Rampa Country.

Read the following paper:—

From H. E. SULLIVAN, Esq., on Special Duty, to the Acting Chief Secretary to Government, dated Rajahmundry, 25th July 1879, No. I.

Unfortunately on my arrival here I was laid up with an inflamed eye, and as the doctor prohibited my using it, my work has been somewhat retarded. I have not, however, been absolutely idle, and have collected some useful information from the records of the Sub-Collector's office which will materially assist me in determining the line of action to be pursued. I am having this extracted, and will submit copies with my next.* I hope the Government will be satisfied with demi-official communications, as I am particularly anxious to keep my friend the Mansabdar in the dark as to my intentions. I have evidence to show that, for a long time, he has liberally feed the Government officials in this neighbourhood, and if I give my letters into the office to be copied the odds are that my clerks would be got at. I had heard this, and that the police were in his pay from one or two natives with whom I had talked on the subject, and yesterday in the Sub-Collector's peons and constables are mentioned by name, and the amount of the douceur paid to each specified. I have already seen quite enough to convince me that for many years the Mansabdar has been levying unauthorised cesses from the Mootahdars, and one by one acquiring the Mootahs as personal property, and this with the show of being backed by Government authority. I yesterday telegraphed to you to ascertain the views of Government in re the Board's Proceedings of the 19th August 1872, No. 1,627, and to-day I have before me a case†, now pending before the Sub-Collector, in which the Mansabdar lays claim to the Mootah of Vélamoore on the ground that the deceased Mootahdarni left no legal heirs, and "that therefore the mootah should come under his management in accordance with the custom and practice of his estate, and with reference to the rules prescribed by the Board of Revenue," copy of whose Proceedings is attached to the petition. I own a perusal of these Proceedings took me fairly dback, and I was intensely relieved on getting hold of the printed copy to find that they had never been submitted to Government: by whom the principles laid down by the Board of that epoch will, I presume, be disavowed. It is probable that the other mootahs which are now in the personal enjoyment of the Mansabdar were similarly acquired. Without going into detail at present, I may mention that from a memorandum which I asked Foster to have ready for me, I gather that the Mansabdar's Vakeel admits that his master derives Rs. 3,000 from the mootahs which have come under his personal management, and that in making a settlement of the villages which compose each mootah, he believes himself to be in no way bound by the engagement of 1847-48,—a belief in which he is fully supported by the Board's Proceedings of 1872. This amount appears in the Mansabdar's revenue accounts, but does not include numerous fees and douceurs paid by the hillmen to his agents and to our police who are held in terrorem over them. A fair instance of the manner in which the screw has been applied, and the ingenuity with which it has been made to appear to the hill-people that the exactions were made under the authority of the Sircar will be found in a report* of Gribble's who was Acting Sub-Collector in 1871, which is now being copied. Any thing more lamentably weak than the action taken by the Collector (Frazier) thereon can hardly be conceived. Had the Mansabdar been brought up with a round turn then and there, it is probable that the present disturbance would never have occurred. This was eight years ago, and it is not unreasonable to suppose that the same game has been going on ever since,—in itself quite enough to make these semi-civilised people turn on the Sircar under whose sanction their oppressor was supposed to be acting. Then came the last straw of all,—the imposition of the "Chigurn panu" by the Sircar toddy-renter, and simultaneously of the "Modalu panu" by the Mansabdar. I yesterday employed the Sub-Collector's Sheristadar, a very intelligent man of high character who is now on leave, to visit some of the hillmen in jail here, in view to his ascertaining whether any information could be obtained from them in regard to the immediate cause of the rising. He has travelled in the Rampa country, and I thought it more likely that they would open their hearts to him than if I went down to take a formal deposition. I enclose the notes he took of the conversation he had with them. The grievances especially put forward are the imposition of the toddy-rent and the exactions of the police. In regard to the latter it may, I think, be accepted as a fact, and I see but little use in trying to establish any specific instances. They have been the willing instruments of the Mansabdar, merchants, and money-lenders and abkari renters, and in assisting them in enforcing their claims against the hill-people, they have not omitted to line their own pockets. It was their nature to if not looked after. The arach-renter of the taluk visited me yesterday in reference to his alleged losses in the Rampa country, one cause of which he openly stated was his not having been able to obtain the assistance of the police since the rising, and he added with a sigh "It was different in former years."

