VISHŪU PURĀŅA.

CHAPTER VI.

Kings of the lunar dynasty. Origin of Soma or the Moon: he carries off Tārā, the wife of Brīhaspati: war between the gods and Asuras, in consequence: appeased by Brahmā. Birth of Buddha: married to Ilā, daughter of Vaivaswata. Legend of his son Purūravas and the nymph Urvaśi: the former institutes offerings with fire: ascends to the sphere of the Gandharvas.

MAITREYA.—You have given me, reverend (preceptor), an account of (the kings of) the dynasty of the Sun. I am now desirous to hear a description of the princes who trace their lineage from the Moon, and whose race is still celebrated for glorious deeds. Thou art able to relate it to me, Brahman, if thou wilt so favour me.

PARĀŚARA.—You shall hear from me, Maitreya, * an account of the illustrious family of the Moon, which has produced (many celebrated) rulers of the earth,—a race adorned by (the regal qualities of) strength, valour, magnificence, prudence,† and activity, and enumerating, amongst its monarchs, Nahusha, Yayāti, Kārtavīryārjuna,* and others equally renowned. That race will I describe to you. Do you attend.

Atri was the son of Brahmá, the creator of the universe, who sprang from the lotos that grew from the navel of Nārāyaṇa. The son of Atri was Soma¹ (the moon), whom Brahmá† installed as the sovereign of plants, of Brahmans, and of the stars.‡ Soma celebrated the Rājāsūya (sacrifice); and, from the glory thence acquired, and the extensive dominion with which he had been invested, he became arrogant (and licentious), and carried off Tárá, the wife of Bṛihaspati, the preceptor of the gods. In vain Bṛihaspati sought to recover his bride; in vain Brahmá commanded, and the holy sages remonstrated: Soma refused to relinquish her.§ Uśanas,|| out of enmity to Bṛihaspati, took part with Soma.¶ Rudra, who had studied under Angiras,

Then there ensued a fierce contest, which, being on account of Tárakā (or Tárā), was termed the Tárakā-maya or Tárakā war.§ In this, the gods, led by Rudra, hurled their missiles on the enemy; and the Daityas¶ (with equal determination assailed) the gods. Earth, shaken to her centre by the struggle between such foes, had recourse to Brahmá, for protection: on which he interposed, and, commanding Uśanas, with the demons, and Rudra with the deities, to desist from strife, compelled Soma to restore Tárā to her husband.†† Finding that she was pregnant,‡‡ Bṛihaspati desired her no longer to retain her burthen;§§ and, in obedience to his orders, she was delivered of a son, whom she deposited in a clump of long Munja-grass.* The child, from the moment of its birth, was endued with a splendour that dimmed the radiance of every (other) divinity; and both Bṛihaspati and Soma,† fascinated by his beauty, claimed him as their child. The gods, in order to settle the dispute, appealed to Tárá; but she was ashamed, and would make no answer. As she still continued mute to their repeated applications, the child (became incensed, and) was about to curse her, saying: "Unless, vile woman, you immediately declare who is my father, I will sentence you to such a fate as shall deter every female, in future, from hesitating to speak the truth."‡ On this, Brahmá§ (again interfered, and) pacified|| the child, and then, addressing Tárá, said: "Tell me, daughter, is this the child of Bṛihaspati? or of Soma?" "Of Soma," said Tárá, blushing.¶ As soon as she had spoken, the lord of the constellations—his countenance bright, and expanding with rapture,—embraced his son, and said: "Well done, my boy! Verily, thou art wise." And, hence, his name was Budha.¹

It has already been related how Budha begot Purúravas by Ilá.* Purúravas¹ was (a prince) renowned for liberality, devotion, magnificence, and love of truth, and for personal beauty. Urvaśi, having incurred the imprecation of Mitra and Varuṇa, determined to take up her abode in the world of mortals, and (descending, accordingly,) beheld Purúravas. As soon as she saw him, she forgot all reserve, and, disregarding the delights of Swarga, became deeply enamoured of the prince. Beholding her infinitely superior to all other females, in grace, elegance, symmetry, delicacy, and with Buddha, any deified mortal, or 'he by whom truth is known'; or, as individually applicable,† Gautama or Śākya, son of the Raja Śuddhodana,‡ by whom, the Buddhists themselves aver, their doctrines were first promulgated. The two characters have nothing in common; and the names are identical, only when one or other is misspelt.

¹ The story of Purúravas is told much in the same strain as follows, though with some variations, and in greater or less detail, in the Vāyu, Matsya, Vāmana, Padma, and Bhāgavata Purāṇas. It is, also, referred to in the Mahābhārata, Vol. I., p. 113. It is, likewise, the subject of the Vikrama and Urvaśi of Kālidāsa, in which drama the incidents offensive to good taste are not noticed. See Hindu Theatre, Vol. I., p. 187. The Matsya Purāṇa, besides this story, which is translated in the introduction to the drama, has, in another part,—c. 94,—an account of a Purúravas who, in the Chākshusha Manwantara,§ was king of Madra, and who, by the worship of Vishnū, obtained a residence with the Gandharvas.

beauty, Purúravas was equally fascinated by Urvaśi. Both were inspired by similar sentiments, and, mutually feeling that each was everything to the other, thought no more of any other object.* Confiding in his merits, Purúravas addressed the nymph, and said:† “Fair creature, I love you. Have compassion on me, and return my affection.” Urvaśi, half averting her face, through modesty, replied: “I will do so, if you will observe the conditions I have to propose.”§ “What are they?” inquired the prince. “Declare them.” “I have two rams,”|| said the nymph, “which I love as children. They must be kept near my bedside, and never suffered to be carried away.¶ You must, also, take care never to be seen, by me, undressed; and clarified butter alone must be my food.” To these terms the king readily gave assent.

After this, Purúravas and Urvaśi dwelt together in Alaká, sporting amidst the groves and lotos-crowned lakes of Chaitraratha†† and the other forests there situated, for sixty-one thousand years.¹ The love of Purúravas for his bride increased every day of its duration; and, the affection of Urvaśi augmenting equally in fervour, she never called to recollection* residence amongst the immortals. Not so with the attendant spirits at the court of Indra; and nymphs, genii, and quiristers† found heaven itself but dull, whilst Urvaśi was away.‡ Knowing the agreement that Urvaśi had made with the king, Viśwávasu§ was appointed, by the Gandharvas, to effect its violation; and he, coming, by night, to the chamber where they slept, carried off one of the rams. Urvaśi was awakened by its cries, and exclaimed: “Ah me! Who has stolen one of my children? Had I a husband, this would not have happened! To whom shall I apply for aid?” The Raja overheard her lamentation, but, recollecting that he was undressed, and that Urvaśi might see him in that state, did not move from the couch. Then the Gandharvas came and stole the other ram; and Urvaśi, hearing it bleat, cried out, that a woman had no protector, who was the bride of a prince so dastardly as to submit to this outrage. highly; and, trusting that the nymph would not see his person, as it was dark, he rose, and took his sword, and pursued the robbers, calling upon them to stop and receive their punishment. At that moment the Gandharvas caused a flash of brilliant lightning to play upon the chamber; and Urvaśi beheld the king undressed: the compact was violated; and the nymph immediately disappeared. The Gandharvas, abandoning the rams, departed to the region of the gods.

Having recovered the animals, the king returned, delighted, to his couch: but there he beheld no Urvaśi; and, not finding her anywhere, he wandered, naked, over the world, like one insane. At length, coming to Kurukshetra,* he saw Urvaśi sporting, with four other nymphs of heaven, in a lake beautified with lotoses; and he ran to her, and called her his wife, and wildly implored her to return. "Mighty monarch," said the nymph, "refrain from this extravagance. I am now pregnant.† Depart at present, and come hither, again, at the end of a year, when I will deliver to you a son, and remain with you for one night." Pururavas, thus comforted, returned to his capital. Urvaśi said to her companions: "This prince is a most excellent mortal. I lived with him long and affectionately united." "It was well done of you," they replied. "He is, indeed, of comely appearance, and one with whom we could live happily for ever."

When the year had expired, Urvaśi and the monarch met at Kurukshetra;‡ and she consigned to him his first-born, Ayus; and these annual interviews were repeated, until she had borne to him five sons. She then said to Pururavas: "Through regard for me, all the Gandharvas have expressed their joint purpose to bestow upon my lord their benediction. Let him, therefore, demand a boon." The Raja replied: "My enemies are all destroyed; my faculties are all entire: I have friends and kindred, armies and treasures.* There is nothing which I may not obtain, except living in the same region with my Urvaśi. My only desire, therefore, is, to pass my life with her." When he had thus spoken, the Gandharvas brought to Pururavas a vessel with fire, and said to him: "Take this fire, and, according to the precepts of the Vedas,† divide it into three fires; then, fixing your mind upon the idea of living with Urvaśi, offer oblations; and you shall, assuredly, obtain your wishes." The Raja took the brasier, and departed, and came to a forest. Then he began to reflect, that he had committed a great folly, in bringing away the vessel of fire, instead of his bride; and, leaving the vessel in the wood, he went (disconsolate,) to his palace. In the middle of the night he awoke, and considered that the Gandharvas had given him the brasier to enable him to obtain the felicity of living with Urvaśi, and that it was absurd in him to have left it by the way. Resolving, therefore, to recover it, he rose, and went to the place where he had deposited the vessel; but it was gone. In its stead, he saw a young Aśwattha tree growing out of a Śamī-plant; and he reasoned with himself, and said: "I left, in this spot, a vessel of fire, and now behold a young Aśwattha tree growing out of a Śamī-plant. Verily, I will take these types of fire to my capital, and there, having engendered fire by their attrition, I will worship it."

Having thus determined, he took the plants to his city, and prepared their wood for attrition, with pieces of as many inches* long as there are syllables in the Gāyatrī. He recited that holy verse, and rubbed together sticks of as many inches as he recited syllables in the Gāyatrī.¹ Having thence elicited fire, he made it threefold,† according to the injunctions of the Vedas, and offered oblations with it; proposing, as the end of the ceremony, reunion with Urvaśī. In this way, celebrating many sacrifices, agreeably to the form in which offerings are presented with fire, Purúravas obtained a seat in the sphere of the Gandharvas, and

¹ It does not appear why this passage is repeated. The length of the sticks, conformably to the number of syllables in the usual form of the Gāyatrī, would be twenty-four inches. The Bhāgavata attaches to the operation a piece of mysticism of a Tāntrika origin. Purúravas, whilst performing the attrition, mentally identifies himself and Urvaśī with the two sticks, and repeats the Mantra चर्वन्मखायुरसि पुक्कुरवाः । :

* Angula, 'finger-breadths.'

† Professor Wilson thinks that there may be an allusion to this in the Rigveda, I., XXXI., 4. See his Translation, Vol. I., p. 80, note b.

was no more separated from his beloved.* Thus, fire, that was, at first, but one, was made threefold,† in the present Manwantara, by the son of Ilā.¹

¹ The division of one fire into three is ascribed to Purúravas by the Mahābhārata and the rest. The commentator on the former specifies them as the Gārhapatya, Dakṣhiṇa, and Ahavaniya, § which Sir William Jones—Manu, II., 231,—renders nuptial, ceremonial, and sacrificial fires; or, rather, 1. household, that which is perpetually maintained by a householder; 2. a fire for sacrifices, placed to the south of the rest; and 3. a consecrated fire for oblations; forming the Tretāgni, or triad of sacred fires, in opposition to the Laukika, or merely temporal ones. To Purúravas, it would appear, the triple arrangement was owing; but there are some other curious traditions regarding him, which indicate his being the author of some important innovations in the Hindu ritual. The Bhāgavata || says, that, before his time, there was but one Veda, one caste, one fire, and one god. Nārāyaṇa; and that, in the beginning of the Tretā age, Purúravas made them, all, 'three':

पुक्कुरवस एवासीत्तयो त्रैतामुखे नृप ।

That is, according to the commentator, the ritual was then instituted: कर्ममार्गः प्रकटो बभूव । The Matsya Purāṇa has an account of this prince's going to the orbit* of the sun and moon, at every conjunction, when oblations to progenitors are to be offered; as if obsequial rites had originated with Purúravas. The Mahābhārata ¶ states some still more remarkable particulars. "The glorious Purúravas, endowed, although a mortal, with the properties of a deity, governing the thirteen islands of the ocean, Amávasu was Bhíma;¹ his son was Káñchana;² his son was Suhotra,³ whose son was Jahnu.* This prince, whilst performing a sacrifice, saw the whole of the place† overflowed by the waters of the Ganges. Highly offended at this intrusion, his eyes red with anger, he united the spirit of sacrifice: with himself, by the power of his devotion, and drank up the river. The gods and sages, upon this, (came to him, and) appeased his indignation, and reobtained Gangá from him, in the capacity of his daughter; (whence she is called Jáhnaví).⁴

engaged in devout penance, to obtain one who should be equal to Indra. Observing the intensity of his devotions, Indra was alarmed, lest a prince of power like his own should be engendered, and determined, therefore, to take upon himself the character of Kuśāmba's son.¹ He was, accordingly, born as Gádhi,* of the race of Kuśa (Kauśika). Gádhi had a daughter named Satyavatī. Richika, of the descendants of Bhṛigu, demanded her in marriage. The king was very unwilling to give his daughter to a peevish old Brahman, and demanded of him, as the nuptial present, a thousand fleet horses, whose colour should be white,† with one black ear. Richika, having propitiated Varuṇa, the god of ocean, obtained from him, at (the holy place called) Aśwatīrtha, a thousand such steeds, and, giving them to the king, espoused his daughter.²

In order to effect the birth of a son, Richika¹ prepared a dish of rice, barley, and pulse, with butter and milk, for his wife to eat; and, at her request, he consecrated a similar mixture for her mother, by partaking of which, she should give birth to a prince of martial prowess. Leaving both dishes with his wife, — after describing, particularly, which was intended for her, and which for her mother, — the sage went forth to the forests.* When the time arrived for the food to be eaten, the queen said to Satyavatī: "Daughter, all persons wish their children to be possessed of excellent qualities, and would be mortified to see them surpassed by the merits of their mother's brother. It will be desirable for you, therefore, to give me the mess your husband has set apart for you, and to eat of that intended for me; for the son which it is to procure me is destined to be the monarch of the whole world, whilst that which your dish would give you must be a Brahman, alike devoid of affluence, valour, and power." Satyavatī agreed to her mother's proposal; and they exchanged messes.

When Richika returned home, and beheld Satyavatī, he said to her: "Sinful woman, what hast thou done? I view thy body of a fearful appearance. Of a surety, thou hast eaten the consecrated food which was prepared for thy mother: thou hast done wrong. In that food I had infused the properties of power, and strength, and heroism; in thine, the qualities suited to a Brahman,—gentleness, knowledge, and resignation. In consequence of having reversed my plans, thy son shall follow a warrior's propensities, and use weapons, and fight, and slay. Thy mother's son shall be born with the inclinations of a Brahman, and be addicted to peace and piety." Satyavatī, hearing this, fell at her husband's feet, and said: "My lord, I have done this thing through ignorance. Have compassion on me: let me not have a son such as thou hast foretold. If such there must be, let it be my grandson, not my son." The Muni, relenting at her distress, replied: "So let it be." Accordingly, in due season she gave birth to Jamadagni; and her mother brought forth Viśwāmitra.* Satyavatī afterwards became the Kauśikī river.¹ Jamadagni married Reṇukā, the daughter of Reṇu, of the family of Ikshwāku, and had, by her, the destroyer of the Kshattriya race, Paraśurāma, who was a portion of Nārāyaṇa, the spiritual guide of the universe.²

* So the Rāmāyaṇa †—after stating that Satyavatī followed her husband in death,—adds, that she became the Kauśikī river; the Coosy, ‡ which, rising in Nepal, flows through Purneah into the Ganges, opposite, nearly, to Rājmaḥal.

LEGEND OF PARAŚURĀMA.

(From the Mahābhārata. *)

"JAMADAGNI (the son of Richika,¹) was a pious sage, who, by the fervour of his devotions, whilst engaged in holy study, obtained entire possession of the Vedas. Having gone to King Prasenajit, he demanded, in marriage, his daughter Reṇukā; and the king gave her unto him. The descendant of Bhṛigu conducted the princess to his hermitage, and dwelt with her there; and she was contented to partake in his ascetic life. They had four sons, and then a fifth, who was Jāmadagnya, † the last, but not the least, of the brethren. Once, when her sons were all absent to gather the fruits on which they fed, Reṇukā, who was exact in the discharge of all her duties, went forth to bathe. On her way to the stream, she beheld Chitraratha, the Prince of Mṛttikāvatī, with a garland of lotoses on his neck, sporting with his queen, in the water; and she felt envious of their felicity. Defiled by unworthy thoughts, wetted, but not purified, by the stream,* she returned, disquieted, to the hermitage; and her husband perceived her agitation. Beholding her fallen from perfection, and shorn of the lustre of her sanctity, Jamadagni reproved her, and was exceeding wroth. Upon this, there came her sons from the wood; first the eldest, Rumañwat, then Susheña, then Vasu, and then Viśwávasu; and each, as he entered, was successively commanded, by his father, to put his mother to death; but, amazed, and influenced by natural affection, neither of them made any reply: therefore, Jamadagni was angry, and cursed them; and they became as idiots, and lost all understanding, and were like unto beasts or birds. Lastly, Ráma returned to the hermitage, when the mighty and holy Jamadagni said unto him: 'Kill thy mother, who has sinned; and do it, son, without repining.' Ráma, accordingly, took up his axe, and struck off his mother's head; whereupon the wrath of the illustrious and mighty Jamadagni was assuaged, and he was pleased with his son, and said: 'Since thou hast obeyed my commands, and done what was hard to be performed, demand from me whatever blessings thou wilt, and thy desires shall be, all, fulfilled.' Then Ráma begged of his father these boons: the restoration of his mother to life, with forgetfulness of her having been slain, and purification from all defilement; the return of his brothers to their natural condition; and, for himself, invincibility in single combat, and length of days. And all these did his father bestow.

"It happened, on one occasion, that, during the absence of the Rishi's sons, the mighty monarch Kártavírya, (the sovereign of the Haihaya tribe, endowed, by the favour of Dattátreya, with a thousand arms, and a golden chariot that went wheresoever he willed it to go),* came to the hermitage¹ of Jamadagni, where the wife of the sage received him with all proper respect. The king, inflated with the pride of valour, made no return to her hospitality, but carried off with him, by violence, the calf of the milch-cow† of the sacred oblation,² and cast down the tall trees sur-

² In the Rājadharmā, the sons of the king carry off the calf. The Bhāgavata‡ makes the king seize upon the cow, by whose rounding the hermitage. When Ráma returned, his father told him what had chanced; and he saw the cow in affliction; and he was filled with wrath. Taking up his splendid bow,¹ Bhárgava, the slayer of hostile heroes, assailed Kártavírya, who had, now, become subject to the power of death, and overthrew him in battle. With sharp arrows Ráma cut off his thousand arms; and the king perished. The sons of Kártavírya,* to revenge his death, attacked the hermitage of Jamadagni, when Ráma was away, and slew the pious and unresisting sage, who called, repeatedly, but fruitlessly, upon his valiant son. They then departed; and, when Ráma returned, bearing fuel from the thickets, he found his father lifeless, and thus bewailed his unmerited fate: 'Father, in resentment of my actions, have you been murdered by wretches as foolish as they are base. By the sons of Kártavírya are you struck down, as a deer, in the forest, by the huntsman's shafts. Ill have you deserved such a death,—you, who have ever trodden the path of virtue, and never offered wrong to any created thing. How great is the aid Jamadagni had previously entertained Arjuna and all his train; borrowing, no doubt, these embellishments from the similar legend of Vasishthi and Viśwámitra, related in the Rámáyana.

crime that they have committed, in slaying, with their deadly shafts, an old man, like you, wholly occupied with pious cares, and engaging not in strife! Much have they to boast of to their fellows and their friends,—that they have shamelessly slain a solitary hermit, incapable of contending in arms!' Thus lamenting, bitterly and repeatedly, Ráma performed his father's last obsequies, and lighted his funeral pile. He then made a vow, that he would extirpate the whole Kshattriya race. In fulfilment of this purpose, he took up his arms, and, with remorseless and fatal rage, singly destroyed, in fight, the sons of Kártavírya; and, after them, whatever Kshattriyas he encountered, Ráma, the first of warriors, likewise slew. Thrice seven times did he clear the earth of the Kshattriya caste;¹ and he filled, with their blood, the five large lakes of Samantapanchaka, from which he offered libations to the race of Bhṛigu. There did he behold his sire again; and the son of Richika beheld his son, and told him what to do. Offering a solemn sacrifice to the king of the gods, Jámadagnya presented the earth to the ministering priests. To Kaśyapa he gave the altar made of gold, ten fathoms in length, and nine in height.² With the permission of Kaśyapa, the Brahmans divided it in pieces amongst them; and they were, thence, called Khañḍaváyana Brahmans. Having given the earth to Kaśyapa, the hero of immeasurable prowess retired to the Mahendra mountain, where he still resides: and in this manner was there enmity between him and the race of Kshattriyas; and thus was the whole earth conquered by Ráma."¹*

¹ The story, as told in the Rájadharmā section, adds, that, when Ráma had given the earth to Kaśyapa, the latter desired him to depart, as there was no dwelling for him in it, and to repair to the seashore of the south, where Ocean made for him (or relinquished to him), the maritime district named Śúrpāraka. The traditions of the Peninsula ascribe the formation of the coast of Malabar to this origin, and relate that Paraśurāma compelled the ocean to retire, and introduced Brahmans and colonists, from the north, into Kerala, or Malabar. According to some accounts, he stood on the promontory of Dilli, and shot his arrows to the south, over the site of Kerala. It seems likely, that we have proof of the local legend being, at least, as old as the beginning of the Christian era, as the Mons Pyrrhus of Ptolemy is, probably, the mountain of Paraśu or Paraśurāma. See Catalogue of Mackenzie Collection, Vol. I., Introduction, p. xcv.; and Vol. II., p. 74. The Rájadharmā also gives an account of the Kshattriyas who escaped even the thrice seven times repeated destruction of their race. Some of the Haihayas were concealed, by the earth, as women; the son of Vidúratha, of the race of Púru, was preserved in the Říksha mountain, where he was nourished by the bears; Sarvakarman, † the son of Saudāsa, was saved by Paraśara, performing the offices of a Śúdra; Gopati, son of Sibi, was nourished by cows, in the forests; Vatsa, the son of Pratardana, was concealed amongst the calves in a cow-pen; the son of Deviratha was secreted, by Gautama, on the banks of the Ganges; Bríhadratha was preserved in Grídrakúta;

The son of Viśwāmitra was Śunahśepha,* the descendant of Bhṛigu,—given by the gods, and, thence, named Devarāta.¹ Viśwāmitra had other sons, also, and descendants of Marutta were saved by the ocean. From these the lines of kings were continued; but it does not appear, from the ordinary lists, that they were ever interrupted. This legend, however, as well as that of the Rāmāyaṇa, Book I., Chapter LII., no doubt intimates a violent and protracted struggle, between the Brahmans and Kshattriyas, for supreme domination in India; as, indeed, the text of the Mahābhārata † more plainly denotes; as Earth is made to say to Kaśyapa: "The fathers and grandfathers of these Kshattriyas have been killed by the remorseless Rāma, in warfare on my account:"

एतेषां पितरश्चैव तथैव च पितामहाः ।

मर्त्ये निहता युद्धे रामेणाक्रिष्टकर्मणा ॥

¹ The story of Śunahśepha is told by different authorities, with several variations. As the author of various Sūktas in the Řich, he is called the son of Ajigarta. The Rāmāyaṇa makes him the middle son of the sage Řichika, sold to Ambarisha, king of Ayodhyā, by his parents, to be a victim in a human sacrifice offered by that prince. He is set at liberty by Viśwāmitra; but it is not added that he was adopted. The Bhāgavata † concurs in the adoption, but makes Śunahśepha the son of Viśwāmitra's sister, § by Ajigarta, of the line of Bhṛigu, and states his being purchased, as a victim, for the sacrifice of Hariśchandra. (See Vol. III., p. 287, note 1.) The Vāyu makes him a son of Řichika, but alludes to his being the victim at Hariśchandra's sacrifice. According to the Rāmāyaṇa, Viśwāmitra called upon his sons to take the place of Śunahśepha, and, on their refusing, degraded them to the condition of Chāndālas. The Bhāgavata says, that amongst whom the most celebrated were Madhuch-fifty* only of the hundred sons of Viśwāmītra were expelled their tribe, for refusing to acknowledge Śunahśepha or Devarata as their elder brother. The others consented; and the Bhāgavata† expresses this:

ज्येष्ठं मन्त्रदृशं चकुस्त्वामन्वच्च वयं स हि ।

"They said to the elder, profoundly versed in the Mantras, We are your followers:" as the commentator: अनुगन्तारः कनिष्ठाः स इत्यर्थः । The Rāmāyaṇa also observes, that Śunahśepha, when bound, praised Indra with Ūrichas, or hymns of the Ṛig-veda. The origin of the story, therefore,—whatever may be its correct version,—must be referred to the Vedas; and it, evidently, alludes to some innovation in the ritual, adopted by a part only of the Kāuśika families of Brahmins.‡

* These fifty were the elder sons.

‡ On the subject treated of in this note Professor Wilson expressed himself, at a later date, as follows:

"The story of Śunahśepa, or, as usually written, Śunahśepha, has been, for some time, known to Sanskrit students, through the version of it presented in the Rāmāyaṇa, Book I., Chapter LX., Schlegel; LXIII., Gorresio. He is, there, called the son of the Rishi Ūrichika, and is sold for a hundred cows, by his father, to Ambarisha, king of Ayodhya, as a victim for a human sacrifice. On the road, he comes to be lake Pushkara, where he sees Viśwāmītra, and implores his succour, and learns, from him, a prayer, by the repetition of which, at the stake, Indra is induced to come and set him free. It is obvious that this story has been derived from the Veda; for Viśwāmītra teaches him, according to Schlegel's text, two Gāthās,—according to Gorresio's, a Mantra: but the latter also states, that he propitiated Indra by Ūrichas,—Mantras of the Ṛig-veda (Ṛigbhis tushāva devendram), Vol. I., p. 249. Manu also alludes to the story (X., 105), where it is said that Ajigarta incurred no guilt by giving up his son to be sacrificed; as it was to preserve himself and family from perishing with hunger. Kullūka Bhāṭṭa names the son, Śunahśepha, and refers, for his authority, to the Bahwīcha Brāhmaṇa. The story is told, in full detail, in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa; but the Raja is named Hariśchandra. He has no sons, and worships Varuṇa, in order to obtain a son, promising to sacrifice to him his first-born. He has a son, in consequence, named Rohita; but, when Varuṇa claims his victim, the king delays the sacrifice, under various pretexts, from time to time, until Rohita attains adolescence, when his father communicates to him the fate for which he was destined. Rohita refuses submission, and spends several years in the forests, away from home. He, at last, meets, there, with Ajigarta, a Rishi, in great distress, and persuades him to part with his second son, Śunahśepha, to be substituted for Rohita, as an offering to Varuṇa. The bargain is concluded; and Śunahśepha is about to be sacrificed, when, by the advice of Viśwāmītra, one of the officiating priests, he appeals to the gods, and is, ultimately, liberated. The Aitareya Brāhmaṇa has supplied the commentator with the circumstances which he narrates, as illustrative of the series of hymns in this section. Dr. Rosen doubts if the hymns bear any reference to the intention of sacrificing Śunahśepha: but the language of the Brāhmaṇa is not to be mistaken; as Ajigarta not only ties his son to the stake, but goes to provide himself with a knife with which to slay him. At the same time, it must be admitted, that the language of the Sūktas is somewhat equivocal, and leaves the intention of an actual sacrifice open to question. The Bhāgavata follows the Aitareya and Manu, in terming Śunahśepha the son of Ajigarta, and names the Raja, also, Hariśchandra. In the Vishnū Purāṇa, he is called the son of Viśwāmītra, and is termed, also, Deva-rāta, or god-given. But this relates to subsequent occurrences, noticed, in like manner, by the other authorities, in which he becomes the adopted son of Viśwāmītra, and the eldest of all his sons; such of whom as refused to acknowledge his seniority being cursed to become the founders of various barbarian and outcaste races. Viśwāmītra's share in the legend may, possibly, intimate his opposition, and that of some of his disciples, to human sacrifices." Translation of the Ṛigveda, Vol. I., p. 59, note a.

CHAPTER VIII.

Sons of Áyus. Line of Kshattravíddha, or kings of Káśi. Former birth of Dhanwantari. Various names of Pratardana. Greatness of Alarka.

ÁYUS, the eldest son of Purúravas, married the daughter of Ráhu (or Áráhu*), by whom he had five sons,—Nahusha, Kshattravíddha,¹ Rambha,² Ráji, and Anenas.³

The son of Kshattravíddha was Suhotra,⁴† who had three sons,—Káśa,⁵‡ Leśa,⁶§ and Grítsama-da.* The son of the last was Śaunaka,¹ who first estabsheña,† father of Charanta; Váyu: of Kaśyapa; Brahma and Hari Vanśa.‡

¹ Here is, probably, an error; for the Váyu, Bhágavata, and Brahma agree in making Śunaka the son of Grítsamada, and father of Śaunaka.

* Corrected, throughout this chapter, from "Ghrítsamada".

† It is to be observed, that this Grítsamada, who is here described as belonging to the regal lineage of Purúravas, is the reputed Rishi of many hymns in the second Mañḍala of the Rigveda. Regarding him the Commentator Śāyaṇa has the following remarks, in his introduction to that Mañḍala:

* * * * *

"The seer (i. e., he who received the revelation) of this Mañḍala was the Rishi Grítsamada. He, being formerly the son of Śunahotra in the family of the Ángirases, was seized by the Asuras, at the time of sacrifice, and rescued by Indra. Afterwards, by the command of that god, he became the person named Grítsamada, son of Śunaka, in the family of Bhṛigu. Thus, the Anukramaṇikā (Index to the Rigveda) says of him: 'That Grítsamada, who, having been an Ángirasa, and son of Śunahotra, became a Bhārgava and son of Śunaka, saw the second Mañḍala.' So, too, the same Śaunaka says, in his Rishi-anukramaṇa, regarding the Mañḍala beginning with 'Thou, O Agni:—Grítsamada, son of Śunaka, who is declared to have been, naturally, an Ángirasa, and the son of Śunahotra, became a Bhṛigu.' Hence, the seer of the Mañḍala is the Rishi Grítsamada, son of Śunaka."

"It will be noticed, that, (unless we are to suppose a different Grítsamada to be intended in each case,) there is a discrepancy between the Purāṇas on the one hand, and Śāyaṇa and the Anukramaṇikā on the other; as the Purāṇas make Grítsamada the son of Śunahotra or Suhotra, and the father of Śunaka; whilst the Anukramaṇikā, followed by Śāyaṇa, represents the same personage as having been, indeed, originally, the son of Śunahotra, of the race of Angiras, but as having afterwards become, by what process does not appear, the son of Śunaka, of the race of Bhṛigu." Original Sanskrit Texts, Part I., p. 228 (2nd ed.).

The Váyu-purāṇa, in the corresponding passage, gives, as wife of Purúravas, Prabhá, daughter of Swarbhánu. Swarbhánu, according to our Purāṇa,—see Vol. II., p. 70,—had a daughter Prabhá. One of the Swarbhánus—for there is a second: see Vol. II., p. 71—is identified with Ráhu, ibid., p. 304.

¹ The expression is चातुर्वर्ण्यप्रवर्तयिता, 'the originator (or causer) of the distinctions (or duties) of the four castes.' The commentator, however, understands the expression to signify, that his descendants were of the four castes. So, also, the Vāyu:

पुत्रो घृत्समदस्य च शुनको यस्य शौनकः ।

"The son of Gṛtsamada was Śunaka, whose son was Śaunaka. Brahmans, Kshattriyas, Vaiśyas, and Śūdras were born in his race; Brahmans by distinguished deeds." The existence of but one caste in the age of purity, however incompatible with the legend which ascribes the origin of the four tribes to Brahmā, is everywhere admitted. Their separation is assigned to different individuals;—whether accurately to any one may be doubted: but the notion indicates that the distinction was of a social or political character.

² Some rather curious legends are connected with this prince, in the Vāyu and Brahma Purāṇas, and Hari Vamśa, and, especially, in the Kāśi Khaṇḍa of the Skanda Purāṇa. According to these authorities, Śiva and Pārvatī, desirous of occupying Kāśi, which Divodāsa possessed, sent Nikumbha, one of the Gaṇas of the former, to lead the prince to the adoption of Buddhist doctrines; in consequence of which, he was expelled from the sacred city, and, according to the Vāyu, founded another on the banks of the Gomati. We have, however, also some singular, though obscure, intimations of some of the political events of this and the succeeding reign. The passage of the Vāyu is:

भद्रश्रेष्ठस्य पुत्राणां शतमुत्तमधन्विनाम् ।
हत्वा निवेशयामास दिवोदासो नराधिपः ॥
भद्रश्रेष्ठस्य राज्यं तु हतं तेन बलीयसा ।

तेन पुत्रेण बालेन प्रहृतं तस्य वै पुनः ।
वैरस्यान्तं महाराजा तदा तेन विधित्सता ॥

“The king Divodāsa, having slain the hundred sons of Bhadrāsreṇya, took possession of his kingdom, which was conquered by that hero. The son of Bhadrāsreṇya, celebrated by the name of Durdama, was spared, by Divodāsa, as being an infant. Pratardana was the son of Divodāsa, by Dṛishadwati; and by that great prince, desirous of destroying all enmity, (was recovered) that (territory), which had been seized by that young boy, (Durdama).” This is not very explicit; and something is wanted to complete the sense. The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Vaiṣṇava* tell the story twice over, chiefly in the words of the Vāyu, but with some additions. In Ch. 29 we have, first, the first three lines of the above extract; then comes the story of Benares being deserted; we then have the two next lines; † then follow:‡

“That prince (Durdama) invading his patrimonial possessions, the territory which Divodāsa had seized by force was recovered by the gallant son of Bhadrāsreṇya, Durdama, a warrior desirous, mighty king, to effect the destruction of his foes.” Here the victory is ascribed to Durdama, in opposition to what appears to be the sense of the Vāyu, and what is, undoubtedly, that of our text, which says, that he was called Pratardana, from destroying the race of Bhadrāsreṇya, and Śatrujit, from vanquishing all his foes: ततः प्रतर्दनः । स च भद्रश्रेष्ठवंशविनाशादशेषाः शत्रवोऽनेन जिता इति शत्रुजिदभवत् । By Vairasya anta, ‘the end of hostility or enmity,’ is, obviously, not to be understood, here, as M. Langlois has intimated, a friendly pacification, but the end or destruction of all enemies. In the 32nd chapter of the Hari Vaiṣṇava, we have precisely the same lines, slightly varied as to their order; but they are preceded by this verse:*

भद्रश्रेष्ठस्य पूर्वं तु पुरीं वाराणसीं भवात् ।
यदुवंशप्रसूतस्य तपस्यभिरतस्य च ॥

“The city, (that on the Gomati), before the existence of Benares, of Bhadrāsreṇya, a pious prince of the Yadu race.” This verse is not in the Brahma Purāṇa. After giving the rest of the above quotation, except the last line, the passage proceeds:†

तेन पुत्रेषु बालेषु प्रहृतं तस्य भारत ।
वैरस्यान्तं महाराज चत्त्रियेण विधित्सता ॥

The Hari Vamśa§ agrees, as usual, with the Brahma, except in the reading of one or two names. It is to be observed, however, that the Agni makes the Kāśi princes the descendants of Vitatha, the successor of Bharata. The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Vamśa, determined, apparently, to be right, give the list twice over; deriving it, in one place, from Kshattraviddha, as in our text, the Vāyu, and the Bhāgavata; and, in another, with the Agni, from Vitatha. The series of the Brahma, however, stops with Lauhi, the son of Alarka, and does not warrant the repetition which the carelessness of the compiler of the Hari Vamśa has superfluously inserted.

