The Great Adventure of Healing "Grandmother's Cure"

Centuries ago, in China, a "grandmother's cure" for burns was strong tea. Then the world forgot. In 1924, a young doctor, called Davidson, working as a surgeon in Detroit, was horrified at the awful toll of burning and the agonies it inflicted. He thought and read and studied, and discussed the subject with a colleague, Dr. E. C. Mason, who gave him his mature advice. Gradually he got on to the track of something and behind his locked door, he experimented with rabbits, white rats, and tannic acid, the staining chemical found in strong tea.

On the morning of May 5th, 1924, when he was thirty, a disastrous explosion in Detroit resulted in seven suffering men being brought to his hospital. From that moment rabbits and rats were no more; he was done with faltering and secret experimenting. His shocked emotions made him take a desperate stride.

On the left side of one of the worst-burned victims he applied his tannic acid solution, and on the right he used the old method of wet boric acid compresses. Two day later, when he changed the dressings, there was the usual agony under the boric acid. But when his tannic acid bandages were removed no pain was felt, there was scarcely any swelling, and a protective acid skin covered the wounds.

The six other men were then similarly treated. They all recovered—and, more remarkable still, there was no scarring.

Yet Davidson was laughed at in the beginning. So were the Curies, who gave us radium and its curative powers; Pasteur, who revealed the microbic origin of diseases and medicine triumphantly along a new path; Lister, whose carbolic spray was jeeringly referred to as "Lister's bag and bellows," but who banished the widespread tragedy of septic operations by his experiments with antiseptics; James Young Simpson, who dispelled the terror of the knife by supplying the healing sleep of chloroform. They were all regarded as the Clowns of medicine; to-day they are idols.

It is not so many years ago—comparatively speaking when we are dealing with a subject which embraces Ambrose Pare and his sixteenth century foundations of modern surgery, and William Harvey, the Elizabethan benefactor who first mapped the course of the blood's flow in our bodies—it is not so many years ago that a clever young surgeon named W. A. Lane, F.R.C.S., gathered together an immense knowledge of bone surgery and decided that the accepted methods of setting fractures were crude and in many cases useless.

He experimented for long, and ultimately devised silver plants to hold the fractured bone together and so prevent shrinkage and consequent lameness.

Was he thanked? Not at first; he was ridiculed. But he had faith, and to-day he is happily still with us as Sir William Arbuthnot Lane, honoured in every continent. Dr. Sherman, chief surgeon of the Carnegie Steel Corporation of Pittsburgh, once declared that out of 2,500 cases treated in the Lane manner, only two deaths occurred.

The discoveries of cures have invariably been thrilling. Just the other week a crate of venomous snakes was delivered to a famous London clinical laboratory where doctors are now extracting from the fangs of the reptiles the poison which kills. From it they are evolving a curative serum which will counteract the bite of the snake itself, prove an antidote to other poisons, and possibly cure, after further research, some of the most perplexing human diseases, such as cancer. An important announcement concerning this line of research is to be made in a week or two.

As proof of the possibilities of this line of research there is the claim of Hariz, of the Pasteur Institute of Paris, that he is healing internal growths with cobra poison.

Death can be Conquered?

Dr. Hyman's Invention of an Ingenious device to Resuscitate the Dead.

(By H. M. Robinson.)

No procedure in modern medicine has aroused more controversy than the attempt to revive the dead by reactivating the heart that has stopped beating. Hailed on the one hand as a miracle of science, and on the other as a useless, dangerous and even sacrilegious operation, the "intracardial therapy" technique of resuscitation occupies a stage of excited debate. Pivoting upon the basic human elements of life and death, and piercing close to the shadowy secrets of both, the latest developments in this field of medicine is being eagerly evaluated by layman and physician alike.

Can human beings, pronounced "dead" by attending physicians, be brought back to life? Dr. Albert S. Hyman, inventor of the artificial heart-paces, believes—and has dramatically demonstrated—that they can. He has proved that even prolonged cessation of the heartbeat does not always constitute death, and that dozens of persons given up for dead by relatives and physicians have been re-animated by the use of the "new electrical heart-pacer, sometimes called the "life flashlight." This miracle working instrument is on longer in the experimental stage; its triumphs already substantial and well-authenticated, suggest widening implications—legal, medical, and human—as new evidences of its reliability and varied usefulness constantly occur.

What principle underlies this ingenious device used in resuscitating the dead? Quite simply, the artificial heart-pacer is an electrical apparatus capable of producing a current identical with the electric energy ordinarily generated by the heart itself. It must be understood that the normal heart-beat is prompted by a tiny electric current which sweeps across the heart regularly at the average rate of seventy-two times a minute, causing the heart muscles to contract as the result of this stimulation. The group of cells which develops this electric current is located in the wall of the heart's upper chamber; it is known to physiologists as the Sinus node, but if we term it the "pacemaker of the heart" its function will be better understood.

About ten years ago Dr. Hyman began to suspect that a stopped human heart would resume its normal beating if stimulated by an electric current similar to that generated by the heart's own pacemaker. In a series of experiments he discovered the exact type of electricity needed, and found that 1-1,000th of a volt was sufficient.

His next problem was how to deliver this current to the little group of electrical cells that motivates the heart's activity. Dr. Hyman chose for this purpose a 19-gauge gold injecting needle, about four and one-half inches long. In the tube of this needle he placed two electrodes barely 1-100th of an inch apart, connected these with his tiny generator, and was now prepared to thrust the life-bearing current of electricity deep into the Sinus node. He believed that this artificial impulse would sweep over the organ along accustomed pathways, and that by repeating this wave of excitation he could awaken the pulsations of the moribund heart.

Trial of Guinea Pig.

But before this device could be used on human beings, the guinea pigs had to be called in. A large guinea pig was "killed" by mechanical asphyxiation. All respiratory movements ceased in 110 seconds; seventy seconds later no heart sounds could be detected. Dr. Hyman permitted 120 seconds more to elapse, and the animal—according to all medical tests and knowledge—was dead.

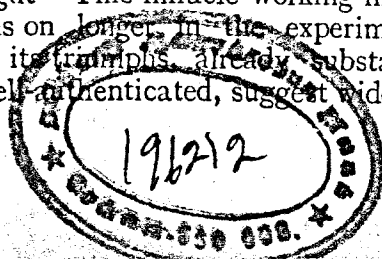

At this point the pacemaker needle was inserted into the right ventricle; the initial needle-prick caused a convulsive beat, and then for thirty seconds all was quiet again in the dark chambers of the guinea pig's heart. Dr. Hyman now turned on the apparatus, setting it at sixty-four beats per minute. The heart started pumping, and blood swept through the animal's arteries. At the end of sixty seconds the needle was withdrawn. By this time the guinea pig's heart was pumping regularly and soon the animal was nibbling lettuce leaves, unaware that he had just been called back from the bourne whence no traveller is supposed to return. This experiment was repeated many times on other guinea pigs, rabbits and dogs;

These animals, deadlier than the proverbial door nail, were all resuscitated by the artificial pacemaker and lived to tell the tale to their grand-litters.

Dead Man Back to Life.

Sufficient evidence had now been obtained from laboratory animals, and the resuscitator was ready for a trial on human beings. It was decided to use it at first only on patients who had been pronounced dead and who resisted all other methods of revivification.

The first case presented itself under abrupt auspices: a middleaged man, suffering from pneumonia, developed empyema and was taken to a hospital to have the pus drained from his pleural cavity. As frequently happens after this operation, his heart "went into a flutter" from which it did not recover. The surgeons struggled to save him by injecting adrenaline but their attempts were unavailing and the heart stopped. After five minutes the physicians abandoned hope of reviving the patient and resignedly gave the signal to start clearing up the operating room. Preparations were being made to remove the body when another suggested: "Why not use the machine downstairs?" The machine was the new heartpacer; Dr. Hyman was experimenting with it on some animals. He was summoned and arrived eight minutes after the patient had been pronounced dead. Taking the same aseptic precautions observed in any surgical operation, Dr. Hyman plunged the gold needle (the same one he had used on the guinea pig) into the interspace of the dead man's third and fourth ribs, on the right side of the breast bone, thus penetrating the stilled heart to its nodal core. As if by magic the dead heart commenced to beat, the colour returned to the patient's face, and he manifested all the signs of being very much alive. He was indeed alive, and remained so for several days. But the pneumonia had fatally weakened him and he succumbed at last to this disease.

Good Results

In the course of the next months, Dr. Hyman employed his apparatus on several cases of cardiac arrest with gratifying results. Persons "dead from asphyxiation, drowning and various forms of heart-failure were restored to life. Gradually Dr. Hyman discovered that the heart has two stages of death: the first, lasting for ninety seconds, during which period it can be revived by pricking it with the needle of the heart-pacer; after the first ninety seconds there develops in the dying heart a second period lasting up to fifteen minutes, during which reactivation may be possible. Before Dr. Hyman's findings were made, most physiologists maintained that eight minutes was the longest period that could elapse after cardiac arrest before the delicate tissues of the heart and brain are destroyed. Hyman has shown however, that fourteen, and even twenty minutes can elapse before these tissues irrevocably perish. Reactivation of the dying heart depends also on the state of the heart prior to its stopping. Hearts succumbing to chronic cardiac disorders, or degenerative diseases such as tuberculosis and bright's diseases are quite frankly not the best proving grounds for the heart-pacer. But when an otherwise normal person suffers shock or injury resulting in cardiac arrest, or when the heart of patient undergoing a surgical operation suddenly stops, the artificial pace-maker is seen at its best. If it were possible to select only this type of subject for resuscitation, the record of Dr. Hyman's heart pacer would indeed be striking. As the figures stand to-day the "life flashlight" obtains favourable results in one out of every four attempts:

The mechanical development of the heart-pacer is a story in itself. Originally it was a large and complicated piece of laboratory equipment weighing ninety pounds and taking up as much space as a kitchen table; its approximate cost was $ 12,000. In 1931 the machine had been reduced to the size of a small suit case and weighed only forty pounds. Three years later a model was devised no bigger than a cigar box. Finally, in 1936, Dr. Hyman perfected a pace-maker which is only six inches long and weighs less than a pound. This model is small enough to fit in a coat pocket yet it can reproduce all the electrical stimulating phenomena of the original machine. Its cost will be about $ 50, but distribution is a non-commercial project, largely the private philanthropy of Jacob Wirkin, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Wirkin Foundation for the Study and Prevention of Heart Disease. It is the intention of the committee to present these machines to approved hospitals without charge. When this has been accomplished, there will be an opportunity for other institutions and physicians in general to secure the artificial pacemaker at a small cost.