Until the country has quieted down a little, I fear I shall not be able to do much with the mootahdars. Those who are not out on 'fituri' are engaged in defending their villages from the raids of the insurgents, or are in hiding, so I am going to camp at Koregonde in the neighbourhood of Yerrumapalem where the Mansabdar lives, and will invite him over to a friendly conference; my object being to ascertain from himself, his people, and his records how he came to acquire the mootahs now under his personal management, and what his income is from the hill estate and from his villages in the plain. This will be useful when hereafter it comes to be determined how he is to be dealt with, and he is so fully under the impression that he is under theegis of the Sircar that I don't anticipate much difficulty in getting out of him what I require. This feeling of security I intend to foster until I am ready to spring the mine. At this point I shall feel the want of powers to act on my own responsibility as circumstances may dictate. There is a general consensus of opinion, European and Native, that the work of pacification would be much facilitated by the removal of the Mansabdar. The hill-people believe that his oppressive acts have had the sanction of the Sircar, and the only way to disabuse them of this idea is to send him out of the district, and not till then will the mootahdars really believe that Government intend to redress their grievances. To me the papers which form enclosures to this carry proof that the Mansabdar has for many years violated the conditions of his agreement, and thereby rendered himself liable to the penalties attaching thereto, and if further proof be wanting I have little doubt it will be forthcoming when I interview him. In this case I would propose to take his six villages in the plains under Government management (as a temporary measure), and to send him to Nellore with orders to remain there until he got permission to return. Whether he should ever be allowed to do so, or whether he should be reduced to the position of a stipendiary would form matter for after consideration; but until the country has quieted down his absence is most desirable, and this measure, in my opinion, is the only one which will give the hill-people confidence in the good intentions of Government towards them. If these views are accepted, I ask for discretionary power to carry them out. His deportation will, of course, be an act of State, and I should like to have the order in my pocket to use when necessary. We heard to-day from Lord Guilamore from Konda-Modalu (Linga Reddi's village up the river). He asked Linga Reddi whether he thought the people were aware that an officer, high in the service of Government, had arrived to settle their grievances. Linga Reddi replied that he did not think they did know, and that if they did, they didn't care, as at present their minds were given up to fighting! I will write again when I have more to tell you; but I fear that little can be done until the country has quieted down a bit. I won't waste any time, but Government will understand that the matter cannot be settled off hand.

The clerks I have brought with me from the Board are mere copyists. I much feel the want of an experienced man of some age and standing whom I can employ confidentially, and such a man is Raja Rao, the Sub-Collector's Sheristadar, and lately Acting Deputy Collector. He is now on leave, but is prepared to cancel it if again made Acting Deputy Collector. I should feel much obliged if Government would attach him to me in that capacity for a time. In anticipation I am going to employ him, and if Government decline to sanction the appointment, I will make up the difference of his salary myself. I must have a man of this sort to overhaul the Mansabdar's accounts.

As a last word, let me reiterate that the first and most important step towards pacifying the people is to get rid of the Mansabdar and his intrigues.

July 27th.—The despatch of this has been delayed owing to my not having been able to get the enclosures copied in time. Yesterday information was received of two parties of insurgents being out not far from where I was going to camp; one party attempted to loot a village in the vicinity, but were beaten off by the police. If I were to go out there now, it would necessitate my applying for a guard for my camp, and as there are no men to spare I have changed my plans. I am going up the river to-morrow to Linga Reddi's village, Konda-Modalu, in the hope of getting him to make known my arrival and the object of my visit to such of the mootahdars who may not be out on 'fituri.'

Robertson, in a letter which arrived this morning, says: "I think now as I did months ago that some decided action of Government as to the future of Rampa as a Zemindari must precede any settlement of the country."

MEMORANDUM.

On the 30th March 1878, the Mansabdar of Rampa addressed a petition to the Sub-Collector, stating that Pallala Muthialamma, Mootahdar of Velamoor, died on 2nd March 1878; that she has no legal heirs; and that therefore the mootah should come under his management in accordance with the custom and practice of his (Mansabdar's) estate, and with reference to the rules prescribed by the Board of Revenue. Mansabdar requests sanction to bring the mootah under his management and to local cess being levied from him on account of this mootah. This petition was referred by the Sub-Collector to the Tahsildar of Rajahmundry who referred it to the Deputy Tahsildar of Kotapalli for inquiry.

