should not interfere with the 'dittam' of any religious institution. Government have seen their way to delete clause 7. So far as temples are concerned, the dittams are well-known and they can be controlled, though in a lenient manner. But I am really surprised to find 'dittam' being used with reference to maths. Historically, maths have no dittams at all and there is no religious ritual to be performed by any matadhipati. As has been pointed out by many Members and as I also pointed out in my previous speeches, it is simply a college of learning; they give instructions in religious matters, they teach the Poorvaminimsa only for dialectical training and other doctrines of uttaramimamsa which we can call in English, 'metaphysical doctrines'. There may be some gifts for feeding certain people, but there are no gurupoojas in every math. Unfortunately some of the supporters of Government are obsessed with the position in certain maths in the Tanjore district which are different from other historical maths. Some of my friends seem to be thinking of annakavadi matams and ganja matams. They must know there are maths which are doing much work for the benefit of humanity which, if we are really going to continue as a democratic Government and unless we are preparing the way for a totalitarian government, should continue to exist and continue to carry on their work in their own way. If a dittam is to be brought into this clause in the case of a math also, I am afraid it may be held ultra vires in a court of law."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, Mr. Viswanatham was saying more than once that there are about 700 maths. I may give the correct figure, so that hereafter at least he may refer to the correct figure."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" On a point of personal explanation, Sir. There are also specific endowments which I am adding to this number."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Anyhow, let the House know the correct figures. There are only 300 maths, of which 41 are maths getting an income of over Rs. 5,000 and only 21 maths are getting over Rs. 10,000 per year. (Interruption.) The hon. Mr. Bhashyam asks: 'Is the Bill intended for these?' I may make it clear that the Bill is for these 300 maths also. I have nothing more to say against the general demand made by Mr. Bhashyam and others that maths should not be included at all in this Bill."

"As regards 'dittam', Messrs. Bhashyam and Pattabhiramiah said that there are no dittams at all for the maths. If that is so, clause 59 cannot apply. That clause says—

"The trustee of every math or specific endowment attached to a math may from time to time, submit to the Commissioner proposals for fixing the dittam," and if there is no dittam, he need not send any proposals at all. I may tell Mr. Kandaswami Pillai, as Mr. Karanth said, let us not confuse between a budget and a dittam. Clause 75 says in sub-clause (2)—

"Every such budget shall make adequate provision for—

- (a) the dittam or scale of expenditure for the time being in force;
- (b) the due discharge of all liabilities binding on the institution."

Sub-clause (1) refers to the budget. So, a budget may include dittam, but dittam is not a budget at all. As I said, if there is no dittam in a math, then this clause 59 will not apply at all. Mr. Karanth said that so long as it conforms to the usage, nobody can interfere. I agree; that is exactly what the clause also says."

"Now, Sir, the objection of Mr. Karanth is that as long as the dittam or everything conforms to custom and usage nobody could interfere. Sub-clause (1) of clause 59 says that the trustee may from time to time submit to the Commissioner proposals for fixing the dittam; sub-clause (2) says that it shall be published and sub-clause (3) says, if on scrutiny of such proposals and any suggestions made by persons having interest, it appears to the Commissioner that the scale of expenditure or any item in the scale of expenditure is at variance with the established usage of the institution. Mr. Karanth says that as long as it conforms to usage, nobody can question it. So, if it does not conform to usage somebody can question it. What the clause provides is, the Commissioner can think of doing anything only if it is at variance with the established usage or custom of the institution or is not justified by its financial position.

"Hon. Mr. N. S. Varadachari says, why are you concerned with the financial position of the institution?"

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"I never said that."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"If it is not he, one Member said, why should you care for the financial position of the math and if the matadhipati gets into debts the disciples will pay. We cannot say, let the matadhipati get into debts and ruin the math. The State has definitely to prevent a man from attempting to commit suicide. If the fundamental right of a man to commit suicide is not permitted, we cannot permit the matadhipathi to destroy the math. So, we do take into account the financial position of the math, see whether the expenditure is within the financial capacity of the math and whether the matadhipathi is not running into debts. So, what we have provided in this clause is, the Government or the Commissioner does not interfere, but we say that the trustee must prepare the dittam and publish it and invite objections and if the Commissioner finds that the dittam goes against custom and usage and the financial position of the math, the Commissioner gives an opportunity to the trustee and if the Commissioner is of the opinion that it requires modification, he shall submit the case to the Government for orders. (Interruption.) Hon. Mr. Karanth says that he is not given an opportunity. If the hon. Member reads sub-clause (3), he will find provision made that 'the Commissioner may call for the remarks of the trustee and if after considering the same, the Commissioner is of opinion that any modification is required in the scale of expenditure or any item in the scale of expenditure, he shall submit the same to Government.' That is only after obtaining the remarks of the trustee. But, if there are certain things which are against custom and usage and against the financial position of the math, it is for the Government to decide. Mr. Karanth says, you will have to go to court and take the chance; perhaps he thinks if the Hon. Minister, Mr. Roche Victoria, is put in charge of Endowments, he is a non-Hindu, being a Christian. But, how are you sure about the case in court, where the Judge may as well be a Muslim or a Christian? (Sri K. R. Karanth: 'No objection.') My hon. Friend says he has no objection to the judge being a non-Hindu, but his objection is only to the Minister being a non-Hindu. The sanctity of the position of a judge is attached to the office of judge and not to the particular person. If that is what hon. Mr. Karanth means I can understand. So, is the case with the Government and that is why an appeal by the Commissioner to the Government is provided. It is not Dr. Rajan or Madhava Menon or any other Minister that is in charge of the religious endowments but the Government and so that objection about a non-Hindu being a Minister does not apply to the Minister that is referred to here. What is stated in the clause is, the Commissioner shall refer cases to the Government only in such cases where the scale of expenditure goes against the custom or usage or goes against the financial position of the institution. It is only then that the Commissioner will make a reference to the Government and so there is nothing wrong in it and it cannot also be said that it is an interference with the administration of the math.

"Hon. Mr. Bhashyam said that you are interfering with the day to day affairs of the institution. For instance, dittam is not a day to day matter and dittam is prescribed for the whole year and so the Commission is not going to ask the trustee every time whether custom or usage is violated or not. So, I do not see anything which goes against the Constitution or there is anything even derogatory to the position of the matadhipati.

"Then, Sir, hon. Mr. N. S. Varadachari wants certain verbal changes to be made in the clause. Let not any hon. Member think that the wording of it offends in any way the sentiments of matadhipatis or for offending anybody we have put it in. Of course, we shall examine it again as to whether any better wording would be more acceptable and consider hon. Mr. Varadachari's suggestions. That is all I have to say in respect of the matter. The clause as it is should stand."

Clause 59 was put and carried.

Clause 60.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'That clause 60 do stand part of the Bill.'

MR. SPEAKER:—"Before I call upon hon. Mr. Viswanatham to move his amendment for the deletion of the whole clause, I would like to point out that hon. Mr. Karanth has given notice of another amendment for the deletion of sub-clause (2). So, I would suggest that instead of hon. Mr. Karanth moving his amendment, hon. Mr. Viswanatham may move his amendment and hon. Mr. Karanth may speak on it."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"But, I would suggest, Sir, hon. Mr. Karanth may move his amendment and I will not move my amendment, but I will second his amendment."

MR. SPEAKER:—"I have no objection to it."

[25th November 1950]

SRI K. R. KARANTH :—“ Sir, I shall take only very little time. I move that—‘ Sub-clause (2) of clause 60 be deleted.’

“ Sir, sub-clause (1) is very clear. It says—

‘ The trustee of a math shall be entitled to spend at his discretion for purposes connected with the math any ‘pathakanika’ that is to say, any gift of property or money made as a personal gift to him as the head of the math.’

I have no quarrel with that sub-clause. But, clause (2) says—

It is to this clause that I object, because even such small harassments of this type should not be allowed. When it is conceded in sub-clause (1) that these personal gifts or offerings made to the matadhipathi can be spent by the matadhipathi at his discretion, now this sub-clause (2) says that the day-to-day offering of a silver cup or a copper or brass vessel, the moment they come in should be entered in the accounts. I think this is a little too much to expect of the matadhipathi and unnecessary. Of course, I agree with the Hon. Minister when he said that matadhipathi should eat the corpus of the property. If they are immovable property, it is but right, because, it is not his own acquisition, but several ‘matadhipathis’ before him acquired that property and therefore unless for very grave necessity that property should not in any way be destroyed or mortgaged or that he should incur debts. I perfectly agree with that position. But, here no distinction has been made between small and costly presents. It is merely stated that every gift, even if it is worth five annas, should be entered, as if the Commissioner is expected to check it every day and say whether the account is kept properly or not. It is not proper, especially when we are giving the trustee discretion to do as he likes with these ‘pathakanikas’. These ‘pathakanikas’ are given to him because of the respect due to him. So, it is too much to expect of him to keep regular accounts of such things. For instance, even in our day to day work we are finding it difficult to keep regular accounts. So, when such presents are offered to him, he is at liberty to do what he likes with them. That is what is provided in sub-clause (1). But, to say that small and big presents are all to be entered and for any slightest default he becomes liable to be removed under clause 57 if anybody chooses to do so, is not fair to the ‘matadhipathi’. Therefore, Sir, without taking more of the time of the House, I submit that sub-clause (2) may be deleted, while sub-clause (1) may remain as it is.”

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—“ Sir, in seconding this amendment, I submit that unless the Government are anxious that the whole clause should be declared ultra vires, they must agree to this amendment. If sub-clause (2) is to be retained, then sub-clause (1) will go in effect. Therefore, I do not like to attack the entire section, because in sub-clause (1) the Government have conceded with an amount of commendable good grace that gifts of money made as personal gifts to the head of the math shall be his own property and that the trustee of the math shall be at liberty to utilize them (Interruption) for purposes connected with the math. I am sorry, it is graceful, but not so commendable as I thought. But, what happens is, sub-clause (2) will virtually negative the right given to the matadhipathi under sub-clause (1). As you were pleased several times to say an amendment shall not merely have the effect of negating an existing clause. So, sub-clause (2) is nothing but negating the effect of sub-clause (1) and it should not be there. Do the Government want ‘pathakanikas’ or not? If they want, then I understand that the trustee shall be entitled under the existing system of usage to spend it at his discretion. But ‘pathakanikas’ may be for purposes not directly associated with the math but on account of his relationship with the math the matadhipathi cannot spend the money which he has received for purposes which are not connected either with himself or the math or shisyas or disciples. Here, it is restricted for purposes connected with the math. That is a wide expression and it has got to be looked into and decided. But, even that little right given under sub-clause (1) is taken away under sub-clause (2). If once the gift is declared the absolute property of the matadhipathi he should be allowed to spend at his discretion. I therefore second the amendment.”

SRI S. CHIDAMBARA AYYAR :—“ Mr. Speaker, Sir, I fully endorse what hon. Members Mr. Karanth and Mr. Viswanatham have said. The effect of sub-clause (2) is that the Government have no confidence in the matadhipathis in the matter of spending money at their discretion for purposes connected with the maths. I do not see any reason why they should submit accounts to the Commissioner in regard to the matter. It is highly derogatory of the matadhipathis that they should submit accounts to the Commissioner even in matters of gifts given as personal ‘pathakanikas’, which amounts to something like private property, even now the matadhipathis being sanyasins or persons having no connection with worldly affairs, they are spending those moneys in matters relating to their maths and they are doing their best. Such being the case, why should the Government ask them to submit accounts. More often it has been said on the floor of this House by the Hon. Minister that the Commissioner and others are persons who are expected to do things properly. I ask the Hon. Minister why not they have as much confidence in the matadhipathis as they want people to have confidence in the Commissioner. I only want to submit that the confidence expected is mutual and the matadhipathis can be credited with a certain amount of good sense that they are bound to spend the money in a proper manner. Therefore, I think this provision is unnecessary besides being highly revolting to the good sense of the matadhipathis. With these few words, Sir, I support the amendment.”

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI :—“ Mr. Speaker, Sir, I want to add a few words to reinforce the very able arguments of my predecessors. If the trustee of a math shall be entitled to spend at his discretion any gift of property received by him as the head of a math, it is certainly wrong to ask him to keep accounts of receipts and disbursements and submit them to the Commissioner whenever so required, or, in the words of the sub-clause to be produced before the Commissioner or any person authorized by him in this behalf, whenever so required. Sir, this is nothing but harassment. Sub-clause (1) may remain, as it is; I am not concerned with the grace of it. But, if it is once granted to the trustee as a personal gift for people do so, because people hold him in reverence and esteem and they respect him and it is because of that, they give him personal gift. Let me take an example prevalent among the Vaishnava people, of what is called, Samasrayanam. At the time of Mudradanam, people tell the Acharya, ‘I do hereby submit everything I have and myself to you.’ But he does not renounce everything; he does not renounce himself from the world. He only says that he pledges himself to lead a life of purity and then says, ‘I make a complete surrender to God, through you, Oh, Acharya, and may God save me from all calamities and keep me in proper conduct and help me to lead a life of rectitude.’ That is a grand ceremony, and in the course of that ceremony, each man gives what he is able to give. Sir, the Speaker must have heard that when people go to Benares, they are asked to give up something which they like very much. A man may like mangoes very much; and one would expect him to give that up. But what do people generally do? They give up koyyapazham and seethapazham, and then satisfy themselves that they have abided by the rites. Now, to come to my point. In the course of these ceremonies, disciples make a gift to the Acharya. What happens to those gifts? He does not pocket them. He, being a Sanyasi, he does not enjoy the fruits of his position; he distributes them to the beneficiaries of the math. In such cases, where is the necessity for keeping accounts? Suppose I propose to lead the life of a Sanyasi, and in doing so I have with me a small number of disciples; I preach to them the doctrines of religion and so on. Those disciples are true disciples, and very much we like the swollen-headed disciple who approached the master in the Upanishad. People go and make gifts and presents to the Sanyasi. The Sanyasi does not make them his personal property; he distributes the gift among his Sishyas. Suppose, I make a gift of five rupees and Mr. Bhashyam makes a gift of fifty rupees. Should the trustee engage a clerk to keep an account of these gifts? Why should a clerk write in my presence in the accounts, ‘received five rupees from N. S. Varadachari; received fifty rupees from Mr. K. Bhashyam’. Sir, all this introduces a certain amount of embarrassing pettiness. I use these words deliberately. My second reason is if the trustee is entitled to spend the gift at his discretion for the purpose of the math, clause 60 should stop with the sub-clause (1). Why should the conditions stated in sub-clause (2) be attached. Even if the Hon. Minister wants to retain sub-clause (2), let him, instead of the latter half of the sub-clause, say, ‘shall make available such accounts to the Commissioner or any other person authorised by him.’ I am against having the words ‘whenever required’. Under that phrase, every minute in the months of January, February and March the Commissioner’s servant will come and demand accounts and declare that the matter is urgent as they have to be submitted to the Endowments Board. Sir, all this is wrong, undignified and does no justice to a legislature which is enacting this piece of legislation. So, I hope Government will drop sub-clause (2) and be content with sub-clause (1), as it satisfies their object.”

SRI M. R. APPA RAO :—“ Mr. Speaker, Sir, the pathakanikai is given to the matadhipathi on account of the great respect which the Sishyas have for him. In the first sub-clause Government have accepted that it is a personal property of the matadhipathi. If a matadhipathi is otherwise bad, I think, there are several other clauses, plenty of them, I fear, to remove him. So, this second sub-clause is unwarranted because the pathakanikai is his personal property. I feel this submitting of accounts is unnecessary; it is not very dignified condition to be attached to a person who holds a sacred place in society. So I request Government to delete the sub-clause. I support the amendment.”

SRI M. S. PATTABHIRAMIAH :—“ Whatever may be the fate of the other amendments brought forward in this House . . . ”

MR. SPEAKER :—“ The hon. Member should first address the Chair and then begin his speech.”

SRI M. S. PATTABHIRAMIAH :—“ Mr. Speaker, Sir, we have seen a very large number of non-official amendments brought forward and been lost. I am not very much concerned with them. But I wish this amendment at least is accepted by Government. The clause, as it stands, is really objectionable. As I pointed out, on a former occasion, about the pathakanikais, the term itself denotes that it is a personal gift by a devotee to a person whom he holds in worshipful reverence, and it is absolutely given over to him to do as he likes. He may even throw away that amount, if he so wishes; because it is not intended for the institution at all over which he presides. In this connection I wish to narrate a small personal experience which I had while I was with the Sringeri Math Swamiji, while he was touring in my district. That Swamiji was on his way to make a prathish-tai in Kaladi. This happened in my early years, about forty-five years back. I was with him in the math; I was a young man then; and I have had personal experience of that math. In a certain place in Ramnad district, he was camping for a long time. He was entertained by the Kovilur matadhipathi. He had regal honours and had a large paraphernalia; and it was one of his ancestors who established the Vizianagaram empire. That Swamiji was the thirty-third successor. He was a saint; he was an absolute saint and a hermit; he lived the real life of an Acharya; people invited him to their house; that Swamiji got pathakanikai. Usually when he went round on tour people invited him to their residence for pathakanikai; people worshipped him like a deity. I want this House to remember that many people put money at his feet. In this connection I want to say that hon. Mr. N. S. Varadachari confused many things in his speech about these maths. Because there are so many varieties of maths, as we have so many doctrines; as I told the House, the other day, there are the Annakavadi maths and sombachhavadi maths (Laughter); we do not know the historical origin of these maths, except they are survivals of maths, which once did great service in the cause of spreading of Hindu religion. Now, coming to the point. While the great Swamiji of Sringeri math was, one day, coming out of the house of a rich man, after receiving pathakanikai, the pathakanikai in this case was Rs. 108 or Rs. 1,008, I do not remember exactly what the amount really was, he was met on the threshold of that rich man's house by a very lean man, a living skeleton itself; he was expecting every minute his death; he approached the Swamiji and asked for alms. That man, who was gasping for breath, when he came face to face with the Swamiji burst out chanting verses. The great Swamiji stood there, listened to the man. How did that dying man begin to recite verses is a mystery. He was on the verge of death; he was in financial distress; and so he sought the help of the Swamiji. The great Swamiji beckoned to one of his disciples, who was following him with the pathakanikai given by the rich man, to bring it; he took all the silver coins and handed them over to that poor man! The poor man said, he was happy to die, but was anxious about his family and children, who would become orphans after his death. Do you know what the Acharya said: 'there is God to protect the orphans; you may die in peace; take this money?' Sir, this is a typical instance of what Sringeri Math Swamis have been doing about pathakanikais. Not only this sort of thing. Suppose a poor woman goes to him; she would get some clothing, some silk clothing. Now, would any officer of the endowments board would agree to this? No, he would say, it is wrong to do so. So, I say, Sir, this sub-clause (2) should be deleted. I want Government to understand that the pathakanikais are never intended to become part of the property of the math, and no one can have any interest in it, not even the devotee nor anybody else. They are intended to belong solely to the head of the math. As was pointed out by Mr. Appa Rao, people give pathakanikai only when they find one worthy to receive it. To an unworthy matadhipathi no pathakanikai is given. So it should be left entirely to the discretion of the matadhipathi to do as he likes with it. There should not be any interference with it. Any interference in this matter will be only ruining the whole structure of these maths. With these words I oppose the whole of the sub-clause (2). I want it to be deleted from the Bill."

SRI V. I. MUNISWAMI PILLAY:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I rise to support the amendment moved by my hon. Friend Mr. Karanth. As was said by Sri M. S. Pattabhiramiah, I honestly feel that pathakanika cannot form part of the asset of the math. A matadhipathi has attained a certain spiritual advancement and he feels sincerely that he should impart that knowledge to his disciples and students. Ordinarily a matadhipathi does not select everybody for initiation. He only chooses such disciples and students as are prepared and ripe to receive initiation. That being the case, it is not at all advisable to ask a matadhipathi to render accounts to the Commissioner. Sub-clause (2) says that the trustee shall keep regular accounts. That means the trustee will interfere with the matadhipathi or Guru in his right work of imparting religious instruction to his students and disciples. Such interference will only hamper the growth of Hindu philosophy. If a Guru is asked to render accounts to the trustee about pathakanika, the trustee may not care to divulge all the amounts that he has been receiving from the disciples and students as he will be unconcerned as to what money comes and goes. The disciples and students also may not offer pathakanika but do something else to please the Guru. Pathakanika is not given as a bonus or asset to the Guru. It is given out of love and for the benefit that the disciples derive. As I said, a Guru is a person who has attained a high standard in the religious sphere. The provision in sub-clause (2) will really cut at the very root of religious training and hamper the promotion and spread of Hindu philosophy. So I request the Government to consider the matter and accept the amendment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, this provision was not there in the original Bill. While we were discussing in the Select Committee clause 75 relating to the budget of religious institutions, it was said that all the income and expenditure should be included in it. Sri Bhashyam himself pointed out that maths possessed two kinds of property, one the endowments and the other the personal property of the matadhipathi. He further said that Pathakanika was a personal gift and that a matadhipathi should have the power to spend it as he liked. The Committee came to the conclusion that pathakanika need not be treated as the property of the math, but that a specific provision should be made making it obligatory that a matadhipathi should spend the pathakanika only for purposes connected with the math. This was one of the recommendations of the Select Committee, but no vote was taken on it. (Interruption by Sri K. Bhashyam.) Hon. Sri

Bhashyam says that we did not think of the provision in sub-clause (2) then. I entirely agree with hon. Sri N. S. Varadachari and certain other hon. Members that pathakanika is something placed at the feet of the master for his blessing and grace and as a sign of the giver surrendering himself. But the Select Committee decided as per the provision embodied in this sub-clause. To get the blessing of hon. Sri T. Viswantham in respect of any clause in this Bill is something which I prize. He has blessed by saying that the clause is graceful though not sufficiently graceful. He admitted that there was some grace already. Hon. Sri N. S. Varadachari took objection to the words 'shall cause such accounts to be produced' and suggested the use of a more respectable language. My submission is that sub-clause (1) becomes impossible of performance unless there is this sub-clause. Sub-Clause (2) which is a corollary to sub-clause (1). Sub-clause (1) says—

'The trustee of a math shall be entitled to spend at his discretion for purposes connected with the math . . .'

Nobody restricts a matadhipathi in spending according to his discretion. All of us including hon. Sri Karanth are agreed that pathakanika should be spent only for purposes connected with the math. We have seen huge plates full of sovereigns placed at the feet of the matadhipathi as pathakanika. A huge amount is realized. The ascetic does not want it at all. It is other people who take and spend it according to his orders. If accounts are not maintained, how are we or even the matadhipathi himself to know the amount realized and whether the whole of it has been spent according to his orders? If sub-clause (1) is right, sub-clause (2) necessarily follows and we cannot object to it. Whether the amount realized has been spent for purposes connected with the math cannot be verified unless an account is maintained. It is certainly unnecessary that this money should be accounted for in the manner in which trust properties are to be accounted for under clause 57 of the Bill. There can be no misappropriation or breach of trust in respect of the properties of religious institutions, because sub-clause (1) of clause 60 says that it is not the property of the institution but only property belonging to him personally as a matadhipathi. The matadhipathi has certainly got the discretion to spend it as he likes; but what we have said in sub-clause (2) is that any moneys received as pathakanika and spent at his discretion for purposes connected with the math should be properly accounted for and for that purpose, he should keep accounts in order that people may know how much is received and disbursed, and in case, the Commissioner wants, these accounts can be produced before him. That is all that is required of him, Sir, for that purpose he must keep accounts. Nowhere has it been said that the Commissioner will come and check the accounts or that these accounts should be submitted for audit. All that is meant is, that it is better for the matadhipathi to keep accounts of the amounts received by him, even though they are his personal property, so that it may not give rise to any unnecessary suspicion in people that they are not properly used, because as Caesar's wife he must be above suspicion."

[25th November 1950]

SRI K. R. KARANTH :—“ Sir, after I heard the speech of the Hon. Minister, I feel more than ever convinced that the position I have taken is correct. It may be correct, no doubt, that no court will hold him responsible, if he spends it as he likes, because it is the personal gift to the matadhipathi. But, if the Hon. Minister will be pleased to refer to clause 57 (f) wherein it is stated, that ‘persistent and wilful default by the matadhipathi in discharging his duties or functions under this Act or any other law’ will be one of the grounds for the Commissioner to move the court to remove him from his office, he will find that if a matadhipathi does not keep accounts as is prescribed in clause 60 (2), he can be charged under clause 57 (f) for persistent and wilful default in discharging his functions under this Bill. He is certainly liable to be removed from his office by the Commissioner if he does not keep accounts under this clause, whatever may be the intention of my Hon. Friend, the Minister for Law. Perhaps I can take the Hon. Minister at his word, but unfortunately that is not the case here. If it was not there before the Bill was referred to the Select Committee and if the Select Committee had introduced this new clause, then it means that the Government had changed their original intention and my hon. Friend Sri K. Bhashyam was perfectly right in saying that the Bill has assumed an entirely new aspect, after it had emerged from the Select Committee, even though we spent months over it. Sir, my hon. Friend Sri M. S. Pattabhiramiah said certain things about this pathakanika and he also gave certain instances. Suppose a Swami is so good that whatever he gets as he goes out, he gives out in charity to the first person he meets on the road, and thus wants to unburden himself before that evening, I do not think anybody can object to it. Is it the intention of the Government that whatever presents he gets on his way, should be noted down in an account book then and there for being produced before the Commissioner? I submit, that such a person must be highly respected because he is so unworldly. If he wants to give any charity from out of his pathakanika, which is stated to be a personal property and which he could spend at his discretion, the words in clause 60 (1), ‘for purposes connected with the math’ fetter his discretion, and in fact prevent him from making any charity at all, because any charity he wants to do would not come as one of the purposes connected with the math. I did not see this aspect of the clause, at the beginning, but now I find that a matadhipathi cannot give any charity or gifts out of his pathakanika, for the reason mentioned just now. Suppose for instance, there is a great leader like our Prime Minister of India, Pandit Nehru, who whenever he gets anything during his tours simply gives it away for some public cause or charity; is it said anywhere that he should give an account of it to the Government of India? This is also something like that. Strictly speaking, according to this clause, if a matadhipathi or a head of a math or religious institution wants to give charity, he cannot do so even out of his pathakanika, unless it is for a purpose connected with the math or unless it is included anywhere in the definition that the giving of charity will be one of the purposes connected with a math. I once again

submit, Sir, that this clause fetters the discretion of the matadhipathi. It appears that the matadhipathi should go every evening to his accountant and render his accounts, just like a grocer giving his accounts to his clerk at the end of every day, stating, ‘at such and such a place, I got Rs. 5 and in another place I got a broken brass vessel, etc.’ I submit, Sir, it is most humiliating on the part of a matadhipathi to be rendering his accounts daily and it would be insulting them if the Government insist upon them, who are very respectable and revered people, to do so. I am not very particular that my amendment should be accepted, I do not want to stand on prestige—in fact I have no such prestige for the matter of that. But I would only submit, that just as the Government in their wisdom did not think it necessary to include this clause in the original Bill, and because it is the Select Committee that have included it in the Bill, even so, let them drop this sub-clause altogether. After all this is not the last word on the subject. Both the Hon. Minister and I do not stand on prestige and so let us do the just, right and the proper thing and not inflict these pin-pricks on the matadhipathis. It is not fair that for every little thing, they should go on accounting. If a person is a fraud, or if he misappropriates the funds of a math, certainly nobody will come forward to give him any pathakanika. If a matadhipathi is a great man and a good man, and a man revered and respected by his disciples, and if people are willing to give him any pathakanika voluntarily, for obtaining his divine grace, then let us not humiliate him in this manner, by asking him to render accounts of his receipts. I would even ask the Government to amplify the definition of the term ‘for purposes connected with the math’ to include charities also. If he gets a present of a silver cup worth Rs. 5 from a person, and if he gives it to his next disciple for his use, it is not proper on the part of the Commissioner to call him into question and ask, ‘You got a silver cup and you presented it to your disciples; it is not a purpose connected with a math and so you must get it back and give it to the math.’ Even at this last stage, let the Government be liberal and show their nobility by sticking to their original intention and dropping this clause altogether. Otherwise, it would mean that the Swami must be carrying an account book with him wherever he goes for biksha and be writing the receipts then and there or constantly reminding himself them, like reciting some manthras, and when he returns home in the evening must render accounts to his accountant. I would once again beg of the Government, let us not humiliate these matadhipathis further and let us delete this clause at least at the last stage and also include charity as one of the purposes connected with the math, at the appropriate place in the Bill. Otherwise these people will not be able to spend anything on charity, even from out of the pathakanika, which is given to them as personal gift.”

that there is nothing wrong in the matadhipathi having gone to an educational institution. But there are 99 out of 100 in this part of the country who feel that the action of the matadhipathi in having gone inside the precincts of a Catholic institution at Tiruchirappalli is atrocious and should not be permitted and he should be immediately removed. Feelings can run to that extent also though I do not share this view. It is a good act on the part of the matadhipathi in having gone there and also given educational facilities. But as I have said these and similar acts may be questioned. I would therefore appeal to the Hon. the Law Minister to suitably amend Clause 60 to this extent so that the words 'for the purposes of the math' may include charity or connected with charity or something like that.

"But I strongly take objection to the wording of my hon. Friend Mr. Schamnad's amendment as it stands, namely, the creation of absolute property rights, in favour of the matadhipathi which is not the intention of the Select Committee."

SRI A. KALESWARA RAO :—"I am very glad and thankful that the hon. Gentleman Mr. Schamnad has taken interest in this Bill and has moved a very important amendment. But the question is whether we should accept the amendment as my hon. Friend Sri Bhashyam has recommended. There are judicial decisions and the courts have held that apart from managing the properties of the math, the matadhipathis can have their own private absolute property. The object of this Bill is to restrict the management of even this private property to a certain extent and probably to a great extent. The income hereafter cannot be used by him at his discretion for any purposes he likes but everything that comes into his hands should be utilized only for the purposes of the institution. With regard to amounts to be spent and with regard to details and the way in which it is to be spent there may be a lot of discretion. That is what the first portion of this clause says. With regard to pathakanika which these Ethis or sanyasis or the matadhipathis receive from the public there may be much to be said in favour of vesting greater discretion in the matadhipathis themselves but we have passed that stage of vesting discretion in the matadhipathis themselves to spend the money, utensils or the movable properties. The amendment of our hon. Friend Sri Karanth has been negatived by the House. There is no use of reopening the question though as the hon. Gentleman the Raja of Chettinad said the Hon. the Law Minister might make some suitable amendment with regard to some amount of the pathakanikas that the Ethis receive to be used at their own discretion, in their own way whatever may be the purpose for which they use it. The Ethis are expected to use these gifts for good purposes. If the purposes are bad, the springs of the gift will be dried and nobody will be giving them anything. But the amendment goes counter to the principles. How can we accept the amendment which says that the property purchased out of such incomes should become the absolute property, private property of the matadhipathi? It is a dangerous thing and therefore I oppose it."

25th November 1950]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"I have very little to add to what was stated by the hon. Member Sri Kaleswara Rao. The hon. Member Sri Bhashyam in seconding the amendment of the hon. Gentleman Mr. Schamnad was very vehement at the laughter of some hon. Members and said that it was not a matter for laughter. I only wish, Sir, that the same consideration is extended to others also who feel equally serious on the matter. Even if I had laughed when the amendment was seconded by my hon. Friend Sri Bhashyam it might have been simply at the idea that 'misfortune finds strange bed fellows' and nothing more. It does not mean I was not serious on the question. We need not be very much uneasy about laughter."

SRI K. BHASHYAM :—"The Hon. Minister did not laugh at all."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"I did also laugh. I thought the hon. Member was meaning me when he said it was not a matter for laughter, as I had a guilty conscience that he was referring to me."

"That apart, I concede the principle of the hon. Member Sri Bhashyam that pathakanika is a thing which is excluded and anything coming out of the pathakanika will be exempt. The clause only demands that he must give a statement of income and expenditure from that source, even though it may be his property. So I cannot accept the principle of the amendment of the hon. Gentleman Mr. Schamnad for the very same reasons as were pointed out by my hon. Friend Sri A. Kaleswara Rao. The matadhipathi is an 'aparigraha'. He cannot own property. The very word sanyasi indicates that he has renounced everything and so he cannot own property even on that account. So I cannot accept the amendment which suggests that any property purchased out of these incomes should become the absolute private property of the matadhipathi."

MR. SPEAKER :—"The question is—

For sub-clause (2) of Clause 60, substitute the following :—

"Any immovable property purchased by the trustee of a math out of the money or other properties gifted to him as a head of the math shall be considered as his absolute personal private property and as such shall not be liable to be accounted for by him to the Commissioner or any other officer of Government."

The amendment was lost.

MR. SPEAKER :—"I am now going to put Clause 60 to the vote of the House."

SRI K. BHASHYAM :—"Sir, I am one of those persons who have objected to this clause entirely. My view in the Select Committee was made known and read to the House. My contention in the Select Committee was that these are personal properties as they were personal gifts and that they should not be interfered with. I stand by it and fight for it. Of course, in the Committee even my hon. Friend the Raja of Chettinad was pleased to agree with that to this extent that it must be at the discretion of mata-dhipathi. His proposition was accepted though not in the form in which he put it. The Committee came to a conclusion and it was defined as something given to the head of the math to be spent at his discretion for advancing the objects connected with the math. That was the position taken. But what the Bill says is 'for the purposes of the math'. There is an essential difference between them. Let me illustrate the absurdity of it. There is the Sankaracharya Swamigal advocating the adwaitha philosophy. Suppose a great pandit, revered all over the country, one who belongs to the visishtadwaithic school of thought, goes and pays obeisance to Sankaracharya. In view of his learning, in view of the fact that he is a great man and well-versed in all sastras, Sankaracharya makes him a present of a thousand or a few hundred rupees, whatever it may be. If you say, for the purposes of the math, the presentation in the case cited is not for the purposes of the math. The math is for the purpose of advancing the tenets of that math, that is adwaitha philosophy. But if the head of the math tries to make a present to a person who is supposed to be a learned man and all that, of another philosophy, the Government would say at once that it is not for the purposes connected with the math. Therefore I am trying to point out that while we came to one conclusion in the Select Committee, the Government have not put the decision of the Committee in the form in which it ought to be put. Therefore I am objecting to the clause altogether. 'For advancing the object connected with the math' was the decision of the Committee. This is much wider than what is stated in the clause, namely, 'for the purposes of the math'. Circumscribed as it is in the matter of pathakanika, the clause as it stands is not acceptable to us."

(At this stage the Hon. Speaker sounded the gong.)

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"What time are you allowing me, Sir, two minutes or three minutes? How many minutes have I taken, Sir?"

MR. SPEAKER:—"The hon. Member has taken four minutes."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"I want five minutes more, Sir, and I will finish."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The hon. Member may take five more minutes."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Thank you, Sir. So far as this clause is concerned, I have shown the absurdity of sub-clause (1) as it stands. The second sub-clause has been discussed and there is going to be no discussion of that clause on my part because the time given is so limited. But I want to say one thing. It is a matter of contract between two persons. A person gives money to 'A' to be used for his own personal benefits. It becomes the private property of the man who receives the gift. No power on earth, not even the legislature which is all powerful as it is, can say that it is not his personal property for the Constitution says that every man is entitled to acquire property and deal with it as he pleases. On account of the fact that I have great regard for a person, he may be a head of the math, and make him a gift there is the contract. And what happens, this sub-clause says that the property is not his private property and cannot be disposed of as he pleases or do whatever he likes with it. My respectful submission is that this is unconstitutional, illegal and ultra vires.

"After all in these matters of gifts, the donors are mostly dominated by the desire to give something to the Swami. You cannot really say that, because he is a Swami, he must put all his personal gifts also into the math. This is the second point I would like to make, Sir.

"The third point I would like to put before the House for consideration is this. If you are going to make these matadhipathis liable to account and if he disobeys by persistent and wilful default the orders of the Commissioner, it will be ground for his removal under clause 57. Therefore, it has material bearing upon his own status and his own position. If really he makes some expenditure out of the pathakanika and if it is said that he is disregarding the directions of the Commissioner and that such an expenditure is not proper for the purposes of the math, it will be a difficult position. Who is to decide the purpose of the math? Is it the court? Is it the Commissioner? Is it the matadhipathi? What is the purpose of the math? As I told you originally, Sir, the origin of these maths seems to be this. A few friends come together and really seek a teacher and ask him, 'please teach us something'. It is how the maths started. They may belong to one particular philosophy. I would like to know what is the object of a math. Of course, you may say, 'oh, it is for the propagation of religion' as if the math is for the propagation of religion. What is the object of a math? It is only to instruct, if he cares, such persons as he cares to instruct in the tenets of a religion. It is not as if the head of a math is bound to teach. It is not like a Professor of the Presidency College who gets about Rs. 1,000 per month and who is bound to attend classes from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and teach to whatever persons are put before him, dunces or no dunces. Unless the acharya is sure that the sishyas are prepared to receive the instruction, he is not bound to give instructions at all. Therefore, all these difficulties are there. There will be a sort of friction between the matadhipathi and the Commissioner and it will lead to a lot of heart-burning amongst the disciples. After all it is the disciples that present the money. What will happen hereafter is: If I were a matadhipathi and somebody wants to give a 'pathakanika'. I will say, 'don't give me any pathakanika. If you want to give, please give it to charity so and so.' That is sure to happen and one can really escape all the trammels and difficulties that these articles are making. Thus, pathakanika will go out of the math. Therefore, Sir, I would ask that this clause may be dropped altogether."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir. My objection is not so much to the whole clause as to sub-clause (2) of clause 60. As I said at the outset, it is very ungracious to say that the head of a math cannot spend at his discretion what he gets as personal gifts. Unfortunately, 'pathakanika' has been defined in a peculiar manner. It may be a personal gift given in a nice plate with beetle-leaves and a number of fruits and at the same time it may be a gift of Rs. 5 or Rs. 10 or Rs. 100 and so on. Now, Sir, it is only that such gifts are sought to be kept out of the range of control. The Hon. Minister gave a very unhappy illustration of Mahatma Gandhi collecting for the Harijan Fund. It is most insulting. We revered our great leader. He instructed us always to keep accounts of all collections at the wayside stations. If we had made any such rule for him, he would have resented this bitterly. He expected of us a better standard and he would have liked us to keep a higher standard. The whole of this clause and the whole of this chapter are only according to the standard of Sri Kandaswami Pillai. I quite see that there is no other higher standard observed here. It is most disgusting for a Legislature to tell the matadhipathis that they must keep accounts of their personal gifts. I have never come across such an outrageous proposition as this. I know they will keep accounts. But, it may not always be possible. If really a rupee is given by a poor man to a Swami when he visits his village, he is not to be told 'please give him a receipt for one rupee' because the poor man thinks that that one rupee is one thousand. So, my objection is from the point of view of the man who gives.

"I like the standards of Mahatma Gandhi in these matters and I would like the Government also to observe his standards. We have come to such a sorry state as to ask the matadhipathis to keep accounts of their personal gifts. What a tragedy! What a shame! Our religion has produced Ascetic after Ascetic and Teacher after Teacher and is still producing hundreds of teachers and it will continue to produce for centuries to come. Is this the way, Sir, we give a lead in this matter? I would like to understand your asking the matadhipathi to keep account of the grain that he receives from the landed property of the math. Even in his budget he may not say it is so much grain. The grain will have to be used for feeding and he may have to convert it into cash by selling it at controlled rates or at black-market rates. Is this the way the matadhipathi has to behave? We are reducing everything to mockery. My objection is on the ground of good manners and good taste. That is why I ask and I beg of Government to drop sub-clause (2) and trust to the good sense of these great people who conduct these maths."

25th November 1950]

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, it is a great sin nowadays to be a great man or a learned man or a religious man. Is it the sin of the man because he is learned and because he preaches the doctrines of our philosophy to the people who gather round him? Is it his sin that wherever he is invited, people give him some money as pathakanika? I submit, Sir, that, if this is the kind of treatment we give to these persons who have no other interest in the world excepting the propagation of the doctrines of our great and ancient religion Hinduism, we are coming to a very sorry state of things. I submit, Sir, that we should not ask them to keep accounts of their personal gifts. It is their lookout to maintain or not to maintain. We are not asking account of even Rs. 150 which the Government are giving to the Members of this Assembly. (Laughter.) Is the Congress asking? Are the Government asking account for all these amounts? No.

"My hon. Friend Sri N. S. Varadachari was right in explaining the difference between what Mahatma Gandhi did and what these matadhipathis are expected to do. Sir, I have had the privilege of going along with Mahatma Gandhi for collections on two different occasions even as the Hon. Sri K. Madhava Menon did. But, everytime he came, he announced the purpose of collections. He used to conduct All-India tours which extended from 12 to 15 months. He used to say 'I am coming to make collections for Harijan Fund'. That was why he was very particular that, as soon as the day's work was over, to ask those of us around him or his private secretaries to count every pie that had been collected the whole day. Of course, he did compel us to count till late in the night and make an account. Is that, Sir, what is contemplated in this? Matadhipathis do not make similar collections at all. I wonder how the Hon. Sri Madhava Menon compared that example with this.

"The suggestion here is to worry a man because he is a Swami and because he knows philosophy and people gather round him. I would also draw the attention of the Hon. Minister to clause 11 of section 9 of the existing Act where the definition of 'Religious endowment' is given—

'Religious endowment or 'Endowment' means all property belonging to or given or endowed for the support of, maths or temples or for the performance of any service or charity connected therewith and includes the premises of maths or temples but does not include gifts of property made as personal gifts or offerings to the head of a math or to the archaka or other employee of a temple.'

It does not include gifts or property as personal gifts or offerings to the head of a math or to the archaka or other employee of a temple. Sir, this is a good and correct definition. The Hon. Minister always quotes from the old Act but somehow all the good things escape in the present Bill. This clause of the old Act has been divided into two sections, one with regard to archakas and the other with regard to maths, and at both places the same exception was made. With regard to archakas, there was a great deal of discussion. And with regard to maths, gifts given to archakas had been added up. It was true, Sir, that, at the time of the

Select Committee, possibly with a view to get something out of the Government, that particular wording 'for the purposes connected with the math' was accepted by some of my Friends (not by Sri K. Bhashyam). But, now, after having realized the implications, they are now seeing what it is.

"Then, Sir, I would draw your attention to the Administration Report of the Religious Endowment Board for the year 1949. On page 11, we find the following among the things which the matadhipathis sanctioned as donations, for example, by the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanam:—

Rs. 500 to Andhra Gana Kala Parishad.

Rs. 300 to Harijan Boys' Hostel, etc.

I therefore submit, Sir, that when these matadhipathis receive money, they also make gifts. I distinctly remember, Sir, that, when the matadhipathi of Kamakoti Pitam came to Visakhapatnam, moneys were given to him as gifts and he in turn used to make donations to some schools and other educational institutions.

"I therefore submit, Sir, that something must be done to provide for them—Raja Muthiah Chettiyar of Chettinad also said that something must be done for them. If his voice and tongue carry more persuasion than mine, will the Hon. Sri K. Madhava Menon be good enough to do it?"

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"A sort of sentimental note has been struck now."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Is he, Sir, right in saying that anything sentimental was said by me?"

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"I was only remarking that nothing new has been urged by the hon. Member in connexion with this motion. But one thing the hon. Member asked of us, and that was, whether we are going to ask the Members to account for Rs. 150 they are paid. I may observe in reply that if a sum of Rs. 150 is paid to him and to others, it is not for his act of renunciation or for being a sanyasin. He does not get large sums as pathakanika or from the assets of any math. Neither he nor I have attained the position which entitles us to receive Rs. 150 as pathakanika from the Government. He need not lay the flattering unction unto his soul that he is either a sanyasin or a matadhipathi. If sanyasins and matadhipathis are like him, there is nothing wrong in asking for accounts from them and for making them accountable to other people.

"Now there is only one point raised by my friend Mr. Bhashyam that remains to be answered. My friend said that the amendment of the Raja of Chettinad was accepted, perhaps because he was more influential."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"No, no. He has more persuasive power."

25th November 1950]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"The words used were: 'He had more influence with the committee'. I can only interpret what he actually said. I am incapable of understanding his intentions, because they are as elusive as many of the things he has said here. But, as regards his observation about the amendment of the Raja of Chettinad, I may say that if his amendment was accepted by the committee it was perhaps due to the fact that they might have felt that it was more reasonable than the other amendments. One could give such a charitable interpretation to the action of the committee and accept the fact that the committee are entitled to hold that Mr. Bhashyam's pleadings were not as reasonable as those of the Raja of Chettinad."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"That is exactly what I said."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, after all, reason and intelligence are not the monopoly of any particular individual or class of individuals. Let us not therefore think that everything good is to be found in what we suggest and that others are not capable of saying or doing anything good."

Clause 60 was put and carried.

Clause 61.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'That clause 61 do stand part of the Bill.'"

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"Sir, I have been patiently listening to the discussions . . ."

MR. SPEAKER:—"But the hon. Member has forgotten to address the Chair."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"I addressed the Chair, Sir, and I will do so again."

MR. SPEAKER:—"Not necessary to say twice."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I have been patiently listening to the learned disquisitions of various speakers on Chapter V where the Government have been kind enough to include a separate provision conferring a concession on the matadhipathis. The more I heard of the praise and the arguments in its favour advanced by my friends Sri Kandaswami Pillai and Swaminathan, the more I was confirmed in my belief that this so-called 'concession', is nothing but adding insult to the injury done already to the matadhipathis. They have already come under the clutches of the various omnibus definitions, etc. The all-embracing clauses of this Bill have not spared them in any respect. And now this special chapter is a spare provision as it were to make the matadhipathis abject slaves of the Government and of the popular representatives in the Legislature."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"In a way, Sir, all my friends here have been dwelling only on the duties of the matadhipathis. One of the arguments advanced by my friend Mr. Kandaswami Pillai was that, as we have achieved independence, we should teach them their duties. He forgot, Sir, that however humble an individual matadhipathi may be, he is also a citizen of this land and that if he has duties to perform, he has also got rights under the Constitution. Such being the case, what is it now that we have done to this class of persons whom,—in spite of the fact that many things were said against them,—lakhs of people outside this House hold in reverence. We have humiliated them and have tightened our control over them, and over their religious and secular duties."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"The hon. Member said, we have humiliated them? May I know for whom does the 'we' stand?"

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"The Members of this House. The various provisions you have already passed have humiliated them. I doubt very much whether this Bill will ever become an Act and deprive these people of their rights under the Constitution. Now, Sir, this clause 61 entitles the commissioner to pass an order asking the matadhipathi to appoint a manager, a 'competent' manager. 'Competent' in what sense I do not know. This clause has not made it clear. The commissioner, under this clause, gets the power to tell the matadhipathi to appoint a competent manager. If the matadhipathi fails to get a 'competent' manager, it is open to the commissioner to appoint a man of his own choice. It is the duty of this manager to submit accounts to the commissioner and manage the secular properties of the matadhipathi himself. Is this not an interference with the right of management which the matadhipathis possess, Sir? Again, even if the matadhipathi appoints a person according to the directions of the commissioner, this authority can still give other directions under this Act. When already you have power to compel the matadhipathi to submit his accounts to the commissioner, this additional power to him to direct the matadhipathi to do this and that is adding insult to injury. Let us not therefore claim that this chapter has been added as a concession to the matadhipathis. This chapter will only further tighten your control over the matadhipathis and bring them more and more under your clutches of iron, if not steel."

25th November 1950] [Sri L. N. Gopalaswami]

"We know, Sir, that these managers are not only to be appointed at the discretion of the commissioner, but that, even if the matadhipathi is willing to shoulder the responsibility of managing his religious and secular activities, this commissioner has the right to insist that a manager of his choice should be appointed. It has been alleged that the matadhipathis are wasting money, but nobody has said that there is no matadhipathi who is capable of taking charge of the religious and secular activities of the math. Under these circumstances I cannot agree to this provision which is the crowning act in this attempt at humiliation of the matadhipathis. Sir, I move—

'That clause 61 be deleted.'"

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"I second this amendment. In many cases the matadhipathis are themselves the trustees of the math. The great matadhipathis of the well-known maths have managers for the secular affairs of the math. Although we have been for sometime referring to 'secular affairs', I have been unable to find any definition for this term. There is no definition in the Bill for 'secular affairs'. The object of this Bill is to control the secular management of religious institutions: That is its declared intention and purpose, but 'secular affairs' have not been defined, though we make frequent reference to 'secular affairs'. All the other obstacles placed before the matadhipathi are not adequate in the opinion of the Hon. Minister for Law. He thinks that another gentleman called the manager must also be brought in. He should sit in the camp always so as to be able to tell tales against the matadhipathi and the math. This manager will have a double responsibility. He will be like a wife having two husbands—the trustee and the commissioner."

SRIMATHI AMMANNA RAJA:—"It is a bad example."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"I will draw the example. Whatever is bad in what I say I will withdraw. Sir, this manager is a subordinate of the trustee, but responsible also to the commissioner. Therefore, how will he discharge his duties? He will be simply reduced to the position of a tale-bearer carrying tales to the commissioner. If he is a man with an easy conscience, the matadhipathi might reverse the position. His very presence in such circumstances will have a demoralizing effect. This gentleman who is asked to be subordinate to the matadhipathi on the one side and the commissioner on the other will demoralize the administration. I submit therefore that this provision should not be there. Either you trust the matadhipathi or you don't trust him. If you don't trust him, make statutory rules for the maintenance of the maths and ask the matadhipathi to follow them? What is the use of putting in the manager, here who, as the hon. Member Mr. Bhashyam said, will be obliged to act like a spy in the camp? This is a very bad clause and one of the worst clauses in the Bill. As the mover of the amendment said, it would have been much better if the maths had not been put in a separate chapter at all."

Article 26 of the Fundamental Rights mentioned in the Constitution of India. Clause (d) of the article says that every religious denomination or any section thereof shall have the right to administer such property in accordance with law. I am not a lawyer, Sir, but I have been sufficiently long in the legislature to understand the language of the article. What is meant by 'law' here? Does it mean only the Constitution of India? Does it exclude any legislative enactment that may be made by the legislature here? I think, Sir, there is nothing to prohibit the legislature of this State from passing a law insisting on the appointment of a manager by the matadhipathi for the management of the secular affairs of the math. Hon. Members may think that these are small affairs, but I may tell them that the income ranges from Rs. 5 lakhs to Rs. 10 lakhs in some cases, that hundreds of villages are involved and it is necessary to have a responsible officer to look after the affairs. It is a notorious fact and it has been brought to the knowledge of the public that during the last few years, lands have been leased for very low figures in the case of these maths. Why should the spiritual head of the math, one who is supposed to be concentrating on the spiritual work, on the work of spreading Saiva Siddhantha, trouble himself with the income and expenditure side of the work? His concern is not with how the money is realized. Let a retired Collector, or a Deputy Collector look after the work and let the matadhipathi concern himself with how many times a day puja should be performed, how many people should be fed on the various occasions, what books should be placed in the library and so on. Let him suggest all these things and let the manager carry them out as far as possible. The activities of the matadhipathi should be confined to spiritual affairs of the math. I would have been happy if the Government had gone to the extent of saying that the manager should be appointed by the Government. Anyhow I hope that the matadhipathis will take note of the present clause and of the feelings in the country and in the House, and in the larger interests and better administration of the maths, themselves, with a view to see that no further legislation comes on top of this, appoint a responsible person as manager who, in the opinion of the Board and the Government, will be able to administer the secular affairs of the math properly. I am not mentioning this as a threat. But I hope that the matadhipathi will take note of modern trends and see that proper officers are appointed. For these reasons I strongly oppose the amendment for removing the clause from the Bill."

SRI K. R. KARANTH:—"Sir, I shall be quite short. The hon. Member who has just now referred to clause (d) of article 26 of the Constitution is misled by reading clause (d) alone. Article 26 says that every religious denomination or any section thereof (which includes the head of a math) shall have the right (1) to manage its own affairs in matters of religion and (2) to administer such property in accordance with law. The two things have to be read together. Therefore the management cannot be divested from them by saying that somebody else may be appointed as manager. It is not correct to say that the matadhipathi should look after only the spiritual affairs of the math, as the hon. Member the Raja of Chettinad said. It is not so easy in Hindu religion to divorce the religious from the secular affairs so absolutely. It is a wrong thing to say that the matadhipathi should confine himself to saying how many people should be fed and what ceremonies should be performed. Is it quite so easy to separate the two? It is not so easy, Sir. Secondly, Sir, my submission is this: that it is not possible, under Article 26, to say that you can force a manager upon him if he does not want one. I quite agree we have already passed clause 57 under which where a man is not doing the right thing and is unfit and persistently defaulting, he can be removed—I have no objection to that. But to have this sort of dual control, of forcing a manager upon him, is something like the health officers in municipalities now. The health officers in the municipalities do not care at all for the Municipal Councils; they look up to the Director of Public Health for his instructions. Similarly, a sort of dual control will be established here. I know of instances where the manager does not care at all for the person who is the swamiyar, but looks up to the Board. Any moment he is ready to come here and get his orders within twenty-four hours; he does not care to show his accounts even to the swami himself. Therefore, my submission is: if the man is bad and is persistently defaulting, by all means file a suit and remove him under clause 57; that is much better than forcing a manager upon him. My friend who spoke before me said there are other persons who are appointed by the swamiyar and so the manager also can be appointed. Sir, the swamiyar cannot do the work of collecting rents or attend to the little things, and, therefore, he must have some establishment. But it is one thing for him to appoint his establishment and it is quite a different thing to force a manager upon him. Therefore, I object to this clause because it is fundamentally opposed to Article 26 of the Constitution."

SRI R. V. SWAMINATHAN:—"Sir, the Raja of Chettinad opposed the amendment and he gave out his reasons; in addition to those reasons, I want to say this: under this clause, it is not necessary that every math should have a manager. It is only when the Commissioner thinks that a particular math should have a manager that he will call upon the matadhipathi to appoint a manager, and it is only in default of such appointment, the Commissioner will appoint one. Moreover, even now the choice of appointment is given to the matadhipathi and the Commissioner does not make the appointment in the first instance. Mr. Viswanatham said that the manager will have two masters; it is not correct; he will be subordinate only to the matadhipathi. He may of course be asked by the Commissioner to produce the registers, accounts and all that. It is a very modest clause, Sir. As a matter of fact, we may even insist on having a stronger provision that all the maths should have managers, but we don't ask for it. It is after all a compromise between the two views, and so I do not think there can be any objection to this clause being accepted, Sir."

Sri T. Viswanatham rose to speak.

MR. SPEAKER:—"When the amendment is put to the vote of the House, the hon. Member cannot speak again on the main motion, whether for or against."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"May I know when we rise, Sir?"

MR. SPEAKER:—"As soon as this clause is over, we shall disperse."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I oppose the amendment to delete the clause. The hon. Member Mr. Gopalaswami who moved the amendment, said that the Government have made a concession: but all his arguments were to the effect: you have put him under your clutches, and this will be the crowning act by which you are putting him under your clutches for all time. Whatever some hon. Members may feel, Sir, I do not at all think this House has heaped any insults on the matadhipathi: on the other hand, insults have been heaped on matadhipathis by others outside the House; and if such insults came from outsiders, I am not concerned with them here. My hon. Friends know that this House has not in any way insulted any matadhipathi, and I must certainly protest against the remark made that this House has been insulting matadhipathis."

"Sri Viswanatham and Sri Bhashyam said that the manager will be a tale-bearer, a spy in the camp; I can also say so many things like that, but they will not be quite relevant to the issue here. But Mr. Bhashyam himself has given notice of an amendment . . ."

MR. SPEAKER:—"That is to add a new clause 61-A."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"I refer to another amendment which he gave notice of but which was not accepted by the House. There he said—

"Every math having an income not more than Rs. 10,000 a year, shall appoint a manager for the management of the properties of the math. Such an officer shall be approved by the Judicial Tribunal . . ."

This Tribunal which he suggested, Sir, is as much extraneous to the math as the Commissioner: the Tribunal itself was to consist of three persons who all of them would be as extraneous to the math as the Commissioner, if not more. As stated by my friends, the Commissioner may be a servant of Government; but the principle involved here is whether an outside authority can approve or compel the appointment of a manager. The Judicial

Tribunal which Mr. Bhashyam contemplated was a Tribunal to be appointed by the Government even as the Commissioner is to be appointed by them. Mr. Bhashyam's amendment stated—

"Such a manager shall be whole-time officer of the math . . . He shall be in office for a period of five years in the first instance and the Council"—that is, Council of Sishyas—"is entitled to extend the term of office . . . The manager shall be in custody of all the properties and records of the math and be responsible for the maintenance of true and correct accounts of the receipts and disbursements."

So, the manager contemplated in this clause 61, is no more than that. He has to do the same duties, be in charge of records and keep correct accounts, etc. As regards reference by Mr. Karanth, to the Constitution, clause (b) under Article 26 says that every religious denomination shall have the right 'to manage its own affairs in matters of religion'. In this clause 61 also, we have specifically said that a manager shall be appointed 'for the administration of the secular affairs of a math'. And we have also said that 'the manager appointed . . . shall be subordinate to the trustee of the math and shall, in addition to the trustee, be responsible for the due submission to the Commissioner of the registers, accounts and budgets of the math'. So that, this is quite consistent with what Mr. Bhashyam has stated in his amendment. There are no insults there, there is no spying there or tale-bearing there: but when it comes to the question of a clause, including all these, moved by the Government, it becomes tell-tale, spying, insult and all that and he makes anything out of it. Sir, the manager may be good or bad; only he will not be Mr. Bhashyam's manager."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"I want to make a few remarks, Sir. It is hardly fair for a responsible Member of Government to take a portion of what I have given as an amendment out of the setting altogether and compare it with the present provision in this clause and say that it precludes me from stating what I have said. He might not have said so in so many words, but he implied it, I know. What I want to point out is this: the whole setting of my amendment was that there should be a Judicial Tribunal consisting of three persons, one a High Court Judge or a retired High Court Judge and two others who are District Judges or retired District Judges. I said they were to be nominated no doubt; but they were to be an independent judicial body; they will not look at Government for promotion and they will be quite independent of Government and Government control. Then again, under my amendment, there is to be a Council of Sishyas and if under them there is to be a manager, it will be perfectly alright, because they are all interested in the math. But here you have got a hierarchy of officers, persons who will pounce on any slightest pretext—if I may say so—who, if they see there is really anything wrong with the math; will be anxious to get the properties into their own hands and the whole management into their own hands. I know it myself, and I can give you any number of instances to prove this; and that is why I wanted to have a Judicial Tribunal consisting of High Court Judges and District Judges. So, Sir, I submit this reference to my amendment ought not to have been made and it is not at all fair on the part of the Hon. Minister to make the comparison in the way in which he did."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"Sir, Mr. Bhashyam has made my work easy so far as the allegations against him are concerned. So far as I am able to perceive the position of the manager, it only reminds me of the Government's Agents General in the so-called sovereign States of India in the old days ruled by the Maharajas. We knew what these Agents were, what they were doing in the so-called sovereign States of our country, of what use they were to the Imperial Government in discharging their duties. There is no difference between those Agents and these managers here whom the Government are going to appoint. It only serves to emphasize my argument that the Government want not only to interfere with the secular affairs of the math, but they want to know the intricacies of the math, as my hon. friend Mr. Viswanatham put it, so that they can blame him for anything and everything, with the help of some secret information which the so-called manager may give them. That is the very reason why I say this is the greatest insult we can offer to the matadhipathi. This Act on the part of the Government in introducing a manager . . ."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The hon. Member seems to have misunderstood the position. Government do not want to appoint the manager; the trustee will appoint the manager."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"If the trustee refuses or if he is not willing, the Government will appoint him. It is definitely put in here: 'in default of such appointment, the Commissioner may himself make the appointment.'"

"Then again, Sir, the hon. Raja of Chettinad, though he said he was not well-versed in law, pointed out that we can make provision under clause (d) of Article 26. That has also been the view of Government all along, from the time they sought to introduce this Bill up to now. Though I do not claim to have legal knowledge to contradict the Government, I can respectfully draw their attention to the recent judgment of Justice Pathanjali Sastri in what is known as A. K. Gopalan's case where the subject-matter of the question that came up for decision was whether when there is a provision in the Constitution regarding certain fundamental rights of an individual, a State can make laws over-riding that provision, and according to Justice Pathanjali Sastri, it is absolutely unwarranted on the part of the State Government. I should like to place before the House the following few sentences occurring in that judgment:—

"The Constitution assures to the citizen the dignity of the individual and other cherished human values as a means to the full evolution and expression of his personality and in delegating to the Legislature the executive and the judiciary, their respective powers in the Constitution reserved to themselves, certain fundamental rights, so-called, I apprehend because they have been retained by the people and made paramount to the delegated powers as in the American Model." And those of the American Judges quoted therein, that "The great and essential rights of the people are secured not by laws paramount to prerogative, but by constitutions paramount to laws." "You shall not take away life or personal freedom unless you choose to take it away."

In the light of these remarks of the learned Judge of the Supreme Court, I hope, Sir, even now it is not too late for the Government to decide on this matter and not interfere with religion."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Only one word, Sir. I have nothing to say in reply to Mr. Gopalaswami. I have read the judgment sufficiently well and also the fundamentals of law and I also realize what it is in regard to the matter. I have no quarrel with what he has said. But, Mr. Bhashyam in his personal explanation said, that there is a world of difference between the Manager to be appointed according to his conception and the Manager to be appointed by the Government. I would only say this, that the principle involved is the same. The principle was whether an outside authority has any right to insist on the appointment of a manager. You may call it an entirely judicial body or anything. There are three persons appointed to look after the thing. They may be High Court Judges or Advocates. It does not make them any less extraneous than the Commissioner. They will be members of the Board, instead of one Commissioner. Mr. Bhashyam wants the Board. The qualifications of a member of the Board will be an Advocate of 20 years standing or a retired Judge of the High Court. He calls that Board a Judicial Tribunal and I call it an individual Commissioner. The question is whether the Commissioner can appoint the Manager or the Board. What I said was, the Manager shall be appointed by the matadhipathi and it is only in his default the Commissioner may appoint a manager, but Mr. Bhashyam says, it shall have the approval of the Judicial Tribunal. The principle is after all the same. That is what I said . . ."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Then, Sir, if he accepts the principle of my amendment, it will be all right."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

'That clause 61 be deleted.'"

The amendment was lost.

Clause 61 was put and carried.

THE MADRAS LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Monday, the 4th December 1950.

The House met in the Assembly Chamber, Fort St. George, at eleven of the clock, Mr. Speaker (THE HON. SRI J. SIVA SHANMUGAM PILLAI) in the Chair.

[4th December 1950]

BILL, 1949 (L.A. BILL NO. 10 OF 1949) discussion—cont.

New clause 61-A.

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—“ Mr. Speaker, Sir, I move—

‘ After clause 61, add a new clause 61-A as follows :—

In moving this amendment, I am not suggesting any great departure from the existing position. If you refer to section 3 (a) of the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act, 1926, you will find that it reads as follows :—

‘ The local Government may, after consulting the Board, exempt any such endowment from the operation of all or any of the provisions of this Act or vary, alter or cancel such exemption.’

If the Government feel that the management of certain maths is all right and that they need not step in, I suggest that the power of exempting such maths be reserved to the Government. You are aware that in the course of the discussion some of us made out that maths and matadhipathis should not have been brought within the purview of this Bill at all. That has not been agreed to and certain clauses relating to them have already been passed and included in the Bill. On the showing of the Hon. Minister piloting this Bill, they have been given special treatment inasmuch as they have been given a special chapter. The Government having conceded that maths and matadhipathis require special treatment, it will be in the fitness of things if they accede to the popular opinion that the Government should exempt such maths with respect to which they are satisfied that they are properly managed and that they need not step in. The amendment is a very modest one. It vests complete discretion to exempt or not to exempt in the Government. It does not say that the Government should exempt from the operation of all the clauses of the Bill. It only says that the Government can exempt from the operation of all or any of the provisions. The idea is that if, and in so far as, the Government are satisfied, they may exempt from all or particular clauses of the Bill. In accepting the amendment, the Hon. Minister will not be departing from the existing position. As I have already drawn your attention in the beginning, the Government have the power of exemption under the existing Act and I only want it to be carried forward in this Bill.”

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA :—“ Mr. Speaker, Sir, I second the amendment and do so with pleasure. Hon. Friend Sri T. Viswanatham has been very considerate to the Government in this matter. Of his own accord he has hedged in his amendment with several safeguards. Some of the maths may be conducting their business on perfectly good lines. The good sense of the Government must make them understand that it is not everybody that can be trudged upon. There are certain persons and certain institutions which cannot be brought into the general line of treatment. All that the Mover of the amendment asks for is that, on account of the holiness attached to particular maths and the satisfaction of the Government about their proper management, the Government need not unnecessarily provoke, or create annoyance to the matadhipathis. Matadhipathis are really great men and they cannot be provoked.

“ Sir, let me give an illustration of what I mean. Take for instance the Sri Sankara Math. Any Sankara Math, wherever it has been established is being conducted and administered on ideological lines. Not one worshipper could say any word against that math. When there is such a universal chorus of praise with regard to the reputation of that math and its administration, why should the Government think that they must have their say on its management? But it might be argued that when once this Bill is made applicable to all maths, how can we make a distinction between one math and another. I ask, are you not making a distinction between one great leader and another? Are you not making a distinction between the sons of a same father? Perhaps, there is no distinction made in the case of a daughter, because, immediately there is resentment and we have also made laws about it. But, what I want to say is, just as there are several things in the world which are held in great esteem and respect, by reason of their virtue and reputation, equally so, there are certain maths which are held in high esteem and respect, because of the greatness of the matadhipathi and the manner in which the affairs of the maths are conducted and managed. Therefore it is but just and proper that they should be given the respect due to them and treated on a separate footing and not be brought on the same basis as so many other ordinary maths by applying the principle of democracy, equality, fraternity and brotherhood. Such an argument need not be adduced in regard to this matter. I therefore support the amendment of my hon. Friend Sri T. Viswanatham which is a very modest and a very reasonable one, namely, that in certain cases where the Government have reason to believe and are satisfied that the affairs of the maths are carried on in a very satisfactory way, they should hold up their hands from any uncanny interference in them. Not only that, but the Government should also aid them in preserving their dignity by showing the respect due to them.”

SRI R. V. SWAMINATHAN :—“ Mr. Speaker, Sir, I oppose this amendment of my hon. Friend Sri T. Viswanatham. I am however glad that he wants to give power to the Government at least in this respect, though he was all along opposing the Government wherever they wanted to take powers under this Bill. Now, here he wants to give power to the Government, not to apply the provisions of this Bill in certain cases. Both my hon. Friends Sri T. Viswanatham and Sri V. Raghavayya said that this amendment is a very modest and a very mild and a very reasonable one. It is modest in this sense, that they wanted originally that all the maths should be excluded from the operation of this Bill, but now they want that certain maths might be exempted from this Bill, if the Government so wish. Perhaps they think that if this new clause is accepted, they might convince the Hon. Minister to exclude certain particular maths from the operation of this Bill, and it is in that view that this is a modest amendment. But so far as I am concerned, I have no doubt, that this amendment is not at all a modest one, but on the other hand, it is worse even in a certain sense, because it is discriminatory and wants to exempt certain maths from the operations of this Bill. We do not want to give the Government that power and we do not want to give room to anybody to think that they can approach the Government or the Minister-in-charge and get exemption in regard to certain maths. If they want certain maths to be exempted from this Bill, let them bring in a separate Bill or a separate amendment to that effect. It is open to them to do so. But the Government and the House as at present constituted should not exempt any maths from the provisions of this Bill, because that is the view of the majority of the members of this House and I therefore oppose this amendment, Sir."

L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I rise to support this amendment. I would only plead with the Government that they would be putting their professions into practice if they accept this amendment, because they have been good enough to say, 'We are aware that there are certain maths which are doing excellent work and the matadhipathis of which are certainly very great and respected people, and they will not be interfered with'. They have also been saying all along that there are only certain people who are bad and certain maths that are not managed properly and that it is only to bring those people and those maths under the clutches of the law, that they are enacting this Bill. That being the case, does it not stand to reason that they must accept this amendment, which only gives them the power to exempt any maths or such of the maths which they think are properly managed, from the operation of this Bill or of any of the provisions of this Bill? Sir, in spite of what my hon. Friend Sri R. V. Swaminathan has said, I cannot agree with him that the Bill should be made applicable to all the maths without any distinction or that a new Bill should be brought for that purpose. If the Government think that there are certain well-managed maths, and their management should not be interfered with, I do not see any reason why such a provision as this should not be made in this very clause itself."

SRI V. M. RAMASWAMI MUDALIYAR:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, the hon. Mover of this amendment said that this is a very modest amendment. The only modesty that I can see in this amendment is in the very modest and persuasive speech that he made in support of the amendment. Sir, it has been agreed by the House after a very long and argumentative debate, that maths should be brought within the purview of this legislation, and I think that much of the wind has been taken off the sails. If this amendment is accepted, it will mean we are giving a discriminatory power to Government to enable them to exempt certain maths if they want, and not others. Such a power, I submit, cannot be given to the Government. The law, as far as it is possible, should be administered uniformly and without any discrimination, and a discriminatory power like this to be vested in the hands of the Minister in charge of this particular department is not very healthy, and even in many of the speeches made by my hon. Friend Sri T. Viswanatham himself, in this House before, he has stressed this point of view on many an occasion. For that reason alone, I am inclined to oppose this amendment.

"Sir, the other argument that has been advanced is, that the Government, even on their own showing, have admitted that there are certain good maths and good matadhipathis. Certainly so. I am aware that there are certain good matadhipathis just as there are bad ones. But, it may also happen that a matadhipathi may be very good to-day, but may become very bad in course of time. Or it may happen, that a good matadhipathi might be succeeded by a bad person, and he might mismanage the affairs of the math, just as a good king is succeeded by a bad king. One instance is prominently in my mind and I believe it may be in the minds of some of my hon. Friends also. In a certain math, there was once a very great, learned and pious matadhipathi who was looking after the affairs of the math very well and was greatly respected by all the disciples, but he was succeeded by another matadhipathi who wasted away most of the property of the math in the course of a few months and was leading a life, about which, the less said, the better. So, if the Government should exempt one math, because it is administered properly by the present matadhipathi, the successor to him may squander away its property and the Government may have to take power to cancel that notification. An enquiry and re-enquiry will be the order of the day. On the other hand, it is better that we have a uniform law. So far as the provisions relating to the matadhipathi under Chapter V are concerned, the Government have taken care to see that none of them shall infringe or impair the spiritual dignity of the head of the math. The honour and the respect due to him are safeguarded in that chapter. Even with regard to the appointment of a manager to be in charge of the secular affairs of the math, the matadhipathi has full powers under this Bill and the Government can do so only in consultation with him. Therefore, what I am saying is, that this House and the Government, have, as far as possible, taken care to see that the spiritual dignity of the matadhipathi is not in any way affected by any undue interference in the affairs of the math. To that extent it is correct. The majority of the members in this House have agreed to the various provisions contained in Chapter V of this Bill relating to maths. Some of the members, including myself wanted that the matadhipathi should have an advisory committee to advise and assist him in administering the affairs of the math, but the Hon. Minister who is piloting this Bill in this House, had his own arguments to adduce, why an advisory committee is unnecessary and should not be constituted. So far as the dignity of the matadhipathi is concerned, the House is one with the hon. Members who have sponsored this amendment in safeguarding the dignity due to the matadhipathi as the spiritual head. So far as the secular administration of the math is concerned, I submit it is not proper that this discriminatory power should vest with the Government or the Minister-in-charge; there should be one uniform law for all the maths and religious institutions."

SRI S. CHIDAMBARA AYYAR:—Mr. Speaker, Sir, I support this amendment. When certain hon. Friends urged that maths should be excluded from the provisions of this Bill, the Hon. Minister said that in the prior Act itself there was an exemption provision with regard to the inclusion of maths in the said Act which also contains a provision for exemption clause in appropriate cases. It is, therefore, my hon. Friend, Sri T. Viswanatham, has moved this amendment introducing this exemption clause. It is necessary that the Government should give exemption to such of those maths which are working properly and not apply these provisions to them. From that point of view, I really think that this is a modest amendment.

"Another point that I want to submit is this. My hon. Friend, Sri V. Raghavayya, referred to Sri Sankara Math. Even in the opening speech made by the hon. ex-Premier Sri O. P. Ramaswami Reddiar when he introduced this Bill before a large number of members of this assembly he admitted frankly that the Sankara Math was being administered properly and well. There are other maths also like that, as for instance, the Singeri Math, which is doing very good work. It is desirable that such maths should be exempted from the operations of this Bill and it is only for that purpose, necessary power is sought to be given to the Government under this exemption clause. My hon. Friend, Sri V. M. Ramaswami Mudaliyar, said that if exemption is given to a math where there is a good matadhipathi, a bad person might succeed him and squander away the property of the math and hence this power should not vest with the Government. I submit, Sir, that if there is a bad matadhipathi who mismanages the affairs of a math, the Government have enough powers under the various other provisions of this Bill to take the necessary action to remove that person. Therefore, I submit, there is not much point in that argument. With these words, I support the amendment moved by my hon. Friend, Sri T. Viswanatham."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—Mr. Speaker, Sir, I am sorry I am not able to support the amendment of my hon. Friend, Sri T. Viswanatham. But in saying that, I want to draw the attention of the Government to the clause itself, and to the working of this clause, when actually controls are sought to be imposed. If the desire is to treat maths on a special footing, it can be done under clause 61 itself. It may not be necessary even to compel these trustees to appoint managers, because the clause, though it uses the word 'shall' is immediately followed by the saving clause 'when so required by the Commissioner' which gives them the necessary authority. The heads of maths will not place themselves in the position of having to be advised by the Commissioner to appoint a manager for the administration of the secular affairs of the math. In fact, as experience has shown, good matadhipathis have already appointed managers in their institutions to look after their secular affairs. They are now in charge of the secular affairs of those maths. It would be unwise for any Commissioner who comes hereafter to seek to appoint a new manager by ousting the present one.

"The appointment will always be made by the trustee according to the provisions in this Bill. But, as you are aware, Sir, there are many ways of making these people act. It would be most unwise—and perhaps I may use the word 'reprehensible'—to compel a matadhipathi to act against his wishes and appoint a man who may be persona grata with the Commissioner, but who may not be liked by the matadhipathi, in which case there will be an unfortunate conflict in the management. Clause 61 makes it clear that he will deal only with the secular affairs. In sub-clause (b) it is stated that he will be responsible for the due submission of the accounts, etc., as required by the statute. It will be so done even without his being asked to do so. That would be the line all good people will take. I do not like this talk about good and bad people always coming up before this House. Let there be, even for the purpose of argument, an assumption that there is lot of good in these institutions. It may be that some of them are mismanaged. Just as my predecessor spoke, there is an instance or two now before the public eye, where the matadhipathi, having been succeeded by one of his disciples, has been helped deliberately to squander away lot of money by his advisers—and some of his advisers have been friends in the bar. This is most unfortunate. I also know the instance in point, and I have been trying to reach these people not to mislead this poor man, who has been put to heavy loss by being drawn into case after case and by being led into a life of vulgar race-going and even debaucherous conduct. This is a very unfortunate case. But it is not such cases that should enable us to promote legislation. Legislation should be on the general basis that a certain amount of control is required for all people both for good and for bad. Legislation should be so enforced as not to put every man to the test, so to say. We must believe in their bona fides. Some of them are eminent scholars. We must trust to their good sense, and nothing should be done from here to make them choose this or that particular person. That is the contingency of which I am most afraid. I have voiced this feeling long before this morning. I certainly do want a certain amount of control over the secular affairs of the math which will be enforced not by the Government or by the officers appointed by the Government but by the wise trustee himself in his own interests and in the interests of the math."

SRI P. KANDASWAMI PILLAI :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I oppose the amendment. All along, my hon. Friend, Mr. Viswanatham, tried his level best to oppose almost all the proposals of the Government. He could not succeed in his attempts. Now he wants to place the Government at least in the wrong by introducing this new clause. The Government always want to be fair to one and all, and they do not want to show any distinction between matadhipathis. Of course there are good matadhipathis. Here and there there may be bad people also. But when we enforce certain laws for all the maths and matadhipathis, we cannot make any differences. That will not be fair. If we do so, motive will be attributed to the person in charge of this portfolio. Therefore it is a very dangerous thing. This amendment must not be accepted. My hon. Friend, Mr. Varadachari, feared very much that the matadhipathis would be compelled to appoint some men whom the Commissioner liked. It is not at all the case. The Commissioner will only ask the matadhipathi to appoint a manager. Further, the clause emphasises that the manager shall be responsible for the submission of the budget and other required particulars. This does not mean that the Commissioner will take the law into his own hands and ask the matadhipathi to appoint any person whomsoever the Commissioner likes. There is, therefore, no cause for fear. I oppose the amendment, Sir."

SRI K. BRAHMANANDAM REDDI :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I am opposed to this dangerous amendment. The reasons are obvious. The fair name of any Government requires that we should not arm the Government with such a very extraordinary power. Further, the amendment is advanced and argued upon on a wrong assumption, namely, the hon. Member, Mr. Viswanatham, in moving his amendment, stated that the Government themselves had admitted that there were good matadhipathis, and therefore, they should not interfere with good maths. But, I say there is no interference at all with the matadhipathis. The chapter on maths does not give the Commissioner or the Government any power to unduly interfere with any matadhipathi or math. That is why, I say, Sir, that the amendment is argued on a wrong premises. 'Unduly' means that if the math and the matadhipathi conduct themselves well, no power is given under this clause for the Government or the Commissioner to interfere with them. Another more dangerous point that I wish to say in this connexion is that the Chief Secretariat will become a matam itself where the votaries that hover about will be the matadhipathis themselves. This is very dangerous and should be avoided. That is why, Sir, I am opposed to this amendment."

SRI M. S. PATTABHIRAMIAH :—" Sir, I have great pleasure in supporting this amendment. While doing so, I wish to protest emphatically against the insinuations made by certain hon. Members—especially my hon. Friend, Mr. R. V. Swaminatham—who stated that the Minister would be influenced to exempt some maths."

4th December 1950] [Sri M. S. Pattabhiramiah]

SRI R. V. SWAMINATHAN :—" Sir, I rise on a point of personal explanation. I never said that the Minister would be influenced. My point was that they might try to convince the Minister, and they might convince him."

SRI M. S. PATTABHIRAMIAH :—" Sir, the hon. Member's explanation makes my point clearer. He believes that the hon. Minister might be made to exempt certain maths wrongfully. That is what he meant. Sir, we have got a democratic Constitution. Every voter has a right to become a Minister. When we expect that the Minister is the paragon of virtue and efficiency, to cast such an aspersion upon him is really not good. Further, I wish to say that this amendment is a good one. However, it is not an apt one. I do not believe it is really a dangerous one, because the Government are reserving power to themselves. Reserving powers to the Government can never be dangerous. Here we are only reserving certain powers to the Government. It is left to the Government to use or not to use those powers. As was pointed out by some hon. Members some matadhipathis may be good and some others may be bad. Here I wish to mention the Rajatharangani by Kalhana, written in Sanskrit, of the Kashmir Kings. One or two great kings of Kashmir in the middle ages, the men who built temples and endowed maths in Kashmir, themselves took over the riches and jewels from the maths and temples. But they left out some of the maths. They interfered with the monasteries and maths, which were built and endowed by other kings. Some temples and maths were not interfered with by the kings. I am only giving a historical instance. Therefore, I say, the Government can reserve that right to themselves. We do find that the same good person becomes a bad man. Some of the historic persons have been good, have been efficient, and have become bad. They have been virtuous and also vicious in their lives. Whenever the Government think it necessary they may exercise all or any provisions of this Bill over all or any maths. Here I want to point out that my hon. Friend, Mr. Varadachari, while opposing this amendment, was obsessed by the provisions in clause 61. He was explaining and interpreting the text of clause 61. That was not quite relevant to the amendment. This amendment wants that any math which is properly administered may be left to itself, and the Government need not apply the provisions of this Bill. That is all that is intended. I wish the Government accept the amendment."

SRI D. V. RAMASWAMI :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, it looks to me rather unfortunate that the wording of the amendment proposed by the hon. Member, Mr. Viswanatham, has not properly been understood by hon. Friends who opposed the amendment. Particularly after the hon. Minister, Mr. Viswanatham, pointed out the existence of such a provision in the original Act itself, the Government could certainly accept the amendment. The Government now are much more democratic than they were twenty years ago. It is quite reasonable and fair that nobody should suspect any trouble by such reservation of powers. The Government are democratic and they are dependent upon the consent of the people. This is a very important matter concerning both religious and secular matters. The acceptance of this amendment does not take away the provisions already passed in respect of maths. The Government themselves have got great respect for and faith in the proper administration of certain maths at least. They do not have anything bad to say against those maths as such. I feel that this amendment ought to have been moved by the Government themselves inasmuch as it only reserves powers to the Government to exempt any math from the operations of all or any of the provisions of this Bill. This amendment is proper and should be accepted by the Government."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, indeed it is a very welcome relief that this amendment shows a little bit of confidence in the Government—not that there was want of confidence at any time. I say that because this is a very great power offered to the Government to exempt any math, without even assigning any reasons, from the operation of all or any of the provisions of this Bill. This is a very great patronage and power offered to the Government. This is a great temptation for the Government. But the Government want to make a great act of renunciation in not accepting this temptation offered to them."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"Please do not become matadhipathis!"

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"My hon. Friend, Mr. Gopalaswami, asks whether the Government would become matadhipathis. We do not want this power patronage. At least in this matter we are prepared to renounce that power. Sir, the hon. Member, Mr. Viswanatham, in moving his amendment to some other clause passed already was saying that the Government shall not have the power of doing this or that regarding the appointment of the Commissioner or Deputy Commissioner, etc."

"I casually remarked that powers of reservation may be necessary. Then, Sri Viswanatham said that party considerations and group considerations will come in. This morning when I was correcting the proof of my speech I noticed that instances were not wanting where powers have been unconsciously used for a particular purpose of a party or group and things like that. So we do not want to take more powers than necessary. This Bill will be passed this year. Next year there will be general elections and we may not be here and somebody else may be here. We do not want the temptation to be there. Hon. Sri Viswanatham says that he did not mean this particular Government. I say that I do not want this temptation for any Government that may come in future. The exemption of some of the maths is a temptation and I do not want the House to give us this temptation. I find that in the amendment provision is made only to exempt any math whenever the Government may want and there is no mention of cancellation by notification when necessary. So it is an absolute power of exemption that is offered. We have discussed at great length the question whether these maths should be included in this Bill or not. According to section 3 of the old Act it was said that 'the Local Government may after consulting the Board, exempt any such endowment from the operation of all or any of the provisions of this Act or vary alter or cancel such exemption.' Such exemptions included not only maths, but temples, special endowments and everything. Powers to cancel the exemptions was also provided according to the old Act. The present amendment deals with only maths. If this question of exemption had come before the House much earlier, that is, before we discussed the question of the inclusion of maths in this Bill, I can understand it. Now we have disposed of everything in relation to maths in general. At this stage the hon. Member comes and says, 'Here it is. You take the power to exempt any one of the maths that you may consider necessary.' I feel that such a provision is not necessary. I entirely agree with hon. Member Sri Munagala Pattabhiramayya that we do not want to cast aspersions on any person. But at the same time, we have to say as the Lord said, 'Stand thee behind the Devil.' Similarly I have to observe at this temptation; 'Stand thee behind. We do not want the power that you offer.' If, however, an occasion arose necessitating our having this power, we will certainly come before the House. We are interested as much as anybody in the proper administration and management of these religious institutions. We will come before this House when we find that such a provision for the exemption of certain maths is necessary. For the time being, we do not feel that such a provision is necessary."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I am surprised, or I should say that I am not surprised at the line of argument adopted first by hon. Sri R. V. Swaminathan who was ably followed by hon. Sri Ramaswamy Mudaliar and also at the Hon. Minister falling into that line completely. That line of argument consists only in twitting and not considering the merits of the amendment. In political and legislative debates, it has become a habit to be exchanging words a little with each other. Therefore he has fallen into that temptation. He said that he will stand back from the devil. I would like to ask who is it that stands from the devil. I say that the whole Bill is based upon the devil. The whole Bill is based upon the temptation of taking about 30,000 institutions into Government administration. Irrespective of the language of the Constitution, regardless of the promises made by the constitution-makers to the owners of these endowments and maths and other charitable trusts in this State, with utter and deliberate disregard of all these, the Government have fallen into

this temptation and have put their finger on the properties of every institution. To-day I have tried to lead them away from that temptation. But the Government have taken powers to control and manage the properties and affairs of these institutions. So, when they have taken such powers, I only say that they must at least have the power to exempt certain religious institutions. This is not at all a contradiction. What I say is this. Let the Government have powers of exemption. Of course, I am opposed to the Government having any sort of administrative control over these religious institutions in the manner in which they are doing. However, if they have power to exercise control over these institutions, my point is that they must also have power to exempt. At a latter date, they may get cases where it would be necessary for them to exempt certain institutions from the operation of this Act. This is not at all a contradiction. It is only supplementary argument to what I have been saying in the past. This follows logically if only the Hon. Minister is good enough to follow the line of argument and reasoning advanced by me. I am not going to go through the various positions raised by the Hon. Minister. They have been torn from the context. I know very well when the Government is to be given power and when they should not be given powers. The entire Bill is based upon temptation. If the Government sincerely want to stand away from temptation, and if only they want to stand also away from other men's properties, let them drop this Bill altogether and let them frame a different Bill having a different language, different sections and different objects and reasons, and also a different temper. They are standing on the very brim of temptation and say: 'Oh! You are the devil offering temptation. We do not want it.' Of course, I am not at all offended, and that does not matter. However, I do submit that when we are dealing with certain clauses under which the Government have taken ample powers and when the trustees, Area Committees, Commissioner, Deputy Commissioner and Assistant Commissioners are sought to be appointed and given certain powers, it only follows logically that the Government should also have the power of exemption. In this connexion, I wish to draw your attention to another Act in which the Government took power to notify and did not take power of cancellation. There they have brought themselves into a big mess. I refer to the legislation relating to the abolition of zamindaries. With regard to certain inams, Settlement Officers have been appointed under the Act. In spite of our opposition on the floor of the House, the Government said that these officers will decide various cases. When these officers gave their decision in respect of any particular inam, the Government turn round and say now that they are not bound by the decision of these officers. When many people approached the Government and requested for the cancellation of their previous notification, the Government's reply was, 'Well, we have not taken powers of cancellation'. So they have brought themselves into a big mess. This is a very important piece of legislation. According to my humble opinion, whenever the Government take powers of control, power of exemption should also follow suit in the natural course of things. I only submit that this amendment is given only from that point of view. Some of the hon. Members said that it is dangerous to accept the amendment. I do not know how it is dangerous. It is not a question of confidence or no confidence. I have always been explaining the juristic principle that the executive should not be allowed to have too much power. The Government should have power to retract a step. Whenever they make two steps, I mean two wrong steps, they must retrace one of the steps immediately they come to know that it was a wrong step. That is the reason and rationale with which I have moved my amendment and I request the Hon. Minister to reconsider the matter."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"Sir, hon. Member Sri Viswanatham said that he knew when the Government should be given power and when they should not be given power, and that the Government have taken powers to deal with other men's properties which itself was a great temptation and all that. I entirely disagree with him when he says that we are dealing with other men's properties. We are dealing with trustees of temples and maths. Matadhipathis are also trustees in a sense. We are therefore dealing with trustees and properties that are in their hands. So we are not dealing with other men's properties; we are dealing with the properties of those people who have entrusted them to certain persons to see that the trustees perform their functions and manage the properties according to the intention of the persons who might have given the donations or according to the intentions for which the properties might have been given. I certainly do not agree that they are other men's properties. We are as much interested as anybody else in these properties and I should say that the people as a whole have a right to see that the trust property is properly managed and administered and that they were not misappropriated and mismanaged and also to see that nothing was done which was against the wishes and intentions of the donors. It is not a case of taking other men's properties. Very great powers are sought to be offered under the amendment under discussion. We feel that it is not necessary that we should have such powers now. Hon. Sri Viswanatham prophesies that a day will come when we will regret for not having the powers of exemption. If, however, such a day were to come, I am sure we are not going to stand on the question of prestige. We will certainly refer the matter back to this House and say 'We are sorry we did not accept your advice. We have found out the difficulties for want of such powers. So please give us the powers of exemption'. Now for the present, let us wait without such powers."

[4th December 1950]

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

After clause 61, add a new clause 61-A as follows:—

"61-A. The Provincial Government may exempt any mutt and institutions connected therewith from the operation of all or any of the provisions of this Act."

The amendment was lost.

Clause 62.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'That clause 62 do stand part of the Bill.'

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I beg to move the following amendment:—

For the words "Subject to the rights of suit or appeal hereinafter provided, the Deputy Commissioner shall have power to inquire into and decide the following disputes and matters", substitute the following:—

"The Commissioner suo moto or on the application of any person having interest, may apply to a Court for a decision on the following disputes and matters."

Sir, here again we have come to the fundamental aspect of the question. Just now the Hon. Minister said that the Government shall not have temptation. Clause 62 is the biggest temptation for the Government and its officers. Let them avoid that temptation and accept my amendment instead of being influenced by the Commissioner or Deputy Commissioner appointed by the Government. The Hon. Minister was making a general remark that I was not interested in the proper management and administration of these institutions. (The Hon. Sri K. Madhava Menon: 'No, no. I did not say like that.') Well, he says that he did not say like that. I am sorry then. Anyway, I thought I heard him say that the Government alone were interested in the proper management and administration of the religious institutions and others were not interested. (The Hon. Sri K. Madhava Menon: 'I meant the House.') Sometimes it is this House, sometimes it will be the Government and sometimes it will be hon. Sri R. V. Swaminathan himself. (Laughter.) It is very necessary that the matter should go to a Court and it should not be decided by the Deputy Commissioner, whether it is a religious institution or not. This goes to the very fundamental position on which the entire jurisdiction of the officer himself and the Government themselves is founded. It is not proper to ask the Deputy Commissioner to decide such matters.

"It is the Deputy Commissioner that would take possession of all these endowments on the ground that they are religious endowments and it would be the height of absurdity, I would say, to allow him to do so. Suppose a doubt arises. Suppose a person denies that a particular endowment is a religious endowment within the meaning of the Act and the Deputy Commissioner says that it is not so. In such cases, there must be somebody else to decide the matter. No man can be a judge in his own case and this is a proposition which will not be denied by anybody.

"Secondly, Sir, he is asked to decide whether a trustee holds or held office as a hereditary trustee. These Deputy Commissioners are persons for whom, no qualifications have been prescribed in the Bill. Anybody can be appointed as Deputy Commissioner and the Government strongly opposed the amendment moved by some of us seeking to prescribe legal qualifications for these venerable gentlemen. This again is a matter which has to be decided by a tribunal from a purely judicial and legal standpoint.

"Then again, Sir, he is the person who should decide whether any property or money is a religious endowment or a specific endowment. It is not easy immediately for anybody to say—at any rate, for me to say—whether it forms part of the trust at all. Great evidence has sometimes to be let in and it is only after considering the facts of the case, the history, practice, environments and surroundings of the institution that a decision can be arrived at in such matters.

"Similarly, sub-clause (e) deals with important—even more important, I may say—matters such as—

'Whether any person is entitled, by custom or otherwise, to any honour, emolument or perquisite in any religious institution; and what the established usage of a religious institution is in regard to any other matter.'

You will see, Sir, that this sub-clause deals with matters which are directly, which are positively, excluded from the scope of any State legislation by the Constitution. The Constitution puts these matters on a different level altogether in Articles 25 and 26. Yet, here the State Legislature would take power and entrust this work, which goes into the custom, honour, emolument and perquisite attaching to an office and the established usage of the religious institution, to a Deputy Commissioner. At the end of the sub-clause it is stated 'in regard to any other matter.' This, I submit, is a very general and very wide expression which will involve great many matters of difficulty, doubt and dispute.

"Coming to sub-clause (f), we find that the Deputy Commissioner has powers to decide—'Whether any institution or endowment is wholly or partly of a religious or secular character; and whether any property or money has been given wholly or partly for religious or secular uses.'

These are again matters which require a great judicial mind being brought to bear upon the question. The Deputy Commissioner, being an executive officer, will not be able to exercise any judicial mind over these matters.

"Then, let us see the sub-clause (g) which deals with property and money given for the support of an institution which is partly of a religious and partly of a secular character. These are equally important matters which require examination at a judicial level. You will find, Sir, that all the sub-clauses, from (a) to (g), rope in very difficult matters on which the foundation of jurisdiction of the Deputy Commissioner is laid so far as taking possession of properties is concerned. Clause 62 deals with such arbitrary powers as taking possession of properties, their management, issue of orders, etc. I submit that the Deputy Commissioner should not be asked to clutch the jurisdiction of others by passing an order in his own favour, then asking the party aggrieved to go to the Commissioner and finally driving him to a court of law at a very late stage; to what kind of court is a matter which I shall speak about when we come to clause 67 which envisages it. This clause suggests a delayed process when the questions involved are of great importance, dealing, as they do, with the character of the institution, character of the endowment and the character of the funds. It is proper that in the first stage itself, the persons concerned should get the decision of a judicial tribunal. I am sure that my amendment should be acceptable to the Government. The Government themselves do not deny that at one stage the matter may have to go before a court. But I submit, Sir, that under the machinery now provided, much mischief will have been done by the time the matter is taken to a court. It is absolutely necessary, therefore, that these matters should be decided by a court of law rather than by the Deputy Commissioner, who initiates the proceedings."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA :—" Sir, I rise to second the amendment. I appeal to the Government to appreciate one point in this amendment. That is, by declaring in advance that a particular institution is a religious institution, by declaring in advance that a particular property is a religious endowment and by making so many other declarations about the nature of the endowments, the Government are driving the innocent and religious-minded public to courts of law and incur heavy expenditure. If this is not done, let us see what will happen. A right of suit will obtain for every member of the public. I shall explain it this way. Take, for instance, the trustee of a temple already existing or somebody who is managing it. He can incur expenditure from out of the funds of the temple in prosecuting a case. On the other hand, by making such a declaration, the Government are making the public bear the expenses themselves and fight out the litigation at their cost. It may be said that the Government are out to discourage litigious tendency in the matter of religion. But in this case, they are not discouraging it. By making such declarations, litigation will not cease. The cost is also shifted to somebody else. There are several persons who are so religious minded as to think that particular encroachment on the liberties of the worshippers is bad. Why should they not use the temple funds for instituting a case? It may be the manager of the temple or some member of the public who would like to go to a court. Why should he not have the cost defrayed from the temple funds or from the Government? Now the Government are compelling several people to make them a party to the suit by making the declaration in advance. The Government need not be a party at all, because in most cases, it would be a dispute between two worshippers, one worshipper saying that a particular property is a religious endowment—he may be a trustee or a third party—and the other worshipper contending it. Why should the Government be dragged into a series of such suits by making advance declarations which are not at all necessary?

"There is one more point which I would like to make here. The Deputy Commissioner has got the power to allow a suit to be filed or refuse permission. Suppose a trustee asks the Deputy Commissioner for permission to go to a court of law on a genuine point of doubt. What will happen to him, if the Deputy Commissioner refuses permission? It may be stated in defence of the order issued by the Deputy Commissioner that law suits may take a long time to be disposed of and the property should not be allowed to rot and ruin. In such cases, Sir, let the subordinate judge having jurisdiction over a particular area be declared as the final tribunal where these can be taken and a decision obtained thereon. That will simplify matters. That will end litigation and that will avoid much unnecessary waste of time. I think that there is no harm in accepting my hon. Friend, Sri Viswanatham's amendment."

SRI M. S. PATTABHIRAMIAH :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I rise to support the amendment before the House. This is really a very important amendment. The title of the chapter is 'Enquiries.' Under this chapter, power is given to a Government servant, however highly placed he may be, to decide many vital and fundamental issues. It is not fair. As was pointed out by the hon. the Mover of the amendment, no legal qualifications are prescribed for this officer. Any layman like me will take things only as they appear and not as they are. You will be surprised to know, Sir, that in 'Narada Smrithi'—I do not know whether it was written by Narada himself or someone else has written it in his name—which is very interesting to read and which I came across sometime back, there is a reference to common men as distinct from judicial men. The whole book is about folks, lawyers and judges and I refer to these old things now because a reference will be apt here. In the preface to the book, it is said that a common man, that is, one who is not judicially trained, one who does not know law and one who has not conducted proper investigations, will think that the sky is a roof of the world and that it is only by investigation, we will find that the blue sky is nothing, that there is no roof and that the blue horizon is nothing. To day, after proper investigation, we pride ourselves upon saying to our children that the blue sky is nothing and that it is not the roof of the world. In the same manner, Sir, a layman cannot distinguish between endowment and endowment. I will give certain instances in this connexion. Some families very well known to me set apart a part of their properties for charities when they made a partition among themselves. In certain cases temples are built. I know of a temple built under such conditions—though I will not mention its name—and it will be taken over by the Government and the Commissioner will take possession of all the properties. Probably, even now, the temple is under the control of the Board but the present Bill seeks to give the Commissioner much more drastic powers than are enjoyed by the Board now. I know of another instance, where in the same manner, when partition was made, a large part of the property was set apart for the feeding of certain people on a particular day. If that is made a specific endowment now, the whole thing will be taken over by the Commissioner, which is otherwise managed by a member of the family. I can give yet another instance where a person has endowed some property for the performance of services in a particular temple. It is religious service that is done there and some food is prepared for being given to any paradesi or any other religious-minded person who visits the temple. The man who has endowed the property has not written anything. He is a rich man and is managing it himself. He told me once, 'this Congress Government is nowadays taking over the religious institutions also; I am not willing to give away any property which may be called a charitable endowment and taken over by the Government'. Probably if this clause is not there, if the whole matter is left to be decided by a court of law, he may leave properties about twenty to thirty thousand rupees worth for charities. I say this not because I feel that the Government are losing something. I am pointing out that we are losing the confidence of some of the sober and charitable-minded people who want to give liberally for charities. We are creating suspicion in their minds. If the courts are given power, to decide the issue, it will be very good. The Government will, therefore, be fair in accepting this amendment."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I rise to support the amendment before the House. What this amendment seems to me to do is to further the very purpose which the Government have said they have in view. The clause according to the Government, is intended to minimise litigation, to save time and to prevent procrastination in matters whether a particular institution is to be decided as a religious institution or not and whether particular properties are meant for purposes connected with religion or not. If this is the real object of the clause, then the purpose is best served by accepting my hon. Friend Sri Viswanatham's amendment."

"It is not everybody who prefers the disputes or initiates the disputes. It is obvious that only persons having interest in the institution will initiate enquiries on which decisions will have to be taken. This clause says that the Deputy Commissioners, subject of course to right of appeal hereinafter provided, shall be empowered to enquire into and decide matters referred to in the clause. I doubt very much in the first instance whether it would be perfectly lawful for him to do so under sub-clause (e) which covers purely religious matters and especially the usage in an institution or for that matter as to how certain ceremonies are performed, or as to what honours are due to particular individuals when they attend any worship in temples or any other institution. These are wholly religious matters outside the purview of Government legislation. This matter will have to be looked into. I know the Hon. Minister is having expert advice but experts may sometimes commit mistakes and great mistakes at that. I want the Government to realise that this is a great mistake which they are doing, that is, entrusting power to the Deputy Commissioners to decide upon purely religious matters which are outside the scope of legislation and which we cannot undertake in this House.

"Now, I shall go further into the matter and point out what will follow if this clause is adopted. Somebody will initiate or perhaps the Deputy Commissioner himself will open a particular subject and decide, as he is directed to do under this clause. It is not the status of the Officer about which hon. Members here are worried. Even if it was the Commissioner he should not have the power to enquire into and decide on the matters mentioned here, though it is understandable as in my hon. Friend Sri Viswanatham's amendment that the Commissioner may initiate and then go to court to get decisions on these matters. What will happen if the procedure laid down under this clause is to be followed? It will only increase litigation. It will involve time and increase scope for litigation and also give rise to divergent judgments, one by the Deputy Commissioner and another by the court to which an appeal lies from the order of the Deputy Commissioner and finally the decision of the High Court which is the final court of appeal in these matters. What is the time taken for all these? Government want to save time. On the other hand this would add to the time taken; the same witnesses, the same parties will have to go and appear before the Deputy Commissioner who is not really a court constituted for the purpose. He has other functions to perform. He has to decide on surpluses and decide on various matters under this Bill. He has not the sole duties to merely enquire into these matters and decide them. Now I can envisage only this result if this clause is passed. The Deputy Commissioner will be going from camp to camp, he will be calling parties to this and that camp and finally much precious time will be wasted in obtaining a decision. Perhaps months and years of litigation will be the result. Then, these very parties are driven to courts in appeal over the decision of the Deputy Commissioner. Of course, Government hope, I suppose, that they, the parties won't be so persistent as to go to court after having gone through the expense and worry of litigation with the subordinate officer. If that was the object, I can well understand the clause. But I suppose that is not the object of the Government, because Government want to respect rights under the Constitution and leave it open to courts of law in the country to decide on matters mentioned in this clause. Then why not allow the parties to straight away go to courts and get a decision which would be right and proper instead of making the party to go to the Deputy Commissioner with the same case, the same pleadings and the same witnesses and then go to the court of law after having incurred the cost and all these litigations and vexation some times, and finally to the court of appeal. If Government want to save time let them have only two courts, the first court and finally the High Court and not a court which is not a court but which is still made a court under the law; to other courts which are really courts which will have jurisdiction above the court sought to be created under this clause but which is not a court. I trust that the Government would see that there would be delays and for that matter considerable delays. The very object they have in introducing this clause will be defeated and there will be unnecessary bickerings among persons having interest as defined under the clause.

"Now, it is not clear how these disputes will get initiated. Will they be initiated by the Deputy Commissioner himself when he finds some dispute in the order or when a litigant takes advantage of it, though he may be a person without interest, and sends a petition, to decide on such matters? Then the scope of the clause will be very wide and sub-clause (e) is certainly contrary to the provisions of the legislative powers which we have where a decision, for instance, has to be taken whether a property is to be used for partly secular and partly religious purposes. I certainly feel that the Deputy Commissioner is not the person who should enquire into or decide these matters. They should be left to courts. It would be a wise policy both in the interest of preventing unnecessary litigation and saving time and getting speedy decisions to leave the whole matter to courts and make the Commissioner merely a person who initiates these matters. Decisions are to be given only by courts."

SRI V. M. RAMASWAMI MUDALIYAR:—"I think the fears of the sponsor of the amendment are not well founded and my reasons for opposing the amendment are as follows. Clause 62 should be read along with clauses 66 and 67. Clause 66 provides for an appeal against the orders of the Deputy Commissioner to the Commissioner. Clause 67 says that anybody aggrieved by an order passed by the Commissioner can go to court within 90 days from the date of receipt of such order by him and anybody aggrieved with the orders of the appeal court has got a further right to go to the High Court. I think these stages are very necessary because the enquiries which are envisaged under this clause are of very great importance, for instance, to decide whether an institution is a religious institution or not, to decide to whom all, honours and what honours should go in particular temples, to decide whether an institution is a specific endowment or partly religious or partly secular in character. These are very important enquiries and parties who have a right in such enquiries should have various rights of appeal. I see that three rights of appeal are provided, first to the Commissioner under clause 66, then to the court under clause 67 and finally to the High Court. Sir, it is said that the Deputy Commissioner should not have powers to start enquiries or decide on important matters: Having taken powers under this Bill for the purposes of administering properly the religious institutions and endowments I think this clause is necessary. One of the parties in the disputes will be virtually the Government, in some sense or other though in certain cases private parties may be interested in having the question decided. Government may say that a particular institution is a religious institution, or that certain properties are religious properties and the parties interested may say that it is not so. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred it is the Government that will have to come forward and have the question decided. Therefore some officer authorized by the Government should have the power to make the necessary enquiries envisaged under this clause and the enquiries envisaged under this clause are all of that character."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—"Why not file a suit?"

SRI V. M. RAMASWAMI MUDALIYAR:—"I will come to that. So it will be the Government that will be treated as one of the parties to the dispute. The Government should therefore have some machinery for coming to a preliminary conclusion whether a particular endowment is a religious endowment or not and that is what according to my interpretation, the clause seeks to do. If the Government want to do anything in the direction of the proper management of the endowments, this is an essential procedure and a very necessary procedure.

"Now, if any enquiry is conducted and the Government take a particular decision, the party who is aggrieved by this decision of the Government has got certain safeguards. He can go to the Commissioner and thereafter to the Court of the Principal Subordinate Judge. It is not clearly stated so. But I believe in some cases it is said that the aggrieved parties may go to the Subordinate Judge's Court in the mufassal. I think I have tabled an amendment saying that it should be the Principal Subordinate Judge because there are two courts in many districts. If the party is still aggrieved, he has a right to go to the High Court. As this clause deals with very valuable and important rights, these stages are necessary though it may seem to prolong litigation in one sense. Reading the clause as a whole, I do not think there is scope for mischief being done in the enquiries to be conducted by the Deputy Commissioners. I think the clause is absolutely necessary."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, most of the points have been answered by my hon. Friend Sri Ramaswami Mudaliyar. There was no right of suit at all in the clause originally introduced before the House. 'Subject to the right of suit' was added by the Select Committee. There was no question of 'enquiry' before. 'Enquiry' was added by the Select Committee. Sir, it has been said that these are very serious matters which a Deputy Commissioner shall not decide, and it must be decided by a court. The Select Committee tried its best to leave the final voice to the Civil Courts where the question of dispute as to right of property was involved, and not leave it to the Commissioner. That was the principle on which the Select Committee worked. But it is not over small matters that people want to go to court or should be allowed to go to court. One of the main principles of the former Act as also the present Bill before the House is that we must reduce litigation to the minimum if it is possible without impairing the right to property. So to the extent it is possible we must reduce litigation and unnecessary burden on the religious institutions. We know to our cost that trustees fight with each other as to who should have the right and finally come to a compromise and at the end the costs of both the trustees are dumped on the institution. In the result the institution suffers because of the quarrel between the trustees. Such things should be avoided if possible.

"It was suggested by my hon. Friends Sri Varadachari and Sri Raghavayya and others that all these were very serious matters and the Deputy Commissioner would be a party in all matters and also the person who initiated, such cases and decided, it is not correct to say so in all cases. Suppose there is a religious institution or a temple with a number of trustees. There is another institution which has property. The trustees know which of the properties belong to the institution or the temple. In such a case the dispute may be between the persons in possession of the properties and the trustees. Here instead of going to the court, perhaps, it is quite possible that the parties concerned may be satisfied with the decision of the Deputy Commissioner. In such cases where the parties concerned are perfectly satisfied with the decision of the Deputy Commissioner, it is unnecessary to ask the parties to go to court.

"So, Sir, the Government want to avoid parties going to a court and unnecessarily litigate the matters, spend money and prolong the litigation for an indefinite period. The Government propose that such matters be conducted by the Deputy Commissioner and that the Deputy Commissioner shall have power to give a decision in the matter. Then, if a party is not satisfied with the decision of the Deputy Commissioner, he can appeal to the Commissioner. And if still he is not satisfied with the decision of the Commissioner, he is at liberty to go to a court or to appeal to the High Court under sub-clauses (a) to (g) of clause 62 and under clause 67. And even where the rights to properties are concerned, the Government want to try to avoid going to court and reduce the litigation. That is the object. The Government have not barred anybody from going to court. But, before going to court, the Government want to see if that could be settled by the Deputy Commissioner.

"The present amendment of Sri Viswanatham is exactly a copy of his amendment which he moved to clause 10 (as new clause 10-A) about the powers of Commissioners and Deputy Commissioners. Here, the Government want to save litigation as far as possible. But, if the parties are not satisfied with the decision of the Deputy Commissioner or the Commissioner, the whole clause provides right to go to a Civil Court or to the Appellate Court. It is not a case where any Civil Court is being ousted of its jurisdiction."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, the Hon. Minister was good enough to take into account realms which were not covered by the provisions of this Bill. It has been my misfortune always to speak upon a point which is covered by the provisions of the Bill and it has been always my fate to receive an answer upon something that is not covered by the language of the Bill. What the Hon. Minister wants is not in this clause. If the amendment covers disputes between two parties, I would withdraw my amendment. The Hon. Minister does not see the implications of the provisions or the language of the Bill. Sir, if we go clause by clause we see that it is not a question of dispute between parties. This covers cases which give the foundation of jurisdiction to the Government to take hold of property. This has nothing to do with disputes between two parties and I do not know why the Hon. Minister goes on dilating upon that proposition. I thought I was at great pains. That was why I was taking you through the whole clause so that that kind of argument might not come up. What the Hon. Minister wants is different. I shall substantiate my argument.

"The clause says: 'subject to the rights of suit or appeal hereinafter provided, the Deputy Commissioner shall have power to inquire into and decide the following disputes and matters:—'. What are these disputes? They are whether the institution is a religious institution or not. Surely, it cannot be a dispute between two other parties in which the Deputy Commissioner is asked to intervene. It is not that at all.

"The clause further says—

- (a) whether an institution is a religious institution;
- (b) whether a trustee holds or held office as a hereditary trustee;
- (c) whether any property or money is a religious endowment;
- (d) whether any property or money is a specific endowment;

These are also matters which give powers to the Deputy Commissioner to go and take possession or to entrust the management of the religious institution to somebody.

[Sri T. Viswanatham] [4th December 1950]

"It further says—

(e) whether any person is entitled, by custom or otherwise, to any honour, emolument or perquisite in any religious institution; and what the established usage of a religious institution is in regard to any other matter;

(f) whether any institution or endowment is wholly or partly of a religious or secular character; and whether any property or money has been given wholly or partly for religious or secular uses; and

I submit, Sir, that these are matters which relate to the character of property and the institution. It is not as if it is a dispute between two parties, one party claiming one thing and the other party claiming another, and the Deputy Commissioner making intercession. That is not the point at all. These relate to matters which give the essential foundations of jurisdiction to the Government to step into the management or make arrangements for the management of these institutions. I am not able to understand how the argument which the Hon. Sri Madhava Menon has addressed himself before that this is provided for by some other clause, etc., etc., would fit in. This has nothing to do with the disputes between two parties. As my hon. Friend Sri V. M. Ramaswami Mudaliyar said, it is a dispute between the Government and the institution, and the Government have got to decide it. But, my hon. Friend Sri V. M. Ramaswami Mudaliyar has asked whether it is not necessary for the Government to enquire. Let them enquire. But, the clause does not stop with enquiry. It goes to a decision when once a matter is decided by small officers under the seal of the Government, it would really disable the resources of these institutions and the parties concerned to go to courts at later stages. I, therefore, submit, Sir, that this is unnecessary and would ask the Government to accept my amendment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"I have nothing further to say, Sir."

MR. SPEAKER :—"The question is—

That in clause 62, for the words "Subject to the rights of suit or appeal hereinafter provided, the Deputy Commissioner shall have power to inquire into and decide the following disputes and matters"; substitute the following :—

"The Commissioner suo moto, or on the application of any person having interest, may apply to a court for a decision on the following disputes and matters."

The amendment was lost.

Clause 62 was put and carried.

Clause 63.

MR. SPEAKER :—"The motion is—

That clause 63 do stand part of the Bill."

4th December 1950]

Sub-clause (1).

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I do not move amendments (a) and (b) to sub-clause (1) standing in my name as I see in the Government amendment that they give some sort of support.

"I beg to move—

"That in sub-clause (1), for the words from "the Deputy Commissioner shall consult in the prescribed manner" to the end of the sub-clause, substitute the words—

"The Commissioner may apply to the Principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction for the settlement and framing of a scheme for the administration of the institution."

I move this for the same reasons I put forth before. I suggest that, in this case, the Government should seek the advantage of the Principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction for the settlement and framing of schemes for the administration of the institution. We were dealing with the character and nature of the fund or the properties belonging to the institution in clause 62. Here we deal not with the character of the institution but with the management and framing of schemes. Here again, it is the Deputy Commissioner that frames the scheme. All these years, framing of good schemes in a large number of cases was left to the Civil Court with the permission of the Advocate-General and in some cases by a Board which is managed by persons having some legal experience. In the present scheme of things, it is not known whether the Government are going to appoint persons with legal training or not. I submit, Sir, that, as the wording of the Bill goes, it is necessary that the schemes should be framed by Civil Courts and not by these Commissioners who have got executive functions and superior administrative powers over all these institutions. I submit that the Commissioners are not the proper persons to frame schemes and it must be left to the Civil Courts. That is my amendment, Sir."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA :—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I second this amendment and wish to add just one word."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"On a point of order, Sir. The amendment now moved by the hon. Member Sri Viswanatham is identical with his amendment to clause 10 new sub-clause 10-A which he moved and which was lost. In sub-clause (3) to new clause 10-A which he moved, he said 'The Commissioner shall have power to apply to the Civil Court for the framing of a scheme of administration for such an institution where such one is lacking or is not sufficient or to settle any dispute as regards the succession to the office of a trustee'. In this, he says: 'The Commissioner may apply to the Principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction for the settlement and framing of a scheme for the administration of the institution'. Both are identical, Sir."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" If it is a point of order, does it mean that I cannot move any amendment on the floor of the House."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" I am only saying that this is identical with his amendment to clause 10 which he moved and which was rejected by the House."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" I am trying to explain, Sir. If the new clause 10-A, which I moved, dealt with the question of framing of schemes, this amendment would be out of order. But, that deals with the creation of the post of and powers of Commissioner. Here, we have come specifically with regard to schemes for working religious institutions. The two are totally different, Sir."

MR. SPEAKER :—" In his amendment to clause 10 (new clause 10-A) the hon. Member has given the powers of the Commissioner."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" It is true, Sir. There we were dealing with the creation of Commissioners and Deputy Commissioners and their powers. Here, the subject matter is different. Here, we are dealing with the framing of schemes for the administration of religious institutions. There it was the question of Commissioners and Deputy Commissioners, and what should be their powers and sphere of activities. That was the point at issue then. And how can this be out of order. Here, the question is as to who is to frame the scheme with regard to the institutions and it is a part of the entire scheme of this Bill. I therefore submit, Sir, that my amendment is in order and hope that the Hon. Minister agrees with my view. If the Hon. Minister wishes to say anything, I would like to further explain, Sir."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA :—" Sir, the previous amendment of the hon. Member Sri Viswanatham was never a part of the general scope of clause 63. Here, definite procedure is outlined for the framing of a scheme, . . . when not less than five persons having interest make an application in writing . . . and 'the Deputy Commissioner shall consult in the prescribed manner the trustee and the persons having interest and the Area Committee, . . . This detailed procedure is not covered by the previous amendment moved by the hon. Member Sri T. Viswanatham and what is vetoed there cannot be taken as vetoing this."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The House will now rise and meet again at 2-30 p.m."

4th December 1950]

(After lunch—2-30 p.m.)

MR. SPEAKER :—" As regards the amendment moved by the hon. Member Sri Viswanatham before the House adjourned for lunch, I find it is out of order. An identical amendment moved by the hon. Member on an earlier occasion has been vetoed down by the House."

Sub-clause (2).

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, with your permission, I shall move only amendment No. 31 (1) and not (2) and (3). I move—

'In sub-clause (2) (b), after the words "in the place of", insert the words "or in addition to".'

This involves only a verbal alteration. This is necessary because on occasions we may have to appoint trustees in addition to the existing trustees."

The amendment was put and carried.

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" May I know, Sir, why the Hon. Minister is not moving amendment No. 31 (2)?"

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" It is not necessary in view of certain amendments we have already accepted."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Sir, I am not moving my amendments to sub-clauses (2) and (3)."

Sub-clauses (4) to (8).

MR. SPEAKER :—" The hon. Member may then move together all his amendments to the other sub-clauses of this clause 68."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" I was once told that I could not move one common amendment to delete a number of sub-clauses together and that is why I took the trouble of writing out separately my amendments to these sub-clauses. I move—

'Delete sub-clauses (4), (5), (6), (7) and (8).'

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" May I point out, Sir, that these amendments are consequential to his first amendment? He wanted that instead of the Deputy Commissioner framing a scheme, the Commissioner should move the court for the purpose. When that has not been moved, I am unable to appreciate the effect of these amendments."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" The advantage is this: Even without my other amendments, if these are accepted, the party concerned will have the right to go to court immediately, instead of going through all the other formalities and delaying processes which are described in the various sub-clauses. This idea of mine has been explained by Sri Varadachari. The object is to expedite the process of the settlement of disputes by a competent body. From the very framework of this clause you will see that it is ultimately the court that decides these matters and not the Deputy Commissioner or the Commissioner, although in the initial stages they initiate the enquiry and make decisions. These decisions it should be noted will have the effect of crippling the parties concerned, because the right to go to court has been crippled by these provisions. So, my amendment is to the effect that the party may go directly to the court without the intervention of the Commissioner or others."

SRI M. S. PATTABHIRAMIAH:—"I do not want to make any speech, Sir. I simply second the amendment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I must express my surprise at these amendments being moved to delete sub-clauses (3) to (8). They would perfectly fit in if the hon. Member had moved the earlier amendment. Now look at the position we will be driven to. Sub-clause (2) relates to suits, and sub-clause (1) concerns temples other than those attached to maths. My hon. friend has declined to move the deletion of the other sub-clause. Sub-clause (2) will therefore apply only to institutions other than maths. What about the institutions attached to maths? Are they to be left suspended in the air?"

"Again, Sir, sub-clause (3) relates to schemes settled under sub-clause (1) which includes those excluded under sub-clause (2)."

MR. SPEAKER:—"He has not moved for the deletion of sub-clause (3)."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Then it becomes all the more difficult to accept the amendment. Sub-clauses (4) to (7) deal with the way in which the Deputy Commissioner should do the work under sub-clauses (1) and (2). If any particular action of the Deputy Commissioner is delayed pending the framing of a scheme he may appoint any person to discharge certain duties. All these are interim arrangements necessary to be provided for."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"That is why I want these amendments. I do not want the Deputy Commissioner to make his own interim arrangements. Once the party goes to court, the court having been seized of the matter, will make the interim arrangements. After the Hon. Minister's explanation, my reasons for these amendments are obvious. All the acts, enquiries and decisions are made under clause 62 and the first three sub-clauses of clause 63. You begin clause 62 by saying—

"Subject to the rights of suit or appeal hereinafter provided, the Deputy Commissioner shall have power to inquire into . . ."

When a decision has been made by the Deputy Commissioner and he is authorized to make further amendments, I suggest that the party affected should be allowed to go to a court of law. Some interim arrangements will have always to be made. But who is the person to make them? If the decision of the Deputy Commissioner is appealable, it is the court that should have the power to make such interim arrangements. Having given the right to the party to go to a court you must fully follow it up and give the power to the court to make the interim arrangements."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"I am sorry I perhaps failed to make myself clear. Under clause 62 already passed we have decided that the Deputy Commissioner shall have power to enquire and decide whether an institution is a religious institution and under sub-clause (d) whether any property or money is a specific endowment and so on. He has the power to append a schedule. Again, under clause 63 (6) the Deputy Commissioner has the power to modify or cancel any scheme settled under sub-clause (1). My hon. friend wants to drop this also. Sub-clause (7) relates to publication of the order of the Deputy Commissioner. If these provisions are sought to be omitted, the object would seem to be to make the work of the Deputy Commissioner impossible."

The amendment was put and lost.

Clause 63, as amended, was put and carried.

Clause 64.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'That clause 64 do stand part of the Bill.'

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I move the amendment standing in my name, namely—

'For existing sub-clause (1) of clause 64, substitute the following:—

"64 (1) The Deputy Commissioner may, on being satisfied that the purpose of a religious institution has from the beginning been or has subsequently become, impossible of realization, or that the machinery for effectuating such purpose has failed or no longer exists, or that after providing adequately for the purposes of the institution and after setting apart a sufficient sum for the repair and renovation of the buildings connected therewith, there is a surplus, by order, direct that the endowments of the institution or such surplus as is declared to be available, as the case may be, be appropriated to the following purposes, in the order of priority, namely:—

- (a) the propagation of the religious tenets of the institution;
- (b) the establishment and maintenance of educational institutions where instruction in the Hindu religion is also imparted to Hindu students thereof;
- (c) promoting the study of Indian languages including Sanskrit;

[Sri N. S. Varadachari] [4th December 1950]

- (d) the establishment and maintenance of a University or college or other institution in which special provision is made for the study of Hindu religion, philosophy or sastras or for imparting instruction in Hindu temple architecture;
- (e) promotion of the cultivation of Indian arts and architecture;
- (f) the establishment and maintenance of orphanages for Hindu children;
- (g) the establishment and maintenance of asylums for Hindus suffering from leprosy;
- (h) the establishment and maintenance of poor homes for destitute Hindus who are physically disabled and helpless;
- (i) the establishment and maintenance of hospitals and dispensaries for the benefit of Hindus; and
- (j) cow protection.

Provided that, in the case of a temple founded and maintained by a community or a specific endowment attached to such a temple, the endowments or surplus shall, as far as possible be utilized for the benefit of the community for the purposes mentioned above."

Sir, my amendment is very simple. My amendment does not change the clause very much except that I have prescribed an order of priority for the purposes I have mentioned. I have added one more object which I trust the Hon. the Minister will be kind enough to accept. That is item (j). This clause, I would not say the most contentious, as the hon. Member Mr. Viswanatham stated, but this certainly is the most important clause in the Bill. The contention arises because of the importance of this clause. The whole object of this clause is that when once a surplus is declared, what ought to be done with that surplus and how is that surplus to be utilized. That is the main thing in the whole clause. Who is declaring the surplus? The clause as it is worded at present says—

"The Deputy Commissioner may, on being satisfied that the purpose of a religious institution has from the beginning been, or has subsequently become, impossible of realization, or that the machinery for effectuating such purpose has failed or no longer exists, or that after providing adequately for the purposes of the institution and after setting apart a sufficient sum for the repair and renovation of the buildings connected therewith, there is a surplus, by order, direct that the endowments of the institution or such surplus as is declared to be available as the case may be, be appropriated to all or any of the following purposes, namely :—

I have given notice of a small amendment. I say that even if the Deputy Commissioner is to be empowered in this behalf, there must be some order of priority. It should not be left to him to say 'I will choose this for the particular object and then spend the surplus money on this.' On the other hand, the Legislature should be able to say in what order it should be spent. The difference between the Government's proposal and mine is that if the temple has only a small surplus; the order of priority which I have prescribed makes it obligatory on whichever authority is legally entrusted with this task to make it usable for the propagation of the tenets of that institution. If there is anything over and above still remaining, then that would go for the second purpose, namely, the establishment of educational institutions. Ordinarily it is expected that not much surplus will remain. For, the very idea of surplus is now restricted and controlled by another clause previously introduced. As I pointed out some days earlier in the course of the discussion on this Bill, the trustee will have power to spend money in addition to what is required for maintaining the scale of dittam of the temple or of the institution. Over and above that the trustee is given some discretion. Beyond that arises the surplus. The Hon. the Minister was kind enough to agree when I pointed this out on an earlier occasion. Why should this surplus, if it is there at all, not be declared by the trustee to be surplus, is a question which has still to be considered. Why should the surplus be declared by a Government officer? It is just possible that the officer may not be able to appreciate the needs of the temple, or may not be able to appreciate the additional allotments that will be made by the trustee under the previous clause referred to by me. It is only then that the question of surplus will arise. The determination of the surplus by the Government officer is a question with which I shall not deal at present. I shall take it up later. Sir, I want to follow the line of least resistance, and convince the Government that there must be some method in distributing this surplus. Let me be optimistic as I always am, and I wish we are all optimistic so that the whole thing could be debated in a spirit of give and take, of compromise, of goodwill and of concord. Under the present scheme, the Deputy Commissioner may allot it for any of the purposes mentioned in the clause. He is given a certain amount of discretion in regard to that. It is left to him to say 'all right; I will overlook purpose (a) and go to purpose (f), (g) or (h). That is exactly what I do not want. I say, Sir, that there must be some connexion between the expenditure of what was declared to be the surplus and the original purpose of the institution. The purpose nearest to the beneficiaries or to those persons having interest in the institution should take priority amongst all other purposes. That is the object of my amendment. It should be realised that if we give wholesale authority to the Government officer without prescribing any statutory limits, it is just possible that in a small temple, which may have only a very small surplus, an unnecessary burden may eventually be thrown. It is not easy to start an institution and then close it altogether. Suppose for instance, a small institution with only a surplus of say Rs. 20,000 or Rs. 30,000 is suddenly called upon, in a year of prosperity when the surplus may go up to a lakh of rupees, to start an educational institution, and then be compelled to maintain it. When once it becomes part of the scheme, it is not easy to get out of it. There will be so much pressure from the public, from the Government, from the trustee himself and from various other sources. It will be very difficult to take it out of the regular routine when once the surplus gets into it. That is why I want that some order should be maintained in this behalf. It is just possible that a temple may have a large surplus. Even then the declaration of the surplus, left to the Government officer as it is in this amendment, should be carefully made. The worshippers will possibly agree to the order which I have prescribed rather than leave the discretion to the officer concerned. That is the main point of my amendment. Hon. Members will find that the order I have prescribed in which the money is to be spent is the order nearest to the purposes of the institution. The idea of applying the Cypres doctrine is only this. If there is more than the institution can usefully take in to preserve its dignity, order, and the worship therein, it should be spent as far as possible for the establishment or for the maintenance or for the propaganda of the tenets of the institution. The object certainly is the one nearest to the scheme of things in that institution. Otherwise, it is just possible that things wholly alien to the spirit of the institution may be thought of, and the surplus unnecessarily spent on them.

"The second point that I wish to make is this. I have briefly mentioned at the outset that it is better if this order of priority is maintained there is a certain element of consultation. Of course, I do not presume that the Deputy Commissioner will merely act, even though he is empowered under this clause, without any consultation with the trustee or with the leading worshippers in that area. It must be understood that even if the law gives wholesale power, he will certainly prefer to consult, having taken upon himself the discretionary authority to use the surplus funds. In the case of such consultation, the thing that would occur to the trustees or to the persons having an interest or to those generally connected with the religious institution, would necessarily be the purposes which are as near as possible, or will be nearest, to the institution itself. That is why I have mentioned the order in which the surplus is to be spent. I do not insist on any particular order. I have found that the order in which it is put down in this clause will practically fulfil all the purposes I have in view. I may have changed it here and there a little bit. If this order is maintained, then the public will be able to throw a lot of light on the Deputy Commissioner himself or whomsoever is interested ultimately in this task. They will be able to write to him, call on him, and wait in deputation on him, and then convince him that the money should not be spent for purposes other than those nearer to the institution. When I come to the chapter on the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanam, I will have to say a lot about the use of the surplus money in recent months from the devasthanam funds. It is a matter in which I have taken a lot of interest. I think it is wholly wrong to invest the money of the devasthanam on purposes alien to the institution itself. There are 108 devasthanams attached to the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanam. Most of them are in the Karvetnagar Zamindari. While many of them remain dilapidated and without proper service even to-day, to divert the funds of the institution outside these institutions is not correct. Take the famous Srinivasa Temple in Narayanavaram."

MR. SPEAKER:—"When we come to that clause, the hon. Member may speak on it."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"I say this, Sir, because it is concerned with this clause. Suppose there is surplus money in the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanam. What is to happen to that and how is it to be distributed? If we prescribe an order, it will be easier for us to fix the amount of such expenditure. That is why I am moving my amendment, and I hope the Government will consider the amendment, and then deal with it on its merits."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I second the amendment. The theory of the utilization of surplus funds is generally applicable to charitable trusts and not to temples and maths. It is only by an extension of the idea, I suppose, the Government are able to find, having taken a leaf from the old Act, the theory of the utilization of surplus funds in regard to temples. Sir, if you are pleased to look at the language, you will find 'The Deputy Commissioner may, on being satisfied that the purpose of a religious institution has from the beginning been, or has subsequently become, impossible of realization. . . . The draftsman of this clause copied the wording of the application of Cypres doctrine in the case of charitable endowments and trusts, and bodily transferred it to religious institutions and matams. I would like to draw the attention of hon. Members to the essential difference between temples and matams on the one hand and charitable trusts on the other. The purpose of charity might fail, because the donor had in his view certain objects which had either become impossible or impracticable, after a certain time, of realization. Or, the purpose of the charity being over, there is nothing more to be done in connexion with that or with any identical charity thought of or indicated by the donor, and therefore it is only subsequently that the Cypres doctrine is applied. But, with regard to a temple, how is it possible for us to say that a religious institution or a temple or a matam has from the beginning itself become impossible of realization? This clause deals with existing institutions, with matams, temples and specific endowments attached to these institutions. They are there already and we are now devising some more machinery, and a better machinery perhaps, to deal with those properties. As I said, it is inconceivable that the purpose of the religious institution has from the beginning become impossible of realization or has even subsequently become impossible of realization. Let us assume that certain endowments are made to a temple like Srirangam or Tirupati; is it conceivable in their case that the objects have become impossible of realization? As I have already submitted, Sir, the provision relating to charitable trusts has been bodily taken over and applied to the temples and matams, and we are told that what applies to the surplus funds of charitable trusts must apply equally to the surplus funds of temples and matams. For instance, the Deputy Commissioner can never say that the doctrines of Visishtadwaita are impossible of realization. If so, no trusts would have been necessary at all; and the mighty structures that stand and gaze into Godhood would not have been there attracting millions and millions of devotees, if it were possible for a person like the Deputy Commissioner or the Commissioner to come to the conclusion that the temples and matams had become impossible of realization. I submit, Sir, that the theory of the utilization of surplus funds need not have been brought in in connexion with these religious institutions.

"Then again, Sir, the doctrine of utilization of surplus funds is not what you can apply under the statute because we are trustees. The Government themselves admit we are trustees, and those whom you have appointed for the management of these institutions are there as your agents. One of their fundamental duties is to give effect to the objects of the trust, the wishes of the donor, the terms of the document if it is available or the terms of the donation as gathered from longstanding practice and surrounding circumstances or other available unimpeachable evidence. No question of surplus funds can arise in the case of the temples and matams; and if there are funds over the immediate needs, they are meant only for the purpose of improving the institutions and spreading the doctrines of the denomination to which they belong. There can be no such thing as surplus funds in their case in the sense in which this Bill provides. It cannot be gained that you have mighty structures at Srirangam, Tirupati and Tanjore; and you cannot say in their case that their funds have become surplus, because you have got to improve them, rebuild them and renovate them and you have got to continue to fulfil the very objects for which the trusts were originally founded. The theory of surplus funds in its application to temples and matams is, in my humble opinion, very wrong. One important doctrine of the Visishtadwaita, the eternality of Purusha and Prakriti, has been pursued and practised for ever so many generations and will continue for eternality; can a Veerasaivite come and say 'Oh, this is duality, it is almost impossible of realisation; therefore, let us do away with these temples?' Is that the object of this clause, I ask? Suppose the Commissioner is a Madhwa and is a staunch believer in Dwaita doctrine; is it open to him to say 'I am satisfied that the purposes of the Vaishnavite institution have from the beginning been impossible of realization?'

4th December 1950] [Sri T. Viswanatham]

The realization of Godhood and of the oneness of God cannot really be impossible. Is it open to a Visishtadwaita to say that the temple of Sri Brahadeeswara may go because the doctrine of absolute oneness of God and man is impossible of realization? I want to draw pointed attention, Sir, to the fact that in this clause 64, there is no provision for the party even to go to Court. As it is, very grudgingly some right has been given to the parties to go to Court, but that is under clause 67, and that clause has no reference to this clause 64. As I submitted in the beginning, this provision is inapt here. There is no such thing as 'impossible of realisation,' so far as temples and maths are concerned. If on the other hand the Government were thinking of charitable trusts and their failure and the subsequent impossibility of realisation of their objects, the utilization of their surplus funds stands altogether on a different footing. In the case of a temple, however, there is no such thing as surplus fund, and it cannot be spent on any other purpose. If you want to respect our religious feelings, if you want to respect our philosophic doctrines on which our various religious practices are based throughout the length and breadth of our country, I submit you cannot use those funds for any object other than the intended object, however laudable that other object may be. On the theory of the Cypres doctrine, Halsbury says that in the case of charitable trusts, the trustees of charity cannot apply the principle of Cypres on their own authority, without the consent of the charity commissioners. Assuming for instance, there was a charge on it in connexion with an organization for statutory removal of untouchability. Now that untouchability is made an offence both under the Constitution and under our laws, the objects with which the charity might have been originally started have ceased to exist. It is then and only then that that fund can be utilized for some other purpose. But with regard to temples and matams, they are symbols of eternal continuity of faith; there is no beginning and no end to that faith; where it began and where it ends, nobody knows; we are living now only in the middle period of its existence; we do not know what is going to happen to it, as we are only in the transitional stage of our personal existence and of our present bodies. So, Sir, there is no such thing as an end of our faith; and if there is no end to our faith, there cannot be an end to our religious institutions; and if there is no end to our religious institutions, there can be no 'surplus funds' as such. Whatever funds there are, they belong to the institution and they must be utilized for the maintenance and upkeep of the institution and the propagation of the doctrines of that particular institution and nothing else. Therefore, Sir, I have great pleasure in seconding the amendment of my hon. friend."

SRI R. V. SWAMINATHAN :—"Sir, I am very surprised to hear the speech made by my hon. Friend Mr. Viswanatham. While seconding the amendment, I found he was entirely opposing the whole idea underlying the clause. He was taking objection to the sentence found here 'has from the beginning been, or has subsequently become, impossible of realization.' Mr. Varadachari's amendment contains the same language. I do not know why Mr. Varadachari wants to substitute the whole clause when he agrees with seven or eight items mentioned in the clause and adds only one more item to it. That shows that he is prepared to agree to the spending of funds on some other purpose also not mentioned in the clause."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"On a point of explanation, Sir. The hon. Member Mr. Swaminathan has wholly misunderstood the scope of my amendment. The purposes are practically the same; the distribution of the surplus is practically the same but . . ."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The hon. Member wants to add one more item to the list."

SRI R. V. SWAMINATHAN:—"That one makes no difference whatsoever. But he wants to introduce priority."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"I am glad he has understood my intention, Sir."

SRI R. V. SWAMINATHAN:—"I have noted his idea; he wants to spend the money according to his priority list; he gives his first preference to one item and second preference to another and so on. But on the whole, he is prepared to spend the surplus funds, if any, over those items. The seconder of the amendment, however, as I understood him, is not prepared to spend even a single pie on any of the many items that are mentioned in the clause. Mr. Viswanatham was saying that if there were any surplus funds, they must spend them only for improving the building, renovating the temple, etc. Both the clause and the amendment of Mr. Varadachari specifically say 'after setting apart a sufficient sum for the repair and renovation of the buildings' if there is any surplus left over, it may be spent over the items mentioned there, and so, I cannot understand Mr. Viswanatham's speech in seconding the amendment."

"As regards the question of priority introduced by Mr. Varadachari, Sir, suppose there is a temple in the Ramanathapuram district and there is surplus there, the people in the area, the trustees and those in charge of the temple would naturally like to spend that surplus in that area itself. Suppose the Rameswaram Devasthanam has got some surplus funds, the trustees and the people of the locality may feel that a hospital may be established there since the educational institutions are being maintained either by the Government or by the district board, and the necessity for a hospital is more keenly felt there. Similarly, in Tirupati there is already a high school and the devasthanam is spending some money on education in that place and they may also feel the necessity for a hospital there. In such cases, priority should be given to the people in the locality and the trustees to decide as to what they should have and how the surplus should be spent. Even an Act should not say that the money should be spent for such and such a purpose; that will be improper. Therefore, Sir, I submit this priority question introduced by Mr. Varadachari cannot arise, as the people of the locality and the trustees alone should decide the priority. I, therefore, oppose the amendment and I am really surprised at the speech made by Mr. Viswanatham in regard to the amendment which he was seconding."

BEGUM SULTAN-MIR AMIRUDDIN:—"May I point out, Mr. Speaker, that the House is very thin; there does not seem to be even quorum."

MR. SPEAKER:—"Twenty-two is the quorum; and I think we have the required number of Members here."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, the hon. Member, Mr. R. V. Swaminathan, has made my work very easy. The wording of Mr. Varadachari's amendment, is in fact, exactly the same as the wording of clause 64 (1) of the Bill. Mr. Viswanatham has entirely forgotten that he was seconding the amendment of Varadachari."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Shall I explain, Sir, I have not forgotten. I knew my job, but because Mr. Varadachari asked for two things in his amendment, namely, first the utilization of the money for the purposes of the institution for renovation, etc., and then for propagation of the particular tenets of the institution—both of which are there—I spoke. So, when once the money is spent in the order priority, namely, items 1 and 2, there is nothing else to be done and therefore I supported the amendment. I have not forgotten it, Sir."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, even if my hon. Friend is becoming wiser after the event, it does not help him in any way. Mr. Viswanatham objects to the use of the words in clause 64 (1), namely: 'The Deputy Commissioner may, on being satisfied that the purpose of a religious institution has from the beginning been, or has subsequently become, impossible of realisation . . .'. He asks 'How can a thing become impossible of realisation; Can a Virasaiva say that God is one; How can God be impossible of realisation; What does the draftsman mean by putting in a sentence like that; You cannot say about 'God becoming impossible of realisation'. Then he said 'the wording "becoming impossible of realisation," is a misnomer, and it can never be'. Then, Sir, Mr. Viswanatham has been arguing all through that there cannot be a surplus at all for temples, because that must be used for the purposes of the temple itself. He said that the question of Cypres doctrine would not apply to surplus in temples and so the Government were unnecessarily bringing in Cypres principles into temples and so the whole thing was wrong. Secondly he said that the wording itself was wrong, because the expression 'impossible of realisation' was unthinkable. I do not think that any devotee of God will agree with him when he said that oneness with God is impossible of realisation. So, Sir, I am perfectly right in saying that he forgot that, when he was seconding the amendment of Mr. Varadachariar, he was really opposing the principle of utilizing the surplus. It is a fundamental thing on which his other amendments are coming in and so I need not answer him here.

"Then, Sir, in regard to the amendment of Mr. Varadachariar, he has no objection to the use of surplus funds. In fact, the Government are bringing in an amendment to clause 64 (1) to omit the portion beginning with the words 'or that the machinery for effecting such purposes' and ending with the words 'there is a surplus' and the words 'or such surplus as is declared to be available, as the case may be'. The effect of it is, and that is also the principle of Mr. Varadachariar's amendment, how to use the surplus properly. He says, let there be a sort of priority and he has given his order of priority in his amendment. Mr. Varadachariar has taken almost all the items which the Select Committee has suggested, but he has added one other item, namely, cow protection. Of course, I do not see any objection to the order of priority mentioned by Mr. Varadachariar. First, he wants the application of the surplus to the propagation of religious tenets of the religious institution. That also the Select Committee has suggested. But the only difference is, he has altered the arrangement in respect of items in clauses (b), (c) and (d) and clauses (e) and (d) have been given priority over them. I do not see any objection to the principle of priority for the use of surplus funds. But, I think there is a very serious difficulty in that. For instance, the surplus of temples vary from each other; in one temple there may be a small amount and in another a big amount of surplus, and in such cases, which should be given first priority is impossible to decide. Suppose the surplus of a particular institution is only Rs. 500. This may not permit of being utilized for the religious tenets of the institution, but there may also be an educational institution—which is also permitted—for which those funds will be of considerable use. Why should you fetter the discretion of the trustee in such cases to decide for which purpose the funds may be utilized? As Mr. Karanth pointed out the other day, the Sarada Vidyalaya applied to the Udupi math for some contribution and of course some contribution was given—a very laudable thing. But the objection was that the Udupi college asked for contribution, but it was not given. What I say is, certain institutions may apply that the funds available in a particular institution may be sanctioned for their purposes, but it may not be sufficient for the other purposes mentioned. So, Sir, if a hard and fast priority list is put in, the surplus must first be used according to the order mentioned in the list.

Suppose there is not sufficient money available for the purposes, it cannot be used. It will thus be nothing less than a 'dog in the manger policy' if such a priority list is put in. There may, for instance, be a good purpose for which money is asked, and you cannot use it for that purpose if you have to follow that order of priority. So, the sort of cast-iron priority that is proposed by Mr. Varadachariar cannot be accepted in entirety. There is a difference between the principle regarding the purposes for which the surplus should be spent according to the report of the Select Committee and the order of priority proposed by Mr. Varadachariar. Whereas the Select Committee says 'it may be appropriated to all or any of the following purposes, namely . . .' Mr. Varadachariar says it should be utilized according to a certain priority. For instance, for clause (b) 'the establishment and maintenance of a university or college or other institution in which special provision is made for the study of Hindu religion, philosophy or sastras or for imparting instruction in Hindu temple architecture', Mr. Varadachariar wants to give priority to 'promoting the study of Indian languages including Sanskrit'. Of course, the idea may be quite all right, but the difficulty is, it depends upon the amount of surplus available with each religious institution.

"Further, Sir, suppose the trustee of a particular institution in a particular area wants to give the money to the items mentioned. We are also going to have Area Committees. It is open to the trustee to ask the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner whether he can use the surplus to the purposes mentioned and he can also give directions. What I say is, we will be fettering the discretion of the localities, the Area Committees, and the trustees also if the priority should be according to the amendment proposed by Mr. Varadachariar. That is my only objection to accepting the priority.

"Moreover, Sir, in the amendment proposed by the Government we are making a distinction between funds for the purposes of an institution having become impossible of realisation and funds of an institution which have existing surplus, so that priority in both should not be the same. There may be institutions which have become non-existent and the endowment of which may be available, and there may be institutions which are going on and there are still surpluses. Two distinctions are made in the amendment proposed by the Government. But Mr. Varadachariar has not taken that into consideration when he suggested the question of priority. Of course, the Deputy Commissioner or the trustee will try as much as possible to give priority to the better of the things mentioned in the 8 or 9 items, but if you put a hard and fast rule like that, I am afraid, it may fetter the discretion of the trustee or the Deputy Commissioner or the Area Committee. It may also be very difficult to work it when the income of each institution may be different from the other. For instance, the income of one institution may be a little and in the case of the other it may be more. That is the real difficulty in accepting the amendment."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I accept the very kind words from the Hon. Minister when he said that the purpose of my amendment was all right. But he said that it would fetter the discretion of the authority to whom we are going to entrust the distribution of the surplus by such cast-iron priority.

" Now, Sir, let me deal with a few arguments from the other members. Sir, when I put the case for the distribution of the surplus, I pointed out that it was fundamental to any institution, whether charitable or religious, whether it is a math or a temple, that whatever remained over, after the ordinary purposes of the institution had been fulfilled and after the special purposes of the institution had been served by the initiative of the trustee who had different powers to make allotments of money, subject, of course, to consultation with the Commissioner—I would not call it approval even now on principle, further surplus remaining over should be subjected to an order of priority. The very reason given by hon. Members who have spoken before me, justify my amendment.

" Mr. Swaminathan has his own way of dealing with things and when he came to the point he almost blundered into my argument. He said local people must have voice—I agree, the Ramanathapuram people must have voice in determining what should be done with the Rameswaram Devasthanam funds—in the utilization of the surplus and that is all I wanted. In fact that will not happen according to the present law if it is enacted as such. Of course, Mr. Swaminathan instinctively does the right thing, but thinks he must oppose it because he neither understands the object that is proposed in the amendment nor would he care to go through the order of priority which I have given. He has only made a cursory glance at the items of priority and thinks that whatever comes from this member must be had and must be opposed. (Interruption by Sri R. V. Swaminathan.) I know he will oppose anything, even a good thing.

" Now, Madam, I come to the Hon. Minister's arguments as to why priority is needed. It is for this reason, which is the very reason he gave. Suppose a temple has only a small surplus of Rs. 500. It would be better serving the purposes of the institution by not merely throwing it away to some educational institution or other with which it has no connexion whatever. There are so many people competing for the crumbs of bread, as I may call them, and 30 or 40 people come forward and compete for this small crumb. That is not the way of distributing the surplus of a temple. That is highly objectionable from the point of view of the application of the Cypres principle. What should be done is, if the surplus is small and it can only be devoted for the purposes nearest to the objects of the institution, in fact, the endeavour should be to stick to such fulfilment, but if, on the other hand, the surplus is large, as was pointed out by the Hon. Minister, my priority will help. So, if there is a large amount of money as surplus, for instance, you can take items (a), (b), (c) and (d), in the order in which I have given and then spend the amount on those objects, subject, of course, to the condition that the local people, the trustees and the worshippers in general will give their consent, if not in writing, at least tacitly, for the arrangements made by the Deputy Commissioner.

" Now, Sir, this clause does not say anything about it. Even the Hon. Sri Madhava Menon, a good democrat he is, concedes that the trustee must initiate these things, that the local people must have a voice and so on. The very object will be defeated by merely empowering 'so and so' to utilize the surplus without an order of priority. Suppose there is a small surplus and the Deputy Commissioner says that the money should be given to a leper asylum and not for any other purpose which is nearest to the purposes of the institution, I can understand it if it is for a leper asylum in Tirupati because a body of lepers are thronging the steps and it is but right that they should be segregated, put into a proper place, fed, treated gently and nicely and looked after by doctors. If that is done, I am satisfied. If that is not done and the promotion of the study of Indian languages or the imparting of instruction in Hindu religion are not dealt with at all and some one takes it into his head to divert the entire funds for this one purpose, then, Sir, I take exception to it. It is then that priority will save all kinds of disorders setting in and that is why I want that priority should be there; it is not to tie down the hands of the officer concerned; on the other hand, it is to save him from public criticism that all the moneys, that he declared as surplus and not the public have declared through their own trustees or the worshippers, have been spent in a particular manner upon some institution somewhere. Not only will it save the officers concerned, it will also adjust itself to the varying surplus funds in small or big institutions. The Hon. Minister said that it might not be possible to utilize a surplus of Rs. 500 for the propagation of religious tenets of the institution. In fact, Sir, I am greatly concerned at this illustration that the Hon. Minister has given. We will create artificial surpluses or we will burrow out of the temple funds and try to make out surpluses in a way surpluses are not made; surpluses must be real and must be arrived at after the purposes of the institution are fully met, after the repair and renovation have been fully done and after the reserves have been employed for the purposes of worshippers. Even in a big temple like Tirupati temple, the Government have cut down all that is necessary for the uthsavam; the feeding of the public is cut down very much and the thittam maintained in the temple is cut down and if after all that there is surplus money, do we call that surplus and is that the real way of determining the surplus? There is great indignation at the declaration of surplus in this manner. In fact, Sir, it is very unjust to make large gatherings of people assembled starved during festivals. What was the ration that they were getting and what was it that the temple could do to relieve the suffering for want of food of the tens of thousands of people who came to the Brahmotsavam last year? God was kind and merciful in that there was no rain to add to the trouble and perhaps He intended to punish us because we were behaving in a very unreasonable manner. I submit, Sir, that the idea of priority would save the Government from reproach and the idea is that if a small temple has a small surplus, first priority should be given to the purposes nearest to the objects of the institution and if there is a big surplus by all means divert it to the hundred other purposes which we have in view and which may also be incidentally related to the main objects of the institution. I must also in this connexion say this, Sir; it is very unreasonable for the Hon. Minister to begin his arguments by attacking the speeches made in support of my amendment by some other hon. Member; I submit, Sir, it is a very unreasonable way of handling my amendments. He hunts for something else and finally gets a hare out of the bush and runs after it. I submit, Sir, that the objections to priority which I have answered should be fully met."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I submit that I am entitled to point out that the support given by hon. Members to the proposition of hon. Sri Varadachari, which to my thinking is intrinsically not bad, was no support at all and they were inconsistent in what they did. As a matter of fact, there is no difference in the objects mentioned from (a) to (j) of hon. Sri Varadachari's amendment and (a) to (i) of the Government's. Hon. Sri Varadachari has put 'propagation of the religious tenets of the institution' as the first. Supposing that is the position, what would be the result? 'Propagation of the religious tenets of the institution' is such a wide term that you can spend any amount and the entire surplus of any temple can be spent for this one item. It will be obligatory to spend the entire surplus funds of an institution on this purpose alone and it will be compelling the institution to spend the entire surplus on one item while, as a matter of fact, there are other items also. For propaganda of religious tenets of the institution, thousands of people can be sent about and any amount could be spent. I am unable to see what particular purpose is served by this priority question."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"The Hon. Minister has not explained to me how the purposes of a religious institution can become impossible of realization; I want to have some enlightenment about that."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"The temple itself may be destroyed."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

'For existing sub-clause (1) of clause 64, substitute the following:—

"64. (1) The Deputy Commissioner may, on being satisfied that the purpose of a religious institution has, from the beginning, been or has subsequently become impossible of realisation, or that the machinery for effectuating such purpose has failed or no longer exists, or that after providing adequately for the purposes of the institution and after setting apart a sufficient sum for the repair and renovation of the buildings connected therewith, there is a surplus, by order, direct that the endowments of the institution or such surplus as is declared to be available, as the case may be, be appropriated to the following purposes, in the order of priority, namely:—

- (a) the propagation of the religious tenets of the institution;
- (b) the establishment and maintenance of educational institutions where instruction in the Hindu religion is also imparted to Hindu students thereof;
- (c) promoting the study of Indian languages including Sanskrit;
- (d) the establishment and maintenance of a university or college or other institution in which special provision is made for the study of Hindu religion, philosophy or sastras or for imparting instruction in Hindu temple architecture;
- (e) promotion of the cultivation of Indian arts and architecture;
- (f) the establishment and maintenance of orphanages for Hindu children;
- (g) the establishment and maintenance of asylums for Hindus suffering from leprosy;
- (h) the establishment and maintenance of poor homes for destitute Hindus who are physically disabled and helpless;
- (i) the establishment and maintenance of hospitals and dispensaries for the benefit of Hindus; and
- (j) cow protection.

