In their order no 430. dated 3rd august 1907 the Government were pleased to inform me, with reference to my petition dated 15th July 1906, that they do not consider it necessary at present to add Architecture to the list of Subjects for Government Technical Examinations.

I now pray that, as the subject treat about one of the three great wants of man, viz (1) Food (2) clothing and (3) Shelter, the Government may now be gracious enough to order, Town-planning and Architecture to be added to the list of Subjects for Government Technical Examinations.

I beg to remain

"Architecture ought to be one of the most useful as well as one of the most attractive which can occupy the attention of the public and no doubt be much more extensively cultivated were it not for the difficulties attending its pursuit". Dr. James Fergusson.

"It signifies less whether the knowledge of other arts be general or not; men may live without buying pictures or statues: but, in Architecture all must in some way commit themselves, they must do mischief and waste their money, if they do not know how to turn it to account." Professor John Ruskin, LL. D.
