HOW TO GAIN SOUND HEALTH AND SUPERB MANHOOD

— This remarkable book now sent free!

Written by Dr. R.M. Singh, author of outstanding books on Sex, Health and Brahmacharya and a medical authority on these subjects, it gives much new useful information on these vital topics. If you find that you have lost your health, memory and manhood by unnatural bad habits, this book would guide you to sound health and superb manhood again, so that you regain your mental and physical fitness and a new energy for your daily work and for better enjoyment of your life, especially your married life. Dr. Singh's books and treatment have been highly praised by leading journals, medical authorities and his readers and patients. For example:—

Dr. R.M. Singh, solid sturdy built, about 6½ ft. tall.

The International Journal of Sexology, whose editorial board comprises of the leading sexologists of all American and Eastern countries and which is the most authoritative journal on the subject, says: "It is a well-written book with sane and sound ideas... will be found of material value."

The Indian Librarian, the magazine which is a high authority on books and libraries, says, "Most of the books on sex life written in India are mere trash. But this book is an exception. It is scientifically written and the knowledge imparted by it would go a long way to enrich the mind of the reader. The reviewer enjoyed the book.... Young Indians will benefit by reading it."

The Modern Review, the great monthly magazine, says, "The volume under review contains valuable scientific information regarding the sex life of man and woman. Every chapter of the book is informative and interesting and testifies to the author's scientific outlook. His easy simple style makes the book a happy reading."

My Magazine of India says, "The author has made a really creditable effort to present exhaustive and vital information.....written in a very lucid and non-technical manner, it is a book that is worth reading."

So many other such high opinions could be quoted.

Treatment. Now take an example how serious cases are cured by Dr. Singh's treatment described in the above free book:—

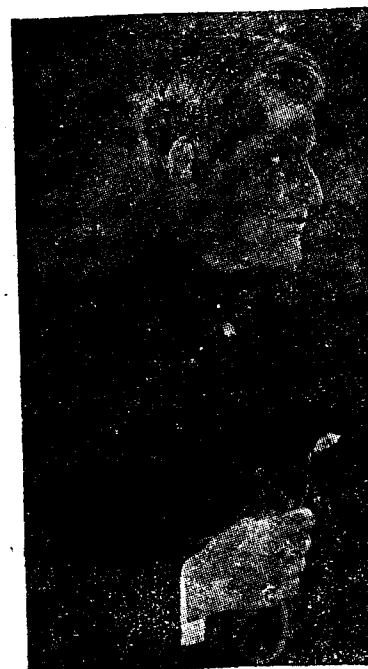

His Pitiable Condition. A patient, Mr. M.N.L., Amritsar, wrote:— "I have lost my health totally through eight years' constant bad habit of youth. I am worried and depressed always. I am a complete wreck. I look pale, depressed and distressed and avoid the company of friends and co-workers. Always I repent for my past mistakes. Proposals were put forward for my marriage, but my good luck or bad luck, I was rejected on all occasions by the other side on the plea that I am poor in health. There cannot be a more shameful occasion for one in life than this. Had anyone else been in my position he would have committed suicide long ago."

"I am going from bad to worse every day. I am always sad and gloomy, tired and exhausted. I have consulted all in my power, but none is capable of curing me. Please take this case only if you have enough courage, confidence and experience, otherwise leave me in the hell, leave me as I am. I am tired of treatments. By abundant loss of energy all my bodily organs such as stomach, liver, nervous system etc., have been utterly mutilated. I am very lean and thin, a bundle of bones. My mind is always occupied by various fears and apprehensions. I see my future dark and dreadful. Whenever I think of my future I hid my face and weep for hours."

Now Cured, Healthy, Happy. He wrote so many other things like these, but to cut it short, he was finally cured by this new treatment and was also married soon. He wrote several letters describing the progress of his case. In one he wrote: "My marriage took place on the 24th. It is only your encouragement, sane advice and sympathetic treatment that has pushed me so far. Indeed you have done for me which no one else would have ever been able to do." Then he tells how he was successful in his married life, and continues, "I am now quite all right.... Had I not chanced to write to you I do not know what would have been my fate. It is no exaggeration to say that you have saved me from suicide. I cannot even dream of rewarding you for what you have done for me but still

I dare to ask you for anything I can do for you. This is simply out of gratitude...."

Then after six months he wrote asking for advice about a disorder of his wife, and in that letter he also wrote:— "You would like to know my condition and how I am now. Your treatment is nothing but a magic, it put me on the road to life again. Now that more than 6 months of my married life are over, I tell you that my married life is successful and happy, as I could never imagine then. Really you have saved my life. Now I have no trouble of any sort. My general health also is now all right. I am grateful to you for all this."

— (Sd.) M.N.L., Amritsar.

His case, which runs into 8 pages if given fully in the above free book, and also many more such cases of ruined health in full details. This book has given a new life to hundreds of such hopeless youths. Write a card to-day for this book now sent free. Write your age, and disease if any, so that Dr. Singh may advise you.

NO SEAT FOR PEKING

ONCE again the Peking Government has been refused a seat by the General Assembly of the United Nations. The world organization has stultified itself by allowing the United States to carry the day. It is ridiculous that the Kuomintang clique installed on Formosa should continue to represent 600 million Chinese.

M. Andrei Vyshinsky, in pressing his demand for recognition of the People's Republic of China, made out a good case. He recalled the recent affirmative role of Peking. It is admitted on all hands that at the Geneva Conference the Peking Government showed its desire for peace and whenever there was a deadlock during the negotiations it was helpful with an attitude of compromise and conciliation. The Chinese Prime Minister's recent visit to India and Burma and his declarations that his country stood for peace and co-existence evoked praise even among some Western nations.

India, in particular, has all along been pleading in favour of New China. Her argument is that, once seated in the General Assembly, Peking will develop a better sense of independence and responsibility and Soviet influence over it will become markedly less. Of late, China has been longing for greater internal stability at home and domestic peace.

It is regrettable that even the United Kingdom which is keen on securing a seat for China in the United Nations voted with the U.S.A. on the resolution to postpone consideration of any question relating to China. Dollar diplomacy has scored another victory in silencing Her Majesty's Government.

But H. M. Government's Opposition leader, Mr. Clement Attlee, and other Labourites who toured Soviet Russia and New China, have different views which are apt to raise a storm in Washington. Mr. Attlee has shocked the Tory press with his statement that the "sooner we get rid of Chiang Kai-shek and his troops, the better it will be." He went on to describe Formosa Island as the biggest Far East difficulty of all.

The world knows that Washington is hoping that Chiang will be helped back to the mainland and rehabilitated in Peking with his former power and glory. But facts are unalterable and President Eisenhower is swimming against the current. And the U.S. has denied representation to Peking on the ostensible ground that it is Communist. Sharp and pungent is Mr. Attlee's comment. Free Nations will be driving China behind the iron curtain. "The more action taken against China by the Western Powers," he says, "the more closely will she cling to Russia. China must be drawn closer to the West..."

While Mr. Attlee was speaking in London, the Chinese Prime Minister, Chou En-lai, was vehemently declaring in Peking that Formosa would be liberated at any cost and that America would not be allowed to interfere with what was purely an internal affair. This is ominous really. The U.S. seems ready to stake its all in the defence of Formosa. If report speaks true, some Republican Senators are urging their President to use the latest atomic weapons for routing the Peking Government. It would be sheer madness if such short-sighted proposals were heeded.

General K.M. Cariappa

First Indian C.-in-C. of the Indian Army.

"One of the most distinguished men of India to-day," said Lady Hope.

The seal of Independence of India was really set on the 15th of January, 1949, for it was on that day that General Cariappa was made the Commander-in-Chief of the Motherland — no matter to what extent or in what manner Legislative, Judicial or other Departments of Public Services of India might have been thrown open to Indians by its quondam rulers before that Great Day.

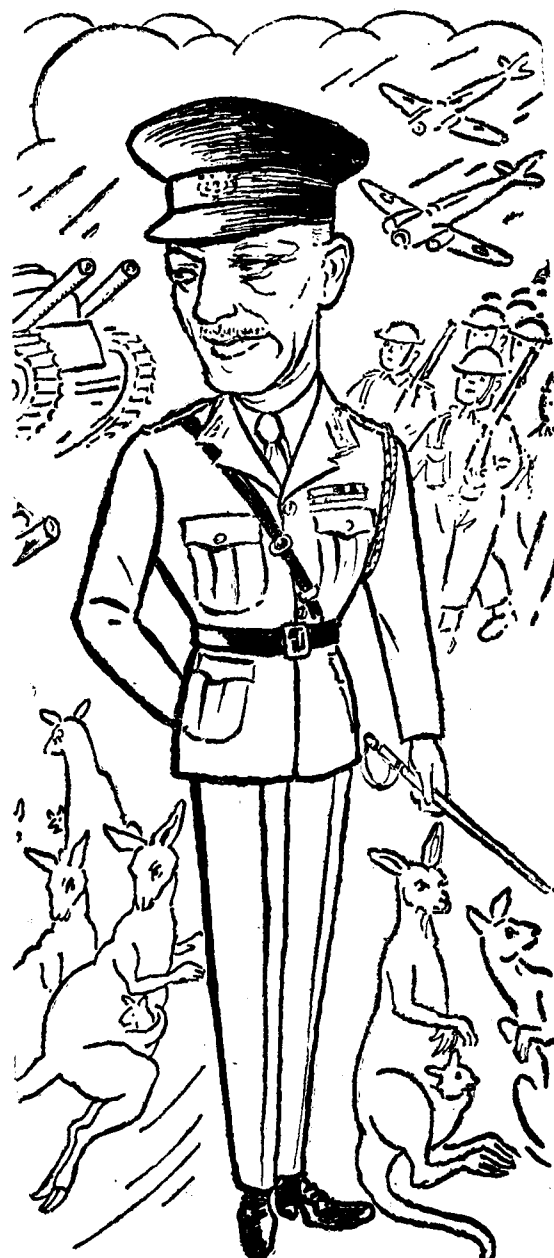

Quite befitting as the choice was, not only because Gen. Cariappa belonged to that tiny and trim mountain State which bred only sturdy stalwarts, and because Gen. Cariappa had seen active Military service in many theatres of Modern War where he had distinguished himself alike for personal gallantry and for well planned generalship, and because in very responsible duty he was entrusted with, he always maintained strictest discipline yet without the least vestige of Martinetism, not only because he has travelled widely and studied and gathered what his newly liberated Homeland needed, yet there was something in his unassuming simplicity that inspired a shrewd observer like Lady Hope to speak of him as one of the greatest Indians to-day.

To-day Gen. Cariappa left cannon for Kangaroo. They gambol around him. "And why not," thinks aloud this philanthropic Soldier. "Why not you, my good friends, take in among you, some of my own Brethren so badly in need of living space?"

He rose to the top of his Profession; he has; but that top is just the beginning.

For, when the choice of Indian High Commissioner in Australia, fell upon Gen. Cariappa, there were people who found in that happy choice, Historic Reminiscences which might well make any Indian heart swell with pride.

No deep study of the History of Free Countries is needed to recollect the careers of George Washington, or Gen. Eisenhower or the Duke of Wellington and note how their grateful Countries marked their appreciation by entrusting such great soldiers with the highest civil responsibilities; in short, no one would be surprised, if in a few short years, we should be writing of President Cariappa.

NEWS AND NOTES

Postal Facilities

A remarkable feature of recent years has been the rapid expansion of the Posts and Telegraphs Department. In view of the forthcoming centenary of the postage stamp, this fact assumes special significance. In the course of an interesting speech in New Delhi, the President described the Posts and Telegraphs Department as the second largest public utility service of the Government. In the life of the common man, according to him, no other governmental institution plays so intimate or so extensive a role.

Since Independence, over 25,000 post offices have been opened. Authorities have not been unmindful of the interests of rural areas. For every village or circle containing 2,000 people there is to be a post office. The President called for concentrated efforts to provide more communication facilities in the rural parts because the people there formed the backbone of the nation. "The punctual postman going his rounds all through the year," he remarked, "the long red coloured letter box standing guard at a familiar corner in a village, the modest hut which serves as a post office — all these have a peculiar meaning for every one in an Indian village."

The President went on to list the other outstanding achievements of the Communications Ministry such as the "all-up" air mail scheme and the institution of mobile post offices. There is a proposal to "air-link" all the important cities and capitals of the States. All the same, postal facilities even in urban areas are inadequate and authorities tend to ignore public needs. For instance, the local post-card in cities is priced at six pices but the concession in regard to envelopes has been withdrawn.

The President commended the "own your phone" scheme but in practical experience several business men who wanted installation of phones or extension of their office phones to their residences in other parts in the same city have been disappointed. The usual excuse is trotted out: "There is lack of materials at present," or "Make a fresh application again." The concerned departmental heads lack imagination, move at elephantine speed, are apathetic at their best and are hopelessly entangled in red tape. It is time the Communications Ministry started a drive for efficiency in this particular department.

We cannot help feeling that officials and subordinates in post offices should be more courteous to the public and adopt a helpful attitude. Of course, they observe "Courtesy Week" and make a success of it but in the remaining fifty-one weeks they are aloof, as a rule, and often snap and snarl at the men on the other side of the counter.

Gandhi Jayanthi

All over India and even beyond, Gandhi Jayanti will be celebrated in the first week of October. Spinning Yagnas, processions, mass prayer meetings and tributes from all parties and individuals to the Father of the Nation will mark the occasion.

Even the nations of the West which are engaged in harnessing science to the work of destroying the human race are now beginning to realise that Gandhiji's creed of Non-violence does exalt the status and dignity of Man. They have been watching the phenomenal rise and progress of India under the leadership of the Mahatma then and now under Pandit Nehru. Also several nations in Asia and Africa are throwing off their shackles of slavery by following the path shown by Gandhiji.

Speaking of our own country and progress, we would quote President Prasad's view that the younger generation has strayed from the Gandhian path and that a decline in our standard of morality is painfully noticeable. In the absence of affection and devotion to duty on the part of the younger folk, home life has little harmony. Is it a sign of the times or just a passing phase?

On the shoulders of Congressmen, especially, rests a grave responsibility. This week, there is bound to be a considerable searching of heart; the searchlight will be turned inwards. Are Congress leaders (leave alone the followers) animated by the spirit of service and sacrifice on which our leader laid the greatest emphasis? The recent electioneering campaigns and the linguistic agitation in different parts of the country were here and there marred by ugly scenes of violence and heat. Mere lip-service to Gandhian ideals will lead us nowhere.

Plain-Speaking By Ponnambalam

The Ceylon Government has decided to deport 150,000 Indians whose resident permits have expired. Among these are many who have spent their best years in the island and are utter strangers to India. To expect the Kotelawala Ministry to be more humane in the treatment of this vexed question would seem futile. But the Ceylon Government is rushing headlong with its ill-considered plans to get rid of those who built up the wealth and prosperity of the island. It is very much like striking the hand that rocked the cradle.