Provided that, in the case of a temple founded and maintained by a community or specific endowment attached to such a temple the endowments or surplus shall, as far as possible, be utilized for the benefit of the community for the purposes mentioned above."

The amendment was lost.

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I move—
'In line 2, after the word "religious", insert the words "or charitable".'

Even if the clause should remain, I want the words 'charitable institution' also to be there."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The hon. Member can also move the next amendment standing in his name."

[4th December 1950]

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"So that it may be easier for you to rule it out of order, Sir! It is perfectly in order, Sir, and I move that also, namely—

"For the words 'by order direct', substitute the words 'apply to the court praying for order'."

I submit, Sir, it is a very serious point and I am sorry that the Hon. Sri Madhava Menon backed by his majority is not able to realize what he is doing and I want him to address himself to what I am submitting. There are certain powers given to the Commissioner and the Deputy Commissioner and there is no check over them and they are expected to satisfy themselves about particular points and when once they are satisfied about them, there is an end of the matter. It is said: Why not the surplus funds be utilized by them in a certain manner? If I keep in view the purposes of the institution—he instanced a surplus of Rs. 500—I will go on accumulating and when it becomes a respectable amount I will use it for the purposes of the institution. I may have to extend the buildings for the comforts of the pilgrims from whom we derive the money. I am asking, Sir, what is the difference between the Government who want to bleed the pilgrims without giving them comforts and the ex-zamindars who were bleeding the tenants without giving them any conveniences and amenities or security of tenure? I wish to know what is the great difference? Year after year, money is coming from them and immediately there is a so-called surplus, it is proposed to give it away to some institution. Will that temple in that case have any respectable amount sufficient for the purposes of renovating or extending the buildings or create comforts for the pilgrims? This is a very important matter and my submission is that it should not be left in the hands of executive officers. Whether there are surplus funds or not and whether the purposes of the institution have been adequately provided or not are matters of great doubt and it is only a court with a judicial frame of mind that must look into these matters. There must be a long range view of things and it is not as if the executive officer can say. Here is a surplus and I shall send it away to some institution in the Punjab and it may be a laudable institution. But in that connexion, the question arises: What about the pilgrims who come there and what about the donors who make their donations; what about their comforts, about their quarters, about water-supply and their convenience and their happiness? Even after the people's Government has come into power, should the pilgrims go without any comforts, should they walk in jungles on roads which are mere footpaths and are bad and are they to stay in houses which are leaky and dirty and should they not have comforts and shelters? As one of the pilgrims when I did not make myself known when I went to a temple, I know pretty well the difficulties of pilgrims; it is only when I am personally known to the Commissioner or to the executive officer that some comfort is given to me. I go there and give my little mite to the temple and in the same manner pilgrims give what they can. It is the ordinary pilgrim who has no voice from whom money flows to the temple.

4th December 1950] [Sri T. Viswanatham]

Does it lie in the mouth of a Deputy Commissioner to say that out of the surplus of such funds of the temple, a Rs. 10,000 shall be given to a hostel in the Punjab as its objects are very laudable? I am submitting that the power of the court must not be taken away. The objects of the institution must be taken note of and a long range view must be taken in that behalf and money should not be merely frittered away on the ostensible ground that there is a surplus and therefore, it should be utilized according to the discretion of the executive officers. If this is not done, my fear is that money would be declared surplus without regard to the provision for renovation and repairs of temples, extension or comforts to the pilgrims who are the ultimate givers of the money. That is why, Sir, I want that a long range view of things should be taken and it should not be left into the hands of an executive officer but let it go to a court of law to be decided as is done in every civilized country in the world."

[Sri V. M. Ramaswami Mudaliyar] [4th December 1950]

"I want, Sir, some machinery, I hope the Hon. Minister will agree with me, should be provided for the Deputy Commissioner to consult or ascertain the local wish as to how the surplus should be utilized. For, surely, the wishes of the people who contributed to that should be ascertained."

MR. SPEAKER:—"I suppose the hon. Member is not speaking on the amendment now."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"No, Sir. I fail to see any machinery provided in the Bill to ascertain the wish of the people as to how the surplus fund should be utilized. Though the Hon. Minister in opposing the amendment said that the local people would be consulted, I see no machinery for that. So I want a machinery should be created to ascertain the local wish on the proper utilization of the surplus fund."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I have not been able to follow the connexion between hon. Sri Viswanatham's speech and the amendment he moved. Of course, he did not move his first amendment. The second amendment is clearly out of order. It is the third amendment he has moved. Under that he wants to substitute the words 'apply to the court praying for order' for the words 'by order direct'. Now the clause as amended, as per his amendment, would read thus—

The Deputy Commissioner may, on being satisfied that the purpose of a religious institution has from the beginning been, or has subsequently become, impossible of realisation . . . apply to the Court praying for order that the endowments of the institution or such surplus as is declared to be available . . . be appropriated to all or any of the following purposes, namely

So that what his amendment means is that the Deputy Commissioner must apply for an order from the court for the proper utilization of the surplus fund, for any of the purposes mentioned in the sub-clauses that follow in the clause. But what he argued was that it should not be used for any of the purposes mentioned there. That is what I understood from his speech; or to put it in another way, that is what he heard him to say. While supporting hon. Sri Varadachari's amendment he argued that any surplus that was left of the funds should not be used for any purpose other than that for which the institution was founded, and finally he said that the Deputy Commissioner should ask the Court for an order as to how the surplus fund should be utilized. Sir, that is not the way in which the surplus fund should be used. So I cannot accept his amendment.

"Then, Sir, as regards hon. Sri Ramaswami Mudaliyar's point of inquiry, it is true, the clause reads, 'The Deputy Commissioner may . . . by order direct that the endowment, etc.' Sir, we have the same wording in the existing Act. I am not able readily now to place my hand on the exact section. What has actually been happening till now is, the Board has permitted diversion of funds very rarely on its own motion; it has been mostly doing it on the recommendation of the trustees asking for permission to divert the fund. Where they wanted permission, that was given. So, even when there was no provision, the practice was to consult the trustees. Therefore, what the clause means is, the Deputy Commissioner, if the trustee asked for it, may order, etc."

SRI V. M. RAMASWAMI MUDALIYAR:—"I wish rules are made in that behalf under this measure."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"There is provision for that in the Bill; but I am not able readily to lay my finger on the particular clause. Anyway, this clause does not prevent the normal course of a trustee taking the initiative or an area committee taking the initiative in the matter."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

In line 2, after the words "religious", insert the words "or charitable".

For the words "by order direct", substitute the words "apply to the Court praying for order".

The amendments were lost.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move—

In sub-clause (1)—

in the opening paragraph, omit

(a) the portion beginning with the words "or that the machinery for effectuating such purpose" and ending with the words "there is a surplus", and

(b) the words "or such surplus as is declared to be available, as the case may be,".

Sir, what the meaning of the words now sought to be omitted, is, when the machinery for effectuating such purpose has failed or no longer exists; that, we are advised is wrong, because if the machinery has failed, the business of the Government would be to create a machinery and not use the funds of the institution for any other purpose; so, a sentence like that in the clause is wrong; for, the business of the Government is, if a particular endowment has failed to fulfil its purpose, its funds should be utilized for any other purposes specified in the present clause. Therefore, Sir, we are advised to omit those words.

"Then, Sir, we are advised that the expenses for the normal functioning of an institution, for the repair and renovation of the building and so on, need not be specifically mentioned in the clause. For, we are advised that these are parts of the normal expenditure for running any institution, and so, it is wrong to have these words in the clause."

MR. SPEAKER:—"Government amendment moved. Hon. Sri Viswanatham has given notice of an amendment to omit Government Amendment No. 32. The hon. Member, instead of moving his amendment, may it oppose."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Sir, I did not hear the Hon. Minister when he moved his amendment, as he turned himself away very much to the other side and also spoke away from the mike. I oppose the motion for all the reasons I have already given in my previous speech, but more vehemently than last time."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI :—" Sir, I wish to say just a few words in clarification. The Hon. Minister read out the clause as amended as per his amendment. It will run thus—

Suppose there was a temple and it got ruined; naturally one cannot fulfil the purpose of the institution unless he rebuilds it. But for rebuilding it, there may not be anything in the funds of the temple. Then, the question under this clause arises. But under clause 32 a wise trustee has powers to allot funds for the repair, for securing the health, safety or convenience of pilgrims and worshippers and for purposes of sanitation and so on. In all these things, the Deputy Commissioner has no say in the matter. It is good so far as it goes. It is only after the ordinary purpose of the institution is served, which purpose includes repair and renovation of the building, the surplus should be suitably utilized. Now in the accounts, there would be a reserve fund created generally. Now, one cannot repair or renovate a building except when it has gone out of repair; and it is not every year that such a thing would take place, or a necessity for it would arise. So, generally a reserve fund in the budget is created, called repair reserve or renovation reserved fund, and then, there will be a certain amount set apart for that purpose in that fund. That cannot be said to be surplus. Then every trustee has to spend money for the fulfilment of the purpose of the institution and certain moneys for the safety, health and comfort of the worshippers. That also is outside the scope of this clause 64. So, in all these abovementioned matters the trustee has an initiative and has got control. The whole Bill is wisely framed in that regard. Now, what is the surplus that remains over?

"I do admit that there may be a surplus sometimes. It is not as if there will not be a surplus. The clause says that the Deputy Commissioner may, by order, direct. The Hon. Minister agrees that there may be some machinery for consulting, and ascertaining the opinion of, the persons having interest. A provision to that effect is not found in the Bill. He said that he would look into this matter. Saying that the Board's procedure up till now has been that and that it will be continued hereafter is a mere obiter dicta. That will not do. The Government must make some provision in the rules. As I understand the sub-clause there is no provision for making rule. Specific provision must be made in the rules for consultation with the trustees or persons having interest in regard to utilization of surplus funds."

"Sub-clause (4) reads—

"The order of the Deputy Commissioner under this section shall be published in the prescribed manner and on such publication shall, subject to the provisions of section 66, be binding on the trustee, the executive officer and all persons having interest."

The order is binding on all persons concerned whether they like it or not. The persons concerned have no voice either in the declaration of the surplus or in the manner of utilizing that surplus. Is it fair to make the order binding when they had not been consulted and they had no voice in the matter? This is a very serious breach of etiquette. We should not make things binding without giving an opportunity to a section of the world, however small it may be, to make representation which may be heeded to in time. I would like that some method should be prescribed for ascertaining the wishes of the local people through the Area Committee or the trustees and then it will be wise to make the order of the Deputy Commissioner binding on all the persons concerned.

"The proviso to sub-clause (1) says 'that the endowments or surplus of a temple founded and maintained by a community shall be utilized for the benefit of that community on any or all of the purposes specified.' It is a good safeguard. It fulfils the object of my previous amendment which was rejected. When endowments are created for the fulfilment of certain purposes, the funds should not be spent on other than the original purposes. The proviso will be operative in most cases except in the case of temples in which the whole of the general public may be said to have an interest or leading temples."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" The hon. Member did not raise any objection to the amendment that I have proposed. Even after my amendment is accepted, provision for ascertaining the opinion of persons having interest remains an open question. I will examine the matter."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is—

"In sub-clause (1)—

in the opening paragraph, omit

(a) the portion beginning with the words "or that the machinery for effectuating such purpose" and ending with the words "there is a surplus", and

(b) the words "or such surplus as is declared to be available, as the case may be,"."

The amendment was carried.

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Sir, I move—

"Delete sub-clause (1) (b)."

This is a very simple amendment. As I have already said in speaking on hon. Sri N. S. Varadachari's amendment, I want these religious institutions to be centres of attraction not only for the pilgrims of this country but also for the visitors coming from the other parts of the world. People from far-off countries visit our temples. I want these institutions to be renovated and maintained in such a way that they shall be a wonder of the world. The Commissioner or Deputy Commissioner may save a thousand rupees here and a thousand rupees there and spend it for other purposes according to his pleasure and discretion. If I am asked to utilize the funds of the Tirupati temple, I shall renovate the temple and improve the surroundings in such a way as to make connoisseurs of art say 'Here is a beautiful place which everybody should visit.'

Whether as a shelter from the din and noise of the world for souls that seek the place of God or as a work of art, the institution must be kept in an ideal condition. This cannot be done if the funds are frittered away. In this country, which is noted for the great religious light and lustre which it has shed on the world, people will be surprised to find the deplorable condition in which the flooring, entrances, steps, corridors, stands and the surroundings of temples are kept. Surely the available surplus must be utilized on improving the upkeep of the institution. It may be very good to start a university. It is the duty of the Government who collect taxes from everybody and not only from the pilgrims to start as many universities as are necessary. They do not give even paltry sums to local bodies for opening elementary schools. They do not allow the Corporation and the municipal councils to increase the salary of the teachers even if they are prepared to pay from their own funds. But they are ready to pounce upon the funds of a temple or an endowment and utilize them for starting universities. The Government shirk their responsibility and divert the attention of the public by this method. A university may be manned by professors who may differ from the tenets of the institution to which the funds belong, and subjects unconnected with those tenets may also be taught there. Temples which have been built thousands of years ago require lakhs of rupees to expend along the lines intended by the founders. The real surplus if any must be kept as a reserve fund and used as and when necessary for improving the temple and keeping the surroundings in a neat and beautiful condition. Only then the pilgrims who go there with devotion will find a haven of peace, a shelter for afflicted souls and an attraction for the connoisseurs of art. Ancient temples built by the skill of the fingers of the sculptor and the architect are the pride of our country and they stand with great sublimity and majesty defying the onslaughts of modern civilization. As children of that faith, it is our duty to renovate and keep the temples and their surroundings in a neat condition. One technique of the modern governments is to take hold of a laudable object like the founding and maintenance of a university and use it as a handle for diverting temple funds. The Government should start universities with public funds and not pounce upon temple funds for the purpose. In the great temples which have been under the direct superintendence and management of the Endowments Board for the last twenty years, one finds that the walls and the idols are not kept in a good condition. Generally walls are given a thick coating of chunam plaster and whitewashed. That is the way in which these temples are maintained. Is that the purpose for which the sculptors and architects of old built those temples? It is our duty to keep the temples and the idols in them in a good condition. These idols are life-giving and sustain the faith of millions and millions of people. For what better purposes can the surplus funds be utilized than the renovation and proper maintenance of temples? Just above the basement in the great temple at Simhachalam, some inscriptions of a most important historical event are engraved and nobody takes care of them. The trustee does not take any interest. Because the temple belongs to a hereditary trustee, the Board does not have an effective voice and does not take any interest. Coco-nuts are dashed on the inscription and over the inscription stone. Luckily some thirty years ago, Government Archaeologists went and copied those inscriptions, and but for this there would have been no trace left. Several letters are now wiped out; they are not to be seen. Once I went to the Madhurai temple. There is the one-thousand pillared mantapam which is a wonder of the world. The top of it was kept in a dilapidated condition and several lakhs of rupees would be required to renovate it. When that is the state of affairs, should it be left to the discretion of the Deputy Commissioner to say that here is a surplus and that he will give it for this or that university? I have great objection to temple funds being utilized for other purposes, however laudable they may be. The Government cannot fail in their duty of starting universities and throw the burden upon temple funds."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"Sir, I second the amendment."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The hon. Member himself has given notice of a similar amendment."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"If this amendment is rejected, then I will move my amendment."

"I want the Government to realize the vital argument of hon. Sri T. Viswanatham. In dealing with the institutions themselves, we should not be carried away by the objects to which their surplus funds are to be diverted. These institutions were founded and are being maintained by pious and devout Hindus. We are proposing to divert the surplus funds of Hindu religious institutions to purposes like the maintenance of universities and similar institutions in whose syllabus there is some provision, however inadequate it may be, for the teaching of Hindu religion. Here I am reminded of the story of Ramadas. Perhaps it is the nemesis that we are now having. When Ramadas was in the employ of the Moghul Badhusha, he diverted all the State funds for building the Sri Rama's temple at Bhadrachalam. He thought that building of Rama's temple was very good and that State funds could easily be diverted to that."

"It is quite the reverse process that we are now doing. We think that it was never the intention of the donors of these religious institutions that any of their surplus funds should not be utilized for the maintenance of universities. Universities should be maintained out of other funds and grants by the Government. We should have in a university provision not only for all the Indian languages, but also for the French, English and other foreign languages also. They should not be taught at the cost of the Hindu religious and charitable endowments. Therefore I want the Government to bear in mind what my hon. Friend Sri T. Viswanatham has pointed out, namely, that there is ample scope for spending some lakhs and crores of rupees from our religious institutions for the renovation of these temples themselves and making them as glorious as they were in the past. But under the pretext of maintaining universities, which have now become a glamour with some set of people in these days; and by tacking on to it certain other things as mentioned in this provision, such as provision for the study of Hindu religion, philosophy or sastras, etc., let not the Government divert the surplus funds of temples and other Hindu religious endowments to them. It is not right and proper to divert these surpluses of religious funds which are intended exclusively for being utilized for Hindu religious purposes to other public and non-religious purposes and the Government must bear this point in mind before making such diversion."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, my hon. Friend Sri T. Viswanatham just a few minutes ago said that we must be serious in these matters. I entirely agree with him that we should be serious in this matter and not simply treat these things in a lighthearted fashion. I would therefore appeal to my hon. Friend also to be serious in these matters."

"Sir, only a few minutes ago, my hon. Friend Sri N. S. Varadachari moved an amendment for the substitution of the present clause 64 by a new one and my hon. Friend Sri T. Viswanatham, with all the eloquence at his command seconded that amendment. That amendment reads as follows:—

"For the existing sub-clause (1) of clause 64, substitute the following:—

"64 (1) The Deputy Commissioner may, on being satisfied that the purpose of a religious institution has from the beginning been or has subsequently become, impossible of realisation, or that the machinery for effectuating such purpose has failed or no longer exists, or that after providing adequately for the purposes of the institution and after setting apart a sufficient sum for the repair and renovation of the building connected therewith, there is a surplus, by order, direct that the endowments of the institution or such surplus as is declared to be available, as the case may be, be appropriated to the following purposes, in the order of priority, namely:—

(d) the establishment and maintenance of a university or college or other institution in which special provision is made for the study of Hindu religion, philosophy or sastras or for imparting instruction in Hindu temple architecture."

The amendment which he has now moved is for the deletion of the very same sub-clause, which was inserted by the Select Committee. For the benefit of the House, let me here read what the sub-clause says—

"64 (1)(b) the establishment and maintenance of a university or college or other institution in which special provision is made for the study of Hindu religion, philosophy or sastras or for imparting instruction in Hindu temple architecture."

4th December 1950] [Sri K. Madhava Menon]

Now you will find, Sir, that this sub-clause is the same, word for word, as the one that was sought to be substituted by the amendment of my hon. Friend Sri N. S. Varadachari, and that was vehemently supported by my hon. Friend Sri T. Viswanatham. Is it because it has been recommended by the Select Committee that it must be deleted or is it any want of seriousness in my or on the part of my hon. Friend Sri Viswanatham, who is now opposing this sub-clause, which is identically the same as the one which he seconded a minute ago? Sir, it is really very difficult for me to follow his line of reasoning, because in one breath he spent all his eloquence in supporting the amendment, while at the next moment, with the same eloquence he has opposed the exactly identical clause, by asking us, 'What have you done for the Simhachalam temple or the Madhurai temple for its thousand-pillared mantapam? Why should you not renovate those things?'

"Sir, let me, in this connexion, request hon. Members of the House to read clause 75 of the Bill as recommended by the Select Committee. There they will find that the Select Committee has been very careful about the repair and renovation of the buildings connected with the religious institutions. We have particularly retained sub-clause (c) of clause 75 (1) (2) which states that every budget prepared by the trustee of every religious institution shall make adequate provision for—

'the repair and renovation of the buildings connected with the institution the provision made under this clause not being less than ten per centum of its income in the case of an institution assessed to contribution under section 81 for the previous fasli year on an income not exceeding three thousand rupees, and not being less than 25 per centum of its income, or 10 per centum of its income up to three thousand rupees and the whole of the excess of its income over that amount whichever is less, in the case of any other institution;'

So that, Sir, you will see that we have fixed what the minimum budget provision should be for the renovation and repair of the buildings connected with the temples and religious institutions.

"Again, Sir, in clause 32 which we have already passed, we have said—

'(1) The trustee of a religious institution may, out of the funds in his charge, after satisfying adequately the purposes of the institution, incur expenditure on arrangements for securing the health, safety or convenience of disciples, pilgrims or worshippers resorting to the institution.

Therefore, Sir, we have already made provision for all these things and we have also definitely made provision in clause 75 for the renovation of temples, like Simhachalam or the Madhurai Aiyarakal Mantapam which my hon. Friend Sri T. Viswanatham wants. But because of the accident of the circumstances that the Select Committee has chosen to include the establishment and maintenance of universities as one of the items to which the surplus funds of religious institutions can be diverted, my hon. Friend Sri T. Viswanatham has wasted so much of his eloquence for the deletion of this sub-clause while, as I have already pointed out, he has supported an identically same amendment with the same amount of eloquence. That is my answer to my hon. Friend Sri T. Viswanatham, Sir."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I am very sorry that my hon. Friend the Minister for Law, Sri K. Madhava Menon, has not understood the purpose of my alternative amendment at all. No doubt, we propose a number of amendments, and in case they are not accepted, we have every right to propose alternative amendments. What is wrong in it? Now, I move a proposition for the deletion of this clause, and that is defeated. Is it not open to me to amend a particular phrase in that clause, even when my previous amendment for the deletion of the entire clause has fallen through? This is only an alternative amendment. Then, what is the use of rising up like a hero and saying, 'I can say there is no seriousness in this amendment at all.' I can tell my hon. Friend, the Law Minister, that my alternative amendment is perfectly in order. It is not that I am not serious over it. It is because I am so serious that I am standing up here from morning till evening proposing amendments, speaking on the amendments and opposing the clauses, whenever I feel I should do so. I think the purpose of the opposition has been served, because the Government have come forward with so many amendments in a line with my reasoning still, after the Select Committee has reported on the Bill. I still believe that the Government will take advantage of some of these amendments even at this late stage, in order to make the Bill a little more satisfactory and a little more acceptable. Or, the Government will themselves have to bring amendments of their own at a later stage, even as they have been doing in respect of every other piece of legislation.

" But that apart, Sir, I must submit that the remarks that he has made of me, in regard to my alternative amendment are not at all charitable, and I can only say that he did not do justice to himself, that is because he is a lawyer. But surely, I can tell my hon. Friend that alternative amendments can always be moved when there is no chance of the original amendments being accepted and we are perfectly in order in doing so. But simply because the Government are not prepared to accept the alternative amendments, it does not mean that I cannot move them, or support that amendment, which we think, is an improvement on the original provision of the Bill. The object of the alternative amendment is this, that if the Government do not accept the whole of it, they may at least accept a portion of it. That is why I have been urging that the surplus funds of the temples should be utilized only for purposes connected with the temple, either for the convenience of the pilgrims or for the renovation of the buildings and not for other objects, unconnected with the temples. I know that renovation cannot be done with Rs. 500 or even with Rs. 5,000. You have to accumulate all the available funds from year to year. You may require crores of rupees if you want to carry out the entire renovation of all temples. Since that is not possible, you can at least see that the temples are kept in a neat condition, that the gopurams are restored that the corridors are repaired, that the tanks are cleaned and that the temples are made to give presentable appearance, with the available surplus. And my own opinion is that the Deputy Commissioner and the Commissioner will be well-advised to accumulate these surpluses from year to year and utilize such accumulations for the purpose of the institutions themselves so as to make them centres of attraction for the people of the country as a whole."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, my hon. Friend Sri T. Viswanatham asked me, 'Is it not open to me to move an amendment for the deletion of this clause and if that is not accepted, to move an alternative amendment to it?' I never said that it was not open to the hon. Member to do either, but I simply wanted to point out the logic and consistency of his action in supporting the amendment of my hon. Friend, Sri N. S. Varadachari, for the substitution of the present clause 64 by a new clause which contained a provision which was identically the same as the present sub-clause, and a minute later, in moving an amendment for the deletion of the same sub-clause. That is all what I wanted to do and I said that it was difficult for me to understand the purpose of my hon. Friend in moving this amendment."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The amendment is—

'Delete sub-clause (1) (b) of clause 64.'"

The amendment was lost.

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I move the amendment standing in my name, namely—

'In sub-clause (1) (b), for the words "in which special provision is made", substitute the words "specially intended".'

" Here again, Sir, there is another instance where I have had an occasion to support the proposition for the deletion of the entire clause, but that amendment having been rejected, I have now sought to move an amendment for the substitution of certain words in it. If my present amendment is accepted, the sub-clause would read thus—

'the establishment and maintenance of a university or college or other institution specially intended for the study of Hindu religion, philosophy or sastras or for imparting instruction in Hindu temple architecture.'

The object of the amendment is to make the position clearer that the surplus temple funds should be utilized for the Hindu religious purposes only and not for non-Hindu religious purposes. If the Government accept the position that there is ample scope and that nothing has till now been done for the propagation of the Hindu religion, then this amendment only seeks to facilitate the Government to devote the surplus temple funds available solely for that purpose, and on institutions specially intended for the study and propagation of Hindu religion, philosophy and sastras.

As I have already pointed out, the present provision in this clause appears to be simply a cloak for diverting the surplus funds of religious institutions for the maintenance of universities, which have only to make a special provision for the study of Hindu religion. It may be that this provision for the study of Hindu religion is an one-hundredth part of the activities of the university or it is one of the several subjects taken up by the university. Merely the mention of a special provision for the study of Hindu religion is not, in my opinion, enough to enable the Government to utilize the surplus funds for the general object of the university. The university should be specially intended for the study of Hindu religion, philosophy and sastras and that is the point that should be made clear, and that is the object of my amendment.

"Sir, another point that I want the Hon. Minister to clarify in the course of his reply is this, whether this surplus may be diverted to the institutions that are established and run and maintained for the study of Hindu religion, by the institutions themselves, or whether they can be given over as grants to other institutions or other persons who run such institutions for study of religion, because I feel that the wording is very vague. I, therefore, want a categorical statement from the Hon. Minister that these funds would be given to such institutions run by religious institutions themselves and not to institutions run by other agencies."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I second the amendment moved by my hon. Friend, Sri L. N. Gopalaswami. The Hon. Minister will kindly see that there is no conflict between what I have said and what I am going to say. Now at least I hope that I may be able to get some favourable reply from the Hon. Minister, because he has not been able to agree to my original amendment for the deletion of this clause altogether. Sir, we have always been saying the surplus funds of these religious institutions should be utilized mainly in the interests of and solely for the purpose of the religious institutions themselves. That is what the amendment of my hon. Friend, Sri L. N. Gopalaswami means and that comes into line with what I have in mind. That is the reason why I have stood up to second the amendment. As I have already observed, there is no use spending the surplus funds of the temples on any university. The Government can help universities out of their general funds. These surplus funds should not be treated as part of the consolidated funds of the State. What I suggest is that these moneys, having come from Hindu religious institutions should be spent on universities which are specially intended for the propagation of the Hindu religion, Hindu sastras and tenets of the Hindu sastras. That is the simple purpose of this amendment. I hope that the Hon. Minister will be good enough to accept at least this amendment."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I should like to say just a word on this amendment. The Hon. Minister will see that 'the establishment and maintenance of a university or college or other institutions in which special provision is made for the study of Hindu religion, etc.' will not fulfil the object which my hon. Friend, Sri L. N. Gopalaswami, has in view. The idea is that even if a special provision for the study of Hindu religion is not made at present, the university can, at some future date, ask for the surplus funds of the temples, after making such a provision in its curricula. That is to say, the university may not have any provision at present for the teaching of Hindu religion. But simply for the purpose of grabbing at a grant, later on it may make some provision merely to satisfy the requirements of clause 64. It is just to avoid that I think that my hon. Friend has moved this amendment. If so, I think it is a very reasonable amendment and it may be accepted."

(At this stage several hon. Members rose in their seats to speak.)

MR. SPEAKER:—"We have got thirty amendments and so I cannot allow more than three Members to speak on each."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, if the amendment of hon. Sri Gopalaswami is made, the clause would read—

'(b) the establishment and maintenance of a university or college or other institution specially intended for the study of Hindu religion, philosophy or sastras or for imparting instruction in Hindu temple architecture;'

That means the institution must be solely intended for the study of Hindu religion, philosophy or sastras, or for imparting instruction in Hindu temple architecture. Then the university should not have any science or literature taught there. The present Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanam Act contains an identical provision that we have here. The devasthanam is running a college though not a university. If Sri Gopalaswami's amendment is to be accepted, that college should be closed. The funds of that devasthanam cannot be utilized for that college, because they must be used only for institutions solely intended for the study of Hindu religion, etc."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"It is 'specially intended' and not 'solely intended'."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"The establishment and maintenance of a university or college or other institution which is specially intended for this purpose means that it can be intended only for that purpose and nothing else. The maintenance of an institution specially intended for a particular purpose means that you cannot have any purpose other than the purpose for which it is specially intended. Therefore, I cannot accept the amendment."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—"Suppose we use the words, 'primarily intended'."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" If, as hon. Sri Raghavayya says, it means 'primarily intended' then it is quite different. As it is, I am afraid I cannot accept the amendment."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI :—" Sir, if the use of the words 'specially intended' will, according to the Hon. Minister, preclude the teaching of other subjects like science and arts in the college, then even the clause as it stands, with the words, 'in which special provision is made' will preclude that. Because when you say that special provision is made for something, it means no other provision can be made. I can only meet the Hon. Minister's argument by using his own argument against him. Sir, it is sometimes said when objection is raised to any provision, that it is found in the old Act and that it may be continued. Whenever the Government want to have a thing they say that it is found in the old enactment. Anyhow, Sir, I do not see any reason why the money of the Hindu disciples and worshippers should be diverted to other objects like university education, however laudable they may be."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, if the hon. Member cannot understand the difference between the words 'institution in which special provision is made' and 'institution specially intended for', I cannot help it."

The amendment was put and lost.

Sub-clause (1) (c).

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI :—" Sir, I move the following amendment—

'In sub-clause (1) (c), for the word "also", substitute the word "alone".'

Sir, this provision, if I may say so, is a very dangerous one. It says—

'(c) the establishment and maintenance of educational institutions where instruction in the Hindu religion is also imparted to Hindu students thereof.'

The Hon. Minister cannot say now that this will not include Christian institutions and Muslim institutions. The very clause says that. It comes to this that the money of the Hindu worshippers can be utilized for the purposes of propagating Muslim religion and Christian religion in their own institutions provided there is some provision made in those institutions for teaching Hindu religion also to the Hindu students in those institutions. It is a thing which is unheard of. I am not able to comprehend it. It is really distressing to Hindus like me who feel that the Government are not only attempting to take control of Hindu religious institutions by this Bill, but they are also trying to appropriate the properties belonging to Hindu religious institutions to institutions of other religions like the Muslim and Christian institutions provided the Hindu section of the students

4th December 1950] [Sri L. N. Gopalaswami]

"Sir, there is also another point. According to the present Constitution of India, educational institutions are prohibited from teaching religion in any shape or form. I want to know, therefore, how the Government can reconcile a provision like this for the spending of funds of Hindu religious institutions on educational institutions which are prohibited by the Constitution from imparting religious instruction, with the provision in the Constitution. I, therefore, strongly object to this clause. I press my amendment seeking to provide that the funds should be spent on the establishment and maintenance of educational institutions where instruction in the Hindu religion alone is imparted to students thereof."

SRI M. S. PATTABHIRAMIAH :—" I second the amendment. Though it is only a small verbal amendment, it is a very important amendment. In this connexion I wish to draw your attention to the incidents which happened in the Venkateswara Arts College, Tirupati, on the Deepavali day. It is an institution managed by the Tirupati Devasthanam. But the picture of God Venkateswara was burnt by the students on that day. It is an institution where instruction in Hindu religion is given. But any Charvaka may call himself a Hindu, enter these institutions and destroy the idol or the ideal or the sentimental object of worship so openly and blatantly and insult our religion. But if it is provided here that the funds should be used only on educational institutions where instruction in Hindu religion only or alone is imparted, such students who though they are born Hindus are not really Hindus will not enter those institutions and destroy Hindu religion, Hindu observances and traditions. As the object of the Bill is to safeguard and protect the interests of these religious institutions which are being mismanaged and whose funds are not properly spent, it is necessary that the funds should not be used for such educational institutions; where the students, though it may be unconsciously or unintentionally, are trained to destroy the object of worship in the temple or the religious institution to which the educational institution is attached. If such a thing is done, it will be really disastrous to the Hindu religion. The Government should take note of this and only religiously-minded people should be admitted to these colleges. We have to see that people who are not devotees or devout Hindus are prevented from taking advantage of such institutions maintained from temple funds."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, the incident at Tirupati in which some students burnt or destroyed the portrait of God Venkateswara has nothing to do with this clause. These are acts of vandalism. Many acts of vandalism are done even inside temples not to speak of colleges. They are all bad. Some very bad people did it in the college. I find from the papers that they have been dismissed from the college. When some misguided students do some indecent or improper or really outrageous thing, proper action should be taken under the rules. But that is no ground for supporting this amendment. Sri Gopalaswami wants that the word 'also' should be omitted and the word 'alone' should be substituted in its place. That means that the money should be spent for institutions where nothing else than instruction in Hindu religion is imparted. That will be the result of the amendment. But the Select Committee decided that the surplus funds of religious institutions, if there are really surplus funds, can be used for imparting secular instruction also. But as these funds belong to religious institutions, we must see that Hindu religion also is taught to the students. My hon. Friend has referred to the Constitution. There are certain rules issued by the Education Department which prohibit religious instruction being imposed upon students who do not follow that particular religion. Even in the case of aided institutions, if they want to teach a religion to the students who do not follow that particular religion, the consent of the parents has to be obtained. If the hon. Member says that instruction in Hindu religion alone is to be imparted compulsorily, it must be only to the Hindu students of those institutions. We cannot impose such instruction upon students of other religions. These being secular institutions aided by Government, admissions cannot be confined to Hindu students only. Other students also will have to be admitted, in which case Hindu religion is to be taught to the Hindu students alone. Therefore, Sir, Sri Gopalaswami's amendment cannot be accepted."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA :—" Sir, I want the Hon. Minister to explain to me what is the difference between having 'also' and having 'alone' in this clause. If you say Hindu religion alone is taught, you cannot teach Christianity, Jainism and so on. If religious instruction in general is to be imparted, then you may say that instruction in Hindu religion 'also' is imparted. The Hon. Minister's objection to Sri Gopalaswami's amendment is that it would make religious instruction in Hindu religion compulsory in those institutions. The amendment of Sri Gopalaswami does not make it compulsory. It only says that instruction in Hindu religion alone is imparted to the students. I do not know what is the difference in practice between the two words and why the Hon. Minister is fighting shy of accepting the amendment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" It is not a question of fighting shy. If the word 'also' is there, it means that Hindu students are given instruction in all other subjects and they are also given instruction in Hindu religion. But if the amendment is accepted, it will mean that Hindu students can be imparted instruction in Hindu religion 'only' and nothing else. The one says that you should teach religion to Hindu students while the other says that you should teach Hindu religion alone and nothing else."

4th December 1950]

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Sir, sub-clauses (b) and (c) should be read together. There are so many objects. The Government have made provision for other institutions where other subjects will also be taught. The acceptance of the amendment of Sri Gopalaswami will not mean any conflict. On the other hand, it will help the Government."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, this sub-clause can admit of only two interpretations. As my hon. Friend Sri Viswanatham said, this will be a complement to sub-clause (b). Sub-clause (b) provides for the establishment and maintenance of a university or college or other institution in which special provision is made for the study of Hindu religion, philosophy or sastras, etc. Sub-clause (c) provides for the establishment and maintenance of educational institutions where instruction in the Hindu religion is imparted. This can be interpreted to mean that it can go to the help of educational institutions where besides Hindu religion, other subjects and religions can also be taught. The Hon. Minister's objection to my amendment was this. If my amendment is to be accepted, then, nothing else than Hindu religion can be taught. The purpose of sub-clause (c) so far as I am able to understand, is to help such institutions only that impart education in religion. Because in view of the Constitution, no other public educational institution can impart education in religion. Sub-clause (c) should be a complement to sub-clause (b) and should help such of the institutions that are interested in teaching people in religion. If that be so, according to my interpretation, it can benefit and help the teaching of Hindu religious education and not any other education as may be suggested by sub-clause (c). My second point is, that even if we say that Hindu religion alone will be imparted, there will be no bar to other subjects being taught if that is possible. My amendment only makes this point clear. It will be compulsory so far as Hindu students are concerned that Hindu religion alone should be taught; but there is absolutely no objection for any other subject being taught. Of course, this will be subject to the Constitution and has to be examined whether the Constitution will allow that or not. As the money comes from Hindu worshippers, I want that Hindu religion alone should be imparted and not any other religion."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, there is no connection between sub-clauses (b) and (c), and sub-clause (c) is not a complement to sub-clause (b). Sub-clause (b) deals with the establishment and maintenance of a university or college or other institutions similar to them. There are educational institutions which are neither universities nor colleges. There may be a high school. In sub-clause (c), the wording is 'the establishment and maintenance of educational institutions where instruction in the Hindu religion is also imparted to Hindu students thereof.' If Sri Gopalaswami's amendment is accepted, the result will be that in a particular institution nothing else can be taught to the Hindu students other than Hindu religion: Hindu religion alone can be taught to the students. Therefore, we cannot accept this amendment."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

In sub-clause (1) (c), for the word "also", substitute the word "alone"."

The amendment was lost.

Sub-clauses (1) (f), (g), (h) and (i).

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, if you will allow me, I will move all my amendments to sub-clauses (f), (g), (h) and (i) together as they relate to the deletion of one word, viz., 'Hindu'."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The hon. Member can do so as it will save the time of the House also."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"I move—

"That in sub-clause (1) (f) the words "for Hindu children", in sub-clause (1) (h) the words "Hindus" and in sub-clause (1) (i) the words "for the benefit of Hindus" be deleted, and that in sub-clause (1) (g) for the word "Hindus" the word "persons" be substituted."

When we come to these sub-clauses, we come to a different sphere of thought; a different plane of consideration. It is not a question of culture, it is not a question of religion. My amendment with respect to these clauses relate to the dropping of the word 'Hindus', from these clauses. These four sub-clauses relate to a process of thought which is not connected with merely religion or religious observance. The Commissioners are authorised to distribute what are called surplus funds. They have got under the clause different objects for which they can make their grants. Suppose they have ten thousand rupees. In their discretion, the authorities can choose to give grants from out of this ten thousand rupees to any institution they may like. They may give a thousand rupees for the propagation of religion, they may give another thousand to some university fund and they may give a thousand rupees to an institution where merely veda is taught. When the Hon. Minister said that it would be impossible to think of any institution where Hindu religion alone will be taught, I was not able to understand him. There are so many institutions even now where only vedas and sastras are being taught. These are not Government institutions governed by secular rules and other rules. The Commissioner can very well be authorised to give ten rupees or hundred rupees to such institutions and there will not be any difficulty. I was not able to understand why the educational rules and other similar arguments were advanced by the Hon. Minister. So the amendment of Sri Gopalaswami could have been accepted and I don't know why the Hon. Minister could not accept it. But when we come to sub-clauses (f), (g), (h) and (i), we come to a different plane of thought. Here, we leave philosophy, we leave specialized religious observance and we come to the humanitarian level. We come to a humanitarian plane, a different one altogether. When we deal with orphanages, destitutes and poor people suffering from leprosy, and poor homes for destitutes who are physically disabled and helpless and when we deal with hospitals and dispensaries, I submit that we come to a different plane of thought. Here let us not make any distinction between Hindus and non-Hindus. It may be that the money for these institutions might have come from Hindu worshippers. My submission is that these surplus moneys should go to the help of destitutes, whether they be Hindu destitutes or non-Hindu destitutes. It should not matter whether he is a Hindu leper or non-Hindu leper. When a man is suffering from any disease and goes to a hospital, let it not be scrutinized whether he is a Hindu or not. Wherever there are orphanages or leper asylums or homes for the poor destitutes and disabled and helpless destitutes and wherever there are hospitals which give free medicine to the hundreds of suffering men and women of this State, I submit that grants from this surplus fund may also be made to such institutions also without making any distinction between one religion and another. The previous sub-clauses deal with religion and philosophy. The last four sub-clauses deal with humanitarianism. I ask the Hon. Minister to look at these amendments from a humanitarian point of view and accept them. These have nothing to do with Hindu religious endowments, they have nothing to do with the tenets and philosophy of Hindu religion. Our aim should be to help the destitutes, whatever may be their religion. I hope the Hon. Minister will be able to accept these amendments."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—"Sir, I rise to support this amendment unhesitatingly. I believe that it does not lie in the mouth of the Government, which swears by the secular rules and all that, to raise objection to the amendments just now moved by my hon. Friend Sri Viswanatham. If the present clause was allowed to stand as it is, then there will be administrative and practical difficulties in its enforcement. Suppose there are 20 Christians and 20 Hindus, making a total of 40, in an orphanage. Are we going to deny help to the non-Hindus of this orphanage? Similarly, are we going to deny medical aid and medicines in a hospital to those who are not Hindus? Are we going to refuse help to a few patients who may not be Hindus? If we do that, I am sure it will land us in a quandary, and we will have to face awkward positions. It will present Hinduism in a very grotesque manner to the outside world. Hinduism has never stood for narrow sectarianism in the matter of humanitarian principles. The word 'Hindu' in its correct sense never applied to a section of the people, but applied to a set of principles which are ruling the ideas and ideals in this country. I think it will be very awkward for any Charity or institution to expect that their funds should be utilized for only a section of the people and it will be very cruel. So far as this purpose is concerned, we have to be liberal-minded. While we are on this subject, I would like to refer to the scholarships that are granted by the Government to the Harijans. In the case of the Harijan-converts, the Government have not granted scholarships and have withdrawn the concession, and we have witnessed a lot of hue and cry against the same. I for my part will not countenance that Hinduism as a whole will permit of this perverted grant. In the matter of affording relief and help to these poor people, their backwardness alone should be taken into account and persons should not be tabooed simply because they were converted to Christianity. So far as the four sub-clauses are concerned, they say that help should be given to the poor people and destitutes irrespective of the religion to which they may belong. I hope the Government will accept the amendments."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I oppose these amendments. Though the object underlying these amendments may be quite good and laudable, we must remember that these Hindu religious institutions get money from Hindu disciples. It may be quite good to say that all are poor and we should help them irrespective of their religion and all that. In such a case, the proper thing for the Government is to say that all these moneys will go into the coffers of the Government and the Government being a secular Government can make no distinction between one asylum, hospital or destitute home and another and spend the money in the manner they may like. I can understand that position. But to ask these religious institutions to set apart moneys for the purpose of helping all people is something to which I am unable to subscribe. Because, it will breed anti-Hindus with the help of that money. Therefore I oppose this amendment in spite of the fact that the object is quite laudable. In this case, we cannot be merely guided by the objects of philanthropy and all that; but we should take into account the very foundation from which the moneys are received by these religious institutions."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, so far as these amendments are concerned, I do not wish to say anything more than what hon. Member Sri Gopalaswami has said. The amendment suggested for the previous sub-clauses is one extreme and the one suggested for the last four sub-clauses is another extreme. However, I want to answer one remark made by hon. Member Sri Raghavayya, which is quite irrelevant to the issue. I feel I cannot leave that unanswered. He said "

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" If it is irrelevant, why should the Hon. Minister reply to it at all? "

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Because hon. Sri Raghavayya raised that point, I must answer that point. He said that concessions were withdrawn in respect of those Harijans who have converted to Christianity. I must point out that it is wrong to say like that. No concession has been withdrawn from any Christian because he was a Harijan convert. All the concessions that he might have been enjoying when he was a Harijan, were also enjoyed by him even after his conversion into Christianity. Harijans are getting a particular concession and certain backward communities also are getting concession. However, I cannot agree to the principle of Harijan-Christian. There can be no Harijan-Christian just as there can be no Brahman-Christian. If there can be a Brahman-Christian, then there can be a Harijan-Christian. There is no meaning in saying that concessions were refused to Harijan-converts. As a matter of fact nothing has been refused to them and whatever they were getting before conversion, they used to get even after conversion. It is really very unfortunate that Sri Raghavayya should have brought in this question at all. As he chose to bring in this question, I had to answer it."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I am sorry to hear the Hon. Minister say that he had nothing to reply to my amendments except referring to Sri Gopalaswami's speech.

" With regard to the other thing, Sir, he was very accommodating. He took over a few arguments advanced by the hon. Member, Sri Gopalaswami. But all this will not help. I am very serious on this point. The question of religion is different from the question of helping the destitutes and the helpless. We are not looking to the Hindu tenets or the Hindu ideals, or temples or architecture. When I see the festering sore of the leper at my door, when I see the hungry man going in the streets with a begging bowl groaning for a morsel of food, when I see the crippled beggar, with a hand or a leg cut off, shall I say that the surplus which I am going to utilise should not be spent on them because they are non-Hindus? I beg of the Hon. the Minister to reconsider the question. I beg of hon. Members who oppose my amendment to reconsider the question. This is purely a humanitarian business. Let us have breadth of vision for which Hinduism has all along been noted."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, I am also very serious on this question. (Laughter.) I also see the festering sore of the leper. I also see the hungry beggar. I also see the crippled man with hands and legs cut off. I have every sense of humanity. But, all the same, Sir, there is distinction between educational institutions and orphanages or maintenance of asylum and poor men's homes for the crippled and the disabled. There are very big temples in our State. There are a large number of lepers, physically disabled men and others who live near these temples and who have faith in them. To them, to live near the temples is a sort of solace. In such cases, the Hindu religious institutions would like the lepers, the disabled and the orphan to be looked after by them. The Government are running and giving aid to so many orphanages. But that is a different thing and the Government do not intend to utilise the temple surplus for these purposes. That is not the intention of the Government; that was not the intention of the Select Committee. If the amendment is accepted, that will render the object of the Bill infructuous."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is—

' That in sub-clause (1) (f) the words " for Hindu children ", in sub-clause (1) (h) the word " Hindus ", and in sub-clause (1) (i) the words " for the benefit of Hindus " be deleted; and that in sub-clause (1) (g) for the word " Hindus " the word " persons " be substituted.' "

The amendment was lost.

MR. SPEAKER :—" I must inform the House that hon. Sri T. Prakasam's motion will be taken up on Wednesday, the 6th December 1950. If discussion is not concluded that day, it will be continued on Thursday, the 7th December 1950."

THE MADRAS HINDU RELIGIOUS AND CHARITABLE
No. 10 OF 1949) —DISCUSSION—cont.

5th December 1950]

Sub-clause (1) (f) and (g).

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI :—" Mr. Speaker, I move my amendment to sub-clause (1) (f)—

' After the word " orphanages " , insert the word " solely " .

With my amendment the sub-clause will read thus : ' the establishment and maintenance of orphanages solely for Hindu children ; ' .

MR. SPEAKER :—" The hon. Member may move his next amendment also now . "

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI :—" Yes, Sir. I move—

' In sub-clause (1) (g), after the word " asylums " , insert the word " solely " .

The reasons for these amendments are identical. My task in the matter of these amendments is made easy by the fact that the Hon. Minister was pleased to agree with me when I opposed the amendment of hon. Sri Viswanatham. He made it very clear then that any money spent out of these trusts and temples should be solely for Hindus and cannot be used for other purposes. I only want to make that position clear by inserting the word ' solely ' after ' orphanages ' in sub-clause (1) (f) and also after the word ' asylums ' in sub-clause (1) (g). Without this amendment, it may not mean that it is intended to help only Hindus. As this money belongs to the Hindus and Hindu worshippers, I say we should see to it that it is made to benefit only the Hindus . "

SRI P. VENKATARAMA AYYAR :—" I second the amendment . "

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" The addition of this word ' solely ' in both the sub-clauses (f) and (g) is absolutely unnecessary and redundant. We have mentioned there already that these are for Hindu children and for Hindus . "

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI :—" My comment on that reply is that it may be made to mean that it includes orphanages which are not mainly intended for Hindus. It may include orphanages where there are others who are not Hindus. As it is, the sub-clause does not prevent the grant being made for the maintenance of such orphanages. If the Hon. Minister can give us an assurance here that it is only the orphanages of Hindus that will get grants from these funds, I have no objection to withdraw my amendments. Sir, as it is, the Government are to-day giving help to orphanages where there are Harijans along with others in Christian Mission hostels, etc., which, according to our Minister, are entitled to these grants. Such things should be prevented by closing all possible loopholes. I therefore want the Hon. Minister to see that the grants from these funds contributed by the Hindus are made solely for the benefit of the Hindus . "

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, no particular assurance is necessary with reference to a clause like this

THE MADRAS LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Tuesday, the 5th December 1950.

The House met in the Assembly Chamber, Fort St. George, at eleven of the clock, Mr. Speaker (THE HON. SRI J. SIVA. SHANMUGAM PILLAI) in the Chair.

MR. SPEAKER :—" Clause 64 is now for consideration . "

(SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA rose.)

MR. SPEAKER :—" Hon. Members should be aware that when the Speaker is on his legs, they should resume their seats. Only when an hon. Member is called by name, he should speak. We are now taking up the consideration of clause 64. Hon. Member Sri Gopalaswami may move his amendment . "

[Sri K. Madhava Menon] [5th December 1950]

where you say that the surplus funds if any can be used for the establishment and maintenance of orphanages for Hindu children. If such orphanages are established and maintained they can only be for Hindu children. It is not only clear but it is also obvious."

The amendment was put and lost.

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I move the following amendment:—

'Add at the end of sub-clause (1) (g), the words "or tuberculosis or cancer."

The incidence of cancer and tuberculosis is very high. If we take the moneys of the temples and spend them for purposes outside the purposes of the temples, I submit that if they are spent for the treatment of tuberculosis or cancer, it will be one of the most laudable objects, as laudable as the maintenance of the temples themselves. This Bill is in charge of the Hon. Minister for Public Health and I hope he will put in a word gently in the ear of the Hon. the Law Minister to accept this amendment."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—"Sir, I second the amendment. Particularly the salubrious climate of the various hills on which the temples are situated, just like the Tirupati temple, can be taken advantage of for the establishment of tuberculosis sanatoria. They will be of great help to the people. The generosity of the donors and the divine purposes of the endowments will be amply fulfilled. These sanatoria also will be very useful to the pilgrims. Therefore I hope that the reasonable and the modest amendment will be accepted."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, the amendment cannot be accepted. Hon. Sri Viswanatham says that this is a very laudable object because these diseases are very common. Tuberculosis and cancer are not exhaustive; we may add typhoid fever and other diseases also. There are certain principles involved in this. The Select Committee wanted that the funds might be utilized for—

'(g) the establishment and maintenance of asylums for Hindus suffering from leprosy;

(h) the establishment and maintenance of poor homes for destitute Hindus who are physically disabled and helpless; and

(i) the establishment and maintenance of hospitals and dispensaries for the benefit of Hindus."

It is quite open to any religious institution which has got a surplus to open a hospital where they may treat tuberculosis, cancer or any other disease. Hon. Sri Raghavayya suggested that the surplus funds of these institutions might be utilized for the purpose of starting sanatoria on the hills where the temples are situated and which have a salubrious climate. But the purpose of the clause is different. In various Hindu temples people suffering from leprosy flock there, but not people suffering from cancer or tuberculosis. The people suffering from leprosy flock there either for begging or out of devotion and a belief that they would get cured. To prevent these people thronging round the temples, it is suggested that a leper asylum may be opened as was done in Tirupati, where these leper devotees may be specifically housed and treated. If a hospital for the treatment of cancer or tuberculosis is necessary, it can be opened under sub-clause (i). Then there are a number of disabled persons who exhibit themselves near the temples. We want to have an asylum for them. Asylum has a different meaning. We cannot have an asylum for the treatment of tuberculosis and cancer. Tuberculosis is not a disease which is not curable. There need not therefore be an asylum for tuberculosis people. There may be a hospital for the treatment of tuberculosis. It does not fit in properly to say that we should have an asylum for people suffering from tuberculosis and cancer. The temple funds cannot be used for having asylums for these people. There may be provision for hospitals."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, the Hon. Minister has successfully argued against the retention of the whole clause 64. If his argument is right, then all the sub-clauses (1) (b) to (1) (i) have no place here at all. He has argued against the whole clause. Apparently it is not his purpose. His purpose is only to argue against me, but he has argued against himself. He has raised the argument that lepers flock to Tirupati while tuberculosis and cancer patients do not flock there. If these people know that the surplus funds of the institution will be utilized for their benefit also, I can assure him that more tuberculosis and cancer patients will flock near the temple gates. Therefore I do not think it is a real argument. The Hon. Minister has also argued as though we are compelling these institutions to open and maintain tuberculosis and cancer clinics. It is not so, Sir. It is only if and when the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner is satisfied that there are surplus funds after the funds are utilized for so many purposes connected with the temple, that it is suggested that an asylum may be opened for tuberculosis and cancer patients in addition to leprosy patients, as tuberculosis and cancer are very prevalent now. I only wanted that this should be included as one of the many objects on which the surplus funds could be used, if and when they are available. It is not as if I am asking that the funds should be spent on them now. In fact my object is that the money should be spent for the temple purposes only, but the Hon. Minister is unwilling. He says he will give power to the Commissioner to spend the money on so many objects. If the treatment of leprosy is a good thing, treatment of tuberculosis or cancer is a much better thing and needed more urgently. I therefore ask the Hon. Minister to accept the amendment instead of simply opposing it."

The amendment was put and lost.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I beg to move the following amendment:—

'(i) in sub-clause (1) (h), omit the word "and" at the end;

(ii) in sub-clause (1) (i), add the word "and" at the end;

[Sri K. Madhava Menon] [5th December 1950]

(iii) add the following as a new sub-clause (1) (j) :—

"(1) (j) the grant of aid to any other religious institution which is poor or in needy circumstances." "

MR. SPEAKER :—“ Shall we take (h) and (i) first and (j) afterwards because there is an amendment to (j) in the name of hon. Sri V. M. Ramaswami Mudaliyar? ”

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—“ I do not think hon. Sri Ramaswami Mudaliyar will move his amendment. He gave notice of his amendment before he saw the Government amendment. Now that the Government have given notice of an amendment as new sub-clause (j) I do not think hon. Sri Ramaswami Mudaliyar will move his amendment.”

MR. SPEAKER :—“ Amendment moved—

(i) in sub-clause (1) (h), omit the word “ and ” at the end;

(ii) in sub-clause (1) (i), add the words “ and ” at the end;

(iii) add the following as a new sub-clause (1) (j) :—

"(1) (j) the grant of aid to any other religious institution which is poor or in needy circumstances." "

RAJA MUTHIAH CHETTIYAR OF CHETTINAD :—“ Sir, I may be allowed to say that the whole clause has been wrongly put into this Bill. Though I was a member of the Select Committee, we were helpless in persuading the Government to change their provision with regard to the objects for which the money given by the devotees has to be spent. It is entirely foreign to the intentions of the devotees that their moneys should be spent for purposes other than that of the religious institution. I will reserve my remarks regarding the main sub-clause when the whole clause is put to the House. I am glad to find that in this new sub-clause (1) (j) the Hon. Minister has added ‘ the grant of aid to any other religious institution which is poor or in needy circumstances.’ In supporting the amendment, I wish to point out that this sub-clause will be merely an empty one and none of these institutions will be given any assistance as money will be spent for hospitals and dispensaries which are not the concern of the temple but of the State. It is the duty of the State to come forward and finance these institutions. There is no priority given for this sub-clause. I can understand if it is mentioned as the first sub-clause of clause 64. After meeting the necessities of the temple, the renovation and repairs of the temple and so on, they should divide the remaining into two parts, one part relating to the moneys to be spent for religious purposes, and after that, if there is any money remaining it may be spent on other purposes, though I would take objection even to that. While supporting the amendment, I wish to draw the attention of the Government that their hope that moneys will be spent for such purposes will be merely on paper and cannot be realized in practice. We are now accustomed to heavy canvassing by persons in charge of medical institutions. They wait at the door of members of advisory committees attached to the temples and get the money diverted for such purposes. I would therefore entreat the Hon. Minister to consider the broad division of the sub-clause into two parts so that the Government can give effect to what is stated here.

There is one other thing in this new sub-clause which requires clarification if not amendment. I can understand the word ‘ poor ’ put in here, but as regards the words ‘ in needy circumstances ’ I have to point out that there may be deserving institutions though they may not be in needy circumstances. I would like to remove the word ‘ needy ’ and use instead the words ‘ which they may be in need of ’ or some such words. It is very difficult to understand the word ‘ needy ’. If an institution deserves help, we should be able to give it. The word ‘ poor ’ may be there, but the words ‘ in needy circumstances ’ may be removed. I hope the Hon. Minister will consider the advisability of making a provision whereby an institution which deserves support can get it.”

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—“ Sir, I want to offer a few remarks on this. If yesterday the hon. Gentleman Raja of Chettinad was present here, he would have been a tower of strength to me when I was fighting hard against the diversion of the so-called surplus funds. Anyway, he has come to-day and I am glad he has also put forth his views which in course of time, let me hope, will bear sufficient fruit. Having given the power for the declaration of surplus funds, I would also suggest to the Government that, instead of leaving these gifts to be given by the Deputy Commissioner in a haphazard manner to this or that institution, the surplus funds of all institutions each year may be pooled at one source; of course personally I do not like the whole thing, but when once the clause is passed I am sure we will find a lot of surplus funds in various institutions—and my submission is : ‘ the surplus funds of the temples may be kept separate, the surplus funds of matams may be kept separate and the surplus funds of charitable institutions may also be kept separate, and in this way, as the hon. Gentleman Mr. Muthiah Chettiyar said, the purposes also may be pooled.’ You may remember, Mr. Speaker, that yesterday we were fighting for priority in the diversion of funds. Therefore I suggest that both the objects may be kept in view by the Government; I trust they will evolve a plan by which the resources can be pooled and divided into three separate categories to be utilized on the three separate purposes, as I have suggested, in the order of priority. I once again hope, Sir, the Government will consider this suggestion.”

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI :—“ Sir, I strongly oppose this amendment and my reasons are these : this amendment seems to have been necessitated by the recent strong criticism that was made, about certain grants that were given away from the Tirupati Devasthanam funds to other religious institutions. The amendment is not so innocent as it looks; in fact it is the public anger that was exhibited over that question that has made Government cautious in introducing an amendment in this shape. I think it is totally wrong to give away the funds of one institution to another institution even if it happens to be needy or poor, unless that institution can establish a historical and continuous relationship with the parent institution. In other cases, there is absolutely no justification for the help such as is sought to be given under the new clause that is added. I was referring to this matter yesterday, but my task is made easy to-day by the introduction of this amendment. While devasthanam after devasthanam is crumbling into ruins right at the doors of the Tirupati temple—as for instance the famous Narayanavaram temple of Sri Srinivasa, not a pie has been thought fit to be sanctioned to that sacred institution which is bound every inch of its life by tradition, usage and all that, with the great temple on the hills—large sums of money have been sought to be diverted to other temples, no doubt by themselves great, but which have no direct connexion with the temple on the hills. It is a most reprehensible practice to divert the funds of one institution to another, advisedly by canvassing, as was stated by an hon. Member. In this unfortunate case, the trustees happen to be the same persons; and so they invented some history; they said this institution has old connexions with that and got the funds diverted. I submit they are not the judges in this matter; there are other people who are competent to judge about it. While many temples attached to Tirupati need urgent repair and urgent renovation much valuable money is sought to be given away to other institutions and this has naturally evoked criticism in that little town. I submit there is much force in that criticism. While it is laudable object to help other institutions, that help should be given independently of the funds of other religious institutions. Simply because I happen to be in charge of one institution, I should not take it into my head to put my hands into the funds of that institution and somehow manoeuvre a resolution by the Board to hand over the funds to some other institution which historically has no connexion whatsoever with the temple on the hills. Barring the fact that one great man commonly worshipped at both these places and perhaps learned for two years the Ramayanam at the other place under his own great uncle who was one of the greatest Vaishnavite devotees of the time, there has been no connexion between the two temples, so far as I know. I submit therefore the grant was wholly wrong. It is perhaps out of this that wisdom has prevailed and caution has dictated that we should have a specific provision empowering the transfer of surplus funds from one religious institution to another. Sir, I strongly object to this clause; it is bound to give rise to a lot of bitter feelings amongst the worshippers. It may be they are not as broad-minded as the Hon. Ministers are, or it may be they have wrong notions about the philosophic or ritualistic routine. It is certainly understandable if a religious institution is to help an allied institution in the locality which needs urgent help because it is poor and really destitute; but it is very wrong, Sir, to divert the funds for use in institutions a long distance away which have no kind of historic or traditional connexion established altogether with the first institution. I hope, Sir, the Government will reconsider this matter."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA :—" Sir, while seemingly innocent, this amendment seems to be the most mischievous of the amendments, moved till now. It is bristling with difficulties which Government, I think, would rather not like to foment. What is the point in trying to divert funds of one temple to another on the pretext of maintaining all the temples in this world? Apart from the clash which would be created by the diversion of funds of one faith to another faith, there are other strong differences which have to be taken into account. For instance, as a general rule, Saivite temples are poor and have not got much of funds; but Vaishnavite temples have enough funds—because probably they say Lord Shiva is always for equality and he is the gentleman who thinks of the ultimate end, while Lord Vishnu always wants to propagate wealth. The immediate result of an amendment such as this will be a clash between one set of temples and another set of temples and endless litigation is bound to grow on that account. Really for God's sake, let not this amendment go into law.

" Another point is that the religious feelings of our people are not so dry as the Government seem to imagine. The amendment does not take into account the feelings of the worshippers in the locality or in the neighbourhood of the temple. Except Tirupati, in the whole of South India, every temple has local affiliations and affinities. For instance, the local people may like to spend some money on vahanams or on facilities to be created for pilgrims; if they once come to know that surplus funds are going to be diverted to some other temple far away, say from Tanjore to Nellore and vice versa, I am sure it will dry up the sources of charity and generosity which are ever flowing in this part of the country. I submit it is a suicidal step; it will be a slur upon the worshippers of the locality that they allow a particular temple to go into ruin and waste by not trying to meet its needs, and at the same time find that the surplus funds are being diverted to other institutions far away from their place. In our experience, such a thing could not be even thought of. Unless the idea of the Government is to regularise or militarise these institutions as if they were a set of co-operative societies or other associations which the Government are anxious to set up now and then but spoil later on, the Government, I submit, will be well-advised to withdraw this amendment in the interests of the temples themselves."

MR. SPEAKER:—“நீங்கள் இப்பொழுது பேசுவதிலிருந்து கவர்ன்மென்டின் திருத்தத்தை ஆமோதித்துப் பேசுவதாக இருக்கிறது. ஆரம்பத்தில் நீங்கள் எதிர்த்துப் பேசுகிறேன் என்று பேச ஆரம்பித்தீர்கள். கவர்ன்மென்டின் பிரேரேபேணை ஆதரித்துப் பேசுகிறேன் என்று பேச ஆரம்பித்திருக்கவேண்டும்.”

SRI N. ANNAMALAI PILLAI:—“நான் கவர்ன்மென்டின் பிரேரேபேணையை ஆதரித்தும், அதற்குக் கொண்டுவந்த திருத்தப் பிரேரேபேணையை எதிர்த்தும் பேசுகின்றேன்.”

“இப்பொழுது பெரிய மக்களால் பாடப்பட்ட கேஷத்திரங்கள் பல நசித்துப் போய்க்கொண்டிருப்பதை யாரும் பார்த்துக்கொண்டிருக்க முடியாது. இன்று தேவாலயங்களைப் பார்த்துக் கொள்வதற்கு ஜவாப்தாரியான அரசாங்கம் சும்மா இருப்பார்களேயானால் அது ரொம்பவும் அநீதமாகும். நம் முடைய பெரியோர்கள் பல ஆயுதங்களைக் கட்டி வைத்தார்கள். ஆலாபி பாட்டிற்கும், மக்கள் நல் வாழ்க்கையடைந்து சுகவாழ்வு பெற வேண்டுமென்ப தற்காகவும், வாழ்க்கையில் நல்ல அறிவு பெற்று மனிதன் மனிதனாக வாழ வேண்டுமென்பதற்காகவும் தான் இந்த ஆலயங்களை ஏற்படுத்தினார்கள். ஏதோ கோவிலைக் கட்டிவைத்து அங்கு கூட்டம் போடுவதற்காக அவை கள் கட்டப்பட்டன. மனிதன் சுகவாழ்வடைவதற்காகத்தான் தேவாலயங்கள் ஏற்பட்டன. நம்முடைய மூதாதையர்களும் பழைய காலத்திலிருந்த தாத்தாக்களும், தனவந்தர்களும், அரசர்களும் ஆலயங்கள் கட்டி வைத்தார்கள். ஜனங்களால் கொடுக்கப்பட்ட வரிப் பணத்தில் மிச்சமிருந்ததைப் போட்டுதான் இந்த தேவாலயங்களை அவர்கள் கட்டி வைத்தார்கள். தனவந்தர்களும் பழைய காலத்தில் சிவன் தங்களுடைய சொத்தைக் கொண்டு வந்து ஆலயங்களைக் கட்டி வைத்தார்கள். ஒரு தேவாலயத்திற்கு அதிகமான பணம் வருகிறது. அதை எடுத்து அந்த தேவாலயத்திற்கே எடுத்து திரும்பத் திரும்ப அதே தேவாலயத்திற்கு சிலவிடுவதைவிட பணமில்லாமல் அழிந்து போகின்ற சிறிய தேவாலயங்களை அழிந்து போகாமல் அவைகளுக்கு புனரூபணம் செய்யும் வகையால் சிலவு செய்வதுதான் நல்லது. அவ்விதம் ஜனங்கள் நல்வழி படுவதற்கு அந்த சிறிய தேவாலயங்களை புதுப்பிக்கவேண்டும். இதுதான் என்னுடைய கோரிக்கை. இதைச் செய்ய இந்த சர்க்கார் தவறினால் இதைவிட தப்பிதான் காரியம் வேறு ஒன்று மில்லை. இவ்விதம் செய்யாவிட்டால் மனிதனை மனிதனாகச் செய்வதற்கு செய்ய வேண்டியதைச் செய்யாவிட்டால் அதைவிட தவறு வேறு ஒன்று மிருக்காது. ஆகையினால் திருப்பதி தேவாலயம், மதுரை தேவஸ்தானம் அல்லது மூலங்கம் தேவஸ்தானம் முதலிய பல தேவாலயங்களிலிருந்து வரும் பெரிய வருமானத்தை எடுத்து சிறிய தேவாலயங்களுக்கு சிலவிட வேண்டியது அவசியம் என்று என்னுடைய குரல்கத்திற்கு வருகிறது. இதற்குக்காடு ஜில்லா, மணலூர் பேட்டைக்கு சமீபத்தில் பெண்ணையாற்றம் என்ற இடம் இருவாங்கம் என்ற ஒரு வைஷ்ணவ ஆலயம் இருக்கிறது. இப்பொழுது அந்தக் கோவில் சுடினித்துப் போய் மதில் சுவர்களெல்லாம் சீதது

வீழ்ந்து போய்விட்டன. மற்றும் ஆலயத்தினுடைய சுவர்களெல்லாம் கொஞ்சம் கொஞ்சமாக வீழ்ந்து கொண்டிருக்கின்றன. இதைப் போலவே நான் பல கோவில்களைப் பார்த்திருக்கிறேன். தென்காசியில் போய் பார்த்தேன். அங்கேயுள்ள கோவில்களின் கோபுரங்கள் இடிந்து வீழ்ந்து கிடக்கின்றன. வட ஆற்காடில் பல கோவில்கள் இந்த நிலைமையிலிருக்கின்றன. அரசுகொணத்தருகில் அப்பர், சுந்தரர், ஞானசம்பந்தர் முதலியவர்களால் பாடப்பட்ட கோவிலானது மண்ணோடு மண்ணாகி மறைந்து போய்விட்டது. இதைப்பற்றி சமீபத்தில் ஒரு சாஸ்திரியாருக்குக் கனவில் கடவுள் தோன்றி பாழ்ப்பட்ட கோவிலை புதுப்பிக்கச் சொன்னதாகவும் அவர் உடனே அங்கு சென்று தோண்டிப் பார்த்ததில் விகரங்களும் கோவிலுக்கு வேண்டிய சாமான்களும் பொருள்களும் அகப்பட்டதாகவும் கிடைத்த விகிரங்களை எடுத்து ஒரு நாட்டுக்கோட்டை செட்டியாருடைய உதவியைக் கொண்டு அந்தக் கோவிலைக் கட்டி முடித்தார். இன்றைக்கு அது பெரிய கேஷத்திரமாக விளங்கி வருகிறது. இந்த நிலைமையில் பெரிய கோவில்களின் பணத்தை எடுத்து சிறிய கோவில்களுக்கு சிலவு செய்வது ஹிந்து மதத்தில் பற்றுள்ளவர்களுடைய கடைமையாக இருக்கிறது. பெரிய கோவிலின் பணத்தை எடுத்து சிறிய கோவிலுக்கு சிலவு செய்வதனால் தவறு ஒன்றுமில்லை என்பதாக தெரிவித்துக்கொண்டு இன்னு மொரு வார்த்தையை மட்டும் சொல்லிக் கொண்டு முடித்துக் கொள்ளுகிறேன்.

* SRI P. KANDASWAMI PILLAI:—“கனம் தலைவர் அவர்களே, நண்பர் அண்ணாமலை பிள்ளையைத் தொடர்ந்து நான் தமிழிலேயே பேச விரும்புகிறேன். நண்பர் அண்ணாமலை பிள்ளை அவர்கள் ரொம்ப நன்றாக அந்த திருத்தத்தினுடைய தாதுபாயத்தை எடுத்து விளக்கினார்கள். மகாத்மா காந்தி அவர்களுடைய பக்தர்களாகவும், தொண்டர்களாகவும் இவ்வளவு நாளாக பணியாற்றிவந்த காங்கிரஸ் நண்பர்களே இப்பொழுது வந்திருக்கும் திருத்தத்தை எதிர்த்திருக்கின்றனரால் அவர்கள் மகாத்மா காந்தி அவர்களுடைய கொள்கையை அறிந்து கொள்ளவில்லையென்றே நான் சொல்லுவேன்.

“கோவில்களெல்லாம் மனிதனைத் தூய்மைப்படுத்துவதற்காகவும், புனிதப்படுத்துவதற்காகவும், நாகரீகமுள்ளவர்களாக்குவதற்காகவும் ஏற்படுத்தப்பட்ட ஸ்தாபனங்கள். அந்த ஆலயங்களில் வைஷ்ணவ கோவில்களாக இருந்தாலும் சரி, சிவாலயங்களாக இருந்தாலும் சரி, அவைகள் என்னென்ன தர்மங்களைச் செய்து வரவேண்டுமென்று குறிப்பிடப்பட்டு இருக்கிறதோ அவைகளை செய்து வருவதற்காக சொத்துக்கள் வைக்கப்பட்டு இருக்கின்றன. கனம் வரதாச்சாரி அவர்கள் சொல்லும்போது இம்மாதிரி ஞான ஸ்தாபனங்களின் உரிப் பணத்தைக்கொண்டு பாழான ஜோனமான தேவாலயங்கள் வேறு எதையும் புதுப்பிக்க உபயோகப்படுத்தக் கூடாது என்றார்கள். ஒரு கோவிலிலுள்ள பணத்தைக்கொண்டு அந்த கோவில்களுக்கு என்ன செய்யவேண்டுமோ அவைகள் யாவையும் செய்துவிட்டு, கோவில் என்ன செலவுக்கு வேண்டியவைகளை செய்தான் பிறகு பூக்கி உபரியாக இணம் மீதி இருந்தால் அவையையெடுத்து பாடல் பெற்ற பெரிய எழும்பு கோவில்களுக்கும், சொம்பவும் அவசியமாய் உள்ள கோவில்களுக்கும் சிலவு செய்வதில் என்ன குற்றம் இருக்கிறது என்ன என்னுக்குத் தெரியவில்லை.”

SRI N. ANNAMALAI PILLAI :—“ சில கோவில்களுக்கு அதிகப் படியான வருமானம் இருக்கிறது.”

SRI P. KANDASWAMI PILLAI :—“ அதனால்தான் அண்ணாமலைப் பிள்ளை அவர்கள் இன்னும் உற்சாகமாகவே சொல்ல வருகிறார்! அம்மாதிரியாக அதிக வருமானமுள்ள கோவில்களின் உயிர்ப் பணத்தைக்கொண்டு மற்ற ஏழை கோவில்களின் நிர்வாகத்திற்கு செலவு செய்வதில் தவறு ஒன்றுமில்லை என்பதுதான் அவருடைய அபிப்பிராயம். அதையே தான் நானும் வற்புறுத்த விரும்புகிறேன்.”

“ எதற்காக இதை அழுத்திச் சொல்லுகிறேன் என்றால், இதை எதிர்க்கிறவர்கள் சில பேர்கள் எப்போதும் வேண்டுமென்றே மணிக்கணக்காகப் பேசிக் கொண்டிருக்கிறார்கள். அவர்களுடைய முக்கியமான எண்ணம் வேண்டிய நேரத்தை எடுத்துக்கொண்டு காலத்தைப் போக்குவதுதான். நான் அம்மாதிரியான நோக்கத்துடன் பேசவில்லை. உண்மையாகவே சொல்லுகிறேன். இப்போது வேண்டுமானாலும் எடுத்துக்கொள்ளுங்கள். ஹிமாலயத்தில் கூட நம்மதமிழ் நாட்டு பக்தர்கள் சென்று கோவில்கள்கட்டி வைத்திருக்கிறார்கள். தமிழ் நாட்டின் பணம் பத்திராசலத்தில் ஆலயம் எழுப்பும் திருப்பணியில் செலவிடப்பட்டுக்கிறது. இப்படியெல்லாம் செய்யப்பட்டிருப்பதிலிருந்து தெளிவுபடும் உண்மை என்னவென்றால் பக்தர்கள் மனம் ஆண்டவனுக்கு பல இடங்களிலும் ஆலயம் எழுப்புவதிலேயேதான் சந்தேகம் அடைந்திருக்கிறது. பல இடங்களிலும் தேவாலயங்கள் எழுப்பி மக்கள் மனம் தூய்மையுடையவர்களாகவும், ஒழுக்கம் தவறாத சேலர்களாகவும் வாழ்வதற்கு வழிகாட்டியாக இருப்பதற்கு தான் பாடுபட்டார்கள். அப்படி காலப்போக்கின் சரித்திரமே நமக்கு உண்மையைச் சொல்லும் போது இன்று ஒரு கோவிலினுடைய பணத்தை எடுத்து வேறொரு ஆலயத் திருப்பணி செய்யக்கூடாது என்றும், அப்படிச் செய்தால் பக்தர்கள் மனம் ரொம்பவும் வருத்தம் அடையுமென்றும் சொல்வது சத்த தவறாகும். அது உண்மையுமல்ல. அந்த பக்தர்களுடைய புனித எண்ணப்படியே நாம் அம்மாதிரியான கைங்கர்யங்களைச் செய்வோமானால் அதனால் பக்தர்கள் எல்லாம் ஆனந்தம்தான் அடைவார்கள். உதாரணமாக இப்போது இங்கிலாந்திலுள்ள கிருஸ்துவ குருமார்கள் அந்த நாட்டினுடைய பணத்தையெடுத்து வந்து நமது நாட்டிலே பல சர்ச்சகளை கட்டி தங்கள் மதத்தைப் பரப்ப பாடுபடவில்லையா? அப்படி அவர்கள் எல்லாம் செய்து கொண்டிருக்கும்போது நாம் மாதிரம் ஒரு தேவாலயப் பணத்தையெடுத்து வேறு ஒரு இடத்தில் மற்றொரு வரிந்து கோவிலை சீர்படுத்தக்கூடாது என்று கூறுவது நம்முடைய பாரந்த நோக்கத்திற்கு கெஞ்சமும் பொருந்தாது. ஆகையால் இந்த திருத்தத்தை எல்லோரும் ஆதரிக்கும்படியும் நண்பர்கள் எதிர்ப்பதை வாய்ப்பு வாய்க்க கொள்ளும்படியும் கேட்டுக்கொண்டு இத்துடன் முடித்துக் கொள்ளுகிறேன்.”

SRI R. V. SWAMINATHAN :—“ Mr. Speaker, Sir, I rise to support the amendment moved by the Government. In this connexion I would like to say that I am unable to understand the arguments advanced by my hon. Friend Mr. Varadachariar, while he was opposing the amendment. He said that in the Tirupati Devasthanam there are many small temples and though there are large funds at the disposal of the Tirupati Devasthanam, they are not using any amount either for the renovation or repairs of those small temples and that it was all wrong. That was his argument while he opposed the amendment. Sometimes in his over-enthusiasm Mr. Varadachari used to forget what he speaks and that is what I have found in him in this House. In fact, the Government gives what he wants. The new clause (1) (i) says, ‘the grant of aid to any other religious institution which is poor or in needy circumstances.’ According to this amendment, the idea is, if at all there is any surplus in any temple or religious institution, it may be diverted, or a portion of it may be diverted, to the renovation of certain other temples or religious institutions. This clause gives a definition to that effect. Therefore, I cannot understand Mr. Varadachari's opposition to the amendment.

“ Then, Sir, my hon. Friend Mr. Viswanatham, asks in such a case, why should not the amendment be added at the Select Committee stage. But, the Bill as amended by the Select Committee was drafted by the Legal Department and because they found certain defects they wanted to put it in. It is but natural that members of the Select Committee have made some mistakes and therefore the department has pointed out the defect and now the amendment has been brought forward.

“ In regard to the necessity for the amendment, I would like to point out that the Members who supported or those who opposed it, came to the conclusion that there is necessity for this new clause. I am only pointing this out to my hon. Friend Mr. Varadachari. I can quote a number of examples where temples are really in need of such help, but I need not refer to them now. I strongly support the amendment moved by the Government.”

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI :—“ On a matter of personal explanation, Sir. Hon. Mr. Swaminathan has unfortunately always a knack of misunderstanding people. What I said was other religious institutions allied to the original temple may be helped. It is wrong to throw away the funds of one religious institution indiscriminately all over the State where no historical or traditional connexion can be established between the two. Hon. Mr. Annamalai Pillai suggested, why not the funds of the Tirupati Devasthanam be used for some other temple, even though it has absolutely no connexion whatever with the philosophy or ritual that is undertaken in Tirupati. He has counselled that. I say it is better to restrict the scope of such aid, not merely to scores of institutions, but to allied institutions. So, Sir, hon. Mr. Swaminathan has never understood my argument, but has been talking off his hat.”

MR. SPEAKER :—“ Hon. Mr. Bhashyam has given notice of an amendment, to the Government amendment but he is not present here.”

T. VISWANATHAM :—“ I have also given notice of an amendment to the clause, Sir.”

MR. SPEAKER :—“ No, he has not given notice of it.”

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—“ I think I have given notice, Sir. Perhaps it is a clerical mistake.”

[5th December 1950]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, the opposition is to the amendment that has been proposed by the Government, namely, to add as new sub-clause (1) (j) for the purposes for which the surplus funds, if any, can be used, namely—

'the grant of aid to any other religious institution which is poor or in needy circumstances.'

"Hon. Mr. Viswanatham was glad that the Raja Sahab of Chettinad supported his view. The hon. Raja Sahab was not particularly opposing this clause, but he said that the whole clause was wrong; why not use the surplus for any other purposes of the institution and so on. But, whatever it is, that is not the answer to the particular clause. Hon. Mr. Viswanatham was against the entire clause, that the use of the surplus itself is wrong, and if at all, you are going to use it, you shall have a pooling of the resources of all the temples. But, hon. Mr. Varadachariar has answered that point. According to hon. Mr. Varadachariar, you should not use it for any other temple than the one connected with the particular institution that has the surplus."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" He was only suggesting it, but he has not laboured over that."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" On the question of pooling, I think it is not possible."

"Then, Sir, hon. Mr. Raghavayya spoke about nationalisation or militarisation. I do not know where exactly nationalisation or militarisation comes in under this clause and so I cannot answer a thing which I do not understand. The question here is, where there are surplus funds, they may be used for the purposes of similar institutions which may be in need of funds and I do not know where militarisation comes in here."

"I find, Sir, several amendments have been given notice of in respect of this clause, but I find among them, there is an amendment of hon. Mr. V. M. Ramaswami Mudaliyar to the Government amendment, to add the following to the end—

'or the repair and preservation of other ancient Hindu shrines in the locality'

The idea of hon. Mr. Varadachariar is, why not the Tirupathi Devasthanam or some other institution which has a surplus, use that surplus, or even a portion of that surplus for renovating or improving the condition of a good institution which is attached to it or which is similar to it? That is what hon. Mr. Varadachariar asked. Hon. Mr. Swaminathan thought that hon. Mr. Varadachariar was supporting the purpose of the Government amendment. That apart, hon. Mr. Varadachariar had evidently in mind that instead of using it for that particular institution, you are using the surplus for other institutions which will be outside the scope.

That is exactly in the amendment to the proviso that we are making, namely :

'Provided that in the case of a religious institution founded and maintained by a religious denomination or any section thereof the endowment or surplus shall, as far as possible, be utilized for the benefit of the denomination or section concerned for the purposes mentioned above.'

So that this will satisfy the objection raised by my hon. Friend. This clause is as good or as bad as any other clause. Where there are a number of temples in a very bad condition, it may be attached to one denomination or be a part of a bigger temple and if there is any surplus, why not renovate and improve them if there is necessity and the need for it? Why should not there be a condition that the trustee with the permission of the Deputy Commissioner might use a portion of the endowments wherever possible for the purposes of improving them? I do not find, Sir, any particular objection raised to say that the using of the surplus for such purposes is bad."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, on a point of personal explanation, might I draw the attention of the Hon. Minister to the fact that on page 95 a number of temples have been brought under one group and my hon. Friend Sri Varadachari was suggesting that the surplus funds of Tirupathi should be utilized for those particular temples and not for some other temples unconnected with them as hon. Mr. Swaminathan thought. Am I right in assuming that it is so, Sir?"

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I wish to ask the Hon. Minister whether I am correct in assuming that the proviso would cover that and that is why I referred to the case of assistance to institutions connected either historically or traditionally with the original institution. That is my point, Sir."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" I understand the point, it covers cases of the same denomination."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is—

(i) in sub-clause 1.(h), omit the word " and " at the end :

(ii) in sub-clause (1) (i), add the word " and " at the end and

(iii) add the following as new sub-clause (1) (j) :—

"(j) the grant of aid to any other religious institution which is poor or in needy circumstances."

The amendment was carried.

MR. SPEAKER :—" Mr. Gopalaswami will move his amendment and the Government can then move the proviso."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I want to bring in the question of training centres for archakas and I am not moving it because the Government have in the new clause 32 made provision for the training of archakas, adhyapakas, vedaparayanikas and othuvans; therefore, I am not moving the amendment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Mr. Speaker Sir, I move—

"For the proviso to sub-clause (1), substitute the following proviso :—

" Provided that in the case of a religious institution founded and maintained by a religious denomination or any section thereof the endowments shall, as far as possible, be utilized for the benefit of the denomination or section concerned for the purpose mentioned above "

The omission of ' or surplus ' is a clerical error and it was in the original proviso also. This is more or less identical with the original proviso to sub-clause (1), except we had stated there ' Provided that in the case of a temple founded . . . ' and instead of ' temple ' we are putting in the words ' religious institution ' because it must apply to them also."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I move—

" In the proviso to sub-clause (1), in line 3, delete the words " as far as possible " "

The explanation of the Hon. Mr. Madhava Menon was that this proviso answers all the objections raised by my hon. Friend Sri Varadachari and most of us. We are of the opinion that funds belonging to particular institutions shall not be diverted for purposes foreign to the original intentions of the founders of the endowment and the Hon. Minister gave the House the assurance that that was why he was moving the proviso. But here there are the words ' as far as possible '. I submit, Sir, that these words will destroy what is sought to be assured by the Hon. Minister. As I submitted already, Sir, clause 64 has got a conclusiveness about it and the action of the Commissioner is final and there is nobody to question it; neither the Government nor the Court can question his action. It takes them out of the purview of superior executive authority and also judicial control. If a Commissioner avails himself of the loop-hole provided by the words ' as far as possible ' and makes diversion of moneys to some other denomination, and gradually makes it the general rule, there is no method to check him or correct him. While the object of the Government is that the surpluses or the endowment shall be utilized for the benefit of the community the wording employed here in the proviso does not support it. Practically, it looks as though, while we give certain things the Hon. Minister wants a little more but the executive takes something more than what the Hon. Minister himself intended to give. The Minister wants that the funds shall be utilized for the particular denomination but the executive wants to work the Act by having the words ' as far as possible ' there and asking for something more than what the Hon. Minister says on the floor of the House he intends to give. I, therefore, move, Sir, that in the interests of the proper utilization of the surplus funds and the canalization indicated in the clause, the words ' as far as possible ' should be omitted."

RAJA MUTHIAH CHETTIYAR OF CHETTINAD :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, incidentally I support one of the numerous amendments moved by the hon. Gentleman Mr. Viswanatham whose patience and tenacity, we should appreciate though we may not be able to agree with many of them. First of all, I did not intend to second this amendment. But in the alternative proviso suggested by the Hon. Minister himself, I did not notice the words ' as far as possible ' and the hon. Gentleman Mr. Viswanatham explained the import of those words. The intention of the proviso is that mostly they want to do it but if in certain cases, it is not for the benefit of the denomination, it should be tolerated. I wish to suggest that the proviso is contradictory in terms to the three or four sub-clauses that have already been passed by the House and if they intend really to translate the proviso into action, they should straightway remove the three or four sub-clauses passed earlier by the House relating to hospitals, dispensaries and leper asylums. Not that I am against the starting of dispensaries or leper asylums; that is a different question. If the matter were to be brought forward by the Minister in charge of Medical portfolio, I shall give it my wholehearted support. It is not the duty of the temple authorities to do it unless a devotee wants a leper asylum or a medical institution to be started; it is open to him to give a separate amount but it should not be open for the Advisory Committee or the Government to spend it when it has not been so earmarked. The proviso shows the intention of the Government that mostly they want to pay for the same denominations. But how can the Government ensure that the work done in the hospital and asylums refers to persons belonging to that particular denomination? Therefore, I would request the Hon. Minister to look into the matter closely. I am not supporting the amendment merely for giving support to it and opposing the Government's view. With my limited knowledge of the reading of the sub-clauses I have mentioned, I feel they are contradictory to this proviso and so, I entreat the Government, if they want the alternative proviso, to remove the three or four sub-clauses. Even if the Hon. Minister is not now able to consider it fully, I think he will take into consideration the suggestions made now and at a later stage of consideration, he would come forward with the necessary amendments to the sub-clauses that have already been passed."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I support this amendment. In the first place, it is admitted by the Hon. Minister that the idea is to use the surplus funds to help educational institutions, maintenance of Universities, propaganda for the tenets of the Hindu religion and so on. But the words ' as far as possible ' means so much and if it is there, the whole proviso will have a very uncertain meaning. Now the Government have enlarged the scope of the proviso; it has first referred to temples and now it refers to religious institutions which include temples and even specific endowments. So in the case of religious institutions they will have to be more careful than with regard to temples which were governed by the original proviso. Now, Sir, I wish to draw the pointed attention of the Hon. Minister to this point. Having given the assurance to all the holders of maths and of specific endowments that their moneys would not be disturbed and in case there is a surplus, which is doubtful, it would not be taken away for purposes alien to the institution, there should be no difficulty in accepting the amendment that has been proposed by my hon. Friend. In connexion with the priorities that I suggested, the Hon. Minister replied that it would not be correct to tie down the hands of the Commissioner and the executive officers. I am submitting, Sir, that if the order of priority is there, disturbances in the social atmosphere would not arise. In answer to that the Hon. Minister could only say that you can spend the whole thing for propaganda for the tenets of the Hindu religion. I am sorry, Sir, he has forgotten his experience of administration; any Deputy Commissioner who makes such a proposal will have the scheme before him and it must be suitable to the surplus and it must show the income and expenditure; and all these would be considered by him. It is not as if the whole thing would be spent as a lump sum grant just as even in this House it happens sometimes, to which I have taken the strongest exception. I hope the devasthanams will not make lump sum grants as it would be wrong and unjust not only to this House but to the entire body of worshipers.

"In fact the purpose for which an endowment has been made should be fulfilled. People should know, how the scheme is to be put into effect; otherwise there would be no progress in the institution. So, Sir, if there is no proviso, the Deputy Commissioner may have a free hand in utilizing the fund on any Hindu religious or charitable institution he likes. So, the proviso is necessary, but the words 'as far as possible' may be omitted."

SRI D. V. RAMASWAMI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I am quite aware that the arguments advanced by hon. Mr. Varadachari ought to be convincing. I am only surprised that while hon. Mr. Viswanatham moved his amendment, he did not move that—'in the case of a religious institution founded and maintained by a religious denomination or any section thereof the endowments shall be utilized only for the benefit of the denomination or section concerned for the purposes mentioned above.'

If the wording of the proviso was like that, that would have made the position quite clear. I therefore feel in view of the support that is being given to Government to rationalize the expenditure of any surplus that may be found for the management of property, Government would be well advised to accept this amendment."

5th December 1950]

SRI T. S. PATTABHIRAMAN:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I was rather surprised at the amendment moved by my hon. and learned Friend, Mr. Viswanatham. The question to-day is, 'are you going to purify Hinduism; or are you going to allow Hinduism to deteriorate and continue the deterioration process by this Bill. I can agree with the hon. Gentleman Raja of Chettinad when he said that there should be no proviso. But Government think it is necessary and that they should take steps to see that as far as possible the endowments should be utilized for the benefit of particular religious denominations only. I want to know whether we are going to perpetuate narrow ideas of sectarianism and narrow religious ideas, with all its innumerable sub-sects by giving legal recognition to them in this proviso? Sir, Hinduism should be taken as a whole unit, and there is only one philosophy expounded by it. To-day by passing this proviso we are perpetuating for generations to come, all the sects and sub-sects that exist among Hindus to-day. There are several sects and sub-sects among Vaishnavites and there are several sects and sub-sects among the Saivites. Now, by this proviso, is this House going to perpetuate all those sects? Whatever may be the funds that are available, they should be spent in the cause of Hinduism. To-day we have in the Centre, a Bill for the unification of the Hindu Code. There, they want a unified Hindu Code for the whole of India. Therefore, my humble submission is the proviso is itself bad; but if the proviso is deemed necessary, the words 'as far as possible' should be deleted."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I rise to support this amendment. If my hon. Friend, Mr. Pattabhiraman is surprised at hon. Mr. Viswanatham moving his amendment, I am still more surprised . . ."

SRI T. S. PATTABHIRAMAN:—"At your supporting the amendment!" (Laughter.)

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"At hon. Mr. Pattabhiraman's ignorance of the provisions of the Constitution. It is not as if this Bill is intended to have one unified Hindu religion. The Constitution Act says that every religious denomination or any section thereof shall have the right to establish and maintain institutions for religious and charitable purposes and to manage its own affairs in matters of religion. So, it is for that purpose those provisions are included in this Act itself. But I fail to see why this proviso has been brought forward with this wording. Sub-clause (1) says: 'that the endowments of the institutions, on the purpose becoming impossible of realization, be appropriated to all or any of the following purposes, etc.' That is all right. We approve it, and we have approved also of the several purposes for which the endowments may be utilized. So, now, why should there be this proviso stating that the endowments of particular religious denominations should be utilized only for the benefit of an institution of the same religious denomination. This is a thing which I cannot understand."

[Sri L. N. Gopalaswami] [5th December 1950]

"Then, Sir, the hon. Gentleman, the Raja of Chettinad, argued as though this proviso applies to the whole of the sub-clause (1). To me it seems this proviso applies only to item (i) of sub-clause (1). It does not refer to the whole of the sub-clause (1). I do not think even the Government intend it to refer it to the sub-clause (1) as a whole." (Laughter.)

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"May I inform the hon. Member that the proviso applies to the whole of the sub-clause (1). He is confusing between item (i) and sub-clause (1)."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"I am really sorry that I have misread the sub-clause. I mistook 1 for (i). I support the amendment moved and I want Government to tell us why they cannot allow the endowment, whose purpose being rendered impossible of realization, to be utilized for any Hindu religious institution irrespective of any particular denomination to which it belongs."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I did a mistake in telling the House that there was a printing mistake, in that the word 'surplus' has crept in there. That word should not be there. I am sorry for the mistake."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Then we shall re-open discussion on the clause."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Let him have his say after I have spoken; nothing prevents that. Sir, in moving the proviso I said:

'Provided that in the case of a religious institution founded and maintained by a religious denomination or any section thereof the endowments or surplus shall

The word 'surplus' is a mistake; it ought not to be there. Sir, in a criminal case, if a charge is changed or altered at any time after the commencement of the case, the accused has a right to ask for a fresh cross-examination or a fresh trial, and a de novo trial if the judge is changed." (Laughter.)

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"I am not a practising lawyer, Sir!" (Laughter.)

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Anyhow I want to make myself clear now. We have all been labouring under the misapprehension, including myself, that clause 64 relates to surplus funds and utilization of surplus funds. The marginal heading 'Utilization of surplus funds' is a mistake. The whole clause does not apply to surplus funds. So the words 'as far as possible' do not refer to surplus funds at all. Surplus funds are dealt with in clause 32. The present clause 64 relates to the fund or funds of an institution which has become impossible of performance from the beginning or has become impossible of realization subsequently. So that it is such funds that are sought to be diverted.

"Then, Sir, if a temple in a district or an institution is destroyed, say, by an act of God, and if nobody of that denomination exists in that district, then, what is to be done to that endowment. Hence to divert the fund, the words 'as far as possible' is necessary. We are providing for a case where the very existence of the institution becomes an impossibility. So, Sir, the word 'surplus' has been removed from the entire clause. The sub-clause (1) as amended would read thus—

(1) The Deputy Commissioner may, on being satisfied that the purpose of a religious institution has from the beginning been, or has subsequently become impossible of realization, by order, direct that the endowments of the institution be appropriated to all or any of the following purposes, namely:

So, Sir the question of surplus does not arise in the present clause. The words 'as far as possible' are necessary, because a contingency may arise when the institution itself may not exist."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, we have been sufficiently confused and confounded. (Laughter). When dealing with clause 32, I then suggested to the Hon. Minister that this question of utilization of surplus funds may be taken up even then and not along with clause 64. That suggestion he did not accept. Now, Sir, what is the position? The whole of yesterday we were fighting a battle like the three Musketeers over the surplus fund, and to-day, at 1-15 p.m. the Hon. Minister says that this clause does not deal with surplus funds, that the marginal note is a mistake and it will be changed. It is a welcome correction. There is nothing wrong in correcting ourselves. Even if the surplus fund is omitted, the position remains the same. Sir the proviso reads as follows:—

Now, Sir, I want to know how this proviso comes in here at all. Because the Hon. Minister says, where a religious institution has from the beginning been, or has subsequently become, impossible of realization, where is the endowment, I ask? I am going step after step, because there is a lot of confusion. When does the Deputy Commissioner get jurisdiction? On two possible occasions. The first possibility is when he is satisfied that the purpose of a religious institution has from the beginning been impossible of realization. There is no question of endowment here at all because its purpose became impossible of realization from the beginning. Only when the purpose becomes impossible of realization that this proviso comes into operation and not otherwise. The next possibility is when the purpose of a religious institution has subsequently become impossible of realization. I pointed out that the purpose of a religious institution could not become impossible of realization. It is physical, psychological and every kind of impossibility, because the institution is there. What is there to be unrealizable or impossible of realization? There again this proviso does not apply. Only after satisfying adequately the purposes of the institution, the question of surplus arises. What is the meaning of the Hon. Minister asking to drop the word 'surplus'?

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"My amendment moved and passed yesterday has omitted that word."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"If that is so, I beg your pardon. Let the Hon. Minister read out what is left finally in the clause."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"The clause reads as follows:—

'The Deputy Commissioner may, on being satisfied that the purpose of a religious institution has from the beginning been, or has subsequently become, impossible of realization, by order, direct that the endowments of the institution be appropriated to all or any of the following purposes

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"If that is so, it makes matters very easy and the words 'as far as possible' should definitely go. There is absolutely no doubt about it at all. When the purpose has become impossible of realization, the endowment must be utilized for some other purpose. Herein arises the application of cypres doctrine. Cypres doctrine cannot be lightly tampered with by saying that the Deputy Commissioner shall have the power to appropriate the endowments to all or any of the specified purposes. It is an old doctrine applicable to every faith not only in this country but to every faith in the rest of the world. When the original object of an endowment has failed, it stands to reason, justice and every notion of fairplay, that the endowment should be utilized only for purposes closely related to the object of the endowment. 'As far as possible' should not come there at all. These words make room for doubt and dispute. That was why yesterday I was arguing that this point must be settled by a court of law and not by an executive officer like the Deputy Commissioner. Nowhere in the history of jurisprudence in any part of the world is the cypres doctrine applied by an executive officer. Look at the Charity Commissioners Act. The cypres doctrine is not applied by the executive officers or even by the Charity Commissioners solely on their own responsibility in all cases. Yesterday I read out to the House a passage in which it was said that however laudable an object might be, the Charity Commissioners had no power in many cases without the sanction of courts to utilize the funds for other purposes. The other purposes must be determined by a court. Now it becomes more clear that the words 'as far as possible' should not be there. When the original object has failed, the endowment should be utilized for a similar purpose, a purpose which is not alien to, and which can be construed as having been in, the view of the original object. There is great reason both on merits and from the point of view of law that 'as far as possible' must go and go without any compunction. Otherwise the whole clause will be nullified by a court of law."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"As far as possible" must remain and remain in any case. The hon. Member has been kind enough to explain to us the fundamentals of cypres doctrine. His argument was that the other purposes must be settled by a court of law. That is what the Charity Commissioner Act says, that is what the Halbury's Law says, and that is what cypres doctrine means. The Deputy Commissioner could not be invested with the power of deciding the other purposes. That is an argument against the whole clause and not merely for removing the words 'as far as possible'. Removing the words 'as far as possible' does not cure the defect pointed out by my hon. Friend. According to me, the Deputy Commissioner can certainly order the appropriation to other purposes of endowments of a religious institution which has gone out of existence and could not be revived or whose purpose becomes impossible of realization. If there is not that saving provision 'as far as possible', the proviso will become impossible of operation."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

'In the proviso to sub-clause (1), omit the words "as far as possible".'

The amendment was lost.

MR. SPEAKER:—"I am going to put the Government amendment to vote."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"Sir, the whole thing is now simplified. When clause 32 was taken up, I pointed out that that was the real clause dealing with surplus funds. Clause 64 deals with institutions which have fallen into desuetude or which have been destroyed and cannot be rebuilt by any means whatsoever. Suppose there is an endowment for a choultry. The choultry is not used by anybody or has been destroyed by fire and the income from the endowment is so small that the choultry cannot be rebuilt. The Deputy Commissioner may by order direct the utilization of the money realized from the endowments of such an institution for purposes nearest to the objects of the founder of that institution. Clause 64 deals only with such cases and not with surplus funds. It is now clear that the Government never intended this clause to deal with surplus funds though they have been arguing the contra all the time."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I want to clear a misunderstanding arising from the speech of hon. Sri N. S. Varadachari. It is true that this clause does not deal with surplus funds, and that it only deals with the endowments of institutions whose purpose has become impossible of realization. It is said in clause 32, which this House has already approved, that if there is a surplus after providing adequately for the purposes mentioned in clause 75, the surplus may be used for the purposes specified in this clause. In that sense, this clause may affect clause 32."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is—

'For the proviso to sub-clause (1), substitute the following :—

" Provided that in the case of a religious institution founded and maintained by a religious denomination or any section thereof the endowments shall, as far as possible, be utilized for the benefit of the denomination or section concerned for the purposes mentioned above " "

The amendment was carried.

Sub-clause (2).

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, I move—

'Omit sub-clause (2).'

We have been advised that any direction by the Deputy Commissioner in the manner indicated in the sub-clause may not be quite proper according to the present Constitution. So we want to omit the sub-clause."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" I also gave notice of a similar amendment. I am very glad that the Government have taken it into their head to accept such a position."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is—

'Omit sub-clause (2).'

The amendment was carried.

Sub-clause (3).

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Sir, I move—

'Delete sub-clause (3).'

If there is reason for accepting the deletion of sub-clause (2) and the sub-clause goes, sub-clause (3) also should go. When the Deputy Commissioner has no power to give directions, he has no power to modify or cancel orders already passed. I hope the Government will accept this amendment."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA :—" I second the amendment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" This is one way of nullifying the whole clause. When the Deputy Commissioner is given the power of issuing an order under sub-clause (1), he must also have the power of modifying or cancelling it. I oppose the amendment."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Only yesterday speaking on another amendment I suggested that the Government should also have the power of cancellation. The Hon. Minister said that the Government wanted only the power to issue orders and not the power to cancel them." But to-day he wants to have the power of cancellation."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" That was not what I said. I said that my hon. Friend was generous enough to give the power of exemption but not the power of cancelling the exemption already granted."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is—

'Delete sub-clause (3).'

The amendment was lost.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, I move—

'In sub-clause (3), omit the words, figures and brackets " or an order made by the Board under section 67, sub-section (1) or sub-section (3), of the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act, 1926 " "

These words were inserted to provide for the continuance of orders passed under sub-sections (1) and (3) of the Act of 1926. As provision to that effect is made in clause 103 in the chapter relating to transitional provisions, these words are not necessary here."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is—

'In sub-clause (3), omit the words, figures and brackets " or an order made by the Board under section 67, sub-section (1) or sub-section (3), of the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act, 1926 " "

The amendment was carried.

Sub-clause (4).

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Sir, I move—

'Delete sub-clause (4).'

This sub-clause need not be there. If there is a direction to the Deputy Commissioner to publish his order in such and such a manner, he will do it. There is no need for a statutory provision."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA :—" I second the amendment. This provision may involve the Government in some trouble later on. Differences may arise about the adequacy and the manner of publication. The Government may not like to invite upon themselves all these troubles. By omitting the sub-clause, the interests of the Government are not injured in any way. Even without this sub-section, the Act resulting from this Bill will run smoothly like the chariot of Jagannath. To avoid future difficulties, the Government are well-advised to omit this sub-clause."

[5th December 1950]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" The chariot of Jagannath is a thing to be respected and not a thing to be condemned.

" Publication of the order is a thing which is absolutely necessary."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" This is a very important amendment. The funds of nearly 30,000 religious institutions are involved. Yesterday Sri N. S. Varadachari complained that the orders of the Deputy Commissioner passed without consulting the persons having interest and without being subject to review by any court of law were made binding on the trustee, the executive officer and all persons having interest. This sub-clause gives too wide a power and as such will probably not be upheld by any court of law. In the interests of the Act resulting from this Bill, I think it is better that this sub-clause goes."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" I have nothing to say."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is—

' Delete sub-clause (4) '."

The amendment was lost.

The House then rose for lunch to meet again at 2-30 p.m.

(After lunch—2-30 p.m.)

Clause 64—cont.

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I move—

' After sub-clause (4) of clause 64, add a new sub-clause (5) as follows :—

" (5) Any person feeling himself aggrieved with any of the orders made under sub-clauses (2) and (3) may apply to the court in whose jurisdiction the institutions are situate for cancellation or modification of such order."

Sir, this is a very important amendment. I have not moved a single amendment which is not important, but this, Sir, is a very important one. Sir, if you refer to the scheme of suits and appeals provided in this Bill against the various clauses, you will find that orders under clause 64 is omitted from the purview of such suits and appeals. I think there is also no Government amendment to this clause in regard to this matter. This is the one supreme clause which gives supreme powers to the Commissioner to deal in his own way all religious institutions which have from the beginning been or have subsequently become impossible of realization. About 30,000 religious institutions could be brought under his control by his powers of notification and he could also extend the provisions of this Bill to all charitable endowments as well. At present we have no statistics with regard to the charitable endowments in the State, but I submit that if schools, colleges, dispensaries and other charitable endowments which may comprise about 20,000 in all, are included, the Commissioner will have power of control over institutions ranging between 30,000 and 50,000. It may be said that this clause 64 deals only with institutions which have become impossible of realization. But who is to decide that they have become impossible of realization? It is the Deputy Commissioner. Who is to deal with these endowments? It is again the Deputy Commissioner. Who is to check the Deputy Commissioner? It is the Commissioner. Who is the Commissioner? He is an officer of the Government. And so, for all practical purposes, all these various religious bodies and institutions will come under the control and supervision of the Government and the Government officials. The entire object of the Constitution in framing articles 25 and 26, giving fundamental rights to the religious denominations to establish, maintain and manage religious institutions has been rendered nugatory by the powers given to the Commissioner and the Deputy Commissioner in this clause. Now the religious denominations will have no voice in the management of the affairs of these religious institutions. This Bill has stifled the religious denominations, has ignored the pilgrims, and devotees and has paid no respect to the feelings and sentiments of people, by whose faith and by whose endowments, these institutions had been built and brought into existence. Now all these endowments are to be dealt with by the Commissioner appointed by the Government, in his own way and according as it suits him. He will have a number of deputies under him who will carry out his orders. I have no desire to make any uncharitable remarks about any Commissioner or his deputies. I do not say that a Commissioner would do things with any malicious intention. It does not mean that he would do things without understanding their repercussions or that he would disregard the wishes and desires of the devotees and worshippers, but I do submit that to vest all these powers to manage and control thousands and tens of thousands of these religious and charitable institutions and to give discretion to decide certain matters to one single officer of the State in utter disregard of the fundamental rights guaranteed under the Constitution for religious denominations to manage and administer their own institutions, and without any safeguard or provision for an appeal against his orders under this clause, is very strange indeed. I am not saying that this clause must go. That stage has passed and this clause has been accepted. But I am only suggesting that while you give such vast powers to an officer of the Government, it would be in the fitness of things if some other independent person or judicial body is given the power to review and revise the orders of the Commissioner. Sir, you are aware that in England, from whose laws we have copied many of our own laws and jurisprudence, whatever powers might be given to the executive officers, at some stage, or other, there is a judicial control and a judicial review provided in their laws. That was one of the recommendations of the Donoughmore Committee which they have adopted. It was a Committee specially appointed by the Government of England consisting of great jurists to go into the extent of executive and judicial powers to be vested in the executive officers of the Government, because at that time, eminent jurists in England were attacking the tendency of the bureaucracy to concentrate power in their own hands. The report made by that Committee is called the 'Report of the Committee on powers of Ministers.' There, they have said that while it may be necessary in some cases to carry on the administration by giving certain quasi-judicial powers to the executive, at one stage or other, provision should be made for a judicial review over such decisions and orders. No powers vested in the executive shall remain hidden from the light of public criticism or from the review of an impartial tribunal. It is exactly with that end in view, I have moved this amendment. I need not labour hard to suggest to the Government that they should accept this very reasonable amendment, because, the Hon. Minister for Law, who is a trained lawyer himself, knows that in these matters where extreme judicial and quasi-judicial powers are given to a single executive officer throughout the State, there should be a judicial review at least at one stage. That is the reason why I have moved this new clause, by which any person feeling himself aggrieved with any of the orders made under sub-clauses (2) and (3) of clause 64 may apply to the court in whose jurisdiction the institutions are situate for cancellation or modification of such order. Unless a sub-clause like this is added on to this clause, I am afraid, the whole clause 64 might become altogether invalid."

[Sri T. Viswanatham] [5th December 1950]

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I second the amendment moved by my hon. Friend Sri T. Viswanatham. I feel, Sir, that where an injury is likely to be done, there should be some sense of fairness and justice. There are rules even amongst adversaries who enter into a duel in order to injure each other. For instance if one person in the duel has no sword, or has dropped his sword, the other person will also drop his own and fight without any additional safeguard. Here also, there is an injury sought to be caused to the temples and religious institutions by empowering one officer with all the powers and with such powers, he can do great good as well as great mischief. Properties of temples, however holy they might be, are sought to be distributed among various institutions and for various purposes which are the legitimate charge of the Government. Why should temple funds be used in order to encourage arts and architecture or to support orphanages and asylums. There is a legitimate charge on the general coffers of the State. Already the Government are trying to shift their legitimate duties upon the local bodies in order to get rid of a number of nuisances. The Government cannot, in the name of this legislation, ask these religious organizations to shoulder these burdens. But having resolved to do so, they must provide some safeguard, so that much mischief might not be done by any person in whom too much power is vested. The Deputy Commissioner has been given too much powers under this Bill and he is an all-powerful person and can do anything in any religious institution as he likes. That being the case, unless he has got a judicial bent of mind and unless he has got the capacity to judge matters aright without being swayed by personal prejudices and favouritism, it may not be possible for him to carry out the objects of this clause to the satisfaction of the devotees and religious denominations. Therefore, Sir, there is ample justification and reason that there should be a provision in the Bill for taking his decisions before a judicial body for review and revision, if necessary. That is the purpose of the amendment of my hon. Friend Sri T. Viswanatham. This Deputy Commissioner is no doubt all-powerful, but he may not be all-knowing and all-justice. In such a case, there must be a reference to the Civil Courts and whatever be the position of these Civil Courts, rightly or wrongly, we have come to believe that they are somewhat independent and would bring to bear a certain balanced frame of mind and exhibit a sense of fairness and impartiality, which cannot be rivalled by any other bodies. I therefore think that there can be no difficulty on the part of the Hon. Minister in accepting this very modest amendment of my hon. Friend Sri T. Viswanatham, because he has always been moving modest amendments of late."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I am sorry that discussion is not confined to the particular amendment. Now this clause 64 is supposed to invest the Commissioner with powers which are more imaginary than real. There will be a few cases where institutions have ceased to fulfil their functions or have from the start been incapable of functioning. That is what it will come to by the clause as amended finally by the Hon. Minister. A number of grandiose purposes are set forth. If only the Government had thought of the amendments a little more carefully, they would have found there will be very few instances where the Deputy Commissioner would have to exercise his power. The Hon. Minister on a previous amendment has given us an assurance that there will be some method of consultation with the persons having interest or the trustees who are members of the Area Committee. Though it is not there, I keep that assurance in mind. He said that the matter would be considered if there was a chapter providing for rules. Certainly rules will be provided for such things or I hope that the Government themselves would propose some amendments at a later stage. I would only ask, 'Why not the Government give this power to the Courts in the interests of the Officer himself, to scrutinize and see whether he was right in declaring an institution as having become incapable of functioning.' This is a very serious thing. Suppose an institution has not really done so. The clause says that after satisfying himself that it is so the officer concerned will then declare by an order setting forth the properties and funds of that institution. Of course, it will be very grand to talk of unification of Hindu religion and all that. It has been attempted by many teachers before. But some of us, inexperienced and sophisticated as we are, think that it is capable of fulfilment immediately by decorative speeches on the floor of the House. It is not like that. The other day, I was reminded of the beautiful story in the Upanishads. A disciple, after twelve years of learning came to his master. The first question put to him by the master was, "Well, you seem to be proud of your learning, you swollen head! Do you know everything?" That is the spirit in which humility is to be taught and in which we have to seek solutions. Now in the interests of the very officer in whom you are vesting this power the right of suit should be given. This is very important, proper and legitimate, in view of the fact that the Government have now dropped proposals with regard to surplus funds and we are beginning from the corpus itself. Whether an institution has ceased to function or whether an institution having functioned for sometime ceases to function, I can understand such a provision. But I feel that it is good to hedge it in with this safeguard. I would like the Hon. Minister to accept this and state his reasons if he cannot accept the same."

SRI K. BRAHMANANDAM REDDI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I oppose this amendment, but agree fully with the reasoning given by hon. Friend Sri Viswanatham. Hear, hear.) I shall state my reasons why I agree with his reasoning, but oppose his amendment. Clause 67 provides for appeals against all orders passed under clause 62 (a), (c), (d), (f) or (g), clause 63, or clause 65 or 66. I request Sri Viswanatham to see clause 65, sub-clause (1) (d) as well as sub-clause (2). It will be seen that an appeal is provided under clause 67. If a Deputy Commissioner passes any order under clause 64 (1), there is an appeal to the Commissioner and later any party aggrieved by an order by the Commissioner can go and file a suit before a regular Court and if he fails in a suit, regular appeal is also provided. So it is not as if no appeal is provided. I was wondering why in respect of an important clause like this where the Deputy Commissioner is given ample powers, no check has been provided. I was enlightened by the Hon. Minister that clause 67 (1) and (2) clearly provide for an appeal and suit against any one of the orders passed under clause 64 by the Deputy Commissioner. I hope hon. Member Sri Viswanatham will be convinced of my argument and will withdraw his amendment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, hon. Sri Brahmanandam Reddi has put the position correctly. I did not want to interrupt Sri Viswanatham when he was speaking. Clause 64 also deals with religious institutions which have become impossible of realization. However, clause 65 is the operating clause, which says that the Deputy Commissioner may, on being satisfied that a religious institution has, whether before or after the commencement of this Act, ceased to exist, hold an inquiry in the prescribed manner to ascertain its properties and after doing so shall pass an order. In sub-clause (d) of this clause it is said that the properties and funds so specified shall be applied or utilized for maintaining the institution or be appropriated to any one or more of the purposes specified in clause 64, sub-clause (b). If we read sub-clause (2) of clause 67, we find that the language used there is exactly in identical terms with the language used in Sri Viswanatham's amendment. The order passed by the Commissioner or Deputy Commissioner after enquiry is under clause 65. I think, therefore, there is already the right of appeal provided in the subsequent clauses. Provision for appeal to the Commissioner by any person aggrieved by any order passed by the Deputy Commissioner has also been made under clause 66. Thus it will be noticed that all orders are made appealable. . . . I am sorry, Sir, I find that there is some slight difference between clauses 64 and 65. In clause 64, it is said that the Deputy Commissioner may on being satisfied that the purpose of a religious institution has from the beginning been, or has subsequently become impossible or realization . . . etc. In clause 65, it is said that the Deputy Commissioner may on being satisfied that a religious institution has, whether before or after the commencement of this Act, ceased to exist . . . etc. So, there is no appeal provided for orders passed under clause 64. There is some difference in the wording of these two clauses. In the one, we find the term 'impossible of realization' and in the other the term used is 'ceased to exist'. So, it may be that there is no appeal as such in respect of clause 64. I did not look into it so much and there is no appeal as such provided under clause 64. In fact, Sri Bhashyam moved for such a provision in the Select Committee stage, but the Select Committee negatived his proposal. Clause 64 (1) deals with properties of an institution which has become impossible of realization from the beginning or subsequently. About this, I think we need not provide for suits. Our main purpose is to reduce the number of suits as much as possible. Hence, we do not want to accept the amendment."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, all the reasoning advanced by the Hon. Minister is in my favour. The Hon. Minister said that the right of appeal has been provided. Of course everybody is liable to commit mistakes and the Hon. Minister immediately corrected the mistake and said that clauses 66 and 65 are very different from clause 64 and that appeal or right of suit has not been provided under clause 64. In the light of that I wonder why he could not accept my amendment for the addition of a new sub-clause and provide for suits and appeals. If he rejects the amendment, he will be rejecting his own good sense. Regarding Sri Brahmanandam Reddi's arguments, I can only say that he is perfectly right and I am not surprised at all at his arguments as I know that he is one who says 'I have voted at my party's call, I have never thought of thinking for myself at all.' (Laughter.)

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, in the first instance I spoke under some misapprehension that clauses 64 and 65 were really the same. Subsequently, I realized that clause 65 refers to a different thing altogether, and the right of appeal provided in respect of this clause related to an institution which has ceased

[Sri K. Madhava Menon] [5th December 1950]

"to exist whereas clause 64 relates to an institution which has become from the beginning or subsequently impossible of realization. The Select Committee deliberately did not provide for appeals in respect of clause 64. That is why I am unable to accept the amendment moved by Sri Viswanatham."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

'After sub-clause (4), add a new sub-clause (5) as follows:—

"(5) Any person feeling himself aggrieved with any of the orders made under sub-clauses (2) and (3) may apply to the Court in whose jurisdiction the institutions are situate for cancellation or modification of such orders."

The amendment was lost.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'That clause 64, as amended, do stand part of the Bill.'

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I do not want to make any long speech at this stage on this clause. I have already given my reasons for objecting to this clause and I will only recapitulate them briefly here. This clause gives enormous powers to a single officer. No provision for a judicial review of his orders has been made. The Religious denomination is entirely ignored and the worshipper is absolutely out of the picture. The taking over of the administration of these endowments is against the Constitution and against the wishes of the worshippers and also those of the original founders of these endowments. I submit, therefore, that on merits, it is not good that the funds belonging to certain endowments should be utilized for some other purpose. Supposing a temple is destroyed as the Hon. Minister said yesterday or a temple was submerged under the sea as at Visakhapatnam. I shall instance a case in my town.

"Then, what had happened? Immediately with the remnants and with the money that was available and the money that was collected, another temple in dedication of the same God was built on the site near the submerged place. That is the only method and it would not be proper to utilize the money for this institution or that institution. Therefore, both on merits and also from the constitutional point of view, I submit that this clause should not find a place in the Bill."

SRI K. BRAHMANANDAM REDDI:—"Sir, the reasoning holds good even now and it must be agreed to by anybody because the vesting of a large power like this in the Deputy Commissioner under clause 64 and not hedged in by any appellate authority is not rather good. I would only plead with the Government that though my hon. Friend, Sri Viswanatham's amendment has been lost and no appeal has been provided for cases dealt with in clause 64, at least under clause 67 provision for appeal may be made. I would also request the Government meanwhile before we go to clause 67, to examine whether clauses 64 and 65 are really different from each other. Of course, there is some doubt in the matter but even that can be examined by the Legal Department. If there is really some difference, then I would like the Government to accept an amendment to provide for appeals against cases disposed of under clause 64 when we come to clause 67 which deals with appeals."

SRI R. V. SWAMINATHAN:—"Sir, I am very glad that clause 64 is going to be adopted by the House. I say so because I anticipate it will be passed. This is one of the vital provisions some of us have been craving for under this Bill. In fact, the provision in this clause alone constitutes the main cause of strong support of the Bill. We know that there are certain institutions and certain temples which have enormous funds and there are certain others which have no funds at all. In most of the temples and institutions which have surplus funds, money is being misused and the institutions are uncared for and left to be ruined. In several maths and other places, there are enormous funds which are not properly used. If we care to visit some of the other religious institutions like the Christian missionaries for instance, we will find that they have got funds, large funds—the heads of those institutions also collect more funds—for the performance of functions which we have stipulated in items (a) to (i) in clause 64(1). In many cases our institutions do not spend money even on education. They never do any good to the public. They do not spend money for the propagation of the tenets of the Hindu religion. Therefore, what is sought to be done by the Government is that the surpluses, if any, will be spent on every important item that is contained in clause 64(1). The objection was raised by certain hon. Members, 'how can we spend an amount that has been set apart for a particular purpose?' I want to ask those hon. Members, 'what was the object with which a math was created; is that object being fulfilled by the matadhipathi now; what is he doing?' The matadhipathis do nothing. There may be some who may be doing some real spiritual work. But they are not at all doing anything that will be of use to the Hindu public. Therefore, I support this clause and I request those hon. Members who are raising objection to this to withdraw it and allow this clause to be passed unanimously."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"Sir, I am glad to support this clause because it has really lost its sting. The hon. Member, who preceded me, indulged in a lot of loose thinking. There is no surplus at all now; it is only a dream that he is dreaming. No money can be spent. With all the great efforts that have been put forth, no unification of Hindu religion is forthcoming. And, here we have got one who would achieve unification! However, I may state one thing here. Hinduism is like an ocean with the confluence of so many rivers, each river so majestic and grand. Like the sea, it never moves and yet it is full of waves rolling over and with their beautiful music on the sea shore. That is how we look at the Hindu religion, a grand religion that it is. I am glad,

Sir, that the Government have reduced the scope of this clause. I want to make it clear that this clause applies only in a case where the institution has either ceased to function or has failed to fulfil its purpose.

"Then, Sir, much of the objection is very much taken away from the whole of the clause as it originally stood. It does not require even the order of priority which I prescribed for it. The grandiose purposes will remain and I do not mind, if there is surplus, money being utilized for those purposes. All that I want is the right of suit. A good illustration was given in this connexion by my hon. Friend, Sri Viswanatham. I will follow it up by another. In building the Kannambadi Dam, a beautiful temple of Krishna was submerged and even to day we find that one little idol—the Baby who rocked the world. It can still be seen on the banks of the Kannambadi. A new temple has been built there but nothing so glorious as the original one built by that great architect of all time, Dathanacharya. He was a great artist who designed three great temples, the Kannambadi, the Halebead and the Belur temples. Never again, never in our lives, not all the Deputy Commissioners in the world, can restore the beauty of that temple. But when such a thing happens and when the hand of God himself decreed that the beautiful temple should perish, I do not grudge giving power to the Deputy Commissioner. Is there any need to say that a particular amount which was endowed for the temple can be spent for the purpose for which it was so endowed or for the objects nearest to the institution and that after a consultation with the worshipping public? I stick to this point, Sir. The Hon. the Minister has already conceded it and the clause is passed along with that concession. It has already been made in this House. Now the only thing that is lacking is when we want to bind persons having interest, when we want to bind trustees and when we want to bind everybody else concerned with the institution, there is no opportunity given to them, though it would be good to consult them, to test the validity of such orders. I know they will not be passed indiscriminately without care but after duly taking all the circumstances into account. All the same, they must have an opportunity to test them.

"With these words, I support clause 64."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I cannot appreciate the opposition to this clause as it is now. The clause says that only when the purposes of an institution have from the beginning been found impossible of realization and subject to certain other conditions, the surplus funds, if any, may be utilized for certain purposes. I cannot understand why when the purposes of the institution have become impossible of realization, the funds should not be used for some other purpose. Otherwise, what will happen to these funds? The endowment may be in the possession of certain people who are not entitled to it and who may misappropriate and misuse the funds. When an institution fails to fulfil the purposes for which it was founded, it is necessary that something must be done and that is what is provided for in this clause. I cannot, as such, understand the objection to it as a whole."

Clause 64 as amended was put and carried.

Clause 65.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The Motion is—

'That clause 65 do stand part of the Bill.'

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, my amendment to this clause is an important one. It is a modest one also . . ."

MR. SPEAKER:—"There are three amendments to sub-clause (1) standing in the name of the hon. Member. I want to know whether he is moving all the three."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"I am not moving the first two. I am moving only the third amendment . . ."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"In that case, he may move the other amendment also to sub-clause (2) which is identical to this."

MR. SPEAKER:—"There is a Government amendment to that. The hon. Member may move his amendment to sub-clause (1)."

Sub-clause (1).

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I move—

'In lines 4 and 5, for the words "and after doing so, shall pass an order", substitute the words "and after doing so shall apply to a court for framing a scheme for renovating the institution if possible, or in case it is not so possible to utilize the surplus funds as under section 64 (1) "'.

If my amendment is adopted, the sub-clause will read—

'The Deputy Commissioner may, on being satisfied that a religious institution has, whether before or after the commencement of this Act, ceased to exist, hold an enquiry in the prescribed manner to ascertain its properties and funds; and after doing so, shall apply to a Court for framing a scheme for renovating the institution if possible, or in case it is not so possible to utilize the surplus funds as under Section 64 (1).'

Sir, the object is very clear. Now when an institution has ceased to exist altogether, we come to the application of the Cyprus Doctrine. I have already advanced arguments why such an application should be made at the instance of a court and not suo moto by an officer of the Government. If not, it would amount to taking over and managing all the property by the Government themselves. Then, Sir, in the matter of application suggested in the clause, the voice of the denomination is absent, the voice of men who gave such large sums of money is absent and, therefore, if the matter goes to a court, all claims made by the Deputy Commissioner, objections that may possibly be raised by others thereto and all suggestions from the public who are interested in the institution or those persons who have an interest in them, will be openly enquired into. The court is the most proper body to frame such schemes. I have advanced this point on the floor of the House on a number of occasions and my present argument is only in line with it. So, Sir, there is a clear case for the application of this doctrine and I submit that the court is the custodian which should administer it."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I rise to second the amendment moved by my hon. Friend, Sri Viswanatham. I would request him, however, to amplify this point, when he replies, with reference to a possible danger that may result from the provisions of this clause. His amendment says that where an institution has ceased to exist, the Deputy Commissioner should apply to a court for framing a scheme. What will happen to a case like this? Suppose an attempt is made by the erstwhile managers, donors and trustees of the defunct temple to devour the properties, to destroy and appropriate the money, particularly when they come to know that the Government are extending their hands to the temple properties. It is possible they may try to secrete the funds. By the time, the Deputy Commissioner goes to a court of law and gets an order for framing a scheme—which case will naturally be contended by the public—it will be a few months from the date of publication and it is quite probable that the funds may have been misappropriated by them. There must therefore, be some arrangement by which the properties can be prevented from being secreted or destroyed during this interregnum.

"I think sub-clause (c) makes provision for that and directs the recovery of property and funds from any person who may be in possession thereof. The only explanation my hon. Friend Sri Viswanatham may be pleased to give is the case of a temple which has ceased to exist, where the administration ceased to exist long ago. When an important institution ceases to exist, the act of ceasing to exist spreads over a number of years and not a few months. Nobody would think a temple has ceased to exist by lapse of worship for a few months or years. So it may be said by my hon. Friend Sri Viswanatham 'where is the hurry for making an interim provision about it.' I think, Sir, alienations are controlled by law. If a provision is made by this Government in this Bill later on that alienations made within the previous so many years, previous to the application of the clause, such alienations, even for consideration, may not be valid or some such thing. Unless some such provision is made the interest of the temple is not properly safeguarded."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, a suit before the Civil Court and an appeal to the High Court is provided under clause 67 for any orders passed under clause 65. We are dealing with institutions which have ceased to exist. Certain orders are passed by the Commissioner to deal with the properties and funds of those institutions. Under clause 67, any party who is aggrieved by such orders, is given the right of suit. My hon. Friend Sri Viswanatham does not want that the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner should pass any orders at all. Since the institution ceased to exist, he wants that the Commissioner should apply to the court for framing a scheme for renovating the institution. The clause as it is gives power to the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner to issue orders in regard to the matters specified therein. If any party is aggrieved by these orders, he is given the right of suit. Therefore, the amendment of my hon. Friend is unnecessary."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Sir, the argument of the Hon. Minister is that my amendment is not necessary. I believe that it is very necessary, for the right of suit is unnecessarily postponed in this clause. I am aware that clause 67 gives the right of suit but it is postponed to two intermediate transactions which are quite unnecessary and expensive. As a matter of fact, Sir, not only the Deputy Commissioner, I think any person having interest should also be given the right to go to a court. I don't know why it is omitted here. When a religious institution has ceased to exist, any person interested in the institution must have a right to go to court. There is no purpose served in burdening the office of the Deputy Commissioner or the Commissioner obliging them to pass so many orders which are going any way to be ultimately questioned in a court of law. Nor would this impose due sense of responsibility on the officer concerned for he well knows that this matter would at any rate go to a court of law. Thus officers would not be enthused to go deeply into the question. I do not say that the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner will do it to delay matters, but the process involves unnecessary amount of delay and burden on the Commissioner and the Deputy Commissioners. The statute itself says that whatever their order might be any person aggrieved may go to a court of law. Therefore the officers can be spared the work and the parties given the right to go to a court of law, because other evidence may come and the decisions may take their own course in courts."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, it is not the idea of Government in appointing officers that no work should be given to them. Officers are appointed and paid for the work they have to do. Therefore, there is no question of burdening the officers with work. It is contended that the right of suit is postponed. It is not so, Sir. As far as possible, the necessity for filing a suit is avoided. We first try to avoid a suit by asking persons like the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioners to go into these cases. In many cases the parties may be satisfied with the decision of the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner. Where a cantankerous individual is not satisfied or if there is a real grievance against the order of the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner, it may go to the court. But those satisfied with the order may not go to court. The idea is to avoid the suit and

[5th December 1950]

Mr. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

'In sub-clause (1) of clause 65 in lines 4 and 5, for the words "and after doing so, shall pass an order", substitute the words "and after doing so shall apply to a court for framing a scheme for renovating the institution if possible, or in case it is not so possible to utilize the surplus funds as under section 64 (1)".'

The amendment was lost.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I move—

'That in sub-clause (1) (d) of clause 65, before the words "be appropriated to", insert the words "if such renovation is not possible".'

The object of the amendment is that the appropriation of the funds to any one or more of the purposes specified in clause 64 should be after satisfying that renovation is impossible."

Mr. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

'That in sub-clause (1) (d) of clause 65, before the words "be appropriated to", insert the words "if such renovation is not possible".'

The amendment was carried.

Sub-clause (2).

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I am not moving my amendment to sub-clause (2)."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I move—

'That in sub-clause (2) (b) before the words "be utilized", insert the words "if such use is not possible".'

Mr. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

'That in sub-clause (2) (b), before the words "be utilized", insert the words "if such use is not possible".'

The amendment was carried.

Sub-clause (3).

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I move—

'Delete sub-clause (3).'

In view of the proposed Government amendment, Sir, my amendment has become all the more necessary. The second day of April 1946 has been chosen for some reason or another. Certain transactions might have taken place and I think parties were guided by that date. I don't know why this date was originally fixed. It may be because the idea of taking up consolidation and amendment of the Hindu Religious Endowments Act was taken up somewhere during that period. Now the Government come forward and say that nothing contained in sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) shall be deemed to authorize the Deputy Commissioner to pass an order in respect of any property or funds which vested in any person before the commencement of this Act. I submit,

[5th December 1950] [Sri T. Viswanatham]

Sir, it won't be fair because during these four years several other transactions might have taken place particularly in view of the Zamindari Abolition Act and several transactions took place in regard to inams attached to temples. Some people might have come into possession by lease or by some other arrangements and therefore some of them are likely to get title under the Zamindari Abolition Act itself by a process of interpretation of some of the sections of that Act. I therefore submit that if the property belonged to an institution which has ceased to exist, it is only right that at any time the Government must be able to, or any person having interest in the institution must be able to, bring it back as public property. There is no limitation so far as trust properties go. So far as trust properties are concerned whenever it is known that a particular property is a trust property, the trust follows the property wherever it goes. It is for this reason, I submit that the sub-clause should be deleted, whether it is 1942, 1946 or 1950. As a matter of fact 1950 makes it much more objectionable. 1946 was sufficiently objectionable. If it is the intention of the Government to restore back the properties to the trust or to see that the properties are not misappropriated or utilized or claimed by the law of limitation or expropriated by private persons, it is only necessary, reasonable and just that this clause should go. The trust properties must be recovered and whosoever might have been in possession so far, must yield the property."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"I rise to second the amendment, Sir. I have had occasion to point out, Sir, that a provision like this has no place in a statute like this. If property is vested in a person by law of limitation then by our making a provision in this Bill that it will apply only from such and such a date, it cannot take away the right of the individual, simply because we insert a clause here. The meaninglessness of it will be brought to light when I place before you this instance. It is stated here that nothing contained in sub-clauses (1) and (2) shall be deemed to authorize the Deputy Commissioner to pass an order in respect of any property or funds which are vested in a person before the 2nd day of April, I do not know what sanctity is attached to the 2nd day of April 1946—is it the birthday of any saint or any such thing—by the operation of the law of limitation. If the law of limitation can act and prevent the court or the Commissioner from passing any order on any property, by merely saying in a statute that it shall operate only on the 2nd day of April 1946, it carries us no further. Supposing by law of limitation the property is vested in that particular individual after the 2nd day of April 1946, does the statute mean to say that you can override the law of limitation and say irrespective of the law of limitation having come into force after 2nd April 1946, it cannot take effect or will not take effect? I am not able to understand why such a date has been fixed for the purpose of the law of limitation. I therefore second the amendment, Sir."

SRI K. R. KARANTH :—" I had something to do, Sir, with this matter in the Select Committee stage and therefore I think the amendment is not a wise one. Sir, it is not a correct proposition of law that was stated by my hon. Friend, Sri Viswanatham, that is, that there is no law of limitation for trust property. It is not so. If for fifty or a hundred years properties of a certain temple had been alienated by the then trustees and have been enjoyed as private properties for that period certainly there is the law of limitation and the trustee now appointed to that temple cannot go and pounce upon the properties. Therefore it was thought right in the Select Committee to say that where the law of limitation has operated then it should not be open to get at the properties now irrespective of the law of limitation. In the case of temple properties, for instance, alienation will be valid only during the lifetime or period of the then trustees. If it happens that after three or five years another set of trustees come then the law says, the moment new trustees are appointed they are entitled to sue to set aside the alienation of the previous trustees. Similarly in regard to maths what has been alienated during the lifetime of a matadhipati will be valid only till his lifetime. But the moment the new matadhipati comes on the scene he gets a right to set aside the alienation. If he does not do it the alienee will get a good title. We do not therefore want to reopen in this Bill transactions of fifty years, sixty years, hundred years or two hundred years, irrespective of the past.

" The 2nd of April 1946, I think, was the date when a clause similar to this was introduced and therefore I think it was that that date was fixed. It is going to be amended by the Government as 'from the date of commencement of the Act' which I think is more correct because it may be that between the particular date that we mentioned in the Bill, namely, the 2nd day of April 1946 and the date of commencement of the Act, several other cases might have been covered by the law of limitation and complete title would have vested. Therefore, the Government amendment which is to be moved would be a proper one. My hon. Friend, Sri Gopalaswami is not right in saying that we cannot alter by a Bill what has happened by the law of limitation. If ten years ago or twenty years ago complete title was got by a certain person by the law of limitation, it is open at any time for this House to alter that. It is open to the House to say that irrespective of the law of limitation we are going to allow the Government and the trustees to get back the properties. We have got the right.

" It may be that under the Constitution where a complete title was vested fifty years ago, we cannot get back the property without paying any compensation. But, this House should have the right to say that the law of limitation will not have any effect. Therefore, it is possible to do so. But, in the Select Committee we thought, where a title has been completed by the law of limitation, it should be respected. That was the object. I, therefore, regret I cannot agree to the amendment."

5th December 1950]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, in the Select Committee it was decided that titles to properties which were completed before the commencement of the Act should be protected. We want to extend that protection to bona fide transactions which have taken place before the 2nd April 1946. Here we only say that the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner shall not pass any order on transactions which have taken place before the commencement of the Act. Sri Viswanatham says that there is no law of limitation. If there is no law of limitation, no order can be passed on property transactions which have been completed already."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Sir, I think there was some mixing up of the position of vesting of property by operation of law and vesting of property by operation of the law of limitation. There is a great difference between the two if my hon. Friends would only care to see. I also said that the Government should not go to property although it is a trust property. Trust property can go and vest in somebody else under defined conditions by law and I said that there is no law of limitation for such trust properties. What I advanced is this. If a particular transaction is completed and is good for the lifetime of the trustee, what does it show? It shows that there is no such thing as law of limitation to trust property. When a property was alienated under circumstances which are approved by law, then the alienee gets the title and that is vesting of property by law. I do not say that the Government or the Commissioner should go and try to get back the properties which are vested by law in another man. I am not suggesting it. When they are vested by the operation of law of limitation which may be 10 or 12 years, the trust property goes away and is sequestered by some people after 12 years and then they say 'we have been in possession of the property for 12 years before the commencement of the Act and we are adversely holding the possession of the property. Your religious institution ceases to exist and the property has come to us'. I want to avoid these conditions so far as the trust property is concerned. I still maintain that law of limitation does not affect it. Wherever the trust property follows, the trust also follows. We must make a distinction between a property vesting by law and a property vesting by merely adverse possession."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, I do not subscribe to the views of Sri T. Viswanatham that there is no law of limitation to trust property. What we are saying in this sub-clause is this. The Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner is not given the right to pass any order. Parties interested in the property or the Commissioner from going to the court if they are entitled to go to court. This is only limiting the power of the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner to pass any orders with regard to properties which have been vested in other persons by the law of limitation before the commencement of the Act."

[Sri K. R. Karanth] [5th December 1950]

construction of a building, the institution cannot afford. Under the fundamental rights of the Constitution, the trustees have got absolute power and unless they abuse their power, the Commissioner cannot interfere. That has been my view all along. The Commissioner may decide it some way and there will be a serious difference of opinion and so I submit, Sir, that under clause 32 (2) a right to appeal should be provided.

"The next amendment which I introduce is clause 32-A (2). This is one of the most important clauses in which surely the discretion of departmental heads should not be made to override the existing practices and usages.

"If the trustees or the persons affected want to take the matter to a court they should be at liberty to do so. That is my object in including clause 32-A (2). Then I have included clause 33 which relates to the enforcement of service in regard to certain properties. The provision as it stands will mean that if a decision is given by the Commissioner, ipso facto, it is given effect to and the amount is treated by the Collector as an arrear of land revenue and collected. This results in the infringement of property rights. It is not fair. The court should have power to look into the matter and the parties affected should have the satisfaction that their rights are being properly safeguarded. Therefore under sub-clauses (3) and (4) of clause 33 there should be the right of appeal to court. The other three clauses are 36, 59 and 64. Clause 36 relates to exchange, gift or sale of properties. Here also there must be some right conferred. My hon. Friend, Sri Gopala-swami, brought to the notice of the House how, after the old Act has been in force, certain valuable properties of temples in his district have been alienated by collusion to certain persons to the detriment of the interests of the temples without the knowledge of the public concerned. I know in my own district there are instances where the interim trustee of an institution and his relations have been able to get permanent leases of math properties. In all such cases the final decision should not be that of the Commissioner. The party must have the right to go to a court and have the matter finally settled.

"Then, Sir, I come to clause 59 where, in regard to fixing of dittams in the case of maths, no appeal has been provided. This is not fair. Though there is nothing like a dittam in the case of maths, the order of the Commissioner under sub-clause (3) of clause 59 is made final. I do not know whether a matadhipathi or others can function at all if these executive orders of the Government or of their subordinates are to be final in all matters of expenditure in regard to maths. Surely the matadhipathi must have the right to take this matter to the court and have it decided because it affects the math for all time.

"Sir, the other clause to which I have to refer is 64. This concerns the utilization of surplus funds. These are matters of importance. There would have been schemes already framed. In infringement of such schemes, provision has been made in this Bill that the Commissioner can pass any order as he likes. I want that for these orders to be final, the party should have the right to go to a court of law. That is all my submission, Sir."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—"Sir, I am very glad to second this amendment. There is another amendment of hon. Sri Karanth. Will it be taken up separately?"

MR. SPEAKER :—"Probably he is not moving it. It relates to sub-clause (1) (i)."

SRI K. R. KARANTH :—"I have another amendment to sub-clause (1) (ii) as in the printed list. I will move it later on."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—"This is a point on which I have been hoping to plead successfully with the Hon. Minister as a member of the legal profession. I hope he will agree that judicial control must be provided over executive acts. My friend, Mr. Karanth, has been very patient—and he advised me also not to move the amendments to other clauses and waited till this clause was reached to urge the need for his amendment hoping to persuade the Government to accept it. I strongly support this amendment as in very many places in this Bill the executive has been given power of making final decisions. Here at least I desire that power for judicial review must be provided. This is a fundamental principle of law and of public life and legislation and administration. The Hon. Minister will be doing justice to himself if he accepts this amendment."

SRI D. V. RAMASWAMI :—"Sir, I am supporting this very important amendment. The clauses sought to be included by the Mover, Mr. Karanth, give, as it were, a resume of all the arguments in favour of giving the right to litigate. Such an amendment is absolutely necessary in order to bring out the spirit of the new outlook on the proper administration of our maths and religious institutions. This Bill places extraordinary powers in the hands of the executive. The Government as now constituted are very jealous about the rights of the people and have accepted the necessity for the separation of the judiciary and the executive. They could not be oblivious to the fact that placing of extraordinary powers in the hands of executive may not work satisfactorily immediately. This is a very big experiment and a new Act which we are trying to bring into force. I, therefore, plead that a healthy check over such executive powers will be most welcome. This is very necessary and Government must accept it."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"Sir, I am sorry I cannot accept the amendment. The House may remember that here was no clause 67 at all in the Bill as it was referred to the Select Committee. Also in the original Bill, there was no appeal in respect of most of the orders or provision permitting going to court of law. This clause 67 is therefore a new clause giving the right of suit in any matter where the orders of the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner are in dispute. The principle which weighed with the Select Committee in making this provision to go to the court was this: where a question regarding title to property is involved, it is better to give the final settlement to the civil court than to an executive officer. This has been done to the extent possible.

"Sir, my hon. Friend said that as I belong to the profession of lawyers I would appreciate his idea in this matter. However much I like my profession and the honour of it, I cannot go to the extent of allowing unnecessary and wasteful litigation at the expense of our religious institutions and endowments. As I said, wherever it is possible to avoid wasteful litigation in a matter which does not affect the question of right or title or ownership of property, it is only part of wisdom not to allow people to indulge in wasteful litigation. One main principle of this Bill is avoidance of litigation as far as possible without affecting property rights in order that the available funds of the religious endowments are conserved and not wasted on litigation.

"Sir, hon. Mr. Karanth wanted to include the orders under 32 (2) which gives the right to a trustee to incur expenditure for securing the health of the disciples. The amount required is to be determined in consultation with the Area Committee. In this case there is no right to property involved. Further there is no order of the Deputy Commissioner involved. There are to be only instructions for the guidance of the trustee in relation to the expenditure for securing the health and convenience of the disciples, etc. This, therefore, is not a matter in regard to which the right to suit should be given. The trustee is not allowed unfettered discretion in regard to this expenditure.

"Now I come to clause 32 (2). This relates to surplus funds. We have provided there that, after meeting the necessary expenditure required for the usual normal maintenance of health and other conveniences, if there is any surplus in the property, it shall be utilized as in clause 64. In clause 64 we have only provided a number of purposes for which this surplus may be utilized. I do not see any reason why the right to suit should be given in a case of this kind. This kind of unnecessary litigation should be avoided.

"Clauses 33 (3) and (4) relate to resumption of inams where an archaka, etc., is not performing the service. The provision here is that where this is the case the Collector must resume the property and give it to the person who is performing the duty. This again is not a case where there should be provision for a suit.

"Clause 36 relates to re-grant of inams and clause 59 relates to fixing of dittams of expenditure. Here again there is no question of right to property involved. We were told by my hon. Friends, Messrs. Viswanatham and Bhashyam, that in the case of maths there are no dittams at all. From this amendment, however, I see that there is provision for dittam in maths also. Dittam is only a list of the scale or items of expenditure for particular purposes. We have provided that any order should not go against the usage or custom or financial capacity of the institution concerned. It is only when the dittam goes against these two points, the Deputy Commissioner reports the matter to the Commissioner who then gives an opportunity to the trustee concerned to have his say and sends the papers to the Government for final orders. This, Sir, again is not a case where the right for suit is necessary.

"We have already dealt with clause 64 relating to institutions which have ceased to exist and whose purpose has become impossible of realization. There is nobody practically in charge of these institutions and if there is anybody there, he is there as a trespasser. Therefore the Commissioner has got a right to pass an order as to how the funds should be used. These are not matters where other people's property rights are involved. If there is any litigation, it would only be unnecessary and wasteful litigation. One of the basic principles of this Bill is to prevent such litigation."

SRI K. R. KARANTH:—"Sir, I regret I cannot agree with the arguments of the Hon. Minister. It is true that in the Select Committee the original provisions were liberalized and in regard to several important matters appeals to court have been provided. To that extent the measure has been improved. But I want to bring to the notice of the House and the Government that the Select Committee considered this Bill before the Constitution of India was passed and since then article 26 has conferred the right on every religious denomination or any section thereof to manage its own affairs in matters of religion in its own way and to administer such property in accordance with law. My hon. Friend says that he has provided for appeals wherever property is concerned, and in regard to other matters he has thought fit not to provide for appeals to courts, because people are likely to waste their money in litigation and he wants to save them from themselves. Sir, the argument is a very plausible one, but it is not correct. I feel very strongly about this thing. On the one hand the Constitution says 'You can manage your property in your own way. A matadhipathi can manage his property in his own way', provided, as I understand it that he does not misappropriate the funds. If a matadhipathi's income is Rs. 10,000 and he wants to spend Rs. 1,000 on feeding persons who come to his math and Rs. 5,000 or Rs. 6,000 on the propagation of his religion and philosophy, the Constitution gives him absolute discretion and perfect freedom to arrange these matters as he likes, whereas this Bill gives the discretion and the final decision in the matter to the Commissioner and the Government. Clause 59 deals with the dittam or the scale of expenditure. The hon. Member Mr. Bhashyam in one of his amendments regarding the dittam clause said that there is really no dittam as right of suit in any matter where the orders of the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner are in dispute. The principle which weighed with the Select Committee in making this provision to go to the court was this: where a question regarding title to property is involved, it is better to give the final settlement to the civil court than to an executive officer. This has been done to the extent possible.

"Sir, my hon. Friend said that as I belong to the profession of lawyers I would appreciate his idea in this matter. such for a matter and he is right. The amount spent for purposes of puja and ceremonies, unlike in a temple, may not be much and more may be spent on uncertain items such as the feeding of disciples or the maintenance of certain institutions.

"Now, Sir, my point is this. The Constitution guarantees to the matadhipathi subject only to his not misappropriating the funds, as I understand it, absolute discretion in the matter. I have no objection if the accounts are audited and if there is misappropriation or falsification of accounts the matadhipathi is surcharged, or otherwise punished. I have not the least objection to such action, but the discretion, the right to spend the money in his own way, not on wasteful purposes of course, but on proper purposes should be his and his alone. That discretion has been left to him by the Constitution, whereas what my hon. Friend and the Government would tell the matadhipathi is this: 'You tell us what the usage is and what your requirements and income are. The absolute discretion to decide the expenditure will be of the Commissioner in the first instance and of the Government in the final instance.' They are given the power to tell the matadhipathi, 'No, we do not agree with your proposals. Your income is not sufficient. You shall not spend so much on this and so much on that.' The final voice rests with the Commissioner and then with the Government. This is not a small matter at all. My hon. Friend says that where property worth Rs. 10 is involved he has provided relief for an appeal to a Court. But this is a far more important matter. The matadhipathi says, 'according to the usage of my institution, my programme of expenditure is this. I am going to spend Rs. 1,000 on this matter and Rs. 2,000 on another matter.' Let us agree that this money is going to be spent and not misappropriated. The final voice and discretion and freedom have been guaranteed to him under the Constitution. But the Government now say, 'No, no. We shall look into a matter and we are the final authority. We consider that spending Rs. 2,000 on feeding is wrong. You may spend only so much on this and no more.' To say like that, under clause 59 of the Bill, is according to my humble understanding, an interference with a vested right which the Constitution has conferred. But the Government have not agreed with my view and they have got passed clause 59. Is it a small matter or a frivolous matter to say like that? In clause 59 there is not even a provision included to the effect that the matadhipathi shall be heard after the Commissioner has made his report to the Government and before the Government pass final orders. It is not there. My hon. Friend would say that the matadhipathi would have had his say before and that the whole file would come before the Government. Now, Sir, it is wrong to interfere in this matter and say, 'Do something according to my view of affairs, my view of the usage of the institution and my view of your resources.' The Government have no right to do that under the Fundamental Rights articles of the Constitution, as I understand them. But, even after doing that, shall not this matadhipathi have a right to appeal to an independent authority? The Government are not an independent tribunal; they are only an executive authority. The dittam is not a thing which will be fixed from day to day but fairly for a good length of time and it is only where a substantial difference of view arises that this interference will be made. Therefore, I want that the matadhipathi must have the right to go to a court. If Government are anxious that he should not spend much on such litigation let them provide a cheap remedy by means of a petition and let a Subordinate Judge or some other judge dispose of such petitions expeditiously.

"Sir, two points have been put forward by my hon. Friend: regard must be had to the usages of the math and secondly to the resources of the math. The matadhipathi takes one view in regard to these matters whereas the Commissioner and the Government take a different view. That is why a difference will arise. Otherwise there is no difference and there is no need for an order. I do not know why the Government do not allow the matadhipathi to place these matters before a court and let it decide whatever it thinks just regard being had to both these criteria. I think, it is lesser of the two evils. It is wrong to interfere with his discretion which the Constitution has given him. But having interfered with it, it is not proper that we should not even give him the right to appeal to a court of law. I do not want that he should have the right of so many appeals in a court of law and so on. That was why in the Select Committee stage, most of the witnesses who appeared before the Committee on behalf of the maths wanted the establishment of a judicial tribunal—the two are not the same—consisting of a retired High Court Judge and one or two more members who will not be guided merely by the executive and by the reports which are made behind the backs of others. If these people who are independent decide the matter after hearing both sides, there will be some satisfaction at least. But it is not there in the Bill. The Government want to pass orders in an executive manner and as they please."