¹ Our text is clear enough; and so is the Bhāgavata: but the Vāyu, Brahma, and Hari Vamśa contain additions of rather doubtful import. The former has:

वेणुहोत्रसुतश्चापि गार्ग्यो वै नाम विश्रुतः ।

गार्ग्यस्य गर्गभूमिस्तु वत्सो वत्सस्य धीमतः ।

ब्राह्मणाः क्षत्रियाश्चैव तयोः पुत्राः सुधर्मिकाः ॥

“The son of Veṇuhotra was the celebrated Gārgya; Gargabhūmi was the son of Gārgya; and Vatsa, of the wise Vatsa: virtuous Brahmans and Kshattriyas were the sons of these two.” By the second Vatsa is, perhaps, meant Vatsabhūmi; and the purport of the passage is, that Gārgya (or, possibly, rather, Bharga, one of the sons of Pratardana,) and Vatsa were the founders of two races (Bhūmi, ‘earth’, implying ‘source’ or ‘founder’), who were Kshattriyas by birth, and Brahmans by profession. The Brahma† and Hari Vamśa, apparently misunderstanding this text, have increased the perplexity. According to them, the son of Veṇuhotra was Bharga; Vatsabhūmi was the son of Vatsa; and Bhargabhūmi (Bhṛigubhūmi: Brahma,) was from Bhārgava. “These sons of Angiras were born in the family of Bhṛigu, thousands of great might, Brahmans, Kshattriyas and Vaiśyas:”

एते ह्यङ्गिरसः पुत्राः जाता वंशेऽथ भार्गवे ।

ब्राह्मणाः क्षत्रिया वैश्यास्तेजोयुक्ताः सहस्रशः ॥

The commentator§ has: वत्सस्यालर्कपितुः पुत्रान्तरमाह । वत्सभूमि-रिति । भार्गवात् । वत्सभ्रातुः । अङ्गिरसः । गालवस्याङ्गिरसत्वात् । भार्गवे । विश्वामित्रस्य भार्गवत्वात् । “Another son of Vatsa, the father of Alarka, is described: Vatsabhūmi, &c. From Bhārgava, the brother of Vatsa. (They were) Angirasas, from Gālava, belonging to that family, (and were born) in the family of Bhṛigu, from the descent of Viśwamitra.” The interpretation is not very clear; but it authorizes the notion above expressed, that Vatsa and Bharga, the sons of Pratardana, are the founders of two races of Kshattriya-Brahmans.

Sudeva, the son of Haryaśwa, was, also, attacked and defeated by the same enemies. CHAPTER IX.

Descendants of Rāji, son of Āyus: Indra resigns his throne to him: claimed, after his death, by his sons, who apostatize from the religion of the Vedas, and are destroyed by Indra. Descendants of Pratikshatra, son of Kshattraviddha.

RAJĪ had five hundred sons, all of unequalled daring and vigour. Upon the occurrence of a war between the demons* and the gods, both parties inquired of Brahmā which would be victorious. The deity replied: "That for which Rāji shall take up arms." Accordingly, the Daityas immediately repaired to Rāji, to secure his alliance; which he promised them, if they would make him their Indra, after defeating the gods. To this they answered, and said: "We cannot profess one thing, and mean another. Our Indra is Prahlāda;† and it is for him that we wage war." Having thus spoken, they departed. And the gods then came to him, on the like errand. He proposed to them the said conditions; and they agreed that he should be their Indra. Rāji, therefore, joined the heavenly host, and, by his numerous and formidable weapons, destroyed the army of their enemies.

When the demons were discomfited, Indra placed the feet of Rāji upon his head, and said: "Thou hast preserved me from a great danger; and I acknowledge thee as my father.‡ Thou art the sovereign chief over ‡ Hereupon the scholiast quotes the ensuing stanza:

The regard that is conciliated by many agreeable speeches is not to be resisted even when such language proceeds from a foe: (much less should the kind words of a friend fail to win our affection)." * He, accordingly, returned to his own city; and Indra† remained (as his deputy,) in the government of heaven.

When Rāji ascended to the skies, his sons, at the instigation of Nārada, demanded the rank of Indra, as their hereditary right; and, as the deity refused to acknowledge their supremacy, they reduced him to submission, by force, and usurped his station. After some considerable time had elapsed, the god of a hundred sacrifices, (Indra), deprived of his share of offerings to the immortals, met with Bṛihaspati, in a retired place, and said to him: "Cannot you give me a little of the sacrificial butter;‡ even if it were no bigger than a jujube? For I am in want of sustenance." "If," replied Bṛihaspati, "I had been applied to, by you, before, I could have done anything for you that you wished: as it is, I will endeavour and restore you, in a few days, to your sovereignty." So saying, he commenced a sacrifice,§ for the purpose of increasing

CHAPTER X.

The sons of Nahusha. The sons of Yayāti: he is cursed by Śukra: wishes his sons to exchange their vigour for his infirmities. Pūru alone consents. Yayāti restores him his youth: divides the earth amongst his sons, under the supremacy of Pūru.

YATI, Yayāti, * Saṁyāti, Áyāti, † Viyati, and Kṛiti: were the six valiant sons of Nahusha. † Yati § declined

† The Bhāgavata refers, briefly, to the story of Nahusha, which is told in the Mahābhārata more than once,—in the Vana Parvan, Udyoga Parvan, Dānadharma Parvan, and others; also, in the Padma and other Purāṇas. He had obtained the rank of Indra; but, in his pride, or at the suggestion of Śachi, compelling the Ṛishis to bear his litter, he was cursed, by them, to fall from his state, and reappear, upon earth, as a serpent. From this form he was set free by philosophical discussions with Yudhishthira, and received final liberation. Much speculation, wholly unfounded, has been started by Wilford's conjecture, that the name of this prince, with Deva, 'divine', prefixed, a combination which never occurs, was the same as Dionysius, or Bacchus. ¶ Authorities generally agree as to the names of the first three of his sons: in those of the others there is much variety; and the Matsya, Agni, and Padma have seven names, as follows, omitting the three first of the text:

* He, at least, of the sons of Nahusha, had Virajā for mother, according to the Vāyu-purāṇa and Harivamśa. See Vol. III., p. 164, notes § and ¶.

† This name, I find, is ordinarily corrupted into Ayāti or Áyati.

‡ In the Mahābhārata, Ādi-parvan, sl. 3155, they appear as Yati, Yayāti, Saṁyāti, Áyāti, Ayati, and Dhruva.

§ Yati married Go, daughter of Kákutstha, agreeably to the Vāyu-purāṇa, and the Harivamśa, sl. 1601.

curse of Uśanas,* Yayāti became old and infirm before his time; but, having appeased his father-in-law,† he obtained permission to transfer his decrepitude to any one who would consent to take it. He first applied to his eldest son, Yadu, and said: "Your maternal grandfather has brought this premature decay upon me. By his permission, however, I may transfer it to you for a thousand years. I am not yet satiate with worldly enjoyments, and wish to partake of them through the Mahābhārata; also, in the Bhāgavata, with some additions, evidently of a recent taste. Śarmishthā, the daughter of Vṛishaparvan, king of the Daityas,‡ having quarrelled with Devayāni, the daughter of Śukra (the religious preceptor of the same race§), had her thrown into a well. Yayāti, hunting in the forest, found her, and, taking her to her father, with his consent, espoused her. Devayāni, in resentment of Śarmishthā's treatment, demanded that she should become her handmaid; and Vṛishaparvan, afraid of Śukra's displeasure, was compelled to comply. In the service of his queen, however, Yayāti beheld Śarmishthā, and secretly wedded her. Devayāni complaining to her father of Yayāti's infidelity, Śukra inflicted on him premature decay, with permission to transfer it to any one willing to give him youth and strength in exchange, as is related in the text. The passage specifying the sons of Yayāti is precisely the same in the Mahābhārata|| as in our text, and is introduced in the same way: अचानुर्वशस्वीको भवति । means of your youth. Do not refuse compliance with my request." Yadu, however, was not willing to take upon him his father's decay; on which, his father denounced an imprecation upon him, and said: "Your posterity shall not possess dominion." He then applied, successively, to Druhyu, Turvasu, and Anu, and demanded of them their juvenile vigour. They all refused, and were, in consequence, cursed by the king.* Lastly, he made the same request of Śarmishthá's youngest son, Púru, who bowed to his father, and readily consented to give him his youth, and receive, in exchange, Yayāti's infirmities, saying that his father had conferred upon him a great favour.

The king Yayāti being, thus, endowed with renovated youth, conducted the affairs of state for the good of his people, enjoying such pleasures as were suited to his age and strength, and were not incompatible with virtue.† He formed a connexion with the celestial nymph Viśwáchí,‡ and was wholly attached to her, and conceived no end to his desires. The more they were gratified, the more ardent they became; as it is said in this verse:§ "Desire is not appeased by enjoyment: fire fed with sacrificial oil becomes but the more intense.|| No one has ever more than enough of rice, or barley, or gold, or cattle, or women. Abandon, therefore, inordinate desire. When a mind finds neither good nor ill in all objects, but looks on all with an equal eye, then everything yields it pleasure. The wise man is filled with happiness, who escapes from desire, which the feeble-minded can with difficulty relinquish, and which grows not old with the aged.* The hair becomes grey, the teeth fall out, as man advances in years; but the love of wealth, the love of life, are not impaired by age." "A thousand years have passed," reflected Yayāti, "and my mind is still devoted to pleasure: every day my desires are awakened by new objects. I will, therefore, now renounce all sensual enjoyment, and fix my mind upon spiritual truth. Unaffected by the alternatives of pleasure and pain, and having nothing I may call my own, I will, henceforth, roam the forests with the deer."†

Having made this determination, Yayāti restored his youth to Púru, resumed his own decrepitude, installed his youngest son in the sovereignty, and departed to the wood of penance (Tapovana¹). To Turvasu he consigned the south-east districts of his kingdom; the west, to Druhyu; the south, to Yadu; and

The Linga describes the ministers and people as expostulating with Yayāti, for illegally giving the supremacy to the youngest son; but he satisfies them by showing, that he was justified in setting the seniors aside, for want of filial duty. The Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parvan, Gālava Charita, has a legend of Yayāti's giving a daughter to the saint Gālava, who, through her means, obtains, from different princes, eight hundred horses, white with one black ear, as a fee for his preceptor Viśwāmitra. Yayāti, after his death and residence in Indra's heaven, is again descending to earth, when his daughter's sons give him the benefit of their devotions, and replace him in the celestial sphere. It has the air of an old story. A legend in some respects similar has been related in our text; p. 16, supra.

The same author remarks, as to writing Jat or Jāt, that “the difference of the long and short a is a mere fashion of spelling, and shows no difference of origin, family, or habit.” The two words, properly represented, are Jat and Jāt.

Tuṇḍikeras,* and Jātas.† The Matsya and Agni omit the first, and substitute Bhojas; and the latter are included in the list in the Brahma, Padma, Linga, and Hari Vanśa. For Jātas the reading is Sanjātas or Sujātas.‡ The Brahma Purāṇa§ has, also, Bharatas, who, as well as the Sujātas, are not commonly specified, it is said, ‘from their great number.’ They are, in all probability, invented, by the compiler, out of the names of the text, Bharata and Sujāti.¶ The situation of these tribes is Central India; for the capital of the Tālajanghas was Māhishmatī, ¶ or Chuli-Maheśwar,—still called, according to Colonel Tod, Sahasra bāhu kī bastī, ‘the village of the Thousand-armed,’ that is, of Kārtavīrya. Annals and Antiquities of Rajasthan, Vol. I., p. 39, note. The Tuṇḍikeras and Vitihoṭras are placed, in the geographical lists, behind the Vindhyan Mountains; and the termination -kaira†† is common in the valley of the Narmadā, as Bairkaira, &c.; or we may have Tuṇḍikera abbreviated, as Tuṇḍari, on the Taptee. The Avantis were in Ujjayini;‡‡ and the Bhojas were in the neighbourhood, probably, of Dhār, in Malwa.§§ These tribes must have preceded, then, the Rājput tribes by whom these countries are now occupied, or: Rahtors, Chauhāns, Pawārs, Gehlots, and the rest. very top of the valley of Sohagpoor, in Bhagel-khand, aware of their ancient lineage, and, though few in number, are still celebrated for their valour." Tod's Annals, &c. of Rajasthan, Vol. I., p. 39. The scope of the traditions regarding them—especially, of their overrunning the country, along with Śakas and other foreign tribes, in the reign preceding that of Sagara (see Vol. III., p. 289),—indicates their foreign origin, also; and, if we might trust to verbal resemblances, we might suspect, that the Hayas and Haihayas of the Hindus had some connexion with the Hia, Hoiei-ke, Hoiei-hu, and similarly denominated Hun or Turk tribes who make a figure in Chinese history.* Deguignes, Histoire Générale des Huns, Vol. I., Part I., pp. 7, 55, 231; Vol. I., Part II., pp. 253, &c. At the same time, it is to be observed, that these tribes do not make their appearance until some centuries after the Christian era, and the scene of their first exploits is far from the frontiers of India: the coincidence of appellation may be, therefore, merely accidental.† In the word Haya, which, properly, means 'a horse,' it is not impossible, however, that we have a confirmatory evidence of the Scythian origin of the Haihayas, as Colonel Tod supposed; although we cannot, with him, imagine the word 'horse' itself is derived from Haya.‡ Annals, &c. of Rajasthan, Vol. I., p. 76.

* Colonel Tod speculates that "The Hsihya [Haihaya] race, of the line of Boodha, may claim affinity with the Chinese race which first gave monarchs to China." Annals and Antiquities of Rajasthan, Vol. I., p. 39, note †.

† See Vol. II., p. 134, note †.

‡ It is not at all clear that Colonel Tod proposes such a derivation.

husband of Śaibyā." Śaibyā was barren; but Jyāmagha* was so much afraid of her, that he did not take any other wife. On one occasion, the king, after a desperate conflict, with elephants and horse, defeated a powerful foe, who, abandoning wife, children, kin, army, treasure, and dominion, fled. When the enemy was put to flight, Jyāmagha beheld a lovely princess left alone and exclaiming "Save me, father! Save me, brother!" as her (large) eyes rolled wildly with affright. The king was struck by her beauty, and penetrated with affection for her, and said to himself: "This is fortunate. I have no children, and am the husband of a sterile bride. of the queen in these nuptials." Accordingly, he took the princess into his chariot, and returned to his own capital.

When Jyāmagha's approach was announced, Śaibyā came to the palace-gate, attended by the ministers, the courtiers, and the citizens, to welcome the victorious monarch. But, when she beheld the maiden standing on the left hand of* the king, her lips swelled and slightly quivered with resentment, and she said to Jyāmagha: "Who is this light-hearted damsel that is with you in the chariot?" The king, unprepared with a reply, made answer precipitately, through fear of his queen: "This is my daughter-in-law." "I have never had a son," rejoined Śaibyā: "and you have no other children. Of what son of yours, then, is this girl the wife?"† The king, disconcerted by the jealousy and anger which the words of Śaibyā displayed, made this reply to her, in order to prevent further contention: "She is the young bride of the future son whom thou shalt bring forth." Hearing this, Śaibyā smiled gently, and said "So be it;" and the king entered into his great palace.

†† There seems to be something wrong here; for my MSS. of the Vāyu-purāṇa agree in reading:

n.^{1*} The son of Anamitra was Nighna,† who had two sons, Prasena and Sattrājita. The divine Āditya (the Sun) was the friend of the latter.

On one occasion, Sattrājita, whilst walking along the road to Gāndhārī, and makes Mādri the mother of Yudhājita, Devamīdhusha, Anamitra, and Śini. The Agni has a similar arrangement, but substitutes Dhṛishīa for Vṛishīi, and makes him the fifteenth in descent from Satwata. The Linga, § Padma, and the Puraṇas, and Hari Vamśa || have made great confusion, multiplying, apparently without any warrant, the name of Vṛishīi into Kroshīi.

The Bhāgavata ¶ makes them sons of Yudhājita; the Matsya Agni, as observed in the preceding note, his brothers, as well as Sumitra's.

गंधारी जनयामास सुमित्रं मित्रवन्दनम् ।

re, Gāndhārī is represented as having only one son, Sumitra; and she has Yudhājita, Devamīdhusha, Anamitra, and Śini. Instead of Devamīdhusha, Professor Wilson gave, by inadvertence, "Devamīdhush", as the name in the Vāyu-purāṇa. At the same time, and, in the Matsya-purāṇa, "Devamīdhusha".

The Sanskrit runs: वृष्णिः सुमित्रो युधाजिच्च पुत्रोऽभवत् । ततः मित्रशिनी तथा । Anamitra and Śini are, thus, other sons of Nighna. The Kūrma-purāṇa says, expressly:

वृष्णिस्तु पुत्रो बलवाननमित्रः शिनिस्तथा ।

Timna: Bhāgavata-purāṇa.

Corrected, everywhere, from "Satrajit". The Bhāgavata-purāṇa has Sattrājita and Sattrājita; the Linga-purāṇa, the latter. In the Vāyu-purāṇa, the reading seems to be Śakrajit.

This Puraṇa, in my MSS., has Vṛishīi, not Kroshīi. It states, too, that he had Sumitra by Gāndhārī, and, by Mādri, Devamīdhusha, Anamitra, and Śini.

According to my best MSS., Gāndhārī is mother of Sumitra, and not only Mādri, of Yudhājita, Devamīdhusha, and Anamitra.

sea-shore, addressed his mind to Sūrya, and hymned his praises; on which, the divinity appeared and stood before him. Beholding him in an indistinct shape, Sattrājita said to the Sun: "I have beheld thee, lord, in the heavens, as a globe of fire. Now do thou show favour unto me, that I may see thee in thy proper form."* On this, the Sun, taking the jewel called Syamantaka from off his neck, placed it apart; and Sattrājita beheld him of a dwarfish stature, with a body like burnished copper, and with slightly reddish eyes.† Having offered his adorations, the Sun desired him to demand a boon; and he requested that the jewel might become his. The Sun presented it to him, and then resumed his place in the sky. Having obtained the spotless gem of gems, Sattrājita wore it on his neck: and, becoming as brilliant, thereby, as the Sun himself, irradiating all the regions with his splendour, he returned to Dwārakā. The inhabitants of that city, beholding him approach, repaired to the eternal male, Purushottama,—who, to sustain the burthen of the earth, had assumed a mortal form (as Kṛishṇa),—and said to him: "Lord, assuredly the (divine) Sun is coming to visit you." But Kṛishṇa; smiled, and said: "It is not the divine Sun, but Sattrājita, to whom Āditya has presented the Syamantaka gem; and he now wears it. Go and behold him without apprehension." Accordingly, they departed. Sattrājita, having gone to his house, there deposited the jewel, which yielded, daily, eight loads* of gold, and, through its marvellous virtue, dispelled all fear of portents, wild beasts, fire, robbers, and famine.†

Achyuta was of opinion‡ that this wonderful gem should be in the possession of Ugrasena;§ but, although he had the power of taking it from Sattrājita, he did not deprive him of it, that he might not occasion any disagreement amongst the family. Sattrājita, on the other hand, fearing that Kṛishṇa|| would ask him for the jewel, transferred it to his brother Prasena. Now, it was the peculiar property of this jewel, that, although it was an inexhaustible source of good to a virtuous person, yet, when worn by a man of bad character, it was the cause of his death. Prasena, having taken the gem and hung it round his neck, mounted his horse, and went to the woods to hunt. In the chase, he was killed¶ by a lion. The lion, taking the jewel in his mouth, was about to depart, when he was observed and killed by Jāmbavat, the king of the bears, who, carrying off the gem, retired into his cave, and gave it to his son Sukumāraka to play with.

* Bhāra, which here, more probably, imports a weight of gold equal to twenty tulās. So the commentator understands the term; and the same view is taken by Śrīdhara, commenting on the Bhāgavata-purāṇa, X., LVI., 11.

When some time had elapsed, and Prasena did not appear, the Yādavas* began to whisper, one to another, and to say:† "This is Kṛishṇa's doing. Desirous of the jewel, and not obtaining it, he has perpetrated the murder of Prasena, in order to get it into his possession."

When these calumnious rumours came to the knowledge of Kṛishṇa,‡ he collected a number of the Yādavas, and, accompanied by them, pursued the course of Prasena by the impressions of his horse's hoofs.§ Ascertaining, by this means, that he and his horse had been killed by a lion, he was acquitted, by all the people, of any share in his death. Desirous of recovering the gem, he thence followed the steps of the lion, and, at no great distance, came to the place where the lion had been killed by the bear. Following the footmarks of the latter, he arrived at the foot of a mountain, where he desired the Yādavas to await him, whilst he continued the track. Still guided by the marks of the feet, he discovered a cavern, and had scarcely entered it, when he heard the nurse of Sukumāraka saying to him: "The lion killed Prasena; the lion has been killed by Jāmbavat. Weep not, Sukumāraka. The Syamantaka is your own." Thus assured of his object,|| Kṛishṇa advanced into the cavern, and saw the brilliant jewel in the hands of the nurse, who was giving it, as a plaything, to Sukumāraka. The nurse soon desisted his approach, and, marking his eyes fixed upon the gem with eager desire, called loudly for help. Hearing her cries, Jāmbavat, full of anger, came to the cave; and a conflict ensued between him and Achyuta, which lasted twenty-one days. The Yādavas who had accompanied the latter waited seven or eight days, in expectation of his return; but, as the foe of Madhu still came not forth, they concluded that he must have met his death in the cavern. "It could not have required so many days," they thought, "to overcome an enemy;" and, accordingly, they departed, and returned to Dwārakā, and announced that Kṛishṇa had been killed.

When the relations of Achyuta heard this intelligence, they performed all the obsequial rites suited to the occasion. The food and water thus offered to Kṛishṇa, in the celebration of his Śrāddha, served to support his life and invigorate his strength in the combat in which he was engaged; whilst his adversary, wearied by daily conflict with a powerful foe, bruised and battered, in every limb, by heavy blows, and enfeebled by want of food, became unable longer to resist him. Overcome by his mighty antagonist, Jāmbavat cast himself before him, and said: "Thou, mighty being, art, surely, invincible by all the demons, and by the spirits of heaven, earth, or hell; much less art thou to be vanquished by mean and powerless creatures in a human shape, and, still less, by such as we are, who are born of brute origin.* Undoubtedly, thou art a portion of my sovereign lord, Nārāyaṇa, the defender of the universe." Thus addressed by Jāmbavat, Kṛishṇa explained to him, fully, that he had descended to take upon himself the burthen of the earth, and kindly alleviated the bodily pain which the bear suffered from the fight, by touching him with his hand. Jāmbavat again prostrated himself before Kṛishṇa, and presented to him his daughter, Jāmbavatī, as an offering suitable to a guest.* He also delivered to his visitor the Syamantaka jewel. Although a gift from such an individual was not fit for his acceptance, yet Kṛishṇa† took the gem, for the purpose of clearing his reputation. He then returned, along with (his bride) Jāmbavatī, to Dwārakā.

When the people of Dwārakā beheld Kṛishṇa alive and returned, they were filled with delight, so that those who were bowed down with years recovered youthful vigour; and all the Yādavas, men and women, assembled round Ānakadundubhi, (the father of the hero), and congratulated him. Kṛishṇa‡ related to the whole assembly of the Yādavas all that had happened, exactly as it had befallen, and, restoring the Syamantaka jewel to Sattrājita, was exonerated from the crime of which he had been falsely accused. He then led Jāmbavatī into the inner apartments.

of the aspersions upon Kṛishṇa's character, he felt alarmed; and, to conciliate the prince, he gave him to wife his daughter, Satyabhāmā. The maiden had been, previously, sought in marriage by several of the most distinguished Yādavas, as Akrūra, Kṛitavarman, and Śatadhanwan,* who were highly incensed at her being wedded to another, and leagued in enmity against Sattrājita. The chief amongst them, with Akrūra and Kṛitavarman, said to Śatadhanwan:† "This caitiff Sattrājita has offered a gross insult to you, as well as to us, who solicited his daughter, by giving her to Kṛishṇa. Let him not live. Why do you not kill him, and take the jewel? Should Achyuta therefore enter into feud with you, we will take your part." Upon this promise, Śatadhanwan undertook to slay Sattrājita.‡

mosity of Duryodhana, and to perform the duties his relationship required. Śatadhanwan, taking advantage of his absence, killed Sattrājita in his sleep, and took possession of the gem. Upon this coming to the knowledge of Satyabhāmā, she immediately mounted her chariot, and, filled with fury at her father's murder, repaired to Vāraṇāvata, and told her husband how Sattrājita had been killed by Śatadhanwan, in resentment of her having been married to another, and how he had carried off the jewel; and she implored him to take prompt measures to avenge such heinous wrong. Kṛishṇa, who is ever internally placid, being informed of these transactions, said to Satyabhāmā, as his eyes flashed with indignation: "These are, indeed, audacious injuries: but I will not submit to them from so vile a wretch.* They must assail the tree, who would kill the birds that there have built their nests.† Dismiss excessive sorrow: it needs not your lamentations to excite any wrath."‡ Returning, forthwith, to Dwārakā, Kṛishṇa§ took Baladeva apart, and said to him: "A lion slew Prasena, hunting in the forests; and now Sattrājita has been murdered by Śatadhanwan. As both these are removed, the jewel which belonged to them is our common right. Up, then; ascend your car; and put Śatadhanwan to death!"

Being thus excited by his brother, Balarāma engaged resolutely in the enterprise. But Śatadhanwan, being aware of their hostile designs, repaired to Kṛitavarman, and required his assistance. Kṛitavarman, however, declined to assist him; pleading his inability to engage in a conflict with both Baladeva and Kṛishṇa.* Śatadhanwan, thus disappointed, applied to Akrūra. But he said: "You must have recourse to some other protector. How should I be able to defend you? There is no one, even amongst the immortals,—whose praises are celebrated throughout the universe,—who is capable of contending with the wielder of the discus; at the stamp of whose foot the three worlds tremble; whose hand makes the wives of the Asuras widows; whose weapons no host, however mighty, can resist. No one is capable of encountering the wielder of the ploughshare, who annihilates the prowess of his enemies by the glances of his eyes, that roll with the joys of wine; and whose vast ploughshare manifests his might, by seizing and exterminating the most formidable foes."† "Since this is the case," replied Śatadhanwan, "and you are unable to assist me, at least accept and take care of this jewel." "I will do so," answered Akrūra, "if you promise, that, even in the last extremity, you will not divulge its being in my possession." To this Śatadhanwan agreed; and Akrūra took the jewel. And the former, mounting a very swift mare,—one that could travel a hundred leagues a day,—fled (from Dwārakā).

* Here again the original has Vāsudeva; and so frequently below.

† Akrūra's speech is rendered very freely. Kṛishṇa and Baladeva are eulogized, in it, under the names, respectively, of Chakrin and Sirin.

‡ Śatadhanus is the name, in the original, here and several times below.

When Kṛishṇa heard of Śatadhanwan's flight, he harnessed his four horses,—Śaibya, Sugrīva, Megha-pushpa, and Baláhaka,—to his car, and, accompanied by Balarāma,* set off in pursuit. The mare (held her speed, and) accomplished her hundred leagues; but, when she reached the country of Mithilā, (her strength was exhausted, and) she (dropped down and) died. Śatadhanwan,¹ dismounting, continued his flight on foot, (When his pursuers came to the place where the mare had perished,) Kṛishṇa said to Balarāma:† "Do you remain in the car, whilst I follow the villain on foot, and put him to death. The ground here is bad; and the horses will not be able to drag the chariot across it." Balarāma, accordingly, stayed with the car; and Kṛishṇa followed Śatadhanwan on foot. When he had chased him for two kos, he discharged his discus; and, although Śatadhanwan was at a considerable distance, the weapon struck off his head. Kṛishṇa, then coming up, searched his body and his dress for the Syamantaka jewel, but found it not. He then returned to Balabhadra, and told him that they had effected the death of Śatadhanwan to no purpose; for the precious gem, the quintessence of all worlds, was not upon his person. When Balabhadra heard this, he flew into a violent rage, and said to Vāsudeva: "Shame light upon you, to be thus greedy of wealth! I acknowledge no

And we are further informed, that, when the latter was about to depart for the regions allotted to him, he requested that his father would instruct him in some form of prayer, or invocation, that should, whenever he required it, procure for his people the blessing of rain. In compliance with this request, Noah imparted to his son one of the mysterious names of God, inscribing it on a stone; which, as an everlasting memorial, he delivered, at the same time, into his possession. Yapheth now proceeded, with the whole of his family, to the north-east, according to appointment; devoting himself, as is the manner of those who inhabit the boundless plains in that quarter, to a wandering and pastoral life: and, having instituted, for his followers, the most just and virtuous regulations for their conduct, never failed to procure for them, through the influence of the sacred deposit consigned to him by his father, rain and moisture for their lands, whenever occasion made it necessary. Why do you inflict this protracted suffering upon your mother?' Thus addressed, the infant answered: 'If, father, you will present a cow, every day, to the Brahmans, I shall, at the end of three years more, be born.' "Of a surety", said he to himself, "the great Syamantaka jewel is in his keeping; for such, I have heard, are amongst its properties. This Akrūra, too, has been lately celebrating sacrifice after sacrifice: his own means are insufficient for such expenses: it is beyond a doubt, that he has the jewel." Having come to this conclusion, he called a meeting of all the Yādavas at his house, under the pretext of some festive celebration.* When they were all seated, and the purport of their assembling had been explained, and the business accomplished, Kṛishṇa† entered into conversation with Akrūra, and, after laughing and joking, said to him: "Kinsman, you are a very prince in your liberality; but we know very well, that the precious jewel which was stolen by Śatadhanwan‡ was delivered, by him, to you, and is now in your possession, to the great benefit of this kingdom. § So let it remain.

there was no occasion for him to reflect or reason. Kṛishṇa, however, appears, in this story, in a very different light from that in which he is usually represented; and the adventure, it may be remarked, is detached from the place in which we might have expected to find it,—the narrative of his life,—which forms the subject of the next Book.

We all derive advantage from its virtues. But Balabhadra suspects that I have it; and, therefore, out of kindness to me, show it (to the assembly).” When Akrūra, who had the jewel with him, was thus taxed, he hesitated what he should do. “If I deny that I have the jewel,” thought he, “they will search my person, and find the gem hidden amongst my clothes. I cannot submit to a search.” So reflecting, Akrūra said to Nārāyaṇa, the cause of the whole world: “It is true that the Syamantaka jewel was entrusted to me by Śatadhanwan.* When he went from hence, I expected, every day, that you would ask me for it; and with much inconvenience, therefore, I have kept it until now.† The charge of it has subjected me to so much anxiety, that I have been incapable of enjoying any pleasure, and have never known a moment’s ease. Afraid that you would think me unfit to retain possession of a jewel so essential to the welfare of the kingdom, I forbore to mention to you its being in my hands. But now take it, yourself, and give the care of it to whom you please.” Having thus spoken, Akrūra drew forth, from his garments, a small gold box,‡ and took from it the jewel. On displaying it to the assembly of the Yādavas, the whole chamber where they sat was illuminated by its radiance. “This”, said

Akrūra, “is the (Syamantaka) gem, which was consigned to me by Śatadhanwan. Let him to whom it belongs now take it.”

When the Yādavas beheld the jewel, they were filled with astonishment, and loudly expressed their delight. Balabhadra immediately claimed the jewel, as his property jointly with Achyuta, as formerly agreed upon;* whilst Satyabhāmā demanded it, as her right, as it had, originally, belonged to her father. Between these two, Kṛishṇa considered himself as an ox between the two wheels of a cart,† and thus spake to Akrūra, in the presence of all the Yādavas: “This jewel has been exhibited to the assembly, in order to clear my reputation. It is the joint right of Balabhadra and myself, and is the patrimonial inheritance of Satyabhāmā. But this jewel, to be of advantage to the whole kingdom, should be taken charge of by a person who leads a life of perpetual continence. If worn by an impure individual, it will be the cause of his death. Now, as I have sixteen thousand wives, I am not qualified to have the care of it. It is not likely that Satyabhāmā will agree to the conditions that would entitle her to the possession of the jewel;‡ and, as to Balabhadra, he is too much addicted to wine and the pleasures of sense to lead a life of self-denial. We are, therefore, out of the question; and all the Yādavas, Balabhadra, Satyabhāmā,* and myself request you, most bountiful Akrūra, to retain the care of the jewel, as you have done hitherto, for the general good: for you are qualified to have the keeping of it; and, in your hands, it has been productive of benefit to the country. You must not decline compliance with our request." Akrūra, thus urged, accepted the jewel, and, thenceforth, wore it, publicly, round his neck, where it shone with dazzling brightness; and Akrūra moved about like the sun, wearing a garland of light.

He who calls to mind the vindication† of (the character of) Kṛishṇa: from false aspersions shall never become the subject of unfounded accusation in the least degree, and, living in the full exercise of his senses, shall be cleansed from every sin.¹

¹ The story of the Syamantaka gem occurs in the Bhāgavata, § Vāyu, Matsya, Brahma, and Hari Vamśa,|| and is alluded to in other Purāṇas.¶ It may be considered as one common to the whole series. Independently of the part borne, in it, by Kṛishṇa, it presents a curious and, no doubt, a faithful, picture of ancient manners,—in the loose self-government of a kindred clan, in the acts of personal violence which are committed, in the feuds which ensue, in the public meetings which are held, and the part that is taken, by the elders and by the women, in all the proceedings of the community.

CHAPTER XIV.

Descendants of Śini, of Anamitra, of Śwaphalka and Chitraka, of Andhaka. The children of Devaka and Ugrasena. The descendants of Bhajamāna. Children of Śūra: his son Vasudeva: his daughter Prithā married to Pāṇdu: her children, Yudhishthira and his brothers; also Kārṇa, by Āditya. The sons of Pāṇdu by Mādri. Husbands and children of Śūra's other daughters. Previous births of Śiśupāla.

THE younger brother* of Anamitra† was Śini;‡ his son was Satyaka; his son was Yuyudhāna, also known by the name of Sátyaki; his son was Asanga;§ his son was Tūni;¹|| his son was Yugandhara.² These princes were termed Śaineyas.¶

* Bhūti: Vāyu. Kuṇi: Bhāgavata. Dyumni: Matsya.††

‡ The Agni makes these, all, brother's sons of Satyaka, and adds another, Rishabha, the father of Śwaphalka.

* 'Son', according to two MSS. † Vide supra, p. 73.

‡ This Śini, according to the Bhāgavata-purāṇa, IX., XXIV., 13, was son of Anamitra. The same work, in the stanza immediately preceding that just referred to, recognizes the Śini of our text,—a brother of Anamitra.

The Kūrma-p., also,—vide supra, p. 74, note *,—speaks of two Śinis:

अनमित्राच्छिनिर्बन्धे कनिष्ठो वृष्णिनन्दात् ।

Here, Śini is youngest son of Anamitra, son of Vṛishṇi.

From this the Vāyu-purāṇa differs slightly:

अनमित्राच्छिनिर्बन्धे कनिष्ठो वृष्णिनन्दात् ।

According to this, Śini was son of Anamitra, youngest son of Vṛishṇi. The Linga-purāṇa, Prior Section, LXIX., 15, knows only one Śini, the youngest son of Vṛishṇi. (?)

§ Variants: Sanga, Sanjaya, and Asima. Jaya: Bhāgavata-purāṇa.

¶ The Vāyu-purāṇa calls them Bhautyas, as being descendants of Bhūti.

 And so in the Linga-purāṇa.

†† Bhūmi, in the Harivaṃśa, which here wants a stanza, in the Calcutta edition.

