The Miracle of Psychic Surgery

By Dr. Henry C. Link

Some years ago a Portuguese doctor, Egas Moniz, decided to operate on the brains of people suffering from fears and worries. He deliberately destroyed large segments of the brain tissue in the higher brain centers, with successful results. Miraculous improvements in personality were effected. This operation, popularly known as psychic surgery, constitutes one of the greatest discoveries in the history of man.

Following Dr. Moniz, a considerable number of American surgeons have developed this operation with brilliant results. The brain tissue destroyed was always in the frontal lobes of the brain, that is the higher brain centers, the seat of reason and imagination. The nerve fibers or mental pathways were cut in as many as twelve areas each a half inch in diameter.

A woman, who had been confined to bed with day and night nurses for a year, with extreme fear of all kinds, soon after this operation was able to take care of her own household, drive a car and entertain people. When she went to the theater, she was for the first time able to enjoy the play and was not distracted by her distress over how her hair looked in back and other trifles of dress.

A bookkeeper of fifty-nine, bedridden for eight months, with a nervous breakdown, obsessed by a fear of poisoning, given to spells of weeping, and finally confined in a hospital with day and night nurses, after the operation lost all these symptoms. A man who had been a failure in business, after such an operation became a very successful salesman and later salesmanager. His wife reported that he made a much better husband after part of his brain had been removed. He did not find fault so much with details and stopped worrying about household affairs. He also developed a lack of self-consciousness and experienced no embarrassment if he made mistakes or received rebuffs. Tests of his intellectual processes, however, showed that these were of a continually lower order as evidenced by an increasing lack of discrimination.

Twenty-one such operations were reported in connection with the meeting of the American Medical Association last year. Most of them were immediately successful in wholly or partly eliminating such symptoms as excessive fears, worries, insomnia, delusions, crying spells, nervous indigestion, panic states, hysterical paralysis, etc. After destroying a good part of the higher brain centers, those which specialize in bodily action, were given great scope. The patients became at once more active physically. Usually there was a slowing down of the higher thought processes, the reasoning power, but patients considered this loss more than compensated for by a happier and more active life. The results of psychic surgery over a period of years are not yet known and many surgeons are still sceptical. Regardless of the final outcome, the present results are of major significance.

They are in perfect accord with the findings of psychologists that the intellect and imagination often become the chief enemies of personality; that thinking and analysis practised at the expense of energy-consuming action are the great source of fears; that the lower brain centers, those which specialize in bodily action, are just as important as the higher centers of thought, and at times even more important. Psychic surgery proves that certain people would be better off with less brains. It confirms what I have told so many people not yet in need of an operation, that in their quest for happiness they should use their heads less and their feet more.

GLANDULAR THERAPY.

By Dr. A. F. De Saint-Croix. Journal of Medicine, Feb: '37.

In the light of modern researches and extraordinary rapid progress in the direction of the use of ductless glands in the treatment of various diseases much is said and has been discussed.

This new principle in medicine has completely revolutionised the old time tonics.

Glandular therapy, the application of which dates back from 1839 when the pioneer of this branch of medicine, Brown Sequard, administered to himself testicular extract, is well known. To the amazement of himself and other physicians, the experiment proved a great success and a new chapter was opened up in the modern book of therapeutics.

Since that day, good many eminent scientists, notably Banting, Best, Murphy, Minot, and Serge Voronoff have experimented on various organisms including human beings, taking help of every available ductless gland found in the body.

Recently the new system has been perfected to such a degree, that surprising results have been recorded in books of medical statistics.

A good deal of information about the subject can be obtained from an authoritative publication put forward by Dr. E. Retterar, a Parisian Professor.

It is also truth that the most forward medical men whose opinions are valued by physicians of the whole world have personally carried out experiments, and have without reservation, put their stamp of approval on the system and advocated its tremendous possibilities.

It has been scientifically proved that the best and most rational treatment for the cure of sexual weakness is Glandular Extracts obtained from the glands of bulls, and administered by the mouth.

Yet all the achievements of the system are reduced to nil if the glands selected are not of standard purity and if due care is not taken during the preparation of their compounds. The bulls selected must not be diseased and must be absolutely young so that all their ductless glands must be functioning with their proper physiological secretions. On strict and thorough pathological examinations, they should prove to be absolutely germ free and in a healthy condition.

The exact proportions selected from different glands is a matter of vital importance.

Another factor of great importance is the preservation and stability of these products. Absolute freshness is essential. The gelatine capsule is recognised as the best method of preserving freshness and therapeutic efficacy. The vital gland substances are completely sealed in the gelatine envelope, and all possibility of deterioration is eliminated.

The Chemists of Bergeret Laboratories have discovered after years of research and experiment a glandular extract of unusual efficacy in the treatment of sexual weakness. This preparation is Endophon, which is available in two different kinds. No. 1 is for Partial Impotence and No. 2 for Complete Impotence and Sterility. This Great Product has won tremendous success, and this has led to its widest medical recognition. It is different to the usual run of Glandular preparations, being the Star Product of Bergeret Laboratories, who have for more than a quarter of a century manufactured Organotherapeutic products for the medical profession.

The treatment should be carried out faithfully for the prescribed course. It is guaranteed to effect a complete and permanent cure.

Gonorrhea—The Best Treatment

BY A DOCTOR.

Gonorrhea is on the increase. In fact, the latest world statistics suggest that four out of five persons in capitals, like London and New York are stricken with the disease.

The common fallacy that it is no worse than a bad cold is exploded. It is now recognised by clinical and pathological evidence as a dangerous disease with serious complications. Therefore, it should never be neglected.

Gonorrhea is an infective process due to the action of a specific micro-organism known as Gonococcus. It is characterized by a discharge of pus through the urethra. The primary lesion is an acute catarrhal inflammation of the anterior portion of the urethra. It quickly runs to suppuration, and if neglected, it attacks the bladder and weakens it, causing bladder trouble, then the prostate gland, and passing through the sub-acute and acute stages, penetrates the circulation and organic parenchymata, producing complications like stricture, epididymitis, gonorrhoeal rheumatism, vesiculitis, prostatitis, orchitis (swollen testicles) pyelitis, etc: and sometimes causes Impotence.

The symptoms of the disease usually start within 5 to 10 days after infection.

