PAPER CURRENCY.

No. 4024.

The 23rd September, 1891.

RESOLUTION—By the Government of India, Finance and Commerce Department.

Read again the following letters to the Head Commissioner of Paper Currency:

No. 3458, dated the 29th October 1879;
No. 914, dated the 15th February 1882; and
No. 3308, dated the 21st August 1882.

RESOLUTION.—Mismatched currency notes, that is, notes of which the right half of one is joined to the left half of another, when presented to the Currency Office for payment, are dealt with in accordance with the orders contained in the letters read in the preamble. Under these orders no claim for payment of the value of mismatched notes can be admitted by the Currency Office, but all claims are registered, and if the corresponding halves have already been received or should afterwards be received in the form of a mismatched note, the Currency Office, by joining together the proper halves and paying the entire notes, meets the claims as far as possible. Such notes are held in deposit in the Currency Office for three years awaiting the receipt of the corresponding halves, but thereafter the full value of both the halves is credited to revenue.

2. The Governor General in Council is now pleased to decide that in future, instead of crediting the value of both the halves of mismatched notes to Government after they have remained unclaimed for three years, the value of one half should be credited to Government and that of the other half to the depositor of the mismatched note.

ORDER.—Ordered, that this Resolution be communicated to the Head Commissioner of Paper Currency.

Ordered also, that this Resolution be published in the Gazette of India for general information.

J. F. FINLAY,
Secretary to the Government of India.

No. 4206.

Simla, the 8th October, 1891.

RESOLUTION—By the Government of India, Finance and Commerce Department.

Read the following letters transmitting reports on the working of the Mints and the Assay Offices of Bombay and Calcutta for the year 1890-91:

From the Mint Master, Bombay, No. 640, dated 6th August 1891.
From the Assay Master, Bombay, No. 65, dated 1st May 1891.
From the Mint Master, Calcutta, No. 842, dated 23rd June 1891.
From the Assay Master, Calcutta, No. 9, dated 2nd June 1891.

I.—WORKING OF THE MINTS.

Imports and Coinage: Gold.—The net imports of gold into India in 1890-91 amounted in value to Rs. 56,361,717 against Rs. 46,153,038 in 1889-90. Gold of the value of Rs. 97,338 only, consisting of English and Australian sovereigns and bar gold, was tendered for coinage at the Calcutta Mint; but as there was sufficient gold coin in the Reserve Treasury to meet the tenderers' claims, none was coined. No gold was tendered for coinage, nor was any coined at the Bombay Mint during the year.

2. Imports and Coinage: Silver.—The net imports of silver during the year amounted in value to Rs. 141,751,359 against Rs. 109,378,757 in 1889-90. This was the largest import on record, with the exception of the imports in 1865-66 and 1877-78, an abnormal inflow of silver having been caused by silver legislation in the United States and speculation preceding and accompanying it. The amount tendered for coinage at the Calcutta Mint was more than four times as large as in the preceding year, and in the Bombay Mint there was an increase of about 30 per cent. The coinage of silver in both Mints was exceptionally large, amounting to Rs. 131,634,741 against Rs. 85,511,587 in 1889-90, being an increase of about 54 per cent.

3. Total Coinage: Gold and Silver.—The value of the total coinage of gold and silver at each Mint is shown below separately for the last five years:

	Gold.		Silver.		Total of Gold and Silver.
	Calcutta.	Bombay.	Calcutta.	Bombay.
	Rs.	Rs.	Rs.	Rs.	Rs.
1886-87	...	...	10,745,700	35,419,600	46,165,300
1887-88	...	...	47,032,300	60,832,000	107,884,300
1888-89	226,100	...	10,474,500	62,348,000	73,048,600
1890-91	...	...	38,546,300	93,088,500	131,634,800

4. Silver tendered for Coinage by the Currency Department.—As usual, most of the silver was transferred during the year by the Currency Department to the Mint for coinage in exchange for Mint certificates. In Calcutta silver to the value of Rs. 34,262,656 was so transferred and in Bombay Rs. 90,979,785.

5. Re-coinage of old Coin.—The uncurrent and defaced silver coin received in the Calcutta Mint for re-coinage amounted to Rs. 3,565,900 against Rs. 5,565,252 in 1889-90. Of this sum, there were Rs. 1,913,622 in Burma rupees,

Rs. 723,605 in shroff-marked rupees withdrawn from circulation, principally from the Punjab, and Rs. 663,575 in Farukhabad and Nanak Shahi rupees received from the Kashmir Darbar through the Sialkot Treasury. There were also Rs. 123,042 in Halli Sicca rupees received from Madras, besides Government coin reduced in weight either by ordinary wear and tear or by fraudulent means.

In the Bombay Mint the value of uncurrent coin received was Rs. 234,357, of which Rs. 16,375 were in Syasi and treasure trove coins. In 1889-90 the value was much larger—Rs. 646,380.

6. Copper Coinage.—As stated in the report on the Mints for 1889-90, the whole of the copper coinage is now carried out at the Calcutta Mint.

The nominal value of the total copper coinage was Rs. 1,783,092 against Rs. 2,044,684 in 1889-90. In addition to the usual coinage for the Straits and the Ceylon Governments, pice of the value of Rs. 76,999 were struck for the Imperial British Africa Company. No copper coin was struck for the Native States.

The quantity of copper purchased was 24,827·6 maunds at the average rate of Rs. 30·6 per maund against 26,479 maunds at Rs. 29·4 per maund in 1889-90.

The total coinage (silver and copper) executed at the Calcutta Mint during the year was much the largest ever undertaken at this Mint. It amounted to about 172¼ millions of pieces, and it is satisfactory to note that the Mint was able to comply with the demands on it without having recourse to "overtime."

7. Gain on Copper Coinage.—The gain on the copper coin passed into circulation during the last five years is shown below:

	Rs.
1888-89	637,195
1890-91	664,192

8. Operative Losses: Silver.—The operative losses in melting and coining, after making corrections for fictitious losses and gains, amounted to Rs. 16,515 in Calcutta and Rs. 45,000 in Bombay, or Rs. 28·7 per lakh rolled in Calcutta and Rs. 29·8 per lakh rolled in Bombay. But, in the opinion of the Mint Masters, a safe estimate of the rate of loss would be Rs. 25 to 30 per lakh in Calcutta and Rs. 25 to 35 per lakh in Bombay, which is about Rs. 3 per lakh less than in the preceding year in both the Mints.

Copper.—The quantity of copper operated on was 28,647 maunds, and, after accounting for by-products, the operative loss was only 15·75 maunds, equivalent to ·05 per cent., which is one-fourth of the rate of loss for 1889-90. This result is satisfactory.

9. Revenue and Expenditure.—The total revenue and expenditure of the two Mints for the last five years are as follows:

	REVENUE.							EXPENDITURE.

* The figures under the head Expenditure include all the cost of the manufacture at Calcutta of copper coins, but those under the head of Revenue include no portion of the profits on the copper coinage.

Last year for the first time since 1885-86 the total revenue of the Mints exceeded the total expenditure, the excess of revenue being due to the exceptionally heavy inflow of silver during the year.

The expenditure on salaries and establishments in the two Mints for the year 1890-91 was more than that of the previous year by Rs. 25,534 as shown below, the increase being due to the large coinage:

	CALCUTTA.			BOMBAY.			BOTH MINTS.

10. Local and English Stores.—Owing to the large coinage and to the introduction of four new cutting presses ordered from England, the outlay on stores in the Calcutta Mint amounted to Rs. 123,218, or Rs. 38,574 more than in 1889-90. In the Bombay Mint there was a decrease of Rs. 18,554 in the expenditure on stores, which amounted to Rs. 144,278, the decrease being mainly due to the transfer to Calcutta of the copper coinage, to improvement in the dross work, and to reduction of expenditure chiefly under the heads of metals and working expenses.

11. Pro formâ Charges.—These indirect charges in the two Mints compare as under with those of the preceding year:

	CALCUTTA.			BOMBAY.			TOTAL OF THE TWO MINTS.
	1889-90.	1890-91.	Increase+.	1889-90.	1890-91.	Increase+.	1889-90.	1890-91.	Increase+.

There has been an increase of Rs. 215,644, due almost entirely to the interest charged on the large balance of silver bullion in both the Mints awaiting coinage.

12. Miscellaneous Work.—The miscellaneous work done in the Calcutta Mint cost Rs. 147,334, and gave a net profit of Rs. 8,262. The net profit on this account in the Bombay Mint was Rs. 1,846, the cost of the work done being Rs. 14,434.

The largest part of such work was the manufacture in Calcutta of 23,318 silver war medals and 23,019 silver war clasps.

13. Capital Account.—To the capital account of the Calcutta Mint Rs. 11,129 were debited during the year on account of buildings and plant, and the balance at the close of the year stands at Rs. 7,645,650. The Bombay Mint capital account was increased to Rs. 3,746,735, Rs. 20,535 having been debited on account of buildings and Rs. 53,878 on account of plant.

14. Offences against the Coinage.—Out of a total of 769 cases reported, the largest proportion (467) are described as "possessing and delivering counterfeit and altered coin." There were 18 cases in which the charge was actually that of "counterfeiting coin," and in which 28 persons were brought to trial, convictions being obtained against 13 of them.

II.—WORKING OF THE ASSAY OFFICES.

15. Number of assays made.—The total number of gold assays made in Calcutta was 998. These include assays of gold tendered for coinage; but, as before stated, no gold coinage was executed during the year. The total number of silver and miscellaneous assays in Calcutta was 24,865 against 10,183 in 1889-90, and in Bombay 45,179 against 40,964 in 1889-90.

16. Assays of Silver Bullion alligated to standard.—The average fineness of silver meltings for coinage in Calcutta was 916·127 per mille against 916·069 per mille in 1889-90. In the Bombay Mint it was 915·97 as compared with 915·78 per mille in 1889-90.

17. Parting assay of Silver Coins.—The average proportion of gold found in the silver pyx coins at the Calcutta Mint was ·422 per mille against ·753 per mille in the previous year, and at Bombay the average was ·127 per mille against ·064 per mille in 1889-90.

In the course of re-coinage of old rupees in Calcutta during the year, an opportunity was obtained of estimating the proportion of gold contained in the rupee coinages of 1835, 1840 (1), 1840 (2), and 1862. Twenty thousand rupees of each of these issues separately melted afforded samples for the determination of the proportion of gold, and the results obtained indicate that the whole rupee coinage of the years 1835 to 1873 contained nearly 17 tons of gold of the value of £2,345,000. The whole silver coinage in Calcutta during the year 1890-91 has been estimated to contain about 17,160 tolas of gold worth £27,288.

An experiment was tried during the year to ascertain whether, when gold existed in fairly large quantity in silver, it could be separated with profit. A number of Burma peacock rupees, in which there is more gold than in the silver received ordinarily at the Indian Mints, was sent to the India Office, and treated for gold by the bullion brokers of the Bank of England. The results proved that no profit could accrue from such transactions; and, as it has been shewn that refineries cannot profitably be established in connection with the Indian Mints, the experiment of treating silver for the separation of gold will probably not be repeated.

18. Pyx trials of Silver Coins.—In the trials for weight at Calcutta the total number of rupees weighed was 3,810, of which the lightest was 179·06 grains and the heaviest 181·21 grains, 16·85 per cent. of the whole being of exactly standard weight.

The trials for fineness of rupees at Calcutta were 378 in number, 3,780 coins having been assayed singly and 7,520 in groups of 20 after melting. The extreme variations in fineness of the coins assayed singly ranged from 914·7 to 929·3 per mille. The average fineness of the rupees assayed in groups of 20 was 916·725, the highest and lowest figures for all the meltings being 917·1 to 916·3 per mille.

In the Bombay Mint there were 944 deliveries during the year, of which 917 were rupee coinage. In the tests for fineness no re-melting was necessary.

The results of the pyx trials are summarised below:

	Total number of coins coined.	Number of coins weighed singly.	Number of coins assayed singly.	Number of coins assayed after melting.	Average weight in grains.	Average fineness of coins assayed singly (per mille).	Average fineness of coins assayed after melting (per mille).	Proportion of gold in pyx coins (per mille).

19. These pyx trials in India shew that, as reported by the Deputy Master and Comptroller of the Royal Mint at London, after examination of the pyx coins of the Indian Mints for 1889-90, "the standard weight and fineness of the coins have been maintained with accuracy."

20. The Assay Master at Bombay refers to certain defects found in the reference standards there. Similar errors in the reference standards kept at Calcutta were also discovered by the Assay Master there. These errors in both cases are traceable to the same cause—oxidation of the gilding applied in England to the weights—and the Government of India has called for a joint recommendation from the two Assay Masters for the provision of a set of reference standards which may be expected to remain permanently accurate.

21. The Governor General in Council acknowledges the efficiency with which the Mints and Assay Departments have been controlled and worked by the officers in charge.

ORDER.—Ordered, that this Resolution be published in the Gazette of India.

Ordered also, that copies of this Resolution be forwarded to the Mint Masters, Calcutta and Bombay (with printed copies of the two Reports on the working of the Mints), and to the Assay Masters, Calcutta and Bombay (with printed copies of the two Reports of the working of the Assay Department).

FIELD OPERATIONS.

BURMA.

No. 985.—The Governor-General in Council is pleased to direct the publication, for general information, of the subjoined correspondence and despatch relating to the operations carried on in the Wuntho territory from February to April 1891 by the forces under the command of Brigadier-General G. B. Wolseley, C.B.

No. 5642-A—"Field Operations—Burma,"—dated Simla, 22nd August 1891.

From—MAJOR-GENERAL W. GALBRAITH, C.B., Adjutant-General in India,

To—The Secretary to the Government of India, Military Department.

From the Commander-in-Chief, Madras, No. W-2170, dated 30th July 1891 (with enclosures).

In submitting, for the consideration of the Government of India, the accompanying report on the operations carried on in the Wuntho territory from the 16th February to the end of April 1891, I have the honor, by direction of the Commander-in-Chief, to state that His Excellency concurs in the commendation bestowed by the Commander-in-Chief, Madras, on Brigadier-General Wolseley, C.B., and the officers and troops employed under his command, in the suppression of the rebellion in that State; and in the high terms in which Sir James Dormer speaks of the services of Captain H. D'U. Keary, Commandant, Shwebo Military Police Battalion, and of the other officers specially mentioned by Brigadier-General Wolseley.

No. 2170-W, dated Ootacamund, 30th July 1891.

From—LIEUTENANT-GENERAL the HON'BLE SIR J. C. DORMER, K.C.B., Commander-in-Chief, Madras Army,

To—The Adjutant-General in India.

I have the honor to forward, for submission to the Commander-in-Chief in India, the report on the operations carried on in the Wuntho territory by Brigadier-General Wolseley, C.B., from February to the end of April.

2. I fully endorse Major General Stewart's appreciation of the manner in which the operations were conducted; for, although the capture of the Sawbwa was not effected, the rebellion in his territory was effectually stamped out.

3. Captain Keary, of the Military Police, seems to be an officer of great intrepidity and decision; for, at a most critical moment, he assumed with a portion of his mounted infantry the rôle of cavalry, and dispersed the enemy who were attacking Kawlin on three sides—a result which justified this mode of employing mounted infantry.

4. The death of Captain Bray, Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers, Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General for Intelligence for Upper Burma, was a great loss to the column, as he was a most valuable and capable officer.

5. In conclusion, I submit that credit is due to Brigadier-General Wolseley, ably assisted as he was by all the officers and troops under him, for the successful termination of the operations, which were unavoidably carried on at a most trying time in the year; and I would desire to bring to notice specially the conduct of the officers and men of the Military Police who assisted in the operations and materially contributed towards the result attained.

No. 333-E, dated Rangoon, 9th July 1891.

From—MAJOR-GENERAL R. C. STEWART, C.B., Commanding the Burma District,

To—The Adjutant-General, Madras Army.

A.—Report by Colonel C. R. Macgregor, D.S.O., 10th Regiment (1st Burma Battalion) Madras Infantry.
B.—Report by Captain T. A. H. Davies, 2nd Devon Regiment.
C.—Report by Captain H. D'U. Keary, Shwebo Military Police.
D.—Report by Captain H. O'Donnell, D.S.O., 44th Bengal Infantry.

I have the honor to submit, for the information of the Commander-in-Chief, a report by Brigadier-General G. B. Wolseley, C.B., and enclosures as per margin,* of the operations in the Wuntho territory, which commenced on the 16th February and terminated on the 30th April.

2. General Wolseley's report leaves me little to say but to express my appreciation of his conduct of the operations, which, though short, were perhaps, from the rapidity with which the troops took the field, and from the fact that the operations commenced at a very late season, of even a more trying nature than is usual in Burma.

3. General Wolseley's forces were successful throughout, except in the capture of the Sawbwa, who fled precipitately on the approach of our troops; and his advance on the jade-mines, as having opened out a hitherto unknown country and anticipating an expedition which would have been forced upon us at a very early date, has been of very great advantage.

4. I cordially endorse General Wolseley's opinion of the conduct of the troops under his command, and I cannot too strongly bring to favourable notice the admirable conduct of the military police,—the Inspector-General, Brigadier-General Stedman, C.B., and subsequently Major Peile, having done their utmost to co-operate with the military authorities.

5. I fully concur in the recommendation of the officers named by General Wolseley, and I would specially mention for services worthy of recognition Captain H. D'U. Keary, Commandant, Shwebo Police, and Second-Lieutenant H. C. Holman, of the Devonshire Regiment.

6. In conclusion, I cannot say how fully I appreciate the assistance and advice rendered by Mr. G. D. Burgess, C.S.I., Commissioner, Northern Division, who, from his knowledge of the circumstances which necessitated the expedition, his appreciation of the situation at the earliest date, and his control of the political operations, helped so much to bring the expedition to a satisfactory and speedy conclusion.

* Not published.

From—BRIGADIER-GENERAL G. B. WOLSELEY, C.B., Commanding Wuntho Expedition,

To—The Adjutant-General, Madras Army (through the General Officer Commanding the Burma District).

I have the honor to submit the following report upon the operations of the Northern, Southern, and Mogaung columns of the Wuntho expedition.

2. The objects of the expedition, as defined for my guidance, were briefly:

Firstly.—To suppress a sudden outburst of rebellion which had broken out almost simultaneously in the extreme northern and southern limits of the hitherto independent State of Wuntho.

Secondly.—To depose and, if possible, capture the Sawbwa and his father; failing which, to drive them and all their adherents out of the country.

Thirdly.—To annex, disarm, and permanently secure the future peaceful administration of the country.

3. To enable me to carry out these objects, the following troops were placed at my disposal:

Northern Column.

	Rifles.
Two guns, No. 6 (Bombay) Mountain Battery.
1st Battalion, Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry	100
10th Regiment (1st Burma Battalion) Madras Infantry	200
Karen Police Battalion	100
TOTAL	400

Southern Column.

	Rifles.
Two guns, No. 2 Mountain Battery.
2nd Battalion, Devonshire Regiment	100
1st Battalion, Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry	150
2nd Battalion, Oxfordshire Light Infantry	200
11th Madras Infantry	100
TOTAL	1,200

In addition to these regular troops, the Katha Battalion of Military Police and portions of the Ye-u, Shwebo, and Môn-ywa Battalions of Military Police, as well as all military and civil police holding posts in, or bordering on, the Wuntho State, were placed under my orders.

4. The first pressing necessity was the immediate despatch of troops to Kawlin, which was reported to be in a state of siege, surrounded by hundreds of temporarily emboldened rebels, who had burnt Kawlin and other Government police posts and numerous bordering villages.

5. The first intelligence of this alarming state of affairs reached Mandalay on the 15th February, and within three days of that date Lieutenant Nesbitt, with 100 rifles of the 20th Madras Infantry, arrived in Kawlin from Ti-gyaing, followed on the 19th of the same month by Captain Keary with a detachment of the Shwebo Battalion of Military Police, and on the 21st by 105 rifles of the Devonshire Regiment under Captain Davies, 100 rifles of the 20th Madras Infantry under Lieutenant Sandford, 25 mounted infantry of the 20th Madras Infantry under Lieutenant Hodding, and 50 mounted infantry of the Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry under Captain Custance, and finally, on the 23rd, by Major Smyth, Royal Artillery, with a section of his battery, 50 rifles of the Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry under Captain Evelegh, and 50 mounted infantry of the Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry under Lieutenant the Hon'ble W. J. H. de Montmorency. Meanwhile Captain Hutchinson with 130 rifles of the Ye-u Battalion, and Captain Hodges with 134 rifles of the Môn-ywa Battalion, were marching on Kawlin, and reached Ôkkan on the 22nd and 23rd February respectively.

6. The arrival at Kawlin of Captain Keary with his detachment on the afternoon of the 19th February may be regarded as the critical turning point of this southern outburst, as the enemy was actually at the time of his arrival engaged in attacking Kawlin on three sides; and Captain Keary's gallant charge on their centre was a brilliant feature in the campaign, which, followed as it was by a dismounted party of his men, under Subadar Prakasa Rai, attacking and capturing a strongly stockaded position in which the enemy, dispersed by the charge, had sought refuge, and killing every man inside it, completely changed the whole aspect of affairs.

In this engagement our losses were:

Shwebo Battalion, Military Police.

1 sepoy killed.
4 sepoys severely wounded.
1 sepoy slightly wounded.

Katha Battalion, Military Police.

20th Madras Infantry.

1 sepoy mortally wounded.
1 sepoy severely wounded.

On the enemy's side 18 dead bodies were found on the ground, but 30 were reported to have been killed.

The enemy were vain enough to think that, although their attacking powers had been crushed, they still might oppose us in fortified positions. The simultaneously successful attacks on the 22nd February upon their entrenched and stockaded positions at Kyaingkwintaung and near Ôkkan must undoubtedly have convinced them even of this folly, for after that date they never again really stood against us, and after the turning movement on their final position on the Mankin pass between Wuntho and Pinlebu on the 25th February, and the subsequent shelling of the stockaded village of Mankin on the same day, all armed resistance in Southern Wuntho ceased.

7. In the engagements on the 22nd I regret to say our losses were heavy.

AT ÔKKAN.

Captain Hutchinson, Commanding the Ye-u Battalion, Military Police, mortally wounded.

1 sepoy killed.
2 sepoys dangerously wounded.
3 sepoys severely wounded.
2 sepoys slightly wounded.

Whilst Captain Pond, who successfully concluded the fight after Captain Hutchinson was wounded, narrowly escaped a similar fate by receiving a bullet through his helmet.

AT KYAINGKWINTAUNG.

Devon Regiment.

3 privates killed.

1 private dangerously wounded.

Second-Lieutenant H. C. Holman slightly wounded.

Sergeant-Major Birch slightly wounded.

Commissariat Department.

Shwebo Battalion, Military Police.

20th Madras Infantry.

1 sepoy severely wounded.

Enemy's losses.

At Kyaingkwintaung 53 dead bodies were counted, and at Ôkkan the enemy lost 27 killed. Number of wounded in both actions unknown.

Our losses on the 25th were nil.

8. Thus, within ten days of the first outbreak of hostilities at Kawlin, the first object of the expedition had been successfully accomplished in Southern Wuntho before even the expeditionary force had been regularly organized. This unique feature of the expedition—namely, the suddenness with which it had to take the field—rendered it necessary for me to remain in Mandalay until the 24th February to make all those preliminary arrangements which should ordinarily be made before any concentration of troops for field service is effected. Luckily the General Officer Commanding in Burma was in Mandalay at the time, and, thanks to his advice and help, and the liberal manner in which he supported all my demands, I was enabled to facilitate the equipment and organization of the force. It was decided that for the troops operating in Southern Wuntho, Tigyaing, a military post on the right bank of the Irrawaddy, 180 miles from Mandalay and 41 from Kawlin, should become the base; whilst Katha, a military police station some 40 miles higher up, on the same bank of the Irrawaddy, was chosen as the base for the Northern Column.

9. At this time the Mogaung Column was working altogether independently, and operating beyond the sphere of Wuntho territory; so it had not to be taken into consideration.

10. Meanwhile the Northern Column was being concentrated at Katha, and pushed on as rapidly as possible to Mawteik, where Colonel Macgregor assumed command on the 26th February.

11. The delay in the concentration of this column was owing to the increased distance of its base, Katha, from Mandalay, whence the greater portion of its troops had to be drawn. On the 27th February the advance guard of this column was opposed soon after leaving Mawteik on the road to Banmauk, but easily overcame the resistance after interchanging a few shots. Further on fire was again opened on it from the stockaded village of Banmauk, which it was found necessary to shell, and, on flanking parties being sent out, the enemy retired, and the column occupied it without any casualties on our side. On the morning of the 28th Lieutenant Caulfeild advanced on Kyauktônlôn, where the Wuntho Sawbwa's father, Maung Shwe Tha, was reported to be holding a strong position. It was successfully carried by flank attacks, with a loss on our side of only one Karen slightly wounded, whilst on the enemy's side nine dead bodies were found and 25 wounded were reported. In this engagement the old ex-Sawbwa narrowly escaped capture, and it was the last occasion on which any opposition was offered to our troops throughout the expedition.

12. I assumed the personal control of the operations at Wuntho on the night of the 26th February, and proceeded next day with Major Smyth's column towards Pinlebu.

13. My first care on arriving in the country was to circulate freely throughout the country the proclamation in Burmese which had only just been got ready in time to be taken with me on leaving Mandalay on the 24th, and to encourage the people to return to their villages and bring their arms into Wuntho. This, I found, they had already begun to do on my arrival there.

14. On my arrival at the deserted village of Pinka next afternoon, I found a letter in the village from the young Sawbwa, asking me not to proceed further, and offering to pay any reasonable fine I might think fit to impose for the damage already done by his people; also informing me that he had forbidden his people to offer any further resistance to our troops.

15. To this I sent on at once a reply to the effect that, until he surrendered to me in person, I was precluded from making any terms with him beyond offering him his life and protection to his family and private property. His object in addressing me in these terms may have been, as he stated in his letter, to give him time to induce his father to surrender or to gain time to further strengthen his and his father's powers of resistance. But as I was impressed with the conviction that he had tried to dissuade his father in the first instance from hostilities, and had himself only taken up arms against us because of his having failed to influence his father, my duty seemed clearly to accept the latter interpretation of his letter.

16. Whatever his real object was, the fact remains that he bolted from Pinlebu on the morning of the 27th, which was occupied the same afternoon by Captain Hodges and Captain Pond with their military police. From information subsequently received, it appears that he was actually reading a letter from Mr. Fowle, who, previous to my arrival in Wuntho, had written to him in the same terms as I did on the 27th, when he received information of the fight at Ôkkan, and that that column was pushing on to his capital.

17. On my arrival at Pinlebu on the morning of the 1st March, I found Captain Hodges and his men in occupation of this very strongly stockaded position. Many of the people had returned to the village and others were coming in freely with their arms; but I could obtain no reliable information as to the Sawbwa's line of retreat beyond the fact that he fled from the place on the morning of the 27th. Here the great difficulty faced me that, before I could proceed northwards in pursuit of the ex-Sawbwa, I must again return to Wuntho to obtain fresh supplies; for so urgent was the necessity for pouring troops into Kawlin and Wuntho, and so great was our difficulty in obtaining transport, that our troops were obliged to advance with only a few days' rations carried on such mules and coolies as could be impressed at Tigyaing, whilst the troops from Shwebo brought only ten days' rations with them carried on carts, which were useless beyond Wuntho.

18. However, even had I been able to despatch a column at once in pursuit of the ex-Sawbwa, I believe it could not have overtaken him, as during my advance on Pinlebu on the 28th February the mounted infantry under Captain Custance and the Shwebo Mounted Police under Captain Keary had been given a free hand, and had pushed well forward in a northerly direction without finding any trace of the ex-Sawbwa or his followers.

19. This great difficulty of rationing the troops and improvising transport had engaged the earnest attention of the General Officer Commanding the Burma District and myself before I left Mandalay, and with the help of the civil authorities we were enabled to procure hired Panthay mules; but these animals had to be brought from Bernardmyo to the Irrawaddy, a distance of 65 miles by land, and then by steamer from Thabeitkin to Tigyaing and Katha. All this took considerable time.

20. Meanwhile rations had to be poured into both these bases of operations, which, together with the already existing strain on our marine transport in conveying troops from Mandalay to Tigyaing and Katha, considerably hampered my movements.

21. However, on the 4th March, having satisfied myself as to the peacefulness of Pinlebu and the people round about, and having arranged for the establishment of certain posts along that frontier as well as around Wuntho, I was enabled to proceed with a small column—110 rifles of mounted troops—towards Mansè, where I felt mounted troops were then more required than in Southern Wuntho, and making forced marches reached that place, a distance of 71 miles, on the 7th to find all quiet there and the place in possession of Colonel Macgregor's advance guard. The first object of the expedition had been accomplished throughout the country by the 28th February; the second and third were so intimately connected that whilst engaged in the one I was giving effect to the other. Thus by the 30th March I was enabled to report that the whole country south of Mansè had been disarmed, and was so peaceful as to be ripe for civil administration. During this time posts had been established throughout the country, and all old Wuntho officials who had accepted the terms of our proclamation deposing the Sawbwa and annexing the country, and established their claims to office, had been reinstated, and other appointments made.

22. In order to bring about this peaceful state of affairs and thoroughly restore confidence, troops were kept moving throughout the country—notably a column under Lieutenant-Colonel Clark, consisting of 100 rifles of the Oxfordshire Light Infantry, a few of whom were mounted, which was despatched from Banmauk on 16th March towards Mawnaing, and thence, travelling southward, scoured the whole western frontier of the country, reaching Wuntho on the 3rd April viâ Mettaung.

23. Two other columns were despatched from Mansè in pursuit of the ex-Sawbwa and his father—one under Lieutenant-Colonel Macgregor, D.S.O., to Indawgyi, to open up communication with the Mogaung column under Captain O'Donnell; and the other, consisting of mounted infantry, under Captain Custance, to Shwe-dwin viâ Seyua, at which place it was then reported that the young ex-Sawbwa was hiding; whilst a third column, with 50 Karens, under Mr. Prendergast, and 30 Gurkhas, proceeded under Lieutenant Owen, Oxfordshire Light Infantry, to the top of Taungtônlôn, 5,652 feet high, to endeavour to establish a signalling station there. This was found to be impracticable owing to the density of the jungle and the utter absence of water within five or six miles from the summit.

24. During these movements I found my presence needed at Mansè for the organization of transport, and for making the necessary arrangements (in the event of neither of these columns succeeding in capturing the ex-Sawbwa or his father) for continuing the pursuit on to the jade-mines.

25. The Northern and Mogaung Columns first joined hands at Payani on the 30th March without, I regret to say, effecting the capture of either the young or the old ex-Sawbwa, who were then both reported to have taken refuge at the jade-mines.

26. From this place I found it necessary to despatch the Mogaung Column to punitively visit the Sana Sawbwa in his capital, whilst the Northern Column, under Lieutenant-Colonel Macgregor, marched by the direct route to Indawgyi.

27. Captain O'Donnell having satisfactorily carried out his instructions with regard to Sana, where no opposition was offered and the place found deserted, both columns concentrated at Indawgyi on April 7th. From this the two columns marched by converging routes on to Sauka jade-mines, where I arrived on the 15th without any opposition, and was well received by the people.

28. Next day I marched a column to Tawmaw, one of the workings of the jade-mines, but finding no ground suitable for an encampment, I returned the same day to Sauka. Having selected a good site on which to construct the new post, I detailed the following garrison to hold it:—Two guns of No. 6 (Bombay) Mountain Battery and 132 rifles of the Mogaung Levy under Captain O'Donnell. Here, as elsewhere throughout the pursuit, I could obtain no reliable information as to the whereabouts of the ex-Sawbwa or his father beyond the fact that they had fled towards China, having failed to obtain assistance or protection from the Kansi Sawbwa and other officials in and about the jade-mines.

29. It being impossible to follow up the pursuit, I made a final attempt at cutting off their retreat by blocking the road at Laban, through which the only direct road from the jade-mines to China passes, with a column of the Mogaung Levy under Inspector Crawther; but, from information received there, it appears that the fugitives avoided all main tracks, and were making for China by the round-about road viâ the amber-mines, whither it was impossible to follow them.

30. The movement of the Northern and Mogaung Columns on the jade-mines, and the establishment at that place of a military post, brought the operations of the Wuntho expedition, I think, to a satisfactory conclusion, as the establishment of this fort forms a connecting link in the chain of posts on our northern frontier, extending from the Irrawaddy to the Chindwin river, and thence to Kohima. The Northern Column returned to Katha viâ Mohnyin, thus opening up another bit of hitherto unexplored country, whilst the rest of the troops returned viâ Mogaung, where in personal consultation with the Commissioner, Northern Division, and with the sanction of the General Officer Commanding the Burma District, field operations were closed on the 30th April.

31. Although the ex-Sawbwa and his father have not been captured, I still confidently claim for the troops engaged that all three objects of the expedition were successfully accomplished. No troops could have behaved better, and throughout the operations but one single case of undiscipline came under my notice.

From start to finish they evinced throughout a cheerful and willing spirit, which, considering the hard and trying marches, reflects great credit upon all the officers and men concerned.

32. From the time the troops took the field to the close of the operations not a single village was burnt or damaged which had not offered resistance to us, with the solitary exception of Sana, which, for political reasons, it has long been intended to have destroyed, and it was at the time of its destruction abandoned.

Bearing in mind the heat of the sun by day and the heavy dews which usually prevailed by night, the absence of camp equipage and all other shelter usually found in Burma, beyond such temporary cover as the men themselves could hastily improvise after long fatiguing marches, often not reaching camp till five and six in the evening, the health of the force was, I think, on the whole satisfactory.

33. The medical and sanitary arrangements were, as I knew they would be, thoroughly well worked out, at first by Surgeon R. S. F. Henderson, and subsequently by Surgeon G. E. Hale. I cannot speak in too high terms of these valuable medical officers.

I am also pleased to endorse Lieutenant-Colonel Macgregor's warm approval of the good services rendered to his column by Surgeon R. H. Castor, Indian Medical Service (Madras).

34. The commissariat arrangements were well looked after by Lieutenant-Colonel W. H. M. Francklyn at Mandalay, and rations admirably supplied to the different troops in the field under the careful supervision of Lieutenant Taylor, Chief Commissariat Officer to the expedition.

35. The transport and general supervision along the line of communications were energetically and intelligently conducted by Major H. E. C. Kitchener, Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry. My special thanks are due to Captain Barwick, of Her Majesty's Indian Marine, for the energetic and eminently successful way in which he conducted the marine transport during the expedition.

36. The lateness of the season at which the operations were begun precluded all hope of constructing new roads, but the services of the Public Works Department were conspicuous by the energetic and willing way in which Mr. Richard, Superintending Engineer, met all my wishes with regard to the construction of posts and the improvement of the roads between Tigyaing and Wuntho and between Wuntho and Pinlebu, in which work he was ably assisted by Mr. Bligh, Lieutenant Fraser, Royal Engineers, and Mr. Walling. This latter officer is also brought prominently to my notice by Lieutenant-Colonel Macgregor. The Queen's Own Sappers and Miners under Lieutenant L. P. Chapman, Royal Engineers, also rendered valuable service in the construction of other posts.

37. My thanks are also due to the Telegraph Department for the speed with which they completed the line of wire to Wuntho, and hurried on the opening up of the line from Katha to Mansè; and to the Postal Department for the arrangements made by them for the speedy delivery of letters and papers to the several columns engaged in the operations.

38. My duties as Chief Political Officer to the expedition were materially lightened by the ever-willing and energetic manner in which Mr. E. Fowle assisted me throughout. This officer joined me at Wuntho on my assuming personal control of the operations, and remained with me till they closed. I cannot speak too highly of the valuable services he rendered to the expedition. Colonel Macgregor brings to notice the good service rendered to him and his column by Mr. Emile Martini, and my personal experience of that officer enables me, I am happy to say, to endorse Colonel Macgregor's favorable report. I am also much indebted to Mr. Collins for his assistance to the Northern Column and advice and help afforded to me throughout the operations. My thanks are also due to the civil officers acting under him, all of whom have done well.

39. I would here also mention the good services rendered by Mr. George, Survey of India, who volunteered to remain in Kawlin during the trying times when it was in a state of siege, and actively employed himself in the defence of the place.

40. I desire to bring to special notice the services of the Military Police. They have been associated with regular troops throughout the operations, and have invariably done well. This was the first occasion on which men of the Karen Police were associated with regular troops on field service. They were always very keen to fight.

41. I have much pleasure in furthering Colonel Macgregor's wishes that the names of Mr. Prendergast and Mr. Folger should be brought to favorable notice whilst respectively in command of this detachment of the Karen Battalion. Had Captain Hutchinson lived, it would have been my pleasing duty to have specially mentioned him for favorable consideration. Captain A. D. C. Pond, who succeeded him in command of the Ye-u Battalion, deserves mention; also Lieutenant W. G. H. Stirling, Katha Battalion, and Inspector Trotter, Burma Police.

42. I desire to bring prominently to notice the brilliant services of Captain H. D'U. Keary, Commanding the Shwebo Battalion of Military Police. I consider that the advancement of this officer would be to the benefit of the service. The spirit of dash and confidence inspired by his presence at Kawlin, and the prompt manner in which he grappled with the situation and turned the hitherto needlessly cautious state of defence into one of vigorous and determined attack, is worthly of special acknowledgment.

43. I submit the names of the following officers for favorable consideration for good service during the operations:

Lieutenant Colonel C. R. Macgregor, D.S.O., who commanded the Northern Column throughout the operations; Major O. S. Smyth, D.S.O., who commanded the Southern Column; and Captain H. O'Donnell, D.S.O., 44th Bengal Infantry, who commanded the Mogaung Column. These officers maintained the high reputation they have already gained for good and gallant service. Captain T. A. H. Davies, Devonshire Regiment, for the gallant manner in which he conducted the attack on the enemy's entrenched position at Kyaingkwintaung on the 22nd February, as also for the determined manner in which he hurried up with his ever-willing men from Shwebo to Kawlin, covering nearly 100 miles, with cart transport within five days. Captain S. Custance, Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, for excellent service when in command of the mounted infantry of his regiment. He and his men had, perhaps, harder work than any other men during the operations, and their services deserve special recognition.

44. Had Captain N. A. Bray, Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers, lived, I should have brought his name to notice as deserving special recognition, as I cannot overrate his valuable services to the expedition.

45. The health of Captain A. B. Murray, 10th Regiment (1st Burma Battalion) Madras Infantry, my senior staff officer, I regret to say, broke down soon after arrival in Wuntho, but he struggled bravely to carry on his duties, although his health would not admit of his doing so. He was always keen and willing.

46. My orderly officer, Second-Lieutenant Bruce, Royal Artillery, ably and energetically performed his varied duties, and I consider him an officer of much promise.

47. Since the death of Captain Bray, Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General, Intelligence Branch, the official diary of the campaign has been admirably carried on by Second-Lieutenant H. C. Holman, Devonshire Regiment. I have tried this gallant young officer in many duties, and for one so young I have never met one who so successfully achieved all that he was called upon to perform. I anticipate a brilliant career for this young officer, and I commend his good services to special notice.

48. In conclusion, I beg to offer my special thanks to Mr. G. D. Burgess, C.S.I., Commissioner, Northern Division. I could never have carried out my orders so expeditiously and, I trust, satisfactorily had it not been for the invariable help and support I received from this officer. I therefore desire to close this despatch by soliciting that his valuable services on this occasion may be brought specially to the notice of the local and supreme Governments.

ACCOUNTS AND FINANCE.
SAVINGS BANKS.

No. 4873.

The 4th December, 1891.

ORDER—By the Government of India, Finance and Commerce Department.

READ—

Report by the Comptroller and Auditor General on the operations of the Savings Banks in India for the year 1890-91 and annexed statements.

No. 56, dated Calcutta, the 23rd November, 1891.

From—STEPHEN JACOB, Esq., Officiating Comptroller and Auditor General,
To—The Secretary to the Government of India, Finance and Commerce Department.

I HAVE the honour to submit my report on the operations of the Savings Banks in India, for the year 1890-91.

2. There are two descriptions of these Banks, viz., Banks open to the public and Service Institutions, the former comprise Presidency and Post Office Banks, and the latter State Railway Provident Institutions, Civil Engineers' Provident Fund and Military Banks. The State Railway Provident Institutions are for the non-pensionable employés of the State Railways, Civil Engineers' Provident Fund is for the officers of the Public Works and Telegraph Departments, and the Military Banks are for the benefit of non-commissioned officers and privates of British regiments.

3. I annex the usual statements marked I to VII, containing the accounts and statistics for the year, the principal features of which are summarised in the tables given in paragraphs 5 and 6, from which the following facts are gathered. On the 31st March 1891 there were 6,642 Government Savings Banks in India, comprising 4,75,329 accounts, which earned from Government ₹ 27,97,935 in the shape of interest, and possessed balances at their credit aggregating ₹ 8,06,06,757. In addition to these balances, Government held on behalf of the depositors' Government securities of the nominal value of ₹ 4,16,200, and sold for or returned to them during the year Government Promissory Notes amounting to ₹ 3,74,800. There has been an increase this year of 96 in the number of Banks, 43,524 in the number of depositors, and ₹ 52,88,157 in the balance, as compared with 1889-90.

4. The deposits received and interest earned during the year under review exceeded those of last year by ₹ 14,40,000 and ₹ 78,878, respectively, while withdrawals fell short of those of last year by ₹ 47,56,000. The low limit of total annual deposits, which makes depositors avoid drawing upon the banks as much as possible, and the check on investments placed by the premium commanded by securities, have combined to reduce the withdrawals.

5. The transactions of the several classes of Banks are shown in the following table:—

DESCRIPTION OF BANKS.	Number of Banks.	Number of Depositors.	Interest earned.	Bank balances.	NOMINAL VALUE OF GOVERNMENT PROMISSORY NOTES.
					Returned and sold.	Held for Depositors.

TOTAL .	6,642	4,75,329	27,97,935	8,06,06,757	3,74,800	4,16,200

6. The subjoined statement compares the figures for the year under report with those of last year for each class of Bank. The Presidency Bank, Calcutta, shows an increase both in the number of accounts and the amount of balance, but the Madras and Bombay Banks show a decrease in both respects, owing probably to the transfer of accounts to the Post Office Banks. The number of Post Office Banks as well as the number of depositors and the amount of balance in them have exceeded those of last year by 105,50,272 and ₹47,70,652, respectively. The progress in Railway and Civil Engineers' Provident Institutions is only what could be expected from their peculiar constitution as explained in last year's report. The Military Banks, in Bengal and Bombay, show a falling off both in the number of accounts and amount of balance, while those of Madras show a small increase.

Increase or decrease in 1890-91, as compared with 1889-90.

7. The investments by depositors in Government Promissory Notes have fallen off as indicated in Statement VI. This is no doubt due to the price of Government paper having stood above par throughout the year under report, though the premium was not so high as during the current year. Depositors were naturally slow to invest in Government Securities in expectation of lower rates, which, however, have not been realised. From Statement VII, which gives by provinces the particulars of Presidency and Post Office Savings Banks combined, it will be observed that the growth of depositors' balances is spread over all the provinces: though it is largest in Bengal and Bombay, the latter maintains its relative superiority when its population is taken into account.

8. Under the orders of Government the check of the accounts of State Railway Provident Institutions has been transferred this year to the Public Works Examiners concerned. I keep the accounts of the Civil Engineers' Provident Fund only, and they have been agreed with the accounts kept by the Examiner of Accounts, Military Works, and the figures for the year 1890-91 are subject to correction on the closing of the Finance and Revenue Accounts, which remain open up to February next.

LEAVE AND PENSION.

No. 4863.

The 4th December 1891.

RESOLUTION—By the Government of India, Finance and Commerce Department.

READ—

Resolution by the Government of India in this Department, No. 5800, dated the 12th December 1890.

Despatch to the Secretary of State, No. 393, dated 17th December 1889.

Despatch from the Secretary of State, No. 125, dated 25th June 1891.

RESOLUTION.—In the Resolution read in the preamble, the decisions arrived at on some of the recommendations made in the report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons on East India (Civil Servants) were published. His Excellency the Governor General in Council now directs the publication of the final decisions on the other questions, which arose in connection with the report of the Committee, and which were in December 1890 held over for further consideration in communication with Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India. These were—

(a) The recommendation contained in the following extract from the report :—

> "Your Committee are further of opinion that the greater part of the grievances of the Uncovenanted Service is due to the ambiguity of the terms in which services have from time to time been stated, and recommend that in future there shall be as nearly as possible a uniform scheme, which shall explicitly describe the terms of pension and furlough."

(b) The following remarks of the Committee :—

> "Your Committee have had their attention called to the obstacles in taking furlough, arising from the insufficiency of the present furlough pay, and they recommend this matter to the consideration of the Secretary of State in Council."

(c) The question as to what action should be taken with reference to the complaints made to the Committee regarding the reservation, in Articles 5 to 7 of the Civil Service Regulations, of the right of the Government to change or modify the pension and furlough rules from time to time and to interpret their meaning.

2. The Government of India are of opinion that the leave and pension rules, as contained in the Civil Service Regulations, are not open to the charge of ambiguity, though from the necessity of the case they are elaborate and complicated. The Regulations have acquired their present form in the course of years, the object of the modifications made from time to time having been, while assimilating as far as possible the conditions of service for similar classes in different branches of the Administration, to remove all ambiguity from the rules, and to enable, on the one hand, officers to ascertain their rights and privileges, and, on the other hand, to enable Local Governments and executive authorities to decide without reference to the Government of India the great mass of questions in regard to leave and pension which necessarily come before them.

3. In view of the great differences which exist in the conditions of service of the many branches of the public service, and in the circumstances of appointments of officers to different branches and sometimes to the same branch, it is not possible to introduce one scheme of leave and pension rules applicable to all branches of the Civil Service. His Excellency the Governor General in Council considers that the Civil Service Regulations cannot be materially abbreviated or simplified without risk of causing ambiguity and a return to the former state of uncertainty, which existed before the rules were codified. His Excellency in Council will always bear in mind the desirability of simplifying the rules wherever possible; but the Civil Service Regulations, without any material alteration in form, must for some time continue to be the authoritative declaration of the rules relating to leave and pension.

4. In order, however, that the more important rules regarding leave and pension may be available in a shorter and more convenient form, a pamphlet containing the principal regulations in a condensed form is being prepared, and will be issued hereafter.

5. The remarks of the Committee quoted in clause (b) of paragraph 1 of this Resolution have been understood by the Secretary of State and by the Government of India to have reference to the absence of any minimum furlough allowance. The decision on this question is contained in the following extracts from the Secretary of State's Despatch of the 25th June 1891:—

"I concur with Your Excellency in thinking that there are certain cases in which it is desirable to guarantee a minimum leave allowance, but I am of opinion that it will be sufficient to give £200 a year, or 75 per cent. of the last salary in India, converted at the rate annually fixed for adjustment, whichever of the two sums may be the less.

* * * * * * * *

"The leave rules are, in my opinion, sufficiently liberal in the concessions made to those who voluntarily take leave of absence; and if they desire to come to this country, I see no reason for giving them an increase of pay beyond that at present permissible. There is, however, a difference in the case of persons whose health may have broken down in India, and who are ordered by a Medical Board to seek the restoration of their health in a temperate climate. Such officers have no option in the matter; and it is reasonable to allow them such a moderate amount of pay as may enable them to avail themselves of the leave ordered for them. Hence I am disposed, if Your Excellency should agree, to consent to the grant of the minimum rates above mentioned in cases of sick leave, and to half those rates in similar cases where quarter pay is at present admissible. I leave it to Your Excellency to determine from what date the privilege should commence."

His Excellency the Governor General in Council has accepted these proposals and has fixed the 1st July 1891 as the date from which they shall have effect.

6. Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India, having examined the particular instances which were mentioned in support of the complaints referred to in clause (c) of paragraph 1 of this Resolution, regarding the manner in which the right to alter the leave and pension rules had been exercised by the Government of India, expressed the opinion that in none of them had there been any interference with the rights of the servants of the Government. The Government of India have always been careful to exercise the right of altering rules with due consideration for the rights of their servants. The ordinary course adopted to prevent hardship arising from any change of rule found necessary has been either to defer the introduction of the change for some time after its publication, or to give the officers affected the right of choosing whether they shall come under the operation of the old or of the new rules. It has been decided that the right of altering rules must be maintained, that care should be taken, as in the past, to prevent the introduction of any new rules from operating harshly, but that the Local Governments and the Government of India should not consider themselves precluded from recommending an exception in any case of individual hardship which may arise in spite of the precautions taken. If any case of apparent hardship arises, the local authorities should understand that, when the officer applies to retire, they are not precluded from examining into its merits and ascertaining whether, in their opinion, he has substantially suffered from the introduction of a rule not in force at the time he entered the service. If, after comparing the advantages secured to the officer by the altered rules with any disadvantages incidentally involved, they find that he has on the whole substantially suffered, the point may be taken into consideration in determining whether some compensation ought not to be granted in the particular instance.

7. A list of amendments to the Civil Service Regulations is appended to this Resolution, showing the additions and corrections made in accordance with the foregoing decisions.

ORDER.—Ordered, that this Resolution be communicated to all Departments of the Government of India; to all Local Governments and Administrations; to the Comptroller and Auditor General; to all Accountants General and Comptrollers; the Director General of Post Offices; the Mint and Assay Masters, Calcutta and Bombay; the Commissioner, Northern India Salt Revenue; and the Superintendent, Government Printing, India.

Ordered also, that the Resolution be published in the Gazette of India for general information.

ADDENDA AND CORRIGENDA TO THE CIVIL SERVICE REGULATIONS.

CATTLE-TRESPASS ACT, 1871, AMENDMENT BILL.

EASEMENTS BILL.

The Hon'ble SIR ANDREW SCOBLE moved that the Bill to provide for the extension of the Indian Easements Act, 1882, to certain areas in which that Act is not in force be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Hon'ble Khan Bahádur Muhammad Ali Khan, the Hon'ble Mr. Nugent and the Mover.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

INDIAN MERCHANDISE MARKS ACT, 1889, AND SEA CUSTOMS ACT, 1878, AMENDMENT BILL.

The Hon'ble SIR ANDREW SCOBLE also moved for leave to introduce a Bill to amend the Indian Merchandise Marks Act, 1889, and the Sea Customs Act, 1878. He said:—

"When I introduced the Merchandise Marks Bill in 1888, I took occasion to say that the success of the measure would depend greatly on the extent to which the mercantile community co-operated with the officers of Government in carrying out its provisions, and I expressed the hope that that co-operation would be freely afforded in order to secure the efficient working of the Act without unnecessary friction or expense to the public. The Act has now been in force for nearly two years, and, I believe, I am justified in saying that, like the corresponding Statute in England, it has been beneficial to the commercial interests of the country, and that the Customs-authorities have carried out its provisions with great fairness, and with a due regard to the requirements of honest trade.

"It was to be expected, however, that novel legislation of this kind, which had a tendency to check the rapid delivery of imported goods, would produce at the outset some inconvenience to those whom it was designed to benefit; and representations were made to the Government by mercantile bodies both in England and India that certain difficulties had arisen in regard to the working of the Act, which might be removed without in any way diminishing the protection against fraudulent practices which the Act was intended to furnish. In February last a Committee consisting of three officers of the Government, a representative of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, and a representative of the Calcutta Trades Association, was appointed by the Governor General in Council for the purpose of considering these representations, and the last paragraph of the report of the Committee, which was submitted in March last, contained the following recommendations:—

'(1) We consider that a section should be inserted in the Act giving power to the Governor General in Council to define from time to time the term "piece-goods". Such an amendment is required to give statutory effect to the regulation we have proposed that only certain goods should be treated as piece-goods.

'(2) It has been suggested to us that it is a hardship to require in section 10 of the Act the name of both place and country on goods not made in the United Kingdom or British India. We think the objection reasonable and that it is sufficient to require the name of the country. We recommend that section 18 (e) be amended accordingly.

'(3) We recommend the insertion in the Act of a section giving the Governor General in Council such a power with respect to yarns and certain other goods as in the case of petroleum is given to the Local Governments by section 8 (1) (e) of the Petroleum Act, XII of 1886.

'(4) We also recommend the insertion in the Act of a provision similar to that contained in section 125 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, as amended by Act III of 1887. We make this suggestion because we think it desirable that Customs Collectors should not be compelled to disclose the names of their informants.'

"The Governor General in Council accepted the suggestions of the Committee; and the object of this Bill is to give effect to those suggestions.

"With regard to the first point, I may say that the provision for stamping the length on all 'piece-goods, such as are ordinarily sold by length or by the piece,' though introduced at the express request of the Chambers of Commerce in this country, has been found to have too wide an application. It is proposed therefore to empower the Government, in making regulations under the Act for the guidance of Customs-officers, to declare what descriptions of goods are to be treated as piece-goods for the purposes of the Act. A list of such goods has been carefully prepared by the Committee, and may be added to, from time to time, as occasion may require.

"Upon the second point, the Indian Act goes beyond the English Statute in requiring both the place and the country in which a foreign article has been manufactured to be indicated. A Parliamentary Committee, which has recently been enquiring into the working of the English Act, has reported that, although the substitution of the words 'made abroad' for the actual indication of the country in which the goods were produced could not be allowed, yet 'the name of the country might be held to be a sufficient indication of origin, without in all cases insisting on the name of the particular place in which the goods were made.' The Bill will, therefore, bring the Indian into conformity with the English law in this respect.

"The third amendment relates to the making of rules for testing whether goods which purport or are alleged to be of uniform number, quantity, measure, gauge or weight, really answer their description. This is particularly necessary in regard to yarns.

"The last amendment extends to Customs-officers the same protection in regard to proceedings under this Act which they already enjoy with reference to offences against the public revenue. It is, I think, obvious that they should not be compellable to say from whom they have got their information, as otherwise persons would be chary of putting them on the track of breaches of the law."

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble SIR ANDREW SCOBLE also introduced the Bill.

The Hon'ble SIR ANDREW SCOBLE also moved that the Bill and Statement of Objects and Reasons be published in the Gazette of India in English, and in the local official Gazettes in English and in such other languages as the Local Governments think fit.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

INDIAN PENAL CODE AND CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE, 1882, AMENDMENT BILL.

The Hon'ble SIR ANDREW SCOBLE also moved for leave to introduce a Bill to amend the Indian Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882. He said:—

"Under section 375 of the Penal Code, the offence of rape is constituted when a man has sexual intercourse with a woman under certain specified circumstances, one of these being when the intercourse takes place, with or without the consent of the woman, when she is under ten years of age. No exception is made in favour of married persons, but, on the contrary, it is provided that sexual intercourse by a man with his own wife, the wife not being under ten years of age, is not rape, that is to say, that her consent will not liberate her husband from the operation of the general law, unless she has attained the age at which consent may be given by women as a class. The proposal in the Bill which I now ask leave to introduce is to raise the age of consent, both for married and unmarried women, from ten to twelve years.

"I think it desirable to state at the outset that no new offence will be created by the Bill. This disposes of the argument, which I have seen put forward in some quarters, that the existence of the marital relation renders it impossible for a man to commit a rape upon his own wife, because it is of the essence of the offence that the carnal knowledge of the woman should also be unlawful and this cannot be the case between husband and wife, because of the matrimonial consent which she has given. That such intercourse may be unlawful under certain circumstances is established by the Penal Code,—it has been the law in India under that Code for more than thirty years,—and the reason for it is thus given by the Indian Law Commissioners:

'There may be cases in which the check of the law may be necessary to restrain men from taking advantage of their marital right prematurely. Instances of abuse by the husband in such cases will fall under the fifth description of rape.'

"I do not suppose that any one will question the right and duty of the State to interfere, for the protection of any class of its subjects, where a proved necessity exists for such interference; and I shall therefore proceed to state briefly the reasons which have led the Government of India to propose this amendment of the law.

"The object of the Bill is two-fold. It is intended to protect female children (1) from immature prostitution, and (2) from premature cohabitation.

"As regards the first aspect of the proposal, which affects all classes of children, Europeans as well as Natives, there can scarcely be any ground of objection. The Indian Medical Gazette for September, 1890, states—'Very cursory observation in Calcutta suffices to indicate that females are trained and prepared for a life of vice from a very tender age;' and what is said of Calcutta may, I fear, be said of other parts of the country. The consent of a girl so trained would be a matter of course, and it would be intolerable to allow the reprobate who had ravished her to escape from well-merited punishment on the ground that his victim had consented to the outrage.

"With regard to the second aspect of the proposal, which is equally wide in its scope, the suggestion has been made that to prohibit premature cohabitation is an interference with the religious law of the Hindus. It seems therefore desirable to explain that no interference with the Hindu law of marriage is intended, or will be occasioned, by this measure. The question of child-marriage has been discussed, from both points of view, by men of great erudition and authority: but it is not necessary for me to attempt to decide between them, for the question of child-mariage is left untouched by this Bill. I will, however, venture to say that, out of all these discussions, two propositions have emerged and stand established. The first is that the sages enjoin, and the custom of many castes requires, that a girl should be given in marriage before she attains puberty; and the second, that the Shastras denounce in the strongest terms, and award the most terrible punishments, both here and hereafter, to the sin of connection with an immature girl. I scarcely think that sufficient stress has hitherto been laid on the latter proposition. In an eloquent appeal to his fellow-countrymen, Pundit Sesadhur Turkachuramoni thus states the orthodox doctrine:—

'It is true we advocate early marriage (but not before the eighth year), but we condemn the custom of cohabiting with a wife before she has attained puberty. We do not support early marriage of boys. We believe it to be a great sin to cohabit with a girl before her puberty, and we believe it to be the terrible cause of our degeneration. We know that Hindu society does not believe this custom to be a great sin, and hence the degradation of the Hindus.'

"It seems to me therefore that I am justified in saying that the teachings of the sacred books of the Hindus are not in conflict with the proposals of the Bill; if modern practice, under the guise of religious observance, disregards and violates those teachings, it cannot be allowed to invoke them to justify its own disobedience to their commands.

"A better argument, or rather an argument that would be better if it were well-founded, is that the Bill is not necessary, in the first place, because the mischief intended to be guarded against is not of common occurrence, and, secondly, because the existing law is sufficient to punish the infrequent cases that occur. I am unfortunately not able to accept either of these contentions.

"Upon the first point I readily admit that the practice is not equally common in all parts of India, and that among the more enlightened classes everywhere it is viewed with increasing disfavour. But as regards Bengal, for instance, Sir Steuart Bayley reports that—

'it is a general practice for Hindu girls, after they are married but before puberty is even indicated, much less established, to be subjected to more or less frequent acts of connection with their husbands. The custom appears to be widespread—less universal among the higher than among the lower classes of Hindus—but it prevails generally over Bengal Proper, especially over Eastern and Central Bengal. It does not extend generally to Behar, nor is it prevalent in Orissa, and the aboriginal tribes are apparently free from it.'

"If this testimony stood alone, I submit, the necessity for legislation would be made out, but there is no doubt that the evil is not confined to Bengal. Where it exists, it should be dealt with as an offence; where it does not exist, the law will have no operation.