In the family of Anamitra, Pṛišni* was born; his son was Śwaphalka,¹ the sanctity of whose character† has been described: the younger brother of Śwaphalka was named Chitraka.‡ Śwaphalka had, by Gāndinī, besides Akrūra, Upamadgu,§ Mṛidura,|| Arime-

* The authorities are not agreed here. Śwaphalka, ¶ according to the Agni, as just remarked, comes from Śini, the son of Anamitra. The Bhāgavata, instead of Pṛišni, has Vṛishnī, son of Anamitra; the Brahma†† and Hari Vamśa‡‡ have Vṛishnī; and the Agni, Pṛishnī, son of Yudhājita. §§ The Matsya also makes Yudhājita the ancestor of Akrūra, through Rishabha and Jayanta. Yudhājita, in the Brahma, &c., is the son of Krośhīri. ||||

* Vṛishnī, in four MSS. † "Sanctity of character" is for prabhāva. ‡ Chitraratha: Bhāgavata-purāṇa. According to the Linga-purāṇa, Chitraka was son of Sumitra.

§ Two MSS. give Upamangu, as in, for instance, the Vāyu-purāṇa; which then has Mangu, as has the Brahma-purāṇa.

Several of the notes that follow should be compared together, and with note ¶ in p. 96, infra.

|| Also read Mṛidara and Mṛidu. The Brahma-purāṇa has Madura. ¶ According to the Linga-purāṇa, Śwaphalka was son of Yudhājita, son of a son of Mādri. This unnamed son, the commentator says, was Devamidhusha; and he explains the term Vārshnī, applied to Śwaphalka, as signifying "founder of the Vṛishnī family". The text is as follows:

मायाः सुतस्य संजज्ञे सुतो वार्ष्णिर्धुधाजितः ।

अफल इति विख्यातस्तेलोकहितकारकः ॥

Comment: मायाः सुतस्य देवमीदृषसंज्ञकप्रथमपुत्रस्य धुधाजितः सुतः । वार्ष्णिर्वृष्णिकुलोद्भवः । अफल इति विख्यातः संजज्ञे इत्यन्वयः ।

 Vṛishnī was Anamitra's third son, according to the Purāṇa referred to: IX., XXIV., 14.

†† My MS. gives Pṛishnī, son of Yudhājita. ‡‡ Śl. 1908.

§§ The Vāyu-purāṇa has:

* The different authorities vary in the reading of these names,

* Professor Wilson had "Śāramejaya"; his Hindu-made English version, "Ravi, Śārinjaya," preceded by "Mṛida". The original, -मृदुरविशारिमेजयः, might be resolved into "Mṛidu, Raviśa, Arimejaya"; but that this is corrupt appears from the high authority of the Vāyu-purāṇa, which reads:

उपमङ्गुस्तथा मङ्गुर्मृदुरविशारिमेजयः ।

† These names are written, in the original, as one long compound; and it is more likely than not that we should here read "Kshattra, Upakshattra". Professor Wilson's Bengal translation has "Girikshetra, Upakshetra". One MS. gives Kshattropeta. The Vāyu-purāṇa gives, plainly, Girirakshas and Yaksha.

‡ Śatruban: Brahma-purāṇa.

§ Three MSS. have Avimardana. The Vāyu-purāṇa seems to give Pārimardana.

|| Dharmabhṛit: Vāyu-purāṇa and Brahma-purāṇa.

¶ Corrected from "Dhrishṭāsarma". One MS. has Dṛishṭadharmā.

 Professor Wilson had, instead of two names, "Gandhamojavāha"; and all my MSS. but one—which has Gandhamobavāha,—might be read to yield Gandhamojavāha. There is little risk in the alteration which I have ventured; as the Vāyu-purāṇa has

* * * * * गन्धमोचस्तथापरः ।

†† In the Brahma-purāṇa there are, whereabouts, in my single MS., many partly undecipherable, and yet indubitable, variations from the Vishnu-purāṇa. The Harivaṃśa adds to our Purāṇa, with reference to the chapter under annotation, not a few particulars which it has seemed scarcely worth while to swell the notes by transcribing, particularly as that work is so easily accessible.

‡‡ The Vāyu-purāṇa calls her Vasudevā. See the Sanskrit quotation in note , above. In the Linga-purāṇa, her name is Sudhārā, according to my MSS.; in the Harivaṃśa, Sundari.

Devavat and Upadeva* were the sons of Akrūra.† The sons of Chitraka‡ were Prīthu and Viprīthu,§ and many others.¹ Andhaka|| had four sons, Ku-though they generally concur in the number.¶

¹ The Matsya and Padma call them sons of Akrūra, but, no doubt, incorrectly.

* Instead of these two names, one MS. has Deva and Anupadeva, as has Professor Wilson's Bengal translation. The Brahma-purāṇa gives Vastudeva and Upadeva; the Harivaṃśa, Prasena and Upadeva.

† His wife, according to the Linga-purāṇa, Brahma-purāṇa, and Harivaṃśa, is Ugraseni.

¶ The Linga-purāṇa has, in my MSS.: Akrūra, Upamangu, Mangu, Vṛita, Janamejaya, Girirakshas, Upaksha, Śatrughna, Arimardana, Dharmabhṛit, Vṛishṭadharmā, Godhana, Vara, Āvāha, and Prativāha. The Harivaṃśa, sl. 1916—1918, has, in my best MSS.: Akrūra, Upamangu, Mangu, Mṛidara, Arimejaya, Arikshipa, Upeksha, Śatrughna, Arimardana, Dharmadhṛik, Yatidharman, Gṛidhramojāndhaka, Āvāha, Prativāha. In sl. 2083—2085, we find Madura for Mṛidara, Girikshipa for Arikshipa, Ākshepa for Upeksha, Śatruhan for Śatrughna, Dharmabhṛit for Dharmadhṛik, and Dharmā for Yatidharman. The Bhāgavata-purāṇa has: Akrūra, Āsanga, Śārameya, Mṛidura, Mṛiduvid (or Mṛiduri), Giri, Dharmavṛiddha, Sukarman, Kshetropeksha, Arimardana, Śatrughna, Gandhamāda, Pratibāhu. The Brahma-purāṇa has, with other names, Arimejaya, Āvāha, and Prativāha. The readings of the Vāyu-purāṇa, scattered through the preceding notes, are especially deserving of attention.

There is little doubt, that, of all the Purāṇas, the Vāyu-purāṇa generally presents, in their oldest extant Paurāṇik form, the particulars that make up the works of the class to which it belongs.

 In the Vāyu-purāṇa they are called Prīthu, Viprīthu, Aśwagrīva, Aśwabāhu, Supārśwaka, Gaveshāṇa, Arishṭanemi, Aśwa, Suvarman, Dharmabhṛit, Abhūmi, and Bahubbūmi. In the Linga-purāṇa we read: Viprīthu, Prīthu, Aśwagrīva, Subāhu, Sudhāsuka, Gaveshāṇa, Arishṭanemi, Aśwa, Dharma, Dharmabhṛit, Subhūmi, and Bahubbūmi. Much the same persons are named in the Brahma-purāṇa, where they are called sons of Sumitra. The list slightly differs, again, in the Harivaṃśa, sl. 1920, 1921; 2087—2089.

Burnouf's translation of this passage is subjoined:

"Pṛithā avait reçu de Durvāsas satisfait un charme capable de faire apparaître les Dieux à sa voix; un jour Pṛithā voulant essayer la force de ce charme, appela le brillant soleil.

"Le Dieu lui apparut aussitôt; mais frappée d'étonnement à sa vue, Pṛithā lui dit: C'est uniquement pour essayer ce charme que je t'ai appelé, ô Dieu; va, et pardonne-moi ma curiosité.

"Ma présence ne peut être stérile, ô femme; c'est pourquoi je désire te rendre mère; mais je ferai en sorte, ô belle fille, que ta virginité n'en souffre pas.

"Ayant ainsi parlé, le Dieu du soleil eut commerce avec Pṛithā; et après l'avoir rendue mère, il remonta au ciel; la jeune fille mit aussitôt au monde un enfant mâle qui resplendissait comme un second soleil.

"Pṛithā abandonna cet enfant dans les eaux du fleuve, parce qu'elle craignait les mauvais discours du peuple; Pāṇdu ton aïeul, ce monarque plein d'un vertueux héroïsme, prit ensuite la jeune fille pour femme."

¶ Here, again, Professor Wilson has supplemented the original,—probably by the aid of the Bhāgavata-purāṇa, IX., XXIV., 38. It is observable that the names of Jayasena's two sons are not specified there.

 The original has आवर्त्तय, "of Avanti", the country; and the term applies to Vinda and Anuvinda. Some MSS. have आवर्त्ती. Compare note ||, above.

CHAPTER XV.

Explanation of the reason why Śiśupāla, in his previous births as Hirañyakaśipu and Rāvaṇa, was not identified with Viṣṇu, on being slain by him, and was so identified, when killed as Śiśupāla. The wives of Vasudeva: his children: Balarāma and Kṛishṇa his sons by Devakī: born, apparently, of Rohiṇī and Yaśodā. The wives and children of Kṛishṇa. Multitude of the descendants of Yadu.

MAITREYA.—Most eminent of all who cultivate piety, I am curious to hear from you, and you are able to explain to me, how it happened, that the same being who, when killed, by Viṣṇu, as Hirañyakaśipu and Rāvaṇa, obtained enjoyments which, though scarcely attainable by the immortals, were but temporary, should have been absorbed into the eternal Hari, when slain, by him, in the person of Śiśupāla.*

PARĀSARA.—When the divine author of the creation, preservation, and destruction of the universe accomplished the death of Hirañyakaśipu, he assumed a body composed of the figures of a lion and a man;† so that Hirañyakaśipu was not aware that his destroyer was Viṣṇu. Although, therefore, the quality of purity, derived from exceeding merit, had been attained, yet his mind was perplexed by the predominance of the property of passion; and the consequence of that intermixture was, that he reaped, as the result of his death by the hands of Viṣṇu, only unlimited power and enjoyment upon earth, as Daśanana,* the sovereign of the three spheres: he did not obtain absorption into the supreme spirit,† that is without beginning or end, because his mind was not wholly dedicated to that sole object. So, also, Daśanana, being entirely subject to the passion of love,‡ and engrossed completely by the thoughts of Jānakī, could not comprehend that the son of Daśaratha§ whom he beheld was, in reality, (the divine) Achyuta. At the moment of his death, he was impressed with the notion, that his adversary was a mortal; and, therefore, the fruit he derived from being slain by Viṣṇu was confined to his birth in the illustrious family of the kings of Chedi, and the exercise of extensive dominion. In this situation, many circumstances brought the names of Viṣṇu to his notice: and, on all these occasions, the enmity that had accumulated through successive births influenced his mind; and, in speaking constantly with disrespect of Achyuta, he was ever repeating his different appellations. Whether walking, eating, sitting, or sleeping, his animosity was never at rest; and Kṛishṇa was ever present to his thoughts, in his ordinary semblance, having eyes as beautiful as the leaf of the lotos, clad in bright yellow raiment, decorated with a garland, with bracelets on his arms and wrists, and a diadem on his head; having four robust arms, bearing the conch, the discus, the mace, and the lotos. Thus uttering his names, even though in malediction, and dwelling upon his image, though in enmity, he beheld Kṛishṇa, when inflicting his death, radiant with resplendent weapons, bright with ineffable splendour in his own essence as the supreme being; and all his passion and hatred ceased, and he was purified from every defect. Being killed by the discus of Vishṇu, at the instant he thus meditated, all his sins were consumed by his divine adversary, and he was blended with him by whose might he had been slain. I have, thus, replied to your inquiries. He by whom the divine Vishṇu is named, or called to recollection, even in enmity, obtains a reward that is difficult of attainment to the demons and the gods. How much greater shall be his recompense, who glorifies the deity in fervour and in faith!*

Vasudeva, also called Ānakadundubhi, had Pauravī,¹

¹ Pauravī is, rather, a title attached to a second Rohiṇī, to distinguish her from the first, the mother of Balarāma.† She is also said, by the Vāyu,‡ to be the daughter of Bāhlika.

* The whole of this paragraph is very freely rendered.

† The commentator says: पौरवी । पुरर्वशोऽवेति रोहिण्या विशेषणम् । अत एव पौरव्या न पृथग्वंशकीर्तनम् ।

According to this, Pauravī was daughter of Vālmika.

In my copies of the Linga-purāṇa, however, Pauravī is called daughter of Bāhlika. Some MSS. of the Harivaṃśa here have Bāhlika; others, Bāhlika.

* More than half my copies have Sārāṇa.

† So read, like Professor Wilson's Bengal translation, all my MSS. but one, which gives Śāla. In the MS. which the Professor followed all but exclusively, I find the ङ of this name so written as to look exceedingly like ञ. Hence his "Śaru", now corrected.

‡ The Bhāgavata-purāṇa names Bala, Gada, Sārāṇa, Durmada, Vipula, Dhruva, and Kṛita.

§ In two copies, Baladeva. || One MS. gives Nishadha.

¶ Altered from "Mārshi, Mārshimat", a reading which I find in only a single MS., and that not a good one. The variants of these names are numerous, but of no appreciable importance.

 In one MS. I find Satya and Dhṛiti.

†† Instead of these two names, one of my MS. has Damabhūta; another, Madabhūta.

‡‡ The commentator says that the others are Pīṇḍāraka and Uśīnara.

§§ My best and oldest MSS. unaccompanied by the commentary yield Pauravī, on which reading the scholiast remarks: पौरव्या इति पाठेऽपि रोहिणी नाम्ना इत्यर्थः । एतेषामेव रोरिण्यात्मनया दशेति हरिवंशे ग्रहणात्कुलजा वंशः ।

¶¶ In addition to these, the Bhāgavata-purāṇa mentions Śūra, and speaks of others unnamed.

 According to the Bhāgavata-purāṇa, Kauśalyā—whom the commentator identifies with Bhadrā,—had but one son, Keśin.

¹ The enumeration of our text is rather imperfect. The Vāyu†† names the wives of Vasudeva, Pauravī, Rohiṇī, Madirā, Rudrā, Vaiśākhī, Devakī; and adds two bondmaids,‡‡ Sugandhī and Vanarājī. The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Vaiṣṇava§§ name twelve wives and two slaves: Rohiṇī, Madirā, Vaiśākhī, Bhadrā, Sunāmnī, Sahadevā, Śāntidevā, Śrīdevā, Devarakshitā, Vṛikadevī, Upadevī, Devakī; and Śantanu|| and Vādavā.¶¶ The children of the two slaves, according to the Vāyu, were Puṇḍra, who became a king, and Kapila, who retired to the woods. In the Bhāgavata, we have thirteen wives: Pauravī, Rohiṇī, Bhadrā, Madirā, Rochanā, Ilā, Devakī, Dhṛitadevī, Śāntidevā, Upadevī,†††

* For two Gadas in the Bhāgavata-purāṇa, see note † in the preceding page, and note § in the page following.

In commenting on the same Purāṇa, X., I., 8, Śrīdhara, according to my best MSS., substitutes Mīdu and Santardana for Rijū and Saumardana.

|| Professor Wilson had "Jātabāsini", a misprint for Jālahāsini, the reading of all my copies but one. This one, my Ajmere MS., has Chāruhāsini, which is much more likely to be correct. In early medieval times, च and ज were hardly distinguishable, and there was something of resemblance between ज and ल. It is, therefore, very likely that Jālahāsini originated in a graphical corruption of Chāruhāsini.

* The wives and children of Kṛishṇa are more particularly described in the next book. The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Vamśa† add some details of the descendants of Vasudeva's brothers. Thus, Devabhāga is said to be the father of Uddhava; Anādhṛishṭi,‡ of Devaśravas, a great scholar or Pandit. Devaśravas, another brother of Vasudeva, had Śatrughna and another son, called Ekalavya, who, for some cause being exposed when an infant, was found and brought up by the Nishādas, and was, thence, termed Nishādin. Vatsavat (Vatsabālaka§) and Gaṇḍūsha being childless, Vasudeva gave his son Kauśika,|| to be adopted by the former; and Kṛishṇa gave Chārudeshña and three others to the latter. Kanavaka¶ (Karundhaka) had two sons,—Tandrija and Tandripāla.†† Avāksṛinjima‡‡ (Śrīnjaya) had, also, two,—Vira and Aśwahanu. The gracious Śamika became as the son (although the brother) of Śyāma,§§ and, disdaining the joint rule which the princes of the house of Bhoja exercised, made himself paramount. Yudhishṭhira was his friend. The extravagant numbers of the Yādavas merely indicate that they were (as they undoubtedly were) a powerful and numerous tribe, of whom many traces exist in various parts of India.||||

* Professor Wilson had "Bāhu"; but his Bengal translation and all my MSS. give as above.

Who shall enumerate the whole of the mighty men of the Yādava race, who were tens of ten thousands and hundreds of hundred thousands in number?"§. Those powerful Daityas|| who were killed in the conflicts between them and the gods were born again, (upon earth,) as men, as tyrants and oppressors; and, in order to check their violence, the gods, also, descended to the world of mortals, and became members of the hundred and one branches of the family of Yadu.¶

Descendants of Turvasu.

PARÁŚARA.—I shall now summarily give you an account of the descendants of Turvasu.*

The son of Turvasu was Vahni;† his son was Gobhānu;‡ his son was Traisāmba;§ his son was Karandhama;¶ his son was Marutta. Marutta had no children; and he, therefore, adopted Dushyanta,‡ of the family of Pūru;§ by which the line of Turvasu

* Varga: Agni.

† Bhānumat: Bhāgavata, || which also inserts Bhaga before him.

‡ Tribhānu: Vāyu. ¶ Trisānu: Brahma.  Traisāli: Agni. Trisāri: Matsya.

* I find a variant, Turvaśu,—a temper between the Vaidik Turvaśa and the ordinary Paurāṇik form. For the personage in question, see p. 46 of this volume. Three of my MSS. yield Yadu, instead of Turvasu.

† My Arrah MS. gives Turvasu, Vahni, Bhārgava, Bhānu, Traisānu, Karandhama; my Ajmere MS., Turvasu, Vahni, Bharga, Bhānu, Chitra-bhānu, Karandhama.

These two copies, preserved in remotely separate districts of India, contain only the text of the Vishṇu-purāṇa; and the peculiarities which they offer suggest that the commentator—whose readings Professor Wilson unhesitatingly follows,—may have taken very considerable liberties with the lections of manuscripts current in his day. For other peculiarities of the kind here adverted to, see Vol. III., p. 334, note ††; and p. 335, note †: also, p. 112, note ||, supra, and p. 125, note ‡, infra.

merged into that of Pūru.¹ This took place in consequence of the malediction denounced (on his son) by Yayāti.²

¹ Besides Bharata,—who, as will be hereafter seen, was the son of Dushyanta,—the Vāyu, Matsya, Agni, and Brahma Purāṇas enumerate several descendants in this line, for the purpose, evidently, of introducing, as the posterity of Turvasu, the nations of the south of India. The series is Varuttha,* (Kurúthāma,† Brahma), Āndira‡ (Ākrira, Brahma); whose sons are Pāṇḍya, Karṇāṭa, Chola, Kerala.§ The Hari Vamśa|| adds Kola; and the Agni, very incorrectly, Gāndhāra.

² The curse alluded to is the failure of his line (Prajā-samuchchheda), denounced upon Turvasu, as the punishment of refusing to take his father's infirmities upon him (vide supra, p. 48). He was, also, sentenced to rule over savages and barbarians,—Mlechchhas, or people not Hindus. The Mahābhārata adds, that the Yavanas sprang from Turvasu. As sovereign of the south-east, ¶ he should be the ancestor of the people of Arracan, Ava, &c.; but the authorities cited in the preceding note refer the nations of the Peninsula to him, and, consequently, consider them as Mlechchhas. Manu also places the Dravidas (or Tamuls) amongst Mlechchhas; and these and similar passages indicate a period prior to the introduction of Hinduism into the south of India.

* In the Vāyu purāṇa I find Śarūtha(?).

† The Harivamśa, in my best MSS., agrees with the Brahma-purāṇa.

† Of Gándhára it is said, in the Vāyu, that it is a large country, named after him, and is famous for its breed of horses:

ख्यायते यस्य नाम्ना तु गान्धारविषयो महान् ।

गान्धारदेशज्ञाच्चपि तुरगा वाजिनां वराः ॥

The Matsya reads the beginning of the second line, आरुद्धदेशज्ञास्तु; showing that Áraṭṭa †† and Gándhára are much the same. See Vol. II., p. 174, note 2.

With the exception of one, and that very indifferent, there is a hiatus from this point to the closing stanza of Chapter XXII. As is stated in the proper place, I have the help of some extracts from a point in Chapter XXI.

‡ Lomapāda, in the Harivaṃśa.

§ Read: “his son was Chitraratha, also called Romapāda; his son was Daśaratha.” So, at least, it is natural to render; the original being ततश्चित्ररथो रोमपादसंज्ञो यस्य पुत्रो दशरथो जज्ञे । But the Translator has the authority of the commentator.

In the Bhāgavata-purāṇa, IX., XXIII., 6—10, it is Chitraratha that is called Romapāda; he has only one son, Chaturanga; and there is no mention of any Daśaratha but the father of Śāntā. With this compare the Harivaṃśa.

¶ In Lakṣmivallabha’s Kalpadrūmakalikā, mention is made of Dadhivāhana, Raja of Champā, who fought with Śatanika, Rājā of Kauśāmbī.

¹ The Bhāgavata differs, here, from all the other authorities, in omitting Champa, the founder of Champāpuri, ¶—a city of which traces still remain in the vicinity of Bhagulpur;—having inserted him, previously, amongst the descendants of Ikṣhvāku (see Vol. III., p. 289, note 1). Champā is everywhere recognized as the capital of Anga; and the translators of the Rāmāyaṇa were very wide of the truth, when they conjectured that it might be Angwa, or Ava.

² Brīhaddarbha: Brahma. The Bhāgavata omits the two successors of Champa, and makes Brīhadratha, Brīhatkarman, and Brīhadbhānu sons of Prithulāksha.

³ The Vāyu, Matsya, and Hari Vanśa make Vijaya the brother†† of Jayadratha. The Bhāgavata agrees with our text. ‡‡

* I find no Sanskrit for this. † Prithula is the reading of one MS.

‡ Two of my best MSS.—those from Arrah and Ajmere,—have Bhadraratha, father of Brīhadratha, father of Brīhatkarman; another has, instead of Haryanga, Harshaṇa, father of Brīhadratha, father of Brīhatkarman.

§ The Harivaṃśa, sl. 1702, has Bhadraratha, Brīhatkarman, Brīhaddarbha, Brīhanmanas.

son was Dhṛitavrata; his son was Satyakarman;* his son was Adhiratha,[†] who found Kārṇa† in a basket, on the banks of the Ganges, where he had been exposed by his mother, Prīthā.‡ The son of Kārṇa was Vṛishasena.[§] These were the Anga kings. You shall next hear who were the descendants of Pūru.

The mother of Vijaya, from her origin, was of the Sūta caste,—the genealogist and charioteer. Manu, X., 47. Her son was of the same caste; children taking the caste of the mother: consequently, the descendants of Vijaya, kings of Anga, were Sūtas. And this explains the contemptuous application of the term Sūta to Kārṇa, the half-brother of the Pāṇḍus; for he, as will presently be mentioned, was adopted into the Anga family, and succeeded to the crown.

¹ Some variety prevails in the series of princes here; but this arises from not distinguishing the collateral lines,—the descendants of Jayadratha from those of Vijaya. The Vāyu and Matsya give the latter as in our text; but they agree, also, with the Agni and Brahma,¶ in the successors of Jayadratha, as Dīdhāratha (or Brīhadratha) and Janamejaya (or Viśwajit). **

The infant was exposed on the banks of the Jumna, where he was found, and brought up, as his own, by Adhiratha—the Sūta, or charioteer, of king Śūra,—and his wife Rādhā; whence Kārṇa is called, also, a Sūta, and Rādheya, or son of Rādhā." So runs one legend, in the words of Professor Wilson, in Professor Johnson's Selections from the Mahābhārata, p. 16, note 3.

the son of Tāmsu; and he had four sons, of whom

Purāṇa. The Hari Vanśa* omits him; making sad blundering work of the whole passage. Thus, the construction is such as to intimate that Tāmsu (or Tāmsurodha) had a wife named Ilā,† the daughter of Medhātithi,—that is, his brother's great-grand-daughter:

मेधातिथिः सुतसख यस्मात्काखायना द्विजाः ।

इला नाम तं यस्यासीत्कन्या वै जनमेजय ।

ब्रह्मवादिन्याधस्त्री च तंसुसामभ्यगच्छत ॥

But this, as the commentator observes, is contrary to common sense (अर्थकत्वादयुक्तं); and he would read it, therefore, इली नाम तं यस्यासीत्कन्या, 'the daughter of him who was named Ilini;' a Raja so called. But, in the Vāyu and Matsya, we have Ilinā, the daughter of Yama, married to Tāmsu, and mother of Malina or Anila; more correctly, perhaps, Ailina:

इलिना तु यमस्यासीत्कन्या साजनयत्सुतम् ।

वसो (तंसो) सुदयितं पुत्रं मलिनं ब्रह्मवादिनम् ॥

उपदानवी ततो लेभे चतुरस्त्विनात्मजात् ।

सुयन्तमिति ॥ ‡

The blunder of the Hari Vanśa, therefore, arises from the compiler's reading Yasya, 'of whom,' instead of Yamasya, 'of Yama.' It is not an error of transcription; for the metre requires Yasya: and the remark of the commentator proves the correctness of the reading. The name occurs Ilinā (इलिना), the son of Tāmsu, in the Mahābhārata, § agreeably to the Anuvāṁśa-śloka which is there quoted. 'Saraswati bore Tāmsu to Matinára; and Tāmsu begot a son, Ilinā, by Kālingi:'

[†] The Vāyu, Matsya, and Bhāgavata agree with our text, in making these the grandsons of Tāṁsu; even the Brahma Purāṇa concurs: but the Hari Vaiṣṇaṣ makes them his sons; having, apparently, transformed Tāṁsu sūta (तंसो सुतः), 'the son of Tāṁsu,' into a synonym of Tāṁsu, or Tāṁsurodha; as in these parallel passages:

The commentator explains Dharmanetra (धर्मनेत्र) to be 'institutor of laws' (धर्मप्रवर्तकः). We have Upadānavī before,—as the daughter of Vṛishaparvan, the Daitya,—married to Hiraṇyāksha. Hamilton (Buchanan)[¶] calls her the wife of Sughora. The four sons are named, in other authorities, with some variations: Dushyanta, Sushyanta (or Rishyanta, or Sumanta), Pravira, and Anagha (or Naya). The Mahābhārata^{††} enumerates five,—Dushyanta, Śūra, Bhīma, Pravaṣu, and Vasu,—but makes them the sons of Īlīna, and grandsons of Tāṁsu.

his name is chanted by the gods: "The mother is only the receptacle; it is the father by whom a son is begotten. Cherish thy son, Dushyanta; treat not Śakuntalā with disrespect. Sons, who are born from the paternal loins, rescue their progenitors from the infernal regions. Thou art the parent of this boy: Śakuntalā has spoken truth."* From the expression 'cherish' (bharaswa) the prince was called Bharata.[†]

[†] These two ślokas are taken from the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parvan, p. 112,[‡] and are part of the testimony borne, by a heavenly messenger, to the birth of Bharata. They are repeated in the same book, in the account of the family of Pāru, p. 139.§ They occur, with a slight variation of the order, in other Purāṇas, as the Vāyu &c.,|| and show the greater antiquity of the story of Śakuntalā, although they do not narrate it. The meaning of the name Bharata is differently explained in the Śakuntalā.¶ He is said

त्वं चास्य धाता गर्भस्य सत्यमाह शकुन्तला ॥

In the Bhāgavata-purāṇa, IX., XX., 21, 22, we find these identical words, with the change—mending the metre,—of पुत्र उन्नयति into पुत्रो नयति. Burnouf translates the passage as follows:

"La mère est le réceptacle; c'est au père qui l'a engendré qu'appartient le fils: protège ton fils, ô Duchyanta; ne méprise pas Śakuntalā.

"Un fils qui donne à son père de la postérité, ô roi, le fait remonter de la demeure de Yama; tu es le père de cet enfant: Śakuntalā a dit la vérité."

|| Add the Harivaiṣṇa, śl. 1724—1726.

¶ The two explanations that follow occur near the end of Act VII, of the Śakuntalā.

Bharata had, by different* wives, nine sons; but they were put to death by their own mothers, because Bharata remarked, that they bore no resemblance to him, and the women were afraid that he would, therefore, desert them. The birth of his sons being thus unavailing, Bharata sacrificed to the Maruts; and they gave him Bharadvāja, the son of Brīhaspati, by Mamatā, the wife of Utathya,†—expelled by the kick of Dīrghatamas, (his half-brother, before his time). This verse explains the purport of his appellation: “Silly woman,” said Brīhaspati, ‘cherish this child of two fathers’ (bhara dwā-jam:). ‘No, Brīhaspati,’ replied Mamatā: ‘do you take care of him.’ So saying, they both abandoned him; but, from their expressions, the boy was called Bharadvāja.”§ He was, also, termed Vitatha, in allusion to the unprofitable (vitatha) birth to be so called from ‘supporting’ the world: he is, also, there named Sarvadamana, ‘the conqueror of all.’

* My Ajmere and Arrah MSS. read ‘three’. Herewith the Bhāgavata-purāṇa agrees, and, further, calls them natives of Vidarbha.

† See Vol. III., p. 16, note §.

‡ The rational etymology of Bharadvāja is bharat + vāja.

§ मूढे भर द्वाजमिमं भर द्वाजं बृहस्पते ।

याती यदुक्ता पितरौ भरद्वाजस्तस्वयम् ॥

This stanza, which occurs in the Bhāgavata-purāṇa, IX., XX., 38, also, is thus rendered by Burnouf:

“Femme ignorante, nourris ce fils de deux pères, [disait Brīhaspati]. Nourris-le toi-même, ô Brīhaspati, [répondit Mamatā]. Et parce que le père et la mère, après avoir ainsi parlé, s’en allèrent, [laissant l’enfant,] il fut nommé Bharadvāja.”

of the sons of Bharata. The son of Vitatha was Bharadvāja.

The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Vamśa (the latter, especially,) appear to have modified this legend, with the view, perhaps, of reconciling those circumstances which are related of Bharadvāja, as a sage, with his history as a king. Whilst, therefore, they state that Bharadvāja was brought, by the winds, to Bharata, they state that he was so brought to perform a sacrifice, by which a son was born, whom Bharadvāja also inaugurated:

धर्मसंक्रमणं चापि महर्षिर्भरताय वै ।

अयाजयद्भरद्वाजो महर्षिः क्रतुभिर्हि तम् ॥

पूर्वं तु वितथे तस्य छते पुत्रजन्मनि ।

ततोऽथ वितथो नाम भरद्वाजात्सुतोऽभवत् ॥ *

In the Vāyu, Matsya, and Agni, however, the story is much more consistently narrated; and Bharadvāja, being abandoned by his natural parent, is brought by the winds, as a child, not as a sage; and, being adopted by Bharata, is one and the same with Vitatha, as our text relates. Thus, in the Vāyu, the Maruts bring to Bharata, already sacrificing for progeny, (भरद्वाजं ततः पुत्रं बार्हस्पत्यं) “Bharadvāja, the son of Brīhaspati;” and Bharata, receiving him, says: “This Bharadvāja shall be Vitatha:”

ततः स वितथो नाम भरद्वाजस्तदास्म्यहम् ।

The Matsya, also, says, the Maruts, in compassion, took the child, and, being pleased with Bharata’s worship, gave it to him, and he was named Vitatha:

अगृह्णन् भरद्वाजं मरुतः हृपयान्विताः ।

* * * * *

तेन ते मरुतस्तस्य मरुतोमेन तुष्टुवुः ॥

उपनिन्युर्भरद्वाजं पुत्रार्थं भरताय वै ।

* * * * *

पूर्वं तु वितथे तस्मिन्छते वै पुत्रजन्मनि ।

ततस्तु वितथो नाम भरद्वाजो नृपो भवान् ॥

And the Agni tells the whole story in one verse:

ततो महर्षिरानीय पुत्रः स तु बृहस्पतेः ।

संक्रामितो भरद्वाजः क्रतुभिर्वितथोऽभवत् ।

“Then, the son of Brīhaspati being taken by the winds, Bharadvāja dwāja was transferred with sacrifice, and was Vitatha." The account given in the Bhāgavata is to the same purpose. The commentator on the text also makes the matter clear enough: भरद्वाजस्यैव भरतपुत्रत्वदशयां वितर्धति नाम । "The name of Bharadwāja, in the condition of son of Bharata, was Vitatha." It is clear that a new-born infant could not be the officiating priest at a sacrifice for his own adoption, whatever the compiler of the Hari Vanśa may please to assert. From Bharadwāja, a Brahman by birth, and king by adoption, descended Brahmans and Kshatriyas, the children of two fathers:

तस्मादेव भरद्वाजाद्ब्राह्मणाः क्षत्रिया भुवि ।

ध्यामुष्यायणनामानः स्मृता द्विपितरसु वै ॥ §

The Mahābhārata, in the Ādi Parvan, tells the story very simply. In one place,—p. 136, v. 3710,—it says, that Bharata, on the birth of his children proving vain, obtained, from Bharadwāja, by great sacrifices, a son, Bhumanyu; and, in another passage, it makes Bhumanyu the son of Bharata by Sunandā, daughter of Sarvasena, king of Kāśi: || p. 139, v. 3785. The two are not incompatible.

Hastin, who founded the city of Hastināpura.* The hotra, the son of Brīhatkshattra, grandson of Vitatha, and parent of Hastin. In the two blundering compilations mentioned, we have, first (Hari Vamśa, ch. 20), a Suhotra, son of Brīhatkshattra, of the race of Pūru: his descent is not given; but, from the names which follow Suhotra, the dynasty is that of our present text: secondly (Hari Vamśa, ch. 27), Suhotra, son of Kāncana, of the line of Amāvasu, and father of Jahnu, &c.: thirdly (Hari Vamśa, ch. 29), Suhotra, the son of Kshattravridha, and progenitor of the Kāśi kings: fourthly (Hari Vamśa, ch. 32), we have the first and third of these personages confounded: Suhotra is made the son of Vitatha, and progenitor of the Kāśi kings, the dynasty of whom is repeated; thus connecting them with the line of Pūru, instead of Āyus, in opposition to all authority. Again, we have a notable piece of confusion; and Suhotra, the son of Vitatha, is made the father of Brīhat, the father of the three princes who, in our text, and in the Hari Vamśa, ch. 20, are the sons of Hastin; and amongst whom Ajamidha is made the father of Jahnu, and ancestor of the Kausikas, instead of being, as in ch. 27, and as everywhere else, of the family of Amāvasu. The source of all this confusion is obvious. The compilers extracted all the authentic traditions accurately enough; but, puzzled by the identity of name, they have, also, mixed the different accounts together, and caused very absurd and needless perplexity. It is quite clear, also, that the Hari Vamśa does not deserve the pains taken, and taken fruitlessly, by Mr. Hamilton and M. Langlois, to reduce it to consistency. It is of no weight whatever, as an authority for the dynasties of kings,† although it furnishes some particular details, which it has picked up, possibly, from authentic sources not now available.

Matsya. Bhārmya:‖ Bhāgavata. But there is some indistinctness as to his descent. The Matsya and Hari Vamśa¶ give the son of Mudgala only his patronymic, Maudgalya. According to the first, his son was Indrasena, and his son, Bandhyaśwa. The second makes Badhryaśwa the son of Maudgalya, by Indrasenā. The Bhāgavata†† makes Bhārmya the patronymic of Mudgala, the son of Bharmyaśwa, and who is the father of Divodāsa‡‡ and Ahalyā:

† From whom the Maitreya Brahmans were descended: Hari Vamśa.¶ In the Matsya and Agni, the son of Mitrāyu is called Maitreya (see Vol. I., p. 6). The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Vamśa here close the lineage of Divodāsa: the Agni adds but one name, Somāpi. They then proceed with the descendants of Śrinujaya, one of the Panchālas,—or, Panchadhanus, Somadatta, Sahadeva,—and then, as in our text. The Vāyu and Bhāgavata agree with the latter, in making the line continuous from Divodāsa. According to the Matsya and Brahma Purāṇas,†† the race of Ajamidha became extinct in the person of Sahadeva; but Ajamidha himself was reborn, as Somaka, in order to continue his lineage, which was, thence, called the Somaka family. It was in the reign of Drupada that the possessions of the Panchālas were divided; Droṇa, assisted by the Pāṇḍavas, conquering the country, and ceding the southern portion again to Drupada, as related in the Mahābhārata. The two princes last named in the list figure in the Great War.

