The Miracle of Psychic Surgery

By Dr. Henry C. Link

Some years ago a Portuguese doctor, Egas Moniz, decided to operate on the brains of people suffering from fears and worries. He deliberately destroyed large segments of the brain tissue in the higher brain centers, with successful results. Miraculous improvements in personality were effected. This operation, popularly known as psychic surgery, constitutes one of the greatest discoveries in the history of man.

Following Dr. Moniz, a considerable number of American surgeons have developed this operation with brilliant results. The brain tissue destroyed was always in the frontal lobes of the brain, that is the higher brain centers, the seat of reason and imagination. The nerve fibers or mental pathways were cut in as many as twelve areas each a half inch in diameter.

A woman, who had been confined to bed with day and night nurses for a year, with extreme fears of all kinds soon after this operation was able to take care of her own household, drive a car and entertain people. When she went to the theater, she was for the first time able to enjoy the play and was not distracted by her distress over how her hair looked in back and other trifles of dress.

A bookkeeper of fifty-nine, bedridden for eight months, with a nervous breakdown, obsessed by a fear of poisoning, given to spells of weeping, and finally confined in a hospital with day and night nurses, after the operation lost all these symptoms. A man who had been a failure in business, after such an operation became a very successful salesman and later salesmanager. His wife reported that he made a much better husband after part of his brain had been removed. He did not find fault so much with details and stopped worrying about household affairs. He also developed a lack of self-consciousness and experienced no embarrassment if he made mistakes or received rebuffs. Tests of his intellectual processes, however, showed that these were of a continually lower order as evidenced by an increasing lack of discrimination.

Twenty-one such operations were reported in connection with the meeting of the American Medical Association last year. Most of them were immediately successful in wholly or partly eliminating such symptoms as excessive fears, worries, insomnia, delusions, crying spells, nervous indigestion, panic states, hysterical paralysis, etc. After destroying a good part of the higher brain centers, those which specialize in bodily action, were given great scope. The patients became at once more active physically. Usually there was a slowing down of the higher thought processes, the reasoning power, but patients considered this loss more than compensated for by a happier and more active life. The results of psychic surgery over a period of years are not yet known and many surgeons are still sceptical. Regardless of the final outcome, the present results are of major significance.

They are in perfect accord with the findings of psychologists that the intellect and imagination often become the chief enemies of personality; that thinking and analysis practised at the expense of energy-consuming action are the great source of fears; that the lower brain centers, those which specialize in bodily action, are just as important as the higher centers of thought, times even more important. surgery proves that certain people be better off with less brains. I firmly what I have told so many people not yet in need of an operation, that in their quest for happiness they should use their heads less and their feet more.

The Best Treatment

BY A DOCTOR.

Gonorrhea is on the increase. In fact, the latest world statistics suggest that four out of five persons in capitals, like London and New York are stricken with the disease.

The common fallacy that it is no worse than a bad cold is exploded. It is now recognised by clinical and pathological evidence as a dangerous disease with serious complications. Therefore, it should never be neglected.

Gonorrhea is an infective process due to the action of a specific micro-organism known as Gonococcus. It is characterized by a discharge of pus through the urethra. The primary lesion is an acute catarrhal inflammation of the anterior portion of the urethra. It quickly runs to suppuration, and if neglected, it attacks the bladder and weakens it, causing bladder trouble, then the prostate gland, and passing through the sub-acute and acute stages, penetrates the circulation and organic parenchymata, producing complications like stricture, epididymitis, gonorrhoeal rheumatism, vesiculitis, prostatitis, orchitis (swollen testicles) pyelitis, etc; and sometimes causes Impotence.

The symptoms of the disease usually start within 5 to 10 days after infection.

The patient may get some slight itching of the meatus and a burning sensation while passing urine. The lips of the meatus are congested and swollen. Gradually a serious discharge appears which though thin and mucoid in the beginning, soon becomes thick and yellow. There is sometimes a dragging pain in the back and some slight constitutional disturbances such as fever.

Occasionally the swelling inside the urethra is so great, that there is an hindrance in the flow of urine and on exertion haemorrhage occurs. The first attack is always more troublesome than the subsequent ones, though it responds easier to treatment. When this disease reaches the chronic stage it needs prolonged treatment.

The best treatment in all cases of Gonorrhea and Gleet (Chronic 'G') is "505" Mixture and Injection. It is endorsed by the medical profession and widely used in hospitals and private clinics in France. The Injection soothes and heals the inflammation of the anterior portion of the urethra, and stops the discharge within a week. The Mixture, taken internally, removes symptoms such as pain, burning sensation after urination and eradicates the Gonococcus (Gonorrhea germs) from the system. The cure is complete and permanent.

"505" is prepared to the formula of Dr Edouard Pavy, the famous French Specialist in venereal disease.

Dr Pavy's formula is considered the best and is the result of five hundred and five experiments on patients suffering from the disease. The 505th experiment proved the most effective. These experiments were carried out during a period of eighteen years. The fruits of his prolonged labour in the cause of science is a complete and permanent cure for "G" and its complications.

"505" is manufactured for England and the British Empire by Howard Lloyd & Sons, Ltd. Leicester, England.

Health & Hygiene.

Duration of Sex Life in Man

How long does the male sex life last? We know much about the sex life and its curves in the female. Here are some interesting facts about the male.

Upon the question of the duration of sex life in the male, writes Dr. Bowers in Sex Science, there is a wide divergence of opinion. In the strict acceptance of the term we must concede that the "sex life" really begins and ends with the physical life of the individual.

In fact, the generative organs begin to function even before the birth of the child. The internal secretions of these organs, circulating in the bloodstream of the embryo, undoubtedly influence all the various cells of the body.

They modify the growth, shape and physical characteristics of the structures of the body—from the bony framework to the central nerve cells. They also exercise a potent influence on the psychic life of the individual that is to be.

Freud tells us in his "Infantile Sexuality—Three Contributions to the Sexual Theory"—that the actual beginnings of sexual life cannot possibly be identified. To those of us, accustomed to date the advent of sexual life with puberty and adolescence, this seems utterly absurd.

And yet, endocrinology, or the study of the ductless glands and their function, confirms the observation of Freud, in respect to the fact that the internal secretions, which influence our functioning power—sometimes in a curiously potent manner—originate not only in the testicles, prostate, ovaries and uterus, but also in the pituitary, thyroid, adrenal and thymus glands, as well as in other organs—such as the spleen—the functions of which are as yet but little understood.

Even the lips, the nipples of the breasts, and other erogenous zones of the body may contribute, or participate in, this general sexual development.

Professor Muller contends that there are intimate relations between the digestive organs and the sexual glands. Chronic constipation, also, is very common where there is a lack of functioning power in the sexual glands.

Therefore, it may be said that the sexual organs comprise, either directly or indirectly, all the organs of the body.

And so, the "duration of sexual life" may be, strictly speaking, the duration of the functioning power of the various organs that comprise the body.

However, what the average person regards as the "duration of sex life" is that period between which one is capable of participating in the sex act and that time which marks the cessation of this virility.

This period varies greatly, and depends upon a number of circumstances. Climatic conditions have much to do with the early maturing and the early degeneration of the function.

Vitamin D and the tropical or sub-tropical sun bring about what would be considered among Anglo-Saxon races as a precocious sexual development.

The Basutos, and various others among the negroid or the Polynesian races, are mature men at sixteen, possessing at times extraordinary virility.

At fifty, however, many of them are old men—much older, proportionately, than are the Normans, Scandinavians or Anglo-Saxons—many of whom marry and have authentic progeny at seventy.

It is conceded that sexual virility and longevity are always associated. Castrated animals or humans never attain great age, as they offer far less resistance to infection. For the secretions of the ductless glands, in general, help to neutralise, or antidote, poisons introduced into the body with the food, or developed in the digestive tract as the result of putrefactive fermentation.

