Crash in the Desert

Antoine de Saint Exupery

During a test flight from Paris to Indo-China this distinguished French aviator and his mechanic crashed in the Libyan desert. For a day they explored the torrid waste. Then, back at the plane but with supplies exhausted, they seemed doomed to perish amid an infinity of heat and mirage.

That first day we had covered 36 miles of dazzling expanse, suffering terribly from thirst. By nightfall our last drop of liquid was gone. We piled up fragments of a broken wing and lit a signal fire. Only too well I knew that no one would see it.

Next morning we mopped up the dew on the wings of our plane with cotton waste, and squeezed out a few spoonfuls of water foul with grease! It tasted horrible, but it moistened our lips.

"It's as well we have a revolver," Prevot observed.

I swung round on him in a sudden fury. But Prevot had spoken without emotion as if he had said, "We'd better have a wash!" Indeed, we were of the same mind, and the sight of the leather holster the day before had set me thinking, too.

However, with the coming of day-light we started exploring again, going off in opposite directions.

As I walked I pieced together all I could recall about the Libyan Desert. In the Sahara the humidity in the air is 40 percent; here it drops to 18 per cent, and life goes up in vapor. Bedouins and colonial officers say that a man can survive for 19 hours without drinking. When in the twentieth hour his eyes begin to flood with light, the end comes swiftly. To the damp northeast wind, abnormal in these parts, we obviously owed the prolongation of our lives. How long a reprieve would it accord us before our eyes began to glaze with light?

Suddenly I shouted wildly. I had just seen a man waving to me. No. Another mirage. Now all the desert was coming to life. How hard it was to deny the evidence of sight—to refrain from running toward the caravan slowly moving yonder! "There it is," I murmured, "as large as life." Mirage after mirage created by my imagination beckoned me on.

WRITE FOR GENERAL CATALOGUE.

The coming of twilight sobered me. I halted, appalled to realize how far I was from our base: "Quite likely Prevot has been spotted by a caravan," I thought.

After two hours' tramp I saw a glow on the horizon; Prevot, panic-stricken at the thought I might have lost my way, had built a fire. Another hour's walk; 500 yards to go, then 50.

I halted in sheer stupefaction. Joy surged up in my heart. There, in the fire-light, Prevot was chatting with two Arabs.

"Ahoy!" I cried exultantly.

"The nomads gave a start and stared in my direction. Prevot hastened toward me. I flung my arms out wide. Prevot caught and steadied me—was I tottering?"

"So they've come?"

"Eh?"

"Those Arabs over there, damn it! The ones you were talking to."

Prevot eyed me strangely. "There aren't any Arabs."

And now it seemed no use fighting back my tears. . . .

For 24 hours who had had only a spoonful of dew water to drink; so we spread out a parachute, hoping to catch more dew. At dawn, when we wrung the parachute out into a tank, we found we had collected almost two quarts. The long agony of thirst was ended; we could drink our fill!

The water was a brilliant yellow-green, and at my first gulp I found it so acrid that, thirsty as I was, I could not swallow it.

Prevot was walking round and round, his eyes fixed on the ground. Suddenly he bent forward and vomited. Thirty seconds later I followed suit. Our last faint hope was gone. (I never found out if this mischance was due to the coating of the parachute or to some chemical deposit in the tank.)

It was high time to make a move. We would turn our backs on this accursed place, abandon the plane, and walk across the desert till we dropped.

"If I were left to myself," Prevot remarked. "I'd just lie down and sleep."

But we set out, side by side, heading east-northeast, not knowing whether with every step we were approaching a caravan route or plunging deeper into the unfathomable desert.

Of that day all I can recall is an impression of desperate hurry toward an inevitable breakdown. I kept my eyes fixed on the ground; the mirages were more than I could bear. Now and again we corrected our course by compass; now and again, lying on the sand, we took a breather.

At nightfall Prevot suddenly exclaimed, "That's a lake over there, I'll stake my soul on it. There can't be any mirages at this hour."

I did not reply. I had long since given up believing my eyes.

"I'm going to have a look. It's not 20 minutes' walk."

I knew Prevot would never return. He would collapse out there, to die in his tracks . . . as here I should die in mine. Anyhow—what difference did it make?

How far gone was I, I wondered, I tried to summon up some saliva on my palate—but none would come. When I closed my mouth some gluey substance sealed my lips, forming a solid crust. However I could still swallow, and as yet no flashes of light had developed in my eyes.

Darkness came and my thoughts drifted to Prevot, my lost companion. A fine fellow. Never once had I heard him whimper.

What was that? There he was 500 yards away, swinging his lamp. He must have lost the trail. I stood up and shouted. He did not seem to hear. Then another lamp flashed out, 200 yards from his; then a third. So that was it—a search party!

The three lamps went on signaling. "I'm sane," I murmured. "There's nothing wrong with my sight." And I gust of panic swept over me as they seemed to turn away. "Wait! I'm coming!"

An answering call—at last! My breath caught, but I kept on running toward the voice. It was Prevot. I stumbled, fell.

"When I saw all those lights I could n't help . . ."

"What lights?"

Then I saw—he was alone. And now I felt no despair only a rankling sense of outrage.

"Yes," Prevot said at last, "we're in a damned bad way."

The night was turning cold. My teeth began to chatter, my limbs to twitch convulsively. An icy chill numbed my body and my limbs gave way. I dug a trench, lay down in it and blanketed all but my face with sand. Prevot declined to bury himself, thinking it better to keep on the move. He was wrong. The cold no longer troubled me; my body was asleep. . . .

And now the dawn was rising and I was feeling better. "Let's make a start, Prevot. Our throats are open still, and we'd best keep moving while we can."

There was no dew that night and a west wind, the wind that desiccates a man in 19 hours, was blowing. My tongue felt like plaster of Paris and there was a foul taste in my mouth. Motes of light were dancing in my eyes. I tried sipping some pure ether we had brought along; it was like swallowing a razor. Then a little 90-degree alcohol, but it closed my gullet.

Desperate, we set off at a quick pace, to make the most of the cool early hours. Only too well we knew that when the sun was high we should walk no more.

We couldn't walk more than 500 yards without lying down. But always something urged us on. After a while the landscape changed. A mile or so ahead was a line of dunes, dotted with low shrubs. Now we broke down every 200 yards.

"Let's carry on," I whispered, "as far as those bushes."

We were at the end of our tether. I was sure my legs would carry me no farther.

"Yesterday" I mused, "I abandoned hope; today the very word is meaningless. We are walking mechanically on, like oxen harnessed to a plow. Yesterday I dreamed of paradisaal orange groves; today I have lost faith in paradise, I do not believe in oranges."

Suddenly . . . what was it I had seen? I stared at Prevot. He seemed to share my stupefaction, and to be equally unable to clear up his impressions.

I had seen footprints in the sand!

Then suddenly I heard a cock crow. "Now my ears are playing tricks on me," I thought.

Prevot gripped my arm. "Hear that?" he asked.

"What?"

"A cock."

Then—there was no disputing now—we were saved!

On a low dune some distance ahead a Bedouin suddenly appeared; both of us racked our throats shouting to him.

But our voices did not carry 50 yards. The Bedouin moved slowly out of sight, and we had no strength left for running after him.

Another Arab showed up on the dune. We shouted to him, but our voices failed again. Then we waved our arms. But the Bedouin persisted in looking away. At last, with an agonizing slowness, he swung round. The miracle had come to pass! He was walking toward us across the sands.

He merely glanced at us. Then, laying his hands on our shoulders, he pressed us down on the sand. At that moment racial distinctions, difference of language, were of no account. All that counted was the poor nomad of the desert, laying angelic hands upon our shoulders.

For a while we waited. At last he came to us with a basin of water and, lying on our bellies, we plunged our mouths in it like cattle at a pool. We were too far gone to stand. (When, a week later, we retraced our tracks, we found that all told we had walked 120 miles.)

The Bedouin conveyed to us as best he could that there were Europeans in the neighborhood. Mounted on a camel's back, we set out to join them, but after three hours' jolting we persuaded our rescuers to leave us in a camp while they went ahead to fetch help. Toward six in the evening a car manned by armed Bedouins picked us up. By midnight I was in bed in Cairo. . .

I awoke to find myself between white sheets, with the sun, an enemy no longer, stealing past the curtains. I buttered a roll and spooned honey on it; I found it tasted exactly like the rolls and honey of my boyhood. And with it, the childish sense of living in a perpetual wonderland had returned to me. My eyes strayed back to the telegram lying on the counterpane; for common words, yet, coming from the dearest of all to me, most wonderful of me: "We are so happy. . . ."

* Right and wrong theories about parachute-jumping.

Lifebuoy of the Air

By Th. Grotius

—O—

Shortly after the brothers Montgolfier invented the balloon in 1782 they began to consider ways and means of escape from it in case of accident. But their inventive genius failed them in the search for a safety first contrivance, and it was not until 1797 that the first parachute saved a man's life. The inventor was Blanchard, famous for the first balloon flight across the Channel in 1785. But the hero of the first aerial plunage was one Andre-Jacques Garnerin, although it is to Blanchard's credit that he would not let Garnerin test his invention before exhaustive experiments had been carried out with dogs and cats.

Blanchard's parachute was made fast, already fully opened out, to the under side of the gondola. It had the appearance of an enormous silken umbrella. The prospective parachutist ensconced himself in a tiny basket tied to the "umbrella" by a network of ropes. Precariously perched under the gondola he waited until the balloon had reached an agreed height. Then Blanchard leaned out, cut the necessary ropes, and left the cumbrous affair to float earth-wards.

