Please explain the blue and red jelly in this estimate.
I suppose it refers to broken granite stone and broken bricks, the latter of course is a natural product of a brick field; but how does the former come in?

Also please alter the units in the out-turn to correspond with the estimate of cost.

1000 cuds. blue jelly @ 90s. 12d. apparently gives an out-turn of 3050 parabs @ 2s. 9d.; the result being a loss of about Rs. 40/-

Q. 21.6.87. 27.6.87.

A parakh of lime = 4000 C. bricks, but there are several other paraks in use in the works - it would be better therefore to avoid the use of the word if possible.

Are there any materials at site whose value should be deducted from the estimate?

To

W. W.

Blue jelly is made from over burnt bricks and is so called on account of its color.

The quantity is shown in cubic measurement and
"paraks" omitted.

There are no materials at site.

Of course the quantities are merely approximate and are based on passed experience a truly accurate estimate cannot be made, as the output varies.