"Then, is the law already sufficient? To put it crudely, I should say that a law which permits a full-grown man to violate with precaution a little girl of ten years of age cannot be considered sufficient, except from the ruffian's point of view. 'Female children under the age of puberty,' says Dr. Macleod, in an able paper recently read by him before the Calcutta Medical Society, 'are physically unfit for sexual intercourse, and such intercourse with sexually immature female children, under any circumstances, should be declared an offence punishable by the law.' That is a perfectly intelligible proposition, and is the proposition which I am asking this Council to adopt. But what is the existing law, as laid down by one of the ablest of our Judges in Hari Maiti's case? After pointing out that the law of rape was not applicable, as the girl was over ten years of age, Mr. Justice Wilson goes on to say—

'From that follow certain consequences. One is that, in cases to which the law of rape is not applicable, neither Judges nor juries have any right to do for themselves what the law has not done—I mean not done with reference to girls above the age of ten, that is, to lay down any hard-and-fast line of age, and to say, we think that when sexual intercourse takes place with a female below such an age it is dangerous and must be regarded as punishable, and when sexual intercourse takes place with females above that age it is safe and must be regarded as right. We have no right to do that, because the law has not done it, and therefore in cases of sexual intercourse with females above ten years of age, but of whom it is alleged that they are so immature as to render sexual intercourse dangerous, we cannot take the simple and easy method, as in cases of rape, of enquiring merely into the age of the girl. We have to enquire into all the circumstances of each individual case. And secondly, when we come to apply the law to the facts of each case, we have no hard-and-fast line drawn for us as in the case of rape, in which the fact of sexual intercourse is the only matter to be enquired into; but we have to do with a wholly different class of evidence, involving many delicate considerations, of intention, of knowledge, of rashness, of negligence and of consequences. . . . In such cases, we have not to do with any general question as to what is the usual age of puberty, or what we should say, if attempting to lay down a general rule, is the safe age for the consummation of marriage. We have simply to do with the facts of the particular case on the evidence, and to say whether, having regard to the physical condition of the particular girl with whom sexual intercourse was had, and to the intention, the knowledge, the degree of rashness or of negligence with which the accused is shown to have acted on the occasion in question, he has brought himself within any of the provisions of the criminal law.'

"Now I put it to the Council whether all these difficulties ought to be interposed in the way of giving effectual legal protection to these poor little girls, and whether we ought not to lay down a hard-and-fast line, as the learned Judge calls it, whereby enquiries into cases of this class may be simplified, and the people generally may be brought to understand that the exercise of marital rights must be restrained where restraint is necessary for the protection of the wife. I have already shown that the Legislature has a right to impose such a limit. Again to quote Mr. Justice Wilson,—

'Under no system of law with which Courts have had to do in this country, whether Hindu or Muhammadan or that framed under British rule, has it ever been the law that a husband has the absolute right to enjoy the person of his wife without regard to the question of safety to her.'

"The question then remains—what ought that limit to be?

"The proposal of the Bill is to draw the line at twelve years. This is the age which has been advocated by those who have for many years been endeavouring to educate public opinion on the subject. And there appear to be valid reasons for the recommendation. It is in accordance with the practice which already prevails in some parts of India. In a numerously signed petition from Poona, against raising the age of consent, it is stated that consummation of marriage seldom takes place before the girl is twelve years old. In Madras it is alleged that premature cohabitation is of rare occurrence, and in the Punjab conjugal life ordinarily begins after sexual maturity. The Hindu law, as I have already shown, while enjoining the marriage of girls before they attain puberty, strictly prohibits the consummation of marriage before puberty is attained. According to Muhammadan law 'puberty and discretion constitute the essential conditions of the capacity to enter into a valid contract of marriage.' With both the great divisions of the population in India, the attainment of puberty may be taken as determining the appropriate age for consummation of marriage. When, then, is the period at which in the ordinary course of nature puberty is commonly attained by girls in India? There has been much discussion on this subject among medical men, and many are of opinion that a girl is not competent physically or mentally to give her consent to sexual intercourse until she has completed fourteen years of age. But to adopt this limit would involve too abrupt a fundamental revolution in the social life of India; and to attempt to enforce it by legislation would almost certainly fail of its object. I prefer to submit for the approval of the Council the more moderate view expressed by Dr. Macleod in the paper from which I have already quoted. Speaking of the period of life at which sexual maturity is attained, he says—

'Hitherto the appearance of menstruation has been held to indicate this epoch in the life of a female; and, allowing for the present that it does so in the great majority of cases, what evidence do we possess regarding the age at which menstruation commences in the females of this country? Sushruta, the Hindu sage and physician, lays down that the menstrual discharge begins after the twelfth year, and that is the age laid down for marriage by the great Hindu law-giver Manu. Dr. Allen Webb collected statistics on the subject, and the result, as stated in his Pathologia Indica, was that, "out of a list of 127 Hindu females, menstruation began only in six girls under twelve years of age; and as many of them did not again menstruate until a year after this—which they believed a first appearance—it is probable, as suggested by Babu Modusudan Gupta, that a ruptured hymen would better account for that." I am not aware of any other statistics on this subject, but twelve years may, I think be accepted as the earliest period of appearance of the menses, and probably thirteen would be a safe average. In England, fourteen years is held to be the most frequent age of menstruation, and it is held by law to be a felony to have sexual intercourse with a girl below that age. Making all due allowance for climatic and racial differences, and bearing social customs in mind it would seem reasonable and right that the age of protection should be raised in this country from ten to twelve.'

"On the ground, therefore, that the age of twelve years approximately may be considered as the average age for consummation of marriage, both according to law and custom, on the one hand, and, on the other, as the lowest safe age as regards physical fitness, I venture to think that the line may be drawn at that age without doing violence to any respectable social usage, or to the religious law, of any portion of the community. And, though this age may be considered by some too low, it must be borne in mind that, while this amendment of the law will afford absolute legislative protection to girls up to the age of twelve years, the remedies of the existing law in regard to cases of brutality will remain available to girls above that age.

"Two other objections to the proposed amendment of the law remain to be considered. In the first place, it is feared that it may lead to the invasion of the privacy of families by the police, not so much for the detection of crime as for the purpose of extorting blackmail. I have found this apprehension so widely entertained that, whether it is justified or not, I think it deserves consideration. I therefore propose that offences by a man against his own wife under the amended section shall be non-cognisable, that is to say, that police-officers may not arrest without warrant, but proceedings must be taken by summons, and bail may be accepted. This concession, I hope, will remove all ground of alarm on this account.

"The other objection is that legislative action is not likely to have much direct result This may be so; but for my part I shall be content if the effect of legislation is mainly educative—if it strengthens the hands of fathers of families for the protection of their daughters, and modifies custom so as to diminish the opportunities and incentives which are now afforded for indulgence in this pernicious practice. I cannot, moreover, forget that it was pointed out long ago by Dr. Chevers that the existing law has done mischief to those whose interests it was designed to protect, by fixing too low an age; and I agree with the late Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal in the opinion that though it may not be probable or even desirable that many cases will be brought into Court, yet, if the enforcement of the husband's rights upon a girl below twelve years of age is stigmatised by the law as rape, and it is publicly recognized that those who abet such assaults render themselves liable to punishment, a great improvement will surely be effected, not only in the condition of the class for whose protection the Bill is primarily designed but in the physical and social well-being of the people at large."

The Hon'ble SIR ROMESH CHUNDER MITTER said:—"The proposed amendment of the exception to section 375 of the Indian Penal Code is likely to cause widespread discontent in the country. If it were necessary to protect child-wives from personal violence, or if it were not a departure from the wise and just policy of the Government not to interfere with the religious rites and duties of any portion of the subjects where such interference is not needed for the repression of crimes, or even if it had the effect of remedying to an appreciable degree the evils of early marriage, I should have been very glad to support it.

"So far as the protection of child-wives from personal violence is concerned, they are now sufficiently protected by the provisions of the existing criminal law.

"A husband under the existing law would be criminally liable for acts which constitute an offence of causing death by doing a rash or negligent act, of hurt simple and grievous or of assault against his wife, even if they were done with her consent if she be under twelve years of age. The existing law therefore affords sufficient protection to a wife under twelve years of age from violence from her husband.

"The proposed measure would be a departure from the wise and just policy of the Government referred to above, because it would interfere with the religious rites and duties of the orthodox Hindus. I desire to be understood that my observations here apply to the orthodox Hindus domiciled in Bengal Proper. Whether they apply to orthodox Hindus domiciled in other parts of the Empire I cannot say.

"In Bengal Proper the orthodox Hindus are guided by the interpretations of the Shasters given in Rughu Nundun Bhattacharjea's Ashtubinghastti Tuttos. Whether these interpretations are correct or not is, I venture to think, a question with which legislators in this country should not concern themselves.

"So long as the orthodox Hindus continue to accept this work as containing a correct exposition of their Shasters, we must look to it to ascertain the views of the Shasters upon any particular subject. It is for the social and religious reformers to discuss whether or not the book in question interprets the Shasters correctly. It is upon this line that the question of the propriety of abolishing early marriage amongst the Hindus is being discussed now. But, as I have said, we must refer to this work to ascertain whether the proposed measure would or would not interfere with the religious rites and duties of the Hindus in certain cases.

"Rughu Nundun, in Sanscar Tawtwa, treating of Garbadhan ceremony, lays down that the proper period of the consummation of the marriage is when the wife attains the age at which a certain well-known physical condition occurs, and the husband would commit a sin if he does not then consummate it. Now, in this country this physical condition is reached in certain cases before the age of twelve.

"In these cases the orthodox Hindu husbands, if the proposed amendment be adopted, would be placed in this dilemma—either they must break the law or disregard the injunctions of the Shasters. It is true that the hold of the Shasters upon the minds of the educated persons, at least so far as the ceremonial portion is concerned, has been to a great extent loosened, and many educated persons amongst the Hindus do not observe the Garbadhan ceremony in their families. But the proportion of such families to the strictly orthodox families in which it is observed is small. Although the former do not observe this ceremony in their families, still they disapprove of the present measure, because it is a departure from the non-interference policy hitherto observed by the Government and guaranteed by the great Proclamation of 1858, which says:—

"We do strictly charge and enjoin all those who may be in authority under Us, that they abstain from all interference with the religious belief or worship of any of Our subjects on pain of Our highest displeasure."

"Then again, although it is proposed to make the offence when committed by the husband upon his own wife under the amended section non-cognizable, still it would be liable to be abused and be a source of annoyance and molestation in some cases.

"In villages, where party strifes sometimes rage very high, it is not altogether improbable that a judicial officer might be induced to institute criminal proceedings under this section, his suspicion having been aroused by anonymous communications.

"According to the English law as hitherto laid down in decided cases, a husband cannot under any circumstance commit rape upon his own wife, though this proposition has been incidentally doubted in a recent case in which the particular question did not arise. I am not aware whether in any other civilized country a husband can be held guilty of rape upon his own wife.

"It is an offence which, having regard to the considerations upon which its criminality is founded, a husband should be held incapable of committing. Some of these considerations are obviously the preservation of female chastity and the prevention of indelible disgrace upon the husband and the family to which the outraged female belongs. These considerations cannot apply to a husband

"It is an anomaly in the Indian Penal Code that a husband under certain circumstances may be guilty of rape upon his own wife. That provision is, however, a dead letter. Since 1860, when the Penal Code was passed, I am not aware of a single conviction under this part of section 375. If the amended section is also likely to prove a dead letter, there is no need for enacting it. If it be, on the other hand, effective in bringing about convictions, even in a small number of cases, the consequences of such convictions upon the marriage relation of the parties would be very deplorable. Could the marriage relation in these cases after the convictions be in any sense happy or cordial? Still the marriages, if they are Hindus, are indissoluble.

"If any amendment of the Code is needed for punishing an offender who is not the husband of the outraged girl, that may be easily done by substituting twelve for ten in the fifth clause of section 375. It is open to doubt whether, reading section 375 with section 90 of the Code, the age of consent as regards persons other than husbands is not already twelve years. But to remove this doubt there cannot be the slightest objection to any amendment which would raise the age of consent in these cases to twelve. But I venture to think that the proposed amendment regarding the husband's criminality would cause widespread discontent in the country and would be a departure from the policy to which I have referred in the beginning.

"The degree of discontent that is likely to be caused may be, to a certain extent, realized if we take a parallel case. Suppose in Great Britain an endeavour be made by legislation to enforce the custom of cremation instead of burial, on the ground that the former is far better from a sanitary point of view: what would be the state of the feeling of the people? It seems to me that legislation upon subjects like these must wait till the public opinion is sufficiently educated. In this connection I may be permitted to throw out a doubt that the proposed measure is likely to put back reformation in the marriage system of the Hindus, which was being slowly and silently effected. The orthodox and the advanced parties were gradually approaching to a common point of agreement. But the agitation in England has had a very baneful effect upon the prospects of the views of the two parties being reconciled to one another, and the proposed measure, I regret to say, would widen the breach still more.

"These are some of the consequences that I apprehend would follow from the proposed measure. On the other hand, no appreciable benefit would be gained thereby."

The Hon'ble RAO BAHADUR KRISHNAJI LAKSHMAN NULKAR said:—"I wish to support the Motion that leave be granted to introduce this Bill, inasmuch as it will afford, to a certain extent at least, protection against physical violation of a class of helpless children among large sections of the population.

"As to the religious objection pointed out by my Hon'ble friend, I doubt not that he must be accepted as one of the best authorities on that point. But I would beg to observe that Hindu religious authorities on such matters are so varied and contradictory that it is often difficult to decide as to which of them ought to be accepted and followed in preference to others. I am aware that the practice of the Courts of law has been to administer such of the provisions as may be found to be generally received and acted upon by the communities concerned. It must, however, be remembered that this practice has often led to the Courts lending themselves to the sanction of practices directly opposed to justice, equity and good conscience; and consequently the Legislature has often felt it to be its bounden duty to step in and amend the law. In the present instance, granting that the Hindu law, as enunciated by my hon'ble friend, is really claimed to be strictly and invariably followed in any part of India, it is one of those provisions which I think ought to be disregarded in the interests of humanity. I do not, however, admit that it is of the binding character claimed for it. There are other provisions for which a much greater authority and sanctity could be justly claimed, according to which marriage itself is not lawful until a much higher age than that which the proposed Bill provides as the age of consent for consummation.

"As to the unpopularity of the measure, it is very probable that in certain quarters and in certain sections of society it will be at first viewed with disapprobation, and it may even be made the occasion of false alarm. But I feel certain that such a feeling would be temporary, traceable directly to the false issues raised in the course of the heated controversy which has been going on for some years past between social reformers on the one side and those who claim to be conservatives on the other. It is the country's misfortune that the one party should have often overdone their part by appealing for legislative aid in matters which lie quite outside the ordinary functions of the Legislature, and in which it is the duty of society to provide remedies. The other party has naturally retaliated by crying down any legislation whatever, apparently because it was asked for by their opponents. Indeed, these latter have done some harm by claiming the measure now under consideration as specially belonging to their programme of social reform. As a matter of fact, it has as little direct connection with social reform as any other provision of the Penal Code. It simply seeks to remove a glaring defect in the criminal law of India. This true character of the measure will soon become clear to the public, as they have time to consider its nature and effect calmly and dispassionately; because I feel certain that, but for the fact that it was mixed up by one of the parties to the social reform controversy with their demands for all manner of legislative props to their plans, we should never have heard of any misconception on the subject, much less opposition to such an extremely moderate increase of the age of consent. Indeed, it is extremely probable that, if twelve or even fourteen years had been provided for in the original Penal Code thirty years ago, it would have passed unchallenged by the general public."

His Excellency THE PRESIDENT said:—"I do not think it necessary to add to what has already been said in defence of the Bill on the table except perhaps to the extent of observing that, while we shall always recognize the high authority which attaches to any observations falling from the lips of our Hon'ble Colleague Sir Romesh Chunder Mitter, the Government of India, for the reasons urged by the Hon'ble Member in charge of the Bill in his opening statement, cannot admit with him that the existing criminal law is sufficient for the purpose of affording protection to those whom we propose to protect under this Bill. Nor can we accept his view that the Proclamation of 1858, which the Government of India regards as in the highest degree obligatory upon it, can be considered as absolutely precluding us from interference, simply because for the purposes of this Bill the same protection is extended to married as to unmarried children. Nor, again, can we join with him in thinking that because there have been no prosecutions under the existing section of the Penal Code with its ten-year limit of age, that section can be regarded as having no effect, or, as I think he described it, a 'dead letter.' I believe that I shall be confirmed by those who are more familiar with Indian legislation than I am when I say that the effect of the law in this country is often valuable quite as much for its educative operation as for any results which it may lead to in the matter of legal proceedings or prosecutions. These, however, are points which can be more conveniently discussed at a later stage in the Bill. My object in now addressing the Council is to place Hon'ble Members and the public in complete possession of the views of the Government of India, not so much with regard to the special question dealt with in this Bill, as with respect to certain other matters which are to some extent connected with it in the mind of the public.

"The Hon'ble Member in charge of the Bill has very properly insisted that it does not in any way affect what may, for convenience sake, be spoken of as the marriage law of this country. There is, as far as I am aware, no social or religious custom, or observance, in force among the Hindu community to which this Bill does the slightest violence. We propose merely to protect from the unquestioned evils of early prostitution, or premature sexual intercourse, that great body of the female children of India which lies between the age of ten, up to which the present law affords them protection, and the age of twelve, up to which we propose that such protection should be extended. Our measure affects the marriage usage only in so far as this protection extends to a married as well as to an unmarried child. Under the law, as it now stands, no distinction is made between them for this particular purpose, and we do not propose that, as a matter of principle, any such distinction should be introduced now. The immaturity of a young girl does not vary according as she is married or not, and we cannot, therefore, consistently give protection to the one class and deny it to the other. That is the beginning and the end of the connection of the Bill upon the table with the marriage law of India.

"It is, however, within the knowledge of Hon'ble Members—and our Hon'ble Colleague Mr. Nulkar has dwelt with great force upon the point—that the proposal embodied in the Bill has recently been associated with other proposals widely different from it—proposals which do most distinctly affect the marriage law and the religious and social institutions of the Hindus. This association has been so closely maintained that the whole group of questions has come to be regarded as indissolubly connected, and it is inferred that, if the Government of India intends to deal with any one part of the subject, we are to a certain extent committed to deal with the rest.

"I desire to correct this misapprehension, and, if Hon'ble Members will allow me, I propose to place them and the public in full possession of our intentions, and to tell them exactly, not only what we propose to do in regard to the group of proposals to which I have referred, but also what we propose to leave undone.

"The proposals to which I refer, and which have lately been brought prominently under our notice, are to be found in a series of Resolutions lately submitted to the Government of India by an English Committee, numbering amongst its members many persons occupying conspicuous positions in public life, and connected at one time or another with high official employments in this country. It is impossible to feel any doubt as to the sincerity of this distinguished body of reformers, or as to the excellence of the objects at which they are endeavouring to arrive. If we do not entirely agree with them in their conclusions, it is only because, being, as we are, in closer contact than most of them with public opinion here, we realise more fully than they can the extreme gravity of any steps of which it might be truly said that they involve interference with the religious or social institutions of any large section of the inhabitants of India.

"I will, for the sake of convenience, refer in order to the Resolutions adopted by the Committee, and by it submitted to the Secretary of State for India and the Indian Government.

"The first of these Resolutions is in favour of raising the age of consent to twelve. That is the proposal embodied in our Bill, and I need not refer further to it except for the purpose of mentioning that we decided to take this subject up early in the month of July last, and consequently long before we were aware of the movement which had been set on foot in England.

"I may also point out in passing that, in one most important respect, our Bill, in so far as it affects husbands and wives, affords to them a degree of security against undue or inquisitorial interference which they do not at present possess. It does so in the following way:—My Hon'ble friend has explained that in order to minimise the risk of private persecution, or of blackmailing by the police, the offence dealt with by the Bill has, in all cases where the husband is the person accused, been made non-cognizable. As the law now stands, with the lower limit of age, it is a cognizable offence even if the husband is the person who has committed it. While therefore we have in one sense rendered the law more stringent by increasing the age limit, we have in another sense greatly increased our precautions against an abuse of the law, and given the advantage of this new security to a large number of persons who are at present entirely without it.

"The second Resolution suggests the so-called 'ratification' of infant marriages 'within a reasonable time of the proper age,' with the condition that marriages not so ratified shall be set aside. This proposal has, I understand, received a considerable amount of support in influential quarters. I do not, however, think that those who have advocated its adoption can have realised the tremendous gravity of the step which they recommend. It is no exaggeration to say that such a change in the law would simply revolutionise the social system of the Hindus. We are all aware that in their estimation a marriage contract, no matter at what age it is entered into, is of the most absolutely binding and sacred character. To enact that such a contract should subsequently be made revocable, or, in other words, that the original contract should become little more than a formal betrothal, would involve an interference with the domestic institutions of the people of India, which neither my colleagues nor I are prepared to admit. To justify such interference upon the ground that it would to some extent assimilate the law in India to what used to be the common law as to child marriage in Christian Europe appears to me to be entirely beside the mark. I am, moreover, altogether at a loss to conceive how such a law, supposing it to have been passed, could be enforced, and I observe that even the authors of the Resolution admit that the change could not be made without consulting native Indian opinion, and that they throw out the further suggestion that, should the proposed change meet with serious opposition, it could, in the first instance, be made binding only on such classes of the community as might formally place themselves under it.

"The third Resolution has reference to the much debated subject of suits for the restitution of conjugal rights. It is urged that such suits in their coercive form are open to serious objection, and that the law under which a decree for the restitution of conjugal rights may be enforced by imprisonment should be amended. The Government of India is invited to 'reconsider the whole subject with a due regard to the marriage law and the habits and customs of the people of India.' I am in a position to say that the Government of India have already, on more than one occasion, given to this matter that reconsideration for which the authors of the Resolution have asked. The subject is one of extreme intricacy, and it would be impossible, within the limits of these observations, to deal with it satisfactorily, but I may say that the result of our enquiries has been to satisfy us that suits for restitution are common only in a few localities, and that in these they are usually confined to the lower classes of society, which naturally regard such suits from a point of view different from that of their superiors in social status. We have therefore had to consider how these classes would be affected were we to deprive them absolutely of any of the remedies which the law now affords.

"Now, it must be borne in mind that in cases where the husband or wife has property, the Court already has power to attach it, and after a limited time to award compensation to the suitor. It can, therefore, only be in cases where there is no property that any necessity can arise for enforcing the decree by imprisonment, and in such cases imprisonment is probably often the only remedy available. We are of opinion that a serious injustice would be done to the poorer classes of suitors, were it to be enacted that under no circumstances shall this remedy be resorted to. Such an enactment would encourage lax customs in respect of marriage where the customs are already deplorably lax, and where it should be our object to render the marriage tie more binding than it is at present. Whatever be the opinion of the more educated members of the community, we have no reason to believe that among the poorer classes the enforcement of a decree for restitution by imprisonment of the wife or husband at the discretion of the Court is looked upon by either party as an outrage. We think, however, that the existing law is capable of improvement. At present the law leaves it to the decree-holder to demand imprisonment as a means of enforcing the decree, and, if he does so, the Court has no option. We think that such an option should be given, and that it would suffice if a proviso were inserted in section 260 of the Civil Procedure Code empowering the Court to refuse to consign a recusant wife or husband to imprisonment, or, should the Court order imprisonment, to restrict the term to such period as it might think fit. We do not, however, regard this question as one of immediate or urgent importance, and we propose to deal with it whenever we next have occasion to revise the Civil Procedure Code. We see at any rate no reason for undertaking legislation in regard to this point concurrently with that which will be necessary with reference to the wholly distinct question dealt with in the present Bill.

"The fourth Resolution has reference to the remarriage of widows, and asks that the legal obstacles that still stand in the way of this should be removed. In regard to this, two proposals are made. Of these the first is that we should alter the law as it is expressed in section 2 of Act XV of 1856, under which a widow forfeits her interest in her deceased husband's property on her remarriage. Now there can be no doubt that this section often has the effect of placing a Hindu widow who marries again in a most lamentable position—a position which is all the more pitiable because, as pointed out by the framers of the Resolution, it is a worse position than that of the widow who, without remarrying, leads an unchaste life. The section is, however, one which we are certainly not prepared to repeal. During the course of the long discussions which have taken place in regard to this branch of the subject, nothing has been more clearly established than that the right given to a widow in her husband's estate is one which she enjoys under very strict and special limitations. She is allowed to assume an interest in her husband's property, not as its natural heir, or with the idea that she is to be free to enjoy it in such a manner as she may deem fit, but because she is regarded as specially responsible for the performance of certain religious acts essential to the well-being of the deceased—acts which she could not adequately perform if by a fresh marriage she were to become the wife of a different person. This aspect of the question was thoroughly considered at the time when the Act of 1856 was discussed in the Legislative Council, and I will venture to read an extract from a speech delivered upon that occasion by Sir James Colville, who has expressed in language more appropriate than any which I can command, and with an authority to which I cannot pretend, what seems to us to be the sound view of the case. Sir James Colville said :—

'The right thus taken by the widow in her husband's estate was a very peculiar one, and very limited in enjoyment. She had not full dominion over the property, for she could not alienate any part of it except for purposes of strict necessity, or for such pious uses as contributed to the spiritual benefit of her husband. In fact, the law gave it to her not for her own benefit, but from the notion that her prayers and sacrifices, and the employment of his wealth in religious and charitable acts, would be beneficial to her deceased husband in another state of existence. If then this Bill had enabled her to carry into the arms of another man, or into another family, the property which she had so acquired, its opponents might reasonably have objected to it, that it would aggravate those mischievous consequences which often flow from the law as it exists, and that, contrary to Hindu law and Hindu feeling, it enabled the widow to enjoy her deceased husband's estate freed from the condition and the trusts upon which alone the law gave it to her.'

"This view of the case is, I apprehend, as sound at the present time as it was when Sir James Colville's words were spoken, and we do not propose to make any departure from the wise policy embodied in the passage which I have just read.

"The second of the alleged obstacles is said to arise from the insufficiency of the protection afforded to widows desiring to remarry under section 6 of the same Act, which runs as follows :—

'Whatever words spoken, ceremonies performed, or engagements made, on the marriage of a Hindu female who has not been previously married, are sufficient to constitute a valid marriage, shall have the same effect, if spoken, performed, or made, on the marriage of a Hindu widow; and no marriage shall be declared invalid on the ground that such words, ceremonies, or engagements, are inapplicable to the case of a widow.'

This section was obviously intended to afford facilities for such remarriages by giving them validity in spite of any ecclesiastical opposition which they might encounter. These facilities are, however, it is stated, of no avail in consequence of the refusal of the Hindu priests to perform the necessary marriage ceremonies, and it is suggested tentatively that the State might perhaps provide a form of civil marriage before a Registrar for women desiring to contract a second marriage.

"I am constrained to express my opinion that those who propose to overcome this obstacle by the adoption of such a remedy have altogether underrated the extent of the difficulty with which they have to deal. In order to explain my meaning, I cannot do so better than refer to the manner in which the same point has been dealt with by a well-known writer on Indian subjects who has lately published in the London Times a series of papers dealing with these subjects. The writer of these papers sums up his conclusion by advising us not to provide an alternative form of marriage, but to take steps in order to afford protection to individual Hindus who desire to avail themselves of the civil rights already granted to them by British-made Acts against the public penalties inflicted upon them by the Hindu ecclesiastical law, and he explains, in more than one eloquent passage, that the whole of the disabilities under which Hindu women at present suffer in this respect arise from the shortcomings of our legislation, 'which allows the Hindu ecclesiastical law to inflict penalties upon Hindu women for the lawful exercise of their civil rights.' He tells us that the remedy for this state of things 'lies within the power of the Anglo-Indian Legislature,' and that 'the Hindu ecclesiastical law should forthwith be deprived of its power to legally punish women for the lawful exercise of their civil rights.'

"Now I think Hon'ble Members will agree with me that when we speak of Hindu ecclesiastical law, and of legislation for the purpose of depriving it of any of its powers, we should keep before us a clear conception of that which is meant by the expression 'Hindu ecclesiastical law;' and fortunately the writer of the papers from which I am quoting has himself supplied us with an adequate definition, for he proceeds to explain that by the term 'Hindu ecclesiastical law' it is his intention to sum up 'the complex growth of ordinance, usage, and procedure, which forms the religious side of the caste system, as distinguished from its social and commercial aspects.' The struggle therefore upon which the Indian Legislature is invited to embark is a struggle with no less an opponent than the whole system of Hindu religious caste. The hopelessness of such a contest in reference to issues of this kind, even if we were not deterred from it by other considerations, becomes evident if we consider the nature of the penalties by which the edicts of this so-called ecclesiastical law are enforced. What then are those penalties? We are informed by the same authority that the penalties which the Hindu ecclesiastical law, as thus defined, inflicts upon a couple who have the courage to avail themselves of the Marriage Act of 1856, are threefold. The first of these penalties is, he explains, a social one. The married couple, and such of their friends as have abetted their marriage, are cut off from social and domestic intercourse with their families and caste people. With this penalty the writer frankly admits that 'it would be practically impossible for the British law to interfere.' We may therefore assume that, whatever legislation we may resort to, this penalty, with all its terrors—and it is not easy to overestimate them—will remain in force. It is explained, however, that there are also two religious penalties,—'the woman is denied admission to the temple for the performance of her habitual religious duties, as if she were living in open sin;' and besides this 'an act of excommunication may also issue against the married couple and their abettors, which completely cuts them off from all rights and privileges to which they were entitled as members of a Hindu caste.'

"It is against these penalties that we are asked to protect those who are liable to them, and I gather from what follows that it is intended that such protection shall take the shape of a change in the law which would render any attempt to enforce such penalties punishable under the Penal Code.

"We have anxiously considered this suggestion, and the conclusion which forces itself upon us is, first, that we should not be justified in attempting so far-reaching an innovation as that which would, for example, be involved in compelling the admission of any person to the places of worship of the Hindus in opposition to the religious scruples of the rest of the community. And in the next place we are convinced that any attempt to resort to such legal compulsion would be absolutely illusory so long as the social excommunication, with which it is admitted that we should be powerless to interfere, remains in force. The social and the religious excommunication are two forms of one and the same thing, and, so long as Hindu opinion remains what it is upon these subjects, any attempts to remove either religious or social disabilities in cases such as that under discussion are, we believe, predestined to failure. If any change is to be made in these respects, it must come from within, and not from without, and must be the result of an alteration in the public opinion of the people of this country, and not of a social innovation forced upon them by the British Government. Signs are, I am glad to say, not wanting that, amongst the more enlightened and better educated classes, such an alteration is already in progress

"For the reasons which I have given, we do not, with the exceptions upon which I have already touched, propose to proceed in the direction indicated by these Resolutions. We propose for the present to limit ourselves to legislation which, as my Hon'ble friend has pointed out, will not create a new offence, and which will not touch the marriage law. Our object is simply to afford protection to those who cannot protect themselves, protection from a form of physical ill-usage which I believe to be reprobated by the most thoughtful section of the community, which is to the best of my belief entirely unsupported by religious sanction, and which, under the English law, is punishable with penal servitude for life, without any exceptions or reservations.

"I trust that the measure, thus limited and restricted, will receive the support of public opinion, and I cordially commend it to the favourable consideration of the Council."

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble SIR ANDREW SCOBLE also introduced the Bill.

The Hon'ble SIR ANDREW SCOBLE also moved that the Bill and Statement of Objects and Reasons be published in the Gazette of India in English, and in the local official Gazettes in English and in such other languages as the Local Governments think fit.

INDIAN PORTS ACT, 1889, AMENDMENT BILL.

The Hon'ble SIR DAVID BARBOUR moved for leave to introduce a Bill to amend and supplement the Indian Ports Act, 1889. He said:—

"Clause (a) of section 6, sub-section (1), of the Indian Ports Act, 1889, gives Local Governments certain powers for the regulation of ships when entering, or leaving, ports subject to that Act, and clause (h) of the same section confers powers for regulating the moving of all vessels when in port. The provisions of the Indian Ports Act of 1889 follow in this respect the provisions of the repealed Act XII of 1875. It has hitherto been held that these provisions conferred on Local Governments very ample powers for the regulation of the movements of all or any classes of vessels within port limits, but a recent legal decision has thrown doubt on this construction. The Commissioners of the Port of Calcutta bring to notice that the recent decision has seriously limited the powers which were supposed to exist for the regulation of vessels within the ports, and the object of the present Bill is to confer on Local Governments those powers for the regulation of vessels in port which they have hitherto been supposed to possess, and which it is essential that they should possess. The Bill also provides for removing all doubts as to the validity of the rules already issued in connection with this matter, and which have hitherto been held to be in force, by providing that such rules shall be deemed to have been issued under the authority given by the Indian Ports Act as it will now be amended."

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble SIR DAVID BARBOUR also introduced the Bill.

The Hon'ble SIR DAVID BARBOUR also moved that the Bill and Statement of Objects and Reasons be published in the Gazette of India in English, and in the Fort St. George Gazette, the Bombay Government Gazette, the Calcutta Gazette and the Burma Gazette in English and in such other languages as the Local Governments think fit.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Council adjourned to Friday, the 23rd January, 1891.

INDIAN PENAL CODE AND CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE, 1882, AMENDMENT BILL.

The Hon'ble SIR ANDREW SCOBLE moved that the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to amend the Indian Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, be taken into consideration. He said:—

"I very much regret to say that I have received a letter from my hon'ble friend Sir Romesh Chunder Mitter in which he says that the state of his health is such that he will be unable to attend the meeting of the Council to-day. Had his indisposition been of a merely temporary character, I should have been prepared, with Your Excellency's permission, to have moved that the discussion of the question involved in this Bill should be postponed for a few days: but, as I understand that there is no likelihood of my hon'ble friend being able to take part in the further consideration of the measure, I can only reiterate the expression of my regret that the Council will not have his assistance in dealing with the important question which forms its subject.

"The discussion which has taken place with regard to this Bill during the last ten weeks has had many good effects. It has shown, among other things, that outside Bengal there is very little real opposition to the measure, that in Bengal itself the extent and importance of the opposition have been by no means so great as has been represented, and that as regards the objections raised to the Bill its supporters have everywhere had very much the best of the argument. It has elicited from all parts of India expressions of abhorrence of the practice which the Bill is designed to prohibit; and it has established that the practice, though undoubtedly prevalent in certain districts, is not found to exist elsewhere except in isolated cases. And, if I may judge from the minute of dissent which my hon'ble friend Sir Romesh Chunder Mitter has appended to the Report of the Select Committee, it has satisfied him that the bulk of the arguments with which he assailed the Bill, on the occasion of its introduction into this Council, are not tenable, and must be abandoned. As, however, the key-note which my hon'ble friend struck on the former occasion has been followed by most of the speakers and writers who have attacked the Bill, and it is desirable that an answer should be given to arguments which have been enforced by the authority attaching to his name, I fear I must occupy the Council for some time in going over the old ground, and showing how slight is the foundation, either in fact or reason, upon which the objections to the Bill are based, and what little justification there is for the outcry which has been raised against it.

"It will doubtless be remembered that in introducing the Bill I spoke of it as a measure of protection, which it was the clear right and duty of the Government to adopt if the necessity for State interference was established. I did not perhaps dwell on this part of the case as fully as I might have done, for it seemed to me a self-evident proposition that little girls under the age of twelve are unfit for sexual intercourse, and ought not to be subjected to it. I considered it sufficient to rely on the report of Sir Steuart Bayley that in Bengal 'it is a general practice for Hindu girls, after they are married, but before puberty is even indicated, much less established, to be subjected to more or less frequent acts of connection with their husbands;' and upon the question of their fitness for such intercourse I quoted the professional opinion of Dr. Macleod that, 'making all due allowance for climatic and racial differences and bearing social customs in mind, it would seem reasonable and right that the age of protection in this country should be raised from ten to twelve years.' Having thus established a primâ facie case for the proposed legislation, I reserved further proof until my statement should be challenged; and, though the challenge has been indirect rather than direct, it must be met. It is said that 'the plea of humanity does not avail'; that the case of Hari Maiti was an isolated case; and that 'the patent fact that many girls in this country become mothers before or immediately after twelve plainly shows that there is necessarily no inhumanity in the act itself.' My hon'ble friend Sir Romesh Chunder Mitter, while assuming for the purposes of his argument that 'the rule of premature intercourse with girl-wives exists to a culpable extent in Bengal,' states that this assumption, so far as his knowledge of Hindu society in Bengal goes, is not fairly tenable. I can understand my hon'ble friend's reluctance to admit the existence of a state of things so degrading to his countrymen, and I should have been glad had I been able to accept his testimony on the point. But what are the facts as stated in official documents which have been laid before the Council? Mr. Lyall, Commissioner of Chittagong, reports; 'The practice of consummating marriage with immature girls is universal in this division, as it is all over East Bengal. It is less common among Muhammadans, but is universal among all castes and classes of Hindus. Every one consulted admits this, whether in favour of reform or against it.' Babu Nobin Chunder Sen, a Deputy Magistrate in the Chittagong Division, writes: 'Being a native of this division, I may assure you that the practice of consummating marriage with immature girls is universal in this division. It is not confined to any particular section or caste.' Mr. Allen, Magistrate of Noakhali, reports: 'The practice among Hindus of this district of consummating marriages with immature wives is, I fear, widespread.' Mr. Dutt, Collector of Burdwan, states that 'the practice of consummating marriage with immature girls prevails generally and widely in this district. From my own knowledge I can also assert that the practice prevails widely and generally in Calcutta and in other parts of Bengal.' Mr. Lowis, the Commissioner of the Rajshahye Division, says: 'I have consulted the district officers and others, and find a consensus of opinion as to the existence of the practice of consummation of marriage with immature girls throughout the division, except perhaps in the Jalpaiguri District, where the Meches and other aboriginal tribes do not favour child-marriage, and where, amongst the Muhammadans and Rajbungshis, females, being useful in field work, are not generally married until they are more advanced in age.' Mr. Gupta, the Collector of Mymensingh, says: 'The practice of consummating marriage before girls attain puberty exists to a certain extent in this district, as more or less in all parts of Bengal; but generally it is more prevalent among the lower than among the higher castes of Hindus.' Mr. Quinn, the Commissioner of Bhagulpore, reports as the result of his enquiries that 'among the lower classes of Hindus, and also of Muhammadans though perhaps to a less extent, there is no doubt that the consummation of marriage with immature girls is of frequent occurrence. Girls are sent to their husbands' house at a very early age, and often long before menstruation has begun, and when there no restriction is placed on the husband, the natural consequence being that sexual intercourse must frequently take place while the wife is quite immature.'

"There is no gainsaying this evidence. It establishes the existence in Bengal of a horrible practice, condemned alike by the Hindu religion and by the commonest feelings of humanity, and with which the present law is powerless to cope in any adequate way. The records of the Criminal Courts are full of cases in which child-wives, between the ages of ten and twelve, have been done to death in the exercise of marital rights by their husbands. There must be no misapprehension on this point. It has been stated that the case of Hari Maiti is an isolated case, and my hon'ble friend asserts that 'after the most searching enquiry not a single case resulting in conviction of a husband for rape during the last thirty years has been found out.' My hon'ble friend is particular in his choice of words, for prosecutions have not always been followed by convictions and rape has not always been the charge. But I will give him some recent instances of the class of cases which to my mind justify the proposed alteration in the law. In the Sessions Court at Rangpur in March, 1890, Dhula Nasga was tried for rape of his wife; the defence was that the girl was not under ten years of age: the Judge gave effect to this defence, though he said 'the case is a painful one, the girl, or more correctly speaking child, asserting that the accused, who is a full grown man, forcibly had sexual intercourse with her, stifling her cries by putting a cloth in her mouth,' and the man was sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment. At Hooghly, in December, 1889, Jamirudin was charged with having caused the death of his wife Parijan, and the Magistrate, Mr. Mullick, dismissed the case on the ground that, 'as Parijan was between eleven and twelve years of age, the accused committed no offence by having sexual intercourse with her, and is not answerable for the consequences which unfortunately followed it.' At Maldah, in May, 1889, Panchu Monim was tried in the Court of the Sessions Judge for culpable homicide not amounting to murder. The medical evidence indicated that the girl died from strangulation accompanying forcible sexual intercourse. The husband was twenty-one years of age, the wife about eleven. One assessor, a pleader, held that 'the deceased died accidentally, through her husband's trying to have forcible intercourse with her.' 'I don't think he is guilty,' he added, 'because his violence was too trifling, considering his rights as a husband, and it was accidental.' The other assessor merely suggested that 'some one else (than the husband) may have done it.' The man was sentenced to two months' rigorous imprisonment, which was afterwards enhanced to two years by the High Court.

"I might multiply cases of this kind, which show not only that Hari Maiti's case is not exceptional, but that the present law, though not absolutely a dead letter, does not go far enough to efficiently protect this helpless class of children. No one can say that a few months' imprisonment is a sufficient penalty for crimes of this description, or that the marital relation ought to be allowed to be pleaded in extenuation or justification of such outrages on humanity.

"There is, moreover, much reason to fear that comparatively few cases of this class find their way into the Criminal Courts, and not many, perhaps, into the hospitals. But I would invite the attention of the Council to the terrible list, sent up by Mrs. Mansell and other lady doctors, of cases which had come under their personal observation of little girls, aged from nine to twelve, who had died become paralysed or crippled, or been otherwise severely injured, as the result of premature cohabitation.

"Against such positive testimony I attach little importance to the negative statement of a number of native doctors practising in Calcutta that not a single case of bodily injury to a married girl has come to their knowledge in the course of their practice.

"And what of those cases in which neither death, nor grievous hurt, nor other physical injury cognizable under the Penal Code, is caused? What of the cases in which motherhood is attained, and which are relied on by the opponents of the Bill in justification of their demand that things shall be allowed to remain as they are? In a paper read by Dr. Bolye Chunder Sen before the Calcutta, Medical Society, it is stated, on the authority of Dr. Doyal Chunder Shome, Teacher of Midwifery at the Campbell Medical School, that of 21 cases of labour of girls between the ages of eleven and thirteen—ten of which were under his immediate care, while he had the general supervision of the other eleven—natural delivery took place in five cases, tedious delivery in five cases, instrumental interference in five cases, and still-born children were born in six cases. 'Most of the child-mothers,' he adds, 'kept tolerably good health after their first confinement; two of them only suffered from fever, and continued weak and anæmic; but many of the others fell victims to various diseases after the second or third confinement. I saw five of them dying of pernicious anæmia after prolonged suffering from fever and diarrhœa, and two died of phthisis. .....The children born alive did not look small or undeveloped when born, but their subsequent growth was not satisfactory; one died of infantile tetanus, two of marasmus within two months of birth, two of diarrhœa within five months, and three during dentition of fever and convulsions; the remaining seven grew up to be weak and delicate children.'

"Upon these facts I think I am justified in asserting that the necessity for further protective legislation is established. I cannot pray in aid what would be the most convincing testimony on the question, but I would emphatically endorse the opinion of Raja Doorga Churn Law, lately a valued member of this Council, who says:—'If child-wives could be examined as to the result of their first early meetings, there can be no question their evidence would be conclusive enough to justify the Government in stepping in and carrying out this reform.' What the women of India think on the subject may be gathered from the petitions addressed to Your Excellency by Native ladies of Ahmedabad, Calcutta, Bombay, Lahore, Poona, Mymensing and other places, which have been laid before the Council, and in which they say 'our sex is solely dependent on the Government for the protection of our personal rights, the necessity for which has been made more urgent by the opposition with which the Bill has met.' These ladies are for the most part members of orthodox Hindu families, and the sincerity and force of their appeal can no more be questioned than it can be disregarded.

"I pass on now to consider an argument of some importance originally urged by my hon'ble friend, but which he does not now seem disposed to insist on. He disapproved of the Bill as being 'a departure from the non-interference policy hitherto observed by the Government and guaranteed by the great Proclamation of 1858, which says—"We do strictly charge and enjoin all those who may be in authority under Us that they abstain from all interference with the religious belief or worship of any of our subjects on pain of Our highest displeasure."' Now, this is too serious an indictment to be left unnoticed, even if my hon'ble friend has, upon maturer consideration, thought fit to abandon it. There is absolutely no justification for the contention of my hon'ble friend; and it is intolerable that Her Majesty's gracious words should be perverted, as they have been on many platforms and in many newspapers, in order to support a charge of breach of duty by the Government of India. If my hon'ble friend had had the candour to read all those parts of the Proclamation which bear upon his argument, he would have found that while Her Majesty declared it to be Her 'royal will and pleasure that none be in anywise favoured, none molested or disqualified by reason of their religious faith or observance, but that all shall alike enjoy the equal and impartial protection of the law,' She was content to direct 'that generally in framing and administering the law, due regard be paid to the ancient rights, usages and customs of India.' There is here no such undertaking of absolute non-interference as my hon'ble friend suggests; and, if there were any room for doubt on the subject, Parliament has given a fatal blow to the construction which he would adopt, by enacting, in section 19 of the Indian Councils Act, that, with the previous sanction of the Governor General, measures affecting 'the religion or religious rites and usages of any class of Her Majesty's subjects in India' may be introduced, not only into this Council, but into the Provincial Councils wherever they may be established.

"But, it may be asked, what is a 'due regard' to ancient religious rites and usages? My Lord, this question was answered sixty years ago, in relation to the practice of sati. There was then no Queen's proclamation it is true, but the Queen's proclamation merely reiterated and re-affirmed the principle which in this respect had been recognized and established by the Government of India long before its transfer to the Crown. The prohibition of sati was denounced on almost the identical grounds on which this Bill has been attacked. After the Regulation had been passed an appeal was presented to the King in Council against it. It was said to be 'an interference with the most ancient and sacred rites and usages of the Hindus, and in direct violation of the conscientious belief of an entire nation'; it was urged 'that the abuses (if any) which may have arisen or occurred in the practice of sati can be effectually prevented by a proper attention to the opinions of the Hindus, and an equitable administration of the existing laws, without requiring a total interdiction of the practice'; and it was alleged that the Regulation 'is an unjust, impolitic and direct infringement of the sacred pledge to keep inviolate the religion, laws and usages of the Hindus, manifested throughout the whole general tenour of the Acts of the Legislature of Great Britain, and the regulations and conduct of the Government of the East India Company.' The answer of the Court of Directors to these charges is the answer which I now make to my hon'ble friend's indictment, and it is this, that 'the power of making laws is vested in the Governor General in Council, which power is recognized and confirmed by the British Legislature; that in exercising this power the Government of India has at all times manifested a just attention to the religious opinions and customs of the Natives, so far as is compatible with the paramount claims of humanity and justice; and that a discriminating regard for those religious opinions is not incompatible with the suppression of practices repugnant to the first principles of civil society, and to the dictates of natural reason.' Upon these general grounds, and because the particular practice was a cruel one and was prohibited not as a religious act but as a flagrant offence against society, because it was questionable whether the rite was sanctioned by the religious institutes of the Hindus, and because it was regarded as absolutely sinful by many of the most learned Hindus, reasons which apply with remarkable relevance to the measure now under consideration, the Privy Council, to which the matter was referred, upheld the action of the Government and dismissed the petition.

"So far, therefore, as the sanction of religion or religious usage is claimed for the practice which this Bill seeks to prohibit, it seems to me that the argument may be disregarded if the Council is of opinion that the practice is one which on grounds of humanity and morality ought to be prohibited. I am disposed to agree with my hon'ble friend that no legislative body (whether constituted as at present or in any other way) can satisfactorily deal with the question of the Shastras, in the way of giving an authoritative opinion on them. But no member of this Council who has waded, as I have done, through the mass of dissertations on the subject which this controversy has called forth, can have failed to come to the conclusion that the construction put upon the Shastras by the Bengal Pundits has not been accepted in other parts of India, and that the balance of argument and authority is in favour of the supporters of the Bill. Even if it were not so, were I a Hindu, I would prefer to be wrong with Professor Bhandarkar, Mr. Justice Telang and Dewan Bahadur Raghunath Rao than to be right with Pundit Sasadhur Turkachuramani and Mr. Tilak; and I should agree with His Highness the Maharaja of Jeypore in thinking that, had the ancient sages whose authority is invoked by the so-called orthodox party lived now, 'they would have taken upon themselves the responsibility' (as His Highness himself has done) 'of legislating with the view of protecting society from the pernicious consequences of early marriage and of the consummation of marriage before the child-wife has scarcely any idea of what marriage means.' It seems to me, moreover, unwarrantable to claim for Bengal an orthodoxy, and for its Shastris an authority, superior to that of the rest of India. It can hardly be contended that a doctrine which is non-essential elsewhere becomes essential because it is held in Bengal. No Legislature can undertake to discriminate between these variations of creed; but it derives support, in interfering with practices inconsistent with the public good, from the fact that those practices, so far as they are sought to be justified on religious grounds, rest on the authority of a comparatively modern scholiast, and are not countenanced by the teachings of the early law-givers who are the generally accepted expositors of Hindu theology.

"So much as regards the religious objection in the abstract. With reference to the particular rite of garbhadhan, with which it is said that the Bill will interfere, it is abundantly clear from the papers before the Council that it is not universally observed in Bengal, or generally in other parts of India; that its neglect by Kulin Brahmins as a class, and its non-observance by many families who disapprove of it on account of its obscenity, has not been followed by exclusion from caste, or other ecclesiastical or social penalties; that its observance may be postponed on various secular grounds; and that the penance for its non-observance is of an exceedingly trifling character. I have not failed to remark that two learned Judges of the High Court of Calcutta, for both of whom I have a great respect, have pointed out that 'the formal and outward penance may be simple, but the real efficacy of penance consists, according to the Hindu scriptures, quite as much as according to reason and common sense, in real inward penitence and a resolution not to commit the sin again.' I can quite understand that there may be men who place religious duty above all earthly laws, but these men are few; and I think Pundit Iswara Chandra Vidyasagar is nearer the truth when he says 'the punishment which the Shastras prescribe for violation of the rule is of a spiritual character and is liable to be disregarded.' Besides, when the neglect of this particular religious observance can be excused by the simple expedient of absence from home, it is difficult to see how any serious conflict of duty can arise in the minds even of the most orthodox.

"I pass now to the only ground upon which my hon'ble friend appears now to base his opposition to the Bill, and that is, its inutility. I may observe at the outset that the utility of a measure of this kind depends to a very great extent on the support given to it by the more influential members of the community. If those respectable persons who object to the Bill because it is (they say) a measure of social reform, and all social reforms should emanate from the people themselves without legislative interference, would but consider how helpful an Act of this kind will be to them if they are really sincere in desiring an improvement in their marriage customs, they would welcome instead of opposing it, and would be as eager to point out to their countrymen the benefits likely to accrue from its observance as they are now zealous in suggesting the means by which it may be turned into an engine of oppression. I have no sympathy with the pseudo-social reformers who talk glibly on the subject, and do nothing. If they honestly believe their marriage customs are bad, let them follow the example of the Sardars of Rajputana, and amend them. If the Legislature is to wait for their action before undertaking a measure of protection of this kind, the necessity for which I think I have amply proved, the fate of child-wives in Bengal will never be ameliorated. My hon'ble friend says the Act will be a dead-letter; it is for him and those who support him to make it so, not by throwing difficulties in the way of prosecutions, but by lending their whole influence so to modify caste rules and domestic practices that prosecutions may become unnecessary. No one will be hurt by this Act who does not break it; no one, as I have shown, is compelled to break it by religious duty; for those who do break it, who shall say that the punishment likely to be awarded is too severe?

"My hon'ble friend has pointed out a way in which Hindu society can very materially assist the observance of the law. He says, speaking of Bengal,—

> 'Amongst people of the higher castes girls are generally married between the ages of nine and eleven. Amongst people of the lower castes marriageable age is still lower. The girls go immediately after marriage to their husbands' house and stay there for a week or so. Before they attain puberty they occasionally visit their husbands' house and make a stay for temporary periods. Whenever they visit their husbands' house, the general practice in Bengal is to allow the young couple to sleep together at night.'

"As my hon'ble friend justly observes, 'this practice is certainly pernicious,' and he considers it a 'moral evil which would not in any appreciable degree be remedied by this Bill.' But surely advantage might be taken of the passing of this Bill to restore the practice which formerly prevailed in Bengal, and which still prevails in the neighbouring provinces of Behar and Orissa, under which a girl is not sent to her husband's house until she is mature enough for cohabitation.

"It remains for me to deal with certain specific proposals which have been made for the amendment of the Bill, and I may say at starting that the Select Committee were, not merely ready, but anxious, to consider favourably any amendments which, while not weakening the principle of the Bill, might tend to remove public apprehensions as to the possibly injurious administration of the law. The first of these proposed amendments was to substitute the attainment of puberty for the age-limit of twelve years, and it was argued, plausibly enough, that it would be easier to give proof of the former than of the latter criterion, while at the same time the protection of the law would be extended to a larger class. The majority of the Select Committee were unable to accept these arguments. No doubt there will be difficulty in many cases in procuring satisfactory evidence of age, but the temptation to manufacture evidence in regard to the physical condition of the girl will be infinitely greater. As His Highness the Maharaja of Jeypore has aptly pointed out—'though such a provision would serve to silence the clamour raised against the Bill, yet there would be this danger, that delinquents in their endeavours to defend themselves would, almost in every instance, try to take shelter under the exception contemplated.' The majority of the Select Committee entirely agree with His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor in thinking that, apart from technical difficulties, 'the objections to making it necessary to prove in Court the occurrence of the first indications of puberty are insuperable.' We have the authority of the Bengal Government for holding that the signs of puberty are frequently brought on by artificial stimulation. In a letter to the Indian Mirror, Surgeon-Major Basu, the Civil Surgeon of Mymensingh, states that 'unaided menstruation is unfortunately a rare event in Bengal.' How then is it possible to accept this test in preference to that of age?

"No doubt the adoption of the age-limit of twelve years will not cover all the cases which it would be desirable to protect, but it will go a long way in that direction. If the statistics quoted by my hon'ble friend from Surgeon-Major Gupta's report are correct, it will cover 39 per cent. of the girls of India, and that is a great step in advance. Other authorities, however, Dr. Juggobundo Bose for example, justify the belief that the proportion will be much higher. In the absence of reliable statistics, we are constrained to fall back on what seems likely to be a generally acceptable limit. In many parts of India and among many classes, the practice is established, or is gaining ground, of not sending wives to live with their husbands until they are at least twelve years old, and thus, as the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces observes, 'the theory of the law will, by the proposed amendment, be brought into harmony with the practice of the people on a point in which the morality of the people is in advance of the morality of the law.' Moreover, we assimilate the law regarding rape to the general law which provides that consent to the commission of an offence shall be unavailing if given by a person who is under twelve years of age.

"Another proposal has been made that no prosecution shall be allowed except at the instance of the child-wife herself, or her natural guardian, or some blood relation. The adoption of this suggestion would undoubtedly reduce the law to a dead-letter, for it is to be feared that all the influence of the family would be used to screen the offender rather than to protect the victim.

"Then it is said that the offence, when committed by a husband against his wife, ought not to be classed as rape, and should be visited with a lighter punishment. I do not think it desirable that the gravity of the offence should be minimized in this way. I agree with Sir Meredyth Plowden that 'it is an offence affecting the wife not as wife, but as a human creature'; and I should greatly regret if this Council were to weaken the effect of the Bill by drawing a distinction in favour of brutality on the part of husbands. With regard to the amount of punishment to be inflicted, that is a matter for the consideration of the Courts, which will apportion it, within the limits laid down in the Bill, according to the circumstances of the case; and while, in some instances, a light penalty may be inflicted, it can scarcely be doubted that cases will occur in which the highest penalty awardable will not be disproportionate to the seriousness of the offence committed.

"Although I cannot help thinking that the chances of this measure being misused if it becomes law have been greatly exaggerated, I have no hesitation in commending to the acceptance of the Council the two additional safeguards against its possible misapplication which have been introduced by the Select Committee. The first, which limits the preliminary jurisdiction in such cases to District Magistrates and Chief Presidency Magistrates, has been adopted at the suggestion of the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces; the second, which limits police investigation, if ordered under section 155 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to investigation by police-officers of superior rank only, has the approval of the High Court at Calcutta. We have thus, I think, fenced round the administration of the Act with every reasonable precaution that could be adopted without entirely destroying its efficiency. As regards the publicity to be given to proceedings under it, the Magistrate has an absolute discretion, under section 352 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to exclude the public from his Court, if he thinks fit. In this and in all other matters the experienced officers to whom alone the investigation of cases between husband and wife will be entrusted may be relied upon to act with all the circumspection which the exercise of so delicate a jurisdiction may demand.

"One other point remains to be noticed. It has been said that, if the Bill is passed, women may be subjected against their will to medical examinations and thereby put to shame and disgrace. There is no ground for this apprehension. It has been laid down by the High Court at Calcutta, in the clearest terms, in the case of The Queen-Empress v. Guru Charan Dusadh, that no Court or Magistrate has any right to order the medical examination of a witness without her consent, and that such an examination is an illegal and unjustifiable assault, for which damages may be recovered. This objection, therefore, fails like the rest.

"I have now, I think, gone through the main arguments for and against the Bill, and the result seems to be this. It is admitted that immature prostitution and premenstrual cohabitation, where they exist, are abhorrent alike to common humanity and the teachings of the Hindu religion, and ought to be put down by law; the Indian community at large, for all classes of whom we are legislating, approve of the measure, so far as it goes, though many would desire to carry it still further—and this is the only part of the criticism with which I have any sympathy; but because the operation of the law might in a few cases interfere with the performance of a rite which is at best of questionable obligation, and of merely partial and local observance, my hon'ble friend would deprive the Bill of its most powerful sanctions, and establish a ready means for the evasion of its penalties. I trust the Council, in the interests of the great class of Her Majesty's subjects who are the victims, not so much of an unreasoning regard for what may be believed to be religious duty, as of a callous disregard of any consideration but selfish passion, will set aside this plea on behalf of a practically infinitesimal minority of hyper-orthodox persons and pass the Bill in the form in which it has been reported by the Select Committee."

The Hon'ble THE RAJA OF BHINGA said:—

"My Lord, I wish to say a few words in support of this Bill. As far as the North-Western Provinces and Oudh are concerned, the Hindus are not particular at all about the performance of the Garbhadhan ceremony, nor is any objection raised by their caste people if they choose to marry their daughters after their attainment of the age of puberty. Our Shastras do not allow the Sudras to perform rites like Garbhadhan prescribed in the Sutras, and the Brahmins who assist them in the performance of such rites are called 'Sudrayachi' or 'beggars supported by the Sudras,' and the Shastras strictly enjoin that they should be punished with excommunication. These rites are intended only for the twice-born, namely, the Brahmins, Kshatriyas and Vaisyas. They, having to undergo before marriage the ceremony of Upanayana or the investiture with the sacred thread, do not think the observance of Garbhadhan so essential. Hence, perhaps, arises the laxity in the practice.

"Persons of high family, as a rule, seldom marry their daughters below the age of fourteen. Search for suitable husbands and the demand of large dowries stand in the way of early marriages. It has, therefore, become customary among the Kshatriyas or Rajputs that as soon as a girl is married she leaves her father's house for that of her husband; and that is one of the chief reasons, I believe, which actuated the Princes and Nobles of Rajputana to pass at a meeting a resolution to the effect that they should not marry their daughters below the age of fourteen and their sons below that of eighteen.

