Rule 60 of the Madras Education Rules provides that instruction in all classes of a Secondary School should be given through the mother tongue of the pupils of the local language, but the Director may, however, for special reasons permit a school to use English as the medium of instruction in any Form or class. Though, under this rule, the Director was himself specifically empowered to accord approval to the adoption of English as medium of instruction, the former Minister of Education desired orally that cases in regard to adoption of English medium in Forms IV and below might be referred to Government for orders. I should like to know whether Government would continue the practice so begun, or whether they are willing to leave the matter entirely in the Director's hands under rule 60 of the Madras Education Rules. If the Government wish to continue the practice, perhaps it is desirable that the rule may be suitably modified. I request the favour of early orders of Government in this regard.
