Sir,

Under existing regulations* the marginally noted estimates of the value of stores required from England are now termed the "forecast estimates" of the year subsequent to that in which the corresponding indents are submitted. The indents for the stores, whose value is provided for in the estimates in question, are submitted soon after the commencement of the financial year following that in which the estimates are furnished, and the stores demanded in those indents are, as a rule, purchased, paid for, and supplied to India in the year in which they are indented for.

2. In consequence of this arrangement, there has been some little confusion in connection with the indents and estimates dealt with in past years. In order to avoid similar inconvenience in future, the Government of India have decided to discontinue the use of the term "forecast estimate" in the heading of these estimates, and to call all their home estimates "annual estimates," designating them by the number of the year in which the stores for which they provide are intended to be purchased, paid for, and despatched to India.

3. Similarly all indents will in future be designated by the number of the year in the home estimates of which provision has been made to meet the purchase of the stores demanded in them.

4. I am to add that there is no intention of interfering with the mode of preparation, or the dates of submission of these indents and estimates, and it must be understood the change is merely one of designation. The accompanying statement shows clearly what are the intentions of the Government of India in the matter.

I am, &c.,