"In my part of the country, girls rarely, if ever, attain the age of puberty before the completion of their twelfth year. But, when menstruation takes place earlier, it is generally brought on by objectionable means.

"That there is a demand for sexual intercourse with children, and that consequently it is thought necessary to have recourse to an abominable and unnatural process in order to bring about the desired result, cannot be denied. Prostitutes ask for, and men willingly pay, very high prices for cohabitation with girls of immature age. Such cohabitation is known up-country by a particular name which, however, escapes my memory. The prostitutes on such occasions are presented not only with large sums of money, but with jewels, dress and other valuable articles as well. When men undergo trouble and expense to such an extent to satisfy their lust, how can one expect that they will restrain their desires when the above qualifications are found in girls lawfully married to them? That such an unnatural desire exists in men of this country is to be attributed greatly to the present state of society and to the influence of the works of the Hindu and Muhammadan poets of the degenerate period. Such works are, no doubt, the outcome of the past misrule and anarchy, when unbridled sensuality was the order of the day. In Hindi alone there are at leas one hundred treatises on illicit love, called Nayakabhed, and all of themt abound in the loathsome descriptions of the pleasures of cohabitation with girls of tender years. Such being the case, the sooner a stop is put to these gross outrages on humanity the better for the country. In the words of Vedavvyas, 'Paropkar,' or doing good to others, is the fundamental principle of our religion: and the ancient bard Valmiki, in his Ramayana, makes one of our greatest sages, Vicwa Mitra, go so far as to lay it down that a ruler may perform acts in contravention of the express forms of religion when the protection of his subjects and the interests of humanity render the same necessary.

"At the same time I submit some safeguards are very necessary. Parda system being strictly observed in the Provinces of Oudh and North-West, a Hindu or Muhammadan lady of family cannot even converse with an outsider. Therefore appearance before the Magistrate, exposure by the pleaders, and the examination by the male doctors will be viewed with horror and lead to deplorable consequences."

The Hon'ble Mr. NUGENT said :—

"My Lord, I do not propose to give a silent vote on this very important measure, which has attracted so much attention not only in India but also in England, has elicited so many opinions of such varying and conflicting descriptions, and has, apparently, since its introduction in January by the Hon'ble Sir Andrew Scoble, constituted the chief topic of discussion and interest in the Native community throughout the country. Like the other members of your Excellency's Council, I have waded through the filthy floods of loathsome literature which have been so copiously poured forth, and can say with truth that never before have I had equally unpleasant and repulsive reading. It is difficult for a layman to arrive at a positive conclusion on a question of tangled Sanskrit texts, concerning the proper interpretation to be placed on which the most learned modern experts and eminent scholars are at hopeless variance. Nor is it easy to apportion the weight to be attached to the utterances of old-world sages and mediæval doctors of medicine or divinity when those authorities differ, the more especially where doubt exists as to the purport of those utterances, and diversity of view prevails both as to the text and the commentary, their meaning and their value. The main point at issue between the Native opponents and supporters of the Bill would seem to be whether, according to the ancient Hindu religious law and its later commentators, the Indian scholiasts of centuries back, the consummation of marriage immediately after the first appearance of menses in his wife is prescribed as a binding religious duty on the husband—a duty of which the non-performance involves the commission of a deadly sin. On this subject much has been said and written, and the realistic details entered into by some of the keenest and most erudite adversaries of the measure, specially as regards the rites attendant on what is described as a religious ceremony and the nature of the penance to be undergone by the ancestors of a husband who complies not with the alleged injunctions of the Hindu scriptures, can only be characterised as revolting. But, as far as I am competent to judge, the balance of argument and of fact is distinctly on the side of such eminent interpreters of the Sanskrit text and authorities on the ancient books as the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Telang, Dr. Bhandarkar and others who hold their views; and the opinion, therefore, at which I have arrived is that it is not essential, according to his religion, that a Hindu husband should actually cohabit with his wife immediately after her first menstruation, whatever might then be her age, and whatever her physical fitness for sexual intercourse, and its results in the form of maternity. That pre-menstrual cohabitation is strictly forbidden seems certain: that intercourse by a husband with his wife immediately after the first appearance of the menses—which after all is but one of the earliest signs of approaching puberty—is enjoined as a duty or even is contemplated as a general rule, is not, I think, established. Indeed, it would be surprising if it were. The old Hindu lawgivers, like other legislators for nations in the earliest times, were wise men. In the injunctions they promulgated or codified they had ordinarily in view some substantial, tangible object more intimately connected with this world than with the world to come, though to render those injunctions the more binding and respected they imparted to them a religious sanction. In their commands concerning marriage the result at which they aimed was the growth of a large, strong and healthy population, able to establish towns, sufficient to develop the agricultural resources of the country, and well fitted, should the occasion arise, to speak with their enemies in the gate; and this object they, being men of great wisdom and intelligence, knew they would be unlikely to attain by requiring boy-husbands to cohabit with immature child-wives—a union from which only could spring a progeny weak in body and feeble in mind. To the relatively modern glosses made by comparatively recent commentators of merely provincial influence and reputation on the texts of the early lawgivers no serious importance need, in my humble opinion, be attached. These commentators at least were not inspired: their writings are not sacred scriptures. It is, I think, in any case a question whether, if it could legitimately be held as absolutely certain that the ancient Hindu religious or social law did direct husbands to cohabit with immature child-wives, Government would not be morally bound to intervene now to prevent a sin against humanity and to put an end to an abominable practice worthy only of debased savages, which the evidence forthcoming shows to be unfortunately only too common in some parts of India, particularly in portions of Bengal. The British Government has not hitherto hesitated to prohibit acts in themselves wrongful and cruel even when the plea of religious sanction could be advanced on their behalf with greater validity than it can be in this instance; and it would not now, I think and trust, shrink from putting its veto on other customs equally opposed to the instincts of all right-minded men whatever their race and whatever their creed, and even more harmful in their present and their future results, merely because noisy agitators protested that to stop such abominations would be to outrage their religion and to run counter to dubious dogmas propounded in prehistoric ages. But, as already observed, this question does not, I think, arise here. The Bill now under consideration does not as far as I am able to judge interfere with the Hindu or Muhammadan marriage law, and the theory that the teachings of the Hindu scriptures require the immediate consummation of marriage on the very first appearance of the menses is not established by the evidence. To the notice of those opponents of the measure who contend that the intervention of Government in such a matter is inadmissible may be commended the action of His Highness the Maharaja of Jeypore, a Rajput of high caste and pure descent, the enlightened ruler of one of the chief Indian principalities, who by a stroke of his pen has prohibited the marriage within his territories of Rajput girls before they have attained the age of fourteen years.

"It is not necessary to dwell upon the misery, the unhappiness, the pain and the other evils which result from the pernicious practice which this Bill is designed to prevent. They are known to all. But it is contended that the proposed legislation is uncalled for, because the great majority of girls do not attain to puberty until they have passed the age of twelve and pre-menstrual intercourse is forbidden by the Hindu scriptures, because the number of cases of violation of immature girl-wives under that age by their husbands is exceedingly small, and because the existing law suffices to meet all requirements. To this the answer, I think, is that, though in other Indian provinces pre-menstrual cohabitation may be of very rare occurrence, in Bengal it is far from unfrequent; that a considerable number of Indian girls do commence to menstruate before they reach twelve years although still imperfectly developed and physically unfit to live with their husbands, and that for them protection is needed; that the number of instances in which serious and sometimes fatal injury is caused to a luckless child by enforced intercourse with her husband is unfortunately much larger than is stated by the opponents of the measure; and that the occurrence of these cases is in itself sufficient proof that the law as it now stands is not adequate or sufficiently deterrent. Much stress is laid on the statements of a number of medical men, mainly Native, but some European, that in the course of their practice they have not met with cases in which girls have been injured by connection with their husbands. To this evidence I attach little value. This is precisely the class of cases in which no medical man would be called in to advise and prescribe. The maimed wife, if treated at all, would be treated by the women of the household and their female neighbours: the matter would be hushed up and kept secret: and, if death did follow in instances where the girl was very small and the violence employed unusually great, the cause assigned would be fever, cholera or an accidental fall. A very different tale is told by the lady doctors in India in their memorial.

"That a Bill on so delicate a subject as that dealt with in this measure should lead to much agitation and excite considerable opposition is inevitable, and it cannot be denied that the proposed legislation has in many quarters met with a hostile reception. It is satisfactory, however, to find that a large and influential volume of public opinion, notably in the Bombay Presidency, is in favour of the measure, and that of those persons really competent to judge the question on its merits a majority would appear to support the course pursued by Government. It may, I think, safely be assumed that at most, if not all, of what are described as 'monster meetings' held to protest against the Bill, nine out of ten of those present had but the most vague and nebulous notions concerning either the provisions of the Bill or the effects it was likely to produce. They most probably were told with certain rhetorical embellishments not characterised by very strict regard for accuracy that Government was about to pass a law which would invade the sanctity of their homes and private life; and forthwith, without further thought or discussion, they were prepared to vote as was desired or to sign any paper placed before them. When once, however, the Bill has become law, all agitation will, I anticipate, speedily subside; the baseless clamour regarding religion being endangered will rapidly die out; the beneficial and salutary character of the enactment, hedged round with safeguards as it now is, will be recognised; and gradually a practice which no right-minded man can defend and every kindly-hearted woman must abhor will become as extinct as is sati or any other barbarous custom which has already been swept away by the progress of education and civilisation.

"For these reasons, my Lord, I beg to support the Bill now before Your Excellency's Council."

The Hon'ble MR. EVANS said:—

"The importance of the principles involved in this Bill and the amount of interest which it has excited compel me not to give a silent vote, although I would gladly have been spared the discussion of so unsavoury a subject. I propose to consider the main principles upon which legislation of this character is based, and to review some of the points arising out of the discussion. First, with regard to the principles. I cannot do better as regards them than cite the words of Sir Barnes Peacock, then Legal Member of Council, in the debate on the Hindu Widows Re-marriage Bill. In that debate—I am reading from the Proceedings of the Council—Sir Barnes Peacock said that 'he was an advocate for liberty of conscience; and he thought that, so long as the interests of society were not injuriously affected, no political Government ought to throw in the way of its subjects any impediment whatever against their following the dictates of their own consciences, either directly by subjecting them to penalties, or indirectly by subjecting them to disabilities.' But then he went on to say that, 'where the commission of an act or the omission of a duty would be an offence against society, a political Government interfered to prevent that act or omission. But it did that for the protection of society and not for the protection of religion. Upon what principle, Sir Barnes Peacock asked, was it that the Indian Legislature had proceeded with reference to the practice of sati? Regulation XVII of 1829 declared that practice to be illegal and punishable by the Criminal Courts, and the preamble stated the reasons for the introduction of the measure. It said:—

"The practice of sati, or of burning or burying alive the widows of Hindus, is revolting to the feelings of human nature; it is nowhere enjoined by the religion of the Hindus as an imperative duty: on the contrary, a life of purity and retirement on the part of the widow is more especially and preferably inculcated, and, by a vast majority of that people throughout India, the practice is not kept up nor observed: in some extensive districts it does not exist: in those in which it has been most frequent it is notorious that, in many instances, acts of atrocity have been perpetrated which have been shocking to the Hindus themselves, and in their eyes unlawful and wicked. The measures hitherto adopted to discourage and prevent such acts have failed of success, and the Governor General in Council is deeply impressed with the conviction that the abuses in question cannot be effectually put an end to without abolishing the practice altogether. Actuated by these considerations, the Governor General in Council, without intending to depart from one of the first and most important principles of the system of British government in India, that all classes of the people be secure in the observance of their religious usages, so long as that system can be adhered to without violation of the paramount dictates of justice and humanity, has deemed it right,"' &c.

"And then Sir Barnes Peacock went on to say:—

'Then followed rules abolishing and making illegal the rite of sati. That rite was an injury to society. It was an injury to society that a widow should burn or bury herself with the body of her husband, or that any one should assist her in doing so; and therefore the Legislature had interfered and made the practice illegal. If a person'—and these are most important words—'believed it to be his imperative duty to do an act which would not be an injury to his fellow men or to society at large, the Legislature would not forbid him to do it; but, if he believed it to be his imperative duty to offer human sacrifice, the legislature would interpose and say—"We will not allow you to carry out your belief to the injury of your neighbour."'

"These were the principles upon which Sir Barnes Peacock in 1856 laid down the limits which should be observed by the Indian Government in penal legislation; they were the principles which, I understand, had been adopted in the Sati Regulation and which were confirmed by the rejection of the petition against the Regulation before the Privy Council,—and these I take it are the principles underlying the Queen's Proclamation and the Indian Councils Act. I entirely agree with the hon'ble member that it is impossible to read the Queen's Proclamation as an abandonment of the right of Government to protect its subjects from injuries inflicted in the name of religion or to repress acts injurious to society. That Proclamation, as I read it, is, so far as it touches this matter, nothing more than a declaration by Her Most Gracious Majesty that she wishes to have tolerance of all religions strictly observed, and that due attention should be paid to ancient usages and customs where legislation becomes necessary; but to contend that Her Majesty would, if she had the power to do it, deprive the Government of the country of the means of putting down crime, even if that crime were committed in the name of religion, is almost inconceivable, and I need say nothing more about it.

"These then are the clear principles, these are the powers, which the Government possesses and upon which it has always acted, and it cannot be denied that not only has the Government a right to give protection to all its subjects where protection is needed, but that it is its duty to do so; and that duty is never more paramount, never more clear, than when the protection is necessary on behalf of minors and infants; and I take it that, if there is a class which more than any other appeals to the manly instincts of every one worthy of the name of man, it is that of the helpless infant compelled to undergo sexual intercourse while she is in an entirely immature condition.

"This is undoubtedly so, but so loath has the Government of India always been, and rightly so, to touch even the hem of the garment of any of the religions of India, and, so to say, lay a sacriligious hand upon them—so loath to do anything which could even be misinterpreted as an attempt to disturb religious feelings or customs,—even customs which are not religious in themselves but are accounted so,—that I who have lived many years in this country, and have some knowledge of the feelings of the inhabitants, should have felt much hesitation in supporting any proposals for legislation which might have been open to that imputation, or which might be made use of in order to inflame or disturb the minds of the ignorant or superstitious, unless a very clear case was made out that it would be a manifest dereliction of duty on the part of the Government not to interfere. But, looking at the mass of evidence before us, it does seem impossible to deny that a state of things exists which imperatively calls for legislation.

"Sexual intercourse with immature female children is so utterly revolting, so contrary to the first principles of civilized society, and such a physical outrage upon the poor little children themselves, that I should have thought that it was beyond the pale of discussion to consider whether it should be treated as a vice like drunkenness, or, as what it is, a heinous crime against these poor little infants.

"It has been clearly established that this crime, this odious practice, prevails, and prevails very largely. The terms in which the Raja of Bhinga has just referred to it show what the real nature of it is, and also the abhorrence with which all right-minded people must view it.

"Then, what are the consequences of it? Not only is there the physical outrage itself, but it is clearly shown that in a very large number of cases serious hurt, and sometimes even death, are the result to the victims; in other cases injury to their constitution of a lasting and grave character. So far then it would seem clear beyond all doubt that some legislation is necessary.

"The present age fixed by the Penal Code at which absolute protection is given to all girls against sexual intercourse is ten, although the ordinary age of consent to any act which causes hurt or injury and which would otherwise be criminal is twelve. A review of the medical evidence shows quite clearly that females are not fit to undergo the strain of maternity until a considerably later age than twelve; but the Government, in its tenderness for the feelings and customs of the people, and having regard to the peculiar difficulties of the matter, have resolved to take twelve as the age, which must be conceded to be, as it were, an irreducible minimum; because, irrespective of the question which I shall come to presently, it seems impossible to deny that, apart from peculiar religious objections arising from Hindu marriage customs, twelve would be considered to be, if anything, too low an age. So far then there would appear to be no objection to this legislation. But the difficulty arises out of the usages of the Hindus. One of their great usages is that of infant marriage, and under that usage the great bulk of girls are married, some of them even as early as five or six, and the majority of them in this Province between eight and eleven. Now, there is a very great difference between Hindu marriage and English marriage, and there has been great misconception arising out of want of attention to this difference.

"An English marriage or a European marriage takes place between adults. From the nature of the case they are regarded as already fit for sexual intercourse, and the marriage implies consent to immediate cohabitation, and the phrase 'consummation' indicates the immediate completion of the marriage. With the Hindus, however, the case is quite different. Marriage among the Hindus—infant marriage though it be—is in the nature of a sacrament, and it indissolubly creates the status of wifehood, but without any relation between husband and wife which renders immediate cohabitation necessarily permissible; for it is of course apparent that by the laws of nature and also by the laws of the Hindu religion such immediate cohabitation is impossible and would be criminal when attempted with an infant wife of (say) twelve years. So the position stood thus. In the English law it was laid down that the husband could not commit rape upon his wife, because it was part of the contract of marriage that the wife should give her consent to immediate cohabitation, which consent she could not retract. But no one has ventured to suggest that the poor little Hindu infant of five or eight or nine does, either of herself, or through her guardians, give any such consent whatever; on the contrary, the precepts of the Hindu Shastras are clear that it is a crime of the most revolting character for the husband to attempt to have intercourse with his infant wife before she has attained maturity. This is the reason why in our Penal Code there is positive protection afforded even to married girls up to the age of ten, and this also is the reason why this provision was deliberately introduced notwithstanding that Lord Macaulay, who was an English lawyer, had not provided any protection for the wife from sexual intercourse, it being according to English views unnecessary because the marriage involved immediate sexual intercourse. That I take it is the real meaning of it, and this consideration shows that the Committee who revised the Bill, and at the head of whom was Sir Barnes Peacock, had thoroughly considered this matter, and concluded that the conditions were so different here that, wife or no wife, we were bound by the dictates of humanity, as well as of religion, to protect the female infant.

"The question then simply came to this, what should be the age? The age of ten has been fixed by the Penal Code, and has been the age now for the last thirty years. The evidence before us shows this to be far too low an age, and the cases cited prove that there is very great necessity for raising the age, at any rate as high as twelve. The objections with regard to the use of the word 'rape' based upon English law all fall to the ground.

"The next difficulty that is raised is the religious one. It is said by a large number of Hindus in Bengal that they are bound by their religion to have sexual intercourse with their infant wives on the first appearance of the menses. This opinion is not shared by a very large number of the Hindus in other parts of India; it is not even universally prevalent in Bengal; and the question is one which has been hotly debated. I do not propose to go into the merits of that debate. I am quite willing myself to concede that, however wrong a man's views may be of his own scriptures, if he believes any doctrine, however absurd, we must accept it as his religion until he chooses to abandon it. But it is perfectly clear that if this religious doctrine were pushed to its logical extent it would give sanction to the most terrible crimes, because the medical testimony is clear that there are instances in which infants of a few months old menstruate, and the menstruation goes on; there are other instances in which menstruation appears in very young girls who have no other signs of maturity, and then stops, and regular menstruation is not resumed until some time later. Under the present law intercourse with these children on the ground that they have menstruated is punishable with transportation, or ten years imprisonment, if the children are under ten, and the so-called religious sanction is set aside, that is, Hindus are prohibited now from doing that which they say they are imperatively bound to do. The question then is merely whether the prohibition shall be carried two years further. The only result of that is that a larger and more appreciable percentage of girls menstruate between the ages of ten and twelve, and so there would be a larger number of instances in which the persons who hold that particular form of religious belief will not be allowed to carry it out at the expense or to the injury of their child-wives. That is really the sum and substance of the matter.

"It has then been proposed by persons, who are at one with us in desiring to put down premenstrual cohabitation between husband and wife as repugnant to the Hindu Shastras, that we should adopt first menstruation as the limit instead of any limit of age. I should have been very glad if possible to meet the religious scruple, fanciful as it appears, by such a concession, but it is absolutely impracticable, and the reasons why it is impracticable are perfectly clear.

"There is no real means by which you can give the necessary protection to young girls of a higher age than ten except by raising the age of consent. The objection that age is not ascertainable with sufficient certainty for the purpose of a criminal trial is really of very little value. There is no doubt difficulty in many cases in ascertaining age, just as there is great difficulty in this country in ascertaining any other fact by oral evidence. But our law bristles with instances of limits of age. I put aside the well-known fixed age of majority, which it is necessary to have, and I will take a few instances out of the criminal law itself. Under section 82 of the Penal Code nothing is an offence which is done by a child under seven years of age. Then section 83 provides for cases where acts which would be offences are committed by a child above seven and under twelve. Section 317 deals with cases where a child under twelve years of age is abandoned by its parents, and it provides for them a punishment of seven years imprisonment.

"These are a few of the age limits existing in the Penal Code and which are constantly worked, and it does seem a strange thing to object to an age limit being fixed in this Bill, and that it should be represented to us that it would be practically impossible to ascertain ages in this country and that it would be easier to ascertain whether the first appearance of the menses has taken place. Now, as regards that, I am aware that there are prevalent in various parts of the country certain festivities and ceremonies which take place on the occasion of the first appearance of menstruation. I am informed that these ceremonies, which are of a scandalous and indecent character, are gradually dying out, and that they are very far from being universally prevalent even amongst Hindus. Then I would point out that it is absolutely impossible, having regard to the medical testimony with reference to these little girls that some menstruate at an extremely early age, to legalise sexual intercourse with them on the ground that the menses have appeared. I would also point out, as has been done by the Hon'ble the Raja of Bhinga, that in many cases the menses are unnaturally stimulated, and that in other cases the flow is not what is supposed but is merely the result of a ruptured hymen, a result of the very crime which we are seeking to put down. It is also quite apparent, as already stated, that first menstruation is in many cases merely one sign of approaching puberty, and does not indicate the period when sexual intercourse may properly take place. Moreover, the plea of first menstruation having taken place would be put forward in every case and supported by oral evidence. Medical examination of the victim would not be possible without her consent. So no reliable test of the truth of the plea would be available. The accused would be able to have all the ladies of the family examined as to indelicate details, and conviction would be very difficult and uncertain and the scandal would be great. Under these circumstances, it is impossible to adopt this proposal and there is no alternative but that Your Excellency should either abandon the attempt to give protection to these little girls or should disregard the religious argument. Now, it would be very easy for the Government of India to sit quiet, and to wait, as it has been recommended from many quarters that they should wait, until education and time have changed the character of the people.

"This was the very argument employed in the sati case, and which kept Lord Amherst during the five years of his Governor Generalship from meddling with the matter. I refer, my Lord, to Kaye's History of the Administration of the East India Company, and at page 531 it is stated that by the Bengal returns from 1819 it appeared that 560 cases of sati were reported, of which 421 were said to have occurred in the Calcutta Division alone. But notwithstanding that that was the case in 1819, notwithstanding that there was considerable inquiry into the matter and that many of the Company's servants were of opinion that they ought to take up the matter and suppress this abomination, yet the conclusion, on reading the whole of the opinions, that Lord Amherst came to was this :—

'I am not prepared,' he wrote in March 1827, 'to recommend an enactment prohibiting sati altogether ..... I must frankly confess, though at the risk of being considered insensible to the enormity of the evil, that I am inclined to recommend to our trusting to the progress now making in the diffusion of knowledge among the natives for the gradual suppression of this detestable superstition. I cannot believe it possible that the burning or burying alive of widows will long survive the advancement which every year brings with it in useful and rational learning.' 'But,' says the historian, 'the period of Lord Amherst's tenure of office was fast drawing to a close. Before the year in which this minute was written had expired, his successor was occupying the Viceregal chair. The high moral courage of Lord William Bentinck faced the abomination without shrinking.'

"And we know what the result was: it was the Sati Regulation and the suppression of the practice of sati altogether. But history repeats itself, and the same arguments which were addressed to Lord Amherst are now addressed to Your Lordship.

"I should also remind the Council that at the beginning of this century human sacrifice, that is, the sacrifice of children, was one of the recognised religious practices in parts of Bengal itself. I turn again to Kaye's History, at page 548, where he quotes from Ward on the Hindus, and I find the following :—

'The people in some parts of India, particularly the inhabitants of Orissa and of the Eastern parts of Bengal, frequently offer their children to the goddess Gunga. The following reason is assigned for the practice. When a woman has been long married and has no children, it is common for the man, or his wife, or both of them, to make a vow to the goddess Gunga that, if she will bestow the blessing of children upon them, they will devote their first-born to her. If after this vow they have children, the eldest is nourished till a proper age, which may be three, four or nine years, according to circumstances, when, on a particular day appointed for bathing in a holy part of the river, they take the child with them and offer it to this goddess; the child is encouraged to go further and further into the water till it is carried away by the stream, or is pushed off by its inhuman parents.'

"This also was a practice which the British Government had put down and did put down. These matters of history now, but it is well to remember that it was in the name of religion that these sacrifices were made and that they were made by the inhabitants of this part of India.

"So much then for this portion of the subject, and I think I have shown that there has been no departure in this legislation from the fixed and guiding principles which have always actuated the Government of India, and that there is good and sufficient cause for this action, that it is necessary to take it, and that, desirous as Government may be of meeting religious objections, they are unable to accept the proposal to fix the first menstruation as the limit of protection.

"There is only one more argument I propose to deal with, and that is as to the inutility of the Bill. It is said that, granting all this, the Bill will be a dead letter. There are two statements made. The first is that there will be no prosecutions under this Act except where there has been physical injury of a grave kind arising from the sexual intercourse: and the other statement is that where injury does arise from sexual intercourse the present law is amply sufficient to deal with it. As regards the first of these statements I must admit that there is a great deal of truth in it. I do not expect that there will be many prosecutions except where there has been severe injury, and the reason why I think so is this. These things take place in the privacy of the zenana, and so long as they are hushed up by a depraved public feeling, which certainly, judging from the controversy raging round us for some time, seems to prevail extensively in Bengal, I cannot expect that there will be many prosecutions; but I do not think that on that ground the Act will be without use. The very same difficulty met the British Government when they attempted to deal with infanticide in Rajputana. There the infanticide took place in the zenana. It was impossible to know what the child died of. A little pill of opium the size of a pea, or a small quantity of the drug rubbed on the nipple of the mother's breast, was sufficient to carry off the child. It took the British Government seventy years of incessant pressure before we could be said to have quite put down that abominable practice in Rajputana, and it may be that it will be a very long time before the people of Bengal who are addicted to this practice will change their ways. But none the less I venture to think that the fact of these acts being made crimes by the Penal Code and punished when detected with a heavy penalty will have a deterrent effect, and that in course of time the evil may yield in the same way as infanticide did in Rajputana. So much for that part of the question.

"As regards the other point—that the law is sufficient to deal with cases of injury which are unhappily too common and which do come before the Courts—I desire to emphatically dissent from it. The Penal Code provides in section 80 that nothing is an 'offence which is done by accident or misfortune, or without any criminal intention or knowledge in the doing of a lawful act in a lawful manner, by lawful means and with proper care and caution.' So long as sexual intercourse with these little immature girl-wives is allowed by us to be a lawful act and so long as it is done in a lawful manner, by lawful means, and with proper care and caution, unless it can be shown that there was some criminal intention or knowledge, the doer of the act is bound to get off scot free. The opponents point to the conviction of Hari Maiti. I saw the papers in the Hari Maiti case, and my opinion was the same as that of all other counsel who had seen them—that it was a case that ought to be prosecuted, but that the chances of conviction were very very small, and the reason is very apparent from the charge of Mr. Justice Wilson, from which a quotation was made to the Council by the hon'ble member in moving the Bill. It is quite true that the man was convicted, but it must be remembered that he was convicted notwithstanding many difficulties, and that the jury who convicted him had not got to give any reason. The fact was that they did happen to convict him. Then there is the Maldah case to which reference was made just now. The Brahmin pleader who was one of the assessors considered that the violence committed by the husband in putting his hand on the child-wife's throat for the purpose of overcoming her resistance was a trifling force employed in the exercise of his marital right to perform a lawful act, and that therefore, though death accidentally resulted, he was not punishable. In that case the evidence as to menstruation was so conflicting that no finding was come to upon it. The Magistrate gave him two months and the High Court two years, but, as far as the two assessors were concerned, he would have got off. I cannot therefore understand how it can be contended that the law which leaves these acts perfectly lawful and only punishes the result of them when there is found to have been rashness or negligence in the commission or knowledge of the consequence which happened to result—I cannot understand how this state of things can be considered satisfactory; and I think that if this Bill had no other effect than that of providing certain conviction and an adequately severe penalty for those cases of injury which do come to the notice of our Courts, when the child is under twelve, that would be a very great gain indeed; such a result could not be open to the charge of inutility though many girls over twelve will still have no protection from premenstrual intercourse.

"I do not desire to go into the other numerous questions raised in this discussion. I have desired mainly to point out that the Government of India has not in this legislation in the smallest degree departed from those principles which have guided it heretofore, and which will, I trust, always guide it; that religious toleration and respect for religion will always be observed where the religious doctrines do not compel criminal results; and I have been anxious as far as possible to allay the apprehension felt that the Government was starting on some new course by pointing out that there is not any ground for it. All the details of the Bill have been gone into so fully by the hon'ble member,—and other speakers will follow,—and the religious question will, I am sure, be so fully dealt with by my hon'ble friend Mr. Nulkar, that I will not trouble the Council longer, but merely say that I vote for the passing of the Bill."

The Hon'ble MR. BLISS said :—

"As a member of the Select Committee on this Bill, I have had before me very many more petitions and opinions than those which have been printed and circulated to hon'ble members generally. I have also received from different parts of the country—principally of course from Bengal—many pamphlets and newspaper articles bearing on the subject. I have considered all these to the best of my ability, and have arrived at the conclusion that the Bill should be passed in the form in which it is now before the Council. I understand that in some quarters there is a feeling of disappointment that in the Committee's Report the arguments for and against the Bill have not been set out and discussed at length. I have also heard that from the brevity of that Report it has been held that this important subject has received too scant consideration at the hands of the members of the Committee. My Lord, this feeling is based on an entire misapprehension. I can say, not only for myself, but for the other members of the Committee, that the whole subject received most careful and anxious consideration; and that, if the Report of the Committee is brief, it is not because we underrated the importance of the subject or desired to slight the opinions of those who are opposed to this Bill, but because we saw no reason to depart in this case from the custom of restricting the Reports of Select Committees within narrow limits, and preferred to set forth in this Chamber our reasons for the opinion at which we had arrived.

"The ground on which this Bill is chiefly opposed is that it will interfere with the performance at the proper time of the sacrament which bears the name of Garbhadhan. Possibly, at some past time in the long history of Hinduism, this sacrament may have been regarded by pious Hindus as essential to salvation, and may have been universally—or at least commonly—performed. But it seems to me quite impossible to contend that this is now the case, or that any religious or social penalty follows on its omission. Its place appears to have been taken 'by certain disgraceful female rites, abhorrent alike to religion and decency,' to use the words of one of the Bengali gentlemen whose opinion on the Bill is before us. The same gentleman speaks of raising 'the whole superstructure of opposition on the importance of a ceremony practically obsolete.' I think he was right in using these words, and that the Garbhadhan sacrament or ceremony is practically obsolete. Indeed, there can be no doubt of this. There is no evidence at all that the ceremony is ever performed. It is true that many people say that it is, but the evidence is entirely secondary. So far as my knowledge goes, not one of the many—I may say thousands of persons—who have signed petitions or addressed the Council in other ways on this subject has ventured to mention a single case in which this ceremony has been performed to his own knowledge.

"Admitting, however, that the ceremony is still observed in a few specially orthodox families, let us consider how far it is right to conclude that its performance on the very first occasion of the indication of approaching puberty by the occurrence of a certain condition is imperatively necessary—necessary, I mean, to salvation. It is clear that, if its performance at that particular time is necessary to the salvation of any one Hindu living in Bengal, it must be necessary to the salvation of all other professors of the same faith, whether living in Bengal or elsewhere in India. But it is not denied that the Garbhadhan sacrament or ceremony is often not observed in Bengal and never observed in other provinces. Consequently, it would appear to follow that the vast majority of the followers of the Hindu religion have imperilled their salvation and have incurred the gravest penalties both in this world and the next. It is sufficient, I think, to state the case in this way to show that the Garbhadhan ceremony is only regarded as necessary to salvation by an infinitesimal minority, if by any,

I say 'if by any,' because, as I have said before, it is clear that no one visits, or seeks to visit, the omission to perform this ceremony with any pains or penalties of any sort or kind, or even with that disapproval and shunning of companionship by which the religious in all countries mark their abhorrence of sins which can only be dealt with by a higher than any earthly authority. But what real ground has any one for maintaining that the performance of this ceremony on this particular occasion is essential? So far as I can see, the doctrine rests on one text, and one text only, which equally competent scholars to those who oppose the Bill interpret in an entirely different way. They apply, that is, the word 'first' to the words 'auspicious day,' not to the word 'occurrence'. I am not a Sanskrit scholar, but yet I will venture to choose between these two renderings. It is an accepted rule that, in interpreting a document or a series of documents, one must consider the whole, not a part. Now, the translation favoured by the opponents of the Bill leaves this text entirely isolated and opposed to a great body of other texts which prescribe a later period as the proper one for the consummation of marriage, and emphasize the evils of too early maternity. But the translation favoured by those scholars who support the Bill entirely reconciles these apparent contradictions and leaves the precepts of the Hindu religion regarding this sacrament free from ambiguity and far removed from that position of antagonism to the best interests of the people, moral and physical, which the opponents of this Bill would maintain and enforce. I therefore adopt that translation without doubt or hesitation and support the Bill with an entire confidence that it will in no way injure or interfere with the religious feelings and practices which are as dear to our Hindu fellow-subjects as ours are to us. It is a source of great satisfaction to me that in arriving at this conclusion I am supported by the opinions of those two great and enlightened Princes, the Maharajas of Travancore and of Jeypore. They are admittedly entirely orthodox adherents of the Hindu religion. Their countrymen may without misgiving accept their assurance that this Bill does no violence to the dictates of their common faith.

"As to the necessity of the Bill, it is no answer to say that outrages upon immature girls are uncommon. However uncommon they may be, the law should deal with them when and where they occur. Not a few cases have been cited which have come under the observation of competent medical men. The lady doctors who some time ago addressed a petition to Your Excellency on this painful subject—a petition which found its way into the newspapers and has been published throughout the length and breadth of India—cited some fourteen truly terrible cases of which they had personal knowledge. Now, lady doctors are of but recent advent to India. They are a mere drop in the ocean among the 250 millions, or more, of people who inhabit this country. If in the course of the short experience of these few competent observers so many as fourteen cases have come to light, how many hundreds—nay, thousands—must not have occurred far from the light, in the privacy of the zenana, in the secrecy of Hindu family life? I fear that these cases are not uncommon, but the contrary. As that ornament of the Madras Bar, Mr. Subramani Iyer, says, 'it is significant that the existence of the vicious practice so severely and so justly condemned by medical authorities is not denied, except in a half-hearted way.' I wish it could with truth be said that the Bill is not necessary; but it cannot be. Why, my Lord, to say nothing of the cases cited by my hon'ble friend Sir Andrew Scoble, it appears from the Englishman newspaper of yesterday that a most barbarous case of this kind, in which the accused person is a Mussalman and the facts seem to be clearly established, is at this moment under the consideration of the High Court.

"As to the efficacy of the law as it will stand as amended, I think it is extremely probable that very few cases will be brought forward under it. It is not, in fact, at all desirable that cases of this kind should often come before the Courts. I concur with the opponents of the Bill that the unfortunate child-wife will, in such cases, be at least as great a sufferer as the husband to whom she has yielded or who has taken advantage of his position to injure her against her will. I can also understand and sympathise with the feeling that even the institution, to say nothing of the successful prosecution, of such a case will be destructive of the honour and future comfort of the families it affects. But the

Select Committee have taken such steps as seemed to them feasible to prevent the trial of such cases by incompetent and inexperienced persons, and to prohibit enquiries into them by the lower grades of the police—a class of public servants to which scant justice is sometimes, I think, done, and which is unfortunately the object of more suspicion than it seems to me always to deserve. I trust that these safeguards will be effective, and that the magistracy will carefully weigh the responsibilities which lie upon them in cases of so delicate a nature as those arising under this law, so that in the working of the law there may be no occasion for offence or complaint. The fewer cases there are, the better I shall be pleased. But it does not follow that because the cases are few the law will be ineffective. It might almost as well be argued that, because murders are happily few, the law making murder a punishable offence is not required. I am quite unable to concur with my hon'ble colleague Sir Romesh Chunder Mitter, whose ill-health and consequent absence we must all regret, that 'the effects of legislation are neutralised when it is opposed to the opinion of those on whom it has to be enforced.' If my hon'ble colleague's views were correct, dacoity would be rampant and burglars the masters of the situation. The efficacy of the law depends on the way in which it is enforced in some cases, but in many others on the way in which people know that it will be enforced, if need be. This law will in my belief be one of the latter class. There can be no fear now that its existence will not be generally known, and the very fact of its existence will tend to impress the necessity of caution both on husbands who may be inclined to make an improperly early use of their rights and on that far more blameworthy class, the people who put husbands and girl-wives into situations of difficulty and temptation. It is admitted that the elder members of families, especially the women and especially in Bengal, are in the habit of allowing husbands and girl-wives to associate far more closely than is at all wise or even fair. It will be well that such persons should understand that the abettors of crime are punishable as well as the actual perpetrators of crime.

"My Lord, I should not have ventured to occupy the time of the Council today by speaking on this Bill but for the fact that, besides members of the Executive Government which introduced the measure, I was the only English member of the Select Committee. As occupying that position, it seemed to me that to give a silent vote would be disrespectful to the great body of my fellow-subjects whom the Bill affects. I earnestly hope that, distasteful though the Bill may now be to some of them, they will all in time come to recognize it as a proof of the wisdom and benevolence of the Government, as assisting their leaders in setting before the masses a higher and purer moral standard than that which some now recognize and follow, and as promoting the physical improvement of the generations which are yet to come."

The Hon'ble RAO BAHADUR KRISHNAJI LAKSHMAN NULKAR said:—

"Before the Motion is put to the vote I have to make some observations, for the length of which it is perhaps unnecessary that I should apologise after the opposition which has been raised against the Bill in certain quarters, and especially because I have, for some time past, felt the absolute necessity of some such measure, and have urged the same upon the attention of the hon'ble member in charge of the Bill since I joined this Council fourteen months ago. I think the time has now arrived when I am bound to justify myself not only before this Council but also before my countrymen who have thought it fit to offer an apparently vehement opposition to the measure.

"I wish to express my deep regret at the enforced absence of my hon'ble friend Sir Romesh Chunder Mitter, whose health, I grieve to say, has been indifferent for the last few years, and who has found himself unable to be present at this meeting and the previous one.

"I wish it to be clearly understood that none of my remarks upon the adverse criticisms of the Bill need be necessarily taken as directed towards the observations which have fallen from my hon'ble friend Sir Romesh Chunder Mitter, and which the opponents of the Bill have chosen, and very wrongly chosen, to regard as hostile to its main principle. He has been careful to tell us most distinctly at the outset that if he could believe that the measure was necessary for 'the repression of crime', or was calculated to have 'the effect of remedying to an appreciable degree the evils of early marriage', he would have been very glad to support it, notwithstanding the religious objection he has pointed out. Further, in the remarks in his note of dissent from the Select Committee's Report, while still holding the opinion that the measure was likely to cause more harm than good, he has endeavoured to make his position clearer by admitting that 'there is no disagreement at all between the injunctions of the Shastras and the principle upon which the Bill is based'; that the practice which is prevalent of allowing child-wives to sleep with their husbands before the former 'attains puberty is certainly pernicious'; that speaking for himself he 'would extend the restriction to a maturer age', namely, up to fifteen or sixteen years, in order to avoid 'the greater evil' of 'immature maternity', since, 'in a vast majority of cases conception takes place after the age of twelve years', and that 'consummation of marriage before the age of fifteen or sixteen should be held reprehensible'. Almost the only point of importance on which I have the misfortune to differ from him is that I consider the remedy he has proposed as worse than the evil, and, if adopted, would open a wide door to the perpetration of the crime with perfect immunity, and so render the proposed law a complete nullity. As a similar alteration of the Bill has been proposed by others from outside this room, I shall deal with it further on along with other proposals and suggestions which have been made to the Council.

'Now, the Bill is objected to by its opponents on several grounds, among which may be mentioned:—

(1) It is against the Hindu religion in that it will prevent the performance of the rite of Garbhadhan (impregnation ceremony) at the first occurrence of a certain event in the child-wife which sometimes takes place before the age of twelve years, because it is alleged that the Hindu religion commands the observance of this rite at the very first occurrence of that event, the rite being incomplete without immediate consummation of the marriage.

(2) The proposed law, so interfering with 'the religious belief and worship' of the people, would amount to a direct breach of the promise of Her Majesty's Proclamation of 1858.

(3) The evil against which the proposed law is directed has no existence, but, granting that it does exist in any appreciable degree, the existing law against hurt, grievous hurt and culpable homicide is sufficient to adequately punish the offence in question.

(4) There can be no such offence as rape between husband and wife; such is not recognized by the English law, and therefore its existence in the Indian criminal law is an anomaly, and as such must not be extended.

(5) The proposed law would lead to police oppression and false charges by enemies.

(6) The new law would defeat its own ends by banding the people together for effectual evasion of it by perjury and forgery, and so would have the effect of completely demoralizing them; whereas at present the public are becoming alive to the necessity of reform of their marriage customs, and are slowly but steadily introducing such reforms, which they will cease to do in future in retaliation of the proposed interference with them.

"Before I proceed to examine the religious argument I must explain once more that by doing so I do not recede from the position I took in my remarks at the introduction of the Bill, namely, that, if the religious provisions, customs and usages of the people come in the way of legislation for the adequate protection of the weak and helpless against the strong, such provisions, customs and usages ought to be disregarded.

"Now, in an examination of the merits of the objection to the Bill from the religious point of view, the first difficulty one encounters is to know practically what really is meant by the expression 'Hindu religion.' There are the written works attributed to divers ancient inspired sages, whose age in history it is not easy to fix, and whose conflicting directions on points of importance it is not always possible to reconcile or explain satisfactorily. To add to this almost insuperable difficulty of arriving at a proper solution of the problem set before us by the opponents of the Bill, the practice or customs and usages of the Hindus belonging to innumerable castes, sections and religious subdivisions, most of them of modern origin, differ so widely from each other and interminably vary in different districts and divisions of the Indian continent, that scarcely any of those customs or usages can possibly be 'duly' taken into account as a reliable or practical guide in framing any uniform criminal law for the empire.

"However, since we have got to make the best of our way through the mazes of such conflicting authorities, we must have recourse to experts who could speak impartially from outside the vortex of the present agitation. For the written Hindu law on Garbhadhan we have to look to such works as the Vedas, Shrutis and Smritis; and these have been subjected to a most searching and exhaustive examination in most parts of India both by pundits and by Sanskrit scholars of Indian and European reputation. As may be expected on such occasions, these two classes of expounders have come to different conclusions. On the diverse the authorities and commentators consulted by each, a great majority of the pundits have declared in favour of the contention that the rite of consummation (Garbhadhan) must be performed at the very first appearance of a certain sign of puberty. On the other hand, scholars who are accustomed to carry on literary and antiquarian research on a scientific system and in the light of history—ancient and modern—have come to the opposite conclusion, and have declared that, according to the letter as well as the spirit of the directions of the Hindu sages quoted by both, not only that the rite of consummation need not be performed at the very first appearance of that sign, but that for an honest and faithful compliance with those directions the husband must wait till he is twenty-five and the bride sixteen years of age. Trustworthy scholars of world-wide renown, like Dr. R. G. Bhandarkar of the Dekkhan College, Mr. R. C. Dutta of the Bengal Civil Service, author of Ancient India, the Hon'ble Justice K. T. Telang, an acknowledged authority on Hindu law, and other competent experts, have, each independently and from his individual point of view, come exactly to the conclusion at which the learned Director of Public Instruction in Bengal, Sir Alfred Croft, has felt himself compelled to arrive after consulting and examining the leading pundits in Calcutta by direction of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor. I feel sure that the Council will agree with me that Sir Alfred Croft's report is correctly described by His Honour as showing, 'with great wealth of research, how dangerous it is in this, as in other controversies, to select a single text for the dogmatic support of a principle without reference to the context, to the general spirit of the writer, and to other texts which limit, control, and sometimes even contradict, the particular text on which reliance is placed'. I have no doubt that on carefully reading that report hon'ble members will be struck with the spirit of impartiality and the high judicial tone which pervade every part of Sir Alfred Croft's criticism. I will not therefore take up the time of the Council on this point beyond saying that, according to the authorities of these scholars, it is clear that the Hindu Shastras contain no explicit injunction commanding the performance of the rite of Garbhadhan on the very first appearance of the sign of puberty; but, on the contrary, some of them (and among them Raghunandan himself) even require that, in addition to the exhibition of that sign, the age limit of sixteen years in the bride must be reached before consummation of marriage could properly take place. For a correct appreciation of the several texts quoted in the course of the controversy we must remember (as Sir Alfred Croft cautions us to do) that they are all—

'governed by the underlying principle that a son is to be begotten—not a sickly or short-lived son, but one who will be able to do the father spiritual service. In view of that dominant principle it seems to involve some violence to urge that the spirit of the Shastras is obeyed by enforcing cohabitation at the first sign of puberty in the wife. It would appear to be a more reasonable principle to follow that any text prescribing the time at which Garbhadhan is to be performed should be governed by and read in subordination to whatever texts independently declare the age at which cohabitation is permissible, since, as before stated, the only meaning of the sacrament is to consecrate that act'.

"The other scholars I have named have come to the same conclusion. Dr. Bhandarkar in his note on the subject sums up:—

'5. That this conclusion as regards delay in the consummation of marriage is confirmed by the circumstance that the sacred writers seem to have their eye on the doctrine of Hindu medical science that a girl is not in a condition to give birth to a healthy child before the age of sixteen.

'6. That the consummation of marriage only when the girl has fully developed is quite in keeping with the spirit of the Rishi legislators, as the begetting of a son able to do credit to the father is their sole object, and its early consummation is entirely opposed to their spirit, as the result of it is barrenness or weak and sickly children'.

"All orthodox Hindus claim the remotest imaginable antiquity for their religious scriptures; and, seeing that marriages between adults only were allowed in ancient India, it is absurd to look to those scriptures for authority in favour of consummation with a bride under twelve years of age.

"I may point out in passing that, among others, Sir Alfred Croft also has clearly shown that, even from Raghunandan himself, 'not a single text * * can be cited in which the performance of Garbhadhan at the first occurrence of the ritu is enjoined'. On the contrary, Raghunandan, in his Jyotish Tatwa, a work which governs the time of all religious rites, fixes the bride's age at full sixteen years as fit for consummation of marriage. And yet the opponents of the Bill in Central Bengal had placed their entire reliance on Raghunandan as their ultimate authority at the beginning of this controversy, though we were at the same time told that we had nothing to do with the correctness or otherwise of his interpretations, so long as he was trusted by his followers. These same opponents have since shifted their position somewhat, and have been trusting and quoting other authorities, almost to the exclusion of Raghunandan, all of which have been thoroughly sifted by the scholars I have named.

"As a tacit reply to the directions of the ancient authorities which are adverse to the Garbhadhan theory, the opponents have recently relied more upon their customs and usages founded on their religious belief. They argue that the legislature is not entitled to go behind this belief, but is bound to respect the same. They are not prepared to admit any proposition which is not 'sanctioned by Hindu law and custom', and urge with great earnestness that the ancient law-givers legislated for 'giants of the Vedic age', not for the 'pigmies' of the present age of Kali-yug, who 'must not be put on a level with those giants', but have to follow the ordinances of mediæval writers (whatever that may mean) and, above all, their own religious customs and 'crystalised habits', as they describe them. And what are these customs and 'crystalised habits', particularly in Bengal, with regard to cohabitation? According to them, from the second or third night after marriage, the child-wife must invariably share the same bed with the husband 'whenever both are under the same roof', which they almost always are, because we are further told that the child-wife has to live constantly with the husband's family to be initiated into its ways; that such passing the night in the same bed is innocence itself; that all the 'charms of ante-nuptial courtship' known in the West may be claimed for such 'communion' between the 'young couple'; that 'early assimilation is imperative, or otherwise the very object of marriage is thwarted'; and lastly, we are asked, with much gravity, since 'the young couple in orthodox families never meet each other in the daylight, when but at night can there be communion?' After this and other graphic descriptions of what takes place under the authority of religious custom and usage, we are again asked, in all seriousness I believe, 'where then is the authority for the assumption that sleep and consummation are synonymous?' The anathema against premenstrual consummation 'is a sufficient safeguard'. Is it though in practice, I beg leave to ask? In addition to the overwhelming evidence to the contrary, I will only cite that of Pandit Sasidhar Tarkachuramoni, one of the most active opponents of the Bill. He has publicly stated, in alluding to this same 'anathema', that 'the Hindu society does not believe this custom', of premenstrual intercourse, 'to be a great sin, and hence the degradation of the Hindus'.

"It will thus be seen that to respect the alleged Hindu law and custom of Garbhadhan at the very first appearance of a certain sign of puberty would amount to a tacit acceptance of the most revolting usage to which child-wives are systematically subjected (at least in these Provinces) almost from the day of their marriage—a usage, or process, which must inevitably result in an unnaturally early appearance of those signs, and in acts involving danger to life and certain detriment to the health of the helpless girls.

"There is another matter-of-fact consideration which also claims attention, and that is, what is the actual practice as regards the Garbhadhan rite in this Province, the birthplace of the argument? Innumerable letters under the signatures of Hindu gentlemen of education and position have appeared in the Native papers of Calcutta during the last two months, stating, without contradiction, that this rite has almost fallen into desuetude all over Bengal, and completely so in families of almost all the principal oppositionists of the Bill in this city. Babu Protap Chandra Mozoomdar is literally borne out by the general testimony before us when he says that 'in nearly ninety-eight per cent. of respectable Hindu households in Calcutta and outside, this boasted Garbhadhan ceremony is never performed, because not known, and among the masses it was never heard of, its place being taken in both cases by certain disgraceful female rites abhorrent alike to religion and decency.' A Purohit or officiating Hindu priest informed Sir Alfred Croft that on an average 'he attended at thirty marriages for every Garbhadhan ceremony'. When we remember that these religious rites are prescribed for the Dwija or twice-born high castes only, who themselves form numerically an extremely small portion of the total Hindu population, this percentage dwindles down to extreme insignificance. As to the probable number of instances of the alleged necessity of the rite before the age of twelve years among such a numerically small fraction, that number is bound to become still smaller, if it did not altogether disappear, provided the 'event' is not forced on by the unnatural practice, unknown and unclaimed out of Bengal, of compelling the child-wife to prematurely share the same bed with her husband. Yet we are expected to believe that the Hindu masses who flocked to the maidan of Calcutta the other day were actuated by a sincere or honest belief in the rite of Garbhadhan. As to other parts of India the rite itself is practically unknown in Gujarat, Kathiawar, Sindh, the Punjab and the North-Western Provinces. If it is commonly observed anywhere in India, it is so in the Dekkhan and in Madras; but there it is as often deferred as not, after the first appearance of the sign of puberty, and the necessity of its earliest performance, such as is now insisted upon in Bengal, has not been recognized. Raja Sir T. Madhava Rao, whose real opinions on this point have been generally misrepresented of late, wrote a few years ago that consummation 'may be postponed for a year or two after the attainment of puberty. The Shastras, the customs and natural reason do not forbid it'. I am quoting the Raja's own words. It is true that at a few meetings in the Bombay Presidency the Calcutta argument has now been taken up for the first time, undoubtedly in response to the Bengal agitation. It had not suggested itself to those who held the public meeting at Madhaobag in Bombay in 1886, nor to the deputation of Shastris and pundits of Poona who waited on Lord Reay in the autumn of the same year, although both these movements were the outcome of alarm at the unofficial suggestion of the late Sir Maxwell Melville, member of the Executive Council of Bombay, in a private reply to Mr. Malabari's request, that Government might raise the age of consent.

"Before concluding my remarks on the religious aspect of the question I must not omit to draw the attention of the Council to the testimony which we have received from different and important centres of Hindu orthodoxy in India in favour of our contention that the measure is not in any way contrary to Hindu religion. This testimony is contained in communications and writings of such leaders of orthodox Hindu communities as His Highness the Maharaja of Travancore in the southernmost corner of India, His Highness the Maharaja of Jeypore in the centre of Rajputana, and the Maharaja of Vizianagram in the north-east of Madras. The Maharaja of Travancore, speaking of the Bill, says :—

'No Hindu who has at heart the real welfare of his community will expect the Government to shut their eyes to the grossest outrages on humanity. That the Bill, if passed, may be felt as an outrage on orthodox susceptibilities of the Hindus is an imaginary anxiety, with no real ground to stand on. There is no question which the Hindus, the orthodox portion of it, cannot, by a twist or two, connect with their religion'.

"His Highness the Maharaja of Jeypore 'cordially supports' the measure, having himself fixed the age of marriage of girls at fourteen years in his territory after consulting the highest religious authorities at his Court; and His Highness thinks that in the present instance, considering all the circumstances, it was indispensably necessary to fix an age limit. His Highness adds :—

'Instances of rapid or abnormal development like monstrous births may be known, but these are rare, and therefore ought not to stand in the way of fixing the age of consent at twelve years, which is undoubtedly a quite safe and fair limit'.

"The Maharaja of Vizianagram, in a pamphlet just published, approves of the Bill, and states :—

'I will defy one and all, to whatever caste or creed they may belong, to show on religious grounds that such protraction' (of the rite of Garbhadhan) 'is in the slightest degree to be considered a sinful act, particularly since it can be maintained that such procrastination is intended for the well-being, not of a few Hindus simply, but in the interest of all Hindus, not only of the present generation, but of generations yet to come. I will equally defy any one, bearing the physiological condition of human beings in mind, and especially that of Hindus whom the Bill concerns, to assert that this immunity, intended by the Bill for the women of this country, from ignorantly suffering the ceremony to take place at an injuriously early period of their lives, is in the least degree sinful either according to the spirit or the letter of the Shastras. When I say ignorantly, of course I allude to ignorance not only of physiological laws but also of the spirit and letter of the law of their own religion itself'.

"Raja Murli Manohar, a leading orthodox Hindu nobleman of Hyderabad (Dekkhan), advocates the raising of the age of consummation to fourteen years. Pundit Ram Misra Shastri, Professor of Hindu Philosophy in the Government College of Benares, and President of the Literary Society of Benares Pundits, also cordially supports the proposed legislation and quotes authorities on Hindu law in favour of the absolute necessity of postponing the Garbhadhan rite of consummation until the bride shall have attained full maturity and complete physical development. Among the leading citizens who took part at the public meeting which was held in support of the Bill at Lahore, there were representatives from such religious and influential bodies as the Sanatan Dharma Sabha, the Singh Sabha, and the Arya Samaj.

"I may be permitted to mention here that, since almost any custom or practice could be supported by the quotation of single or isolated texts, the general tendency of the great majority of orthodox Pundits all over India is to find out, interpret or explain such texts from the Shastras as may meet the exigency of the occasion or the wishes or convenience of their patrons. One of them told Sir Alfred Croft that he could 'prove from the Shastras that the Bill is right or the opposite.' For an example of this tendency one of this class of learned men, who rejoices in the distinguished title of Mahamohopadhaya and is employed to teach the ancient Hindu literature and philosophy in the leading Government College at Bombay, has (in a letter published in the Vernacular papers of that presidency in support of the Garbhadhan argument) cited one of such texts in the name of Rishi Gautam, to the effect that 'a man distressed' by uncontrollable desire 'may go even to a female of eight years for intercourse, otherwise' (such and such waste which I must omit mentioning) 'is a cause of the degradation of a thousand families'. Here is a textual authority quite in favour of the early 'communion' so highly valued in Bengal; and according to this Gautam, perhaps Pandit Tarkachuramoni has no cause to deplore the custom of premature cohabitation prevailing in certain parts of India as quite irreligious. But, on the contrary, this Council may be asked on that authority to abandon all further legislation and even to annul, as contrary to Hindu religion, the existing provision in the Penal Code which ensures some little protection for female children against outrage by their husbands.

"The Proclamation of 1858 of Her Majesty the Queen has also been appealed to in support of the Garbhadhan argument; and the contention deserves a passing notice, not because there is any truth in it, but because that historical document, which we cannot value too highly, has been always too irreverently or vainly named in support of questionable practices in the name of Hindu religion. I think this constant abuse of it deserves to be thoroughly exposed once for all, and I am glad the hon'ble member in charge of the Bill has endeavoured to do so. That Proclamation is undoubtedly India's first Magna Charta, as it brings, for the first time, sovereign and subjects face to face, so to say, and seeks to attach them together by defining their respective duties towards each other. Beyond this formal commemoration of a great historical epoch, there is scarcely any policy inaugurated by that document which was either new or which had not been repeatedly and clearly enunciated and put into practice for over a century of British rule under the Hon'ble East India Company. The Proclamation must be looked upon as a compendium of that policy on each and all subjects which with it deals, in language so careful and explicit as not to be open to misconception. None of its terms could be held to deprive the Government of the right of extending protection to its subjects against wrong, notwithstanding explicit texts of religious books or immemorial custom, which could be cited in support of that wrong.

"For instance, the Government has exercised the right of giving such protection on many occasions before as well as since the issue of that Proclamation. The inhuman practice of exposing children to death in the Sundarbans or Saugor Islands, in fulfilment of religious vows, was put a stop to about the end of the last century, and section 317 of the Penal Code, passed two years after the Proclamation of 1858, provides punishment for such offences. The cruel lawless practice of Koorch by Brahmins in places like Benares was prohibited by law in 1795. The exemption of Benares Brahmins from capital punishment was abolished in 1817. The practice of Dharna, usually resorted to by Brahmins, was declared to be a crime in 1826. Sati was abolished in 1829, and slavery in 1843. And yet each and all these practices were based on religious belief and long-established custom. The intolerant Hindu and Muhammadan religious law which disabled a convert from their respective religions to any other from inheriting any property was annulled in Bengal in 1832. At the time the Hindus of Bengal appear to have acquiesced in this new law silently; yet strangely enough, when, in 1850, it was extended to the rest of India, Bengal joined Madras in raising a cry of 'religion in danger', and I believe even sent petitions to Parliament against it, though the Muhammadans seemed to be indifferent about it. In 1856, when the Widow Marriage Act was passed through this Council, the same cry of 'religion in danger' was raised, especially in Bengal, and Raghunandan's alleged interpretations of the Shastras played as conspicuous and ignominious a part in that as in the present controversy. I say ignominious, because, according to the hon'ble mover of the Bill, Raghunandan was found to have in his day advocated the cause of widow marriage, and intended that his own widowed daughter should marry again.