It was only when the war danger created the need for immense food reserves that attention was turned to the vast storage capacity with which Mother Nature has provided us gratis—the Swiss lakes.

To be sure, it is impossible to submerge wheat or any other foodstuffs in water without protection; so containers are required—submarine tanks.

Reservoirs of this sort are really floating storage plants anchored under the water. But few people will realize at first thought that they do not have to be built in anything like massive style. Experimental 60-250-ton tanks produced, as well as the 500-ton tanks now under construction, have walls of sheet metal only 3 to 6 mm. thick (.12 to .24 inches) for the pressure of water at considerable depths is great enough to balance the internal pressure of tanks crammed with foodstuffs.

One of the engineers who designed these tanks has remarked that the theoretically ideal form of such reservoirs would consist of a thin membrane.

Several different varieties of these tanks will be built; some will be built; some will be adapted to liquids (food oils, fruit juices, etc., as well as for industrial oils or petrol); others will be suited to grains and flours, such as cereals, coffee, sugar, etc.; still others will be equipped with special refrigeration for those foods that require temperatures lower than 7-9° F. The latter temperature is found 125 feet below the surface where the tanks will normally be anchored.

Pneumatic and mechanical devices will permit the loading and unloading of these tanks.

But won't foodstuffs deteriorate under water? Since the reservoirs are waterproof, it is of no importance whether they are surrounded by liquid or air. The only thing that matters is the condition within the tank itself. There are certain foodstuffs that "breathe," i.e. need a given amount of dry air that must be renewed at certain intervals, if they are not to degenerate. Grains in particular come under this heading.

But experiments at the Swiss Federal Agricultural Research Institute have shown that this "breathing" ceases at a temperature of 7-9° F. The carbon dioxide given off by the grain reaches a sort of equilibrium in which the wheat "hibernates" without losing its quality. Goods of this class will have to be replaced at intervals of several years. Other substances such as oils will retain their quality indefinitely.

The advantages of this ingenious plan are obvious: very small building and maintenance costs in comparison with ordinary storage and refrigeration plants; short periods required for their construction; solution of the problem of space; elimination of the usual sources of destruction—mice and insects; no loss in weight; complete preservation of freshness; and, last but not least, an unusual degree of security in the face of aerial bombardment.

Tanks anchored 125 feet beneath the surface are invisible to aviators flying at the lowest heights. Should a bomb explode by pure chance in the vicinity of a tank filled with liquid, it would not be damaged. A 110-lb. bomb was detonated at a depth of 52 feet, a mere 22 feet from a reservoir without any untoward effect.

The Swiss Government are still conducting experiments to determine the vulnerability of tanks filled with grain, but it is already certain that such submarine reservoirs containing solids stand up under aerial bombardment much better than any other form of storage.

Fears have been expressed that a lavish reserve of foodstuffs and raw materials may make Switzerland too tempting a prey for aggressors to resist. But these tanks lend themselves to greater secrecy than the best ware-houses hidden in mountains. The exact location will be known only to a very few people, and can be found only by means of soundings.

Switzerland has discovered a new method of storing foodstuffs on a large scale as a wartime measure.

Submarine Refrigerators

When a housewife not blessed with a refrigerator puts her butter in a tub of cold water, she is practicing submarine storage in its most primitive form. The cool water of lakes and seas has been used to keep foods fresh on many occasions in the past. But until recently it had occurred to no one to apply this principle on a really large scale.

Divers were driven insane by what they saw in Odessa Bay

THE MARCHING DEAD

By Captain J. D. Craig

Those waters are accursed. Live men don't die there and dead men"—he shrugged his shoulders eloquently—"come to life. I have no fear of death nor of life, of course. But when life and death are mixed and the dead march against the living, then, my friend, those waters appeal not to me."

They stared at him, fascinated. Plainly, they had heard something of that before, but he would not be questioned. He had seen the macabre marching and he was alive. Others had seen and were dead. He lapsed into silence.

I laughed, for this Russian diver's vague narrative sounded like a lunatic's nightmare. What he had seen, I decided, was a group of divers, the spectacle enhanced by his own imagination.

Months later, I casually mentioned it to another Russian I chanced to meet—a Black Sea sailor. He stared at me and explained: "I've heard of them but I left that country soon after the war of 1914-18 and when I got back they were gone, people said. They were not divers, be sure of that. They were drowned men in ragged clothes with frightful faces. They lived down there in the mud. Divers would die after meeting the marching dead, die horribly on land, and soon none would go down."

Then one day, I heard more about the strange tale from a chap who had been with the British Navy in the war of 1914-18.

"Odessa?" Oh, yes, he knew of it and more than enough. What he knew came to me indirectly but it strengthened the grisly saga of underseas and completely tormented my imagination. He had new facts—but no solution.

When all Russia was in terror, he recalled, when the Romanoffs had been slain in a cellar and the Kerensky Government overthrown, madness had raged in Odessa with conflicting parties and factions pillaging the city, killing one another, struggling for control. There had been a hospital there, but after the German invasion and the subsequent seizure by the Bolshevik forces, the city was in shambles.

After the Armistice, a British destroyer tore through the Black Sea and cast anchor in the deep clinging mud of Odessa Bay, preparatory to warping into dock. An anchor was lost and the destroyer dropped a diver down to locate it. Before he reached bottom he was signalling to be drawn up, screaming like a maniac into his phone. When his gear was removed, he collapsed to the deck. The congested, swollen state of his face showed something extraordinary had happened to him—and he was speechless. He was hurried ashore to the hospital.

Hospital doctors could give little information. They repeated the incredible story that Odessa natives told—a tale of kidnapped men who never were seen again, dead or alive. Perhaps they were living at the bottom of the sea!

All of which struck the stolid British seamen as stuff and nonsense. But His Majesty's Navy had lost an anchor and that anchor had to be found. The captain ordered that diving operations be resumed. An officer volunteered to carry on the search and he was lowered.

Odessa Bay is not deep but the bottom is very soft and into the water for many years has been spewed the waste of chemical and tin-plate factories and the officer stirred up masses of debris as he worked. Suddenly he sustained the shock of his life.

What he saw was a company of men marching towards him—dead men marching as if to meet him. Some wore tattered uniforms, some were in civilian clothes. Eyes bleared like the eyes of fish, mouths agape, lips contorted as in silent laughter on some faces, on others as if ready to shout a warning. They moved slowly as though they feared they would be carried upward to the sea's surface.

Then something seemed to snap in the heart of the fright-frozen officer, and his veins stretched as from some surging force. The awful creatures stopped abruptly. Their naked arms lifted from the rags, their puffy hands extended, their laughing, gaping, grinning mouths seemed to welcome him. They moved like soldiers, in unison and with a suggestion of keeping step as to inaudible music, perhaps to their own guttural chanting! No emaciated refugees, they! Fat as monstrous sea slugs they seemed, and their flesh was mottled and repellent, like dwellers far from sunshine!

Bearded, many of them were, but others showed faces cadaverously clean. And... they... were... coming... towards him with arms outstretched again!

On the destroyer's deck, they felt the tug of the cables and without waiting for a word from the phone hoisted the officer aboard. He was senseless when the helmet was screwed off. Doctors went to work and he told what he had seen.

Right there, the weird narrative broke off short. But what the former British sailor said lashed my determination to get the answer to it all, for certain I was that an answer existed.

What Odessa would not give up, Chicago did! A learned doctor chatted with me over a cup of coffee recently. The subject of diving and its effect on health came up. He professed deep interest and explained:

"Through the war, I was in Odessa, at the hospital there. One of our staff, Dr. Sokoloff, a Russian like myself, was seized by anarchist terrorists."

I held my breath lest the spell be broken and nodded eagerly. Casually, the doctor said:

"The Bolsheviks helped us search. We learned he had been murdered by the terrorists and thrown into the bay. We offered a reward. Divers went down and some came up quite insane, temporarily, and one or two died from strange maladies. Then a British destroyer lost an anchor and sent an officer down. He didn't find the anchor, but he saw a shocking spectacle and finally was able to describe it—dead men marching on him, he said, a regiment of them, ragged, revolting to see, but alive, marching as to music. They thought he was insane."

"But were there marching dead down there?" I asked. "Or were all the divers crazy?"

"No, not exactly," said the doctor, thoughtfully. "You see, before the Bolsheviks arrived, the anarchist terrorists imprisoned scores of men for revenge or ransom. The prisons were filled. They were chained by the legs to prevent flight, but their hands were free. When the Bolshevik forces arrived, the terrorists fled, but first they shot their prisoners lest they talked to the invaders. Then they flung the bodies into the bay—and those are the bodies the divers saw."

"But, they were standing up, they were the marching dead?"

"They were standing," explained the doctor, "because their leg-irons were so heavy that their feet were held in the mud. The water is not deep and surface disturbances would stir them. They did not march but they moved together—the currents in the bay swayed them. Ultimately, we recovered every corpse. And that is all."

"No, it isn't!" I exclaimed. "Such bodies would have been decomposed. And why were so many divers stricken?"

"Gently, my friend" urged the doctor. "The masses of industrial chemicals dumped into the bay evidently preserved the bodies. As for the maladies of the divers, we never understood them fully. Possibly they can be explained by glandular action and the chemistry of fear. All the divers were brave, experienced, accustomed to danger—but none to the shock of what they saw. Perhaps the excessive adrenalin poured into the blood stream—which already had been charged heavily with nitrogen, due to the pressure under water—many have generated deadly poisons, but we are not sure. The shock, of course, induced insanity."

And so the mystery of the marching dead had been solved.

