Sir.

(d) I do not consider it at all necessary to keep 100 rank and file (sepoys) in this place. I must, however, mention that the presence of some troops is absolutely necessary, as has already been shown on several occasions, when nothing but an armed demonstration was necessary to keep the people quiet. The disinfection of houses at present, is so reduced in number that it is quite unnecessary to keep a whole Company (of 100 men) here for that purpose.

The sepoys are so well trained in disinfection work and the native officers so well Capable of managing the duty that there seems no reason whatever to waste the valuable services of a British officer upon such a (routine) work as disinfection which can be very well carried out by natives and reported to the Plague officers.

I shall take the liberty of suggesting that you may think it expedient to keep in Vellore only 50 rank and file under the Command of one native officer for the performance of all duties including disinfection.

The total and sudden disappearance of troops is inadvisable and I may be permitted to say, unwise.

My reason for the above is, that the Moharram festival is approaching, therefore, I need mention no more. Nevertheless I still maintain that 50 sepoys are quite sufficient even now or at any time.