The patient may get some slight itching of the meatus and a burning sensation while passing urine. The lips of the meatus are congested and swollen. Gradually a serious discharge appears which though thin and mucoid in the beginning, soon becomes thick and yellow. There is sometimes a dragging pain in the back and some slight constitutional disturbances such as fever.

Occasionally the swelling inside the urethra is so great, that there is an hindrance in the flow of urine and on exertion haemorrhage occurs. The first attack is always more troublesome than the subsequent ones, though it responds easier to treatment. When this disease reaches the chronic stage it needs prolonged treatment.

The best treatment in all cases of Gonorrhea and Gleet (Chronic 'G') is "505" Mixture and Injection. It is endorsed by the medical profession and widely used in hospitals and private clinics in France. The Injection soothes and heals the inflammation of the anterior portion of the urethra, and stops the discharge within a week. The Mixture, taken internally, removes symptoms such as pain, burning sensation after urination and eradicates the Gonococcus (Gonorrhea germs) from the system. The cure is complete and permanent.

"505" is prepared to the formula of Dr Edouard Pavy, the famous French Specialist in venereal disease.

Dr Pavy's formula is considered the best and is the result of five hundred and five experiments on patients suffering from the disease. The 505th experiment proved the most effective. These experiments were carried out during a period of eighteen years. The fruits of his prolonged labour in the cause of science is a complete and permanent cure for "G" and its complications.

"505" is manufactured for England and the British Empire by Howard Lloyd & Sons, Ltd. Leicester, England.

Health & Hygiene.

Duration of Sex Life in Man

How long does the male sex life last? We know much about the sex life and its curves in the female. Here are some interesting facts about the male.

Upon the question of the duration of sex life in the male, writes Dr. Bowers in Sex Science, there is a wide divergence of opinion. In the strict acceptance of the term we must concede that the "sex life" really begins and ends with the physical life of the individual.

In fact, the generative organs begin to function even before the birth of the child. The internal secretions of these organs, circulating in the bloodstream of the embryo, undoubtedly influence all the various cells of the body.

They modify the growth, shape and physical characteristics of the structures of the body—from the bony framework to the central nerve cells. They also exercise a potent influence on the psychic life of the individual that is to be.

Freud tells us in his "Infantile Sexuality—Three Contributions to the Sexual Theory"—that the actual beginnings of sexual life cannot possibly be identified. To those of us, accustomed to date the advent of sexual life with puberty and adolescence, this seems utterly absurd.

And yet, endocrinology, or the study of the ductless glands and their function, confirms the observation of Freud, in respect to the fact that the internal secretions, which influence our functioning power—sometimes in a curiously potent manner—originate not only in the testicles, prostate, ovaries and uterus, but also in the pituitary, thyroid, adrenal and thymus glands, as well as in other organs—such as the spleen—the functions of which are as yet but little understood.

Even the lips, the nipples of the breasts, and other erogenous zones of the body may contribute, or participate in, this general sexual development.

Professor Muller contends that there are intimate relations between the digestive organs and the sexual glands. Chronic constipation, also, is very common where there is a lack of functioning power in the sexual glands.

Therefore, it may be said that the sexual organs comprise, either directly or indirectly, all the organs of the body.

And so, the "duration of sexual life" may be, strictly speaking, the duration of the functioning power of the various organs that comprise the body.

However, what the average person regards as the "duration of sex life" is that period between which one is capable of participating in the sex act and that time which marks the cessation of this virility.

This period varies greatly, and depends upon a number of circumstances. Climatic conditions have much to do with the early maturing and the early degeneration of the function.

Vitamin D and the tropical or sub-tropical sun bring about what would be considered among Anglo-Saxon races as a precocious sexual development.

The Basutos and various others among the negroid or the Polynesian races, are mature men at sixteen, possessing at times extraordinary virility.

At fifty, however, many of them are old men—much older, proportionately, than are the Normans, Scandinavians or Anglo-Saxons—many of whom marry and have authentic progeny at seventy.

It is conceded that sexual virility and longevity are always associated. Castrated animals or humans never attain great age, as they offer far less resistance to infection. For the secretions of the ductless glands, in general, help to neutralise, or antidote, poisons introduced into the body with the food, or developed in the digestive tract as the result of putrefactive fermentation.

It is partly because of this fact that there is no record of any eunuch ever having lived to an advanced age. On the other hand there is ample evidence to prove that men of strong sexual powers have lived a hundred years or more.

Of course, it is gravely to be doubted that centenarians, mentioned in the literature, ever lived to be as old as they were reputed to have been. Nevertheless, their hale and hearty activities bear out the contention that without exception, all these old men were unusually well sexed.

Thomas Parr, who lived to be nearly 153, was found guilty and punished at the age of 102 for having committed a sexual offence. Eighteen years later he married a widow, who claimed that she found in him nothing to indicate degeneration.

The greatest physician of his times, the renowned Harvey, who first demonstrated the circulation of the blood, made the autopsy on the body of Parr. He reported that "The body was in such good condition that the cartilages of the chest bones were not yet ossified."

The hair on the forearms was still black. The tests were 'Sound and Large.' Harvey states that "His wife told me that until 12 years ago he had never ceased to embrace her frequently." And this was at the age of 140.

A Dane, by the name of Drakenberg, lived to the age of 146, notwithstanding the fact that he rarely knew what it was to draw a sober breath. At the age of 111 he married a woman of 60, with whom he lived a complete married life for upwards of twenty years.

Many of these old men have proved their virility in paternity. Not a few of them have had a number of children, even after reaching the age of 80.

Peter Albrecht, married at the age of 85, lived to the age of 123, during which time he had sired seven children.

Gurgen Douglas, a Swede, married in his 85th year. Before he died, at the age of 120 years and 7 months, he had been the father of 8 children.

An Italian, Baron Baravicino de Capellis, lived to be 107. He had 4 wives. The first he married when 14 years of age. He had seven children. Yet most interesting to note, his last wife was pregnant when he died.

At the Bottom of the Sea With Professor Picard

By Jean Marchand

The sole terrestrial domain which still remains completely unexplored is that of the great maritime depths. With their enormous mass the oceans cover two-thirds of the surface of the globe; in depth they extend as much as 33,000 feet below sea level. But so far our direct observations have barely skimmed the surface. How many precious cargoes, how many artistic and historic treasures lie at the bottom of the sea, waiting to be recovered! Already submarine technique has succeeded in salvaging cargoes which sank in water 660 feet deep. While we are waiting for the development of this technique to extend the domain of human activity to still greater depths, observations have been carried on which have constituted an incomparable source of biological information.

