ADDITIONAL NOTES

TO

"THE INDIAN CALENDAR."

NOTE

(to face Introduction p. 1).

Since the publication of this volume it has been subjected to the best European criticism; and as the undersigned concurs in the opinion of experts that in legal matters it is inadvisable to trust to any method of calculating dates other than the safest, he now issues two slips to be pasted into the volume, one to face p. 1, of the Introduction, one to face Table XIV, p. cxxiii.

In a second edition, Art. 2, Arts. 123 to 127 inclusive, and the headings to Arts. 135, 137, Tables XIV, and XV will be modified.

Methods A and B are not so suitable for courts and offices as method C; since, though accurate in themselves, they allow of only a close approximation being made. Method A also requires a foreknowledge of the era and basis of computation of the Hindu date; and as there are many eras and systems in use in India in different localities and at different periods, a judicial officer, unskilled as a chronologist and depending solely on method A, may be led into error.

Method C alone, therefore, should be used for all legal or administrative purposes.

December 1898.

R. SEWELL.

NOTE

(to face Table XIV, p. cxxiii).

Tables XIV and XV are considered unsuitable for use in courts and offices, or in any matter arising in a legal case. (See note facing p. 1 of the Introduction.)

Though accurate in themselves they should only be handled by skilled chronologists.
