(c) Whilst a festival was going on at a temple in the South not far from Cape Comorin, and several thousand Hindoos were collected and in a somewhat excited condition, a European missionary attached to the London Mission Society went into the crowd, so close to the temple as to challenge its pollution.

The Native Superintendent of Police remonstrated with him & showed him the public road by which he could proceed to his destination without fear of firing officers, and the missionary went by the way indicated to him.

This was fortunate as the missionaries in the South have been endeavouring to assert their right, and the right of their converts, to walk through Brahmins' streets and in the vicinity of temples - places which are prohibited by local usage

to low caste Hindoos, or Christian converts, and the feeling between the Hindoos and native Christians (protestant) has not been good.

(K.) Heat throughout the country
said to be unusually great.

Slight scarcity of water in parts.
Cholera near Cape Comorin is an epidemic form, but abating.

No anticipation of distress or famine.