"The same is the case with regard to several other things which my hon. Friend mentioned. Under clause 33, certain moneys can be collected as if they are arrears of land revenue and under clause 36 certain service inam lands can be resumed. Who is to decide whether there has been failure of service or not? The executive decides if here. The man who has got a grievance cannot go to a third party, a disinterested party and have his case decided. Similarly with regard to the application of the Cypres doctrine. Who is to decide how the surplus funds should be utilized? These are all far too important matters to be decided by the executive alone. But the Government are prepared to provide a right of appeal where a property worth Rs. 10 is involved, but where important matters like these are involved, they say, 'No, no, Do not go to litigation. Do not waste money. Our discretion and our voice are final.' Sir, I submit, that it goes against the very fundamental rights guaranteed by the Constitution. That is why I have provided that these matters should be decided by the court which is independent, so that the parties interested may have satisfaction. Therefore, I beg to press my amendment."

[5th December 1950]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, it seems that we are arguing in a circle, the identical questions being raised and the same answers being given. Under clause 59, the hon. Member Sri Karanth says that the matadhipathi is not given an opportunity to be heard. The Commissioner is not given the power to pass final orders. The clause reads—

'59 (3). If on a scrutiny of such proposals, and any suggestions made by persons having interest, it appears to the Commissioner that the scale of expenditure or any item in the scale of expenditure is at variance with the established usage of the institution, or is not justified by its financial position, the Commissioner may call for the remarks of the trustee . . .'

The trustee is given a voice. And then the clause reads—

' . . . and if after considering the same, the Commissioner is of opinion that any modification is required in the scale of expenditure, he shall submit the case to the Government who shall pass orders thereon, and such orders shall be final.'

The remarks of the trustee are taken into consideration. Suppose the trustee wants to feed 1,000 people. If feeding 1,000 people and doing religious propaganda are the usages of the institution, the Commissioner cannot take any objection. He will object only if there is variation. Suppose the usage is to feed people and the institution cannot afford to feed 10,000 people but can feed only 1,000 people. But the matadhipathi says that there should be no limit. There must be somebody who must decide whether a limitation like this is against the usage of the institution. We say that the Government must decide the question and that it should not go to a court. That is the fundamental principle involved here. Suppose the matadhipathi or a trustee takes it into his head to open a cinema hall or form a dramatic party, should he be allowed the discretion to do so? These are obviously wrong things for a trustee of a religious endowment to do and in such cases should absolute discretion be given to him? Does the Constitution say that discretion should be given to him in matters like that? The Constitution gives him the right only to manage the institution and not mismanage the affairs of the institution. As this question does not involve any right to property, I am afraid, the Government cannot accept the amendment."

The amendment was put and lost.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, I move the following amendment :—

'In sub-clause (1) (i), for the words, figures, brackets and letters "section 62, clauses (a), (c), (d), (f) and (g)", substitute "section 62".'

Originally the Select Committee provided appeals only for clauses (a), (c), (d), (f) and (g). No appeal was provided with reference to other clauses. We want to provide for an appeal with reference to all the clauses. That is why I want to simply say 'section 62'."

Amendment was put and carried.

5th December 1950]

SRI K. R. KARANTH :—" Sir, I had given an amendment regarding the modification of the sub-clauses under clause 62; the Government, however, have rectified the clause in the manner I wanted. Therefore, there is no need for me now to move that portion of my amendment which relates to the sub-clauses under clause 62. As regards the other two amendments which I have given notice of, viz., (b) and (c), this is the first of the amendments—

'In sub-clause (1) (ii)—

'After the words "section 85", add the words "or under section 69 (3) or section 75 (3) and (4) or section 83 (2) (b) or section 92 (1) " . . .'

MR. SPEAKER :—" I am afraid that will have to come later. The Government amendment should now be moved."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, I move—

'In sub-clause (1) (ii), for the words, figures, brackets and letters, "section 62, clauses (a), (c), (d), (f) or (g)", substitute "section 62", and for the brackets, figures, word and letter "(3) or (4) (a)", substitute "or (4) (a)".'

For the reasons I have already explained, namely, for providing a right of appeal, I move this amendment."

The amendment was put and carried.

SRI K. R. KARANTH :—" As I said, I propose to move only parts (b) and (c) of my amendment, Sir . . ."

MR. SPEAKER :—" In that case, hon. Mr. Viswanatham will first move his amendment and then hon. Mr. Karanth may move his."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Sir, I move—

'In sub-clause (1) (ii), omit the words "read with sub-section (1) (a), (2) or (4) (a) of section 21 or with sub-section (3) or (4) of section 85".'

The effect of it would be this, that the clause would read thus—

'(ii) under section 62, section 63 or section 65.'

The Government themselves have removed some of the sub-clauses under 'section 62' and I do not know why this 'section 62' should be read with 'section 21'. As the hon. Mr. Karanth has explained, we should get a right of appeal on a clean slate as it were, on all matters, wherever there is an executive decision—not alone on any one or two particular matters. My amendment, if accepted, will serve that object."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI :—" I second the amendment, Sir."

[5th December 1950]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, this amendment has been moved under a misapprehension. Clause 21, sub-clauses (1) (a), (2) and (4) (a) deal with the power given to the Commissioner 'to transfer any proceeding pending before a Deputy or an Assistant Commissioner to his own file', 'to exercise such power or discharge such duty'—that is, the power and duty of the Deputy or Assistant Commissioner, and also to 'himself exercise the powers and discharge the duties assigned to the Deputy or Assistant Commissioner'. The Government want to give a right of appeal over the orders passed by the Commissioner in respect of these transfers. For instance, suppose in one place we have said that the order of the Deputy Commissioner is liable to be settled in a court of law, and the Commissioner has transferred that case to his own file, in that case, there must be an appeal from the Commissioner's order. So, 'read with sub-section (1) (a), (2) or (4) (a)' means that even in cases where the Commissioner has transferred the pending cases to his own file, there must be a right of appeal to go to court.

"Then again, Sir, clause 85 refers to the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanams and the special endowments attached thereto and sub-clause (3) (c) of that clause says that—

'All powers and duties assigned by the provisions aforesaid to a Deputy or an Assistant Commissioner shall be deemed to have been assigned to the Commissioner instead; and

The provisions of this Act shall apply to every specific endowment attached either to the Devasthanams as a whole or to any temple or any institution thereof as if all powers and duties assigned therein to a Deputy or an Assistant Commissioner had been assigned to the Commissioner instead.'

If hon. Mr. Viswanatham's amendment is accepted, there will be no right of a suit against the Commissioner's order, and it is provide for a suit that this provision is introduced in the clause. There is no other purpose served by including this 'section 85' in the sub-clause, Sir. Therefore, I am sorry I cannot accept hon. Mr. Viswanatham's amendment."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" I submit, Sir, why this clubbing of clause 21 with clauses 63 and 65 should be there, has not been explained or made clear. The whole trouble would have been avoided if the clauses dealing with suits and appeals were given a separate chapter by itself. This clause 67 comes under the chapter 'Inquiries'. Naturally, therefore, one's attention is confined to clauses 62, 63, 64, 65 and 66 which are included in this chapter. Nowhere in clause 62 is there any reference to any action to be taken by the Commissioner under clause 21. If the Commissioner does any particular act under clause 21, that is a matter requiring separate investigation. We are now dealing with a chapter regarding 'Inquiries' and we are providing for suits and appeals in that connexion. I submit that is also the reason why I think clause 85 should not be brought in here. In the matter of the Tirupati Devasthanam also, we can provide for a right of appeal under Chapter X relating to it. If this was a separate chapter dealing with appeals, it would have been all right, but it is not so. Therefore, Sir, I submit, that clause 21 need not be read with clause 62 nor with clause 85. I should like the Hon. Minister to read it again."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" That is the very thing which I ask my hon. Friend to do. In clause 67 which we are now discussing, what my hon. Friend wants to omit is this: 'read with sub-section (1) (a), (2) or (4) (a) of section 21'. Now, clause 21 says that the Commissioner shall have power at any stage to transfer proceedings pending before a Deputy or Assistant Commissioner to his own file, to transfer it to another Deputy or Assistant Commissioner, and if either of them has failed to exercise any power, to exercise such power himself. So, all orders under clauses 63 and 65 can be passed not only by the persons referred to in those clauses, but by persons to whom the files have been transferred by the Commissioner under clause 21. Consequently, not only is there to be an appeal over orders under clauses 63 and 65 but there must be an appeal to the court against orders passed by persons to whom the cases have been transferred. That is the reason why power is taken in this clause 67 to go to a court on appeal. I am sure if my Friend reads the implications of clause 21 which authorizes the Commissioner to transfer pending cases either to his own file or to other officers, he will agree that this inclusion of clause 21 in this clause is necessary."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" May I ask for some little information, Sir? Clause 62, if read with clause 21 does not expand the power under clause 65, but circumscribes it. You will get a right of appeal only in respect of matters defined in clause 21 in relation to inquiries and so it only circumscribes the power under clause 62. Will the Hon. Minister kindly explain this point, Sir?"

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" It is not a question of expanding any power. Clause 65 refers to the Deputy Commissioner holding enquiries and there is provision for an appeal over his orders under that clause to the Commissioner and also an appeal to the court. And in cases where the Commissioner transfers the files to another Deputy or Assistant Commissioner or to his own file also, there must be a similar appeal to the court. The Commissioner, when he makes the transfer, makes it under clause 21; and 'read with section 21' in clause 67 will mean that where an enquiry has been transferred to another officer under clause 21, there is still a right of appeal. I am sorry, Sir. I cannot agree to the amendment."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is—

'In sub-clause (1) (ii), omit the words "read with sub-section (1) (a), (2) or (4) (a) of section 21 or with sub-section (3) or (4) of section 85."'

The amendment was lost.

[5th December 1950]

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—“ Sir, I move—

‘ In sub-clause (1), (i) and (ii), after the words “ section 63 ”, insert the words “ section 64 ”.’

Sir, I move it with all the force at my command.”

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI :—“ I second it.”

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—“ I oppose it, Sir.”

The amendment was put and lost.

SRI K. R. KARANTH :—“ We now come to clause (b) and (c) of my amendment, Sir. In my amendment, I want to provide for an appeal under certain clauses which are yet to be discussed by the House. We are now on clause 67, but as I want to provide for appeals also under clauses 69, 75, 83 and 92 which are yet to be discussed, I submit that unless these clauses are passed by the House, the House will not be in a position to appreciate my amendment. I may therefore be permitted to move this amendment afterwards.”

MR. SPEAKER :—“ Afterwards, at what stage? ”

SRI K. R. KARANTH :—“ At any stage you fix, Sir.”

MR. SPEAKER :—“ Then, we will take it up after we have passed clause 92.”

MR. SPEAKER :—“ I am now going to put clause 67 as amended to the vote of the House.”

SRI K. R. KARANTH :—“ I shall move my next amendment, Sir, to sub-clause (1) (ii), viz., to ‘ delete the words “ but it shall have no power to stay the Commissioner’s order pending the disposal of the suit ” ’. But it may take some time, Sir, as it is important, because the right to go to the court is being taken away.”

MR. SPEAKER :—“ In that case, we shall adjourn now.”

THE MADRAS LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Monday, the 11th December 1950.

The House met in the Assembly Chamber, Fort St. George, at eleven of the clock. Mr. Speaker (THE HON. SRI J. SIVASUBRAMUGAM PILLAI) in the Chair.

THE MADRAS HINDU RELIGIOUS AND CHARITABLE ENDOWMENTS
BILL, 1949 (L.A. BILL NO. 10 OF 1949)—DISCUSSION—cont.

Clause 67.

Sub-clause (1).

MR. SPEAKER :—“ Discussion on clause 67 will be resumed. We shall now take up sub-clause (1). The hon. Member Sri Viswanatham will move his amendment to sub-clause (1).”

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—“ I move, Sir, the following amendment:—

“ In sub-clause (1) (ii), delete the words “ but it shall have no power to stay the Commissioner’s order pending the disposal of the suit ”.’

Sir, the clause relates to suits and appeals arising out of certain decisions under clauses 62, 63, 65 and 66. A right is given to any aggrieved party, within ninety days from the date of the receipt of the order by him, to institute a suit in the court against such order. The court may modify or cancel such order, but it shall have no power to stay the Commissioner’s order pending the disposal of the suit. That is what the clause says. This clause has been inserted after the Select Committee deliberated on the subject. The Government have been pleased to give a right of suit or appeal against the orders, but they have hedged in this provision with a ‘ but ’ in the end, and this word ‘ but ’ is the most destructive of all the words which have ever been used in any clause in this Bill. The Government have negatived practically the unimpeded right of the parties to properly agitate their rights in a civil court.

"This is not the first time that I have been obliged to raise my strong protest against the Government taking away the powers of courts. Here, having conceded the right, the Government try to clip that right. I had a friend in the Amaravathi (Amrooti) jail and my Hon. Friend Mr. Madhava Menon also was there. That friend wanted to rear a pigeon; he brought a pigeon and he wanted to domesticate it. He clipped its wings and in a few days the wretched thing died. My friend reminds me it was caught by a cat. I am glad he reminds me. If you clip the natural wings of a bird, what happens? Because it could not fly away, it was caught by a cat. Here also, the Hon. Mr. Madhava Menon wants to clip the powers of the court. I submit on more than one ground, it is objectionable, and it is also ultra vires of the Constitution. If you refer to Article 225 of the Constitution, Sir, you will find this:—it is an important Article—

'Subject to the provisions of this Constitution and to the provisions of any law of the appropriate Legislature made by virtue of powers conferred on that Legislature by this Constitution, the jurisdiction of, and the law administered in, any existing High Court, and the respective powers of the Judges thereof, in relation to the administration of justice in the Court, including any power to make rules of Court and to regulate the sittings of the Court and of members thereof sitting alone or in Division Courts, shall be the same as immediately before the commencement of this Constitution.'

Then again, if you refer to Article 375, we find the following:—

'All courts of civil, criminal and revenue jurisdiction, all authorities and all officers, judicial, executive and ministerial, throughout the territory of India, shall continue to exercise their respective functions subject to the provisions of this Constitution.'

Along with these two Articles, I would take you to sections 115 and 151 of the Civil Procedure Code. In section 115, which deals with the High Court's powers, this is what we find—

'The High Court may call for the record of any case which has been decided by any Court subordinate to such High Court and in which no appeal lies thereto, and if such Subordinate Court appears . . . (c) to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity, the High Court may make such order in the case as it thinks fit.'

Then, section 151 is even more important. It says—

'Nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect the inherent power of the Court to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court.'

The wording in this section 151 is very important. It says that 'nothing shall be deemed to limit or affect the inherent power of the court to make such orders as may be necessary'. I submit the civil courts have been recognized to have certain inherent powers, and under section 151 those inherent powers referred to in the Code which is intended to regulate the procedure in courts, have been given a statutory recognition and authority now under Article 375 of the Constitution. Therefore, I submit the inherent powers of the court cannot be touched in a legislation of this type. Now, Sir, in 33 (I.L.R.), Calcutta, 927, Their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court, Woodroffe J. and Mookerjee J., have stated in a case where the party attempted to argue that the Court could not do certain things at the stage of execution thus—

'It has thus been held (in a number of cases) that, although the Code contains no express provision on the matters hereinafter mentioned, the Court has an inherent power ex debito justitiae to consolidate; postpone pending the decision of a selected action; and to advance the hearing of suits; to stay on the ground of convenience cross-suits; to ascertain whether the proper parties are before it; to enquire whether a plaintiff is entitled to sue as an adult; to entertain the application of a third person to be made a party; to add a party; to allow a defence in forma pauperis; to decide one question and to reserve another for investigation . . . to remand a suit; . . . to stay the drawing up of the Court's own orders or to suspend their operation, if the necessities of justice so require; to stay, apart from the question whether the case falls within section 515, the carrying out of a preliminary order pending appeal; to stay proceedings in a lower Court pending appeal and to appoint a temporary guardian of a minor upon such stay; to apply the principles of res judicata to cases not falling within sections 13 and 14 of the Code.'

I submit, Sir, that the court has got these inherent powers, and unless the court is given these inherent powers, it cannot exercise its functions, it cannot effectually carry out its own functions and do justice. It is the fundamental right of the court and its most pre-eminent duty to do justice. I submit, that taking all these things into consideration, the proposal of the Government to remove the power of the court to stay the Commissioner's order pending the disposal of the suit is not merely bad on merits, but it is also bad in law and against the Constitution. I submit, therefore, that the words 'but it shall have no power to stay the Commissioner's order pending the disposal of the suit' in sub-clause (1) (ii) should be deleted."

RAJA MUTHIAH CHETTIAR OF CHETTINAD:—"Sir, I second the amendment. I was doubtful as to what the amendment was about, as I came a bit late; but when I saw my hon. Friend Mr. Viswanatham speaking, I noticed the amendment which asks for the deletion of the words mentioned, which try to take away the power of the court to stay the proceedings. Sir, I submit I am very heartily seconding this amendment moved by Mr. Viswanatham. I am one of those who feel that when we try to legislate for the better administration of any institution, we must try to do our best when it is in the Assembly stage. There have been occasions in the past when, however well-intentioned and however well-thought out the legislation was, because of the fact that it was an administrative machinery that was sought to be imposed by the legislation, because sometimes some important point was overlooked or because some new circumstances that might arise in the future could not be envisaged in the Bill itself, some matters had to be left to somebody for decision. Every time the Legislature cannot be moved; amendments cannot be made every month or even every third month; and matters have therefore to be left for decision to courts. Besides,

[Raja Muthiah Chettiar of Chettinad] [11th December 1950]

Sir, the court is there to look into the cases of aggrieved persons. Persons may be aggrieved in regard to several matters, and all matters cannot be envisaged at the time of passing the legislation. The provision in this clause is that the court should not have the power to give a stay, though the court may dispose of the suit. I submit that the question whether a stay is justified or is not justified may be left to the court for decision. Arguments may be placed before the court by both the parties—one of the two parties may be the Hindu Religious Endowments or the Commissioner on behalf of the Government and the other party may be a private party; or in certain cases, both the parties may be private parties—and in such cases, both the parties may be enabled to place their arguments before the court and the decision may be left to the court, as to whether a stay, if given, would be injurious to the administration of the institution during the period the stay is there, or whether the stay would not in any way affect the affairs of the institution or to say that, irrespective of a decision in the suit, nothing would go wrong during the period of the stay, if given. The court may be satisfied with an assurance from the trustee or with his personal guarantee or with any other proposals made before it, to see that nothing would go wrong. Again, if the court feels that in a particular case it will be advantageous to the institution if a stay is given, the court should not be prevented from doing it. We are leaving several things to be decided by courts in respect of many matters relating to justiciable rights. The discretion vested in the court to give a stay or not should not therefore be fettered by legislative enactment. It is in that feeling that I would entreat the Government to accept the amendment. This is an amendment which should be agreed to in all justice. I don't think it will in any way affect the intentions, the Government and the public have got in regard to this Bill which seeks to regulate the administration of religious institutions."

SRI R. RAGHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Speaker, I am very much surprised to hear the Hon. Minister who is piloting this Bill saying that he is going to vehemently oppose this amendment. That ought not to be the policy of the Government. The Assembly is now discussing a very important question, whether the court to which a suit is provided for in respect of a number of clauses relating to various matters pertaining to the administration of religious institutions where orders have been passed by the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner, should have the power to pass stay orders. A right of suit is given in many cases to the court within 90 days. There is already a view that this legislation itself is one which ought not to be put on the Statute Book; but that the Government may have some sort of supervision or control over the management of the religious institutions; that is the general opinion. But when the Government have thought it fit to bring forward such legislation and when they have introduced a number of provisions whereby certain rights now enjoyed by certain persons to go to a court have already been curtailed, and when in regard to a few of the provisions only, a right to suit is being given, there is no grace in giving the right to go to the court and saying at the same time that the court has no power to give stay. The hon. Raja Muthiah Chettiar has already pleaded that the power to give stay should be left to the court; the court has got the right to entertain a suit against the order passed by the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner; but if it has not got the right to stay the order so passed, circumstances may arise later on where the court will not be able by its decree to unmake things when it gives a decision one way or the other. A stay therefore is one of the most important things in law. An order passed by an officer may be unjust, may be unsuitable or may be illiberal; and if there is to be no stay, those orders will be worked out or carried out, and after the decision of court is given, it may be found that the order of the Commissioner already executed cannot be undone and the court's decision itself cannot be executed. In such a case, what is the purpose of giving the right to sue when circumstances may come into existence which cannot be unmade when the decision of the court is given. After all, Sir, I ask: do you expect that suits will be decided by courts soon? We know that there are many cases where suits have been prolonged and decisions by courts have been long delayed. As a general rule, suits are not easily disposed of; they may take one, two or even three years in some cases. The officer concerned who passes the order will naturally try his best to see that the suits are prolonged as much as possible and that the orders he has passed are executed. So, Sir, when the final decree is passed by the court it will be worthless; it may not be worth a court decree or it will not be worth the paper on which it is written. Is that what you want or do you want ordinary rights to be conceded to the courts by allowing them ordinary powers to pass stay orders?

"Then, Sir, my hon. Friend, Mr. Viswanatham referred to section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code where courts have got certain inherent jurisdiction and they cannot be specifically taken away. The court has this inherent power to grant stay where necessary. In fact, this Act ought to provide for stay and the courts must be given discretion to use the power when necessary. If the court thinks that an order is such that if it is carried out or is enforced before the disposal of the suit, prejudice will be created, there should be discretion given to the court in such cases to grant stay. Here that power is sought to be taken away. I must submit that the provision made in this clause is bound to nullify the effect of giving the right of suit to parties. Why should we legislate like that? If it is a matter of clever arguing in court, then I can understand. But, here we are legislating with regard to institutions which have been endowed by others. So, legitimately the Government ought not to interfere in such matters. On the other hand, Government may claim a right to see that everything under the sun goes all right. But, you should not interfere with the management of an institution and use the power without any reference to capacity or without any reference to the predilections of people.

[Sri R. Raghava Menon] [11th December 1950]

So, Sir, when you are giving the institutions certain rights of suit, I submit, this provision taking the power of courts in granting stay ought not to be there and the words in the clause 'but it shall have no power to stay the Commissioner's order pending the disposal of the suit' ought to go. The right of suit is one of the most important things and I hope the Hon. Minister in charge, instead of vehemently opposing the amendment as he said, will, I hope, see that course of justice are trusted to use their discretion in this matter."

SRI K. T. KOSALRAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, கனம் நண்பர் விஸ்வ நாதம் அவர்கள் கொண்டு வந்துள்ள திருத்தத்தை நான் அழுத்தம் திருத்தமாக எதிர்க்கிறேன்."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"May I know, Sir, whether the hon. Member is supporting or opposing my amendment?"

MR. SPEAKER:—"The hon. Member is vehemently opposing the amendment."

SRI K. T. KOSALRAM:—"Not only vehemently, Sir, but clearly opposing my hon. Friend, Viswanatham's amendment. It is no wonder, we know now-a-days what lawyers do in courts."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Let the hon. Member speak in English, Sir."

SRI K. T. KOSALRAM:—"இப்பொழுது இந்த க்ளாஸ் மூலமாக இந்த 'பில்' லில் கோர்ட்டுகளுக்கு அதிகாரம் கொடுக்கப்பட்டிருக்கிறது. முதன் முதலில் இந்த மசோதாவை கொண்டுவரப்பட்டபொழுது இந்த 67-வது க்ளாஸே இல்லாமலிருந்தது. 66-வது க்ளாஸ் சம்மந்தமாக கோர்ட்டுகளில் அப்பீல் போடுவதற்கு அதிகாரமிருக்கவேண்டுமென்று நண்பர் கரந்த் அவர்கள் Select Committee-ல் ஒரு amendment கொடுத்திருந்தார். அதை நானும் ஸ்ரீமான் O. P. இராமசாமி ரெட்டியார் அவர்களும் இந்த section கூடவே கூடாது என்று சொன்னோம். அதன்படியே நானும் அவரும் அதை எதிர்த்தோம். 'No wonder, we know the lawyers.' இப்பொழுது ஒரு institution mismanage-ஆக நடத்தப்படுகிறது. அதாவது அதற்குள்ள லட்சக்கணக்கான சொத்தை mismanage செய்யப் பட்டுவருகிறது. அதைத் தடுக்கவேண்டுமென்றும், அது பொது சொத்தை எடுத்துத் தவறுதலாக துர்விநியோகம் செய்கிறதென்றும் அதை கமிஷனர் நிறுத்தி உத்தரவுசெய்தால் அந்த உத்தரவை நிறுத்திவைப்பதென்று தன்னிடம் பணமிருக்கிறது என்பதற்காக கோர்ட்டுக்குப்போவார்கள். இன்னும் suits file பண்ணுவார்கள். SRI V. S. SANKARA SUBRAHMANYA MUDALIYAR:—"On a point of order Sir, is it right on the part of the hon. Member to say 'கோர்ட்டு பண்ணும் அக்கிரமங்கள்'? கோர்ட்டுகள் அக்கிரமம் பண்ணுகிறார்கள் என்று சொல்லலாமா?"

SRI K. T. KOSALRAM:—"அவர்கள் சட்டத்தை interpret பண்ணுவதைப்பற்றி சொல்லுகிறேன்."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The hon. member should not use the word 'அக்கிரமம்' with reference to the courts. நீங்கள் அவ்விதம் கோர்ட்டுகள் அக்கிரமம் செய்கிறார்கள் என்று சொல்லவேண்டாது."

SRI K. T. KOSALRAM:—"நான் வாயில் வாங்கிக்கொள்ளுகிறேன். இப்படிப்பட்ட திருத்தங்களை ஒப்புக்கொண்டால் முடிவில் எந்தநிலைமையில் கொண்டுவரப்படுகிறது என்பதை யோசிக்கவேண்டும். ஆகவே கோர்ட்டுகளுக்கு அதிகாரத்தைக்கொடுப்பதே தப்பிதம்: அதற்காகவே ஒரு amendment-ஐக் கொண்டுவந்து இந்த 67-வது clause-ஐ எடுத்துவிட்டாலே மிகவும் சந்தோஷம் என்று நினைக்கிறேன். கனம் மந்திரி மாதவமேனன் அவர்களும் கனம் விஸ்வநாதம் அவர்களும் amendment-ஐ ஒப்புக்கொள்ளாமல் இந்த 67-வது clause-ஐ எடுத்து விடும்படியான ஒரு amendment-ஐக் கொண்டுவரவேண்டுமென்று கேட்டுக்கொள்ளுகிறேன்."

SRI S. CHIDAMBARAM AYYAR:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I support the amendment moved by my hon. Friend, Mr. Viswanatham and oppose Mr. Kosalram's view point. Sir, if courts are not given powers under the Act, my hon. Friend may be right in what he said. But when once the courts are given power to deal with this question, whether it is the court of original jurisdiction or the court of appeal, then in the ordinary course of events the courts have jurisdiction over the matter and rules under the Civil Procedure Code must govern. Now if you say that the procedure under the Civil Procedure Code should not be followed, I say it is invalid and cannot be countenanced."

[Sri S. Chidambaram Ayyar] [11th December 1950]

"Now, Sir, hon. Mr. Viswanatham quoted the Calcutta case which was followed by the Madras High Court also in a number of cases. I shall point out one or two instances. In the case of Maruthamuthu v. the Hindu Religious Endowments Board, Madras (45 Law Weekly, 522), it is said 'once a matter comes before a regular civil court, its further course will be governed by the Civil Procedure Code'. Similarly under the Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act, so far as decisions of tribunals are concerned, in the matter of execution, the law says it should be treated as one coming under the Civil Procedure Code and the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code will apply to execution proceedings. Therefore, Sir, if the provisions of the clause as they stand in the Bill are passed, the Bill itself will be against the law, it will be illegal and ultra vires of the Constitution. With these few words, I support the amendment of hon. Mr. Viswanatham."

SRI M. KANNIYAPPAN :—"கனம் சபாநாயகர் அவர்களே, தோழர் விஸ்வநாதம் அவர்கள் கொண்டு வந்திருக்கும் திருத்தத்தை நான் எதிர்த்தேன். ஏன் என்றால் இன்றைய நிலையில் ஒரு புரக்கிரமான பில்லை காலம் கடந்துகொண்டு வந்திருக்கிறோம். இந்த பில்லைக் குறித்து மக்களும் புகழ்ந்துகொண்டிருக்கிறார்கள். அப்படிப்பட்ட இந்த பில்லிற்கு உண்மையில் உயிர் இல்லாமற் செய்யவேண்டுமென்ற காரணத்தினாலேயே சிலர் இந்தச் சபையிலே வேண்டுமென்றே இந்தச் சட்டத்துக்கு பல திருத்தங்களைக் கொடுத்துக்கொண்டிருக்கிறார்கள். அந்த திருத்தங்களை நாம் ஏற்றுக் கொள்வோமென்றால் நிச்சயமாக இந்த பில்லை நாம் கொண்டு வர வேண்டிய அவசியமே இடையாகு. கனம் மாதவமேனன் அவர்களுக்கு நான் தெரிவிக்கின்றேன், 'எந்தவிதமான திருத்தத்திற்கும் இந்த பில்லிலே இடமில்லையென்று.' அப்படி திருத்தம் செய்வோமானால் இது குறித்து மடாதிபதிகள் தான் அதிகம் சந்தோஷம் அடைவார்கள். அதன் மூலம் பல இன்னல்களையும் தவிராமல் விளைவிப்பார்கள். ஒரு நாள் நான் பத்திரிகையொன்றைப் பார்த்தேன்."

MR. SPEAKER :—"இந்தக் களாசைப்பற்றிப் பேசுங்கள்."

SRI M. KANNIYAPPAN :—"கனம் தலைவர் அவர்களே, இந்த பில்லின் 67-வது பிரிவைக் குறித்துத் தான் சில விஷயங்களைச் சொல்லுகிறேன். ஒருநாள் பத்திரிகையொன்றைப் பார்த்தேன். அதிலே மடாதிபதி ஒருவரிடம் கனம் மாதவமேனன் அவர்கள் இந்தச் சட்டத்தைக் கொண்டு போவது போலவும், மடாதிபதி அவரிடம் அந்தச் சட்டத்தால் என் விஷயங்களில் தலையிட உணக்கு அதிகாரமே இல்லையென்று கூறுவது போலவும் ஒரு சித்திரம் தீட்டப்பட்டு இருந்தது. நமது அரசாங்கம் இந்தச் சட்டத்தைச் செய்கிற காலத்தில் ஒரு மடாதிபதி உணக்கு அதிகாரம் இல்லையென்று சொல்லுகிறபோது நமக்கு அதிகாரம் இருக்கிறதா, இல்லையா என்பதை நாம் தெளிவுபடுத்த வேண்டும். மடங்கள் ஊழல் மலிந்து கிடக்கின்றன. அவைகளை ஒழுங்கு படுத்து வேண்டுமென்று ஒரு புரக்கிரமான பில்லைக் கொண்டு வருவதுபோது அவர்கள் இன்னமும் அம்மாதிரியே ஒழுங்கீனமாக நடப்பதைப் பார்த்துக்கொண்டு இந்நாட்டவர் யாரும் சும்மாய் இருக்க மாட்டார்கள். ஆகையால் தோழர் விஸ்வநாதம் அவர்கள் கொண்டுவந்த திருத்தம் திருத்தத்தை யாரும் அனுமதிக்க மாட்டார்கள். வோட்டும் கொடுக்க மாட்டார்கள். இந்த திருத்தத்தையும் ஏற்றுக்கொள்ள வேண்டாமென்று கனம் மந்திரி மாதவமேனன் அவர்களையும் நான் கேட்டுக்கொள்கிறேன்."

SRI D. V. RAMASWAMI :—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I am not at all surprised that my hon. Friends Kanniyappan and Kosalram are fighting shy of anything which will protect the just rights of petitioners who resort to civil courts. If they had power, they would even advise the omission altogether of the right of appeal even to the High Court. They are made that way. The Hon. Law Minister is a lawyer and he knows that in almost every important matter the aggrieved party has a right to put in an appeal or a suit praying for an interim order to stay certain proceedings, which is an inherent right of the party. It is not only inherent but it is also natural and it will go a long way to protect the rights of parties, however long the proceedings may be delayed in a law suit, because they will be adjusted when the court comes to a final decision in the matter. Then these interim orders will not affect the merits of any case, but they only protect the existing rights of parties, so that when the decree is passed by the court, the actual position of the parties with regard to the point mooted will be known. Therefore, I feel, that the provision in the clause to the effect that the court shall have no power to stay the Commissioner's order pending disposal of the suit, should not be there. There may be so many cases like that coming under clauses 62, 63, 65, etc. So, I feel sure that after careful consideration the Hon. Minister will concede the justness of the amendment and accept it."

SRI M. S. PATTABHIRAMAYYA :—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I think this is a right and proper amendment for this Bill, which I consider to be a salutary Bill for our State. This amendment was so ably moved and the Raja of Chettinad strengthened and reinforced it by making certain practical observations while he was seconding the amendment. When the Hon. Sri Madhava Menon said that he would vehemently oppose it, I thought he was saying so rather hastily, but later on I found there has been a tendency that has been developed by the so-called supporters of the Bill, which I might call by a new English phraseology which I came across recently, namely, 'paranoid tendency'. Though I am also a supporter of the Bill (interruption) some hon. Members seem to claim to be exclusive supporters of the Bill. I am not one of such supporters! I confess I am not uncritical. I cannot say 'Aye' to any and every clause of the Bill before the House."

"You will please permit me, Sir, to explain this paranoid tendency. It is found written by a psychologist in the latest issue of the 'Fortnightly Review' and I noted it because it was so topical. It is a general disposition to misjudge people, become suspicious without adequate grounds, to feel that people are working against one when they are not really doing so; the main psychological mechanism involved is that of projection, projecting of the person's aggressiveness and hostility upon others. I think, Sir, some people think that the courts and some lawyers who are arguing against this Bill are the same and therefore, they project upon them the aggressiveness of their own; it is the aggressiveness of their own selves that they see in others. The deletion of the few words namely, 'but it shall have no power to stay the Commissioner's order pending disposal of the suit' will make this clause a very good clause. If there is no clause, there is no quarrel at all. I do not see why this should not be accepted; the interim order may be reversed by the court and it may itself decide in favour of the scheme of the Commissioner. I do not know why they should look awkward or inferior when the court is investigating into the matter; this I submit, Sir, is taking up real executive power while paying lip service to courts and to the Constitution; the Government are simply nullifying what they are saying. Therefore, my submission is that either the clause should go or if it is to stand and if they want that the courts should be given some powers and they will abide by their decision, then the amendment is necessary and it will be according to the Constitution. I feel, Sir, that these words should go so that the Bill will become a good Bill and will be welcomed by many people."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I oppose the amendment in spite of the view put forward by some hon. Members that it goes against all fundamental rights. It is a very necessary safeguard. When the hon. Member Sri Kosalram was saying that the whole clause must go, my hon. Friend Sri Viswanatham said: 'Yes, the whole Act will go and that is what I want.' Even if it is said in joke, I do not want that under the pretext of going to the court in respect of certain orders issued to cover a certain contingency of misappropriation or mismanagement, time should be allowed to the party who wants to mismanage or misappropriate to complete his nefarious transaction. Though the hon. Member, Sri Ramaswami did not approve of the support of hon. Member Sri Kosalram to the clause, I think hon. Member Sri Kosalram, though he is not a lawyer, has put the case very forcibly why the amendment should be opposed. As hon. Members will notice, the whole of this clause is a new clause and it is why it is put in clarendon type. There was no provision to go to court at all and the sponsors of the original Bill were particular that we should not waste time or allow things to drift by allowing unnecessary suits. In the Select Committee, we devoted considerable time to this matter and I shall just refer to the discussions on clause 39 in the Select Committee:

"Sri K. Bhashyam moved the insertion of a new clause 39-A as follows:—

"39-A. (1) Where the Commissioner thinks that in the interest of the math, a scheme has to be framed, he may himself file a suit before the court or authorize two disciples of the math interested in the math for a scheme being framed for the proper administration of the math and its properties.

(2) Pending the settlement of a scheme, the Court may make all orders or give direction for the proper administration of the math."

Sri Bhashyam felt that in the case of maths, it was the court that should frame schemes. In the alternative, he had no objection to schemes being framed by the Commissioner in the first instance, with an appeal provided to a Court.

"Sri K. R. Karanth agreed with the alternative suggestion of Sri K. Bhashyam. He observed that in the scheme as envisaged in the Bill, the Deputy Commissioner had the right to frame schemes and the Commissioner was the final appellate authority. He thought it was all wrong. He said that the scheme should be framed by the Commissioner, that there should be an appeal to a court, and there might be another appeal to the High Court as persona designata whose decision should be final.

"The Hon. Sri K. Madhava Menon was of the opinion that since large properties were involved, the court should have jurisdiction. He agreed with the suggestion of Sri Karanth that the Commissioner should frame the scheme in the first instance but added that a definite provision should be made that no injunction or stay would be allowed in respect of such schemes until the court decided. The Commissioner's scheme should remain in force till the suit was disposed of.

"Hon. Sri K. T. Kosalram did not see why the court should come in at all, as that meant delay.

"It was agreed that the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner, if deputed by the Commissioner, should have a right to frame a scheme for a math. Such scheme should remain in force from the date of its passing till the suit was disposed of, in case a suit was filed against such a scheme. The scheme should not be allowed to be stayed by any court. There should be an appeal to the Sub-Court, and from the Sub-Court to a divisional bench of the High Court, whose decision should be final.

"So, Sir, this is what happened in the Select Committee. Supposing there are large properties and the trustee claims that the properties belong to him and the scheme is framed, he goes to court and finally the decision goes against him. What will be the position if the amendment is accepted? That man will continue in possession of those properties till the suit is finally decided as by reason of the injunction orders, he would continue in possession. From my experience as a lawyer, I can tell you, Sir, that a suit can be dragged on for a minimum period of one year at least and it is only after one year that there is difficulty. If anybody wants that it should be dragged on, there will be no difficulty and there are suits which last for six, eight and ten years also; and these are not uncommon. The Civil Procedure Code and the Rules of Practice are such that suits can be very easily prolonged for one reason or other. If there is a provision for injunction and an application for injunction is filed, the general tendency in civil courts is, of course on the general principle that the status quo ante should be maintained, the moment the suit is filed, the injunction is granted, which means the evil which you want to prevent by the framing of the scheme can be successfully perpetuated. It is only for that, Sir, that we want that the scheme should be in force till a decision is given by the court. Let them agitate to their heart's content if they feel that they are aggrieved and the final orders of the civil court will certainly prevail but till then the Commissioner's scheme, because it is intended to cure mismanagement, must stand because his orders arise only because there has been mismanagement. Sri Viswanatham quoted the Constitution; certainly, Sir, we cannot go against the Constitution. But the question is the right to sue is given under the Civil Procedure Code and in certain cases, the Specific Relief Act. Sri Viswanatham quoted Section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure which gives powers to the court to meet the ends of justice, or for the sake of good conscience and equity. But, let me remind him, Sir, that it is a subject in the concurrent list and it is within the competence of this Legislature to amend in spite of Article 375 of the Constitution.

"Further, Sir, this is not a strange thing. Let me in this connexion read Section 351 B of the District Municipalities Act—

"Notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Civil Procedure or in any other law for the time being in force, no court shall grant any permanent or temporary injunction or make any interim order restraining any proceedings which is being or about to be taken under this Act for the preparation or publication of electoral rolls or for the conduct of any election."

Sri Raghava Menon observed that it is a thing of which nobody has heard. There are, as hon. Members would see, identical provisions in the District Municipalities Act. It is not as if this is a strange thing and a thing unknown. Supposing a person's name is not on the electoral rolls; if such a provision were not there, he can on that ground move the court that other proceedings in the elections be stayed. But such a thing is not allowed. There is also section 17 of the Presidency Small Causes Court Act:

"The procedure prescribed in the Code of Civil Procedure shall, save in so far as is otherwise provided by that Code or by this Act be the procedure followed in a Court of Small Causes in all suits cognizable by it and in all cases arising out of such suits:

Provided that an applicant for an order to set aside a decree passed ex parte or for review of a judgment shall at the time of presenting his application either deposit in the court the amount due from him under the decree or in pursuance of the judgment or give such security for the performance of the decree or compliance of the judgment as the court may on a previous application made by him in this behalf have directed."

You cannot make an application to set aside an order passed ex parte unless the entire amount involved is deposited in court. So, also there is the provision in the District Municipalities Act. They do not issue any injunction such as is sought to be provided here. So, Sir, this was deliberately done to prevent people who have mismanaged or misappropriated from continuing their practice though the Commissioner has framed a scheme, by just making an application for injunction. Then the whole scheme will be frustrated. It is not a casual thing and it was done after considerable deliberation. So, Sir, the amendment cannot be accepted."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I am surprised at the line of argument taken by the Hon. Sri Madhava Menon. He says it is deliberately done and the greater is the surprise. He has said that the Government have very carefully considered the question. What have they considered? Nothing. He is apparently canvassing opinion in favour of the clause upon the materials which he has now presented to the House. He has been saying that the Commissioner passes the orders and immediately the parties go to the court and an injunction is granted and the whole purpose of the Act is frustrated. A lawyer like the Hon. Mr. Madhava Menon has got a greater responsibility in advancing such an argument because he is able to influence some of those friends who do not know the provisions of law. He knows that a court does not immediately pass an injunction order; there is no court and no judge who will, immediately the application is made, pass the injunction immediately. He has been arguing as if the moment the injunction application is filed, it will be granted and all mismanagement and misappropriation will continue.

"Sir, I submit you will give me a few minutes, because I want to explain myself, so that I may convince Members, not upon party basis but upon the merits of the case. The Commissioner passes an order; the aggrieved party goes to court. It is not on filing a suit, any judge will pass an injunction order. He has no right to do so, he can pass an injunction order only on a petition filed praying for injunction or after taking notice a petition may be filed by the Commissioner for restraining a party from doing certain things. So hon. Members Messrs. Kanniyappan and Kosalam must realize that when a suit is filed, an injunction is never automatically granted. Supposing the Commissioner, as representative of the Government, has information that a particular management should not continue in office, then he can file a petition under Order XXXIX, Rule 1 for an injunction. This is what the rule says—

"1 Where in any suit it is proved by affidavit or otherwise—
(a) that any property in dispute is in danger of being wasted, damaged or alienated by any party to the suit, or wrongfully sold in execution of a decree, the Court may by order grant a temporary injunction to restrain such act, or make such other order for the purpose of staying and preventing the wasting, damaging alienation, sale, removal or disposition of the property as the Court thinks, until the disposal of the suit or until further orders."

Or, supposing the trustee takes time by the forelock and files the suit against the Commissioner, in which case, what is the Commissioner to do? He can under Order XL file a petition for the appointment of a receiver. So, in either case the Civil Procedure Code provides a remedy for the Commissioner. Thus if the trustee files a suit first, then, the Commissioner can claim for the appointment of a receiver; he can prove to the court that the trustee should not be in the management of the property, because there will be scope for mismanagement and so ask for the appointment of a receiver. The only thing required is that the court should be satisfied. But the Hon. Minister, by his provision, does not want the court to be satisfied. I therefore submit, the argument based on the question of mismanagement should not have been brought forward. Because it is open to the Government immediately to get a receiver appointed, if it anticipates that if the property is allowed in the hands of the trustee, it would be mismanaged. Neither under section 151 nor under Order XXXIX and Order XL of the Civil Procedure Code, the court is not an automaton to pass an order. It has to hear both sides, it has to see what is the nature of the injunction asked for; it has to see whether it is a case for the appointment of a receiver or a case for the passing of an injunction order. Therefore, I submit, the argument that immediately a suit is filed there will be an injunction granted will not hold scrutiny.

"Now, what are the matters which can be brought before a court under this right of suit? Clause 62 deals with inquiries, that, is, about the nature of the properties. It has nothing to do with possession. That clause deals with the power to decide whether an institution is a religious institution or not, whether a trustee holds his office as a hereditary trustee or not, whether any property or money is a religious endowment or not, whether any property is a specific endowment, whether any emolument is one established by custom or otherwise, whether any institution or endowment is partly religious in character and partly secular and so on. These are questions which do not deal with management. Then, the next clause deals with the schemes framed by the Deputy Commissioner, and if the party is not satisfied with it, he has got a right to sue. Now, if a party feels that the Commissioner should not take possession of the property it is open to him to file a petition, and then it is open to the Government to prove before the court that there would be mismanagement if the property is allowed to continue in the hands of the plaintiff. Now, Sir, nothing prevents Government from doing that. But Government wants to avoid that, that is, avoid court, and it wants everybody to believe that its own belief is right and should be upheld!

"Now, even if we go to clause 65, what do we see there. It deals only with the properties of non-existing trusts or religious institutions. Supposing the trustee is in possession of the non-existing trust, it is open to the Commissioner to satisfy the court that the property should not be allowed in the hands of the trustee. Thus both parties are given an opportunity to represent their case. Suppose a suit is filed by the trustee, Government even then have got an opportunity to satisfy the court that the party should not hold the property. Even if interim injunction and notice are ordered, it would be only for a few days. But what the Government wants really is, without going to court, they want to take away the property from a person. I submit, therefore, this inherent right of a citizen can never be altered, nor can the inherent right of courts be cut down. Then, Sir, the Hon. Mr. Madhava Menon also said that it is open to him to repeal section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code. Let him do it if he can. As was said by an eminent lawyer with regard to the House of Commons, the House of Commons could do anything except make a man a woman, or a woman a man. Now, the Hon. Sri Madhava Menon can take away any section, because we are a sovereign body. But I would only ask him whether he would get any support from any of his legal counsel if he should suggest that he would repeal section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code. I submit his arguments are wrong."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I did not say I can remove section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code. I only said this House has got jurisdiction even to remove section 151. I never said I would even ask this House to remove section 151. I only said this House has got jurisdiction to amend the Civil Procedure Code. My hon. Friend read section 151 and said it is a very good and convenient section. Yes, it is good, for in the name of justice, equity and good conscience, the court can do many things. So, I said, we can even amend the Civil Procedure Code. Then, Sir, he referred to the power of the House of Commons and the legislature in general; that it can make any laws except make a man a woman or a woman a man! Sir, I do not want to make a man a woman or a woman a man. For, then, the world would not be worth living.

"Then, Sir, my hon. Friend postulates a dictum of law, which is not correct. I must claim a little more of practice in civil courts in connexion with the granting of injunctions and the appointment of receivers. A suit should be filed first and then only the petition for injunction should be filed. As soon as the plaint is presented, the petition is also presented before the court for an ad interim injunction. Notice of the ad interim injunction goes to the defendant even before the notice of the suit. Both notices do not go to him together, or, the suit notice does not go to him first. Under clause 67 the Commissioner is always a defendant. Why should he be a plaintiff? It is the aggrieved party that goes to court. Who is the aggrieved party? It is the trustee; so, he is the plaintiff and the Commissioner is the defendant. So, there is nothing in these simple words to mislead hon. Members like Mr. Kosalram and Mr. Kanniyappan. They are not such simple people as can be won over by Madhava Menon or misled by him. That is giving me too great a compliment."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

'In sub-clause (1) (ii), delete the words "but it shall have no power to stay . . . the suit".'

The amendment was lost.

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I am not moving my amendment under sub-clause (2)."

MR. SPEAKER:—"Then, I shall put clause 67 as amended to the vote of the House. The question is—

'Clause 67 as amended do form part of the Bill.'

The motion was carried.

[11th December 1950]

CHAPTER VII.

MR. SPEAKER:—"We will now take up Chapter VII."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, I move—

Omit Chapter VII."

If there is one portion which is the most objectionable portion in the Bill, it is this Notification Chapter. It is objectionable not only from the point of view of propriety but also from the point of view constitutional law and the proper management of religious institutions. I am speaking not on the Chapter as it is but as is proposed to be amended by the Government. What does this Chapter provide? When a religious institution is said to be mismanaged, a notification shall issue. On the issue of a notification, the scheme of administration settled for the institution, all rules, the Area Committee and everything else relating to that institution stand abolished altogether. The Government start with a clean slate as if the institution had come into being on the date of the notification. The institution is given a new birth by the Government. The persons for whose benefit the institution exists have no voice. It looks as if the only party is the Government and they deal with the institution as if it is their private property. As I said in the beginning, it is wrong from the point of view of propriety. The Government should have nothing to do with religious institutions and especially their taking over the entire management is absolutely improper. There is no doubt about it. If there are people who believe that the Government will do better than what the others are doing, I refuse to accept their view. When the Government take over the management, the administration becomes a Government department. The institution will not receive as much attention from a Government department as it will receive from other persons. Mismanagement must be stopped. Management must be improved. All those things are right. But there are many other ways of doing it. There are provisions under which a scheme of administration can be framed or modified, trustees may be dismissed and other trustees appointed, and the Area Committee reconstituted. A notification will work havoc. That is my humble opinion from my experience of the notifications issued in respect of various religious institutions. The Government may say that they have improved finances, i.e., they have leased the property for higher rent and increased the revenue. We are not so much concerned with the material management as with improving the religious tone. As soon as the Government take over the management, there is a lethargy. Local people do not take any interest. There is a feeling of frustration and disappointment that they have nothing to do with the institution, that the executive officer is supreme, and that anything that they suggest will have to go through a hierarchy of Government officers.

"The second thing is that the Government may put aside the wishes of the founder, the rights of the trustees and the rights of the community; it is not proper or lawful. If I say that it is not lawful, the Government say, that you can try it in a court of law. They have got their own view in the matter. I can only express in this House my humble opinion however worthless it may be. Notification is not proper and it hurts the institution itself. Therefore I say that the Chapter should go. As I said before, the Commissioner and the Deputy and Assistant Commissioners are vested with several powers under which they can rectify mistakes. The implication of this chapter is that the Government distrust the efficiency of, and the proper management by, their own officers. That is why the Government want the power to take over the entire management upon themselves. It is a confession of weakness all round which should not be there. Therefore I want the chapter to be omitted."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I second the amendment.

Provisions similar to those in this chapter exist in the existing Act. Clause 68 says—

"Notwithstanding that a religious institution is governed by a scheme settled or deemed to be settled under this Act, the Commissioner may, by notice published in the prescribed manner, call upon the trustee

The corresponding provision in the Act, section 65-A says—

"The Board may by notice published, in the prescribed manner, call upon the trustee

The language of the Bill and the Act is practically the same. The intra vires or ultra vires nature of this section of the Act is the subject-matter of writ proceedings in the High Court of Madras. I do not know how far we will be justified in discussing the clause. May I have your ruling on this point?"

MR. SPEAKER:—"Only a section of the old Act is before the High Court."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"A writ has been prayed for on the ground that the Madras Hindu Bigamous Marriages Prohibition and Divorce Act is discriminatory as it applies only to Hindus. At this rate no legislation will be possible."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"I wanted to be supported by the Hon. Speaker and the Hon. Law Minister. The point is now very clear that this Notification Chapter is an old evil transferred into this new Bill, notwithstanding the fact that this Bill gives several more powers than the previous Act. Apparently the draftsmen of the Bill forgot that this chapter was not necessary at all. All the powers contemplated in this chapter are conferred by the other clauses of the Bill. The Commissioner has got ample powers to call for records, pass orders and take over the religious institutions and their properties. Under clause 63, the Deputy Commissioner can frame a scheme of administration and modify or cancel a scheme already framed. Under clause 67, the Government have very graciously given to an aggrieved party the right to file a suit in a

[Sri T. Viswanatham] [11th December 1950]

District Court against the order of the Commissioner and the right of appeal to the High Court against the decree of the District Court. The court may vary the scheme altogether. The Commissioner will be frustrated the moment power is given to the court to alter any scheme. The Government see some danger in it. So in the very next clause, clause 68, they say that notwithstanding any scheme which may have been approved by a court, the Commissioner shall have the power to notify and take over a religious institution. Thereby the right given under clause 67 is nullified. It is no doubt provided that the Commissioner shall state the reasons when he wants to notify a religious institution. But where does the question of mismanagement arise, when a scheme is framed under clause 63 and approved by a court under clause 67?

"I submit that this is in line with the other legislation sponsored by this Government. Whenever the High Court gives a decision, immediately they pass a legislation saying that notwithstanding any decree or decision of any court, the law will be like this and this hereafter. Not only hereafter but they say that it shall be deemed to have come into force even before the birth of any legislation in this State of Madras! I submit this is not right, this is not proper. I believe this chapter was there in the original Bill because clause 67 was not there. After the insertion of clause 67, this chapter has no place. With these words, I gladly support the amendment."

RAJA MUTHIAH CHETTIAR OF CHETTINAD:—"Sir, I am afraid I cannot support the amendment. If this amendment is to be accepted, the whole Bill may be dropped. Whether the temples which are already governed by certain schemes should not be brought within the scope of this Bill for the purpose of better administration and stricter supervision by some governmental machinery was engaging the attention of the Government and the people connected with the administration of temples for a long time. When smaller temples are brought under control, why should not bigger temples which are governed by certain schemes also be brought under control? My view is that these bigger temples are already under some sort of control. A manager is appointed with the concurrence of the District Court or some such machinery. Why should we object to bringing them under this Bill? If the institutions conform to the principles of good management, the Commissioner will not notify them. If they do not conform to those principles, there is a justifiable case for notifying them. In notification, the Commissioner is not the sole authority. The Government also are a party. An aggrieved party may come to the Government, make representations, arrive at a compromise and avoid notification. The trustees can abide by the compromise. If the trustee is not reasonable, there is no harm in the Commissioner appointing an executive officer. I fully support this chapter, as it will be conducive to the good administration of Hindu Religious Institutions.

11th December 1950] [Raja Muthiah Chettiayar of Chettinad]

"Sir, there is one little doubt which I want the Hon. Minister to make clear. In the new sub-clause (4) of clause 69, as introduced by the Select Committee, which is printed in clarendon type, it is said—

'Every notification published under this section shall remain for a period of five years from the date of its publication; but the Government may, at any time, on an application made to them, cancel the notification.'

No doubt this is clear enough. But immediately afterwards, in clause 70 under the same clarendon type, it has been put that—

'Such scheme and rules shall not be deemed to be revived by reason of the cancellation of the notification or by reason of its having ceased to be in force by efflux of time.'

Sir, it is because that the old scheme is not satisfactory that the Government have come forward to notify the institution. And on the publication of the notification, the old scheme shall cease to apply to the institution. What is to happen then to the institution? I have not looked into the Bill completely, but I do not know whether there is any provision in the Bill as to how to carry on the affairs of the temple after notification. I should like the Hon. Minister to tell me what would happen in that case. There should be some provision somewhere in this Bill as to what should be done during the period of notification. Here it is said, that the old arrangements will not be revived after the institution is notified and a new scheme acceptable to the trustees will have to be worked out afterwards. What would happen in the meanwhile? If there is any lacuna in the Bill in respect of this provision, I would only request the Hon. Minister to look into it, and if necessary, to introduce some proper provision in the appropriate place in the Bill.

"There is another matter which is of some consequence which I want the Hon. Minister to consider. It is envisaged in this Bill that after a temple is notified, the old scheme of things will go, that is to say, the existing trustees will go out of office and an executive officer will be appointed by the Commissioner, who will take the place of the trustee and conduct the affairs of the temple. It is also stated that this notification will be in force for a period of five years. Suppose there is already a trustee under a scheme, who for some reason or other cannot be removed for a period of five years, what will the Government do? Will they appoint a successor to him or will they consider the question of appointing an advisory committee in the place of the previous trustee, as has been done in the case of the Meenakshi temple in Mathurai? I am not suggesting for a movement that the existing trustees should be removed. If such a contingency arises, and if there is a possibility of the Government not filling up the post of a regular trustee—I use the words 'if there is a possibility' advisedly, necessarily they must appoint an advisory committee, like that in the Mathurai temple. So long as such a provision is not made in this chapter, it will not be proper to carry on the affairs of the temple with an executive officer. There should be an enabling provision somewhere for the Commissioner to appoint an advisory committee. I hope the Hon. Minister will consider these two points and make suitable provision in the Bill."

[Raja Muthiah Chettiyar of Chettinad] [11th December 1950]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I cannot accept the amendment of the hon. Member for the deletion of Chapter VII altogether. This power to notify a religious institution is very necessary. We may frame a scheme but for various reasons it may prove infructuous. The scheme may not be as successful as it was intended to be or the parties who might have been appointed to work out the scheme may not be using their powers properly. In such circumstances, it is necessary for the Government to notify the temple. The Government are also going to move an amendment to clause 68 (1) to the following effect:—

"Notwithstanding that a religious institution is governed by a scheme settled or deemed to have been settled under this Act, where the Commissioner has reason to believe that such institution is mismanaged and is satisfied that in the interests of its administration, it is necessary to take proceedings under this chapter, the Commissioner, may by notice published in the prescribed manner, call upon the trustee and all other persons having interest to show cause why such institution should not be notified to be subject to the provisions of this Chapter."

So that, Sir, we are proposing to have this power in case there is any definite mismanagement in the institution. Of course, the Commissioner must be satisfied that there is mismanagement and in the interests of the proper administration of the affairs of the temple, it is necessary that he must have the power to notify it. This is only a saving clause in contingencies where there is mismanagement in any schemes that might have been recently settled in respect of any religious institution. That is the object of the various provisions in this chapter and it is not therefore possible for me to accept the amendment to delete this clause, or the whole chapter, Sir.

"The other points raised by the hon. Raja Sahib will be answered at a later stage, Sir."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, I knew what the answer of the Hon. Minister would be. The Government want to have complete control over the religious institutions, although they do admit it. It is the greed for power, which grows more, the more it has got it. Already there are enough powers given to Government to control every aspect of temple administration, in the various clauses that we have passed. In the case of mismanagement of a trustee, there is already power to remove him from his office. If there is a default on his part, he can be removed. In case he refuses to carry out the orders of the Commissioner, there is power to take action against him. Almost every power that is thought necessary has been given to the Commissioner in the various previous clauses which have been passed. Such being the case, I cannot understand why this further residuary power should vest with the Government under this clause, which gives them power to notify any institution is which they consider there is some mismanagement. I think, Sir, it is quite unnecessary. The Government have got enough powers already under the previous clauses check mismanagement or misappropriation of funds of a religious institution. My respectful submission is therefore, this clause is quite unnecessary and these powers are also superfluous.

"As regards the point raised by the Raja Sahib of Chettinad—I am sorry, he is not here—that there should be some provision for the constitution of an advisory council, even after notification, and that the Government should not take upon themselves the entire management of the temples, I think that there is certainly some weight in his suggestion. But, by supporting the clause, he wants to give entire powers to the Government although he has qualified his statement, by pleading for the constitution of an advisory council. Because he has found that in certain temples the advisory councils have been doing good work, he wants to give only a qualified support to this clause. Although, as a matter of fact, he has supported the whole of this chapter, he wanted certain modifications in some of these clauses and therefore it is not that he had given his unqualified support to this clause. Whatever that be, Sir, I do feel, that in spite of what the Hon. Minister has said, there is no need for this chapter at all and it is quite unnecessary for the Government to have these powers, because they are already there. There is also this question, whether these clauses are legal or not. That is a matter for the courts to decide, but all the same I press my amendment, Sir."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, my hon. Friend Mr. Bhashyam says that the Rajah Sahib has, in fact, argued in favour of his amendment, although he said that he was going to oppose the amendment. I am not sure, Sir, whether Mr. Bhashyam has followed his point correctly. He asked me, 'You have provided in sub-clause (4) of clause 69, that every notification published under this clause shall remain in force for a period of five years, and that if an application is made to Government, you can cancel the notification. At the same time you have provided that on such cancellation, you will not revive the old scheme of things, which had been in existence before. Then what will be the position of the temple?' Sir, in the Select Committee, an identical amendment for the deletion of Chapter VII was moved by my hon. Friend Sri K. Bhashyam. The Select Committee did not agree, but as a matter of compromise, they agreed to the notification being in force for a period of five years. But the Government have also taken power to cancel it in between. Then the position of the temple will be, that the scheme that existed immediately prior to the notification will not be revived, but it will be as it was before the scheme was formed. That is to say, it will be in the position of any other temple, without a scheme and without the notification. Then the other sections of this Act will be applied. That is the point that was raised by the hon. Rajah Sahib and he did not say anything in support of the amendment, Sir."

in the interests of the people. When the Government have got all the powers necessary, why should they want the powers not only to set aside their own schemes but also schemes framed by the courts? This is a very difficult position to accept. I say that in the interests of good administration in the country and out of deference to the courts of the land, the Government should accept my amendment."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I second the amendment. I think the Government have got large powers in the various clauses already passed for dismissing a trustee, for appointing a new trustee, and for making any interim arrangements. As I submitted already, this chapter is the survival of the olden days when there was no Board and when there were no powers for the Government to control all these institutions. First of all came this question of notification. But in the context of the present provisions of this Bill, I say, Sir, that the Government already possess great many powers to manage, to appoint trustees, to remove trustees, and to make interim arrangements. Therefore, I submit this further clause is not necessary. But whether it is necessary or not, this clause does one mischief. It simply says: 'Notwithstanding that a religious institution is governed by a scheme settled or deemed to have been settled under this Act . . . This is the offending portion of the clause. The matter goes to the High Court, and the High Court modifies the scheme or approves of it. Under this clause, if the Commissioner or Deputy Commissioner do not do their duties properly, one fine morning they may turn round on the trustee and say that there is mismanagement and remove him. The Commissioner or Deputy Commissioner may say that the institution may be under the control of his officers. That is not a good position. It does not reflect well on the management of the Deputy Commissioner. Therefore, it is right that the Government accept the amendment of the hon. Member Mr. Bhashyam."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, before replying to the hon. Member Mr. Bhashyam as to how mismanagement comes in, I shall reply to the hon. Member Mr. Viswanatham. The hon. Member Mr. Viswanatham said that this chapter was a survival of olden times when we had no powers, and now that we had powers, we should not have this extra power under this clause. In the Act of 1926 there was no power of notification. There were powers for various other things. It was found impossible with those powers to manage things properly or to stop mismanagement. So, in Act X of 1946, this provision was introduced in section 65-A, namely—

'Notwithstanding that a temple or specific endowment attached to a temple is governed by a scheme previously framed by the Board or settled by a court, where the Board has reason to believe that the temple or endowment is being mismanaged,

This procedure of notifying temples was introduced by the Advisory Regime in 1946, because it was found not possible to carry on the work with the then existing provisions. That Act is being extended year after year, and at present it is extended up to 1st April 1951. So, it is not a survival of the mediaeval time. It is a new provision brought into force in 1946. In the Government amendment to clause 68, even though the words 'settled by a court are not there, the hon. Member Mr. Bhashyam has moved his amendment because he knows the law very well and he knows that though the words are not there they are implied there. The hon. Member Mr. Bhashyam wants to know what the nature of the mismanagement is. I shall give a concrete example. I entirely agree with him that courts are less likely to make mistakes than we mortals. I have the highest regard for the schemes framed by the courts. But with all that, I can say that courts are not infallible. Courts can commit mistakes or schemes framed by them may perhaps be not workable. That is what is happening in Guruvayur temple. The court framed a scheme for that temple. There were two hereditary trustees. The court said that the two trustees should work together. But these trustees will never work together. A number of suits were filed. One trustee filed a suit against the other trustee saying that he has not consulted him and vice versa. Ever since the scheme was sanctioned by the court, there were suits going on by one trustee or the other. At the end of the suit or before the suit came for final hearing, the trustees agreed with each other, and the costs of the suit were charged to the institution. Like this, mismanagement has been going on. Every time some modification is attempted. For a time there is some settlement, and after some time we again find there is some difficulty. So, the power is vested in the Government. Objection is not based on the merits of the question but on the question that the Constitution does not permit notification and that this notification would mean discrimination against Hindus alone. I have given a concrete example to the hon. Member Mr. Bhashyam where a scheme framed by the court led to innumerable suits every year, and management of the temple became impossible."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, the Hon. the Law Minister has demolished my argument by referring to suits between two trustees in the Guruvayur temple. The simple answer to that is to go to a court of law and say 'please modify the scheme suitably.' What is wrong with that procedure? It is only a two-rupee application. Why should there be this notification? Going to the court is really much easier than calling all the people to consider their objections and then notifying, etc. There is also the question of incurring the odium of the people in the area. Therefore, Sir, I cannot accept the Hon. Minister's argument, and I press my amendment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Besides the one case mentioned, there were a number of suits filed by worshippers, and it was found impossible to manage."

11th December 1950

MR. SPEAKER:—“The question is—

‘In clause 68, for the words “notwithstanding that a religious institution is governed by a scheme settled or deemed to be settled under this Act,” substitute the words “except in cases where a scheme has been settled by a civil court”.’”

The amendment was lost.

MR. SPEAKER:—“I now put the Government amendment to the vote of the House. The question is—

‘For sub-clause (1), substitute the following sub-clause:—

“(1) Notwithstanding that a religious institution is governed by a scheme settled or deemed to have been settled under this Act, where the Commissioner has reason to believe that such institution is being mismanaged and is satisfied that in the interests of its administration, it is necessary to take proceedings under this chapter, the Commissioner may, by notice published in the prescribed manner, call upon the trustee and all other persons having interest to show cause why such institution should not be notified to be subject to the provisions of this chapter.”’

The amendment was carried.

MR. SPEAKER:—“The motion is—

‘That clause 68, as amended, do stand part of the Bill.’”

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—“Mr. Speaker, Sir, as the hon. Member Mr. Bhashyam stated, the Government are wise enough to amend the clause and put it in a better form. The offending portion that I have stated is ‘Notwithstanding that a religious institution is governed by a scheme settled or deemed to have been settled under this Act’. The Hon. the Minister gave the instance of two trustees filing suits. The Government have the power to get rid of those people. The remedy is not to notify the temple and bring it under the Government for five years. There is the scheme framed by the court. The matter can be taken to the court direct if there is any quarrel. The Government have already taken powers to make interim arrangements. But to poke the finger into the eye of the court, as it were, and say ‘notwithstanding anything . . . under this Act’ is not in keeping with the dignity of the Legislature.”

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—“Sir, I strongly protest against the unnecessary use of the words ‘poking the finger into the eye of the court’. My hon. Friend is imagining unnecessary poking of the finger into the High Court. No such poking is intended at all. The clause is very clear. I do not see how it is intended against the court. It is not fair to say so.”

Clause 68, as amended, was put and carried.

11th December 1950]

Clause 69.

MR. SPEAKER:—“The motion is—

‘That clause 69 do stand part of the Bill.’”

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—“Sir, I move the amendment I have given notice of, namely—

Add a new sub-clause (5) as follows:—

“(5) Any person aggrieved by such notification shall be entitled to file an application before the District Judge within whose jurisdiction the institution is situate for the cancellation of the notification on the ground that it is without jurisdiction and not properly made and is otherwise unjust or unnecessary.”

The purport of this sub-clause is this. The Commissioner may think that, as was said some time back, a scheme of his has been modified by the High Court. There must be an opportunity for the persons concerned to show that their case is right and the Commissioner's charge is wrong. What the clause provides for in the first instance is to put in an objection to the Commissioner himself. But the Commissioner has already decided in the matter that in the interests of the institution, the institution should be notified. Having come before that conclusion, what is the purpose of putting in an objection to the Commissioner? He has prejudged the question, and has come to the conclusion ‘it ought to be notified’.

“Sir, you know what is meant by ‘notification after enquiry.’ If there are three hereditary trustees or even trustees appointed by the Commissioner under the statute, if there is mismanagement, what does it mean? Does it not go against the persons concerned? Does it not affect their character? Does it not make them unfit for any post of honour afterwards? If a person is dismissed—I call it nothing but dismissal—because his administration is found to amount to mismanagement of the properties of a temple, should he be branded for all his life as a person who cannot manage the properties properly? That is a black mark put upon him. There is no chance of his proving that he does not deserve him. Therefore, I want this to go to a court of law where he can prove that the Commissioner was wrong but he was quite right and that he had done everything only according to the practice and any orders on the matter. He can show that he has really improved the position of the temple. It does not affect the Commissioner or the temple so much as the persons who are in charge of the temple. The Commissioner will, by a mere stroke of the pen, say, ‘You are branded as mismanaging the funds of the temple.’ Suppose he stands for election to a municipal council or to the Legislative Assembly. The trouble will be that he will be spoken of as a person who was in charge of a temple and was found to be unfit to manage the properties properly. Elections are coming and we will have to see to this aspect also. Two persons may be quarrelling with each other for a seat. In such conditions, this man will have no opportunity to place his case before anybody. According to my amendment, when such notification is issued, he can go to a court of law, point out that he has not done anything wrong and request that the order might be modified. An opportunity of this kind must be given to the person to clear his character. Otherwise you will be condemning a person unheard. That is wholly wrong."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"I second the amendment, Sir. The argument for the amendment has been put by my hon. Friend Sri K. Bhashyam so ably that I have been wondering whether the Hon. Sri Madhava Menon is just considering to accept the amendment. I really do not want to spoil the case by arguing it myself. But whether I spoil it or not, the Hon. Sri Madhava Menon is now thinking of arguments to contradict what Sri Bhashyam has said, not on the merits of what he has said.

"If the Hon. Minister will be pleased to read clause 68 as amended by the Government, he will find the following words:—

'Where the Commissioner has reason to believe that such institution is being mismanaged and is satisfied that in the interests of its administration, it is necessary to take proceedings under this Chapter

So, the belief and the satisfaction that it is necessary to take proceedings are all over there. Therefore, the succeeding clauses under which he invites objections are merely an eyewash. It deserves the use of a stronger term which I am not willing to use on the floor of the House. When once the Commissioner is satisfied that it is necessary to take proceedings, what is the meaning of raising objections? Therefore, as my hon. Friend Sri K. Bhashyam has already said, a man is branded once for all as mismanaging the property and is removed from service. At least under the original unamended clause, it was said that the man was removed from the office of trustee. Under the amended clause, the publication in the Port St. George Gazette will be that the man, the erstwhile trustee, is removed for mismanagement, and the poor man is condemned once for all. He has no right to appear before anyone and put forward his case. The person who initiates the proceedings is the Commissioner; the person who has got reason to believe that it is being mismanaged is the Commissioner; the person who invites objections and also hears and finally decides is the Commissioner. This is a very strange case of the application of justice. It is a case where the Prosecutor and the Judge are one and the same absolutely. It is against all fundamentals of fairplay. When the Commissioner is of one opinion and the affected person is of another opinion and when he raises objections, he should not be asked to go to the very same hangman and make a representation, and then you cannot say that an opportunity has been given to this man. In cases of allegation of mismanagement, because it involves moral turpitude and once for all brands the man as regards his character, it is necessary that an important tribunal should have jurisdiction to go into the matter and an opportunity should be given to the man to vindicate his character or to show that the Commissioner was wrong. I second the amendment, Sir."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, for any scheme framed by the Commissioner, an appeal is provided to the Court in the previous Chapter. If I am not misunderstood, the only redeeming feature of this notification is that there is no provision to go to a Civil Court. In all the other previous Chapters, with regard to a scheme framed or any other orders passed, there was an appeal to the Court and the High Court also. In this case there is no provision to go to a Court of Law for the obvious reason that this is a temporary measure and not a permanent one. This notification shall ipso facto end at the end of five years or at any earlier date if the Government cancel the notification. This is a temporary provision to cure a temporary disease.

"My hon. Friend Sri T. Viswanatham used the word 'hangman'; it has no place at all here. (Sri T. Viswanatham: 'It is a pleasant word.') That may be very pleasant for him but not to all. He said that it is pre-decided that there is mismanagement and the Commissioner should interfere. It is not so; that is not the correct interpretation of my amendment. It is only said—

'where the Commissioner has reason to believe that such institution is being mismanaged and is satisfied that in the interests of its administration, it is necessary to take proceedings

We do not say 'to pass orders.' The expression 'that in the interests of its administration, it is necessary to take proceedings' shows that further action is necessary. It is not a case of his coming to a conclusion at once. It is only a question whether there is a prima facie case for framing a charge, to use the expression of a Criminal Court. If it is afterwards found necessary to initiate proceedings, he gives notice to the trustee and other persons interested in the property to show cause why the institution should not be notified to be subject to the provisions of this Chapter. On that, the trustee or other persons interested can file their objections. Under clause 69 (2) where any such objections have been received within the time specified or granted, the Commissioner shall hold an inquiry into the objections in the manner prescribed, and decide whether the institution should be notified to be subject to the provisions of this Chapter or not. The decision is given only after the enquiry is over under clause 69. The Commissioner is not the hangman, because the subsequent sub-clause says that the Commissioner after holding the inquiry shall end up the papers to Government who shall thereupon issue the notification. My hon. Friend thinks that it is a question of hanging somebody. It is not so. We do not want the institution itself to be hanged by one set of hangmen. The attempt is to prevent the institution being destroyed, for a temporary period, the maximum being five years. In the Act of 1946 there was a definite prohibition that no action taken under the particular section should be questioned in a Court of Law. Here there is prohibition by implication. That is necessary because this is only for a temporary period."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, the expression that the redeeming feature of this provision is that we are not allowed to go to a Court of Law is so staggering that I feel I cannot speak any more on this point. Therefore, I sit down, Sir."

MR. SPEAKER:—"And withdraw the amendment also?"

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"No, Sir."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

'Add a new sub-clause (5) as follows:—

"(5) Any person aggrieved by such notification shall be entitled to file an application before the District Judge within whose jurisdiction the institution is situate for the cancellation of the notification on the ground that it is without jurisdiction and not properly made and is otherwise unjust or unnecessary."

The amendment was lost.

Clause 69 was then put and carried.

Clause 70.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'That clause 70 do stand part of the Bill.'

JANAB MAHIN SCHAMNAD:—"Sir, I move the amendment standing in my name, viz.—

'Add the following proviso to clause 70:—

"Provided that the Government shall not deprive for all time a community or group of persons, to which a notified religious institution belongs, of its ownership thereof, either at the time of issuing the notification or after its expiry or cancellation, so as to pass its lawful ownership and control into the hands of persons who have no right thereto. On the expiry or cancellation of the notification or at any time prior to it, the Government shall duly consider whether the affairs of the notified religious institution do not justify the handing back of the same to the concerned community or group of persons from whom it was taken up by Government for proper administration under the notification."

It stands to justice and reason that the communal temples taken over for proper management from the incompetent or untrustworthy trustees of the concerned community have to be handed over to that community when the affairs of the temple are set right and when the proper members of the community are available and forthcoming to take up the trusteeship either at the end of the period of five years or at any time before, at the discretion of the Government.

"The Tirumalai Devaswom Temple in Cochin was handed over to the concerned community recently after 35 years of Government's administration. That is the reason for my amendment which is in accord with Article 26 of the Indian Constitution."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"I second the amendment, Sir."

MR. SPEAKER:—"Amendment moved—

"Provided that the Government shall not deprive for all time a community or group of persons, to which a notified religious institution belongs, of its ownership thereof, either at the time of issuing the notification or after its expiry or cancellation, so as to pass its lawful ownership and control into the hands of persons who have no right thereto. On the expiry or cancellation of the notification or at any time prior to it, the Government shall duly consider whether the affairs of the notified religious institution do not justify the handing back of the same to the concerned community or group of persons from whom it was taken up by Government for proper administration under the notification."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, what is contemplated in the amendment of the hon. Member is already there under sub-clause (4) of clause 69. The hon. Gentleman's amendment is, 'Provided that the Government shall not deprive for all time a community or group of persons, to which a notified religious institution belongs . . . etc. I must tell the hon. Member that a notified religious institution cannot belong to any particular community or group of persons. It is a public institution. Some persons may be trustees of the same, but they cannot claim any ownership over the institution concerned. The hon. Member's amendment further states, 'On the expiry or cancellation of the notification or at any time prior to it, the Government shall duly consider whether the affairs of the notified religious institution do not justify the handing back of the same to the concerned community. . . etc. I would like to point out that we have gone a step further under clause 69 (4) which states, 'Every notification published under this section shall remain in force for a period of five years from the date of its publication; but the Government may, at any time, on an application made to them, cancel the notification.' So at the end of five years, or at the cancellation of the notification, the institution shall revert to the same person as before. I am afraid that this amendment has been brought forward without a proper appreciation of what the clauses are."

[11th December 1950]

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

‘Add the following proviso to clause 70:—

“Provided that the Government shall not deprive for all time a community or group of persons, to which a notified religious institution belongs, of its ownership thereof, either at the time of issuing the notification or after its expiry or cancellation, so as to pass its lawful ownership and control into the hands of persons who have no right thereto. On the expiry or cancellation of the notification or at any time prior to it, the Government shall duly consider whether the affairs of the notified religious institution do not justify the handing back of the same to the concerned community or group of persons from whom it was taken up by Government for proper administration under the notification.”

The amendment was lost.

MR. SPEAKER:—"I think the hon. Member Sri Bhashyam has given notice of an amendment to this clause."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, the hon. Member had also given notice of a similar amendment under clause 68 and that was dropped. So I think the present amendment which is in identical terms with the other amendment, is not necessary."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"I do not move the amendment, Sir. I would like to know some information from the Hon. Minister. I find that there is some little confusion. In the latter part of clause 70, it is said, 'and such scheme and rules shall not be deemed to be revived by reason of the cancellation of the notification or by reason of its having ceased to be in force by efflux of time.' I wish to know what will be the effect of this. Does it mean that it will be handed back to the hereditary trustees who were in the management of the institution concerned before it was notified, or does it mean that it will be handed back to a few people appointed by the Government or the Board at that time. What will happen if the institution was without any management at all? If the Government put it in the present form, I am afraid there would be difficulty as to what will happen at the end of the notification. In my amendment, I have sought to set the matter right by introducing the words 'except for the schemes framed and settled by a Civil Court.' I am not going to move this amendment, because I know that it will be lopsided. However, I would like to urge upon the Hon. Law Minister to consider the effect of this clause. That is all what I want."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, to some extent the hon. Member's surmise is correct. But the position is this. By cancellation of notification or by expiry of time, ipso facto the previous scheme does not come into effect. All other provisions of this Act except this will come into force; all other clauses relating to the trustees will come into effect as soon as this notification is over."

Clause 70 was put and carried.

Clause 71.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

‘That clause 71 do stand part of the Bill.’"

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, I do not move the first amendment, but move the following second amendment:—

‘Add at the end of sub-clause (1) the words “for the management of the properties of the institution”’.

My scheme is this. The notification is there and a salaried executive officer is to be appointed. The executive officer may come in to the extent where there is mismanagement of the properties. I can understand his coming in for the purpose of managing the properties. For the purpose of managing other affairs relating to a temple the trustee of the temple may be allowed to continue to look after the same. Why should there be interference with the trustees' management of the internal affairs of a temple? There are various internal affairs to be looked after by a trustee, like utsavams, religious festivals and worships and kala sandhis, etc. Why should there be any restriction at all in respect of these matters? If there was anything wrong in the management of the properties, the executive officer may be asked to take charge of the management. But, if there was anything wrong in the worship or in the system of allowing people to go in and similar other things, such wrong systems can well be rectified by departmental orders and there is no necessity for making the executive officer hold charge of these things because, the trustee may do this job as well. There is no need for interfering with the ceremonies and other utsavams and festivals in the temples. These may be left in the hands of the trustee, who will be of course, subject to the orders of the Commissioner, Deputy Commissioner, Assistant Commissioner and the series of officers who will be sitting over his head and issuing orders. I would only wish to emphasize that there should be no interference in the day-to-day internal affairs of a religious institution and the trustees should be in charge of the same. That is all what I want to submit."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I second the amendment. The language is not very clear. I think that after the notification, the trustee is not out of the premises and he seems to continue. The properties might be given to the executive officer for effective management whenever there was mismanagement; but I am unable to understand why other affairs should also be left to his care. Moreover, in a later clause, we say that he is being treated as a public servant within the meaning of the Indian Penal Code. The question that might arise will be: whether this executive officer is a servant of the institution, or a servant of the Government. That is all what I want to know."

SRI R. V. SWAMINATHAN:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I oppose this amendment. I think the trustees would not be there after the notification and they would be removed. Even assuming that the trustee will be there, I do not see any reason why the executive officer should not have power to look after the properties of the institution as well as other affairs relating to the institution. The officers concerned should have power to find fault with not only the management of the properties, but also other religious affairs relating to the institution concerned so that everything may go well. Therefore I oppose this amendment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, hon. Member Sri Bhashyam wants to specify the duties of the executive officer. His amendment is 'Add at the end of sub-clause (1) the words "for the management of the properties of the institution"'. This is already provided in clause 72 (1) which says: 'The executive officer shall hold office for such period as may be fixed by the Commissioner and he shall exercise such powers and perform such duties as may be assigned to him by the Commissioner.' In the proviso of this clause, I am seeking to omit the words 'in the case of a math' and substitute the words 'of the endowments of the religious institution' for the words 'of its endowments'. When the proviso is amended later according to my amendment, it will read thus: 'Provided that only such powers and duties as appertain to the administration of the endowments of the religious institution shall be assigned to the executive officer.' It will thus be seen that the executive officer shall have power only for administration of the endowments of the religious institution. So the duties and functions of the executive officer are already set forth specifically in this clause and hon. Sri Bhashyam's amendment will be absolutely redundant."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, I am afraid that I have not been properly understood. I want that this question of assignment of duties between the trustees and the executive officers should not be left to the Government and the Commissioner. I want this to be defined in the statute itself. So far as the secular affairs of the institution are concerned, the executive officer may be in charge. But in respect of other matters, I think the temple trustee should be in charge. I am sure the object of the Government will certainly be achieved if my amendment is accepted and the duties of the executive officer are confined to the management of the properties only."

11th December 1950]

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

'Add at the end of sub-clause (1) the words "for the management of the properties of the institution".'

The amendment was lost.

Clause 71 was put and carried.

Clause 72.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'That clause 72 do stand part of the Bill.'

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I beg to move—

'In the proviso to sub-clause (1)—

(1) Omit the words "in the case of a math";

(2) For the words "of its endowment", substitute "of the endowments of the religious institution".'

If my amendment is carried, the proviso will read like this: 'Provided that only such powers and duties as appertain to the administration of the endowments of the religious institution shall be assigned to the executive officer.' To make it perfectly clear, I have brought forward this amendment. The duty of the executive officer is to administer the endowments of a religious institution and not the religious institution."

The amendment was put and carried.

Clause 72, as amended, was put and carried.

Clauses 73 and 74 were put and carried.

Clause 75.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'That clause 75 do stand part of the Bill.'

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"I thought that we would take up this clause only after lunch. So I am not prepared with my amendments to this clause, Sir."

MR. SPEAKER:—"I have no objection. The House will rise and meet again at 2-30 p.m."

(After lunch—2-30 p.m.)

JANAB MOHAMED ABDUL SALAM:—"On a point of information, Sir, may I know the programme of the House—how long we will be sitting, when we will . . ."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The Leader of the House will give the information to-morrow. If the Hon. the Law Minister wants to say anything, I have no objection."

[11th December 1950]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—“As you have suggested, Sir, it is better that the Leader of the House gives the information. As far as I know, we propose to sit till consideration of this Bill is over.”

JANAB MOHAMED ABDUL SALAM:—“I submit, Sir, that last time when we dispersed . . .”

MR. SPEAKER:—“Let the Leader of the House come. He will answer the query. He will give the information to-morrow. Now, we shall proceed with clause 75.”

Sub-clause (3).

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—“Mr. Speaker, Sir, I do not propose moving my amendments (a), (b) and (c) to sub-clause (1) and also the two amendments seeking to delete sub-clause (1) (a) and sub-clause (1) (b). I, however, propose to move my amendment to sub-clause (3). Sir, I move—

‘Delete sub-clause (3).’

It is the trustee that has got the power of management according to the Government. He is an appointed trustee. At least to the extent he is trustee, he must be given power to manage the affairs of his trust. Clause 75 deals with the entire scope of the daily secular management of the institution and, therefore, it is his right to frame his budget. Of course, with the superior powers of superintendence and other things that vest in the Commissioner and Deputy Commissioners, they may be statutorily authorized to receive copies of the budget and inform themselves as to how things are going on in the institution. They should not have the further right of altering the budget which the trustee prepares. He being the person in charge of the trust, the trustee is entitled to make his budget providing for repairs and renovation of the buildings connected with the trust, for the daily scale of expenditure, that is, the dittam, for the due discharge of the liabilities of the institution, etc., which all form the secular management. According to me, he is the person that must manage the institution without any outside interference. The Commissioner should have only the right to look into the budgets and see how things are going on. It might be asked then, Sir, ‘when the Commissioner or the Area Committee has no power of revision, has no power to alter the budget, then why have these budgets at all.’ My object is this. Instead of sitting in an office and remaining ignorant of what is happening in the various institutions, the Commissioner and the Area Committees may know under this clause something of these institutions. A statutory right vests in them under this clause to know what is going on there. That is enough. They should not have the right to alter the budget altogether. Then, it might be asked, ‘what is the purpose of their knowing what is going on in the institutions?’ If the Commissioner or the Area Committee suspects on a perusal of the various provisions made in the budget that there is mismanagement or maladministration, he or it has got power under certain other clauses of the Bill to take appropriate action against the institution concerned. Only when there is evidence of mismanagement or if the provisions in the budget amount to or border upon mismanagement, he should interfere and not until then. In that case he can take action either under clause 49 or under other clauses which provide even for the removal of a trustee. Until then he should have no right to fetter the discretion of the trustee. Sir, let us take, for instance, dittam. Dittam almost relates to the daily routine of expenditure and not the yearly one, although the budget may provide for it on a yearly basis. It is not, therefore, right either for the Area Committee or the Commissioner to interfere with the provisions of the budget. They can certainly remove the trustee even if they smell or scent any maladministration or unnecessary wasteful expenditure. Even in the case of municipalities, although statutorily power vests in the Government to make any alterations in their budgets, we find that the Government rarely interfere with them.”

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—“Similarly, here also there will be no interference.”

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—“I am not supplying an argument for you. What I am submitting is, even in that case, where the municipalities are only the creatures of Statutes and subordinate in a way to the Government, the Government do not normally interfere and should not interfere. All municipalities are resenting even the small interference which the Government make in respect of their budgets and for three years there have been conferences when they all protested against such interference. The Hon. Minister for Local Administration was actually sympathizing with these institutions promising month after month and year after year that he would effect suitable changes in the law so that the municipal life, the local life, might be really local. If in the case of a body which is the creature of a Statute the position is like this, in the case of a trustee, who is his own budget-maker and the dispenser of his own fate and fortune, there is a stronger justification for leaving him to himself. It is not right, therefore, Sir, to encroach on his rights. If there is wasteful expenditure, the Commissioner can proceed with the case under the other provisions of the Bill. The trustee should not be made to lose his initiative. His power to visualize what is wanted and what is not wanted should not be hampered by what the Commissioner or the Area Committee may say to-morrow. He should not live in a state of fear that a particular item may be struck off. He should not be tripped like that. Once the trustees are crippled like that, the management of the religious institution will suffer. In the sphere of activity allowed to the trustee, he must have freedom of action and discretion to act as he chooses in the best interests of the institution. The Commissioner can interfere only if there is anything wrong going on there. And the case is worse in the case of maths. If you will be pleased to read the relevant portion, you will find, Sir, that in religious institutions, some standardized scale of expenditure is called for. In the case of temples, it may be possible. In the case of maths, however, it is almost impossible to fix a standard scale of expenditure. It is like asking the trustee to regulate the number of persons whom he is receiving on a particular day or whom he may be obliged to feed. Sir, the number cannot be constant and it always varies. Of course, the Government might be pleased to state that the number may be given on the basis of an average struck of the persons whom the trustee has been receiving for the last ten or so many non-famine years or on some such fantastic method. But that will work great hardship on the matadhipathi. Therefore, Sir, from any point of view, the trustee must be given discretion to frame his own budget. Of course, if he misbehaves, there are other provisions under which action can be taken by the Government. With these words, Sir, I move my amendment."

SRI D. V. RAMASWAMI:—"Sir, I rise to second the amendment so ably moved by my hon. Friend, Sri Viswanatham. In this connexion, I would like to add a word or two to what he has already explained to the House. Under clauses 59 to 61 of the Bill, there are ample powers for the Government to see that proper standards of expenditure are fixed for the institution and also for the appointment of a manager to look after the secular side of the institution's activities. Therefore, Sir, when there are several such safeguards to see that the administration of institutions is carried on on proper lines, it really seems to me superfluous to ask the Commissioner and the Area Committees to examine the budgets of the institutions, and make such alterations, omissions or additions in them as they deem fit."

SRI V. M. RAMASWAMI MUDALIYAR:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I am really surprised at the amendment moved by my hon. Friend, Sri Viswanatham. The whole purpose of the Bill is to regulate and control the administration of the maths and other religious institutions and endowments, through the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner or the Area Committee. I feel that in this amendment, the old battles that hon. Sri Viswanatham waged under clause 32 of the Bill, is again repeated. Clause 32 which has been adopted empowers the trustee of an institution to incur expenditure on arrangements for securing the health, safety or convenience of disciples, pilgrims or worshippers resorting to the institution. When this clause was being discussed, Sri Viswanatham and his Friends wanted that the Commissioner or the Government should not have a hand in the control of such expenditure. If such power does not vest in the Government, the trustee or the person concerned may spend away all the money of the institution and there may be nothing left for other purposes. Now if sub-clause (3) is taken away, again the trustee may under the guise of framing a budget, spend away all the money got as income from the endowments without leaving anything for other purposes provided for in clause 64 of the Bill. For instance, dattam or the scale of expenditure may be fixed at a very exaggerated figure and he may put the provision for discharging the liabilities of the institution and repairs and renovation—for which a 10 per cent limit is fixed in the Bill—at an inflated figure so that no balance will be left whatsoever. It is for the purpose of controlling expenditure, to see that proper and reasonable provision is made, that the ultimate authority is sought to be vested in the Government, i.e., the Commissioner or the Area Committee. Otherwise the trustees may indulge in wasteful expenditure. My good friend Sri Viswanatham said that there are other clauses under which the Commissioner could exercise proper control over the trustees and even remove them if necessary, probably under clause 49. But there you will see that action could be taken only on definite grounds such as persistent default in the submission of budgets, for wilful disobedience of any lawful order issued under the provisions of the Act, and so on. But where exaggerated amounts are to be spent on the purposes mentioned under this clause there is no control at all. The trustee cannot be removed even if he spends the whole income of say Rs. 32 lakhs on renovation of the temples. There must be a check and control on what the expenditure on, say renovation, etc., must be. My hon. Friend should not base his objections on mere suspicions. After all the Area Committee is there composed of non-officials though nominated by Government. I take it they would be taken from among persons of status. So also is the Commissioner, a responsible officer. What is the objection in scrutinizing the budget? I don't think they would interfere at every stage, such as 'karpoora harathi' should be of so much quantity daily or in like matters. They are not going to interfere like that. My hon. Friend can take it that no reasonable person will do it. The only idea of this sub-clause is that there should not be wasteful expenditure and that there should be some ultimate authority who would keep a check on the expenditure. I do not see anything wrong in having such an ultimate power in the Commissioner in regard to bigger temples and the Area Committee in regard to smaller institutions. The argument that the trustee can be brought to book under other clauses of the Bill and that the Area Committee or the Commissioner should not have power to scrutinize the budget or control is not sound. I personally feel that the amendment must be opposed."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, the question as to what are the requirements of a temple or an institution is a matter of local interest, the interest of the person who is there performing the duties of the trustee. To say that the Commissioner or the Assistant Commissioner, sitting far away from the temples or the institutions must have power to say 'do this or don't do this' is a wholly improper thing. The trustee must have the initiative.

[Sri K. Bhashyam] [11th December 1950]

"Sir, there is one greater danger which I did not notice when this cypres doctrine was considered. When it was discussed Government by an amendment said: 'After making provisions in respect of clause 75'. What happens now is this. After providing for the items mentioned under this clause, the rest will be surplus in the hands of the Commissioner for the purpose of being used as he likes. I want my hon. Friend Sri Ramaswami Mudaliyar to note what the reaction of it will be. When the original clause about the cypres doctrine was there, the question was to determine the surplus only after providing for the requirements of the institution. But the Government by an amendment made it 'after providing for the things which are really mentioned in clause 75'. They circumscribed what is to be provided for for the temples or the institutions. When you interfere with the budget of the institution or the temple, the Government would try to leave a larger surplus outside. That is why I say, the Government with a view to opening more hospitals or leprosy clinics, making grants for advancing education will leave a large surplus outside out of the trust funds, to meet their commitments. My hon. Friend Sri Ramaswami Mudaliyar does not understand what this clause and the Government amendment mean. I had pointed out, at the time of discussing the Government amendment that while the budget makes provision for some of the things, it did not make provision for the case I had in point. Suppose I give Rs. 50,000 provided they pay Rs. 50,000 (the temple or the institution) for the building of a mandapam for religious purposes, there is no provision under this clause to incur that expenditure. Provision can be made for only such of the things as are mentioned under this clause. If the Commissioner is given power to interfere with the budget prepared by the trustee, the Commissioner will always try to act in such a manner as to get more surpluses. The Commissioner might be a good person not religiously inclined but secularly inclined in the sense as is usually said 'What are these temples for. Are they for the general good? It is for the general good that we must have more surpluses.' What are these temples for except for mere worship? Does the God speak to you and appear before you? What is the use of all this? Social service is the best service. Open more hospitals and more schools. These are the sort of ideas that are developing to-day and in this context, I believe Government would be able to understand my point. Therefore there is danger in saying 'If after making provision for these things', and then allowing the Commissioner or somebody to interfere with the budget of the temple or the institution. This is too much. Perhaps last time when I referred to this point I had not evidently made myself clearly understood."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"What is the danger?"

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"The danger is this, Sir. The Government have provided that the surpluses should go for definite purposes of public utility. The Government have said in an earlier clause that after providing for the things mentioned in clause 75 the surplus shall be at the disposal of the Commissioner. Of course, I know, he is not going to put it into his pocket. If supposing it is required for the construction of a new building for the institution or the temple, the danger is that it will not be available. Further the Commissioner would try to create more and more surplus by his check and scrutiny, the surplus to be spent on what they call general public utility. That was why I objected to it. If the Government give power to these persons it will mean greater danger. I am not against budgeting, I am not against keeping correct accounts and auditing and all that. I want these funds should be utilized properly and not for general public utility purposes. I am really against that. What is the duty of the Government? It is that they should see that the funds are not diverted to other things but are used for the legitimate purposes of the institution or the temple concerned. That is why I say I am objecting on principle to power being given to the Commissioner to interfere with the budget prepared by the trustee. We find provision made in this clause for repair and renovation. What about new construction? There is no provision made for new construction under this clause. Only ten per cent is allowed for repairs and renovation of the whole thing. Supposing it requires more than that, what are they to do? Therefore I see the studied policy of the Government in bringing an amendment at an earlier stage, and allowing only 10 per cent for renewal and repairs and making no provision for new construction, is with the object of making a larger surplus from the trust funds. I may be wrong in my suspecting the Government. But the fact is there. My hon. Friend Sri Ramaswami Mudaliyar said we suspect everything. But I may tell him, when I see the whole scheme, nothing but suspicion arises in my mind. Why should the Government suspect the trustee? He is a good person. Why suspect he would over-estimate the budget and put more money than is actually necessary? I would rather suspect the Government and the Bill, if it is a question of suspicion, rather than the local people. I think, it would be best, if the whole thing is left to the trustees themselves."

SRI R. V. SWAMINATHAN:—"Sir, we trust every one, whether it is the trustee, the Commissioner or the Government or any body else. According to this clause the budget prepared by the trustee will be placed before the Area Committee or the Commissioner, as the case may be. My hon. Friend Sri Bhashyam asked 'why interfere with local interest?' The trustee is a local man, the members of the Area Committee will also consist of people from the area. The preparation of the budget is, therefore, in the hands of the local interest."

"These will go into the question whether the budget has been prepared with reference to local customs that prevail there and so on. My hon. Friend Sri Bhashyam forecasted a danger that with a view to create a surplus, the Government have brought forward the amendment and want to have this clause too. I want to be frank, Sir. When we thought of this Bill, the idea was that in many institutions and temples money was being spent indiscriminately without looking into the purpose. We wanted to have a check over this. Without looking into the budget, I ask how are we going to check this? If after providing for the purposes of the running of the institutions and temples, such as those items mentioned under clause 75, what is the objection in utilizing the surplus for other items to which we are committed? It is true we intend utilizing the surplus for other purposes. But my hon. Friend's (Sri Bhashyam's) contention is that there won't be any surplus if provision were made for all the purposes of the institutions or the temples. According to him, there won't be any surplus, rather there might be a deficit also. Even money might be borrowed indiscriminately and spent for the religious institution. We want to put a check over this and find out if a surplus could be secured. But my hon. Friend Sri Bhashyam and others want that there should not be a check over the expenditure. That is why he fears there would be a danger in allowing the budget to be scrutinized. I feel, Sir, this is a very important sub-clause that should be there. I oppose the amendment."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"On a point of personal explanation, Sir, I want to say this. I never said there won't be any surplus. I only said that by these various devices the Government want to increase the surplus against the legitimate claims of the temple or the institution concerned."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"I feel the necessity of the sub-clause, Sir. My hon. Friend Sri Bhashyam suspects the whole motive of this scheme under this Bill and of this sub-clause. He says that the object of the Government is to create a surplus so that they may use it for the purposes mentioned in clause 64. He also expressed that the Government might create greater surpluses than are called for in the interest of the institution or the temple concerned. Let us look into the Government amendment that is to be moved to clause 75 (3). I do not know how far it will satisfy my hon. Friends, Sri Bhashyam and Sri Viswanatham. We say in the amendment proposed—

"For the portion beginning with "may make such alterations" and ending with "as it or he may deem fit", substitute "may, after giving notice to the trustee in the prescribed manner and after considering his representations, if any, make such alterations, omissions or additions in the budget as the Area Committee or the Commissioner may deem fit."

It may not probably satisfy them completely."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Six or half-a-dozen does not make a difference."

[11th December 1950]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"According to him, Sir, there is no difference as in saying tweedledom and tweedledee. Apart from that, let me say how absolutely unfounded these suspicions are. The suspicions are absolutely unfounded. Under clause 32—

(1) The trustee of a religious institution may, out of the funds in his charge, after making adequate provision for the purposes referred to in section 75, sub-section (2), incur expenditure—

(a) on arrangements for securing the health, safety or convenience of disciples, pilgrims or worshippers resorting to the institution; and

(b) for the training of archakas, adhyapakas, vedaparayanikas and others.

etc., etc."

We have already passed an amendment to clause 32 which says—

32-A. (1) If, after making adequate provision for the purposes referred to in section 75, sub-section (2), and also for the arrangements and the training referred to in section 32, sub-section (1), there is a surplus in the income of the institution, the trustee thereof may, with the previous sanction in writing of the Deputy Commissioner, appropriate such surplus or any portion thereof for all or any of the purposes specified in section 64, sub-section (1)

So, the trustee may incur expenditure with the previous sanction of the Deputy Commissioner. It is not the Commissioner, Sir.

"My hon. Friend Mr. Bhashyam's explanation is that the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner may alter the arrangements or vary the amounts in such a way that he will reduce the necessary expenditure and increase the surplus so that he may have the right to use the surplus for any purpose he likes. Has the Commissioner got the right to incur expenditure or to use the surplus? The initiative must come only from the trustee. In clause 64, we definitely said that, if there is any surplus, the trustee may use the surplus, but not the Commissioner. Only the trustee will have to get the previous permission of the Commissioner in certain cases. Even then the Commissioner cannot use it for any purpose other than those mentioned in clause 64 (1). The only person that can use the surplus is the trustee. What is the use for the trustee in having surplus? The whole explanation is based upon suspicion and if my hon. Friend Mr. Bhashyam is obsessed with the idea of suspicion nobody can help it. So, in no way clause 32-A gives the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner or even the Area Committee, power to use the surplus. The initiative must come from the trustee. And the trustee can never use the surplus for any purposes other than those mentioned in clause 32 or 64. So, I cannot understand how the Commissioner is interested in increasing the surplus or is having interest in making use of the surplus."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I have not been able to resolve my doubts with regard to this clause. My hon. Friend, Mr. Bhashyam, in his speech has emphasized one aspect of the question, and I think there is great loop-hole in the clause. So much so, the Hon. Minister in his reply has addressed himself only to that. His reply has not convinced us. What the Hon. Minister says is that, under clause 32-A, it is the trustee that has got the initiative to use the surplus funds and that therefore there is no meaning in emphasizing that the Commissioner wants to create an artificial surplus to be spent for the purpose of his own choice. That is the argument of the Hon. Minister. But, in the scheme of the whole Act, you will find that we are emphasizing that the trustee should have the voice in incurring expenditure. It is true, our argument has been that the trustee who is the choice of the people should have all this power. But why are we accepting an appointed trustee? We are accepting him because there is no alternative for us? We are accepting him not that this trustee satisfies Article 25 or 26 of the Constitution, but because we feel that it is slightly better than leaving the management entirely in the hands of the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner. Only to that extent we accepted. Now, give him at least discretion. Make him a real trustee. Don't put him under the threat of alterations to whatever proposals he wants to make—his proposals to improve the institution or manage the institution from day to day, or month to month or year to year. That cannot be taken advantage of by the Hon. Minister to argue that it is that trustee that has got the power to incur expenditure. It is the trustee of this Act that has power to utilize the surplus funds. The whole point of my argument is that the trustee is the creature of the Commissioner. Even in the case of hereditary trustees—about whom the Hon. Sri Madhava Menon was pleased to speak—even they can be rugged with other trustees. The hereditary trustee is not left to himself. Therefore, here again the trustees are the creatures of the Government or their officers, Commissioners and Deputy Commissioners.

"The aim of the Government is to see that the management is really in the hands of the Government, but that it should not appear to be like that—just to satisfy the conscience of the Constitution. Therefore, they have made several amendments. But, all the same we are of the opinion that in substance it has not changed. Because the trustee is the creature of the Government, the Deputy Commissioner, the Commissioner or the Area Committee or the officers of the Government, it cannot be taken as a point of argument to say that the initiative lies with the trustee. It is only to show that, Sir, that I elaborated upon this point. All the same, I say, 'Leave it to the trustee.' The Government say 'The trustee has got the initiative.' I say then, give him the initiative and unhampered discretion. It is no argument, Sir, that the trustee may make wasteful expenditure or there is no way of dealing with him. Sir, from beginning to end, we can see that this trustee is a man who sits and stands according to the word or wink of an eye of the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner. And to say that he cannot be controlled under the provisions of this Act if this clause is amended is to tell us something which we do not know at all.

[11th December 1950] [Sri T. Viswanatham]

"Look at clause 56 and clause 75. Even though the nomenclature is different, the Deputy Commissioner or the Commissioner or the Area Committee fix the principles of expenditure. You make rules and you define limits of expenditure. Under clause 75, sub-clause (2) you give limits, 10 per cent for repairs and renovations, etc., and you fix the principles on which he should spend his daily dittam, etc. You have already made so many statutory rules under the existing clauses and then having made all these statutory rules, you want to put further limits and also ask him to make any representation in every item of expenditure. I submit, Sir, that it is a wrong move. Although these trustees are the creatures of Government, I want that they should work, as long as they work, unhampered and with discretion. Seventy-five per cent of the trustees I know are reasonable and good and they have interest in the good management of these institutions. There is no use first saying, 'I want him and I want to give him the authority of a trustee,' and then at the same time and in the same breath, saying, 'I don't give him the power to spend the money.' According to the rules framed under this Act, under clauses 56 and 75, you have set the statutory limits and boundaries for his sphere of activities in regard to dittam, renovations, repairs, etc. I submit, Sir, that, if you want to treat him as a man, you trust him as a man and make him a decent administrator. Don't hamper his activities, fetter his discretion and alter his figures."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, the argument of Sri T. Viswanatham is very very inconsistent."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"That is the whole trouble, Sir."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"I think, Sir, Mr. Bhashyam has seconded the amendment. He said that the Commissioner might try to create more surplus. What my hon. Friends say is this: 'You trust the trustee who is your creature.'"

AN HON. MEMBER:—"Why don't you trust?"

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"In the first place, it is inconsistent. The Government or the Act do not propose to put any limits even on the hereditary trustees. My friends say that the trustees are the creatures of the Government. If that is so, it is their responsibility to see that they act properly. So, it is absolutely inconsistent.

"My hon. Friend Sri Viswanatham has not moved his amendments to sub-clauses (1) and (2). Here, the trustee is expected to submit a copy of the budget to the Commissioner in certain cases and to the Area Committee if the institution is subject to the jurisdiction of such a Committee. So, when he is sending a copy of the budget to the Commissioner, the Commissioner has to see whether the provisions have been made properly.

[Sri K. Madhava Menon] [11th December 1950]

"That is the intention, Sir. It is very necessary that the sub-clause should be retained."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

'That sub-clause (3) be deleted.'"

The amendment was lost.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move—

'For the portion beginning with "may make such alterations" and ending with "as it or he may deem fit", substitute the words "may, after giving notice to the trustee in the prescribed manner and after considering his representations, if any, make such alterations, omissions or additions in the budget as the Area Committee or the Commissioner may deem fit".'

In the clause as it stands, the Area Committee or the Commissioner may make some alterations. It may appear that he may make such alterations without giving an opportunity to the trustee concerned. That is why we propose to make a provision in this amendment to give notice to the trustee in the prescribed manner, invite his objections and consider them before the Commissioner thinks of making any alterations."

The amendment was put and carried.

MR. SPEAKER:—"Clause 75, as amended, is before the House for consideration."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, I feel that one or two points arising from the discussion should be made clear. There was a suggestion made on behalf of the Government that a trustee, hereditary or non-hereditary, will take the initiative in the matter of utilising the surplus. I want, here and now, to know whether there is any trustee who will go against the instructions given by the Commissioner? No. Government give instructions even when there is no provision for doing so. Therefore, the Commissioner will give instructions. I may tell you that when the question as regards the budget comes, the Commissioner will say to the trustee: 'You have got the budget. You do not overestimate on some item.' Suppose the surplus is increased. Who is the trustee that has the initiative in respect of utilising it? Even if the Commissioner is not interested, he is there sitting on top with all the powers of control and dismissal of the trustee. In such cases no trustee can say anything on his own initiative. If the Commissioner, as very often happens, communicates his wishes in regard to the surplus orally, the trustee dare not disobey it. Therefore the plea that the safeguards are there and that the initiative is with the trustee is pure make-believe. In cases like these you cannot say that the trustee has the initiative. Again, suppose the trustee says that he will keep the surplus with him and it goes on accumulating. The amount to be spent under clause 32 is limited. The trustee refuses to make proposals for utilising the surplus. He does not like the property or its income being utilised for other than religious purposes. Will he be blamed for it or not? I believe, Sir, one charge against him for dismissal will be that he went on accumulating the surplus for purposes mentioned in Clause 75. That will be the first charge against him. Therefore you cannot say that the safeguards are sufficient. It is no use making counter-arguments of some kind, in respect of these matters. You must deeply consider these things. Under the Cypres doctrine you have provided for utilisation of the surplus for certain purposes. If a man sincerely believes that temple money must be used for temple purposes only and refuses to make proposals for the utilisation of surplus for other than religious purposes, will you deal with him lightly? Will you leave him alone? The Government will say: 'You are not making proposals as regards the surplus funds' and no other charge would be needed for his removal from that office. You may now say that the Government will be generous and that no Commissioner will ever remove him from service for that reason. But I submit that these things are certain to happen. I make this prophecy today. I have experience in these matters. You will then see that what I said proved correct and that you were wrong."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"I am really afraid that what my hon. Friend says may be correct. There is no provision in the Bill to deal with a trustee who refuses to devote the surplus in the manner provided. If what he says is true, we should have a provision to compel a trustee to use the surplus. Sir, there is a temple in this State with a surplus of Rs. 8,00,000 and the men in charge have allowed it to remain idle. The Chairman of the Endowments Board has no power to compel the trustee to utilise that idle money. A provision to compel such trustees seems really necessary. It will be a national sin to let such large sums remain idle.

"Then, Sir, hon. Mr. Bhashyam was saying that the trustee is a creature of the Government. With the Commissioner sitting over him, which trustee, he asked, would disobey the instructions issued by the commissioner. But I may point out to my hon. Friend that there are nine objects mentioned in clause 64 (1), such as the propagation of the religious tenets of the institution, etc., I want to know how is the commissioner more interested in these things than in the welfare of the institution. Sir, there will be surplus in the institution for any of the above only if the institution itself survives and thrives. Unless the institution is kept in proper order and continues to attract pilgrims, it will not survive for any purpose. So I want to know how the Area Committee or the Commissioner would be more interested in the Cypres doctrine than in the proper maintenance of the institution concerned? This, Sir, is beyond my comprehension. The authority concerned will certainly be anxious to maintain the good name of the institution in order that the people may continue to have their faith in it. There is no meaning in entertaining suspicions of this kind."

Clause 75, as amended, was put and carried.

Clause 76.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'That clause 76 do stand part of the Bill.'

Sub-clause (4).

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I move—

'For the existing sub-clause (4), substitute the following:—

"The audit shall be made by a registered auditor, who shall be deemed to be a public servant within the meaning of section 21 of the Indian Penal Code."

Sir, the need for my amendment arises from the need for having a common type of auditor for both purposes. Whether a religious institution has an income of Rs. 1,000 or more than Rs. 1,000, the principle involved is the same. The audit must be conducted by auditors who are registered auditors. This alone would ensure the confidence of the public."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"I beg to second the amendment, for this excellent reason. In the case of audit by subordinates of the Commissioner, the difficulty would arise this way. Supposing the Commissioner issues an unlawful order and it is complied with by the trustee and expenditure is incurred, naturally this auditor who is subordinate to the Commissioner cannot be expected to deal with it suitably. But if the auditor is an independent person, he will say boldly that this expenditure is not authorized by the statute and bring to light this irregularity of the Commissioner. Therefore we should have a registered public auditor well trained in accounts of companies, co-operative societies and the like.

"Sir, I have another argument also in support of this motion. We have in our midst many public auditors. In a matter of this kind where temple funds are involved, many of them would be prepared to make the audit without charging anything. I promise this on behalf of the generous-minded auditors. Very often, Sir, on behalf of the Advocates' Association and other public bodies we approach them for their services and they readily agree to give them free. What is happening today is that in these cases where we appoint our own auditors they charge the regular fees. I believe that there is even a rule that such fees might be paid. When we originally started the co-operative societies, these auditors gave their services free, though now they charge some two and a half per cent or so. If we can get the services of auditors free at least in the case of temples whose income is very little that will be an advantage. At the same time if public auditors are appointed, the commissioner will be rid of the suspicion that he has made any unauthorized expenditure."

[11th December 1950]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, for the very reason that we want to ensure confidence in the public, it is certainly necessary that the audit should be done by public auditors and not by private auditors.

"According to this amendment of Sri Viswanatham, the registered auditor who has passed the examination will be a private auditor. The difference between a public auditor and a private auditor is this: A private auditor has not the sanction behind him to ask the trustee, 'why did you make this expenditure?' If a voucher is produced before him and he finds the necessary entry in the register, he gives a tick mark and says or certifies that everything has been explained. That will not be the case in the case of a public auditor or a local fund auditor. He will ask the party concerned, 'Where is the sanction for this expenditure?' If a voucher is produced, he will say: 'Where is the Government order for it?' Or he will ask for the resolution of the trustees. He will have the power to ask for these. But in the case of a private auditor, he will have no sanction behind him. Before 1946, private auditors were allowed to audit the accounts. Then a non-official committee was appointed under the chairmanship of justice Venkataramana Rao to examine the working of the Hindu Religious Endowments Act. This is what they say about this audit—

'The system of audit now obtaining is to have audit of the institutions done by private auditors, no doubt approved by the Government. But it has proved extremely unsatisfactory. The defects of the system are many. In the first place, there is no effective control over such an audit and a prompt audit is not ensured at all. Having regard to the number of institutions, private audit is not readily available; for most of the auditors have other work besides the audit of temples. There is no uniformity and standardization in the method of audit. . . . After a careful consideration, we have come to the conclusion that the present system of audit must be replaced by a departmental audit such as that now obtaining in the Co-operative Department.' (Page 27 of the report.)

The conditions that existed when registered auditors were auditing the accounts of the temples have been described in the report of that non-official committee. Sri K. R. Karanth spoke about the Japa mala. How could the case of the Japa mala have come to the notice of the Board unless there was an audit objection and explanation was called for regarding it? The official auditor could ask the trustee for explanation and authority for the expenditure; a private auditor appointed by the trustee cannot do it. He has no sanction behind him. Therefore, in order that public confidence may be restored, the audit must be done as provided in the present clause."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, it is rather unfortunate that the Hon. Mr. Madhava Menon's views always seem to differ from mine. He takes a registered auditor to be a private auditor. It is true that he is a private auditor in the sense that he is not appointed by the Government. He is not a Government servant. But what is the reflection upon the registered auditors? It is nothing but damning the whole class of registered auditors."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"They have no sanction behind them."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"The registered auditors have the necessary diploma and they have the same authority and the right to call for the papers as an auditor appointed by the Government. I have also got some experience of auditors not merely municipal auditing but also company auditing and auditing of private registered associations. It is nowhere said that the registered auditor cannot ask for explanations. What do the biggest auditors, even do, when a voucher is produced? If there is nothing suspicious on the face of the voucher, they have got to pass it. That is how sometimes fraud also is committed. Whether he is a registered auditor, appointed or elected by the trustees or whether he is an auditor with supreme qualifications appointed in the prescribed manner by the Government under this Act, frauds are always bound to happen, but they will be very few. After all, a registered auditor, notwithstanding what my Hon. Friend says, has got all the powers of an auditor appointed by the Government. Why should the Government take upon themselves the task of appointing auditors for 30,000 institutions? Then, what is the 'prescribed manner'? Why not leave a little power to the people in the locality to appoint the auditors? After all they are not going to appoint unauthorized men to look into the accounts. The registered auditors have got a code of ethics, rules and honour. They have passed high examinations. Then it is not as if the thing stops there. The Government and the Commissioner can look into the audit report and see whether the audit is done properly and whether the objections have been raised properly or not. Whether it is the auditor appointed by the Government or appointed by the trustee, the position is the same. Only in a rare case, the trustee who is managing the institution will have a dog's chance of giving the audit work to a person who is interested in the institution and living in the area where the institution is situated, whereas, if the clause is left as it is, the whole audit will be concentrated unnecessarily and the Government will be burdened and over-burdened with the distribution of patronage. That is all the difference between my proposal and the appointment of auditors in the prescribed manner. The Hon. Minister need not have raised this argument. He might have simply said that he had come to one conclusion and that he would not accept what I said. That would have been quite all right instead of making a distinction which was really not necessary. The arguments do not hold good. He has conceded in principle what I said with only one mistake, namely, that the registered auditor has no sanction. That is a mistake, because the moment he is appointed as an auditor he has got the sanction, particularly when he is appointed under the Act. He has got all the powers to call for the documents. Clause 78 gives him that power. Even without clause 78, the very fact that he is appointed as an auditor gives him certain rights. Auditors have got certain well-defined rights and duties. Therefore, the fears expressed by the Hon. Minister are not well-founded. Instead of making a distinction between temples having an income of Rs. 1,000 and more and other temples, the Hon. Minister may accept the suggestion to give the trustees some power. He has removed from them the power of fixing the budget and the dittam; let them at least have the power of appointing auditors from men belonging to their own places."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, my hon. Friend did not hear what I was saying. This system of audit was in vogue from 1926 to 1946 and a non-official committee presided over by a High Court Judge found that the whole thing was most unsatisfactory and ought to be changed. This system has been tried and found wanting and that is why it has been changed."

The amendment of Sri T. Viswanatham was put and lost.

Clause 76 was put and carried.

MR. SPEAKER:—"There are eight clauses in the Bill which have not got any amendments. This is the fifth clause."

∴ Clauses 77, 78 and 79 were put and carried.

Clause 80.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'That clause 80 do stand part of the Bill.'"

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I move the following amendment:—

'Delete the clause.'

The clause reads—

"80. The provisions of this Chapter shall apply to every religious institution, notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any scheme settled or deemed to be settled under this Act."

This relates to budgets and accounts. There may be schemes framed under clause 63 and finalized by the court under clause 67. Suppose in the schemes finalized by the High Court there is something to the contrary. In clause 67 they give power to the High Court to finalize a scheme, but in clause 68 they immediately say that notwithstanding anything contained in the scheme they would notify the temple. Then they say that notwithstanding anything contained in clause 67, the Commissioner can, under clause 75, alter the budget. The scheme may have fixed different scales of expenditure, arrangements for the repair and renovation of the temple, arrangements for the discharge of the liabilities of the temple, but notwithstanding all this, under clause 75, the Commissioner can make whatever alterations he likes. It is very inconsistent and very wrong always to say that whatever may have been done by the High Court they would upset the whole arrangement. I submit that this clause should be deleted. The Government would not suffer anything by this. When there is a good scheme finalized by the High Court, then only will it be in operation. The Government would not lose anything by deleting clause 80, while on the other hand if they have this clause in the Bill they would be bringing the High Court into contempt."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, I want to place these facts for the consideration of the Government. Suppose a scheme settled by the High Court provided for the budget being submitted to the court for being looked into by the court itself and for audit and so on. The court may come to the conclusion that the budget is alright, but the Commissioner may come to the conclusion that the budget is wrong. Why should the Commissioner have a finger in the pie even in schemes framed by the High Court? The Government seem to say that the High Court may do anything but they are the masters and therefore they want to have this power. I think it will be another case of injustice if not insult to the court. The Government as a responsible Government ought not to interfere with the authority of the courts. They must respect it and pay due regard to it. They should not every now and then say, 'Notwithstanding anything done by the court, we will do this'. They will be setting a bad example for other people. Then refractory persons may say, when a decree is passed against them that they would not give possession and obey the decree of the court."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, the whole of this chapter deals with the maintenance of accounts, the audit of accounts of religious institutions and the recoveries of moneys lost owing to mismanagement. Whether it is under a scheme framed already or not, these things are necessary for every institution and the Commissioner should be informed of these. Sri Bhashyam envisages a case where a scheme has been framed by the court. The court says that the accounts must be audited. By whom must the accounts be audited? We say that the accounts must be audited by auditors appointed in the prescribed manner. The budget is framed. It is sent to the court. The court does not scrutinise it. There must be some officer to scrutinise it. Suppose there is some difference of opinion there and the court is not accepting the budget. If a very clever and able lawyer like Sri Bhashyam is able to convince the court that there is a mistake somewhere, why not the Commissioner also be allowed to correct the mistakes if any? Sir, Sri Viswanatham would not mistake me if I say that it is very unfair on his part to suggest that it is contempt of court here. Half a dozen times my hon. Friend has been saying that this is contempt of the High Court. Sir, I should say that it is they who have absolute contempt for the High Court and they want to put it in the minds of the other people. There is absolutely no question of any contempt of the High Court when we say what kind of auditors will have to audit the accounts. If a trustee has prepared a budget and sent it to court, the budget will have to be scrutinised. It is not with the idea of doing anything behind the court or over the court. It is imagination running riot and it is done with the particular purpose of creating a prejudice in other people."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I am very sorry that the Hon. Minister has worked himself into a fury against me. (Interruption.) He says I have insinuated. Have I insinuated, Sir? Take the clause as it is. I pointed out three instances. I did not simply put forward a blind proposition that it is contempt of the court. I said that under clause 67 you have given power to the court to modify or confirm any scheme; immediately after that, under clause 68 Government say, 'notwithstanding a scheme settled' the Commissioner may notify the institution. Is that not contempt? Again in clause 75, Government say that the Commissioner shall have power to modify or alter the budget and immediately thereafter in clause 80 Government say again 'notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any scheme settled' the provisions of the chapter shall apply to every institution. What are the provisions in the chapter; they say that the Commissioner can interfere with the budget portion of the scheme and the arrangement portion of the scheme. Therefore, I said that Government vest power in the High Court in two places, and immediately thereafter Government say that notwithstanding the court schemes, the Commissioner has got the right to alter them. It was the head and front of my offence that I pointed out these things, and the Hon. Minister is very angry that I said, it amounted to contempt of court. It may not be 'contempt of court' under the Contempt of Courts Act, Sir, I agree; but certainly it is a thing for which I could not find an immediate expression. You give power to the court is one clause and in the next clause Government say that notwithstanding that, the Commissioner shall have such and such power. What else does it mean, I ask. I agree to withdraw the words 'contempt of court' but if the Hon. Minister himself has got to describe it, he will have to find, I am sure, a harsher word and a stronger word, Sir."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

"That clause 80 be deleted."

The amendment was lost.

JANAB MAHIN SCHAMNAD:—"Sir, my amendment to clause 80 is as follows:—

"Add the following proviso to clause 80:—

"Provided that, if the lawful and ancient rights of the community or group of persons to whom a religious institution belongs are denied or suppressed, any member of that community or group shall be entitled to file a suit in court to establish such rights on behalf of the community or group."

Sir, at the time of checking the accounts or auditing the accounts, or passing the budget, it is likely to be found that some of the lawful or ancient rights are denied or suppressed. It is necessary that the group of persons who are affected should be entitled to file a suit in any court to establish their rights for the benefit of the community."

MR. SPEAKER:—"For want of a seconder, the amendment falls through."

Clause 80 was put and carried.

Clause 81.

Sub-clause (1).

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

"That clause 81 do stand part of the Bill."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I find that Mr. Bhashyam also has given an amendment as an alternative to my amendment. I think he will move his amendment if my amendment is not accepted. My amendment is this—

"In sub-clause (1), line 4, for the word "five", substitute the words "one and a half"."

I have seen, Sir, from the accounts of the Board that the contributions which they are collecting at present amount to about Rs. 8 lakhs. I find they have got a surplus, because they are not able probably to see how it can be utilized. I do not want so much money to be taken from these institutions. Experience shows that the Board has got surplus funds and that fact itself is proof to show that so much is not needed by the Board and it need not be taken from the institutions. Then, why increase the percentage here, I want to know. What is the object? Then again, judged by the figures of the surplus already with the Board, 5 per cent is somewhat excessive. I submit it may be reduced to $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. I have calculated on the basis of the expenditure that $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent would be quite enough. After all, the expenditure is only in connexion with the pay of the Commissioner, the Deputy Commissioners, the Assistant Commissioners and their staff and their travelling allowance. More than $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent will be quite unnecessary as shown by experience. If the amount collected at $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent is found to be not enough, the Government may come forward later on and enhance the percentage."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"I second the amendment."

11th December 1950]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I cannot accept the amendment. What we have provided in the Bill is only the maximum. Clause 81 (1) says—

So that, it is open to the Government to charge $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent or even 1 per cent or 2 per cent. It all depends on the necessity and on the requirements of the department. So, we have put in here only the maximum of 5 per cent, and it shall not be more than that. I am sorry, Sir, I cannot accept the amendment."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I want to say that the maximum has got a very bad tendency of becoming a normal feature in course of time. That is the trouble; that is why I say you accept a smaller amount now, and if it is not found to be adequate or sufficient, then you can come to the Legislature and also tell us what is happening. The Legislature will then have the right to review the working of the Act and see how much is really needed. There is no use in the first instance itself taking 5 per cent and then seeing to it that we do not have an opportunity of knowing how the administration is being run."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

"In sub-clause (1), line 4, for the word "five", substitute the words "one and a half"."

The amendment was lost.

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, my amendment is—"For the words "five per centum", substitute the words "three per centum"."

It is a little more reasonable from the Government point of view than Mr. Viswanatham's amendment, and I hope it will not meet with a similar fate. I want to see, Sir, that the maximum rate is not fixed at more than 3 per cent. Small temples make contributions and I know that in some cases they have found it very difficult to pay, because they are not able to meet even their daily expenditure. Very often even for paying their present contribution they have to sell temple property—I am glad they have not come yet to the selling of jewels though we do not know what will happen hereafter if a higher percentage is insisted on. That is why I want the contribution to be as small as possible. I do not want the idea to go about that the Government want to pay their officers and therefore they want 5 per cent. Let us look at the figures. I have the latest report with me, for 1949. It is stated there—

"At the beginning of the fasli, the total arrear contribution to be collected was Rs. 4,54,796. Adding to the said sum, Rs. 9,63,830 claimed as contribution during the fasli, the total demand for fasli 1358 amounted to Rs. 14,18,627. As against this sum of Rs. 14 lakhs and odd, a sum of Rs. 8,51,641 was collected during the fasli."

[Sri K. Bhashyam] [11th December 1950]

'Deducting the collections of Rs. 8,51,641 and a further sum of Rs. 13,299 representing the amounts of demands written off, the balance pending recovery at the end of the fasli was Rs. 5,53,686.' This gives you an idea of what the present position is. They really issued demands for a total of Rs. 14 lakhs, but they were not able to collect more than Rs. 8 lakhs. Why? Because the temples could not pay; and they cannot pay it without interfering with the worship in the temple. The Board do not want to interfere with regular worship, and to that extent they are good and they are pious. If they are not able to collect more than half of what is due, does it not mean that the temples are not able to bear this burden? It may be that you are slack in your collections, but why are you slack? That is because they cannot pay and you want to show some kindness to them. After all, Sir, I know the Board has been very strict and has been collecting to the last pie because I know they have to depend only on this money. I may tell you, Sir, a small story. You know there is the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. There are peons employed by the Society for the purpose of detecting cruelties to animals. You know they are paid out of what? Out of the fines collected from such offences. Therefore, the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals have to find the funds for paying their own people. What happens, therefore, is that they catch a few people, put them up before the court for the purpose of getting some money. That happens, as we all know. What I really want to point out is—I am not saying anything wrong about the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals—it is human nature. When you find that the Board has to live on the collections made, naturally you have to raise the maximum. That is why, Sir, I want to see that the maximum is not more than 3 per cent. If it is really going to be more costly than that, what is the justification for this wretched Bill. I want to know? If you cannot manage these things within the money you get, why should the contributions from the temples be increased? On the other hand, if you want to see that the temples are not mismanaged, you should take from them the lowest amount possible. This 3 per cent is very reasonable. Besides, they have to pay also $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent as audit fees, and that comes to a total of $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. Then the Commissioner goes to the temple or other dignitaries go there, and temple mariyathais have to be shown to them, and all these things taken together, they have already got to spend much; and even temples with Rs. 1,000 income have to pay. So, on this basis, the amount to be collected will be enormous. From that point of view—and you have, I think, about 36,000 temples—a lower percentage is quite enough. And if later on you find it insufficient, you may come before the Legislature and increase the percentage. I would rather start with a small figure and go up to the higher and won't like to give room for people to say that the Commissioner and his subordinates are making their journeys to and fro as costly as possible and thereby the expenditure is going up. If you want really to enforce economy in the department, you must start with a less percentage. I also want to point out that so far as the present figures go, they have got about Rs. 11 lakhs put by as a sort of saving during these years. Why should this Rs. 11 lakhs be there? You are not going to apply the cypres doctrine here and you are not going to distribute it back to the temples from whom you took it. At least if you promise me now that at the end of the year if there is a surplus left over, you will distribute it among the temples, I shall be most delighted. Further, all these contributions go to the general coffers. Why? Where is it said that there should be a separate fund for this purpose? There is nothing said about it. If you said like that, it would come within the Constitution, because the Constitution provides that no fund should be set apart from the benefit of any community. It is a very clever way of doing things; I am myself a lawyer and therefore I can easily appreciate the point. But you have still kept the sting there for 'services rendered', as if it is a question of master and servant, and as if Government are willing to do service to these temples. It is really not correct to sell your service; and if you want to sell your service, by all means do so for 3 per cent and not for 5 per cent. Therefore, Sir, I move my amendment."

Sri T. VISWANATHAM:—Sir, in seconding this amendment, I would like to ask a few questions if the Hon. Minister has got the information. What is the staff he envisages for this purpose and how many Assistant and Deputy Commissioners he is going to appoint? Has he any idea of the clerical establishment and has he got any idea of the expenditure to be incurred? The Bill has been before the Secretariat for long and surely they must have by now worked out some tentative proposals in this regard. I want to have, if possible, those figures. Even, as it is, Sir, you know in the original Act it was only $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent and then this was raised to 3 per cent only in 1944 or somewhere during the Advisers' regime, thinking that $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent was not enough. What has happened? With this 3 per cent there is actually a surplus. That is why I moved an amendment to reduce it to $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, because if the $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent contribution is collected properly and applied, it will set a limit for expenditure, as Mr. Bhashyam has said, which Government can incur upon their establishment and officers in connexion with superintendence and management of the temples. Supposing we put in the contribution as not exceeding 10 per cent, it will have a most reckless reaction upon the spending of money. Because, when money comes and flows into the coffers, not Rs. 7 or 8 lakhs, but Rs. 15 or 20 lakhs, they will get a number of petitions for the appointment of extra staff and immediately they will have to appoint more Assistant Commissioners and then the need for more Deputy Commissioners will arise and there will also be need for extra travelling allowance for these people. So, expenditure will multiply and there will be a tendency to increase expenditure if you put not exceeding 10 per cent and so they have put it at 5 per cent. I submit that even this 5 per cent will be too much. So, I want to revert to the original percentage of 3 and as Mr. Bhashyam suggested, he would put it at 3 per cent because that is the existing rate. I think it should be enough unless the Government have got figures to show that this 3 per cent is inadequate."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I need not add anything more to what I have said already in reply to the other amendment of hon. Mr. Viswanatham for reducing the contribution to 1½ per cent. As I have said this 5 per cent is only the maximum and it is open to the Government to have it at any figure up to the 5 per cent and so there is no necessity to limit it to 3 per cent. I have not got figures worked out and I do not think we have worked out as to how many Assistant Commissioners or Deputy Commissioners are going to be appointed. Moreover, Sir, the Constitution prevents us from using the money for purposes other than those connected with the institutions. According to sub-clause (4), clause 62 of the original Bill all sums paid under sub-sections (1) and (2) shall form part of the revenues of the State and shall be utilized for the payment of salaries, allowances, pensions and other beneficial remuneration of the Commissioner, Deputy Commissioner, etc. Now that has altogether been omitted. So, this amount cannot form part of the general revenues of the State and cannot form part of a consolidated fund, but it is more or less like a licence fee collected from temples and spent for the purposes of the temples. Mr. Bhashyam wants to know if there is any surplus in the contribution, why should you not distribute it among the temples. If you fix it at 1½ or 2 per cent there cannot be a surplus and if there is a surplus the Commissioner will reduce it and if there is no surplus he cannot do anything. So, there is no particular purpose in the Commissioner amassing a surplus out of this amount."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"I am sorry, Sir, that my plea has been of no avail. I find that my figures are incorrect. After thirty years of administration, not of all the temples, but only those taken over by them, the Board has constituted a reserve of Rs. 21,53,310 at the rate of 3 per cent, and in spite of the fact they are able to collect only half the amount, there is yet a surplus every year. Now, you are going to take in more temples and there will certainly be more revenue. Therefore, what is the purpose in putting in 5 per cent and not 3 per cent. I have taken the figures from the Administration Report which I have in my hands and I rely upon it for all these figures. Therefore, Sir, 5 per cent is wholly unjustified and I think 3 per cent should be more than enough. Of course, if the Government feel that at a later stage more is necessary, they can take it later on by bringing in a small amendment and pass it with the majority they have."

11th December 1950]

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

'In sub-clause (1), for the words "five per centum", substitute the words "three per centum".'

The amendment was lost.

Sub-clause (2).

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"I move the following amendment standing in my name, namely:—

'Delete the sub-clause.'

"Sir, for the simple reason that the Government are taking this extraordinary amount of contribution and are accumulating a surplus, I think, they must be able to bear the expenses of audit and need not again ask for any further amount as audit fees from the institutions."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"I second the amendment, Sir. One argument is enough to show that 3 per cent contribution is enough i.e., 1½ per cent for audit and the other 1½ per cent for other purposes. So far as audit fees are concerned, I find from the Administration Report of the Board for the year 1949 the following:—

'During the fasli under report, 4,525 demands were issued claiming a sum of Rs. 3,99,006-4-1 as and for audit cost payable to the Board. Adding to this the sum of Rs. 1,95,484-10-0 being the total arrear demand under audit cost at the beginning of the fasli, the total demand for the fasli under report amounted to Rs. 5,94,490-11-1.'

Let me tell you, Sir, that this refers not to all temples, but only to those taken over by the Board. So, Sir, I ask, is it really necessary to charge audit fees from these institutions at the rate of 1½ per cent, especially when you have raised the contribution from 3 to 5 per cent. At any rate, the trustee is not going to have his own auditor. So, Sir, so far as audit fees are concerned, you may omit it altogether and the Government may be generous enough to bear it themselves out of the amount of contribution."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, under the existing Act, 1½ per cent is the audit fee. I am sure neither the Commissioner nor the Government will fix any different rates for contribution and audit fees. If there is a surplus, they will reduce the audit fee and if the general contribution is less, they will charge audit fees. In both these cases, only the maximum has been fixed and not the minimum. So, Sir, I cannot accept the amendment."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

'Delete sub-clause (2) of clause 81.'

The amendment was lost.

[11th December 1950]

Sub-clause (4):

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I move the following amendment standing in my name, namely:—

'In sub-clause (4), delete the words "the expenses of Area Committees and".'

"Sir, my idea in moving the amendment is that the Government need not be burdened with the expenses of the Area Committees also. As the Hon. Minister has just now said, the contribution will not form part of the revenues of the State. It is nowhere said where the amount of contribution will be deposited and whether it is going to form a separate fund unconnected with the provincial revenues. If the contributions do not form part of the revenues of the province, I do not know how under sub-clause (4) Government shall pay the salaries, etc., of the Commissioner, Deputy Commissioner; etc. I do not know from what other fund they will pay the salaries. So, readjustment of the language of the clause must be made. I do not know what the Government have in their view. If there is an excess in their hands, it must be deposited somewhere. It is not said anywhere that it ought not to be treated as a separate fund. After all, all these people are servants of the Government. They are not servants of the trustees or Area Committees. Since the Deputy Commissioners and Assistant Commissioners are Government servants the Government must pay them. So necessarily the contribution must form part of the revenues of the Government. Assuming that the contributions do not form part of the revenues of the Government, the Hon. Minister should look into the financial aspect of the matter before he comes to the House for the third reading.

"Now, Sir, incidentally about the amendment itself, the expenses of Area Committees also are to be met by the Government. Why, I cannot understand. Although they may be appointees of the Government, they do not owe their position to the Government and they are not servants of the Government. So, the expenses of the Area Committees need not be paid by the Government. The Area Committees necessarily have some temples under their jurisdiction and whatever legitimate expenses are prescribed to be paid to them by the Government under statutory rules, will have to be paid by that area. I do not see any reason why their expenses should be met from Government revenues. The very existence of the words in the clause will increase the demands of the Government by 3 or 5 or even 10 per cent. Then the trustees also are gentlemen to be appointed by the Government just like the Area Committees and then the demand for the contribution will also increase. Therefore, Sir, the items of expenditure which the Government have to incur from this contribution will have to be curtailed from time to time and that is why we want to do it even now by cutting out the expenses of the Area Committees."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"In supporting the amendment, I would like to say this, Sir. The persons to be appointed to these Area Committees are going to be appointed by the Government, it may be for a district or part of a district. Of course their expenses also have to be met. If they are to be separate from the Government, they may meet their expenses out of their pocket. Evidently, the Government want to make provision for the travelling expenses of the members of the Area Committees. Of course, I can understand the reason for it, because it will stimulate attendance at meetings for one thing and on the other it will also stimulate meetings more often than necessary. In all these matters, if they are public-spirited persons, they will meet their expenses out of their pocket. Suppose a man is appointed as a trustee of a temple in Tanjore and he lives in Tiruchirappalli, he cannot come very often unless his expenses are met. However, Sir, if you start with payment of travelling expenses to honorary officers like this, there will be no limit. I think, honorary officers must be made really honorary in all senses and not only in one sense. That is my submission, Sir."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, in the original Bill, there was no Area Committee and since the House wanted that Area Committees should be appointed, the Select Committee made provision for the Area Committees. So, when you make provision for Area Committees, you must also contemplate payment of travelling allowances, etc., to the members of the committee. But, what exactly are the expenses of the Area Committees, we cannot say. When once you want to have Area Committees, whether elected or otherwise—even if, they are elected members they must have an office—they must have an establishment and their expenses have to be met. Even if they are elected members, you cannot expect them to meet the expenses out of their pocket. You have therefore to anticipate that when once the Area Committees are there, their expenses also have to be met."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, what I suggest is, these Area Committees are spread over the entire province, and the temples which are within their jurisdiction will necessarily have to bear their expenses under certain prescribed rules. Whether it is travelling or sitting allowance or some other allowance, I hope the Government will make rules. It is good they have asked for 5 per cent without having even a temporary schedule of the establishment. The Hon. Minister says he has not yet worked out the figures. Has he worked out figures of the possible number of members of the Area Committees and what distances they will have to travel? No one knows about the strength of the Area Committees. Whatever it is, Sir, I submit that it is but reasonable that temples over which the Area Committees have jurisdiction will have to foot the bill if they want the luxury of these appointed Area Committees. If it is a question of elected Area Committees, the situation would have been quite different. Now they are giving them the luxury of Area Committees and people will certainly be willing to be members of the Area Committees, because they will have the prospect of having so many temples under their management for the mere asking of it and they will jump at it. Therefore, the temples concerned must meet their expenditure.

"It is the temple that must meet the expenditure and not this fund. There is another thing and that is, if you begin meeting the expenditure for this thing, the demand for maximum contribution under sub-clause (1) will remain or it will even show a tendency to increase."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I must admit I have not been able to follow my hon. Friend. The contribution is to be paid by the temples and it is from that that this expenditure is to be met. If my hon. Friend suggests that the expenses of the Committee must come from the temples within that area, that is a thing which has to be examined. But now, Sir, the general contribution is to be collected from the temples and if any expenses are there for the Committee, it has to be met from that collection."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

'In sub-clause (4) of clause 81, delete the words—

"the expenses of Area Committees and."'"

The amendment was lost.

New sub-clause (5).

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move the following as new sub-clause (5):—

(5) All the dues derivable from lands shall be collected as if they were land revenue, on a petition before the Revenue Divisional Officer by the party entitled to the dues."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Dues to the Board?"

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—"To the temple; the Board does not have any dues apart from the temples and the doubt need not have arisen in the mind of the Hon. Minister.

"This will facilitate the collection of arrears. To-day, Sir, it is common knowledge that in several temples arrears by way of paddy due as half share of the land cultivated or muktha as it is called or cash revenues are delayed and they are not paid promptly and sufficient guarantee not having been taken by the trustees, they fall into arrears with the result that the temple authorities are obliged to go to the civil courts for recovering them. This takes a long time and the worshippers suffer on account of such delays. The amendment simply suggests that all such arrears shall be collected as arrears of land revenue. Instead of entrusting the Tahsildar with the matter as it is on a footing with arrears of land revenue, I suggest that a petition may be filed before a Revenue Divisional Officer so that he may, after taking the written statements of the parties concerned as to what the terms of the lease were, what was the actual due and what are the conditions under which such dues were arranged to be paid, whether the payment is to be made in kind or in cash, if it is in kind, the value will have to be ascertained, after taking the statement and if it is in kind after assessing the value of the amount to be paid with reference to the quality of the paddy that was agreed upon, he will hold an enquiry and a decree will be given by him and that decree can be put into execution by the Revenue authorities as if it were an arrear of revenue. No appeal is provided against such a decree so that the disposal of the application might not be prolonged. If the Government are interested in the collection, there is absolutely no reason why they should not accept my intelligible suggestion."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to second the amendment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I must oppose this amendment. In the first place, I may point out, Sir, I do not want to raise it as a point of order, it does not fit in with the main clause, which deals with the collection of contributions from religious institutions for the maintenance of the Board but this is for the collection of the rent due from the tenant to the temples. I wish to ask, Sir: How can a provision for making collection of rent from the tenants of temple properties fit in with a clause dealing with collection of contributions from the temple for the maintenance of the Board? Secondly, Sir, the religious institutions stand on the footing of landlords in some sense and can the rent due to a landlord be collected as arrears of land revenue; it is very wrong, Sir. It is as much a landlord as any other landlord, and any other landlord, for collecting such things, must go to a court of law. Supposing, Sir, the Government let out a building, can it be said that the rent due from the tenant can be collected as arrears of land revenue? No, Sir; they must have to file a suit as anybody else and recover what is due to them. (Sri V. Raghavayya: 'Very charitable of you'.) My Friend is very much satisfied with the charity I am showing but let me say, Sir, that I have as much consideration for the tenants as for the religious institutions. Further, Sir, there is provision in clause 100, sub-clause (k), enabling the Government to make rules for the proper collection of the income of, and the incurring of expenditure by, religious institutions; we can make rules also for granting leases and other things and it is not right that the religious institutions should be given greater power than any other landlord in the collection of rents. Therefore, Sir, I oppose the amendment."

[11th December 1950]

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I suggested the sub-clause here because there is no provision elsewhere for such collection. When provision is made for the Government to receive their contribution from temples, I thought that clause (5) would fit in properly.

"Another small point which I wish to make out is this, Sir. The opposition of the Government reminds me of a story which is very widely known in the Andhra. There were a couple who never agreed with each other. When the husband invited some friend or relative for dinner at his house, she would refuse to co-operate with the husband and there used to be much trouble, because she used to make bad preparations. Therefore, he tried to devise a way how to solve the difficulty. So, whenever he expected any friends or relatives, he told his wife: Prepare some rice and one chutney and that will do and do not prepare sambhar and other side dishes. That woman, because the husband told her like that, used to prepare a number of dishes and she made very decent feasts. In the same way, here, it looks as though reasonable amendments which help the Government are not accepted and are opposed as though it comes from somebody else who are not interested in the efficient administration of temple affairs. My hon. Friend reminded us and waxed eloquent on the fact that after all, the temple and the Government are in the position of landlords and they should not have any preferential treatment over other landlords. But may I remind him, Sir, that for every amendment proposed by Sri Bhashyam and Sri Viswanatham, the Hon. Minister has been ad nauseum saying that the income of the Government would suffer and this is not the time when law suits can be indulged in. Why, one reason for one and another for another clause? When the master himself is indifferent, why should others bother? I am not pressing my amendment, Sir."

The amendment was, by leave, withdrawn.

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I want this matter to be examined by the Government because I do not feel it received adequate consideration at the Select Committee. The clause reads as follows:—

'In respect of the services rendered by the Government and their officers, every religious institution shall, from the income derived by it, pay to the Government annually such contribution not exceeding five per centum of its income as may be prescribed.'

The point is, what is the nature of this imposition; is it a tax or not? If it is a tax, then under Article 27 of the Constitution, such a thing is not contemplated. The Article says—

'No person shall be compelled to pay any taxes, the proceeds of which are specifically appropriated in payment of expenses for the promotion or maintenance of any particular religion or religious denomination.'

While the Government may use the word 'contribution' and evade the Constitution, all the same it is a tax, a tax on income so to speak. Whether the Government can really levy a tax on income is another question and I am not on it now, Sir. That is another difficulty which will have to be answered. Under clause 81 (1), the Government have undertaken the payment of salaries, allowances and pensions and other remuneration of the Commissioner, Deputy Commissioner, Assistant Commissioner and other officers and servants. Where is the money to come from? It is out of the revenues or the contribution? Under Article 266 (2) of the Constitution, all moneys received by or on behalf of the Government of a State shall be credited to the public account of the State. If this comes under public money, it must be credited to the accounts of the State but, if it is not to come out of the consolidated fund, the Government need not put it into the budget account. If it is to be appropriated to a particular fund, we are not entitled to criticize the administration of religious institutions because it will not form part of the budget and there will be no scrutiny by the House in respect of it; that is one difficulty. If it is said that this is a separate Fund and is to be dealt with separately, then it comes under Article 27 of the Constitution. Looked at from any aspect, there is always this difficulty. There is no doubt that this is for the purpose of protection of the interests of certain religious denominations. Therefore, Sir, viewed from whichever point of view, we are faced with constitutional difficulties. Originally they said that it formed part of the general fund. Now they seek to escape from it by saying that is to be met from a specific fund. If that is so, then, it cannot be brought under the consolidated fund. My submission is the whole clause 81 seems to be unconstitutional. I am placing this view only for their consideration. I know they can have their clause forced through this House by their majority strength. But I am submitting this only as a friendly critic of Government. Let them examine it before the third reading stage. I do not wish to say that my opinion is the last word on the subject. More eminent lawyers are there; they can consult them; they have got their own legal experts in the departments well-versed in legal lore; let Government consult them. Therefore I submit, the position may be examined; it is in a friendly way I put it, and not in a spirit of carping criticism. So, I am not opposing Government in this motion. Let them have it examined by eminent lawyers for getting the matter cleared. I do not want any reply from the Hon. Minister because I am not opposing him. Let him have the point looked into. I do not say my interpretation of the law is final. Because it has to be decided by a judge. In law, nobody not even a judge, can give a final decision. If a judge sits in the morning over a case he may give one decision; if he sits in the afternoon he may give another decision and if he quarrels with his wife at home, he may give a third decision." (Laughter.)

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, we have examined the point. There is nothing wrong in further examining it. There is nothing in an additional examination. Sir, even if it is out of consolidated fund, what does Article 266 (3) say. It says—

[Sri K. Madhava Menon] [11th December 1950]

“(3) No moneys out of the Consolidated Fund of India or the consolidated Fund of a State shall be appropriated except in accordance with law

And that law we are providing now.”

Clause 81 was put and carried.

Clause 82.

MR. SPEAKER:—“The motion is—

That clause 82 do stand part of the Bill.”

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—“Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move—

Omit the words and figures “notwithstanding anything contained in section 91”.

Because those words are superfluous.”

The amendment was put and carried.

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—“Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move—

Add at the end of the clause the words “except where any civil court has in the exercise of its jurisdiction directed the cost to be paid otherwise than out of the funds of the institution”.

Sir, we have seen often on the floor of this House allegations made, that the trustees are wasting the trust moneys by engaging themselves in useless litigation. We know in that way much of the moneys of the trust have gone waste. We also know that on several occasions courts have come to the conclusion and gave the finding that there has been no necessity for a suit, or that the trustee had no reasonable cause to bring the matter before a court of law, and therefore the cost of the suit should not be defrayed from the trust funds but should be recovered from the private purse of the trustee. It may happen on such occasions, on the request of the trustee, Commissioner, the Deputy Commissioner or the Assistant Commissioner, may set aside the order of the court and debit the cost of the suit to the funds of the trust. It is to prevent such a contingency that I want my amendment to be accepted.”

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—“I oppose the amendment.” (Laughter.)

MR. SPEAKER:—“Let the amendment be first seconded and then the hon. Member may oppose the amendment.” (Laughter.)

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—“Sir, now I am tempted to support the motion more strongly, since I see my hon. Friend opposing it. Hon. Mr. Bhashyam has shown the reason for his amendment. Let my friend be not so anxious to oppose the amendment even before it is seconded.

“Sir, under the Civil Procedure Code, there are occasions, when civil courts, in their discretion, order the recovery of costs from somebody else, not necessarily the defendant or the plaintiff as the case may be. Now in the absence of the proposed amendment, we are fettering the discretion of the court in making such cases of recovery. That is why I second this amendment.”

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—“Sir, in opposing this amendment, what I want to say is only this. The Government should not departmentalize temples, having once taken them under their control. Government cannot departmentalize and show at the same time a differential treatment to the expenditure incurred by the trustee of the temples with regard to law suits. Just as there are other departments of the State, so too, hereafter, the temples will form the ecclesiastical department of the Government of Madras. As such, there is absolutely no reason why the expenditure incurred by Government should be debited to temple funds. It would be better if this Government incur such expenditure as they do in the case of other departments from their general revenues. It would be well if that is done instead of mulcting the slender revenues of the temples with this expenditure.”

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—“Sir, I entirely agree with the principle of what hon. Mr. Bhashyam said, and I would have accepted his amendment but for the fact that it has already been provided in the clause itself. I am afraid Mr. Bhashyam did not read the clause properly. It specifically provides for that. I request him to read the concluding portion of the clause 82. The clause says that all costs, charges . . . shall be payable out of the funds of such institution except in cases where a liability to pay the same has been laid on any party or other person personally. So, that provides for the cases anticipated by hon. Mr. Bhashyam. Therefore this amendment is not necessary.”

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—“Mr. Speaker, Sir, it is not a case where we differ. We have seen cases of orders of court being set at naught. Suppose a court finds that there is no sufficient reason for a trustee going to court and it orders the cost of litigation to be recovered from the private purse of the trustee, in such a case, the trustee may approach the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner or the Assistant Commissioner and represent that the amount may be reimbursed from the funds of the institution and the latter may agree to do so. It is to prevent such a contingency that I want the amendment to be accepted. We agree to the principle behind the clause. We want only the position to be made clear by adding the words I suggest. Unless Government wish to stand on prestige, they cannot but agree to my amendment. Therefore I want them to accept my amendment.”

[11th December 1950]

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

'Add at the end of clause 82 the following words "except where any civil court has in the exercise of its jurisdiction, directed the cost to be paid otherwise than out of the funds of the institutions".'

The amendment was lost.

Clause 82 as amended was put and carried.

Clause 83.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'That clause 83 do stand part of the Bill.'

"Mr. Karanth is not there. Mr. Bhashyam will move his amendment to sub-clause (7)."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move—

'Add the following proviso to sub-clause (7):—

"Provided, however, the receiver or person having charge shall be bound to provide funds required for the daily necessary worship in the temple and for the festivals according to custom and the balance that is remaining shall be taken for discharging the duties sought to be done."

