CIRCULAR.

It not unfrequently occurs that officers transferred from one appointment to another are desired by the head of their department to "join expeditiously," and in consequence put the State to heavy expense on account of travelling charges. The Government desire to impress on all heads of departments that a distinction must be drawn between absolute and comparative urgency, and that, except in cases of absolute urgency, all officers should join their new appointments in the ordinary course, and with the least possible expense to the State.
