fever. No pain, but has a constant desire to go to stool and feels as if there was "Some thing to come away". Bowels opened once yesterday. Stool watery and natural. Pricking of mouth very much relieved which he attributes chiefly to the effect of the acid from which he finds benefit. No other symptoms - pulse soft, tongue improved. To have now.

and the stools were large pieces of oranges as well as several of their seeds. These must be from some in his bowels, for it is he has been sucking oranges since he has been ill, he is quite sure he has not swallowed either their membranes or seeds. He has passed a pretty good night, had only once a little sweating. No oppression today, and he feels unassured (sometimes he calls it "hunger") about the stomach and bowels. There is however no pain anywhere, even on pressure.
His pulse is soft, and his tongue improving.
Continue pills and Acid.

5th. I was sent for to see Mr. Smith yesterday. He had suddenly become worse and extremely sick, so much so that he could not swallow either pills or food or drink, and experienced a feeling of weight about the stomach amounting almost to pain. He had fasted before I came, and as a "itch" in the side. Continue pills and The patient returned several times with symptoms of intermittent intervals. I found him with the same symptoms, complaining much of acute pain in the head, and less generally of pain in the abdomen which he described now as of a gripping character. all his abdomen was more or less tender and there was more pain over stomach and liver. Painful on the ribs of right side elicited feeling of soreness. There was ^{no swelling} ~~no swelling~~ - every now and then there was a slight eructation preceded by a feeling of nausea, and such emission of wind was accompanied by pain in the pit of the stomach. His pulse was 88 and full, mouth and tongue parched - urine just voided in dribble of a high colour - gave him immediately of ~~xxx~~ Tinct Opi, which ^{he} retained.

 Cold was applied with sensible relief to the head - In an hour he was easier and slept for another hour asleep, and perspiring freely.
 Before I went away he mentioned that he felt numbness in the hands and feet.

-plains most of the intense parching of his -mouth and throat, in consequence of which he drank a great deal of water overnight.
The medicine began to act last night and has done so some 6 or 7 times in small quantities. Stools watery feculent, and healthy.
There is no pain today, on pressure or otherwise, evacuation continues, but without pain, only cramps accompany it. The noise made by flatulences in the bowels is quite remarkable, and there is constant desire to go to stool without any result. Last night he twice passed feces unconsciously. Sometimes he feels that numbness in the hands - pulse so soft - mouth and throat excessively parched tongue white.

27th. Mr. Smith's illness, by illness from visiting Mr. Smith, but I heard that he continued to improve, and advised him to go with small doses of quinine on the 27th he was visited by a Doctor who advised him to take a black draught, because being constipated.

28th. I found Mr. Smith today very much better, complaining of little but weakness.
Pain in side entirely gone - even on pressure.
No black draught yesterday which acted freely. Nil.

28th. Mr. Smith had been going on well, keeping free of pain and fever and getting stronger, but he was going out too soon and exposing himself too much. He has been using only blue ointment, rubbed into his side. He went for air this morning, and said he had been tormented last night with headaches, shivering, and then fever. There is no pain in the liver but uneasiness along the Colon, particularly over the Caecum. pulse 80, tongue foul. To have immediately a saline purge, and as soon as this acts, to have Quinine $\text{gr} \text{v}$, and the dose repeated in the afternoon.

29th. Fever returned severely during the night, but has again left him. Quinine $\text{gr} \text{x}$ statim and $\text{gr} \text{v}$ every 4 hours.

30th. A bad night, restless and no sleep, but is again relieved. Pain increased by pressure along Colon - pulse 80 soft. Tongue partly good, bowels opened once yesterday. Leeches x to right Hypochondrium. Quinine $\text{gr} \text{v}$ 4 times per diem. The leeches relieved the pain over the Colon but little, and it now extends over the side in what he describes as "burning".

Pulse 80, full. Bowels have been opened 31st. This morning, but still very much nauseated and is unable to eat. He has any nourishment except milk and milk in the morning, has great thirst, and headache intense over the forehead, and great pain in the eyes. Tongue dry and white. He has been excited and annoyed with business.

1st today. The whole right side to be well fired, and the whole body sprinkled with warm water.
A belladonna plaster to the forehead. The last dose of Quinine not to be taken but to have instead.