18th CENTURY PROPHECY

The time will come, when thou shalt lift thine eyes
To watch a long-drawn battle in the skies,
While aged peasants, too amazed for words,
Stare at the flying fleets of wond'rous birds.
England, so long the mistress of the sea,
Where winds and waves confess her sovereignty,
Her ancient triumphs yet on high shall bear,
And reign, the sovereign of the conquered air.

(Translated from Gray's 'Luna Habitabilis', Cambridge 1737)

Make it come true! Over two hundred years ago this remarkable vision of the war in the air was written down in Latin verse by the great English poet who composed the famous 'Elegy'. To make Great Britain 'Sovereign of the conquered air' is now our task. There is no time to 'stare at the flying fleets,' we must exert all our energies to increase them. Everyone must help. ASLEEP FOR FOUR YEARS War Wounded Man Awakes Awaking in a Kent hospital after four years sleep, during which he was nourished by means of injections, Victor Cleave, of Folkestone, says that he remembers nothing. He had no dreams no thoughts, and no feelings. Cleave was wounded in the head in the war. Later he was employed on the railway. He fell asleep at his work, people calling him "lazy bones" and "Weary Willie," and when he was sent to hospital he was in a state of coma. He is now at home with his wife and children.

BROUGHT BACK FROM THE GRAVE

Dr. S. Bruikhenko, of Moscow, inventor of the artificial heart, claims that he can bring the dead back to life.

This fantastic claim the doctor bases on the experiments he has carried out on animals. He has frozen dogs to death, thawed them out, and then set their hearts working again.

Dr. Bruikhenko claims that if Amundsen, the famous explorer, who was lost in the Arctic, is found, he will be able to bring him back to life, provided that he is still frozen.

That life can be restored to the apparently dead in cases where the heart stops under an anaesthetic is well known. All that has happened is that the heart, the body's giant pump, has stopped for a moment. It can be revived by the massaging hand of the surgeon.

Seems Fantastic

But that a man long frozen in the ice of the Polar regions can be made to breathe and think again seems as fantastic as Faust's dream: to conjure back the gift of youth from old age.

But Faust enlisted the Devil on his side in his war against death. Dr. Bruikhenko enlists science.

The Devil failed poor Faust. Is the Russian dreamer of scientific dreams likely to fare any better?

A German on the Germans

It is a hard saying and yet I say it because it is the truth. I cannot imagine a nation more inhuman than the Germans. You see artisans but no human beings, thinkers but no human beings, priests but no human beings, masters and servants, adult and educated men but no human beings—does this not remind you of a battlefield where arms and legs lie about whilst the life blood soaks away into the sand?

The virtues the Germans possess are nothing but glittering evil, nothing but a certain courage in emergency born of cowardly fear. Their wicked heart does not comfort a pure soul...

I tell you there is nothing holy which is not profaned and used as a makeshift by this nation; things which are respected as pure and holy by savages are exploited by this scheming people in the way of trade, for they cannot do otherwise...

If only they were modest, these people—if only they did not set themselves up as a law unto those who are far better than they—if only they did not revile whatever they themselves are not—and, if revile they must, if only they did not mock the Divine...

Nothing on earth is perfect—that is the burden of their song. Oh, would that someone would tell these men who do not know God that with them nothing can be perfect, because they defile every holy thing with the touch of their clumsy hands—because they do not reverence the root of all growth, holy Nature—because their life is empty and burdened with vain worries, full of cold and silent rancour—because they despise the genius which gives strength and nobility to human work, cheerfulness to pain, love and fraternal feelings to towns and houses...

Woe to the stranger who on his wanderings falls among such people, and thrice woe to him who, driven by sorrow, a beggar like me, comes into their midst...

From "Hyperion," by the great German poet, Friedrich Holderlin (1770-1843)

With an Idea and Determination... HE REVOLUTIONISED MEDICINE!

Prof. BROWN-SEQUARD, making his great discovery.

In 1889 Professor Charles Edouard Brown-Sequard, the famous scientist, made his epoch-making discovery, when he administered to himself glandular extract in his laboratory in Paris. To the amazement of himself and other physicians, the experiment proved a great success and a new chapter was opened in the modern book of therapeutics.

His life was a great one....most of it spent in a littered laboratory conducting ceaseless experiments. Never did a man work so hard—and succeed so brilliantly!

Professor Brown-Sequard's discovery is mentioned in authoritative medical books on the subject.

The harnessing of physical and chemical forces, which has produced our modern rapidity of travel and communication; steam, electric power, telegraphy, and the conquest of the air, affect our lives profoundly. And yet it may well be that biological knowledge and its many applications to the control and cure of disease and, above all, its elimination and prevention, have done far more to lighten the burden under which mankind struggles and to raise the level of civilization.

The great progress of medical science and the rapid strides it has made in the last hundred years have saved countless lives, prolonged and alleviated many others, and given us all a better chance of expanding what personal talents we have and of making the best of our time.

Humanity is beginning to see how to live.

All this is due to those men—Road Makers of Science—who have elucidated for us the immutable laws which underlie our functions. By no means the least of these was the immortal discoverer of Gland Therapy—Prof. Brown-Sequard, the famous French Scientist, for it is not difficult to see how he provided a sure basis on which modern science could build with confidence and success.

Although many lives have passed in the contemplation of Nature, attempting with infinite patience to solve the problems which she presents in such profusion, few philosophers have succeeded in making such a fundamental and far-reaching discovery as that of the function of the human glands.

It is not too much to say that enunciation of this principle revolutionised medicine and set it firmly upon a rational footing. So much was made clear and so many vistas were opened that it would seem that this conception was a lever powerful enough to set in motion those trains of scientific experiment and research which have brought us to our present state of knowledge and, still gathering speed and power, lead us confidently to hope for yet wider and deeper understanding of natural laws, in particular those which govern the great mystery of Life itself.

Gland Therapy is no myth. Some of the highest medical authorities in Europe and America believe in the curative efficacy of gland treatment for sexual weakness and other ailments.

* Life in Lapland—by one who has just returned from there.

Jonas the Wolf-Hunter

By Frank Illingworth

—O—

It had been a long journey—thirty-six hours by boat, nearly a day and a half by express train up the spine of Sweden, seven hours by bus. And now I stood in Karasundo, roughly two hundred miles north of the Circle in Arctic Lapland, awaiting the arrival of Jonas-the-wolf-hunter with his two reindeer sleighs. It was cold, and despite the early hour almost dark.

Jonas was a typical Karasundo Lapp... a thick-set little man of about five feet four inches with the high cheek bones, broad forehead, and slanting eyes of the Mongol. A wide belt, from which hung a wooden cup and spoon and a knife, gathered in his coat at the waist; his trousers tapered to the ankles and disappeared within grass-lined boots; and as he greeted me with a bow, the crimson pompom atop his cap flopped over the other ear. He was to be my host, and I took an instant liking to him. I was welcome, but to be a social success I must know a little of Lappish etiquette.

I had learnt in southern Lapland that the Lapp's tent is his castle. By all means the traveller may enter uninvited, for to lack shelter in the Arctic winter is to risk frostbite and death itself; but he must not step across the two logs placed at an angle to each other just inside the entrance, for they mark the extent of the Lapp's "hall."

After a very long drive the pulkas (sledges) drew up amid a shower of snow by Jonas's conically shaped tent. Jonas's wife was busy. As I entered, she pushed aside a pile of boot-grass drying by the fire; stretched towards the crib hanging from the side of the tent her head. Within lay the youngest Jonas child, bound up like a mummy. No wonder, I thought, so many Lapp infants suffocate in their cribs. Mrs. Jonas breast-fed the child without removing it from the the crib (by the simple expedient of holding the crib against herself!) before placing the baby, satisfied and warm, over her head. Then she turned to other wifely duties; there was the fire to be fed, coffee to be brewed, a huge pile of priceless furs to be tidied, dogs to be kicked out of the way.

Life in Lapland revolves round the care of the reindeer. The animals provide the Lapps with clothing, bedding, thread; with a method of transport across a wicked tundra practically bare of roads; with bone from which to make implements; with a means of purchasing a wife; and, above all, with food and milk... though it is in comparatively recent times that the Lapp learnt to milk his reindeer. Without his reindeer the Lapp would assuredly perish. So it is that as the herds move from the mountains in the summer to the frozen marshes and forests in the winter, the Lapp must root up his tent and follow them. Day in day out the Lapp tends his reindeer; his wife cures the reindeer meat and pelts; his dogs protect them from the ravages of the wolf. It is not surprising, therefore, that, as the guardian of his herds, the Lapp should love his dogs.

In all seriousness I was told that centuries ago, in the days before animals lost the power to converse freely with Man, a Lapp dog watched a Lapp trying to round up his herd. Being hungry, the animal offered his help.

"Would you but make me three promises," said the dog, "I and my friends will serve you faithfully for ever, protecting your herds from the cruel wolf,"

"What, dog," queried the Lapp, "are those three promises?"

"That you feed us once a day, that you never beat us when we are tired, that you hang us when too old to work."

READ WHAT CURED PATIENTS SAY.

These are a few of the many hundreds of testimonials Received during the past five years; which are genuine and unsolicited.

WONDERFUL CHANGE

Mr. A. F. Webb. "Palm Court" Ground Floor. Churchgate Reclamation. Bombay. ".....I was tired of having Insulin injections daily. My doctor advised me to take by mouth Pancre-Vite. I followed his advice and am glad to say that the course of treatment effected a wonderful change in my condition. I have never felt so fit as I do now, since I got diabetes. There is no sign whatever of the disease....."

Completely Cured.

Mrs. S. T. Davis. 8, St. George's Gate Rd. Hastings. Calcutta. ".....I suffered for over five years with diabetes. It robbed me of energy and vitality. The digestive organs were also impaired, so my food seemed tasteless and like lead in my stomach. I passed a dreary existence. Pancre-Vite was the only remedy that helped me. I began taking it in January and when the warm weather came I was completely cured, felt like a new woman, full of life and hope.

