Yes. This is a very necessary modification.

The Rule as it stands is already causing difficulties.

SIR,

Article III, Clause (iii) of the Law College rules requires that the professors, assistant professors and special lecturers shall be graduates of a University. While I consider, that, as a general rule, such a qualification is for the good of the college, it seems to me to unnecessarily limit the field from which the staff is to be chosen. Occasionally, there might be a gentleman pre-eminently qualified to be placed on the staff of the college, but who could not be appointed because he was not a University graduate. (Moreover, the special lecturers need not be graduates, or barristers, or vakils.) It will be enough that they possess such qualifications as Government may consider necessary for the special work they have to perform. For example, a medical man who is neither a graduate nor a lawyer may be a suitable lecturer on medical jurisprudence. I would, therefore, suggest that Clause iii of Article III read as follows:-

"The Principal shall be a graduate of a University and a Barrister-at-Law of not less than five years standing. The professors and assistant Professors shall ordinarily be graduates of a University and shall be either Barristers-at-Law

2. I would not recommend any change in the qualifications of the Principal.
