JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT.

No. 62

CIRCULAR MEMORANDUM.

The Government having recently had under its consideration the general direction given in the marginal order to all Heads of Departments that the services of the Government Solicitor were not to be employed without the previous sanction of Government, they now resolve, in modification of that order, to empower all Heads of Departments to apply direct to the Government Solicitor for his advice or assistance, in cases connected with their Departments.

1st September 1869, No. 1446, Judl. Dept.

2. To enable that officer, however, to judge whether the case is one falling within the nature of his duties, either full statement in person, or a full report in writing, should be made to him by the officer requiring his services, of the circumstances of the case; and in the event of the Government Solicitor considering that the matter does not fall within his province, or that his time cannot usefully be employed on it, he will tell the Head of the Department so; taking the orders of Government in the event of any difference of opinion on these points.

3. Heads of Departments are reminded that the duty of conducting prosecutions in the Presidency Courts is not the immediate business of the Government Solicitor but of the Government Prosecutor, who is bound to carry through all prosecutions by Government Officers, acting on the advice of the Government Solicitor. Where the Government Prosecutor deems any prosecution so presented to him, to be unadvisable, the Government Solicitor, if he continues to think otherwise, will make a reference to Government.