¹ This, although it occurs in other authorities, appears to be an error; for these are the sons of a subsequent Parikshit (see the next chapter, p. 162). The Matsya omits Parikshit here; and the Bhāgavata † states that he had no children. In most of the Purāṇas, however, the line of Parikshit is continued; but there is very great confusion in the lineage. According to the Vāyu, ‡ Janamejaya was the son of Parikshit, whose son was Śrutasena, whose son was Bhīmasena. Janamejaya had, also, a son named Suratha; but Suratha was, also, the name of the son of Jahnu, from whom the line continues as in the text. The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Vaiṣṇava also make Suratha the son both of Janamejaya and of Jahnu; and they observe, that there are two Rikshas, two Parikshits, three Bhīmasenas, and two Janamejayas, in the Lunar race. § Some of the confusion probably originates with the Mahābhārata, which, as before noticed, gives two lists from Pūru to Śāntanu, differing from one another, and from all the lists of the Purāṇas. In the first of these lists, such collateral names have been retained as appear to have furnished our text and that of other Purāṇas with distinct persons; thus making the members of one fraternity so many descents. Of the two lists, however, the second is, probably, to be regarded as the more recent, if not more correct; for Vaiṣampāyana repeats it at Janamejaya's request, because the latter is not satisfied with the summary account which the former had first communicated to him. In the kingdom over which Śántanu ruled there was no rain for twelve years. Apprehensive that the country would become a desert, the king assembled the Brahmans, and asked them why no rain fell, and what fault he had committed. They told him, that he was, as it were, a younger brother married before an elder:‡ for he was in the enjoyment of the earth, which was the right of his elder brother, Devápi.§

"He who, while his elder brother is unwedded, marries a wife with the nuptial fires, is to be known as a parivettī; and his elder brother, as a parivitti. The parivitti, the parivettī, the female by whom the offence is committed, he who gives her away, and, fifthly, the officiating priest, all go to hell."

"What, then, am I to do?" said the Raja. To which they replied: "Until the gods shall be displeased with Devápi, by his declining from the path of righteousness,* the kingdom is his; and to him, therefore, you should resign it." When the minister of the king, Āsmasárin,† heard this, he collected a number of ascetics who taught doctrines opposed to those of the Vedas, and sent them into the forest, where, meeting with Devápi, they perverted the understanding of the simple-minded prince, and led him to adopt heretical notions. In the meantime, Śántanu, being much distressed to think that he had been guilty of the offence intimated by the Brahmans, sent them, before him, into the woods, and then proceeded thither, himself, to restore the kingdom to his elder brother. When the Brahmans arrived at the hermitage of Devápi, they informed him, that, according to the doctrines of the Vedas, succession to a kingdom was the right of the elder brother. But he entered into discussion with them, and in various ways advanced arguments which had the defect of being contrary to the precepts of the Vedas. When the Brahmans heard this, they turned to Śántanu, and said: "Come hither, Raja. You need give yourself no further trouble in this matter: the dearth is at an end. This man is fallen from his state; for he has uttered words of disrespect to the authority of the eternal, uncreated Veda; and, when the elder brother is degraded, there is no sin in the prior espou-

* Parjanya, in the Sanskrit.

† The subjoined close translation of this legend concerning Śāntanu is taken from Dr. Muir's Original Sanskrit Texts, Part I., pp. 274—276 (2nd ed.):

"Devāpi, while yet a boy, retired to the forest; and Śāntanu became king. Regarding him this verse is current in the world: 'Every decrepit man whom he touches with his hands becomes young. He is called Śāntanu from that work whereby he obtains supreme tranquillity (śānti). The god did not rain on the country of this Śāntanu for twelve years. Beholding, then, the ruin of his entire realm, the king inquired of the Brāhmins: 'Why does not the god rain on this country? What is my offence?' The Brāhmins replied: 'This earth, which is the right of thy elder brother, is now enjoyed by thee; thou art a parivettī (one married before his elder brother).' Receiving this reply, he again asked them: 'What must I do?' They then answered: 'So long as Devāpi does not succumb to declension from orthodoxy, and other offences, the royal authority is his, by right; to him, therefore, let it be given, without further question.' When they had so said, the king's principal minister, Aśmasarin, employed certain ascetics propounding doctrines contrary to the declarations of the Vedas to proceed into the forest, by whom the understanding of the very simple-minded prince (Devāpi) was let to adopt a system at variance with those sacred books. King Śāntanu, being distressed for his offence, in consequence of what the Brāhmins had said to him, went, preceded by those Brāhmins, to the forest, in order to deliver over the kingdom to his elder brother. Arriving at the hermitage, they came to prince Devāpi. The Brāhmins addressed to him statements founded on the declarations of the Veda, to the effect that the royal authority should be exercised by the elder brother. He, on his part, expressed to them many things that were vitiated by reasonings contrary to the tenour of the Veda. The Brāhmins then said to Śāntanu: 'Come hither, O king. There is no occasion for any excessive hesitation in this affair. The offence which led to the drought is

The son of Vāhlika* was Somadatta, who had three sons, Bhūri, Bhūrisravas, and Śāla.'

The son of Śāntanu was the illustrious and learned Bhīshma, who was born to him by the holy river-goddess,† Gangā;‡ and he had, by his wife, Satyavatī,§ two sons, Chitrāngada and Vichitravīrya. Chitrāngada, whilst yet a youth, was killed in a conflict with a Ganreligious life.¶ The story of his heresy is narrated, much as in the text, in the Bhāgavata, Vāyu, &c. The Matsya adds, that he was, also, leprous; on which account his subjects contemned him. He was, probably, set aside in favour of his younger brother, either on that account, or on that of his heresy; such a disposition being conformable to Hindu law. According to the Bhāgavata and Matsya, he is still alive, at a place called Kalāpagrāma,¶ where, in the Kṛita age of the next Mahāyuga, he will be the restorer of the Kshattriya race.

* The Matsya says that Vāhlika had a hundred sons, or lords of the Vāhlikas.

now removed. Your brother has fallen by uttering a contradiction of the words of the Veda, which have been revered from time without beginning; and, when the elder brother has fallen, the younger is no longer chargeable with the offence of parivettīya (i. e., of marrying before his elder brother).' When he had been so addressed, Śāntanu returned to his capital, and exercised the royal authority. And, although his eldest brother, Devāpi, continued to be degraded by having uttered words opposed to the doctrines of the Veda, the god Parjanya rained, in order to produce a harvest of all sorts of grain."

By command of Satyawatī, my son Kṛishṇa-dwaipāyana, ever obedient to his mother's wishes, begot, upon the widows of his brother,§ the princes Dhṛitarāshtra and Pāṇdu, and, upon a female servant, Vidura. Before her marriage to Śāntanu, Satyawatī had a son, Kṛishṇa-dwaipāyana,†† or Vyāsa, by Parāśara. He was, therefore, the half-brother of Vichitravīrya, and legally qualified to raise up offspring to him by his widow. This law is abrogated in the present age. The whole story of the sons of Śāntanu is told at length in the Mahābhārata.‡‡

CHAPTER XXI.

Future kings. Descendants of Parikshit, ending with Kshemaka.

I WILL now enumerate the kings who will reign in future periods.¹ The present monarch, Parikshit,^{2*} will have four sons, Janamejaya, Śrutasena, Ugrasena, and Bhīmasena.^{3†} The son of Janamejaya; will be Śatānika,⁴ who will study the Vedas under Yājñavalkya, and military science with Kṛipā; but, becoming dissatisfied with sensual enjoyments, he will ¹ The style now adopted is that of prophecy; as Vyāsa could not, consistently, have recorded the events which were posterior to his time.

² Also read Parikshita, Pariksha, and Parikshi.

³ Vide supra, p. 152. The Vāyu and Matsya relate, rather obscurely, a dispute between Janamejaya and Vaiśampāyana, in consequence of the former's patronage of the Brahmans of the Vājasaneyi branch of the Yajurveda, in opposition to the latter, who was the author of the black, or original, Yajus (see Vol. III., p. 52). Janamejaya twice performed the Aśwamedha, according to the Vājasaneyi ritual, and established the Trisarvī, §—or use of certain texts, by Āsmaka and others,—by the Brahmans of Anga and by those of the middle country. He perished, however, in consequence; being cursed by Vaiśampāyana. Before their disagreement, Vaiśampāyana related the Mahābhārata to Janamejaya. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parvan.

The Brahma Purāṇa has a totally different series, or: Parikshit, Sūryapīḍa, Chaudrāpīḍa, Janamejaya, Satyakarṇa, Śwetakarṇa, Sukumāra, and Ajaśyāma.

‡ Corrected from “Nichakra”, which I find nowhere but in the Bengal translation. One MS. gives Nichakshus: In the Vāyu-purāṇa I find Nībandhu, (or Nirvaktra?), and then, Ushūa(?), Chitraratha, Śuchidratha, Dhṛitimat, Susheṇa. The Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa has Nībandhu, Chitraratha, Śuchidratha, Dhṛitimat, Susheṇa.

In a Sanskrit collection of Paurāṇik extracts, prepared for Colonel Wilford, to which I have access, there is part of a chapter from the Vāyu-purāṇa, and a similar draft from the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa,—beginning with mention of Adhisimākṛishṇa,—covering nearly all the rest of this Book. The present and the two ensuing Chapters of the Vishṇu-purāṇa likewise occur there.

For the present I am reduced to a single MS. of the Vāyu-purāṇa: vide supra, p. 124, note †.

§ This means: “Another Śatānika will be his son”. The word अपरः, ‘another’, is here used with allusion to Śatānika, son of Nakula, spoken of in p. 159, supra. Two of my MSS. have जनमेजयस्य तस्य; and one omits अपरः. The identical words अपरः शतानीकः are rendered, near the end of this chapter, “another Śatānika”.

Read Kathāsarit-sāgara. See the opening of its second Lambaka.

¶ The succession—Arjuna being called the founder of the family,—runs thus: Abhimanyu, Parikshit, Janamejaya, Śatānika, Sahasrānika, Udayana.

‡ Corrected from "Supratitha", which occurs in none of my MSS., and looks very like an inadvertence.

In the Hindu-made English translation, Supratika is so written, that, unless scrutinized a little closely, it might be mistaken for Supratitha.

I may here refer, as there is frequent occasion for doing in the course of my annotations, to the remark made in Vol. III., p. 335, note §§.

Lāngala: Bhāgavata. This and the two preceding names are of considerable chronological interest; for Śākya is the name of the author, or reviver, of Buddhism, whose birth† appears to have occurred in the seventh, and death in the sixth, century before Christ (B. C. 621—543). There can be no doubt of the individual here intended, although he is out of his place; for he was the son—not the father—of Śuddhodana, and the father of Rāhula; as he is termed, in the Amara‡ and Haima Kośas, § Śaundhodani or Śuddhodanasuta, ‘the son of Śuddhodana,’ and Rāhulasū, ‘the parent of Rāhula.’ So, also, in the Mahāvanso, Siddhārtha or Śākya is the son of Śuddhodano, ¶ and father of Rāhulo. Turnour’s translation, p. 9. Whether they are rightly included amongst the princes of the race of Ikshwāku is more questionable; for Śuddhodana is, usually, described as a petty prince, whose capital was not Ayodhyā, but Kapila or Kapilavastu. At the same time, it appears that the provinces of the Doab had passed into the possession of princes of the Lunar line; and the children of the Sun may have been reduced to the country north of the Ganges, or the modern Goruckpoor, in which Kapila was situated. The Buddhists do, usually, consider their teacher Śākya to be descended from Ikshwāku. The chronology is less easily adjusted; but it is not altogether incompatible. According to the lists of the text, Śākya, as the twenty-second of the line of Ikshwāku, is contemporary with Ripunjaya, the oldest reads:

शुद्धोदण्डस्य भविता सिद्धार्थः पुष्कलः सुतः ।

The same number of princes does not necessarily imply equal duration of dynasty; and Ikshwāku’s descendants may have outlasted those of Jarāsandha; or, as is more likely,—for the dynasty was obscure, and is, evidently, imperfectly preserved,—several descents may have been omitted, the insertion of which would reconcile the Paurāṇik lists with those of the Buddhists, and bring Śākya down to the age of Bimbisāra. It is evident, from what occurs in other authorities, that the Aikshwāka‡ princes are regarded as contemporaries even of the Śaśunāga dynasty: vide infra, p. 182, note 4.

In the Mahāvira Charitra, a work written by the celebrated Hemachandra, in the twelfth century, we have a Prasenajit, king of Magadha, residing at Rajagriha, succeeded by Śreṇika,†† and he, by Kūlika. The Bauddhas have a Prasenajit contemporary with Śākya,‡‡ son of Mahāpadma, king of Magadha. There is some confusion of persons, either in the Paurāṇik genealogies, or in the Buddhist and Jaina traditions; but they agree in bringing the same names together about the same period.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Future kings of Magadha, descendants of Bṛihadratha.

I WILL now relate to you the descendants of Bṛihadratha, who will be (the kings) of Magadha. There have been several powerful princes of this dynasty, of whom the most celebrated was Jarásandha.* His son was Sahadeva; his son is Somápi;† his son will be Śrutavat;‡ his son will be Ayutáyus;§ his son ‡ Śrutaśravas, at p. 151, supra. § In one copy, Śrutáyus.

|| And so reads the Brahmānda-purāna.

¶ My manuscripts of the Matsya-purāna are so carelessly executed, that I have seldom thought it worth while to consult them. As, however, we are now approaching the historical period, I use them, though to little satisfactory purpose, as will be manifest. These manuscripts are five in number; but only four of them contain the section relating to future kings and peoples. Of these four, one, as compared with the others, is noticeably meagre, and omits at least a third of the kings named in the present chapter. At the same time, it exhibits a large number of variants. But these peculiarities seem to be merely a result of carelessness.

 I find 58 years; the original being:

पञ्चाशत्तं तथाष्टौ च समा राज्यमकारयत् ।

The Brahmānda-purāna, too, has 58 years.

†† So read the Bhāgavata-purāna and the Brahmānda-purāna, too; and the latter assigns him 67 years.

¶ Sudhanwan, and 32 years: Brahmānda-purāna.

 But I find the name, in four MSS. out of five, to be Sunetra. The Brahmānda-purāna has the same name and the same number of years.

†† Two copies have Achala.

‡‡ I find 83 in four MSS.: the fifth, which has 80, is by far the most incorrect, generally, of all.

§§ My oldest MS. has Sunetra, 40 years; then, Sarvajit, 80 years: a second has Sunetra, 40 years; then, Satyajit, 80 years: the third, and worst of all, has only, instead of the two, Sarvajit, 80 years.

||| The Brahmānda-purāna gives Satyajit a reign of only 30 years.

¶¶ My two best MSS. have 25; the third and fourth, 35; and the worst of all, 53.

 Viśwajit is named in all my three copies. The oldest of them gives him 35 years; the others, 53 and 25 years, respectively.

are the Bārhadhrathas, who will reign for a thousand years.¹

¹ Our list and that of the Vāyu* specifies twenty-one kings† after Sahadeva: the Bhāgavata specifies twenty,‡ and, in another passage,§ states that to be the number. My copy of the Matsya names but nineteen; and the Radcliffe, but twelve: but both agree in making the total thirty-two. They all concur with the text, also, in stating, that 1000 years had elapsed from the Great War, at the death of the last Bārhadhratha prince;¶ and this is more worthy of credit than the details, which are, obviously, imperfect.

The Vāyu-purāna says that thirty-two kings will spring from Bṛī-atha, and that their kingdom will endure for a thousand years:

द्वाविंशच्च नृपा ह्येते भवितारो बृहद्रथात् ।

पूर्णं वर्षसहस्रं वै तेषां राज्यं भविष्यति ॥

It names twenty-three.

It names twenty-one.

Not the text, but Śrīdhara, where commenting on XII., I., 1.

Those copies are defective, doubtless. See notes §§ and  in the ending page.

The words of the Matsya-purāna, as given in two of my MSS., are:

द्वाविंशत् नृपा ह्येते भवितारो बृहद्रथाः ।

पूर्णं वर्षसहस्रं तु तेषां राज्यं भविष्यति ॥

e find, in the Brahmānda-purāna,—unless the reading is corrupt,—twenty-two kings spoken of:

† The Vāyu-purāṇa, the Matsya-purāṇa, and the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa premise the extinction of the Brīhadrathas and Viśahotras, and do not here name the last of the Brīhadrathas. But vide supra, p. 176, notes 6 and ‡‡.

‡ Vide supra, p. 176, note §. A single MS. has Sunaka.

§ Corrected from "Pradyota", which I find in only one MS. Pradyota is the reading of the Vāyu-purāṇa and of the Bhāgavata-purāṇa. The Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa has Sudyota, and 23 years.

Mention is found of a Pradyota who had a son Jaghanjaya. See my Preface to the Vāsavadattā, p. 53. ¶ Gopālaka, in one copy.

 Sunika is the reading in all my four copies of the Vāyu-purāṇa, and in Colonel Wilford's manuscript extracts. The Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa has the same name.

†† The Matsya-purāṇa, in my copies, gives to Pulika's son the name of Bālaka. Nowhere does it speak of Pradyota or of the Pradyotas.

‡‡ Add the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa. §§ The only reading I find is Pālaka.

² Ajaka. 21 years, Vāyu; ¶ Sūryaka, 21, Matsya; Rājaka.  Bhāgavata.

³ 20 years, Vāyu †† and Matsya. ‡‡

⁴ This number is also specified by the Vāyu and Bhāgavata; §§ and the several years of the reigns of the former agree with the total. The particulars of the Matsya compose 145 years; but there is, no doubt, some mistake in them.

* Almost as ordinary a reading, in my MSS., is Viśākhārūpa; and two of them have Viśākhayūpa.

† The original is पञ्च प्रद्योताः, "the five Pradyotas;" the reading recognized by the commentator. One MS. yields, however, "the five Pradyotanas." The Bhāgavata-purāṇa has पञ्च प्रद्योतनाः, the gloss on which is प्रद्योतनाः । प्रद्योतसंज्ञाः । The Vāyu-purāṇa has Pradyotas.

‡ "Twenty-eight", according to four copies.

§ Three of my MSS., including the two oldest and best, have Viśākhadhūpa; another, Viśākhayūpa; the remaining one, Viśākhasūpa.

¶ Two MSS. have Viśākhārūpa; one, Viśākhayūpa, the reading of the Bhāgavata-purāṇa.

¶ The Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa has Viśākhayūpa, and 100 years.

¶ One MS. of the Vāyu-purāṇa—very inferior,—has 31 years. In the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa, Ajaka is assigned 21 years.

 Corrected from "Rājaka".

†† The name that I find everywhere in the Vāyu-purāṇa is Vartivardhana.

‡‡ 30 years are assigned to Nandivardhana in all my copies of the Matsya-purāṇa. The Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa gives him 20 years.

§§ XII., I., 4.

By note ††, above, we are enabled to alter this number to one nearer correctness,—namely, 155. There is, however, still a mistake of 3 in excess,—owing, doubtless, to corruptness of the MSS.; for all mine agree in stating the total to be 152.

The next prince will be Śiśunāga;¹ his son will be Kākavarṇa;^{2*} his son will be Kshemadharman;³ his son will be Kshattraujas;⁴ his son will be Vidmisāra;^{5†}

‡ हत्वा तेषां यशः कृत्स्नं शिशुनाको भविष्यति ।

Two copies have Giripraja; one, Girivrata. Equally gross mistakes, it is to be presumed, disfigure all my MSS. of the Vāyu-purāṇa.

§ The first verse of a stanza there given is the same as in the preceding note. The second verse runs:

वाराणस्यां सुतं स्थाप्य अथास्यति गिरिव्रजम् ।

Śakavarṇa or Śākavarṇa is the name in all my copies of the Vāyu-purāṇa.

¶ Kshemadharman, in three MSS. of the Vāyu-purāṇa, those of best note; while the rest have Kshemadharman.

The Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa has Kshemadharman, and 20 years.

There is a break in Colonel Wilford's manuscript extract from the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa, where there should be mention of the two kings preceding Kshemadharman.

 Therewith agrees the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa.

†† Three of my copies have Kshemavit, 24 years; the other, Kshemārchis, 40 years.

¹ 25 years, Vāyu; † 27, Matsya; ‡ but the latter inserts a Kaṇvāyana, § 9 years, and Bhūmimitra (or Bhūmiputra), 14 years, before him. In this and the preceding name we have appellations of considerable celebrity in the traditions of the Bauddhas. Vidmisāra—read, also, Vindhusāra, Vilwisāra, &c.,—is, most probably, their Bimbasāra, ¶ who was born at the same time with Śākya, and was reigning at Rājagṛiha, when he began his religious career. The Mahāwamso says that Siddhatto and Bimbisāro were attached friends, as their fathers had been before them. P. 10. Śākya is said to have died in the reign of Ajātaśatru, the son of Bimbasāra, in the eighth year of his reign. The Vāyu transposes these names; and the Matsya still more alters the order of Ajātaśatru; but the Bhāgavata concurs with our text. The Buddhist authority differs from the Purāṇas, materially, as to the duration of the reigns; giving to Bimbisāro, 52 years, and to Ajātaśattu, 32. The latter, according to the same, murdered his father. Mahāwamso, p. 10. We may, therefore, with some confidence, claim for these princes a date of about six centuries B. C. They are considered contemporary with Śuddhodana, &c., in the list of the Aikshwākas  (vide supra, p. 169, note 7).

* An Ajātaśatru, king of the Kāśis, is commemorated in the Kaushitaki-brāhmaṇa Upanishad, IV., I., and elsewhere.

† In all my MSS. of the Vāyu-purāṇa, the order is: Ajātaśatru, Kshattraujas, Bimbisāra.

‡ The Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa, at least in my single MS., gives 35 years to Ajātaśatru.

§ The name here intended is very doubtful in all my three MSS. of the Matsya-purāṇa.

¶ This—and so the Bindusena mentioned in the Translator's last note,—looks like a corruption of Bindusāra; and Bindusāra was a remote descendant of Bimbisāra. Vide infra, p. 186, note *.

¶ Vidmisāra, &c. are, all, misspellings of Bimbisāra. Vide infra, p. 186, note *.

On the correct form of the name of the king intended, see Burnouf's Introduction à l'Histoire du Bouddhisme Indien, Vol. I., p. 145, note 1.

● § Even taking account of the reigns mentioned near the beginning of note 1 in p. 181, supra, I make out but 354.

The nominal and numerical details given below are there expressed as follows:

¶ The following particulars answer to those contained in the last note:

There are similar verses in the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa; but they are copied, in Colonel Wilford's volume of Paurāṇik extracts,—where alone I have access to them,—with such deplorable carelessness, and with so many omissions, that I can do no more than refer to them. They seem to resemble the corresponding stanzas in the Matsya-purāṇa rather more closely than those in the Vāyu-purāṇa.

(called) Mahāpadma; for he will be exceedingly avaricious.¹ Like another Paraśurāma,* he will be the annihilator of the Kshatriya race; for, after him, the

They also observe, that, contemporary with the dynasties already specified,—the Pauravas, the Bārhadrathas, and Māgadhas,—there were other races of royal descent, as: Aikshvāka princes, 24:† Panchālas, 25. Vāyu; 27. Matsya: Kālakas‡, or Kāsakas, or Kāśeyas, § 24: Hāhāyas, 24. Vāyu; 28. Matsya: Kālingas, 32. Vāyu; 40. Matsya: Śakas, Vāyu; 42. ¹ The Bhāgavata calls him Mahāpadmapati, 'the lord of Mahāpadma;' which the commentator interprets 'sovereign of an infinite host' or 'of immense wealth:‡‡ Mahāpadma signifying 100,000 millions. The Vāyu and Matsya, §§ however, consider Mahāpadma as another name of Nanda.

* Vide supra, p. 23.

† It is to be understood, in this and similar cases, that the two Purāṇas agree.

‡ This is the name that I find in the Vāyu-purāṇa.

§ Two of my MSS. of the Matsya-purāṇa have this reading; another, Kāśheyas; another, Kāleyas.

One of my MSS. of the Matsya-purāṇa gives 22: the other three, 32.

¶ That is to say, where the Vāyu-purāṇa names the Śakas, the Matsya-purāṇa names the Aśmakas.

 Corrected from "Kuravas".

†† I find 36 in both Purāṇas.

‡‡ See the commentator's words, at the end of note , below.

§§ They say nothing of Nanda, naming Mahāpadma only. The same is the case with the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa.

So considers the Bhāgavata-purāṇa, where we read—XII., l., 8 and 9:

महापद्मपतिः कश्चिन्नन्दः चस्त्वविनाशकः ।

* * * * *

शसिष्यति महापद्मो द्वितीय इव भार्गवः ।

On the first of these verses the commentator, Śrīdhara, remarks:

ति । अत एव महापद्म इत्यपि तस्य नाम ।

kings of the earth will be Śūdras. He will bring the whole earth under one umbrella: he will have eight sons, Sumālya* and others, who will reign after Mahāpadma; and he and his sons¹ will govern for a hun-

¹ So the Bhāgavata, also; but it would be more compatible with chronology to consider the nine Nandas as so many descents. The Vāyu and Matsya† give eighty-eight years to Mahāpadma, and only the remaining twelve to Sumālya and the rest of the remaining eight; these twelve years being occupied with the efforts of Kāṭilya to expel the Nandas. The Mahāwamso, evidently intending the same events, gives names and circumstances differently; it may be doubted, if with more accuracy. On the deposal of Nāgadāsako, the people raised to the throne the minister Susanāgo, who reigned eighteen years. This prince is, evidently, confounded with the Śīśunāga of the Purāṇas. He was succeeded by his son, Kālāsoko, who reigned twenty years; and he was succeeded by his sons, ten of whom reigned together for twenty-two years: subsequently there were nine, who, according to their seniority, reigned for twenty-two years. The Brahman Chānako put the ninth surviving brother, named Dhana-nando (Rich Nanda), to death, and installed Chandagutto. Mahāwamso, pp. 15 and 21. These particulars, notwithstanding the alteration of some of the names, belong, clearly, to one story; and that of the Buddhists looks as if it was borrowed and modified from that of the Brahmans. The commentary on the Mahāwamso, translated by Mr. Turnour (Introduction, p. xxxviii.), calls the sons of Kālāsoko "the nine Nandos;" but another Buddhist authority, the Dipawamso, omits Kālāsoko, and says that Susanāgo had ten brothers, who, after his demise, reigned, collectively, twenty-two years. Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, November, 1838 (p. 930).

* Several of my MSS. have Sumātya; and so has Professor Wilson's Bengal translation. The Matsya-purāṇa, in my copies, has Sukulya, with Kuśala as a variant Sahalya: Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa.

* For the particulars of the story here alluded to, see the Mudrā Rākshasa, Hindu Theatre, Vol. II. Kauṭilya is also called, according to the commentator on our text, Vātsyāyana, Viśnūgupta, and Chanākya. According to the Matsya Purāṇa, Kauṭilya retained the regal authority for a century; but there is some inaccuracy in the copies.†

² This is the most important name in all the lists; as it can scarcely be doubted that he is the Sandrocottus, or, — as Athenæus writes, more correctly, — the Sandrocoptus, of the Greeks, as I have endeavoured to prove in the Introduction to the Mudrā Rākshasa.‡ The relative positions of Chandragupta, Vidhisāra (or Bimbisāra), and Ajātaśatru serve to confirm the identification. Śākya was contemporary with both the latter, dying in the eighth year of Ajātaśatru's reign. The Mahāwaṃso says he reigned twenty-four years afterwards; but the Vāyu makes his whole reign but twenty-five years,§ which would place the close of it B. C. 526. The rest of the Śaiśunāga dynasty, according to the Vāyu and Matsya, reigned 143 or 140 years; bringing their close to B. C. 383. Another century being deducted for the duration

* Burnouf, citing a high Buddhist authority, a Sanskrit work, gives the following genealogy: Bimbisāra (king of Rājagṛīha), Ajātaśatru, Udayibhadra, Muṇḍa, Kākavarṇin, Sahālin, Tulakuchi, Mahāmaṇḍala, Prasenajit, Nanda, Bindusāra (king of Pāṭaliputra), Susima. Introduction à l'Histoire du Bouddhisme Indien, Vol. I., pp. 358, 359.

A Mongol authority interposes a king between Nanda and Chandragupta. See the Foë Koué Ki, p. 230.

† There is something to the same effect in the Vāyu-purāṇa and in the Brahmaṇḍa-purāṇa.

of the Nandas would place the accession of Chandragupta B. C. 283. Chandragupta was the contemporary of Seleucus Nicator, who began his reign B. C. 310, and concluded a treaty with him B. C. 305. Although, therefore, his date may not be made out quite correctly from the Paurāṇik premises, yet the error cannot be more than twenty or thirty years. The result is much nearer the truth than that furnished by Buddhist authorities. According to the Mahāwaṃso, a hundred years had elapsed from the death of Buddha to the tenth year of the reign of Kālāsoko (p. 15). He reigned other ten years, and his sons, forty-four, making a total of 154 years between the death of Śākya and the accession of Chandragupta, which is, consequently, placed B. C. 389, or above seventy years too early. According to the Buddhist authorities, Chan-ta-kut-ta (or Chandragupta) commenced his reign 396 B. C. Burmese Table; Prinsep's Useful Tables. Mr. Turnour, in his Introduction, giving to Kālāsoko eighteen years subsequent to the century after Buddha, places Chandragupta's accession to B. C. 381, which, he observes, is sixty years too soon; dating, however, the accession of Chandragupta from 323 B. C., or immediately upon Alexander's death, — a period too early by eight or ten years, at least. The discrepancy of dates. Mr. Turnour is disposed to think, "proceeds from some intentional perversion of the Buddhistical chronology." Introduction, p. 1. The commentator on our text says that Chandragupta was the son of Nanda, by a wife named Murā, whence he and his descendants were called Mauryas: चन्द्रगुप्तं नन्दस्यैव पत्न्यनारख मुरासंख्य पुत्रं मौर्याणां प्रथमम् । Colonel Tod considers Maurya a corruption of Mori, the name of a Rajput tribe. The Tika on the Mahāwaṃso builds a story on the fancied resemblance of the word to Mayūra (Sanskrit). Mori (Prakrit). 'a peacock.' There being abundance of pea-fowl in the place where the Śākya tribe built a town, they called it Mori; and their princes were, thence, called Mauryas. Turnour, Introduction to the Mahāwaṃso. p. xxxix. Chandragupta reigned, according to the Vāyu Purāṇa, 24 years; according to the Mahāwaṃso, 34; to the Dipawaṃso, 24.

The names are, also, differently arranged; and one is peculiar.‡ They are Śatadhanvan, Brīhadratha, § Śuka, and Daśaratha. ¶

¹ Aśoka, 36 years, Vāyu;  Śuka, †† 26, ‡ Matsya; Aśokavardhana, Bhāgavata; Asoko and Dhammāsoko, Mahāvaṃso. This king is the most celebrated of any in the annals of the Buddhists. §§ In the commencement of his reign, he followed the Brahmanical faith, but became a convert to that of Buddha, and a zealous encourager of it. He is said to have maintained, in his palace, 64,000 Buddhist priests, and to have erected 84,000 columns (or topes) throughout India. A great convocation of Buddhist priests was held in the eighteenth year of his reign, which was followed by missions to Ceylon and other places. According to Buddhist chronology, he ascended the throne 218 years after the death of Buddha, B. C. 325. As the grandson of Chandragupta, however, he must have been some time subsequent to this, or,—agreeably to the joint duration of the reigns of Chandragupta and Bindu-sāra, supposing the former to have commenced his reign about B. C. 315,—forty-nine years later, or B. C. 266. The duration of his reign is said to have been thirty-six years, bringing it down to B. C. 230; but, if we deduct these periods from the date assignable to Chandragupta, of B. C. 283, we shall place Aśoka's reign from B. C. 234 to 198. Now, it is certain that a number of very curious inscriptions, on columns and rocks, by a Buddhist prince, in an ancient form of letter, and the Pāli language, exist in India; and that some of them refer to Greek princes, who can be no other than members of the Seleucidan and Ptolemæan dynasties, and are, probably, Antiochus the Great* and Ptolemy Euergetes, kings of Syria and Egypt in the latter part of the third century before Christ. Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, February and March, 1838. The Indian king appears always under the appellation Piyadasi (or Priyadarśin), 'the beautiful;' and is entitled Devānam piya, 'the beloved of the gods.' According to Buddhist authorities, the Rasawāhini and Dīpawāṃso, quoted by Mr. Turnour (Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, December 1837, p. 1056, and November, 1838, p. 930), Piyadasi or Piyadassano is identified, both by name and circumstances, with Aśoka; and to him, therefore, the inscriptions must be attributed. Their purport agrees well enough with his character; and their wide diffusion, with the traditionary report of the number of his monuments. His date is not exactly that of Antiochus the Great; but it is not very far different; and the corrections required to make it correspond are no more than the inexact manner in which both Brahmanical and Buddhist chronology is preserved may well be expected to render necessary.

¹ The name of Daśaratha, in a similar ancient character as that of Piyadasi's inscriptions, has been found at Gayā, amongst Buddhist remains, and, like them, deciphered by Mr. Prinsep: Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, August, 1837, p. 677. A different series of names occurs in the Vāyu;† or: Kuśāla, 8 years; Bandhupālita, Indrapālita,‡ Daśavarman,§ 7 years; Śatadhara, 8 years; and Brīhadaśwa, 7 years.¶ The Bhāgavata agrees in § My MSS. yield Devavarman.

¶ So read all my MSS.; and yet, a little further on, they agree in naming Brīhadratha as the king put to death by Pushpanitra.

¶ The Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa has, after Aśoka: Kuśāla, 8 years; Bandhu-

Śāliśūka; his son will be Somaśarman; his son will be Śatadhanwan;¹* and his successor will be Brīhadratha. These are the ten Mauryas, who will reign over the earth for a hundred and thirty-seven years.²

The dynasty of the Śungas will, next, become possessed of the sovereignty; for Pushpamitra,³ the general (of the last Maurya prince), will put his master to most of the names; and its omission of Daśaratha is corrected by the commentator.

² The Vāyu says nine Sumūrtya† reigned 137 years.‡ The Matsya and Bhāgavata have ten Mauryas, and 137 years. The detailed numbers of the Vāyu and Matsya differ from their totals;§ but the copies are, manifestly, corrupt.

³ The Bhāgavata omits this name, but states that there were ten Śungas; although, without Pushpamitra, only nine are named.
The Vāyu and Matsya have the same account of the circumstances of his accession to the throne: the former gives him a reign of sixty, the latter, of thirty-six, years. In a play attributed to Kālidāsa, the Mālavikāgnimitra, of which Agnimitra is the hero, his father is alluded to as the Senāni or general, as if he had deposed his master in favour, not of himself, but of his

Pushpamitra is represented as engaged in a conflict with the Yavanas on the Indus; thus continuing the political relations with the Greeks or Scythians of Bactria and Ariana. See Hindu Theatre, Vol. I., p. 347.

² 7 years, Vāyu and Matsya.‡ But the latter places him after Vasumitra;§ and, in the drama, the son of Agnimitra is called Vasumitra.

2 years.¶ Bhadraka, Bhāgavata.

* In one MS., Animitri; in another, Amitra: readings of no value.