In 1812 Garnerin made the first parachute descent in England. He used a similar model to Blanchard's, but this time he himself severed the links between the balloon and the aerial umbrella.

The parachute to which Garnerin entrusted his life in 1812 before the admiring gaze of the London crowd had almost twice the area of the type used to-day. He floated down at a speed of about 3 yards a second. The speed at which a parachutist travels to-day is twice as great and the impact on landing is equal to that of a leap from a height of some 10 feet.

For his London descent Garnerin cut himself adrift from the balloon at a height of nearly 8,000 feet. It was a windy day and the thousands of spectators gathered below soon noticed with horror that the little basket in which he sat was swinging violently. Eventually it turned a complete somersault and remained upside down. The crowd expected the Frenchman to come hurtling earthwards at any moment; women fainted and strong men closed their eyes. But Garnerin rode his bucking, leaping basket safely to earth to become the man of the hour.

Among the many who congratulated Garnerin on his feat was Robert Cocking. He was a balloon enthusiast and had watched this new development with the keenest interest. Particularly had he noticed the instability of Garnerin's parachute—its crazy swinging motion and its inadequate basket—and he set himself the task of inventing an improved model.

Cocking's aim was praiseworthy enough, but unfortunately he worked on quite erroneous principles. He considered Blanchard's parachute to be faulty because the opening was on the under side. Turn the opening round, so that you had an inverted umbrella, and there would be no dangerous swinging motion! That was his idea, and he constructed a parachute according to the principle, quite overlooking the fact that his invention offered scarcely any air-resistance—the essential saving element of every parachute. However, his contrivance was so strongly and heavily braced that no existing balloon was large enough to lift into the air it and its prospective passenger. So Cocking lived another twenty-five years. In 1837, at last, a suitable balloon became available, and he hastened to put his parachute to the test.

The ascent took place in London, and a huge crowd assembled to witness the demonstration. Both balloon and "parachute" were gaudily decorated, as was the custom in those early days of aerial venture. At a height of some 6,000 feet Cocking shouted "Ready" to the two men in the gondola above, and cut the lines. The spectators saw a billowing, flapping mass of fabric whirl down from the balloon—and a tiny black figure rapidly spinning towards them.

Robert Cocking had made a fatal error. But even so he must be numbered among the pioneers of the parachute, for by his own death he testified to the correctness of the Blanchard model. And the next parachutist—John Hampton, another Englishman—followed Blanchard's model closely. Hampton performed shortly after Cocking's death, and in his publicity posters referred to the latter's fate in terms which would be considered in rather poor taste to-day. He made several successful descents and invariably made a point of landing with the appearance of being at his last gasp. He was a born showman—and the public had to have a run for their money.

Hampton was probably the originator of a misconception which is widespread even to-day. He declared that to make a parachute descent was tantamount to suffering strangulation—the air draught being so powerful as to force the air from the lungs. Today there are many who believe that to leap from a great height—say from the thirtieth floor of a skyscraper—entails death long before reaching the ground. But it has been conclusively proved by delayed-drop parachutists that this idea is completely erroneous. During a delayed-drop descent an enormous speed is attained, and yet the exponents of the art declare that the sensation of falling is quite unnoticed. The feeling is rather one of floating in the air, whilst the earth comes smoothly up to meet one. The eyes water, as they do in strong wind, but breathing is comfortable and the mental faculties remain unimpaired.

However, right up to the year 1919 Hampton's fallacious theory was accepted. Parachutes must be opened automatically, since the passenger might lose consciousness and thus be unable to perform the duty himself. The usual method of opening a parachute was by a cord attached to the opening mechanism and to the balloon or aeroplane. When the leap was made, the cord snapped and automatically opened the parachute.

During the Great War a considerable number of observation balloon officers saved themselves by means of automatically opened parachutes. But it was not until after the War that the first modern, voluntarily opened model was perfected. The man responsible for the present effective type of "air lifebuoy" was an American, Leslie Irvin.

Irvin was a first-class swimmer, with a particular penchant for high diving. He practised from more and more ambitious heights, and finally was able to plunge from a height of 80 feet. He found the experience so easy and natural that he could not understand why making a parachute leap should necessarily entail loss of consciousness. Soon he was devoting all his time to experiments with various models of parachutes.

In 1919 Irvin's new ideas began to find sympathy, and he was able to arrange a demonstration of his "voluntary opening" parachute before a number of American experts. Irvin himself made the descent. As the little black figure left the plane and came tumbling down there were many who turned their eyes away. Moments passed and still Irvin came speeding to certain death. Something must be wrong! But at last a thin white line was seen trailing behind the falling figure. Rapidly it spread until it resembled a small white cloud. And then there was a sudden sharp report like a pistol shot and the parachute spread out fully, checking the descent from headlong plunge to tranquil drift.

Irvin's descent in 1919 was the first in which the voluntary principle was employed—incidentally it was also the first delayed drop. Since then the parachute has been an indispensable accessory to aviation.

There are still many problems to be solved. Not the least important, in these days, is the question of the parachute as an offensive weapon. During the tense days before Czechoslovakia was engulfed by Germany it was rumoured that the Germans planned to land 8,000 men in Prague by parachute.

And the spectacular Russian "mass descents" have often figured in the news. not as a means of taking it. During the last twenty years, 3,000 people have escaped certain death, solely because they entrusted their lives to the lifebuoy of the air.

Hitherto, however, the parachute has only been used for saving life, and Died: Isaac Fuld, 74, co-inventor with his brother of the Ouija Board, in Baltimore, Maryland. Though Fuld and his brother William began manufacturing the device in 1904, Ouija (derived from the French and German words for "yes") didn't reach fad proportions until 1920. Then the board and its three-legged indicator—supposed to answer any question in some mystic manner—started selling into the millions.

18th CENTURY PROPHECY

The time will come, when thou shalt lift thine eyes

To watch a long-drawn battle in the skies,
While aged peasants, too amazed for words,
Stare at the flying fleets of wond'rous birds.
England, so long the mistress of the sea,
Where winds and waves confess her sovereignty,

Her ancient triumphs yet on high shall bear,
And reign, the sovereign of the conquered air.

(Translated from Gray's 'Luna Habitabilis', Cambridge 1737)

Make it come true! Over two hundred years ago this remarkable vision of the war in the air was written down in Latin verse by the great English poet who composed the famous 'Elegy'. To make Great Britain 'Sovereign of the conquered air' is now our task. There is no time to 'stare at the flying fleets,' we must exert all our energies to increase them. Everyone must help. You can help with money.

Cured By Machinery!

And a man who breathed artificially for two years!

Hundreds of apparently drowned people have been brought back to life by the first-aid methods taught to all ambulance pupils. Administering this kind of aid is, however, decidedly hard work, as anyone knows who has tried it for even ten minutes on end. Now a machine has been devised which does the work.

The patient is put to bed inside an airtight metal tank, his head projecting at one end through a closely fitting rubber collar. An electrically controlled pump attached to the tank works rhythmically, expanding and contracting the chest as in ordinary breathing.

A tank of very much the same kind is employed to save the lives of newly born babies suffering from asphyxia. In one case an infant did not begin to breathe naturally until it had been in the tank for a whole hour.

A man has actually been kept alive for more than two years by an artificial breathing machine. He suffered from a curious weakening of the chest muscles, so that breathing became more and more difficult until it began to cease altogether. The great chemist, Sir William Bragg, suggested a mechanical device, and a small hydraulic machine was devised which pumped air into a rubber bag fixed on the man's chest.

In 1933 Dr. Frank Eve, consulting physician to the Hull Royal Infirmary, rocked back to life a three-year-old child whose heart had almost ceased beating. He and others rocked her continually for two days and two nights, until her heart-beats became normal. Now Dr. Eve has produced a mechanical rocking machine.

The latest invention of the kind is a "fever machine" invented by a French doctor. The patient is wrapped in blankets on either side and a powerful high-frequency current is passed through his body. The result is to cause tremendous perspiration, but without any of the discomfort of ordinary methods.

THE DANGER OF WHITE SUGAR.

One of the greatest dietetic errors of the age is the almost universal use of white sugar. Along with white flour, it is responsible for many of the diseases that afflict civilised man.

The ordinary white cane sugar whether in granulated, loaf, or pulverised form, is but an extract of pure cane sugar, an extract which remains after the pure natural sugar has been put thorough such a through refining process that not a vestige of the lifegiving element of natural sugar remains. The same remarks apply to white flour.

White sugar is an acid-producer, and its use leaves many injurious effects on the body.

Science has establish the fact that an excessive amount of refined sugars and starches in the diet is the chief cause of diabetes and kidney disease. All evidence and observation strongly substantiate this theory.

The function of the pancreas is to restrict the excess absorption of sugar into the blood-stream. When the amount of sugar taken into the system is beyond capacity of this organ, it becomes over-burdened and weakened, to check the entry of excessive sugar in the blood-stream is the chief symptom of diabetes. Also, when the pancreas is overtaxed the body calls for more strenuous action on the part of the kidneys, lungs and skin, and any of these organs may also break down as a result of over work. Hence, an excessive consumption of sugar can cause disease of the organs mentioned.

The use of refined sugar is also the reason for the universal prevalence of bad teeth. Why this is so can be easily explained.