In August, 1934—to give the most famous example—Dr. William Beebe reached a depth of 2,990 feet in his steel bathysphere. Today the indications are that the maritime abysses, contrary to what was commonly believed, contain abundant and variegated fauna. Will we ever be able to observe this fauna? The question is answered in the affirmative by Professor Picard, pioneer of the stratosphere who plans to explore the extreme ocean depths in a steel sphere. His projected apparatus is radically different from that employed by Dr. Beebe.

Professor Picard has this to say of his device, "Could you imagine an ascent into the stratosphere in a captive balloon? Is it any more sensible to try to reach the ocean floor at the end of a cable? It is my opinion that only a sphere which is free of all connection with the surface will permit us to reach the bottom and observe conditions of life there; I have not even bothered to consider whether modern technique can produce a cable 33,000 feet long which would be capable of bearing its own weight in addition, to that of the sphere, Dr. Beebe was hindered by the swaying of his bathysphere; in addition, the inability of his apparatus to move with the currents created disturbances which made observation extremely difficult. So, when the Belgian National Fund for Scientific Research entrusted me with the task of finding a solution to the problem, I deliberately decided to eliminate the cable.

"A cabin made of steel 1.1 inch thick can float in water as a balloon floats in air. Such a thickness would be sufficient for a depth of 9,900 feet. If we go deeper than this, the increase in pressure will necessitate an increase in the thickness of steel. The weight of the sphere will then become so great that it will not be able to remain in equilibrium with the water. It would, therefore, be necessary to attach a buoy to it. For this we can make use of a cylinder filled with oil. Since oil is lighter than water, such a buoy would exert an upward pressure of 660 pounds per cubic meter. The walls of the containing cylinder can be thin because the external pressure, in the final analysis, will be transmitted to the oil. Oil, however, is lighter than water; its lifting capacity will, therefore, diminish during the descent. The slightest escape of oil, moreover, would be fatal to the observers. To eliminate the danger of escaping oil, I decided to employ paraffin, which would still provide me with a lifting capacity of 220 lbs. per cubic meter.

"Upon reflection, the simultaneous use of oil and paraffin appeared preferable. The cylindrical buoy, which would be mounted on top of the sphere, would be divided into compartments in which reservoirs of oil would alternate with packages of paraffin. Since the inside of the cylinder would give access to the water, internal and external pressure will be equal and the walls can, therefore, be made very thin and light. To allow for the compressibility of the oil, it would suffice to place in each tank a bladder with an external opening. The water would enter into the bladder, thus compensating for the decrease in the volume of the oil.

"My sphere will be $6 \frac{3}{5}$ feet in diameter; it will, therefore, be much more comfortable than the one which Beebe employed. I have made several tests with a model $7 \frac{1}{3}$ " in diameter. I placed this steel sphere, which was approximately .137" thick, in a cylinder where I could produce pressures that correspond to a depth of 36,300 feet. There was no noticeable change in shape. The model was made of two hemispheres coupled together; the joint was covered with a ring of rubber cut from an automobile tire. This joint proved so satisfactory that I am planning to use gum-rubber to waterproof the openings in my sphere. The portholes will be of conical design; a thick glass (or quartz) plate will fit into the truncated cone, the interior surface of which will be lined with rubber.

"The problem of breathing was solved long ago. In my stratospheric cabin I had no difficulty in controlling the air-regenerating apparatus.

"As for the lighting, I do not believe that the best results can be obtained from a projector contained within the sphere. While water is transparent, it allows for little more visibility than a dense fog. You know that an automobile headlight does not pierce the fog but seems to form a white wall. To overcome this effect, I intend to employ two high-pressure mercury-vapor lamps attached to the outside of the sphere by means of a long metallic arm.

"My sphere, with its buoy and its ballast, will descend slowly in the water, moving with the natural currents. I will be able to stop several times on my way down merely by dropping some of my ballast. Whenever I wish to continue my descent, I will let a little water enter the sphere by means of a specially constructed valve. Sixteen and a half feet from the bottom a cable which trails from the cabin, will touch ground. As the sphere travels along, the end of the cable will continue to hug the bottom, thus automatically assuring the equilibrium of the cabin. And since the sphere will be moving with the current, it will stand an excellent chance of passing unobserved by the sub marine fauna. Anyone who has been up both in a free balloon and a captive balloon will certainly appreciate the difference between the conditions encountered. The former makes you feel that you are in tranquil atmosphere; whereas the latter is subjected to extremely disagreeable swaying and to the buffeting of the winds.

"Considerations of security take precedence over all others. I will have to be able to seal the porthole automatically in case of a leak, to drop ballast at will, and to drop all attachments which protrude from the surface of the sphere in case I should find my ascent impeded by sub-marine growths. And all these operations will have to be performed from the inside.

"A solution to all these problems is to be found in the use of magnetism. The port-hole lid will be kept open by means of a magnet and will close automatically by spring action when this is demagnetized.

"The ballast will be contained in a sort of funnel attached to the bottom of the sphere. It will consist of iron granules. A weak current sent through a coil which surrounds the lower extremity of the funnel will suffice to magnetize the granules so that they will form a solid mass. If I cut off the current, the ballast will slowly fall away; the approximate rate is 110 pounds per minute. The moment I turn the current on again, the process will stop. The entire funnel can be detached by the same method used to close the port-holes. The lamp and its support and the guide-rope can be abandoned in a similar manner.

"The one problem that still remains is that of communication with the external world. The vibration of a quartz-crystal under the effect of variable electrical tension is perfectly transmitted by water. Impinging on the quartz receiving-sets of ships, these elastic vibrations are again transformed into electrical vibrations which can be easily amplified. The one difficulty is that their range may not be great enough. So in addition to this, I intend to arm myself with a telescopic antenna, with which I can send out signals when I arrive at the surface. I can further indicate my position by releasing rockets or by coloring the water over an area of 39 sq. miles with a solution of fluorescence. Any airplane which sets out in search of me will be bound to find me."

"However," the Professor continued, "if my efforts are successful, I shall be glad to accompany, in the role of amateur and pilot, the first biological mission who will entrust themselves to my submarine sphere."