It is hardly surprising that Mr. G. P. Ponnambalam who was Minister of Fisheries in the Kotela-wala Cabinet, in a memorable speech at Jaffna the other day, denounced the present Government for pursuing such a short-sighted policy. Most of the troubles that faced Indians to-day, said the All-Ceylon Tamil Congress leader, were due to the concentration of power in the hands of a racial and religious majority. "Encouraged by the knowledge that the present head of the State, unlike his two predecessors, will not only support but aid and abet them, in order to get firmly entrenched in power, the leaders of the majority community are letting loose communal passion to establish the Sinhalese Buddhist Raj in Ceylon," Mr. Ponnambalam added.

The speaker then referred to the insidious attempts in certain quarters to segregate the Tamil-speaking population and make Sinhalese the only official medium. This clearly violated the proclaimed policy of the previous Governments to accord equality of status to Tamil and Sinhalese. The cause of democracy was not promoted when minority communities were having a deep sense of fear and a feeling of insecurity. "What passes for Party Government," observed Mr. Ponnambalam, "is only a thinly disguised form of racial dictatorship."

More Powers For Municipal Councils?

In a speech at Palayamkottai (Tirunelveli) Sri Sri Prakasa expressed sympathy with the demand for more powers to municipal councils. He was replying to the civic addresses presented by the Tirunelveli, Palayamkottai and Melapalayam Municipal Councils. The Governor made the interesting disclosure that he had urged the Chief Minister to announce a decision soon on the recommendations of the Ratnasabapathy Mudaliar Committee.

Grant of more powers, we presume, implies ability to raise more funds. It is notorious that Municipal Councils suffer from eternal shortage of money and are unable even to fulfil their primary duties. The roads are full of ruts, the streets are far from tidy and the open, stagnant drains stink and breed flies and mosquitoes. And many of the important towns in our State have no protected water supply.

The State Government is too hard up to render any effective assistance to municipal councils. The latter must, therefore, be given some powers to raise money with the consent and co-operation of citizens living in their areas, for the improvement of roads, sanitation, water supply and the construction or expansion of local hospitals. In times of emergency when an epidemic breaks out, the municipal council must be given sufficient powers to commandeer the services of doctors residing within municipal limits until the Public Health Department sends sufficient men and equipment.

Will the Commissioner figure at all in the new set-up? The Mail fears that the present wholesome bifurcation of functions between the Commissioner and the Council may be given up. It is a danger that must be averted at all costs. The Commissioner serves as a watch-dog of the rate-payers' interests and alerts the Government when there is maladministration or misuse of powers.

Glowing Tributes

A public meeting of the citizens of Madras was held at the Museum Theatre in Egmore, Madras, on 16th September to celebrate the 68th Birthday of His Holiness Mahamandaleswar Sri Swami Sivananda Saraswati, Founder-James Vincent Joyce, the new Director of Information for the United States Information Service in Madras in place of Mr. Raymond E. Barth, who left for the United States on September 8.

President of the Divine Life Society.

Sri T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer, retired Chief Justice of the Travancore High Court, presided over the function.

That the Divine Life Movement is not a purely Hindu or Muslim or any such exclusive religion but is a non-denominational doctrine that is universal in its appeal and easy of practice is already known to many by the very fact of His Holiness having admirers and disciples all over the world and belonging to different faiths. His Holiness has also established an All-World Religions' Federation and recently held a Parliament of Religions at Rishikesh.

It is this universality of His Holiness' work and teachings that was again emphasised by the fact that Christian and Muslim speakers participated in the public meeting and paid glowing tributes to His Holiness.

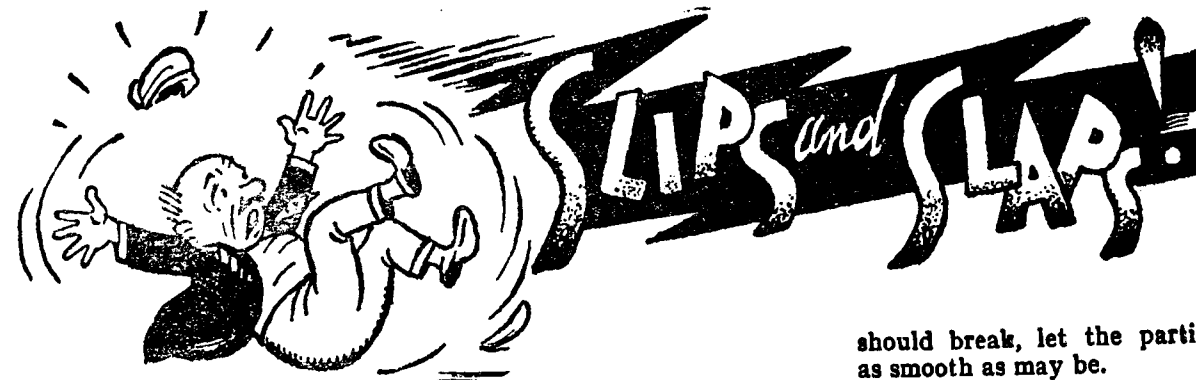

Srimathi Rukmini Arundale, M.P. and Founder of Kalakshetra, Adyar, Sri K. Balasubramania Iyer, M.L.C., Mr. Chenchiah, Barrister, Mr. S. M. Fossil of the Crescent Society, Sri K. S. Ramaswami Sastri, President of the Divine Life Society Dynamic Centre, Madras, Sri Satchidanandam Pillai, and others expressed their personal and sincere appreciation of Swamiji's mission and teachings. Sri C. R. Pattabhiraman, Barrister, proposed the vote of thanks.

A resolution read by the President wishing many happy returns of the day to His Holiness in connection with his 68th birthday was unanimously passed.

The meeting is yet another proof of the popularity and the esteem in which His Holiness is held by the public.

Lalita Laksharchana

The celebration of Lalita Laksharchana at 148, Brodies Road, Mylapore, Madras-4, which began on 28th September '54 will last till 7th October, '54. Devotees and bhakthas who desire to have archanas performed in their favour must furnish their respective names and those of their birth stars in addition to Rs. 5 for each archana. Donations also may kindly be sent to Jyothisha Rathna Pandit M.R.K. Murthy, the sponsor, at the above-mentioned address.

[Baba Doodle passes in review the amiable and delightful Slips of the Great and the Mighty with his gentle and polite Slaps like those of the Laputan Flappers who respectfully roused the dreaming Philosophers, as it is authentically recorded in "Gulliver's Travels."]

Why So Frank?

H. E. Sri Sri Prakasa, the Governor of Madras, the other day, said that the Ministers of a State were more powerful than the Governor, under the Constitution.

Is it modesty? Or, is it misreading of the Constitution?

True, the Ministers issue executive orders which are carried out. But the ratification of Bills into Laws is in the Governor's hands. If Sri Sri Prakasa is serious in what he says, the humblest policeman is perhaps more powerful than a Minister for the policeman can place a man behind the bars; but a Minister himself cannot.

If Sri Sri Prakasa is right, may I ask, why he should tour? Why should he receive addresses detailing the wants and grievances of various local Bodies?

With Sri Sri Prakasa, it is a case of not that he understood the Constitution less, but loved modesty more. Or, is it that the regard that His Excellency bore towards the Ministers was at fault?

Divorce for Hindus!

"Alas, divorce for Hindu Husbands and Hindu Wives! Will there be Hindu Homes after this temptation? Will not the short-tempered Husband or Wife run up to the Court and seek divorce under momentary and impulsive haste?"

That is what many Hindus feel.

Any change, anything new is a red rag to our purusha rishabhas (male bulls). I, for one, always respect a bit of conservatism when we are apt to lose our balance over a new-fangled toy. Yet we have only to halt our feathery fancies a bit and we shall find that Hindu Homes are not heading towards Domestic Disruption, if not, Destruction.

Hindu Homes are the resultant of many complex influences, some of them religious, some customary, some prudential, and mostly temperamental concord, working for more than fifty centuries, if we are to rely on the findings of modern archaeologists.

Let alone exceptions: most Hindu Homes are run on the Division of Labour System, the man goes out and gathers the feed; the woman keeps the Home; the man, within the Home, enjoys himself; the woman worries; that is how the Hindu Home, the unit of the Nation, has, from time immemorial, been working. Nor would it be far from right to assert that any Home, truly Happy, can work on any other basis. If so, why then this provision for divorce, it might be asked.

Yet, as the things are, not all Homes can be happy. There cannot but be some unhappy exceptions. And, if such Homes should break, let the parting be as smooth as may be.

For, the very genius of the Hindu Wife is to find Light and Life in the Faith she has in him whom she has chosen, or who has been chosen, for her as her partner in life. The Hindu Wife will be the first to revolt against the thought of Divorce.

It is no doubt a very disagreeable drug but only to be invoked when the malady is desperately incurable.

Four-Year High School Course

Intermediate Class is to go: it is to be split up between the High School and the College.

This is not the first time that the poor High-School Course has been subjected to alteration. It is the toy of any Educational Minister who wishes to immortalize himself. You have only to remember how the monkey in Brobdingnag carried away Gulliver as if he were a beetle and luckily left him unhurt. But, the Education Minister is not so harmless like that monkey. He must needs leave his stamp upon the System: there's the rub.

The Head Master of a great High School in Madras points out the practical difficulties in working out the Partition of the Intermediate Class.

To ponder over the catalogue of difficulties which he points out is to understand how light-heartedly the Partition of Inter. Class has been arrived at.

Hindi Not So Rich or Old

Mr. Hanumanthayya, the Chief Minister of Mysore, remarked that the Hindi Language, which was sought to be made the National Language of all India, was neither so old nor so rich. He added the more practical advice that the folly of sentimentally giving up English as the language of the people who perpetrated the Jallianwallah Bagh murder and the Crawling Orders of Amritsar, should be got over by wisdom.

Mr. Hanumanthayya is as frank as he is fair. But the age of sentiment has not gone, far from it. It pays to cry out slogans in the name of Gandhiji.

Comrade?

You can hail a friend or use it in the Lok Sabha without the danger of being called "Red"; poor innocent "Comrade"; how much has it had to endure before it was permitted free passage from lip to lip.

Shame of Imperialism

"The day of Imperialist power is gone! We, in Britain, have much to be ashamed of in our Imperial past," so said Bevan, the British Labour Leader.

When will Portugal understand Bevan?

"Is it a nation of One Sex?"

Dr. Edith Summerskill, one of the U. K. Labour Party Delegation to the Far East, asked the People who came to meet the Delegation, "Where are the women? I should estimate, there are 250 men to each woman sitting here. This is a nation of one sex."

But then, Dr. Summerskill was the only lady in a delegation of seven. Does it mean that the ratio between men and women in U. K. is six to one?

The Other Side of SEATO

Mr. V. K. Krishna Menon analyses the SEATO thus:

1. The SEATO divides Peoples of the Earth.
2. It does not include India and some important countries of S. E. Asia.
3. Therefore, it does not enlist the loyalty of S.-E Asia.

Physician, Heal Thyself!

Very pertinently was Dr. Ambedkar asked, when he found fault with the Central Govt. for not having done anything real to the Scheduled Castes, in all these years, "Have you united the Scheduled Castes?"

The learned Doctor's reply was golden silence.

Legislative Travesty

A private Bill in the Lok Sabha tried to enact that "Widowers can only marry widows."

I can only ask whether it is a stroke of humour to enliven the serious atmosphere of the Sabha or a stroke of passing mental aberration?

Pay for Madras City Councillors

Some of the City Fathers of the Madras Corporation Council want a salary of Rs. 100 per mensem for doing civic duties.

The idea is quite intelligible; but, there is only one flaw in the demand. Did any of the City Fathers announce this desire when seeking the votes of the electors? If they did not, the idea is that the City Fathers sought the honour and duty for the sake of honour and duty.

Surely, the City Fathers must know better than gently pushing in this demand after they got in into the Council. I wonder what reply the wage-demanding City Father can give if he is asked why he was silent about it when seeking election.

Psychological Derangement

Dr. D. Gilbert, a great Psychologist, in his address to 800 Psychologists' Delegates says that Senator McCarthy must submit himself to psychological examination for his pranks. Dr. Gilbert's address was entitled "Dictators and Demagogues."

Perhaps many of our politicians might well be subjected to the same test.

Convicts "Pardon" the Citizens

In Salem, a town of Madras State, the convicts in the jail enacted a drama called "Pardon" before the townsmen of Salem and raised funds for a Building for Discharged Prisoners.

I should like to know whether the convicts were pardoned though they "pardoned" the people by enacting "Pardon" before them.

Can Women Keep Secrets?

Begum Liaquat Ali is Pakistan's new ambassador to the Netherlands. She was asked, "You will have to keep many secrets. The public ask, can a woman keep secrets?"

Her reply was, "They can, they actually act as spies."

I do not know whether the reply is a happy one, and one complimentary to her sex. But, anyhow, she has given a reply.

The Two Pieces Of Gold!

"BABUJI," said the young man with a rather Herculean appearance, bending down and almost touching Hari's feet.

"What is the matter?" asked Hari.

He had just booked an order for the supply of 50 tyres from Khuda Bux and Co., and another for 50 tyres from Ram Pershad and Sons. He still needed an order for 60 tyres to do the minimum average required. The parting words of Seth Ram Bharosey under whom he was employed were still ringing in his ears. He had warned Hari that unless his average booking came to 160 tyres per day there would be no place for him in his establishment. Hari was engrossed in these thoughts when he was roused by the stranger's voice accompanied by the acrobatic feat.

"Babuji," repeated the stranger.

"What is the matter?" asked Hari again, this time more assuredly.

"Sir, have you seen a small packet of gold which dropped down just a short while ago out of my bag? Sir, my daughter's marriage is fixed for the next month and I do not know what will happen if I fail to find the lost gold."

"No, brother. I have neither seen any such thing myself nor have I noticed any one else removing it," said Hari consolingly.

"Oh! then I am ruined." The stranger seemed to utter a cry and then walked away.

HARDLY had Hari taken a few steps further when another person came from the opposite direction, lifted something from the ground and ran towards a by-lane.

Hari's suspicion was at once aroused. Without thinking for a moment he chased the person and was soon successful in getting hold of him.

"What did you lift from there?" he shouted. "Come out with it or I will hand you over to the police."

At first the thief resisted but seeing that his opponent was too much of a match for him, he yielded and handed over a small packet to Hari. Hari opened it, had a cursory look at its contents and then placed it safely in his pocket and made his way towards the Dharamsala.

"But, sir, you cannot get away like this. The lumps are about 30 tolas," said the thief. He seemed to have picked up some courage.

"What then? That is none of your business, you thief!" Hari retorted pushing him aside.

The man, however, stood in the way of Hari and insisted on having his share. He even went to the extent of calling Hari a thief now that the stolen property was with him.