Calcium is an essential mineral salt which builds bones and teeth. People who have strong teeth are generously supplied with calcium. Those whose teeth are weak lack calcium. Now, refined sugar destroys the calcium in the blood, and the teeth and bones are deprived of the element needed for their nourishment. The strength of the teeth is thus undermined, and so they become chalky and brittle.

All this harm is produced only by sugar which is processed and refined. Sugar in its natural state, as found in honey, dates, figs and raisins, and, unprocessed cane sugar is essential to the system, and is indispensable as a liberator of heat and energy.

If you wish to cease endangering your own health and that of your children, stop using demineralised products as a whole; and white processed sugar in particular.

Let honey, unprocessed sugar, dates, figs raisins, and other fruits supply your sugar requirements, and in this way avoid the derangements, of the body that result from the use of refined white sugar.

POWDERED BONE AS REMEDY FOR PYORRHEA.

Boiled powdered bone was suggested as a remedy in pyorrhea and diseased jaw bones at a faculty clinic at Columbia University School of Dental and Oral Surgery.

Powdered bone was successful in treating pyorrhea and jaw bone damage in dogs, Dr. Frank E. Beube reported.

"It seemed evident from the work on dogs that similar results could be hoped for by the use of the bone powder in lesions of the alveolar and maxillary bones of patients" Dr. Beube concluded.

The bone used in the experiments of Dr. Beube and Dr. Herbert F. Silvers was obtained from the long bones of sheep and cows. This boiled powdered bone was packed into the holes surgically produced in the jaw bone to resemble the holes produced by disease or injury. Within a few weeks new bone, natural cement layer, and other dental tissues had grown in to replace those lost. In the case of pyorrhea, a 'quite loose' tooth was firm in its socket after the powdered bone treatment had healed the diseased condition—Science News-Letters.

With an Idea and Determination... HE REVOLUTIONISED MEDICINE!

Prof. BROWN-SEQUARD, making his great discovery.

In 1889 Professor Charles Edouard Brown-Sequard, the famous scientist, made his epoch-making discovery, when he administered to himself glandular extract in his laboratory in Paris. To the amazement of himself and other physicians, the experiment proved a great success and a new chapter was opened in the modern book of therapeutics.

His life was a great one....most of it spent in a littered laboratory conducting ceaseless experiments. Never did a man work so hard—and succeed so brilliantly!

Professor Brown-Sequard's discovery is mentioned in authoritative medical books on the subject.

The harnessing of physical and chemical forces, which has produced our modern rapidity of travel and communication; steam, electric power, telegraphy, and the conquest of the air, affect our lives profoundly. And yet it may well be that biological knowledge and its many applications to the control and cure of disease and, above all, its elimination and prevention, have done far more to lighten the burden under which mankind struggles and to raise the level of civilization.

The great progress of medical science and the rapid strides it has made in the last hundred years have saved countless lives, prolonged and alleviated many others, and given us all a better chance of expanding what personal talents we have and of making the best of our time.

Humanity is beginning to see how to live.

All this is due to those men—Road Makers of Science—who have elucidated for us the immutable laws which underlie our functions. By no means the least of these was the immortal discoverer of Gland Therapy—Prof. Brown-Sequard, the famous French Scientist, for it is not difficult to see how he provided a sure basis on which modern science could build with confidence and success.

Although many lives have passed in the contemplation of Nature, attempting with infinite patience to solve the problems which she presents in such profusion, few philosophers have succeeded in making such a fundamental and far-reaching discovery as that of the function of the human glands.

It is not too much to say that enunciation of this principle revolutionised medicine and set it firmly upon a rational footing. So much was made clear and so many vistas were opened that it would seem that this conception was a lever powerful enough to set in motion those trains of scientific experiment and research which have brought us to our present state of knowledge and, still gathering speed and power, lead us confidently to hope for yet wider and deeper understanding of natural laws, in particular those which govern the great mystery of Life itself.

Gland Therapy is no myth. Some of the highest medical authorities in Europe and America believe in the curative efficacy of gland treatment for sexual weakness and other ailments.

* Life in Lapland—by one who has just returned from there.

Jonas the Wolf-Hunter

By Frank Illingworth

It had been a long journey—thirty-six hours by boat, nearly a day and a half by express train up the spine of Sweden, seven hours by bus. And now I stood in Karasundo, roughly two hundred miles north of the Circle in Arctic Lapland, awaiting the arrival of Jonas the wolf-hunter with his two reindeer sleighs. It was cold, and despite the early hour almost dark.

Jonas was a typical Karasundo Lapp... a thick-set little man of about five feet four inches with the high cheek bones, broad forehead, and slanting eyes of the Mongol. A wide belt, from which hung a wooden cup and spoon and a knife, gathered in his coat at the waist; his trousers tapered to the ankles and disappeared within grass-lined boots; and as he greeted me with a bow, the crimson pompon atop his cap flopped over the other ear. He was to be my host, and I took an instant liking to him. I was welcome, but to be a social success I must know a little of Lappish etiquette.

I had learnt in southern Lapland that the Lapp's tent is his castle. By all means the traveller may enter uninvited, for to lack shelter in the Arctic winter is to risk frostbite and death itself; but he must not step across the two logs placed at an angle to each other just inside the entrance, for they mark the extent of the Lapp's "hall."

After a very long drive the pulkas (sledges) drew up amid a shower of snow by Jonas's conically shaped tent. Jonas's wife was busy. As I entered, she pushed aside a pile of boot-grass drying by the fire; stretched towards the crib hanging from the side of the tent her head. Within lay the youngest Jonas child, bound up like a mummy. No wonder, I thought, so many Lapp infants suffocate in their cribs. Mrs. Jonas breast-fed the child without removing it from the crib (by the simple expedient of holding the crib against herself!) before placing the baby, satisfied and warm, over her head. Then she turned to other wifely duties; there was the fire to be fed, coffee to be brewed, a huge pile of priceless furs to be tidied, dogs to be kicked out of the way.

Life in Lapland revolves round the care of the reindeer. The animals provide the Lapps with clothing, bedding, thread; with a method of transport across a wicked tundra practically bare of roads; with bone from which to make implements; with a means of purchasing a wife; and, above all, with food and milk... though it is in comparatively recent times that the Lapp learnt to milk his reindeer. Without his reindeer the Lapp would assuredly perish. So it is that as the herds move from the mountains in the summer to the frozen marshes and forests in the winter, the Lapp must root up his tent and follow them. Day in day out the Lapp tends his reindeer; his wife cures the reindeer meat and pelts; his dogs protect them from the ravages of the wolf. It is not surprising, therefore, that, as the guardian of his herds, the Lapp should love his dogs.

In all seriousness I was told that centuries ago, in the days before animals lost the power to converse freely with Man, a Lapp dog watched a Lapp trying to round up his herd. Being hungry, the animal offered his help.

"Would you but make me three promises," said the dog, "I and my friends will serve you faithfully for ever, protecting your herds from the cruel wolf;"

"What, dog," queried the Lapp, "are those three promises?"

"That you feed us once a day, that you never beat us when we are tired, that you hang us when too old to work."

THE CHOICE OF THE EXPERT

READ WHAT CURED PATIENTS SAY.

These are a few of the many hundreds of testimonials Received during the past five years; which are genuine and unsolicited.

WONDERFUL CHANGE

Mr. A. F. Webb. "Palm Court" Ground Floor. Churchgate Reclamation. Bombay. ".....I was tired of having Insulin injections daily. My doctor advised me to take by mouth Pancre-Vite. I followed his advice and am glad to say that the course of treatment effected a wonderful change in my condition. I have never felt so fit as I do now, since I got diabetes. There is no sign whatever of the disease....."

Completely Cured.

Mrs. S. T. Davis. 8, St. George's Gate Rd. Hastings. Calcutta. ".....I suffered for over five years with diabetes. It robbed me of energy and vitality. The digestive organs were also impaired, so my food seemed tasteless and like lead in my stomach. I passed a dreary existence. Pancre-Vite was the only remedy that helped me. I began taking it in January and when the warm weather came I was completely cured, felt like a new woman, full of life and hope.

Words cannot tell how pleased I am to have my health back. I have a keen appetite and enjoy my meals; digestion is perfect. All symptoms of diabetes have left me. I have gained twenty-six pounds in weight and feel in harmony with all the world because I am now perfectly well....."

Cured Thoroughly.

Mr. V. Thompson. 151, Keighley St. Rangoon. Burma. ".....I cannot fully express the thanks I owe for your Pancre-Vite. I have suffered from diabetes for so long that I did not think there was any cure for it as I had tried everything that was recommended to me. Finally, I gave Pancre-Vite a trial and to my delight it cured me thoroughly. There is no trace of sugar, and my weight and strength is much increased....."

Extracts from Commendatory Letters received from the Medical Profession. Most Valuable Remedy.

Dr. A. F. De. Ravnac. (Paris). writes:—".....Pancre-Vite was first called to my attention by a patient of mine. The man in question, Monsieur Gabriel Coulondre, told me that no other medicine did him so much good as Pancre-Vite, and after studying his case, I advised him to keep on taking it. He was suffering from chronic diabetes and told me that the disease was of twelve years standing. Monsieur Coulondre was perfectly cured after five months treatment.

Dr. De. Ravnac

I became fully convinced of the great value of Pancre-Vite after observing its beneficial results in a number of other cases. From the experience of a practice stretching over twenty years, I have no hesitation in stating that Pancre-Vite is a most valuable remedy for diabetes. I prescribe it myself now and shall be glad to add my endorsement to that of my brother physicians who are commending it....."