CONSTIPATION—Some Cures

(From Our Medical Correspondent)

When you get up in the morning, drink a large glass of water, hot or cold, before you take any food. Then you must go through a few simple exercises for five or ten minutes.

The best exercises for this purpose are those which compress the abdomen. Stand with the hands above the head as though about to dive, then bend at the hips until the fingers touch the toes, or get as near as you can manage without losing your temper.

How to Eat

Another good exercise is to stand with the hands well pressed into the sides just below the ribs and bend from side to side. Or, again try this. Lie flat on your back and raise the heels off the ground with the knees kept stiff. The object of all these movements is to massage the liver and bowels and to encourage their action.

Always eat very slowly; be the last to finish. Eat any good food; there is no reason to be faddy. Avoid pastry, muffins, new bread and stodgy puddings. Eat plenty of fresh fruit, brown bread and porridge.

Excessive tea-drinking is a common cause of indigestion. The chief offenders are women. Try cocoa instead at some of your meals. The more exercise you get in the fresh air the better.

Conversely, sitting on an office stool all day in a stuffy atmosphere is the worst thing for this complaint.

Importance of Fluid

Drink water again at night. A liberal amount of liquid should be taken during the day. Many of you are ill merely because you do not imbibe enough fluid.

Regularity is of the highest importance. You must select a special hour for the action of the bowels and keep to it with strict discipline.

Security of the Small Salary

Dr. Cadman was approached by an agonized lad, who had just been hired as a "junior executive" at $15 per week. . . "Doctor," asked the anxious chap, "can I lead a good Christian life in New York City on $15 per week?" . . . "My boy," was the soothing reply, "that's all you can do."

THE GREAT SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF THE BERGERET LABORATORIES.

Progress in clinical medicine is gist; but, whoever or whatever he is, he dependent on progress in the ancillary must see the necessity of applying sciences, physiology, pharmacology, etc., scientifically-established facts to human new discoveries in pure science are the needs.

stuff on which clinical progress feeds. But between the discovery in pure science and its application to medicine, there must be an investigator. He may be a physician, a chemist, a bacteriolo-

When a clinical application has been found for a scientific discovery, the work has just begun. A method must be worked out by which a chemical process or a biological technique employed in the experimental laboratory can be applied in production operations. And a practical method of clinical administration must be worked out, for an effective remedy cannot be reserved for a few selected patients—it must be made available to thousands. Moreover, the first crude product, perhaps eagerly sought because of the imperative need for it, must be improved and refined so that its efficacy may be increased and its field of usefulness broadened.

The Discovery of Endophon.

The year 1931 saw the discovery of ENDOPHON. It was made possible only by preceding research. Dr. Gustave LeClerc, a chemist on the consulting staff was the first to discover the activity of certain glands. Dr. Louis Perrancourt, also on the consulting staff, was likewise working on the problem. He completed his work shortly after Le Clerc's discovery, and assigned to the preparation its correct formula.

The discovery of ENDOPHON marked a new era in Glandular Therapy. Recently, a new Gland Extract has been discovered and embodied in ENDOPHON, greatly increasing its curative efficacy.

Reported in Eighteen Medical Papers.

A striking example of the achievements of the Bergeret Laboratories is illustrated in the work which led to the discovery of ENDOPHON. The course of this work was reported in eighteen medical papers.

Policy of the Bergeret Laboratories.

It has always been the policy of the Bergeret Laboratories never to offer a product to the world until it has been first subjected to the most exhaustive tests. Therefore; you may be sure that not only has a Bergeret Product been standardised, and made to conform to the highest degree of purity, and that the utmost demands of science have been utilized in its manufacture, but also that its therapeutic value has been demonstrated beyond any question of doubt.

Research Laboratory

The Great Criterion.

ENDOPHON is made in Capsule form—the great criterion in curative power, as the freshness and potency of the vital gland substances is preserved. There is no deterioration. Available in two kinds, No. 1 for Partial Impotence and No. 2 for Complete Impotence and Sterility.

The Dangers of Vaccination

By Dr. Joseph Roy

From La Revue Hebdomadaire, Paris.

The advocates of vaccination present it as an unmixed blessing established conclusively by years of experience. They even demand that the State make it compulsory for all its subjects. On the one hand, the public is told that vaccines are absolutely harmless, quite incapable of producing any untoward reaction in the body. On the other hand it is maintained that they have the power to produce an immunity in the system similar to that which follows convalescence from a serious illness—and this without affecting the vitality of the body. I will not attempt to argue from common sense which rebels against such a flagrant contradiction. I will base my argument on the results of biological research.

Articles by Leon Daudet and the book of Chavanon, "On peut tuer ton enfant" (They Can Kill Your Child), have already brought to the attention of the public the dire and even fatal consequences produced by anatoxin—a vaccine that is the particular object of their attack because it has been made compulsory by law. Daudet and Chavanon are two medical men whose writings on the subject serve solely to publicize the testimony of their colleagues. There have been fatal cases of inflammation of the brain resulting from Jennerian vaccination against smallpox. As a result of such mishaps the Dutch Government have revoked the law that made vaccination against smallpox obligatory.

But vaccination brings with it graver though more remote dangers than its immediate after-effects. These arise from the nature of the microbes that are injected into the blood-stream.

It is commonly assumed that the microbes contained in the vaccines have been destroyed by the antiseptics and heating process to which they have been subjected. Or it is argued that they have been weakened to such an extent that they have become passive bodies which the organism eliminates without difficulty. The only trace that they are supposed to leave behind is the immunity that the human body has developed as a result of its easy victory over them.

This whole line of reasoning is based on the assumption that the life process of microbes is analogous to that of higher organisms.

Microbes, however, behave in a manner radically different from the higher forms of life: their ability to lie dormant and come to life again seems to be one of the fundamental characteristics of their existence. No comparison is possible with vegetable life, which becomes dormant only to the extent that the flow of sap and the foliage disappear due to the cold and darkness of the winter season. It can even be said that latency and invisibility make up the normal state of existence of microbes. The rare periods when they come to life—during epidemics—are connected with certain widely prevalent conditions of great irregularity.

The momentary inertia of the microbes in the vaccines, their incapacity to multiply at a given time, does not mean that they are definitely dead or even seriously weakened. The fact that they are latent is no guarantee that they will not revive after a period of years without losing an iota of their harmfulness.

