|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| May .. | 498 | 32mo.. | 1st .. | 2,000 | Printed. | 0 4 0 | Bála Subramanya Brahma Swámi, No. 70, Perumál Mudali Street, Madras. | A pocket edition of the sacred lay in the Tamil character with Tamil paraphrase of each stanza. Copyright registered. |
| 20th Mar. | 40 | 8vo .. | 1st .. | 500 | Do. | 0 5 0 | .... | A republication of select verses of the Rámáyana brought out serially by a publishing company with the Tamil comment by Periaváchán Pillai conveying the recondite meaning of the verses. Another Tamil tract by the same commentator is also published apparently for the first time in printed form on the Vaishnava doctrine of surrender of the soul as the best means of obtaining an assurance or promise of protection or immunity, with Rámáyana texts in support of this doctrine, this type of philosophy being with many life in full earnest. The teaching is often sectarian and is popular with Tenkalai sections of Vaishnavas in the Tamil land. |

| 24th May. | 152 | 8vo .. | 1st .. | 500 | Printed. | 0 12 0 | .... | In this new Telugu contribution to the literature of the Hindu stage, what is striking is not the plot but the mode of dramatic delineation. The whole play of five acts is written in one unvaried classic style, and the influence of Western modes of treatment is seen in the introduction of soliloquies instructive and pathetic on the model of Shakespeare's; and while believing in the efficacy of exposing evil in strong contrast with positive good, the writer avoids silly love-strains and laments of separation. The chief characters lend themselves as illustrations of the moral lessons of the play, and the tragic incidents end with the happy conclusion indispensable in an Indian drama. Both in the prologue and in the closing scene, lyrics and other verses appear in honour of Her Majesty's Birthday Celebration of this year, and in praise of her virtues and her beneficent rule. A portrait of the Queen-Empress also figures as frontispiece. |

| 20th do. | 189 | Do. .. | 1st .. | 1,060 | Do. | 0 12 0 | A. Mádhavaiya, Tiruválúr. | A readable book of reminiscences of a Tamil-speaking student of the Madras Christian College who worked hard and led a life of celibacy though betrothed, while his fellow student came out married and frittered away his time on family cares and the like. The heroine Padmávati of the story is said to have educated herself in her father's house and afterwards received further education from her husband and assisted him in the practical struggle of life while both resisted the evil influence of a reprobate fellow student when they were all living in one house and even afterwards. The wife's moral resolution makes the story interesting as a good specimen of womanhood. Hence the title of the book bears her name. Copyright registered. |

Rájagopáláchári, B.A., No. 5, Badraiya Garden Street, Madras. | Intended to meet the want of a beginner's textbook on Euclid's elements in Tamil. The points worth noticing in the plan of the work are that only a few definitions are given at the outset, avoiding the usual mistake of presenting to the beginner the difficulty of getting up a complete list of definitions, axioms and postulates a knowledge of which is not necessary until a more advanced stage, and that Euclid's propositions are faithfully rendered in fairly simple language with alternative proofs and explanatory notes. Numerous and well-graded exercises are given at the end with some indications of the service which the elements of geometrical drawing may render to mensuration. Copyright registered. |