On 28th May 1878 one Pallala Ramireddi presented a petition before the Deputy Tahsildar of Kottapalli. In this petition Ramireddi objects to the claim of the Mansabdar. Ramireddi states that the mootah has been in the enjoyment of the family from his forefathers. His father, Ramireddi, died nine years ago. He was then a minor, and consequently Muthialamma, Ramireddi's second widow, managed the mootah, his eldest wife having previously died. Muthialamma died three months ago. His father, late Ramireddi, had three wives. The first wife, Yerramma, with whom he had a legal marriage died childless before petitioner, Ramireddi, was born. The second wife, Muthialamma, and the third, Pandamma, had been married by his father with the consent of the caste people. Muthialamma has two daughters, Subbamma and Sunbamma, of twenty-five years old, being twins. These two are living with their husbands. Subbamma is at Kundada and Sunbamma at Velamoor with Muthialamma, and even after Muthialamma's death, Subbamma has four daughters and Sunbamma none. Petitioner, Ramireddi, and his brother Mutyalareddi are the only sons of Pandamma. Petitioner is twenty-seven years old and his brother twenty-five. Petitioner has no sisters. During the late Ramireddi's lifetime, he kept Muthialamma at Velamoor and Pandamma at Gajjamamdivalasoo and maintained them. Petitioner and his brother, as well as his mother, were under the support of Muthialamma. Petitioner's mother died two months before the date of the petition. Petitioner says he is supporting the family of Muthialamma and his own. Petitioner and his brother are undivided. Petitioner claims the mootah as he and his brother are the heirs of their father and mother, and requests that they (brothers) may be placed in possession of the mootah and the usual pension (Rs. 40) may be ordered to be collected from them by the Mansabdar. Petitioner Ramireddi called some witnesses to prove that at the time of Muthialamma's death, she told him to manage the estate and made over to him her personal property; that late Ramireddi recognised his (petitioner's) mother with the consent of the caste people as his wife. Petitioner Ramireddi adds that Maddati Chinnanna married first his mother Pandamma and left her; afterwards she married Tatikonda Baladu; after some time she did not like Baladu and went to Velamoor where the Mootahdar Ramireddi kept her. Ramireddi says he performed the funeral rites of Ramireddi, his father and Muthialamma.

On 31st May, Mansabdar's Vakeel gave a statement before the Deputy Tahsildar. In this he states as follows:—The claimants, Ramireddi and his brother Mutyalareddi, are not the proper heirs of the late Mootahdar. Ramireddi's first wife, Yerramma, died thirty years ago. She was childless. After her death the last holder, Muthialamma, was married. She left only daughters. When nine years ago Mootahdar Ramireddi died the claimants, Ramireddi and Mutyalareddi, were twenty and eighteen years, respectively. Mootahdar Ramireddi had not married her lawfully. On one occasion the Mootahdar came to the Mansabdar when Pandamma was maid servant of the Mansabdar, and was living in adultery and had not been married; she had daughters; Mootahdar then took her with him, promising to support her, and kept her at Gajjamamdivalasoo, and by him she had the claimant Ramireddi and his brother. The Vakeel argues that the estate was managed by Muthialamma, because, though Ramireddi and his brother were old enough, they were not the legal heirs when the Mootahdar Ramireddi died. Vakeel cites Kauni, who was born to Pandamma when she was in the service of the Mansabdar, and other witnesses; Vakeel asserts that when Muthialamma died she had made over her personal property to her second daughter Sunbamma; that Ramireddi and his brother had never been under her (Muthialamma's) support; that the brothers did not come at the time of her death; that her property was not made over to them; and that she did not tell them to manage the mootah. He called some witnesses to prove the above points, and the fact that the Mootahdar did not marry their mother Pandamma.

Pallala Mutyalareddi states that he and his brother Ramireddi are the sons of Pandamma, who was kept by Velamoor Ramireddi; that both brothers are undivided, and that he joined his brother in claiming the mootah.

Mansabdar's first witness Kanni states that Pandamma is her mother; that when her father Tatikonda Baladu died, her mother left her in the Divunam of the Mansabdar and went away to Velamoor where the Mootahdar kept her; and that by him her mother has the claimants Ramireddi and Mutyalareddi.

Second witness Sankuru Chitakulo states that Pandamma was first kept by Maddati Chinnanna and then by Tatikonda Baladu; that on Baladu's death she went to Velamoor where Mootahdar kept her; that the claimants were born to him; that in the hills (Manyem) though women were kept they are recognised as married wives; that Mootahdar had first married a woman, she died and then kept the two women; that Pandamma had none when kept by Baladu. At that time the Mansabdar was residing in Rampa; that Pandamma had no issue when she went to the Mootahdar Ramireddi.