In the case of syphilis, for example, the treponema, after causing disorders of a superficial sort, becomes dormant over a period of ten, twenty or even more years. And then the disease suddenly springs to life again in the form of general paralysis or a belated hereditary syphilis.

The great French bacteriologist, Charles Nicolle, has written a very important book on the mysterious vitality of microbes. D'Herelle, who was responsible for the development of bacteriophage, has carried out a series of experiments that demonstrate the powers of latency and revival of microbes.

The bacteriophage is a small body, visible only under an ultramicroscope, which penetrates into microbes and disintegrates them. In a culture fluid the swarming of the microbes can be detected with the naked eye by the agitated and opaque appearance of the liquid. If bacteriophages are introduced into it, the liquid begins to clear and becomes limpid. Under the microscope as well as to the naked eye it appears that the microbes have been destroyed. If test-tubes containing this clear fluid are retained for some time, it will once again become agitated (without doubt under the influence of cosmic forces.) The microbes have come to life once again.

D'Herelle has also proved that the bacteriophage brings about the transmutation of microbes of a given family to those of another which would produce the transformation of one disease into another. Invisible, filtrable viruses are also created in this way. These viruses are responsible for the most dangerous diseases.

In a paper presented to the Academie des Sciences in 1927. D'Herelle and Peyre described the role played by the destruction and transmutation of microbes by bacteriophages in the development of cancer.

During their study of the various viruses that produce cancer when used as an inoculant on animals and plants, D'Herelle and Peyre discovered that a mixed culture of staphylococcus and bacteriophage was cancer-forming. This meant that pus microbes could be transformed into cancer microbes through intervention of a phenomenon that physicians had long observed: the replacement of acute infections by chronic infections of a hidden, but more dangerous character, i.e., the change from pus to cancer, the penetration of the disease into the cell structure of the body. Such is the deceptive immunity caused by vaccination.

We ought also to mention the effects of anti-diphtheric anatoxin which has been made compulsory by law. Professor Mouriquand of Lyons has proved that this anatoxin produces a hereditary infection. (Report of the Societe de Biologie de Lyons, June 20 1938). The experiments of Mouriquand prove that the diphtheria anatoxin has a harmful and hereditary effect on the formation and regeneration of the blood in the marrow of the bones—one of the fundamental processes of life. Serious changes in the blood have been observed in guinea pigs vaccinated with diphtheria anatoxin. The same disorders could be found in the blood stream of guinea pigs, not vaccinated themselves, but whose mothers had been treated with diphtheria anatoxin.

The First Lesson

"My sixteen-year-old boy," a proud father told us, "works in a restaurant near the high school for his luncheon. Saturdays he helps a groceryman make deliveries. His mother scolds me for letting the boy work so hard and causing him to miss what she calls the higher things of life. I have a hard time explaining to her that when he works an hour to earn one meal, he is learning one of the greatest of all lessons, the lesson of giving before receiving."

- (1) The Faculty of Medicine of Paris, after clinical trials has pronounced ENDOPHON to be the only efficacious Glandular preparation.
- (2) Numerous letters have been received from the Medical Profession, testifying to its marvellous curative efficacy.

These are your assurances that ENDOPHON is a genuine remedy. A trial three bottles will afford convincing proof of its efficacy, by the benefit received.

ENDOPHON is a true physiological restorative in lowered virility of functional origin, being prepared from fresh Glandular Substances, obtained from the glands of healthy bulls. It supplies the enfeebled, worn-out glands of the sexual organ with those essential restorative substances, with the result that Impotence is soon replaced with Perfect Virility.

ENDOPHON changes a Weak Impotent man, lacking Manly Power and Competence, into a Virile Man, with full sexual Vigour and ability.

Those men who are sexually weak and cannot have a proper union, should take ENDOPHON. It is 'different' to other preparations for Impotence, as it does not give mere temporary benefit, but cures permanently, by its direct restorative action on the sexual organ. PREMATURE EJACULATION gives place to perfect normal union with ejaculation occurring after—not before full indulgence. FEEBLE PARTIAL ERECTION is replaced with erection, full and regular and COMPLETE IMPOTENCE is replaced with natural "feeling" and full ability. ENDOPHON creates a healthy, sexual system.

THE VIRILITY OF MANKIND

What Medical Science has accomplished.

By a Doctor.

How to maintain the virility of mankind? This knotty problem has engaged the attention of many famous scientists.

The chief causes of sexual weakness is the vicious habit of masturbation, sexual excesses, prolonged and frequent sexual excitement, which have been proved detrimental in the extreme. The sexual system is deprived of sufficient rest and recuperation and gradually loses its wonted energy. Other causes are excessive exercise, sedentary life, and excessive drinking.

Several attempts have been made to arrive at a formula which would bring about successful results. Commencing from the experiments of Brown Sequard in 1889 down to the recent findings of Dr. Serge Voronoff, the famous Russian Surgeon, it is a long history of laborious investigations by men of outstanding ability who dedicated their lives to the cause of medical progress and the alleviation of human misery.

The outcome of these extensive experiments and research established Gland treatment by the mouth, as best and most rational in the cure of Sexual weakness.

A very important factor in successful gland treatment is FRESHNESS of the vital Gland Substances. It is necessary that they are prepared in gelatine capsule form, to ensure freshness and maximum curative efficacy. Gland Substances in tablet or liquid form quickly deteriorate and become inert and worthless.

Note:—The best treatment is ENDOPHON — a product of the great Bergeret Laboratories, France, and the finest Gland preparation on the market. It is made in CAPSULE FORM and sold in two different kinds. No. 1 for Partial Impotence, and No. 2 for Complete Impotence and Sterility.

ENDOPHON is recommended for under-sexed men (deficient virility). It gives increased virility with greater retentive power.

It is also recommended as a wise safeguard against sexual weakness. If a few doses is taken each time, before or after sexual intercourse, the well-being of the organ will be maintained. This precautionary measure is especially advised to those men whose sexual ability is not quite normal.

ENDOPHON is non-injurious, and can be taken any time. Its action is beneficial and restorative,—not stimulating. It tones, strengthens, and maintains the healthy condition of the organ.

ENDOPHON is warranted free from all substances against the Hindu or Muslim religion.

