A note in G.O.No. 745 Pension dated 29th. September 1898. Cooks of the Police and Jail Dept. have been excluded from the pension list,

Co. 489 Rm. 3.7.97 E

- (1) as they draw small pay and as it is convenient at times to be able to dispense with their services when the hospitals are empty, and
- (2) as valuable property is seldom entrusted to them and the routine performance of their duty can be sufficiently secured by the same system and punishments as are found efficient by private employers.

Cooks of the Medical Dept: on the other hand are admitted to pension, the Surg. Genl. recommended that as they keep working day and night and deserve pension. As it is desirable that the practice should be uniform, orders are solicited as to whether servants of the class of cooks in the Medical Dept: should be retained on the pension list.

In G.O.No:382-A, Pension, d/8th May 1883, dhobies of the Hospital were considered to be ^{not} properly speaking menial servants and were accordingly held ineligible for pension ~~was~~.

A cook seems clear to be a menial servant. If his service satisfies the conditions of pensionable service laid down in the C.S.R. it is intended that his service is pensionable, unless & until the Govt decides to declare it non pensionable by virtue of the power given in Art 382 C.S.R.

For order whether such an order should now be made. It is presumed that it will apply ^{only} to future incumbents of the post of cook in the

I think "cooks" should be servants