Third witness Kalapureddi Veerabhadra; he is a peon of the Mansabdar. He says that when he went to make collections he was informed that Muthialamma was seriously ill, and he went to Velamoor; that there her two daughters were crying by her, that Muthialamma said to them 'why do you cry, take all the property, Mansabdar will take charge of the mootah'; that then claimant Ramireddi and his brother were not present there, and that he does not know where they were. Claimant Ramireddi's first witness, Pallala Bhapireddi alias Bodular Bhapireddi, states that the Mootahdar Ramireddi married a woman, and then kept the other two; that Muthialamma has two daughters, and the claimant Ramireddi and his brother were born to Pandamma; that when Mootahdar Ramireddi died the claimant Ramireddi were sufficiently old, but he does not know why Muthialamma managed the mootah; that during the lifetime of the Mootahdar and Muthialamma they had been living at Velamoor and claimant Ramireddi and his brother at Gajjamamdivalasoo; that he was not present when Muthialamma died, and does not know how she disposed of her personal and real property; that in the hills (Manyem) when a man keeps a woman she is recognised as his married wife; and that the claimant Ramireddi's mother Pandamma lived with the Mootahdar as his married wife; that Pandamma was at first the wife of Tatikonda Baladu by whom she had a daughter Kannamma who is now in the Divunam of the Rampa Mansabdar; that Muthialamma was at first the wife of Pandarantudu, of Gammalladippalam, and on his death Mootahdar Ramireddi kept her.

Second witness, Madigupentadu alias Chitukapentadu, states that he was present when Muthialamma died at Velamoor; that she did not hear what she said of the mootah as he (deponent) was off at the house; that the claimant Ramireddi and his brother are the sons of the Mootahdar Ramireddi; that Muthialamma and Ramireddi (Mootahdar) were living in Velamoor and the claimant and his brother and mother at Gajjamamdivalasoo and that he does not know whether claimant's mother and Muthialamma are the Mootahdar's married wives or kept women.

Third witness, Suruboyama Bhamadu, states that the claimant's mother and Muthialamma are the kept women of the Mootahdar Ramireddi; that he was present when Muthialamma died at Velamoor; that she does not know whom she told to manage the mootah at the time of her death and to whom her personal property was made over; that in their (Manyem) hills it is only the rich that contract legal marriages. Many persons keep woman who live as wives. So Pandamma lived with Ramireddi as married woman.

On 10th September 1878, Kolla Sunbamma, second daughter of the Mootahdar Ramireddi and Muthialamma presented a petition before the Deputy Tahsildar stating the circumstances of the family, and claiming the mootah for herself since her sister has some estate, Kundada Mootah, to live; she states also that the Mootahdar Ramireddi left instructions, to make over the whole property and the mootah to her after Muthialamma's death; that at the time of Muthialamma's death she accordingly made over to her the property as well as the estate; that Pandamma and her two sons Ramireddi and Mutyalareddi had been under the support of her father and mother during their lifetime; that they as well as petitioner Sunbamma and her husband are living as undivided family. She wants the estate, because she is a daughter of the first widow of Ramireddi. She promises to support the claimants if the mootah is made over to her, or else the mootah may, she says, be made over to the eldest son Ramireddi, though they are sons of second wife as they are male heirs, and Ramireddi will support her and her husband. She finally says that it is lawful to give the mootah either to her or to the sons of Ramireddi, and that it will be known that while there are heirs it will be improper for the Mansabdar to ask permission to take the mootah under his management.

Mansabdar filed copy of the Board's Proceedings, dated 19th August 1872, to support his claim.

Deputy Tahsildar states that the fact that the claimants are the sons of a kept woman has been proved by the evidence adduced on both sides. He observes that in hill-village, real marriages were scarce; that the kept women live as married wives; that the second and third wives were under Ramireddi's support, and have equal right; but when he died the management of the mootah was assumed and conducted by Muthialamma, though there are two sons of Pandamma. During her management, though the present claimant Ramireddi was not a man of discretion, he was not so during the nine years the mootah was under her; still he does not appear to have prevented Muthialamma. Deputy Tahsildar leaves it to be determined whether the sons are or not the proper heirs of the Mootahdar Ramireddi.

