Maha Cure For Impotency

Sexual indulgence at an age when one has not arrived at the stage of Puberty, Loss of Vital semen by bad practices and Excessive indulgence in sexual pleasures, causes thinness of the vital fluid and its discharge during moments of amative thoughts. Erotic dreams, during sleep also cause discharge. As a result of the thinness of the semen, the same is discharged quickly during connexions, and also during straining at stools or passing urine. It is also attended with the other symptoms like loss of appetite, constipation, vertigo, weakness, loss of solitude, etc. In chronic stage discharges occur even without erection and power of erection is lost. Thus Impotency arises. Other causes also lead to Impotency.

Our Impotency Cure has been prepared with a view to preserve the semen without loss, increase the quality and quantity of the vital fluid, arrest discharge of semen while straining at stools and during micturition, give retentive power, bring back to life the dead seminal ducts, strengthen the nerves and afford complete satisfaction in sexual congress.

CAUSE AND CURE OF DYSPEPSIA

Safety Lies Only In Proper Food

Stomach aches belly ache, bad digestion, medically known as Dyspepsia is a very common ailment. A large number of persons suffer from this disease and it shows itself in various forms and degrees.

Dyspepsia is only bad digestion and an impaired stomach is due to bad food. Every organ has its own important place in the functioning of the body but the stomach and other digestive organs have to be given their due place as it is only on good digestion and assimilation the body is properly built and health maintained. Every disease has its own cause or causes, but impaired digestion is often the primary cause. Healthy digestive organs maintain health and avoid other ailments. Unhealthy organs give rise to varieties of diseases.

* * * *

The tongue is the gate keeper to admit food into the system. Impaired digestion will always have a bad tongue. A Bad tongue is an indication that digestion is affected. When the appetite is affected it is the warning to the patient to stop food till the lost appetite is recovered. In many instances man is a slave to the tongue. He consumes food both in quality and quantity beyond his capacity for digestion. The intelligent man uses not his discrimination in avoiding such of the food as has been the cause for his trouble. He realizes when he suffers from bad pain that such and such a food had been the primary cause for it. In spite of his own experience he yields to the low temptation of taste of the tongue. Higher intellect must guide the dyspeptic patient. So long one is a slave to the taste of the tongue no relief is to be expected for the patient.

* * * *

There is a wrong theory current among a section of medical men that diseased teeth and gum are responsible for Dyspepsia and they indiscriminately advise patients to remove bad teeth. This false theory misguides people. In fact the reverse is the case. It is always bad digestion that bring about bad teeth and gum. The proper treatment will be to improve digestion; with suitable food with the improvement of digestion teeth and gum recover their healthy state.

* * * *

As in very other cause, the removal of the cause alone forms an efficient method of treating dyspepsia. Such of the diet which is hard to be digested must completely be stopped. Complete starvation must be resorted to taking only a cup of water at regular interval till pain gas forming heaviness in the belly, etc., completely stops. Return of good hunger is the real test for taking of food. After starvation for two complete days, normal appetite will return, then too only corjee water must be taken at frequent intervals completely with fruit juice like grapes, oranges. A month's restricted diet will be sufficient for early cases. In advanced cases the restriction must be continued for months even years. Heavy food like dhal and similar grams, sweets, nuts, meat, etc., should be completely stopped. The patient himself should select his own easily digestible food.

* * * *

All pain relieving medicines containing opium, morphia, cocaine, ganja, must be completely shunned as enemies of the patient. Alcohol in any shape or medicine containing it, should be avoided. Such of the confections as will dope the patients should not be used. Care should always be taken that the bowels are free. As an aid to the diet half to one palm of good castor oil may be taken early morning or fine Kaduukkai powder in two drachm doses may be taken either in ghee or castor oil double its quantity. A teaspoonful of fresh ginger juice may be taken both morning and evening and the same taken with food. Regulated physical exercise will assist the dietetic treatment.

Note.—No dyspeptic patient should be misled by the advice of medical men that medicine is a remedy for Dyspepsia. The only remedy is correction of diet and habits.

WHY FRUITS ARE HEALTHY

Vitamins and Salts

VALUABLE LEMONS

Fruits supply mineral salts for the body tissues (particularly the bones, teeth, and blood) water and roughage to promote elimination sugar for energy purposes, and most important of all, vitamins which are essential for perfect health.

It is absence of the vitamin C present in fruits, and to a lesser extent in fresh vegetables, which causes scurvy.

Fortunately the disease as such is now rare in this country, but owing to insufficient consumption of fruits, degrees of vitamin C deficiency are common and are directly responsible for much ill-health and unfitness.

Oranges and lemons, belonging to the citrus family of fruits are cheap and plentiful at present and, as they are the richest sources of vitamin C we should take full advantage of their health giving qualities.

