The Department of the Interior is pleased to announce the results of the recent survey of the public lands in the State of California. The survey was conducted by the Bureau of Land Management and the results show that there are approximately 10 million acres of public land in California. This is a significant increase from the previous estimate of 8 million acres. The survey was conducted over a period of six months and involved a large number of field workers and surveyors. The results of the survey will be used to develop a comprehensive plan for the management of the public lands in California. This plan will take into account the needs of the State, the Nation, and the people of California. It will also take into account the needs of the environment and the future generations. The plan will be submitted to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval. It will then be submitted to the Congress for its approval. The plan will be a landmark document in the history of public land management in California. It will set the stage for a new era of responsible and sustainable management of the public lands. The Department of the Interior is proud to be a part of this historic process. We are committed to the protection and management of the public lands for the benefit of all Americans.