Positive and Permanent Cure.

Dr. R. C. Duhamel. (Paris). writes:—".....I treated a diabetic patient last year with Pancre-Vite. The first six bottles did not give any perceptible improvement and my patient became disheartened and wanted to stop the treatment. I advised him to complete the course, pointing out that even the best medicines are slow to give improvement in certain cases, and he followed my advice with excellent results. After twelve bottles had been taken, the sugar began to diminish and weight had increased by 5 lbs. At the end of the course no sugar could be detected, even by analysis, and his weight is now 10 st. 8 lbs. perfectly normal for his height.

Dr. Duhamel

To make sure that there would be no recurrence of the disease, I advised my patient to take the treatment for a month longer than the prescribed course. At the time of writing this letter, it is six months since the treatment was stopped and there is no trace whatever of sugar or any other symptom.

Unhesitatingly, I endorse Pancre-Vite as a positive and permanent cure for Diabetes....."

Harmony of Body And Mind Quite Essential For Health

Health means harmony and unless there is harmony between the body and the mind health is impossible of attainment, writes Health editorially.

While it is possible to diagnose bodily diseases and cure them by timely medical aid, it is very hard to probe into the mind and treat its malady.

It may be said without fear of contradiction, that most bodily ailments are due to mental causes. Irregular habits in thinking, losing of temper, lack of self-control, fears and prejudices lead to mental ill-health and disorder.

For example, worry and depression of spirits may cause loss of appetite and dyspepsia. Rage may bring on heart failure or apoplexy.

Our ancients have laid great stress on the proper cultivation of the mind. Their methods were self-control, right thought and calmness. Self-control confers strength, right thought mastery and calmness, power.

"Britannia Rules . . ."

While the captured German fleet lay in Scapa Flow, an English quartermaster was posted on each vessel. To one of these, leaning over the taffrail came a German quartermaster.

"I sinks nosing of your ships," quoth he. The Englishman did not reply. "And I sinks nosing of your officers, your Jellicoes, your Beattys . . ." Overcome by his feelings, the German spat over the rail. Whereupon the Englishman turned and said calmly:

"Now! Look'ere. I dont care wot you thinks about our ships, our sailors, and our officers. But don't you go spittin' into our sea!"

- The American tar likes rye

Twelve Thousand Miles of Blood Vessels!

Your body contains, according to latest scientific computation, twelve thousand miles of blood vessels. Think of that, 12,000 miles! Sufficient to stretch half-way round the world. This wonderful pipeline of the blood consists of arteries, capillaries and veins communicating with that marvellous pumping station, the heart. By means of this vital pipe-line, the blood is carried to every one of the millions upon millions of the cells of the body, to nourish; to cleanse; and to renew. In all diseased conditions, no matter what the ailment may be, the blood stream is at fault, and no treatment can give lasting results if this all-important fact is overlooked. Keep the blood free-running, like a deep, fast-flowing river, enrich it with the necessary elements for cell building, and remove all toxic and acid waste materials, and health MUST result. This is precisely what Galaxin the Great Blood Cleanser is designed to do; it is actually what Galaxin does, surely and effectively, Galaxin Cures through the blood, unharnpered, irresistibly!

1940	Millions of known cases of Syphilis all over the world

The pretty picture below is a microscopic portrait of a little creature whose name is Spirochaeta Pallida . . . or Spirochete, or Syphilis. . . .

The Spirochete is a destructive medium with power beyond the wildest dreams of the most visionary munitions magnate. It has a kick like an express train; if it connects with your grandfather, your little daughter's teeth may drop out from the vibrations; it can cause anything from bright's disease to insanity in its victim; and today there are millions of cases all over the world.

Just in case the above seems vague, let me point out the relation of syphilis to other disease on a comparative basis as to prevalence—there is annually twice as much Syphilis as Scarlet Fever; 13 times as much as Typhoid Fever; and 1½ times as much as Tuberculosis. . . . There is no disease on earth, except Leprosy, so transmittable, so dreadful, so loathsome as Syphilis. This terrible disease, unless scientifically treated, rapidly effects its dire ravages, permeating the very brain, nerves and muscles, even the marrow of the bones, and exhausting the vitality of the most robust constitution.

Although, many barriers have broken down, Syphilis is still an unmentionable in most homes. This, in spite of the

In the Wassermann test the blood is placed in a test tube instead of being prepared on a slide. After it is in the test tube an antigen is added to the blood. The test tube is then placed into a refrigerator where it is left overnight.

In the morning another reagent is added.

And the test tube is then immersed in a warm water bath.

It is only after these steps that the colour change (dark & clear is negative... light & cloudy shows infection) may be observed.

fact that on an average every family of seven contains at least one infected person. And what's more shocking is the fact that in a survey of a representative group of men and women it was discovered that four out of five of them could be infected and, so far as a knowledge of the symptoms goes, they wouldn't know it! There in a nutshell you have the purpose of this article.

Syphilis has a past; it has a present; and it has a future which is being built up at the rate of hundreds of thousands of cases yearly. All this when there is a cure! 86 % of primary cases can be cured, and in secondary cases the rate of cures with the chemical oral treatment,—Neo Sadalan, is 81 %. This is the best treatment for all cases of Syphilis and absolutely safe to use. It is guaranteed to effect a thorough and permanent cure.

The safety of society demands that every patient suffering with syphilis should be required to continue the treatment until the disease is arrested or cured. Without energetic treatment with Neo Sadalan, the patient with Syphilis may expect to become progressively worse until he is utterly incapacitated and fatally affected. He should not think of stopping the treatment until repeated blood tests indicate that the disease is probably cured or at least definitely arrested. Even after such a supposed cure, he should take blood tests at intervals and should be on the alert for the first signs of recurrence. He should not consider marriage unless he is advised by competent medical authorities that it is probably safe. In the event of pregnancy supposedly cured women should take another course of treatment in order that she may with certainty protect the child.

Symptoms And Stages.

From ten to forty-six but generally twenty four days from the entry of the germs into the body, there appears on the affected part a small red pimple. It goes on increasing slowly and within a week becomes watery vesicle with inflamed base. The vesicle bursts and leaves a sore with a hard margin elevated edges, and depressed centre. The sore is painless and there is a very small amount of watery discharge from it. This sore is called a hard chancre and it indicates the locality where the virus was first introduced. Generally the sores are situated on the genitals but they have been observed on every part of the body. In the males, if the infection takes place at the genital region, the sores appear on the glans penis or under the foreskin or just on the opening of the urinary passage. A week after the appearance of the sore on the penis the lymphatic glands swell up. They are hard with no pus or pain. This is the primary stage of syphilis.

SECONDARY SYPHILIS:—On average, secondary symptoms appear in about six weeks, but they may appear months later. The patient feels restless, dispirited, and weak in body. More often than not, he suffers from rheumatic pains, particularly in the skin bones and the region of ankles. Scaly eruptions of a light red colour appear on the body and there is acute sore throat with ulcers on the tongue or mouth. The mucous membrane of the nasal passages also gets affected and there is foul discharge from the nose. Eye troubles, too, are not uncommon. The above symptoms are all due to the dissemination of the organism in the blood.

TERTIARY SYPHILIS is a disease of the bones and general diffusion of the poison through the system. It manifests itself in the inflammation of different glands of the body with severe pains in the bones.

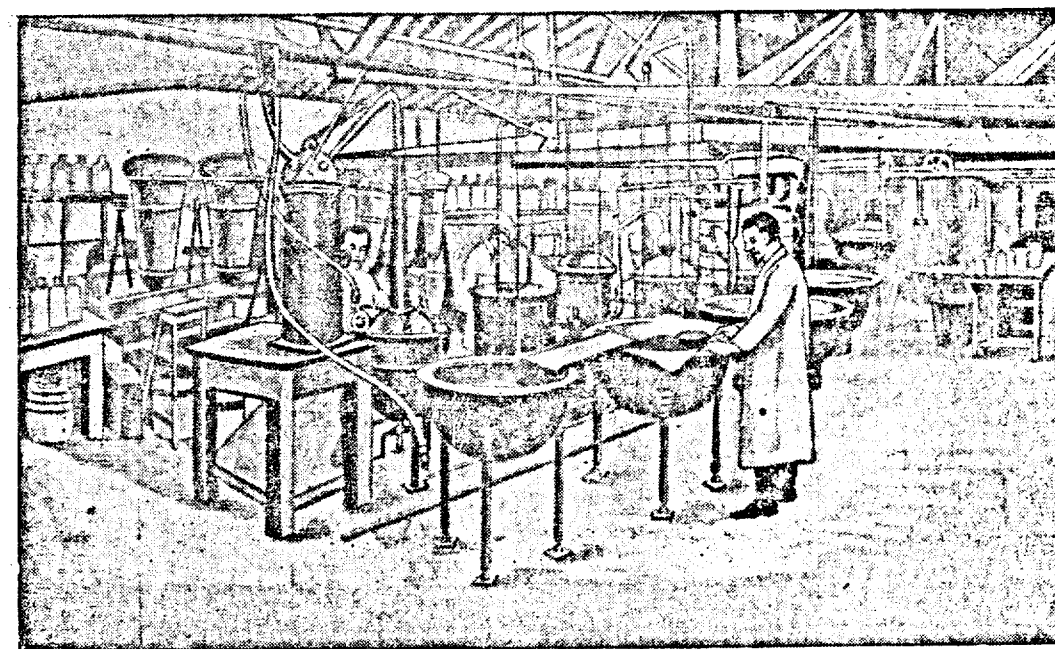

The reason for this article is to show that there is hope; that there is a cure; that Syphilis is no longer an unknown assailant. It is a marauder whose habits and weaknesses are known to the extent that where he is found, he can be stamped out...annihilated...by Neo Sadalan

THE GREAT SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY OF THE BERGERET LABORATORIES.