General Cunningham informs me that he possesses two coins of an Agnimitra, containing characters similar to those of Aśoka's inscriptions.

† The following stanza—corrupt, probably,—occurs there, not naming Agnimitra:

पुष्पमित्रसुताश्चाष्टौ भविष्यन्ति समा नृपाः ।
भविता चापि सुज्येष्ठः सप्त वर्षाणि वै ततः ॥

From this it appears that Pushpamitra had sons who ruled for eight years. And then came Sujoyeshtha, whose relationship to his predecessors is not stated.

The first half of this stanza may have been, originally, something like the following loose verse from the Brahmānda-purāṇa, which makes Agnimitra son of Pushpamitra, and assigns him a reign of 8 years:

तत्सुतोऽपिमित्रश्चाष्टौ भविष्यति समा नृपः ।

§ In the Matsya-purāṇa I find, after Pushpamitra, Vasujyeshtha (Va-susreshtha, in two MSS.), and then Vasumitra. According to the *Harsha-Vāsavadattā, Preface, p. 53.

† One MS. has Devabhūti.

‡ Corrected, here and at the beginning of the next paragraph, from "Kāṇwa", which I find nowhere. The Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa first applies to Vasudeva the term Kaṇwa; afterwards, that of Kaṇwāyana.

§ So has the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa, also.

¶ In my MSS., Marunandana, and 3 years.

¶¶ And so has the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa.

 I find a name that looks like Megha: but all my MSS. are very doubtful here. The specification of three years is added.

†† The Vāyu-purāṇa has a name which looks, in my MSS., like Vikramitra: only this is most unlikely, as being meaningless. The reign is of 14 years, according to one MS.; 9, possibly, according to the rest. The Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa has Vajramitra, and 14 years. The Vāyu-purāṇa, in all probability, really has the same.

‡‡ Bhāgavata, and 32 years: Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa.

§§ The Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa has Devabhūmi, and 10 years.

¶¶ What total the Matsya-purāṇa has is not to be made out from my MSS.: the detailed reigns occupy, however, 112 years. Though its text declares the Śungas to be ten, it names but nine.

¶¶¶ The Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa has, also, 112 years:

शतं पूर्णं दश द्वे च तेभ्यः कण्वो भविष्यति ।

named Vasudeva, will murder him, and usurp the kingdom. His son will be Bhūmimitra;^{*} his son will be Nārāyaṇa; his son will be Suśarman.[†] These four Kaṇwāyanas: will be kings of the earth for forty-five§ years.¹

¹ The names of the four princes agree in all the authorities. The Matsya transfers the character of Vyasanin to the minister, with the further addition of his being a Brahman.—Dwijā. In the lists given by Sir William Jones and Colonel Wilford, the four Kaṇwas are said to have reigned 345 years; but, in seven copies of the Vishṇu Purāṇa, from different parts of India, the number is, as given in the text, forty-five: एते काण्वायनाश्चत्वारिंशद्वर्षाणि भूपतयो भविष्यन्ति । There is, however, authority for the larger number, both in the text of the Bhāgavata and the comment. The former ¶ has:

काण्वायना इमे भूमिं चत्वारिंशच्च पञ्च च ।

शतानि त्रीणि भोज्यन्ति वर्षाणां च कलौ युगे ॥

And the latter: काण्वायना वर्षाणां त्रीणि शतानि पञ्चचत्वारिंशद्वर्षाणि भूमिं भोज्यन्ति । There is no doubt, therefore, of the purport of the text; and it is only surprising that such a chronology should have been inserted in the Bhāgavata, not only in opposition to all probability, but to other authority. The Vāyu and Matsya not only confirm the lower number, by stating it as a total, but by giving it in detail; thus:

* Bhūmitra: Bhāgavata-purāṇa.

† Sudharman: Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa.

‡ Corrected, here and further on, from "Kāṇwas", for which I find no authority. And see the original as quoted in the Translator's note in this page.

§ One MS. yields "forty".

The Bhāgavata-purāṇa omits, in his place, Suśarman, whose name is supplied by the commentator Śridhara. See, further, note *, above.

The Vāyu-purāṇa has, in my MSS., Bhūtimitra, not Bhūmimitra; and its account of the Kaṇwāyanas, if decipherable, would, perhaps, prove different from that of our Purāṇa.

The expressions Andhrajātyas and Andhrabhṛityas have perplexed Colonel Wilford, who makes three races out of Andhras, Andhrajātyas, and Andhrabhṛityas: Asiatic Researches, Vol. IX., p. 101. There is no warrant for three races. Purāṇas, although the Matsya, and, perhaps, the Vāyu, mentions two, as we shall hereafter see. Our text has but one, which all the terms may be applied. The first of the kings was an Andhra by birth or caste (jātiya), and a servant (bhṛitya) of the last of the Kañwa race. So the Vāyu: सिन्धुको जातीयः । The Matsya:

The terms 'an Andhra by caste' and 'a Bhṛitya' or servant, with the addition, in the last passage, of Vṛishāla, 'a Śūdra', all apply to one person and one dynasty. Colonel Wilford has Vivilaka, which may have suggested Professor Wilson's "Vivilika".

¶ It agrees, here, according to my MSS., and according to the Radcliffe S. as represented by Professor Wilson, with our Purāṇa. Vide infra, p. 200, note §.

† Colonel Wilford bisects him into Śātakarṇi and Śivaśrī.

‡ One MS. gives Śivaskandha, the reading of Colonel Wilford, of the Translator's Bengal version, and that of the Bhāgavata-purāṇa.

§ Śātakarṇi, and called king of the south, — as Professor Wilson presently states, — is referred to in an inscription at Junagṛh. See the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, for 1838, pp. 339 and 341; and the Journal of the Bombay Asiatic Society, Vol. VII., pp. 120 and 126. This inscription, which is in Sanskrit, shows that the name of the king in question begins with a dental sibilant.

Further, in the Nasik cave-inscriptions, names are found which are supposed to correspond to Śrisātakarṇi, Gotamīputra Śrisātakarṇi, and Yajñaśrī Śātakarṇi. Journal of the Bombay Asiatic Society, Vol. V., pp. 43, 47, 56.

We have, it is evident, excellent authority for accepting Gotamīputra, as against Gautamīputra and Gomatīputra.

According to Colonel Wilford, the Vāyu-purāṇa has Śivaswāmīn. I find Śivaswāti.

¶ Colonel Wilford represents the Bhāgavata-purāṇa as naming Vafaka and Śivaswāti between Chakora and Gomatīputra. The name Vafaka is in no MS. that I have examined; and there is no room for it in the line where it was supposed to occur.

 Gautamīputra is in both Purāṇas, in my copies; and Colonel Wilford has this name. But see note §, above, ad finem; also, note § in p. 201, infra.

The actual enumeration of the text gives but 24 names; that of the Bhāgavata, but 23; that of the Vāyu, but 17. The Matsya has the whole 29 names, adding several to the list of our text; and the aggregate of the reigns amounts to 435 years and 6 months. ‡‡ The difference between this and the total specified arises, probably, from some inaccuracy in the MSS. As this list appears to be fuller than any other, it may be advisable to insert it as it occurs in the Radcliffe copy of the Matsya Purāṇa: §§

* Colonel Wilford has Śātakarṇi, and 60 years. I suspect an error.

† The full name, in the Vāyu-purāṇa, is Daūdaśrī Śātakarṇi.

‡ Vide infra, p. 201, note . My MSS. here harmonize neither with the Radcliffe as quoted by Professor Wilson, nor with the MS. which he used for his short notes hereabouts.

My four MSS. of the Matsya-purāṇa, while, differing considerably among themselves, differ quite as much from the Radcliffe copy as here cited. The reign of Chakora is here given as of six years,—not months, as in the Matsya-purāṇa.

The Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa asserts that these kings will be thirty in number. The duration of the dynasty is given, but is expressed rather enigmatically. Apparently, it is 418 years.

Colonel Wilford, in preparing his table of the Andhrabhītyas, in the Asiatic Researches, Vol. IX., p. 116, could not have followed, exclusively, for the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa, the extract of his which I have been obliged to use without means of controlling it. Thus, his text must have differed from mine: or he would not have given the reign of Śrīśātakarṇi as of ten years. And again, he assigns 28 years to Skandaswāti; his extract assigning only 7, and most distinctly, too. Like myself, he seems to have had no other than the strange-looking readings Āvi and Yantramāti.

era, we learn from Pliny, who describes them as possessed of thirty fortified cities, with an army of 100,000 men and 2000 elephants. The Andræ† of this writer are, probably, the people of the upper part of the Peninsula; Andhra being the proper designation of Telingana. The Peutingerian tables, however, place the Andre-Iudi on the banks of the Ganges; and the southern princes may have extended, or shifted, the site of their power. Towards the close of the dynasty, we find names that appear to agree with those of princes of middle India, of whom mention is made by the Chinese; as, Yue-guai (Yajñaśri), king of Kiapili, A. D. 408 (Des Guignes, I., 45), and Ho-lo-mien (Pulomān‡), king of Magadha in 621 (ibid., I., 56). The Paurāṇik lists place these two princes more nearly together; but we cannot rely implicitly upon their accuracy. Calculating from Chandragupta downwards, the Indian date of Yajña and the Chinese Yue-guai corresponds; for we have:

But I suspect that Gardabhila is only a Bengal corruption of Gardabhin; and that it had its origin, in part, in the liability, in the local characters, of confusion between ञ and ण. Compare Vol. II., p. 100, note †.

Colonel Wilford writes “Gardabhinās”, though regard for grammar would have led him to write Gardabhins. Asiatic Researches, Vol. IX., pp. 155 and 219.

a date remarkably near that derivable from the Chinese annals. If the Indian Pulomán be the same with the Chinese Ho-lo-mien, there must be some considerable omission in the Paurāṇik dynasty. There is a further identification in the case of Ho-lo-mien, which makes it certain that a prince of Magadha is intended; as the place of his residence is called, by the Chinese, Kia-so-mo-pu-lo-ching and Po-to-li-tse-ching, or, in Sanskrit, Kusumapura and Pāṭaliputra.* The equivalent of the latter name consists not only in the identity of the sounds Pāṭali and Po-to-li, but in the translation of 'putra' by 'tse'; each word meaning, in their respective languages, 'son.' No doubt can be entertained, therefore, that the city intended is the metropolis of Magadha, — Pāṭaliputra, or Palibothra. Wilford identifies Pulomat or Pulomán† with the Po-lo-mu-en of the Chinese; but Des Guignes interprets Po-lo-mu-en-kuë,‡ 'royaume des Brahmanes.' Buchanan (Hamilton), following the Bhāgavata, as to the name of the last king, Salomadhi, would place him about A.D. 846; but his premises are far from accurate, and his deduction, in this instance at least, is of no weight: Genealogies of the Hindus, Introduction, p. 16. He supposes the Andhra kings of Magadha to have retained their power on the Ganges until the Mohammedan invasion (or the twelfth century), when they retired to the south, and reigned at Warankal, in Telingana. Inscriptions and coins, however, confirm the statement of the Purāṇas, that a different dynasty succeeded to the Andhras some centuries before the Mohammedan conquests; and the Chinese, also, record, that, upon the death of the king of Magadha, Ho-lo-mien (Pulomán?), some time before A. D. 648, great troubles in India took place. Des Guignes. Some very curious and authentic testimony to the actual existence of these Andhra kings has been lately afforded by the discovery of an ancient inscription in Gujerat, in which Rudra Dāman, the Kshatrapa (or Satrap) of Surāshṭra, is recorded to have repeatedly overcome Śātakarṇi, † king of the southern country (Dakshināpatha). The inscription is without date; but it is in an old character, and makes mention of the two Maurya princes, Chandragupta and Aśoka, as if not very long prior to its composition. Mr. J. Prinsep, to whom we are indebted for the deciphering and translating of this important document, has been, also, successful in deciphering the legends on a series of coins belonging to the princes of Surāshṭra, amongst whom the name of Rudra Dāman occurs; and he is inclined, although with hesitation, to place these princes about a century after Aśoka, — or Rudra Dāman, about 153 B. C.: Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, May, 1837, and April, 1838. According to the computation hazarded above, from our text, the race of Andhra kings should not commence till about 20 years B. C., which would agree with Pliny's notice of them; but it is possible that they existed earlier in the south of India, although they established their authority in Magadha only in the first centuries of the Christian era.

They are not, however, continuous, but nearly contemporary, dynasties; and, if they comprise, as they probably do, the Greek and Scythian princes of the west of India, the periods may not be very wide of the truth. The Matsya begins the list with one more dynasty,—another Andhra (vide supra, p. 194, note 1), of whom there were seven:

अन्ध्राणां संस्थिते राज्ये तेषां मृत्त्वान्वया नृपाः ।

सन्निवान्धा भविष्यन्ति नवाभीरास्ततो नृपाः ॥

“When the dominion of the Andhras has ceased, there shall be seven other Andhras, kings of the race of their servants; and, then, nine § Ābhiras.” The passage of the Vāyu, although somewhat similar in terms, has a different purport:

अन्ध्राणां संस्थितानां च तेषां वंशाः समाः पुनः ।

सन्निव तु भविष्यन्ति दशभीरास्ततो नृपाः ॥

“Of these, the Andhras having passed away, there shall be seven contemporary races; as, ten Ābhiras,” &c. The passage is differently read in different copies; but this is the only intelligible reading. At the same time, it subsequently specifies a period for the duration of the Andhra dynasty, different from that before given, or three hundred years, as if a different race was referred to:

अन्धा भोक्ष्यन्ति वसुधां शते द्वे च शतं च वै । ¶

remarks that it is, sometimes, Maunas;‡ but they have already been specified; unless the term be repeated in order to separate the duration of this dynasty from that of the rest. Such seems to be the purport of the similar passage of the Bhāgavata:§ “These kings (Andhras, &c.) will possess the earth 1099 years, and, the eleven Maunas, 300:”

No such name as Pauras occurs in the other authorities. The analogy of duration identifies them with the Mlechchhas of the Vāyu: “Eleven Mlechchhas will possess the earth for three centuries:”

And the Vāyu may refer to the Maunas; as no other period is assigned for them. The periods of the Bhāgavata- 1099 and 300,—come much to the same as that of our text, 1390; the one including the three centuries of the Maunas, the other stating it separately. The Vāyu, apparently, adds it to the rest; thus making the total 1601,†† instead of 1390. It is evident that the ‡ Kilakila, Kolakila, Kolikila, Kilinakila, as it is variously read.‡ Sir William Jones’s Pandit stated that he understood it to be a city in the Marāṭha country (Asiatic Researches, Vol. XI., p. 112); and there has been found a confirmation of his belief, in an inscription where Kilagila,§ as it is there termed, is called the capital of Mārasiniha Deva, king of the Konkan: Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, Vol. IV., p. 282. This inscription dates A. D. 1058. The Purāṇas refer, probably, to a long antecedent date, when the Greek princes, or their Indo-Seythie successors, following the course of the Indus, spread to the upper part of the western coast of the Peninsula. The text calls them Yavanas; and the Vāyu and Matsya say they were Yavanas in institutions, manners, and policy: धर्मतः कामतोऽर्थतः । The Bhāgavata¶ names five of their princes,—Bhūtananda, Vangiri, Śiśunandi, Yaśanandi, and Pravīraka,—

‡ Four MSS. of the Vāyu-purāṇa have Kolikilas; one, Kilakilas. Two copies of the Matsya-purāṇa give Kilikilas; one, Kilakilas; the fourth, Kilakilas. The reading of the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa is Kailakilas. The Bhāgavata-purāṇa speaks of Kilikila, which the commentator Śridhara says is the name of a city. The commentator on the Vishnu-purāṇa calls the city Kelikila.

who will reign 106 years; and they are, therefore, imperfect representatives of the series in our text. The Matsya has no further specific enumeration of any dynasty. The Vāyu makes Pravira the son of Vindhyaśakti;* the latter reigning 96 years, and the former, 60.† The latter is king of Kānchanapuri;‡ ‘the golden city,’ and is followed by four sons, whose names are not mentioned. Between Vindhyaśakti and Pravira, however, a dynasty of kings is introduced, some of the names of which resemble those of the Kilakila princes of the text.§ They are: Bhogin (the son of Śeshanāga||), Sadāchandra, Nakhavat, Dhanadharma,¶ Viniśaja, Bhūtinanda.—at a period before the end of the Śungas? (the copies have शुङ्गानां न कुलस्थाने), Madhumandī, his younger brother, Nandiyāśas;†† and, in his race, there will be

* Dr. Bhāu Dāji has published an inscription from Ajunta, in which, he says, there is mention of a king Vindhyaśakti and his son Pravara-sena. The same names of sire and son are found, he alleges, in the Vāyu-purāṇa. His MSS. must differ, then, from mine. See the Journal of the Bombay Asiatic Society, Vol. VII., p. 65.

† In the Brahmānda-purāṇa, it seems to be stated that Dauhitra and others—see below,—will reign for sixty years; and then follows something quite unintelligible in my MS.

‡ In the Vāyu-purāṇa, the city is called Kānchanakā.

§ The Vāyu-purāṇa is anything but clear, hereabouts, in my MSS. It speaks—see the next note,—of Parapuranjaya (or Swarapuranjaya, according to three copies out of five); and he is said to be son of Sesha, king of the Nāgas. Vide supra, p. 210, note *.

three other Rajas,—Dauhitra,* Śiśuka, and Ripukāya.† These are called princes of Vidiśa or Videśa,‡—the latter meaning, perhaps, ‘foreign,’—and constitute the Nāga dynasty. Our text calls Vindhyaśakti a Mūrdhābhishikta, §—a warrior of a mixed race, sprung from a Brahman father and Kshattriya mother.||

¶ The text of this passage runs thus: तत्पुत्रास्त्रयोदशैव बाह्लीकाश्च त्रयः । ततः पुष्पमित्रपटुमित्राद्यास्त्रयोदश ॥ मेकलाश्च । ‘Their sons,’ तत्पुत्राः, the commentator explains by विन्ध्यशक्त्यादीनां यथायथं त्रयोदश पुत्राः, “thirteen sons of Vindhyaśakti and the rest.” The Bhāgavata has a different statement, identifying the sons of the Vindhya race with the Bāhlikas, and making them thirteen:

तेषां त्रयोदश सुता भवितारस्य बाह्लिकाः ।

“The Bāhlikas will be their thirteen sons.” As the commentator: तेषां भूतनन्दादीनां यथायथं बाह्लिका नामानस्त्रयोदश सुता भविष्यन्ति । “There will be, severally, thirteen sons, called Bāhlikas, of Bhūtananda and the rest.” The following verse is:

पुष्पमित्रोऽथ राजन्यो दुर्मित्रोऽस्य तथैव च ।

“Pushpamitra, a king, and, then, Durmitra.” Who or what they were does not appear. The commentator says: “Pushpamitra

* Variants: Dauhitrya and Daihitra.

† I find nothing like this name, but, in most of my MSS., Purikāya. The rest seem to speak of a city, Purikāya. The Brahmānda-purāṇa gives Purikāya.

‡ All my MSS. have Vaideśa, with Vaidiśaka as its adjective. One or other must be wrong.

§ The commentator explains this term, and rightly, by mukhya. He adds that there is a variant, मूर्धसिक्तः, which he explains by क्षत्रियमुखः ।

|| This is the definition of what is more ordinarily written mūrdhābhishikta.

¶ Not one of my MSS. has anything but -पटुमित्रास्त्रयोदश । The Translator’s reading seems to be corrupted from a fragment of the comment: पुष्पमित्रादयस्त्रयोदश । kings in the seven Kośalas; and there will be as was another king; and Durmitra was his son:" अथ पुष्पमित्रो नामान्यो राजन्यः । अस्य च दुर्मित्रो नाम पुत्रः । Here is, evidently, careless and inaccurate compilation. The Vāyu, though not quite satisfactory, accords better with our text. "Pravira," it says, "will have four sons. When the Vindhya race is extinct, there will be three Bāhlika kings,—Supratika, Nabhira, who will reign thirty years, and Śakyamānābhava* (quere this name), king of the Mahishas.† The Pushpamitras will then be, and the Paṭumitras, also, who will be seven kings of Mekalā. Such is the generation:"

पुष्पमित्रा भविष्यन्ति पटुमित्रास्तथैव च (or पटुमित्रास्तयोदश ¶) ।

मेकलायां नृपाः सप्त भविष्यन्तीति संततिः ॥

The plural verb, with only two Bāhlika names, indicates some omission; unless we correct it to भोक्ष्यते 'they two will reign:' but the following name and title, "Śakyamānābhava, king of the Mahishas," seems to have little connexion with the Bāhlikas. If, in a subsequent part of the citation, the reading 'trayodaśa' be correct, it must, then, be thirteen Paṭumitras; but it will be difficult to know what to do with 'sapta', 'seven.' †† If, for 'santa-tiḥ', we might read 'saptatiḥ', 'seventy', the sense might be, "these thirteen kings ruled for seventy-seven years.† However this may be, it seems most correct to separate the thirteen sons or families of the Vindhya princes from the three Bāhlikas, and them from the Pushpamitras and Paṭumitras, who governed Mekalā, a country on the Narmadā (see Vol. II., p. 160, note 4‡). What the Bāhlikas (or princes of Balkh,) had to do in this part of India is doubtful. The Durmitra of the Bhāgavata has been conjectured, by Colonel Tod (Transactions of the Royal Asiatic Society, Vol. I., p. 325), to be intended for the Bactrian prince Demetrius: but it is not clear that even the Bhāgavata considers this prince as one of the Bāhlikas; and the name occurs nowhere else.

there were thirteen of the latter, while the number of the former is not mentioned. See the next note, near the end.

* On referring to the beginning of note 1 in p. 213, supra, it will be seen that the Translator has transcribed a part of the original of this passage. I repeat a few words there given, and continue the quotation: ततः पुष्पमित्रपटुमित्रास्तयोदश । मेकलास्य सप्त । कोशलायां तु नवैव भूपतयो भविष्यन्ति । नैषधास्तु तावन्त एव भूपतयो भविष्यन्ति । "Then the Pushpamitras and the Paṭumitras, thirteen, will reign; and the Mekalas will be seven; and there will be nine kings in Kośalā; and there will be just as many Naishadha kings." The comment is as follows: पुष्पमित्रादयस्तयोदश । मेकाला मेकलदेशजाः सप्त । कोशलायां नवैव । नैषधास्तावन्तो नवैव भूपतयो भविष्यन्ति ।

Thus, it is not said where the Pushpamitras and the Paṭumitras—dynasties, probably, named from their founders, Pushpamitra and Paṭumitra,—will reign; there is no mention, as there is in the Vāyu-purāṇa of Mekalā; we are told nothing, here, of the Kośalas, but of the city of Kośalā; and the "seven" defines the number of the Mekala kings.

If we suppose that our text—which, here, is in prose, and, therefore, comparatively liable to vitiation, should read पुष्पमित्राश्च, it will harmonize with the Vāyu-purāṇa, in not defining the number of the Pushpamitras, and in recognizing the Paṭumitras as thirteen. Vide supra, p. 214, note ††.

One of my MSS. yields Mekalakas, for Mekalas.

The Bhāgavata agrees with our text. The Vāyu says, of the Naishadhas, or kings of Nishadha, that they were, all, of the race of Nala: नलवंशप्रसूताः । The Bhāgavata adds two other races, seven Andhras (vide supra, p. 199, note 4), and kings of Vaidūra; with the remark, that these were, all, contemporaries; being, as the commentator observes, petty or provincial rulers.—खण्डमण्डलेषु भूपाः ।

In the extract from the Vāyu-purāṇa in the note under annotation, there is mention, however, of a Mekalā,—a city, in all likelihood, and the capital of the Mekala kings of our text.

This account is the most explicit, and, probably, most accurate, of all. The Nākas were Rajas of Bhagulpoor; the Nāgas,†† of Mathurā; and the intermediate countries, along the Ganges,‡ were governed by the Guptas (or Rajas of the Vaiśya caste).

* See note ‡, below.

† For a peculiar reading of this passage, on the warrant of two MSS. consulted by the Reverend Dr. Mill, making the Magadhas and the Guptas rulers over the Magadhas, see the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, 1837, p. 10.

‡ The natural sense of these last words is: “The Magadhas and the Guptas will rule over Prayāga on the Ganges.” Any place at the confluence of sacred rivers may be called Prayāga.

§ In Colonel Wilford’s MS. excerpts, the text yields Padmāvatī, with which the Brahmānda-purāna agrees.

¶ Maunas, according to Colonel Wilford’s extracts. And here, again, the Brahmānda-purāna has the same reading.

will reign, in a city on the sea-shore, over the Kōśalas,

The Bhāgavata* seems to have taken great liberties with the account; as it makes Viśvasphūrti king over Anugangā,— the course of the Ganges from Hurdwar† (according to the commentator.) to Prayāga,—residing at Padmāvatī:‡ omitting the Nāgas altogether, and converting ‘gupta’ into an epithet of ‘medinī’,— “the preserved (or protected) earth.” Wilford considers the Nāgas, Nākas, and Guptas to be, all, the same. He says: “Then came a dynasty of nine kings, called the nine Nāgas, or Nākas. These were an obscure tribe, called, for that reason, Guptavaiśyas. There were nine families of them, who ruled, independent of each other, over various districts in Anugangā, such as Padmāvatī,” &c. &c. That city he calls Patna; but, in the Mālatī and Mādhava, ¶ Padmāvatī lies amongst the Vindhya hills. Kāntipurī he makes Cotwal, near Gwalior. The reading of the Vāyu, Champāvatī, however, obviates the necessity of all vague conjecture. According to Wilford, there is a powerful tribe, still called Nākas, between the Jumna and the Betwa. Of the existence and power of the Guptas, however, we have recently had ample proofs, from inscriptions and coins, as in the Chandragupta and Samudragupta of the Allahabad column (Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, March and June, 1834), and Kumāragupta, Chandragupta, Samudragupta, Śaṣigupta, &c., on the Archer coins, found at Kanauj and elsewhere (Asiatic Re-

* The compound in which these names are combined allows of our reading either Oḍras or Andras. One MS. yields Udhas.

† Some MSS. omit this people. One copy yields Pauṇḍrakas.

‡ Most of my MSS. have कोशलौड्पण्डकताम्रलिप्तान्समुद्रतटपुरी च, which implies "a city on the sea-shore", in addition to the Kośalas, &c. But some copies give, instead of -पुरी, "city," -पर्यन्तं, which extends the dominion of Devarakshita as far as the sea-coast.

§ The only grammatical reading that I find—and it occurs in only one MSS.—is as follows: कलिङ्गमाहिषकमाहिन्द्राभीमा गुहा भोष्यन्ति; which makes the rulers (Guhas of Bhauma (?). This is, however, extremely doubtful. My copies of the Vāyu-purāṇa have Guha, in the singular; as if a person were intended. In the Mahābhārata, Śānti-parvan, sl. 7559, we read of the Guhas, a nation in the south of India, who, possibly, took their name from Guha, prince of the Nishādas, a friend of Rāma.

I have nowhere found a lection answering to Professor Wilson's "mountains of Māhendra". The Vāyu-purāṇa has महिन्द्रगिरयान् ।

|| Corrected from "Kālinga".

¶ Corrected from "Māhika". Māhishmas, according to one MS. The Vāyu-purāṇa has the short form, Māhishas.

 The Vāyu-purāṇa has more, in all my copies. Its reading seems to be:

कोसलाञ्चान्धपीण्डाञ्च तामलिप्तान्सगरान् ।

We are to add, then, the Andhras and the Pauṇḍras. For the Andhras, western parts of Bengal, Tumlook, Medinipoor, and Orissa. One copy reads Andhra, perhaps for Oḍra, Orissa; and one has Champā,|| for the capital, which is, probably, an error, although the two other MSS., being still more faulty, do not offer the means of correction.

† The Vāyu has the same. The countries are parts of Orissa and Berar.

‡ The Vāyu has sons of Mañidhāna for the ruling dynasty, but names the countries those of the Naishadhas, Yudakas,¶ Śāisikas, and Kālatoyakas.†† The first name applies to a tract of country near the Vindhya mountains, but the last, to a country in the north.‡‡ The west or southwest, however, is, probably, intended, in this place.

§ See Vol. II., p. 170, note ‡, and p. 184, note †; also, p. 199, note 4, and p. 205, note 1, supra: for the Pauṇḍras, Vol. II., p. 177, note ††, and p. 184, note †. Puṇḍra, whence the Pauṇḍras are supposed to have originated, is mentioned in p. 122, supra.

It is most probable that the people spoken of along with the Pauṇḍras or Pauṇḍrakas, in the Laws of the Mānavas and in the Mahābhārata, are the Andhras, not the Andras.

* Corrected from "Mahendra".

† Corrected from "Mañidhanu". One MS. has Mañidhānyaka; one, Mañidhāva; several, Mañidhāra, the name in Professor Wilson's Hindu-made translation. The Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa has Māladhānya.

‡ Corrected from "Nishādas". § Kanās, according to one MS.

|| So read three of my MSS.; the rest having something very different, but illegible.

¶ Padukas or Pudakas, according to my MSS. The Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa, in Colonel Wilford's manuscript extract from it, has Padumas.

 Agreeably to different MSS., these people are called Śāisikas, Śāisīnas, Śāisītas, and Śāusitas. See Vol. II., p. 177, text and note *.

After the passage, in the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa, corresponding to this, there is, evidently, a considerable hiatus in Colonel Wilford's MS. extract.

* The Stri Rājya is, usually, placed§ in Bhote. It may, perhaps, here designate Malabar, where polyandry equally prevails. Múshika, or the country of thieves, was the pirate-coast of the Konkan. The Váyu reads Bhokshyaka (or Bhokhyaka) for Múshika.

स्त्रीराज्यं भोक्ष्यकाश्चैव भोक्ष्यन्ति कनकाद्रयाः ।

The Bhāgavata omits all these specifications subsequent to the notice of Viśwasphūrti.

* Stri-rājya. But one of my copies has Trairājya.

† According to one MS., the people here spoken of are the Bhūshikas; and so read some copies of the Mahābhārata, where Professor Wilson found Múshikas. See Vol. II., p. 178.

‡ I find nothing to justify this rendering. The ordinary reading, as known to me, is as follows: सीराद्रावन्तिशूद्रानर्बुदमर्बूमिविषयांश्च ब्राह्मणाभोरशूद्राद्या भोक्ष्यन्ति । “Outcastes, unregenerate tribes, Ábhíras, Śúdras, and such others will govern the Sauráshtras, the Avantis, and the Śúdras, and the regions of Arbuda and Marubhūmi.”

Several of my best MSS. yield, instead of Śúdras, as the name of a nation, Śúras. Both the Śúdras and the Śúras are found mentioned in association with the Ábhíras. See Vol. II., p. 133, note *; p. 184, note 1; and p. 185, notes 2 and *; also, p. 224, infra, note †.

After the Śúdras—the nation so called,—a single copy introduces the Ábhíras: and another copy has ‘mountaineers’, adrija, in lieu of ‘unregenerate tribes’, adrija.

Ábhira, equally with Śúdra, denotes a caste, as well as a people.

Sauráshtra—for which the Translator’s “Saurashtra” must be exchanged, in order to obtain a recognized word,—cannot be substituted for Suráshtra, whence Surat.

§ By whom?

|| This verse, as thus given, is of extremely doubtful correctness, in its second half. The words in my MSS. were, apparently, corrupted from something different.

The Váyu-purāṇa here concludes its specification of peoples and tribes.

of the Indus, Dárvika, the Chandrabhágá, and Kásmíra.^{1*}

¹ From this we might infer that the Vishnū Purāṇa was compiled when the Mohammedans were making their first encroachments on the west. They seem to have invaded, and to have settled, in Sindh early in the eighth century, although Indian princes continued on the Indus for a subsequent period: Scriptor. Arab. de Rebus Indicis, Gildemeister, p. 6. They were engaged in hostilities, in 698 or 700, with the prince of Kabul, in whose name, however disguised by its Mohammedan representations of Ratil, Ratbal, or Ratibal, † it is not difficult to recognize the genuine Hindu appellation of Ratanpál or Ratnapála. Their progress in this direction has not been traced; but, at the period of their invasion of Sindh, they advanced to Multan, and, probably, established themselves there, and at Lahore, within a century. Cashmere they did not occupy till a much later date; and the Rāja Tarangíní takes no notice of any attacks upon it. But the Chinese have recorded an application from the king of Cashmere, Chin-tho-lo-pi-li,—evidently the Chandrápida of the Sanskrit,—for aid against the Arabs, about A. D. 713: Gildemeister, p. 13. Although, therefore, not actually settled at the Punjab so early as the beginning, they had commenced their incursions, and had,

* The ordinary reading is: सिन्धुतटदार्वाकीर्वीचन्द्रभागाकारमीरविषयान्ब्राह्मणाश्चेच्छादयः शूद्रा भोक्ष्यन्ति । “Unregenerate tribes, barbarians, and other Śúdras will rule over the banks of the Indus, and the regions of the Dárvika, of the Chandrabhága, and of Kásmíra.”

One of my MSS. has, instead of -दार्वाको, -पर्यन्तो. On this reading, we must translate: “the regions of the Chandrabhágá and of Kásmíra, as far as the banks of the Indus.”

My best copies of the commentary have the following: दार्वाकीर्वी । देविकातटभवा भूमिः । The Dárvika river is, thus, identified with the Deviká. For the Deviká, see Vol. II., p. 144, text, and note 4; and p. 147, notes 2 and †.

The Translator’s “Dárvika”, so far as I know, is nothing.

† Dr. Gildemeister does not appear to have found the last two variants here given.

These will, all, be contemporary monarchs, reigning over the earth;—kings of churlish spirit, violent tem-no doubt, made good their footing, by the end, of the eighth, or commencement of the ninth, century. This age of the Purāṇa is compatible with reference to the contemporary race of Gupta kings, from the fourth or fifth to the seventh or eighth century;* or, if we are disposed to go further back, we may apply the passage to the Greek and Indo-Scythian princes. It seems more likely to be the former period; but, in all such passages, in this or other Purāṇas, there is the risk that verses inspired by the presence of Mohammedan rulers may have been interpolated into the original text. Had the Mohammedans of Hindusthān, however, been intended by the latter, the indications would have been more distinct, and the localities assigned to them more central. Even the Bhāgavata, the date of which we have good reason for conjecturing to be the middle of the twelfth century, and which influenced the form assumed, about that time, by the worship of Vishnū, cannot be thought to refer to the Mohammedan conquerors of Upper India. It is there stated that “rulers fallen from their castes, or Śūdras, will be the princes of Saurāshtra, Avanti, Ābhira, Śūra, Arbuda, and Mālava;† and barbarians, Śūdras, and other outcastes, not enlightened by the Vedas, will possess Kāśmīra, Kauntī, and the banks of the Chandrabhāgā and Indus:”

per, and ever addicted to falsehood and wickedness. They will inflict death on women, children, and cows; they will seize upon the property of their subjects;* they will be of limited power, and will, for the most part, rapidly rise and fall: their lives will be short, their desires insatiable; and they will display but little piety. The people of the various countries intermingling with them will follow their example; and, the barbarians being powerful in the patronage of the princes, whilst purer tribes are neglected, the people will perish.¹ Wealth and piety will decrease day by day, parts of India, long before that time. (Account of Hindu Sects, Asiatic Researches, Vol. XVI.†) It cannot, therefore, allude to Mohammedans. By specifying the princes as seceders from the Vedas, there is no doubt that the barbarians and outcastes intended are so only in a religious sense; and we know, from indisputable authorities, that the western countries, Gujerat, Ābu, Mālava, were the chief seats, first of the Buddhists, and, then, of the Jainas, from a period commencing, perhaps, before the Christian era, and scarcely terminating with the Mohammedan conquest. Inscriptions from Ābu; Asiatic Researches, Vol. XVI.

