Sir,

I have the honour to report that my typist, one Raman Nair, has been employed in the office since August 1909 but as he cannot produce the leaving certificate of the Secondary School and is not a matriculate he is debarred from confirmation. He applied for an exemption at the end of 1909 but Mr. Francis at first thought he could get a qualified man and refused to recommend him. All the candidates who applied were Brahmins and Mr. Francis apparently desired a non-Brahmin. In the end he contemplated applying for an exemption if the clerk passed the Advanced examination in type-writing but this he failed to do. He has passed intermediate type-writing and intermediate shorthand. I agree with Mr. Francis in thinking that non-Brahmins should be encouraged especially in the lower ranks where they can compete with Brahmins on more equal terms, and I would particularly point out that since Mr. Francis wrote a question has arisen as to the use of shorthand writers. It is from this point of view that I now venture to recommend exemption. Not only is the Collector of the Nilgiris also the Additional Sessions Judge in which capacity he may have to try jury cases but also I have found, and I believe Mr. Davidson found to a greater extent that the dictation of drafts to a shorthand writer saves a lot of time. The drafts reproduced from shorthand have I find been very accurate and the clerk could quite well manage a charge to the jury.

2. I am informed that past experience ^{of trials} has shown that men with general educational qualifications in this district have not remained long. Having regard to the peculiarities of the Nilgiri District, the difficulty of getting clerks by local recruitment on the one hand, and the comparatively light work on the other, I would suggest that this man be permanently exempted for employment as typist in my office. His typing work is very fair, and as I have said his knowledge of shorthand is most useful to me.

I have the honour to be,

Sir,

Your most obedient servant,

Stanley Ricci

Collector.