"Then what do you want?" asked Hari. "Here are fifty rupees." He dug up five ten-rupee notes from his pocket and gave them to him.

"Babuji, how do you expect me to part with gold worth Rs. 3,000 for fifty rupees only?" replied the thief.

HARI was in a fix. He did not want to create a row now that the gold was in his possession. But he had hardly enough money even for railway fare for the next station. He had already offered fifty rupees—the amount he got as advance from the two dealers.

"I have nothing else," he told the stranger plainly.

"Then let me have half the gold," the stranger demanded.

This was totally unacceptable to Hari. As a last resort, he thought of the rolled gold wrist watch he had recently purchased at Karachi. He offered it to the thief who reluctantly accepted it in addition to the fifty rupees and went his way.

HARI was extremely jubilant over his success in having got rid of the thief. The first thing he did on reaching the Dharamsala was to bolt the doors securely from inside. Then he took out the valuable packet and examined the contents minutely. He weighed the two shining lumps one by one again and again on the palm of his right hand. These must be 30 tolas, he surmised. And it must be pure. He remembered his father having told him once that the best way of finding out whether gold was pure or not was to rub it on one's nails and if they did not turn black, then it should be presumed that it was pure. He rubbed both the pieces again and again on his nails and was satisfied with the result. His eyes gleamed with joy and his heart beat with pleasure. The fact of being the master of gold worth three thousand rupees enhanced his ecstasy. His worldly possessions so far had not exceeded rupees 150/- and this was indeed a windfall for him. Why at all should he continue service under Seth Ram Bharosey—the evil-eyed miser who did not allow even charges in travelling allowance claims? Surely he could start his own business with his newly acquired capital! And by and by a day would come when he would be a Seth himself and appoint his own selling agents. He would then meet Seth Ram Bharosey on an equal footing.

But his first desire was to get married and set up a separate home. He was fed up with the treatment of his stern step-mother, who always scolded him despite his best endeavours not to give her any chance for such outbursts. The thought of marriage brought to his mind Ganga, the daughter of Radhey, the village goldsmith, with whom he had spent his childhood. He could visualize her presence which was soothing and calm, also her black hair, brilliant eyes that twinkled birdishly, two fresh cheeks having the red flush of a pomegranate. To him, her beauty really defied description. How graceful she appeared in her ghaghra and choli when he last saw her near the vegetable market.

These thoughts were crowding his mind one after the other. Once again he satisfied himself about the ability of the doors to withstand any intrusion from outside. For, no longer, was he an ordinary agent. He was now master of gold worth three thousand rupees. He tried to sleep but his spirits were too high and his passion too strong. Moreover, he was afraid that the stranger might have reported the matter to the police or else might succeed in locating him. He shuddered to think of the consequences which such an eventuality might lead to. He should not, therefore, take any risk and stay any longer at that place. Looking at the railway time-table he found that there was still time for the next train. He rolled his modest bedding, put it on his shoulder and taking the sample-box in the other hand, left for the railway station.

HARI visited Budaun and Bareilly. But he was no longer inclined to go about securing business. He had already made up his mind to send in his resignation. He was now worried about the safety of the gold which he was forced to carry on his person wherever he went. He was also considerably inconvenienced for want of a watch. He remembered his little 'John Barrel' which he had purchased only recently by taking a loan of three months' pay in advance. He recalled the incident which hastened its purchase. He used to enquire about time from a railway clerk. The latter was so much fed up one day with the daily enquiries that he hung his pocket watch on the collar of his coat so that he might be relieved of the botheration of answering such queries every now and then. He had once told Hari that all those who did not keep a watch had no business to enquire about time every now and then. He now realized what a handicap it was for a human being to be without a watch specially while travelling.

He wrote a letter to Ram Bharosey stating his inability to complete his tour and took the next train for his home town.

"What brings you back so soon, Hariya?" asked his father, for Hari's tour programme normally used to last from two to three months.

"Did I not tell you beforehand that this beloved son of yours is not going to do any thing just as yet? He has got used to idle living at home," shouted his step-mother from inside the kitchen.

"Father, please wait for a while, I will tell you why I have come back so soon and, mother, let me assure you that I am not going to be an idler," said Hari with a poise that was significant of his new position. He then took his seat by the side of his father and narrated the whole story. His father examined the lumps of gold excitedly, then applied the same test which Hari had already adopted and was satisfied regarding the genuineness of the gold.

The news of Hari's fortune spread like wild fire in the entire village. Every one from Patwari to village Postman came to felicitate the family. Their house now wore a festive appearance. Hari had brought some sweets so that all those who came to congratulate him did not go empty-handed. Next day Radhey also came. He was given special attention by Hari. Besides other things, a fresh packet of Mainpuri tobacco was placed before him. Radhey, too, seemed to have special interest in Hari's future as he made repeated enquiries about Hari's plan. When everyone else had gone, he called Hari's father on one side and begged of him to accept his daughter as chooti babu.

HARI was extremely pleased over these overtures because he loved Ganga from the core of his heart. He recalled how his father had made a similar request on a previous occasion but Radhey had summarily rejected the proposal with the remark that no sensible man could ever agree to marry his daughter off to Hariya the idler, as he was then called. But times had changed now. He was no longer an idler. The lumps of gold had changed the opinion of every one about him not excluding his step-mother and Radhey. Every one in the village now

Letter That Betrayed!

By MICHAEL HERVEY

I WAS on my way to Kings Cross when I bumped into my favourite wise-guy, Nick the Greek. He was mumbling to himself in rather an alarming fashion.

"That's rather a bad sign!" I said, catching up with him.

"What's a bad sign?" he asked, giving me a blank stare.

"Talking to yourself. It's the first sign of lunacy."

"There's no need to be filthy!" he countered stiffly. "Anyhow, I wasn't talking to myself. If you must know, I was rehearsing a part."

"You're surely not thinking of going on the stage?" I gaped.

"Not exactly," came the airy retort, "although it's worth thinking about. After all, what has Laurence Olivier got that I ain't got?"

"I'd hate to tell you," I grinned. "I know! You're rehearsing some sort of party piece for the Wise-Guys' Benefit Concert?"

"Don't be ridiculous!" he retorted, instinctively leading the way to the nearest bar. "You know very well that we packed up giving concerts after Larry the Louse ran off with the proceedings for the last show."

"Well, if that's the case —"

"Two beers," Nick ordered. "My friend will pay," he added as a charming afterthought. "I suppose I will have to satisfy your curiosities..." he sighed, propping himself against the counter. "What I'm about to reveal to you, of course, is in the strictest confidences. I've got a beautiful little stunt worked out whereby I can rob every small post-office in the country!"

"You don't say!" I intoned, doing my best to sound impressed.

"I've worked it out in great detail," he continued, sucking up his beer with all the gusto of a parched giraffe. "It's absolutely fool-proof. I'm leaving nothing to chances, and it is for that reason that I'm putting Stanislavsky's theories into practice —"

"Stanis — who?" I broke in.

"Stanislavsky! He's the great Russian authority on acting. My, but your ignorance!" he said pityingly. "Stanislavsky advocates getting under the skin of the character you are trying to portray. In other words, if you are post office in question, saying that he's the Head Postmaster and that the registered mail would be collected half an hour earlier than usual. I then turn up dressed as a post-office worker, collect the registered mail and Bob's not your uncle!"

"It sounds pretty slick," I was compelled to admit, "but if you'll take a tip from me you'll leave it severely alone."

"Huh!" he sniffed. "The trouble with you is that you're to play the part of a dust-man you go out and study the subject first hand. See how they work, think, talk, act and so on and so forth."

"That makes sense, but I fail to see what all this has to do with robbing a post-office?"

"Please don't rush me!" he said reprovingly. "I was about to explain before you so rudely interrupted me, that in order to pull off these jobs I had to play the part of a postman. The idea is for someone to phone the suba born pessimist. I shall clean up a fortune, you'll see!" he said, making for the door.

IN actual fact he cleaned up £500, according to a newspaper report I came across later in the week.

"£300 Mail Taken By Phone Ruse," it read. "A mailbag containing about £300 in money and postal orders was stolen from Dover Street post-office on addressed him as Hari Dassji. Hari's father reluctantly agreed to the proposal of Radhey whereupon the latter immediately handed over a ten-rupee note to Hari in token of Shagan, to solemnize the occasion.

The Two Pieces Of Gold!

RADHEY was no longer a stranger to the family. His opinion was now sought in every important matter. The marriage preparations had started in right earnest. Hari's father saw no objection to the gold being shown to Radhey. He brought the two lumps and proudly presenting them to Radhey said: "Shahji, these are thirty tolas, I am told. I would like Hariya's bride to have the best ornaments made from this."

Radhey gave the gold a cursory look. Then he took out a black stone from his pocket, rubbed one of the lumps on the stone and examined the mark on it. He was not quite satisfied. To make sure, he rubbed it again. But the result was still not to his liking.

"Are these the two pieces you have brought?" he asked Hari.

"Yes, Shahji, this is pure gold. There can be no doubt about it," Hari replied in a matter-of-fact manner.

"I have myself tested it on my nails, Shahji. Why are you doubtful?" asked Hari's father.

"Its shine is similar to the ring you are wearing, Shahji," added Hari's mother confidently.

"But" said Radhey haltingly.

"B...u...t w...hat?" asked Hari's father, amazed.

"This is pure" Radhey again hesitated to complete the sentence.

"Pure gold, you mean?" demanded Hari's father.

"No, pure brass. Only it is gold-plated," replied Radhey. "It is not worth five rupees even." He got up brusquely and came out. Again he went in and said, "In the circumstances my daughter cannot marry Hari." And he left the house abruptly.

Saturday. The thief posed as a post-office worker."

THERE was an even shorter paragraph in the evening editions, stating that the thief had been apprehended. I made immediate tracks for the jail, where, after a bit of wangling, I managed to get in to see poor Nick.

"What happened?" I asked.

"Don't ask!" he winced. "Everything went off like clock-work. I takes the stuff to Charlie the Chuckler's place to sort it out. While going through the letters I comes across one bearing a familiar handwriting.

"I recognises it as belonging to Georgia, my girl-friend. The letter is addressed to a geezer in the navy. On opening it I find that she is addressing him in all manners of endearing terms like 'honeybunch' and 'lover boy'. She concludes by saying that she is enclosing five pounds as a birthday present. What made it all the more revolting was that she'd asked me to let her have five pounds to buy her poor, sick mother a pair of crutches that same morning!

"I was so burned up that I dropped everything and went chasing round to her place to give her a piece of my mind. She had the cheek to tell me that she had the right to do what she liked with her money.

"I really lost my temper then and hit her with a pound of margarine I picked up from the table. She retaliated by hitting me over the head with a jar of pickles, and before you could say, 'Please use fur-lined handcuffs, officer, I have a delicate skin!' we were at it hammer and tongs.

"Some nosey parker must have called the police, because suddenly the place was knee-deep in coppers. Unfortunately I'd forgotten to empty my pockets before I came out. They took one look at the registered letters and that was that..." concluded Nick with a pitiful groan.

"I haven't gone through your book but darling Lata seems to be liking it immensely!"

COULD YOU DISBELIEVE THESE TESTIMONIALS?

Mr. Michael B. Sanniez, The Motor Traffic Unit, Nigeria Police Force, Kano, Nigeria, West Africa, writes in his letter dated 18—1—1951. Two weeks after I got your "Basikaran (Mohini) Talisman Special" and started to use the same. I was riding on a Motor Cycle doing about 30—40 M.P.H. when suddenly a Cyclist swerved to my direction and collided with me, I fell so badly and so the Cyclist, people rushed to my help. I was afraid to get up thinking that I might have sustained some serious injury but to my greatest surprise nothing happened to me, not even a scratch nor any serious damage to the Motor Cycle, only the shade of the light got broken. The Cyclist also sustained no injury. The Talisman is so powerful that within six months after use I have twice been promoted in my business. Everywhere I go, people respect and like me. The glory of the Talisman was revealed on 26—12—1950 when I married in the Christian way. The wedding was so grand that it is still the talk in town that an ordinary Police Constable who is less than three years in the Force and less than a year in Kano should break the record set by couple since 1934. Kano is a very large city in Nigeria and the third leading commercial centre in the country. May the Lord Sri Muruga continue to shower you with his choicest blessing.

Mr. A.C.D. Gupta, Raipur, C.P., writes in his letter dated 11—10—1950. As per your instruction I wore your "Basikaran (Mohini) Talisman" on 9—9—1950 and within a fortnight I was marvelled at its miraculous effect. My enemies who instituted a false criminal case against me a year ago was compelled by force of circumstances to withdraw it on 23—9—'50. I have no words to express my gratefulness to you for getting out of this nuisance which was causing me lot of worries and vexation and was also responsible for unnecessary expenses. May God bless you and may the afflicted humanity be benefited by your wonder power.

Mr. Joe, Strand Hotel, Rangoon, Burma, writes. This is to certify that after I have procured the valuable "Special Maha Lakshmi Kavacha," I find a great change in my position, health and family troubles. Now my position and health have marvelously improved.

THE WAY TO HIS HEART — (Continued from previous issue)

"Jed's never stayed away all night before," she whispered.

As soon as Frank and Barry had left the cottage—Frank to go to his job as tractor driver on the adjacent farm and Barry to catch the school bus from the village into town—Helen hurried through the essential chores and prepared the midday meal, listening all the while for the familiar whimper of Jed at the door.

But when she was ready to go to the village he had not returned. She must hurry, she decided, and look for him out on the downs.

BASKET under her arm as she hastened down the lane she saw coming towards her the burly figure of Mr. Hutton, the bailiff. He gave her a brief smile and touched his cap in salutation.

"Was your Jed home last night?" he asked, abruptly, peering down at her intently.

Helen's heart missed a beat, but she could only answer truthfully: "No, he wasn't, as a matter of fact." Helen gave a light laugh. "He has a mate he goes to see over at Kingdale sometimes. We'll have to take him out ourselves at night though in future till lambing's over, but he's harmless enough, you know that."

"No wandering dog's harmless during lambing time," Mr. Hutton responded, his bushy brows drawn down in a heavy frown. "It is often enough the playful ones that do the most harm, frightening the ewes till they drop their lambs afore time. But it was no playful one that got amongst them last night."

"Last night!" Helen echoed, dismayed.

"Yes. Two of the ewes are bitten and a lamb torn to pieces," Mr. Hutton responded, stolidly, turning towards the gate beside the lane. "But we'll be ready for the varmint tonight," he added, darkly, "so you'd best get that Jed of yours in and keep him in." He touched his cap and strode off across the meadow.

Helen continued her journey to the village, her heart full of anxiety. She forced herself to enter the little shop with a cordial smile for the elderly storekeeper and for the handful of villagers waiting there to be served, but as soon as she had completed her purchases she hurried back up the lane, breaking into a run as soon as she neared the cottage.