Sir, this clause will appeal only to those who have got some interest in temples. There are certain dues to be paid to the Government, and if the temples are not able to pay them, provision is made for appointment of a receiver to take charge of the property, manage the property, and from out of the income of that property pay the dues to the Government by way of contribution. Now, when they take money, they ought not to take the whole of the amount. They must take only the necessary portion of the income, and not that which is not necessary, or the surplus, as it is called. For, I want the daily worship of the temple to be continued, the archanas to be continued, the other daily routine in the temples to be continued. If after making provision for them, there is any surplus, let them take that and appropriate it for the money due to Government. I do not want the dues to be appropriated at the sacrifice of the daily worship and aradhanas in the temple. I am only asking for a small favour. If there is any surplus accumulated, by all means take the dues to the Government from that. Now, in a case which went up from the Calcutta High Court to the Privy Council, where a trustee of an institution had incurred large debts and binding upon the trust, the Privy Council said that they would appoint a receiver to be in possession of the trust property and he would carry on all the various ceremonies connected with the institution, and whatever surplus was left after meeting the expenditure connected with the ceremonies, shall be paid towards the debt. Because, the Privy Council said, they thought the necessities of the temple are supreme, and so, they cannot be interfered with. The surplus, if any, after providing for the ceremonies, may be taken by Government for the moneys due to them. Supposing there is nothing left, in such a case, the arrears will accumulate. Personally I feel the spiritual needs should be first satisfied. Suppose Government wish to appoint a receiver, in that case, the remuneration of the receiver also should be met from the income of the property. Why not he be paid out of the three per cent contribution. It is a case where one should be lenient. The interest of the temple is supreme and not the interest of the Government. Sir, I move my amendment."

RAJA MUTHIAH CHETTIYAR OF CHETTINAD:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, in seconding this amendment, I really want only to reiterate the view I already expressed with regard to the utilization of temple funds for other purposes. I have said already on another occasion when there was an attempt to divert funds for other purposes that the devotees give moneys to be utilized for certain particular purposes. That clause provided for a number of items to which the fund should be diverted. I said that that should be divided into two parts, one relating to the items connected with the temple, and if there is any money left over, that should be utilized only for other purposes. Here, in the present clause, the same principle is involved; the case comes again in a different form. The receiver should take charge of the temple under certain circumstances; it shall be his duty to discharge his duties connected with the temple. Otherwise why should there be a receiver? If he is not to attend to the duties of the temple, why should he be there? The temple could as well be closed and the building auctioned as a stone structure! So, when the whole scheme comes under a receiver, it is his duty to continue the working of the institution in all its glory as before. Therefore I strongly support the amendment with the hope that it would be accepted by Government. If they cannot accept it, at least let them say whether there is any provision in the Bill, which safeguards the continuance of the daily worship of the temples, in spite of the appointment of the receiver."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, in connection with this amendment, I am reminded of a recent case in which a receiver was appointed. He did not know the property of the institution to which he was appointed a receiver. I am keeping his name off from the public eye because matters are still being litigated. I am one of the beneficiaries under that trust. After the receiver was appointed, things went from bad to worse. Though the income of the institution perhaps runs into lakhs of rupees, the receiver is not able to pay even a few hundreds. Every time I meet him he says that his salary has not been paid. Every time a registered notice goes from me, the reply comes that there are no funds and that the money will be paid as soon as funds are available. The money that is due is intended for the performance of a service. The service suffers greatly as a result of the receiver's neglect. I will not say 'neglect'; things have so happened in the course of litigation that the receiver has found himself in a tight hole and he has not been able to pay even a penny from out of the funds of the institution. There was litigation after litigation, one receiver was appointed after another, and meantime the original receiver was restored. Meanwhile somebody who came in possession of the property walked away with thousands of rupees. Looking at this case, I strongly suggest to the Government to devise ways and means to ensure the performance of the services not only in the institution concerned but also in the institution to which this institution is lending support. I trust that the Hon. Minister will give a complete answer to the position I have stated. That is a real position and not an imaginary or fictitious one."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, an individual case where the appointment of a receiver has resulted in a disadvantage should not be a consideration for saying that a receiver should not be appointed at all. I may say that the Raja of Chettinad did not quite follow the purpose of this clause. This does not relate to surplus funds at all."

RAJA MUTHIAH CHETTIYAR OF CHETTINAD:—"I never said that the clause related to surplus funds."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Identical wording exists in the corresponding section of the Act which has been worked for the last twenty-five years. (Sri K. Bhashyam: 'Worked badly.') As far as the Government are concerned, the section has been worked from the very inception of the Act and no difficulty was felt. The contribution payable by a religious institution is assessed and notified to the trustee. After hearing the objection of the trustee, if any, final order about the contribution is passed. If the trustee fails to pay the amount as finally decided, the Collector is authorized to collect the amount as if it were an arrear of land revenue under sub-clauses (3), (4) and (5). In sub-clause (6) it is said—

'Places of worship, including temples and tanks and places where ~~utavams~~ are performed, idols, vahanams, jewels and such vessels and other articles of the religious institution may be necessary in accordance with the usage of the institution for purposes of worship or processions shall not be liable to be proceeded against in pursuance of sub-sections (3), (4) and (5).'

The object of this sub-clause is to see that the performance of the daily ceremonies continues. Instead of selling the corpus of the property, under sub-clause (7) the Collector is empowered to appoint a receiver. As the Raja of Chettinad rightly pointed out, the object of appointing a receiver is to take possession of the property and collect the contribution. It is not said that all the properties shall be put in the possession of the receiver. Provision is made for the performance of the daily ceremonies. Only out of the balance of the funds left after meeting the expenses of the daily ceremonies, the contribution will be recovered. The amendment proposed by Sri K. Bhashyam is not necessary."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"I am really surprised at the stand taken by the Government. Even if such a reasonable amendment, which has also got the support of the Raja of Chettinad, is not accepted, what is the purpose of this discussion?"

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

'Add the following proviso to sub-clause (7):—

'Provided, however, the receiver or person having charge shall be bound to provide funds required for the daily necessary worship in the temple and for the festivals according to custom and the balance that is remaining shall be taken for discharging the duties sought to be done.'

The amendment was lost.

Clause 83 was put and carried.

Clause 84 was put and carried.

Clause 85.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'That clause 85 do stand part of the Bill.'

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I move—

'For sub-clauses (3) (a) and (3) (b), substitute the following sub-clauses:—

"(a) There shall be a Board of Trustees constituted for the devasthanams consisting of five persons appointed by the Government; and any person so appointed shall hold office for a term of five years unless in the meanwhile he is removed or his resignation is accepted by the Government or he otherwise ceases to be a trustee.

(b) The Government shall also appoint a salaried executive officer for the devasthanams, and shall have power to suspend, remove or dismiss him from office."

This amendment is consequent upon the omission of clause 40, and to make it clear that only the Government can suspend, remove or dismiss an executive officer for a devasthanam."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The hon. Member (Sri N. S. Varadachari) can move his amendment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"The amendment stands in the name of Sri K. Varadachari and not Sri N. S. Varadachari."

[11th December 1950]

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Sir, I oppose the amendment. In the Select Committee there was a good deal of discussion in which many Members including Sri R. V. Swaminathan and Sri K. T. Kosarlam took part. There was a very hot discussion as to why the Tirumalai-Tirupathi Devasthanams should be treated differently from the other devasthanams. We, the Members of the Select Committee, thought that there ought not to be any distinction between the Tirumalai-Tirupathi Devasthanams and the other devasthanams with an income of more than Rs. 20,000."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The hon. Member Sri Bhashyam can move his amendment that in sub-clause (3) (a), for the words 'appointed by the Government', substitute the words 'elected in such manner as may be prescribed by Government'."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"Because that is not going to be accepted, I am not interested in moving it. But I am interested in opposing the Government amendment. It is a complete break-away from the decision arrived at by the Select Committee. When the Select Committee wanted that the Tirumalai-Tirupathi Devasthanams should be subjected to the same disabilities as any other devasthanam, the amendment proposes a different treatment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"The amendment is in accordance with the report of the Select Committee. Because we omitted clause 40, I have moved this amendment."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"This amendment goes farther than the change consequent on the omission of clause 40. It says that a trustee shall hold office for five years. The committee never said that. If I remember right, the period of office of a trustee generally is three years and the committee thought that the same term would do to the trustee of the Tirumalai-Tirupathi Devasthanams. The committee only resolved on the Board of Trustees. That the Board shall consist of five persons and that their term shall be five years are matters outside the decision of the committee. As I said, this amendment is a complete breakaway from, and a breach of understanding arrived at in the Select Committee. It should not be accepted at all."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"Sir, I would like to speak on this amendment tomorrow. I have got a lot to say about the Tirumalai-Tirupathi Devasthanams."

THE MADRAS LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Tuesday, the 12th December 1950.

The House met in the Assembly Chamber, Fort St. George, at eleven of the clock, Mr. Speaker (THE HON. SRI J. SIVASHANMUGAM PILLAI) in the Chair.

THE MADRAS HINDU RELIGIOUS AND CHARITABLE ENDOWMENTS BILL, 1949 (L.A. BILL NO. 10 OF 1949)—DISCUSSION—cont.

Clause 85.

Sub-clause B (3) (a).

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"Sir, in the first place, I must point out to the Hon. Speaker that I had given notice of amendments besides hon. Sri K. Varadachari. My amendment is to sub-clause (3) (b) of clause 85. Yesterday, the Hon. Minister said that there was only one amendment in the name of hon. Sri K. Varadachari and that no amendment was standing in my name. You will find from the Proceedings that I am amply justified in making this statement."

MR. SPEAKER:—"If I remember right, I think the hon. Member himself said yesterday that it is not N. S. Varadachari, but it is K. Varadachari."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, there is no harm in my hon. Friend moving the amendment now. He has given notice of an amendment to sub-clause 3 (b). He can move it even now."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"I have given notice of two amendments. The first one was for sub-clause 3 (a). That amendment was given before the Government gave their amendment, and in substance it considerably differs from the Government amendment."

MR. SPEAKER:—"If the hon. Member wants to move his amendment to sub-clause 3 (b), let him move it."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"The Hon. Sri Madhava Menon moved only the Government amendment. I would like to speak on that amendment, because its subject-matter is really different from the amendment which I have given notice of. The Government amendment is this. They have taken off clause 40 from the Bill and have put it down in clause 85."

MR. SPEAKER:—"May I explain the position? Government have moved an amendment for sub-clauses 3 (a) and 3 (b). Sri Varadachari has given notice of an amendment to Government amendment for sub-clause 3 (b). So he can move his amendment now."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"All right, Sir. I move the following amendment standing in my name—

For sub-clause (3) (b) of clause 85, substitute the following:—

"(b) The Government shall also appoint more than one executive officer one of whom will be in charge of the purely religious worship in the devasthanam."

I will explain first of all the reason why I wish to move this amendment and also my reason for not accepting the Government's position in respect of the Board of Trustees, to be appointed by them under their own amendment. I am glad that the Tirupati-Tirumalai Devasthanam are treated separately. They are perhaps the most ancient shrines in South India and they merit separate treatment in the opinion of the Government. But the position has very considerably changed during this year. After the devasthanam estates have been handed over to the Government as a result of the recent notification, the work of the devasthanam is really confined to the area of Tirupati and only to making such provision as is ordinarily done in other temples, the only exception being that they manage certain educational institutions which have been run from out of the funds and such institutions have been run only after the authorization of the Legislature has been got for the purpose.

"Before criticising the Government, let me go into the question as to how the administration of the devasthanam is carried on by the Board of Trustees. For the Act which is called the Tirupati-Tirumalai Devasthanam Act, the people of Tirupati were solely responsible. They agitated for it, they framed the Bill and they brought it before the Legislature when the Congress was not in office. They conducted themselves in such convincing manner that the Legislature passed the Bill and made it into an Act. Afterwards, several years have passed. The administration of the devasthanam is in the hands of the Board of Trustees even now; of course they are not called Board of Trustees but are called Tirupati-Tirumalai Devasthanam Committee. What is the treatment that is given to the devasthanam? In the first Board there was some element of local influence sought to be included in the Board. In the subsequent boards, local element has been altogether excluded. I do not know for what reason it was excluded. The Board usually meets once a month and all the members assemble at Tirupati after the morning train arrives and dispose of their business and return to Madras by the evening train. Or, their meetings are held in the Cosmopolitan Club, Madras. I have never heard of such an arrangement for any devasthanam. What is the interest, and what is the abiding interest which these gentlemen can be expected to show if the affairs of the devasthanam are dismissed so cursorily in short meetings convened not even in the place where excellent accommodation exists for the purpose of holding meetings? But all the same, meetings are held far away in Madras and sometimes in private clubs and residences. This beats everything on record. Do they administer the Srirangam Devasthanam like that? Do they administer the affairs of the Rameswaram Devasthanam like that? Do they exclude all local considerations and local influence prevailing at least on some issues? Would it not be a better arrangement that after the estates have been taken over, the meetings are entirely confined to the place in which they are situated and would it not be better to treat the Tirupati-Tirumalai Devasthanam almost on the same footing as the other devasthanams for which there is an Area Committee or for which there is the Board of Trustees appointed only from persons having interest? Why should the Tirupati-Tirumalai Devasthanam alone be singled out for this kind of treatment? There is considerable feeling in this matter at Tirupati itself. People have begun asking, 'Don't we have abiding interest in the affairs of the devasthanam? Is it that the Government alone are interested in the affairs of the temple and the devasthanam?'

"Sir, in the interests of good administration and for the purpose of exhibiting continuing interest in the administration, if not from day-to-day, at least from month-to-month, the Board of Trustees should certainly be fully representative of all the persons having interest in the devasthanam and should include some people who can at least be in continuous touch with the affairs of the devasthanam in Tirupati itself. If other big shrines in South India are content with an Area Committee or with a Board of Trustees appointed from among the persons having interest, why should the Tirupati Devasthanam alone be singled out for this treatment and specially after all circumstances have changed and after it has been divested of what I may call its immovable properties? Is it fair to insist on this treatment? The new circumstances should be taken into consideration and new arrangements have to be made accordingly. Do these gentlemen know anything about the custom of the place or the manner of worship or the ancient rules governing temple routine? The Tirupati Devasthanam is one of the few devasthanams in South India which are governed by what are called Vyaghanasa Agamas whilst the rest are governed by what are known as Pancharatra Agamas. Vyaghanasam governs only this great temple and, therefore, I submit that those who know something at least of the worship in the place, if not the entire Agamas, those who know something of the routine, those who have been associated with the temple or at least those families who have had something to do with the past glory of the temple should be included in the Board of Trustees. Of course, the Government will straightway answer, 'Even now it is open to them to appoint such persons.' But, Sir, why this treatment in the case of Tirupati alone, I ask, when all other devasthanams similarly situate which have no large estates—now the Tirupati Devasthanam is on a par with them, having been disposed of all the villages—are given local committee. Why should it not be given similar treatment? Why should it be subject to new rules? Why should there be a longer term for these people than for the trustees of other temples or for the members of the Area Committees of other temples? If the Government want to be reasonable, they should be content with a term of three years. The term of five years is too long even for the Government to review and introduce necessary changes from time to time. Now, what is the work of the devasthanam to-day? The work has shrunk a great deal. It has no revenue department hereafter. It has no estate department hereafter. It has only an office which will look after the immediate interests of the devasthanam, that is to say, the management of the devasthanam itself and all the other devasthanams attached to it like the Tiruchanur and Sri Govindarajaswami temple in Tirupati and other small shrines, repairs to which have not been effected for years and years, then guiding the routine of the temple and thirdly the management of a few educational institutions in the place. If the educational institutions in that place can be managed by local people, why should not local people be given an opportunity even to manage these institutions? Sir, one question that is often asked by the people is, 'Tirupati affairs seem to be left to the whole world to decide while people having an abiding interest, while people who are anxious to uphold the honour and dignity and the traditions of the temple are brushed aside in respect of matters concerning the devasthanam.' I do not wish to say anything more on this subject. I only want these facts to be taken note of. My amendment is a substantial one and will help the Government. The Tirupati Devasthanam, as I have said, unlike any other devasthanam, has a peculiar mode of worship and it runs all through the day and sometimes even late into the night. One officer, one executive officer, who is stationed down the Tirupati Hill at the office may not always be able to attend to complaints regarding these matters. But if we have a separate executive officer even on a lower salary for this purpose, he may take note of things from time to time, may find out the lapses and mistakes then and there and correct them. Otherwise, under the present procedure, he has to wait till the complaints reach him. He may not be present at the temple but be away from it when complaints are lodged so that the complainants will have to wait for redress for weeks and months. It is a very convenient arrangement to have two officers, one to look after the secular management and the other to look after the other things like dittam and other religious observances of the temple. From 4 a.m., right up to 12 of the clock in the night, worship goes on. There is only an interval sometimes of one or two hours. It is a very hard job for everyone concerned to do. There must be one officer solely for this purpose. Let the Government have power to appoint two people, one on a higher scale of pay and the other on a lower salary. The lower officer may be made an assistant and to live at the Tirumalai Hills. Sir, all the work connected with the Tirupati Devasthanam is hereafter only on the hills. There is very little that remains to be done down at the Tirupati Town. Excepting decisions on road contracts, excepting decisions that are to be taken in regard to administration of colleges and schools, there are necessarily few decisions left to be taken. The University controls the college and the school is governed by the Code which governs all other schools in Government areas. Now, if this is understood properly, why should not the Government agree to the simple proposal to have one officer on the hill and the other down the hill for general administration? That is all I would say in respect of this matter now and probably I shall have eventually more to submit when the Hon. the Minister has finished his reply to my observations."

[12th December 1950] [Sri N. S. Varadachari]

Sri T. VISWANATHAM :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I have great pleasure in seconding the amendment moved by my hon. Friend, Sri N. S. Varadachari, which in a way, relates to a very abstruse and technical matter. The reason is, for years and years, this temple has been treated as a distinct entity from the category of religious shrines in this State. It has had the good fortune or misfortune of having a separate legislation for itself and it had also, therefore, the misfortune of being treated almost in a separate way. Incidentally, Sir, hon. Sri Varadachari was just good enough to mention how the committee constituted under the existing Act was functioning. I have absolutely no remarks to offer against that committee. But it is a fact that most—at least a good number—of the meetings of the committee are held in the City of Madras on the Mount Road in a social club called the Cosmopolitan Club and naturally, if a person of the type of hon. Sri Varadachari who is very distinctly religious-minded and greatly attached to the particular shrine, not merely because of his residence but also because of the particular religious denomination to which he belongs, feels that the affairs of the institution are not properly attended to and that the attention and regard which are due to them are not paid, there should certainly be a great amount of truth in it. The reason for such a state of affairs is, in my humble opinion, the separate treatment and the exclusively separate attention that is paid to the temple. I have always felt and there is a good number of others who agree with me that the affairs of the Tirupati Devasthanam have been dealt with merely as a source of patronage to the friends of the Government. It may be that things are not done consciously by the Ministry from that point of view. But the provisions of the Act are like that and when persons are put in that position, naturally they are obliged to extend such patronage. The constitution of the committee has always been one of patronage. It has always aroused in this State as much interest as the appointment of members to the Board of Revenue or some other high and important positions! I have known persons who, a few months before the due date of constitution of a committee, travel from Chilka Lake down to Madras and people who come from Cape Comorin and Rameswaram to Madras, to interview Ministers, to interview the members of the Board of the Hindu Religious Endowments, to interview the concerned Secretaries to the Government and also to see some of the M.L.As. who can command a friendly hearing with the Ministers. I submit that this should cease. Does it cease now? If it ceases, I would be very glad. The Government amendment also does not show that this patronage has in any way ceased. Although the Act is sought to be repealed, the provisions of that Act are incorporated in the Bill. The Government have now taken power to appoint a Board of Trustees with a life of five years. As my hon. Friend, Sri Varadachari has pointed out and as Sri Bhashyam said yesterday evening, I do not see why the Government should give a five years' lease of life. In the Select Committee, it is understood, a three to five year period was suggested. (The Hon. Sri K. Madhava Menon: 'No, No.') I am sorry. I would like to be wrong always! But the existing Act also puts the life of the Committee between three and five years. Now, when a maximum is fixed like this, it becomes a normal feature and this is the impression that the Committee has created in the mind of the Government. This is how this five year period has come into being. The Board of Trustees is to be appointed by the Government. I have got an amendment, Sir, which I am going to move and which seeks to elect trustees and not appoint them. As I have already pointed out, in an important temple like this, the Government should divest themselves of power of high patronage by appointing trustees for five years. It is one of the biggest shrines in the State and a Board must exist. I certainly agree that there should be one in order to help the Mahant, who, as experience has shown, has not been able to manage the affairs of the great shrine to the satisfaction of the public and to the satisfaction of the worshippers. But they must be elected trustees and on this point I shall speak on another occasion. But to appoint five trustees with a five year lease of life is too much. I suggest that the Government need not exercise such a power of patronage.

"Secondly, Sir, the second Government amendment to clause 85 says—

'The Government shall also appoint a salaried executive officer for the devasthanams, and shall have power to suspend, remove or dismiss him from office.'

Of course, under the new scheme, the designation 'Commissioner' goes and the officer will be called the 'Executive Officer'. Now, what is the position of this officer? He is a person to be appointed by the Government and also to be removed or dismissed by the Government. The Board of Trustees is there: but, but for the Board this officer is the person who practically functions there. Of course in a succeeding clause, it is provided that subject to the control of the Government, the executive officer shall exercise such and such powers.

"My experience has been that the executive officers appointed by the Government do not care in the least for the non-official body. They look not merely for their appointment but their very existence and preferment the Government and therefore, however pious the words may be, however sweet the words 'subject to the general control of the trustee, the executive officer shall function,' may be, so long as the power of punishment and dismissal vests in the Government that executive officer will be a perfectly foreign body among the trustees and he would be a source of great trouble crippling all initiative and bringing people always into some kind of trouble. I have known non-officials with a sense of self-respect always finding it difficult to work with the executive officer who is placed in their midst, who is to secure the proper management but who looks to his existence and preferment to the Government. It will be a very difficult thing and it may be after some time the Government will have to change their attitude with regard to the position of these executive officers.

"In respect of the executive officer the Government say—

'The Government shall also appoint a salaried executive officer for the devasthanams, and shall have power to suspend, remove or dismiss him from office.'

Even the power of suspension, Sir, is not given to the trustees. Unless the Government give the power of suspension to the trustees it will be very difficult for the trustees to do anything. I know, Sir, comparing very small things with very big things, even as the Chairman of the Municipality I am finding it absolutely difficult to get on with officers who are appointed by the Government, who can be suspended by somebody and not by the Municipality, who can be punished by somebody and not by the Municipality and who could be transferred to some other place by the Government alone. I am experiencing great difficulty and I have no doubt that non-officials who want to do things sincerely will find that they are in a wrong hole. I therefore submit that the trustees should be given some powers of control over these executive officers, such as suspension and disciplinary control, if this work has to be done successfully by the Board of Trustees."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I am labouring under a very great difficulty in this matter because the amendment moved by my hon. Friend, Sri Varadachari is to the effect that—

'The Government shall also appoint more than one executive officer, one of whom will be in charge of the purely religious worship in the Devasthanam.'

[Sri K. Madhava Menon] [12th December 1950]

Sir, this amendment is to substitute the Government amendment, which runs as follows:—

I understand, Sir, my hon. Friend Sri Varadachari agrees to the principle of appointing executive officers. My hon. Friend Sri Viswanatham also does not object to the appointment of the executive officers but wants that the power of suspension and dismissal should vest in the trustees. But unfortunately I cannot accept the suggestion of my hon. Friend, Sri Varadachari to appoint an executive officer to be purely in charge of religious worship and all that, for the simple reason that Government want under this Bill only to administer the secular aspects of these institutions and temples and we do not want to interfere with the religious aspects. Therefore, to appoint an executive officer to look after purely religious matters might go against the Constitution, may be said to be improper and it may also be said that we are trying to interfere with the religious worship. On the merits of the case, I cannot agree to the appointment of an executive officer purely to look after religious worship in the devasthanam.

“Sir, the other portion of the speech of my hon. Friend, Sri Varadachari and that of my hon. Friend, Sri Viswanatham, were very instructive, in the sense, that they gave us information as to how things are getting on in the administration of the Tirupati Devasthanam under the present conditions, how they are working, what hardships are there because there is not sufficient amount of local connection with the trustees and so on. That was the main topic in the speech of hon. Friend, Sri Varadachari. He may be perfectly true and correct in what he said. But it is not germane to the amendment. It is true that the local element in the Tirupati Devasthanam Board, as it is composed at present, is comparatively meagre. Even in the original amendment he suggested the Board of Trustees should be constituted with five persons unlike Sri Viswanatham who does not want the appointment of any. My difficulty, therefore, is in answering arguments which are not quite germane to the amendment itself. What all they said will be useful as information for future appointments and proper guidance of the work.

“Sir, my hon. Friend, Sri Viswanatham, said that the meeting of the Committee of the devasthanam was held in a social club in Madras. It might have been quite possible that for certain purposes and for the convenience of the Board of Trustees they might have met there. It may also be true that there might have been certain local sentiment against this and excitement also might have prevailed. But there cannot be any objection to the meeting being held in one of the rooms of the Cosmopolitan Club which one of the Members of the Board might have taken on rent. I do not think the Board would have met in the general reading room of the Club or things like that. Some of the mufassal members might have taken a room on rent and in that room for the convenience of the members of the Board, the meeting might have been held there. For instance, when Sri Gopathi Narayana-swami Chettiar was the President of the Board, perhaps physical illness might have prevented him from going up the hill, he would have called the meeting for the convenience of himself and others in one or two rooms in the Cosmopolitan Club. Because that Club happens to be a social club it does not mean that all sanctity is spoiled. It is after all a business meeting of the trustees. I do not think very many meetings were held there after the demise of the former President and the appointment of Sri Venkataswami Naidu as the President. These things, that is holding of the meetings in the Cosmopolitan Club, which is, according to my hon. Friend, Sri Viswanatham, improper, will certainly be taken into consideration by the Board hereafter. That is all what I can say with regard to the meetings of the Board held at the Cosmopolitan Club.

“My hon. Friend, Sri Viswanatham, made another statement that the existence of the Board has been a sort of an opportunity for the Government to exercise their patronage for particular purposes. I do not exactly know what he means by this statement. The present Members of the Board are: Sri Venkataswami Naidu, M.L.C., Deputy Chairman of the Council, the second is Sri V. S. Tyagaraja Mudaliar of Tiruvarur, Tanjore district. What is the patronage that we have exercised here I do not know. I do not know to what party this gentleman belongs. The third is Sri V. Bhashyam Ayyangar. I do not think this is a case of patronage extended to Sri V. Bhashyam Ayyangar. On the other hand it is condescension on his part that we obtained his services on the Board. It is a great fortune for the Board that it should have got his services because you cannot think of a person who is more interested, more revered, more respected who would serve the interest of the Tirupati Devasthanam so well as Sri Bhashyam Ayyangar. What sort of patronage have the Government exercised in nominating him? I leave it, Sir, to the public through you to judge what was the patronage involved in this. Let anybody who has any conscience say . . .”

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—“This kind of personal attack should not be allowed, Sir.”

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—“I have not made any personal attack, Sir. When I am attacked saying that the Committee exists for the purpose of exercising patronage, I must reply and I must ask the House to judge through you, Sir, whether it is patronage to nominate such men to the Committee. Truth may be unpalatable but I cannot help saying the truth.”

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—“That is why the Hon. Minister is getting angry.”

[12th December 1950]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" It is not a question of getting angry. It is a question of feeling a sort of sympathy for the hon. Member.

"Then there are the others, Sir, hon. Sri Venkata Reddi of Nandyal, M.L.A., hon. Sri Kulesekhara Doss, M.L.A., a devout person of this Assembly, hon. Sri Duraikannu, a Harijan Member of this Assembly."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The hon. Member representing Chittoor? "

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Yes, Sir. And lastly the Mahant. What is the patronage that the Government want to exercise? I want the hon. House to judge and through you, Sir, I want the public to judge and know how far the allegation that the appointments are there for the patronage of Government, is true.

"My hon. Friend, Sri Viswanatham, Sir, took objection to the executive officers being Government servants and placed under the control of Government. It is true the name of the Government comes because the executive officers are Government officials and they are governed by the conditions of service of the Government as in most other cases. Till recently the Commissioner used to be an officer of the grade of the Deputy Collector transferred from Government. When he is a servant of the Provincial Government, there is nothing wrong in his continuing under the control of the Government. Again, Sir, this question does not at all arise from the amendment of my hon. Friend, Sri Varadachari.

"Again, Sir, my hon. Friend, Sri Viswanatham, said why have the period of the Board as five, instead of as three years as recommended by the Select Committee. The clause even as it came from the Select Committee says: 'The Board of Trustees constituted for the devasthanams under section 40 shall consist of five persons appointed by the Government'. The Board of Trustees would be governed by clause 41 that we have already passed and that clause says that every trustee appointed under that clause by the Government shall hold office for a term of five years. Even if the Government amendment for this clause were not there, automatically under clause 41 the trustees would be there for a period of five years. To say that the Select Committee decided on three years is wrong. The Select Committee thought and meant only five years, nothing more and nothing less.

"Therefore, Sir, the amendment that if there were more than one executive officer, one of the executive officers can be in charge of purely religious worship in the devasthanam, cannot be accepted."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI :—" Sir, my task has been made very simple by the Hon. Minister's answer. As I said once before my Hon. Friend, Sri Madhava Menon, answers me through somebody else to the points I raise. He has given straight answers. I am glad he has given the assurance that local talent will not be brushed aside and that local interest will not be looked askance in the appointments to be made under the Bill for the Board of Trustees. My plea was that Tirupati should be treated exactly as every other big shrine. It would be considered very wrong for instance to make a gentleman in Chicacole trustee of the Srirangam temple. It is very wrong that persons who cannot attend to the affairs of the devasthanam are to be appointed to the Board. At least persons living within the range of the temple or who are very near to the temple should be appointed to the Board so that they may make frequent visits and exhibit more interest in the administration of the devasthanam. I think, Sir, there is some point in it. I am glad the Hon. Minister has spoken on this. I do not wish to press any more on this.

"The second point I want to place before the Government is this. I pleaded for the appointment of an executive officer considering the special circumstances of the case, who will be in charge of religious worship in the devasthanam. I am glad that the Hon. Minister has spoken at last and said that the Government did not intend nor will it be within their power to take charge of the religious worship, not only in Tirupati but in any other temple.

"It is a good and clear statement. One instance that now comes uppermost to my mind is this. Recently, in the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanam, after the Commissioner had decided on a particular matter—a matter of purely religious worship, which has been referred to him by an archaka as against some other man, the Board of Trustees interfered. The Board has no power and right to do so. But, still the Board insisted on this right and drove the poor archaka, who has already made considerable sacrifice, to go to Court and establish his rights. I hope such things will not happen in future. I think the Government, even according to the Constitution, will not interfere in these ordinary cases relating to the custom of temple.

"Sir, it is said that there may be a conflict between the executive officer and the Board of Trustees. I think that in general there won't arise any such conflict if the Board of Trustees are elected. Conflicts arise because the executive officer now feels that he has to deal with only certain matters and that the members who come by the morning and go off by the evening deal with others. But, that impression will cease to exist when the executive officer is sure that the members take as much interest as himself and exhibit the same continuity of interest also in the affairs of the temple.

"Further, the character of temple administration has changed, as I have already pointed out to the Hon. Minister. It has been totally divested of certain functions. What it has now to do is to attend to the routine of the temples and also to look after the institutions which have been built up. Now that clause 64 has been amended, there would not be any difficulty in regard to renovations, repairs and ancillaries, if I may use the word, attached to the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanam. There are hundreds of temples which are really in urgent need of help."

[Sri N. S. Varadachari] [12th December 1950]

MR. SPEAKER:—"The hon. Member has given an amendment."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"Yes, Sir. I am going to withdraw my amendment because the Hon. Minister has clearly assured me, not only assured me but assured himself, that according to the Constitution the Government have no right to appoint such an officer for the purposes mentioned by him and the Government do not intend to interfere with the course of religious worship not only in Tirumalai-Tirupati, but in all the temples of this State. I, therefore, beg leave of the House to withdraw my amendment."

Sri Varadachari's amendment was, by leave, withdrawn.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

"For sub-clauses 3 (a) and 3 (b), substitute the following sub-clauses—

"(a) There shall be a Board of Trustees constituted for the devasthanams consisting of five persons appointed by the Government; and any person so appointed shall hold office for a term of five years unless in the meanwhile he is removed or his resignation is accepted by the Government or he otherwise ceases to be a trustee.

(b) The Government shall also appoint a salaried executive officer for the devasthanams, and shall have power to suspend, remove or dismiss him from office." "

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I beg to move—

"In sub-clause (3) (a), for the words 'appointed by the Government' "

MR. SPEAKER:—"The hon. Mr. Bhashyam told me that he was not moving the amendment. I called Mr. Bhashyam yesterday and he told me that because the Government would not accept it, he would not move it and that was why I passed on to the next one."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"If that is so, I don't move it, Sir."

The Government's amendment was put and carried.

MR. SPEAKER:—"I will put clause 85 as amended to the vote of the House. Sri Viswanatham may speak on this."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, notwithstanding the anger exhibited by the Hon. the Minister for Law and the words which he should not have used against me, I want to explain why I am against these trustees being appointed. Sir, I never looked at the names of the members and I never meant anything against any particular member. But the fact is there, Sir, for all those who have seen the affairs in this State for many years past since this Committee came into existence, that it was certainly a matter of patronage exercise by the Government. There is no use of simply getting angry, Sir. From district after district, people come here upon this particular mission.

"I never wanted to bring any personalities into discussion. It is most unfortunate that the Minister exceeded decorum by bringing personalities into discussion. When he has brought them, I will have also to say something. But that is not my purpose. But, when there is the clause giving the right to Government to appoint trustees, instead of the elected representatives, I can certainly say, whether the Government are conscious or not conscious, that it is a question of exercise of patronage and the clause gives scope for it. I never meant anything against this Minister or that Minister. I never said anything against any particular member of the Board. That was not my purpose. On the other hand, I was talking upon a general proposition. Sir, even now, I affirm that the power to appoint trustees for a five-year period for such a big institution as the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanam, is not good. Therefore, I again affirm that the trustees of this big and ancient shrine should not be the appointees of the Government, but an electoral college should be created and the trustees elected. I think that certain memoranda have been presented to the Select Committee and actually some proposals were made by some witnesses that an electoral college might be instituted and that the trustees should be elected. I was talking upon that general proposition. The Minister can rest himself assured so that he may not bring in either my conscience or his conscience. I only want him to realize that the less a Government is compelled to exercise their patronage the better.

"There is another point on which I want to speak. The period of five years is really too long and the original three years' period of the previous Act should have been struck to."

SRI V. I. MUNISWAMI PILLAY:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I rise to support the amendment of the Government to Clause 85. I feel that the procedure that is set by the Government is the proper one. Sir, many communities were unrepresented even in the matter of trusteeship to these various shrines and the Government have found a way out in what they have adopted now.

"I think, Sir, that this is very important in view of the fact that people who are interested in temples may not be living in the same adjoining area, but may belong to different districts, and that, if they are to give their services, it is highly necessary that their place of residence should not be taken into account. My hon. Friend Mr. N. S. Varadachari was telling that a man living in Chicacole may not be representing properly the interests of the shrine at Srirangam. But, I know, Sir, that in practice, and as a matter of fact, some of the people who have been drawn from far off distances have given the best service to the institutions that come under the category of the religious endowments.

"My hon. Friend Sri Viswanatham was telling that the period of five years is too long a period. In my experience, Sir, as one of the trustees of Sree Meenakshi Devasthanam and some other temples in the Nilgiris, I think that the period of five years is highly necessary. As soon as a man is chosen to this trusteeship, Sir, it takes at least more than a year for him to understand the various matters connected with the temples, its charities and endowments. So, only after 2 or 3 years he will be in a fit position to give his advice and serve as a best guide in the administration of its charities and endowments. Sir, it will be seen from the report of the Religious Endowment Board which has been furnished to this House, that members chosen for a period of five years have given the best service and those temples have shown remarkable progress in the matter of managing the administration and also the endowments concerned. In these circumstances, Sir, I support the Government amendment."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA :—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, judging from the sanctity, the holiness and the greatness of this group of temples, it would have been better if the Government had accepted the system of election by a specially constituted college of voters. It is impossible, no doubt, to expect the worshippers to make any choice or take a referendum. I am not asking for it. But, what prevents the Government from empowering the Madras Bar Council which holds its power throughout this State, to elect one to the Board, despite the fact that some of the Members do not see eye to eye with lawyers. The Hon. the Minister for Law seems to have forgotten this aspect. Equally so, there are three universities in this State and they should have been empowered to elect one. Likewise, there should not have been any difficulty in constituting an electoral unit of the trustees of certain temples of a particular category of this State to elect one as their representative. The Government can certainly have one of the trustees appointed by themselves. I would also suggest that all the maths in this State should have been asked to select one as their representative. The Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanam and other allied institutions represent a civilization of nearly 1,000 years and there is no point in treating these institutions on the same footing as other temples. Not that I am saying anything about the sanctity and holiness of those temples, but I think the people far and wide in this country hold that opinion. I do not mind even if the Government of India are to send one representative. When it selects members to several institutions in this country, including those to which funds are contributed by people from all over India, it would have been only right that it should do so in this case. And it would have been pleasing to even Sri Kandaswami if a selection had been made by the Government and he would have accepted it immediately readily. I have not however, the slightest hope that Sri Kandaswami Pillai or Sri Annamalai Pillai, who are staunch supporters of the Government measure, would support the forming of an electoral college immediately for electing trustees to these temples."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"My Friend Sri Viswanatham remarked that I exceeded the bounds of decorum in saying what I did. Of course sense of values differs. If in connection with an amendment which merely says that there should be an executive officer . . ."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—"I was speaking on both the Government amendment as well as on that of hon. Sri Varadachari."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"My hon. Friend spoke while seconding the amendment and that being the case it was difficult for me to fathom what was in his mind. But the fact is that he was seconding the amendment that there should be election of executive officers and, in doing so, said that the Government are using and have used this power to make the appointment of trustees as patronage in their hands for a particular purpose. To prove that that was not so, I just read out to the House the names of persons who have been appointed as trustees so that the House might see whether in any of those cases exercise of patronage could be suggested. My friend realised when I read out the names that the allegations at least as regards those persons were not right and so he said that I was angry."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—"A word of personal explanation, Sir. I was only referring to the general question of patronage during the last so many years. There is no use therefore reading out some names. I am not going to be drawn into a discussion over those names."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"My hon. Friend might have a number of years in his mind, but when he spoke he was referring to the present condition. He was not referring to the generations before I was born when he said that such and such are the conditions. There was no question of my getting angry. I had to state the facts when he said that nomination or appointment by Government was all wrong and that there must be election by an electoral college. Sir, the Select Committee went into this question of the appointment of trustees and Area Committees including the trustees of the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanam and considered also this point about the electoral college. The proceedings will show how long this discussion took place. They found that it would be difficult for an institution like the devasthanams to have such an electoral college. My hon. Friend Mr. Raghavayya realised that difficulty. Who should be constituted into an electoral college? The worshippers of the devasthanams, even if you confine the names to the worshippers of this State, would be found from Visakha-patnam to Cane Comorin, though, as a matter of fact, the temple is an all-India one. That being the case the formation of an electoral college for the purpose would be extremely difficult. So hon. Mr. Raghavayya suggested that Bar Associations may select. I have the greatest regard for the Bar. But a Board for the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanam is not a place for lawyers alone. There is of course an advantage in having lawyers on it. The lawyers with their knowledge of law and experience in handling the affairs of all sorts of people may be useful. But the constitution of an electoral college cannot be easily settled. So, for the time being, as there may be very competent men available, but not willing to stand for election, it was considered desirable to enlist their services for institutions of this kind. The Select Committee therefore thought that election is not necessary for trustees of the devasthanams."

Clause 85, as amended, was put and carried.

New Clauses 85 (a), 85 (b) and 85 (c).

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, I move—

'New clauses 85 (a), 85 (b) and 85 (c).

After clause 85, insert the following clauses :—

" 85. (a) (1) The Executive Officer shall be a person professing the Hindu religion;

(2) If the executive officer is an officer in the service of the Government, the devasthanams shall pay his salary, allowances and such contributions towards his pension, provident fund and leave allowances as may be required under the rules prescribed by the Government in this behalf.

85. (b) Subject to such reservations as may be laid down by the Government and to the general control of the Board of Trustees, the executive officer—

(a) shall have power to manage the properties and affairs of the devasthanams;

(b) shall be responsible for the proper custody of all the records and of all the jewels, valuables, moneys, funds and other properties of the devasthanams;

(c) shall arrange for the proper collection of the income and for the incurring of expenditure; and

(d) may, in cases of emergency, direct the execution of any work or the doing of any act which is not provided for in the budget for the year and the immediate execution or the doing of which is, in his opinion, necessary for the preservation of the properties of the devasthanams or for the service or safety of the pilgrims resorting thereto; and may direct that the expenses of the executing such work or the doing of such act shall be paid from the funds of the devasthanams.

The executive officer shall report forthwith to the Board of Trustees any action taken by him under clause (d) and the reasons therefor.

85. (c) (1) The powers of appointment and punishment conferred on a trustee by sections 52 and 53 shall, in respect of the office-holders and servants of the devasthanams, be exercised by the executive officer subject to such restrictions and conditions, if any, as may be laid down by the Government.

(2) Any person affected by an order of the executive officer acting in pursuance of the powers conferred on him by sub-section (1) may, within one month from the date of the receipt of the order by him, appeal to the Board of Trustees.

(3) Within one month from the date of the receipt by him of the order of the Board of Trustees, the office-holder or servant may appeal to the Commissioner."

" Sir, hon. Sri Varadachari has given notice of an amendment to clause 85 (b) to substitute 'Subject to such rules as may be prescribed', for the words 'Subject to such reservation as may be laid down by the Government'."

MR. SPEAKER :—" But the hon. Member is not present in the House."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" I am sorry for that.

" Sir, the necessity for this amendment arose because we omitted clause 40 in which there was a provision for the appointment of executive officers and for laying down their functions. As there was no question of appointing executive officers at all, we omitted it. But now there is need for appointing such officers. Hence these provisions are necessary. There is nothing new in them. They have been merely copied from sections 21 and 23 of the Tirumalai-Tirupathi Devasthanams Act."

MR. SPEAKER :—" I will first put the amendment and then hon. Mr. Viswanatham may speak against it. He need not move for the omission."

(Sri N.S. Varadachari rose . . .)

MR. SPEAKER :—" I will give an opportunity to hon. Sri Varadachari to speak."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Sir, the Hon. Minister was pleased to say that the clause relating to executive officers was omitted because of a doubt about the constitutionality of such a provision. I just want to know from him how, if it was feared to be unconstitutional there, it became constitutional here? The Government removed clause 40 and, in the absence of it, they want this provision here. Did they do so on the ground that the provision for the appointment of executive officers was wide of the Constitution?

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—“ I did not say that clause 40 was removed because executive officers cannot be appointed under the Constitution. The provision in clause 40 ran thus—

“ For every religious institution included in the list, published under section 39, the Commissioner shall constitute a Board of Trustees and appoint a salaried executive officer, notwithstanding that the institution has a hereditary trustee or trustees . . . ”

There the question whether a Board of Trustees could be appointed was in doubt and hence one could not make the appointment of an executive officer dependent upon them. That is why we omitted it.”

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—“ Even after his explanation, Sir, the matter is not clear. Even if he had not said it, I would have said that this was wide of the powers. My argument has all along been that a religious denomination is entitled to administer and manage its properties. The executive officer here is entrusted with the management of the properties of the endowments and he is subject to two authorities, namely, the Board of Trustees and the Government. As I have already said in another connection, the executive officer is the appointee of the Government and can be removed by them from office. If he is managing the Devasthanam under this provision, as whose appointee does he do so? My point is, notwithstanding the expression ‘ Subject to the control of the trustees, the real management will be in the hands of the executive officer. That, certainly, is wide of the constitutional provisions. Secondly, on its merits as well, an officer who is appointed by the Government and who looks to his continuance there to the favour of the Government is really not a desirable person to associate himself with the Board of Trustees. The Board of Trustees must be given the power which the executive officer is given here. If on the other hand, as in the case of the matadhipathis, you say that the Board of Trustees must have such and such staff, there will be no objection. Of course we cannot leave everything to their discretion. Supposing there is an electricity concern, we cannot leave everything to the Board of Trustees. The shareholders and the general body would say that for that concern an engineer with proper qualifications must be appointed. The Board of Directors, in order to save some money cannot be allowed to say, ‘ Some of us know engineering ourselves. We do not want to appoint an engineer’. Sir, in order to ensure efficiency we want certain kinds of technical personnel to be appointed. To ensure efficient day-to-day management the Government might insist and make rules that members of a particular designation and qualifications should be appointed by the Board of Trustees. In that case, the executive will be an officer appointed by the Board of Trustees. He will be responsible to the Board for his actions and be helpful to them. The Board also might appoint a person who is actually needed and who is competent to discharge the kind of work entrusted to him. But here, there is an anomaly as in the case of municipal councils. The same anomaly is continued here also. You have got trustees here with a certain responsibility and tomorrow, if something goes wrong the people will take the trustees to task and not the executive officer who is in the background. The executive officer is given wide powers; he is given power even to do certain things in an emergency and then only to report the matter at a later stage. Therefore, even at the risk of repetition, I have to say that this will lead to incompatibility resulting in delays and inefficiency also sometimes, as in the case of municipalities. Therefore the Government will do well to prescribe the qualifications necessary for the executive officer and leave him to be appointed by the Board of Trustees and let him be responsible to the Board of Trustees. In that case, the executive officer will be serving only one master, will have a due sense of responsibility and will discharge his duties to the best of his ability. But if he is to look to the Board of Trustees on the one hand and to the Government on the other, he will be placed in a difficult position. It will not conduce to the efficiency of management.”

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI :—“ Sir, I did not intend to speak on this clause, but I heard the Hon. Minister say that this is a mere repetition of the clause in the old Act. I want to make sure about one thing. It is said here—

“ (b) shall be responsible for the proper custody of all the records and of all the jewels, valuables, moneys, funds and other properties of the devasthanams.”

I suppose this means that the existing practice will continue. The jewels of the Tirupathi Devasthanam are in the joint custody of the archakas and the Commissioner. There is double locking. All the jewels are kept inside the sanctum sanctorum. It is a very ancient custom. It is better to have this dual arrangement. I hope there will not be a supersession of the arrangement allowed by custom, a custom based on long experience and knowledge of the practical difficulties. I want an assurance from the Hon. Minister that the present practice will, in all respects, be continued, though for all technical purposes, the executive officer is supposed to be in custody of the jewels and other valuables.”

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA :—“ Sir, the Government say here in this clause—

“ 85-B. Subject to such reservations as may be laid down by the Government and to the general control of the Board of Trustees, the executive officer” shall have power to do certain things. I wish the Government were more definite about these reservations. I wish to know what is the nature of the reservations that the Government are going to make in the course of the various rules that will be made by them. The Government have given certain powers to the Board of Trustees ostensibly in the Bill, but they quietly take them away one by one by means of various rules that may be made later on. It will be sheer injustice not only to the Board of Trustees but also to the public at large. What do the Government lose by stating even now on the floor of the Assembly what the reservations would be. They need not give a list of the reservations seriatim, but they may definitely say what the nature of the reservations will be. If it is going to be in respect of the general management, I should say there is no necessity for the Government to have any reservation in respect of the actual management of the temple. If it is going to be in respect of accounts and audit, the accounts department will look into that. If it is going to be in respect of law suits, the Government need not think of any reservation at all. I fail to see what is the nature of the thing with regard to which there is any need for reservation of powers. The whole trouble arises evidently from the fact that the Government fear that the nominated members with whom the Government are going to adorn the Board of Trustees may not be competent enough to deal with these matters themselves. Unless there is such a lurking fear in the minds of the Government, there is absolutely no necessity to withhold any power from the Board of Trustees. Certainly there is the Commissioner at the head and he has got power to interfere, call for the records and do the just thing in all matters where the Board of Trustees go wrong. Keeping that reserve power which is always there in view, where is the necessity for the Government taking away even the normal duties and functions of the trustees and have such essential matters reserved for the executive officer? It is unfair. This will lead to dyarchy as in the municipal administration. There will be rub and rupture at every stage between the executive officer and the trustees, on account of the exercise of these conflicting powers. Therefore the Government would do well to take the House into confidence and give us a clear idea of the nature of the reservations they are going to make in the process of making various rules.

"Secondly, Sir, the Government are asking the executive officers to be in charge of the jewels which are valuable not only from the point of view of their cost but also from the point of view of their importance, their holiness and their tradition. Therefore it will not be too much on the part of the House to ask the Government to fix the grade of the officer. An officer not below the rank of a Revenue Divisional Officer should be appointed. It is no good appointing an officer of the Tahsildar's grade. It is a responsible job. The Government should even now fix up the grade of the officer who will be appointed as an executive officer. Then what will happen if the person is a non-official? If the person appointed is a Government officer, there are safeguards against his misbehaviour. But if he is a non-official where is the guarantee that he will be a proper person to take charge of the jewellery? Is he going to be asked to make a deposit of Rs. 10,000 or so? The salary of the officer will be Rs. 1,000 or so, and is it too much on the part of the House to expect the Government to provide for the payment of a deposit by the officer? These are all matters which the Government should take into consideration."

12th December 1950]

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI :—“ Mr. Speaker, Sir, when one goes through the enormous powers of the executive officer, he finds that it cannot even be imagined especially when the Government themselves have appointed a Board of Trustees consisting of five persons. A comparison was made with the Commissioners of Municipalities, but one can understand it in the case of Commissioners of Municipalities as the Government might not find it possible to agree always with all the views of the elected municipal councillors. But here the Government themselves appoint the trustees. Then why should there be an executive officer with so much powers who will ride rough-shod over them? He will have discretion even to spend anything he likes outside the budget and then simply report the matter to the trustees. This is a thing which I cannot understand. Sir, if the Government do not want to take over the administration but only see that it is carried on properly and if they want only to have some control or check, they should be satisfied with the appointment of trustees. If, as the Hon. Minister says, the trustees that are going to be appointed for these Devasthanams will be big persons, persons of standing, is it worthwhile for them to agree to be appointed trustees when they will have an executive officer who will not care for them and when their powers will be very limited? If the executive officer has got all the powers to manage the properties and affairs of the devasthanams, if he is to be responsible for the proper custody of all the records and the jewels, etc., if he is to arrange for the proper collection of the income and the incurring of the expenditure and if, in the case of an emergency, direct the execution of any work and incur the necessary expenditure for the same without the knowledge of the trustees, then, why on earth have these trustees? If you appoint some trustees, give them some powers. At least make them generally responsible for the administration of the temple. But if it is not so, if you are going to put an executive officer with enormous powers over the head of these trustees, the result will be, the executive officer will not care for the trustees, and from the point of view of the trustees, really capable and self-respecting men will not be forthcoming for the posts of trustees, unless it be they are prepared to submit themselves to anything just for the name of being a trustee. If the Government want people of some status and standing in the locality, they should certainly give them more powers. If, in spite of all that has been said here, it is the intention of the Government to associate local people with the administration of these temples, I think the appointment of such an executive officer with vast powers should be dispensed with. The executive officer should be made subordinate to the trustees.”

SRI D. V. RAMASWAMI :—“ Sir, I am glad that the Hon. Minister in giving the names of the present trustees has given five distinguished names. It is a great satisfaction to us that they are such exceptionally well-known persons of great repute. When such care is being taken in the constitution of the Board of Trustees, one wonders why the executive officers should practically have the whole say in the management of the temples. Very wide powers are given and unless a miracle happens there will be great difficulty in so many matters where the Board of Trustees will naturally differ from the views of the Executive Officer. The Executive Officer must be placed under the control of the trustees or the appointment of the Board of Trustees must be subject to election by an electoral college. I am afraid, in trying to purify the administration and have it run on sound lines, there will be points of friction between the Board of Trustees, if they really mean to apply their minds to the task and bring their experience to bear on the management of the institution, and the executive officers. However high-placed the executive officers may be, whatever securities they might have to deposit for efficient management of the temple, there are bound to be points of friction between the executive with such wide powers and the Board of Trustees. If the two are to function well, the point should be looked into. The Hon. Minister should see that the powers of the executive officer are limited and that the Board of Trustees have definite powers of reviewing the actions of the executive officer."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, hon. Members Messrs. Viswanatham and Gopalaswami were talking that there should be no executive officer at all, especially when there is such a careful selection of members of the Board and so it passed their imagination as to why there should be a definition of the powers of the executive officer. Sir, I want a little imagination in this matter. We have already passed clause 85 which says that the Government shall appoint the salaried executive officer of the Devasthanams. These clauses are only laying down the duties and powers of that executive officer. When once we have passed a clause that there should be an executive officer, it should not be stated that we should have no executive officer at all in connection with a clause which refers to the powers and duties of that executive officer. That is my reply, Sir, to those gentlemen who spoke that there should be no executive officer at all or that the principle of having an executive officer is wrong. Comparison with municipal executive officers, arguing that there is likely to be friction between the executive officer and the trustee as in the case of municipalities, and all that is not relevant here, because, as I have said, we have already passed the clause relating to the appointment of the executive officer.

"With reference to the duties and powers of the executive officer, I may refer hon. Members to clause 48 of the Bill which has been omitted subsequently. Because it has been omitted there, it has become necessary here. I want to tell Mr. Raghavayya that this clause 85-B is identical with clause 48 as it stood before its omission; the entire wording here is as it was in clause 48 as it was passed by the Select Committee and there is nothing new here. When you decide to appoint an executive officer, he must necessarily be given certain powers and duties. Mr. Ramaswami's contention is: 'Why do you want to give him such powers and duties when there is the Board of Trustees. I may tell him the trustees are not there in Tirupathi always; the executive officer has to do the day-to-day work and look after the day-to-day administration. The trustees may come from different parts of the State and they may meet only at stated intervals. The day-to-day administration has to go on. Whatever powers and duties we have provided here are only with a view to enable the executive officer to carry on the day-to-day administration. Even there, whatever he does is subject to the general control of the Board of Trustees. One of the powers given to him is that in cases of emergency he may do certain things without even the consent of the trustees, but again in that case, he will have to report forthwith to the Board whatever action he has taken, under sub-clause (d) of clause 85-B. So, under the general directions of the Board of Trustees he is working. Further, under sub-clause (2) of clause 85-C—

'any person affected by an order of the executive officer acting in pursuance of the powers conferred on him by sub-section (1) may, within one month from the date of the receipt of the order by him, appeal to the Board of Trustees.'

So, an appeal also has been provided. As I said, these are only powers given for the day-to-day administration to the executive officer whom we have already appointed under clause 85."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is—

'That new clauses 85-A, 85-B and 85-C be inserted after clause 85.'

The amendment was carried.

Clause 86.

MR. SPEAKER :—" The motion is—

'That clause 86 do stand part of the Bill.'

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, I request permission to move—

'That clause 86 be omitted.'

"It may be argued that this will be interfering with the religious worship and religious affairs of the institution. It is our idea that there should not be any such interference. As this clause 86 is likely to be construed like that, we want to omit it, Sir."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, it is a good thing that clause 86 is to be omitted. But, as on the last occasion, I would request the Hon. Minister to give an answer to the following question which I put. Now that Government have declared that they have no powers to interfere with or to regulate the purely religious side of worship, the omission of this clause alone would not do at all. No doubt, the retention of this clause may be open to constitutional objections; but at the same time its omission will result in everything being kept indefinite and vague until somebody is driven to a court with his objections. Even now before the Bill is passed into law and assented to by the authorities concerned, though the intention of Government is made clear that even if there is such a council as this, it would be difficult to draw the line between purely religious and purely secular administration, the persons mentioned in the clause could be easily consulted before any decisions are taken. It is just possible that a thing may strike the executive officer or the Board of Trustees as purely secular, as having nothing to do with the religious worship, but it may strike others that it is an infringement of the rights they hold by immemorial custom. In such cases, I think at least an informal consultation, if not consultation with a statutory body, should be held before anything is declared as purely secular. Sir, in temple administration especially, it is very difficult to distinguish between the two; certain things may be distinguished as definitely secular and certain other things may be distinguished as purely religious; but there may be still many other things which cannot be declared to be wholly religious or wholly secular. In such cases where things are neither purely religious nor purely secular, the Government will have to make clear their intentions, that they will, before taking any action, either by themselves or through the Board of Trustees, take the advice of persons who are competent to give such advice. I want also an assurance that there would be no supersession of the present custom in respect of jewels, properties, and even the counting of money. Sir, it is a beautiful custom that obtains in Tirupati even to-day; all the money left in the hundi by the worshippers is being counted every night in the presence of various persons—not specified in any document but—who have been authorized by custom to be present at such counting. It is a beautiful ceremony; the amount of rupees, annas and pies and the quantity of gold and silver, are read out every night before worship is closed for the day; every item is counted and read out before the deity."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, provisions which we consider as wide of the Constitution are propounded by the Government. When we say that every religious denomination should manage its affairs, they appoint the trustee and the executive officer themselves and they want to manage the affairs through them. The only place where the denomination can have a voice, so far as religious affairs are concerned, is the advisory council. That is now sought to be removed on the ground that it may offend the Constitution. There is something peculiar about the whole affair. Sir, often and often we have referred to Article 26 which says—

'Subject to public order, morality and health, every religious denomination or any section thereof shall have the right to manage its own affairs in matters of religion.'

Without reference to this Article, this clause is now being sought to be omitted. In view of the particular and peculiar position of this shrine, even the old Act has provided for an advisory council like this. At the stage of the Select Committee it has been included in this Bill. The advisory council is the only place where the jiyengars, the archakas, the acharyapurushas and other mirasdars of the devasthanams can have some slight voice so far as administration of religious affairs is concerned. Now, the Government want to remove that council. I am not satisfied with the reason given by the Hon. Minister. On the other hand, I should think it is the only clause which comes within the terms of the Constitution, while most of the other clauses except those of a routine nature, are of doubtful constitutional value. I sincerely believe this is the only clause which should be allowed to be there."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, one word. Hon. Mr. Varadachari wanted to have a reply to his question. I can only tell him that according to the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanams Act—

'The Commissioner shall be responsible for the custody of all the records and properties of the devasthanams, and shall arrange for the proper collection of the offerings made in the temples.'

Identical provision has been made here; and whatever implications there are already in that section, must be taken as applying here also and nothing more."

Amendment to omit clause 86 was put and carried.

Clause 87.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'That clause 87 do stand part of the Bill.'

Sub-clause (4).

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I move that—

'In sub-clause (4) (a), for the words "executive officer", substitute the word "trustee".'

MR. SPEAKER:—"The hon. Member may move both his amendments together."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"I also move that—

'In sub-clause (4) (b), for the words "executive officer", substitute the word "trustee".'

The reason is that in the interests of the smooth working of the administration, the trustee and not the executive officer must have the powers. The Hon. Minister has just said that the executive officer is subject to the general control of the trustees and as they will not be present there every day, the executive officer must have the power. I did not say there should be no executive officer at all: I only wanted that the executive officer who is subordinate in all matters to the trustees may attend to the day-to-day affairs, but the powers referred to in new clause 85-B should not be exercised by him. It must be the duty of the executive officer to draw attention to such matters as are referred to in this clause and put up notes for the Board of Trustees, but it must be the right of the trustees to exercise all the powers vested under sub-clauses (4) (a) and (b). Levying of tolls and farming out of collections are important matters, and therefore I submit the Board of Trustees and not an executive officer appointed by Government must be given the right of management."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"I second the amendment. In doing so, I want to plead with the Government to see the justice of it. If according to Government, the executive officer is to do the levying of tolls and placing the collection of such tolls under proper management, subject to the control of the trustees, why not place these powers in the hands of the trustees themselves, so that they, as representatives of public opinion, and as people voicing forth the opinions of various worshippers may feel their responsibility in the management? It will be in the fitness of things if the powers are vested in the trustees instead of in the executive officer, unless the Government think that these trustees are namke-vaste people, that real power should only be with the executive officer and they want to deal with the executive officer and not with the trustees."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, as I have already said previously, the Tirumalai-Tirupathi Devasthanams trustees are not in all cases local people. The entire Tirumalai is practically a panchayat by itself and if we give certain powers to the executive officer, it will be just like giving certain powers to the executive officer of a municipality. The wording here is: 'The Government may by notification authorize the executive officer to levy tolls.' It is only by Government notification that we can authorize anybody, whether it be a trustee or an executive officer. In the case of the Tirumalai-Tirupathi Devasthanams, we have specifically said: 'in the prescribed manner in respect of any road, including the ghat road leading to Tirumalai from Tirupathi'. There is no purpose in saying that we authorize the trustees; because then the trustees will have to authorize the executive officer if the work is to be executed and carried out. I do not think, Sir, any purpose will be served by my accepting this amendment."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, there is a lot of difference between the Board of Trustees exercising the right and the executive officer exercising it. There is no meaning in saying that the trustees will have to authorize the executive officer. The trustees will see to it that the necessary work is carried out. It is the Board of Trustees that must levy the tolls, and the notification of the Government must ask the Board of Trustees to do that work and not the executive officer. The executive officer himself may have to delegate his powers under sub-clause (4) (b) to other officers, and in such a case, why not the trustees be given these powers. I want to know. The whole thing, Sir, is very anomalous."

12th December 1950]

MR. SPEAKER:—"I now put hon. Mr. Viswanatham's amendment to the vote."

"The question is—

'In sub-clause (4) (a), for the words "executive officer", substitute the word "trustee".'

In sub-clause (4) (b), for the words "executive officer", substitute the word "trustee".'

The amendments were lost.

Clause 87 was then put and carried.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The House will now rise and meet again at 2-30 p.m."

(After lunch—2-30 p.m.)

Clause 88.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'That clause 88 do stand part of the Bill.'

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"Sir, I am not moving my amendment, but would like to speak on clause 88."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The hon. Member will be given an opportunity to do so after the Government amendment is disposed of. The Hon. Minister may now move the amendment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I move—

(1) For the opening paragraph of clause 88, substitute the following:—

"The funds of the devasthanams may be utilized for any purpose permitted by any other provision of this Act, and also for all or any of the following purposes:—"

(2) For sub-clause (i), substitute the following sub-clause:—

"(i) the maintenance, management and administration of the devasthanams;"

(3) In sub-clause (iv), for the words "choultries and dispensaries", substitute the words "choultries and rest-houses";

"Sir, clause 32 (1) which we have already passed relates to the incurring of expenditure for certain purposes from the funds of the religious institutions, which will apply to all religious institutions including the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanams also. There are also other similar provisions which are applicable to all religious institutions including the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanams, for instance, clauses 64, 81, 82 and 91. By putting this amendment, it is proposed to make the position clear that those sections will apply to the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanams also."

[Sri K. Madhava Menon] [12th December 1950]

"The second amendment is only a verbal change, for the present sub-clause (i) says: 'the administration and management of the devasthanams'. I want to change it into 'the maintenance, management and administration of the devasthanams'. It is only a verbal change.

"Then in sub-clause (iv) as it is we have 'the construction and maintenance of hospitals and dispensaries for the use and accommodation of all classes of pilgrims'. The word 'dispensaries' is a mistake, but it must be 'rest-houses', because we have provided for hospitals and dispensaries in sub-clause (iii). Hence the amendment."

The amendment was put and carried.

Sub-clause (vii).

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"I move, Sir—

'In clause 88 (vii), delete the words "provided the acquisition is authorized by the Government".'

I shall also move the other amendment, namely:—

'Delete sub-clause 88 (x).'

"Sir, the two deletions will make it somewhat very useful. The contention of the Government is that the trustees are given powers of management. It is our contention that the management should really be with the denominations. I shall assume for the sake of argument that these trustees are the persons who are having the management of the properties. If they are having the management of the properties and if they feel that certain lands or other immovable properties can be acquired for the purposes of the devasthanam, I do not see any reason why again that acquisition also should be authorized by the Government. In every one of these provisions it is said, the trustee should get the control, should get the permission of the executive officer or the Commissioner or the Government, which really subtract from the powers of these trustees. Whether they are appointed or whether they are elected, it does not matter, they are trustees and as has been pointed out, these are trusted trustees as they are the appointees of the Government and therefore it is only proper, that having installed a Board of Trustees, they should be given as much discretion as possible in respect of these matters. Therefore, Sir, I submit the words 'provided the acquisition is authorized by the Government' must be deleted, so that the trustees may have unhampered discretion. After all the trustees can be expected to work for the interests of the institution.

"Then, Sir, with regard to the deletion of sub-clause (x), the reasons are the same, because, authorized by the Government, is there. On the other hand, it also gives a handle to the Government to dictate from the top 'do this, do that and not this.'

12th December 1950] [Sri T. Viswanatham]

My point is, the trustees must have some discretion left to themselves and that is why, Sir, these two amendments may be accepted."

* SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"Sir, I second the amendments moved by hon. Mr. Viswanatham. Here a distinction is sought to be made between properties. If it is the question of land, then the trustee has to go to the Government for sanction; but if it is a question of the construction of a hospital or the provision of water-supply, I do not think this section comes in. If this section only means that so far as the acquisition of any land or other immovable property is concerned, they want the sanction of the Government, then we know the red-tape of the Government and the long time it takes for the execution of any of the works. So, Sir, if the trustees are to execute some works for which they are legally entitled and for which they want to utilize certain funds, then this small provision may work a great handicap. For instance, if they want to put up a building, land has to be purchased and acquired. Then the Government will come forward and ask whether it is necessary or not and all that process has to be gone through. If the trustee can spend a lot of money for other purposes, why alone so far as land and other immovable properties are concerned, he should get the permission of the Government? If, on the other hand, it is a question of selling any devasthanam property, the Government may be anxious not to give permission for such a thing and therefore they may not give sanction. But, in this case where it is only acquisition of immovable property or acquisition of land, I do not think it is fair to fetter the hands of the trustees by saying that so far as acquisition of land is concerned, they must get the permission of the Government. So, Sir, if really you want the work to be done quickly under the direction of the trustees under the powers vested in them under the Act with the money lying in their hands, it stands to reason they should be given unfettered powers in these matters. After all, land and other immovable properties alone cannot cost even a moiety of the great amount they are investing on choultries and all that. If lakhs of rupees can be spent by the trustees for building a choultry or hospital, that the trustee should be asked to get the sanction of the Government for the land the cost of which may only be about Rs. 2,000, does not stand to reason. I, therefore, request the Government to see that this provision is removed from the clause, so that the trustee may be enabled to carry out the work unhampered."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I oppose the amendment. The clause as it stands 'the acquisition of any land or other immovable property for the purposes of the devasthanams provided the acquisition is authorized by the Government', is only a repetition of the existing provision in the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanams Act, namely, 'the acquisition of any land or other property which is authorized by the Provincial Government'.

[Sri K. Madhava Menon] [12th December 1950]

So, I want hon. Members to make a distinction between 'purchase' and 'acquisition'. Acquisition is made under the Land Acquisition Act. It does not of course prevent the trustees from purchasing any land by private negotiation. If a particular land is required they can purchase by private negotiation and there is no objection to that. But, if they want to acquire land under the Land Acquisition Act, such acquisition should be authorized by the Government.

"Then, Sir, sub-clause (x) is absolutely necessary, because it relates to 'any work or undertaking for the purposes of the devasthanams, authorized by the Government, so long as such authorization subsists.' The Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanam has been authorized by the Government to undertake electricity works. That means they may purchase electricity in bulk and undertake distribution themselves. They cannot do it unless they are authorized by the Government to do so. It is not a case of asking for Government authorization before undertaking the work. It only means for certain works like distribution of electricity, authorization of Government is necessary and so long as there is authorization they can do the work, but they can spend the money for such works as are authorized by the Government. So, Sir, sub-clause (x) is absolutely necessary."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I do not think the Hon. Minister's explanation is at all convincing. I will tell you why he has not been able to convince me. If he had said, 'I do not have anything to reply' I would have been glad. But, since he has brought in the question of land acquisition proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act, I think he should have mentioned why it has been brought in here. There can be no necessity for that, because under the land acquisition proceedings, any private body which wants to obtain land, has got to obtain the permission of the Government for the purpose. Provision of drainage works, sanitation works or water-supply works, also requires the authority of the Government because they deal with the public. To say that whatever the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanam might do, they will come under the provisions at so many stages of the Act and should obtain the permission of the Government, is not proper. Surely, it does not mean that in other cases the devasthanam will do things without statutory provisions. It looks as if in these two cases alone they want to be careful. There is nothing of the sort. I think the reference to land acquisition without authorization by the Government need not be there, because no private body can acquire land under the Land Acquisition Act unless with the permission of the Government. If the Hon. Minister means that in drafting this clause, the Government had in mind only land acquisition proceedings, they might make it clear. Then I have no objection. If, on the other hand, 'any work or undertaking for the purposes of the devasthanams, authorized by the Government, so long as such authorization subsists', do refer to electricity, I should submit that even any private licensee or private corporation cannot undertake electricity distribution except with the permission of the Government.

"Sir, it is capable of being interpreted as any work which the Government direct the devasthanam to undertake. I submit to them: 'Do not have any further power to direct works; you have your own trustees and the executive officers also to take care of them and you have also canalised the expenditure under several items.' Therefore, I am submitting that the Government should allow the trustees to proceed in their own way and the trustees should not be dictated from above. If the Hon. Minister says that 'authorized by the Government' is no dictation from above, it will be very good if he makes it clear by amending the wording."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, the hon. Member would have been right if the word used were 'purchased' instead of 'acquisition'; there is difference between 'purchase' and 'acquisition'."

"Regarding sub-clause (x), there is no difficulty at all; 'so long as such authorization subsists' is quite clear."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"On a point of personal explanation, Sir, the word 'acquisition' has no technical meaning at all as suggested by the Hon. Minister. I want to know from him if the words 'acquire or hold property' used in the Constitution is also acquisition under the Land Acquisition Act. I submit, Sir, it has no such meaning."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

'(i) In sub-clause (vii), delete the words—

"provided the acquisition is authorized by the Government";

(ii) Delete sub-clause (x).'"

The amendments were lost.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

'That clause 88 as amended do form part of the Bill.'"

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I want to speak on this clause because it is the most important clause in this chapter. Even the first words have been amended; the funds of the devasthanam may be utilized for any purpose specified by any other provision in this Act. I think it was intended to cover cases coming under clause 64 but now it has been amended out of shape; I am glad that the words 'any of the following purposes' are there and the purposes have been mentioned."

"I wish to say a few words on sub-clauses (vii) and (x). The Hon. Minister has hinted that the word 'acquisition' refers only to acquisition under the Land Acquisition Act; I am afraid it is not so. The old Act empowered the Board of Trustees or the

[Sri N. S. Varadachari] [12th December 1950]

Tirupati Devasthanams Committee, as it was then called, to acquire property (The Hon. Sri K. Madhava Menon: 'Even immovable property?'), and immovable property also and the Hon. Minister can refer to the old proceedings with which I am familiar and I can tell the Hon. Minister straightway that the Tirupati zamindari, the zamindari brought from the Raja of Karvetnagar or his creditors, would never have been acquired but for the action of the then trustee, I think it was the Mahant who first acted as the trustee. Acquisition of landed properties for devasthanams leads to several very unhealthy transactions and that is why the ancient salutary rule was laid down by Ramanuja that no temple should have a surplus at the end of the year and whatever is earned during the course of the year must be spent and no surplus should be left over. It is a very good rule, a rule which all Governments observe to-day. For instance, if the Government frame a budget and find that it has enough revenue to cover the expenditure, it generally leaves a nominal surplus and does not keep by sums leaving other Governments to spend or sit on the hoard preventing the continuance of good programme of works. It applied in ancient days to temples. Some times, a temple may get a gift of lands by a worshipper; nobody objects to that; the trustees immediately take possession of the lands but the purchase of lands involves greater responsibility. Mr. Speaker, Sir, you know how during the course of the discussions on the Zamindari Abolition Bill, I referred to how the Tirupati Devasthanam had been defrauded of the total of the tasik allowance which is made applicable to inams and not to zamin estates. The trustees first invested the moneys on the orders of the Government and the Government later on come with the legislation practically abolishing property and giving only very little compensation. It is really a fraud on the devasthanam. But we have all gone through that process and I do not propose to re-open that question now but my desire is that such things should not occur again and that is my anxiety and that is why I say, Sir, that not trustee and not even the Board of Trustees, however good and competent it may be, should acquire landed property. If the acquisition is under the Land Acquisition Act, it will be in terms of this very Act and under the previous provision where the executive officer is made the panchayat officer, several things have to be acquired. May I point out that the whole of the precincts of the tank have been made ugly by allowing all sorts of shops and business places; mushroom, barber shops and hotels disfigure the whole place and there is no sense of art or decency shown by us and the worshipping public is very angry in this regard. The whole place is misused for all sorts of purposes under cover of small interspaces left between buildings. The whole of it, I recommend to Government, should be demolished even by acquisition proceedings and the tank should be left unpolluted and the small temple on the tank premises which the Hon. Sri C. Rajagopalachari was kind enough to visit and express great admiration for its architectural qualities, should be put on view; it is not with the main temple but on the bund of the tank, the ancient Varahaswami temple is there a beautiful temple and if once the tank is thrown open and all sorts of shops that I referred to are cleared, it would make the place a beauty spot, with deep valleys and green hills allround. Returning to acquisition of property, I must say, Sir, that the acquisition of landed properties even for the benefit of devasthanams is a thing to which I must very strongly object even if the Act permitted such a thing and the Government would do well to make a rule that they will not authorize such purchase by the Board of Trustees.

"The Hon. Minister was kind enough during the course of his reply to refer to its electricity undertaking. I am glad to be able to tell him that the Government have already nationalized this undertaking and it is going to be taken over in a short time; the handling of this undertaking by the devasthanam was such that the taking over of the undertaking had to be deferred for one year because of the utter confusion in the accounts of that particular branch of work; not only the matter of distribution of electricity but anything outside the strict scope of devasthanam work, they should not handle. Government should be very cautious and should not, as a rule, authorize devasthanams to indulge in activities which are foreign to their interests. As the priority proposition was lost and the danger of surpluses being applied to all sorts of purposes is gone, the Board of Trustees will now only apply the funds to the maintenance, repair and renovation of the institution already in existence under the devasthanam and to such purposes as would be wholly within the purview of the devasthanam itself. So, I desire that the Government should really look into the question and even if they can take power, they should not allow the trustees to acquire landed property. They cost in the past lakhs of rupees and as I said, the temple has been defrauded to a very great extent. These things should be taken into consideration and the devasthanams should be left free with their work of making the place beautiful and sacred and attractive for the pilgrims."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, Sri Varadachari complains that I do not answer him: I must submit, Sir, that I have nothing to say with reference to what he said. He referred to improper things that were going on and suggested that they should be rectified. I agree with him and how can I answer him if I agree with him? He is perfectly right and I agree with him and by the way, Sir, that was the best answer that he gave to the points raised by Sri Viswanatham, thought he was not satisfied with my answer. My hon. Friend suggested that the trustees should not be allowed to acquire property and that is the very reason perhaps why acquisition of property is authorized by the Government. I perfectly agree with him, Sir, and I have nothing more to say on this."

Clause 88, as amended, was put and carried.

Clause 89 was put and carried.

[12th December 1950]

Clause 90.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'That clause 90 do stand part of the Bill.'

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move—

'In sub-clause (a), delete the words "or executive officer". I am moving only this portion, Sir.'

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I wish to point out that there are temples where there are no trustees but there are only executive officers. If the words 'executive officer' is removed, the clause will become meaningless, Sir."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"But, Sir, under the provisions of the Act, you contemplate having trustees for every temple and you cannot have only executive officers and when you notify it, it is practically under Government management.

"In my opinion, Sir, it is the trustee who must be put in possession of the institution or records; without any offence to friends it is my opinion, Sir, that the executive officer is a new interloper who has been sent out in the first instance and is brought in again under this clause and the word 'executive officer' existed at the time when clause 40 was there and when that clause goes, along with that the executive officer must also go. Therefore, it is the trustee that must be put in possession and he should have a sense of responsibility and the pride of management of the institution. That is the reason why I move this amendment, Sir."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I second the amendment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I submit that if the words 'executive officer' are not there, all the clauses that we have passed previously will become meaningless."

The amendment was put and lost.

Sub-clause (c).

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move the amendment standing in my name. It runs thus—

'(i) In sub-clause (c), delete the words "under section 61 or" and for the words "the Board before the commencement of this Act", substitute the words "the court".'

Sir, I am anxious to protect only such schemes as were framed or approved by the court. That is why I gave notice of this amendment. After all we are now having a new legislation and we are giving a new trend to the entire administration of the religious institutions. In the previous Act, most of the schemes were framed by the court, and so let us allow the entire administration to fall in line with the schemes framed or approved by the court."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"Sir, in seconding this amendment, I only wish to point out that we want to take in certain institutions for which schemes have been provided. But we do not want to upset schemes already in existence. Unless it is a scheme approved by the court, we should not take cognizance of it."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, the amendment if accepted would read thus—

'Where a person has been appointed—

(c) as manager in any scheme framed by the court.'

Sir, this means that my hon. Friend wants that if a manager is appointed under clause 61, he should have no power. I cannot agree to it.'

The amendment was put and lost.

MR. SPEAKER:—"Mr. Karanth is not here. The Hon. Minister will move his amendment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move—

'In the first proviso, for the word "provided", substitute "Provided also" and before that proviso, insert the following proviso:—

"Provided however that before issuing any such certificate in respect of any property, the Commissioner shall give notice to the trustee, office-holder or servant of the religious institution, as the case may be, of his intention to issue the certificate and consider the objections, if any, of such trustee, office-holder or servant."

Sir, in cases where the officers are resisted and where an application has to be made to the magistrate, a certificate from the Commissioner in a prescribed form setting forth that the property in dispute belongs to the religious institution has to be issued so that the magistrate may take cognizance of the case. For the property may be in the possession of somebody and the magistrate will have to issue notice to him. It is for that purpose this proviso is necessary."

• The amendment was put and carried.

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I beg to move—

'Delete the Explanation.'

Sir, the Explanation reads thus—

• 'A person claiming under an alienation contrary to the provisions of section 31 or 36 shall not be regarded as a person claiming in good faith within the meaning of this section.'

[Sri T. Viswanatham] [12th December 1950]

Now, Sir, clauses 31 and 36 relate to the possession and title of immovable properties. If a person is in possession of a property and claims it under an alienation and is in possession of it, because he claims to be an alienee from a trustee of the property, then under this Explanation his title to the property is disputed. Even though he shows his title-deed, he cannot be claimed to hold his property in good faith. This is what it comes to by reading clauses 31 and 36 together. Then, Sir, clause 36 deals with inams. The same thing that happens to a transaction under clause 31 happens to a transaction under clause 36. Why should Government conclusively presume that the alienee is not holding his property in good faith? Therein, Sir, we are treading on very dangerous grounds of jurisprudence. It is a very extraordinary thing to say, even when a man shows his document of title, that Government should declare him not to possess his property in good faith. Therefore I say, this Explanation should be deleted."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA :—" Sir, I second this amendment. If for any reason this Bill may be declared ultra vires of this Legislature, if for any reason the Government of India may come down upon this Government to obliterate root and branch the whole framework of this Bill, it is if we adopt this Explanation. Perhaps this Legislature may pass this Bill under the power given to them in the concurrent list of the Constitution. But, Sir, the adoption of this Explanation goes contrary to the fundamental principles of the Evidence Act. What is possession in good faith is a function to be judged by the court. But this Government are prejudging it in this clause. The second proviso says that a certain thing shall be conclusive evidence. This cuts at the legality of any transaction. So, Sir, in the interest of legislation I request Government to withdraw the two provisos."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, I am very sorry I have to say that we have been talking without understanding exactly the scope of the Explanation. Because this is a case where the trustee or the executive officer sends away or dismisses a temple servant, or a temple servant resigns, but the property of the institution is with that person. The party subsequently appointed should get the property. If he has to say that the property belongs to the institution he should get a certificate from the Commissioner, so that the court may proceed on that certificate declaring that the property belongs to the religious institution. It is only after that certificate is issued that the magistrate may issue notice to the person in possession of the property. Sub-clause (c) specifically says against whom this certificate should be issued. It says, 'in the case of a trustee, office-holder or servant of the religious institution who has been dismissed or suspended from his office or is otherwise not entitled to be in possession of the property or by any person claiming or deriving title from such trustee, office-holder or servant.' I only wish to say, suppose a person is holding a stolen property, knowing it to be stolen. Can it be said that he is holding the property in good faith. Similarly, Sir, under clause 31, an alienation of any temple property by a temple servant will not have a valid title unless it is approved by the Commissioner."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA :—" What about the third party? "

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" There is no question of third party at all here. Clause 31 specifically says, any immovable property belonging to or given or endowed for the purposes of any religious institution shall be null and void unless it is sanctioned by the Commissioner. So that any sale or exchange cannot be said to be done in good faith without the sanction of the Commissioner. Clause 36 relates to inams. Inams cannot be transferred by anybody. So any act done in contravention of clauses 31 and 36 is contrary to good faith."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Sir, I am very sorry, the Hon. Minister has not caught my point. There is no question of dismissed servant of the religious institution here. That is the red-herring he has brought forward."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, let us not proceed on wrong principles. I would request my hon. Friend to read clause 30 carefully. Does it not speak of dismissed servant? "

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Sir, the Explanation does not refer to any such man. The Explanation refers to an alienation, in which case the alienee may be a dismissed man, or he may be an undismissed man, or he may be a prospective man to be appointed as trustee. So, where is the question of dismissal in this Explanation? Then, Sir, about the question of certificate. What is the sort of certificate the Commissioner wants to give? The certificate says that the property belongs to the religious institution. But the man will say, 'I have got it by means of a sale or exchange under clause 31 or 36.' So, the question comes to this: The Commissioner becomes a claimant to the property; but it is he who is asked to issue the certificate that the property belongs to the religious institution. When the other man disputes his claim, how is the Commissioner competent to issue the certificate? So, Sir, the Commissioner should not be the judge. When the other man disputes the claim because of legal title vested in him, legally the Commissioner's certificate should not have any operative force at all. His certificate offends against the very fundamentals of jurisprudence. So, I submit, my amendment must be accepted. Otherwise what Mr. Raghavayya says will come to pass."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is—
'Delete the Explanation.' "

The amendment was lost.

MR. SPEAKER :—" I am going to put clause 30, as amended, to the vote of the House."

[12th December 1950]

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Sir, the second proviso to the clause, as amended, reads as follows :—

' Provided also that for the purpose of proceedings under this section, the certificate aforesaid shall be conclusive evidence that the properties to which it relates belong to the religious institution.'

One of the disputants is the Commissioner and the Commissioner's certificate is said to be conclusive evidence! This theory of conclusive evidence was the subject of a great many judicial pronouncements in England and America. I shall refer to one or two sentences from a book called 'Law and the Executive in Britain' by Schwartz. The Committee on Ministers' Powers or the Donoughmore Committee which went into the scope of delegated legislation in England was of the opinion that the 'conclusive evidence' clause 'seems on its face to have been designed with the express purpose of completely and finally excluding all control by the courts.' Again, referring to the conclusive evidence clause, Lord Hewart in his book of 'The New Despotism' asks: Is it or is it not tolerably certain that the majority in Parliament were not aware of such a provision or, being aware, very few realized the effect of the words 'conclusive evidence'? May I also quote a few sentences from the book 'Concerning English Administrative Law' by Sir Cecil Thomas Carr?

'The telephone service in Britain is conducted by the Post Office. A telephone subscriber disputed the number of calls for which he was charged. The Postmaster-General sued him for the few shillings in dispute and put in a certified copy of the account. The Telephone Regulations in force declare that a certified copy shall be conclusive evidence both of the amount and of the subscriber's obligation to pay it. The subscriber's counsel protested that so monstrous a regulation must be ultra vires; it made the Postmaster-General judge in his own cause.'

In this Bill also, when the Commissioner is claiming the property, it is not right that his certificate should be treated as conclusive evidence barring all judicial evidence altogether."

SRI D. V. RAMASWAMI :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I am afraid I cannot agree with Sri T. Viswanatham. This clause deals with the contingency when a trustee or a manager is resisted in obtaining possession of the properties of a religious institution from one who is not entitled to keep them. In civil and criminal matters, a court alone is competent to issue an order about the title to a property. But in this case the certificate of the Commissioner will be of great help in enabling the magistrate to direct immediate delivery of possession of the properties to the trustee or manager. the onus probandi or burden of proof rests with the person who is asked to deliver the properties and he has to prove how he is entitled to be in possession. I think that the clause as amended by the Government amendment is in order."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, the Commissioner's certificate is not at all a conclusive proof of title to properties in all cases. It is taken as a conclusive proof only for the purposes of proceedings under this clause. Suppose a dismissed or suspended trustee or servant of a religious institution is in possession of a house or some other properties of the institution, and he resists the lawfully appointed trustee or manager in taking possession of them. We say that the executive officer or manager may apply to the court of a First-Class Magistrate for possession of those properties. The clause does not at all prevent the person in hostile possession from filing a suit in a court and establishing his title to the properties. Only for the purpose of the proceeding before the Magistrate, the Commissioner's certificate is treated as conclusive evidence that the properties to which it relates belong to the institution, and the Magistrate is asked to direct delivery of the properties to the lawful authority. The certificate is not a conclusive proof of everything in the world."

Clause 90 as amended was put and carried.

Clause 91.

MR. SPEAKER :—" The motion is—
'That clause 91 do stand part of the Bill.'"

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Sir, I move—
'In clause 91, delete sub-clause (2).'

"The first sub-clause respects the discretion of the court in apportioning the cost of proceedings. The second sub-clause is not necessary. It is better to leave the discretion in a matter like this to the court. With regard to appeals and applications before the Commissioner or a Deputy Commissioner, they are merely departmental proceedings and statutory provision for apportioning the cost of such proceedings need not be made. If there is no statutory provision, the conditions may be varied from time to time. So far as the discretion of the court is concerned, it is necessary and we may give statutory recognition to it."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA :—" Sir, I second the amendment.

"Sub-clause (1) of clause 91 is only a rehearsal of what is contained in the Civil Procedure Code about the powers of the court. It is not proper for a legislation to repeat what is contained in the general law of the country. It is no good of our telling the court as to what it should do. It has already got the power contemplated by this sub-clause. My view is—this sub-clause is not necessary. The grace of legislation requires that it should go.

"Sub-clause (2) is grotesque because what should be left to the discretion of the court is left to the discretion of the Commissioner or Deputy Commissioner. To say that the cost of a proceeding should be apportioned by the Commissioner or Deputy Commissioner looks to a lawyer at least, if not to anybody else, rather illegal, grotesque and improper."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, it is the objection that is illegal, grotesque and improper. Sri Raghavayya says that sub-clause (1) is not necessary, because the power contemplated by it is already conferred on the courts by the Civil Procedure Code. But when we say that the discretion of the court is subject to the provisions of clause 82, this sub-clause is necessary. Sri Viswanatham has no objection to this sub-clause and he says that it is perfectly right.

"Sub-clause (2) relates to the cost of proceedings before the Commissioner or Deputy Commissioner. Suppose there is a proceeding before a Commissioner in which the claim of the trustees is being resisted by another person. Whether the cost of that proceeding should be met from the trust funds or whether the other person should be asked to pay is left to the discretion of the Commissioner. What power is given to the Magistrate for apportioning the cost of proceedings in a court is given to the Commissioner in respect of proceedings before him."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Sir, I object to the Commissioner or Deputy Commissioner apportioning the cost of proceedings before him as the matter does not stop there. In a departmental proceeding, he can say as to who should pay and how much he should pay. This provision embodies a curious principle of procedure. It says that the Commissioner can pass an order apportioning the costs and that the court should execute the order as if it had been passed by itself. I have not heard of such a provision at all. (Interruption by the Hon. Sri K. Madhava Menon.) The defence of the Hon. Sri Madhava Menon is that this kind of grotesqueness exists in the existing Act. I did not see it and I plead guilty. If the Commissioner has got to recover anything by way of costs, he can say that such and such a party should pay. But there is no separate provision in which it is said that the Commissioner can recover the costs from any party. That is one thing. The second thing is that he can pass an order and send it to a civil court for execution. What is the earthly connection between the Commissioner who is appointed by the Government and the court? If the Commissioner wants to recover any cost, let him file a suit, get a decree and get it executed. But it is said that the Commissioner's order is to be treated by the civil court as if it is a decree of the court and executed. This is a strange thing. If this is the first precedent to be passed by a democratic Assembly like this, I have nothing to say."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, the conception of democracy differs, if this provision is objectionable. I will take a concrete instance. In clause 62 which we have already passed, there are several matters which can be decided by a Deputy Commissioner. There is provision for appeal to the Commissioner against the order of the Deputy Commissioner and for instituting a suit in a court against the order of the Commissioner. Suppose the trustees of a religious institution say that such and such a property belongs to the institution, and the person in possession of it disputes that statement. The person goes before the Commissioner.

12th December 1950] [Sri K. Madhava Menon]

After making enquiries the Commissioner says that the property does not belong to the institution, that the trustees were wrong in claiming the property for the institution and that they should pay the cost of the proceedings to the person in whose favour he has passed the order. He may be a stranger and the Commissioner may say that the cost of the proceedings should be met by the trustees and paid out of the trust funds. The party is entitled to get the cost from the trust funds. The Commissioner's order is final, as no appeal to the court is provided for. When the matter stops with the Commissioner, how can a court apportion the costs?

"The Court is not bound to execute the order of the Commissioner in all cases. It is provided that the order shall be executed by the court if and in so far as the court considers it to be a reasonable one. The court can go into the order. Only when it is satisfied about its reasonableness, the court is bound to execute it. This is not against democracy."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA :—" On a point of information, Sir, may I know what is the court referred to by the Government in sub-clause (2) of clause 91."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" A court means, a civil court having jurisdiction over the matter. The definition clause may be seen."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is—

'Delete sub-clause (2) of clause 91.' "

The amendment was lost.

Clause 91 was put and carried.

Clause 92.

MR. SPEAKER :—" The motion is—

'That clause 92 do stand part of the Bill.' "

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I move—

'(1) In sub-clause (1) of clause 92, for the paragraph beginning with the words "the trustee, or where there is more than one trustee and ending with the words during which the act or default so continues", substitute the following :—

"the trustee, or where there is more than one trustee, each of the trustee shall be punishable with fine which may extend to two hundred rupees; and in case the act or default complained of continues for more than one month, with a further fine which may extend to one hundred rupees for every week or part thereof during which the act or default so continues."

[Sri K. Madhava Menon] [12th December 1950]

"Sir, the object of the amendment is this. Originally the power of punishment was given to the Commissioner and now we are saying that the business of the Commissioner is simply to complain and it is the court that should give the decision and so, the amendment takes away the power from the Commissioner and gives it to the court. It is for that purpose that we have removed the words 'unless he shows reasonable cause to the satisfaction of the Government' from clause 92 (c) and now it means, that where the trustee disobeys or does not comply with any of the things required of him under this Bill, he will be committing an offence under this clause. I hope, Sir, the House will accept the amendment."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA :—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I wish to oppose this amendment. I submit, Sir, that the penalty for the default in such a thing is too drastic and the punishment contemplated is absolutely unwarranted. I do not think that a similar provision exists in any of the Bills hitherto passed in this House. In this clause you are contemplating that the default of any and every action on the part of the trustee to be an offence even though it may simply be one of negligence or delay. Even if there is a delay of more than a month in the submission of a reply or a return, the trustee can be fined to the extent of Rs. 100."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"Sir, the fine of Rs. 100, etc., is provided at the end of the second sub-paragraph of sub-clause 92 (1) (c), but this Government amendment is for the former portion of it, up to the end of the words '... default so continues'. I should like to know whether the hon. Member opposes the original clause or the present amendment of the Government, Sir."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA :—"Sir, I am opposing the quantum of fine that is proposed here. For instance, it is said that in case the act or default complained of continues for more than one month, a fine not exceeding one hundred rupees will be imposed, for every week or part thereof during which the act or default continues. There is no Act in the whole world like this. That is why I oppose this, Sir."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I must congratulate the Government on the fact that instead of themselves punishing these poor trustees for any of these defaults, which was their original intention, now they have left the matter to a court and to that extent they have changed their ideas, and for that they deserve to be congratulated. The clause says, that the trustee can be fined for any refusal, neglect, or failure to comply with the provisions of section 27 or 28 or any of the various things described in sub-clauses (1) (b) and (1) (c) of clause 92. Clause 27 says that the trustee in every temple shall prepare and maintain a register, showing the names of past and present trustees, and particulars as to the custom, if any, regarding succession to the office of trustee, particulars of endowments, title deeds and documents, particulars of dittams, the names of offices to which any salary is attached, the particulars about jewels, gold, silver, precious stones, vessels, utensils, etc., and other movables belonging to the temples, particulars of idols and other images and such other particulars as may be required by the Commissioner. Clause 28 says that there shall be an annual verification and scrutiny of these registers and a statement about it shall be submitted to the Commissioner.

"Now, Sir, these are things which, in the ordinary course of official work, all Government servants are enjoined to do, but has it ever been contended that omission or neglect to do any of these things will amount to a criminal offence? The Government can take action against any person for his neglect of duty. They can suspend him or censure and even dismiss him, in case there is any grave default. But it should never be considered as a criminal offence and the person punished for that. Even in our local administration, where a clerk has neglected to do his duty, we simply warn him, or transfer him or supersede him or even suspend him, but we never deem it a criminal offence. I submit, Sir, there should be some ordinary sense of justice in these things and my hon. Friend Sri V. Raghavayya is perfectly right in opposing this clause and I also give my support to him."

The amendment was put and carried.

Sub-clauses (2) and (3).

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"Sir, I move—

'For sub-clauses (2) and (3) of clause 92, substitute the following sub-clauses:—

"(2) No court shall take cognizance of an offence punishable under sub-section (1) except on the complaint in writing of the Commissioner.

(3) No offence punishable under sub-section (1) shall be inquired into or tried by any court inferior to that of a Magistrate of the first-class.

(4) The Commissioner may accept from any trustee who has committed or is reasonably suspected of having committed any of the offences referred to in sub-section (1), by way of composition of such offence, a sum of money not exceeding one thousand rupees.

(5) Any fine imposed under sub-section (1) or any money payable by way of composition under sub-section (4) shall be paid by the trustee from his own funds and not from the funds of the religious institution concerned."

[12th December 1950]

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Sir, these defaults and neglect of duty are treated as criminal offences here, while clauses 27 and 28 do not say that neglect or default of any of the duties mentioned therein would constitute a criminal offence. They are simply certain duties and responsibilities imposed on the trustees and their agents and unless it is declared in clauses 27 and 28 that the default or breach of any of these duties shall be deemed a criminal offence and punishable with a fine, it would not be legal or correct to make them a criminal offence in this clause and punishable with a fine. Let us inform these trustees hereafter, whenever they accept the position of trustees in temples that if they fail to maintain these registers or neglect to do any of the duties enjoined upon them by clauses 27 and 28, they would be committing an offence punishable with a fine up to Rs. 100, and let us see how they react."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, my only reply to the remarks of my hon. Friend Sri T. Viswanatham is that it is not this clause that makes the default or refusal to do any of the duties mentioned in clauses 27 and 28 as a criminal offence. What we have already passed after a great deal of discussion makes them criminal offences."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is—

'For sub-clauses (2) and (3) of clause 92, substitute the following sub-clauses:—

"(2) No Court shall take cognizance of an offence punishable under sub-section (1) except on the complaint in writing of the Commissioner.

(3) No offence punishable under sub-section (1) shall be inquired into or tried by any court inferior to that of a magistrate of the first class.

(4) The Commissioner may accept from any trustee who has committed or is reasonably suspected of having committed any of the offences referred to in sub-section (1), by way of composition of such offence, a sum of money not exceeding one thousand rupees.

(5) Any fine imposed under sub-section (1) or any money payable by way of composition under sub-section (4) shall be paid by the trustee from his own funds and not from the funds of the religious institution concerned."

The amendment was carried.

Clause 92 as amended was put and carried.

Clause 93 was put and carried.

12th December 1950]

Clause 94.

MR. SPEAKER :—" The motion is—

'That clause 94 do stand part of the Bill.'

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, I move—

'For clause 94, substitute the following clause:—

"94. Nothing contained in this Act shall—

(a) save as otherwise expressly provided in or under this Act, affect any honour, emolument or perquisite to which any person is entitled by custom or otherwise in any religious institution, or its established usage in regard to any other matter; or

(b) authorize any interference with the religious and spiritual functions of the head of a math including those relating to the imparting of religious instruction or the rendering of spiritual service."

"Sir, clause 94 as introduced by the Select Committee runs as follows:—

'Save as otherwise provided in or under this Act, nothing herein contained shall—

(a) affect, etc. . . .

"We have simply changed the order of words in the following manner, in order to make them read better:—

'Nothing contained in this Act shall—

(a) save as otherwise expressly provided in or under this Act, affect, etc., . . .

"Sir, this is only a verbal alteration for this saving clause.

"Sir, my hon. Friend, Sri Appa Rao has also given notice of an amendment to add the following at the end of sub-clause (a) of this clause:—

'provided no distinction is made amongst various castes and sub-castes of Hindus in the matter of worship in a temple.'

Sir, that has already been provided in the Temple Entry Act and therefore it is unnecessary here."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Sir, I move—

'Add a new sub-clause (c) as follows:—

"(c) affect the right of any religious denomination or trustees of a religious or charitable institution to manage their own affairs or administer their property subject to laws regarding the transfer of property and laws regarding public order, morality and health, or the law of crime."

Sir, if the sub-clauses moved by the Government are going to be accepted, my amendment only falls into line with them. Anything must have a beginning, a middle, and an end. Sub-clause (a) is the beginning, sub-clause (b) is the middle, and the new sub-clause (c) that I have moved will be the end. The new sub-clauses are moved by the Hon. the Minister as a saving clause. The idea of those sub-clauses is to see that we shall not trench upon the administration or management of the affairs of an institution by the religious denomination concerned. The first sub-clause deals with emolument or perquisite. The second sub-clause deals with interference. The third sub-clause will naturally flow from the provisions of the Constitution. Therefore, the sub-clause that I have moved should be there."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"Sir, I second the amendment. It is easy for the Government to accept this amendment. It gives only the right that the Government themselves feel that they should give in respect of the first two sub-clauses. They have provided for emoluments, perquisite, honour and interference with the religious and spiritual functions. The new sub-clause moved by the hon. Member, Mr. T. Viswanatham gives the right of management. This is specifically provided for in the Constitution itself. I therefore request the Government to accept this new sub-clause which is quite in consonance with the Constitution, and also the words, I find, have been copied from the Constitution."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"The amendment of the hon. Member, Mr. Viswanatham to add a new sub-clause is nothing more than what is contained in Article 26 of the Constitution which says that nothing shall be done which goes against the provisions of the Constitution. The Government themselves are moving an amendment to that effect. Therefore, there is no necessity for the amendment of the hon. Member, Mr. Viswanatham."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The question is—

'Add a new sub-clause (c) as follows:—

"(c) affect the right of any religious denomination or trustees of a religious or charitable institution to manage their own affairs or administer their property subject to laws regarding the transfer of property and laws regarding public order, morality and health, or the law of crime." "

The amendment was lost.

MR. SPEAKER:—"I now put the Government amendment to the vote of the House. The question is—

'For clause 94, substitute the following clause:—

"94. Nothing contained in this Act shall—

(a) save as otherwise expressly provided in or under this Act, affect any honour, emolument or perquisite to which any person is entitled by custom or otherwise in any religious institution, or its established usage in regard to any other matter; or

12th December 1950] [Mr. Speaker]

(b) authorize any interference with the religious and spiritual functions of the head of a math including those relating to the imparting of religious instruction or the rendering of spiritual service." "

The amendment was carried.

New Clause 94-A.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I move—
'After clause 94, insert the following clause:—

"94-A. Nothing contained in this Act shall be deemed to confer any power or impose any duty in contravention of the rights conferred on any religious denomination or any section thereof by clauses (a), (b) and (c) of Article 26 of the Constitution." "

Sir, this is only a copy of the amendment of the hon. Member, Mr. Viswanatham which he just now moved, and which was lost. The present amendment is identical except in the sense that he did not use the words 'Article 26 of the Constitution.' I say that if there are any clauses in this Bill which can be stated to contravene the provisions of the Constitution, it casts a duty upon the court to find out what portion contravenes the Constitution and what portion does not, and only that portion which contravenes should be declared invalid. Otherwise there is the danger of the whole thing becoming invalid. That is the reason for this amendment."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, we are in a very curious position. When I moved an amendment, the Hon. the Minister rose and said 'I oppose it as it is superfluous.' But now he himself comes forward with this amendment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, I did not say that the amendment of the hon. Member was superfluous. I only said 'I am moving a similar amendment, and, therefore, there is no necessity for hon. Mr. Viswanatham's amendment.' "

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"It is easy for the Hon. the Minister to say whatever he likes. The wording of my amendment, which the Hon. the Minister did not like to accept, was substantially different. Actually my amendment related to certain rights of management of properties and other things. That has got a definite meaning and a definite purpose. In the previous clause adopted by the House, the Government wanted to make savings with regard to the honour, emolument or perquisite to which any person was entitled by custom or otherwise and they have provided against any interference with the religious and spiritual functions of the head of a math. I said that the Government must make provision for any rights acquired by the religious denomination with regard to the management. That is the positive way of putting things. But perhaps it did not suit the taste of the Hon. the Minister. The Hon. the Minister comes and says that, because we have objected in the beginning to the introduction of the Bill, and then raised objections to the several clauses of the Bill after it came from the Select Committee, he thought that the wind could be taken out of the sails if clause 7 was deleted and this beautiful clause was put at the end of the Bill. Because we have been attacking the several clauses saying that they offend the Constitution, he stated 'all right; why do you bother yourself with the Constitution; I shall introduce a safeguard.' What is that safeguard, Sir? The safeguard is 'Nothing contained in this Act shall be deemed to confer any power or impose any duty in contravention of the rights conferred on any religious denomination or any section thereof by clauses (a), (b) and (c) of Article 26 of the Constitution.' This is only a matter for interpretation. There is no use of saying that nothing which offends Article 26 of the Constitution shall be deemed to have been authorized under this Bill. This is no legislation at all if I may say so. When it offends the Constitution, it becomes illegal, and it becomes ultra vires. We need not say that here. I am here reminded of a story, Mr. Speaker. Once upon a time there was a woman (even now there are such women) who wanted to save the coconuts from being stolen from the tree. There was the thief. She did not know how to prevent that thief from getting up the tree and stealing the coconuts. Therefore like a good, orthodox Hindu woman, she brought out a madi dhoti (which others should not touch) and tied it round that tree so that this thief might not get up the tree and steal the coconuts and slept secure. But the thief got up the tree and took away both the coconuts and the cloth (laughter). That is the moral of the story which the Hon. the Minister must bear in mind when he moves an amendment like the one that he moved. In every legislation we can have a clause like that. Only that would not be legislation at all. On the other hand the amendment which I moved was a positive one which the Hon. the Minister did not accept. I would request the Hon. the Minister, in the interests of legislative rectitude, not to have such a clause. It is not necessary, because it leaves the matter again for interpretation whether a particular clause offends the Constitution or not. It will always be a matter of dispute. To say that whatever offends the Constitution is not supposed to be authorized by this Bill, is superfluous and is an unnecessary burden to all."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, it is not so strange as the hon. Member, Mr. Viswanatham says. There are a number of Acts which contain saving clauses like this. After the Adaptation of Laws Order, 1950, in the Specific Relief Act, 1877 (Central Act 1 of 1877), section 50 is the saving clause. It says 'Nothing in this Chapter shall affect the power conferred on a High Court by clause (1) of Article 226 of the Constitution.' Why should the Government of India adopt this saving clause? It is not so absurd, because, in the first place the hon. Member, Mr. Viswanatham himself moved an identical amendment to that effect, though he did not mention the relevant clause. In the Madras Electricity Duty Act, 1939 (Act V of 1939), the saving clause is 'This Act shall have effect subject to the provisions of Article 288 of the Constitution.' In the Madras City Municipal Act, 1919 (Act IV of 1919), the saving is 'In the opening paragraph after "the council may" insert "subject to the provisions of clause (1) of Article 20 of the Constitution."' In the Madras District Municipalities Act, 1920 (Act V of 1920), the saving clause is 'In the opening paragraph after "council may", insert "subject to the provisions of clause (1) of Article 20 of the Constitution."' Therefore, the saving clause provided in the Bill is not strange. There is a specific purpose. I am advised if in a clause there are sub-clauses which offend the Constitution they alone will be affected, and that the other sub-clauses will remain. That is the raison d'être for the new clause 94-A."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is—

'After clause 94, insert the following clause :—

"94-A. Nothing contained in this Act shall be deemed to confer any power or impose any duty in contravention of the rights conferred on any religious denomination or any section thereof by clauses (a), (b) and (c) of Article 26 of the Constitution." "

The amendment was carried.

Clause 95.

MR. SPEAKER :—" The motion is—

'That clause 95 do stand part of the Bill.' "

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, I move—

'(1) In sub-clause (1)—

(a) Omit the brackets and figure "(1)";

(b) For the words "in respect of the administration of a religious institution, or in respect of any other matter or dispute", substitute "in respect of the administration or management of a religious institution or any other matter or dispute".

(2) Omit sub-clause (2).'

"The clause, as amended, will read like this—

'95. No suit or other legal proceeding in respect of the administration or management of a religious institution or any other matter or dispute for determining or deciding which provision is made in this Act, shall be instituted in any court of law, except under, and in conformity with, the provisions of this Act. In the amendment that is moved, the words "or management" have been added.' "

[12th December 1950]

MR. SPEAKER:—"I will put this amendment to the vote of the House. Then I will put the clause, as amended, to the vote of the House. The hon. Member, Mr. Viswanatham may speak on the clause then."

"The question is—

(1) In sub-clause (1)—

(a) Omit the brackets and figure "(1)";

(b) For the words 'in respect of the administration of a religious institution, or in respect of any other matter or dispute', substitute "in respect of the administration or management of a religious institution or any other matter or dispute".

(2) Omit sub-clause (2)."

The amendment was carried.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The hon. Member, Mr. Viswanatham may speak on the amended clause and oppose it. If he moves his amendment, he will get the right of a second speech. But if he opposes the clause, there is no second speech."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Not to have the right of a second speech is one of the greatest losses that I am incurring to-day, Sir. This clause comes like a crown. It is not completely the Crown, but it is the crowning piece of the law maker's skill and talent, and it shows the extent to which Government could go. The clause says 'No suit or other legal proceeding in respect of the administration or management of a religious institution or any other matter or dispute for determining or deciding which provision is made in this Act, . . .'. I ask, Sir, where have they made provision? In a few clauses they have provided. They have already clipped the powers of the Court. I think the Government themselves will come forward with an amendment to this clause later. Even in cases where they have provided for access to courts, the courts have been debarred from exercising some of their inherent functions and doing what is necessary to meet the ends of justice or equity or conscience. Not satisfied with all that, the Government again are coming with a comprehensive clause, namely, clause 95. I submit here that the Government are not doing the right thing. The Hon. Minister was responsible for bringing some other pieces of legislation and where such provisions existed, we drew pointed attention to this fact and although he did not accede to our request in some pieces of legislation, I remember in one or two other Bills which he sponsored later, he omitted this clause. On one or two occasions he told me, 'Don't worry, that obnoxious clause is not present in this Bill.' I was so glad then but now what has happened again for the Hon. Sri K. Madhava Menon to turn back the wheel of progress? It is not right, Sir, that this Legislature should take upon itself the power of debarring all judicial control. You may be aware, Sir, that there is a theory that the State is a Welfare State, and on the ground that it is a Welfare State we have got to do so many things. One of those several things is the proper management of the property of religious institutions and the Government necessarily should take more powers. You cannot run a Welfare State without taking more powers and 'more powers' means necessarily more executive power. But the greater the power the greater the caution for the citizen and the persons who are affected and when they take more powers, they must be more cautious and therefore, the necessity for judicial review increases. We are on a very important point. I am very earnest about this point and the public also are interested in this. Everywhere we are getting comments that the Legislatures of India are ousting the power or jurisdiction of civil courts and judicial review or cutting down the citizen's rights. Even the Chief Justice of India has remarked very strongly that the Legislatures in this country do not seem to understand exactly what they are doing. At one place during the hearing of some case he made remarks and they were reported . . ."

MR. SPEAKER:—"What remarks has he made?"

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"He has remarked that the Legislatures of India in these days should understand fully. . ."

MR. SPEAKER:—"He is preaching to the Legislature. It is very bad of him; he has no business to say that."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Am I entitled to quote him?"

MR. SPEAKER:—"The hon. Member is entitled to quote him. But it is none of the business of the Chief Justice of India to interfere with our work."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"With great respect to you, Sir, I am entitled to rely upon the opinion of the Chief Justice of India and it must carry weight with all of us . . ."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The Hon. the Chief Justice has no business to interfere with our work."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Whether he interferes or not, I am not concerned with it. He knows the scope of his duties, but when he makes certain remarks, certainly I am entitled to canvass opinion upon the basis of his remarks."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"It is just possible hon. Sri Viswanatham quoted from memory. Hon. Speaker is quite right; I am not questioning his remarks. But we should not at once jump to the conclusion that the Chief Justice has said something. . ."

MR. SPEAKER:—"According to hon. Sri Viswanatham."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"I wish your remarks were prefaced with the words, 'if this was true or if the quotation of the hon. Member is correct.' It is just possible under certain limitations in respect of a particular matter . . ."

[12th December 1950]

MR. SPEAKER :—" I am judging from what the hon. Member Sri Viswanatham stated. That is why I passed that remark."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" I am quoting from memory but the sum total of the impression which I have gathered from his remarks is that it is the duty of the Legislatures to understand exactly what they are doing in respect of any legislation. I submit he had a right to say that and I have at any rate a right to quote him."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The hon. Member is entitled to quote him."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Sir, his opinions are entitled to greater respect notwithstanding our disagreement with his views. I submit we ought to know our duty. The Legislature is meant to make laws and laws have got to be interpreted and when laws have got to be interpreted, there is no meaning in saying in every piece of legislation, 'We shall exclude the jurisdiction of the courts; we shall not allow the courts to have this power or that power and the ultimate power of control over executive acts is altogether or partially excluded.' I am perfectly within my bounds when I say that in passing a legislation we must observe certain conditions."

MR. SPEAKER :—" I do not object to the hon. Member saying it. He is at liberty to say that."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" I am sure you will never cut my liberties but on the other hand you will expand my liberties from day to day. In the same way I expect also this Legislature to keep in tact the liberties of the citizens of this State. There are three branches—the Executive, the Legislature and the Judiciary—and although there may be the border line, it is not very clear as in the American Constitution as to which is executive, which is legislative and which is judicial. But still our Constitution is based upon the theory that these three things should flourish together. They are parts of the Constitution and we shall not do anything which subtracts from the spirit of the Constitution. If Bill after Bill is brought forward here and on the floor of the House we seek to oust the jurisdiction of civil courts or impede the access of the ordinary man to ordinary civil courts, I submit we are not doing the right thing, we are not standing by the spirit of the Constitution. I draw your attention to the oath of allegiance which we took when we entered this House and I submit we must stand by its spirit and the more the laws we pass ousting the jurisdiction of civil Courts the more the breaches of our allegiance to the Constitution. Let us not become parties to that. I appeal to the Government that it is not necessary for them to have this clause at all."

MR. SPEAKER :—" I have allowed enough time for the hon. Member."

[12th December 1950]

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" I know I am trespassing upon your indulgence, Sir, but this is a very important thing. The House is thin and matters like ousting the jurisdiction of civil Courts must have even a longer and full-dress debate. I appeal to the Government to remove this clause. Its removal does not harm the purposes of this Bill; on the other hand, it will serve the good conscience of all."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, we have heard a very learned disquisition about the respective functions of the Executive, the Judiciary and the Legislature. My hon. Friend certainly made up for not having a right of reply, in the speech that he has made. With due deference to you, Sir, most of the things he said are redundant, unnecessary or irrelevant. Regarding the fundamental relation between or the duty of the Executive, the Judiciary and the Legislature, most of us also should be expected to know something about them; we are not children who know nothing about them. He warned that we have taken an oath of allegiance to the Constitution and we must keep to it. That sort of threat . . ."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" That is no threat."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Whatever it is, it is quite unnecessary. My hon. Friend may have more experience than myself or many of us here. But what is the implication of his saying: 'You are going against the Constitution, this goes against your oath of allegiance.' These things are not necessary."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" I did not point the finger like that, Sir." (Laughter.)

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" I only point out what he should have done, Sir. Of course, he stood with folded hands, Sir."

"A reference was made to the observations of the Chief Justice of India. His Lordship in deciding a question with regard to a legislation of the Central Provinces Legislature made a remark that in the wording of certain sections the Legal Department of that Government had not looked into the matter carefully and if it had looked into it carefully the difficulty would not have arisen. So, he said in drafting the legislation . . ."

MR. SPEAKER :—" He has not said what we should do?"

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Never, Sir. He has never trespassed upon us. I remember perfectly well, Sir. He has said that in the matter of drafting of legislation care must be taken so that the time of the court need not be wasted and people need not be put into trouble. That is perfectly right and we all must agree with it."

"My hon. Friend also said in certain pieces of legislation we have not had the clause excluding the right to go to court. But here we are dealing with religious institutions and endowments and with trust property. While moving clause 67, I said that wherever there is a dispute as to the title to property, the matter should go to the court and the court's decision should prevail. In other matters where it is sheer wasteful litigation involving the spending of the funds of the religious institution, there must be some restriction. It is because it is the property of the trust, and my religious instincts say that we should not allow our money to be spent upon wasteful, unnecessary and extravagant litigations. It is wrong to say that we are ousting the jurisdiction of civil courts. We are not. Wherever a question of title to property or the exercise of a particular right is concerned, we have not excluded the jurisdiction of the court. Therefore, according to me, there is no question of going against the Constitution or excluding the jurisdiction of courts."

Clause 95 as amended was put and carried.

New clause 95-A.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, I move --

'That after clause 95, the following clause be inserted :—

"95-A. Nothing contained in any law of limitation for the time being in force shall be deemed to vest in any person the property or funds of any religious institution which had not vested in such person or his predecessor-in-title before the commencement of this Act."

"This clause is intended to ensure that no property of a religious institution vests in any person after the commencement of this Act solely by adverse possession."

The motion was put and carried.

Clause 96 was put and carried.

Clause 97.

MR. SPEAKER :—" The motion is—

'That clause 97 do stand part of the Bill.'"

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Sir, this is a wonderful clause and as a matter of fact, this clause must not be there. (Laughter.) Clause 95 was bad and clause 97 is worse. Let me try to explain to you how. It is good that we go into these things somewhat in a more detailed manner as we will then know where we are. The clause says—

'Save as otherwise expressly provided in this Act, no notification or certificate issued, order passed, decision made, proceedings or action taken, scheme settled, or other thing done under the provisions of this Act by the Government, the Commissioner or a Deputy Commissioner, an Area Committee, or an Assistant Commissioner, shall be liable to be questioned in any court of law.'

12th December 1950] [Sri T. Viswanatham]

I want that the people of this country should be saved from a clause like this. We have seen the effect of such a saving clause previously, and we have been fighting every clause where such a provision is made. We have seen how far the jurisdiction of the courts has been taken away and how far it has been retained. We have passed the clause relating to the bar of suits in respect of administration of religious institutions over the decision of the Commissioner or the Government. Where do we come now? We stand now on the very brink of the precipice. Please see the wording 'No notification, or certificate issued, order passed, decision made, proceedings or action taken, scheme settled, or other thing done . . .'. Even an Act that is not specified here is included in this clause. So no certificate or notification issued by any one of the venerable gentlemen mentioned in the clause shall be liable to be questioned in any court of law. I want to ask you in all earnestness whether this can be called a legislation at all."

MR. SPEAKER :—" Does the hon. Member want to ask me? "

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" I mean the Government, Sir. Moreover, such questions are not put to get an immediate answer. When I say 'I ask you.' I am asking the Government and I am asking the hon. Members of this House to consider whether such a clause is consistent with any notion of fairplay to the persons affected. I submit that clause 95 was bad and it offended my conscience. But when I come to clause 97, it simply takes my breath away. Sir, whatever is done, whether it is right or wrong, whether the due process of law has been observed or not, or whether the prescribed rules have been observed or not, whether it is proper or not, or whether it was a certificate issued or order passed by an Assistant Commissioner, or an Area Committee, the clause says that it shall not be questioned in a court of law. I submit that this is the very limit to which we can go. I ask the Hon. Minister to consider for one moment calmly without thinking that I have been obstructing the early passage of the Bill and have been obstructing the various clauses, the implications of this clause. For heaven's sake, let him agree to the dropping of this clause 97. It will do him good, it will do us good and it will do everybody good."

SRI N. S. YARADACHARI :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I just want to get some little information from the Hon. Minister by way of illustration. For instance, in the case of charitable endowments, it is provided that if only mismanagement was proved, there can be a notification of the institution, or of the endowment. Now, the matter whether there has been mismanagement or not is left entirely to the Commissioner or to the Government to decide. I do not exactly remember the relevant clause; but it is either of the two. Suppose the Commissioner or the Government come to the conclusion that mismanagement to their

[12th December 1950]

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA :—" Sir, I move—

Delete the first proviso to clause 99.

I do not want this first proviso to clause 99; because, these Area Committees are selected at random. What is in the interests of the temple or the institution might be otherwise better known. Suppose there is a case of emergency. The Area Committee postpones it and does not incur the necessary expenditure. Or, it may be that it fails to afford certain facilities in connexion with a festival. There is an analogous provision in the Local Boards Act, where the Collector is empowered to take action in emergencies when the municipality fails to do a particular thing. Of course, these are extraordinary powers which have to be exercised on extraordinary occasions. The Area Committee consists of people who have not been properly elected. If that Committee fails to do certain things which are absolutely necessary and which are in the best interests of the temple or institution concerned, then the Assistant Commissioner will have to compel them to do those things. I, therefore, feel that this proviso need not be there."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" I second the amendment, Sir."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, the hon. Member Sri Raghavayya, says that when the Area Committee fails to do a particular thing, the Assistant Commissioner must have power to compel it to do that. I entirely agree with him that in cases of emergency, the Assistant Commissioner must direct the doing of any act which will be necessary in the interests of an institution. That is exactly what has been provided in clause 99. In the first proviso, we have only said that he shall not act in contravention of any order of the Committee prohibiting the doing of any particular act. So, it is not a question of failing to do anything. Sri Raghavayya wants that the Assistant Commissioner must have power to act even against the wishes of the Committee. I may say that it is not the intention in appointing these Area Committees at all."

The amendment of hon. Sri V. Raghavayya was, by leave, withdrawn.

MR. SPEAKER :—" Let the hon. Member, Sri Viswanatham, oppose the clause. He need not move for its deletion."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Sir, I oppose clause 99. In the case of the trustees, we found that their discretion was hampered. The Government appoint the trustees. They do not want to elect them because they feel that if the trustees are elected, they will destroy the temples. Therefore, they say 'we will have our own trustees'. Then here, there is an Area Committee which will not be elected but will be constituted for certain types of temples and certain areas. The Government will put in their own nominees and allow the Assistant Commissioner to lord over them. I cannot really understand such a provision. The Area Committee does not consist of such irresponsible persons as will not do anything even when it is urgently needed for the institution. This distrust on their own men, men who are not even elected but chosen by the Government and appointed by the Government, men who will exercise certain powers practically at the pleasure of the Government, because they can be removed or dismissed in the middle of their term, will not be conducive to good administration. To say that an Assistant Commissioner, one who need not be a person belonging to that area, will in certain emergencies lord over them is something ununderstandable. If we want to have good administration, we should not have such checks and counter-balances at every stage. They will lead to deadlocks. This extra caution, this extra suspicion, will lead to endless delay and absolute inefficiency in administration and will ultimately create a sense of frustration in the trustees, the Area Committee and the officers. They will begin to feel that there is no sole responsibility, no exclusive responsibility, on anybody to anybody. I, therefore, submit that these Area Committees must be trusted to do all that they want to do and the Assistant Commissioners should not be permitted to lord over them. I want the Government to reconsider the matter. Of course, they may say—I see the Hon. the Minister for Law only too ready and too willing to rise immediately and say 'I cannot'—it is not easy to accept such a position. My point may seem absurd to the Government. But I do submit, though I may not have much experience of such bodies, these Area Committees must be left to themselves. I have some knowledge of non-officials who are plugged to such bodies and with that knowledge, I feel they must have some freedom to act by themselves."

SRI M. S. PATTABHIRAMIAH :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, the Government are under a wrong impression that the Area Committees will be slow in taking action whenever urgent action is called for. I think that the Area Committee will be quicker than the Assistant Commissioner in taking action. The Assistant Commissioner may not be a local man. The idea behind the constitution of Area Committees is that most of the members would be residing in that area and, therefore, would be able to see and act as quickly as possible whenever urgent action is called for. Again, Sir, the two provisos to this clause do not confer any extraordinary powers on the Assistant Commissioner either. His discretion is also fettered. The whole justification for this clause is some unforeseen emergency which the Government presume they can foresee now. If the Government only pause for a while, they will see that there is no possibility of any emergency arising while the Area Committee is functioning. I wish the Hon. the Minister reconsiders the matter and, does not, if I may use the word, persist in having this clause included in the Bill."

[12th December 1950]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, I was not so much surprised at the hon. Member, Sri Raghavayya's amendment, as I am now at the opposition to this clause by Sri Viswanatham. The clause says—

'The Assistant Commissioner may, in cases of emergency, direct the doing of any act which would ordinarily have to be done by the Area Committee, if the immediate doing of such act is, in his opinion, necessary in the interests of a religious institution :'

This is hedged in with the proviso :

'that the Assistant Commissioner shall not act under this section in contravention of any order of the Area Committee prohibiting the doing of any particular act :'

Suppose he acts. Then he shall report the action taken under this clause and reasons therefor to the Committee at its next meeting and the Committee may annul, modify or reverse the order passed by the Assistant Commissioner. The Area Committee may meet once or twice a month and an emergency may arise during the interval. In that case the Area Commissioner will act and whatever he has done will be placed before the Area Committee at its next meeting. The Committee will have power then to annul, modify or reverse the order passed by the Assistant Commissioner. The Government are not trying to kick anybody—much less the Area Committee—as was contended by my hon. Friend, Sri Viswanatham. There is no such thing as kicking of the Area Committee except in the imagination of some people."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA :—" On a point of information, Sir, I want to know from the Hon. the Minister what will happen in a case where a work costing one thousand or two thousand rupees has been executed which the Area Committee felt reluctant to do and which the Assistant Commissioner forced it to do. I shall explain it more fully. Suppose a work has been carried out in which the Area Committee did not co-operate and suppose when the matter is subsequently placed before the Area Committee for its approval, it refuses to approve of that work. In such a case, is the unfortunate Assistant Commissioner to shell out the cost of such a work?

" Secondly, Sir, suppose an Area Committee wants to put the Assistant Commissioner in the wrong. Suppose it passes a resolution, 'the Assistant Commissioner shall not pass a particular order; he shall not interfere with our affairs'. Is he then to keep quiet? Is there any provision to override the resolution of the Area Committee? I want the Hon. the Minister to clear these points."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" If the action of the Assistant Commissioner is such as will not be approved of by the Area Committee or is not approved of by the Area Committee, then the Assistant Commissioner will have to suffer the consequences of his act. If it involves expenditure, he will have to refund the money? He is a Government servant and he has got superior officers above him. Surely he will suffer the consequences of his acts."

Clause 99 was put and carried.

New Clause 99-A.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, this is a new clause . . ."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI :—" On a point of order, Sir, the proposed new Clause 99-A had been included in the Bill as reported upon by the Joint Select Committee as Clause 8 which was deleted earlier on a Government Motion. Is it open, Sir, to the Government to bring in the same clause here as 99-A, that is, as a new clause? "

MR. SPEAKER :—" Did the House give a verdict on that? "

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI :—" As I have already said, Sir, it was deleted on a Motion of the Government which was accepted by the House."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" The Government moved an amendment to clause 8 (for its deletion) and it was carried."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, the Government did not move for its absolute deletion from the Bill. I made it clear on the occasion that it was sought to be deleted as the proper place for that clause would be under clause 99. I only said that I would not have it there but have it here."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI :—" The proper procedure should have been for the Government to make a Motion seeking to revise the order in which the various clauses are arranged. But it was not so. The Hon. the Minister for Law made a Motion for the deletion of clause 8."

MR. SPEAKER :—" I understand the position now. I quite well remember that the Hon. Minister made the point quite clear that he would reintroduce the same clause as Clause 99-A. He may move the new clause."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, I move—
"After clause 99, insert the following clause :—

" 99-A. (1) The Government may call for and examine the record of the Commissioner or any Deputy or Assistant Commissioner, of any Area Committee or of any trustee in respect of any proceeding not being a proceeding in respect of which a suit or an appeal to a Court is provided by this Act, to satisfy themselves as to the regularity of such proceeding or the correctness, legality or propriety of any decision or order passed

[Sri K. Madhava Menon] [12th December 1950]

therein; and, if, in any case, it appears to the Government that any such decision or order should be modified, annulled, reversed or remitted for reconsideration, they may pass orders accordingly.

Provided that the Government shall not pass any order prejudicial to any party unless he has had a reasonable opportunity of making his representations.

(2) The Government may stay the execution of any such decision or order, pending the exercise of their powers under sub-section (1) in respect thereof."

Sir, this is nothing but the original Clause 8 as approved of by the Joint Select Committee. We felt that it would not be appropriate to incorporate this clause in Chapter II since the residuary powers of the Government should come only at the end of the Bill. This clause vests certain residuary, certain revisionary powers in the Government. The Government are enabled by this provision to call for and examine certain records to satisfy themselves as to the regularity, legality or propriety of any decision or order passed therein. The Assistant Commissioner, the Deputy Commissioner, the Commissioner and the Area Committees are all appointed by the Government and they should see that there are no irregularities in their orders and if there are any, they should annul, modify or revise the orders suitably."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'That clause 99-A do stand part of the Bill.'"

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I oppose this clause. While moving for the deletion of Clauses 7 and 8 under Chapter II, the Government were pleased to say that they were advised by their Legal Department or some such authority to omit both of them . . ."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Both the Clauses? No. I never said that. Do not put into my mouth anything that I have not said."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Will you please repeat what you said on that occasion?"

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"I have already repeated what I said on that occasion."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"Sir, the House was then made to understand that both Clauses 7 and 8 were sought to be deleted since some technical or legal objection existed to their remaining in the Bill. He also referred to the Constitution at that time and he said something to the effect that those clauses offended the provisions of the Constitution. I am not able to recollect what exactly he said on that occasion. In a way, we were made to understand that such a provision might offend the provisions of the Constitution. Such being the case, I do not know, Sir, how by renaming Clause 8 as Clause 99-A such an objection is taken away. How a power that could not be taken then can be taken now? How was Clause 8 having a more adverse effect on the Constitution and how does the present one create a lesser effect? I do not know what difference it makes now after being rearranged as Clause 99-A . . ."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"My hon. Friend is imagining something, Sir. I never said that Clause 8 offended the provisions of the Constitution."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"While discussing Chapter II, I remember well that the Hon. the Minister made mention about some legal opinion which went against Clauses 7 and 8. Whether it was out of place there or whether it offends the Constitution, this power which the Government seek to take under Clause 99-A is far-reaching in effect. The Government take into their hands all powers which are not warranted and which the Constitution forbids them to take. This clause says that the Government can call for and examine all records maintained by the Commissioner, Deputy and Assistant Commissioners, Area Committees and Trustees and reverse, annul or modify the orders that they might have passed. They are seeking to possess supreme authority in all matters. I do not see why such vast powers should be given to the Government under the pretext of revising the order in which the various clauses are arranged. Apart from the fact that this provision offends the Constitution, it is too much for the Government to poke their nose into everyone of the thirty or forty thousand endowments that exist in this State to-day and control them."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I also wish to oppose the insertion of this new Clause 99-A. The Hon. the Minister said on a former occasion that it was out of place under Chapter II. Now I say it is out of place here also. I do not want any hon. Members of this House to confer such all-over-riding, all-embracing powers on the Government. The Government may call for and examine any record of the Commissioner, of any Deputy or Assistant Commissioner, of any Area Committee and of any trustee."

"I submit, Sir, their jurisdiction continues and extends not merely to their officers but also to the records of the trustees and all Area Committees. I submit having hedged in their powers and having provided so many checks and balances, as I have already said in the administration of these temples and institutions, Government now come forward and say whatever might have been done, the Government in the final stage or at any time shall have a reserve power to do whatever they like. It is a general order, it is a very tall order. It does not say on what grounds the Government propose to interfere. It only mentions three words 'Correctness', 'Legality' and 'Propriety'. Sir, it comes to this that when a thing is correct, it may not be legal. When it is legal it may not be correct. When it is both, it may not be appropriate. They may interfere on the ground that it is not appropriate. The question of propriety is a very flexible thing. Is it open to the Government to say 'Whatever may have been done on one or other of the grounds, we are going to upset every order, or pass whatever order we like?' The Government is asking for too much power. It is too much of a surrender of the liberty of this House. The Government can certainly ask this Legislature and the Legislature is after all quite willing to give whatever they want. The illegality or otherwise will be decided in a court of law by the parties and if it is an incorrect order, already a superior officer or the court might have looked into it. If the Government want to interfere on the ground of propriety, it is too vague a thing and this House shall not give such a power, at any rate, I shall not be a party to giving such a power and no hon. Member can be a party to giving such vast and overriding power to the Government under the present Bill to pass any order they like."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI :—" Sir, I do not wish to go into the technical aspect of the question. I only wish to say this. In fact the Government is entitled to reserve such powers having appointed all the trustees, the Area Committees and all that, it stands up to the scheme of centralization of which the scheme is full—in fact I may be allowed to call it over—centralization. My objection to this clause is on the merits. It looks as though the Government want to decentralize by setting up Area Committees and appointing trustees and thus divest themselves of the most part of the responsibility and finally say in one clause: 'All right, this decentralization may not work properly. Let us reserve all the powers.' The very objects that the Hon. Minister said just now, that wasteful litigation should be avoided, trust funds should not be frittered away and so on, all that ceases to be of value as against the scheme of over-centralization. On the one hand Government seem to commit themselves to the policy of decentralization saying 'all right we shall have nothing to do with religious institutions directly. We shall hand them over to trustees and heads of maths and other people subject to the provision of some control'. But the control should not be comprehensive or overriding, especially in view of the fact that the Government are preoccupied too much with the other problems of the State and should not take upon themselves the over centralizing power of interfering in everything and calling for the records in respect of every matter. The Government may keep some power somewhere, but to keep such a sweeping power is certainly out of the scope of the scheme. I can only understand the scheme as decentralization and of entrusting power to decentralized bodies."

[12th December 1950]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, I may remind my hon. Friend Sri Gopalaswami as to what I said when moving for the deletion of Clauses 7 and 8. I went into the official report and this is what I said then—

We agree that it is not necessary to have such a wide and all embracing clause and so have brought forward the present amendment for the deletion of that clause. Regarding clause 8, though it is omitted here, it has been inserted at the end as new clause 99-A as that is a more proper place than Chapter II."

"With regard to the condemnation of this new clause by my hon. Friend Sri Viswanatham, I want to point out that the aim of the Government is 'to call for and examine the records of the Commissioner or any Deputy or Assistant Commissioner, of any Area Committee or of any trustee in respect of any proceeding, not being a proceeding in respect of which a suit or an appeal to a Court is provided by this Act'. Where suit or appeal is provided, Government have no jurisdiction. Where discretion is not vested in the officers of the Government,—the Commissioner, the Deputy Commissioners and the Assistant Commissioners are officers of Government,—suit or appeal is provided. But where it is within the discretionary powers of these officers to settle matters, Government say that they must have reserve powers like this which will be necessary in the circumstances of the case. Perhaps the very people who do not want these reserve powers to vest in the Government may later come up to Government and ask them to exercise this provision and assist these institutions and temples. There is nothing improper in this. Such a reserve power is necessary for any Government."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is—

'After Clause 99, insert the following clause :—

"99-A. (1) The Government may call for and examine the record of the Commissioner or any Deputy or Assistant Commissioner, of any Area Committee or of any trustee in respect of any proceeding, not being a proceeding in respect of which a suit or an appeal to a court is provided by this Act, to satisfy themselves as to the regularity of such proceeding or the correctness, legality or propriety of any decision or order passed therein; and if, in any case, it appears to the Government that any such decision or order should be modified, annulled, reversed or remitted for reconsideration, they may pass orders accordingly :

Provided that the Government shall not pass any order prejudicial to any party unless he has had a reasonable opportunity of making his representations.

(2) The Government may stay the execution of any such decision or order, pending the exercise of their powers under sub-section (1) in respect thereof."

Clause 99-A was carried.

[12th December 1950]

MR. SPEAKER :—" We have five more clauses to be considered. I suggest to the hon. Members that we may sit for some time after 5 o'clock and finish them. (The hon. Member Sri T. Viswanatham stood in his seat.) The hon. Member gave a notice of about 237 amendments and moved about 161 amendments or so. So I think he will have no objection to sit for a little time longer."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" I am glad for the information given to me by the Hon. Speaker. I was myself trying to find this out. I am glad I have omitted to move so many amendments. But to ask us to sit after 5 o'clock will be inconvenient . . ."

Clause 100.

MR. SPEAKER :—" The motion is—

'That clause 100 do stand part of the Bill.'

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" I beg to move, Sir—

'That in Clause 100 (2)—

"Omit item (b)''.

"The effectual exercise of the powers of superintendence vested in the Government is to be omitted'. There is no power now vested in the Government. This is a consequential amendment for deleting Clause 7, because general superintendence is taken away from Government and this is unnecessary."

The amendment was put and carried.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" I move, Sir, that—

'in item (i) for the words "the quorum", substitute the words "and the quorum."

for item (k), substitute the following item :—

"(k) the proper collection of the income of and the incurring of expenditure by, religious institutions."

in item (s) for the words "by such persons as the Government may direct, the reports to be submitted by such persons", substitute the words "the reports to be submitted by persons making such inspection and supervision".

These are all only verbal amendments to improve the wording of the Bill."

The amendments were put and carried.

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Sir, I beg to move that—

'In sub-clause (2) (t) to Clause 100, add at the end the words "and property of religious or charitable institutions and the preservation of their architecture and their art".'

[12th December 1950] [Sri T. Viswanatham]

Sir, I am moving this amendment as I consider it is a very important one and because the rule-making power may not be there without the acceptance of this amendment. I submit, Sir, that some provision has to be made with regard to the expenditure to be incurred on preservation of architecture and works of art of the charitable institutions. When once the notification comes charitable institutions will come under the scope of the Government. This preservation of architecture and works of art is one of the subjects for which the funds of the extinct or defunct institutions, or of an institution which was incapable of realizing its objects, are to be utilized. And there may be surplus funds also available for this purpose. When once the Government are going to make rules on some 26 or 27 Clauses why not also make some rules with regard to the preservation of architecture and works of art and other things.

"Sir, when I sent in that amendment I had in my mind the paintings at Lepakshi and some of the remains, Buddhist remains near Anakapalle and some other place in Guntur district, Nagarjunagonda. There are so many things that the Government have to do. It is now the Central Government that is trying to do something to preserve these architecture and works of art. In Lepakshi, when I went there I saw actually boys throwing stones at the majestic stone Bull in front of the temple and the paintings in the famous institution too are in a damaged condition. I want that some rules should be immediately framed so that something could be done immediately to preserve these things. With this Legislation in hand we can induce the Commissioner to find some surplus in the funds of the temples or the religious institutions somewhere to do something for these things. My object is that some funds should be found for attending to these works of art and architecture. In making rules provide rules for these also instead of leaving the matter entirely to the Central Government. That is the reason why I have moved this amendment."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA :—" I second the amendment, Sir."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" I oppose the amendment, Sir."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is—

'In sub-clause (2) (t) to Clause 100, add at the end the words "and property of religious or charitable institutions and the preservation of their architecture and their art".'

The amendment was lost.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" I beg to move, Sir—

'In item (u), for the words "or to the members of the Board of Trustees or the Advisory Council of the Tirumalai Tirupati Devasthanams", substitute "or to the trustees".'

This is only a verbal amendment to make it better."

The amendment was put and carried.

[12th December 1950]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" I beg to move, Sir, that—

' In item (y) (ii), for the words and figures " under section 40 or under any other provision ", substitute the words " under any provision " . '

Sir, we have already passed clauses saying that the Government can delegate powers. This is only a consequential amendment which says that rules shall be made for delegation of powers to the executive officers."

The amendment was put and carried.

MR. SPEAKER :—" Is the hon. Member, Sri Viswanatham, moving his amendment to sub-clause (2) (aa) ? "

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" It is quite necessary, Sir. I move that—' For the existing sub-clause (2) (aa), substitute the following :—

" (aa) the grant of pensions or gratuities to executive officers and other servants of the Board who retired before the commencement of this Act or retire after such commencement; and " ;

I think, Sir, quite a good number of persons approached the Hon. Minister and members of the Select Committee in this behalf. Some of them told me that some provision should be made for these persons also. It is true that rules would be made hereafter. But for those who are there already and who are likely to retire before the commencement of this Act some rules ought to be made for the grant of pensions or gratuities. It will be only in the fitness of things when in these days we are trying to give increased dearness allowance, pensions and so on to all officers, the officers of the Board who have just retired or about to retire must have these benefits. If the Government accept the amendment and include this in the sub-clause they can do something for these persons. I plead on their behalf that the Government might be pleased to accept this amendment."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI :—" I second the amendment, Sir."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" The executive officers are not servants of the Government. They are transferred from one trust to another. The trusts contribute to their pensions or gratuities. There is no common fund for this. Hereafter these will be there. It is not possible to accept the amendment as they are not servants of the Government and they are servants of the religious institution or trust."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" It is true, Sir, they are not servants of the Government and that is why we want some provision in the Bill. If the Hon. Minister is not prepared to accept the amendment, I am asking him, Sir, to make a statement on the floor of the House now as to what he proposes to do for these persons. I feel that something should be done for them."

12th December 1950] [Sri T. Viswanatham]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Nothing, Sir."

The amendment was put and lost.

MR. SPEAKER :—" I will put Clause 100 as amended to the vote of the House."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, when we were discussing Clause 17, I was asking that the rules might be published after previous publication. The Hon. the Minister for Law said that there was provision under Clause 100 and that therefore I need not worry. I was a little off my guard at that time and I just said ' Yes '. But, now the wording of this Clause 100 (3) is ' the power to make rules under this section shall be subject to the condition of previous publication '. So, other rules under this Act will not be subject to previous publication and therefore, Sir, I want the Hon. Minister just to change the word ' section ' into ' Act ' and that will be all right. Will he agree? "

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" This amendment has been provided in many rules. Anyhow I shall examine that point also."

Clause 100 as amended was put and carried:

Clause 101.

MR. SPEAKER :—" The motion is—

' That Clause 101 do stand part of the Bill. ' "

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move—

' Add the following at the end :—

" and shall be constituted into a fund known as the religious and charitable funds which shall be at the disposal of the Government for all purposes in connexion with the expenditure under section 81 (4) of this Act and such other purposes as are in furtherance of the objects or the working of this Act. " "

" The present clause is this—

' On and from the date on which this Act comes into force, the Board shall cease to exist, and all its assets and liabilities shall devolve on the Government. ' "

You remember, Sir, we had some small discussion whether contributions which are to be collected by the Board form part of public revenue, or Consolidated Fund, etc. I think the Board has now got Rs. 21.00 lakhs and I said that this will devolve on the Government and they must necessarily form part of public revenue of this State. But, what I want is that it ' shall be constituted into a fund known as the religious and charitable funds which shall be at the disposal of the Government for all purposes in connexion with the expenditure under section 81 (4) of this Act and such other purposes as are in furtherance of the objects or the working of this Act'. If it is made part of the Consolidated Fund, possibly there will be some legal objection for taking moneys out of it by the officers, i.e., Commissioners, Deputy Commissioners and Assistant Commissioners. Therefore, Sir, I am suggesting that all moneys which are collected may be constituted into a fund known as 'the religious and charitable fund' so that it need not become part of the general revenues of the Government of India or of this State or be part of the Consolidated Fund. It will remain a separate fund so that the possible constitutional objections may not attach to it. It is a fact which we cannot escape that moneys will still go out of the Government Treasury and in which case these moneys cannot be added to the Consolidated Fund. Then, there must be some provision in this Act to deal with this fund. If these moneys are constituted into a separate fund known as 'the religious and charitable funds', they may be administered accordingly for the purposes covered by this Act. That is the purpose of my amendment, Sir."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I second this amendment. It will obviate many difficulties in the working of this Act and will also enable the Government just to devote better attention to charitable purposes if only they are willing to lend a helping hand. It will also obviate many difficulties of the general revenues being used for such purposes which the Constitution prevents. All things considered, Sir, I think it is a very good amendment and the Government should be glad to accept this amendment and incorporate it in this Bill so that it will be a separate fund known as 'the religious and charitable fund' to which the Government also may be adding or from which the Government may be spending for good charitable and religious purposes."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I would have supported this amendment. But the whole scheme of this Act as we have passed, prevents it. In fact this affords the only chance for the Legislature to debate on this aspect—to review the work of religious institutions at least once a year. If you remove this clause and accept Mr. Viswanatham's amendment, it will become a separate fund and the Legislature will not have an opportunity of debating on the work of the Hindu Religious Endowments Board. In fact I strongly plead for the retention of this clause as it is, consistent with the scheme of the Act that we have already passed whether we like it or not. In my opinion, the scheme is one of centralization of the whole administration of the religious endowments through Government control. So, Sir, I plead that this amendment may not be accepted and that having passed this scheme we may not put ourselves out of Court and not be given even an opportunity to debate on the working of this Act."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, apart from the objections raised by hon. Sri N. S. Varadachari, the Government are at present advised that such a separate fund cannot be raised. As I have stated already before, that is the policy of the Government and I oppose this amendment. Anyway this will be examined again later. I also said to hon. Sri Bhashyam when we were discussing Clause 85 that I would examine this before the third reading."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, in the circumstances I beg leave of the House to withdraw my amendment."

The amendment was, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause 101 was put and carried.

Clause 102 was put and carried.

Clause 103.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'That clause 103 do stand part of the Bill.'

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move—

'In sub-clause (a), after the words "with this Act" in line 6, insert the words "or the Constitution of India".'

Now that Clause 99-A has been passed, I think the Government can accept this amendment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, it is not necessary."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, he agrees with the argument, but disagrees to accept it. What is this position? I am not pressing it and I beg leave of the House to withdraw my amendment."

The amendment was, by leave, withdrawn.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move—

(1) Omit Explanation (1) below sub-clause (a).

(2) To sub-clause (b), add the following:—

"Provided that before making any such order, the Government shall publish in the Fort St. George Gazette a notice of their intention to do so, fix a period which shall not be less than two months from the date of the publication of the notice for the persons affected by the order to show cause against the making thereof and consider their representations, if any."

[Sri K. Madhava Menon] [12th December 1950]

It is considered desirable that the Government, before publishing in the Fort St. George Gazette, should invite objections, hear them and then only pass orders. That is the purpose of this amendment, Sir."

The amendment was put and carried.

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Sir, I submit that we can finish this tomorrow. I am not saying, Sir, that you are hurrying. In fact, I am not able to recollect what I intended to tell. Because it is the fag-end of the day, I am missing the points."

MR. SPEAKER :—" Let us sit and complete."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Yes, Sir, we shall sit."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Sir, I have got an engagement and just now two reminders have come. I am missing points."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The hon. Member may take time."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" It is true, Sir. But I am not able to recollect all the points and we can finish it tomorrow."

MR. SPEAKER :—" I will give time to the hon. Member."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" I have no complaint at all. On the other hand, in the third reading I will spend ten minutes for thanking you, Sir."

MR. SPEAKER :—" The hon. Member need not thank me. If he finishes this it is equal to thanking."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" I am not able to recollect anything in this hurry. I thought we can take up tomorrow and continue."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" We shall sit, Sir."

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI :—" The hon. Member is like a person who has run very hard and who is at the end of the race struggling for breath. The hon. Sri Viswanatham has said 5 to 10 times that he was not able to recollect the points. He is a man and not a machine to work all the hours. Even when he tells you Mr. Speaker that he is not able to look into the clauses, should you not allow that, Sir."

MR. SPEAKER :—" I think the hon. Member has given about 230 amendments and moved about 160 amendments. I will give him time."

12th December 1950]

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" It is very difficult, Sir. I am not able to do anything. If you are pleased to continue, I will be glad. I have no complaint and this is my submission. Sir, I am not moving the second amendment standing in my name."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move—

In sub-clause (3)—

(a) Omit items (i) and (iii);

(b) For item (iv), substitute the following item :—

" (iv) all powers conferred and all duties imposed by such scheme on any Court or Judge or any other person or body of persons not being a trustee or trustees or a paid or an honorary officer or servant of the religious institution, shall be deemed to have been conferred or imposed on the Area Committee if the institution is subject to the jurisdiction of such a Committee and on the Commissioner, in other cases; and the Area Committee or the Commissioner, as the case may be, shall exercise such powers and discharge such duties in accordance with the provisions of the scheme subject to such restrictions and conditions, if any specified in the scheme."

The Government wanted to include the Area Committee also and it is necessary, Sir."

The amendment was put and carried.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move—

For sub-clause (f), substitute the following sub-clause :—

" (f) all orders made under section 67 of the said Act shall, notwithstanding that they are inconsistent with this Act continue in force, but any such order may at any time be modified or cancelled by the Deputy Commissioner if it is an order made under sub-section (1) or sub-section (3) of that section and by the Commissioner if it is an order made under sub-section (4) or sub-section (5) of that section; and any person aggrieved by any modification or cancellation made by the Deputy Commissioner may appeal to the Commissioner within such time as may be prescribed."

Under clause 64 (3) the Deputy Commissioner may at any time modify or cancel any order passed under sub-clause (1). Here, we are providing that any person aggrieved by any modification or cancellation made by the Deputy Commissioner may appeal to the Commissioner within such time as may be prescribed."

The amendment was put and carried.

Clause 103 as amended was put and carried.

Clauses 104 and 105 were put and carried.

[12th December 1950]

Clause 106.

MR. SPEAKER:—"The motion is—

'That clause 106 do stand part of the Bill.' "

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, I had given an amendment to delete the clause. But I will oppose this clause.

"This clause is no law, brief though it is, I must ask the Hon. Minister to read this clause in conjunction with what they have done, taking into consideration the background of clauses 95, 97 and 99-A which have been passed. The crowning act of this legislation lies in this clause. It says: 'If any difficulty arises in giving effect to the provisions of this Act, the Government may, as occasion may require,'—I want hon. Members to note the wording, 'if any difficulty arises in giving effect to the provisions of this Act, the Government may, as occasion may require, by order, do anything which appears to them necessary for the purpose of removing the difficulty.' Sir, I hope every Member has understood the implication of these words. It is nothing short of saying, if '106' alone is passed, if from the figures '106', the figures '0' and '6' are removed, and '1' only is left, that is enough for them. No other legislation is necessary. No provisions and no conditions are necessary, and no circumstances or set of circumstances with regard to religious endowments are necessary. 'If any difficulty arises . . . will do everything. What can they do? 'The Government may, as occasion may require' the clause says. It does not say, when they are going to interfere. They simply rely on the words 'as occasion may require'. What kind of occasion, they do not say. If in their mind they are satisfied that an occasion has arisen,—may be at night or may be during day-time and may be in 1961 or in 1962—what kind of occasion is not stated here, they may, by order do anything. This order is one which does not come to the notice of the Legislature and it may not have any publication or reach the party concerned. The Government can pass such an order. And, to do what? Does it say, 'do this or that thing'? Nothing is said. The clause says: 'do anything'. Have you, Mr. Speaker, realised the enormous power which the Government want under this clause, the enormous power which a Government constituted under a Democratic Constitution want to possess?

"Sir, when I was speaking on clause 97, the Hon. Minister twitted me by saying that he also knows something about democracy. I agree, he knows; but what is the use of his knowing? The Department wants something more than what he knows. The Department says what the Minister should want. The Department inserts it and the Minister accepts it, all the while believing he knows democracy as much as I do. I concede quite readily that he knows much more than myself. But I do venture to tell him that this is not a power which a person belonging to the legal profession and occupying the position of a Minister for Law.

12th December 1950] [Sri T. Viswanatham]

should ever agree to insert in any kind of legislation. The words are not exhaustive. The powers which the Government want under this clause are not explicit. The clause simply says: 'as occasion may require by order do anything . . .'. What kind of thing? 'anything which appears to them necessary'. And, necessary for what? Is the purpose stated? Yes, they say, 'for the purpose of removing the difficulty'. Sir, one difficulty I could contemplate and it is this: Some person who is interested in some matter might for his own purpose bring a 'difficulty' to their notice and then the occasion would arise for them to do anything they like. And yet, the Government ask us to believe that this is legislation. Sir, instead of providing a clause like this in legislation, they could as well have one single piece of legislation for the whole State in a one-clause Bill thus: 'This legislature hereby confers upon the Government power to do as occasion may require, anything which is necessary for them to carry on the administration of this State in every branch or in any branch of their activity'. That would no doubt be a tall order for them, to ask for and for the House to give and to surrender their liberty. In agreeing to such a thing the House will be surrendering also the liberty of 5 crores of people.

