whole before night.
This box, placed in a conspicuous place in an anteroom adjoining the room in Nall and myself were sitting in was found to be missing about an hour later, and though a thorough search of the house and compound was made by the police who arrived at once, no trace of the missing money was discovered before I left Vallair. As my steamer to Gopalpore left early the following morning, I was necessarily obliged to leave the matter in the hands of the police. Before leaving however I instructed my clerk to enquire from the treasury officer the numbers of the missing notes with a view to their being stop and also to stop a cheque drawn for my on the same day.