IF Jed was still missing she must find him at all costs before Barry returned home and before darkness came over the downs making it impossible for Mr. Hutton and the shepherd to distinguish one wandering dog from another.

For, that Jed had been responsible for the sheep worrying last night she could not believe for one moment.

But when Frank came home for lunch and Jed was still absent he shook his head doubtfully.

"We can't be sure," he said. "We don't know what turns a good dog's brain, making him into a killer."

"I'll never believe it was Jed!" Helen retorted, hotly, tears springing into her eyes.

"I'll hope you're right dear, if only for Barry's sake," Frank said, gently. "But why doesn't he come home then?"

"I don't know," cried Helen desperately. "I don't know, but I must find him before Barry returns."

The wind had risen to gale force, but Helen set out as soon as Frank had returned to work, to walk across the downs to Ringdale which for years had been Jed's favourite port of call and where resided Helen's cousin, Betty Cotter, and her husband.

THE sheep were grazing peacefully, and there was no sign of the previous night's disturbance among the penned lambing ewes beside the shepherd's hut. But as she passed by Helen noticed that Mr. Hutton, who was in earnest conversation with Bob Barly the shepherd, was carrying his rifle.

She saw them glance at her, then look away. Their suspicion was obvious. Frank's was the only cottage near the sheep-pens, the only dog living here, other than the shepherd's collie.

It became more imperative than ever to find Jed and Helen hastened her footsteps towards Betty's home.

But Betty shook her head regretfully, as she led Helen into her neat kitchen and pushed the kettle over the fire.

"No, love, Jed's not been here, at least as far as I know." She pointed under the table. "There's our Bess and she's not been outside the door on her own this fortnight past because of the lambing." Bess, hearing her name, beat her plumed tail on the floor.

Betty smiled into Helen's anxious face as she handed her cup of tea. "Don't you fret. Likely as not he's home by now waiting on the doorstep."

JED was not at home when Helen returned wearily to the cottage. Only Barry was there waiting, white-faced and anxious, peering out into the darkening evening, watching for her homecoming.

When he saw that his mother was alone he ran to her, striving manfully for self-control. He slipped his hot little hand into hers as she entered the porch.

"You didn't find him there then, mummy? Daddy said you had gone to Aunt Betty's to look."

"No, darling. He wasn't there." Helen drew him to her side but he pulled himself away, his lips trembling. He went slowly upstairs.

Helen went sorrowfully into the iving room. She saw that the table she had laid was untouched, that Barry's evening meal was still in the oven.

When Frank came in a little later, and Helen had told him of her fruitless journey, he drank a cup of tea hastily, then went to the bottom of the stairs.

"Barry!" he called, in a matter-of-fact tone. "We'd better go and look for the dog out on the downs, reckon, don't you?"

Barry peered over the banisters, then ran downstairs quickly to join his father at the door, while Helen slipped his arms into his jacket. "Daddy," he asked hopefully, "could Jed be caught in a snare that the poachers put down for the rabbits?"

Frank shook his head as he took a torch from his pocket. "Tisn't likely, son. A rabbit snare wouldn't hold a powerful dog like Jed. He'd come home, snare and all. But we'd best be off and search along the cliff top."

Barry looked up at his father gratefully, slipping his hand through his arm as they went out into the darkness of the night.

Helen watched them from the shelter of the porch—the tall thin figure of Frank and the boy so like him in miniature—till they were out of sight, then she still remained there, hating to return to the bright kitchen without them.

The gale had died down, the sky had cleared and a star shone brightly against a patch of blue.

An ominous sound broke the stillness. It was the crack of a shot from the direction of the sheep-pens.

Helen went indoors, feeling sick, though she was thankful for the sake of the helpless sheep that Mr. Hutton had found his "varmint," and it was a merciful end for the killer.

THERE was the sound of hurried footsteps outside, and the door was flung open. Barry, white-faced and dishevelled, flung himself at her, while Frank pulled off his coat tiredly in the passage.

"Mummy! Mummy! We saw Jed, but he wouldn't come!—I kept calling—and Daddy whistled, but he wouldn't take any notice!" Barry panted. "We tried..."

Helen held the boy to her, looking questioningly at Frank standing silent by the door.

"Which way did he go?" she asked, her heart full of fear.

"Towards the sheep-pens, mummy."

Frank answered slowly. "You heard?"

Helen nodded. "Then we must say good-bye to Jed," she said, in low tone. She bent her head over the boy's dark curls. "You'll be our brave lad, won't you?"

Barry looked up at her fearfully, then pulled himself away from Helen's embrace and ran upstairs to his room. They heard the door

THE MESMERIST
MESMERIO HOME, MASULIPATAM

It was an unusually hot morning. The sun was beating mercilessly on the parched and dusty little town of Rampura. The main road, on which stood the shops of the town was, however, crowded and noisy.

Chanda Singh walked along the shadow cast by the two-storeyed buildings on one side of the road. He was deaf to the inviting voices of the shop-keepers, and blind to the attractive wares they had displayed in their windows, for his mind was occupied with other things. He had almost missed the shop where he was going. It was only when he saw the white steps that he realized that he had reached his destination.

It was a big shop, built solidly with more of iron and less of mortar, with collapsible iron gates and grated windows. Its very appearance suggested that it contained valuables. There was a small sign-board outside, which was quite unnecessary because every one knew Lala Tej Chand, shroff and money-lender, who happened to be the richest man in town. Chanda Singh climbed the steps and entered the long, narrow waiting hall, which looked delightfully cool with its white marble-paved flooring. Chanda removed his shoes, and put them tidily in a corner. The sweet scented khus-khus suddenly parted, and a servant peeped out.

"What do you want?" he asked gruffly of Chanda Singh.

"Please tell Lala Tej Chand that Chanda Singh from village Mirpur wants to see him."

The servant disappeared behind the screens and, after a few minutes, Chanda was ushered in. When he entered the cool, dimly lit room from the glare outside, he could not see properly. He saw only the massive steel chests and safe distinctly.

It was a spacious room, carpeted and cool, because an electric fan whirled silently overhead, and the wet khus-khus screens absorbed all the heat. One wall of the room was entirely lined with heavy-looking steel safes, and long tall steel racks, on which reposed big fat registers, neatly labelled and arranged. Just below the rack sat cross-legged on the floor a thin man with a pinched face. In front of him was a square desk, with a slanting top. A couple of shining brass ink-pots, along with a couple of wooden-holdered pens, lay on top. The man was writing accounts in a big register; he was adding the sums in a hushed mutter.

He just glanced up at Chanda for a brief second, still muttering, and then his accounts claimed his full attention. Opposite the chests, the floor and part of the wall were thickly padded with quilts and fat, huge bolsters, covered in spotlessly clean white linen. Leaning comfortably against one of those sat Lala Tej Chand.

He was a man who had just passed his fiftieth year, well fed, looking quite healthy, and well pleased with the world. He was said to be a hard-headed man, very strict in his dealings, but even his enemies had to admit that he was honest. Since that was his only virtue, it was so enveloped by his other vices that it was almost invisible. Tej Chand knew what the world thought of him, but he argued that he was a good business man and one had to be straight and strict, if one wanted to keep up a flourishing business. Anyway, he didn't care for what others said or did, and went on being hard and strict. He believed that the best, though expensive in the beginning, is the cheapest in the long run. His fine mercerised dhoti was of a superior quality, as was his snow-white loose Indian shirt. The buttons in his shirt were made of solid gold. He wore rings on his fingers, set with diamonds, the size of tamarind seeds, which seemed to hold compressed fire inside of them. They dazzled with every movement of the wearer. In the semi-darkness within the room they glimmered like the eyes of a wild beast, in the dense dark forest.

CHANDA SINGH greeted him respectfully, and Tej Chand returned his salute and asked him to sit down.

"Well, did you bring the money?" Tej Chand asked.

"Lalaji, I—I—couldn't raise the amount," he stammered. "Please give me another month's grace. I'll—I'll manage to raise it."

Tej Chand didn't answer immediately. Instead, he selected carefully a tooth pick from a small silver holder, and proceeded to pick his teeth at leisure. Even the Muneem at the desk stopped his mutter. Chanda Singh waited anxiously for the money-lender's answer, for what seemed hours to him. At last Tej Chand threw the tooth-pick into a shining brass spittoon, and changed his position on the bolsters. "You have had all the grace I could afford. It is over a year since you borrowed the money. You told me then that you would pay it back within two months. I would not have given it to you without any security, but for the worthy word of my friend and comrade, the late Lala Nagar Chand. You are taking undue advantage of that."

"LALAJI! What can I do? Fate is against me. I'd never have borrowed but for my dear father. You know he was ailing, and only an operation, they said, would save him from the agony he endured, and cure him at the same time. The doctor's fee was that high, and so were the expenses in that big town. But all that money was to be of no good, for my father died hardly a month after the operation. Again, I was banking on the dowry that my younger brother was to have got, but who knew that he would be drowned in the river unexpectedly?"

"These are old stories, Chanda Singh. What about the solid money I gave you? You must pay it, before the month is out. You have still twenty days left to collect it."

"But, sir, I can't. Please, please give me another month's grace."

"If you couldn't raise it in the past year, you cannot in the next month either. Eh, Muneem! Take out Chanda Singh's account, and send a note to our Vakil Sahib, asking him to start legal proceedings to collect our money, if Chanda Singh fails to pay on the last day of grace."

"Please Lalaji! Please, do not be hard on a poor man like me. I will pay every pie of the money you gave me, but only give me time. I will work like a horse and"

"YOU won't have anything to work with by the beginning of next month," interrupted the money-lender.

"What do you mean?" asked Chanda Singh anxiously.

"I mean that I will take out a warrant against you and then sell all that belongs to you by auction and recover my money."

"But my land and property are valued more than I owe you!"

"Do you know how much you owe me?"

"I gave a promissory note to you for one thousand rupees but I received only nine hundred odd rupees after you deducted the month's interest."

"*Muneem*ji, see Chanda Singh's account and tell him how much he owes us."

The Muneem immediately stuck his pen behind his ear, got up, ran his finger over the registers

..... his wife caught his left arm and jerked it sharply on the rack, pulled out one, and sat down. He turned the pages hurriedly till he came to the correct one. He paused dramatically for a few seconds and then read out:

"Rupees one thousand nine hundred and eighty-five, annas eight and three pies."

"What!" Cried Chanda Singh greatly alarmed and astonished. "You didn't even give me a full thousand rupees, and how came it that I owe you now nearly two thousand?"

Tej Chand was losing his patience.

"You agreed to pay compound interest on the twenty per cent simple interest!" he said.

THIS was all double Dutch to poor Chanda Singh who had read up to third standard only in his village school. He could add up, subtract, multiply and divide, and he could read and write a little only in his mother tongue. That was the limit of his education. So he knew nothing of the evils of compound interest, when connected with money-lenders. He could not get over the shock.

"I can never be able to pay you all that money! Lalaji, please consider. How can you take all that money out of a poor man? Maybe, there is some mistake in the account. Muneemji, please check my account again", he pleaded.

"The account is in perfect order, my man," interrupted Tej Chand. "You are only wasting your time as well as mine, sitting there and arguing. Instead, go home and try to raise the money. Otherwise, I am afraid you will be homeless by the end of the month."

Just then, the servant ushered in some more customers, and Tej Chand immediately got engrossed in their business. None took notice of the shrunken figure of Chanda Singh in the corner. He might have been a fly sitting on the window-sill!

Once he tried to draw Tej Chand's attention, but the Muneem scowled so horribly that Chanda's voice died within him. He knew that it was no good sitting there any longer. So he got up and went out.

He was a broken man. Tej Chand's hard words were constantly ringing in his ears. "Sell all that belongs to you by auction and recover my money." "You won't have anything to work with if you do not pay by the end of the month." Nearly two thousand rupees!

HIS wife Rupa was anxiously waiting for him. "What did he say? Did he agree to wait?" she asked.

It was no good distressing his wife, Chanda thought. No use telling her the truth. It would only make her worry and that wouldn't help either. Chanda was strong, both in body and spirit. He decided to bear the burden alone.

"Yes. He agreed somewhat," he lied.

"Thank God!" breathed Rupa, temporarily relieved.

The days were quickly passing and Chanda Singh was still unable to raise even a quarter of the sum the money-lender had demanded of him. He racked his brain for a way out but could not find a solution. Hardly ten days were left out of the days of grace. One night, thoroughly depressed, he went out into the fields that had come down to him from his fore-fathers.

THE harvest was over, and the land was dry and cracked. The stumps of straw, still in the fields, were sharp like the razor's edge; a deep sigh escaped from him. He affectionately touched the ground. "For another ten days, you belong to me. Then—you'll pass into some other hands!"

In his mind's eye, he saw his father ploughing it with a pair of sturdy bulls. His mother had brought the mid-day meal. As a child, he ran about the green fields, chasing butterflies. His mind again turned to the money-lender. He hated him from the very core of his being. He wanted to go and shoot him dead on the spot. His hatred for the money-lender was so black that it throttled the big veins of his neck, as he clenched his strong teeth. "If I had you here!" He grasped the cool air between his trembling fingers. "I'll throttle your fat neck, till your ugly face turned uglier in death!" he hissed horribly.

Somehow, that outburst of emotion seemed to ease the tension in him. The sudden stagnation of blood in his brain seemed to clear it later. A spark of an idea just flashed in his brain. Then it spread and spread till it brought a smile of satisfaction to his lips. Catching hold of the idea, he carefully planned. It took him nearly two hours to complete the planning.

"Ah! Tej Chand! I have got you now!" he shouted and laughed aloud to the empty air, rubbing his palms together in great satisfaction. "I shall pay you as you rightly deserve!"

HE went home a happy man, and slept restfully for the first time since his visit to the money-lender. Next morning, he told his wife to get ready to go to her parents.

"But why this sudden decision?" she asked curiously.

"You had been wanting to go for a long time, and I want to go out too."

"You are not going to run away and desert me, because of the money-lender?" she asked in dismay.

Chanda Singh laughed.

"Not on your life, silly girl! If I run away, the money-lender will sell our home and land. I am going only as far as Nurgur to see Seth Leila Ram and see if we can raise money on our land to pay this other fellow. So you take all that is valuable in the house with you, and I will take the documents concerning our land with me."

Quite happy and contented with her husband's plea, Rupa left for her parent's house with all the valuables tied up in cloth bundles.

SMILE A WHILE

AN old countryman and his wife were seated in a shoe shop in a market town. The occasion was a pair of new shoes for the wife. She tried on practically every shoe in the shop, and at last expressed her satisfaction.

The weary assistant then breathed a sigh of relief.

But the matter was not quite settled.

There was still the old man to be satisfied. Addressing his wife, he queried: "Now are you quite sure you would like shoes for your birthday present or would you prefer an umbrella?"

The Idea!

The colonel marched on to the parade ground. He gave a look at the men, rubbed his monocle, and had another look. "Hang it all," he barked at an officer, "what's the idea of parading all the big men in front of the smaller men?"