"This is a clause which should not be passed. This provision, perhaps found in some old English statute, has been rightly called 'Henry VIII Clause'. It has been naturally condemned by great writers on Jurisprudence and it has been taken into account by the Donoughmore Committee. After the report of this Committee on this Henry VIII Clause, even the English legislature which on a few occasions had this sort of clause in their Bills have not included it in their subsequent legislation. Of course the Hon. Minister might say, 'Here on the floor of this very House, one or two years ago, you passed legislation which contained a clause like this. Why do you object to it now?' My answer to that will be: 'Then also we objected.' But then this clause was not then sponsored by a member who was, like him, 'a member of the legal profession.' We thought therefore that it was a peculiar feature of that legislation only. But now this has become a common feature in all legislation of this Government. Now, the draftsmen and the executive want the Minister to get this kind of clause accepted by the House, and I want him not to have it. He must tell the Departments not to have such a clause, because all the powers that they want have been canalised and provided for. They can have legislation for purposes which are certain and specified, within limitations which are also certain. Sir, though the Hon. Minister does not agree with me, now he will, if he reconsiders the matter, change his opinion. A power like this for the Government to do whatever they like as occasion requires to remove any difficulty should not be included in any legislation. It really is no legislation when it offends the first principles of jurisprudence and I respectfully ask the Minister to agree to its deletion altogether."

[12th December 1950]

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—"Sir, in seconding this amendment, I want to enter my emphatic protest on the all-embracing power which the Government want to have under this clause. This clause 106 is really the crowning clause of this piece of legislation which, according to me, interferes with regions which are not in the domain of this Government. I want hon. Members to realise what the provisions of this clause are. It says in so many words that the Government shall be the master of the whole situation. In the face of this provision we need not have passed the 105 clauses. We might as well have said: 'The Government shall, according to their desire, manage all religious institutions in this State and may solve any difficulty in their way.' This would have been much better than debating and discussing 105 clauses and then crown all of them with this clause 106 which says that whenever there is any difficulty the Government shall resolve it in their own way, behind the back of the legislature as it were. Is this legislation Sir, I ask?"

"Sir, serious objection was raised and pertinently raised to the provision prohibiting courts from interfering with these matters. But we reach the climax here when we say that even when there is ambiguity, the Government could say 'this is what we meant', and the courts cannot interfere. If we are to legislate like this after the advent of democracy, if the executive is going to take powers like this and do things as they like without even allowing the legislature to have its say, it will be nothing short of the very negation of democracy."

SRI M. S. VARADACHARI:—"Mr. Speaker, as I was listening to Sri Viswanatham, I was struck with his wonderful clarity and I felt that he has recovered his breath which, a few minutes ago, he said he had lost. I do not wish to make any sweeping statement about this clause, except to say that the Government should note that this is an omnibus clause. This is a motor car without the steering wheel. This has no brakes. The clause says: 'may as occasion requires by order remove any difficulty'. I am unable to understand what this is. In fact even under an over-centralised scheme it should not be part of an arrangement of this kind. The ifs and buts are numerous, are so many 'as occasions may require'. These will give rise to great difficulties. Sir, we know the history of the Rent Control Bill. Government have often been tempted to use the power conferred by it and they have availed of its provisions when it was utterly wrong to do so. Then they have tried to resolve difficulties where there were none. I would illustrate my meaning by taking an extreme case as an example. Government may, as occasions require, pass contradictory orders. There is no res judicata on this. Government may, to get over some difficulty, provide one solution at one time and a succeeding Government perhaps, may provide a different solution altogether for the same kind of difficulty. It is very unwise to acquire such sweeping powers. It is in the interests of democracy not to use such power, even if they want to possess such power."

[12th December 1950] [Sri N. S. Varadachari]

"Another point on which I wish to offer my remarks is about the absence of a provision to bring certain things as the subject matter of debate in the Legislature. Supposing there is real difficulty in enforcing a particular provision and the Government have to deal with it, they do not even have to come with it before the Legislature and take its opinion on it. Even if their act or decision in any particular matters is final and there is a remote chance of the Legislature accepting or approving their decision, they are not obliged to bring it before the Legislature. I think on the whole the clause requires modification even under an over-centralised scheme. The Government should therefore come forward and say, 'We will not use this power, because we know that though there will be temptation to use it, the public will find fault with us'."

SRI V. RAGHAVAYYA:—"Sir, is it the object of the Government, I suspect and ask, to get over a later pronouncement in a court of law that any particular section of this Act is ultra vires? Does this clause empower the Government even in such circumstances to make the necessary legislation without coming to this Assembly, to pass an ordinance, or a rule or order and say that clause 106 enables the Government to get over the difficulty? Can the Government say under such circumstances, 'The High Court says that the Government cannot do these things; the Government hereby enact a rule that they can do such and such a thing.' It is too much to expect the Government to be empowered like that."

"Suppose certain provisions of the Act are found to be unworkable later on. Suppose the Government want to suspend the operation of certain sections in the Act. Are they empowered to do so?"

"Thirdly, Sir, if the Government provide a saving clause to the effect 'in so far as these acts are not inconsistent with the provisions of the Act', I can understand the meaning of it. But as it is this clause does not prevent the Government from doing anything or enacting any rule which is inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, if only the enactment of the rules helps the removal of the difficulties. I suppose, Sir, the Bill is bristling with difficulties, apart from the fact that this is a most lawless piece of legislation, a most ill-thought out legislation which may evoke the derision of various courts of law. Should we give another occasion to a court to pronounce strongly about this piece of ill-thought out legislation? Even without clause 106, they may be able to carry out the purposes of this Act. The rules are wide enough and if necessary an ordinance may be promulgated. Then why should we besmear and blot this Bill by some of the clauses which are going to add to the difficulties?"

SRI M. S. PATTABHIRAMIAH:—"Sir, this last clause is obviously a confession of the weakness of the Bill, not of the Government, for they have been strong enough to pilot the Bill through. Why should any difficulty arise at all, Sir. It is because the Bill has been hastily conceived and planned. Therefore the Government expect some difficulties because the Bill was planned long before the Constitution of India was passed. The Government are afraid that it might not be in conformity with the Constitution at all. Therefore they have put clause 99-A and saved themselves in a particular manner. This is something like a black or iron curtain for the actions of the Government which they may do as they like. They are taking extraordinary powers, undreamt of by anybody. As was pointed out by Sri T. Viswanatham, there used to be some Henry VIII clause, but it cannot be a precedent for democracy. It is said here that if any difficulty arises, the Government may do anything to remove the difficulty. But I remember the Hon. Minister saying once or twice that he would, in such circumstances, come to this House with the necessary amending Bill. The Government should be bold and frank and take the House into confidence. Tell them that such and such difficulties have arisen and that such and such amendments are necessary. Sir, this is a very big Bill under which thousands of institutions are taken over and crores of rupees worth of property are vested in the Government. In Clause 100 (2) (b) it is stated that the Government may make rules for the 'effectual exercise of the powers of superintendence vested in the Government.' Therefore this clause is quite unnecessary. Clause 7 was removed simply because there was an objectionable phrase in it. Therefore if the Government find any difficulties in the working of the Act, they may take the House into confidence and pass suitable amendments for the removal of the difficulties. They should not arm themselves with powers which are extraordinary, unnecessary and even dangerous."

[Sri M. S. Pattabhiramiah] [12th December 1950]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"Sir, very many strong things have been said about this clause. I am afraid, Sir, it has been done under a misapprehension of real facts. Sri Viswanatham said that some such Henry VIII clause was put in in another legislation even in this House. He could excuse that, because the persons who were piloting that legislation were not lawyers. But that a person like me who prides himself to be a lawyer or is a lawyer or was a lawyer should have brought forward such a clause, surpasses his imagination. But, Sir, it is because I have had something to do with the practice of law that I have boldly brought forward this clause."

"Sir, I am perfectly aware of the recent decision of the Supreme Court in connection with the Bihar Public Safety Act where they said that delegated legislation is wrong. With regard to the provision that the Government may by notification extend or modify the provisions of this Act, the Supreme Court held that this sort of extension was delegated legislation and could not be done. As regards modifying the Act, it would amount to taking up the powers of the Legislature and so it was bad. I am perfectly aware that by this clause, the Government cannot take up the power of legislation and say, 'All right; we legislate that such and such a thing can be done, although it is against the Act or inconsistent with the Act.' Such a thing is impossible, I know. Every hon. Member has been saying that the Government can do anything because it is stated here that if any difficulty arises, the Government may do anything which appears to them necessary. Sir, Sri Gopalaswami's imagination was running riot when he suggested that the Government need not have this Bill at all, that they might have one clause saying that this is a Bill for the better administration of Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowments and that the Government may do anything to achieve that object. That was my hon. Friend's argument."

"Sir, I know that this Bill does not give any power of legislation to the Government. Then what are the difficulties which they want to remove? This is not merely a Hindu Religious Endowments Bill, but this is also a Repealing and Re-enacting Bill. In Clause 5 it is stated that the following enactments are repealed or will not apply to the Hindu Religious Institutions:—

'The Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act, 1926.

The Madras Endowments and Escheats Regulation, 1817.

The Religious Endowments Act, 1863.

The Charitable Endowments Act, 1890.

The Charitable and Religious Trusts Act, 1920.

'The Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanam Act, 1932.'

All these Acts are repealed and certain Acts are re-enacted. Whenever there is a Repealing and Re-enacting legislation various difficulties will arise in dovetailing certain sections of either legislation. In English legislation whenever there is a Repealing and Re-enacting legislation, this clause finds a place. We have tried our best, in Clause 103, dealing with transitory provisions, to put in all that we can possibly conceive of putting in there. Clause 105 is also the same thing. The Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanam Act is repealed and we have taken care to save all rules and by-laws made under that Act. The Government can never ignore the Legislature or do anything against the sections of this Act. But whenever a Repealing and Re-enacting legislation is passed, this clause is always there in order to cure the difficulties found in dovetailing the various enactments, the various rules passed under the enactments and so on. It is only to solve such difficulties that this power is taken. All-embracing Henry VIII power, it is not at all intended to be. It has become necessary because we are repealing and re-enacting certain enactments and difficulties are bound to occur and some powers are necessary for the Government to remove those difficulties."

[Sri K. Madhava Menon] [12th December 1950]

"Then Sir, there is suspicion that the Government want to do something. Sri Bhasyam said that he was suspicious of the Government, that they want to do something. When there is suspicion, all these bad words and strong words will come. But it is not the intention and it is not possible to go an inch beyond the sections of the Act. The difficulties will arise because this is a Repealing and Re-enacting Bill also."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—"Sir, there is one piece of legislation which has come down from the days of the Tudor Dynasty. It is a legislation on treason. In that Act, it is stated at the end that any Act intended to repeal that Act would be utterly void felony and treason. I suggest, Sir, that a similar clause may also be put in here."

Clause 106 was put and carried.

Schedule I.

MR. SPEAKER :—"The motion is—

'That Schedule I do stand part of the Bill.'

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"Sir, I move the following amendment:—

'In Schedule I—

(1) Under the heading "IV. Applications to Government, Commissioner or Deputy Commissioner"—

(a) omit the entries relating to section 8;

(b) add the following entries at the end:—

"99-A. Application to Government for revision. 25

103 (f) Application for modification or cancellation of order under section 67 of the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act, 1926 ... 25 "

(2) Under the heading "V. Appeals to Government, Commissioner, Deputy Commissioner or trustee"—

(a) after the entries relating to section 31 (4), insert the following entries:—

"32-A. (2) Appeal to Commissioner under the section ... 25 "

(b) omit the entries relating to sections 54 (2) and 54 (3);

(c) omit the figures and brackets "56 (6)" in column (1);

(d) add the following entries at the end:—

"85-C. (2) Appeal to the Board of Trustees by office-holder or servant against order of punishment by executive officer ... 2

12th December 1950] [Sri K. Madhava Menon]

85-C. (3) Appeal to Commissioner office-holder or servant against appellate order of the Board of Trustees ... 2

103 (f) Appeal to Commissioner under the section ... 25 "

"Sir, there is a printer's devil in the amendment. It should be '25' and not '2' against 'Application to Government for revision'. These amendments are consequential on the amendments which we have carried to the various in the Bill."

The amendment was put and carried.

The Schedule I, as amended, was put and carried.

Schedule II.

MR. SPEAKER :—"The motion is—

'That Schedule II do stand part of the Bill.'

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI :—"Sir, I am not moving any amendment. But I think this Schedule must have been copied from the old Act. The language of it can be very much improved. In many places very bald language is used, such as 'Vedanta Desikulu', as though we are referring to some Upper Division Clerk in the Secretariat. It is better we put it as 'Vedanta Desikar'. I am afraid, Sir, that most respected persons are dealt with in an improper manner. I have seen several other names also like this. Even if they have been copied from the old Act, I think they require very drastic amendment. I wish somebody who knows something about these matters is consulted and the names are put properly."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"Yes, Sir, I shall see to it."

Schedule II was put and carried.

Schedule III was put and carried.

MR. SPEAKER :—"There are some verbal amendments."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"Sir, as there are some verbal amendments to be made, I move that clauses 19, 31 and 58 be re-opened."

The motion was put and carried.

Clause 19.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"Sir, many amendments have been accepted by the House and therefore certain consequential verbal amendments have to be made. I therefore move—

'That in clause 19, for the words "of abolition", the words "of its abolition" be substituted.'

"The amendment is necessary to make the language clear."

[12th December 1950]

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is to re-open clause 19 and ' For the words " of abolition ", substitute the words " of its abolition " . ' "

The amendment was carried.

Clause 31.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, I move that clause 31 may be re-opened, and that—

' For sub-clause (4), substitute the following sub-clause :—

" (4) The trustee may within three months from the date of his receipt of a copy of the order, and any person having interest may within three months from the date of the publication of the order, appeal to the Government to modify the order or set it aside. ' " "

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" I do not know, Sir, why these amendments are moved now. "

MR. SPEAKER :—" Even now amendments can be moved. "

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" May I submit, Sir, I have got an engagement and I want to go early. I have not studied these amendments; can we not take them up to-morrow, Sir? "

MR. SPEAKER :—" These are all merely formal amendments, mere change of words for improving the language. "

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" I have already moved my amendment, Sir. I only want to add that the House wanted me to make this change. "

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is that clause 31 be reopened, and

' For sub-clause (4), substitute the following sub-clause :—

" (4) The trustee may within three months from the date of his receipt of a copy of the order, and any person having interest may within three months from the date of the publication of the order, appeal to the Government to modify the order or set it aside. ' " "

The amendment was carried.

Clause 58.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, I move that clause 58 be re-opened and that—

' (a) In sub-clause (1), omit the words " legally constituted " and the word " such " occurring before the word
" guardian " .

(b) In sub-clause (2), for the word " arrangements " in lines 5 and 6, substitute the word " arrangement " .

12th December 1950] [Sri K. Madhava Menon]

(c) in sub-clause (3), for the words, brackets and figure
" any arrangement under sub-section (2) ", substitute
" any such arrangement " .

The words ' legally constituted ' in sub-clause (1) are considered to be unnecessary and therefore they are proposed to be omitted.
The word ' such ' occurring later also goes, as a consequence.
Again, in sub-clause (2), the word ' arrangements ' is to be substituted by the word ' arrangement ' and it is purely an improvement of the language. As regards sub-clause (3), Mr. Karanth suggested that the word ' appointment ' should be removed and the word ' arrangement ' should be there. That suggestion has been carried out. The amendment now proposed is purely verbal. "

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is that clause 58 be reopened and that—

' In sub-clause (1), omit the words " legally constituted " and the word " such " occurring before the word " guardian " .

In sub-clause (2), for the word " arrangements " in lines 5 and 6, substitute the word " arrangement " .

In sub-clause (3), for the words, brackets and figure " and arrangement under sub-section (2) ", substitute " any such arrangement " . ' "

The amendment was carried.

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" What about clause 3, Sir? "

MR. SPEAKER :—" It was passed as revised. "

Renumbering and consequential changes.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" I now move, Sir,—

' Renumber the clauses of the Bill in the numerical order and make consequential changes in the body of the Bill. '

We have made so many changes in the Bill, Sir, and so renumbering of the clauses is necessary and wherever reference is made in the body of the Bill to the various clauses, the necessary correction has to be made. That is why this amendment. "

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is—

' Renumber the clauses of the Bill in the numerical order and make consequential changes in the body of the Bill. ' "

The amendment was carried.

Preamble.

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is—

' That the Preamble do stand part of the Bill. ' "

[12th December]

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—“ I have great objection Preamble, Sir.”

The Preamble was put and carried.

THE MADRAS HINDU RELIGIOUS AND CHARITABLE
No. 10 OF 1949)—cont.

THE MADRAS LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Monday, the 18th December 1950.

The House met in the Assembly Chamber, Fort St. George, at eleven of the clock, Mr. Speaker (THE HON. SRI J. SIVASHANMUGAM PILLAI) in the Chair.

THE MADRAS HINDU RELIGIOUS AND CHARITABLE ENDOWMENTS BILL, 1949 (L.A. BILL NO. 10 OF 1949)—cont.

THE HON. DR. T. S. S. RAJAN :—“ Mr. Speaker, Sir, I move—

‘ That the Madras Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowments Bill, 1949 (L.A. Bill No. 10 of 1949), as amended, be passed into law. ’

“ Since we have had a very thorough and critical examination of the various clauses of the Bill during the Second Reading, I do not think that any lengthy or critical speech is required from me. This is a Bill which vitally affects our people, our culture and our beliefs. It is a measure which affects the feelings and sentiments of people in a way as no other measure has done till now. Ages of habit and practice have more or less transfixed the observances in our shrines and temples and it is no easy task to pass a legislation to control and regulate them without giving careful and anxious consideration for the subject. This Bill has as many as 11 chapters comprising 106 clauses. I thank one and all of the hon. Members, who have sat patiently from day to day during the seventeen days on which the Bill was discussed in the course of the Second Reading, and have helped the Government with their careful study and helpful criticism of the several provisions of this Bill. I am particularly thankful to my hon. Friends like Sri K. Bhashyam, Sri K. R. Karanth and Sri T. Viswanatham, for their thorough and searching examination of the provisions of the Bill. It has been said that the lack of an intelligent opposition is a serious handicap for a good democratic parliamentary system of Government, and that the Legislatures of the States in India at present have not been able to function at their maximum level of efficiency, for want of such an opposition. But I can emphatically assert, without fear of contradiction, that so far as this Bill is concerned, at any rate, we do not suffer on that account. I think, Sir, I am right in claiming that for no other Bill have so many amendments been tabled. They reached the record figure of 452. I shall show presently how we have profited by the suggestions made in these amendments, and in what cases and why we thought it wise to accept them. I regret I have not been able to accept more of their suggestions. But I would request my hon. Friends not to walk away from this Assembly with the feeling that their views have been ignored, or treated in a cavalier fashion. The fact is that though my hon. Friends and we are animated by the same object, namely the purification and administration of the institutions dedicated to the service of God and Man, our approach to the problem has been different. Hence it is that though we are pursuing the same objective in view, different kinds of remedies have occurred to each of us. I believe in all sincerity that the remedies I have prescribed as a doctor, for the many ills from which our religious and charitable institutions are suffering, will really have a healing effect upon them. It is for posterity to judge whether I have not diagnosed the disease correctly and whether my prescription is not the right one.

18th December 1950] [Dr. T. S. S. Rajan]

“ Let it not be forgotten by any one here that this Bill has been before the public for over three years. It was first published in September 1947, and during this fairly long period, it has been thoroughly scrutinized by the public and the Press and by the various departments of the Government, not once or twice, but on several occasions. Even before the republication of the Bill in January 1949, for its first introduction in the Assembly in February 1949, it was substantially revised by the Secretariat in the light of the memorials and memoranda received spontaneously from the public. After it was referred to the Joint Select Committee, we formally invited the opinions and suggestions of various individuals and public bodies associated with us in regard to this subject, as well as from the general public. All these were carefully studied and certain individuals who offered to give evidence were examined by us at Ootacamund and at Madras on several days.

“ At every stage we had the benefit of the advice and guidance from two eminent lawyers, Sri K. Rajah Ayyar and Sri K. Kutti Krishna Menon, who have been the Advocates-General of Madras during these years. It is not as if these great lawyers have lost all faith in law courts, even if the Government is presumed, as it is often accused to be, anxious to avoid law courts. I mention this, because the main criticism levelled against the provisions of the Bill both on the floor of this House and in the Press outside, is that the Bill seeks to vest extraordinary powers in the executive and to limit the jurisdiction of courts. Hon. Members were particularly vehement in their opposition to the provisions of the notification chapter, on the ground that the Commissioner is invested with despotic powers and that he could set at naught schemes settled by courts, and that therefore there should be a provision for resort to law courts against the orders of the Commissioner. If we have not provided for relief through the law courts in this matter, it is not correct, Sir, to charge us with distrust of courts. The truth is that our system of procedure in the law courts has resulted in enormous and sometimes even unconscionable, delays in the disposal of cases, particularly where the party mainly affected, like the deity in a temple, cannot speak for himself. The principal reasons which impelled us to reduce the scope and opportunity for litigation in law courts, are firstly this dread of dilatoriness which fortunately has been receiving the attention of the Government of India as well as of the Chief Justice of India from the day of the attainment of our Independence, and secondly the enormous and often scandalous waste of public funds of which unfortunately I have intimate, if bitter, experience.

"Let us face facts squarely in the face, however unpalatable they might be to us. I claim, Sir, to have an intimate knowledge of some of the famous and ancient temples and their management and administration. I have been born and brought up in my earlier years in the very shadow of the great temple of Sri Ranganatha at Srirangam. What is it, Sir, I found all round? Huge endowments made by pious donors centuries ago, were, and are, being wasted on ruinous litigation. This litigation is the result of the English civilization imposed on us for over a century and a half. It is not unknown to my hon. Friend, Sri K. Bhashyam, that literally lakhs of rupees have been spent, shall I not say wasted, at Srirangam, at Kancheepuram and at Tirupati, to settle the vexed 'Vadagalai—Thengalai' dispute and the question is still exactly where it was, before these costly law suits began. It is this sickening sight, this unedifying and even depressing vision, that haunted me, which made me welcome the opportunity of serving these institutions, when I was offered this portfolio in the first Congress Ministry. I then took up the question of remodelling the law on the subject at once. But for the Second World War and its repercussions on our political life, this Bill, which was substantially ready by the time of our resignation in 1939, would have become law a decade earlier.

"However, I do not altogether regret this delay of ten years. It has resulted in a further and more detailed examination of the provisions of the Bill as I had conceived it during the years 1937-39, in consequence of which some necessary changes were made in it even before it was presented to this House in February 1949 and placed before the Joint Select Committee. Again, the Joint Select Committee has suggested several improvements in the scheme of the Bill, which have been accepted by Government. I have referred to them in some detail in my speech on 11th September 1950, while presenting the Report of the Joint Select Committee and moving for the Second Reading of the Bill and I need not repeat them here now. Finally, for the Second Reading, we have sat altogether for seventeen days and spent full 70 working hours in studying the Bill, clause by clause in detail. The Government have now also accepted a number of amendments during the Second Reading. It is unnecessary for me on this occasion to catalogue them in full and deal with each and every one of them at length, as they are all quite fresh in your mind. I think it will suffice to allude here, but briefly, to a few of the more important amendments accepted by the Government, just to illustrate this point. Although the amendments accepted on the floor of this House may not be numerically many, and when actually counted may come only to a small figure, still I must emphasize the fact that even after the Second Reading of the Bill commenced on the 11th September, we had very carefully re-examined the whole Bill, with the assistance of the present Advocate-General, in the light of the general criticism offered here in the House and the amendments given notice of by some of my hon. Friends. As a result, a good number of their amendments have, in substance, been taken up by us as Government amendments and have now been embodied in the Bill, as it has emerged from the Second Reading. For instance, clause 7 conferring on the Government general powers of superintendence over all religious institutions has been taken away altogether, mainly in defence to public criticism. It has now been made crystal clear by clause 23 (3) that the officers authorized to enter religious institutions should be only Hindus. This is because a similar amendment has been given notice of by my hon. Friend, Sri K. Bhashyam. The provision relating to the utilization of surplus funds originally embodied in clause 64 of the Bill has now been removed from it and after considerable modification has been shaped into the present clause 32-A, as passed by the Assembly in the Second Reading. The main change made in respect of this provision is that while the original clause 64 empowered the Deputy Commissioner inter alia to direct the appropriation of surplus income of religious institutions for any purposes specified in that clause, that power has now been transferred to the trustee himself.

"On the advice of the Advocate-General that the original clause 64 may lend itself to possible objection that it might be construed as offending Article 26 (d) of the Constitution which entitles every religious denomination, or section thereof, to administer its property according to law, it has been provided in the new clause 32-A that when the trustee of an institution considers that the surplus should be spent on any of the purposes specified in clause 64, he should himself take the initiative and spend it for such purposes, after obtaining the Deputy Commissioner's sanction,

[Dr. T. S. S. Rajan] [18th December 1950]

The element of compulsion has thus been removed and the trustee has been invested with a substantial measure of discretion and autonomy. Likewise in clause 56, amendments have been made giving greater autonomy to the trustees and reducing the scope for interference by the Deputy Commissioner. This was mainly intended to carry out the purpose behind the amendment given notice of by hon. Sri T. Viswanatham. Clause 67 of the Bill has now been substantially modified by providing for the filing of suits in civil courts in all matters dealt with under clause 62. In other words, the right to file suits in courts has now been extended to the following matters also :—

(1) whether the trustee holds, or held, office as a hereditary trustee; and

(2) whether any person is entitled, by custom, or otherwise, to any honour, emolument, or perquisite in any religious institution; and what the established usage of a religious institution is in regard to any other matter.

This again is in accordance with the views underlying the amendments of which my hon. Friend, Sri K. R. Karanth had given notice.

Another very vital amendment which the Government themselves moved is the deletion of clause 10 which empowered the appointment of non-hereditary trustees even in cases where there were only hereditary trustees, and which provided for the compulsory appointment of an executive officer for each institution having an annual income of over Rs. 20,000. The Government have also modified the whole series of clauses dealing with such institutions, in accordance with the views embodied in the amendments given notice of by hon. Friends, Sri K. Bhashyam and Sri T. Viswanatham. The Government held on the advice of the Advocate-General that the appointment of non-hereditary trustees and salaried executive officers in such cases might be construed as offending Article 26 (d) of the Constitution, in so far as those provisions might be regarded as depriving the hereditary trustees of their rights in the day-to-day management of the institutions. Similarly, the Government themselves introduced amendments to clauses 64, 68, 75, 82, 90, 92, 94 and 103. The Government have also deleted clause 86 of the Bill providing for the Constitution of an Advisory Council consisting of the representatives of the jiyengars, the archakas, the acharyapurushas and other mirasdars of the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanams; in order to avoid any argument that the Bill interferes with the religious affairs in contravention of Article 26 (b) of the Constitution. Finally, the Government have themselves moved for the addition of the new clause 94-A which expressly provides that nothing in this Bill shall be deemed to violate the provisions of Article 26 of the Constitution.

Indeed, I doubt whether any Government Bill which had already been considered for such a long period as three years had such a huge list of further amendments covering over ten pages of printed matter, to be moved in the Second Reading of the Bill by the Government themselves. All these will clearly show that far from trying to thrust our own views on the public with the aid of a well-drilled steam-roller majority, we have been most responsive to public opinion in the matter, and have tried our best to satisfy public sentiments on the subject to the greatest possible extent, compatible with the preservation and proper utilization of the resources of these institutions for the service of Almighty and His children.

“Before concluding, I would like to meet one other criticism that has been made repeatedly in respect of a number of provisions of the Bill. It is said that the Bill vests too much power in the Commissioner, and that he can interfere even in the daily routine of religious institutions. I would only emphasize once again that, while it is certainly not the intention of the Government to interfere with the rituals or their observance in the daily conduct of the temples, they have certainly a responsibility to see that the affairs of the institutions are conducted properly and that their funds are not wasted on undesirable and on unnecessary purposes. It is to this extent that the Government have conferred power on the Commissioner to control the activities of the institutions. We have done this solely with the idea of safeguarding the interests of the institutions and preserving their sanctity and spiritual vitality.

“Again, it is said that the Bill has drastically reduced the powers of trustees, many of whom are associated for centuries with these institutions. I can only say this in reply. If any of the hon. Members who have criticised these provisions had a fraction of that experience which I have had of one of the biggest institutions from my childhood and of a great many others in the course of my official duties during 1937-39 and again for the last one and a half years, I am almost certain that my hon. Friends like Sri K. Bhashyam, Sri K. R. Karanth and Sri T. Viswanatham, who are now so hearty and enthusiastic in their criticism, would have introduced a more drastic Bill.

“I have no axe to grind. There is no political object behind this Bill. It is not for my personal glory or aggrandizement that I have introduced the several provisions in the Bill which have evoked such vehement protests. I would be divulging no secret, if I say that, on the constitution of the present Ministry, I requested the Hon. the Chief Minister to relieve me from office and allow me to take some well-earned rest in my old age. It was only at the call of public duty, at the earnest request of my esteemed Friend, that I took up office again. And when I was again offered this portfolio I felt it a call from God, from Lord Sri Ranganatha Himself, my family Deity, to do my best for the reform of the religious and charitable institutions and thus serve God and Man.

“As may be well-known to all of you, the State has always exercised this power of supervision and regulation of religious endowments in our land and it was only as a result of the Indian

[Dr. T. S. S. Rajan] [18th December 1950]

War of Independence of 1858 that the British Government in India divested themselves of this responsibility. Even now such provisions exist in the laws of many of our States ruled by Raj-pramukhs. I feel that this Bill is in consonance with the spirit and traditions of our ancient country and is conducive to the better preservation of these holy institutions and their usefulness to the moral and spiritual benefit of the millions of Hindus of this country, besides catering to the material needs of the poor and the lowly.

"Allow me, Sir, to conclude with offering you once again my grateful thanks for the great patience and diligence with which you have scrutinized the several provisions of this Bill during the Second Reading. With these words, Sir, I have great pleasure in moving that this Bill, as amended, be passed into law."

MR. SPEAKER:—"Motion moved—

'That the Madras Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowments Bill, 1949, as amended, be passed into law.'

"As several hon. Members may be participating in the debate on this Motion, I have fixed a time-limit of 15 minutes for each speech."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"That is hardly sufficient for me, Sir. I would like to have an hour and a half. The Government have adopted 52 amendments and, between hon. Sri Viswanatham and myself, we have moved about 100 amendments."

MR. SPEAKER:—"The hon. Member may have half an hour."

SRI K. BHASHYAM:—"That is something, at any rate.

"Sir, to begin with, I would like to say that such credit as the Government takes for itself is not due to the Government at all. Let us now examine the position of the Government in respect of this Bill.

"Sir, I congratulate the Hon. Minister and his lieutenant in charge of the Bill on the happy ending of this long-drawn-out agony. It is nothing less than that. It has been an agony to the Members of the Treasury Bench, because we have been plaguing them with amendment after amendment which are massacred on a floor of the House and we the framers of the amendments had a agonised feeling our pretty treasures were thrown out and massacred on the spot. This agony is over; only the funeral obsequies remain to be made. I think we will make them fittingly and properly.

"With reference to the provisions contained in clause 7 they say that they made the change out of respect for public opinion pressed on the floor of the House and elsewhere. They have asserted that they do not want the power of superintendence over religious institutions. But have they done so? If they really do not want this power, have they said so? Can the Hon. Minister in charge put his hand upon his heart and say: 'I say so.' No, he cannot say that with any conscience; because, as a matter of fact, every one of the orders passed by the trustee, by the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner is subject to the revisionary powers of the Government. While they go on adding power after power in their hands, they at the same time want to claim credit that they do not want this power of superintendence over religious institutions. They call this power revisionary no doubt. Every proceedings instituted or order passed is subject to their revisionary powers. It is certainly superintendence. This being the case, why take credit by saying, we have moved with the times and introduced suitable amendments.

"Now let us examine their claims with reference to clause 74. They say that the trustees have been given the initiative in the matter of the utilization of the surplus funds. I have said several times on the floor of the House that they have not given the initiative to the trustees and yet, the Government want to take credit for it. What is it that they have done? The surplus has to be accumulated and unduly accumulated at the expense of the temple, in spite of the fact that the temple may need extensive repairs and not only renovation but reconstruction. True, the trustee has the initiative, but on paper only. But will he be allowed to take the initiative? He is under the thumb actually of the Deputy Commissioner. As a matter of fact, if he accumulated a large surplus, will he be allowed to go scot-free? Will he not be asked to explain why he did not make proposals for its utilization? If he persisted in not making such proposals, will it not be made the ground for punishing him? Will it not be said that he refused to obey the lawful orders of the Commissioner and therefore should be dismissed on the spot?

"Therefore, Sir, the question of the initiative being with the trustee is merely lip sympathy or lip service to the Constitution which stands in the way of the Government having their own way in the matter. I would ask the House to realize further that the Government have not really done anything willingly or creditably or gracefully in all these matters. In the matter of hereditary trustees also, I do not know how many temples are still left in which there are hereditary trustees only. I do not think a large number has been left after the recent action of the Board appointing a large number of non-hereditary trustees to all temples. Therefore the temples which are in the hands of hereditary trustees altogether without the addition of non-hereditary trustees are only a few. Therefore, if the Government say that they have resolved not to interfere with hereditary trustees, even there credit is not due to them, because the mischief has already been done and there is not much mischief left to do. So far as 'honours' are concerned, it is left to be decided among people themselves and the Government say that they are not interfering with them. It is a very dangerous thing for the Government to do, after grabbing all the powers; why stick at this only? All the disputes in the temples, especially the Vaishnavite temples, are disputes between the Vadagalais and the Thengalais regarding temple honours. Witnesses who appeared before the Select Committee were asked to suggest solutions for the difficulty, why not follow the suggestions? Why should we not have a council of persons who know something about these matters and allow them to adjudicate these things instead of allowing the people to have protracted litigation in courts? Therefore, the credit which the Government want, I am not willing to concede to them. I do not know what other hon. Members will do, but I want to expose the hollowness of the pretensions of the Government and expose it to the full. (At this stage Deputy Speaker took the Chair.) Madam, this Bill originally started with departmentalizing and provincialising the whole service—the Commissioner, the Deputy Commissioner, the Assistant Commissioners and the executive officers. All these were to be the servants of the Government. If there were any trustees, their rights were really not to be respected. Of course, there was a hue and cry at the first reading of the Bill. During the Joint Select Committee stage there was some modification on the part of the Government. Even there the change proposed was that we could appoint trustees and area committees, but the executive officers would still be there. The executive officer is the man on the spot and he is a Government servant. That was the only position that the Government could concede at the time. Then when the Bill came before the House for the second reading, they changed their mind and said that they did not want to interfere and thrust executive officers on the various temples unless they were really mismanaged. If the Government thought that a temple was mismanaged, they would notify it and take it in their own hands. Therefore, in respect of the question of the trustees, the question of provincializing and departmentalizing, the whole thing has been given up. The position now is, the servants of the Board and the Members of the Board cease to hold office from to-day. They are to be unemployed. If necessary the Government may re-employ them. That is the position that the Government take to-day. I do not know how many will be re-employed. People will crowd round the Hon. Minister in charge of the department and clamour for employment and re-employment. But that is his funeral and I do not mind it."

DEPUTY SPEAKER :—"What is it that the hon. Member is saying?"

* SRI K. BHASHYAM :—"I am sorry, Madam. It is only an idiomatic way of saying that it is his job and an arduous job. He will find it difficult to make up his mind, to separate the sheep from the goat and the chaff from the grain. The Government have resiled from their original position to a position of not departmentalizing and provincializing the whole thing, but merely taking it up at the level of the Commissionerships. In the case of the Commissioner, I can understand it if he is a person who merely supervises and sees that the things are done properly, if he has merely supervisory control, or if he has merely visitorial jurisdiction as in England. But what happens here is, the Commissioner interferes with every aspect of the day-to-day management of the institution. He has the power to interfere with the nomination of the trustees, the leasing of the temple properties, the utilization of the surplus funds and so on. In all these things the Commissioner has a hand. Therefore the claim that initiative is given to the local people is a thing which I am not able to understand. What we have been really pressing for is that these religious institutions should be treated in the same way in which municipalities and panchayat boards are treated. They may be placed under what I may call a Director of Charities who will be charged with the duty of seeing that all the persons concerned with the institutions do their work properly and efficiently. If they do not do so, drastic action may be taken. That is what the Inspector of Municipal Councils and Local Boards does. He does not interfere with the day-to-day administration of the municipalities and panchayat boards which are left to the municipalities and panchayat boards themselves, but he sees to it that they do not transgress the legal limits. In the same way, the Director of Charities and Religious Institutions may be charged with the duty of seeing that the trustees and other persons discharge their duties properly. If this is done, the local people who are really responsible for the efficient management of the institution will have the necessary initiative, enthusiasm and interest and they will take their own share in the management of the temple. What is going to happen to-day is this. Trustees are to be appointed by the Government if they are not hereditary trustees. As I said there are very few temples which have no non-hereditary trustees, very few, so far as I can remember. The trustees are appointed by them, the area committees are appointed by them and the Commissioner, the Deputy Commissioner and the Assistant Commissioners are appointed by them. Then where do the local people come in? Is there any provision for consulting the wishes of the local people at any stage except in a general way when the Government want to utilize the surplus funds of the institution or change the dittam, in which case they may publish their proposal in the gazette and invite objections? Suppose there are difficulties or irregularities in the day-to-day administration of these institutions, will the local people care to come before the Assistant Commissioner and put in a petition for the purpose of having these rectified? No, because it means more trouble for them. Many cases are not reported to the police because of the trouble you get into by reporting to the police. In the same way, if a person puts in a petition before an Assistant Commissioner, he will be summoned before him half a dozen times and if he does not appear before him, he may get into trouble. Therefore, it is necessary that the local people should have some responsibility for these and they should be given a definite share in the formulation of the policies and the management of the institutions. We have all been saying that the municipalities and the local boards are the training ground for democracy where people must learn to manage their own secular affairs by persons elected by themselves. Then why not we allow the local people to manage their religious institutions themselves? Why should not they form a council or society or sabha for the purpose of managing the temple? Why should not the Government encourage such things being done? They do nothing like that. They appoint their own trustees, area committees and Commissioners and other officers. I am even extremely doubtful whether the Government can get the co-operation of the local people and rouse the enthusiasm of the local people which is so necessary in making the administration of the temple a success.

“ Madam, one other matter I should like to refer to in this connexion. The Government have so far recognized that they ought not to interfere with the internal management of the institutions in the first instance, but if, in their opinion, any institution is mismanaged and if it is necessary to take it over for the sake of better management, the Government would notify the institution, in which case all the management is taken out of the hands of the trustee and put into the hands of the executive officer. Of course, it is open to the Government or the Commissioner to divide the powers between the trustee and the executive officer, but it means in practice that the trustee will have no power and the executive officer will have all the power. In many of the schemes published by the Board to-day, the trustee is practically left with no powers, he is cipher and the executive officer is supreme in respect of all these matters. Nothing else is going to happen in these cases also. Is it lawful? Is it Constitutional?

“ Then one more thing, Madam. This question of including maths among religious institutions is a very, very serious matter. I should like in the first instance to give one piece of information. I saw in the papers and I also heard on the radio that the Government of India was going to appoint a committee for enquiring into the conduct of the various religious institutions. That is one information. The second information is, that a Bill is being introduced in the Indian Parliament to regulate the conduct and management of maths. If that is so, are the Government going to proceed with the Bill any further? Is it wise to proceed with the Bill till we know where we stand? If my information is correct, I learn that the Bill regarding maths is a private Bill and it has got, at any rate, the approval in principle of some of the Members of the Government. I am not vouching for the correctness of the information, but the information is there. In view of the fact that a Bill is going to be considered by Parliament, are this Government going to proceed with this present

Bill, which means that, if the Central Bill was passed, our Bill would become practically useless so far as maths are concerned. The Government have considered this Bill for 17 days and 70 hours have been wasted on this. Are we to waste another 17 days and 70 hours in the discussion of the Bill in the Legislative Council? Why should not the Government wait till they know more about the Bill which has been introduced in Parliament? At any rate, so far as the Assembly is concerned, as I said, we are coming to the final stage. So it is only a question of a few days that we may have to spend over it; but when it comes to the question of placing the Bill before the Legislative Council, it may also take a number of days for consideration of the Bill and that may turn out to be a waste of time if, as I said, the other thing at the Centre which I referred to, becomes a fact. That is of course a matter for the Government to consider; I simply gave them a sort of advice that they could certainly wait for some time more.

“ Again, Madam, so far as maths are concerned, the important question to be decided is whether they are to be treated differently or not, from other religious institutions. You may remember that I gave notice of a separate chapter dealing with maths, and in that Chapter, I went very far. In fact, I would not have gone to that extent but for the fact that I hoped and believed sincerely that the Government would accept my chapter on maths, because I have included therein all the provisions that the Government think really necessary. I laid myself open to criticism by the Hon. Law Member who said that in one or two places of my chapter, I had accepted certain things provided for by the Government. He went so far as to twit me by quoting from my amendment, and I had necessarily to reply to it that my provision was for a compromise, that he could not take certain provisions from that chapter, torn from their context and quote them against my friend. I went so far as to include provisions regarding budget, accounts, appointment of manager, etc., so far as secular affairs were concerned. Only I said that the matadhipathi is a person who is looked up to by all the members of the community as a Guru, that he is an exalted person, that he must be treated respectfully; and therefore I suggested that a Council of Sishyas must be appointed who would give advice and wherever there was a difference of opinion, a Tribunal consisting of respectable persons should be appointed to decide. It was after all a very reasonable request; it contained all the necessary provisions which the Government wanted in respect of maths, so as to secure strict accounting, proper budgeting and efficient management. I also suggested the idea of associating elected members from among the Sishyas along with the matadhipathi and the others who were to be in charge of the management. It would have been an excellent thing if the Government had accepted it; but the Government are so much in the hands of the Department that they have not been able to appreciate the idea. So far as my separate chapter was concerned, the Department merely disposed of it in the departmental note which was circulated—'Notes on the several amendments proposed by the Firka Development Departments'—at page 11 in the following manner:—

'The Board has however made two suggestions. First, it has no serious objection to the council of sishyas being formed, but desires that such council shall be nominated for purely advisory purposes, as in the case of the advisory councils for the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanams in clause 73 of the Bill, and that their constitution and functions shall be regulated by rules to be made by Government. Secondly, the Board has proposed that, in view of the public opinion, a provision may be made in the Bill that in all matters relating to usages, rituals and honours, an appeal shall lie against the orders of the Commissioner to a High Court Judge nominated by the Chief Justice, such Judge being a Judicial Tribunal.'

Therefore, it is clear that even the Board is prepared to move forward in respect of this matter. I respectfully submit that even though in a very large measure I carried out the idea of the Government in my new chapter, they did not accept it; but on this question of council of sishyas, the Board has also said that it could be there. I may submit, Madam, so far as the sishyas are concerned, it is they who make up practically the whole income of the math. They give money to the head of the math. What do they give it for? You know the nature of these maths; they are merely colleges of learning; and in my earlier speech, I illustrated it. Supposing there is a professor in the Presidency College; he teaches me and he makes me pass my B.A. Because I studied under him and because I have learnt many things from him, at the end of the year I present him with Rs. 1,000. Does it belong to the professor or to the college? That is exactly the position here. The sishyas place themselves under a spiritual teacher, a person who finds for them the spiritual path, a person who throws some light on the many doubts they have, and some light is thrown to them to improve on the spiritual side. As a result of that teaching and in gratitude for that, these sishyas give some money to the matadhipathi. It cannot by any means be said to belong to the math proper, it is purely his personal money, and it is wrong to say it belongs to the math. I may even say it is unconstitutional to treat it as such. And again if such money is not spent by him for the purpose of the math itself, then it is quite a different matter. But where money is paid to these matadhipathis as a return for the spiritual enlightenment that the sishyas receive from him, it is wrong to treat it as belonging to the math. Besides, there are well-managed maths and there are badly managed maths. When a math is not well-managed, there can be no objection to the Government taking up some control over its affairs and all that; but why should they take up all the maths, I want to know. Why should the Government say that they admit certain maths are being administered well enough, but at the same time put them also on the same footing as the other maths and bring them all under statutory control? Why should they be afraid of taking power to exempt from the Bill such maths as are really being managed well? Why not accept my suggestions? Is it because they are afraid of being charged with partiality in respect of one or the other of these maths? In such a case, it would be better for them to say 'I do not find this math is bad, I won't interfere with it.' It will be a good thing for them to exempt such a math from certain of the provisions of the Act and make only the other provisions apply to it. I submit, Madam, it is cowardice on the part of the Government to say that they won't take this responsibility in their hands. They may say it will put them in an awkward position; but how can it be awkward, I want to know? Why are the Government afraid of using such a power wisely and do the proper thing? There seems to be dead set in their mind that a hereditary trustee is one who steals the math property, that the matadhipathi has no right to look into all the affairs of the math and therefore everything relating to the math should be controlled. I do not know, as a matter of fact, what is going to happen in respect of these maths in regard to which such wide powers have been taken by the Government. I should have liked that the Government took such exemption powers at least in respect of maths which are really mismanaged. The Hon. Minister in charge of the Bill took occasion to say that he gained his experience in respect of a big temple in the place where he lived and but for that experience, he would not have come forward with this Bill. Unfortunately, he has lived long in a place which is the hot-bed of all kinds of difficulties, where for a long time, the Thengalai and Vadagalai Vaishnavites have been quarrelling with each other. I can, therefore, quite understand his feeling and his bitter experience. But I may point out to him, there are a large number of other large and small temples which have no such difficulties, which are quite unlike what he has seen at Srirangam. Srirangam is a very big temple and two sections have been quarrelling there; and unfortunately the Minister has lived at Srirangam all these years. If, however, he had been living in some other place or in Madras, I am sure he would not have come forward with this Bill. He seems to have had his early impression that temples have been built only for such faction, and therefore it is he has become so narrow-minded that he is unable to know what is happening in other places. He has made it a crusade in his life; it is a part of his joy to see that all these temples and also the religious institutions and maths are put 'on a proper basis' as he put it. But what is the proper basis on which he puts them now, I would like to know. He is simply handing them over to officials; is he going to expect these officials to carry out the improvements in his mind? After all, officials are persons who have been chosen from the common run of the people; they are made of the same mould, not of a different mould. Lots of controls are there; there is the rice control, the dhall control, the steel control; but still we know certain things are happening and people are complaining. All these controls are in the hands of respectable Government servants, who are paid well, who have a status, who are respected. And there is a regular hierarchy of smaller officials below them, and still we hear of complaints. Why? Because they are no better than the others. The whole difficulty is that these controls do not always do justice to humanity; they are not conceived on generous, democratic lines, but really conceived in haste and amended from time to time as the Government pleased. Now they want to introduce another kind of control over these religious institutions on the pretext of bringing about an improvement in their management. I submit Government are not doing anything of the kind; on the other hand, for the last thirty years from 1920 onwards, we have been managing these institutions through the Board and the Board has been looking after the management of these institutions, yet at the end of these thirty years' administration, we are told to-day of 'mismanagement' as we were told thirty years ago. In all these matters, the real question is: Is the mismanagement due to the agency, or is it that the persons who are in charge are people who cannot be trusted to do their work? I submit, Madam, trust the people who are on the spot; trust them and make them responsive to public opinion; that will be the best way of ensuring that everything is all right. If you put in a man who knows nothing about the institution, who is not a local man, then naturally difficulties crop up and he will do things which will be against local public opinion. The remedy therefore is whether the question should not be considered if you ought not to devolve more powers on the local people, give them more initiative and make them take more and more interest in the management of these institutions. As I said, this is not a measure brought forward in the large interests of the people or of the temples themselves; I think it is going to be more or less a failure, as much as the Hindu Religious Endowments Act itself has been. After all, we know that the Hindu Religious Endowments Act is a failure, and that is why this Bill has been found to be necessary. (The Hon. Sri K. Madhava Menon: 'Do not curse.') I am not a rishi to curse; I am not even such a good Brahman as to curse with good results. If I was such a Brahman, I ought to have cursed this measure long long ago. Though I call myself a Brahman, I have not got that much of Brahmanhood. Anyhow, I do pay homage to Brahmanhood. I do not disclaim that by saying that these things ought to be preserved in their ancient glory. I do pay homage to Brahmanhood, to our old traditions, to our usages and customs in our own temples and I respect them more than anything else. Unless you pay such homage to our ancient traditions and customs, you will be contributing to the destruction of these maths. Already, Madam, a spirit of vandalism is abroad; atheism is gaining ground; persons are there who want to break idols and destroy temples; and it is they who are profiting by this propaganda that you are making on the floor of this House and they are already saying 'the matadhipathi or the trustee is a blackguard. They cannot be trusted.' They are already making this kind of propaganda, and you are now contributing to that organization which is now against religion, against God, against temples and against religious institutions. One thing I want to say: by extending this Bill to charitable institutions, you endanger them far more than you are endangering the religious institutions. Madam, charitable institutions have mostly been in the hands of many big families; they have been managed by the members of the family. They have been doing charities in many ways and they have been doing it for the benefit of humanity. Now you want to extend your control over those charities by saying that they are being mismanaged. So, I submit the Government should bestow deep consideration over this question. I am still hopeful that the Government, before they take a decision on this Bill in the Legislative Assembly, can wait till they know what is going to be done at Delhi about their Bill in regard to the maths and about the committee to be appointed for going into the affairs of the religious institutions; and also, when they go up to the Legislative Council, I hope they will bear the suggestions I have made and even at the last moment, modify the provisions in the Bill to the extent I have indicated. The amendments which I suggested, I may assure the House, were conceived in the best of spirit and were intended to improve the institutions. Though I and the Government have not been able to see eye to eye on many matters, I am glad they have recognized that both of us want only to improve the institutions. The movement for improving these institutions started long ago with Justice Muthuswami Ayyar's minute. Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Ayyar and Mr. Ganapathi of the Dharamarkshana Subha filed a suit under section 92, Civil Procedure Code, about the Rameswaram Devasthanam and thus public spirited men came forward to conduct the case. If the Government at the time had come forward to contest the suit and if an officer had been appointed to conduct the case, it would have been better; but at that time we did not have our own Government; we had an alien Government; we had to appeal to them and in spite of that appeal, they would not come to our help. Therefore nothing happened; the Board has been working for thirty years now and I do not know what success has been achieved so far. Of course, persons in charge of the department will naturally say it has been a success; but still we all know there are lots of complaints about the management of these institutions. If now we own we have not been able to bring about an improvement, that there has been mismanagement all the time and this Bill is the result of deep cogitation on the part of Government, I feel that unless there is a serious modification and necessary amendments are made in the Bill, it will not be in the interests of these institutions, nor will it be to the good name of the Government."

[Sri K. Bhashyam] [18th December 1950]

SRI V. M. RAMASWAMI MUDALIYAR:—"Madam, Deputy Speaker, I am glad that this Bill is in charge of the Hon. Minister who hails from Tiruchirappalli and who has been brought up under the shadow of influence of Lord Ranganatha and I hope that with the help of Lord Ranganatha the Hon. Minister will have the courage to survive the strong criticisms that have been levelled against him and the Bill. I remember another occasion when the Raja Saheb of Panagal introduced the first Hindu Religious Endowments Bill and successfully piloted it, curses in much stronger terms were hurled against him for having taken the courage to bring in the Bill for the better administration of Hindu religious institutions. I think this occasion is similar to that, but I can assure the Hon. Minister in charge that the curses and criticisms on this occasion against the Bill have been in much milder terms. Madam, it is not possible for me to restrain paying a compliment to the very able manner in which the Hon. Minister, who is in actual charge of piloting the Bill has taken it through during the very long number of days, in spite of the criticisms, condemnation, curses and imprecations that were hurled against him. I must also pay my humble tribute to the very able manner in which he had studied this Bill and the criticisms and how he tried to accommodate as far as possible the various points of view put forward by hon. Members. This occasion is not, as the hon. Member Mr. Bhashyam would like to call it, the funeral oration on this Bill, but I would like to call it a re-birth of the idea contained in the original Act which was put on the Statute Book nearly a quarter of a century ago in 1926. I would, therefore, like to christen this occasion as a rejuvenation of the work which was undertaken nearly 25 years ago. Madam, informed and enlightened Hindu opinion has been for reforming the administration of Hindu religious institutions and I may say that even the original Bill was a creature of that public opinion and that during these many years this public opinion for the better administration of Hindu endowments has gained ground year by year. Why this Bill has been found necessary, in my short experience, is this. Though the Hindu Religious Endowments Board has been in existence for these number of years, still in its actual working, it was found that it did not have sufficient powers to bring under control or proper administration several Hindu religious institutions. In fact, I know of a number of cases where trustees and certain matadhipathis simply twitted the Hindu Religious Endowments Board and snapped their fingers at it and the Board was unable to maintain a proper administration of the religious institutions under its control. Speaking for myself, the one great change that we have found between the time when the original Bill was introduced in 1926 and the present occasion is, the birth of a written Constitution for India and that has been made the occasion for opposing, in my opinion, even the very halting reforms which have been attempted in this Bill. For instance, we find that hereditary trustees of religious institutions go scot-free, in the sense that they cannot have other trustees appointed by the Government as colleagues. It is unfortunately a very retrograde concession. I know there are several temples in which there are hereditary trustees and the administration of those temples would be better carried on if some non-hereditary trustees were also appointed to such temples, but under the present Bill, neither the Commissioner nor the Deputy Commissioner nor the Government can now appoint non-hereditary trustees for such temples.

[Sri V. M. Ramaswami Mudaliyar] [18th December 1950]

18th December 1950] [Sri V. M. Ramaswami Mudaliyar]

I think Article 23 of the Constitution of India does not prevent the Government if they do so. That is my personal opinion. So, Madam, I think the concession is a very retrograde concession.

“ Madam, I personally wish that the matadhipathi had the advice of Advisory Councils consisting of sishyas and members drawn from the locality, but the Government have not conceded in this Bill the appointment of such Advisory Councils, even though my hon. Friend, Mr. Bhashyam and the Hindu Religious Endowments Board did not take serious objection to the appointment of such Advisory Councils to advise the matadhipathis in the governance of the maths.

“ Then again, Madam, I also find that no provision has been made in the Bill for an Advisory Committee for the Commissioner. I wish that even though the Bill does not contain a provision of this nature, the Government will be well-advised in appointing an Advisory Committee on a provincial level to advise the Commissioner with regard to the administration of the Act. I may here point out that while the Government have appointed advisory Committees on the provincial level in respect of Cottage Industries, Food, Co-operation and even in respect of Publicity, I do not see any objection to the appointment of such a Committee on the provincial level for advising the Commissioner. I hope that though it has not been provided in the Bill, the Government will do so at least under the rules or under the inherent powers of the Government, as they have done in the case of the other departments I have just mentioned. And in the appointment of the members of this Advisory Committee on the provincial level for assisting the Commissioner, I hope they will appoint only persons who have great faith and belief in religion, persons who are learned and above all persons of good character, so that they may stand as an inspiring example for the Area Committees, the trustees, the matadhipathis and other persons who are entrusted with the task of performing their respective duties in these religious and charitable institutions, to follow.

“ Again, Madam, I find another retrograde concession that has been made in this Bill with regard to the non-appointment of executive officers. In this Bill the Government have not taken power for the appointment of executive officers, because they stated that it would offend Article 23 of the Constitution. Are not the Government aware that even now in several big temples there are executive officers who are doing their functions. For instance, I know that in the case of the Tiruvannamalai Devasthanam, one of the biggest Saivite temples in the south, there is an executive officer; in the case of the Mathurai temples there is an executive officer; in the case of the Tiruchendur temple there is an executive officer and there are also a number of other temples with executive officers. So far as I can see, the system has worked very well and I do not think there is any ground for the fear expressed by my hon. Friend, Mr. Bhashyam, that no public-spirited person will come forward for becoming a trustee. I know as a matter of fact that in the case of Tiruvannamalai, though there was an executive officer, for the vacant post of trustee, many applications came in from public-spirited people of the locality offering themselves for the post. So, I do not think there need be any such fear. So, I personally think that this is a concession made by the Government on a wrong reading of the Constitution.

"Then, Madam, as I said, the general superintendence of the Government has been given up. True section 7 has been altered suitably. It is said that the Commissioner has got too much power and also criticism has been levelled as to how the Act is going to work in future and so on. My hon. Friend, Mr. Bhashyam, says that the whole thing is based upon suspicion. Madam, I may tell the hon. Member that all laws are not made for good people, because good people do not want any law and they do not want the Indian Penal Code or any law of limitation. In the case of a good man, he does not insist on the plea of limitation and say that the claim is barred by limitation, but will give back what he really owes to the other man. So, Madam, laws are made only for people who do not care for the public weal and so they are necessary to bring such people under the arm of the law so that they may go on the right path. Therefore, laws, as they are understood, are based upon that fact and are intended to bring back erring humanity to a proper and social life. So also, this law is necessary and it is not based upon any suspicion against any trustee or matadhipathi, but it is only intended to bring such of those erring trustees and matadhipathis to the path of right conduct.

"Then again, Madam, I do not think there is any justification for the criticism that has been made against the Bill that local opinion will not be taken into account. For instance, under the existing Act, in various districts, what are known as district temple committees, were formed and in certain districts these committees were asked to be elected of persons who were worshippers belonging to the several temples. We know the history of these temple committees. They were torn by factions and cliques with the ultimate result that so many of the district temple committees became the laughing stock of the people. That is why, in this Bill, for the time being the Area Committees to be appointed by the Government have been substituted for temple committees to be selected by the worshippers of the religious institutions of the area. For the time being, I shall be satisfied if the Government take care to see that in appointing members to these Area Committees they appoint persons who have religious faith and good character. With this pious wish, I shall rest satisfied for the present.

"Madam, as I said, this Bill only marks one stride ahead in putting our religious institutions on a proper footing and I congratulate the Hon. Minister who introduced this Bill and the Hon. Law Minister for piloting it through to its successful end."

18th December 1950]

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—“Madam Deputy Speaker, we have come to the first stage of the end of our journey. The Hon. Minister in charge of the Bill in moving for the third reading of the Bill made a speech, which appealed to me very greatly, on account of the sincerity with which he has spoken those words. He told us that it was in deference to the opinions expressed on the floor of this House that several amendments have been made. He also mentioned the great responsiveness the Government have shown to public opinion in this matter. He has told us that the Bill has been before the public for more than three years; and after it was published in the month of January 1949, it was substantially revised again in the next month of the same year, and then it was introduced in this House. Madam, Deputy Speaker, if you remember the occasion when it was introduced, those surcharged feelings, which were roused both in favour and in opposition to the Bill, you will recollect, how vehement speeches were made, and it was said very vehemently on behalf of the Government then, that, if the Bill as introduced then was not supported, they would take it that those that opposed it were supporting corruption and mismanagement of temples. There was no doubt, the Government then, when they introduced the Bill in the condition in which it was introduced and in the language in which it was couched, felt, that those who opposed the several clauses of the Bill on several grounds, were opposing the Bill, because they were in favour of continuing the mismanagement in the temples. But, however, time has elapsed, and since that date, they have not reiterated that kind of sentiment; and to-day the Hon. Dr. Rajan has very refreshingly said that in response to the public opinion and also in response to the amendments moved on the floor of this House and also in great deference to the suggestions made here, he has made a great many changes; and to that extent, although much younger than he, I venture to congratulate him.

"Madam, Deputy Speaker, the Hon. Dr. Rajan said that we have sat for seventeen days over this Bill, a very record sitting no doubt, and we sat for seventy hours in considering the clauses in the second reading stage. I would remind the Hon. Minister that it was not the fault of the few members who moved those amendments that we had to sit for full seventeen days. As I said on another occasion, originally Government had a particular approach, and it was a very dogmatic approach; but it changed later on mature consideration. In the select committee I noted that the Government themselves introduced 37 amendments to the Bill consisting of 106 clauses. And after the second reading began, discussion proceeded up to the clause 6; there, from the sixth clause onwards Government moved more than 52 amendments to the end of the Bill. That only shows, in fact I am recounting these things to show, that those who were moving amendments were not actuated by any bad motives, but that they were equally anxious to make the Bill as good as possible, consistent with the needs of the Constitution and the requirements of the Constitution. Then, Madam,

[Sri T. Viswanatham] [18th December 1950]

in the course of moving these amendments, Government omitted about seven clauses and about sixteen sub-clauses; they substituted 25 clauses, they added six new clauses, and they inserted four new sub-clauses. You should realize, Madam, that it was a very arduous affair, of Government trying on the one hand to push through a measure, which was good from their own point of view, and we on the other hand trying to make it as good as possible from the point of view of the Constitution and the interests involved. But the chief difficulty for us, Madam, is not the management or mismanagement. For we know, human institutions are always liable for mismanagement. Because, all people in the management of public funds are not good. But the question, what to do and how to do it after the promulgation of the Constitution, was a great difficulty for us. The Constitution has said one thing. And whatever may be our inclinations and whatever may be the notions that we have developed, because we have had experience of badly managed institutions, still we have to stick to certain fundamental things. All that the Constitution has said is this. I think those words have been quoted quite a good number of times. But still, I feel I should with your leave, Madam, quote here those words. They are articles 25 and 26 of the Constitution. Article 26 gives the right to establish and maintain institutions for religious and charitable purposes of religious denomination or a section of that denomination. It gives that denomination a right to manage its own affairs of religion; and not only that, but a right to own and acquire movable and immovable property. Surely, these last are not religious matters; they are absolutely secular matters. But still under Article 26 a right is reserved for a religious denomination to acquire movable and immovable property and to administer such property in accordance with law. Thus, that right of administration of properties, which is quite different from matters of religion, which is invested in sub-clause (b) of Article 26 is also reserved in favour of religious denominations. But Government seem to have taken up their stand under sub-clause (a) of Article 25 (2), which says,—

“(2) Nothing in this article shall affect the operation of any existing law or prevent the State from making any law—

(a) regulating or restricting any economic, financial, political or other secular activity which may be associated with religious practices.

That seems to have been their case. But in my opinion that clause relates to other matters. Madam, when Government first introduced this Bill and when we took our objection against it, declaring that in view of the provisions of the Constitution, we cannot proceed with the Bill, Government gave as their argument that their law officers have advised them that they are within their right under Article 25 of the Constitution, under which they can regulate or restrict religious activities. Now, I beg to submit that we have to read and understand these articles together, in which the right to own, acquire and administer movable and immovable property is reserved for a religious denomination. However at this stage, I do not wish to go into any further disquisition upon this matter, because we have put forward our point of view as each clause came up for discussion. Government also seem to have realized the difficulty, and therefore they have omitted several clauses, particularly clause 7, and clauses 43, 44, 45, 48 and 54, to say that they come within the Constitution. But the real point is, after all this transformation this Bill has undergone, I want to know, whether the Bill as it stands at present, does not offend the Constitution. The Hon. Minister points out that two Advocates-General, Mr. K. Rajah Ayyar in the first stage and now Mr. Kuttikrishna Menon also, have been advising them that they are legislating within the Constitution. It may be, they may have been advised that they are within law. But I want here to make a brief survey of it to see whether the present Bill is still within the Constitution. For, it is a very important point so far as I am concerned at this present stage. As I said, the Constitution reserves to religious denominations the right to acquire, manage and administer movable and immovable properties, which is separate from the management of affairs of religion. Both these rights are expressly reserved to them in the Constitution. Now what has this Bill done? It has first created a hierarchy of officials, Commissioner, Deputy Commissioner and Assistant Commissioner. Now, who are to be in actual management of the property, movable and immovable? Government have taken up the stand (on the ground that they are within the Constitution) that those who are in actual charge of the administration of such property are the trustees. Therefore, they say, the Constitution is satisfied. But take the clauses in the Bill where the position of the trustee is envisaged. There, what do we see? The trustee is to be appointed by the Government and he is to be removed by the Government at their will and pleasure. In some cases, the removal is by the Commissioner; while in some other cases the final orders will be issued by the Government. I submit, when the trustee is to be appointed and removed by the Government or their officers, surely, we cannot say, the trustees represent their denomination, or that the management by them is management by the denomination in any sense of the term. I wish Government clearly realise this difficulty. It may be I am not quite clear; it may be I am not able to express myself clearly; but I am convinced at this stage, when I do say, that the provision, where trustee is appointed by the Government and is removed by the Government of their offices, does not satisfy the Constitution. For they are not in any manner members representing denomination, or any section of the denomination who are put in charge of the property, movable and immovable, and the affairs of the institution. Similarly, for all temples, whose income is less than twenty thousand rupees, Government propose to appoint area committees. And these also are to be manned by persons who are to be appointed by the Government and who can be removed by the Commissioner. Therefore, you will see, Madam, the Commissioner, the Deputy

[Sri T. Viswanatham] [18th December 1950]

Commissioner and the Assistant Commissioner are all paid officers of the Government, and so, members of the area committees and the trustees for various temple scattered over the entire province will be all nominees of the Government; they need have nothing to do with the religious denomination. There is nothing in the Bill to say that the denomination has a voice in the appointment of a trustee. So the trustee holds his office under the control of the area committee, the Commissioner and others, who are all under the control of the Government. So finally it reduces itself to this: it is the Government that rules, it is the Commissioner that rules, and it is not the denomination or any section of it that rules or controls the management or administer the affairs of the denominations. So, I submit the intention of the Constitution has not been in any manner fulfilled. Now, you may ask, 'why do you stress so much on the Constitution aspect?' 'Is it not a matter of mere technique?' 'Has not the State supreme right?' Or as the Hon. Minister said, 'Has not the State always reserve power to manage, power of supervision and regulation of these institutions?'

"I submit that the members who framed the Constitution also had this aspect in view. They also considered whether it was right for the State to interfere in religious matters in this country which is made up of so many religious denominations and with all the different traditions and the different doctrines of philosophy upon which the various denominations have sprung up. They thought that in the best interests of the country the State and even the Central Government should not have anything to do with religious denominations or the maintenance of the institutions run by them, and left these matters to the religious denominations themselves. It is not a technical matter; it is a matter of substance. That is the reason why we were so particular to argue about the constitutional point. I submit that it is on this constitutional point only that this Bill seems to be inviting some danger in future. While the hon. Sri Bashyam was speaking, the Hon. Sri Madhava Menon said just across the table 'Don't pass imprecations'. Madam, as you might have seen during the long discussion, we did not oppose the clauses for opposition's sake. The very fact that the Government themselves have altered certain clauses and the good spirit in which the Hon. Dr. Rajan acknowledged our efforts prove the bona fides of our intention. It was not by way of imprecations that we made our suggestions. As intelligent Members of an intelligent Assembly of one of the most important States in India, we are anxious that the measures we pass should satisfy the constitution and the fundamental notions of justice. It may be that we go wrong. But it is our earnest desire and bona fide intention to make the Bill as perfect as possible and it is only in that spirit that we moved the several amendments. Except for one or two occasions, our train did not go off the rails. I have no complaint to make against the Hon. Ministers. They also were in good spirit. I admire the patience with which the Hon. Dr. Rajan was sitting throughout every day and keenly observing the discussion. The whole question is whether we have done the right thing or the wrong thing.

"I do not disagree with the Hon. Dr. Rajan when he says that we must restore the temples to their original high level of spiritual tradition. But I submit, as the hon. Sri Bhashyam vehemently submitted already, that even the Government will not be in a position to realize the ambition by adopting this Bill. By appointing Commissioners, Deputy and Assistant Commissioners, Area Committees and trustees of their own choice, will the Government be able to achieve anything? As a student, thirty years ago I travelled all over the State visiting all the important temples. After a period of thirty years, I look round now and see whether any improvement has taken place. I do not want to cast any reflection on the work of the Hindu Religious Endowments Board done during the last twenty-five years. Except for the plastering of sculptural and fresco work, no improvement has been done. I do not see the enhancement or even the retention of the ancient glory in any of these temples under the control of the Board. Even if the Government take more drastic powers as was suggested by Sri V. M. Ramaswami Mudaliyar, centralize the whole administration, remove all the restrictions which we suggested and make the religious institutions completely Government institutions like the General Hospital in Madras, I wonder whether the Government will be able to effect any improvement. Our experience of the past does not justify any such hope. Temples can be improved, new life put in, and made the real abodes of peace for the troubled souls only by those who live around and who have an abiding faith in them and in the religious doctrines for which they stand. Such people should be given sufficient power and unhampered initiative. The Government officers cannot do that. To put the entire organization under Government officers and say that we are doing it only with a view to arrest mismanagement passes my understanding in the light of past experience. Notwithstanding all the sincere motives of the Hon. Dr. Rajan, I submit that this Bill may not achieve the desired object. This Bill has squeezed out all religious denominations and sections thereof. The only clause of this Bill which had something of religion in it providing for the constitution of an advisory council consisting of religious persons, which was introduced at the Select Committee stage, was removed. I submit that the interest of the trustees appointed by the Government will lie more with the Government than with the religious institutions.

"The Government have taken power to extend the Bill to charitable endowments by notification. There are charitable endowments like hospitals, schools, patasalas, etc. Most of the provisions of this Bill will not be applicable to them. There are so many other matters which have got to be dealt with in respect of those institutions for which no provision is at all made in this Bill. This is a point which the Government should not have missed.

"I now come to the ousting of the jurisdiction of the civil court. The Hon. Minister was good enough to say that it was not

[Sri T. Viswanatham] [18th December 1950]

due to want of faith in law courts but because of the dilatory procedure and the scandalous waste of public funds that were inevitable when matters were taken to the court. This remark about the scandalous waste of public funds can be applied to almost every Government organization in this country and probably in every other country also. Let us take the Public Works Department. Are there not people who say that it is a public waste department? Is everything all right in Government hospitals which are manned by officers of the highest qualification? There also there is delay. The suffering patients have to wait not according to their due turn but depending on the whims and fancies of the officer. I was reading the Council debates during the days of Dr. T. M. Nair and Dewana Bahadur K. P. Kesava Pillai, and found them complaining about the delays in the General Hospital at Madras thirty years ago. Delay is inevitable. Simply because there is delay in courts, shall we deny to the citizens access to the courts to seek remedies? The Hon. Minister forgets that the Civil Procedure Code provides also for the quick despatch of business. Is there not red-tapism and delay in Government departments? Resolutions of a municipal council sent to the Government for permission to publish a notification under section 4 of the Land Acquisition Act two years ago are still pending, the papers going up and down. As I said, delay is inevitable. But the Government can also do in two hours what will normally take two days. Notwithstanding the red-tape, they have got the reserve powers. Similarly by getting injunctions and other interlocutory orders from the court, the parties can get immediate remedy. If the complainant says that the properties in dispute are being wasted or mismanaged, the Civil Procedure Code provides for putting them under the management of receivers or other officers appointed by the court. It is wrong to lay the blame for all delays on the courts. In some cases the parties are not ready. I know of several cases in which the Government are a party. The counsel representing the Government says that he is awaiting the orders of the Government or the opinion of the Advocate-General and so on, and asks for an adjournment. The court is helpless and has necessarily to grant the adjournment. Such things happen times without number. Similarly, private parties too are not in a position to produce the required documents in time. Judges have to go into the documents, hear the arguments on both sides and then arrive at the truth to the best of their lights. Somehow the impression has been created in the minds of the people that a court means only dilatoriness. I submit it is doing a great injustice to the courts. Wherever there is delay, certainly steps can be taken to achieve the object immediately by a stay order or by changing the procedure. Delay should not be made an excuse for depriving citizens of their right of seeking redress of their grievances in a court of law, and delay should not embolden the Government to say that they will oust the jurisdiction of the courts. In several clauses of this Bill, the Commissioner is vested with final powers barring the jurisdiction of the courts. I submit that it is not right for the Government to oust the jurisdiction of the courts on some pretext or other. A feeling is gaining ground in the minds of the people that not only the Government of this State but also the Central Government want to vest the executive with over-riding powers over the courts. The Governments seem to think that the courts are some extraneous bodies."

18th December 1950] [Sri T. Viswanatham]

DEPUTY SPEAKER :—" The hon. Member has only one more minute."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" I thought I had fifteen minutes more. I have found the Members of this Assembly so good that they have trusted a few of us with all the seventy hours of discussion of this Bill, and left the matter to us. I therefore think that many Members are not likely to participate in this discussion."

DEPUTY SPEAKER :—" Ten more Members want to speak."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" Madam, I thought that I had some more time. But, even if I have exhausted the time allotted to me, I would crave your indulgence to extend a few minutes more to me."

DEPUTY SPEAKER :—" I am sorry, I cannot give any more time. The hon. Member must finish his speech in another minute."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" As I was referring to, Madam, this measure gives the Government an extraordinary power for patronage. The Hon. Minister for Law was in a rage when I said that this Act gave lot of patronage to the Government. The Area Committees which are to be constituted under this Act will have under their jurisdiction and control nearly 28,000 temples. Then the Government have got power to appoint trustees for nearly 30,000 institutions and each institution will have at least three trustees. I ask the Hon. Minister for Law, whether the Government and the Commissioner who is only an officer under the Government, have not got extraordinary scope for showing their patronage in these appointments. Will they not exercise their patronage in making these appointments? When such wide powers are given under this measure, no doubt, it would be a great burden and a responsibility upon their shoulders, and it may not be possible to exercise their discretion with ordinary impartiality. That is why I suggested in one of my amendments that the Government should divest themselves of these powers of showing patronage to their own men, and should not give any impression to the various bodies that they still retain such powers of showing patronage. Madam, I shall end my speech by saying that these Area Committees consisting of Government officials and their nominees and these trustees, who are appointed trustees, will be in charge of these 30,000 Hindu Religious Institutions whose income will be anything over Rs. 4 crores and therefore the Government will be carving out a small kingdom and placing it in the hands of these persons, who are appointed by them and who can be removed at their sweet will and pleasure. I only hope that the Government and the various officers who will be in charge of these religious institutions will exercise all these powers with great caution, so that something good may come of this Act, notwithstanding the various defects contained in it. Let me conclude, Madam, by wishing Godspeed for this Bill, so far as we are concerned."

[Sri T. Viswanatham] [18th December 1950]

"நான் கொடுத்த திருத்தங்களில் முக்கியமானது ஒன்று. இன்றையதினம் பெரிய நில சேர்திருத்தம் செய்யப்போகிறோம் என்று அரசாங்கத்தார் பறை

[Sri K. T. Kosalam] [18th December 1950]

சாற்றுக்கொண்டிருக்கிறார்கள். உண்மை. அரசாங்கத்திற்கு விவசாயிகள் மீது அநுதாபமிருந்து உண்மையாகவே நில சீர்திருத்தம் செய்யவேண்டுமென்று நினைத்திருந்தால் நான் கொடுத்த ஒரு amendment-ஐ ஒப்புக்கொண்டிருக்கவேண்டும். அதாவது இப்பொழுது கோவில்களுக்கும் மடங்களுக்கும் ஏராளமான நிலங்களிருக்கின்றன. அந்த நிலங்களை கட்டுக்குத்தக்கத் (lease) விடும்பொழுது ஆங்காங்குள்ள கோவாரேட்டிவ் சங்கங்கள் கொடுத்து அதன் மூலம் விவசாயிகளுக்கு நிலங்களைக் கொடுக்கவேண்டுமென்று தான். அதை ஒப்புக்கொள்ள முடியாது என்று கனம் மதுவமேனன் அவர்கள் சொன்னார்கள். அதைப்பற்றி பேசும்பொழுது கனம் கரந்த அவர்கள் இது ஒரு தேர்தல் பிரச்சாரம் என்று சொன்னார். தேர்தல் பிரச்சாரத்தைப்பற்றி சொன்னதால் நான் ஒன்று சொல்லுகிறேன். தேர்தலில் மக்களை ஏமாற்றி விடமுடியாது. உண்மையில் விவசாயிகள் என்ன செய்கிறார்கள் என்பதைப் பேசுகிறார்கள் என்பதைப் பார்க்கவேண்டும். எதையாவது சொல்லிக் கொண்டு போட்டுகளை வாங்கிவிடமுடியாது. எந்த நிலைமையில் நாம் அரசாங்கத்தை நடத்துகிறோம். மந்திரிகள் என்ன செய்கிறார்கள்? மக்கள் சொல்வதை மந்திரிகளிடத்தில் சொல்லுவதற்குத் தான் அங்கத்தினர்களுக்கு கின்றார்கள் என்றெல்லாம் அவர்கள் சொல்லுகிறார்கள். ஆகவே அவர்கள் ஏமாற்றி போட்டுகளை வாங்கிவிடுவது என்பது முடியாது. நில சீர்திருத்தம் என்பது ஒரு பெரிய காரியம். அந்தக் காரியத்தை நாம் இப்பொழுது செய்யப்போகிறோம் அதற்குத் தகுந்தாற்போல் இப்பொழுது மடங்களுக்கும் கோவில்களுக்கும் ஏராளமான நிலங்களிருக்கின்றன. அவைகளை எல்லாம் இப்பொழுது கமிஷனருடைய control-ல் வருகிறது. இப்பொழுது மடாதிபதிகள் இருக்கிறார்கள் அவர்கள் நிலங்களை ஒரு தனிப்பட்ட மனிதனுக்கு கட்டுக்குத்தக்கக் கொடுக்கிறார்கள். அந்தத் தனிப்பட்டவர் தனக்களிப்பின் பத்துப்பேர்களுக்கு sub-lease-க்கு விட்டுவிடுகிறார். பிறகு உழுது ஜீவனம் செய்யும் விவசாயிகளுக்குப் போகிறது. அதனால் அவனுக்கு லாபம் இல்லாமல் போகிறது. மடாதிபதிகளுக்கும் கோவில்களுக்கும் லாபம் இல்லாமல் போகிறது. நிலத்தை உழுபவனுக்கும் லாபம் இல்லாமல் போகிறது. அதனால் மத்தியிலிருக்கும் பூர்கள் தான் சாப்பிட்டுக்கொண்டிருக்கிறார்கள். அதனால் நிலத்தை உழுபவனுக்கு மிச்சமில்லாமல் போகிறது. என்னுடைய amendment-ஐ ஒப்புக்கொண்டிருந்தால் உழுபவனுக்குத் தான் நிலம் போகும்படியாக ஏற்படும். கமிஷனுக்கு நாம் control வைத்திருந்தால் அவர் கோவாரேட்டிவ் சங்கங்கள் மூலம் விவசாயிகளுக்கு நிலம் போகும்படியாகச் செய்யலாம். நாம் காந்திஜி சொல்லி வந்ததுபோல் உழுபவனுக்குத் தான் நிலம் சொந்தம் என்பதை நிறைவேற்றுவதுமாதம். இப்பொழுது கமிஷனுக்கு அதிகாரத்தைக் கொடுப்பதில் நிலங்களை ஆங்காங்குள்ள கோவாரேட்டிவ் சங்கங்கள் மூலமாக விவசாயிகளுக்கே கொடுக்கும்படியாக ஒரு உத்திரவு போடவேண்டும். அப்பொழுதுதான் நாம் காந்திஜி சொன்னதை நிறைவேற்றினவர்களாவோம். இதுதான் கோவில்களுக்கும் மடங்களுக்கும் அதிகமான வருமானம் வரும். நாம் இப்பொழுது உணவு உற்பத்தியை அதிகப்படுத்தவேண்டுமென்று சொல்லி வரும்பொழுது இத்தக்காரியத்தைச் செய்தால் உணவு உற்பத்திக்கு சந்தர்ப்பம் அதிகம் உண்டாகும்படியான ஒரு சாதனையைச் செய்து காட்டமுடியும். என்னுடைய amendment-ஐ ஒப்புக்கொள்ளாததால் இவ்விதம் செய்யும்படியாக கமிஷனர்களுக்கு ஒரு உத்திரவு அனுப்பிக்கவேண்டும்.

“அடுத்தபடியாக மத்ய சர்க்காரால் ஒரு concurrent Bill கொண்டுவரப்படப்போகிறது, அதனால் இந்த சட்டம் அவசியம் என்று பயமுறுத்தப்படுகிறது. இந்த சட்டத்தையே கொண்டுவரக்கூடாது என்று மடாதிபதிகள் இரண்டரை வரல்காலமாக பயமுறுத்தி வருகின்றார்கள். மத்திய சர்க்கார்தங்கனிடத்திலிருக்கிறது என்றும் சொல்லி வருகிறார்கள். ஆனால் மத்திய அரசாங்கத்திற்கு கனம் மந்திரி அவர்கள் இதைச் சொல்லவேண்டும். நாம் ஜமீந்தாரி ஒழிப்பு மசோதாவைக்கொண்டுவந்து 1937-ம் ஆண்டு இலாபம் ஒழித்துவிட்டு அந்த சட்டத்தை நிறைவேற்றினோம். இப்பொழுது நாம் இராமநாதபுரம் ஜில்லாவில் பார்த்தால் பல கிராமங்களில் பல குட்டி ஜமீந்தாரிகளை உண்டாக்கிவிட்டோம். இதைக்கண்டு விவசாயிகள் கொதித்துக் கொண்டிருக்கின்றார்கள். அதனால் நாம் எவ்வளவோ unpopular ஆகியிருக்கிறோம். ஏன் இந்த நிலைமைக்குக் கொண்டுவந்து வைத்திருக்கிறார்கள்? மத்ய அரசாங்கத்தாரின் ஒரு உத்திரவு. அதைப்போலவே மத்ய அரசாங்கம் இந்த சட்டத்தை அமுலுக்குக் கொண்டுவர முடியாமல் மாற்றியமைக்கும்படியான ஒரு சட்டத்தைக் கொண்டுவரலாம். அதற்கு இந்த அரசாங்கம் உஷாராக இருக்கவேண்டும். ஆனால் மத்திய அரசாங்கத்தை நான் ஒன்றும் சொல்லமுடியாது. இங்கிருக்கின்றவர்கள் அங்குள்ளவர்களை இவ்விதம் mislead பண்ணுகிறார்கள். தகவல்களைக்கொடுக்க aeroplane-ல் பறக்கிறார்கள். மடாதிபதிகள் மடத்தின் லட்சக்கணக்கான பணத்தை சிலை செய்துகொண்டேயிருக்கிறார்கள். மக்கள் இதைப் பார்த்துக் கொண்டேயிருக்கிறார்கள். மடாதிபதிகள் எங்குவேண்டுமென்றாலும் செல்வார்கள். இதில் அரசாங்கம் நிகவும் கவனமாக இருக்கவேண்டும். நமது மாகாண எள்கைகளை தெளிவுபடச் சொல்லவேண்டும்.”

DEPUTY SPEAKER:—“The hon. Member has got only two more minutes. Let him finish his speech now by taking two more minutes; otherwise he may continue his speech in the afternoon, but he will speak only for two minutes.”

SRI K. T. KOSALRAM:—“I shall continue my speech in the afternoon, Madam.”

The House rose to meet again at 2-30 p.m.

SRI K. T. KOSALRAM:—“Madam, கனம் பாஷ்யம் அவர்கள் பேசும் போது மடாதிபதிகளையும், மடத்தையும் இந்த மசோதாவில் சேர்த்து விட்டால் ஹிந்து மதமே போய்விடும் என்று ஆக்ரோஷத்துடன் பேசினார்கள். நான் ஒன்று சொல்லுகிறேன். இந்த மசோதா வந்தால்தான் ஹிந்து மதம் தழைக்கப்போகிறது என்பதை அவர் மறந்துவிடக்கூடாது. ஹிந்து மதத்தின் பெயரால் யாரோ ஒரு சிலர் அபகிரமம் செய்கிறார்கள் என்று சொல்வதை அவர் ஒப்புக்கொள்ளுகிறார். அவர்கள் எவ்வளவோ தவறுகள் செய்கிறார்கள். அவர்கள்மேல் அரசாங்கத்தின் கண்காணிப்பிருந்தால் தான், அதுவும் இந்த மசோதாவைக்கொண்டு வந்தால்தான் ஹிந்து மதம் தழைத்தோங்கும். அதற்காக நான் இன்றையதினம் கனம் மந்திரி அவர்களுக்கு நன்றி அனுதாபங்களைப் பதிவுக்கிறேன். என்னுடைய amendment ஒன் நன்றி அனுதாபங்களைப் பதிவுக்கிறேன். என்னுடைய surplus money இருக்கக்கூடியதில் சொல்லியிருந்தேன் அதாவது உபயோகப்படுத்தவேண்டுமென்று. கொடுத்த எடுத்துக் கல்வி வசதிக்காக உபயோகப்படுத்தவேண்டுமென்று. அதன் அவசியத்திற்கு ஒரு திருத்தத்தை அரசாங்கம் ஏற்றுக்கொண்டது. அதன் அவசியத்திற்கு ஒரு உதாரணம் சொல்லுகிறேன். இன்று கிருஷ்ண மிஷனரிகள் இருக்கிறார்கள், அவர்கள் மக்களிடத்தில் மதத்தையும் கல்வியையும் பரப்பிவருகிறார்கள், அவர்கள் என்பதை உதாரணமாக எடுத்துக்கொள்ளவேண்டும். அவர்கள் களுக்கு இங்கு ஆயிரக்கணக்கான நிலங்களும் கோடிக்கணக்கான பணமும் களுக்கு இங்கு ஆயிரக்கணக்கான நிலங்களும் மடங்களுமிருக்கின்றன. அவைகளை வருமானம் வாக்கூடிய கோவில்களும் மடங்களுமிருக்கின்றன. அவைகளை கூடங்களைவைத்து சர்க்காரிடமிருந்து கிராண்டுகள் பெற்று பள்ளிக்கூடங்களை நடத்திவருகின்றார்கள், இன்றும் வைத்ய வசதிகளையும் செய்து வருகிறார்கள். எங்கெங்கெல்லாம் மனிதர்கள் கேவலமாக பிறப்பாக்கான நிலைமையில் இருக்கிறார்களோ அங்கெல்லாம் மிஷனரிகள் சென்று பள்ளிக்கூடங்களை வைத்து ஆஸ்பத்திரிகளை கட்டிவைத்து தங்களுடைய மதத்தை பரப்பி வருகிறார்கள். அதன்மூலம் ஆண்டவனிடத்தில் பக்தியை புதுத்துகிறார்கள். அவர்களுடைய பணம் இவைகளைச் செய்வதற்கு உபயோகமாக இருக்கிறது. மீண்டும் இவைகளை நாம் செய்வதன்மூலம் ஹிந்து மதத்தை எடுத்து தாகும். செட்டிநாட்டு-இராஜா சொன்னமாதிரி இந்த பணத்தை எடுத்துக் கல்வி வசதிக்கு சிலவிடக்கூடாது என்று சொல்வது அனாவசியமான எதிர்ப்பாகும், மனிதன் முன்னேற்றமடையவேண்டுமென்பதற்காகவும், ஹிந்து மதம் தழைக்கவேண்டுமென்பதற்காகவும் தான் நம்முடைய மூதாதையர் கள் அநேகம் சொத்துக்களை எழுதி வைத்திருக்கின்றார்கள். அந்த வைத்துக் கொண்டு அரசாங்கத்தை கல்வி வசதிக்காகவும் மக்கள் முன்னேற்றத்திற்காகவும் சிலவிடவேண்டுமென்று சொல்லியிருக்கிறார்கள். ஆகவே மக்களுடைய முன்னேற்றத்திற்காகவும் கல்வி வசதிக்காகவும் இந்த பணத்தை எடுத்து சிலவிடவேண்டுமென்று கமிஷனருக்கு அரசாங்கம் உத்திரவிட வேண்டும் என்பதாக சொல்லிக்கொண்டு நான் இந்த மசோதாவை முழு மனதுடன் ஆதரிக்கிறேன்.”

SRI M. S. PATTABHIRAMIAH :—“ Madam, Deputy Speaker, before I make some observations on this Bill at this third reading stage, I wish to acknowledge the enlightenment I had from the illuminating address, so soberly made by the Hon. Minister for Religious Endowments, Dr. T. S. S. Rajan. It was really an illuminating speech and it was also so sober, and we found that after all, the views of the sponsors of the Bill were not irreconcilable with those of some of the critics of the Bill. I do not, Madam, take the tragic view taken by my hon. Friend, Sri K. Bhashyam, nor do I lightheartedly support all and every provision of the Bill as it emerged after the second reading. Madam, I do find certain defects in it, which ought to have been rectified in the second reading itself. After all that has been done, I find now that it has been better streamlined than it was, when it was first introduced in this Assembly and I believe that during the enforcement of the various provisions of this Bill in this State, we may not find any very great difficulty, and although in course of time, we may be compelled to make certain modifications in certain provisions of the Bill, I am sure that ultimately this Bill will prove of great benefit and will be in the interest and welfare of this State.

“ Unfortunately, Madam, there is a tendency among certain people of our State and here also who presume that these religious institutions, whether they are temples or maths, are entirely divorced from ethical principles and with that presumption they have made speeches with the ostensible object of supporting this Bill as it has been sponsored. In our country, Madam, after the coming into existence of these temples and maths, for the last thousand or a thousand two hundred years, the tie between religion and ethics had never been relaxed even in temples and maths, which had been engaged in philosophical speculations and the propagation of their own peculiar doctrines. These religious institutions, as they are to-day, have no doubt very much deteriorated, but they have not deteriorated to such an extent as to deserve to be wiped out of existence or destroyed altogether. We must make up plans and devise means by which we should make these religious institutions fulfil the objects with which they had been founded by our forefathers. Therefore the Government were right in taking the responsibility upon their heads, and in having brought forward a Bill with a view to see that their affairs were administered properly and that they fulfilled the objects of the founders of such institutions.

Madam, I am only a layman and not a lawyer; nor will it be possible for me to explain the legal points or to point out the legal defects in the Bill, as has been done by our lawyer friends, which do not conform to the principles enshrined in the Constitution, but anyhow there is an apprehension in the minds of people like me, and the volume of that apprehension is increasing among the sensible and saner sections of the population of our State, who believe that by enforcing certain of the provisions which are really quite radical and quite against all our concepts of temple and religion, the sanctity of these temples and maths, and the purpose for which they had been established, would be destroyed. Madam, I cannot say that they are entirely wrong for we find that in the administration of many of these religious institutions which have been taken up by the statutory bodies established by our Government, all is not perfect. But, as has been pointed out by all hon. Members of the House, no human institution can be perfect anywhere in the world; so they require reforms. But in this Bill, we find that in certain matters where a secular Government should not interfere and where a secular Government are not competent to interfere or make laws or take over the management of the affairs of the institution into their own hands, the Government are attempting to do so. Take for instance one typical provision in this Bill, relating to the fixing of standard scales of expenditure or of dittams. I can just give a small catalogue of such things in this Bill, wherein the Government are interfering unduly with the affairs of the temple, but taking this one matter of what is called the dittam alone, what do we see? What is meant by dittam, in the first place? Dittam is a corrupt form of the word 'Dhishtam' which means that which has been decided. And what has been decided to be the scale of a certain expenditure or a charge for a certain ritual to be performed or the hymns or songs or mantras to be chanted, during the period of worship which appeal to the spirit and soul of man, that dittam is sought to be modified or is sought to be changed by an officer appointed by the Government.

“ Is it right, Madam? I say the Government are not competent to deal with the dittams of religious institutions like temples. They have been regarded so from very ancient times, and they have been in existence for hundreds of years. There have been cases of mismanagement. With all these mismanagements, all these temples have survived. They have been giving consolation to the people. It is there that forgiveness, charity, etc., are taught. Ethical standards have been set up. Moral values have been given. All these have been going on in temples. But for these institutions we would have been much worse than we are now. All morality and ethical standards are not to be set up by any Government, and particularly by any secular Government. These maths have absolutely no dittam, as it is defined in the Bill, or as it can be conceived by anybody, for their daily expenditure. They have no dittam for their expenditure. Funds as they come are to be dealt with, and responded to, by the matadhipathi or the manager of the math. This is only a small example of what the Government might have done if they had been a little more considerate than they had been. I do not deny that the Government had given so much time for discussion, and the Hon. Speaker has given us all the help. This Bill has been so thoroughly discussed and examined in this Assembly. But still there are certain matters, and the Government themselves do feel that there might be something in the Bill which might go against the provisions of the Constitution. That is why they have inserted that Clause as a safeguard. That itself shows that they have not planned it as perfectly as they thought they should have. I believe that the Government, when necessary, will come forward to change certain provisions of the Bill if they find that they do not conform to the provisions of the Constitution, or if they find that these provisions could not be enforced without violating some of the principles on which we have been administering these institutions. The principles can never be violated by any Government however well-intentioned that Government might be. The Government are always well-intentioned, and I do not doubt the good intentions of this Government in bringing forward this Bill. But a critic like myself, who appreciates the endeavour of the Government, wants that the Government should take everything into consideration, and try to improve. Hereafter there is no possibility of improving the Bill. I hope that the Government will come forward for improving the provisions of the Bill in course of time. With these words, and with my hearty congratulations to the Hon. the Minister in charge of the Bill, Hon. Dr. Rajan, I resume my seat."

SRI V. I. MUNISWAMI PILLAY:—"Madam, Deputy Speaker, the sincerity with which the Hon. the Minister for Religious Endowments had brought forward this measure, I think, needs congratulation. Unfortunately, it is not possible for me to give an unqualified support to the measure that has been brought before this House. The religion of the Hindus has reached such an eminence not only in our country, but even in Western countries the philosophy of Hinduism has been greatly appreciated. The philosophical side of Hinduism has been mainly taken up in all maths. The provisions in the Bill relating to maths greatly concern those of us who had the occasion to be the inmates of maths and who had the privilege of sitting under the feet of Gurus. It is these provisions that wound the susceptibilities of men like me. In our State, there are maths the heads of which are held in great reverence. What I would like to point out here is that the promoters of this Bill have not really understood the real relationship between the Guru and the sishya. I have no objection to the provisions which the Hon. the Minister has brought forward and incorporated in this Bill about temples, the management of temples, the management of the endowments and such other things. When I think of the provisions touching the maths, I get shocked. The importance of what is taught in the maths and the relationship that exists between the Guru and the sishya will be greatly interfered with by the provisions of this Bill. I know, as a matter of fact, that the heads of maths do not touch money. They do not touch even those that come by way of pathakanikas that are offered to the Guru. Above all the direction for dittams and other things that ought to be followed in maths, will hurt the feelings of those people. For example, in some maths the full-moon day is observed. It is not only in the math itself. But they go to mountains and other places away from the place of their abode where thousands of people may come and listen to the teachings of the Guru, and may offer something by way of gifts and such other things which the Guru himself does not consider as gifts. I think it is against all principles of justice to ask either the manager of the math or the Guru himself to account for all these things. My hon. Friends Mr. Bhashyam and Mr. Viswanatham have told several things as to how the provisions of the Bill will not be received with great enthusiasm. In a matter like this Bill, which comes under the concurrent list, we are not the people to finally decide. But Parliament will have the final word to say in this matter. Apart from that, the chequered career of this Bill, and the long time that it has taken, shows the great importance of the provisions in this Bill. It cannot be easily said that everybody in this country welcomes the provisions of this Bill. Why this Bill has taken so much time is a matter that we have to consider. Taking all these things into account, my sole aim is to say that the inclusion of maths, as it is adumbrated in the Bill, is not a welcome thing to me or to those who think just like myself. Some hon. Members who preceded me even referred to the Christian religion, the endowments, the educational, side and the medical benefits that are offered by that religion. Madam, it must be known that in the matter of endowing anything to Hindu temples or maths, the donor makes it perfectly clear for what purposes the endowment is made. If the Government feel that there has been mismanagement of the endowment, they are welcome to interfere. But if we are to change the attitude or the decision of the donor who made the endowment, it will be unworthy and will not be in the best interests of the donor.

"As I said already, Madam, the inclusion of the maths will not be conducive to the propagation of the philosophy of Hinduism. Moreover the officers that are chosen to administer the laws and other things connected with this Bill may not be of the type of people that can administer the affairs of maths. So, I feel, if not now, at least at the rule-making stage later on, the Hon. the Minister will consider how far matters can be made easy in the administration of these maths. With these words, Madam, I support the motion."

[Srimathi V. Lakshmi Ammal] [18th December 1950]

வைத்திருப்பதற்காகவும் நான் கனம் மந்திரி அவர்களைப் பாராட்டுகிறேன். கனம் மந்திரி இராஜன் அவர்கள் தன்னுடைய வயது முதிர்ந்த காலத்தில் நம் நாட்டிலிருக்கிற தர்ம ஸ்தாபனங்களும் கோவில்களும் நல்ல முறையில் நடக்கவேண்டுமென்ற ஒரு புனிதமான எண்ணத்துடன் இந்தச் சட்டத்தைக் கொண்டு வந்து நிறைவேற்றுவதற்காகத்தான் இவ்வளவு நாட்கள் அவர்கள் பதவியில் இருக்கிறார்களோ என்று சொல்லும்படியாக அவ்வளவு ஒரு தீவிர உணர்ச்சியுடன் இதைக்கொண்டு வந்து நிறைவேற்றிப் போவதற்காக நான் அவர்களைப் பாராட்டி கட்டமைப்பட்டுக்கிறேன். பாராட்டவும் பாாட்டுகிறேன். ஆனால் நடைமுறையில் இந்தச் சட்டமானது எந்த விதமாக அமல் நடத்தப்படுகிறது என்பது பின்னர் தான் தெரியும். ஏனென்றால் இந்தச் சபையில் நாம் சட்டமாக்கிவருகின்ற அநேக சட்டங்களுக்கு மறுபடியும், மறுபடியும் அநேக திருத்தங்கள் வந்தவண்ணமாக இருக்கின்றன. அது மட்டுமல்ல. அநேக சட்டங்கள் கோட்டுகளின் முன் சக்தி யற்றதாக நிராகரிக்கப்பட்டிருக்கிறது. ஆகவே நாம் எவ்வளவுக்கெவ்வளவு சட்டங்களை இயற்றுகிறோமோ அவ்வளவுக்கவ்வளவு கோட்டுக்குப் போய் வியாஜியும், வழக்கு போன்ற விவகாரங்களையும் அதிகமாக்குகிறோம் என்று தான் அர்த்தம். அந்த நிலைமையில் இந்தச் சட்டமானது அதற்குப் புறம்பாக இருக்காது என்று நான் நான் சந்தேகிக்கிறேன். எந்த விஷயத்திலும் சிறிது தவறுகூட நிழலாது யாராலும் எதையும் செய்ய முடியாது. ஆகையால் எந்தக் காரியத்திலும் சிறு தப்பிசங்கள் ஏற்படுவது சகஜம் தான். கூடுமானவனையில் இந்தச் சட்டம் எந்த நோக்கத்துடன் கொண்டு வரப்பட்டிருக்கிறதோ அந்த நோக்கத்தை பரிபூரணமாக நிறைவேற்றி வைக்க இது சம்பந்தமாக அமல் நடத்தப்போகின்ற அதிகாரிகள் நடக்க வேண்டுமென்று நான் நான் இப்போது வேண்டிக்கொள்கிறேன்.

“இப்போது எத்தனையோ நூற்றுக்கணக்கான தேவாலயங்கள் நம்முடைய நாட்டில் பரமபுருஷ கிடக்கின்றன. தஞ்சாவூர் பிரகதிச்வரர் ஆலயம் போன்ற கோவில்களும், மதுரை மீனாட்சி அம்மன் கோவில் போன்ற பல பிரம்மாண்டமான கோவில்களும் இப்போது பல சின்னச்சின்ன கிராமங்களில் மதில்கள் எல்லாம் இடிந்து அந்தக் கோவில் ஸ்வாமியின் தைநேயத்திற்குக் கூட வழியில்லாமல் இருக்கின்றன. இந்தச் சட்டத்தினால் அவைகளை யெல்லாம் புனரூபணம் செய்ய முன் வந்திருக்கிறோம் என்றால் கிராமாந்திரங்களில் இதனால் உற்சாகம் ஏற்படும். அதே மாதிரி அநேக கோவில் புஷ்கரணிகள், தெப்பக்குளங்கள் இன்று கவனிப்பார் அற்று பாசி பிடித்துக் கிடக்கின்றன. பல கோவில்களில் எந்நேர முனைத்துக் கிடக்கிறது. இவைகளையெல்லாம் சீர்திருத்த இந்தச் சட்டத்தினால் வழி ஏற்படுமானால் அது ரொம்பவும் வரவேற்கத்தக்கதாகும்.

“அமர கவி பாரதியார் பாடியிருக்கிற பிரகாரம், ‘வீடு தோறும் கலை யின் விளக்கம் - வீதி தோறும் இரண்டொரு பள்ளி: நாடு முற்றிலும் உள்ள ஊர்கள், நகர்களுக்கும் பல பல பள்ளி,’ என்ற வகையில் சுதந்திரம் அடைந்த நாடு மறுமலர்ச்சி அடையும்போது அந்த மாதிரி யெல்லாம் செய்ய வேண்டுமென்று பாடலில் இருக்கிறது. மேலும், ‘கோவில் இல்லா ஊரில் குடியிருக்க வேண்டாம்,’ என்று ஐனாவயார் சொல்லி இருக்கிறார்கள். ஆகையால் இந்தச் சட்டத்தினால் ஒவ்வொரு கிராமத்திலுள்ள கோவில்களை துய்மை படுத்துவதோடு, இந்தக் கோவில்களிலுள்ள உயிர் பணத்தைக்கொண்டு பல பள்ளிகளை ஏற்படுத்துவதோடு யோசனையை நான் முழுமனதுடன் வரவேற்கிறேன். அது நடைமுறையில் நன்கு பயன் அளிக்க வேண்டும்.

“ஒரு காலத்தில் திருச்செந்தூரில் கோவில்களுக்கு தரிசனம் செய்யப் போகும் பக்தர்கள் அங்கேயே நைவேதனம் அரும் உணவுக் கட்டிகளை வாங்கி தாங்கள் அர்ச்சனை செய்த தேங்காய்களை உடைத்து துவயல் செய்து கொண்டு உண்பார்கள். அந்தக் கட்டிகளின் விலை காலணு தான். இந்த மாதிரி எல்லாக் கோவில்களிலும் பக்தர்களுக்கு உணவு அளிப்பதற்கு என்றே அவர்களுக்கு நிலங்கள் எழுதி வைக்கப்பட்டிருக்கின்றன. இப்போது திருச்செந்தூரில் அவ்வாறு கட்டிகள் கொடுப்பது கிடையாது. கோவில் நிலங்களில் லுள்ள தாலியங்களை இப்போது கொள்முதல் அதிகாரிகள் கொள்முதல் செய்துவிடுகிறார்கள். அது தவறு என்று சொல்லவில்லை. இருந்தாலும் எந்த தர்மங்களுக்காக அவைகள் எழுதி வைக்கப்பட்டதோ அதற்காக அதில் சிறிதளவாவது செலவிடப்பட வேண்டுமென்று கேட்டுக்கொள்கிறேன். இம்மாதிரி செய்வதால் சோம்பேறிகள் தான் ஜீவனம் செய்கிறார்கள் என்று எண்ணுவது முற்றிலும் தவறு. எவ்வளவோ பக்தர்களுக்கு அது உபயோகப்படுகிறது. ஆகவே இம்மாதிரி தர்மங்களையும் தொடர்ந்து நடத்தி வரவேண்டுமென்று கேட்டுக்கொள்கிறேன். தவிர சின்னச் சின்ன தர்ம சத்திரங்களையும், வருஷத்திற்கு ரூ. 200 வரும்படியுள்ள கோவில்களையும் இந்தச் சட்டத்திலிருந்து நீக்கும்படியான Rule-ஐ போட வேண்டுகிறேன். Rule செய்யும்பொழுது இதைக் கவனித்துச் செய்ய வேண்டுகிறேன். ஆகவே நல்ல புனிதமான எண்ணத்துடன் கொண்டுவரப்பட்ட சட்டமானது நல்லமுறையில் செயல் பட வேண்டுமென்று பிரார்த்தித்துக்கொண்டு, கனம் மந்திரி அவர்களைப் பாராட்டுகிறேன்.”

SRI S. CHIDAMBARA AYYAR:—“Madam, Deputy Speaker, as far as the constitutional issue is concerned, my hon. Friend Sri T. Viswanatham has said much about it and I am not going to add anything more to it.

“As regards the Bill itself, my humble submission is that it consists of a series of provisions for nomination from top to bottom and from start to finish. There is not even one item which is left to election. During the debate in the second reading of the Bill it was sought to be made out that these Area Committees at least should consist of members elected by the concerned people, but it was not heeded. In these circumstances when the trustee of a math is nominated, when the Area Committee is nominated and when the officers of the Department are nominated, it is very difficult to expect things to go on very well. The trustee, under the powers conferred by the provisions of this Bill, is at perfect liberty to do anything so long as he is under the control of the Area Committee or the Assistant Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner as intended by the latter. In fact, clause 26 says that the trustee must act in accordance with the lawful orders of the competent authority. On top of this, under clause 23, the Commissioner has got revisional powers and under clause 99-A, the Government have got revisional powers. Under clause 99-A, the Government can call for all the papers and pass any orders they deem fit.

“So far as temples and maths are concerned, there is the provision that an estimate of dittam and other necessary expenditure should be made and sanction obtained therefor. Even that is a very difficult thing. So far as temples are concerned, I can understand it. But so far as maths are concerned, I have got to bring to the notice of the Hon. the Law Minister that it is not possible to predict with certainty what exactly the expenditure of a math will be, because the expenditure depends upon various factors. On some important day it may come up to nearly Rs. 1,000 and on some other ordinary day it may come up to only Rs. 500. On some occasions the disciples concerned may incur the entire expenditure. In all these cases the devotees do not incur the expenditure of all days; the math has to incur it. If on an occasion a large number of disciples come and pay money to the math, a large amount is collected. So, it is not possible to say beforehand what exactly will be the income and expenditure. The Hon. the Law Minister said that if there was no dittam, there was no necessity to submit returns. I do not know whether he is very serious about it but still the provision says that the trustees including the matadhipathis should submit estimates of dittam for scrutiny by the officers, after issuing notice to the public and calling for objections. These things go to show that much restraint is placed on the exercise of powers by the trustee. No doubt there is a differentiation made between temples and maths here. The matadhipati is placed on a somewhat different footing from the trustee of a temple; but it is not enough.

"Then there is the question of submitting accounts for pathakanika. Such things cannot be tolerated. It is not desirable that accounts for pathakanika should be kept for submission to the Commissioner whenever he wants them. Pathakanika is a gift made to the matadhipati and he is expected to deal with it as he likes. An amendment was moved for this purpose but it was not accepted. The Hon. the Law Minister Sri K. Madhava Menon quoted the provision in the existing Act which was a measure of the Raja of Panagal, in support of his contention, that maths should be included in religious institutions. At the same time, there is a provision in the existing Act that exemption can be granted to such maths as the Government may deem fit to give. When we pleaded that that exemption clause should be included in this Bill, the Hon. Minister was not agreeable to it. When exemption has been provided, it is a recognition of the fact that there are maths which are doing good work and managing their affairs properly. Therefore, if that exemption clause is introduced, there will not be much trouble. The Government can make a careful enquiry as to which maths are doing good work and exempt them. If there is mismanagement in any math, it can be brought within the provisions of this Bill.

"Then there is the provision for the appointment of a manager of secular affairs of a math. The distinction between secular affairs and religious affairs is very narrow. When money is wanted, it belongs to the secular side. When we want to spend money for religious ceremonies, then the manager is controlled by the Assistant Commissioner. Therefore, such a provision should not be included in the Bill.

"Then, under the chapter 'Inquiries', the Deputy Commissioner is given the power to inquire into and decide disputes such as whether an institution is a religious institution or not. I think it is too much of power. The Deputy Commissioner is assuming the duties of a Judge. He will have to decide intricate matters involving questions of law and fact. Of course, an appeal to Court is provided in a later provision. But our submission is that it is better that in the initial stage itself the Court is given jurisdiction over these matters.

18th December 1950] [Sri S. Chidambara Ayyar]

"Regarding the notification clause, it has already been stated that the matter is under the consideration of the High Court. Notwithstanding that a religious institution is governed by a scheme settled under this Bill, the Commissioner can cancel that scheme and appoint an executive officer, I do not discuss the motive with which the Bill has been brought forward. No doubt Dr. Rajan has brought forward the measure with the best of motives. He wants to check mismanagement. Of course, there is mismanagement in some temples and maths also. But that does not mean that this kind of provision should be there. The provisions should be more respectful so far as they relate to maths and matadhipatis. With these few words, I congratulate the Government on bringing forward this Bill."

SRI D. V. RAMASWAMI :—“Madam Deputy Speaker, I must first express my thanks to the Hon. Mover of this Bill and to the Hon. Law Minister for the excellent way in which they have received the sincere criticisms that have been offered by various hon. Members of this House on the several clauses of this Bill. In the speech of the Hon. Dr. Rajan, while moving the third reading of the Bill, there is a fair recognition of the spirit of this constructive criticism and an attempt to adopt some of the points that have been raised by hon. Members of this House. The extreme patience with which Hon. Sri Madhava Menon has been able to reply to the several amendments that were proposed during the course of the debate only reminds me of the way in which

18th December 1950] [Sri D. V. Ramaswami]

Sri Kala Venkata Rao, the ex-Revenue Minister was piloting the Estates Abolition Bill over a long period of discussion in this House. I am sure that the net result of this debate will be very useful in still finding out the possibility of making further amendments on behalf of the Government by way of conceding the valuable and anxious remarks that were made by some of the hon. Members in the course of introducing their amendments. There is always a doubt in my mind that after passing our Constitution of India Act, whether this Assembly is within its rights to introduce a measure of this nature. The intention of the Mover of the Bill is no doubt very laudable. Certainly, wherever there is any debasement going within the purview of the functions of the institutions and their managers, the Government of the land has every right to resort to certain steps whereby the objects of these institutions are fulfilled. There has been the common law procedure and the Civil Procedure Code to introduce such schemes and whereby the Government of the land can exercise the minimum amount of interference in respect of the religious usage and customs. Even under the British Government, religious neutrality was always kept in view. Moreover, the framers of our Indian Constitution have made it clear and clarified the position by stating that the Indian Government is a secular Government and will not interfere with the normal religious aptitudes of the people. So, our Constitution does not interfere with Christian religion, and it does not interfere with Muslim religion. Where on earth is the necessity for bringing this measure only in respect of the Hindu religion? This is a very vital Bill that has been brought on the floor of the House. I feel that whenever any denomination or community slackens in its duties, the Government of the people and for the people have a right to bring home to them that everything is not going well and that they should correct themselves. The Government can advise the constitution of advisory bodies with a view to see that certain irregularities or misappropriations are not committed. Only to that extent the Government can interfere and not take over or almost departmentalise these religious institutions; particularly, as hon. Member Sri Muniswami Pillai has said, on the question of these maths, I should say that the Charter relating to the maths is rather unfortunate. I think the Government would have done well to have omitted this Chapter altogether. As I have said times without number on previous occasions, these maths are not mere religious institutions like temples; they are Colleges of Learning and Philosophy and Culture. It is only these maths that protect and preserve the Hindu culture and religion. In the past, several inroads have been made into the various traditions of our Hindu religion and culture, but still, Hinduism has survived. I should say that by the introduction of this Bill, further and deeper inroads are being attempted to be made into these Colleges of Philosophy and Learning. If we have a clear concept of religion as apart from Philosophy, we would rather leave these maths to other forms of controls rather than taking them over either directly or indirectly and controlling their affairs. Attempts have been made even for practically advising the Government as to the need to take power to exempt such maths as are above reproach and run their institutions fairly well. But somehow or other, the Government were not pleased to accept that amendment even. I therefore feel, Madam, that the Government may even now reconsider that position, just as they have reconsidered the valuable suggestions made in regard to the right or necessity to make provision to go before a Civil Court for certain matters. The Government are very responsive and I am sure the Hon. Law Minister is very amenable to any good criticism that is offered in respect of certain clauses. Of course, hon. Members like Sri Kosalram, may not be satisfied with any of the reforms suggested in this Bill and they may want revolutionary and more drastic measures to take over these institutions and treat them as institutions which have been doing all sorts of ridiculous things. That apart, I feel that we need not interfere with these maths in the manner it is sought to be done in this Bill. There are other processes and more popular and more appropriate methods in which the culture of these religious institutions could be preserved. As for instance, we can constitute Advisory Councils for every religion and for every important institution whereby the opinion of the people who pay, donate and contribute for these institutions may be taken so that they may continue to serve such useful purpose for which they are intended. In the ultimate analysis, we, who constitute a large section of the State, feel, 'Why should our Hindu Religious Institutions alone be singled out for treatment in a separate way as if they are the only institutions which are running their affairs in a wrong manner? Why should not the Government take courage in both hands and apply these provisions to all denominations of religious institutions? The Government are applying these provisions in respect of the Hindu religious institutions, simply because Hindus are meek and they practically bow to any Governmental measure.' The Government should not take advantage of that position and practically not appreciate the anxious criticism offered by some hon. Members in order to see that Hindu Religious institutions are properly conducted. All of us are equally anxious with the Hon. Ministers and the Government that these religious institutions must be helped to fulfil the purposes for which they have come into existence and have been working for centuries together. About the necessity and need for the constitution of advisory committees, there can be no second opinion. In this connection, I would like to draw the attention of the hon. Members to the working of some of the temples in some of the estates in my district. For example, I may mention the names of the Simhachalam temple and the Seetharamaswami temple where you have hereditary trustees. It will be seen that practically there has been no criticism about the working of these temples and nothing wrong is noticed. In fact they have been discharging their duties with great anxiety and fear of God. I am sure that such good instances will help the

[Sri D. V. Ramaswami] [18th December 1950]

18th December 1950] [Sri D. V. Ramaswami]

Government to recognize the value of the criticism that the Government ought to have taken power to exempt certain important religious institutions from the operation of this Bill. On the whole, the time taken up for discussing this measure is really very valuable and there is no gainsaying the fact that the motive of the Government in introducing this Bill is very laudable. I support this measure."

SRI L. N. GOPALASWAMI:—Madam, Deputy Speaker, I have great pleasure in congratulating the Hon. the Ministers for Hindu Religious Endowments and Law on having piloted this Bill and brought it to this stage. Of course it took a long time for it to reach this stage—seventy hours—but that does not matter. I would like to thank the Hon. Dr. Rajan for having remarked that those who moved amendments to the several clauses in the Bill and those who had occasion to oppose certain provisions of the Bill at certain stages were also guided by motives that were in the interests of the proper administration of the temples and other religious institutions. This is certainly a departure from the attitude taken by the Government and also by some of the supporters of the Bill when the Bill was first introduced. At that time it was even alleged that those who opposed the Bill were for continuing corruption in the various religious institutions. I am glad, Madam, that this attitude has now changed.

"Coming to the extraordinary powers taken by the Government, much has been said by my hon. Friends, Sri Bhashyam and Sri Viswanatham, and I do not want to say anything more. But the only one matter which I shall refer to is the provision which existed in the original Bill for the constitution of Advisory Councils consisting of representatives of the Jiyengars, the archakas, the acharyapurushas and other mirasdars of the devasthanams. Clause 86 which contemplated this has now been removed. We all had felt that there would be some voice given to these people in the administration of the temples. But the Government had thought otherwise. They said: 'That is the thing that is interfering with the religious management of the temples'. And now that clause is no longer in the Bill. I want the Government just to realise, having once inserted this clause in the Bill, what would be the impression they would create in the minds of the public if the provision is taken away now. I will not be wrong if I surmise that even in this sphere, the Government want all powers for themselves and will not be guided by Advisory Councils.

"As regards the general powers that the Government seek to take under this Bill, it has been said that it is only in the interests of proper administration of the temples that such powers are sought to be taken. As my hon. Friend, Sri Ramaswami Mudaliyar, had occasion to point out, the Government take over the administration of temples only 'in order to carry out what the late Raja of Panagal envisaged.' Now it is twenty-four years since we took over the management of these temples from the trustees, of course, through the agency of the Hindu Religious Endowments Board. What has been the result? What has been the remarkable achievement that we can boast of during this period? Apart from this, this measure has driven people from the mufassal to run to Madras and only those who have influence here have been able to do certain things for themselves. Nobody else has been able to do anything. I have already, in the course of the debate on the Bill, mentioned the cases of people who had influence and who were able to exchange their properties for those of the religious institutions concerned notwithstanding the fact that the value of the former was not even a tenth of the value of the latter. They were able to get the properties because the Commissioner was in a position to give his sanction. To give another instance, Madam, there was an executive officer in the Lalgudi temple. He wanted to unearth certain endowments of a very rich man of the place. He, as a matter of fact, got all the information relating to the endowments from the Sub-Registrar's office. But the moment the matter was brought to the notice of the mirasdar who endowed those properties, the officer was transferred and next morning he was asked to show cause why he interfered with such things. Is it to vest such powers into the hands of the Commissioner and the Government that this Bill is to be passed or is it for decentralization of control? I ask whether it is for associating the local people, who know what is what in the temple, who are honest and who can legitimately have a voice in the affairs of the temple, with the administration of the temples that this Bill is there. Sri Bhashyam very ably pointed out that the Government had not been able to achieve many things either in the field of food or in other matters by introducing control. Madam, controls are as such bad and the moment these controls are off, the better it is for us and for the Government. Religion is no exception to this rule. If really we want to control religious institutions, we must not go beyond certain limits. When we seek to control the flow of water in the rivers, we do not interfere with the channels but control only the banks. We now want to put a dam across the river and see that we divert all the water for some other purpose. This is wrong. We have not been able to achieve any thing in other spheres nor are we likely to achieve any in the future. I want to warn the Government in this matter that if they really want proper administration, they should not go into forbidden grounds.

"Madam, enormous powers have been given to the Government to extend patronage to their favourites. There are nearly thirty to forty thousand religious institutions in this State which are being made to come under the clutches of this Bill. There are going to be nearly a lakh of trustees, Area Committee members and others. Will the Government be able to use all these powers without heeding to the pressure from party men and without regard to party politics? In the very nature of the Government as they are at present constituted, it will be impossible for them not to pay heed to their party men in the appointment of trustees, executive officers and the like. Madam, no one can say what havoc this will play on the local temples. Only those who can wield influence with the Government and not those who stand on their qualifications will get appointed. Only those, Madam, who are in the know of things connected with the temples will be able to serve well. But the Government may say that they will appoint such persons to look after the affairs of the temple, but such persons will be only those who hang after power, who are eager to exercise suzerainty over the village, the temple and its affairs. People who are really honest, religious-minded and contented in their own walks of life, will not offer their services for these religious matters. There is also a taboo which, I suppose, the Government are also aware of. So far as Siva temples are concerned, no man will like to manage the affairs and no man will ever ask for a place in the administration of a temple's affairs. Only such people as are honest and God-fearing should be asked to serve on such committees and as trustees and not those who go about with a begging bowl and ask for favours of the Government and who say, 'please appoint me; I will look after the affairs of the temple'.

"I shall give one more instance, Madam, to show how the affairs of the temple are conducted by the so-called executive officers. The day before yesterday, I saw a news item in the papers that in the Palni temple, the things offered for abhishekam have absolutely deteriorated in quality. Is it because, I ask, of the appointment of an executive officer that good honey, pure milk and fine sandal are not offered for abhishekam? I say it is because of the appointment of such officers that the quality of things has deteriorated. They do not know the value of abhishekam. They feel that jaggery water will suffice in the place of honey and it passes for honey. Water passes for rose-water. They think that some coloured substance will do for sandal. All this happens because the executive officers are not properly trained in the art of religion. They have no faith in these things. They measure every item of work in terms of economy. They say, 'why should hundred measures of milk be offered for abhishekam? Water mixed with some white substance will do for the job'. They do all this in the hope of effecting some economy and that it will all be to their credit. Their services will be recognized by their being promoted to positions carrying higher salaries or emoluments. I emphasize this point once again, Madam. The Government should choose the right type of men even while extending patronage. They should go into the root of the question and find out who the local people are, whether they have any religious faith, whether they can manage the trusts better and last but not least, whether they would have any regard to power or party politics.

"Madam, I have got to say a few words about the matadhipathis. We have tried our best to see that the provision relating to maths is left out of this Bill altogether or at least some exceptions are made so far as good matadhipathis are concerned. Even the good matadhipathis have been dragged into the Bill and the Hon. the Ministers connected with the Bill say, 'we cannot excuse them; why should we differentiate between one matadhipathi and another? Madam, they have made exceptions in the case of charitable endowments. The Government under the Act notify only such charitable endowments as are not managed properly. The same provision could easily have been made with regard to the matadhipathis also if only the Government had been a little sympathetic towards them. My feeling is that the maths should be treated on the same footing on which the charitable endowments are treated. They cannot treat the maths in the same way as the temples are treated. There is a vast difference between the temples that own properties and the maths. It may be that certain matadhipathis own large properties. But we should be guided more by the point of view that these properties are there to enable the matadhipathis to propagate the tenets of the Hindu religion than by the fact that these properties are going to colossal waste. As I have already said, it is a different matter if we interfere with the temples and their trusts. Whether X is the trustee or Y is the trustee of a temple; it does not matter much and the temple will go on. But the same is not the case with maths. The matadhipathis are the real persons who are in charge of the maths and their properties. If the Government were to tease them they will go away from the maths and sit under the shade of a tree saying, 'we have nothing to do with the maths; you want the property; you take it and manage it; I can preach my religion even from sitting here'. Is it to ask these matadhipathis to go out of the maths, is it to administer such pin-pricks to them that the Government intend to appoint this army of officers? Madam, it is certainly not fair to treat the matadhipathis in this way. Even at this late hour, I would ask the Government to go slow, taking particular care to see that good maths and good matadhipathis are not interfered with and pin-pricks are not offered to them.

Madam, in the course of the debate on this Bill, Gandhiji's name was dragged in. It was said by the Hon. the Minister for Law that while Gandhiji went on tour, funds were collected every day and that he accounted for them every day and rightly so. Yes, he collected funds and I know, he accounted for them to the last pie. In a way, I had also occasion to know what he was doing. But I would ask the Government to go a step further and see what they should do with the funds collected by the matadhipathis. Gandhiji collected money for the Harijan Welfare Fund, for example, and it was nearly eight lakhs of rupees. It was placed at the disposal of the Harijan Sevak Sangh. Some of the members of the Sangh said to him: 'We are the elected representatives of the Sangh and we want the money to be spent according to our own desire'. The Congress Committees also said the same. Here I shall quote Gandhiji's own words which he used in reply. He said: 'I am a democrat of democrats, but so far as money is concerned, I am the person responsible for it, and I will see how best it can be spent. I will entrust it only to particular persons in whom I have trust'. (The Hon. Sri K. Madhava Menon: 'Hear, hear.') I want the Government not to be under the impression that they are the trustees of the people. People have given money to these matadhipathis not because they wanted to give it for the sake of the State Government or the Central Government but because of their faith in the religion which the matadhipathi whom they worship belongs to and preached. Just as Gandhiji wanted that the funds should be spent for the purposes for which they were collected, so also the matadhipathis should have discretion to spend the money they have collected as they like. That is exactly the reason why I have recalled this analogy. The matadhipathi got the money for the math as Gandhiji collected funds for the Harijan Welfare Fund. He said he would entrust the funds only to those in whom he had confidence. He added: 'You may be elected representatives; you may be Congress Committees; you may be very good persons but I have nothing to do with you. I must account to the last pie because I am responsible to those from whom I have collected these funds, nearly eight lakhs of rupees. I will entrust it only to such persons in whom I have trust and will nominate G. D. Birla as the President and A. V. Thakker as Secretary. (The Hon. Sri K. Madhava Menon: 'And Sri Gopalaswami also.') Yes, but the poor Gopalaswami was the last person in the ladder. But, all the same, I want the Government to understand the way in which he dealt with those funds and the importance and weight that he attached to them. I warn the Government that they should not arrogate to themselves the responsibility of administering these funds. They are not the proper custodians but the matadhipathis. The matadhipathis have every right to spend the math's funds according to their own discretion. Therefore, Madam, even at this last moment I would beg of the Government to think over the matter again. If they really follow the Gandhian precepts, they should allow the matadhipathis to account for their funds to the satisfaction of the public and not enter into domains which they are forbidden to enter.

'Lastly I have only a few remarks to offer. The Government have been saying and we have now come to the stage where the executive and the judiciary are to be separated. But so far as this Bill is concerned, it is to be absolutely autocratic. The Commissioner combines in himself all powers, both the executive as well as the judiciary. He has the right to decide the dittam, he has the right to veto dittams and also the right to say that such and such a thing shall happen. Immediately by the left hand he can undo all he has done by his right hand. He can say: 'Yes you have not done such and such thing. I do not approve of them. I shall evict you and appoint another man'. Is this fair, I ask? Is it in consonance with the policy adumbrated by the Government and also introduced in most of the districts, where the Government have said that their own Collectors should not exercise jurisdiction over the judiciary? I therefore request Government to see that such things do not happen and it is for us to uphold our own policies, the policies that we have laid down for ourselves.

'Lastly, Madam, Deputy Speaker, the Hon. Dr. Rajan when introducing the Bill spoke about the ancient customs and traditions and said that he was expecting that these customs and traditions would be established by the passing of the Bill. Ancient customs might have been good. Then we had very great Rajas ruling over us. But unfortunately it is not the Raja who had faith in the Hindu religion that is now ruling us. We are now ruled by democracy. We have no religion. The State as such has no religion and as such these laws cannot hold good now. That is exactly why according to me the Constitution has been passed. A Hindu may be the Chief Minister of the State to-day, to-morrow it may be a Muslim, the third day a Christian, the fourth day a heathen and we may have an atheist also as the Chief Minister of the State, which nobody can prevent. If the Government are going to entrust the wealth and the whole structure of our religion the temples and all their properties into the hands of such people, God alone can save us. I therefore say even now, that it is wrong on our part to enter into domains which are not ours and see in the interests of the temples themselves that we keep only a check and keep at a distance which is confined to us by law. I therefore request the Hon. Minister to see whether even in the working of the Act he will please see that the check he wants to exercise could be reduced to the minimum."

“இன்னுமொரு வார்த்தையை சொல்லிக்கொண்டு முடித்துக் கொள்ளுகிறேன். நம் நாட்டில் கலை, கல்வி, ஆசாரம் முதலியவைகளை ஏற்படுத்தி வதற்காகத்தான் அந்தக் காலங்களில் கோவில்கள் கட்டப்பட்டன. அந்த மும் ஜனங்கள் நினைப்பதுபோன்றதான் அதுங்களை நிறுத்தப் பட்டிருக்கின்றன. ஆலயங்களில்தான் கலை, கல்வி முதலியவைகள் பொதிக்கப் பட்டுவந்தன. அநேக ஆலயங்களின் கே புரங்களில் அநேக சிற்பங்களை சிற்ப சாஸ்திரிகள் செதுக்கி வைத்திருக்கிறார்கள். இன்னும் எத்தனையோ பாடல்களையும் எழுதி வைத்திருக்கின்றார்கள். இன்னும் அநேக தஸ்தா வேஜுகளையும் எழுதி வைத்திருக்கிறார்கள். அவைகள் எல்லாம் இப்பொழுது மூன்றுபேய்க் கொண்டிருக்கின்றன. இப்பொழுது நிறுத்தப்பட்ட மலை கோவில் கோபுரத்தை எடுத்துக்கொண்டால் அங்கே 13 மெத்தை அடுக்கு கட்டியிருக்கிறார்கள். அவைகளில் எவ்வளவோ சிற்பங்களை, ஓவியங்களும் செதுக்கப் பட்டிருக்கின்றன. இந்த 13 அடுக்கு மெத்தை கட்டுவதற்கு எத்தனைபேர் எவ்வளவு பிரயாசைப்பட்டிருக்கவேண்டுமென்றதை யோசித்துப் பார்க்கவேண்டும். இப்பொழுதுள்ள இஞ்ஞினியர்கள் அந்த உயரத்தைப் பார்த்து சந்தோஷம் பொருள்கள். அந்த அடுக்கு மெத்தைகளில் பெரிய சிற்பங்களை கட்டியும் வைத்திருக்கிறார்கள். இதைக்கட்டுவதற்கு நம் முன்னோர்களும் அரசர்களும் ஏராளமான பணத்தை செலவு செய்திருக்கிறார்கள். இப்பொழுது அதில் பழுதுபோயிருக்கும் வேலைகளைச் செய்வதற்கு பாட்கும் மனம் வரவில்லை. அவ்விதம் அழிந்து போய் பதை சீர்திருத்தம் செய்வதற்கு முன்னால் கோவில்களில் நுழைந்து பண்புத் த எடுத்து சிலவு செய்வதுதான் நியாயமும் தர்மமுமாகும் என்பதை நான் தெரிவித்துக் கொள்ளுகிறேன். ஆகவே இந்த சட்டத்தை இப்பொழுது

நிறைவேற்றப் போகிறோம். அவைகளுக்கு ஜாக்ராதயாக பாதுகாப்புக் கொடுக்கவேண்டுமென்று கனம் மந்திரிகள் மாதவமேனன் அவர்களையும், டாக்டர் ராஜன் அவர்களையும் ரொம்பவும் கேட்டுக் கொள்ளுகிறேன்.”

(At this stage Mr. Speaker took the Chair.)

SRI N. S. VARADACHARI:—“Mr. Speaker, Sir, the third reading of the Bill is not the occasion to recount anything in the nature of a criticism of the Bill. It is a true doctrine that all difference of opinion should cease during the second reading. Even beautiful words of Mandothary would indicate that all enmity should cease with death; similarly all the differences of opinion should cease at the second reading of the Bill. Legislation has to proceed necessarily slowly. It is done with deliberation. The Hindu marriage knows what is ‘Sapthapathi’. You take seven steps with the bride in order to make the marriage sure and certain and it is good and creditable to all parties concerned. We have taken seven hundred steps in connexion with this Bill. We have discussed it at length and one good thing that could be said about this Bill is that every clause in the Bill has gone through a searching examination.

“The Hon. Minister has to be congratulated on the very free and frank discussion allowed on this Bill and on all the clauses of the Bill. My hope is that this Bill will be welcomed in the country. Even if it does not add to the sum total of the good in the management of the temples and maths, it prevents the growth of evil in these institutions. I shall be satisfied with that. I do not expect that after this Bill is passed, there will rise new temples and maths but I expect that the very passing of the law will operate as a general tonic and will raise the level of managements in all institutions, whether maths or temples. Hinduism is not a proselytising religion. In fact I have come to feel that the day it takes up that side of the fact it will cease to exist. The word ‘Hindu’ itself is a strange work, it will cease to exist. The word ‘Sindu’ which means the sea term. It came from the word ‘Sindu’ which means the sea or the river Indus as the word is applied. In fact the Greeks called it ‘Sindu’ and then perhaps arose the word ‘Hindus-tham’. There is no such thing as Hinduism. It is only the Englishman's making or the foreigners' making. It is such a beautiful flexible thing that it can make the worship the principal thing in temples here and make the worship the principal thing in the rivers in Northern India. Similarly it can make the maths the centres of learning in South India and still leave it to individuals, saints, and philosophers who had no maths at all to proclaim the glory of the religion in the North.

“Sir, I am not going to suggest that this Bill itself will change the face of Hinduism. It cannot. We have a very beautiful tradition. What is a temple? Very often people think it is a place only for ‘bhakti’. It is so to the rest of the world. But it has also a social function to fulfil. It affords facilities for the florid style of architecture which contrasts with all the massive structures of the Gothic style in the West and make a deep impression on us, citizens of this country. It has also another function to fulfil. You go there and feel the fresh air. You see the long courtyards with their beautiful halls with hundreds and thousands of pillars wonderfully describing all that the florid genius can produce in architecture. There are several things which one feels as he likes when he goes into a temple.

"Now, Sir, may I suggest this, that the Government as a rule should not interfere with the management of these institutions? But as I have said the law that the Government have made will itself operate as a salutary check on evil tendencies. I will be satisfied with that. The test of the good law is that it operates even without its being given effect to. Nobody should come to feel that the finger of your hand is finer than the groin of your predecessor. That is the way the administration has to be worked. The Government can select people. I do not want election. I am content with nomination and I am glad that this Bill says that persons with interest—persons with interest—having been defined in the Bill—will be made trustees. Once having made them trustees, the Government ought to treat them with some amount of dignity. Do not be always watching them with the care that is bound with suspicion, but with the care and endeavour, honest endeavour which looks to the sum total of the good that can be got out of these institutions. Government can be silent and still they can effect a lot of change in the management of these institutions. The object of the Bill is to secure the better management of these institutions. I hope there will be better management. We cannot say at any stage that the best will obtain even in the best of temples. We want men with artistic sense, men with religious sense, men who can see or at any rate appreciate if they cannot see, the multi-dimensional truth of Hinduism. Hinduism unlike other religions as I said is multi-dimensional. That is why the 'Vedas' said 'we have not seen God, we only see some aspects of Him.' Similarly this Government should say 'We see only some aspects of management. The general management is good. We will encourage good management. We are for decentralization. We will trust the people whom we put into office and give them all the hope and the confidence that we can'. That is the way in which the Bill has to be worked. I hope that way will be followed now.

"One more thing, Sir and I will have done. A lot has been said about the matadhipathis. I myself said that the chapter has to be rewritten. I do not object to the chapter. Let us put it in the Bill, with some changes. I hoped that at the third reading, all this would be done before the bill goes to the other House. Still some provisions in this chapter have to be gone through. The Bill passed through 700 steps in this House and I hope at least it will pass through 200 steps in the other House and we would see the Bill in a more wholesome form. The matadhipathis are really cared for in this Bill. They will appoint their own managers, not at Government suggestion but on their own. Government need only suggest where there is a bad case. For instance, there is nothing wrong, I would contend, in the Government suggesting to the Matant of Tirupati that he should have a good manager. But I would certainly deem it a misfortune if in the case of a good matadhipathi Government had to suggest how to nominate the manager for looking after the secular affairs. I earnestly appeal to all our matadhipathis that so far as secular affairs are concerned, and so far as the accounts are concerned, they should proceed immediately even without the Government asking them to do so, or even without the Government throwing out a suggestion that they should do so, to appoint a good manager from among the disciples as some swamis have done. I told you, Sir, the other day, of a swami having nominated a retired M.C.S. gentleman, that is, a gentleman who retired from the Mysore Civil Service, from its body of disciples. There is no need to control such an institution. There is no need to tell such a good man what he should do or what he should not do. He knows the limits of the law. He knows the limits within which he practises the religion that he preaches. The religion which he preaches is so imperishable, is so grand that it leaves such an impression on all of his disciples that he need hardly be told what it is that he should do. A few slokams uttered in devotion may make as much as reading for ten years all the 'Vedas'! That is the way to lead.

"On the religious side, Sir, Government have given an assurance and I hope that assurance will be fully implemented that on the religious side there will be very little interference. Sir, I was speaking during the discussion of the Bill for the underdogs, the tiny archaka. Do not deprive him of the villages. Even if you do so, give him substance with which he can perform his functions. I suggested this amendment in another Select Committee. The Government were good enough to accept the suggestion. I hope this House will also agree. I only wish to say this and conclude with a note of cheer and hope that knowing as we do our own men and their inherent goodness, all the institutions in the country will progress towards more and more good and finally become an illustrious example to ourselves and to the generations to come."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, after the very good speech and perhaps the better sentiments that have been expressed by my hon. Friend, Sri Varadachari as to what should be the attitude at the third reading of the Bill it is rather awkward that I should sound a discordant note. Unfortunately, situated as we are, I have to clear certain wrong statements made and misunderstandings created that have arisen in the course of the third reading of the Bill. I am really gratified, Sir, that some hon. Members who were feeling surprised that a person like the Hon. Dr. Rajan should bring forward such a Bill, have now come to the conclusion that after all Hon. Dr. Rajan's motives cannot be questioned and the speech he made is really very very helpful, not only helpful but very clear as to the intentions of the Government.

[Sri K. Madhava Menon] [18th December 1950]

But, if there is trouble in Srirangam temple, every other temple is a 'chota Srirangam' or a 'bigger Srirangam' in that respect. There is no difference in that. As regards the management or administration, if Srirangam is bad, then every other temple is bad either in a lesser degree or in a bigger degree throughout the State. If Mr. Bhashyam says, 'Srirangam deserves better treatment than other temples,' other temples also deserve the treatment equally in the same manner' is my answer to him.

"Sir, Government want to improve the institutions. What does Mr. Bhashyam want? Perhaps I do not know. Anyhow it is unfortunate, Sir, that such sentiments were expressed in the Third Reading and I don't want to go in detail into what each hon. Member said. But, I want to clear one misunderstanding. Both Mr. Viswanatham and Mr. Gopalaswami said that there was one good clause in this Bill and that was clause 86. They said 'An Advisory Council was provided and the Government removed that Advisory Council'. Mr. L. N. Gopalaswami went a step further and said that 'the Advisory Council was to give advice on the secular affairs of the temple. That was a very good thing. But the Government do not want the advice at all and so they removed the clause 86.' What does clause 86 say? It says:

'Clause 86 (1).—There shall be constituted in such manner as may be prescribed an Advisory Council consisting of the representatives of the jiyengars, the archakas, the acharyapurushas and other mirasdars of the Devasthanams for the purpose of advising in the administration of the religious affairs thereof

It is not 'secular affairs thereof', my Dear Sir."

MR. SPEAKER:—"My Dear Sir' refers to the Chair."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Excuse me, Sir."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—" (Interruption.)

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"To my hon. Friend, nobody can be 'My Dear'. But, to me anybody can be, and so it does not matter.

"The purpose was to advise on the administration of religious affairs thereof and the Government do not want any religious advice because we do not want to touch the religious affairs at all and that is the reason for removing that clause, Sir, 'If this clause had been there, everything would have been right. Take away the foul hands of the Government from the religious affairs of these institutions. Don't touch them. Don't touch the religious affairs. There is a clause directly asking the Government to have an Advisory Council.' That is the objection of my friends.

"Sir, hon. Mr. Viswanatham's main argument was again 'not to offend the Constitution'. As a great constitutional pandit as he has become, he always makes a brief survey to see whether we are within the Constitution. My hon. Friend cited Clauses 67, 95, etc., and said that the whole thing was clearly against the Constitution and quoted Articles 25 and 26 of the Constitution. He says, 'Our law-framers were very careful and you have gone against the Constitution. Certain people can go to a Court of Law if there is anything wrong.' I do not know whether the idea of my friend was a subtle invitation to people to take this to the courts."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, the Hon. Minister is crediting me with several things which I have not meant."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"It might be, but Sir, I entirely agree with one sentiment which hon. Sri Viswanatham expressed 'whether it is against the Constitution or not'. Certain points of order were raised and you, Sir, have given your rulings on the points of order. If it is against the Constitution, there are other bodies to go into the matter and let us pray, 'Oh, God, we did not offend the Constitution in any way because it was not our purpose to offend the Constitution at least in any legislation passed in this House.

"Hon. Mr. Viswanatham said that temples should be managed only by those who have faith in them and in their character. I entirely agree that temples should be managed only by those who have faith in them. It cannot be by those who do it as a commercial transaction in the temples and amke something out of them. In that case the faith, the sanctity and the sacredness of these institutions will be lost. The object of the Bill is to prevent such a set of people who want to make commercial transactions in temples. That is the reason for this Bill, Sir.

"Hon. Mr. Viswanatham also said, 'You have squeezed religion out of these temples; you have squeezed the religious denominations out of these temples' . . ."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM:—"Sir, the Hon. Minister is misquoting my statement. I said, 'You are squeezing religion out of the Bill'."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"He said, 'You are squeezing out the religious denomination and religion from the scope of this Bill.' We are not going to squeeze out religion at all. We are attempting to squeeze out those who destroy religion in temples and it is necessary. Our temples must live and they should not die. There are certain cankers which eat into our temples now and we want to squeeze out those cankers and that is the object of the Bill. Religion must live. Those who want to destroy religion must be squeezed out from everything that is religious or religious endowment—whether they are maths or temples. Sir, such expressions were used in the wrong sense. It is not religion that is squeezed out.

"The next point that was discussed at length was about the ousting of the jurisdiction of courts. We have not ousted the jurisdiction of courts. In the course of the discussion I have repeatedly stated that wherever right or title to property is involved, we have left the matter entirely for the courts to decide. But we have decided that, where it is a case of a party indulging in wasteful litigation or speculation, it should not be done with the money belonging to the religious institutions. It will be seen therefore that we have stopped only litigation as a luxury and not litigation for a religious purpose or for establishing right or title to property. As practising lawyers are we not every day dealing with legislation restricting the jurisdiction of courts? Oftentimes, when we have to refer to the Limitation Act or the Transfer of Property Act, we used to call them the chottu pusthakam (சுட்டு புத்தகம்) of lawyers. We want these Acts for our livelihood. What is the Limitation Act but an absolute ousting of the jurisdiction of courts? On promissory notes executed earlier than three years one cannot file a suit for the recovery of the amount involved. The court is prohibited from entertaining a suit on such promissory notes even if the party admits the execution of the document. And yet, nobody condemns the Limitation Act for this ousting of jurisdiction of courts. Sir, even if a pro-note has been decreed, even that decree has to be executed within a limited period. Otherwise the decree will not be valid. Why is this so? This is so because the Legislature decided that there must be some sort of 'Thus far and no further.' It decided that there must be a limitation put somewhere and that in the case of promissory notes three years should be the limit and in the case of registered documents the period should be 12 years. The whole Act consists of limitations and safeguards."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" It is limitation of the cause of action and not of power of the courts."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" What does it mean? The court cannot entertain a suit and cannot grant a decree. It is a sort of limiting the jurisdiction of the court."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" It is a misconstruction."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" In the Transfer of Property Act, in the case of a lease it is provided that the lease must end with the month or date of the tenancy. If the lease is anything different, the court cannot entertain a suit. There are hundreds of such legislation limiting the powers of courts to intervene, in the interests of the common good. What we have to examine is whether the limitation imposed is reasonable or not and, as in this case, whether the limitation proposed affects any other kind of litigation except the luxurious litigation. The criterion must be this: whether there is proper ousting of the jurisdiction. I claim that this ousting the jurisdiction of courts is, judged by this criterion, quite proper. It is only this that we have done. We have done nothing to deprive anybody of his right or title to property."

"Then, Sir, Sri Viswanatham attacked the principle of nomination and called it powers of patronage to appoint persons to the various Area Committees for some 'thirty thousand temples' and, in that connection, said: 'The Minister flew into a rage when I spoke about patronage.' I should tell him, Sir, that his feeling that I flew into a rage must have been caused by the truth in the reply that I gave on that occasion. He referred to the Tirupati Devasthanam Board and said that there was patronage there. In reply I read out the names of persons who were on the Board, to show that there was nothing done there as a matter of patronage. There was no question of my getting angry. I felt with pride that that was a very good answer to him. I did not say anything in any spirit of anger."

SRI T. VISWANATHAM :—" It may be bad."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" My reply was quite convincing and that is perhaps the reason why my friend said that I was angry. There is no necessity for me to be angry in this matter at all."

"My hon. Friends Mr. Pattabhiramayya, Srimathi Lakshmi Sankara Ayyar and Sri Chidambara Ayyar were saying that the provisions will lead to loss of faith in the temples. God forbid this result. Our idea is quite the reverse of this."

"Sir, I have only one or two points more to refer to. Hon. Friends Sri Chidambara Ayyar and Sri Gopalaswami also referred to the nominations. They said that everything was going to be done by nomination and that nothing good would ever come out of it, etc. Sri Gopalaswami in this connection said that Gandhiji's name was dragged in. I may at once say, Sir, that Gandhiji's name was never dragged in by me. His name was invoked by some Friends here in the course of their arguments. But I remember that he himself invoked that name and I also did so when reference was made to the collection made by Gandhiji to the Harijan Fund. It was said that Gandhiji was very particular that proper accounts of the fund must be kept. It was necessary to mention this when it was said that it was improper to ask the matadhipathis to keep accounts. Sri Gopalaswami asked, 'Did Gandhiji entrust the fund to an elected body or form an electoral college for the fund?' He said he was himself the trustee and so, as he was responsible for it, he nominated for the administration of the fund certain persons in whom he had confidence.' Let that argument be a little more extended. Gandhiji was the trustee himself and he nominated persons in whom he had confidence. The argument of my hon. Friend that nominations are bad can find no support from this example. Gandhiji's nominees for the fund were Mr. G. D. Birla, Sri Thakkar Baba and Sri Gopalaswami. He selected men who would behave like trustees and not like owners of the property entrusted to them. I submit that this is the object of these provisions. The persons nominated must feel that they are trustees and act as trustees. Then only the souls of those who endowed vast properties could rest in peace. Let not the trust properties be improperly used or mismanaged. Let there be some device adopted to see that such properties are properly managed. That is our only object. Though comparisons are sometimes odious, one cannot in the same breath condemn nomination in one place and approve of it in another place.

" We were told by one Member that this Bill is an autocratic device, in that the Commissioner can do anything. May I ask whether when the Commissioner is not there, the trustee is not an absolute autocrat? Cannot one say that the trustee is an autocrat? If the Commissioner or the Area Committee is not there, what is the position? Has not the trustee unfettered power? Do you prefer the autocracy of the trustee to the superintendence in administrative matters by Government? Sir, in this connection even the question of the judiciary and the executive was brought in though it has no bearing on the matter under consideration.

" Sir, before I conclude, I should submit with your leave that the idea behind this Bill is that these religious and charitable endowments should be properly managed and that the maths and the matadhipathis should not make people—in the words of Sri Pattabhiramayya and Sri Kosalram who hold extreme views in this matter—'run away from Hinduism'. Possibly in the areas where they live they find people running away from Hinduism, on account of the way in which the religious institutions are conducted. Therefore they ask that for Heaven's sake prevent this happening. It is not a revolutionary proposal. The idea is only to protect ourselves and our cherished institutions. Mr. Kosalram only desired, in what he said, that people should be saved from becoming desperate in matters of religion.

" One hon. Member argued that the matadhipathis are also trustees. In reply to him I may repeat that the matadhipathis are sanyasins who have renounced worldly wealth. They do not care for money. My hon. Friend Sri Muniswami Pillay is annoyed because we have included the matadhipathis in the Bill and feels that to so include them is irreverence. I agree that we should show reverence and regard, in the manner of guru-sishya bhavam (ഗുരുശിষ്യ, ബന്ധം), to the matadhipathis. But these sanyasins should not care for money or attachment for property. They should live in the spiritual world as it were. What happens now is some people dupe them of the money which the faithful ones offer to them as pathakanikka, etc. Numbers of devotees put money at their feet. But the clever people seize these sums and make use of them. The matadhipathis should be saved from the trouble of keeping the money offered to them. This is why the maths have been included in the Bill. It has not been done with the idea of lowering them in the esteem or regard of the public. I agree with Sri Varadachariar when he said ' Little may we have occasion to use this Act at all in a way which would hurt the feelings of anybody.' Let us pray for it.

" Sir, I have answered all the points raised. I will now declare once again that the object of the Government is not to destroy the temples or the other religious institutions. We wish only to protect and preserve them and, if possible, restore their pristine glory or at least see to it that they are not lost for ever,

18th December 1950] [Sri K. Madhava Menon]

MR. SPEAKER :—" The question is—

' That the Madras Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowments Bill, 1949, as amended, be passed into law.' "

The motion was carried and the Bill as amended was passed into law.

THE MADRAS LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

Thursday, the 24th February 1949.

The House met in the Council Chamber, Fort St. George, at eleven of the clock, Mr. President (THE HON. SRI K. B. RAMAKRISHNA RAJU) in the Chair.

• • • • •

THE MADRAS HINDU RELIGIOUS AND CHARITABLE ENDOWMENTS BILL, 1949 (L.A. BILL No. 10 OF 1949).

* THE HON. T. S. S. RAJAN : " I move, Sir :-

that this House concurs in setting up a Joint Select Committee of the two Houses consisting of 30 Members (20 Members from the Assembly and 10 Members from the Council) to consider the Madras Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowments Bill, 1949 (L.A. Bill No. 10 of 1949), and that the following Members of this House be nominated to the said Joint Select Committee.

" I shall give the list of Members at the end.

" Sir, I should announce to this House that this Bill in its introductory stage had a very prolonged discussion in the Assembly. As many as 26 Members took part in the debate and the Speaker of the House had been kind enough to allow them enough time and to the extent of the consideration stage itself, nearly three to four days. The subject has been thoroughly thrashed out in all its aspects and the various shades of opinion were expressed in no uncertain terms. Since then there has been an interval of days and this interval has been, according to me, well utilized both by supporters of the Bill and those who are opposed to it, in the public meetings held in the various parts of the country and also in the various newspapers that were in favour of one or the other view. So this House particularly is much better informed with regard to the information on this Bill than even the other House. It shall not be said that time was not given or that the Bill is rushed through. I also know this, Sir, that this House has always taken a very keen interest on matters connected with social and religious legislation and I am sure that this House stands to gain by the time it has had at its disposal. My own opinion in the matter is simply this. There has been rather a clouded version from many quarters with regard to the object of the Government in enacting this Bill. I must say here and now, Sir, as emphatically as I can, that it is not the intention of the Government to interfere with religion as such. I want to make that point perfectly clear to you. Whatever the term 'religion' may connote, we here as a Government have no idea of usurping to ourselves the places held by those religious men who are vitally concerned with the performances of the various ceremonies in the religious institutions or in the conduct of the charities. It has often been said by those who are opposed to the Bill in public meetings and in other places that this Government are endeavouring to take to them elves certain powers which rightly do not belong to them and that the law or the Constitution now being framed at Delhi does not give them the latitude or the privilege to interfere in such matters. I shall go into that question later on. But I may give this assurance on behalf of the Government that we did not at all have it in our mind when we introduced the Bill. We do not propose to sit in judgment over the decisions or actions of those who are responsible for the religious activities in the temples and the particular methods of worship. We are only concerned with our duty to see that these temple, a local and public institutions have got to be run in the proper way which is perhaps according to the intention of the donor who originally endowed these properties and those who have subsequently added to them. We feel that these funds and charities have accumulated enormously during the course of years; that they have swelled enormously and that unless their use is properly controlled and checked and audited, they are likely to be misused. In fact, they are being misused to-day, and we as a Government cannot sleep over the whole question saying that it is religion and a religious trust.