Words cannot tell how pleased I am to have my health back. I have a keen appetite and enjoy my meals; digestion is perfect. All symptoms of diabetes have left me. I have gained twenty-six pounds in weight and feel in harmony with all the world because I am now perfectly well....."

Cured Thoroughly.

Mr. V. Thompson. 151, Keighley St. Rangoon. Burma. ".....I cannot fully express the thanks I owe for your Pancre-Vite. I have suffered from diabetes for so long that I did not think there was any cure for it as I had tried everything that was recommended to me. Finally, I gave Pancre-Vite a trial and to my delight it cured me thoroughly. There is no trace of sugar, and my weight and strength is much increased....."

Extracts from Commendatory Letters received from the Medical Profession. Most Valuable Remedy.

Dr. A. F. De. Ravignac. (Paris). writes:—".....Pancre-Vite was first called to my attention by a patient of mine. The man in question, Monsieur Gabriel Coulondre, told me that no other medicine did him so much good as Pancre-Vite, and after studying his case, I advised him to keep on taking it. He was suffering from chronic diabetes and told me that the disease was of twelve years standing. Monsieur Coulondre was perfectly cured after five months treatment.

Dr. De. Ravignac

I became fully convinced of the great value of Pancre-Vite after observing its beneficial results in a number of other cases. From the experience of a practice stretching over twenty years, I have no hesitation in stating that Pancre-Vite is a most valuable remedy for diabetes. I prescribe it myself now and shall be glad to add my endorsement to that of my brother physicians who are commending it....."

Positive and Permanent Cure.

Dr. R. C. Duhamel. (Paris). writes:—".....I treated a diabetic patient last year with Pancre-Vite. The first six bottles did not give any perceptible improvement and my patient became disheartened and wanted to stop the treatment. I advised him to complete the course, pointing out that even the best medicines are slow to give improvement in certain cases, and he followed my advice with excellent results. After twelve bottles had been taken, the sugar began to diminish and weight had increased by 5 lbs. At the end of the course no sugar could be detected, even by analysis, and his weight is now 10 st. 8 lbs. perfectly normal for his height.

Dr. Duhamel

To make sure that there would be no recurrence of the disease, I advised my patient to take the treatment for a month longer than the prescribed course. At the time of writing this letter, it is six months since the treatment was stopped and there is no trace whatever of sugar or any other symptom.

Unhesitatingly, I endorse Pancre-Vite as a positive and permanent cure for Diabetes....."

Harmony of Body And Mind Quite Essential For Health

Health means harmony and unless there is harmony between the body and the mind health is impossible of attainment, writes Health editorially.

While it is possible to diagnose bodily diseases and cure them by timely medical aid, it is very hard to probe into the mind and treat its malady.

It may be said without fear of contradiction, that most bodily ailments are due to mental causes. Irregular habits in thinking, losing of temper, lack of self-control, fears and prejudices lead to mental ill-health and disorder.

For example, worry and depression of spirits may cause loss of appetite and dyspepsia. Rage may bring on heart failure or apoplexy.

Our ancients have laid great stress on the proper cultivation of the mind. Their methods were self-control, right thought and calmness. Self-control confers strength, right thought mastery and calmness, power.

Twelve Thousand Miles of Blood Vessels!

Your body contains, according to latest scientific computation, twelve thousand miles of blood vessels. Think of that, 12,000 miles! Sufficient to stretch half-way round the world. This wonderful pipeline of the blood consists of arteries capillaries and veins communicating with that marvellous pumping station, the heart. By means of this vital pipe-line, the blood is carried to every one of the millions upon millions of the cells of the body, to nourish; to cleanse; and to renew. In all diseased conditions, no matter what the ailment may be, the blood stream is at fault, and no treatment can give lasting results if this all-important fact is overlooked. Keep the blood free-running, like a deep, fast-flowing river, enrich it with the necessary elements for cell building, and remove all toxic and acid waste materials, and health MUST result. This is precisely what Galaxin the Great Blood Cleanser is designed to do; it is actually what Galaxin does, surely and effectively. Galaxin Cures through the blood, unhindered, irresistibly!

"Britannia Rules . . ."

While the captured German fleet lay in Scapa Flow, an English quartermaster was posted on each vessel. To one of these, leaning over the taffrail came a German quartermaster.

"I sinks nosing of your ships," quoth he. The Englishman did not reply. "And I sinks nosing of your officers, your Jellicoes, your Beattys . . ." Overcome by his feelings, the German spat over the rail. Whereupon the Englishman turned and said calmly:

"Now! Look'ere. I dont care wot you thinks about our ships, our sailors, and our officers But don't you go spittin' into our sea!"

SYPHILIS—PUBLIC ENEMY NO. 1.

Its origin, symptoms, tests, consequences and cure:

By a Doctor.

The pretty picture below is a microscopic portrait of a little creature whose name is Spirochaeta Pallida . . . or Spirochete, or Syphilis. . . .

The Spirochete is a destructive medium with power beyond the wildest dreams of the most visionary munitions magnate. It has a kick like an express train; if it connects with your grand'father, your little daughter's teeth may drop out from the vibrations; it can cause anything from bright's disease to insanity in its victim; and today there are millions of cases all over the world.

Just in case the above seems vague, let me point out the relation of syphilis to other disease on a comparative basis as to prevalence—there is annually twice as much Syphilis as Scarlet Fever; 13 times as much as Typhoid Fever; and 1½ times as much as Tuberculosis There is no disease on earth, except Leprosy, so transmittable, so dreadful, so loathsome as Syphilis. This terrible disease, unless scientifically treated, rapidly effects its dire ravages, permeating the very brain, nerves and muscles, even the marrow of the bones, and exhausting the vitality of the most robust constitution.

1940	NEO SADALAN The new & improved formula of Dr. Pierre De Sadalan that clinches the fight even in longstanding cases. Syphilis Can be Cured!

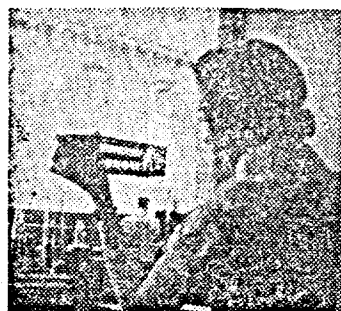

In the Wassermann test the blood is placed in a test tube instead of being prepared on a slide. After it is in the test tube an antigen is added to the blood. The test tube is then placed into a refrigerator where it is left overnight.

In the morning another reagent is added.

And the test tube is then immersed in a warm water bath.

It is only after these steps that the colour change (dark & clear is negative... light & cloudy shows infection) may be observed.

fact that on an average every family of seven contains at least one infected person. And what's more shocking is the fact that in a survey of a representative group of men and women it was discovered that four out of five of them could be infected and, so far as a knowledge of the symptoms goes, they wouldn't know it! There in a nutshell you have the purpose of this article.

Syphilis has a past; it has a present; and it has a future which is being built up at the rate of hundreds of thousands of cases yearly. All this when there is a cure! 86 % of primary cases can be cured, and in secondary cases the rate of cures with the chemical oral treatment,—Neo Sadalan, is 81 %. This is the best treatment for all cases of Syphilis and absolutely safe to use. It is guaranteed to effect a thorough and permanent cure.

The safety of society demands that every patient suffering with syphilis should be required to continue the treatment until the disease is arrested or cured. Without energetic treatment with Neo Sadalan, the patient with Syphilis may expect to become progressively worse until he is utterly incapacitated and fatally affected. He should not think of stopping the treatment until repeated blood tests indicate that the disease is probably cured or at least definitely arrested. Even after such a supposed cure, he should take blood tests at intervals and should be on the alert for the first signs of recurrence. He should not consider marriage unless he is advised by competent medical authorities that it is probably safe. In the event of pregnancy supposedly cured women should take another course of treatment in order that she may with certainty protect the child.

Symptoms And Stages.

From ten to forty-six but generally twenty four days from the entry of the germs into the body, there appears on the affected part a small red pimple. It goes on increasing slowly and within a week becomes watery vesicle with inflamed base. The vesicle bursts and leaves a sore with a hard margin elevated edges, and depressed centre. The sore is painless and there is a very small amount of watery discharge from it. This sore is called a hard chancre and it indicates the locality where the virus was first introduced. Generally the sores are situated on the genitals but they have been observed on every part of the body. In the males, if the infection takes place at the genital region, the sores appear on the glans penis or under the foreskin or just on the opening of the urinary passage. A week after the appearance of the sore on the penis the lymphatic glands swell up. They are hard with no pus or pain. This is the primary stage of syphilis.

SECONDARY SYPHILIS:—On average, secondary symptoms appear in about six weeks, but they may appear months later. The patient feels restless, dispirited, and weak in body. More often than not, he suffers from rheumatic pains, particularly in the skin bones and the region of ankles. Scaly eruptions of a light red colour appear on the body and there is acute sore throat with ulcers on the tongue or mouth. The mucous membrane of the nasal passages also gets affected and there is foul discharge from the nose. Eye troubles, too, are not uncommon. The above symptoms are all due to the dissemination of the organism in the blood.