"Sorry, sir," explained the officer. "It seems that the sergeant was a greengrocer before he joined."

Convincing!

A would-be resident was interrogating the local estate agent.

"I believe," she said, "that you have very little rain here."

"Rain?" echoed the agent. "Madam, we have ducks here that haven't yet learned to swim."

THE free lance writer extracted a long, thin envelope from the mail-box. To his joy, it contained a substantial cheque. "Look, Mary!" he shouted to his wife. "It's from the astrology magazine in full payment for a story they say I'll send them next month!"

Twenty Years!

He sat fidgeting and nervous in the solicitor's waiting-room. A clerk entered.

"I say," said the client, beckoning to him, "I have an appointment with Mr. Blank at eleven o'clock. It's about a legacy."

"How long have you been waiting?"

"Twenty years!"

A Very Boring Story

A farmer bent on rehabilitating an aging barn called in a carpenter to give him an estimate on the work. After several minutes' examination of the silks and framing with an ice-pick, the carpenter turned to the farmer and said, "George, if I were you, I'd tear this building down and build another one."

"Why?" asked the farmer.

"Well, to tell you the truth," replied the carpenter, "the only thing that keeps it from falling down now is that the termites are holding hands."

MAKING a tour of the Far East, a politician met in Tokyo a newspaper correspondent who suggested dinner at one of the town's restaurants. At the end of the meal the correspondent summoned the waiter, and making very heavy weather of it, spoke slowly and haltingly in Japanese.

"Is that all the Japanese you've managed to learn in all these months?" the politician asked him jokingly.

"It's enough," the correspondent assured him. "I told him to give you the bill."

Too Late!

An old lady was very annoyed because she had not been invited to an outing her friends had arranged. On the morning of the event the hostess relented and asked her to come.

"You're too late," she snapped. "I've already prayed for rain."

Very Easy

Some students acquire knowledge, others develop ingenuity and resourcefulness. Young Johnson was definitely in the latter class. One question in his examination paper read: "What steps would you take in determining the height of a building, using an aneroid barometer?"

To which the young man replied: "I would lower the barometer by a string and measure the string."

"There You Are"

A man stopped at a service station out in the country one evening to ask directions on the route to a nearby large city. The owner of the service station reluctantly left his radio and came out to the car.

"Well," he said in answer to the driver's question, "I don't know the exact mileage, but just put your speedometer on 50 miles an hour and just after the news broadcast you'll reach a cross road. Turn left and keep going until you're almost through the Fibber McGee programme and then watch for a road to the right. Follow that to the second commercial on the Bob Hope programme and there you are!"

That was quite a normal sight in the village, and none thought anything strange about it. Chanda Singh also left for Nampur.

SETH LEILA RAM was a great landlord, with plenty of money. His one hobby was to add land to his property. He had vast lands in Chanda Singh's village. In fact, a small fringe of his land touched Chanda's. Knowing the Seth's love for land, Chanda Singh approached him with a proposal of sale of his land. The Seth scrutinized the papers. They were quite in order.

"Why have you decided to sell your land all of a sudden?" he asked, cautiously.

"Sethji, it is this way. I am the only man in the family now, since the untimely death of my father and brother, and I find it difficult to manage the fields all by myself. I've just heard of a field up for sale in my father-in-law's village. It happens to be adjacent to my father-in-law's land. So I'll get help. I shall be grateful to you if you buy the land to-day, because there are others also eager to buy that land, and I want to settle the deed first."

Seth Leila Ram found nothing unusual about it. The papers were quite in order and he agreed. Chanda Singh returned to his village after three days with the money from the sale of his beloved land safely tied and tucked inside his turban. The next day, he drove his cattle to the market. That was also a normal thing, for villagers often sold their cattle and bought new ones in their place. Only Chanda Singh didn't bring any cattle home in the evening.

"What! No luck, brother?" asked his neighbour.

"No, none took my fancy. Besides, my woman is not at home. So it doesn't really matter this week. Next market day, I will see if I can buy the type I want."

It was two days to the end of the month. Chanda Singh went to the bazar and returned home with a big tin of kerosene oil. That was also a normal sight in the village and none thought anything strange about it.

Meanwhile, Chanda opened the tin and started sprinkling the oil all over the wood work of the house. When the tin was almost empty, he locked up the house and went to his friend's place.

"I am going to my in-law's place to bring back my woman home. I shall take the nine o'clock train to-night. Please keep an eye on my house," he requested.

"That is all right," said his friend. Chanda took him along with him to the station and boarded the train. Farewells were said, and the train moved, but before the train reached the outer signal of the station, Chanda was out of the train, and he stealthily returned to the village. All was quiet. He opened the front door noiselessly and set a lighted match to a pillar in the centre of an inner room. It caught fire. He locked the door quickly and ran out of the village.

SOON the whole village was up to put out the fire, but none noticed the lonely figure that ran through the empty fields. When he was settled in another train, Chanda sat back and chuckled.

"Ah, Tej Chand! How I wish I were there to-morrow morning to see your ugly face when you come to auction my property! I am a homeless vagabond now, all right, but I have the satisfaction that you have not benefited by my loss."

But Chanda Singh was mistaken. When Lala Tej Chand discovered in course of time the trick that Chanda had played on him, he did not go into a rage and tear at his hair. He made frantic enquiries.

"This is the first time that a man who owed you money cheated you!" commented his friends.

"There has to be a first time for everything, you know. But I shall see that this is the first as well as the last time that any one cheated me."

Tej Chand did nothing in a hurry. "You think you have one over me, Chanda Singh," he said to himself. "There you are sad! mistaken. You haven't heard the last of me yet. You'll know very soon how mistaken you were when you tried to cheat me."

CHANDA SINGH realized soon how mistaken he was in having dodged Tej Chand. Not only had Tej Chand started legal proceedings against Chanda Singh but he had openly proclaimed by hand bill, tom-tom, and advertisement in the papers, that he'd award a thousand rupees to any person or person who gave information regarding the whereabouts of Chanda Singh. Poor Chanda was trapped. The days were hard, money was scarce, people were poor, a thousand rupees could buy many a loyal friend, and Chanda was no fool. So he gave up all hopes of going to his friend's village and settling there. His faithful wife joined him, and they went into hiding in the big city. They hated the dingy holes where they were compelled to live. Every time Chanda Singh saw an advertisement regarding him in the papers he changed quarters, his name and his appearance. The money he got out of the sale of his land and property was fast disappearing. Tej Chand did not seem to forget Chanda Singh. He was setting traps everywhere. Chanda Singh grew pale and thin, and so was his wife. "I should have let him sell my land and property. At least I'd have been a free man, and not be hounded like this," mourned Chanda.

Every situation lasts for a period short or long, and a climax is bound to come some time or the other. So the climax of the hunt had come one day. Tej Chand had been keenly watching any one who resembled Chanda Singh. One day he found a lean, seedy-looking man, meanly clad, buying vegetables. Tej Chand had a strong suspicion that it was Chanda Singh. So he followed him and located the chawl where the lean man went. He waited outside for a pretty long time, but the man did not re-appear.

Next morning, Tej Chand was rewarded for all his pains. The man he had waited for had come out, and though he was a mere shadow of his former self, he was no doubt the Chanda Singh who had tried to cheat him. Casually, he asked another dweller of that filthy chawl as to where that seedy-looking fellow lived. Tej Chand had left his diamonds and fine clothes at home, and was clad in a dress that did not raise a question in that grimy chawl. So the man, freely gave him information regarding the seedy-looking man as much as he knew.

Tej Chand, as usual, planned the capture of his prey with great caution, leaving no loopholes for him to escape. He confided in the Police Inspector. Accompanied by a squad of plain clothed policemen, Tej Chand set out to avenge himself. Stationing the men at all exits and entries from and to the chawl, Tej Chand casually climbed the narrow, ill-lit, semi-dark flight of stairs that led to the smoke-laden dungeon of a room in which Chanda was staying.

CHANDA heard the foot-steps and beckoned to his wife to see as to who was coming up. Rupa opened the door and Chanda had a glimpse of the climbing figure. He knew at once who it was. Instinct warned him of approaching danger. He flew to his loaded pistol for he knew he was trapped, because the only way out of the room was the door and staircase from where came his menace.

"I want to see Chanda Singh," called out Tej Chand from the top step. Before Rupa could slam the door, he put his foot and pushed his way in. Chanda Singh was ready for him. He pounced on him and pinned him to the floor with his own body.

"Quick! Some cloth! Gag him before he yells!" ordered Chanda in a hoarse whisper.

Rupa immediately gaged her husband her dupatta, and in minutes Tej Chand was tied up like a helpless sheep.

"Hurry up and gather our things. We must fly," commanded Chanda.

Before the words were out of her husband's mouth Rupa flew from corner to corner,

Sivananda's Decisive Role in the form of heredity. Monotheism gradually gave place to harmonious polytheism at first, which later on became mutually antagonistic; the sense of differences was widened, and conflict and interaction of communities were aptly met by successive invasions of alien forces. The integral unity of the nation gave way to sectarian dissensions, religious bigotry, morbid superstitions and spiritual degeneracy.

Yet, in spite of this slow-moving ebbing tide, stretched over several centuries, there emerged from time to time a number of great personalities who did not allow the nation to lose its moorings in its resplendent heritage, and who were mainly responsible to keep alive the glimmer of our spiritual culture and effect some bright phases of renaissance through new vistas of progress.

SWAMI SIVANANDA of Rishikesh—whose sixty-eighth birthday was celebrated on the 8th of September—is too well-known a representative of this elite group in our spiritual hierarchy.

How the influence of the spark of the life divine that saw the light of the day in the southernmost district of the Madras State sixty-seven years ago came to be felt in the wide world is not only an inspiring but a very instructive story, which is described in a score of the sage's biographical works. How an ambitious medical practitioner in the swampy woodlands of Malaya, with mounting success and gathering reputation in his chosen vocation and with all reasonable prospects of a career of covetable eminence, decided to renounce all these advantages and embraced sanyasa in 1924 on the banks of the sacred Ganga at Rishikesh in the prime of his youth is but history repeating itself as in the case of Gautam Buddha, St. Gregory, etc.

How are the successes and achievements of Swami Sivananda in the spiritual field to be accounted for? How far can we assess the intrinsic worth of his holy life. It is difficult for the common man to find a deliberately assertive answer, for the degree of the correctness of one's judgment to understand and appreciate another depends on one's approximation to the level of the person whom one ventures to judge.

ONE thing is, nevertheless, certain and too obviously explicit that the life of Swami Sivananda is exceptionally noble and magnanimous qualities which find their expression in his actions, his uncommon zeal and delight in the service of humanity, his unbounded compassion for all living beings, his dynamic efficiency in effecting spiritual resuscitation by way of interpreting the wisdom of the old in the light and the spirit of the new, to each according to individual capacity and aptitude, have had their influence, most amazing and inexorable, on many thousands in this country and abroad too.

Anyone who has come in contact with Swami Sivananda—and it is not surprising that among those who sent him greetings on the occasion of his birthday are the Vice-President of the Union, seven Governors from the States and several Ministers of the Central and the State Governments—will vouch with confidence on the success of his saintly life, which could be judged by the moral and spiritual transformation that he brings about in the lives of the eminent and the common, irrespective of religion or nationality, through the example of his own life and through the media of the excellent, all-embracing religious organisations like the Divine Life Society and its allied institutions.

Newspapers have reported that people in different countries, independent of each other, maintained to have heard the voice of Swami Sivananda and seen him at various places at different times. One of these was Frau Wallinski-Heller of Nuremberg, whose accounts have received wide publicity in this country before and after she had arrived at Rishi-

68th Birthday Message

Realise Thy Real Nature

SPARKS OF LIFE DIVINE!

My humble salutations and greetings to you all!

You are the Light of lights. The Supreme Intelligence, that Consciousness, in whose borrowed light the sun, moon and the stars shine, resides within the core of your heart. You are not this perishable body; you are not this deluded mind; you are not this puny thing which you call 'I.' No. You are the immortal, eternal, all-blissful Atman or Brahman, the Infinite, whose essential nature is Sat-Chit-Ananda (existence-knowledge-bliss-absolute). Therefore, arise, awake and realise the Self. That is the goal of your life.

What is the nature of the Self? Yasmin sarvani-bhutaani atmatvabhut vijanatah; tatra ko mohah ksh shokah ekatvamanupasyatah. All that exists is nothing but your own Self. Direct realisation of this Truth will free you at once from all delusion and grief. That is the goal of life.

Do you not like to reach that goal here and now? Don't you like to enjoy freedom once and for all from delusion and grief? You can very easily reach the goal. God is all-merciful. In a thousand ways He comes to you, to teach you and to lead you towards the goal of life.

He comes to you as soul-awakening experiences. What do you see around you? Janma (birth), Mrityu (death), Jara (old age), Vyadhi (disease) and Dukkha (misery). These exist to remind you of the nature of the mundane life and to goad you to lead the divine life so that you can rise above all these and enjoy perennial peace, immortality and eternal bliss.

God comes to you in the form of saints and sages, in the form of the words of the holy souls. All of them remind you again and again, by their own practice and precepts, that real happiness can be had only in God and God-realisation, and not in these perishable objects. Renounce them, therefore, and enjoy perennial peace, immortality and eternal bliss.

Renunciation is not running away to the caves of the Himalayas. Only aspirants with Para-Vairagya are fit to do that; on the part of others it is only cowardice. Stand up, bold aspirants, and renounce egoism. Wherever you run, it will run with you. You will have to annihilate it wherever you are. Renounce this ego by means of self-surrender to the Lord, self-sacrificing service to humanity, self-purification through Japa, Kirtan and Dhyana, self-denial through Vedantic Nididhyasan, and attain Self-realisation. Then you will enjoy perennial peace, immortality and eternal bliss.

Serve, serve. Serve selflessly, without egoism, and without expectation of reward. Feel always: "The substratum for all these names and forms is my own Self; my own Self or God dwells in all. I am serving that God. This is my worship of the Lord. And, even this worship is possible only on account of the Lord's Power that is in me." This is the most powerful Sadhana for Self-realisation. Put it into practice to-day. You will soon enjoy perennial peace, immortality and eternal bliss.

Keep your body healthy through the regular practice of Asana, Pranayama, Suryanamaskar, and by taking Satwic diet. Keep your mind alert, vigilant and calm—by always entertaining sublime thoughts. Keep your intellect sharp and subtle by meditation and by the study of scriptures. Keep your heart large, loving, tolerant and pure—by service, charity and cosmic love. Keep your soul ever resplendent by constant remembrance of the Lord, constant repetition of His Names, and constantly feeling that He alone is present in every atom of existence. Thus would you reach the goal here and now and enjoy perennial peace, immortality and eternal bliss.

May God bless you all with health, long life, peace, prosperity and eternal bliss.