"The Penal Code, which was passed in 1860, two years after the Proclamation, treats intercourse by a man with his wife under ten years of age as rape; and since the sign which is claimed as a sufficient test of puberty is known to have sometimes appeared before that age, the legislative violation of the Hindu religion attributed to the proposed law actually took place in 1860, now thirty years ago. Yet we heard nothing of it at the time, nor do the opponents ask even now for the abolition of the law of 1860. In 1866 the Bombay Legislative Council passed an Act to relieve Hindu sons, grandsons and husbands who had married a widow from the liability to pay the debts of their deceased fathers, grandfathers and the widow's former husbands, severally, and to limit such liabilities to assets actually inherited by the defendants. This law had to be passed in the interests of reason and justice, in the teeth of Hindu religious law as interpreted by the Bombay pundits, and which, up to that time, had compelled the British Courts of Justice to helplessly lend themselves to do gross injustice to the parties concerned. According to the religious scriptures the non-payment of ancestral debts to the last farthing by sons, &c., irrespective of assets, results in the indebted deceased finding no place in heaven. And yet that legislation was hailed with great satisfaction, and good Hindus have ever since taken full advantage of that relief, and saved their pockets. In the present instance their religious scruples are outraged beyond endurance because the proposed law will compel them to abstain from intercourse with their child-wives until the latter shall have completed their age of full twelve years!

"I would now briefly examine the contents of the Proclamation itself. The part relied on by the opponents as depriving the Council of the right to pass this Bill runs as follows:—

'We do strictly charge and enjoin all those who may be in authority under Us, that they abstain from all interference with the religious belief or worship of any of Our subjects on pain of Our highest displeasure'.

"To be fully understood this part of the Proclamation must be read along with the one which closely precedes it, where Her Majesty says:—

'Firmly relying Ourselves on the truth of Christianity * * *, We disclaim alike the right and the desire to impose Our convictions of any of Our subjects'.

"Thus, the 'charge' referred to was clearly intended to warn all public servants of the Crown 'to abstain from interference with the religious belief', &c., that is, to abstain from imposing the Christian religion on Her Majesty's subjects. We have had a convincing proof, if one were wanted, of the determination of Government to adhere steadfastly to this sound policy of religious neutrality in a recent summary dismissal of an European officer in the service of Government who was found guilty of offending against that policy.

"People would do well to refer to another part of the same Proclamation which imposes upon the Indian Government the obligation to secure to all Her Majesty's subjects in India the enjoyment of 'equal and impartial protection of the law;' and also where Her Majesty wills 'that generally in framing and administering the law, due regard to be paid to the ancient rights, usages and customs of India'.

"Section 19 of the Indian Councils Act of 1861, which was passed by the British Parliament in that year (three years after the Proclamation), expressly empowers the Governor General to accord his sanction to the introduction of measures 'affecting the religion or religious rights or usages of any class of Her Majesty's subjects'.

"I therefore hold that it is in strict conformity with these injunctions that the present legislation is undertaken by Government as absolutely necessary to give 'equal and impartial protection of the law' to female children against imminent harm to life and limb, to the exclusion of proposals made to it in the interests of social reform in which no such necessity of protection against actual criminal acts of violence was shown. This point was fully explained by Your Excellency at the time of the introduction of the Bill.

"In this connection I may also refer to another argument of the opponents that, by the terms of the Government Resolution of 1886 on Mr. Malabari's notes on Infant Marriage and Enforced Widowhood in India, Government is bound to desist from passing the measure. Besides having no connection with the subject-matter of that Resolution, the policy of the Bill on the table is clearly supported by the general principle laid down in it, namely, 'when caste or custom enjoins a practice which involves a breach of the ordinary criminal law, the State will enforce the law'. Premature intercourse with child-wives is already an offence according to the ordinary criminal law of India, and this Bill is intended only to correct and improve that law to an extent which is found to be absolutely necessary to make it adequately deterrent and effective.

"As to the assertion that the evil against which the proposed amendment of the law is directed does not exist, because a careful search of the reports of the Bengal High Court shows no convictions of husbands for rape against their child-wives under the existing law, my simple reply to this rather bold assertion is that those who hazard it should carefully read the statistics and the results of professional experience and opinions of eminent medical authorities given in the papers published by Government in January last. There they can read 'the ghastly tale' of crime of this nature which is being secretly committed. Let them refer to Dr. Chevers' Manual of Medical Jurisprudence for Bengal, published so early as 1856, where he has described the artificial means employed to fit child-wives for the earliest possible intercourse with their husbands. Dr. Chevers complained that under the then existing law the crime went practically unpunished. In his latest edition of 1870 they will find that, after ten years' experience of the present law, he has given further statistics to prove that the ten years' age limit in the Penal Code still left the crime almost untouched, and earnestly suggested that the age limit should be increased.

"I have not forgotten that the Shobha Bazar memorialists have forwarded a number of statements in the name of medical practitioners of various standings, certifying to the fact that no case of injury to child-wives from intercourse with husbands came before them for treatment. But I need hardly say that such negative evidence when opposed to positive can have no practical weight in deciding the point. It also seems probable that the collectors of this kind of negative evidence have had to reject some which, as proving the positive, did not suit their purpose. It appears that at least one such case has been brought to notice. Dr. Basu (a Bengali gentleman), Surgeon Major and Civil Surgeon at Mymensing, publishes a letter in the Indian Mirror, dated the 9th instant, stating that in response to a question put to him by a Native nobleman and a prominent leader of society in Calcutta, if any such case had ever come to his notice, either professionally or otherwise, he replied that it had been his 'lot to know certainly two instances in which fatal consequences took place'. In one a girl of nine years died of the injuries inflicted, and in the other, under twelve years, 'was suffocated to death by the husband to stop her screaming in agony during the act of cohabitation.' He knew of 'a few other cases in which more or less severe injuries were caused to undeveloped girls by cohabitation', and 'just now there is such a case pending trial' at Mymensing. A report also comes from Moorshedabad of a similar case which occurred there at the beginning of this month and is under reference to the Calcutta High Court, probably in consequence of the recusance of the jury to return a just verdict. I have carefully consulted the Bengal Police Reports of recent years, and they all show that such occurrences are by no means rare in which husbands maim or kill child-wives for refusing to allow them to have intercourse with them.

"In a petition sent to His Excellency the Viceroy in September last, praying that the age of consent be raised to fourteen years, fifty lady doctors practising among Native women in India have given the harrowing details of suffering and cruel deaths among thirteen cases of child-wives which came before them within a few years' practice. The ages of the girls ranged between seven and twelve years—(1) of ten years 'unable to stand'; (2) of nine years 'beyond surgical repair'; (3) of ten years 'bleeding to death'; (4) of nine years 'lower limbs completely paralysed;' (5) of ten years 'condition most pitiable'; (6) of eleven years 'will be crippled for life;' (7) of ten years 'crawled to hospital on hands and knees and had never been able to stand erect since her marriage'. The husband of No. (2) 'had two other wives and spoke very fine English', of No. (3) 'was a man of about forty years of age, weighing not less than eleven stone', and of No. (4) 'demanded her after one day in hospital "for his lawful use."'

"If all this evidence fails to convince the opponents that the evil does exist and requires a more stringent remedy at the hands of the Legislature to secure adequate protection of child-wives against such fiendish husbands, we can only pity them for their moral depravity.

"The remedy which other sections of the Penal Code provide against hurt, grievous hurt and culpable homicide, and which the opponents consider as sufficient to meet the evil, has hitherto egregiously failed. Juries often sympathised with the accused, thinking that he simply exercised his 'marital rights', and that the result of such righteous act was a mere accident. And the Courts failed in several cases to inflict adequate punishment under those sections, obviously owing to the present criminal law having silently furnished a plea of extenuation by the fact that the legal marriage between the female child and the accused husband invested the latter with 'marital rights' against her. Section 310 is just in point as showing that it is necessary for the law to take special notice of particular offences peculiar to localities or communities. The offence of thuggi is there defined as 'habitually associating with others for committing robbery and child-stealing by means of murder.' Now, the Penal Code provided separately for each and all these offences of robbery, child-stealing and murder, and yet the secret assemblies for the habitual commission of each and all these offences at one and the same time had become such a common terror to the country, that a special and stringent provision was found to be absolutely necessary to strengthen the hands of the Courts of Justice to award the highest punishment in extreme cases, irrespective of actual mischief proved or not proved in each case. It does not, however, necessarily follow that a boy by merely belonging to a gang of thugs along with his parents is or will ever be sent to jail for life. He will be (as he in fact is) sent to a reformatory to be trained to peaceful pursuits.

"The opponents also complain of the acts of husbands being described as rape, because, they say, there cannot be such an offence as rape between husband and wife. It is also contrary to English law. I beg to reply that, if the law of rape between husband and wife is unknown in England, neither is child-marriage or ravishment of child-wives known there. By what other name would these objectors call an act by which life and limb is recklessly endangered? Does not such a voluntary act on the part of those who are bound to protect the child according to all known laws, human and divine, deserve to be stigmatised, if possible, by a worse name? In such cases is not the moral turpitude of the husband greater than that of a stranger? Whose duty to protect the girl against the harm is more binding? The moral or rather social harm done by the stranger is certainly great: but the wanton use made by the husband of his social and legal power over the helpless child in breach of a sacred duty to protect her involves, in my estimation, a much higher degree of moral turpitude. The only other description that might be considered as appropriate would be to call it 'doing an act knowing or having reason to believe that it would result in culpable homicide' as defined in the Penal Code, the punishment for which is the same as that prescribed in the Bill on the table. I should have no objection to substitute this definition of the offence if it were proposed as a means of sparing the feelings of the opponents without palliating with the offence.

"Among the discreditable and frivolous objections raised by the agitators against the Bill may be mentioned a few. If girls are kept away from their husbands till the age of twelve years, such of them as may have the first sign of puberty before that age 'must seek some other course to satisfy their desires. Hence the Bill will promote prostitution to a great extent'. I am quoting the evidence of an M. B. of the University, put forward by the Shobha Bazar memorialists against the Bill. Other objectors fear that in the undivided condition of Hindu families the honour of girls in that predicament, unless they are at once introduced into the bed-rooms of their husbands, would not be safe from others in the house. Others fear that sons born of mothers under twelve years would be declared illegitimate, and in case of deaths of husbands before the child-wives reach the age of twelve years, and consequently before such possibility of begetting a son and heir, valuable estates would go out of the family to collaterals and thereby bring on ruin on the families concerned. Such observations deserve to be noted, not because they require any consideration in connection with the business before us, but simply because they indicate partly the real character of the agitation, and perhaps deserve some consideration at the hands of those who, in other parts of India, have taken up the false cry of 'religion in danger'.

"As to the fear of false accusations by enemies and oppression by the police, alluded to in several petitions against the measure, the Select Committee have considered both the points and amended the Bill so as to reserve jurisdiction over cases in which a husband may be accused to the Presidency and District Magistrates only; and if any such Magistrate distrusts the complaint, and before dismissal or issue of process considers it necessary to make enquiry which he is unable to conduct himself, he may entrust the same to a police-officer not lower in rank than an inspector. As such enquiry, if ordered, must necessarily take place before the issue of any process at all against the accused, it can possibly involve or authorize no interference whatever by the police with the accused or his relations. The Legislature cannot possibly go further. If the police and enemies were generally disposed to annoy innocent persons in respect to crimes usually committed within the secret precincts of private houses, they had ample opportunity to do so with respect to the offences of abortion and infanticide, in both of which cases the police can interfere and could be used by the Magistrates to a much greater extent than in the present case. As a matter of fact, under the Bill as amended, the offence of rape by a husband is the only offence of its gravity over the whole range of the Indian Penal Code which will henceforward be completely kept out of all police interference without a regular legal process issued by a Magistrate of the highest standing and experience in the district.

"As to the compulsory examination of the person of the child-wife, the hon'ble member in charge of the Bill has pointed out that such compulsory examination is already quite illegal, and the fear of it so generally entertained is entirely groundless.

"I entertain no such fears as those expressed by the opponents that the new law would defeat its own object by banding the people together to evade the same by perjury and forgery. The past history of successful legislation on similar lines to repress secret crimes perpetrated under the cloak of religion and immemorial customs, such as infanticide and organised crimes like thaggi, all tell a different tale. My countrymen are too law-abiding to actively obstruct or resist the law for any length of time. In this case the result will be that some far-seeing, though few, men will make a beginning by keeping their daughters unmarried till twelve years—as my hon'ble friend Sir Romesh Chunder Mitter himself foresees—rather than run the risk of breaking the law. And past experience tells us that such wise and wholesome examples will be more and more followed by others throughout the country. I confidently expect that it is in this direction that this law will ultimately become a dead letter, or rather obsolete. The proposed law is at present wanted all the same to strengthen the hands of parents and guardians and to act as a deterrent on husbands, until it completely changes our habits and customs in the desired direction.

"The assertion that any body or bodies among the orthodox who are said to be at present already introducing reforms in our marriage customs would, in consequence of the new law, abandon the attempt in disgust, and so retaliate against this legislative interference, is equally groundless. I fail to see any such successful attempt in any part of India during the last half a century—always excepting the Brahmos, and also excepting Rajputana, where it is the direct result of over half a century's strenuous exertions of British Residents and Political Officers, acting under instructions of the Governor General, which have had the effect of strengthening the hands of the Princes and Chiefs, and ultimately have enabled them to take energetic steps to complete the necessary reform. My esteemed friend, the late lamented Rao Sahib Mandlik, of Bombay, who is well known in Calcutta and deservedly respected in the high circles which are the centre of the present agitation, formed, in 1886, an association of pundits to undertake social and religious reform on lines approved by the writings of ancient Hindu sages; but he signally failed at the very first attempt to convert the pundits of Bombay to reason and common sense by consenting to re-admit into caste Hindu gentlemen on return from a visit to Europe after undergoing Prayaschitta or expiation ceremony. A similar attempt was also voluntarily made in Poona in the same year by the pundits of that place, by forming an association with similar objects, the honorary presidency over which the great Sankaracharya, the head of the Dekkhan Brahmins, willingly accepted; but that also failed in a similar way, with this difference, that it promised at first better hope than the Bombay attempt, because the association had gone so far as to fix the minimum marriageable age of girls at ten years, the maximum of men at fifty, and to declare that giving girls in marriage for a consideration was a heinous sin and crime deserving a severe punishment. But the whole thing collapsed at the crucial point of 'belling the cat.' What authority was to enforce these wholesome rules? The pundits publicly confessed that they had neither the power nor the requisite social influence to enforce their decisions on society, but at the same time they steadfastly refused to accept any help of the Legislature.

"I may here mention that, as a matter of fact, the entire agitation in Bombay and in Poona is exclusively due to a feeling of resentment against the party of progress—a feeling which dates from 1884, and is due to a stranger in religion like Mr. Malabari daring to carry on a crusade of exposure of Hindu social crimes and follies. This resentment found specific expression in the Bombay Madhaobag meeting of 1886, at the Poona pundits' deputation to Lord Reay in the same year, and again at the Poona meeting of October and February last, and the second Bombay Madhaobag meeting of the last month. In reality no part of the agitation elsewhere has anything in common with the Garbhadhan theory of Bengal, and my countrymen in Bombay, when they come to know the nefarious practices in support of which that argument is being used threadbare, will have cause to repent for their folly in having blindly accepted that argument from their brethren in Bengal.

"Some facts are worthy of note as partly showing the misguided character of the opposition on the Bombay side. The chairman of the Bombay meeting against the Bill characterised it as frivolous and useless meddling on the part of the Legislature, perhaps because he personally belongs to a caste in which the marriages of girls seldom take place below fifteen or sixteen years and often long after that age. Some of the prominent promoters of this and of the Poona protest meeting are themselves professed social reformers, and have often publicly scouted the idea of divine origin of the Vedas. One of them laughs at religious scruples if such stand in the way of means to secure our political advancement. One pundit, a Mahamahopadhyaya, admitted before friends, on learning from them the true scope of the Bill, that a postponement of Garbhadhan till after the bride became twelve years of age cannot be correctly considered as an interference with the Hindu religion; but, he added, he dared not make the admission before the opponents. The chairman of the Ahmedabad protest meeting is himself the head of a most respectable and industrious caste in Gujarat, and has successfully obtained from Government a legislative enactment and, under it, has introduced a set of wholesome rules respecting marriage customs and usages into his own caste.

"At almost every Hindu centre where opposition meetings have been held there were others convened in support of the measure. These latter are naturally less noisy, less numerous and numerically smaller, because in all countries the party of progress is always numerically smaller of the two, and must consist of the thoughtful few. Such is notably the case in India. They, however, include among themselves a very large majority of men who are themselves orthodox Hindus and not out of their caste, as is incorrectly represented by the opponents here.

"But the question arises that, in the midst of all this din, where is the voice of the Indian women for whose personal protection the Legislature is taking all this trouble? My reply is that, if the denizens of the zenana could speak, we should see the right side of the shield. Some of their sisters, however, who are not cooped up like them, have spoken out. In December last a petition from the women of India, bearing 1,600 signatures, was sent to Her Majesty the Queen-Empress, praying for the increase of the age of consent to fourteen years. I hold an original letter in my hand to a friend from the good English lady who laboured on behalf of her Indian sisters to get up this petition. She says that she had the petition translated into Gujarathi and Marathi; that she had twelve intelligent Native ladies on the committee who quite understood what they were about; and that she has had numerous intelligent letters from Native ladies all over India in favour of the petition. I trouble the Council publicly with these facts, because some of the opposition organs here have cast unworthy doubts on them as such. Fifty lady doctors also sent (in September last) a petition to His Excellency the Viceroy to the same effect, which I have already noticed a little while ago. Petitions from Native ladies' associations and special meetings have been received by the Council from Bombay, Poona, Ahmedabad and other places. Several Native ladies have written in the public Press in cordial approval of the Bill. I know many of the Bombay and Poona ladies who have signed the petition. Almost all of them belong to orthodox families. I hold in my hand a list of the names and professions of the husbands of the Ahmedabad lady petitioners. Three-fourths of them are high class Brahmins, and the rest belong to respectable and influential castes, all thoroughly orthodox.

"Certain alterations in the Bill have been suggested—some of them by both sides to the controversy; and I will notice them now. The first is that, instead of an age-limit, the usual test of puberty recognized by the Hindus may be substituted. Compliance with this suggestion was not possible for several very cogent reasons. The test is in many cases entirely unreliable, and admits of no satisfactory proof without a personal examination of the girl-wife, enforcement of which is quite out of the question. For obvious reasons the law ought not to throw the burden of proof of such an event of sexual delicacy on the defendant. And the usual evidence offered as to the performance of certain ceremonies is perfectly unreliable as coming from people notoriously addicted to the vice of immature intercourse. The age is the only practical test, and admits of a sufficient degree of proof wherever a system of registration of births and deaths is accurately kept—a system which is now being gradually introduced all over India, beginning with all municipal cities and towns.

"The suggestion to remove the offence from the category of rape I have already noticed a little while ago. Some have asked that the offence of husbands should be divided into degrees according to the gravity of results, and proportionate punishments should be provided for each. Those who make this suggestion lose sight of the central principle of the old as well as the proposed law, namely, female children up to a certain age have to be completely protected from all sexual touch of man, be he stranger or husband, such connection between the sexes being considered harmful to the female in the highest degree, without reference to the social position towards her of the doer of that harm. They also forget the main principle which underlies the mechanism of the Penal Code as regards the division and grouping of offences and the punishments provided for each. These latter prescribe the highest punitive measures for the worst degree of culpability of the accused in the commission of each offence. For example, theft in a dwelling-house or by a servant is punishable with seven years' rigorous imprisonment, and yet our everyday experience is that a common house-servant is sent to jail for a few weeks only for trivial theft of his master's property; and habitual thieves, after numerous failures to reclaim them, are awarded the highest term of imprisonment. In the same way, a boy committing simple rape on his child-wife with no immediate injurious results, in consequence of being put into a room with his child-wife by his parents or elders, will probably be imprisoned for a very short term. There was exactly such a case tried by the Deputy Commissioner of Sambalpur in the Central Provinces in which a boy, who was so aided and abetted by his own mother against his child-wife under ten years, was sentenced to six months' imprisonment under the present section of the Penal Code, though the highest punishment provided is transportation for life.

"It is further suggested that this opportunity should be taken to provide punishment of strangers for intercourse with minor girls up to sixteen years. This involves a confusion of two widely different principles, namely, protection of life and limb on the one hand, and securing moral or social purity of minor girls on the other. If a case of absolute necessity of the latter kind of legislation for India could be made out as was done in England in 1885, the question might be taken up and dealt with on its own merits. This is not a suitable occasion for it.

"It is feared by some that immature girl-wives above twelve will remain unprotected under the proposed law—a state of things which will have the effect of husbands feeling themselves at liberty to consummate marriage with such girls of more than twelve years, even before the arrival of puberty as understood by the Hindus. Such would-be transgressions of the law of religion and nature must, for the present at least, be dealt with by the Hindu religion's 'anathema' against the act of which we have heard so much, or to their own sense of duty towards their helpless girl-wives, until it is clearly proved from experience that such girls also require protection of the law.

"A due consideration of the amount of the aiding and abetting which goes on unchecked in certain parts of India renders it impossible to accept another suggestion, namely, the child-wife or her parents or guardians alone should be declared to be competent to make complaints before Magistrates, who, in the absence of such complaints, should be prohibited from commencing proceedings. Such a provision would amount to insisting on the voluntary complaint of an accomplice, or of the injured child who occupies the position of a hostage in the complete power and subjection of the accused and his relatives.

"Some Anglo-Indian organs of Calcutta allege that this measure has been suddenly sprung upon the Native public, and hence the present agitation. I can show that the facts are quite the reverse. So early as 1856 Dr. Chevers drew attention to the question, and showed that the then law was insufficient to protect child-wives. He reverted to the question in his later edition of 1870, and recommended increase of the age of consent by an amendment of the Penal Code. A few years ago Mr. Dayaram Gidumal, of the Bombay Statutory Civil Service, brought the question more prominently before the public, exposed the defects in the present law, and made the same recommendation. Mr. Malabari circulated Mr. Dayaram's suggestion among the leaders of Native society in all parts of India, and collected a body of opinions in favour of the proposal, almost the only dissentient being a gentleman from Bengal. Mr. Malabari also elicited the private opinion of the late Sir Maxwell Melville in favour of a legal remedy, and published the fact. This led to the public meeting held in Bombay in 1886 to oppose any legislation whatever affecting reform of Hindu marriage customs. The pundits of Poona also took up the matter about the same time and waited on Lord Reay to protest against the proposal. The Social Reform Conference held in Bombay in December, 1889, voted a memorial to Government to raise the age of consent, and the same was forwarded in August last. This memorial, together with the rumour that the Phulmoni case was likely to lead to a revival of the proposal, were among the immediate causes of public meetings which were held in Madras, Satara and Poona against the same. All that agitation for and against the proposed law occurred before the actual introduction of this Bill, and it proves conclusively that the Native public mind was quite prepared to see the Bill so introduced. The unfounded allegation that the measure was sprung upon the Native public exposes the ignorance of those who make it as to what is passing among the Native society around them.

"If opposition meetings have been held and protests have been sent to Government, history has only repeated itself once more, with this difference, that in the present instance all the latest civilized appliances, such as railways and telegraphs, and the annual gatherings between people of different provinces, have been utilized to give the agitation a somewhat improved semblance with the European type of such agitations. If in 1856 the widow marriage law was going to make us irreligious, and induce Hindu wives to murder their husbands in order that they might marry others according to their fancies, this Bill is going to destroy Hindu religion altogether and compel Hindu girls under twelve years of age to take to bad courses.

"I wish to explain my own views regarding the particular age-limit which the Bill fixes at twelve years. The history of this question, which I have tried to sketch briefly, shows the halting character of the proceedings of the Law Commissioners who drafted the Penal Code; and I fear that the facts disclosed in the reports of the recent inquiry and in other papers placed before us make it clear to me that the proposed limit is not entirely free from a similar fault. The Calcutta Public Health Society and other authorities consulted almost unanimously recommend that the age should be increased to fourteen or at least thirteen years. The petition from 1,600 women of India sent to Her Majesty the Queen-Empress in December last, as well as the fifty lady-doctors' petition to His Excellency the Viceroy, pray that the age may be increased to fourteen years. I very greatly regret that the age of fourteen, or at least thirteen years, was not inserted in the Bill as introduced. I did not fail to discuss this point in the Select Committee, but after further consideration it appeared to me that to alter and increase the age-limit at a subsequent stage of the discussion, after the most unseasonable, vexatious and mischievous agitation which has been carried on against the Bill as it stands, might bear an appearance of resentment, however groundless, and that it was wiser and more dignified to err on the side of moderation to a fault, than to raise the age-limit now at the second stage of the discussion. I, therefore, preferred to yield to the general sense of the Select Committee and did not press my suggestion further.

"I have to perform one more duty before I relieve the Council from hearing any more from me on this most painful subject. About a fortnight ago I received a telegram from Mr. Mallappa Warad, the chairman of the meeting held at Sholapur in the Bombay Presidency, to protest against the Bill. In that telegram I am asked to represent the views of that meeting in this Council. I do not know what my countrymen who took part at that meeting expect me to do on their behalf beyond giving due consideration to their representation along with those received from other quarters. This was done by myself and by hon'ble members of the Select Committee. If they expect me to advocate their views simply because I happen to be a non-official Native member of this Council from Bombay, I am sorry to be unable to comply with their wishes, because I hold it to be my bounden duty to represent here only such views as may commend themselves to me as likely to serve the best interests of my country.

"With these observations, for the length of which I must apologize, I beg to support the Motion that the Bill as amended by the Select Committee be taken into consideration".

The Hon'ble MR. HUTCHINS said:—

"After the ample discussion which this Bill has undergone both in and out of Council, and especially in the lucid and powerful speech of the Hon'ble Mr. Evans to which we have just listened, I am much tempted to abstain from doing more than record a silent vote in its favour, more especially as it is quite impossible to enter into any argumentation about it without speaking very plainly regarding matters which it is more decorous to leave to be understood. There are, however, some points connected with it upon which Your Excellency, and perhaps the public also, will expect the Member in charge of the Home Department to express his opinion, and perhaps to offer some explanation. Besides, I think it due to my hon'ble and learned friend who has special charge of the Bill, and has now moved that it be taken into consideration, to make it clear that he is not alone responsible, but that, in common with my other colleagues, I have gone along with him throughout. And I wish, if possible, to convince the opponents of the measure that I myself have given candid and, as far as possible, sympathetic attention to all the arguments which they have advanced. I cannot hope to do this unless I deal with the matter in some detail, but I will try to be as little tedious as possible, and for the comfort of hon'ble members I may say at once that I do not propose to refer to the texts of the Shastras except in a very general manner.

"The evil at which the Bill is directed was brought prominently to our notice by the case of Hari Maiti. On a perusal of the record in that case I had no doubt, and after full consideration of all that has been written and said on the other side I still have no doubt, that it is the bounden duty of the Legislature to interpose and to do what it can with propriety to put a stop to premature cohabitation. I do not wish to go into the details of that case. They are well known to every one here. There is, however, one material point which I must recall to the recollection of hon'ble members, and that is, that the post mortem examination of the girl Phulmoni showed either that the private parts had undergone artificial enlargement with a view to early consummation, or that she had been subjected to repeated acts of intercourse. It was not possible to say which of the two alternatives was correct: possibly both things had happened, but certainly one or the other; and it is hardly surprising that it should be so, when we have before us Sir Romesh Chunder Mitter's plain statement as to what is the general practice in Bengal, or at all events in this part of Bengal where Calcutta is situated. He says that girls of high caste are married between nine and eleven, and those of low castes still earlier; that they at once go to their husbands' houses for about a week, and pay similar occasional visits later on; that, whenever they do so, they sleep with their husbands. This, he adds significantly, is all that comes under the observation of the other members of the family. He refuses to admit that what he persistently calls the vice of premature intercourse exists, and so I suppose he would have us believe that nothing of that kind takes place in the retirement of the husband's chamber. I regret that I cannot accept that suggestion. It may possibly be true in some cases, and I only hope they are many; but it is opposed to all probability, and I may say to common sense. I agree rather with the following significant passage in the long extract which my hon'ble friend has quoted in his minute from Mr. J. N. Mukerji, whom most erroneously he seems to regard as an opponent of the Bill like himself:—'The protection of young girls from cruel treatment is as much a necessity as the protection of young men from a temptation of the most trying description'. It seems to me, my Lord, and I say it advisedly, that every person, man or woman, who does anything to encourage or promote the shutting up of a child-wife in such circumstances with an adult husband is an accessory before the fact to her violation. I think such persons are legally liable for abetment, and I hope that, after the Bill becomes law, this may be brought home to them, if necessary, by the award of exemplary punishment.

"I have referred to two alternatives as presented to us by the case of Hari Maiti. Whichever we adopt, we have clearly presented to us an abominable state of things which cries loudly for a remedy; and the only remedy open to us sitting here is to convert this vice into a crime—to make punishable by law, within such limits as may appear proper, this practice which my hon'ble friend himself has described as pernicious, and which all men must confess to be repugnant to nature, to common morality, to humanity itself. What then are the proper limits? The Bill before us proposes the age of twelve. The Shastras themselves unanimously condemn cohabitation before twelve except in those few cases where the girl attains what they call puberty at an earlier age. It is on those exceptional instances that all the opposition to this measure has been based. Now, I am not prepared to deny that there may not possibly, in one or two of these exceptional cases, be some conscientious scruple about obeying the proposed law; and the question arises, are we justified in ignoring this microscopic minority in the interests of an overwhelming majority? On this point Mr. Evans has quoted some weighty words of Sir Barnes Peacock, but my Hindu friends may like to know how such difficulties are teated in England. They will hardly deny that the English law is reasonably tolerant of all religious opinions, and at all events of the peculiar prejudices held by any sect of Christians. The Queen v. Downes is a case in which the prisoner in breach of a Statute neglected to call in medical aid for his sick child, and summoned instead the elders of his Church to pray over the child, because he really and sincerely believed that it was impious to do more than leave the issue of its life or death to the arbitrament of the Almighty. The prisoner was nevertheless convicted of manslaughter. And on the same principle the British Legislature has not hesitated to make vaccination compulsory notwithstanding the fact that certain persons have somewhat similar scruples upon that subject.

"In regard to these exceptional instances, after what has been said already by the hon'ble and learned mover and other hon'ble members, I wish only to make two further observations. The first is that there must always be a doubt whether the first flow indicates real puberty. There are cases in which menstruation has occurred even in infancy, and in many instances there has been a considerable interval between its first appearance and its regular establishment. But, even assuming that the first flow is perfectly natural, it is no proof of adequate development or maturity, and it is in the highest degree unlikely that such development can be attained before the age of twelve. I therefore think twelve the very lowest age at which we can place the limit of absolute protection. To that extent at the least we are bound positively, and without any qualification whatever, to interdict the exercise of marital rights.

"The remarks which I have just made have some bearing on another part of the case before us, namely, the suggestion that puberty should be adopted as the criterion rather than a limit of age. To a certain extent I sympathize with this view. Real and natural puberty would undoubtedly be a far better physiological test than any hard-and-fast age. There are, however, insuperable objections to the magistracy investigating delicate questions of this description, and I am sure no one would press these objections more strongly than those who oppose the present Bill. The condition too is one which is easily simulated, and which can be, and is, accelerated by the very evil which we are seeking to stop or by other unnatural practices. I do not forget that among Hindus the attainment of puberty is usually attended with certain ceremonies and becomes a matter almost of public notoriety, but even this does not obviate the objections which I have just stated. Besides, it must be remembered that we are not legislating for Hindus alone: the Penal Code has universal application.

"It has been said that the exact age of a girl is rarely known, and there is doubtless some truth in this objection. But it is one which will gradually disappear as education spreads and the necessity for maintaining some proof of age for other purposes becomes impressed on the people at large. This difficulty has not deterred the Legislature from laying down limits of age in regard to other matters, even in the criminal law, and in practice the Courts manage to arrive at fairly sound conclusions about age. The Rajputs of Jeypore are practical men, and they have not hesitated to prescribe an age for marriage. Of course the benefit of a real doubt is always given to an accused person, but in this matter I would most earnestly advise that husbands should give the full benefit of any uncertainty that may exist to their tender consorts. This will go far to relieve both from all risk.

"But I understand that my hon'ble friend Sir Romesh Chunder Mitter now relies chiefly on the objection that the Bill will be useless. A conviction, he says, is impossible where no serious injury has resulted, while where such injury has been inflicted the case can be adequately met under the existing law. I venture to deny both propositions. As to the first, it is conceivable that even where no injury has resulted the girl may tell the truth though she has not been much hurt; nay that she may even herself complain. Many a girl would resent outrage more than the severest pain. The moral offence is just as great even when it causes no immediate mischief. In one of the numerous eloquent pamphlets which have been poured in upon us the writer conjured up a striking picture of what he called the spectre of a deserted wife. I must say that this struck me as a very cowardly suggestion. Because the wife has every inducement to suffer in silence, therefore, forsooth, we should do nothing to protect her! Fortunately the Legislature has not allowed this view to prevail in regard to other offences against a wife.

"It may be granted that without the wife's evidence and in the face of the husband's denial it would be difficult to establish actual consummation, but we must consider the case of abettors as well as principals, and I may remind the Council that the Penal Code very properly provides for the punishment of an abettor although the offence abetted cannot be proved; nay, even when it is quite certain that such offence has not been committed. If my information is correct there will be plenty of witnesses able to establish abetment if they choose to come forward, and it is unlikely that all can be made to keep silence.

"As to my hon'ble friend's second proposition, he relies on the authority of Hari Maiti's case, and on an unreported decision which two other learned Judges, still in the High Court, were good enough to communicate to the Select Committee. Now, Hari Maiti was not convicted either of culpable homicide or of voluntarily causing grevious hurt, though his ill-treatment unquestionably brought about his wife's death. That case, therefore, tells rather against my hon'ble friend's contention. Hari Maiti was merely convicted of a rash and negligent act, and he escaped with only a year's imprisonment. I cannot but think that if it was true, as the evidence seemed to indicate, that he had repeatedly had connection with his wife before that unfortunate night, no Judge would have convicted him even on the minor count of rashness. The jury did convict him, but a jury is not bound to give reasons which will stand hostile examination. In the other case, the accused, Kali Keora, adopted a line of defence which altogether excluded any plea that there had been such preparation of the girl, or such previous acts of intercourse without serious consequences, as would preclude the imputation of either legal malice or culpable negligence. The learned Judges seem to have advisedly abstained from raising this question. It is true that they imputed to the prisoner an intention to cause hurt, or rather such knowledge that hurt would probably result as is equivalent in law to an intention to cause it; but we must have regard to all the facts from which they drew this inference. Not only had the girl shown no signs of puberty whatever, but she was at most only very little above ten. In fact, the Court had some doubt whether she was not really below ten, though they gave the prisoner the benefit of it. It does not at all follow that they would have made the same assumption if the girl had been nearly twelve instead of only just ten. The very able and careful charge of Mr. Justice Wilson in Hari Maiti's case shows how uncertain the law is in such cases and on what delicate questions the guilt or innocence of the husband may turn. I entirely agree with what Sir Andrew Scoble said upon this point when he introduced the Bill. He put it to the Council whether a law which interposed all these difficulties, and which allows a full grown man to violate with precaution a child of twelve, could be considered sufficient, except from the ruffian's point of view. I only wish I could adopt the opinion that the present law does afford adequate protection even against grievous hurt, for the point in which the Bill now before us is defective seems to me to be this, that it leaves girls between twelve and puberty in the much inferior security which the present law and the doubtful protection of the Hindu Shastras now afford to those above ten. The Council will remember that Sir Andrew Scoble has just mentioned a case from Hooghly in which the accused husband was fully discharged and the death of the child-wife described as an unfortunate accident which had happened during his exercise of his ordinary marital rights. In that case therefore the view taken by the Courts was exactly the opposite of that which my hon'ble friend has put forward.

"My Lord, a wish has been very generally expressed that we would refrain from characterizing as rape the offence now under consideration. I need hardly say that this suggestion received the earnest attention of the Select Committee. My hon'ble friend Sir Romesh Chunder relies on the opinion of Lord Macaulay and his colleagues who framed the first draft of the Indian Penal Code. That opinion, however, was overruled on further consideration, and for thirty years the offence has been known as rape. Why should we now change its designation merely because we are advancing the age of consent by two years? If the gravity of the act is considered, it is an offence which in my opinion deserves to be stigmatized by the most shameful name we can discover. And what after all is rape? It is illegal sexual intercourse—intercourse which is not merely illicit but contrary to law and punishable as an offence—intercourse to which the female does not consent in fact, or by reason of immaturity does not give such consent as the law can recognize. I venture to think that the final revisers of our Penal Code were not wrong after all. It is true that a husband has certain marital rights, but here we expressly interdict his exercise of them. They are in abeyance, and his wife's person is declared sacred and inviolable until she attains a certain age.

"Then again exception has been taken to the punishment, and some have even gone so far as to contend that such indulgences should be punishable with fine only—in fact, that they should be a rich man's luxury. The last suggestion is of course out of the question. For the husband, if he alone had to be considered, I should not have greatly objected to a maximum term of imprisonment of seven years, but with the majority of the Select Committee I preferred, on the whole, to leave the present law untouched in this respect, and I still adhere to that opinion. If one of the worst features of rape when committed by a stranger is wanting in the case of a husband, there is on the other hand this aggravation, that the husband himself is the natural protector of his victim, and takes a most cowardly advantage of her dependence upon him. It is, however, a matter of very little moment what the maximum punishment may be, for the Courts have full discretion up to that limit. I understand it to be the general wish that the offence should continue to be cognizable only by a Court of Session; we may trust our Sessions Judges to pass proper sentences: if in any case they should fail to do so, the High Courts have full power of revision. We need be under no apprehension that a youthful husband who, under the encouragement of his elders, succumbs to strong temptation, will be too severely dealt with; but how those elders who encourage him may be treated is a very different matter. The punishment for abetment when it cannot be shown that the offence abetted has been committed is only one-fourth of that assigned for the principal offence. It is necessary therefore that the maximum punishment for rape by a husband should be four times what may be deemed an adequate sentence for a bad case of abetment. I may perhaps mention one reason why the maximum punishment should remain high from the point of view of the opponents of the Bill. Their fear is that it will lead to false complaints. Section 211 of the Penal Code provides a specially heavy sentence for false charges of an offence punishable, as rape is, with transportation or a long term of imprisonment; and it is usual and reasonable in meting out punishment for a false charge to have regard to the punishment which is provided for the offence charged, and of which the person accused has been wrongfully put in peril.

"Strong objections have been raised to the police and subordinate magistracy being permitted to intermeddle between husband and wife. I think, speaking generally, that the Magistrates are well worthy of our confidence, and I am not sure that the police have not been brought in here to some extent as a sort of stalking horse: it is the fashion in Bengal to run down the police, and I think the opponents of the Bill have at least made the most of a prevalent prejudice. It is not clear why the action of the police should be more dangerous or less salutary in these cases than in the case of other offences. I am ready, however, to believe that there may be some ground for the objection, and out of deference to the general wish the Select Committee has recommended the utmost possible concession upon this point. Only District Magistrates are to be allowed to take cognizance of such offences, and when they find it necessary to depute a policeman for a local investigation they are forbidden to employ one below the rank of an inspector. I have only been able to agree to these clauses on the assumption that no such cases are likely to occur in provinces where the districts are large, and that even in Bengal they will be few and far between. It is obvious that such provisions must be merely experimental and cannot possibly be maintained if the cases should prove more numerous than is expected. I trust advantage will be taken by the people themselves of the period which must necessarily elapse before these clauses come under reconsideration to introduce such reforms as will make any extension of the jurisdiction wholly unnecessary.

"The hon'ble and learned mover has clearly shown that Magistrates have full power to take up in camerâ complaints such as we are considering, and that they have not power to compel a woman to submit her person to examination against her will. I need say no more on those points. I think too that the impossibility of excluding complaints by others than the child-wife herself, or her guardian, has been sufficiently expounded by previous speakers. The child-wife herself would be exposed to intimidation or further brutal treatment in order to prevent her from complaining or to induce her to compound if the offence were compoundable, as it must be if a complaint were made essential. And, as for her guardian, it is he who would generally be responsible for having put her into her husband's power; what chance would there be of his making a complaint when he would incur some risk of being prosecuted as an abettor? It is on this risk, my Lord, that I chiefly rely to prevent these children being sent to their husbands at all. It will certainly strengthen the hands of a father who desires to protect his daughter that he will be able to say that he cannot let her go without incurring grave peril to himself; and a similar process of reasoning may perhaps operate on one who would not otherwise care to go against custom, and may compel him to fulfil what I cannot but regard as his bounden duty. Although I pass them briefly over, these matters of procedure I must not omit to mention, that the working of the amended law will be watched both by the Home Department and by all Local Governments with the utmost care and vigilance. The present restriction of jurisdiction to District Magistrates and inspectors will indeed compel us to do this, and may be accepted as a sufficient guarantee that we regard the matter as of the utmost importance.

"One more question remains, and that perhaps is the most serious of all. It is said that our Bill does not go far enough, that even if we cannot give protection up to puberty we might at least prohibit early marriages. The Legislature certainly has power to do this, but it would involve an interference with religion, and with social customs not necessarily harmful, which I personally—and I believe that I am also expressing the sentiments of all my hon'ble colleagues—would be most reluctant to undertake. In our opinion, if I may speak for them as well as for myself, the people themselves should be left to weigh the possible advantages of early marriage against the obvious disadvantages; and if, in their judgment, the advantages preponderate, we do not at present see any safe or sufficient reason for prohibiting the constitution of the marital relation at any age which they may prefer. But it is a very different thing when we come to the exercise of marital rights. The conjugal relation in itself does a girl no harm, or at all events no such unmixed and obvious harm that the Legislature need take account of it; but it is our bounden duty to protect the weak against brutal outrage by the strong, even if all the Shastras unanimously enjoined such outrage and all the various castes in the country practised it. In this Bill, however, I am convinced that we carry the great bulk of the people with us, and I am also satisfied that it does not really affect anything which is essential in the Hindu religion. Were we to prohibit early marriage we should neither have the people with us, nor could we assert that we did not contravene their religion. Indeed, I do not even now understand how my hon'ble friend and others who hold similar views can reconcile their two positions. On the one hand, they insist that we should scrupulously respect certain texts in favour of a ceremony which, in its material part at all events, is observed only in Bengal, and even there is neglected by the very highest caste and repudiated by at least a large number of the most respectable and intelligent families. On the other, they invite us to set aside the Shastras in a much more vital matter, by ordering that no Hindu father shall obey a clear injunction which is very generally regarded as binding.

"My Lord, I consider that it is not necessary, in the paramount interests of morality or humanity, that we should accept this invitation, and therefore I think that we have no right to do what we are invited to do. But, if our hands are to some extent tied, those of my hon'ble friend and other leaders of the people are free to penetrate to what they rightly regard as the root of the mischief. I would most earnestly back up Sir Andrew Scoble's appeal to my hon'ble friend and other influential Bengalis. Defective as they may think this Bill, and defective as in truth it is when judged by the standard which we would willingly adopt, in their hands it may be made a mighty instrument of reformation. It has already succeeded in directing public attention to this crying scandal. Instead of prophesying that it will be evaded, and by their prophecies encouraging that very determination to resist which they say they deplore, and doubtless many of them do sincerely deplore, let them seize this occasion to stir up their compatriots to eradicate the cause of all the evil. The Rajputs of Jeypore and other Rajputana States have shown them one way in which this may be done, for without sacrificing one jot or tittle of their religion they have laid down for their own guidance satisfactory canons regulating the age of marriage. Would that the leading men of Bengal could be persuaded to do the same! Or, if that is too much to ask at present, would that they would at least determine to do their utmost to put a stop to girls joining their husbands, not only until they are twelve, but until they are fully mature! Either reform would go far to make this Bill obsolete, and a dead-letter in the sense in which I should wish to see it a dead-letter. Either reform would go far to remove from this province, which claims to be the most cultured and most enlightened in India, the shameful reproach in which recent revelations have involved it in the eyes of all the civilized world".

The Hon'ble SIR GEORGE CHESNEY said:—

"The subject of debate has been already so ably and exhaustively discussed that there really remains little to be said, especially upon the technical points which have been argued; but I desire to offer a very few remarks upon one aspect of the case which appears worthy of consideration.

"In the first place, I think one point must have occurred to every one who has followed the course of the discussions whether within this Council or in the Press, and that is the remarkable absence of unanimity of opinion among those concerned as to the effect of the measure which the Council is now asked to pass. The claim set up by the opponents of the measure is that it will constitute an interference with the religious practices of a very large and important section of the community. Now, this is not the first instance in history of a protest having been raised against what may be termed a religious persecution. But the protest in this case differs in character from any similar demonstration in this particular respect—of the want of unanimity attaching to it. In all the numerous instances of religious persecutions which have occurred in the past, whether in the case of forcible conversion of peoples and nations to Islam or forcible interference by one sect of Christians with the religious practices or beliefs of other sects of Christians, there never has been any question as to the fact that injury to the religion of the oppressed would be caused by the interference in each particular case. The fact that such persecution was suffered by the one class and inflicted by the other was never admitted as open to doubt either by the sufferers or persecutors; the fact was admitted; the plea raised by the dominant party was either that the act of oppression was done for their own pleasure, or that they did it for the good of those who were affected. Those have been the conditions common to all cases of so-called religious persecution. There has never been any want of unanimity among those affected as to what the consequences would be of the act against which they protested. Now, I need hardly observe that this particular criterion is altogether wanting in the present instance, and I think where the body of testimony is so strong among a numerous part, although they may not be the majority, of those affected, that the measure in question will not constitute any interference with religious customs; from this point of view the case of the opponents of the measure must be said to break down. But, in fact, I think after the debate which has taken place here it could no longer be seriously pressed. That unanimity of opinion as to the tendency and effect of the measure, which is, I submit, a primary condition for establishing the case against it, is here alogether absent.

"Next, I think we may assume that the admission is certainly established, that the practice which it is now contemplated to put a stop to is often attended with cruelty. The argument of the apologists for leaving the law as it is is that the cruelty is justified on necessary religious grounds. That is a plea which is not now raised for the first time; in fact, it may be said that in almost all cases of religious persecution cruelty was admitted on the part of the persecutors, but it was claimed to be justified on religious grounds. My Hindu friends within or without this Council, who are ranked among the opponents of the measure now about to be passed, have therefore at any rate this apology, that if they go wrong they do so in good company, namely, in the company of all majorities in past ages. For undoubtedly until recent times, throughout the history of man, cruelty on behalf of religion was regarded as a virtue. The only mistake of our friends is in being about three hundred years too late. It is but a short time ago in the history of the world that the Inquisition was set up on the shores of India, and while its horrors were being perpetrated on the Western Coast, it would no doubt have been consistent to claim that acts of religious cruelty should continue to be perpetrated on the east of the Peninsula. But cruelty in the name of religion is no longer tolerated in any civilised community, and in the present day the defenders of this custom stand at the bar of public opinion, and have the voice of all civilised humanity against them. The truth is that Hinduism, or this particular phase of Hinduism which claims that certain rites should be practised as a necessary portion of the Hindu religion, is now on its trial. The real question to be answered is whether this form of Hinduism is compatible with civilisation. I have myself no sort of doubt as to what the practical answer will be as given by the Hindus themselves. The arguments which have been brought forward in support of the practice we are now about to abolish are precisely of the same kind which might be and were advanced in favour of the practice of sati. When we are told, as we have been told in various petitions laid before the Government and before this Council, that a fatal blow will be struck at the Hindu religion if this measure be carried out, I would reply that the records of the past indicate clearly that Hinduism will be unaffected by the blow; for that it is just the remarkable flexibility of Hinduism, its power of adaptation to the changing circumstances of succeeding ages, which is the most powerful factor of its stability and endurance, and that Hinduism will survive unharmed the abolition of this practice, as it has survived and flourished notwithstanding the numerous changes which the practical religion of Hindus has undergone from generation to generation.

"And, as this is the last occasion I shall have of speaking in this Council, I would venture to make the prediction that the agitation which has taken place against the Bill now before us will come to an end on the passing of the measure. History shows that while there are certain classes of political movements as to which the agitation against change may be continued long after the change comes into effect, there are others again as to which, although the opposition may have been active while there was a chance of retarding the measure, it ceases as soon as the measure is carried out. I venture to predict that this particular case will be found to belong to the latter class, and that in a very short time the entire Hindu community will look back with surprise and regret at the opposition it received; that they will recognise the wisdom and justice which enforce the change, and also the advantage to themselves and to their reputation among the nations which will result from bringing their practical conduct into harmony with the dictates of humanity".

His Honour THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR said:—

"My chief reason for thinking it necessary to address Your Excellency's Council to-day at so late an hour, and towards the close of so long a discussion, is that the Bill now before us specially concerns the Province of Bengal more than any other part of India, and that my silence on this occasion might be construed as an indication of my disapproval of the Bill. I wish to declare as distinctly as possible that I heartily approve the principle embodied in the Bill, and I believe that when the Bill has become law, and the agitation which now obscures men's minds has passed away, it will be recognised that the tendency of this measure makes for righteousness and for the physical and moral improvement of the people. I heartily share the hope which has been generally expressed that the law will seldom or never have to be put in force, but that what has been called its educative effect will stimulate the growth of a public opinion in favour of a more mature age for marriage than is now the custom in this part of India.

"It may be, however, that cases will be brought into the Courts, and it cannot be denied that there is a very widespread and genuine anxiety among the people, (1) lest an easy ear should be lent to malicious accusations, (2) lest the police should be employed in investigating these complaints, and should violate the secrecy of family life in so doing. For this reason, I hail the alteration which has been made in the Select Committee, by which only District Magistrates are empowered to take up complaints of this kind, and, if they employ police at all to investigate them, only inspectors of police can be so employed. District Magistrates are generally officers of high standing and experience, and inspectors of police are well paid and respectable officials who have a valuable position at stake, and are not likely to misbehave themselves. The protection thus afforded is a considerable one, and further than this the Legislature has not thought it right to go. But still I notice that the public anxiety is not altogether allayed, and it is argued that sometimes through the exigencies of the public service very junior Civilians may have to be appointed for short periods to be Magistrates of districts, and that even the highest class of inspectors are not always trustworthy. I was glad to hear what my hon'ble friend Mr. Hutchins has just said as to the somewhat unreasonable fashion now prevalent of running down the police. I agree with him in thinking that there is not sufficient ground for the wave of hostile feeling to the police which is passing over the country; and I am by no means prepared to admit that they deserve all the evil said of them. Still the distrust does exist, and the practical administrator has to reckon with it. Now, no law can provide against exceptional cases of every kind, and it may often be the duty of the Executive Government to make arrangements to meet the difficulties which may arise out of such cases. In the present instance, it appears to me that the Bengal Government may with propriety make known to the District Officers its wishes on two points. One of these is that no action should be taken by any Magistrate except on really trustworthy information brought by persons who may reasonably be held to have knowledge of the fact they assert to have occurred: a prosecution should not be instituted on an information laid by any man out of the street who may be a private enemy or a retailer of gossip. The other point is that when the Magistrate of the district does decide to allow a prosecution to be instituted under this new section, it will be advisable for him to act under the power given by section 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Under that section, if any Magistrate . . . . . sees reason to distrust the truth of a complaint, he may, when the complainant has been examined, postpone the issue of a process for compelling the attendance of the person complained against, and either enquire into the case himself or direct a previous local investigation to be made by any officer subordinate to himself for the purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsehood of the complaint.

"In such circumstances I should advise him to entrust the investigation of the case preliminary to the issue of the process not to any police-officer, however high in rank, but to one of the Deputy Magistrates, who are Natives of the country and subordinate to himself. I am informed by those who have a right to speak on the subject that the people of Bengal have great and well-deserved confidence in the Subordinate Executive Service, and that if they are assured that the investigation into the facts will generally be left in the hands of an experienced Deputy Magistrate, it will do a great deal to allay the alarm which is now so generally felt.

"Before concluding, I wish to say a word by way of tribute to the general good sense and moderation of the opinions which those noblemen and gentlemen of Bengal whom the Bengal Government consulted have contributed. We called on about forty persons altogether to assist us with their advice, and the answers we received form a decidedly valuable contribution to the literature of the subject, and contrast remarkably with the heated language used in public speeches and in many articles in the public Press. These replies were carefully analysed in the report which the Bengal Government submitted to the Government of India, and we held that both with reference to the numbers of the writers, and also to their social influence and intellectual importance, the weight of opinion was, on the whole, in favour of the Bill. But what struck me most was the strong sense of responsibility with which the subject was discussed and the evident desire to recognise the good intentions of Government and to assist it as far as possible in attaining its object. It is a very hopeful sign when the recognised leaders of society are possessed by such a feeling as to their relations to the Government. I share the feeling which has just been so well expressed by my friend Sir George Chesney, and I am sanguine that when the dust of this controversy has cleared away no bitterness will be left behind, and it will be admitted that this amendment of the law was, on the whole, sound and judicious".

His Excellency THE PRESIDENT said:—

"I might almost leave the case where it has been left by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor. As, however, strong personal appeals have been again and again made to me, either to cause the Bill to be abandoned altogether, or to postpone its further consideration, I will say a few words to explain why it is that the Government of India cannot adopt either of these courses. It can, at any rate, scarcely be contended that during the months which have passed since this Bill was introduced into Council its provisions have not been adequately discussed. From that day until the present it has been criticised and examined with extraordinary ingenuity, and an amount of research and erudition has been brought to bear upon its consideration, so great, that we are justified in believing that little remains to be said, either for or against our proposal. I cannot therefore bring myself to share the opinions of those who would have us postpone the passing of the Bill in order to give time for further discussion—time which would be used for the purpose of still further unsettling the public mind, and misrepresenting the scope and intention of the measure.

"The opposition which it has encountered has proceeded from three quarters. There is, in the first place, the general suspicion which has been occasioned in the public mind from the fact that the Government of India has determined to legislate upon a subject which, although it does not immediately affect the marriage law of any section of the community, has an indirect bearing upon the social usages of one of those sections. To the more ignorant portion of the public an appeal has been made upon the ground that its religion is threatened by the action of the Government of India; and this statement has probably been enough to cause uneasiness to many who are entirely unaware of the real scope of the Bill, who do not read the discussions which take place in Council, or even those which are to be found in the columns of the newspapers, and who are ready, upon the mere affirmation of the framers of hostile resolutions, or the conveners of public meetings, summoned under the circumstances so well described by the Hon'ble Mr. Nugent, to testify their alarm and their conviction that their spiritual welfare is seriously threatened. Of the opposition which we have encountered from this quarter, all that I have to say is that I hope and believe that it will be of a transient character, and that the Hindu community, and even the most unenlightened section of it, will in time find out that its religion is not endangered by what we are about to do. Although we cannot blame the credulous listeners who are led to believe assertions of this kind, made on apparently good authority, we have, I think, a right to complain of those who are reckless enough to disseminate such statements and, upon so slender a pretext, to fan the embers of a dangerous agitation. I earnestly trust that even those who are unable to support the Government measure will, at any rate, have the honesty to see that its objects and effects are not exaggerated or misrepresented, and that, if the Government is attacked, it is not attacked for doing what it has neither done nor intends to do.

"The main volume of the opposition with which the Bill has met has, however, originated not so much in sources of this kind as in the belief, apparently entertained by many devout Hindus, that the new law will involve a direct interference with a specific religious observance. We are told that the Hindu religion requires the consummation of marriage immediately upon the attainment of puberty by the wife; that puberty is not unfrequently attained prior to the age of twelve; that, if in such cases the marriage is consummated, the person who so consummates it will find himself an offender against the Penal Code owing to the performance of an act which his religion requires him not to leave unperformed. Such interference on the part of the British Government is, we are told, in direct opposition to the terms of the Queen's Proclamation; and this argument has been largely, and I must say most unscrupulously, used for the purpose of discrediting the Bill and imputing a breach of faith to the Government which has introduced it. Now, with regard to this contention, let me say at once that no Government of India has yet admitted, and that no Government of India will, I hope, ever be found to admit, that the Queen's Proclamation, to which this appeal is made, is capable of any such interpretation as that which has been placed upon it by those who used this argument. If that interpretation is to cover the case now under discussion, we must read the Queen's Proclamation as a contract that, whenever the requirements of public morality, or of the public welfare, moral or material, are found to be in conflict with the alleged requirements of any of the various religions prevailing in this country, religion is to prevail and considerations affecting public health, public morality and the general comfort and convenience of the Queen's subjects are to become of no account. The contention is on the face of it a preposterous one. Such a contract would have been absolutely retrograde and out of place in the great charter issued in 1858 by one of the most humane and enlightened sovereigns who has ever ruled over the nations of the earth.

"I will venture to say that, in the eyes of every reasonable man or woman, the pledges contained in the Queen's Proclamation must be read with a two-fold reservation, upon which the Government has always acted, and which was not specified in the letter of the contract simply because it had always been acted upon and was perfectly obvious and well understood. The first of these reservations is this, that in all cases where demands preferred in the name of religion would lead to practices inconsistent with individual safety and the public peace, and condemned by every system of law and morality in the world, it is religion, and not morality, which must give way. It has already been pointed out that this reservation has been invariably insisted upon, and examples have been adduced in which, from time to time, the Government of India has intervened in order to prohibit certain acts, which unquestionably had the sanction of religion, upon the ground that those acts were opposed to the general interests of society. The precedents afforded by our legislation against infanticide, against the immolation of widows, and against the immunities enjoyed by Brahmins, have been appropriately cited in illustration of this argument. Every one of these enactments were, if we are to accept the narrow interpretation of the Queen's Proclamation, acts of 'interference with the religious belief or worship' of the Queen's subjects from which those in authority under the Queen were charged to abstain on pain of Her highest displeasure. Sir Andrew Scoble has very properly referred those who rely upon this construction of the Proclamation, and who hold that it entirely debars the Government of India from legislating in respect to any matters affecting the religions of the people of India, to the provisions of the Act under which our business is at this moment being conducted —I mean the Indian Councils Act of 1861, which is the statutory embodiment in precise terms of the general principles set forth in the Royal Proclamation. Now that Act, far from absolutely precluding the Government of India from dealing with matters affecting religion, expressly contemplates the possibility of such legislation becoming necessary, although it safeguards it from irresponsible initiation. The words of the 19th section show as clearly as possible that, subject to proper precautions, legislation such as that which is now taking place was contemplated by Her Majesty's advisers, who were responsible both for the Proclamation and for the Act from which I have just quoted. But I will quote, as embodying what I believe to have been invariably recognised as the principle applicable to such cases, the terms of the judgment of the Privy Council when the abolition of the practice of sati came before it upon appeal. The Council recommended that the petition should be dismissed for four reasons, of which the third ran as follows:—'Because the Regulation' (that is, the Regulation forbidding sati) 'cannot properly be regarded as a departure from the just and established principles of religious toleration, on the observance of which the stability of the British Government in India mainly depends; and because the rite is not prohibited as a religious act, but as a flagrant offence against society'. The framers of the judgment proceed to say that 'it admits of question whether the rite is sanctioned by the religious institutes of the Hindus; by many of the most learned Hindus of the present day it is regarded as absolutely sinful:' and it is added, in the fourth reason, that it was the duty of Government 'to prohibit a practice which so powerfully tended to deprave the national feeling and character, and which taught preverted religion to predominate over the best feelings of the heart'. The rite was therefere pronounced illegal, and its observance prohibited.