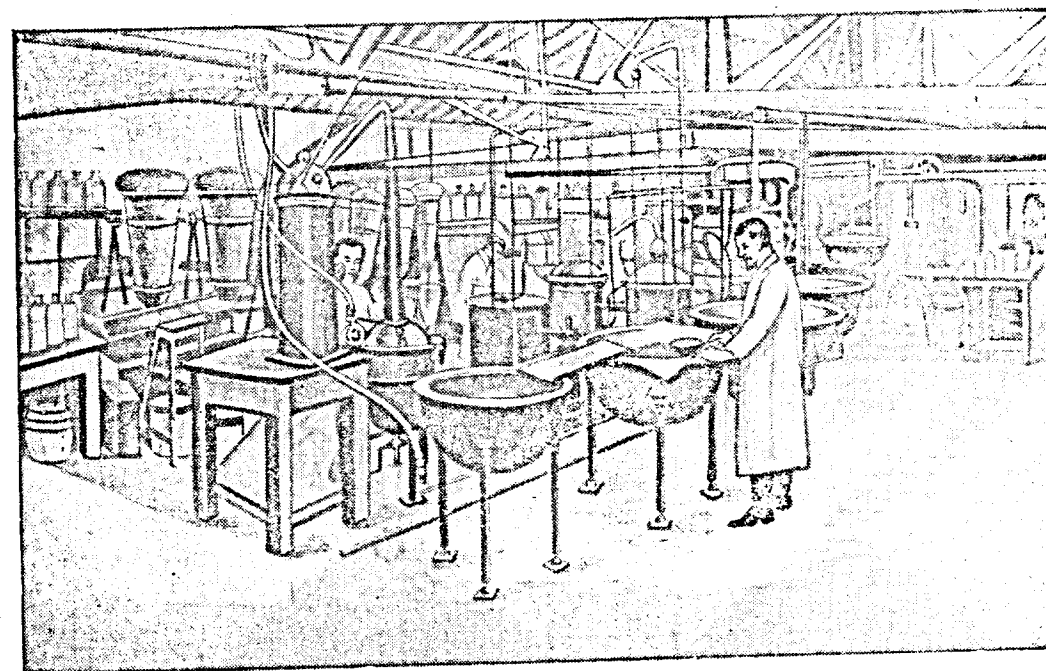

TERTIARY SYPHILIS is a disease of the bones and general diffusion of the poison through the system. It manifests itself in the inflammation of different glands of the body with severe pains in the bones.

The reason for this article is to show that there is hope; that there is a cure; that Syphilis is no longer an unknown assailant. It is a marauder whose habits and weaknesses are known to the extent that where he is found, he can be stamped out...annihilated.

THE GREAT SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF THE BERGERET LABORATORIES.

—(o)—

Progress in clinical medicine is dependent on progress in the ancillary sciences, physiology, pharmacology, etc., new discoveries in pure science are the needs; but, whoever or whatever he is, he must see the necessity of applying scientifically-established facts to human needs.

Chemists at work at the Bergeret Laboratories.

stuff on which clinical progress feeds. But between the discovery in pure science and its application to medicine, there must be an investigator. He may be a physician, a chemist, a bacteriolo-

When a clinical application has been found for a scientific discovery, the work has just begun. A method must be worked out by which a chemical process or a biological technique employed in the experimental laboratory can be applied in production operations. And a practical method of clinical administration must be worked out, for an effective remedy cannot be reserved for a few selected patients—it must be made available to thousands. Moreover, the first crude product, perhaps eagerly sought because of the imperative need for it, must be improved and refined so that its efficacy may be increased and its field of usefulness broadened.

The Discovery of Endophon.

The year 1931 saw the discovery of ENDOPHON. It was made possible only by preceding research. Dr. Gustave Leclerc, a chemist on the consulting staff was the first to discover the activity of certain glands. Dr. Louis Perrancourt, also on the consulting staff, was likewise working on the problem. He completed his work shortly after Leclerc's discovery, and assigned to the preparation its correct formula.

The discovery of ENDOPHON marked a new era in Glandular Therapy. Recently, a new Gland Extract has been discovered and embodied in ENDOPHON, greatly increasing its curative efficacy.

Reported in Eighteen Medical Papers.

A striking example of the achievements of the Bergeret Laboratories is illustrated in the work which led to the discovery of ENDOPHON. The course of this work was reported in eighteen medical papers.

Policy of the Bergeret Laboratories.

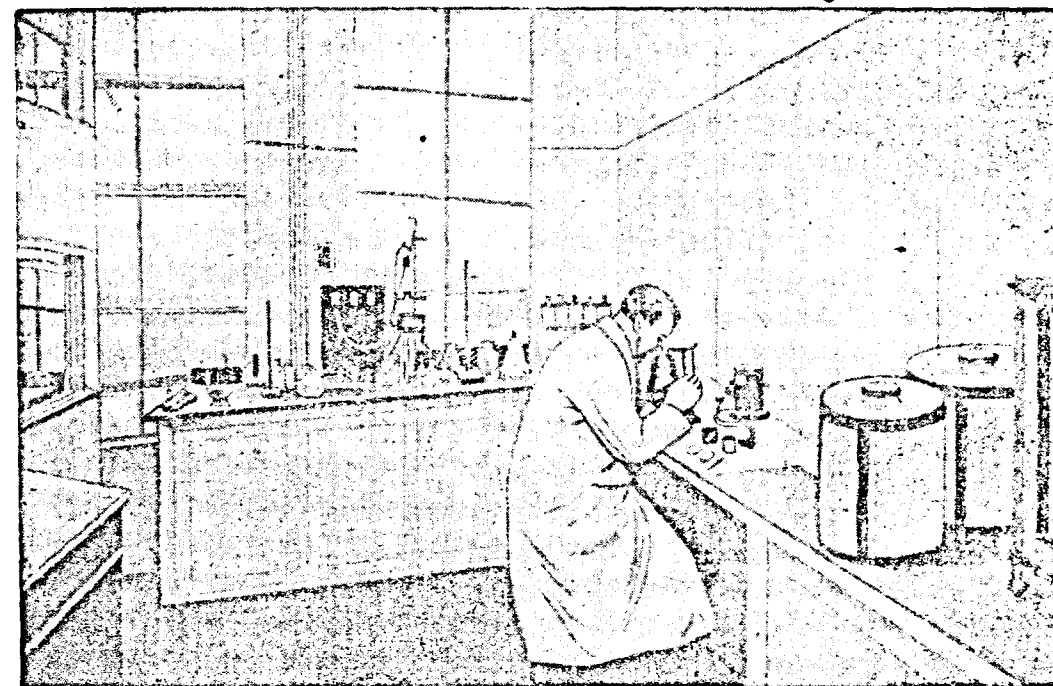

It has always been the policy of the Bergeret Laboratories never to offer a product to the world until it has been first subjected to the most exhaustive tests. Therefore; you may be sure that not only has a Bergeret Product been standardised, and made to conform to the highest degree of purity, and that the utmost demands of science have been utilized in its manufacture, but also that its therapeutic value has been demonstrated beyond any question of doubt.

Diabetes Mellitus and the Best Treatment.

Liver, defective Kidneys, pathological changes in the nervous system and worry.

Symptoms.

The Symptoms are Boils, Eczema and other skin affections. Excessive thirst, loss of weight and nervous prostration. Diabetes often leads to Impotence.

The Toll of Diabetes.

A rough estimate indicates that about 40,00,000 people in India, Burma and Ceylon suffer from this dreadful disease.

Types of Diabetes.

There are two types of diabetes, viz., (1) Diabetes Mellitus, where presence of sugar in the urine is indicated. This is the most common type. (2) Diabetes Insipidus—a condition where no sugar is present in the urine. This type is very rare. (Urine is passed in large quantities in both the conditions).

Diabetes Mellitus is one of the most dangerous, stubborn and treacherous of all diseases, if neglected. Any delay in treatment not only aggravates it, but leads to serious complications.

The Treatment.

The treatment at first was only a diet prescription. A revolution in the treatment was made by Banting of Canada, by the isolation of INSULIN. Insulin was hailed as a miracle, consummating the work started by Lancereaux in 1877. A new era was thus opened and was followed by intense research in the clinical field, the results of which have been published in many newspapers.

The disease is as old as the Sphinx. Ancient Egyptian treatises on medicine speak of a disease called Polyuria, which is none other than diabetes.

The Cause of Diabetes.

The cause of diabetes is due to a disturbance in the chemical process of digestion, with the result that the sugar passes with urine, instead of undergoing the normal transformation into other substances before it leaves the organism. Defective Pancreas gland is the chief cause of diabetes. Other causative factors are defective

But Insulin, unfortunately, is not in any sense a "cure" of diabetes mellitus. Spectacular as is its news, the diabetic who started to use it in 1922, is still using it and in virtually the same dosage. The death rate for diabetes has not altered much in 20 years. In short, the causative factors of the disease are controlled, not eradicated or changed.

The transient effects of Insulin and the necessity for its repeated injections have led some Continental workers to search for an oral Insulin compound, which would obviate these two great drawbacks of Insulin therapy in Diabetes.

The Solution of the Problem.

Early in 1937, Grimard of Paris announced his oral Insulin preparation, which he named Pancre-Vite, a combination of Pancreas gland extract (Insulin in solid form) with enzymes, Steapsin, Myrtillin, Amylopsin, Suprarenal Substance, Hepatic Juice and Hormones.

The administration of Pancreatic gland extracts with other substances by the mouth has scores of clinical and laboratory reports in its favour. One of these reports are given below:

"In a long series of blood-sugar tests on patients, Pancreas extract was found to cause a profound blood-sugar fall in 82% of the cases observed within two hours after administration by mouth. Controls of about an equal number of patients under the same clinical conditions, as far as this was possible, showed a fall in less than 40%."—W. N. Berkeley, "Principles and Practice of Endocrine Medicine," Page 261.

Grimard's oral insulin preparation is a true, well-balanced remedy for diabetes, so definitely capable of restoring the lost functions to the defective pancreas.

Pancre-Vite is prepared in the form of capsules and when acting, they produce a progressive decrease in the urinary sugar, and a gradual disappearance of the morbid phenomena found in a person suffering from diabetes. This preparation is quite harmless to take.

A Grave Warning.

Hundreds of thousands of people die every year from diabetes mellitus in India. Most of them could have been saved if only rational treatment had been taken. If you feel run down and if there is loss of appetite, sleeplessness, frequent urination and excessive thirst, then it is nature's warning and you should have your urine examined at once. If it is proved that you are suffering from diabetes, do not neglect yourself, but take treatment promptly.

PATIENTS "FROZEN" FOR FIVE DAYS

Suspension of Life Amazes Medical World

Experiments in "freezing" sick patients into a virtually suspended state of life—which may prove to be of the utmost importance in the world of medicine—have been made by to Philadelphia doctors, Dr. Temples S. Fay and Dr. Lawrence W. Smith.

They have been experimenting with cancer victims and they want to try their "freezing" process on heart disease, insanity, tuberculosis and many other diseases.

