Fort Saint George.
Civil Audit Office,
25th January 1860.

Remarks.

The men are fit for duty. -
The Jemadar waits on the Civil Auditor. Besides delivering letters four peons are engaged in several audit departments of the Office for carrying to and fro the Registers: one keeps watch at night. -
Their number might certainly be diminished to some extent, were the letters for the Presidency delivered by the Post Office. But I think it advisable that the papers should still be fetched by our own peons. The correspondence is so important that it is important that it should be received and distributed as early as possible, and an hour's delay at the post office may make the difference of a day in the disposal. -
I do not consider the number at all excessive for so large an Office, as in the case of one or two, much inconvenience is experienced. I doubt whether the present number would suffice, but for the assistance of the stamps.
