Establishment of the Mint Guard.
Under date the 23rd June 1857, this Government recommended the entertainment of an additional number of 19 Peons in the Madras Mint at an aggregate monthly salary of Rupees 147, their services being urgently required to relieve the Military Guard from the duty of watching outside the walls of the Mint, and to ensure greater safety to the very valuable property in the Mint. The Government of India, 7th August 1857, sanctioned the addition as a temporary measure. These Peons have accordingly been entertained from that time to the present. They [illegible] force for the Town of Madras which has been augmented by that number of men for the purpose—it being considered that a force relieved daily would be better and less likely to be in collusion with the Mint Servants, than a special force always employed on Mint duty.

The Civil Auditor has now objected longer to pass the charge for these extra Peons under the [illegible] of August 1857, and the Madras Government therefore begs to request that the force may be sanctioned permanently.

The necessity for it is as great now as it was in 1857, when it was first [illegible]. The [illegible] the North end of the Black Town is a by no means secure position. The Police force for Madras is weak, being for the entire Presidency Town only 764 including this Mint guard. The population of Madras is reckoned at 7,20,000. The town and its suburbs which they have to guard occupy an area of about 27 square miles, for the most part covered with buildings and Garden houses.

Establishment of the Extra Force.
In the year 1857, the Madras Government authorized an addition of 5 Daffadars, 5 Naigues and 100 Peons to the ordinary Police for the Town [illegible]
