Inspections.

Passing orders on the Master Attendant's inspection report of the port of Cuddalore.

READ—the following paper :—

From J. H. TAYLOR, Esq., Lieutenant, R.N.R., Master Attendant, Madras, to the Chief Secretary to Government, dated Madras, 18th April 1884, No. 3758.

Administrative department.

I have the honor to report that I have returned from an inspection of the port of Cuddalore, where I met Mr. Cruickshank, the Collector. The port I found in as satisfactory a condition as regards its bar and river mouth as I ever remember it. I feel perfectly convinced that no efforts of ours in any dredging direction would have assisted nature in forming or preserving a fixed mouth or a better depth on the bar than now obtains. The manner in which the river mouth travels north and south within certain limits is a mystery which is not to be readily solved, but I am sure that interference with it is more likely to cause mischief than any benefit which can justify the expense of the operations. The hand dredge has not been utilized up to the present time owing to difficulties connected with the machinery, and although these difficulties have now been overcome, the condition of the barge requires attention; it is now placed high and dry, and the Conservator has instructions to double the bottom up to the water line which will occupy about a month. When ready for use, I would not recommend its being placed in the channel unless some real necessity arose, but a quay is much wanted along the beach from the railway line southward. This is a work the cost of which cannot be properly debited to Port funds, but if the municipality construct the road, and the railway the tramway, the dredge may be put at their disposal for the imperatively necessary operation of deepening the water up to the quay. Having heard from Colonel Tennant that the question of employing convict labor on general works has occupied the attention of Government, I would respectfully suggest that the dredging work might be made a subject of experiment from the district gaol of Cuddalore. The flagstaff and other marine objects are in order.

ORDER—dated 30th April 1884, No. 181, Marine.

The Master Attendant's report will be communicated to the President of the Cuddalore Municipality, the Consulting Engineer for Railways, the Inspector-General of Jails, and the Public Works department.

2. The two first-named officers will submit a joint report on the Master Attendant's proposal that the Municipality and Railway Company should respectively construct the road and tramway.

I have the honor to state that the Christian Burial Grounds in this district were in fairly good condition during the year 1882. The amount spent in repairs to the Protestant Christian Burial Grounds was Rs. 4-12-0. The Roman Catholic Cemeteries require repairs, but, as it has not been usual to expend money on them, I am address-