It is partly because of this fact that there is no record of any eunuch ever having lived to an advanced age. On the other hand there is ample evidence to prove that men of strong sexual powers have lived a hundred years or more.

Of course, it is gravely to be doubted that centenarians, mentioned in the literature, ever lived to be as old as they were reputed to have been. Nevertheless, their hale and hearty activities bear out the contention that without exception, all these old men were unusually well sexed.

Thomas Parr, who lived to be nearly 153, was found guilty and punished at the age of 102 for having committed a sexual offence. Eighteen years later he married a widow, who claimed that she found in him nothing to indicate degeneration.

The greatest physician of his times, the renowned Harvey, who first demonstrated the circulation of the blood, made the autopsy on the body of Parr. He reported that "The body was in such good condition that the cartilages of the chest bones were not yet ossified."

The hair on the forearms was still black. The tests were 'Sound and Large.' Harvey states that "His wife told me that until 12 years ago he had never ceased to embrace her frequently." And this was at the age of 140.

A Dane, by the name of Drakenberg, lived to the age of 146, notwithstanding the fact that he rarely knew what it was to draw a sober breath. At the age of 111 he married a woman of 60, with whom he lived a complete married life for upwards of twenty years.

Many of these old men have proved their virility in paternity. Not a few of them have had a number of children, even after reaching the age of 80.

Peter Albrecht, married at the age of 85, lived to the age of 123, during which time he had sired seven children.

Gurgen Douglas, a Swede, married in his 85th year. Before he died, at the age of 120 years and 7 months, he had been the father of 8 children.

An Italian, Baron Baravicino de Capellis, lived to be 107. He had 4 wives. The first he married when 14 years of age. He had seven children. Yet most interesting to note, his last wife was pregnant when he died.

GLANDULAR THERAPY.

By Dr. A. F. De Saint-Croix. Journal of Medicine, Feb: '37.

In the light of modern researches and extraordinary rapid progress in the direction of the use of ductless glands in the treatment of various diseases much is said and has been discussed.

This new principle in medicine has completely revolutionised the old time tonics.

Glandular therapy, the application of which dates back from 1889 when the pioneer of this branch of medicine, Brown Sequard, administered to himself testicular extract, is well known. To the amazement of himself and other physicians, the experiment proved a great success and a new chapter was opened up in the modern book of therapeutics.

Since that day, good many eminent scientists, notably Banting, Best, Murphy, Minot, and Serge Voronoff have experimented on various organisms including human beings, taking help of every available ductless gland found in the body.

Recently the new system has been perfected to such a degree, that surprising results have been recorded in books of medical statistics.

A good deal of information about the subject can be obtained from an authoritative publication put forward by Dr. E. Retterar, a Parisian Professor.

It is also truth that the most forward medical men whose opinions are valued by physicians of the whole world have personally carried out experiments, and have without reservation, put their stamp of approval on the system and advocated its tremendous possibilities.

It has been scientifically proved that the best and most rational treatment for the cure of sexual weakness is Glandular Extracts obtained from the glands of bulls, and administered by the mouth.

Yet all the achievements of the system are reduced to nil if the glands selected are not of standard purity and if due care is not taken during the preparation of their compounds. The bulls selected must not be diseased and must be absolutely young so that all their ductless glands must be functioning with their proper physiological secretions. On strict and thorough pathological examinations, they should prove to be absolutely germ free and in a healthy condition.

The exact proportions selected from different glands is a matter of vital importance.

Another factor of great importance is the preservation and stability of these products. Absolute freshness is essential. The gelatine capsule is recognised as the best method of preserving freshness and therapeutic efficacy. The vital gland substances are completely sealed in the gelatine envelope, and all possibility of deterioration is eliminated.

The Chemists of Bergeret Laboratories have discovered after years of research and experiment a glandular extract of unusual efficacy in the treatment of sexual weakness. This preparation is Endophon, which is available in two different kinds. No. 1 is for Partial Impotence and No. 2 for Complete Impotence and Sterility. This Great Product has won tremendous success, and this has led to its widest medical recognition. It is different to the usual run of Glandular preparations, being the Star Product of Bergeret Laboratories, who have for more than a quarter of a century manufactured Organotherapeutic products for the medical profession.

The treatment should be carried out faithfully for the prescribed course. It is guaranteed to effect a complete and permanent cure.

He was suffering from chronic diabetes and told me that the disease was of twelve years standing. Monsieur Coulondre was perfectly cured after five months treatment.

Dr. De. Ravignac

I became fully convinced of the great value of Pancre-Vite after observing its beneficial results in a number of other cases. From the experience of a practice stretching over twenty years, I have no hesitation in stating that Pancre-Vite is a most valuable remedy for diabetes. I prescribe it myself now and shall be glad to add my endorsement to that of my brother physicians who are commending it....."

Positive and Permanent Cure.

Dr. R. C. Duhamel. (Paris). writes:—".....I treated a diabetic patient last year with Pancre-Vite. The first six bottles did not give any perceptible improvement and my patient became disheartened and wanted to stop the treatment. I advised him to complete the course, pointing out that even the best medicines are slow to give improvement in certain cases, and he followed my advice with excellent results. After twelve bottles had been taken, the sugar began to diminish and weight had increased by 5 lbs. At the end of the course no sugar could be detected, even by analysis, and his weight is now 10 st. 8 lbs. perfectly normal for his height.

Dr. Duhamel

To make sure that there would be no recurrence of the disease, I advised my patient to take the treatment for a month longer than the prescribed course. At the time of writing this letter, it is six months since the treatment was stopped and there is no trace whatever of sugar or any other symptom.

Unhesitatingly, I endorse Pancre-Vite as a positive and permanent cure for Diabetes....."

At the Bottom of the Sea With Professor Picard

By Jean Marchand

The sole terrestrial domain which still remains completely unexplored is that of the great maritime depths. With their enormous mass the oceans cover two-thirds of the surface of the globe; in depth they extend as much as 33,000 feet below sea level. But so far our direct observations have barely skimmed the surface. How many precious cargoes, how many artistic and historic treasures lie at the bottom of the sea, waiting to be recovered! Already submarine technique has succeeded in salvaging cargoes which sank in water 660 feet deep. While we are waiting for the development of this technique to extend the domain of human activity to still greater depths, observations have been carried on which have constituted an incomparable source of biological information.

In August, 1934—to give the most famous example—Dr. William Beebe reached a depth of 2,990 feet in his steel bathysphere. Today the indications are that the maritime abysses, contrary to what was commonly believed, contain abundant and variegated fauna. Will we ever be able to observe this fauna? The question is answered in the affirmative by Professor Picard, pioneer of the stratosphere who plans to explore the extreme ocean depths in a steel sphere. His projected apparatus is radically different from that employed by Dr. Beebe.

Professor Picard has this to say of his device, "Could you imagine an ascent into the stratosphere in a captive balloon? Is it any more sensible to try to reach the ocean floor at the end of a cable? It is my opinion that only a sphere which is free of all connection with the surface will permit us to reach the bottom and observe conditions of life there; I have not even bothered to consider whether modern technique can produce a cable 33,000 feet long which would be capable of bearing its own weight in addition; to that of the sphere, Dr. Beebe was hindered by the swaying of his bathysphere; in addition, the inability of his apparatus to move with the currents created disturbances which made observation extremely difficult. So, when the Belgian National Fund for Scientific Research entrusted me with the task of finding a solution to the problem, I deliberately decided to eliminate the cable.