ORANGE JUICE

They are readily digestible and exert numerous remarkably beneficial effects on the body. Digestion assisted by the fruits acids, which stimulate the flow of saliva and increase the secretions of the stomach, pancreas and liver.

The passage of the food along the intestines is facilitated and the efficiency of the other eliminating organs, the skin and kidneys, is improved.

The juice of the orange contains appreciable amounts of vitamins A and B, though it is for its vitamin C that it is most valued.

The juice can be concentrated into small bulk, and in this form is convenient to us in the case of nursing mothers and in children suffering from mal-nutrition and rickets.

Bottle-fed babies should be given the fresh juice daily. Beginning with one teaspoonful and gradually increasing the quantity.

The grape-fruit also belongs to the citrus family and the taste for this fruit has grown surprisingly during the last few years.

The juice of the grape fruit is similar to that of the orange, but the vitamin content is less, vitamins A and B being completely absent.

EFFICACY OF KADUKKAI

For Various Ills

(Lat.— Terminabiachubula. Sans.— Harithaki. Tamil— Kadukkai. Tel.— Karukaya. Can.— Anilikaye.)

This is the fruit available commonly in forests and sold in shops in dried shape. It is freely used in Indian medicine. There are several varieties of this drug having more or less the same properties. It is one of the ingredients of Triphala. It is used by itself or generally as an ingredient of Triphala. It also forms the ingredient of very many Indian prescriptions. It is the cheapest drug available everywhere and one of the most efficacious drugs which any lay person can handle without risk.

Both the tender and ripe fruits are used. When ripe only the pulp surrounding the seed is used. It may be used in the shape of powder, decoction, confection or as oil.

It is the safest purgative in 1 to 2 drachm doses. It may be taken either mixed with castor oil or made into decoction. It is the safest drug even in Typhoid condition and in all cases where there is irritation of bowels. Half a drachm of the powder may be made into decoction in $\frac{1}{2}$ an olock of water and reduced to $\frac{1}{4}$ olock and given in $\frac{1}{2}$ to one ounce dose every three or four hours till the bowels move. A pinch of dry ginger powder may be added if necessary.

It is the best remedy for all kinds of Dysentery. Two drachms of the fine powder mixed with half an ounce of castor oil repeated twice or thrice daily till the symptoms disappear.

Taken by itself or mixed with other drugs it is the most efficient drug in all kinds of piles, especially in bilious form.

It is the best remedy in constipation if taken regularly early morning either with ghee or castor oil. The patient himself must adjust the quantity of castor oil or ghee. Half to one drachm of the powder may be thus used.

It is the best anti-bilious drug. In biliousness, vomiting, enlargement of liver, sleeplessness, it may be taken either a decoction, confection or oil.

When every other remedy has failed it is the best remedy for dyspepsia. The powder about $\frac{1}{4}$ or half drachm may be mixed with double its weight of castor oil and taken twice or thrice till bowels move freely.

In sore throat and all kinds of cough the pulp may be chewed and the juice retained in the mouth and throat and swallowed subsequently.

It is the best cooling agent in all irritation of the eyes, mouth, throat and the digestive organs and of the skin and the sexual organs both of men and women.

Heartburn

Heartburn is a common symptom of indigestion, and is due to an excess of acid in the stomach.

This may be due to the imperfect mixing of foods, eating too much starch or sugary diluting the gastric juices by drinking during meals, eating under-ripe or overacid fruits.

Another common cause is the drinking of strong tea after a meal. Tea contains tannin, which not only counteracts the action of the digestive ferments, but combines with meat and forms a new chemical substance which is most indigestible.

About twenty grains of bicarbonate of soda taken in warm water relieves the symptom at once by neutralising the acid, but a warning must be issued against the bad habit of using drugs instead of treating the cause.

It is a good plan to begin a meal by eating a ripe grape fruit. Never drink during meals, but an hour or so before or afterwards.

Eat slowly and masticate well avoiding starchy and other foods which cause acid to form. An apple may be eaten after a meal with advantage.

People who work during the day should make the evening meal their chief one instead of the midday lunch if at all possible.

Choking

Choking may arise from many causes—a particle of food may have “gone down the wrong way” and lodged at the top of the windpipe, or it may result from the swallowing of very hot liquids.

If the cause is a simple obstruction, it may be removed by coughing suddenly and violently or by fishing it out with a finger.

Vomiting may be induced by tickling the back of the throat or giving an emetic of salt and water.

If the patient is a child, it can be held upside down for a short time or vigorously shaken. Thumping the back is also sometimes effective, or eating something hard like a crust of bread.

When the choking is due to scalding, the patient should first drink some ice cold water, or, better still, suck a piece of ice. A hot poultice should be placed at the front of the throat.