Karem Potti Dora states: Chelankuri Venkatarayudu, toddy-renter, imposed Chiguru Pannu since last year. For each village Rs. 7 are charged. I live in Mulapilli in Bandapilli Mootah. It is four miles distant to Birampilli Mootah. Mansabdar has also demanded Modallu Pannu, which is also Rs. 7 a village. The mootah consists of forty villages. Mootahdar died twenty years ago, and the mootah since then is being managed by the Mansabdar. It is Chiguru Pannu that compelled all the Paddas to take this trouble. It is never collected since the creation. The peons of the toddy-renter came to us and compelled payment. Peons generally extort 4 annas each time, besides that, rice, curry, and fowls are also extorted.

The head constable or constable comes to each village for Pongul and Dasara, and take from us 8 annas for each village. The headman also gives to the said constable one seer of rice, one or two fowls, dholl, ghee, &c., whenever he visits the village.

I can say that for Dasara 8 annas are taken by the police; we were afraid to complain to officers.

The headman of my village, named Karem Tammandora, paid 8 annas to the head constable or constable for each Dasara. This Tammandora is not the man that is doing all the mischief.

Karem Potti Dora, brother of Tammandora, states: I am the brother of Tammandora; I have been in bad terms with him since ten years. I do not know why my brother and others are committing this disturbance. I hear Jatta Papayya, the sub-renter of Kottapilli, imposed toddy tax. I do not know any thing more.

Jatta Papayya demanded Rs. 10 for every batta. We have not been drawing toddy for three years, because of the above tax. My brother and others are causing this disturbance on account of the above tax.

I hear the head constable that was killed took bribes from every village at Rs. 10 each, threatening he would imprison them. This he did before the fituri began.

(1) Damla Soami of Gangaram, (2) Kota Tammayya of Geddavara, (3) Mulla Seshayya of Bodular. These three men seized the said head constable in Devarapalli and beat him with hands. About 200 men have also joined them. I was also present with them. I did not beat the head constable. My brother Tammandora was also present; he did not take part in beating the head constable. The head constable was not then killed; I was not present when he was killed.

I was asked by Padim Narsadu, of Nandivada, to accompany him to Devarapilli, as he has to go there on his own business.

The head constable was taken from Devarapilli to Bodular, I did not go to Bodular.

Karem Gangadu, Mootahdar of Birampalli states: I am the Mootahdar of Birampalli. The toddy sub-renters Reddam Subbarayudu and Chelankuri Venkatarayudu imposed toddy tax of Rs. 60 a year three years ago. I paid Rs. 60 a year for three years on the whole mootah. My mootah consists of ten villages. There are 200 Palayra trees in my village Birampalli; and in other villages there are but few trees. As we have not been able to pay the said toddy tax we have left off drawing toddy this year. I think and hear that Karem Tammadu and others have committed the disturbance on account of the above tax.

The Sitanagaram, Kottapilli, and Gokavaram merchants have also oppressed some of the Koyas great deal by charging heavy interest, &c. For instance, the Sitanagaram merchant, Palamu Bhamayya, attached forty cattle of my brother five years ago, as the latter had to give the former one Yadam of Gingelly seed. Two police constables, whose names I cannot tell, accompanied Bhamayya; the cattle was attached in my brother's absence; my brother's name is Panda Dora.

I do not know if the Mansabdar oppressed any of the villagers.

I am only paying Rs. 40 to the Mansabdar and nothing more.

For every Dasara I am paying Rs. 4 to the police constables. They come to my village on the Dasara day; head constable accompanied by a constable comes to my village. They now and then ask for a fowl.

All the hillmen are dissatisfied on account of the toddy tax. Rs. 150 are charged on Bandapilli mootah on account of toddy tax. Similarly every mootah is charged.

I took no part in the rebellion.

Karem Tammadu, Nodamireddi, Bodular Arumalareddi, Maredebilireddi, Yelukurireddi, Kakurireddi, Dora Chintalapalep Buchayya, took leading part in the rebellion. I have merely heard they are ringleaders, but I have seen nothing with my own eyes.

From J. D. B. GRIBBLE, Esq., Acting Sub-Collector of the Godavari District, to the Collector of the Godavari District, dated Rajahmundry, 12th June 1871, No. 116.

I have the honor to forward to you the records connected with an inquiry held by me into two complaints made against the Mansabdar of Rampa.

2. The first case was inquired into in consequence of a reference from you on a demi-official received by you from the Superintendent of Police. The second case is the result of an inquiry held on a complaint preferred to me some weeks ago. In one of these cases the Rampa Mansabdar is accused of having extorted money from the head of a village, and in the other of having extorted a bond promising to pay a rent for a village which had hitherto been held rent free.

