Sir,

I have the honour most respectfully to send you under separate cover a specimen copy of the "Journal of the Moslem Institute".

For a long time even a quarterly Mahomedan magazine - not to speak anything of dailies and weeklies conducted by Mahomedans - had been a desideratum in India. To meet this felt want the Moslem Institute of Calcutta started in July 1905 a quarterly magazine and named it the "Journal of the Moslem Institute". The quarterly is devoted chiefly to subjects of Oriental interest to supply wholesome highclass literary and social reading matter and "to foster a spirit of research among the young and educated members of the Mahomedan community".

On its appearance the "Journal of the Moslem Institute was accorded a most cordial welcome by the press and the public alike. The "Englishman" characterised it as " a gratifying indication of the awakening of Mahomedan thought and activity in Bengal", "among the many magazines of the kind," the "Statesman" had "no hesitation in giving it the first place, both for contents and format, to this admirable venture of the scholarly and enthusiastic young m men of the Moslem Institute", the "Journal" (Englishman's Sunday edition) had " nothing but praise for this well-written and well-edited Miscellany" and said that "this really high-class magazine" at once " stepped into the front rank", and showed clearly that the Mahomedan literary world of India was now capable of taking the place which rightly belonged to it", and to which the Editor of that weekly , "heartily welcomed it in the brotherhood of Indian literary effort", the "Pioneer" praised it for its 'excellence' and for its articles which were varied in character and by men who are acknowledged authorities on the subjects with which they deal".

His Excellency Lord Curzon thought it to be "a very interesting production" and His Honour Sir Bampfylde Fuller was of opinion that "it will supply a want" and patronized the venture by subscribing a copy for himself and ordering the Education Department of the New Province to subscribe for copies for all the government colleges and schools of the Eastern Bengal and Assam. T The government of Bengal too patronized the "Journal".

The "Journal has completed the first year of its existence. Each number has been a distinct success. Today we have got subscribers in all parts of India, in England, Scotland, America and Japan and our list of contributors contains the names of a number of distinguished European and Indian writers.

The Committee of the Moslem Institute shall feel much obliged if you will kindly subscribe a number of copies for the Education Department of your Province.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your most obedient servant
A. M. F. Wahhab
