the simplest and best plan would be to leave the regular police of this duty, and that if each complaint of breach of contract led to be accompanied by the payment of say one Rupee, - whilst it would stop frivolous complaints, and would not interfere with justice, (for if the redress sought was not worth picking one Rupee for the injury, could not be very deep), - a fund would be formed to be kept in the hands the Magistrate who would therefrom pay for the service of his process effected by a man paid by the job or by one of a staff maintained for the purpose, pay from the same source.

4. I now beg the sanction of Government to require a fine of one Rupee with every complaint in Act XIII of 1859. - At first the process serving the process by one paid by the job at Rupees 4 per diem. When a small fund has accumulated as would be the case I think with proper management a permanent staff on a salary of Rupees 6 per mensem each might be advantageously employed if necessary.

5. Much time would then be saved to the Police for regular police duties.

I have the honor to be

Your most Obedt Servant