"A cabin made of steel 1.1 inch thick can float in water as a balloon floats in air. Such a thickness would be sufficient for a depth of 9,900 feet. If we go deeper than this, the increase in pressure will necessitate an increase in the thickness of steel. The weight of the sphere will then become so great that it will not be able to remain in equilibrium with the water. It would, therefore, be necessary to attach a buoy to it. For this we can make use of a cylinder filled with oil. Since oil is lighter than water, such a buoy would exert an upward pressure of 660 pounds per cubic meter. The walls of the containing cylinder can be thin because the external pressure, in the final analysis, will be transmitted to the oil. Oil, however, is lighter than water; its lifting capacity will, therefore, diminish during the descent. The slightest escape of oil, moreover, would be fatal to the observers. To eliminate the danger of escaping oil, I decided to employ paraffin, which would still provide me with a lifting capacity of 220 lbs. per cubic meter.

"Upon reflection, the simultaneous use of oil and paraffin appeared preferable. The cylindrical buoy, which would be mounted on top of the sphere, would be divided into compartments in which reservoirs of oil would alternate with packages of paraffin. Since the inside of the cylinder would give access to the water, internal and external pressure will be equal and the walls can, therefore, be made very thin and light. To allow for the compressibility of the oil, it would suffice to place in each tank a bladder with an external opening. The water would enter into the bladder, thus compensating for the decrease in the volume of the oil.

"My sphere will be $6 \frac{3}{5}$ feet in diameter; it will, therefore, be much more comfortable than the one which Beebe employed. I have made several tests with a model $7 \frac{1}{3}$ " in diameter. I placed this steel sphere, which was approximately .137" thick, in a cylinder where I could produce pressures that correspond to a depth of 86 300 feet. There was no noticeable change in shape. The model was made of two hemispheres coupled together; the joint was covered with a ring of rubber cut from an automobile tire. This joint proved so satisfactory that I am planning to use gum rubber to waterproof the openings in my sphere. The portholes will be of conical design; a thick glass (or quartz) plate will fit into the truncated cone, the interior surface of which will be lined with rubber.

"The problem of breathing was solved long ago. In my stratospheric cabin I had no difficulty in controlling the air-regenerating apparatus.

"As for the lighting, I do not believe that the best results can be obtained from a projector contained within the sphere. While water is transparent, it allows for little more visibility than a dense fog. You know that an automobile headlight does not pierce the fog but seems to form a white wall. To overcome this effect, I intend to employ two high-pressure mercury-vapor lamps attached to the outside of the sphere by means of a long metallic arm.

"My sphere, with its buoy and its ballast, will descend slowly in the water, moving with the natural currents. I will be able to stop several times on my way down merely by dropping some of my ballast. Whenever I wish to continue my descent, I will let a little water enter the sphere by means of a specially constructed valve. Sixteen and a half feet from the bottom a cable which trails from the cabin, will touch ground. As the sphere travels along, the end of the cable will continue to hug the bottom, thus automatically assuring the equilibrium of the cabin. And since the sphere will be moving with the current, it will stand an excellent chance of passing unobserved by the sub marine fauna. Anyone who has been up both in a free balloon and a captive balloon will certainly appreciate the difference between the conditions encountered. The former makes you feel that you are in tranquil atmosphere; whereas the latter is subjected to extremely disagreeable swaying and to the buffeting of the winds.

Considerations of security take precedence over all others. I will have to be able to seal the porthole automatically in case of a leak, to drop ballast at will, and to drop all attachments which protrude from the surface of the sphere in case I should find my ascent impeded by sub-marine growths. And all these operations will have to be performed from the inside.

"A solution to all these problems is to be found in the use of magnetism. The port-hole lid will be kept open by means of a magnet and will close automatically by spring action when this is demagnetized.

"The ballast will be contained in a sort of funnel attached to the bottom of the sphere. It will consist of iron granules. A weak current sent through a coil which surrounds the lower extremity of the funnel will suffice to magnetize the granules so that they will form a solid mass. If I cut off the current, the ballast will slowly fall away; the approximate rate is 110 pounds per minute. The moment I turn the current on again, the process will stop. The entire funnel can be detached by the same method used to close the port-holes. The lamp and its support and the guide-rope can be abandoned in a similar manner.

"The one problem that still remains is that of communication with the external world. The vibration of a quartz-crystal under the effect of variable electrical tension is perfectly transmitted by water. Impinging on the quartz receiving-sets of ships, these elastic vibrations are again transformed into electrical vibrations which can be easily amplified. The one difficulty is that their range may not be great enough. So in addition to this, I intend to arm myself with a telescopic antenna, with which I can send out signals when I arrive at the surface. I can further indicate my position by releasing rockets or by coloring the water over an area of 39 sq. miles with a solution of fluorescence. Any airplane which sets out in search of me will be bound to find me."

"However," the Professor continued, "if my efforts are successful, I shall be glad to accompany, in the role of amateur and pilot, the first biological mission who will entrust themselves to my submarine sphere."

CONSTIPATION—Some Cures

(From Our Medical Correspondent)

When you get up in the morning, drink a large glass of water, hot or cold, before you take any food. Then you must go through a few simple exercises for five or ten minutes.

The best exercises for this purpose are those which compress the abdomen. Stand with the hands above the head as though about to dive, then bend at the hips until the fingers touch the toes, or get as near as you can manage without losing your temper.

How to Eat

Another good exercise is to stand with the hands well pressed into the sides just below the ribs and bend from side to side. Or, again try this. Lie flat on your back and raise the heels off the ground with the knees kept stiff. The object of all these movements is to massage the liver and bowels and to encourage their action.

Always eat very slowly; be the last to finish. Eat any good food; there is no reason to be faddy. Avoid pastry, muffins, new bread and stodgy puddings. Eat plenty of fresh fruit, brown bread and porridge.

Excessive tea-drinking is a common cause of indigestion. The chief offenders are women. Try cocoa instead at some of your meals. The more exercise you get in the fresh air the better.

Conversely, sitting on an office stool all day in a stuffy atmosphere is the worst thing for this complaint.

Importance of Fluid

Drink water again at night. A liberal amount of liquid should be taken during the day. Many of you are ill merely because you do not imbibe enough fluid.

Regularity is of the highest importance. You must select a special hour for the action of the bowels and keep to it with strict discipline.

Security of the Small Salary

Dr. Cadman was approached by an agonized lad, who had just been hired as a "junior executive" at $15 per week... "Doctor," asked the anxious chap, "can I lead a good Christian life in New York City on $15 per week?"... "My boy," was the soothing reply, "that's all you can do."

Progress in clinical medicine is gist; but, whoever or whatever he is, he dependent on progress in the ancillary must see the necessity of applying sciences, physiology, pharmacology, etc., scientifically-established facts to human new discoveries in pure science are the needs.

Chemists at work at the Bergeret Laboratories.

stuff on which clinical progress feeds. But between the discovery in pure science and its application to medicine, there must be an investigator. He may be a physician, a chemist, a bacteriolo-

When a clinical application has been found for a scientific discovery, the work has just begun. A method must be worked out by which a chemical process or a biological technique employed in the experimental laboratory can be applied in production operations. And a practical method of clinical administration must be worked out, for an effective remedy cannot be reserved for a few selected patients—it must be made available to thousands. Moreover, the first crude product, perhaps eagerly sought because of the imperative need for it, must be improved and refined so that its efficacy may be increased and its field of usefulness broadened.

The Discovery of Endophon.

The year 1931 saw the discovery of ENDOPHON. It was made possible only by preceding research. Dr. Gustave LeClerc, a chemist on the consulting staff was the first to discover the activity of certain glands. Dr. Louis Perrancourt, also on the consulting staff, was likewise working on the problem. He completed his work shortly after Le Clerc's discovery, and assigned to the preparation its correct formula.

The discovery of ENDOPHON marked a new era in Glandular Therapy. Recently, a new Gland Extract has been discovered and embodied in ENDOPHON, greatly increasing its curative efficacy.

Reported in Eighteen Medical Papers.

A striking example of the achievements of the Bergeret Laboratories is illustrated in the work which led to the discovery of ENDOPHON. The course of this work was reported in eighteen medical papers.

Policy of the Bergeret Laboratories.