Progress in clinical medicine is dependent on progress in the ancillary sciences, physiology, pharmacology, etc., new discoveries in pure science are the gist; but, whoever or whatever he is, he must see the necessity of applying scientifically-established facts to human needs.

Chemists at work at the Bergeret Laboratories.

stuff on which clinical progress feeds. But between the discovery in pure science and its application to medicine, there must be an investigator. He may be a physician, a chemist, a bacteriolo-

When a clinical application has been found for a scientific discovery, the work has just begun. A method must be worked out by which a chemical process or a biological technique employed in the experimental laboratory can be applied in production operations. And a practical method of clinical administration must be worked out, for an effective remedy cannot be reserved for a few selected patients—it must be made available to thousands. Moreover, the first crude product, perhaps eagerly sought because of the imperative need for it, must be improved and refined so that its efficacy may be increased and its field of usefulness broadened.

The Discovery of Endophon.

The year 1931 saw the discovery of ENDOPHON. It was made possible only by preceding research. Dr. Gustave Leclerc, a chemist on the consulting staff was the first to discover the activity of certain glands. Dr. Louis Perrancourt, also on the consulting staff, was likewise working on the problem. He completed his work shortly after Leclerc's discovery, and assigned to the preparation its correct formula.

The discovery of ENDOPHON marked a new era in Glandular Therapy. Recently, a new Gland Extract has been discovered and embodied in ENDOPHON, greatly increasing its curative efficacy.

Reported in Eighteen Medical Papers.

A striking example of the achievements of the Bergeret Laboratories is illustrated in the work which led to the discovery of ENDOPHON. The course of this work was reported in eighteen medical papers.

Policy of the Bergeret Laboratories.

It has always been the policy of the Bergeret Laboratories never to offer a product to the world until it has been first subjected to the most exhaustive tests. Therefore, you may be sure that not only has a Bergeret Product been standardised, and made to conform to the highest degree of purity, and that the utmost demands of science have been utilized in its manufacture, but also that its therapeutic value has been demonstrated beyond any question of doubt.

Diabetes Mellitus and the Best Treatment.

Liver, defective Kidneys, pathological changes in the nervous system and worry.

Symptoms.

The Symptoms are Boils, Eczema and other skin affections. Excessive thirst, loss of weight and nervous prostration. Diabetes often leads to Impotence.

The Toll of Diabetes.

A rough estimate indicates that about 40,00,000 people in India, Burma and Ceylon suffer from this dreadful disease.

Types of Diabetes.

There are two types of diabetes, viz., (1) Diabetes Mellitus, where presence of sugar in the urine is indicated. This is the most common type. (2) Diabetes Insipidus—a condition where no sugar is present in the urine. This type is very rare. (Urine is passed in large quantities in both the conditions).

Diabetes Mellitus is one of the most dangerous, stubborn and treacherous of all diseases, if neglected. Any delay in treatment not only aggravates it, but leads to serious complications.

The Treatment.

The treatment at first was only a diet prescription. A revolution in the treatment was made by Banting of Canada, by the isolation of INSULIN. Insulin was hailed as a miracle, consummating the work started by Lancereaux in 1877. A new era was thus opened and was followed by intense research in the clinical field, the results of which have been published in many newspapers.

The disease is as old as the Sphinx. Ancient Egyptian treatises on medicine speak of a disease called Polyuria, which is none other than diabetes.

The Cause of Diabetes.

The cause of diabetes is due to a disturbance in the chemical process of digestion, with the result that the sugar passes with urine, instead of undergoing the normal transformation into other substances before it leaves the organism. Defective Pancreas-gland is the chief cause of diabetes. Other causative factors are defective

But Insulin, unfortunately, is not in any sense a "cure" of diabetes mellitus. Spectacular as is its news, the diabetic who started to use it in 1922, is still using it and in virtually the same dosage. The death rate for diabetes has not altered much in 20 years. In short, the causative factors of the disease are controlled, not eradicated or changed.

The transient effects of Insulin and the necessity for its repeated injections have led some Continental workers to search for an oral Insulin compound, which would obviate these two great drawbacks of Insulin therapy in Diabetes.

The Solution of the Problem.

Early in 1937, Grimard of Paris announced his oral Insulin preparation, which he named Pancre-Vite, a combination of Pancreas gland extract (Insulin in solid form) with enzymes, Steapsin, Myrtillin, Amylopsin, Suprarenal Substance, Hepatic Juice and Hormones.

The administration of Pancreatic gland extracts with other substances by the mouth has scores of clinical and laboratory reports in its favour. One of these reports are given below:

"In a long series of blood-sugar tests on patients, Pancreas extract was found to cause a profound blood-sugar fall in 82% of the cases observed within two hours after administration by mouth. Controls of about an equal number of patients under the same clinical conditions, as far as this was possible, showed a fall in less than 40%."—W. N. Berkeley, "Principles and Practice of Endocrine Medicine," Page 261.

Grimard's oral insulin preparation is a true, well-balanced remedy for diabetes, so definitely capable of restoring the lost functions to the defective pancreas.

Pancre-Vite is prepared in the form of capsules and when acting, they produce a progressive decrease in the urinary sugar, and a gradual disappearance of the morbid phenomena found in a person suffering from diabetes. This preparation is quite harmless to take.

A Grave Warning.

Hundreds of thousands of people die every year from diabetes mellitus in India. Most of them could have been saved if only rational treatment had been taken. If you feel run down and if there is loss of appetite, sleeplessness, frequent urination and excessive thirst, then it is nature's warning and you should have your urine examined at once. If it is proved that you are suffering from diabetes, do not neglect yourself, but take treatment promptly.

PATIENTS "FROZEN" FOR FIVE DAYS

Suspension of Life Amazes Medical World

Experiments in "freezing" sick patients into a virtually suspended state of life—which may prove to be of the utmost importance in the world of medicine—have been made by to Philadelphia doctors, Dr. Temple S. Fay and Dr. Lawrence W. Smith.

They have been experimenting with cancer victims and they want to try their "freezing" process on heart disease, insanity, tuberculosis and many other diseases.

The process, as outlined by them at the annual meeting of the American Medical Association, is as follows:

The patients are stripped and covered with cracked ice. An electric fan is turned on. In three hours their internal temperatures are forced down below 90 degrees,

The patients literally go into a sleep similar to that drowsiness experienced normally by a freezing person, except that in this case the patients feel no pain.

Their room is kept cold so that when the ice is removed they remain cold. They stay like that for five days.

Then they are roused with hot coffee and warm applications. They awake smiling, with no memory of what has happened.

Cancer Cells Killed

In the meantime, it is claimed, the cold has killed at least the young cancer cells which form from 10 to 90 per cent. of growing cancer according to indications from these experiments.

But it is not this that has amazed the medical world.

It is the suspension of life—of which admittedly no one seems to know quite how to take advantage—that has awakened doctors to the possibilities of this freezing process.

For in their "frozen sleep," the patients' pulse beat disappears. Only the electrocardiograph shows that their hearts are still beating and that surprisingly, the rhythm is perfect, although very light.

Their kidneys and apparently all their digestive organs cease to work. But this, ordinarily a sign of approaching death, seems of no danger because at the same time analysis of the blood shows it has ceased to fill up with waste products. There is nothing to eliminate.

Metabolism—the process whereby nutritive materials is built up into living matter—is reduced to 10 per cent. from 20.

Prolonging Life

No frozen patient has ever caught pneumonia or a cold; the germs in their bodies apparently slow down along with the entire organism.

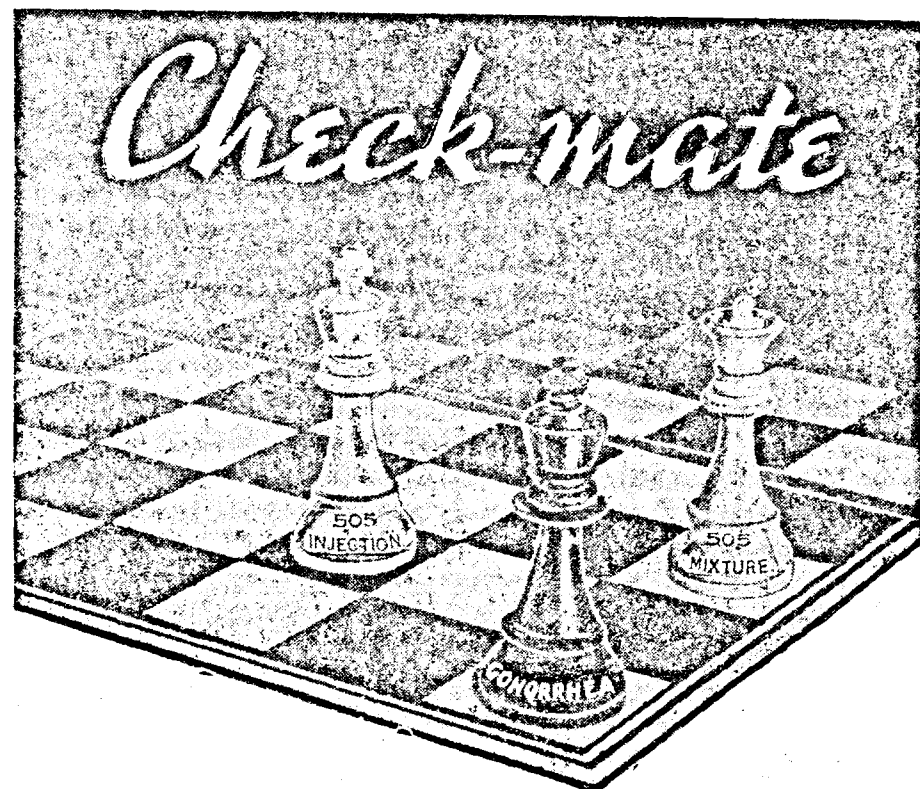

Previously, when a patient's temperature dropped even close to 90 degrees death was considered inevitable. But in these new experiments one woman's temperature was brought down to 82 for a short period with no ill effects.

