have in several cases gone up far above that percentage even as high as 50% or more. As a result, I have found it extremely difficult with my present emoluments to adjust my needs to the altered economic conditions, however much I tried to do so during the past six months of the war. There is no knowing when peace in Europe will be restored, but as till then there is no possibility of reduction in prices to the pre-war level and as the upward trend continues, making my lot worse, I implore the Government to the larger interests of efficiency and integrity of service, to take into consideration the prevailing economic condition and consider the desirability of granting me an allowance adequate at least temporarily to enable me to tide over the present difficulties. I submit in conclusion that an extra allowance of the kind requested above will go a long way to mitigate my difficulties.

I beg to remain,

Sir,

Your most obedient servant,

Madras,