The process, as outlined by them at the annual meeting of the American Medical Association, is as follows:

The patients are stripped and covered with cracked ice. An electric fan is turned on. In three hours their internal temperatures are forced down below 90 degrees,

The patients literally go into a sleep similar to that drowsiness experienced normally by a freezing person, except that in this case the patients feel no pain.

Their room is kept cold so that when the ice is removed they remain cold. They stay like that for five days.

Then they are roused with hot coffee and warm applications. They awake smiling, with no memory of what has happened.

Cancer Cells Killed

In the meantime, it is claimed, the cold has killed at least the young cancer cells which form from 10 to 90 per cent. of growing cancer according to indications from these experiments.

But it is not this that has amazed the medical world.

It is the suspension of life—of which admittedly no one seems to know quite how to take advantage—that has awakened doctors to the possibilities of this freezing process.

For in their "frozen sleep," the patients' pulse beat disappears. Only the electrocardiograph shows that their hearts are still beating and that surprisingly the rhythm is perfect, although very light.

Their kidneys and apparently all their digestive organs cease to work. But this, ordinarily a sign of approaching death, seems of no danger because at the same time analysis of the blood shows it has ceased to fill up with waste products. There is nothing to eliminate.

Metabolism—the process whereby nutritive materials is built up into living matter—is reduced to 10 per cent. from 20.

Prolonging Life

No frozen patient has ever caught pneumonia or a cold; the germs in their bodies apparently slow down along with the entire organism.

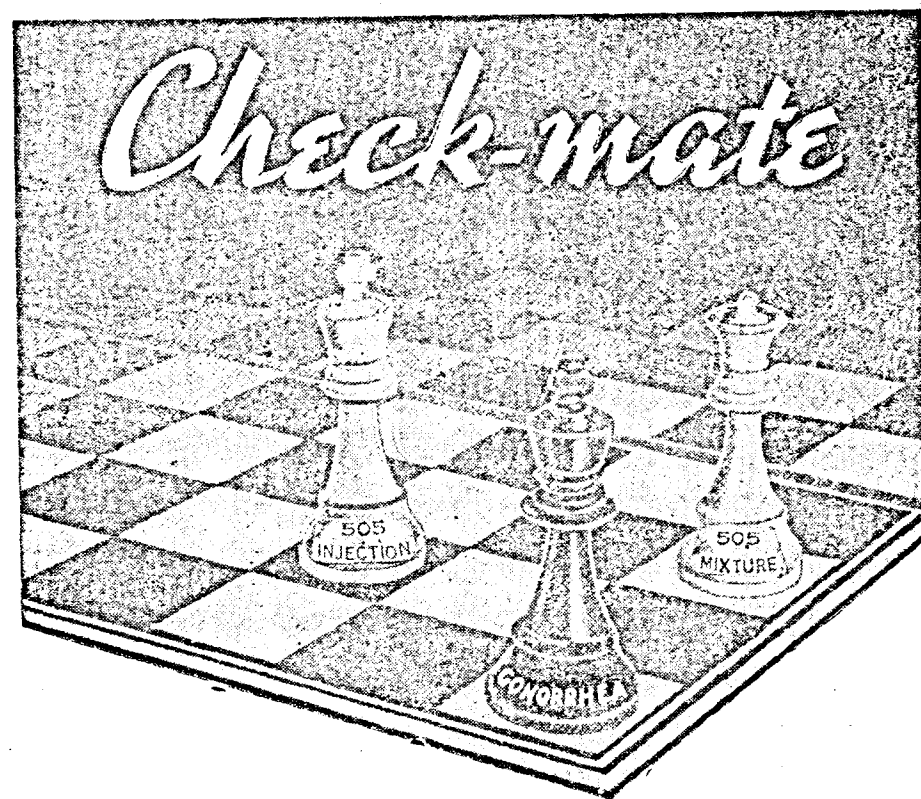

Previously, when a patient's temperature dropped even close to 90 degrees death was considered inevitable. But in these new experiments one woman's temperature was brought down to 82 for a short period with no ill effects.

What the experiments portend, doctors cannot forecast.

Some consider that they may provide a new weapon for Science. By freezing patients in this manner, they think, it should be possible to give the heart a complete rest, as nothing else can, and so, perhaps prolong life. Germ diseases too, may be susceptible to this treatment.

Human "hibernation" is in its infancy but its possibilities are being viewed with grave attention by the medical profession.

Gonorrhea—The Best Treatment

BY A DOCTOR.

Gonorrhea is on the increase. In fact, the latest world statistics suggest that one out of five persons in capitals, like London and New York are stricken with the disease.

The common fallacy that it is no worse than a bad cold is exploded. It is now recognised by clinical and pathological evidence as a dangerous disease with serious complications. Therefore, it should never be neglected.

Gonorrhea is an infective process due to the action of a specific micro-organism known as Gonococcus. It is characterized by a discharge of pus through the urethra. The primary lesion is an acute catarrhal inflammation of the anterior portion of the urethra. It quickly runs to suppuration, and if neglected, it attacks the bladder and weakens it, causing bladder trouble, then the prostate gland, and passing through the sub-acute and acute stages, penetrates the circulation and organic parenchymata, producing complications like stricture, epididymitis, gonorrhoeal rheumatism, vesiculitis, prostatitis, orchitis (swollen testicles) pyelitis, etc: and sometimes causes Impotence.

The symptoms of the disease usually start within 5 to 10 days after infection.

The patient may get some slight itching of the meatus and a burning sensation while passing urine. The lips of the meatus are congested and swollen. Gradually a serious discharge appears which though thin and mucoid in the beginning, soon becomes thick and yellow. There is sometimes a dragging pain in the back and some slight constitutional disturbances such as fever.

Occasionally the swelling inside the urethra is so great, that there is an hindrance in the flow of urine and on exertion haemorrhage occurs. The first attack is always more troublesome than the subsequent ones, though it responds easier to treatment. When this disease reaches the chronic stage it needs prolonged treatment.

The best treatment is a mixture and an Injection. Abortive treatment will aggravate the urethra and bring about complications.

The Mixture taken internally controls such distressing symptoms as pain, burning on urination, strangury and frequency. It does not upset the stomach. The Injection heals the ulcerations of the urethral mucosa or inflammation of the glandular structures and membranes in or about the urethra.

—NOT WORTHLESS ‘QUACKS’—

* There is enough petrol in a small part of the Antarctic, according to Admiral Byrd, to supply the United States for a century.

Riches under the Polar Ice

By Luc A.-Gravier

—o—

We know practically all there is to know about the north Pole. The South Pole, on the other hand, remains a land of mystery, whose soil hides fantastic riches.

It is only about forty years since explorers began to investigate this desert country. Even now its shape is not completely known, but its area is estimated at roughly six million square miles.

The first man to spend any considerable part of the winter in the Antarctic was the Belgian explorer, Baron A. de Gerlache, in 1198. Since 1900 many expeditions have explored the region and annexed parts of it for the benefit of one country or another. England, Germany, France, Norway, Sweden, and Australia all sent expeditions before the Great War. In 1922 Shackleton left on the expedition from which he never returned.

Last on the scene were the Americans. In 1926 Admiral Byrd undertook the first aeroplane flight over the Antarctic. He renewed his attempt in 1928 with the explorer Wilkins, and between 1933 and 1935 established his quarters for a whole winter—that is, for nearly five months—at the north-eastern end of Roosevelt Island. He came back convinced that the Antarctic was and of the richest territories in the world.

He knew that Shackleton had found coal there, and that others had found iron copper. After his 1935 expedition he himself announced confidently that there was petrol there as well. A periodical devoted to polar exploration, the Polar Record, announced simultaneously that petrol was known to exist in large quantities in Spitzbergen and Arctic Russia, and that there were geological reasons for supposing that similar deposits would be found in the Antarctic.

A commission was appointed by Congress to consider plans for a large-scale expedition, estimated to cost more than a million pounds, compared with the mere £15,000 spent by Gerlache's expedition in 1898. Admiral Byrd told this commission that one group of mineral depositists, situated at the northern edge of the Antarctic, less than six hundred nautical miles from Cape Horn, would alone provide the United States with enough liquid and solid fuel to last a century.

It is expected that five countries will claim a share in the division of the Antarctic continent. The United States is claiming a million square miles at the north end of the ice-cap, south-west of Cape Horn, and about 5,000 miles from Tahiti. It also hopes to get the mountainous mass known as the American Highlands, on the other side of the ice-cap.

Germany, too, is in the field. Last summer she was preparing an expedition designed to get there at the same time as Admiral Byrd's. She claims territory already occupied by Norway and France, and disputes the possession of another area with Australia. And Great Britain may well contest the pretensions of the United States, since the mineral-bearing areas which Admiral Byrd plans to exploit are situated in an area over which she has a general claim. Even Spain and Portugal could, if they wished, find a pretext for intervention in a papal bull of the fifteenth century which divided the pagan world between them for the better propagation of the Christian doctrine!

Petrol provides the world with two-thirds of its transport, and remains the most convenient of all liquid fuels. The territorial ambitions of the totalitarian Powers disguise a single desire: the need for petrol. Already the United States controls more than 59 per cent. of the world's petrol production. As compared with its 123 million tons, the British Empire produces 3,000,000 tons annually, Germany 300,000 tons, and France 78,000 tons. It is easy to see what tremendous power will be in their hands if they succeeded in adding to their existing resources the vast deposits at the South Pole: that is, if these deposits really do exist.

THE VIRILITY OF MANKIND

What Medical Science has accomplished.

By a Doctor.

How to maintain the virility of mankind? This knotty problem has engaged the attention of many famous scientists.

The chief causes of sexual weakness is the vicious habit of masturbation, sexual excesses, prolonged and frequent sexual excitement, which have been proved detrimental in the extreme. The sexual system is deprived of sufficient rest and recuperation and gradually loses its wonted energy. Other causes are excessive exercise, sedentary life, and excessive drinking.

Several attempts have been made to arrive at a formula which would bring about successful results. Commencing from the experiments of Brown Sequard in 1889 down to the recent findings of Dr. Serge Voronoff, the famous Russian Surgeon, it is a long history of laborious investigations by men of outstanding ability who dedicated their lives to the cause of medical progress and the alleviation of human misery.