¹ The commentator, having, no doubt, the existing state of things in view, interprets the passage somewhat differently. The original is: तैश्च विमिश्रा जनपदास्तच्छीलवर्तिनो राजाश्च शुष्मिणो स्नेच्छाचार्याश्च : विपर्ययेण वर्तमानाः प्रजाः क्षयिष्यन्ति । The comment explains शुष्मिणः ‘strong’ (बलिनः), and adds: ‘the Mlechchhas will be in the centre, and the Āryas, at the end:’ स्नेच्छां मध्ये आर्याश्चान्ते रक्षितद्वयेण; meaning, if any thing, that the unbelievers are in the heart of the country, and the Hindus, on the borders;—a description, however, never correct, except as applicable to the governments, and, in that case, inconsistent with the text, which had, previously, represented the bordering countries in the hands of outcastes and heretics. All that the text intends is, to represent infidels and foreigners high in power, and the Brahmans depressed. It is not unlikely that the reading is erroneous,—notwithstanding the copies concur,—and that the passage should be, here, the same as that of the Vāyu:

तेर्विमिश्रा जगपदा स्नेच्छाचाराश्च सर्वशः ।

“Intermixed with them, the nations, adopting everywhere, barbaric institutions, exist in a state of disorder; and the subjects shall be destroyed;” the expression Mlechchhāchārāś cha; being used instead of Mlechchhāś chāryāś cha. A passage similar to that of the text—noticing the intermixture of Hindus and barbarians,—occurs in a different place (see Vol. II., p. 130, note 1§), and designates the condition of India in all ages. At no period has the whole of the population followed Brahmanical Hinduism.

Herewith, as to the words आर्या स्नेच्छाः,—or आर्यस्नेच्छाः, as most MSS. of the Matsya-purāṇa read,—agrees the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa, as known to me. One of my copies of the Vāyu-purāṇa, too, has आर्यस्नेच्छाः । which the commentator explains, "a thousand years and a hundred with fifteen over": वर्षसहस्रं पञ्चदशोत्तरं शतं च । He notices, nevertheless,—although he does not attempt to account for the discrepancy,—that the total period from Parikshit to Nanda was, actually, according to the duration of the different intermediate dynasties, as enumerated by all the authorities, fifteen centuries; viz.:

एतद्वर्षसहस्रं तु शतं पञ्चदशोत्तरम् ।

Magadha kings 1000 years.

Pradyota, &c. 138

Śiśunāga, &c. 362

1500 years.

The shorter period is best proportioned to the number of kings; for, reckoning from Sahadeva, (who was contemporary with Parikshit), and taking the number of the Bārhadrathas from the Matsya; we have thirty-two of them, five of the Pradyota race,§ and ten Śaiśunāgas; or, in all, forty-seven, which, as the divisor of 1050, gives rather more than twenty-two years to a reign. The Vāyu and the Matsya further specify the interval from Nanda to Pulomat (the last of the Andhra kings), as being 836¶ years; a total that does not agree exactly with the items previously specified :

* In Colonel Wilford's manuscript extract from the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa, the reading is पञ्चदशोत्तरं, thus making the period one of 1015 years.

62	854 years.

In either case, the average duration of reign is not improbable; as the highest number gives less than fourteen years to each prince. It is important to remember that the reign of Parikshit is, according to Hindu chronology, coeval with the commencement of the Kali age; and, even, therefore, taking the longest Paurāṇik interval, we have but sixteen centuries between Chandragupta,—or, considering him as the same with Sandrocottos, nineteen centuries B. C.,—for the beginning of the Kali age. According to the chronology of our text, however, it would be but B. C. 1415; to that of the Vāyu and Matsya, B. C. 1450; and to that of the Bhāgavata, 1515. According to Colonel Wilford's computations (Asiatic Researches, Vol. IX., Chronological Table, p. 116), the conclusion of the Great War took place B. C. 1370. Buchanan conjectures it to have occurred in the thirteenth century B. C. Vyāsa was the putative father of Pāṇdu and Dhṛitarāshṭra,* and, consequently, was contemporary with the heroes of the Great War. Mr. Colebrooke† infers, from astronomical data, that the arrangement of the Vedas, attributed to Vyāsa, took place in the fourteenth century B. C. Mr. Bentley brings the date of Yudhisṭhira, the chief of the Pāṇdavas, to 575 B. C. (Historical View of the Hindu Astronomy, p. 67); but the of authority is in favour of the thirteenth or fourteen' ary, in that conjunction, for a hundred years of men.¹ At the birth of Parikshit, they were in Maghā; and the Kali age then commenced, which consists of 1200 (divine) years. When the portion of Vishṇu (that had been born from Vasudeva) returned to heaven, then

B. C., for the war of the Mahābhārata, and the reputed commencement of the Kali age.

¹ A similar explanation is given in the Bhāgavata,* Vāyu, and Matsya Purāṇas; and like accounts, from astronomical writers, are cited by Mr. Colebrooke (Asiatic Researches, Vol. IX., p. 358).† The commentator on the Bhāgavata thus explains the notion: "The two stars (Pulaha and Kratu,) must rise or be visible before the rest; and whichever asterism is in a line south from the middle of those stars is that with which the seven stars are united; and so they continue for one hundred years."[‡] Colonel Wilford has, also, given a like explanation of the revolution of the Rishis (Asiatic Researches, Vol. IX., p. 83). According to Bentley, the notion originated in a contrivance of the astronomers to show the quantity of the precession of the equinoxes: "This was by assuming an imaginary line, or great circle, passing through the poles of the ecliptic and the beginning of the fixed Maghā, which circle was supposed to cut some of the stars in the Great Bear. * * * *. The seven stars in the Great Bear being called the Rishis, the circle so assumed was called the line of the Rishis; and, being invariably fixed to the beginning of the lunar asterism Maghā, the precession would be noted by stating the degree &c. of any moveable lunar mansion cut by that fixed line or circle, as an index." Historical View of the Hindu Astronomy, p. 65.

the Kali age commenced. As long as the earth was touched by his sacred feet, the Kali age could not affect it. As soon as the incarnation* of the eternal Vishṇu had departed, the son of Dharma, — Yudhisṭhira, † — with his brethren, ‡ abdicated the sovereignty. Observing unpropitious portents, consequent upon Kṛishṇa's disappearance, he placed Parikshit upon the throne. When the seven Rishis are in Pūrvāshādhā, then Nanda will begin to reign;¹ and thenceforward the influence of the Kali will augment. §

¹ The Bhāgavata has the same; and this agrees with the period assigned for the interval between Parikshit and Nanda, of 1050 years; as, including Maghā, we have ten asterisms to Pūrvāshādhā, or 1000 years. The Vāyu and Matsya are so very inaccurate, in all the copies consulted, that it is not safe to affirm what they mean to describe. | Apparently, they state, that, at the end of the Andhra dynasty, the Rishis will be in Kṛittikā, which furnishes other ten asterisms; the whole being nearly in accordance with the chronology of the text; as the total interval from Parikshit to the last of the Andhras is 1050 + 836 = 1886; and the entire century of each asterism, at the beginning and end of the series, need not be taken into account. The copies of the Matsya read:

* Amśa.

† Vide supra, pp. 102 and 159.

| The interesting passages thus referred to, consisting of some ten stanzas in each Purāṇa, and of about as many in the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa, are so extremely corrupt, in all my MSS., that I am unable to cite them. Specimens of what I find in my copies will be seen in notes in the two following pages.

The day that Kṛishṇa shall have departed from the earth will be the first of the Kali age, the duration of सप्तर्षयस्तथा ते स्युः प्रदीप्तिनापिना * समम् ।

"The seven Rishis are on a line with the brilliant Agni;" that is, with Kṛittikā, of which Agni is the presiding deity. † The Vāyu intends, in all probability, the same phrase; but the three copies have प्रतीपे राशिः, ‡ a very unintelligible clause. Again, it seems as if they intended to designate the end of the Andhra race as the period of a complete revolution, or 2700 years; for the Vāyu has:

सप्तविंशतिः शतैर्भवित्वा अन्धाणामेव पुनः । §

"The races at the end of the Andhras will be after 2700 years."

The Matsya has:

सप्तविंशतिः भावेन अन्धाणामेवकात् (?) पुनः । |

* Corrected, on the authority of all my MSS., from प्रदीप्तिनापिना, which breaks the metre.

† Whence Kṛittikā has Āgneya as a synonym. See Vol II., p. 277, ad calcem.

‡ The text of the Vāyu-purāṇa is, evidently, somewhat corrupt, hereabouts; but, in the context of the passage from which these words are taken, the computations are retrograde. Thus, we read:

महापद्माभिषेकात् जन्म यावत्परिचितः ।

एतद्वर्षसहस्रं तु ज्ञेयं पञ्चाशदुत्तरम् ॥

All my MSS. have, to be sure, at the beginning of this stanza, महा-देवाभिषेकात् । But the Matsya-purāṇa and the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa furnish the restoration of what is, without question, the true lection.

§ This line is immetrical and ungrammatical, and says nothing of "the end of the Andhras". My best MSS. have:

सप्तविंशतिः शतैर्भावित्वा अन्धाणां तेऽन्वयः पुनः ।

The corresponding verse of the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa is, in my sole copy, crowded with mistakes of transcription which you shall hear: it will continue for 360,000 years of mortals. After twelve hundred divine years shall have elapsed, the Kṛita age shall be renewed.

| I can but partially amend this incorrect verse by the aid of my MSS. One of them ends it with अन्धाणां खन्वयः पुनः । The Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa gives, at its close: तेऽन्वयः पुनः । Compare the reading in the note immediately preceding.

Thus, age after age, Brahmans, Kshatriyas, Vaiśyas, and Śūdras, excellent Brahman, men of great souls, have passed away by thousands, whose names, and the Vāyu adds:

अन्ध्रान्ते स चतुर्विंशे भविष्यन्ति शतं मता † ।

a passage which, though repeated in the MSS., is, obviously, most inaccurate; although it might, perhaps, be understood to intimate that the Rishis will be in the twenty-fourth asterism after the Andhra race: but that would give only 1400 years from Parikshit to Pulomat; whilst, if the twenty-fourth from Maghā was intended, it would give 2400 years; both periods being incompatible with previous specifications. The Matsya has a different reading of the second line, but one not much more satisfactory:

ब्राह्मणास्तु चतुर्विंशे भविष्यन्ति शतं समाः ।

"A hundred years of Brahmā will be in the twenty-fourth (asterism?)." In neither of these authorities, however, is it proposed, by the last-cited passages, to illustrate the chronology of princes or dynasties. The specification of the period, whatever it may be, is that of the era at which the evil influence of the Kali age is to become most active and irresistible.

* All my MSS. have पारिषिते; and शतं ends the verse, in one of them. So, perhaps, the Matsya-purāṇa is intended to read; and so the Vāyu-purāṇa and the Brahmānda-purāṇa actually do read, according to my copies.

† शतं समाः is, probably, the correct reading of the end of this verse. My best MSS. give, at its beginning, अन्ध्राणि ।

So, many who reigned before them, many who succeeded them, and many who are yet to come, have ceased, or will cease, to be. Earth laughs, as if smiling with autumnal flowers, to behold her kings unable to effect the subjugation of themselves.* I will repeat to you, Maitreya, the stanzas that were chanted by Earth, and which the Muni Asita† communicated to Janaka, whose banner was virtue: "How great is the folly of princes, who are endowed with the faculty of reason, to cherish the confidence of ambition, when they themselves are but foam upon the wave! Before they have subdued themselves, they seek to reduce their ministers, their servants, their subjects, under their authority; they then endeavour to overcome their foes.‡ 'Thus', say they, 'will we conquer the ocean-circled earth', and, intent upon their project, behold not death, which is not far off. It is through infatuation* that kings desire to possess me, whom their predecessors have been forced to leave, whom their fathers have not retained. Beguiled by the selfish love of sway, fathers contend with sons, and brothers with brothers, for my possession.† Foolishness has been the character of every king who has boasted 'All this earth is mine—everything is mine—it will be in my house for ever'; for he is dead. These were the verses, Maitreya, which Earth recited, and by listening to which, ambition§ fades away, like snow before the sun. I have now related to you the whole (account of the) descendants of the Manu, amongst whom have flourished kings endowed with

¹ The whole of this Book is dedicated to the biography of Kṛishṇā. Many of the Purāṇas omit this subject altogether, or only allude to it occasionally. In others, it is equally prominent. The Brahma Purāṇa gives the story exactly in the same words as our text. Which has the best right to them may be questioned; but, as it is usually met with, the Brahma Purāṇa is a very heterogeneous compilation. The Hari Vaṁśa has a narrative more detailed than that of the text, with additions and embellishments of its own. The Brahma Vaivarta, throughout, celebrates the acts of Kṛishṇa; and one portion of it, the Kṛishṇa Janma Khaṇḍa, especially describes his boyhood and youth. The incidents are the same, in general, as those in the text; but they are lost amidst interminable descriptions of Kṛishṇa's sports with the Gopis, and with his mistress Rādhā,—a person not noticed elsewhere: the whole is in a style indicative of a modern origin. The Agni Purāṇa and Padma Purāṇa (Uttara Kāṇḍa) have accounts of Kṛishṇa; but they are mere summaries, compiled, evidently, from other works. The principal authority for the adventures of Kṛishṇa is the Bhāgavata, the tenth Book of which successive transactions. I wish, now, to hear a more particular description, holy Rishi,* of the portion of Vishnú¹ that came down upon earth, and was born in is exclusively devoted to him. It is this work which has, no doubt, mainly extended the worship of Kṛishná; as its popularity is evinced by its having been translated into all the spoken languages of India professing to have a literature. The Prem-ságar, its Hindi version, is well known; but there are, also, translations in Maráthi, Telugu, Tâmil, &c. It does not seem likely, however, that the Vishnú Purāṇa has copied the Bhāgavata; for, although its greater conciseness may, sometimes, look like abridgment, yet the descriptions are, generally, of a more simple and antiquated character. Here, as usual, the Mahābhārata is, no doubt, the earliest extant authority; but it is not the earliest; for, whilst it omits to narrate most of his personal adventures unconnected with his alliance with the Pāṇdavas, it often alludes to them, and names, repeatedly, his capital, his wives, and his progeny. It also devotes a section, the Maṇṣala Parvan, to the destruction of the Yādavas. The story of Kṛishná, the prince and hero, must have been complete, when the Mahābhārata was compiled. It is doubtful, however, if Kṛishná, the boy, and his adventures at Vrindāvana, were not subsequent inventions. There are no allusions to them, in the poem, of an unsuspicious nature. The only ones that I have met with are contained in a speech by Śiṣupāla,†—Sabhā Parvan, Vol. I., p. 360,—in which he reviles Kṛishná; but they may easily have been interpolated. There may be others scattered through the poem; but I have not observed them.

¹ The notices of Kṛishná's origin and character, in various passages of the Mahābhārata, are by no means consistent, and indicate different dates, at least. In an address to him by Arjuna,—Vana Parvan, Vol. I., p. 426,—he is said to have passed thousands of years in various holy places, engaged in arduous the family of Yadu. Tell me, also, what actions he* performed in his descent, as a part of a part of the Supreme, upon the earth.¹

penances. He is frequently identified with the Rishi Nārāyaṇa; or he and Arjuna are said to be Nārāyaṇa and Nara:†

त्वं चैवाहं च कौन्तेय नरनारायणी स्मृती । :

In the Dharma-dharma, he is represented as a worshipper of Śiva, and propitiating him and his wife Umā, and receiving, as boons, from them, wives and children.§ As a warrior and prince, he is always on the scene; but he is, repeatedly, called an Amśa (or portion) of Vishnú; whilst, in a great number of places, he is identified with Vishnú or Nārāyaṇa, and is, consequently, 'all things.' This latter is his character, of course, amongst the Vaishnavas, agreeably to the text of the Bhāgavata: कृष्णस्तु भगवाम्स्वयं, "Kṛishná is the lord (Vishnú) himself."

¹ This is a still further diminution of Kṛishná's dignity: he is not even a part, but 'a part of a part,' Amśamśavatāra (अंश-शवतार). But this, the commentator maintains, is to be understood only of his form or condition as man, not of his power; as it suffered no diminution, either in its primary or secondary state,—as light, by suffusion, suffers no decrease; and a verse of the Veda is cited to this effect: "Though that which is full be taken from what is full, yet the remainder is undiminished:"

पूर्णं पूर्णमादाय पूर्णमेवावशिष्यते ।

"Kṛishná is, nevertheless, the very supreme Brahma; though it be a mystery how the Supreme should assume the form of a man:"

PARĀŚARA.—I will relate to you, Maitreya, the account which you have requested:—the birth of a part of a part of Vishṇu, and the benefits which his actions conferred upon the world.*

Vasudeva formerly married the daughter of Devaka, the illustrious Devakī,† a maiden of celestial beauty. After their nuptials, Kāṁsa, the increaser of the race of Bhoja, drove their car, as their charioteer. As they were going along, a voice in the sky, sounding aloud, and deep as thunder, addressed Kāṁsa, and said: “Fool that you are, the eighth child of the damsel whom you are driving in the car shall take away your life.”‡§ On hearing this, Kāṁsa drew his sword, and was about to put Devakī to death; but Vasudeva interposed, saying: “Kill not Devakī, great warrior. Spare her life:

and I will deliver to you every child that she may bring forth.” Appeased by which promise, and relying on the character of Vasudeva, Kāṁsa desisted from the attempt.

At that time, Earth, overburthened by her load, repaired to Mount Meru, to an assembly of the gods, and, addressing the divinities, with Brahmā at their head, related, in piteous accents, all her distress. “Agni,” said Earth, “is the progenitor of gold; Sūrya, of rays of light.”¹ The parent and guide* of me, and of all spheres, is the supreme† Nārāyaṇa, who is Brahmā, the lord of the lord of patriarchs; the eldest of the eldest-born; one with minutes and hours;‡ one with time; having form, though indiscrete. When the gods had heard these complaints of Earth, Brahmá, at their request, explained to them how her burthen might be lightened. "Celestials," said Brahmá, "all that Earth has said is, undoubtedly, true. I, Mahádeva,† and you all, are but Náráyāna: but the impersonations of his power are for ever mutually fluctuating; and excess or diminution is indicated by the predominance of the strong and the depression of the weak.‡ Come, therefore; let us repair to the northern coast of the milky sea, and, having glorified Hari, report to him what we have heard. He, who is the spirit of all, and of whom the universe consists, constantly, for the sake of Earth, descends, in a small portion of his essence, to establish righteousness below." Accordingly, Brahmá,§ attended by the gods, went to the milky sea, and there, with minds intent upon him, praised him whose emblem is Garuḍa.

cause.” The term ‘no cause’ may, the commentator says, designate fixed prescribed duties, the Nitya-karman; ‘cause’ may signify occasional sacrifices, the Kāmya-karman; neither of these can form any necessity for Vishnu’s descent, as they might of mere mortal’s being born on the earth. Or, Kāraṇa is explained to mean ‘obtaining pleasure’, from Ka (क) and Araṇa (अरण). ‘obtaining;’ obtaining happiness, or the cause of it, piety, virtue (धर्म); and, with the negative, Akāraṇa (अकारण), the reverse, pain, the consequence of wickedness (अधर्म). CHAPTER III.

Birth of Kṛishṇa: conveyed, by Vasudeva, to Mathurā, and exchanged with the new-born daughter of Yaśodā. Kāṁsa attempts to destroy the latter, who becomes Yoganidrā.

THUS eulogized by the gods, Devakī bore, in her womb, the lotos-eyed (deity), the protector of the world. The sun of Achyuta rose in the dawn of Devakī, to cause the lotos-petal of the universe to expand. On the day of his birth, the quarters of the horizon were irradiate with joy, as if moonlight was diffused over the whole earth.* The virtuous experienced new delight, the strong winds were hushed, and the rivers glided tranquilly, when Janārdana was about to be born. The seas,† with their own melodious murmurings, made the music, whilst the spirits and the nymphs of heaven danced and sang; the gods, walking the sky, showered down flowers upon the earth: and the (holy) fires glowed with a mild and gentle flame. At midnight, when the supporter of all was about to be born, the clouds emitted low pleasing sounds, and poured down rain of flowers.

As soon as Anakadundubhi: beheld the child, of the complexion of the lotos-leaves, having four arms, and the (mystic mark) Śrīvatsa on his breast, he addressed him in terms of love and reverence, and represented the fears he entertained of Kāṁsa. "Thou art born," said Vasudeva, "O sovereign god of gods, bearer of the shell, the mace, and the discus: but, now, in mercy, withhold this thy celestial form; for Kāṁsa will, assuredly, put me to death, when he knows that thou hast descended in my dwelling." Devakī, also, exclaimed: "God of gods, who art all things, who comprisest all the regions of the world in thy person,* and who, by thine illusion, hast assumed the condition of an infant, have compassion upon us, and forego this thy four-armed shape: nor let Kāṁsa, the impious son of Diti, know of thy descent."

To these applications Bhagavat answered, and said: "Princess, in former times, I was prayed to by thee, and adored, in the hope of progeny. Thy prayers have been granted: for I am born thy son."† So saying, he was silent. And Vasudeva, taking the babe, went out, that same night: for the guards were, all, charmed by Yoganidrā, as were the warders at the gates of Mathurā; and they obstructed not the passage of Anakadundubhi. To protect the infant from the heavy rain that fell from the clouds of night, Śeṣha, (the many-headed serpent), followed Vasudeva, and spread his hoods (above their heads); and, when the prince, with the child in his arms, crossed the Yamunā river, deep as it was, and dangerous with numerous whirlpools, the waters were stilled, and rose not above his knee.* On the bank he saw Nanda and the rest, who had come thither to bring tribute due to Kaṁsa; but they beheld him not.† At the same time, Yaśodā was, also, under the influence of Yoganidrā, whom she had brought forth, as her daughter, and whom (the prudent) Vasudeva took up, placing his son in her place, by the side of the mother. He then quickly returned home. When Yaśodā awoke, she found that she had been delivered of a boy, as black as the dark leaves of the lotos: and she was greatly rejoiced.

Vasudeva, bearing off the female infant (of Yasodā), reached his mansion, (unobserved, and entered), and placed the child in the bed of Devakī. He then remained as usual. The guards were awakened by the cry of the new-born babe; and, starting up, they sent word to Kaṁsa, that Devakī had borne a child. Kaṁsa immediately repaired to the residence of Vasudeva, where he seized upon the infant. In vain Devakī convulsively entreated him to relinquish the child: He

He is born who shall kill thee,—the mighty one amongst the gods, who was, formerly, thy destroyer. Now quickly secure him, and provide for thine own welfare." Thus having spoken, the goddess, decorated with heavenly garlands and perfumes, and hymned by the spirits of the air,† vanished from before the eyes of Bhojarāja.‡

KAMSA, much troubled in mind, summoned all his principal Asuras, Pralamba, Keśin, and the rest, and said to them: "O valiant chiefs, Pralamba, Mahābāhu,* Keśin, Dhenuka, Pūtanā, Arishṭa, and all the rest of you, hear my words. ON one occasion, whilst Madhusūdana was asleep underneath the waggon, he cried for the breast; and, kicking up his feet, he overturned the vehicle; and all the pots and pans* were upset and broken. The cowherds and their wives (hearing the noise,) came, exclaiming: "Ah! ah!" And there they found the child sleeping on his back. "Who could have upset the waggon?" said the cowherds. "This child," replied some boys, (who witnessed the circumstance). "We saw him," said they, "crying, and kicking the waggon with his feet; and so it was overturned. No one else had anything to do with it." The cowherds were exceedingly astonished at this account; and Nanda, not knowing what to think, took up the boy; whilst Yaśodā offered worship to the broken pieces of pots and to the waggon, with curds, flowers, fruit, and unbruised grain.†

The initiatory rites requisite for the two boys were performed by Garga,‡ who was sent to Gokula, by Vasudeva, for that purpose. He celebrated them without

In a short time, they began to crawl about the ground, supporting themselves on their hands and knees, and creeping everywhere, often amidst ashes and filth. Neither Rohiṇī nor Yaśodā was able to prevent them from getting into the cow-pens, or amongst the calves, where they amused themselves by pulling their tails. As they disregarded the prohibitions of Yaśodā, and rambled about together constantly, she became angry, and, taking up a stick, followed them, and threatened the dark-complexioned Kṛishṇa with a whipping.* Fastening a cord round his waist, she tied him to the wooden mortar;² and, being in a great passion, she said to him: "Now, you naughty boy, get away from hence, if you can." She then went about her domestic affairs. As soon as she

² The Ulūkhalā (or mortar) is a large wooden bowl, on a solid stand of timber; both cut out of one piece. The pestle is, also, of wood; and they are used chiefly for bruising or threshing unwinnowed corn, and separating the chaff from the grain. had departed, the lotos-eyed Kṛishṇa, endeavouring to extricate himself, pulled the mortar after him, to the space between two Arjuna-trees that grew near together. Having dragged the mortar between these trees, it became wedged awry there; and, as Kṛishṇa pulled it through, it pulled down the trunks of the trees.* Hearing the crackling noise, the people of Vraja came to see what was the matter: and there they beheld the two large trees, with shattered stems and broken branches, prostrate on the ground, with the child fixed between them, with a rope round his belly, laughing, and showing his white little teeth, just budded. It is hence that Kṛishṇa is called Dāmodara, — from the binding of the rope (dāman) round his belly (udara).¹† The elders of the cowherds, with Nanda at their head, looked upon these circumstances with alarm, considering them as of evil omen: "We cannot remain in this place," said they. Accordingly, they set off, with their waggons and their cattle, driving before them their bulls, and cows, and calves.* The fragments of their household stores they threw away; and, in an instant, Vraja was overspread with flights of crows. Vṛindāvana was chosen by Kṛishṇa, whom acts do not affect,† for the sake of providing for the nourishment of the kine; for there, in the hottest season, the new grass springs up as verdantly as in the rains. Having repaired, then, from Vraja to Vṛindāvana, the inhabitants of the former drew up their waggons in the form of a crescent.‡

¹ The Hari Vamśa, § not satisfied with the prodigies which had alarmed the cowherds, adds another, not found, it is believed, anywhere else. The emigration, according to that work, originates, not with the Gopas, but the two boys, who wish to go to Vṛindāvana; and, in order to compel the removal, Kṛishṇa converts the hairs of his body into hundreds of wolves, who so harass and alarm the inhabitants of Vraja, that they determine to abandon their homes.

CHAPTER VII.

Kṛishṇa combats the serpent Kālīya: alarm of his parents and companions: he overcomes the serpent, and is propitiated by him: commands him to depart from the Yamunā river to the ocean.

ONE day, Kṛishṇa, unaccompanied by Rāma, went to Vṛindāvana, He was attended by (a troop of) cow-herds, and gaily decorated with wild flowers. On his way, he came to the Yamunā,* which was flowing in sportive undulations, and sparkling with foam, as if with smiles, as the waves dashed against the borders. Within its bed, however, was the fearful pool of the serpent Kālīya,†—boiling with the fires of poison, †; from the fumes of which, large trees upon the bank were blighted, and by whose waters, when raised, by a gale, into the air, birds were scorched. Beholding this dreadful (lake), which was like another mouth of death, Madhusūdana reflected, that the wicked and poisonous Kālīya, who had been vanquished by him—self (in the person of Garuḍa), and had been obliged to fly from the ocean (where he had inhabited the island Ramaṇaka), must be lurking at its bottom, and defiling the Yamunā, the consort of the sea, so that neither men nor cattle could slake their thirst by her waters. Such being the case, he determined to dislodge the Nāga, and enable the dwellers of Vraja to frequent the vicinage without fear:* for it was the especial purpose, he considered, of his descent upon earth, to reduce to subjection all such violators of law. “Here,” thought he, “is a Kadamba-tree, which is sufficiently near. I can climb up it, and thence leap into the serpent’s pool.” Having thus resolved, he bound his clothes† tightly about him, and jumped, boldly,‡ into the lake of the serpent-king. The waters, agitated by his plunge amidst them, were scattered to a considerable distance from the bank; and, the spray falling upon the trees, they were immediately set on fire by the heat of the poisonous vapour combined with the water; and the whole horizon was in a blaze.§ Kṛishṇa, having dived into the pool, struck his arms in defiance;¹ and the snake-

¹ The commentator says, this means nothing more than that the waters of the pool were hot: विषाग्निना शृतं तप्तवारि यस्मिन् ।§ I do not know if hot springs have been found in the bed, or on the borders, of the Jumna. The hot well of Sitā-kuṇḍ, near Mongir, is not far from the Ganges.

* Kālindi, one of its synonyms, in the original. The Yamunā is so called from Mount Kalinda, whence it rises.

† In some MSS., he is here called Kālīya; and so his name is ordinarily written in the sequel. For his origin and abode, see Vol. II., p. 74, note 1, and p. 210, note 1.

king, hearing the sound, quickly came forth. His eyes were coppery red; and his hoods were flaming with deadly venom. He was attended by many other (powerful and) poisonous snakes,--feeders upon air, and by hundreds of serpent-nymphs, decorated with rich jewels, whose ear-rings glittered with trembling radiance, as the wearers moved along.* Coiling themselves around Kṛishṇa, they, all, bit him with teeth from which fiery poison was emitted. Kṛishṇa's companions, beholding him in the lake, encompassed by the snakes twining around him, ran off to Vraja, lamenting and bewailing aloud his fate.† "Kṛishṇa," they called out, "has foolishly plunged into the serpent's pool, and is there bitten to death by the snake-king. Come and see." The cowherds, and their wives, and Yaśodā, hearing this news, which was like a thunderbolt, ran, immediately, to the pool, frightened out of their senses, and crying: "Alas! alas! where is he?" The Gopis were retarded by Yaśodā, who, in her agitation, stumbled and slipped at every step;‡ but Nanda, and the cowherds, and the invincible§ Rāma hastened to (the banks of) the Yamunā, eager to assist Kṛishṇa. What is a herd of heifers, without its lord? What is Vraja, without Kṛishṇa? Deprived of him, we will go no more to Gokula. The forest will lose its delights; it will be like a lake without water.† When this dark-lotos-leaf-complexioned Hari is not present, there is no joy in the maternal dwelling. How strange is this! And, as for you, ye cowherds, how, poor beings, will you live amidst the pastures, when you no longer behold the brilliant lotos-eyes of Hari?‡ Our hearts have been wiled away by the music of his voice.§ We will not go, without Puṇḍarikāksha, to the folds|| of Nanda. Thus reminded (of his real character, by Rāma), Kṛishṇa smiled gently, and (speedily) extricated himself from the coils of the snakes. Laying hold of the middle hood of their chief with both his hands, he bent it down, and set his foot upon the hitherto unbended head, and danced upon it in triumph. Wherever the snake attempted to raise his head, it was again trodden down; and many bruises were inflicted on the hood, by the pressure of the toes of Kṛishṇa.* Trampled upon by the feet of Kṛishṇa, as they changed position in the dance, the snake fainted, and vomited forth much blood.† Beholding the head and neck of their lord thus injured, and the blood flowing (from his mouth), the females‡ of the snake-king implored the clemency of Madhusūdana. AGAIN, tending upon the herds, Rāma and Keśava* wandered through the woods, and (on one occasion), came to a pleasing grove of palms, where dwelt the fierce demon† Dhenuka,‡ feeding upon the flesh of deer.§ Beholding the trees covered with fruit, and desirous of gathering it, the cowherds called out (to the brothers), and said: “See, Rāma; see, Kṛishṇa! In this grove, belonging to the great Dhenuka, the trees are loaded with ripe fruit, the smell of which perfumes the air. We should like to eat some. Will you throw some down?”|| As soon as the boys had spoken, Sankarshaṇa and Kṛishṇa (shook the trees, and) brought down the fruit on the ground. sovereigns of the earth. Assuming human duties, and maintaining the human character, they strayed through the thickets, amusing themselves with sports suited to their mortal species and condition, in swinging on the boughs of trees,* or in boxing, and wrestling,† and hurling stones.

Having observed the two lads thus playing about, the Asura Pralamba, seeking (to devour) them, came amongst the cowherd boys, in the shape of one of themselves, and mixed, without being suspected, in their pastimes;‡ for he thought, that, thus disguised, it would not be difficult to find an opportunity to kill, first, Kṛishṇa, and, afterwards, the son of Rohiṇi.§ The boys commenced playing at the game of leaping like deer, two and two together.¶ Govinda was matched with Śrīdāman,‡‡ and Balarāma, with Pralamba:

¹ Jumping with both feet at once,—as deer bound,—two boys together. The one that holds out longest, or comes to a given point first, is the victor; and the vanquished is then bound to carry him to the goal, if not already attained, and back again to the starting-post, on his shoulders. The Bhāgavata does not specify the game, but mentions that the vanquished carry the victors on their backs.

Balarāma,¶ beholding him like a scorched mountain,—his head crowned with a diadem, and his neck hung round with garlands, having eyes as large as cart-wheels, a fearful form, and shaking the earth with his tread,—called out, as he was carried away, to his brother: "Kṛishṇa, Kṛishṇa, I am carried off by some demon, disguised as a cowherd, and huge as a mountain. What shall I do? CHAPTER X.

Description of autumn. Kṛishṇa dissuades Nanda from worshipping Indra: recommends him and the Gopas to worship cattle and the mountains.

WHILST Rāma and Keśava were sporting, thus, in Vraja, the rainy season ended, and was succeeded by the season of autumn, when the lotos is full-blown. The (small) Śapharī fish, in their watery burrows,* were oppressed by the heat, like a man by selfish desires, who is devoted to his family.† The peacocks, no longer animated by passion, were silent amidst the woods, like holy saints: who have come to know the unreality of the world. The clouds, of shining whiteness, exhausted of their watery wealth, deserted the atmosphere, like those who have acquired wisdom, and depart from their homes.§ Evaporated by the rays of the autumnal sun, the lakes were dried up, like the hearts of men, when withered by the contact of selfishness.|| The (pellucid) waters of the season were suitably embellished by white water-lilies; as are the minds of the pure, by the apprehension of truth. Brightly, in the starry sky, shone the moon, with undiminished orb, like the saintly being who has reached the last stage of

Sent by him, the former bestow moisture upon the earth, whence springs the grain by which we and all embodied beings subsist; with which, also, and with water, we please the gods.§ Hence, too, these cows bear calves, and yield milk, and are happy, and well-nourished. So, when the clouds are seen distended with rain, the earth is neither barren of corn, nor bare of verdure; nor is man distressed by hunger. Indra,¶ the giver of water, having drunk the milk of earth by the solar rays, sheds it, again, upon the earth, for the sustenance of all the world. On this account, all sovereign princes offer, with pleasure, sacrifices to Indra, at the end

When Kṛishṇa† heard this speech from Nanda, in regard to the worship of Indra,‡ he determined to put the king of the celestials into a passion, and replied: We, father, are neither cultivators of the soil, nor dealers in merchandise: cows are our divinities:§ and we are sojourners in forests. There are four branches of knowledge,—logical, scriptural, practical, and political.¹ Hear me describe what practical science is. Agriculture, commerce, and tending of cattle,—the knowledge of these three professions constitutes practical science. || Agriculture is the subsistence of farmers; buying and selling, of traders. Kine are our support. Thus, the knowledge of means of support¶ is threefold. The object that is cultivated by any one should be, to him, as his chief divinity:* that should be venerated and worshipped, as it is his benefactor. He who worships the deity of another, and diverts from him the reward that is his due,† obtains not a prosperous station,‡ either in this world or in the next. Where the land ceases to be cultivated, there are bounds assigned, beyond which commences the forest: the forests are bounded by the hills; and so far do our limits extend. We are not shut in with doors, nor confined within walls; we have neither fields nor houses; we wander about, happily, wherever we list, travelling in our waggons.¹ The spirits of these mountains,§ it is said, walk the woods in whatever forms they will, or, in their proper persons, sport upon their own precipices.|| If they should be displeased with those who inhabit the forests, then, transformed to lions and beasts of prey, they will kill the offenders. We, then, are bound to worship the mountains, to offer sacrifices to cattle.¶ What have we to do with Indra?  Cattle and moun-

¹ These nomadic habits are entirely lost sight of in the parallel passages of those Purāṇas in which the juvenile life of Kṛishṇa is narrated. If the cowherds will attend to these suggestions, they will secure the favour of the mountain, of the cattle, and, also, mine.”

