No. 22. Read the following Extract from Colonel JEBBS' Report on the discipline and management of the Convicts' Prisons for 1852, (published 1853,) page 13.

Best method of becoming acquainted with details of discipline.

"With regard to the general results of the combined system, sufficient experience has now been gained of the great advantages of separate confinement, as a preparation for the subsequent stage in association. The details of the discipline, though described in the reports, can, however, only be understood by an inspection of the Prisons at Pentonville and Wakefield, and of other prisons where the separate system is enforced.