"We feel that we owe a duty to the public, and that we, as a Government, are as much interested in the proper running of religious institutions and charities. We are taking power only to such an extent as may be necessary to put them right. As I have made myself clear, on this fundamental and important point, all those misgivings with regard to the belief that the Government intend to interfere in religion or take upon them elves the duties of trusts and heads of mufts and religious organizations, must not be there. Speaking on behalf of the Government I make that statement. Secondly, when I have said that we as a Government feel that we have not been doing our duty, I should mention that alien Governments, foreign to our culture, who happened to hold sway over us during the last two or three centuries, not only interfered in these matters, but they actually took over the management of all these trusts and charities, and have directed, not for one or two years, but for a number of years, these institutions and charities. I must here acknowledge the services which the foreign Government have done to Hindu religion and Hindu faith in the wonderful and effective way in which they controlled these trusts and charities. We should say to their credit that though their faith is different from ours, that did not stand in their way of doing the correct thing. We are very grateful to them for having taken up responsibility in religious matters, in which they are not vitally concerned, but which they, as a Government, felt it necessary to come into the business. They did it in such an efficient way that even the Christian Government of the East India Company felt that, that they were not to dabble in the religion of other people and in matters of ecclesiastical interest which does not pertain to their faith, and they stated clearly that it was not their business to interfere in these matters. Then there was the change over of the responsibility, and the Government said 'we shall not take charge of them and we shall leave all the trusts to be managed as best as can be by the people of those faiths.' It is only since then we have begun to take charge of these trusts and charities. In 1817 the Regulation was passed. Between 1795 and 1819 no less than 8,292 temples spread over the then 21 districts of this Province came under the Government's active supervision. Corrupt revenues were dismissed. Temples that had remained closed were opened for worship. Pujas and festivals were regularly conducted. Temple lands were looked after and the ryots' welfare was attended to. If that is the record of the management of the temples and charities by the East India Company of those days, is it charitable—at least to those of us who propose to take charge of these temples—to say that we have less interest in these temples; less faith in Hindu religious practices, and that we are so callous and dead to our faith that by the mere proposal to take charge of the duties, we as a Government have made it so bad that we are not to interfere with it? Sir, history has been different. In the long course of religious history in this Province, we have passed through many stages and vicissitudes. Responsibilities have changed often. I say as a matter of history that temples had been managed by Governments before. They have been so well managed that a foreign Government felt that they should not interfere and that it was not their business. I am here referring to that clear-cut speech of the Hon. Premier in the other House. Permit me to give a quotation from the East India Company's records; the report from the Collector of Tirunelveli:—

'The present control and interference of the district Government and authorities extends over everything connected with the temple; from the collection of its revenues and the management of its lands to the regulating of its daily usual expenses, its periodical festivals and repairs.'

Here is a thing on which orthodox people laid stress.

'Such thorough-going was the control. Lionel Place had jewels made to the shrine at Kanchespuram which were exhibited by the people with pride. Peter Rous, the Collector of Madurai, presented a pair of golden stirrups to the Minakshi temple. And the people welcomed it all.'

Then the positive role of the State gradually disappeared. After Queen Victoria's famous Proclamation, temples relapsed into gloom. Management again became corrupt. Then a number of committees and trustees and a whole hierarchy of non-official management came into being. Things came to such a pass that the previous Government under dyarchy felt it their duty to interpose some agency between the people and the State to take charge of these funds. Then came the Hindu Religious Endowments Board which became a statutory body under the law. They had their own Commissioners, who were both judicial people to give decisions and also persons to take charge of the executive management of temples wherever it was necessary to do so. In that way, the Board came into being. The Board has been doing work for well over 20 years. It has been unfortunate that the statutory laws framed under the Act that governs the Endowment Board have not been sufficiently effective. They gave a good amount of latitude to those committees and trustees. That threw open the doors of litigation for them to go and contest to their heart's content about the management and mismanagement of these temples and wait for a decision by the courts. Sir, we have no grudge against law. It has often been said that we as a Government do not like the control of law. Far from it. If only law has helped the management of these trusts, and if it has saved the funds and the hierarchy from the degeneration that followed, we would have no complaint. But what happened? These trustees who were in charge of the funds began to use the trust funds for carrying on their litigation for a number of years. The funds were gradually disappearing and were lost in the course of the litigation. It is there exactly that we felt the need to interfere. Thousands and lakhs of rupees entrusted to the trustees were wasted on litigation from court to court, that is, beginning from the District Court up to the Privy Council—not for one year, but for a number of years. This litigation left nothing for the next trustee to take charge. There is no trust. It is all exhausted in fighting out the law point. In this way, many temples had to be closed down. The trusts disappeared. The obligations which were laid upon the trustees also disappeared. It came to that stage where we say that temples were deserted, worship was neglected, and there was nobody to take charge of them in the manner in which such temples and trusts should be controlled and guided. Because, things came to such a pass we felt that it was our duty to take charge of them. We also felt it our duty that we have to do it. Then, the question was raised that we are a secular State, and we had no business to interfere in this religious matter. Quite true, Sir, we are a secular State, and we do maintain that even this Madras Government under the guidance of the Government of India is a secular State. But when once we have said that it is a secular State, it does not mean that we should not bring in legislation with regard to the various trusts to which this Government are responsible. Therefore, we have come into this business fully conscious of the fact that we are a secular State. While we are a secular State we have a responsibility to control and manage the trusts also. As far as our advice goes—the advice of our legal experts—we are well within our bounds to go on with this legislation and enact it for what it is worth. I have quoted in the other House a full length opinion of the Advocate-General of Madras in support of the position that we have taken, and it is not my intention now to read that opinion in any detail. But I must inform this House that we are perfectly within our rights to go into this question, and that this House as well as the other House were perfectly right in taking up legislation in this matter.

THE PRESIDENT:—Will the Hon. Minister please read the Advocate-General's opinion.

24th February 1949]

THE HON. DR. T. S. S. RAJAN:—“That is what I am trying to do. The Advocate-General says—

‘Entry No. 43 in List II (State List) empowers the State Legislature to enact laws in respect of charities and charitable institutions, charitable and Religious endowments and religious institutions. It will be observed that in fact Entry No. 43 in contrast with Entry No. 34 of List II of the existing Government of India Act is wider, in that it includes religious institutions as well. It is therefore impossible to contend even under the new constitution that the State Legislature has no power to enact laws relating to religious endowments or religious institutions on the ground that the State is a secular State and that Freedom of Religion is a fundamental right. That State has a paramount duty to see that religious and charitable institutions are being properly managed and not mismanaged; and that religious endowments are being properly applied for the purposes for which they were intended. The Crown in England has always been regarded as the protector of charity and charity includes religion.’

In another paragraph the Advocate-General says—

‘It is, therefore, impossible to say that the Bill as such would offend the provisions of the draft constitution relating to fundamental rights. The Bill deals with temples, mutts and charities. It goes without saying that charities and charitable institutions are clearly unaffected by Articles 19 and 20. As to temples, it is clear that they are public religious institutions and according to juristic conceptions, the idol is the owner. The same legal conception, however, does not hold good in the case of mutts which are monastic institutions in which particular religious cults are preached and propagated.’

“But mutts are also religious institutions and madathipathis are trustees. Both in the case of temples, as well as in the case of mutts, the distinction between matters of pure religion and religious ritual, and matters relating to the administration of properties and other secular matters will have to be kept in mind; and while the constitution safeguards the fundamental rights in respect of the former without any restriction, the latter are subject to such laws as the legislature might enact. A law which takes away or abridges a fundamental right is declared to be void, but a law, the object of which is to secure or establish or protect that fundamental right, will be a good law. The State cannot dictate how a man shall worship his god, but it can say how he should administer god's property. Therefore, the Advocate-General's opinion is that the Bill cannot be rejected or condemned entire and wholesale, even after the declaration of fundamental rights. It is quite likely that some of the sections will have to be scrutinized at the Select Committee stage with a view to ascertain what sections fall outside the line and where necessary, other suitable amendments or modifications will have to be devised within the limits of the new constitution.

“Sir, we have had deputations, we granted interviews and we discussed the question with lawyers who can speak with any sense of authority and they have all conceded that with regard to the administration of temples we have absolutely every right to take up the question. The only question against which they expressed their opinion was with regard to the spiritual side of these mutts and religious institutions, whether the Government as constituted to-day, and having got that quantum of spirituality in us, could be empowered to go and interfere and sit in judgment over matters pertaining to those revered people. We can understand that, and as far as spiritual functions of religious madathipathis are concerned, we should keep aloof. We have no idea of interfering with them under this Bill. But, we maintain that, if the spiritual head of a mutt or a religious institution goes out of the way and squanders the trust funds which are placed under his care, or misuses the funds, if it comes to that, then necessarily, it is time for us to interfere. Therefore, in this Bill, we have made it clear that although various sections that are mentioned therein claim the right to go and interfere and lawyers might be contending that right should not be there—we have made a distinction. We do not interfere with anything which the madathipathis may do or their disciples may do. But, funds are entrusted to the heads of religious institutions and mutts. Though they have to discharge very many religious duties. The head of a mutt should not say 'Oh, this is my property; you should not come here. Whether I misuse those funds or squander away those funds, it is my business.' If the head of a mutt says like that, then Government will have the right to say 'We must have the accounts; we must know how moneys are being spent and in what manner; though that money is given to you as a spiritual head it is given to you only as trustee of the mutt.' Therefore, our right of interference will be exercised in cases where the heads of mutts misuse those funds entrusted to them as trustees by people who believed in their spirituality and in their capacity to do the right thing. They have been given vast extent of lands and many properties and if they are discharging the obligations of those trusts in the spirit in which they were endowed, then Government will not interfere.

"Then, Sir, some persons say 'Government have got other business to do; they have the food problem and so many other problems and why not leave the mutts and religious institutions to themselves?' Sir, this is a strange argument. The Government should have the right to take up the management of those misused trusts and to discharge the duties that are expected of those trusts. This Bill only gives that power to enable Government to take charge of erring institutions in the interests of the people. The public would watch the Government and see that they do not abuse in any way those trusts as would be detrimental to the objects for which those trusts were endowed. Public opinion and the Legislature will come into play and they will see that those objects are made secure. The public can watch the progress of the Government in this matter just as they watch the Government with regard to problems connected with food and so on. That is why Government have decided to appoint an agency to look after the administration of these temples and mutts. We, for our part, say 'If these trustees do act in a manner in which they like and misuse the funds, then we, who are interested in the people, must interfere and for that purpose we have proposed a law.' We do not propose to make laws in bits or instalments with regard to this matter. We want a comprehensive law to deal with this matter and therefore, we have brought in this Bill. It is within the province of the Select Committee to make such alterations in it as to make it thoroughly acceptable to all classes of people.

and Then, Sir, another argument was that these religious questions are beyond the pale of democracy. Perhaps, it is too much to say in these days. We, as a Government, have got our interest in this matter and we have to take up the responsibility of managing them also. Then, they may say that these trusts are so endowed that the trustees can do anything with them and that the Government cannot interfere and do anything. Is this an argument? It is the duty of the Government to go and interfere as they have done with regard to other problems. That is why the Board has been constituted but they are not able to do what is expected of them. Therefore, Government should take more powers to do it.

24th February 1949] [Dr. T. S. S. Rajan]

"Then, Sir, there is still another argument that we are going to collect taxes under this Bill which we should not. Sir, I want to tell this House that it is not a new thing which the Government are doing. In fact, Government are going to collect money according to the incomes of these temples and it is only a percentage for the maintenance of the machinery which may be constituted under this Bill. Therefore, it is nothing new. We are doing exactly what has been the practice for the last 27 years. People need not be frightened that they are going to be taxed for the maintenance of these temples. The temples will be taxed in a way as to bear a just proportion of the amount of expenses involved in the management of those institutions. We must see that the waste of funds and the mismanagement of moneys are avoided because many of them were unaccounted. Under this Bill, those trusts are made to bear a certain proportion of their income in order that they may be effectively managed and the trust funds may not be wasted or misused. That is what Government intend to do. I know, Sir, that this wastage and mishandling of money is going on in the name of temple in the name of god; that money should be diverted to proper channels. As it is, much is wasted in the name of religion. I do not understand why this should be allowed. Of course, those who have been swindling are in a majority; those who are handling the public funds for their private benefits are in a majority. Therefore, they are against this scheme and they want to continue the existing state of affairs. That is where we come into conflict. Sir, I know how many people have taken to endow these charities. A man has got three unscrupulous sons. He has unfortunately got a big property. He does not trust his own sons. So, he says 'There is so much money; instead of being wasted by unscrupulous sons, I will endow it in the name of god and in the name of a temple.' He endows it in the name of the temple and makes his sons the trustees of the property. Even though the sons misuse the funds, the law gives them protection. Even though the trustees become debtors, the law gives them protection. Because they have been made perpetual trustees, they go on spending all the money and the law merely looks on. This state of affairs is ridiculous. This kind of thing is going on day after day and even though properties have been dedicated in the name of god, the sons and grandsons of those who endowed that property go on abusing those funds to their own advantage. Those original donors might not have foreseen that the trusts would be abused by their own children. But, the law, as it is, gives them protection. That is why we have introduced this Bill in order to deal with such cases. We want only to take power to deal with wrong doers and, if I may say so, with those who connive in mishandling those trust properties. We want to prevent this misuse and to divert this money into more useful channels for the benefit of society, such as for the education of the people and so on. It is because there are large properties which people have endowed for the benefit of society and made their children the perpetual trustees and these trustees abuse those funds and misuse the trust properties for their own benefit and it is because there is no law at present which can prevent this, that we have to bring in this Bill. Sir, it has been brought to kill the canker that has crept into society to-day and it is our religious duty to pass this Bill if we want to save the society from this canker. In spite of the clear declarations made by the original donors, under the protection given by the law as it exists at present, these trust properties have dwindled. Therefore, we have brought this law in order to get the power to interfere in these matters, within the four corners of law. I can cite instances after instances where trust funds have been misused and squandered by unscrupulous people. To prevent that, we have necessarily to make some law under which we can take power to interfere and set right matters. The speech of the Hon. the Premier the other day in the other House has given voluminous evidence of the amounts from temple funds which have been mishandled by irresponsible trustees who have been put in charge of them. Such things are going on for hundreds of years. Even those who are against this Bill must admit that it is all absolute truth. The fact cannot be controverted. Since that document was published, I have not seen one statement in the Press saying that the statement of the Hon. Premier is incorrect. I have not seen one line against that statement. But, some people go on saying that we are interfering with religion. They are repeating that statement parrotlike. I say we do not interfere with religion, but we do interfere to manage the religious properties better than they have been done till now. It is in that light the various clauses of this Bill have been drafted. So, Sir, those who have enjoyed the privilege of swindling and mismanagement see something very wrong in all these stringent regulations we want to make. We do it with the knowledge of what we have been having for the last 27 years. The Endowments Board has failed and has failed very badly. Here I would like to quote one or two beautiful sentences from the speech of the Hon. Premier as to the condition of these endowments: "Some others ask, why not a Protector of Charities, instead of a Government department?" That is the sort of slogan that is always raised in public meetings. 'We have tried that and that is the Board. We have found its limitations.' 'Lacking as it does the necessary power—mind you it has no power although it is constituted under the law—' 'Lacking as it does the necessary power it commands scant respect.' That is the most deplorable portion of it. 'It is plaything of the lower courts. Chronic litigants drag on the Board from one court to another, at the expense of charitable fund. The Board has got the power to call for budgets, but not the power to scrutinize them.

24th February 1949] [Dr. T. S. S. Rajan]

It asks for accounts, but does not get them. It finds abuses, but has no power to reform them. In short it is anamolous, powerless and hardly adequate to meet our requirements. Sir, the position cannot be put in better terms than this and that is what we say in this Bill, namely, that the Board has failed to meet the situation and that therefore we want this Bill to come in and take its place. The trustees have failed, the remedy of protectors has failed and the remedy of the intermediary, the Board, which has been constituted under the law, has also failed and therefore we are driven to the necessity of handling this question. As a Government, we quite appreciate, that our responsibilities are great and our duties are also equally great. Now that we are trying to run a democratic Government, we do not want to coerce anybody, but we want to give freedom of thought and liberty of worship and everything that pertains to worship. That is our idea and our wish. It must be clearly understood that in this undertaking, our policy will be non-interference in matters vitally concerned with religion and we shall not go beyond that and even there it will be limited to proper management of these trusts. If all the maths and the Matadhipathis and the spiritual heads of these institutions do their duties properly, we shall keep miles away from them. We shall see that these things are managed properly and in those cases we do not interfere. But, if you say "they are sacrosanct, do not go near them" then I should say, such people should not be hanging for all these purposes because they do not care to control them. In fact, if any of these trustees are such good godly men and if they resent any restrictions that are put on them by a temporal Government like ours, then we do not want this power and we have got better business to do and they will go their own way. As a matter of fact, no honest religious and spiritual man will like to be worried with the management of lands, trusts and such things, because they form the normal duties of those institutions which are not their main concern, but they are more concerned with the higher spiritual thought and they are doing that and will continue to do that. But, so far as the Government is concerned, they have seen by experience how in many cases these institutions have squandered and mismanaged the funds of the institutions and they are legion and the Hon. Premier has given a documentary list of such mismanaged institutions. Therefore it is needless for me at this stage to harp on it.

"One word more, Sir. We propose to have a representative Select Committee of twenty members from the other House and ten from this House who will form a Joint Select Committee of thirty members and they will have full liberty to go into these questions and shape the Bill as they think necessary. They have had an ample opportunity of studying the question both in the form in which it has now been presented to them and they will also have the question examined in the form in which it is demanded by the people and use their judgment with regard to the evolution of the Bill in a proper atmosphere, only taking care to see that the fundamental principles involved in the Bill are not horribly destroyed or mutilated by the Select Committee. If that is done I am sure there will not be any necessity to ask for much of the powers, but I hope the Select Committee will make such protection and such liberty as may be found necessary in the working of the Act where there is interference rightly or wrongly by certain class of people and to that extent I can give this assurance that the Select Committee are entitled to do so. Sir, after the Select Committee considers the Bill and publishes its report and it is placed before this House then the further stages of the Bill will be made as smooth as possible, so that when the Bill is finally approved by both the Houses we may have a certain amount of confidence that we can manage the properties of these trusts in a proper manner. It is with this sense of responsibility that the Government have introduced the motion that the Bill be referred to a Joint Select Committee."

DR. V. K. JOHN:—"Mr. President, Sir, the Opposition would like to reserve their right to discuss the principle of the Bill and its general provisions at the stage at which rule 105 is reached. You know, Sir, that Bills originating in and passed by the Assembly and received in the Council should be dealt with under the rules following rule 102. Under rule 103, any Member acting on behalf of the Government may give notice of his intention to move that the Bill be taken into consideration. That is, after it has been passed by the Assembly. That is rule 103. Then under rule 105 On the day on which such motion is set down in the list of business, the Member in charge of the Bill may move that the Bill be taken into consideration on that date or on any subsequent date to which the discussion of the motion is postponed. The principles of the Bill and its general provisions may be discussed, but the details of the Bill must not be discussed further than is necessary to explain its principles. Now, Sir, it is a right given to members at a particular stage to discuss the principle of the Bill and its general provisions and that right cannot be taken away. I want your ruling on this, Sir, because on a former occasion when a similar motion for the appointment of a Joint Select Committee was made, it was said that we should not discuss the general provisions of the Bill on that day. I say, Sir, that the Opposition want to discuss the general principles of the Bill at the stage when rule 105 comes in."

MR. PRESIDENT:—"Is the hon. Member raising a point of order?"

DR. V. K. JOHN:—"I am suggesting that we shall have a convention. In a way it is a point of order, Sir."

MR. PRESIDENT:—"Please make me understand what you want. Are you raising a point of order?"

DR. V. K. JOHN:—"My point is that the general principles of the Bill should be discussed when we reach the stage of rule 105."

24th February 1949]

MR. PRESIDENT:—"The hon. Member must put it in proper form. I am only concerned with the form. The hon. Member cannot say that the principles of the Bill should not be discussed now but only some time later, that is, when the Bill comes from the Assembly. But, what is the position to-day? The motion is there and what is the point of view of the hon. Member as regards this motion. Does he want that the principles of the Bill should be discussed now or need not be discussed now? He will please make his point clear and on what grounds. If it is a case that the principles of the Bill should not be discussed now, I request the hon. Member to give me the rule or the convention or any other thing on which he bases his case to say that the principles should not be discussed now. That is all I want."

DR. V. K. JOHN:—"I am saying that there should be a convention that this may not be discussed now."

MR. PRESIDENT:—"The hon. Member cannot ask for a convention."

DR. V. K. JOHN:—"It cannot be discussed now because under rule 111 we are only asked to concur in the appointment of a Joint Select Committee. Of course, this House will be doing a wrong thing if we do not concur and what will be the result in not concurring with the setting up of a Joint Select Committee? The other House has asked us to concur in the appointment of a Joint Select Committee and if we do not concur we lose the privilege of our members being put on it to discuss the Bill, and the Assembly will still go on with it. The other House has given us the privilege which they are bound to take advantage of asking us to concur in the setting up of a Joint Select Committee. If we do not pass this motion we are doing something against our own interests. I can understand that if we do not concur and the other House cannot go on with the Bill, but then the other House can go on even though we do not concur with the motion for the appointment of a Joint Select Committee."

MR. PRESIDENT:—"May I point out to the hon. Member that it is all beside the point in my humble opinion. I want the hon. Member to come to the point. If the hon. Member thinks that it cannot be discussed now he should make his point of order clear so that the House may know the reason for it. He should point out the rule or otherwise leave it to other hon. Members to discuss it or not."

DR. V. K. JOHN:—"My point is, the rule regarding the setting up of a Joint Select Committee does not say that at this stage we are to discuss the general principles underlying the Bill and because it does not say, we shall not also discuss them. Rule 105 says that we shall discuss the principles at a particular stage. Now, if the intention of the Legislature is that we should take up the time of the House in discussing the general principles of a Bill twice, I think, it should be clearly expressed. I say that that" could not be the intention of the Legislature and we have to find out the intention of the Legislature in regard to this. The intention of the Legislature was we should discuss the general principles at the stage where rule 105 is reached."

MR. PRESIDENT:—"I think the hon. Member wants a ruling on the point whether we ought to discuss the motion now or not?"

"I suppose the hon. Member has received a copy of the amendment. Do you wish to shut out the right of any hon. Member to move an amendment?"

DR. V. K. JOHN:—"This is not the stage of moving amendments, because the Bill is before the other House and it is seized of it. The other House can appoint a Committee and ask this House to concur with the appointment of a Joint Select Committee and we may simply oppose the motion. But if we oppose the motion, then we shall not have the advantage of our Members included in the Select Committee. Therefore, I suggest that this is not the stage when we should discuss the general principles or bring forward amendments and the opposition has decided not to discuss the general principles of the Bill. It may not be said that when the Bill emerges from the Select Committee and is placed before us for discussion, we have the right to discuss the general principles of the Bill at that stage. I mean the stage referred to under Rule 105."

MR. PRESIDENT:—"When the rule is there, who can say that it should not be followed?"

DR. V. K. JOHN:—"Last time when the same question was raised, we were told that we should not take up the time of the House in discussing it or putting in amendments at the stage of Rule 105."

MR. PRESIDENT:—"That is not the point."

DR. V. K. JOHN:—"Whatever it is, we would like to know what the Hon. Leader of the House has to say on this matter."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"May I say a word, Sir? I do not accept the principle of interpretation of Dr. John as to the position of the Bill at this stage. I want to remind him what happened last time and which was referred to by Dr. John. In fact, I was moving that Bill. When the Bill came out of the Joint Select Committee, it was being discussed. I said, in the course of my reply, that if only the Bill was for consideration in the setting up of a Select Committee and if suggestions were made then, it would have helped us for consideration in the Select Committee. The Hon. President said that it was open to the House to discuss the principles of the Bill. Now, Sir, in this Bill there is no difference between this stage and the stage when a Bill is introduced in this House and a motion is made that the Bill be referred to a Select Committee and that the principle of the Bill is being discussed. Now, the motion before the House is to refer the Bill to a Joint Select Committee instead of a Select Committee. Since we want a Joint Select Committee we request this House to concur with the setting up of a Joint Select Committee. The motion really is that the Bill be referred to a Select Committee of both the Houses. Since we wanted that this House also should concur in the appointment of a Joint Select Committee, we added the words 'that the other House be requested to concur in the appointment of a Joint Select Committee'. Therefore, there is no difference in the principle except the principle of law enunciated by Dr. John that this is not the time to discuss the principles of the Bill. It is wrong. Sir."

MR. PRESIDENT:—"The hon. Member Dr. John has raised a point of order whether it is open to the House to discuss the general principles of the Bill at this stage. In fact, I do not understand him to put his case so thoroughly as that. But his objection comes substantially to that. He says that rule 105 is there and he wants to be sure that if the Bill comes back to this House after having been passed in the other House, the right under rule 105, for discussion of the principles of the Bill should not be taken away. In my view, that is not exactly the point to be discussed now. The real point is, whether on this motion, it is open to members to discuss the general principles underlying this Bill. The motion is, that this House do concur in the setting up of a Joint Select Committee along with the other House. It is common knowledge that when a motion is made in the House, it can also be opposed. An amendment can be given to the original motion or the motion itself can be opposed and may even be voted down. So, there cannot be any restriction on the right of any hon. Member in either agreeing to the motion or disagreeing to the motion. In fact, to-day there is an amendment given notice of by the hon. Member, Mr. Bhima Rao. Now, with that before us, the question arises how this motion is to be discussed. I do not see how the mover of the motion or the mover of the amendment or any other member opposing the motion can say anything either for or against the motion without giving some reasons therefor. The only reason that one can give on such a motion as this, is either that the Bill to which the motion refers, is a very good Bill and that it is worthwhile for the House to join in the Select Committee or say that this Bill is a very bad Bill and that it is not in the interests of the country to pass such a Bill and so ask this House to reject the motion. Without giving one reason or other, I really fail to see how this motion can be properly discussed in this House. When such reasons are being given, it is not also possible to understand how reasons can be adduced without referring at least superficially to the principles underlying the Bill. After all, a Bill is acceptable or not acceptable according to the principles that underlie such a Bill. In this case, discussion has gone on for a long time in the other House. Arguments for and against the motion have been advanced there. Similarly, arguments may be advanced here and there are very good reasons for and against the discussion on such a motion as this. There are no definite rules in the rules of the Council governing a motion like this. In the absence of such specific rules, I suppose, ordinary rules of commonsense must apply. We cannot shut out any hon. Member adducing reasons either for or against the Bill. Therefore, I am not prepared to hold that on this motion either nobody could talk or nobody could give reasons for and against the motion. I should think, when the hon. Member Mr. Bhima Rao moves his motion "that this legislation be deferred", he must tell the House on what reasons he says that this Bill should be deferred. So, I am unable to agree that the hon. Member should not give reasons either for or against the motion at this stage. If it is a question of convention, I do not think we can call this, a question of convention because the rights of individual members are involved in this case and when rights are involved, conventions do not arise. Just for the sake of information—because Dr. John apprised me of what he is going to do with regard to this motion—I had an occasion to refer to the procedure in the House of Commons and I find that on two occasions similar amendments were tabled in the House of Commons and the persons who opposed the motion for concurrence in the setting up of a Joint Select Committee, did give ample reasons as to why the Bills under consideration were not good and that why they should be postponed. I may just refer to page 1951 in the Parliamentary Debates of 1918, Volume 108. There the motion was "that for the consideration of the Criminal Law Amendment Bill and the Sexual Offences Bill", the House of Commons do concur with the House of Lords in the setting up of a Joint Select Committee. It was opposed and very valid reasons were given. One of the reasons is perhaps antalogous to the reason which Mr. Bhima Rao may give. "Since elections are coming off very soon and the franchise has been extended to include women voters and this Bill is going to affect the rights and prestige of women, this Bill should not be discussed at this stage and should be left over to the new Parliament." In fact, that is one of the arguments which may be advanced in this case also. So all these things were discussed there and ultimately the motion was agreed to. Therefore, I am unable to uphold the contention that this House cannot discuss the pros and cons of the measure to which this motion relates. Of course, it is open to the hon. Members—they may or may not discuss it as Dr. John puts it. Rule 105 is there. It cannot be taken away by anybody. When the Bill again comes here, I do not think anybody can say that the House has no right to discuss the general principles of the Bill. But in view of rule 105, the members can discuss the general principles of the Bill not elaborately, but in as short a manner as possible so that the work of the House may be expedited. That is a matter of convenience. As I have pointed out, I rule that it is open to the House to discuss the general principles underlying this Bill to the extent it is necessary for the motion on paper."

THE HON. DR. T. S. S. RAJAN :—" Sir, I consider that this is not an amendment to the proposition I have made. It is certainly an amendment against the Bill itself. This is not the time nor the occasion at which amendments of that sort should be accepted by the House. He wants that this Bill should not be introduced in this House and that it should be deferred. What are the reasons for it. He says, it should be deferred, 'till after fresh elections are held after issuing a fresh election manifesto, making the proposed legislation an issue therein and after obtaining the verdict of the electorate'. Well, Sir, I do not understand whether this is really an amendment to my proposition. I request you, Sir, to rule that this is not an amendment."

* THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, I want you to refer to rules 75 (1) and 88, and the two be read together. Rule 75 (1) says—

'At any time, . . . the member in charge of the Bill may make one of the following motions in regard to his Bill, namely :—

- (a)
- (b) that it be referred to a Select Committee of the Chamber,
- (c) that it be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion thereon."

Rule 88 says that after the select committee has reported the Bill should be taken into consideration or it may be recommitted."

So the motion to defer the Bill is in opposition to the motion and it is not an amendment to the motion."

MR. PRESIDENT :—" In effect it comes to that."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Whether the motion should be allowed is the point for consideration now."

MR. PRESIDENT :—" That is why Mr. Bhima Rao has been careful to couch it in a clever way. The precedent I gave from the House of Commons debate of 1918 is this: The motion there was—

'That it is desirable that the Criminal Law Amendment Bill and the Sexual Offences Bill be committed to a Joint Committee of both Houses of Parliament' be now considered. The amendment moved was, to leave out all the words after the word "That" to the end in the motion table and to insert instead thereof the words

'It is undesirable at this stage of the session to enter on consideration of a subject which will be better undertaken after women have exercised the franchise at a General Election.'

MR. KING :—" I would ask your ruling as to whether the amendment of which I have given notice is in order. In its effect it is an ordinary negative, but I would prefer to move it as an amendment if I am in order."

MR. SPEAKER :—" I think it would be in order for the hon. Member to move the amendment which stands on the paper in his name. That is why I rule the motion is in order."

* DR. V. K. JOHN :—" Sir, we are guided by our rules. This is really an amendment. This Bill is not for consideration now; the only thing that is for consideration now is the motion to refer the Bill to the Select Committee or rather the Joint Select Committee."

[Dr. V. K. John] [24th February 1949]

MR. PRESIDENT:—"We need not go back to that point. I have given the ruling. Mr. Bhima Rao may move his amendment. I cannot really shut out his motion on the ground that it is merely negative; because he says something by way of a resolution that it be deferred till after fresh elections are held after issuing a fresh election manifesto, etc. A legislation contemplates so many things. This motion is preliminary to legislation. It is open to the House to accept the amendment or reject it. So I think he is in order and he may move his motion."

* SRI B. BHIMA RAO:—"Mr. President, Sir, I beg to move—that the legislation relating to Madras Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowments (L.A. Bill No. 10 of 1949) be deferred till after fresh elections are held after issuing a fresh election manifesto, making the proposed legislation an issue therein and after obtaining the verdict of the electorate.

"I am very glad that you have given me an opportunity to speak on this amendment. When I sent in another amendment to you about ten days back stating that I would make a motion for eliciting public opinion in the same manner as Mr. Vaidyanatha Ayyar did in the Assembly, you were pleased to overrule that amendment, and I am glad to admit that according to the rules of the Council, when once a measure has passed through the Assembly and comes up for consideration before this House, according to the strict interpretation of the rules, it is not permissible for us to move again for reference to elicit public opinion. I admit, Sir, that my first motion was not in order and that your ruling was quite correct and proper. I am glad you made a suggestion in what manner I may give a proper amendment; and although I was not conversant with those ruling and incidents which happened in 1918 in the House of Commons, I thought over your suggestion for two or three days and only this morning the present amendment suggested itself to me. I am glad you have approved of it and given me an opportunity to speak my mind on the subject.

"Sir, I confess that it is with considerable diffidence and with great reluctance that I am obliged to make this speech on this occasion. For the charge is levelled against those who differ from Government on important matters on grounds of conscience and religious scruples that they are out to support those who misappropriate temple funds and those who misappropriate revenues of religious endowment funds. I certainly protest against any such insinuations."

MR. PRESIDENT:—"I do not think any such insinuations are made here."

24th February 1949]

THE HON. DR. T. S. S. RAJAN:—"I never made any such insinuation in my speech either in the other House or in this House."

SRI B. BHIMA RAO:—"I was following his speech from my seat and I thought he made mention to that effect. Anyway, Sir, in his speech, the Hon. Premier in the Assembly has made mention of this. I will quote from the speech he made in the Assembly—

'The Bill does affect a large group of men in society who, in the name of God and religion, misuse the trust that is placed in their hands and find in the proposed measure an end to their scope for exploitation. I am not concerned about them. On the other hand, Sir, their very opposition is an eloquent testimony to the sound and wholesome principles of the Bill. But, Sir, it is not for those who directly or indirectly stand to lose materially by a reformist measure such as this now before the House—and they are a vast majority comprising the opposing ranks,—but to those few who rightly or wrongly believe that the proposed measure is a negation of religious rights—it is to them I seek to appeal. No doubt they know not what they are saying.'"

MR. PRESIDENT:—"I do not think it says that those who are opposed to this Bill are in conspiracy with those who misappropriate the temple funds."

* SRI B. BHIMA RAO:—"Probably, Sir, I am adding from my own thought. If that is so I am ready to accept your interpretation. Like my friends I am out against those people who misappropriate and misuse temple funds or income from religious endowments. I will make it clear here that I am one with the Ministry not only to root out this misapplication of temple funds and temple revenues but also to root out corruption. In that respect I do not in the least differ from anyone here or there. But let not anyone make any insinuation against me. I am not against the Bill in so far as it relates to religious endowments. It is only where religious practices are likely to be interfered with, there, I seek to voice forth the feelings and sentiments of orthodox religious people. To that extent I want to express my feelings on this occasion. And it is with regard to those provisions with regard to the entry into mutts and asking the people to produce jewellery and other things, which I shall refer to presently. There are only two or three clauses, or four at the most. Such provisions wound the feelings and susceptibilities of those gentlemen who are affected, and it is on that I want to say a few words. My friends say that they do not want to interfere with religious practices at all. But some of the provisions of this Bill are very drastic, and do not bear out what they say. We have scrutinised the Bill with utmost care, and what does it contain? Some of the provisions certainly are against the statements made by the

[Sri B. Bhima Rao] [24th February 1949]

Hon. Dr. Rajan in this House to-day. Take for instance the argument that India is a secular State. Sir, when the election manifesto was issued in 1946, before the general elections were held, these were the promises made to the electorate. 'The new constitution should provide for fundamental rights. Among them are the following: (1) Every citizen of India has a right of free expression of opinion and of free association and combination and the right to assemble peacefully without arms for a purpose not opposed to law or morality.'

MR. PRESIDENT:—"Please refer to the relevant provisions only."

* SRI B. BHIMA RAO:—"Yes, Sir. 'Every citizen shall enjoy freedom of conscience and the right freely to practice his religion subject to public order and morality. The State shall observe neutrality in regard to all religions.'

"This was the election manifesto on which the elections were fought out and the present legislators were returned. At that time, Sir, the subject-matter of this legislation was not put forward before the electorate. This very same sentiment has been reinforced and re-enacted in the preamble of the draft constitution of India. I will read only the relevant portion. 'Resolved to constitute India into a sovereign democratic republic and to secure to all its citizens . . . liberty of thought, expression, belief, faith and worship.' Sir, this has been secured to all of us by virtue of this preamble. In this connexion I will read clause 20 of the Draft Constitution. Clause 20 says—

'Every religious denomination or any section thereof shall have the right—

- (a) to establish and maintain institutions for religious and charitable purposes;
- (b) to manage its own affairs in matters of religion;
- (c) to own and acquire movable and immovable property; and
- (d) to administer such property in accordance with law.'

Sub-clause (2) of clause 19 says—

'Nothing in this article shall affect the operation of any existing law or preclude the State from making any law—

- (a) regulating or restricting any economic, financial, political or other secular activity which may be associated with religious practice;
- (b) for social welfare and reform or for throwing open Hindu religious institutions of a public character to any class or section of Hindus.'

Sir, as you are fully aware, maths are not religious institutions of a public character. I do not know why the Hon. Dr. Rajan has gone away just now from here. The maths representing his cult are the most exclusive maths that I have ever come across. When worship is performed there, people of other communities are not admitted. A man like myself who belong to another Vaishnava community, namely, the Madwa community, is not allowed to go near the place of worship. Similarly in the Madwa maths, members of other communities are not welcome when the devotees are performing worship. I think this is a well-known fact.

24th February 1949] [Sri B. Bhima Rao]

As soon as this Bill becomes law, I am sure there will be appointed several Commissioners and Deputy and Assistant Commissioners and they will be drawn from all communities. Clause 16 says—

'(1) The Commissioner, Deputy and Assistant Commissioners and such other officers as may be authorized by the Commissioner in this behalf shall have power to enter the premises of any religious institution or any sacred place of worship for the purpose of exercising any power conferred, or discharging any duty imposed, by or under this Act.

'(2) If any such officer is resisted in the exercise of such power or discharge of such duty, the Magistrate having jurisdiction shall, on a written requisition from such officer, direct any Police officer not below the rank of Sub-Inspector to render such help as may be necessary to enable the officer to exercise such power or discharge such duty.'

The officer may even be a Muslim. I am not averse to the Muslim community. Let not my Muslim friends misunderstand me. I said that the officer might even be a Muslim because Muslims are against the worship of idols and images. A Swamiji may be performing puja to the images which contain jewellery, diamonds and other precious stones worth several thousands of rupees in some cases. An Assistant Commissioner may come and say: 'I want to inspect the jewellery. You must produce it. Otherwise I will bring a Police officer and take away the jewellery.' Is this not an interference with the religious rituals and practices of the math? I want my friends the Hon. Dr. Rajan and the Hon. Premier to consider this matter. Dr. Rajan may ask: 'Why not produce the jewellery for inspection after the worship is over?' If the images are kept in a box after worship, it is considered sacrilegious to touch them again till the time for worship the same evening or the next day."

MR. PRESIDENT:—"May I point out to the hon. Member that at this stage only the general principles of the Bill can be discussed? It is better that he keeps the details apart from the principles. The main principle is that the Government want to take over the control of Hindu religious and charitable institutions and endowments. As regards details, the hon. Member can influence the Select Committee if he happens to be a member of it."

SRI B. BHIMA RAO:—"I do not want to influence or make any request. I leave it to the Government. Even a gentleman like Mr. V. I. Muniswami Pillay, who was a Minister in the first Congress Ministry, pointed out the glaring effects of a measure like this and said that all people should not be permitted to enter the premises of maths at times of worship and similar occasions. This is a rather extreme measure. I have also got a newspaper cutting to that effect but I do not want to take up the time of the House by reading it."

MR. PRESIDENT:—"I do not know if his statement is approved by the members of his community."

[24th February 1949]

SRI B. BHIMA RAO :—“ I think he is a very dispassionate gentleman of his community. I do not think the members of his community are anxious to enter the premises of private religious institutions like the maths. I don't think any desire for such entry has been expressed by any member of the Harijan community.

“ I will deal with only one or two clauses, as I do not want to take up much of the time of the House. Clause 23 says :

‘ The Commissioner or Assistant Commissioner or any officer or other person deputed by the Commissioner or Assistant Commissioner in this behalf may inspect all movable and immovable property belonging to, and all records, correspondence, plans, accounts and other documents relating to, any religious institution ; and it shall be the duty of the trustee of such institution and all officers and servants working under him, his agent and any person having concern in the administration thereof, to afford all such assistance and facilities as may be necessary or reasonably required in regard to such inspection, and also to produce any such movable property or document for inspection if so required.’

If only my hon. Friends have some consideration for the sentiments and susceptibilities of these orthodox swamis and their disciples, they will realize the effect of a clause such as this. Even among swamis there might be some blacksheep; I do not say that all are quite honest. But some of them are very eminent, pious and revered people. So far as some of the Madwa maths are concerned, their headquarters are all in Mysore State and several of the heads of maths are held in reverence. If there is misappropriation or embezzlement of property, I am one with the Government in taking possession of such property and giving the income from it to the maths. But to say that an officer belonging to any caste or community can enter the premises of any religious institution for inspection is too much.

“ I think the House will sit till 1-30 p.m. (Mr. President : ‘ Yes ’). I will require about fifteen minutes more. I do not want to be elaborate in my remarks.

“ It is said that this Bill is copied from similar laws in Mysore and Travancore. I took the trouble of getting a copy of the law in Mysore. I am not acquainted with any one in Travancore and therefore I could not get a copy of the law in Travancore. The Mysore law is contained in what is called Regulation No. VI of 1913 which has been enacted as the Mysore Religious and Charitable Institutions Act, 1927. The provisions of that Act are similar to those of this Bill. Chapter IV deals with maths and similar institutions. Section 24 occurring in that Chapter says : ‘ The provisions of Chapters II and III shall not apply to maths and other institutions of a similar nature or to the property belonging to them which are in the possession of Matadhipathis or other persons entitled by law or general or particular usage to exercise powers of management or ownership.’ So the general provisions of the law with regard to the management of property

do not apply to maths. Only in very exceptional cases, the Government can interfere under the Mysore Act. The exceptions are given in section 25 which reads as follows :—

‘ The Government may take over the possession and management of the property of any Math or other institution of a similar nature—

(1) when the Matadhipathi or the head of such other institution voluntarily applies for such help and places the institution or its property under the management of the Government;

(2) when he is dead or has left the country and has not been heard of for more than seven years and has not made legal and satisfactory arrangements for the carrying on of the ordinary business of the institution and there is no successor duly appointed, according to law or custom applicable to succession to the office;

(3) when he is a minor without a duly appointed guardian, fit and willing to act as such, or is by reason of physical or mental infirmity unable to manage the affairs of the institution.’

Only in two cases have the Government of Mysore interfered so far. The first case was in 1836 that is a century ago, in regard to the nomination of a young Guru to the Parakalaswami Math, the Math to which I think my friend the Hon. Dr. Rajan belongs or belonged before he became modernised. (The Hon. Dr. T. S. S. Rajan : ‘ I belong to the Ahobilam Math.’) Anyway, it is a very famous math. In regard to the nomination of a young Guru to the Parakalaswami Math in lieu of the one deceased and the payment of the arrears of allowance due to the institution the Commissioner directed in 1836 that a mahazarnama certifying that he was nominated and recognized according to the established usage of the Math should be obtained from the officers of the institution and other respectable persons of the sect and forwarded to his office. The second case was in 1842 when the Chief Commissioner sanctioned the election of a successor to Sri Raghavendra Swami Math at Nanjangud in lieu of the deceased Guru.

“ As I said, the Mysore Act gives power to the Government to interfere only in very exceptional cases. If only the provisions of the Mysore Act had been copied in this Bill, there would have been no necessity for me to make a speech and I could have simply kept quiet.

“ Sir, my Hon. Friend, Dr. Rajan, quoted the opinion of the learned Advocate-General. Of course he also quoted very fully the last portion of his opinion, but that contained a valuable admission that some of the provisions of this Bill transgressed the Constitution as now enacted by the Constituent Assembly, in regard to certain fundamental rights enunciated in Articles 19 and 20 therein. The last portion of the opinion of the learned Advocate-General, which my hon. Friend quoted, runs somewhat as follows : ‘ I am therefore of opinion that the Bill cannot be rejected or condemned entire or wholesale, even after the declaration of fundamental rights. It is quite likely that some of the sections will have to be scrutinized at the Select Committee stage with a view to ascertain what sections fall outside the line and where necessary, other suitable amendments or modifications will have to be devised within the limits of the new Constitution.' So, Sir, the learned Advocate-General is quite conscious that some of the provisions of this Bill offend against those articles which I have quoted just now. I think, Sir, that if the provisions relating to religious practices in maths had been deleted altogether from this Bill, there would not have been any necessity for me to move this amendment of mine. But this Bill gives the Government the power to fix ditams or scale of expenditure in maths and other religious institutions. They can say, 'Why should you have eight mutts in Udipi?' So they can order that all these maths should be clubbed into one, as they had ordered in the case of various private owners of motor vehicles to form themselves into a fleet of 20 buses, because under clause 86 the Government have got the right to make rules to specify in what manner the tenets of a particular religion or sect should be propagated. They may ask, 'Why should you spend so much money on pujas, why should you worship three times a day, why should you waste so much of camphor' and so on? So all such things are certainly interferences with the religious practices and rituals of these Matadhipathies. I would only request my hon. Friends, on the Treasury Benches to ponder over this aspect of the matter and say whether those provisions of this Bill do not offend the sentiments and susceptibilities of several of these maths whose heads are eminent, learned and honourable people. My hon. Friend, Dr. Rajan, said that most of these people are vile and vicious persons. I only wish respectfully to enter my emphatic protest against such an observation against people, whom I hold in reverence. Some of the Swamies and Gurus of the Uttarahi Mutt to which I belong are very pious and learned persons and recite Vedas from morning till night, and to generally characterise them as very bad people, that a majority of them misappropriate and misuse the funds of maths, and to give expressions to such things on the floor of the House, would detract from their dignity and offend people following them and would tend to undermine the sanctity of those personages, who are held in high esteem by the public. But, Sir, I have absolutely no objection whatsoever to the Government taking over and managing the religious endowments attached to mutts, where there are malpractices, misappropriation and mismanagement of their property.

"Sir, in the election manifesto, it was clearly stated that we will have religious neutrality and the New Constitution also says that each community is at liberty to profess and practice its own religion according to its custom. So far as this measure is concerned, my hon. Friend says that he had prepared this Bill when he was Minister in charge of Religious Endowments in 1939. I did not know that, Sir, but I take his statement as correct. None of us knew anything about this Bill till a copy of it was handed over to us last month. It was only then that we scrutinized the provisions of this Bill and I am sure, the public also did not know anything about this measure till then to offer their views on it. If this measure had been before the electorate in 1946, I am sure, Sir, people would not have voted for many of us here, who had been returned to these legislatures. We, legislators were returned on a different programme altogether, namely, the achievement of independence for this country, and to wrest our freedom from the Britisher, who was ruling this country. For that purpose, all were agreed and none had any difference of opinion on that issue. But if it had been mentioned in the election manifesto that a measure like this, interfering with religion and religious institutions, would be introduced, I am sure, we would not have been returned in such large numbers, to these Houses of the Legislature. Sir, I only mention this, because the argument has been advanced by the Hon. Minister in charge of the Bill that he had the party mandate behind him for the introduction of this measure, but I want to know whether we had the mandate of the electorate in this respect.

"Sir, we know the Black-shirts and their movement and they have been preaching irreligion and hatred amongst communities. They are out to see that religion is abolished altogether and the Hon. Minister pleads that by this measure he is going to protect religion from the philosophy of these Black-shirts. But the orthodox opinion in the country is that there is not much difference between the provisions contained in this Bill and the philosophy of the Black-shirt movement. Sir, I should like, in this connection to quote an extract from the speech of the leader of the Black-shirt movement, Mr. E. V. Ramaswami Naicker, which appeared in the Indian Express of the 16th February 1949. Speaking at a meeting held here under the auspices of the Dravida Kazhagam, Mr. E. V. Ramaswami Naicker explained the principles of the Dravida Kazhagam. He said that the Dravida Kazhagam was not a political party and that it was only an organization to remove the differences between man and man in the name of caste and creed. Referring to the Hindu Religious Endowments Bill, he said that the principles of his party were reflected in this measure. Therefore, Sir, I think, the orthodox religious opinion is quite right in saying that the philosophy of the Black-shirts and the principles contained in this measure are almost the same.

"Sir, another gentleman belonging to the same party is also of the same opinion. Speaking on behalf of the Dravida Kazhagam, he said, 'The Kazhagam's attitude differs from that of the Premier in that while the Premier might take the present measure as a full stop, the Kazhagam would put a comma and it would be followed by further measures of a revolutionary character. Temples and religions should have nothing to do with properties. Temple funds and properties were the result of the efforts of thousands of people and so belong to the State'. So, Sir, although the Government may repudiate this statement of the Black-shirt leaders, yet, people are afraid that so far as religion and religious institutions are concerned, the philosophy of both these people is more or less the same and therefore it is but fair that a measure like this, which had not been placed before the electorate in 1946 should now be deferred for consideration till after the new elections are held at the end of this year or next year, making this as an issue in the next election. We never thought that this measure would be brought before the party meeting at this time and its approval sought at such a short notice for its introduction in this session. It has been stated that this measure has been in the archives of the Secretariat for the last eight years and even after the Bill was published for the first time in 1947, it was not brought before the public specifically before January 1949, and therefore it is only fair that the consideration of this measure should be deferred till after the next election takes place.

"With these words, Sir, I move my amendment."

SRI T. PURUSHOTHAM :—"Sir, I support the amendment moved by my hon. Friend, Mr. Bhima Rao."

* SRI K. NATARAJAN :—"Mr. President, Sir, I beg very respectfully to bring before the Hon. Mover of this Bill and the Hon. Premier the following points for their consideration and request them to take them in a spirit of sympathetic criticism and not to treat them in any way as hostile or destructive. Sir, the first principle underlying this Bill, as I understand it, is the general vesting of all the religious institutions, including some of the charities, in the Government, that is to say, they will become, for all practical purposes, departments of Government. The second principle, I suppose, is, that no distinction is sought to be made between mutts and temples. The third is, that though there is no intention on the part of the Government to interfere with religion or with age-long religious practices and this has been made sufficiently clear in the speech of the Hon. Leader of this House, yet a scrutiny of some of the provisions of this Bill amount to an interference in religion and religious rituals, as I shall presently show.

"It may not be the intention or object of the framers of the Bill to interfere with religion but the provisions as they stand have the effect of interfering with religion. I think the application of the cypres doctrine as understood by decisions of courts is very much deviated from in this case to the detriment of the religious institutions themselves. This Bill does not take into consideration the remedies that are open under the present Act. They introduce radical changes which are not in consonance with the spirit of the intentions of the founders of the several maths. The remedy which they want to introduce is worse than the disease in general. Then, Sir, there must be a statutory enumeration of the qualifications of the persons who are to be appointed as Commissioners, Deputy Commissioners and Assistant Commissioners and it will not be quite sufficient to simply say that they must profess the Hindu religion. I shall therefore confine myself as far as I can to the elaboration of these points briefly.

24th February 1949] [Sri K. Natarajan]

"I shall first take the most important point, namely, the vesting of the management in the Government. Originally no doubt there was interference by the Government in religion, even in 1817-18. I fully concede that. Sometime afterwards owing to the influence of the missionaries the Government wanted not to interfere as they professed religious neutrality. Again they tried to interfere with these institutions gradually and the Act of 1863 came in. Later they introduced the temple committees in the Raja of Panagal's Act. Then in the Select Committee which considered that Act they wanted the appointment of a Board of Commissioners with a term of office and with certain qualifications to exercise their powers of supervision over the temple committees. My endeavour is only to show that if at all there are any defects in the present system of management, there is a case for the reintroduction of the temple committees and more effective control by the Board of Commissioners with reference to the functions of the temple committees and not for the wholesale transfer and handing over and vesting of all these properties in the Government as an institution. I have been very carefully reading the speech of the Hon. the Premier in the Legislative Assembly and the statement of all the instances of misappropriation, etc. I shall come to them. When you straightway look into the list of misappropriations which have been enumerated you will see that various remedies have been referred to as having been adopted, namely, scheme settled, trustees removed, notification made, amount recovered, reported to Government, criminal proceedings lodged, etc., etc. Probably I might have overlooked one or two items. Some of the items are related to the same kind of institution and the misdeeds come under different heads. This catalogue is very fairly and well prepared and the instances refer to action taken under the present Act. I request the Hon. the Mover and the Hon. the Premier to say whether the actions that have been taken have not served the purpose. Even for such drastic remedies like the removal of a trustee there is provision in the Act. So far as the Thiruvaduthurai math is concerned, which is one of the instances quoted, I know that a scheme has been settled though the matathipathi contended that that was not a public trust and section 92 would not apply. In all these cases either notifications have been issued or schemes have been settled. And as regards the Pandanallur case there is a scheme settled in the Sub-Court and proceedings are pending. I do not want to dwell in detail and take up the time of the House over all these minute matters. I request the Hon. the Mover of the Bill as well as the Hon. the Premier to pause a while and find out in what respect these remedies have been found useless. I would rather put it the other way. The persons who are responsible for the superintendence of the institutions, namely, the Board of Commissioners and their subordinates have not been functioning properly and proper check has not been exercised. That is why these things have arisen and we are in this sorry state of affairs and not because there is any lacuna in the present Act as it stands.

[Sri K. Natarajan] [24th February 1949]

"As regards temples and maths my hon. Friend, Mr. Dhima Rao, anticipated me. The Hon. the Premier has in his speech before the Legislative Assembly referred to the Native States having interfered and he instanced the Cochin Regulation, the Travancore Regulation, the Mysore Regulation and the Pudukottah Regulation. I shall leave the Pudukottah Regulation out of account and take Cochin, Travancore and Mysore Regulations. I shall quote from this Book, entitled Ganapathi Iyer's Statute Law on Religious Endowments. This deals with the Regulation of 1913 by the Mysore Government as amended by the Regulation of 1927. I shall only place before the House the way in which they distinguish between the trustees of the temples, i.e., muzarai and institutions which are not temples. This is what they say. No doubt there the Government is the chief controlling authority. But nowhere do I find that the management is vested in them. The Commissioner who is appointed there as the Muzara Commissioner is invested with the duties and powers of appeal, supervision and control. Even with regard to temples, if they are dissatisfied the Government may appoint dharma darsis, corresponding to trustees, and nazaranams, i.e., the name of the person selected for mosques. The persons are selected for a term of office and there is a regulation about their powers. Another provision is, that in addition to the dharma darsis they may appoint a committee of persons chosen by election or otherwise for the management of the muzarai institution. In certain cases they may transfer the authority to local bodies. Then one important provision, namely, section 11 states that suits by muzarais may be brought in the civil courts. That is Chapter II. Chapter III deals with religious and charitable institutions. In the case of the ordinary institutions also there are two classes, one if a man becomes insane, or if a man goes away from the Mysore State or becomes insolvent and other similar contingencies occur, then the Government takes over them. But if there is a case of gross mismanagement first they must institute an enquiry in respect of that temple with the sanction of the Government and then only take the management under the Government and frame a scheme and there is a suit provided for at the instance of the aggrieved party. That is so far as muzarai institutions are concerned. Then under section 20 the application of the cypres doctrine comes in only in the case of the failure of a whole or part of the muzarai officer in passing a scheme for the object of a similar nature. I refer to Chapters II and III and these chapters refer to ordinary muzarai institutions which correspond to our temples. When they come to the maths, the Hon. the President will see that there is a distinction made between the maths and the temples. Clauses 20 and 29 of the Mysore Regulations should be taken. There they say that the application of the cypres doctrine should not be used for any extraneous purpose as is mentioned in the present Bill but for the purpose of spreading religious instruction according to the tenets of the math. What the Mysore Regulation says is that the funds of that math cannot be used for other purposes but only for the purpose of spreading the tenets of that particular religion. What we find here is that section 92 has been repealed and there is no distinction made between maths and temples. There is a distinction between the maths and the temples which cannot be ignored. In the temples the deity is vested with the property; in the maths the beneficiary persons are the owners and the matathipathis are only in the nature of trustees but the temple trustees are really trustees. Then, Sir, the object of a temple is worship and the object of a math is the propagation of the particular tenets of that particular religion. Then, the maths have got so many disciples and the disciples are interested in the maths and in the temples the public in general are interested. These are the distinctions that should be observed between the maths and the temples. Now we must come to Chapter IV of Mysore Regulation. The provisions of Chapters II and III will not apply to maths.

"The provisions in Chapter IV are rather important. Section 24 of Chapter IV states that the provisions of Chapters II and III shall not apply to maths and other institutions of a similar nature or to the property belonging to them which are in the possession of matathipathis or other persons entitled by law or general or particular usage to exercise powers of management or ownership. Section 25 says that the Government can take over the possession and management when the madathipathi, etc., voluntarily applies for such help and places the institution or its property under the management of the Government. Such help is given when he is dead or has left the country or when he is a minor and the Regulation further says that such management shall cease on the termination of any period of agreement or when a competent successor is appointed or other disqualifications are removed. As regards misappropriation it says: 'When on complaint made or information furnished in writing by disciples or other persons interested in any math or other similar institution, the Government has reason to believe that the matathipathi or, etc., has been grossly mismanaging the property of the institution or is attempting to alienate the whole or any part of such property for improper purposes, the Government may order an enquiry by a committee of not less than three persons, one at least of whom shall, whenever possible, be a disciple of or a person interested in the math or other institution, as the case may be, provided he is not a whole-time servant of the Government.' I want to know whether there is such a provision made in the present Bill. I want to impress this upon the attention of the Hon. the Premier and the Hon. the Leader of the House. Therefore I say that we must make a distinction.

"Then what about the gentlemen who are to be appointed Commissioners, etc. No qualifications are given. The Hon. the President will be pleased to see that in the present Act there are provisions giving the qualifications. But he holds office only for four years, and he is liable to be removed after that period. Take the case of an Assistant Commissioner. We have now a fairly good experience of the Assistant Commissioners. It is stated very often and I believe it is true that many of these people in the lower ranks appointed by the Board are really persons who have absolutely no faith in religion. They are iconoclasts."

[Sri K. Natarajan] [24th February 1949]

MR. PRESIDENT:—"The hon. Member can continue his speech after lunch. The House will now rise and meet at 2-30 p.m."

The House adjourned for lunch.

(After lunch—2-30 p.m.)

* SRI K. NATARAJAN:—"Mr. President, Sir, as regards the interference with the ritual, I invite the attention of the Hon. Minister to clauses 15, 20, 21, 41 and 43 of the present Bill. These clauses will give the Commissioner or the persons to whom powers are delegated the power to interfere with the dittam and say what are the necessary rituals to be performed, and what ceremonies should be adhered to. All this interference may not be in consonance with the usage of the institution. For example, in Saiva Siddhanta maths, there is what is called Resha manthram, athvartha puja, Guru puja and Putnapravesam. I am one of those who think that Putnapravesam is a waste. It costs Rs. 2,000. People believe that the Pandarasannidhi himself is God, and pay obeisance to him. Similarly, when people come to be initiated as disciples, there are certain ceremonies to be performed. This costs money. From one point of view of an advanced Hindu, saturated with modern ideas, it may not at all be a necessary function. The dittam may be curtailed. But in the usage of the institution, this dittam should not be curtailed. There are other usages in maths. In some maths the disciples appoint their future head, and in others, the head of the math nominates a Chinna Pandarasannidhi. There are other usages in institutions like the Ahobila math. With reference to appointments, there are certain rituals to be performed. If it is left to the Commissioner or Assistant Commissioner to interfere and judge for himself to what extent such a ritual is to be performed, he may as well say why not this coming in and going out be written on a piece of paper. The Mover of the Bill has to consider whether this would not mean interference with the dittam and ritual of the institution.

"As regards the propagation of the tenets of religion, there are the Tiruvaduthurai, Dharmapuram and other Saiva Siddhanta maths. They have got branches throughout the Presidency. It may be asked 'why should you have so many branches and why should you incur expenditure on them.' The Commissioner and the Assistant Commissioner and the persons in charge may have different views about these branches. In all these cases, if the

Commissioner is given power to interfere in the ritual, dittam and ceremonies, it will be a very dangerous thing. It will mean that the person concerned is taking upon himself the functions of the matathipathi.

"Take temples. In temples there is the Brahmothsavam. There is a festival on the last day of which a chariot or car is dragged round the streets. I know in Tanjore there is this chariot festival. One gentleman who happened to be in charge of this festival thought 'what is this chariot; thousand people dragging the car; it is a waste of time, money and energy.' But, Sir, the people rebelled against him. This enraged the gentleman. (Interruption by the Hon. Sri K. Madhava Menon.) All these things may appear differently to different people. It is not a case where the sentiment of the people can be ignored and handed over to a person who simply professes Hindu religion. He must have a grounding in the tenets of Hindu religion.

"One more point, Sir. There was a very wholesome provision in the old Act. There is a provision in section 3 for the exemption of certain institutions. I think the purpose of this legislation may very well be achieved by incorporating that section in this Bill. Section 3 of the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act says:

'3. (a) The Provincial Government may, after consulting the Board, exempt any such endowment from the operation of all or any of the provisions of this Act or vary, alter or cancel such exemption.

(b) The Provincial Government may, by notification, extend to Jain religious endowments the provisions of this Act and of any rules framed thereunder, and may declare such extension to be subject to such restrictions and modifications as they think fit.'

If this section is re-enacted in the present Bill, it will serve two purposes. Sir, there is the Kamakoti Peetam at Kumbakonam. I do not think anyone can boldly say anything against it. I speak without any fear of contradiction. Why this Act should be made applicable to that mutt? If you exempt this mutt, two consequences will follow. Other matathipathis will see that they are exempted. They will follow the example. If the person who is exempted does not fare well and becomes loose, or does not manage the mutt properly, the exemption may be cancelled. This will conduce to the improvement of the institution without any interference from Government. I believe one of the previous Presidents of the Endowments Board has written an article that in the case of mutts the disciples or advisory bodies must be given some prominence, and they should be given the chance to suggest suitable measures for the better management of the mutts. No sane man will say that there are no defects in our temples. The instances given by the Hon. Premier are small when compared with the number of institutions. Perhaps the defects have not yet come to light. I do not want to say that instances are very few, and therefore there is no need for legislation. Even if there are only a few instances, have the necessary legislation. But please take care to see that the legislation is such as will remedy the disease. Do not launch upon the scheme of giving some person who simply professes Hindu religion the power of absolute interference with the Matathipathi. Let it not be said that a Commissioner who is a disciple of a Matathipathi goes to pay his salutations with a gentleman who is no less than a Sub-Inspector in rank. What will be the attitude of that gentleman? He will have to prostrate before the man. He will sometimes accompany the Sub-Inspector. Everybody in society has some dignity and prestige to maintain. Matathipathis are entitled to certain respect just as we and the Hon. Ministers are entitled to respect. Let it not be said that we undermine all the fundamental and accepted principles of society and introduce hasty legislation. Pause for a while, and think whether the object which you want to achieve cannot be achieved by less Draconian methods. Is there any urgency about this measure? Is there not enough provision in the previous Act for setting right things? On a general comprehensive survey of all the institutions, am I not right in saying that they have decidedly improved for the better? Therefore, I respectfully bring to the notice of the Hon. Premier and the Hon. Dr. Rajan to see that the Bill is modified that the Bill is not subject to other faults pointed out by legal pandits. We are for the present to be guided by our learned Advocate-General, and we must take his word even though the previous learned Advocates-General may have given a different opinion. Whatever it is, he himself, as Mr. Bhima Rao pointed out, has stated that there is a difference between mutts and temples. All the clauses of the Bill have to be modified to suit the difference between temples and mutts. He has also pointed out that some clauses go too far. Therefore, I suggest that if the Hon. Premier thinks that he cannot wait, and if the hon. Leader of the House thinks that he cannot wait—having waited for so many years already—they should at any rate see that this Act is not Draconian, not unduly severe and does not undermine the prestige of the Matathipathis, Gurus and trustees. Reconstitute the temple committees which have been taken away by the Act of 1944. Reconstitute control by the Board of Commissioners. Make them serve better. Introduce stricter control over their acts and find out whether it is not the inefficiency of the Board of Commissioners that has led to this state of affairs. See whether there is any necessity for giving such autocratic powers to a Commissioner or Deputy Commissioner who may not see eye to eye with the temple trustees or the Matathipathis in every aspect of management."

* SRI K. VENKATASWAMI NAYUDU :—“ Mr. President, Sir, when I rise to speak on this subject, it is with a certain trepidation that we are treading on a very difficult subject. This Government is generally secular in nature. Is it entitled to legislate on religion? That is the question that is before us. This question has been agitating the orthodox men, legal pandits and other people. But I wish to say that it has been all along the duty of the Government to rectify matters in any sphere of administration whenever it goes wrong. Now, we find that all is not well with our religious institutions. We find that the temple managements are not very good. The archakas are not doing their duties properly. For everything we want some qualification. To be a lawyer we want one to be a B.L., to be a doctor one should be a M.B.B.S., to be an Engineer one should be a B.E., but to be an archaka he should have 'nil' qualification! This is a very important point. A man who caters to our spiritual needs is a man who is only the son of his father. He has no other qualification. Whatever disqualifications he has, still he is forced to continue, and he should be allowed to continue, because that is the law to-day. This has very much deteriorated the condition of our temples.

“ Secondly, we come to the purohita. In our marriages, all big people, people with hearts full of blessings are present. In marriages, the primary functionary is the purohita. But, he does not know how to repeat the 'Manthrams'. He has no school; he has no wherewithal to say those 'Manthrams' in the right manner. He says something which he does not understand nor does he learn anything. Similarly, I am sorry to say that the matathipathis for whom we have such great regard have not kept up their position. They are very responsible people. They have got a very high duty to perform to the people. The God in the temple does not speak. But, this God is expected to speak and he must speak well. But we find to our great disappointment and sorrow that the matathipathis are not doing their duty properly. That is because, I think, they are so much engrossed with money matters that they are unable to attend to the spiritual needs of the people. I think we will be doing a great service to them if we take away from them the management of the trusts and allow them to concentrate on the side of religion. Then, we see that the various people who have to cater to the needs of our spirituality have not been able to do well. That is why we feel that some agency must come to help us. For a long time, the Government has been interfering with religious institutions. I do not want to repeat what the Hon. the Leader of the House said with regard to the various subjects in which Government interfered; if such interference was necessary, then it must interfere. I am not for Government interference at all stages. Government must give such help as is necessary. Sometimes, we quarrel in temples and the policeman comes there to conduct the temple festivals. Therefore, Government interference has been there when such interference was necessary.

“ Sir, the first Endowments Bill that was introduced twenty years ago by the late Raja of Panagal was the first act of a popular Ministry to see that these religious endowments are managed properly. But, that Board has not sufficient powers, and the Endowments Act, which is in force to-day, is very inadequate to meet the needs of the people. That is why we find it necessary to give better powers to Government which will enable the supervision and administration of temples in a better manner. That is why I strongly recommend that Government authority should take over the responsibility. Now, it is the people's Government and it is necessary to see that our charities, our temples and mutts and our trust properties are safeguarded and efficient supervision made. Such a supervision can come only when there is a Government which is taking the fullest responsibility. Only such a Government can see that supervision is fairly well-conducted. Of course, the Board is there. The Commissioners come and go every five years. But, here, the Government department will always be responsible and they will see that even if a Commissioner is not conducting himself properly, he may be changed. Therefore, I feel very sincerely that Government control will be very good for the management of these temples.

"Then, what can Government do? Government is taking over a very grave responsibility. I also feel diffident because we do not know what will be the composition of the Government. Many people are enthusiastic about this Bill. I am not here to question their motives, but I feel that some people have in their minds that there is so much treasure in the temples and that this treasure may be utilized for various purposes. If that is so, I fear that the secular doctrines will prevail and that the better administration of religious institutions will not be met and then, it may be that more importance may be given to the secular aspect than to the religious aspect by the Secular Government. This is a fear which I want to guard against. But, I do not feel that we are going in for a bad Government. As it is, we have got to do our duty in the various aspects of life and if the Government finds that these religious endowments are not properly managed, it is their duty to see that they are properly managed. If, in doing so, they overstep their limits, it would mean ruin. We should warn ourselves against doing that. It is very necessary that every pie of this money should be utilized for the purposes for which they are entrusted. I can tell you that there are many things which we can do for temples. The Board says that it cannot do anything beyond the Act. So, the Board has done nothing beyond making some arrangements for some sort of supervision, even though there is a lot of money. I understand that there is a very good surplus fund with the Board which can be properly utilized. But, it is utilized only for giving more salaries and more allowances and not for any religious purpose. There are thousands of temples which are in ruins. There are thousands of temples which, if not attended to to-day, will go to ruins. Also many beautiful works of art are in ruins. There is a temple near Tirupathi called Mangapuram. The temple is almost in ruins. If you do not spend a few lakhs, those beautiful works of art will disappear for all time. Who is going to do it? The Archaeological department of the Government must do it. Will they do it? They cannot spend so much money. If the surplus fund with the Board is utilized for such a purpose, it will be a very good thing. In this way, they can help to preserve the architecture which the temples in South India possess."

24th February 1949]

MR. PRESIDENT:—"The hon. Member is now the President of the Tirupathi Devasthanam Committee. I know it refused to do anything for the Mangapuram temple before he became President. Has the hon. Member revised that decision?"

THE HON. DR. T. S. S. RAJAN:—"The hon. Member wants Government to take up the matter."

* SRI K. VENKATASWAMI NAYUDU:—"The question came up before the Temple Committee also. The question was why we should do it when the Government Archaeological Department is in possession of it. They found it necessary to preserve that art, and it was thought that it is Government's primary duty to take over this matter. If Government ask for some contribution, I think the Tirupathi Devasthanam authorities will only be too glad to give such amount as they think necessary."

MR. PRESIDENT:—"I only wanted to get that statement from the hon. Member."

* SRI K. VENKATASWAMI NAYUDU:—"Coming to that subject of Tirupathi, I can tell the House that the Tirupathi Devasthanam earns about 17 lakhs of rupees as hundis. Out of this, only four lakhs are utilized for temple purposes and the other thirteen lakhs are taken away for other purposes. We do not grudge it. But, we find sometimes that the temple funds are not made available for religious purposes. That is exactly the fear which some orthodox people have got in their minds. They fear that once this Government is allowed to meddle with temple affairs, they will take away the money because Government feel and also some people feel, and rightly so, that industries and education are more important matters than these temples, and wherever money can be found it should be diverted for these purposes which in their opinion are very good. We have no objection. For instance, Tirupathi Devasthanam gives thirteen lakhs of rupees to be spent on education, for the maintenance of the Arts College and so on. Of course they are very good purposes. But the orthodox man and the religiously minded man think that this money should be spent in making the temple more attractive. Then there is also this great fear of which Sri Bhima Rao spoke. The black-shirts are supporting this Bill. Then, comes the natural fear as to why they are so enthusiastic about this Bill. It is because, they feel—and that is also the fear of the orthodox people—that these monies will be available for other purposes. The orthodox people feel that as the temples are in ruins, they must be renovated and that they must be made more attractive. Now people are drifting away from spiritual ideals and Government should not allow this drift to go on because we find that our younger generation are going away from the temples. Sir, we must make these temples attractive; then only we will be really doing the work that we must do with regard to these temples."

"Then, Sir, I think this is the best time when we can attempt to bring a legislation of this kind. We have got a very pious gentleman in our Premier, who out of the best motives, has started to do this work. If you do not do this now, some time later it will be very difficult to do and there may be a sweep. We have already allowed these things to drift for such a long time. We must take courage in our hands and must pull together and see that the temples are made more attractive, that temple mounds are properly utilized and that modern currents of thought are taken into consideration.

Now, Sir, people are going away from temples and they are organizing bhajanas and other things. There is the Ramana Ashramam and there is also the Ramakrishna Mission which is doing wonderful work. Similarly, there is the Arambado Ashram. These new institutions have come up because the old institutions and the old matathipathis have not been able to attract people. What is wrong with these old matathipathis and these old institutions? How can we make them more attractive as the media of spirituality? I feel, Sir, that the matathipathis have not done much to raise the spiritual status of this country. Mahatma Gandhi with his constructive programme of removal of untouchability has done much to raise the spiritual status of this country through his 'Bhajan'. He began in prayers and he died in prayers. The last message which Mahatma Gandhi has given is for the spiritual uplift of the country and for the spiritual leadership of the country. If we as legislators, as people who are responsible for the better government of this country, do not lay our foundation on this spirituality of Mahatma Gandhi, we are not really doing what Mahatma Gandhi has asked us to do. As a legislator myself, I feel that we have a great and important task to do, I am afraid of the magnitude of the work which this involves, but I hope that with God's blessings we will be able to do something good, something great. This is one of the great pieces of legislation which we have undertaken and I do not think either the zamindari legislation or any other piece of legislation is so great and important for the benefit of the humanity of this country as this. I am sorry that on this occasion I miss a very great friend of mine, Mr. Muthuranga Mudaliyar. He is not here amidst us now and I miss him very much. I used to see him sitting there and he promised that on this measure he would make a wonderful speech. The last occasion on which I heard him speak was at the Party meeting. He was so enthusiastic about it that he said, 'are you going to allow the existing Act to continue? Can you tolerate this state of affairs?' This is what he said. We must have this Bill passed or do something better. We cannot allow these things to go on. He spoke in this strain and said that this is the proper stage to protect the temples and maths against decline due to malpractices. He gave his fullest support to this measure because he believed sincerely that such a measure was necessary. Unfortunately, he is not here with us now, though his spirit is here. He said that he would fight to the last and see that this Bill is made as good as possible. Then, Sir, when I told him that he must be on the Select Committee, he said, 'who will put me on it.' That shows the anxiety he had to see that the Bill is supported by the House.

"Mr. President, Sir, I do not want to take up any more of the time of the House except to say that on all sides of the House there is enthusiasm for the Bill. I am very happy that the Opposition does not choose to oppose the Bill and that is indeed a very great help."

MR. PRESIDENT:—"It is only opposition to the motion and not to the Bill."

* SRI K. VENKATASWAMI NAYUDU:—"The fact that there is no opposition to-day is really a good gesture on the part of the Opposition. So, let us all put our hands to the wheel and see that we do this good piece of work so that our temples are restored to their former great glory."

SRI S. B. ADITYAN:—“Sir, the amendment of the hon. Mr. Bhima Rao seems to imply that this Bill has not got the support of the public. With due respect to the hon. Member I wish to point out that he is entirely mistaken in his view. Some of us have addressed many public meetings after the introduction of this Bill and I know that the popular support and enthusiasm were such as were not seen for the last many years. In fact the support from the masses is such as we have not come across after the attainment of Independence. I may say that Congressmen have not been active for the last 14 years in holding public meetings. After this Bill was published in the Gazette, we have been in the foreground and address public meetings and feel the pulse of the people in regard to this measure. They are fully and thoroughly in support of it. Their enthusiasm and applause which they gave at the meetings are sure indication of their support to it. There is no lack of support as has been expressed in some of the newspapers. I would ask my hon. Friend, Mr. Bhima Rao, to go back to his own town and organize public meetings to know what the public feel in regard to this Bill.

of the people in regard to this measure. They are fully and thoroughly in support of it. Their enthusiasm and applause which they gave at the meetings are sure indication of their support to it. There is no lack of support as has been expressed in some of the newspapers. I would ask my hon. Friend, Mr. Bhima Rao, to go back to his own town and organize public meetings to know what the public feel in regard to this Bill.

“Again, Sir, it has been remarked that this Bill has been brought forward in a hurry. I am afraid that that statement is made without going into the history of the matter. As you are aware, an Act has been in the Statute Book for the last 22 years and now after working that Act for the last two decades, we have been able to find certain defects in its working and it is in order to rectify those defects that this Bill has been brought forward.

“The important feature of this reform is that it is intended to introduce control over Matathipathis. When the original Bill, the Hindu Religious Endowments Bill of 1926, was brought in, the maths and those interested in them raised opposition to it and they made a hue and cry and invoked the Proclamation of Queen Victoria. They succeeded to a great extent and the result was the maths were omitted from that Act. The main feature of the present Bill is to bring in a certain measure of control over the maths and it is my humble opinion that even the measure of control proposed in the Bill is quite inadequate to meet the situation.

“Sir, without going in great detail into the various provisions of the Bill I would like to mention one or two sections, sections 39 to 42 which deal with the control of maths.”

MR. PRESIDENT:—“May I suggest to the hon. Member that he can deal with the details later, but now it is sufficient if he agrees with the principles. It is likely he may also be on the Joint Select Committee.”

* SRI S. B. ADITYAN:—“I will only take a few minutes more.”

MR. PRESIDENT:—“It is enough if the hon. Member says that he agrees with the principles of the Bill.”

* SRI S. B. ADITYAN:—“Yes, Sir. I wish to point out that the present measure is insufficient because what is suggested in the Bill is, that the Government will not have the power to remove any matathipathi. Supposing a trustee of a math is found to be insane or found to have been convicted of moral turpitude, even in such cases the Government have not got the power to remove him. My submission is that the Government should take adequate powers than what they have under the Act so that even in cases where a trustee of a math is convicted of moral turpitude, he could be removed without going to court. Under the Bill in such cases, the Government have to go to a court and ask for an order for the removal of the trustee of the math concerned.

[Sri S. B. Adityan] [24th February 1949]

"Now, another provision which is sought to be made in the Bill is in regard to dittam or estimate of expenditure. When a trustee of a math prepares a budget, it is now proposed to take powers to alter it only in cases where the dittam is at variance with the usage. I submit that the Government should have power to alter the dittam even in other cases where it is inconsistent with modern ideas.

"Sir, we see in clause 42 that the manager of a mutt who will be appointed again by the trustee of a mutt will have only secular powers. The particular section uses the word 'secular'. A great deal has been said about secular State. In fact, I understand that the main plank of the opposition to this Bill is that our state is a secular State and it is not within the capacity of a secular State to bring forward a Bill of this nature. Whether it is consistent or not with the status of a secular State, depends on the meaning attributed to the word 'secular'. The Hon. Premier, who is really the head of the administration of our Province, has stated in the other House, what is meant by 'secular State'. He has definitely stated that it does not mean a licence to misappropriate temple funds. If anyone is competent to define a 'secular State', I submit, he is Pandit Nehru. Three days after the Premier of our Province had spoken in the Legislative Assembly about what is meant by a 'secular State', the Prime Minister of India spoke on the secular character of the State and this is what he said on the 13th of February. He said: 'The secular character of the Indian State must be maintained at all costs'. 'This did not mean that we were to be irreligious or a nation of atheists. A secular State only meant that every individual in it was free to profess any faith he chose and no disability should rest on him by reason of his faith.' Now, that is the description of a secular State as given by the Prime Minister. And I ask, Sir, who is more competent to define the meaning of the secular State than the Architect of the Constitution of India. I mean the Prime Minister, Pandit Nehru. So, it is high time there is an end to the discussion of a secular State because that has been well defined and settled; and it is settled once for all by the definition given by the Prime Minister of India, and let there be no further opposition based on the ground that the Bill is beyond the capacity of the State or against the character of the State.

"Sir, another point was raised about the religious rites and rituals. This Bill very wisely prevents people going to courts on a matter of mere ritual or ceremony. We have seen enough of litigation going on with regard to mere matters of rituals and ceremonies. It is only a few days ago the High Court gave judgment on a matter between two sets of priests or Pandarams about certain rites connected with Palni temple. Therefore, I say, it is high time that there is an end to unnecessary litigation and it would be much better if the Commissioner who is bound to be a Hindu, disposes of the disputes relating to rituals and ceremonies rather than allow them to be carried to the High Courts or Federal Courts. I support the Bill and oppose the amendment."

24th February 1949] [Sri S. B. Adityan]

* SRI D. KRISHNAMURTHI:—"Mr. President, I support the introduction of this Bill and oppose the motion moved by the hon. Sri Bhima Rao. This Bill, containing about 93 clauses, is an attempt to provincialize the administration of religious and charitable institutions of this Province and to codify the law as it exists to-day. It repeals the old Hindu Religious Endowments Act, the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanam Act and other subsequent amendments. This Bill goes a step further and brings under its purview mutts which have been till to-day more or less enjoying a privileged position. Some years back, one of the members of the old Legislative Council brought forward, what is called, a Mutt Bill. That Bill went to the Select Committee and there was a lot of hue and cry from various heads of religious institutions and the then Government dropped that Bill in 1935 or 1936. Subsequently no steps have been taken to regularize and preserve the endowments connected with mutts. It has been found from experience that where the administration of these religious institutions has been undertaken by the Religious Endowments Board, certain powers are found to be absolutely necessary to make the administration more efficacious and effective. The old Act gives enormous powers to courts to interfere with the decision of the Board. The Board is a specialized body created to perform certain functions but its decisions have often been flouted. Naturally, this kind of litigation between the Board and a religious institution may prolong for a long time with the result that no improvement can be effected in this sphere. In this connexion, I would just like to draw the attention of this House to the decision of the Madras High Court quoted by me some years ago in the old Legislative Council while moving an amendment to the old Act."

MR. PRESIDENT:—"I thought you were going to narrate your experiences."

SRI D. KRISHNAMURTHI:—"On the 13th October 1934, in a judgment of the Madras High Court, delivered by the Hon. the Chief Justice and Justice King, they said:

'We cannot leave this case without saying that it is a glaring example of protracted litigation. The suit was filed in 1918 and in 1932, fourteen years afterwards, the issue as to its maintainability was first decided. This is nothing short of a scandal. The suit must now be disposed of without further delay.'

It had taken practically fourteen years to decide the preliminary point whether the suit is maintainable in law or not. Sir, attempts made to put down litigation under the present Act have been found to be totally inadequate. The vested interests behind mutts always seek the aid of law and indulge in protracted litigations. Therefore, something must be done to protect these religious institutions from going to rack and ruin. This Bill is an attempt just to regularize and systematize the administration. Government do not want to interfere in the day-to-day administration or the religious worship or the particular thought which a religious institution is promoting for the welfare of the people. The Hon. Dr. Rajan, when introducing the Bill, gave an assurance that there would be absolutely no interference in matters purely religious or particularly sectarian. This Government is a popular Government and they will try to cater to the public taste with strict neutrality and in a spirit of just impartiality. This legislation is long overdue. The Board has been attempting to get this enactment placed on the Statute Book for some years past but they could not succeed owing to obvious difficulties. Now the Government have felt the need for this measure and I sincerely wish that this Bill will soon be enacted into law with the necessary precautions and safeguards incorporated in it. Even in the Select Committee stage, there should be no change in the main principle of the Bill, viz., the provincialization of the administration of religious and charitable institutions. The unnecessary interference of courts should be prevented and provisions in the Bill relating thereto need careful examination. I am very glad that this Government have taken up this step which is long overdue and I wish that the Government will succeed in this attempt."

* THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, I am rather surprised at the so-called amendment moved by Mr. Bhima Rao. He wants, in his amendment, to defer this legislation 'till after fresh elections are held after issuing a fresh election manifesto, making the proposed legislation an issue therein and after obtaining the verdict of the electorate.' This only shows a little bit of ignorance on his part of what the public feel on this Bill. As Mr. Adityan has rightly pointed out, I say it is wrong to say that this measure has no popular support. On the other hand public meetings have to be held to oppose the Bill under police protection. What does this show? This only shows that the public feeling is overwhelmingly in favour of this Bill. It is equally wrong to say that the Bill interferes with religion and religious institutions and that the Congress election manifesto does not give the Government necessary sanction to bring forward this measure. Sir, neither the Congress election manifesto nor the provisions of the New Constitution gives the right to anybody to improperly manage the properties belonging to religious institutions. We should not confuse the question of management of religious institutions with the question of religious practices. We must try to draw a line as to where religion ends and where the secular aspect of religion begins. This Bill is an attempt to consolidate the governance, administration and regulation of religious institutions and does not go against the fundamental rights guaranteed in the proposed New Constitution. If there are secular activities associated with religious practices, the Government have to legislate for them also.

or " Mr. Bhima Rao was at pains to say that this Bill contravenes the fundamental rights guaranteed in the New Constitution. But, Sir, there is nothing in this Bill which contravenes the fundamental rights. What are the fundamental rights guaranteed in the new Constitution? The one fundamental right is that a citizen can follow his own faith without compulsion from outside. I cannot certainly call upon Mrs. Mona Hensman to become a Hindu much against her will. She has got every right to continue to be a Christian and I have got every right to continue to be a Hindu. Therefore, there is nothing in this Bill to affect that fundamental right. This Bill is primarily intended to provide better administration, governance and regulation of Hindu religious and charitable institutions.

" Sir, in this connexion I should like to invite the attention of hon. Members to item 34 in List II of the Provincial Legislative List under the Seventh Schedule of the Government of India Act 1935, in which specific mention has been made of 'charities and charitable institutions; charitable and religious endowments', and I want Members particularly to note the words 'religious endowments' therein. This is the Act under which we are now working and under this Act the Provincial Legislature is entitled to legislate on these matters. Even in the present Draft Constitution in List II—State List, Item 43, the subject 'religious institutions' has been included specifically which it had not found a place in the present Government of India Act, 1935. So we can legislate on charities and religious institutions that are in the Province. There is no need to confuse things.

" Sir, much was said about clauses 19 and 20 of the Draft Constitution which have been passed. If we are to logically proceed on the argument of Mr. Bhima Rao, then the position will be that the Contract Act shall not apply. As regards properties of religious institutions, clause 20 of the Fundamental Rights gives power. Clause 19 gives freedom of conscience and the right freely to profess, practise and propagate religion. There is no use simply saying that clauses 19 and 20 give certain fundamental rights. We must see really what they are. I will now read the clause in full:—

'Subject to public order, morality and health and to the other provisions of this Part, all persons are equally entitled to freedom of conscience and the right freely to profess, practice and propagate religion.'

This is the fundamental right given, and then there is the Exception to the rule which runs thus:—

'Nothing in this Article shall affect the operation of any existing law or preclude the State from making any law.

(a) regulating or restricting any economic, financial, political or other secular activity which may be associated with religious practices.'

So, it is evident that we can legislate. The Fundamental Rights do not prevent our right. And the second exception is for social welfare and reform or for throwing open Hindu religious institutions of a public character to any class or section of Hindus. Then, clause 20 gives freedom to manage religious affairs and to own, acquire and administer properties for religious or charitable purposes. So, that is the law and we are within our rights in

So, it is evident that we can legislate. The Fundamental Rights do not prevent our right. And the second exception is for social welfare and reform or for throwing open Hindu religious institutions of a public character to any class or section of Hindus. Then, clause 20 gives freedom to manage religious affairs and to own, acquire and administer properties for religious or charitable purposes. So, that is the law and we are within our rights in bringing this Bill. If that is not so, we will come to a ridiculous conclusion that the Contract Act and the Transfer of Property Act will not apply to this Province.

"One point made out by Mr. Natarajan was that we are taking power in this Bill empowering the Commissioner to prescribe rituals in temples. That is not the fact. It is wrong to say so. I will refer the hon. Member to clause 15. From it it will be seen that he is given only the general superintendence of all religious institutions and endowments. He has only to see to the proper management of the secular affairs of religious institutions and to the due performance of rituals, ceremonies and other religious observances therein. I am only citing one example, though there are several such instances. The section does not give the Commissioner power to prescribe what particular mantrams should be spoken by the Archaka or what Agama or Sutra should be uttered by the Archaka. It only gives him the right to see to the due performance of rituals. Suppose an Archaka refuses to perform rituals, as things happened in Malabar in a particular case. There, after the passing of the Temple Entry Act, the Archaka refused to perform the rituals, as untouchables had entered the temple. Thereupon the trustee closed the temple, declaring that he did not want anybody to enter the temple. In such a case it is the duty of the Commissioner to see to the due performance of rituals. I can quote to the House some sections in the Bill showing that power is taken only to manage religious affairs and to administer properties of religious or charitable institutions. Practice or profession of religion is not at all touched. Mr. Bhima Rao and Mr. Natarajan quoted Mysore law and said that no difference had been made out between maths and religious institutions. I will ask the House to refer to clauses 30 to 38 which show that maths and specific endowments have been specially dealt with. Such religious institutions have been treated separately under clauses 39 to 42.

"Why should we not take power to manage maths? The way in which our so-called Hindu maths are protecting religion, if I am to give all the instances in my mind, it will take much time and I will confine myself to one example. Everyday in our Headquarters hospitals poor women give birth to children and die. The orphans are there and in many cases they are Hindu orphans. In all those cases not even a single Hindu math or religious institution takes charge of them. It is the Christian missionaries who take hold of the children and look after them. I thank them for their humanity. I wonder whether the tremendous love of the Hindu matadhipathis or of those who oppose this Bill protects the principles of Hindu religion. The other day a District Medical Officer informed me that there were five Hindu orphans and asked me, 'what am I to do with them? The Government do not allow me to keep them here.' Fortunately, the Gandhigram at Chinnalapatty offered to take those children and maintain them. It is an institution which is not maintained by those matadhipathis or maths, but maintained by others on pure humanitarian considerations. What are these matadhipathis or monastery people who are supposed to do propagation of Hindu religion and preserve Hindu religion doing, I ask? Then, the most unfortunate part of it is that Mr. Bhima Rao thought that the Dravida Kazhagam of Mr. Ramaswami Naicker, who is familiarly known as Periyar, which condemned scriptures supported this Bill. Sir, misfortune brings together strange bed-fellows. Simply because the Dravida Kazhagam support this Bill, does this Bill become bad law? Suppose a man, an undesirable person, supports a measure. Then, merely because an undesirable person supports it, does that measure become a bad measure?

"Mr. Natarajan gave five instances of interference by State with rituals. I challenge him to show one case where the Commissioner proposes to interfere with the religion or ritual or religious practices.

"Then, reference was made to the application of cypres doctrine. There are institutions endowed by great people where the temples have been lost. There is nothing to be managed. Property is there; it is being eaten by the trustee. What shall we do with that property? It is not as if Government have taken over the property for revenue purpose. Even Mr. Venkataswami Nayudu was doubtful about the possibilities of clause 45. The clause runs thus:—

"The Deputy Commissioner may, on being satisfied that the purpose of a religious institution has from the beginning been, or has subsequently become, impossible or incapable of realization, or that the machinery for effectuating such purpose has failed or no longer exists, or that after providing adequately for the purposes of the institution and after setting apart a sufficient sum for the repair and renovation of the buildings connected therewith, there is a surplus, by order direct that the endowments of the institution or such surplus as is declared to be available, as the case may be, be appropriated to religious, educational or charitable purposes not inconsistent with the objects of the institution."

Those are the conditions in which the cypres doctrine will apply.

"As regards the qualifications of Commissioner, somebody doubted whether Hindus alone will be appointed. I have known of cases of theft of temple property where the matadhipathis were willing to allow officers, to whatever caste they may belong, to enter the holy precincts for purposes of detection. Clause 10 specifically says that all officers and servants appointed to carry out the purposes of this Act shall be persons professing Hindu religion only. The most vehement attack that was made was about clause 6, about vesting. What has been vested, Sir? Clause 6 says:—

"The general superintendence of all religious institutions and endowments shall vest in the Provincial Government."

So it is not temples that have been vested. The Mysore law speaks of supervision, control and regulation. In our Act, there is provision for general superintendence and so it is not the properties of institutions that are to vest but it is the superintendence, regulation and maintenance of endowments. If we can make a distinction between or draw a line where the religious aspect ends and the secular aspect begins, then there is no scope for confusion. There is nothing to be afraid of. It is very definite from the beginning in the Bill. Mr. Natarajan said that the Premier gave a number of cases where the institutions have been mismanaged and scheme suits have been put in. Mr. Krishnamurthi very rightly cited one case where a suit has been going on for twelve years and still the suit is not over. There are several such cases, for when a temple is declared to be a public temple, immediately the trustee files a suit before the Commissioner and on his decision an appeal is filed in the District Court to bring the temple under the old management and this continues for several years. Such cases have been very many. Finally, Sir, it is very uncharitable to suggest that the authors of this Bill have the same objects as the Dravida Kazhagam in bringing this measure."

* THE HON. SRI O. P. RAMASWAMI REDDIYAR :—" Sir, after I last spoke on the subject in the other House, I notice a marked change in the climate of opposition opinion. Many who genuinely feared that the Bill might interfere with religion are now convinced that the Bill would promote healthy development of religious institutions. It is no longer the godly who are worried, but the godless. This godless tribe apprehend that when temples prosper and charitable institutions thrive and true religion takes hold of the masses, they will be deprived of the material for destructive propaganda. Even those, who while sympathizing with the objects of the Bill yet entertain genuine doubts as to whether it has not gone far, do now feel reassured, as they realize that the Select Committee will impartially consider the various suggestions put forward by them. After this lapse of time, therefore, and after watching the reactions of public opinion to my last speech, I am glad to say that to-day, I am able to speak before this House with added strength and firmer conviction in the urgency and soundness of the measure than ever before.

" Sir, I have been accused of being a religious reformer and of having donned the mantle of a self-appointed prophet. I am afraid that is too big a compliment for me. I can only claim to have been a devout Hindu all my life, striving to understand the basic teachings of the Vedas, the Upanishads, the Prabandhas and Thevarams and, in my humble way, to translate them into practice in daily life. What my religion teaches is very simple. It teaches tolerance, it teaches love; it teaches service to humanity and service to God. It teaches that in the eye of God everyone is equal; and it teaches that the temples are the portals of Higher Life. To understand these teachings, Sir, to translate these teachings in daily life and to see that the Governmental machinery is so devised that the corporate bodies in charge of religion translate them into practice—these simple aims do not require one to be a religious reformer, do not call for one to be a seer or a prophet. They only require one to be dutiful to his faith and that is all. It is my duty to be. I have a duty to my religion and I have a duty to the people, and I find the two do not conflict.

24th February 1949] [Sri O. P. Ramaswami Reddiyar]

" It has been said that the State is a materialistic body and that there should be no confusion of functions with spiritual institutions. But, Sir, the measure under discussion does not seek to interfere with spiritual side of religion at all. On the other hand this measure can only promote spiritual welfare. But Sir, our aim is limited. The Bill seeks to attend only to the material side of the religious institutions, to the proper administration of their lands and finances. This the State has been doing all along, in all times and in all climes. Those who object to Government regulating the temple properties and trusts, those who object to Government checking and auditing temple funds, those who object to Government insisting that charitable institutions should spend their funds in fulfilment of the pious wishes of the original donors, Sir, these objectors do not object to a non-Hindu, or a free-thinking Judge giving a decision as to whether priest 'A' or priest 'B' should do the puja, whether trustee 'X' or trustee 'Y' should receive the prasadam first, whether the temple elephant should have caste mark this way or that. Dharma Acharyas who lay claim to be the sole interpreters of the sacred law do not object to stand before the non-Hindu judges of a materialist State and take their decisions in religious matters, in matters of rituals and pujas. But when public funds are wasted, when temples are deserted and the owl and the bat are allowed to reign supreme, and when Government seek to put an end to these things, only then comes the objection that the materialist State should not decide for religious institutions.

" Much has been made of the Secular State provisions in the Draft Constitution. I have already made it clear that those provisions do not clash with the object of this Bill. If, however, any doubts had lingered, the recent statement of Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru at Godhra must have dispelled them. Addressing a large gathering on the banks of the Mashwee, Panditji said that the Secular State 'did not mean that we were to be irreligious or a nation of atheists. By a Secular State is only meant that every individual in it was free to profess any faith he chose and no disability should rest on him by reason of his faith.' Does this mean that temples should be neglected, that trust properties should be mishandled and misappropriated, that religious education should be neglected and sanitary and hygienic precautions in places of worship should be ignored? Does it mean that the temple funds should be frittered away in costly and needless litigation that does no good to the religious well-being of the devotees? Does it mean that at a time when food problem is so acute, the temple lands should be neglected or indifferently cultivated? Does it mean that the temple tanks should continue to be filthy and dirty and be the breeding farms of a thousand and one diseases? Does it mean that all these things should take place and because there is some mention of the Secular State in the Draft Constitution, Government should continue to tolerate these social and economic evils?

[Sri O. P. Ramaswami Reddiyar] [24th February 1949]

"In the other House I submitted a long list of sixty-five cases of misappropriation and mishandling of temple and trust properties. I pointed out that the list was not exhaustive. Since then hundreds of similar instances happening from the early days of the Board have been brought to my notice, and the Board was powerless to prevent them. Lands have been leased, mortgaged and sold on questionable terms and under suspicious circumstances. And often the interference of the Board only meant waste of additional public funds on litigation. The Board had to remain a helpless spectator of innumerable cases of flagrant misappropriation and illegitimate diversion of religious and charitable funds.

"Sir, it is needless for me to take up the time of the House any longer with this question. The objects of the Bill are very simple. There is no innovation, and I am no religious reformer. Over twenty years ago it was found necessary to regulate temple funds and properties and an Act was passed. We found that Act ineffective. We are making it effective. That was inadequate. We are making it adequate. That was halting. We are making it full. It is but an amplification of a measure already begun. It is the sheer result of logic of events. Two decades of the Board's ineffective working has led to this. I fail to see how such a simple and necessary piece of legislation, whose principles have already been accepted and written into in the Statute Book, can arouse any controversy. I have, therefore, every hope that this House would give the measure the support it abundantly deserves. In doing so, I look forward to the valuable and constructive suggestions of the Members in the Select Committee. I am confident that the Select Committee will give them full consideration and effect suitable changes consistent with the underlying objects of the Bill. With these words, Sir, I earnestly appeal to the support of this House for this measure at all stages of its career until it emerges as law."

* THE HON. DR. T. S. S. RAJAN :—"I am very thankful to the Members of this House for the very practical way in which they have dealt with this question. At the outset I assured them that we were not going into the details of the Bill. At the introduction stage I took particular care to see that the principles involved in this Bill are made clear and I gave sufficient guarantee and assurance about the nature of the Bill itself. I also explained clearly the limitations that this Bill imposed on the Government. The speeches of my Colleagues the Hon. Mr. Madhava Menon and the Hon. Premier have made my point very clear and so distinct that it is unnecessary for me to cover the same field. As far as the discussion was concerned, there was more support than criticism of an adverse nature. I can understand the hon. Mr. Natarajan making an appeal to the Government to reconsider some of the clauses which appear to him to be very stringent, particularly clauses relating to the rights till now enjoyed by the Matadhipathis and trustees. We are not unaware of them. We will certainly take as much care as is necessary and deal with the people against whom this Bill will operate with all respect that is due to them. But I must make it clear that we shall not out of considerations of a sentimental nature make the Bill useless. That we should not do. I give this assurance for what it is worth. In the Select Committee stage and the further stages of this Bill, we shall not ride roughshod over the sentiments of people which have been nurtured by habits of years past, at the same time reserving to ourselves the right to consider the inherent justice of the claims put forward. To set right glaring defects is the real object we aim at. My hon. friend Mr. Bheema Rao struck me as being unnecessarily ultra-orthodox in his sentiments. If only I argue as he does, I know I will land myself in an absurdity. The Temple Entry Act is in force. There is the head of a religious Math who could not compromise himself to this legislation. He enjoined that those of his disciples who go to temples in which Harijans enter should not come to his Math. This is a very innocent way of making the Temple Entry Act useless in a way. Some of the disciples respected his ukase and did not go to the temples. What does the result of this absurdity mean? The image of God is installed in a big temple and large sums of money are endowed for the temple. If Harijans are admitted in the temple, the head of the Math says that the others who go there become polluted. This is one of the several funny absurdities to which religious fanaticism might lead people. It is wrong to say that we are throwing Hinduism to the wolves. Hinduism is subject to the law of the land as much as any other ism in this land of ours. No gentleman, however high his position in his community may be, shall be allowed the right to nullify the effect of an Act by saying that those who go to the temples to which Harijans are admitted become polluted and that they should not come to his Math. That certainly is wrong according to us. On that plea, people should not quarrel with us and say that we should not interfere with that Math. There are limits to which arguments can be carried on both sides. We shall not undeservedly interfere. We have respect for the sentiments of the orthodox people. Out of a misguided knowledge of things and out of absolute ignorance of political conditions in the State, the orthodox people might feel hurt. But Government cannot take notice of them. We will have to do what is right. It is only in that spirit that we want to take the responsibility in our own hands. I am saying this over and over again, because there seems to be some confusion in the public mind. That confusion is absolutely unwarranted. It is wrong to say that the Government are interfering with religion. That certainly is not the intention of the Bill that is going to be considered. After listening to the speeches in this House, I am glad to say that I feel strengthened in the attitude we have taken in pursuing this Bill and committing it to a Joint Select Committee. I may assure this House that in the Select Committee we shall not prevent any section of opinion giving evidence, and the Select Committee shall carefully consider all such evidence.

[Dr. T. S. S. Rajan] [24th February 1949]

"Sir, in a matter like this which rightly or wrongly concerns the people's faith, the Government cannot but be oversensitive and therefore what I say is that every consideration shall be given to all the views that are expressed and all the communications that are received from various schools of thought with regard to this matter and these shall be carefully gone into by the Government at the Select Committee and with this assurance, Sir, I want the House to accept the names of members that I am proposing for inclusion in the Joint Select Committee which is to be constituted to consider this Bill. In mentioning the names of the Members of the Select Committee, I may tell the House that I have taken into consideration the opinions expressed by various members of this House and have also had consultations with the leaders of the various groups and I have selected the following ten members who are to be included in the Select Committee, which I hope, the House will accept :—

The Hon. Sri O. P. Ramaswami Reddiyar.

The Hon. Dr. T. S. S. Rajan.

The Hon. Sri K. Madhava Menon.

Sri N. Ranga Reddi.

Sri K. Venkataswami Naidu.

Sri S. B. Adityan.

Sri M. Narayana Menon.

Sri M. D. T. Kumaraswami Mudaliyar.

Sri D. Manjaya Hegde.

Sri R. Suryanarayana Rao."

MR. PRESIDENT :—" I should like to know whether the Hon. Mr. Bhima Rao is pressing his amendment."

SRI B. BHIMA RAO :—" I know, Sir, what would be the fate of my amendment if I press it for a division and therefore I do not propose to press it. I shall withdraw it with the leave of the House, Sir."

MR. PRESIDENT :—" I suppose the House gives permission to Mr. Bhima Rao to withdraw his amendment."

The amendment was by leave of the House withdrawn.

MR. PRESIDENT :—" The motion is—

' that this House concurs in setting up a Joint Select Committee of the two Houses consisting of 30 members (20 members from the Assembly and 10 members from the Council) to consider the Madras Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowments Bill, 1949 (L.A. Bill No. 10 of 1949), and that the following members of this House be nominated to the said Joint Select Committee :—

The Hon. Sri O. P. Ramaswami Reddiyar.

The Hon. Dr. T. S. S. Rajan.

h February 1949] [Mr. President]

The Hon. Sri K. Madhava Menon.

Sri N. Ranga Reddi.

Sri K. Venkataswami Naidu.

Sri S. B. Adityan.

Sri M. Narayana Menon.

Sri M. D. Kumaraswami Mudaliyar.

Sri D. Manjaya Hegde.

The motion was carried.

THE MADRAS LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

Friday, the 19th January 1951.

The House met in the Council Chamber, Fort St. George, at eleven of the clock, Mr. Chairman (THE HON. SRI R. B. RAMAKRISHNA RAJU) in the Chair.

[19th January 1951]

THE MADRAS HINDU RELIGIOUS AND CHARITABLE ENDOWMENTS
BILL,^a 1949 (L.A. BILL NO. 10 OF 1949).

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—“ Mr. Chairman, Sir, in the absence of the Hon. Dr. T. S. S. Rajan, Health Minister, who is in charge of this portfolio, and who, as you are aware, has so ably and admirably piloted this Bill in all its main stages, in the Joint Select Committee and in the other House, I have been asked by him to move that the Madras Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowments Bill, 1949 (L.A. Bill No. 10 of 1949), as passed by the Assembly, be taken into consideration. In doing so I should like briefly to mention, at the outset, a few relevant facts which will help in a proper understanding and appreciation of the Bill in its correct perspective.

“ Dr. Rajan my Hon. Colleague has taken upon himself this task, more as a labour of love and for over 18 days attended to all the details of its passage in the other House. But the flesh proved weaker than the spirit and the arduous task was too much for him. He has been ordered to take rest for sometime. But I am glad to be able to tell you that I expect him to be here with us again before we close our discussion of the Bill in this House. Let us hope and pray that he will return to us refreshed by the rest he has taken, to guide us aright at the end, as he has done at the beginning. He has unique qualifications for this task, to which I do not pretend to lay any claim, except that I have imbibed some of his spirit and enthusiasm during the period I have had the privilege of working along with him on this Bill, for the last two years. He was born and bred up in an orthodox Hindu Brahman family in the holy town of Srirangam under the very shadow of the great temple of Sri Ranganatha, the Lord of the Universe. Providence in the Infinitude of Its Wisdom and Grace has so ordained that such a person should be the Minister in charge of the subject in the first truly National Government that administered the affairs of this State. With his quick grasp of any material placed before him, my Hon. Colleague soon perceived that the present Hindu Religious Endowments Act was defective and inadequate in several respects to achieve the goal aimed at by that great statesman of South India, the late Rajah of Panagal, who introduced for the first time in India a comprehensive legislation on the Hindu Religious Endowments. Under the directions of Dr. Rajan a Bill was first prepared by the then President of the Hindu Religious Endowments Board, Sri A. Kondappa, and it was revised thoroughly by Dr. Rajan himself in 1939. The World War, and the resignation of the Congress Ministries throughout India shortly thereafter, unfortunately prevented this extremely necessary and urgent piece of legislation from being placed on the Statute Book for over a decade.

“ As soon as the new Congress Ministry was formed, no time was lost in taking up the question again and the Draft Bill, based mainly on the original Bill of 1939, was published in the latter half of 1947. Our preoccupation with that great ameliorative measure for the masses, the first of its kind in India again, the Estates Abolition Act and the Rent Reduction Act and other important measures that could not brook any delay prevented us from proceeding with this Bill forthwith. But my distinguished friend, the Hon. Sri O. P. Ramaswamy Reddiar, did not allow the grass to grow under his feet. With his characteristic zeal and enthusiasm bordering on religious fervour and by dint of his unremitting labours, he succeeded in placing this Bill again before the Legislature, as soon as the urgent measures referred to above were finished. The intervening time had been utilized by the Secretariat, under his directions, in improving upon several features of the Bill, in the light of the criticisms offered by various individuals and associations interested in religious institutions.

^a Published in the Fort St. George Gazette, dated 14th January 1949 and also printed as Appendix on pages 35-36 infra.

[19th January 1951] [Sri K. Madhava Menon]

“ The second draft, which is a great improvement, in several respects, upon the original Bill of 1947, was published in January 1949 and presented to both Houses of the Legislature. We felt, however, that even then the public were not sufficiently consulted on a matter of such vital importance concerning our spiritual as well as material welfare. Consequently, on introducing the Bill in the Legislature, both the Houses decided to set up a Joint Select Committee and it invited not only memoranda on all aspects of the Bill from everyone interested in it, but also to take oral evidence as well, of individuals having special knowledge and opportunities for study and thought on the subject. This took a considerable time. As Hon'ble Members who were on the Joint Select Committee are aware, several important clauses have been altered, as a result of their deliberations, in the light of the evidence tendered before them.

“ Let me here and now pay my tribute and express on behalf of the Government their deep sense of gratitude to the Members of the Joint Select Committee for the conspicuous ability and industry with which they worked on the Bill and improved it. I think I will be discharging this duty best, if I read the relevant portion of the speech of my Hon. Colleague who paid a very handsome compliment to the Joint Select Committee in the Legislative Assembly, when presenting that Committee's Report and moving for the Second Reading of the Bill. He said—

“ Let me express my grateful appreciation of the manner in which the Members of this House and those of the Upper House who constituted the Joint Select Committee carried out the task entrusted to them. Voluminous written memoranda covering about 550 pages of printed matter were presented to the Committee by various associations and individuals interested in religious institutions. In addition, a number of persons representing many schools of thought and important religious institutions including maths gave oral evidence before the Joint Select Committee. The material thus gathered was then arranged and sifted, and further subjected to a detailed examination by the Committee. Some 50 issues were framed and the Committee discussed these issues at some considerable length and settled the principles on which the Bill should be amended. In the light of the decisions of the Committee on the several issues framed for its consideration, the Bill was redrafted. The Committee then took up a detailed examination of the Bill clause by clause, as a result of which they suggested various amendments. These amendments were again duly incorporated in the Bill, and a second revised draft was printed and put up to the Committee for its consideration. For a second time the Joint Select Committee scrutinized the provisions of the Bill, clause by clause, and then suggested a few alterations which have been finally incorporated into the Bill as republished in the present form in February 1950. The House will thus see that the Joint Select Committee took great pains to examine every one of the clauses in the Bill with reference to the criticisms and suggestions for amendments made in the oral and documentary evidence before it. As a result of their labours the Bill has been amended and improved in various respects.

"In his speech of 11th September 1950 in the Legislative Assembly from which I have just now quoted, the Hon. Dr. T. S. S. Rajan dwelt at length on the salient features of the Bill which the Government claim to be wholesome and substantial improvements of a far-reaching character over the existing Act, and has also not only referred to the outstanding contributions made by the Joint Select Committee, in improving the scheme and structure of the Bill and moulding it into its present shape, but has also reviewed in retrospect what had already been done in the direction of improving the administration and conserving the resources of the religious institutions in this State during the past 25 years of the administration of the Hindu Religious Endowments Act. It is not, therefore, necessary for me to traverse the same ground over again here and weary you with all the details. You will have all followed the discussion of this Bill in the other House and will have known the final shape of the important clauses of the Bill.

"I will therefore on this occasion content myself with a brief reference to two or three of the most vital features under each one of the above two main categories, namely,

(1) improvements over the existing Act which the Government claim to have made in the Bill and which have survived the minute and critical scrutiny of the Joint Select Committee, and

(2) the contributions made by the Joint Select Committee during its deliberations as a result of the suggestions made in the memoranda presented to, and the oral evidence tendered before it."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—"The House will now rise for lunch and re-assemble at 3 p.m."

The House then adjourned for lunch.

(After lunch—3 p.m.)

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"As the Statement of Objects and Reasons appended to the Bill first published in 1947 would clearly show, the main and perhaps the most fundamental change effected by the Bill is the provincialization of the Hindu Religious Endowments Board's officers and staff into a Department of Government. The Board has been pressing for this for quite a long time. The first Congress Ministry, presided over by our revered Rajaji who is still happily serving the interests of the country in a higher sphere after relinquishing an even more exalted office, accepted this in principle in the first draft of the Bill prepared in 1939 referred to by me earlier. And the provisions relating to this provincialization have continued to form an integral part of the present Bill in all its stages from 1947 onwards. The main opposition to this came curiously enough from an unexpected quarter. It is said that these provisions offend the fundamental rights guaranteed by the Constitution of India. The whole question has therefore been fully examined by two eminent lawyers who have held with distinction the high office of Advocate-General of this State successively, in the course of the passage of this Bill. Sir, you will permit me incidentally to pay the meed of praise so richly deserved by the two Legal Advisers of the State for the great patience with which they have examined the Bill in detail and the profound learning they brought to bear on the subject. Both of them came to the conclusion that there is nothing repugnant or opposed to the Constitution in the provisions regarding provincialization of the Board's officers and servants. But let us examine whether, apart from the narrow technicality of the law, there is any real substance in the objection. Madras State has not only an overwhelmingly preponderating Hindu population but also the largest number of Hindu Religious Institutions in India; and though we are a secular State, I ask what is wrong in such a State taking steps for safeguarding the proper administration of the Hindu religious and charitable institutions, most of which were richly endowed by the ancient rulers of this land. It is not denied that in the neighbouring States of Mysore and Travancore-Cochin, the State has been exercising for centuries a higher degree of control in various aspects than has been ever contemplated by us. While the law may look to these technicalities and possibilities, you, as administrators and statesmen, have to look to realities and you will easily discover how baseless is this opposition to the supervision of the administration of Hindu religious and Charitable institutions by the State.

"Another important improvement in the Bill over the existing Act is the addition of the word 'Charitable' to its title. This itself is meant to signify that, while the existing Act applied only to religious institutions, an express provision is made in the Bill for its extension to charitable endowments as well. This has been a crying need all along. Maladministration and misapplication of public funds have been as rampant in the case of charitable endowments in this State as in respect of temples and maths. The present law relating to charitable endowments is not sufficient to prevent mismanagement. Under Regulation VII of 1817, the control of charities is vested in the Board of Revenue. Owing to the multifarious duties which the Board of Revenue has to perform and owing to the very large number of charitable endowments scattered all over the State, the Board has not been able to exercise any effective supervision over the administration of charitable endowments. No doubt, there is the remedy open to the public in cases of misappropriation or misapplication of trust funds relating to charitable endowments by filing suits under Section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, with the Advocate-General's consent. But the filing of a suit generally means great expense and trouble and so, in practice, this provision has been rarely availed of by the general public. Charitable endowments are public trusts just in the same way as religious endowments are, and there is no reason why adequate arrangements should not be made for their supervision with a view to prevent maladministration and misappropriation of funds. In England, the jurisdiction of the Charity Commissioners extends to secular as well as religious charities.

"The third improvement is the restriction of the scope for litigation and the consequent wastage of the funds of religious institutions. Here I crave the permission of the House to quote again from the speech of my Hon. Colleague, Dr. T. S. S. Rajan, made on 11th September 1950 in the Legislative Assembly, as it forcibly brings home the importance and magnitude of this improvement in the Bill over the existing Act.

"One of the unfortunate results of Act II of 1927 was the abundant crop of litigation that sprang up in regard to every conceivable matter dealt with by the Board. While the Board of Commissioners were vested with original jurisdiction in respect of all matters pertaining to religious institutions, the Act allowed parties, fancying themselves to be aggrieved by its orders, to appeal to law courts and to question the correctness of the Board's orders in almost every matter. The trustees of temples, taking advantage of the fact that they are in possession of temple funds, indulged in endless litigation. Some of them revelled in it. I need not take up the time of the House now with a catalogue of the numerous instances in which this right of appeal to law courts or to file suits before them, has been abused. In my speech while introducing the Bill in this House on the 4th February 1949, I have described in some detail the ridiculous straits to which litigation was reduced, particularly in matters of ritual, some of which do not, in my opinion, affect in the least the fundamentals of religion. I have no doubt this House will agree with me that as a result of such reckless and cantankerous litigation, there has been enormous wastage of public funds, and there was also great and unconscionable delay in several matters in giving effect to the decisions of the Board."

"Turning now to the outstanding contributions made by the Joint Select Committee I would mention first and foremost the new provisions made by it for the constitution of the Area Committees, which we have finally decided to form throughout the State, in order to associate the public more closely with the administration of the new department. These are, so to speak, the lineal descendants, the legal heirs and successors of the old Temple Committees, which were constituted, when the East India Company wanted to be relieved of the responsibility of looking after the Hindu Temples and Mutts at the instance of Christian missionaries and which continued to exist in some form or other, till they were abolished altogether by the amending Act of 1944 passed during the Advisers' regime. The Temple Committees were, no doubt, the cause of many a headache to Dr. T. S. S. Rajan, during his first term of office in 1937-39, as well as to his predecessors. They had to be abolished owing to the factious spirit displayed by them, combined with a deplorable lack of interest in their work and their anxiety to abuse their patronage, oblivious of the welfare of the institutions committed to their charge. The provision for the constitution of Area Committees did not find a place in the draft as published in 1947, or even in that published in 1949. But we, as a popular Government deriving authority from the will and support of the people and seeking their co-operation to the fullest possible extent in all directions, have accepted the suggestion of some hon. Friends in the Select Committee to revive them, though in an altered form. They will be presided over by the Assistant Commissioners, who have been trained to discipline and integrity and who may therefore be trusted to guide them aright and see that the ugly features which disfigured the work of the earlier committees do not raise up their heads again, after their revival. We do sincerely wish and hope that the experiment will succeed with the active help and co-operation of hon. Members.

"Another important contribution made by the Joint Select Committee is the addition of a set of special provisions relating to institutions getting an annual income of Rs. 20,000 and more. A great English thinker has said that 'Just as mercy is twice blessed, patronage is twice cursed. It curseth him that gives as well as him that takes.' It is this abuse of patronage that has been the besetting sin and snare of all democratic administrations all over the world. Therefore, when we decided to revive the Temple Committees, we decided also to take out of their purview institutions getting an income of over twenty thousand rupees. These will be administered by a Board of Trustees consisting of not less than 3 and not more than 5 members appointed by the Commissioner. We have taken the additional precaution of not allowing the Commissioner to delegate this power to even the Deputy Commissioner, as he might delegate other powers, in order to ensure that this power is exercised in the best interests of the institutions by the highest authority under the Government. More we cannot do by legislation and we hope that this special provision will result in smooth and harmonious administration of the bigger institutions and will be beneficial to the public and the institutions alike.

"The Joint Select Committee has also enlarged the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts, by providing for the right to file suits in respect of matters decided by the Deputy Commissioner in the first instance and by the Commissioner on appeal. In the Bill, against the orders of the Commissioner only an appeal to the High Court was originally provided. The Joint Select Committee, however, decided that it would be better to provide a right to file a suit in the first instance instead of an appeal straightway to the High Court. Consequently, a provision has been made that against the decision of a Commissioner in certain cases a suit may be filed in the Court of Original Civil Jurisdiction in the mufassal and in the City Civil Court in the Presidency town, and that against the decree of the said Courts appeals may be filed in the High Court. Though a suit has been provided for from the orders of the Commissioner, the powers of the court have been restricted, so as not to stay the Commissioner's orders pending the disposal of the suit.

"Having dealt with a few of the prominent features of the Bill which constitute distinct improvements over the existing Act and a few of the more important contributions made by the Joint Select Committee, I will now pass on to the amendments either moved by the Government themselves, or accepted by them during the Second Reading of the Bill in the Assembly. Here, again, I will not burden the House with all the minor details, but will confine myself to a brief reference to the more important among them. As hon. Members are aware, my Hon. Colleague moved for the Second Reading of the Bill in the Legislative Assembly on 11th September 1950. All the details of the Bill were fully and completely thrashed out, clause by clause, during the 17 days that the discussion of the measure in the Second Reading occupied in that house. The number of amendments tabled reached a record figure of over 400 and the majority of them were moved and discussed. I may here prominently bring to the notice of this House that even after the Second Reading of the Bill in the Assembly commenced, we had very carefully re-examined the whole Bill with the assistance of the Advocate-General, in the light of the general criticism offered in the other House and the amendments given notice of by some of my hon. Friends. As a result, a good number of their amendments had, in substance, been taken up by us as Government Amendments and have now been embodied in the Bill, as it has emerged from the Second Reading. For instance, original clause 7, conferring on the Government general powers of superintendence over all religious institutions, has been taken away altogether, mainly in deference to public criticism. The provision relating to the utilization of surplus funds originally embodied in clause 64 of the Bill has now been removed from it and, after considerable modification, has been shaped into the present clause 31 as passed by the Assembly in the Second Reading.

[Sri K. Madhava Menon] [19th January 1951]

"The main change made in respect of this provision is that while the original clause 64 empowered the Deputy Commissioner, inter alia, to direct the appropriation of surplus income of religious institutions for any purpose specified in that clause, that power has now been transferred to the trustee himself. On the advice of the Advocate-General that the original clause 64, may lend itself to possible objection that it might be construed as offending Article 26 (d) of the Constitution, which entitles every religious denomination, or section thereof, to administer its property according to law, it has been provided in the new clause 31, that when the trustee of an institution considers that the surplus should be spent on any of the purposes specified in old clause 64 (present clause 59), he should himself take the initiative and spend it for such purposes, after obtaining the Deputy Commissioner's sanction. The element of compulsion has thus been removed and the trustee has been invested with a substantial measure of discretion and autonomy.

"Likewise, in the original clause 56 (present clause 51), amendments have been made giving greater autonomy to the trustees and reducing the scope for interference by the Deputy Commissioner. Clause 67 of the Bill as presented to the Assembly (present clause 62 before the House) has been substantially modified by providing for filing of suits in Civil Courts in all matters dealt with under original clause 62 (present clause 57). In other words, the right to file suits in Courts has now been extended to the following matters also:—

[19th January 1951] [Sri K. Madhava Menon]

- '(1) Whether the trustee holds, or held, office as a hereditary trustee; and
- (2) whether any person is entitled, by custom, or otherwise, to any honour, emolument, or perquisite in any religious institution; and what the established usage of a religious institution is in regard to any other matter.'

We have accepted the principle that wherever a question of right or title to property arises, the final decision should be with the Courts.

"Another very vital amendment which the Government themselves moved is the deletion of clause 40 which empowered the appointment of non-hereditary trustees even in cases where there were only hereditary trustees, and which provided for the compulsory appointment of an executive officer for each institution having an annual income of over Rs. 20,000. The Government have also modified the whole series of clauses dealing with such institutions.

"The Government also moved for the deletion of clause 86 of the Bill providing for the constitution of an Advisory Council consisting of the representatives of the jiyengars, the archakas, the acharyapurushas and other mirasdars of the Tirumalai-Tirupathi Devasthanams, in order to avoid any argument that the Bill interferes with the religious affairs in contravention of Article 26 (b) of the Constitution. Finally, the Government themselves moved for the addition of the new clause 92 which expressly provides that nothing in this Bill shall be deemed to violate the provisions of Article 26 of the Constitution.

"Indeed, it is very doubtful whether any Government Bill, which had already been considered for such a long period as three years, had such a huge list of further amendments covering over ten pages of printed matter, to be moved by the Government themselves in the Second Reading of the Bill in the Assembly. As Dr. Rajan has pointed out in the other House, "all these will clearly show that far from trying to thrust our own views on the public with the aid of a well-drilled majority, we have been most responsive to public opinion in the matter, and have tried our best to satisfy public sentiment on the subject to the greatest possible extent, compatible with the preservation and proper utilization of the resources of these institutions." for the purposes for which they are intended.

"And now the Bill comes before you, recast and greatly improved in the course of this long process of study and discussion. The task of the hon. Members of this House is, if I may say so, in one sense, an easier and in another, a difficult one, than that of the other House. It is easier, because all the preliminary spade work has been done already in the matter of clarification of various points and the modification of clauses of doubtful importance. It is difficult in the sense that hon. Members have to focus their energies all the more to the task of scrutinising the Bill as a reviewing House of elders, by bringing to bear on its essentials the great weight of the ripe experience and mature wisdom associated with the Members of the Upper House in all Legislatures. Notice of as many as 55 amendments, have been already received by us, and we shall be presently discussing them. While it is open to us again to study every feature of the Bill, I would earnestly appeal to all hon. Members not to stress upon points already discussed threadbare elsewhere and get lost in a maze of petty details, but to concentrate on essentials, on new matters, which would improve the Bill in its more important and essential features, and thus promote the end we all have in view, namely, the purification of the administration of the institution dedicated to the service of God and Man.

"I have finished all that I have to say before commending, this Bill to your consideration. Mr. Chairman, Sir, I move—

'That the Madras Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowments Bill, 1949 (L.A. Bill No. 10 of 1949), as passed by the Assembly be taken into consideration.'"

MR. CHAIRMAN:—"I suppose the Select Committee Report has been circulated to the hon. Members."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Yes, Sir, it was a Joint Select Committee, and its report has already been circulated."

MR. CHAIRMAN:—"The question is—

'That the Madras Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowments Bill, 1949 (L.A. Bill No. 10 of 1949), as passed by the Assembly be taken into consideration.'"

SRI D. MANJAYA HEGDE:—"Mr. Chairman, Sir, I am constrained to say that I am opposing this Bill. In spite of the many changes just now stated by the Hon. Minister, the Bill is still faulty. It is against law and justice. The present Government is said to be a secular Government. But according to the present Bill, the Government seems to be more communal and sectarian. Under clause 59, sub-clause (1), the Deputy Commissioner may make arrangements for the propagation of Hindu religion and can open schools for the study of Hindu sastras. Is it not against the principles of Fundamental Rights of the present Indian Constitution? I say it is, Sir. If the Government want to do justice to all religious institutions, they should frame such a Bill that would be made applicable to all religious institutions including Mohamedan and Christian institutions. But they have selected only Hindu religious institutions, leaving the other religious institutions to their fate. Is it because they are not mismanaged and that there is no mal-administration among those other religious institutions? If they were well-managed, then there is no reason why hon. Janab Farookhi should have forward his own Bill to reform his own religious institutions. So I say this is more communal and sectarian in its very outlook. Therefore I oppose it.

"Again, the Government have ignored public opinion. In the Select Committee many prominent people were invited to give evidence, but many suggestions made by them were ignored. They stated that a Tribunal must be appointed as an appellate authority, but it was not taken into consideration. They said that curtailment of the powers of the Court should be avoided. But it is not done as far as I know. Clauses 78 and 79 and the sub-clauses go to show that the Fundamental Rights are in danger. No freedom is given to expression of views. The only justice that one can get is from the Courts, but the Government want to curtail that right to make their power more despotic and make the Commissioner a despotic ruler. Therefore we do not want to tolerate such things and I oppose this Bill."

SRI B. BHIMA RAO:—"Mr. Chairman, Sir, I regret that I also am obliged to sound a note of dissent with regard to the passage of this measure. This is a most inopportune time to bring forward a highly controversial measure of this kind at the fag end of the tenure of this House. This is a very highly controversial measure. Protests have been lodged not only by the humblest personages, but also, by the noblest individuals of the South. They interviewed the then Premier Sri O. P. Ramaswamy Reddiar and lodged their protests. It was two years ago, i.e., on the 18th, 19th and 20th January 1949 they sought an interview with the then Premier and they presented a Memorandum to him to exempt the maths from the operation of this legislative enactment. The gentleman who waited on deputation to the then Premier are Sri S. Varadachari, ex-Judge of the Federal Court; Sri N. Chandrasekara Iyer, at present one of the Judges of the Supreme Court; Sri Alladi Krishnaswami Iyer who was the then Advocate-General and one of the leading Advocates of not only Madras, but the whole of India, as well as Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastriar, the doyen of the Bar and President of the Indian Liberal Federation and also Sri K. Balasubramania Iyer. Not only these people, but representatives of various maths also presented Memoranda and pleaded that the provisions with regard to the maths are at variance and contrary to the principles of the Constitution and that this State which professes to be a secular State ought not to legislate for these maths which are largely of a religious nature. That was their plea and I need not read any excerpts from the printed representations made by the various gentlemen of the whole of Madras State to the then Premier. They contain this remark and you can judge therefore that an important body of people are opposed tooth and nail to the passage of this measure. In their Memorandum submitted on behalf of maths situated in the Madras State, it is said—

'The Government which, from time to time, will be established under a party system is particularly unsuited to control these religious foundations which have to be kept free from the caprices and political changes of parties in the country. If parties whose creed is anti-religion and anti-God and against religious foundations come into power, then there is every risk of these Mutts being injuriously affected. There is no safeguard provided in the Bill to prevent such a calamity to the Mutts. Moreover, the Bill seeks by clause (12) to include even personal gifts or offerings to heads of Mutts within the control of the Government. It enables, in clause (16) the officers of Government to enter the sacred precincts of the mutt and hence interferes directly with the Acharya's personal freedom.'

[Sri B. Bhima Rao] [19th January 1951]

"That clause (16) is now converted into clause 21. The Bill gives power to the Commissioner even to control rituals, ceremonies and religious observances in the math which are entirely within the jurisdiction of the head of the math as he is the sole spiritual authority. These are very highly objectionable and this kind of control which seeks to deprive the heads of maths of their autonomy and integrity should be dropped. Their apprehensions have turned out to be true because some of the provisions contained in this measure which they opposed have still been retained. As they say, Sir, the spirit of irreligion and iconoclasm is abroad at the present day. I think it is quite obvious as we see in the report in newspapers about the incidents in the south as well as in Kerala where that beautiful temple of Sabari on the Sabarimalai (Sabari Hills) was desecrated. So the spirit of iconoclasm is abroad and this time is not the opportune for the introduction of a revolutionary measure of this kind. After all the maths are engaged—have long been engaged—in inculcating spiritual culture to its disciples. I cannot accept the claim of the Central Government as well as our Government that this is a secular State when the enforcement of certain provisions of the Bill is definitely likely to result in an infringement of our right to worship freely and independently. I am sure they come within the clutches of the Articles of the Constitution.

"Now, Sir, I shall read only one or two clauses of the Bill to emphasise my objection to this measure. Clause 21, which most representatives have referred to, entitles any officer of the Government to enter the premises of a math. The words used there are 'religious institution' which include a math also. The clause reads—

'The Commissioner, Deputy and Assistant Commissioners and such other officers as may be authorized by the Commissioner or the Area Committee in this behalf shall have power to enter the premises of any religious institution or any place of worship for the purpose of exercising any power conferred, or discharging any duty imposed, by or under this Act.'

Sub-clause (2) says—

'If any such officer is resisted in the exercise of such power or discharge of such duty, the Magistrate having jurisdiction shall, on a written requisition from such officer, direct any police officer not below the rank of Sub-Inspector to render such help as may be necessary to enable the officer to exercise such power or discharge such duty.'

And sub-clause (3) provides that nothing in this clause shall be deemed to authorize any person who is not a Hindu to enter the premises or place referred to in it. Sir, of course, I have got the greatest regard for the members of the Harijan community and especially for Sri Muniswami Pillay who was a Minister during Rajaji's administration. Even he is against this provision and he has given expression to it both on the floor of the other House as well as in other places. I want the House to know what the Father of the Nation had said. Gandhiji pleaded for equality of treatment for the Harijans. I request you, Sir, to think for a moment that there is an orthodox Brahman community. The Sri Mathas and the Madhwas are reputed to be the most orthodox amongst the members of the Brahman community. Sir, we have one or two Madhwa maths in our State, the chief of which is Uttradhi Mutt. There are two sacred images of Sri Ramachandra and Sita in the Mutt. There is a tradition attaching to the two images. There were certain Brahmans during the days of Sri Ramachandra who would not take their breakfast unless they saw Sri Ramachandra. This practice is still continuing—although in a different way—in certain parts of Northern India—in Agra and Delhi. They are called Darsani Brahmans. Even during the days of Akbar they would not take their breakfast unless they saw the emperor who used to appear in the Jasmine Tower in the Fort at Agra. That has been the tradition. Once it appeared a member of the Brahman community was not permitted for some reason or other to see Sri Ramachandra. He immediately fell down and prayed: 'You are giving audience to so many and why not you permit me to see you?' Then Sri Ramachandra is said to have handed these two images to him asking him to see them whenever he felt like seeing him but could not come to the palace owing to ailment or indisposition. These are said to have come into the possession of the Uttradi Mutt in the following manner. I request I may be given five or ten minutes more, Sir."

MR. CHAIRMAN:—"The hon. Member may go on."

SRI B. BHIMA RAO:—"It is the tradition. One may scoff at this idea. These images had been preserved in Orissa and brought to Vijayanagar when the Muhammadan Kings destroyed Vizianagar Empire later—during the troublous days of the Muslim rule—and immersed in a tank in a village called Narayanadevareker which will be submerged now by the construction of the Tungabhadra Dam. In the Bellary district this tradition is universally known. In course of time the two images came into the possession of the Uttradi Math studded with diamonds, gems and emeralds of beauty and lustre. They may be worth one lakh or two lakhs of rupees. I am not an expert in valuing such precious stones. But if a Harijan gentleman is appointed as Commissioner or Assistant Commissioner under the Act he can enter the institution at any time for purposes of inspection and evaluation. Sir, often these images are taken out only during the time of worship. At the end of it, they put them in a receptacle which is kept there and afterwards they do not touch them till the next day. What I want to point out is that the person who is to evaluate under the subsidiary provisions of the Bill can say: 'They are valuable and must be in proper custody. You cannot keep them in this manner. You should take away the diamonds. They are worth nearly two lakhs of rupees. Why should these images be studded with such costly gems?' Sir in Bellary, nearly 3,000 people come to worship each day when the Swamiji of Uttradhi Mutt camps there. It may be that now there is not such a big congregation owing to food regulations. What would be the feelings of those who assemble there every day? Ladies congregate in larger numbers than the rest who are not so religious as they. What would be the feelings of the ladies on such occasions?

[Sri B. Bhima Rao] [19th January 1951]

if such a procedure is adopted and enforced? If anyone, for instance, causes disturbance at a Muslim congregation for prayer, then he becomes punishable under Section 295 of the Indian Penal Code. I know if anyone makes such a disturbance he will not return home alive. I do not want to go into further details. Now what happens if access to the institution is refused? If there is resistance, a case will be registered and the person concerned will be sentenced to six months' imprisonment and fine and so forth.

"Then, Sir, clause 100 empowers the Government to frame rules, among others, for the proper collection of the income of, and the incurring of expenditure by religious institutions. Now the Government may say, 'you must spend only so much, say one hundred rupees only and nothing more'. Sir, this is not fair. The Swami cannot tell his disciples, 'you go out, you cannot remain here since the expenditure has been ordered to be curtailed.' That is quite uncustomary, uncivil and unconventional from any point of view. Then, Sir, the Government can make rules for the custody of the moneys of religious institutions, their deposit in, and withdrawal from banks and the investment of such moneys. Now the Swami will be totally left in the lurch in that the Commissioner may order everything to be deposited in a bank. Then comes the case of jewels and other valuables and documents of religious institutions. The images of Ramachandra and Sita in the case of the Uttaradi Math may be termed a jewel inasmuch as they are studded with diamonds and they may be ordered to be kept in a bank. That means, we destroy religion altogether and the regular performance of the worship. Later comes the inspection and supervision of the properties and buildings of religious institutions. I say the Government are interfering with the free performance of worship of these Swamiyars in inspecting the properties in their charge, in the manner laid down in the Bill.

"Then, Sir, there is clause 87 which is a miscellaneous clause applicable to all religious institutions; religious institutions include a math according to the definition, and to all functions of the trustee of the religious institution in accordance with the provisions of this Bill. Sir, a Swamiji may be a trustee as well as a spiritual adviser. With regard to the main acts of management, the Swamiji gives instructions and with regard to minor details he leaves them to the subordinates in the math or the Dewan. Primarily he is also the trustee of the math and the definition itself for trustee, clearly shows that this also is included, that is the act of management by him is also contemplated. Sub-clause (19) of clause 6 defines a trustee as—

"'Trustee' means any person or body by whatever designation known in whom or in which the administration of a religious institution is vested, and includes any person or body who or which is liable as if such person or body were a trustee."

Sir, as I said with regard to the main acts of management, he gives instructions and smaller details are left to the Dewan to carry out the instructions. So the Swamiyar is not only the religious head but also a trustee in a sense.

19th January 1951] [Sri B. Bhima Rao]

"Then, Sir, clause 87 says—

'Where a person has been appointed—

(a) as trustee or executive officer of a religious institution, or

(b) to discharge the functions of a trustee of a religious institution in accordance with the provisions of this Act, or

(c) as manager under section 56 or in any scheme framed by the Board before the commencement of this Act, and such person is resisted in, or prevented from obtaining accounts and properties thereof, by a trustee, office-holder or servant of the religious institution who has been dismissed or suspended from his office or is otherwise not entitled to be in possession or by any person claiming or deriving title from such trustee, office-holder or servant, not being a person claiming in good faith to be in possession on his own account or on account of some person not being such trustee, office-holder or servant, any Magistrate of the first class in whose jurisdiction such institution or property is situated shall, on application by the person so appointed, and on the production of the order of appointment, and where the application is for possession of property, of a certificate by the Commissioner in the prescribed form setting forth that the property in question belongs to the religious institution, direct delivery to the person appointed as aforesaid of the possession of such religious institution, or the records, accounts and properties thereof, as the case may be : . . .

This affects the maths also.

"Sir, I do not want to labour the point any further.

"With regard to the essentials of a secular State, a memorandum has been prepared by an able constitutional lawyer. He quotes from Mr. Thomas Jefferson's speech and says: 'I will conclude with the reply which Thomas Jefferson who played such a notable part in laying the foundations of a Secular State in America, gave to an address presented to him by the Danbury Baptist Association on January 1, 1802.' The following is the quotation from Mr. Thomas Jefferson's speech. I want to emphasize this for the attention of the House—

'Believing with you that religion is a matter which lies solely between man and his God, that he owes account to none other for his faith or his worship that the Legislative powers of Government reach actions only, and not opinions, I contemplate with sovereign reverence that act of the whole American people which declared that their legislature should make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, thus building a wall of separation between Church and State. Adhering to this expression of the supreme will of the nation in behalf of the rights of conscience, I shall see with sincere satisfaction the progress of those sentiments which tend to restore to man all his natural rights, convinced he has no natural rights in opposition to his social duties.'

This is an extract, Sir, from a famous speech of one of the Presidents of America, made a century and a half ago. If a State claims to be a secular State this is one of the principles that that State should follow.

"I am sure, Sir, I have quoted the various provisions of the Bill to indicate that the right of free worship by members of the Brahman community is in danger. Of course I stress this because, the Brahman community apprehend that their religion is in danger from this enactment and I am voicing their feelings in saying that this measure is designed to destroy their religion and their tradition and their right to worship.

"I regret, Sir, that the name of Hon. Sri Rajagopalachari and those of others were brought forward in this connexion. It was said that this Bill was prepared in the year 1939. Whatever one may say about Sri Rajagopalachari, he is a very conservative gentleman. You might remember, Sir, he introduced a Bill in the Central Legislature saying that every member of the Harijan community shall have free entry to every temple. But when he introduced here in this House a Bill of that nature, he confined it only to the Malabar district because it was very much advanced and at that time there was the Guruvayur Satyagraha led by Mr. Kelappan. He knew that that measure would be successful in the Malabar district. At that time there was a lot of criticism about that Bill being confined only to the district of Malabar. So also with regard to Prohibition. Of course there were other ardent gentlemen besides Sri Rajagopalachari, with regard to the introduction of prohibition throughout the State of Madras. When it came to practical application, in which district did he introduce it first? He introduced and confined that measure to his own district of Salem . . .

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" The first temple entry was in Madura and not in Malabar district. (An hon. Member : ' That was an Ordinance. ') Whatever it may be, it was first introduced in Madura. "

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" Let us not discuss about Sri Rajagopalachariar here. He is not here to defend himself. "

SRI B. BHIMA RAO :—" It is said, Sir, that he did not permit this measure during his regime of nearly two years and three months : our friends took up office on the 10th July 1937 and tendered their resignation on the 23rd October 1939, the period was barely two years and three months. Sir, he thought this was too violent a measure. "

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" It is not right to discuss what his opinions were in the matter. By doing so we may be doing injustice to him. "

SRI B. BHIMA RAO :—" I only say, Sir, that he was a cautious and a conservative gentleman. I want to give him credit for it. But they want to take the privilege of saying that it was during his time that this Bill was prepared. Why was it kept back for such a long time ?

" Then, Sir, coming to the introduction of this measure—the original Bill was first given to us, in September 1947,—we have travelled a long way from September 1947. I have got all these facts with me, but I do not want to trouble the House with them and create a feeling of disgust in the House by making a lengthy speech. Sir, you know the Select Committee, took the leave of this House to sit in the Hill Station and I was watching the proceedings of the Committee in the Hill Station as reported in the newspapers. Every one of the witnesses who went to Ooty and gave evidence objected to the provisions of this Bill in regard to

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" The proceedings of the Committee were not open to the Press. "

SRI B. BHIMA RAO :—" But, Sir, it was reported in the Press and I do not know how they got the reports. There was no objection raised to these reports. "

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" Was it only the witnesses that went to Ooty that objected? Has the climate anything to do with it? "

SRI B. BHIMA RAO :—" They went there and invited witnesses; several respectable people went there and gave evidence. "

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" The hon. Member should have objected then. "

SRI B. BHIMA RAO :—" At that time I raised an objection. The Select Committee I believe is constituted to hear evidence and to consider with respect the views given by the witnesses. Sir, ninety-nine per cent of the witnesses examined said that the inclusion of the maths under the Bill was an abnoxious thing which ought to be removed. That is the impression I got from the evidence given before the Select Committee. But what is it that they have done? They paid scant courtesy to the evidence of the witnesses who appeared before them. If really they had made up their mind to reject the views expressed by the witnesses why should they give them the trouble, why should they be asked to go there at considerable expense to make representations and give evidence? Absolutely no consideration was shown to their feelings. I do not want to take more time of the House. I say, Sir, at this fag-end of their tenure of office, the Government ought not to have introduced this Bill. I do not find anything in the election manifesto of the party about this for the Government to introduce this Bill. Of course, if in the manifesto the Congress has stated that they will do this and that, such as the abolition of the zamindari and so on, there is justification for them to do that. But there is nothing in the manifesto with regard to a violent measure of this kind which outrages the feelings of a considerable section of the Hindu community. Have the Government taken a vote or a plebiscite on this issue to indicate that a measure of this sort is necessary? They have not done that. I am really sorry that the Ministry should have been led away by the clamour of a clique who want to have a measure of this kind enacted. I say, Sir, the Government should not have introduced a measure of this kind at this time. "

DR. A. LAKSHMANASWAMI MUDALIYAR :—" Mr. Chairman, Sir, my task in speaking about this Bill has been rendered much more difficult by some of the remarks that have been made by the previous speakers. But I hope I shall present what I consider a factual, unprejudiced view of the measure that has been introduced into this House which I am sure will be passed dotting the i's and crossing the t's as we have been accustomed to with several such other measures. There are certain features in this Bill which are common to all Bills that are introduced in this House. The supreme faith that they have in the Government as the one and only method of conducting the affairs of the State in a manner that will not be prejudicial to the interest of anybody would be pathetic if it were not misplaced. The other feature of the Bill is that they believe while they don't want patronage and while they feel, as my Hon. Friend Sri Madhava Menon said, that patronage is twice cursed, it is best that the Government exercises patronage rather than anybody else. The third feature of the Bill is, and it is common feature with all their legislation, that so far as possible the established courts of the land should have little or nothing to do with measures introduced in the Legislature. On the ground of delay, on the ground of costs and on many other grounds, perhaps it may be wise to see that in most of these enactments, the courts do not have to play a great part. The Hon. the Finance Minister came in and went away before I could fix my eye on him. I wish to refer here that, in every Bill that has been introduced, the financial aspects of the measure are never taken into consideration or if they are taken into consideration, the House is never taken into confidence as to what would be the financial commitments of any such measure."

MR. CHAIRMAN:—"The Hon. the Finance Minister has come."

DR. A. LAKSHMANASWAMI MUDALIYAR:—"I am glad, Sir, that I will have the opportunity of touching on those aspects when the Hon. the Finance Minister is present."

"Now, Sir, I concede, and I make no secret of the fact, that our Hindu religious institutions are not being managed in the manner they should be managed. But, one has the right to manage and I entirely agree with the Government, the hon. Members on the Treasury Bench, that every one of us should try and see whether it will not be possible for us to introduce such changes as may be necessary and as may be fruitful to bring home to those in charge of these institutions certain fundamental ideas of how to run the Hindu religious institutions. I may state, Sir, that I have visited many Hindu temples all over India, Prayag, Benares, Gaya, Kali temple at Calcutta, the temples in Bombay, Nasik and Nabadra, and various other temples in smaller places, and dipped myself into most of the sacred rivers of India and have seen many of the largest temples of South India, and I therefore cannot be considered as one who has not got any idea of how the Hindu religious institutions are being managed. On the other hand, Sir, I hope I shall not be presumptuous when I say that I am not exaggerating in these matters and I hope everybody will agree with me if, in spite of so many trips to western countries, I become more and more convinced that our Hindu religious institutions have been in need of a great deal of improvement. I state the bare facts, may I, in this connexion, say how regrettable it is that those who have the opportunity, those who have the weight behind them and those who are largely responsible for running these institutions, and those who have counselled, guided and otherwise controlled the people who are responsible for these institutions, have unfortunately not fulfilled the task that was expected of them? Here is no communal bogey, Sir, and let me make that perfectly clear and in the course of my speech, I shall make it clear why it is that I am opposed to some of the provisions contained in this Bill.

"Sir, first of all, this Bill refers to the Madras Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowments. The Hon. Sri K. Madhava Menon said that charitable endowments have been included because there was a great deal of abuse. Nobody denies this, Sir. On the other hand, if a Bill were to be introduced for charitable endowments, and such a Bill was introduced in the Central Legislature it and is now sought to be repealed,—it should apply to charitable endowments of all descriptions and not to Hindu charitable endowments alone. And when you include Hindu charitable endowments and define 'charitable endowment' as it has been defined on page 3 of the Bill, you will find that it is a very discriminatory piece of legislation that is sought to be utilized. I am not speaking of the constitutional aspect and I think it is futile to speak of the Constitution Act for two reasons. Whatever our opinions are, people who do not believe that it is in consonance with the Constitution Act will refer to authorities that have been provided under the Constitution and that those who believe that it is within the Constitution Act are not going to convince those who do not so believe. I therefore, for a moment leave aside altogether the constitutional aspect."

'Charitable endowment' means all property given or endowed for the benefit of, used as of right by, the Hindu or the Jain community or any section thereof, for the support or maintenance of objects of utility to the said community or section, such as rest-houses, choultries, patahalas, schools and colleges, . . .

I want to put before the House a practical illustration. A particular Hindu gentleman endowed large sums of money to found a college and the college was founded, and a non-Hindu is contributing to its endowments, and may I know whether that will become a Hindu charitable endowment? On the other hand, Sir, we have been told and very rightly, that although a Hindu might have given a charitable endowment and founded a college, this Government must insist on that college being open to all sections of the State. A battle-royal has been going on for many years and I myself was responsible when I was President of the Trust Board of the Pachaiyappas, to introduce a measure to admit all sections of the community, but unfortunately my colleagues the majority of whom, were members of the legal profession, so frightened me that I could not proceed with that measure with that particular insistence. Is it the intention of the Government to petrify these differences by insisting upon Hindu charitable endowments for founding colleges being limited for Hindus or is it their intention that those Hindu charitable endowments when diluted with non-Hindu charity does not become a Hindu charitable endowment? Sir, there must be some clarification and I hope the Hon. the Minister for Law will give me a correct interpretation of the definition of the words 'charitable endowment' as it is contained in the Bill.

"Now, Sir, I think it has been rightly contended that a secular Government of this nature should not take such entire responsibility for the administration of Hindu religious institutions and that it must not, in the words of the Hon. the Minister for Law as he put it, departmentalize the Hindu religious institutions and try to control them through the machinery of Government. The Hon. Minister referred to certain practices that obtained and obtain in States like Mysore, Travancore and Cochin, or the present Travancore-Cochin State. The Devaswom Department there although treated as a Government department was directly under the administrative control of the Maha Rajah and it was not a Government department that could be interfered with by any other member of the Government and that was the practice before the days of democracy. It was the ruler of the State of Mysore or of Travancore or of Cochin that had the entire control of the department. I know that because only three years ago before this merger came and before democracy swept those States, to the eternal benefit of the people of those States I hope, though the people seem to have grave doubts at present . . ."

AN HON. MEMBER :—"Not the people!"

DR. A. LAKSHMANASWAMI MUDALIYAR :—"If you see the Malayalee papers, you won't say that."

"At any rate, I know very well that, from out of the Devaswom department, a sum of Rs. 5 lakhs was given to start a college and it was under the authority of the ruler of the State that it was possible to do so. So, to compare the Devaswom departments of those States as they existed then with the provisions of this Bill which seek to departmentalize the whole of the religious institutions under the control of the Government, does not seem to me quite appropriate."

"Sir, I do not wish to draw a red-herring across the track. I want to say this; when you departmentalize these and take over under the control of the Government and that this Government shall have control over the Hindu religious institutions, the Hon. Minister if I understand him rightly, implied that as Hindus will be in a majority, there will be no need to worry. There is no reason for us to suppose that in a system of democratic form of Government when people do not think of the candidate as a Hindu or Muslim or Christian, as the Hon. the Finance Minister has also said, it is just possible that the Hindu community may be in a minority. Again, Sir, as my hon. Friend, Sri Bhima Rao, rightly said, that in a democratic form of Government you must expect a change of ideologies to sweep in at one time or other and in the sweeping in of such changes in ideologies you must expect a transformation if not a transfiguration of those occupying the Treasury Bench. Are you so sure that the people that will succeed you will have the same consideration as I am sure you have at present for the proper conduct of the measure that you seek to enact. This measure is not for this year or for that year. I hope, and it is not realized, that this is a measure which is being placed permanently on the Statute Book. Is it right or fair that under such circumstances, when the changes are not very remote in the personnel of the Treasury Bench in a manner that may not always be pleasant to us and which is inevitable in a system of democratic form of Government, we should allow a measure with so much of control by the Government, so much of guidance and so much of power to direct, in what may prove to me the wrong channels."