ENDOPHON GLANDULAR EXTRACT

NOTE:—It has been conclusively proved that the only rational cure for Impotence is Glandular Treatment. This is strongly recommended by Dr. Marie Stopes in her book "Enduring Passion"

Treatment, in order to be successful, should be carried out regularly. Efficacy of the Gland Substances depends on FRESHNESS. It is important that they are, when taken, perfectly fresh. This difficulty has been overcome, as ENDOPHON is now made by the manufacturers in CAPSULE FORM, which fully preserves the freshness and potency of the vital Gland Substances.

Glandular Substances in tablet or liquid form lose freshness in a short time, and become stale and ineffective as a treatment for Impotence.

Treatment of Chronic Gonorrhea in the Male.

According to Dr. F. A. Lafonte (Gazette Med. France) gonorrhea in the male becomes chronic when the acute symptoms have subsided and there persists a slight or moderate discharge which contains gonococci.

Chronic gonorrhea implies that the previously generalized inflammation has become more or less localised to areas of erosions or ulceration of the urethral mucosa or to inflammation of the glandular structures or membranes in or about the urethra.

In cases of chronic gonorrhea the best treatment is a mixture and an Injection. Abortive treatment will aggravate the urethra and bring about complications.

"505" is the best treatment for chronic gonorrhea. The Mixture taken internally controls such distressing symptoms as pain, burning on urination, strangury and frequency. It does not upset the stomach. The Injection heals the ulcerations of the urethral mucosa or inflammation of the glandular structures and membranes in or about the urethra.

Gonorrheal Urethritis in the Female.

The urethra is by far the most common seat of primary infection in the female. The cervix is next in frequency. In children the vagina is chiefly involved. The female urethra is a straight short tube about $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches in length and can readily be inspected endoscopically but instrumentation is contraindicated in acute cases. Its internal sphincter usually acts as a barrier to upward extension into the bladder.

Acute gonorrheal urethritis seldom comes under observation. The discharge which occurs is usually interpreted as being due to "catching-cold" or it is erroneously explained as a "leucorrhea" which has become worse. Or some times it is interpreted as "bladder" trouble. Injections and instrumentation are not to be used in the acute stage. The patient should secure rest in bed and mild permanganate douches may be prescribed. Internal medication with balsamics, like "505" mixture will insure relief from the distressing "bladder" symptoms.

The disease tends to become chronic because the infection penetrates into the deeper glandular structures especially in those glands situated near the external urinary meatus. On endoscopy the prominent and swollen openings of these glands may be seen. By stripping the urethra with the finger in the vagina a drop of pus may be expressed. The urethra itself feels like a hard cord. Sometimes on endoscopic examination one may also observe a diverticulum of the urethra which in addition to the infected glands may also act as foci of infection. These foci may be the cause of gonorrheal arthritis.

Ancient Medicine IN JAPAN

Our knowledge of ancient Japanese medicine dates back to the so-called Mythical Period of Antiquity which ends with 96 B.C. Disease at this time was believed to be caused by angry gods, malign spirits and demons. The spirit of a dead person was thought to visit its wrath on the living causing illness. Also disease was brought down on the heads of mortals as a result of or punishment for their indiscretions, such as unchastity, evil-mindedness or carelessness.

The weapons of defense against disease caused by the evil spirits were much the same as those employed by ancient peoples in other parts of the world; prayers, magical chants, exorcisms, sacrifices, and the work of two benign gods, Onamujino-Mikoto and Sukunabikona-no-Mikoto, who united their strength to combat disease. Surgery was undeveloped. Burns were painted with the juice of certain muscles, sawdust was applied to wounds, and blood-letting was occasionally practiced. Cauterization and medicinals belong to a later period, the most important of which appeared to be Glycyrrhiza Glabra (Amaki); Magnolia hyolanka (Hohokashiwa); Rheum undulatum (Ohoshi); and Panax Ginseng (Nikota). The vehicle was rice-wine.

Scientific Japanese medicine of ancient times dates back to and is no doubt derived from the Chinese with whom Japan had intercourse in 1500 B.C., and from whom they also absorbed art, science and culture. About 550 A.D. Buddhism was brought to Japan from Korea and slowly gained a foothold with the people. Buddhist priests began to practice medicine, and here we see as in ancient Greece, Egypt, Persia, Arabia and America, the same inter-relationship between medicine and religion, the priest-physician. About 600 A.D., numerous young men were sent from Japan to China to study medicine.

It was in this period that massage, acupuncture and cauterization were in favour in Japan. The cautery iron was the chief instrument of the surgeon with which he treated infected wounds and dog bites. About 700 A.D. the Emperor Mommu established a Code of Laws regulating education and medicine. The medical schools were divided into specialty branches headed by full time teachers. The courses were, in the main, internal medicine; pediatrics and surgery; massage, acupuncture; ear, eye mouth and teeth; and exorcism. The government stood the expense of education and examination were given monthly by the teachers of the faculty and once a year by the medical department of the government.

Later the European influence was felt in Japanese medicine through the Dutch who had intercourse with Japan as they travelled for the Dutch East India Company; and from Portuguese missionaries who obtained a foothold in this little country, introducing Christianity and charity hospitals.

Japan, eager and quick to learn, adding her own skill and patient research to knowledge acquired, has given to the world roster of scientists men like Shiga, discoverer of the bacillus of dysentery; Kitasato, discoverer of the plague bacillus; Noguchi, that intrepid worker who obtained pure cultures of Treponema pallidum and uncovered Leptospira icteroides of infections yellow jaundice in his search for the cause of yellow fever; Hate, who with Erlich developed salvarsan; Suzuki and Miyairi, discoverers of Schistosoma japonicum and its intermediary host; Yamagiwa, who was the first to produce primary cancer by coal tar applications; and so on ad infinitum.

In ten cases of Partial Impotence with premature ejaculation and feeble erectile power treated with Endophon by the Clinique Scientifique Leon D'Arbes, Paris, two cases showed great improvement after three weeks treatment, three cases after five weeks treatment and four cases after nine weeks treatment. These nine cases was cured after four months treatment. Only one case resisted treatment until after five months, when it suddenly responded to the treatment. In this exceptional case, a thorough cure was effected after six and a half months treatment.

Endophon is three times as potent as the best of other glandular preparations. Clinical experience with Endophon has demonstrated not only that it is an unusually potent product, but that its use has no ill-effects.