"The words which I have quoted appear to me to be singularly apposite in the present instance, where we are dealing with what may most appropriately be described as 'a flagrant offence against society', and the reservation is one which should, in my opinion, be made in reference to all cases in which the sanctions of morality and those of religion are in direct conflict. I would, moreover, ask whether such a reservation is not especially necessary when the religion with which we have to deal is the Hindu religion. I trust that neither here nor elsewhere shall I allow myself to say a word which might sound in the ears of the Hindu subjects of Her Majesty disrespectful towards the faith which they profess. It is a faith of which some of the tenets are worthy of a place amongst the articles of the noblest and purest creeds professed by the most civilised nations of the earth. But there is probably no religion more cumbered by super-imposed traditions, more hampered by accretions of doubtful value, more perplexing to its votaries owing to its fluctuating and elastic character. It is a religion which is co-extensive with the life—social, political and domestic—of those who profess it. Every act, every incident of the daily life of a Hindu, has its religious aspect. I believe I am right in saying that the Shastras lay down that whatever a man does should be done with a religious object. Let us give all credit to a religion which obtains so strong a hold upon those who profess it, and which so entirely pervades their existence. But the very fact that we are concerned with such a religion renders it doubly necessary for those who are responsible for the government of the country to be cautious how they allow themselves to admit that religion must be allowed to block the way whenever it can be shown that a religious sanction of some kind or another can be discovered for the practice which it is sought to control or to forbid. To say that everything which such a religion enjoins must be recognised as an insuperable barrier, to be on no account traversed by the course of legislation, would mean the complete and fatal paralysis of the law as a reforming agency. The question then which we have to decide is whether we are to postpone, or to abandon, a useful measure of reform, demanded in the interests of humanity, calculated to effect a material improvement in the Hindu race, and supported by a majority of the Hindu community, merely upon the ground that it is objected to by a minority of that community upon the strength of a religious canon of doubtful authority, a religious canon which rests upon sanctions so slight that its transgression can be atoned for by the payment of a nominal fine.

"What I have said seems to lead inevitably to the second of the two reservations of which I spoke a moment ago. It is this, that in all cases where there is a conflict between the interests of morality and those of religion, the Legislature is bound to distinguish, if it can, between essentials and non-essentials, between the great fundamental principles of the religion concerned and the subsidiary beliefs and accretionary dogmas which have accidentally grown up around them. In the case of the Hindu religion such a discrimination is especially needful, and one of the first questions which we have to ask ourselves is, assuming that the practice with which our proposed legislation will interfere is a practice supported by religious sanctions, whether those sanctions are of first-rate importance and absolutely obligatory, or whether they are of minor importance and binding only in a slight degree.

"Now, I venture to affirm that the discussion which has taken place has established beyond controversy that the particular religious observance which we are urged to respect is, in the first place, a local observance, and one far from being universally recognised by those who profess the Hindu faith. It is a practice which is, in the main, peculiar to the Province of Bengal, and which is followed only in a portion of that Province, and only by certain classes within that portion. It will not be contended that devout Hinduism is not to be found outside this restricted area, but the Hindus of other parts of India do not share the alarm with which this Bill is regarded in Bengal. In the next place, it is admitted that the religious sanctions by which the practice is supported are of the weakest kind. The elaborate statement recently published by Dr. Bhandarkar, of the Dekkhan College at Poona, who is admitted to be one of the highest extant authorities upon questions of Hindu religious law, makes it perfectly clear that the precepts upon which the practice in question rests may be regarded as permissive only. It is conceded on all hands that, under certain circumstances, the consummation of the marriage may lawfully be postponed, and that even where it is not lawfully postponed the omission of the necessary act is an offence which may be expiated by the slenderest and most insignificant penalties. It was stated a few days ago by Mr. Janerilal Umiashankar Yajnik, in the eloquent speech delivered by him at the meeting recently held at Bombay, that it might be said without exaggeration of the eighteen millions of the Hindu population to whom he was referring that the bulk of them not only did not perform the Garbhadhan ceremony, but even the name of it is not known to them. Look, again, at the evidence which we have received from His Highness the Maharaja of Jeypore with regard to the manner in which these questions are regarded by the Chiefs and Sardars of Rajputana, who are well described in Rao Bahadur Kanti Chunder Mookerjee's admirable letter as 'rigid and orthodox Hindus', and far from likely to break the laws of their religion without compunction. Look also at the outspoken utterances of such men as our hon'ble colleague Mr. Nulkar, as Mr. Telang, as His Highness the Maharaja of Travancore, as His Highness the Maharaja of Vizianagram, as Mr. Justice Muttusami Aiyar of Madras, and, even in Bengal, of such men as His Highness the Maharaja of Bettiah, His Highness the Maharaja of Durbhunga, or, in Calcutta itself, as Raja Durga Churn Law, lately our colleague in the Legislative Council, as Babu P. C. Mozoomdar, whose note upon the subject deserves the most attentive study, and as Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, the eminent pleader, who has stated that, within his knowledge, the Garbhadhan ceremony is admittedly not observed in many respectable Hindu families and is not unfrequently more honoured in the breach than in the observance. I cannot, in the face of the evidence of such men as these, accept, without a protest, the statement of our hon'ble colleague Sir Romesh Chunder Mitter, whose absence from the Council I deeply regret, that we are 'forcing this reform upon an unwilling people'. To them, and to many more who have raised their voices in support of the measure, I desire to offer a public acknowledgement of the service which they have rendered. I feel convinced that the time is not far off when their fellow citizens, without exception, will recognize that such men as these, rather than they who have so noisily, and so thoughtlessly, repeated the parrot cry 'our religion is in danger', are the true leaders of public opinion in this country.

"I will, however, not further pursue this branch of the subject, which has been fully dealt with by previous speakers. If we can say not only that the observance under discussion is far from being regarded by the majority of those who profess the Hindu religion as essential, but also that its practice is repugnant to common sense, abhorrent to modern civilization, debasing to those who adopt it and detrimental to the physical and moral welfare of the race, we may, I think, consider that we have placed it completely outside the category of those religious customs and observances on behalf of which the Queen's Proclamation may be invoked, and which are deserving of recognition and protection at the hands of the responsible lawgivers of British India.

"I will now pass for a moment to the third great objection which has been raised against the measure. It is the objection founded upon the anticipation that it will lead to inquisitorial action by the police, to prosecutions instituted from vindictive motives, and to criminal investigations into family matters of the most domestic and private character. Of this objection I will say that, whatever may be our opinions with regard to some of the arguments which have been brought forward against the Bill, there can be no doubt as to the perfect sincerity with which this argument has been urged upon us. The apprehension, considering the conditions under which a great part of the population of this country lead their lives, is a perfectly natural one: we should, if we were situated as they are, probably entertain a similar apprehension ourselves. I would, however, in the first place, entreat the public to be cautious how in this or in any other case it allows itself to be too much influenced by arguments founded upon the possibility that a new law is likely to be abused in this manner. If the Government of India had been deterred from legislating whenever it could be told that its legislation would place in the hands of the police, or of private persons, a weapon which they might use in an improper manner, many of our most useful enactments would never have found their way into the Code. Now, as far as bonâ fide prosecutions are concerned, the assumption that there will be frequent prosecutions under the new section is obviously based on the anticipation that the law will be frequently broken. I am sanguine enough to believe that this expectation will not be fulfilled. It is an expectation upon which the frequently expressed belief that the new law will be a dead letter is a somewhat remarkable commentary. Our proposals, moreover, already command a very large measure of public support, and I do not doubt that in the end Native opinion, which has always ended by supporting the law in cases of this kind, will end by supporting it in this instance also. When once it has become established that that which is, I believe, already regarded by a majority of the people of this country as a moral offence, and which our hon'ble colleague Sir Romesh Chunder Mitter himself stigmatizes as a vice and as a pernicious custom, is also an offence which will render those who commit it, or those who abet it, liable to penal consequences, the offence will, I venture to think, become one of rare occurrence. I may observe in passing that it was mainly in deference to the apprehensions of which I have spoken that we found ourselves unable to accept the well-intentioned proposal that we should insert in the Bill, as an alternative for the limit of age which we have adopted, the attainment of puberty by the girl. This proposal, which seemed to us open to objection upon other grounds, was certainly open to criticism, for the reason that its adoption might have led to investigations far more inquisitorial, and far more repugnant to family sentiment, than any which are likely to take place under the Bill as it stands.

"It is, however, contended that the tendency of the Bill will be to encourage proceedings which are not instituted bonâ fide, but from malicious motives, and in order to bring disgrace upon the family of the accused, and a moving picture has been drawn of the anguish and humiliation which such proceedings will occasion, of the outrage to which an innocent woman might be exposed before the question of fact could be satisfactorily disposed of, and of the public scandal which would be created if things which usually sub lodice teguntur are allowed to be openly discussed in a public Court of Justice. The argument is one which, I can assure the Council, the Government of India has most anxiously considered. We have, I think, shown our sense of the necessity of guarding against these risks by making the offence a non-cognizable one, and thereby increasing the difficulties in the way of vexatious prosecutions. We have also agreed to add to the measure a clause preventing all but District Magistrates from dealing with cases in which husband and wife are concerned, and precluding any police-officer below the rank of an inspector from making, or taking part in, the investigation, when one has been directed by the Magistrate.

"But it may be argued that these precautions will be of no avail. It will be said, 'The reputation of our families and the sanctity of our homes will still remain at the mercy of a dismissed servant, or an offended neighbour'. I cannot bring myself to share these gloomy anticipations, or to believe that false charges of this kind will be as common as we are asked to believe. The person who makes them will, in the first place, render himself liable to the most severe punishment. The very fact that the offence is to be punished by a heavy penalty increases, as the hon'ble member in charge of the Home Department has well pointed out, that to which the person falsely charging such an offence exposes himself. We should, moreover, remember that the false witness will have not only the law to reckon with. If the charge which he makes is odious, how odious will he be who invents such a charge, and how tremendous will be the penalty which he will pay by attracting to himself the indignation of the whole community to which he belongs! It is, however, not only to considerations of this kind that we must look for a safeguard against this danger. We have to remember that the person who seeks to prefer a charge of this sort must make out a primâ facie case, sufficient to satisfy a Magistrate of the highest position and respectability—a Magistrate who under existing procedure is bound to take into account the character of the person by whom the charge is preferred. Is it likely, under such circumstances, that a trumped-up accusation will have the desired effect? Is it not much more likely that it will recoil upon the head of him who makes it?

"I do not, however, wish to press this argument too far, and I will assume that, in spite of every precaution, there will be cases—I do not for a moment believe that they will be common—in which such charges will be preferred from malice, or from other improper motives. Assuming this to be the case, all that I would ask the opponents of this Bill to do is to open in their minds what I might call a debtor and creditor account for and against this measure. Let them set upon one side the risks to which I have just referred, and which I believe to be infinitesimally small; and let them set upon the other side the certainty that this measure will remove a standing reproach from the Hindu community, and that it will afford to their wives and daughters a protection of which, after the ghastly disclosures which have taken place during the discussion of this measure,—disclosures of which but for their horror more would certainly have been heard,—we cannot for a moment doubt that they stand sorely in need. Which way ought the balance to incline? Will not those whose feelings are feelings of true patriotism reply—'We are content to run this risk, we are content to expose ourselves to the annoyance which once in a way the spite of a private enemy or a corrupt informer may occasion to us and to our families, for the sake of the good which this change in the law will bring to our sons, from whom it will remove a cruel temptation, to our daughters, whom it will rescue from the worst of outrages, and to the whole Hindu people, whom it will liberate from a disgraceful reproach'.

"I have already explained the reasons for which we have been unable to accept the suggestion, which has been made to us, that we should abandon our intention to raise the age of consent and deal at once with the whole question of the marriage law by invalidating all marriages contracted with a woman below the age of twelve. A change of the law in this direction is one which will, I trust, ultimately be demanded by the Hindu community itself. It is not one which, under existing circumstances, we are prepared to impose upon that community. So long as we adhere to our present proposal, we are, I believe, in an inexpugnable position. No new departure is involved in the amendment of the law which we recommend. The existing law, of which the justice is admitted, specifies the age at which intercourse with a woman, whether with or without her consent, is an offence against that law. No complaint is made of this enactment, nor is it likely that any one will be found bold enough to propose that the protection which is already afforded to these young children should be withdrawn from them. The necessity of an age limit being admitted, the only question which the Council has to decide is whether our proposal fixes that limit at the proper point. We contend that the point at which we propose to fix it accords, at all events, more closely with the physiological facts than any other. We have been pressed to adopt a higher limit, but we desire to keep on the safe side. We justify our proposal on the ground that the British law would fail to provide adequately for the safety of the children of this country if, while it protects them from all other kinds of ill-usage, it failed to protect them from a particular form of ill-usage infinitely more revolting, and infinitely more disastrous in its direct, as well as in its remoter, results, than any other form of ill-treatment to which they are liable.

"I have only one word to add. A hope has been expressed that when this Bill has become law the Government of India will closely watch its operation, with the object of ascertaining whether further safeguards are necessary in order to prevent its abuse. I gladly give the assurance for which we are asked. We shall cause the working of the measure to be watched with the utmost attention, and we shall be prepared, if the safeguards which we have already accepted should prove insufficient, to strengthen and add to them".

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble SIR ANDREW SCOBLE also moved that the Bill, as amended, be passed.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

INDIAN FACTORIES ACT, 1881, AMENDMENT BILL.

The Hon'ble SIR ANDREW SCOBLE also moved that the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to amend the Indian Factories Act, 1881, be taken into consideration. He said:—

"As two of the members of the Select Committee to which this Bill was referred have expressed the opinion that it has been so altered as to require republication, I think it desirable that I should state how it has come about that the Bill has attained its present form, and why it is not considered necessary that it should be again referred to Local Governments and the representatives of the commercial and manufacturing interests for a further expression of opinion.

"When I introduced the Bill in January of last year, I stated that it was based upon enquiries which had been made by the Government of India for the purpose of ascertaining in what respects the Act of 1881 had been proved by experience to be defective, and what restrictions on the employment of labour could fairly be introduced with a due regard to the interests of the operatives themselves, and without unnecessary interference with the development of manufacturing industries in India. The proposals of the Bill had eight objects in view—

(1) to extend the operation of the Act to factories in which not less than twenty persons are employed;

(2) to raise the minimum age at which children may be employed in any factory from seven to nine years;

(3) to limit the hours of employment for women to eleven hours a day;

(4) to secure to women as well as to children proper intervals for food and rest during the day, and not less than four days holiday in each month;

(5) to secure a proper supply of water for the use of operatives;

(6) to ensure proper ventilation and cleanliness in factories;

(7) to prevent overcrowding likely to be injurious to health; and

(8) to give Local Governments greater power to obtain returns and make rules for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the Act.

"One of the first representations made on the subject of the Bill was a petition forwarded to Your Excellency by the Hon'ble Nowrojee N. Wadia, and signed by about 17,000 operatives employed in spinning and weaving mills in the City of Bombay, in which it was prayed—

'that, inasmuch as it is necessary for the common interests of mill-owners and your petitioners alike that there ought to be a complete cessation of work every seventh day in a week, it should be enacted by law that factory hands be allowed one day of rest in a week. And, inasmuch as Sunday is universally admitted to be practically the most convenient day, Sunday might be declared by law so to be the day of weekly rest. At the same time, having regard to the fact that in India there is a large number of Native holidays (13), the stoppage on these additional days with Sunday might entail needless hardship on employers and employés alike by tending to diminish their respective earnings. Your petitioners further beg to suggest that, as far as possible, whenever a Native holiday occurs in a week, then the Sunday following it should be considered a working day; and, secondly, that in view of the want of uniformity and punctuality in the practice at present prevailing in the mills where they are employed with regard to the midday stoppage for taking meals and rest, your petitioners also consider it most desirable that a statutory provision be inserted in the proposed amending Act, making it compulsory on all factory owners to allow regularly and punctually midday rest for half an hour, (say) from 12 noon to 12-30 P.M.'

"These suggestions went considerably beyond the scope of the Bill, which was intended to provide intervals of rest and holidays for women and children, leaving male operatives at liberty to make their own arrangements with their employers; but they were too important to be disregarded, and the further progress of the Bill was suspended in order that full time might be given for their consideration, as well as for the consideration of objections which had been raised in various quarters to some of the original proposals of the Bill.

"In order to arrive at a clear understanding as to the views of the Indian operatives themselves, the Government of India came to the conclusion that it was desirable to appoint a Commission to make enquiry, in the centres of factory labour, into the various points of controversy. Of this Commission Dr. Lethbridge was appointed President, and with him were associated a number of Native gentlemen whose position and capacity, or whose connection with manufacturing industries, furnished a sufficient guarantee that the enquiry would be conducted thoroughly and impartially. The Report of the Commission was presented on the 12th November, 1890, and copies were at once circulated to Local Governments, Chambers of Commerce and other mercantile bodies, for their information and for any criticism they might desire to offer.

"The points upon which the Commissioners were desired to report were these:—

(1) Is the limitation of the hours of work for women to eleven in any one day proper and sufficient in view of the conditions under which factory labour is performed in India, and do the female operatives desire that the day's work should be limited to this amount, and, if not, to what amount?

(2) Should the law draw a distinction between young persons and adults, and, if so, the age of a child being fixed at from nine to twelve, what should be the definition of a young person, and what should be the hours of employment of this class?

(3) Is the limitation of the hours of work for children to nine in any one day proper and sufficient in view of the nature of the work on which children are employed in Indian factories and the conditions under which they have to perform that work?

(4) Does clause 5 of the Bill now before the Legislative Council sufficiently provide for holidays for women and children, and is any provision required prescribing an allowance of holidays for adult male operatives?

(5) Do the male operatives desire that a general working day, and, if so, of what length, should be fixed by law except in cases in which men work in shifts or sets, and, if this change is not desired by the operatives themselves, do the conditions under which they work demand that it should be adopted?

(6) Do the male operatives desire that there should be a compulsory stoppage of work at a fixed time of the day, and, if so, of what length, and should there be an exception in the case of men who work by shifts or sets? If the change is not desired by the operatives themselves, do conditions under which they work demand that there should be a compulsory stoppage of labour, and, if so, in what manner should it be provided for?

"The answers of the Commissioners to these questions are contained in their Report, which is in the hands of hon'ble members; and the conclusions at which they arrived have been accepted by the Government, and are embodied, with some modifications which I shall presently point out, in the amended Bill now under consideration. I think I may say that they have commanded general assent, as indeed they deserved to do from their intrinsic good sense and clear appreciation of the conditions under which factory labour in this country is conducted. I will endeavour to summarize them as briefly as possible.

"In the first place, they recommend that a weekly holiday should be secured by law to all operatives; that the day of rest should be Sunday, and that it should be a complete holiday: but that, in order to secure the observance of Indian festival holidays, employers should be allowed to work their factories, if they desired to do so, on the Sunday following such a holiday. Effect is given to this recommendation in section 5B of the amended Bill; but provisos have been introduced by which factories in which continuous working is unavoidable or necessary may be exempted from the operation of the general rule. This exemption is in accordance with the resolutions of the Conference recently held at Berlin on the subject of factory labour.

"In the second place, they recommend that in all factories there should be a compulsory stoppage of work for a full half-hour in the middle of the day, and effect is given to this recommendation in section 5A of the amended Bill.

"With regard to children, they recommend that the limit of age should be from nine to fourteen years; that seven hours should be the extreme limit within which children should be employed; and that, if children are employed as half-timers, no fixed interval of rest should be required for them by law. The Bill adopts the first and second of these recommendations in sections 5 and 7; but, to prevent the possibility of overwork, an interval or intervals of rest amounting in the aggregate to at least half an hour is secured to every child actually employed for six hours in any factory on any one day.

"With regard to women, the Commissioners adopt the original proposal of the Bill that eleven hours is a proper and sufficient working day, though they consider that, if the hours of labour are so limited for women working with moving machinery, the effect may be to deprive them of employment. The amended Bill maintains the limitation of eleven hours actual work, but provides, in accordance with the recommendations of the Berlin Conference, that this period of work shall be broken by rests of a total duration of one-and-a-half hours at least, with exception for certain industries. This extends the day to 12½ hours, and covers the period from daylight to dusk during a great part of the year. It may be hoped, therefore, that the operation of the law will not be found to interfere with the employment of women, who, under present arrangements, find it possible to take frequent spells of rest though employed as full-timers. Section 6 of the Bill as amended embodies the opinion of the Select Committee on this point, and reserves to the Governor General in Council power to grant exemptions in special cases from the strict application of the rule.

"As regards both women and children, the Bill provides that they shall not as a general rule be employed at night. Very few factories in this country are worked with artificial light; but as regards children absolutely, and women usually, it seems desirable that they should be employed only within the period between daylight and dusk.

"I have now stated the chief of the new provisions which have been introduced into the amended Bill. It is true that in two respects—the securing intervals of rest for women and children and the prohibition of night work (except under special conditions) for these two classes—the Bill goes somewhat beyond the recommendations of the Factory Commission; but I understand that no objection is raised by employers to these provisions, and they are so much in favour of the employed that I venture to think the passing of the Bill need not be delayed in order to obtain more formal approval of them.

"Turning now to the modifications which have been introduced into the Bill with respect to matters of which the Factory Commission did not take cognizance, I may remind the Council that the original proposal of the Bill was to extend the operation of the law to factories in which not less than twenty persons are employed. This proposal is strongly advocated by the Bombay Government, but is objected to by the Government of Bengal, which considers that while twenty is too low a number a hundred is too high. The Committee have accordingly fixed fifty as the general minimum, but in section 20 have given power to Local Governments to extend the operation of the Act to factories in which less than fifty but not less than twenty persons are simultaneously employed.

"It will be seen that I have given notice of some amendments to be introduced into the Bill as amended. These relate principally to two matters which were settled in the Select Committee, but which by an oversight were not incorporated in the revised draft. The first is that rules made under the Act by Local Governments are to be made 'subject to the control of the Governor General in Council;' and the second that only such returns are to be called for as are required for the effectual working of the Act. Both these suggestions were made by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, and are supported by excellent reasons.

"It has been urged upon the Government that the Bill is unnecessary, and that existing conditions are all that can be desired or required in the interests alike of employers and employed. I am quite ready to admit that factory labour in India—and I have visited many factories not only in the neighbourhood of Calcutta but in other parts of the country—is not subject to the same disadvantages which too frequently beset it in Europe; but we have to legislate not only for well-managed factories but for those which are badly managed, and the stress of competition has unquestionably had a tendency to make employers in some cases more attentive to their own interests than to those of their work-people. The duty of the Government is to secure for factory workers here that their work shall be carried on with a proper regard to their health and safety, and so as not to overtax their physical capacity. Beyond this, the Bill does not go, and less would not in my humble judgment satisfy the exigencies of the case".

The Hon'ble MR. MACKAY said:—

"My Lord, the Bill now before Your Excellency's Council was introduced as long ago as January, 1890, and a Select Committee was then appointed to consider and report upon its provisions, but the services of that Committee were not called into requisition by the hon'ble and learned member in charge of the Bill until the other day.

"The Bill originally introduced into this Council was, I believe, based on the recommendations of the Bombay Factory Commission of 1884, but these, it is well known, did not go far enough to suit the people of Lancashire, who urged that Indian factory labour should be brought under rules suggested by a Conference held at Berlin at which India was not represented or, if she was represented, it was only in an indirect way by the British Delegate.

"Then to enquire into the representation made by the Bombay operatives we had Dr. Lethbridge's Commission of 1890 appointed, and the recommendations of that Commission, which are characterized by common sense and moderation, had to be considered.

"The result was that the Select Committee to which this Bill was referred had three sets of recommendations to guide them instead of the original one set, and the Bill now before Council is, therefore, in some respects different from the measure originally introduced.

"I will not take up the time of hon'ble members by recounting the provisions of the law as it at present stands, or by instituting a comparison between the provisions of the Bill now before us and that originally introduced; but although I did not deem it necessary to dissent from the Report of the Select Committee, or to join in the recommendation for delay made by two of my hon'ble colleagues, I must say that I consider the restrictions which will be placed both on employers and employed, if this Bill becomes law, are the utmost to which we should submit, and I sincerely hope that no attempt will be made to enhance them for many years to come.

"The Bill provides for children being excluded from factories altogether until they are nine years of age, and keeps them at practically half-time work until they are fourteen. The first of these provisions, I must confess, I see no objection to, and as regards the second, though it has been urged upon me that it goes too far, because in a tropical country such as India the human race arrives at maturity at a much earlier age than in temperate climes, and it may therefore often be a hardship to prevent a boy of thirteen from earning a full day's pay, still I did not think it necessary to press this point.

"As regards the restrictions which it is proposed to place upon women, I am glad the Government of India have agreed to an arrangement which will, I believe, prevent the weaker sex from being driven from factories by the stronger, while at the same time, by limiting the period of their labour to eleven hours a day, the possibility of an accusation that the factory laws of India permit women to be overworked will be removed. It would be disastrous to many poor women and widows who now earn good livelihoods in Indian mills if an Act were to be passed which would have the effect of driving them from factory labour, and the probable evil effects of any such measure are by no means pleasant to contemplate.

"It must be remembered that, with probably one-fourth part of the exertion demanded of her in an Indian mill, a woman can earn four times in a factory what she can earn in a field; and, as regards the relative hardships of the two conditions of labour, I feel sure if a Lancashire philanthropist had to choose between working on the roads under an April sun and tending a spinning-frame in the shelter of a factory, he would rapidly run from the road and make for the mill.

"As regards clause (c) of section 5B, I would like to say one word. This clause was introduced with the object of giving power to Local Governments to exclude from sub-section (f), section 5B, factories such as those which the Berlin Conference recommended should be excluded. I would have preferred to have had the classes of factories mentioned in the Bill, but it was explained that naming them might prove inconvenient, and that it was better to make the provision a general one. I would like to state, however, that I understand and hope that the sub-section will be applied to jute and cotton presses, silk filatures, sugar factories and refineries, the rice-mills of Arakan and Burma, printing-presses, paper-factories and bakeries. I would have been glad to have seen the word 'shall' used in this clause instead of 'may,' but it was said that this might land the Government in the High Court if they by any chance failed to apply the clause; and, though I did not think it necessary to protect the Government from the consequences of failing to do their duty, I did not press the point because it was explained to me by the hon'ble and learned member in charge of the Bill that 'may' in such cases is always directory, and that for all practical purposes it really means 'shall'.

"My Lord, no inconsiderable uneasiness has prevailed in this country for the past twelve months in connection with the proposed fresh factory legislation for India. There has been what I might term a sense of insecurity caused by a feeling that there was a risk of the interests of India being sacrificed on the altar of English party politics, and that a measure might be forced on the Government of India which would be distinctly disadvantageous to the interests of the people of this country.

"It was remembered with apprehension that only a few years ago the import duties had been abolished to benefit the English manufacturer, and that they were shortly afterwards replaced by a direct tax upon income, entirely unsuited to the circumstances of this country, and it was feared that Lancashire influence and Oldham agitation might carry the day again. In these circumstances, the action of the Government of India in connection with this proposed factory legislation has been watched with no little anxiety; but, although the limit to which restrictions should go has certainly been reached in the Bill now before this Council, I am happy to say that I believe the measure on the whole will give general satisfaction throughout India, and at the same time it should effectually silence Lancashire for ever.

"I consider the Government of India have fought our battle with valour, and at the same time with discretion; and, while by the measure before us they have provided in every respect sufficiently for the protection of the worker, they have declined to hamper or trammel with restrictions unsuited to this country the infant industries of India, and I am therefore prepared to support the Bill".

The Hon'ble MR. NUGENT said:—

"My Lord, the primary objects of the Bill now before this Council are, as I understand, the better regulation of the working of factories in British India and the improvement, where such is needed, of the conditions of work of the operatives. The Bill reported on by the Select Committee is not the Bill originally introduced by the Hon'ble Sir Andrew Scoble, forwarded to the Local Governments for opinion, and referred to a Select Committee of this Council. It is practically a new measure, based partly on the original Bill, partly on proposals made by the Factory Commission appointed last year, and partly on the resolutions of the Berlin Conference. The draft Bill as thus framed in the Legislative Department last month and placed before the Select Committee on the 2nd instant, and as now altered in certain respects by the Select Committee, has not been reported upon by the various Local Governments and commercial bodies, and indeed, as far as I am aware, was not even seen by them before the Bill and the Report were published in the Gazette of the 7th instant. Their opinions were obtained on the original Bill as introduced some thirteen months ago, and on the Report of the Factory Commission; but this Bill goes in many respects beyond the original Bill, and in some beyond the proposals of the Commission. Having regard, then, to the importance of this measure as affecting extensive and valuable industries in which millions of capital have been sunk and many thousands of hands are employed, and bearing in mind the circumstance that the measure has been already on the stocks for nearly fourteen months, and that an additional delay of a very few weeks in the launching of it would not therefore presumably be of vital consequence, I am respectfully of opinion that before the Bill is further proceeded with and becomes law the views of the different Local Governments and commercial bodies should be ascertained as regards at least those provisions in it which are entirely novel, and concerning which they had no previous intimation. I cannot agree that those new provisions are unimportant. What exactly is their degree of importance, and to what precise extent they will affect, for good or for evil, various Indian industries I cannot tell. This is a point on which expert opinion is alone of material value. Nor, although in the abstract they may commend themselves as fair and reasonable to me or any other hon'ble member of this Council who, like myself, has not a practical personal knowledge of the economy of factory labour and management, does it follow that they may not really greatly hamper the satisfactory working of a factory, or interfere prejudicially with the interests of the operatives themselves, or certain classes of them. On this question, too, the views of experts would be of value. And, seeing how widely the circumstances of factories and factory labour differ, not only in the various Presidencies but also in different portions of the same Presidency or Province,—how, for instance, the circumstances in Calcutta are dissimilar from those which prevail in Bombay, and how again the circumstances in the City of Bombay differ from those which obtain in Gujarat and Khandesh,—it appears desirable that information should be procured as to the probable effect of the new provisions to which I allude before they are finally enacted. Arrangements which may suit and fit in with the Calcutta system may prove impracticable in Bombay, and arrangements which could without inconvenience be introduced in Bombay may be found impossible in, say, Ahmedabad without completely revolutionising the scheme of factory labour there.

"The present Factory Act applies only to factories employing one hundred or more hands. Under this Bill all factories employing not less than fifty persons will be brought within the scope of the law, and it is left to the discretion of Local Governments to make the Act applicable to factories employing less than fifty but not less than twenty persons. The objection raised by some Local Governments to the compulsory application of the Act to all small factories employing only twenty hands or other limited number in excess of twenty is thus met. It can hardly be contended that in any circumstances or in any locality a factory employing from fifty to one hundred hands is too small a concern to need supervision and control under the Act. Indeed, these small concerns frequently stand in greater need of inspection and improvement than do the large factories. In Bombay it is considered most desirable that the Act should be applied to the little factories, such as flour and oil mills and cotton and wool cleaning factories, employing often only from twenty to thirty or forty persons, which are situated mainly in the native town, and are not unfrequently most defective in their sanitary arrangements, the fencing of the machinery and other respects.

"One of the most important alterations which it is proposed to effect in the existing law by the Bill under consideration is that whereby the minimum age of children who may be employed in factories is raised from seven to nine years. Under the present Act no child under the age of seven may be employed, and a child after attaining the age of twelve is, for the purposes of the Act, treated as being an adult. In the Bill it is proposed to raise the minimum age to nine, and to regard as children boys and girls between the ages of twelve and fourteen. This double modification in the age limits of child hands appears most advisable. To my mind there can be little doubt that a mere infant of only seven years of age is physically unfit to work for hours daily in a mill, light as the labour may be. The life he leads, confined for hours in a mill-room with its close atmosphere and incessant rattle of machinery, must at that early age stunt his growth and enfeeble his constitution. It is urged that if not employed in the mill and helping to earn his own living he would be strolling about the streets making mud-pies, and generally doing mischief, and at the same time be an unremunerative burden to his parents. The answer, I think, is that, like all other little girls and boys of seven or eight years of age, the little Hindu or Muhammadan is much better employed in playing than in working. The labour of life will begin for him quite early enough if he commences his daily toil in a mill when he has reached the more mature age of nine, and is materially bigger and stronger than he was a year or two before. He may well be left to enjoy such dull pleasures as his childhood can afford until he is nine. Moreover, I believe that, even at present, in Bombay at least, few children under the age of nine are employed, as mill managers find by experience that little useful work can be obtained from such young children. At nine an Indian child is well capable of performing the easy work assigned to him, but at seven or eight he is not, and employment at such an early age is likely to prove detrimental to his health and growth. The proposed raising to fourteen of the line of delimitation between children and adults is, I think, a desirable step. Precocious as is in some respects the Indian child, I do not consider that at twelve his frame is so set up and his strength and powers of endurance are so established that he can without injury to himself and without strain on his constitution—a strain likely to manifest itself in premature old age—work the full time hours of an adult man. Whatever the law may have held, a boy or girl of twelve is not a grown man or woman. He or she is still a child, and should only be allowed to do the work of a child. When he reaches fourteen the case is different. Then he can do the work of a man in a mill just as he would do a man's work were he engaged in his own fields or any other occupation. This sudden alteration of the age limit of children from twelve to fourteen may, I fear, lead to hardships in some instances, as not a few persons between the ages of twelve and fourteen, now actually employed as adult hands and earning the wages of full grown adults, will find themselves thrown back into the category of children, with the result that both their hours of labour and their earnings will be seriously curtailed. This result seems, however, inevitable. It would hardly perhaps be possible to declare that all persons over twelve but under fourteen now actually employed in mills should be specially exempted from the operation of the proposed provision, and to rule that it should apply only to persons under twelve not now serving in factories or who may hereafter be employed therein. Fortunately, however, the number of persons affected by

"The chief other additions to the existing law proposed in the Bill are the enforcement of absolute closure of all factories, save certain classes, on one day in seven, the restriction of the actual working hours of children to seven per diem, or in certain cases eight, the limitation of the actual working hours of women to eleven per diem, except where a longer period of work is specially sanctioned by the Governor General in Council, the compulsory grant of intervals of rest to women and children, and also to men where the set or shift system is not in operation, the prohibition of the employment of children between 8 P.M. and 5 P.M., and a like prohibition in the case of women save where the shift system is maintained. The compulsory closure for one day in the week of all factories except those exempted for special reasons is, I think, a salutary measure. Mill hands, like other human beings, require, and are the better for, a day of rest; a cessation from toil is as beneficial to their health and spirits—and in the long run therefore to their pockets—as it is to persons engaged in other avocations. In Calcutta a weekly holiday is the custom, but in Bombay, which is perhaps more worldly and less richly endowed with sabbatical instincts and Scotch foremen and managers, it is the exception. But it is as necessary and as expedient in Bombay and other places as it is in Calcutta; and, as it will tend to check over-production, it will in the end prove as beneficial to the mill-owners as to the mill-operative. The power taken in the Bill to exempt certain classes of factories from the operation of the one day in seven closure clause will, I think, suffice to meet the strong and reasonable objections raised by the owners of sugar-refineries, certain descriptions of presses, silk-factories, &c., to the application of this clause to their industries. The provision made in the Bill for a midday stoppage of work for half an hour for all hands in a factory not conducted on the shift system is so obviously desirable tnat no comment on it seems necessary. Nor, I think, can any tenable objection be raised to the limit of seven hours, or as in the Bill in certain cases eight hours, of actual work fixed in the case of children. The proposed interval of rest of half an hour seems unnecessary, and is declared by the Factory Commission to be not needed. The insertion of a provision requiring this interval to be allowed will, I think, only serve to militate against the employment of children in factories, and is therefore disadvantageous rather than of advantage to them. The omission, now proposed, of the clause enabling children to work in shifts for eight hours is, I think, to be deprecated.

"The other proposed provisions I regard with greater doubt. That eleven hours of actual work ordinarily constitute a sufficient daily task for a woman is probably the case, and I believe that as a matter of fact few women in Indian cotton and jute mills work longer; but it seems questionable whether in the interests of the women themselves it is advisable to draw a hard-and-fast line limiting to a precise number of hours the time any woman may work in a day. A woman paid by the piece, that is, by results, may occasionally wish to work beyond eleven hours, but under the proposed regulation this she would be unable to do. If, however, a line is to be drawn, and a female adult hand is not to be permitted to exercise her own discretion, and to be a free agent in disposing of her own labour, then eleven hours of daily actual work would appear to be a reasonable limit, very nearly in accord with actual practice in the great majority of instances. But in my opinion a much stronger objection exists to the proposed compulsory grant of intervals of rest, amounting in the aggregate to one-and-a-half hours per diem, to women actually employed for eleven hours. This goes beyond the proposal contained in the original Bill, and also beyond the recommendations of the Factory Commission, and is founded on one of the resolutions of the Berlin Conference. I am aware that the Bombay Mill-owners' Association has expressed its willingness to accept it; but I am by no means sure that the Association has fully understood the question or realized what may be the result of this change in the law. It is true that at present, under the easy-going discipline which prevails in an Indian mill, women, and indeed all the operatives, are allowed to leave their work for a few minutes at a time whenever they have occasion either to take food, to smoke, to have a talk, to rest awhile, or for any other purpose, and their casual absences from their looms, their winding or their reeling probably amount in the aggregate to from an hour to an hour-and a-half daily. The supervisors and managers do not object to these occasional absences if not too frequent and too protracted, and during her brief temporary absence the woman's work, if on a machine, is looked after by her mate. But it will be quite a different matter when the grant of prescribed intervals of rest at fixed times is insisted upon and the labour in the mill is hampered by the enforced absence of a considerable proportion of the female hands during the working hours for fifteen or twenty or thirty minutes at a time. Moreover, so long an aggregate interval of rest seems uncalled for. One hour daily is all that the original Bill proposed, and the Factory Commission reported that 'beyond the half hour in the middle of the day no other compulsory time for rest is required.' The one-and-a-half hours' rest is now apparently to be given in India because the Berlin Conference, dealing with the question of female labour in wholly different circumstances and in another Continent, deemed that female factory hands in Europe ought to be allowed that amount of rest daily. One result, I may point out, will be that in the Bombay Presidency at all events, and indeed in every part of India where artificial light is not used in factories,—and I believe it is only employed in Calcutta, and there only in some cotton-spinning mills,—during some of the winter months women will be unable to do eleven or even ten hours of actual work in the day. This measure therefore, as curtailing their earnings, as interfering with their freedom of action and as necessitating the introduction of stricter discipline in mill-rooms, is likely to prove a source rather of harm than advantage to the persons it is nominally intended to benefit. The prohibition of the employment of children at night is clearly advisable for the due protection of their health, but I fail to perceive any adequate reason for preventing women from working in the evening and at night by artificial light, provided always that the number of hours for which they are actually worked in the twenty-four does not exceed the maximum number permissible by law. It is of course impossible for any woman to work all night and also all day. If she is engaged in a factory all day, she cannot labour also throughout the night; but, seeing that if given her option she probably would prefer during the hot season to work by night and sleep by day, I cannot understand why she should be precluded by law from acting according to her own inclinations and convenience. There is nothing inherently wrong or unhealthy in night work. As previously remarked, very few jute or cotton mills are worked after dark in India, but in cotton-presses and ginning-factories in the Mufassal, which are worked only for a few months in the year, work has often to be carried on day and night to enable it to be accomplished in time, and in such instances the employment of women at night is essential, if they are to be employed at all.

"I greatly fear, my Lord, that the conditions proposed to be attached by the Bill now before Council to the employment in factories of women and children, combined with the apprehension that this measure is only a prelude to the imposition of further restrictions, will eventually and at no distant date bring about a result much to be deprecated. That result is the exclusion of all women and nearly all children from employment in any factory—certainly from employment on moving machinery. This is not a view held by me alone. It is shared partially at least by the members of the Factory Commission, who state—'If the hours of labour are limited to eleven for women working with moving machinery, we are convinced that without any exception these operatives will be replaced by male adult operatives or half-time children. The law supposed to be passed for their benefit will inflict serious permanent injury on these skilled mill-hands, and deprive them of the chance of earning a living at these factories.' This seems to me a very grave matter. The substitution of men for women will probably cause the mill-owners some slight additional expense; but this is not a subject of very great consequence. But this new legislation will be a cause of much evil and suffering if—as I fear it is only too likely to do—it drives thousands of industrious and deserving Native women out of the mills, where for years they have been thriving and earning far higher wages than any they could obtain by any other form of labour, and leaves them destitute and without occupation. Dwellers now in towns, they have learnt a new and forgotten their old trades; they cannot dig; to beg they are ashamed; their livelihood will be lost; and the means of their families, to which they so largely contributed by their labour, will be vastly reduced. Much misery and great distress will ensue, and a law nominally devised to be a blessing to the Indian female and child operatives will prove to them to be a curse. These only too probable results can hardly be regarded with any degree of satisfaction. The proposals contained in this Bill, to which the greatest objection can in my humble opinion be taken as being those most calculated to produce this disastrous result, are chiefly based on the resolutions of the Berlin Conference. I would wish to speak with all due respect of that Conference and the gentlemen who composed it, but I cannot refrain from pointing out that to the best of my belief there was no representative of India at the Conference, and, as far as I am aware, no gentleman who attended it had any practical knowledge of this country, its industries, and its conditions of labour. The conclusions of a body of experts conversant with European factory life, work and problems are naturally entitled to the greatest weight in all matters connected with factory administration in Europe; but that they are of equal value when it comes to dealing with questions of factory economy and labour in Asia, where the circumstances differ in toto-cælo from those obtaining in Great Britain, France, Germany, Belgium and other European countries, I am not prepared to admit. No comparison can be instituted between the habits, modes of life, standards of comfort; physical and mental powers, and circumstances of existence of an English mill-hand and an Indian operative. They are in all respects utterly dissimilar. Nor, again, is an English factory, with its strict discipline, formal rules strictly enforced and carefully obeyed, fixed hours, and its less numerous but more skilled and highly trained operatives, to be treated as being on the same footing as an Indian mill with its lax and easy-going discipline, its absence of strict methods, its lighter labour, and its multitude of, for the most part, small-sized, half-clad and uneducated hands. The two stand on entirely different levels. It is also necessary to bear in mind the immense difference in the quality of English and that of Indian labour. An English factory-girl does the work which in India it requires two or three male or three female adult operatives to perform. A cotton-factory which in England would employ one hundred hands would in India require three hundred hands. Of the hands, 75 per cent. would in England be women; in India the percentage of women would be below 60. Roughly speaking, therefore, an Indian female operative does about one-third of the amount of work which an English female operative performs, and the labour of the former, though lasting over a large number of hours, is distinctly light. An idea would seem to prevail in some quarters in England that the Indian operatives are cruelly overworked and miserably underpaid creatures, the slaves practically of rapacious European, and still more heartless and extortionate Native, mill-owners. A more erroneous and unfounded theory than this it is impossible to conceive. The Indian mill-hands are well paid, well treated and moderately worked. Their work is light, pleasant and highly paid as compared with that of their less fortunate brethren employed as coolies, agricultural labourers, or on roads, railways or public works. The woman who in a mill can easily earn under shelter, in an airy, commodious building, in what for her is luxury, her six annas or upwards a day, and has what is practically permanent employment, is infinitely better off in every way than she would be in her native village toiling in the fields, at times in heavy rain, at others under a blazing sun, deeming herself lucky if she gained a few coppers by selling for an anna or two a heavy head load of grass or a bundle of firewood which it took her hours to collect, and which then she had perhaps to carry for miles to the nearest market town, or considering herself favoured by fortune if she secured occupation for a fortnight as a coolie on a road-making or road-repairing job, and was paid three annas for a long day spent in carrying baskets full of earth or metal. To women of her class—and they constitute a very large proportion of the female population of this country—employment in a mill is by far the best and most remunerative occupation open, and this fact they fully recognize. Great consequently is the competition to secure engagements in mills, and the supply of candidates for employment always largely exceeds the demand.

"The interests of the Indian operatives, their health and happiness, are, I think, sufficiently safeguarded; but we are also bound, I respectfully submit, to consider the interests and well-being of another and important class not represented on or before the Factory Commission, and that is the owners of factories who, with much enterprise, at no small risk and by the outlay of millions sterling, have created and fostered in this country new industries, have made immense additions to the wealth of India, have introduced fresh manufactures, established cotton, jute and wool mills and other factories at all large centres over this great Continent, and have provided profitable and remunerative occupation for the vast numbers of their hard-working, industrious and in the main at present prosperous and contented employés. They have succeeded: in some respects and in some branches they have driven their European competitors out of the field; and in my humble opinion it would be an unfair and an impolitic measure to handicap them too heavily because they have won the race and to impose directly or indirectly on them burdensome restrictions not demanded by the circumstances of labour in this country, to enable their rivals from across the sea to recover wholly or in part the trade which has passed away from them. The Indian mill-owners, I submit, possess as strong a claim to the favourable consideration and the protection of the Indian Government as does any other class of its subjects. They have deserved well of the republic, they have started and perfected new industries, they have supplied employment to thousands of persons who, owing to the increase of population, would otherwise have experienced serious difficulty in earning a livelihood, and, speaking as regards the Bombay Presidency, I may say that they have thus, in furnishing occupation for the surplus population of the coast districts and Gujarat, averted what might have been a grave agrarian question, and which may yet become one. I am thoroughly and heartily in favour of all measures which are or have been found to be really requisite for the due protection of the Indian operative from excessive demands on his health, strength and stamina. I would most strongly support the adoption of any steps having as their true aim and actual result the prevention of overworking of the Indian mill-hands. But we should not, I submit, go beyond the real necessities of the case and impose by legislation restrictions on labour in this country, not called for by the circumstances of that labour, not demanded by either the employers or employed, and deprecated by both. We should, I think, protect the Indian operative within all reasonable limits, but we should not protect out of existence him and the industry which is his livelihood, nor should the protection of the Indian mill-hand be converted into a device for the protection of the British manufacturer against the Indian mill-owner.

"True and disinterested philanthropy is a specially estimable virtue, but when we find the English manufacturer selecting as the objects for the exercise of his spirit of benevolence men of other race, creed and hue who happen at the same time to be the employés of that manufacturer's most dangerous and successful competitors, when we see him urging the introduction of measures for the supposed amelioration of the condition of those employés calculated seriously to affect the industry of his rivals, it is not perhaps entirely unnatural to feel some suspicion whether the philanthropy thus displayed is altogether genuine and wholly unselfish. But the Indian operative, though in happy ignorance of Latin and Greek, ancient history and mythology, is sufficiently shrewd and sagacious, I think, to distrust the gifts thus offered him by the Greeks.

"Those of us who in India converse freely with Natives and read attentively the Native Press cannot fail to observe that a belief obtains that, when the interests, commercial and other, of England clash with those of this country, the interests of India are subordinated to those of England. This belief is, I fear, rapidly spreading, being fostered and stimulated by writers in the Native papers and other persons in a position to influence the comparatively uneducated masses; and I cannot but think that this notion that India is not being justly dealt with by England when purely English interests are at stake may eventually prove a source of political danger. I do not for a moment say that this belief is well founded. What I do say is that it exists and is increasing, and I should extremely regret to see any measure adopted which might furnish even a colourable pretext for holding it to be true. In my humble opinion there can be no doubt whatever that legislative enactments ostensibly for the amelioration of the condition of factory operatives in India, but in reality hampering their employment and thus prejudicially affecting both them and the industries of this country, whether passed by the British Houses of Parliament or by Your Excellency's Council, would greatly encourage the belief to which I refer, and the confidence of the people of India in the impartiality and beneficence of the British Government would receive a severe shock if the legislation regarding Indian mills and factories were imagined to be dictated or thought to be inspired by the manufacturers and manufacturing classes of Lancashire and Yorkshire."

The Hon'ble MR. EVANS said:—

"It may be that on general principles the Hon'ble Mr. Nugent is right, that the Bill placed before the Select Committee on the 7th of March was so different from the former Bill and from the Report of either of the Commissions that it ought, under ordinary circumstances, to have been sent out for the report of the various Local Governments before being passed by this Council.

"But the circumstances are peculiar, and, as the Hon'ble Mr. Mackay, who is himself a good judge in the matter and has had opportunities of consulting not only the Calcutta mercantile community but merchants in other parts of India, is satisfied that, after the alteration made in the Select Committee, the Bill will not seriously hamper or injure either the operatives or the manufacturers, I agree with him that it is better to pass it than to keep the matter open longer.

"It is with great satisfaction that I have come to this conclusion.

"This Bill has created a very uneasy feeling in the country. It was rumoured that there was a strong and hostile force at work—a force not animated by any desire to benefit either operatives or manufacturers. It was feared that this force had dominated the powers that be in England, and that the Government of India might possibly be in the position of a hypnotised patient acting on a suggestion.

"These fears were increased when it was found that the effect of one of the sections of the Bill laid before the Select Committee, which was borrowed direct from the Berlin Conference rules,—rules which were intended for Europeans only,—was to prevent women working at night in the tropics after 7 o'clock in the evening. This could not have emanated from an Indian source. It was absurd. People began to wonder whether the Commander-in-Chief would be allowed this year to commit the inhumanity of marching his soldiers at night in the hot weather when the brilliant light of a May sun was available.

"The Government of India, however, has justified its old traditions and the good opinion of its friends. It has accepted modifications calculated to render the Berlin rules more or less workable in the country, and, while protecting the operatives to the very furthest point which was possible without injuring them, has not been insensible to the interest of the manufacturers.

"There seemed every prospect at one time of very great friction over the Bill between Government and the mercantile community supported by public opinion, Native and European, throughout India. Such a struggle would have been a calamity to both parties, and not least to the Government.

"Though the Bill still contains matters that might well be dispensed with, I agree with the Hon'ble Mr. Mackay that it is best that it should be passed into law and the controversy closed; and I think both the Government and the mercantile community are to be congratulated on the result."

The Hon'ble MR. BLISS said:—

"I wish to explain my inability to entirely concur in the Report of the Select Committee on this Bill.

"Material modifications have been made in the Bill since it was introduced in January, 1890, by my hon'ble friend Sir Andrew Scoble. Many of these changes are in accord with the recommendations of the Indian Factory Commission which reported in November last, and have been generally approved. The Report of that Commission has, at all events, been before the Indian manufacturing public for a sufficient length of time for those interested to learn what was likely to be done, and to put forward such objections to the Commission's proposals as they wished to be considered. Personally, I agree almost entirely with those of the Commission's recommendations which have been embodied in the Bill. Indeed I wish that more of them had been adopted, for I regret that it has not been found possible to make some concession with regard to children over twelve years of age who are now working full time, or to exempt from the eleven hours' rule women who are now working for the same number of hours as the male operatives in certain mills, principally in Ahmedabad. I fear that the forebodings of the Commission with regard to these female operatives may be justified; and that a measure which is designed to benefit them may prove their ruin by causing mill-owners to dispense with their services and to employ in their stead male operatives, on the length of whose hours of labour there will be no legislative restriction. Probably these women, before the mills were started in which they are employed, were in the habit of working all day long in the sun as coolies carrying burdens or in agricultural field-work. I cannot therefore think that any harm would have been done by leaving them to work what hours they pleased at the mill-work to which they are accustomed. Their employment on good wages has, no doubt, given them new wants and a higher standard of comfort, and they will have no cause to thank this Council if the result of this legislation should be to deprive them of the chance of work, or to relegate them to a lower grade in the ranks of industry.

"But the Bill goes beyond the recommendation of the Indian Factory Commission in one particular which, it seems to me, may possibly be of very great importance. This is in the requirement that an interval or intervals of rest, amounting in the whole to one hour and a half in the full working day, shall be allowed to all female operatives. This is an entirely new provision, which was not considered by the Commission, and on which the persons interested have had no opportunity of expressing their views. It follows a recommendation of the Berlin Conference. But the protocols of the Berlin Conference have never been before the public of this country in such a way as to invite attention or to raise a suspicion that their essence would be incorporated in the factory law of India; nor would it spontaneously occur to any person who is acquainted with the conditions of Indian labour that rules and regulations which are applicable to European factories would necessarily be of advantage to operatives in this country. Take, for example, the Berlin rule that night work shall be prohibited in the case of women, to which my hon'ble friend Mr. Evans has drawn attention. The European idea of night is that it is a dark and cold and dreary time when every one who can had much better go to bed. The Indian idea is that it is a cool and pleasant time, when all work, which does not require a better light than can be easily and cheaply afforded, can best be done.

"Now, with regard to the one-and-a-half hours' rest prescribed for women: one-half hour of this will be common to all persons employed in factories. There remains one hour, by which period the women's work-day will be shorter than the men's; and the question is, how far will this additional restriction upon female labour disorganize operations in factories and intensify the evil effects, predicted by the Indian Factory Commission, of the eleven-hours' rule, and drive women out of employment. This is a question which I am not competent to answer. I gather from what my hon'ble friend Mr. Mackay has said that the rule will not operate injuriously in Bengal. This is because factories in Bengal work by shifts. It is also the case that the Bombay Mill-owners Association has given its opinion that the rule will do no harm there. But the meaning of this may only be that the rule will not injure the mill-owners, because, as the Commission learned had been determined at Ahmedabad, they may have made arrangements to dispense with female tenders of moving machinery and to employ only men. I should like to have heard more of the grounds of this opinion and to have learned the views of the female operatives themselves as to the way in which the change would affect them. Then, again, important though the mills of Bengal and Bombay are, those Provinces are happily not the only homes in India of manufacturing industries. There are large factories in Cawnpore and, I believe, in the Punjab; and in Madras not a few mills have been started of recent years, which afford regular and well-paid employment to numbers of persons who previously earned a scanty and precarious livelihood as common labourers. What is the opinion in these places of this new rule? Of the factories in the Madras Presidency, one is at Tuticorin and one at Papanassam in the Tinnevelly district, respectively six and seven days' post from Calcutta. What sort of chance have the proprietors and operatives of these distant factories had of considering this Bill, which was published in the Gazette of India on the 7th instant, and of submitting their views upon it? None whatever. Even if subscribers to the Gazette of India, they can hardly have had as much as one clear day in which to consider the effect of this new provision of law on the industry by which they earn their bread, and to make such representations to this Council as they thought necessary to guard their interests. I venture to think that it is very hard upon such persons that this Bill should have been taken up to-day, and that considering the length of time that has already elapsed since this Bill was introduced, and that it is not proposed to bring it into operation until the 1st of next January, some further time might have been allowed to persons interested in which to think the subject out and address to the Council such objections as they thought fit.

"I regret, my Lord, to detain the Council further, but I wish also to draw attention to the general question of factory legislation in this country. It will not be denied that in this matter the impulse is not of indigenous origin, but comes from England; nor, I fear, am I guilty of an injustice to some of those who profess an anxiety to save the Indian operative from the oppressions of alien taskmasters, and from the effects of confinement and overwork, if I suggest that, in some cases, the motive that underlies, or at least accompanies, the impulse is the hope that restrictions imposed on Indian factory labour may tend to the profit of the mill-owners and operatives of Lancashire. No doubt, both in the case of such persons and in that of the persons who advocate Indian factory legislation on purely philanthropic grounds and with no thought of self-interest, there is the densest ignorance of the real conditions of the case. Both classes regard the Indian operative as almost a slave, forced by hunger to labour from dawn to sunset for a miserable pittance, the inhabitant of a squalid hovel, bare of furniture and of every household convenience. But in truth his ways are not as their ways. His standard of comparison is with the coolie or with the agricultural labourer, who works all day for a smaller—generally much smaller—wage, without protection from the sun in the hot weather or from the rain in the monsoon. He neither needs household furniture, nor would know what to do with it if he had it. All these things they do not understand. They forget, or do not know, that the Indian mill-hand gets double the pay, with no more work, of his brother who ploughs the ancestral fields; that while at work he takes things so easily, and rests so often, that an Indian mill employs nearly three times as many hands as an English mill for the same outturn of work; and that every two or three years he takes a good long holiday and rests himself in the distant village in which he was born. If they knew these things, I think their course might be different. They might see that the best thing they could do for the Indian operative would be to let him alone. But the English ignorance of all things Indian is extraordinary. It will be most difficult, and an affair of years, to bring home to the minds of people in England that the conditions of labour in this country are quite different from the conditions of labour in Europe; that the desire of the Indian operative is rather to work longer hours than shorter, if so be he can earn more money by doing so; that he is naturally, probably because of the climate, one of the least likely of mankind to injure his health by doing more work than is good for him; in short, that the conclusions arrived at at Berlin in the interest of European operatives are by no means necessarily applicable in India. It was, therefore, with alarm that I read the terms of the question put in the House of Commons by Mr. Maclean, the member for Oldham, whether the provisions of this Bill would include as a minimum the rules adopted at the International Labour Conference of Berlin regarding age, hours of labour and hours of rest and refreshment. My Lord, I venture to think that this is a matter on which there should be a very clear understanding. The use of the words 'as a minimum' foreshadows an attempt to force upon the manufacturing industries of India restrictions which are absolutely unnecessary for the protection of the operatives and the effect of which must be the serious injury, if not the extinction, of the works to which they are applied. The present situation of India in this respect appears to me to be ominously like that of Ireland at the end of the seventeenth century. In both cases we have a subject agricultural country seeking to establish manufactures which will compete with the manufactures of the country which has subjected it. Let us hope that the parallel may not be carried further, and that England may not bring discredit upon herself by suppressing the cotton and jute industries of India as she suppressed the woollen industries of Ireland. So far as this Council can make its voice heard, I trust that it will give no uncertain sound, but will maintain, not that the rules of the Berlin Conference are to be enacted as a minimum, but that this Bill embodies the extreme restrictions which justice will permit to be imposed on the manufacturing industries of India."

The Hon'ble MR. NULKAR said:—

"Perhaps some explanation is due from me as to why I refrained from joining the three hon'ble members of the Select Committee who suggest republication of the Bill as now amended by that Committee before it was taken up for final consideration.

"It has been before this Council for over a year, and the unofficial public do not know the exact length of time during which it was undergoing the necessary process of departmental incubation. A strong belief is, however, entertained by the general public in India that the selfishness of the cotton-spinning electoral bodies of England have had a more potent voice in imposing this measure on India than any actually proved necessity for some at least of the stringent provisions it contains. I suppose that the English electors expect India to believe that their feelings of humanity are shocked when they imagine the extent of hardship to which the Indian factory hands may possibly be subjected by their employers. A speedy removal of these supposed grievances is according to those philanthropists, their sole object in moving in the matter. They also possibly believe that they have given India a satisfactory proof of this disinterestedness of theirs on behalf of the poor of India by successfully working for the abolition of the cotton-duties a few years ago, and thereby compelling the Government of India to enhance the salt-duty to make up the financial deficit. They probably hold that the Indian masses ought to cover their nakedness to a larger extent than they care to do with cheaper material, and to meet any extra expense of it by willingly foregoing the necessary diminution of their daily allowance of salt. The masses, however, are an ungrateful lot. They would cry to be saved from such disinterested friends, and would rather prefer, barbarians as they are, to have cheaper salt and less clothing. Some hon'ble members may perhaps be in possession of facts to rebut this universal complaint, from an official point of view. A more satisfactory course would be to publish unreservedly the entire official correspondence, including telegrams, on the subject of this Bill, between India and England, and to let the public judge and solve their doubts on the subject—a subject which, I may assure the Council, has been the cause of not a little irritation of feeling throughout India.

"If the Indian factory hands require relief and protection, the Local Governments, under the general advice and control of the Supreme Government, are the best judges to devise proper remedies suited to local circumstances. Under such able advocates of the labouring classes as Mr. Lokhanday, who usefully presides over the Bombay Factory Hands Association, the voice of the factory hands is by no means unheard or uncared for by Local Governments, who have always shown every willingness to relieve their legitimate grievances, and can dispense with officious pressure from competing English capitalists.