The outcome of these extensive experiments and research established Gland treatment by the mouth, as best and most rational in the cure of Sexual weakness.

A very important factor in successful gland treatment is FRESHNESS of the vital Gland Substances. It is necessary that they are prepared in gelatine capsule form, to ensure freshness and maximum curative efficacy. Gland Substances in tablet or liquid form quickly deteriorate and become inert and worthless.

Writing: the Greatest Discovery

Many hold that the invention which has had most influence on the development of human society is the plough. Had not an unknown Chinese farmer contrived a wooden share to break up the soil on his land, where would civilisation be to-day?

So runs their argument. But what of the wheel? Without this invention, where would modern industry be, and communications? Yet the Mayas of Central America built up a flowering civilisation centuries before the Conquistadores came to destroy them, and they had not the use of the wheel.

A third opinion holds to the supreme importance of fire on the destiny of mankind. Whoever first tamed fire—fetched it, perhaps, from the red embers of a forest ignited by lightning and carried it to his cave—gave us our greatest boon. Surely the taming of fire was civilisation's most important milestone?

Abraham Lincoln thought not. In a newly found manuscript he discusses the world's greatest discoveries—and gives his vote to the art of writing. His argument runs as follows: If we consider that the spoken word is merely a sound which disappears in a twinkling, and that no human brain can store up all the valuable information imparted to it through speech, then we must agree that the art of translating sounds into signs is the most important of all. Take writing away from humanity and we lose the Bible, history, science, and law. Through the written word past generations speak to us.

Writing, then, was mankind's greatest discovery, according to Lincoln. And next to it—printing. Gutenberg was the father of printing; but we shall never know who first translated speech into signs.

Cigarette History

Cigarettes have been in use in Europe for just over a hundred years. The custom is supposed to have been introduced by French soldiers returning from Algiers, where the natives smoked tobacco wrapped in maize leaves. Another theory holds that Spain was the first European country to popularise the cigarette, as a feminine counterpart of the already popular cigar and pipe. In 1830 Spanish women were adept cigarette smokers, and the art of rolling the slender cylinders was widespread. Ferdinand VII could roll a cigarette in either hand simultaneously.

The first known cigarette factory was established in France in 1843. In England the custom did not take hold till later. Dickens was a cigarette smoker. In a letter dated 1857 he writes to inquire where materials for rolling cigarettes may be bought. But the cigarette did not become universally popular until after 1870, when many of the brands still on the market in Britain were first launched.

* An Egyptian sarcophagus brought death and disaster to its owners.

He Saw the Mummy Move

By Ferdinand Reyna

The speaker is an elderly man with a long white moustache. He is dressed in dark uniform and on his chest is the number 84. He is keeper of the seven rooms of mummies at the British Museum where is to be found, among others, the sarcophagus of young Cleopatra, namesake of the fateful Queen, and whom many believe to be the Queen herself.

He can show you the papyrus on which are recorded the changes of fortune experienced by this young girl of royal birth. He can tell you of many other wonders, too, but it is about his job itself that you should hear him talk. He speaks calmly, in a soft, even voice.

"Perhaps you won't believe me, but my job is sometimes a terrible one. During the long winter days, when London is covered with a dismal cloak of fog, there is often not a living soul about, not a single visitor, not a voice. Around me are the mummies, who are beings of stone to-day, but who once lived and loved, had their own joys and sorrows. . . Their silence is sometimes terrifying.

"Even the jewels that adorn them, with their dull gleam, and the strange animals that guard them—jackals, falcons, fishes, and bulls—everything seems to have a life of its own, born of the solitude. Behind the glass of the cases the scarabs glisten and still preserve their secrets of luck and ill-luck.

"One day—I was younger then—I was really scared. It was an evening towards the end of November. Seated on my stool, I was gazing at the mummy of Thu-Thu, wife of the scribe Ani, who is also here. After a time I found that I could not take my eyes off her. Suddenly—I honestly thought I was going mad—I saw a finger move, then a hand. . . .

"I gave out a fearful cry and collapsed unconscious. They found me later, lying on the ground, as pale as a sheet. I was ill for three months, but all the same I was intent on getting back to my work. I have carried on with it ever since, and I wouldn't give it up for anything in the world. My life is bound up with the mummies. I could retire on pension, but I don't want to. Perhaps my terror was a kind of test which I had to undergo before entering into their strange, uneasy world."

Medical examination of the mummies has revealed some curious things. For instance, we now know that the marriages between close relations that were traditional in the royal families of Thebes and Memphis were not sterile and did not cause any degeneration. We have also learned that the Pharaoh Menepthah, sworn enemy of the Jews, had an attack of smallpox; that Akhnaton had a weak heart; and that toothache was very common among the Egyptians.

Some strange stories have been told about mummified Pharaohs avenging themselves on those who shatter their repose. It is said that near the end of the last century four Englishmen one day broke their journey at Luxor to visit the ruins of the temple of Ammon-Ra. During their short stay they were able to buy, from an independent searcher, a sarcophagus on which was painted a very beautiful woman's face, possessing a charm both disquieting and indefinable.

The four men then continued their journey. One of them was accidentally killed shortly after, while handling a revolver. Another died suddenly the following year. Six months later the third was seriously injured by a stray shot in the shoulder, and they had to amputate his hand. As for the fourth, he got into difficulties on his return to England and, finding himself ruined, shot himself.

This man owned the sarcophagus, and his sister, who inherited it, was soon in trouble herself. On the advice of a fortune-teller, she decided to get rid of the baneful object, but, before doing so she had a picture taken of it. This was done by a well-known photographer—who died not long afterwards. Finally the sarcophagus caused the death of a British Museum official who was arranging for it to be moved, as well as a serious accident in which the man who was transporting it escaped only by a miracle.

Signor Gerolamo Segato, an Italian expert of the first half of the last century, closely studied the question of the preservation of mummies. He entered upon a deep study of Egyptology and the occult sciences, travelled in Asia and Africa, and, like Nostradamus, he penetrated to the heart of the pyramids. On his return he announced that he had made the great discovery, but a mysterious disease was soon to lead him to the grave.

Equally tragic was the fate of Dr. Efisio Marini. This man used to embalm bodies in the Egyptian manner. He would shut himself up in his apartment and refuse to see anyone. To the rare visitors whom he did admit, his laboratory, with all the strange instruments used in the various complicated processes seemed a place of madness. When Dr. Marini died his mind was completely unbalanced and he had not revealed the secret which he claimed to possess.

This same problem is being studied at the moment by the experts of the Egyptian Museum in Vatican City. One of them, Professor Tulli, summed up the whole question when he said to me: "Is there any discovery which has not claimed its victims? Consider the fact that, as far as evil spells—or, more simply, poisons—are concerned, the Egyptians, knew a very great deal. To touch a mummy is nearly always to take a mortal risk."

"I promis," said the Lapp, and instantly the dog ran off to gather together his friends.

That agreement has been adhered to strictly. The Lapp, on his part, is particularly kind to his dogs, and to this day in the hinterland unwanted puppies and old dogs are hanged; while the dogs are the faithful guardians of his herds against the wolf.

It is when the snow is powdery and the wolf flounders up to its lean, grey belly, that the Lapp ventures forth to slaughter with wolf-stick (or rifle, should he possess such a thing), for during such snow conditions a man on skis can easily overtake a wolf to break its back with a single smashing blow of the "stick."

As deeply as the Lapp hates the wolf so he loves his dog. He even takes it to church with him. Men sit on one side, women on the other, and the dogs at the back, and it is a common occurrence for a service to be interrupted while the men leave their pews to separate a heaving mass of snarling animals. A preacher told me how he had once returned to the pulpit with bleeding hands after such a dog fight in his church.

The same preacher it was who told me how he had married a young couple, baptized their child and buried the bridegroom's mother during one continuous service. During the summer two years past the young couple decided to marry but to postpone the actual wedding ceremony until the coming winter, when the journey to church could be made at the same time as the reindeer herds moved from the mountains to the marshes. In the meantime a child arrived, an influenza epidemic which struck the small settlement wiped out two complete families and killed the bridegroom's mother, many reindeer died, and, desperately poor, the young couple were forced to postpone the wedding until the following winter snows. The dead were placed on lake-islands or beneath cairns away from prowling animals until such time as the arrival of winter made it possible for their remains to be conveyed by pulka to church (a journey of several weeks) for decent burial. And with the ceremonies over, the newly-weds journeyed into the interior again to continue the struggle with Nature.

How the Lapps managed to find their way, watchless and compassless, bewildered me until Jonas initiated me into the secret.

Where the north wind strikes stunted trees the bark is invariably darker and the longest limbs invariably point south: Arctic moss grows more thickly on the south side of boulders, and ants always shelter in the lee of hummocks which is on the side away from north winds. So it is that as the Lapp travels he is constantly reminded of two points in the compass, north and south, from which he can fix the quarters.

It was from Jonas that I learnt the etiquette to be observed in the borrowing of a boat. The traveller is welcome to use any boat to convey himself across river or lake when the twenty-four-hours-a-day summer sun has melted the ice. But should he row to the other side he must return the boat to the bank from which he took it, otherwise the owner, or some other traveller, may find himself stranded, and to be stranded in Lapland can so easily result in death. So it is that boats are always left in pairs, one on each bank of a lake or river, and the traveller must make three crossings (no small order if the lake is a mile or two wide) before finally stepping ashore on the farther bank!

While on the subject of water I should tell of the strange experience which befell me in this Arctic land. A Lapp remonstrated with me for drinking from the edge of a lake. Devils, he said, lived in the water, and should one get into my stomach it would eat away my intestines. He quoted case after case in which he had heard of folk dying in agony from this cause, passed me the wooden cup dangling from his belt and, after searching the contents for a sign of a devil, I had my drink!

Never was I so sorry to leave a land as when I once more clambered aboard the bus and waved a final good-bye to Jonas-the-wolf-hunter of Karasuando-Lapland.

GLANDULAR THERAPY.

By Dr. A. F. De Saint-Croix.

