Ind case which has recently come to the notice of Govt. has attracted attention to the hardship which may be caused by the sudden termination of probation in the Police Inspectorate. In the case of men promoted from the rank of Head Constable, it is easy to terminate probation, for such men will simply revert to their original positions. But, in the case of men taken from other Departments & of those previously possessing no permanent appointment in the public service, termination of probation must often be equivalent to dismissal. & unless cessation of probation is a consequence of a serious offence, it appears undesirable that such should be the case. The Govt. is therefore, inclined to think that, where no positive fault is alleged against a probationary inspector, he should be given some three (say, six months) Enable him to find other employment, subject, however, to the condition that, when absolutely necessary, the I.G. may require him to take leave without pay for the period of notice. The I.G. will be requested to report, when he has seen enough of the workings of the Dept. to enable him to form an opinion, whether he sees any objection to the adoption of this or some similar plan.