What the experiments portend, doctors cannot forecast.

Some consider that they may provide a new weapon for Science. By freezing patients in this manner, they think, it should be possible to give the heart a complete rest, as nothing else can, and so, perhaps prolong life. Germ diseases too, may be susceptible to this treatment.

Human "hibernation" is in its infancy but its possibilities are being viewed with grave attention by the medical profession.

Gonorrhea—The Best Treatment

BY A DOCTOR.

Gonorrhea is on the increase. In fact, the latest world statistics suggest that one out of five persons in capitals, like London and New York are stricken with the disease.

The common fallacy that it is no worse than a bad cold is exploded. It is now recognised by clinical and pathological evidence as a dangerous disease with serious complications. Therefore, it should never be neglected.

Gonorrhea is an infective process due to the action of a specific micro-organism known as Gonococcus. It is characterized by a discharge of pus through the urethra. The primary lesion is an acute catarrhal inflammation of the anterior portion of the urethra. It quickly runs to suppuration, and if neglected, it attacks the bladder and weakens it, causing bladder trouble, then the prostate gland, and passing through the sub-acute and acute stages, penetrates the circulation and organic parenchymata, producing complications like stricture, epididymitis, gonorrhoeal rheumatism, vesiculitis, prostatitis, orchitis (swollen testicles) pyelitis, etc: and sometimes causes Impotence.

The symptoms of the disease usually start within 5 to 10 days after infection.

The patient may get some slight itching of the meatus and a burning sensation while passing urine. The lips of the meatus are congested and swollen. Gradually a serious discharge appears which though thin and mucoid in the beginning, soon becomes thick and yellow. There is sometimes a dragging pain in the back and some slight constitutional disturbances such as fever.

Occasionally the swelling inside the urethra is so great, that there is an hindrance in the flow of urine and on exertion haemorrhage occurs. The first attack is always more troublesome than the subsequent ones, though it responds easier to treatment. When this disease reaches the chronic stage it needs prolonged treatment.

The best treatment is a mixture and an Injection. Abortive treatment will aggravate the urethra and bring about complications.

The Mixture taken internally controls such distressing symptoms as pain, burning on urination, strangury and frequency. It does not upset the stomach. The Injection heals the ulcerations of the urethral mucosa or inflammation of the glandular structures and membranes in or about the urethra.

— NOT WORTHLESS 'QUACKS' —

* There is enough petrol in a small part of the Antarctic, according to Admiral Byrd, to supply the United States for a century.

Riches under the Polar Ice

By Luc A. Gravier

—o—

We know practically all there is to know about the north Pole. The South Pole, on the other hand, remains a land of mystery, whose soil hides fantastic riches.

It is only about forty years since explorers began to investigate this desert country. Even now its shape is not completely known, but its area is estimated at roughly six million square miles.

The first man to spend any considerable part of the winter in the Antarctic was the Belgian explorer, Baron A. de Gerlache, in 1198. Since 1900 many expeditions have explored the region and annexed parts of it for the benefit of one country or another. England, Germany, France, Norway, Sweden, and Australia all sent expeditions before the Great War. In 1922 Shackleton left on the expedition from which he never returned.

Last on the scene were the Americans. In 1926 Admiral Byrd undertook the first aeroplane flight over the Antarctic. He renewed his attempt in 1928 with the explorer Wilkins, and between 1933 and 1935 established his quarters for a whole winter—that is, for nearly five months—at the north-eastern end of Roosevelt Island. He came back convinced that the Antarctic was and of the richest territories in the world.

He knew that Shackleton had found coal there, and that others had found iron copper. After his 1935 expedition he himself announced confidently that there was petrol there as well. A periodical devoted to polar exploration, the Polar Record, announced simultaneously that petrol was known to exist in large quantities in Spitzbergen and Arctic Russia, and that there were geological reasons for supposing that similar deposits would be found in the Antarctic.

A commission was appointed by Congress to consider plans for a large-scale expedition, estimated to cost more than a million pounds, compared with the mere £15,000 spent by Gerlache's expedition in 1898. Admiral Byrd told this commission that one group of mineral deposits, situated at the northern edge of the Antarctic, less than six hundred nautical miles from Cape Horn, would alone provide the United States with enough liquid and solid fuel to last a century.

It is expected that five countries will claim a share in the division of the Antarctic continent. The United States is claiming a million square miles at the north end of the ice-cap, south-west of Cape Horn, and about 5,000 miles from Tahiti. It also hopes to get the mountainous mass known as the American Highlands, on the other side of the ice-cap.

Germany, too, is in the field. Last summer she was preparing an expedition designed to get there at the same time as Admiral Byrd's. She claims territory already occupied by Norway and France, and disputes the possession of another area with Australia. And Great Britain may well contest the pretensions of the United States, since the mineral-bearing areas which Admiral Byrd plans to exploit are situated in an area over which she has a general claim. Even Spain and Portugal could, if they wished, find a pretext for intervention in a papal bull of the fifteenth century which divided the pagan world between them for the better propagation of the Christian doctrine!

Petrol provides the world with two-thirds of its transport, and remains the most convenient of all liquid fuels. The territorial ambitions of the totalitarian Powers disguise a single desire: the need for petrol. Already the United States controls more than 59 per cent. of the world's petrol production. As compared with its 123 million tons, the British Empire produces 3,000,000 tons annually, Germany 300,000 tons, and France 78,000 tons. It is easy to see what tremendous power will be in their hands if they succeeded in adding to their existing resources the vast deposits at the South Pole: that is, if these deposits really do exist.

Deliver Us

Question: "Is life worth living?"
Answer: "It depends on the liver."

The doctor explains the matter to his patient in this way:

You see, the liver influences the liver by producing bile that acts favorably or not upon the liver and thus determines whether the liver who has that liver finds life worth living. In other words, the liver eats food to nourish his liver and enable the liver of the liver to supply the liver who has the liver with liver secretion that acts on the liver, and if this action of liver upon the liver is correct, the liver who owns this liver is a joyful liver. That is, if the liver of the liver is a standard liver and the liver with the liver is a low liver, though not necessarily liver' ied or running a livery, this low liver's liver will afford deliverance from liver troubles of the liver that a high liver's liver would not deliver. Or you can put it this way: If the liver who owns the liver is not a high liver and eats but little liver and treats his liver well, his liver will deliver bile and the liver's liver delivered of liver products decides if the liver with this liver wishes to liver die."

THE VIRILITY OF MANKIND

What Medical Science has accomplished.

By a Doctor.

How to maintain the virility of mankind? This knotty problem has engaged the attention of many famous scientists.

The chief causes of sexual weakness is the vicious habit of masturbation, sexual excesses, prolonged and frequent sexual excitement, which have been proved detrimental in the extreme. The sexual system is deprived of sufficient rest and recuperation and gradually loses its wonted energy. Other causes are excessive exercise, sedentary life, and excessive drinking.

Several attempts have been made to arrive at a formula which would bring about successful results. Commencing from the experiments of Brown Sequard in 1889 down to the recent findings of Dr. Serge Voronoff, the famous Russian Surgeon, it is a long history of laborious investigations by men of outstanding ability who dedicated their lives to the cause of medical progress and the alleviation of human misery.

The outcome of these extensive experiments and research established Gland treatment by the mouth, as best and most rational in the cure of Sexual weakness.

A very important factor in successful gland treatment is FRESHNESS of the vital Gland Substances. It is necessary that they are prepared in gelatine capsule form, to ensure freshness and maximum curative efficacy. Gland Substances in tablet or liquid form quickly deteriorate and become inert and worthless.

Writing: the Greatest Discovery

Many hold that the invention which has had most influence on the development of human society is the plough. Had not an unknown Chinese farmer contrived a wooden share to break up the soil on his land, where would civilisation be to-day?

So runs their argument. But what of the wheel? Without this invention, where would modern industry be, and communications? Yet the Mayas of Central America built up a flowering civilisation centuries before the Conquistadores came to destroy them, and they had not the use of the wheel.

A third opinion holds to the supreme importance of fire on the destiny of mankind. Whoever first tamed fire—fetched it, perhaps, from the red embers of a forest ignited by lightning and carried it to his cave—gave us our greatest boon. Surely the taming of fire was civilisation's most important milestone?