It has always been the policy of the Bergeret Laboratories never to offer a product to the world until it has been first subjected to the most exhaustive tests. Therefore; you may be sure that not only has a Bergeret Product been standardised, and made to conform to the highest degree of purity, and that the utmost demands of science have been utilized in its manufacture, but also that its therapeutic value has been demonstrated beyond any question of doubt.

Research Laboratory

The Great Criterion.

ENDOPHON is made in Capsule form—the great criterion in curative power, as the freshness and potency of the vital gland substances is fully preserved. There is no deterioration. Available in two kinds, No. 1 for Partial Impotence and No. 2 for Complete Impotence and Sterility.

The Dangers of Vaccination

By Dr. Joseph Roy

From La Revue Hebdomadaire, Paris.

The advocates of vaccination present it as an unmixed blessing established conclusively by years of experience. They even demand that the State make it compulsory for all its subjects. On the one hand, the public is told that vaccines are absolutely harmless, quite incapable of producing any untoward reaction in the body. On the other hand it is maintained that they have the power to produce an immunity in the system similar to that which follows convalescence from a serious illness—and this without affecting the vitality of the body. I will not attempt to argue from common sense which rebels against such a flagrant contradiction. I will base my argument on the results of biological research.

Articles by Leon Daudet and the book of Chavanon, "On peut tuer ton enfant" (They Can Kill Your Child), have already brought to the attention of the public the dire and even fatal consequences produced by anatoxin—a vaccine that is the particular object of their attack because it has been made compulsory by law. Daudet and Chavanon are two medical men whose writings on the subject serve solely to publicize the testimony of their colleagues. There have been fatal cases of inflammation of the brain resulting from Jennerian vaccination against smallpox. As a result of such mishaps the Dutch Government have revoked the law that made vaccination against smallpox obligatory.

But vaccination brings with it graver though more remote dangers than its immediate after-effects. These arise from the nature of the microbes that are injected into the blood-stream.

It is commonly assumed that the microbes contained in the vaccines have been destroyed by the antiseptics and heating process to which they have been subjected. Or it is argued that they have been weakened to such an extent that they have become passive bodies which the organism eliminates without difficulty. The only trace that they are supposed to leave behind is the immunity that the human body has developed as a result of its easy victory over them.

This whole line of reasoning is based on the assumption that the life process of microbes is analogous to that of higher organisms.

Microbes, however, behave in a manner radically different from the higher forms of life: their ability to lie dormant and come to life again seems to be one of the fundamental characteristics of their existence. No comparison is possible with vegetable life, which becomes dormant only to the extent that the flow of sap and the foliage disappear due to the cold and darkness of the winter season. It can even be said that latency and invisibility make up the normal state of existence of microbes. The rare periods when they come to life—during epidemics—are connected with certain widely prevalent conditions of great irregularity.

The momentary inertia of the microbes in the vaccines, their incapacity to multiply at a given time, does not mean that they are definitely dead or even seriously weakened. The fact that they are latent is no guarantee that they will not revive after a period of years without losing an iota of their harmfulness.

In the case of syphilis, for example, the treponema, after causing disorders of a superficial sort, becomes dormant over a period of ten, twenty or even more years. And then the disease suddenly springs to life again in the form of general paralysis or a belated hereditary syphilis.

The great French bacteriologist, Charles Nicolle, has written a very important book on the mysterious vitality of microbes. D'Herelle, who was responsible for the development of bacteriophage, has carried out a series of experiments that demonstrate the powers of latency and revival of microbes.

The bacteriophage is a small body, visible only under an ultramicroscope, which penetrates into microbes and disintegrates them. In a culture fluid the swarming of the microbes can be detected with the naked eye by the agitated and opaque appearance of the liquid. If bacteriophages are introduced into it, the liquid begins to clear and becomes limpid. Under the microscope as well as to the naked eye it appears that the microbes have been destroyed. If test-tubes containing this clear fluid are retained for some time, it will once again become agitated (without doubt under the influence of cosmic forces.) The microbes have come to life once again.

D'Herelle has also proved that the bacteriophage brings about the transmutation of microbes of a given family to those of another which would produce the transformation of one disease into another. Invisible, filtrable viruses are also created in this way. These viruses are responsible for the most dangerous diseases.

In a paper presented to the Academie des Sciences in 1927. D'Herelle and Peyre described the role played by the destruction and transmutation of microbes by bacteriophages in the development of cancer.

During their study of the various viruses that produce cancer when used as an inoculant on animals and plants, D'Herelle and Peyre discovered that a mixed culture of staphylococcus and bacteriophage was cancer-forming. This meant that pus microbes could be transformed into cancer microbes through intervention of a phenomenon that physicians had long observed: the replacement of acute infections by chronic infections of a hidden, but more dangerous character, i.e., the change from pus to cancer, the penetration of the disease into the cell structure of the body. Such is the deceptive immunity caused by vaccination.

We ought also to mention the effects of anti-diphtheric anatoxin that has been made compulsory by law. Professor Mouriquand of Lyons has proved that this anatoxin produces a hereditary infection. (Report of the Societe de Biologie de Lyons, June 20 1938). The experiments of Mouriquand prove that the diphtheria anatoxin has a harmful and hereditary effect on the formation and regeneration of the blood in the marrow of the bones—one of the fundamental processes of life. Serious changes in the blood have been observed in guinea pigs vaccinated with diphtheria anatoxin. The same disorders could be found in the blood stream of guinea pigs, not vaccinated themselves, but whose mothers had been treated with diphtheria anatoxin.

The First Lesson

"My sixteen-year-old boy," a proud father told us, "works in a restaurant near the high school for his luncheon. Saturdays he helps a groceryman make deliveries. His mother scolds me for letting the boy work so hard and causing him to miss what she calls the higher things of life. I have a hard time explaining to her that when he works an hour to earn one meal, he is learning one of the greatest of all lessons, the lesson of giving before receiving.

"505"—the renowned treatment for 'G' is the ultimate result of five hundred and five experiments on patients suffering from the disease, hence its name.

"505" is a perfect, highly-efficacious treatment for 'G' and never fails to cure the most chronic case. It is used by many doctors, and in Government Hospitals in France, Belgium and Austria, a proof of its remarkable curative efficacy.

Don't be persuaded to try other inferior, abortive remedies, which instead of effecting a cure, only aggravate the disease, leaving a troublesome 'Gleet' behind,—but start treatment with "505" (Mixture & Injection) to-day. This time-tried remedy will quickly stop the discharge, remove all pain and irritation and totally eradicate the disease from the system.

"505" annihilates the demon Gonococcus permanently, leaving you clean and healthy, and after marriage or at any time, the disease will not re-appear. This, no other treatment can do. They only temporarily suppress the disease.

THE VIRILITY OF MANKIND

What Medical Science has accomplished.

By a Doctor.

How to maintain the virility of mankind? This knotty problem has engaged the attention of many famous scientists.

The chief causes of sexual weakness is the vicious habit of masturbation, sexual excesses, prolonged and frequent sexual excitement, which have been proved detrimental in the extreme. The sexual system is deprived of sufficient rest and recuperation and gradually loses its wonted energy. Other causes are excessive exercise, sedentary life, and excessive drinking.

Several attempts have been made to arrive at a formula which would bring about successful results. Commencing from the experiments of Brown Sequard in 1889 down to the recent findings of Dr. Serge Voronoff, the famous Russian Surgeon, it is a long history of laborious investigations by men of standing ability who dedicated their lives to the cause of medical progress and the alleviation of human misery.