— Swami Sivananda.

At The Dynamic Centre

The Divine Life Society Dynamic Centre of Madras celebrated the 68th Birthday of H.H. Mahamandaleswar Sri Swami Sivananda Saraswati, Founder-President, Divine Life Society, Ananda Kutir, Rishikesh, at "Thirumagal," 114, Singanna Chetti St., Chintadripet, Madras in a grand manner on 8th Sept. '54.

collecting their scanty belongings. Chanda Singh also started to pack. He was tying up a cloth bundle when he paused.

"RUPA, it is no good running away like this. This loathsome creature here, which calls itself a man, is after my blood. He had smelt me right up to the attic of this chawl in this great city. If we leave him here bound and gagged, and run away, he'd only follow us. There is no peace for us as long as he—he is alive. I am—am going to finish him," he stammered in wild agitation.

"What! Murder him?" It was a shocked whisper. Rupa's large eyes almost popped out of their sockets. "Don't!" she begged. "Don't do it. You don't seem to realize the consequences. The police will be after you, and that is worse than being hunted by him!"

"I am sick of hiding like a rat. It is better to finish him. You get out while I finish him."

But his wife stood there rooted to the floor, with determination of some sort written all over her.

"Do you hear me?" he barked. "Go on and be quick about it!"

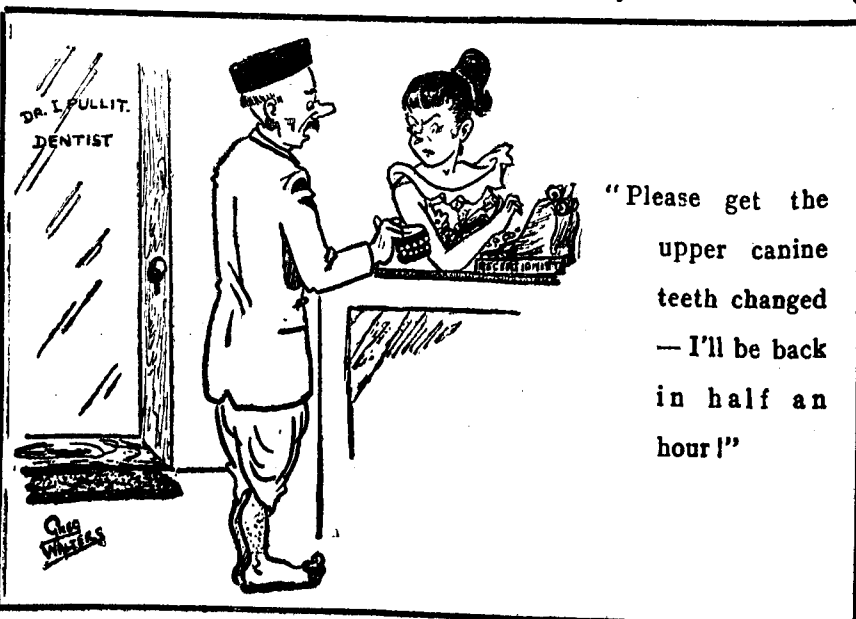

"No! I am staying and sharing all the blame. Still, I beg you not to do this. You are mad to think of it even."

She was openly weeping now.

"Curse the woman!" he muttered with anger as he raised his pistol and aimed it at the bound man. Though Chanda Singh possessed a pistol as most of his co-villagers did, he had never used it against a human being so far. He was a good hunter, and he always let his prey have a sporting chance. He never believed in killing animals or birds when they were helplessly trapped. Now he tried to press the trigger of the pistol with his finger, but his finger shook as though it had no joints to hold it together. Thrice he tried to shoot and thrice he failed. The man before him reminded him of the trapped animals he so pitied. He lowered his weapon.

"I HATE you as I hate no other living thing but I can't kill you as you lie before me—helpless. I can't release you and let you gloat over my misfortune, and I won't go to jail and mar the spotless lives of my dead and living family. I prefer to die." He was about to raise the pistol to his own temple when his wife caught his left arm and jerked it sharply. The next minute the revolver fell down from his hand, and lay discarded on the floor. Rupa was busy untying Tej Chand.

"Lalaji, forgive this unpardonable outburst of my husband. I have heard that you are a hard-hearted man, but there is a saying that even the Devil himself pities a woman in distress. Please overlook his hasty action." Turning to her husband, "Just now you talked of the honour of our family. We are honest people and have never cheated any one so far. It is no good. You'll have to pay back the money we owe to Lalaji or take the punishment instead. Remember, you are the son of an honest man." And then she burst into tears.

Chanda Singh raised his head and looked at Tej Chand. With a great cry—the cry of a strong man, broken and beaten—he sank on the charpoi.

"You win, Tej Chand! You've beaten me!" he said sobbing.

There was no other noise in the room except the heart-broken sobs of the pair. After what seemed an eternity, Chanda Singh rose.

"Come, come, for God's sake, do not prolong this. Don't stand there gloating. Take me away."

Tej Chand looked at him in a strange way, long and silently.

"I AM sorry to have disturbed you people," he said at last. "I came here looking for a man named Chanda Singh who owes me money. But I think I've made a mistake in thinking that you were the man. Had Chanda Singh been in this room, and had he by some misfortune killed me, or even tried to run away, he'd have been at once arrested by my police friends who guard every entrance and exit of this building. But as I said, I was mistaken. I'm terribly sorry for the trouble I put you to, lady. What is more, I am withdrawing my case against Chanda Singh. Tell him, if you meet him. Meanwhile, good-bye and good luck!"

He went out and closed the door softly. The couple gazed at each other in bewilderment. When they finally saw through the window the departing money-lender with his police friends, shaking his head in the negative to his friends' questions, Chanda Singh said: "He is a gentleman, though he is a money-lender."

And Tej Chand was telling himself: "He is a gentleman, though he is only a poor farmer."

It was the greatest compliment that one man paid to the other. ♦♦

C.G.N. Singh, Adoni

Q.—When My Magazine of India itself is conducting MYWORDS Competition, why then are comments on other Competitions published in it, thereby inducing Competitors of MYWORDS to enter other Competitions also?

A.—My Magazine of India believes in and practises the policy of live and let live. Competitors are very intelligent people and have enough discrimination to decide things for themselves. By not publishing comments on the other Competitions, surely the Journal will not be preventing Competitors from sending Entries to them!

V. Narayanaswamy, Kumbakonam

Q.—Is love a blind alley?

A.—That is why all those who go through it come to the dead-end called matrimony. There is no other exit from this emotional emergency.

Q.—Is worldly life a dream or an illusion?

A.—It is an illusion to the wise and a delusion to the unthinking.

N.G. Pillai, Cochin 2

Q.—MYWORDS Competition of the old series (from No. 1 to No. 30) was giving prizes to 3-and 4-Error winners also whereas from the new series (No. 32 and onwards), only 1-and 2-Error solvers will get prizes. Would you please ask the Competition Management to consider this and allow 3-and 4-Error winners also to get prizes as before?

A.—The Competition Management are aware of this feeling among Competitors. It is likely that prizes for 3-Error winners may be given shortly but the Four-Error fraternity are not likely to be similarly favoured.

YOU ASKED FOR IT! should be mentioned on top of the letters intended for this column. The views of columnist K.R.S. do not necessarily reflect those of the Editor. The Queries decide the answers—serious, frivolous or informative. And if the answer irritates you, remember YOU ASKED FOR IT!

D. R. John, Roorkhee

Q.—Why did My Magazine of India Management stop the 1—2 Words Competition after MYWORDS No. 8 even though the Entry Fee were very cheap compared to the present one of the Crossword type?

A.—Because of the alarming tendency on the part of several of the MYWORDS Collectors to default payment of the amount received by them from Competitors!

Q.—“It has been truly said that mankind is incurably religious” (G.W. Cunningham). How far do you believe in this truism in the present-day world affairs?

The Competition Management decided to please the hundreds of Competitors who demanded that the Interlockers system should be done away with. Not only that, you will find that no Clue has more than two alternatives.

up and you'd gone. You said you'd stay with me ...”

Jed gave an excited yap from his perch on Frank's shoulders.

Barry stared unbelievably, wiping the sleep from his eyes.

“What's that you've got?” he demanded, afraid to believe his ears.

“It's ‘Jed!’” Helen called, excitedly. “Daddy found him in a fox trap on the cliffs. He's not too badly hurt.”

With a cry of joy Barry flung himself upon his father and Jed.

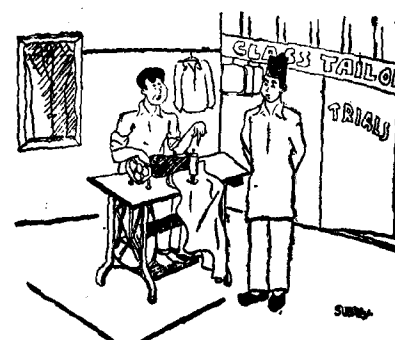

They did not hear, a little later, the diffident knock on the door as in the back kitchen Frank administered brandy and milk to the dog, while Barry gently bathed the torn paw.

Mr. Hutton was profuse with apologies.

“It wasn't your Jed, after all,” he started to explain, “though as like as two peas in a pod are black retrievers at night. Must have been a stray from the town ...”

HELEN stood for a moment before the living room door, after Mr. Hutton had gone, listening to Frank explaining to Barry how his dog must have tried to get home, dragging the snare, while Barry looked up admiringly into his face from his seat on the floor.

She closed the door softly and went into the living room, happy in the knowledge that father and son were united at last in the close companionship of a common interest.

kesh to learn the ancient science of Yoga directly from her preceptor.

Whilst there had come to be a general apathy towards religion in the vast majority of modern men and women, wherever faith in religion did exist, it was inclined to be bigoted and intolerant. It is at this juncture that Swami Sivananda has played and is still continuing to play his decisive role in reviving the people's faith in their spiritual heritage in freeing their minds from the trammels of superstitions, false convictions and prejudicial differentiations.

It is true that his influence is yet to reach to a much wider circle of people, which is so desirable and essential, particularly among the illiterate class. Towards this end of mass dissemination of spiritual knowledge Swamiji has employed the latest scientific means of propaganda such as the movie films, gramophone and tape records, apart from the powerful agency of the printing press. From his own ashram at Rishikesh he issues no less than half a dozen periodicals which not only have an appreciable circulation in this country but goes as far as to Japan, New Zealand, Canada and Chile. The holy sage is himself an author of over a hundred and twenty publications, some of which have already been translated into several vernaculars, as well as in French, German, Spanish and Russian.

ment. He said that in these days when atheism and irreligion were threatening to destroy the very fabric of society, only such self-realised saints like Sivanandaji Maharaj could and are helping to rouse the spiritual fervour not only in our country but in other places of the world too. He appealed to everyone to follow Swamiji's precepts and lead the life divine here and now.

Sri C. R. Pattabiraman, Bar-at-law, the son of Dr C. P. Ramaswami Ayyar, spoke next. He drew the attention of the audience to the fact that Swamiji's admirers and devotees were spread all over the world. He narrated the impressions of his own visit to Ananda Kuttir. He said that the Swamiji was now doing what the great Absence of secrecy, of esotericism and mystification is what distinguishes Swami Sivananda from among other orthodox religious teachers. He stresses the fundamental unity of all creation and seeks to enthrone an integral faith in righteousness in the hearts of the people, and on that basis he advises all to rule their conduct and guide their thoughts and aspirations. It is the catholic spirit of religion on which he centres his teachings, with a practical perspective and purposefulness. He condemns none. He places before all the shining ideal that within everyone pervades the immortal spirit, and however imperfect one may be there is nothing that disqualifies one from aspiring to realise one's inherent divinity. Swamiji sums up his philosophy of life in one sentence: "Be good and do good." That is how he seeks to awaken the dormant spiritual element in all of us.

SWAMI SIVANANDA'S aim is that the gospel of spiritual evolution and universal peace and love should reach every home. Never was the need for peace and good-will among nations so great and so urgent as at present. To listen to the message of such apostles of truth and love and goodness and to act accordingly constitute the most promising way to effect world-wide peace and brotherhood. One can only hope that the Almighty will give humanity the wisdom to do so.

Ramanuja did in days of yore — spreading in simple but effective means knowledge of our own Vedas, Upanishads, Puranas, etc. Swamiji, he said, was above classes, castes and religions. He was spreading the message of Divine Life by which men and women all over the world could live a life of self-realisation, service, and selflessness.

Sri M. R. Viswanatha Sastri, the Secretary of the Sri Veda Sabha of Egmore, spoke next.

The audience was next treated to an inspiring Bhajan by Bhaktha Prem Ratna Saraswati Bai and Party of Dakshina Pandari Vittala Premalaya of North T. Nagar, Madras.

The function terminated with a vote of thanks by the Secretary of the Dynamic Centre.

Double Life Of Deacon Brodie!

THE old lady was alone in the house that Sunday morning. She had sent her maidservant off to kirk, and she sat reading her Bible.

She was too startled to speak or move when the door of her sitting-room opened quietly and a man came in. He was small and smartly dressed in black. His face was masked in black cloth, but she felt that there was something familiar about the jaunty little figure. He bowed politely.

Without a word he came and took the bunch of keys from the table beside her. There was no hurry about him as he went to her bureau, unlocked it, and took out her cash box. He relocked the bureau, laid the keys down beside her, and left, after another polite bow, but never a word, writes Robert Spence in Everybody's Weekly.

"That was Deacon Brodie!" she thought—but wouldn't believe it.

Thief At Times!

Deacon William Brodie was a highly respectable citizen of Edinburgh, wealthy, a public man, of good family, accepted and popular in society. The old lady could not believe that it was he who had robbed her.

But he had. He was the original of Robert Louis Stevenson's Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, a man with two lives. Most of the time he was the wealthy wright, or carpenter, the head of a prosperous business. Sometimes he was a thief.

Born in Edinburgh in 1741, he was the eldest son of a wealthy man who believed that sons should follow their father's foot-steps, and this William did. By 1763 he was a Burgess and a Guild Brother. By the time he was forty he was Deacon of his Guild, the Incorporation of Wrights, and a Town Councillor.

He was likeable, honest and hard-working and properly attentive to his business and to the business of the Council. So far as the public knew he was all that he seemed to be and nothing else. But he was something else.

Night Life After Ten

In those days it was the general custom to close the shops and finish the day's work at eight o'clock. From eight until ten even the most respectable might roam the town at will, feast and frolic in the eating houses and taverns.

But at ten o'clock the drum of the Town Guard sounded. This was the signal for the respectable to go home and leave the town to the not-respectable. These were of all sorts, gentry and riff-raff. They passed the night away drinking, singing and brawling, playing cards, dicing, gaming, cock-fighting.

Deacon Brodie was among them. He was rarely home at ten o'clock, though with two mistresses (neither of whom knew of the existence of the other) and his own house, he had three homes to choose from.

His Sense Of Humour!

