The Principal

The Services of a draftsman who is capable of making mechanical drawings and working out designs from rough sketches are badly wanted in the workshops. Most of the work is of a class beyond the capabilities of the Draftsmen Class and if it could be arranged that the services of one of the passed Engineer students who are in the R.M. Shops could be lent to us, I could find plenty of practical drawing work for him and could at the same time arrange that he should be employed in carrying out the work. The training he would get would certainly be as good as he is now getting in the Shops and his services would be really usefully employed.
