against an estimate of Rs. 3/9/- a head for the first year in the original scheme.

The cost of continuing the existing 15 schools together with the training school for a further period of three years would be approximately Rs. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs, and if the experiment were continued on a seven years' basis, i.e., for the whole course, the cost would be very much greater. In the financial circumstances of the province such a heavy expenditure is not justified merely in order to test the merits of the scheme. It is understood that the Government of Madras during the Congress regime decided against the introduction of the system, preferring a revised system of elementary education which is believed to be fundamentally the same as the primary school system already in force in Orissa. The experiment is, however, being carried out in some other provinces and from the results so obtained it will be possible to ascertain the value and practicability of the system without incurring the heavy expenditure required to try it out thoroughly in Orissa.

The Provincial Government therefore decided to close the Basic schools and Training school with effect from the 1st March, 1941. Attempts will be made to absorb the teachers trained in these schools into the ordinary schools of the province so far as possible.

Punjab.

The province has not adopted the 'basic' education scheme.

United Provinces.

In order to introduce Art and Crafts in Anglo-Vernacular schools 2 refresher courses were run at the Basic Training College, Allahabad for the training of Drawing Masters and Manual training Instructors of all the Anglo-Vernacular High Schools and Intermediate Colleges run by Government. The syllabus of Arts and Crafts was already drawn up and this syllabus is being introduced by these Drawing Masters in Classes III and IV from July 1941.

From July 1941 Drawing Masters and Manual Training instructors of all the Aided High Schools and Intermediate Colleges are being brought to the College for these courses of 1½ months and by 1st May 1942 all these teachers will have received training in Art, book crafts