3. The records in my office regarding the Rampa Estate are very few, and I am therefore not able to give every detail regarding its settlement; but I think that the following remarks will be found correct.

4. The Mansabdar's Jaghire was granted to him on condition of furnishing the former Native Government with a military equipment. His revenues are derived from a tax levied from certain villages in the Rampa Estate, and from other villages in the vicinity of Gokaram and Koregonda. Some years ago the condition of a military equipment was done away with, and compounded for a money-payment, and the Mansabdar now holds his Jaghire on the payment of a yearly rent to Government of Rs. 1,458. This sum is not, however, actually paid by him, for in consideration of his binding himself not to collect certain abkari and sayer duties, the Government engaged to pay him yearly the average value of them. This average value was fixed at Rs. 2,192-11-8. The sum payable by the Mansabdar was deducted, and the balance, viz., Rs. 735 is paid to the Mansabdar by the Government yearly.

In 1841, December 21st, in the time of the Collector, Mr. Smith, there was considerable dissatisfaction amongst the Mootahdars of the several villages in Rampa which pay tax to the Mansabdar. These Mootahdars appear to have a proprietary right in the land attached to the villages, and this right is a hereditary one. They complained that the tax they had to pay was too heavy, and after their claims had been duly considered Mr. Smith reduced the tax that each had to pay by about one-half. In 1848 in the time of Mr. Collector Prendergast this settlement has been further reduced in consequence of a continued dissatisfaction which had increased to such a pitch that some of the Mootahdars broke into open rebellion, and were brought to order only after severe measures had been used. Table "A" shows the amount demanded from the respective villages before Mr. Smith's time, the amount of tax settled by Mr. Smith, and the amount to which it was afterwards reduced by Mr. Prendergast. From 1840 to 1848 the estate was under the management of the Court of Wards owing to the death of the late and the minority of the present Mansabdar.

5. From the above I gather,—supposing that I am correct in my facts,—that the Mansabdar has no proprietary right in the land in the Rampa country but that he is only entitled to collect certain taxes which have been definitely fixed for certain villages; and that it is not in his power either to increase those taxes or levy taxes from any other villages other than those mentioned. In 1865 a doubt arose whether the Mansabdar was entitled to recover arrears of taxes due to him by an ordinary revenue suit, and the Board passed an order, No. 300, dated 18th January 1865, referring the Mansabdar's claims to the Collector for settlement. In 1869 in consequence of an application from the Mansabdar, he was told under orders from you that for all old arrears he must bring a suit before the Civil Courts. The question as to whether he was empowered to take proceedings under Act VIII of 1865 (Rent Recovery Act) was left unanswered.