Abraham Lincoln thought not. In a newly found manuscript he discusses the world's greatest discoveries—and gives his vote to the art of writing. His argument runs as follows: If we consider that the spoken word is merely a sound which disappears in a twinkling, and that no human brain can store up all the valuable information imparted to it through speech, then we must agree that the art of translating sounds into signs is the most important of all. Take writing away from humanity and we lose the Bible, history, science, and law. Through the written word past generations speak to us.

Writing, then, was mankind's greatest discovery, according to Lincoln. And next to it—printing. Gutenberg was the father of printing; but we shall never know who first translated speech into signs.

Cigarette History

Cigarettes have been in use in Europe for just over a hundred years. The custom is supposed to have been introduced by French soldiers returning from Algiers, where the natives smoked tobacco wrapped in maize leaves. Another theory holds that Spain was the first European country to popularise the cigarette, as a feminine counterpart of the already popular cigar and pipe. In 1830 Spanish women were adept cigarette smokers, and the art of rolling the slender, cylinders was widespread. Ferdinand VII could roll a cigarette in either hand simultaneously.

The first known cigarette factory was established in France in 1843. In England the custom did not take hold till later. Dickens was a cigarette smoker.

In a letter dated 1857 he writes to inquire where materials for rolling cigarettes may be bought. But the cigarette did not become universally popular until after 1870, when many of the brands still on the market in Britain were first launched.

He Saw the Mummy Move

By Ferdinand Reyna

The speaker is an elderly man with a long white moustache. He is dressed in dark uniform and on his chest is the number 84. He is keeper of the seven rooms of mummies at the British Museum where is to be found, among others, the sarcophagus of young Cleopatra, namesake of the fateful Queen, and whom many believe to be the Queen herself.

He can show you the papyrus on which are recorded the changes of fortune experienced by this young girl of royal birth. He can tell you of many other wonders, too, but it is about his job itself that you should hear him talk. He speaks calmly, in a soft, even voice.

"Perhaps you won't believe me, but my job is sometimes a terrible one. During the long winter days, when London is covered with a dismal cloak of fog, there is often not a living soul about, not a single visitor, not a voice. Around me are the mummies, who are beings of stone to-day, but who once lived and loved, had their own joys and sorrows. . . Their silence is sometimes terrifying.

"Even the jewels that adorn them, with their dull gleam, and the strange animals that guard them—jackals, falcons, fishes, and bulls—everything seems to have a life of its own, born of the solitude. Behind the glass of the cases the scarabs glisten and still preserve their secrets of luck and ill-luck.

"One day—I was younger then—I was really scared. It was an evening towards the end of November. Seated on my stool, I was gazing at the mummy of Thu-Thu, wife of the scribe Ani, who is also here. After a time I found that I could not take my eyes off her. Suddenly—I honestly thought I was going mad—I saw a finger move, then a hand. . . .

"I gave out a fearful cry and collapsed unconscious. They found me later, lying on the ground, as pale as a sheet. I was ill for three months, but all the same I was intent on getting back to my work. I have carried on with it ever since, and I wouldn't give it up for anything in the world. My life is bound up with the mummies. I could retire on pension, but I don't want to. Perhaps my terror was a kind of test which I had to undergo before entering into their strange, uneasy world."

Medical examination of the mummies has revealed some curious things. For instance, we now know that the marriages between close relations that were traditional in the royal families of Thebes and Memphis were not sterile and did not cause any degeneration. We have also learned that the Pharaoh Meneptah, sworn enemy of the Jews, had an attack of smallpox; that Akhnaton had a weak heart; and that toothache was very common among the Egyptians.

Some strange stories have been told about mummified Pharaohs avenging themselves on those who shatter their repose. It is said that near the end of the last century four Englishmen one day broke their journey at Luxor to visit the ruins of the temple of Ammon-Ra. During their short stay they were able to buy, from an independent searcher, a sarcophagus on which was painted a very beautiful woman's face, possessing a charm both disquieting and indefinable.

The four men then continued their journey. One of them was accidentally killed shortly after, while handling a revolver. Another died suddenly the following year. Six months later the third was seriously injured by a stray shot in the shoulder, and they had to amputate his hand. As for the fourth, he got into difficulties on his return to England and, finding himself ruined, shot himself.

This man owned the sarcophagus, and his sister, who inherited it, was soon in trouble herself. On the advice of a fortune-teller, she decided to get rid of the baneful object, but, before doing so she had a picture taken of it. This was done by a well-known photographer—who died not long afterwards. Finally the sarcophagus caused the death of a British Museum official who was arranging for it to be moved, as well as a serious accident in which the man who was transporting it escaped only by a miracle.

Signor Gerolamo Segato, an Italian expert of the first half of the last century, closely studied the question of the preservation of mummies. He entered upon a deep study of Egyptology and the occult sciences, travelled in Asia and Africa, and like Nostradamus, he penetrated to the heart of the pyramids. On his return he announced that he had made the great discovery, but a mysterious disease was soon to lead him to the grave.

Equally tragic was the fate of Dr. Efisio Marini. This man used to embalm bodies in the Egyptian manner. He would shut himself up in his apartment and refuse to see anyone. To the rare visitors whom he did admit, his laboratory, with all the strange instruments used in the various complicated processes seemed a place of madness. When Dr. Marini died his mind was completely unbalanced and he had not revealed the secret which he claimed to possess.

This same problem is being studied at the moment by the experts of the Egyptian Museum in Vatican City. One of them, Professor Tulli, summed up the whole question when he said to me: "Is there any discovery which has not claimed its victims? Consider the fact that, as far as evil spells—or, more simply, poisons—are concerned, the Egyptians, knew a very great deal. To touch a mummy is nearly always to take a mortal risk."

"I promise," said the Lapp, and instantly the dog ran off to gather together his friends.

That agreement has been adhered to strictly. The Lapp, on his part, is particularly kind to his dogs, and to this day in the hinterland unwanted puppies and old dogs are hanged; while the dogs are the faithful guardians of his herds against the wolf.

It is when the snow is powdery and the wolf flounders up to its lean, grey belly, that the Lapp ventures forth to slaughter with wolf-stick (or rifle, should he possess such a thing), for during such snow conditions a man on skis can easily overtake a wolf to break its back with a single smashing blow of the "stick."

As deeply as the Lapp hates the wolf so he loves his dog. He even takes it to church with him. Men sit on one side, women on the other, and the dogs at the back, and it is a common occurrence for a service to be interrupted while the men leave their paws to separate a heaving mass of snarling animals. A preacher told me how he had once returned to the pulpit with bleeding hands after such a dog fight in his church.

The same preacher it was who told me how he had married a young couple, baptized their child and buried the bridegroom's mother during one continuous service. During the summer two years past the young couple decided to marry but to postpone the actual wedding ceremony until the coming winter, when the journey to church could be made at the same time as the reindeer herds moved from the mountains to the marshes. In the meantime a child arrived, an influenza epidemic which struck the small settlement wiped out two complete families and killed the bridegroom's mother, many reindeer died, and, desperately poor, the young couple were forced to postpone the wedding until the following winter snows. The dead were placed on lake-islands or beneath cairns away from prowling animals until such time as the arrival of winter made it possible for their remains to be conveyed by pulka to church (a journey of several weeks) for decent burial. And with the ceremonies over, the newly-weds journeyed into the interior again to continue the struggle with Nature.

How the Lapps managed to find their way, watchless and compassless, bewildered me until Jonas initiated me into the secret.

Where the north wind strikes stunted trees the bark is invariably darker and the longest limbs invariably point south: Arctic moss grows more thickly on the south side of boulders, and ants always shelter in the lee of hummocks which is on the side away from north winds. So it is that as the Lapp travels he is constantly reminded of two points in the compass, north and south, from which he can fix the quarters.

It was from Jonas that I learnt the etiquette to be observed in the borrowing of a boat. The traveller is welcome to use any boat to convey himself across river or lake when the twenty-four-hours-a-day summer sun has melted the ice. But should he row to the other side he must return the boat to the bank from which he took it, otherwise the owner, or some other traveller, may find himself stranded, and to be stranded in Lapland can so easily result in death. So it is that boats are always left in pairs, one on each bank of a lake or river, and the traveller must make three crossings (no small order if the lake is a mile or two wide) before finally stepping ashore on the farther bank!

While on the subject of water I should tell of the strange experience which befell me in this Arctic land. A Lapp remonstrated with me for drinking from the edge of a lake. Devils, he said, lived in the water, and should one get into my stomach it would eat away my intestines. He quoted case after case in which he had heard of folk dying in agony from this cause, passed me the wooden cup dangling from his belt and, after searching the contents for a sign of a devil, I had my drink!

Never was I so sorry to leave a land as when I once more clambered aboard the bus and waved a final good-bye to Jonas-the-wolf-hunter of Karasuando-Lapland.

GLANDULAR THERAPY.

By Dr. A. F. De Saint-Croix.

Journal of Medicine, Feb: '37.

In the light of modern researches and extraordinary rapid progress in the direction of the use of ductless glands in the treatment of various diseases much is said and has been discussed.

This new principle in medicine has completely revolutionised the old time tonics.

Glandular therapy, the application of which dates back from 1889 when the pioneer of this branch of medicine, Brown Sequard, administered to himself testicular extract, is well known. To the amazement of himself and other physicians, the experiment proved a great success and a new chapter was opened up in the modern book of therapeutics.

Since that day, good many eminent scientists, notably Banting, Best, Murphy, Minot, and Serge Voronoff have experimented on various organisms including human beings, taking help of every available ductless gland found in the body.

