From evidence taken, I have ascertained that they lost their lives while fighting against a large gang of rebels at a Village, called Koorthi, on the banks of the Savari river.

They had succeeded in keeping off the rebels from Porech until their arrival at Koorthi; a distance of Eight miles, but on arrival at the latter place, their ammunition became exhausted, the rebels then closed in on them, and shot them down.

The party of which these unfortunate men composed a part, consisted of the late Inspector Andiah Naidu, one Head Constable and twelve men; while at a Village, called Tolavon, they heard of the attack made on the Porch police Shabono, and at once started with the object of dispersing the rebels, but on their arrival at Porch finding the rebels too strong, they endeavoured to make their way back to Annapolis keeping along the banks of the Sauri river;

The rest of the party succeeded in making their escape across the Sauri river into Bushan territory