Journal of Medicine, Feb: '37.

In the light of modern researches and extraordinary rapid progress in the direction of the use of ductless glands in the treatment of various diseases much is said and has been discussed.

This new principle in medicine has completely revolutionised the old time tonics.

Glandular therapy, the application of which dates back from 1889 when the pioneer of this branch of medicine, Brown Sequard, administered to himself testicular extract, is well known. To the amazement of himself and other physicians, the experiment proved a great success and a new chapter was opened up in the modern book of therapeutics.

Since that day, good many eminent scientists, notably Banting, Best, Murphy, Minot, and Serge Voronoff have experimented on various organisms including human beings, taking help of every available ductless gland found in the body.

Recently the new system has been perfected to such a degree, that surprising results have been recorded in books of medical statistics.

A good deal of information about the subject can be obtained from an authoritative publication put forward by Dr. E. Retterar, a Parisian Professor.

It is also a truth that the most forward medical men whose opinions are valued by physicians of the whole world have personally carried out experiments, and have without reservation, put their stamp of approval on the system and advocated its tremendous possibilities.

It has been scientifically proved that the key to sexual weakness is Glandular Extracts obtained from the glands of bulls, and administered by the mouth in CAPSULE FORM.

Yet all the achievements of the system are reduced to nil if the glands selected are not of standard purity and if due care is not taken during the preparation of their compounds. The bulls selected must not be diseased and must be absolutely young so that all their ductless glands must be functioning with their proper physiological secretions. On strict and thorough pathological examinations, they should prove to be absolutely germ free and in a healthy condition.

The exact proportions selected from different glands is a matter of vital importance.

Another factor of great importance is the preservation and stability of these products. Absolute freshness is essential. The gelatine capsule is recognised as the best method of preserving freshness and therapeutic efficacy. The vital gland substances are completely sealed in the gelatine envelope, and all possibility of deterioration is eliminated.

New Uses of Blood from the Dead

The blood of the dead may soon be used to restore the living to health.

Experiments in Russia are stated to have disclosed these startling facts:—

Blood from corpses gives better results than that from live donors.

Red cell increase is higher after transfusion from a dead person than after transfusion from live donors.

Professor W. N. Shamor, outlining his remarkable experiments on animals and man in The Lancet declares that the transfusion of cadaver (corpse) blood has another definite advantage—notably the rarer and less conspicuous reactions on patients.

"PREJUDICE"

"In spite of the fact that there is a large body of supporting evidence for its value and that full sanction has been obtained for taking blood from cases of sudden death, medical men at the courts of justice were unwilling to allow the blood of bodies that are at their disposal to be drawn for clinical needs," writes the Professor.

He speaks of the strong prejudice in the majority of people at the bare thought of transfusing into a live person the blood from a corpse and the "holy awe" at the thought of "disturbing the repose of the dead"

From experiments on animals the Professor "confirmed our fundamental thesis that the blood in the dead body preserves its vitality for about ten hours after death."

CONSERVATIVE ENGLISH DOCTORS

A London hospital doctor declared "The use of corpses" blood in the treatment of illness has been in vogue for some years in Russia.

"I saw it done at a big accident hospital in Moscow. Precautions are taken to ensure that the dead did not die from any disease.

It is claimed that very good results have been obtained.

"I have been trying to advocate this method in this country in order to relieve the strain on blood donors, but there seems to be very little enthusiasm for it among British medical men.

Spermatorrhea is an occasional or constant escape of spermatozoa (life-germs) without or with very little sexual excitement. This gradually undermines the strongest constitution making the sufferer a mere wreck of his former self.

Cause:—The duct is weakened and relaxed through masturbation or prolonged excesses or sexual excitement.

Spermatorrhea, if neglected, leads to Impotence, Tuberculosis, Consumption, and other dangerous diseases.

Salix Pills should be immediately taken for the full course of three months. If ordered in one lot, the cost is Rs. 60/- only.

A Remedy for Asthma

Asthma is a health trouble that launches sudden and serious attacks, often at times when the sufferer is unprepared with any means of defence. As every asthmatic knows, night attacks of asthma are the most feared. That is why any simple-to-take remedy that can be kept close at hand to give relief from the paroxysms that accompany asthma should be welcomed. Such a remedy is Matrone Specific, prepared in the form of little tablets, and Matrone Elixir in liquid form, taken in conjunction.

The Matrone treatment is the best in the world and has gained the endorsement of the medical profession, and there is ample evidence from actual users of the treatment that the claim to give quick relief and finally a permanent cure is justified. This treatment is prescribed for use in cases of asthma, bronchial-asthma, bronchitis, catarrh and hay fever.

Brown bread is better for you than white. Do not start telling me you hate brown bread; you must eat it, and you will soon prefer it to the white variety. Porridge for breakfast is good for you. Tea is bad; take only one cup of a day, and that very weak. Tea on waking, tea at eleven, tea for dinner; tea for tea, and an extra cup because Mrs Brown popped in at half-past five, and tea for supper—all this is the best I know for promoting constipation. Anæmic girls keep themselves ill by tea. Cocoa made with milk is worth the money because it is real nourishment.

* Stout Cortes, it appears, was the father of the "penny bar."

Chocolate From Mexico

By A. E. Ballard

The most munificent gift one empire ever gave her bitterest rival was—chocolate. The British Empire literally owes every bean to the Spaniards who first discovered the tree in Mexico and later started plantations in their other colonies. From these came the trees which formed the nucleus of the British plantations. At the present time Latin America and the British Empire between them produce about 98 per cent of the world's supply.

Actually, Columbus was the first white man to see the cacao bean. He took some back with him to Spain. Cortes and the men who conquered Mexico with him in 1521 were the first Europeans ever to taste the new drink. One of them, Bernal Diaz del Castillo, recorded that "the emperor [Montezuma] took no other beverage than the chocolatl, a potation of chocolate flavoured with vanilla and other spices, and so prepared as to be reduced to a froth of the consistency of honey, which gradually dissolved in the mouth, and was taken cold."

The Mexicans themselves were very partial to it. At one banquet Montezuma's attendants brought in 50 jars of chocolate, which the Emperor and his Spanish guests drank out of golden goblets. Mean-while, the guards and attendants consumed 2,000 jars of what Linnaeus called, two centuries later, the food of the gods" (Theobroma cacao.)

Where or when the Aztecs, who arrived in Mexico City in 1324, acquired their taste for chocolate, is not known. Von Humboldt, in his account of his travels in South America, wrote: "We met no tribe on the Orinoco that prepared a beverage from the seeds of the cacao tree. The savages suck the pulp of the pod and throw away the seeds." His belief that the tree was indigenous to the forests of the Amazon and Orinoco seems to have been correct.

Cortes saw at once the commercial possibilities of the new drink, which was both stimulant and stand-by, and also a speedy remedy for scurvy.

The Mexicans, however, had never heard of sugar, which the Spaniards had already planted in the West Indies. When this was added to the chocolate it completely altered the nature of the drink. The Spaniards kept the secret of its preparation for over a hundred years.

Very soon cacao trees sprang up in other Spanish colonies. There were plantations in Trinidad as early as 1525, and from these came the first trees planted in Ceylon in 1834. In 1560 Spanish planters introduced cacao into the East Indies, and a little later they started plantations in Fernando Po. Trees were taken from this island to the Gold Coast in 1879 to found the British plantations which now yield 45 per cent of the total world export of cacao.

In Latin America the Spanish conquistadores found the cacao tree growing wild in Brazil, Ecuador, and Mexico. Plantations were started in Venezuela in the seventeenth century, and in Bahia in 1780. Today cacao is also grown in Colombia, Peru, and Central America.

From the first the unfamiliar Mexican words caused misunderstanding. The Aztecs called the tree cacauatl, and the drink chocolatl. From these two words come the English chocolate, cocoa, and the more unfamiliar cacao.

Cacao is the raw material which is produced when cacao beans are ground down into a semi-liquid mass. As this was too fatty to be pleasant, a Dutchman, Van Houten, devised a process for pressing out about 65 per cent of this fat, which is known as cacao (or in correctly, cocoa) butter. When this has been done, cocoa remains. To make chocolate, sugar and cacao butter is added.

From a distance an orchard of cacao trees does not look unlike an English apple orchard. The trees, planted 300 to an acre, grow 20-25 feet high. In Brazil there are over 100 million trees in area one fifth the size of Europe, producing in 1938 125,000 tons of beans.

Cacao pods are cut very carefully from the trees with a knife on the end of a pole, which is called a podadera, or cocoa hook. When the pods have been cracked, the beans and pulp are scraped out and left to ferment for three to five days. During this process the pulp turns to liquid and drains away. The beans are then dried in the sun for three or four days. In Venezuela clay is scattered over them, and they are dried and polished by the feet of the natives, who dance on them whilst they sing their traditional songs. In Ecuador the beans are dried on strips of matting made of split bamboo, called barbecues, while in Bahia most of the beans are dried by artificial heat. "Estufas," as these are called, fetch a high price because they are not subjected to the vagaries of the weather during the drying process.

Chocolate is made today in a bewildering variety of forms and flavours, but, apart from the extraction or addition of cacao butter, the process of manufacture is essentially the same as when Cortes watched it four centuries ago.

DEAD MAN'S GAMBLE

M. RENEE LEDON, for thirteen years director of Casino at Monte Carlo, tells this story:

A Dutch visitor went to the Casino one evening. He staked 100 francs on rouge, and won. As he remained impassive, the croupier added the winnings to the original stake on rouge. It won again, and time after time—the Dutchman making no gesture to claim his winnings—a red number continued to carry the original stake on towards fortune. At last, when the impassive gambler's stake stood at 128,000 francs—the limit for an even chance—the croupier addressed the successful gambler. He received no answer. An attendant moved quietly up and tapped the man on the shoulder.

The Dutchman fell forward over the green cloth—dead. The bank immediately raked in the 128,000 francs—they did not play with dead men! But the Dutchman's relatives sued them, and since it was impossible to establish the moment of the man's death, the Court decided that the full amount should be paid over to his heirs.—A-Magasinet (Oslo).
