February, 1898.

Dear Sir,

In accordance with the telegram copies in the margin,
From Viceroy, 14th February, 1898.

In continuation of our telegram of 15th January. Please send as soon as possible ten medical practitioners for temporary plague and general duty in Madras Presidency.

10 doctors have been engaged for Madras, and are leaving by this mail.

I enclose a list of their names with particulars of their qualifications, and a copy of the Agreement executed by them. A signed copy of each Agreement will be sent hereafter to the Government of India with a despatch.

The doctors have been told to report themselves to the Surgeon General of Madras, also that Government accepts the cost of their extra luggage across the Continent, on their presenting duly certified bills to the authorities in Madras, as the amounts could not be paid beforehand.

One of the doctors (Dr. Illingworth) has received an advance of £12 on account of his salary, and has been informed that it will be recovered from his pay in India.

Yours faithfully,

C. E. Bernard