Recently the new system has been perfected to such a degree, that surprising results have been recorded in books of medical statistics.

A good deal of information about the subject can be obtained from an authoritative publication put forward by Dr. E. Retterar, a Parisian Professor.

It is also a truth that the most forward medical men whose opinions are valued by physicians of the whole world have personally carried out experiments, and have without reservation, put their stamp of approval on the system and advocated its tremendous possibilities.

It has been scientifically proved that the key to sexual weakness is Glandular Extracts obtained from the glands of bulls, and administered by the mouth in CAPSULE FORM.

Yet all the achievements of the system are reduced to nil if the glands selected are not of standard purity and if due care is not taken during the preparation of their compounds. The bulls selected must not be diseased and must be absolutely young so that all their ductless glands must be functioning with their proper physiological secretions. On strict and thorough pathological examinations, they should prove to be absolutely germ free and in a healthy condition.

The exact proportions selected from different glands is a matter of vital importance.

Another factor of great importance is the preservation and stability of these products. Absolute freshness is essential. The gelatine capsule is recognised as the best method of preserving freshness and therapeutic efficacy. The vital gland substances are completely sealed in the gelatine envelope, and all possibility of deterioration is eliminated.

New Uses of Blood from the Dead

The blood of the dead may soon be used to restore the living to health.

Experiments in Russia are stated to have disclosed these startling facts:—

Blood from corpses gives better results than that from live donors.

Red cell increase is higher after transfusion from a dead person than after transfusion from live donors.

Professor W. N. Shamor, outlining his remarkable experiments on animals and man in The Lancet declares that the transfusion of cadaver (corpse) blood has another definite advantage—notably the rarer and less conspicuous reactions on patients.

"PREJUDICE"

"In spite of the fact that there is a large body of supporting evidence for its value and that full sanction has been obtained for taking blood from cases of sudden death, medical men at the courts of justice were unwilling to allow the blood of bodies that are at their disposal to be drawn for clinical needs," writes the Professor.

He speaks of the strong prejudice in the majority of people at the bare thought of transfusing into a live person the blood from a corpse and the "holy awe" at the thought of "disturbing the repose of the dead."

From experiments on animals the Professor "confirmed our fundamental thesis that the blood in the dead body preserves its vitality for about ten hours after death."

CONSERVATIVE ENGLISH DOCTORS

A London hospital doctor declared

"The use of corpses" blood in the treatment of illness has been in vogue for some years in Russia.

"I saw it done at a big accident hospital in Moscow. Precautions are taken to ensure that the dead did not die from any disease.

It is claimed that very good results have been obtained.

"I have been trying to advocate this method in this country in order to relieve the strain on blood donors, but there seems to be very little enthusiasm for it among British medical men.

Spermatorrhea is an occasional or constant escape of spermatozoa (life-germs) without or with very little sexual excitement. This gradually undermines the strongest constitution making the sufferer a mere wreck of his former self.

Cause:—The duct is weakened and relaxed through masturbation or prolonged excesses or sexual excitement.

Spermatorrhea, if neglected, leads to Impotence, Tuberculosis, Consumption, and other dangerous diseases.

Salix Pills should be immediately taken for the full course of three months. If ordered in one lot, the cost is Rs. 60/- only.

A Remedy for Asthma

Asthma is a health trouble that launches sudden and serious attacks, often at times when the sufferer is unprepared with any means of defence. As every asthmatic knows, night attacks of asthma are the most feared. That is why any simple-to-take remedy that can be kept close at hand to give relief from the paroxysms that accompany asthma should be welcomed. Such a remedy is Matrone Specific, prepared in the form of little tablets, and Matrone Elixir in liquid form, taken in conjunction.

The Matrone treatment is the best in the world and has gained the endorsement of the medical profession, and there is ample evidence from actual users of the treatment that the claim to give quick relief and finally a permanent cure is justified. This treatment is prescribed for use in cases of asthma, bronchial asthma, bronchitis, catarrh and hay fever.

Brown bread is better for you than white. Do not start telling me you hate brown bread; you must eat it, and you will soon prefer it to the white variety. Porridge for breakfast is good for you. Tea is bad; take only one cup of a day, and that very weak. Tea on waking, tea at eleven, tea for dinner, tea for tea, and an extra cup because Mrs Brown popped in at half-past five, and tea for supper—all this is the best I know for promoting constipation. Anæmic girls keep themselves ill by tea. Cocoa made with milk is worth the money because it is real nourishment.

* Stout Cortes, it appears, was the father of the "penny bar."

Chocolate From Mexico

By A. E. Ballard

The most munificent gift one empire ever gave her bitterest rival was—chocolate. The British Empire literally owes every bean to the Spaniards who first discovered the tree in Mexico and later started plantations in their other colonies. From these came the trees which formed the nucleus of the British plantations. At the present time Latin America and the British Empire between them produce about 98 per cent of the world's supply.

Actually, Columbus was the first white man to see the cacao bean. He took some back with him to Spain. Cortes and the men who conquered Mexico with him in 1521 were the first Europeans ever to taste the new drink. One of them, Bernal Diaz del Castillo, recorded that "the emperor [Montezuma] took no other beverage than the chacolatl, a potation of chocolate flavoured with vanilla and other spices, and so prepared as to be reduced to a froth of the consistency of honey, which gradually dissolved in the mouth, and was taken cold."

The Mexicans themselves were very partial to it. At one banquet Montezuma's attendants brought in 50 jars of chocolate, which the Emperor and his Spanish guests drank out of golden goblets. Mean-while, the guards and attendants consumed 2,000 jars of what Linnaeus called, two centuries later, the food of the gods" (Theobroma cacao.)

Where or when the Aztecs, who arrived in Mexico City in 1324, acquired their taste for chocolate, is not known. Von Humboldt, in his account of his travels in South America, wrote: "We met no tribe on the Orinoco that prepared a beverage from the seeds of the cacao tree. The savages suck the pulp of the pod and throw away the seeds." His belief that the tree was indigenous to the forests of the Amazon and Orinoco seems to have been correct.

Cortes saw at once the commercial possibilities of the new drink, which was both stimulant and stand-by, and also a speedy remedy for scurvy.

The Mexicans, however, had never heard of sugar, which the Spaniards had already planted in the West Indies. When this was added to the chocolate it completely altered the nature of the drink. The Spaniards kept the secret of its preparation for over a hundred years.

Very soon cacao trees sprang up in other Spanish colonies. There were plantations in Trinidad as early as 1525, and from these came the first trees planted in Ceylon in 1834. In 1560 Spanish planters introduced cacao into the East Indies, and a little later they started plantations in Fernando Po. Trees were taken from this island to the Gold Coast in 1879 to found the British plantations which now yield 45 per cent of the total world export of cacao.

In Latin America the Spanish conquistadores found the cacao tree growing wild in Brazil, Ecuador, and Mexico. Plantations were started in Venezuela in the seventeenth century, and in Bahia in 1780. Today cacao is also grown in Colombia, Peru, and Central America.

From the first the unfamiliar Mexican words caused misunderstanding. The Aztecs called the tree cacauatl, and the drink chocolatl. From these two words come the English chocolate, cocoa, and the more unfamiliar cacao.

Cacao is the raw material which is produced when cacao beans are ground down into a semi-liquid mass. As this was too fatty to be pleasant, a Dutchman, Van Houten, devised a process for pressing out about 65 per cent of this fat, which is known as cacao (or incorrectly, cocoa) butter. When this has been done, cocoa remains. To make chocolate, sugar and cacao butter is added.

From a distance an orchard of cacao trees does not look unlike an English apple orchard. The trees, planted 300 to an acre, grow 20-25 feet high. In Brazil there are over 100 million trees in area one fifth the size of Europe, producing in 1938 125,000 tons of beans.

Cacao pods are cut very carefully from the trees with a knife on the end of a pole, which is called a podadera, or cocoa hook. When the pods have been cracked, the beans and pulp are scraped out and left to ferment for three to five days. During this process the pulp turns to liquid and drains away. The beans are then dried in the sun for three or four days. In Venezuela clay is scattered over them, and they are dried and polished by the feet of the natives who dance on them whilst they sing their traditional songs. In Ecuador the beans are dried on strips of matting made of split bamboo, called barbecues, while in Bahia most of the beans are dried by artificial heat. "Esfufas," as these are called, fetch a high price because they are not subjected to the vagaries of the weather during the drying process.

Chocolate is made today in a bewildering variety of forms and flavours, but, apart from the extraction or addition of cacao butter, the process of manufacture is essentially the same as when Cortes watched it four centuries ago.

DEAD MAN'S GAMBLE

M. RENEE LEDON, for thirteen years director of Casino at Monte Carlo, tells this story:

A Dutch visitor went to the Casino one evening. He staked 100 francs on rouge, and won. As he remained impassive, the croupier added the winnings to the original stake on rouge. It won again, and time after time—the Dutchman making no gesture to claim his winnings—a red number continued to carry the original stake on towards fortune. At last, when the impassive gambler's stake stood at 128,000 francs—the limit for an even chance—the croupier addressed the successful gambler. He received no answer. An attendant moved quietly up and tapped the man on the shoulder.

The Dutchman fell forward over the green cloth—dead. The bank immediately raked in the 128,000 francs—they did not play with dead men! But the Dutchman's relatives sued them, and since it was impossible to establish the moment of the man's death, the Court decided that the full amount should be paid over to his heirs.—A-Magasinet (Oslo).
