Question: What is the fate of Prisoners in Germany today, and how does the Red Cross help them?

Answer: There are about 44,290 British prisoners now in German hands; men taken prisoner in France; sailors, including Indians, captured in their ships; civilians living in Germany when war broke out and now interned there. We know very little of what is happening to them, but when conditions are so bad for all in Germany, they must be worse for the prisoners; and the German record of treatment for those in concentration camps is not a good one. Their relatives will not have forgotten these prisoners, but perhaps we others do not think of them as often as we should. What is being done to help them?

The problem of help for prisoners of war was taken up by the Joint War Organisation of the Red Cross and St. John from the very beginning. A special Prisoners of War Department was opened in St. James' Palace in London to arrange for the despatch of food and clothing. At first individual parcels were sent every week to each prisoner as soon as information was received about him. No charge was made to the relatives; the cost was all met out of the funds, and still is; but donations for this purpose are gratefully received. After the evacuation of France last summer, it became impossible to go on sending individual parcels, and now the regular weekly parcels of food and clothing are sent to the camps, whether the names of individual prisoners there are known or not. No direct food parcels from relatives are permitted; only the standard parcels packed by the Department under the supervision of a competent dietician are allowed. These cost about 10/- each, and are being regularly sent. In addition, parcels are sent to the Senior Officer in each camp containing ordinary household medicines, dressings, cod liver oil, malt and tonics, for use in illness or injury; and 75 cigarettes or the equivalent in tobacco are sent weekly for every prisoner. Arrangements have also been made to send books and games to the prisoners.

A weekly parcel containing, in addition to ordinary food-stuffs, curry powder, dhal, atta and ghee is being sent by the

Indian Prisoners Food Centre, in collaboration with the British Red Cross Society, to each of the 290 Indian prisoners in Germany, 275 of whom are in one prison camp.

The work of sending out these parcels has grown to such an extent that packing centres have been formed all over England to cope with it. 95,896 Parcels were dispatched during October.

How do these parcels go, and do they really get there? These are questions which will occur at once to everybody. Earlier in the war it is quite clear that they did nearly all get there, under the supervision of the German Red Cross, which was working well. Reply postcards were received from 95% of the prisoners of war to whom parcels were sent, and 77% of the civilian internees. Since the evacuation of France last June, however, things have been much more difficult. The route through France to Geneva is no longer open, and a much longer route by way of Lisbon, Madrid, Barcelona and unoccupied France now has to be taken. Owing to the numerous transshipments involved, this way is necessarily slow but there is reason to believe that, once the parcels reach Geneva, they are promptly transmitted to the camps. Full lists of despatches are sent to the American Red Cross and the International Red Cross, so that they may supervise delivery, but there is bound to be some difficulty inside Germany, as communications have been very much dislocated by the raids of the R.A.F.

As a consequence of this increased difficulty, the practice of sending parcels to individuals has been discontinued, and supplies are sent instead to each prison camp. The British Red Cross has also placed a large sum at credit with the International Red Cross at Geneva, so that food may be bought there and sent to the prison camps; and an attempt is also being made to get over the difficulties of transport by organising a lorry service from Lisbon to Geneva. The latest report of work of the Joint War Organisation of the Red Cross and St. John is dated November 2nd, and this gives the information that 62,500 parcels for prisoners were packed in August, and 43,429 in September. In October special Christmas parcels were being packed, and by the 2nd November a total of £ 279,600 had been spent on food and clothing for prisoners of war. It is estimated that the amount to be raised for food alone will be not less than £ 300,000 (10½ lakhs of rupees) a year.

This, then is one of the ways in which we, who sit here at ease, can help those who are suffering. It is not possible to send gifts in kind, but gifts of money will be most gratefully received by the Prisoners of War Department at St. James' Palace. If contributions are sent either to the Madras Governor's War Fund or to the Joint War Charities Committee, Red Cross Buildings, Egmore, Madras, earmarked for Prisoners of War, they will be promptly transmitted to England, and will help to pay for food and clothing for these men in captivity. Let us not forget them.

Question: Please explain the Red Cross Postal Message Scheme.

Answer: Since the beginning of the War, there has been a vast international Post Office maintained by the International Red Cross in Geneva, which alone has enabled people from all over the world to communicate with their relations in Germany and in German occupied countries, and to receive replies to their letters through the system of Reply Coupons.

The Indian Red Cross has now set up this service and under the scheme 25-word messages to relatives or to person engaged to be married may be despatched to enemy or enemy-occupied territory other than occupied France and the Channel Islands. The cost for transmission of a message by surface mail is Re. 1/2 or for Air-cum-Sea mail Rs. 2/4. This charge includes transmission from Geneva to enemy territory and the reply.

Full particulars may be obtained from the Honorary Secretary, Madras Red Cross Society, Egmore.

Through this form of Red Cross work, it has been possible to bring some relief and comfort in the mental anguish of thousands of war's civilian victims. Help the Red Cross to help others by contributing what you can towards its enormous expenses.
