For Orders.

The usual course in regard to such actions as these is I believe that first - who can have only the Dept. of Justice state much before them and cannot tell how far his arguments may be borne out by evidence, or if proved convicted in law a sufficient defence - leave the Dept. in the first instance to defend himself and do not compromise them.
- then by taking his defence upon them - then the case has been tried & the Dept. is left

As the record determines in the case of the Defendant's case whether his costs & damages shall be borne by himself or by fact — Occasionally they advance money for the defence subject to adjustment when the issue of the debt is known — but this can hardly be necessary in a matter like the present —

The above course should it appear to me to be followed in regard to the present trial