When Nanda and the other Gopas heard these words of Kṛishṇa, their faces expanded with delight, and they said that he had spoken well. “You have judged rightly, child,” exclaimed they. “We will do exactly as you have proposed, and offer adoration to the mountain.” Accordingly, the inhabitants of Vraja worshipped the mountain, presenting to it curds, and milk, and flesh; and they fed hundreds and thousands of Brahmans, and many other guests who came (to the ceremony),

The Hari Vamśa affords, here, as in so many other places, proofs of its Dakṣiṇī origin. It is very copious upon the homage paid to the cattle, and their decoration with garlands and plumes of peacocks’ feathers, of which our text takes no notice. But, in the south of India, there is a very popular festival, that of the Punjal, scarcely known in the north, when cattle are decorated and worshipped; a celebration which has, no doubt, suggested to the compiler of the Hari Vamśa the details which he describes.

Indra, offended by the loss of his offerings, causes heavy rain to deluge Gokula. Kṛishṇa holds up the mountain Govardhana, to shelter the cowherds and their cattle.

INDRA,* being thus disappointed of his offerings, was exceedingly angry, and thus addressed a cohort of his attendant clouds, called Sainvartaka. "Ho! clouds," he said, "hear my words, and, without delay, execute what I command. The insensate cowherd Nanda, assisted by his fellows, has withheld the usual offerings to us, relying upon† the protection of Kṛishṇa. Now, therefore, afflict the cattle, that are their sustenance, and whence their occupation: is derived, with rain and wind. Mounted upon my elephant, as vast as a mountain-peak, I will give you aid, in strengthening the tempest." When Indra‡ ceased, the clouds, obedient to his commands, came down, in a fearful storm of rain and wind, to destroy the cattle. In an instant, the earth, the points of the horizon, and the sky were, all, blended into one by the heavy and incessant shower. The clouds roared aloud, as if in terror of the lightning's scourge, and poured down uninterrupted torrents.¶ The whole earth was enveloped in (impent- rable) darkness by the thick and volumed clouds;

The cattle, pelted by the storm, shrunk, cowering, into the smallest size, or gave up their breath: * some covered their calves with their flanks; and some beheld their young ones carried away by the flood. The calves, trembling in the wind, looked piteously at their mothers, or implored, in low moans, as it were, the succour of Kṛishṇa.† Hari, beholding all Gokula agitated with alarm,—cowherds, cowherdresses, and cattle: all in a state of consternation,—thus reflected: "This is the work of Mahendra, in resentment of the prevention of his sacrifice: and it is incumbent on me to defend this station of herdsmen. I will lift up this spacious mountain from its stony base, and hold it up, as a large umbrella, over the cow-pens." § Having thus determined, Kṛishṇa immediately plucked up the mountain Govardhana, and held it (aloft), with one hand, in sport, saying‡ to the herdsmen: "Lo! the mountain is on high. Enter beneath it, quickly; and it will shelter you from the storm. Here you will be secure, and at your ease, in places defended from the wind. fall." Upon this, all the people, with their herds, and their waggons and goods, and the Gopis, distressed by the rain, repaired to the shelter of the mountain, which Kṛishṇa held, steadily, (over their heads). And Kṛishṇa, as he supported the mountain, was contemplated, by the dwellers of Vraja, with joy and wonder; and, as their eyes opened wide with astonishment and pleasure, the Gopas and Gopis sang his praise.* For seven days and nights did the vast clouds, sent by Indra, rain upon the Gokula of Nanda, to destroy its inhabitants; but they were protected by the elevation of the mountain: and the slayer of Bala, Indra, being foiled in his purpose, commanded the clouds to cease.† The threats of Indra‡ having been fruitless, and the heavens clear, all Gokula came forth (from its shelter), and returned to its own abode. Then, Kṛishṇa, in the sight of the surprised inhabitants of the forests, restored the great mountain Govardhana to its original site.¹

¹ It seems not unlikely that this legend has some reference to the caves or cavern-temples in various parts of India. A remarkable representation of it occurs upon the sculptured rocks of Mahulipoor. It is related, much to the same purport, in the Bhāgavata, &c. Śiśupāla, ridiculing the exploit, asserts that Govardhana was nothing more than an ant-hill.

AFTER Gokula had been saved by the elevation of the mountain, Indra* became desirous of beholding Kṛishṇa. The conqueror of his foes, accordingly, mounted his vast elephant, Airāvata,† and came to Govardhana, where the king of the gods beheld the mighty Dāmodara‡ tending cattle, and assuming the person of a cow-boy, and, although the preserver of the whole world, surrounded by the sons of the herdsmen. Above his head he saw Garuḍa, the king of birds,§ in visible to mortals,¶ spreading out his wings, to shade the head of Hari. Alighting from his elephant, and addressing him apart, Śakra, his eyes expanding with pleasure, thus spake to Madhusūdana: "Hear, Kṛishṇa, the reason why I have come hither,—why I have approached thee; for thou couldst not, otherwise, conceive it. The object of the gods is, now, methinks, accomplished; since, with thy single hand, thou hast raised aloft this chief of mountains. I have now come, by desire of the cattle,¹ grateful for their preservation, in order to install you as Upendra: and, as the Indra of the cows, thou shalt be called Govinda."²* Having thus said, Mahendra took a ewer†

¹ Gobhiṣ cha choditāḥ (गोभिश्च चोदितः); that is, 'delegated,' says the commentator, 'by the cow of plenty, Kāmadhenu, and other celestial kine, inhabitants of Goloka, the heaven of cows.' But this is, evidently, unauthorized by the text; as celestial cattle could not be grateful for preservation upon earth: and the notion of Goloka, a heaven of cows and Kṛishṇa, is a modern piece of mysticism, drawn from such sectarian works as the Brahma Vaivarta Purāṇa and Hari Vamśa.

² The purport of Indra's speech is to explain the meaning of two of Kṛishṇa's names, Upendra and Govinda. The commentators on the Amara Kośa agree in explaining the first, the younger brother of Indra, इन्द्राद्युजस्वाहुपेन्द्रः, conformably to the synonym that immediately follows, in the text of Amara, ‡ Indravaraja (इन्द्रावरजः), a name that occurs also in the Mahābhārata; Kṛishṇa, as the son of Devaki, who is an incarnation of Aditi, being born of the latter, subsequently, to Indra. Govinda is he who knows, finds, or tends, cattle; Gām vindati (गं विन्दति). The Paurāṇik etymology makes the latter the Indra (इन्द्र, quasi इक्ष्) of cows; and, in this capacity, he may well be considered as a minor or inferior Indra; such being the proper sense of the term Upendra (Upa in composition); as, Upa-purāṇa, 'a minor Purāṇa,' &c. The proper import of the word Upendra has, however, been anxiously distorted by the sectarian followers of Kṛishṇa. Thus, the commentator on our text asserts that Upa is, here, synonymous with Upari (उपरि), and that Upendratwa, 'the station of Upendra,' means 'rule in the heaven of heavens, Goloka;' a new creation of this sect, above Satya-loka, which, in the uncorrupt Paurāṇik system, is the highest of the seven Lokas: see Vol. II., p. 227. So the Hari Vamśa† makes Indra say:

ममोपरि यद्येन्द्रस्त्वं स्थापितो गोभिरीश्वरः ।

उपेन्द्र इति कृष्यः त्वां गाव्यन्ति दिवि देवताः ॥

"As thou, Kṛishṇa, art appointed, by the cows, Indra superior to me, therefore the deities in heaven shall call thee Upendra." The Bhāgavata does not introduce the name, though it, no doubt, alludes to it, in making the divine cow Surabhi, who is said to have come from Goloka with Indra, address Kṛishṇa, and say:

इन्द्रं गत्स्वामिविष्यामि ब्रह्मणा नोदितावयम् ।

"We, instructed by Brahmā, will crown you as our Indra." Accordingly, Kṛishṇa has the water of the Ganges thrown over him by the elephant of Indra; and Indra, the gods, and sages praise him, and salute him by the appellation of Govinda. The Hari Vamśa§ assigns this to Indra alone, who says: "I am only the Indra of the gods: thou hast attained the rank of Indra of the kine; and they shall, for ever, celebrate thee, on earth, as Govinda:"

अहं किलेन्द्रो देवानां त्वं गावामिन्द्रतां गतः ।

गोविन्द इति लोकास्त्वां शोष्यन्ति भुवि शाश्वतम् ॥

All this is very different from the sober account of our text, and is, undoubtedly, of comparatively recent origin.

Kṛishṇa praised by the cowherds: his sports with the Gopis: their imitation and love of him. The Rāsa-dance.

AFTER Śakra had departed, the cowherds said to Kṛishṇa,* whom they had seen holding up Govardhana: "We have been preserved, together with our cattle, from a great peril, by your supporting the mountain (above us). But this is very astonishing child's play, unsuitable to the condition of a herdsman: and all thy actions are those of a god. Tell us what is the meaning of all this.† Kāliya has been conquered in the lake;‡ Pralamba has been killed: Govardhana has been lifted up: our minds are filled with amazement. Assuredly, we repose at the feet of Hari, O thou of unbounded might.§ For, having witnessed thy power, we cannot believe thee to be a man. Yet, reverence be to thee, whether thou be a god, or a demon,† or a Yaksha, or a Gandharva, or whatever we may deem thee: for thou art our friend." When they had ended, Kṛishṇa remained silent, for some time,‡ as if hurt and offended,§ and then replied to them: "Herdsmen, if you are not ashamed of my relationship; if I have merited your praise; what occasion is there for you to engage in any discussion (concerning me)? If you have (any) regard for me; if I have deserved your praise: then be satisfied to know that I am your kinsman.¶ I am neither god nor Yaksha, nor Gandharva, nor Dānava. I have been born your relative; and you must not think differently of me." Upon receiving this answer, the Gopas held their peace, and went into the woods,¶ leaving Kṛishṇa apparently displeased.

But Kṛishṇa, observing the clear sky bright with the autumnal moon, and the air perfumed with the fragrance of the wild water-lily,†† in whose buds the clustering bees were murmuring their songs,‡‡ felt inclined to join with the Gopis in sport. One, calling out upon his name, then shrunk abashed; whilst another, more bold, and instigated by affection, pressed close to his side.‡ One, as she sallied forth, beheld some of the seniors (of the family), and dared not venture, contenting herself with meditating on Kṛishṇa.§ with closed eyes, and entire devotion, by which, immediately, all acts of merit were effaced by rapture, and all sin was expiated by regret at not beholding him;|| and others, again, reflecting upon the cause of the world, in the form of the supreme Brahma, obtained, by their sighing, final emancipation. Thus surrounded by the Gopīs, Kṛishṇa¶ thought the lovely moonlight night of autumn propitious to the Rāsa-dance.¹ Many of the Gopīs imitated the different actions of Kṛishṇa, and, in his absence, wandered through Vrindāvana, (representing his person). "I am Kṛishṇa," cries one. "Behold the elegance of my movements." "I am Kṛishṇa," exclaims another. "Listen to my song."* "Vile Kāliya, stay! For I am Kṛishṇa," is repeated by a third, slapping her arms in defiance. A fourth calls out: "Herdsmen, fear nothing; be steady: the danger of the storm is over. For, lo! I lift up Govardhana, for your shelter."† And a fifth proclaims: "Now let the herds graze where they will: for I have destroyed Dhenuka." Thus, in various actions of Kṛishṇa, the Gopīs imitated him, whilst away, and beguiled their sorrow by mimicking his sports.‡ Looking down upon the ground, one damsel calls to her friend, as the light down upon her body stands erect (with joy), and the lotoses of her eyes expand: "See, here are the marks of Kṛishṇa's feet, as he has gone along sportively, and left the impressions of the banner, the thunderbolt, and the goad.¹§ What lovely maiden has been his companpastime". Professor Wilson's collected works, Vol. I., p. 124; Vol. III., p. 147.

A similar phraseology, as if with design to convey an impressive idea of the divine nature,—absolute inertness and ataraxy being the sublimest attributes of the Supreme,—has been employed elsewhere than in India. "Every providential energy of deity, about a sensible nature, was said, by ancient theologians and philosophers, to be the sport of divinity." Thomas Taylor, Metamorphosis, &c. of Apuleius, p. 43, note 1.

For the scholastic Supreme of the Hindus,—which, only that it has neither mate nor emanations, may be compared with the Being of Gnosticism,—see note * to p. 253, supra. Brahma, the sole existence,—all else being sheer phantasm,—is pure spirit, and, therefore, incognitive. In short, it is not to be construed to the imagination, and is indistinguishable, save to the eye of faith, from a nonentity.

The Purāṇas generally modify this view, which is that of the Vedānta philosophy. See Vol. I., p. 41, note 2; and p. 172, notes 1 and *.

For extracts from Dr. South and Erigena, see the supplement to this note, at the end of the volume.

On which, one exclaimed "Kṛishṇa! Then Mādhava, coming amongst them, conciliated some with soft speeches, some, with gentle looks;§ and some he took by the hand; and the illustrious deity sported with them in the stations of the dance. As each of the Gopīs, however, attempted to keep in one place, close to the side of Kṛishṇa, the circle of the dance could not be constructed; and he, therefore, took each by the hand, and, when their eyelids were shut by the effects of such touch, the circle was formed.¹ Then proceeded the

¹ This is a rather inexplicit statement; * but the comment makes it clear. Kṛishṇa, it is said, in order to form the circle, takes each damsel by the hand, and leads her to her place. There he quits her; but the effect of the contact is such, that it deprives her of the power of perception; and she contentedly takes the hand of her female neighbour, thinking it to be Kṛishṇa's. The Bhāgavata† is bolder, and asserts that Kṛishṇa multiplied himself, and actually stood between each two damsels:

रासोत्सवः संप्रवृत्तो गोपीमण्डलमण्डितः ।

The Rāsa-dance, formed of a circle graced by the Gopis, was, then, led off by the lord of magic, Kṛishṇa having placed himself in the midst of every two of the nymphs. The Hari Vamśa‡ intimates the same, though not very fully:

dance, to the music of their clashing bracelets, and songs that celebrated, in suitable strain, the charms of

to mean, here, the Maṇḍala, or ring; and the 'couples', to imply that Kṛishṇa was between every two. He quotes a verse * to this effect, from some other Vaishṇava work: अङ्गनामङ्गनामन्तरे माधवो माधवं चान्तरे चाङ्गनाः * * * * संजगौ वेणुना देवकीनन्दनः । "Between each two damsels was Mādhava; and between each two Mādhavas was a nymph; and the son of Devakī played on the flute". For, in fact, Kṛishṇa is not only dancing with each, but also, by himself, in the centre. For this the commentator on the Hari Vamśa cites a passage from the Vedas:

वसे पुरुषो वपुषि ऊर्ध्वा तस्मै त्र्यम्बं रेरिहाणः ।†

Literally, "The many-formed (being) assumes (various) bodies. One form stood apart, occupying triple observance."† Now, if the verse be genuine, it probably refers to something that has little to do with Kṛishṇa; but it is explained to apply to the Rāsa; the form of Kṛishṇa being supposed to be meant, as wholly distinct from the Gopis, and yet being beheld, by every one of them, on each side and in front of her. In the meditation upon Kṛishṇa which is enjoined in the Brahma Vaivarta, he is to be contemplated in the centre of the Rāsa Maṇḍala, in association with his favourite Rādhā. But the Maṇḍala described in that work is not a ring of dancers, but a circle of definite space at Vṛindāvana, within which Kṛishṇa, Rādhā, and the Gopis divert them-

* The quotation seems to be prose.

† Rightly, and as quoted by the commentator:

पथा वसे पुरुषा वपुषूर्ध्वा तस्मै त्र्यम्बं रेरिहाणा ।

This is the first verse of Rigveda, III., LV., 14. Professor Wilson, in his translation of the Rigveda, Vol. III., p. 98, renders it thus: "The earth wears bodies of many forms: she abides on high, cherishing her year and a half old (cald)."

‡ This interpretation does not represent accurately the meaning of the verse as explained by the commentator on the Harivamśa. But the commentator's explanation is not worth stopping to set forth.

the autumnal season.* Kṛishṇa sang the moon of autumn,—a mine of gentle radiance; but the nymphs repeated the praises of Kṛishṇa alone.† At times, one of them, wearied by the revolving dance, threw her arms, ornamented with tinkling bracelets, round the neck‡ of the destroyer of Madhu;§ another, skilled in the selves, not very decorously. This work has, probably, given the tone to the style in which the annual festival, the Rāsa Yātrā, is celebrated, in various parts of India, in the month of Kārtika, upon the sun's entrance into Libra, by nocturnal dances, and representations of the sports of Kṛishṇa. A circular dance of men and women, however, does not form any prominent feature at these entertainments; and it may be doubted if it is ever performed. Some of the earliest labourers in the field of Hindu mythology have thought this circular dance to typify the dance of the planets round the sun (Maurice, Ancient History of Hindus, Vol. I., p. 108; Vol. II., p. 356); but there is no particular number assigned to the performers, by any of the Hindu authorities, beyond its limitation to sixty-four. At the Rāsa Maṇḍala of the Brahma Vaivarta, Rādhā is accompanied by thirty-six of her most particular friends amongst the Gopīs; but they are, each, attended by thousands of inferior personages; and none of the crowd are left without male multiples of Kṛishṇa. The only mysticism hinted at, in that Purāṇa, is, that these are, all, one with Kṛishṇa; the varied vital conditions of one spirit being represented by the Gopīs and the illusory manifestations of Kṛishṇa; he himself being supreme, unmodified soul.

art of singing his praises, embraced him.* The drops of perspiration from the arms of Hari were like fertilizing rain, which produced a crop of down upon the temples† of the Gopīs. Kṛishṇa sang the strain that was appropriate to the dance. The Gopīs repeatedly exclaimed "Bravo, Kṛishṇa!" to his song. When leading, they followed him; when returning,‡ they encountered him; and, whether he went forwards or backwards, they ever attended on his steps. Whilst frolicking thus with the Gopīs, they considered every instant, without him, a myriad§ of years; and, prohibited (in vain) by husbands, fathers, brothers, they went forth, at night, to sport with Kṛishṇa, the object of their affection.¶ Thus, the illimitable being, the benevolent remover of all imperfections, assumed the character of a youth amongst the females of the herdsmen of Vraja:¶ pervading their natures, and that of their lords, by his own essence, all-diffusive like the wind. For, even as, in all creatures, the elements of ether, fire, earth, water, and air are comprehended, so, also, is he everywhere present, and in all.

CHAPTER XIV.

Kṛishṇa kills the demon Arishṭa, in the form of a bull.

ONE evening, whilst Kṛishṇa * and the Gopīs were amusing themselves in the dance, the demon Arishṭa, disguised as a savage bull, † came to the spot, after having spread alarm through the station. His colour was that of a cloud charged with rain; he had vast; horns; and his eyes were like two (fiery) suns. As he moved, he ploughed up the ground with his hoofs; his tongue was repeatedly licking his lips; his tail was erect; the sinews of his shoulders were firm, and, between them, rose a hump of enormous dimensions; his haunches were soiled with ordure, and he was a terror to the herds; his dewlap hung low; and his face was marked with scars, from butting against the trees. § Terrifying all the kine, the demon who perpetually haunts the forests in the shape of a bull, destroying hermits and ascetics, advanced. ¶ Beholding an animal of such a formidable aspect, the herdsmen and their women were exceedingly frightened, and called aloud on Kṛishṇa, who came to their succour, shouting, and slapping his arms in defiance. ¶ When the Daitya heard the noise, he turned upon his challenger; and, fixing his eyes and pointing his horns at the belly of Keśava, he ran furiously upon the youth. Kṛishṇa stirred not from his post, but, smiling in sport and derision, awaited the near approach of the bull, when he seized him, as an alligator* would have done, and held him, firmly, by the horns, whilst he pressed his sides with his knees. Having thus humbled his pride, and held him captive by his horns,† he wrung his throat, as if it had been a piece of wet cloth, and, then, tearing off one of the horns, he beat the fierce demon with it, until he died, vomiting blood from his mouth. Seeing him slain, the herdsmen glorified Kṛishṇa,‡ as the companies of the celestials of old praised Indra,§ when he triumphed over (the Asura) Jambha.¶

CHAPTER XV.

Kaṁsa informed, by Nārada, of the existence of Kṛishṇa and Balarāma: he sends Keśin to destroy them, and Akrūra, to bring them to Mathurā.

AFTER (these things had come to pass,) Arishṭa the bull-demon,* and Dhenuka, and Pralamba had been slain, Govardhana had been lifted up, the serpent Kāliya had been subdued, the two trees had been broken, the female fiend Pūtana had been killed, and the wagon had been overturned, Nārada went to Kaṁsa, and related to him the whole, beginning with the transference of the child from Devakī to Yaśodā. Hearing this from Nārada, Kaṁsa was highly incensed with Vasudeva, and bitterly reproached him, and all the Yādavas, in an assembly of the tribe. Then, reflecting what was to be done, he determined to destroy both Rāma and Kṛishṇa, whilst they were yet young, and before they had attained to manly vigour; for which purpose he resolved to invite them from Vraja, under pretext of the solemn rite of the lustration of arms,† when he would engage them in a trial of strength with his chief boxers, Chānūra and Mushṭika, by whom they would, assuredly, be killed.‡ “I will send,” he said, “the noble Yadu,§ Akrūra, the son of Swaphalka,¶ to Gokula, to bring them hither. I will order the fierce Keśin, who haunts the woods of Vṛindāvana, to attack them; and he is of unequalled might, and will surely kill them.* Or, if they arrive here, my elephant, Kuvalayápīḍa, shall trample to death these two cow-boy sons of Vasudeva." Having thus laid his plans to destroy Rāma and Janārdana, the impious Kāṁsa sent for the heroic Akṛūra, and said to him: "Lord of liberal gifts,¹ attend to my words, and, out of friendship for me, perform my orders. Ascend your chariot, and go hence to the station of the herdsman Nanda.† Two vile boys,‡ portions of Vishnu, have been born there, for the express object of effecting my destruction. On the fourteenth lutation I have to celebrate the festival of arms;² and I wish them to be brought here, by you,

² Dhanur-maha (धनुर्मह). The same phrase occurs in the different authorities. In its ordinary acceptation, it would imply any military festival. There is one of great celebrity, which, in the south of India, closes the Daśaharā, or festival of Durgā, when military exercises are performed, and a field is ravaged, as typical of the opening of a campaign. Worship is paid to military implements. The proper day for this is the Vijaya daśamī, or tenth of the light half of Āświna, falling about the end of September or beginning of October. When they are out of the way, I will put to death Vasudeva himself, the cowherd Nanda, and my foolish father, Ugrasena; and I will seize upon the herds and flocks,‡ and all the possessions, of the rebellious Gopas, who have ever been my foes. CHAPTER XVI.

Keśin, in the form of a horse, slain by Kṛishṇa: he is praised by Nārada.

KEŚIN, confiding in his prowess, having received the commands of Kāṁsa, set off to (the woods of) Vṛindāvana, with the intention of destroying Kṛishṇa. He came (in the shape of a steed), spurning the earth with his hoofs, scattering the clouds with his mane, and springing, in his paces, beyond the orbits of the sun and moon. The cowherds and their females, hearing his neighings, were struck with terror, and fled to Govinda for protection, calling upon him to save them. In a voice deep as the roaring of the thunder-cloud, Kṛishṇa replied to them: "Away with these fears of Keśin! Is the valour of a hero annihilated by your alarms? What is there to apprehend from one of such little might, whose neighings are his only terrors; a galloping and vicious steed, who is ridden by the strength of the Daityas?*" Come on, wretch! I am Kṛishṇa; and I will knock all thy teeth down thy throat, as the wielder of the trident† did to Púshan.¹

Thus defying him to combat, Govinda went to encounter Keśin. The demon ran upon him, with his mouth opened wide; but Kṛishṇa,* enlarging the bulk of his arm, thrust it into his mouth, and wrenched out the teeth, which fell from his jaws like fragments of white clouds.† Still, the arm of Kṛishṇa, in the throat of the demon, continued to enlarge, like a malady increasing, from its commencement, till it ends in dissolution.‡ From his torn lips the demon vomited foam and blood; his eyes rolled in agony; his joints gave way; he beat the earth with his feet;§ his body was covered with perspiration; he became incapable of any effort. The formidable demon, having his mouth rent open by the arm of Kṛishṇa, fell down, torn asunder, like a tree struck by lightning. He lay separated into two portions, each having two legs, half a back, half a tail, one ear, one eye, and one nostril. Kṛishṇa stood,¶ unharmed and smiling, after the destruction of the demon, surrounded by the cowherds, who, together with their women, were filled with astonishment at the death of Keśin, and glorified the amiable god with the lotos-eyes. Nārada, the Brahman,†† invisible, seated

It is, also, derived from the legend of his origin from 'a hair' (vide supra, p. 258, note 2). And, again, Keśa is said to purport 'radiance' or 'rays', whether of the sun, or moon, or fire,—all which are the light of Kṛishṇa,—whence he is called Keśava, 'the rayed' or 'radiant'. Regarding the Kāśis and the two Paurāṇik Divodāsas, I have elsewhere written as follows: "The Rigveda affords no warrant for connecting with the Kāśis any person whom it mentions. It speaks of Divodāsa, and it speaks of Pratardana; but only in later literature are they called father and son, and rulers of the Kāśis; and, where Kātyāyana, in his Rig-vedānukramanikā, characterizes the latter as Kāśirāja, he may have expressed himself metachronically, under the influence of a modern tradition which he and his contemporaries accepted. As to the former, we find, indeed, in post-vaṇḍik books, two Divodāsas: into whom a single personage seems to have been parted. One of them is son of Bhadrīśwa, as in the Rigveda; but it is the other, the son of Bhimaratha, and father of Pratardana, that is called king of the Kāśis. It may be added, that there is no ground for considering Bhadrīśwa and Bhimaratha to be two names of one and the same person." Benares, &c., p. 9, note 1.

It is, in substance, as follows. Jarāsandha's father, King Bṛihadratha, had two wives. After having long been barren, each of them bore him half of a son. These moieties, contemplated with horror, were cast away. Jarā, a female ghoul, that she may carry off the pieces the more readily, lays them together. The halves coalesce, and become endowed with life. The boy thus patched up wails out; whereupon the servants sally forth from Bṛihadratha's palace, and the king and queen with them. The ghoulless assumes a human form, and makes over the infant to its father. She discloses that she has been worshipped, in ignorance of her real character, as the king's house-goddess, and adds, that, in gratitude for the homage done her, she has restored the monarch his son, the halves of whom, she alleges, were united into an animated whole quite independently of her will or power. Bṛihadratha subsequently directs his subjects, the inhabitants of Magadha, to celebrate a great festival in Jarā's honour. Herein, as Dr Muir repeats after Professor Lassen, we are furnished with “an instance of the local adoration of particular deities in ancient India.”

Of the two commentaries on Book V., Ratnagarbha's and Śrīdhara's, the Translator has relied on the former, most generally, and, in speaking of "the commentator", refers thereto, except in those scattered cases where I have noted to the contrary. These two commentaries—the latter of which was inaccessible to me, when preparing my annotations on the first twelve Chapters of Book V.—coincide, in a noticeable degree, not only in the authorities which they adduce, but in their elucidations,—as to their general drift, and, sometimes, as to the very words in which they are delivered. Ratnagarbha's, it seems from internal evidence, is the more recent composition.
- In the Translator's note to which this annotation is appended, two explanations are cited, as if occurring "in different copies". They are, in fact, from different commentaries,—Ratnagarbha's and Śrīdhara's, respectively. The words of Śrīdhara, as professedly copied by Professor Wilson, deviate somewhat, as usual, from a punctual representation.

P. 326, notes, l. 6 ab infra. In a sermon by Dr. South, preached at Westminster Abbey, Feb. 22, 1684—5, is the following passage: "T is, as it were, the sport of the Almighty, thus to baffle and confound the sons of men by such events as both cross the methods of their actings and surpass the measure of their expectations."

With the Reclus of the Gnostics compare "the superessential one of Plotinus, to whom neither Intelligence, nor Self-consciousness, nor Life, nor even Being can be attributed." Coleridge's Aids to Reflection, p. 158, (ed. of 1836).

Erigena sublimates deity into something well-nigh as shadowy: "Deus itaque nescit se quid est, quia non est quid; incomprehensibilis quippe in aliquo, et sibi ipsi et omni intellectui." De Divisione Naturae, II., 28 (ed. Migne, col. 589).

It seems, that, in the sphere of the profundities, the election lies, to most minds, between something like this and the popular theologies which offer, as their first principle, a Supreme constituted in the image of man.

P. 329, note *. The quotation referred to, when read unmangled, turns out to be half of a Jānaki stanza:

चक्रनामङ्गनामन्तरे माधवो माधवं माधवं चान्तरे चाङ्गना ।
इत्थमाकल्पिते मण्डले मध्यगः संजगौ वैष्णवा देवकीनन्दनः ॥

P. 331, notes, l. 3 ab infra. Read चपितमहितः.

Caxton.—THE GAME OF CHESS. A reproduction of William Caxton's Game of Chess, the first work printed in England. 4to. 1862. In cloth, £1 1s. Ditto, full morocco antique, £2 2s.

Frequently as we read of the works of Caxton, and the early English Printers, and of their black letter books, very few persons have ever had the opportunity of seeing any of the productions, and forming a proper estimate of the ingenuity and skill of those who first practised the "Noble Art of Printing."

This reproduction of the first work printed by Caxton at Westminster, containing 23 woodcuts, is intended, in some measure, to supply this deficiency, and bring the present age into somewhat greater intimacy with the Father of English Printers.

The type has been carefully imitated, and the cuts traced from the copy in the British Museum. The paper has also been made expressly, as near as possible like the original.

Current (The) Gold and Silver Coins of all Countries, their Weight and Fineness, and their Intrinsic Value in English Money, with Facsimiles of the Coins. By Leopold C. Martin, of Her Majesty's Stationery Office, and Charles Trübner. In one volume, medium 8vo., 141 Plates, printed in Gold and Silver, and representing about 1,000 Coins, with 160 pages of Text, handsomely bound in embossed cloth, richly gilt, with Emblematical Designs on the Cover, and gilt edges. 1863. £2 2s.

This work, which the Publishers have much pleasure in offering to the Public, contains a series of the Gold and Silver Coins of the whole world, current during the present century. The collection amounts, numerically, to nearly a thousand specimens, comprising, with their reverses, twice that number; and the Publishers feel confident that it is as nearly complete as it was possible to make it.

It seems almost superfluous to allude to the utility of the work. It is evident that it must become a highly valuable Handbook to the Bullion-dealer and the Money-changer; and to the Merchant and Banker it will prove a sure and safe work of reference, from the extreme accuracy of its details and computations.

The elegance and splendour of the work admirably adapt it as a choice and instructive ornament to the drawing room table; the amusement to be found in the comparison of the taste of different countries as exemplified in their Coins, may chase away many a half-hour's ennui.

In the valuation of the substantial Coins, and the notation of their relative worth in English money, the minutest accuracy has been observed, as also in the statements of their relative purity, which are given according to the legal Mint regulations of each country. In exceptional cases only, where official information was not to be obtained of the weight and fineness of the Coins, assays as found at different places, are reported.

The exact weight of the Coins is expressed both in English troy grains and in French grammes, and the fineness by the English technical terms, as well as in French millièmes; the general tendency of our time towards the decimal metrical system making such a notation almost indispensable. For easier reference, tables of British reports for millions of gold and silver have been affixed.

"It is probably not generally known, that among the numerous learned associations of the British metropolis there exists one called the Philobiblion Society. This somewhat exclusive union of bibliographic philosophers was established in 1853, under the auspices of the late Prince Consort, and after the model of the French Academy—it being one of the fundamental rules of the Society never to debase in number the immortal Forty. . . . The statutes of the Philobiblion provided for the annual issue of a volume of historical, biographical, critical, and other essays, contributed by any of the forty members, and printed in a very limited edition—not a single book to be disposed of for money. To enhance the value of the works thus published, it was arranged that every member should receive only two copies of each volume, to be signed by the president and secretary of the society, and with the name of the possessor on the title-page. . . . The contents of this half-a-dozen semi-mysterious and rare works have just been revealed in a curious little book published by Messrs. Trübner and Co., and got up in exact imitation of the products of Caxton's press. The work is dedicated by M. Octave Delepierre, the author, to the Duke D'Aumale, the patron of the Philobiblion since the decease of Prince Albert, and one of the leading members from the beginning."—Spectator.

"Two unpretending but very useful books have been lately compiled by M. Delepierre and Mr. Nichols. The former, whose 'History of Flemish Literature' has already been noticed, these columns, has printed an abstract of the multifarious works issued by the Philobiblion Society of London, of which, by the way, he is the honorary secretary. . . . How great a benefit such catalogues as these are to historical and literary enquirers can only be estimated by those who have experienced the want of them. . . . The gentlemen whose works we have named in head of this paper, have done, in their way and degree, a service to literature which is compared with those rendered by the compilers of the Calendars of the State Paper Thursday Review.

"M. Delepierre, the secretary, is also a very important contributor. By way of thank to public he issues this 'Analyse,' which is a descriptive catalogue of the precious selected by the society."—Literary Budget.

"The account which M. Delepierre gives of these volumes makes us regret that more have remained, as he tells us, almost unknown to the public, since many of the editions appear to be of much interest."—Pertheuon.

Fichte.—ON THE NATURE OF THE SCHOLAR, AND ITS CAUSE. By Johann Gottlieb Fichte. Translated from the German by William Smith. Second Edition. Cloth. Post 8vo. Pp. vii. and 131. 1848. 4s.

"With great satisfaction we welcome this first English translation of an author who occupies the most exalted position as a profound and original thinker; as an irresistible orator in the cause of what he believed to be the truth; as a thoroughly honest and heroic man. The appearance of any of his works in our language is, we believe, a perfect novelty. His orations are admirably fitted for their purpose; so grand is the position taken by the lecturer, and so irresistible their eloquence." Edinburgh Review.

"This work must inevitably arrest the attention of the scientific physician by the spirituality of its doctrine, and the pure morality it teaches. Shall we be presumptuous if we recommend these views to our professional brethren? or if we say to the enlightened and thoughtful, the serious. This—if you be true scholars—is your position. They are full of truth, and a higher morality than that of more noble principles than these." British and Foreign Medical-Chirurgical Review.

Fichte.—THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE PRESENT AGE. By Johann Gottlieb Fichte. Translated from the German by William Smith. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. xi. and 271. 1847. 6s.

"We accept these lectures as a true and most admirable delineation of the present age; and on this ground alone we should bestow on them our heartiest recommendation; but it is because they teach us how we may rise above the age, that we bestow on them our most emphatic praise.

"He makes us think, and perhaps more sublimely than we have ever formerly thought, but it is only in order that we may the more nobly act.

"As a majestic and most stirring utterance from the lips of the greatest German prophet, we trust that the book will find a response in many an English soul, and potently help to regenerate English society."—The Critic.

Fichte.—THE VOCATION OF A SCHOLAR. By Johann Gottlieb Fichte. Translated from the German by William Smith. Post 8vo. cloth. Pp. 78, sewed, 1847. 2s.

"The Vocation of a Scholar . . . is distinguished by the same high moral tone, and manly, vigorous expression' which characterise all Fichte's works in the German, and is nothing lost in Mr. Smith's clear, unembarrassed, and thoroughly English translation."—Douglas Jerrold's Newspaper.

"We are glad to see this excellent translation of one of the best of Fichte's works presented to the public in a very neat form . . . No class needs and earnest and sincere spirit more than the literary class; and therefore the 'Vocation of the Scholar,' the 'Guide of the Human Race,' written in Fichte's most earnest, most commanding temper, will be welcomed in its English dress by public writers, and be beneficial to the cause of truth."—Economist.