6. It now appears that the Mansabdar does not confine himself to the collection of the rents from each village as laid down by Mr. Prendergast, but that he is in the habit of collecting additional tax on account of fruit-trees and pasture lands, amounting in some cases to as much as treble the amount fixed by Mr. Prendergast. Table "B" shows these amounts, which the Mansabdar acknowledges that he collects; indeed, he considers himself entitled to collect them, for he produced a bond by which the villagers bound themselves to pay their sums, and another document which is a statement of the villagers that the bond was freely and voluntarily given. It must be remembered that these Rampa villagers are a wild ignorant hill tribes, and it appears difficult to me to understand why, if they created a disturbance in the time of Mr. Prendergast, because the rates were too high, they should, when the estate was resumed by the present Mansabdar, have voluntarily consented to pay what they formerly refused to. That they have any especial love towards the Mansabdar as a landholder and their head cannot be urged because it was against him that they rose on the several different occasions and not against the Government. In case No. 1, the particulars are as follow:—Five months ago the old Reddy of Velamoor died. Four days after his death the Mansabdar's peons came to the village and stated that the Mansabdar was going to attach the late Reddy's property for arrears. From the statement of the young Reddy it appears that the rent of the village of Velamoor is Rs. 40, but that this sum was never paid, because the family held an Inam to the same amount in Gokaram which was in the possession of the Mansabdar, and who thus took the value of the Inam as the amount of* the rent of Vélamoore. After holding out this threat the peons went away. In the mean time the Mansabdar's Vakeel Venkayer applied to the Sub-Magistrate of Kolapully to give him an order to the police to grant him assistance in the distraining of the Vélamoore Reddy's property. An order was given to the station officer of Sodaveram who endorsed it to the station officer of Dondada, who however excused himself on the ground that he was sick, and that his constables would not obey his orders. The Vakeel then went to Vélamoore accompanied by a Mussulman peon.† It appears to me as well as to the Superintendent of Police that the Vakeel never really wanted the police to accompany him, but that the order was asked for, so as to be used as a means of threatening the Reddy. Arrived at Vélamoore the Vakeel asked the widow of the Reddy to pay the arrears owed by her late husband, viz., Rs. 200, i.e., Rs. 100 for the current fasli, Rs. 50 the arrears for the previous one, and Rs. 50 arrears for the fasli before. She refused on the ground that no arrears were due. Venkayer then told her that if she did not pay he would fetch the police from the station who would put them in the stocks and bring them down to Rajahmundry. He then wrote a letter to the station officer (vide deposition of the servant), but did not despatch it. The Vakeel then asked for a present for himself of Rs. 50 which sum was lent to the widow by her son-in-law who was working in the fields at the time, and who was fetched for this purpose by the young Reddy. After lending the Rs. 50, the son-in-law is said to have returned to his work. In addition to the Rs. 50 given to Venkayer the widow gave Rs. 4 to the peon who accompanied him. Venkayer is then said to have gone inside the house, leaving the widow, the young Reddy and the servant outside in the custody of the peon. He then came out with a box which contained a gold chain and some cloths: the chain he took and put round his neck, the cloths he returned. Venkayer then untied a horse which belonged to the Reddy; he bridled and mounted it; and telling the servant to follow and drive two bullocks (also the Reddy's property), he went off to Errampallem, the Mansabdar's head-quarters, followed by the young Reddy and the servant. On the way the young Reddy met a friend to whom he told the demand of the Vakeel Venkayer, and from whom he borrowed Rs. 200 to meet the claim. That night they stopped in the village of Godada, and on the following morning reached Errampallem. Arrived at Errampallem the Vakeel first took them to the house of one of the Mansabdar's peons where the horse and bullocks were left, and then to the Mansabdar's house. Here the money was paid and a receipt given for Rs. 200. The servant states that he saw the Vakeel give the gold chain to the Mansabdar's son who was there. The value of the chain is said to be Rs. 100. This is the story of the Reddy and his servant as recorded in their depositions and corroborated by the widow, whose deposition was not recorded as it only referred to some particulars, and because she was a particularly ignorant woman, who had never before seen a white face, and whose statement was of a very wandering and rigmorole character. This statement is, of course, denied by Venkayer who admits, however, that he got Rs. 200, namely, Rs. 100 for the current fasli and Rs. 100 for arrears of two former faslis. He states, however, that when he applied for the assistance of the police he had no intention of distraining for the old balance, but only for that of the current fasli, and when he asked for the current demand the widow voluntarily gave the old arrears. The receipt is admitted.

† An unstamped paper.

7. It is perfectly clear that immediately after the old Reddy's death, steps were taken to distrain the property; that the assistance of the police was applied for when there was no reason to expect resistance; and that under these circumstances the demand made for the current fasli and also the alleged arrears for former faslis were collected. It is also clear that the rent of Vélamoore as fixed by Mr. Prendergast was Rs. 40, and that the Mansabdar now claims a tax for fruit-trees of Rs. 60 which tax, he says, the late Reddy, voluntarily agreed to give. Now if this fruit-tree tax was a voluntary one of the late Reddy, it does not appear to me that it can be binding on his son, who certainly now, in my presence, denies his wish to pay it. Whether it was voluntary or not is open to grave doubt, but in any case it cannot be held that the non-payment of a voluntary subscription can be collected as an arrear of rent under Act VIII of 1865. As regards the story of the chain and the horse and the bullocks there is no absolute proof that this is true. I am, however, inclined to believe it, for these hill-people are almost too uneducated to lie wilfully. It is clear that the Vakeel went to Vélamoore with the purpose of distraining; and I think, therefore, that it is not unreasonable to suppose that he did distrain something. The receipt shows that Rs. 200 was paid, and if this was paid what became of the distrained property about which the Vakeel denies all knowledge.

* Note.—It also appears that under the threat of distraining for what was alleged to be current arrears, the young Reddy was induced to pay the arrears for two former faslis. Under Act VIII of 1865, distraint can only be made for arrears of one year or under. For older balances an ordinary civil suit must be brought.

8. This case was first brought to notice by Inspector Williams to whom the young Reddy told his story in a great state of excitement. It appears that the young Reddy was under the idea that the Vakeel was acting under an order from the Sub-Collector; indeed, he told Inspector Williams so. He was excited, but was too ignorant to know how to obtain redress against what he considered to be an official order.

