COLLEGE ADMISSIONS

Sir.—Consequent on the inability of the college authorities to provide admission to all eligible students, nearly 4,000 students are now stranded in the middle of their educational course. They are unfortunately driven from pillar to post, and under the present conditions it has proved to be an impossible task to secure them admission into any college. Laboratory accommodation is said to be the main reason for the refusal of admission in the Science section. For the non-Science section the maximum number of students fixed for each college by the University has already been reached, and further admission is refused so that the regulation with regard to the maximum number might not be infringed.

The present situation, if allowed to drift, will have very serious consequences. It is also not difficult to find a solution. At present each student works in the laboratory only for two hours a week. Three batches of students are now working in the colleges. With the present equipment in the colleges a fourth batch of students can be safely allowed to work in the laboratory. The extra fourth batch would entail the inconvenience of work in the college on a Saturday, but the students would gladly work on a Saturday, as the only other alternative is the denial of admission. If the fourth batch is allowed to work, each college can admit at least 100 students more and most of the students now stranded can find places in the colleges. By an administrative regulation the Vice-Chancellor can permit the working of a fourth batch. May I appeal to the Vice-Chancellor to issue forthwith such an order in the interests of education and also the unfortunate students now stranded. The members of the Syndicate have also an equal responsibility. They should take up the matter at once, and pass a resolution permitting the work of a fourth batch. As for the history section, the maximum can be raised without inconvenience to anybody as there is enough accommodation for the students that have been turned out. The matter is urgent and should be promptly attended to.—S. Thiruvengadatha Iyengar.