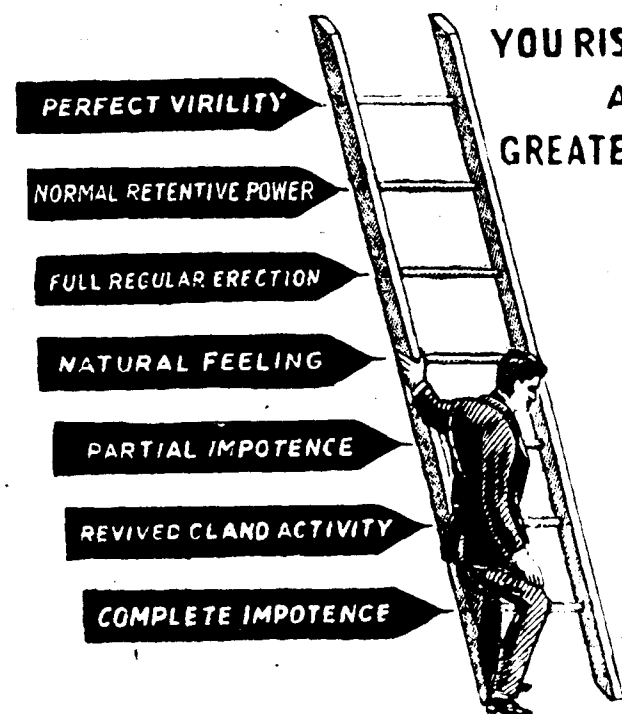

The outcome of these extensive experiments and research established Gland treatment by the mouth, as best and most rational in the cure of Sexual weakness.

A very important factor in successful gland treatment is FRESHNESS of the vital Gland Substances. It is necessary that they are prepared in gelatine capsule form, to ensure freshness and maximum curative efficacy. Gland Substances in tablet or liquid form quickly deteriorate and become inert and worthless.

Note:—The best treatment is ENDOPHON — a product of the great Bergeret Laboratories, France, and the finest Gland preparation on the market. It is made in CAPSULE FORM and sold in two different kinds. No. 1 for Partial Impotence, and No. 2 for Complete Impotence and Sterility.

THE CHOICE OF THE EXPERT

ENDOPHON is recommended for under-sexed men (deficient virility). It gives increased virility with greater retentive power.

It is also recommended as a wise safeguard against sexual weakness. If a few doses is taken each time, before or after sexual intercourse, the well-being of the organ will be maintained. This precautionary measure is especially advised to those men whose sexual ability is not quite normal.

ENDOPHON is non-injurious, and can be taken any time. Its action is beneficial and restorative,—not stimulating. It tones, strengthens, and maintains the healthy condition of the organ.

ENDOPHON is warranted free from all substances against the Hindu or Muslim religion.

ENDOPHON GLANDULAR EXTRACT

NOTE:—It has been conclusively proved that the only rational cure for Impotence is Glandular Treatment. This is strongly recommended by Dr. Marie Stopes in her book "Enduring Passion"

Treatment, in order to be successful, should be carried out regularly. Efficacy of the Gland Substances depends on FRESHNESS. It is important that they are, when taken, perfectly fresh. This difficulty has been overcome, as ENDOPHON is now made by the manufacturers in CAPSULE FORM, which fully preserves the freshness and potency of the vital Gland Substances.

Glandular Substances in tablet or liquid form lose freshness in a short time, and become stale and ineffective as a treatment for Impotence.

Treatment of Chronic Gonorrhea in the Male.

According to Dr. F. A. Lafonte (Gazette Med. France) gonorrhea in the male becomes chronic when the acute symptoms have subsided and there persists a slight or moderate discharge which contains gonococci.

Chronic gonorrhea implies that the previously generalized inflammation has become more or less localised to areas of erosions or ulceration of the urethral mucosa or to inflammation of the glandular structures or membranes in or about the urethra.

In cases of chronic gonorrhea the best treatment is a mixture and an Injection. Abortive treatment will aggravate the urethra and bring about complications.

"505" is the best treatment for chronic gonorrhea. The Mixture taken internally controls such distressing symptoms as pain, burning on urination, strangury and frequency. It does not upset the stomach. The Injection heals the ulcerations of the urethral mucosa or inflammation of the glandular structures and membranes in or about the urethra.

Gonorrheal Urethritis in the Female.

The urethra is by far the most common seat of primary infection in the female. The cervix is next in frequency. In children the vagina is chiefly involved. The female urethra is a straight short tube about $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches in length and can readily be inspected endoscopically but instrumentation is contraindicated in acute cases. Its internal sphincter usually acts as a barrier to upward extension into the bladder.

Acute gonorrheal urethritis seldom comes under observation. The discharge which occurs is usually interpreted as being due to "catching-cold" or it is erroneously explained as a "leucorrhea" which has become worse. Or some times it is interpreted as "bladder" trouble. Injections and instrumentation are not to be used in the acute stage. The patient should secure rest in bed and mild permanganate douches may be prescribed. Internal medication with balsamics, like "505" mixture will insure relief from the distressing "bladder" symptoms.

The disease tends to become chronic because the infection penetrates into the deeper glandular structures especially in those glands situated near the external urinary meatus. On endoscopy the prominent and swollen openings of these glands may be seen. By stripping the urethra with the finger in the vagina a drop of pus may be expressed. The urethra itself feels like a hard cord. Sometimes on endoscopic examination one may also observe a diverticulum of the urethra which in addition to the infected glands may also act as foci of infection. These foci may be the cause of gonorrheal arthritis.

Ancient Medicine IN JAPAN

Our knowledge of ancient Japanese medicine dates back to the so-called Mythical Period of Antiquity which ends with 96 B.C. Disease at this time was believed to be caused by angry gods, malign spirits and demons. The spirit of a dead person was thought to visit its wrath on the living causing illness. Also disease was brought down on the heads of mortals as a result of or punishment for their indiscretions, such as unchastity, evil-mindedness or carelessness.

The weapons of defense against disease caused by the evil spirits were much the same as those employed by ancient peoples in other parts of the world; prayers, magical chants, exorcisms, sacrifices, and the work of two benign gods, Onamujino Mikoto and Sukunabikona-no-Mikoto, who united their strength to combat disease. Surgery was undeveloped. Burns were painted with the juice of certain muscles, sawdust was applied to wounds, and blood-letting was occasionally practiced. Cauterization and medicinal belong to a later period, the most important of which appeared to be Glycerhiza Glabra (Amaki); Magnolia hyolenka (Hohokashiwa); Rheum undulatum (Ohoshi); and Panax Ginseng (Nikota). The vehicle was rice-wine.

Scientific Japanese medicine of ancient times dates back to and is no doubt derived from the Chinese with whom Japan had intercourse in 1500 B. C., and from whom they also absorbed art, science and culture. About 550 A. D. Buddhism was brought to Japan from Korea and slowly gained a foothold with the people. Buddhist priests began to practice medicine, and here we see an ancient Greece, Egypt, Persia, Arabia and America, the same inter-relationship between medicine and religion, the priest-physician. About 600 A. D., numerous young men were sent from Japan to China to study medicine.

It was in this period that massage, acupuncture and cauterization were in favour in Japan. The cautery iron was the chief instrument of the surgeon with which he treated infected wounds and dog bites. About 700 A. D. the Emperor Mommu established a Code of Laws regulating education and medicine. The medical schools were divided into specialty branches headed by full time teachers. The courses were, in the main, internal medicine; pediatrics and surgery; massage, acupuncture; ear, eye mouth and teeth; and exorcism. The government stood the expense of education and examination were given monthly by the teachers of the faculty and once a year by the medical department of the government.

Later the European influence was felt in Japanese medicine through the Dutch who had intercourse with Japan as they travelled for the Dutch East India Company; and from Portuguese missionaries who obtained a foothold in this little country, introducing Christianity and charity hospitals.

Japan, eager and quick to learn, adding her own skill and patient research to knowledge acquired, has given to the world roster of scientists men like Shiga, discoverer of the bacillus of dysentery; Kitasato, discoverer of the plague bacillus; Noguchi, that intrepid worker who obtained pure cultures of Treponema pallidum and uncovered Leptospira icteroides of infections yellow jaundice in his search for the cause of yellow fever; Hate, who with Erlich developed salvarsan; Suzuki and Miyairi, discoverers of Schistosoma japonicum and its intermediary host; Yamagiwa, who was the first to produce primary cancer by coal tar applications; and so on ad infinitum.