Because the two worlds in which he moved never met, he kept his reputation for honesty. And even the night-world did not know he was a thief. For years he kept it to himself. No burglar ever had greater advantages, for he had entered all the richest houses of Edinburgh socially. Professionally, as a master carpenter, he knew the locks, the doors, and the lay-out of many of the wealthiest shops.

It appealed to his sense of humour that he should rob a friend by night, and sympathise with him over his loss the next day. One night he stole the heavy silver Mace of the University; next morning he was one of the Town Councillors who voted that a reward of ten guineas should be offered for its recovery.

New Team Of Burglars

In 1784 Deacon Brodie was on the Committee appointed by the Council to inspect a site for the new gallows near the Tolbooth, the town gaol. Deacon of Wrights

William Brodie was among those who tendered for the contract. He included in his design a plan for a drop-platform, an improvement just introduced at Newgate.

His improved version was duly built, but not by him. Another Councillor got the contract, but had to call on Deacon Brodie later for his help. As Brodie said: "I planned the model, bought the wood, and gave my assistance in finishing it." This drop was much the same as the one used today.

About this time Deacon Brodie met George Smith, a Berkshire man, and once a locksmith. Brodie's local knowledge, and Smith's facility with locks made them a good housebreaking team.

Soon they took on assistants: Andrew Ainslie, a shoemaker, and John Brown, an escaped convict who, as Humphrey Moore, had only recently been sentenced at the Old Bailey to seven years' transportation to Australia.

Reward Offered

In January, 1788, they did a job on a silk-mercer's shop. The authorities, alarmed by the crime-wave, decided to offer not only the usual reward, but also a free pardon for this, or any other crime, to anyone who would give such information to William Scott, procurator-fiscal for the shire of Edinburgh, as shall be the means of apprehending and securing all or any of the persons guilty of or accessory to the said crime.

Deacon Brodie sat on the jury at the trial of a soldier and an exciseman accused of murder in February. The verdict was Not Guilty. It may have been the exciseman who gave him the idea, but the next plan Brodie made was to break into the General Excise Office of Scotland. The gang felt sure there would be a good haul.

Ainslie was sent to watch the building. He reported that it was unguarded between eight and ten every night. At eight the clerks left, and at ten the nightwatchman came on duty. Two clear hours for the job.

Panicked And Fled

Brodie made an excuse to visit the office, where he was well-known. He took his chance and lifted the key to the main door from the nail where it hung, so trustingly, behind the door. He made an impression of it in putty.

Smith cut a key from the mould. On March 5 they were ready. And at eight o'clock they went to work. Ainslie stayed outside to give warning if anyone came too near. Brodie posted himself inside the main door. Smith and Brown concentrated on breaking into the cashier's office.

At about nine one of the customs officials came hurrying back to the office to fetch some papers he was working on at home. He brushed past Brodie, thinking he was a clerk who had been employed late. For the same reason he was not surprised to find the door unlocked. He fetched the papers, ran down the stairs and out of the building, slamming the door behind him, without discovering Smith and Brown. Brodie had already panicked and fled.

Ainslie, outside, was puzzled by all the running about, and ran away too. And Smith and Brown, hearing the door slam, pocketed what little money they had found and went home.

Escaped To Holland

The four met in the morning to discuss what had gone wrong and divide the disappointing haul—only £16. Brown took his share and went straight to the magistrates to lay the information and claim the reward and the pardon.

He named Ainslie and Smith, but made no mention of Brodie at first, possibly hoping to blackmail him later. Ainslie and Smith were arrested immediately. Brodie bolted for London, and then to Holland, with the idea of escaping to America. Brown named him as soon as he was out of town.

The authorities offered a reward for his capture. John Daly, an Irishman, recognised him from his description, arrested him, and had him committed to prison until he could be extradited. Then he lost no time in sailing for England to claim the reward.

Deacon Brodie was brought back to Edinburgh, and put in the Tolbooth. A penitent George Smith was waiting for him. All the fight had been knocked out of him by Brown's treachery and by the failure of his own attempt at escape.

Day Of His Execution

But Brodie was never dejected or sorry. Even after Ainslie turned King's Evidence he kept cheerful. At his trial, in the same courtroom where he had recently been a jurymen, he was full of spirits, although there could be no doubt about what the verdict would be.

When the day of his execution came he was still unafraid. The story grew that he had made arrangements to survive. No one, people argued, could be so calm unless he was sure he was not going to die. He walked to the gallows boldly, stopping to talk cheerfully to friends in the crowd. As he stepped on to the scaffold he bowed to the magistrates waiting there, then turned and bowed to the crowds below.

By tradition he is said to have inspected the gallows and the drop-platform—had he not designed it? He found nothing wrong with the platform, but questioned the adjustment of the ropes. Once the hangman adjusted them, and again Deacon Brodie found fault. Each time he stepped down off the platform and went on talking to his friends, and seemed not in the least distressed by the delays.

Seen Alive After Years

At last the ropes were right. Brodie helped to put the noose around his own neck, pulled the mask over his face, and stood still, waiting for the signal.

An attempt was made to revive Brodie immediately after he was taken down from the gallows. There can be no doubt of that. There is a tradition that he bribed the hangman to give him only a short drop, and that he had put a silver tube in his throat to avoid strangulation.

There are stories, too, that he was seen alive many years later in Paris, and that his coffin was once opened and found to be empty.

He may have survived, but it is more probable that just as people had at one time found it hard to believe that Deacon Brodie was a thief, so later they found it hard to believe he had not fooled the hangman.

Double Drug For High Blood Pressure

U.S. doctors now have a double drug for treating patients with high blood pressure or hypertension. The double drug combines two anti-hypertension drugs, Serpasil and Apresoline. Apresoline is a coal tar derivative. It has given good results in moderate and severe hypertension. Serpasil, derived from the root of an Indian plant, is noted for its quieting effect. Doctors have been using both drugs, alone and together, for about a year. Results were often better when they were used in combination. Now Ciba Pharmaceutical Products of Summit, New Jersey, is marketing the two drugs combined.

New Pain-Relieving Drug

A new and different type of pain-relieving drug has been developed by the Mayo Clinic at Rochester, Minnesota, and is now being introduced into general medical use in the United States. It is possible that the drug may open a "new, safer and more pleasant era in the art and science of pain relief," according to the Mayo Clinic.

Known so far only by the name MRD-125, the drug's special feature is its ability to banish pain—even the pain of a surgical operation—without putting the patient completely to sleep. This action is called "analgesic," in contrast to the anaesthetic action of such drugs as ether.

Allergy And Divorce

A woman can be in love with her husband and yet allergic to him—literally. In England she probably wouldn't get a divorce on these grounds, but at least four have been granted in America. Ruled the U.S. judges: if a husband brought his wife out in an allergic rash, that constituted cruelty, writes a British weekly.

A pretty blonde called Louise Law gained her divorce after doctors had stated that if she continued to live with her husband the allergy would be aggravated.

The exact way in which she suffered wasn't reported, but in the case of Mrs. Grace Groat, of Des Moines, Iowa, the trouble in the first place was a rash. She unsuccessfully petitioned for a divorce on this ground, but two years later managed to persuade the courts to reverse this decision. On this occasion she explained that every time she saw her husband, she started to hiccup violently.

Twenty-year-old Phyllis Pew's complaint was that living with her husband brought her out in a rash. Away from him she was perfectly well, and, indeed, only missed winning a beauty contest.

Guilt Complex

"I got nervous upsets, constant headaches and skin eruptions," she informed the judge. A specialist in allergies supported her case. "Her health would be completely broken down if she was forced to remain with her husband," he said.

A divorce was granted, too, to Joyce Holdridge. Joyce quite genuinely thought a great deal of her husband, Nolan, but whenever she was near him a rash spread over her arms and body. To begin with, a Los Angeles judge maintained that the husband wasn't guilty of cruelty. The decision was reversed two months later.

A few years ago in London, a young wife visited a specialist because she was so worried about the state of her skin. The specialist passed her on to a psychiatrist, after finding out that the rash became worse when she was with her husband.

There was no divorce. It was discovered that the wife had a guilt complex because she had once been unfaithful. She was advised to confess, the husband forgave her and the rash disappeared.

In Reverse Direction!

Husbands can be allergic to wives, too. One American obtained a decree because his wife's hair made his asthma worse.

Certainly, genuine allergy seems a more reasonable ground for divorce than some of the reasons produced in British courts recently. A Peckham wife accusing her husband of cruelty, failed to convince the judge. The alleged cruelty? That he had told her what clothes to wear to chapel. But a Bristol man won his case because his wife punctured his bicycle tyres.

Mallika Meets Suitors

UNCLE Kasyapa had crossed the grand climacteric: He was in his sixty-five. By this time a man gets settled in his views. If he should rather lean to pretty ancient ways of looking at things, especially about the movements of young ladies and the freedom they should be allowed, you cannot categorise him under the class of Social fossils. Yet, Kasyapa never could be so charged.

Not once or twice had he stood between the virtuous dissatisfaction of his wife, the good Vinaya, and the unexpected pranks and cranks of Mallika, and bespoke for a measure of gentle suffering or endurance on the part of Vinaya, who very appropriately recalls to our Goldsmith-touched memories the incidents and inclinations of Deborah, the ever entertaining wife of the estimable Vicar of Wakefield.

Yet, an elderly and worldly gentleman like Kasyapa cannot escape the usual practices of respectable Society in which he moved. Nor were the suggestions about Mallika's future few and far between that he heard. His own friends, intimate and of good understanding and decent standing, had drawn his attention to the fact.

"Kasyapa, do you mean to let your Mallika live single all her life? Don't you think you have to help her in the choice of a young man becoming your position and her own age and education?" was the question he had from some very worthy friends of his.

Nor were these hints mere words of good wishes. Some of them gave him some young men's names well worthy of the hand of any young lady. Such names he had gathered carefully, enquired about them in his own quiet way, without letting even his own wife know, and after very earnest thought, picked out four of them.

So that, one morning, when Kasyapa had settled in his mind about the matter, he looked at Mallika who was reading the morning papers, and opened the subject.

"Dear child, Mallika, why not we have some serious chat about..." began Kasyapa.

"Uncle, why ask me in that formal serious manner? Why not I know your pleasure and what can there be dearer than doing it?"

"Why, it is only this: you know I am in my sixty-five, and your auntie too is only seven years younger," cautiously began Kasyapa.

"Uncle, dearest Father, I can see you are thinking of my matrimony. If you have any one in view with whom I should spend my life, you have simply to command."

"Good girl, have I ever slave driven and hustled you in any matter? Never in a matter that is so vital to your future. You must see for yourself and let me know your choice. I have always looked on you as a young woman apart. I have chosen four young men. Think about them. Here they are: photos, and details and all that. See what you think of it all. Take time; don't hurry over it," with that he handed over the papers concerned.

MALLIKA took the lot to her room. With her quick mind she ran through the list. The following morning, at about 9, Mallika peeped out into the verandah. She saw four young gentlemen, all sitting near her Uncle who was wondering what could have brought the four young men whom he had slightly known already, all at the same time. But he did not want to question them. Nor was there the necessity.

Mallika came round, greeted them all as she knew them by their photos and requested them to follow her to her own room.

"Uncle, there is nothing to be surprised. When you gave me the names, etc., of these gentlemen, I wrote or phoned requesting them to meet me. So they have kindly accepted my invitation and here they are."

BY this time the good lady Vinaya had come out to see the quartette. She could hardly suppress her wonder at this kind of being wooed: to her, the old saying was true. "The wedding may be good but not the manner of wooing."

"And are you going to speak to them all at the same time?" was Kasyapa's question which was only the wonder of Vinaya expressed in words.

"I thought, Uncle, my wedding was going to be a swayamvara (self-choice) after the pattern of the Puranic swayamvara of Sita or Damayanti or Draupadi. They faced the suitors all assembled, it was all above board; there were no sneaking things in those good old days. Why should there be any queueing up and purdah pattern in my case?"

Kasyapa looked at Vinaya and Vinaya looked at the young men, not without a touch of pity.

"Come along, good friends, we need not disturb my dear parents," and with that call she led them to her own sanctum.

Around her chair the youngsters took their seat. There was Miss Kalyani, her hostel mate who was invited to enjoy the fun.

Mallika took her usual seat in her room and Kalyani sat on a side of Mallika's chair. She was about to speak, when Mr. Rampal drew out a smoke, lighted it as quick as only the veteran in the art could, and began to get ready for the great adventure, for, the setting of it all looked like an adventure.

"Hullo, Mr. Rampal, what is the matter with you? Why, Kalyani, our friend looks more like one of the chimneys of a factory which belches out smoke than a person visiting a sacred place. For, my dear sir, just cast a glance on the four sacred persons who are there on the wall of this room. If any smoke reached up to them, it was that of the pious and humble incense that I offer on all sacred days—they are there, my Uncle, Aunt, Father and Mother. As for you, I never would mar your habit which fashion must have taught you. So, now that I have seen you, do please accept my thanks and take leave."

So Rampal, smoke between his lips, cleared away.

She disposed of one suitor, right or wrong, as they dispose of applicants for jobs in public offices or establishments.

SHE now faced Mr. Mani, whose affluent circumstances were expressed in his bedecked fingers. "Sir", she said, "you believe in young men being jewelled? We girls in our Hostel thought jewellery was a certain token of barbarity. We used to look upon the jewels of even girls as a sign that they must have come of semi-savage homes. We girls feel ashamed to wear jewels. Really, we girls do not want to think of men having rings and screws and what not!"

"My mother insisted upon them," confessed the jewelled youngster and cleared out.

"And now, friends, I know you are employed. May I know what part of your income you devote to those that so badly need it in our Motherland?" questioned Mallika.

"I leave all that to my parents. I only mind my own wants," answered the third.

"So do I," answered the fourth.

"It is a vow that we girls have taken that our duty to our Motherland must be discharged by ourselves. Why, precisely as you have dealt with the greatest duty, you would also deal with your spouse. First and foremost, go and do your duty and then think of matrimony. Thank you, friends, for your kind call this morning and for letting us know how our learned young men act. One has to learn and learn."

Kasyapa and Vinaya learnt how the swayamvara ended. They were not surprised.

SOUND AND SHADOW

MEET THE GOLDEN BOY!

PERSONALLY, I've always thought that Greek heroes were pretty overrated characters. It's true, of course, I've known them only as statues. But there are awful lot of statues in Helen Of Troy and you can't blame a girl—when she first spots Jacques Sernas, the blond Frenchman with the leading role of Paris—for wondering whether some absent-minded prop-man had mixed up the humans with the statues.

A brooding figure in the duckiest duck-egg blue togastyle get-up gazed out on the chaos of the film set in Rome. Was it something that Michelangelo had left around? Or was it real? It moved. It was real. It was Sernas, writes the Hollywood correspondent of Picturegoer.