"Sir, I have said that the whole of these institutions are to be a department of the Government. The Hon. the Law Minister in the course of his introductory remarks said that the Hindu Religious Endowments Board was pressing for provincializing the whole scheme. Those who are employed in local bodies are pressing for provincialization and those whom we appoint to panchayats are pressing for provincialization. The whole thing is mixed up with the idea of bread and butter and if the Hindu Religious Endowments Board wanted to provincialize the whole thing, I have no doubt that they had very good reasons for this provincialization. If the Hon. the Law Minister had told me what other reasons they had advanced, I could have understood it. But, knowing as I do, having been for nearly 40 years a servant of the Government, that we ask for provincialization in spite of the very bad treatment that we get occasionally from the hands of the Government. It is a question of not throwing ourselves from the frying pan into the fire."

"Sir, it gratified me very much, indeed I felt elated when in this House complimentary references were made to a great leader, one of the greatest leaders, who had become a great leader through hard and good reports, the late Raja of Panagal. You know very well, Sir, it was my great good fortune as a young man for twenty years to have sat at his feet and listened to his discourses on many of these matters. He had a great and grand idea. At the time when he introduced this Bill, although actually so many curses were passed on him, he had this fundamental idea to reform and purify the administration of the Hindu Religious Endowments. What did he do? He could have taken the power just as this Government is trying to take power and he had a party behind him. If I may use a simile that was applied to me in a humorous journal, I hope you will not put me to order, Sir. I was supposed once, sitting in the Senate as a senator, driving off a mosquito by raising my hand and the other members seeing this, simultaneously raised their hands thinking that a proposition was being put to vote. That power the Treasury Bench has got to-day, and he the late Raja of Panagal had that power then and that, I can assure the Hon. Minister and you know that, Sir, he never used that power. There was a real spirit and he could have got that power. He could have done what the Hon. the Law Minister wants to do to-day. That was 25 or 26 years ago. This Bill was passed in 1923 and it was on account of that Bill more than any other Bill that he came into the House again in somewhat attenuated numbers. I can tell you that also, Sir. But, he never asked for that power.

"He constituted an appropriate Board and defined their powers. Give them the opportunity to face the public criticism and still the Government have the whip hand if they go wrong. What do this Government propose to do? First of all, they are going to appoint a Commissioner. I think the idea of a Commissioner has come into vogue after the second world war. Sir, it is somewhat extraordinary that we believe in single individuals controlling everything. So much so, the Central Government began with Director-Generals, Superior-Generals, Controller-Generals and all sorts of Generals and these people really thought that they were Generals except that they do not wear the uniform. This gentleman, who is known as the Commissioner, will be a super-Matadhipati under this Bill. I do not think there will be anybody in the wide world, short of Stalin, who has such extraordinary powers invested in him as these which the many provisions of this Bill propose to confer on the Commissioner. I am not trying to make a debating point of it. He has got the power to control, to direct and to supervise the Deputy Commissioner, the Assistant Commissioner, the Area Committees, the Hereditary Trustees, the Ordinary Trustees, the Board of Trustees, etc. He has got the extraordinary power to listen to everybody and pass final orders. There is no appeal from the Commissioner's final orders in the majority of instances. This Bill is bound to be passed into law whatever may be the criticisms offered on the floor of the House. I hope I shall have the honour of seeing this Commissioner when he is seated on the throne of grace, administering the religious institutions.

"I say, this is fundamentally wrong. It is good to give to a board such powers, but it is bad to give the same to an individual. I have stated, and I will repeat, that power corrupts man. Great power greatly corrupts and there is no man who is not susceptible to such corruption when power is given to him in an unlimited measure.

"While, therefore, I appreciate the point that there should be a certain amount of control, I cannot possibly agree to a policy or measure which seeks to give such vast control to an individual, the Commissioner. The lower rungs of the heir-archy consist of the Deputy Commissioner, the Assistant Commissioner, etc., and the area committees which are to be nominated by the Government. It is an irony of fate that, when we are going in for adult franchise on the one hand and when we are going to have the land flowing with milk and honey by the institution of panchayats in all our villages, we should have these area committees nominated by the Government without the right to have their own chairmen. The Deputy Commissioner or the Assistant Commissioner must go and preside over their meetings. These deputies and assistants are the only people who can train the members of the area committees from naughty boys into well-disciplined school boys! I dare not say that from the position I occupy, because the students will be up in arms against me and I will not be able to visit any institution of that kind. It seems to me that, if we want the area committees to discharge their responsibilities properly, there should be a greater amount of trust placed in them and there should be the least interference on the part of the bureaucratic elements present therein. The provision is that an assistant commissioner should be the chairman of an area committee and, only if he is not able to preside, should the committee elect its own chairman. And the curious fact is that such a chairman will have no vote. He can only take part in the proceedings. This is a fundamentally new conception of what a meeting is and how it is to be conducted. It may be that the idea is that the elected chairman should not unduly influence the voting, by raising his hand in the manner I am supposed to have done at a meeting I mentioned a few minutes ago. Sir, in the old days, at the meetings of the district boards when the collectors used to preside, it is said that the members were always expected to say: 'I agree' to whatever the collector said. The only thing they were expected to say was a Telugu expression 'kankara devara' (కంకరా దేవరా) meaning, 'I concur, Sir.' They did not know that they were using English words which meant, 'I agree'. They simply said 'kankara devara'. It seems to me that the area committee members are expected to say 'kankara devara' at meetings when the assistant commissioner presides.

"In another respect, I am sorry to have to say, this measure is going to petrify some of the things that are not to be petrified. Here is a Government which is giving a certain amount of benediction to certain things that, I consider, require radical change. Let me refer to two of them. The question of hereditary trusteeship is one that has been puzzling the minds of many Hindus for a good length of time. In my humble opinion, the term 'hereditary trustee' is self-contradictory. You cannot expect the son of a trustee to acquire from his father the sense of responsibility of his father hereditarily. The word implies that he is capable of managing the trust according to the well-known canons of a trust. How can a man become capable, by hereditary, to manage a trust? To think that this capacity will descend as a hereditary trait from generation to generation is wrong and is against all modern scientific knowledge of hereditary traits. I can say without fear of contradiction—and, Sir, your vast experience will bear testimony to what I say—that the only things that one hereditarily gets are the bad traits of his forefathers. If they were drunkards, their successors will be drunkards. Fortunately for us, prohibition will compulsorily prevent us from becoming drunkards. But there is one well-known scientific phenomenon and that is, the things that are transmitted from generation to generation are nothing good, but only evil traits. I must say, therefore, that the one fundamental thing to do in regard to these religious institutions is the abolition of the hereditary trusteeship.

"I find that much eloquence was spent in the other House where there was more heat than light generated during the 18 days' discussion of this Bill; but to my surprise the majority of the speeches were all for petrifying some of the ancient traditions and customs which are condemned under modern conditions. Similarly, I fail to see how there can be a hereditary line of archakas. They are priests who repeat a large number of slokas or sthothras and Sahasranamams. You and I have visited many temples. Now let me tell you, having listened to their chanting of the ashtotharam, that it does not seem that they knew what it is and, in any case, they finished the business more quickly than we anticipated. Sahasranamam, even when it is repeated with the rapidity of a cataract with which they were pronouncing the thousand names, could certainly not be finished within the time they do it. It is this practice that brings the Hindu religion into discredit. This is why people say something awkward about the Hindu religion. This is the root cause of the anti-Hindu feeling generated by a set of people who do not realise the unfortunate nature of their propaganda. Let us face the facts. I for one will have no hesitation in saying that there should be a very good test—moral, intellectual and physical—for those who take on this great responsibility of inculcating into the minds of the heterogeneous people something of the spirit of the revitalised Hinduism.

"My hon. Friend, the Deputy Chairman, is the President of the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanam. I am glad to see him functioning there, introducing useful schemes. He has a scheme for the establishment of a college or school for giving proper training for this thing. It is true that there is no religion in the world except ours where those who enter the priesthood have necessarily to be limited to a certain lineage by birth. Christianity throws its doors wide open to anybody who seeks to get ordained as priest. Islam has its own laws by which the Moslems create their priests. Buddhism has its own methods of creating its monks and Judaism and Zoroastrianism too have their own methods for robing their priests. We have, however, accepted this principle that the priesthood must be limited by birth to a particular class. I am not quarrelling with that; but, having limited our choice in that manner, if Hinduism is to be revived, it can only be made possible if those who have power and influence set their face against this bad practice and create a college of divinity—an institution where there will be good training given. I know that in some places such training is being given; but let me not be misunderstood when I say that there should be greater learning and training to control the habits and a disciplined method of life for those who enter upon the greatest profession of spiritual preceptors to the vast masses of people. This Bill tries to petrify those old antiquated customs which under modern conditions, with the ever-increasing flow of new thoughts and methods of life and impact of other religions, will not stand the strain unless we provide these requirements as quickly as possible.

"We know all of us that with regard to these customs there must be a certain amount of elasticity. Those who are interested in the Hindu faith should set an example themselves by making such changes as may be necessary from time to time. It has been laid down in the Hindu texts themselves that one of the fundamentals of the Hindu religion is its adaptability to changing conditions of the world, consistently with the eternal principles one should follow.

"Sir, next let me turn to some of the other things which, as far as I am concerned, require some enlightenment. Let us take clause (34) (1) which refers to the privileges or the conditions under which certain emoluments are to be made available to Devadasis in temples. Now, I have a faint recollection that, somewhere in 1947, the Legislature passed a Bill for the abolition of Devadasis. I know that in that Act it is laid down that section 44-A of the Endowments Act, so far as it applies to them, should continue to apply to Devadasis. I would like to know what the implication of introducing this new clause is. Is it suggested that the Devadasi system should be revived in our temples, because under clause 8 it is said: 'For the purpose of this section "devadasi" shall mean any Hindu unmarried female who is dedicated to a temple . . .'. It would appear that the present tense is used with some significance. Is it the view of the Hon. the Minister for Law that this custom should be revived so as to make our religion the grand old thing it was? I would not have taken this seriously but for certain statements that appeared in the Press. Actually a certain gentleman suggested, at one of the great conferences which we have the privilege of holding in our city during what we may call the festive Christmas season, that we must revive this practice of having 'girl dancers'. Sir, some 45 years ago, when I was quite a moustacheless lad, I joined some people who thought very lowly of the custom of having nautch parties at the marriages and we resolved vow that we would not attend any marriage at which such a nautch party was held."

MR. CHAIRMAN:—"Except to see whether such a party was going on or not." (Laughter.)

DR. A. LAKSHMANASWAMI MUDALIYAR:—"We had spies in those days. We had peculiar ideas and fears. We thought that it was perhaps wrong. We did not realise, as people now seem to realise that the two things were different, that the nautch itself was one of those very highly civilized forms of entertainment—at any rate they say so—whereas the person concerned might be different. I shall not say more about it. But I do want some enlightenment as to what exactly is the place the Devadasi is going to have in this scheme of things, whether it is merely rendering unto her those privileges in the shape of lands and other things which she used to have or whether she should still continue to render service because she has got the lands."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Clause 34 definitely says that the service of the Devadasis will be stopped and that lands will remain with them and that instead of doing the service they should pay quit-rent for the lands. The clause definitely says that the lands shall be enfranchised from the condition of service by the imposition of quit-rent. I do not know exactly what more clarification the hon. Member wants."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" The hon. Member refers to the definition of 'Devadasi' in sub-clause (8) of clause 34."

DR. A. LAKSHMANASWAMI MUDALIYAR :—" If, as the Hon. Minister says, it is merely a change to payment of quit-rent instead of rendering service, I shall not quarrel with it. It is not my object that those who have been in the enjoyment of these lands should be deprived of them."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" Perhaps the confusion is due to the use of the word 'is' instead of the word 'was' in the clause, 'who is dedicated to a temple'."

DR. A. LAKSHMANASWAMI MUDALIYAR :—" My mind is a little confused, Sir. I am glad that some amount of clarification is forthcoming."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Under the Board's Rules, where there is a service inam, if the service is not performed, the inam can be resumed. The party will lose the land. We do not want the service of the Devadasis here. We say that the land shall not be resumed, that it shall be given to the family concerned and that instead of the service, quit-rent should be paid."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" The definition in sub-clause (8) of clause 34 says—

'(8) For the purpose of this section, "Devadasi" shall mean any Hindu unmarried female, who is dedicated to a temple.'

So it refers to future dedication also."

DR. A. LAKSHMANASWAMI MUDALIYAR :—" If the word had been 'was' instead of 'is' it would have been different. In view of the new ideas that are creeping in, I thought probably there was a demand for this."

19th January 1951]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" There is already an Act passed by this Legislature preventing the dedication of girls to temples."

DR. A. LAKSHMANASWAMI MUDALIYAR :—" That is why I said that this would be inconsistent with that Act."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" My impression is that the Devadasis Act prevented only future dedication. What about those who are already dedicated? Does that Act provide for discontinuance of the service by these people?"

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" They need not do service hereafter . . ."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" I think those who are there continue to be there."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" They need not do service hereafter."

DR. A. LAKSHMANASWAMI MUDALIYAR :—" I hope so."

"I now come to Chapter IV—Maths, which has naturally exercised the minds of many people. It is not quite fair for the hon. Member to say that this chapter affects only particular communities. Let me assure the hon. Member that there are many Saivite Maths and the heads of these maths have a very large number of disciples who look upon the matadhipathis with a great deal of reverence."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" May I say a few words by way of clarification of this point? I have heard arguments that there is discrimination in taking up Hindu temples and charitable endowments alone for consideration here. Now what is wrong in a measure which does not take up all kinds of charitable endowments but takes up only one kind of charitable endowments? If it is admitted that these charitable institutions require some amount of supervision and control over their management, what is wrong in restricting a measure like this only to those institutions? I can understand a matadhipathi or somebody else who is opposed tooth and nail to this measure advancing such an argument. I wish to know what is wrong in such a measure by itself, what is intrinsically wrong about it."

DR. A. LAKSHMANASWAMI MUDALIYAR :—" By saying 'Hindu charitable endowments' you are restricting the charitable endowments by making them applicable only to Hindus, while the time has come to diffuse a more cosmopolitan spirit in the people and see that even these charitable endowments are open to everybody—Hindus and non-Hindus alike."

[19th January 1951]

MR. CHAIRMAN:—"That is a different point. If the Pachaiyappa's College for instance admits only Hindu students, then and then only it will come under the definition of Hindu charitable endowments."

DR. A. LAKSHMANASWAMI MUDALIYAR:—"The definition of a 'charitable endowment' restricts it only to the Hindu community. My objection is that in the matter of collegiate or school education at any rate, restriction of admission to particular communities will defeat the very purpose of a secular State."

MR. CHAIRMAN:—"I agree. In such cases, it would not come under this Act as an endowment which is used by the Hindu or the Jain community. If any college or any charitable institution can be used by all communities, then it would not come under this Act."

DR. A. LAKSHMANASWAMI MUDALIYAR:—"Is it desirable by an Act of this nature to countenance such use of educational institutions?"

MR. CHAIRMAN:—"That is a different point. I can understand a person like Sri Manjaya Hegde saying that he does not want this Bill under any conditions."

DR. A. LAKSHMANASWAMI MUDALIYAR:—"In the Madras University Act it is laid down that no sort of restriction on account of caste or creed shall be imposed on anybody seeking admission to any educational institution under the University."

MR. CHAIRMAN:—"But it would not come under this Act."

DR. A. LAKSHMANASWAMI MUDALIYAR:—"If it does not, so much the better."

"I now come to maths. Maths belong to Brahmans and Non-Brahmans. I do not think it is justifiable to say that the inclusion of maths adversely affects any particular community only. I do feel that much greater thought and consideration ought to have been bestowed on the matter before they decided to include maths in this legislation. The very definition of 'math' is different from what it was in the 1926 Act. I do not know who was responsible for it. It is laid down here—

"math" means a Hindu religious institution with properties attached thereto and presided over by a person whose duty it is to engage himself in imparting religious instruction or rendering spiritual service to a body of disciples

In the old Act it was only, 'Whose duty it is to render spiritual service'. As they have now added 'imparting religious instruction' our Commissioner may say that the head of the math must take eight hours' classes a week just as the Government impose the restriction that schoolmasters should have 25 periods a week. Or else he may say that the matadhipathi is not complying with this definition. That is not the spirit in which you should treat the spiritual head of a great religious institution. I do not know who was responsible for introducing this very questionable clause 'whose duty it is to engage himself in imparting religious instruction' in this Bill. The matadhipathi knows his duty. If you had stopped with saying, 'whose duty it is to render spiritual service' there would have been some dignity. The whole chapter, if I may say so respectfully, is couched in terms which must necessarily produce a certain amount of depression in the people who believe that in spite of all that has been said about the wickedness of certain matadhipathis, there is something reminiscent of good there, and it can be improved provided the devotees and the disciples and others connected with it rise to the occasion. The matadhipathis are what their disciples make of them, though the disciples undoubtedly receive inspiration from the matadhipathis. I do not plead for those who transgress the moral law. Let them be brought under the clutches of the law as they richly deserve. But I do plead that when you are thinking of the spiritual heads of these institutions there must be a certain amount of composure and a spirit of humility even in the Government in approaching such personages. I will take one or two things which, I felt, are not consistent with this spirit. You have definitely stated that the matadhipathi will be the trustee of the math. Then in clause 55 (1) it is stated—

'(1) The trustee of a math shall be entitled to spend at his discretion, for purposes connected with the math any "pathakanika" that is to say, any gift of property or money made as a personal gift to him as the head of the math.'

Very good. The thing is given as personal gift. The giver knows and the receiver knows it and no question arises as to the purpose for which it is given. Having given the matadhipathi permission to spend it according to his own ideas of how it should be spent, the next sub-clause says—

'(2) The trustee shall keep regular accounts of all receipts and disbursements of the nature referred to in sub-section (1) and shall cause such accounts to be produced before the Commissioner or any person authorized by him in this behalf, whenever so required.'

If the Commissioner asks a Lower Division clerk to go to the matadhipathi, then the matadhipathi must produce the accounts to him. Is that the way in which you want to treat a matadhipathi? I was almost afraid that a provision like this would cause high blood pressure to my hon. Friend Mr. Bhima Rao, but I am phlegmatic and so not worried. Is there any necessity, any reason for this? Is it not absurd for you to enact this condition? Are there not other methods of achieving the object? Should the pathakanika be subject to the scrutiny of the super-matadhipathi, the Commissioner? You say that it is a personal gift. Are we not receiving personal gifts? Except that we have to keep our accounts regarding our pay to the satisfaction of the Income-tax officers, none of us can afford to reveal all the methods by which we spend all the monies we receive. Therefore let not the matadhipathi be the only exception to the rule. I hope that hon. Members on calm consideration will feel that my criticisms are not merely humorous but are made in the humblest spirit so as to convince them that this is not the right approach. Then Sir, if you wanted that the properties of the maths, the secular aspect of the maths should be under some supervision—and I concede the need for it—you could have differentiated between the spiritual and the secular affairs. You could have asked the matadhipathi to nominate a trustee for the secular affairs and then have had a strangle-hold over the trustee. The matadhipathi is the spiritual head and he ought to resign himself to that. So far as the properties are concerned, if you say that the trustee shall be the matadhipathi, it brings him in direct subordination to the person who has no claim to be any sort of religious head, except such claim as the Government may give him by virtue of his office.

“Then Sir, there is another point and I feel strongly on this although I owe no sort of allegiance to any math whatsoever. A math, if it is situated elsewhere than in this State, if it has properties in this State, the matadhipathi has got to come here and show his accounts and pay his obeisance to the Commissioner sahib. It seems to me that in all these respects you are fundamentally offending something which a Hindu who is associated with the math has a right to feel offended about. Sir, under the Act, anybody who professes to be a Hindu is eligible for any of the appointments. I looked into the dictionary for the meaning of the word ‘profess’, and I cannot tell you all that is given in the dictionary; but I shall be . . .”

MR. CHAIRMAN:—“I think you were a Professor yourself.”

DR. A. LAKSHMANASWAMI MUDALIYAR:—“But I do not profess anything, Sir. This language of course is copied from the 1926 Act. But I ask, would a Hindu who marries a European, if he professes to be a Hindu, be eligible for all these privileges? Would his wife, if she is a non-Hindu, but professes to be a Hindu, be eligible for all these privileges? Would the children who are the offsprings of mixed marriages, be eligible for these privileges? I am only putting these questions because you have a series of lucrative appointments created under this departmentalised administration; and after all, even the best of these jobs are not such as to be entirely out of the scope of the ambition of anybody who is a citizen of India. Will you admit all people who are citizens of India to these privileges? I only want an answer. Personally, I do not feel strongly either way, because I know some of them are even better Hindus, better than any of us. If, for instance, Dr. Annie Besant wanted to be a Commissioner under the Hindu Religious Endowments Act of 1951, I for one would have welcomed that grand opportunity. But that apart, Sir, let us know what it is we are now committing ourselves to when we say ‘anybody who professes to be a Hindu’? In the old Act, the privileges were very much limited and people did not therefore take note of it. That Act was passed in 1926; much water has run under the bridge since then. Within the last 25 years, the contour and configuration of Delhi has changed and has changed in such a manner that the situation is very different to-day. And if you go there, you will know what sort of people profess to be Hindus and how many of them are really Hindus.

19th January 1951] [Dr. A. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliyar]

“I now come to the Chapter which I think is a very important chapter, the chapter with regard to budget-framing. This is a very difficult thing for a religious institution. One of the clauses here says—

‘The repair and renovation of the buildings connected with the institution the provision made under this clause not being less than ten per centum of its income in the case of an institution assessed to contribution under section 76 for the previous fasli year or an income not exceeding three thousand rupees, and not being less than twenty-five per centum of its income, or ten per centum of its income up to three thousand rupees and the whole of the excess of its income over that amount, whichever is less . . .’

So, this is to be provided for every year. You know the condition of most of the temples. Renovation of temples is certainly a very important thing; but the renovation when it is started, involves so many other complicated processes which in their turn require a very large amount of money. If this is provided for—and the trustee has under the provisions of the Act, to provide for it—the funds will be wasted every year on so-called renovations. The Commissioner of course has got the power to look into it. But on the other hand, if you have a building fund into which this particular amount is deposited from year to year, and if the fund is accumulated so that it may be utilized whenever necessary, then there will be a much better opportunity for the amount to be utilized properly.

“I come, Sir, lastly to the provisions regarding Finance. Here there is a fundamental change. I am not going to take the institutional aspect of it whatsoever. Apart from the fact that there is an increase in the contribution that is demanded from these religious institutions from 1½ per cent to 5 per cent, the Government undertake full responsibility to pay the salaries, allowances, pension and other beneficial remuneration, of the Commissioner, the Deputy Commissioners, Assistant Commissioners and such other officers and servants as are mentioned, and also the cost of audit. Now, Sir, under the old Act, it was necessary for the Hindu Religious Endowments Board to meet the expenditure out of its income. It was necessary for the religious institutions concerned to meet the cost of the audit fees. Now, however, the Government say that they will take a certain percentage and they will out of the general revenues of the tax-payer, meet all these costs. It seems to me that unless this provision applies to all religious institutions, there is certainly some thing fundamentally objectionable in the general tax-payer's money being utilized—whether it will be really utilized is not the point—but it is certainly fundamentally objectionable, for being utilized for a religious institution of a particular denomination. I am not raising the constitutional point, but it seems to me it is a very clear case that has got to be examined. All this trouble would not have arisen at all if the Government had kept aloof and allowed the machinery to be operated upon by quite a different set of people altogether. Now, I should like to know whether it would not have been possible for the Government to set up a machinery like the Public Service Commission—I do not say the present Public Service Commission—but a Service Commission for the determination of the pay, the emoluments, the qualifications, etc., and for the selection of the personnel. Is it right that a secular Government composed of a democratic Legislature with all the beneficial influences that democracy can exercise over that Government, should have this privilege of selecting the personnel, fixing their salaries and giving them their terms and conditions of office? Sir, it was the late Raja of Panagal on a famous occasion when the no confidence motion was moved against his ministry in the year 1924 by Dr. C. R. Reddi, who said—and his words have been ringing always in my ears—in a very pathetic tone almost at the conclusion of his reply: ‘Sir, for every appointment that is made, I make a doubtful friend, but 99 certain enemies’. The surest way for any democratic Government to dig a grave for themselves is to exercise this patronage. Can any Government free themselves from all the imputations that may be made not only by those who have no opportunity to secure these offices, but by members of other religious persuasions, all the imputations which will certainly appear in the Press? And it will certainly be very difficult for them to explain them away every time. I therefore ask them whether it may not be possible to have a statutory body to exercise these functions and control these people and punish and dismiss them. The Hon. Minister for Law is not in a position to dismiss even a peon in his office,—let him contradict me if he can—much less can he dismiss a lower division clerk; they have a right of appeal. Here however the Commissioner has got an absolute power of dismissal of a large number of people. Is it right, Sir? Would it conduce to efficiency of administration? From the little knowledge I have, I am afraid it will not.

“Lastly, Sir,—I am sorry I have taken so much of your time and time of the House—I come to clause 100. Clause 100 is extremely interesting. Members are doubtless aware that whenever the Government pass a measure, they give us a glimpse into the main objects of the Bill and say that the rest of it all is covered by the rules. You will be surprised to know that in clause 100, the rule-making purposes are so many that after having exhausted all the letters of the English alphabet, they have come to double letters (aa). Sir, I do protest against so many provisions being made under the rules. My friend has referred to the preservation of the images of temples. I do not know what rules can be made for the preservation of images in the temples. When I was in Palni some time ago, I found, having visited that place some 42 years ago in 1909, that the image of Palani Andavar was getting thinner and thinner. Some of the Ministers here may say in a jocular mood ‘it is because of food rationing’. It will shock me to hear all that, but that is because of a certain jest. What is this ‘preservation of images in temples’? It may be that they want to see that the images are not lost. But such things are not exactly for being brought under the rule-making powers of the Government.

“Then again, Sir, if the rules are to be made by the Government, one of the functions of the degenerate past Government was that those rules should be placed before the Legislature, not merely for their information but also for their ratification. Under the Act of 1926 there is a provision to say that the different schedules that are there may be modified, but before doing so, they must be published; and the rules made thereunder must be placed before both the Chambers of the Legislature and must be approved by both of them. I do not want to dilate on that point any further.

“One other thing I would say is with reference to clause 106. Clause 106 says—

‘If any difficulty arises in giving effect to the provisions of this Act, the Government may, as occasion may require, by order, do anything which appears to them necessary for the purpose of removing the difficulty.’

You will realise, Sir, they may do anything and at any time. It is a thing that will go on for years and years; while in the corresponding section of the previous Act, it is definitely laid down that what the Government can do is to remove such difficulties as may arise only at the time of the inauguration of the Act and for that time only. Similar provisions are found to exist everywhere. When the Madras University Act of 1923 was passed, it was laid down that the Government might do all such things as might be necessary at the initial stages to implement the provisions of the Act and remove any difficulties that might arise. I say, Sir, seriously that it is too wide a power to be given to the Government.

“I must now apologise to the House for having taken so much of its time. My only object is not to say that the Hindu Religious Endowments should not be well administered, not to suggest that they must not be controlled, but only to plead for a more intelligent, if I may use the word without offence, method and for a spirit of religious tolerance and humility in perpetuating the measures that are necessary. The hand of the Government is always mighty and powerful as of any Government and the more the powers that are vested in the Government, the greater is the danger. To have such power is good, but to wield it is folly. It is only in that spirit that I would appeal to the Government to review this Bill and see that at least in the methods in which they are going to implement it, they do incorporate some of the suggestions that I have ventured to make just now.”

MR. CHAIRMAN:—“We will continue the discussion on Monday. The House will now adjourn and meet again at 2-30 p.m. on Monday next.”

L.A. BILL No. 10 OF 1949.

(As passed by the Assembly.)

A Bill to provide for the better administration and governance of Hindu Religious and Charitable Institutions and Endowments in the State of Madras.

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend and consolidate the law relating to the administration and governance of Hindu Religious and Charitable Institutions and Endowments in the State of Madras; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

CHAPTER I

PRELIMINARY.

1. (1) This Act may be called the Madras Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowments Act, 1950. Short title, extent, application, and commencement.

(2) It extends to the whole of the State of Madras and applies to all Hindu public religious institutions and endowments, including the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanams and the endowments thereof.

Explanation.—In this sub-section, Hindu public religious institutions and endowments do not include Jain religious institutions and endowments.

(3) It shall come into force on such date as the Government may, by notification, in the Fort St. George Gazette appoint.

2. The Government may, by notification in the Fort St. George Gazette, extend to Jain public religious institutions and endowments, all or any of the provisions of this Act and of any rules made thereunder and thereupon the provisions so extended shall apply to such institutions and endowments as if the expressions 'Hindu' and 'Hindus' therein included 'Jain' and 'Jains' respectively: Power to extend Act to Jain religious institutions and endowments.

Provided that before issuing such a notification, the Government shall publish in the Fort St. George Gazette, a notice of their intention to do so, fix a period which shall not be less than two months from the date of publication of the notice, for the persons interested in the institutions and endowments concerned to show cause against the issue of the notification and consider their objections, if any.

3. Where the Government have reason to believe that any Hindu or Jain public charitable endowment is being mismanaged and are satisfied that in the interests of the administration of such charitable endowment it is necessary to extend thereto all or any of the provisions of this Act and of any rules made thereunder, they may, by notification in the Fort St. George Gazette, extend to such charitable endowment the said provisions and thereupon the provisions so extended shall apply to such charitable endowment as if it were a specific endowment: Power to extend Act to charitable endowments.

[19th January 1951]

Provided that before issuing such a notification, the Government shall publish in the Fort St. George Gazette, a notice of their intention to do so, specifying reasons for the action proposed to be taken by them and fixing a period which shall not be less than two months from the date of publication of the notice, for the persons interested in the endowment concerned to show cause against the issue of the notification, and consider their objections, if any.

Exemptions. 4. The Government may, by notification in the Fort St. George Gazette—

(a) exempt from the operation of any of the provisions of this Act or of any rules made thereunder, any religious or charitable institution or endowment, the administration of which is for the time being vested in the Official Trustee or in the Administrator-General; or

(b) vary or cancel such exemption.

Repeals. 5. (1) The Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act, 1926, is hereby repealed. Madras Act II of 1927.

(2) The Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanams Act, 1932, is hereby repealed, but the repeal shall not revive the arrangement made by the Government in 1848 for the management of the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanams or the scheme settled by the Privy Council in Appeal No. 6 of 1906 or the rules framed under such scheme. Madras Act XIX of 1933.

(3) The following enactments shall cease to apply to Hindu religious institutions and endowments, namely:—

(a) The Madras Endowments and Escheats Regulation, 1817; Madras Regulation VII of 1817.

(b) the Religious Endowments Act, 1863; Central Act XX of 1863.

(c) the Charitable Endowments Act, 1890; Central Act VI of 1890.

(d) the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act, 1920; Central Act XIV of 1920.

(e) sections 92 and 93 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. Central Act V of 1908.

Definitions. 6. In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context—

(1) "Area Committee" means, in relation to any temple or specific endowment, the Area Committee constituted under this Act and having jurisdiction over such temple or endowment;

(2) "Assistant Commissioner" means an Assistant Commissioner appointed under section 8;

(3) "Board" means the Board constituted under section 10 of the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act, 1926. Madras Act II of 1927.

19th January 1951]

(4) "charitable endowment" means all property given or endowed for the benefit of, or used as of right by, the Hindu or the Jain community or any section thereof, for the support or maintenance of objects of utility to the said community or section, such as rest-houses, choultries, patasalas, schools and colleges, houses for feeding the poor and institutions for the advancement of education, medical relief and public health or other objects of a like nature; and includes the institution concerned;

(5) "Commissioner" means the Commissioner appointed under section 8;

(6) "Court" means—

(i) in relation to a math or temple situated in the Presidency-town, the Madras City Civil Court;

(ii) in relation to a math or temple situated elsewhere, the Subordinate Judge's Court having jurisdiction over the area in which the math or temple is situated, or if there is no such Court, the District Court having such jurisdiction;

(iii) in relation to a specific endowment attached to a math or temple, the Court which would have jurisdiction as aforesaid in relation to the math or temple;

(iv) in relation to a specific endowment attached to two or more maths or temples, any Court which would have jurisdiction as aforesaid in relation to either or any of such maths or temples;

(7) "Deputy Commissioner" means a Deputy Commissioner appointed under section 8;

(8) "Government" means the State Government;

(9) "Hereditary trustee" means the trustee of a religious institution succession to whose office devolves by hereditary right or is regulated by usage or is specifically provided for by the founder, so long as such scheme of succession is in force;

(10) "math" means a Hindu religious institution with properties attached thereto and presided over by a person whose duty it is to engage himself in imparting religious instruction or rendering spiritual service to a body of disciples or who exercises or claims to exercise spiritual headship over such a body; and includes places of religious worship or instruction which are appurtenant to the institution;

Explanation.—Where the headquarters of a math are outside the State but the math has properties situated within it, control shall be exercised over the math in accordance with the provisions of this Act, in so far as the properties of the math situated within the State are concerned;

[19th January 1951]

(11) "person having interest" means—

(a) in the case of a math, a disciple of the math or a person of the religious persuasion to which the math belongs;

(b) in the case of a temple, a person who is entitled to attend at or is in the habit of attending the performance of worship or service in the temple, or who is entitled to partake or is in the habit of partaking in the benefit of the distribution of gifts thereat;

(c) in the case of a specific endowment, a person who is entitled to attend at or is in the habit of attending the performance of the service or charity, or who is entitled to partake or is in the habit of partaking in the benefit of the charity;

(12) "prescribed" means prescribed by rules made by the Government under this Act;

(13) "religious charity" means a public charity associated with a Hindu festival or observance of a religious character, whether it be connected with a math or temple or not;

(14) "religious endowment" or "endowment" means all property belonging to or given or endowed for the support of maths or temples, or given or endowed for the performance of any service or charity of a public nature connected therewith or of any other religious charity; and includes the institution concerned and also the premises thereof, but does not include gifts of property made as personal gifts to the archaka, service-holder or other employee of a religious institution.

Explanation (1).—Any inam granted to an archaka, service-holder or other employee of a religious institution for the performance of any service or charity in or connected with a religious institution shall not be deemed to be a personal gift to the archaka, service-holder or employee but shall be deemed to be a religious endowment.

Explanation (2).—All property which belonged to, or was given or endowed for the support of a religious institution, or which was given or endowed for the performance of any service or charity of a public nature connected therewith or of any other religious charity shall be deemed to be a "religious endowment" or "endowment" within the meaning of this definition, notwithstanding that, before or after the commencement of this Act, the religious institution has ceased to exist or ceased to be used as a place of religious worship or instruction or the service or charity has ceased to be performed:

Provided that this Explanation shall not be deemed to apply in respect of any property which vested in any person before the commencement of this Act, by the operation of the law of limitation.

[19th January 1951]

(15) "religious institution" means a math, temple or specific endowment;

(16) "specific endowment" means any property or money endowed for the performance of any specific service or charity in a math or temple, or for the performance of any other religious charity, but does not include an inam of the nature described in Explanation (1) to clause (14);

(17) "temple" means a place by whatever designation known, used as a place of public religious worship, and dedicated to, or for the benefit of or used as of right by, the Hindu community or any section thereof, as a place of public religious worship;

(18) "Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanams" or "Devasthanams" mean the temples specified in Schedule II and the endowments thereof and shall include the educational institutions referred to in Schedule III;

(19) "trustee" means any person or body by whatever designation known in whom or in which the administration of a religious institution is vested, and includes any person or body who or which is liable as if such person or body were a trustee.

CHAPTER II.

(2) The Commissioner may delegate any of the powers conferred or duties imposed on him by or under this Act [including the powers and duties of an Assistant Commissioner which may be exercised by the Commissioner under the proviso to section 11, sub-section (2), but not including the powers and duties of the Commissioner under section 18, 19, 38, 39, 52, 56, 61, 64 or 76 (2)] in respect of any area or of any class or group of institutions in the State or any area therein to a Deputy Commissioner subject to such restrictions and control as the Government may, by general or special order, lay down and subject also to such limitations and conditions, if any, as may be specified in the order of delegation.

[19th January 1951]

Territorial jurisdiction and powers and duties of Assistant Commissioners.

11. (1) The Commissioner shall, with the previous approval of the Government, divide the State into divisions, each of which shall be in the charge of an Assistant Commissioner.

(2) An Assistant Commissioner shall exercise such powers and discharge such duties as are assigned to him by or under this Act in respect of his division:

Provided that the Commissioner may, by order in writing, declare that the exercise and discharge of all or any of such powers and duties shall be subject to such exceptions, limitations and conditions as may be specified in the order, and may himself exercise or discharge any power or duty so excepted.

(3) The Commissioner may delegate to an Assistant Commissioner any of the powers conferred or duties imposed on the Commissioner by or under this Act [other than the powers and duties referred to in section 18, 19, 38, 39, 52, 56, 61, 64 or 76 (2)] in respect of the division of the Assistant Commissioner or of any institutions or any class or group of institutions in that division, subject to such restrictions and control as the Government may, by general or special order, lay down and subject also to such limitations and conditions, if any, as may be specified in the order of delegation.

Area Committees.

12. (1) The Government—

(a) shall, as soon as may be after the commencement of this Act, by notification in the Fort St. George Gazette, constitute an Area Committee for all temples situated in an Assistant Commissioner's division or part thereof other than temples included in the list published under section 38; and

(b) may likewise abolish any Area Committee constituted under clause (a), provided that before doing so, a reasonable opportunity shall be given to the Committee to show cause against its abolition.

(2) An Area Committee shall have jurisdiction over specific endowments attached to the temples for which it is constituted, other than specific endowments included in the list published under section 38:

Provided that where a specific endowment is attached to two or more temples comprised within the jurisdiction of two or more Area Committees, the Commissioner shall decide as to which of the Area Committees shall have jurisdiction over the specific endowment:

[19th January 1951]

Provided further that where a specific endowment is attached partly to one or more temples included in the list published under section 38 and partly to one or more temples not so included, only the Commissioner shall have jurisdiction over the specific endowment and no Area Committee shall have such jurisdiction.

13. (1) Every Area Committee shall consist of such number of members as may be appointed by the Government, not being less than three nor more than five.

Strength of Area Committees and term of office and disqualifications of members.

(2) Save as otherwise expressly provided in this section, a member of an Area Committee shall be entitled to hold office for three years from the date on which his appointment is notified in the Fort St. George Gazette.

(3) A person shall be disqualified for being appointed as, or for being, a member of an Area Committee—

(a) if he does not profess the Hindu religion;

(b) if he has applied or applies to be, or has been, or is, adjudicated an insolvent;

(c) if he is of unsound mind, a deaf-mute or suffering from contagious leprosy;

(d) if he is a trustee of, or an office-holder or a servant attached to, or a person in receipt of any emolument or perquisite from, any temple or specific endowment over which the Area Committee has jurisdiction, or if he belongs to a joint Hindu family a member of which is such a trustee, office-holder or servant or a person in receipt of any such emolument or perquisite;

(e) if he has been sentenced by a criminal court to transportation or to imprisonment for a period of more than six months, for any offence other than an offence not involving moral turpitude, such sentence not having been cancelled or reduced to a period of six months or less, or the offence not having been pardoned, provided that the Government may direct that such sentence shall not operate as a disqualification.

(4) A person shall also be disqualified for being appointed as a member of an Area Committee if he is already a member of some other Area Committee.

(5) A member of an Area Committee shall also cease to hold office—

(a) if he absents himself from three consecutive meetings of the Committee:

Provided that when a person who ceased to be a member by reason of such absence, applies for restoration within one month from the date of the last of the three meetings, the Committee may, at the meeting next after the receipt of such application, restore him to his office of member but a member shall not be so restored more than twice during his term of office, or

[19th January 1951]

(b) if he resigns his office by giving notice in writing to the Government.

Chairman
of Area Committee.

14. (1) The Assistant Commissioner of the division for which or part of which an Area Committee is constituted shall be its Chairman and shall be entitled to preside over its meetings and take part in its proceedings, but shall not be entitled to vote.

(2) He shall forward to the Commissioner a copy of the minutes of the proceedings at every meeting of the Area Committee within a week from the date of the meeting.

Power of Government to make rules.

15. The Government may make rules regarding the convening of meeting of Area Committees, the quorum for, and the conduct of business at, such meetings, and all matters relating to the transaction of their business.

Act of Area
Committee not to be invalidated by informality.

16. No act of an Area Committee shall be deemed to be invalid by reason only of a defect in its constitution or on the ground that the Chairman or any member thereof was disqualified for, or had ceased to hold, his office, or by reason of such act having been done during the period of any vacancy in the office of the Chairman or any member of such Committee.

Performance of functions of Area
Committee
on abolition.

17. Where an Area Committee has been abolished under clause (b) of sub-section (1) of section 12, a new Area Committee shall be constituted within six months of its abolition and till then its powers and duties shall be exercised and discharged by the Assistant Commissioner concerned.

Power of Commissioner to call for records and pass
orders.

18. (1) The Commissioner may call for and examine the record of any Deputy or Assistant Commissioner, of any Area Committee, or of any trustee not being the trustee of a math or of a specific endowment attached to a math, in respect of any proceeding under this Act (not being a proceeding in respect of which a suit or an appeal to a Court is provided by this Act), to satisfy himself as to the regularity of such proceeding, or the correctness, legality or propriety of any decision or order passed therein.

(2) If any such decision or order has been passed by any Deputy or Assistant Commissioner, or by the trustee of any religious institution other than one included in the list published under section 38, and it appears to the Commissioner that the decision or order should be modified, annulled, reversed or remitted for reconsideration, he may pass orders accordingly.

(3) (a) If any such decision or order has been passed by any Area Committee or by the trustee of any religious institution included in the list published under section 38, the

[19th January 1951]

Commissioner may, if he thinks fit, remit the matter together with his observations in regard thereto, to the Committee or trustee for reconsideration of the decision or order and report to the Commissioner within a time to be specified by him in this behalf.

(b) On receipt of, and after considering, such report, it shall be open to the Commissioner to modify, annul or reverse the decision or order, or the decision or order as revised after such reconsideration, as the case may be.

(c) If the report is not received by the Commissioner within the time specified or such further time as may be granted by him, the Commissioner may modify, annul or reverse the decision or order of the Area Committee or trustee, as the case may be.

(4) The Commissioner shall not pass any order prejudicial to any party under sub-section (2) or clause (b) or clause (c) of sub-section (3), without hearing him or giving him a reasonable opportunity of being heard.

(5) The Commissioner may stay the execution of any decision or order of the nature referred to in sub-section (1), pending the exercise of his powers under sub-section (2) or sub-section (3) in respect thereof.

19. (1) The Commissioner shall have power at any stage—

(a) to transfer any proceeding pending before a Deputy or an Assistant Commissioner to his own file and dispose of it himself, or

(b) to transfer it to another Deputy or Assistant Commissioner for disposal.

(2) If the Commissioner is satisfied that a Deputy or an Assistant Commissioner has failed to exercise any power or discharge any duty which he ought to have exercised or discharged, the Commissioner may himself exercise such power or discharge such duty.

(3) If the Commissioner is satisfied that an Area Committee—

(a) has failed to exercise any power or discharge any duty which it ought to have exercised or discharged, or

(b) is unable for any reason to exercise any power or discharge any duty, the Commissioner may himself exercise such power or discharge such duty or authorize the Assistant Commissioner to do so:

Provided that in cases falling under clause (a), the Commissioner shall first fix a period for the exercise of the power or the performance of the duty by the Area Committee and shall exercise the right conferred on him by this sub-section only if the power is not exercised or the duty is not performed by the Area Committee within the period so fixed.

[10th January 1951]

(4) Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act, where the office of a Deputy or an Assistant Commissioner is vacant, the Commissioner may, until the vacancy is filled—

(a) himself exercise the powers and discharge the duties assigned by or under this Act to the Deputy or Assistant Commissioner, or

(b) authorize another Deputy or Assistant Commissioner to exercise the said powers and discharge the said duties.

(5) Any party aggrieved by an order of the Commissioner under sub-section (1) (a), (2), (3) or (4) (a), not being an order against which a suit or an appeal to a Court is provided in this Act, may appeal to the Government within three months from the date of the receipt of the order by him :

Provided that the Government shall not pass any order prejudicial to any party without hearing him or giving him a reasonable opportunity of being heard.

CHAPTER III.

RELIGIOUS INSTITUTIONS.

General Provisions.

Powers and duties of the Commissioner in respect of religious endowments.

20. Subject to the provisions of this Act, the administration of all religious endowments shall be subject to the general superintendence and control of the Commissioner; and such superintendence and control shall include the power to pass any orders which may be deemed necessary to ensure that such endowments are properly administered and that their income is duly appropriated for the purposes for which they were founded or exist.

Power to enter religious institutions.

21. (1) The Commissioner, Deputy and Assistant Commissioners and such other officers as may be authorized by the Commissioner or the Area Committee in this behalf shall have power to enter the premises of any religious institution or any place of worship for the purpose of exercising any power conferred, or discharging any duty imposed, by or under this Act.

(2) If any such officer is resisted in the exercise of such power or discharge of such duty, the Magistrate having jurisdiction shall, on a written requisition from such officer, direct any police officer not below the rank of Sub-Inspector to render such help as may be necessary to enable the officer to exercise such power or discharge such duty.

(3) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorize any person who is not a Hindu to enter the premises or place situated in sub-section (1) or any part thereof.

[19th January 1951]

22. No person may succeed or be appointed to, or hold, the office of the trustee of a religious institution—

(a) unless he professes the Hindu religion, and

(b) except in the case of a hereditary trustee, unless he is not less than twenty-five and not more than seventy years of age.

Trustees to be Hindus and within certain limits of age.

23. The trustee of a religious institution shall be bound to obey all lawful orders issued under the provisions of this Act by the Government, the Commissioner, the Deputy Commissioner, the Area Committee or the Assistant Commissioner.

Trustee bound to obey orders issued under Act.

Madras Act V of 1947.

24. (1) Subject to the provisions of the Madras Temple Entry Authorization Act, 1947, the trustee of every religious institution is bound to administer its affairs and to apply its funds and properties in accordance with the terms of the trust, the usage of the institution and all lawful directions which a competent authority may issue in respect thereof and as carefully as a man of ordinary prudence would deal with such affairs, funds and properties if they were his own.

Care required of trustees and his powers.

(2) A trustee shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, be entitled to exercise all powers incidental to the provident and beneficial administration of the religious institution and to do all things necessary for the due performance of the duties imposed on him.

(3) A trustee shall not be entitled to spend the funds of the religious institution for meeting any costs, charges or expenses incurred by him in any suit, appeal or application or other proceeding for, or incidental to, his removal from office or the taking of any disciplinary action against him :

Provided that the trustee may reimburse himself in respect of such costs, charges or expenses if he is specifically permitted to do so by an order passed under section 88.

25. (1) For every religious institution, there shall be prepared and maintained a register showing—

Preparation of register for all institutions.

(a) the names of past and present trustees and particulars as to the custom, if any, regarding succession to the office of trustee;

(b) particulars of the scheme of administration and of the dittam or scale of expenditure;

(c) the names of all offices to which any salary, emolument or perquisite is attached and the nature, time and conditions of service in each case;

(d) the jewels, gold, silver, precious stones, vessels and utensils, and other movables belonging to the institution, with their estimated value;

(e) particulars of all other endowments of the institution and of all title-deeds and other documents;

[19th January 1951]

(f) particulars of the idols and other images in or connected with the institution, whether intended for worship or for being carried in processions;

(g) such other particulars as may be required by the Commissioner.

(2) The register shall be prepared, signed and verified by the trustee of the institution concerned or by his authorized agent and submitted by him to the Commissioner, directly in the case of a math, through the Area Committee, in case the institution is subject to the jurisdiction of an Area Committee, and through the Assistant Commissioner in other cases, within three months from the commencement of this Act or from the founding of the institution, as the case may be, or within such further period as may be allowed by the Commissioner, the Area Committee or the Assistant Commissioner :

Provided that this sub-section shall not apply where a register so signed and verified has been submitted to the Board before the commencement of this Act.

(3) The Area Committee or the Assistant Commissioner, if the register is submitted through it or him, may, after such inquiry as it or he may consider necessary, recommend such alterations, omissions or additions in the register as it or he may think fit.

(4) The Commissioner may, after receiving the register and the recommendations of the Area Committee or of the Assistant Commissioner with respect thereto and making such further inquiry as he may consider necessary, direct the trustee to make such alterations, omissions or additions in the register as the Commissioner may deem fit.

(5) The trustee shall carry out the orders of the Commissioner and then submit three copies of the register as corrected to the Commissioner for approval.

(6) One copy of the register as approved by the Commissioner shall be furnished to the trustee and one to the Area Committee or the Assistant Commissioner concerned, if any.

Annual verification of the register.

26. The trustee or his authorized agent shall scrutinize the entries in the register every year and submit to the Commissioner for his approval, directly or through the Area Committee or through the Assistant Commissioner, as the case may require, a verified statement showing the alterations, omissions or additions required in the register; and the provisions of sub-sections (3) to (6) of section 25 shall apply in relation to such statement as they apply in relation to a register.

Trustee to furnish accounts, returns, reports, etc.

27. (1) The trustee of every religious institution shall furnish to the Commissioner such accounts, returns, reports or other information relating to the administration of the institution, its funds, property or income, or moneys connected therewith, or the appropriation thereof, as the Commissioner may require and at such time and in such form as he may direct.

[19th January 1951]

(2) The powers conferred by sub-section (1) may also be exercised by the Assistant Commissioner in the case of religious institutions other than maths, and by the Area Committee in the case of institutions subject to its jurisdiction.

28. (1) The Commissioner or any officer or other person deputed by the Commissioner in this behalf may inspect all movable and immovable property belonging to, and all records, correspondence, plans, accounts and other documents relating to, any religious institution. Inspection of property and documents.

(2) The powers conferred by sub-section (1) may also be exercised, in the case of religious institutions other than maths, by the Assistant Commissioner, and in the case of institutions over which an Area Committee has jurisdiction, by any member of the Committee authorized by it in this behalf.

(3) It shall be the duty of the trustee of the institution concerned and all officers and servants working under him, his agent and any person having concern in the administration of the institution, to afford all such assistance and facilities as may be necessary or reasonably required in regard to any inspection made in pursuance of sub-section (1) or sub-section (2), and also to produce for inspection any movable property or document referred to in sub-section (1) if so required.

29. (1) Any exchange, sale or mortgage and any lease for a term exceeding five years of any immovable property belonging to, or given or endowed for the purposes of, any religious institution shall be null and void unless it is sanctioned by the Commissioner as being necessary or beneficial to the institution. Alienation of immovable trust property.

Provided that before such sanction is accorded, the particulars relating to the proposed transaction shall be published in such manner as may be prescribed, inviting objections and suggestions with respect thereto; and all objections and suggestions received from the trustee or other persons having interest shall be duly considered by the Commissioner.

(2) When according such sanction, the Commissioner may impose such conditions and give such direction as he may deem necessary regarding the utilization of the amount raised by the transaction, the investment thereof and in the case of a mortgage, regarding the discharge of the same within a reasonable period.

(3) A copy of the order made by the Commissioner under this section shall be communicated to the Government and to the trustee and shall be published in such manner as may be prescribed.

[19th January 1951]

(4) The trustee may within three months from the date of his receipt of a copy of the order, and any person having interest may within three months from the date of the publication of the order, appeal to the Government to modify the order or set it aside.

(5) Nothing contained in this section shall apply to the inams referred to in section 35.

Authority of trustee to incur expenditure for securing the health, etc., of pilgrims and worshippers and for the training of archakas, etc.

30. (1) The trustee of a religious institution may, out of the funds in his charge, after making adequate provision for the purposes referred to in section 70, sub-section (2), incur expenditure—

(a) on arrangements for securing the health, safety or convenience of disciples, pilgrims or worshippers resorting to the institution; and

(b) for the training of archakas, adhyapakas, veda-parayanikas and othuvans.

(2) In incurring such expenditure, the trustee shall be guided by such general or special instructions as may be given by the Commissioner or in the case of an institution over which an Area Committee has jurisdiction, also by such Committee.

Utilization of surplus funds.

31. (1) If after making adequate provision for the purposes referred to in section 70, sub-section (2), and also for the arrangements and the training referred to in section 30, sub-section (1), there is a surplus in the income of the institution, the trustee thereof may, with the previous sanction in writing of the Deputy Commissioner, appropriate such surplus or any portion thereof for all or any of the purposes specified in section 59, sub-section (1):

Provided that before according such sanction, the Deputy Commissioner shall publish the particulars relating to the proposal of the trustee in such manner as may be prescribed, invite objections and suggestions with respect thereto and consider all objections and suggestions received from persons having interest:

Provided further that the sanction aforesaid shall be published in such manner as may be prescribed.

(2) Any person having interest may, within such time as may be prescribed, appeal to the Commissioner against the sanction accorded by the Deputy Commissioner under sub-section (1).

Enforcement of service or charity in certain cases.

32. (1) Where a specific endowment attached to a math or temple consists merely of a charge on property and there is failure in the due performance of the service or charity, the trustee of the math or temple concerned may require the person in possession of the property on which the endowment is a charge, to pay the expenses incurred or likely to be incurred in causing the service or charity to be performed otherwise. In default of such person making payment as required, the Deputy Commissioner may, on the application of the trustee and after giving the person in possession a reasonable opportunity of stating his objections in regard thereto, by order, determine the amount payable to the trustee.

(2) Where the person in possession of the property on which the endowment is a charge is not the person responsible in law for the performance of the service or charity and any amount is paid by or recovered from the person in possession, the Deputy Commissioner may, on the application of the person in possession and after giving the person responsible in law a reasonable opportunity of stating his objections in regard thereto, by order, require the person responsible in law to pay to the person in possession the amount so paid or recovered.

(3) Against an order of the Deputy Commissioner under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2), the trustee or the person affected may, within two months from the date of the receipt of the order by him, appeal to the Commissioner.

(4) On application by the trustee to the Collector of the district in which the property referred to in sub-section (1) is situated, or on application by the person in possession to the Collector of a district in which is situated any property of the person responsible in law, as the case may be, the Collector shall recover from the person in possession or the person responsible in law, as the case may be, the amount specified in the order of the Deputy Commissioner as modified by the order of the Commissioner, if any, and the expenses of such recovery, as if they were arrears of land revenue and pay to the trustee or, as the case may be, to the person in possession, the amount due to him.

33. The trustee of a specific endowment made for the performance of any service or charity connected with a math or temple shall perform such service or charity subject to the general superintendence of the trustee of the math or temple and shall obey all lawful orders issued by him.

34. (1) (a) (i) Where the remuneration for any service to be performed by a devadasi in a temple consists of lands granted or continued in respect of, or annexed to, such service by the Government, the Government shall enfranchise the said lands from the condition of service, by the imposition of quit-rent.

(ii) Where the remuneration for such service consists of an assignment of land revenue so granted or continued, the Government shall enfranchise such assignment of revenue from the condition of service:

Provided that where, at the time when proceedings are taken under this sub-clause, the devadasi is herself the Power of trustee of math or temple over trustees of specific endowments. Enfranchisement or freeing of lands, etc., held by a devadasi on condition of service in a temple.

[19th January 1951]

owner of the lands in respect of which the assignment of revenue has been made, enfranchisement shall be effected and quit-rent imposed in the manner laid down in sub-clause (i).

(iii) Where the remuneration for such service consists in part of lands and in part of an assignment of land revenue, enfranchisement of the lands shall be effected in the manner laid down in sub-clause (i) and of the assignment of the land revenue in the manner laid down in sub-clause (ii).

Explanation.—For the purposes of this clause, a grant shall be deemed to consist of an assignment of land revenue in all cases in which the devadasi herself is not, at the time specified in the proviso to sub-clause (ii), the owner of the lands in question.

(b) Enfranchisement under clause (a) shall be effected in accordance with such rules as the Government may make in this behalf and shall take effect as and from such date as they may fix.

(2) Where the remuneration for such service consists, in whole or in part, of lands or of produce of lands not falling under sub-section (1), the Government shall direct the Collector to determine the amount of rent payable on the lands or the produce in question. The Collector shall thereupon, after giving notice to the party concerned and holding such enquiry as may be prescribed by the Government, by an order, determine the amount of rent, and in doing so, he shall have due regard to—

(a) the rent payable by the tenant for lands of a similar description and with similar advantages in the same village or neighbouring villages; and

(b) the improvements, if any, effected by the devadasi in respect of the lands.

Such order shall be communicated to the parties concerned and also published in the manner prescribed.

(3) The amount of rent fixed by the Collector under sub-section (2) may be questioned by petition presented to the Board of Revenue within three months of the date of the publication of the order under the said sub-section but subject to the result of such petition, the order of the Collector fixing the amount of rent under sub-section (2) shall be final and shall not be liable to be questioned in any court of law:

Provided, however, that the Board of Revenue shall have power on sufficient grounds to entertain a petition presented after expiration of the period of three months.

(4) While determining the rent under sub-section (2), the Collector shall fix a date from which the order shall take effect and such lands or produce shall be deemed to have been freed from the condition of service on and from the date so fixed.

[19th January 1951]

(5) No obligation to render any service relating to any temple to which any devadasi may be subject by reason of any grant of land or assignment of land revenue or produce derived from land, shall be enforceable when such land, assignment or produce is enfranchised or freed, as the case may be, in the manner hereinbefore provided.

(6) No order passed under sub-section (1), (2) or (3) shall operate as a bar to the trial of any suit or issue relating to the right to enjoy the land, or assignment of land revenue or produce derived from land, as the case may be.

(7) (a) The quit-rent imposed under sub-section (1) shall be payable to the temple concerned.

(b) The assignment of land revenue enfranchised under sub-section (1), or the rent fixed under sub-sections (2) and (3), as the case may be, shall be payable to the devadasi concerned during her lifetime and after her death to the temple concerned.

(8) For the purpose of this section, "devadasi" shall mean any Hindu unmarried female, who is dedicated to a temple.

(9) Where any inam is granted for a service which is auxiliary to the service to be performed by a devadasi in a temple, such inam shall be enfranchised or freed from the condition of service, as if it were a devadasi inam: and the provisions of sub-sections (1) to (8) shall apply accordingly.

35. (1) Any exchange, gift, sale or mortgage and any lease for a term exceeding five years, of the whole or any portion of any inam granted for the support or maintenance of a religious institution or for the performance of a charity or service connected therewith or of any other religious charity and made, confirmed or recognized by the Government shall be null and void: Resumption and re-grant of inam granted for the performance of any charity or service.

Provided that any transaction of the nature aforesaid (not being a gift) may be sanctioned by the Government as being necessary or beneficial to the institution.

Explanation.—Nothing contained in this sub-section shall affect or derogate from the rights and obligations of the landholder and tenant in respect of any land which is ryoti land as defined in the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908.

(2) (a) The Collector may, on his own motion, or on the application of the trustee of the religious institution or of the Commissioner or of any person having interest in the institution who has obtained the consent of such trustee or the Commissioner, by order, resume the whole or any part of any such inam, on one or more of the following grounds, namely:—

(i) that except in the case referred to in the proviso to sub-section (1), the holder of such inam or part or the trustee of the institution has made an exchange, gift, sale or mortgage of such inam or part or any portion thereof or has granted a lease of the same or any portion thereof for a term exceeding five years, or

[19th January 1951]

(ii) that the religious institution has ceased to exist or the charity or service in question has in any way become impossible of performance, or

(iii) that the holder of such inam or part has failed to perform or make the necessary arrangements for performing, in accordance with the custom or usage of the institution, the charity or service for performing which the inam had been made, confirmed or recognized as aforesaid, or any part of the said charity or service, as the case may be.

When passing an order under this clause, the Collector shall determine whether such inam or the inam comprising such part, as the case may be, is a grant of both the melvaram and the kudivaram or only of the melvaram.

Provided that in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the Collector shall presume that any minor inam is a grant of both the melvaram and the kudivaram.

(b) Before passing an order under clause (a), the Collector shall give notice to the trustee, to the Commissioner, to the inamdar concerned, to the person in possession of the inam where he is not the inamdar and to the alienee, if any, of the inam; the Collector shall also publish a copy of such notice in such manner as may be prescribed and such publication shall be deemed to be sufficient notice to every other person likely to be affected by such order; and the Collector shall hear the objections, if any, of the persons to whom such notice is given or deemed to be given and hold such inquiry as may be prescribed.

Explanation.—Where only a part of the inam is affected, notice shall be given under this clause to the holder of such part as well as to the holder or holders of the other part or parts, to the person in possession of every such part where he is not the holder thereof, and to the alienee, if any, of every such part; and the objections of all such persons shall be heard by the Collector.

(c) A copy of every order passed under clause (a) shall be communicated to each of the persons mentioned in clause (b), and shall also be published in the manner prescribed.

(d) (i) Any party aggrieved by an order of the Collector under clause (a) may appeal to the District Collector within such time as may be prescribed, and on such appeal the District Collector may, after giving notice to the Commissioner and each of the persons mentioned in clause (b) and after holding such inquiry as may be prescribed, pass an order confirming, modifying or cancelling the order of the Collector.

[19th January 1951]

(ii) The order of the District Collector on such appeal, or the order of the Collector under clause (a) where no appeal is preferred under sub-clause (i) to the District Collector within the time prescribed, shall be final:

Provided that where there has been an appeal under sub-clause (i) and it has been decided by the District Collector or where there has been no appeal to the District Collector and the time for preferring an appeal has expired, any party aggrieved by the final order of the District Collector or the Collector, as the case may be, may file a suit in a civil court for determining whether the inam comprises both the melvaram and the kudivaram or only the melvaram. Such a suit shall be instituted within six months from the date of the order of the District Collector on appeal where there has been an appeal under sub-clause (i), or from the date of the expiry of the period prescribed under sub-clause (i) for an appeal to the District Collector where there has been no such appeal.

(e) Except as otherwise provided in clause (d), an order of resumption passed under this section shall not be liable to be questioned in any court of law.

(f) Where any inam or part of any inam is resumed under this section, the Collector or the District Collector, as the case may be, shall, by order, re-grant such inam or part—

(i) as an endowment to the religious institution concerned, or

(ii) in case of resumption on the ground that the religious institution has ceased to exist or that the charity or service in question has in any way become impossible of performance, as an endowment for such religious, educational or charitable institution as the Commissioner may recommend.

(g) The order of re-grant made under clause (f) shall, on application made to the Collector within the time prescribed, be executed by him in the manner prescribed.

(h) Nothing in this section shall affect the operation of section 34.

36. Notwithstanding anything contained in any scheme Office-holders settled or deemed to be settled under this Act or in any decree and servants of religious institutions or order of a court, or any custom or usage to the contrary, no office-holder or servant of a religious institution shall have not to be in the right to be in possession of the jewels or other valuables possession of belonging to the religious institution except under such conditions and safeguards as the Commissioner may, by general or conditions. special order, direct.

[19th January 1951]

Religious institutions other than maths or specific endowments attached thereto.

Sections 38 to 51 not to apply to maths or specific endowments attached to maths.

Commissioner to publish list of certain institutions.

38. The Commissioner shall publish in the prescribed manner a list of the religious institutions whose annual income as calculated for the purposes of the levy of contribution under section 76 is not less than twenty thousand rupees, and may from time to time modify such list in the prescribed manner :

Provided that the Commissioner shall not be bound to remove any institution from such list unless its annual income calculated as aforesaid has fallen below twenty thousand rupees for three consecutive years.

Trustees and their number and term of office.

39. (1) Where a religious institution included in the list published under section 38 or over which no Area Committee has jurisdiction, has no hereditary trustee, the Commissioner shall constitute a Board of Trustees consisting of not less than three and not more than five persons appointed by him.

(2) Where any such institution has, at the commencement of this Act, both a hereditary trustee or trustees and a non-hereditary trustee or trustees, the Commissioner shall have power to appoint the non-hereditary trustee or trustees as and when vacancies arise in their number.

(3) Every trustee appointed under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) shall hold office for a term of five years, unless in the meanwhile the trustee is removed or dismissed or his resignation is accepted by the Commissioner or he otherwise ceases to be a trustee.

Chairman.

40. (1) In the case of a religious institution for which a Board of Trustees is constituted under section 39, sub-section (1), the Board shall elect one of its number to be its Chairman.

(2) In the case of any other religious institution having more than one trustee, the trustees of such institution shall elect one of their number to be the Chairman.

(3) A Chairman elected under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) shall hold office for such period as may be prescribed.

Power of Area Committee.

41. (1) In the case of any religious institution over which an Area Committee has jurisdiction, the Area Committee shall have the same power to appoint trustees as is vested in the Commissioner in the case of a religious institution referred to in section 39.

[19th January 1951]

Provided that the Area Committee may, in the case of any institution which has no hereditary trustee, appoint a single trustee.

(2) The provisions of section 39, sub-section (8), and section 40, shall apply to the trustee or trustees appointed, or the Board of Trustees constituted, by the Area Committee as they apply in relation to the trustee or trustees appointed, or the Board of Trustees constituted, by the Commissioner.

42. The power to appoint trustees under section 39 or section 41 shall be exercisable notwithstanding that the scheme, if any, settled, or deemed under this Act to have been settled for the institution contains provision to the contrary, notwithstanding provision in scheme.

43. In making appointments of trustees under section 39 or 41, the Commissioner or the Area Committee, as the case may be, shall have due regard to the claims of persons belonging to the religious denomination for whose benefit the institution concerned is chiefly maintained.

44. Every non-hereditary trustee lawfully holding office at the commencement of this Act, shall be deemed to have been duly appointed trustee under this Act for the residue of his term of office at such commencement.

45. (1) The Deputy Commissioner in the case of any religious institution over which an Area Committee has jurisdiction, and the Commissioner in the case of any other religious institution may suspend, remove or dismiss any hereditary or non-hereditary trustee or trustees thereof—

(a) for persistent default in the submission of budgets, accounts, reports or returns, or

(b) for wilful disobedience of any lawful order issued under the provisions of this Act by the Government, the Commissioner or Deputy Commissioner, the Area Committee or the Assistant Commissioner, or

(c) for any malfeasance, misfeasance, breach of trust or neglect of duty in respect of the trust, or

(d) for any misappropriation of, or improper dealing with, the properties of the institution, or

(e) for unsoundness of mind or other mental or physical defect, or infirmity which unfits him for discharging the functions of the trustee.

(2) When it is proposed to take action under sub-section (1), the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner, as the case may be, shall frame charges against the trustee concerned and give him an opportunity of meeting such charges, of testing the evidence adduced against him and of adducing evidence in his favour; and the order of suspension, removal or dismissal shall state the charges framed against the trustee, his explanation and the finding on each charge with the reasons therefor :

[19th January 1951]

Provided that the Deputy Commissioner shall also consult the Area Committee before passing the final order under sub-section (1).

(3) Pending the disposal of the charges framed against the trustee, the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner may place the trustee under suspension and appoint a fit person to discharge the functions of the trustee.

(4) It shall be open to an Assistant Commissioner to move the Deputy Commissioner to take action under sub-section (1) in respect of any trustee of an institution over which an Area Committee has jurisdiction, and to place the trustee under suspension pending the orders of the Deputy Commissioner under sub-section (3).

(5) A trustee who is suspended, removed or dismissed under sub-section (1), may, within one month from the date of the receipt of the order of suspension, removal or dismissal, appeal against the order to the Commissioner if it was passed by a Deputy Commissioner and to the Government if it was passed by the Commissioner.

Disqualifications of trustees.

46. (1) A non-hereditary trustee shall cease to hold his office if he—

(a) is sentenced by a criminal court to transportation or to imprisonment for a period of more than six months, for any offence other than an offence not involving moral turpitude, such sentence not having been cancelled or reduced to a period of six months or less, or the offence not having been pardoned, provided that the Government may direct that such sentence shall not operate as a disqualification; or

(b) applies to be adjudicated or is adjudicated an insolvent.

(2) In cases of doubt or dispute, the Deputy Commissioner shall determine whether a trustee is disqualified under sub-section (1) or not.

(3) If a hereditary trustee becomes subject to any of the disqualifications described in sub-section (1), the Deputy Commissioner may supersede the trustee.

(4) Any person affected by an order of the Deputy Commissioner under sub-section (2) or sub-section (3) may, within one month from the date of the receipt of the order by him, appeal against the order to the Commissioner.

Filling up of vacancies in the office of hereditary trustee.

47. (1) When a permanent vacancy occurs in the office of the hereditary trustee of a religious institution, the next in the line of succession shall be entitled to succeed to the office.

(2) When a temporary vacancy occurs in such an office by reason of the suspension of the hereditary trustee under section 45, sub-section (1), or by reason of his supersession under section 46, sub-section (3), the next in the line of succession shall be entitled to succeed and discharge the functions of the trustee until his disability ceases.

[19th January 1951]

(3) When a permanent or temporary vacancy occurs in such an office and there is a dispute respecting the right of succession to the office, or when such vacancy cannot be filled up immediately, or when a hereditary trustee is a minor and has no guardian fit and willing to act as such or there is a dispute respecting the person who is entitled to act as guardian, or when a hereditary trustee is by reason of unsoundness of mind or other mental or physical defect or infirmity unfit for discharging the functions of the trustee, the Deputy Commissioner may appoint a fit person to discharge the functions of the trustee of the institution until the disability of the hereditary trustee ceases or another hereditary trustee succeeds to the office or for such shorter term as the Deputy Commissioner may direct.

Explanation.—In making any appointment under this sub-section, the Deputy Commissioner shall have due regard to the claims of members of the family, if any, entitled to the succession.

(4) Any person affected by an order of the Deputy Commissioner under sub-section (3) may, within one month from the date of the receipt of the order by him, appeal against the order to the Commissioner.

(5) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to affect anything contained in the Madras Court of Wards Act, 1902.

Madras Act I of 1902.

48. (1) Vacancies, whether permanent or temporary, amongst the office-holders or servants of a religious institution shall be filled up by the trustee in cases where the office or service is not hereditary.

Appointment of office-holders and servants in religious institutions.

(2) In cases where the office or service is hereditary, the next in the line of succession shall be entitled to succeed.

(3) Where, however, there is a dispute respecting the right of succession, or where such vacancy cannot be filled up immediately, or where the person entitled to succeed is a minor without a guardian fit and willing to act as such or there is a dispute respecting the person who is entitled to act as guardian, or where the hereditary office-holder or servant is suspended from his office under section 49, sub-section (1), the trustee may appoint a fit person to discharge the functions of the office or perform the service, until the disability of the office-holder or servant ceases or another person succeeds to the office or service, as the case may be.

[19th January 1951]

Explanation.—In making any appointment under this sub-section, the trustee shall have due regard to the claims of members of the family, if any, entitled to the succession.

(4) Any person affected by an order of the trustee under sub-section (3) may, within one month from the date of the receipt of the order by him, appeal against the order to the Deputy Commissioner.

Punishment of office-holders and servants in religious institutions.

49. (1) All office-holders and servants attached to a religious institution or in receipt of any emolument or perquisite therefrom shall, whether the office or service is hereditary or not, be controlled by the trustee; and the trustee may, after following the prescribed procedure, if any, fine, suspend, remove or dismiss any of them for breach of trust, incapacity, disobedience of orders, neglect of duty, misconduct or other sufficient cause.

(2) Any office-holder or servant punished by a trustee under sub-section (1) may, within one month from the date of the receipt of the order by him, appeal against the order to the Deputy Commissioner.

(3) A hereditary office-holder or servant may, within one month from the date of the receipt by him of the order of the Deputy Commissioner under sub-section (2), prefer an appeal to the Commissioner against such order.

Power to fix fees for archanas and determine their apportionment.

50. Notwithstanding anything contained in any scheme settled or deemed to be settled under this Act, or any decree or usage to the contrary, the trustee of a temple shall have power, subject to such conditions as the Commissioner may, by general or special order, direct, to fix fees for the performance of archanas and to determine what portion, if any, of such fees shall be paid to the archakas or other office-holders or servants of the temple.

Fixing of standard scales of expenditure.

51. (1) The trustee of a religious institution may, from time to time, submit to the Area Committee if the institution is subject to the jurisdiction of such a Committee, and to the Commissioner in other cases, proposals for fixing the dittam or scale of expenditure in the institution, and the amounts which should be allotted to the various objects connected with such institution or the proportions in which the income or other property of the institution may be applied to such objects.

(2) The trustee shall publish such proposals at the premises of the institution and in such other manner as may be required by the Area Committee or the Commissioner, as the case may be, together with a notice stating that, within one month from the date of such publication, any person having interest may submit his objections or suggestions to the Area Committee or the Commissioner.

[19th January 1951]

(3) After the expiry of the said period, the Area Committee or the Commissioner shall, after considering any objections and suggestions received, pass such order as it or he may think fit on such proposals, having regard to the established usage of the institution and its financial position; and a copy of the order shall be communicated to the trustee.

(4) Against an order made by the Area Committee under sub-section (3), the trustee or any person having interest may, within one month from the date of the receipt of the order by the trustee, appeal to the Deputy Commissioner.

(5) The dittam or scale of expenditure for the time being in force in an institution shall not be altered by the trustee except in accordance with the procedure laid down in this section.

CHAPTER IV.

MATHS.

52. (1) The Commissioner, or any two or more persons having interest and having obtained the consent in writing of the Commissioner, may institute a suit in the Court to obtain a decree for removing the trustee of a math or a specific endowment attached to a math, for any one or more of the following reasons, namely:—

Suit for the removal of trustee of math or specific endowment attached thereto.

(a) the trustee being of unsound mind;

(b) his suffering from any physical or mental defect or infirmity which renders him unfit to be a trustee;

(c) his having ceased to profess the Hindu religion or the tenets of the math;

(d) his conviction for any offence involving moral turpitude;

(e) breach by him of any trust created in respect of any of the properties of the religious institution;

(f) persistent and wilful default by him in discharging his duties or functions under this Act or any other law.

(2) Where the Commissioner refuses to give consent under sub-section (1), the party aggrieved may, within, three months from the date of the receipt of the order by him, appeal to the Government who may, after making such inquiry as they may consider necessary, confirm the order of the Commissioner or direct the Commissioner to give his consent in writing.

53. (1) When a vacancy occurs in the office of the trustee of a math or specific endowment attached to a math and there is a dispute respecting the right of succession to such office,

Filling of vacancies.

or when such vacancy cannot be filled up immediately, or

[19th January 1951]

when the trustee is a minor and has no guardian fit and willing to act as such or there is a dispute respecting the person who is entitled to act as guardian, or when the trustee is by reason of unsoundness of mind or other mental or physical defect or infirmity unable to discharge the functions of the trustee, the Assistant Commissioner may take such steps and pass such order as he thinks proper for the temporary custody and protection of the endowments of the math or of the specific endowment, as the case may be, and shall report the matter forthwith to the Commissioner.

(2) Upon the receipt of such report, if the Commissioner, after making such inquiry as he deems necessary, is satisfied that an arrangement for the administration of the math and its endowments or of the specific endowment, as the case may be, is necessary, he shall make such arrangement as he thinks fit until the disability of the trustee ceases or another trustee succeeds to the office, as the case may be.

(3) In making any such arrangement, the Commissioner shall have due regard to the claims of the disciples of the math, if any.

(4) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to affect anything contained in the Madras Court of Wards Act, 1902. Madras I of 1902.

Fixing of standard scales of expenditure.

54. (1) The trustee of every math or specific endowment attached to a math may, from time to time, submit to the Commissioner proposals for fixing the dittam or scale of expenditure in the institution, and the amounts which should be allotted to the various objects connected with the institution or the proportions in which the income or other property of the institution may be applied to such objects.

(2) The trustee shall publish such proposals at the premises of the math and in such other manner as the Commissioner may direct together with a notice stating that within one month from the date of such publication, any person having interest may submit suggestions to the Commissioner.

(3) If on a scrutiny of such proposals, and any suggestions made by persons having interest, it appears to the Commissioner that the scale of expenditure or any item in the scale of expenditure is at variance with the established usage of the institution, or is not justified by its financial position, the Commissioner may call for the remarks of the trustee and if after considering the same, the Commissioner is of opinion that any modification is required in the scale of expenditure or any item in the scale of expenditure, he shall submit the case to the Government who shall pass orders thereon, and such orders shall be final.

55. (1) The trustee of a math shall be entitled to spend at his discretion, for purposes connected with the math any pathakanika that is to say, any gift of property or money made as a personal gift to him as the head of the math.

[19th January 1951]

(2) The trustee shall keep regular accounts of all receipts and disbursements of the nature referred to in sub-section (1), and shall cause such accounts to be produced before the Commissioner or any person authorized by him in this behalf, whenever so required.

56. (1) For the administration of the secular affairs of a math, the trustee of the math shall, when so required by the Commissioner, appoint a competent person as manager and report the name of the person so appointed, to the Commissioner; and in default of such appointment, the Commissioner may himself make the appointment. Appoint-
manager of secular affairs of math.

(2) The manager appointed under sub-section (1) shall be subordinate to the trustee of the math and shall, in addition to the trustee, be responsible for the due submission to the Commissioner of the registers, accounts and budgets of the math, and also for the performance of other statutory duties imposed upon the trustee by or under this Act.

CHAPTER V.

INQUIRIES.

57. Subject to the rights of suit or appeal hereinafter provided, the Deputy Commissioner shall have power to inquire into and decide the following disputes and matters:— Deputy Commissioner to decide certain disputes and matters.

(a) whether an institution is a religious institution;

(b) whether a trustee holds or held office as a hereditary trustee;

(c) whether any property or money is a religious endowment;

(d) whether any property or money is a specific endowment;

(e) whether any person is entitled, by custom or otherwise, to any honour, emolument or perquisite in any religious institution; and what the established usage of a religious institution is in regard to any other matter;

(f) whether any institution or endowment is wholly or partly of a religious or secular character; and whether any property or money has been given wholly or partly for religious or secular uses; and

(g) where any property or money has been given for the support of an institution which is partly of a religious and partly of a secular character, or the performance of any service or charity connected with such an institution or the performance of a charity which is partly of a religious and partly of a secular character or where any property or money given is appropriated partly to religious and partly to secular uses, as to what portion of such property or money shall be allocated to religious uses.

[19th January 1951]

Power of Deputy Commissioner to frame schemes.

58. (1) When the Deputy Commissioner has reason to believe that in the interests of the proper administration of a religious institution, a scheme should be settled for the institution, or when not less than five persons having interest make an application in writing, stating that in the interests of the proper administration of a religious institution a scheme should be settled for it, the Deputy Commissioner shall consult in the prescribed manner the trustee and the persons having interest and the Area Committee, if any, having jurisdiction over the institution; and if, after such consultation, he is satisfied that it is necessary or desirable to do so, he shall, by order, frame a scheme of administration for the institution.

(2) A scheme settled under sub-section (1) for a temple or for a specific endowment other than one attached to a math may contain provision for—

(a) removing any existing trustee, whether hereditary or non-hereditary;

Provided that where provision is made in the scheme for the removal of a hereditary trustee, provision shall also be made therein for the appointment as trustee of the person next in succession who is qualified;

(b) appointing a new trustee or trustees in the place of or in addition to any existing trustee or trustees;

(c) defining the powers and duties of the trustee or trustees;

(d) appointing, or directing the appointment of, a paid executive officer, who shall be a person professing the Hindu religion, on such salary and allowances as may be fixed, to be paid out of the funds of the institution; and defining the powers and duties of such officer;

Provided that in making any provision of the nature specified in clause (b) due regard shall be had to the claims of persons belonging to the religious denomination for whose benefit the institution is chiefly maintained.

(3) A scheme settled under sub-section (1) for a math or for a specific endowment attached to a math may contain provision for—

(a) associating one or more persons with the trustee or constituting a separate body for the purpose of participating or assisting in the whole or any part of the administration of the endowments of such math or of the specific endowment;

[19th January 1951]

provided that such person or persons or the members of such body shall be chosen from persons having interest in such math or endowment;

(b) appointing or directing the appointment of a paid executive officer, who shall be a person professing the Hindu religion, on such salary and allowances as may be fixed by the Deputy Commissioner, to be paid out of the trust funds, and defining the powers and duties of such officer;

(c) defining the powers and duties of the trustee.

(4) The Deputy Commissioner may determine what the properties of the religious institution are and append to the scheme a schedule containing a list of such properties;

Provided that such determination shall not affect the rights of persons who are in hostile possession of any of the said properties.

(5) Pending the framing of a scheme for a temple or for a specific endowment other than one attached to a math, the Deputy Commissioner may appoint a fit person to discharge all or any of the functions of the trustee thereof and define his powers and duties.

(6) The Deputy Commissioner may, at any time, after consulting the trustee and the persons having interest and the Area Committee, if any, having jurisdiction over the institution, by order, modify or cancel any scheme settled under sub-section (1) or a scheme settled by the Board under the Madras Act II of 1927.

(7) Every order of the Deputy Commissioner settling, modifying or cancelling a scheme under this section shall be published in the prescribed manner and on such publication shall, subject to the provisions of sections 61 and 62, be binding on the trustee, the executive officer and all persons having interest.

(8) The powers conferred by this section shall, in respect of maths, be exercised by the Commissioner or by a Deputy Commissioner to whom powers in this behalf have been delegated by the Commissioner under section 10, sub-section (2).

59. (1) The Deputy Commissioner may, on being satisfied that the purpose of a religious institution has from the beginning been, or has subsequently become, impossible of realization, by order, direct that the endowments of the institution be appropriated to all or any of the following purposes, namely:—

(a) the propagation of the religious tenets of the institution;

[19th January 1951]

(b) the establishment and maintenance of a university or college or other institution in which special provision is made for the study of Hindu religion, philosophy or sastras or for imparting instruction in Hindu temple architecture;

(c) the establishment and maintenance of educational institutions where instruction in the Hindu religion is also imparted to Hindu students thereof;

(d) promoting the study of Indian languages including Sanskrit;

(e) promotion of the cultivation of Indian arts and architecture;

(f) the establishment and maintenance of orphanages for Hindu children;

(g) the establishment and maintenance of asylums for Hindus suffering from leprosy;

(h) the establishment and maintenance of poor homes for destitute Hindus who are physically disabled and helpless;

(i) the establishment and maintenance of hospitals and dispensaries for the benefit of Hindus; and

(j) the grant of aid to any other religious institution which is poor or in needy circumstances:

Provided that in the case of a religious institution founded and maintained by a religious denomination or any section thereof the endowments shall, as far as possible, be utilized for the benefit of the denomination or section concerned for the purposes mentioned above.

(2) The Deputy Commissioner may at any time by order modify or cancel any order passed under sub-section (1).

(3) The order of the Deputy Commissioner under this section shall be published in the prescribed manner and on such publication shall, subject to the provisions of section 61, be binding on the trustee, the executive officer and all persons having interest.

Determination and application of properties and funds of defunct
institutions.

60. (1) The Deputy Commissioner may, on being satisfied that a religious institution has, whether before or after the commencement of this Act, ceased to exist, hold an inquiry in the prescribed manner to ascertain its properties and funds; and after doing so, shall pass an order—

(a) specifying the properties and funds of the institution;

(b) appointing a trustee therefor;

(c) directing the recovery of any such property or funds from any person who may be in possession thereof; and

(d) laying down that the properties and funds so specified shall be applied or utilized for renovating the institution or if such renovation is not possible, be appropriated to any one or more of the purposes specified in section 59, sub-section (1).

[19th January 1951]

(2) The Deputy Commissioner may, on being satisfied after holding an inquiry in the prescribed manner, that any building or other place which was being used for religious worship or instruction has, whether before or after the commencement of this Act, ceased to be used for that purpose, pass an order—

(a) directing the recovery of such building or place from any person who may be in possession thereof; and

(b) laying down that it shall be used for religious worship or instruction as before, or if such use is not possible, be utilized for any one or more of the purposes specified in section 59, sub-section (1).

(3) Nothing contained in sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) shall be deemed to authorize the Deputy Commissioner to pass an order in respect of any property or funds which vested in any person before the commencement of this Act by the operation of the law of limitation.

(4) Every order of the Deputy Commissioner under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) shall be published in the prescribed manner.

61. (1) Any person aggrieved by any order passed by the Deputy Commissioner under any of the foregoing provisions of this Chapter may, within one month from the date of the publication of the order or of the receipt thereof by the party concerned, as the case may be, appeal to the Commissioner. Appeal to the Commissioner.

(2) Any order passed by the Commissioner on such appeal against which no suit lies to the Court under the next succeeding section, or in which no suit has been instituted in the Court within the time specified in section 62, sub-section (1), may be modified or cancelled by the Commissioner if the order has settled or modified a scheme for the administration of a religious institution or relates to any of the matters specified in section 59.

62. (1) Any party aggrieved by an order passed by the Commissioner— Suits and appeals.

(i) under section 61, sub-section (1) or sub-section (2), and relating to any of the matters specified in section 57, section 58 or section 60; or

(ii) under section 57, section 58 or section 60 read with sub-section (1) (a) (2) or 4 (a) of section 19 or with sub-section (3) or (4) of section 80;

may, within ninety days from the date of the receipt of such order by him, institute a suit in the Court against such order; and the Court may modify or cancel such order, but it shall have no power to stay the Commissioner's order pending the disposal of the suit.

[19th January 1951]

(2) Any party aggrieved by a decree of the Court under sub-section (1) may, within ninety days from the date of the decree, appeal to the High Court.

(3) (a) Any scheme for the administration of a religious institution settled or modified by the Court in a suit under sub-section (1) or on an appeal under sub-section (2) or any scheme deemed under section 103, clause (d), to have been settled or modified by the Court may, at any time, be modified or cancelled by the Court on an application made to it by the Commissioner, the trustee or any person having interest.

(b) Any party aggrieved by an order of the Court under clause (a) may, within ninety days from the date of the order, appeal to the High Court.

CHAPTER VI.

NOTIFIED RELIGIOUS INSTITUTIONS.

Issue of notice to show cause why institution should not be notified.

63. (1) Notwithstanding that a religious institution is governed by a scheme settled or deemed to have been settled under this Act, where the Commissioner has reason to believe that such institution is being mismanaged and is satisfied that in the interests of its administration, it is necessary to take proceedings under this Chapter, the Commissioner may, by notice published in the prescribed manner, call upon the trustee and all other persons having interest to show cause why such institution should not be notified to be subject to the provisions of this Chapter.

(2) Such notice shall state the reasons for the action proposed, and specify a reasonable time, not being less than one month from the date of the issue of the notice, for showing such cause.

(3) The trustee or any person having interest may thereupon prefer any objection he may wish to make to the issue of a notification as proposed.

(4) Such objection shall be in writing and shall reach the Commissioner before the expiry of the time specified in the notice aforesaid or within such further time as may be granted by the Commissioner.

Consideration of objections, if any, and notification of institution.

64. (1) Where no such objection has been received within the time so specified or granted, the Government may, on receipt of a report from the Commissioner to that effect, by notification published in the Fort St. George Gazette, declare the religious institution to be subject to the provisions of this Chapter.

[19th January 1951]

(2) Where any such objections have been received within the time so specified or granted, the Commissioner shall hold an inquiry into the objections in the manner prescribed, and decide whether the institution should be notified to be subject to the provisions of this Chapter or not.

(3) If the Commissioner decides that the institution should be notified as aforesaid, he shall make a report to that effect to the Government who may thereupon, by notification published in the Fort St. George Gazette, declare the religious institution to be subject to the provisions of this Chapter.

(4) Every notification published under this section shall remain in force for a period of five years from the date of its publication; but the Government may, at any time, on an application made to them, cancel the notification.

65. On the publication of the notification, the scheme of administration, if any, settled for the religious institution, whether before or after the commencement of this Act, and all rules, if any, framed under such scheme shall cease to apply to the institution; and such scheme and rules shall not be deemed to be revived by reason of the cancellation of the notification or by reason of its having ceased to be in force by efflux of time.

Scheme to lapse on notification.

66. (1) For every institution notified under this Chapter, the Commissioner shall as soon as may be appoint a salaried executive officer, who shall be a person professing the Hindu religion.

Appointment of salaried executive officer.

(2) The salary and allowances of the executive officer, as determined by the Commissioner, shall be paid from the funds of the religious institution.

67. (1) The executive officer shall hold office for such period as may be fixed by the Commissioner and he shall exercise such powers and perform such duties as may be assigned to him by the Commissioner:

Term of office and duties of executive officer.

Provided that only such powers and duties as appertain to the administration of the endowments of the religious institution shall be assigned to the executive officer.

(2) The Commissioner shall define the powers and duties which may be exercised and performed respectively by the executive officer and the trustee, if any, of the religious institution.

(3) The executive officer shall be deemed to be a public servant within the meaning of section 21 of the Indian Penal Code.

68. The Commissioner may, for good and sufficient cause, suspend, remove or dismiss the executive officer.

Removal of executive officer.

[19th January 1951]

Section 58
not to apply to notified
institutions.

69. Section 58 shall not apply to, and no Area Committee shall have jurisdiction over, any religious institution notified under this Chapter or under Chapter VI-A of the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act, 1926, so long as the notification remains in force. Madras Act II of 1927.

CHAPTER VII.

BUDGETS, ACCOUNTS AND AUDIT.

Budgets of
institutions.

70. (1) The trustee of every religious institution shall, before the end of March in each year, submit, in such form as may be fixed by the Commissioner, a budget showing the probable receipts and disbursements of the institution during the following fasli year—

(a) to the Area Committee, if the institution is subject to the jurisdiction of such a Committee; and

(b) to the Commissioner, in other cases.

(2) Every such budget shall make adequate provision for—

(a) the dittam or scale of expenditure for the time being in force;

(b) the due discharge of all liabilities binding on the institution;

(c) the repair and renovation of the buildings connected with the institution, the provision made under this clause not being less than ten per centum of its income in the case of an institution assessed to contribution under section 76 for the previous fasli year on an income not exceeding three thousand rupees, and not being less than twenty-five per centum of its income, or ten per centum of its income up to three thousand rupees and the whole of the excess of its income over that amount, whichever is less, in the case of any other institution;

Provided that any institution the income of which does not exceed or does not sufficiently exceed the expenditure referred to in clauses (a) and (b) may be exempted by the Commissioner, in whole or in part, as the case may be, from the requirement of this clause;

(d) the maintenance of a working balance.

(3) The Area Committee or the Commissioner, as the case may be, may, after giving notice to the trustee in the prescribed manner and after considering his representations, if any, make such alterations, omissions or additions in the budget as the Area Committee or the Commissioner may deem fit.

(4) Against an order made by the Area Committee under sub-section (3), a trustee may, within one month from the date of the receipt by him of the order, appeal to the Deputy Commissioner.

[19th January 1951]

71. (1) The trustee of every religious institution shall keep regular accounts of all receipts and disbursements. Accounts and audit.

(2) The accounts of every religious institution, the annual income of which as calculated for the purposes of section 76 for the fasli year immediately preceding is not less than sixty thousand rupees, shall be subject to concurrent audit, that is to say, the audit shall take place as and when expenditure is incurred.

(3) The accounts of every other religious institution shall be audited annually, or if the Commissioner so directs in any case or class of cases, at shorter intervals.

(4) The audit shall be made—

(a) in the case of a religious institution the annual income of which calculated as aforesaid for the fasli year immediately preceding is not less than one thousand rupees, by auditors appointed in the prescribed manner, who shall be deemed to be public servants within the meaning of section 21 of the Indian Penal Code;

(b) in the case of any other religious institution, by an officer or servant subordinate to the Commissioner and deputed by him for the purpose.

72. After completing the audit for any year or shorter period, or for any transaction or series of transactions, as the case may be, the auditor shall send a report— Authority to whom audit report is to be submitted.

(a) to the Area Committee, if the institution is subject to the jurisdiction of such a Committee; and

(b) to the Commissioner, in other cases.

73. (1) The auditor shall specify in his report all cases of irregular, illegal or improper expenditure, or of failure to recover moneys or other property due to the religious institution, or of loss or waste of money or other property thereof, caused by neglect or misconduct. Contents of audit report.

(2) The auditor shall also report on such other matter relating to the accounts as may be prescribed, or on which the Commissioner or the Area Committee concerned, as the case may be, may require him to report.

74. (1) The Area Committee or the Commissioner, as the case may be, shall send a copy of every audit report relating to the accounts of a religious institution to the trustee thereof, and it shall be the duty of such trustee to remedy any defects or irregularities pointed out by the auditor and report the same to the Area Committee or the Commissioner, as the case may be. Rectification of defects disclosed in audit and order of surcharge against trustee, etc.

(2) The Area Committee shall forward to the Commissioner a copy of every audit report received by it under

[19th January 1951]

Section 58
not to apply
institutions.

69. Section 58 shall not apply to, and no Area Committee shall have jurisdiction over, any religious institution notified under this Chapter or under Chapter VI-A of the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act, 1926, so long as the notification remains in force.

CHAPTER VII.

BUDGETS, ACCOUNTS AND AUDIT.

institutions.

70. (1) The trustee of every religious institution shall, before the end of March in each year, submit, in such form as may be fixed by the Commissioner, a budget showing the probable receipts and disbursements of the institution during the following fasli year—

(a) to the Area Committee, if the institution is subject to the jurisdiction of such a Committee; and

(b) to the Commissioner, in other cases.

(2) Every such budget shall make adequate provision for—

(a) the ditto or scale of expenditure for the time being in force;

(b) the due discharge of all liabilities binding on the institution;

(c) the repair and renovation of the buildings connected with the institution, the provision made under this clause not being less than ten per centum of its income in the case of an institution assessed to contribution under section 76 for the previous fasli year on an income not exceeding three thousand rupees, and not being less than twenty-five per centum of its income, or ten per centum of its income up to three thousand rupees and the whole of the excess of its income over that amount, whichever is less, in the case of any other institution;

Provided that any institution the income of which does not exceed or does not sufficiently exceed the expenditure referred to in clauses (a) and (b) may be exempted by the Commissioner, in whole or in part, as the case may be, from the requirement of this clause;

(d) the maintenance of a working balance.

(3) The Area Committee or the Commissioner, as the case may be, may, after giving notice to the trustee in the prescribed manner and after considering his representations, if any, make such alterations, omissions or additions in the budget as the Area Committee or the Commissioner may deem fit.

(4) Against an order made by the Area Committee under sub-section (3), a trustee may, within one month from the date of the receipt by him of the order, appeal to the Deputy Commissioner.

19th January 1951]

71. (1) The trustee of every religious institution shall keep regular accounts of all receipts and disbursements. Accounts and audit.

(2) The accounts of every religious institution, the annual income of which as calculated for the purposes of section 76 for the fasli year immediately preceding is not less than sixty thousand rupees, shall be subject to concurrent audit, that is to say, the audit shall take place as and when expenditure is incurred.

(3) The accounts of every other religious institution shall be audited annually, or if the Commissioner so directs in any case or class of cases, at shorter intervals.

(4) The audit shall be made—

(a) in the case of a religious institution the annual income of which calculated as aforesaid for the fasli year immediately preceding is not less than one thousand rupees, by auditors appointed in the prescribed manner, who shall be deemed to be public servants within the meaning of section 21 of the Indian Penal Code;

(b) in the case of any other religious institution, by an officer or servant subordinate to the Commissioner and deputed by him for the purpose.

72. After completing the audit for any year or shorter period, or for any transaction or series of transactions, as the case may be, the auditor shall send a report— Authority to whom audit report is to be submitted.

(a) to the Area Committee, if the institution is subject to the jurisdiction of such a Committee; and

(b) to the Commissioner, in other cases.

73. (1) The auditor shall specify in his report all cases of irregular, illegal or improper expenditure, or of failure to recover moneys or other property due to the religious institution, or of loss or waste of money or other property thereof, caused by neglect or misconduct. Contents of audit report.

(2) The auditor shall also report on such other matter relating to the accounts as may be prescribed, or on which the Commissioner or the Area Committee concerned, as the case may be, may require him to report.

74. (1) The Area Committee or the Commissioner, as the case may be, shall send a copy of every audit report relating to the accounts of a religious institution to the trustee thereof, and it shall be the duty of such trustee to remedy any defects or irregularities pointed out by the auditor and report the same to the Area Committee or the Commissioner, as the case may be. Rectification of defects disclosed in audit and order of surcharge against trustee, etc.

(2) The Area Committee shall forward to the Commissioner a copy of every audit report received by it under clause (a) of section 72 and the report, if any, of the trustee made under sub-section (1), together with such remarks as the Area Committee may wish to make thereon.

(3) If, on a consideration of the report of the auditor along with the report, if any, of the trustee, and the remarks, if any, of the Area Committee, the Commissioner thinks that the trustee or any other person was guilty of misappropriation or wilful waste of the funds of the institution or of gross neglect resulting in a loss to the institution, the Commissioner may, after giving notice to the trustee or such person to show cause why an order of surcharge should not be passed against him and after considering his explanation, if any, by order, certify the amount so lost and direct the trustee or such person to pay within a specified time such amount personally and not from the funds of the religious institution :

Provided that if, in respect of any expenditure or dealing with trust property, the trustee or such person had obtained the directions of the Area Committee or of the Commissioner and had acted in accordance with such directions, he shall not be held responsible.

(4) The Commissioner shall forward a copy of the order under sub-section (3) with the reasons for the same, by registered post to the trustee or person concerned.

(5) The trustee or other person aggrieved by such order may, within thirty days of the receipt by him of the order, either—

(a) apply to the Court to modify or set aside the order and the Court, after taking such evidence as is necessary, may confirm, modify or remit the surcharge with such orders as to costs as it may think appropriate in the circumstances, or

(b) in lieu of such application may appeal to the Government who shall pass such orders as they think fit.

(6) Neither the Court nor the Government to which or to whom an application or appeal is made under sub-section (5) shall have power to stay the operation of the order pending the disposal of the application or appeal.

(7) An order of surcharge under this section against a trustee shall not bar a suit for accounts against him except in respect of the matter finally dealt with by such order.

(8) The Collector of the district in which is situated any property of the trustee or other person from whom an amount is recoverable by way of surcharge shall, on a requisition made by the Commissioner, recover such amount as if it were an arrear of land revenue and pay the same to the religious institution concerned.

19th January 1951]

75. The provisions of this Chapter shall apply to every religious institution, notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any scheme settled or deemed to be settled under this Act.

Chapter to apply notwithstanding provision in scheme.

CHAPTER VIII.

FINANCE.

76. (1) In respect of the services rendered by the Government and their officers, every religious institution shall, from the income derived by it, pay to the Government annually such contribution not exceeding five per centum of its income as may be prescribed.

Religious institutions to pay an annual contribution to the Government.

(2) Every religious institution, the annual income of which, for the fasli year immediately preceding as calculated for the purposes of the levy of contribution under sub-section (1), is not less than one thousand rupees, shall pay to the Government annually, for meeting the cost of auditing its accounts, such further sum not exceeding one and a half per centum of its income as the Commissioner may determine.

(3) The annual payments referred to in sub-sections (1) and (2) shall be made, notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any scheme settled or deemed to be settled under this Act for the religious institution concerned.

(4) The Government shall pay the salaries, allowances, pensions and other beneficial remuneration of the Commissioner, Deputy Commissioners, Assistant Commissioners and other officers and servants (other than executive officers of religious institutions) employed for the purposes of this Act and the other expenses incurred for such purposes, including the expenses of Area Committees and the cost of auditing the accounts of religious institutions.

77. All costs, charges and expenses incurred by the Government, the Commissioner, a Deputy Commissioner, an Area Committee, or an Assistant Commissioner as a party to, or in connexion with, any legal proceeding in respect of any religious institution shall be payable out of the funds of such institution, except in cases where a liability to pay the same has been laid on any party or other person personally and the right to reimbursement under this section has been negatived in express terms.

Recovery of costs and expenses incurred on legal proceedings.

78. (1) The contributions, costs and expenses payable under sections 76 and 77 shall be assessed on and notified to the trustee of the religious institution concerned in the prescribed manner.

Assessment and recovery of contributions and costs and expenses.

(2) (a) Such trustee may, within fifteen days from the date of the receipt of such notice or within such further time as may be granted by the Commissioner, prefer his objection thereto, if any, to the Commissioner in writing. Such objection may relate either to his liability to pay or to the amount specified in the notice. The Commissioner shall consider such objection and give his decision confirming, withdrawing or modifying his original notice.

[19th January 1951]

(b) Within one month from the date of receipt of the notice of assessment, or when objection has been preferred, within one month from the date of the decision of the Commissioner, or within such further time as may be granted by him, such trustee shall pay the amount specified in the original notice or the amount as fixed by the Commissioner on objection.

(3) If the trustee fails to pay the amount aforesaid within the time allowed, the Collector of the district in which any property of the religious institution is situated shall, on requisition made to him in the prescribed manner by the Commissioner and subject to the provisions of this section, recover such amount as if it were an arrear of land revenue.

(4) (a) On receipt of a requisition under sub-section (3), the Collector shall issue a notice to the trustee concerned—

(i) requiring him, within fifteen days from the service thereof, to pay the amount mentioned in the requisition and specified in the notice; and

(ii) stating that on default, such amount will be recovered as if it were an arrear of land revenue.

(b) If, within the period of fifteen days aforesaid, the amount demanded is not paid, the Collector shall proceed to recover the amount specified in the notice (with the charges of collection) as if it were an arrear of land revenue.

(5) The Collector shall, on receipt of a requisition under sub-section (3), withhold the amount mentioned therein out of the tasdik or any other allowance payable by the Government to the religious institution concerned, but where the tasdik or other allowance is insufficient for the purpose, the Collector shall withhold the amount available, and recover the balance as if it were an arrear of land revenue.

(6) Places of worship, including temples and tanks and places where utsavams are performed, idols, vahanams, jewels and such vessels and other articles of the religious institution as may be necessary in accordance with the usage of the institution for purposes of worship or processions shall not be liable to be proceeded against in pursuance of sub-sections (3), (4) and (5).

(7) Instead of selling the property after attachment thereof under the provisions of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act, 1864, it shall be open to the Collector at the instance of the Commissioner to appoint a Receiver to take possession of the property or such portion thereof as may be necessary and collect the income thereof until the amount sought to be recovered is realized. The remuneration, if any, paid to the Receiver, and the other expenses incurred by him shall be paid out of the income of the institution concerned.

(8) No suit, prosecution or other legal proceeding shall be entertained in any court of law against the Government or any officer or servant of the Government for anything done or intended to be done in good faith in pursuance of this section.

79. (1) It shall not be competent for the Commissioner to levy any contribution for more than three faslis immediately preceding the fasli in which a notice of assessment is issued under section 78.

Contribution not to be levied for more than three faslis immediately preceding the fasli in which a notice of assessment is issued.

(2) Nothing in this section shall affect any levy of contribution made or moneys collected by the Board before the commencement of the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments (Amendment) Act, 1946.

Madras Act
X of 1946.

CHAPTER IX.

THE TIRUMALAI-TIRUPATI DEVASTHANAMS.

80. (1) The provisions of this Chapter shall apply to the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanams.

(2) Sections 58 and 63 to 69 of this Act shall not apply to the Devasthanams.

(3) The other provisions of this Act shall apply to the Devasthanams as if they constituted a single religious institution included in the list published under section 38 and subject to the following modifications, namely:—

Application of Act to Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanams.

(a) There shall be a Board of Trustees constituted for the Devasthanams consisting of five persons appointed by the Government; and any person so appointed shall hold office for a term of five years unless in the meanwhile he is removed or his resignation is accepted by the Government or he otherwise ceases to be a trustee.

(b) The Government shall also appoint a salaried executive officer for the Devasthanams, and shall have power to suspend, remove or dismiss him from office.

(c) All powers and duties assigned by the provisions aforesaid to a Deputy or an Assistant Commissioner shall be deemed to have been assigned to the Commissioner instead.

(4) The provisions of this Act shall apply to every specific endowment attached either to the Devasthanams as a whole or to any temple or institution thereof as if all powers and duties assigned therein to a Deputy or an Assistant Commissioner had been assigned to the Commissioner instead.

[19th January 1951]

Qualification of executive officer and payment of salary, allowances, etc.

81. (1) The executive officer shall be a person professing the Hindu religion.

(2) If the executive officer is an officer in the service of the Government, the Devasthanams shall pay his salary, allowances and such contributions towards his pension, provident fund and leave allowances as may be required under the rules prescribed by the Government in this behalf.

Powers and duties of executive officer.

82. Subject to such reservations as may be laid down by the Government and to the general control of the Board of Trustees, the executive officer—

(a) shall have power to manage the properties and affairs of the Devasthanams;

(b) shall be responsible for the proper custody of all the records and of all the jewels, valuables, moneys, funds and other properties of the Devasthanams;

(c) shall arrange for the proper collection of the income and for the incurring of expenditure; and

(d) may, in cases of emergency, direct the execution of any work or the doing of any act which is not provided for in the budget for the year and the immediate execution or the doing of which is, in his opinion, necessary for the preservation of the properties of the Devasthanams or for the service or safety of the pilgrims resorting thereto; and may direct that the expenses of executing such work or the doing of such act shall be paid from the funds of the Devasthanams.

The executive officer shall report forthwith to the Board of Trustees any action taken by him under clause (d) and the reasons therefor.

Appointment and punishment of office-holders and servants by executive officer in certain cases.

83. (1) The powers of appointment and punishment conferred on a trustee by sections 48 and 49 shall, in respect of the office-holders and servants of the Devasthanams, be exercised by the executive officer subject to such restrictions and conditions, if any, as may be laid down by the Government.

(2) Any person affected by an order of the executive officer acting in pursuance of the powers conferred on him by sub-section (1) may, within one month from the date of the receipt of the order by him, appeal to the Board of Trustees.

(3) Within one month from the date of the receipt by him of the order of the Board of Trustees, the office-holder or servant may appeal to the Commissioner.

Application of Madras Village Panchayats Act and other enactments to Tirumalai area.

84. (1) The Government may, by notification in the Fort St. George Gazette, declare that any of the provisions of the Madras Village Panchayats Act, 1950, or of the Madras Public Health Act, 1939, or of any rules made under those Acts, shall be extended to, and be in force in, the Tirumalai Hills area as notified by the Government in the Fort St. George Gazette from time to time.

[19th January 1951]

(2) The provisions so notified shall be construed with such modifications not affecting the substance as may be necessary or proper for the purpose of adapting them to the Tirumalai Hills area.

(3) Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing provision—

(i) the Tirumalai Hills area shall be deemed to be a village for the purposes of the Madras Village Panchayats Act, 1950, and a local area for the purposes of the Madras Public Health Act, 1939;

(ii) all references to a panchayat or the president, executive officer or executive authority thereof in the Madras Village Panchayats Act, 1950, and all references to a local authority, executive authority or executive officer in the Madras Public Health Act, 1939, shall, subject to the provisions of clauses (iii) and (iv), be construed as references to the executive officer, in the Tirumalai Hills area;

(iii) any appeal provided for by or under the Madras Village Panchayats Act, 1950, from an order or decision of the president, executive authority or executive officer of a panchayat to the panchayat shall lie instead to the Inspector of Municipal Councils and Local Boards;

(iv) any appeal provided for by or under the Madras Public Health Act, 1939, from an order or decision of the executive authority or executive officer of a local authority to the local authority shall lie instead to the Director of Public Health.

(4) (a) The Government may, by notification in the Fort St. George Gazette, authorize the executive officer, to levy tolls, in the prescribed manner in respect of any road, including the ghat road leading to Tirumalai from Tirupati which has been or shall hereafter be constructed entirely from the funds of the Devasthanams and situated within the Tirumalai Hills area as notified under sub-section (1), at such rates and for such period as may be specified in the notification.

(b) The executive officer may—

(i) place the collection of such tolls under the management of such persons as may appear to him proper, or

(ii) farm out such collection on such terms and conditions as he may think fit.

(c) The provisions of sections 3 to 7 of the Indian Tolls Act, 1851, as in force for the time being in the State of Madras, shall apply to the collection of such tolls and the persons under whose management the collection of such tolls may be placed, as well as the persons to whom such collections may be farmed out and their agents and servants shall be deemed to be persons appointed to collect tolls within the meaning of that Act.

Purposes for which Devasthanam funds may be used.

85. The funds of the Devasthanams may be utilized for any purpose permitted by any other provision of this Act and also for all or any of the following purposes:—

(i) the maintenance, management and administration of the Devasthanams;

(ii) the maintenance of the educational institutions referred to in Schedule III;

(iii) the foundation and maintenance of hospitals and dispensaries for the relief of the pilgrims and worshippers visiting the temples;

(iv) the construction and maintenance of choultries and rest-houses for the use and accommodation of all classes of pilgrims;

(v) the provision of water-supply and other sanitary arrangements to the pilgrims;

(vi) the establishment and maintenance of a veterinary hospital for the animals of the Devasthanams;

(vii) the acquisition of any land or other immovable property for the purposes of the Devasthanams provided the acquisition is authorized by the Government;

(viii) the construction and maintenance of roads and communications and the lighting thereof for the convenience of the pilgrims and worshippers;

(ix) the training of archakas to perform the religious worship and ceremonies in the Devasthanams, and the training of adhyapakas and vedaparyayanikas; and

(x) any work or undertaking for the purposes of the Devasthanams, authorized by the Government, so long as such authorization subsists.

CHAPTER X.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Public Officers to furnish copies of or extracts from certain documents.

86. All public officers having custody of any record, register, report or other document relating to a religious institution or any movable or immovable property thereof shall furnish such copies of or extracts from the same as may be required by the Commissioner, a Deputy Commissioner, an Area Committee, or an Assistant Commissioner.

[19th January 1951]

87. Where a person has been appointed—

(a) as trustee or executive officer of a religious institution, or

(b) to discharge the functions of a trustee of a religious institution in accordance with the provisions of this Act, or

(c) as manager under section 56 or in any scheme framed by the Board before the commencement of this Act, and such person is resisted in, or prevented from obtaining possession of, the religious institution or of the records, accounts and properties thereof, by a trustee, office-holder or servant of the religious institution who has been dismissed or suspended from his office or is otherwise not entitled to be in possession or by any person claiming or deriving title from such trustee, office-holder or servant, not being a person claiming in good faith to be in possession on his own account or on account of some person not being such trustee, office holder or servant, any Magistrate of the first class in whose jurisdiction such institution or property is situated shall, on application by the person so appointed, and on the production of the order of appointment, and where the application is for possession of property, of a certificate by the Commissioner in the prescribed form setting forth that the property in question belongs to the religious institution, direct delivery to the person appointed as aforesaid of the possession of such religious institution, or the records, accounts and properties thereof, as the case may be:

Provided however that before issuing any such certificate in respect of any property, the Commissioner shall give notice to the trustee, office-holder or servant of the religious institution, as the case may be, of his intention to issue the certificate and consider the objections, if any, of such trustee, office-holder or servant:

Provided also that for the purpose of proceedings under this section, the certificate aforesaid shall be conclusive evidence that the properties to which it relates belong to the religious institution.

Provided further that nothing contained in this section shall bar the institution of a suit by any person aggrieved by an order under this section for establishing his title to the said property.

Explanation.—A person claiming under an alienation contrary to the provisions of section 29 or 35 shall not be regarded as a person claiming in good faith within the meaning of this section.

88. (1) The costs, charges and expenses of and incidental to any suit, appeal or application to a Court under this Act shall be in the discretion of the Court, which may, subject to the provisions of section 77, direct the whole or any part Putting trustee or executive officer in possession.

Cost of proceedings, etc.

[19th January 1951]

of such costs, charges and expenses to be met from the property or income of the religious institution or endowment concerned or to be borne and paid in such manner and by such persons as it thinks fit.

(2) The costs, charges and expenses of and incidental to any appeal, application or other proceeding before the Commissioner or a Deputy Commissioner shall be in his discretion and he shall have full power to determine by whom or out of what funds and to what extent such costs, charges and expenses are to be paid; and the order passed in this regard may be transferred for execution to the Court and shall be executed by the Court as if the order had been passed by itself if and in so far as the Court considers the order to be a reasonable one.

Penalty for refusal by trustee to comply with provisions of Act. 89. (1) If any trustee [including the executive officer or other person in whom the administration of a religious institution is vested] or any agent of, or person working under, the trustee—

(a) refuses, neglects or fails to comply with the provisions of section 25 or section 26, or

(b) refuses, neglects or fails to furnish such accounts, returns, reports or other information relating to the administration of the religious institution or its funds, property or income or the application thereof, at such time and in such manner as the Commissioner, Deputy Commissioner, Area Committee or Assistant Commissioner may require, or

(c) refuse to permit, or cause obstruction to, inspection by the Commissioner, a Deputy Commissioner, a member of an Area Committee duly authorized in this behalf or an Assistant Commissioner, of any movable or immovable property belonging to, or of any records, correspondence, plans, accounts and other documents relating to, the religious institution, or neglects or fails to produce them for inspection.

The trustee, or where there is more than one trustee, each of the trustees shall be punishable with fine which may extend to two hundred rupees; and in case the act or default complained of continues for more than one month with a further fine which may extend to one hundred rupees for every week or part thereof during which the act or default so continues.

(2) No Court shall take cognizance of an offence punishable under sub-section (1) except on the complaint in writing of the Commissioner.

(3) No offence punishable under sub-section (1) shall be inquired into or tried by any Court inferior to that of a Magistrate of the first class.

(4) The Commissioner may accept from any trustee who has committed or is reasonably suspected of having committed any of the offences referred to in sub-section (1), by way of composition of such offence, a sum of money not exceeding one thousand rupees.

(5) Any fine imposed under sub-section (1) or any money payable by way of composition under sub-section (4) shall be paid by the trustee from his own funds and not from the funds of the religious institution concerned.

Central Act
VII of 1870.

90. Notwithstanding anything contained in the First or Second Schedule to the Court-fees Act, 1870, the proper fees for the documents described in columns (1) and (2) of Schedule I shall be the fees indicated in column (3) thereof. to be paid as prescribed by Schedule I.

91. Nothing contained in this Act shall—

Saving.

(a) save as otherwise expressly provided in or under this Act, affect any honour, emolument or perquisite to which any person is entitled by custom or otherwise in any religious institution, or its established usage in regard to any other matter; or

(b) authorize any interference with the religious and spiritual functions of the head of a math including those relating to the imparting of religious instruction or the rendering of spiritual service.

92. Nothing contained in this Act shall be deemed to confer any power or impose any duty in contravention of the rights conferred on any religious denomination or any section thereof by clauses (a), (b) and (c) of Article 26 of the Constitution. Act not to affect rights under Article 26, clauses (a) to (c) of the Constitution.

93. No suit or other legal proceeding in respect of the administration or management of a religious institution or any other matter or dispute for determining or deciding which provision is made in this Act shall be instituted in any Court of law, except under, and in conformity with, the provisions of this Act. Bar of suits in respect of administration or management of religious institutions, etc.

94. Nothing contained in any law of limitation for the time being in force shall be deemed to vest in any person the property or funds of any religious institution which had not vested in such person or his predecessor-in-title before the commencement of this Act. Property of religious institutions not to vest under the law of limitation after commencement of this Act.

[19th January 1951]

Procedure and powers at inquiries under Chapters V and VI.

95. (1) Where a Commissioner or a Deputy Commissioner makes an inquiry or hears an appeal under Chapter V or Chapter VI, the inquiry shall be made and the appeal shall be heard, as nearly as may be, in accordance with the procedure applicable under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, to the trial of suits or the hearing of appeals, as the case may be. Central Act V of 1908.

(2) The provisions of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, and the Indian Oaths Act, 1873, shall apply to such inquiries and appeals. Central Act I of 1872. Central Act X of 1873.

(3) The Commissioner or a Deputy Commissioner holding such an inquiry or hearing such an appeal shall be deemed to be a person acting judicially within the meaning of the Judicial Officers Protection Act, 1850.

Central Act XVIII of 1850.

Notifications, orders, etc., under Act not to be questioned in Court of law.

96. Save as otherwise expressly provided in this Act, no notification or certificate issued, order passed, decision made, proceedings or action taken, scheme settled, or other thing done under the provisions of this Act by the Government, the Commissioner or a Deputy Commissioner, an Area Committee, or an Assistant Commissioner, shall be liable to be questioned in any Court of law.

Budget, audit report, etc., to be submitted to Area Committee through Assistant Commissioner.

97. Any budget, audit report, accounts, returns, reports or other documents and any information required to be submitted to, or called for by, an Area Committee in respect of an institution subject to its jurisdiction, and all communications intended for an Area Committee shall be sent to the Assistant Commissioner concerned and shall be placed by him before the Committee at its next meeting, together with his remarks or recommendations thereon, if any.

Power of Assistant Commissioner to act for Area Committee in an emergency.

98. The Assistant Commissioner may, in cases of emergency, direct the doing of any act which would ordinarily have to be done by the Area Committee, if the immediate doing of such act is, in his opinion, necessary in the interests of a religious institution:

Provided that the Assistant Commissioner shall not act under this section in contravention of any order of the Area Committee prohibiting the doing of any particular act:

Provided further that he shall report the action taken under this section and the reasons therefor to the Committee at its next meeting; and the Committee may annul, modify or reverse the order passed by the Assistant Commissioner.

Power of Government to call for records and pass orders.

99. (1) The Government may call for and examine the record of the Commissioner or any Deputy or Assistant Commissioner, of any Area Committee or of any trustee in respect of any proceeding, not being a proceeding in respect of which a suit or an appeal to a Court is provided by this Act, to satisfy themselves as to the regularity of such proceeding or the correctness, legality or propriety of any decision or order passed therein; and, if, in any case, it appears to the Government that any such decision or order should be modified, annulled, reversed or remitted for reconsideration, they may pass orders accordingly:

Provided that the Government shall not pass any order prejudicial to any party unless he has had a reasonable opportunity of making his representations.

(2) The Government may stay the execution of any such decision or order, pending the exercise of their powers under sub-section (1) in respect thereof.

100. (1) The Government may make rules to carry out all or any of the purposes of this Act and not inconsistent therewith. Power to make rules.

(2) In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, they shall have power to make rules with reference to the following matters:—

(a) all matters expressly required or allowed by this Act to be prescribed;

(b) the form and manner in which applications and appeals should be submitted to the Government, the Commissioner, or a Deputy or an Assistant Commissioner;

(v) the levy of tolls on roads constructed entirely from the funds of the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanams and situated within the Tirumalai Hills area and the collection thereof;

(w) the delegation by the executive officer of the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanams of his powers, functions and duties to any officer or servant of the Devasthanams and the restrictions, limitations and conditions subject to which such delegation shall be made;

(x) the qualifications, method of recruitment, pay, grant of leave, leave allowance and travelling allowance, personal conduct and punishment, of—

(i) officers and servants constituting the establishment of the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanams;

(ii) executive officers appointed for religious institutions under any provision of this Act or in pursuance of any scheme settled or deemed to be settled thereunder;

(y) the qualifications to be possessed by the officers and servants for appointment to non-hereditary officers in religious institutions, the qualifications to be possessed by hereditary servants for succession to office and the conditions of service of all such officers and servants;

[19th January 1951]

(z) the grant of pensions or gratuities to officers and servants of the Board who retired before the commencement of this Act; and

(aa) the grant of gratuities to the heirs of deceased officers and servants of the Board including those who had retired before the commencement of this Act.

(3) The power to make rules under this section shall be subject to the condition of previous publication.

CHAPTER XI.

TRANSITIONAL.

101. On and from the date on which this Act comes into force, the Board shall cease to exist, and all its assets and liabilities shall devolve on the Government.

Abolition of Board and devolution of its assets and liabilities.

102. Any reference to the Board or its President or a Commissioner thereof contained in any enactment in force in the State of Madras or in any notification, order, scheme, rule, form or by-law made under any such enactment and in force in the State, shall, on and from the commencement of this Act, be construed as a reference to the Commissioner appointed under this Act.

Construction of references to the Board, President or Commissioner.

103. Notwithstanding the repeal of the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act, 1926 (hereinafter in this section referred to as the said Act)—

Effect of repeal of the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act, 1926.

(a) all rules made, notifications or certificates issued, orders passed, decisions made, proceedings or action taken, schemes settled and things done by the Government, the Board or its President or by an Assistant Commissioner under the said Act, shall, in so far as they are not inconsistent with this Act, be deemed to have been made, issued, passed, taken, settled or done by the appropriate authority under the corresponding provisions of this Act and shall, subject to the provisions of clause (b), have effect accordingly;

Explanation.—Certificates issued by the Board under section 78 of the said Act shall be deemed to have been validly issued under that section, notwithstanding that the certificates were issued before the making of rules prescribing the manner of their issue.

(b) if the Government are satisfied that any such rule, notification, certificate, order, decision, proceeding, action, scheme or thing, although not inconsistent with this Act would not have been made, issued, passed, taken, settled or done, or would not have been made, issued, passed, taken, settled or done in the form adopted, if this Act has been in force at the time, they shall have power, by order made at any time within one year from the commencement of this Act, to cancel or to modify in such manner as may be specified in the order, the said rule, notification, certificate, order, decision, proceeding, action, scheme or thing, and thereupon, the same shall stand cancelled or modified as directed in the said order, with effect from the date on which it was made or from such later date as may be specified therein :

Provided that before making any such order, the Government shall publish in the Fort St. George Gazette a notice of their intention to do so, fix a period which shall not be less than two months from the date of the publication of the notice for the persons affected by the order to show cause against the making thereof and consider their representations, if any;

(c) a notification published in respect of any religious institution under section 65-A, sub-section (3) or sub-section (5), of the said Act and in force immediately before the commencement of this Act shall be deemed to be a notification published under section 64 of this Act and shall be in force for five years from the date of commencement of this Act;

Explanation.—The scheme of administration, if any, settled for the religious institution and the rules, if any, framed under such scheme which ceased to apply to the institution under section 65-B of the said Act shall not be deemed to be revived by reason of the cancellation of the notification under section 64, sub-section (4), or by reason of its having ceased to be in force by efflux of time.

(d) all schemes settled or modified by a Court of Law under the said Act or under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, shall be deemed to have been settled or modified by the Court under this Act and shall have effect accordingly;

Central Act V of 1908.

(e) in any scheme settled or deemed to have been settled under the said Act (including a scheme settled under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908) and in force immediately before the commencement of this Act—

Central
1908.

(i) all powers conferred and all duties imposed by such scheme on one or more trustees, whether hereditary or non-hereditary, shall be exercised, subject to the restrictions and conditions, if any, specified in the scheme by the trustee or trustees appointed for the religious institution under this Act;

(ii) all powers conferred and all duties imposed by such scheme on any Court or Judge or any other person or body of persons not being a trustee or trustees or a paid or an honorary officer or servant of the religious institution, shall be deemed to have been conferred or imposed on the Area Committee if the institution is subject to the jurisdiction of such a Committee and on the Commissioner, in other cases; and the Area Committee or the Commissioner, as the case may be, shall exercise such powers and discharge such duties in accordance with the provisions of the scheme subject to such restrictions and conditions, if any, specified in the scheme;

(f) all orders made under section 67 of the said Act shall, notwithstanding that they are inconsistent with this Act, continue in force, but any such order may at any time be modified or cancelled by the Deputy Commissioner if it is an order made under sub-section (1) or sub-section (3) of that section and by the Commissioner if it is an order made under sub-section (4) or sub-section (5) of that section; and any person aggrieved by any modification or cancellation made by the Deputy Commissioner may appeal to the Commissioner within such time as may be prescribed;

(g) all by-laws made by the Board under the said Act shall, in so far as they are not inconsistent with this Act, be deemed to be orders issued by the Commissioner under this Act;

(h) all proceedings pending before the Government or the Board or its President or an Assistant Commissioner under the provisions of the said Act at the commencement of this Act, may, in so far as they are not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, be continued by the appropriate authority under this Act;

(i) all costs, expenses, charges, penalties, and contributions payable to the Board under the said Act immediately before the commencement of this Act, shall be payable to the Government instead; and any assessment, levy or demand of such sums made before the commencement of this Act shall be deemed to be valid and may be continued and shall be enforceable under this Act;

(j) all suits, applications or proceedings taken by, or on behalf of, or against, the Board under the provisions of the said Act and pending at the commencement of this Act, may be continued, by or on behalf of, or against, the Commissioner subject to the provisions of, and in so far as they are not inconsistent with, this Act;

Explanation.—All suits and applications instituted under the said Act in the High Court in respect of religious institutions situated within the Presidency-town and pending on the date of commencement of this Act, which would have been instituted in the Madras City Civil Court if this Act had been in force at the time when such suits or applications were instituted shall be continued in, and disposed of by, the High Court.

(k) any remedy by way of application, suit, or appeal which is provided by this Act shall be available in respect of proceedings under the said Act pending at the commencement of this Act as if the proceedings in respect of which the remedy is sought had been instituted under this Act.

sioners, etc., of Board after commencement of this Act.

104. (1) On the coming into force of this Act, such members of the Board including the President and such of its subordinates as the Government may consider suitable, may be appointed by the Government in their discretion to any offices provided for in this Act to which they may be deemed qualified; and the services of the rest shall be deemed to have been terminated.

(2) The conditions of service of persons so appointed shall be regulated by rules made by the Government from time to time as if they had entered the service of the Government on the date of their first entertainment as a member of the Board or as its subordinate, as the case may be.

(3) To those not so appointed, the Government may accord such relief by way of pension, gratuity, provident fund or leave with allowances as they may in their discretion deem fit.

(4) No Court shall entertain any suit or application for damages or compensation by any member of the Board or any of its subordinates affected by sub-section (1) or for the variation of the relief, if any, granted under sub-section (3).

Effect of repeal of Tirumalai-Tirupati Devastha-nams Act, 1932.

105. (1) Notwithstanding the repeal of the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanams Act, 1932 (hereinafter referred to as the Madras A XIX of 1933. Devasthanams Act)—

(a) all rules or by-laws made, notifications issued, orders passed, decisions made, proceedings or action taken and things done by the Government, the Board or the Committee constituted under Chapter II of the Devasthanams Act or the Commissioner appointed under section 18 of that Act or by any of the Advisory Councils appointed under that Act, shall, in so far as they are not inconsistent with this Act be deemed to have been made, issued, passed, taken or done by the appropriate authority under the corresponding provisions of this Act and shall have effect accordingly;

(b) all proceedings pending before the Government, the Board, the Committee or the Commissioner under the provisions of the Devasthanams Act at the commencement of this Act may, in so far as they are not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, be continued by the appropriate authority under this Act;

(c) all suits, applications or proceedings taken by, or on behalf of, or against, the Committee or the Commissioner under the provisions of the Devasthanams Act may be continued by, or on behalf of, or against, the Board of Trustees or the executive officer, as the case may be, of the Devasthanams, subject to the provisions of, and in so far as they are not inconsistent with this Act;

19th January 1951]

(d) any remedy by way of application or appeal which is provided by this Act shall be available in respect of proceedings under the Devasthanams Act pending at the commencement of this Act as if the proceedings in respect of which the remedy is sought had been instituted under this Act.

(2) Any reference to the Committee constituted under the Devasthanams Act or the Commissioner appointed under that Act, in any enactment in force in the State of Madras or in any notification, order, rule, form or by-law made under any such enactment and in force in the State, shall, on and from the commencement of this Act, be construed as a reference to the Board of Trustees or the executive officer of the Devasthanams under this Act.

(3) The undertaking by the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanams Committee constituted under the Devasthanams Act, of the functions of a licensee under the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanams Electrical Licence, 1932, shall be deemed to have been authorized by the Government within the meaning of clause (x) of section 85 of this Act and all expenditure incurred from the funds of the devasthanams before the commencement of this Act for the performance of such functions is hereby validated.

106. If any difficulty arises in giving effect to the provisions of this Act, the Government may, as occasion may require, by order, do anything which appears to them necessary for the purpose of removing the difficulty. Power to remove difficulties.

THE MADRAS HINDU RELIGIOUS AND CHARITABLE ENDOWMENTS BILL, 1949 (L.A. BILL No. 10 OF 1949, AS PASSED BY THE ASSEMBLY—cont.

22nd January 1951] [SRI S. A. S. RM. Ramanathan Chettiyar]

ஒரே மாதிரியான ஒரு சட்டத்தை நிறைவேற்றக்கூடாது என்று நான் அபிப்பிராயப்படுகிறேன். சில மடாதிபதிகளும், கோவில்களின் டிரஸ்டிகளும் தஞ்சை ஜில்லாவில் சில இடங்களில் தவறுதல்கள் செய்து வருகின்றார்கள். தஞ்சை ஜில்லாவில் ஒரு ஊரில் கோவில் சுவாமியின் பெயர் திரு நீலசண்டேஸ்வரர். அந்த கோவிலில் திருநீலகண்ட அய்யர் என்பவர் அதன் டிரஸ்டியாகவும் குருக்களாகவும் இருக்கிறார். அவர் அந்த கோவிலிற்குச் சொந்தமான நூறு வேலி நிலத்தை தன்னுடைய பெயருக்கு மாற்றிக் கொண்டுவிட்டார். இன்னும் அநேகம் கோவில்களுக்குள்ளேன. அவைகளின் பெயர்களைச் சொல்லவேண்டாம். அவைகளுக்கு ஆயிரம் வேலி நிலங்களிருக்கின்றன. அவ்வளவையும் அதனதன் தர்மகர்த்தாக்கள் தங்களுடைய சொந்தத்திற்கு மாற்றிக்கொண்டுவிட்டார்கள். அவைகளெல்லாம் தஞ்சாவூர் மஹாஜனினால் கொடுக்கப்பட்டவைகள். அவ்விதம் ஆயிரம், இரண்டாயிரம் வேலி நிலங்களை தங்களுடைய உபயோகத்திற்காக மாற்றிக் கொண்டுவிட்டதனால் இவ்விதமான சட்டம் செய்யவேண்டியது அவசியம் தான். இவ்விதம் பொதுவாக கொடுக்கப்பட்ட சொத்துக்களுக்குதான் சட்டம் செய்யவேண்டுமே யொழிய தானே சொந்தமாக சம்பாதித்து, ஒரு ஸ்கூலுக்கோ, கோவிலுக்கோ, குளத்திற்கோ, பாடசாலைக்கோ, கொடுத்திருந்தால் அதில் தலையிடுவது நியாயமில்லை. அவ்விதம் நாம் தலையிட்டால் இனிமேல் வரும் generation தர்மம் செய்யமாட்டார்கள். தர்மத்திற்கு என்று எழுதிவைத்த பொதுப் பணத்தை எடுத்து சாப்பிடுவதை கண்டிக்க வேண்டியதுதான். சில இடங்களில் அப்படிப்பட்ட சொத்துக்களின் கணக்கு கூட சொல்வதில்லை. ஆனால் சொந்தமாக செய்துவரும் தர்மத்தின் சொத்துக்களுக்கு கணக்குகொடு என்று சொல்வது சரியல்ல. அது ஒரு பொறுத்தமான விஷயமுமல்ல. அவ்விதம் செய்தால் ஒருவரும் இனிமேல் தர்மம் செய்ய முன்வர மாட்டார்கள். ஆகவே பிரைவேட் டிரஸ்டிகளுக்குப் போகாமலிருக்கும்படி ரொம்பவும் கேட்டுக்கொள்கிறேன்.

before the Select Committee, those drafts were scrutinized, and there has emerged the final draft of the Bill together with the report of the Joint Select Committee signed by the Chairman, the Hon. Dr. T. S. S. Rajan. Curiously enough, certain changes made in the Select Committee stage are not embodied in the Bill as amended by the Joint Select Committee. One of them is with regard to the board of trustees. The decision of the Select Committee was that the board of trustees should be one of the authorities set up under this Bill for the proper management of religious institutions. But that is not found in the Bill annexed to the report of the Joint Select Committee. The second thing relates to pathakanika. Yesterday, the hon. Dr. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliyar referred to pathakanika. In regard to that, the final decision of the Select Committee was that the matadhipathi should merely keep accounts of receipts and expenditure, and the Legal department was asked to prepare the necessary amendment. But what is it that we find in the relevant clause in this Bill? The clause says that he shall cause such accounts to be produced before the Commissioner or any person authorized by him in this behalf, whenever so required. This was never the intention of the Select Committee and it never took a decision on the point. So Dr. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliyar was perfectly right in saying that we were making the Commissioner a super-matadhipathi. The Select Committee wanted that the amount received by way of pathakanika should be spent by the matadhipathi at his discretion for purposes connected with the math. In order that the amount might be spent for purposes connected with the math, we wanted the matadhipathi to keep accounts. At a late stage, the hon. Sri S. B. Adityan moved an amendment to the above effect. We never said that the Commissioner should be empowered to call for the accounts of a matadhipathi. We never wanted to make the Commissioner a super-matadhipathi. Because the report and the Bill as amended by the Joint Select Committee are made available to the members of this House, I am referring to them. These are two instances in which, I feel, alterations have been made. They are not consequential but substantial. I do not think that either the Chairman of the Select Committee or the Government are competent or authorized to make these innovations in the Bill. I shall later on say how very helpful the Chairman was to the committee. But with due deference to him, I say that he should never have signed the report unless he was satisfied that the provisions of the Bill were in accordance with the decisions of the Select Committee. These are serious innovations which the Bill makes and they were never contemplated by the members of the Joint Select Committee.

"I am one of those who are in favour of the principles of this Bill and also the plan given in the Bill for carrying out those principles. But that does not mean that I must lend my support to every comma, semi-colon or full stop found in the Bill. I am not one of those who feel that, simply because I am in favour of the Bill, I must go the whole hog with the Government.

22nd January 1951] [Sri R. Suryanarayana Rao]

"Nor am I one of those, who, simply because I mention certain provisions to which I am opposed and which I want to be amended are opposed to the Bill altogether. From that point of view, I am sure, hon. Members of the House and also the Government should be deeply grateful to my hon. Friend Dr. A. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliyar, for what I may call, his incisive criticism of the various provisions of the Bill. His criticism showed the breadth of his outlook and his consideration for the measure, and his main desire in offering such a criticism was that whatever we may do, we shall do it well, so that there may be no unnecessary opposition even from quarters who are always anxious to find fault with the Government, in all the beneficial measures brought forward by them. I have just now referred to the special feature about the provision relating to pathakanika and it is to that which my hon. Friend Dr. A. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliyar also referred.

"Then, Sir, he referred to the hierarchy of officials under the Commissioner. I quite agree with him. When any department of this kind is set up, there is bound to be a hierarchy of officials to be appointed under the Commissioner, and it is the Government that must have the control over these officials and see that the policy underlying this Bill is carried out properly. But the Bill, as it stands, leaves everything to the Commissioner, and, as has been suggested, the Commissioner will even become a super-Government in certain matters. It is with a view to prevent such a thing happening that I have made certain suggestions in the amendments which I have given notice of. Many of them are simple amendments seeking to make the Government the ultimate authority so far as executive orders are concerned and in matters over which we have not given power to the courts to interfere.

"Then, Sir, Dr. A. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliyar spoke about area committees. May I point out to him, Sir, that the idea of setting up Area Committees was discussed at great length in the Joint Select Committee and that these committees were put in the place of what were known by the name of temple committees which had been in existence previously and which had been condemned by all officials and committees who went into this question. Sir, the Venkataramana Rao's Committee, which went into this question, suggested that the Government must do away with these temple committees and install Assistant Commissioners in their place. Even Sri R. V. Krishna Ayyar, who was the Special Officer for some time, recommended the abolition of these temple committees. But, we felt it right that we should set up Area Committees in the place of temple committees and leave the management of the secular affairs of these temples in their charge, even as we thought it right in the year 1951 to set up autonomous units like the village panchayats to look after the civic affairs and needs of their own villages and even if they committed mistakes in the initial stage, they should be made to work that experiment and that it did not matter if mistakes were made, so long as the ultimate authority for the administration of the Act rested with the local Government. That is why we did suggest the creation of these area committees because we felt that we can no longer fight shy of these committees and that people who are interested in the temples situated in the locality should be enabled to take part in the administration of the affairs of the temples and to have some voice in their management. We therefore pleaded with the Government to set up a number of area committees to administer the Act and the Government also were good enough to accept our suggestion and accordingly amended the Bill providing for the constitution of these area committees as well, and that is how they came into existence in the Bill.

"Then Sir, the question arose as to how to get the members of the area committees and here, as was pointed out by my hon. Friend Dr. A. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliyar, we had no other feasible alternative than to resort to the method of nomination. It is true we could not find out any other suitable democratic method of getting the representatives of people to be the members of the Area Committee in the initial stage. It is unfortunate that we had to accept nomination, and I was one of those who pleaded for nomination along with some other friends who were of a more democratic bent of mind, because it was difficult for us to decide what should be the electoral college from which these members of the Area Committee should be elected and what should be the qualifications of those who should form the electoral college. Therefore, we said, that as a first step, let us revive the temple committees in the garb of area committees and let us, for the present, have members nominated by the Government and that is how nomination came in.

"Then Sir, my hon. Friend Dr. A. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliyar twitted us for accepting the Assistant Commissioner to be the Chairman of the Committee. We did accept it, Sir, because we wanted somebody to guide the deliberations of these area committees. We know that in the past these temple committees, because they had not any responsible officials to guide them in their deliberations and in their affairs, became corrupt and mismanaged the affairs of the temple and that is why they were condemned. We wanted to give a fair trial to these area committees by making the Assistant Commissioner their chairman. At the same time, we have taken care to see that if the Assistant Commissioner does anything without the permission of the Area Committee, he should report the same to the Area Committee and obtain its approval. If under any circumstances, he is forced to take any urgent action without the approval of the Area Committee, he should immediately report to the Area Committee of his action and obtain its ratification. Therefore, it was with this safeguard that we agreed to the Assistant Commissioner being the Chairman of the Area Committee. As I have already mentioned. Sir, our primary object in having accepted all these restrictions and all these safeguards in the constitution of the area committees, was to see that those temple committees which had been condemned in the past and which we are reviving in the shape of Area Committee, work efficiently and well, and that in course of time, such an arrangement does not prevent the Government or anybody asking that the members of the Area Committee should be elected. There is therefore nothing in the Bill to prevent us from coming forward at a later stage with an amendment to this effect.

"Let me, in this connexion, Sir, mention to the House that I have given notice of an amendment making the Assistant Commissioner subordinate to the Area Committee in regard to certain matters coming within its jurisdiction, whereas the Government have sought to make him a Super-Area Committee by himself, in the present Bill.

"Then, Sir, my hon. Friend Dr. A. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliyar raised a very pertinent point regarding the method of appointment to the various posts comprising the hierarchy of officials to administer this Act. I may inform the House, Sir, that the Venkataramana Rao's Committee also went into this question and made certain recommendations. They suggested that these Assistant Commissioners should be recruited by the Government in consultation with the Hindu Religious Endowments Board. As a matter of fact, in the scheme of things adumbrated by the Venkataramana Rao's Committee, the Hindu Religious Endowments Board was sought to be continued and they recommended that these appointments should be made in consultation with the President of the Board. But Mr. Ramalingam Chettiyar, who was one of the members of that Committee was of the opinion that these appointments should be made either by the Public Service Commission or by an ad hoc Committee appointed by the Government consisting of representatives of all interests and parties. Evidently my hon. Friend Dr. A. L. Mudaliyar was voicing the opinion of Mr. Ramalingam Chettiyar."

DR. A. LAKSHMANASWAMI MUDALIYAR:—"I have not voiced anybody's opinion, Sir. I have given out my own opinion."

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO:—"Perhaps, it may be, Sir, that both are of the same opinion. We also pleaded in the same manner as Dr. A. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliyar in the Select Committee, but somehow the matter was not pressed further. Under the rule-making powers the Government are empowered to frame rules for the purpose and we beg of the Government not to undertake this responsibility of making these appointments upon their own shoulders, as it would lead to a lot of public criticism, but to leave it either to the Public Service Commission or to create an ad hoc Committee for the purpose.

"Sir, my hon. Friend Dr. A. L. Mudaliyar also made certain very pertinent observations regarding our approach towards maths

[Sri S. B. Adityan] [22nd January 1951]

“ Again, it is provided that these maths must hereafter prepare dittams and budgets. Is it a drastic provision against any math? Any properly managed math and institution must have a proper system of accounting and a budget. So, in this respect also there is nothing more required of the maths than what the better managed maths are at present doing. There is the provision requiring the maths to appoint managers. The manager is only for the secular affairs and not for the religious functions. I know that many of the maths are already having managers. It is only to carry on the secular affairs of a math in the most business-like manner that managers are appointed. Thus, it will be seen that no drastic provision is sought to be introduced to exercise control over maths. Whatever is now provided for the first time is only that which a well-ordered and well-managed math is practising to-day and what a good institution is expected to do. I may assure the well-managed maths that they have nothing to fear from the provisions contained in this Bill. I may also say that the other maths, of which we have heard a lot, must now pay heed, and unless they show an immediate improvement in the right direction, it may well be that the Government would be forced to seek fresh and wider powers so that mis-managed maths may come into line with the better managed maths. I sincerely hope that it will not be necessary to bring in a Bill with more drastic provisions. I have no doubt that the Government will not hesitate to bring such Bill, because they are backed by public opinion in this matter. As an instance of the smallness of the power of control which is now introduced, I may state the position with regard to the removal of the heads of maths. Even after the head of a math has been convicted of an offence involving moral turpitude, the Government are powerless under this Bill to remove him immediately. One would expect that as soon as the head of a math is convicted of an offence, it would automatically mean his removal from office. But that is not the case. The Government are so cautious that even in such a case, they are not assuming powers to themselves to remove the head of the math. Instead, what is provided in the Bill is that the Government will apply to the court bringing the fact of conviction to the notice of the judge, and ask for an order for the removal of the head of the math. This only shows how cautious the Bill is in the matter of controlling maths and how very little the powers that the Government take to themselves.

“ Sir, we have heard a lot both here and in the other House about the Commissioner having been made a super-matadhipathi or maha matadhipathi. I do not know exactly what is meant by these terms. But what is implied is, I think, that wide powers are vested with the Commissioner. I very humbly submit that a careful perusal of the provisions will show that the Commissioner is far from being a super-matadhipathi. The fact is no order which the Commissioner can make is final. In some matters the orders of the Commissioner are appealable either to the Sub-Court or to the High Court. There are other matters in which the orders of the Commissioner are appealable to the Government. There are no orders which cannot be called in question either by the court or by the Government. In the original draft of the Bill it was provided that all the orders issued by the Commissioner would be revisable by the Government. Afterwards it was drafted and as provided in the Bill, certain matters were left to the High Court and certain others to Government. Suppose the Commissioner says that a certain institution comes under the definition contained in the Bill, and he passes an order. That order should go to the court on appeal and not to the Government. Suppose again the Commissioner issues an order saying that a certain property comes under the definition of an endowment. His order will not be final. It can be taken on appeal to the court. Suppose the Commissioner frames a scheme or he gives directions as to the disposal of the funds of a defunct institution, that scheme or order can be taken on appeal to the High Court. In all other matters when the Commissioner makes an order, that order can come before the Government. I need not here, Sir, refer in detail to all the various clauses. The power to take any matter to the court is in Clause 62, and the power to take any matter before the Government is in Clause 19, sub-clause (5). What I wish to emphasize is that the Commissioner is far from being a super-matadhipathi or a person having the final say. I personally felt that in some matters at least the Commissioner's orders could have been made final so as to avoid unnecessary litigation. With a view to avoid any embarrassment to the Minister in charge of this portfolio, it would have been better if the Commissioner's orders are made final. But the Bill provides otherwise, practically anything that the Commissioner does can be taken either to the High Court or to the Government.

“ My hon. Friend Mr. Suryanarayana Rao dealt, at great length with the area committees. The provisions relating to area committees are again an innovation. We are providing, for the first time, for the appointment of area committees. This matter was discussed very fully, and it was in fact pointed out that these committees had been in existence for many centuries. During the later stages, however, these committees became practically useless, as they were not vested with any powers. So, the Joint Select Committee decided, as a temporary measure, to give them powers over all endowments, so that we might try them, and see how they worked. Many Commissions appointed by the Government have reported that these advisory committees in the districts had not been usefully working, and that they were not taking keen interest in the affairs of temples. A case could actually be made out for the abolition of these committees. It was however felt that in this new era, we had better try these committees. Criticism was levelled that these committees were not elected bodies. The trouble was how to provide for an election. I agree that, if it were possible to have elections, we had better try them. But it was not possible to devise a workable system of election to area committees.

[Sri K. Venkataswami Nayudu] [22nd January 1951] power as is necessary to supervise the management of religious institutions and nothing more. The elective element could not be put in but still the popular element has to be included and that is why we have got the area committees.

"Then we find that the charitable endowments are also included in this Bill. That is a very much desired improvement because we find that there are so many charitable endowments which are not properly administered and are going to waste. Of course, there is section 92, there is the Charitable Endowments Act, but these are dead letters and they have not been availed of by the public. We see that though there are these two remedies, the public have not been able to make full use of them. That is why we thought fit that charitable endowments might also be included in this Bill. But the provision is not very effective; it is simply included in this Bill. A first step is taken to see that the Government will exercise certain amount of superintendence over these charitable endowments and whenever any irregularity is brought to their notice, they will take such action as is necessary. I welcome this provision.

"The question of surplus funds has also been dealt with and a good list is given in the Bill as to how surplus funds must be spent. I am sure that the Government will be enabled to have a lot of funds in their hands. Besides this, it is a good thing to regulate the spending of extra money wherever available, for useful purposes. But one thing I would insist on this occasion and that is that temple renovations are very important. For instance, you have got the Government of India's Archaeological Department which takes care of petty little things. In the Circars there is a burial-ground over which some Rs. 10,000 are spent. But we see many monuments of temples going to waste and ruin. There is no possibility of the Government coming to their rescue either through this Bill or in any other manner. Some donor must do it. Otherwise, the temples may go to rack and ruin. Therefore, I would be glad if first preference is given to temple renovations which should be attended to from temple funds or general funds that may come into the hands of the Government or funds which may come from other temples which can afford to part with their surplus money. There are a number of things that are detailed in the clause and it is very important that temple renovation and religious propaganda should be given preference as far as possible.

"Mr. Chairman, Sir, yesterday Dr. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliyar spoke about hereditary trustees and hereditary archakas. I also think that as a doctor he has put forward the scientific point of view. Everyone is agreed that the hereditary system does not count much in the management of temples or estates. When we want our temples to prosper and our religious education to develop, these hereditary trustees come in at every stage and throttle any sort of advancement and people are not able to get just benefit. So, though nothing has been provided in this Bill for that, yet it is very necessary that at earlier stages we must see that we get the proper people to do temple service. I am thankful to Dr. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliyar for mentioning that an attempt is made at Tirupati to have a college of Divinity. It is very necessary that there should be such a college where all these temple employees should have some sort of fundamental training. There are temple archakas and other people who do not know the fundamentals of Hindu religion. It may be asking too much of this Government to do all these things. Their finances are very limited. But though the Government have got only superintending power, they can use their good influence to see that wherever possible proper trustees are elected and proper employees come in to do the work.

22nd January 1951] [Sri K. Venkataswami Nayudu]

"Then we see that trustees are given more powers. But we find there are also executive officers appointed by the Government who are the real masters of the situation. He might be a petty clerk on Rs. 50 or Rs. 60, but he comes with the authority of the Government just like the policeman who has got the whole Government in his hands. So, this executive officer sets at nought the whole Board of Trustees. It is not as if the executive officer is an innocent officer who will work under the trustees. He is in fact many times the master of the situation. So, there must be a good adjustment between the executive officer, the trustee and the Government. This balancing will get good results and if at any place there is any greater weight, then the whole institution suffers.

"In this connexion, I would also like to say that in any branch of administration of Government we prescribe qualifications for officers. But there is nil qualification prescribed for an executive officer. We have got the I.A.S. qualification for a Collector but what qualification is prescribed for an executive officer? Anybody who is not fit for Government service can be appointed straightway as executive officer; he need not go before the Service Commission. It is very necessary, Sir, that we must ask him to undergo some training. At least within two years he may be asked to qualify himself before he is confirmed. He may be given two years' time to study. There are so many necessary Tests and he may be asked to pass them. Then he can know how to manage the affairs properly. That would be a better thing to do.

"Coming to the Tirupati Devasthanam, I am very sorry that the temple that gets the biggest income in this whole land is given an ordinary place along with other temples. Hitherto, there has been a separate Act and a separate Commissioner and all that. It is a big institution. It is not a mere temple; it has got educational institutions and it has got to manage so many other good things. It is really good that in the whole of this country, there is at least one temple which has got such tremendous influence with a great number of people. I tried my level best to see that it was treated in a separate manner. But that was not possible and it has not been given a separate status, except the introduction of 5 clauses or so in this Bill. I feel that this temple should be given a separate status."

[22nd January 1951]

MR. CHAIRMAN:—"I think there is also a clause in which the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasthanams Act is repealed." (Laughter.)

SRI K. VENKATASWAMI NAYUDU:—"I would only request that the temple should be given proper status. Hitherto we used to be proud of our Commissioner. Now he is going to be an Executive Officer like any other Executive Officer and will lose all the status. I do not know what salary is going to be given to that officer. But formerly there was a Deputy Commissioner who was doing very good work. I think that post is taken away in this Bill. I would implore that we must see that this temple is treated separately.

"There is another matter, Sir. It was stated in the other House that it was a local matter and therefore local people must administer this temple. But I dissent from that view, because, it is not the local persons that find the money and it is not the local persons who take so much interest in the affairs of the temple. On the other hand, the local people are benefited to a great extent by so many pilgrims visiting this temple from all parts of India. So it is absolutely necessary that everybody who is interested in the temple should be associated with the management of the temple. While I concede that a certain amount of local elements must also be there, it is essential that the Trust Board must be represented by people from all parts of India. Then only, there will be a better outlook which is very necessary for the administration of the temple.

"Again, the number of trustees has been reduced and, like other temples, it has got 5 trustees only. In the case of the Tirupati temple, there must be more representation and hence there should be more trustees.

