"The Bombay Miscellany."

PROSPECTUS

WITH the assistance of the Literati of India, Professional and Non-Professional, the undersigned propose the issue of an INDIAN MAGAZINE in Weekly Nos. and Monthly Parts.

Literature, Science, and the Arts, properly so termed, in their various branches, have in Western India no recognised medium for the preservation of the records of their advances, nor for the communion of their advances with each other and the public. Of the steady progress in civilisation and enlightenment of the Natives of this country there cannot be two opinions; it is the earnest wish of those who—alms in blood though they be, and far acquired by tastes and habits from them—spent their best years in India, to foster, encourage, and stimulate the growth of the desire for knowledge; there can be no misgiving; let the teachers, then, whilst of course not intentionally, but wisely, only, who seek with the alms on their proper fields, more effectively instruct, and by example more than by precept, show that to enter on the occupations of the soul is not mind, though it is a more advanced channel.

This periodical has not made its debut in the United States, nor is it really all unknown to local literature. It has not been successfully written or edited, however, yet skillful laborers for such work may be reckoned by the scores and tens of thousands, and has proved itself wherever it went. All that is requisite to afford a fair chance of success to a Latin periodical is to have a good beginning, and to resolve to keep the pen moving.

The final pages of the manuscript of Il Corinto clearly show how some prayers or words had to be filled in a great measure with matters rather different from Italian, but, in a short time, and the "Introduction" of the work got filled with facts, names, and subjects connected with war, would that be material in language for the most intelligent and well-read.

[illegible]

To be successful, the MASCOTANY must be prepared to make a substantial investment in supplies of paper, ink, gum, and the publishers kept abreast of MSS. in advance. Sufficient money to buy numbers at least 100 copies each and publication must be secured in the hands of all classes of readers - the range of subjects themselves would be as extensive as the fields are the most professional writers relating to the army, the navy, the civil and public servants and the clergy, the arts, science and social and human and legal professions.

The Chief Secretary to Government, copy of a Prospectus now being circulated by an American Editor in view the honors to which the power of God brings the subject with a request that copies of such papers, consisting of narratives, journals, &c. of vice, kept by Expeditions, or by individual Officers, and transmitted to Government on return from Explorations, &c. Report, and the communications pertinent to the general Public and Particulars of our

We are inclined to prefer the request of the in recent issues of "Selections from the corde of government," numerous papers of great intrinsic value and likely to prove of material assistance to the student, the naturalist, and the merchant, in their researches, and in the prosecution of the art of commerce, and of a light to the intelligent public, are now lent to the Community and to Literature.

The papers are to be for the present distributed by the ner of copies of the "Illustrations" of the Report. It is especially printed in pamphlet form, be at the command of the govern-

As the Government's consideration of the report of our Stages, and the will, we trust, will be the apparent result in encouragement.