"Without directing my criticism against any particular section of the Bill, which certainly contains several hair-splitting provisions, the actual necessity for each of which has not been clearly demonstrated, I must lodge a protest at the attempt which appears to have been made by Parliament through the India Office to force on India some of the conclusions of the Berlin Conference, which had exclusive reference to European conditions, and in arriving at which Indian interests had not been properly represented.

"I think that this is one of those subjects which ought to be left entirely to Local Governments to deal with, on general principles laid down for their guidance, without foreign intervention. I do not, however, deny that, so far as the public can judge, India owes a debt of gratitude to this Government for doing its duty by manfully taking a firm stand to guard its industrial interests against unusual odds.

"The immediate consideration which weighed with me in not offering any objection to the passing of the Bill now was the reasonable apprehension that the fast approaching general election might possibly lead to a worse measure of interference with the infantile Indian industry; and I thought it wiser to pass the Bill in this session, and thereby save India from the possibility of a worse calamity, though the Bill contains provisions on which it would have been advantageous to have obtained further opinion of competent judges."

The Hon'ble MR. HUTCHINS said:—

"A good deal has been said by hon'ble members on the opposite side of the table as to the iniquity of interfering with Indian factories in the interests of English manufacturers and in deprecation of any Parliamentary action or resolution based on representations made by gentlemen who are either prejudiced by personal motives or at best have a very imperfect acquaintance with the actual state of things in this country. Now, I may say at once that I do not propose to offer any remarks in vindication of those who wish to impose injudicious and unnecessary restrictions upon Indian trade. Whether they are actuated by a desire to promote their own interests or those of their constituents, or by genuine though misplaced philanthropy, their endeavours can only be described as mischievous. To that extent, my Lord, I have a great deal of sympathy with my hon'ble friends, and I trust that this discussion may not be without effect in checking the mischief at which their remarks are aimed. But what I would venture to contend is that, however reasonable and true those remarks may be in the abstract, they are hardly pertinent to the only question which is now before us, namely, whether the Bill now on the table should be taken into consideration with a view to its being amended and passed. I confidently assert that the Government of India would never consent to promote a Bill which would involve the sacrifice of the true interests of Indian manufactures, or of the persons engaged in those industries, whether as mill-owners or operatives. Our sole desire is to do what is best for India, and quite independently of any outside pressure we consider that this Bill is in itself good for India. We have long considered it necessary that the Factory Act should be amended in several respects, and having once taken its amendment in hand our aim has been to provide a law of a simple and easily intelligible character, which will secure adequate protection for women and children according to the most approved standards, while at the same time it will do something for the amelioration of the conditions of factory labour in general. The Secretary of State also holds the same views. He has repeatedly asserted that the health of women and children, and the safety of operatives generally, must be the sole basis of all restrictive legislation, and that the question of the protection of English manufacturers against their Indian competitors cannot be allowed to enter into the matter at all. My Lord, I contend on that simple principle alone that this Bill is one which ought to be passed, and I venture to think that my hon'ble friends' remarks are only pertinent as showing that it is likely to be examined by hostile critics. It is not for that reason however that I ask them to pass it, but because it is in itself a fair and reasonable measure, because it will go far to put factories on a satisfactory footing, and because, if it may not have absolute finality, it is likely at least to endure for several years to come.

"A good deal has been said about the Berlin Conference and the inapplicability of its resolutions to this country, where the wants and conditions of the labourers differ very widely from those of European operatives, where the work is unquestionably much less severe, and where the struggle between capital and labour can hardly be said to have commenced, or at all events has not reached an acute stage. I grant at once that the Conference was not authorized to pass resolutions which should apply to India, and that their conclusions do not in any way bind us. I grant too that the members of that Conference knew nothing, or very little, of the real conditions of India. There is, however, one thing that they certainly did know something of, and that is the number of hours of work which women and children can bear without immediate or ultimate injury, and the intervals of rest necessary to enable them to endure such labour. On these points, making a slight allowance for earlier maturity, there cannot be any very great difference between Natives of India and Natives of European countries, and the Berlin resolutions seem therefore to be entitled to great weight. It is true that work in Indian mills is less severe, but surely the main reason why it is less severe is that spells of rest are freely taken. There is, however, no essential distinction between voluntary intervals and intervals secured by Statute. The point is that, voluntary or involuntary, they are necessary to health. The Hon'ble Messrs. Bliss and Nugent have both pointed out that Native women often work all day in the fields or on other exhausting labour; but they do not do this every day, nor are they liable to fines or other penalty for absenting themselves, as is the rule in many factories. While then I would not recommend that any of the resolutions should be literally or indiscriminately followed in every respect, I do think that the gentlemen who met at Berlin are entitled to our gratitude for having given us some sort of a standard by which we can frame a sound enactment which may be expected to stand hostile criticism and to have some measure of permanency.

"Coming now to the specific provisions of the Bill, I wish first to express my gratification that it has secured the support of the Hon'ble Mr. Mackay. I can truly say that his practical knowledge was invaluable to the Select Committee, and but for his moderation and good sense we should hardly have been able to report a Bill so generally satisfactory as I claim this to be. With regard to what my hon'ble friend has said about the age of thirteen, I submit that the recent Commission has given very excellent reasons, on the assumption that there must be a hard-and-fast line at which a child will at one bound step into the ranks of adults, for not fixing that age below fourteen.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Evans has also agreed that it is better to pass the Bill as it stands.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Nugent signed the Report in token of his personal approval of the Bill as it stands. He stated, however, that in his opinion it ought not to be passed 'until the various Local Governments and commercial and manufacturing bodies had been allowed a further opportunity of expressing their views concerning the new and important provisions embodied in it.' He has expressed himself as still favourable to nearly all our amendments of the present law, but he seems now to entertain serious doubts on two or three points. He has not proposed any amendments on his own account.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Bliss also signed the Report subject to the same single reservation. I gather from his speech that he is still prepared on the whole to accept the Bill, though he entertains some slight misgivings as to the effect of some of the provisions.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Nulkar has raised no objection to the Bill being proceeded with.

"My Lord, I hardly expected to have to defend any of our specific recommendations against the criticisms of any of those gentlemen who had signed the Report. Nevertheless I welcome this modified form of opposition, because it gives me occasion to go somewhat minutely into those parts of the Bill upon which the public will probably wish for some explanation. What then are the provisions to which exception has been taken? I gather from what has been said that there are only three upon which any stress is laid.

"The first is the provision that neither woman nor child shall work in a factory between 8 at night and 5 in the morning. No objection is made to the particular hours, but I gather that at least two hon'ble members would wish women to be perfectly free to work all night by artificial light. Now, as a matter of fact, if my information is correct and if I have not got confused over the enormous mass of reports already received to which two of my hon'ble friends are so anxious to add yet a further instalment, no children now work by artificial light, and I think most of us will agree that it is better not to allow them to commence the practice. Our Commissioners certainly seemed to think so, for at page 7 of their Report they refer with apparent approval to the probability that children would be prohibited from working by artificial light. It thus appears that the matter has to some extent been suggested to Local Governments, though they have not chosen to notice it. I think too that no women work at night except in a very few factories managed on the shift system, and we have made an express exception in favour of places where that system is adopted. In the factories in question I understand that the work must go on continuously day and night, and the hours of labour are far below our maximum; I believe they do not exceed eight. It is not alleged that either the Madras or the Bombay Government, or indeed any one else, has either by letter or telegram made any objection to this section of the Bill, although my hon'ble friends' dissent, or qualified assent, must certainly have attracted the attention of their respective Governments. It is true that the Gazette of India could not reach such a place as Tuticorin, referred to by the Hon'ble Mr. Bliss, under seven or eight days, but the main provisions of this Bill were telegraphed all over the country immediately after its publication.

"Then there are the provisions for the protection of women. The first remark which I have to make here is that the Bill introduced fifteen months ago fixed the maximum hours of labour for women, as now, at eleven, and provided that they should have rest for at least an hour. These points had been determined long before the appointment of Dr. Lethbridge's Commission and long even before the Berlin Conference. They cannot therefore be said to be novel. And then let us see who are the women affected by them. They work principally in the jute and cotton mills. But the jute-mills are worked by shifts, and under the shift system not only are the hours of labour less than eleven, but there can be no difficulty in arranging an intermediate rest. Of the female cotton operatives, as many as 80 per cent. are not employed with moving machinery, and can therefore choose their own hours. These, as the Commissioners testify, 'can and do take the necessary rests.' What remain are the 20 per cent. employed with machinery in cotton-mills and perhaps a somewhat similar percentage in a very few less important industries.

"Now, the limit of eleven hours has been confirmed by the Report of the Commissioners, and there has been such a consensus of opinion with regard to it that I may take it as unanimously agreed to. The only dissentients are such irreconcilables as the Calcutta Trades Association, which declares it to be a 'fatal error in any way to restrict the wage-earning capacity of a family.' If that doctrine is correct, I need hardly say that factory legislation throughout the world has been a mistake from first to last. In supporting this limit it is true that the Commissioners, or a majority of them, made one reservation. They feared it might lead to the Ahmedabad workwomen being summarily discarded, and they therefore wished Government to exempt those women individually as well as others similarly situated. Now, they based this proposal on a saving clause adopted at the Berlin Conference upon the motion of the Italian Delegate, and they make the following quotation from that Delegate's speech:—

> 'If the restrictions proposed for limiting the employment of women in different industries are too absolute, a result will be reached entirely opposed to that which is desired, and, instead of bettering the condition of numerous classes, a very serious sacrifice will be imposed on them.'

"The resolution carried was that exception be allowed for certain industries, and that is the principle adopted in our Bill, as will be further emphasized in one of the amendments which the hon'ble member in charge is about to propose. I can understand an exception in favour of certain classes of work which are not exhausting and yet must be fairly continuous, but I do not understand how we could logically refuse to protect individuals simply because they have not been protected heretofore. This remark I think meets the case of those children whom the Hon'ble Mr. Bliss seems to wish to exempt. I would recall to his recollection that the Select Committee considered the point and reluctantly but unanimously decided that individual exception could not be permitted.

'Next, as to the intervals of rest. The Bill in its present shape has raised the aggregate period from 1 to 1½ hours. This question of these intervals, I may observe, was not referred to the Commission at all. We regarded that as settled, as in our opinion it stands to reason that no woman should be allowed to work as much as eleven hours day after day without intervals of some considerable duration. The one hour's break has been before Local Governments for a long time,—more than a year; but I admit that the enlarged proposal is novel. I think, however, that it may be supported on many grounds, and I still adhere to the opinion that there is no real need for a further reference as to the extra half hour. That it is the standard adopted by the Berlin Conference is perhaps a small matter: we are not bound to take their estimate if we do not find it a reasonable one for India. But let us see why our own Commissioners declined to recommend any intervals of rest—a point upon which, as I have said, they were never consulted. They seem to have had two reasons. At page 3 they argue from the case of children that, outside the shift system, hands could only be employed in one or other of two classes, either as full-timers or as half-timers. They also referred to the Ahmedabad operatives, of whom I shall have something to say presently. Now, the case of children is really very different from that which we are considering. Their hours were limited to nine, which is as it were just half way between full time and half time. I can understand such a period as that leading to many practical inconveniences. But our proposal for women was eleven hours of work with one for rest, or very nearly full time; and obviously the nearer we can bring their hours up to full time the more likely they are to be continued in employment. Now, as Sir Andrew Scoble has shown, 11 hours of work plus 1½ of rest, or 12½ hours in all, is as nearly as possible equivalent to a full average working day. Ordinarily speaking, the women employed with moving machinery —and we need not consider any others—can come with the men at daylight and go with the men at dusk; and all that will be necessary will be to make some arrangement by which in rotation or otherwise they can take their appointed rests.

"I pass on now to the case of the Ahmedabad workwomen whom the Commissioners thought would probably be dismissed. They base this apprehension, it must be noted, not on the proposal to give intervals of rest, but on the fact that the hours of actual employment are to be limited to eleven. But I think I have made it clear that this limitation is almost universally accepted, and I have endeavoured to show further that the 1½ hours of rest, by bringing up the whole employment to what I may roughly describe as full time, is likely to better these women's chances of being kept on. At all events, it will not diminish those chances, as Dr. Lethbridge himself has assured the Government of India. The Commissioners describe the Ahmedabad system as follows:—

'Each machine has a woman and a boy or man to look after it. * * * With two operatives working on one machine it is nearly always possible for each of them to take frequent spells of rest.'

"What then is there to prevent the woman's joriwala or work-fellow from taking charge of the machine during her appointed periods of rest? He does so already at the odd times that she chooses to go out or take a spell of rest: how will the condition be changed by the simple fact that such intervals are arranged beforehand and notified in the work-room? I had the advantage of discussing this subject with Dr. Lethbridge some weeks ago, before the Select Committee met, and I certainly came to the conclusion—and my hon'ble colleague Sir Andrew Scoble, who was present, shared my conclusion—that there was very little chance of the threatened dismissal of these women being really carried into execution. I am glad to find now that this seems to be the view also of so excellent an authority as the Hon'ble Mr. Mackay.

"The Report (section 62) describes the employer, Mr. Rungchorelal Chotoolall, as a very philanthropic gentleman, but this of course is a matter of business, and I rely on his self-interest rather than his philanthropy. These women were described to me as well trained and exceedingly useful. If so, I can conceive no possible reason why they should be turned adrift simply because their hours of relaxation have to be fixed beforehand. As a matter of fact they will in relation to the men be exactly in the same position as the original Bill would have placed them, for the extra half hour has been given to male and female operatives alike.

"And what I have been saying about Ahmedabad applies almost as strongly to other factories also. Employers are described as 'generally liberal' about spells of rest, and not only women but men also 'go out frequently for five or ten minutes at a time.' Allowing half an hour at noon, when the machinery will be stopped, the hours proposed in this Bill will give a woman six hours before noon and six in the afternoon, each spell including half an hour of rest, which works out to just five minutes in each hour. I understand both from the Hon'ble Mr. Mackay and from the Commission's Report that this is about what is in practice allowed already in well-conducted establishments. Of course we are not legislating for such mills: we should be only too glad to leave them alone: the reason why we have to frame a law is to control the worse class of factories, where the employer is neither liberal nor considerate. In the good mills therefore we shall merely be maintaining the actual practice, while we shall compel the others to work up to the same reasonable standard. It has been said that the women themselves do not desire this, and certainly most of the witnesses seem to have been more impressed with a fear that they would be discharged than by any hope that their position might possibly be ameliorated. But Mr. Lokhanday, the President of the Bombay Mill Hands Association, did earnestly beg for this boon on their behalf. His demand, it is true, was for one hour only, but this was calculated on a working day of ten hours instead of eleven.

"Finally my hon'ble friend Mr. Mackay has informed us that both the Calcutta and the Bombay mill-owners, on whose behalf Mr. Nugent has expended so much eloquence, accept our proposal, and, as I have said in connection with the question of night work, no objection has been sent in against it. I well remember that in the Committee my hon'ble friend Mr. Nugent, the most ardent of our opponents upon this point, emphatically stated his own opinion to be that 1½ hours was the proper time to allow, and I think this was the view taken by every other member of the Committee. On the whole therefore I cannot see that there is any serious disagreement upon this point or any necessity for requiring further reports.

"The third matter is a cognate one, namely, the hours of work and rest proposed for children. The question depends on exactly the same considerations as those already discussed with regard to women. I may therefore deal with it somewhat more briefly. There is a consensus of opinion that children should be half-timers: the novel point, if any, is that they should have half an hour's rest when their work extends to six hours. I do not admit that this is really novel, for the Act now in force gives an hour's rest to nine hours' work, which if we maintained the same proportion would give forty minutes instead of thirty for six hours' labour. But apart from that, just as it is generally conceded that no woman ought to be allowed to work eleven hours at a stretch, so I think it will be admitted that a child should not exceed six hours continuously. Where children get rests now—and I understand the argument to be that they do get them in all well regulated establishments—there ought to be no difficulty in so adjusting the work that they shall be able to relax in rotation or otherwise for some stated intervals. The Commission do not question the desirability of some such provision, but they seem to apprehend that such intervals cannot be given where there is moving machinery. The answer to this seems to be that such rests are taken even now as a matter of practice: the Report itself show that there are extra hands employed, and that at the worst some joriwala or neighbour is always ready to see to the work in addition to his own.

"Here too my meaning will perhaps be made clearer by an illustration, and fortunately I have an exceedingly apt one ready to hand. The Council has doubtless noticed that an amendment is to be proposed which will have the effect of striking out a clause under which, where the shift system prevails, boys were to be allowed to work for two shifts of four hours each, or eight hours in all, with an interval of not less than two hours. This clause was inserted at the special request of the Hon'ble Mr. Mackay, in order to meet the case of boys in the Calcutta jute-mills, who, as he then thought, could not be brought under the seven hours clause. Subsequently some question arose, and on further conferring with my hon'ble friend I came to the conclusion that the general clause would completely cover their case. It seems that even now these boys are allowed about fifteen minutes in every hour, during the carrying out of some process at which they are not wanted. These rests will now be notified, and as they amount in eight hours to one hundred and twenty minutes the actual employment will not exceed six hours.

"I think this disposes of all the points about which any question has been raised, but there are still two or three matters regarding which the public may like some brief explanation. The first is as to the time at which these new provisions are to come into effect. We propose that the Act should not come into force till the beginning of next year. The object of this is to allow time for the necessary reorganization as recommended in paragraph 15 of the Commissioners' Report. Children will have to get certificates; arrangements must be made for the periods of rest; wages may have to be slightly re-adjusted,—that I think is the worst thing that will happen to women and children as a set-off against the ample and assured protection which we are giving them,—and factories entitled to exemption will have to apply for the issue of the necessary notifications. My hon'ble friend Mr. Bliss will see that all this will occupy some considerable time, and a similar interval would have to be given whenever the Bill became law. The fact of its being allowed therefore does not at all show that no harm would be caused by remitting the Bill for further reports.

"In the matters of female labour and of holidays it will be observed that the Government of India has reserved a general power of relaxation. We have taken this power for greater precaution as it is called—not because we think it very likely that we shall exercise it, for it is by no means our intention that the Act should be evaded or frittered away by exceptions—but because the industries which may fall under the Act are so numerous, and some of them so little known, that it is desirable that we should have the power to meet any difficulties which we cannot now foresee. I submit that this goes far to remove the only sound objection which either of my hon'ble friends has advanced to the Bill being passed into law at once.

"A good deal has been said—I do not mean in the course of this debate, but outside the Council—about schools for the half-timers. In this country there is no compulsory education, and we have not seen our way to require mill-owners to establish schools; but Local Governments will be very ready to encourage by grants-in-aid any that may be opened. It is believed that there cannot be many large factories which have not some sort of a school near them already.

"My Lord, I cannot conclude my remarks without publicly expressing the thanks of the Government of India to Dr. Lethbridge and his coadjutors on the Commission for the admirable manner in which they have discharged their duties. They undertook the task in a benevolent and liberal spirit, and I think with the Hon'ble Mr. Mackay that nearly all the recommendations contained in their Report exhibit sound common sense and a just appreciation of the practical difficulties of the situation. They have been generally accepted and most of them have been embodied in the Bill now under consideration.

"My Lord, I now submit that there is no real objection to that Bill being proceeded with at once. I think I have shown that the provisions which are supposed to require further discussion are not after all so novel as has been represented, and that even so far as they can be regarded as novel they have been expressly accepted by some of the principal parties concerned, while no one else has raised any objection to them. Two protests have indeed reached the Legislative Department, but they are not directed at any of the provisions which have here been called in question. I also submit that these are reasonable provisions, and this Council is quite competent to say if this is so or not. It is a matter of common practice for a Select Committee to alter a Bill considerably after discussing the various suggestions, more or less novel, which are laid before it. If every alteration were held to necessitate a republication in the technical sense of that term and a call for fresh reports, legislation would be a much more tedious and troublesome process even than it is at present."

The Hon'ble SIR ANDREW SCOBLE said:—

"The criticism which the Bill has met with from hon'ble members at the other end of the table, so far as it has been hostile, has related so little to what the Bill contains, and so much to what it might have contained had certain apprehensions been realised, that I need add nothing to the very clear explanations which my hon'ble friend Mr. Hutchins has given in regard to those provisions of the Bill to which exception has been taken. Indeed, my hon'ble friend Mr. Nugent advanced such excellent arguments in favour of the sections which have been most contested that I confess I was surprised that he should wish the passing of the Bill to be deferred. Postponement to-day means postponement not for a very few weeks, but until this Council meets again in Calcutta; and, as it is not desired by my hon'ble friend Mr. Mackay, who speaks in the name of the mercantile community, I hope that it will not be pressed.

"But there were two points in the speeches of my hon'ble friend Mr. Nugent and my hon'ble friend Mr. Mackay in regard to which I should like to make a few observations. In the first place, my hon'ble friend Mr. Nugent stated that the Bill submitted to the Select Committee was not the same Bill as that which I introduced in January of last year. That is an entire misapprehension on the part of my hon'ble friend. The Bill submitted to the Select Committee was the Bill originally introduced, but side by side with it, for the consideration of the Select Committee, according to the usual practice of the Legislative Department, was placed a skeleton Bill in which the Secretary had very carefully introduced and printed in italics all those additions and amendments recommended by the Factory Commission and other authorities which it was considered desirable to bring under the consideration of the Select Committee. It was perfectly open to the Select Committee to have set aside altogether that skeleton draft and gone to work on the original Bill, but, as a matter of convenience and economy of time, they took the skeleton draft as the basis on which to work, and converted it into the Bill which is now under the consideration of the Council.

"The second point to which I wish to refer is the request made by the Hon'ble Mr. Mackay that this Council should in a sort of indirect way point out the various industries to which the exemptions provided for in section 5B of the Bill would apply. It is impossible for this Council to give any indications in regard to such matters beyond those contained in the Bill. It will be for the Local Governments themselves to determine upon the representations of those interested in the industries concerned and upon a review of the circumstances of each case whether or not those industries come within the exemptions. I can give my hon'ble friend no further assurance than this, that I have no doubt that Local Governments will correctly construe this portion of the Bill, and will admit to the benefit of the exception such industries as may succeed in establishing a claim to exemption."

"I wish to offer one or two general observations before I put the question—not that I need occupy the time of the Council by endeavouring to show that we are called upon to take precautions for the protection of the operatives of India beyond those which already have a place in the statute-book. The attention of the public was directed five years ago to the insufficiency of the existing law by the Indian Factories Commission, and the recent report of the Commission, so ably presided over by Dr. Lethbridge, has given additional proof of the necessity of further legislation. The need of it is, I believe, generally admitted, and the employers of labour would, I am convinced, be the last persons to contend that they were to be exempt from restrictions of a kind which is recognized as necessary in all civilized nations. The question seems to be not whether legislation is necessary, but whether our legislation goes too far or not. Now, I can well understand that it should be looked upon critically by those who are connected with commercial interests in this country. In these days of fierce competition the markets of the world are disturbed even by the slightest alteration of the conditions under which commodities are produced, and it is conceivable that an increase in the stringency of existing factory laws might have the effect of seriously prejudicing Indian manufacturers. I do not, however, believe that the Bill upon the table is likely to have such an effect, or that, as far as its main provisions are concerned, it goes beyond what is necessary in order to give to Indian operatives the amount of security against overwork which, considering the circumstances of this country, is due to them. Our proposals have been framed with an earnest desire to hold the balance fairly between the interests of Indian industry and the demands which have been made for an even more strict regulation of the conditions of factory labour. We have had to consider what was due to the employers of labour, and what was due to the employed, and I am glad my hon'ble friend Mr. Mackay gives us credit for having held the balance fairly. We have felt throughout—and I believe that our feeling has been shared by the Chambers of Commerce and the principal employers of labour—that it was absolutely necessary for us to set our house in order, and to effect a settlement of this question which could be accepted both in India and at home as a thorough and sufficient settlement. In reference to what has been said by some of our hon'ble colleagues as to the suspicion that Indian manufacturers, or Indian factory hands, are being sacrified under pressure from the representatives of British manufacturing interests in the House of Commons, I may perhaps mention here that there are at this moment before the British Parliament no less than four Bills dealing with this subject and containing provisions for making the British law much more stringent than it is.

"It must not be forgotten that the assemblage of the Berlin Conference marks an epoch in the history of this question, and that it was impossible for the Government of this country, after the adhesion of Her Majesty's Government, to avoid giving effect to the principles which the Conference accepted. Now, it is perfectly true that the Conference took no special cognizance of factory labour other than that employed in European factories, and that the conditions under which labour is employed in Indian factories differ so widely from those under which it is employed in other parts of the world that it would be inequitable to apply to Indian factories the whole of the restrictions which are appropriate for the protection of European mill hands. We have not failed to recognise this distinction, and at certain points we have, as hon'ble members are aware, diverged considerably from the recommendations of the Berlin Conference.

"The Bill, for instance, recognizing the difference between night work in this climate, and in that of Europe, to which the Hon'ble Mr. Evans and the Hon'ble Mr. Bliss have so well called attention, permits the employment of female labour at night in factories where the shift system is in force, instead of following the Conference in discouraging it altogether. In the case of children, the Bill forbids their employment below the age of nine, whereas the Conference accepted a minimum of twelve, to be reduced to ten in southern countries. We are satisfied that in this country the age of nine is a reasonable equivalent. The Bill again does not create any class between children and adults. A lad of fourteen will be regarded by our law as an adult, instead of becoming a 'young person,' and, as such, entitled to an intermediate degree of protection. We have also considered ourselves justified in accepting a slightly longer maximum time of employment for children than that recommended by the Conference, although I have no doubt that it will only be in very rare cases that the half time during which children are to be employed in our mills will approximate to the maximum of seven hours which we have accepted as against the six hours' maximum of the Conference.

"We believe that the effect of our measure will be to place factory labour in India on a proper footing, and that our Bill will be accepted here and at home, not, as the Hon'ble Mr. Nugent would have us believe, as a mere 'prelude' to still further restrictions, but as a settlement as final as any settlement of such a question can be; nor I hope shall we, who believe in the great future of the mill industry of India, allow ourselves to suppose that such restrictions as those which we are about to impose will affect that industry with paralysis. The bases upon which its prosperity reposes are so solid as to render it in the highest degree improbable that the amount of interference to which it will be subjected is likely to arrest its development. I hold in my hand a statement illustrative of the progress which has been made by the cotton industry of India during the last decade. I find that our mills have increased during that time from 56 to 105, and the number of spindles from less than one and a half to more than two and three-quarter millions. The number of persons employed had nearly doubled within the same period, and the value of the exports, foreign and coast-wise, of the goods made has risen from 345 lakhs to 853 lakhs. These figures do not include the value of the trade which does not go by sea, but I believe that the increase of this also has been equally large. No development of Indian trade has been so remarkable as this rapid and uninterrupted progress; and, considering the advantage enjoyed by our factories from their proximity both to the fields in which the staple is grown, and to the markets which take their supplies from us,—considering the cheapness of Indian labour, and the stimulus likely to be given to our manufactures by the discovery of new coal-fields and the extension of our railway system,—we are surely justified in looking forward with the most sanguine anticipations to the future of this great industry.

"In the case of our jute-mills, although the figures are not so remarkable, a marked and satisfactory progress has been achieved during the past ten years. With such a past to look back to, and such a future lying before them, the mill-owners of India will, I feel sure, dismiss from their minds any timorous apprehensions as to the effects which this Bill is likely to produce upon them. They need not, I venture to think, be quite so much afraid of the competition of 'their rivals from across the sea' as the Hon'ble Mr. Nugent would have them be. We trust that employers and employed will adapt themselves to the new order of things, and that, if any interruption or inconvenience is occasioned, they will be of a temporary character. By restricting the hours during which women can be employed to eleven per diem, by limiting the hours of children to half time, providing in both cases a sufficient interval of rest, and by securing to the whole of the factory hands of India the weekly holiday, to the importance of which we ourselves are so keenly alive, we are, I venture to think, not conceding anything beyond what all reasonable employers of labour would themselves be prepared to concede. We are not without hope that they will find compensating advantages—advantages which have been found by British manufacturers under like circumstances—in the increased efficiency of the work which will be done for them under the new conditions, and we look to them to co-operate loyally with us in seeing that the provisions of the Act are observed in the spirit as well as in the letter."

The Motion was put and ageed to.

The Hon'ble SIR ANDREW SCOBLE also moved that the following amendments be made in the Bill as amended, namely:—

1. That in sub-section (4) of the new section 6 embodied in section 10 of the Bill as amended the words "all or any of" be inserted after the word "declare", and that the words "or to women employed in any process so described" be added at the end of the sub-section.

2. That for sub-sections (3) and (4) of the new section 7 embodied in section 10 of the Bill as amended the following be substituted, namely:—

"(3) No child shall be actually employed in any factory for more than seven hours in any one day.

"(4) Every child who is actually employed in any factory for six hours in any one day shall be allowed an interval or intervals of rest amounting in the aggregate to at least half an hour."

3. That in sub-section (1) of the new section 10 embodied in section 10 of the Bill as amended, for the words and figures "sub-sections (3) and (4)", the word and figure "sub-section (4)" be substituted.

4. That the words "Subject to the control of the Governor General in Council" be inserted at the commencement of sub-section (1) of the new section 18 embodied in section 16 of the Bill as amended; and that for sub section (2) of the same section 18 the following be substituted, namely:—

"(2) The Governor General in Council may from time to time make rules requiring occupiers of factories to furnish such returns, occasional or periodical, as may be necessary for the effectual carrying out of this Act."

5. That in sub-section (2) of the new section 20 embodied in section 18 of the Bill as amended, for the words "between fifty and twenty" the words "below fifty and not below twenty" be substituted.

The Hon'ble MR. MACKAY said:—

"My Lord, it was with regret that I found that the Government had thought it necessary to bring in an amendment to the Bill as submitted by the Select Committee, which amendment will have the effect of withdrawing the eight hours option for children who work in shifts of not over four hours each with an interval of two hours between the shifts. Seeing the age of children has been raised two years, I think the eight hours option recommended by the Select Committee might have been allowed to stand; but, looking to the remarks which have fallen from the Hon'ble Mr. Hutchins on the subject, I am prepared to accept the amendment."

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble SIR ANDREW SCOBLE also moved that the Bill, as amended, be passed.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

MOORSHEDABAD BILL.

The Hon'ble SIR ANDREW SCOBLE moved for leave to introduce a Bill to confirm and give effect to an Indenture between the Secretary of State and the Nawab Bahadoor of Moorshedabad, Amir-ul-Omrah. He said:—

"Saiyid Munsur Ali, the last of the Nawabs Nazim of Moorshedabad, retired in 1880, and was succeeded by his son Ali Kadr, upon whom the hereditary title of Nawab Bahadoor of Moorshedabad was conferred in 1882. The terms under which Munsur Ali retired were arranged between him and the Secretary of State, but it was left to the Government of India to embody the details of the arrangement in a deed of settlement which should be accepted by his successor. The discussion of these details has occupied a much longer time than was expected, and it was only last week that the deed was executed. The object of the Bill which I now ask leave to introduce is to confirm and give effect to the provisions of this deed, which have been approved both by the Secretary of State and by the Nawab Bahadoor.

"As the Nawab is, I regret to say, in a somewhat precarious state of health, he is particularly anxious that this Bill should be passed during the present sitting of the Council, and I shall therefore ask Your Excellency to suspend the rules, in order that it may be carried through the remaining stages on Saturday."

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble SIR ANDREW SCOBLE also introduced the Bill.

The Hon'ble SIR ANDREW SCOBLE also applied to His Excellency the President to suspend the Rules for the Conduct of Business.

The President declared the Rules to be suspended.

The Hon'ble SIR ANDREW SCOBLE also moved that the Bill be taken into consideration at the next meeting of the Council.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

REPEALING AND AMENDING BILL.

The Hon'ble SIR ANDREW SCOBLE moved that the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to repeal certain Obsolete Enactments and to amend certain other Enactments be taken into consideration. He said:—

"The schedules to this Bill have been carefully examined both in the Legislative Department and by the Select Committee; and Local Governments have been consulted, and their suggestions scrupulously followed, with regard to such enactments as relate more especially to the Provinces under their administration. I think therefore that I may safely ask the Council to accept the Bill without fear that our desire to remove dead matter from the statute-book will lead to inconvenience or difficulty in the construction or administration of the law.

"So far as the Bill is an amending Bill there is only one matter which, I think, requires special reference. Under Bengal Regulation III of 1822, the distribution of business between the members of the Board of Revenue, and the confirmation of settlements of land-revenue, are left to be determined by the Governor General in Council. This arrangement, suitable enough at the time when the Governor General was also Governor of Bengal, has become obviously inconvenient now that the direct administration of Bengal is no longer in the hands of the Government of India. Advantage has therefore been taken of the opportunity afforded by this Bill to place the Local Government of Bengal on the same footing as other Local Governments, and to empower the Lieutenant-Governor to exercise the functions which properly belong to him in both these respects."

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble SIR ANDREW SCOBLE also moved that the Bill, as amended, be passed.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

INLAND STEAM-VESSELS ACT, 1884, AMENDMENT BILL.

The Hon'ble SIR DAVID BARBOUR moved that the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to amend the Inland Steam-vessels Act, 1884, be taken approval, into consideration. He said:—

"When introducing this Bill I explained that its main object was to divide inland steam-vessels into three classes for certain purposes instead of into two classes as at present. This change in the law has met, I may say, with universal approval, and I need not dwell further on the subject.

"The Select Committee proposes to alter the words 'third class master' into 'serang'. The change seems desirable; it is generally better to call men by the names which they actually bear than to invent new ones for them.

"In one respect there has been some misapprehension, and, though the misapprehension has been largely allayed already, I may as well allude to the matter. It has arisen in connection with section 28 (4). It has been said that it is quite unnecessary to make the masters and engineers referred to in that sub-section take out certificates under the Inland Steam-vessels Act, the certificates they already possess under other Acts and Regulations being a sufficient guarantee of their fitness. As to this I would explain that the certificates they possess under other Acts may be a sufficient guarantee of fitness, but, for various reasons which I need not dwell on, it is impossible to withdraw those other certificates if the holders are guilty of misconduct when employed in an inland steam-vessel.

"On this account it is proposed that such persons must also, if the Local Government so direct, possess a certificate under the Inland Steam-vessels Act; if they possess a certificate under the Inland Steam-vessels Act, it becomes possible in case of misconduct to withdraw that certificate and so to prevent the offender from again taking charge of an inland steam-vessel.

"This provision of the law need not be put in force in any Province where it is not required, and power is taken to make the grant of the certificate under the Inland Steam-vessels Act little more than a formality in the case of men who already possess the other certificates referred to. When explained in this way, there is really no objection to sub-section (4) of section 28, and it serves a useful purpose."

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble SIR DAVID BARBOUR also moved that the Bill, as amended, be passed.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

OUDH COURTS BILL.

The Hon'ble MR. WOODBURN moved that the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to amend the constitution of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh and alter the Law with respect to Second Appeals and other matters in that Province be taken into consideration. He said:—

"It was explained on the introduction of the Bill that its object was to strengthen the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh and to assimilate the law of appeal in civil suits in Oudh to that which obtains in other parts of India.

"The alterations of the Bill in Select Committee have been few.

"At the instance of the Judicial Commissioner and the Lieutenant-Governor, the hearing of civil appeals by the two Judicial Commissioners sitting together will ordinarily be limited to cases involving claims above Rs. 10,000 in value; and power has been given to the Judicial Commissioner to recall a case which has been made over to the Additional Judicial Commissioner. The Select Committee recommend that, when the two Judicial Commissioners have referred to the High Court a difference of opinion in a case respecting the confirmation of a sentence of death, power should be given to the Chief Justice, when he sees fit, to send the case to a Bench of the High Court instead of to a single Judge. The reference to the High Court in the case of such differences of opinion has been accepted by the Lieutenant-Governor as the solution best suited to the circumstances in which the Bill has been brought forward.

"Under the Act of 1879, when an appeal is preferred to the Judicial Commissioner from a judgment or order passed by him in any other capacity, or in which he has a personal interest, he was required to report the fact to the Local Government, which might transfer the case to the High Court or appoint an officer to be an Additional Judicial Commissioner for the disposal of the case. Now that there are to be two Judicial Commissioners, it is simpler to provide that in any such case the appeal shall be heard by the other Judicial Commissioner.

"The Bill needs no further remarks. I should personally have been glad to see a larger measure for the better administration of justice in Oudh, but the people of the Province are to be congratulated on an adjustment which at least gives them what they have not hitherto had, a hearing in the final stage before two Judges in all capital cases and in all civil suits of importance or intricacy. The civil litigation in a rich and prosperous province, characterized by large landed properties, is frequently of great pecuniary value; and, alike in the decision of these cases and in the confirmation of death sentences, the Judicial Commissioner's post has hitherto been one of such isolation as to make the duties of his office among the most anxious and arduous within my knowledge. In these he will now have, to his relief and to the great benefit of the province, the help of a permanent colleague."

The Hon'ble THE RAJA OF BHINGA said:—

"The Bill as it stands at present has my cordial support. But at the same time I respectfully beg to add that the establishment of a Chief Court would have been more satisfactory to the Taluqdars and legal practitioners of Oudh than the present arrangements. With this observation I vote for the passing of the Bill."

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble MR. WOODBURN also moved that the Bill, as amended, be passed.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

MOORSHEDABAD BILL.

The Hon'ble SIR ANDREW SCOBLE moved that the Bill to confirm and give effect to an Indenture between the Secretary of State and the Nawab Bahadoor of Moorshedabad Amir-ul-Omrah, be taken into consideration.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble SIR ANDREW SCOBLE also moved that the Bill be passed.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT for 1891-92.

PART I.

IMPERIAL REVENUE AND EXPENDITURE.

Preliminary.

In the Financial Statement for 1890-91 Imperial Revenue and Expenditure were dealt with, for the first time, in a separate section (Part I) of the Statement. The object of this innovation was to present an account of the financial position of the Government of India which, by excluding all matters of minor importance and all questions relating to Provincial and Local Finance, would be more easily understood by the general public.

The change has, to some extent, secured the object with which it was made, and the practice will be continued in the present and future years. It should be recollected that Part I gives only a general outline of the financial position of the Government of India, and that those who wish for fuller information must turn to Part II.

Section I.—Accounts of 1889-90.

2. The Budget Estimate of 1889-90 showed a surplus of Rx. 106,300. The Revised Estimate of the same year, issued in March last, showed a surplus of Rx. 1,809,700, after postponing for a year the special contribution of Rx. 490,000 from Local Governments and increasing the Famine Grant* by Rx. 427,500. The Final Accounts of the year now show a surplus of Rx. 2,612,000, being an increase over the Revised Estimate of Rx. 802,300. The Final Accounts invariably give a better result than the Revised Estimate, and improvement was foretold when the Revised Estimate of 1889-90 was published.

The improvement has proved to be greater than was expected, owing to a general improvement in Revenue, to larger Land Revenue collections in Madras, and to reduced Expenditure, which occurred mainly in England under Army and Special Defence Works, but partly in India also.

Unusually high collections of Land Revenue are necessarily followed by a corresponding reduction in future months, and Ordnance Stores and Special Defence Stores that have been ordered must be paid for sooner or later, so that the whole improvement does not represent a permanent gain.

The year 1889-90 was, however, one of great financial prosperity, though the actual surplus was swollen by accidental causes.

Section II.—Revised Estimate of 1890-91.

3. The Budget Estimate of the year which is now about to close, was framed in March 1890, and showed a surplus of Rx. 270,400.

The Revised Estimate of the same year, framed in the present month, shows a surplus of Rx. 2,787,100, and I have little doubt that, as usual, the actual surplus of the Final Accounts will materially exceed that of the Revised Estimate.

* To prevent misapprehension, I may mention that the words "Famine Grant" are used merely to indicate shortly what is ordinarily known as the "Grant for Famine Relief and Insurance," and that their employment does not indicate any change of policy.

4. A mere catalogue of increases and decreases under every head of account, each item being accompanied by remarks not readily intelligible to the general reader, would present only a confused picture of the finance of the year, and the causes which have led to the increased surplus will be shown more clearly if the Revenue and Expenditure be dealt with according to certain divisions which, if they do not constitute a perfect classification, are at least not wholly artificial.

For present purposes I shall deal with Revenue and Expenditure under four great heads—(1) the Military Account, which includes all Expenditure under Army, Military Works, and Special Defence Works, (2) the Railway Revenue Account, (3) Other Revenue and Expenditure, excluding Exchange, and (4) that peculiarly fluctuating element which has a column to itself in our Accounts and is called Exchange.

The same classification will be followed both in dealing with the Revised Estimate of 1890-91 and the Budget Estimate of 1891-92.

Exchange.

5. The most remarkable feature of the year 1890-91 has been the great fluctuations in Exchange, and the higher average level at which it has stood.

In the Budget Estimate the rate of Exchange was taken at 1*s.* 4·55*d.* per rupee. The highest rate obtained by the Secretary of State during the year was 1*s.* 8·94*d.*, the lowest 1*s.* 5*d.*, and the average rate of the year has been 1*s.* 6·11*d.*, an increase over the rate taken in the Budget of 1·56*d.* per rupee.

The rise in Exchange has given an improvement of Rx. 1,926,500 in the Exchange on the net sterling Expenditure; the rate of Exchange of the year also affects the amount of the receipts shown under XXIV Exchange, and the rise in Exchange has, in the current year, reduced those receipts by about Rx. 200,000.

Civil Revenue (excluding the Railway Revenue Account).

6. Excluding the Railway Revenue Account, the total Civil Revenue, as shown in the Revised Estimate, is almost the same as in the Budget Estimate, there being an increase of Rx. 69,900 in India and of £137,900 in England. Although the total revenue of the two Estimates is nearly the same, there have been important fluctuations under particular heads. Excluding Revenue from Opium, the increase under the Principal Heads of Revenue amounts to Rx. 520,500, the chief items of increase being Rx. 213,500 under Salt, and Rx. 160,500 under Customs. There is an increase in Mint receipts of Rx. 120,000, and under Irrigation of Rx. 78,500.

In the Home Accounts there is an increase of £104,000 under the head Interest, which is due to the Secretary of State having been able to lend a portion of his cash balance at favourable rates, and an increase of £31,000 under Medical owing to the sale of the Ealing Lunatic Asylum. On the other hand, the decrease in Opium Revenue is Rx. 328,300, and under XXIV Exchange it is Rx. 313,500. Minor fluctuations, which need not be specially noticed in this place, reduce the total increase of Civil Revenue in India to Rx. 69,900 and raise it in England to £137,900.

7. Of the increases which have taken place, some represent a growth of revenue which will in all probability be permanent; but a portion of the increase under Salt is due to a change in the date of payment of the duty in Madras and is merely temporary, while the increase in Mint receipts and the chief increases in the Home Accounts are due to special causes and cannot be expected to occur in future years.

The nature of the receipts under XXIV Exchange was explained in the Financial Statement for 1889-90; they arise mainly under the Contracts with certain Railway Companies, and depend on the magnitude of the transactions that take place in any year and on the variation between the actual Exchange of the year and the fixed rates of Exchange which have been adopted in the Contracts. The receipts under this head have fallen off partly because the rate of Exchange rose during the year, and so reduced the difference between the average rate of the year and the Contract rates, and partly because the Capital transactions have been smaller.

The falling off in Opium Revenue and in receipts under XXIV Exchange arises from causes which are in no way connected with, or dependent on, the general well-being of the country.

The growth of permanent Revenue during the year has been moderate; but it will be remembered that there was a great and unusual increase of Revenue in the year 1889-90, and, taking the two years together, there is ample reason to be satisfied with the rate of growth of that portion of the Civil Revenue which is dependent on the general progress of the country.

Civil Expenditure (excluding the Railway Revenue Account).

8. Civil Expenditure in India, excluding the Railway Revenue Account, shows a reduction of Rx. 86,400, and Civil Expenditure in England an increase of £53,500. The variations from the Budget under the different heads have not been very great, the chief increases of expenditure in India being under Interest (Rx. 141,200), owing to the special payments in connection with the conversion of a portion of the 4½ per cent. loan, and under Political (Rx. 76,700), owing chiefly to the payment of arrears of his subsidy to the Amir of Afghanistan and to additional political expenditure in Biluchistan.

On the other hand, there were savings in expenditure under Opium (Rx. 110,000), and Stationery and Printing (Rx. 44,000), owing, in the former case, to a poorer crop than had been expected, and in the latter to smaller purchases in India. There was also a saving of Rx. 65,300 in the cost of Police, most of it in Upper Burma.

In England there has been an increase of £40,400 under Superannuation Allowances, due chiefly to the adoption of a minimum exchange of 1*s.* 9*d.* per rupee for the payment of rupee pensions. There are also increases, somewhat less in amount, under Interest and Marine, and Territorial and Political Pensions, and a saving of £41,000 in Civil Furlough and Absentee Allowances.

Railway Revenue Account.

9. The Railway Revenue Account, in so far as the transactions are Imperial, shows a net improvement of Rx. 823,000; but this is due to the improvement in Exchange. Receipts, which are almost wholly Indian, show a falling off of Rx. 350,500, due to reduced traffic, while the Expenditure recorded in the Indian portion of the Accounts shows a reduction of Rx. 439,000, due to the lower cost of working the State Railways. The sterling Expenditure is almost exactly the same as that in the Budget Estimate; but the reduction in the column headed Exchange is no less than Rx. 719,600.

The question of Exchange so intimately affects the Railway Revenue and Expenditure that it is practically impossible to eliminate its influence from the Railway Revenue Account with complete accuracy; but as the net Indian receipts exceed the amount entered in the Budget by only Rx. 87,600, while the net

English expenditure is less by only £15,600, it will be obvious that the total improvement in the year of Rx. 823,000 is, really, due to the rise in Exchange.

Military Expenditure.

10. The direct Military Expenditure appears in the Accounts under the three heads of (1) Army, (2) Military Works, and (3) Special Defences.

In the Revised Estimate, the rupee Expenditure in India and the sterling Expenditure in England under the head Army are nearly the same as in the Budget Estimate, there being an increase in net Expenditure of Rx. 136,000 in India and a net decrease of £34,300 in England. There is, of course, a large saving in Exchange on the sterling Expenditure.

Under Military Works there is an increase in Expenditure of Rx. 64,700 in India, a decrease in the Home Expenditure of £1,500, and an increase of receipts in India amounting to Rx. 5,600.

Under Special Defences there is short Expenditure amounting to Rx. 162,500 in India and to £125,500 in England; this is merely a postponement of Expenditure, and not a real saving.

Summary.

11. The whole history of 1890-91 may then be summed up in the following manner.

During 1890-91 there has been a moderate, but not unsatisfactory, growth of Revenue, under the ordinary Civil Heads in India, which growth has been swallowed up by the falling off in Opium Revenue, and in the receipts which are recorded under the head XXIV Exchange. Special causes have given some increase of Revenue in England, and there are also increases of Revenue in India which are due to temporary causes and are not part of the normal growth of income.

On the Expenditure side of the Account the total variation in the Civil Departments from the Budget Estimate is small, both in England and in India.

In the Railway Revenue Account there is a reduction in receipts, due to falling off in traffic, which is balanced by diminished cost of working.

Under Army, the net Expenditure, taking Indian and Home receipts and payments together, does not differ materially from that entered in the Budget, while under Military Works there is an increase in the Indian Expenditure of Rx. 64,700. Under Special Defences there is short Expenditure in India of Rx. 162,500, and in England of £125,500.

The rise in Exchange has given an improvement on net sterling Expenditure of Rx. 1,926,500. In other words, the total Civil Revenue, and, in a still greater degree, the total Civil Expenditure of the Revised Estimate of 1890-91, closely follow the figures of the Budget; a marked falling off in Railway Traffic has been met by reduced cost of working; there is some increase of Expenditure under Army and Military Works; a remarkable rise in Exchange and short Expenditure on Special Defence Works have caused a great increase in the estimated surplus of the year. The surplus of the Budget Estimate was Rx. 270,400; the surplus of the Revised Estimate is Rx. 2,787,100, an increase of Rx. 2,516,700. The effect of the rise in Exchange on the net sterling Expenditure and the short Expenditure under Special Defences give an improvement of Rx. 2,271,000; if allowance be made for the effect of the rise in Exchange on the receipts under XXIV Exchange this is reduced to Rx. 2,071,000.

12. The large surplus of the year 1890-91, as now estimated, does not arise from causes which can be contemplated with complete satisfaction. The rise in Exchange has already been lost to a very great extent; the fall in the price of Opium continues, and the receipts under XXIV Exchange will diminish still further, as the total transactions from which they arise are reduced in amount: the short Expenditure under Special Defences is a postponement of the burden, and not a real saving.

The coming year will, therefore, open under conditions somewhat different from those which I was able to announce in the Financial Statements of 1889-90 and 1890-91.

Section III.—Budget Estimate of 1891-92.

Surplus of 1891-92.

13. The Budget Estimate of the coming year shows a surplus of only Rx. 115,600, which practically means that Revenue just balances Expenditure.

Exchange.

14. In the Budget Estimate for 1891-92 the rate of Exchange is taken at 1*s.* 5·25*d.* per rupee as against an average rate of 1*s.* 6·11*d.* obtained in 1890-91. This reduction causes an increase of Expenditure which may, in round numbers, be put at Rx. 1,000,000.

Civil Revenue (excluding the Railway Revenue Account).

15. The total Civil Revenue in India (excluding the Railway Revenue Account) is less than that of the Revised Estimate of the preceding year by no less than Rx. 692,600. The sterling receipts in the Home Estimates are less by £167,900.

The reduction in the Revenue Received in India is due to a variety of causes.

The Salt Receipts and the Mint Receipts of 1890-91 have been swollen by causes which cannot be expected to recur; and, consequently, there are reductions of Revenue under these heads in the Budget Estimate of 1891-92, which amount, respectively, to Rx. 105,900 and Rx. 97,700. Under Opium a further reduction of Rx. 281,600 is expected, and under XXIV Exchange a further reduction of Rx. 88,600.

These figures account for a total decrease in Revenue of Rx. 573,800.

In 1890-91 we received from Local Governments a special contribution of Rx. 490,000, the adjustment being effected by the Provincial Governments surrendering an equivalent amount of Provincial Land Revenue to the Imperial Government for that year only. There is no such receipt in 1891-92, and consequently the Imperial Revenue for 1891-92, which is that with which I am now dealing, is reduced by this amount. The growth of Land Revenue, however, reduces the actual loss to Rx. 266,800, and adding this amount to the sum of Rx. 573,800, to which I have just referred, a falling off in Revenue of Rx. 840,600 is accounted for. The net result of the increases and decreases under other heads of minor importance is an improvement of Rx. 148,000, making the total reduction of Civil Revenue in India in the Estimate of 1891-92 Rx. 692,600, as compared with the Revised Estimate of 1890-91. The falling off in sterling Revenue in England is due to the receipts of 1890-91 having been swollen by the interest received by the Secretary of State on a portion of his cash balance and by the sale proceeds of the Ealing Lunatic Asylum.

Civil Expenditure (excluding the Railway Revenue Account).

16. The Civil Expenditure in India, as entered in the Budget Estimate for 1891-92 (excluding the Railway Revenue Account), exceeds that of the Revised Estimate of the current year by Rx. 537,500, while in the sterling Expenditure there is a reduction of £28,200. The increased Expenditure in India is the net result of a large number of increases and decreases under particular heads, the most important of which are due to special causes.

The chief increase is due to the Famine Grant being now raised to the full amount of Rx. 1,500,000, in accordance with the policy announced in the Financial Statement of March 1890. The increase on this account alone amounts to Rx. 448,000. There is also an increase of Rx. 80,000 on account of a better Opium crop, of Rx. 114,300 under Scientific and Minor Departments, due to Census Operations, and of Rx. 50,300 under Forests, while there is a reduction in the Indian charge for Interest on Debt (not charged against Railways and Canals) of Rx. 355,300. These figures give a net increase of Rx. 337,300, and the balance of Rx. 200,200 is due to ordinary fluctuations and increases of no special importance, and to that tendency to make a safe Estimate which, perhaps fortunately, appears to be universal. The reduction in the Home Expenditure is mainly due to a less charge for Interest on ordinary Debt.

Although the apparent increase of expenditure in 1891-92 is considerable, an analysis of it affords ground for satisfaction. The increase under the Famine Grant is a distinct financial gain, and so is the better Opium crop, while the additional cost for the Census is temporary and will not appear in 1892-93. Not the least satisfactory item is the reduction of the charge for Interest on Debt.

To the extent of Rx. 140,800 this reduction is due to the special payments in 1890-91 on account of the conversion of Rx. 8,313,200 of the 4½ per cent. debt, which, of course, will not recur in the coming year; Rx. 41,600 is due to the lower charge for interest which arises from the conversion, and the balance to the fact that the large surpluses of the years 1889-90 and 1890-91 have, with the exception of the small loan of two crores in 1889-90, rendered it unnecessary for the Government of India to issue fresh loans during the three years 1889-90, 1890-91, and 1891-92. The expenditure on Railways and Productive Canals has been mainly met from surplus revenue, and the charge for Ordinary Debt has been proportionately reduced.

The Railway Revenue Account.

17. Under the Railway Revenue Account net receipts in India are expected to decrease by Rx. 113,100, and net expenditure in England to decrease by £11,600, as compared with the Revised Estimate of the current year.

There are distinct signs at present of a revival in Railway traffic, and it may be hoped that (excluding Exchange) the Railway Revenue Account will show better results in 1891-92 than in 1890-91. The lower rate of Exchange causes the Railway Revenue Account in the Estimate for 1891-92 to show on the whole less favourable results than in 1890-91, but the falling off due to this cause has already been included in the total increase of Expenditure arising from the fall in Exchange.

Military Expenditure.

18. Under Army, there is a net decrease of Rx. 200,500 in India, and a net increase of £78,700 in England. The various changes which account for these results are given at some length in Part II. It will suffice to say, in this place, that the continued high Expenditure in England is due to the demands for ordnance stores, including magazine rifles, 12-pr. guns, machine guns, and so forth, and that the reduced Expenditure in India is, to the extent of Rx. 180,000 in round numbers, due to the higher rate of Exchange for the payment of British troops.

Under Military Works there is a decrease of Rx. 71,900 in India and of £14,100 in England.

Under Special Defence Works there is an increase of Rx. 96,700 in India and of £153,800 in England. The Special Defence Works have been estimated to cost Rx. 5,000,000 in all, and an increase or decrease of Expenditure in any one year is not of much importance, since, sooner or later, the total Expenditure will amount to about that sum. It is unfortunate that hitherto the lapses in grants made for the year have generally been so great; the occurrence of lapses burdens the estimates of future years with Expenditure which, from a financial point of view, might more conveniently have been spent in years in which there was a considerable surplus.

The total Expenditure on Special Defence Works to the end of 1891-92 is estimated to amount to Rx. 3,768,830, leaving Rx. 1,231,170 to be incurred in succeeding years.

Summary.

19. It will be convenient to re-state in a few words the causes which have reduced the large surplus of the current year to what is practically equilibrium between Revenue and Expenditure in the year 1891-92.

In the first place (excluding the Railway Revenue Account) there is a reduction in Civil Revenue of Rx. 692,600 in India and of £167,700 in England; these reductions are due (1) to the non-recurrence of certain special receipts of 1890-91, (2) to a further falling off in Opium Revenue and in receipts under XXIV Exchange, and (3) to the cessation of the special contribution of Rx. 490,000 from Local Governments, which was received in the current year; and they are partially balanced in India by an increase of Rx. 223,200 under Land Revenue and by other receipts.

There is a considerable increase in Civil Expenditure, which is due to provision being made in connection with the Famine Grant for the full sum of Rx. 1,500,000, to the higher cost of Census operations, to a better Opium crop, and to ordinary improvements in administration, balanced, in some degree, by reduction of the charge on account of ordinary Interest on Debt.

The Railway Revenue Account shows a slight falling off.

Under Army and Military Works, taken together, the Budget Estimate of 1891-92 shows a slightly lower scale of expenditure, but the improvement practically disappears, if allowance be made for the saving owing to the higher rate of Exchange taken for the payment of British troops; it is proposed to incur a higher rate of Expenditure on Special Defence Works than it has been found possible to maintain in the current year.

Finally, there is a fall in the estimated rate of Exchange from 1*s.* 6·11*d.* to 1*s.* 5·25*d.*, representing an increase of Expenditure of about Rx. 1,000,000.

Section IV.—Progress in 1889-90 and 1890-91.

20. In each of the years 1884-85, 1885-86, and 1887-88 the Accounts of the Government of India showed a deficit, the aggregate amount by which Expenditure exceeded Revenue amounting in the three years to Rx. 5,217,004. With the object of restoring financial equilibrium various measures were taken at different times. These measures included, to the end of the year 1888-89, an increase of the salt duty, the imposition of an import duty on petroleum, the absorption of the Famine Grant, the appointment of a Finance Committee to enforce reductions of Expenditure, and the appropriation by the Government of India of Rx. 640,000 yearly from the Revenue at the disposal of Local Governments. The Accounts of 1888-89 showed a surplus of Rx. 37,018, and though in the Budget Estimate of 1889-90 the surplus was estimated at only Rx. 106,000, I was able to say in the Financial Statement of that year, that unless some unforeseen disaster occurred, there was every reason to hope that the lapse of two or three years would show a decided improvement in the financial position of the Government of India. As it happens, there has been a very large surplus both in 1889-90 and in 1890-91, but the estimated surplus of 1891-92 is only Rx. 115,600, and the remarks already made will have shown that the finances are, in some respects, again passing under adverse influences. It, therefore, becomes necessary to review the progress made in the last two years, to take stock of our present position, and to examine our prospects in the immediate future.

In this connection, it is all important to determine what has been the growth of income during the past two years from those great sources of revenue which are intimately connected with the general well-being of the country. I shall, therefore, compare the Revenue under certain heads as estimated for 1889-90 in the Financial Statement of that year, with the Revenue under the same heads as now estimated for 1891-92. This will give a fairly accurate idea of the general tendency of the growth of Revenue.

Growth of Revenue in 1889-90 and 1890-91.

21. The following figures give the increases of Revenue since 1889-90 under the heads to which I have just alluded:—

Head of Revenue.	Increase in the Budget Estimate of Revenue for 1891-92 as compared with the Budget Estimate of Revenue for 1889-90.
	Imperial.	Provincial and Local.	Total.
	Rx.	Rx.	Rx.
Land Revenue	649,900*	357,700	1,007,600
Salt	300,800	12,800	313,600
Stamps	63,100	125,600	188,700
Excise	163,300	63,100	226,400
Provincial Rates	...	272,900	272,900
Customs	282,900†	—400	282,500
Assessed Taxes	46,200	48,800	95,000
Forest	133,900	107,600	241,500
Total	1,640,100	988,100	2,628,200

* These figures have been adjusted so as to eliminate the temporary disturbing influence of the special contribution of Rx. 490,000 from Provincial to Imperial for which credit was taken in the Budget Estimate of 1889-90.

† Increase to a slight extent due to additional taxation on imported spirits.