The Confidence Drug

We have heard a great deal during the last year or two of a new drug, benzedrine. It has attained an immense degree of notoriety in the daily Press, where its unusual properties of stimulation have earned for it the name of "the confidence drug." The same Press, having encouraged and broadcast—to an extent which has led to its use by thousands of tired business men, anxious students and bored housewives—these remarkable claims of the drug's power to eliminate depression and increase intelligence then clamored for the legislative restriction of its sale. It is now on the list of scheduled poisons, and can only be obtained with a doctor's prescription.

The discovery of the drug was the result of a search for chemical compounds which would have an action similar to that of adrenaline, but without the disadvantages associated with the use of this hormone. Adrenaline is a substance normally produced by two small glands, the adrenals, situated on the kidneys. It is secreted during periods of stress and emotion when it is poured into the blood stream, its effect being to render the body more capable of meeting such emergencies. Thus, the circulation of blood in the muscles of the limbs is improved, both by an increase in the heart rate and by closing down of many of the blood vessels of such easily dispersable areas as the digestive tract. The effort of the breathing is made easier by a dilation of the air passages. There is also a rise in the sugar of the blood, so that more is available as an energy source for the activity of the body.

It is frequently useful to be able to obtain these effects in the treatment of various maladies. For example, adrenaline gives rapid and enormous relief in an attack of asthma, by virtue of its action of dilating the air passages. Its most dramatic use is seen when it is injected into the circulation or even directly into the heart, when it ceased beating, for example, under an anæsthetic. Many persons have literally been brought back to life by the restoration of the circulation in this way. In conditions such as these, where an immediate response is desired, adrenaline is an immensely useful substance, but when a prolonged effect is desired, it is of no value. Moreover, it has no action when taken by mouth, since it is destroyed in the stomach. It has, therefore to be injected, and this naturally limits its usefulness.

Apart from these general actions, adrenaline has an important local action in constricting the blood vessels. It is used in this way as a spray to relieve congestion in nasal catarrh or during an attack of hay fever.

A valuable drug of the adrenaline type was found in ephedrine, isolated from a Chinese seaweed. It can be taken by mouth, and produces its effect in about half an hour. It has also been used as a spray in a similar way to adrenaline, and here, too, its action is slower, but more prolonged than that of adrenaline. Adrenaline and ephedrine are related chemically, and can be synthesized in the laboratory.

In 1930 a new substance was reported with the name beta-phenylisopropylamine, more generally known by its trade name, benzedrine.

Used locally, the new drug showed several distinct advantages over both adrenaline and ephedrine. These latter substances are not volatile while benzedrine is, so that when breathed into the nostril it can pass to all parts of the lining membranes of the nose and throat. It was found, too, that benzedrine has a second advantage. The constriction of the blood vessels, which results in the relief of the congestion, is followed, when adrenaline or ephedrine is used, by a reactionary dilation of these vessels. The relief obtained is, therefore, only temporary, and often the final condition of the nasal passages is worse than the original. This reaction is not found when benzedrine is used, so that the relief experienced from its use is more lasting. Some conditions for which inhalations of benzedrine have been successfully used are the common cold, infections of the sinuses and attacks of hay fever and asthma.

When taken internally, the drug has a variety of effects. Like adrenaline and ephedrine, benzedrine causes a rise of blood pressure which is more prolonged than with these older drugs. It has therefore, been given with marked success, to patients with low blood pressure, who are subject to fainting attacks. The rise of blood pressure which benzedrine produces has the disadvantage that it renders the drug unsuitable for patients who have a dangerously high blood pressure already.

In many individuals benzedrine produces a loss of weight, and some doctors have used it in the treatment of obesity. Another interesting use of the drug is in certain cases of sea sickness. It appears that certain people are subject to sea sickness because of the excessive activity of one part of their involuntary nervous system, the parasympathetic. Adrenaline stimulates the opposing nervous system, the sympathetic, so that adrenaline and drugs with a similar action are able to counteract the too energetic parasympathetic system in such individuals. The use of benzedrine has accordingly been attempted in the treatment of sea sickness in these cases, and the results have been very promising.

The action on the brain and nervous system is one of stimulation. It produces a sensation of increased well-being and a relief from fatigue. There is a feeling of increased mental and physical energy and the individual often describes himself as "full of pep." These facts led to the use of benzedrine in conditions of fatigue, sleepiness and depression, and in many cases striking improvement was observed. Some of the best results were seen in the treatment of narcolepsy, a disease in which the patient may have attacks either of irresistible sleep, or of suddenly losing the use of his limbs and falling limply to the ground. In most cases these attacks ceased entirely when benzedrine was taken—patients who were having as many as eight or ten attacks of falling asleep in one day were completely cured.

In normal people, the general effects of benzedrine, as has already been noted, are those of stimulation. There is a feeling of increased confidence and exhilaration, thought processes are accelerated and the individual becomes restless and talkative. The total results may be highly gratifying, as during an interview where fluent talking, quick thinking and a confident manner produce an excellent impression. On the other hand, the effects may be disconcerting: a junior official in a hospital was severely taken to task for his jovial manner and loquaciousness when speaking on the telephone to a superior officer.

Intelligence tests, worked out by psychologists, have shown an increased score achieved by persons after taking benzedrine. With regard to these tests, however, we must realize that the improved performance at laboratory trials is not really the result of an increase of native intelligence but rather the result of increased rapidity of thought. It is certain that no fundamental alteration in intelligence occurs, such as would make an individual capable of performances otherwise completely beyond his power.

The effects of benzedrine which we have so far described are desirable ones, and it was early seen that there was a possibility of persons becoming addicted to the use of the new drug. Surprisingly, however, in view of its stimulant action, and disappointingly so far as the outcry in the Press is concerned, there have been very few reports indeed of benzedrine addiction.

There are two important reasons for this. In the first place, it is found that the general stimulating effect on the normal individual appears to be lost after a few weeks or a month. Secondly, and more important, the results of taking the drug are not entirely beneficial, for there are many unpleasant side effects. Its action in combating sleepiness, so useful in treating the condition of narcolepsy, may result in normal individuals in severe insomnia. The quickened thought and increase in energy may readily become, in certain individuals, unpleasant restlessness and irritability. Palpitations and headaches are not uncommon, and often there is uncomfortable flushing and perspiration. In a very few cases severe symptoms may occur, such as vomiting and collapse, but this is usually due to excessively large doses of the drug.