9. As regards the second case the complainant is also a widow. Her husband was the Reddi of the Pentapully village. She states that he died eight years ago. Her husband was also the Mootahdar of Mussaramully which is entered in Mr. Prendergast's last settlement as paying a kist of Rs. 40. To this kist, however, has recently been added a kist for fruit-trees and pasturage, and the village now pays Rs. 140 annually. The village of Pentapully is not entered in the settlement of Mr. Prendergast, and the widow declares that it is a mocassa village which her husband's family had always held rent free. About two or three months ago the widow was summoned to Errampallem by one of the Mansabdar's peons, and was asked to give a muchilika to pay Rs. 300 annually to the Mansabdar for the village of Pentapully. This she states she refused to do, because she had always hitherto held the village on mocassa tenure. The Mansabdar's Vakeel, however, then told her in the presence of the Mansabdar and his eldest son that if she did not give this muchilika she would be beaten and confined. She was then put into a room adjoining the hall, and a paper was written out by the Village Curnam. This paper she was asked to sign or rather to touch with the pen, but she refused and the Vakeel Venkayer then touched her with the pen and entered it on the paper, the Village Munsif then signing the same as a witness. The woman was then sent back to her village, but she at once came to me to

* The widow does not complain that she has up to this time been called upon to pay the woman. She complains only that the muchilika was extorted from her.

Vadapally and lodged a complaint.* I caused certain inquiries to be made regarding this complaint, and having discovered that it seemed Case No. 1. In support of the woman's statement there are three witnesses who had come to the Mansabdar's house for various reasons and said the transaction as above related. They corroborate the woman's statement. The Mansabdar produced the muchilika said to have been extorted, but urges that the woman gave this muchilika voluntarily, and that from time immemorial the village of Pentapully has paid a kist of Rs. 300. The woman produced a document, dated 15th January 1849, in which the Mansabdar acknowledges the village to be a mocassa village and paying no kist. The Mansabdar, however, denies that the signature to this document is authentic. In proof of the Mansabdar's statement he produced his accounts for the last twenty years in each of which years he urged that an entry of the payment of the kist would be found. I have examined these accounts very carefully, and I find that what he says is partly true. An entry is made every year that the kist of Pentapully (variously entered as Rs. 300 and 400) has been paid by the woman's husband and another, but in the next entry on the debit side I find invariably an entry to the effect that the whole of the kist on account of Pentapully has been remitted on account of Sirdar duties. Indeed, in one entry the village is called a mocassa village. These entries continue every year until six years ago when the woman's husband's name disappears and entries of Rs. 40 and 80 are found as having been paid by the villagers on account of kist, with no corresponding entry of remission. In one year, however, (Fasli 1279 two years ago) the entry of kist of Rs. 300 is again made, and the corresponding refund entry is made not on account of Sirdar duties, but on account of presents and cloths given to the woman Pandamma. I think it is very clear that these entries are not entries of money paid or received, and that in reality the village was held rent free; these dummy entries being made to keep up a show of a title. It is clear that the Mansabdar's statement that Pentapully has always paid a tax of Rs. 300 is false, and that it never has done so. It is also clear that the muchilika admitted by the Mansabdar to have been voluntarily signed by the woman is an improper and illegal one, for it is on plain paper. Several receipts granted by the Mansabdar form part of the records; these are all on plain paper, and I am of opinion that it will be found that it is the Mansabdar's usual practice to evade the Stamp Act, which it is easy for him to do since the people are so ignorant that they do not know the value or the penalties connected with a stamp.

10. After a careful inquiry my opinion is that the Mansabdar has committed many and great irregularities, and that there are many other irregularities, and oppression of a similar nature which have not come to light. You are probably better aware than I am of the feeling of excitement which this conduct is calculated to raise amongst these ignorant hill villagers; and I am strongly of opinion that it is necessary that strong measures should be adopted by you to prevent a repetition of these acts.

11. You will observe that the original Rampa estate consists of twenty-five villages at a settled kist of Rs. 1,000. Under the present arrangement the Mansabdar levies from twenty-four of these a kist of Rs. 2,110.† The village of Pentapully is not at all mentioned in Mr. Prendergast's settlement.

† Being Rs. 1,000 Mr. Prendergast's.

" 1,110 Settlement.

" 2,110 Fruit-tax.

12. I have taken no steps regarding the breaches of the Stamp Act committed by the Mansabdar, but await your instructions on the whole case.