1st. Dr. Smith's illness, by illness from last night at 10 o'clock, and was told that he had been suddenly seized with the violent shoning pains in the pit of the stomach, extending generally over the abdomen but chiefly towards the right hypochondrium and the spot over the Colon where he had previously complained of tenderness. The spasms were described by himself as if he was being stabbed by a knife. This was accompanied by a most violent headache and by sickness. He had thrown up some mucus, but he had taken a little before, and a pill which he had been in decaying to take when the attack commenced, and in the basin in which he had vomited were found some streaks of blood. The first attack of spasm continued for about half an hour during which he was in great suffering.
There was then an intermission, but the Evening. The patient relieves the pain, but tenderness in pressure still remains, and Coughing ~~is~~ is frequent. He can lie on the left side without inconvenience. The medicine acted only once, but well. He felt very well until four p.m. when shivering seized him, violent headache, nausea, and fever. with severe pain in the back and limbs. Tongue is much better; pulse slightly accelerated, thin hot and dry. Nine high colored, and scanty. No complaints of weariness and evenness and then a sense of fainting comes on, accompanied by aggravation of the pain in the head and back and joints, and a feeling of Chills. At these times his face becomes pale, and his countenance expresses anxiety, while his pulse sensibly diminishes both in frequency and force. It has p. Quinine to night, and a similar dose tomorrow morning. To Pittsburg plaster to the forehead.

18th Last night he had two attacks of rigors, after the latter of which a free perspiration ensued, and he felt much relieved, and felt as well. Till ten this morning he enjoyed refreshing rest and sleep, and the new felt better. There is still headache, and pain in the side, and also pain in the shoulders and weariness of limbs. He cannot without pain, lie on the left side as he could last night, but he can bear direct pressure better, I think, on the liver. His mouth is much parched, and thirst continues, but his tongue is cleaner. His pulse is 70. and soft.

Op. Quinine p. v. every 3 hours

Evening. He states for very improvement in any symptoms except the rigors, of which there has been none today, altho' several approaches to it in the form of sudden chills. Tenderness on pressure on lower edge of liver same as yesterday, and there is also pain and tenderness from the pit of the stomach as far as the umbilicus, no inclination for food and all ~~attempts~~ ^{attempts} to eat are frustrated by nausea. Mouth parched and thin dry, pulse 76, tongue moist, but dirty. Bowels open once very scantily today. feces dark and offensive. He complains of restlessness, and every now and then he has seizures of a pulling sort of pain in the joints, which last but a few seconds & then go away. 18 more leeches to be applied to the seat of pain close to the lower edge of the ribs and the following pill to be taken.

P. He took a dose of Quinine of 5 grs. each today. The acid he thinks makes him sick, and he takes very little of it. He says that these pulling pains in the joints first came on ten days ago, before the commencement of his present illness. 19th The night has been rather restless, sleep coming merely in snatches. During the night he vomited a quantity of green bile. The pain is very much relieved by the leeching last night. No return of shivering, but he thinks he had some fever overnight after which he perspired freely. pulse quiet. Tongue white. He took a 5 grs. dose of Quinine this morning. - should immediately

Mr. Smith comes in from an malarious district suffering from symptoms of hepatitis, concurrent with which appear symptoms of intermittent fever.
He has ^{fever} recurrent, relapses, and makes a tedious progress towards death. Incapacitated from work for months, he is recommended to be sent

Summary

19th November 1887. Mr. Smith came in from the district this morning, suffering from pain in his right side, which attacked him 5 or 6 days ago after being much exposed and wet. He states that for the last 20 or 30 years he has been subject to disease of his liver, and that he has been twice actively treated for severe attacks of hepatitis.
On this last occasion the pain came on suddenly with rocking headache, fever, and some rigors.
The headache was so bad that he applied a blister to his forehead, from which he obtained a little relief. For the last 2 days he has been tormented with sickness and vomiting, and nothing whatever has remained on his stomach but cold mucous. On pressure great pain is felt at the anterior edge of the right lobe of the liver, which is somewhat enlarged, and pressure elsewhere also causes a certain pain to this place. There is the usual dragging pain when lying on the left side, and deep inspiration aggravates it. Yesterday he had two severe rigors and the day before they were still more so. He still complains of headache.
Tongue very faint and loaded, and mouth dry and parched. Pulse moderate and soft. Bowels rather confined. His nights have been very restless and unpleasant. I have 20 leeches applied to seat of pain, and the following medicine immediately
