To Whom it May Concern:

In this present letter I wish to record my impressions of Mr. Venkataraman Jagannathan who, during the past two years, has been associated with me in the capacity of a graduate student here at Stanford University.

During this two-year period, Mr. Jagannathan has pursued with very great ability a research problem in the field of enzymes. The problem was one of his own choosing and required, perhaps more than any other problem that he might have pursued here, the exercise of a great deal of initiative and ingenuity on his own part. Specifically, the work concerned the preparation of phosphoglucomutase in the crystalline state, or at least of maximum purity; the characterization of the enzyme so isolated; and a study of the reaction mechanism. The enzyme was finally prepared by Mr. Jagannathan by a method which is not only novel, but may be of importance in other studies in this same field,--precipitation as a metal salt from acetone-water solution. In his study of the reaction mechanism he completed successfully the difficult preparation of very pure glucose-1-phosphate containing radioactive phosphorus. The product was of high specific activity and permitted a study of the possible exchange reaction which we suspected might take place between phosphoglucomutase and its substrate. By a number of ingenious experiments, Mr. Jagannathan has succeeded, in my opinion, in demonstrating that an exchange takes place between the phosphate of the substrate and phosphate present as an integral part of the enzyme. This, to my knowledge, is the first time that any one has demonstrated that, in some enzyme reactions at least, the catalyst is an active participant in the reaction rather than serving as a specific protein which, through a peculiar affinity for the substrate, merely serves as an absorbing agent upon the surface of which the reaction may take place. If this type of mechanism proves to hold for other enzymes in which comparable exchange is conceivable, a most promising and important field for the further elucidation of enzyme action will have been opened up. This, in my judgment, constitutes a contribution to knowledge of very great importance.

In addition to the research described above, Mr. Jagannathan also pursued a number of formal studies in the classroom required of candidates for an advanced degree. Other courses in the field of chemistry were selected by him because of his inherent interest in the subject, rather than for the mere satisfaction of formal requirements. In the examinations which followed upon these courses, Mr. Jagannathan established a brilliant record and completed the courses taken most creditably indeed. Also, as a part of the record, it should be mentioned that he passed his oral examination for the doctorate degree with distinction,--a tribute which seldom indeed is affixed to the graduate record of students who take our oral examinations.

S 7/9

DEC 13 1948

In the course of his work here he also had occasion to participate in our seminars by the presentation of papers, sometimes stemming from his research and on other occasions based upon the recent literature. He has shown on such occasions an excellent knowledge of the literature and great ability to express himself lucidly and concisely.

Mr. Jagannathan came to this university as one who had had abundant experience in some of the very practical problems of biochemistry. To this rich background of experience he has added much by several months of work in the Cutter Laboratories in Berkeley, California,--a wellknown pharmaceutical house which for many years has been engaged in the preparation of a variety of products of therapeutic importance.

All in all, I regard Mr. Jagannathan as among the three or four most competent and promising Ph.D. candidates that I have had during the course of twenty-two years at this university. I am certain that my high regard of Mr. Jagannathan is shared by my professorial colleagues within the department.

It is a pleasure to add that Mr. Jagannathan's personal qualities are such as to commend him highly. He is possessed of a quite dignity and reserve, accompanied, however, by an inherent charm and friendliness, which it is a pleasure to find among one's students and colleagues.

Yours very sincerely,

J. Murray Luck

As no suitable employment could be offered to Sri V.Jaganadhan in this department his name was circulated among certain firms and the Medical College. Some Firms have replied that there are no vacancies to absorb Sri Jaganadhan. However, the Principal, Medical College, [illegible]ted in his letter No.P.3888 d/29-3-49 (copy enclosed) that Sri Jaganadhan is eminently suitable for appointment as Professor of Bio Chemistry in one of the Medical Colleges. I request that this suggestion may be considered.

There are three posts of Professors of Bio-Chemistry one at the Madras Medical College, the other at the Andhra Medical College, Vizagapatam and the third sanctioned for the Madura Medical College (working in Madras).

In the 2 former institutions, Madras and Andhra the post is temporarily held by retired but re-employed officers, for want of a suitable substitute.

I consider the candidate under reference (Sri V. Jagannadhan) should be eminently suitable for appointment to one of these posts in view of his high academic qualifications and post-graduate training abroad. As he is a Madras Government Sponsored candidate, every effort should be made to retain him in our Province. As this is a matter which has to be discussed and decided at Cabinet level, I would request you to add ress the Joint Secretary, Public Health Department.