In this exceptional case, a thorough cure was effected after six and a half months treatment.

Endophon is three times as potent as the best of other glandular preparations. Clinical experience with Endophon has demonstrated not only that it is an unusually potent product, but that its use has no ill-effects.

The Confidence Drug

We have heard a great deal during the last year or two of a new drug, benzedrine. It has attained an immense degree of notoriety in the daily Press, where its unusual properties of stimulation have earned for it the name of "the confidence drug." The same Press, having encouraged and broadcast—to an extent which has led to its use by thousands of tired business men, anxious students and bored housewives—these remarkable claims of the drug's power to eliminate depression and increase intelligence then clamored for the legislative restriction of its sale. It is now on the list of scheduled poisons, and can only be obtained with a doctor's prescription.

The discovery of the drug was the result of a search for chemical compounds which would have an action similar to that of adrenaline, but without the disadvantages associated with the use of this hormone. Adrenaline is a substance normally produced by two small glands, the adrenals, situated on the kidneys. It is secreted during periods of stress and emotion when it is poured into the blood stream, its effect being to render the body more capable of meeting such emergencies. Thus, the circulation of blood in the muscles of the limbs is improved, both by an increase in the heart rate and by closing down of many of the blood vessels of such easily dispersable areas as the digestive tract. The effort of the breathing is made easier by a dilation of the air passages. There is also a rise in the sugar of the blood, so that more is available as an energy source for the activity of the body.

It is frequently useful to be able to obtain these effects in the treatment of various maladies. For example, adrenaline gives rapid and enormous relief in an attack of asthma, by virtue of its action of dilating the air passages. Its most dramatic use is seen when it is injected into the circulation or even directly into the heart, when it ceased beating, for example, under an anaesthetic. Many persons have literally been brought back to life by the restoration of the circulation in this way. In conditions such as these, where an immediate response is desired, adrenaline is an immensely useful substance, but when a prolonged effect is desired, it is of no value. Moreover, it has no action when taken by mouth, since it is destroyed in the stomach. It has, therefore, to be injected, and this naturally limits its usefulness.

Apart from these general actions, adrenaline has an important local action in constricting the blood vessels. It is used in this way as a spray to relieve congestion in nasal catarrh or during an attack of hay fever.

A valuable drug of the adrenaline type was found in ephedrine, isolated from a Chinese seaweed. It can be taken by mouth, and produces its effect in about half an hour. It has also been used as a spray in a similar way to adrenaline, and here, too, its action is slower, but more prolonged than that of adrenaline. Adrenaline and ephedrine are related chemically, and can be synthesized in the laboratory.

In 1930 a new substance was reported with the name beta-phenylisopropylamine, more generally known by its trade name, benzedrine.

Used locally, the new drug showed several distinct advantages over both adrenaline and ephedrine. These latter substances are not volatile while benzedrine is, so that when breathed into the nostril it can pass to all parts of the lining membranes of the nose and throat. It was found, too, that benzedrine has a second advantage. The constriction of the blood vessels, which results in the relief of the congestion, is followed, when adrenaline or ephedrine is used, by a reactionary dilation of these vessels. The relief obtained is, therefore, only temporary, and often the final condition of the nasal passages is worse than the original. This reaction is not found when benzedrine is used, so that the relief experienced from its use is more lasting. Some conditions for which inhalations of benzedrine have been successfully used are the common cold, infections of the sinuses and attacks of hay fever and asthma.

When taken internally, the drug has a variety of effects. Like adrenaline and ephedrine, benzedrine causes a rise of blood pressure which is more prolonged than with these older drugs. It has therefore, been given with marked success, to patients with low blood pressure, who are subject to fainting attacks. The rise of blood pressure which benzedrine produces has the disadvantage that it renders the drug unsuitable for patients who have a dangerously high blood pressure already.

In many individuals benzedrine produces a loss of weight, and some doctors have used it in the treatment of obesity. Another interesting use of the drug is in certain cases of sea sickness. It appears that certain people are subject to sea sickness because of the excessive activity of one part of their involuntary nervous system, the parasympathetic. Adrenaline stimulates the opposing nervous system, the sympathetic, so that adrenaline and drugs with a similar action are able to counteract the too energetic parasympathetic system in such individuals. The use of benzedrine has accordingly been attempted in the treatment of sea sickness in these cases, and the results have been very promising.

The action on the brain and nervous system is one of stimulation. It produces a sensation of increased well-being and a relief from fatigue. There is a feeling of increased mental and physical energy and the individual often describes himself as "full of pep." These facts led to the use of benzedrine in conditions of fatigue, sleepiness and depression, and in many cases striking improvement was observed. Some of the best results were seen in the treatment of narcolepsy, a disease in which the patient may have attacks either of irresistible sleep, or of suddenly losing the use of his limbs and falling limply to the ground. In most cases these attacks ceased entirely when benzedrine was taken—patients who were having as many as eight or ten attacks of falling asleep in one day were completely cured.

In normal people, the general effects of benzedrine, as has already been noted, are those of stimulation. There is a feeling of increased confidence and exhilaration, thought processes are accelerated and the individual becomes restless and talkative. The total results may be highly gratifying, as during an interview where fluent talking, quick thinking and a confident manner produce an excellent impression. On the other hand, the effects may be disconcerting: a junior official in a hospital was severely taken to task for his jovial manner and loquaciousness when speaking on the telephone to a superior officer.

Intelligence tests, worked out by psychologists, have shown an increased score achieved by persons after taking benzedrine. With regard to these tests, however, we must realize that the improved performance at laboratory trials is not really the result of an increase of native intelligence but rather the result of increased rapidity of thought. It is certain that no fundamental alteration in intelligence occurs, such as would make an individual capable of performances otherwise completely beyond his power.

The effects of benzedrine which we have so far described are desirable ones, and it was early seen that there was a possibility of persons becoming addicted to the use of the new drug. Surprisingly, however, in view of its stimulant action, and disappointingly so far as the outcry in the Press is concerned, there have been very few reports indeed of benzedrine addiction.

There are two important reasons for this. In the first place, it is found that the general stimulating effect on the normal individual appears to be lost after a few weeks or a month. Secondly, and more important, the results of taking the drug are not entirely beneficial, for there are many unpleasant side effects. Its action in combating sleepiness, so useful in treating the condition of narcolepsy, may result in normal individuals in severe insomnia. The quickened thought and increase in energy may readily become, in certain individuals, unpleasant restlessness and irritability. Palpitations and headaches are not uncommon, and often there is uncomfortable flushing and perspiration. In a very few cases severe symptoms may occur, such as vomiting and collapse, but this is usually due to excessively large doses of the drug.

On the whole, then, we may consider that the danger from addiction is not very great. The restriction of the sale of benzedrine, however, is justified by the fact that, although extremely valuable in certain conditions under medical supervision, it is a drug with very varied actions and often with many unpleasant results.

Television Sixty Years Ago!

Doubtless you imagine that television is a very recent invention. But, as a matter of fact, it was in August 1879 that an unassuming French physicist, Charles Senlecq, sent a sealed envelope to the Secretary of the Academie in Paris. It contained the description of an astounding invention, the plans for an apparatus which would make possible Man's hundred-year-old dream of television.

At a time when the telephone, invented about two and a half years previously by Graham Bell, was hardly known in Europe, when Edison's phonograph was the last word in technical achievement, when the cinema was a mere speculation, Senlecq began to make the first apparatus destined to transmit vision.

In the spring of 1877 he came across a description of the telephone invented by the American, Graham Bell. From that moment one idea held his attention irresistibly, and ended by becoming an obsession. The electric current could transmit speech over long distances; surely it could equally well transmit vision. But how to go about it?