The improvement in Revenue that has taken place in the two years is very satisfactory.

The Provincial and Local increase, as well as the Imperial, is large.

Reduction of the charge for Ordinary Debt and of the charge for Exchange.

22. In another respect, also, there has been a substantial improvement. The net Imperial charge in India for Interest on Debt and other Obligations (excluding Debt charged against Railways and Canals) has been transformed in two years from a net outgoing of Rx. 145,700 into a net receipt of Rx. 216,400, a total gain of Rx. 362,100. In other words, the receipts from interest on money lent by the Government of India to Municipalities, &c., now exceed by Rx. 216,400 that portion of the yearly charge for Interest on Debt which is not taken against the Capital Expenditure on Railways and Canals.

The rise in the rate of Exchange from 1*s.* 4·38*d.* to 1*s.* 5·25*d.* has given an improvement of about Rx. 1,100,000.

Final result.

23. If we add together the improvements mentioned in the last two paragraphs, and omit for the present all minor items of increase or decrease, the total gain amounts to Rx. 3,102,200 in the two years 1889-90 and 1890-91.

As the estimated surplus for 1891-92 is only Rx. 115,600, while that of the Budget of 1889-90 was Rx. 106,300, it is evident that special causes must have been at work which balance this great improvement, and I shall now proceed to show how the improvement of Rx. 3,102,200 has been absorbed or utilised.

In the first place I may mention that the cessation of the special contribution from Local Governments absorbs Rx. 490,000 of the improvement.

The reduction in net Opium Revenue absorbs a further sum of Rx. 576,900. The falling off in receipts under XXIV Exchange accounts for Rx. 485,900. The restoration of the Famine Grant has taken Rx. 960,000.

Under Military Expenditure of all kinds (Army, Military Works, and Special Defences) there is an increase of £621,600 in England and only a decrease of Rx. 610,200 in India (of which Rx. 300,000 is due to the effect of Exchange on the pay of British troops). There is also a special charge in 1891-92 of Rx. 188,000 on account of the Census. In this way the whole improvement of Rx. 3,102,200 is practically accounted for. The chief permanent gain which we have secured is that we have re-established the Famine Grant. We have, in addition, provided for an unexpected loss of Rx. 576,900 under Opium, and we have met that loss of Rx. 975,900 which was foreseen and which comes from the cessation of the special contribution of Rx. 490,000 and the falling off in receipts under XXIV—Exchange. All this has been done although none of the reduction in Special Military Expenditure for which I at least hoped in March 1889, has as yet been secured.

24. It will be recollected that the object of Part I of the Financial Statement is to present an intelligible outline of our financial position and progress, and that for this purpose it is necessary to omit all minor fluctuations of Revenue and Expenditure, whether favourable or unfavourable, so that the general narrative may not be encumbered with a mass of details. During the two years with which I have just dealt there have, as a matter of course, been considerable increases and decreases under particular heads which, to a great extent, balance one another, and to which I have not thought it necessary to refer in detail in this place. The more important changes which I have not specially mentioned are an increase of Revenue under Irrigation (Rx. 113,200 net), a decrease of Expenditure in cost of Police in Upper Burma (Rx. 120,100), increases of Expenditure under Forest (Rx. 62,800), Political (Rx. 86,300), and so forth. In order to obtain a correct general view of financial progress during the last two years the essential facts which should be borne in mind are that the improvement arising from the very considerable growth of general Revenue under certain important heads, and from the reduction in the charge for debt (not charged to Railways or Canals), and from the rise in Exchange, has been balanced by (1) the cessation of the special contribution from Local Governments, (2) the reduction in net Opium Revenue, (3) the falling off in receipts under XXIV Exchange, (4) the restoration of the Famine Grant, and (5) some increase in Military Expenditure due largely to special demands for Ordnance Stores.

All other changes that have taken place may be fairly considered as the ordinary incidents of Indian administration, though some of them have been of considerable financial importance.

Section V.—Prospects in the immediate Future.

25. More important, however, than the financial history of the past is the question of our prospects during the next few years.

The Budget Estimate of Revenue in 1891-92 has, as usual, been framed with moderation, and though the ordinary growth of income in 1891-92 and 1892-93 may not be so great as in 1889-90 and 1890-91, I see no reason to apprehend at present that we shall have less than the normal rate of increase.

Such difficulties as may arise will doubtless be due to special causes. War, Famine, a further fall in Opium Revenue, a decrease in Railway traffic, growing Military expenditure, a fall in Exchange—such are the disasters to which Indian finance is always liable. War and Famine are evils that might come at any time, but I am unaware of any reason to suppose that War is likely to occur in the immediate future. The occurrence of Famine would bring in its train, along with other and greater evils, temporary embarrassment for the finances, but the Famine Grant has now been restored, and the insurance against the permanent financial effects of Famine is ample.

26. The Opium Revenue has no doubt fallen largely, and at this moment there are no strong indications of a recovery. On the other hand, the fall up to date has already been discounted and provision made to meet the consequent loss of Revenue. As the fall has been so great, we may fairly hope that, for the present, we have seen the worst. The following figures of the gross and net Revenue under Opium since 1880-81 show the serious influence which the fall in the price of this drug has had on the finances :—

	Gross Revenue. Rx.	Net Revenue. Rx.
1881-82	9,862,444	7,803,001
1882-83	9,499,594	7,216,084
1883-84	9,556,501	7,700,807
1884-85	8,816,469	5,8[illegible]9,440
1885-86	8,942,515	5,884,625
1886-87	8,942,976	6,213,815
1887-88	8,515,462	6,090,758
1888-89	8,562,319	5,964,365
1889-90	8,583,056	6,977,883
1890-91 (Revised Estimate)	7,875,000	5,680,200
1891-92 (Budget Estimate)	7,593,400	5,318,700

27. There are no grounds for anticipating any great falling off in Railway traffic leading to a net loss of Revenue in the Railway Revenue Account. At present there are indications of a revival of traffic. Railway traffic rises and falls at intervals, and we may hope that the time has now come for improvement.

28. If, therefore, we exclude Exchange and Military Expenditure, the prospect before us is decidedly encouraging.

Military Expenditure.

29. It is impossible to speak with confidence regarding future Military Expenditure of all kinds, or regarding Exchange.

In considering our prospects so far as they are likely to be affected by Military Expendiure, I shall, as before, deal with the matter under the three great heads of Army, Military Works, and Special Defences. Under Military Works the expenditure is ordinarily limited to Rx. 1,000,000 yearly; in recent years there has been a special grant for Upper Burma, and further expenditure amounting to Rx. 30,000 yearly has been sanctioned in the current year to assist in providing a better water-supply for cantonments. I do not think that any further considerable increase of Expenditure is likely to occur under this head, and we may even expect a reduction in the special grant which has been made for some years for Military Works in Upper Burma.

30. With regard to the Expenditure shown under the head Army, it is not possible to arrive at an equally definite opinion. There are certain permanent charges which we know must be incurred from year to year, but it is impossible to say by what amount it may be found necessary to further increase the permanent cost of the Army. In the present year there have been additions to Expenditure which add Rx. 132,000 yearly to the permanent cost; these additions are composed of a number of items varying in amount from Rx. 90,000 for increased pay to Sillahdar Cavalry to Rx. 300 as an increase of the grant-in-aid to the Army Temperance Assocation. The best conclusion which I can form is that the permanent cost of the Army is likely to increase; that it is impossible to lay down any limit to such increase, but that we may hope that the increase will not be very great, or at any rate very rapid.

31. Besides the increase of permanent Expenditure, there are temporary increases of Expenditure which vary in aggregate amount from year to year, but which can never be expected to wholly disappear. The more important items of Expenditure of this class are those connected with Frontier expeditions. The amount provided on this account in 1891-92 is Rx. 155,000, intended to cover the cost of any Chin-Lushai expedition that may be found necessary, and to meet such portion of the expenditure on the Miranzai and Black Mountain expeditions as will not be met in the present year.

The expenditure on Frontier expeditions has been high in recent years. The following are the figures :—

	1886-87.	1887-88.	1888-89.	1889-90.	1890-91, Revised Estimate.	1891-92, Budget Estimate.
	Rx.	Rx.	Rx.	Rx.	Rx.	Rx.
Hazarah Expedition	[illegible]	...	121,200	3,900	48,000	85,000
Chin-Lushai Expedition	...	...	49,100	350,700	200,000	50,000
Sikkim Expedition	[illegible]	15,500	204,100	66,400	...	...
Miranzai Expedition	...	...	...	...	47,500	20,000
Zhob Valley Expedition	...	...	...	...	57,100	...
TOTAL	...	15,500	374,400	421,000	352,600	155,000

As this expenditure has been so high for some years we shall be unfortunate if it does not now fall off.

32. There are also at the present time special demands for re-armament and providing the latest Military inventions. The amount included in next year's Estimate on this account is £688,225.

The chief items are £377,000 for magazine rifles and £203,170 for 12-pr. guns and ammunition.

It is probable that the 12-pr. guns and ammunition will be provided in the coming year, and if so, this will complete this portion of the supply and will relieve the Estimates of 1892-93. But it is more difficult to say when the magazine rifles will be supplied. In the Estimate of the current year £518,000 was entered for magazine rifles, but according to the latest information only £141,000 will be spent, and the balance of £377,000 has consequently been provided in the Estimates of 1891-92.

If the whole of the special Ordnance Stores for which provision is made in the Estimate of the coming year be furnished and paid for within the year, the Estimate of the following year should be materially relieved. Judging from past experience it is improbable that this will be done, and we can, therefore, look forward to only partial relief.

33. The total sanctioned Expenditure on Special Defence Works is Rx. 5,000,000.

It is estimated that to the end of 1891-92 Rx. 3,768,830 will have been spent, leaving only Rx. 1,231,170 for succeeding years. Here, also, it is impossible to say that the whole of the money provided in 1891-92 will be spent, and it is doubtful, therefore, if there will be any relief in 1892-93. Sooner or later, the sanctioned expenditure on Special Defence Works must come to an end, and there will then be a relief to the finances of nearly Rx. 1,000,000 yearly, unless other expenditure of a similar character should take its place.

34. In the Financial Statement for 1889-90 I pointed out that the Military Estimates for that year included special charges of Rx. 110,000 for the Sikkim and Lushai Expeditions, of Rx. 203,500 for thoroughly equipping at least one Army corps with transport, and of Rx. 301,800 on account of magazine rifles and 12-pr. guns, and stated that as the original programme of military defences was approaching completion, there was at least some prospect of a material alleviation of existing burdens within the next few years. In the two years that have since elapsed that hope has not been realised, as the Military Expenditure in the Estimate of 1891-92 is placed at a higher figure than in the Estimate of 1889-90, if the effect of the rise in the rate of Exchange be excluded.

This failure in my anticipations shows the need for caution in any forecast which can now be made, and the only safe conclusion is that the permanent cost of the Army is likely to increase, but that the increase may not be very rapid; that there may be some reduction in 1892-93 of Expenditure on Frontier expeditions, and some reductions in Expenditure on Special Ordnance Stores and Special Defence Works, but that the reduction is not likely to be very great in that year, though it may be considerable in the following year.

Exchange.

35. In view of the special Military Expenditure now being incurred, the question of the probable rate of Exchange during the next few years possesses much interest. I shall devote a separate Section to questions of a general nature connected with Exchange, but I admit without hesitation that I cannot form such an opinion regarding the rate of Exchange during 1891-92 and 1892-93 as any moderately prudent man would care to act on in matters of business. The rise in the price of silver subsequent to the American legislation was evidently pushed higher by speculation than economic considerations justified, and it has been followed by the inevitable reaction. On the other hand, that reaction may have gone too far, and there may again be some rise. On the whole, the rate of Exchange taken in the Budget Estimate, namely, 1*s.* 5·25*d.*, seems to me a reasonable one under all the circumstances of the case.

The remarks made in paragraphs 25 to 28 have already shown the favourable features of the position, and I have now only to add that so far as can be judged, our financial position during the next two years depends on two factors—Military Expenditure and Exchange. It is of great importance to the Indian finances that Exchange should not fall materially below the present rate for a year or two, that is, until we have experienced some relief from the heavy special Military charges which we are now bearing. If Exchange falls materially within the next year or two, we may find ourselves in a difficult position, though I believe the difficulties would prove to be only temporary. If Exchange does not fall for some time, or if the total Military Expenditure is reduced before it falls, there is no special reason to apprehend financial embarrassment.

Section VI.—Exchange.

36. In the year now about to close an extraordinary rise in the price of silver, and in Exchange, was brought about by legislation in the United States of America, and a fall almost equally great has occurred during the last few months. Silver rose from $43\frac{3}{4}d.$ per oz. in March last to $54\frac{1}{2}d.$ per oz. in August; it is now $45d.$ per oz., and it has been as low as $44\frac{1}{8}d.$

The rise in the average rate of Exchange largely reduced the expenditure of the Government of India, and out of a total surplus of Rx. 2,787,100, about Rx. 1,726,500 is due to this cause alone.

This result, satisfactory so far as it goes, has not been attained without inflicting injury on the commerce of the country. For a time, trade between England and India was reduced to mere gambling, the fluctuations in Exchange being so great as to more than counterbalance the effect of the other elements which the trader has to take into consideration. It has even been said, with some truth, that at one time it would have been better for the merchant to dismiss his establishment, and confine himself to speculations in silver; his expenses would have been less, and his chances of profit quite as good as in his legitimate business. The serious disturbance to the trade and commerce of India which has resulted from legislation in a foreign country shows that in questions connected with the standard of value no country is independent of the action of other nations, and though the inhabitants of countries which use the gold standard are generally unwilling to admit that their standard can possibly alter in value, and refer all alterations in price to causes directly affecting the article sold, this view cannot be justified; the laws which regulate the value of silver equally apply to gold, and if recent legislation in the United States has created a demand for silver and raised its value, the legislation of that and other countries in the past has in the same way created an additional demand for gold and raised the value of that metal. In the seven years 1871 to 1877, the average annual net export of gold from the United States was £6,790,000: and in the eight years 1878 to 1885 the average annual net import was £4,886,000. This change indicates a reduction of over £11,500,000 yearly in the supply of gold to countries outside the United States. The recent additional demand for silver comes to only about £5,000,000 worth yearly. Why should an increased demand for gold, amounting to £11,500,000 yearly not affect the value of gold, while an increased demand of £5,000,000 worth yearly so seriously affects the value of silver? The London banker may be quite satisfied that in every case of fluctuation in the relative value of gold and silver, the latter metal merely rises or falls in price and gold is always the same, but to the mind of the Indian ryot the rupee, instead of the pound sterling, is the one fixed point in an ever-changing world, and gold rises and falls in price in his bazaar like the most vulgar of marketable commodities.

Immediate effects of the "appreciation" of silver.

37. It is a melancholy reflection that the violent fluctuations which we have experienced in 1890-91 have not resulted in a final settlement of the question. Exchange has risen and Exchange has fallen, the legitimate trader has suffered, and the speculator has made his gain or loss as the case may be, while the future of silver is as uncertain as before. The only permanent gain is that which has accrued to the student of Political Economy. The great currency question is one which refuses to die out, and as our difficulties must, apparently, continue, until human intelligence or some happy accident has given us a final and satisfactory solution of the problem, it may be well to place on record the lessons to be learnt from our recent experience; these lessons may be useful to those who come after us.

The phrase "appreciation" or "depreciation" of the standard is one which is generally employed without any definite meaning being attached to it; but if the phrase can ever safely be used, it may be applied to the recent rise in the value of silver, since, in this instance, there occurred a manifest rise in the value of the monetary standard of India brought about by an increased demand for silver, and having its origin in legislation and the speculation which accompanied it.

In the first place, it may be noted that the recent appreciation of silver was not attended by an immediate and simultaneous fall in all prices and wages measured in silver, and that the subsequent depreciation was not attended by a corresponding rise in all prices and wages. The wholesale prices of the articles of international trade felt the influence of the rise in silver at once. It was also attended by what is called a trade depression, which would, no doubt, if the appreciation had continued, have extended throughout the country and influenced all prices and wages, except those which are fixed by law or custom. It is not, then, the case that an appreciation of the standard is, necessarily and immediately, followed by a corresponding fall in all wages and prices.

The fall in the first instance is partial, and there is not that immediate adjustment to the new conditions which would prevent economic disturbance, and leave everybody in the same relative position as before.

A Memorandum on this subject by Mr. J. E. O'Conor, C.I.E., Assistant Secretary to the Government of India, is printed as an Appendix to the Financial Statement.

In the next place, the appreciation of silver did not cause a high rate of discount and was not accompanied by a great scarcity of silver in the centres of trade.

On the contrary, the accumulation of silver in the Indian Banks was absolutely unprecedented, and the rate of discount was the lowest that has ever been known.

We thus see, that appreciation of the standard is not necessarily attended by a positive and manifest scarcity of the metal, leading to a want of current coin to carry on the ordinary transactions of daily life; that it does not affect retail transactions sooner than wholesale transactions; that all prices and wages do not fall simultaneously; that it does not lead to a scarcity of the metal of the standard in the Banks, and is not accompanied by a high rate of discount. On all these points the conclusions to be drawn from recent events are in full accordance with the principles of what I may call orthodox Political Economy, and are fatal to the contentions of those who lately argued that there could have been no appreciation of gold, in reliance on certain phenomena which, if they had been able to interpret them correctly, would have proved the exact contrary of that for which they were contending.

Importance of the question.

38. The question of the future of silver possesses not merely a speculative, but an eminently practical, interest for India. I have long held the opinion that, however distasteful to the majority of men currency discussions may be, and however unwilling we may be to undertake reforms which affect the standard of value, the perpetually recurring evils flowing from a difference of monetary standard between India and the other countries with which her financial and commercial transactions are so important, cannot, and should not, be endured for ever, and that sooner or later a final solution of the problem must be found, and I am unable to discover any permanent remedy for the evils which, day by day and year by year, press themselves upon our attention in India, except either the general adoption of the system of double legal tender or the extension of the single gold standard.

Authorities whom we all respect have said that the system of double legal tender is a practical impossibility, and, if I may venture to say so, I agree that the double legal standard is a practical impossibility so long as a majority of those affected are opposed to its adoption; if, however, the principle were accepted generally, the difficulties which now seem so real and practical would, I believe, prove to be purely imaginary.

The recent action of the United States has, no doubt, to some extent, raised the price of silver and caused a rise in the rate of Exchange, but what India requires is not a high rate of Exchange rather than a low rate, but some system under which fluctuations in Exchange shall be neither great nor frequent, and shall oscillate round a fixed point. In this respect we have, so far, lost rather than gained.

The fallacy of a stimulus to trade.

39. It is held by some that a low rate of Exchange, or at any rate a falling rate, stimulates exports from India and is beneficial to the country, and, for proof of the correctness of their opinions, they point to the course of trade as it ebbs and flows daily before our eyes. With all deference to my friends who hold this opinion, I believe that it is one of the greatest delusions that ever gained possession of the human mind. Things are not always as they seem to be, and though we can all see the sun rise in the East and set in the West, we do not in the present day believe that the sun revolves round the earth once in every period of twenty-four hours. Trade between different countries is essentially a barter of goods for goods, and its extent and nature are determined, in the long run, not by the standard of value in use in either country, but by the comparative cost of production of commodities in these countries. Nor can I discover any good ground for the belief that the Native of India must be able to get more piece-goods for his wheat, because his rupee will purchase a smaller quantity of gold, or, what is the same thing, because the British sovereign will purchase a larger quantity of silver. That trade between different countries ebbs and flows in accordance with the fluctuations in Exchange is a fact which falls within our daily experience, and is wholly in accordance with theory, but I have yet to learn that the total quantity of water discharged into the sea by a river is dependent on the tides at its mouth, and that the greater the strength of the tides the larger the total average volume of discharge. The current may run into greater velocity when the tide is falling, but the additional volume of water poured into the sea is only the same as the volume which was forced back when the tide flowed the other way. The truth is that the apparent stimulus to, or apparent check on, exports which accompanies a fall, or rise, in Exchange is followed in each case by a reaction of precisely equivalent magnitude, or is itself the reaction which naturally follows a previous check or stimulus. It will probably be a surprise to most persons to learn that the total fluctuations downwards of Exchange since 1873 very slightly exceed the total fluctuations upwards, the difference being, I believe, not more than 5 per cent. While repudiating the theory that trade between England and India is benefited by the absence of a common monetary standard I do not deny that there is such a thing as a good standard of value and a bad standard of value, or hold that the question as to what is the best standard is of no practical importance. What I contend for is that the theory of a beneficial stimulus to trade owing to fluctuations in Exchange between countries having different standards of value, is an untenable and mischievous delusion. A sudden rise in Exchange, such as we had this year, will unquestionably check business for a time, and cause a depression of longer or shorter duration. But trade in time must adjust itself to the new scale of prices and will then proceed as before. The existence of the Indian Tea Gardens depends not on the relative value of gold and silver, but on the fact that the people of England want tea and are willing to give iron, coal, or piece-goods in exchange for it. An alteration in the relative value of gold and silver neither weakens their desire for tea nor reduces the amount of goods which they are willing to give in exchange for it, and cannot, therefore, in the long run, either stimulate or check the production of that article in India.

The Future.

40. The task which the United States has undertaken of raising the price of silver by purchasing yearly a fixed though large quantity of that metal, is one which, if undertaken by any other nation, would, I feel convinced, result in disaster, but so great is the wealth of that country and so rapid its growth, that it would not be safe to say that its efforts must fail. We cannot blame the United States for adopting the course which seems best for its own interests, but I venture to think that it would have been better to at once adopt free coinage of silver. No doubt the people of the United States are warned in some quarters that the adoption of free coinage of silver will lead to the loss of their gold and end in financial ruin, but the same authorities not unfrequently warn India that her prosperity depends on her retaining the silver standard, and I know no reason why such different results in the case of the two countries should spring from the same cause. India uses the silver standard, but, though gold does not commonly circulate as money, she possesses an enormous quantity of that metal, and our experience shows that the silver standard gives rise to no difficulties in the interior of the country, and that the evils from which we suffer spring from the fact that we have large commercial and financial transactions with countries that have a different standard. The Foreign trade of the United States is but a small fraction of its total trade, and there is no civilised nation in the world which is more independent of the foreigner.

If the United States should adopt free coinage of silver, it is possible that in time the other nations of the American Continent would follow its example; but whether they did so or not, I should expect that the adoption of free coinage by the United States would lead to much greater stability in the relative value of gold and silver than we have experienced in recent years, though I am unable to say what the relative value of the two metals might prove to be, under such a system. In that case it would probably be best for India to maintain the free coinage of silver for an indefinite period in the hope that one day a final solution would be obtained.

41. On the other hand, if the United States should abandon its attempts to maintain silver as a monetary standard and should put a stop to its purchases of that metal, a position of serious danger would be created for India. So long as any reasonable hope of a satisfactory settlement of the currency question remains, I think it would be unwise for India to adopt a gold standard, but the circumstances would be entirely changed if the United States altogether abandoned silver, and the question whether India should not, in that case, simultaneously close her Mints to silver is one that deserves serious consideration. I have no right to commit the Government of India to any opinion on the subject, but it is my belief that in case of necessity the gold standard could be introduced into this country, and that if America altogether abandons silver, it would probably be best that India should change her standard. The risks would be considerable and the sacrifices heavy, but almost anything would be better than to accept violent and continual fluctuations in Exchange as our inevitable lot for all time, with the prospect of a fall in the value of silver of quite indefinite amount. I mention the matter not because there is any intention of taking steps in this direction at the present time, but because it is right that the Government of India and the Indian public should clearly understand what they may have to face in the future, and that they should make up their minds as to the course to be followed under certain conditions. If the United States abandons silver as a monetary standard, the disease will have run too far to be stayed by mere palliatives, and the patient may any day be called on to choose between a difficult operation and life-long disease. If such a change is ever made, it will be found easiest and safest to adopt a gold standard at or about the exchange of the day, rather than to attempt to establish a higher rate. The great mass of the currency in ordinary use in India would continue to be silver as at present.

The adoption of a gold standard by India would probably be attended with very serious consequences for Western nations, but if, in this matter, they look only to what they conceive to be their own interests, they cannot reasonably object to India following the same course.

PART II.

IMPERIAL, PROVINCIAL, AND LOCAL FINANCE.

Section I.—Accounts of 1889-90.

1. The surplus anticipated for the year 1889-90 in the Revised Estimate of that year was Rx. 1,809,700. The surplus shown by the Accounts, which are now closed, is Rx.2,612,033. The actual surplus does not differ materially from that announced in Parliament by the Under-Secretary of State for India in August last.

2. Explanations of the variations under the different heads will be found in the Appropriation Report published in the Gazette of India of the 7th March 1891. The following statement gives the general result of a comparison between the Revised Estimates and the Accounts of the year:—

		Revised.	Accounts.	Accounts, Better.	Accounts, Worse.
REVENUE.
India	Rx.	84,155,300	84,598,760	443,460	...
England	£	331,700	335,768	4,068	...
Exchange	Rx.	149,300	150,675	1,375	...
TOTAL	Rx.	84,636,300	85,085,203	448,903	...
EXPENDITURE.
India—
Imperial, Provincial, and Local	Rx.	60,603,900	60,411,809	192,091	...
Adjustment of Provincial and Local Surplus or Deficit	Rx.	352,500	548,996	...	196,496
England	£	15,082,500	14,848,923	233,977	...
Exchange	Rx.	6,787,300	6,663,442	123,858	...
TOTAL	Rx.	82,826,600	82,473,170	353,430	...
SURPLUS	Rx.	1,809,700	2,612,033	802,333	...

3. The Revenue in India exceeded the amount taken in the Revised by Rx. 443,460, and the Expenditure in India was less by Rx. 192,091. Of this total improvement of Rx. 635,551, Rx. 196,496 occurred in the Provincial and Local section of the Accounts. The improvement in the Imperial section was Rx. 439,055. Adding to this the increase of Revenue of Rx. 5,443, including Exchange, and the saving in Expenditure of Rx. 357,835, including Exchange, which occurred in England, we get the total Imperial improvement of Rx. 802,333.

4. The improvement in the Revenue in India, Rx. 443,460, occurred chiefly under the Principal Heads of Revenue, the total of which was more by Rx. 437,013; of this amount, the sum of Rx. 164,099 was due to larger realisations of Land Revenue, and the remainder was fairly equally distributed over the other heads, with the exception of Salt, the Revenue under which was slightly less than the Revised Estimate. Of the other groups of heads, Railways and Civil Departments show increases of Rx. 102,177 and Rx. 38,051, while Military and Miscellaneous show decreases of Rx. 78,630 and Rx. 62,586; the variations in the other groups are unimportant.

5. Of the decrease of Rx. 192,091 in the Expenditure in India, more than half occurred under the group Direct Demands on the Revenue, the chief decreases appearing under Opium and Forests. The remainder of the saving in Expenditure was distributed over the other groups, only two showing a larger Expenditure than that of the Revised Estimate, namely, the Railway Revenue Account and Post Office, Telegraph, and Mint.

6. The difference between the Revised Estimate of Expenditure in England and the actual Expenditure, with the Exchange on it, amounts to Rx. 357,835. The saving is spread over nearly all the heads, the more important being Army, Rx. 249,881, and Special Defence Works, Rx. 63,355.

7. It will be observed that the difference between the Revised Estimate and the Actuals is as usual on the side of safety, there having been a net improvement of Rx. 802,333. The reasons why the Revised Estimate always errs on the side of caution, were explained in the Budget Statement for last year, Part II, paragraph 4.

8. The Expenditure on Railways and Canals not charged against Revenue was also less than that taken in the Revised Estimate, the difference being Rx. 294,710, of which Rx. 271,742 fell under Railways and Rx. 22,968 under Irrigation Works. This difference does not affect the amount of the surplus of the year.

Section II.—Revised Estimates of 1890-91.

9. In the following statement the Budget and Revised Estimates for 1890-91 are compared:—

		Budget.	Revised.	Revised, Better.	Revised, Worse.
REVENUE.
India	Rx.	84,576,100	84,799,300	223,200
England	£	245,500	388,100	142,600
Exchange	Rx.	110,500	126,100	15,600
TOTAL	Rx.	84,932,100	85,313,500	381,400
EXPENDITURE.
India—
Imperial, Provincial and Local		62,335,700	61,902,700	433,000
Adjustment of Provincial and Local Surplus or Deficit.		—757,700	—312,800	...	444,900
England	£	15,919,800	15,801,100	118,700
Exchange	Rx.	7,163,900	5,135,400	2,028,500
TOTAL	Rx.	84,661,700	82,526,400	2,135,300
SURPLUS		270,400	2,787,100	2,516,700

10. It will be seen that a surplus of Rx. 2,787,100 is now expected, though in the Budget Estimate the surplus was only Rx. 270,400. This result is chiefly due to the rise in the rate of exchange.

11. The Revenue in India is now expected to be Rx. 223,200 more than anticipated last March.

The group "Principal Heads of Revenue," excluding Opium, shows an improvement of Rx. 778,900; but the net improvement is less owing to large decreases of Revenue under certain heads. The following are the more important increases over the Budget figures which are now expected:—

	Rx.
Salt	219,700
Stamps	61,200
Excise	79,200
Provincial Rates	126,000
Customs	161,400
Mint	120,000
Irrigation	136,200

These increases are to a large extent due to the general progress of the country, with the exception of that under Mint, which is due to the unusually large amount of bullion presented for coinage.

1890-91. Revenues in India. Heads in which the Revised Estimate falls short of the Budget.

12. The following are the heads under which the more important decreases occur:—

	Rx.
Opium	328,300
XXIV—Exchange	313,500
State Railways	172,500
Army Receipts	126,000

Of the falling-off in the revenue from opium, Rx. 200,000 occurs in Bombay, and is due to a small extent to the number of chests exported being less than was anticipated, but chiefly to the reduction of the export duty from R650 to R600 a chest from 5th July last. A reduction of Rx. 132,300 occurs in Bengal, and is due to the heavy decline in prices at the monthly sales.

The diminution of the receipts, which appear under XXIV—Exchange, is partly due to the rise in the rate of exchange during the year, and, partly, to diminution in the capital transactions of the railways concerned.

The reduction in the State Railway receipts is explained by a falling-off in goods traffic during a portion of the year. The falling-off in traffic was partly due to an inferior winter harvest in some provinces, and partly to the temporary rise in exchange and the great and rapid fluctuations which occurred. The traffic on the railways generally has lately recovered. The receipts of Guaranteed Railways were also low during the earlier part of the year, but the recent improvement in traffic has been sufficient to justify a somewhat higher estimate of net receipts.

The diminution in Army Receipts is due to the discontinuance of the employment of State agency for the supply of malt liquor to the British Troops in Bombay and Madras: this experiment involves an almost corresponding reduction in charges.

1890-91. Revenue in England.

13. The increase of Rx. 158,200 in the Revenue in England, including Exchange, occurs chiefly under Interest, Rx. 130,000, and Medical, Rx. 40,700. The former of these is due to the Secretary of State having had a large cash balance and having been able to invest portions of it temporarily at high rates of interest. The latter is due to a special receipt from the sale of the Ealing Lunatic Asylum.

1890-91. Expenditure in India.

14. The Expenditure in India is now expected to be less by Rx. 433,000 than was estimated last March. This is the net result of a number of variations from the figures of the Budget. The more important are the following:—

Opium	110 000	Interest	138,200
Police	124,200	Political	74,400
State Railways—Working Expenses	233,900	Military Works	64,700
Guaranteed Railways—Surplus Profits, &c.	53,300	Civil Works	60,100
Special Defence Works	162,500

Heads of Expenditure in India in which the Revised Estimate is less than the Budget.

15. The saving in the Opium Expenditure is caused by the produce of the season's crop having been considerably less than seemed probable last March.

The fact that some of the Local Governments provided in the Budget for certain measures for improving the organisation and working of the Police, which have not yet been carried out, accounts for a portion of the saving under Police. There has also been a considerable saving in Upper Burma, where three battalions of Military Police were converted into Regiments of the Madras Army, three battalions of that Army being at the same time disbanded.

The smaller Expenditure on State Railways is an accompaniment of the diminution in the receipts, and the decrease in Surplus Profits of Guaranteed Railway is due to the slack traffic of the earlier part of the year. The recent recovery in traffic will increase the surplus profits payable next year.

The reduction of Expenditure on Special Defence Works means that the progress of some of the works has not been so great as was intended.

Heads of Expenditure in India in which the Revised Estimate is higher than the Budget.

16. The increase under Interest is in consequence of the considerable success which attended the offer made in Notification No. 3117, dated 25th June 1890, for the conversion of the 4½ per cent. Loans of 1878 and 1879 into the 4 per cent. Loans. The amount converted on the terms offered is Rx. 8,313,200, of which Rx. 5,139,690 was held in England and Rx. 3,173,510 in India. The payment of commission, and the payment in advance of the half per cent. difference in the rate of interest for the remainder of the term of the loan, with the changes in the dates on which interest becomes payable, result in an increase of the charges of this year. The benefit will be reaped in future years in a reduction of the interest charge by Rx. 41,566 yearly.

The larger portion of the increase under Political is accounted for by a portion of the subsidy of the Amir of Afghanistan due in 1889-90 having been paid in arrears in the present year. Increased political expenditure was also sanctioned after the Estimates of the year had been framed, chiefly in Biluchistan.

The increase under Military Works is due to the maintenance of the Frontier Roads having been charged to this head, to the Military Works share of the expenditure on the Quetta Water Works, Rx. 49,900, being paid this year, although the Budget did not provide for it, and to an additional grant made during the course of the year, in consideration of the lapses of the preceding year.

The increase under Civil Works occurs in the Provincial-Local Section of the Accounts.

Adjustment of Provincial Surplus or Deficit.

17. The entry of Rx. 444,900 on account of "Adjustment of Provincial and Local Surplus or Deficit" in the statement in paragraph 9, means that a net improvement of this amount has occurred in the Provincial-Local Section of the Accounts, and must therefore be deducted to arrive at the Imperial improvement.

1890-91. Sterling expenditure in England.

18. The Expenditure in England is expected to be less by £118,700 than the Budget Estimate. The only important decreases occur under Special Defence Works £125,500, Civil Furlough and Absentee Allowances £41,000, and Army £30,300. The net result of the other decreases and increases causes a slight diminution of the savings just mentioned.

The saving under Special Defence Works is due to the progress made in supplying the guns and other stores for the works being less than was anticipated.

The diminution of sterling Expenditure under Civil Furlough allowances is due to a large number of officers electing to draw their absentee allowances in India, in consequence of the market rate of exchange being higher than the official rate. The counterbalancing increase in Indian charges is distributed over the Expenditure of the departments to which the officers belong.

The saving under Army is due to the non-supply of Magazine Rifles and Ammunition. Expenditure on this account, amounting to £377,000, is postponed from this year and provided for in the Budget Estimate of 1891-92. Nevertheless, the total saving on Military stores in the Revised Estimate is only £49,900. This result is due to the expenditure for Martini-Henry Rifles and other Ordnance stores having been much larger than was intended when the Budget Estimate for 1890-91 was framed. The non-receipt of the Magazine Rifles rendered it necessary to incur heavy expenditure (£319,166) in the purchase of Martini-Henry Rifles and Carbines.

1890-91. Exchange on sterling expenditure.

19. The Exchange on Expenditure in England shows an improvement of Rx. 2,028,500. This large saving is due to the rise in the rate of Exchange during the year. The rate assumed for the Budget was 1*s.* 4·552*d.* = one rupee. The average rate for the year is now expected to be 1*s.* 6·113*d.* = one rupee.

Section III.—Budget Estimates, 1891-92.

1891-92. Revenues in India.

21. The Revenue in India is expected in 1891-92 to exceed the Budget Estimate for 1890-91 by Rx. 1,153,400. This is the net result of increases under most of the heads of revenue, counterbalanced by decreases in a few heads.

The more important increases are—

	Rx.
Land Revenue	524,900
Salt	110,000
Stamps	113,300
Excise	109,200
Provincial Rates	181,500

Heads of Revenue in India in which increases are expected.

22. The more important heads under which an improvement is expected will be noticed in Section IV, and it will be sufficient to say here that, excepting Land Revenue, Provincial Rates, Interest, and State Railways, the increases anticipated are normal improvements in revenue. Most of the increase in Land Revenue and Provincial Rates is due to Settlement and Survey Operations. Rx. 38,025 of the increase under Interest is due to the increase of the Paper Currency investment by one crore. The inclusion of the gross receipts of the South Indian Railway, which became a State Railway on 31st December 1890, for twelve instead of three months, and of those of the Bengal and North-Western Railway in consequence of its being now worked as one undertaking with the Tirhoot Railway, and the completion of the Bengal-Nagpur Railway, account for the whole of the increase in State Railway Revenue. The failure to realise the increase in Railway Revenue, which was expected in 1890-91, renders it unsafe to estimate for an increase, as compared with the Budget of 1890-91, in Railway receipts.

Heads of Revenue in India in which decreases are expected.

23. The fall in the Opium Revenue in Bombay, Rx. 200,000, is due to the reduction of the duty on Malwa Opium, and in Bengal, Rx. 416,000, to the fall in price of Bengal Opium.

The falling-off in the receipts under XXIV—Exchange is due partly to the rate of exchange assumed for 1891-92 being higher than that assumed last March for 1890-91, and partly to the capital transactions of the Railways in connection with which these receipts mainly arise being smaller.

The larger part of the decrease under Guaranteed Railways is nominal, being due to the transfer of the South Indian Railway to the category of State Railways. The remainder occurs on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway; the traffic on that line has been so slack this year that it is not deemed safe to estimate as high a revenue for 1891-92 as was taken for 1890-91.

The decrease under Army is due to the cause mentioned in para. 12.

1891-92. Revenue in England.

24. The Revenue in England is expected to be less than the Budget Estimate of 1890-91 by £32,900. This is due to the fact that it is not expected that the Secretary of State will be able to make temporary loans to the same extent as this year.

The diminution in the receipts from Exchange on sterling Revenue is due chiefly to the rate of exchange for 1891-92 being taken at a higher rate than for 1890-91.

1891-92. Expenditure in India. Heads in which the expenditure is expected to be more than the estimate for 1890-91.

25. The expenditure in India in 1891-92 is expected to be Rx. 2,180,300 more than that estimated for 1890-91. The more important increases are —

	Rx.
Land Revenue	174,200
Forests	58,700
Law and Justice—Courts	83,200
Scientific and Minor Departments	106,600
Protective Railways	975,000
Construction of Railways (charged to Revenue)	205,700
State Railways—Working Expenses	558,200
Railway Interest on Debt	132,000
Irrigation, Minor Works	99,200
Civil Works	438,700

The increase under Land Revenue occurs in Madras, Upper and Lower Burma, Bengal, and Bombay. Of the increase in Madras, Rx. 80,900, the sum of Rx. 65,000 is Local, caused by larger allowances to District and Village Officers, and the rest is due to the intended appointment of additional Subordinate Magistrates to relieve Tahsildars of Magisterial work, and to the increase of the staff of the Department of Land Records and Agriculture. The increases in Upper Burma, Rx. 31,400, and Lower Burma, Rx. 10,800, are mainly for Surveys, which will ultimately prove remunerative, the charges for collection also rising with the receipts. In Bengal, the increase of Rx. 26,900 is mainly for Survey and Settlement, the charges for the improvement of Government estates being also raised. The increase of Rx. 17,100 in Bombay occurs in the Department of Land Records and Agriculture and its subordinate establishments.

The increase under Forests follows the extension of the operations of the Department, about Rx. 20,000 of it being, however, due to a re-organisation of the staff of the Department which has been deemed necessary for its proper working and extension. The Revenue is expected to increase more than the Expenditure.

The increase under Law and Justice is caused by larger establishments being required for the prompt dispensation of justice.

The Census charges account for the increase under Scientific and Minor Departments. These are estimated to amount to Rx. 188,000 in 1891-92 against Rx. 85,000 in the Budget of 1890-91 (the latter being reduced in the Revised to Rx. 74,700). The corresponding charges of the last Census in 1881 were—

The total cost of the Census of 1881 amounted to Rx. 220,241. The estimate of the total cost of the present Census is about Rx. 270,000.

The increased expenditure on Protective Railways is a consequence of the decision of the Government, as explained in para. 16 of Part I, to restore the Famine Grant to the full original amount of Rx. 1,500,000. The Famine Grant was partially restored last year and a part of the increase of Rx. 975,000 under Protective Railways is counterbalanced by a reduction of Rx. 524,500 under Reduction of Debt: it has been decided to devote the Grant to the construction of Protective Railways rather than to direct reduction of debt.

The increase under Construction of Railways, not charged to the Famine Grant or to Loans, is Provincial and Local, and is for the Haiderabad-Umarkot Railway in Bombay, and the Mayaveram-Mutupet Railway in Madras.

The increase in the working expenses of State Railways is due to the transfer of the South Indian Railway to the State, to the inclusion under this head of the Bengal and North-Western Railway, and to the larger mileage of the Bengal-Nagpore Railway.

The larger interest charges for Railways are due to the increase in Capital Expenditure during the year. This increase in the charge for interest represents a transfer from the interest on Ordinary Debt, which is estimated to be less in 1891-92 than the Budget Estimate for 1890-91 by Rx. 197,700. Of this reduction Rx. 41,566 represent the gain next year by the conversion operations mentioned in paragraph 16, and the remainder is due to the transfers from Ordinary to Public Works Debt.

The increase under Irrigation, Minor Works, occurs in Burma, Upper and Lower, and the Punjab.

The increase under Civil Works occurs in the Provincial and Local section of the Accounts, and indicates that the resources at the disposal of the Provincial Governments have increased.

1891-92. Heads of expenditure in India in which the expenditure is expected to be less than the estimate of 1890-91.

26. The only important decreases of expenditure in India are—

	Rx.
Interest on Ordinary Debt	197,700
Reduction of Debt	524,500
Special Defence Works	65,800

The first two are explained above in t portions of the preceding paragraph relating to Protective Railways and Railway interest charges.

The decrease under Army is due mainly to the rise in the rate of exchange, for the conversion into rupees of the pay of the British troops, and to less expenditure being expected on Frontier expeditions and on preparations for speedy mobilization.

A smaller grant for Special Defence Works has been given in 1891-92 than in 1890-91, because experience shows that the works cannot be carried out so fast as has been assumed in past years.

Adjustment of Provincial Balances.

27. The increase in the deductions shown in the table in paragraph 20 on account of the "Adjustment of Provincial and Local Surplus or Deficit" is due to the Provincial Governments proposing to spend from their accumulated balances next year somewhat more than what they proposed to spend this year.

1891-92. Sterling expenditure in England.

28. The increase in the Expenditure in England, as shown in the table in paragraph 20, is £52,300. The important heads of increase are—

Marine	64,300
Superannuations	71,500
Interest on Debt, State Railways	140,500

and of decrease—

Guaranteed Railway—Interest	222,100

Heads of expenditure in England in which increases are expected.

29. The increase under Marine is in consequence of the proposed payment of a subsidy of £60,000 to the Admiralty for manning and maintaining Indian Government Defence vessels. This represents the cost of the officers and men required to man the two turret ships, the two gun-boats, and the seven torpedo boats which have been constructed to aid in the defence of the Indian Ports. It was at first proposed to man these vessels from the Indian Marine establishments; but it was ultimately decided that it was preferable that the Royal Navy should furnish the officers and men required, and that a subsidy should be paid to the Admiralty.

The increase under Superannuations is due to the grant of a minimum rate of exchange of 1*s.* 9*d.* for the payment of pensions fixed in rupees, and to the increase of the pension list.

The interest on the stock issued to provide funds for the purchase of the South Indian Railway accounts for the increase under State Railway Interest.

Heads of expenditure in England in which decreases are expected.

30. The decrease in the interest on Ordinary Debt is due to transfers to the Railway Debt.

The decrease under Guaranteed Railway Interest is caused by the purchase by the State of the South Indian Railway.

1891-92. Exchange on sterling expenditure.

31. The saving of Rx. 913,900 in the Exchange on Expenditure in England is explained by the difference in the rate of exchange adopted in the two years, namely, 1*s.* 5·25*d.* as against 1*s.* 4·552*d.*

Section IV.—Examination of the Estimates under the more important heads of Revenue and Expenditure.

LAND REVENUE.

32. The Estimates of Land Revenue for 1890-91 and 1891-92 and the actual receipts for the three preceding years are shown in the following statement :—

These figures show that the rise in this most important Revenue head continues. The Revised Estimate of Revenue for 1890-91, though it is higher than the Budget Estimate, is not quite equal to the specially high Actuals of 1889-90; but the Budget Estimate for 1891-92 exceeds that for 1890-91 by Rx. 593,000.

The Land Revenue in Bengal, Assam, and the small tracts administered directly by the Government of India is practically stationary. In all the other provinces it is increasing, and notably in Burma, the North-Western Provinces and Oudh, Bombay, and the Central Provinces.

In Lower Burma an increase of Rx. 65,000 over the Budget of 1890-91 is expected in 1891-92, of which Rx. 48,000 is anticipated in the Revised Estimate. Of the total increase about Rx. 30,000 is due to increased rents for fisheries, and the remaining Rx. 35,000 is caused by the extension of surveys and the consequent assessment of lands which have hitherto escaped payment of revenue.

In Upper Burma the increase anticipated is Rx. 81,000, of which Rx. 56,000 will be secured in the present year according to the Revised Estimate. The restoration of order, survey and assessment operations, and more efficient administration, account for the improvement. After 1891-92 the increase is expected to be at a still higher rate as settlements are completed.

The increase expected in the North-Western Provinces and Oudh is Rx. 195,800, of which Rx. 100,000 in round numbers is due to settlement operations, and the remainder to the collection of arrears for the current year, in which the Revised falls short of the Budget Estimate.

For Bombay the increase is Rx. 148,400, of which Rx. 137,000 will be secured in the present year according to the Revised Estimate. The causes are Survey Settlement operations and the opening of irrigation works.

In the Central Provinces an increase of Rx. 28,500 is anticipated. The cause is the progress of Settlement operations.

OPIUM.

33. The figures are—

	Accounts, 1887-88.	Accounts, 1888-89.	Accounts, 1889-90.	Budget Estimate, 1890-91.	Revised Estimate, 1890-91.	Budget Estimate, 1891-92.

Net .	6,090,887	5,964,414	6,977,949	5,898,500	5,680,300	5,318,800

The fluctuations in the figures of Revenue, of Expenditure, and of net Revenue indicate the difficulty of framing accurate estimates under this head.

The receipts in Bengal in the current year will be Rx. 132,300 less than was estimated last March. The prices realized at the monthly sales have fallen during the year, from an average of R1,074 a chest at the sale of April last to an average of R1,001 at the sale of the current month.

The receipts in Bombay will also be less this year than was expected. This is due, to a small extent, to the number of chests exported having been smaller than the estimate made in March last, but chiefly to the reduction of duty from R650 to R600 a chest in July last. This reduction appeared necessary in view of the great competition in China of the indigenous drug.

The expenditure consists chiefly of payments for the Opium crops in the Behar and Benares Agencies. As the crop of the current year has proved to be a smaller one than was expected when the last Financial Statement was prepared, the expenditure this year will be Rx. 110,000 less than the estimate. The estimate of expenditure for next year is taken lower than that for 1890-91 by Rx. 30,200.

31st „ 1892	.	„	18,300

34. The figures of Revenue and Expenditure are—

Net .	6,260,024	7,262,655	7,774,973	7,780,500	8,015,500	7,876,600

The Revised Estimate for this year is Rx. 219,700 higher than the Budget Estimate. The Estimate for next year is only Rx. 110,000 higher than the Budget Estimate of this year. It is necessary to take the receipts for next year somewhat lower than they are now expected to be in the current year, because the cash receipts in Madras have been unduly raised this year, owing to the purchasers having availed themselves to a much smaller extent than usual of the permission to defer payment of duty for six months on lodging security.

35. The subjoined table gives the consumption of salt in maunds in each year since 1882-83 :

Years.	Total consumption of salt.	Total consumption excluding Burma.	Total consumption excluding Burma, Trans-Indus, and other lightly taxed salt.

1890-91	33,141,000	31,710,000	31,004,000

For the year 1890-91 these figures are based on the actual consumption of salt to the end of February 1891; for March an estimate is made based on the experience of past years.

36. Excluding Burma, where the rate of duty is only R1 per maund, the consumption of the current year promises to be slightly below that of 1889-90. It is also less than that of 1886-87, and it is only a little more than one per cent. in excess of the consumption of 1884-85, a year in which the consumption was distinctly above the average of the time. Including Burma the consumption of this year will be only fractionally in excess of that of 1889-90, and the consumption of that year was also only a trifle more than that of 1884-85.

The Revenue from Excise continues to increase; the increase is the consequence partly of general prosperity and partly of more efficient administration resulting in the diminution of illicit practices and the consequent levy of duty on a larger proportion of the total amount of spirit and drugs consumed in India. The Province in which the increase of Revenue is the largest is Madras, which is also the Province in which the administration has been described as the most efficient and the best adapted to secure the objects to which the administration should be directed.

The Revenue in the current year is now expected to be considerably higher than the Estimate made last March. The improvement occurs chiefly in Burma and Bengal, there being a smaller increase in Bombay and a decrease in Madras. The increases occur, in Burma entirely, and in Bengal chiefly, under Exports. The rice harvest has been good in both these Provinces, and there has been a very active demand for export, mainly in consequence of the failure of the rice crop in Japan, which, in ordinary years, competes with Indian rice in the European and American markets. It is considered safe to anticipate that most of the increase secured this year will be retained next year, and the Revenue for 1891-92 has been estimated at only Rx. 21,600 less than the Revised Estimate for 1890-91.

For the ten months ending 31st January the receipts from import duty and their distribution among the dutiable articles have been :—

In the export revenue there has been a considerable increase in the ten months of the present year. The figures are :—

1888-89	363,000
1889-90	458,000
1890-91	616,177

The increase of the duty realised on spirits deserves notice. It is due to the enhancement of the duty mentioned in paragraph 29, Part II of the Financial Statement of last March. The quantity imported has slightly decreased, being 883,135 gallons in the past ten months of this year as compared with 885,088 gallons in the same period of 1889-90.

The gross revenue and the surplus in 1889-90 were exceptionally high, for the reasons, affecting Burma chiefly, mentioned in the Financial Statement of March last. Though not so high as in that exceptional year, the amounts taken for the Revised Estimate of 1890-91 and for 1891-92 indicate the continued progress of the Forest Administration. The surplus for 1891-92 would have been higher had it not been that an increased expenditure of over two lakhs of rupees has been sanctioned for a reorganisation of the Forest staff, deemed necessary to ensure more efficient working and the proper development of Forest operations.

These receipts arise in India partly from the Paper Currency investment and partly from the loans and advances made by the Government to Municipalities, cultivators, &c., and in England from the temporary investments of the cash balance of the Secretary of State.

It will be seen that the receipts in India are slowly progressive. The increase in recent years is largely due to the development of the policy described in paragraphs 114 to 118 of the Financial Statement for 1889-90, under which loans and advances are made for the benefit of cultivators and public bodies through the Local Governments, who are responsible for the ultimate recovery of the amounts. Of the increase of Rx. 64,700 anticipated in 1891-92, Rx. 38,025 is due to an additional crore of the Paper Currency reserve having been invested in Government securities in the current year in accordance with the Notification in the Finance and Commerce Department, No. 5900, dated 19th December 1890.

The receipts in England are variable, and depend on the state of the Secretary of State's cash balance in London. In the present year his cash balance was high, and he was able to make temporary loans at higher rates of interest and to a larger extent than was anticipated when the Budget Estimate was framed. Hence the increase of the Revised over the Budget Estimate. A lower estimate of receipts from this source has been taken by the Secretary of State for next year.

43. The Expenditure on Interest (other than that charged to Railways and Irrigation Works) has been as follows since 1881-82: —

Year.	India.	England.	Exchange.	TOTAL.
	Rx.	Rx.	Rx.	Rx.
1881-82	1,827,369	2,513,126	518,461	4,858,956

1890-91, Budget . . .	696,600	2,482,600	1,117,100	4,296,300
1890-91, Revised . . .	834,800	2,513,100	816,800	4,164,700
1891-92, Budget . . .	517,600	2,407,500	942,100	3,867,200

The steady reduction in the ordinary Interest charges in India shown in the above table is explained by the fact that the Expenditure on Railways and Irrigation Works not charged against Revenue has for many years exceeded the amount borrowed in India, and the excess is every year transferred from the Ordinary to the Public Works portion of the Public Debt, thus reducing the Ordinary, and increasing the Public Works Interest charges. The effect of this cause on the years 1890-91 and 1891-92 is much increased, in consequence of no loan having been required in 1890-91, and it being anticipated that none will be required in 1891-92.

The increase shown in the Revised, as compared with the Budget, Estimate, of 1890-91, is due to the conversion operations undertaken in India this year, as explained in paragraph 16. Of the decrease in 1891-92 the sum of Rx. 41,566 is due to the result of those operations as mentioned in that paragraph.

With regard to the sterling expenditure in England, it may be said that the ordinary interest charges have for many years remained stationary, except for two causes, namely,—

(1) the additional Interest charges incurred by the Public Works Loan having been raised in England instead of India in 1885-86 and in 1886-87; and.

(2) the saving secured by the conversion operations of 1887-88, which increased the charges of that year, but reduced those of all future years.

The Secretary of State does not now borrow in England for ordinary purposes, and the other variations in the Sterling Ordinary Interest charges are temporary only, being caused by the loans raised in England for Railways, or portions of them, being raised sometimes a little before they are required and treated as ordinary debt till they can be transferred to the Railway Revenue Account. The discount on the loan raised for the purchase of the South Indian Railway explains the excess of the Revised over the Budget Estimate of the current year. The decrease in the Budget Estimate of 1891-92, compared with that for 1890-91, is explained by the transfer during this year of portions of the loan for the purchase of the South Indian Railway from Ordinary Debt to the Railway Debt.

The Revenue increases steadily, and the net cost of the Department, as shown in the Accounts, is being reduced. It is now expected that the Revenue for 1890-91 will be greater and the Expenditure less than was estimated last March. The increase in the net cost for 1891-92, as compared with the Revised Estimate for 1890-91, is due to the reductions in the rates of Foreign Postage. The rate for letters to the United Kingdom was reduced from 1st January of this year from 4½ annas to 2½ annas: this involves a sacrifice of about Rx. 30,000 a year. The rate for letters to almost all other Foreign Countries, notably Australia, the Continent of Europe, and America will be reduced to 2½ annas from 1st April next: the cost of this is estimated at Rx. 4,500: when this change is made, the rate of postage from India to all Foreign Countries, with a few unimportant exceptions, will be a uniform rate of 2½ annas. The rate of postage to and from Aden will be reduced to the ordinary Indian inland rate from 1st April.

The decrease in net receipts anticipated this and next year is due to the reduction of the transit rates on foreign messages passing through India from 75 to 35 centimes a word. This reduction was settled at the recent Telegraph Conference in Paris. At the Conference slight reductions were also agreed to in the Indian terminal rate on messages from certain countries, and in the rate on messages from all countries to Ceylon; but these are of less importance.

The Receipts and, in a less degree, the Expenditure of the Mint fluctuate considerably. The Revenue and Expenditure will be specially high in the current year, owing to the unprecedentedly large coinage. The large imports of bullion this year came chiefly from China, the Straits Settlements, Australia, and Austria. The Estimate for 1891-92 does not assume the continuance of this high rate of coinage. The value of silver bullion presented at the Mints for coinage has been as under in the last few years:—

The increase in the Budget Estimate of 1891-92 in the expenditure on Courts of Justice, occurs mainly in Bengal, the North-Western Provinces and Oudh, and Madras. In Bengal the increase is due to the necessity of appointing additional Subordinate Judges and Munsiffs. The increase in the North-Western Provinces and Oudh is due to a general re-organisation of the Judicial and Revenue staff, resulting in an increase of the former: the re-organisation does not involve any increase of expenditure on the whole. In Madras the increase is due to the appointment of addititional Subordinate Magistrates mentioned in paragraph 25.

The increased expenditure on Jails—chiefly in Bengal—occurs under Manufactures, and is, to nearly the whole extent, counterbalanced by increased receipts.

The reduction of the expenditure under Police in the Revised Estimate of 1890-91 is due, as explained in paragraph 15, partly to the reduction of three battalions of Police in Upper Burma, and partly to schemes of improvement and re-organisation for which grants were made not having been brought into operation. In 1891-92 a saving of Rx. 90,000 is expected in Upper Burma. Almost the whole of this saving is counterbalanced by certain Local Governments having again made provision for schemes for improving the organisation and working of the police.

The increase in 1891-92 in Marine Expenditure is explained in paragraph 29.

The expenditure on Education and under Medical increases steadily from year to year.

The explanation of the excess of the Revised Estimate under Political over the Budget Estimate of 1890-91 and the reduction of part of that excess in 1891-92 is given in paragraph 16.

The variations in the figures for Scientific and Minor Departments in 1890-91 and 1891-92 are explained by the Estimates of the cost of the Census.

The important changes affecting this head of Expenditure are explained in paragraph 16 of Part I of this Statement, and paragraphs 14 to 20 of the Financial Statement of last March.

The total of the Famine Relief and Insurance Grant in the Revised Estimate agrees with that of the Budget Estimate for 1890-91.

With the addition of the net charge (Rx. 457,000) on account of the Bengal-Nagpur and the Indian Midland Railways—see paragraph 18 of Part I of the Financial Statement for 1890-91—the grant for 1891-92 will be raised to its original amount of Rx. 1,500,000.

Railways in 1890-91.

50. It will be seen that the net loss on the Railway Account, which was estimated in the Budget of the current year at Rx. 1,866,500, is in the Revised Estimate placed at only Rx. 1,006,800. Of this improvement (Rx. 859,700) no less than Rx. 712,700 is obtained from the rise in Exchange, which reduces the equivalent of the sterling payments of interest in England.

The Miscellaneous Railway Expenditure—principally Expenditure on surveys—is now expected to be greater than the Budget Estimate by Rx. 42,100.

The gross traffic receipts of State lines are expected to be less than the Estimate by Rx. 172,500, but, on the other hand, the working expenses are less by Rx. 233,900, giving a net improvement of Rx 61,400.

The gross receipts of the Guaranteed lines will be Rx. 48,300 less than the Estimate, but the Expenditure, including the payment of surplus profits, will be reduced by Rx. 131,200, giving a net improvement of Rx. 82,900.

State Railways, 1890-91.

51. Whilst the net result is thus in fairly close approximation to the Budget Estimate, there have been some noticeable variations in particular lines.

The earnings of the East Indian Railway are now expected to be lower than the Estimate by Rx. 110,000, but this will be more than covered by estimated savings in Expenditure of Rx. 155,000. The receipts in the earlier part of the year were lower than usual, but the traffic has recently revived and the variation is small considering the magnitude of the figures involved. The decrease in Expenditure is due mainly to smaller maintenance charges, to the postponement of renewals of engines, and, to a small extent, to reductions in establishment.

A falling-off has occurred in the Rajputana-Malwa traffic of Rx. 95,000. On the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway a decrease has occurred, due to no little extent to the very heavy flocds that breached the line.

