2. Apart from this, the question so far as I am concerned is the educational aspect of the matter. The course of instruction is 2 (or 3) years' theoretical training and three years' practical training (or apprenticeship). Either period may follow or precede or run concurrently with the other.

para 5 of the draft scheme
on p. 9 of G.O. No.
813 (Secy)
16.6.17

If they do not run concurrently the total period of training becomes 5 (or 6) years which is very long. On the other hand the period may be diminished to three years. As remarked by the Chief Secretary, the country requires a large body of trained accountants; and the sooner these are shaped, replacing the present transitional unsatisfactory men, the better. It follows that we must do our best to make the courses run concurrently and turn out as many qualified people as possible after three years' training.

3. Now to do this a pupil must undergo theoretical instruction in the Institute and obtain practical training also at the same time. If he be apprenticed to any one other than the Principal, he will have to serve two masters. The courses of study will not harmonise.

4. Unlike other studies, even the theoretical training is benefited by practical study. For example, I understand that the pupils in the Nation

College of Commerce are taken to ^{other} auditor's offices for practical training. The pupil has to pay fees to some one or other for apprenticeship.

With reference to paras 2 & 3 of Secretary's note (pp. 9 & 10 ante) it is submitted that the approved scheme for Madras does not make specific provision for the period of apprenticeship running concurrently with the regular college course. As it is, para 5 of the scheme lays down that the apprenticeship may precede or follow the course in the Institute. - p. 9 of G.O.No.813, Edn. dated 16th June 1917. - If ordered, the question of amending the scheme in this respect, will be taken up separately.

A three years' ^{training} given to a boy who has just completed his school course - no written test intensive that training may be - cannot produce a trained accountant. Right I in its attention to Rule 12 of the Regulations for the award of the Inst. diploma in accountancy of the Hyderabad College of Commerce & Economics, Bombay, found at page 4 of G.O. For orders whether the D.P.I. is received 'A' above may be concurred in. If so, these notes may be recorded. [It may be observed that para 5 of the Scheme for the Institute of Commerce, Madras laying down that the course in the degree should be preceded or followed by apprenticeship for a period of three years was adopted in consequence of the recognition of the Bombay scheme in which there is a similar provision]