"There is one other matter. The Religious Advisory Councils have been abolished. I think that these Advisory Councils are merely advisory and it is good that they give us ideas about technical matters. Not only in Tirupati, but in all important temples, we must have Religious Advisory Councils which would be a substitute for my idea of having a Syndicate of Religious men, to ultimately administer these temples. We have got Christian institutions in this country. We find how wonderfully they are managed by their own men and their own committees. Why should not our religious institutions also have the same privilege? That is the ideal towards which we must concentrate our attention. Sir, I must once again welcome this Bill; because, this is one of the best measures next to the Zamindari Abolition Bill. This is a great measure. We understand the keen interest that the public have evinced in this measure and we are glad that the Government have taken up this matter. It is with great trepidation and patience, Dr. Rajan, who piloted this Bill, told us that this had to be done and we find that the Bill has come on the anvil. This is a very, very moderate piece of legislation and all shades of opinion have been considered and much concession has been given to see that this Bill is put on the anvil. What I am glad is that the Government have taken up that responsibility which was necessary, in the introduction of this measure. Of course, when the Raja of Panagal first brought forward this Bill, he must have been still more nervous than what we are to-day. Now, 17 or 18 years have passed away and the Endowments Act has worked well. At present, we have got greater courage to say that we should have greater superintendence over these Hindu Religious Institutions. I request my hon. Friends not to further contest or to raise the bogey of constitutional issues. Let us all work together. All shades of opinion have been duly considered. Let us see that our temples which are very dear to our heart are enabled to work better. We must work towards that ideal, viz., that on a future date we will be able to again give up these institutions in the hands of the Religious Syndicate who will manage these institutions well. With these few words I support this Bill."

SRI S. JAYARAMA REDDI:—"Mr. Chairman, Sir, after having heard persons of great eminence like Dr. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliyar supporting this Bill, I thought that it was unnecessary on my part to make a speech on this Bill. Contrary to my expectations, there seems to be larger support in this House to this Bill than it was elsewhere. The only two gentlemen who protested against this Bill in this House are Sri Bhima Rao and Dr. Hegde. All other speakers who spoke before me have supported this measure. Those who oppose this measure seem to forget that this Bill is the outcome of public opinion that is prevalent more in Tamilnad. Many people coming from other parts of this State may not at all know what amount of feeling is created for and against this Bill. If this Bill does not find a place in the Statute Book, the friends who are contemplating to seek refuge on the constitutional issue and other defects of the Constitution or something like that, will come to realise that one day or other they will have to pay for that. I have even heard, Sir, that some people are going to exploit on the religious instincts of certain high-placed persons who will have to give their assent to this Bill when it goes up to them for approval. If such things come to pass, I think they are only digging their grave for a future day.

"Sir, much is said that this is a secular State and so it should not interfere with the religious affairs of this country. I feel, Sir, that as a sovereign Legislature, we are quite competent to legislate on matters of this kind. There are no kings who founded these institutions. Their heirs are not existent and we are their heirs as a Government and I think that it is but proper that we should take upon ourselves duties of this kind. Even if there is any defect in the Constitution as is reported or suspected to be by our Friends, I think the Constitution is meant more for the sake of the evolution or progress of the people. The Constitution is not so rigid. If there is anything that is found lacking to get support for measures of this kind, then the Constitution must be changed. I think Sri Suryanarayan Rao, when he was speaking on another occasion, said that whenever defects were noticed in the Constitution, they should be brought to the notice of the higher authorities and if necessary the Constitution must be changed. If the provisions of the Constitution are to be changed in respect of the cases mentioned by Sri Suryanarayana Rao, then I feel that even in this case they should be changed.

" These institutions were founded for the propagation of Hindu tenets and culture. Subsequently, it was found that persons who were in the management of these things were not properly managing the affairs and so persons like the late Raja of Panagal and others thought it necessary to bring a measure of this kind. Now, when this legislation is brought in, the very same people who were put in charge of these institutions without searching their conscience whether they are acting up to the expectations of those founders, are questioning the rights of the Legislature about their propriety in enacting all these measures. I would beg of them not to question our rights, but to search their own hearts and rectify themselves and be eligible for continuing in their spheres of life as they are to-day.

" As regards the provisions of this Bill, Dr. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliar was making certain observations about the Commissioner's extraordinary powers and other things. I would request the Government to take into consideration what all observations he made ; because I felt the other day that he was making those suggestions in all good spirits and if there was any lacuna that is to be filled up or any defects that are to be rectified, I think the Government will not hesitate to reconsider their attitude in matters of detail without standing on formalities or prestige.

" There are one or two small things to which Dr. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliar referred and I would like to make my observations about them. About these archakas, one thing which impressed me is the criticism about the hereditary archakas. I also have been to some temples, though not to the same number of temples as Dr. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliar has visited. The way in which those archakas repeat the Sahasranamam and other archanas does not create a feeling that they are doing it sincerely and that they are well conversant with the whole spirit behind those things. When we go to a temple, it is better that at least within that short time we are impressed with the seriousness of the slokams and other things that are recited there. From the way in which these things are done in the temples, it looks as though we are doing some business and it is our duty to pay off some money and absolve ourselves of all our sins. That should not be the spirit with which we should approach the sanctum sanctorum and I think the suggestions made by Dr. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliar should be taken into consideration.

22nd January 1951] [Sri S. Jayarama Reddi]

" About the Area Committees, he said that nomination should not be the order of the day and that all of them must be made elective bodies. I have had some previous experience of these temple committees. With the introduction of adult suffrage and other progressive reforms, I do not think it advisable that the Area Committees should be required to undergo the ordeal of elections. For, there should be no other kind of election than by adult suffrage there also. There can be no other type of electorate we can possibly conceive of at present. Therefore, it is better for some time at least that the Government are entrusted with this job and election is not brought in here.

" About audit, it was said that we were going to collect some money from these temples and that the general funds of this State were going to be spent on this account. Suppose, Sir, one hundred rupees is collected from the temples and one hundred and five rupees is estimated to be spent on audit. Then it shows that the five rupees needed more will be spent from out of the general revenues of the State on Hindu Religious institutions. That was perhaps what was said. Sir, it is quite possible that it may be contended that this five rupees from the general revenues of the State is spent on a religious institution in the State which is not common to all the people. I have a doubt in this matter and I hope that the Government will duly consider this matter. I fear that on such small, trivial matters much criticism will be made and they may be taken to courts also.

" Sir, with these few words, I support the Bill. As my hon. Friend, Sri Venkataswami Naidu said, this Bill should find a place in the Statute Book as early as possible. I am glad that in this House, there has not been so much criticism of this measure as was witnessed in the other House."

SRI H. M. JAGANNATHAM:—" Mr. Chairman, Sir, I rise to support this Bill which I consider by no means revolutionary, but a modest piece of legislation designed to arrest the process of deterioration and decay in the management of many Hindu religious temples and mathas. I will be failing in my duty if I do not express my tribute of admiration for the courage, initiative and imagination which the Government have shown in bringing forward this Bill in the teeth of opposition from certain powerful vested interests both inside and outside the ranks of our Party, backed as they are by an equally powerful and influential Press in our State.

" The House has every reason to congratulate the Hon. the Chief Minister and the Leader of the House, and Law Minister for refusing to be stampeded by the opposition so forcibly and eloquently expressed both on the floor of the Legislature and in the columns of the Press. There is no doubt the country wants this Bill; there is no denying that the vast majority of Hindus welcome this measure. But a small, powerful and vocal section of the people are attempting to create the impression that this Bill is meeting with a great opposition from the public, which is not correct. Speaking as a Harijan member of the Hindu fold I make bold to say that my community is entirely in favour of this beneficent reform and that we are solidly behind the Government in getting this Bill passed and placed on the Statute Book.

"Sir, I would like the Government not merely to take over the management and control of temples and maths but to go a step further. I want them to conscript the wealth of these temples which at present is being misused and squandered for selfish and unworthy purposes, for the benefit and social well-being of the economically backward and deserving classes in the Hindu society. The Government would be perfectly justified, if they make use of these temple funds for the uplift of the dumb, poverty-stricken millions in this land. If freedom means anything to them, it must come to them in the shape of freedom from want, freedom from fear and freedom from starvation. Neither custom, nor tradition, nor past usage should be allowed to stand in the way of social and economic betterment of the masses and the Harijans constitute the predominant element among the masses of this great country.

"Mr. Chairman, it has been admitted even by those who are vehemently opposed to this Bill that there is gross mismanagement and maladministration in regard to many of the rich temples in the State. They admit the existence of widespread abuses in the present set-up, but even so, they say they are opposed to State interference in the name of secular State. If there are abuses in the management of any public institution, can there be a more just and impartial agency than the State to interfere in such matters?

"Sir, it has been made clear to us by innumerable instances that the Hindu Religious Endowment Board, as at present constituted, is helpless to exercise any real control or check over the management of temple properties and funds and set right matters. While that is so, no right-thinking person, unless his personal interests are so much at stake, can raise any objection to this Bill which only seeks to remedy the evils on the surface in the present set-up. It is for that reason that I consider this a modest measure. The old poojas, ceremonies and rituals remain and they will continue to be performed by the same class of poojaris. Surely it should not be made the eternal monopoly of any one class of people. They will continue to give trouble and will do their best to obstruct and frustrate the good intentions of the Government. I would, therefore, suggest that at the end of a given period, say 5 years or 10 years, the hereditary system of priesthood should be abolished. In the meanwhile, the Government should start colleges of religious instruction to train people for performing temple rituals and allow men of all classes of Hindu society to take training here. The best of men in character, piety, etc., should be chosen for the purpose. It is only then the archakas will command respect from the public. Unlike Christian Padhiris and Muslim divines, our priests have no respect in the eyes of the public at present. Why is that so? For, it is said:

*'Janmana Jayate Sudhra, Karmana Jayate Dwija,
Veda Patena Vipranam, Brahma Dyanena Brahmana.'*

meaning all people by birth are Sudhras, but by good deeds they become Dwija, by reciting Vedas become Vipra and by devotion become Brahmana. That is the true ideal. But, at present, we go by the hereditary principle. Anyone born to a Brahman is a Brahman and anyone born to a Panchama is a Panchama, and no value is attached to character or 'mental equipment' of a person.

"I would have certainly liked the Government to have embodied in the Bill some innovations and changes in the form of worship and rituals in the temple. I would have liked to see statutory obligation laid upon the wealthy temples and maths to conduct regular feeding of school children, and running of schools and free medical institutions for the benefit of the people round about their area. For ultimately, God manifests Himself in the form of service to suffering humanity, and there can be no better way of utilising temple money than service of the poor and needy in the land.

"If you want to redress social inequalities, the old caste distinctions must go. That means levelling up the Harijans; they should not remain Panchamas for all time. It must be within the reach of a Panchama if he has the qualifications and aptitude to take to professional priesthood in temples. Surely, my friend, Swami Sahajananda, is entitled to become an archaka.

"Sir, I have done. I conclude by giving my wholehearted support to the Bill. May this legislation prove an effective instrument for consolidating the Hindu religion and for making our temples real centres for the spread of faith in God, brotherhood of man and service of one's fellowmen."

SRI M. NARAYANA MENON:—“Sir, I rise to bless this Bill. The Government are entitled to the thanks of the people who were really expecting that this Bill would be passed in the near future. But even in blessing this Bill, I may point out certain irregularities and make a few suggestions for improvement. My hon. Friend Sri Bhima Rao has rightly pointed out that a wave of irreligion is passing over the country as it is passing over in all other countries. It is no doubt true. But has it omitted the people managing these maths and religious institutions? More waves of irreligion have passed through these institutions and made them more irreligious. In this state of things, it is absolutely necessary that the Government should take the management of the secular side of these maths and religious institutions, so that the properties belonging to these maths and religious institutions might be preserved and that when the wave of irreligion has passed away, they might be used completely and absolutely for the purposes of religion and for the improvement of these religious institutions. So the Government have rightly stepped in at this time. In doing so they have not touched the religious tenets of any religion or of any branch of Hindu religion. The Government has touched simply the secular management of these institutions, namely, the properties of these institutions.

22nd January 1951] [Sri M. Narayana Menon]

“Sir, it has been stated by some hon. Member here that in certain respect this Bill is communal because certain community is going to be very much affected by it. I certainly do not agree with this view point. There is no community at all in religion. Religion is for all, whether high caste or low caste men, whether rich or poor men. For all of them religion is the same. Religion is holy and pure and it ought to be thoroughly maintained as such. In that view, it cannot be said that any community is affected by the changes the Government propose to effect in the secular management of these institutions under the provisions of this Bill. After all what the Government have attempted is only a change in the management of the properties of the religious institutions and maths. How can this touch any community? It is the property of the math or of the religious institution or of a charitable endowment that is proposed to be managed properly. The properties of these are certainly not the property of any community or of any single individual. In that view nobody can say that any community is touched or will be touched. No more argument is necessary on this point. There is not a single word in the Bill which would affect the interest of any community either by implication or by expression. So we may not talk about it any further.

“Sir, with regard to the management, I think there is no doubt that some criticisms were harsh. I think there is nothing wrong in the proposed management of the properties by Government to warrant such harsh criticism. Unless the Government is strong and the Government officers are made strong to administer these institutions, the object, namely, the proper management of these secular side of these institutions cannot be achieved. They must exercise these powers. But in the exercise of these powers it may be pointed out to them: ‘Don’t ill-treat these people who were being treated before with certain considerations and sympathy and shown some regard. Please do so even now’ so that the officers of Government may treat them with consideration and sympathy. But that cannot go into the enactment. That may not go into the rules even. It can only be done by instructions and by Government assuming a super-religious position in the sense that the Government have a religion which is not Hinduism, which is not Muhammadanism, and which is not Christianity but a super-religion as it were, a religion of the religions. Such a religion the Government should have and in a sense the Government can give instructions to their employees to treat these old people, Mahants and trustees, with some consideration and regard. But I think we cannot introduce anything of that sort in the legislation itself. If any such thing is introduced in the legislation or rules, the result would be, there will be a claim or even a contention by some people that they were not so well treated as stated in the rules or as stated in the legislation and so on. All this must be avoided. I have not felt that the provisions are very harsh. They are good enough. But in the exercise of these, show sympathy and leniency. That is all what is wanted.

[Sri M. Narayana Menon] [22nd January 1951]

"Sir, one of the greatest things that the Bill proposes to do is the utilization of the surplus income of these institutions. As a lawyer, in the course of my career, I have very often felt that in Malabar, I am not very much acquainted with the maths elsewhere, this money which is endowed or raised by, subscriptions at the instance of the Acharyas out of religious devotion to the maths and temples, has been spent in litigation, from the one end of Malabar to the other. I have known temples losing their properties on account of the litigations. They have been compelled to sell properties. The quarrels start between two persons claiming the title to the seat of the matadhipathi. One goes to the court claiming his right and the other contests it saying that he alone is entitled to be the matadhipathi. There are differing views and the disciples also differ as to who should be the matadhipathi. Of course such cases have even come to the High Court. (Interruption.) These quarrels may stop, after this legislation is passed. Even if they do not, they need not go to the courts. By quarrelling these people are spending not their money, but it is the money belonging to these public institutions, to these endowments that is being spent. This Bill certainly has satisfied me at least with regard to the utilization of surplus funds. By this all these litigations and wastage of money in various other matters will be stopped. Sir, another way in which the money is spent by these people is by the luxurious and expensive manners in which the religious festivals in temples and maths are conducted. Of course some festivals are necessary. Nobody will object to them. But at times people get excited and celebrate the festivals in an extravagant manner and lot of money is spent over that. The whole money is wasted and the next day only the smoke remains and nothing else. The money spent on such festivals and such other extravagances is a loss. It is therefore necessary that there must be some control on the expenditure of these religious institutions and over their incomes. Then only can these religious institutions and temples survive, and we can find the funds to maintain and also strengthen and improve them.

"Sir, according to clause 59 of the Bill, one important direction in which the surplus money can be utilized is for educational purposes. I am sure this is a wise direction and the one criticism about that is that the educational institutions would be uplifting all including non-Hindus. I certainly say that every citizen of the country, whatever may be the religion to which he belongs, must be allowed to have the benefit of the teaching of these institutions because it is never said anywhere in any of these endowments or anywhere in the sastras that no man other than a Hindu shall be educated with reference to the money belonging to these institutions and endowments. These were made for bettering the Hindu religion or in support of the Hindu religious temples and so on. But by giving proper education, and showing the proper light to the other people, even though they may be non-Hindus, we would be propagating the right Hindu religious ideals and that would certainly support the expectations of those persons who endowed these properties or charities. Therefore there will be no harm if we do that. I hope the other communities will begin to respond similarly and in course of time, that is to say, in a few years they would say that their surplus income may be made use of for education purpose of all. Then the surplus from all religious institutions and endowments will be at the hands of the Government which can be utilized for the benefit of the people. So it is a very wise provision so that the surplus must be utilized for the benefit of all, non-Hindus as well.

"Then, Sir, there are the maths. With reference to pathakanikas, it is provided that the matadhipathi must keep an account. But it has been said, Sir, that to call upon him to produce the account relating to these before the Commissioner, would be an act of impiety or disregard. I do not think so. Nobody objects to the provision in sub-clause (1) under clause 55 which says—

'The trustee of a math shall be entitled to spend at his discretion, for purposes connected with the math any ("pathakanika") that is to say, any gift of property or, money made as a personal gift to him as the head of the math.'

It is only to the second portion of the clause, namely—that there is objection. I think it is not very reasonable, because, if you want the trustees to maintain accounts, how do you know whether they are maintained or not unless you see them. The Commissioner must have a look into them or at the Commissioner's order somebody should do that. If you have a provision that the trustee must keep an account, then there must be a provision that account books can be looked into by authorities. Supposing the trustee has spent the money in an irreligious manner, what is the use of looking into the accounts? Therefore something will certainly follow from the keeping of the accounts and the looking into the accounts because even a matadhipathi can be removed for acts of irreligion and so on either by the Government or the people concerned. I therefore, Sir, say that this provision has been rightly inserted there and it should not be removed.

'(2) The trustee shall keep regular accounts of all receipts and disbursements of the nature referred to in sub-section (1), and shall cause such accounts to be produced before the Commissioner or any person authorized by him in this behalf, whenever, so required.'

"One other small matter is with reference to nomination to the Area Committees. I think in this matter, the Government have shown sufficient wisdom as also the Joint Select Committee. Those familiar with the panchayat elections will realize that on account of these panchayat elections even family quarrels have arisen just as you know the family feuds in Romeo and Juliet. Such feuds have arisen in the villages. In respect of the panchayat administration, the Government have complete power and therefore can handle the situation, but in respect of these temples if you have elections then from the archaka down below to the head of the math, the matadhipathi, there will be quarrels. Participation in election will result in parties being formed and afterwards who will suffer, it is only the temples that would suffer because one party successful management would be much better in the hands of a matadhipathi of the same district. The object of my saying this is that I have had occasion of knowing first-hand about the management or the mismanagement of temples.

"Sir, this Bill has lost its original vigour and much of its brawn, so to say, has gone. The vigour is at its lowest ebb. I think and a large number of people also say that it has lost much of its flesh and now has only bones. If the Hon. Dr. T. S. S. Rajan who brought in this Bill had been a dictator and if he could have carried his wishes or will into action, the shape and form of this Bill would have been entirely quite different. It has been licked, not into shape but out of shape. Sir, I do not want to go into the merits or demerits of the Bill now. My object in speaking to-day is to say a few words about the Board's services. According to section 104, Sir, the services of the members are to be terminated. The proposal to terminate the services of all hands who were serving, apart from the President, the Commissioners and the Assistant Commissioners, seems to me unjust and unfair. The Board is a statutory body with quasi-governmental functions. The budget is sanctioned by the Government and the rules regulating the functions of the services are directed or supervised by the Government themselves. It is an established convention that no new rule or no new enactment should be passed which would adversely affect the services. The procedure of termination of services of the present staff, as it is adopted in the Administrator-General's office and the Official Assignee's office and even in the case of electricity concerns, was not followed."

MR. CHAIRMAN:—"Does the Bill refer to termination of the services? What is the section?"

DR. SYED TAJUDDIN:—"Section 104, Sir. Great harm will be done to the members of the Board if they should be sent out even with pensions because pensions cannot carry these unfortunate people very far. Now that everything is four times expensive, the wolf will be at their door always."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"No, it will die."

DR. SYED TAJUDDIN:—"The education of children of these people will be difficult and their age would not be such as to enable them to enter any other service."

MR. CHAIRMAN:—"The section does not mean that everybody should be sent away. It means only those who cannot be absorbed. We hope the Government will absorb everybody."

DR. SYED TAJUDDIN:—"My point is even that one man should not be sent away because the Board has quasi-governmental functions and everything is controlled by the Government. They should not be treated like the zamindars."

22nd January 1951] [Dr. Syed Tajuddin]

"They should not be classed with the staff of the zamindari offices. If at all they are disbanded, they should be absorbed in other offices at least."

"I have nothing more to say."

SRI N. VENKATACHALAMAJI:—"On a point of information, Sir? Has the hon. Member at any time gone to any temple for darsan?"

SRI B. NARAYANASWAMI NAYUDU:—"Sir, I wish to refer to the archakas and one or two matters."

"There are two sides to the affairs of a temple. The archaka or priesthood side is one. The Endowments Act came into existence about 25 years ago, dealing with the property side. I want to know from the Hon. Minister as to what has been done with regard to the archaka side. Is it that the archakas are such good persons that they require no reform? The Bill is silent about it. My suggestion is that the archakas are very vital parts of the temple and therefore nobody wants to touch them. Member after Member has stated on the floor of the House that the archakas are so hopeless that they do not understand even what they are doing. As my hon. Friend Dr. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliyar put it, by this Act you are merely petrifying the present state. I would on the other hand say, you are perpetuating the petrification. Petrification has set in and this Bill does not attempt to remove it. It merely aims at collecting the income from the temple properties. The Bill does not want to purify the religious side. What does this Bill do to revive the religious side? What have you done with regard to the priesthood? What about recruitment of the functionaries called 'priests'? Is there going to be an examination for them and selection made on the basis of marks obtained? Is there going to be examination for this service, as my hon. Friend Sri Suryanarayana Rao wants for recruitment to the other services? Are you thinking of recruitment on the basis of merit? Is it going to be a question of getting the best men for service as archakas after an examination? Or, is this service to be confined to the Brahman community? What about the legislation hanging fire for the last 25 years without any effort being made for improving the religious side? Why have you left this religious side to petrify? I am glad the President of the Endowments Board is here. He will say that the archakas of the temples are such nice men that they do not deserve to be criticized. But what is it that my friend has done? What does clause 48 say? The archakas are called hereditary archakas, meaning that succession to this service will come down from father to son. The qualification is that the man concerned should be the son of an archaka. What are his qualifications for it? No qualification is laid down in the Act that the son should have training and should get sufficient number of marks in a college of divinity. Is any such thing said? No. Then what is it? Clause 48 (2) says: 'In cases where the office or service is hereditary, the next in the line of succession shall be entitled to succeed'. Where, in this case, are the qualifications for recruitment to the other services of the State? Does not the absence of this prescription amount to corruption? Perhaps I may be told that there is no corruption involved here, because there is nothing here except making money? Is this the standard for the recruitment of archakas? Is there to be no college for archakas and examinations held and purification obtained and then appointments made? Or, are you going to purify the system of archakas, no matter how awkward and stinking the system is at present? Sir, is not any improvement on the priesthood side much more important than the property side of our religious institutions? I can understand your taking over the properties of these institutions. You can do that; but what is the meaning of doing that without reforming the religious side?

"Then, Sir, who are these hereditary archakas? Why do you confine them to one line and community? This State is said to be free from communal feelings without caste distinction. You are erasing the words 'Brahman', 'non-Brahman' and so on from the official records? Will the temple authorities erase the word 'Brahman' from the service of archakas? Will they put in only what they call the 'Harijans' there? All are 'Harijans' and some are big 'Harijans'. But what is the reform introduced by this Bill in this respect? I ask my friend Sri Suryanarayana Rao. He is a secular champion; he is an efficiency champion and a champion for the admission to colleges on merit only. According to him, there is no question of Brahman and non-Brahman. Nothing of the sort. What does he say with regard to this priesthood?"

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON: "How is it to be purified?"

SRI B. NARAYANASWAMI NAYUDU:—"You cannot improve a petrified mango. You can only take another mango. You cannot inject medicine into a petrified mango.

"The next question to be considered is, how to put in another person? Is this service to be confined only to one sect, even though you want that the caste name should be erased from the records? That is the fundamental question. Have you erased the words 'Brahman' and 'non-Brahman' from these religious institutions? Are you opening the priesthood to all classes? I ask, why has this not been done? Is it not the case that you do not want to touch certain aspects of the religious institutions? Then you provide that when a hereditary trustee is removed, a fit person should be appointed. But as in the case of village munsifs in certain cases the minor child of a hereditary archaka will be entitled to succeed. This is so in certain cases only. Why this distinction? I want to know whether 'a fit person' will include any person. Nandanar can be absorbed in the Hindu divinity, but can he be made a priest? You can make a God of him. Can you make a priest of him? Is 'any person' a 'fit person'? I want to know unequivocally whether the Government mean that a person will be fit if he is efficient on the basis of marks obtained, according to my friend Sri Suryanarayana Rao, or on the basis of his persuasion or on the basis of his caste and confined only to one community?

"Now, Sir, the real question is, are you not merely tinkering with the property question? If the Hindu religion is to be revived, the reformation of the priesthood is necessary. The priests must be placed on a higher footing and they must be persons who command the confidence of the worshippers. Hon. Members have condemned the present-day archakas as unfit to hold that office. What is the object of passing a Bill which shelves this question? Therefore I say this Bill serves no useful purpose, and leaves out one important point.

"Now I come to the other important clauses, viz., 76 and 104. One cannot help feeling, why should this Department be 'governmentalized'? I do not know what it means. I think the intention is to make it a Government department. I do not understand the need for it. If it is felt that the Government should get 5 per cent and not 1½ per cent of the revenue, this is necessary. From being a body corporate, the Endowments Board will become a Government Department and the officers will all be appointed by the Government. The chief man, the Commissioner, including the deputy and assistant commissioners who rise from the ranks will be there. What is the difficulty you experienced in the present Endowments Board formed under the Act of 1926? How has this Board been discharging its functions? What is the need for making it a department of the Government except for putting in there the nominees of the present Government? Is there any other reason? What is the efficiency you seek to create by changing the present personnel? Is it a case of no-confidence in the present personnel of the Board? Have they misused their power or transgressed it? Has their administration become contemptuous? As has been stated by Dr. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliyar, is it necessary to make the Board a Government Department? Could you not deal with a body corporate? To-morrow, if you want to say that the archakas could be selected from any community, the Government will say you are undertaking legislation on a sectional basis. But a body corporate, constituted as the Endowments Board is, will have full power to do such things. It cannot be accused of taking sides. It could assess the feelings of the Hindu community and say; 'with regard to archakas and certain others, we would effect some changes in regard to succession to the office'. I want to know, what benefit we derive by governmentalizing the Board except getting more money from the religious institutions and having on the establishment our own personnel? I ask again, what is wrong with the present Board which consists of 5 persons with concurrent jurisdiction administering the present Act? How is it going to be improved by having one man at the top with power to choose any person he likes, assisted by a number of deputy and assistant commissioners and holding office, as laid down in clause 104, 'at the pleasure of the Government'? This is what clause 104 (1) says—

"Is it because you want 5 per cent revenue that you made this provision? Or, is it because you want to put in your own personnel everywhere including the area committees? Is this a genuine attempt to improve the administration and put in office A, B, C and D in the place of X, Y, Z and so on? What is the urgency about it? Is the present Endowments Board acting so flagrantly against the Constitution that you cannot stand it any more? What is the change you are effecting by this measure except making a body corporate into a department of the Government and granting pensions and allowances to the men there?"

"But still it is pertinent for me to ask why the Government want to abolish a body corporate which was supervising these religious institutions and vest the whole thing in the Government's control. The Government have not touched the vital matters connected with the religious institutions like the priesthood. They cannot condemn the administration of the Board as insufficient or inefficient or incompetent. Therefore, Clause 104 is merely intended to clutch at patronage which may be exercised by the Government according to their own ideas. I do not mean any disparagement when I say that Clause 104 and Clause 76 and the whole Act are conceived for nothing better than creating what may be called a superhuman agency by the Government and making it answerable to the Government themselves."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—“Mr, Chairman, I am grateful for the over-all general support that has been given to this Bill though the opinions varied as the pendulum of a clock from one end to the other. We can see the sharp differences of opinion in matters like this if we compare the views expressed by Sri Manjaya Hegde and Sri Bhima Rao on the one side and the views expressed by Sri H. M. Jagannatham on the other. One view is 'Take off your hands from all religious institutions; we do not want the profane hands of a secular Government to come anywhere near religious institutions.' On the other hand, Sri H. M. Jagannatham says that we should conscript the whole funds and utilize them for the ameliorative purposes of the whole community and that there should be no superstition. With these two extreme views, we can see the difficulty of finding a proper mean in matters like this.

[Sri K. Madhava Menon] [22nd January 1951]

"Now I shall proceed to answer the objections raised by Sri Manjaya Hegde and Sri Bhima Rao. I am sorry that Sri Bhima Rao said that this Bill was the outcome of the clamour of a clique. It is unfortunate that he said so. He has not said what was the motive of the clique. May I not say, Sir, that the opposition to this Bill is the result of another clique? But I do not want to say that. Sir, Sri Narayanaswami Nayudu was not here when Sri Bhima Rao was speaking. Sri Narayanaswami Nayudu asked: What about the archakas, the priesthood; what about the petrification and the putrefaction that have set in here? I am sorry, Sir, that he did not read the preamble to the Bill and he has not heard what Sri Bhima Rao said. He said: 'Suppose a puja is going on by a matadhipathi or a pujari; however much I am for the removal of untouchability, however much I may have respect for Sri Muniswami Pillai and persons like him, if a Harijan enters when a puja is going on, what will be the feeling of other people?' That was what Sri Bhima Rao said. Sir, Sir, it is a matter of faith. It is not a question of whether Sri Narayanaswami Nayudu believes in temples or I believe in temples. It was asked: Could not a temple have sanctity if someone other than a Brahman is conducting the puja there? We know in Tirupathi, Kalahasthi and other temples who perform the puja every day. (Interruption.) I am only speaking of certain types of people. It is a question of the types of people. There are even hon. Members like Sri Bhima Rao who ask what would be the feelings of ordinary people if a Harijan enters when a puja is going on. If such a thing can come from a Member of this House

SRI B. NARAYANASWAMI NAYUDU:—"What was their feeling when the temples were thrown open to the Harijans?"

MR. CHAIRMAN:—"May I know who is the purohit of the hon. Member, Sri Narayanaswami Nayudu?"

SRI B. NARAYANASWAMI NAYUDU:—"There is no Kamma purohit, Sir."

MR. CHAIRMAN:—"I do happen to know the family purohit of the hon. Member."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"When an hon. Member like Sri Bhima Rao can express an opinion like that, it is not very easy to give a definition of archakas and it is a very hazardous thing to give any definite opinion in the matter.

"Apart from that I shall now deal with some of the remarks made by Dr. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliyar and Sri Narayanaswami Nayudu. Sri Narayanaswami Nayudu raised two questions. One was about the archaka. He asked, 'What have you to say about this? Why are you keeping quiet? The question is, who is going to be the archaka. Why should there be this hereditary thing with regard to the pujari?' In fact, he put the question squarely and asked, 'Are you going to deal only with the properties of the institutions; are you not going to reform the religion and improve the religion and remove the putrefaction?" But unfortunately Sir, the scope of the Bill, as stated in the preamble to it is this—

"Whereas it is expedient to amend and consolidate the law relating to the administration and governance of Hindu Religious and Charitable Institutions and Endowments"

Pujaris or archakas in a temple doing strotram, ashtotram or sahasranamam is not a matter of administration of the endowments. That is not therefore in the scope of the Bill. That is my first answer. (Interruption.) That is a different matter. He asked me about this particular Bill. I would certainly welcome a person of the type of Nandanar being an archaka. Our sacred books do not say anything against it. In the Gita it is said—

‘पत्रं पुष्पं फलं तथैव यो मे भक्त्या प्रयच्छति ।

तदहं भक्त्युपहतमश्नामि प्रयतात्मनः’ ॥

The Lord says that whoever offers to Him a leaf, a flower, a fruit or water with devotion or bhukthi, He accepts it. Therefore, I do not see anything against it even in our fundamentals. According to our puranas, sage Vyasa who was responsible for the Vedas was the son of a fisherwoman. If things have happened like that before, it is quite possible we can find another Vyasa in another fisherwoman's son. An archaka must be qualified for it. That is the only definition of fitness. Nothing more. But it cannot be brought under this Act because this does not deal with the reform of religion. Even if we want to make a law like that, we may not be allowed to do so, for article 25 (2) (a) of the Constitution of India says that we can make a law only for 'regulating or restricting any economic, financial, political or other secular activity which may be associated with religious practice'.

"Whether archakas performing ashtothram is a secular activity associated with religious practice is the question. So we cannot make any such definition here. Whether it is a Brahman archaka or a non-Brahman archaka, the law, as it is contemplated here, can only deal with the administration of the endowments and the properties of the religious institutions and not with the religious practices. We have definitely said that we are not interfering and we should not interfere with the religious practices. The entire sacredness of a temple or any religious institution depends on the faith the people have in it. Faith in God is not a thing which we can measure by reason or logic. When reason or logic comes in, faith has no place there. Lakhs of people are going to Tirupathi and they are not people who know the nice distinctions and who have any feeling about whether the archaka who repeats the mantra repeats it with the proper vibhakti and strictly according to Panini's grammar. These people who go to Tirupathi and other temples are not concerned with Panini's grammar or other grammar because they themselves do not know iv. (Sri B. Narayanaswami Nayudu: 'It is all rotten.') But that is where we are. You proceed with your intellect and reason. They proceed with faith."

[Sri K. Madhava Menon] [22nd January 1951]

SRI B. NARAYANASWAMI NAYUDU:—"I have faith in God and not in the archaka."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"If my friend has faith in God, he need not care for what the archaka repeats. God will bless him in spite of the archaka. But that is not the ordinary person."

"Thousands of people that go to the temples to-day are not really concerned about it. There is no use trying to quibble; persons who generally go to the temples with faith to worship in the temples, generally are not persons like some of us who might have learnt Sanskrit or who could understand at least whether the words are pronounced correctly. Every one cannot understand whether the words are pronounced correctly or not, because oftentimes we do not fully hear what is being recited. It is all a question of faith of those who go there; they do not go there for a meticulous dissection of the particular way in which the words are uttered. They want a particular person who is entitled to do it—according to them of course—to do it and they feel that then they get the blessing, at any rate, they feel they have done their duty if they pay for it and see that the right thing is done by the right man. Of course it is necessary that we must see that the correct thing is being recited, but that is a work which the religious leaders, the matathipathis and others should attend to; it is they that should see to it that the practice of reciting the correct things does not die and that there are no petrifications and putrifications. In that connexion, Dr. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliyar stated that the late Raja of Panagal was wise enough—because he knew the conditions of the times—to see to it that he only created the Board and to say that public opinion was developed only up to the extent of having the Board but no further. He is quite right. It is now 25 years after that, and public opinion as expressed by many of the Members here is changed to the extent that we should see that these properties of the temples are treated as trust properties. These properties have been given on trust by various religious-minded people, not only for the benefit of the institutions but for the benefit of the future generations; they believed that by donating or endowing properties to these institutions, they would be doing good not only to themselves but to others. They desired that these properties should be properly managed and should not be misappropriated, and the intentions of those great men who have created these trusts are now being carried out. That is all that is being done. The public feeling is definitely, not that you should not touch these things at all, but that you should regulate them and should support the decision of Government to do so. It is not with the idea, as Mr. Narayanaswami Nayudu suggested, of having thousands of persons appointed as members of area committees or as employees in the offices, not that because the elections are coming very soon, we want to fill up all places available with our own people and all that—it is not with any such idea that this measure has been brought before the House. 'I have a suspicion' he says: 'Samsoyathma vinasayathi'. Do not have suspicion in any man; it is always dangerous. What I say is this: when the suggestion was made in the year 1938 by the then President of the Hindu Religious Endowments Board practically on the same lines, did anybody anticipate an election to come off in the year 1951 and that before that all the places could be filled up? It is a thing which I may call imagination running riot, so far as that suspicion is concerned. My friend and I differ politically so much that I know that whatever is said by one of us will be viewed with suspicion by the other person; but I am glad to say that this proposal was first made years ago and even on the present occasion the measure has been before us for the past three years, and for one reason or another it had to be postponed from time to time. It so happens that it has come to us just now, and you cannot therefore say that there is the suspicion that the intention is not quite good, that we have a motive or any bad idea in our mind."

"As regards the criticisms of Dr. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliyar, comparatively they are very different from the criticisms we have had in the other House and from those of Mr. Hegde and Mr. Bhima Rao. It is not a plea for vested interests. He simply asked 'Is it the right way, are these reforms necessary?' He says that four things are prominent in the Bill. One is the faith of the Government in themselves. I may say at once that no Government can govern unless they have faith in themselves. Secondly he referred to the desire for patronage—that I have already answered. Thirdly he said that the courts were disregarded. Certainly there I join issue with him. It has become a sort of fashion nowadays to say whenever legislation is brought forward, that there is disregard of the courts. Where and how have we disregarded them, I want to know, and to what extent? If we are thinking of reforming certain age-long practices, then it is time to cry halt; there must be a limit to it and we may say 'thus far and no further'. What we have been trying to consider to the extent possible both in the Select Committee and in the House is that where a question of right or title to property is involved, the decision must be left with the court and not with the Government; but where it is a sort of dispute on small matters, merely for the satisfaction of the pride or prejudice of particular persons, and where the property of the institution which is trust property is touched and is likely to be destroyed or wasted away, then we say 'No; it is a luxurious litigation for the purpose of getting some petty satisfaction, we are not going to allow it, and the Legislature and the Government must cry halt to it'. I may say that not only this Legislature but every Legislature in the whole country is now saying 'thus far and no further' so far as these matters are concerned. If it is said that individual liberty is being restricted when you are told that you should not do this and should not do that, then the answer is necessarily that society wants that you can go only thus far and no further. Therefore I say, some limit is necessary. And we are putting such a limit only where necessary. I should like to have some specific instances where the courts have been disregarded. As I said at the time of my opening speech in the other House, as a matter of general policy, the Government have been trying to see that wherever the right to property or title to property or any question of right is involved, the decision is left with the court. That has been the criterion and my feeling is that we have stuck to it. We have never claimed we are omniscient in such matters, and we have left it to the people concerned who are accustomed to go to courts, to have the matter settled that way.

“ Dr. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliyar then referred to financial commitments, but he did not develop it and did not argue in what way it was not right. The Finance Minister was not then here, but luckily he came afterwards. Mr. Mudaliyar said that Government had not considered what would be the financial commitments in this respect and perhaps they were committing themselves to spend large amounts which they ought not to. On the other hand, Sir, I may assure him we have some idea of the financial commitments. The Board has been working these years with the 3 per cent contribution it is getting; and what is the amount it is likely to get in the future? We have not said ‘ 5 per cent ’ straightway; we have simply said ‘ any sum up to 5 per cent ’. It may be 2 or even 3 per cent as now. In the clause relating to finance, i.e., clause 76, we have stated that all the necessary expenses would be met by contribution. We shall not certainly strain the finances of the State for the purpose of managing or superintending the administration of the religious and charitable endowments.

“ Then, Sir, Sri Suryanarayana Rao, Sri Adityan and others who were in the Select Committee referred to the Area Committees. In the original Bill as introduced at the time when the motion was made for referring it to a Select Committee, there was no question of any committees at all—area committee or any other. But people who knew the conditions of the temples and who were in touch with their management, told the Select Committee that there must be local or Area Committees. We discussed to a considerable extent the question whether we should leave membership of these committees to election. In the case of Tirupathi for instance, it is not only a Madras State temple, it is an All-India temple and it will not be right on our part to leave it to the worshippers in the Tirupathi local area to have the election for the purpose. Are we to allow the people in that area alone to be the voters? Perhaps, as Dr. Mudaliyar himself said, the nearer the temple, the farther away from God; and that may be the case in respect of local people being taken as voters. The main idea is that people must have faith in the temples. Mr. Narayana Menon was saying that there was a wave of irreligion going on and if that is so, we must give sufficient consideration to this question. This question as I said, was discussed in the Select Committee and it was decided that there need be no elections. It may be that if we put it to elections, people who want to destroy these temples may come in. So, the Government were anxious that in the earlier stages at least, these committees should be appointed and then, as time goes on, if we feel there is nothing wrong or dangerous in putting it to elections, we can have the change. When we heard the speech of Mr. Narayanaswami Nayudu, with regard to archakas, I was reminded of one of the speeches I heard during the days when there was an agitation going on for temple entry. I remember a particular person was very forcefully asking for the opening of the temples. He did not say anything about entry by all castes or any such thing; he said that our temples are such that the Gods are located (Interruption : In a zenana) in the sanctum sanctorum where there is no fresh air; he said we must certainly relieve our Gods from suffocation, that if necessary the walls should be thrown down so that there might be more of convenience given to our Gods, and that therefore the agitation should be for the opening of temples— not that all people should be allowed to worship, but with a view to give the Gods greater convenience and more of air. That is the speech I heard. If that is the idea underlying the speech of Mr. Nayudu when he referred to the question as to who should be the archaka, then I must say, it is a matter of faith. If the general body of worshippers is satisfied that anybody who is a proper person, whatever may be his caste or creed, can do it properly, certainly that time will come. At the same time, Sir, we need not rush the reform in such a way as to destroy our temples in order to remove the putrifaction. By doing so, we will be removing not the putrifaction but the temples themselves. It may be nice or it may be putrid, we cannot say, because we do not know much about of the things that are being done.

“ Then with regard to the question of hereditary trustee, the Bill as it came out of the Select Committee did not contain this provision. When the Select Committee was sitting and before the Select Committee finished its work, the Constitution was passed. At the time of its sittings the implications of the various Articles of the Constitution were not before the Select Committee. Further, even after the introduction of the Select Committee Bill in the other House, even after the general discussion was over and after six clauses were passed, we had to take time and get the matter examined in detail by our legal advisers, the Advocate-General and other legal talents. In the matter of these hereditary trustees, we were advised it would be wrong to remove them except where natural justice demands it, that a hereditary trustee can be removed only in case a scheme was to be prepared for the temple. So, Sir, that is my answer to Mr. Subbarama Reddi—that because our legal advisers wanted that it should not be done, we thought it wiser to accept their advice and not to rush in, in regard to this question of Constitution where even angels fear to tread.

"As regards hereditary archakas, the question arises only where there are archaka inams. These inams have been given for service to be rendered. Clauses 30, 31 and 32 specifically provide that where a hereditary archaka refuses to do or does not do the service for which the inam has been granted to him, the inam can be resumed and can be given to anybody. Clauses 30, 59 and 85 also make provision to the effect that there must be proper teaching given to the archakas, and that the temple funds may be utilized for training the archakas, the adhyapakas and the vedaparanikas. So, it is not a question of hereditary trustee alone that we are attaching importance to; we must see that the archakas and others are also properly trained. There are temples where there are hereditary archakas. There are hereditary archakas of temples and the question does not arise in their case. In every place there is a lot of service inams and the question how far their rights can be taken away by a mere ukase of the Legislature will come in. In the other House I heard the pleadings of hon. Members of our want of sympathy for the archakas and for the good work done by them. I am sure, Sir, you would have heard the other side of it also. I would appeal to my hon. Friends here to read the proceedings of the other House, so that they may know both sides of the question.

"Then, Sir about the question of maths, Dr. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliyar said that there was a difference between the old Act and the new Act. The main objection of the hon. Member was to clause 55, sub-clause (2) and Mr. Suryanarayana Rao also raised very great objection to it, but I cannot really understand such objections if we refer to the clause itself. Clause 55 (1) is all right, but the objection is to sub-clause (2) which says: 'The trustee shall keep regular accounts of all receipts and disbursements of the nature referred to in sub-clause (1)'. Mr. Suryanarayana Rao's amendment is to the effect that the first part of the sub-clause may remain, while the latter part should be omitted. The gravamen of the charge is, in the words of Dr. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliyar, the position of the matadhipathi has been made undignified by saying that he shall produce the accounts before the Commissioner or any person authorized by him. Now, according to sub-clause (1) the trustee of a math shall be entitled to spend at his discretion, for purposes connected with the math any 'pathakanika', etc. The Government want to know that the moneys spent are for purposes connected with the math. I do not see how it can be seen whether expenditure has been incurred for the purposes connected with the math. If really you are earnest in seeing that the money should be used only for purposes connected with the math, then somebody must know that and that can be known only by seeing the accounts whether the expenditure has been incurred for the purposes of the math or otherwise. After all, what is the purpose of keeping the accounts? Are they to be kept in a prayer room for the purpose of prayer? Was that the idea of the Select Committee in saying that the trustee shall keep regular accounts? Is it intended to be kept as a part of the prayer? It is not so. The idea of the Select Committee was that 'pathakanika' can be spent by the trustee at his discretion. Matadhipathis are 'sanyasins' and they have no attachment for wealth. (Sri B. Narayanaswami Nayudu: 'De jure.') They are expected to have no attachment to wealth. In fact, I do not want them to be attached to this world by considerations of material wealth and things like that and we should not put more difficulties in the way of their spiritual duties so that they may be thinking of 'pathakanikas'. As a matter of fact, lakhs of rupees are put at their feet but sanyasins as they are, they do not know anything about the money that is received; other clever people are there who take away that money. So, the sanyasi does not know how that money is spent. That is the experience. So, it is really to relieve the sanyasi of temporal matters, we propose, that the money shall be spent for purposes connected with the math. As I said, it is not he that spends the amount, but it is other people that are about him that spend the money. If he says 'I have given a charity of a lakh of rupees for a particular purpose' of course, nobody is going to question his discretion to spend, but let us know whether it is done for that purpose or whether it has been swindled by anybody else (Sri B. Narayanaswami Nayudu: 'Or spent on a mistress.') If charity for a mistress is a purpose connected with the math, according to my Friend's explanation, then the sanyasi is perfectly entitled to do it, but it must be for purposes connected with the math, that is to say, the accounts must be seen by somebody, if so required. If the Commissioner has information to believe that it has not been spent for purposes connected with the math, but spent on a mistress, as Mr. Narayanaswami Nayudu fears, certainly he must know whether it has been done so. That is why the provision has been made that the accounts must be available for inspection if called for.

"Sir, these are some of the main objections that have been raised by hon. Members and I think I have generally answered them. Of course, Dr. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliyar criticised 'profession of faith in Hindu Religion' and asked 'what is profession of faith?' And you asked him, Sir, 'You are a professor yourself'. He says that is the position in the Old Act. What is faith in Hindu religion, he asks. How are we to measure faith? It is difficult to say what is faith in one's religion. We can only go by certain tests whether a person professes the Hindu religion or not. Of course, there must be some sort of yard-stick to measure faith and that is why we have provided that a person must be professing Hindu religion to enable him to be appointed to posts mentioned in the Bill. Another objection of Dr. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliyar is that the rule-making powers which are proposed to be taken under clause 106 are very wide and that the rule-making powers are powers galore. I may point out, Sir, that under the rule-making powers, no rules can be made which are inconsistent with the provisions of the Act. He said that clause 106 was the most outrageous one. The clause says—

‘If any difficulty arises in giving effect to the provisions of this Act, the Government may, as occasion may require, by order, do anything which appears to them necessary for the purpose of removing the difficulty.’

The wording is identical to that in the previous Act when it was amended in 1944; namely,

‘If any difficulty arises in giving effect to the provisions of this Act or of the said Act as amended by this Act, the Provincial Government, as occasion may require, may, by order do anything which appears to them necessary for the purpose of removing the difficulty.’

“It does not mean that the State Government can legislate. It has been laid down by the Supreme Court, in respect of a legislation that was passed by this House and also by another State, where it was said that the Government could by notification, extend its life for another year, that that power was wrong. That is extension by order. When that is so, how can we do anything which will go against the fundamental principles of the Act. Then, why this provision has been made in the Bill is, we are repealing the original Endowments Act, the Tirumalai-Tirupati Devasathanams Act and half-a-dozen other Acts and so when the existing things have to be dovetailed into the machinery that has been created under this Act, we have to see that they are done in a way which will not be inconsistent with the existing law. That is the reason why they put in that clause in 1944 and that is why we also put it now in this Bill and it is not because we want to take any powers. In fact, even when the Legislature has given the power to extend the Act for a year it has been held improper by the Supreme Court. So, it is wrong to imagine that a clause like that is likely to be put into improper use. If that was the intention of the Government and the Government legislate like that, they would be facing every day litigations like that. So, Sir, whatever the nature of the Bill or any law that we pass, it will depend on the way in which it is being worked and the persons who work it. Let us hope, Sir, this Bill will be worked properly and we will get sufficiently good persons to work it.

“The whole difficulty was, when great teachers of religion came, no question of property arose, but when the question of property arises, question of administration and management comes in and when the question of administration and management comes in, the teachings of religious people of old have to be given the go-by. It has been said that St. Paul, the great apostle of Christ, was the person who went most against the teachings of his Master. Lord Christ did not want to punish a person who committed adultery. The old law was that the person who committed adultery was punished by stoning. But Lord Christ said to those who were present ‘Let him that hath not sinned cast the stone’.

22nd January 1951] [Sri K. Madhava Menon]

Everybody went away because they could not say they did not commit sin. The Lord then said ‘Go thy way and sin no more’. But, what did St. Paul say in the Epistle and in the Corinthians, when he was asked whether a member of the Church or the Priest who came in possession of property for administration and committed a mistake could be punished? He said ‘Punish him’ and he was against Lord Christ in saying that he was for punishing persons who committed sins. So, Sir, when the question of administration comes in, administration is a very material thing with which the State is concerned—it is for the State alone to see that the property given by great men for particular purposes are utilised for the purposes for which they were intended. We have a right to do that. Then, Sir, everything depends on the way in which it is being worked and on the persons who work it. Let us pray we work it properly and with proper persons.”

MR. CHAIRMAN:—“The question is—

‘That the Bill to provide for the better administration and governance of Hindu Religious and Charitable Institutions and Endowments in the State of Madras (L.A. Bill No. 10 of 1949), as passed by the Assembly, be taken into consideration at once.’”

The motion was carried and the Bill was taken into consideration.

MR. CHAIRMAN:—“Consideration of the Bill clause by clause will be taken up to-morrow.”

THE MADRAS LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

Tuesday, the 23rd January 1951.

The House met in the Council Chamber, Fort St. George, at eleven of the clock, Mr. Chairman (THE HON. SRI R. B. RAMAKRISHNA RAJU) in the Chair.

MR. CHAIRMAN:—"The House will now take up the consideration of the Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowments Bill, 1949 (L.A. Bill No. 10 of 1949), clause by clause."

Clauses 2 and 3 were put and carried and formed part of the Bill.

Clause 4.

Sub-clause (a).

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO:—"Mr. Chairman, Sir, I move—

In clause 4 (a) add at the end the following words:—

"the administration of which for the time being is such in the opinion of the Government as to require such exemption or."

"Sir, in asking for the adoption of this amendment, I wish to point out to hon. Members of this House that the clause empowering the Government to grant exemptions in certain cases after consulting the Board finds a place in the old Act also.

"Another circumstance that I want to point out is that the old Act dealt with only religious endowments. This Bill is going to deal with charitable endowments as well. That is why I urge that this power should be given to the Government to exempt certain endowments and religious institutions under certain circumstances. Sir, even the Venkataramana Rao Committee which went into this question did not take objection to this power vesting in the Government, but all that it said was that they should be very careful in granting such exemptions and laid down certain conditions and circumstances under which such exemptions should be granted. That Committee did not suggest that this power should be taken away altogether from the Government.

"Sir, what would happen if the Government do not retain any such power of exemption in their hands? In that case, even such endowments like the Ramakrishna Mission may be brought under the provisions of this Bill. Sir, if I am not disclosing anything that happened in the Joint Select Committee, because I do not think that I am permitted to read from any papers which were supplied to the members of the Select Committee and which are not supplied to hon. Members of this House,—but, however, as this has a particular relevancy in this connexion—I may say, that my hon. Friend Sri T. S. Avinashilingam Chetty took strong objection to the insertion of this clause, because he felt that no charitable institution which is being conducted properly should be brought within the operation of this Bill. Sir, my submission is that we are vesting this power of exemption only in the hands of the Government and nobody else and it is simply restoring them the power which they once possessed in respect of religious endowments. Now charitable endowments are also being sought to be brought under this Bill. As such, I feel that this power also should vest in the Government, so that they might exercise it in suitable cases. Therefore, Sir, I feel that by accepting this amendment, they are in no way giving up the principle underlying this Bill, even as they are prepared to retain the power of exemption in respect of endowments under the Administrator-General or the Official Trustee. After all, Sir, the Government may exercise this power by notification, or they may not exercise it at all. The discretion to exercise it rests with them. Therefore there is no harm in having this power. If suitable cases are brought to their notice, they may exercise their power of exemption by notification. Otherwise they need not exercise that power at all. I strongly feel, Sir, that this is a power which the Government should have, to be used for a good purpose and in good cases.

"Some of my friends have been telling me that I seem to have a pathetic faith in the Government. I feel, Sir, that a Government is a Government, with full authority and power behind them, whoever may be occupying the Treasury Benches for the time being. Unless we have that faith in the Government in power, it will not be possible for the State to be properly administered. And here, Sir, I am asking only the Government to have the power in their hands, in order to use it in suitable cases. I am not asking them to use that power compulsorily, by using the word 'shall' instead of 'may' in my amendment. If the circumstances brought to their notice demand such exemption, they can exercise that power. I do not want to adduce many arguments in support of my amendment, because I want to get through this Bill as early as possible in order that it may be placed on the Statute Book. I plead once again, Sir, with the Government in all earnestness to accept this amendment which is not inconsistent with the provisions of this Bill."

SRI M. D. T. KUMARASWAMI MUDALIYAR :—"I second the amendment, Sir."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"Mr. Chairman, Sir, I am sorry I cannot accept the amendment. My hon. Friend Sri R. Suryanarayana Rao said that some of his friends here were rather surprised at the pathetic faith he had in the Government and at his absolute confidence in them. But, Sir, I can say that there are also some people who have no confidence in the Government and who feel that the Government will never do the right thing and even such friends moved this identical amendment in the other House and their reason was, that though the Government may not be doing a wrong thing, yet they could be prevailed upon to grant exemptions in respect of certain endowments under certain circumstances. So when such friends who have no confidence in the Government also want such a power to be retained in their hands, we should be doubly careful; but all the same, we feel gratified that my hon. Friend Sri R. Suryanarayana Rao has so much confidence in the Government.

"Sir, it is true that a provision like this was there in the 1925 Act. There was also considerable opposition to it at that time, but the sponsors of that Bill wanted to go slow and so they made a provision that the Government might exempt such of the institutions as they thought proper. But now there is no necessity to have such a power in the hands of the Government. All the speeches made and all the objections raised in the general discussion of the Bill yesterday point to the fact that too much power is being retained in the hands of the Commissioner, the Deputy Commissioner and the Assistant Commissioners who were characterized as super-area committees and super-officers and hence, Sir, it is a great mistake to clothe the Government with this power also, because the same arguments will be extended in the case of the Government also. There is no necessity to make any exemptions even in the case of charitable endowments and my hon. Friend Sri R. Suryanarayana Rao is not right when he said that this power of exemption is more necessary to be vested with the Government on the ground that charitable endowments are also included in this Bill. What we have said in clause 3 which relates to the power of the Government to extend the Act to charitable endowments is this. Clause 3 says—

'Where the Government have reason to believe that any Hindu or Jain public charitable endowment is being mismanaged and are satisfied that in the interests of the administration of such charitable endowment it is necessary to extend thereto all or any of the provisions of this Act, and of any rules made thereunder, they may, by notification in the Fort St. George Gazette, extend to such charitable endowment the said provisions and thereupon the provisions so extended shall apply to such charitable endowment as if it were a specific endowment.'

"Charitable institutions do not come within the purview of this Bill. The provisions of the Bill will have to be extended by notification to charitable endowments. Therefore, the exemption is there already. The Bill will apply to those charitable endowments which are notified by the Government. Therefore there is no necessity to take this power of exemption. If at any stage the Government should feel that there is need to have the power of exemption, the confidence that is now shown in the Government will encourage the Government to come to this House and ask for that power. I oppose the amendment, Sir."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—"The question is—

'In clause 4 (a) add at the end the following words :—

"the administration of which for the time being is such in the opinion of the Government as to require such exemption or,"'

The amendment was lost.

Clause 4 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 5 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

[23rd January 1951]

Clause 6.

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" Sir, I move—

'In clause 6 (19) insert the following words within brackets after the word "known" :—

"(including the Board of Trustees appointed under section 39)."

Sir, the words in the amendment which I have now moved were there in the Bill sent up by the Joint Select Committee. I do not know how these words came to be removed. I do not know whether these words were removed by an amendment moved in the Assembly. It may be argued that 'trustee' means any person or body by whatever designation known, and that the Board of Trustees being a body, is already there in the definition of the word 'trustee'. It is only as a measure of abundant caution that the members of the Joint Select Committee suggested that these words 'including the Board of Trustees appointed under section 39' should be put in brackets after the word 'known'. I am only asking for the restoration of the recommendation of the Joint Select Committee, which does not in any way interfere with the scheme of the Bill. It only makes explicit what the Hon. the Minister may well say is already implicit in the clause. I may here speak on clause 7 also, Sir, because both these clauses are inter-related. In clause 7, I would like to add the words 'Board of Trustees' as one of the authorities prescribed. Like the Area Committees the Board of Trustees is an institution which we are introducing in respect of certain temples whose income is above a certain figure. The Board of Trustees is given certain powers in the Bill. We want that institution also to be mentioned as one of the authorities prescribed for the management of these temples. These words were introduced at the Joint Select Committee stage. I do not know how they came to be deleted when the Bill was passed in the Assembly. I am not aware whether the deletion of the words was because of an amendment to that effect. I had no time to go through the proceedings of the Assembly though the Government were pleased to supply us with the proceedings relating to this Bill almost in full. We were very particular at the Joint Select Committee stage that the Board of Trustees should be included in clause 7. The Board of Trustees is an authority that possesses certain powers and plays a certain part in the scheme of things adumbrated in the Bill, Sir, I suggest the addition of the words 'including the Board of Trustees appointed under section 39' within brackets, in clause 6 (19). I also suggest the addition of the words 'Board of Trustees' in clause 7."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" Why does the hon. Member think that the Board of Trustees is not included? "

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" The Hon. the Minister may say that the term 'body' includes the Board of Trustees. But as a measure of abundant caution we wanted that the Board of Trustees should be mentioned as an authority in clause 7. We also suggested the addition of the words 'including the Board of Trustees appointed under section 39' in brackets, in clause 6 (19). The addition of the words 'Board of Trustees' in clause 7 will show to the public that the Government are not taking all powers to themselves. Now people are thinking that the Government are taking all powers to themselves in the name of Area Committees. The Government, by including the Board of Trustees in clause 7, will show to the public that the association of the people in the management of the temples is not taken away. With these words, Sir, I move the amendments to clauses 6 and 7, together, because both are inter-related, though you may put them to vote separately. If one amendment goes the other amendment also goes. I wish to suggest that you may put the amendment to clause 7 to vote first and then the amendment to clause 6 (19). It is only a matter of adjustment. My amendment to clause 7 is—

23rd January 1951] [Sri Suryanarayana Rao]

'In clause 7, add as sub-clause (d) the following and renumber the existing sub-clause (d) as (e) :—

"(d) Board of Trustees." "

SRI M. D. T. KUMARASWAMI MUDALIYAR :—" I second the amendments, Sir."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir the particular sentence referred to by the hon. Member Mr. Suryanarayana Rao was there in the Bill as revised Joint Select Committee. That was removed by an amendment deliberately moved by me for the reason that that sentence was absolutely unnecessary and redundant. The term 'trustee' has been defined as any person or body by whatever designation known in whom or in which the administration of a religious institution is vested, and includes any person or body who or which is liable as if such person or body were a trustee. In clause 39 it will be seen that the Board of Trustees is a body to be created by the Commissioner. Further, the term 'trustee' is defined in clause 6 (19) to include any person or body in whom the administration of a religious institution is vested. The Board of Trustees automatically comes under this definition. Even though it may be implicit in the earlier portion of sub-clause (19), it is explicit in the later portion. Therefore, there is no necessity for the amendment. The hon. Member Mr. Suryanarayana Rao wanted the addition of the Board of Trustees in clause 7 as one of the prescribed authorities. The Commissioner and the Deputy Commissioner are controlling authorities, but the Board of Trustees is not a controlling authority. The authority of the Commissioner, Deputy Commissioner and the Assistant Commissioners is in respect of all temples taken together, while the Board of Trustees is only for individual temples and not for the State as a whole. If that were so, we will have to say that an executive officer is an authority and an archaka also is an authority. That is not what is meant. The authorities mentioned in clause 7 are those in whom powers of supervision over all temples in specified areas are vested, while Boards of Trustees are only for individual temples."

[23rd January 1951]

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" The question is—

' In clause 6 (19) insert the following words within brackets after the word " known " :—

" (including the Board of Trustees appointed under section 39)." ' ' "

The amendment was put and lost.

Clause 6 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 7.

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" Sir, I move—

' In clause 7, add as sub-clause (d) the following and renumber the existing sub-clause (d) as (e) :—

" (d) Board of Trustees." ' ' "

The amendment was duly seconded.

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" The question is—

' In clause 7, add as sub-clause (d) the following and renumber the existing sub-clause (d) as (e) :—

" (d) Board of Trustees." ' ' "

The amendment was put and lost.

Clause 7 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15 and 16 were one by one put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 17.

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" Sir, I move—

' After the words " of section 12 " insert the words " or the members of the Committee cease to function their term of office having expired " and after the word " abolition " insert the words " or the members of the Committee cease to hold office " ' ' "

Sir, clause 17 makes provision for the reconstitution or creation of a new Area Committee when one is abolished. My amendment seeks to impose on the Government the duty of reconstituting or appointing an Area Committee when the term of office of the members thereof expires. The term of office of the Committee, if I am not mistaken, is three years. When the Area Committee is abolished, of course the Government have to set up a new Area Committee. What I feel is this. When the term of office of an Area Committee expires, there is no obligation within six months at least to appoint another Area Committee. They may, of course, appoint and they will appoint. But here it is laid down that when an Area Committee is abolished, the Government must appoint a new Area Committee within six months. I want the Government to appoint also a Committee when one ceases to function by efflux of time. In the same way, I suggest also the insertion of the words ' or the members of the committee cease to hold office '. It is only to insist upon Government that within a particular period they should bring the new Area Committee into existence. I have not interfered with the period that is fixed. All that I wish to say is that it must be incumbent on Government to reconstitute a committee when the term of office of the committee expires. It is only in that view I have moved my amendment."

SRI M. D. T. KUMARASWAMI MUDALIYAR :—" I second the amendment, Sir."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, there is no necessity for this amendment. Clause 17 makes provision for the constitution of a new committee where one has been abolished. My hon. Friend will see from the Local Boards Act and the District Municipalities Act that before the term of the council expires, the Government are bound to see that a new body is brought into existence. A special contingency may arise on abolition, because abolition of a committee may be for many reasons, say, misconduct or faction. Originally, the time fixed for reconstitution was one year. The Joint Select Committee reduced the period to six months. The maximum time now is only six months. But when the committee has served its term of office, other persons must be there to take up the position to which they are appointed. Therefore, no particular provision in this regard is necessary. The Government are bound to constitute a committee. I oppose the amendment."

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" May I be enlightened whether there is no such provision in the Local Boards Act or in the District Municipalities Act? I think there must be a provision, in order not to leave things in the air, that the Government should reconstitute the Area Committee."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" I cannot quote from memory, Sir, but my recollection is that there is no particular provision that it must be reconstituted. It is provided in clause 12 (1) (a) that the Government shall constitute an Area Committee for all temples."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" If necessary, I think it may be provided in the rules framed under this clause."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" If there is any doubt, we shall provide for it in the rules."

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" I hope that they will do it."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" Yes, they will certainly do it."

The amendment was, by leave, withdrawn.

[23rd January 1951]

Clause 17 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 18.

Sub-clause (4).

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" Sir, I move—

'For the word "him" wherever it occurs substitute the words "the party".'

I am not a lawyer, Sir. It is said—

'The Commissioner shall not pass any order prejudicial to any party under sub-section (2) or clause (b) or clause (c) of sub-section (3), without hearing him or giving him a reasonable opportunity of being heard.'

If I am not mistaken, I think even the Area Committee comes in here. Therefore, the Area Committee also should be given a reasonable opportunity of being heard. Here the word 'him' may only mean the trustee. I do not know if lawyers will say that 'him' also includes the Area Committee. It is only with the object of including the Area Committee also for being given an opportunity of being heard that I have suggested this amendment."

SRI M. D. T. KUMARASWAMI MUDALIYAR :—" I second the amendment, Sir."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, I think this amendment only substitutes a noun for a pronoun. The word 'him' is quite sufficient for the purpose. I do not think the amendment is necessary. The word 'him' may possibly mean the Area Committee also. It has been provided in sub-clause (1) as follows :—

'The Commissioner may call for and examine the record of any Deputy or Assistant Commissioner, of any Area Committee, or of any trustee not being the trustee of a math or of a specific endowment attached to a math, in respect of any proceeding under this Act (not being a proceeding in respect of which a suit or an appeal to a court is provided by this Act), to satisfy himself as to the regularity of such proceeding, or the correctness, legality or propriety of any decision or order passed therein.'

The President of the Area Committee is the Assistant Commissioner. So, any action of the Area Committee will be taken through the Assistant Commissioner. Sir, the use of the words 'the party' here instead of 'him' is not happy."

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" What does 'him' mean? "

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" 'Him' means hearing the party. I think there is no difficulty in interpretation."

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" If it means the trustee, I agree it is all right. But the Area Committee is a corporate body which we are creating."

23rd January 1951]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Here the word 'him' refers to it also."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" The opinion of lawyers always differs. The Government seem to think that 'him' also refers to party."

The amendment was, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause 18 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 19 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 20.

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" Sir, I move—

'Before the words "the provisions of this Act" insert the words "the control of the Government and".'

Sir, as the Government have got general power of superintendence through their officer, namely, the Commissioner, in the original clause it was stated 'Subject to the control of the Government and the provisions of this Act'. I do not know why the words 'the control of the Government and' have been omitted now. I do not know if it has been done with a view not to offend any Article of the Constitution."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" I think the Commissioner is always subject to the control of Government."

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" I want that the old provision should be introduced again."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" But why should you say it in the Bill? "

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" I do not know whether any Article of the Constitution will be offended against."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" Government's power of superintendence is also included in the Bill."

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" Therefore, I suggest the words 'subject to the control of the Government and the provisions of this Act' would read better."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" The hon. Member may hear the Hon. Minister."

The amendment was duly seconded.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, the Joint Select Committee has recommended the provisions contained in

[Sri K. Madhava Menon] [23rd January 1951]

Chapter II of the original Bill, namely, 'The Provincial Government and their powers'. Clause 7 of the Bill as it came to the Select Committee gave power of general superintendence to the Government. The clause provided—

'Such superintendence shall include the power to pass any orders which may be deemed necessary for the proper maintenance or administration of any religious institution or endowment.'

Clause 8 also gave power to the Government to call for records and pass orders. This Chapter was omitted by the Government by an amendment moved by us, on the advice of Legal Officers. Consequent on that, Sri K. Bhashyam moved an amendment that the words 'control of the Government' might be omitted. We felt that it was sufficient to say 'Subject to the provisions of this Act'. Whatever control is exercised can only be under the provisions of this Bill. There is no necessity for the words 'Subject to the control of the Government' to be there. This will be consistent with the amendment we have moved."

The amendment was, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause 20 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

MR. CHAIRMAN :—"The idea in putting to vote clause by clause is to give hon. Members an opportunity to speak on the clauses if they want. So, I will hereafter put together those clauses to which no notice of an amendment has been received and if any hon. Member wants to speak on any clause, he may do so."

Clauses 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28 and 29 were put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 30.

Sub-clause (2).

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—"Sir, I move—

'In line 4, omit the word "also" and add at the end the words "unless the Commissioner directs otherwise".'

The clause will then read as follows :—

'In incurring such expenditure, the trustee shall be guided by such general or special instructions as may be given by the Commissioner or in the case of an institution over which an Area Committee has jurisdiction, by such Committee, unless the Commissioner directs otherwise.'

Sir, I want the Area Committee to have real power in respect of institutions within its jurisdiction in regard to the incurring of expenditure. This and the other amendments that will follow are intended to strengthen the powers of the Area Committee and to give it as much voice as possible in the administration of the temples entrusted to its charge. In the case of an institution over which an Area Committee has jurisdiction, I suggest the trustee shall be guided by such Committee unless the Commissioner directs otherwise. The Commissioner has got over-riding powers. If he does not over-ride the decision of the Area Committee, its decision shall prevail. The omission of the word 'also' is intended to achieve this purpose. If not, the trustee will have to be guided by the instructions of the Commissioner as also the Area Committee. This may lead to a conflict. But if the Area Committee's decisions are allowed to prevail, unless the Commissioner otherwise directs, it will be in consonance with the purpose that we have in view. That is the object of my amendment."

SRI M. D. T. KUMARASWAMI MUDALIYAR :—"I second the amendment, Sir."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"Sir, if the amendment is accepted, there will be this difficulty."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—"The Commissioner will have no power."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"Over and above the instructions issued by the Commissioner, the Area Committees may also issue instructions, for instance, in respect of sanitation. They cannot be inconsistent with the instructions of the Commissioner. Since the Area Committee has jurisdiction over a smaller area, it may pass orders over and above the instructions issued by the Commissioner. The result of inserting the words 'unless the Commissioner directs otherwise' will be that the trustees are guided only by the instructions of the Area Committee and they cannot obey the Commissioner's orders unless they are contrary to the Area Committee's directions. That will create a difficulty that even the Commissioner's orders will not be valid in so far as there is an Area Committee."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—"The question is—

'In line 4, omit the word "also" and add at the end the words "unless the Commissioner directs otherwise".'

The amendment was lost.

Clause 30 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 31.

Sub-clause (2).

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—"Sir, I move—

'For the words "Deputy Commissioner" substitute the words "Area Committee".'

Sir, in respect of institutions which are under the control or within the jurisdiction of Area Committees, I would like the Area Committees to have the power of determining in what respects the surplus funds should be utilized. Otherwise, the Area Committees will be merely henchmen of the Deputy Commissioner and other officials. My object is to repose trust and confidence in these committees by giving them sufficient powers and an opportunity to show that they can shoulder responsibility and act in a responsible manner.

"Over-riding powers are given to the Commissioner. He can always over-ride the decisions of the Area Committee. So, let the Area Committees be invested with powers and let them too play their part. As things are at present, we feel and suspect that these committees would not function properly and would not rise equal to the responsibility that we are giving them without some powers. That is my main idea."

The amendment was duly seconded.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"The Deputy Commissioner will be more or less acting in a quasi-judicial capacity and so . . ."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—"The point is, whether the Area Committees are not even to be consulted in respect of certain matters."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"Of course, it is a matter to be considered and if necessary we shall provide for it in the rules. The idea is that the responsibility and initiative must come from the trustees and the Area Committee's jurisdiction comprises only in respect of temples and not other charitable institutions or mathas."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—"Regarding diversions, I think it will affect the institutions under them."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"Those mentioned in this clause or clause 56 or so are perhaps unconnected with the temple or other institutions. So, the Deputy Commissioner is subject to an appeal. It is in a quasi-judicial capacity that the Deputy Commissioner acts."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—"I think the Area Committees can be consulted."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—"We shall try, Sir."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—"I think the hon. Member is not pressing his amendment."

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—"Sir, I do not think that it can be provided in the rules as suggested by the Hon. Minister."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—"If the Area Committees are to be the authority to decide about diversion, then, certainly it must be provided in the Act. But if the Deputy Commissioner should be the authority ultimately to decide, he may consult anybody he likes."

23rd January 1951]

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—"Sir, certain restrictions are there for diversion and other particular purposes."

The amendment was put and lost.

Clause 31 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 32, 33 and 34 were put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 35.

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—"Sir I move—

'That in sub-clause (2) (d) (i) and (ii) and Provided, for the words "District Collector" wherever they occur, the words "Board of Revenue" be substituted;

'that in line 2 of sub-clause (2) (f) for the words "District Collector", the words "Board of Revenue" be substituted.'

Since I gave notice of these amendments, I have seen the definition of the words 'District Collector' in the Estates Land Act, 1908. It means also Revenue Divisional Officers. It is curiously defined there like that. Still, I would like that in this matter an appeal should lie to the Board of Revenue as against the decision of the Collector. It is a question involving the property of inams, either resumption or regrant of inams. I am sorry that I have mentioned that the words 'District Collector' have been defined as Revenue Divisional Officer. It is not so. Only the word 'Collector' is defined like that. Therefore I suggest that wherever the words 'District Collector' occur, the words 'Board of Revenue' should be substituted so that an appeal may lie to the Board of Revenue."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—"In the Estates Land Act, is the word 'Collector' or the words 'District Collector' that is defined?"

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—"Sir, I made a mistake in saying first that the words 'District Collector' are defined there. But subsequently I have corrected myself and said that the word 'Collector' is defined there. The words 'Board of Revenue' may be substituted so that the persons aggrieved on account of resumption or regrant of inam lands intended for the performance of some charity or service may appeal to the Board of Revenue which is not influenced by local considerations; even in regard to the appointment of village officers, the Board of Revenue is the authority. I know that in respect of even assignment and alienation, all papers go to the Board of Revenue and finally in some cases to the Government too. I would therefore like the substitution of the words 'Board of Revenue' for the words 'District Collector' wherever they occur."

The amendments were duly seconded.

[28rd January 1951]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, for the very reasons given by Sri Suryanarayana Rao, I think the words 'District Collector' or the word 'Collector' must remain. Not only in the Estates Land Act, but also in the General Clauses Act it is like that. The definition of District Collector or Collector under section 3 of the General Clauses Act is also the same as that found in the Estates Land Act. Collector includes an officer who for the time being is authorized to exercise the powers of the Collector, District Collector or even the chief local officer in charge of the revenue administration of the district. If an order is passed by the Revenue Divisional Officer, then there is an appeal to the Collector. If according to the amendment, the words 'Board of Revenue' are substituted for the words 'Collector or District Collector', then there will be no appeal to the Collector. I therefore think that the present position is advantageous to the parties concerned."

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" As I said, after giving notice of this amendment, I had occasion to look into the Madras Estates Land Act where the word 'Collector' is defined as a Revenue Divisional Officer. What I would like to suggest is this. If the rules permit, further appeal to the Board of Revenue can be provided. It is a question of a person losing the inam and a question of granting inams to others. It is a matter where property is involved. Cannot the Government provide for appeal to the Board of Revenue also? "

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, in clause (d), it is said, 'any party aggrieved by an order of the Collector under clause (a) may appeal to the District Collector within such time as may be prescribed, and on such appeal the District Collector may, after giving notice to the Commissioner and each of the persons mentioned in clause (b) and after holding such inquiry as may be prescribed, pass an order confirming, modifying or cancelling the order of the Collector'. So, the difference is made very clear there itself. In fact all the orders that may be passed by the Revenue Divisional Officer will be subject to an appeal to the District Collector. Sri Suryanarayana Rao wants that there should be a further appeal to the Board of Revenue. We shall consider that suggestion. However, I do not think it would be necessary in such matters as resumption of inams and things like that. Anyway, we will see what can be done."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" Usually, I think the Collector's orders are subject to revision by the Board of Revenue."

SRI B. NARAYANASWAMI NAYUDU :—" There is right of suit."

[28rd January 1951]

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" I do not press my amendments, Sir. Moreover they will be absurd." (Laughter.)

The amendments were, by leave, withdrawn.

Clauses 35, 36 and 37 were put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 38.

SRI L. SUBBARAMA REDDI :—" నా కేసు ఉన్న మంది ఈ సవరణకు గురవుచున్నారని తెలుసుకొంటున్నాను—

'After clause 38 insert the following new clause :—

"For every religious institution included in the list published under section 39, the Commissioner shall constitute a Board of Trustees and appoint a salaried Executive Officer, notwithstanding that the institution has hereditary trustee or trustees or that the scheme settled or deemed to be settled for the institution under this Act, contains provision to the contrary."

SRI N. VENKATACHALAMAJI :—" Sir, I second the amendment."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" I think that it would be better if this amendment comes as an amendment to clause 39 instead of to clause 38. The hon. Member wants the constitution of a Board of Trustees and the appointment of a salaried Executive Officer in respect of every religious institution included in the list published under section 39. So, I think that this amendment must come only under clause 39. What does the Hon. Minister think about this? "

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" I think this amendment must legitimately come under clause 39, Sir."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" So, let us consider this amendment of the hon. Member along with his other amendment for clause 39. Now let us dispose of clause 38."

Clause 38 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

[23rd January 1951]

Clause 39.

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" Let hon. Member Sri L. Subbarama Reddy move his amendment."

The amendment shown under clause 38 on previous page was, by leave, withdrawn.

SRI L. SUBBARAMI REDDI :—" Sir, I move—

For clause 39 substitute the following new clause :—

" 41 (1) Where the institution in the list aforesaid has no hereditary trustee, the Board of Trustees shall consist of not less than three nor more than five persons appointed by the Commissioner.

(2) Where the institution has a hereditary trustee or trustees, such trustee or trustees, or where their number exceeds five, five of them elected by the whole body of the hereditary trustees in such manner as may be prescribed, shall be members of the Board; and in addition to them, the Commissioner shall appoint to the Board a number of non-hereditary trustees exceeding the number of hereditary trustees by one.

(3) Every trustee appointed under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) by the Commissioner and every hereditary trustee elected as aforesaid shall hold office for a term of five years, unless in the meanwhile the trustee is removed or dismissed or his resignation is accepted by the Commissioner or he otherwise ceases to be a trustee."

" ఈ సవరణకు నేను ప్రతిపాదించుచున్నాను. THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Though the amendment is not seconded I will explain the position, Sir."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" The Hon. Minister can take it that all the amendments are seconded."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" I will explain the position. Identical clauses as suggested in the amendment were there in the Bill as it emerged from the Joint Select Committee, namely, the old clauses 40 and 41. My hon. Friend will see they are in clarendon type. But these were omitted by the Government by specific amendments. If I had the power I would have certainly insisted on the clauses remaining there as it came from the Select Committee. But we were definitely advised that where there are hereditary trustees, to remove them and then put in their place any nominated trustees would be a violation of Article 26 (d) of the Constitution and the clause will be invalidated altogether. So there was no other way. In case the hereditary trustees did not manage the properties properly there is a provision in the Bill to notify the temple or religious institution and the Deputy Commissioner can then frame a scheme. I understood from the Telugu speech of my hon. Friend that without this particular clause as suggested by him, the whole Act will be useless because the hereditary trustees in many cases are guilty of so much of misconduct and mismanagement. As regards very many of the temples, if it is so, we have provided for the notification of these temples and the framing of schemes for such temples and religious institutions in which case fresh trustees will come in. The clause as it stood in the original Bill and the amendment now suggested by my hon. Friend will offend the Constitution. That is why the original clause was given up."

[23rd January 1951] [Sri K. Madhava Menon]

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" My hon. Friend the mover of the amendment does not intend to take them away without proper reasons but it is only to add to the hereditary trustees . . ."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" The amendment practically suggests taking away the hereditary trustees. That is the first amendment of the hon. Member."

The amendment was, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause 39 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 40 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 41.

Sub-clause (1)—Proviso.

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" Sir, I move—

That in proviso under sub-clause (1) of clause 41 before the word "appoint" in line 2, insert the word "either" and add the following words at the end :—

" Or a board of trustees consisting of not more than three persons."

" Sir, I do not know why the Government should think of restricting the discretion of the Area Committee when they decide to appoint the trustees. The Government have given the power to the Area Committee to appoint the trustees but where there is no hereditary trustee they say that the Area Committee should appoint only one single trustee. The Government say: 'Provided that the Area Committee may, in the case of any institution which has no hereditary trustee, appoint a single trustee.' If it is necessary, in the case of a temple or an institution, where there is no hereditary trustee, the Area Committee if it thinks of appointing more than one trustee if the properties involved necessitate that, and want to bring together a number of people interested in the temple or the institution to take interest in them, why should the Government restrict the discretion of the Area Committee, by asking them to appoint only a single trustee? If they appoint a board consisting of more than one trustee it does not in any way offend the Act or the scheme adumbrated in the Act. My amendment simply says: 'Give the power to the Area Committee to appoint a single trustee or a board of trustees consisting of not more than three persons.' That is all the purpose of my amendment. The appointment of a single trustee or a board of trustees will be dependent on the circumstances of each case. If they think that three should be appointed they must be able to do so. But to tie down the hands of the Area Committee and say: 'You shall not appoint more than one trustee' is not fair to the Area Committee. I think the Area Committee should be allowed to use its powers in order that the temples placed in its charge may be properly managed and by proper persons. That is the object of my amendment, Sir."

[Sri R. Suryanarayana Rao] [23rd January 1951]

The amendment was duly seconded.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, my hon. Friend has read the proviso only without reading sub-clause (1) of Clause 41. This vests in the Area Committees power to appoint trustees similar to that vested in the Commissioner under Clause 39, that is, not less than three and not more than five persons, for any temple within its jurisdiction. There may be very small temples for which there may be no necessity to have three to five trustees. So, under the proviso, an additional power is given to the Area Committee to appoint a single trustee, where the temple or the institution concerned is small or insignificant. Clause 41 says: '(1) In the case of any religious institution over which an Area Committee has jurisdiction, the Area Committee shall have the same power to appoint trustees as is vested in the Commissioner in the case of a religious institution referred to in section 39.' This power the Area Committee has and, in addition, power is given to it to appoint a single trustee also where the temple concerned is small and it is unnecessary to have three to five trustees and where there are no hereditary trustees. It is not restricting the power of the Area Committee."

23rd January 1951]

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO:—"Does this not restrict the powers of the Area Committee?"

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"It does not, Sir. It gives additional powers. The Committee is not bound to appoint five trustees. In the case of small temples it may even appoint one."

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO:—"I do not accept the interpretation of the Hon. Minister."

The amendment was put and lost.

Clause 41 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 42, 43 and 44 were put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 45.

Sub-clause (3).

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO:—"I do not propose to move the amendments to sub-clauses (1) and (2) of clause 45. I move the amendment to sub-clause (3) that—

'In sub-clause (3) of clause 45, after the words "The Deputy Commissioner" in line 2, insert the words: "in consultation with the Area Committee in respect of a religious institution over which an Area Committee has jurisdiction."'

"Sir, the sub-clause as per the amendment suggested by me will read:

'(3) Pending the disposal of the charges framed against the trustee, the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner, in consultation with the Area Committee in respect of a religious institution over which an Area Committee has jurisdiction, may place the trustee under suspension and appoint a fit person to discharge the functions of the trustee.'

All that I say is that the Area Committee should be consulted in all such cases. That is also the principle that the Government have accepted and enunciated, namely, that the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner should not do anything without consulting the Area Committee or obtaining its views. It is only in a consultative capacity that I want the Area Committee to be recognised in such matters."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"I cannot accept the amendment, Sir. You will find in clause 45, Sir, that in respect of any action that is to be taken, it is provided that the Deputy Commissioner in the case of any religious institution over which an Area Committee has jurisdiction, shall also consult the Area Committee before passing the final order. Under sub-section (2). Sub-clause (3) envisages an emergency situation, the necessity of putting a man under suspension. Such a particular matter involving misappropriation and mismanagement comes to

[23rd January 1951]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, you have already answered on my behalf. The eloquence of my hon. Friend would have been more useful in another case. Under sub-clause (1) the Deputy Commissioner will consult the Area Committee before passing orders and under sub-clause (5) an appeal against such order may go to the Commissioner. At every stage the Area Committee is consulted. In another clause an appeal is provided even against the orders of the Commissioner. First the Deputy Commissioner consults the Area Committee and then orders are passed and the records go to the Commissioner at that stage. These are cases of malfeasance, misfeasance and misappropriation. If still some clarification is necessary, the Commissioner may consult the Area Committee and the Deputy Commissioner and pass orders. So, Government do not accept the amendment, Sir."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" The question is—

' After sub-clause (5), add the following new sub-clause (6) :—

" (6) In respect of a trustee of a religious institution over which the Area Committee has jurisdiction, the Commissioner shall also consult the Area Committee before modifying, annulling or confirming the order of the Deputy Commissioner." "

The amendment was lost.

Clause 45 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 46 and 47 were put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 48.

Sub-clause (4).

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" The motion is—

' That clause 48 do stand part of the Bill.' "

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" Mr. Chairman, Sir, I beg to move—

' After the words " against the order to " in lines 3 and 4, of sub-clause (4), insert the words " the Area Committee in respect of a religious institution over which the Area Committee has jurisdiction and in other cases to " .'

Sir, this is in respect of orders passed by the trustees. Sub-clause (4) with my amendment will read like this :

' (4) Any person affected by an order of the trustee under sub-section (3) may, within one month from the date of the receipt of the order by him, appeal against the order to the Area Committee in respect of a religious institution over which the Area Committee has jurisdiction and in other cases to the Deputy Commissioner.'

I want that this Area Committee should have some voice whether in making appointments or in dealing with the office-holders and servants of a religious institution over which they have control. All that I suggest is that an aggrieved party must first appeal to the Area Committee in respect of the institution under the control of the Area Committee and in other respects to the Deputy Commissioner."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" I think there will be an Area Committee for all institutions getting less than Rs. 20,000 income."

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" That is why I suggest that the appeal should go first to the Area Committee."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" But, why do you say ' in other cases to '."

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" I will make only a distinction."

The amendment was duly seconded.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" My objection is this, Sir. The functions under clause 48 are judicial and quasi-judicial. The rights of a hereditary trustee, whether a person is the proper guardian in the case of minors, etc., are all essentially judicial and quasi-judicial functions which a Commissioner or a Deputy Commissioner performs and it is not proper that we should entrust these functions to the Area Committee. In all these matters, an appeal is provided against the order to the Deputy Commissioner and then to the Commissioner. It is better that such matters are entrusted to persons like the Deputy Commissioner and the Commissioner who may be in a position to judge better than the Area Committee."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" The question is—

' After the words " against the order to " in lines 3 and 4 of sub-clause (4), insert the words " the Area Committee in respect of a religious institution over which the Area Committee has jurisdiction and in other cases to " .'

The amendment was lost.

Clauses 48 and 49 were put and carried, and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 50.

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" Mr. Chairman, Sir, I gave notice to move—

' For the words " notwithstanding anything contained in " substitute the words " subject to ", and delete the words " to the contrary " in line 8.' "

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, can a negative amendment be moved? "

[23rd January 1951]

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" That is one way of moving amendments, Sir."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" Yes, it is a negative amendment."

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" Sir, I do not think we will be wise in interfering with any decree or usage, which may lead to further litigation. I thought, Sir, that decrees or usages or schemes settled under the Act, should be respected. I thought, Sir, that this clause was going beyond the powers of this House. I feel it may lead to litigation which is not worthwhile."

The Hon. Sri K. Madhava Menon rose.

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" Hon. Member Sri Suryanarayana Rao has only opposed the clause and not moved his amendment."

Clause 50 was put and carried, and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 51.

Sub-clause (4).

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" Mr. Chairman, Sir, I beg to move—

'That in sub-clause (4), for the words "Deputy Commissioner", substitute the word "Commissioner".'

Sir, I would like that an appeal from the Area Committee should go to the Commissioner. The sub-clause with my amendment will read thus—

'(4) Against an order made by the Area Committee under sub-section (3), the trustee or any person having interest may, within one month from the date of the receipt of the order by the trustee, appeal to the Commissioner.'

This is an important matter dealing with the fixing of the standard of scales of expenditure and when the Area Committee tries to interfere with it, perhaps for good reasons,—and the Area Committee constituted under the Act is entrusted with certain duties and responsibilities,—and thinks it necessary to interfere with the dittam or the scale of expenditure, it is a serious matter which should be dealt with only by the Commissioner and not by the Deputy Commissioner. Sir, I may say why not the matter be dealt with by the Government themselves, if it is possible. But the Government will be flooded with applications. Therefore, I suggest, Sir, that the appeal should be to the Commissioner and not to the Deputy Commissioner. The people aggrieved can go and appeal to the higher authority, but the person to deal with, as against the Area Committee, should be the Commissioner. As I already said, Sir, my anxiety is to make the Area Committee as important a body as possible."

The amendment was duly seconded.

[23rd January 1951]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, it is practically impossible for a Commissioner who has jurisdiction throughout the State, to hear appeals from the Area Committees. The Commissioner has revisionary powers on the orders passed by the Deputy Commissioner and can send for the records for review and revision. Any party aggrieved may move the Commissioner for review and revision. But, if appeals are to go to the Commissioner, I am afraid one Commissioner may not be sufficient and we may have to provide for half-a-dozen Commissioners."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" Officially the Deputy Commissioner also may help him."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" The Commissioner has got the revisionary powers, Sir."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" The question is—

'That in sub-clause (4), for the words "Deputy Commissioner", substitute the word "Commissioner".'

The amendment was lost.

Clause 51 was put and carried, and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 52 was put and carried, and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 53.

Sub-clause (1).

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" Mr. Chairman, Sir, I beg to move—

'That in sub-clause (1), for the words "the Assistant Commissioner" in line 12, substitute the words "the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner".'

This chapter is a very important chapter which seems to have exercised the minds of many Members of the other House. Here I would like you, Sir, and the hon. Members of this House to read clause 53 carefully. It is about filling up of vacancies in the office of the trustee of a 'math', not an ordinary temple or a small religious endowment. Who is given the power? It is the Assistant Commissioner, the man in the lowest rung of the ladder. All I suggest is that it should be the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" It is only with regard to custody of the property."

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" When it can be Assistant Commissioner, why not a Deputy Commissioner? I have not put 'Commissioner' because his headquarters will be at Madras and it is difficult always to run up from Madras and take charge of the property."

[Sri R. Suryanarayana Rao] [23rd January 1951]

MR. CHAIRMAN:—"Assistant Commissioner, I suppose, 'is the man on the spot'."

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO:—"He is a small man, Sir. We are dealing with 'maths'. If all the other provisions apply to 'maths' without a separate chapter, that is a different matter. I am not a follower of a matadhipathi or anybody. When many specifically recognized maths deserve a special consideration as separate institutions, should we not at least see that a higher officer of the position of a Deputy Commissioner or Commissioner takes this action? Large properties and endowments will be involved. If a trustee dies and if there is nobody to succeed to take possession of the properties immediately, the Deputy Commissioner can take action. Is the Assistant Commissioner going to be available on the spot? He too has jurisdiction over some districts and he too cannot run to the place immediately. I feel it is an important matter and the man who is to take possession of the property should have some status."

MR. CHAIRMAN:—"How many Deputy Commissioners will there be? I think there will be more than one for the entire department."

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO:—"There are going to be more Deputy Commissioners than we imagine there would be."

MR. CHAIRMAN:—"Will there be more than one?"

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"There will be more than one. Sir, here the Assistant Commissioner is asked to take steps for the temporary custody and protection of the endowments of 'math' and forthwith report to the Commissioner regarding further action to be taken. We cannot leave the property to be destroyed and some person who is easily available will certainly be the Assistant Commissioner and not the Deputy Commissioner who may have larger jurisdiction than the Assistant Commissioner. The temporary custody must be taken by the person who is immediately available and that is necessary, Sir."

MR. CHAIRMAN:—"The question is—

'That in sub-clause (1), for the words "the Assistant Commissioner" in line 12, substitute the words "the Commissioner or the Deputy Commissioner".'

The amendment was lost.

Clause 53 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 54 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

23rd January 1951]

Clause 55.

Sub-clause (2).

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO:—"Sir, I move—
'Omit all the words after the words and figure "sub-section (1)"'

"Sir, I contend that the Government have no business to introduce the words and the figure 'sub-section (1)', as they were not adopted by the Joint Select Committee. I do not know how they crept in. It may be said that this addition is consequential. But, I remember that the Select Committee simply said, on the motion of my hon. Friend Sri Adityan, that the matadhipathi should be asked to keep accounts of all receipts and disbursements on a complaint from the sishyas that a matadhipathi is not using the endowments he gets as pathakanika for the purposes connected with the math. But here the provision is that the accounts are to be produced before any person authorized by the Commissioner. I would have accepted it if the provision had been to the effect that the Commissioner can call for accounts. As it is, any person, the Assistant Commissioner and even the Inspectors can call upon the matadhipathi to produce his accounts. It is not fair that this should be done."

MR. CHAIRMAN:—"But he may not demand the accounts in an offensive tone." (Laughter.)

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO:—"When men are clothed with authority, they adopt such a tone even against all of us and much more so against the poor matadhipathi who may not know, as the Hon. the Minister for Law said, what sort of accounts are kept by his agent. If such accounts are to be produced before the Commissioner, there can be no objection. But, to ask the matadhipathi to produce his accounts before any officer authorized by the Commissioner is not fair."

MR. CHAIRMAN:—"Not before 'any officer', but before 'any person'."

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO:—"We had no idea of asking for the submission of accounts when Sri Adityan moved that pathakanikas should be accounted for, etc. It is not from an orthodox point of view that I am asking that this should be deleted. We never wanted this. First of all, in the Select Committee we wanted to exclude pathakanikas from the accounts and then Sri Adityan suggested that these should be included in the accounts. But we never authorized any person to call for accounts."

MR. CHAIRMAN:—"I suppose the accounts must be capable of being looked into by somebody. You are not objecting to the whole clause."

[28rd January 1951]

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" I am agreeable to sub-section (1)."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" What is the offending portion? "

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" I am opposed to the last three lines."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" You are not opposed to accounts being looked into when occasion arises."

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" Whenever necessary, let them put in, as the Select Committee did not take any decision on this point. But how did they introduce these words in the Select Committee report? It is a very serious matter. If you refer to the report, you will find it stated there: 'The Legal Department may draft suitably.' They added one more power to the Commissioner by the insertion of the words 'any person authorized'. I am not against the keeping of accounts. But we never gave this power either to the Commissioner or to any person authorized by him. In fairness to the Joint Select Committee, they ought not to have introduced these words. I would like the Government to stand by the report and withdraw this addition."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, in this matter also there are various amendments. If we are to take the view that the purpose of this Bill is to cause annoyance, indignity, trouble and harassment, then no clause will be acceptable to anybody. On the other hand, if we take a sympathetic attitude, we will readily agree that the purpose behind the Bill is to help proper management of our religious institutions so as to create confidence and faith in them, and the feeling that the Bill causes indignity will disappear."

"Now, what is the meaning of the words in the second line of sub-clause (1), 'for purposes connected with the math'? If we simply say: 'The trustee of a math shall be entitled to spend at his discretion', he can do anything with the funds. The Select Committee, therefore, put in the words 'at his discretion for purposes connected with the math'. But, who is to decide whether a certain purpose is one connected with a math or not? I was asked yesterday by Sri Narayanaswami Nayudu whether a particular act of a matadhipathi will be treated as coming within his discretion."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" What happens if the sums are paid as Hasthakanikas and not as Pathakanikas? "

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" We do not contemplate such things. Even if a kanika is put on the head, it goes by the name 'pathakanika'. As the head is considered too sacred to be touched, the offerings are made at the feet."

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" There are also cases of pathabhi-shanam."

28rd January 1951]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" That is the reason for putting in the words 'for purposes connected with the math'. The Legal Department was asked to carry out the intention of the Select Committee. Their intention can only be that there must be somebody to look into it. If Sri Suryanarayana Rao's amendment is accepted things will be left vague. Our intention has to be made clear. Any person authorized by the Commissioner does not mean that the matadhipathi will take the accounts or keep the accounts himself. We have provided that he must appoint a manager or other person to do this and he will have at least a peon to take the accounts to the Commissioner. It may even be that the Commissioner will go and see the accounts himself. What we have provided is that there must be at least someone authorized by the Commissioner to see the accounts. If this is viewed in this light, there will be nothing in it to find fault with. The authors and the Legal Department have done nothing against the wishes of the Select Committee. The department has only faithfully carried out the directions given to them."

The amendment was put and lost.

Clauses 55, 56 and 57 were put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 58.

Sub-clause (1).

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" I beg to move—

'After the words "a religious institution" wherever they occur, insert the words "other than a math or a specific endowment attached to a math".'

"Sir, I agree that it is good to give power to the Deputy Commissioner to frame schemes in respect of institutions other than maths or specific endowments attached to a math too. My first amendment is to the effect that, when the Deputy Commissioner has reason to believe that in the interests of the proper administration of a religious institution other than a math or specific endowment attached to a math a scheme should be settled, he should have power to settle a scheme. As regards the maths and specific endowments, I have given notice of another clause. I gave notice of this amendment because under clause 54, even in fixing the standard of expenditure or dittam, the Commissioner is not the ultimate authority."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Is my hon. friend moving an amendment to sub-clause (1) or to sub-clause (3)? "

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" I am moving an amendment to sub-clause (1)."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" But that sub-clause does not apply to maths."

[23rd January 1951]

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" But unless I exempt them here, under sub-clause (3) it will become a general question and all these clauses can be applied to these endowments.

" In clause 54, in respect of maths, even the scale of expenditure has to be sanctioned by Government and their orders are final. In preparing a scheme, the Government may be the final authority in respect of a math. In clause 58, in the place of sub-clause (3), I have suggested that—

'When the Commissioner has reason to believe that in the interests of the proper administration of a math or a specific endowment attached to a math a scheme should be settled for the institution or when five or more persons having interest make an application in writing, stating that in the interests of the proper administration of the math or the specific endowment attached to a math, a scheme should be settled for it, the Commissioner shall consult in the prescribed manner the trustee and the persons having interest, and if, after such consultation, he is satisfied that it is necessary or desirable to do so . . .'

" These are the words taken from their own clause—

' . . . he shall frame a scheme of administration for the institution and submit the same to Government who shall pass orders thereon.'

" It would be consistent with the principle if in respect of maths, even the scale of expenditure is to be approved by Government. When they want to prepare a scheme in respect of an institution other than a math or specific endowment attached to a math, let there be the existing provision. I have suggested new clause 58-A in place of sub-clause (3) which includes all the sub-sub-clauses of sub-clause (3). Under it, it is only the Government that will decide these things. A distinction is made by me in respect of maths and specific endowments connected with maths. In respect of these a scheme shall be framed by the Commissioner and sanctioned by the Government. My amendment to sub-clause (1) must be read with my amendment to sub-clause (3) in order to understand the whole scheme which is different from clause 58. We have to put together all the maths under sub-clause (3) as also the general scheme for other religious institutions. I am separating them by having a separate clause 58-A. It is consistent with the position we have taken in regard to maths that special consideration should be shown to them. When a scheme has to be prepared and the appointment of an executive officer has to be made, the Government should be the final authority. This will remove a lot of unnecessary discontent created by the manner in which officers have been empowered to deal with the maths for which we want to show special consideration and have devoted a separate chapter. That is my whole point in this consequential amendment. I have also suggested a consequential amendment, namely—

'Renumber sub-clauses (4) to (7) as sub-clauses (3) to (6) and omit sub-clause (8).'

Sub-clause (8) says—

'(8) The powers conferred by this section shall, in respect of maths, be exercised by the Commissioner or by a Deputy Commissioner to whom powers in this behalf have been delegated by the Commissioner under section 10, sub-section (2).'

23rd January 1951] [Sri R. Suryanarayana Rao]

I want to give even that power to the Government. The Government should settle the scheme in respect of maths and specific endowments. That is the whole scheme that I have put forward."

SRI S. B. ADITYAN :—" Sir, this is one of the clauses in which it was decided that the Government should have no power. Now, the hon. Member Sri R. Suryanarayana Rao argues that the Government should take the power to frame the schemes. That matter was fully considered and it was decided that the court should have a final say in the matter."

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" I am also going to give it to the court."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" We have ourselves given it to the court, Sir. This is a judicial function and we cannot ask the Government to do a judicial function. The Government have not got the final voice. There is a right of suit given and this is a judicial matter. The Deputy Commissioner may initiate the matter, but the parties aggrieved have got a right to go to court."

The amendment was put and lost.

Clause 58 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

MR. CHAIRMAN :—" It looks as if we will take the rest of the day for this Bill. The food debate can come off to-morrow. We have gone through half the Bill. The House will now adjourn and re-assemble at 2-30 p.m."

(After lunch -2 30 p.m.)

The House re-assembled at 2-30 p.m. with the Deputy Chairman (Sri K. Venkataswami Nayudu) in the Chair.

Clause 59.

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" Sir, I move the following amendment :—

(1) In clause 59, for the words " Deputy Commissioner " wherever they occur, substitute the word " Commissioner ".

(2) At the end of clause 59, insert the following proviso :—

" Provided in respect of a math or a specific endowment attached to a math, the order of the Commissioner shall be subject to the approval of the Government."

If the clause is amended as I have suggested, it will read—

'59. (1) The Commissioner may, on being satisfied that the purpose of a religious institution has . . . become impossible of realization . . . by order, direct . . .'

(2) The Commissioner may, at any time, by order, modify or cancel any order passed under sub-section (1).

(3) The order of the Commissioner under this section shall be published in the prescribed manner and on such publication shall be binding on the trustee, the executor and all persons having interest."

[Sri R. Suryanarayana Rao] [23rd January 1951]

"The object of my first amendment is this. This Chapter deals with inquiries, and any order passed must be by an appropriate authority. This clause deals with appropriation of endowments and it is better that the orders are passed by a more responsible officer like the Commissioner. It may be argued that an appeal lies to the Commissioner. You will see, Sir, I have later on provided for appeals to the Government. My amendment to substitute 'the Commissioner' for 'the Deputy Commissioner' does not disturb the plan of action proposed in the Bill. Only in cases where severe action has to be taken, I want that a more responsible officer should take such action. On that, there should be an appeal to the Government. Therefore, I want, Sir, that wherever the words 'Deputy Commissioner' occur, the word 'Commissioner' should be substituted."

SRI M. D. T. KUMARASWAMI MUDALIYAR :—" I second the amendment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Clause 59 is the same as clause 64 in the Bill appended to the report of the Select Committee. The amendments of Sri R. Suryanarayana Rao to clauses 59, 60, 61 and 62 are all more or less the same. He wants that wherever the words 'Deputy Commissioner' occur the word 'Commissioner' should be substituted and wherever the word 'Commissioner' occurs, the word 'Government' should be substituted. It goes against the scheme of the Bill in regard to this matter. In clause 59, we are dealing with institutions whose purpose has from the beginning been, or has subsequently become, impossible of realization. In such cases, the Deputy Commissioner may direct that the endowments of the institution be appropriated to all or any of the purposes mentioned in the clause. In such cases, the initial work need not be done by the Commissioner or the Government. It can be done by a responsible officer and we have suggested that the Deputy Commissioner should initiate proceedings, that there should be an appeal to the Commissioner and that the matter should be finally decided by the court. Why should the Government come in here? The Government should not come in here at all. The final authority is the court in this matter. The Deputy Commissioner initiates proceedings and there is an appeal to the Commissioner. In clause 99, the Government have got revisionary powers. Finally, any party aggrieved by the order may file a suit in court and we have provided for an appeal also to the High Court. But the initial duty should not be cast on a higher officer. It will be against the scheme of the Act to substitute the word 'Commissioner' for the words 'Deputy Commissioner'."

The amendment was put and lost.

Clause 59 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

23rd January 1951]

Clause 60.

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" Sir, I move the following amendment :—

'For the words "Deputy Commissioner" wherever they occur, substitute the word "Commissioner".'

'Add the following proviso at the end of clause 60 :—

"Provided in respect of a math or a specific endowment attached to a math the order of the Commissioner shall be subject to the approval of the Government."

"Sir, I have to advance the same arguments which I advanced in connexion with the previous clause and the Hon. Minister for Law will advance the same counter-arguments. My whole object is, as was the object of the original Bill, to avoid litigation as much as possible. If a higher officer passes orders and they are subject to the approval of the Government, the prospect of people going to a court of law will be lessened. I do not say that there are not cantankerous trustees who will go to courts for no reason at all. But if the orders are passed by persons of superior status, and if in cases where a math or a specific endowment attached to a math is concerned, the orders are subject to the approval of the Government, it would be difficult for a party to indulge in litigation. My object is to make the authority as high as possible and thereby lessen the prospect of litigation. It is with that object I gave notice of the amendment to clause 59 and I have given notice of the same amendment to this clause also. The fact that the party can go to a court need not prevent us from making such arrangements as to make the order passed by the authority undisputed and frivolous litigation impossible. Even the courts will hesitate to give injunctions, if they are sought by aggrieved parties, when the order has been issued by the Government or when the Commissioner's order has been subject to the approval of the Government. Thereby the prospect of orders being set aside will be lessened. It is with this idea I gave notice of the amendment. It will not disturb the plan of action proposed in the Bill if we substitute the words 'Deputy Commissioner' for the 'Commissioner' and make the order of the Commissioner subject to the approval of the Government."

SRI M. D. T. KUMARASWAMI MUDALIYAR :—" I second the amendment."

DEPUTY CHAIRMAN :—" Does the hon. Member want to press his amendment? "

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" The Government themselves may realize later on that I am wiser, Sir."

[23rd January 1951]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" It is not a question of anybody being wiser in this matter. Clause 60 refers to defunct institutions. There again the question is, who should initiate proceedings and whether a higher authority should initiate them. We say that the Deputy Commissioner may initiate the proceedings. In clause 61, an appeal is provided to the Commissioner. In clause 99, power of revision is allowed to the Government in any matter for which a suit or appeal is not provided. Whatever the hon. Member Sri Suryanarayana Rao wants—appeal to the Commissioner and the Government—are all there. Of course, the language used is not 'appeal' to the Government. It is revision by the Government. There is appeal to the Commissioner and revision by the Government. Clause 62 provides that any party aggrieved by an order passed by the Commissioner may file a suit in the court against such an order and then appeal to the High Court also. If you put the Commissioner instead of the Deputy Commissioner, you may be avoiding one tier in this series. But these defunct institutions may be in any part of the State and the Commissioner cannot initiate proceedings in respect of all of them; it is enough if the initial proceedings are taken by a responsible officer. We have said that it should be done by the Deputy Commissioner. The Government should not come in with regard to such matters, because we have said that the court must deal with such matters as right to property is involved."

The amendment was put and lost.

Clause 60 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 61.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" The amendments of Sri Suryanarayana Rao to this clause also go automatically."

Clause 61 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 62.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" The amendments to this clause also go. They are consequential."

Clause 62 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 63.

Clause 63 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

23rd January 1951]

Clause 64.

Sub-clause (5).

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" Sir, in this amendment which I move, I have suggested the addition of another sub-clause, viz.,

'After sub-clause (4), add the following new sub-clause (5) :—

"(5) Any party aggrieved by the notification may, within ninety days from the date of its publication, file an application in the court against such notification; and the court may confirm, modify or cancel such notification."

While the Government have no doubt taken the power to, 'at any time, on an application made to them, cancel the notification', the notification will be in force for a period of five years from the date of its publication. What I suggest is that an aggrieved party may be allowed to file an application in the court. With regard to suits and appeals under clause 62, I find no reference is made to this clause which relates to notification. I feel, therefore, that a provision like this giving the aggrieved party a right to go to a court of law in case he is not satisfied and in case even when he moves the Government, he has not got redress, is necessary. As the Hon. Minister knows, this has been subjected to a good deal of criticism. All that I seek is that the Commissioner should possess the powers that are vested in him, but if an aggrieved party wants to go to a court of law, he may be enabled to do so and assert his rights, if he has any."

SRI M. D. T. KUMARASWAMI MUDALIYAR :—" I second the amendment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, to give the court plenary jurisdiction in a matter like this which is purely temporary in its nature will defeat the very purpose of the measure in case of proved mismanagement. You will find, Sir, in clause 63 :

'Where the Commissioner has reason to believe that such institution is being mismanaged and is satisfied that, in the interests of its administration, it is necessary to take proceedings under this Chapter, the Commissioner may, by notice published in the prescribed manner, call upon the trustee and all other persons having interest to show cause why such institution should not be notified to be subject to the provisions of this Chapter.'

Even if he uses the power to notify and takes steps to manage the institution, it automatically lapses at the end of a fixed period, or the Government may cancel the notification even before the period lapses. The very idea of notification is to rectify mistakes and mismanagement, and it is only for a temporary period. If we are to give plenary powers to the court even in cases of temporary arrangement, then, the very object of the notification will be destroyed. The present Act of 1926 specifically includes a similar provision. As I said, the very object is to rectify and meet a temporary emergency and you cannot make it more temporary by saying that the court can interfere with it."

[23rd January 1951]

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO:—"If I may be permitted to say a few words, Sir—I have no right of reply—I may say that as a result of this clause 64, a number of consequences will ensue, such as those mentioned in clauses 65 and 66 relating to the appointment of salaried executive officers, etc. The period of five years is not short; it is the maximum no doubt; but if an aggrieved party thinks that there is no case of mismanagement, that the Commissioner has been misled and has not got sufficient reasons to justify the action—of course from his own point of view—he can go to a court. If the Commissioner has sufficient materials to proceed in the matter, he can satisfy the court and the court will not easily be led away by the aggrieved party to grant him relief unless it is satisfied that the Commissioner's order is not justified in the circumstances. I therefore feel it will remove a great deal of heart-burning if my amendment is put in, and that is why I have stated . . ."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"I don't think he can make a regular reply, Sir."

The amendment was put and lost.

Clause 64 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 65, 66, 67, 68 and 69 were put to the House and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 70.

Sub-clause (4).

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO:—"Sir, this is again an attempt on my part to give a better status to the Area Committees. When an Area Committee passes an order, I want that an appeal should lie to the Commissioner and not to the Deputy Commissioner. My object in giving notice of this amendment is to improve the status of the Area Committee and make it a real Area Committee with a status worthy of the responsibilities thrown on it. It is with that purpose that I have suggested that the appeal should lie to the Commissioner and not to the Deputy Commissioner, against the order passed by the Area Committee. I move—

'That in sub-clause (4) of clause 70, for the words "Deputy Commissioner" the word "Commissioner" be substituted.'"

SRI M. D. T. KUMARASWAMI MUDALIYAR:—"I second it."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"On a former occasion in connexion with a similar amendment, I have explained the position. If you put an appeal for every order of the Area Committee to the Commissioner in the matter of budget for instance, it will end in a breakdown, because an officer like the Commissioner will not be able to attend to the work, since the number of temples with an income of less than Rs. 20,000 is large. At present when the Area Committee or the Assistant Commissioner passes an order, the trustee is given the right to appeal to the Deputy Commissioner. We know that the Area Committee is presided over by the Assistant Commissioner; and if the appeal is to the Commissioner and not to the Deputy Commissioner, then it means that the Commissioner will have to hear the appeal for years together and the whole administration will practically come to a standstill. In all these matters an appeal can certainly be taken to the Deputy Commissioner who can suo motu call for the records. If however an appeal is to be provided for to the highest authority, the work will become impossible."

23rd January 1951] [Sri K. Madhava Menon]

The amendment was put and lost.

Clause 70 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 71, 72 and 73 were put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 74.

Sub-clause (6).

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO:—"Sir, I move—

'Omit sub-clause (6).'"

This power vested either in the court or in the Government to stop the coming into operation of an order pending disposal of the application or appeal, is being sought to be taken away by this sub-clause, and it is wrong to do so. I think lawyers will agree that it is necessary that the court or the Government should have this power to stop an order which prima facie may be considered to be beyond the powers of the authority passing the order or is not desirable in the interests of the institution in respect of which the order is passed, pending the disposal of the application or appeal. After all, it may be concerned with a rectification of defects disclosed in audit or an order of surcharge against the trustee. Even in the District Municipalities Act and the District Boards Act, surcharge orders are passed by the Inspector of Local Fund Accounts and the Government do withhold them—if I remember aright—pending further consideration. Or if an appeal is filed in court, the court grants an injunction pending final disposal of the appeal against the order. I am not suggesting anything novel, but I am only suggesting a procedure which is already followed in respect of other institutions. Why in the case of these institutions the same privilege should not be accorded I am not able to understand. I therefore move that sub-clause (6) of this clause 74 be omitted."

SRI M. D. T. KUMARASWAMI MUDALIYAR:—"I second it."

[23rd January 1951]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, we have already passed clause 62. Sub-clause (1) of that clause says that 'the court shall have no power to stay the Commissioner's order pending the disposal of the suit.'

If this is right in that particular clause, it is much more necessary in this case where a surcharge is made after enquiry and after giving an opportunity, after the audit report and after the recommendations of the Area Committee and when the Commissioner is satisfied that the trustee or any other person was guilty of misappropriation or wilful waste of the funds of the institution or of gross neglect resulting in a loss to the institution, and also after 'considering his explanation'. There is no use giving him more time. We have already given him the power to appeal to the court against the Commissioner's order, and he may choose either the court or the Government for appeal, and when he takes one remedy, he cannot take the other. A specified time is given to him to do it. After that, it is stated here that the court or the Government should not stop that order, so that the money that has been illegally taken away may be taken back as it belongs to a trust or religious endowment; we must necessarily guard against any possible loss of the money. That is why it is necessary that although he may have the right of appeal or any other remedy, the order of the Commissioner should not be set aside pending disposal of the appeal. As a matter of fact, this power is more necessary here than in clause 62."

The amendment was put and lost.

Clause 74 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 75, 76 and 77 were put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 78 and 79 were put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 80.

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" Sir, I move—

'That at the end of sub-clause (3) (c), the following be added :—

"subject to such delegation of powers as the Government may by general or specific order provide."

Sir, this clause relates to a temple with which you are connected. If I remember aright, in your criticism of the provisions relating to the Tirumalai-Tirupathi Devasthanams, you stated that at present this Devasthanam enjoys a certain privileged position which is now sought to be taken away. The only good thing the Government have done is to say that the Deputy Commissioner and the Assistant Commissioner shall not visit this Devasthanam with all their orders. Their powers and duties under the Act have been assigned to the Commissioner instead. But

[23rd January 1951] [Sri R. Suryanarayana Rao]

I want that even the Commissioner should exercise only such powers as are delegated to him by the Government. The importance of the position of the Devasthanam Committee—which in future is to be called the Board of Trustees—does deserve better consideration at the hands of Government. It is granted that the Deputy Commissioner and the Assistant Commissioner will not have anything to do with the Board. It may be argued that the Commissioner under the present Bill will possess more powers in respect of the Devasthanam than now; but what I want is that the Commissioner should exercise his powers in the future only in so far as they have been delegated to him by the Government either by general or specific order.

"It may be that by a general order the Government may say the Commissioner shall exercise all the powers under this Act in respect of this Devasthanam or they may say, in respect of some matters only the Commissioner may exercise the powers, but I am not so much in favour of the Commissioner being given all the powers that are now given under the Act to the Deputy and Assistant Commissioners, and in addition to the powers which he has under the Act as the Commissioner. That is the only thing I wanted to say. On the other hand, if the Government think they can repose confidence in their Commissioner, they may give him all the powers they possess, but I would like, at least for some time to come, the Government not to hand over all their powers to the Commissioner, but allow the Board of Trustees of the Tirumalai-Tirupathi Devasthanam Committee to function without undue interference by the Commissioner."

SRI M. D. T. KUMARASWAMI MUDALIYAR :—" I second it, Sir."

DEPUTY CHAIRMAN :—" Is the hon. Member moving the other amendment? "

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" Sir, I also move the other amendment of mine—

'To sub-clause (4) of clause 80, add at the end of sub-clause (4) the following words :—

"subject to the final approval of the Government." "

"The same arguments I have advanced in respect of the previous sub-clause holds good here also. Even here I would like the orders of the Commissioner to be subject to the prior approval of the Government, because, as you said, this Devasthanam is a peculiar institution with large endowments. So, I feel that in respect of this Devasthanam before any orders are passed by the Commissioner and they are given effect to Government should have a say in the matter."

SRI M. D. T. KUMARASWAMI MUDALIYAR :—" I second it, Sir."

[23rd January 1951]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, what my Friend means was not quite clear when I read the amendment. The result of passing the amendment will be just the reverse of what he intends. Under clause 60 and other clauses, wherever the Deputy Commissioner is mentioned, he wants the substitution of 'Commissioner'. Here his intention seems to be that wherever the Commissioner is mentioned, it should be only the Government. Now, let us see what he proposes in the amendment. He wants at the end of sub-clause (c) to add the words: 'subject to such delegation of powers as the Government may by general or specific order provide'. If this is read with the clause, it reads thus:

'All powers and duties assigned by the provisions aforesaid to a Deputy or an Assistant Commissioner shall be deemed to have been assigned to the Commissioner instead, subject to such delegation of powers as the Government may by general or specific order provide.'

" 'Provide' to whom, Sir? Is it to the Commissioner? The intention of the hon. Member is that only the Commissioner must act and for that he must have specific authorization. If the Commissioner wants to act, it will be by a general or specific order provided. If that is the intention and if it should be by a general or specific order, it spoils the whole effect of it, because the Government may by general order authorize the Commissioner. (Sri R. Suryanarayana Rao: 'As I said the Government may do.') I do not think it is necessary. Certainly we have given a separate status to the Tirumalai-Tirupathi Devasthanams. Though the designation of the person may be the executive officer, instead of the Commissioner now, hereafter the position he will enjoy under this clause will be almost analogous to the position which the Board holds now and nothing more. So, we have not given any more powers to the Commissioner than the Board has over the Tirumalai-Tirupathi Devasthanams now. So, I do not think that in all these matters the Government should come in in the initial stage, but the Government should be the final authority. Clause 99 gives the power of revision to the Government. So they should be the final authority and not the only authority."

The amendments were put and lost.

SRI B. NARAYANASWAMI NAYUDU :—" Sir, before you put the clause to vote, I just want to know one thing. Sub-clause (2) (c) says: 'The Government shall have power to appoint a salaried executive officer for the Devasthanams, and shall have power to suspend, remove or dismiss him from office.' So far as the Tirumalai-Tirupathi Devasthanams is concerned, the power of appointment of the executive officer is vested in the Government. I suppose that is correct. With regard to other institutions the super-matadhipathi has got the power, but that so far as the Tirupathi Devasthanam is concerned, the super-super authority has got the power of appointment. I just want to know what is the position of the executive officer. As at present constituted, there is no executive officer for the Tirupathi Devasthanam. He will come into being after this Bill becomes an Act, but what is to become of the person who is at present holding the executive authority and what becomes of his appointment after this Bill becomes an Act and comes into force? With regard to the appointment of other officers, it is said 'for such period as the Commissioner may determine', but so far as this Devasthanam is concerned, this clause does not specify any period. It simply says, 'the Government shall also appoint a salaried executive officer'. For what period? Nothing is mentioned. Is it for all time that he should hold office? Is there any limitation? Again, what happens to the person who now holds the position of executive authority? Does he become defunct, or should he go home or beg of the Government? What is it that has been provided in respect of these matters? I want to know these things before I give my assent to this clause."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, under the present Tirumalai-Tirupathi Devasthanams Act, section 18, the Provincial Government shall appoint a Commissioner who unless sooner removed by them for sufficient cause, shall hold office for a period of three years. The outgoing Commissioner shall be eligible for reappointment. Here in clause 81 of the Bill, we have provided 'If the executive officer is an officer in the service of the Government, the Devasthanams shall pay his salary, allowances and such contributions towards his pension, provident fund, and leave allowances as may be required under the rules prescribed by the Government in this behalf.' Again items (u) to (x) of sub-clause (2) of clause 100 relate to the Tirumalai-Tirupathi Devasthanams and the qualifications, method of recruitment, pay, grant of leave, leave allowance and travelling allowance, personal conduct and punishment of officers and servants constituting the establishment of the Tirumalai-Tirupathi Devasthanams. So, Sir, qualifications, terms, pay, etc., can be determined by the rules to be made hereafter under the Act."

" My Friend asks me, what is to become of the present incumbent. I am not an astrologer to make any prophesy in this matter. Sir, the legal position is, the present incumbent is only a temporary person, because under section 18 of the existing Act, his appointment is ordinarily for a period of three years unless determined earlier. The Government can continue him if they want or appoint a fresh person instead. Whatever it is, the question of the present incumbent is not a matter which we need worry about now. But, in regard to the other things, they are to be decided by rules. We have specially provided rule-making powers in regard to this Devasthanam and under those powers service conditions and other things will be drawn up and the present incumbent will come under those conditions. As I said the executive officer for the Tirumalai-Tirupathi Devasthanams will be appointed by the Government."

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" Sir, the rule-making powers deal only with the qualifications, method of recruitment, etc., of the officers and servants constituting the establishment of the Tirumalai-Tirupathi Devasthanams, but there is nothing relating to the executive officer. Since there is a lacuna, why not the Government make the necessary provision as they did on another occasion?"

[Sri R. Suryanarayana Rao] [23rd January 1951]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" It is specifically laid down that the executive officer shall be appointed under the provisions of this Act."

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" I think it is not the intention of the Government to treat this executive officer in the same way as other executive officers are treated, but in a different manner. I think, my hon. Friend, Mr. Narayanaswami Nayudu raised a pertinent point in regard to the existing officer. It is left to the Government to appoint him to the new post or remove him; but, as the new appointment has to be made soon after the Bill is passed, they should define the period of his appointment."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" I have nothing more to add to what I have already stated, Sir."

Clause 80 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 81 and 82 were put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 83.

Sub-clause (3).

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" Sir, I move the following amendment which stands in my name, namely :—

'For the word "Commissioner" in line 3, substitute the word "Government".'

" Sir, my amendment, I think, has your sympathy, but you cannot show it, because you are sitting now in the Chair. I only suggest that any appeal against the orders of the Board of Trustees may lie to the Government and not to the Commissioner. Now that we are treating the Board of Trustees of the Devasthanams in a different manner, I suggest that in the matter of appeal against the orders of the Board of Trustees, who are a responsible body whom you are going to appoint to manage the temples of this huge Devasthanam, it should not be to the Commissioner, but to the Government. That is the whole point of my amendment, Sir. I am sure, Sir, if you are not sitting in the Chair, you would have supported my cause. After all, it is agreed that an appeal should lie against the orders of the Board, but what I say is, it should be to the Government and not to the Commissioner."

SRI M. D. T. KUMARASWAMI MUDALIYAR :—" I second the amendment, Sir."

23rd January 1951]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Mr. Deputy Chairman, Sir, the position is that what powers the Board possessed are now taken by the Commissioner and I do not see anything derogatory in it. We have taken away the powers of the Board practically and the powers that are exercised by the Board are to be exercised by the Commissioner because he takes the place of the Board. I do not feel that has made any difference."

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" There is one appeal provided by the clause to the Board; against the orders, if any, of the executive officer and against that of the Board the appeal lies to the Commissioner."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" It is the Board of Endowments now."

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" The position of the Board of Endowments is that of a quasi-judicial body; though the Hon. Minister said that the Deputy Commissioner is going to act in a quasi-judicial manner, I feel that he is nothing more than an executive officer of the Government. In a like manner, the Commissioner also will be just like any other head of a department like the Director of Agriculture or the Commissioner of Labour or the Director of Industries. Only we are delegating to him certain powers under the Act. Therefore, I felt, Sir, that against the orders of the Board of Trustees, a second appeal must lie to the Government because the Board of Trustees is an important body created for the purpose of managing the affairs of the Tirupathi Devasthanams."

The amendment was put and lost.

Clause 83 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 84 and 85 were put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 86, 87 and 88 were put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 89.

Sub-clauses (4) and (5).

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" Mr. Deputy Chairman, Sir, I am against the compounding of offences contemplated in sub-clauses (4) and (5). The Commissioner may accept from any trustee who has committed or is reasonably suspected of having committed any of the offences . . . by way of composition of such offence, a sum of money not exceeding one thousand rupees. I feel, Sir, it is very unfair to allow this. If the trustee has committed any offence and has failed to comply with the provisions of the Act, he should be dealt with as anybody else and why should the Commissioner be given the power of compounding the offences? I know there are such provisions in the Forest

[Sri R. Suryanarayana Rao] - [23rd January 1951]

Act but I do not think that it must find a place here. Even taking the question of compounding the offences, why should there be a restriction on the discretion of the Commissioner by saying that he shall only take Rs. 1,000? Having regard to the nature of the offence, he may take Rs. 2,000 and let him take as much money as possible. The idea of the Government may be that they do not want to have prolonged prosecutions before a court of law; I appreciate their position but I do not think that this power of compounding of offences can be allowed to be there. I move, Sir,— 'Omit sub-clause (4) and omit the words "or any money payable by way of compensation under sub-section (4)" in lines 1 and 2 of sub-clause (5).'

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Deputy Chairman, Sir, I very much want my hon. Friend Sri Suryanarayana Rao to consider what the offences are in respect of which compounding is permissible; it is not for misappropriation or loss of property. What is meant is only neglect or failure to comply with sections 25 and 26, namely, maintenance of registers, verification of the registers, submission of returns and so on. If he neglects or refuses to submit the returns or does not submit them in time, action will be taken under this clause, not in respect of the first default. It is not a case of falsification of accounts for that will be an offence under the Indian Penal Code. If he fails to submit the returns or causes obstruction to the inspection by the Commissioner, these are not offences involving moral turpitude and can be settled in the first place by administering a warning and if things do not improve, instead of taking the matter to court and getting him fined, the Commissioner puts the fine. These are not serious matters, as I said, in which moral turpitude or loss of property to the institution is involved and so, we say, instead of the magistrate doing the thing, the Commissioner makes the enquiry and goes into the matter and says: 'You should not do things like this' and he compounds it. An offence of this nature does not seem to be a case where we need be very much against compounding."

The amendment was put and lost.

SRI B. NARAYANASWAMI NAYUDU:—"Mr. Deputy Chairman, Sir, the Hon. Minister said that this is another way of fining the trustee. Instead of saying that this is another way of fining him, why not you straightway take the power of fining him? You can prosecute him and if you want, you may not do it and take some money by way of composition. I say, Sir, this is an extraordinary way of what is called blackmailing. Is it not Sir? You say they must submit returns. Well and good. Why not you fine immediately you see they do not do it? That will be a direct way of doing it. You fine them and be done with it. On the other hand, what is it that you do here? You put the threat of prosecution over his head for failure to submit returns and so on and naturally he wants to escape. At that moment, you say: 'let there be a composition; give me so much and I will not take action against you. Otherwise, I will haul up before a court of law.' Jurisprudence I have known but the ingenuity of the Government to make provisions of this sort passes my comprehension. It must be deemed to be an abuse of the powers vested in Government to say like this. You fine and be done with it; why do you give him a threat and say: 'Come along and salaam me and pay me something and I will not take you before a court; but do not do it in future.' Why not, I ask, Sir, have the courage of taking the thing to court, prosecute and get a conviction? This is not a half-way-house. I must say, Sir, that even Henry VIII did not devise this kind of imposts."

23rd January 1951] - [Sri B. Narayanaswami Nayudu]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Deputy Chairman, Sir, my hon. Friend said that it was blackmailing but let me point out to him that it is very easy to use such words. My Friend must have remembered the very many occasions on which he would certainly have appeared for the parties in which according to the provisions of the Abkari Act and the Forest Act composition would have been effected, and he would himself have advocated it then. Is that blackmailing, Sir? It is not as if we are saying: 'We will prosecute you if you are not going to pay so much; you have committed an offence and it is open to me to send you to jail.' It is not, Sir, after all a case in which you should either go to the magistrate or send the trustee concerned to prison. What he will be told is only this: 'You have committed an offence; you must pay for that so that you may not do it hereafter.' Is that blackmail, Sir? If the dictionary meaning is taken, you will find that it must always be accompanied with threats which is not in existence here. The person must also say: 'I shall tell something about you which is not true,' and secondly, money must be taken by unfair and improper means; then it is blackmailing. Of course, Sir, this provision may not be to the interests of the person concerned, but that is a provision in law according to which money is taken and it cannot at all be blackmailing. I may also submit, Sir, that even my hon. Friend Sri Suryanarayana Rao did not interpret this provision so badly. In the alternative amendment suggested by him, he wanted the power to compound the matter before or even after the institution of proceedings. It is not, I submit, blackmailing but a legitimate and right way of doing things. As I submitted, Sir, it is not as if on the very first occasion of default this will be thought of and he will be sent to jail at once if no composition is effected. That may be the jurisprudence and the conception of law of my hon. Friend and that may be the law of Medes and Persians of those days and probably of Henry VIII but not of the present day where we have different conceptions of treating offenders in such matters."

Clause 89 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 90, 91 and 92 were put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

[23rd January 1951]

Clause 93.

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" Mr. Deputy Chairman, Sir, the first amendment which I propose will perhaps be accepted, because the mistake has crept in due to the printer's devil. I propose, therefore, that—

' In sub-clause (2) of clause 93, omit the semi-colon after the words " in this Act " in line 4.'

It is wrongly printed and I hope that the Government will at least accept the amendment and that perhaps will be the only amendment with which you will be prepared to go to the other House as the amendment suggested and accepted in the Upper House."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" I need not go to the other House to correct a printer's mistake."

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" In the House of Commons, Sir, I have known occasions when a Bill had to be taken back to it for want of proper punctuation.

" Sir, I move the next amendment—

' Add the following as new sub-clause (2) to clause 93 :—

" (2) Nothing contained in this section shall affect the right of the trustee of a religious institution to institute a suit to enforce the pecuniary or proprietary rights of the institution or the rights of such institution as beneficiary."

" This defect was pointed out to us in some of the literature handed over to us in connexion with this Bill. I felt, Sir, that while barring suits, for purposes of enforcing the pecuniary or the proprietary rights of the institution, the general right of every trustee of a religious institution to go to court should not be taken away. I also felt that the addition of this sub-clause will not in any way take away the force of the present clause 93. The Legislature must recognize that in case the right of a trustee has been affected by any order issued under the provisions of this Act, he should be entitled to go to court to establish his claim."

The motion was duly seconded.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, the semi-colon is a printer's devil. But that does not in any way affect the meaning of the clause. So at any time it can be corrected. When the Bill is being printed afresh after it is passed in this House, that mistake can be corrected. So I do not wish to accept the amendment formally for the purpose of saying that an amendment has been accepted in this Council and so the Bill should go back to the other House before being finally passed.

" Then, Sir, regarding the other amendment, I do not agree that matters relating to pecuniary rights or proprietary rights of an institution should be referred to courts to be decided. Further, this clause is delightfully vague. If this clause is to be accepted, first the courts will have to decide whether pecuniary rights or proprietary rights of an institution are involved, and then only courts will have to decide the suit on the merits of the case. Sir, this clause gives a roving permission to file a suit. Sir, on a previous occasion, Mr. Suryanarayana Rao said that in passing this Bill, we should see that as far as possible unnecessary litigation should be avoided. Now, if we are to accept this amendment we will be only giving room to unnecessary litigation. Sir, we have in other places said that courts shall have jurisdiction only over such and such matters. Beyond that, we are not going to concede. So, Sir, we cannot accept this amendment."

[23rd January 1951] [Sri K. Madhava Menon]

The amendments were put and lost.

Clause 93 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 94, 95, 96, 97, 98 and 99 were put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 100.

DEPUTY CHAIRMAN :—" I will put clauses 100 to 104 to the vote of the House."

SRI B. NARAYANASWAMI NAYUDU :—" Sir, with your permission I have to submit that I am not going to accept clause 104; I am going to challenge it to a division."

DEPUTY CHAIRMAN :—" Then I shall put clauses 100 to 103 to the vote of the House; the hon. Member may then speak on clause 104."

Clauses 100, 101, 102 and 103 were put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 104.

SRI B. NARAYANASWAMI NAYUDU :—" Sir, I oppose the passing of clause 104. For, this clause proposes to abolish the Hindu Religious Endowments Board, which has been in existence for the last 25 years. The whole establishment of it also goes with it without notice. The entire servants of that establishment also go out of office with it. Their services are terminated without notice. The President and the Commissioners and such of their subordinates as Government may consider suitable may be appointed by Government in their discretion to any offices. Government might like to appoint some of them, and the services of the rest of the staff shall be deemed to have been terminated. My submission is, this is absolutely unwarranted. There are several institutions which Government have scrapped or taken over; and have they not provided for those staffs elsewhere? Are there not corporations created by statute and have not their staffs? Even so, this Hindu Religious Endowment Board and the staff have been in existence for the last 25 years; and so, they cannot be abolished without notice. Otherwise, what is the meaning of the words 'the services of the rest shall be deemed to have been terminated'. Sir, when the British Government quitted this country, what did they do with their huge establishment? Did they say, the services of their staff shall be deemed to have terminated, the moment they quit India, and did they say the huge establishment should run after the Prime Minister of India for being appointed? So, I ask, is this the way of dealing with the establishment of the Board? My friend, Mr. Suryanarayana Rao, has not left one opportunity to champion the cause of elementary school teachers in this Council. He has taken care to table a number of amendments on this present Bill under several clauses. But strangely enough, he has accepted the stand of Government in the present clause. I wonder how it has escaped his notice and he has not given any amendment to this clause. Is it good for a popular Government, is it wise for a popular Government to terminate the service of the establishment of the Board and make their appointment afresh a matter at the pleasure of the Government? Sir, I cannot accept this clause. I oppose it with all my force."

[Sri B. Narayanaswami Nayudu] [23rd January 1951]

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO:—"Sir, Mr. Narayanaswami Nayudu was perfectly justified in questioning why I have not tabled any amendment to this clause. Sir, if he has only the patience to go through the proceedings of the Select Committee, he would have seen that Member after Member moved amendments and he would have seen also what amount of discussion there was then, in order to safeguard the interests of those who are already in the service of the Board. He will be surprised to see that we took great interest, in fact, much more interest than he has done, by tabling several amendments. And as a result of a great deal of consideration, Government themselves brought forward this present clause, embodying therein the suggestions we made. Though we felt the Government amendment was not quite satisfactory, yet we felt that Government were fairly considerate in the treatment of the establishment. For, look at sub-clause (3) of the present clause. It says: 'To those not so appointed the Government may accord such relief by way of pension, gratuity, provident fund or leave with allowances as they may in their discretion deem fit.' Again look at sub-clauses (2) and (4) of clause 100. They grant pensions or gratuities to officers and servants of the Board who retired before the commencement of this Act and gratuities to the heirs of deceased officers and servants of the Board including those who had retired before the commencement of this Act. So when the Government had come forward with such a generous offer, we in the Select Committee thought that Government would use their discretion very fairly and justly, and so we accepted this clause.

"Then, Sir, I may also tell my hon. Friend that we in the Select Committee consulted those who are likely to be affected by this clause and they felt that in view of the assurances given by the Government they had no objection to it. Then, Sir, I do not know whether another point has been noted by hon. Members. We pointed out to Government that they have made rules for the absorption of persons employed in the several zamindari estates when those estates are abolished. We found them somewhat generous and so we suggested to the Government that on those lines, rules may be framed with regard to the Board's employees so that they may not be hard hit. Since the Government promised to consider their case sympathetically, I did not want to disturb the present clause, and that is why I did not table any amendment to it. Mr. Narayanaswami Nayudu was perfectly right in asking us why we did not table any amendment to this clause and we owe him an explanation for it. I think, in the Select Committee stage, almost the whole of half a day was spent in discussing this matter. Government, as far as I can see, were anxious to do justice to them. We considered the relevant clause in Mr. O. P. Ramaswami Reddiyar's Bill as well as in Dr. Rajan's earlier Bill. With a view to meet all the points of view, Government came forward with the present clause, which we felt was reasonable as well as the sub-clauses I referred to in clause 100 above. I thought Government had conceded a great deal, and we wish they would do more than what is contained in clause 104. I therefore plead that this clause is not so harsh, nor are the Government so hard-hearted as my friend thinks they are."

SRI M. NARAYANA MENON:—"Sir, on general principles, when an institution ceases to exist, its employees must cease to be employed. That is the first principle. But in this matter Government have taken a very fair stand in providing them, if possible, with employment. Not only that. Government want to employ the officers of the Board not necessarily in the machinery to be set up in the place of the present Board, but they want to provide for them, if possible, in the institutions to be formed under the new Act. Then there is the provision for giving pension, gratuity and such other things. Therefore it is clear Government have not forgotten the employees under the present Board. It is also clear that they want to provide them with employment or give some relief to them. So it is not fair to call this Government as unsympathetic or unfair."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Sir, Mr. Narayanaswami Nayudu has threatened dire consequences as he proposes to call for a division of the House under this clause."

SRI B. NARAYANASWAMI NAYUDU:—"Perhaps the Hon. Minister has no idea of the results of the exercise of constitutional weapons!"

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Certainly a threat like that cannot easily deter me from my path."

SRI B. NARAYANASWAMI NAYUDU:—"Nor do I expect it." (Laughter)

[23rd January 1951]

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" But that apart, Sir, my hon. Friend said that Government do not care for the staff of the Board which has been in existence for the last 25 years, and so he wants the deletion of this clause. The House should for one moment consider what will be the consequence if we accept his suggestion. The consequence will be that all the staff will go without any employment; because when this Bill is passed, the Endowments Board will be abolished and the whole establishment will be thrown out of employment. So unless something is provided for them, the ordinary law of the land will prevail. So the consequence of the acceptance of his suggestion will be the very thing which he wants to avoid. The entire establishment of the Board will be stranded in the streets."

SRI B. NARAYANASWAMI NAYUDU :—" I do not want that to happen."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Merely saying that he opposes this clause, that the clause should not be passed and that he will ask for a division on the motion that the clause do stand part of the Bill will not achieve the object which Sri B. Narayanaswami Nayudu has in view. I can understand his asking for a mandatory provision to the effect that the staff of the Hindu Religious Endowments Board should be absorbed under this Act. A mere negative demand to omit the clause will not achieve his object. Abrogation of this clause is a very dangerous thing and it will go against the desire of all of us because we want to see that the staff of the Board who have been serving faithfully and doing their work properly should not be thrown out of employment because of the accident of the Government passing a new Act to replace the existing Hindu Religious Endowments Act. That is only proper and natural justice. Those appointed to the posts of the members of the Board and the Commissioner are not permanently appointed; they are appointed for a term of three or five years as the case may be. Even without this Act, it is open to the Government to continue their services, as they have done in the past, beyond the term for which they are appointed, if their work is found satisfactory. We have provided that the tenure appointment-holders also might be absorbed as far as possible. Certain saving clause like that might be there, as Sri R. Suryanarayana Rao wanted. Clause 90 of the Bill as introduced provided that on the coming into force of this Act, the Board shall be deemed to have been abolished, and the service of all its subordinates shall be terminated. Many Members of the Joint Select Committee made various suggestions and moved amendments to provide that the persons who have been serving the Board for the last so many years should not be sent away because of the accident of the passing of a new Act. Hon. Members will find in the Bill as amended by the Joint Select Committee the relevant clause, clause 104, printed in clarendon type. In the place of the provision in the original Bill providing for the termination of the services, we have provided that as many as are qualified may be absorbed. We have even gone further and provided that the conditions of service of persons so absorbed shall be regulated as if they had entered the service of the Government on the date of their first appointment under the Board and that to those who are not absorbed, the Government may accord such relief as they may in their discretion deem fit. Of course, the discretion is left to the Government. The Government must be expected to act reasonably and use their discretion properly. The very object of inserting this clause is to see that the services of the members and staff of the Board are not terminated but continued under this Act, credit being given for the services that they have already put in. So there is no need to remove the clause from the Bill."

23rd January 1951] [Sri K. Madhava Menon]

SRI B. NARAYANASWAMI NAYUDU :—" My legal adviser tells me that I should stand corrected and therefore I stand corrected."

Clause 104 was put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 105 and 106, Schedules I, II and III and Clause 1 and the Preamble were put and carried and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON :—" Sir, I move—
'That the Bill be read a third time and passed.'

"I do not want to make any long speech at this stage of the Bill. We have had exhaustive discussion in the other House and very good and helpful discussion in this House. Very little heat has been generated over this Bill in this House as compared with the other House. I must say that the discussion in this House went on on an absolutely different line altogether and with the object of trying to understand and improve the Bill and not from the point of view of any vested interest affected by the Bill. It is really gratifying. It is not with the idea of attacking any vested interests that this Bill has been brought forward. The Bill has gone through various vicissitudes. I was told that the Bill which became the 1927 Act was the one Bill in the annals of the Madras Legislature for which were tabled more than three hundred amendments. For this 1949 Bill, we had four hundred or even more amendments and we have scored a mark. That shows that the Bill has considerable stakes."

"If we go through the history of this Bill from 1938 onwards, we will find that changes have been made at every stage. After the working of the Hindu Religious Endowments Act of 1927 for a number of years, the Hon. Dr. Rajan when he was a Minister in 1938 found that a new Act was necessary because the objects with which the 1927 Act was passed could not be fully achieved with the powers that that Act gave to the Board or the Government. It was found that without further powers, nothing substantial could be done. So a Bill was prepared. But it could not be moved as the Ministry resigned and the Advisers' ~~Bill~~ came into existence. Even the Advisers' Government, who would not like to interfere in a religious matter especially when there was no legislature, passed an Amending Act in 1944 as they found that the 1927 Act did not give sufficient power to the Board or the Government to act in a way that will be for the good of religious institutions. We went on renewing the Act year after year and it is due to expire on 31st April 1951. Before the expiry of that Act, we have brought forward this Bill. When this Bill was drafted, our Constitution was practically on the anvil. As we proceeded with the Bill and the Joint Select Committee was considering it, a good portion of the Constitution had been passed though the Constitution as a whole had not been passed. After the Constitution was passed, we had to re-examine the Bill as it emerged from the Select Committee. It is with considerable care that the Government have been proceeding with this Bill. We have been working on the principle that it is better not to do any harm though we cannot do anything good. I must once again say that the idea behind this Bill is to preserve the religious institutions, in all their pristine purity and glory and to maintain the faith that we have got in the temples. Towards that end we must work. We are taking for granted that everything that is there is bad. It is wrong to take a prejudiced view like that. Our idea should be to work the Bill for the good of religious institutions. If that idea is understood, we can certainly see that the Bill can be worked for the good of the religious and charitable institutions and through them for the good of the community as a whole. If we suspect that everything has been done with a motive and that no good could come out of it, then we see only bad and dangerous things. It is very difficult to satisfy people who want to see only bad aspects. People who view the Bill with sympathy and understanding can take it from me that the Government's idea is to use the Bill for the proper management, improvement and safety and not for destruction of the religious institutions in our country which we have been holding sacred for the past so many generations."

SRI R. SURYANARAYANA RAO:—"Sir, the other day the Hon. Sri Madhava Menon said that Dr. Rajan was hoping to be present in the House before our deliberations on this Bill would be over. We are very sorry that he is not able to be present on this occasion. Those of us who were associated with this Bill in the Select Committee stage, as I said the other day, know the amount of hard work that he had put in in connection with this Bill and the tact he displayed in getting through the work without in any way preventing those who had a point of view to express it forcibly and allowing the Select Committee to consider it. I hope the Hon. Sri Madhava Menon will convey to Dr. Rajan our feeling as to how much we miss him to-day. I was told that he felt that this Bill was his life as it were and that before he retired from politics he was very anxious to put the religious and charitable institutions in a position wherein their good administration would be ensured. We are very grateful to Dr. Rajan. In spite of his age and poor health, he piloted the Bill in all its stages during the last two years.

"We are also grateful to the Hon. Sri Madhava Menon, who as his trusted lieutenant, has dealt with all the amendments that we moved. Whether we agreed with his point of view or not, he was fair to those who moved the amendments. Especially in this House he must have been surprised to find that most of the amendments should come from one who is not opposed to the Bill. My object in moving the amendments was to improve the Bill and make it as less offensive as possible to those that are opposed to any reform in the management of religious institutions. As I followed the proceedings of the Select Committee, I felt that the force of most of the criticism might be taken away if the Bill was improved in the manner in which I wanted it to be improved. Even now I wish that the Government had accepted at least those of my amendments relating to maths, as that would have in a way satisfied many of those who wanted the Chapter relating to maths to be removed altogether from this Bill.

"However, Sir, I am grateful to the Government for the patient hearing they gave in the various stages of the Bill and I once more request my Hon. Friend Sri K. Madhava Menon to convey to the Hon. Dr. T. S. S. Rajan the regret we have felt for his inability to be present here to-day on account of his illness and also our wish and prayer that we all hope to see him again when the Council meets next, hale and hearty, coming forward with some other Bill of the department with which he is now concerned."

SRI M. NARAYANA MENON:—"Mr. Deputy Chairman, Sir, the Bill is ~~not~~ so far as it goes and my desire is, and I am sure that is the desire of many hon. Members who have anything to do with these religious institutions and endowments, that the law on the subject should go further and deeper so as to conserve all the properties of these religious institutions in order to foster the growth and development of the Hindu religion and Hindu culture and Hindu thought. As has been stated very emphatically by my Hon. Friend Sri K. Madhava Menon, who is now the Leader of this House, this Bill is only intended for helping these institutions to carry on with their work properly and efficiently and it is our wish and hope that all the matadhipatis and trustees of these religious institutions would co-operate with the Government and see that the working of this Bill is made a great success."

THE HON. SRI K. MADHAVA MENON:—"Mr. Deputy Chairman, Sir, let me also associate myself with the sentiments expressed by my hon. Friend Sri R. Suryanarayana Rao and others regarding my Hon. Colleague Dr. T. S. S. Rajan who is the sponsor of this Bill. The speeches that he made in the Assembly when he originally introduced this Bill and subsequently when he introduced the report of the Joint Select Committee and also his speech at the third reading of the Bill,—all these will show, as my hon. Friend Sri R. Suryanarayana Rao has said, that he considered this measure as a sort of his life's ambition and as a crowning piece of work in his long and useful career of service to the country and that is why he has taken the deepest interest and the greatest concern for the welfare and proper administration of these temples and religious institutions, because he is anxious to see that they retain their ancient glory and usefulness. I am sure, Sir, that it will certainly gladden his heart to read in the papers about the passage of this Bill through this House and how his services have been appreciated by this House and how the work which he began two years ago, and which he pursued with such astute cleverness, courage and tact has been crowned with success, and how the deep interest and enthusiasm and wonderful patience which he displayed through the various stages of the Bill, whether in the Select Committee, or whether in the course of the examination of witnesses or whether in following the long course of discussions in the other House, have all been appreciated by hon. Members of the House—all these things which will appear in the papers will considerably hearten him and restore him to health much more quickly than we have wished for.

"Sir, let me also take this opportunity to thank my hon. Friend Sri O. P. Ramaswami Reddiyar who was the sponsor of the original Bill and whose enthusiasm for the reform of religious endowments is so well-known. Though the present Bill has undergone certain material changes from the Bill he originally introduced and though some of the provisions in the present Bill may not be to his entire satisfaction, yet, nobody will question the sincerity of his intention to see that the religious institutions and charitable endowments are administered properly, and I am sure he will also certainly feel glad that the Bill, which he was so anxious to see put on the Statute Book, has been passed by this House and therefore it is our duty to express our gratitude to him also on this occasion, for the efforts he has taken in this matter."

DEPUTY CHAIRMAN:—"Before I put the motion to the vote of the House, I should also like to associate myself with the various sentiments expressed by hon. Members of the House for the great work which Dr. T. S. S. Rajan has achieved in getting this Bill through both the Houses of Legislature. It is perhaps a sheer accident of luck that I happen to occupy the Chair at this juncture, particularly when this Bill, of which I am most concerned, is being passed into law. I know that my Hon. Friend Dr. T. S. S. Rajan who is a great devotee himself, has taken the keenest interest in this matter and it was the greatest liking of his heart that this Bill should be passed through both the Houses of Legislature as quickly and as smoothly as possible and placed on the Statute Book, and therefore, I am sure, he will be very glad to hear that it has passed through this House also within the shortest possible time. At the same time, we must also thank the Hon. Minister for Law, who has so ably piloted this Bill through this House and who has helped us in the quick passage of the same and finally I should say that both the Hon. Dr. T. S. S. Rajan and the Hon. Sri K. Madhava Menon as well as the Members of the Joint Select Committee have shown their greatest concern for public opinion and whatever concessions were possible have been given and so we are grateful to all of them. And lastly, I must also thank hon. Members of this House for the way in which they have co-operated with the Government to get this Bill through this House as quickly as possible. It is certainly a great credit to our sense of adjustability and our deep concern for this measure and in particular, we must be thankful to my hon. Friend Sri R. Suryanarayana Rao who has taken such a great interest in this Bill and given notice of a number of amendments, with the sincere desire of making the Bill as perfect as possible, and though his amendments were not accepted, yet I am sure, it is he who feels the greatest satisfaction in seeing that this Bill has been passed. Let us all pray that this measure will prove to be a great harbinger for the good of our religion and for the good of our community as a whole. Now, I have great pleasure in putting the motion to the vote of the House. The question is—

"That the Madras Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowments Bill, 1949 (L.A. Bill No. 10 of 1949), be read a third time and passed."

The motion was carried and the Bill was passed.

DEPUTY CHAIRMAN:—"I now adjourn the House to meet again at 11 o'clock to-morrow to discuss the Food Situation in the State."

The House then adjourned to meet again at 11 a.m. on Wednesday, 24th January 1951.