The Indian Midland progresses far more slowly than might have been reasonably anticipated: but the Burma lines continue to improve, and the Eastern Bengal has had the most favourable season on record owing to large carriage of jute, and to a pilgrim passenger traffic of almost unprecedented magnitude in February.

From the 1st July the Tirhoot State Railway was handed over to the Bengal and North-Western Railway Company under a working contract, and from that date the transactions of the combined undertaking have been classed under State Railways.

The South Indian Railway was purchased by the State on 31st December last, and, together with the lines hitherto known as the Villupuram-Guntakal and Cuddapah-Nellore, handed over to a new Company (which is also a shareholder in the combined undertaking), to complete and work.

Guaranteed Railways, 1890-91.

The earnings of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway will be less than the estimate by Rx. 108,800, owing to a moderate traffic in the earlier months of the year, but its expenses, including payment of surplus profits, will be less by Rx. 124,200, giving a net result in close approximation to the Estimate.

The Madras lines continue steadily to improve.

Railways in 1891-92.

52. Excluding Exchange, on which account a sum of Rx. 373,500 is provided in excess of that entered in the Revised Estimate, the net result on Railway Account for 1891-92 is Rx. 121,400 worse than the Revised Estimate of the current year—a result which may be briefly ascribed to the increase in the charges for interest being slightly more than the increase in the net earnings, and to larger payments on account of surplus profits owing to the brisk traffic in the closing months of the current year.

State Railways, 1891-92.

In 1891-92 the gross receipts of State Railways are estimated at Rx. 1,055,200 higher than the Revised; but of this it is estimated that Rx. 500,000 are due to the inclusion for 12 instead of 3 months of the South Indian Railway, and Rx. 80,000 to the inclusion for 12 instead of 9 months of the Bengal and North-Western Railway.

The most noticeable increases occur on the Bengal-Nagpur—Rx. 130,000; Indian Midland—Rx. 55,000; Southern Mahratta—Rx. 40,000; and Burma Railways—Rx. 20,000, all due to the usual growth of traffic on lines recently opened: and on the East Indian Railway—Rx. 80,000; Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway—Rx. 55,000; Rajputana-Malwa Railway—Rx. 50,000; North-Western Railway—Rx. 50,000. On the other hand, it has been thought desirable to reduce the Estimate for the Eastern Bengal Railway by Rx. 65,000, as the traffic in the current year has been abnormally good.

Guaranteed Railways, 1891-92.

The net traffic receipts of Guaranteed Railways are taken at Rx. 187,900 below the Revised Estimate. This is primarily due to the removal of the South Indian Railway from the category of Guaranteed Railways. A slight improvement is expected on the Great Indian Peninsula and Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railways: but, on the other hand, the working expenses show a slight increase, and the payment of surplus profits will be higher on account of the present heavy traffic.

IRRIGATION.

53. The Irrigation Revenue makes satisfactory progress. The figures are :—

	Actuals, 1887-88.	Actuals, 1888-89.	Actuals, 1889-90.	Budget, 1890-91.	Revised, 1890-91.	Budget, 1891-92.

Net expenditure .	747,372	722,246	661,629	704,400	591,600	722,500

In the current year the improvement in Revenue is chiefly due to increased irrigation from the Western Jumna and Sirhind Canals in the Punjab, and from the Ganges Canal in the North-Western Provinces. There is also an increase in the share of land-revenue due to irrigation in the North-Western Provinces and Oudh, and in Madras, owing in the former to the re-settlement of the Bulandshahr District and in the latter to the extension of irrigation in the Godavari and Kistna Deltas.

The Budget allows for the general expansion of the operations of the Department. But it has been necessary to reduce the estimate of receipts in the North-Western Provinces and Oudh and in the Punjab, where the season of 1890-91 was unusually favourable for irrigation.

Special repairs to the Ganges Canal, larger expenditure on the Gokak Canal in Bombay, and the strengthening of the Irrawaddy and Sittang embankments in Lower Burma, counterbalanced by a decrease in the expenditure on the Hidgellee Tidal Canal in Bengal, account for the increase in Expenditure in the current year.

In the Budget the increase in Expenditure is chiefly due to larger allotments to Upper and Lower Burma, and to provision having been made for the construction of a canal from the Kabul river in the Punjab.

The charges for interest have increased in consequence of additional capital outlay.

The expected improvement in Revenue in the Revised Estimate is due to increased receipts from Military Buildings and to the sale of a portion of the Custom House at Calcutta to the East Indian Railway for Rx. 31,700, and to the transfer of the Lock Hospital and site at Rangoon to the Burma State Railway at a valuation of Rx. 9,800. The excess of the Military Works Expenditure in the Revised, as compared with the Budget Estimate, is explained in paragraph 16.

By far the greater portion of the Civil Works Expenditure is Provincial and Local. The Imperial share is Rx. 734,300 in the Revised Estimate, and a large portion of this, Rx. 290,000, is for Buildings and Communications in Upper Burma, and Rx. 12,500 is for Buildings and Roads in Zhob.

The outlay from Local Funds amounts to Rx. 1,646,500, and from Provincial, to Rx. 2,220,800.

The Provincial Expenditure depends to a great extent on the state of the Provincial balances. The increase in the total grant for next year is considerable and occurs chiefly in Bengal, the North-Western Provinces and Oudh, and Madras; a special expenditure of Rx. 20,000 in the Punjab for the reconstruction of the Lawrence Military Asylum at Sanawar is also included.

ARMY.

General examination of the increase of Military Expenditure in recent years.

55. As Military expenditure accounts for a large portion of the total increase in the expenditure of the Government of India in recent years, it may be useful to prefix to the notice of the Estimates of 1890-91 and 1891-92 under this head a general review of the expenditure for some years. The following statement shows the total Military expenditure charged under "Army" in India and in England, including Exchange, in each year since 1881-82 :—

Years.	India.	England.	Exchange	Total.
1881-82	14,850,657	4,010,485	827,368	19,688,510

„ Revised	14,816,000	4,589 800	1,494,700	20,897,500
1891-92 Budget	14,565,500	4 661,600	1,824,100	21,051,200

56. It will be seen that the expenditure decreased in each of the earlier years down to 1884-85, and that since 1885-86 there has been an increase. The decrease in the earlier years was largely due to the cessation of the expenditure connected with Military operations in Afghanistan. The total in 1883-84 was swelled by the payment of £1,000,000 on account of arrear charges of the War Office. If that sum, with the exchange on it, be left out of consideration as not properly belonging to the year, it may be said that in the two years 1883-84 and 1884-85 the Military expenditure had fallen to the level of that of the period before the Afghan war; the total expenditure, including exchange calculated by the method now in use, was Rx. 15,701,990 in 1875-76, Rx. 16,467,663 in 1876-77, and Rx. 17,300,790, in 1877-78.

57. Since 1884-85 the expenditure on the Army has been permanently raised to a much higher level and is increasing. Most of the increase in 1885-86 was in consequence of the war preparations in that year. From 1886-87, the increase is due to the raising of the strength of the Army in India, and to greater Military activity in various directions.

Total increase of Military Expenditure in recent years, about Rx 4,000,000.

58. The expenditure shown in the Revised Estimate for 1890-91 and in the Budget Estimate of 1891-92 is about Rx. 4,000,000 higher than the expenditure of 1884-85. It was explained in paragraph 58 of Part II of the Financial Statement of last March, that a large portion of the expenditure provided in 1890-91 was for special ordnance stores, and a hope was expressed that a reduction would be possible in 1891-92. This expectation has not been realised. A large part of the special ordnance stores which were to be supplied in 1890-91 has not been supplied: and £377,000, not expended this year on magazine rifles and ammunition, has been provided again in the Estimates of next year, in which provision is also made for other special ordnance demands amounting to over £300,000. If, contrary to past experience, it should turn out that the special expenditure will be completed in 1891-92, the increase in Military Expenditure may be reduced considerably in 1892-93 and succeeding years.

The Estimates for 1890-91 and 1891-92.

59. The following are short explanations of the variations in the figures in the Budget and Revised Estimates for 1890-91 and in the Estimate for 1891-92:—

The Revised Estimate of expenditure in India for 1890-91 is Rx. 10,000 more than the Budget Estimate. An expenditure of Rx. 160,000 on expeditions not contemplated when the Budget was framed has been incurred, and the value of officers' pensions capitalised has been Rx. 25,000 higher than the Estimate. Against these increases there have been savings under Regimental Pay and Allowances and under Commissariat charges.

The Revised Estimate for Sterling expenditure in England is less than the Budget Estimate by £30,300.

The Budget Estimate of Expenditure in India in 1891-92 is Rx. 240,500 less than the Estimate for 1890-91. The decrease is due to the difference in the pay of British Troops at the rates of exchange for the two years and to less expenditure being expected on Frontier expeditions and on preparations for mobilisation.

The sterling Expenditure in England is estimated to be £41,500 higher in 1891-92 than the Estimate of 1890-91.

SPECIAL DEFENCE WORKS.

60. The following are the figures for "Special Defence Works"—

	Rx.
1885-86	137,811
1886-87	325,626
1887-88	456,017
1888-89	789,595
1889-90	689,481
1890-91 Budget Estimate	892,300
1890-91 Revised „	523,300
1891-92 Budget „	847,000

The expenditure on these works for the current year is now expected to be much less than the amount entered in the Budget Estimate. Similar lapses occurred in previous years. The total Expenditure on Special Defences is estimated at Rx. 5,000,000, and as the expenditure to the end of 1891-92 is expected to amount to Rx. 3,768,830, there will remain Rx. 1,231,170 to be incurred in 1892-93 and future years.

61. There is another class of expenditure, namely, that on Strategic Railways, which may appropriately be mentioned in connection with the Special Defence Works. The expenditure on Strategic Railways has been up to date Rx. 9,500,000 in round numbers.

It will be seen that from the beginning there has been a steady increase in the Revenue and from 1887-88 a steady decrease in the Expenditure.

The net cost of holding Upper Burma has been reduced from Rx. 2,618,300 in 1887-88 to about Rx. 1,150,000 in the present year. The deficit for 1891-92 is estimated at a slightly higher figure than the Revised Estimate of 1890-91. But as the results have always hitherto proved better than the anticipations, we may hope that the deficit will be further reduced in 1891-92.

Section V.—Expenditure not charged to Revenue.

63. The Expenditure not charged to Revenue falls under three heads:—

48.—Capital Outlay on State Railways.

49.— Ditto on Irrigation Works.

Capital Expenditure on Railways.

64. The following table gives the figures of the Estimates for 1890-91 and 1891-92 for Capital Expenditure on Railways, the amount charged to the Famine Grant being included for convenience, although it is charged to Revenue.

	India.	England.	Exchange.	TOTAL.

Of the amount proposed for expenditure in 1891-92, Rx. 975,000 have been provided from the Famine Grant and shown under the head "34—Construction of Protective Railways."

The Revised Estimate for 1890-91 is placed at Rx. 2,985,000 against Rx. 3,200,000, provided in the Budget Estimate, the lapse being Rx. 215,000. The heaviest expenditure has been on the Villapuram-Guntakal, the Mu Valley, the East Coast, and on the Chaman Extension Railways. The Jummoo-Kashmir line (British Section) has been completed; the Durbhunga-Bairagnia branch of the Tirhoot Railway and the Mianwali-Mari branch of the North-Western Railway are nearly completed; while considerable progress has been made with the East Coast Railway, and a start has been made on the Godhra-Rutlam and Dharmaveram-Hindupur lines.

The provision for 1891-92 will, it is hoped, complete the Chaman extension, the Villapuram-Guntakul, and the Dharmaveram-Hindupur, as well as the small unfinished branches before alluded to. Large grants are provided for the East Coast and Mu Valley Railways, and a considerable sum for the Godhra-Rutlam.

The following figures show the rate at which Railways have been constructed at the cost, or on the responsibility, of the Government since 1880:—

The reduction in the Revised Estimate from Rx. 550,000 to Rx. 504,400 is due to the postponement of the construction of the Cawnpore Branch of the Lower Ganges Canal. The construction of the Sirsa Branch of the Western Jumna Canal and of the Chenab Canal in the Punjab is in active progress, and good progress has been made with the Periyar Project in Madras.

The Secretary of State proposes to draw £16,000,000 by Council Bills. He also proposes a raise a loan of £2,600,000. Of this loan, the sum of £1,386,000 is required for the repayment of a portion of the India 3½ per cent. debentures which fall due on the 16th of August 1891, the remainder, £1,614,000, being renewed as 3¼ per cent. debentures; the balance of the loan is required for advances to Railway Companies under the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway Purchase Act. Of the amounts required for advances to Railway Companies, the sum of £445,000 is for the discharge of a portion of the Southern Mahratta Railway Company debentures, which fall due on the 1st October 1891: the remainder, £1,000,000, will be renewed. It should be understood that, in stating these as the present intentions of the Secretary of State, no pledge is given that he will adhere to the programme announced; the amount to be obtained by bills or raised by loans may be altered from time to time as may seem expedient.

The headings in italics are connected with, and explained by, the corresponding figures of the Secretary of State's account in England. The others refer to purely Indian transactions.

70. In accordance with the announcement made in the last Financial Statement, no loan has been issued in India in 1890-91.

Nor is it expected that a loan will be necessary in 1891-92. The large surpluses of 1889-90 and 1890-91, and the provision made in those two years under Famine Insurance for Reduction of Debt, explain the ability of the Government of India to meet its Capital Expenditure without borrowing in either of the two years. Though it is the present intention of the Government not to raise a loan in India in the coming year, full liberty is, as usual, reserved to modify this intention to any extent necessary.

YEAR.	Net additions to deposits cash.	Interest.	Total net addition.
	Rx.	Rx.	Rx.

1891-92, Budget	229,500	305,100	534,600

As explained in paragraph 65 of Part II of the last Financial Statement, the net withdrawals in 1889-90 were caused by the reduction to the new maximum limit of existing accounts in excess of that limit. The net deposits expected in the current year show that the effect of that change is exhausted, and that the reduction of the yearly limit is not likely unduly to restrict the deposits, which are again increasing.

72. The net amounts estimated for advances to Municipalities, Presidency Corporations, and others during 1890-91 and 1891-92 are Rx. 783,200 and Rx. 1,008,300. Rx. 330,500 and 523,600 are the amounts of the advances to be made by Local Governments under the system referred to in paragraph 66 of Part II of the last Financial Statement; and Rx. 448,600 and Rx. 487,600 are the amounts required by the Calcutta and Bombay Port Trusts for the Kidderpur and Victoria Docks.

The accounts of the advances made to these two corporations on account of the Docks will stand thus at the end of 1891-92 :—

73. The closing balance of the current year was estimated in March last at Rx. 13,094,089. It is now expected to be Rx. 16,797,121. In 1891-92 provision is made for the payment of Secretary of State's Bills to the extent of Rx. 16,934,400, and the year is expected to close with a balance of Rx. 13,570,321.

Section VII.—Summary.

(a) The Accounts of 1889-90 have closed with a surplus of Rx. 2,612,033.

(b) The Revised Estimates of 1890-91 show a surplus of Rx. 2,787,100 against a surplus of Rx. 270,400 in the Budget Estimate of the year. The larger portion of the improvement is in consequence of the rise in the rate of Exchange. The rate taken in the Budget Estimate was 1*s.* 4·552*d.* = ₹1, while in the Revised Estimate the rate is 1*s.* 6·113*d.* = ₹1.

(c) The Budget Estimates of 1891-92 show a surplus of Rx. 115,600. The Famine Grant has been raised to Rx. 1,500,000, including the net charge on the Revenues on account of the Indian Midland and Bengal-Nagpur Railways, which amounts to Rx. 457,000. The Estimate of net revenue from Opium is reduced to Rx. 5,318,700. Exchange is taken at 1*s.* 5·25*d.* = ₹1.

(d) The Expenditure on Railways and Irrigation Works (not charged against Revenue) is estimated at Rx. 3,489,400 in 1890-91 and at Rx. 3,500,000 in 1891-92, besides Rx. 975,000 charged against the Famine Grant for Protective Railways in the latter year. A capital Expenditure of £4,692,600 has been incurred in 1890-91 on the purchase of the South Indian Railway.

(e) The Secretary of State proposes to sell Council Bills in 1891-92 to the amount of £16,000,000, and to raise a sterling loan of £2,600,000. The loan is for the repayment of £1,386,000 of the India 3½ per cent. debentures which fall due on the 16th of August 1891, and for advances to certain Railway Companies. The remainder of the India debentures falling due on that date, £1,634,000, will be renewed at 3¼ per cent. These announcements are accompanied by the usual reserve that, though the present intentions of the Secretary of State are as stated, he gives no promise and reserves entire liberty to vary the amounts to be obtained by bills or raised by loan as he may find occasion.

(f) It has not been necessary to raise any loan in India in 1890-91, and it is not anticipated that any loan will be required in India in 1891-92. The surpluses of 1889-90 and 1890-91 and other receipts, enable the Government to meet the capital expenditure not charged to Revenue without borrowing. No pledge, however, is given that the Government will not borrow in India during the year.

(g) The financial prospects of the next two years are considered to depend largely on the rate of Exchange and on the amount of Military Expenditure.

APPENDIX I.

The Course of Prices and Wages in 1890.

The tables attached are—

A 1.—Wholesale prices of staple commodities of international trade at Calcutta, Bombay, Rangoon, and Karachi, for the earliest date in each month from December 1889 to March 1891. The rate of exchange (demand drafts in Calcutta) and the price of bar silver in London for the same period are prefixed to the table.

A 2—is the same table as A 1, but the price in December 1889 is in this table taken to represent 100, and the variations are based on that figure. This table therefore shows the percentage of increase or decrease in silver and the other articles.

Table A 1 has been compiled from returns of Chambers of Commerce, except as regards rice at Rangoon, which is taken from the price-current of a local firm.

B 1.—This table gives the retail prices of the three great staples of food—wheat, jowar, and rice—at the larger centres the prices in which may be taken to indicate the course of prices generally throughout the provinces. It is compiled from the fortnightly returns received from district officers and published regularly in the Gazette of India. The price of the first half of each month has been taken for the table.

The figures in this table commence from January 1889 nstead of December 1889, as in the wholesale table, in order to shew that the monthly fluctuations in 1890 are similar to the monthly fluctuations in 1889. Prices in fact fluctuate from month to month in each year in just the same way, except in unusual years, when abnormal variations are caused by abnormal variations of the seasons.

B 2—is the same table as B1, but in this case the prices of December 1889 have been taken to represent 100, and on this basis the percentage of fluctuation is shown from month to month from January 1889 to February 1891.

C 1—is a table of wages for the first and second halves of 1889 and 1890 respectively at eight large stations, the level of wages in which may be taken as representing the course of wages generally. It gives the rate of wages for unskilled (agricultural) labour and skilled labour (mason, carpenter, or blacksmith). This table is extracted from returns received half-yearly from the district officials and published in the Gazette of India. The table also gives the wages paid at the Government Harness and Saddle Factory at Cawnpore.

C 2—supplements C 1. It contains the wages given in January of each of the two years 1890 and 1891 in various industrial establishments in Bengal, Northern India, and Bombay.

Prices.—From table A 2 it will be seen that both imports and exports have moved in sympathy with the fall and rise in silver, though the percentage of rise and fall has not been exactly the same. The metal was in progressive appreciation from May to September when depreciation set in.

No such effect on retail prices is apparent in table B 2. In these the fluctuations in 1890 resemble those of 1889 and are similar to those of ordinary years. Adding together the price of the three grains at the different stations (being 100 in December 1889) we have the following variations :—

December	1889	1300
January	1890	1305
February	„	1291
March	„	1330
April	„	1363
May	„	1383
June	„	1356
July	„	1394
August	1890	1407
September	„	1426
October	„	1419
November	„	1410
December	„	1340
January	1891	1377
February	„	1378

There is in fact no sort of relation between the variations of silver and of retail prices. These prices manifestly varied with reference to the condition of supplies in the markets and the prospects of crops. They were at their highest when silver was at its highest, and they still remain high though they have fallen somewhat (as usual) from the high level which accompanies the period of the year when the prospects of the monsoon harvest are still uncertain.

Wages.—Tables C 1 and C 2 shew that there has practically been no variation in the level of wages. In a few cases wages have fallen, and in a few others they have risen, but on the whole they have remained stationary.

REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

A Dictionary of the Economic Products of India.

BY DR. GEO. WATT, C.I.E.,

Reporter on Economic Products.

Published under the authority of the Government of India in the Revenue and Agricultural Department,

The first three volumes of this work are now ready for issue, and intending subscribers are invited to register their names with the Superintendent of Government Printing, Calcutta.

The Dictionary is intended to deal with the products of India—animal, vegetable, and mineral; each product being treated after a uniform plan, the paragraphs of which give the scientific, vernacular, and European names; habitat or source history; properties and uses, both chemical and industrial; trade statistics; markets, &c. The work is arranged alphabetically according to scientific nomenclature, but commercial and important vernacular names are also given as cross references, so that little difficulty need be experienced in finding the account of a product even when its scientific name is unknown to the reader.

An important feature of the Dictionary consists in the fact that derived information is in every instance given under quotation marks, and with a reference to the original publication. Numerous contributions have, however, furnished the results of new discoveries, and confirmed the vernacular names; so that the Dictionary is not only a complete compilation of published information, but has been brought abreast of the most recent inventions and discoveries.

Volume I contains the letters A and B, and consists of 559 royal pages; Volume II embraces the letter C in 689 pages; Volume III contains the letters D, E, F, and G in 534 pages. The whole work will, it is expected, be completed in six volumes by 1891; but a seventh volume may also be issued consisting of an Index to all the vernacular and other names contained in the Dictionary; and this as a work of reference, it is hoped, may prove of considerable value.

The price to subscribers will be in India R30 and in England 2 guineas, payable in advance, for the complete set. An extra charge for packing and postage will be made for the set—in India, at 8 annas per volume, and for England at 2 rupees 6 annas per volume.

For copies bound in half calf or half morocco, R6 and 8 shillings, respectively, will be charged extra for the whole sets.

No copies will be issued to non-subscribers till the work is complete, and no single volume will be sold separately. The price to non-subscribers will be R45 in India and 3 guineas in England, exclusive of packing and postage.

REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

A Dictionary of the Economic Products of India.

BY DR. GEO. WATT, C.I.E.,

Reporter on Economic Products.

Published under the authority of the Government of India in the Revenue and Agricultural Department.

The first three volumes of this work are now ready for issue, and intending subscribers are invited to register their names with the Superintendent of Government Printing, Calcutta.

The Dictionary is intended to deal with the products of India—animal, vegetable, and mineral; each product being treated after a uniform plan, the paragraphs of which give the scientific, vernacular, and European names; habitat or source history; properties and uses, both chemical and industrial; trade statistics; markets, &c. The work is arranged alphabetically according to scientific nomenclature, but commercial and important vernacular names are also given as cross references, so that little difficulty need be experienced in finding the account of a product even when its scientific name is unknown to the reader.

An important feature of the Dictionary consists in the fact that derived information is in every instance given under quotation marks, and with a reference to the original publication. Numerous contributions have, however, furnished the results of new discoveries, and confirmed the vernacular names; so that the Dictionary is not only a complete compilation of published information, but has been brought abreast of the most recent inventions and discoveries.

Volume I contains the letters A and B, and consists of 559 royal pages; Volume II embraces the letter C in 689 pages; Volume III contains the letters D, E, F, and G in 534 pages. The whole work will, it is expected, be completed in six volumes by 1891; but a seventh volume may also be issued consisting of an Index to all the vernacular and other names contained in the Dictionary; and this as a work of reference, it is hoped, may prove of considerable value.

The price to subscribers will be in India R30 and in England 2 guineas, payable in advance, for the complete set. An extra charge for packing and postage will be made for the set—in India, at 8 annas per volume, and for England at 2 rupees 6 annas per volume.

For copies bound in half calf or half morocco, R6 and 8 shillings, respectively, will be charged extra for the whole sets.

 No copies will be issued to non-subscribers till the work is complete, and no single volume will be sold separately. The price to non-subscribers will be R45 in India and 3 guineas in England, exclusive of packing and postage.

REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

A Dictionary of the Economic Products of India.

BY DR. GEO. WATT, C.I.E.,
Reporter on Economic Products.

Published under the authority of the Government of India in the Revenue and Agricultural Department,

The first four volumes of this work are now ready for issue, and intending subscribers are invited to register their names with the Superintendent of Government Printing, Calcutta.

The Dictionary is intended to deal with the products of India—animal, vegetable, and mineral; each product being treated after a uniform plan, the paragraphs of which give the scientific, vernacular, and European names; habitat or source history; properties and uses, both chemical and industrial; trade statistics; markets, &c. The work is arranged alphabetically according to scientific nomenclature, but commercial and important vernacular names are also given as cross references, so that little difficulty need be experienced in finding the account of a product even when its scientific name is unknown to the reader.

An important feature of the Dictionary consists in the fact that derived information is in every instance given under quotation marks, and with a reference to the original publication. Numerous contributions have, however, furnished the results of new discoveries, and confirmed the vernacular names; so that the Dictionary is not only a complete compilation of published information, but has been brought abreast of the most recent inventions and discoveries.

Volume I contains the letters A and B, and consists of 559 royal pages; Volume II embraces the letter C in 689 pages; Volume III contains the letters D, E, F, and G in 534 pages. Vol. IV, letters G to L, in 643 pages. The whole work will, it is expected, be completed in six volumes by 1891; but a seventh volume may also be issued consisting of an Index to all the vernacular and other names contained in the Dictionary; and this, as a work of reference, it is hoped, may prove of considerable value.

The price to subscribers will be in India R30 and in England 2 guineas, payable in advance, for the complete set. An extra charge for packing and postage will be made for the set—in India, at 8 annas per volume, and for England at 2 rupees 6 annas per volume.

For copies bound in half calf or half morocco, R6 and 8 shillings, respectively, will be charged extra for the whole sets.

 No copies will be issued to non-subscribers till the work is complete, and no single volume will be sold separately. The price to non-subscribers will be R45 in India and 3 guineas in England, exclusive of packing and postage.

REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

A Dictionary of the Economic Products of India.

BY DR. GEO. WATT, C.I.E.,
Reporter on Economic Products.

Published under the authority of the Government of India in the Revenue and Agricultural Department.

The first four volumes of this work are now ready for issue, and intending subscribers are invited to register their names with the Superintendent of Government Printing, Calcutta.

The Dictionary is intended to deal with the products of India—animal, vegetable, and mineral; each product being treated after a uniform plan, the paragraphs of which give the scientific, vernacular, and European names; habitat or source history; properties and uses, both chemical and industrial; trade statistics; markets, &c. The work is arranged alphabetically according to scientific nomenclature, but commercial and important vernacular names are also given as cross references, so that little difficulty need be experienced in finding the account of a product even when its scientific name is unknown to the reader.

An important feature of the Dictionary consists in the fact that derived information is in every instance given under quotation marks, and with a reference to the original publication. Numerous contributions have, however, furnished the results of new discoveries, and confirmed the vernacular names; so that the Dictionary is not only a complete compilation of published information, but has been brought abreast of the most recent inventions and discoveries.

Volume I contains the letters A and B, and consists of 559 royal pages; Volume II embraces the letter C in 683 pages; Volume III contains the letters D, E, F, and G in 534 pages. Vol. IV, letters H to L. in 643 pages. The whole work will, it is expected, be completed in six volumes by 1891; but a seventh volume may also be issued consisting of an Index to all the vernacular and other names contained in the Dictionary; and this, as a work of reference, it is hoped, may prove of considerable value.

The price to subscribers will be in India R30 and in England 2 guineas, payable in advance, for the complete set. An extra charge for packing and postage will be made for the set—in India, at 8 annas per volume, and for England at 2 rupees 6 annas per volume.

For copies bound in half calf or half morocco, R6 and 8 shillings, respectively, will be charged extra for the whole sets.

 No copies will be issued to non-subscribers till the work is complete, and no single volume will be sold separately. The price to non-subscribers will be R45 in India and 3 guineas in England, exclusive of packing and postage.

REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

A Dictionary of the Economic Products of India.

BY DR. GEO. WATT, C.I.E.,
Reporter on Economic Products.

Published under the authority of the Government of India in the Revenue and Agricultural Department,

The first four volumes of this work are now ready for issue, and intending subscribers are invited to register their names with the Superintendent of Government Printing, Calcutta.

The Dictionary is intended to deal with the products of India—animal, vegetable, and mineral; each product being treated after a uniform plan, the paragraphs of which give the scientific, vernacular, and European names; habitat or source history; properties and uses, both chemical and industrial; trade statistics; markets, &c. The work is arranged alphabetically according to scientific nomenclature, but commercial and important vernacular names are also given as cross references, so that little difficulty need be experienced in finding the account of a product even when its scientific name is unknown to the reader.

An important feature of the Dictionary consists in the fact that derived information is in every instance given under quotation marks, and with a reference to the original publication. Numerous contributions have, however, furnished the results of new discoveries, and confirmed the vernacular names; so that the Dictionary is not only a complete compilation of published information, but has been brought abreast of the most recent inventions and discoveries.

Volume I contains the letters A and B, and consists of 559 royal pages; Volume II embraces the letter C in 683 pages; Volume III contains the letters D, E, F, and G in 534 pages. Vol. IV, letters G to L, in 643 pages. The whole work will, it is expected, be completed in six volumes by 1891; but a seventh volume may also be issued consisting of an Index to all the vernacular and other names contained in the Dictionary; and this as a work of reference, it is hoped, may prove of considerable value.

The price to subscribers will be in India R30 and in England 2 guineas, payable in advance, for the complete set. An extra charge for packing and postage will be made for the set—in India, at 8 annas per volume, and for England at 2 rupees 6 annas per volume.

For copies bound in half calf or half morocco, R6 and 8 shillings, respectively, will be charged extra for the whole sets.

 No copies will be issued to non-subscribers till the work is complete, and no single volume will be sold separately. The price to non-subscribers will be R45 in India and 3 guineas in England, exclusive of packing and postage.

The following Rules for regulating first appointments to the Upper grades of the Northern India Salt Revenue Department have been approved by the Government of India, and are published for the information of the candidates for employment in the Department :—

Rules.

I.—A candidate for appointment as Assistant Superintendent, 2nd grade, on R150 per mensem in the Northern India Salt Department must forward an application to the Commissioner, and furnish such evidence as the Commissioner may require—

Should permission to appear at the examination be refused, no reason for such refusal will be given to the candidate.

III.—Intimation will be given by letter and by notice in the Gazette of India to the candidates, who have obtained permission under the preceding Rule, of the time and place fixed for holding the examination, and of the number of appointments to be competed for. The number of vacancies announced will be filled up as they become available by candidates in the order of merit in which they pass the examination, provided that they are considered by the Examiners to have shown themselves sufficiently well educated for employment in the Department.

IV.—The Examination will be held in the following subjects :—

1. English, including composition and précis-writing ;

V.—A candidate appointed to a vacancy under Rule III will be considered on probation for one year, on the expiration of which time he will if favourably reported on by the Assistant Commissioner of the Division in which he has been employed, be called on to undergo the Departmental Examination prescribed by the Standing Orders of the Department. If the candidate passes this Examination, he will be confirmed in the post of Assistant Superintendent, 2nd grade ; if he does not, his services may be dispensed with.

VI.—Nothing in these rules shall prevent the Commissioner from promoting at his discretion subordinates of proved merit to the rank of Assistant Superintendent, without requiring them to appear at the Competitive Examination under Rule IV, but subject to their passing the Departmental Examination referred to in Rule V.

REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

A Dictionary of the Economic Products of India.

BY DR. GEO. WATT, C.I.E.,
Reporter on Economic Products.

Published under the authority of the Government of India in the Revenue and Agricultural Department.

The first four volumes of this work are now ready for issue, and intending subscribers are invited to register their names with the Superintendent of Government Printing, Calcutta.

The Dictionary is intended to deal with the products of India—animal, vegetable, and mineral; each product being treated after a uniform plan, the paragraphs of which give the scientific, vernacular, and European names; habitat or source history; properties and uses, both chemical and industrial; trade statistics; markets, &c. The work is arranged alphabetically according to scientific nomenclature, but commercial and important vernacular names are also given as cross references, so that little difficulty need be experienced in finding the account of a product even when its scientific name is unknown to the reader.

An important feature of the Dictionary consists in the fact that derived information is in every instance given under quotation marks, and with a reference to the original publication. Numerous contributions have, however, furnished the results of new discoveries, and confirmed the vernacular names; so that the Dictionary is not only a complete compilation of published information, but has been brought abreast of the most recent inventions and discoveries.

Volume I contains the letters A and B, and consists of 559 royal pages; Volume II embraces the letter C in 683 pages; Volume III contains the letters D, E, F, and G in 534 pages. Vol. IV, letters G to L, in 643 pages. The whole work will, it is expected, be completed in six volumes by 1891; but a seventh volume may also be issued consisting of an Index to all the vernacular and other names contained in the Dictionary; and this as a work of reference, it is hoped, may prove of considerable value.

The price to subscribers will be in India R30 and in England 2 guineas, payable in advance, for the complete set. An extra charge for packing and postage will be made for the set—in India, at 8 annas per volume, and for England at 2 rupees 6 annas per volume.

For copies bound in half calf or half morocco, R6 and 8 shillings, respectively, will be charged extra for the whole sets.

 No copies will be issued to non-subscribers till the work is complete, and no single volume will be sold separately. The price to non-subscribers will be R45 in India and 3 guineas in England, exclusive of packing and postage.

REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

A Dictionary of the Economic Products of India.

BY DR. GEO. WATT, C.I.E.,

Reporter on Economic Products.

Published under the authority of the Government of India in the Revenue and Agricultural Department.

The first four volumes of this work are now ready for issue, and intending subscribers are invited to register their names with the Superintendent of Government Printing, Calcutta.

The Dictionary is intended to deal with the products of India—animal, vegetable, and mineral; each product being treated after a uniform plan, the paragraphs of which give the scientific, vernacular, and European names; habitat or source history; properties and uses, both chemical and industrial; trade statistics; markets, &c. The work is arranged alphabetically according to scientific nomenclature, but commercial and important vernacular names are also given as cross references, so that little difficulty need be experienced in finding the account of a product even when its scientific name is unknown to the reader.

An important feature of the Dictionary consists in the fact that derived information is in every instance given under quotation marks, and with a reference to the original publication. Numerous contributions have, however, furnished the results of new discoveries, and confirmed the vernacular names; so that the Dictionary is not only a complete compilation of published information, but has been brought abreast of the most recent inventions and discoveries.

Volume I contains the letters A and B, and consists of 559 royal pages; Volume II embraces the letter C in 689 pages; Volume III contains the letters D, E, F, and G in 534 pages. Vol. IV, letters G to L. in 643 pages. The whole work will, it is expected, be completed in six volumes by 1891; but a seventh volume may also be issued consisting of an Index to all the vernacular and other names contained in the Dictionary; and this as a work of reference, it is hoped, may prove of considerable value.

The price to subscribers will be in India R30 and in England 2 guineas, payable in advance, for the complete set. An extra charge for packing and postage will be made for the set—in India, at 8 annas per volume, and for England at 2 rupees 6 annas per volume.

For copies bound in half calf or half morocco, R6 and 8 shillings, respectively, will be charged extra for the whole sets.

 No copies will be issued to non-subscribers till the work is complete, and no single volume will be sold separately. The price to non-subscribers will be R45 in India and 3 guineas in England, exclusive of packing and postage.

REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

A Dictionary of the Economic Products of India.

BY DR. GEO. WATT, C.I.E.,

Reporter on Economic Products.

Published under the authority of the Government of India in the Revenue and Agricultural Department.

The first four volumes of this work are now ready for issue, and intending subscribers are invited to register their names with the Superintendent of Government Printing, Calcutta.

The Dictionary is intended to deal with the products of India—animal, vegetable, and mineral; each product being treated after a uniform plan, the paragraphs of which give the scientific, vernacular, and European names; habitat or source history; properties and uses, both chemical and industrial; trade statistics; markets, &c. The work is arranged alphabetically according to scientific nomenclature, but commercial and important vernacular names are also given as cross references, so that little difficulty need be experienced in finding the account of a product even when its scientific name is unknown to the reader.

An important feature of the Dictionary consists in the fact that derived information is in every instance given under quotation marks, and with a reference to the original publication. Numerous contributions have, however, furnished the results of new discoveries, and confirmed the vernacular names; so that the Dictionary is not only a complete compilation of published information, but has been brought abreast of the most recent inventions and discoveries.

Volume I contains the letters A and B, and consists of 559 royal pages; Volume II embraces the letter C in 689 pages; Volume III contains the letters D, E, F, and G in 534 pages. Vol. IV, letters G to L, in 643 pages. The whole work will, it is expected, be completed in six volumes by 1891; but a seventh volume may also be issued consisting of an Index to all the vernacular and other names contained in the Dictionary; and this as a work of reference, it is hoped, may prove of considerable value.

The price to subscribers will be in India R30 and in England 2 guineas, payable in advance, for the complete set. An extra charge for packing and postage will be made for the set—in India, at 8 annas per volume, and for England at 2 rupees 6 annas per volume.

For copies bound in half calf or half morocco, R6 and 8 shillings, respectively, will be charged extra for the whole sets.

 No copies will be issued to non-subscribers till the work is complete, and no single volume will be sold separately. The price to non-subscribers will be R45 in India and 3 guineas in England, exclusive of packing and postage.

REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

A Dictionary of the Economic Products of India.

BY DR. GEO. WATT, C.I.E.,

Reporter on Economic Products.

Published under the authority of the Government of India in the Revenue and Agricultural Department.

The first four volumes of this work are now ready for issue, and intending subscribers are invited to register their names with the Superintendent of Government Printing, Calcutta.

The Dictionary is intended to deal with the products of India—animal, vegetable, and mineral; each product being treated after a uniform plan, the paragraphs of which give the scientific, vernacular, and European names; habitat or source history; properties and uses, both chemical and industrial; trade statistics; markets, &c. The work is arranged alphabetically according to scientific nomenclature, but commercial and important vernacular names are also given as cross references, so that little difficulty need be experienced in finding the account of a product even when its scientific name is unknown to the reader.

An important feature of the Dictionary consists in the fact that derived information is in every instance given under quotation marks, and with a reference to the original publication. Numerous contributions have, however, furnished the results of new discoveries, and confirmed the vernacular names; so that the Dictionary is not only a complete compilation of published information, but has been brought abreast of the most recent inventions and discoveries.

Volume I contains the letters A and B, and consists of 559 royal pages; Volume II embraces the letter C in 683 pages; Volume III contains the letters D, E, F, and G in 534 pages. Vol. IV, letters G to L, in 643 pages. The whole work will, it is expected, be completed in six volumes by 1891; but a seventh volume may also be issued consisting of an Index to all the vernacular and other names contained in the Dictionary; and this as a work of reference, it is hoped, may prove of considerable value.

The price to subscribers will be in India ₹30 and in England 2 guineas, payable in advance, for the complete set. An extra charge for packing and postage will be made for the set—in India, at 8 annas per volume, and for England at 2 rupees 6 annas per volume.

For copies bound in half calf or half morocco, ₹6 and 8 shillings, respectively, will be charged extra for the whole sets.

 No copies will be issued to non-subscribers till the work is complete, and no single volume will be sold separately. The price to non-subscribers will be ₹45 in India and 3 guineas in England, exclusive of packing and postage.

REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

A Dictionary of the Economic Products of India.

BY DR. GEO. WATT, C.I.E.,

Reporter on Economic Products.

Published under the authority of the Government of India in the Revenue and Agricultural Department,

The first four volumes of this work are now ready for issue, and intending subscribers are invited to register their names with the Superintendent of Government Printing, Calcutta.

The Dictionary is intended to deal with the products of India—animal, vegetable, and mineral; each product being treated after a uniform plan, the paragraphs of which give the scientific, vernacular, and European names; habitat or source history; properties and uses, both chemical and industrial; trade statistics; markets, &c. The work is arranged alphabetically according to scientific nomenclature, but commercial and important vernacular names are also given as cross references, so that little difficulty need be experienced in finding the account of a product even when its scientific name is unknown to the reader.

An important feature of the Dictionary consists in the fact that derived information is in every instance given under quotation marks, and with a reference to the original publication. Numerous contributions have, however, furnished the results of new discoveries, and confirmed the vernacular names; so that the Dictionary is not only a complete compilation of published information, but has been brought abreast of the most recent inventions and discoveries.

Volume I contains the letters A and B, and consists of 559 royal pages; Volume II embraces the letter C in 689 pages; Volume III contains the letters D, E, F, and G in 534 pages. Vol. IV, letters G to L. in 643 pages. The whole work will, it is expected, be completed in six volumes by 1891; but a seventh volume may also be issued consisting of an Index to all the vernacular and other names contained in the Dictionary; and this as a work of reference, it is hoped, may prove of considerable value.

The price to subscribers will be in India R30 and in England 2 guineas, payable in advance, for the complete set. An extra charge for packing and postage will be made for the set—in India, at 8 annas per volume, and for England at 2 rupees 6 annas per volume.

For copies bound in half calf or half morocco, R6 and 8 shillings, respectively, will be charged extra for the whole sets.

No copies will be issued to non-subscribers till the work is complete, and no single volume will be sold separately. The price to non-subscribers will be R45 in India and 3 guineas in England, exclusive of packing and postage.*

REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

A Dictionary of the Economic Products of India.

BY DR. GEO. WATT, C.I.E.,

Reporter on Economic Products.

Published under the authority of the Government of India in the Revenue and Agricultural Department,

The first four volumes of this work are now ready for issue, and intending subscribers are invited to register their names with the Superintendent of Government Printing, Calcutta.

The Dictionary is intended to deal with the products of India—animal, vegetable, and mineral; each product being treated after a uniform plan, the paragraphs of which give the scientific, vernacular, and European names; habitat or source history; properties and uses, both chemical and industrial; trade statistics; markets, &c. The work is arranged alphabetically according to scientific nomenclature, but commercial and important vernacular names are also given as cross references, so that little difficulty need be experienced in finding the account of a product even when its scientific name is unknown to the reader.

An important feature of the Dictionary consists in the fact that derived information is in every instance given under quotation marks, and with a reference to the original publication. Numerous contributions have, however, furnished the results of new discoveries, and confirmed the vernacular names; so that the Dictionary is not only a complete compilation of published information, but has been brought abreast of the most recent inventions and discoveries.

Volume I contains the letters A and B, and consists of 559 royal pages; Volume II embraces the letter C in 683 pages; Volume III contains the letters D, E, F, and G in 534 pages. Vol. IV, letters G to L, in 643 pages. The whole work will, it is expected, be completed in six volumes by 1891; but a seventh volume may also be issued consisting of an Index to all the vernacular and other names contained in the Dictionary; and this as a work of reference, it is hoped, may prove of considerable value.

The price to subscribers will be in India ₹30 and in England 2 guineas, payable in advance, for the complete set. An extra charge for packing and postage will be made for the set—in India, at 8 annas per volume, and for England at 2 rupees 6 annas per volume.

For copies bound in half calf or half morocco, ₹6 and 8 shillings, respectively, will be charged extra for the whole sets.

 No copies will be issued to non-subscribers till the work is complete, and no single volume will be sold separately. The price to non-subscribers will be ₹45 in India and 3 guineas in England, exclusive of packing and postage.

REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

A Dictionary of the Economic Products of India.

BY DR. GEO. WATT, C.I.E.,

Reporter on Economic Products.

Published under the authority of the Government of India in the Revenue and Agricultural Department.

The first four volumes of this work are now ready for issue, and intending subscribers are invited to register their names with the Superintendent of Government Printing, Calcutta.

The Dictionary is intended to deal with the products of India—animal, vegetable, and mineral; each product being treated after a uniform plan, the paragraphs of which give the scientific, vernacular, and European names; habitat or source history; properties and uses, both chemical and industrial; trade statistics; markets, &c. The work is arranged alphabetically according to scientific nomenclature, but commercial and important vernacular names are also given as cross references, so that little difficulty need be experienced in finding the account of a product even when its scientific name is unknown to the reader.

An important feature of the Dictionary consists in the fact that derived information is in every instance given under quotation marks, and with a reference to the original publication. Numerous contributions have, however, furnished the results of new discoveries, and confirmed the vernacular names; so that the Dictionary is not only a complete compilation of published information, but has been brought abreast of the most recent inventions and discoveries.

Volume I contains the letters A and B, and consists of 559 royal pages; Volume II embraces the letter C in 683 pages; Volume III contains the letters D, E, F, and G in 534 pages. Vol. IV, letters G to L, in 643 pages. The whole work will, it is expected, be completed in six volumes by 1891; but a seventh volume may also be issued consisting of an Index to all the vernacular and other names contained in the Dictionary; and this as a work of reference, it is hoped, may prove of considerable value.

The price to subscribers will be in India R30 and in England 2 guineas, payable in advance, for the complete set. An extra charge for packing and postage will be made for the set—in India, at 8 annas per volume, and for England at 2 rupees 6 annas per volume.

For copies bound in half calf or half morocco, R6 and 8 shillings, respectively, will be charged extra for the whole sets.

 No copies will be issued to non-subscribers till the work is complete, and no single volume will be sold separately. The price to non-subscribers will be R45 in India and 3 guineas in England, exclusive of packing and postage.

REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

A Dictionary of the Economic Products of India.

BY DR. GEO. WATT, C.I.E.,

Reporter on Economic Products.

Published under the authority of the Government of India in the Revenue and Agricultural Department,

The first four volumes of this work are now ready for issue, and intending subscribers are invited to register their names with the Superintendent of Government Printing, Calcutta.

The Dictionary is intended to deal with the products of India—animal, vegetable, and mineral; each product being treated after a uniform plan, the paragraphs of which give the scientific, vernacular, and European names; habitat or source history; properties and uses, both chemical and industrial; trade statistics; markets, &c. The work is arranged alphabetically according to scientific nomenclature, but commercial and important vernacular names are also given as cross references, so that little difficulty need be experienced in finding the account of a product even when its scientific name is unknown to the reader.

An important feature of the Dictionary consists in the fact that derived information is in every instance given under quotation marks, and with a reference to the original publication. Numerous contributions have, however, furnished the results of new discoveries, and confirmed the vernacular names; so that the Dictionary is not only a complete compilation of published information, but has been brought abreast of the most recent inventions and discoveries.

Volume I contains the letters A and B, and consists of 559 royal pages; Volume II embraces the letter C in 682 pages; Volume III contains the letters D, E, F, and G in 534 pages. Vol. IV, letters G to L. in 643 pages The whole work will, it is expected, be completed in six volumes by 1891; but a seventh volume may also be issued consisting of an Index to all the vernacular and other names contained in the Dictionary; and this as a work of reference, it is hoped, may prove of considerable value.

The price to subscribers will be in India R30 and in England 2 guineas, payable in advance, for the complete set. An extra charge for packing and postage will be made for the set—in India, at 8 annas per volume, and for England at 2 rupees 6 annas per volume.

For copies bound in half calf or half morocco, R6 and 8 shillings, respectively, will be charged extra for the whole sets.

No copies will be issued to non-subscribers till the work is complete, and no single volume will be sold separately. The price to non-subscribers will be R45 in India and 3 guineas in England, exclusive of packing and postage.

REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

A Dictionary of the Economic Products of India.

BY DR. GEO. WATT, C.I.E.,

Reporter on Economic Products.

Published under the authority of the Government of India in the Revenue and Agricultural Department,

The first four volumes of this work are now ready for issue, and intending subscribers are invited to register their names with the Superintendent of Government Printing, Calcutta.

The Dictionary is intended to deal with the products of India—animal, vegetable, and mineral; each product being treated after a uniform plan, the paragraphs of which give the scientific, vernacular, and European names; habitat or source history; properties and uses, both chemical and industrial; trade statistics; markets, &c. The work is arranged alphabetically according to scientific nomenclature, but commercial and important vernacular names are also given as cross references, so that little difficulty need be experienced in finding the account of a product even when its scientific name is unknown to the reader.

An important feature of the Dictionary consists in the fact that derived information is in every instance given under quotation marks, and with a reference to the original publication. Numerous contributions have, however, furnished the results of new discoveries, and confirmed the vernacular names; so that the Dictionary is not only a complete compilation of published information, but has been brought abreast of the most recent inventions and discoveries.

Volume I contains the letters A and B, and consists of 559 royal pages; Volume II embraces the letter C in 689 pages; Volume III contains the letters D, E, F, and G in 534 pages. Vol. IV, letters G to L, in 643 pages. The whole work will, it is expected, be completed in six volumes by 1891; but a seventh volume may also be issued consisting of an Index to all the vernacular and other names contained in the Dictionary; and this as a work of reference, it is hoped, may prove of considerable value.

The price to subscribers will be in India R30 and in England 2 guineas, payable in advance, for the complete set. An extra charge for packing and postage will be made for the set—in India, at 8 annas per volume, and for England at 2 rupees 6 annas per volume.

For copies bound in half calf or half morocco, R6 and 8 shillings, respectively, will be charged extra for the whole sets.

No copies will be issued to non-subscribers till the work is complete, and no single volume will be sold separately. The price to non-subscribers will be R45 in India and 3 guineas in England, exclusive of packing and postage.*

CALCUTTA MINT,
The 14th May, 1891.

ORDERS BY THE VICE-CHANCELLOR AND SYNDICATE OF THE CALCUTTA UNIVERSITY.

1. The following additions and alterations in the University Regulations, having been sanctioned by the Senate and approved by His Excellency the Governor-General in Council, are published for general information :—

Entrance Examination.

(i) The following foot-note has been added to the marginal note to the Entrance application form :—

"A High School is a school recognised by the University as qualified to send up candidates to the Entrance examination.

"A High School under public management is a High School which is under the direct management of Government, or of Officers or Committees acting on behalf of Government, or of Boards exercising statutory powers, and in which the staff of teachers is appointed and dismissed by Government, or by such Officers, Committees, or Boards."

The word "High" has been inserted before "school" in the marginal note itself.

(ii) The following words have been added to the second foot-note in page 73 (appendix A) of the Calendar for 1891, "or which appears to the Syndicate to be from any cause injurious to the interests of sound education and discipline."

B. A. Examination.

(iii) In the B. A. Regulation, para. 7, A iii, instead of the words "A second Language (defined as in the F. A. course)," the following has been substituted :—

"One of the following languages—Greek, Latin, Sanskrit, Pali, Hebrew, Arabic, and Persian."

Entrance, F. A., & B. A. Examinations.

(iv) The words "as soon as possible after the examination" have been substituted for the words "at such time as the Syndicate shall determine (the date to be approximately notified in the Calender for the year)," in paras. 7, 6, and 7 of the Entrance, F. A., and B. A. Regulations, respectively.

(v) The following addition has been sanctioned to the foot-note to para. 2 of the Regulations for the F. A. and B. A. examinations :—

"This percentage shall be calculated on the total number of lectures in each subject delivered in the Institution from the commencement of the academical year after the summer vacation. If a student is transferred from one Institution to another in the course of a year, the percentage of attendances in the second Institution shall be calculated on the total number of lectures in each subject delivered in that Institution after the date of the transfer certificate. If a student fails to enter an affiliated Institution before the 1st August in any year, his attendance for that year shall not, except with the special sanction of the Syndicate, be counted."

The foot-note so amended has been incorporated in the text of the Regulations, and will affect candidates for the examinations of 1893.

(vi) In para. 4 of the F. A. Regulations, and in para. 5 of the B. A. Regulations, the words "he has prosecuted a regular course of study for six months since the date of the last examination to which he was admitted" have been omitted, and the following words added in their place :—

"His name has been on the rolls of that Institution for six calendar months since the date of the last examination to which he was admitted, and that he has attended 66 per cent. of the lectures delivered in the Institution during those six months in each of the subjects in which he is to be examined."

This change will affect candidates for the examinations of 1892.

(vii) In the M A. application form after the word "Religion" the words "whether he is a candidate for the Government Scholarship tenable in England" have been added.

(viii) In para. 2 of the B. L. Regulations the words "in a school of Law recognised by the Syndicate for not less than three academical years, two of which shall be after passing the B. A. examination" have been omitted, and the following have been added in their place :—

"In an institution affiliated in Law for not less than two academical years after passing the B. A. examination. No candidate shall be considered to have prosecuted a regular course of study unless he has attended at least 24 lectures in each of the groups of subjects prescribed in para. 6, the minimum number of lectures to be delivered in each group being 36."

This change will affect candidates for the examination of 1893.

(ix) In para. 5 of the B. L. Regulations the following words have been inserted between "and" and "oral," "may also be partly."

(x) The following foot-note has been added to para. 2 :—

No candidate shall be allowed to count attendance of more than one lecture in the same day.

This refers to all future lectures.

(xi) The following groups of subjects have been substituted for the groups prescribed in para. 6 of the B. L. Regulations :—

1. The Principles of Jurisprudence; the History and Constitution of the Courts of Law and Legislative authorities in India.

2 The Law relating to persons in their public and private capacities, including the Law of Testamentary Succession.

3. The Law of Property including, (1) the law relating to Land Tenures and the Revenue Laws.

4. The Law of Property including (2) the Laws of Transfer, Prescription, and Pre-emption.

5. The Law of Contracts and Torts.

6. The Law of Crimes and Criminal Procedure.

7. The Law of Civil Procedure, including the Law of Evidence and the Law of Limitation.

8. The Hindu Law and the Mahomedan Law (with the exception of parts already included), and the Law of Intestate Succession.

This change in the list of subjects will apply to the examination of 1893.

(xii) The following has been substituted for para. 7 of the B. L. Regulations :—

"Eight papers shall be set at the examination, one on each of the groups of subjects prescribed in the preceding paragraph."

3. The following Rules and Regulations have been passed by the Senate respecting the new Gilchrist Scholarships tenable in Europe by Natives of India :—

GILCHRIST SCHOLARSHIPS TENABLE IN EUROPE BY NATIVES OF INDIA.

[These Scholarships are open to Women upon exactly the same conditions as to Men.]

1. Three Scholarships of the value of £200 per annum will be awarded, one every year, to candidates who are natives of India (within the meaning of Section 6* of the statute 33 Vic., Cap. 3), or of the "Native States" of India. They shall each be tenable for three years at any University or any Science or Technical College in Europe (approved by the Trustees in each case), on condition that the Scholar shall undertake to go through the course and pass the examinations necessary for obtaining a definite Science degree or diploma as may be prescribed by the Trustees. The nomination to these Scholarships will rest with the Universities of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay in rotation, subject to the conditions hereinafter specified.

* The provision in the section is as follows :—"That for the purpose of this Act, the words 'native of India' shall include any person born and domiciled within the dominions of Her Majesty in India, of parents habitually resident in India, and not established there for temporary purposes only; and that it shall be lawful for the Governor General in Council to define and limit from time to time the qualification of natives of India thus expressed."

2. A scholarship will be given every third year on like conditions, the nomination of suitable candidates for which will rest with the Universities of the Punjab and Allahabad jointly. Each of these Universities may submit to the Government of India the name of one candidate, and the actual nomination to the Scholarship shall be made (from the names submitted) by the Government of India.

3. The scholarships will be given (during the next few years) in the following rotation :—

1891. Calcutta, Punjab, and Allahabad.
1892. Bombay.
1893. Madras.
1894. Calcutta, Punjab, and Allahabad.
1895. Bombay.
1896. Madras.

4. Each scholar will be provided by the Government of India with a free passage to England. The Gilchrist Trust will provide a return passage (at the end of the three years) at a cost not exceeding £50, provided that the scholar shall have fulfilled the conditions of his scholarship; but the scholar will not be entitled to claim any difference between the actual cost of passage and the amount above named.

5. Each scholar must enter into a written engagement to submit to such regulations as may from time to time be issued by the Gilchrist Trustees for the guidance of the scholars.

The tenure of the scholarships will be strictly dependent on good conduct in Europe, and on satisfactory progress being made in study. The Gilchrist Trustees reserve to themselves the right of finally deciding whether a scholar has or has not committed a breach of the Rules and Conditions on which his scholarship is held, as also all questions which may from time to time arise, whether expressly provided for in the Rules and Regulations or not. They further reserve to themselves the power of altering the conditions of the scholarships, or of altogether withdrawing them, if they shall think fit. Due notice of any alterations will be given, and changes will not be made in such a manner as to affect the interests of students already appointed to scholarships.

7. One of the Gilchrist Trustees* will personally see each Gilchrist scholar as soon as possible after he has reported his arrival at the office of the Trustees, and will confer with him upon the course he may propose to persue, and the University or College to be selected.

RULES FOR ELECTION TO THE GILCHRIST SCHOLARSHIPS.

1. Candidates for the Gilchrist scholarships must be natives of India within the meaning of section 6, the Statute 33 Vic., Cap. 3, and must be under 22 years of age on the 1st July in the year in which the selection is made. The scholarships are open to women upon exactly the same conditions as to men.

No person holding a Government of India scholarship tenable in England is eligible for a Gilchrist scholarship, or shall continue to hold a Gilchrist scholarship after he has accepted a Government of India scholarship.

2. The selection of a scholar shall take place not later than the month of June in the year in which a scholarship is placed at the disposal of the University.

3. The scholar shall be selected from those graduates of the University who have done especially well in Science or Mathematics at one of the following Examinations :—

(1) M. A.
(2) B. A. with Honours.
(3) B. E., including the optional subjects, Mathematics, and Natural Science.

4. Candidates for the examinations mentioned in the preceding rule, who are desirous of competing for the next Gilchrist scholarship that is placed at the disposal of the University, shall intimate the fact to the Registrar at the time they submit their applications for admission to those examinations, and shall state whether they have the consent of their families to proceed to Europe in order to prosecute a course of scientific study there.

5. It shall be the duty of the examiners at each of the examinations mentioned in rule 4 to state which of the candidates are in their opinion fit and proper persons to be selected for the Gilchrist scholarship.

6. The candidates recommended for the scholarships under rule 5 who are under the prescribed age shall be called upon by the Registrar to submit, not later than the 1st May in the year in which the selection is made, the following certificates :—

(1) Certificates of good conduct, signed by persons of respectability and position.

(2) Certificates of their knowledge of the English language, signed by one or more of the Professors of the Colleges in which they have been educated.

* Professor James Stuart, M. P., has undertaken this function at the present.

(3) Certificates of their physical capacity to undergo the course of life and study they will have to follow in Europe, signed or countersigned by a Presidency or Civil Surgeon.

7. Each candidate shall submit with these certificates a declaration that it is his intention, if successful, to proceed to England forthwith, to reside in Europe for a period of three years, unless compelled to return earlier either by ill-health or some other cause which may seem sufficient to the Gilchrist Trustees.

8. In the year in which the selection is to take place, the names, certificates, and declarations of all the candidates recommended by the examiners under rule 5, and who are under the prescribed age, shall be laid before a Committee of the Syndicate consisting of not more than three members, who shall have power to call for reports from the Principals and Professors of the College in which the candidates were educated, and to make such other enquiries as they think fit, and who shall recommend to the Vice-Chancellor one of the candidates for selection.

9. On the nomination of a scholar being completed, the Registrar shall communicate his name and address to the Secretary of the Gilchrist Trust, 17, Victoria Street, Westminster, London, S. W.

Every scholar shall at once take steps to enter himself at the University or College which the Trustees shall have approved. The course finally prescribed by the Trustees shall not be changed without their sanction.
