from sun and rain were as great as were alleged. Though fully impressed with the conviction that a verandah of some kind was necessary I declined to address Government on the subject so soon after the erection of the building. The design of the building - practically two open sheds, one of which has a room at each end - is not, in my opinion, suitable; but as the question came up before I took charge of the office I am not acquainted precisely with the reasons which led to the plan being adopted, though I believe the main reason was economy in construction.

3. Shacks or huts have been tried, but in the more exposed parts of the building they have not not been successful. In the less exposed sides of the building they answer fairly well, and will continue to be used.

4. The Carpentry shed is an old building which was used as the Carpentry workshop when that subject was taught. I am doubtful if it is worth while trying to patch up such an old building; but the Consulting Architect will be able to advise me on that point.

5. Government may rest assured that I shall not give my approval to any unnecessary expenditure.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,

Your most obedient servant,

J. J. J.