Graham Bell, whose genius was admired by Senlecq, modelled the shape of his first telephone receiver exactly on that of the human ear, thus setting the latter an example. In fact, it was living Nature which directed the Frenchman's research by presenting him with one of the most perfect mechanisms to copy, namely the human eye. Was not the eye the first television apparatus, and the most sensitive transmitter of vision? But an eye behaves like a camera, a light-tight chamber with a lens focusing rays of light on to a light-sensitive retina. The problem that Senlecq intended to solve was that of creating an artificial electric retina.

Blessed with an excellent memory, he recalled that several years previously an Englishman (May) had described to the Royal Academy in London a remarkable property of a chemical element, selenium. This substance became a conductor of electricity when illuminated, and the brighter the light the better was its conductivity. Curiously, no one, and not even the English discoverer of this surprising phenomenon, had foreseen its brilliant future. Senlecq was the first to appreciate the tremendous practical importance of this discovery.

To be able to transform light into electricity! This was the ideal substance for the retina of his electric eye. He presupposed that each picture was nothing but a mass of dots more or less white or more or less black. By projecting each of the dots of the picture on to a minute selenium cell the intensity of the light would be translated into an electric current of a corresponding intensity. This current would cause a small bulb on the receiving screen to light with the same intensity as that at the point of transmission. Transmitting each of the dots in this way, all the little amps of the receiver would, owing to their varying degrees of brightness, reproduce the whole picture.

In this way the French inventor solved the fundamental problem of television. His apparatus was an exact copy of the human eye. It had a retina (the selenium), nerves (the conducting wires), and even a brain centre (the bulbs of the receiver). The task of putting this principle into practice was a long and difficult one. The inventor spent nearly three years in the construction of the first model alone. There were as many years of work ahead; however, he succeeded in improving on his initial scheme, notably by replacing the clumsy mass of conducting wires of his first model by a single one. Later still, as we know now, the discoveries of Hertz and Marconi's astonishing inventions replaced that single wire by radio waves.

At last, in the spring of 1879, Charles cist, M. d'Arros, in Paris, the great news: "Thanks to my apparatus, which I have christened the 'telectroscope, television ceases to be a fantastic dream. From now on it is a reality.'"

But its fame did not last for very long. After an immediate success disappointment followed in a few months. In fact, although it was an amazing achievement for those times, Senlecq's apparatus was not, and could not be, anything but mechanically clumsy. Transmitting pictures with a tiresome slowness, the telectroscope reproduced them only crudely. This great pioneer had anticipated the progress of a century ahead by the daring of his wonderful idea, but he was necessarily restricted by the feeble resources and technical imperfections of his day.

In vain he submitted his apparatus to several Paris industrialists. He himself saw much in it, but they thought little of it. Besides, he came up against the indifference of the expert officials and American rivals such as Sheldford Bidwell and Cary resumed the work with much more success than the French pioneer. Discouraged and disappointed, Senlecq abandoned the struggle and retired eventually to the country. Thus the curtain fell upon the pioneer of a modern miracle.

Ten Frozen Ghosts

By Prof. Harold O. Whitnall

From The American Weekly, New York

Stretching across Northern Siberia is a freak of Nature, a strip known as the area of eternal frost. At the foot of the Altai Mountains, recently, Professor Gryaznov, of the Soviet Academy of Science on Eternal Frost, dug down 50 feet into this natural icebox which never defrosts, and broke into a chamber built of logs and planks, hewn by Bronze-age axes.

This chamber proved to be a stable which Professor Gryaznow believes was built about 10,000-years ago and his electric flashlight revealed the "ghosts" of ten sorrel horses.

They stood there all saddled, bridled and ready for that last journey which their masters never called upon them to take. They were not skeletons, but flesh and blood horses, with every hair of their coats intact, even their eyes, the blood in their veins, and the half-digested remains of their last meal still in their stomachs.

For a hundred centuries these horses, buried in the eternal frost, like marble statues, have stood with their frozen eyes, looking for the summons that never came.

They were there long before the Biblical Nebuchadnezzar went mad and tried to "eat grass as oxen," before Moses led the Children of Israel out of Egypt even before the first Pharaoh consolidated the feudal states of Egypt into one great Empire. They stood stiff-legged in the frozen silence while Egypt, Greece, Babylon, Rome and all the great Empires of history rose and fell, and might have remained without changing a hair for countless thousands of years more if the Russian scientists had not broken into their tomb and thawed them out.

But what of their masters? The bodies complete in the flesh are among the prizes these excavators seek, but they will not be content even with this, for they have reason to hope that in the same icebox there are also the perfectly-preserved remains of men who lived 20,000 to 30,000 years ago, the real cavemen-hunters of the early Stone Age. From this same strip have been dug many well-preserved carcasses of the mammoth and it is well-known that the human hunter pursued the great beast wherever he went.

Some great disaster caused the owners of the stable to desert their place.

cious animals and one may guess that it was a fearful and untimely blizzard which snowed the stable under for ever, and perhaps the same fate overtook the men in another abode near by.

The striking feature of these men is that, judged by the equipment of their horses, they belonged to a race of high-grade artists and artisans. The leather of their saddles is still splendidly preserved, and even the carved wood, when warmed up, gave off a resinous odour. The wood, like the leather of the saddles and also the bridles, were handsomely inlaid with gold and tin foil, only slightly tarnished, after their long burial. Even the felt coverlets retained their colour design, such is the perfect preservative power of frost and dark.

The owners of the saddles quite likely did not make these things; possibly none of their particular tribe had that skill.

They may have won them in battle or by robbery. Quite as likely they may have got them honestly, as traders, by bartering ivory, amber and other treasures for these products of some skilled community in a warmer climate.

But somewhere there were highclass artisans, and great artists there had been long before, when the Cro-Magnon men painted their caves with portraits of men moths and other animals

This natural refrigerator does not preserve horses only. The flesh of man mammoths has been found so well preserved that it is palatable to dogs and often used by natives for baiting their traps. There is a well-authenticated story that Ivan the Terrible once gave a banquet to his feudal lords, at which were served, as the piece de resistance, steaks of mammoth meat, 20,000 years old. In the carcass of a mammoth, found in 1923, the fat was still white and eagerly taken by the natives to grease their primitive boats. In 1937, Professor Kapterev recovered a head in which even the eyes had not lost their natural colour.

But so far no human being has been found in the preserved state. If one of those paleolithic celebrities does turn up he will, no doubt be photographed, measured and generally examined with scientific thoroughness. Before he is thawed out, expert embalmers will be summoned to give him as good a job of embalming as that of Lenin.

Russia will then have the world's most precious scientific curio, more interesting than all the mummies of the Pharaohs.

The First Air Raid of All . . . Ninety Years Ago!

By P. L. Farago

From La Prensa, Buenos Aires

You probably think of aerial bombardment as a product of the genius of our own age, as one of the crowning achievements of the twentieth century, as a thoroughly advanced method of extinguishing human life. You will therefore be surprised to hear that the first successful air raid in history took place in 1849.

The Austrians were besieging Venice and a young first lieutenant of artillery, Uchatius by name, thought the raid out and carried it through.

Yet even he was not the first to play with the idea, earlier inventors having made unsuccessful attempts to attack forts and fortified castles from the air. During Napoleon's Russian campaign, for instance, a German engineer had been commissioned to construct a dirigible globe capable of bombarding the quarters of the French emperor by night. The engineer was installed somewhere near Moscow and did his utmost to carry through his experiment. Apparently, however, he failed.

Thus the attack on Venice was the first successful air raid. Uchatius—who later won universal recognition for the cannon he constructed—was an excellent mathematician and a fine engineer. In the spring of 1849 he evolved a plan for bombing Venice from the air. The Austrian military command had him and his brother attached to the navy, then operating in Italian waters, and here they carried out their experiments. They began by working on the "Montgolfier" balloon, which was filled with hot air. For several weeks they studied air-currents, and built balloons of various types in an effort to find which would prove best suited to their purpose. Finally they produced for the inspection of a military commission a dirigible capable of staying aloft at a good many hundred feet and carrying a bomb weighing about twenty pounds.