Fichte.—THE VOCATION OF MAN. By Johann Gottlieb Fichte. Translated from the German by William Smith. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. xii. and 198. 1848. 4s.

"In the progress of my present work, I have taken a deeper glance into religion than ever I did before. In me the emotions of the heart proceed only from perfect intellectual clearness; it cannot be but the clearness I have now attained on this subject shall also take possession of my heart."—Fichte's Correspondence.

"The Vocation of Man' is, as Fichte truly says, intelligible to all readers who are really able to understand a book at all; and as the history of the mind in its various phases of doubt, knowledge, and faith, it is of interest to all. A book of this stamp is sure to teach you much because it excites thought. If it rouses you to combat his conclusions, it has done a good work; for in that very effort you are stirred to a consideration of points which have hitherto escaped your indolent acquiescence."—Foreign Quarterly.

"This is Fichte's most popular work, and is every way remarkable."—Atlas.

"It appears to us the boldest and most emphatic attempt that has yet been made to explain to man his restless and unconquerable desire to win the True and the Eternal."—Sentinel.

Fichte.—ON THE NATURE OF THE SCHOLAR, AND ITS MANIFESTATIONS. By Johann Gottlieb Fichte. Translated from the German by William Smith. Second Edition. Cloth. Post 8vo. Pp. vii. and 131. 1848. 3s.

"With great satisfaction we welcome this first English translation of an author who occupies the most exalted position as a profound and original thinker; as an irresistible orator in the cause of what he believed to be the truth; as a thoroughly honest and heroic man . . . The appearance of any of his works in our language is, we believe, a perfect novelty . . . These orations are admirably fitted for their purpose; so grand is the position taken by the lecturer and so irresistible their eloquence."—Examiner.

"This work must inevitably arrest the attention of the scientific physician, by the grand spirituality of its doctrines, and the pure morality it teaches . . . Shall we be presumptuous if we recommend these views to our professional brethren? or if we say to the enlightened, the thoughtful, the serious. This—if you be true scholars—is your Vocation? We know not a higher morality than this, or more noble principles than these: they are full of truth."—British and Foreign Medical-Chirurgical Review.

Fichte.—MEMOIR OF JOHANN GOTTLIEB FICHTE. By William Smith. Second Edition. Post 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 168. 1848. 4s.

" . . . A Life of Fichte, full of nobleness and instruction, of grand purpose, tender feeling, and brave effort! . . . the compilation of which is executed with great judgment and fidelity."—Prospective Review.

"We state Fichte's character as it is known and admitted by men of all parties among the Germans, when we say that so robust an intellect, a soul so calm, so lofty, so massive, and immovable, has not mingled in philosophical discussion since the time of Luther . . . Fichte's opinions may be true or false; but his character as a thinker can be slightly valued only by such as know it ill; and as a man, approved by action and suffering, in his life and in his death, he ranks with a class of men who were common only in better ages than ours."—State of German Literature, by Thomas Carlyle.

Hagen.—NORICA; or, Tales from the Olden Time. Translated from the German of August Hagen. Fcap. 8vo., ornamental binding, suitable for presentation. Pp. xiv. and 374. 1850. 5s.

"This pleasant volume is got up in that style of imitation of the books a century ago, which has of late become so much the vogue. The typographical and mechanical departments of the volume speak loudly for the taste and enterprise bestowed upon it. Simple in its style, plthy, reasonably pungent—the book smacks strongly of the picturesque old days of which it treats. A long study of the art-antiquities of Nürnberg, and a profound acquaintance with the records, letters, and memoirs, still preserved, of the times of Albert Durer and his great brother artists, have enabled the author to lay before us a forcibly-drawn and highly-finished picture of art and household life in that wonderfully art-practising and art-reverencing old city of Germany." Atlas.

"A delicious little book. It is full of a quaint garrulity, and characterised by an earnest simplicity of thought and diction, which admirably conveys to the reader the household and artistic German life of the times of Maximilian, Albert Durer, and Hans Sachs, the celebrated cobbler and 'master singer,' as well as most of the artist celebrities of Nürnberg in the 16th century. Art is the chief end and aim of this little history. It is lauded and praised with a sort of unostentatious devotion, which explains the religious passion of the early moulders of the ideal and the beautiful; and, perhaps, through a consequent deeper concentration of thought, the secret of their success."—Weekly Dispatch.

"A volume full of interest for the lover of old times; while the form in which it is presented to us may incite many to think of art and look into its many wondrous influences with a curious earnestness unknown to them before. It points a moral also, in the knowledge that a people may be brought to take interest in what is chaste and beautiful as in what is coarse and degrading."—Manchester Examiner.

- Jenkins's VEST-POCKET LEXICON. A Dictionary of all except the common Words which everybody knows. By omitting these it contains the less familiar Words, and the principal Scientific and Technical Terms, Foreign Moneys, Weights and Measures; also the common Latin and French Phrases of two and three Words, Law Terms, etc.
- "A little book, entitled, 'Jenkins's Vest-pocket Lexicon,' has just been published by Messrs. Trübner and Co., of Paternoster-row, which has a somewhat novel but very useful design. The object of the work is to compress within the smallest practicable compass a full lexicon of all the words used in writing or speaking English, except—and in the exception lies the essence of the undertaking—those which may fairly be considered familiar to every one. Thus every word which any reader but the most ignorant, and any reader but the most amazingly learned, could need to look for in a dictionary, is to be found in the columns of this little book. We have put it to several tests, by looking out for peculiar scientific words, terms used in art, legal phrases, names of foreign coins, titles of foreign officials, etc., and, so far as our examination went, have not found it to fail in any instance. We can, therefore, cordially recommend it to writers as well as to readers. It really does fit in the waistcoat pocket, and may literally be made a constant companion.—Morning Star, July 17. 64mo. limp morocco, pp. 560. 1861. 2s. 6d.

Then follow Dr. Ludewig's Bibliotheca Glottica, alphabetically arranged, with Additions by the Editor, pp. 1—209; Professor Turner's Additions, with those of the Editor to the same, also alphabetically arranged, pp. 210—246; Index, pp. 247—256; and list of Errata, pp. 257, 258. By Hermann E. Ludewig. 8vo. cloth. London. 1858. 10s. 6d.

This work is intended to supply a great want, now that the study of Ethnology has proved that exotic languages are not mere curiosities, but essential and interesting parts of the natural history of man, forming one of the most curious links in the great chain of national affinities, defining as they do the reciprocity existing between man and the soil he lives upon. No one can venture to write the history of America without a knowledge of her aboriginal languages; and unimportant as such researches may seem to men engaged in the mere bustling occupations of life, they will at least acknowledge that these records of the past, like the stern lights of a departing ship, are the last glimmers of savage life, as it becomes absorbed or recedes before the tide of civilization. Dr. Ludewig and Prof. Taylor have made most diligent use of the public and private collections in America, access to all of which was most liberally granted to them. This has placed at their disposal the labours of the American Missionaries, so little known on this side of the Atlantic that they may be looked upon almost in the light of untrodden ground. But English and Continental libraries have also been ransacked; and Dr. Ludewig kept up a constant and active correspondence with scholars of "the Fatherland," as well as with men of similar tastes and pursuits in France, Spain, and Holland, determined to leave no stone unturned to render his labours as complete as possible. The volume, perfect in itself, is the first of an enlarged edition of Vater's "Linguarum totius orbis Index." The work has been noticed by the press of both Continents, and we may be permitted to refer particularly to the following.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"This work, mainly the production of the late Herr Ludewig, a German, naturalized in America, is devoted to an account of the literature of the aboriginal languages of that country. It gives an alphabetical list of the various tribes of whose languages any record remains, and refers to the works, papers, or manuscripts, in which such information may be found. The work has evidently been a labour of love; and as no pains seem to have been spared by the editors, Prof. Turner and Mr. Trübner, in rendering the work as accurate and complete as possible, those who are most interested in its contents will be best able to judge of the labours and assiduity bestowed upon it by author, editors, and publisher."—Athenæum, 5th April, 1858.

"This is the first instalment of a work which will be of the greatest value to philologists; and is a compendium of the aboriginal languages of the American continents, and a digest of all the known literature bearing upon those languages. Mr. Trübner's hand has been engaged passim, and in his preface he lays claim to about one-sixth of the whole; and we have no doubt that the encouragement with which this portion of the work will be received by scholars, will be such as to inspire Mr. Trübner with sufficient confidence to persevere in his arduous and most honourable task."—The Critic, 15th Dec., 1857.

"Few would believe that a good octavo volume would be necessary to exhaust the subject; yet so it is, and this handsome, useful, and curious volume, carefully compiled by Mr. Ludewig, assisted by Prof. Turner, and edited by the careful hand of Mr. Trübner, the well-known publisher, will be sure to find a place in many libraries."—Reut's Advertiser, 6th Nov., 1857.

"The lovers of American linguistics will find in the work of Mr. Trübner scarcely any point omitted calculated to aid the comparative philologist in tracing the various languages of the great Western Continent."—Globe Mercury, 30th Jan., 1858.

"Only those deeply versed in philological studies can appreciate this book at its full value. It shows that there are upwards of seven hundred and fifty aboriginal American languages."—Gentleman's Magazine, Feb., 1858.

"The work contains an account of no fewer than seven hundred different aboriginal dialects of America, with an introductory chapter of bibliographical information; and under each dialect is an account of any grammars or other works illustrative of it."—The Bookeller, Jan., 1858.

"We have here the list of monuments still existing, of an almost innumerable series of languages and dialects of the American Continent. The greater part of Indian grammars and vocabularies exist only in MS., and were compiled chiefly by Missionaries of the Christian Church; and to Dr. Ludewig and Mr. Trübner, we are, therefore, the more indebted for the great care with which they have pointed out where such are to be found, as well as for enumerating those which have been printed, either in a separate shape, in collections, or in voyages and travels, and elsewhere."—Leader, 11th Sept., 1858.

"I have not time, nor is it my purpose, to go into a review of this admirable work, or to attempt to indicate the extent and value of its contents. It is, perhaps, enough to say, that apart from a concise but clear enumeration and notices of the various general philological works which treat with greater or less fulness of American languages, or which incidentally touch upon their bibliography, it contains not less than 256 closely-printed octavo pages of bibliographical notices of grammars, vocabularies, &c., of the aboriginal languages of America. It is a peculiar and valuable feature of the work that not only the titles of printed or published grammars or vocabularies are given, but also that unpublished or MS. works of these kinds are noticed, in all cases where they are known to exist, but which have disappeared among the debris of the suppressed convents and religious establishments of Spanish America."—E. G. Squier, in a paper read before the American Ethnological Society, 12th Jan., 1858.

"In consequence of the death of the author before he had finished the revision of the work it has been carefully examined by competent scholars, who have also made many valuable additions."—American Publishers' Circular, 30th Jan., 1858.

"It contains 256 closely-printed pages of titles, of printed books and manuscripts, and notices of American aboriginal languages, and embraces references to nearly all that has been written or published respecting them, whether in special works or incidentally in books of travel, periodicals, or proceedings of learned societies."—New York Herald, 26th Jan., 1858.

"The manner in which this contribution to the bibliography of American languages has been executed, both by the author, Mr. Ludewig, and the able writers who have edited the work since his death, is spoken of in the highest terms by gentlemen most conversant with the subject."—American Historical Magazine, Vol. II., No. 5, May, 1858.

"Je terminerai en annonçant le premier volume d'une publication appelée à rendre de grands services à la philologie comparée et à la linguistique générale. Je veux parler de la Bibliotheca Glottica, ouvrage devant renfermer la liste de tous les dictionnaires et de toutes les grammaires des langues connues, tant imprimées que manuscrites. L'éditeur de cette précieuse bibliographie est M. Nicolas Trübner, dont le nom est honorablement connu dans le monde oriental. Le premier volume est consacré aux idiomes Américains; le second doit traiter des langues de l'Inde. Le travail est fait avec le soin le plus consciencieux, et sera honneur à M. Nicolas Trübner, surtout s'il poursuit son œuvre avec la même ardeur qu'il a mise à la commencer."—L. Léon de Rosny. Revue de l'Orient, Février, 1858.

"Mr. Trübner's most important work on the bibliography of the aboriginal languages of America is deserving of all praise, as eminently useful to those who study that branch of literature. The value, too, of the book, and of the pains which its compilation must have cost, will not be lessened by the consideration that it is first in this field of linguistic literature."—Petermann's Geographische Mittheilungen, p. 79, Feb., 1858.

"Undoubtedly this volume of Trübner's Bibliotheca Glottica ranks amongst the most valuable additions which of late years have enriched our bibliographical literature. To us Germans it is most gratifying, that the initiative has been taken by a German bookseller, himself one of the most intelligent and active of our countrymen abroad, to produce a work which has higher aims than mere pecuniary profit, and that he, too, has laboured at its production with his own hands; because daily it is becoming a circumstance of rarer occurrence that, as in this case, it is a bookseller's primary object to serve the cause of literature rather than to enrich himself."—P. Tromel, Börsenblatt, 4th Jan., 1858.

"In the compilation of the work the editors have availed themselves not only of the labours of Vater, Barton, DuPonceau, Gallatin, De Souza, and others, but also of the MS. sources left by the missionaries, and of many books of which even the library of the British Museum is deficient, and furnish the fullest account of the literature of no less than 525 languages. The value of the work, so necessary to the study of ethnology, is greatly enhanced by the addition of a good index."—Berliner National-Zeitung, 22nd Nov., 1857.

"The name of the author, to all those who are acquainted with his former works, and who know the thoroughness and profound character of his investigations, is a sufficient guarantee that this work will be one of standard authority, and one that will fully answer the demands of the present time."—Petzhold's Anzeiger, Jan., 1858.

"The chief merit of the editor and publisher is to have terminated the work carefully and lucidly in contents and form, and thus to have established a new and largely augmented edition of 'Vater's Linguarum totius orbis Index,' after Professor Jülg's revision of 1847. In order to continue and complete this work the editor requires the assistance of all those who are acquainted with this new branch of science, and we sincerely hope it may be accorded to him."—Magazin für die Literatur des Auslandes, No. 34, 1858.

"As the general title of the book indicates, it will be extended to the languages of the other continents, in case it meets with a favourable reception, which we most cordially wish it."—A. F. Pott, Preussische Jahrbücher, Vol. II., part 1.

"Cette compilation savante est, sans contredit, le travail bibliographique le plus important que notre époque ait vu surgir sur les nations indigènes de l'Amérique."—Nouvelles Annales des Voyages, Avril, 1859.

"La Bibliotheca Glottica, dont M. Nicolas Trübner a commencé la publication, est un des livres les plus utiles qui aient jamais été rédigés pour faciliter l'étude de la philologie comparée. Le premier tome de cette grande bibliographie linguistique comprend la liste textuelle de toutes les grammaires, de tous les dictionnaires et des vocabulaires même les moins étendus qui ont été imprimés dans les différents dialectes des deux Amériques; en outre, il fait connaître les ouvrages manuscrits de la même nature renfermés dans les principales bibliothèques publiques et particulières. Ce travail a dû nécessiter de longues et patientes recherches; aussi mérite-t-il d'attirer tout particulièrement l'attention des philologues. Puissent les autres volumes de cette bibliothèque être rédigés avec le même soin et se trouver bientôt entre les mains de tous les savants auxquels ils peuvent rendre des services inappréciables."—Revue Américaine et Orientale, No. 1, Oct., 1858.

"To every fresh addition to the bibliography of language, of which we have a most admirable specimen in this work, the thoughtful linguist will ever, as the great problem of the unity of human speech approaches towards its full solution, turn with increasing satisfaction and hope.

"But Mr. Nicolas Trübner, however, has, perhaps, on the whole, done the highest service of all to the philologist, by the publication of 'The Literature of American Aboriginal Languages.' He has, with the aid of Professor Turner, greatly enlarged, and at the same time most skilfully edited, the valuable materials acquired by his deceased friend, Mr. Ludewig. We do not, indeed, at this moment, know any similar work deserving of full comparison with it. In its ample enumeration of important works of reference, and careful record of the most recent facts in the literature of its subject, it, as might have been expected, greatly surpasses Jülg's 'Vater,' valuable and trustworthy though that learned German's work undoubtedly is."—North British Review, No. 59, Feb., 1859.

The Editor has also received most kind and encouraging letters respecting the work from Sir George Grey, the Chevalier Hansen, Dr. Th. Goldstücker, Mr. Watts (of the Museum), Professor A. Fr. Pott (of Halle), Dr. Julius Petzolt (of Dresden), Hofrath Dr. Grasse (of Dresden), M. F. F. de la Fignanière (of Lisbon), E. Edwards (of Manchester), Dr. Max Müller (of Oxford), Dr. Buschmann (of Berlin), Dr. Jülg (of Cracow), and other linguistic scholars.

Trübner.—TRÜBNER'S BIBLIOGRAPHICAL GUIDE TO AMERICAN LITERATURE: a Classified List of Books published in the United States of America, from 1817 to 1857. With Bibliographical Introduction, Notes, and Alphabetical Index. Compiled and Edited by Nicolas Trübner. In 1 vol. 8vo., half-bound, pp. 750. 1859. 18s.

This work, it is believed, is the first attempt to marshal the literature of the United States of America during the last forty years, according to the generally received bibliographical canons. The Librarian will welcome it, no doubt, as a companion volume to Brunet, Lowndes, and Ebert; whilst, to the bookseller, it will be a faithful guide to the American branch of English Literature—a branch which, on account of its rapid increase and rising importance, begins to force itself daily more and more upon his attention. Nor will the work be of less interest to the man of letters inasmuch as it comprises complete Tables of Contents to all the more prominent Collections of the Americans, to the Journals, Memoirs, Proceedings, and Transactions of their learned Societies—and thus furnishes an intelligible key to a department of American scientific activity hitherto but imperfectly known and understood in Europe.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"It has been reserved for a foreigner to have compiled, for the benefit of European readers, really trustworthy guide to Anglo-American literature. This honourable distinction has been fairly one by Mr. Nicolas Trübner, the intelligent and well-known publisher in Paternoster-row. That gentleman has succeeded in making a very valuable addition to bibliographical knowledge, in a quarter where it was much wanted."—Universal Review, Jan., 1859.

"Trübner's Bibliographical Guide to American Literature" deserves praise for the great care with which it is prepared, and the wonderful amount of information contained in its pages. It is compiled and edited by Mr. Nicolas Trübner, the publisher, of Paternoster-row. It comprises a classified list of books published in the United States during the last forty years, with Bibliographical Introduction, Notes, and Alphabetical Index. The introduction is very elaborate and full of facts, and must be the work of a gentleman who has spared no pains in making himself master of all that is important in connection with American literature. It certainly supplies much information not generally known in Europe."—Morning Star, Jan. 31st, 1859.

"Mr. Trübner deserves much credit for being the first to arrange bibliography according to the received rules of the art. He began the labour in 1855, and the first volume was published in that year; constituting, in fact, the earliest attempt, on this side of the Atlantic, to catalogue American books. The present volume, of course, is enlarged, and is more perfect in every respect. The method of classification is exceedingly clear and useful.

"In short, it presents the actual state of literature, as well as the course of its development from the beginning. Into the subject-matter of this section we shall have to look hereafter, we are now simply explaining the composition of Mr. Trübner's most valuable and useful book."—Spectator, Feb. 5, 1859.

"Mr. Trübner's book is by far the most complete American bibliography that has yet appeared, and displays an amount of patience and research that does him infinite credit. We have tested the accuracy of the work upon several points demanding much care and inquiry, and the result has always been satisfactory. Our American brethren cannot fail to feel complimented by the production of this volume, which in quantity almost equals our own London catalogue."—The Bookseller, Feb. 24th, 1859.

"To say of this volume that it entirely fulfils the promise of its title-page, is possibly the highest and most truthful commendation that can be awarded to it. Mr. Trübner deserves however, something beyond general praise for the patient and intelligent labour with which he has elaborated the earlier forms of the work into that which it now bears. What was once but a scanty volume, has now become magnified, under his care, to one of considerable size; and what was once little better than a dry catalogue, may now take rank as a bibliographical work of first-rate importance. His position as an American literary agent has, doubtless, been very favourable to Mr. Trübner, by throwing matter in its way; and he confesses, in his preface, that it is to this source that he is mainly indebted for the materials which have enabled him to construct the work before us. Mr. Trübner's object in compiling this book is, he states, twofold: 'On the one hand, to suggest the necessity of a more perfect work of its kind by an American, surrounded, as he necessarily would be, with the needful appliances; and, on the other, to supply to Europeans a guide to Anglo-American literature—a branch which, by its rapid rise and increasing importance, begins to force itself more and more on our attention. It is very modest in Mr. Trübner thus to treat his work as a mere suggestion for others. It is much more than this: it is an example which those who attempt to do anything more complete cannot do better than to follow a model, which they will do well to copy, if they would combine fulness of material with that admirable order and arrangement which so facilitates reference, and without which a work of this sort is all but useless.

"All honour, then, to the literature of Young America—for young she still is, and let her thank her stars for it—and all honour also, to Mr. Trübner, for taking so much pains to make us acquainted with it."—The Critic, March 19, 1859.

"This is not only a very useful, because well executed, bibliographical work—it is also a work of much interest to all who are connected with literature. The book consists of a classified list, with date of publication, size, and price, of all the works, original or translated, which have appeared in the United States during the last forty years; and an alphabetical index facilitates reference to any particular work or author. On the merits of this portion of the work we cannot, of course, be expected to form a judgment. It would require something of the special erudition of Mr. Trübner himself, to say how far he has succeeded or fallen short of his undertaking—how few, or how many, have been his omissions. There is one indication, however, of his careful minuteness, which suggests the amount of labour that must have been bestowed on the work—namely, the full enumeration of all the contents of the various Transactions and Scientific Journals. Thus, 'the Transactions of the American Philosophical Society,' from the year 1769 to 1837—no index to which has yet appeared in America—are in this work made easy of reference, every paper of every volume being mentioned seriatim. The naturalist, who wishes to know what papers have appeared in the Boston Journal of Natural History during the last twenty years, that is, from its commencement, has only to glance over the five closely-printed pages of this guide to satisfy himself at once."—The Saturday Review, April 2, 1859.

"We have never seen a work on the national literature of a people more carefully compiled than the present, and the bibliographical prolegomena deserves attentive perusal by all who would study either the political or the literary history of the greatest republic of the West."—The Leader, March 26th, 1859.

"The subject of my letter to-day may seem to be of a purely literary character, but I feel justified to claim a more general interest for it. That subject is connected with the good reputation of the United States abroad. It is likewise connected with the general topic of my two former letters. I have spoken of the friends and the antagonists of the United States among European nations, and among the different classes of European society. I have stated that the antagonists are chiefly to be found among the aristocracy, not only of birth, but 'of mind'—as it has been called—likewise; not only among the privileged classes, and those connected with the Government interests, but among those who live in the sphere of literature and art, and look down with contempt upon a society in which utilitarian motives are believed to be paramount. And I have asserted that, these differences in the opinions of certain classes left aside, the Germans, as a whole take a more lively and a deeper interest in American affairs than in any other nation. Now, I am going to speak of a book just ready to leave the press of a London publisher, which, while it is a remarkable instance of the truth of my assertion in reference to the Germans, may be considered as serving the interests of the United States, by promoting the good reputation of American life in an uncommon degree.

"The London book trade has a firm, Trübner and Co., of whose business transactions American literature, as well as literature on America, form a principal branch. It is the firm who have lately published the bibliography of American languages. Mr. Nicolas Trübner is a German, who has never inhabited the United States, and yet he risks his time, labour, and money, in literary publications, for which even vain endeavours would have been made to find an American publisher.

"The new publication of Mr. Trübner, to which I have referred, is a large 8vo volume of 800 pages, under the title of 'Bibliographical Guide to American Literature.' A classified List of Books published in the United States of America, from 1817 to 1857. With Bibliographical Introduction, Notes, and Alphabetical Index. Compiled and edited by Nicolas Trübner."

"This last remark has but too much truth in it. The United States, in the opinion of the great mass of even the well-educated people of Europe, is a country inhabited by a nation lost in the pursuit of material interest, a country in which the technically applicable branches of some sciences may be cultivated to a certain degree, but a country essentially without literature and art, a country not without newspapers—so much the worse for it—but almost without books. Now, here, Mr. Trübner, a German, comes out with a list of American books, filling a thick volume, though containing American publications only, upward from the year 1817, from which time he dates the period of a more decided literary independence of the United States.

"Since no native-born, and even no adopted, American, has taken the trouble of compiling, arranging, digesting, editing, and publishing such a work, who else but a German could undertake it? Who else among the European nations would have thought American literature worth the labour, the time, and the money? and, let me add, that a smaller work of a similar character, 'The Literature of American Local History,' by the late Dr. Hermann Ludewig, was the work of a German, likewise. May be that the majority of the American public will ascribe but an inferior degree of interest to works of this kind. The majority of the public of other nations will do the same, as it cannot be everybody's business to understand the usefulness of bibliography, and of books containing nothing but the enumeration and description of books. One thing, however, must be apparent: the deep interest taken by some foreigners in some of the more ideal spheres of American life; and if it is true, that the clear historical insight into its own development, ideal as well as material, is one of the most valuable acquisitions of a nation, future American generations will acknowledge the good services of those foreigners, who, by their literary application, contributed to avert the national calamity of the origin of the literary independence of America becoming veiled in darkness."—New York Daily Tribune, Dec., 1858.

"It is remarkable and noteworthy that the most valuable manual of American literature should appear in London and be published by an English house. Trübner's Bibliographical Guide to American Literature is a work of extraordinary skill and perseverance, giving an index to all the publications of the American press for the last forty years."—Harper's Weekly, March 28th, 1859.

"Mr. Trübner deserves all praise for having produced a work every way satisfactory. No one who takes an interest in the subject of which it treats can dispense it with it; and we have no doubt that booksellers in this country will learn to consider it necessary to them as a shop manual, and only second in importance, for the purposes of their trade, to the London Catalogue itself. That a foreigner, and a London bookseller, should have accomplished what Americans themselves have failed to do, is most creditable to the compiler. The volume contains 149 pages of introductory matter, containing by far the best record of American literary history yet published; and 321 pages of classified list of books, to which an alphabetical index of 33 pages is added. This alphabetical index alone may claim to be one of the most valuable aids for enabling the student of literary history to form a just and perfect estimate of the great and rising importance of Anglo-American literature, the youngest and most untrammelled of all which illustrate the gradual development of the human mind."—The Press Philadelphian, Oct. 11, 1858.

"We do not so much express the wish by this notice, that Mr. Trübner may not find public ungrateful for his labours, as congratulate, especially American Bibliophiles, upon the advantages within their reach, by the acquisition and use of what Mr. Trübner has so opportunely supplied."—Washington National Intelligencer, March 22nd, 1859.

"This volume contains a well-classified list of books published in the United States of America during the last forty years, preceded by a tolerably full survey of American literary enterprise during the first half of the nineteenth century. The value of such a guide, in itself tolerably evident, becomes more so upon glancing over the five hundred and forty pages; close print which display the literary activity pervading the country of Prescott and Motley; of Irving and Hawthorne, of Poe and Longfellow, of Story and Wheaton, of Moses Stuart and Channing. This volume will be useful to the scholar, but to the librarian it is indispensable."—Daily News, March 24th, 1859.

"There are hundreds of men of moderate scholarship who would gladly stand on some higher and more assured point. They feel that they have acquired much information, but they also feel the need of that subtle discipline, literary education, without which all mere learning is the rudis indigesta moles, as much of a stumbling-block as an aid. To those in such a condition, works on bibliography are invaluable. For direction in classifying all reading, whether English or American, Allibone's Dictionary is admirable; but, for particular information as to the American side of the house, the recently published Bibliographical Guide to American Literature, by Nicholas Trübner, of London, may be conscientiously commended. A careful perusal of this truly remarkable work cannot fail to give any intelligent person a clear and complete idea of the whole state of American book-making, not only in its literary aspect, but in its historical, and, added to this, in its most mechanical details."—Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, March 5th, 1859.

"But the best work on American bibliography yet published has come to us from London, where it has been compiled by the well-known bibliophile, Trübner. The work is remarkable for condensation and accuracy, though we have noted a few errors and omissions, upon which we should like to comment, had we now space to do so."—New York Times, March 26th, 1859.

"Some of our readers, whose attention has been particularly called to scientific and literary matters, may remember meeting, some years since, in this country, a most intelligent foreigner, who visited the United States for the purpose of extending his business connections, and making a personal investigation into the condition of literature in the New World. Mr. Nicholas Trübner—the gentleman to whom we have made reference—although by birth a stranger in America, for he had sent before him a most valuable 'letter of introduction,' in the shape of a carefully compiled register of American books and authors, entitled 'Bibliographical Guide to American Literature,' etc., pp. xxxii., 108. This manual was the germ of the important publication, the title of which the reader will find at the commencement of this article. Now, in consequence of Mr. Trübner's admirable classification and minute index, the inquirer after knowledge has nothing to do but copy from the Bibliographical Guide the titles of the American books which he wishes to consult, despatch them to his library by a messenger, and in a few minutes he has before him the coveted volumes, through whose means he hopes to enlarge his acquisitions. Undoubtedly it would be a cause of well-founded reproach, of deep mortification to every intelligent American, if the arduous labours of the learned editor and compiler of this volume (whom we almost hesitate to call a foreigner), should fail to be appreciated in a country to which he has, by the preparation of this valuable work, proved himself so eminent a benefactor."—Pennsylvania Enquirer, March 26th, 1859.

"The editor of this volume has acquired a knowledge of the productions of the American press which is rarely exhibited on the other side of the Atlantic, and which must command the admiration of the best informed students of the subject in this country. His former work on American bibliography, though making no pretensions to completeness, was a valuable index to various branches of learning that had been successfully cultivated by our scholars but, neither in comprehensiveness of plan nor thoroughness of execution, can it be compared to the elaborate and minute record of American literature contained in this volume. The duty of the editor required extensive research, vigilant discrimination, and untiring diligence; and in the performance of his task we are no less struck with the accuracy of detail than with the extent of his information. The period to which the volume is devoted, comprises only the last forty years; but within that time the literature of this country has received its most efficient impulses, and been widely unfolded in the various departments of intellectual activity. If we were permitted to speak in behalf of American scholars, we should not fail to congratulate Mr. Trübner on the eminent success with which he has accomplished his plan, and the ample and impartial justice with which he has registered the productions of our native authorship. After a careful examination of his volume, we are bound to express our high appreciation of the intelligence, fairness, and industry which are conspicuous in its pages; for exactness and precision it is no less remarkable, than for extent of research; few, if any, important publications are omitted on its catalogue, and although, as is inevitable in a work of this nature, an erroneous letter has sometimes crept into a name, or an erroneous figure into a date, no one can consult it habitually without learning to rely on its trustworthiness, as well as its completeness."—Harper's Magazine, April, 1859.

"Nor is the book a dry catalogue only of the names and contents of the publications of America. Prefixed to it are valuable bibliographical prolegomena, instructive to the antiquary, as well as useful to the philologist. In this portion of the work, Mr. Trübner had the assistance of the late Dr. Ludewig, whose early death was a great loss to philological science. Mr. Moran, the assistant-secretary to the American Legation, has added to the volume a historical summary of the literature of America; and Mr. Edward Edwards is responsible for an interesting account of the public libraries of the United States. To Mr. Trübner's own careful superintendence and hard work, however, the student must ever remain indebted for one of the most useful and well-arranged books on bibliographical lore ever published. In addition to this, it is right to congratulate Mr. Trübner on the fact, that his present work confirms the opinion passed on his 'Bibliotheca Glottica,' that among the booksellers themselves honourable literary eminence may exist, without clashing with business arrangements. The booksellers of old were authors, and Mr. Trübner emulates their example."—Morning Chronicle, March 22nd, 1859.

"Mr. Trübner, who is not only a bibliophile but a bibliophile, has, in this work, materially increased the claim which he had already upon the respect of all book-lovers everywhere, but especially in the United States, to whose literature he has now made so important and useful a contribution. So much larger than former respect, the present constitutes a new implement for our libraries, as well as the most valuable existing aid for those students who, without libraries, have an interest in knowing their contents."—Baltimore American, 2nd April, 1859.

"Lastly, published only the other day, is Trübner's Bibliographical Guide to American Literature, which gives a classed list of books published in the United States during the last forty years, with bibliographical introduction, notes, and Alphabetical index. This octavo volume has been compiled and edited by Mr. Nicholas Trübner, the well-known head of one of the great foreign publishing and importing houses of London, who is also editor of Ludewig and Turner's Literature of American Aboriginal Languages. Besides containing a classed list of books, with an alphabetical index, Mr. Trübner's book has an introduction, in which, at considerable fullness, he treats of the history of American literature, including newspapers, periodicals, and public libraries. It is fair to state that Mr. Trübner's Bibliographical Guide was published subsequent to Allibone's Dictionary, but printed off about the same time."—Philadelphia Press, April 4th, 1859.

"This is a valuable work for book buyers. For its compilation we are indebted to a foreign bibliomaniac, but one who has made himself familiar with American literature, and has possessed himself of the most ample sources of information. The volume contains:—I. Bibliographical Prolegomena; II. Contributions towards a History of American Literature; III. Notices of Public Libraries of the United States. These three heads form the introduction, and occupy one hundred and fifty pages. IV. Classed list of books; V. Alphabetical list of authors. This plan is somewhat after that adopted in Watts' celebrated 'Bibliotheca Britannica,' a work of immense value, whose compilation occupied some forty years. The classified portion of the present work enables the reader to find readily the names of all books on any one subject. The alphabetical index of authors enables the reader to ascertain instantly the names of all authors and of all their works, including the numerous periodical publications of the last forty years. Mr. Trübner deserves the thanks of the literary world for his plan, and its able execution."—New York Courier and Enquirer, April 11th, 1859.

"L'auteur, dans une préface de dix pages, expose les idées qui lui ont fait entreprendre son livre, et le plan qu'il a cru devoir adopter. Dans une savante introduction, il fait une revue critique des différentes ouvrages relatifs à l'Amérique; il signale ceux qui ont le plus contribué à l'établissement d'une littérature spéciale Américaine, et il en fait l'histoire, cette partie de son travail est destinée à lui faire honneur, elle est méthodiquement divisée en période coloniale et en période Américaine et renferme, sur les progrès de l'imprimerie en Amérique, sur le salaire des auteurs, sur le commerce de la librairie, les publications périodiques, des renseignements très intéressants, que l'on est heureux de trouver réunis pour la première fois. Cette introduction, qui n'a pas moins de 150 pages, se termine par une table statique de toutes les bibliothèques publiques des différents Etats de l'Union.

"Le catalogue méthodique et raisonné des ouvrages n'occupe pas moins de 521 pages, il forme 32 sections consacrées chacune à l'une des branches des sciences humaines; celle qui donne la liste des ouvrages qui intéressent la géographie et les voyages (section xvi.) comprend près de 600 articles, et parmi eux on trouve l'indication de plusieurs ouvrages dont nous ne soupçonnions même pas l'existence en Europe. Un index général alphabétique par noms d'auteurs qui termine ce livre, permet d'abréger des recherches souvent bien pénibles. Le guide bibliographique de M. Trübner est un monument élevé à l'activité scientifique et littéraire Américaine et comme tel, il est digne de prendre place à côté des ouvrages du même genre publiés en Europe par les Brunet, les Lowndes, et les Ebert. (V. A. Maite-Brun)."—Nouvelles Annales des Voyages, April, 1859.

- "Dictionaries are a class of books not usually esteemed light reading; but no intelligent man were to be pined who should find himself shut up on a rainy day in a lonely house in the dreariest part of Salisbury Plain, with no other means of recreation than that which Mr. Wedgwood's Dictionary of Etymology could afford him. He would read it through from cover to cover at a sitting, and only regret that he had not the second volume to begin upon forthwith. It is a very able book, of great research, full of delightful surprises, a repertory of the fairy tales of linguistic science."—Spectator.
