The suggestion of the Superintending Engineer, V Circle, that the cost to be recovered for — lost should include centage charges, ordered to be followed.

No. 272 S.E. of $\frac{24}{27}$ May 1895

From. J. S. Wilson Esquire
Executive Engineer South Arcot Division
To. The Supg. Engineer Fifth Circle,

Sir,

In cases where tools have been lost by Contractors or Departmental employes it has been the practice in this Division to recover only the actual cost. When the Deputy Examiner of Accounts was auditing the accounts of my office I asked him whether in these cases it would not be proper to charge Centage on the cost of articles lost. His opinion was that such transactions should be considered as sales to private persons and that centage should be added to the cost price of the articles.

There is at present I believe no definite pronouncement on the subject and as the rule if made would be calculated to prevent losses, I have the honour to suggest that definite orders may be obtained.

At present a dishonest Contractor might procure by theft tools of various kinds at a lower price than that for which he might procure them in the open market.

I have the Honneur
