No. 37

From

E. Turner Esq., C.S.,
 as SUPERINTENDENT OF STATIONERY,
 MADRAS,

To

The Hon'ble Mr. E. Gibson. C.S.
 Acting Chief Secretary to Government,
 Financial Department.

SIR,

With reference to the concluding portion of Paragraph 3 of G.O. dated 25th October 1894. No. 893, I have the honor to report that there are no educational books in store which are old and obsolete. The books referred to by Mr. Woods Leam though received in 1892, are still in use and will be issued to the British Army Schools gradually. Among these there are 316 Copies of Curtis's Manual of Analysis of Sentences eaten up by moths in spite of the precautions taken and they can be disposed of by public auction.

2. As regards the incomplete boxes of mathematical instruments, I beg to state that some of these were returned as such into store by officers and some were rendered incomplete to meet demands for spare instruments when no

No such instruments were in store. These boxes are generally again filled up from the stock of spare instruments obtained from England whenever such boxes are required for issue. I have however now arranged the boxes complete with all the instruments. In so doing the marginally noted boxes have become almost empty with a few ~~old~~ worn out instruments left in them. The boxes are also old ones.

I request that the Government will be good enough to sanction the disposal by public auction of these old and incomplete boxes and also the books referred to in the 1st paragraph.

I have the honor to be,
Sir,
Your most obedient servant,

E. J. J. J.
ag. Superintendent of Stationery