"They wanted," he told me in exquisite English, "to pay me less for this picture than I get in Italian films. So I said: Why should I? I'm doing fine just as I am. They (Warners in Hollywood) saw what I meant."

They would, I thought. Who wouldn't see what Sernas meant? You see, he's no stranger to the British picturegoer, this twenty-nine year old Frenchman. Some years ago he made Golden Salamander, with Trevor Howard and Anouk. He still speaks English with an English inflection, which has the Warner film people slightly worried. English, of course, should be spoken with an American accent.

Since Golden Salamander, he's starred in a stream of Italian and French films. "Many of them were very bad." Slightly hurt, he shrugged: "The British never asked me to make another film." For the life of me I can't think why.

Sernas is the kind of Frenchman English-women nag their menfolk for not being more like. He rarely smiles. (Maybe that tight-fitting "Paris" curly wig has something to do with it.) At a meal he orders wine with an air that warms cold waiters' hearts; he explains unpronounceable menus to his companions; and he eats exotic foods that look like something out of the Garden of Eden.

He drives a fast American sports car; keeps a villa by the sea; hops weekly between Paris and Rome; owns a yacht and a canoe and a dog named Verlaine, after the French poet. And he's a most carefully forthright young man.

JACQUES Sernas, the Frenchman English-women nag their menfolk for not being more like!

"A couple of years ago," he continued, "I made five films in a row. And then I took a year's holiday. No more bad pictures. After that I was broke. So I made some bad pictures. There's nothing like being broke to make you give up your principles. Some of the pictures I made were so bad they can't even get anyone to show them."

An actor admitting his pictures were bad—in public.

He is writing his own autobiography. Translated, he said, it was "The Climate Makes The Seasons"—all deeply involved in the question of world events shaping us into the kind of people we are. If the Warner publicity people are having trouble finding publicity-worthy angles on his co-star, Rossana Podesta—she plays Helen—they can rub their hands and enjoy a field-day with Jacques. His story reads like E. Phillips Oppenheim with Graham Greene overtones.

The war... French Resistance... capture... six months in French jails... a year and a half in Buchenwald concentration camp... back to Paris... near starvation... re-united with stricken mother...

Jacques Sernas is a natural "character" in film world reckoning. "Before the war, I was just a rich boy." He said it quite disarmingly, in as matter-of-fact a manner as you and I might talk about kippers for tea. "After the war they turned me loose, with the rank of lieutenant and six thousand francs." Which meant working at dozens of unlikely occupations, such as doorkeeper in a Parisian hotel—"not a very respectable hotel," he assured me.

When he went into films, it was a fluke. A bit-part as a boxer happened to be going and a friend put him on to it.

At the studio they're calling him "the new Golden Boy." And, in a way, they're probably right. Of Paris and Helen Of Troy and the prospect of international acclaim, he is suitably modest. "It's a great responsibility," he said.

And slowly, magnificently, Monsieur Sernas smiled.

It is reported that Hedy Lamarr will be visiting Delhi during the year end with the main object of meeting Pandit Nehru. At the moment, she is in Italy making pictures. Hedy Lamarr is a great admirer of Pandit Nehru.

TEN SOLVERS SHARE FIRST PRIZE!

Result of MYWORDS Competition No. 34

In MYWORDS No. 34, the Competition Management received Rs. 4920—5—0 by way of Entry Fees. In conformity with the Rules & Conditions governing this Competition Rs. 1640—1—8, being 33 & 1/3 per cent, was deducted from the amount received. The nett amount of Rs. 3280—3—4 was again divided into Rs. 2460—2—6 for All-Correct winners and Rs. 820—0—10 for One-Error and Two-Error winners on a 75 and 25 per cent basis to be in conformity with the amount originally fixed as the target, viz. Rs. 7,500 and Rs. 2,500. Printed on page 53 is the Chartered Accountant's Certificate regarding the actual amount received as Entry Fees.

Thus, 10 Competitors who were able to submit All-Correct Entries share the First Prize Amount of Rs. 2460—2—6, each getting Rs. 246—0—0.

123 One-Error solvers and 508 Two-Error solvers share the Runners-up amount of Rs. 820—0—10. Each One-Error solver gets Rs. 2—13—0 and each Two-Error solver gets Rs. 0—15—0.

Appearing below are the full names and addresses of the All-Correct solvers in alphabetical order. For want of space, the full addresses of the One-Error and Two-Error solvers are not given. Instead, their names and places in alphabetical order are published.

The number shown in brackets indicates the number of shares won by a Competitor.

The Prize Amounts declared as won by the Competitors are subject to Scrutiny Claim Rules and Conditions.

If any Competitor feels he has won a Prize and it is not stated in the published List of Prize Winners that he has won such a Prize or that the number of shares won by him in the Runners-up category has been incorrectly stated, then the Competitor should demand a Scrutiny of his Entries by preferring a Scrutiny Claim on the form printed on page 53.

The Last Date for receiving Scrutiny Claims is 8th October, 1954.

Scrutiny Claims received without the Scrutiny Claim Fee will be ignored.

The First Prize and Runners-up Prize Amounts will be sent to the Competitors on or before 11th October '54.

There were very many complaints from Competitors that their Entries posted before the Closing Date were refused on the ground of having been delivered after the Closing Date. They urge we should not go by the letter of the Rules of the Competition and should, instead, use our discretion. We are sorry to inform such Competitors that we cannot relax the Rule. They should take care to see that their Entries are posted sufficiently early. They should appreciate our observance of a principle which made us lose a fairly good amount by refusing and returning the Entries received after the Closing Date.

Competitors' attention is drawn to the four outstanding features of MYWORDS Competition from MYWORDS No. 33 and onwards. They are: Rs. 10,000 Prize Offer; Key Solution prepared 3 weeks in advance of the Closing Date and the Sealed Cover containing the Key Solution kept in the custody of the Madras Branch of The Punjab National Bank Ltd., and the opening of the Sealed Cover in the presence of the Manager of the Bank on the day following the Closing Date; Chartered Accountant's certificate regarding actual collections; the despatch of prize amounts within three days after the last date for receipt of Scrutiny Claims.

MYWORDS is thus the last word in Competition perfection

ACROSS

1. "Boxer in training often finds good brisk — beneficial." RUB, RUG, RUM, RUN?

Rug and Rum may be discarded. A good vigorous Rub just before and during the rounds of the bout may be beneficial but we are not told in the Clue about the exact time. It is true that boxer in training should undergo all sorts of exercises to be in good shape and form. Good, brisk Run during the period will be beneficial for he will be agile. Back RUN.

2. "Man who has lived all his life in a — is pretty sure to have restricted outlook." HUT, RUT?

Just because a man has lived in a Hut, it can't be said that it is pretty sure his outlook will be narrow, restricted. Even those who live in palaces have narrow outlook. Having been in a Rut, having led a monotonous and routine existence, a man will be narrow in his outlook. Go in for RUT. 136679

3. "You can't expect to — a prize-fighter and get away with it!" LOCK, MOCK, ROCK, SOCK?

Lock and Rock are far-fetched. No one will be foolish enough to attempt to Sock him. At times a man may think he can Mock a prize-fighter but he is sure to pay dearly for it! MOCK scores.

8. "In these days of international tension the — of honest men are more than likely to get abused." INTENTIONS, INVENTIONS?

In the absence of what kind of Intentions are meant, we have to ignore the word. The aptness of Intentions needs no elaboration. Vote for INTENTIONS.

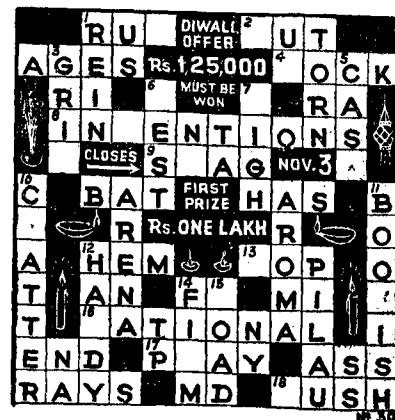

9. "Detective on the track of jewel thieves may come across — where it is not expected." SNAG, SWAG?

The chances of the detective ever coming across the Swag, stolen articles, are too remote a possibility. That he should come across Snag where it is most unexpected is due to the cleverness of the thieves. Enter SNAG.

13. "You can't expect a — to regard a bad hat with genuine approval!" COP, FOP, POP?

Cop is not apt, A Pop, meaning in slang father, is not likely to regard a bad hat with disapproval if it is his own or his peoples'. A Fop, dandy, assuredly would and should. Bet on FOP.

18. "Owner of paper with poor sales will understandably try to

—the figure up." HUSH, PUSH, RUSH?

Rush is unlikely. More than his trying to Hush up the figure, he is very likely to try to Push up the sales figure. Back PUSH.

DOWN

3. "We're usually agreeably surprised to see timid friend facing trouble with —" GRIN, GRIP, GRIT?

Grin is not understandable in view of our not knowing what the trouble is. Hence, as the other two alternatives are equally apt, permute GRIP and GRIT.

5. "Lawyer struggling to make ends meet may be glad to take any — that comes his way." CASE, CASH?

Even a lawyer can't be so bad as to take any Cash that may come his way! However trivial the Case, however poor the fee, still the struggling lawyer will grab at it. CASE should score.

6. "For old people who still feel energetic, absence of occupation is certainly not —" BEST, JEST, PEST, REST?

Pest is far-fetched. That is not Jest nor Rest is not so important here as the fact that absence of work is not best to old people who are still energetic as the inaction may even kill them. BEST is a good bet.

7. "In the middle twenties it's — time a man started thinking of marriage!" HIGH, NIGH?

How exactly can it be said to be "Nigh time", nearly time for his getting married? Nigh is rather awkward here. "High time" means it is quite time a thing is done. HIGH scores.

10. "It's difficult to discuss anything seriously amid the — of a busy coffee-house." CHATTER, CLATTER?

In a busy hotel there is a terrible din caused by Chatter of the patrons as also by the throwing down of vessels, plates, etc. All these different noises constitute a Clatter. And the aptness of this word is easily conceded. Back CLATTER.

11. "It would be presumptuous of — person to offer advice to man of experience." BOOKISH, BOORISH?

A man may be Boorish but he may be experienced. In the Clue, the contrast is between the experienced and the inexperienced. Bookish persons know much of theory and have little of experience. BOOKISH wins.

15. "Driver for firm of haulage contractors must be careful not to take the wrong —!" LOAD, ROAD?

The wrong Road cannot cause so much inconvenience and loss as wrong Load can. Vote for LOAD.

Across: 16. "Politicians perpetually haggling over local issues could with advantage cultivate a more — outlook." NATIONAL, RATIONAL?

National outlook need not necessarily make politicians stop from haggling over local issues. But a Rational, intelligent and judicious, outlook may change their nature. Back RATIONAL.

Down: 12. "To be a sailor, you have to be a pretty — sort of chap." HANDY, HARDY?

It is not enough if a man can be Handy to become a sailor. He should be really Hardy to face the rigours of sea and sailing. HARDY scores.

Across: 17. "When victory is clearly impossible all cricket sides can do is — for a draw." PLAY, PRAY?

Mere praying cannot get them a draw. Reject Prayer. All they can do is to Play for a draw at least if victory is impossible. PLAY wins.

Down: 14. "Obviously a — must be properly developed if it is to turn out successful." FILM, FIRM?

Unless a Firm is a success, it can't properly developed. But in the case of film, developing is an important technique factor. Back FILM.

ACROSS

3. "As a rule, the more cherish-ed our—the more we resent it's being criticised." HOME, HOPE?

Hope may be silly as well. Then, it would be sillier to resent its being criticised. The more attached we are to Home, the more will we resent any slighting reference to it. HOME scores.

6. "Housewife's—is usually better when there are guests in the home." FOOD, MOOD?

Just because guests have turned up, housewife can't get transformed into a good cook. So, reject Food. Even though she may be virago, she may not like to appear so before guests and her Mood will therefore be better. Enter MOOD.

7. "Women are more likely than men to resent—from servants." LIE, LIP?

Lie will be resented by both men and women equally. While men might excuse Lip, insolence, from servants, women will not but resent it for they always like to control others. LIP wins.

10. "Snob is apt to feel flattered when influential people—his ideas." CRAB, CRIB?

Influential people will not be so foolish as to Crib, plagiarise, ideas, especially when they happen to be a snob's. They might Crab, decry, pooh-pooh, his ideas. The snob might feel it is actually a compliment as only influential people are doing so. CRAB is a sure bet.

11. "It's often because they want to show off that people—recklessly—SPEED, SPEND?"

To Speed recklessly might have justification but not reckless Spending as it is an inexcusable extravagance. SPEND scores.

13. "Cynical indeed is the man who says that every husband has at least one—FOE, WOE?"

The Compiler's dig is at the woman! The word "husband" is therefore deliberately used. A husband might have several but his one eternal Woe will be the wife. Enter WOE.

15. "Even the best of bosses are apt to be criticised when they—workers." RETARD, REWARD?

Retard workers in what way and why? Reject it. When bosses Reward workers, it may be criticised as misplaced generosity. Back REWARD.

16. "One usually requires much self-confidence to make big—WAGER, WAGES?"

Not so much self-confidence as ability is required to earn big Wages. But to make big Wager, bet, self-confidence is required in plenty. Enter WAGER.

17. "Her friends are apt to make fun of young woman when her suitor has very—appearance." NASTY, NATTY?

If suitor has Nasty appearance, young woman's friend will criticise and not be merely apt to. Suitor's Natty, spruce, too tidy appearance might provoke criticism. Back NATTY.

DOWN

1. "His being left a lot of money sometimes makes man act like—BOOB, BOOR?"

Too much money would not make the man a Boor, churlish fellow. He will become more sociable. But being left a lot of money might make him a Boob, simpleton, a foolish fellow. BOOB is a good bet.

2. "Philanderer usually steers clear of women he thinks—SHREWD, SHREWS?"

Shrews can't be so undesirable to philanderer as Shrewd women for the latter might cleverly evade all his attentions. Back SHREWD.

4. "How exasperating people usually are who have to be—into doing something that's for their own good!" COAXED, HOAXED?

To be Coaxed means that they are at least to some extent aware of the attempt being made. This can't be so exasperating as the necessity for them to be Hoaxed into something that's for their own good. HOAXED is a winner.

NOT MORE NEGOTIATIONS BUT A LETTER FROM HIS LORDSHIP BISHOP OF DORSET.

"My spirits revived that there is one in the world to help me out of my uncounted difficulties after I have tried all the world over and failed. You are my earthly Saviour under whom I have taken refuge. I received your fatherly sympathy and All Purpose Navagrah. Herewith my photograph. Have it placed in the Chief Devotee's Consecrated Praying Room. My connection with you will be life-lasting. How could I express myself for the unspeakable joy that has filled my heart. I stood speechless for a while. May Almighty Bless you." — (Sd.) His Lordship Bishop D.Q.A., L.Th., (London).