On the whole, then, we may consider that the danger from addiction is not very great. The restriction of the sale of benzedrine, however, is justified by the fact that, although extremely valuable in certain conditions under medical supervision, it is a drug with very varied actions and often with many unpleasant results.

Lime Juice and Health

Lime juice is beneficial for the health in many ways. The juice of a lime taken first thing in the morning, in a tumbler of hot or cold water without sugar is a splendid remedy for indigestion, spots and other complexion troubles.

Repeat the dose at night if necessary.

If you have a sore throat gargle with juice and warm water. If you are troubled with a cough, heat the juice of a lime and mix it with two teaspoonfuls of honey. It will relieve the soreness at the back of the throat.

Lime juice, diluted with boiling water and well sweetened with honey or sugar, taken last thing at night is excellent in cases of chills, colds, influenza and feverishness.

Bruno Mussolini is amused!

Power-loving individuals are not all of the orator type. There are men of quite a different kind, whose love of power has been fed by control over mechanism. Take, for example, Bruno Mussolini's account of his exploits from the air in the Abyssinian war.

We had set fire to the wooded hills, to the fields and little villages It was all most diverting The bombs hardly touched the earth before they burst out into white smoke and an enormous flame and the dry grass began to burn. I thought of the animals. God, how they ran After the bomb-racks were emptied, I began throwing bombs by hand It was most amusing: a big Zariba surrounded by tall trees was not easy to hit. I had to aim carefully at the straw roof and only succeeded at the third shot. The wretches who were inside, seeing their roof burning, jumped out and ran off like mad.

"Surrounded by a circle of fire about five thousand Abyssinians came to a sticky end. It was like hell.

While the orator needs much intuitive psychology for his success, the aviator of Bruno Mussolini's type can get his pleasure with no more psychology than is involved in knowing that it is unpleasant to burn to death. The orator is an ancient type; the man whose power is based on mechanism is modern. Not wholly read, for example, how Carthaginian elephants were used, at the end of the first Punic War, to trample mutinous mercenaries to death where the psychology, though not the science, is the same as Bruno Mussolini's. But speaking comparatively, mechanical power is more characteristic of our age than of any previous time.

First Rule for Reducing

You can use sound, tried psychological laws and principles to reduce. Only you must have the requisite courage to change your habits of eating—and that's difficult.

The first law is this: Learn to dislike fattening foods you already like and learn to like non-fattening foods. This is the soundest, most sensible and best approach to the problem.

Why Cook Vegetables?

By Eleanour Sinclair Rohde

From The Countryman, Idbury, Oxfordshire

How very old to cook vegetables! Raw vegetables (properly prepared, of course) are more digestible, more appetizing and far more health-giving than dead stuff deprived of nearly all its best qualities. Certain vegetables, notably peas and beans, artichokes and starchy vegetables such as potatoes and parsnips have to be cooked, but why cook cauliflowers, any of the green vegetables, or roots?

And then there is the question of time. Any experienced person knows that to cook vegetables well is a lengthy and more laborious process than cooking meat or fish. That is why cooks delegate vegetables to the kitchen-maid. The servant problem is a serious one, yet there are countless houses where the already overworked mistress adds unnecessarily to her labors by cooking vegetables which require no cooking and are far better in every way eaten raw. A slave to convention, she cleans, and then, in the case of root vegetables, peels diligently. Having deprived the roots of all their best salts, for these lie in and under the skin, she next proceeds to boil them, thereby making matters still worse. Green vegetables are still usually boiled in large quantities of water in spite of the fact that the salts of all green vegetables are soluble. Further, boiled greens are extremely indigestible, and their taste unless well disguised is just horrid and sloppy. Thousands of people eat boiled cabbage and similar horrors from a sense of duty. They cannot possibly like such stuff, and no wonder it is difficult to persuade children to eat the vegetables put before them. The maltreated vegetables are merely what dietitians call roughage, but it is so well disguised in expensive restaurants that most people do not realize they are eating rubbish. Eat root vegetables and greens raw and you will wonder why you ever tolerated the nonsense of cooking them.

Take, for instance, the vegetables in season now. Broccoli, like cauliflowers or for that matter any of the numerous edible flowers, are most wholesome and perfectly digestible if eaten raw. Cooked, they taste what they are, dead; and they are notoriously indigestible. To prepare these heads to perfection, gather them not a moment before they are required and wash them well, first in salted and then fresh water. Then grate as finely as possible. Graters can be bought at any of the cheap stores for five cents. Broccoli and cauliflowers grate to a powdery consistency. Fill cup-like lettuce leaves, or orange skins cut in half, with the grated vegetable and cover with mayonnaise sauce. Or mix the vegetable with finely chopped herbs such as sweet marjoram, thyme, a very little sage, lovage, chives and so forth.

Brussels sprouts, firm savoy and cabbages also grate to a powdery yet moist consistency. There are special machines for mincing vegetables finely, and it is sometimes easier to use them minced than to grate by hand. We usually find it necessary to put greens twice through a mincer. Carrots grated raw, especially mature specimens, which are sweet, are delicious. They should never be peeled. Turnips also are good when grated but, unlike carrots, usually have to be peeled. Incidentally, town-folk seem to like young root vegetables, another of their odd likes, for these immature roots are poor in flavor and as unwholesome as unripe fruits.

The rarely grown Hamburg parsley, which makes large edible roots; grates to the same consistency as ground nuts and has a delicious nutty flavor. Onions grate well, but they can be used only as a flavoring in a dish of mixed vegetables as the flavor is so strong. Cucumber and vegetable marrow grate and help to moisten rather dry roots such as radishes.

Mixed raw vegetables make a more interesting dish than vegetables served separately. Green and root vegetables blend admirably and the greater the mixture the better. Failing mayonnaise sauce, a little cream is a good addition. There are numerous methods of serving grated raw vegetables but they look best, I think, as I have said, served in individual portions in small lettuce leaves, or in orange skins, halved or even in tiny ornamental gourds with the pulp scooped out. We find that all mixtures are greatly improved by a judicious addition of herbs, especially sweet herbs such as lavender—it is odd how few people realize that the leaves are edible—rosemary, sweet cicely, lovage, southernwood, angelica leaf, dill and thyme.