Experiments proved successful, and the pioneers submitted to the High Command an estimate for the cost of making an efficient attack upon Venice—probably the first air budget in history. Uchatius assessed his requirements as one hundred "Montgolfier" balloons, fifty stoves to heat the air, and one hundred bombs of the same variety as those he had used in experiments.

With characteristic Austrian formality the High Command submitted the estimate to the Emperor, and although it seemed extravagant in comparison with budgets of the day, the latter graciously passed it in view of the nobility of the cause.

In the summer of the same year Uchatius put his plan into practice. He was given a battleship from which to operate. Balloons were sent up from the bridge, a bomb being suspended from each one. First Uchatius released a trial balloon to test for air-currents—a most important point, for after the balloons had gone a certain distance an apparatus was to go off and release the bomb—then he released the rest.

It must be confessed, however, that the result was unimpressive. Most of the bombs fell wide of the strategic points they were aimed at. On the civil population the effect was nothing less than galvanic, for some of the bombs exploded on the Place San Marco, where they created indescribable panic.

After this first raid the inventor was urged to make fresh balloons and repeat the raids. He did so, but preparations were costly, and they took a long time to complete, so that the whole affair was something of a fiasco. Of course, the Venetians took steps to protect themselves, trying to shell the ships from which balloons "took off." According to contemporary historians the actual casualties included only four killed and forty more or less seriously injured in the air raids on Venice.

Finally the High command decided that results did not justify expenditure even though the indirect results were far from negligible, the knowledge that balloons might float over at any moment and drop a cargo of death keeping the population in a state of constant tension and intermittent terror.

Presently Uchatius was withdrawn from Venice in disgrace and sent elsewhere. He died in happy ignorance of the glorious future of his invention.

Lime Juice and Health

Lime juice is beneficial for the health in many ways. The juice of a lime taken first thing in the morning, in a tumbler of hot or cold water without sugar is a splendid remedy for indigestion, spots and other complexion troubles.

Repeat the dose at night if necessary.

If you have a sore throat gargle with juice and warm water. If you are troubled with a cough, heat the juice of a lime and mix it with two teaspoonfuls of honey. It will relieve the soreness at the back of the throat.

Lime juice, diluted with boiling water and well sweetened with honey or sugar, taken last thing at night is excellent in cases of chills, colds, influenza and feverishness.

Bruno Mussolini is amused!

Power-loving individuals are not all of the orator type. There are men of quite a different kind, whose love of power has been fed by control over mechanism. Take, for example, Bruno Mussolini's account of his exploits from the air in the Abyssinian war.

We had set fire to the wooded hills, to the fields and little villages It was all most diverting The bombs hardly touched the earth before they burst out into white smoke and an enormous flame and the dry grass began to burn. I thought of the animals. God, how they ran After the bomb-racks were emptied, I began throwing by hand It was most amusing: a big Zariba surrounded by tall trees was not hit. I had to aim carefully at the straw roof and only succeeded at the third shot. The wretches who were inside, seeing their roof burning, jumped out and ran off like mad.

"Surrounded by a circle of fire about five thousand Abyssinians came to a sticky end. It was like hell.

While the orator needs much intuitive psychology for his success, the aviator of Bruno Mussolini's type can get his pleasure with no more psychology than is involved in knowing that it is unpleasant to burn to death. The orator is an ancient type; the man whose power is based on mechanism is modern. Not wholly: read, for example, how Carthaginian elephants were used, at the end of the first Punic War, to trample mutinous mercenaries to death where the psychology, though not the science, is the same as Bruno Mussolini's. But speaking comparatively, mechanical power is more characteristic of our age than of any previous time.

First Rule for Reducing

You can use sound, tried psychological laws and principles to reduce. Only you must have the requisite courage to change your habits of eating—and that's difficult.

The first law is this: Learn to dislike fattening foods you already like and learn to like non-fattening foods. This is the soundest, most sensible and best approach to the problem.

Why Cook Vegetables?

By Eleanour Sinclair Rohde

From The Countryman, Idbury, Oxfordshire

How very old to cook vegetables! Raw vegetables (properly prepared, of course) are more digestible, more appetizing and far more health-giving than dead stuff deprived of nearly all its best qualities. Certain vegetables, notably peas and beans, artichokes and starchy vegetables such as potatoes and parsnips have to be cooked, but why cook cauliflowers, any of the green vegetables, or roots?

And then there is the question of time. Any experienced person knows that to cook vegetables well is a long, more laborious process than the cooking of meat or fish. That is why cooks delegate vegetables to the kitchen-maid. The servant problem is a serious one, yet there are countless houses where the already overworked mistress adds unnecessarily to her labors by cooking vegetables which require no cooking and are far better in every way eaten raw. A slave to convention, she cleans, and then, in the case of root vegetables, peels diligently. Having deprived the roots of all their best salts, for these lie in and under the skin, she next proceeds to boil them, thereby making matters still worse. Green vegetables are still usually boiled in large quantities of water in spite of the fact that the salts of all green vegetables are soluble. Further, boiled greens are extremely indigestible, and their taste unless well disguised is just horrid and sloppy. Thousands of people eat boiled cabbage and similar horrors from a sense of duty. They cannot possibly like such stuff, and no wonder it is difficult to persuade children to eat the vegetables put before them. The maltreated vegetables are merely what dietitians call roughage, but it is so well disguised in expensive restaurants that most people do not realize they are eating rubbish. Eat root vegetables and greens raw and you will wonder you ever tolerated the nonsense of cooking them.

Take, for instance, the vegetables in season now. Broccoli, like cauliflowers or for that matter any of the numerous edible flowers, are most wholesome and perfectly digestible if eaten raw. Cooked, they taste what they are, dead; and they are notoriously indigestible. To prepare these heads to perfection, gather them not a moment before they are required and wash them well, first in salted and then fresh water. Then grate as finely as possible. Graters can be bought at any of the cheap stores for five cents. Broccoli and cauliflowers grate to a powdery consistency. Fill cup-like lettuce leaves, or orange cut in half, with the grated vegetable and cover with mayonnaise sauce. Or mix the vegetable with finely chopped herbs such as sweet marjoram, thyme, a very little sage, lovage, chives and so forth.

Brussels sprouts, firm savoy and cabbages also grate to a powdery yet moist consistency. There are special machines for mincing vegetables finely, and it is sometimes easier to use them minced than to grate by hand. We usually find it necessary to put greens twice through a mincer. Carrots grated raw, especially mature specimens, which are sweet, are delicious. They should never be peeled. Turnips also are good when grated but, unlike carrots, usually have to be peeled. Incidentally, town-folk seem to like young root vegetables, another of their odd likes, for these immature roots are poor in flavor and as wholesome as unripe fruits.

The rarely grown Hamburg parsley, which makes large edible roots; grates to the same consistency as ground nuts and has a delicious nutty flavor. Onions grate well, but they can be used only as a flavoring in a dish of mixed vegetables as the flavor is so strong. Cucumber and vegetable marrow grate and help to moisten rather dry roots such as radishes.

Mixed raw vegetables make a more interesting dish than vegetables served separately. Green and root vegetables blend admirably and the greater the mixture the better. Failing mayonnaise sauce, a little cream is a good addition. There are numerous methods of serving grated raw vegetables but they look best, I think, as I have said, served in individual portions in small lettuce leaves, or in orange skins, halved or even in tiny ornamental gourds with the pulp scooped out. We find that all mixtures are greatly improved by a judicious addition of herbs, especially sweet herbs such as lavender—it is odd how few realize that the leaves are edible—rosemary, sweet cicely, lovage, southernwood, angelica leaf, dill and thyme.
